PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 104th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 141

WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1995

No. 20

House of Representatives

The House met at 11 a.m.

PRAYER

The Reverend Wade A. Watts, Jerusalem Baptist Church, McAlester, OK, offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we pray this morning for peace, freedom, justice, and equality for all throughout the entire world. We pray for these Congressmen. We pray that You would let them down in the deep secrets of Thy knowledge that they may render the right decision.

Give them the faith of Abraham, the wisdom of King Solomon, the courage of the Apostle Paul, and if it be so that strength shall fail them, we pray, Heavenly Father, that You will stand by.

If enemies shall increase and Satan's shots shall be multiplied, stay with them.

If temptation grows stronger and friends grow faint and weary, do not leave them alone. Throw that ever protecting arm of love around them and see that no hurt, harm, or danger come to them.

This is Your humble servant's feeble prayer. In Jesus' name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BREWSTER] will lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. BREWSTER led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOME TO THE REVEREND WADE WATTS

(Mr. BREWSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce Rev. Wade Watts of the McAlester, OK, Jerusalem Baptist Church.

Reverend Watts, who just gave today's opening prayer, is one of the most respected and well-known ministers in southeastern Oklahoma.

He has been the pastor of the Jerusalem Baptist Church for 22 years. He served on President Johnson's Advisory Commission on Civil Rights for 4 years, as well as the Oklahoma crime commission for 4 years.

Reverend Watts has also served 16 years as State president of the NAACP.

The reverend is also one of the few people in my district who can claim the privilege of knowing and working with the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., with whom he marched in Selma, AL.

Reverend Watts has experienced trouble and turmoil. In the early seventies the Ku Klux Klan burned down his church. The reverend's spirit was not defeated. Over the next several years Reverend Watts was successful in saving the State's imperial wizard from the hatred and anger of his group and converted him to Christianity.

I would also like to take this opportunity to recognize Reverend Watts' hometown State senator who accompanied him to Washington. Senator Gene Stipe of McAlester, who is with us today, is the longest serving member of the State legislature in Oklahoma history.

It is my honor, Mr. Speaker, to host and introduce Reverend Watts to the House of Representatives as today's Chaplain.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). The Chair will announce that he will entertain 15 1-minutes from both sides today.

REPUBLICAN CONTRACT WITH AMERICA

(Mr. HOKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, our Contract With America states the following: On the first day of Congress, a Republican House will require Congress to live under the same laws as everyone else, cut one-third of committee staff, cut the congressional budget. We have done that.

It goes on to state that in the first 100 days we will vote on the following items: A balanced budget amendment; we have done this and passed it; unfunded mandates legislation, line-item veto, a new crime bill to stop violent criminals, welfare reform to encourage work, not dependence, family reinforcement to crack down on deadbeat dads to protect our children, tax cuts for families to lift Government's burden from middle-class, middle-income Americans, national security restoration to restore our freedoms, Senior Citizens' Equity Act to allow our seniors to work without Government penalty, Government regulation and unfunded mandate reforms, commonsense legal reforms to end frivolous lawsuits, and congressional term limits to make Congress a citizen legislation.

This is our Contract With America.

LEAVE INTEREST RATES ALONE

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the American people are sending a very simple message today: "Don't do it, Mr. Greenspan, don't raise interest rates. Every time you raise interest rates, working middle-class families get hurt."

Six times in the past 2 years interest rates have gone up. Those increases alone have added $24,000 to the price of a 30-year, $50,000 mortgage, $24,000 added to the cost of a home.

If we raise taxes that much, the American people would be in revolt. If we raise interest rates again, it would be like throwing a bucket of ice water on the U.S. economy, and its working families will be left out in the cold.

So do not do it, Mr. Greenspan. Leave interest rates alone.

WE ARE PART OF A GLOBAL ECONOMY

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, President Clinton made a courageous move in bypassing the Congress on the Mexican peso issue. He had no choice.

Mexico was going down the tubes, and the votes in Congress for this unpopular initiative were just not there. He acted with proper authority, and in the end he made the right decision.

A stable Mexico is critical to American interests, and let us hope we do not have to revisit this Mexico issue again.

What are the lessons of this episode? Bipartisanship on the Mexican issue did not have its finest hour. In the end it looked like the package was being peddled in a bazaar.

We must do better on these critical national-security issues.

Second, we must remember that we are all part of a global economy, and that turmoil in a country, especially a friend like Mexico, affects us all.

WHY SHOULD MAIN STREET BAIL OUT WALL STREET?

(Mr. FUNDERBURK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FUNDERBURK. Mr. Speaker, this morning the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury canceled scheduled appearances before the International Relations Committee. This administration has a serious credibility problem. It has ignored the American people and done a deliberate end-run around the Congress. I do not care what obscure law the President cites for his authority. There is outrage in my district, and I suspect throughout the State of North Carolina.

We have rescued the Mexican economy several times since 1976. Each time we have done so, the Mexican Government has refused to reform itself.

Bailing out investors stuck with bad pesos is not the job of the taxpayer. Why should Main Street bail out Wall Street? What sort of message is sent when holders of high-yield securities are bailed out by the taxpayers?

When Mr. Rubin was chairman of Goldman, Sachs, his firm did not socialize domestic profits it earned when it was speculating. The same system that rewarded his old firm should work to penalize his former colleagues who gambled and lost.

I ask this administration to tell Main Street, Dunn, NC, it has to pay for Wall Street's mistakes and a corrupt regime in Mexico.

EFFECTS OF INTEREST RATE INCREASES

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, in America the sun shines in from the PTA to the Halls of Congress. The American people have a front row seat.

But when it comes to the Federal Reserve Board, the American people cannot even buy a seat in the peanut gallery. Unbelievable; at this very moment the Fed behind closed doors is deciding whether or not to raise our interest rates. And the Fed says "Look, our business is too important for the American people to understand and what the American people don't know won't hurt them."

Unbelievable.

Mr. Speaker, while Congress cannot go to the bathroom without a camera team, the Federal Reserve Board conducts their business and Congress waits for Alan Greenspan to come out of some closed door with either thumbs up or thumbs down.

Mr. Speaker, I say it is very simple: Alan Greenspan is giving America the finger and Congress does not even know why.

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS NEED RELIEF FROM UNFUNDED MANDATES

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, the Environmental Protection Agency is just one of the many Federal agencies that are stifling local and State governments with bills they do not pay for.

For instance the EPA wants the city of Dallas, TX, to totally redesign its 4,500 mile long sewer system. This redesign would cost $3 billion. This figure equals roughly three times their yearly budget.

This is one of the many examples of an unfunded mandate. There are probably thousands more just like it.

Mr. Speaker, unfunded mandates must be reformed because they impose a crowding-out effect on State and local governments. Instead of funding the basics like fire and rescue, hospitals, highways, and law enforcement, local and State governments are forced to fund excessive, and sometimes exotic, Federal regulations. We must act now to curb these excesses and return the Federal Government the principles of fiscal responsibility.

HYDROXYUREA IMPROVES QUALITY OF LIFE FOR SICKLE CELL SUFFERERS

(Mr. HASTINGS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I join with my chorus of colleagues who come here advocating against an increase in interest rates in this country.

But more importantly, I come today, to inform the House of a new scientific breakthrough that could mean relief for thousands of Americans. It was announced the day before yesterday that researchers at Johns Hopkins have found that the drug hydroxyurea can alleviate some of the painful symptoms associated with sickle cell anemia, such as incapacitating pain in the abdomen, joints, and back.

Sickle cell anemia affects people whose ancestors come from Africa, the Middle East, the Mediterranean basin, and India. Sickle cell affects 1 in 12 African-Americans. African-American males suffering from this disease live an average of 42 years and African-American women live an average of 46 years.

Although hydroxyurea, according to scientists, is not a cure for this deadly disease, it is an effective agent for improving the quality of life for those who suffer from sickle cell. I urge the FDA to quickly approve the use of hydroxyurea.

THE 10TH AMENDMENT SHUFFLE

(Mr. CHRISTENSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, over the last 40 years, the Congress has perfected a new dance—the 10th amendment shuffle.

The music for this dance starts playing when the Congress runs out of Federal tax dollars to spend, but still has several key projects on their wish list.

Rather than sitting out a dance, Congress has instead sidestepped the 10th amendment and forces States and localities to pay for its projects and dance to its tune.

A classic shuffle is the motor-voter bill, an unfunded mandate estimated to cost States some $58 million.

Mr. Speaker, it will cost my State, Nebraska, over $700,000 to recruit more people to get registered on the voting files in a State which already has one of the highest voter registration rates in the Nation. It is time to pull Congress' dance cards and put an end to Federal unfunded mandates. H.R. 5 will do this. I urge my colleagues to support this and make sure we no longer have to live under the unfunded mandates that the Congress continues to send.

FALLOUT FROM INCREASED INTEREST RATES

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, a new Federal policy brokered in secret, adopted without a single hearing, a single open public meeting and no vote.

A policy that will:

Increase this year's deficit by $2.5 billion?

Increase the cost of a mortgage on a $100,000 house by more than $500 a year—that makes a mockery of the puny income tax cuts we are talking about here.

Drive up the cost of everything bought on credit—from automobiles to winter clothes for the kids.

This is a policy specifically intended to drive up the rate of unemployment toward a target of 6 percent—that means 3½ million more Americans out of work than under the old target of 4 percent.

Is this a new abuse heaped upon the American people by an insulated and arrogant Congress? No, this policy will be foisted on the American public by the secretive, arrogant, and insulated Federal Reserve Board, a small group of powerful bankers and economists who believe their control over our money supply is to be used to serve their friends and masters from Wall Street, not Main Street America.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to stop Alan Greenspan and his cronies before they kill the economy again.

HIGHWAY TRUST FUND AND AVIATION TRUST FUND

(Mr. SHUSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, we Republicans quite properly emphasize our Contract With America. But our original Contract With America was signed in 1956, when President Eisenhower and the Congress created the Interstate Highway System and created the highway trust fund. This was a contract between the American traveling public and the Federal Government. The gas tax went into the highway trust fund solely to build highways. Later the airline ticket tax went into the aviation trust fund to help build airports.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have broken that contract. We shamelessly used the money dedicated for highway construction to hide the true size of the Federal Government deficit, which is dishonest and unethical. Three times in the past Republicans in this House voted overwhelmingly to remove these trust funds from the general trust fund budget, but we did not have a majority.

Now is the time to renew our 39-year-old Contract With America. Now is the time to take the transportation trust funds out of the general fund budget. This is a truth-in-budgeting issue. And truth, after all, is what contracts are all about.

FORTY YEARS

(Mr. STUPAK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks we have heard our colleagues on the other side of the aisle talk about dismantling many of the programs that Democrats formed during our 40-year service as the majority party.

I know some of my friends on this side do not want to hear this, but during the past 40 years, when Democrats controlled the House, programs were enacted that helped millions of people. A few examples on this long list include: the GI bill, Medicare, Medicaid, civil rights legislation, improved minimum wage standards so people can work and get off welfare, and student financial aid. When the other side discusses, with some disdain, about the Democrats' 40-year rule, remember, some great things did happen.

Today, on February 1, 1995, I would like to highlight a special day commemorating something that happened 40 years ago today: My wife, Laurie Olsen, was born. Today is Laurie's 40th birthday, and as she and I, along with her parents, Ken and Elaine Olsen, our sons, and many of our friends celebrate her first birthday under a Republican controlled Congress, let us not forget many of the important programs enacted during Laurie's first 40 years that have helped the American people.

Mr. Speaker, happy 40th birthday, Laurie.

CONSUMER PRODUCTS SAFETY COMMISSION: MOST SNOW BOARDING INJURIES RESULT FROM FALLING

(Mr. HEFLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, those of us from the ski country, U.S.A. can rest a little easier right now because the U.S. Government is on the job. The U.S. Consumer Products Safety Commission has just released a report which concludes that most snow boarding accidents result from falling.

Wow. That is deep, Mr. Speaker. You put someone on a board, strap his feet to a board, put him on a slippery slope and let him go down the hill at 55 to 60 miles an hour and they might get hurt—but only if they fall.

This Christmas, Anna in my office tore up both knees skiing, and we have no idea how it happened or what caused it. Absolutely no idea.

Well, I am going to go back to her and I am going to tell her, "Anna, we figured it out, the Government helped. You hurt your knees because you fell."

Mr. Speaker, Americans are tired of Federal nursemaids wasting their money and insulting their intelligence. If I may quote my friend, Mr. TRAFICANT, "Unbelievable."

THE FOREIGN AID PACKAGE THAT WOULD NOT DIE

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, the administration announced yesterday that, because Congress was not acting quickly enough to throw good money after bad down that black hole that is the Mexican economy, it has used unprecedented Executive authority to extend billions of our taxpayers' money to bail out the Mexican peso and the Wall Street speculators who invested there without a vote of Congress. The last time Mexico devalued its currency was in 1988, just around the time of the Presidential election. Before that, Mexico devalued in 1982, again just around the time of the Presidential election, and now they did it again just after the Presidential election of 1994.

I say to my colleagues, "Some would like you to think that using Treasury's power to prop up the peso was a temporary fix, but they are wrong. This is not a currency problem. It is a problem of continuing mismanagement at the highest levels inside an emerging undemocratic country. The false security of Mexican oil is an illusion, too. That's already been pledged to past debts. If you're outraged like I am, come to room 2247 this afternoon, Members of Congress. Let's get the administration on the right track for a change."

WHAT ABOUT THE ELECTIONS?

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, U.S. military occupation of Haiti continues, but mandate of the Haitian Parliament will end. The time line for new parliamentary elections has already slipped from last December to perhaps sometime in May. I ask, "But how can you build a democracy without a parliament, without a legislative branch, especially in Haiti, especially with President Aristide?" Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in 1991 he fell prey to the drive to consolidate power that has historically characterized Haitian politics, and he has failed to learn a very basic lesson of democracy, and that is that shared power makes for better governments, and it is vital for true democracy. Lack of progress on the elections in Haiti means President Aristide will be ruling Haiti without checks or balances.

Mr. Speaker, the time for free and fair elections in Haiti is now. We must bring our troops home today. Bring on Haitian elections now, and save both democracy in Haiti and American taxpayers' dollars.

CHANGE

(Mr. GUTIERREZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, we have heard my friends on the other side of the aisle talk a lot about change. That is good. This institution needs some change. But in the past 3 weeks, Mr. Speaker, the American people have found out what type of change many of my colleagues were really talking about. We have discovered that a new criteria exists for being able to speak the truth on the floor of the House. We found out when the subject is questionable dealings by powerful Members of the House leadership, speaking the truth on the floor of the people's House is often prohibited. But that is not the only change, Mr. Speaker.

We passed a Congressional Accountability Act that is far worse than what was passed by this House just last year because it did not eliminate a ban on gifts from lobbyists and allows Members to continue to use their frequent flyer miles for personal use. There are other changes, too. We are no longer talking about lobbying reform or campaign finance reform, the real critical changes that will truly make a difference in the way we conduct the people's business.

Yes, many of my friends marched into this institution waving a banner that said, "reform and change," but all we see today is the white flag.

END UNFUNDED MANDATES: STOP THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S MEDDLING

(Mrs. MYRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, as mayor of the booming city of Charlotte, NC, I experienced, firsthand, the absurdity of unfunded mandates.

We were forced to curtail services that our constituents had already paid taxes to support, in order to avoid being taxed twice for the same things.

American taxpayers are paying over 50 percent of every dollar they earn in taxes.

They view unfunded Federal mandates as Government inefficiency and double taxation.

We must pass H.R. 5—if for no other reason than because the American taxpayers demand it.

CHINA'S NEWT?

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, today in China they are celebrating the first day of the lunar new year, the Year of the Pig, and we now find out from the New Yorker magazine that a big multinational pig is trying to feed over there the same way that pig has been trying to feed on the U.S. Congress. I guess the question is: Is Beijing becoming more like Washington, or Washington becoming more like Beijing?

But what we learn today is Deng Xiaoping's daughter, Deng Maomao, also has a book contract with Mr. Murdoch. Mr. Murdoch seems to be wanting to try to get his TV station into China and has pulled all of the BBC news because it has much too much about human rights, which just really, really makes him upset, and has furthermore now cut this wonderful deal with Deng's daughter, who is supposed to be the closest to him, but of course there could not be any hanky-panky there.

So, if anyone now asks what is the similarity between our Speaker, Deng Xiaoping's daughter and Mrs. Thatcher, we now know. They all have Rupert Murdoch book deals.

WHY LIBERAL DEMOCRATS OPPOSE THE CONTRACT WITH AMERICA

(Mr. HAYWORTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, from the home office back in Scottsdale, AZ, the top 10 reasons liberal Democrats oppose our Contract With America:

No. 10: Ideas? We don't need your stinking ideas.

No. 9: Book envy.

No. 8: Would you Republicans shut up? We are watching the O.J. trial.

No. 7: Al Gore, what a guy!

No. 6: 'Tis better to have taxed and lost than never to have taxed at all.

No. 5: Never make a promise you might have to keep.

No. 4: Would rather follow the P.T. Barnum maxim, "Never give the taxpayer an even break."

No. 3: Profits? What are profits? Are they evil?

No. 2: Hey, what happened? We thought the status quo was pretty good.

And the No. 1 reason Democrats oppose our Contract With America:

Republicans, with our contract, are trying to change this Congress. Democrats would rather change the subject.

OPEN UP GOPAC'S BOOKS

(Mr. BROWN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, if numbers such as $715,000, $324,000 or even $172,000 had shown up on my last FEC report, the Republican National Committee would demand an immediate investigation, and the Federal Election Commission would have already levied steep fines against me. In fact, my Republican colleagues likely would be calling for an ethics investigation and an independent counsel. I would like to assure my colleagues that dollar amounts of that magnitude did not show up on my FEC report. But I will tell my colleagues where they did show up: GOPAC.

According to the Los Angeles Times on January 30, 1995, GOPAC has received more than $2.8 million from just 10 contributors, but we will not see these dollar amounts on GOPAC's FEC reports. They refuse to disclose the information.

Mr. Speaker, in an era when the new Republican majority talks about an open Congress and opening up the political process, it seems to me it should live by its own words and open up GOPAC's books.

INTRODUCTION OF BREAST CANCER AND PROSTATE CANCER DETECTION BILLS

(Mrs. VUCANOVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, what do 46,000 women and 240 men have in common this year? No, not an interest in the O.J. Simpson trial. These people are all expected to die from breast cancer in 1995. I have again introduced legislation to help lower income women by requiring State Medicaid plans to provide coverage of screening mammography.

I have also introduced legislation to provide annual mammography coverage for Medicare beneficiaries aged 65 and older. Current law permits coverage only every other year for this age group.

Coverage of early detection techniques should be provided for men as well. In 1995, an estimated 40,400 prostate cancer deaths are expected. That is why I have introduced bills to provide for Medicaid coverage and Medicare coverage, respectively, for prostate cancer screening tests—1995 is neither the year of the woman, nor the year of the man. It is the year when our citizens get what they asked for—that is, peace of mind and good health. I urge all of my colleagues to cosponsor these lifesaving bills.

FED'S THREATENED INTEREST RATE HIKE SEEN AS UNJUSTIFIED

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, today the Federal Reserve Board is meeting, and the speculation is that they are going to raise interest rates to tighten monetary policy by raising the discount rate gain. They have raised the discount rate six times in the last year. This will be the seventh increase, which has resulted already in over a 2½ percent, 250 basis point increase in the spread in terms of interest rates paid for by American consumers.

Of course, the fact is that the record indicates that this is simply not justified or necessary. Workers today are receiving very little increase in terms of compensation or wages, and the fact is that by not taking a raise, they are now going to in essence be faced with increased costs because of interest rates.

Car sales are down; home sales are down. Many of the indices in the American economy indicate that inflation is under control and the economy is not overheating, but the Fed is losing the capacity to deal with the responsibility of monetary policy by raising rates and by tightening monetary policy when it is not necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Federal Reserve Board today is listening behind their closed doors as they make this decision. We need them to play an independent and an objective role, not to overmanipulate and steal defeat from the jaws of victory when we have an economy in which Americans are working.

STATES URGED TO JOIN THE HOUSE IN PASSING UNFUNDED MANDATES LEGISLATION

(Mr. EHLERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, this morning we expect to pass a bill dealing with unfunded mandates, and I will be voting for that bill. I do want to make it clear that I do have some reservations in environmental areas, but those can be addressed as we go along.

The main purpose of my comments today is to point out that we are only part of the problem, and I challenge the States of these great United States to follow our example and pass unfunded mandates bills within their own legislative bodies.

In the State of Michigan we required a constitutional amendment initiated by the citizens of the State to address this problem. Since I have worked at the county commission level, the State legislative level, and the Federal level, I can assure the Members that everyone tries to pass mandates down to the body below them and require them to pay the costs.

My challenge to the States is to follow Michigan's example—adopt a constitutional amendment as we did in Michigan and prohibit passing unfunded mandates down to cities, counties, townships, and other forms of government.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all the States to join us in this effort as we pass our unfunded mandates bill today.

INTEREST RATE HIKE COULD KILL JOBS, SLOW ECONOMY GROWTH

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Reserve Board is meeting to consider yet another hike in interest rates. Democrats are united in opposing this increase, because we believe it will have a detrimental impact on working middle class families across the country.

In 1994 the Fed raised interest rates six times. Those rate hikes were designed to slow economic growth and head off inflation. But another increase now could slow the economy right into a recession just as the economic recovery is reaching working families.

In my home State of Connecticut, where job growth continues to lag behind the rest of the country, another rise in interest rates could kill jobs and keep the economy recovery from ever reaching hardworking families.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that our economy is not at full health. But prescribing another interest rate hike as a cure is like prescribing brain surgery for a headache. It is unnecessary, and it could kill the patient.

MOVING ON

(Mr. JONES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, today we will finish our debate on unfunded mandates. We are going to give our States and our local governments what they have asked for. Congress will stop mandating Federal programs it cannot pay for. Now it is time to move on.

Next on our agenda is the line item veto. This will provide another tool to cut spending and reduce the size of the Federal Government. Who knows, the power of the line-item veto might even stop a practice that has been around many years in Congress—porkbarrel projects.

Mr. Speaker, Republicans are committed to moving our Contract With America forward until it is completed. We have heard the people's mandate, and we will keep our promise to bring to the floor issues that produce real change. We are moving on to a future of a smaller, less costly, and more efficient government.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my Democrat colleagues to join with us to move forward with the people's demand for change.

THE TRUTH IS LOOSE

(Mr. LEWIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the Los Angeles Times succeeded in doing something this week that Speaker GINGRICH has refused to do for years—release the names of the contributors to his political machine, GOPAC.

The partial listing published by the Times shows that one couple gave GOPAC more than $715,000 while other contributors made more than $300,000 available apiece. But who and how many more contributors are there? There are many questions that remain unanswered.

That is why the chorus of respected voices calling for an outside counsel is getting louder and louder.

The New York Times, Roll Call, the respected public advocacy group, Public Citizen, former Special Counsel Richard Phelan, and Al Hunt of the conservative Wall Street Journal all agree: Only an outside counsel can put this matter to rest.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD URGED TO FOREGO INTEREST RATE INCREASE

(Mr. GEJDENSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, the Fed Chairman tells us that senior citizens are benefiting by an overstatement of inflation in this country. The Fed Chairman told us there is a crisis in Mexico. It seems to me the Fed Chairman and his policy helped create the crisis in Mexico, and if he is correct about the fact that inflation is overstated in the indicators, then he ought not raise taxes and he ought not raise interest rates.

In my State and in my district in Connecticut, many people still want jobs that do not have them. A Fed policy that is based on creating more unemployed is an outrage in a country that is talking about putting people to work. You cannot sit there and tell us that you want welfare people to go to work and then raise interest rates so working people lose their jobs. If there ought to be jobs that are lost, they ought to be at the Fed. We ought to keep inflation not higher but lower so that more Americans go to work, so we can have a stronger economy and continue to reduce this deficit.

Mr. Speaker, the Fed policy goes against everything we have done to increase employment and cut the deficit. I say to the Chairman, "Don't raise interest rates anymore."

A DISPLAY OF COMITY IN THE REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, this morning Speaker GINGRICH invited Vice President GORE to meet with the Republican Conference on the subject of reinventing the Government. He stood right here at this lectern on the Republican side and talked for nearly an hour about making Government customer-friendly and constituent-responsive. He talked about the old order and the new order. He talked about listening to employees and bringing them in on the decisionmaking. He talked about cutting redtape, reducing the bureaucracy, and changing the procurement process.

We on the Republican side found that we have much in common with the Vice President. We share much of his goal and his vision.

I congratulate Speaker GINGRICH on inviting the Vice President to engage in a bipartisan dialog. I hope that Members on both sides of the aisle can follow this example set by Speaker GINGRICH and the Vice President. I hope that the sniping ends. It is always easy to build yourself up at the expense of the institution, but I hope that we do what the Vice President and Speaker GINGRICH did today. We have much in common. We have much to accomplish, and we can do it together.

RAISING INTEREST RATES MAKES NO SENSE

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the President, with support of Republican leadership, proposed committing $20 billion to Mexico to prop up the peso. Today the Federal Reserve, behind closed doors, will decide whether or not to raise interest rates yet again.

Mr. Greenspan has lobbied Congress relentlessly in recent days on behalf of the Mexican bailout. But by raising interest rates again, Mr. Greenspan will contribute to a further weakening of the Mexican peso. By raising interest rates again, more importantly, Mr. Greenspan will make it harder for American families to pay for houses, to pay for cars, to pay for student loans. And by raising interest rates again Mr. Greenspan threatens to choke off the recovery. Higher rates will also make it harder to pay off the $20 billion the President and Republican leadership wants to send to Mexico.

Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, raising interest rates simply makes no sense.

OPPOSE MEXICAN BAILOUT

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, the American taxpayer and the people of Mexico have had a heavy load added to their backpack yesterday. The American taxpayers and others for the sixth time have bailed out Mexico now in the last 12 years. Remember the Baker plan and the Brady plan? They were supposed to have ended the Mexican debt crisis back in 1990.

This is a serious problem, and one of the reasons is this: In Mexico they are paying as high as 20 percent, 25 percent, as high as 51 percent on these bonds. How can these poor people possibly come out from under this heavy burden?

I hope that the people here in Congress will speak out and oppose this outrageous direct transfer of wealth from the pockets of the American taxpayers to the pockets not of the people of Mexico, but to the Mexican elite. They have more billionaires in Mexico per capita than any country in the world. They are taking their money out, putting it into our country, and we are taking the taxpayers' money and putting it into Mexico.

It does not make sense. This is a very bad deal for us. No wonder the American people are again singing the old ballad "16 Tons," "Another day older, and deeper in debt." I feel sorry for the American taxpayer and the poor people of Mexico.

NO GOVERNMENT BAILOUT FOR BAD INVESTMENTS IN MEXICO

(Mr. SANDERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the $40 billion bailout of Mexico and in very strong opposition to President Clinton's effort to circumvent the congressional process. At a time when this country has a $200 billion deficit and when Members of Congress are proposing cutbacks in Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, veterans programs, and nutritional programs for hungry children, it is absurd to put $40 billion of American taxpayers' money at risk in an unstable Mexican economy and an unstable Mexican political system.

If large banks and Wall Street investment houses want to purchase Mexican bonds at high interest rates, they have every right in the world to do so. But these big money interests do not have the right to be bailed out by Government when their investments turn sour.

UNFUNDED MANDATE REFORM ACT OF 1995

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Pursuant to House Resolution

38 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 5.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5, to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments, to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and to provide information on the cost of Federal mandates on the private sector, and for other purposes, with Mr. EMERSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Tuesday, January 31, 1995, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] had been disposed of, and title III was open for amendment at any point.

Are there further amendments to title III?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will state it.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, we have four Members who wanted to offer their amendments. They are not here. I wonder if it is possible to reserve 5 or 10 minutes of their time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman may move to strike the last word, and she would be recognized for 5 minutes, or any Member may move to strike the last word.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MINETA

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the rule, I offer an amendment, amendment numbered 95.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MINETA: In section 301, at the end of the proposed section 421(4) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, add the following:

Such term shall not be construed to include a provision in legislation, statute, or regulation that preempts a State, local, or tribal government from enacting or enforcing a law, regulating, or other provision having the force of law related to economic regulation, including limitations on revenues to such governments.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, in general the bill before us is an attempt to limit the intrusiveness of the Federal Government into the business of State and local governments and private businesses. Many of us disagree with how the bill goes about meeting those objectives, but we do not disagree with the objectives themselves.

In the area of transportation, economic regulation in particular, I have been among the most consistent advocates of the economic deregulation of transportation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is very familiar with my efforts as a deregulator, because he has been an important part of those efforts, and so have many Members on his side of the aisle.

In the past 15 years, we have largely deregulated the airlines, pipelines, trucking, and railroads. We have dramatically reduced the intrusiveness of government into the marketplace. And in every instance we have concluded that what we wanted to achieve was deregulation, not a substitute of State regulation for Federal regulation.

Deregulation means get government out of the issue. It does not mean close the Civil Aeronautics Board only to substitute 50 State Civil Aeronautics Boards.

In every one of these deregulation efforts, we have not only told the Federal Government to get out of economic regulation, we have told the States not to get into it. And that is the only way we can increase reliance on the marketplace.

This unfunded mandates bill would inadvertently apply to efforts to deregulate industries. H.R. 5 not only makes it more difficult to tell States what they have to do, it also makes it more difficult to tell States what they cannot do, including that they cannot regulate industries that we have just deregulated.

Mr. Chairman, this is not what the Members of this House intend for this bill to do. It is not what the Senate bill does. This is an unintended consequence that we ought to correct, and my amendment does that.

Let me give a specific example. Last August we brought to the floor legislation which very substantially deregulated the economic regulation of the trucking industry. Many of you thought of it as the Fed Ex bill, or the UPS bill, but it was in fact very broad deregulation legislation affecting most of the trucking industry. That bill would have been considered an unfunded mandate under H.R. 5 because it told the States they could not regulate those industries.

None of us considered that an unfunded mandate, but H.R. 5 does. That bill would have been required to have extensive analyses set out in H.R. 5, which quite probably would have meant we would not have had time to enact it in the closing weeks of the last Congress.

The same kinds of problems arise with regard to deregulation of pipelines, of railroads, and of other industries we are looking at for future deregulation.

These problems arise with respect to any clarifying bills we may need to do in the future, to preserve the deregulation of industries that we have already deregulated. This is not what the Members of this House intend for this bill to do.

I know that the track record so far on the Democratic amendments to this bill is not good. But I appeal to the manager of the bill that my amendment supports one of the underlying objectives of the bill, less government regulation.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLEMENT].

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA], the ranking Democratic member on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

I am a former chairman of the Tennessee Public Service Commission, so I have seen how regulation works and it can work very efficiently and effectively. I also have seen examples where it has not worked, where it has cost consumers billions of dollars.

I might say about our legislation, that the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] and the vast majority of the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate all supported this last year, that it was to deregulate the trucking industry. But I do think what the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] has said is correct. This is an unintended consequence that we ought to correct.

I realize that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] and others have stated that they do not support amendments, but I hope they will make an exception to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MINETA was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. CLEMENT. I would hope that the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] and all of those of us that support H.R. 5—and I strongly support H.R. 5—I will vote for final passage, a lot of Democrats, lot of Republicans will join hands in a very bipartisan manner. I do not like unfunded mandates.

But this is not the intention of this particular amendment. Do not strangle us. Do not put us in a straitjacket. We very well are going to be looking at some other deregulation down the road. We have not finished that task. Surely we have had much that we can be proud of over the last 15 years, such as deregulation of airlines, pipelines, trucking, and railroads.

This is the beginning for the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. In order to ensure that businesses and industry have an opportunity to compete without all these rules and regulations, let us adopt the Mineta amendment and let us be bipartisan about it.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment of my friend from California, a mentor on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. I know and appreciate and am sensitive to his concerns.

But I rise in opposition to the amendment because the amendment really broadly exempts Federal preemption of State law from the definition of mandates. This includes any Federal limitation on revenues that a State or local government can otherwise lawfully collect.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment was drafted primarily in response to concerns raised by the railroad industry. The railroads' particularly concern is an inclusion in the bill of mandates that require States or local governments to forgo revenues might adversely affect a provision of law enacted in 1976 that prohibits States and local governments from discriminating against railroads in taxation.

The most important point to be made is the same point that has been made over and over again during the debate on this bill, and that is that this bill does not affect existing mandates.

The point of order this the bill creates applies only to bills brought to the House floor after October 1, 1995, which is the effective date of the legislation.

The real question, Mr. Chairman, is whether a similar preemption of State law in future bills that limits the ability of a State to collect an otherwise lawful tax should be subject to the procedures established by H.R. 5.

The State tax officials make a compelling case that Federal laws that restrict States and local governments from employing tax practices which would otherwise be legal under the U.S. Constitution have exactly the same impact as an expenditure mandate.

So I believe that the same procedure should be applied to these preemption provisions. If Congress believes and decides that the national interest requires placing restrictions on States' ability to raise lawful taxes, then it is not unreasonable to require a majority vote to waive that point of order.

So I must oppose the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman as I have indicated, the Senate bill relative to their legislation on unfunded mandates does not contain this unintended consequence of making it more difficult to deregulate.

I would like to ask my very fine colleague from Pennsylvania, if I can get a commitment from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he will revisit this issue in conference and attempt to keep this bill from making it harder to deregulate.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, let me assure the gentleman that that, as the gentleman says, that is a confidential issue. It is one that I will certainly be willing to revisit and to work with the gentleman. As I say, at this point I am not convinced that it is necessary but will be happy to revisit the matter in conference.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments to title III?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SANDERS

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS: Insert the following new paragraphs at the end of the proposed section 424(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974:

“(5) CONSIDERATION OF COST SAVINGS FROM FEDERAL MANDATES.—For each bill or joint resolution of a public character reported by any committee that establishes, modifies, or repeals a Federal mandate, the Director shall prepare and submit to the committee a statement describing the cost savings that would accrue to the private and public sectors from such Federal mandate, including long and short term health care and environmental cost savings. Such statements shall include a quantitative assessment of such cost savings to the extent practicable.

“(6) CONSIDERATION OF BENEFITS OF FEDERAL MANDATES.—For each bill or joint resolution of a public character reported by any committee that establishes, modifies, or repeals a Federal mandate, the Director shall prepare and submit to the committee a statement describing the benefits of such Federal mandate, including benefits to human health, welfare, the environment, and the economy. Such statement shall include a quantitative assessment of such benefits to the extent practicable.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment along with my colleagues, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO], and the gentleman from California [Mr. FARR].

This amendment simply provides for full and unbiased information. It provides that the CBO include an estimate of long- and short-term health care and environmental cost savings and other benefits of unfunded mandates.

The bottom line is the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act threatens to dismantle many laws that protect the public health and the environment. This is because State and local governments need to heed these laws just like the private sector.

When we consider the merits of mandates like the Safe Drinking Water Act, OSHA, and bills regulating the disposal of medical waste, we should be aware of the costs imposed on local governments. That is absolutely appropriate. But we should also be equally aware of the cost savings, the cost savings expected from these mandates.

The true cost of a bill is the direct cost imposed minus the cost savings. This amendment ensures that the CBO estimate the true cost.

If this amendment is adopted, we will be less likely to discard preventative legislation that is cost effective in the long run.

Prevention is much cheaper than a cure. But prevention has a short-term direct cost. If this amendment is not adopted, we will only be informed of that short-term direct cost and will not be told about the expected cost savings.

Cost savings is not a small part of the equation. H.R. 5 threatens astronomical health care costs at a time when we want to save money. Today one in three of us will get cancer and, frankly, one in four of us will die of it. Over 60 different occupations are at a documented risk of cancer, including farmers, petrochemical workers, asbestos workers, plastics manufacturers, and radiation workers.

Under H.R. 5 it will be much harder to respond to this expensive and debilitating health care crisis and easier for shortsighted private industries to ignore it. We need access to real costs, including the long-term medical costs that will result if we fail to respond.

Lung cancer is the No. 1 cancer killer in America, yet H.R. 5 will hamstring us from imposing indoor air laws limiting tobacco smoke in workplaces and public places. The cost of imposing no-smoking areas is minuscule—minuscule in comparison to the cost of treating lung cancer. This amendment would clearly show the cost difference.

H.R. 5 also threatens, in my view, unacceptable environmental contamination and extremely expensive cleanup costs. Superfund sites littering the Nation are left festering because they are so expensive to clean up. It would have been more cost effective to prevent that contamination in the first place. We cannot foresee all future environmental problems. That is one reason we cannot say that current laws do an adequate job protecting us, but the CBO estimate of environmental cost savings will help us identify those cost-effective bills.

Fortunately, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act does not apply to “emergency legislation,” but how will we know when there is a health care or an environmental emergency? The best way is to adopt this amendment which would indicate when the savings strongly outweigh the short-term direct costs and a crisis is at hand.

This amendment also requires a CBO analysis of the benefits of the legislation. As I mentioned earlier, H.R. 5 could very well destroy our environmental and public safety laws. These laws not only save money, but they prevent needless deaths, pain, suffering and environmental degradation. These benefits should not be ignored.

This amendment provides for a CBO estimate of the benefits to human health, welfare, the environment, and the economy. Costs should not be viewed in a vacuum. Intelligent decisions require a cost-benefit analysis. If CBO provides information on costs, which is absolutely appropriate, and benefits, we would have access to a consistent and an unbiased cost-benefit analysis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SANDERS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I fully support the current provisions that require a CBO estimate of the costs to State and local governments of unfunded mandates. That is very important. That is very important. But these estimates alone misrepresent the true cost of legislation and ignore its benefits. This amendment corrects that fatal flaw. This amendment helps us fulfill the laudable purposes spelled out in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act.

Its purposes include, and I quote from the bill, “to end the imposition, in the absence of full consideration by Congress, of Federal mandates,” and “to assist Congress in its consideration of the proposed legislation * * * by establishing a mechanism to bring such information to the attention of the Senate and House * * * and to promote informed and deliberate decisions by Congress.”

If Members support these purposes, I urge Members to support this amendment.

The CBO will not always be able to provide a quantitative cost-benefit analysis. This amendment recognizes this limitation and only requires quantitative analyses when practicable, but when it is practicable, we need to be aware of all essential pieces of information. Uninformed decisions do not lead to cost-effective decisions. Let us save money and pass intelligent legislation that is not shortsighted.

I urge the Members to vote for this amendment, and vote for full and unbiased information.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment, very briefly, just to state that I think that the role that the gentleman would have the CBO assume is not a role that they are clearly designed to do. Their role is to find out the cost of what things are and not really make policy decisions.

What the amendment would do is require CBO to become really a policy adviser or a policy evaluator. Requiring it to do cost-benefit analysis I think would really put it very close to policy advocacy.

I think the other thing that needs to be said about this is that the committee itself is charged in our bill with doing a cost-benefit analysis of the mandates.

I think finally it can be said that clearly the advocates for a particular mandate and the need to pass it through are certainly going to be pointing out the benefits of that. So I do not think we are losing sight of the benefit.

What we have had is we have only considered the benefits in the past. Now we are going to be required to consider the costs, and I think there is an equilibrium that did not exist before.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for yielding. I would simply like to echo his statement about the congressional budget.

I am opposed to this amendment because it seems to me that we are looking at an additional $4½ million for the Congressional Budget Office, simply to address the question of cost, and this amendment goes beyond that, and I believe goes beyond even the purview of the Congressional Budget Office in dealing with issues like unfunded mandates.

It is for that reason I join with the distinguished chairman of the Government Reform and Oversight Committee in insisting that this amendment be defeated.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, just briefly, I think the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS] makes a very sound point as to cost effectiveness, and the benefits of preventive care is one example. It is a consideration Congress ought to take into account on the floor and even in committee.

What CBO told us that they can do and they are required to do under this legislation, if we look at title III, a net savings analysis. In other words, they will look at quantifiable costs and benefits, but CBO, as my colleague stated, simply cannot do the more subjective analysis. Committees can do that. In fact they are required under this legislation to look at both the costs and benefits and that will then come to the floor.

The gentleman makes a good point, that the point of this legislation is to have an accountability and to have informed, deliberate debate on the floor of the House. The benefits will be analyzed by the committee. That information will be in the committee report, and the report will be part of the debate on the floor.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I have no argument with my friend that it is important for us to know the costs of the legislation we are proposing, no argument about that. But I think my friends would also not deny that some legislation is cost effective. If one could make the case that by promoting x policy that cost us $1 million we save $10 million in increased health care costs, I am sure all three of the gentlemen would be in agreement that was a good piece of legislation.

Mr. CLINGER. I would agree with the gentleman.

Let me reclaim my time to say we just do not think that is an appropriate place to have that done. We think it is much more appropriate in the committees which consist of elected Members to make those kinds of policy decisions, because it really is a policy decision. So our only objection is the appropriate place is not the Congressional Budget Office, which, let us face it, are number crunchers.

Ms. FURSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment because I think it is absolutely appropriate that we research and identify the impacts of all congressional legislation. But H.R. 5, as it is drafted, would only give us half the picture. We need the whole picture to make well-reasoned decisions.

I would like to add, I am a small business owner and I cannot imagine any business doing a cost-benefit analysis that only looked at the cost and not at the benefits.

I would like to speak about a very tragic situation that we are currently experiencing in the Pacific Northwest, that is the demise of our legendary salmon runs. At one time 16 million fish returned to the Columbia River to spawn each year, and now they are only numbered in the thousands, and several species have been listed under the Endangered Species Act. And when we analyze recovery methods in order to bring back this great run, we need to clean up our polluted rivers, modify the hydroelectric system, we have to look at the whole cost of implementing these initiatives. But we also have to say what are the economic benefits that happen to the Northwest if we bring back our salmon.

There are some figures that I think are quite indicative of the problems if we do not look at both sides.

As recently as 1988, commercial and recreational salmon fisheries produced 62,000 jobs in my area, and they contributed over $1.25 billion annually to the economy. Much of that bounty was returned and will be returned to the region if we can recover our salmon runs. So surely this information is an integral part of the debate over whether and how much to increase salmon recovery efforts.

In my belief, it is only through a fair comparison between the costs and the benefits that we can assess the merits of new legislative mandates, and so I urge my colleagues to support this very reasonable and very businesslike amendment to the bill that is before us.

I urge support of the Sanders amendment.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment as a cosponsor. I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS].

I had a similar amendment in the RECORD, and I would hope that we would have the debate on this amendment. I think, considering all the talk about cost-benefit analysis in this bill, it is certainly fitting to request CBO do a cost-benefit analysis on Federal mandates that takes into account the long- and short-term savings and benefits of those future actions—the cost benefits as well as the costs to State and the National Government.

The fact of the matter is H.R. 5's provisions regarding CBO's cost estimates and future legislation concentrates only on the direct costs of bills without regard to the cost savings or benefits. Oftentimes the impact of the most significant legislation will not be realized for many years to come.

It would be flawed public policy to reject these proposals based upon short-term cost accounting without taking into consideration long-term benefits or savings.

As for an argument that this amendment places an unreasonable burden on CBO, I would submit the unreasonable at least significant burden already exists in the bill and that this amendment merely brings fairness and balance and integrity to the CBO role. Certainly the requirements in the proposed legislation are difficult for CBO to fulfill, the current requirements. But to analyze such in a vacuum is not responsible. If the CBO is going to be charged with the duty to crunch the numbers for Federal mandates, then it logically follows they should be looking at the whole picture, both debit and credit sides of the spreadsheet, not just the debit.

This amendment calls for the CBO to quantitatively assess the savings from Federal mandate that generate health care and environmental costs of abatement, for example. These are legitimate savings. If a policy eliminates contamination of a city's drinking water supply that has physically harmed thousands of residents that constitutes a cost savings, then it must be taken into account. A system, for instance, that eliminates the microsporidium in Milwaukee's city water supply, Mr. Chairman, is one such example.

The amendment calls for the CBO to quantitatively assess benefits for Federal mandates to human health, welfare, the environment, and the economy. These, of course, are legitimate benefits. If a rail safety policy staves off a train accident that results in a spill of a highly hazardous industrial chemical into a waterway, that constitutes a real benefit, and must be taken into account.

The point is CBO should include cost savings and benefits in their cost estimates of the Federal mandates. This should not be left to the committee, since it is CBO's count that carries the weight in this bill. That is the intention. That is why there are going to be points of order raised on this floor and apparently addressed.

There must be integrity in the CBO's cost estimates, and this amendment provides such integrity.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, through this debate we have heard about that this is only information. But what is becoming apparent today as we focus in on this, it is limited information, and I understand CBO information on the Federal Government side of the ledger; we have had that historically. We have not had points of order necessarily on the CBO estimate or scoring information or had special votes to deal with the information. But we have had that CBO information before the House, and benefit from such data.

This process in the proposed measure is untried and untested, what they are setting up now, and what is advanced in this legislation. There is not a model now to understand exactly how it will function.

What we have today, of course, are the figures that come out of the States which I would suggest are not accurate and generally, I think, carry more of an ideological concern about what the Federal Government may require with regards to motor-voter or other types of activities.

The fact is having objection information will be helpful. But I think it ought to be, as I said, not considered in a vacuum. It ought to consider both the benefits and the costs of that program or of not carrying forth such activity. We ought to know the costs of not doing it, if it is possible.

I understand this is a difficult responsibility being placed on CBO, Mr. Chairman, but it is no more difficult than some of the other aspects that are represented in this bill.

I think if we were to go forward without this, obviously, it will disadvantage those that may be trying to solve these broad problems which have, after all, been visited upon the Federal Government, left on our national doorstep, because throughout the 200 years of our Federal system many States, either through compacts or other exercises of powers, did not address those particular responsibilities.

This new federalism today, Mr. Chairman, I think is a curious way to resolve problems. But at the very least, if all we want is information here, I do not understand why the benefit value should be rejected out of hand as apparently it is by some of the advocates of this bill today.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for the Sanders amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, the same supporters are the ones who voted to gut every other provision of this bill in terms of the type of legislative discretion we would have, who it applies to, who is exempted, and if we adopt this today, it will do the same thing.

The problem has been all along we have been full of benefits, as these bills come to the floor of the Congress of the United States, finding all the great benefits that are going to result if we pass this bill.

What we have failed to look at are what are the costs going to be. What are the costs going to be to the people who ultimately pay these? Because none of these items are for free. Instead of Congress funding them, we are sending them down to the localities.

This amendment changes the role of CBO from looking at the costs, of starting to weigh benefits. That is our job as Members. It will already be contained in the committee reports.

I think the bottom line is that the American people are tired of the trickle-down taxes that have resulted from our actions here as we look at the benefits which are presented, very ably, by authors of the different mandates, and they are contained very fully in the committee reports. But the costs are not contained, resulting in trickle-down taxes.

They are tired of cost-shifting from these mandates from the Federal income tax to local property taxes. They are tired of seeing local governments, which I have been involved with for 15 years before coming to this body, having to cut aid to schools, having to cut aid to, or having to close community centers, having to lay off police officers to fund mandates that emanate from here.

It is the costs we are concerned about. The benefits are readily contained already in committee reports. That is what has been driving this car from the inception.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, in all honesty, I really sincerely believe this should not be a political debate for this reason: Any sensible business person invests in the future. He or she purchases, say, new machinery, new technology. If the only part of the equation that one looked at was the million dollars one invested in new technology without looking at the cost savings that are coming down the road, that would be a very poor business person. I do not think we disagree on that.

Mr. DAVIS. We do not. CBO's role versus what is our role.

Mr. SANDERS. That is right. What you have proposed which makes sense is you want an objective analysis of the costs involved in a mandate. Fair enough. I agree with you. It seems to me what we want is an objective, non-political analysis as best as they could do which certainly will not be perfect in terms of the benefits, as well.

So that they could come forward, not in a political way, not on a 16 to 13 committee vote; they say, "Look, if you invest $10 million, you are going to save $100 million in health care costs." Then you analyze that objectively as opposed to the partisanship which so often exists in committees.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the gentleman's point. I think we need to get a handle on what the benefits are. I just do not think the CBO is the direction to go. As I looked at the committee reports on bills reported through, the benefits have been outlined fully. The benefits is what have been driving legislation emanating from Congress for the last 50 years, and the costs have really been hidden.

There is a balance here, but I think they are going to be clearly underscored in the reports, and we have that ability, the authors of these bills, as they move through in the authorizing committee, to lay out what the benefits are. It is not CBO's job. That is why I oppose the amendment. I think it defeats what we are trying to do.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. I have supported any number of exemptions to this bill, but I want to make it clear I have no objection to the information that is being asked for in this mandated bill. I do object to the unusual procedure that would be implemented on this floor in terms of implementing the legislation.

I think in this case we could say the same thing. You say that information is already available through the committee process, then if it is already available, why not incorporate it into the CBO?

It is not the intention here to undermine or undercut the legislation, simply to provide the perspective on a balanced basis of having both sides of the benefits that can be achieved and are achieved which there would be little argument about. If it is not possible to quantify that, then they would not be able to do that.

In fact, I suggest the gentleman's legislation under rules and regulations provisions, pages 16 through 22, has the same sort of language in it in terms of qualitative and quantitative analysis if it is possible.

Mr. DAVIS. I thank the gentleman. I think we just disagree about the best way to get to that.

I think the committee reports are going to amplify what the benefits are as they traditionally have done. That will be available to the Congress before they vote on it.

What this bill does for the first time is it brings accountability as to who is going to pay for it. That is why it is important. I think this amendment really defeats that purpose.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment as coauthor.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend my colleagues, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS], the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO], on their efforts toward bringing some balance to this bill.

I think that the authors of the bill ought to consider very carefully that this bill needs to be balanced out.

Mr. Chairman, in recent days this body has dealt with such heady issues as amendments to our U.S. Constitution.

Many of our colleagues lately have taken to reading the Federalist Papers.

In that vein, I would like to remind everyone of something the Preamble to the Constitution says, which is to "promote the general Welfare" of the United States.

This bill does not promote the general welfare of the United States because it creates a system under which laws, designed to promote the general welfare, can be circumvented.

Mr. Chairman, every equation has two parts. The part before the equal sign and the part after it. If the purpose of this bill is to agree that we must measure the cost of legislation to the State and local governments—the part before the equal sign, then should we not also agree that we must measure the benefits of legislation to the people as well—the part after the equal sign?

This bill is weighted only on one side; the cost side. But in many cases, the benefits outweigh the costs. Unfortunately, the bill does not provide for that estimate to be made a part of the equation.

Under H.R. 5, city and State governments would be exempt from basic rules that now protect the health and well-being of hundreds of millions of Americans. For example:

City and county water utilities would be exempt from rules to disinfect their water.

When workers remove lead or asbestos from government buildings, they would be exempt from rules that they must follow careful procedures to limit toxic dust.

City-run garbage dumps would be exempt from requirements to use liners as necessary to limit water contamination and city garbage incinerators would be exempt from requirements to install equipment to limit toxic air pollution.

Unless we insist on measuring the benefits of a policy and not just the cost, many health, safety, and environmental protections will be lost to us.

Let me make the argument another way. This bill could mean the unraveling of the Clean Water Act. Despite the progress we have made since passage of the Clean Water Act, there were still over 2,600 beach closings in 1992 due to pollution and over 4,000 fish advisories or bans are in place around the country today. Under H.R. 5, instead of reducing beach closings or fish advisories, we will see more closed beaches and more fish advisories. We will be moving backward. Is that what we want?

Despite the progress we have made since passage of the Clean Air Act, over 70 million Americans still live in cities that violate air quality standards designed to protect human health. Under H.R. 5 those 70 million Americans may never get a breath of fresh air, ever. Is that what we want?

Despite the progress we have made since passage of the Safe Drinking Water Act, over 28 million Americans drank tapwater that violated health-based standards in 1991-92. Do you want to risk your family's or your neighbor's health because of this bill?

The benefit of policies enacted by this Congress must be weighed against the cost. It is only fair. It is part of the equation.

I ask everyone to support this amendment.

Let us not leave here just knowing the cost of everything and the value of nothing.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FARR. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to associate myself with the gentleman's statement. The fact is that the suggestion was made that this bill is going to stop some of the unfunded mandates that are going on, that the bill somehow will reduce the cost to local governments. I would suggest to the Members on the floor and the committee that wrote this bill that this bill has nothing to do with stopping unfunded mandates. In other words, the presumption is if the costs are laid out before the Members, that we did not know what we were doing, and therefore we would reject the legislation out of hand. I would suggest under the bill that may be possible. It may be any time there is costs associated with anything that the Members will not consider it, along with some of the other concerns. But the issue here is to try to safeguard, putting in place the balance of what the benefits are in an objective way. If you have ever read committee reports lately you would find out that they are not always completely objective, at least with the minority and majority opinions. So they advance a heck of a lot argument or a position.

The fact is—I have no concern about getting the information, the objective information. In fact, we know what we are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. FARR] has expired.

(On request of Mr. VENTO and by unanimous consent, Mr. FARR was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. FARR. I yield further to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. I thank the gentleman for continuing to yield.

Mr. Chairman, the implication is that the Congress somehow does not know what they are doing in terms of when we pass there and advancing certain benefits to the people we represent. The reason the National Government or the Federal Government has taken on the role it has in past years is not because of some plot that exists or strategy in the halls of some political party. It is because the American public has sought and advanced those particular goals and policies.

So the information as far as I am concerned, its disclosure would be admirable. I would think this further disclosure of information with regard to benefits is absolutely essential to make fairer judgments. I would hope that the other side, whether it is in this amendment or in the decisions we make, would in fact consider them and safeguard that as a very important aspect of our role.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I think at a time when we are putting emphasis on cost-benefits it is ironic that this bill puts all the emphasis on cost and none on the benefits.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Let me outline briefly what is in the legislation with regard to the balance that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] referred to. It is simply unfair to say that the benefits are not to be considered; in fact, they are required to be considered.

To repeat, section 423 requires the committees to perform a cost-benefit analysis. Section 421(7)(c) requires CBO again to calculate not only the cost but also the net savings. Any cost analysis, including cost analysis of the threshold, has to be net savings to the local government. Section 202 says agencies must perform a cost-benefit analysis.

I would also say that all the examples listed by my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. FARR], are those under existing mandates and none of those are covered by this bill.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS] has previously spoken. His request requires unanimous consent.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, let me conclude by just saying this: The truth is there is not a heck of a lot of difference of opinion on this issue.

The strength of the bill that is coming before us is it says, provide information, information, objective information to the Members of Congress so they can assess the benefits of a particular piece of legislation. If we spend a billion dollars and we get minimal results, it is a bad piece of legislation. If we spend $1 billion and we save $5 billion, you would not disagree with me that it is a good piece of legislation.

All that this amendment does is to try to make objective that process. If I present to you a bill and I say trust me this is going to save huge amounts of money, you are probably not going to trust me, you will think that I just want to get the amendment through for a dozen different reasons.

But if I say, "Hey, the objective CBO people who have done the costs associated with it have also done the benefits associated with it," I hope and expect that you would look at it and you would say, "You know what, it is a good investment for a billion dollars."

So what this does is it takes away the partisanship, it takes away the politics, and asks for an objective analysis so that all of us could make a good cost-benefit analysis. I would very much hope that my friends would support this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. VOLKMER

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment printed in the RECORD as amendment No. 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLKMER: Amend Section 301 of H.R. 5 as reported as follows:

Page 23, line 25 strike "except—" and insert in lieu thereof "or"; and

(Mr. VOLKMER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, my amendment addresses the definition stage of the bill with regard to Federal intergovernmental mandates. Under that definition, a mandate is any provision in legislation, statute, or regulation that would impose an enforceable duty upon States, local governments, or tribal governments, except—and this is a very large exception—the exception is a condition of Federal assistance or a duty arising from participation in a voluntary Federal program except as provided in subparagraph B, where you have such things as AFDC and other entitlement programs that are not within the exception.

Now, what does that mean? That means basically, Mr. Chairman, that whenever we have a bill coming down, whether it is a Federal highway bill, I can put any mandate on that bill that this Congress or anybody else would like to put on it, and it does not have to do with Federal highways, it just means a condition of your getting your Federal highway funds that you are going to have to abide by if you want your Federal highway funds.

If we set up a grant program and the States necessarily are going to have to utilize that money in order to perform a certain function of government, and then we could put any type of mandate on that.

Now, that is going to be happening, for those of you that may be listening, that is going to be happening in a couple of weeks. You are going to have that type of mandate.

We had it last year in the crime bill. In the crime bill there is a provision for prison construction. In that provision, you have a requirement that you have a truth-in-sentencing provision in your State before you are eligible for one-half of those funds.

Now, how does that work? That means that if your State does not have a truth-in-sentencing provision law, then you do not get any of the money.

It also means that if you enact a truth-in-sentencing law, which I agree with as far as the States having that right to do it, I believe the States should have the right to have a truth-in-sentencing law, if they wish to do so, and if I was a State legislator I would push for it, and we in Missouri already have one, and I would like to talk about that in a few minutes, but I would like to talk about those States that do not have one.

If they enact one, what does that mean? That means their convicted felons, violent criminals, are going to have to spend at least 85 percent of their term, whatever they are given, in prison before they are released on parole, probation, or any other thing.

That means your State is going to have to expend a whole bunch of money for prisoners, and that is not even taken into account. We do not take that into account at all.

Later on when we get to the crime package, that is going to happen.

What happened to the State of Missouri? Like I said, we have what we thought was a truth-in-sentencing law, and we applied for funds under this provision. Our problem is we now consider a dangerous felon sufficient to serve 85 percent of their sentence. We do not say a violent criminal. We said a dangerous felon. And that is characterized by criminal intent and irreparable harm.

What has happened under this definition we had last year in the crime bill and we are going to have in the new crime bill, we now are required to immediately build 5,633 additional beds in order to qualify for the funds that are coming from the taxpayers. Remember that, 5,633.

But guess what, folks? How much money are we going to get? We are only going to get enough money for 1,859 beds.

You talk about an unfunded mandate, it is either that or not build prisons. I thought we were up here to help States build prisons. We are actually going backward, folks. We are not going to be building them. The States are not going to be building them under this type of provision.

We do not just let the States, instead of even putting these conditions on grants, let the States use that money that comes from the taxpayers. That is where it comes from; it does not grow on trees; it does not come from the sky. It comes from taxpayers. And those are the same taxpayers that are sending money up here to send to State Governments to send to local governments. And I believe those people should be able to determine if they are qualified, if they have a need for a correctional facility, and if we have the money to give to them, and it seems we do, why do we put these conditions that work just the opposite of what you want to do? Because that has happened in my State, to the chairman's State. Instead of giving us money for those 5,633 additional beds, we get money only for 1,859 beds.

Mr. Chairman, there are certain things as a person who stands here today that believes in States' rights that I have found in the past to be very onerous, what we have done even on the highway bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. VOLKMER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I believe the States should have a right to determine whether or not certain offenses, like DWI's, should be prosecuted and given certain penalties. I believe that the States should have the right to determine whether or not persons should ride down the highway with a motorcycle helmet or not. I believe States should have the right to determine whether or not you have seat belt laws and all these other things.

But in the Congress, the Congress in the past has done all those things, plus others. And under this bill, you will continue to see it done. You are going to continue to see it done.

Mr. Chairman, I think we should really seriously consider if we want to continue to do that, if we want to continue to mandate policy decisions; it will not cost a lot of money, some of them will, but some of them do not, policy decisions, should the States have the decisionmaking power, or should we require it from here?

That is the reason I offer this, just to point out to the Members that sometimes those so-called mandates that are not under our definition mandates become as onerous as the mandates that are in this bill and that have to go through a process before they can be considered.

Mr. Chairman, that is the purpose of the amendment. I will announce to the House that I brought it up just for the purpose of discussion. I believe it is a matter that needs to be discussed here.

I do not plan to go ahead and ask for a vote on the amendment. When the discussion is completed, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. But I do believe we need to have a discussion.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

First of all, I want to compliment the gentleman from Missouri for offering this issue for discussion in the format to which it has been offered. I think this is an important issue, both generally and specific, with respect to prisons. I have to say, first, that as a general principle, if the amendment were to proceed, and I understood the gentleman has offered it really as a vehicle for discussing this issue, I would not support it, because I believe that the exemption we have provided for Federal grants from this bill is appropriate.

I think Congress ought to retain the right, regardless of which political philosophy or which political party might happen from time to time to be the majority, to have the power to say, we are setting aside a certain amount of money in grants. And if the State wants this grant money, the State may have to apply certain policies that we are trying to accomplish.

Now, whether individual policies are appropriate or not appropriate may be a secondary but important subject.

I am merely indicating, Mr. Chairman, that I think Congress has the right to say, with respect to grants, we have taken the political responsibility to raise this money and, therefore, we believe certain policy aims should be achieved by those States that wish to apply for it. States are not required to apply for it. And this is on any particular, any particular subject.

Now, the gentleman has more particularly focused on the coming crime bills that will shortly reach the House floor, I believe. And particularly to one bill which provides a further grant, I do not say "grant," I say "further grant," because there is already a provision in the existing crime bill that passed last year which has commonly been called truth in sentencing. That is a grant that would be used by States that would impose a minimum time served of 85 percent of a prison term by convicted felons. In terms of the bill actually proposed, not all felons but second convicted violent felons.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri raises a very good point about should Congress in the specific area of law enforcement, should Congress block grant money to States and local governments and say, here, you choose what you think best will serve your citizens in terms of law enforcement and crime prevention. Or, should Congress put certain requirements as it does in grants that are not in law enforcement?

Well, this is a very, very important issue that the gentleman from Missouri has raised, because the bill that passed in 1994, the crime bill, contains a myriad of requirements after every grant, whether it is for law enforcement officers or whether it is for prisons or whether it is for what are called the prevention programs, there are page after page after page of requirements for States and local governments to comply with in order to apply for these grants.

And the great bulk of these requirements would be eliminated in the bill that is proposed, that is in the Committee on the Judiciary right now.

The current bill that is pending would take the proposed funding for police, for law enforcement and for prevention programs essentially into a block grant that would give the States the choice, you choose how to best serve your citizens. I think this is important.

I think that once we recognize, as we should, that State and local governments is primarily responsible for fighting crime, particularly violent crime, that we should remove all these pages of restrictions that we put on these grants last year.

I would say that, speaking for myself, and the majority of Members either in the Committee on the Judiciary or on this floor may or may not agree, I think the one exception that we are proposing in the area of prison grants, and that is prison grants for States that adopt truth in sentencing, which I am sorry to say my own State of New Mexico is nowhere near, our State gives up to 50 percent off sentences for good time credit to murderers, but to encourage that policy, I think makes sense, because that is a more expensive policy.

Those States which adopt truth in sentencing, that is serving 85 percent of sentences, given the convicted criminals, either to a portion of convicted criminals or to all convicted criminals, are required to pay an extra expense, certainly an incarceration cost for that policy.

We think it makes sense to try to help those States that are pursuing that policy.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFF. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out that I agree with the State of Missouri that has the truth in sentencing provision, except it does not meet exactly the Federal language that the gentleman used in the statute last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF] has expired.

(On request of Mr. VOLKMER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SCHIFF was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, as a result, I have given you exactly what has happened. We, in Missouri, are building prisons from State funds, et cetera. In fact the Governor's budget that was just introduced in the legislature within the last couple weeks provides for an additional $27 million in our own funds to build more correctional facilities, which we know we are going to need.

It costs money to put people in penitentiaries. I think we have to recognize that.

Now, whenever we write this, surely in the future, if we have to, maybe we can work together and come up with some language, surely when we do it. If the State of New Mexico, in their wisdom, would pass a law that they thought met the requirement for 85 percent service in sentencing for violent criminals, surely if they passed it but because there is a little discrepancy in the wording that they do not get the full benefit that you actually mandated, they tell us from the Department of Justice that in order to get the money we have to build penitentiaries big enough for 5,633 beds. But they are only going to give us money for 1,859 beds.

Now, wait a minute. There is something wrong here. Even if we talk about matching funds, that is only about 25 percent. What is going on?

Mr. SCHIFF. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I would say that it is our purpose in a grant program to assist States. I do not think we are necessarily agreeing to take over all costs of a given project. I think even, I believe the highway construction program even is a 90/10 percent division between the Federal Government and State governments. So I think that we are still following the same path.

If we assist the State of Missouri in approaching truth in sentencing—

Mr. VOLKMER. Would it not be better to say that we are going to require you, if you want this money, you are going to have to build 5,633 beds, and we will give you the money for around 4,000? Would that not be more in line with it than us giving you a little bit?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SCHIFF was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SCHIFF. Well, I would like to say that that is a matter then of funding. It is a matter of authorization. And I believe in truth in sentencing. I do not believe that every person convicted of a crime needs to be necessarily sentenced to prison. But I think those who are sent to prison should serve basically the sentence imposed by the judge, not only for the integrity of the criminal justice system but for public safety.

So I believe in the program. I would be willing to work with the gentleman in finding as much authorization and funding to support that, if we pass the bill.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, my last question, what is really the gentleman's intent? Do we want to build more prison out there so that we can put these crooks away and keep them there where they should be, or do we want to make the States put an 85 percent truth-in-sentencing law? Which one?

Mr. SCHIFF. I think ultimately the proponents of the crime bill would like to see both.

Mr. VOLKMER. I do not think the way it is worded and the way it is working that you are going to do both. That is my problem.

Mr. SCHIFF. I think in working with those States that have the philosophy of truth in sentencing, I think we can work toward that goal.

Mr. VOLKMER. In closing, I would like to say in Missouri's instance, for treating all the States that already have an 85 percent this way, it is not a very good feeling. You are making us come up with about 75 percent of the money.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFF. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me just make a quick point at the risk of stopping this debate on the crime bill, which may solve all of our crime bill problems, let me get back to the amendment for a moment and say I think it is an extremely helpful amendment. I congratulate the gentleman for offering it. I think it focuses us on the very issue that this legislation is trying to address but goes even broader. And that is the question of conditional assistance from the Federal Government and voluntary programs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. PORTMAN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SCHIFF was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. PORTMAN. I, for one, would be very pleased to work with the gentleman, I know the majority side would, on trying to make sense out of some of these Federal requirements. There needs to be more flexibility. That is the point of the whole debate. The gentleman's amendment would go even further than the legislation does, of course. But I commend the gentleman for raising the issue.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

□ 1310

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to title III?

Are there any other amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DOGGETT

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, amendment No. 76.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOGGETT: At the end, add the following new title:

TITLE IV—SUNSET

SEC. 401. TERMINATION DATE.

This Act shall cease to be in effect on January 3, 2000.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, I come from America's Sun Belt, with a strong belief in sunshine for our Government and a commitment to sunset for new Government initiatives, including even the most well-intentioned and appealing reforms, such as that provided us today by the distinguished authors of H.R. No. 5, a measure that I personally support.

Too often this Congress has embarked on ventures that were undoubtedly very well motivated by the very best of intentions, and they sounded great when they were presented in this Hall, but somewhere between the beltway and the back roads of America, somewhere between what was happening in this great building and the bureaucracies that implemented that legislation, a great new statutory scheme, beginning as a bright, beamy, sunshiny idea, left many people in America with simply a bad burn.

In Texas, when we get too much government sun, we have got a solution. I am not talking about an extra application of Coppertone. Rather, Mr. Chairman, we force periodic review of new government initiatives through a systematic sunset process. Government statutes simply should not have a claim to immortality.

In Texas, we believe that a periodic top-to-bottom reconsideration of new laws, agencies, and programs is healthy, it is good for the programs, it is good for those administering the programs, but most importantly, it is good for the people that have to pay the bill, the taxpayers.

We have found that through a periodic review process, the Texas Sunset Act, which I was the author of in the Texas State Senate, that we have been able to accomplish over 200 sunset reviews. We have repealed statutes, we have consolidated and abolished agencies, and the Texas Treasury is about $500 million the better off for it, which is a good bit of money, even in this town.

If a new proposal like the one that is advanced here today is so sound and so beneficial, and it has no harmful side effects, as its supporters have very forcefully advised us to be the case, then this measure can certainly stand in deep benefit from periodic review.

Therefore, this amendment, Mr. Chairman, places a 5-year life on this reform. By adopting the amendment today, we can guarantee ourselves a built-in opportunity to fix any unforeseen consequences of this major new reform.

Mr. Chairman, in listening to what my State and local officials have had to say very convincingly in support of H.R. 5, I am struck by how often they suggest that we would not have this unfunded mandate problem in the first place if the statutes approved in this Congress had had some limitation on their life.

If Congress had had a firm sunset process for new Government initiatives, we would not need an unfunded mandate bill, because we would have been able to review those initiatives and do something about them.

Therefore, what I try to accomplish through this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to see that we do not repeat that same old mistake with today's reform proposal. Let us provide for its sunset today, right now, so we will be forced to come back to this Congress, reconsider the road we have taken, thinking that we are taking the right road, but perhaps seeing some diversion down the road as it is implemented, and see that we achieve all that the supporters have told us we can achieve, and avoid the evils that have been advanced by various detractors through the last several days of debate.

Mr. Chairman, the bill that we are debating is a complicated measure. It could dramatically alter how the Federal Government operates. I hope in some regards it does change the way the Federal Government operates, and for the better, but it also has the potential for some unanticipated harm.

Many Members have raised what seem to me to be legitimate questions about it. By adopting this sunset amendment, we can make sure that we really get what we are being promised in the course of this debate. Let us adopt the amendment, review the reforms, make sure they actually fulfill the author's promises, like this Congress should have done in the first place with unfunded mandates.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we are doing some very simple and basic things with this legislation. We so often have gotten away from the intent here. We are increasing the level of accountability in this House.

We are not saying that an unfunded mandate cannot be imposed on State and local governments. Many of us here feel very strongly that that should not happen, but what this legislation does is, it simply says that if we are going to do it, we are going to have an up-or-down vote.

If that procedure fails, if that procedure fails, I do not believe we should wait until the year 2000, I do not believe we should wait until 1997, I do not believe we should wait beyond the first failure that comes from accountability to sunset this thing. I think we should actually bring it to an end then.

That is why I would argue that as we look at this issue, Mr. Chairman, we are in fact dealing with the concerns that conceivably could be raised with this amendment by making sure that Members of this House actually go on record facing these tough decisions, which heretofore have been slipped into legislation, making us less than accountable.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a fine argument. However, is it not essentially the same argument of anyone who has ever advanced a new initiative on this floor, when someone has suggested, let us review it? You say if something proves wrong, maybe we can review it in the future, but there is no mechanism within the gentleman's statute to ensure there is compelled review unless we have a sunset process.

I am for the gentleman's bill. I am probably for a number of these other bills. However, if we are putting this in on measures we are for as well as those we are against, we will compel review and refocusing of this Congress on the statutes it is passing, rather than just having more and more regulations.

Mr. DREIER. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, what I would say in response to that is very simply that every single piece of legislation that goes through the authorization process and comes down here will be faced with that kind of review, because we will be looking at those potential unfunded mandates. Points of order will be raised. We will be having debate on them right here on the House floor, so that review process to which my friend refers will go on regularly with this legislation.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to point out that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT], who offers this amendment, said several times if we had sunset provisions we might not have an unfunded mandate problem now.

It is my understanding that the kind of sunset provisions that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT] talks about, and of which he is supportive, and which I am informed have worked for new programs and new initiatives set up to expand governmental power, here this is a motion, a bill, rather, that will reduce governmental power. I think in this particular case, a sunset provision is not appropriate.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I urge a "no" vote on this amendment.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as the debate concludes, it is becoming painfully clear that this House is responding not to the needs of the country, but to the needs of doing a bunch of things in 100 days.

I was a small boy when the Democrats dealt with the 100 days of the New Deal. Those were important times. The country was going broke. A third of our population was out of work. Better than a third of the country was ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-fed, according to the President. Homes and farms were being foreclosed. Businesses were going down the drain. The suicide rate was up. They responded in 100 days.

However, there is nothing like that challenging the country at this time. What we are doing is rushing to pass an assortment of legislation ill-considered here, worse considered in committee. This legislation has never had hearings in the committee of jurisdiction.

We are responding to a demand which is viewed on that side of the aisle as being very important. However, we are not considering the basic responsibility that we as Members of this body have, and that is to legislate well.

It would be my hope that when the 100 days that we are dealing with now is recalled, it will be a time like the 100 days of the New Deal when people remembered it as a time of greatness, when the Congress responded well to a desperate challenge and to great concerns on the part of the people; not, not I say, as a period during which the Congress, in a prodigious rush, without the slightest attention to the details and the concerns that the people have, or the need to legislate well, would be properly addressed.

We witnessed not only this legislation brought to the floor without hearings, but we have watched attempts to change the rules of the House, so that the chairman of the committee can announce that hearings are going to be held on a particular piece of legislation, in 5 minutes, and be there or forfeit your chance to participate.

In our committee we were about to have hearings on a piece of legislation to address a major concern of my colleague, again on that side of the aisle, and we were going to deal with the problem of tort reform. But we are not going to hear from the Securities and Exchange Commission on the impact on investors, and indeed the proposal was going to absolve people who act with arrogant recklessness from any liability for suits under the securities laws. How is that to be justified? Or the widow who has lost a husband could not be the named complainant in a lawsuit to protest a wrong which was done to her. I think that is unwise.

We are now considering legislation to have risk assessment on a whole broad array of statutes not identified in the bill, and each of these statutes is different. No concern is being given to the impact of this one-size-fits-all piece of legislation, a bill which would treat food and drug orders, with regard to removal of things like blood contaminated with AIDS from the system of commerce in this country, the same as it would treat regulations relative to first-class mail.

I think that is an unwise course of action, and it is one that this Congress, in its responsibility to its people, and indeed in its responsibilities to itself, should avoid.

I just want my colleagues to know at the end of 100 days we are still going to be here, the country is still going to be here, the business of the Congress is still going to be before us. People are going to judge us by what we do and how well we do it, not whether we rush through to get a piece of legislation to this floor to pass it, to send it to the President's desk. That is not the test.

The test is are we legislating wisely and well? The laws we pass address the well-being of 270 million American people. They deal with their financial security, they deal with their health, they deal with the safety of their environment, they deal with things like nuclear safety, and food and drugs which will affect this generation and future generations. And they are going to impact, believe it or not, often times adversely upon the industry of this country, which thinks it is going to be benefited by some of these regulations.

Bad regulations are also bad for industry, but regulations which cannot be brought forward to address the legitimate concerns of industry are going to be banned or barred or mutilated by the process in which we are now engaged.

I would tell my colleagues that the process upon which we are engaged now is one which may look good at the end of 100 days, it may not look too good at election time next year, but it is going to look a lot worse when the cold light of history shines upon the efforts of this 100 days, when it is found that we proceeded carelessly when we passed legislation, when we did not consider the concerns and needs and future of the people.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think we just heard a very broad view of probably some of the problems that some of us see as excesses which could occur in consideration of the program for 100 days or the process of moving that legislation through without hearings and without detailed study and analysis.

We that have had an opportunity to serve in Congress more than one term, and I know I have colleagues on both the majority side and on our side, favor an opportunity to exercise what has been less than diligently exercised over the course of years, and that is the oversight review of the Congress.

None of us pretend to be the ultimate lawgivers, none of us pretend to have the expertise to know all of the unintended consequences of this legislation or other legislation.

We are in a march, in a move now over these next 100 days to make some startling changes.

The gentleman from California mentioned we can come back and change this bill if it does not work, we can come back and change other bills that my colleague from Texas and I and other Members of the majority intend to ask to be considered at the end of every bill, the provision to sunset.

I think the Congress can always come back and review and repass bills, but those of us who have been here for a number of terms know we never get around to it. The passage of a bill by its very nature constructs an interest group, a special interest group that becomes the promulgators of that bill and the continuers of that bill because they have a special interest in that bill.

We are fortunate enough to recognize the gift that we have before us today and start this process, and that is look at every piece of constructive legislation we put forth, say that if it is good legislation and it does not need anything a future Congress will have the intelligence to reenact and reauthorize that legislation.

On the other hand, if after a period of time there are inadequacies in the legislation, a future Congress will have the ability to amend and change, to make up for those inadequacies; or if, on the other hand, there is abuse or the legislation appears not to have solved the problem it was tended to solve it will automatically go to a timely death.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KANJORSKI. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, first I want to thank the gentleman for his leadership on this issue, because I know the gentleman worked hard on this in the committee, and for letting me as a brandnew member here on what is my first amendment participate with the gentleman on this.

Having only heard the presentation of amendments and other Government initiatives over C-SPAN myself prior to coming here, is not this call for more Government oversight on programs something that our colleagues on the other side of the aisle have demanded again and again and again when there were new initiatives?

Mr. KANJORSKI. The gentleman from Texas is absolutely correct. I have sat here for 10 years and I have talked with my friends on the other side. Sometimes the C-SPAN audience does not realize that indeed we are friends, but all of us talked over this legislation and we all know that there are pieces of legislation that we are embarrassed about that do not adequately accomplish what they were intended to accomplish, but the Congress never gets an opportunity to oversight or review and return to that legislation.

What will happen with the gentleman's amendment and my amendment here and the ones we intend to attach to future pieces of legislation, it will require the Congress to come back and face the reality of their legislation, to decide that they have to oversight it, to have hearings on it, or to reauthorize it or let it die.

Mr. DOGGETT. And if we just pick and choose, picking and applying sunset on Democratic initiatives or applying it on initiatives that we like and not to those that we do not like we will never get the process in place of having forced periodic review and real oversight, will we?

Mr. KANJORSKI. Absolutely not. Let me give an example, and I know the gentleman from Texas feels strongly on the wetlands legislation. I know a lot of my friends on the other side and I have seen inadequacies in the legislation, not in the intent but in the application of the legislation as it affects small business people, farmers, residents of our community, all, we have heard those woes. If the Congress got involved in studying those issues, if we took advantage of the modern era of electronics and could hold hearings in Washington, but have people around this country that are directly affected, not the interest groups, not the associations, not the lobbyists, but real, live people that are affected by this legislation, their few stories could set the pace for this Congress to understand the underlying logic to redress, come back and examine legislation.

Finally, I would say to the gentleman from Texas and my friends on the other side, do not fear sunset, do not fear sunset, do not fear bringing this to a forced review. America is an evolving nation. Over 200 years we grew from 3 million people to 260 million, from 13 States to 50 States. We have to take the time to review legislation that was even good at the time it was enacted but now may be obsolete.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to take this as a nonpartisan amendment, and support the principle that we can take 5 years, 2½ Congresses and give that next Congress, the 107th Congress in its second session the opportunity to review what we do here to today.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I will not use my entire 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, two points: First of all, again, with respect to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, I think sunset provisions make eminent sense where there is the creation of a new spending program by a level of government to review it to see if that spending program merits support in the future instead of becoming an entitlement program.

However, I think it does not fit a procedure by which we will be limiting the passing of certain bills. I think the two just do not fit together.

I would like to speak more generally on the last several comments I have heard and what the gist of them seems to me to be, Mr. Chairman, is that we are moving too fast, and we do not know all of the ramifications of bills we are considering.

You know, back on the first day of the 104th Congress, the first day, we made a number of changes in how this institution runs. Just one was to eliminate proxy voting where Members were absent from committees, but their votes were still cast just as if they were there, and just as if they had listened to the debate on amendments by committee chairmen who, with the use of those proxies, ruled the roost. You could ask for all the votes you wanted in committee, and you knew that if the Chair of that committee did not agree with you, no matter how the votes went, as a practical matter, on the floor of that committee you were going to lose the vote on the proxy vote, the use of the absent members' votes. That was a reform everyone knew was overdue.

We did not need to start from scratch as if we had never heard of proxy voting. We did not need to have hearings about it. I believe that particular reform passed unanimously or almost unanimously on the first day.

I think that is the situation we have today with unfunded mandates. This is not an unheard of problem. In fact, the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, which we put in the bill as the monitoring agency on this issue, has for years brought this issue to the attention of Congress, all without any action by the previous Congresses.

The only difference here is that the 104th Congress, I believe, will take action with respect to this very serious problem.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a general comment. I heard a few minutes ago one of the Members make reference to this is as a 100-day agenda, and what we are doing here today is doing what is not necessarily good for the country in the long term, but we are pushing a 100-day agenda. I want to make it perfectly clear, and excuse me for taking issue with you on that statement, but this is not a 100-day agenda that we are working on today.

This is an issue that we have been coming to grips with for years. We have introduced unfunded mandate legislation years ago, not exactly the same legislation, but we have introduced a number of bills years ago, had hearings, formed caucuses. This is an agenda about unfunded mandates. This is not a Republican issue. This is not a Democratic issue. This is an issue about the American people, and we need to respond to it in that way, not that it is a 100-day issue.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONDIT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. The gentleman and I were both on the committee last year, the Committee on Government Operations, when legislation substantially similar to this legislation was passed by a vote of 35 to 4 after 3 hearings in my subcommittee and hearings at the full-committee level. This is not a new issue.

Mr. CONDIT. Reclaiming my time, that is only the point I want to make. I am not speaking to the issue of the amendment.

I just simply want to say that some of us believe this is good for the country. We believe it is good for local government, for State government, for us to be forced to take accountability for our actions here, and we are not throwing in with anybody's agenda for 100 days. We are doing what we think is right, those of us who support the unfunded mandate legislation.

I want to make that perfectly clear to my side of the aisle. We are not throwing in with anybody's 100-day agenda. We are doing what is right, what we feel is right. It is consistent with what we have been doing not just the last couple of weeks but for the last few years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 145, noes 283, as follows:

Mr. VENTO changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE
OFFERED BY MR. MORAN

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. MORAN:

AMENDMENT NO. 21

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Fiscal Accountability and Intergovernmental Reform Act" ("FAIR Act").

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares:

(1) Federal legislation and regulatory requirements impose burdens on State and local resources to implement federally mandated programs without fully evaluating the costs to State and local governments associated with compliance with those requirements and often times without provisions of adequate federal financial assistance. These Federal legislative and regulatory initiatives—

(A) force State and local governments to utilize scarce public resources to comply with Federal mandates;

(B) prevent these resources from being available to meet local needs; and

(C) detract from the ability of State and local governments to establish local priorities for use of local public resources.

(2) Federal legislation and regulatory programs result in inefficient utilization of economic resources, thereby reducing the pool of resources available—

(A) to enhance productivity, and increase the quantity and quality of goods and services produced by the American economy; and

(B) to enhance international competitiveness.

(3) In implementing Congressional policy, Federal agencies should, consistent with the requirements of Federal law, seek to implement statutory requirements, to the maximum extent feasible, in a manner which minimizes—

(A) the inefficient allocation of economic resources;

(B) the burden such requirements impose on use of local public resources by State and local governments; and

(C) the adverse economic effects of such regulations on productivity, economic growth, full employment, creation of productive jobs, and international competitiveness of American goods and services.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this act are:

(1) To assist Congress in consideration of proposed legislation establishing or revising Federal programs so as to assure that, to the maximum extent practicable, legislation enacted by Congress will—

(A) minimize the burden of such legislation on expenditure of scarce local public resources by State and local governments;

(B) minimize inefficient allocation of economic resources; and

(C) reduce the adverse effect of such legislation—

(i) on the ability of State and local governmental entities to use local public resources to meet local needs and to establish local priorities for local public resources, and

(ii) on allocation of economic resources, productivity, economic growth, full employment, creation of productive jobs, and international competitiveness.

(2) To require Federal agencies to exercise discretionary authority and to implement statutory requirements in a manner which is consistent with fulfillment of each agency's mission and with the requirements of other laws, minimizes the impact regulations and other major Federal actions affecting the economy have on—

(A) the ability of State and local governmental entities to use local public resources to meet local needs; and

(B) the allocation of economic resources, productivity, economic growth, full employment, creation of productive jobs, and international competitiveness of American goods and services.

TITLE I—LEGISLATIVE REFORM

SEC. 101. REPORTS ON LEGISLATION.

(a) REPORT REQUIRED.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever a committee of either House reports a bill or resolution of a public character to its House which mandates unfunded requirements upon State or local governments or the private sector, the report accompanying that bill or resolution shall contain an analysis, prepared after consultation with the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, detailing the effect of the new requirements on—

(A) State and local government expenditures necessary to comply with Federal mandates;

(B) private businesses, including the economic resources required annually to comply with the legislation and implementing regulations; and

(C) economic growth and competitiveness.

(2) EXCEPTION.—The requirements of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any bill or resolution with respect to which the Director of the Congressional Budget Office certifies in writing to the Chairman of the Committee reporting the legislation that the estimated costs to State and local governments and the private sector of implementation of such legislation during the first three years will not exceed $50,000,000 in the aggregate and during the first five years will not exceed $100,000,000 in the aggregate. For this purpose, a year shall be a period of three hundred and sixty five consecutive days.

(b) DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS OF CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE.—The Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall prepare for each bill or resolution of a public character reported by any committee of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, an economic analysis of the effects of such bill or resolution, satisfying the requirements of subsection (a). The analysis prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall be included in the report accompanying such bill or resolution if timely submitted to such committee before such report is filed.

(c) LEGISLATION SUBJECT TO POINT OF ORDER.—Any bill or resolution shall be subject to a point of order against consideration of the bill by the House of Representatives or the Senate (as the case may be) if such bill or resolution is reported for consideration by the House of Representatives or the Senate unaccompanied by the analysis required by this section.

SEC. 102. EXERCISE OF RULEMAKING POWERS.

The provisions of this title are enacted by the Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(ii) has the least adverse effect on productivity, economic growth, full employment, creation of productive jobs, and international competitiveness of American goods or services; or

(B) provide a written statement—

(i) that the agency's failure to select such alternative is precluded by the requirements of Federal law; or

(ii) that the agency's failure to select such alternative is consistent with the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 202. INTERGOVERNMENTAL AND ECONOMIC IMPACT ASSESSMENT.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Whenever an agency publishes a general notice of proposed rulemaking for any proposed rule, and before initiating any other major Federal action affecting the economy, the agency shall prepare and make available for public comment an Intergovernmental and Economic Impact Assessment. Such Assessment shall be published in the Federal Register at the time of the publication of general notice of proposed rulemaking for the rule or prior to implementing such other major agency action affecting the economy.

(1) a succinct statement of the need for, and the objectives of, such rule or other major Federal action;

(2) a summary of the issues raised by the public comments in response to the publication by the agency of the Economic Impact Assessment, a summary of the agency's evaluation of such issues, and a statement of any changes made in the proposed rule or other proposed action as a result of such comments;

(3) a description of each of the significant alternatives to the rule or other major Federal action affecting the economy, considered by the agency, which, consistent with fulfillment of agency statutory obligations, would—

(A) lessen the need for expenditure of State or local public resources by State and local governments; or

(B) reduce the potential adverse effects of such proposed rule or other major Federal action on productivity, economic growth, full employment, creation of productive jobs, and international competitiveness of American goods and services,

The requirements of this title shall not alter in any manner the substantive standards otherwise applicable to the implementation by an agency of statutory requirements or to the exercise by an agency of authority delegated by law.

SEC. 205. EFFECTIVE DATE AND EXEMPTION.

This title shall apply to any rule proposed, any final rule promulgated, and any other major Federal action affecting the economy implemented by any agency after the date of the enactment of this Act. This title shall not apply to any agency which is not an agency within the meaning of section 551(l) of title 5, United States Code.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, this is the last amendment that we will offer to this bill. It is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. Chairman, the vast majority of Members of this body recognize that it is imperative that we address the issue of unfunded mandates upon State and local governments and the private sector.

Speaking as a Democrat, I wish we had done this when we were in the majority. We should have, and in many ways we should be ashamed that we did not.

Mr. Chairman, I respect the proponents of this legislation. I agree with their intent. I think it is time that we profoundly alter the way we do business in Washington, that we accept accountability for our actions.

If we are going to pass legislation, we have to be able to prove in a compelling fashion that the cost of that legislation is less than the benefits that it will provide, and we have to respect that State and local governments have achieved a level of competence, and in fact have had that level of competence for decades now that may not have been there in the 1950's, and the 1960's, and early 1970's when we assumed so much control at the Federal level. We undermined their efforts. We undermined their ability to determine their own priorities, what was best for the demography and the geography, for the needs of their own jurisdictions.

This legislation is one of many that will in fact empower those State and local officials. It is the right thing to do. But I want this legislation to be enduring, to effect this profound change. My concern is that, if we are not careful, the remedy that we write might be worse than the malady that we cure.

For example, Mr. Chairman, this legislation will create new entitlement programs for virtually every domestic discretionary program that we enact on this floor. Now we could overturn them with a point of order, but the point is those that we approve, consistent with the intent of this legislation, must be fully funded. Entitlement programs are the principal reason we have the problem we have now, because they have crowded out Federal assistance to States and localities. That assistance is considered domestic discretionary assistance. That is now down to less than 20 percent of the budget. It is now really only about 12 percent, if we include everything.

That is the problem. States and localities do not have the money that they need to carry out their responsibilities, and we are going to create more entitlements with this legislation.

It will also create unequal treatment between the public and the private sector.

It will be very difficult to pass legislation that creates national standards or that in fact addresses constructively the deficit problems that we have.

For example, and I mentioned this last night, we probably need to raise the part B premium on Medicare. The way this legislation is worded, the 16 million public employees throughout the country that work for States and localities and all the various commissions, they could be exempt from having to increase their premium. Those employees in the private sector, the 100 million employees who work for private businesses, could not possibly be exempt. So not only would they pay their share, but they would have to make up for the fact that 16 million public employees did not have to pay their share. I do not think that is what we wanted to do.

In fact, there are reasons for national standards, and we can go back through history, all the way back to the Articles of Confederation when we gave complete latitude to States, and it did not work. We created a patchwork quilt of governance, and we had to repeal that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MORAN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MORAN. I am very much concerned that as we encourage the private sector to compete with the public sector so we can ensure that we carry out our programs in the most efficient manner, that we can let the market work its natural process so that the public sector is not costing two and three times as much as it could be done for in the private sector for many activities, whether it be waste disposal, public utilities, or any number of other things, janitorial services, secretarial services.

All those activities are being privatized. States and localities ought to be able to privatize them, and private companies ought to be able to compete. They would not be able to compete under this legislation because we will have Federal standards applying completely to the private sector and States and localities would be exempt.

I am offering a substitute amendment which was introduced 3 years ago. As of last year we had 248 cosponsors. We stopped getting cosponsors at that point because it was clear that the vast majority of Members agreed. In fact, we had the support of the National League of Cities, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National Governors' Association, all of the State organizations, the National Conference of State Legislators, a long list of them. They all supported this.

They do not now, because the current legislation goes a step further. It creates an entitlement for every State and local grant, and it gives preferential treatment to the public sector over the private sector. Naturally, they do not support it. They want to get as much as they can.

I would suggest that this legislation, this substitute amendment, is the kind of moderate but profound change that will be enduring, that will not require that we fix it in 2 or 3 years. We know it does not go too far, but it does in the right direction. It will require that a point of order be raised on any legislation for which we have not obtained a complete fiscal impact analysis, not only of the public sector activities, but of what impact it has on the private sector.

It also enables any Member of this body to strike an unfunded Federal mandate from the legislation being proposed.

It has a judicial review section; it applies to the executive branch. It will require that the executive branch, when it issues regulations, to solicit from those groups affected what is the most efficient way of complying with the intent of the legislation. Take the ideas that are out there in States and localities and private businesses, incorporate those into your regulations, and let us conduct business in the most efficient, effective, and responsible manner.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge the support of my colleagues.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would join my colleagues on both sides from applauding the gentleman from Virginia for the long hours and much dedication and hard work that he has devoted to mandate relief and to the FAIR Act.

It is unfortunate, as the gentleman has already indicated, in the last Congress the then-majority party did not choose to consider his bill or in fact any mandate relief bill, which we were all hopeful might have been accomplished, even though I think the FAIR bill had an enormous number of cosponsors and so forth.

However, this is a new day and a new opportunity to consider a bill which I think goes beyond what the FAIR bill does. I think it blends the benefits of the informational requirements, which are vital in the FAIR bill, with the added feature of accountability, which is, I think, the lack in this bill, is the factor accountability.

Also, I have to say the other failure that I personally find disturbing is there is no commission to accomplish the sorts of things that I hope to accomplish through the review of the ACIR.

While the gentleman and I agree on the need for mandate relief, and I think that is a very strongly held belief that we must give relief to State and local governments and the private sector, I must oppose this amendment because I do not believe FAIR is the best we can do.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN].

Clearly, we have to be much more sensitive to the costs that are imposed on the State and local governments as well as the private sector. I support very much legislation in this amendment to rein in unnecessary Federal mandates. That is why I cosponsored it last year. I received almost 250 cosponsors.

Now we have before us the proposal to go beyond the Moran substitute and to adopt the contract proposal.

Might I say a word mostly to those who are for the Moran substitute but who are thinking of voting for the contract provision. I recognize very much that it is not easy to vote simply for the Moran substitute and then against the final proposal if the Moran substitute fails, as it is likely to do. But I want to speak from personal experience, if I might.

As I said, it is not easy when you favor reining in mandates to oppose the contract provision. But let me suggest what would happen. Because of its presumptions, because it so stacks the deck, because of the technical roadblocks that are set up, I think that a lot or some legislation that is in the national interest will probably never see the light of day.

Thirty years ago, when I was in the State legislature, I worked on special education legislation. I did so because I was initiated into the problem by somebody who worked with me on my campaign and had simply one request: That if I were elected, I would work on special education. In those days, half of the handicapped children in Michigan did not have a single hour of special education opportunity.

Well, an event occurred. We got moving on a bipartisan basis in Michigan 30 years ago, and we passed a major special education reform. There was a lot of resistance to its from general education, believe me. Most of the superintendents looked at it, I think, very provincially. But we passed it.

But what we could not enact was any form of mandatory special education within the State. And that meant still hundreds of students and in other States tens of thousands of students with a handicap who had no educational opportunity at all.

Some years later, the Federal Government passed the mandatory special education law. What it said was there was a national interest in all of the handicapped children in this country, wherever they lived, having a special education opportunity.

And there was some funding, but also what was created was a local-State-national partnership, when it came to handicapped children. If there had not been that shared effort, that partnership effort, in my judgment today tens of thousands of handicapped children today would be without an educational opportunity.

I am not for blind unfunded mandates. I am in favor of this substitute because I think it would slow us down and make us look, that it would not handcuff us when national leadership was necessary. The technical roadblocks are immense, the necessity to look at tens of thousands of units to see their impact when it comes, for example, to special education, tens of thousands and essentially the major advantage, the presumptions that are given to those who want to avoid national action.

What probably makes it worse is that this heightens the expectations of local units that they are going to have a free ride, that if there is a national interest, there cannot be a partnership of local-State-national entities. That is probably the worst impact of this.

So in a word, I very much favor the Moran substitute. I favor major reform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LEVIN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LEVIN. I favor major reform. I think there has to be a major change. But I think this is an extreme change. What was true of special ed I think would have been true and would be true today in terms of clean air, in terms of clean water. I am not sure the Americans With Disabilities Act would have ever passed.

So let us be sensible. Let us have some kind of balance here.

I am for a highly reformed federalism, but not for the end of it. And I think that this bill, without this substitute, is a step backward several hundred years instead of forward to a new era where there is a true partnership.

So I just urge my colleagues, though the vote may be difficult, to vote their conscience and, indeed, vote their local interests, acknowledge at times there is a need for a merger, a melding of national, State, and local interests.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, first in response to my colleague from Michigan, very thoughtful comments on the issue of unfunded mandates, I know he is sincere about his interest in addressing the issue. I would say that the conclusion he draws is a very different one than many of us do. That is to say, we believe that having cost information, having a debate on the floor as to the funding issue and then having a vote up or down will not necessarily result in important issues like special education being passed, when appropriate.

The difference between the Moran bill and H.R. 5 before us is that it provides for that debate on the floor and it provides for that accountability, the vote up or down.

The cost concerns that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] raised would be the same concerns in the Moran bill as an example. The cost-benefit analysis is in both pieces of legislation. I have to oppose the Moran amendment simply because it does not go far enough. And in doing so, I will once again commend the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] for all the work they have put into this.

As I have said earlier in this debate, it is the foundation of this bill, the cost part is extremely important. But I would also say that there is a crucial part missing. At the very least, if we think something is important enough to mandate from Congress, from the Federal level, we ought to be challenged as to paying for that mandate. That is all this bill says. And under the Moran substitute, we have the cost information, but Congress does not have to face, confront that very crucial issue as to whether when we mandate, if it is important enough to mandate, is it not important enough for us to fund it. that is what this legislation gets to.

I would say that we have heard plenty of examples in these past 2 weeks of the horrors out there in terms of what the Federal Government is currently doing. It is nothing short of an abuse of power from Washington. When we have these kinds of examples out there, when we have good evidence of such a crisis, we ought to act.

I can just say, in summary, that cost information alone is not strong enough medicine for what clearly ails us.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I, too, would like to join reluctantly opposing this amendment.

We spent a great deal of time working with the Parliamentarian and in a bipartisan way struck an agreement with the former chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY]. And that amendment deals with this entire issue of points of order, and I believe that the accountability that comes about with H.R. 5 is very adequately addressed.

We looked at this point-of-order question in a clearly bipartisan way, and it is my hope that the House will recognize that time and effort was spent doing just that and will, in fact, reject this substitute, which clearly repeals that bipartisan agreement.

Mr. PETE GEREN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, rise in reluctant opposition to the Moran amendment. But I want to take a moment to just note that the reason we are here today is because there has been a bipartisan effort under way for the last 3 or 4 years. And the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] has been one of the real leaders in that effort.

He did so much to build the foundation for the bill that we consider today. I supported his bill last year. I support the bill under consideration today, because it does carry it one step further, a very important step further, in my opinion, to make sure that we embed in our law the principle that if it is important enough to pass it, it is important enough to pay for it. But we would not be here today, we would not have this bill ready, as it is, for consideration on the floor if it had not been for the leadership that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] has shown on this issue.

He has drawn on his experience in city government. He brought a wealth of understanding of this issue to the U.S. Congress. And he has contributed so much to the development of this legislation, to educating the Congress on the principles that underlie this legislation.

I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] for what he has done. Again, it is with great reluctance that I oppose this amendment, which by itself would have been a big step forward. In the last Congress it would have been as much as we could have gotten done.

The bill we have in front of us now does carry it to the next step. I support the bill in front of us for that reason.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], another person who has been such a leader in this bipartisan effort, worked with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN], worked with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS], in bringing this legislation to the floor.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, I too, rise, reluctantly opposed to the substitute amendment by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN].

I want to tell my colleagues that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] is an example of a long-term effort, that he has not agreed to any 100-day agenda. He has been involved in this issue for a long period of time.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PETE GEREN] is absolutely correct. We would not be at this stage today had it not been for the efforts of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN]. He has been a fighter for putting a stop to unfunded mandates, for us to deal with this in a responsible way.

We both got involved in this issue. He took a little different path than some of the rest of us, but I commend him and congratulate him for his effort and think that he is a reason that we are going to be, I believe, successful on the floor today on passage of this bill. I support H.R. 5. I think it is the right way to go.

With all due respect to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] I ask my colleagues to not support the substitute amendment. Let us move H.R. 5. It is, I think, a big step for us in putting a stop to unfunded mandates.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I join many of my colleagues in the legislation which I believe is the most bipartisan of the two major bills before us, and that is the Moran legislation. I commend it to my colleagues as the real genuine bipartisan article.

I say that only because of the number of cosponsors on both sides. It is true that H.R. 5 has at least a tinge of bipartisanship to it. But if one looks at the cosponsorship that the Moran bill had, one finds that more than half the Members of the House had cosponsored the bipartisan effort of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN], a Democrat, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], a Republican.

About half of the Members of the Republican side had cosponsored the piece of legislation offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN]. I believe it is more thoughtful, and I believe it is not captive to the baby and the bath water syndrome which I think drives H.R. 5.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about the whole purpose here. I am, of course, speaking for myself in giving my own opinion. I do not believe the effort in H.R. 5 is as benign as it is upheld to be. Some say the sole purpose of it is to reduce the number of Federal requirements, or eliminate the number of Federal requirements that are there, unless there is money to back those requirements, and that is the sole purpose of it.

I believe that the architects of this H.R. 5, this particular unfunded mandate bill, have a much larger purpose. There is, I believe, this legislation joined with others, some of which is in the Contract With America, which, taken together, amount to a grand strategy, a strategy which I believe is aimed at removing the public from the opportunity to utilize their National Government for the purpose of embracing and enhancing those matters which are in the national interest.

Let me go back to the 1970's. David Stockman, who served, as Members will recall, as Budget Director under former President Ronald Reagan, confessed after leaving that position that the purpose of their economic plan was not what it was thought to be, and that was just to cut the budget. He said, "We had a grander strategy than that in mind. We were attempting to empty the Federal Treasury," and they were successful at doing exactly that in the 1980's.

Mr. Chairman, let us look at what happened beginning at about that time with regard to Federal mandates. Go back to the 1970's. One of the strictest, most voluminous mandates ever passed by the Congress of the United States was passed in the 1970's, the Clean Water Act.

My colleagues will recall that great rivers in America were catching on fire, spontaneous combustion, and the American people looked around and said, "Maybe the rivers are not quite clean enough in this country. Because rivers run through us, this cleaning of rivers will take a national strategy," so they correctly looked to the Congress of the United States to pass legislation to clean up America's major waterways. We passed major legislation to do that. It was a mandate, a rock-ribbed, ironclad mandate to clean up America's rivers.

However, we did something else back in the seventies. We passed the money to help the States and the communities, and yes, industry, to follow the mandates of that law. In fact, the amount of money passed amounted to the greatest public works program in the history of the United States, second only to the Interstate Highway System.

Now go to the time following the Reagan administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WILLIAMS was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes).

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, following the beginning of what I think is this grand strategy to prevent the public from working their will through the national Congress, in the 1980's the Congress passed another water mandate. This one was the Safe Drinking Water Act, every bit as much of a mandate as was the earlier Clean Water Act.

Regulation after regulation, as with the Clean Water Act, followed the Safe Drinking Water Act. It was a mandate, ironclad, copper-riveted, placed on the localities and the States and the industry, but there was one difference. It was now in the 1980's, and the new grand strategy to make the Federal Government infantile was in place.

The Congress of the United States, because of the emptying of the Treasury, did not pass a penny in the initial goal, not a penny to help the localities carry out the Safe Drinking Water Act. That damaged my State of Montana and my communities out there in a terrible way.

I would ask the Members, have they heard complaints about the Safe Drinking Water Act? Absolutely, because this Congress did not have the will to pay for it. The Treasury had been drained.

Did Members hear complaints about the Clean Water Act? No. Why? Because the Congress had the will to spend the money to help the communities in the 1970's, as it did in the sixties and the fifties and the forties, but things changed pretty dramatically in those early eighties. The effort was drain the Treasury. The effort was to not pay for the mandates.

Now the effort is "Let us not have the mandates at all," so the strategy is coming full circle. I ask my colleagues to say no to it, and yes to the Moran amendment.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the substitute of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN]. Having served in the New York State Assembly for 12 years, I am opposed to unfunded mandates. However, I think that what we need to do in this Congress is not be blind, not pass laws which blanketly prohibit Congress from exercising the flexibility that it may need to exercise from time to time.

The substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] simply says that Congress can consider legislation containing unfunded mandates. It does not mean Congress has to consider it. It does not mean that Congress will consider it. However, frankly, it means that Congress in the future can consider it.

What are we afraid of? Each of us comes here to represent our constituents, about 600,000 people. It seems to me that under the system we have in this country, the majority ought to rule. Prohibitions, blanket prohibitions that we try to shackle on future Congresses it seems to me are very, very dangerous precedents.

Yes, we must have mandates and we must be very careful that we fund these mandates. However, some future Congresses may look at this in another light. At a time when we are talking here of passing a balanced budget amendment, and at a time we are talking here coupling with it unfunded mandates, a complete prohibition on any kind of mandates, unless they are totally funded, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] is quite right. What we are really seeing here is a total prohibition on any kind of mandates from the Federal Government, because frankly, there will not be any money to do the kinds of things that some people know need to be done.

When we combine the two, it really brings us paralysis in terms of saying that the Federal Government needs to have a uniform policy throughout the country.

I do not think it is so terrible to have clean air and clean water and other things. My State of New York has a problem with acid rain. We cannot handle the problem ourselves. We need, frankly, a universal taking care of this problem. If there is a problem in Ohio and it affects New York, we cannot do it ourselves, so we need the Federal Government to intervene.

What really frightens me, Mr. Chairman, is that under the guise of unfunded mandates and under the guise of a balanced budget and under the guise of all these things we are rushing toward, we are going to give our children a dirtier environment, dirtier air, dirtier water. All the kinds of things that the Federal Government has done for so many years the Federal Government will not be able to do.

In the abstract, Mr. Chairman, of course we need to say that if we are going to mandate something, things ought to be paid for. However, let us not tie the hands of future Congresses to give them the flexibility to pass the programs that they see fit without being tied up in a straitjacket.

I want to commend the gentleman from Virginia. This is something that he has pushed for a long, long time. It adheres to the principle the fact that we ought to not have unfunded mandates, but it allows the future Congresses to have the flexibility that they need. One person—one vote.

If a future Congress wants to mandate something, they can. If they do not want to, they do not have to.

What are we afraid of? Let us have the flexibility.

The Moran amendment, as far as I am concerned, is the best of both worlds, and that is why I believe we ought to pass it.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, just briefly, I think the gentleman has made a strong statement in support of H.R. 5.

I would ask him if he is aware under H.R. 5 of the fact that in fact by majority vote Congress can at any time waive the point of order and go ahead and impose a mandate, go ahead and provide the costs or not mandate at all. Those options are all there.

Mr. ENGEL. The options may be there, but the threshold is much more difficult than what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] is proposing. That is why I think what he is saying is to give us maximum flexibility. Frankly, I do not understand why we are not all rallying around the Moran proposal.

Mr. PORTMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, I would just say again I think you made a strong statement in support of H.R. 5. The abstract concept that you said you supported, which is no-money/no-mandate, is in fact even stronger than H.R. 5. I would say all we are asking for is the cost information that is in the Moran bill, but then in addition to that, to have a debate on the floor on the funding issue and force Congress to be accountable to that issue.

Mr. ENGEL. Can I ask the gentleman why then he does not embrace the Moran bill, because I think what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] is doing is frankly giving you everything that you feel needs to be done.

Mr. PORTMAN. Let me be clear again. What the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] does is the foundation for this legislation which is to provide the cost information, but we need to go further than the cost information and address the very issue which you addressed in the abstract, which is the question of funding. And that is what this legislation does.

Mr. ENGEL. But, I think what this legislation also does is, if something is not fully funded, it makes it very, very hard to do. Frankly, I am not afraid of unfunded mandates.

I am afraid that the ruse of unfunded mandates is going to be used to prevent Federal action on clean water, clean air, the environment, and all the things that I know we need. And that is why I think the gentleman's proposal makes infinite sense.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. MICA asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICA. Mr. Chairman, it is indeed an honor and privilege to speak at this juncture of the debate with the Moran substitute before us at this hour. This is really the conclusion of years and years of work for people who were in the Congress before me and people who served with me in the past 2 years, and I want to just take a moment in this historic debate and its conclusion and thank a few people.

I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], the chairman. He has shown incredible leadership on this issue, not just today but over the years, in working in the past 2 years in the minority. Also the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN] who joined us in the last Congress and he took up the mantle of unfunded mandates and carried it through, and carried it through some tough times. My compliments to them.

Also the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], who formerly chaired our subcommittee. I served on that subcommittee. He helped us fight the battle to get unfunded mandates and the question before the Congress and before the country. To these gentleman and colleagues, I want to say thank you so much.

Also to the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT]. He and I worked on this issue, and this has indeed been a bipartisan issue. The gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT] offered a measure much tougher than anything we see before us today. It was no-money/-no-mandate proposal.

And the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. TAUZIN and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PETE GEREN. We were called the unholy trinity, because we believed in moving forward with some action on unfunded mandates and property rights and risk assessment, issues that have long been swept under the rug and left behind the carpet.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], myself, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], we all participated in hearings. This is not a new issue. It is an issue that people were not listening to or paying attention to the debate.

We conducted field hearings. I will never forget the field hearings in the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] where local officials came and said, "We can't take it anymore. It is cheaper for us to deliver bottled water than to comply with the regulations and mandates coming out of Washington. We have to make some common sense out of this mess."

We held field hearings in my district and we heard of local tax caps and State requirements for balanced budgets. Unfortunately here we passed on these matters to local governments. They said they could take it anymore, but no one was listening.

Last year, ladies and gentleman, we pleaded and we begged and we asked for the opportunity to bring this legislation forward, and our words were not heard. We did not have the opportunity to bring this issue forward, and here we are today at the last hour and the last minute.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is not the final answer to unfunded mandates. It does not cure the problem, but it does set a standard. It does set some sense of responsibility and accountability for the process.

At this particular historic juncture, I wish to thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN]. I cannot support his substitute. Mr. MORAN has made some great contributions to this effort, not just today but over the history of this particular legislation.

I want to also thank our staff who have worked hard on both sides of the aisle and contributed to this effort and also this historic occasion.

With that, ladies and gentleman, again at this historic juncture, I oppose the Moran substitute. I have the biggest smile on my face of anyone in this Congress to see this long neglected legislation move forward in the next hour, and I compliment everyone who has been involved in its success.

Mr. TORKILDSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today as a cosponsor and strong supporter of H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandate Reform Act and applaud the efforts of all involved. This bill is similar to legislation I and other Members sponsored at the outset of the 103d Congress.

If an idea is good enough to mandate, then it should be good enough to pay for. For too long Congress has passed mandates, but not the bucks to State and local governments. Usually these unfunded mandates would come at the expense of local education and public safety programs.

In my home State of Massachusetts, many residents will soon face water and sewer rates in excess of $2,000 annually to pay for federally imposed unfunded mandates. We are not arguing with the need, on occasion, to mandate certain requirements. All we are asking is that they be paid for.

While everyone wants clean water, clean air, and other benefits, we must pursue these goals sensibly and in a way we can pay for.

While H.R. 5 will not rescind past mandates, but it will address future mandates. Just as the balanced budget amendment will force Congress to stop saddling future generations with debt, this act will force Congress to stop saddling State and local governments with debt tax increases and local service cuts.

I strongly urge all my colleagues to support H.R. 5 and stop the destruction caused by unfunded mandates.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to state my reluctant opposition to H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandates Relief Act. I am reluctant to oppose H.R. 5 because I think that its basic purpose is sound and important. Almost everyone in this body agrees that something must be done about the increasing burdens that the Federal Government places upon the States and local governments.

Let there be no mistake—I support unfunded mandates reform legislation. I proudly voted for a well-crafted, bipartisan bill in the last Congress, and I voted for the substitute to H.R. 5 offered by Representative MORAN today. Those efforts were designed to allow Congress to make informed decisions about the burdens the Federal Government places on the States. They required the House to be fully informed about those costs before passing legislation.

It is unfortunate therefore that H.R. 5 has so many serious problems, starting with the abuse of the legislative process which brought this bill to the floor. It is ironic that this was the first bill to be reported out of the newly renamed Government Reform and Oversight Committee, for it did not receive 1 minute of hearings in that committee—a bad omen for the new era of openness called for by the Contract With America. The partisan power play which brought this bill to the floor is all the more disturbing given the fundamental ways in which it will affect the intrinsic nature of American government. A bill of this importance deserved better.

As it is written, H.R. 5 is an invitation to paralysis designed to prevent us from requiring the States to do anything unless we fully pay for it. Proponents of this bill argue that it allows us to impose mandates if, by a majority vote, we choose to do so. However, the same proponents would, I think, agree that this bill establishes the principle that the Federal Government should not impose mandates on the States unless it is prepared to pay every dime of the costs of the new requirements. That is not a proposition that I can agree with.

Many amendments were offered to this bill which would have added to the list of exemptions from this legislation. I offered one which would have exempted legislation to protect the health of children. I voted for others which would have exempted banking regulations, environmental legislation and bills to protect work-safety standards. Other amendments designed to protect private enterprise and to require an analysis of the benefits of specific bills as well as their costs, were offered and rejected.

Mr. Chairman, my concern is that the bill before us, however, well-intentioned, will roll back the progress that the Federal Government has made in protecting the most fundamental rights of the American people. These include the right to breathe clean air, the right to drink pure water, the right to eat healthy food, and the right to work in a safe workplace.

Those are all national problems which require national solutions and national standards. Interstate problems are one example of this need. Air and water pollution know no boundaries. The smoke from incinerations blows easily from Ohio to New York. Sewage flows just as easily down the Mississippi from Missouri to Louisiana.

The Federal Government must also set standards of decency and compassion. It must stand against efforts by the States to cut off food stamps to needy children or reduce standards in nursing homes. Welfare reform is something everyone agrees needs to be done, but as a Federal legislator I would fight attempts by the States to abolish it. By imposing the point of order contained in this bill, H.R. 5 is a mandate for gridlock on these and other national priorities. Gridlock that the American people have rejected time and time again.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the goals of this bill. But it is abundantly clear that H.R. 5 was hastily written—and badly written at that—and that it was forced out of committee and onto the floor with an authoritarian heavy hand more interested in partisan politics than good policy.

A reform bill should push forward, not set us back. By building on the bipartisan efforts of the last Congress, I believe that a good bill could have been presented to the Congress, one that helped, rather than potentially harmed, the people we were sent here to represent. It is unfortunate we did not have the opportunity to vote for that bill.

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, today, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995. As a cosponsor of this legislation this Congress and last Congress, I commend Chairman CLINGER of the Government Reform and Oversight Committee for his leadership in bringing this bill to the floor in an expeditious manner. I also want to commend the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], and my good friend from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], for their leadership and hard work on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, I support this legislation because it will slow the torrent of unfunded mandates Congress has passed onto State and local governments, causing local property taxes to rise. While any relief from unfunded mandates are welcome, I want to remind my colleagues that the protection from unfunded mandates contained in this bill are not iron-clad. This bill does include a point of order against any new mandates over $50 million. However, since this relief is statutory, a future Congress can circumvent this legislation by simple majority. Therefore, today Congress is not closing the door to keep new unfunded mandates. Instead, today Congress is merely slowing, not stopping, the passage of new mandates.

Mr. Chairman, the only sure way to stop unfunded mandates is through a constitutional amendment. For this reason, I have reintroduced legislation (H.J. Res. 27) that would give State and local governments a constitutional guarantee against new, unfunded, Federal mandates. Without constitutional protection from unfunded mandates, I fear Congress will transfer programs to State and local governments in order to meet its obligation under the balanced budget amendment, instead of raising taxes or taking the preferable route of cutting spending.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5 is a necessary first step to protect local taxpayers. While I encourage my colleagues to vote for this important legislation, I urge my colleagues to finish the job by supporting House Joint Resolution 27, a joint resolution that would stop unfunded Federal mandates constitutionally.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995. While I am keenly aware of the fact that many of our State and local governments face formidable financial constraints—not unlike those of our Federal Government—I am also extremely conscious of my duty as a Member of Congress to act in the best interest of the people I represent and the American public. We cannot and should not, in an attempt to decrease financial burdens placed on State and local governments, shirk our responsibility to act in the best interest of the American people. This flawed and hurried legislation will not only fail to resolve the financial difficulties of State and local governments, but will endanger the American public.

The bill before us today, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995, will not only attempt to undo many of the important accomplishments of the U.S. Congress, but also seeks to undermine many of our most important efforts to improve the quality of life for all Americans.

The stated purpose of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act is to limit Congress' ability to impose Federal mandates on State and local government. While I agree that Congress should be aware of the nature and extent of costs that may be imposed on State and local government, this proposed measure goes well beyond this legitimate objective of balancing the responsibilities placed on these governments. In fact, this bill is specifically designed to inhibit the will of the people by creating artificial obstacles to congressional support for programs the current majority has long sought to weaken if not totally eliminate, including laws that protect the environment, enhance voter participation, strengthen crime control, and heighten worker and citizen safety.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is unprecedented in its scope. Few areas of Federal legislation will be unaffected by this measure, yet, with very little opportunity for open hearing, and with limited debate, this act has been placed before us. A measure of this kind requires detailed analysis of the impact it may have on the American people, but no such review has or will take place. In the current rush to force this bill to the floor of this House, the will of the American people will certainly be compromised.

H.R. 5 will have a devastating impact on the environment. As a Representative of the urban district of Cleveland, OH, I have first-hand witnessed the severity of the environmental problems this Nation and its inner cities now face. The quality of most urban air and water in this country is in dire need of immediate attention.

Mr. Chairman, without so-called unfunded mandates such as the Clean Water Act, the Clean Air Act, and the Endangered Species Act—all acts that represent significant steps towards remedying the effects of environmental devastation and injustice—the American people and all future generations will be harmed forever.

This bill will also significantly compromise citizen and worker safety. Last year, over 100,000 American workers died in the workplace. Another 70,000 were permanently disabled, and more than 100,000 contracted fatal occupational illnesses. H.R. 5 will greatly inhibit our ability to protect the American population from unsafe products, dangerous working conditions, and avoidable disasters. I cannot in good conscience endanger American workers by supporting this bill.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this legislation will not only have a dramatic and disastrous impact on future legislation, it will also affect existing legislation. Bills that reauthorize existing laws, by enhancing standards, or by enhancing the scope of the original legislation, which results in an increase in costs for State and local government, will all be inhibited by unfunded mandates. Important measures placed in jeopardy by this proposed legislation include the Brady bill that mandates a waiting period prior to the purchase of a firearm; the Family Medical Leave Act that permits parents to take care of their sick children; and the National Voter Registration Act that would greatly enhance voter participation.

Perhaps the most negative impact of this proposed legislation will be on future legislation that may be considered by Congress. Any proposed legislation that is designed to protect workers and citizens from unnecessary injury, protect the environment, or end poverty, will be subject to exclusion under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, adding to the cynical approach employed by this legislation, I am sad to report that this law has been engineered to take effect on October 1 of this year, to ensure that the Republican Contract With America and the attempted rescissions of fiscal year 1995 appropriations, would not be subject to its requirements. This transparent effort to exempt Republican legislation is clearly unjust and further hinders the will of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, it is my belief that H.R. 5 and the circumstances under which it is presented in this House attempt to mislead the American people to believe that cookie cutter, simplistic solutions will cure what ails this Nation. Nothing could be further from the truth. As our Nation faces an epidemic of pollution, discrimination, and poverty, the solution to these problems will not be found in quick fixes like the Unfunded Mandate Reform Act. The American people elected us to act in their best interest, not compromise their welfare because Government refuses to have the courage to meet its obligations. I urge my colleagues to vote against this bill.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this has been a long and oftentimes wrenching debate that has occurred on this bill over the last couple of weeks and Members on both sides of the aisle clearly feel very strongly about it one way or another.

Let me preface my remarks by congratulating the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], the chairman, for the manner in which he has managed this bill and the manner in which he has managed the debate, particularly on his side of the aisle, and I know I speak for Members on this side of the aisle when I say he has been thoughtful, deliberative and fair in that process and that has not gone unnoticed.

In the last Congress, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS] and I and perhaps many others in addition to CHRIS SHAYS talked about this notion of unfunded mandates. People had varying ideas and approaches as to how it might be done. The fact that we are here today, I think, underlines the importance of this legislation to a lot of people.

But as has been said over and over and over again, many people want to make sure that we do this the right way, so that we do not have to revisit it and that we do it the right way so that we in fact do not do more harm than good.

Having said that, I stand in support of the Moran substitute. It is a clear and reasoned approach. It has less of a broad-brush application to it. It will slow us down and make us think as it should, and it allows for the uncertainty of the future.

The only thing certain, someone said, about the future is that it is, in fact, uncertain.

Many of us over the course of the last 2 weeks have tried to take advantage of the process in a constructive manner, to change, to modify and to make better the original bill. We have tried to exempt Medicare, we have tried to exempt certain children's programs. We tried to exempt programs for the disabled. We have asked for CBO estimates to make sure that financially the moneys and the fiscal impact were in fact correct.

We have attempted to make sure, if we could at least, that clean water and clean water standards in this country would not be affected, as well as a number of health issues.

Those of you who have watched the debate and those of you who have participated in the debate know that very little has changed in that regard and we have a bill somewhat different than the bill that was first before this body, but we have a bill that we still can improve on if in fact we adopt the Moran substitute.

I say that because I have heard from persons who want this in its current pure and clinical fashion, that the bill does allow for future Congresses to allow for mandates. Well, it does, if in fact the mandate is 100 percent fully funded.

We have already begun the process in this Congress of reducing the amount of money available for mandates, unfunded or otherwise. We are on the verge of a major debate on the merits of the balanced budget amendment, and there are proposals in at least six different committees of this body to reduce taxes.

When we couple those three things together, clearly, ladies and gentlemen, it is going to be every difficult at any point in the future to get a 100 percent fully funded mandate. It takes away when the ability of this Congress, in this Member's opinion, to be as effective as we must.

So the Moran substitute does not prevent unfunded mandates from being considered. To the contrary of what some have suggested, it allows for that and it allows for us to move forward without the 100 percent trigger that is involved. It simply says that future Congresses, if they so choose, may in fact consider at some later date passing an unfunded mandate, whereby you have a partnership with the Federal Government, the State government and local governments to take care of an issue and/or a problem that besets the citizens of this country.

In my opinion, that allows for more flexibility, it certainly creates a greater air of sensibility and it allows for the notion of partnerships if at some point in time by a majority vote in this body they so choose to do so.

So I would ask Members on both sides of the aisle as we near the vote and the conclusion on this bill to consider again the Moran substitute which I think is the right and proper approach for us to take.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me begin by thanking the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] for the outstanding job he has done in bringing us to this point, because if it had not been for him last year in terms of his talking about the importance of unfunded mandates, I do not really feel we would be here now. So, I would like to say to him he really kept the issue alive.

I would also like to say to the other side that this bill really is more the bill that we dealt with last year, the bill that the gentleman from Florida talked about, the hearings that we had all over this country, and basically what people were saying to us is that something has to be done, and I think this bill really addresses their concerns.

I know that others want to go even further, but I think that to go further is a mistake. I think we have been down that road before. I remember the catastrophic health care bill that we kept wanting to go further, and go further, and go further, and we went, and then all of a sudden we had to come back to undo what was done.

So, I can see that we are making the same mistake again.

So the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] offers us an opportunity to do something different. First of all to address the problem in a very logical and sensible kind of way, not the draconian bill that is being proposed on the other side of the aisle, H.R. 5. I think we need to recognize that, and deal with it.

What we are saying, is people out there are saying we want to know how much it is going to cost and we need to know how much it is going to cost. To me that is a very practical way to deal with the problem and that to me is a solution to the problem. We heard it as we had hearings in Pennsylvania, as we had hearings in Florida, as we had hearings here in Washington, DC; people were saying to us that was their concern.

But what we are doing is taking it a step further and I think we are going to find that there are procedural barriers that are going to make it impossible for us to do the kind of thing we need to do.

I have heard the term bipartisan support. I think bipartisan support is good and I think we should have it whenever possible, and I think that this bill that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] is putting forth is truly the bipartisan bill. That is the Moran-Goodling bill of last time around. I think that is the bipartisan approach.

So, I would encourage my friends on both sides of the aisle to take a look at this legislation, because this really deals with the problem, it makes it possible for us to be able to legislate in a very timely fashion and do the kinds of things that need to be done. It eliminates the dumping that goes on from one State to another.

When I look in terms of what is happening in my own area in terms of incineration, how one area can create problems for another area and we cannot do anything about it because of the fact that we would have to come back and be able to examine it before we move forward, this legislation eliminates that kind of bottleneck, it makes it possible if one area is dumping on another area that we address that and deal with it right away.

So I think this makes a lot of sense if we really want to deal with the problem as we have heard it out there, as it comes from people throughout the area.

On this particular legislation, H.R. 5, let me set the record straight because I have heard about all kinds of hearings and all of that. Even if there were hearings they were held though in secrecy, because I do not know anything about them, and I have talked to Members who have been here even longer than I have been here and they do not know anything about it, I do not know anything about it, so it seems to me the hearings they are talking about did not take place; and being they did not take place, we did not talk to governors of various States to find out their views and feelings, we did not talk to city council members to find out their views and feelings, we did not talk to county executives and we did not talk to legislators around the country to see in terms of their views and feelings about this legislation.

All of a sudden here we are rushing to push it through because of the fact we must do it before dark.

I would just like to say it is too important to move forward in that fashion. I would hope this would be an opportunity to correct the mistake that has been made. Support the Moran bill, because at least this is something on which we have had communication with people out there, we have talked to them about it. So I think this is an opportunity to stop us from making a major mistake by going further with H.R. 5, but coming back and supporting the Moran substitute which I think deals with the issue that is at hand.

So I would like to yield back the balance of my time and encourage all of my friends and supporters to make certain that they support the Moran substitute. That is really the legislation that should be moved forward.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I really apologize to the Members for prolonging this debate which I think has been getting better the longer it goes along, and I want to add my compliments to those already expressed by the managers on both sides.

I have a feeling, I have not participated in this debate because I do not have any particular expertise in this area, but I have a feeling that on both sides we may be committing some sins that we perhaps do not realize.

Unfunded mandates is a problem. A problem has arisen from the fact that the Federal Government has become increasingly unable to fund programs, no matter how good they were, and has gradually shifted that burden to the State and local governments, and they are increasingly unable to bear that burden also.

Most of the programs in an era of less limited funding probably would be accepted as legitimate expenditures by some level of government, and now no level of government has the capability to fund them.

Now what is the reason for this? Obviously one of them is we have been living on our credit cards far too long and we have run up this tremendous interest which will deprive us of what may be another $100 billion, $200 billion, or $300 billion of income at the Federal level that could have been used to fund these programs at the same time the States are increasingly strapped and overburdened by taxes and have put limits on what they can spend. California led the way with proposition 13 which capped property taxes, for example, reducing us from being the perhaps high-level spender of any of the States for education down amongst the lower, and we are regretting that at the present time.

Let us not deceive ourselves by thinking that this program is going to solve the problem of inadequate funding for the kinds of things that Government ought to do. We will need some more profound solution to that problem. A balanced budget, reduced interest costs is of course one of the things we need to do.

How soon are we going to do that? Nobody expects any major impact from a balanced budget amendment in less than 8 to 10 years, in all probability.

What we need to focus on are those areas of public service which we have allowed to grow unrestrained.

Health costs, for example, the most rapidly growing part of the budget: We need to do something to bring that under control and off the backs of the Federal taxpayers in general, a more workable national insurance program of some kind, so that individuals can have access to insurance but could basically be responsible for the level of health care that they wanted to pay for themselves, and it would not be a formula sort of thing that keeps growing.

We need to do something about the welfare program, and it does not mean just cutting off welfare. It means creating a system in which we have opportunity and jobs for that vast class of people who are now deprived of the opportunity to participate in the economy. That will help us.

The unfunded-mandates bill will not solve these kinds of problems. They may give us a chance for some political cover while we begin to seriously deal with these problems, and this is what I would urge upon us as we proceed down the road here.

I think the Republicans in this case, through their contract, have touched the chord of a large part of the American people, not necessarily all, but a large part, and they, charged up with this mandate to do something about this, are moving ahead and obviously they do not want us on this side trying to perfect the great program that they have. And I can understand this.

But I would urge upon them, after they have tasted success with their program, and they are going to have successes, and many Democrats are going to support them including me on occasion, I think then we should begin to look seriously at these underlying problems of our society and develop some programs that will begin to address those in some very realistic fashion and help us then to really create the new society, the new culture, the new civilization, however we want to describe it that we should be doing to assert our position as the world's leading nation in terms of bringing opportunity, freedom, and democracy to the whole world.

I thank you for listening to me.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the Committee for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman I just want to cast a few roses here, although let me start with a thorn and get this out of the way. The one thing that has been disappointing about this debate is the information that was handed to the Members on the vote last night that may have influenced some, says that, "The Moran amendment effectively exempts 90 percent of the laws Congress passes from the informational requirements of H.R. 5." That is not accurate.

I think my colleagues on the other side would agree that it does not exempt Congress from 90 percent of the legislation and the informational requirements.

I was disappointed that that is the sheet all the Members received on their way in to vote. It is true that it would delete the no money, no mandate provision, but I would hope that that not be the piece that is handed out for this vote or the subsequent vote, because it is misleading.

Now, having gotten over that, let me thank the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS], the Members on my side who were strongly supportive of the version that is an alternative to the substitute we are about to vote on.

This has been a very constructive debate. I think that we are making history in the next two votes that we will take. I know we are going in the right direction. We have a disagreement in whether or not we are going too far in the underlying Republican version. But I do appreciate the attention that has been given this issue.

I particularly appreciate the constructive manner in which the sponsors of this bill have worked with us on the minority side, and I would hope that it would set a precedent for subsequent bills that come to this floor.

Now, let me just say one further word about the gentleman sitting in the chair throughout this entire debate. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] has conducted this debate in such a fine and fair manner that he really deserves some recognition, I would hope maybe even a little applause. He has been absolutely indefatigable and exceptionally fair, and I thank him, and I know I speak for all of the Members on this side of the aisle in doing so, and I would certainly expect on the other side of the aisle.

I thank all of those who have participated in this debate for a very constructive dialog.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

NOT VOTING—4

Becerra	Kaptur
Hunter	Scarborough

□ 1514

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Ms. Kaptur for, with Mr. Scarborough against.

Mr. DEUTSCH and Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before I begin on my remarks, I want to say right here and now, "During the course of the consideration of this bill, you, Mr. Chairman, have heard many of us on this side of the aisle raise the subject of procedural abuses in committee, as well as time limits on floor debates, which concerned us greatly. However I want to say something positive as well. I want to certainly commend the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] for his fairness and patience in presiding over this debate."

Let me also commend the chairman of our Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], for his hard work on this bill. He has certainly had his hands full recently, and, despite our very early shaky start, I have really enjoyed working with him and look forward to working with him in the future.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me begin by saying that this bill is fatally flawed.

H.R. 5 places Congress in a strait-jacket, and provides cover for those who want to roll back the progress we have made in this country to protect the health and safety of our citizens.

Viewed in isolation it may seem reasonable to many, but that is the wrong way to view it. This bill must be seen as a dot matrix, which when the lines are all connected, reveals a mean-spirited effort to abandon those who are most in need.

Over the past several days, we have taken the time to look at just what this so-called unfunded mandates bill does. As I said earlier in the debate, we needed to get beyond the term "unfunded mandates" and into the real world of what types of laws the Republican majority in this body apparently want to make difficult to pass. Well it became clear when we began the amending process that they firmly embraced the Senate Republican Task Force list of 10 worst Federal laws as a guide.

Many of us on this side of the aisle offered amendments to safeguard environmental laws that protect the public health and safety. We made every possible effort to protect the provisions of the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, and the Safe Drinking Water Act, because these laws are supported by all Americans. They were passed, because the people wanted them. They protect us all from the pollution of our neighbors.

Similarly, we offered amendments to preserve laws protecting our most vulnerable citizens—those with disabilities and our children. Again the proponents of this legislation exhibited their disparate views by exempting from the unfunded mandate definition bills that relate to the implementation of international treaties, but not those which provide a better way of life for the disabled; by "requiring compliance with accounting and auditing procedures relating to grants and other money provided by the Federal Government," but ignoring savings inherent in disease prevention, that result from childhood immunization laws.

It was totally inconceivable to me that amendments we Democrats offered to ensure that we as a nation could proceed with establishing a database to track, first, deadbeat dads and, second, child molesters would be opposed by advocates of this legislation. I thought they would surely agree to such amendments. What harm would it do if we went on record in favor of that program and future programs to protect our children? None whatsoever; but, once again, the bill's supporters soundly defeated these child protection amendments.

What was their rationale for so doing? Well it was simply that if the Federal Government did not provide the funds, the State, local, or territorial governments did not have to keep a list of names of deadbeat dads and/or known child abusers or repeat child molesters.

We Democrats offered amendments that would have exempted from the definition of unfunded mandates laws designed to, first, protect child labor laws, second, protect the worker in the factory and, third, increase the minimum wage. Surely these were not the laws that even the Governors and mayors want to gut; but again the proponents acted in lockstep to defeat these amendments.

I have found it extremely interesting that in their zeal to please their Governors, county commissioners, and mayors, the authors have very carefully circumscribed restrictions on the quality of life our citizens have a right to expect to enjoy in the future. We hold ourselves out to be a compassionate nation; one that cares about its citizens, about its overall quality of life, about the underdog, about the least of us. Yet every single amendment offered to prevent new barriers from being raised against these very Americans was defeated by bloc voting.

Some on the other side of the aisle have suggested that the numerous amendments have been a stalling tactic; that the votes have been dilatory. Let me assure the Members that the issue was accountability. The voters in their districts will now know exactly what their Members have voted to protect, and what they have voted to not protect.

Perhaps the problems with this bill began when its authors chose to draft it in secret, and then refused to hold public hearings. Those hearings might have allowed ordinary Americans better known as the public, to discuss which laws they like and which ones they do not. The authors would have heard the voices of mothers concerned for and about their children, of senior citizens who fear that Medicare and Medicaid will not cover an illness, of workers wanting a safe workplace and a decent, living wage, a father who cared about safe drinking water for his family. Instead, we will never know who was in the room drafting those bills, but we know who was not there, whose voices were not allowed to be there.

As I have read this bill over the past several weeks, I can find almost no consideration given to the benefits from our laws—the benefits that I assume caused Congress to pass them. Every people program is subjected to rigorous cost estimates, but there are no estimates about the protections, the safety, and the improvements to the quality of life and to our economy these laws have brought to all Americans. Perhaps that, too, is because we were never allowed to hear the voices of the people.

Throughout debate, the proponents of this bill, have said, "Don't worry. All it will take is a simple majority vote to pass those kinds of laws in the future by waiving a point of order. I doubt that this will be the case.

The subjects of the amendments we Democrats have offered are the exact laws that the Republican majority would like to kill. We know this to be true because the Senate Republican Regulatory Relief Task Force released a list of its so-called 10 worst Federal laws which include the Clean Air Act, the Superfund toxic waste cleanup law, wetlands law, the clean water law, food safety laws, the Safe Drinking Water Act, and Occupational Safety and Health Act. This bill, H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995, is a first start at killing these laws.

In a matter of days we will begin debating a regulatory moratorium bill that takes aim at regulations under these laws. Then we will see laws to make agencies go through so many hoops and procedures that they can never take an action to protect the public health or safety. If all else fails, new laws will empower corporations to keep the Government tied up in court forever. This bill is the first step.

No, this bill, H.R. 5, is not really about unfunded mandates. It is about destroying laws that protect the average citizen. It is about raising barriers and debilitating the disenfranchised.

As we debate the remaining elements of the Republican contract, let us begin to face what is really going on. Taken as a whole, the contract is a program developed in secret with major corporations to gut the major protections for the average American. Today they will be called unfunded mandates; tomorrow they will be called regulatory burdens. At least the Republican Senate Task Force was honest about their goals. I believe the American people deserve to know the truth.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, very briefly, I would like to express my gratitude and appreciation to a number of people who have been involved in this now 7- or 8-day-long debate, which I think has been a very open, a very constructive debate, really the first debate that we have had on the new federalism.

I think what we are seeing is the beginning of a constructive dialog about what the relations of the various levels of government are going to be.

We do not pretend this is a perfect solution to what may be the new paradigm. But what we do suggest is the debate is necessary. We really have to get to the point where we are beginning to analyze which governments need to do what and which governments can do them best.

But in the process of the debate, I have got to recognize, first of all, as has already been indicated, you have done a superb job in chairing the committee during this sometimes contentious but, I think, always helpful and educational discussion we have had.

Second, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], who is a prime author of this legislation, who has worked tirelessly to bring it to the point we are at now. And the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS], who has been so effective as a very, very junior freshman Member and has hit the floor running and done a superb job. The gentleman from California, [Mr. CONDIT], the other sponsor, who has been a leader in this effort for many, many years before it really was an issue that was on anybody's radar screen. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN], who has made some very constructive additions to this bill, some of which were not accepted. Also, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], who worked on this matter in the past Congress. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING]. There are so many that I really am afraid I am going to overlook someone. They have all been outstanding.

There are three people that I want to specifically recognize. They are staff members who often are not heralded in these halls but who, in this case, I can vouch from personal experience deserve most of the credit for the fact that this bill has gotten to where we are today. This is Kristine Simmons, who is on my staff and the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, and John Bridgeland, who is with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], and Steve Jones, who is with the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT].

They have done an absolutely superb job and worked incredible hours to work on this legislation. So my thanks to all of them for all the work that they have done.

Mr. Chairman, if you listen closely today you can hear State and local governments around the Nation breathing a sigh of relief. Today we are at last ready to vote on final passage of H.R. 5, a vote I think which is going to bring at least the beginning of an historic change in the way the Federal Government does business with its State and local counterparts. This bill will restore State and local governments to their true places as partners in our federal system.

Mr. Chairman, I express, again, my appreciation to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS], the ranking minority member. It has been a pleasure to work with her on this matter. To all who participated in this really initial, most substantive and most important debate, I think I would reference the gentleman from California. This is an important debate. We are involved in very important issues here. This is history in the making. We do have differences, but I think the debate is what counts.

The resolution, I hope, will be passage of this bill.

If you listen closely, you can hear State and local governments around the Nation breathing a sigh of relief today. We at last are ready to vote on final passage of H.R. 5, a vote which will bring historic change in the way the Federal Government does business with its State and local counterparts. The Unfunded Mandate Reform Act will restore State and local governments to their true places as partners in our federal system.

Debate on this bill was rigorous and I want to congratulate many of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, for casting tough votes in the interest of stopping this mandate madness. Attempts to weaken this bill were rejected consistently and soundly, reflecting a majority opinion that imposing unfunded mandates without knowledge or funding is wrong and it must end.

I also would like to thank my colleagues who are not in support of the Unfunded Mandate Reform Act, for their contribution to the fair and open debate we have had during the 7 days of debate on this bill. It has been a spirited exchange, but a healthy one and I thank my colleagues.

As we prepare to vote on final passage, I ask each Member to consider the adverse impact the cost of mandates has had on your constituents. Ask yourself if it is fair to raise their local property taxes and to cut community services so the local government can afford programs we think are important. Ask yourself if your priorities are only important if a State or local government pays to carry them out.

This vote is about information and accountability. It is about changing Washington ways for the better. It is an affirmative statement that we will stop ourselves before we mandate again.

Please vote "yes" on final passage of H.R. 5.

Mr. BROWDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. I rise in support of H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995, of which I have been a strong supporter.

Since coming to Congress, I have had the opportunity to make decisions on a variety of good ideas that Congress felt would help improve the lives of its citizens and help make Government work better. Of those ideas, the Motor Voter Act was a Federal mandate costing the State of Alabama $500,000 a year without the funding to comply with it.

The Safe Drinking Water Act, another bill with good intentions, requires local officials to test the water supply for 25 substances without regard to the region or the types of substances used there.

As a result, Alabama water systems had to test their water supply for pesticides used to protect pineapple crops.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the day when, before the Federal Government issues an expensive regulation, we will stop, look, and listen to how this will affect local officials.

I rise in support of H.R. 5, another good idea from Congress, but this one long, long overdue.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is a great day for State and local governments. It is a great day for taxpayers and a great day for a new accountability in Congress.

With this passage, we are going to take a giant step in returning local decisionmaking to local and State governments, to returning property taxes to local governments instead of being hijacked by Congress for programs that we in this body feel are more important than what the localities decide.

If we believe in a program in this Congress, we should believe in it enough to fund it, not pound our chest and pass the buck on to State and local governments and their taxpayers. When a government that sets the priorities does not find the money within its budget to fund those priorities, we get a completely different set of priorities than if a government that sets the priorities has to find the funds within their own organization and their own budgets.

What has happened over the past few years is a proliferation of unfunded mandates going down to State and local governments, layer after layer of unfunded mandates and a significant shifting of costs from a progressive income tax to regressive property taxes and sales taxes.

Another consequence is that although there are many fine programs mandated and imposed on local governments, many other fine programs that local governments intend end up having to close shelters, lay off police officers, cut day-care centers. And they have to achieve these to pay for the mandates that we fail to fund.

The numerous attempts to exclude and exempt certain areas from this bill, Medicare, Medicaid, health laws, programs for children, environmental laws, labor laws and the like, would have, taken together, gutted this bill, what we are trying to do here.

Besides, this bill still gives us the option of sending those mandates to the States but we will have the costs in front of us before we make those decisions and find out what kind of bill we are sending down to the State and local governments.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that their inclusion, if we had included those exemptions in this bill, it would have resulted in more imposition of costs on local governments and the end result, as one who has been in local government for 15 years, would be forcing our States and our cities and our counties to continue to close community centers, cut back on public safety, cut education, abandon health care centers, because we in Congress, by unfunded mandates, have redirected their local budgets in a way we felt was better, not often realizing that we forced the local governments to cut good programs so they could fund our programs.

I would also add, Mr. Chairman, there was no rush in passing this bill, even the other body, the most deliberative body in this country, managed to pass this 86 to 10 in a shorter period of time than it took us.

I just want to end by saying this has strong bipartisan support. I wanted to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] for shepherding this bill through committee and on the floor, my cosponsors, the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], who has been working on this before I ever came to this body, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], who was instrumental in getting this included in the contract, the staffs and other Members, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], and others who have been working on this for many years, and you, Mr. Chairman, for presiding over these proceedings.

This is a great day for State and local governments. I think we have taken a giant first step today, and I urge final passage.

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to refute the idea that this is simply a Republican contract issue. I want to pay tribute to the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], who introduced an unfunded mandate bill in the last Congress and as a Democrat had the leadership to form the Unfunded Mandate Caucus in which many Democrats were members.

Also I want to read a short two sentences from a mayor in my district, a Democrat, who sent me this letter, dated October 27, 1993. In that letter the mayor of San Marcos, Mayor Kathy Morris toward the bottom of the first page said, "We want to make it clear that we usually have no quarrel with the intentions of laws enacted by Congress, such as assuring a healthy environment and enabling people with disabilities to participate fully in our society."

What concerns us is that the costs and tasks of these good intentions are all too often left for us to pay for and carry out. Adding to our frustration is the fact that these programs enacted by distant lawmakers in Washington can lay claim to our tax funds ahead of the needs and priorities of the people who elected us to address those needs." End of quote from the letter from Kathy Morris.

This simply states why this bill is needed and desired by the American people, and I urge its support.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, today is a historic day. It is a historic day. It is a historic piece of legislation, historic because it does redefine the relationship between the Federal Government and the State and local governments; historic because for the first time it ensures that Congress will have a separate and informed debate on the question of costs of mandates; and historic because it shows Congress' willingness to put the brakes on the mandate madness.

We had over 30 hours debate, Mr. Chairman, on one preliminary section of H.R. 5, and I have to admit that I joined many of my colleagues in wondering whether we would ever get through this legislation. I was concerned that what was truly a bipartisan issue outside this beltway had become a partisan issue, sadly partisan within this Chamber, but I have to say over the last 24 hours Congress has worked in a very constructive, bipartisan way on this legislation.

As an example, yesterday I believe we accepted nine amendments from the other side. I think they all improved and perfected this legislation. Mr. Chairman, I would thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS] and other Members on the minority side for working constructively with us throughout this whole process.

Mr. Chairman, I think what we have done now is that we have set the tone, perhaps, for dealing with other legislation that this Congress will consider over the next year. Although some have cast it as such, H.R. 5 was never about the merits or demerits of individual mandates. It is about having the cost information, it is about having an informed debate on the floor of the House, and yet, yes, it is about accountability, having a vote up-or-down on whether to impose a mandate without providing the money.

Mr. Chairman, let me just sum up by acknowledging a few of the many people that got us to where we are today. The first person I am going to mention I think will speak next. I consider him the spiritual leader on the unfunded mandate front, the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT].

He was the lone voice crying out in the wilderness over the last several years. He was talking about unfunded mandate reform when most people did not understand it or appreciate it. It has now come to the fore, and he is to be congratulated.

Senator DIRK KEMPTHORNE on the Senate side is the person who has aggressively pushed this bill on the Senate side, and he is responsible really for the 86 to 10 vote, a very strong vote last week on essentially the same bill. He showed an extraordinary amount of bicameralism in working with the chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], myself, and others to put together a tough bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like, of course, to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], the chairman. He has shown an impressive amount of grace under pressure. I would concur with the comments of the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS] and others as to the way he has conducted this debate.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the freshman sponsor of this legislation, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]. He has recently lived under the crippling effect of unfunded mandates, and I think he has shared his stories with us convincingly.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], I have to acknowledge Chairman TOWNS from last year's Congress. His subcommittee was the subcommittee that had hearings on this issue. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], in the face of a lot of opposition from people who did not want mandate relief last year, had not only hearings but a markup on important legislation very similar to this legislation. We would not be here, I do not think, today if ED TOWNS had not done that.

Mr. Chairman, a subcommittee last year of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], also included two leaders on our side of this issue, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF], who is here in the Chamber, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA] who were very important to getting us to this point.

The Committee on Rules was very helpful in this process. We took a good bill to the Committee on Rules. It became a better bill, thanks to the work of the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], the ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY], and others who perfected and refined this legislation. They are to be thanked.

Governor Voinovich of Ohio has led this issue for the National Governors and for other elected officials over the years. He is unrelenting, he is focused, and again, I think it is crucial to thank him, because we probably would not be here without that pressure.

Finally, let me thank our State and local partners, every township trustee, every mayor, every Governor, every local, State elected official. They are the ones who have really advocated this. They are the reason we are here. Their Big Seven representatives here in Washington have been responsible for helping us craft this legislation over time.

All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that we have acted today on their behalf, on behalf of the local and State elected officials, and on behalf of all our citizens, to craft a new partnership to enable us to better this country in a true partnership.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTMAN. I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, briefly, on behalf of the Committee on Rules, I would say that sharing jurisdiction on this legislation, we would like to extend our congratulations first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] and then to the chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] and all who have played a role.

There is one particular item which really has not been discussed in a major way on this debate. That is the fact that as unfunded mandates are imposed on the State and local governments, many of the priorities which those local governments have established cannot be met because of the burden that they have been shouldering to pay for these mandates.

The city of Los Angeles has had an extraordinarily onerous responsibility which has jeopardized their desire to provide resources for police and fire and other public safety areas. It seems to me that cannot be forgotten.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN] has expired.

(At the request of Mr. DREIER and by unanimous consent, Mr. PORTMAN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like for all colleagues to return with me now as we return to the not so thrilling days of yesteryear, when out of the past came the thundering hoofbeats of one horse and one gentleman astride that horse; that is, the unfunded mandates horse. He was the Lone Ranger, and that is the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT].

He formed a group that was a lonely posse. There were several of us that were riding shotgun with him. We told him to be careful, just like Miss Kitty always tells me when I leave Dodge City, "Pat, be careful," but he was not careful. He forged ahead and he was aggressive. He told the Big Seven it was not really good enough. He did not get a lot of encouragement.

Mr. Chairman, I quite frankly did not think we could get this job done, but the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT] really persevered, so I want to pay him a great deal of tribute. I am allegedly the co-chairman of the Unfunded Mandates Caucus, but he was the foreman, and he did all the work, so I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT].

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I know what we are about to do may be the political thing to do. It may be the popular thing to do. Many of us as Members of this body may be putting our fingers to the air to see which way the wind is blowing, and blowing in that direction.

However, let me say for this Member, Mr. Chairman, for this Member from Georgia, mandates are not necessarily bad, funded or unfunded. Mandates are as old as the Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, even the scripture. Thank God.

When God gave Moses the Ten Commandments, he did not say, "Moses, take it, if it costs something or whether it is free." He said, "These are the Ten Commandments. Don't take it whether you feel like it, maybe. These are the Ten Commandments."

Let me remind some of my brothers from this side of the aisle and the other side, in another period in our history it took the Federal Government, the national government, to tell our country what to do, to do what was right.

People in Alabama, in Mississippi, in Georgia, 11 Southern States of the old Confederacy, were denied the right to vote 30 years ago, and it took the National Government to make it possible for all these people to register to vote, to become participants in the democratic process. That was a mandate, so what is wrong with mandates?

Mr. Chairman, I urge Members to vote against this bill. It may not be the popular thing to do, but it is the right thing to do.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to serve on the committee this year with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], the chairman, and our ranking member, the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS].

Mr. Chairman, let me tell the Members why it took so long to be on the floor. I know it was not our Chairman's responsibility, because he was given his marching orders to send this bill out. The reason we had to spend 2 weeks on this bill was because we did not get to have a public hearing in committee.

Members have heard that for this whole 2 weeks, any time any of the Members from the minority side were up here. Maybe we are learning that if we are going to take this kind of time on the floor, maybe it would be better if our committees actually spent time in hearing from interested citizens and people who are impacted by it.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for the bill because I do not think the bill is that bad in its form. I just think because we took 2 weeks, though, the American people and each Member of this House needed to know what we were doing. We did.

We know that this bill will require us to have some type of cost estimates, and we will have to have a separate vote on a point of order if it is raised on over $100 million. That is not so terrible.

What we need to recognize, though, is what may come afterwards, because again, we are a Nation not of 50 individual States, and territories, in addition, we are one United States. We need to recognize that, that there are rules that all of us, whether we live in Texas, whether we live in New York or Hawaii, that we have to live under.

Mr. Chairman, we were deliberative on this. That is why we had so many amendments on this. We wanted to make sure people understood that the Clean Water Act, with all its problems, and the Clean Air Act, and I want to amend it, too, and do some things with it, with all its problems, it was still a compromise bill that was passed in 1990 and signed by President Bush.

Now it has caused problems we need to deal with, but it was still passed with bipartisan support because it was addressing a problem of clean air or clean water. Mr. Chairman, it has raised costs for our constituents, but like I said in the earlier debate, when I go to New York and visit the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], I would like to make sure that the water I turn on, I can drink, coming from Houston. I would like to make sure our Houston water is good enough for him to drink.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, the reason we took so long on this, and because we did, is because of the partisanship, not of the issue but because of the procedure.

I hope we have learned our lesson, that we need to spend the time in the committee and take that kind of time so we do not have to take 2 weeks or 435 Members. That is why we have committees.

Again I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], because he is a fair chairman, our ranking member is fair, but I think all our committees in the House can learn from the problem we experienced in this bill.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. Every individual that needs to be thanked has been thanked.

All the people who have participated in this from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNS], to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS], to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN], everybody has been thanked and properly so. They have all participated in this issue and they have been the reason we are here today. I personally want to thank them very much. I want to thank my colleagues on the Republican side for allowing me to participate in the development of this legislation. I appreciate that very much.

I do want to say, and I want to underline, that this is a bipartisan issue. No place in the country is this a partisan issue. You need to just be reminded for just a brief moment, the last couple of days of debate when the issues came up on the amendments, there were 60 to 70 Democrats who voted to keep this bill strong, to keep H.R. 5 in its current form. It is a bipartisan solution that we have come up with here today, and I think that we are to congratulate ourselves for working together in a bipartisan way.

I also want to acknowledge the unfunded mandate caucus. Those people hung together for the last couple of years, and they were a bunch of renegades on this issue. They hung together, they pushed and they fought to make sure that we got to where we are today and I want to thank them for that.

Mr. Chairman, this is simply about accountability. This is about us being accountable. This is about whether or not we will take responsibility for the legislation that we pass. That is all we are asking for today. We are not asking for anything extraordinary or radical. Just if you are willing to pass a piece of legislation, you take the accountability for it. That is fair. Most of the people throughout this country think that is fair. This is good for the country. This is good for local government. This is good for State government. I encourage all the Members here today to think about this carefully. Let us continue that trend of finding a bipartisan solution and vote "aye" for H.R. 5 today.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. UPTON) having assumed the chair, Mr. EMERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5) to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments, to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and to provide information on the cost of Federal mandates on the private sector, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 38, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMEND OFFERED BY MRS. COLLINS OF ILLINOIS

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentlewoman opposed to the bill?

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Yes, in its present form, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 360, noes 74, not voting 1, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

□ 1618

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the voting). The Chair wants to announce that the reason we have gone beyond 17 minutes, as several Members have inquired about, is that the computer has broken down, and the staff is finishing making sure the vote is accurate. So on behalf of the computer, the Chair apologizes.

□ 1621

Mrs. CLAYTON changed her vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. RICHARDSON, Ms. RIVERS, and Mr. BALLENGER changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1) to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments; to strengthen the partnership between the Federal Government and State, local and tribal governments; to end the imposition, in the absence of full consideration by Congress, of Federal mandates on State, local, and tribal governments without adequate funding, in a manner that may displace other essential governmental priorities; and to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Unfunded Mandate Reform Act of 1995".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to strengthen the partnership between the Federal Government and State, local, and tribal governments;

(2) to end the imposition, in the absence of full consideration by Congress, of Federal mandates on State, local, and tribal governments without adequate Federal funding, in a manner that may displace other essential State, local, and tribal governmental priorities;

(3) to assist Congress in its consideration of proposed legislation establishing or revising Federal programs containing Federal mandates affecting State, local, and tribal governments, and the private sector by—

(A) providing for the development of information about the nature and size of mandates in proposed legislation; and

(B) establishing a mechanism to bring such information to the attention of the Senate and the House of Representatives before the Senate and the House of Representatives vote on proposed legislation;

(4) to promote informed and deliberate decisions by Congress on the appropriateness of Federal mandates in any particular instance;

(5) to require that Congress consider whether to provide funding to assist State, local, and tribal governments in complying with Federal mandates, to require analyses of the impact of private sector mandates, and through the dissemination of that information provide informed and deliberate decisions by Congress and Federal agencies and retain competitive balance between the public and private sectors;

(6) to establish a point-of-order vote on the consideration in the Senate and House of Representatives of legislation containing significant Federal mandates; and

(7) to assist Federal agencies in their consideration of proposed regulations affecting State, local, and tribal governments, by—

(A) requiring that Federal agencies develop a process to enable the elected and other officials of State, local, and tribal governments to provide input when Federal agencies are developing regulations; and

(B) requiring that Federal agencies prepare and consider better estimates of the budgetary impact of regulations containing Federal mandates upon State, local, and tribal governments before adopting such regulations, and ensuring that small governments are given special consideration in that process.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the terms defined under section 408(h) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (as added by section 101 of this Act) shall have the meanings as so defined; and

(2) the term "Director" means the Director of the Congressional Budget Office.

SEC. 4. EXCLUSIONS.

This Act shall not apply to any provision in a bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report before Congress and any provision in a proposed or final Federal regulation that—

(1) enforces constitutional rights of individuals;

(2) establishes or enforces any statutory rights that prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, handicap, or disability;

(3) requires compliance with accounting and auditing procedures with respect to grants or other money or property provided by the United States Government;

(4) provides for emergency assistance or relief at the request of any State, local, or tribal government or any official of a State, local, or tribal government;

(5) is necessary for the national security or the ratification or implementation of international treaty obligations; or

(6) the President designates as emergency legislation and that the Congress so designates in statute.

SEC. 5. AGENCY ASSISTANCE.

Each agency shall provide to the Director such information and assistance as the Director may reasonably request to assist the Director in carrying out this Act.

TITLE I—LEGISLATIVE ACCOUNTABILITY AND REFORM

SEC. 101. LEGISLATIVE MANDATE ACCOUNTABILITY AND REFORM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title IV of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 408. LEGISLATIVE MANDATE ACCOUNTABILITY AND REFORM.

"(a) DUTIES OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—When a committee of authorization of the Senate or the House of Representatives reports a bill or joint resolution of public character that includes any Federal mandate, the report of the committee accompanying the bill or joint resolution shall contain the information required by paragraphs (3) and (4).

"(2) SUBMISSION OF BILLS TO THE DIRECTOR.—When a committee of authorization of the Senate or the House of Representatives orders reported a bill or joint resolution of a public character, the committee shall promptly provide the bill or joint resolution to the Director of the Congressional Budget Office and shall identify to the Director any Federal mandates contained in the bill or resolution.

"(3) REPORTS ON FEDERAL MANDATES.—Each report described under paragraph (1) shall contain—

"(A) an identification and description of any Federal mandates in the bill or joint resolution, including the direct costs to State, local, and tribal governments, and to the private sector, required to comply with the Federal mandates;

"(B) a qualitative, and if practicable, a quantitative assessment of costs and benefits anticipated from the Federal mandates (including the effects on health and safety and the protection of the natural environment); and

"(C) a statement of the degree to which a Federal mandate affects both the public and private sectors and the extent to which Federal payment of public sector costs or the modification or termination of the Federal mandate as provided under subsection (c)(1)(B) would affect the competitive balance between State, local, or tribal governments and privately owned businesses including a description of the actions, if any, taken by the committee to avoid any adverse impact on the private sector or the competitive balance between the public sector and the private sector.

"(4) INTERGOVERNMENTAL MANDATES.—If any of the Federal mandates in the bill or joint resolution are Federal intergovernmental mandates, the report required under paragraph (1) shall also contain—

"(A)(i) a statement of the amount, if any, of increase or decrease in authorization of appropriations under existing Federal financial assistance programs, or of authorization of appropriations for new Federal financial assistance, provided by the bill or joint resolution and usable for activities of State, local, or tribal governments subject to the Federal intergovernmental mandates;

"(ii) a statement of whether the committee intends that the Federal intergovernmental mandates be partly or entirely unfunded, and if so, the reasons for that intention; and

"(iii) if funded in whole or in part, a statement of whether and how the committee has created a mechanism to allocate the funding in a manner that is reasonably consistent with the expected direct costs among and between the respective levels of State, local, and tribal government; and

"(B) any existing sources of Federal assistance in addition to those identified in subparagraph (A) that may assist State, local, and tribal governments in meeting the direct costs of the Federal intergovernmental mandates.

"(5) PREEMPTION CLARIFICATION AND INFORMATION.—When a committee of authorization of the Senate or the House of Representatives reports a bill or joint resolution of public character, the committee report accompanying the bill or joint resolution shall contain, if relevant to the bill or joint resolution, an explicit statement on the extent to which the bill or joint resolution preempts any State, local, or tribal law, and, if so, an explanation of the reasons for such preemption.

“(A) Upon receiving a statement (including any supplemental statement) from the Director under subsection (b), a committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives shall publish the statement in the committee report accompanying the bill or joint resolution to which the statement relates if the statement is available at the time the report is printed.

“(B) If the statement is not published in the report, or if the bill or joint resolution to which the statement relates is expected to be considered by the Senate or the House of Representatives before the report is published, the committee shall cause the statement, or a summary thereof, to be published in the Congressional Record in advance of floor consideration of the bill or joint resolution.

“(b) DUTIES OF THE DIRECTOR; STATEMENTS ON BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS OTHER THAN APPROPRIATIONS BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.—

“(1) FEDERAL INTERGOVERNMENTAL MANDATES IN REPORTED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.—For each bill or joint resolution of a public character reported by any committee of authorization of the Senate or the House of Representatives, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall prepare and submit to the committee a statement as follows:

“(A) If the Director estimates that the direct cost of all Federal intergovernmental mandates in the bill or joint resolution will equal or exceed $50,000,000 (adjusted annually for inflation) in the fiscal year in which any Federal intergovernmental mandate in the bill or joint resolution (or in any necessary implementing regulation) would first be effective or in any of the 4 fiscal years following such fiscal year, the Director shall so state, specify the estimate, and briefly explain the basis of the estimate.

“(B) The estimate required under subparagraph (A) shall include estimates (and brief explanations of the basis of the estimates) of—

“(i) the total amount of direct cost of complying with the Federal intergovernmental mandates in the bill or joint resolution, but no more than 10 years beyond the effective date of the mandate; and

“(ii) the amount, if any, of increase in authorization of appropriations under existing Federal financial assistance programs, or of authorization of appropriations for new Federal financial assistance, provided by the bill or joint resolution and usable by State, local, or tribal governments for activities subject to the Federal intergovernmental mandates.

“(C) If the Director determines that it is not feasible to make a reasonable estimate that would be required under subparagraphs (A) and (B), the Director shall not make the estimate, but shall report in the statement that the reasonable estimate cannot be made and shall include the reasons for that determination in the statement. If such determination is made by the Director, a point of order shall lie only under subsection (c)(1)(A) and as if the requirement of subsection (c)(1)(A) had not been met.

“(2) FEDERAL PRIVATE SECTOR MANDATES IN REPORTED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.—For each bill or joint resolution of a public character reported by any committee of authorization of the Senate or the House of Representatives, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall prepare and submit to the committee a statement as follows:

“(A) If the Director estimates that the direct cost of all Federal private sector mandates in the bill or joint resolution will equal or exceed $200,000,000 (adjusted annually for inflation) in the fiscal year in which any Federal private sector mandate in the bill or joint resolution (or in any necessary implementing regulation) would first be effective or in any of the 4 fiscal years following such fiscal year, the Director shall so state, specify the estimate, and briefly explain the basis of the estimate.

“(B) Estimates required under this paragraph shall include estimates (and a brief explanation of the basis of the estimates) of—

“(i) the total amount of direct costs of complying with the Federal private sector mandates in the bill or joint resolution, but no more than 10 years beyond the effective date of the mandate; and

“(ii) the amount, if any, of increase in authorization of appropriations under existing Federal financial assistance programs, or of authorization of appropriations for new Federal financial assistance, provided by the bill or joint resolution usable by the private sector for the activities subject to the Federal private sector mandates.

“(C) If the Director determines that it is not feasible to make a reasonable estimate that would be required under subparagraphs (A) and (B), the Director shall not make the estimate, but shall report in the statement that the reasonable estimate cannot be made and shall include the reasons for that determination in the statement.

“(3) LEGISLATION FALLING BELOW THE DIRECT COSTS THRESHOLDS.—If the Director estimates that the direct costs of a Federal mandate will not equal or exceed the thresholds specified in paragraphs (1) and (2), the Director shall so state and shall briefly explain the basis of the estimate.

“(4) AMENDED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS; CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a bill or joint resolution is passed in an amended form (including if passed by one House as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the text of a bill or joint resolution from the other House) or is reported by a committee of conference in amended form, and the amended form contains a Federal mandate not previously considered by either House or which contains an increase in the direct cost of a previously considered Federal mandate, then the committee of conference shall ensure, to the greatest extent practicable, that the Director shall prepare a statement as provided in this paragraph or a supplemental statement for the bill or joint resolution in that amended form.

“(c) LEGISLATION SUBJECT TO POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider—

“(A) any bill or joint resolution that is reported by a committee unless the committee has published a statement of the Director on the direct costs of Federal mandates in accordance with subsection (a)(6) before such consideration; and

“(B) any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that would increase the direct costs of Federal intergovernmental mandates by an amount that causes the thresholds specified in subsection (b)(1)(A) to be exceeded, unless—

“(i) the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report provides direct spending authority for each fiscal year for the Federal intergovernmental mandates included in the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report in an amount that is equal to the direct costs of such mandate;

“(ii) the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report provides an increase in receipts and an increase in direct spending authority for each fiscal year for the Federal intergovernmental mandates included in the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report in an amount equal to the direct costs of such mandate; or

“(iii) the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report includes an authorization for appropriations in an amount equal to the direct costs of such mandate, and—

“(I) identifies a specific dollar amount of the direct costs of the mandate for each year or other period up to 10 years during which the mandate shall be in effect under the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion or conference report, and such estimate is consistent with the estimate determined under paragraph (5) for each fiscal year; and

“(II) identifies any appropriation bill that is expected to provide for Federal funding of the direct cost referred to under subclause (II);

“(III)(aa) provides that if for any fiscal year the responsible Federal agency determines that there are insufficient appropriations to provide for the estimated direct costs of the mandate, the Federal agency shall (not later than 30 days after the beginning of the fiscal year) notify the appropriate authorizing committees of Congress of the determination and submit either—

“(1) a statement that the agency has determined, based on a re-estimate of the direct costs of a mandate, after consultation with State, local, and tribal governments, that the amount appropriated is sufficient to pay for the direct costs of the mandate; or

“(2) legislative recommendations for either implementing a less costly mandate or making the mandate ineffective for the fiscal year;

“(bb) provides expedited procedures for the consideration of the statement or legislative recommendations referred to in item (aa) by Congress not later than 30 days after the statement or recommendations are submitted to Congress; and

“(cc) provides that the mandate shall—

“(1) in the case of a statement referred to in item (aa)(1), cease to be effective 60 days after the statement is submitted unless Congress has approved the agency's determination by joint resolution during the 60-day period;

“(2) cease to be effective 60 days after the date the legislative recommendations of the responsible Federal agency are submitted to Congress under item (aa)(2) unless Congress provides otherwise by law; or

“(3) in the case of a mandate that has not yet taken effect, continue not to be effective unless Congress provides otherwise by law.

“(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The provisions of paragraph (1)(B)(III) shall not be construed to prohibit or otherwise restrict a State, local, or tribal government from voluntarily electing to remain subject to the original Federal intergovernmental mandate, complying with the programmatic or financial responsibilities of the original Federal intergovernmental mandate and providing the funding necessary consistent with the costs of Federal agency assistance, monitoring, and enforcement.

“(3) COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—(A) Paragraph (1)—

“(i) shall not apply to any bill or resolution reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate or the House of Representatives; but

“(ii) shall apply to—

“(I) any legislative provision increasing direct costs of a Federal intergovernmental mandate contained in any bill or resolution reported by such Committee;

“(II) any legislative provision increasing direct costs of a Federal intergovernmental mandate contained in any amendment offered to a bill or resolution reported by such Committee;

“(III) any legislative provision increasing direct costs of a Federal intergovernmental mandate in a conference report accompanying a bill or resolution reported by such Committee; and “(IV) any legislative provision increasing direct costs of a Federal intergovernmental mandate contained in any amendments in disagreement between the two Houses to any bill or resolution reported by such Committee.

“(B) Upon a point of order being made by any Senator against any provision listed in subparagraph (A)(ii), and the point of order being sustained by the Chair, such specific provision shall be deemed stricken from the bill, resolution, amendment, amendment in disagreement, or conference report and may not be offered as an amendment from the floor.

“(4) DETERMINATIONS OF APPLICABILITY TO PENDING LEGISLATION.—For purposes of this subsection, in the Senate, the presiding officer of the Senate shall consult with the Committee on Governmental Affairs, to the extent practicable, on questions concerning the applicability of this section to a pending bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report.

“(5) DETERMINATIONS OF FEDERAL MANDATE LEVELS.—For purposes of this subsection, in the Senate, the levels of Federal mandates for a fiscal year shall be determined based on the estimates made by the Committee on the Budget.

“(d) ENFORCEMENT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider a rule or order that waives the application of subsection (c) to a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee of authorization.

“(e) REQUESTS FROM SENATORS.—At the written request of a Senator, the Director shall, to the extent practicable, prepare an estimate of the direct costs of a Federal intergovernmental mandate contained in a bill, joint resolution, amendment, or motion of such Senator.

“(f) CLARIFICATION OF APPLICATION.—(1) This section applies to any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that reauthorizes appropriations, or that amends existing authorizations of appropriations, to carry out any statute, or that otherwise amends any statute, only if enactment of the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report—

“(A) would result in a net reduction in or elimination of authorization of appropriations for Federal financial assistance that would be provided to State, local, or tribal governments for use for the purpose of complying with any Federal intergovernmental mandate, or to the private sector for use to comply with any Federal private sector mandate, and would not eliminate or reduce duties established by the Federal mandate by a corresponding amount; or

“(B) would result in a net increase in the aggregate amount of direct costs of Federal intergovernmental mandates or Federal private sector mandates otherwise than as described in subparagraph (A).

“(2)(A) For purposes of this section, the direct cost of the Federal mandates in a bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that reauthorizes appropriations, or that amends existing authorizations of appropriations, to carry out a statute, or that otherwise amends any statute, means the net increase, resulting from enactment of the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report, in the amount described under subparagraph (B)(i) over the amount described under subparagraph (B)(ii).

“(B) The amounts referred to under subparagraph (A) are—

“(i) the aggregate amount of direct costs of Federal mandates that would result under the statute if the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report is enacted; and

“(ii) the aggregate amount of direct costs of Federal mandates that would result under the statute if the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report were not enacted.

“(C) For purposes of this paragraph, in the case of legislation to extend authorization of appropriations, the authorization level that would be provided by the extension shall be compared to the authorization level for the last year in which authorization of appropriations is already provided.

“(g) EXCLUSIONS.—This section shall not apply to any provision in a bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report before Congress that—

“(1) enforces constitutional rights of individuals;

“(2) establishes or enforces any statutory rights that prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, handicap, or disability;

“(3) requires compliance with accounting and auditing procedures with respect to grants or other money or property provided by the United States Government;

“(4) provides for emergency assistance or relief at the request of any State, local, or tribal government or any official of a State, local, or tribal government;

“(5) is necessary for the national security or the ratification or implementation of international treaty obligations; or

“(6) the President designates as emergency legislation and that the Congress so designates in statute.

“(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) The term ‘Federal intergovernmental mandate’ means—

“(A) any provision in legislation, statute, or regulation that—“(i) would impose an enforceable duty upon State, local, or tribal governments, except—

“(I) a condition of Federal assistance; or

“(II) a duty arising from participation in a voluntary Federal program, except as provided in subparagraph (B)); or

“(ii) would reduce or eliminate the amount of authorization of appropriations for—

“(I) Federal financial assistance that would be provided to State, local, or tribal governments for the purpose of complying with any such previously imposed duty unless such duty is reduced or eliminated by a corresponding amount; or

“(II) the control of borders by the Federal Government; or reimbursement to State, local, or tribal governments for the net cost associated with illegal, deportable, and excludable aliens, including court-mandated expenses related to emergency health care, education or criminal justice; when such a reduction or elimination would result in increased net costs to State, local, or tribal governments in providing education or emergency health care to, or incarceration of, illegal aliens; except that this subclause shall not be in effect with respect to a State, local, or tribal government, to the extent that such government has not fully cooperated in the efforts of the Federal Government to locate, apprehend, and deport illegal aliens;

SEC. 104. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Congressional Budget Office $4,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, and 2002 to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 105. EXERCISE OF RULEMAKING POWERS.

The provisions of section 101 are enacted by Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of such House, respectively, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to such House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of each House.

SEC. 107. CONSIDERATION FOR FEDERAL FUNDING.

Nothing in this Act shall preclude a State, local, or tribal government that already complies with all or part of the Federal intergovernmental mandates included in the bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report from consideration for Federal funding for the cost of the mandate, including the costs the State, local, or tribal government is currently paying and any additional costs necessary to meet the mandate.

SEC. 108. IMPACT ON LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) the Congress should be concerned about shifting costs from Federal to State and local authorities and should be equally concerned about the growing tendency of States to shift costs to local governments;

(2) cost shifting from States to local governments has, in many instances, forced local governments to raise property taxes or curtail sometimes essential services; and

(3) increases in local property taxes and cuts in essential services threaten the ability of many citizens to attain and maintain the American dream of owning a home in a safe, secure community.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the Federal Government should not shift certain costs to the State, and States should end the practice of shifting costs to local governments, which forces many local governments to increase property taxes;

(2) States should end the imposition, in the absence of full consideration by their legislatures, of State issued mandates on local governments without adequate State funding, in a manner that may displace other essential government priorities; and

(3) one primary objective of this Act and other efforts to change the relationship among Federal, State, and local governments should be to reduce taxes and spending at all levels and to end the practice of shifting costs from one level of government to another with little or no benefit to taxpayers.

SEC. 109. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect on January 1, 1996 or on the date 90 days after appropriations are made available as authorized under section 104, whichever is earlier and shall apply to legislation considered on and after such date.

(b) STATE, LOCAL, AND TRIBAL GOVERNMENT INPUT.—Each agency shall, to the extent permitted in law, develop an effective process to permit elected officials (or their designated representatives) of State, local, and tribal governments to provide meaningful and timely input in the development of regulatory proposals containing significant Federal intergovernmental mandates. Such a process shall be consistent with all applicable laws.

(c) AGENCY PLAN.—

(1) EFFECTS ON STATE, LOCAL, AND TRIBAL GOVERNMENTS.—Before establishing any regulatory requirements that might significantly or uniquely affect small governments, agencies shall have developed a plan under which the agency shall—

(1) estimates by the agency, including the underlying analysis, of the anticipated costs to State, local, and tribal governments and the private sector of complying with the Federal intergovernmental mandate, and of the extent to which such costs may be paid with funds provided by the Federal Government or otherwise paid through Federal financial assistance;

(2) estimates by the agency, if and to the extent that the agency determines that accurate estimates are reasonably feasible, of—

(5)(A) a description of the extent of the agency's prior consultation with elected representatives (or their designated representatives) of the affected State, local, and tribal governments;

(B) a summary of the comments and concerns that were presented by State, local, or tribal governments either orally or in writing to the agency;

(C) a summary of the agency's evaluation of those comments and concerns; and

(D) the agency's position supporting the need to issue the regulation containing the Federal intergovernmental mandates (considering, among other things, the extent to which costs may or may not be paid with funds provided by the Federal Government).

(b) AGENCY STATEMENT; PRIVATE SECTOR MANDATES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, an agency statement prepared pursuant to subsection (a) shall also be prepared for a Federal private sector mandate that may result in the expenditure by State, local, tribal governments, or the private sector, in the aggregate, of $100,000,000 or more (adjusted annually for inflation by the Consumer Price Index) in any 1 year.

(c) PROMULGATION.—In promulgating a general notice of proposed rulemaking or a final rule for which a statement under subsection (a) is required, the agency shall include in the promulgation a summary of the information contained in the statement.

The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall—

(2) periodically forward copies of such statements to the Director of the Congressional Budget Office on a reasonably timely basis after promulgation of the general notice of proposed rulemaking or of the final rule for which the statement was prepared.

SEC. 204. PILOT PROGRAM ON SMALL GOVERNMENT FLEXIBILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with Federal agencies, shall establish pilot programs in at least 2 agencies to test innovative, and more flexible regulatory approaches that—

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. CLINGER

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CLINGER moves to strike all after the enacting clause of S. 1 and insert the text of H.R. 5 as passed, as follows:

(The engrossed provisions of H.R. 5 were not available to be printed at time of publication.)

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER].

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An Act to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments, to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and to provide information on the cost of Federal mandates on the private sector, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H.R. 5, was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2, THE LINE-ITEM VETO ACT

Mr. GOSS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 104-15) on the resolution (H. Res. 55) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2) to give the President item veto authority over appropriations acts and targeted tax benefits in revenue acts, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 440, LAND CONVEYANCE IN BUTTE COUNTY, CA

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 53 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 53

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 440) to provide for the conveyance of lands to certain individuals in Butte County, California. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. Each section shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 53 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 440, legislation to resolve title disputes between Plumas National Forest and landowners in Butte County, CA.

This rule provides for 1 hour of general debate divided equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Resources Committee, after which any Member will have the opportunity to offer an amendment to the bill under the 5-minute rule. Finally, the rule provides one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 53 allows for the consideration of H.R. 440, legislation designed to resolve longstanding boundary issues along the Plumas National Forest. Due to inaccurate boundary surveys, a number of landowners have about 30 acres of land in dispute. This bill will permit the Secretary of Agriculture to convey all right, title, and interest of the United States regarding the affected land back to the owners.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER] has crafted a piece of legislation that will effectively clear up the title disputes between the Plumas National Forest and the landowners. His legislation was approved without amendment in the Committee on Resources, and I expect that it will easily pass the House as well.

I am pleased this bill will be considered under an open rule. In the 103d Congress, those of us in the minority had ample opportunity to express our distress about the number of months that passed between bills with open rules. As we complete 2 weeks of discussion on H.R. 5 under an open rule, I am now pleased to continue the practice of full deliberation in this Chamber by calling up another open rule today.

Let me respond to those who have argued that this legislation could have simply been considered under suspension of the rules. The suspension of the rules is an effective tool, but it is a legislative shortcut which requires the House to suspend its customary procedures and does not allow for amendments to be offered on the House floor.

Until the 94th Congress, motions to suspend were only in order on the first and third Monday of each month. As we all know, subsequent changes now allow motions to suspend on every single Monday and Tuesday. I worry that the abuse of this process gives the impression that the legislation in question has not undergone complete and open deliberation in the House.

While I admit that the suspension of the rules is an effective procedure to expedite legislation, I believe that the process of open rules and open debate will better restore the faith of the American people in this House. Therefore, the new majority of this House will remain steadfast in its efforts to transform the way Congress carries out its business and make every effort to engender open debate for all Members on the House floor.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 440 was favorably reported out of the Committee on Resources by voice vote, as was the rule by the Rules Committee. I urge my colleagues to support this rule, and continue the spirit of openness and internal reform that has returned free and deliberative debate to its traditional role in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding the customary 30 minutes of debate time to me.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. LINDER, has outlined very well the terms of the resolution. This is an open rule. I support the rule and urge my colleagues to do the same. Unfortunately, except for the unfunded mandates legislation the major pieces of legislation that have been considered on the House floor this year have had restricted rules. We would encourage the majority party to be as conscientious about providing open rules for the important pieces of legislation that we will have before us, I am sure, especially over the next couple of months.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, should there be any concerns at all about H.R. 440, which provides for the conveyance of about 30 acres of land in Butte County, CA, the rule does give ample opportunity for those concerns to be addressed. The bill is identical to a bill we passed last year by a voice vote under suspension of the rules.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the new chairman of the Committee on Resources, the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG], and the new chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN], for building on the good work of the last Congress in bringing this, and several other public lands bills, to the floor as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, we, too, have no further requests for time. I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 400, THE ANAKTUVUK PASS LAND EXCHANGE AND WILDERNESS REDESIGNATION ACT OF 1995

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 52 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 52

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 400) to provide for the exchange of lands within Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. Each section shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. UPTON). The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MCINNIS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HALL], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. MCINNIS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 52 is a very simple resolution. It is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate. After general debate, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule. The rule provides one motion to recommit.

The open rule demonstrates that the new majority intends to honor its commitment to have a more fair and open legislative process, providing the House with an opportunity to review the bills, debate them, and yes, if necessary, to amend them.

The legislation is noncontroversial. It was reported out of the Committee on Resources by a vote of 40 to 0 and is identical to H.R. 4746, which passed in the House during the 103d Congress by voice vote. It settles a longstanding dispute between the local residents of Anaktuvuk Pass and the Park Service over the use of all terrain vehicles [ATV] for access to subsistence resources. The Park Service contended that the ATV's injured the landscape. Both sides of this issue have reached an agreement on the lands which may be used for ATV access, and H.R. 400 will merely ratify the agreement the parties have reached. Without congressional approval, the agreement will become null and void.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the rule, and the underlying legislation. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleagues on the other side of the aisle for bringing this bill to the floor under an open rule. I am a fan of open rules because I think the American people deserve full and fair debate on issues of importance, and issues on which there are areas of disagreement. I plan to support this rule on the floor.

However, I feel compelled to point out that at yesterday's Rules Committee hearing there appeared to be no opposition to this bill. A bill identical to this one was included in last year's omnibus public lands bill—H.R. 4746—which passed the House by voice vote on October 3, 1994. The current bill under consideration—H.R. 400—was favorably ordered reported from the Committee on Resources by a unanimous rollcall of 40 to 0 on January 18, 1995. There were also no witnesses in opposition to this bill before the Rules Committee. It would seem to me, therefore, that this bill could have been moved through the process in an expeditious way by simply suspending the rules or perhaps by asking unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, even though this bill is a noncontroversial one, it is nevertheless an important one for Alaska Native landowners and the people of Alaska. The bill provides for the exchange of lands within the Gates of the Arctic Park and Preserve. It also settles a longstanding and difficult dispute between the National Park Service and Alaska Native landowners over the use of all-terrain vehicles [ATV's] by the local residents of Anaktuvuk Pass.

As I indicated, we do have an open rule on this bill which I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALL of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, what concerned me a little bit is listening to the debate on the previous rule, and I have not heard the debate on this mixup when I just walked in, but I was a little bit concerned, and some of us who may have that concern, it may not amount to anything for the future. But I just want to say that my concern is that these bills, which are noncontroversial, and like, as has been said, have been utilized on the Suspension Calendar, or even by unanimous consent, because there is no controversy; but to use a rule procedure in an open rule procedure leaves some of us to concern ourselves about the future, that since there was a statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Rules early on in this session that when we got rid of this 2-year cycle, when we looked back over the 2 years, that we would find that 70 percent of the bills were under an open rule.

Now what concerned me is that we are going to see little-bitty bills that are not of any controversial nature at all under open rules, and we can have a whole bunch of those, and then we see a very controversial bill come along that does not have an open rule, and then when we look at the average out and a percentage, the percentage is what the chairman said.

Now I am not saying that that is going to happen. I am just saying that is a concern of mine as the utilization of the rule process rather than using unanimous consent or rather than using suspensions, and only time will tell.

I do not plan to do anything today. I just want to alert the other side to my concern, and I see the chairman of the Committee on Rules is on his feet, and I would be glad to listen to him talk here, listen because that is the only concern I have. I am not here to offer any amendments or do anything like that, just to express the concern that I and, I think, several of our minority Members have as to what is going to happen in the future if we go along in this 2-year cycle.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], the chairman of the committee on Rules.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MCINNIS] for yielding this time to me, and I could just say to my good friend from Missouri, as my colleagues know, he says, "Now I'm not saying this," and, "I'm not saying that," but it is the inference out there, and the gentleman knows that really does bother me.

But as my colleagues know, there are three reasons why these bills were scheduled, and I would just like to take a minute to tell the gentleman.

First our leadership, the Republican leadership, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], our Speaker, has committed to fewer suspensions since the process does prohibit amendments, and we all know that, and we have to keep in mind that there are, as my colleague knows, half of us here today that are new Members in the last 2 years, half of us, and those Members, if they want to offer amendments, we want to try to open up this process. We want to be as open and as fair and accountable as we possibly can.

We want to be open. We want to offer open rules whenever we can.

Second, to ensure that the suspension process is not abused, the leadership has erected more procedural requirements before a chairman can even request that a bill be considered under suspension, and that is very important.

Third, there are some measures which may be even noncontroversial enough to consider by unanimous consent, not even on the suspension calendar. We have one of those. One of them was naming a building after one of the most respective Members of this body, Bob Lagomarsino. That ought to be brought up under unanimous consent, just to show we all agree. So we did not put out a rule on that. So we are being selective.

Last, we just went through a process on the unfunded mandate bill. There were 171 amendments offered in that bill. There were some stalling tactics involved, some dilatory tactics, which the gentleman knows, striking the enactment clause, moving to rise, things like that. But the House came back to its senses, there was good comity, and, because of that, we now will have a rule of the floor tomorrow morning on one of the most important issues coming before this body, the line-item veto, and it is being brought here under a completely open rule. So, Members, whether you are Republican or Democrat, conservative or liberal, you are going to be able to work your will on the floor of this House, which is very important to some Members, especially the more liberal Members perhaps, because they have concerns about it.

So let us not try to shoot down the sincerity on our part in offering these open amendments. We are going to do that as often as we possibly can. I just had to say that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a point. I appreciate the concern of the gentleman from Missouri. I must add since 1989, 10 natural resources bills have been killed on suspension. This is my first opportunity to get up here and present a rule like this, and I appreciate the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Rules has allocated an open rule. One, it offers protection and certainly the elements of being offered that the chairman of the committee has talked about. But it is also an opportunity for those of us who like these open rules to get an opportunity to participate in this process, to participate.

So while I appreciate the gentleman's concern, I wanted to make those points.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER].

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I do not mind that, if that is the way it is going to go, not only on these types of bills, but also the controversial bills. It is not this bill and not the next bill. If you want to do open rules, I could care less, because I know there is not going to be any amendment. I am more concerned about with regard to an open rule, the gentleman says line-item veto, we are going to have all kinds of crime bills, I would like to see open rules on those. I can add some amendments to those. I would like to see open rules on those. I can add some amendments to those. I would like to see those open rules. To me an open rule on those bills is a lot more important than an open rule on these bills. The bill of the gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER], nobody wants to touch that. It has been worked on, he has done a good job, and I think it should be passed. And I do not care if you put it under unanimous consent, or suspension, or an open rule, he is going to get his bill passed today. So I am not concerned about those. I am only concerned about the future.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate those comments, but I should say in closing that I have complete confidence in the chairman of the Committee on Rules and his decision on how the rules should be open.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the rule.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time. I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 101, TAOS PUEBLO INDIANS OF NEW MEXICO LAND TRANSFER

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 51 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 51

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 101) to transfer a parcel of land to the Taos Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. Each section shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

MODIFICATION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 51 OFFERED BY MRS. WALDHOLTZ

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be modified by the amendment I have placed at the desk. This amendment accords the customary treatment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute which was intended but inadvertently omitted from the resolution from the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification of House Resolution 51 offered by Mrs. WALDHOLTZ:

On page 2, beginning on line 5, strike "Each section shall be considered as read." and insert the following: "It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Resources now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read."

On page 2, line 9, insert before the last sentence of the resolution the following new sentence: "Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute."

On page 2, line 12, insert before the period at the end of the last sentence of the resolution the following: "with or without instructions".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Utah?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is not my intention to object, but I would ask the gentlewoman from Utah as to what occurred in this instance. Why is the majority coming forward at this point and asking that the rule be amended?

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROST. I yield to the gentlewoman from Utah.

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, this is to correct a technical error. The language the Clerk just read as the body of this amendment was intended to be included. It was not, by inadvertence. We understand there is no objection from the minority. We want to reflect how the committee wanted this to be considered.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, do I gather this was something that occurred within the Committee on Rules? It was not something that occurred within the committee that originated the bill, but in the production of the rule inside the Committee on Rules?

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. That is correct.

Mr. FROST. And it was by inadvertence on the part of the staff. We understand there has been some changeover in the staff and some of these things will happen as we all get up to speed.

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. This was done solely by inadvertence. Our attempt is to reflect accurately the actions of the committee as we consider how this rule should be considered.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The text of House Resolution 51, as modified, is as follows:

H. RES. 51

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 101) to transfer a parcel of land to the Taos Pueblo Indians of New Mexico. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Resources now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Utah [Mrs. WALDHOLTZ] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 51 is the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 101, a bill to transfer a parcel of land to the Taos Pueblo Indians of New Mexico.

This is an open rule. It provides for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. After general debate the bill will be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule. Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit.

This rule provides, once again, for fair, open debate.

There has been some concern among some House Members as to why these bills are not simply brought up under suspension of the rules. As the chairman of the Committee on Rules, Mr. SOLOMON, has pointed out, our leadership is committed to bring fewer bills under suspension of the rules since that procedure does not allow for amendments.

Reflecting our commitment to an open, fair process, our leadership has made it more procedurally difficult for a committee chairman to request that a bill be considered under suspension. It's simply easier for them to ask for an open rule.

The chairman of the Resources Committee asked for an open rule on this bill. We agree with that request.

Some of our colleagues may claim that this rule is simply a ploy by the majority to increase the number of open rules, but that is simply not the case.

The Members of this House, and more importantly the American people, deserve full and open debate on important legislation such as this.

This bill resolves a long-standing dispute over lands that are used for religious purposes by the Taos Pueblo Tribe.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 101 transfers approximately 764 acres of Forest Service land within the Wheeler Peak Wilderness in New Mexico to the Department of Interior to be held in trust for the Taos Pueblo Indians as part of the Pueblo de Taos Reservation.

It returns to the tribe land known as the Bottleneck Tract, which contains the Path of Life Trail, considered sacred to the tribe. And the tribe has agreed to continue to manage this land as wilderness.

Maybe this bill may not seem important to those living in other parts of the country, but it is important to people living in my part of the country, the Western United States, and it is particularly important to the Taos Pueblo Tribe and the people of New Mexico. But it is also important, Mr. Speaker, to every American. Because this bill will remove barriers imposed by the Federal Government to the free exercise of religion by a religious minority.

The principles embodied in this bill deserve the respect of this House to openly debate and consider this legislation.

Action under suspension of the rules requires the cooperation of all Members in order to responsibly and timely pass the legislation. Unfortunately, that cooperation has so far not been a particular hallmark of the 104th Congress, and the best way to protect this important legislation, while keeping our commitment to an open and fair process, is to bring this legislation to the floor under an open rule.

I urge my colleagues to adopt this rule and to support the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 51 is indeed an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 101, a bill to transfer a parcel of land to the Taos Pueblo Indians in New Mexico. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate some questions raised during the consideration of the previous two rules today.

Given the fact that there is absolutely no controversy surrounding this legislation and the fact that it was reported from the Committee on Resources by voice vote, I do have to ask why H.R. 101 is not being considered on the suspension calendar or under unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the meeting of the Committee on Rules, our distinguished chairman stated that it is the policy of the Republican conference to limit the number of bills brought to the House on the suspension calendar, as was mentioned earlier today. The reason, he said, was simply because the consideration of bills on suspension prohibits the offering of amendments.

However, I must point out for the new Members of the House that ordinarily bills considered under suspension have been those that have been thoroughly vetted through the committee process. In past Congresses, it has been common practice to thoroughly examine and deliberate issues in committee and, in so doing, it has been found that often all disputed issues can be resolved, thus eliminating the need for lengthy debate and numerous amendments by the full House.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Resources told the Committee on Rules yesterday that there is a large backlog of bills pending before his committee. Mr. Speaker, I share his desire to move these bills and would urge him and the Committee on Rules to consider using the suspension calendar to move noncontroversial legislation in the future. And I would observe also that, if I understand the procedures here today, that in fact any germane amendment will be in order when this bill comes up, that this is in fact an open rule, and that any germane amendment can be brought before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH].

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Utah for yielding time to me. It is a distinct honor to come to the Congress with the gentlewoman and other like-minded reformers of this institution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution, and I see my good friend from New Mexico, who authored this piece, because quite correctly of the concern of his constituents. And certainly while there are some matters of contention within the Committee on Resources, this is not one of them. I think it is exemplary that the gentleman from New Mexico brings forth this legislation, and I certainly rise to champion his cause and those of his constituents and look forward to some reciprocation down the line with other bills of regional interest that we may share.

I also look forward to full and open discussion in this House, in this people's House, on matters where perhaps we do not see eye to eye, for that is the purpose of this institution, to debate the questions of the day. And when we have common agreement, we should champion those moments as well. This is one such occasion, and I appreciate the opportunity to stand in strong support of this piece of legislation.

Mrs. WALDHOLTZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me close simply by saying that it has been often expressed by members of this committee and it is our deeply held belief that wherever possible we need to have open rules to allow for free, honest debate of important issues that come before this body. The rule for this particular piece of legislation is no different. It provides for open debate. And I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is what the people of our country expect from this House, to provide for the opportunity for a free exchange of ideas while still moving the business of the people forward. I think this rule will do just that, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANAKTUVUK PASS LAND EXCHANGE AND WILDERNESS REDESIGNATION ACT OF 1995

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Pursuant to House Resolution 52 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 400.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 400) to provide for the exchange of lands within Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve, and for other purposes, with Mr. HASTERT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 400, a bill to provide for a land exchange within Gates of the Arctic Park and Preserve. This noncontroversial legislation was reported January 18 by the Resources Committee by a vote of 40 to 0.

H.R. 400 was introduced January 4 and passed the committee, as I said, at our first full committee markup January 18. This bill is identical to H.R. 4746, which passed the House during the 103d Congress—it represents a true compromise. And I thank the former chairman, Mr. MILLER, and Mr. VENTO for their cooperation on this legislation.

The land exchange creates a deficit of 17,168 acres of wilderness in Gates of the Arctic Park. Therefore, the committee recommends the creation of 17,168 acres of wilderness outside the park, thus a no-net-loss-no-net-gain of wilderness.

This is a good bill. It settles a longstanding dispute between the local residents of Anaktuvuk Pass and the Park Service over the use of all-terrain vehicles [ATV's] for access to subsistence resources. Local residents use ATV's on parklands during the summer months. The Park Service contends that the ATV's harm the landscape. Both sides have reached agreement on the lands which may be used for ATV access and H.R. 400 ratifies that agreement.

I urge passage of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 400 is identical to legislation considered by the Committee on Resources and passed by the House on a voice vote in the last Congress. It is non-controversial legislation and deserves support. It is based on a proposal submitted by the administration in June 1994, and it was subsequently modified to reflect an agreement worked out between the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG], the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

While that agreement is different from the administration's proposal for wilderness designation of BLM-managed lands in the Nigu River area, it is similar in that it would assure that the bill will not result in a net reduction of wilderness in the National Park System and would leave the remainder of this area in its current wilderness study status.

In addition, the boundaries provided in the bill by that agreement would emphasize protection of riparian areas along the Nigu River.

H.R. 400 would ratify an agreement among the National Park Service on behalf of the United States to Alaska native corporations and the municipal government of Anaktuvuk Pass, AK. Under the agreement, the United States would transfer to the native corporations certain Federal lands that are now managed as part of the gates of the Arctic National Park.

In exchange the native corporations and the municipal government would transfer to the United States certain lands and interests located within and adjacent to the national park.

The park lands involved in the exchange are also designated as wilderness. So legislation is required if they are to be transferred. Ratification of the agreement and removal of the national park lands from wilderness designation is accompanied by the designation as wilderness of other lands, including both lands from the gates of the Arctic National Park and BLM public lands in the Nigu River area that would be added to the adjacent Noatak National preserve.

This bill would settle a longstanding access issue in Alaska. That access question concerns ATV use of the area, a matter of considerable concern because of the impacts on park resources and values.

Mr. Speaker, the bill and the accompanying agreement, though, do not spell out the specific conditions and limitations of such ATV use. Instead, we are going to be relying on the parties to specify them in the conveyance documents, hopefully in a manner that solves conflicts between ATV use and park resources and values.

Likewise, there is some concern that no formal appraisals have or will be done on the lands and interests being conveyed. We are relying on the Interior Department's determination that the exchanges are in the public interest.

Mr. Chairman, while the bill reflects the congressional agreement that was previously worked out, I believe it should be noted that the administration favors the agreement as it was worked out originally between the Park Service, the Alaska Native corporations, and the local municipal government.

Again, Mr. Chairman, let me state that we support the bill, and commend the gentleman for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation, but I want to raise a couple of points with respect to the proposed land exchange. The EIS in this land exchange admits that no appraisals were prepared. Instead, a statement of value was prepared to assess the relative values of the interests proposed in the exchange. Since no appraisals were done, we have to rely on the assurances of the involved party that this is a good exchange, and we have no specific criteria on which to judge it.

Mr. Chairman, I raise this point of order not about this legislation, because this legislation has gone through the committee and was the subject of a lot of deliberations last year, and in fact then should have been passed last year. I raise this point of view on this matter to say that I think that having now passed the balanced budget amendment, that we must be more conscientious, both in the committee and on the floor of the House, in dealing with exchanges and with transfers and gifts of public property.

What we used to consider as a regular order around here may no longer be able to be the regular order, since we must now make sure that the taxpayers and the Government get all the moneys that they can in terms of the transfers of these properties with respect to asking for their market value, so those references can be used to help balance the budget. I will be raising this issue in the committee on other legislation that is scheduled to come before this House, and will raise it in the House in the event that we are not successful in the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I think that this exchange, and although this is the remnant of a previous exchange, this exchange points out some of the serious potential problems that can arise from exchanges in general. Those problems are especially acute to Alaska, since both ANESCA and ANILCA allow an equal exchange upon the finding of the Secretary that the exchanges are in the public interest.

Again, Mr. Chairman, this is the way we believe the Government business should have been done in the past, but it raises concerns about whether or not we can continue to do that in the future, given the constraints we are going to have around here in trying to meet our obligations under the balanced budget amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the grandfather of this exchange, the previous exchange which we are cleaning up after in this legislation, they found it was in fact not in the Government interest, according to GAO, and GAO recommended that the Congress direct the Secretary to develop and issue written procedures on land exchanges. At a minimum, procedures should require preparations of EIS's and EA's when appropriate, full public review, and a process for determining whether an exchange is in fact in the public interest, and not just a simple statement by the Secretary of the Interior that it is in fact in the public interest. Establishment of disclosure and fair market value on lands and interests should be exchanged. Land exchanges are not a panacea for solving all the problems. Very often they are very complex agreements that require careful review and analysis.

The Committee on Resources has dealt with many land exchanges over the years which have involved considerable work by the committee, and also have had to be rewritten, those exchanges, or modified to assure they were in fact in the public interest.

Instead of dealing with land exchanges on an ad hoc basis, we should have written and qualitative criteria to assess the public value of such exchanges.

I raise the point again not with respect to this legislation, but in terms of the future considerations of these matters before the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I have raised these in the past from time to time, but I think we have to be much more diligent in that effort now, given the fiscal constraints we are going to have in the budgetary considerations of exchanges and transfers and gifts of public assets and resources, whether it is to private parties or to other units of government within the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I can understand the statements of the gentleman from California, but I would hope that they should have been directed at legislation down the road, because we have to remember that Anaktuvuk Pass is a small, small village that was put inside of a park, with certain understandings that they could do certain things, and then told by the Park Service they could not do those things.

This is a village that is high in the mountains above the Arctic Circle, with living conditions there which a lot of people do not recognize. What we tried to do in this exchange was work out between these people and the parks themselves to have a true exchange. If we went through the process of EIS statements and appraisal value, this would never have happened. This is the way that we have worked individually with a unique situation.

As I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, this bill passed the last time. There is no money in this bill. In fact, if we really want an appraisal, I think Anaktuvuk Pass got shortchanged. I hope the gentleman refers to this later on down the road.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good piece of legislation.

It should be passed and it should become law today. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, let me conclude by saying I support this bill. It is a good piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired. Pursuant to the rule, the bill shall be considered under the 5-minute rule by section, and each section shall be considered as read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Anaktuvuk Pass Land Exchange and Wilderness Redesignation Act of 1995".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1?

If not, the Clerk will designate section 2.

The text of section 2 is as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (94 Stat. 2371), enacted on December 2, 1980, established Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve and Gates of the Arctic Wilderness. The village of Anaktuvuk Pass, located in the highlands of the central Brooks Range, is virtually surrounded by these national park and wilderness lands and is the only Native village located within the boundary of a National Park System unit in Alaska.

(2) Unlike most other Alaskan Native communities, the village of Anaktuvuk Pass is not located on a major river, lake, or coastline that can be used as a means of access. The residents of Anaktuvuk Pass have relied increasingly on snow machines in winter and all-terrain vehicles in summer as their primary means of access to pursue caribou and other subsistence resources.

(3) In a 1983 land exchange agreement, linear easements were reserved by the Inupiat Eskimo people for use of all-terrain vehicles across certain national park lands, mostly along stream and river banks. These linear easements proved unsatisfactory, because they provided inadequate access to subsistence resources while causing excessive environmental impact from concentrated use.

(4) The National Park Service and the Nunamiut Corporation initiated discussions in 1985 to address concerns over the use of all-terrain vehicles on park and wilderness land. These discussions resulted in an agreement, originally executed in 1992 and thereafter amended in 1993 and 1994, among the National Park Service, Nunamiut Corporation, the City of Anaktuvuk Pass, and Arctic Slope Regional Corporation. Full effectuation of this agreement, as amended, by its terms requires ratification by the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 2?

If not, the Clerk will designate Section 3. The text of Section 3 is as follows:

SEC. 3. RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT.

(a) RATIFICATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The terms, conditions, procedures, covenants, reservations and other provisions set forth in the document entitled "Donation, Exchange of Lands and Interests in Lands and Wilderness Redesignation Agreement Among Arctic Slope Regional Corporation, Nunamiut Corporation, City of Anaktuvuk Pass and the United States of America" (hereinafter referred to in this Act as "the Agreement"), executed by the parties on December 17, 1992, as amended, are hereby incorporated in this Act, are ratified and confirmed, and set forth the obligations and commitments of the United States, Arctic Slope Regional Corporation, Nunamiut Corporation and the City of Anaktuvuk Pass, as a matter of Federal law.

(2) LAND ACQUISITION.—Lands acquired by the United States pursuant to the Agreement shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") as part of Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve, subject to the laws and regulations applicable thereto.

(b) MAPS.—The maps set forth as Exhibits C1, C2, and D through I to the Agreement depict the lands subject to the conveyances, retention of surface access rights, access easements and all-terrain vehicle easements. These lands are depicted in greater detail on a map entitled "Land Exchange Actions, Proposed Anaktuvuk Pass Land Exchange and Wilderness Redesignation, Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve", Map No. 185/80,039, dated April 1994, and on file at the Alaska Regional Office of the National Park Service and the offices of Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve in Fairbanks, Alaska. Written legal descriptions of these lands shall be prepared and made available in the above offices. In case of any discrepancies, Map No. 185/80,039 shall be controlling.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the remainder of the bill.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

All of the lands or interests in lands conveyed pursuant to the Agreement shall be conveyed subject to valid existing rights.

(b) ALASKA NATIONAL INTEREST LANDS CONSERVATION ACT.—Except to the extent specifically set forth in this Act or the Agreement, nothing in this Act or in the Agreement shall be construed to enlarge or diminish the rights, privileges, or obligations of any person, including specifically the preference for subsistence uses and access to subsistence resources provided under the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 3101 et seq.).

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to the bill?

If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. UPTON) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTERT, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 400) to provide for the exchange of lands within Gates of the Arctic National Park and Preserve, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 52, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that they ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

This vote will be a 15-minute vote. the vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 427, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 6, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 400, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

LAND CONVEYANCE IN BUTTE COUNTY, CA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Pursuant to House Resolution 53 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 440.

□ 1730

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 440) to provide for the conveyance of lands to certain individuals in Butte County, CA, with Mr. HASTERT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN].

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. HANSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 440 is essential in order to resolve serious hardships for land and homeowners in Butte County, CA, brought about by the mistaken actions of the Federal Government. The problem began in 1961, when a Forest Service survey on the Plumas National Forest did not locate the original survey corner established in 1869. Because the surveyor could not locate the marker, he erroneously established a new corner, which private landowners have subsequently used to establish future boundaries which also are erroneous. Ultimately, 16 landowners have been adversely effected. While this legislation is noncontroversial, it is extremely important to the landowners who have experienced a great amount of hardship and anxiety over this unfortunate situation.

H.R. 440 was drafted with the assistance of the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management. The bill is designed to resolve boundary and land title issues between Federal and private lands. Surveys completed in 1992 have revealed that land for years thought to be privately owned was actually contained within the boundaries of the Plumas National Forest, and therefore owned by the Federal Government. These landowners have a substantial vested interest in this land which they purchased and believed to be their own.

This situation has resulted in the clouding of the title of approximately 30 acres of land for 16 individual landowners. H.R. 440 would rectify this matter by authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey all right, title and interest in the land in question to the claimants.

The proposed bill is specific in describing the affected property, the claimants who are entitled to relief, and the process to be followed in granting such relief. Also, the bill describes the process by which the boundary adjustments will be accomplished.

I believe that the approach taken by H.R. 440 is the only equitable solution to this matter. This legislation has no significant budget impact since the only cost involved to the Government will be the administration of the land conveyance. I know of no opposition to this legislation at the local or Federal level.

Again, Mr. Chairman, this legislation is very important to the landowners involved. These individuals have experienced significant and protracted hardship because of this problem. The sooner Congress takes action to remedy the situation, the sooner these people can get on with their lives. I thank my good friend, Mr. HERGER, for his diligence and I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 440.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 440 is identical to legislation considered by the Resources Committee and passed by the House on a voice vote in the last Congress. The measure that would resolve title problems for 16 private landowners in Butte County, CA. These title problems, which involve about 30 acres of land, arose because of an incorrect boundary survey done by a private contractor for the Forest Service in the early 1960's. The bill would remove the clouds from the private land titles by providing for the conveyance of the involved lands to these private landowners without cost.

For the private landowners, H.R. 440 is a generous resolution of their title problems. Under the bill, the Federal Government will not only convey the land without cost, it will also pick up the tab for preparing the deeds and doing all surveys and markings.

Yes, there was an incorrect survey and yes, these private landowners had thought the lands in question were theirs. The fact is they are not. They are and always have been national forest lands. If this was a title problem between private parties, I seriously doubt that one party would say that the other parties could have the affected lands free and clear and not only that, but the first party would pay all the costs associated with the conveyances. That just doesn't happen in the private sector.

I bring these facts to the House's attention not out of any malice toward the bill but because so often on the floor we hear about property rights and takings. When it comes though to the Federal Government's property, as in this bill, we are asked to forget about that and be a benevolent landowner.

I sympathize with the affected private landowners. That is why I supported the bill in committee. I do hope that the next time we start debating property rights and takings, that Members will remember its not just a one-way street.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER], the author of this legislation.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank Chairman YOUNG, Subcommittee Chairman HANSEN, and members of the Resources Committee and Parks, Forests and Lands Subcommittee for bringing H.R. 440 to the House floor.

H.R. 440 is a noncontroversial bill that passed this House on the suspension calendar at the end of the 103d Congress. Due to insufficient time, the bill did not pass the Senate. The purpose of the bill is to clear the title of 16 parcels of land, totalling approximately 30 acres, in the Stephens Ridge area of Butte County, CA. Its passage would help resolve a pressing problem in my district.

In 1961 the Forest Service sanctioned a survey establishing the boundaries of the parcels in question.

In 1992 a BLM resurvey demonstrated that an error had been made in the 1961 survey, thereby placing a cloud on the title of the parcels.

By clearing title to these parcels, H.R. 440 provides much needed relief to the landowners, mostly senior citizens, who are affected by the BLM resurvey.

Mr. Chairman, these landowners purchased property in good faith reliance on the 1961 Forest Service survey. Now, some 30 years later, they have been told that they no longer hold clear title to their land. This technical correction of the problem is a fair solution for all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives swiftly adopted this legislation during the last term. I invite my colleagues to expeditiously approve this bill again today.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill shall be considered as read under the 5-minute rule by section, and each section shall be considered as read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) certain landowners in Butte County, California who own property adjacent to the Plumas National Forest have been adversely affected by certain erroneous surveys;

(2) these landowners have occupied or improved their property in good faith and in reliance on erroneous surveys of their properties that they believed were accurate; and

(3) the 1992 Bureau of Land Management dependent resurvey of the Plumas National Forest will correctly establish accurate boundaries between such forest and private lands.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey, without consideration, certain lands in Butte County, California, to persons claiming to have been deprived of title to such lands.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

□ 1740

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

TAOS PUEBLO INDIANS OF NEW MEXICO LAND TRANSFER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 51 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 101.

□ 1741

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 101) to transfer a parcel of land to the Taos Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, with Mr. HASTERT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN].

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 101, sponsored by Mr. RICHARDSON, which would transfer approximately 764 acres of the Wheeler Peak Wilderness, located in the Carson National Forest to the Secretary of the Interior to be held in trust for the Pueblo de Taos in New Mexico. This non-controversial legislation would settle a long standing issue over these religiously sacred lands between the Pueblo de Taos and the administration.

H.R. 101 insures that these lands will continue to be managed as part of the Blue Lake Wilderness but the Pueblo will be able to control access in order to insure privacy during certain religious ceremonies. This area is sacred to the Pueblo and a sacred trail known as the Trail of Life crosses this area.

H.R. 101 was reported favorably by the Committee on Resources on January 18, 1995, by unanimous voice vote. This same measure passed the House during the 103d Congress but failed final passage in the waning hours of business. I commend the ranking member, Mr. RICHARDSON, for his hard work on this measure and I urge the Members of the House to support his effort.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, today is an important day for the Taos Pueblo people. Today, the House will again consider legislation to transfer a sacred tract of wilderness land back to the Taos Pueblo.

The so-called bottleneck tract of the Wheeler Peak Wilderness will be transferred by this bill to management by the Taos Pueblo as the final, missing part of the Blue Lake Wilderness.

In an age when Federal policies affecting the first Americans are becoming more and more controversial, H.R. 101 is a simple, noncontroversial solution to an age-old problem on which I hope we can all agree.

My legislation will return the last remaining land tract in the Blue Lake Wilderness to its rightful owners, the Taos Pueblo Indians.

In 1970, when President Nixon signed the original Blue Lake Wilderness authorizing legislation, the "bottleneck" tract was excluded.

At that time, the acreage was needed to create the adjacent Wheeler Peak Wilderness which would have fallen below the minimum acreage requirement necessary for wilderness creation.

Now, 25 years later, this tract is no longer needed to qualify the Wheeler Peak Wilderness for designation. Now, we have the opportunity to close the last chapter in a decades-long quest by the Taos Pueblo to gain the return of one of their most sacred sites.

The bottleneck tract has been used for hundreds of years by the Taos Pueblo people as a sacred religious area for ceremonies, pilgrimages and other private observances.

Unfortunately, as the area has not been included in the Blue Lake Wilderness, the Pueblo has been powerless to prevent public intrusions in the area during their sacred rituals.

With the transfer of the land to management as wilderness by the Pueblo, the bottleneck lands would be used for traditional purposes only, such as religious ceremonies, hunting, fishing, and as a source of water, forage for domestic livestock, wood, timber and other natural resources.

H.R. 101, which is similar to legislation which passed the House in the last Congress, is supported by the bipartisan New Mexico congressional delegation and a broad coalition of local and national environmental groups.

Identical legislation has been introduced in the Senate by Senators PETE DOMENICI, JEFF BINGAMAN, and BOB DOLE.

Mr. Chairman, it is time to bring final justice to the Taos Pueblo by returning this land to their management.

It is time to close one more sad chapter in the long history of U.S. Government relations with native American peoples.

It is time to pass H.R. 101 and enact it into law.

I call upon all of my colleagues to join me in supporting this important step forward for native American sovereignty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill is considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment and is considered as read.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 101

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LAND TRANSFER.

(a) TRANSFER.—The parcel of land described in subsection (b) is hereby transferred without consideration to the Secretary of the Interior to be held in trust for the Pueblo de Taos. Such parcel shall be a part of the Pueblo de Taos Reservation and shall be managed in accordance with section 4 of the Act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 108) (as amended, including as amended by Public Law 91-550 (84 Stat. 1437)).

(b) LAND DESCRIPTION.—The parcel of land referred to in subsection (a) is the land that is generally depicted on the map entitled "Lands transferred to the Pueblo of Taos—proposed" and dated September 1994, comprises 764.33 acres, and is situated within sections 25, 26, 35, and 36, Township 27 North, Range 14 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian, within the Wheeler Peak Wilderness, Carson National Forest, Taos County, New Mexico.

(c) CONFORMING BOUNDARY ADJUSTMENTS.—The boundaries of the Carson National Forest and the Wheeler Peak Wilderness are hereby adjusted to reflect the transfer made by subsection (a).

(d) RESOLUTION OF OUTSTANDING CLAIMS.—The Congress finds and declares that, as a result of the enactment of the Act, the Taos Pueblo has no unresolved equitable or legal claims against the United States on the lands to be held in trust and to become part of the Pueblo de Taos Reservation under this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to the bill?

Hearing none, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. UPTON) having assumed the chair, Mr. HASTERT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 101) to transfer a parcel of land to the Taos Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who wish to do so may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 101.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR CERTAIN COMMITTEES TO SIT TOMORROW, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1995 DURING 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following committees and their subcommittees be permitted to sit tomorrow while the House is meeting in the Committee of the Whole House under the 5-minute rule.

Economic and Educational Opportunities; Transportation and Infrastructure; Judiciary; Resources; Commerce; and International Relations.

It is my understanding that the minority has been consulted and that there is no objection to these requests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

□ 1750

Mr. RICHARDSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. The minority has been consulted, and we have no objection.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO VISITORS CENTER

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration in the House of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 50) to designate the visitors center at the Channel Islands National Park, CA, as the "Robert J. Lagomarsino Visitors Center."

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. GALLEGLY].

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of House Joint Resolution 50, which will rename the visitor center at the Channel Islands National Park in California after my good friend and former colleague, Bob Lagomarsino.

When I was first elected to Congress in 1986, it was my privilege to represent the district just adjacent to Bob's. My experience in politics was limited to the Simi Valley City Council at that time, and Bob gave graciously of his time and counsel as I learned the ropes here in Washington.

Those who served with him will remember Bob as an insightful legislator and one of our hardest working Members. Although he has retired to his home in California, Bob continues to produce a quarterly newsletter and many of his friends and former colleagues continue to benefit from his valued advice.

During his long and distinguished career in public service—as a councilman, a mayor, State senator, and Congressman—Bob Lagomarsino paid particular attention to preserving our natural resources. In his role as ranking Republican on the National Parks Subcommittee, he provided leadership that was guided by a strong ethic of stewardship.

In his 19 years in Congress, Bob Lagomarsino stood for a lot of things, but probably no single issue was closer to his heart than the protection of the string of islands located just to the west of his district—the Channel Islands.

Bob earned the title, "Father of the Channel Islands National Park," by persuading his colleagues to designate the islands as a national park in 1980.

In light of this achievement, and his long record of service to his constituents and in this very Chamber, I feel it is appropriate that we honor him by giving this facility its rightful name—"The Robert J. Lagomarsino Visitor Center."

As a nearly lifelong resident of Ventura County, I am in a unique position to appreciate the wisdom of Bob's desire to preserve the islands and create this park.

The isolation of these islands and their unique geography have created an incredibly diverse natural environment. More than 800 species of plants and animals—including dozens of species of marine mammals—are found in the park, making this national treasure one of our most important ecosystems.

Without Bob Lagomarsino's leadership, it is doubtful that the Channel Islands would be a national park today.

This is a noncontroversial bill, which the Congressional Budget Office has found will have no budgetary impact.

On January 18, it was reported by the House Committee on Resources by a voice vote.

Some of you may remember that in the 103d Congress, full Committee Chairman GEORGE MILLER and Parks Subcommittee Chairman BRUCE VENTO supported this proposal and agreed to move it forward. Although the legislation was passed by the House, it did not make it through the other body before the end of the year.

I would like to thank the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HANSEN] for acting so promptly this year to move this legislation through the House Committee on Resources. I urge my colleagues to give this bill unanimous support in recognition of Bob's outstanding record of environmental conservation.

I would like to note that my colleague from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, has introduced a similar bill in the other body and I look forward to quick passage there.

Hopefully, our moving the bill forward early in the 104th Congress will allow this legislation to be enacted quickly and give Bob the recognition he deserves.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Resources.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] for yielding, and this one is for Bob. They have one for the Gipper, but this one is for Bob.

Bob Lagomarsino, as the gentleman just mentioned, led this effort to establish the Channel Islands. I cannot think of a better tribute to a person who worked so hard, and so I wanted to thank those Members who lead this charge with him, and I want to thank them for working to bring this legislation to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] for yielding, and I want to credit the gentleman from California [Mr. GALLEGLY] and others that have advanced this important recognition of a former colleague and, I might say, one that not only that we do hold in high esteem and great affection, but someone that has made contributions to the natural resources and to the National Park System of this Nation.

Of course most dear, I am sure, to Congressman Lagomarsino has been the designation of the Channel Islands, the wonderful resource that they represent to the people of this Nation. There are other spots in his area: The Sespe River, the Condor Wilderness, which he worked so diligently on, and many other things that passed even as he left, such as the in-lieu bill that passed in the last session, while he was not here. It was carried through, and basically I think from Alaska lands to many other issues Congressman Lagomarsino worked with many Members in a bipartisan basis, with Phil Burton, with my predecessor, John Seiberling, and myself, and through it all I think there was a common value, a common concern, in terms of leaving a legacy for the American people.

I want to thank Bob Lagomarsino. I want to obviously rise in support of this and ask my colleagues to support it. He earned it, and I certainly am pleased that this is up on the floor today, and I thank my colleague, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] for yielding.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I certainly do thank the gentleman, and I just want to rise and say how much I remember and deeply respect Bob Lagomarsino.

As my colleagues know, I served on the Committee on Foreign Affairs with Bob for many, many years all during the 1980's, and if there is any one Member of this Congress that is more responsible for helping Ronald Reagan put an end to the deadly atheistic spread of international communism throughout this world, it was Bob Lagomarsino. But one other thing we should make note of, and that is the fact for many years Bob Lagomarsino served on the task force and later as the chairman of that task force for Vietnam veterans missing in action in Southeast Asia, and Bob, more than anything else, traveled to Vietnam with me and others and did more to try to bring home the remains to try to resolve this terrible problem than anyone I know. So, we really respect the gentleman bringing this bill before us.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from American Samoa [Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA].

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of Joint Resolution 50, to designate the visitors center at the Channel Islands National Park in California as the "Robert J. Lagomarsino Visitors Center."

Mr. Speaker, I have known former Congressman Robert Lagomarsino for nearly 20 years and have tremendous respect for the gentleman. I first met him when I was on the staff of the late Congressman Phil Burton of California in the 1970's. Congressman Burton and Congressman Lagomarsino taught me from the start how important and valuable a bipartisan approach to our resolving the Nation's problems here in Washington. These two gentleman have done much in Congress to help the U.S. territories. Together they helped bring in U.S. insular areas from neocolonialism to greater measurement of self-governance. Most of these territorial governments have made impressive progress toward financial self-sufficiency.

Another important principle the late Congressman Burton taught me was that the most important thing a Member of Congress has in this House is his word. When you make a commitment, you'd better keep it, or you won't be given the same amount of trust again. Congressman Lagomarsino was a true practitioner of this guiding principle and I knew I could always count on his support once he made a commitment.

Mr. Speaker, about 1 year after I was first elected to this House, a hurricane with 160-mile-per-hour winds struck my congressional district causing extensive damage. The only transportation between the outer islands and the main island of my district consisted of single-engine, passenger airplanes. These planes were unable to transport construction materials which were needed in the outer islands to rebuild after the hurricane.

Senator DANIEL INOUE from the State of Hawaii was kind enough to provide $750,000 in that year's defense appropriation bill to refurbish a vessel obtained from another Federal agency. When the bill returned to the House, the money for this vessel was under partisan attack and I wasn't sure whether the funding would survive. The President did not support the bill. The Secretary of the Interior did not support, and even our own governor did not support the measure.

As part of his duties on the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs, Congressman Lagomarsino had been to American Samoa and knew, first-hand, how important surface transportation was to these outer islands. Much to my surprise, Congressman Lagomarsino came to the floor, broke the partisan attack, and spoke in support of funding for the vessel. I still believe that without his support, and the assistance of former Congressman John Rhodes of Arizona, my district would have lost that important funding. I have never forgotten the crucial support Congressman Lagomarsino provided that day, and I never will.

Mr. Speaker, another issue I worked on with Congressman Lagomarsino concerned stoppage of the rapacious practice of drift net fishing in the South Pacific. I spent my first 4 years in this House serving on the Foreign Affairs Committee with Bob Lagomarsino, and his statesmanlike service on that committee deserves special commendation.

Drift nets are commonly referred to as the walls of death. They are must that—invisible fishing nets up to 30-miles long, stretching the distance from Washington to Baltimore, that indiscriminately kill everything in the sea that is unfortunate enough to swim into its path. Some fishing companies prefer to use this method of fishing because it is very efficient.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the nets ensnare any and all fish, dolphins, porpoises, and even whales which cannot pass through the small mesh. For air-breathing mammals, such as dolphins and whales, it is slow death by drowning.

To make this form of fishing even worse, many of the fish, and all of the mammals, were not considered desirable by the owners of the nets and their carcasses were simply cast overboard as trash. The worst part, Mr. Speaker, is when these drift nets are lost on the open seas by fishermen, not an uncommon occurrence, continue to drift the ocean for months, killing untold amounts of sealife.

Despite pressure from certain segments of the international community and the domestic fishing industry, Congressman Lagomarsino supported my legislation to ban this practice from the South Pacific, and led the bipartisan charge from his side of the Foreign Affairs Committee. We were successful in that endeavor and I cannot thank Bob Lagomarsino enough for his leadership.

Mr. Speaker, although I am not from California, I know Congressman Lagomarsino has played a key role in protecting the environmental interests of that great State, the United States of America, and the global community. Congressman Lagomarsino's efforts have directly contributed to the creation of the Channel Islands National Park, and I can think of nothing more fitting than naming the visitor's center at this national park in honor of this great American.

Mr. Speaker, in all candor and with sincerity, and on behalf of the people of American Samoa, I want to thank Chairman DON YOUNG, Chairman JIM HANSEN, our ranking Democratic members GEORGE MILLER and BILL RICHARDSON for their support of this legislation, and especially the chief sponsor of the bill, the distinguished chairman of the House Subcommittee on Native Americans and Insular Affairs, Congressman ELTON GALLEGLEY of California.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate my colleague, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] allowing me a little time to rise with the many friends of Bob Lagomarsino and just express a few thoughts about the fantastic years of service I have experienced with Bob as well as his bride, Norma Lagomarsino. It was my privilege to work with Bob when he was a member of the State senate. The first time one ever met Bob in public affairs, it was hard not to realize he is a guy who recognized that public affairs is not driven by pure partisanship in most issues. He realized that working together we can solve all kinds of problems, and he came to Washington with that commitment. It does not surprise me to see this overwhelming kind of groundswell of bipartisan recognition of his great service here.

Bob Lagomarsino was a Californian first and foremost. He focused on California issues through his public service. His leadership in the environmental community is well known by all those who pay attention to the problems and challenges that we face there.

He was also, however, a great leader in the field of foreign affairs. Bob is a man who recognized that America should be united when we leave our waterfront, and his leadership and voice, recognizing the importance of bipartisanship in that field, was most important.

Bob Lagomarsino is exactly the kind of American we need in the Halls of Congress. It is my privilege to rise among his former colleagues today to express my well wishes to him and Norma as they go forward in continuing public service.

I thank my colleague, the gentleman from California, ELTON GALLEGLEY, for this effort and am pleased to join him in support of this legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, I am indeed happy to join my colleagues in this very well deserved tribute to our former colleague, Bob Lagomarsino. As has been mentioned before, not only in the Committee on Interior, working with insular territories, and in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that is the area that I worked very closely with him in our relationship with Mexico and many of the countries in Latin America, and his contribution was indeed a major contribution to the betterment of this country and our relations with them.

He was a man of various and sundry areas of knowledge and expertise, and I think that this visitors center will really reflect what he has done, not only in the area of conservation of resources, but certainly in foreign affairs, and I am very happy to join my colleagues in this very well-deserved tribute to our former colleague.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. SEASTRAND], who now occupies Mr. Lagomarsino's seat.

Mrs. SEASTRAND. Mr. Speaker, I have the distinct privilege to support House Joint Resolution 50 concerning the Robert J. Lagomarsino Visitors Center while my district is the home of several dedicated public servants, including former President of the United States, Ronald Reagan, I also have the honor of representing much of the same area of another distinguished public servant, former Congressman Robert J. Lagomarsino. Bob Lagomarsino served the central coast, the State of California, and our Nation with distinction.

In Washington, Bob fought for serious congressional reforms. As a student of foreign affairs, he knew the importance of America's place on the world stage. However, he also understood the importance of the district he represented and its valuable resources. As a result, he successfully urged support for the Channel Islands National Park in Ventura County, CA.

To understand the importance of this effort, one has to appreciate the central coast of California and our history. It was just a quarter century ago, when the pristine, uncontaminated shores of Santa Barbara were spoiled with an oil slick, caused by an underwater oil well in the ocean, that covered our beaches and polluted our waters.

As a result of Bob Lagomarsino's work, we can now view the central coast from the deep woods in the Los Padres National Forest to the mountain ranges that run down to our stunning coast with a sense of relief that the beauty surrounding the cliffs of the Santa Barbara coast with its sandy beaches, can no longer be harmed.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in wholehearted support of the Robert J. Lagomarsino Visitors' Center designation and urge my colleagues to join me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, let me just conclude, since everything has been said about Bob Lagomarsino, I had the pleasure of serving with him also. He was a man of class, decency, an environmentalist, statesman with his role in foreign policy, a man of great integrity.

We miss him in this body, and this could be no better tribute.

Mr. Speaker, I want to once again commend my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. GALLEGLEY], who I know probably had the strongest friendship of anyone with Mr. Lagomarsino.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. GALLEGLEY].

Mr. GALLEGLEY. I want to join all of my colleagues who joined today in recognizing Bob Lagomarsino.

Particularly I want to thank you, BILL. If we felt about so many more issues in this body on a bipartisan way the way we feel about Bob, we could get a lot more done around here.

I thank you very kindly for yielding, and urge the support of all of our Members on this issue.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 50, to designate the visitors center at the Channel Islands National Park after our former colleague, Robert J. Lagomarsino. An original cosponsor of the resolution, and a cosponsor of similar legislation in the 103d Congress, I commend my colleague from California, Mr. GALLEGLY, for his efforts.

This is a fitting way to honor Bob Lagomarsino. During his nine terms in the House, Bob worked tirelessly for the preservation of California's natural resources. Perhaps the centerpiece of this mission was his successful effort to establish the Channel Islands National Park in 1980. Bob Lagomarsino is a Republican in the finest tradition of Teddy Roosevelt, recognizing the importance of preserving our environment and working to include unique areas in the National Park System. Bob had a major influence on landmark environmental legislation including the Alaska Wilderness Act, the Strip Mine Control Act, and the Land and Water Conservation Act.

On a personal level, I miss Bob's presence in the House. He was a thoughtful, productive, and diligent representative for the people of his district and the State of California. Bob Lagomarsino was one of those nuts-and-bolts legislators who would take up the less publicized but still important causes. His efforts on working to improve the status of the territories, for example, got him little attention in the media or from his constituents. But, typically for Bob, he devoted countless hours to this issue. He worked in a bipartisan manner, never compromising his principles, but never grandstanding either.

We also remember Bob Lagomarsino's years of dedicated service in the foreign policy arena. Bob took a passionate interest in fighting the spread of communism and played a key role in making the Reagan doctrine a reality. His efforts in Central America, for example, put America on the side of freedom. At a time when it wasn't fashionable to talk about spreading democracy and liberty around the world, Bob Lagomarsino never shrunk from his belief in this country and what it represents.

Bob Lagomarsino's efforts to protect the Channel Islands before his service in the House of Representatives. While serving in the California Senate, Bob Lagomarsino introduced and passed legislation to make the Channel Islands off limits to oil drilling. When he arrived in Washington in 1974, he introduced legislation to establish the Channel Islands National Park. After years of effort, Congress passed Bob Lagomarsino's bill in 1980.

Even after the establishment of the national park, Bob's commitment to protecting the Channel Islands and the fragile California coast continued. He worked for a number of years to secure funding for the park. He expended great effort to convince major oil companies to end shipments of oil through the channel. He worked with the International Maritime Organization to have the Channel Islands designated as an "area to be avoided" by international shippers. He persuaded President Bush to withdraw leases for offshore oil in the channel. He authored an amendment to bring offshore oil operations under State and Federal clean air standards.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has benefited greatly from the public service of Bob Lagomarsino. It is most appropriate that we honor that service with this resolution. Were it not for Bob's persistence and dedication, there would be no Channel Islands National Park. I think it is fitting and proper that Americans visiting this treasured part of California appreciate something of the man who made this park possible.

Again, I salute ELTON GALLEGLY for his work over the last few years on this legislation. I urge its adoption by the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection, and urge passage of the joint resolution.

□ 1810

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THINK HARD ABOUT MFN FOR CHINA

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today's New York Times points out that the State Department released its 1995 report on human rights, and human rights has fallen behind in China.

We ought to be careful when we consider MFN later on this year, because there is slave labor in China making goods. In fact, I will bet there are members of Congress that are wearing clothing made by slave labor in China.

There is organ sales; for $30,000 you can get a slave labor person shot, and they will donate their kidney for you.

There is persecution of Christians whereby they are going in house churches. It goes on and on.

Lastly, members concerned about the economy, the trade imbalance with China is now $30 billion. When Tiananmen Square came, it was $6 billion, and now it is $30 billion.

I strongly urge every Member to get today's New York Times and read it, especially before we vote on MFN, because we should never give MFN to a nation that is persecuting its own people and destroying the Christian Church and plundering Tibet.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the State Department released its 1995 Report on Human Rights which said what human rights observers have been saying for the past 7 months, that the human rights situation in China has deteriorated since President Clinton renewed China's most-favored-nation status last May.

The report, as quoted in today's New York Times says,

In 1994, there continued to be widespread and well-documented human rights abuses in China, in violation of internationally accepted norms, stemming both from the authorities' intolerance of dissent and the inadequacy of legal safeguards for freedom of speech, association and religion.

Even Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Winston Lord was forced to admit the same thing several weeks ago in light of all the harsh realities.

The Times article summarizes the report as follows:

The report criticizes the Chinese Government for detention of perhaps thousands of "prisoners of conscience;" an inadequate accounting of those who are missing or detained after the 1989 pro-democracy demonstrations; and crackdown of journalists; the routine arrest of dissidents during foreign visits and requiring prisoners to work in labor camps.

The report notes that forced abortion and sterilization occurs, and accuses the Chinese Government of forcing prisoners to donate their organs for transplants. It also acknowledges the horrendous repression of dissent occurring in Tibet the tiny Himalayan country occupied by the Chinese for over three decades.

That is not all that has deteriorated. In 1989, the year of the Tiananmen Square tragedy, the United States trade deficit with China was $6 billion; now the trade deficit has exploded to $30 billion. That's a 500-percent increase. And what is worse is that American workers are forced to compete with products manufactured with slave labor.

On all fronts, our engagement policy with China is not working. It is not improving human rights and it is not improving the trade deficit. This year I hope the Congress will think long and hard about changing it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GENE GREEN, is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today the Committee on Economic and Educational Opportunities held a hearing on the Contract With America, which deals with our nutrition programs. And a representative of the American School Food Service Association testified that if the Personal Responsibility Act were enacted as currently written, 40,000 out of the 93,000 school districts in the United States would stop serving school meals. That is breakfast and lunches for early—for children who get to school earlier. This, as we recall, was a bill that passed in 1946, in recognizing that children needed to have a lunch program and a breakfast program to make them ready for school.

During World War II we found a lot of our children were not up to the nutrition standards that we needed. So that is why 1946, this program started. The reasoning behind the dramatic elimination of those school meals programs is cost. And yet we are literally cutting off our nose to spite our face.

During this hearing today, "the local perspective," five of the six witnesses presented were community nutrition providers. A recent study by the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated that this bill, if we pass it, would cost the state of Texas $15.1 billion in 1996 alone, representing a 30-percent cut in funding. Of all the States in the Nation, the State of Texas would be the one that would be cut the most. And the reason is, and I have an objective summary of that report that shows that that 1.1 billion would be cut because the State of Texas utilizes more food stamps than most other States. And yet in California, that would benefit to the tune of about $600 million under this proposal, $650 million to be exact, would benefit because they have a higher payment. They actually have less food stamp participation and yet they pay $593 per month on the average in food stamp households in AFDC, whereas in the State of Texas we only pay $174. So we are actually hurting the poorest of the poor by taking away that billion dollars from the poor in the State of Texas.

The formula punishes those States which depend on food stamps the most.

This not only covers nutrition sites in our schools, the breakfast program, and the lunch program. But it covers the senior program Meals on Wheels. In Harris County, we received $1.5 million in 1994. This roughly represented over a million hot meals for seniors. If we pass this bill, the cuts by the Personal Responsibility Act would mean 300,000 a year or 800 meals a day in Harris County alone would not be served.

Lowering the number of Meals on Wheels could add to the health cost of these seniors. By taking away the meals from the seniors, we would push them to more likely seek assistance in elderly care centers and thereby possibly even raising our hospital costs so more seniors would be taking advantage of Medicare.

These senior citizen centers provide more than just a hot meal at lunch. They provide also companionship. I have as many as 35 in my own district that I visit, when we can get home on Fridays and Mondays, although this first hundred days we have not had much opportunity to do that, but staff who visit these centers make sure. In our district office we offer Social Security assistance and Medicare assistance and other assistance. But those seniors who go to those centers oftentimes have no one at home and that is the only hot meal that day.

Yet if we pass this proposal in the Contract With America or Contract on American, then we are going to cut these senior citizens from these hot meals, not just in Harris County or the State of Texas but throughout the country.

Another proposal that would be cut would be the Women, Infants and Children. Again using my frame of reference, in Houston and Harris County, the city of Houston is the one that actually funds it or provides it with the funding from the Federal Government. This amount of funding would represent in Harris County, Texas $13 million cut to the local grocers in Houston who benefit from the Women, Infants and Children Program.

The WIC Program, as we call it, is not an entitlement program. The program participants not only have financial needs but also nutritional needs. This helps with early childhood development. Those children, before they become eligible for public school, we can make sure of the nutrition that they need in their early years until they do get to public school.

Health costs could increase for these children from Medicaid and also provide it for our hospital districts, for example, our public hospital systems.

In a 1969 White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health, President Nixon said of the Federal responsibility for nutrition programs, "a child ill-fed is dull in curiosity, lower in stamina and distracted from learning."

We do not need to make these cuts in our programs.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE DESERVE TO BE HEARD IN DECISIONS ON THE MEXICAN BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WAMP] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I come today as a freshman Member of this body with a burden on my heart to speak to the American people about this crisis in Mexico. I think it points out that we have a crisis in Washington, because some people are still not listening to the American electorate. I think the people out here deserve to know some of what we are privy to know here in Washington, DC, relative to the Mexican bailout and the actions, in the last few hours, of the administration.

Today I was briefed at the Republican policy meeting by our Treasury Secretary, Robert Rubin. While I have a tremendous amount of admiration and respect for Mr. Rubin, I realize that he is in a very difficult situation because he was thrown into, as our new Treasury Secretary, this unfortunate situation in Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, many people in our conference, in the Republican Conference, believed for the last 2 weeks as the administration came to us, Mr. Greenspan, Mr. Rubin, and made their case for why we needed to consider a $40 billion bailout of Mexico's peso, we believed that Congress was the only way that they could come and tap into the resources necessary to try to achieve their objectives.

We did not believe, from the questions that we asked at the meetings which we attended, that the Stabilization Fund was even possible to tap into. We continued to believe that as the administration continued to work with our leadership for the last 2 weeks, and proposals were brought before us, that they had to come through Congress where the money is appropriated in this country to get even a little part of money, let alone 40 billion dollars' worth of money. The Stabilization Fund was off limits.

Today I asked Mr. Rubin, "Mr. Rubin, exactly when and why was the Stabilization Fund decision made to tap into this fund and to use an Executive order from the President to take this $20 billion?" He gave me three answers. I think the American people need to hear them.

First of all, he said he recognized that it was preferable to come to Congress for this money. I think it is preferable. That is an understatement. It is preferable to come to Congress for a $40 billion loan package to anybody, any time.

Second, he said "Until the International Monetary Fund, the IMF, raised their commitment from $7-some-odd billion to $17.5 billion, using this fund was not an option because collectively it did not get to 40 billion dollars' worth of guarantees," which is what they needed in order to meet the problems in Mexico.

Third, Mr. Speaker, and most importantly, he said the crisis got out of hand. On Monday the crisis got out of hand and it required quick and decisive action. I tip my hat to him. Clearly this is quick and decisive action.

However, Mr. Speaker, let me make some points representing this freshman class that was just elected to the 104th Congress.

Many questions are left unanswered. Today, still no answers to these questions: How long is the term on this debt? Three years? Five years? How long?

Exactly how is it going to be repaid? Are these direct payments or are these loans? Again, today they could not give us a definitive answer.

What are the conditions that Mexico must meet in order to receive this financial commitment? Still left unanswered, yet through this Executive order, $20 billion is pulled from the Stabilization Fund.

Mr. Speaker, I have not been in Congress very long, but I was in the real estate business for a long time before I got to Congress. I can tell Members that if our Government was in the banking business—and I don't think we ought to be—if we were, we would have required a pro forma, a first mortgage, good credit history, on and on and on, none of which we got.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bad deal for the American people. I come to the floor today outraged for the American people that, first, they have overlooked the citizens of this country, who spoke loud and clear on November 8 that they are tired of the Government running off anywhere without them, that this is their House of Representatives, this is their Congress, this is their Government, this is their country.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the Congress has been circumvented in a major way, with billions and billions of dollars. I am a populist conservative freshman. I represent, I believe, the majority wishes of the Third District of Tennessee, and in fact, I believe this freshman class represents the heart of the American electorate. We are upset about this.

You know one reason they circumvented Congress? They knew they could not get this through this Congress because they ran into a wall called the freshman class of the 104th Congress, which I believe stood 80 or 90 percent against even talking about a multibillion-dollar bailout to Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, who is to say this is not going to happen again? We know that it is. It is high time, Mr. Speaker, that the American people have a voice in Washington, DC, on either end of Pennsylvania Avenue. It is time we listened to you. I am here to carry the torch for the American people.

THE PRESIDENT'S ACTION WITH REGARD TO THE MEXICAN ECONOMIC SITUATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend President Clinton's action today to help stabilize the Mexican economy by Executive order.

With the President pledging $20 billion in U.S. loan guarantees from the U.S. Exchange Stabilization Fund, a Democrat once again averts another major foreign policy crisis with no Republican help. This new plan which includes contributions from the International Monetary Fund and other international organizations will stem the plunge of the peso which dropped to its all-time-low in value to close at 6.3 to the dollar yesterday.

As a strong supporter of NAFTA and the Mexican stabilization package, I am very gratified to see today's action because small businesses and retailers in my district and across the Southwest will benefit from a sound Mexican economy. In Texas, about 262,400 workers are employed producing products ultimately destined for Mexico.

Our national security interests were also at stake. If the Mexican situation was not resolved, there were estimates that undocumented immigration could have risen by more than 30 percent—or an additional one-half million economic refugees to our country this year. International observers were also monitoring our response to the Mexican crisis with great interest. The United States credibility was at stake.

What today's action also shows is that the leadership vacuum has been filled in this new year. The President stepped up to the plate and delivered on the question of what is good for our country. The Republican majority running the Congress has failed in its first major leadership test.

Remember NAFTA? Even though a majority of Democrats and the Democratic leadership opposed it last Congress, our party brought it up for a vote. I said back then and I will say now that you either lead, follow, or get out of the way. The Republicans, with their newfound power, seem to be dithering between following or getting out of the way. They certainly are not leading.

Just a few days ago, the esteemed Speaker said that he would not bring the Mexican stabilization package to a vote because of lack of support from Democrats. My question to him is: Since when does the opposition party have to deliver the requisite number of votes for a passage on a measure?

Does not the majority party have the prerogative to lead?

Many of the President's most outspoken critics seemed to be putting their Presidential ambitions before the good of the Nation. Yet how can we explain their change of heart with regards to Mexico? After all, were not these same Presidential aspirants supporters of NAFTA 2 years ago?

Many Republicans said after the President's State of the Union Address to let them act on what was best for the country. Well, the President has acted on an important national interest matter. And to the Republicans I say: Either lead, follow, or get out of the way.

CALLING FOR INCLUSION OF NATIONAL CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT IN WELFARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call for the inclusion of a national child support enforcement program in any welfare reform proposal considered by this body.

Raising a family is no easy task. I don't think anyone here today would say differently. Parenting requires time, patience, sacrifice, love, and of course, money. And according to 1992 statistics, over 8½ million women are raising families alone.

Considering all that being a parent requires, it should come as no surprise that many of these women require assistance—assistance from friends, family, and from the Federal Government. For instance, of those 8½ million women currently raising families alone, over 3 million collect welfare. They collect welfare in order to provide their children with the food, shelter, clothing, and medical care they need to survive.

It's no secret that welfare costs the Federal Government a lot of money. As a matter of fact, it costs nearly $86 billion every year. It's also no secret that the Federal Government is looking for ways to decrease that amount.

Let's discuss the Personal Responsibility Act, the welfare reform proposal included in the Republican Contract With America. The proposal calls for all Americans to take charge of their lives and assume responsibility for themselves. Specifically, it calls for young mothers to give up their children and go to work. It calls for children to live away from their homes and their families. The bottom line is it calls for both mothers and children to get off welfare.

While this idea seems well and good, a particular and critical segment of the population is consistently absent from the picture and from the Personal Responsibility Act—the fathers. Where is it mentioned in the Personal Responsibility Act that fathers must provide for their children? Where does it say fathers need to go to work and contribute to their children's financial needs? Indeed, I see no reference to fathers in this proposal at all.

Did 8½ million women impregnate themselves? As far as I am aware, the last time a woman found herself with child without any help from the opposite sex was in the year 4 B.C.

So, if we agree that women cannot get pregnant alone, why should we insist that they alone take responsibility for the children that result. Why should the fathers be let off scot-free? The truth of the matter is, they shouldn't. And for several decades the Federal Government has helped ensure that fathers take responsibility for their children.

The child support enforcement program, established in 1975, helps millions of mothers every year identify, and collect child support from the fathers of their children. In 1993, the child support enforcement program collected $8.9 billion in child support from delinquent fathers through income withholding, income tax refund interception, property liens, and security bonds. That's $8.9 billion that didn't come from the Federal budget. And that's only the beginning.

Because tracking and collection across State lines is so difficult, $34 billion in potential child support is not collected each year. If we could establish a national program to work with State and local agencies to track and collect child support from delinquent fathers we could further take the responsibility off the Federal Government and put it where it belongs—on the parents—both parents.

Look, no government or government agency, be it Federal, State, or local can ensure that both parents provide their children with love and emotional support. No government can insist that both parents spend time with their children. However, the government, Federal, State, and local, can, by working together, ensure that both parents at the very least, fulfill their financial obligations to their children.

If we really want all Americans to take responsibility for themselves let's make sure we are talking about all Americans. Make fathers accountable. Make child support enforcement part of welfare reform.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mrs. THURMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mrs. THURMAN addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

CONCERNS REGARDING THE MEXICAN BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MENENDEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I got elected for the 13th district of New Jersey to voice on behalf of my citizens their concerns, and certainly it is on their behalf that I have taken to the well today to speak on them.

I want to state very clearly and very loudly for the record that I stand staunchly opposed to the unilateral action by the executive, in collaboration with the leadership of the House, to grant the Mexican Government an unprecedented bailout package worth billions of dollars. Not a single congressional voice nor a single American voter will be heard by virtue of the process that has taken place on this banker and speculator bailout bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is a travesty for justice. I know that some in the House were involved in negotiations, but overwhelmingly many were not, many who also represent hundreds of thousands of taxpayers in their congressional districts.

For those of us who did not support NAFTA, we spoke up about our concerns at that time, that Mexico was a developing economy, not a developed economy. We spoke up about our concerns about the value of the peso, and that in fact it was way beyond where it should be in terms of its exchange rate.

Sure enough, Mr. Speaker, after NAFTA and after the presidential elections in Mexico, we find that many of these things are coming true. So without creating the appropriate safeguards during the NAFTA debate and subsequently in its enactment, it is my belief that we created a speculative environment in which middle class investors, the mom-and-pop investors so vital to Wall Street brokers, were led to believe that investing some of their hard-earned life savings in mutual funds, in pension funds, investing in emerging Mexico was a safe bet, but billions of dollars later, we know it is not. In one week alone U.S. investors took over $12 billion out of the Mexican market.

I question, one of the things I would have liked to have seen is how much money the middle class families across the country lose in the context of the investments in a speculative market that we helped create by virtue of how we portrayed the Mexican market.

Today, Mr. Speaker, in the Committee on International Relations testimony was heard on this issue. I would like to read from one of the witnesses, John Sweeney of the Heritage Foundation, not an institution that I normally quote, but which is of great interest to me, particularly in the context that they were supporters of NAFTA and free market ideas.

He said: "This new plan is an improvised hodgepodge that will not solve the structural causes of the Mexican crisis. This new bailout plan is bad policy, and it is bad politics."

We were told, Mr. Speaker, that in fact the original $40 billion loan guaranty was meant to overwhelm Mexico's problem.

□ 1830

Yet we see that this new package has now risen to between $47 billion and $50 billion. So I am concerned if $40 billion was meant to overwhelm Mexico's problem, why did we have to go to $47 billion or nearly $50 billion?

This witness went on to say, "The Mexican crisis needs a stronger free market cure than Mexico's ruling political, corporate and labor elites are willing to accept." He went on to criticize this action.

I think his last comment that I would like to make, he said, "Bailing out Mexico will tell governments in emerging markets that bad policies based on short-term political imperatives would be forgiven, and it would send private investors the message that bad investment decisions will be bailed out at U.S. taxpayer expense."

I think that that is the wrong message to send.

It is interesting to see in today's New York Times in the business section how now investors are looking at all emerging markets and their investments in those emerging markets and beginning to question those investments. Maybe they will come back to good old T-bills and blue chip stocks here in the United States.

I think it is important in this debate to continue to raise the questions of what type of speculative environments are we creating to put middle-class taxpayers at risk, and in doing so I would hope that we would continue to speak about this issue on the House floor.

TIME TO COME CLEAN ON BAILOUT OF MEXICO

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARR. Mr. Speaker, over the last 24-hour period, we have heard a litany of reasons in support of what the Clinton administration has done in its efforts to prop up the Mexican peso.

We have heard, for example, that the United States economy will suffer irreparable harm if the Mexican economy remains as weak as it is.

We have heard that illegal immigration will explode if the United States does not prop up the Mexican peso.

We have heard intimations that Mexico and other Latin countries will be unable to help continue to control certain undesirable activities such as drug trafficking and money laundering from and through Latin America.

We have heard that delayed action is worse than no action.

We have heard that other Central American countries will soon follow Mexico unless we act in behalf of Mexico.

We have heard that an untold number of jobs here in this country will be lost and money will be lost here in this country, including from perhaps some very important pension funds, if the United States does not act and prop up the Mexican peso.

If in fact, Mr. Speaker, the consequences that would befall the world economy and the United States economy were as dire as the administration is now saying they are, one might very legitimately ask, as I do, where were they when the groundwork was being laid for this crisis through either action or inaction on the part of the Mexican Government?

Where were they when we had before the U.S. Congress Committee on Banking and Financial Services just 1 short week ago asking the 3 top officials from this administration, Secretary Christopher, Secretary Rubin, and Chairman Greenspan to justify to us specifically and explicitly why at that time the administration was telling us that unless congressional action occurred, all of these dire consequences would befall.

We asked, for example, when these gentlemen were before the Banking Committee on which I have the honor of serving, what guarantees do we have? How will we know and how can we assure the American people that Mexico will not default on the loan guarantees that this administration was asking us in Congress to provide to them through legislation?

The only thing that these witnesses could tell us was, and I remember one witness explicitly stating this, we have a team of the finest lawyers in Government and we are sure that they will draft up a document that provides us those guarantees.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that does not leave me satisfied and that does not leave my constituents satisfied. They continue to ask some very important questions that are deeply troubling to me and to my constituents in the 7th District of Georgia.

What happens with that $20 billion, and many other billions of dollars that are now going to directly prop up a foreign currency? If and when, as many of us expect, the Mexican Government fails to take the steps, the hard steps that are necessary to ensure its continued viability and to ensure the rebounding of the peso, what will in fact happen to those moneys?

What will in fact happen, Mr. Speaker, for example, if in some other part of the world with regard to some other currency, the U.S. dollar, which is the currency that I care about and that the American people care about, runs into problems and we go to the Stabilization Fund and we find that the cupboard is bare? What then do we tell our constituents?

What do we tell our constituents down the road, Mr. Speaker, when the next country comes to us and says,

Yes, we know you are having to ask your citizens to tighten their belts. We know you in America are having to make tough decisions to cut back governments and cut back guarantees in your own country. But you helped out Mexico. Now you must help us out.

These are things, Mr. Speaker, that I think the American people are legitimately asking of this administration which has yet to deliver to us in the Congress an executive order that sets out in black and white where it thinks it has the legal statutory authority to do what it did.

The questions, Mr. Speaker, far outnumber the answers that have been forthcoming. I think it is past due time for this administration to come forward, to come clean and to provide us the background information to let us know why did we get to this situation, what is truly happening, and why this action is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the time to address this very important problem for the people of this country.

LINE-ITEM VETO AND REMAINING CONTRACT WITH AMERICA ITEMS DESERVE BIPARTISAN SUPPORT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, today is a very special day, I believe, in the House of Representatives because here today we passed for the first time H.R. 5, which, in fact, will give us unfunded mandate relief. For too long our State, local and county governments have been forced to pay for the programs that Congress has foisted upon them without any input from the State, local or county governments. As a result of our actions today, counties and local governments will no longer be obligated to pay for programs we passed here in Congress. From now on, if we in Congress wish to pass a bill, we will have to pay for it at this time.

I was very happy to see, Mr. Speaker, this was a bipartisan effort. I suspect and hope that, along with the American people, that the other items in the Contract With America will have similar bipartisan support.

In reflecting on our recent weeks here in Washington in this 104th Congress, we have already seen a balanced budget amendment adopted, which will help get our fiscal House in order and help us reduce our deficit. We have also seen, as I said, the unfunded mandates bill being passed, and now the third part of the program, the line-item veto, is legislation we are about to embark upon, starting with discussions and debates tomorrow morning.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this important piece of reform legislation. In the past, Mr. Speaker, the President had no authority to remove specific items of pork-barrel legislation and now it will be possible for the President to remove waste without rejecting the entire budget package.

A line-item veto will also restore the proper balance between the President and the Congress. In the mid-1970's the Congress upset the balance when it changed the budget process and consciously undermined any President's ability to constrain the growth of Federal spending. Ever since these changes in the process occurred, Congress has been able to simply ignore the President's rescission requests.

The Republican-proposed line-item veto will force Congress to debate and vote upon the President's proposals. This will give the same kind of line-item veto most of our Nation's Governors have to remove wasteful spending which does appear in budgets.

Clearly a line-item veto alone will not solve the deficit problem overnight, but it will move us toward the fiscal responsibility this 104th Congress deserves and wants on behalf of the American people. It would enable the President to slash the pork that is in the budget, would help us to maintain the ability of Congress to disagree with the President, but the Congress would also restore spending cuts by the President if it thought the package of rescissions were inappropriate.

I believe that the line-item veto, when combined with the balanced budget amendment and now the unfunded mandates reform will go a long way in making sure that this Congress completes its Contract With America and helps us to economic recovery as every American wants.

WELFARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I support welfare reform. Reform, however, does not mean change for the sake of change. Reform means change for the sake of improvement. As we move to reform the welfare system, let us make sure that we make a better system, not just a different system. Some of our programs are working and working well. Nutrition programs have proven their worth.

This morning, the House Committee on Agriculture held its first hearing of the 104th Congress. The subject of the hearing was the Food Stamp Program. During the hearing, we heard of instances of fraud and abuse. The information received at the hearing may tempt some to call for the elimination of the Food Stamp Program. Such calls, however, would not take the good that the program does into account. The good far outweighs any problems that the program may experience.

The Food Stamp Program was instituted to confront hunger in America. Over 27 million people in the United States are served by the program—more than half of them, 51 percent—are children. Seven percent are elderly. In the State of North Carolina alone, over 627,000 people receive food stamp benefits—and over half of that total, 323,552—are children.

In 1993, North Carolina received $512 million in food stamp funding. In my district, 74,370 hungry people benefit. However, with the cuts that have been proposed in nutrition programs, it is estimated that North Carolina will lose nearly 20 percent of its food stamp funding. That loss will mean the loss or reduction in benefits for almost 44,000 North Carolinians. Additionally, it is estimated that should the Food Stamp Program be converted to block grants, approximately 3,122 jobs will be lost in North Carolina alone—this means about $33.9 million in lost wages. This is just in my home State of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, that is but one legacy of the balanced budget amendment and the contract on America. The people have a right to know. Unless we act to prevent it, there will be drastic cuts in funds for school meals and WIC as well.

This Nation is great, not because of its military might, although it is important to be strong militarily. We are great, not because of our success in diplomacy, although it is important to move effectively in the world arena. What makes us a great nation however, is the compassion we show for those who live in the shadows of life—the young, the old, the poor, and the disabled.

When history and the voters judge us, in the end, we will not be judged by how much we mindlessly cut. We will be judged by how much we truly cared. The school meals program gives to our young people the nutrition they need, the strength that is required, to make it through the school day. Last year we fed free and reduced price breakfast to more than 5 million children nationwide. The money we spent for that program, nationwide, is now threatened.

In North Carolina, 180,000 children were fed breakfast, free or at a reduced price last year. Those children may go hungry at school next year. That could be one of the legacies of the balanced budget amendment and the contract on America. The people have a right to know, and I intend to tell them. Similarly, the National School Lunch Program which served 13½ million children last year, will likely serve far fewer next year.

In North Carolina, money from the national program was spent to serve free or reduced priced lunches to some 379,000 children. The people have a right to know that those funds may be lost. The special supplemental program for women, infants, and children [WIC] is threatened. Important Federal funds were spent last year for 6 million WIC participants. Nearly $74 million of those funds were spent in North Carolina, servicing 169,000 WIC participants from my State.

After school programs, summer programs, violence prevention programs all may be slashed for years to come under the balanced budget amendment mandate and the contract on America. The people have not been told about these cuts, and they have a right to know. We face the creation of thousands, perhaps millions, of new orphans because we are threatening to cut the cord of life from those parents, struggling to make ends meet, and their children, innocent in every respect.

Mr. Speaker, I support welfare reform and I include the remainder of my speech in the RECORD at this point, as follows:

Yes, I support welfare reform. But, in the words of Susan B. Anthony, "Cautious, careful people, always casting about to preserve social standing, can never bring about reform." These are not times to be cautious and careful about government.

Yes, we need a smaller, more effective government. But, we also need a bold and visionary government—a government that changes with the times, but remains fundamentally unchanged—an instrument for the many, not just for the few.

PESO BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I also want to talk about the bailout, the new Clinton unilateral, nonparticipation by the legislative branch bailout. And I was just speaking with my friend the gentlewoman from Ohio, MARCY KAPTUR, who has really been a leader in trade and leader on this issue, about what is happening to our country and what is happening to American workers. And I hope that there is a silver lining to the cloud of this bailout issue which hovers over Americans right now, which the President is attempting to dismiss with this use of the Exchange Stabilization Fund, if he is to bail out Mexico without requiring Congress to vote up or down.

The silver lining that I am looking for is a realization in this body, in the House of Representatives, of the fact that our blind adherence to free trade, that is leveling all borders, all tariffs between us and the rest of the world, regardless of the circumstances, regardless of whether or not they let us into their borders, regardless of the displacement of American workers, relying on the blind adherence on the Republican side and the Democrat side in some cases.

Let us talk a little bit about the peso bailout and some of the conservative Republicans who recently have testified in our forums.

Bill Seidman is a conservative Republican renowned economic leader, former chairman of the FSLIC, a guy who knows bailouts, and he made a couple of good points in his speech to our forum when he said, "Do not bail out Mexico."

First, he does believe in the free market and he could not understand why people who believe in a free market and who believed in NAFTA would not believe that somehow the politics and the economics of subsidies to Mexico now make sense.

He pointed out that Mexico has gone through in the last 10 or 20 years a number of devaluations, and they have not had these disastrous apocalyptic effects that all of the deep breathers tell us are going to happen now if we do not bail out Mexico with a $40-billion-plus package. Here is Bill Seidman, a renowned conservative economic expert relied on by this Nation in very difficult times saying we do not have to do it, let the market adjust it. He made a great statement. He said this issue should be resolved between Mexico and her creditors, let us resolve this between creditor and debtor.

Let us stay out of this as the United States of America. In listening to witness after witness on the Democrat side and the Republican side across the political spectrum coming up and testifying against the bailout, it occurred to me that this has revealed another aspect of national policy that should be looked at very closely.

If this is free trade, this is the result of free trade where a tiny nation economically like Mexico, which has approximately the economy the size of New Jersey's, can be in a position to pull the United States down because it has a downturn. Have our policy-makers who have outlined a free-trade policy for the United States supposedly with a deep intellectual base really been right when the effect of their policy is to handcuff the United States to Third World nations in deep water that do not know how to swim? That is what we have done.

If we have lost our independence and if we now are committed to bail out every nation which becomes inextricably linked with our economic well-being through our trade policies, is that smart?

Regardless of whether or not you like the trend lines on the exports and the imports, is it right for us to give up our independence and link ourselves with these nations? Does that mean we are now going to link ourselves with Argentina, we are so linked that we now have to bail them out if they have a problem, or any of the other dozens and dozens of Third World nations which now will call on the United States to help bail them out because we have a substantial trade relationship?

Now, let me just conclude by giving one "I told you so" and "Let's look at this thing in the future," to all of my colleagues, my good friends, who supported NAFTA. The claim by the pro-NAFTA advocates on this floor was that Mexican workers were going to achieve a larger standard of living, go above that $1,900 per capita per year income, and they were going to get up there to the point where they were making enough money to buy large amounts of American consumer goods and increase our exports. This devaluation has decreased the capability to buy by about 30 percent. This proves that NAFTA was wrong.

OIL AS COLLATERAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the previous speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER], who has been so much a part of our efforts to really open up international trade and explain the consequences to people in this country and abroad.

I rise tonight with a rather heavy heart because of the action of the Clinton administration. Our Government is not a monarchy. We are a nation of laws and of balance of powers between this legislative branch, which is the first branch that the Constitution mentions, and the action, in my opinion, by the Clinton administration in extending over $47 billion worth of credit from the taxpayers of this country is outside the constitutional boundaries of the executive branch.

Now, Wall Street today and their irresponsible money men are cheering, because they essentially have been bailed out along with their 24 billionaire friends in Mexico with this gift package from the taxpayers of the United States of America with no vote by Members of this Congress. Wall Street investors have every reason to be happy. They got their money back from you, the taxpayers, but the American people should know that they are at risk, because this deal is backed up by worthless paper certificates of oil serving as collateral.

Now, why do I say this? Does not oil have value? Under normal circumstances, it would. But the Mexican Government has long used its oil over and over, the same oil again, as collateral for debts they already owe.

Did you know that Mexico has already pledged its oil in the European bond market, the Euro-bond market, for upwards of $10 billion? The fact is Mexican oil no longer has any value for use as collateral on new debt, because it is pledged to old debt, and Mexico owes anywhere between, on the public debt it owes, between $160 billion and $200 billion.

It would be almost better for Mexico to pledge jumping beans rather than to repledge their oil again.

In the RECORD tonight I have taken out of Moody's Manual a list of where Mexico's monopoly-owned, state-owned oil company, Pemex, has already pledged the assets of their oil company.

Suffice it to say, all the administration accomplished by conditioning new loans, these $47 billion worth of loans from our taxpayers, on Mexican oil was to put our taxpayers at the end of a very long line of creditors to that oil. Even adding up all the assets and production of Pemex, Mexico does not have enough oil revenue to cover the $47.5 billion worth of new loans.

In fact, the Houston Chronicle reports that Mexico will become a net oil importer by the turn of the century, because it is essentially producing half of the oil it produced a decade ago because of problems inside that oil company.

Now, add to that what Mexico's own officials have said. The Mexican Secretary of the Treasury said, "Our oil resources are not going to be used for guarantees." Well, if they are not, what is backing up the risk to the taxpayers of this country?

And Mexico's Energy Minister was quoted recently, and a direct quote again, "Our oil will not be mortgaged nor will it form any part of any loan guarantee."

Now, maybe the United States Ambassador to Mexico cannot read Spanish, but it is all there in the Mexican newspapers to be read by anyone.

Basically, my friends, by dodging Congress, our people have been sold a bill of goods that have no value by the administration in collaboration with the Government of Mexico. Now our administration is scrambling to make this back-door deal look as legitimate as possible, but the fact remains the so-called collateral that Mexico is putting up for the $47.5 billion in loans is worthless and, in fact, experts have estimated the entire worth of Pemex at somewhere perhaps, if we are lucky, about $24 billion.

So ask yourself when you read the fine print and they say they are going to book sales of oil on the Federal Reserve of New York's books, who is cooking the books? We are not getting barrels of oil. We are getting pledges of collateral that has already been overpledged.

And if you really want to get cynical, and I will end with this statement, is it not interesting that this is not the first time this has happened? But in fact it happened right after the Presidential election of 1988, during that period when they were trying to prop up the value of the Mexican peso. It happened in 1982, and now they devalued the peso right after the Mexican election in 1994.

Let the record speak for itself.

COST-EFFECTIVENESS IN WELFARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 1995, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, over $5 billion in child support goes uncollected every year. This is a national disgrace that is punishing our children and bankrupting our welfare system.

Tonight I am pleased to be joined by many of my Democratic colleagues to call attention to this tragedy and to call on the 104th Congress to make child support collection a top priority as we work to reform the welfare system. Democrats have long recognized that holding both parents responsible for their children is the most cost-effective way to reduce the welfare rolls.

Why then, we ask, is there no mention of child support in the Republican's welfare reform bill? Why then did it take so much prodding to get the Republican leadership to even schedule a hearing on child support collection? Do they not know that getting family child support is one of the best ways to get them off welfare?

Mr. Speaker, I have known for over 25 years just how important child support is in preventing the need for welfare, because in 1968 I was a single working mother with three small children, ages 1, 3, and 5. Although I had a court order, I never received a penny in child support. In order to provide my children with the health care and child care they needed, I was forced to go on welfare to supplement my wages.

Today, Mr. Speaker, millions of families are forced to go on welfare for the same reason. In fact, 91 percent of first-time welfare recipients cite lack of financial support from a parent as the main reason they are on welfare.

Currently, The Federal Government pays over $1 billion a year to help almost 1,500 State and local agencies collect child support. This piecemeal approach results in failing State collection rates, some as low as 9 percent. Even more alarming is the fact that once a parent who owes support crosses State lines, as approximately one-third of them do, it becomes all but impossible to enforce collection.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, less than $1 for every $10 owed in interstate child support is collected. When it comes to fixing our child support system, however, the Republican leadership seems content on sticking with the status quo, which means the taxpayers get stuck once again with a billion dollar bill for a system that barely works.

Democrats know that our families can no longer afford business as usual. We know that the failure to collect child support is not a State-by-State problem; it is a national crisis demanding a national solution.

It is time to revolutionize child support; it is time to revolutionize child support payment collection in order to make sure all of our children receive the support they need and deserve. That means strengthening paternity establishment laws, that means tough new penalties for parents who refuse to pay support, that means establishing a national registry of child support orders so we can track parents across State lines, and that means taking a serious look at proposals to increase interstate collection, including legislation to federalize the child support system.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Republican leadership's late arrival to the child support reform debate. Child support collection after all should not be an issue along party lines. Democrats, however, do not want minor changes to the system or tinkering around the edges; we want fundamental changes.

Mr. Speaker, in the United States if we had had a child support system in place like the ones Democrats have proposed, I might not have needed to go on welfare in the first place. Now we have the opportunity to make sure all families in situations like mine are not forced to go on welfare because they do not receive the support they need and deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. THURMAN].

Mrs. THURMAN. I thank the gentlewoman from California and certainly appreciate her efforts tonight in bringing a very important issue, important not only to Congress but to the debate that has been taking place in our State legislatures, has been taking place in all of the legislatures across this country. I can assure you that my district offices who generally deal with these issues on an everyday basis, this is one of the No. 1 issues we deal with in trying to help single parents find or restore back child enforcement or child support payments because of the concern that they have for their children.

If you allow me, I would like to take some time and read a statement that I have talking about what I see as some of the issues with some background and what I think we might be able to do, some things we might be able to do to help.

Mr. Speaker, the Child Support Enforcement Program as it exists today appears to be dysfunctional. Caseloads are impossibly high and Federal requirements for providing services to interested parties may be conflicting, counterproductive, and unrealistic. Portions of the program may even present the intended recipients with economic disincentives to cooperate. Meanwhile, birth and family separation statistics indicate a growing number of potential clients.

The statistics are staggering. One in four American families with children today are headed by women. In these single-parent families, the future of these children are directly linked to that of their mothers. Low standards of living are often the result of the high expense of raising children, lower salaries typically earned by women, and insufficient or nonexistent child support payments. Poor enforcement of child support orders greatly worsens the plight of these vulnerable children.

Even though there are efforts to strengthen child support enforcement, the current system has failed to ensure that children receive financial support from both parents. Repeated reports have shown that the potential for child support is approximately $48 billion per year. However, only $14 billion is actually paid.

For these reasons, a critical part of reforming the welfare system is improving this country's child support enforcement system. Improvements in the child support system will ensure that children can count on support from both parents and that the cost of public benefits can be reduced while working mothers' real income is raised.

A tough stance must be taken on nonpayment of child support. There are at least four areas that must be addressed. First, efforts to enhance noncustodial parent location and identification must be strengthened. Second, the process by which child support orders are established must be improved. Third, efforts to establish hospital-based paternity must be enforced. And fourth, child support enforcement must be made real by the passage of punitive measures for deadbeat parents.

Noncustodial parent location and identification would be enhanced by having States maintain registries of child support orders. Moreover, the functions of the parent locator in the Department of Health and Human Services should be expanded. The interstate locator should be designated to link State-to-State child support order registers into an automated central system.

Hospital-based paternity should be established by ensuring that States have simple civil consent procedures for paternity establishment available at hospitals at the time of birth.

Moreover, benefits should be made contingent on paternity establishment. At this time, there is no reciprocal obligation for welfare recipients to help the Government locate the absent parent. The burden of certain parent locator information should be shifted to the applicant of welfare benefits. Of course, certain situations are unique and need to be taken into account, as when the parent cannot be found or if the mother fears harm to herself or her child.

These measures are not meant to be punitive but just responsible. Parents who willfully and fully comply with paternity establishment requirements should not be denied benefits. Nor should they be denied benefits if the State has not met its responsibilities and obligations in assisting with paternity establishment.

Finally, uncompromising punitive measures for deadbeat dads should be fully enforced. This should be done by withholding income from deadbeat dads for child support orders. We must establish procedures so that liens can be imposed against insurance settlements, gambling and lottery winnings, and other awards. Noncompliant fathers, who are delinquent in their support payments, should be required to enter a work program in which they work to pay off benefits meant to support their children.

Mr. Speaker, studies have proven it is not the inability to pay, but rather the refusal to pay that has plunged children into the depths of poverty. Most noncustodial parents are able-bodied and can contribute to the financial support of their children. Simply put, they do not pay because they know they can get away without paying. I offer my ideas as a tough yet fair approach in dealing with a problem that is keeping billions of dollars from children in our country.

I say again to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY] that we appreciate her bringing this to our attention, and I think all the ideas that will be discussed will open up a debate that is necessary.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I thank the gentlewoman for her contribution, and I yield to the gentlewoman from Missouri [Ms. MCCARTHY].

Ms. MCCARTHY. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise as a member of the Welfare Reform Task Force to discuss the serious problem of child support enforcement in this country and to note the absence of meaningful child support enforcement provisions in the Personal Responsibility Act.

Mr. Speaker, every child has two parents. Raising a child is the obligation of both these parents. Unfortunately, in my own State of Missouri many parents are not meeting their financial obligations. According to Missouri's Division of Child Support Enforcement, $963 million is owed by noncustodial parents to over 500,000 children.

Because of these shocking figures, last year our State enacted reform legislation that stiffened compliance procedures for child support payments. I was proud to be a part the effort in Missouri to see these much-needed reforms enacted. It is my hope that many of these programs, such as the Parents Fair Share Program and the Savings Connection Program can be duplicated at the Federal level.

What is important to remember is that the failure of parents to make child support payments places children at risk. When child support payments are irregular or missed, the incidence of child poverty increases significantly. According to the Association for Children for Enforcement of Support, 50 percent of all white children growing up in a single parent household who do not receive support live at or below the poverty line, and 70 percent of all African American children growing up in a single parent family live at or below poverty level.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we at the Federal level have to take stronger action to ensure that parents meet their financial obligations to their children. While I am encouraged that the Family Reinforcement Act adds some provisions to strengthen child support orders, I do believe that stronger provisions need to be added during consideration of the bill. In fact, I believe attention should be given to the provisions in the bill introduced by the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], which I am cosponsoring, which would deny Federal benefits to individuals owing child support and withhold business and drivers licenses from individuals owing child support. In addition, I will offer consideration of the State reform provisions enacted in Missouri and other States.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a partisan issue. I believe there is broad agreement that more needs to be done to ensure that child support payments are made. While we cannot force parents to spend time with their children, we certainly can place strict enforcement requirements on those mothers and fathers who abandon their children and fail to meet their financial obligations.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to work hard with the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY] and others to achieve bipartisan support to enact strong child support enforcement legislation this session.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY].

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California [Ms. Woolsey] for organizing this special order and for her hard work on the welfare reform task force of the Democratic Party and the Child Enforcement Act along with the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that raising a child is the responsibility of both parents, so it is a national disgrace that we collect only 18 percent of all child support cases. Everyone knows that establishing paternity will increase accountability. So it is unacceptable that we identify only 18 percent of the AFDC children without a legal father. Everyone knows that increasing child support collection is very doable, so it is simply wrong that we collect only $14 billion out of a potential $48 billion every year. That is a $34 billion gap that could be collected and be part of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, enforcing comprehensive child support should be high priority of Congress. We can and should expand the penalties for child support delinquency. We can and should simplify the procedures for establishing paternity. We can and should set up a national registry of child support orders. We can and should institute more performance-based incentives.

However, Mr. Speaker, I have looked, and I cannot find these provisions in the Contract With America.

Mr. Speaker, any welfare reform should also have reforms for child support enforcement. Improving the current child support systems is not only cost effective, but it will also enable many families to avoid welfare. Penalties such as denying professional, recreational, and drivers licenses to a delinquent deadbeat parent will cut down on teenage pregnancies and help increase enforcement. Penalties such as enforcing liens on real property and reporting delinquency to credit bureaus will send a strong message about responsibility. When these penalties are adequately enforced, a deadbeat parent will think twice about avoiding payments.

Those who are hurt most by deadbeat dads are our children. They are our most vulnerable citizens. They cannot vote, cannot speak for themselves, cannot spend millions of dollars lobbying Congress, yet one in every five children is poor. Even worse, one out of every two children in female-headed households are poor. These children need child support payments to literally put food into their mouths, yet time after time these same children receive little or no support from their deadbeat parent. This financial abandonment creates untold hardships for our children and for the American public.

Child poverty has been linked to higher education and medical costs and to increased crime rates. According to the Children's Defense Fund, child poverty costs this Nation between $36 billion and $177 billion in reduced future worker productivity and employment. The deadbeat parent who has not paid their child support has not only neglected their legal responsibility to their child, but has also neglected their responsibility to their country.

We all know that the present child support system is in shambles. For many single parent families child support payments are irregular, late, missed, and often not paid at all. Those who do receive payments find them wholly inadequate. The average child support payment for a poor woman is only $5 per day. That is not even enough for a family meal at McDonald's. No wonder so many children are living in poverty.

Every day single parents struggle to provide needed food, clothing, shelter, and health care. Why should children be punished for the sins of their deadbeat parent? Why should the American public foot the bill for the irresponsible parent?

Already 17.6 million children live in single-parent homes. As more and more children live in single-parent homes, the need for stronger child support enforcement will only get worse.

Child support programs more than pay for themselves. For every $1 spent, $4 more are collected.

Child support instills responsibility. Child support prevents welfare. Child support raises children from poverty. Mr. Speaker, what are we waiting for? Let us address this issue now. Our country and our children deserve nothing less, and again I ask you to include this in the welfare reform package.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY] for her hard work and leadership on welfare reform and child support enforcement in particular.

Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that a child deserves the emotional support of both parents. Today, with close to 6 million children living in poverty, it is clear that children are in desperate need of financial support from both parents. The discussion on children in single-parent families has been primarily focused on welfare reform, specifically Aid to Families with Dependent Children. However, the issue of child support enforcement has curiously been absent in most of the discussion on family preservation and family support.

It has been reported that there is over $34 billion in uncollected child support payments. In fact, child support orders are established in only about half of children—for half of children who should receive them. And even for those who have support orders, only have receive the full payment. According to the Children's Defense Fund,

The vast majority of children served by state child support enforcement agencies not only do not have full collections made on their behalf, but fail to have any collection made at all.

An estimated $7.4 billion of uncollected child support should go to poor children. In many, many cases, it is the lack of child support that forces families to go on to welfare to begin with.

Consider this, Mr. Speaker: With a child support payment and even a minimum wage job coupled with earned income tax credit and food stamps, that together could put a family on to the path of self-sufficiency. If we address the support services such as child care, health care, and transportation through welfare reform, the family can be self-sufficient. This has all the components of a plan that accomplishes the goal of lifting families out of poverty: work and responsibility.

In my State of Virginia, Mr. Speaker, we have implemented a strategy to aggressively go after noncustodial parents who choose to ignore their financial responsibility to their children. We have created a system to increase paternity establishment including providing in-hospital paternity acknowledgment, and we have decided that establishment of support orders will be a priority. Virginia is now considered a national model for this system of paternity establishment, and we have collected over $230 million in child support, including $40 million which was collected on behalf of children in AFDC families.

Much of the uncollected support involved out-of-State parents, so the need for a national cooperation is obvious.

For some families, the receipt of a steady support payment is enough to lift children out of poverty or prevent them from needing AFDC benefits. A new initiative called: A child support assurance system accomplishes this task. Child support assurance guarantees a fixed amount of child support for each child as long as a child support order is in place.

Whatever the noncustodial parents pays goes toward that guarantee, so if the parent pays all of what is owed, there is only a little administrative expense. If only part is paid, the cost of the guarantee is probably less than AFDC would have been anyway.

Child support assurance removes the work disincentives that we so often hear about from welfare recipients. In a child support assurance system, the family receives the entire guarantee and does not have to worry about a reduction in their take home pay if they work. For example with a $250 guarantee, if you stay at home you receive $250. But if you work part time, make $300 a month you still get the entire $250 plus your earnings. If you work full time, you still get the entire $250 and get to keep your earnings. In fact, when you add in the earned income tax credit and the monthly child support assurance payment, work will always pay. Child support assurance demonstrations report that recipients are able to increase their work hours by 25 percent and increase their earnings by 25 percent. Without the child support assurance, many families will probably turn to welfare as a means of support.

Clearly, programs designed to lift children out of poverty must acknowledge that both parents have an obligation to support their children. Child support systems formalize this arrangement—when we aggressively pursue the noncustodial parent. A system of child support assurance not only recognizes the importance of this arrangement, but makes it easier for families to find their own way on the path to self-sufficiency.

As we consider welfare reform, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, we must consider child support enforcement and innovations such as child support assurance. We can lift more families out of poverty and fulfill our goal of encouraging work and responsibility.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NEAL], with whom I cochair the Democratic welfare task force.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, today is day 29 of the Contract With America. We have passed the quarter mark for the first 100 days. Until day 27, we heard nothing about child support being included in the contract.

Why was child support not included in the contract? How could such an important issue be ignored? I have carefully reviewed the Personal Responsibility Act and it includes no child support provisions.

On day 27, we heard that the Republicans will include child support enforcement provisions in the Personal Responsibility Act. We had to wait until day 27. Where were the child support provisions?

It is day 29 of the Contract With America. It is time for us to start talking about the details of child support enforcement. This will send the American people the message that we are serious about welfare reform. A tough child support system requires both parents to live up to their responsibilities.

How could we have welfare reform without child support enforcement provision? Child support is welfare prevention. For every $1 spent on administrative expenses, $4 is collected in child support. Paying child support is also the ultimate measure of personal responsibility.

The potential for child support collection is estimated at $48 billion per year. Only $14 billion is actually paid. This leaves an estimated collection gap of about $34 billion. This gap needs to be closed. Yet it was not until day 27 that the Republicans decided to address the issue of closing this $34 billion gap.

One in four children now lives in single parent homes. Without better child support enforcement, too many of these children will not have the support they need and deserve. In 1992, 17.6 million children lived in single parent homes. We need to improve these statistics now.

My home State of Massachusetts has been very successful with child support enforcement and would serve as a role model for the rest of the country. Massachusetts has increased its child support collection rate from 51 to 67 percent over a 3-year period. But Massachusetts is only one State, we must make an improvement on the Federal level.

Child support is one area in which State flexibility is not needed. States should be uniform on this issue. We should be able to collect child support awards across State lines.

Successful child support enforcement includes streamlining the paternity-establishment process. We should give States performance-based incentives for improving paternity-establishment rates.

Out-of-wedlock births have increased at an outrageous rate. In 1991, approximately 30 percent of all children born were born to unwed mothers. These children need to be given a fighting chance. Remember, there is no such thing as an illegitimate baby.

We need to collect awards that we owed. We need States to establish a central registry and centralized collection and disbursement capability.

We need to establish a national commission to study State guidelines and the desirability of uniform national guidelines.

We need to ensure fair award levels. Awards are generally set too low. If awards were modified to current guidelines, an additional $7.3 billion—22 percent of the gap—could be saved.

It is day 29 of the contract. Child support is finally starting to receive the recognition it deserves. Let's not stop now. We have to work together to close this $34 billion gap. Paying your child support is the ultimate measure of personal responsibility.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I will just take 2 minutes to associate myself with the remarks that have been made before.

We are all in favor of welfare reform. We are all in favor of reforming any aspect of Government that certainly will save money and improve efficiency. There is no program in Government anywhere that could not benefit from reform, including the CIA and the aircraft procurement program that is going to purchase the F-22, spending billions of dollars. There are numerous programs that ought to be reformed, and welfare is certainly no exception.

The problem is, we do not want to have reform be merely a persecution of poor children and poor women. The fact that the majority party has chosen to trivialize child support enforcement and not deal with it up to now is shocking. I hope it will no longer be a partisan issue, that they will really get on board, and child support enforcement will become a major part of this reform process.

Let us have welfare reform, but let us do it thoroughly. Let us deal with the provision of jobs and job training for welfare mothers. Let us deal with the child support enforcement. Billions of dollars are at stake here. We have heard the citing of the kind of money that can be recovered, and there are simple steps that can be taken. The question is why have we waited so long. Why have all these decades gone by, and we have not gone out to collect the kind of money that should be collected from absent parents.

Let us get on board now and have thorough and complete welfare reform.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, when parents evade their responsibilities, children suffer—and the taxpayers often get left with the bill.

To protect both children and taxpayers from the consequences of parental irresponsibility, we need to improve our child support enforcement system. We need to send a clear and unmistakable message: Both parents must provide for their children.

So today, I rise in strong support of bipartisan legislation introduced today by the Congressional Women's Caucus—legislation that will improve almost every aspect of our current child support enforcement system.

The Child Support Responsibility Act would extend much-needed help to custodial parents who, despite time-consuming, often expensive efforts, are still not able to enforce their child support orders across State lines.

Interstate cases account for about one-third of all child support awards. Because of differences in State law regarding enforcement, jurisdiction, and service of process, such cases are often among the most difficult. In fact, the General Accounting Office has reported, that 34 percent of mothers in interstate cases reported that they had never received a support payment in 1989. The figure for mothers in intrastate cases is just 19 percent.

Beyond that, the Office of Child Support Enforcement reports that interstate cases represent nearly one-third of IV-D child support cases with collections, but yield only 8 percent of collected support.

Mr. Speaker, we can do better. We can act on the recommendations of the U.S. Commission on Child Support Enforcement, take a comprehensive approach to solving these problems, and pass the Child Support Responsibility Act.

This bill would establish a central registry in each State of all child support orders issued in the State. It would make uniform the law governing the interaction among States in child support matters. It would set up a national registry of child support orders to assist States in locating absent parents and enforcing orders. And it would expand the penalties for delinquency.

Mr. Speaker, I know there are some who would rather not talk about this matter. They say you don't understand, I have reasons for not paying. But I would say to my colleagues, consider the plight undergone by the customodial parent and by the children when these child support payments are not made—and when there seems to be nowhere to turn.

Let me close with one last point.

All of us have heard the calls through the Halls of Congress for young mothers to be more responsible in regard to welfare reform. I completely agree. Shouldn't we also demand, equally loudly and clearly, that fathers be responsible.

Separation happens. Divorce happens. It's a fact of life. But the responsibility assumed by having a child continues. It is not temporary; it is permanent; it should not be easy to evade; and the children should not be left to bear the consequences.

There is a $34 billion child support enforcement gap. If we don't work harder to collect that money, millions of children will go without the support they deserve. In many cases, the taxpayers will have to pick up the bill for an absentee parent.

Let's put that responsibility back where it belongs. Let's ensure that parents—both custodial and noncustodial—live up to their responsibilities. And let's make sure our children get the support they need and deserve.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Speaker, somewhere in a school in Houston sits a child by the name of Mary. A teacher writes on the blackboard the word h-o-p-e. Ask Mary what does that word mean. Mary looks and looks again and the teacher points to the word h-o-p-e.

And Mary says to the teacher, "nothing, ma'am, nothing for me."

I say, Mr. Speaker, we should give young Mary hope, hope of survival, hope of being able to survive with a single parent, hope of being able to make it and to be successful. I think, Mr. Speaker, we can begin to give Mary hope by reforming our welfare system as one of the biggest challenges before Congress today. But I really think that we can reform the welfare system by doing comprehensive reform. And that includes child support enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, reforming our welfare system is one of the biggest challenges before the Congress today. I am here this evening to emphasize the point that real welfare reform is comprehensive reform—and this includes child support enforcement.

Unpaid child support hurts families across the Nation every day. Today, 63 percent of absent parents contribute no child support. Shockingly, it is estimated that the potential for child support collections is approximately $48 billion a year. However, only $14 billion is actually paid, leaving a collection gap of $34 billion.

Mr. Speaker, there are many obvious steps that this Congress can take to bring in some of this uncollected child support. First, we can begin by providing adequate funding for the National Child Support Enforcement Collection Agency so that they can enhance coordination for collections across State lines and improve Federal tracking of delinquent orders.

In addition, a comprehensive child support strategy is necessary to help custodial parents escape welfare and stay in the work force. A comprehensive child support strategy needs stronger requirements for paternity establishment. We need tough new penalties for those who refuse to pay, such as: wage withholding, suspension of drivers' and professional licenses, and property seizures.

Congress should also require all States to adopt the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. My State of Texas was the second State to adopt UIFSA. The crux of UIFSA is "one order—one State" and it gives States the ability to serve wage withholding orders directly on an employer in another State.

States currently receive 66 percent Federal financial participation matching funds plus incentives for AFDC and some non-AFDC collections. This funding scheme hurts States like Texas because we have a low AFDC grant. We would like to see a higher Federal participation and more incentives in the form of increased funding for meeting certain performance goals. Bottom line—the program is currently underfunded both at the State and Federal level and cannot keep up with the growing caseload. Texas currently uses the States share of AFDC that we recover from absent parents as the State portion of the Federal funding scheme. Since the average welfare grant in Texas is $174 and in California it is $400, Texas recovers less and has less to use to pull down Federal dollars and therefore is less able to help families move off of welfare.

Mr. Speaker, child support is one of the real engines of welfare reform, as it requires parents to take financial responsibility for their children. As this Congress tackles the problem of welfare reform and works to move our families toward self-sufficiency and independence, let us be certain to include child support as an important component of this endeavor.

As this Congress tackles the problem of welfare reform and works to move families toward self-sufficiency and independence, let us again give little Mary hope. Let us be certain to include the child as an important component of this endeavor. Let us remember that child enforcement must be part of welfare reform.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MEEHAN].

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY], for this opportunity to speak on such an important issue and compliment her in putting this together.

I want to refer to the experience that I had before I was elected to the Congress 2 years ago. I was the first assistant district attorney in Middlesex County, which is the largest county in Massachusetts. And in that position, I had an opportunity to look at the child support enforcement in Massachusetts and a person from the State revenue department came into my office and asked me to make that a priority within the district attorney's office. There had been a new statute that had been passed in Massachusetts for tougher, stricter enforcement, but a case had never been tried, a criminal case under that statute.

And I looked at the case of a person from Lowell, MA, someone by the name of Edward Orlando, who had gotten a divorce from his wife. And he had moved out and he moved to New York City where he set up an apartment with his girlfriend. And they lived on 52d street. And at the same time they lived in that very expensive section of New York City, he had a place in the Caribbean as well. The only problem is, Mr. Orlando left 11 children back in Massachusetts, 6 of whom were still living at home in Lowell.

Audrey Orlando faced some very difficult choices. She did not receive a single child support payment for over a year. By the time several years had gone by, Edward Orlando owed his wife $47,000 in back child support. The bank was foreclosing on the mortgage of that home on Billings Street in Lowell. Audrey Orlando was unable to collect the money, facing foreclosure because of a system that was broken down and could not work.

People who are not paying child support are able to go to other States and use the statutes against each other, pit one State against another, so the child enforcement officials are unable to collect that money.

I took that case in the DA's office and told Mrs. Orlando I would make it a priority. I was able to use the long-arm statute to reach out and find this defendant in New York. We brought him back to Massachusetts, but not before he was detained at Riker's Island for about a month as we set up to bring him back to Massachusetts.

This defendant was stunned that any prosecutor from anywhere would bring him back or hold him and detain him at Riker's Island, like a common criminal, $47,000 in back support. We brought him back to Massachusetts, where he stood trial.

I decided to make this case a priority. I personally prosecuted the case. The evidence was overwhelming. Although on paper Mr. Orlando, did not have any money, we found that his lifestyle was such that the evidence was overwhelming that he in fact was not meeting his legal and moral obligation.

After we finished the conclusion of the evidence and the conclusion of the final arguments, Mr. Orlando got up and pleaded guilty. He was sent to jail for 3 months, 3 months sentence, and was ordered to pay the child support.

Guess what happened after the 3 months? Mr. Orlando skipped out and still has not paid the child support. I still have in my office the case of Mrs. Orlando, trying to avoid being foreclosed on her home.

She is like thousands of other women across America who are stereotyped in some ways about being a welfare mother, because for a period of time she had to go on welfare. She works two jobs, 7 days a week, to try to keep those foreclosing on her home from kicking her and her family out of her home.

This case illustrates the problem that we have. We need a Federal system. If a person is convicted of a speeding ticket in one community or one State and goes to another State, we have a computer system to catch that person. It is unconscionable that we do not have a way to force people to pay child support.

There is a legal and moral responsibility here. Child support is not the residue of a bad marriage, it is an obligation that is legal and moral.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, in closing, 90 percent, by the way, of the money, of the $38 billion that is owed in this country in child support, are men who owe women. I can't help but believe that a court system all across America dominated by male judges and male personnel, and a Congress, frankly, that is dominated by males, I can't help but think if 90 percent of the money owed were women who owed men, the system would have found a way to find a way to collect this money.

I thank the gentlewoman for yielding, and I hope that together this year we can finally set up a Federal system to make people meet their moral and legal obligation.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [JIM CLYBURN].

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to address the important issue of child support enforcement. There can be no denying that there is a problem. It is estimated that each year over $34 billion of child support goes uncollected. My own State of South Carolina has a collection rate of just 24 percent of court-ordered child support payments. But there is more to the problem than an inability to collect payments.

For the many children whose paternity has not been established there can be no child support order. And in the relatively few cases where there is a court order, child support payments are rarely adjusted for inflation, and the amount averages less than $3,000 a year.

Each year only $14 billion of the estimated $48 billion owed in child support is collected. The $34 billion left uncollected is the difference between financial independence and living in poverty or on welfare for many single parent families.

In 1990, women headed 86 percent of the single parent families in this country, and single parent families headed by women are seven times as likely to live in poverty. Of the single parent families headed by women in 1990, almost 36 percent received some sort of governmental assistance.

The statistics make it clear. Ensuring the full collection of reasonable child support payments is one of the most effective means to prevent many of our Nation's children from living in poverty. Child support payments could enable many single parent families to leave welfare or prevent them from entering the system in the first place.

Yet, there is absolutely no mention of child support enforcement in the welfare reform bill included by the Republicans in their so called Contract With America. The Republicans claim that their bill will end dependency on welfare, eliminate out of wedlock births, and eradicate teenage pregnancy. They boast their bill will do all this, yet it leaves untapped the $34 billion of uncollected child support each year.

According to the Republican bill H.R. 4, children born to unwed mothers under the age of 18, or 21 if the State so desires, will be permanently ineligible for welfare benefits. According to H.R. 4, benefits will also be denied to children whose paternity has not been established or who were conceived by or born to mothers while they were receiving welfare.

Yet, while the Republican bill includes numerous provisions to exclude certain mothers and their children from receiving benefits, there are no provisions to crack down on deadbeat dads. The Republicans choose to focus on the failings of teenage mothers trying to raise their children on their own while making no attempt to punish fathers for abandoning their children. Mr. Speaker, it takes two.

What kind of family values would our Government promote if it were to deny aid to children born to unwed teenage mothers while allowing a father to shirk his obligations as proposed by the Republicans? What kind of mixed message would we send to our teenagers that a teenage mother will be forced to live in poverty without any assistance as she struggles to raise her child while the father bears none of the burden?

It is high time that we reformed child support enforcement in this country. Fathers must be identified, reasonable child support orders must be established, and child support payments must be collected.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HAROLD FORD, who is the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means.

(Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise and thank the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY] for requesting these special orders tonight on child support enforcement, and commend her for her leadership here in the Congress, and also for cochairing the Task Force on Welfare Reform.

Mr. Speaker, I was disturbed to read the other day what the Associated Press article is showing from the National Center for Children in Poverty. Six million children under the age of 6 were found to live in poverty in 1992.

I certainly would like to say to my colleagues, those of us who serve on the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Personal Responsibility Act that excluded child support enforcement, we applaud and commend the chairman, CLAY SHAW, for now saying that he will include child support enforcement. But women in this Congress, both Democrats and Republicans alike, are making sure that we respond to this component of the welfare reform package.

Emphasis should be placed on reducing poverty by keeping families together, enforcing child support obligations, as well as promoting self-sufficiency, assisting with day care and transportation, and providing education, training, and work incentives that are needed.

Ignoring child support enforcement sends the wrong message in America. It says that a noncustodial parent who is one-half responsible for the birth of a child does not have any responsibility for that child at all. That is wrong, and hopefully we in the Committee on Ways and Means, and my colleagues in this House, will make sure that we join with the Governors of this Nation and say that a strong child support enforcement component of the welfare reform package will in fact be a part of this bill that we will bring to the Congress, hopefully in the first 100 days.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NADLER].

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague Representative LYNN WOOLSEY for organizing this special order to bring attention to the urgency and severity of the crisis of the noncollection of child support.

Mr. Speaker, before I came to this House I had considerable experience in this area. I am proud to have been the author during my 16 years in the New York State Assembly of 22 State laws that strengthened child support enforcement methods and of being a prime sponsor of the Child Support Standards Act which established guidelines for setting support awards. We enacted laws providing for interception of State income tax refunds, of stock dividend payments, and interest payments owed to defaulting parents. We mandated withholding child support automatically from the obligated payer's salary as soon as the support order was issued. We mandated child support defaults being included in all credit reports. We authorized the State to use every conceivable method to collect support owed on behalf of the custodial parents.

Still we failed. We increased collection rates substantially, but they were still woefully inadequate. Why?

Mostly for two reasons. First, establishing paternity was still very difficult. Second, because when obligated parents went to another State, as 30 percent do nationally, all our collection methods went out the window, and we had to resort to the very weak interstate enforcement system.

Clearly we need a national enforcement system that will strengthen the paternity establishment system and will put in place a uniform national child support collection system.

The Internal Revenue Service should be given the job of collecting child support and should be mandated to use all the force and powers it uses to collect taxes to collect child support.

Let the Federal Government set uniform minimum child support standards. Let the Federal Government pay every custodial parent a basic child support benefit and then reimburse itself by collecting the money owed from the obligated parents. In this way we would put the obligation on the Government, not on the custodial parent, to chase after the noncustodial parent to collect the funds to reimburse itself. And the child, the children, would have assured support.

One thing should be made clear. This is not primarily a problem of the poor. Although mothers and children are often rendered poor by noncollection of support due, we are more often than not talking about middle class or even wealthy families.

Make no mistake. Without seriously addressing the collection of child support, there can be no real welfare reform.

That is why it is so shocking that the so-called Personal Responsibility Act barely deals with child support and seeks instead to punish poor mothers. Welfare reform must begin with child support enforcement measures. That would save the taxpayers money, make the lives of children and custodial parents much easier and teach the lesson that fathers too have responsibilities. Then we can reform the welfare system to deal with the much smaller problem that would then remain.

Mr. Speaker, I call on this Congress to take on the challenge of making child support orders real and enforced and so to improve the lives of millions of our children.

Again, I thank Congresswoman WOOLSEY for organizing this special order.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ].

Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ. Mr. Speaker, today I join our colleagues in defense of our children.

For obvious reasons, children are in a defenseless position; they have little if any means by which to improve their standard of living. Since they do not vote, they have no political leverage. Therefore, government has a responsibility to watch over the well-being of children.

How can children have a bright future when they grow up in the darkness, lacking fulfillment of the basic needs so important in human development? How do we expect to have a better future for our Nation if we ignore the needs of our children today? Child support and its enforcement should be a top priority of welfare reform.

Almost everyone today would agree that the welfare system must be revamped and that meaningful reform is in order. Differences in opinion, however, arise on the methods and fine print necessary to achieve real changes that will help those in need to break the cycle of poverty or those who need a second change.

According to the information provided by the National Center for Children in Poverty, more than a quarter of American children under age 6 were living in poverty in 1992, though nearly three in five poor children had working parents. These figures represent a total of 25 percent of the population in that age group.

As the representative of 3.7 million U.S. citizens in Puerto Rico which has some of the highest poverty statistics in the country, I know the urgency of a comprehensive child support strategy.

The Child Support Program records show that over $34 billion in accumulated unpaid support was due to over 16 million children in the United States at the end of 1989. The collection rate was 19 percent of the total amount due in Child Support cases. Unfortunately, the system fails to ensure that children receive adequate support from both parents. For most children born out of wedlock, a child support order is never awarded. Also, of all the child support orders, the full amount of child support is collected in only about one out of every two cases.

Single parent families struggle every day to provide needed food, clothing, shelter and health care for their children. When child support payments are irregular, missed, or not paid at all, the incidence of child poverty drastically increases.

Fifty percent of all white children growing up in single parent households who do not receive child support live at or below the poverty level;

Sixty percent of all hispanic children growing up in single parent households live at or below poverty levels;

Seventy percent of all African-American children growing up in single parent families live at or below the poverty level. Surely these figures demonstrate that decisive action is needed.

There are many things we can do to improve and enhance the current child support system. For example, we can require uniform procedures for dealing with interstate cases, which are currently the most difficult to pursue. We can improve tracking of delinquent parents through national reporting of child support orders and by establishing a Federal registry of child support orders.

Moreover, we need tough new penalties for those who refuse to pay, such as authorizing withholding part of wages and allow suspension of professional, occupational, and even drivers' licenses as a means of forcing the delinquent parent to comply with support payment orders.

If we do not take action on child support now, we will be requiring young mothers to be responsible, while we give fathers an exemption. The Personal Responsibility Act, H.R. 4, cuts young, single mothers from welfare, but it does nothing to improve child support enforcement.

By ignoring child support enforcement we are sending the wrong message. It says that the noncustodial parent who is 50 percent responsible for the child does not have any real responsibility to support his child. If more noncustodial parents are made to pay child support, welfare will not be necessary for many families.

Sensitivity has always been a characteristic of the American experience. In good times and bad, we have been a caring nation that values responsibilities to continue this tradition and make sure that children in America are protected.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, America is experiencing a serious problem: Too many working and able-bodied parents are not taking responsibility for their children. The time has come to declare war on our current welfare system so that we can properly address the situation.

In every war, battles must be fought and won. One of the biggest battles we must fight is improving and reforming this Nation's child support enforcement problem.

The reasons for engaging in this battle are clear: 63 percent of the absent parents in this country do not pay child support. Approximately $35 billion is lost each year in uncollected child support payments. And in my own State of Maryland, absent parents defaulted on more than $325 million in court-ordered child support in 1993. Most importantly, we all must remember—the children suffer when child support is not paid.

As a nation and as a society we cannot afford a social safety net without expecting obligations and demanding responsibilities. For any type of welfare reform to be successful, individuals must accept the responsibility of working and providing for their families. In 1990, absent parents paid only $14 billion in child support. But if child support reflecting current ability to pay were established and enforced, single parents and their children would have received almost $48 billion. This translates into more money for food, shelter, clothing, and child care and a reduction in the Federal burden. We must send a clear signal that both parents who bring children into this world must take responsibility for supporting them.

That is why we need a tough, smart child support program which requires both mothers and fathers to live up to their responsibilities. We must target those individuals who believe they don't have to take care of their kids because their neighbors—hard-working, tax paying, responsible citizens—will. The buck must start and stop with the parents.

The children of this country need the billions in outstanding and uncollected child support. Payment of child support could save this country billions of dollars if we could move people off welfare and keep others from joining the rolls. The financial burden of supporting the children must once and for all shift from the government to the parents. If we can do this, we will be well on our way to winning our first battle in the war on welfare.

Any comprehensive welfare proposal must include child support enforcement. Yet, the Republican Contract With America does not. Are the Republicans saying to the nonpaying parents that they do not have to support their kids? If they are here to promote personal responsibility and do the people's business, this critical area should have been included in the Personal Responsibility Act.

At the urging of Democrats, I am pleased Chairman SHAW has agreed to include this child support enforcement within the Personal Responsibility Act.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my time by 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request cannot be extended in fairness to others that have had the 60-minute.

Under the rules, a single Member cannot control more than an hour. However, if another Member would like to yield time, that would be appropriate.

COST EFFECTIVENESS IN WELFARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. MARKEY. I thank the Speaker very much, and I thank the Republican leadership who are at this point graciously allowing me to speak out of order.

Mr. Speaker, at this juncture, at the conclusion of the special order, we are invoking Mo Udall's old saying that everything has been said but not everybody has said it.

As we conclude this, I would just like to point out that one out of five children in the United States is poor. Poor. Fifteen million children live in single-parent homes, that is, where there is only one parent, and those children are five times as likely to be poor as children who live in families that have two parents.

□ 2000

That is a staggeringly large number, millions and millions of children who are in this condition.

Thirty-seven percent of the women who control these households get support from the men who father the children, but over 60 percent of these women get no help from the fathers.

Let me give some statistics. Nationwide each year $34 billion goes uncollected in child support from fathers, $34 billion. Contrast that with the total amount of money that every taxpayer in America is asked to contribute to help out these mothers. It is $23 billion.

So for all of the AFDC mothers and children in America, the total amount of money which is paid is $23 billion.

The fathers owe $34 billion. Taxpayers have every right to be outraged. Why should they dip into their pockets to pay for what fathers across this country should be responsible for kicking in every day? I don't think the average taxpayer would mind paying if they felt mothers and fathers actually needed it.

I hope we continue to discuss this subject in the future.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PROGRESS ON THE CONTRACT WITH AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 1995, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, I am looking forward to this special order that I have asked some of my colleagues to participate in, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON], and what we want to do this evening is review some of the things we have already done in this Congress, review some of the things that have happened immediately preceding and some of the things that we expect to be doing.

I want to point out first of all that today we took a very important step on the road to recovering the confidence of the American people that began with the election last November. That is because what we did today is we passed a bill that will examine unfunded mandates to the States, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PORTMAN] is going to discuss that in detail a little bit later. But we have been following this road map that was laid out in the Contract With America for getting more done, more quickly than even we could have imagined, and best of all this is the work that the people of America want us to do.

Let me give a fact on that, because a poll was released this past Monday by the Washington Post and ABC News which contains extremely good news for this House and good news for the American people. In only 3 months public confidence in Congress has actually doubled. That is the largest increase of its kind since the 20-year history of the poll that has been taken.

The majority of Americans now say that Congress can deal with the big issues facing our country, and we are dealing with the big issues just like we promised. Anyway, why has this happened? Why is there this rising confidence in what the American people can expect from Congress, and why is this cynicism starting to drop away?

Mr. KINGSTON. If the gentleman will yield. Just to repeat those numbers again, Congress went from about a 20-to-40-something-percent approval rating because for the first time in recent memory Congress is following through on campaign promises.

Mr. HOKE. Elected Members are actually keeping the promises that they made to the people, and the impact that that has on confidence in our institution is really immeasurable. But it is wonderful to see in this kind of polling result that actually people are able to express that yes, they have more confidence in the U.S. Congress' ability to solve the problems, the major problems that are facing our country.

Look at what we have done; and why is it we have done this? And in less than 30 days we have cut the fat out of Congress, we have reduced staff and committees and we have passed reforms that will make it the most open and fair public legislative assembly in the entire world.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, if I might add to that, what we did was we campaigned on the word "trust." We said to the voters, for many years you have not been able to put your trust in the Congress. We are giving you a written agenda, a contract, and we intend to stand by this contract.

To the gentleman from Ohio I would say I am pleased that when I go back to my State of North Carolina I am stopped in the grocery stores, I am stopped on the street, people that I really do not even remember their names because it has been so long since I have seen them telling me, "Keep on working, keep the focus. We are proud of what you are doing in Washington, D.C. You are rebuilding the trust level that has been lost for so many years."

Mr. HOKE. I think one of the most remarkable things about this Contract With America is that it has created a road map for us that even we did not realize it was going to be so important to us in terms of keeping us focused on exactly what the American people wanted, what they expected and what we promised to deliver to them. And that is exactly how it has worked for us.

Mr. KINGSTON. If the gentleman will yield, I got a letter recently, and I assume I was one of 435 Members of Congress who got such a letter. It was not a constituent, it came from Ohio, or some other exotic spot that we had to study about in seventh grade geography, but it had the letters DWUSUWGTD. It says to a Member of Congress: I want you to put it on your desk and look at it every day. On the back of the letter it stands for: Do what you said you were going to do. And my staff sees the sign every day, and I think that is in somewhat of a nutshell what the Contract With America is about. That is why it was in writing, that is why we signed it, and that is why we keep referring back to it.

Mr. HOKE. Let us tick off exactly what we have done so far. Cut the fat out of Congress, reduced committee staff by a third, cut the budget of Congress. We have made Congress subject to the same laws that everybody else in this country is subject to, and we passed last Thursday, I am extremely proud to say, a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States. And today, thanks to the very able stewardship of Congressmen CLINGER, DAVIS, and PORTMAN we passed the unfunded mandates bill ending the Government practice of spending States' money to finance our own mandates to them.

Mr. PORTMAN. If the gentleman will yield, we had an exciting day today. It was truly a landmark piece of legislation. It was a historic day for the House, the first time we have ever, ever, as a Congress done anything to stop these unfunded Federal mandates.

And it was bipartisan. The gentleman mentioned a few of the major sponsors of the bill. Another one is GARY CONDIT of California, a Democrat.

Mr. HOKE. Who gave an extraordinary speech on this floor a couple of days ago to rousing bipartisan applause.

Mr. PORTMAN. We had a vote today of 306 to 74 on this legislation. We worked on it for 2 weeks on the floor of the House, over 30 hours of debate. That means we got about 130 Democrats to support the bill today. This is despite again a lot of disagreement on the other side. We had health debate and we worked hard on this bill. None of this stuff is easy to do. You have to roll up your sleeves and really work at it.

But we got to the point of final passage after accepting a lot of amendments and perfecting the bill where a large bipartisan group of the members of this House decided yes, it is time to step up to the plate and start being accountable for what we do for the States and localities.

Mr. HOKE. Maybe that is one of the reasons why in this same poll the majority of the American people say that "Republicans are breaking down legislative gridlock." As you can see, this clearly was a bipartisan effort.

What was the vote count again?

Mr. PORTMAN. The vote was 360 to 74. And I have to be honest, the first few days one wonder whether we were getting back into gridlock because we committed to have an open rule on this. This meant any Member of Congress could come to the floor of this House and file an amendment, and we had 174 of them filed, and then have a debate on that amendment, with no time limitation because everyone can speak for 5 minutes, and that can be expanded.

So it was a challenge and I have to tell you we spent 3 or 4 days on a very small part of the legislation that was even preliminary to the real meat of the bill, and I was concerned that we were getting into a mode that might be viewed as filibuster or too much dilatory tactics. But finally, after staying to midnight one night we broke through that and got into serious discussion of some of the outstanding issues.

Again if you roll up your sleeves and work at it you come up with a bill that makes sense. This bill is in the Contract With America, but on the House floor we improved it. It is even a better bill than it was.

Mr. HOKE. I thought the comity at the end of debate today and especially the kind words for the chairman by the gentlewoman from California, they were both well taken and they went an awfully long way toward building an even better spirit of working, although we were not working together in that case, but clearly working on something that was of importance to your constituents in a way that reflected well on this body as opposed to reflecting poorly.

□ 2010

I think the American people want to see us get the job done. The gentlewoman you are talking about did not vote for the bill. She did not agree with the premise of the bill. But as you say, in the end, in a spirit of comity, she talked about how the chairman had been fair, how we had an open process on the floor. That is what the American people want to see. They want to see an honest debate on the issues. If we have differences, they want to see us air those differences. But they want to get on with the business of managing this country.

Mr. HOKE. Could I ask you a question? I think there is a lot of misunderstanding about this bill. I think people think and there is a general misunderstanding in the public somehow we will no longer be able to legislate anything that would cost the States money. Is that what the bill does?

Mr. PORTMAN. No. That is not what the bill does. The whole premise of the bill is if something is important enough for us to mandate at the Federal level, to tell the States and localities you have got to do it our way, we ought to be able to step up to the plate and provide funding for it. This bill says there has to be, for the first time ever, first time ever, we have never had this in Congress before, a cost analysis of what the legislation is going to cost.

How many times have you come up to the House floor and never had any idea what the cost is to State and local government of something you are going to vote on? Frankly, we have not had that information. That forces us to get that information.

Mr. KINGSTON. I heard a statistic this morning I thought that was interesting. There are 39,000 municipalities in this great country of ours. Eighty percent of them are populations below 10,000, and 48 percent have populations below 1,000. We sit up here in our inside-the-beltway ivory tower mandating all these ridiculous programs on them. They do not have the money to pay for them. They do not have the personnel. Inevitably they have to turn around and raise the taxes on all the constituents back home.

Mr. PORTMAN. They have two choices at the local level, and it is pretty obvious, if you think about it. One is to raise taxes at the local level, and that tends to be property taxes. Talk about regressive taxes. And the second is to cut services, the very services our constituents are saying they want more of, fire, police protection, personal security. That is what they do. These are the communities the gentleman is talking about that are going to have to go with one or two fewer police officers during a particular timeframe. That is not what we want to be doing to the people we represent and who are also represented by State and local officials who are having to live under these mandates increasingly.

Mr. HOKE. So you are saying it is going to require a cost analysis? Does anything else happen then?

Mr. PORTMAN. It requires a cost analysis so we will know what we are voting on. Then on the floor of the House, any Member of this House can stand up and raise what is called a point of order, which means it can stop the whole process if a new mandate is not funded. So you know what the cost is, and if some committee sends a bill to this floor that is not funded, in other words, it has a new requirement that is not funded, then any one of us or any other Member can stand up and say, "Point of order; this legislation needs to stop," and it stops right there, and you have a debate on the floor of the House about the unfunded mandate in that legislation.

Let us take an example, the motor-voter bill, the first bill that I had the privilege to consider here in the Congress when I walked in my first day. I had to vote up or down on motor voter. I kind of looked at it. Everybody wants to have more voter registration. But I did not think it made sense, because Ohio, as the gentleman from Ohio knows, has a good voter registration program. It is run at the State level, as all programs were until we passed this national bill. I was told by some members of the Governor's office here in Washington this was going to cost the State of Ohio several million dollars a year. Nobody was sure, because there was not a good cost estimate. There was no Federal money to pay for it.

I voted against the bill on that basis. Now we are finding out many of these States, including California, are suing the Federal Government for precisely that reason. It is costing them a lot of money for voter registration.

Mr. HOKE. What is Ohio estimating it is going to cost them just to run the Motor-Voter Act?

Mr. PORTMAN. Twenty-nine million dollars is what the Governor is saying annually.

Mr. KINGSTON. It is $3 million in Georgia. It is interesting the party in power in Georgia was even against it, the same party as the White House and those who were pushing it here, so it is really not a partisan issue.

Mr. PORTMAN. It is not. That is an excellent point. Let me just for a moment, we talked about, you know, it takes a lot of hard work to get to this point. You have got to have a bipartisan group here in Congress to support and get behind it. This is not a partisan issue outside of this room really, and outside the Beltway.

One of the concerns I had with the debate on the House floor over the first few days is it appeared to be sadly a partisan debate. If you go out into the real world, if you talk to township trustees, you talk to county commissioners, mayors of these small towns the gentleman talks about, it is not a partisan issue; whether you are a Democrat, Republican, or independent, you are getting sick and tired of the Federal Government having a one-size-fits-all Federal requirement coming down on you with no money to pay for it.

Mr. HOKE. You know, I listened to the debate today. It sounded to me like some of the things coming from the other side that this bill, this unfunded-mandates bill, would repeal all of the legislation we passed, you know, since 1789. Is that the case?

Mr. PORTMAN. No. It is not. What this bill does is it looks prospectively. It looks to the future.

Mr. HOKE. So it has nothing to do with anything we passed in the past?

Mr. PORTMAN. No. It does not affect the Clean Air Act. It does not affect the Clean Water Act. Now, if those bills come up for reauthorization or there are new mandates attached to them, absolutely, it applies to that. The whole idea is we have got a critically, critically ill patient on our hands. There is a crisis out there. The first thing we do in an emergency room is stop the hemorrhaging, and that is what we are doing here, we are trying to stop the practice, to get Washington to get serious about this, and for the first time ever today we passed a bill to force Washington to do that. It was a historic day. It was part of our contract. It is us keeping our promise. It involved a lot of hard work. We have got to work with the Senate to come up with a compromise between the House and the Senate version, and we will be able to do that as we work with the Senate on this bill.

Mr. HOKE. If I can interrupt and ask you a question, because I agree with the gentleman that it is absolutely a critically important first step.

As you said, what you can raise with this is a point of order that stops all of the business on the floor with respect to a new mandate on the State, and debate then takes place as to whether or not that mandate should, well, as to how much it costs. We have to have a cost analysis of it, and then, at that point, does that mean that bill will no longer obtain or what happens?

Mr. PORTMAN. No. It does not. What happens then, if Congress chooses, Congress may, by a majority vote, waive that point of order. But it forces us to face the issue.

Mr. HOKE. Creates accountability?

Mr. PORTMAN. Exactly. You know, it is again, an up-or-down vote on this House floor because of our rules has historically been very difficult. Motor voter, again, a good example, there was never a debate on this floor as to whether there was an unfunded mandate. There was never any cost information to have an informed debate, and then there was no up-or-down vote on whether to impose the unfunded mandate.

What this bill does again for the first time is it says let us be accountable. If we are going to do this, let us step up to the plate and do it in the full view of the American people, the press, and so on.

That is why the Governors, the other State and local officials, mayors, county commissioners, and so on, supported this bill and worked with us to draft a bill that makes sense for them, and why even today they were here congratulating us on passing this bill. It was the No. 1 item for the National Conference of Mayors, No. 1 item for the National Governors' Association, and so on.

Mr. HOKE. Are there more Democrats or Republicans in the National Conference of Mayors?

Mr. PORTMAN. It has typically been the case that there are more Democrats. It is not a partisan issue again. We happen to have more Republic Governors than Democrats right now, but I can tell you that some of the Democrat Governors have been leading advocates on this issue to get Congress to get its requirements under control, and it is part of a much bigger picture, I have got to say to the gentleman from Ohio, and that is the whole issue of federalism: What is the role of the Federal Government?

We are finally getting to the point in this Congress where we are beginning to debate that issue in a serious way. It is going to come up with welfare reform, it is going to come up with health care reform if we get into that again later in the year: What should the role be of the Federal Government? Should we be dictating everything here from Washington, or should we be giving the States and localities more flexibility, more say in how they go about solving the problems of this great country?

Mr. KINGSTON. We are at this point 2 out of 10 on the contract?

Mr. HOKE. Actually, no. We are about 3 out of 10. We have congressional accountability, we have knocked down unfunded mandates, and we passed the balanced budget amendment.

Mr. KINGSTON. Does that bring us to crime on our discussion?

Mr. HOKE. Yes. I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio for spending the time. If I could ask the gentleman from Ohio one more question, because the gentleman has had and has been instrumental in pushing this unfunded-mandates bill through. If this is the first critical step, do you have anything to share with us as to what the next step is in this process?

Mr. PORTMAN. Well, I do. The next step in the process is there will be a year-long study of all existing mandates which would include the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, and so on. There will be a report to the Congress a year from now, assuming this legislation is signed by the President and goes into law, and that report will go through all the existing mandates in a comprehensive way, and in a logical way, because you want to look at all the different pieces, and it will make recommendations that are very specific as to what we as a Congress should do legislatively to change existing statutes and existing mandates.

This is one reason again these State and local officials supported this legislation so strongly, because it gives us the ability to figure out what makes sense to be mandated from Washington and what does not.

Mr. HOKE. Find out how much it costs, not to eliminate it, not to repeal it, but to find out what it really costs, because certainly there are some programs that cost much more than they are worth, but we will never know that if we do not have a bona fide critical analysis of it.

Mr. PORTMAN. Absolutely.

Mr. HOKE. I thank you very much for spending your time with us.

It is a good way to segue into another area of extreme importance in the Contract With America that we are going to be getting to, and that has to do with crime and welfare as well. Maybe the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

KINGSTON] would like to talk a little bit about where we are going with this.

Mr. KINGSTON. It is interesting you put crime and welfare right on top of each other because there is no question they are very related. The situation that we are in as a society is, we are not free if we cannot walk down the streets of America without having to look over our shoulder, without having the security guards, without discussing whether or not you can carry a gun to protect yourself. We are not free as long as there is the criminal, slime element on our streets.

The Clinton program basically was a Hug-a-Thug program. Their idea of getting tough on the criminal was having him foul out in midnight basketball. Our criminals need arraignment, not entertainment. They need to be in the big institution or pay restitution. I mean, that is just the bottom line. We need to have the truth in sentencing law that says "All right, if you are sentenced for 10 years you are not going to serve 3½ years, which is the 35 percent normal sentence; you are going to serve the full 10 years," or at least 9 years or 8 years. But currently it is just the revolving door, we bring them in, they have basketball, they have libraries, they have TV's. You cannot even make them work. Then we say: Why isn't it working? Why aren't our streets safe? We should say that we are going to put you in jail and you are going to stay there, and we will make you work while you are there.

Mr. HOKE. May I ask the gentleman a question? Could the gentleman run down again a couple of those things once more, those that rhyme, particularly?

Mr. KINGSTON. Well, you will have to buy the record.

Mr. HOKE. No hugs for thugs?

Mr. KINGSTON. No hugs for thugs. They need to be in an institution, which we call the big house back home, or pay restitution. I do not know what they call it on Ohio, but you need to have people in jail. They have broken the law. We have decided in society that certain people need to be insulated from others and they need to be in jail. They need to be in an institution or they need to be out on the streets paying restitution, if they have stolen money they need to pay back to the victims.

You know, we always forget the victims.

I had a constituent call me. The woman was at home bathing her 3-year-old and some slime kicked down the door and raped her, and the son-of-a-gun was caught—fortunately not because of that, but because of another crime, and incidentally he had raped three or four people—he was getting out of jail 5 years later. Now, how would you like to be that husband, that sister, that brother, knowing that creep was back out on the streets in your hometown? It is not right. That is what we have got to change. That is what the Contract with America tries to do.

Mr. JONES. I would like to add to the gentleman from Georgia's response to the gentleman from Ohio's inquiry.

During our campaign, the polling we did before we entered the race for Congress and during the race for Congress showed that crime and punishment was always among the top issues with the people. They believed that the Clinton crime package, if you will, that you made reference to, was too soft, that it did not do what needed to be done to protect the citizens.

Quite frankly, I think that is why our Contract with America, when we get on this issue, you will see the response from the American people will be just as strong today as it was when they elected the Republican majority. Because they want to see, they want to be protected; they have felt for so long, as the gentleman said, they have a locked-in mentality while those who should be locked in are out on the streets.

So I just wanted to add to the gentleman's comments that this part of our contract is extremely important. That is why we have been given this opportunity, because the majority of the past, which is now the minority party, did not do the job to protect the citizens of this country.

Mr. HOKE. Well, does the gentleman think that it has to do with the pendulum swing? If the pendulum has swung so far over to favoring criminals, favoring thugs, favoring those people that are abusing our society, that are abusing other people, and are simply antisocial that we have to move it back to the center? Is that not what is happening?

Mr. JONES. If I may just touch on what happened. It just so happened that yesterday the Governor of North Carolina, Jim Hunt, a Democrat, had a luncheon for all the Members of the Congress here in Washington, DC. He had sent us a letter 2 days before about a person in North Carolina who spent 13 years on death row. The individual had kidnapped three cheerleaders at a small college in North Carolina, three girls, put them in the trunk, took one out, raped her, and then killed her. He spent 13 years on death row through all these endless appeals.

That is why people are sick and tired of it. The Governor of North Carolina in his letter to us and also at the luncheon yesterday said that we need to end these endless appeals.

I think in our contract we are talking about a 2-year limit.

Mr. HOKE. Let me give both of the gentlemen some good news. I happen to have the honor of sitting on the Judiciary Committee, where today we marked up and passed out and reported out the reform of habeas corpus, which is the Latin phrase referring to the endless rounds of appeals that can go to the State court, to the Federal court, back to the State court, to the Federal court. We have limited and compressed that timeframe dramatically now so that you will not be able to go into endless round of appeals.

Mr. KINGSTON. Well, that is part of the process. The gentleman has alluded to it. That is the frustration that common, decent Americans have with the penal system when people are not serving their full sentence, who get endless appeals, they get to tie up courts. It really, in this country, has become a matter where they can tie them up forever and get away with whatever crime they committed.

You know there is another aspect of our crime reform bill that I think is very important: 22 percent of the prisoners in the Federal penitentiaries are illegal aliens, who are not American citizens, 22 percent. Again, they are getting all the amenities that you or I would only be able to get if we went to a good hotel room. Yet we cannot even deport them.

This changes that. We want to deport them. I believe that any kind of fooling with the trade bill, foreign aid bill, immigration; I would say "Look, you folks are welcome to our country legally any time you want." They come here illegally, then they are going home on a one-way ticket and "Don't send them back, we are going to bill you the costs back," through negotiation.

I think it is time that we start tightening up; we cannot afford to pay the bill for 22 percent of the non-Americans—

Mr. HOKE. It also goes a step further with respect to legal aliens. That is people in this country legally, but who commit violent felonies, criminals, they get convicted and do time. That then becomes an issue upon which they can be deported upon having done their time in jail. And this is a change in the law—if they are sentenced regardless of whether or not they actually do the time, if they are sentenced for 5 years or more for a felony, they can be deported for that and they also lose the privilege of ever becoming an American citizen.

These are important things because citizenship in this country is a privilege, and we should not be extending it to violent felons.

Another thing I wanted to ask the gentleman about with respect to the crime bill and the changes we are going to make: I believe there are three things that are absolutely necessary. I call them the three C's. For the criminal justice system to work as a deterrent, you have to catch, convict, and confine. And you have to do all of that in a compressed period of time. When you do that, then somebody who is contemplating criminal activity knows that when they commit a crime they are going to be caught and when they are convicted they are actually going to do time.

They are going to have to go to the big house, as the gentleman said. When that all happens in a compressed time period, then you will find the justice system works as a deterrent to stop people from committing crimes, because they know they are going to go to jail. We have done things in this contract that specifically go each area there.

First of all, we increased the number of police on the streets as a result of it. This is in a block grant way directly to the communities.

Mr. KINGSTON. And let the municipalities under this bill spend the money as they see fit. They may not need policemen, but they may need police cars. So this gives them that type of flexibility.

Mr. HOKE. The gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. KINGSTON. It is not the big brother telling them what to do.

Mr. HOKE. Exactly right, the gentleman is absolutely right.

Now, No. 2 is that with respect to conviction we have given the courts the ability to use evidence that may have previously been not allowed because of the exclusionary rule.

Mr. KINGSTON. So as I understand that, if you find the gun but for some reason the investigating officer did not have the warrant perfected, maybe some little technical wording problem, you cannot use the gun as evidence, which is ridiculous. This says if it is a good faith mistake you still can use this as evidence, the gun, hatchet, or whatever it is.

Mr. HOKE. That is exactly right. It is the good faith exclusion. What it says is that we are going to discipline the police officer, teach that person how to do it right. But if it was done in good faith and it did not impair the criminal's rights, then we are going to allow that evidence to be admitted. That is an important thing because that swings the pendulum back to punish criminals and to be on the side of victims.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

During your debate on this bill, during the campaign, I heard numerous times people say, "I'm so tired of reading in the paper where a person incarcerated, serving time for a crime, is given the opportunity to file suit over some usually frivolous type issue, and we, the taxpayers, are paying for this."

Mr. HOKE. You mean prisoners who are—

Mr. JONES. Absolutely, those that are incarcerated.

Mr. HOKE. That is exactly right.

Well, we dealt with that today in the Committee on the Judiciary, as a matter of fact, specifically, and in fact there is an element of the bar that makes a full-time living in contacting prisoners and then using shotgun approach lawsuits to file for all kinds of ridiculous and frivolous things like, for example, the food is not good enough, we want better food, we want different kinds of silverware, we want towels that are not so scratchy. I am not making these things up, and the reason they do this is because the bar, the attorneys, can actually be reimbursed their fees, all of them, by the Federal Government when they bring these lawsuits, civil lawsuits, on behalf of prisoners.

What we have done is we have said that you can bring the lawsuits. We are not impairing a prisoner's right to bring lawsuits. But you can only be paid if you win, and you can only be paid on the part that you do win on.

Now it is a little bit technical; I understand that, but typically what happens is an attorney will file a lawsuit with 50, 60, 70 different complaints and hope that he or she is going to hit on one of them, and then they get paid for the entire lawsuit, all of the time that they supposedly put in. This changes that dramatically.

Mr. KINGSTON. That is another aspect. You mentioned it just briefly with your action in the Judiciary Committee today.

I am sick and tired, as I know my colleagues are, because of the police officers actually being treated like criminals by the lawyers when they get in these courtrooms. The police officers are the men and women who are out there on the line risking their lives, and remember they are not arresting people for the second or third time. They are arresting people under the current system for the eighth, ninth, or tenth time, and I ask, "How would you like to be a plainclothesman working the street in a dangerous neighborhood not knowing if the last guy you sent up the river is going to be bumping into you at the convenience store?" But that is the situation we are in now.

As my colleagues know, there is another aspect, and I know we need to move on to welfare reform. I wanted to mention this bill also authorizes $10 billion for new prison construction, and I would say, just like Tom Bodett, "We're going to leave the light on for them."

Mr. HOKE. Well, it is catch, convict, and confine. Catch extra police. Convict habeas corpus, or exclusionary rule reform. Confine $10 billion in prisons. And with that, a requirement that a prisoner must do 85 percent of his sentence time.

Mr. KINGSTON. As my colleagues know now, one of the root causes of the crime problem, the explosion of crime particularly in the inner city, is the breakdown of the family. The previous speaker mentioned that there were 15 million children being raised in single parent homes. Actually there is 15 million being raised in homes generally without fathers.

Now of the children on AFDC or basically on welfare, 92 percent live in a home where they do not have fathers, and that is homes really where small children are being raised by teenagers. We are talking 17-year-old mamas raising kids and often on top of going to high school, and sometimes a 17-year-old is raising two children. There was a study that said one of the biggest correlations between crime in the neighborhood is an education. It is not poverty. It is just having fathers at home, and one of the key elements of the Contract With America's reform plan is to reunite that family saying that if you are under 18 years old, you have got to identify the father, and I will mention that a little bit more later, but also you got to stay at home with your own parent in order to get that welfare check, and I think that will help strengthen the family unit which has been broken down really because of Government policy.

Mr. HOKE. Well, I could not agree more, and I look forward to a very spirited debate on this because, as the gentleman knows, there is a great deal of feeling, certainly among my constituents, that we are a big part of the problem, having created this problem, that we have created financial incentives, or if "incentive" is too strong a word, at least we create the financial viability of the single parent family in this country, and there was no financial viability under the Great Society, until we abused a program that was devised for widows to be able to have—be able to provide for their own children in a widowed situation. We have taken that, and it has grown into this extraordinary bureaucracy that has brought much, much grief and much, and little happiness to our country.

Mr. KINGSTON. Here we are, 30 years later, $3 trillion later, and here is a definition of a trillion: "If you spent a hundred thousand dollars a minute 24 hours a day, it would take 19 years to get to one trillion."

We have spent $3 trillion starting with the Great Society under Lyndon Government-Can-Solve-Anything Johnson, and during that period of time the poverty level in 1965 was 14 percent. Today it is 14 percent.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have accomplished absolutely nothing except for the absolute destruction of inner city families.

Mr. HOKE. Well, as my colleague knows, the thing the people want, they never want to agree there are any correlations here, that they are causal things going on, but the fact is today two-thirds of all minority births are illegitimate. Twenty-five percent of all nonminority births are illegitimate.

Those are shocking, shocking number when you consider that—

Mr. KINGSTON. The national combined average is 30.1 percent.

Mr. HOKE. Thirty point one percent, and when you consider that in 1960 we were at less than a third of that.

Mr. KINGSTON. Twenty-nine out of 1,000 15- to 17-year-old girls will have a child illegitimately, and when we talk about that 30 percent level, we are not talking 30-year-old Murphy Browns who have a career, and income coming in. We are talking 18-year-olds. We are talking 14-year-olds who cannot care for themselves, much less the awesome burden of being a parent.

Mr. JONES. If I can just add briefly to this?

What we have had is a system; the Speaker has spoken of this so many times. We have had a system that has perpetuated this type of behavior. We have had a system that has through payments encouraged people to have children out of wedlock, and, as the Speaker has said so many times, we want to help people get off welfare. We want to help people become productive citizens. Welfare should not be a hammock.

Welfare should be a springboard. Mr. HOKE. I heard PHIL GRAMM say it very well the other day. He said, "The problem with welfare is it's no longer a safety net. It's become a hammock."

The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. KINGSTON. The other thing about this, and there is a work requirement, too, but before we leave this single parent thing, what our society has said, what our Government welfare program has said, is, "You're a young girl, 17 or 18 years old, and you get pregnant. That's your baby, you're responsible, and you're responsible to raise the baby, the child. You're on the hook for the next 21 years."

Now for the 17-year-old boy who is the father, "Don't worry about it."

Mr. HOKE. No accountability, no responsibility, no requirement that paternity be established. Are we changing that in the contract?

Mr. KINGSTON. We are changing it. You have to establish paternity. What we are saying to these alley-cat dads is, "Come on home. We are fixing to get serious. We are going to domesticate the alley cat."

That is what we need to do.

Mr. HOKE. And we have got some very strong, across-state-line laws that we are looking at to go after deadbeat dads as well.

Mr. KINGSTON. Absolutely, and there is a barrage of other laws that will go after deadbeat dads if the Republican Contract With America welfare plan gets passed because there are other laws that are contingent on this that will further make life hard on deadbeat dads and could include revoking drivers licenses and so forth. We are going to get the money from the dad, and we are going to bring him back in the formula.

Mr. HOKE. As my colleague knows, as I thought about welfare in the United States generally over the past couple of years, it strikes me that what we say to a young woman, a 16-, 17-, 18-year-old woman, is, "Look, we're going to make a deal with you. If you want to have a child, you can do that, and we are going to help you out with that child. We are going to help you with housing, we are going to help you with food, we are going to help you with day care if you want that, we are going to help you even with job training, and we're going to give you money as well so that you can provide for that child."

There are two conditions for this good deal we are going to give you, OK? No 1 is you have to promise us that you will not get married. That is No. 1. Just promise you will not get married. No. 2, you have to promise us you are not going to get a job. Do not get a job, and in the meantime we will provide you also with health care in addition to all those things. But as long as you fulfill those two promises, then we are going to take care of you. You just cannot get married and cannot get a job.

Now, what is it we are saying to people? We are saying if they are in a single-parent family, they have much less of a chance of giving that child an even break in terms of being raised. Statistics do not lie on this. It is absolutely crystal clear in terms of outcomes that kids coming out of single-parent families have a tougher time, graduating, finishing school in time, not needing psychological counseling, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

What is the other thing that we are doing? We are robbing that person of the fundamental dignity of having a job, of having work, of having self-reliance. It is a bad deal.

Mr. KINGSTON. What is also good about this program is there is a work requirement that they do try to get involved in some sort of work training, and dads again must participate in it. There is also another part of it which I would say is internal, and that is combining so many of these government bureaucracies, which simply duplicate what the other one is doing. What they want to do is not make people independent, but keep them dependent. They create a clientele. So they are all fighting for it. But if you suggest why do not we combine it and cut out some of the bureaucrats' jobs so we can get more food to the child in the classroom that is hungry so they can learn math better or science better and so forth, so they can break the cycle, then you have this resistance from the bureaucrats. But the contract goes after these programs and combines them.

Mr. HOKE. One of the things I am looking forward to with respect to our welfare reform is block granting this money to the States. There must be a State in this Union that will have the courage to actually eliminate welfare and require that its citizens reach out to help those people that need that help, require its citizens to go out and one-on-one adopt, be a part of, become completely bonded and a part of the needs of its community.

It seems to me that that will take tremendous courage on the part of a State. But when we do that, we will see a very real, a very different attitude, and a complete change in the way that that State deals with the problem of indigency, the problem of illegitimacy. And that will be the beginning of the restoration of a much more sane commonsense approach to dealing with these problems in a way that is deeply compassionate, that truly connects people with people, and that does not alienate us from each other as neighbors in our communities, and does not alienate us from our institutions as well.

Mr. JONES. If I can just add one situation that happened months and months ago before I even became a candidate for Congress, in my business I was calling on a manufacturing firm, and I will never forget the story the gentleman was telling me about a lady that lived in the housing project in this small county and small town. And one of the best workers that he had, every time he give her a raise, her rent went up. So she got to a point that she came back to him and said, "Why work? I am working harder, but I can't achieve because the government continues to raise my rent."

There has got to be some way to work out a system so that an individual that is trying to do better for themselves through work is somehow given an opportunity, for example, using this as an example, hold the rent down for a couple of years, and make that individual put money in a savings account and let that be monitored by local agencies.

But any time somebody tries to do better for themselves, many times through this archaic system that we have, they are being penalized. There are many people that want to get off welfare, but the system keeps holding them down. And that is what we are talking about in this contract. That is what you have been talking. We can change it, and we are going to change it.

Mr. KINGSTON. Gentleman, I need to leave you, and I know you are going to go on and talk about term limits and so many of the other good elements of the contract. I appreciate your time and leadership both of you all have shown on these issues. Let us do it again sometime.

Mr. HOKE. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for participating and for being a part of this.

I want to just close with the idea of this block granting with one final thought, and that is that I think that what we will find out is there is a tremendous amount of creativity in the States. There will be States that will try all kinds of different solutions to the welfare problem, and they will come up with many, many different programs and ways of dealing with it, and some States that may, as I have suggested, even eliminate certain programs, certain welfare programs, to others that will try a very different approach. And that is what we need.

We do not need a one-size-fits-all type of approach. We need to unleash the creativity, allow that creativity to erupt and to try different things that will truly work. We do not know what will work, we do not know what will not work, but we do know what is not working. By giving the States that kind of flexibility, we are going to get a heck of a lot more of an idea of a better direction to go in to solve that particular problem that is so very, very difficult.

I wonder if I could ask, Mr. JONES, if you could talk to me a little bit about the work that you have been involved in with term limits and where you expect that to go and how that fits into our Contract With America?

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman for this opportunity. It has been a great experience for a freshman. I have been here 4 weeks, and this has been an exciting day in many ways, passing an unfunded mandate, and a balanced budget amendment last week, and participating with you tonight and with the other two gentlemen.

In the area of reform, there is probably not anything more important than giving the people of America the opportunity to vote on term limits. Quite frankly, I was in the general assembly in North Carolina for 10 years. I have worked hard in the area of campaign finance reform, ethics, rewriting the lobbying laws for the lobbyists in the State of North Carolina, and I have got some background, so to speak, in this area. And I started years ago talking about the need for term limits.

If I can just for a moment cite a story. My father served in the U.S. Congress for 26 years. About 3 years ago, 4 years ago, I was talking to him in our hometown of Farmville, and I was telling him how I believe very strongly in term limits. Again, he served 26 years. And he said, "I did not do a very good job of raising you, if you feel that good about term limits."

Mr. HOKE. If I could ask you, was your father a Democrat or a Republican?

Mr. JONES. My father was a Democrat.

Mr. HOKE. Are you a Democrat or a Republican?

Mr. JONES. I am a Republican.

Mr. HOKE. So not only are you not a Democrat like your father, but you are also telling him you want to have terms limits. Were you a Democrat in the North Carolina House?

Mr. JONES. Right. I was. I developed the reputation of being the foremost advocate of reform in the North Carolina General Assembly, which I am very proud that I earned that reputation.

But I will tell you this, since you asked me about my father. He did know, and we talked about it before he became ill and he eventually died, that I would be changing my party affiliation. He stated he supported that decision and would state that publicly, but obviously he did not live long enough.

I listened to the people, and in our contract we listened to the people. Every issue we have talked about tonight, every issue, came from the fact that when we developed this contract, we listened to the people of America. These 10 bills in this contract is what the people of America want to see pass in the U.S. House of Representatives, and hopefully the U.S. Senate.

But I will tell you in the area of term limits, this is one of the utmost issues that the American people, every poll that I have seen, a minimum of 65 percent of the people in America say they want term limits, and quite frankly, as high as 75 percent say they want term limits.

We look at Tom Foley, the former Speaker of the House, and his people in his State wanted term limits. And he took his people to court, and I am glad he did, because we have a fine representative from Washington there.

But my point is so many States already, 22 I believe on their own, have passed term limits. The people of America want this Congress to give them the privilege to act on term limits. We know and you know that we need 290 votes on this House floor. Right now the best that we can figure that we have is 228. So if there are any citizens throughout America watching this tonight, I hope they will call their Congress person if they feel strong that they, the people, would like to have the vote on term limits.

Quite frankly, we have three bills, two that have been filed, one is three terms, that is 2 years times three, 6 years, a 6-year term. The other is a 12-year term. That has been introduced, I believe, by the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. MCCOLLUM]. He believes that it should parallel with the Senate, that would have two terms, 6 years each, 12 years. Then I believe that the gentleman from Florida, [Mrs. FOWLER] will be offering an amendment on the floor that will speak to 8 years, four terms, four times two.

So we are going to have a choice. I just hope that we will give the people of the United States the same choice that we have here on the floor. And I hope, again, we think we have 228 people that have signed on or signed the pledge on the Republican side and the Democratic side. I hope we can get the 290 and get some form of term limits to the people.

Mr. HOKE. As a strong proponent and supporter and agitator for term limits for a long time, I think you are right on the money when you suggest that people ought to call their Representatives and lobby and make known their feelings about this issue. Because I am absolutely convinced that term limits, the combination of term limits, which will truly reform this institution, as well as the balanced budget amendment, which will reform the way that we spend money, that those two things form the cornerstones of making our Government completely and truly representative once more, of the American people.

Mr. JONES. Absolutely. If I could add this, because I think it is of interest, according to Stephen Moore of the Cato Institute, if term limits had been in effect in recent years, the balanced budget amendment would have passed in 1990. The Clinton and Bush tax increases would have failed. The Penny-Kasich spending cuts would have passed and the congressional pay raise of 1989 and 1992 would have been defeated. What happens is that we have a system that continues to perpetuate itself, perpetuate itself because it is based on seniority. And we both know that obviously an incumbent has an advantage, particularly when it comes to raising money. And I, quite frankly, think that if we give the people the opportunity to vote on term limits, we will have a better system that will be the system that the people of America want.

Obviously, if we give them the opportunity to vote and they do not pass in enough States to change the Constitution, then obviously the people have had the chance to speak on this issue. I think that is what the people want.

Mr. HOKE. I think you are absolutely right. I would actually urge people not to lose sight on this, especially people who generally are very happy with what is happening with the Contract With America, who feel really good about the direction that the Congress is going in. Some of those people who have moved this polling that says that Republicans are breaking down legislative gridlock and that the Republicans are bringing integrity and honor and confidence back to this institution, for Heaven's sake, it strikes me, do not get fooled into thinking that, therefore, we should not have term limits. It is essential to the viability of this institution and to the vitality of it going on.

I will tell you, I have got another bill that I have been very excited about with respect to term limits that actually changes the length of the term from 2 years to 4 years and then limits it to three 4-year terms. I believe strongly, as I have for a long time, that the 2-year term, while clearly was introduced for specific reasons by our Founding Fathers, is outmoded in the 20th century and that, unfortunately, what it means is that we are only working 50 percent of the time, because essentially we are legislating for a year and then become more and more distracted with campaigns in the second year.

And that distraction is not just because the legislator wants it to be and is motivated to do that, but, in fact, that is when the sniping begins and when all of the negative stuff starts with respect to somebody trying to take your seat, and it really becomes a tremendous distraction.

Mr. JONES. May I ask when the gentleman filed the bill? I just heard about it today, and I thought it was a very exciting idea.

Mr. HOKE. The other thing is, if you look at the other legislatures around the world, the shortest one is 4 years in Western Europe. I think New Zealand might have 3 years, but most are 4- and 5-year terms. I think I like the idea of the symmetry with the Senate, and I think that it is very important toward moving toward becoming a citizen legislature.

Mr. JONES. If I might add to this, because I think the people that might be watching tonight need to know that probably the term limit issue will be debated in the committees probably in March, sometime in March. And they really, as you said yourself, people need to really let their elected Congress person know exactly how they feel on this issue.

Mr. HOKE. And in Ohio where we passed a law that would limit Members of Congress to four 2-year terms that I supported and I campaigned for and I voted for, I will have the opportunity to vote on the amendment of the gentlewoman From Florida [Mrs. FOWLER] with the four 2-year terms.

I think that you are right on the money when you say that people ought to really work hard on this, because it is critical to the citizen legislature that we all envision.

I would say one other thing, and that is that we often, we hear the phrase that power corrupts. And there is no question about it. Power does corrupt. But what I would suggest to you is that power corrupts relatively slowly and that the problem that we had with the fact that one party was in control for 40 years did not come about, we did not have a problem in the first 10 years or the first even 15 years necessarily, but the arrogance and the occupation that became endemic to this institution really began in the 1980's and continued through. And it seems to me that we cannot get lulled into thinking that anybody has—that there is some sort of a corner that one party has on purity or righteousness. The problem is when one party is in control for far too long.

Now, do not misunderstand me. There are philosophical differences that are very, very fundamental and basic to the way that the Democrats view the world and the way that Republicans do. And I think it is fair to say that Democrats have a great deal of confidence in the Government's ability to fix things, and Republicans have little confidence in that and a great deal of confidence in the ability of individuals and families and private institutions to fix things.

But I think it is also fair to say that I, for one, do not believe for a minute that any group that has power for 40 years straight is going to stay lily white. And I think that that is a problem that we have to address.

Was there anything you wanted to add to that?

Mr. JONES. Just one other point. Did we, in our reform package as it related to the rules, did we put a number of terms that a person could as chairman? I think it is important to remind the people that we have done this, 6 years, and also the Speaker, four terms, 8 years; is that correct?

Mr. HOKE. That is correct, yes. We have done that. We have limited the terms of committee chairs and of the speaker, and we did that because we could do that in our own rules package. We actually did that in terms of ranking Members in 1992 at, frankly, the insistence of my class, which I feel very proud of.

Mr. JONES. Congratulations to your class.

Mr. HOKE. I really thank the gentleman from North Carolina, and I thank the gentlemen from Ohio and from Georgia for participating.

It has been a pleasure doing this with you. I think it has been very helpful to me to have your input. I really appreciate it. So I just want to say that.

I want to close by saying this, let us review the bidding on what we have done and where we are at with this Contract. On the first day of Congress—I want to review the bidding with respect to the notion that somehow this is the Republican Contract With America, because the truth is that this is not. This is an American Contract, and every single thing that we have done on this floor has gotten bipartisan support.

Let us review, on the very first day of the Congress, every single vote to reform the rules of the House received Democrat support, sometimes by as many as 203 Democrats, practically their entire caucus.

When we passed the congressional accountability law, a total of 171 Democrats supported our bill, 171 out of about 200 Democrats supported the bill. When we passed the Balanced Budget Amendment, 72 Democrats broke with their leadership to do the right thing. When we passed the unfunded mandates bill, another 130 Democrats sided with Republicans to give the American people what they wanted.

Given the degree of bipartisan support that our Contract has received, the American people may well wonder why it has taken so many years to get these badly needed reforms passed, and the answer is very simple. For years the way too liberal, way too powerful, way out of touch leadership of this Congress, of the Democrat party, throttled these bills and kept them from the floor, from even being considered.

In their power and in their arrogance, the Democrat leaders not only ignored the wishes of their own party, but more importantly, they forgot about the needs of the American people. We have not, and we are not going to. This is a Contract With America, it is a Contract For America, and it has finally given America the government that it wants and it needs.

Mr. Speaker, this Contract is right on target. This Contract is right on track.

COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE FOR THE 104TH CONGRESS

No person other than members of the committee and such congressional staff and such departmental representatives as they may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session which has been closed to the public. This Rule does not apply to open committee hearings which are provided for by Rule 19 contained herein.

19. Each hearing conducted by the committee shall be open to the public including to radio, television, and still photography coverage except when the committee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of matters to be considered would endanger national security, would compromise sensitive law enforcement information, or would tend to defame, degrade or incriminate any person, or otherwise would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives. Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, and Rule 9, a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony:

(1) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or violate Rule XI 2.(k)(5) of the Rules of the House of Representatives; or

(2) may vote to close the hearing, as provided in Rule XI 2.(k)(5) of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

No Member may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of any committee or subcommittee, unless the House of Representatives shall by majority vote authorize a particular committee or subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures designated in this Rule for closing hearings to the public: Provided, however, That the committee or subcommittee may by the same procedure vote to close one subsequent day of the hearing.

(3) Whenever a hearing or meeting conducted by the committee is open to the public, these proceedings shall be open to coverage by television, radio, and still photography, except as provided in Rule XI 3(f)(2) of the House of Representatives. The Chairman shall not be able to limit the number of television, or still cameras to fewer than two representatives from each medium (except for legitimate space or safety considerations in which case pool coverage shall be authorized).

AUTOMATIC ROLLCALL VOTE FOR AMENDMENTS WHICH AFFECT THE USE OF FEDERAL RESOURCES

21. (a) A rollcall vote shall be automatic on any amendment which specifies the use of federal resources in addition to, or more explicitly (inclusively or exclusively) than that specified in the underlying text of the measure being considered.

(b) No legislative report filed by the committee on any measure or matter reported by the committee shall contain language which has the effect of specifying the use of federal resources more explicitly (inclusively or exclusively) than that specified in the measure or matter as ordered reported, unless such language has been approved by the committee during a meeting or otherwise in writing by a majority of the Members.

(b) The records of the committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. The Chairman shall notify the Ranking Minority Member of any decision, pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of the Rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the committee for a determination on the written request of any Member of the committee.

PUBLICATION OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS AND MARKUPS

23. The transcripts of those hearings conducted by the committee which are decided to be printed shall be published in verbatim form, with the material requested for the record inserted at that place requested, or at the end of the record, as appropriate. Any requests by those Members, staff or witnesses to correct any errors other than errors in transcription, or disputed errors in transcription, shall be appended to the record, and the appropriate place where the change is requested will be footnoted. Prior to approval by the Chairman of hearings conducted jointly with another congressional committee, a memorandum of understanding shall be prepared which incorporates an agreement for the publication of the verbatim transcript. Transcripts of markups shall be recorded and published in the same manner as hearings before the committee and shall be included as part of the legislative report unless waived by the Chairman.

OPENING STATEMENTS; 5-MINUTE RULE

24. Insofar as is practicable, the Chairman, after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, shall limit the total time of opening statements by Members to no more than 10 minutes, the time to be divided equally among Members present desiring to make an opening statement. The time any one Member may address the committee on any bill, motion or other matter under consideration by the committee or the time allowed for the questioning of a witness at hearings before the committee will be limited to five minutes, and then only when the Member has been recognized by the Chairman, except that this time limit may be waived by the Chairman or acting Chairman. The rule of germaneness will be enforced by the Chairman.

Each special message so transmitted shall be referred to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Each such message shall be printed as a document of each House.

(2) Any special message transmitted under section 101 shall be printed in the first issue of the Federal Register published after such transmittal.

(c) INTRODUCTION OF RESCISSION/RECEIPTS DISAPPROVAL BILLS.—The procedures set forth in subsection (d) shall apply to any rescission/receipts disapproval bill introduced in the House of Representatives not later than the third calendar day of session beginning on the day after the date of submission of a special message by the President under section 101.

(d) CONSIDERATION IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—(1) The committee of the House of Representatives to which a rescission/receipts disapproval bill is referred shall report it without amendment, and with or without recommendation, not later than the eighth calendar day of session after the date of its introduction. If the committee fails to report the bill within that period, it is in order to move that the House discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill. A motion to discharge may be made only by an individual favoring the bill (but only after the legislative day on which a Member announces to the House the Member's intention to do so). The motion is highly privileged. Debate thereon shall be limited to not more than one hour, the time to be divided in the House equally between a proponent and an opponent. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to its adoption without intervening motion. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order.

(2) After a rescission/receipts disapproval bill is reported or the committee has been discharged from further consideration, it is in order to move that the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill. All points of order against the bill and against consideration of the bill are waived. The motion is highly privileged. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on that motion to its adoption without intervening motion. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. During consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole, the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall proceed without intervening motion, shall be confined to the bill, and shall not exceed two hours equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent of the bill. After general debate the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion. A motion to reconsider the vote on passage of the bill shall not be in order.

(3) Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to a bill described in subsection (a) shall be decided without debate.

(4) It shall not be in order to consider more than one bill described in subsection (c) or more than one motion to discharge described in paragraph (1) with respect to a particular special message.

(5) Consideration of any rescission/receipts disapproval bill under this subsection is governed by the rules of the House of Representatives except to the extent specifically provided by the provisions of this title.

(e) CONSIDERATION IN THE SENATE.—

(1) Any rescission/receipts disapproval bill received in the Senate from the House shall be considered in the Senate pursuant to the provisions of this title.

(2) Debate in the Senate on any rescission/receipts disapproval bill and debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than ten hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

(3) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motions or appeal in connection with such bill shall be limited to one hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by the mover and the manager of the bill, except that in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

(4) A motion to further limit debate is not debatable. A motion to recommit (except a motion to recommit with instructions to report back within a specified number of days not to exceed one, not counting any day on which the Senate is not in session) is not in order.

(f) POINTS OF ORDER.—

(1) It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any rescission/receipts disapproval bill that relates to any matter other than the rescission of budget authority or veto of the provision of law transmitted by the President under section 101.

(2) It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any amendment to a rescission/receipts disapproval bill.

(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by a vote of three-fifths of the members duly chosen and sworn.

Such leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

If the President proposes a rescission of budget authority, he may also propose to reduce the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 by an amount that does not exceed the amount of the proposed rescission. Funds made available for obligation under this procedure may not be proposed for rescission again under this section.

“(b) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—

“(1) The President may transmit to Congress a special message proposing to rescind amounts of budget authority or to repeal any targeted tax benefit and include with that special message a draft bill that, if enacted, would only rescind that budget authority or repeal that targeted tax benefit unless the President also proposes a reduction in the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. That bill shall clearly identify the amount of budget authority that is proposed to be rescinded for each program, project, or activity to which that budget authority relates or the targeted tax benefit proposed to be repealed, as the case may be. “(2)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of a bill under this section shall be highly privileged and not debatable. “(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on a bill under this section shall not exceed 4 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill. That committee shall report the bill without substantive revision and with or without recommendation. The bill shall be reported not later than the seventh legislative day of the Senate after it receives the bill. A committee failing to report the bill within such period shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill, and the bill shall be placed upon the appropriate calendar.

“(B) During consideration under this paragraph, any Member of the Senate may move to strike any proposed rescission or rescissions of budget authority or any proposed repeal of a targeted tax benefit, as applicable, if supported by 14 other Members.

“(4)(A) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill under this section shall be privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

“(C) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with a bill under this section shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill, except that in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto, shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. (a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1012 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 683) is amended to read as follows:

“EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED RESCISSIONS

“SEC. 1012. (a) PROPOSED RESCISSION OF BUDGET AUTHORITY OR REPEAL OF TARGETED TAX BENEFITS.—The President may propose, at the time and in the manner provided in subsection (b), the rescission of any budget authority provided in an appropriation Act or repeal of any targeted tax benefit provided in any revenue Act. If the President proposes a rescission of budget authority, he may also propose to reduce the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 by an amount that does not exceed the amount of the proposed rescission. Funds made available for obligation under this procedure may not be proposed for rescission again under this section.

“(b) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—

“(1) The President may transmit to Congress a special message proposing to rescind amounts of budget authority or to repeal any targeted tax benefit and include with that special message a draft bill that, if enacted, would only rescind that budget authority or repeal that targeted tax benefit unless the President also proposes a reduction in the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. That bill shall clearly identify the amount of budget authority that is proposed to be rescinded for each program, project, or activity to which that budget authority relates or the targeted tax benefit proposed to be repealed, as the case may be. A targeted tax benefit may only be proposed to be repealed under this section during the 10-legislative-day period commencing on the day after the date of enactment of the provision proposed to be repealed.

“(2) In the case of an appropriation Act that includes accounts within the jurisdiction of more than one subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, the President in proposing to rescind budget authority under this section shall send a separate special message and accompanying draft bill for accounts within the jurisdiction of each such subcommittee.

“(3) Each special message shall specify, with respect to the budget authority proposed to be rescinded, the following—

“(A) the amount of budget authority which he proposes to be rescinded;

“(B) any account, department, or establishment of the Government to which such budget authority is available for obligation, and the specific project or governmental functions involved;

“(C) the reasons why the budget authority should be rescinded;

“(D) to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated fiscal, economic, and budgetary effect (including the effect on outlays and receipts in each fiscal year) of the proposed rescission;

“(E) all facts, circumstances, and considerations relating to or bearing upon the proposed rescission and the decision to effect the proposed rescission, and to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated effect of the proposed rescission upon the objects, purposes, and programs for which the budget authority is provided.

Each special message shall specify, with respect to the proposed repeal of targeted tax benefits, the information required by subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E), as it relates to the proposed repeal; and “(F) a reduction in the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, if proposed by the President.

(4) For any rescission of budget authority, the President may either submit a special message under this section or under section 101 of the Line Item Veto Act. Funds proposed to be rescinded under this section may not be proposed to be rescinded under section 101 of that Act.

“(c) PROCEDURES FOR EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION.—

“(1)(A) Before the close of the second legislative day of the House of Representatives after the date of receipt of a special message transmitted to Congress under subsection (b), the majority leader or minority leader of the House of Representatives shall introduce (by request) the draft bill accompanying that special message. If the bill is not introduced as provided in the preceding sentence, then, on the third legislative day of the House of Representatives after the date of receipt of that special message, any Member of that House may introduce the bill.

“(B) The bill shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, as applicable. The committee shall report the bill without substantive revision and with or without recommendation. The bill shall be reported not later than the seventh legislative day of that House after the date of receipt of that special message. If that committee fails to report the bill within that period, that committee shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill, and the bill shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

“(C) During consideration under this paragraph, any Member of the House of Representatives may move to strike any proposed rescission or rescissions of budget authority or any proposed repeal of a targeted tax benefit, as applicable, if supported by 49 other Members.

“(D) A vote on final passage of the bill shall be taken in the House of Representatives on or before the close of the 10th legislative day of that House after the date of the introduction of the bill in that House. If the bill is passed, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall cause the bill to be engrossed, certified, and transmitted to the Senate within one calendar day of the day on which the bill is passed.

“(2)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of a bill under this section shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

“(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on a bill under this section shall not exceed 4 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. It shall not be in order to move to recommit a bill under this section or to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill is agreed to or disagreed to.

“(C) Appeals from decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the Rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to a bill under this section shall be decided without debate.

“(D) Except to the extent specifically provided in the preceding provisions of this subsection, consideration of a bill under this section shall be governed by the Rules of the House of Representatives. It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider any rescission bill introduced pursuant to the provisions of this section under a suspension of the rules or under a special rule.

“(3)(A) A bill transmitted to the Senate pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) shall be referred to its Committee on Appropriations or Committee on Finance, as applicable. That committee shall report the bill without substantive revision and with or without recommendation. The bill shall be reported not later than the seventh legislative day of the Senate after it receives the bill. A committee failing to report the bill within such period shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill, and the bill shall be placed upon the appropriate calendar.

“(B) During consideration under this paragraph, any Member of the Senate may move to strike any proposed rescission or rescissions of budget authority or any proposed repeal of a targeted tax benefit, as applicable, if supported by 14 other Members.

“(4)(A) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill under this section shall be privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

“(B) Debate in the Senate on a bill under this section, and all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith (including debate pursuant to subparagraph (C)), shall not exceed 10 hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

“(C) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with a bill under this section shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill, except that in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto, shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from time under their control on the passage of a bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

“(D) A motion in the Senate to further limit debate on a bill under this section is not debatable. A motion to recommit a bill under this section is not in order.

“(d) AMENDMENTS AND DIVISIONS PROHIBITED.—Except as otherwise provided by this section, no amendment to a bill considered under this section shall be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate. It shall not be in order to demand a division of the question in the House of Representatives (or in a Committee of the Whole) or in the Senate. No motion to suspend the application of this subsection shall be in order in either House, nor shall it be in order in either House to suspend the application of this subsection by unanimous consent.

“(e) REQUIREMENT TO MAKE AVAILABLE FOR OBLIGATION.—(1) Any amount of budget authority proposed to be rescinded in a special message transmitted to Congress under subsection (b) shall be made available for obligation on the day after the date on which either House rejects the bill transmitted with that special message.

“(2) Any targeted tax benefit proposed to be repealed under this section as set forth in a special message transmitted by the President shall not be deemed repealed unless the bill transmitted with that special message is enacted into law.

"EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED RESCISSIONS

"SEC. 1012. (a) PROPOSED RESCISSION OF BUDGET AUTHORITY OR REPEAL OF TARGETED

Tax Benefits.—The President may propose, at the time and in the manner provided in subsection (b), the rescission of any budget authority provided in an appropriation Act or repeal of any targeted tax benefit provided in any revenue Act. If the President proposes a rescission of budget authority, he may also propose to reduce the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 by an amount that does not exceed the amount of the proposed rescission. Funds made available for obligation under this procedure may not be proposed for rescission again under this section.

“(b) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—

“(1) The President may transmit to Congress a special message proposing to rescind amounts of budget authority or to repeal any targeted tax benefit and include with that special message a draft bill that, if enacted, would only rescind that budget authority or repeal that targeted tax benefit. That bill shall clearly identify the amount of budget authority that is proposed to be rescinded for each program, project, or activity to which that budget authority relates or the targeted tax benefit proposed to be repealed, as the case may be. A targeted tax benefit may only be proposed to be repealed under this section during the 10-legislative-day period commencing on the day after the date of enactment of the provision proposed to be repealed.

“(2) In the case of an appropriation Act that includes accounts within the jurisdiction of more than one subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, the President in proposing to rescind budget authority under this section shall send a separate special message and accompanying draft bill for accounts within the jurisdiction of each such subcommittee.

“(3) Each special message shall specify, with respect to the budget authority proposed to be rescinded, the following—

“(A) the amount of budget authority which he proposes to be rescinded;

“(B) any account, department, or establishment of the Government to which such budget authority is available for obligation, and the specific project or governmental functions involved;

AMENDMENT NO. 31: Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED RESCISSIONS AND TARGETED TAX BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1012 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 683) is amended to read as follows:

“EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED RESCISSIONS

“SEC. 1012. (a) PROPOSED RESCISSION OF BUDGET AUTHORITY OR REPEAL OF TARGETED TAX BENEFITS.—The President may propose, at the time and in the manner provided in subsection (b), the rescission of any budget authority provided in an appropriation Act or repeal of any targeted tax benefit provided in any revenue Act. If the President proposes a rescission of budget authority, he may also propose to reduce the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 by an amount that does not exceed the amount of the proposed rescission. Funds made available for obligation under this procedure may not be proposed for rescission again under this section.

“(b) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—

“(1) The President may transmit to Congress a special message proposing to rescind amounts of budget authority or to repeal any targeted tax benefit and include with that special message a draft bill that, if enacted, would only rescind that budget authority or repeal that targeted tax benefit unless the President also proposes a reduction in the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. That bill shall clearly identify the amount of budget authority that is proposed to be rescinded for each program, project, or activity to which that budget authority relates or the targeted tax benefit proposed to be repealed, as the case may be. A targeted tax benefit may only be proposed to be repealed under this section during the 10-legislative-day period commencing on the day after the date of enactment of the provision proposed to be repealed.

“(2) In the case of an appropriation Act that includes accounts within the jurisdiction of more than one subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, the President in proposing to rescind budget authority under this section shall send a separate special message and accompanying draft bill for accounts within the jurisdiction of each such subcommittee.

“(3) Each special message shall specify, with respect to the budget authority proposed to be rescinded, the following—

“(A) the amount of budget authority which he proposes to be rescinded;

“(B) any account, department, or establishment of the Government to which such budget authority is available for obligation, and the specific project or governmental functions involved;

“(C) the reasons why the budget authority should be rescinded;

“(D) to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated fiscal, economic, and budgetary effect (including the effect on outlays and receipts in each fiscal year) of the proposed rescission;

“(E) all facts, circumstances, and considerations relating to or bearing upon the proposed rescission and the decision to effect the proposed rescission, and to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated effect of the proposed rescission upon the objects, purposes, and programs for which the budget authority is provided; and

“(F) a reduction in the appropriate discretionary spending limit set forth in section 601(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, if proposed by the President.

Each special message shall specify, with respect to the proposed repeal of targeted tax benefits, the information required by subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E), as it relates to the proposed repeal.

“(c) PROCEDURES FOR EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION.—

“(1)(A) Before the close of the second legislative day of the House of Representatives after the date of receipt of a special message transmitted to Congress under subsection (b), the majority leader or minority leader of the House of Representatives shall introduce (by request) the draft bill accompanying that special message. If the bill is not introduced as provided in the preceding sentence, then, on the third legislative day of the House of Representatives after the date of receipt of that special message, any Member of that House may introduce the bill.

“(B) The bill shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, as applicable. The committee shall report the bill without substantive revision and with or without recommendation. The bill shall be reported not later than the seventh legislative day of that House after the date of receipt of that special message. If that committee fails to report the bill within that period, that committee shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill, and the bill shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

“(C) During consideration under this paragraph, any Member of the House of Representatives may move to strike any proposed rescission or rescissions of budget authority or any proposed repeal of a targeted tax benefit, as applicable, if supported by 49 other Members.

“(D) A vote on final passage of the bill shall be taken in the House of Representatives on or before the close of the 10th legislative day of that House after the date of the introduction of the bill in that House. If the bill is passed, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall cause the bill to be engrossed, certified, and transmitted to the Senate within one calendar day of the day on which the bill is passed.

“(2)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of a bill under this section shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

“(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on a bill under this section shall not exceed 4 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. It shall not be in order to move to recommit a bill under this section or to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill is agreed to or disagreed to.

“(C) Appeals from decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the Rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to a bill under this section shall be decided without debate.

“(D) Except to the extent specifically provided in the preceding provisions of this subsection, consideration of a bill under this section shall be governed by the Rules of the House of Representatives. It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider any rescission bill introduced pursuant to the provisions of this section under a suspension of the rules or under a special rule.

“(3)(A) A bill transmitted to the Senate pursuant to paragraph (1)(D) shall be referred to its Committee on Appropriations or Committee on Finance, as applicable. That committee shall report the bill without substantive revision and with or without recommendation. The bill shall be reported not later than the seventh legislative day of the Senate after it receives the bill. A committee failing to report the bill within such period shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill, and the bill shall be placed upon the appropriate calendar.

“(B) During consideration under this paragraph, any Member of the Senate may move to strike any proposed rescission or rescissions of budget authority or any proposed repeal of a targeted tax benefit, as applicable, if supported by 14 other Members.

“(4)(A) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill under this section shall be privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

“(B) Debate in the Senate on a bill under this section, and all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith (including debate pursuant to subparagraph (C)), shall not exceed 10 hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

“(C) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with a bill under this section shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill, except that in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto, shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from time under their control on the passage of a bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

“(D) A motion in the Senate to further limit debate on a bill under this section is not debatable. A motion to recommit a bill under this section is not in order.

“(d) AMENDMENTS AND DIVISIONS PROHIBITED.—Except as otherwise provided by this section, no amendment to a bill considered under this section shall be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate. It shall not be in order to demand a division of the question in the House of Representatives (or in a Committee of the Whole) or in the Senate. No motion to suspend the application of this subsection shall be in order in either House, nor shall it be in order in either House to suspend the application of this subsection by unanimous consent.

“(e) REQUIREMENT TO MAKE AVAILABLE FOR OBLIGATION.—(1) Any amount of budget authority proposed to be rescinded in a special message transmitted to Congress under subsection (b) shall be made available for obligation on the day after the date on which either House rejects the bill transmitted with that special message.

“(2) Any targeted tax benefit proposed to be repealed under this section as set forth in a special message transmitted by the President shall not be deemed repealed unless the bill transmitted with that special message is enacted into law.

“(f) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) the term ‘appropriation Act’ means any general or special appropriation Act, and any Act or joint resolution making supplemental, deficiency, or continuing appropriations;

“(2) the term ‘legislative day’ means, with respect to either House of Congress, any day of session; and

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

*I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour * * .—1 Timothy 2:1-3.

Eternal God, Lord of history, Ruler of the nations, with grateful hearts we anticipate the annual national prayer breakfast to be held tomorrow morning. We pray that You will govern every detail of that significant event. As this microcosm of the world gathers—from every State in the Union and from more than 150 nations—make Your presence felt, and guide each participant.

We pray for a special blessing upon President and Mrs. Clinton, Vice President and Mrs. Gore, and all those from the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of Government who are present, that they may be specially blessed and strengthened. We pray for Thy blessing upon the heads of state from a number of nations who will be present.

Grant, mighty God, that this will not be just an event soon forgotten, but that it shall become a tidal wave of prayer for the Nation and the world.

In the name of the Lord of Lords and the King of Kings. Amen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INHOFE). Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa is recognized to speak for up to 20 minutes.

FEDERAL RESERVE WILL RAISE INTEREST RATES AGAIN

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, it is widely rumored that the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates today for the seventh time in the past year. Hard-working Americans all across this country can only hope that the Fed will give a second thought to an unnecessary and destructive action. The Federal Reserve is an independent and powerful fourth branch of Government—a branch of Government, I might add, that is unelected and essentially unchecked by reasonable examination.

While I disagree with Alan Greenspan's policies, I must give him credit for a superb ability to manipulate the press and many others, including many Members of Congress. Somehow, Mr. Greenspan has created an aura of naturalism, a feeling that his actions are somehow preset by immutable economic realities, some form of the invisible hand operating there that causes us to do things that we cannot change. In fact, his position is based on a conservative ideology that favors the long-term interest of bondholders and bankers but shows little sympathy for hard-working, middle-income families.

In fact, his policies are specifically intended to force a significant number of breadwinners out of work and into the unemployment lines. In fact, I read in the paper the other day that Mr. Greenspan, in testimony, was saying that unemployment rates were coming down and they were approaching a 5.4-percent rate of unemployment, and he thought that was getting too low, that unemployment ought to be higher than that. That is his feeling. That is where he is coming from.

Thus, the Federal Reserve's policies are designed to keep millions of Americans out of work, in spite of the fact that the law which governs them specifically provides that the Federal Reserve is to balance the goal of maximizing production and employment with the goal of keeping prices stable and moderating long-term interest rates.

Mr. President, as I said earlier, the Federal Reserve has already raised interest rates six times over the past year. As a result, the prime rate increased from 6 to 8.5 percent, a 41-percent jump in interest rates in just 1 year. These actions by the Fed amount to a bill to the American taxpayers for $107 billion over 5 years—$713 per taxpayer. Why this bill? It is a bill to pay the resulting higher interest costs to service the Federal debt.

The Federal Reserve's repeated interest rate hikes have also had an important negative effect on Americans. They have cost nearly every business in the country large sums in higher interest rates.

In addition, the average buyer of a new house will pay an extra $158 per month on a fixed rate mortgage—that is nearly $1,900 a year, more than enough to prevent many Americans from attaining a key component of the American dream, owning your own home. Millions of other American families are being forced to pay more on their adjustable rate home mortgages, more on their bank loans, and more for interest rates on their cars and on their credit card balances.

Even more significantly, the six, and now probably seven, increases in interest rates will and are, in fact, designed to, eliminate jobs. Federal Reserve officials do not use those terms, although Mr. Greenspan came close to it in testimony the other day. But that is clearly their intent. Their intent is to keep unemployment high. They want to artificially slow the economy down and reduce the number of available jobs. In many cases, that will mean that people will be fired.

In other cases, that will mean that a job will not be there for someone looking for work. It will mean that families with breadwinners actively looking for work will not have their basic needs met. The financial strain on those families will cost both economic and psychological damage.

It also means an increase in the welfare roles. Some of us have been working hard to fix our broken welfare system. It is failing both the taxpayers and those who rely on it. But a key to welfare reform that works is the availability of good jobs. I think all of us agree that we want to move people from welfare to work and to self-sufficiency; that is, all but perhaps those on the Federal Reserve Board. Their recent penchant for raising interest rates in order to keep the unemployment rate up will make ending welfare as we know it impossible.

Why would the Federal Reserve want to do that? Well, there is an economic concept called nonaccelerating inflation rate of unemployment. This concept says that when unemployment falls below a certain level, it becomes harder to find employees, then it is easier to demand higher wages and wages will rise. Some economists think that the natural rate of unemployment in the United States—the point where lower unemployment will cause inflation—is about 6 percent. This, obviously, is what Mr. Greenspan believes.

The Fed's principal justification for its six increases in interest rates has been their fear of rising inflation. Well, let us take a look at that.

Last year, the Consumer Price Index, the CPI, went up a meager 2.7 percent, exactly the same rate of inflation as in 1993. If you take out the more volatile food and fuel costs, the rate increased by just 2.6 percent, the lowest rate of inflation since 1965. And, on top of that, Mr. Greenspan believes that the CPI was actually overstating inflation, as he says, by anywhere from 0.5 to 1.5 percent.

Mr. Greenspan has been talking a lot about this lately. He said it in testimony before a congressional committee.

Well, if he were right about the CPI being overstated by that much—and I have my doubts about that—then Mr. Greenspan has pushed a huge burden on our economy when even he believes that inflation has been under 2 percent a year over the last 3 years.

So Mr. Greenspan cannot have it both ways. He cannot say, on the one hand, we have to raise interest rates because inflation is threatening and, on the other hand, come before a committee of Congress and say that inflation has been overstated and it is really not as high as it has been; it really has been lower than that. He cannot have it both ways.

And yet, we now have interest rates going up for the seventh time in 1 year. Again, an ideology that says we have to reward the long-term bondholders but forget about our Main Street businesses; forget about our farmers; forget about our homeowners and young people wanting to buy a house; forget about people buying a car on time; people paying off college students loans.

All of this goes up, not to mention, again, the fact that these rate increases have stuck the American taxpayer with an additional $107 billion tab to pay increased interest costs on the national debt.

For Alan Greenspan to push these further destructive increases in interest rates on the American people, while saying that inflation has been running at less than 2 percent, to me is the height of hypocrisy. Mr. Greenspan, as I said, cannot have it both ways.

I also note that the Fed Chairman recently indicated in testimony before the Finance Committee last week that he thinks there is likely to be a slowdown in the economy in the coming months. But he said that, "I see it as crucial that we extend the recent trend of low and hopefully declining inflation in the years ahead."

Well, Mr. President, we need balance between the need to fight inflation and the need to keep our economy moving. The law, as I read it, requires a balance. But, right now, there is no balance. There is an imbalance.

All of the Fed's weight is now toward the single goal of cutting any possibility of rising inflation in the future. That is wrong, and I believe it is very likely going to send our economy into a recession.

Robert Eisner, a respected professor at Northwestern University, made an excellent analogy, comparing the economy with a patient with clogged arteries. "The patient would have a longer and better life by exercising and expanding the capacity of his heart and circulation system," Eisner said. "But what Dr. Greenspan has done, I think unwisely, is simply to put the patient to bed."

Well, Mr. Greenspan talks about the dangers of large deficits on the economy. And I agree with him on that point. We do need to keep our deficits coming down. But his push to higher interest rates is adding to the deficit—hugely. Higher Federal interest payments will add $107 billion to the Federal deficit over the next 5 years. This totally wipes out more than 20 percent of the deficit reduction achieved by our economic recovery package of 1993.

It is almost as if Mr. Greenspan does not want to see the efforts that we took here to reduce the deficit succeed. He is wiping out all of those gains that we have made to reduce the deficit.

There is considerable reason to believe the idea that inflation will automatically rise because the unemployment rate has fallen below 6 percent is wrong. Things have changed. Wages are more closely tied to productivity increases. And, there is a greater ability to move manufacturing overseas if the price of producing many items in the United States rises.

There have also been large changes in the retail sector. The large increase in discount stores is putting greater downward price pressures on the entire system. There is a growing willingness of consumers to use non-brand-name products, also creating a real difficulty of manufacturers and retailers to raise prices.

Some people also see a new culture developing in many manufacturing areas which places considerable pressure on suppliers to avoid cost increases and to develop new, lower cost methods of producing goods. To some extent, gains in computer designs are providing methods to accomplish that goal. Productivity seems to be covering a significant share of the wage increases that are occurring.

I would also note, Mr. President, that wage and salary costs have only increased by about 3 percent in 1994. A significant part of that is covered, as I said, by increases in productivity. So, wage costs were—considering productivity—less than the inflation rate in 1994. I want to repeat that because it is very important to note this. Wage costs were, when we consider the increase in productivity, less than the inflation rate in 1994.

So, Mr. President, economic theories that may have proven true in the 1950's or 1960's or 1970's may not be useful today. I believe that Mr. Greenspan is living in the past. Companies that have recently hired large numbers of employees do not seem to need to pay higher wages. Lands' End hired 2,200 people for the Christmas season, Sears hired 40,000 Christmas workers, but they saw no increase in wage levels. MCI, which hires 10,000 to 15,000 people a year, also has not been pushed to raise wages.

So where, I ask, is this inflation that the Fed has been expecting and warning about? Mr. Greenspan says if we do not act now, it will come. The Fed says it takes a long time for the pain of their interest rate increases to work their way through the economy to cause the economy to slow down; that is, to interpret that, to cause enough people to be laid off and fired for enough unemployed people to stay that way. I may agree with that. It may take from 6 to 18 months for that to happen.

Is it logical, I ask, to rush forward with a seventh increase in interest rates when we have not even seen the impact of the earlier increases? Since the Fed Chairman believes inflation has been running at less than 2 percent, I believe we could take a very small risk of a slight increase in inflation in order to limit the likelihood that the economy will take a serious plunge into recession and far higher unemployment. I would think it would be far more prudent to wait to increase interest rates any more.

In fact, Mr. President, I believe that from the actions taken by the Fed with this recent increase in interest rates, we may be seeing in the next year a severe downturn in the economy in 1996. We might think of the height of interest rates as a mountain, and as the speed of the rate increases, remains high, and the height grows, the cliff on the other side, the deep valley into which the economy may fall, will become more painful.

I think it is past time for the Federal Reserve to pull back its bulldozer. Let the economy work through the interest rates already put in place. Then, after that has happened, we can consider further action. That is the way to get a soft landing for the economy that we all want, rather than having it tossed off a cliff. I believe that is exactly what may happen next year.

There have already been a few signs of a slowdown in the economy. Total construction fell by 7.7 percent in December, the largest decline of the year. Construction is very sensitive to interest rates. Housing fell by 8 percent; again, very sensitive to interest rates. Personnel income rose nicely in December, by 0.7 percent, but consumer spending went up by only 0.2 percent.

This morning, the leading economic indicators showed a slim 0.1 percent gain. These are signs that economic growth is near its peak. This is not the time to further burden the economy with higher interest rates. The Federal Reserve and the Open Market Committee should be balanced in its views and actions. It should not be led by ideological zeal on one single factor, inflation, and, I might say, the veiled threat of inflation. There should also be a concern for the well-being of manufacturers and farmers and main street businesses and American families and homeowners and car buyers.

So, Mr. President, I strongly urge the Federal Reserve to hold the line on interest rates, limit the damage they have already done to our economy, and give us some good news today and say they are not raising interest rates a seventh time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized for 5 minutes.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I come to the floor to talk about the subject that is before the Senate this week, and I suppose next week and possibly the week after, the balanced budget amendment. I think we will have extended debate, probably longer than we need, some of which will be to talk about options, some of which will be to talk in real debate about differences in view, but much of it will simply be designed, I think, to delay action on what I think to be a very important issue. So, it will be difficult to focus on new information.

It seems to me there is a very basic question that has to be asked first, before all the detail is entered into and that is, is it morally and fiscally responsible to spend more than we take in? I think that is the question that most Americans ask of their Government: Can we continue to spend more than we take in? Is it morally wrong to spend more than we take in, to transfer that debt to someone in the future? I think Americans ask, is it fiscally responsible to continue to spend more than we take in? The answer, obviously, "is no," it is not morally responsible, it is not fiscally responsible. So, that is the basic question. And most everyone would answer that the same.

Then we get into a great debate about how we do it. I support a balanced budget amendment. I believe very strongly that it needs to be done. I believe very strongly that it has worked in the States. What are the arguments against it? We hear them time and time again. One of them is it is not needed. The evidence is it is needed. This Congress has not balanced the budget. It has not balanced the budget in 26 years and only balanced it five times in 50 years.

So the evidence is that, sure, we can balance the budget. The fact is that Congress does not. The fact is, it is a little easier to say we like the programs; if we can put it on the credit card, we will do it. If we have to pay for it, it is a different matter. Then it is a matter of setting up priorities. Then it is a matter of a cost-benefit ratio, and we hear, "Here is what it costs. Here is the value." The decision may be different than saying "Here is the value. We do not have to pay for it now."

Some say it is not needed. I suggest that the evidence would indicate that it is. Some say we already have the tools; we can do it this year. Certainly, that is true. Again, the evidence shows that that has not happened. It is very difficult. I am persuaded that there needs to be a constitutional discipline to balance the budget on a continuing basis.

Some say it is too strict, it is too confining. It does not need to be. There are arrangements that in case of emergencies—some say in case of war—it can be changed, of course. It can be changed by a vote or supermajority vote or written into the amendment that it is changed under certain circumstances.

Again, I say to Members that almost all of the States in this country have balanced budget amendments. In my State of Wyoming it is in the constitution, and it is not troublesome for that reason. We heard an extended argument earlier this week on how courts and judges would be deciding. The evidence does not show that in the area where we have had a balanced budget amendment in the States. The courts do not do the budgeting. That is, I think, not a good reason for not moving forward.

Mr. President, the balanced budget amendment is one of the several procedural changes that seem to me to be imperative. Several of the changes were clearly in the mind of voters in November, changes that will have a long-term impact, not just on this year's decisions in the Congress, but an impact on the way Congress behaves over time. That is the more important question.

We keep expecting different results and continue to use the same process. There is really little reason to expect that results will be different if we continue to do the same thing. We need a forced discipline. We need an external constraint. I think that is true of most political bodies, frankly. Politicians love to be able to provide programs. Politicians love to be able to solve problems. Politicians sort of get to where they like to have problems to resolve for their constituents. A man with a hammer thinks every problem is a nail.

We need some constraint, some constitutional discipline. The Federal debt is nearly $5 trillion, over $18,000 for every person in this country. We spend $800-plus million per day in the gross interest payments.

So we have a moral imperative to balance the budget for people in Wyoming and people in every other State. Families have to balance, businesses have to balance, States, by and large, have to balance, and the Federal Government should have to balance as well and not pass off the debt on its children and grandchildren.

Opponents say, "We already have the tools." The evidence shows that we do not. The Federal Government has spent more than it has taken in for 55 of the last 63 years. Not a good record—not a good record—and not a good basis for saying we do not need to do anything.

So, Mr. President, I am sure we will hear about draconian cuts. The fact is that what we have to do is slow the growth. We have been increasing spending at 5 percent. Say we increase it only at 2 percent.

So I hope as we go forward, we can continue to make some points about the balanced budget, but the bottom line is, should we do it and, if so, what has to take place to require that the balanced budget be used in the Congress and be used for Federal spending.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under a previous order, the Senator from Utah [Mr. BENNETT] is recognized to speak for up to 15 minutes.

Mr. BENNETT. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. JOHNSTON pertaining to the introduction of S. 309 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, it is my understanding that I am to be recognized in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. Under a previous order, the Senator from Alaska is recognized to speak for up to 15 minutes.

MEXICAN PESO CRISIS

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, oftentimes it is not appropriate to be critical of a proposal unless you have a better solution. But I rise today to speak on the action of the administration which was announced yesterday regarding Mexico. In the opinion of the Senator from Alaska, the administration simply did an end-run around Congress and the American people when it unveiled its latest financing package for bailing out foreign investors in Mexico.

There is no question the President has the legal authority under the exchange stabilization fund to provide the $20 billion in loans and loan guarantees to the Mexican Government. However, I am concerned that this establishes a dangerous precedent and represents a use of power by the administration that was, in my opinion, unwarranted. It should be noted that the potential of unilaterally using the emergency stabilization fund was not conveyed to many of the Members who were involved in working with the administration on the potential alternatives associated with this financial crisis.

In any event, it has been less than 6 weeks since the Mexican Government reversed its longstanding policy of maintaining a pegged value for the Mexican peso and devalued the peso by nearly 13 percent. This devaluation plunged the Mexican stock and currency markets into a panic and a crisis that resulted in the peso dropping by more than 30 percent in a matter of just a few days.

It was at that point that the Clinton administration came forward and offered, first, a $6 billion credit line to Mexico in an effort to stabilize the currency. By January 3, Treasury saw fit to extend this line of credit to $9 billion and there were some other governments that came in, and commercial banks, for another $9 billion. So there was approximately $18 billion available for stabilizing the peso at that time. I include the $6 billion I previously mentioned.

When I made an inquiry to the administration about this taxpayer-financed $9 billion credit line, I was assured that the American taxpayer would not be at risk because the credit line was fully collateralized by Mexico.

Since January 3 we have seen the peso crisis not abate. It only got worse. The peso dropped 45 percent in barely 1 month. This led the administration to raise the specter of as much as a $40 billion credit line to stabilize the peso. And by yesterday, the size of the bailout had grown another 25 percent to nearly $50 billion, with at least $20 billion coming from U.S. participation.

The specifics of that participation, as indicated in a newspaper article, suggests that commercial banks will be in for $3 billion; Canada, $1 billion; Latin American countries, $1 billion; the Bank for International Settlements, $10 billion; the International Monetary Fund, $17.8 billion; and, as I have indicated, the United States Treasury, some $20 billion.

Why are we putting so much taxpayer money at risk? Who are we defunding and who are we bailing out with this taxpayer-financed line of credit? And how did Mexico fall into the crisis?

Mr. President I would note that most of this debt is represented by bearer bonds. That means whoever holds them basically owns them. It is like owning a $100 bill. You can walk in and turn it into two 50's or five 20's. The significance of that is it is very difficult to identify who specifically holds those debt instruments.

What we have learned in the last month, however, is that this crisis has not just happened overnight. It has been building for a year or more. It was clearly foreseen by the United States and Mexican Governments. In fact, the New York Times recently reported that United States Treasury officials warned the Mexican Government as early as last summer the country's foreign debt had become dangerously high and that the peso was being maintained at an artificially high level.

But, for strictly internal political reasons, the Mexican Government chose to compound the crisis by continuing to print billions of pesos. As far as I know they were printing them yesterday. They may still be printing them today. Compounding the Mexican Government's mismanagement of its finances and its insatiable desire to maintain a strong peso and excessive foreign imports, the Government allowed its foreign currency reserves to drop from $29 billion in February to less than $7 billion in December.

Now Mexico faces the daunting prospect of having to deal with foreign debt redemptions that are listed at approximately $80 billion this year, $39 billion of which is in the public sector. The significance of that is that is debt that is falling due this year, not all at once this year, but it will have to be met or refinanced this year. It is very likely, when the guarantees are in force, the holders of these notes, these bearer notes, are going to immediately want to convert their pesos into dollars and increase rather than decrease the capital flight out of Mexico.

If you and I held bearer notes in this crisis, what would be the inducement to hang on if the guarantees were there and we knew we could be paid? A fiduciary responsibility would suggest the holder of those notes would run in, cash them in, and take his or her principal and leave the country. The only consideration that might keep them there is the attractiveness of the high interest rates. That rate may be in excess of 20 percent, which would certainly be an inducement.

But then the question is, Who are we bailing out? And the administration has yet to address specifically who holds that debt. They say the mutual funds hold the debt. The mutual funds are sophisticated investors. If they make an investment mistake, should the taxpayer have the responsibility of bailing them out anymore than any other individual who makes a financial investment and looks for a return on that investment, and tries to measure the risk against the inducement which is the interest that he is generating on that investment?

If the risk is too great or the investment goes sour, obviously the alternative is you lose your principal. But that is not what is happening here and that is why I am critical of this proposal.

I think there is a growing danger that the Mexican Government will have to return to Washington before this year is out seeking another $10, $15, or perhaps $20 billion in taxpayer funds for a second bailout. We were told by the assistant to the President of Mexico that the total debt of Mexico was about $180 billion, that the current debt was something in the area of close to $80 billion, and now we are talking about approximately a $50 billion guaranteed fund.

It is interesting to note that yesterday, Mr. Bill Seidman, former head of the FDIC and the RTC, in testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, indicated that the best way to resolve the Mexican financial crisis was to have the Mexican Government sit down with its creditors and renegotiate the terms of the loans that are coming due this year. He adamantly opposed a taxpayer bailout of speculators in Mexican debt. I believe Bill Seidman is absolutely right. Much of that Mexican debt carries rates of interest of 25 to 40 percent.

Where can you get that today in the United States? You are not going to get it in your savings account or your mutual fund. There is associated risk with the attractiveness of the investment and the potential return. Why should the American taxpayer dollars be used to pay off this debt of 100 cents on the dollar plus interest when we do not know who those holders are, other than the gray area of people who bought bearer notes or mutual funds, who made these risky investments simply to attain a higher interest rate? If they can get the Federal Government to guarantee what we have done, they will be very, very happy with such high interest rates.

Investors knew precisely what types of investments they were making. They were speculating. They were almost junk bond type of investments. And for American taxpayer funds to be used to guarantee this investment is unconscionable in my opinion.

Mr. Seidman's suggestion is that the debtors and the creditors sit down, the creditors being the holders, the debtors obviously being the Mexican Government, to work something out. How does that work? It is done all the time. I was a commercial banker for 25 years. If there is no blood in the turnip, if your borrower cannot pay, you sit down, you try to work something out, and you reschedule the debt, and take 40, 50, 60, or 70 cents on the dollar. You work something out. You just do not let everything collapse. We have not given this process a chance to work. I think we should.

Mr. President, yesterday the administration stated that the United States will impose strict conditions on the assistance it provides with a goal of ensuring that this package imposes no costs on the U.S. taxpayer. As of today, I am not aware that any of my colleagues know precisely what those conditions are. I have been involved in the meetings. I would expect the administration will make those conditions known, and I would encourage that they make them known before a single American dollar is used to provide guarantees to the Government of Mexico.

A factsheet released yesterday by the Treasury Department implies that these loans will be collateralized with the proceeds from Mexican oil exports. Mr. President, 2 weeks ago, I asked the Treasury to specifically identify how much of Pemex's revenue the Mexican Government has pledged, and how that revenue will be handled by United States financial authorities; how much of it is pledged, because obviously you can only attach what is not pledged but still assignable. I believe that it is imperative that for every dollar in loans and loan guarantees, the Mexican Government has to come up with some way to make a deposit of an equal amount of foreign hard currency in a Federal Reserve bank account in the United States from their oil export revenues.

I think the American taxpayer must be assured that so long as there are outstanding United States Government guarantees of Mexican debt, that an amount equal to the debt is maintained under the control of our Government. Otherwise, we risk the real possibility that the current Mexican Government or succeeding Governments could renounce the collateral agreement with the United States and leave the American taxpayer holding the bag. What are we going to do after these notes are called, so to speak, if the guarantees have to be delivered? We do not have another monetary stabilization fund to go to.

The response I received when I made an inquiry from the Treasury Department regarding collateralization of this debt was completely unsatisfactory to me. It does not appear to me that the new agreement will be any different, although I hope it will be. Under the previous draft agreement, the Mexican Government is required to turn over the proceeds from its oil exports only—get this, Mr. President—turn over the proceeds from its oil exports only in the event that the Mexican Government defaults on these bonds and only after such a default occurs. In other words, the Mexican Government would not establish an escrow account in the United States that can be immediately attached by the United States Government in the event of default. Another way of saying it is that there will be no collateral provided by the Mexican Government to offset the risk of default.

Mr. President, if we look at the structure of this, where we can only call, if you will, on this process after the Government is in default, I assure you that the practicality of that is basically unworkable. It is simply naive to believe that if Mexico, after receiving some $50 billion in loan guarantees from the United States Government and the IMF, faces a default on these bonds in the future, that it will have the political will and capacity to turn its oil revenues over to the United States Government. At that time, if the Government defaults, it is everyone for himself. The demands internally in Mexico will dictate that there will never be realistically a fund set up for the oil revenues, if indeed default occurs.

It does not take much imagination to know that, if in the future, Mexico faces default on United States Government-backed bonds, the entire Mexican economy will surely be in political, social, and economic chaos that will only be exacerbated by being forced to turn over its oil receipts to its neighbor in the north.

Let us be realistic. What caused this problem is too much debt. We have other nations that are friendly to us that have too much debt. Canada from the north would be the first to admit that.

What I fear is that, if such an economic crisis were to occur in the future in Mexico, the United States, having already put its $20 billion at risk, basically, would simply have to extend further credit lines to Mexico in order to stave off the political crisis that will be evident in that country. In other words, if we start down the line of extending $20 billion to Mexico, we are laying the foundation for future bailouts that I think will put even more American taxpayer money at risk.

Mr. President, before we extend $20 billion of credit to Mexico, we must have ironclad guarantees of internal economic reforms in Mexico, and I would like to see 100 percent collateralization of the loan.

Finally, Mr. President, it struck me during the entire negotiations that the best way to have handled this would have been to propose a guarantee on a percentage, if you will, of the current term debt that Mexico is exposed to.

Let us assume that we were to guarantee $40 billion of the $50 billion and require that the holders of the debt stay in on the balance, that other $10 billion. In other words, we would have been first out with a guarantee; the holders would have been last out. The explanation given as to why that was unworkable is we did not know who the holders of the debt were. I do not totally accept that. I think, had we waited, we could have forced the holders of that debt to come forward and make a proposal that they would stay in for a portion of their participation in return for the U.S. Government guarantee.

So that was my suggestion, which was recognized but rejected under the explanation that it was impossible to know who the holders of the debt were and, therefore, they could not proceed with that kind of an arrangement.

So time will tell, Mr. President, just what the risk to the U.S. taxpayer is. But this Senator is very concerned about the agreement that was made, and I felt an obligation to present my views to my colleagues.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). Under the previous order, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] is recognized to speak for up to 10 minutes.

RECOGNITION OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, there is almost nothing in Government worse than to have people do significant work and get almost no credit for it. So today, as the Federal Reserve Board once again closets itself in its concrete temple, locks its door, goes in the secret room, and makes decisions about interest rates that every single American will pay, I figured maybe we ought to give credit to those who are going to do the work and cast the votes. I do not know what is going to be announced in the next couple of hours, but I am told by almost everybody who thinks they know that the Federal Reserve Board will increase interest rates for the seventh time in less than a year; for the seventh time in less than a year they will increase people's mortgage rates.

I met a fellow the other day who said, "I am paying $115 more now for my home mortgage now because of the Fed." In the past year, the Federal Reserve has increased people's interest rates on credit cards and has increased the Federal Government's deficit by $125 billion over 5 years just to pay the interest on the debt.

So they take action that has a significant impact on this country. I want to tell the American people who they are. Lord, it seems to me if you are doing work this important, you at least need to get credit for it. Let me tell the American people who is going to do this today. This is the Federal Reserve Board on this chart, the top line of pictures. These people are all appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. So they go through the Senate for confirmation. But they are joined in that room—which the public is kept out of, by the way—by presidents of the Federal Reserve banks in the country, the regional Federal banks.

These people are not appointed by the President. They are not confirmed by the Senate. But they are going to go into the room on a rotating basis. There will be five of them in that room today who will actually cast votes on monetary policy and interest rates. They are not appointed by anybody, not confirmed by anybody. They owe their jobs to the regional Federal Reserve bank boards of directors, the majority of whom are their local bankers. These folks will go into the room representing the local bankers' interests. They will take action to increase interest rates for this country.

The four, today, who will vote—it is a rotating vote—are Mr. McDonough from New York, Kathy Minehan from Boston, Michael Moskow from Chicago, Tom Melzer from St. Louis, and Tom Hoenig from Kansas City. They will, with the Board of Governors, cast votes.

Let me, without being disrespectful, say this—and I emphasize that I am not being disrespectful. I do not have any idea what is in their heads down at the Federal Reserve Board. I would like to have those heads examined to find out what facts are rattling around in those heads that persuade these people that there is a new wave of inflation somewhere on the horizon. What persuades them to put the brakes on the American economy? Who has appointed them to become human brake pads to decide to slow down the American economy? And whose divine notion is it that unemployment in America should never fall below 5 percent, and economic growth should apparently never go above 2½, 3 percent. Where on Earth did these notions come from?

If this country faced credible inflation problems, I would not be here at all criticizing the Federal Reserve Board. We have had four successive years of decreasing inflation. There is no—I emphasize no—credible evidence that we have a new wave of inflation on the horizon. Yet, today, and again, if the pundits are correct, the Federal Reserve Board will take one more step that most surely will put the brakes on the economic progress we have seen and probably move this country toward a recession.

This is not a newfound concern of mine. The Federal Reserve Board operates by itself, in secret, and no, I am not saying let us put politics in monetary policy. I am not saying give to it the Senator from Utah to handle or the Senator from North Dakota or my colleagues in the Senate or the House. But here is a copy of the Constitution. The copy of the Constitution begins with these three words: "We the people"—not we the bankers, the central bankers or we the Federal Reserve, but "We the people." A question this important, that affects economic growth in this country and the pocketbook of every single American, and especially coming at a time when all of the credible evidence would seem to me to imply that the Fed's policies are wrong, leads me again to ask the question: Why does this continue? By whose authority does this continue?

I hope one day soon that we will discover a Federal Reserve Board that understands that you have two twin economic goals in America. Yes, two: price stability, absolutely, which has been a goal in this country for decades. Price stability and full employment. Price stability and economic growth are the twin economic goals in this country, only one of which this board cares much about. And even at that, when it cares about price stability, it fights the wrong fight at the wrong time.

I have young children who look for dragons under their bed at night because they hear noises and they wonder where does it come from, where does it lurk? Then they read books like Tony the Dragon. When you look at all of the credible evidence, where are the dragons this board looks for? What fights does the Fed wage, that it wins because it has no opponent?

I hope one of these days the American people will get better news from that Federal agency, that dinosaur that still operates in secret when the watchword of American democracy is "openness." Maybe one day there will be enough of us here who care and enough of us here who think alike to believe that reform—yes, reform—ought to touch this institution as well.

A CALL FOR REFORM

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me turn to one other quick item. I am going to speak about this at greater length later. But I want to touch on it today, because I have watched with amazement in recent days reformers, people who say let us tip everything upside down and shake it, let us change it, let us reform it.

Among that call for reform, joined by many Governors in our country, is a plea by those folks that what we ought to do is decide the Federal Government cannot do anything right, and State governments do everything right, and we ought to have a massive transfer of money, a substantial transfer of resources between the States and the Federal Government, moving, of course, from the Federal Government to the States.

I am willing to concede that the Federal Government has too much waste; it is too bureaucratic, too big. The Clinton administration has taken action to downsize it. One hundred thousand people who used to work for the Federal Government are not working for the Federal Government anymore. At the end of 2 more years, it will be 250,000 people; 250,000 jobs will have been eliminated. That is downsizing in a real way.

I reject the notion somehow that is being thrown around by the reformers, especially by Governors, who come out with press conferences and television lights and put on a big brassy show and say, "Here are 250 programs you ought to abolish. Throw all the funding for these programs into a block grant and send us a check." These are the very same Governors who are back home busting their buttons, boasting about all the tax cuts back home. They have the gall and brass to come to Washington and say all the things you have done and all that money—send us the money and with no directions. Put it in something called a block grant, and we will take care of it.

Is there no priority for child nutrition in this country? Is that not important? They are asking us to put funding for things like WIC, and other programs dealing with children, in a block grant and send it back to the Governors. We're supposed to let the Governors work with local business interests on economic development grants. If the Governor wants to use the money to help a company from another State build a manufacturing plant in his State, that is, we are told, just fine. Let us let them make those decisions there, because we do not have a national priority on the subject or the issue of child nutrition.

Well, the fact is we do have a priority. We have established a priority over a long period of time. And I am one who does not believe that we ought to decide that get rid of those priorities that have been priorities for a long, long time. We should not just load them up into one big block to send to Governors and say, "We will make you a deal. We will raise the taxes and then we will send money to you and you figure out how you might want to spend it, while all the while you are boasting back home you are cutting State taxes."

You want the real conservative answer, Governors, the real answer, then raise the money yourself and spend it yourself.

There is no better way to create fiscal irresponsibility than for one level of Government to raise the money and another level of Government to spend the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. We need to talk through this at some length, Mr. President. Because I wonder whether I am the only one that thinks that it is a little strange to have people rush into town to say, on the one hand, that the Federal Government cannot do anything right, and on the other that they would like to continue to have our money. People are telling us to just send the money to the States and let them spend it.

The whole principle of the unfunded mandates bill, which we just passed here on the Senate floor, was that those who raise the money should decide how to spend the money. Governors and mayors were complaining mightily that we in Washington violate this principle.

Even as we dealt with the unfunded mandates bill, it was interesting to me that in many jurisdictions they were busy hooking their hose to the Federal tank, siphoning money out of here with bogus plans, such as the provider tax under Medicaid and others.

Well, reform works both ways. Responsibility works both ways. And I hope one of these days we can have a thoughtful discussion about who does what better, which things are important, which must be saved, which must take priority. I think there is room for all of us to have a thoughtful discussion about this, and I intend to say more about it in the days ahead.

Mr. President, with that, I yield the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey, under the previous order, is recognized to speak for up to 15 minutes.

THE MEXICO CRISIS IN CONTEXT

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, anyone attuned to the news over the past 6 weeks has been subjected to a daily barrage of articles and statements on Mexico's economic crisis. We read of devaluations, floats, and market slides. We hear of lines of credit, loan guarantees, IMF programs, and conditionality. We follow the daily barometers of President Clinton, Secretary Rubin, Majority Leader DOLE, and Congressman LEACH.

What we have not been getting, however, is an adequate sense of the social and political context for Mexico's troubles. But Mexico is not just an economist's case history. Mexico is a country, with people and history. Unless we understand how the current financial crunch grew out of and, in turn, affects Mexico's political and social dynamics, we will not be capable of developing a response that works for Mexico or in the Congress for us.

The financial dimensions of the Mexico problem are well understood. Like many developing countries—such as the United States in the 19th and early 20th centuries—Mexico imports foreign capital to finance growth. However, because of its relatively low domestic savings rate, Mexico's appetite for foreign capital is exceptionally high. In a sense, Mexico is similar to the United States in the 1980's, financing investment from the savings of foreigners. In 1994, for example, Mexico imported a net $28 billion in foreign capital, 8 percent of its GDP.

Less than half of that $28 billion was invested in productive assets, such as plant and machinery. The rest was volatile portfolio investment, known with justification as hot money. What made this money even hotter was the fact that much was invested in short-term debt that matures in bunches. As a result, the Mexican Government must find the resources to redeem or rollover around $52 billion in debt in 1995.

Mexico, like any other country, can attract capital from abroad only as long as investors remain confident that the return compensates for the perceived risk. This requires investor confidence in Mexico's economic, political, and social stability. It also requires relatively high interest rates, declining inflation, and a stable currency—in other words, relatively high return for relatively low risk.

The Salinas government in the late 80's cut their internal budget deficit by the equivalent of three Gramm-Rudmans. Inflation plummeted, privatization exploded. Protectionist barriers and government subsidies came tumbling down. Mexico pursued a strong peso policy both as an end in itself and as a symbol of the new Mexico. This led the Salinas government to resist the economic forces that threatened to push the peso down and, in the short run, it was successful.

Just over a year ago, the North American Free-Trade Agreement came into force and gave a huge boost to investor confidence in Mexico. However, on the very day NAFTA took effect—January 1, 1994—the Zapatista revolt began in Mexico's Chiapas State. That revolt was an attack on democratic forces from the left. Thus began a year in which social and political, as well as economic, events undermined investor confidence in Mexico. As the year unfolded, we witnessed the assassination of the ruling party Presidential candidate, and the assassination of the ruling party secretary-general amid allegations of involvement by party dinosaurs. These were attacks on democratic forces in Mexico from the right.

At the same time, the peso came under increasing economic pressure as the PRI-dominated Government turned on the fiscal and monetary taps for the elections to win the first really contested election in Mexico's history.

There was another joker in the pack, one the Mexican Government could not control. That was the Federal Reserve's decision to raise United States interest rates. The higher yields made American securities more attractive relative to Mexican securities. Because a high percentage of the capital flowing into Mexico came not from banks, as in the 1970's and 1980's, but from mutual funds and pension funds, the impact of higher American rates was magnified.

According to a study by Guillermo Calvo, professor of economics at the University of Maryland, much of the mutual fund money that flowed into Mexico came more as a response to lower interest rates in the United States than as a result of a profound understanding of Mexican economic fundamentals. When interest rates rose in the United States during 1994, this money was ready to bolt out of Mexico.

So, when the Zapatistas moved again last December, jittery foreign investors began converting their money into dollars and taking it out of the country. Mexico's foreign reserves melted away. The Government botched the resulting peso devaluation. The markets smelled fear, and the rout was on.

Governments and international financial institutions, viewing the problem as a liquidity crunch, have prescribed standard fiscal and monetary responses, which are designed to reduce domestic consumption and make exports more competitive by lowering real wages. In other words, the economists are prescribing recession to reduce the demand for foreign capital.

That is why the economists oppose political conditionality so strongly. For inserting a requirement that Mexico's wages rise in line with productivity or that Mexico try to repeg the peso at 3.5 to the dollar destroys the economic underpinning for eventual recovery.

However, the economic cure ignores Mexico's political and social context. It ignores both the pacto which lay at the heart of the Mexican model, and the new social pact upon which President Zedillo based his legitimacy.

Ernesto Zedillo was elected head of state of a country exhausted by a decade of economic reform—three Gramm-Rudmans in a matter of 4 or 5 years—and hungry for justice. He took over a population unwilling to continue to sacrifice for the benefit of others.

Zedillo promised the Mexican masses a share in the prosperity bought with their sacrifice. He promised more open politics and an overhauled justice system. He promised a secondary education to the 45 million Mexicans under age 19. In short, unlike Boris Yeltsin in Russia, he promised his people a vision.

However, Zedillo's vision threatened old-line entrenched interests in Mexico. It threatened an end to the old PRI-government gravy train. Since Zedillo does not head an old-style Leninist party, he lacks the brute party power of his predecessors to override opposition and implement his vision. In fact, he is presiding at the time when a regime is in greatest danger, the time when it tries to reform.

The only way to square the circle is economic growth, not just the 5 percent necessary to create a million jobs a year, but enough to spread the benefits to the masses and at the same time buy off the party dinosaurs, who would like nothing more than to regain their subsidies and deny the people a real voice. This growth was the instrument promised by NAFTA. It is the instrument which the crisis has taken out of Zedillo's hands. Having lost the instrument, Zedillo will be hard pressed to restore the vision.

We see the erosion already. Chiapas is active. The opposition PRD party has taken new life. As have the PRI dinosaurs. For example, when President Zedillo concluded a pact with three opposition parties that would have removed the PRI Governors of Chiapas and Tabasco States, who won disputed elections, the Governor of Tabasco brought his supporters into the streets. When President Zedillo was scheduled to announce the new social compact, the industrialists and labor leaders balked, forcing him to cancel a nationwide TV address and reveal the extent of his obligation.

This, then, is the context for the loan guarantee debate. How can the Mexican Government negotiate the fine line between financial meltdown and social-political meltdown? Let me suggest a few guidelines.

First, the United States needed to act quickly to shore up Mexico's financial system. The President has acted because the Congress delayed. If Mexico's financial system collapses, there is no hope of generating the needed growth, now or in the future. The President's support package is not to bail out Wall Street, or even individual American investors, but to give Mexico the chance to grow into social and political stability and become an even better market for American exports that create American jobs.

If Mexico's financial system collapsed because the Americans reneged on a promise—if having announced the $40 billion loan guarantees, the administration was unable to deliver anything—we would have put at risk a decade of changing Mexican attitudes toward the United States. We would have confirmed Mexico's traditional anti-Americanism that is now latent, but still lurks just beneath the surface.

Now we have a support package, we have a support package. But that package only buys time. It is up to the Mexican Government to put that time to work to generate popular support for the continued sacrifices necessary to overcome this financial setback.

So the second step must be for the Mexican Government to return decisionmaking on Mexico's economy to Mexico City. The Mexican Government must develop, announce, and implement itself a plan to pull Mexico through the crisis and prevent this problem from happening again.

That plan must not simply prescribe recession as the cure for Mexico's current account ills. It must hold out a way to grow and reduce the risk of hot money at the same time. Otherwise, Mexico is consigned to a continuing cycle of recession and currency crisis—social crisis and economic crisis.

To grow without generating a crisis, Mexico must finance more of its growth itself. That means the Mexican Government plan must increase Mexico's savings rate. The Asian dragons, for example, enjoy sources of domestically generated capital resulting from savings rates twice as high as Mexico's.

The Government plan must also encourage foreign direct investment over portfolio investment. Investment in productive assets both implies an understanding of the underlying fundamentals that reduces volatility and is more difficult to pull out with a panicked phone call.

There are many ways to do this, as countries as diverse as Chile, Indonesia, and Thailand have shown. Capital controls, however, are not an option. The means to shift the balance in favor of foreign direct investment must increase the integration of the Mexican economy, not its isolation.

It should be clear that this plan cannot be dictated by Washington. No Mexican Government can allow Washington to load up support with a wish-list of conditions and still generate the popular support required to carry it out. If we need a support package to make the economic plan work, we need a clean package to let the economic plan work.

Third, and finally, the Mexican Government must broaden its legitimacy among the Mexican people. Only democracy or dictatorship will see Mexico through the sacrifices President Zedillo will be asking of his people. Mexicans who are asked to sacrifice for the good of the system will also want a say in that system. Zedillo made an important statement with his four-party pact to open up the political system, but may be backing away in the face of resistance from the dinosaurs. That simply cannot happen.

There are those who say that we can contain the fallout if Mexico goes belly up, that, despite dire predictions of systemic risk, this is a problem, not an emerging market problem. Mexico's crisis results from the market's misjudging of the balance between risk and reward in Mexico's financial markets, this argument goes. An investment that was profitable in, for example, the Philippines 2 months ago should still be profitable.

I ask unanimous consent for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRADLEY. Unfortunately, our vulnerability is deeper than this. Many emerging markets have gotten out of control and are due for a readjustment. Investors have been blinded by high returns in many developing countries.

Thus far, outside of Mexico, investors are merely chastened, not panicked. We can expect to see a sounder evaluation of the risk-reward trade off that will play out over time. But, if Mexico melts down, we could well see the bubble burst in a global withdrawal from emerging markets. We and our OECD partners are not equipped to handle a worldwide panic that would produce a collapse in the fastest growing export market we now have and, prospectively, the biggest source of continued worldwide growth.

So it is not only investors and developing countries who should view Mexico as a wake up call. We in the OECD and the international financial institutions must begin now to put in place the institutional arrangements to handle the next Mexico. The United States simply cannot be the permanent ad hoc lender of last resort.

The current Mexico faces a long road as it pursues democratization and economic reform. During the NAFTA debate, we heard why Mexico's success is important to us in the United States. We need a stable, democratic and prosperous neighbor to our south for reasons of our own stability, democracy, and prosperity.

Nothing that has happened since December 20 has changed that calculation. We cannot turn our backs on Mexico, and Mexico cannot lose faith with itself.

Mr. GRAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. GRAMS].

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Last November, the American people sent a message loud and clear to Washington. I know first-hand, having heard this message in cafes and town hall meetings all across the State of Minnesota.

It is a simple message, with all the wisdom and common sense of the people who sent it. And yet, it is a message that Congress has failed to heed until this year.

It is time to change the way Congress taxes and spends the people's money.

This message is the same, whether I hear from parents worried about the economic future of their children, workers who fear the impact of the deficit on their jobs, or families who manage each year to balance their own books.

Cut spending, balance the Federal budget, and start getting this country out of debt. Mr. President, the balanced budget amendment is the first step on the long journey toward restoring fiscal sanity to Washington.

Mr. President, the statistics are clear: Our Nation currently faces a $4½ trillion debt. That means every child born in America is immediately saddled with nearly $20,000 in debt. And at the rate we are going, these numbers increase every year, taking with them the future of our children.

If America were a business, it would have been forced into bankruptcy years ago, with each Member of Congress liable for breach of duty. In previous centuries, there was a place for those who made a habit of spending more than they brought in: it was called debtor's prison. Today, it is called Congress.

Now, some in this body would argue that there is no need for a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. And they might have a case if we were talking about anyone else but Congress. After all, there are laws all over the books to prevent the accumulation of unmanageable debt.

But what happens when those who break the laws are those who make the laws? Simple. They ignore them.

Only the Constitution and the moral authority it represents will force Congress to do what it is supposed to do, what we were elected to do.

And only by passing a balanced budget amendment can we hope to show the American people that we will do our job and carry out the mandate they delivered last November.

Minnesotans have joined me in calling for a balanced budget amendment. It is not a new concept in our State. In fact, the first balanced budget amendment to the Constitution was sponsored in the 1930's by—not surprisingly—a Minnesotan, Congressman Harold Knutson. But like so many balanced budget amendments after it, it was left to die in committee.

Well today, more than 50 years later, we have the opportunity to complete Representative Knutson's work. And his idea that was good in the 1930's is still good today, and it ought to become part of the Constitution.

In following the balanced budget amendment, however, we must be careful that our efforts to balance the budget come through cuts in spending and not tax increases. Taxpayers did not cause the budget deficit, Congress did, and it would be unfair, unjust and unwise to cover up the irresponsible behavior of Congress by punishing taxpayers, through new taxes or higher taxes.

For that reason, I introduced my own version of the balanced budget amendment which requires that any legislation to increase taxes be approved by a three-fifths supermajority vote. It is based on the idea—unheard of in Washington—that it should be more difficult to tax away the people's hard-earned dollars than to spend them.

By requiring a supermajority vote, my legislation would protect taxpayers and put the burden on Congress to come up with the cuts.

While I prefer this version of the balanced budget amendment, I do not believe the perfect should be the enemy of the good. We can have a constitutional limitation on tax increases, and I plan to work with the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee to pass one.

But that can come at a later date. The House has scheduled a vote on such an amendment for April 15 of next year. I will urge the Senate to follow suit.

Believe me, we will pass a taxpayer protection clause to the Constitution. But let us pass the balanced budget amendment first.

And to those who might try to derail the balanced budget amendment, through killer amendments or parliamentary tactics, I ask you to think twice. I ask you to think about the impact that continued deficit spending will have on our economy, on the people's faith in their Government, and most importantly, on our children. Because it's their future we're mortgaging away with every new governmental program, with every additional dollar of debt we rack up.

When I decided to run for Congress, I did so because I was frustrated with the way our Government was being run.

Growing up on a dairy farm in Minnesota—where we did not have a lot of money, where we worked hard and cleaned our plates—taught me a lot of lessons about life. Most importantly, it taught me the fundamental principle that you should not spend what you do not have.

What kind of lessons are we teaching our children when Congress spends this country $4½ trillion in debt and what will their future be like when they are forced to pay off our bills?

I do not want my kids or grandkids to grow up wondering why we left them holding the bag.

We have to do something now. And the balanced budget amendment is the first step.

For those reasons, I urge my colleagues to pass the balanced budget amendment without delay. Because every second we push this vote off is another dollar we take away from our kids. And our kids deserve better, our country deserves better.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

RAISE THE MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, many of us in the Senate on both sides of the aisle support an increase in the minimum wage, and it is clear that the vast majority of the American people support an increase, too.

Last month, the Los Angeles Times conducted a poll of citizens across the country. As the results demonstrate, raising the minimum wage has extraordinarily high support across the entire spectrum of income groups, political party, and every other category, with the possible exception of the House Republican leadership.

Mr. President, I believe that the Los Angeles Times poll will be of interest to all of us in Congress, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the poll was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As you may know, the federal minimum wage is currently $4.25 an hour. Do you favor increasing the minimum wage, or decreasing it, or keeping it the same? ("Eliminate" was a volunteered response)

HOW THE POLL WAS CONDUCTED

The Times Poll interviewed 1,353 adults nationwide, by telephone, Jan. 19 through 22. Telephone numbers were chosen from a list of all exchanges in the nation. Random-digit dialing techniques were used so that listed and non-listed numbers could be contacted. Interviewing was conducted in English and Spanish. The sample was weighted slightly to conform with census figures for sex, race, age and education. The margin of sampling error for the total sample is plus or minus 3 percentage points. For certain other subgroups the error margin may be somewhat higher. Poll results can also be affected by other factors such as question wording and the order in which questions are presented.

DR. DAVID ELTON TRUEBLOOD

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, this past Saturday, January 28, in Richmond, IN, 150 persons from around the world gathered at Earlham College's Stout Meetinghouse for a memorial service in honor of one of the 20th century America's most prominent religious leaders, Dr. David Elton Trueblood. Dr. Trueblood, professor-at-large emeritus at Earlham, died on December 20, 1994 at Lansdale, PA. He was 94 years of age.

Dr. Trueblood was no stranger to the Senate. He first served as the guest chaplain of the Senate in August 1972. I was pleased to serve as the cosponsor, along with his former Earlham student, our late colleague Senator John East of North Carolina, for Dr. Trueblood's second visit with us as guest chaplain on the National Day of Prayer, May 3, 1984. In addition, Mr. President, Dr. Trueblood was a close and valued personal friend of long standing to our colleague, Senator MARK HATFIELD. The two men first met as Stanford University in 1946, when Dr. Trueblood was serving as the chaplain of that great institution and Senator HATFIELD was a young graduate student there.

Although he was born on a small farm near Indianola, IA, in 1900, Elton Trueblood had deep Indiana roots. His Quaker ancestors left North Carolina, where they had settled in 1682, and moved to Washington County, IN, in 1815. The Truebloods were part of the great migration of antislavery Quakers from the slaveholding States of the South to the increasingly abolitionist States of the North in the decades before the Civil War.

By the time that Dr. Trueblood joined Earlham's faculty as professor of philosophy in 1946, he had already established a distinguished academic career and a growing national reputation as a religious writer and speaker. After graduating from Iowa's William Penn College, he had earned the graduate degree of bachelor of systematic theology from Harvard University in 1926. He was awarded his doctor of philosophy degree from the Johns Hopkins University in 1934.

It was during Dr. Trueblood's studies at Johns Hopkins University that his career in the academic and religious worlds began to intersect with the Nation's political life. While completing his doctorate at Johns Hopkins, Dr. Trueblood served as the clerk of the Baltimore yearly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends. Already in demand as a preacher, Dr. Trueblood was invited to deliver the sermon at a Quaker meeting in Washington, DC. In the congregation that day was the first Quaker to become President of the United States, Herbert Hoover. That first encounter led to a long friendship between the two men which culminated in Dr. Trueblood's delivery of the eulogy at President Hoover's funeral some 35 years later.

After completing his doctoral studies at Johns Hopkins, Dr. Trueblood accepted teaching assignments at Guilford College, in North Carolina, and then at Haverford College, in Pennsylvania. After a temporary assignment as the acting chaplain of Harvard, Dr. Trueblood became the chaplain of Stanford University in 1936. He held a dual faculty appointment at Stanford as professor of philosophy.

The friendship between Herbert Hoover and Elton Trueblood blossomed when Dr. Trueblood arrived at the Stanford campus, to which President Hoover had moved after he left the White House in 1933. When President Hoover died in 1964, the Hoover family called Dr. Trueblood back from a round-the-world cruise to conduct the memorial services for the former President in West Branch, IA. After flying back to the United States from Saigon, Dr. Trueblood delivered a stirring eulogy to the 31st President before the 75,000 persons gathered for the funeral services on a hillside overlooking the Hoover Library.

When, in 1946, Dr. Trueblood received his offer to come to Earlham in Indiana, he faced a difficult decision. He enjoyed the prestige of a tenured full professorship at one of the Nation's leading universities. He was, as I noted, also Stanford's chaplain and the close friend and neighbor of former President Hoover. Yet Dr. Trueblood yearned for a smaller educational institution, for a return to his Quaker roots, and for greater freedom to pursue his writing and public speaking. And so, Mr. President, Dr. Trueblood accepted Earlham's offer, a decision about which he wrote in an article entitled "Why I Chose a Small College" for Reader's Digest.

After his arrival at Earlham in 1946, Dr. Trueblood's career as a religious writer and speaker earned him growing national following. Several years later, he was invited to speak in Washington, DC, before a church congregation that included President Dwight Eisenhower. President Eisenhower later invited Dr. Trueblood to the Oval Office at the White House. Ultimately, President Eisenhower asked Dr. Trueblood to join his administration as the Director of Religious Information for the U.S. Information Agency.

During the Eisenhower administration, Elton Trueblood developed a friendship with the young man who would be the second Quaker to become President of the United States. The young man was Vice President Richard Nixon. Dr. Trueblood and Vice President Nixon stayed in regular contact after Dr. Trueblood returned to Earlham and throughout Mr. Nixon's post-Vice-Presidential years in California and New York.

After Mr. Nixon took office as President in 1969, he honored Dr. Trueblood by inviting him to speak at the Sunday religious services held regularly in the White House. When the 1972 Republican National Convention nominated him for a second term as President, Mr. Nixon turned to Elton Trueblood to give the invocation.

As a man of character and faith, Dr. Trueblood believed deeply in loyalty to his friends. Throughout the ordeal of the Watergate scandal, Dr. Trueblood offered his friend, President Nixon, religious solace and advice in private. When, in August 1974, Mr. Nixon reached his decision to resign, the President called Dr. Trueblood at Earlham to tell him about the action that he finally had concluded that he must take.

The author of three dozen books, Dr. Trueblood was a world renowned writer. Perhaps the book for which he is best known was published the same year in which President Nixon resigned. Bringing his deep appreciation for the nexus between the spiritual life and the world of politics to its most creative fruition, Dr. Trueblood published "Abraham Lincoln: Theologian of American Anguish."

Critically acclaimed, Dr. Trueblood's study of President Lincoln's religious life became a great inspiration to numerous political leaders. President Gerald Ford kept a copy in his Oval Office. First Lady Nancy Reagan spoke of being deeply moved by Dr. Trueblood's Lincoln book when she found it in the White House Library. I am proud to say, Mr. President, that Elton Trueblood's "Abraham Lincoln" graces my own bookshelf as well.

After an extraordinary career, Dr. Trueblood ended 42 years of service to Earlham College and the Nation when he retired to Pennsylvania in 1988. Today, Mr. President, Elton Trueblood is back home again in Indiana. Following Saturday's memorial service at Earlham, his ashes were interred in the outer wall of his beloved Teague Library on the Earlham campus.

Mr. President, another of Dr. Trueblood's former Earlham College students, Steven R. Valentine, served as a Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Reagan and Bush administrations and is now the general counsel to our colleague, Senator ROBERT SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Valentine traveled to Richmond, IN for the memorial services on January 28. He remembers Dr. Trueblood "as not only a man of extraordinary intellect, but as a person with a great heart. Elton Trueblood has a beautiful eternal soul," Mr. Valentine says, "and as I think of him now, I recall his words of Shakespeare:"

[A]nd, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.

Mr. President, before he died, Elton Trueblood chose, as the convener of his Quaker memorial service, another distinguished Indiana educator. Dr. Landrum Bolling, whom Dr. Trueblood brought to Earlham to teach political science, became the president of Earlham College in 1958. He left Earlham in 1973 to become the president of Lilly Endowment in Indianapolis, IN, and later served as the chairman of the Council on Foundations.

In connection with his service as the convener of Dr. Trueblood's memorial service, Dr. Bolling wrote a short biographical sketch of Elton Trueblood, which was printed and distributed to all in attendance. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print that biographical summary in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DAVID ELTON TRUEBLOOD—DECEMBER 12, 1900—
DECEMBER 20, 1994

(By Landrum R. Bolling)

Dr. David Elton Trueblood, author, educator, philosopher, and theologian, endowed with special gifts and holder of many honors, bestowed unnumbered blessings upon a numerous family and countless friends. He leaves to all of us who knew him and to multitudes who never met him a rich legacy of spiritual insights, intellectual and ethical challenges, and a vision of what communities of committed men and women, faithful to God's guidance, may yet do to build a better world.

A lifelong member of the Society of Friends, Elton Trueblood's teaching, speaking and writing influenced directly the lives of many people in many faith communities around the world. At Haverford, Guilford, Harvard, Stanford, Mount Holyoke, and Earlham he inspired thousands of students over half a century of spirited classroom teaching. His thirty-three books, clearly and simply written, captivated mass audiences rarely reached by words from academic pens.

Elton's English Quaker ancestors settled on the coast of North Carolina in 1682 at the site of the present town of Elizabeth City. In 1815 a large group of Carolina Quakers, including the Truebloods, emigrated to Washington County, Indiana. In 1869 his grandfather and other members of the family moved on to Warren County, Iowa. There, on a small farm near Indianola, Elton was born on December 12, 1900, the son of Samuel and Effie Trueblood.

Molded by the close-knit Quaker community, hard work on the family farm, encouragement from proud and supportive parents and excellent teachers, Elton Trueblood developed bookish interests and a strong student record. At William Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa, he won high standing as scholar, debater, and football player. After preliminary studies at Brown University and Hartford Theological Seminary, he earned the graduate degree of Bachelor of Systematic Theology at Harvard in 1926. He received his Ph.D. degree in philosophy from The John Hopkins University in 1934.

His first teaching assignments were at two Friends institutions: Guilford in North Carolina and Haverford in Pennsylvania. In 1936, largely as the result of his handling of a summer appointment as acting Chaplain of Harvard, he was invited to become Chaplain of Stanford. Thus, he was given a public platform and a visibility that drew him increasingly into a national ministry. Former President Herbert Hoover and his wife Lou Henry Hoover were close neighbors and friends and often attended the Quaker Meeting for Worship held monthly in the Trueblood home. (That friendship led to Elton's conducting the funeral services for both of the Hoovers, presiding over Mr. Hoover's public burial before a crowd of 75,000 on a hillside overlooking the Hoover presidential library and museum or West Branch, Iowa.)

In 1945 Elton Trueblood felt a strong calling to extend his public ministry through writing and speaking—and at the same time to serve a small Quaker liberal arts institution. Thus, he was prompted to leave his tenured full professorship at Stanford to join the faculty of Earlham College in Richmond, Indiana, as professor of philosophy. There he quickly became a major asset in the rebuilding of the College after the impoverishing years of World War II: helping in the recruiting of both faculty and students, the shaping of new educational policies, the raising of funds, and the promoting of broader public appreciation of Earlham—and of hundreds of other church-related and independent colleges. In a much-reprinted Reader's Digest article, "Why I Chose a Small College," he extolled these institutions as superior places for undergraduate education, where teaching was emphasized and where close faculty-student relations could be naturally fostered.

Although the teaching of undergraduates, in courses in both philosophy and religion, remained at the center of his academic life at Earlham, his interest and influence were crucial in the implementation of the risky and controversial decision by the Earlham Board to establish the graduate programs of an Earlham School of Religion. Questions about the possibility of a Quaker seminary had been debated for almost a century, but the idea had always been discouraged as "not feasible" and rejected by some Friends as "thoroughly un-Quakerly." Meanwhile, Quaker churches of the pastoral tradition seemed increasingly to draw their ministers from the ranks of the clergy trained in other denominations, or with little formal education in religion, while the less numerous unprogrammed (or "silent") Quaker Meetings and their related outreach agencies tended to draw their leadership from among Friends and non-Friends with no theological training. Elton Trueblood was one of the few "leading Quakers" who believed that this enterprise could and should be undertaken. Happily, he lived to see the Earlham School of Religion thriving and serving all branches of the Society of Friends.

Although he served on many committees of the Society of Friends and was widely recognized as one of the most eminent Quakers of the Twentieth Century, Elton Trueblood was very much at home in a variety of other religious communities, was a strong advocate of ecumenical activities, and was considered by many Quakers and non-Quakers as not quite fitting the popular stereotype of the "liberal activist" Quaker. His generally strong pro-Republican political views, his friendship with such prominent Republicans as Hoover, Nixon, and Eisenhower, and his strong anti-communism caused discomfort to some of the more strongly social-activist segments of Friends. He did not like the popular stereotyping of people as "conservative" and "liberal," as he considered these terms simplistic and divisive. He believed the Society of Friends, though a small denomination, was big enough for widely divergent points of view.

He liked to say that the most important word in the language is "and." On many matters of controversy, he would insist, "we have to say both-and, not either-or." By word and action he demonstrated what some saw as contradictory beliefs and habits: liberal and conservative, traditional and innovative, compassionate and tough-minded, generous and demanding. He was the affirmation of these combinations as being human, realistic, and honest.

From his abolitionist Quaker heritage and his own sense of moral and religious imperatives, he drew strength for vigorous opposition to racial discrimination. He was an early friend and supporter of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. At crucial points in the civil rights struggle he appealed directly to Presidents Eisenhower and Nixon to hold to strong stands for public policies to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination and to advance equality in human rights.

On another central Quaker testimony, pacifism, he was forthright about the importance and complexity of the issue as faced by those holding political power. He struggled openly over the personal dilemma of how an individual or a state can effectively confront challenges of violence and tyranny. He wrote and spoke eloquently against war, for international reconciliation, and in support of the rights of conscience for objectors to military service, and for those who chose military service. If a government does not successfully practice peaceful relations with its neighbors, then it will face a choice of evils in times of crisis. Thus, reluctantly, he concluded during World War II that military resistance to Hitler aggression was necessary.

Avoiding simplistic admonitions for a "back to the church" or "back to the bible" movement, he called for the reinvigorating of religious faith as the essential force necessary to sustain the ethical, moral, and social principles on which a humane and livable society must be built. He warned against what he called "churchianity" and "vague religiosity," but he also cautioned against the overly optimistic expectations of secular social-reformism or of a too-easy social gospel.

His emphasis in his books and lectures on the importance of family life was not theoretical but a reflection of his role as husband and father. He and Pauline Goodenow, who met while they were students at William Penn College, were married in 1924. They had three sons and one daughter: Martin, born in 1925; Arnold, born in 1930; Samuel in 1936; and Elizabeth in 1941. They knew him, throughout his life, as a loving and devoted father who found ways to be available to them in spite of his heavy work responsibilities and frequent speaking trips. He consciously determined that his children should not pay a heavy price for his public career.

Tragedy struck the family in the fall of 1954 when it was discovered that Pauline was suffering from an inoperable brain tumor. The family was in the process of moving to Washington, D.C. where Elton was beginning an assignment with the U.S. Information Agency. Pauline had been a strong support an inspiration, providing needed criticism of his writings and encouraging him to fulfill his opportunities for national ministry—and managing a busy household in spite of years of chronic illness. Pauline died in early 1955.

Virginia Hodgkin, a widow with two children, became Elton's secretary at Earlham in 1950 and moved to Washington to continue her work with him at the USIA. In September, 1956 Elton and Virginia were married at the Washington National Cathedral, with both families in attendance. Virginia proved to be a valuable partner as well as devoted wife. With her help, he wrote and published 17 books in the next 18 years, ending with his autobiography, While It Is Day, in 1974. Virginia died in 1984.

As a writer, Elton Trueblood developed a style that emphasized clarity, conciseness, and simplicity. Among his literary mentors, of whom he spoke with the greatest sense of admiration and debt, he always listed Blaise Pascal, Dr. Samuel Johnson, Abraham Lincoln, and C.S. Lewis. He was grateful for their skill in treating serious subjects with ample use of aphorisms, anecdotes, and humor. He also liked to paraphrase Mark Twain on how to get started with your writing by saying you simply had "to glue your trousers to your chair and pick up your pen without waiting for inspiration."

To many who knew him, Elton was an almost awesome figure because of his self-discipline. To his editors at Harper and Row, he was a delight to work with, always turning in clean copy that required little editing, was delivered on or before his promised deadline, and was sure to appeal to a diverse and numerous audience. During his most productive years, he rigorously divided his day into periods of meditation, exercise, writing, and family life. Most of his books he wrote in a small cabin at the family summer home in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania during the summer break in the academic year. He would contract to deliver his manuscript in early September, and begin writing on the Monday after the Fourth of July. He wrote between eight in the morning and noon, Monday through Friday, in longhand on a yellow pad. He never got personally involved with typewriters or computers!

Although his earlier books were of the longer academic type, he came to feel that any book with a serious public message, with any hope of impact on its readers, should be limited to 130 pages. He generally followed his own prescription.

Likewise, in his public speaking, he believed in being brief and to the point. His sermons and popular lectures were rarely more than twenty minutes, thirty at the outside. In classroom lectures he filled the required fifty minutes, often without a note, and ended exactly at the bell. His popularity as a public speaker was such that he could easily have devoted all his working time to the well-paying lecture circuit. Instead, he limited his speaking engagements to those audiences he wanted to reach or help, saving most of his time and energies for teaching and his family. He spoke without fee for those who could not afford to pay, but charged a standard amount for those who could.

Although he led a very busy and highly productive life, countless individuals from all walks of the life remember Elton Trueblood with deep gratitude for time he spent in private conversation with them, hearing their problems, their hopes and their dreams—and giving advice. He had extraordinary gifts in encouraging others to believe in their potential and to develop the discipline to use their gifts fully. He was a living example of the good advice he gave to others.

WAS CONGRESS IRRESPONSIBLE? THE VOTERS HAVE SAID YES

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the incredibly enormous Federal debt is like New Year's Resolutions—everybody talks about making them but rarely do very much about them.

The New Year arrived a little over a month ago, but the Senate is bogged down about passing a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The Senate had better get cracking—the clock is ticking and the debt is mushrooming. As of the close of business yesterday, Tuesday, January 31, the Federal debt stood—down to the penny—at exactly $4,815,826,745,802.15 or $18,280 per person calculated on a per capita basis. This debt, don't forget, was run up by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, most citizens cannot conceive of a billion of anything, let alone a trillion. Yesterday, President Clinton authorized a $20 billion in loan guarantees to Mexico. This figure was so disturbing to the American taxpayers—80 percent of them—that I felt compelled to discuss them during Foreign Relations Committee hearings. Now, multiply that $20 billion by 240—this equals the total debt of our Federal Government.

Which sort of puts it in perspective, does it not, that Congress has run up this incredible Federal debt totaling 4,803 of those billions—of dollars. In other words, the Federal debt, as I said earlier, stood this morning at 4 trillion, 803 billion, 795 million, 968 thousand, 326 dollars and 50 cents. It'll be even greater at closing time today.

PRESIDENT ARISTIDE'S PROGRESS IN HAITI

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on October 15, 1994, I was privileged to join Secretary of State Warren Christopher and other United States officials and congressional leaders in accompanying President Aristide on his return to Haiti after more than 3 years in forced exile. Before departing for Port-au-Prince, President Aristide pledged that upon his return, his government would work for peace and reconciliation among all sectors of Haitian society.

I believe that President Clinton has done a remarkable job in fashioning a policy that has led to the restoration of the duly elected President of Haiti. Special commendation must go to the men and women in the United States Armed Forces who have been deployed in Haiti to ensure a stable and peaceful climate within which the newly restored civilian government may begin the difficult task of rebuilding Haiti. Without the presence of these committed men and women, the dreams and aspirations of the Haitian people to live in a democracy would stand no hope of fulfillment.

More than 100 days have now passed since that historic day last October. President Aristide has kept his commitment to work for peace and reconciliation among all Haitians. I believe that he has made significant progress in the areas of governance, security, economic reconstruction, and meeting the basic needs of the Haitian people. Obviously much remains to be done.

The Embassy of Haiti has prepared a detailed report on the measures taken by the Haitian Government during the first 100 days of the restoration of democracy. I ask unanimous consent that report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAITI SINCE THE RESTORATION OF DEMOCRACY: ONE HUNDRED DAYS OF PROGRESS

"The Government and people of Haiti take pride in the achievements of the last one hundred days. However, our struggle is far from over and so we continue to strive within every geographic area, and within every ministry, to make secure the foundations of a lasting, stable democracy.

"We are grateful for the U.S.-led multinational effort in support of Haitian democracy, and not only welcome the opportunities for cooperation and partnership with the world's democracies that the past four months have made possible, but are committed to expand and build upon them."—President Jean Bertrand Aristide

INTRODUCTION

President Jean Bertrand Aristide's return to Haiti on October 15, 1994 was the culmination of an historic international effort to end a brutal military dictatorship that had:

- (i) ousted Haiti's first democratically elected President three years earlier;
- (ii) executed summarily 5,000 civilians;
- (iii) dislocated 350,000 Haitians, forcing them into hiding within their own country;
- (iv) caused some 48,000 Haitians to take to the high seas in an attempt to escape the imprisonment, torture, rapes, and murder that Haiti's coup regime was meting out to members of Haiti's pro-democracy community;
- (v) created a massive Haitian refugee crisis for the United States and other countries of the region;
- (vi) accelerated the economic and environmental degradation of Haiti, reversing the progress achieved during Haiti's first democratic administration in 1991;
- (vii) increased drug-related criminal activity within the United States by permitting Haiti to be used as a drug transshipment point for illegal narcotics destined to the United States from South America; and
- (viii) threatened to undermine, by way of example, the viability of other fledgling democracies throughout the hemisphere;

In the first 100 days since President Aristide has been reinstated as his country's democratically elected President, the Government and people of Haiti have moved with single-minded determination to assure Haiti a firm foothold in the world community of democratic, free-market nations.

Perhaps most impressive, as noted by U.S. officials, leading members of Haiti's business community, and the international press, has been President Aristide's ability to bridge Haiti's profound social tensions by reaching out to all Haitians, in a spirit of reconciliation and non-violence, to create a new Haiti.

President Aristide has demonstrated himself to be a skilled, committed democrat, working with respect for constitutional limits and mandates of Haiti's Presidency and other governmental institutions, and has built a coalition government that promotes and encourages open dialogue with all sectors of Haitian society.

Listed below are some of the achievements of the 100-day old "second" Aristide administration. To place the efforts and successes of Haiti's constitutional government in proper context, however, it is important to note that upon their return, President Aristide and other members of Haiti's democratically elected government were not only faced with a country whose social and economic development had been thoroughly undermined by the coup regime, but with government ministries and a National Palace that had been pillaged and gutted of equipment, furniture, wiring and supplies (down to paper and pencils) by the departing de facto "government", in order to thrust the returning government into a totally inhospitable, unmanageable administrative environment.

IMPACT OF THE RESTORATION OF DEMOCRACY

Refugees

Haitian refugees have stopped fleeing Haiti due to the constitutional government's respect for human rights;

As a result, "the Haitian refugee crisis" no longer preoccupies the American public, the American media, and U.S. policy-makers;

Some 16,000 Haitian refugees being held at the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo, Cuba, who:

- (i) had refused to return to Haiti while it was under military dictatorship, and
- (ii) were seeking refugee status within the United States or other regional countries, have returned to Haiti voluntarily;

As was the case after Haiti's first democratic elections in 1990, Haitian teachers, health/legal/other professionals who had long been legal residents in Canada, the United States, France and elsewhere, have begun returning to Haiti to make their contributions to the rebuilding of their country;

Democratic reform and governance

The UN/OAS Human Rights Observer Mission, expelled by the military dictatorship in 1994, has returned to Haiti;

The Government of Haiti is working with the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and bilateral donors to develop mechanisms and systems to facilitate broad-based awareness of the importance of adhering to internationally accepted human rights standards in the building of a new Haiti;

Repeated, impassioned, and sustained calls for reconciliation by President Aristide have been accepted by his followers. Haitians, upon identifying those who brutalized them during military dictatorship, turn these individuals over to members of the Multinational Force—and in some cases, even to the foreign press—rather than taking "justice" into their own hands;

The strength and lasting power of his message was most recently demonstrated on January 12, when Haitian civilians in Gonaives chased, apprehended, and then turned over to the multinational force a former Haitian military officer attempting to escape after an attack on U.S. servicemen that left one U.S. soldier dead and another wounded;

The Haitian Government's emphasis on consultation, inclusion and reconciliation has been demonstrated repeatedly, as in:

(a) President Aristide's exhaustive and cordial consultations with at least 16 political parties—almost immediately upon his return—to establish dialogue on issues of concern and to stress the importance to the nation of parliamentary elections taking place at the earliest possible opportunity, and

(b) the extensive discussions he entered into across Haiti's leadership spectrum prior to selecting Smarck Michel, a prominent 51-year old Haitian businessman, as Prime Minister;

Prime Minister Smarck Michel's unanimous confirmation by Haiti's multiparty parliament, and the subsequent installation of Mr. Michel's ministerial cabinet on November 6, 1994 formalized the establishment of the official, legal framework within which democratic, constitutional governance in Haiti can go forward. (See Attachment A for a complete list of all Government Ministers);

Immediately upon his return, President Aristide began stressing to the Haitian people and Parliament the importance of the upcoming parliamentary elections. In order to expedite this, a Provisional Electoral Council (representing the three branches of government) has been established, an electoral law has been submitted to Parliament, and a mid-April election date targeted.

Within a month of his return, President Aristide invited 400 Haitian business leaders to the National Palace, among them individuals who had opposed his return and supported the coup. He included several of these in his official delegation to the Summit of the Americas and named them to the Presidential Commission on Business Modernization and Economic Growth.

At the end of 1994, Time assessed President Aristide's reconciliation efforts thus: "(Aristide) is a man whom experience has imbued with wisdom, a new found respect for dialogue and a deft skill for the politics of pragmatism."

Economic revitalization

In keeping with his commitment to modernize the Haitian business sector, promote economic development, and reinforce the government's interest in expanding economic and business links with the rest of the region, in general, and the United States, in particular, President Aristide, in December 1994, established a high-level Commission on Economic Growth and Modernization, headed by prominent Haitian businessman and President of the Haitian Industrial Association, Jean Edouard Baker.

The Commission, comprised of 25 Haitians representing a broad cross-section of Haiti's business leadership as well as those Cabinet ministers responsible for economic reconstruction, was represented by a 6-person delegation to Washington in mid-January for talks with the Administration and the Congress. These talks focussed on the policies and programs implemented by the Government of Haiti to stabilize the economy and facilitate the workings of a free-market system.

This delegation also stressed to U.S. policy-makers that there is now a historic opportunity for Haiti to be permanently transformed—provided the international community maintains its security and human rights observer presence, and keeps its commitment to provide technical and financial support;

In response to the free-market policies of the government, some 35 plants in the assembly export sector which ceased production during the political and economic crisis of the past three years have reopened;

The macro-economic plan presented by the Aristide government to the international community prior to the 1991 coup won multilateral economic pledges in excess of $500 million. However, the three year military dictatorship caused multilateral donors to withhold this much-needed injection of capital from the Haitian economy. The re-submission of its macroeconomic plan by the "second" Aristide administration has again won the support of multilateral community, and Haiti expects pledges in excess of $1 billion over the next 5 years;

The resumption of multilateral economic support to Haiti was contingent upon the country's arrears, (resulting from the coup regime's refusal to make payments on Haiti's international debt), being cleared. Thanks to the joint efforts of the international community and the Government of Haiti, these arrears were cleared in December 1994, thereby removing one of the impediments to the timely flow of the support pledged by the international community;

There are well-established channels of communication and a strong spirit of cooperation between the Government of Haiti and the Haitian business community, born of the realization on both sides that (i) business, (ii) labor, and (iii) democratic, stable government are all crucial, indispensable, and interdependent components of any modern state;

President Aristide has announced a package of special incentives to attract foreign investment to Haiti. These include a reduction in telephone, electricity and customs fees; a dramatic reduction in tariffs on most imported items, except sensitive agricultural commodities; and tax incentives for businesses that return to Haiti by July 1, 1995;

At the end of January, Haiti will formally announce to the international financial community its plan for economic development and its projected assistance needs. The plan embraces solid fiscal discipline, open investment and trade policies including a reduction in tariffs, elimination of non-tariff barriers, the modernization of commercial and investment codes, and the streamlining of import/export procedures;

The Aristide government is also implementing economic policies geared at sustaining economic growth, reducing the public sector deficit, streamlining and professionalizing the civil service, and eliminating currency exchange and interest rate controls;

In order to maximize competition and facilitate the efficient functioning of the Haitian economy, the Government of Haiti has retained the services of the International Financial Corporation to review the condition of state-owned enterprises, and is in the final stages of establishing a tripartite commission on labor-management relations. This commission will facilitate greater communication and cooperation between labor, management and government to the overall benefit of the Haitian economy and the Haitian people;

In December 1994, the Governments of the United States and Haiti signed an agreement aimed at revitalizing the Haitian economy via improvements in telecommunications, energy and transportation;

The Haitian Ministry of Finance and the U.S. Department of Commerce agree to establish a joint Business Development Council;

Haiti's ports have re-opened.

Military, police, and judicial reform

A law was submitted by the Aristide administration to Haiti's parliament to create a civilian-controlled police force separate from the military, as mandated by Haiti's constitution. Haiti's police and military had long been indistinguishable from each other and the source of much repression in Haiti. The law was debated and ratified by the Parliament, and the creation of the new police force under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Justice is now underway;

One thousand former refugees at the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo have been recruited as members of the interim police force, as have 3,000 former members of the Haitian military who were screened for human rights abuses;

The Haitian army, originally estimated at 7,000, has been demobilized and will be reconstituted at a level of 1,500, with the salaries of the demobilized soldiers going to the Ministries of Health, Public Works and Agriculture. In addition, these soldiers are being encouraged by the government to apply for positions within these ministries, in order to begin new, constructive careers. A commission, headed by Minister of Defense Wilthan Lherisson, has been charged with establishing—in conjunction with U.S. advisers—a plan for the army's reorganization. (The downsizing of the Haitian army to 1,500 was an important component of the Haitian government's macro-economic plan which won the support of multilateral donors in Paris last August).

The new Police Academy is scheduled to open within the next few weeks and trainees, recruited from Haiti's nine (regional) departments, will be selected from a pool of 25,000 applicants. A commission under the authority of the Ministry of Justice has been created to develop the organizational structure and regulations for the new National Police Force.

Haiti's notorious "section chiefs", long identified by human rights observers and the people of Haiti as key instruments of rural repression in Haiti, were aggressively supported by the military dictatorship. They have now been outlawed and the constitutional government is, instead, establishing in the rural areas local, legitimate justices of the peace.

Demilitarization of Port-au-Prince

Haiti's Army Headquarters, traditionally situated next to the Presidential palace, is now the site of Haiti's Ministry of Women's Affairs.

The Port-au-Prince police station is now controlled by the interim police force, under the jurisdiction of the ministry of justice.

Accounting for human rights abuses during military dictatorship

An independent Truth Commission has been established by Presidential decree in an attempt to acknowledge, investigate, and provide a full accounting of the brutality that characterized Haiti's 1991-1994 military dictatorship. This is part of an effort to put an end to Haiti's history of impunity and allow for the establishment of the rule of law in the pursuit of political, economic, and social stability;

The Government of Haiti has retained the services of Haitian lawyers to pursue claims arising from the most notorious cases of human rights abuses during the coup period.

Public works

The Government of Haiti, in conjunction with international donors, has created 5 thousand road repair jobs, thereby upgrading areas of Haiti's physical infrastructure that were seriously neglected during the three-year military dictatorship;

Haiti's main airport in Port-au-Prince is being renovated to accommodate the increased traffic that (i) has resulted from the restoration of democracy, and (ii) is expected from Haiti's pursuit of expanded economic and other links with the region in general and the United States in particular;

Social infrastructure

Education, neglected by the coup regime, is once again being stressed by the constitutional government as a crucial component of Haiti's political, economic, and social stability. With the restoration of democracy came the re-opening of schools, the establishment of a State Secretariat for Literacy, and the distribution of $3 million in school supplies;

The government, with the assistance of international agencies, initiated in November 1994 a massive vaccination campaign. To date some 520,000 children have been vaccinated and the government plans to have 3 million children similarly protected by summer 1995;

President Aristide has pledged to open at least one new school and one new clinic in each of Haiti's 500 districts by the end of his term in February 1996;

A Ministry for the Environment has been created to address the serious ecological challenges facing the people of Haiti.

REMAINING CHALLENGES

The return of constitutional government to Haiti on October 15, 1994 celebrated a commonality of purpose among the world's democracies. It also raised serious questions regarding the climate of impunity which aspiring despots in the region had begun to assume they could take for granted. For this the people of Haiti are most grateful. However, in the midst of its efforts to secure the achievements summarized in this paper, Haiti's newly reinstated constitutional government has had to face a number of challenges.

No sooner had constitutional government been restored to Haiti than Hurricane Gordon hit, causing over 1,000 deaths and extensive damage to infrastructure. Indeed, the United Nations Development Program reports that 1.5 million Haitians were hurt and/or lost property. Thanks to the presence of the Multinational Force in general and U.S. troops in particular, however, the Government and people had a ready source of logistical and material support which helped alleviate the impact of the crisis.

Less benign in its origins but just as deadly in its impact, however, was the placement—one month after the return of constitutional government—of an explosive device at a power generator upon which most of Port-au-Prince depends for electricity. This development has sorely taxed the Haitian government as it attempts to stabilize the country, encourage domestic investment, and attract foreign investment. However, the determination of the government and the people of Haiti to build a stable and secure nation, acts such as this notwithstanding, remains unshakable.

Regarding the partnership between the government of Haiti and the international community, it is clear that the presence of the Multinational Force has been a dramatic demonstration of the commitment of the world community to democracy in Haiti, and this has enabled the Government of Haiti to move forward with many of the policies and programs outlined in this report. It is the hope of the Government of Haiti, however, that the international community will soon be able to make available the economic support so generously pledged prior to the return of constitutional government in October 1994, since it has long been stressed by both the donor community and the constitutional Government of Haiti that this support is an indispensable counterpart to the essential and fully appreciated multilateral military presence now in Haiti.

To the extent that the bottlenecks and administrative delays that have slowed the actual provision of economic support (as opposed to pledges) can be corrected, then Haiti's entry into the world community of stable democratic nations would be greatly expedited and the positive impact of the multilateral military presence would be permanently secured.

Haitians from all classes will attest to the unifying influence of President Aristide, who has encouraged patience and perseverance in the face of the significant difference between the economic support that was long ago promised, (as a complement to the multinational troop presence), and what has, to date, been forthcoming.

Nonetheless, the Government continues to pursue as top priorities:

The holding of free and fair parliamentary elections at the earliest possible date;

The strengthening of the institutions of democracy and the promotion of respect for the rule of law;

Expanding links between U.S. and Haitian businesses, building upon:

(i) Haiti's geographic proximity to the United States,

(ii) The long history of U.S./Haiti business relations,

(iii) The heightened degree of cooperation and collaboration between the peoples of both nations afforded by the U.S.-led effort to restore democracy,

(iv) The energy that has long characterized Haiti's private sector leadership and the dependability of Haiti's labor force, and

In keeping with President Aristide's emphasis on the importance of national reconciliation to Haiti's future, the Government of Haiti remains committed to disarmament.

Jean Edouard Baker, President of the Industrial Association of Haiti, during a recent visit to Washington stressed to U.S. policy makers that there is now a historic opportunity for Haiti to be permanently transformed—"provided the international community maintains its security and human rights observer presence as originally negotiated, and keeps its commitment to provide financial and technical support during this crucial transition period."

The Government of Haiti shares this assessment and will continue to work with its friends in the international community to ensure that this historic moment yields its full potential.

SECRETARY OF EDUCATION DICK RILEY'S STATE OF EDUCATION ADDRESS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, earlier today, Secretary of Education Dick Riley delivered his State of Education Address. Speaking at Thomas Jefferson Middle School in Arlington, VA, he outlined the new and promising direction that education reform is now taking, a process that is already well under way under the leadership of the Clinton administration.

Secretary Riley pointed out that today, just 8 months after the "Goals 2000 Educate America Act" was signed into law, 44 States are designing, from the bottom up, a better education system for the next century.

To succeed as a Nation, we must create a society in which all children have a chance to succeed. Education provides that chance. Few other investments of taxpayer dollars yield such immense benefits for the Nation and its people.

There is no quick or easy answer to deal with the many challenges involved in improving our schools and colleges. Steady progress will take time and hard work and the involvement of millions of citizens throughout the country. Federal leadership is essential if we are to keep moving forward, and President Clinton and Secretary Riley are providing it. It is preposterous to suggest that we can do more by abolishing or downgrading the Department of Education and cutting the budget for education. As Secretary Riley states, the American people do not want Congress to cut Federal aid to education that helps Americans become more self-reliant.

I commend Secretary Riley and President Clinton for their vision and leadership on education, and for giving it the high priority it deserves. We are making wise investments toward meeting our national education goals, and we must stay the course, not make a U-turn.

Mr. President, I believe that Secretary Riley's address will be of interest to all of us in the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TURNING THE CORNER: FROM A NATION AT RISK TO A NATION WITH A FUTURE

(By Richard W. Riley)

INTRODUCTION

To the students who just sang to us from their hearts—to Sidney and David and Anh and Zelmie—how very proud we are of all of you and your classmates. You are the future of our country; you give us hope and strength.

I am grateful to Terrel Bell for his very kind introduction. American education owes a debt of gratitude to Terrel Bell for his foresight and leadership. We are on a new course toward excellence and high standards in American education in large part because of Terrel Bell's good deeds a dozen years ago.

Today, I am honored to make my second annual State of American Education Address here at Thomas Jefferson Middle School in Arlington, Virginia * * * to tell you that we are no longer a nation at risk, but a nation on the move * * * a nation turning the corner, raising its standards and reaching for excellence for the 21st century.

It is so appropriate that we should come together at a school named in honor of Thomas Jefferson—the president who wrote to John Adams that he could "not live without books," and the founder of a great American institution of higher learning, the University of Virginia.

Were he alive today, I have no doubt that Jefferson, ever the scientist and inventor, would be, at this very moment, in the computer lab uplinking to the Internet's World Wide Web.

But Jefferson would have to be quick because the classrooms and computers here at Thomas Jefferson are always in use. This school is a community bursting with energy and learning, day and night. Thomas Jefferson is a school that reflects many of the new dynamics shaping the future of American education.

We are, for example, in the midst of another baby boom. In the next ten years, an additional 7.1 million children are going to get up in the morning and go to school. Another 7.1 million children.

And at the same time that we are helping these brand new students become part of America's strength, we must raise standards and tech Americans of all ages some very new and demanding skills.

Now, every child still must learn the basics. I am a great believer in the fundamentals. You simply can't get ahead if you cannot read, write and figure out how much change the checkout clerk should give you. But in this day and age, using computers and recognizing the discipline of the arts and the power of science all have to be seen as new fundamentals for all our children.

This is a critical time for American education * * * a turning point.

TURNING THE CORNER; A NATION ON THE MOVE

So what, then, is the state of American education today given these and other new dynamics? I believe that we are, at long last, turning the corner * * * moving from being a nation at risk to a nation with a hopeful future. We are starting to win the battle for excellence and good citizenship in American education.

Why am I becoming optimistic? Student performance in reading, science and math is on the rise, and we have made up much of the ground we lost in the 1970s. The number of high school students taking the core academic courses is increasing, up 27 percentage points since 1983, and still rising. Many more students, particularly minority students, are participating in the advanced placement process.

The dropout rate has declined in the last decade, and young people are getting the message that graduation from high school is only the stepping-stone to more learning. There is a new seriousness and appreciation for the value of education. The percentage of students attending college is higher than any other developed country. Community colleges are filling up as never before. And our great institutions of higher learning still produce world-class graduates.

Now, we still have many problems. Overall achievement is still too low. The dropout rate for our Hispanic youth is too high; the gap in performance of African-American, Hispanic, and poor children is still too large; violence in some schools remains a destructive force; too many college freshmen are still in remedial classes; and I am increasingly concerned about a growing trend to de-emphasize the value of our nation's wonderful system of higher education.

But all across America there is great energy and commitment to the progress of education. In Colorado, Governor Roy Romer has taken the lead in calling for high standards and comprehensive reform. In Massachusetts, Governor Weld is using Goals 2000 money to support the creation of charter schools.

In Minnesota, thousands of parents are signing compacts to improve their children's learning. And the Parents-as-Teachers (PAT) program in Missouri continues to add value to education by having parents help other parents.

In Columbus, Ohio, Project Discovery is leading a statewide effort to improve math and science instruction. In Illinois, a new technology initiative now links public schools to scientists at Northwestern University.

Good work is being done in many states to design tougher standards for our young people and establish real accountability. And, two weeks ago, 81 middle school teachers received the first national certificates for meeting the most rigorous of standards.

Kentucky, a state that has done so much in school reform, is now reporting dramatic improvement in mathematics, reading, science, and social studies based on their new, challenging academic standards.

We are starting to see a difference. Above all, we are starting to overcome the greatest to the future of American education: the tyranny of low expectations.

And the intensity of activity at the state and local levels is being matched by the strong bipartisan commitment of Congress and President Clinton to put excellence back into American education.

Passage of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act; the creation of a new School-to-Work Opportunity Act; our new direct lending program; our new substantial investment in technology; the refocusing of our research arm; the Safe Schools Act, the creation of AmeriCorps; and the expansion of Headstart are all part of the national effort to move American education forward.

THE UNIQUENESS OF GOALS 2000

So I am pleased to report to you today that just eight months after the President signed Goals 2000 into law, 44 states are now moving forward in designing—from the bottom up—an education system for the 21st century.

Goals 2000 is the driving force behind the ongoing effort across this country to raise standards, to get technology into the classroom, and to make sure that we set high expectations for every young person, every teacher and every parent.

I want to emphasize that Goals 2000 is the very model of how we can help the states and local schools without smothering them with regulations. Our Department of Education has decided to have no regulations governing this $400 million program—no regulations—and the state applications form is just four pages long. But accountability is there—by testing to high state standards. About 98 percent of all the funding in Goals 2000 goes directly to the states and in its second year, 90 percent of all funding will flow directly to local school districts.

I want to take a moment to speak directly to the critics of this most important piece of legislation. I am not an advocate of a “national exam;” nor am I an advocate of federal intrusion into state and local decision making. I did not come to Washington to save the job of a bureaucrat or to defend old ways of doing business.

I am a strong supporter of applying ample doses of American ingenuity and creativity to our educational system. We need to encourage ideas such as charter schools and public school choice; be flexible and recognize that students learn in many different ways; and carefully think through how we use time in the school day.

But we must always have accountability in public education—for the sake of both the children and the American taxpayer. Accountability is so important. That is one important reason why I do not support the “silver bullet” solution of using public tax dollars for private school vouchers.

Above all, we need to avoid the trap that has so often befallen American education: the inability to maintain a sustained drive for excellence. Too often we get distracted by the fad of the moment. What we need now, more than ever, is some old-fashioned American tenacity to stay on course.

And, I will tell you this—if we roll back the Goals 2000: Educate America Act * * * if we get off course now * * * just when we are turning the corner and giving states and communities the help they request in the form they need it, well then, where will we be? One place we will be is out of step with the American people.

The American people believe in education, and they believe it should be made a national priority. They know that education is an act of building—the building of people, the building of our nation, and the building of our future.

Every poll that I have read drives home this essential point: the American people want to invest in education that works. The results of the November election do not tell me that the American people want to go backwards. There is nothing that tells me that they want cuts in student aid for college, nor that they want Congress to cut education that helps the American people become more self-reliant.

I pledge my full cooperation to the new Congress. We will make an honest review of what federal education programs are working and which ones have seen their time come and now must go.

But the need to reduce the federal budget deficit must be balanced against our need to invest in America's future. The reduction of the deficit and investing in education are two of the most important and essential ways we can secure this nation's prosperity. In this new Information Age, education must be seen as a national priority.

THE NEW EXCELLENCE: SIX WINNING AMERICANS

Nothing so exemplifies the progress this nation has made in the last decade than the six special guests who are here today. In 1994, these six students—all from public schools—represented this country as the American team at the 35th International Mathematical Olympiad.

These young Americans did something quite extraordinary. They defeated the very good teams of 69 other nations—and they won with perfect scores. Their victory is surely a personal achievement—and a victory for their teachers, parents, coaches and for all Americans.

But it is also a reflection of the serious work that has been done in the last decade to achieve a new standard of excellence in American education. The first professional group to produce new academic standards were America's math teachers. My Department and other federal agencies have kept a sharp focus on advancing math and science education, and it is beginning to pay off.

So it is my great pleasure to present to you the six winning members of the American math team and their coach, Doctor Walter Mientka of the University of Nebraska.

INCREASING AND PROTECTING ACCESS TO HIGHER EDUCATION

These young Americans clearly represent our very best. Most of them are already in college, and I have no doubt that each of them will achieve and succeed in life. But they are not alone in wanting to advance themselves. Millions of young Americans know the score already: to get ahead in America, you need to have a first-class education.

This is why we really do need to reinvent the American high school—to create new, concrete links to the world of work and careers—and why access to higher education has got to remain a national priority.

We intend to maintain and increase our commitment to the Pell Grant program because it is an essential statement of our commitment to higher education.

And, we are very proud of our Department's efforts to create and maintain a new direct lending program for college students. This is a program for the 90s. Recently, an American University student told me that she had received her direct loan in 24 hours and at a lower cost * * * and that last year under the old system, it had taken three weeks.

College presidents are placing a high value on this program because they know that it is working. This program will save the taxpayers $4.3 billion and save students $2 billion by 1998.

I encourage the Congress not to “cap” a program that is making college more affordable and accessible—and saving taxpayers money. Every college should have the choice to provide the benefits of this program to their students.

MIDDLE CLASS BILL OF RIGHTS

But we need to do more. For the first time in generations, parents are truly worried that they will not be able to pass on the American Dream to their children. And they are not alone. High school and college students know that they have but two choices: they can work longer hours for less pay, or they can get a meaningful education.

Our economy has added almost 6 million new jobs in the last two years, and many of these require new thinking skills. The economy of the future will be—and already is for millions of Americans—an economy based on what you know and on the skills you have. And we need everybody to build America's future.

This is why education is the very centerpiece of the President's proposed Middle Class Bill of Rights. The President's proposals to allow a tax deduction for college tuition, to expand IRA withdrawals for education, to create a $2,600 skills grant that empowers working Americans and a $500 child tax credit—are all part of the same effort to make sure every American has a chance to be part of the American Dream.

I urge all the parents who are thinking ahead about your children's future, to sit down at the kitchen table, talk this proposal through and understand its details. And when you do, you'll understand that President Clinton's proposal is a good one.

MAINTAINING EXCELLENCE IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Now, a word of caution. I am concerned that in the rush to cut budgets, we can do unintentional but very real damage to the jewel of the American educational system—our system of higher education.

Increasingly, state leaders seem to see higher education as a budget item to be cut rather than as a long-term investment in the future. The federal government, which for much of the 1980s increased its funding for basic research, will be hard pressed to maintain this capacity. And, all of us in Washington—in both the executive and legislative branches—have come close to over-regulating over the years.

Nothing defines these new pressures more than the current budget-cutting proposal in the Congress to eliminate the “in-school interest subsidy.” Now, that's a complicated way of saying that if you lose your subsidized student loan—and there are 4.4 million of you who would—you are going to have to pay about 20 percent more on your student loan—as much as $5,000 more over the life of the loan if you borrow the maximum that is allowable. That's a lot of money.

This is the wrong way to go. We're not going to build up the middle class by charging students who are trying to get into or stay in the middle class $2 billion extra a year in interest. If this proposal goes through, it will be the largest reduction of financial aid to working American families in the history of this country.

VIOLENCE, DRUGS AND THE DISCONNECTION OF OUR YOUTH

As we seek to turn the corner, we need to recognize that many young people remain disconnected—growing up on their own—often alone—and in some cases—truly alienated. Last year at this time, I spoke about my very real concern that this disconnection is becoming so pervasive that we were losing touch with one another.

Nothing defines this disconnection better than the increasing violence by our children, and the increasing violence toward our children. I try hard to understand the causes, but this I know for sure: the American people have had enough.

Now, the great majority of America's schools are safe and drug-free. But we cannot ignore the reality of our times. Guns are being brought to schools as tests of manhood. Drugs are being used with greater frequency and at earlier ages. And a $7 movie ticket is all too often a ticket to see a killer use a gun.

Strong families and schools with high expectations remain our first lines of defense against the spiritual numbness of violence. When 82 percent of all the people in this nation's prisons and jails are high school dropouts, surely, that fact alone should tell us something about the importance of high-quality and safe schools in every neighborhood.

It is not hopeless. The Robert E. Lee High School in Houston, Texas, and the Joseph Timilty School in Roxbury, Massachusetts, are two schools that have turned themselves around. These schools have set high academic standards; they have attacked the culture of violence head-on; and they have involved parents and the community to get results.

So we must keep our focus on ending the violence. We passed the Safe and Drug-Free Schools Act last year. And if you bring a gun to school, don't expect much sympathy—because you are not playing by the rules.

But we need to do more. This is why Attorney General Janet Reno and Doctor Lee Brown, our nation's Drug Czar, will join me in the coming months in visiting different communities to encourage and work with people to end the violence.

And our message to Hollywood is clear and simple: help us raise our children right by ending this fixation that entertainment must always contain violence. By the time young people reach age 18, they have watched 25,000 murders on television alone. Stop glamorizing assassins and killers. I urge you to see this issue through the eyes of parents instead of scriptwriters . . . through the eyes of teachers instead of advertisers.

Sit down with community leaders, principals, PTA presidents, and the doctors in the trauma units who are struggling so hard to protect the children and mend their communities, and use your power to reach children in a helpful and supportive way.

Our young people are searching for clearly marked pathways to adult hood that are appropriate for the '90s. In some troubled neighborhoods, gangs have almost replaced the family in laying out a new path to adulthood. And what a terrible path it is—an act of violence, a first arrest, expulsion from school, a place in juvenile hall, time spent in prison and sometimes death, and all before they are 20 years of age.

A SOCIAL COMPACT FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION

This is why I continue to place great importance on supporting the American family. Last year on this occasion, I announced a new effort to encourage parent involvement in the education of our children. As I said at that time, "thirty years of research tells us that parent expectations and parental involvement" is the starting point for improving American education. Parents matter.

Today, I can report to you that more than 100 organizations, including the national PTA, the U.S. Catholic Education Association, the National Alliance for Business, and the Boys' and Girls' Club of America, are actively participating in our Family Involvement Partnership for Learning. There is great energy in this effort.

I am pleased by the support we are receiving from the American business community.

And I am deeply encouraged by the religious leaders of many faiths who came together last December to release a "Statement of Common Purpose" articulating their common desire to find new ways to support family involvement in their children education.

I believe there is an enormous desire on the part of the American people to have new rules of public engagement when it comes to relating to each other. A young student might willfully disobey a teacher or cheat on an exam and think nothing of it; an ambitious politician can distort the truth or defame the character of another and be rewarded with more media exposure.

Listen, in contrast, to these words from a pledge that young people take every day at school in Independence, Missouri:

"I am the one and only person who has the power to decide what I will be and do. I will accept the consequences for my decisions. I am in charge of my learning and behavior. I will respect the rights of others and will be a credit to myself, my family, my school, and my community."

I believe this is what the American people want for their children. And I agree with them.

So what does this mean for those of us who are part of the public dialogue about the future of American education? We need to get beyond the idea that everything in America is part of a political game. We are not educating our children as Republicans, Democrats or Independents, but as Americans, and as the future of our great country.

We need to lower our voices, to listen to one another and surely to listen to our parents and teachers. There is a difference between constructive criticism and the articulation of deeply held convictions—and the tendency by some to define just about everything in public education as useless and at the extreme, even "corrupt."

TURNING THE CORNER: LOOKING TOWARD THE FUTURE

As we look to the future, let us also recognize that we live in a time of great learning and technological achievement. New discoveries by the Hubble telescope are leading astronomers to rethink the very age of the Universe, even as we marvel at the recent unearthing of 20,000-year-old prehistoric paintings in caves in Southern France.

Scholars are deciphering the Dead Sea Scrolls and the technology of virtual reality is helping to teach disabled children how to drive wheelchairs. Machines the size of molecules are being created by dedicated scientists to heal the sick, and scientists are announcing that they have isolated the DNA of dinosaurs. It is all rather extraordinary.

Dr. Pat Graham, the former Education Dean at Harvard, wrote in her book, "In this nation, we have never had a 'golden age of learning.' We have had a golden age for some," she said, "but not one for the nation."

If ever there was a time for this great nation of ours to have a "golden age of learning" for all of our people, now is the time to have it—to create a new ethic of learning—a new standard of excellence.

Now all this is going to take some decisionmaking, and here, I want to end by telling you a story about a funeral I attended when I was governor of South Carolina.

The deceased was an elderly lady named Katie Beasley. Katie Beasley was a sharecropper, the mother of six or seven children, who spent her entire life just getting by. At her funeral, an old friend stood up and said that he had spent a good long while trying to think through what made Katie Beasley so special—how it was that she had so little and yet all of her children got an education, got good jobs and were community leaders themselves.

And he had decided, after a great deal of thought, that what made her special was that she was a decisionmaker. This is what he said: "Katie decided that an education for her children was important, and she was determined to see that they were all educated. She never looked back."

We are at a time for decisionmaking in this country. If we believe, as Katie Beasley believed, that education is a serious matter, and that all of our children must be educated, we too can be successful. It is a matter of having the human spirit to believe in ourselves as a people—and to make the decision to move forward. Everything is in place to educate America—and I think we will with your help.

TRIBUTE TO AUGUSTA WOLFE

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Augusta Wolfe who will celebrate her 100th birthday on March 2. Augusta has been a resident of California for 62 years and when she and her friends and family gather to celebrate, I want her to know she has been honored by the U.S. Senate.

Raised in New York City until age 17, Augusta had three sisters and five brothers. Her mother died when Augusta was only 13 and she assumed much of the responsibility and care of her younger siblings. Her father remarried and she acquired one half-sister.

Her older brothers moved to Winnipeg, Canada. At age 17, Augusta joined them, then sent for the three younger brothers and one sister. While in Winnipeg, Augusta worked in her brother's store.

At age 19, she met and married her brother's friend, Nathan Wolfe, and had two children. Two years later the family moved to Salt Lake City, UT, where they lived for 14 years. During this time, Augusta helped Nat found and operate a very successful retail business, Wolfe's Dept. Store. Mr. Chairman, In 1933, because Nat's health was failing, they moved to Beverly Hills and later to Palm Springs.

After Nat's death in 1952, Augusta returned to New York City for a brief period and then to Santa Barbara. She devoted much of her energy to creative art, primarily the making of mosaics. Later, she moved to Laguna Hills, CA, where she continued her interest in art and began writing poetry, which she continues to do until this date. Her work has been recognized by the National Library of Poetry and some of it has been published in their publication "Tears of Fire."

Today she is active and in relatively good health. Her keen intellect and memory are unimpaired. She lost her daughter in 1979. In addition to her son, Bernard, a California lawyer, she has many devoted friends and relatives who will attend her 100th birthday celebration on March 4, 1995.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for morning business has expired. Morning business is now closed.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of House Joint Resolution 1, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1) proposing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we are now on our third day on the balanced budget constitutional amendment. I think the debate has been interesting. There have been a lot of points made on both sides of the floor, and I can see there are people anguishing over which way to go on this amendment.

I suggest that the American people are about fed up with the profligacy of Congress. They see us just spending this country right into bankruptcy. They see no real curtailment. They have seen a series of legislative approaches that were supposed to solve this problem, all of which bite the dust the minute 51 percent of the Senate and the House vote otherwise.

It is clear that for all the good intentions that we have had through the Harry Byrd amendment, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation, and the current approach toward budgeting, nothing has worked because there is no mechanism in the Constitution that requires us to make priority choices among competing programs.

It is really difficult because I see all over Capitol Hill today people from all over the country, from every State, arguing for their own special interest. That is the way the system should work, because the people ought to have a right to come see their elected representatives and argue for their own special interests.

But some mechanism must be supplied to enable us to say to some of them: "Your interest is worthy, but we don't have the money." And it is not as worthy as a whole raft of other interests that we have to take care of, among which would be Social Security, Medicaid, Medicare, veterans pensions, and the whole variety of entitlement programs that we think are so worthy that they automatically escalate every year, regardless of what we in Congress do.

I think anybody sitting here ought to stop and think why this balanced budget amendment is a wise and good thing. And the number one reason I would say that it is is because it would force us to have to look at all programs, it would force us to be able to choose and make priority choices among programs on order of merit. It would not force us to go to a balanced budget, but it certainly gears us toward going to a balanced budget and provides different incentives that will lead us to a balanced budget.

I have had a number of senior citizens come to me in my home State of Utah and as I have traveled all over the country, and they say: "Senator HATCH, we hope you'll protect Social Security." And they always start that way and they know that I will. And I assure them that virtually every Member of Congress will. But invariably, these seniors will say:

"But we know that in order for us to have protection of our ability to live, we have to consider our youth of today, we have to consider our budget problems, we have to consider what is right for America, we have to consider how we live within our means in our country or what we get will not be worth very much, and we will not be able to live on Social Security no matter how much it is.

"So, Senator, please as you try to protect Social Security, also give us protection against the Federal Government spending us into bankruptcy, spending beyond our means to pay for things we cannot afford."

Senior citizens are not dumb. They know what is going on. Most of them have lived through this life, most of them have had to pay their bills all their lives. Most of them understand what it is like, and most of them are worried that sooner or later there is going to come a reckoning unless we get our fiscal house in order.

On the other side of that coin, I have had a lot of young people come to me, young college students, young people who are starting to think about what their futures are.

Invariably, they say, "Will our future be as good as yours was when you were in college, Senator HATCH?" And for the first time in the history of this country a lot of parents are starting to become depressed because they realize we can no longer say that their children will have as much opportunity to progress and have better lives than they had, like our parents were able to say to us.

These young people are not stupid. They know, taking Social Security, when it came into existence back in the forties, that there were about 46 workers for every person on Social Security. They are not stupid. They know that is now down to just a little more than three workers for every person on Social Security, and that our senior citizens are living longer and growing in number. They know that we are going to that ratio reduced to probably two persons working for everybody on Social Security.

Yet, what kind of a nation would we be if we did not take care of those who have worked so hard to build the Nation and who now cannot work, who are senior and who need to be cared for and helped, and who deserve to be helped because of their paying into the system all their lives?

It does not escape these young people that their future is going to be very limited because the cost of Social Security, of course, with COLA's, keeps going up, and the work base keeps going down. They also know that complicating it all is a profligate Federal Government, a profligate Congress. Year after year, Congress after Congress, has no real incentives to get spending under control.

I know Members of this body who are liberal, with whom I have served for the whole 19 years I have been here, who in that whole 19 years have never asked the question: Where are the revenues going to come from to pay for these programs? They never once, never once have considered that an important question. They continue to ignore that unless we have a balanced budget amendment, which would help us to put our fiscal house in order, help to solidify the value of the dollar, and help the future of our children and our young men and women, we are going to have to face our fiscal irresponsibility.

I know some here who have never once said, "Where are we going to get the funds?" Would it not be better to support this amendment, rather than their favorite program, which is not as important, rather than to go into bankruptcy or to go toward a system where we ultimately monetize the debt, where the dollar becomes worthless, where inflation gallops, and where our senior citizens really are left high and dry, as well as our youth and their future?

This last election was about these issues. I may not have articulated them very well, but I have tried to show that our senior citizens are not stupid. They understand that we have to, sooner or later, live within our means or their Social Security and their retirements will not be worth very much.

Our young people are not dumb either. They know there is a diminishing work force and the whole burden of taking care of our senior citizens is going to be on their shoulders, and they want to do it. But will they want to in the year 2014 and 2020 if we do not get spending under control, and we keep loading them up with all kinds of other loads like we do?

Why, the committee I used to chair, the Labor and Human Resources Committee, has over 2,000 Federal programs, some of them very duplicative. There are 154 job training programs that this wonderful series of Congresses has enacted over the years to show that they are really empathetic and considerate of those who need job training. Many of those programs are duplicative, many of them overlap. We ought to have one major program for job training, and it ought to work.

What about welfare? It has been estimated by some that by the time the billions and billions of dollars in welfare are laundered through the Federal bureaucracy, those on welfare only get about 28 cents out of every dollar. We eat it all up right here in Washington, DC.

Is it not time to face this? This is what this last election was all about. It was 85 percent of the American people saying: We have had it up to here with Congress. We think it is time for Congress to start living within its means, and we are for a balanced budget amendment that will help Congress to live within its means.

We are not asking for drastic measures here. We are saying that the budget must be balanced over a period of 7 years, to the year 2002, which everybody here knows could be done if we had the will to do it.

It is nothing inordinate or difficult to do if we have some incentives to do it. But until we do, I guarantee you that those who never ask where the moneys are going to come from to pay for these excessive pieces of legislation, and they are in both parties, are going to continue to spend just the way they have always spent. I think they are more in one party than in the other, but nevertheless there are some in both parties.

Mr. President, the greatest economic threat this country faces is out-of-control Federal spending. The single most useful thing this Congress can do is to enact a constitutional requirement that Federal spending not exceed Federal revenues each year, starting in the year 2002. The only exceptions would be when a declaration of war is in effect—we all understand that—when the United States is engaged in military conflict causing an imminent threat to national security, or in those instances where three-fifths of the whole number of each House of Congress votes for a specific deficit but will have to vote, which is going to be a very important aspect of this amendment.

Interest on the national debt is currently about $300 billion a year, amounting to approximately 20 percent of the total Federal budget. These deficits directly affect every American.

For example, every dollar we must spend on interest payments on the national debt is one less dollar available to tax relief for hardworking citizens in Utah, Illinois, New York, California, and all across this country.

As another example, continuous large Federal deficits force the Federal Government to borrow huge sums of money, keeping interest rates high and driving them even higher. Hard-working Americans looking to finance their first home or to buy a more suitable home face higher mortgage rates. As a result, fewer homes are sold. Home builders and their suppliers lose business and have to reduce their work forces. Businesses associated with the housing industry, from realtors to title researchers, are all similarly affected. These are not abstract matters we are talking about.

Opponents of the amendment ask about the consequences of its passage. We are addressing those questions. I do not see how anybody could not understand that you cannot just continue to spend more than you take in. But these same opponents wish to ignore the consequences of failing to pass the amendment. The American people spoke in this last election, but the people here in the Senate, some of them, have not heard them yet. I think they need to speak more in each of these States.

What are some of the other ways huge Federal deficits affect our constituents? The cost of consumer credit goes up. That includes the cost of everything from automobiles, washing machines, televisions, to even much smaller goods paid for with credit. Hard-working Americans work more but can afford less. And the slowdown in consumer spending will result in work force reductions in those consumer industries. We just cannot go on like this.

The unwritten rule in this country until just a few decades ago was for the Federal budget to be balanced except in wartime. That was the unwritten rule. We abided by it for a century and a half. For much of our history, the legislative process reflected the norm of a balanced budget. But as the role and size of the Federal Government expanded, Congress became unable to control spending. New spending programs have been added over the years, many of them starting small but always growing larger, and even larger.

Today, the problem is this: Every single spending program, no matter how small, has a divine set of beneficiaries. The beneficiaries of each spending program are able to make their voices heard whenever they sense a chance that their program may be cut or eliminated. Even Federal programs of a few hundred million dollars can generate intense lobbying by the program beneficiary. This occurs for dozens upon dozens, even hundreds of Federal programs.

Taxpayers are rarely heard about in the spending on any given single program. They do not realize this is all going on. The cost to an individual taxpayer of even large Federal programs is diffused among the large number of all taxpayers. As a result, the interest of the taxpayer in cutting or eliminating a particular program is rarely heard as loudly or as often as that of the program's beneficiaries. The taxpayers are at an enormous disadvantage, the way things are presently set up, without this mechanism in the Constitution.

This spending bias is the reason we need a structural change in how Congress does business, a change we must make to our fundamental charter in order for it to be effective. Only a constitutional balanced budget provision will impose fiscal discipline on Congress. Only a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution will force spending programs to compete against each other and hold down overall Federal spending.

The other body for the first time in history has acted in a bipartisan manner. Our efforts here in the Senate, those who support this amendment, are bipartisan.

I particularly appreciate the great leadership of our distinguished colleague from Illinois and his willingness to stand up on this issue, his articulation of why it is so important. I look forward to listening to him this morning as soon as I have completed these few remarks I have. We are working in a bipartisan way, and there are others. Senator HEFLIN, Senator DeConcini has worked very hard, Senator BRYAN, a whole raft of Democrats have worked very hard on this amendment. We have many over here, from Senator THURMOND to Senator CRAIG, right on down the line to every one of our new Senators on this side.

I think the Senate dare not act on the basis of politics as usual. We just cannot do that this time. I do not think we dare just favor the status quo, just continue spending with no mechanism to stop it, no mechanism to deter it, no mechanism to encourage us to do what is right. I urge my colleagues to vote for this change, the kind of sea change America voted for in this last election.

I hope all our American citizens out there are listening to this debate because they need to get with their Senators. They need to get with their Senators and make sure they are going to support this balanced budget amendment. Nothing short of a public outcry, a public effort—phone calls, letters, meeting them in their offices, getting them at home, letting them know how you feel—is going to make the difference here. We think that is what has made the difference thus far. That is why we are here. That is why the House of Representatives has voted, for the first time in history, 300 to 132 for this amendment. That is why we brought up the House resolution which is identical, except for one comma, to our resolution that Senator SIMON and I have brought to this body.

I hope we will all vote for the kind of change the American people are calling for. I hope we will give our young people a future like we had. I hope we will give our senior citizens the protections they have earned and that they need. Let us quit demagoging this issue of Social Security and realize if we exempt Social Security we will open up such a loophole that they will change the definition of Social Security, and the Social Security trust funds will be raided day in and day out by these big spenders in Congress because it will be the only way they can continue business as usual, the status quo, the spending practices that have just about wrecked this country.

Mr. President, I really look forward to hearing my dear colleague from Illinois, who has been a great leader in this battle. So I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, while I have been engaged in some dialog on the floor on the balanced budget amendment, I have not spoken. I want to take this opportunity just to spell out clearly why we need this change in the Constitution.

I thank Senator HATCH for his leadership, and also others on the other side, Senator CRAIG, who has been a real Rock of Gibraltar on this. Also Senator THURMOND through the years has been providing leadership.

On our side I want to pay tribute to a former Senator, Dennis DeConcini, who was very helpful, Senator HEFLIN, Senator BRYAN, Senator GRAHAM, Senator ROBB, Senator KOHL—I could mention others. I am grateful to them all.

Leading the opposition is our colleague, Senator ROBERT BYRD. I want to make clear that, while he and I differ strongly on this issue, there is no lack of respect on my part for Senator BYRD. He is one of the most valuable Members of this Senate today, one of the most valuable Members in the history of the Senate. I agree with him on this, that this is an issue beyond politics. What we have to look to is the future of our country. Forget the polls, forget party affiliation, forget everything else. How can we best serve the country? I believe strongly we can best serve the country by passing this constitutional amendment.

What is our problem? We have both an economic problem and a political problem. The economic problem, first of all, is very clear as you look at the history of nations. If we do not get a hold of this—and if everyone forgets everything else I say just remember this—the history of nations is you pile up debt and if there is no restraint then you do what the economists call monetize the debt. You start the printing presses rolling and you go from there. And that is where we are headed. As you look into the next century and you see the percentage of deficit versus GDP, that is unquestionably where we are headed. We can take a gamble that we can be the first nation in history not to follow that path, but it is a huge gamble on the future of our country.

Listen to Adam Smith in his "Wealth of Nations," published in 1776, the year of our Declaration of Independence. He writes:

When national debts have once been accumulated to a certain degree, there is scarce, I believe, a single instance of their having been fairly and completely paid. The liberation of the public revenue * * * has always been brought about by a bankruptcy * * *. The raising of the denomination of the coin has been the most usual expedient by which a real public bankruptcy has been disguised * * *. The creditors of the public are really defrauded. Almost all States * * * ancient as well as modern, when reduced to this necessity have * * * played this very juggling trick * * *. The Romans at the end of the First Punic War reduced [the value of] the coin by which they computed the value of all other coins * * *. The [Roman] Republic was in this manner enabled to pay the great debts which it had contracted with the sixth part of what it really owed.

In other words, your dollar, if I may use a current analogy, $1 became worth one-sixth of what it was worth. What does that do to the Social Security trust fund? It just devastates it. What does it do to family savings? Devastates them. What does it do to the economy of the country? Devastates it. What does it do politically? It causes chaos. We do not know where we are headed on this.

For those who say that just is not going to happen, do not take my word for it. Take a look at what the OMB put forward last year as part of the budget. This table is taken directly from there: "Lifetime Net Tax Rates Under Alternative Policies."

I was born in 1928, so you go down here to this line—to 1930—and you see that before we passed the August 1993 budget reconciliation bill, I would have spent in my lifetime 30.5 percent on taxes. It is not changed much by the reconciliation bill, 30.6 percent; with health care reform I would spend 30.9 percent, or a lifetime of roughly 30.9 percent with or without health care reform.

But then look down here, to the line for "future generations." The grandchildren of ROBERT BENNETT and JOHN ASHCROFT and PAUL SIMON and the people who work here: future generations.

What does it say about the budget reconciliation—spending 93.7 percent of lifetime earnings in taxes? After budget reconciliation, 82 percent of lifetime earnings, with health care reform, would have gone to 66 percent, or without health care reform, because it did not pass, 75 percent. That is just not going to happen. No one is going to spend 75 percent of their lifetime earnings in taxation. What you do is you start the printing presses rolling.

One of the great fights early in our history was taxation without representation. Talk about future generations and taxation without representation—what we are doing is living on a huge credit card saying send the bill to our children and grandchildren, send the bill to the pages who are here, and send the bill to my three grandchildren, the oldest of whom turned 5 just the other day.

Thomas Jefferson was the first person to advocate a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. He was not here in the United States when the Constitution was written. He came back. And, when he came back, he said, "If I could add one amendment to the Constitution it would be to prohibit the Federal Government from borrowing money." He had an absolute prohibition. We have some flexibility.

We say with 60 percent growth you can have a deficit. But the history of nations is clear. There is a book written by a man named Michael Veseth, published by Oxford University Press, entitled "Mountains of Debt." It goes into the history of modern city states, and starting in the early 15th century. He comments on Florence and other city nations at that point. He says:

The fiscal imperatives caused by huge debt drain away the capital that might have helped Florence adjust to the new world economy and growth in the future. By 1494, the future pattern of the Florentine economy was set, and Florence's years of economic power and influence were over.

Again, we can take a chance that we are not going to follow the path of Florence, of all the other nations since but we are taking a huge chance.

This is what is happening in terms of our expenditures in inflation-adjusted percentages. What has happened between fiscal year 1980 to fiscal year 1994 is that education—we all make speeches how important education is to our future, and the Presiding Officer and I were talking about that in committee the other day—education is down 13 percent; transportation is down 2 percent; get over here to defense, a lot of people think that is the biggest growth item, 18 percent growth; entitlements have grown 50 percent largely because of growth in numbers and because of health care reform; get over here to gross interest, it has grown 120 percent.

I do not care whether you are a conservative, liberal, Democrat, or Republican. The expanding increase in percentage of our tax dollar on interest just is not rational. We simply have to do better. What is happening to our country in terms of economic independence? If the Simon family gets too deeply into debt, you start losing your independence. The same is true for a nation. Right now we know, because we require public disclosure, that 17 percent of our debt, or a little better than $800 billion, is held by other countries, and people in other countries.

In addition, many countries do not permit their citizens to hold foreign bonds. So there are some countries where the citizens use some other person as a front, and, in fact, hold U.S. bonds. So it is in excess of $800 billion. There was a time when people said about the deficit, "We owe it to ourselves." That is no longer true.

I can remember when I was in the House and I opposed an arms sale to Saudi Arabia. I can remember a Treasury Department official coming into my office saying, "Please do not vote against this arms sale to Saudi Arabia because among other things Saudi Arabia holds a lot of our bonds." That is what is happening.

Let me give you a bit of history that a lot of people have not paid attention to. In 1956—my colleague from Utah is old enough to remember 1956 along with me—President Nasser of Egypt grabbed the Suez Canal, and just before the 1956 election when President Eisenhower was running for reelection, the British, the French, and Israelis ran through and seized the Suez Canal.

They believed I think because they were our good friends and allies, and because it was just before the election, that the United States would not do anything. We did not send a soldier anywhere. Because the British were deeply in debt, we threatened to dump the pound sterling. And, without firing a shot, they withdrew. You lose your independence when you get too deeply into debt.

Let me use a more practical illustration. Let us say Senator JOHN ASHCROFT was not a Member of the U.S. Senate but the president of the First National Bank in Carbondale, IL, and I went to him, and I said "Mr. President, I would like to borrow more money than I take in this year. Will you lend me some money?" And he would do it for 1 year, and maybe 2 years, and maybe 3 years. But at some point a prudent banker is going to say I had better put my money somewhere else.

We have gone to the international bankers for 26 years in a row saying we want to borrow some money because we want to spend more than we take in. And at some point prudent international bankers are going to start saying no. We do not know when that point is going to be reached.

Lester Thurow, one of the Nation's great economists, says at some point international bankers are going to say no to us. He said the question is not if they are going to say no. The question is when they are going to say no.

Alan Greenspan testifying the other day said:

In today's more open and integrated international capital markets, it is easier to finance investment abroad. But this does not mean that we should view the pattern of U.S. external deficits as sustainable in the long run. Looking back at the history of the past century or more, the record would suggest that nations ultimately must rely on their domestic savings to support domestic investment.

The New York Federal Reserve Bank did a study from 1978 to 1988 of what the deficit has, of what our lack of savings primarily caused by the deficit has cost us. They came to the conclusion that in that 10-year period we lost 5 percent growth in GDP, in our gross domestic product; 1 percent, according to the Congressional Budget Office, is 600,000 jobs.

That means a loss of 3 million jobs. The General Accounting Office, in June 1992, issued a very significant report, in which it said if we do not get ahold of things, we are going to have a gradual decline in our quality of life and our standard of living. If, by the year 2001—that was the year at which they put it, and this year we are talking about 2002 for balancing but it basically holds—if by the year 2001 we balance the budget, then by 2020 the average American will have a real growth in quality of life and income of 36 percent. Those are huge numbers.

If we do not adopt this balanced budget amendment, we are headed toward continual decline. We did, to the credit of President Clinton and, I think, to the majority in this body and the other body, pass a budget reconciliation bill in August 1993 that has helped. Our colleague Senator Robert KERREY described it as a modest improvement.

I am going to switch charts here. It shows clearly that we have reduced the deficit here, but it is also clear we are headed way, way up, far beyond anything we have known in terms of deficits. Let me quote just a few sentences from the GAO, and these sentences are taken from different parts of the report. But, I am not, I believe, taking anything out of context and distorting what they say.

Early action to reduce the deficit pays huge dividends in lower interest costs. Must come from program cuts or revenue increases. The more rapidly interest costs can be brought down, the less sacrifice is required.

They also say,

To prevent stagnation in the living standards for future workers, if deficits are not reduced, the Government will have no fiscal flexibility to increase its investment in better infrastructure, technology and skills. Large and continued deficits are likely to seriously inhibit the growth of the economy under current and present foreseeable economic conditions. Inaction is not a sustainable policy.

They predict "a deteriorating American economy, if we do not get ahold of it. Action that is stronger and taken sooner yields greater long-range benefits."

They include a study of Japan, Australia, Germany, and the United Kingdom. They all had deficits, along with the United States, in 1981. All but Australia's was significantly greater than the United States deficit. By 1989, Japan, Australia, and Germany had surpluses. Great Britain had a deficit about 2 percent of ours, while ours had grown substantially.

Eliminating the budget deficit and, if possible, achieving a budget surplus should be among the Nation's highest priorities. Because of the accumulating burden of interest and the mounting public debt, it is important to move rapidly.

Take the report we got a few days ago from Data Resources, Inc., one of the two most prestigious econometric forecasters in the Nation. I will quote a little bit:

A balanced budget would be a major boost to the long-term growth of the U.S. economy.

Over a 5-year period—

We are talking really about a 7-year period now.

this can be done with few problems. Today, when the Fed is trying to slow the economy anyway, would be a good time to start. Balancing the cuts would require real interest rates to drop to their lowest levels since the 1970's.

They predict a drop of 2.5 percent in the interest rates if we move on this. The Wharton School, the other prestigious group, predicts a drop of 4 percent. I do not know who is right, but even if it is half those figures, that is tremendous.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the Senator yield for a comment?

Mr. SIMON. I am pleased to yield to my colleague from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have taken to writing out a simple equation for my colleagues on this side, and I would be delighted to have the Senator adopt this on the other side. I take a piece of paper and I write simply "1 percent equals $48 billion." People say, "What does that mean?" I say, "When you have a national debt of $4.8 trillion, 1 percent of $4.8 trillion is $48 billion. If we lower the cost of funding that $4.8 trillion debt by 1 percentage point in interest rates, we save $48 billion every year."

The Senator has just told us, Mr. President, that the balanced budget amendment could lower the interest rates by anywhere from 2 to 4 percent. We are talking, if the Senator's information is correct, anywhere from $100 to $200 billion a year in savings on the interest rate alone. I think it should be stressed that the Senator has touched a point here that often gets overlooked. We talk about spending cuts, we talk about tax increases. Do you know how painful it will be in this body if we say we have to increase taxes $200 billion a year to balance the budget? Or that we have to cut spending $200 billion a year to balance the budget? If we can get somewhere between $100 to $200 billion a year in savings simply on the interest rate alone, we will have done more than a good day's work.

I thank the Senator for raising that issue of the impact of interest rates on the Federal economy.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague. Just to buttress what he has said, Data Resources, Inc., said this, and I will read the full paragraph:

The positive elements of balancing the budget become clear in the longer run. The elimination of the deficit would relieve strain on financial markets, allowing lower interest rates and bond yields. The lower interest rates and reduced borrowing would cut interest costs for the federal government; in fact, by 2002 half the savings [that we are talking about we need] in our budget simulations come from lower interest costs.

And in addition, you would have, according to their projections, 2½ million more people working. You are going to have more housing starts, more industrial investment, and everything else.

Alan Greenspan, again, testifying the other day, said:

But the influence of a fiscal imbalance of the federal government on capital formation is broader than inflation. The federal deficit drains off a large share of a regrettably small pool of domestic private saving, thus contributing further to the elevation of real rates of interest in this economy.

It is very clear. I have to acknowledge that Dr. Reischauer has testified against the balanced budget amendment. But in his testimony of June 17 of last year, I will quote a few things:

 we and other economists can see clearly that national saving is too low, no matter how it is measured, and that federal deficits contribute significantly to low saving. It is equally clear to us that reducing federal deficits offers the most reliable way to remove the threat that low national saving poses to the growth of living standards.

 history has shown repeatedly that sustained growth in living standards is achieved most reliably through national saving.

And then they have a chart on what is happening in national savings, our savings rate. From 1960 to 1969 we average an 8-percent savings rate; from 1970 to 1979, 7.1 percent; from 1980 to 1989, 3.8 percent, and going down. No other industrial country has anything like that in the way of savings rates that bad.

The main cause of the decline in the national savings rate is rampant Federal deficits after the 1970's  federal deficits could be responsible for between one-half and two-thirds of the decline in the national savings rate, depending on how they are measured, with a reduction of private saving accounting for the rest of the decline.

And so it goes on. Here is one other quote in here I wanted to give you:

 deficits will soon rise again and keep national saving too low to prevent further slowdown in the growth of living standards.

I will show you one other chart. This is what happened in the deficit over the years. We are down here, and you will see 2 years in a row where it is being reduced, and it comes back up here a little bit, and then it goes down off the chart. It is going to go beyond the floor. We are not going to put that one on the chart. That is what is happening in our country.

Some of us had the chance to work with Roger Porter when he worked in the White House. He is now is a professor of government at Harvard.

He says:

The second reason for passing the balanced-budget amendment is moral. Persistent public borrowing, largely for the purpose of current consumption, is analogous to one generation throwing a party and saddling the next generation with the bill. We view such behavior on the part of individuals with disdain and contempt. One is hard-pressed to find moral justification for such behavior, whether individual or collective.

Roger Porter is correct.

I heard about the Louisiana Purchase, that we cannot pass this because we could not have had the Louisiana Purchase. First of all, it is interesting that in Jefferson's first term, he cut the Federal debt in half.

But the Louisiana Purchase was signed May 13, 1803, in Paris—and, frankly, they did not have any authorization to do anything like that—and 2 months later, in July, we learned about it here in Washington, DC. It was for $15 million at 5 percent.

Do you know what the main complaint of Secretary of the Treasury Albert Gallatin was at that point? He complained because the bonds were such that they could not start paying them back for 15 years. That was the big complaint.

We say, you can have a deficit if you have a 60-percent vote. What was the vote in the Senate and in the House on the Louisiana Purchase? There were two votes in the Senate, 24 to 7 and 26 to 6, far more than the 60 percent. In the House, it was 90 to 25, far more than the 60 percent.

There is simply no justification for saying we could not have done something like the Louisiana Purchase.

And then, my friends—and I feel strongly about this—we are having a squeeze on social programs. This fiscal year, we will spend $339 billion on interest; next year, $372 billion.

I might add—and I give credit to my colleague, Senator FRITZ HOLLINGS, for teaching me this—in only one area do we subtract the earnings of the Government. Administrations like to come up with net interest. It does not look so bad. The real figure is gross interest.

It is like the Department of Justice subtracting all the money collected from their total bill, or the IRS doing that. That is just not the way we do it.

But what does $339 billion mean? It means that this year we are spending 11 times as much on interest as education. Oh, we make great speeches about education, but we are not funding it like we should. In fiscal year 1949, we spent 9 percent of the Federal budget on education. This year, we will spend 2 percent of the Federal budget on education. Interest is squeezing out our response.

I heard Senator BENNETT JOHNSTON yesterday say that in an exit poll, when people were asked what the Federal Government spends money on, 27 percent thought the big item was foreign economic assistance. We will spend this year 22 times as much on interest as on foreign economic assistance. We will spend almost twice as much on interest as on all the poverty programs combined.

Listen to what my House colleague, Congressman JOE KENNEDY, who is one of the cosponsors of this legislation, said in the House. This is on January 25.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the balanced budget amendment. I have been for the balanced budget amendment for the last several years, because I do not believe that we can find the will to make the necessary cuts to save the future generations of this country without the support of the American people through a balanced budget.

And then, he says, people come up to him and say:

Listen, JOE, you are a liberal Democrat, how can you possibly be for a balanced budget amendment? It is going to cut the very programs that much of your family and others have stood for generations.

And here is Congressman KENNEDY's response:

I say to them that those very programs that stand up for the working people and the poor and the senior citizens of this country have suffered the worst cuts over the course of the last 15 or 20 years in this country as a result of budget deficits.

Look at the housing budget. Cut by 77 percent over the course of the last 15 years. Look at those who have press conferences that say they want to protect fuel assistance for the poor. Look at what has happened to the fuel assistance program. Cut by 30 percent.

And then he goes to some other things. This is his final line, and I hope we remember it:

Do we see the bellies of our poorest children filled as a result of interest payments on the national debt?

Let me repeat that:

Do we see the bellies of our poorest children filled as a result of interest payments on the national debt?

Well, the answer is obvious. Oh, we are talking about welfare reform, and I am not optimistic we are going to get genuine welfare reform. I hope I am wrong. But it is interesting, welfare payments from 1970 to 1993, when you take in the inflation factor, have been reduced about 40 percent. That is because of the squeeze of interest.

Or take a look at New York City. New York City went bankrupt, or for all practical purposes bankrupt. They had to cut programs for poor people by as much as 47 percent. But New York City had the advantage of having an umbrella called the United States of America and we rescued New York City.

There is no umbrella big enough to rescue the United States of America. If we go down the tube, the programs for poor people and the programs that we need in education and other things are just going to be devastated.

It is also interesting that in New York City, they still have a mayor and city council, but for any significant expenditure they make, do you know who has to approve it? They have a little group of bankers and bond holders that has to approve anything like that. New York City has, to a great extent, lost its independence.

We may be able to put something together if and when the time arrives that we have difficulties, but it is going to be at the cost of losing a great deal of our independence.

Back maybe 2 years or so ago, I had an illustration of why it is important not only for the poor in our country but for the poor in other countries.

The IMF had asked for a $12 billion guarantee from the United States. I received an invitation to have breakfast with the Director of the International Monetary Fund. I thought, well, he is reaching down pretty far on the Foreign Relations Committee to talk to someone, because I am about halfway down there.

I went over and he did not want to talk about the guarantee. He wanted to talk about what we are doing fiscally. He said—and I do not know if he was speaking in a slight exaggeration or not, but Alan Greenspan tells me he was not—“If you had a choice of getting hold of your deficit or cutting out the entire foreign aid program”—and I certainly do not favor that—“If you had a choice, if you want to help the poor people in the world, get rid of your deficit. What you are doing is borrowing and sending up the costs of borrowing for the poor nations of the world."

In terms of social programs, it is very clear what we are doing. When we talk about spending $339 billion this year, we are talking about a massive redistribution of wealth. Who pays the $339 billion? By and large, Americans of limited means. Who collects the $339 billion? By and large, those who are more fortunate, who hold the T-bills, and increasingly those beyond our borders.

We hear a lot about the trade deficit. This is very interesting. I asked the Congressional Research Service, what does a budget deficit have to do with the trade deficit? They came in, 37 to 55 percent of the trade deficit is caused by our budget deficit. What it does is escalates the value of the dollar. It makes it more profitable for industries to put their investment in other countries, and makes it more costly for them to put their investments here.

It is very interesting that as our deficit has gone up and our interest payments have gone up, we have been losing relative to other countries. As late as 1986, the average American working in a manufacturing location was being paid more money than in any other country. Now there are 13 nations on the face of the Earth where the average manufacturing wage is greater than ours. That is, in large part, because of the budget deficit.

We have a political problem, too. I hear the speeches on the floor, "We can do it without a balanced budget amendment. All it takes is political will." We heard those same speeches in 1986 when this failed by one vote to pass the U.S. Senate. In 1986, the deficit was $2 trillion. Now, 9 years later, that deficit is $4.7 trillion. And we hear the same speeches. If we should show the poor judgment not to pass this, then 5 years from now, 10 years from now, we will hear the same speeches.

What would have happened to our country if, in 1986, that had passed? We would have millions more people working; we would have lower interest rates; we would have more housing in our country; we would have more revenue for the Federal Government; we would have a higher standard of living for our people; and we would have a lower trade deficit. If we pass this, we will move in that direction.

Then the argument is made, and I have heard it several times already, but what if there is a recession? Listening to what the National Bureau of Economic Research in Cambridge had to say, in a report made by two professors in the department of economics at the University of California:

Discretionary fiscal policy does not appear to have had an important role in generating recoveries. Fiscal responses to economic downturns have generally not occurred until real activity was approximately at its trough.

Or listen to an article written by Bruce Bartlett in the Public Interest, and I ask unanimous consent that this full article be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Public Interest, summer 1993]

HOW NOT TO STIMULATE THE ECONOMY
(By Bruce Bartlett)

Shortly after taking office, President Clinton began pushing for a stimulus program to end the country's recession. But according to the National Bureau of Economic Research, the recession was already over. It began in July 1990 and ended in March 1991. Since that time the U.S. economy has expanded continuously. By the end of 1992, in fact, the economy was growing at an annual rate of 4.7 percent—almost twice the postwar average.

Fortunately, Congress was less persuaded of the need for stimulus than Clinton. His proposal was withdrawn. But months later the administration was still pushing for a scaled-down stimulus bill, even as the unemployment rate continued to decline.

Probably the best defense of Clinton's action is that he was simply doing what our last ten presidents all did. All these presidents, regardless of party or ideology, ultimately endorsed public works programs to combat recessions that were already over.

This article will review the results of this curious phenomenon. Without exception, stimulus programs have failed to moderate the recessions at which they were aimed, and have often sowed the seeds of the next recession. These programs have not been simply worthless, but harmful. It would have been better to do nothing.

KEYNESIAN ECONOMICS

The idea of using public works to jumpstart the economy is not a new one. Since at least the late nineteenth century, governments have attempted to use public works in a countercyclical manner. But until John Maynard Keynes, governments felt constrained by the need to keep their budgets in balance. Since recessions invariably shrink tax revenues, few governments could afford to increase spending on public works as a countercyclical measure. Keynes, by preaching the efficacy of deficit spending, relieved governments of this constraint.

Keynes also freed governments of the need to fund public works projects that were useful. In The General Theory, he wrote that pyramid-building, earthquakes, and even wars "may serve to increase wealth." He suggested that people be paid to dig holes in the ground, and even proposed burying bank notes in mine shafts to encourage the digging.

Although it is widely believed that the public works projects of the New Deal played a major role in ending—or at least mitigating—the Great Depression, such programs actually played a very limited role. It was World War II and monetary policy, not the New Deal, that ended the Depression. Unfortunately, policymakers have convinced themselves otherwise. And so, whenever another slowdown has occurred, they have turned to the same programs they believe ended the Great Depression.

This over-reliance on fiscal policy has given the U.S. massive deficits and debt, which requires even greater payments for interest. Large deficits also crowd out private borrowers, raising interest rates, and reducing investment, growth, and productivity. Finally, deficits put pressure on the Federal Reserve to increase the money supply, which leads to inflation.

For an illustration of these points, let us take a brief look at the postwar economic experience.

THE TRUMAN AND EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATIONS

The first recession of the postwar era began in November 1948. Initially the Truman administration was oblivious, as were most private economists. In mid-December, for example, Treasury Secretary John Snyder said the economy "is at present in a basically sound condition, and shows encouraging signs of stability in the vicinity of the present high levels." A survey of private economists found similar optimism: 59 percent expected business to expand; only 41 percent expected a decline. And this was after the recession had already begun!

It was not until eight months later that President Truman asked Congress to pass an antirecession program. Congress did eventually pass the Advance Planning for Public Works Act, and it took effect in October 1949—the very month the recession ended.

The first of three recessions under President Eisenhower began in July 1953, shortly after he took office. There is no evidence Eisenhower was even aware a recession had begun. Later, when signs of a slowdown became unmistakable, Eisenhower supported a small increase in highway spending. But no significant action was taken to counteract the recession, which ended three months later.

Eisenhower confronted a second recession in August 1957. Again, there is no evidence he saw it coming. In July, Treasury Secretary George Humphrey told the Senate Finance Committee, "I don't see any significant recession or depression in the offing."

Although the Eisenhower administration did not put forward any antirecession legislation, it did acquiesce in congressional efforts. Congress passed and Eisenhower signed bills to increase grants to states for highway construction, and to increase federal spending on rivers and harbors. The highway bill became law in April 1958, and the rivers and harbors bill was signed in July. The recession had ended in April.

THE KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION

The third recession under Eisenhower began in April 1960, and it contributed to the election of John F. Kennedy. Upon taking office in January 1961, Kennedy moved quickly to enact antirecession legislation. A key element of his program was the Area Redevelopment Act (ARA), which sent federal aid to areas with high unemployment. It was signed into law on May 1, although the recession had ended in February.

An early assessment of the ARA by Sar Levitan, a professor of economics at George Washington University, found that 40 percent of its funds went simply to reimburse other government agencies. Moreover, almost any project undertaken in a depressed area was eligible for ARA funding, even if it would have been undertaken anyway. Thus while 7,100 miles of ARA-funded roads were built in depressed areas, Levitan notes, the Federal Highway Administration "could not point to a single mile of road which was constructed as a result of priorities accorded to depressed areas."

In 1962, Congress passed more antirecession legislation—the Accelerated Public Works (APW) program. Subsequent analysis shows that the peak employment created by this program did not come until June 1964—thirty-nine months after the end of the recession. Spending was so drawn-out that expenditures were still being made nine years later.

A follow-up report by the General Accounting Office (GAO) found that the number of jobs created by the ARA and the APW had been overstated by 128 percent. Another GAO study found the overstatement to be 94 percent. The GAO also found that only 55 percent of the jobs created by the APW went to workers living in the areas where the projects were located, and that most of the jobs went to contractors' regular employees rather than unemployed local persons. Partially as a result of such criticism, Congress abolished the Area Redevelopment Administration (which administered the ARA and APW) in 1965.

THE NIXON AND FORD ADMINISTRATIONS

The country's next recession began in December 1969 and ended in November 1970. Antirecession legislation, however, was not enacted until August 1971. That legislation—the Public Works Acceleration Act—funded public works in designated areas of high unemployment. It was predicted by the Economic Development Administration that the program would create 62,000 man-months of employment in the first two years, with 75 percent of the jobs going to the previously unemployed. A Commerce Department study, however, found that only 39,000 man-months of employment were created, and that only 22 percent of the jobs went to the unemployed. The average job lasted just four weeks.

The next recession was the worst of the postwar era. It began in November 1973, following the OPEC oil embargo. Yet anti-recession legislation, in the form of a tax rebate, was not enacted until March 1975, the month the recession ended. The $22.8 billion legislation gave taxpayers a 10 percent rebate on their 1974 tax payments (with a maximum rebate of $200). The bill also extended unemployment benefits, increased the investment tax credit from 7 to 10 percent, and made various other tax changes. All this was intended to pump up demand by putting dollars into people's pockets. Subsequent analysis, however, shows that most of the money was initially saved, not spent. The bill had no significant stimulative effect.

During the following year, Congress determined that the lingering effects of the recession justified further antirecessionary action. Over the veto of President Ford, Congress established the Antirecession Fiscal Assistance Program (ARFA), and the Local Public Works Program (LPW). The LPW increased funding for public works by $2 billion. The ARFA program increased revenue-sharing by $1.25 billion.

As late as 1977, in fact, Congress was still enacting legislation to deal with the aftermath of the 1973-75 recession. The Local Public Works Capital Development and Investment Act of 1976 added another $4 billion to the LPW program. The ARFA program was also extended for another year and its funding increased by another $1.75 billion.

Subsequent analysis shows that these program were failures. A Treasury Department study of the ARFA program found that because the funds were not disbursed until well after the end of the recession, they failed to provide assistance when it was most needed and probably contributed to inflationary pressures during the economic expansion. The study also found that, rather than spend federal money immediately, state and local governments tended to save it. Thus state and local government budget surpluses increased, mitigating the stimulative effect of the federal programs. Another study, by the GAO, found that ARFA grants often went to areas unaffected by the recession, and concluded that the program was not particularly effective as a countercyclical tool.

The LPW program was also ineffective. Although the recession ended in March 1975, 20 percent of the program's funds were spent in 1977, 61 percent in 1978, 18 percent in 1979, and 1 percent in 1980. In a study commissioned by the Commerce Department, Chase Econometrics estimated that the cost per direct job created was $95,000.

Chase and the Commerce Department found other problems. Between 25 and 30 percent of LPW funds paid for projects that would have been funded by state and local governments anyway, and another 9 percent of LPW funds crowded out private expenditures that would otherwise have occurred. In addition, only 12 percent of workers on LPW projects were previously unemployed, and half of those had been unemployed less than five weeks. The average job lasted just 2.6 months. Finally, due to the Davis-Bacon Act, workers on LPW projects were paid more than before—for the same work.

The LPW program has also been severely criticized by University of Michigan economist Edward Gramlich. He argues that because the program had no allocation formula, required no matching funds, and funded only projects that could be started within 90 days, it virtually guaranteed that the only projects funded would be those that would have been built anyway. He has also noted that since the Commerce Department received some $22 billion worth of project applications for just $2 billion in federal funds, the LPW program apparently postponed $22 billion worth of construction spending, thus reducing GNP by $30 billion. Instead of stimulating the economy, the LPW program was actually contractionary.

THE CARTER AND REAGAN ADMINISTRATION

Despite the many problems of the LPW program, one of the Jimmy Carter's first acts upon taking office was to push for its expansion. The Congressional Budget Office argued that an expansion would have no impact on the economy for at least a year, but Carter proceeded anyway. He signed the expansion legislation on May 13, twenty-six months after the end of the recession.

Another recession developed in 1980, as a result of Carter's ill-considered imposition of credit controls. Although the recession was over by mid-year—after the lifting of controls—Carter continued to press for money for antirecessionary public works. It was then revealed that some $100 billion was already available from previous programs—fifty times more than Carter was asking for. According to analyst Pat Choate, these funds were held up by a combination of incompetence at the state and local level, and federal regulations that made it difficult to get money released.

Even the Reagan administration, despite its general aversion to such policies, adopted two antirecessionary programs. They were designed to attack a recession that began in July 1981 and ended in November 1982. The first of the programs was the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982, which raised the gasoline tax by five cents a gallon, and increased spending for highways and mass transit by $33.5 billion over five years.

With some exceptions, the provisions of the act that created jobs did not go into effect until after the tax increases to pay for them. Thus, in the short run, the legislation was contractionary rather than stimulative.

TABLE 1.—SURFACE TRANSPORTATION ACT RECEIPTS AND OUTLAYS
(In billions of dollars)

Fiscal year	Receipts	Outlays
1983	1.7	0.6
1984	3.8	2.9
1986	3.9	7.3

There is also evidence that the act led state and local governments to pull back on their own public works spending in anticipation of new federal funds. Furthermore, many state and local governments "piggy-backed" gasoline tax increases on the federal increase. Between 1982 and 1984, twenty-nine states increased their gasoline taxes. The result was a large increase in state and local government budget surpluses, which offset much of the stimulative impact of the federal spending.

President Reagan predicted the transportation bill would create 320,000 jobs, but subsequent analysis shows otherwise. In the year following passage of the legislation, employment in highway construction actually grew at a lower rate than did total employment (although wages for highway construction workers did rise sharply.)

Interestingly, at the very time that President Reagan was pressing hard for passage of the transportation bill as a jobs program, his Office of Management and Budget produced a study which showed that increases in federal aid for public works actually reduce overall public works spending, because state and local governments respond by cutting back their own spending. Of course, this and other studies had little effect. Both Congress and the administration were under irresistible political pressure to appear to be doing something about the recession, even though it had ended four months earlier.

The ink was barely dry on the transportation bill, in fact, when Congress pressed ahead with another antirecession bill, the Emergency Jobs Act of 1983. This act was little more than a grab-bag of pork-barrel projects, most of which just happened to be in the congressional districts of Appropriations Committee members.

A GAO study of the act in 1986 noted that it was not passed until twenty-one months after the beginning of the recession. A year and a half after passage, only one-third of the bill's funds had been spent; two and a half years after passage, half of the funds still had not been spent.

Job creation peaked in June 1984, but the number of jobs created at that point totalled just 1 percent of the private jobs created since passage of the bill.

THE BUSH AND CLINTON ADMINISTRATIONS

Like its predecessors, the Bush administration adopted an antirecession program after a recession. The $151 billion Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act was signed by the president in November 1991—eight months after recession's end. Congressional supporters of the bill estimated it would create 2 million jobs. The Bush administration, "eager to embrace the bill as a job creator on the eve of an election year," according to Congressional Quarterly, doubled the estimate to 4 million. More than a year later, however, transportation planners told the New York Times that "the law has neither stimulated the economy nor created many jobs." One of the major reasons was the slow pace of construction, which has been attributed to an increase in federal standards for air quality, access for the disabled, and public participation. In the end, the bill did nothing to alleviate the recession or to aid Bush's reelection hopes.

As noted earlier, the Clinton administration quickly came forward with a $16 billion stimulus program, despite data showing the economy to be strengthening. Although the program was promoted as an insurance policy to keep the economy going, the evidence indicates that few, if any, jobs would have been created in the short run. Instead, the main effect of the legislation would have been simply to fund traditional Democratic programs. As Newsweek observed:

"Administration officials concede privately that much of the money will go into highway and transportation projects that won't actually get underway until 1994 or 1995. A good chunk of the rest will raise spending on programs Clinton proposes to expand permanently, like Head Start and infant nutrition. By boosting outlays right away instead of waiting until the next fiscal year starts in October, Clinton can label those initiatives 'stimulative.'"

A Republican analysis of the cost per job of the Clinton stimulus program found that the average cost was over $89,000, with the cost of some jobs reaching into the millions.

DOING HARM

In 1980, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, now secretary of the Treasury, held a hearing before the Joint Economic Committee on the effectiveness of countercyclical public works programs. At that hearing, President Carter's Office of Management and Budget presented a study that reviewed the postwar experience with such programs. Its conclusions:

Public works programs cannot be triggered and targeted in a sufficiently timely manner to compensate for cyclical fluctuations in unemployment and economic activity.

Even if it were possible to properly time a countercyclical program, the time it takes to construct public works would lead to a significant overlap of job generation and economic stimulus with periods of economic recovery.

Public works programs have had minimal impact on the unemployed. This is partly because the programs are not labor-intensive, and partly because many of the jobs created require skills the unemployed do not have.

The duration of employment for individual workers is too short to provide meaningful economic relief, to maintain skills and work habits, or to provide on-the-job training.

Public works are extremely costly. The cost of generating a construction job for one year ranges from $70,000 to $198,000.

Later Bentsen issued a unanimous report from the Joint Economic Committee which concluded that by the time a recession is recognized, it is too late to be treated. Efforts to do so are destabilizing. The committee recommended avoiding short-term countercyclical actions, and instead focusing on factors that contribute to long-run growth. This was good advice then, and good advice now.

Even Lord Keynes, the father of countercyclical policy, eventually recognized its limitations. Toward the end of his life he wrote:

"Organized public works . . . may be the right cure for a chronic tendency to a deficiency of effective demand. But they are not capable of sufficiently rapid organization (and above all cannot be reversed or undone at a later date), to be the most serviceable instrument for the prevention of the trade cycle."

The U.S. economic experience provides ample confirmation.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. Bartlett writes:

Without exception, stimulus programs have failed to moderate the recessions at which they were aimed, and have often sowed the seeds of the next recession. These programs have not been simply worthless, but harmful. It would have been better to do nothing.

Then he writes:

President Carter's Office of Management and Budget presented a study that reviewed the postwar experience with such programs.

And they reached the same conclusion. Then, listen to this:

Later, [Senator Lloyd] Bentsen issued a unanimous report from the Joint Economic Committee which concluded that by the time a recession is recognized, it is too late to be treated. Efforts to do so are destabilizing. The committee recommended avoiding short-term countercyclical actions, and instead focusing on factors that contribute to long-run growth.

"This was good advice then," the author writes, "and good advice now."

Even Lord Keynes, the father of countercyclical policy, eventually recognized its limitations. Toward the end of his life, he wrote:

"Organized public works . . . may be the right cure for a chronic tendency to a deficiency of effective demand. But they are not capable of sufficiently rapid organization (and above all cannot be reversed or undone at a later date), to be the most serviceable instrument for the prevention of the trade cycle."

"The U.S. economic experience provides ample confirmation," the author of the article says.

Fred Bergsten, who serves as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and one of our Nation's really fine economists, recommends that we build in a small surplus. He is suggesting a 2-percent surplus, and then authorizing the President to move quickly with programs when we have unemployment above a certain level in any area, whether it is Missouri or Illinois or Michigan or Ohio, or wherever it might be.

Alan Greenspan has said much the same thing. Interest reduction is a far greater stimulus than any kind of stimulus that we might provide. But we have extended unemployment compensation and people say, well, we could not even do that.

We will take a look at the record. The only time I can find where we have not had 60 votes for that was in 1982. But let me start with 1991. Passed extension of unemployment compensation; passed the Senate 91-2, far more than the 60 percent required. Later that year, by voice vote, another voice vote. In 1992, 94-2; 1992, another voice vote; later in 1992, 93-3. In 1993, 66-33; also, in 1993, 76-20.

Clearly, we can get the 60 votes to do that.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, Mr. President, an article from Investors Business Daily.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Investors Business Daily, Jan. 25, 1995]

A BALANCED BUDGET MYTH BARED: ECONOMY CYCLES UNLIKELY TO WORSEN UNDER PLAN

(By John Merline)

A balanced budget amendment will either restore fiscal sanity to a town drunk on deficit spending or lead the country toward economic ruin.

Those, at least, are the stark terms typically used by supporters and opponents of a constitutional amendment outlawing deficit spending.

And, while passage of a balanced budget amendment is almost a sure thing this year, debates over its merits remain fierce—with critics from all sides of the political spectrum lobbing grenades at it.

Democrats don't like the rigidity it imposes while conservatives fear it may bias Congress towards tax increases.

One of the principal criticisms of the amendment is that it would short-circuit the federal government's ability to fight recessions, either with "automatic stabilizers" or with stimulus spending like temporary tax cuts or spending hikes. Yet there is little evidence to support this view.

"When purchasing power falls in the private sector, the budget restores some of that loss, thereby cushioning the slide," said White House budget director Alice Rivlin in testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee earlier this month.

"Unemployment compensation, foodstamps and other programs fill the gap in family budgets—and in overall economy activity—until conditions improve," she said, defending the budgetary "automatic stabilizers."

In addition, because of the progressive income tax code, tax liability falls faster than incomes drop in a recession, slowing the decline in after-tax incomes.

The result, however, is typically an increase in the deficit.

Mandatory balanced budgets would, she argued, force lawmakers either to raise taxes or cut spending in a recession to counteract increased deficits.

"Fiscal policy would exaggerate rather than mitigate swings in the economy," she said. "Recessions would tend to be deeper and longer."

Other economists agree with Rivlin.

Edward Regan, a fellow at the Jerome Levy Economics Institute in New York, argued that the amendment would "restrict government efforts to encourage private sector activity during economic slowdowns."

TABLE 2.—DATES OF RECESSIONS AND ANTI-RECESSION LEGISLATION

The assumption, of course, is that these automatic stabilizers actually work as advertised, an assumption not all economists share.

"If anything, I think the government has made economic cycles worse," said James Bennett, an economist at George Mason University.

Bennett, along with 253 other economists, signed a letter supporting a balanced budget amendment introduced last year by Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.

Ohio University economist Richard Vedder agrees. "If you look at the unemployment record, to use that one statistic, it was more favorable in the years before we began automatic stabilizers than in the years since," he said.

Much of the countercyclical programs were implemented in the wake of the Great Depression.

Unemployment data show that in the first three decades of this century the average jobless rate was roughly 4.5%.

PROLONGING SLUMPS

In the four decades since World War II, the rate averaged 5.7%. And, from 1970 to 1990, it averaged 6.7%.

In addition, some of the stabilizers may actually keep people out of the work force for longer periods of time, possibly prolonging economic slumps.

A 1990 Congressional Budget Office study found that two-thirds of workers found jobs within three months after their unemployment benefits ran out—suggesting that many could have found work sooner had they not been paid for staying home.

Other data suggest that, at most, federal fiscal policy has had only a small stabilizing effect on the economy, despite the sharp increase in the economic role played by government.

A study by economist Christina Romer of the University of California at Berkeley found that economic cycles between 1869 and 1918 were only modestly more severe than those following World War II.

Romer corrected what she said were serious flaws in data used to suggest that the pre-war economy saw far larger swings in economic cycles.

The finding runs contrary to conventional wisdom—which posits that government fiscal programs enacted after the Great Depression have greatly reduced the magnitude of boom and bust cycles.

"I think there are plenty of arguments against the balanced budget amendment," said Christina Romer in an interview. "I would not put much emphasis on taking away the government's ability of having countercyclical * * *."

Finally, some economists note that the stabilizers Rivlin points to don't have to be a function of government.

Private unemployment, farm or other insurance could provide needed cash during economic downturns, they say, replacing the government programs as the provider of these funds.

While the effectiveness of automatic stabilizers is doubted by some, straightout antirecessionary stimulus spending has few outright backers—for one simple reason.

Every major stimulus package since 1949 was passed after the recession was already over.

These packages typically consisted of temporary tax cuts or spending hikes designed to boost economic demand and artificially stimulate growth.

The problem has been that, by the time Congress recognizes the economy is in a slump and approves a package, it's too late.

TOO LITTLE, TOO LATE?

Clinton's failed stimulus package, for example, was proposed nearly two years after the 1990-91 recession ended, and half of the money wouldn't have been spent until 1994 and 1995.

A study of the 50-year history of stimulus packages by Bruce Bartlett, a senior fellow at the Arlington, Va.-based Alexis de Tocqueville Institution, concluded that "without exception, stimulus programs have failed to moder- * * * would have little bearing on the government's ability to pursue these policies during recessions.

First, the amendment allows Congress to pass an unbalanced budget, as long as it can muster 60% of the votes.

And, lawmakers could avoid that by simply running a budget surplus during growth years.

"The best technique is to aim for a modest budget surplus, of about 2% of GDP, over the course of the business cycle," Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics, told the Judiciary Committee.

"This would permit the traditional 'automatic stabilizers,' and perhaps even some temporary tax cuts and spending increases, to provide a significant stimulus to the economy," he said. Interestingly, Rivlin herself made similar arguments in her book, "Revealing the American Dream," which was published shortly before she joined the Clinton administration.

In that book Rivlin said that the federal government should run annual budget surpluses—increasing national savings and, in turn, economic growth.

At the same time, Rivlin said the federal government could strengthen federal "social insurance" programs designed to mitigate economic swings.

To accomplish this, she proposed shifting whole blocks of federal programs down to the states, including education, welfare, job training, and so * * *.

Mr. SIMON. This is the lead story. The headline says: "A Balanced Budget Myth Bared," in which the article talks about the fact that, in fact, we just do not act promptly enough to move in a recession, so to stop the balanced budget on that basis just does not make any sense. The article quotes James Bennett, an economist at George Mason University:

If anything, I think the government has made economic cycles worse.

I hear this: What about floods, earthquakes? We have an emergency in Michigan or Missouri, or someplace, and we have had them in Missouri and Illinois recently in our floods.

First of all, I will say that I favor creating a special emergency fund. We should not create a deficit every time. We ought to create an emergency fund of $5 or $10 billion every year, where we can tap into that for emergencies that will occur almost every year.

Take a look at the votes on these things. They say, well, we will be prevented from helping in natural calamities. Starting in 1991, I have not been able to find a single time when, in an emergency, we declined helping people. Now, there have been times when, years later or sometime later, we come back and they want help and they have been declined. In March 1991, 92 to 8; March 1991, 98 to 1. May 1991, voice vote. November 1999, 75 to 17. September 1992, 84 to 10. April 1992, 84 to 16. May 1992, 61 to 36. August 1992, voice vote. June 1993, voice vote. August 1993, 86 to 14. February 1994, 85 to 10. These are all more than 60 percent.

Then the argument is made, well, we will have the courts in this massively. What is the reality? Well, section 6 of this article says.

The Congress shall enforce and implement this article by appropriate legislation which may rely on estimates of outlay and receipts.

The only example you have of a Federal court acting is in the case of the State of Missouri, the Jenkins case, and there it was the Federal court acting, in terms of a State situation, under the 14th amendment, but we had no legislation and so you have a very, very different situation.

Second, we can say who has standing. I think we ought to say it takes 10 Senators or 30 House Members or 3 Governors to go before the courts. So we limit who can go before the courts.

And then, finally, the reality is we have a very good enforcement mechanism: You cannot increase the debt ceiling without a 60-percent vote. I think the likelihood that we are going to go before the courts is very, very slim, and the experience of the States is—and 48 of the 50 States have some kind of provision—the experience of the States is that it is rare for any kind of litigation. I remember when this came up—and Senator ABRAHAM will recall this—Senator HANK BROWN said in the history of the State of Colorado, which has such a provision in its constitution, there has been no litigation. This idea that we are going to be massively in the courts is just not true.

Then some say, "Well, you are going to give the President impoundment authority and the President is going to increase taxes." If I thought there was any possibility of that happening, I would favor an amendment. I had my staff research this very carefully. And I want to pay tribute to Aaron Rapport of my staff who has really done a superb job, but my staff has researched this and it is very clear, there is no impoundment authority. Anyone who looks at the legislative record will know that, and we will make it clear through implementing legislation.

Then I hear people say, "It is going to hurt my program, it is going to hurt my State, we are getting these letters from the Department of Defense and all the other departments." If you total up what everyone says is going to hurt and what is going to be taken out, we will have a huge surplus in this Nation.

Obviously, these figures are largely phony, and if the President of the United States had made a different decision, we would be getting all these letters from people saying what a great thing this is and this is going to be the salvation of our program.

I think you have to ask all these agencies and the States what is going to happen if we do not alter the present path. And the answer is, interest is going to continue to squeeze out our ability to respond to States, interest rates are going to continue to go up, and eventually we will monetize the debt.

Then I hear about Social Security, and we are going to have an amendment on that on the floor. I suggest we listen to Bob Myers, chief actuary for Social Security for 21 years, in which he says the only protection that we need that is desperately needed is a balanced budget amendment so we do not monetize the debt. That is the only way to protect senior citizens.

Groups like the AARP, and others who are saying that we should not pass this are looking short term. They are not looking long term. We have to protect Social Security, and it is true it is running a surplus now, and I would love to balance the budget without that surplus, but starting in the year 2012 or 2013, it starts going in the red. We have an obligation to face this problem.

President Gerald Ford said:

Unless we, as a Nation, face up to the facts of fiscal reality and responsibility and the sacrifices required to restore it, the economic time bomb we are sitting on will do us in as surely as any sudden enemy assault. We cannot go on living beyond our means by borrowing from future generations or being bailed out by foreign investors.

He is absolutely right. We have, and some will argue we have shown in 1993 we can do something. We did and to the praise of President Clinton we did do something. But you had an unusual confluence of things. You had a brand-new President in his honeymoon period, you had a Congress of both Houses that was in his party, and you had a President who had the courage to do something. What happened? Interest rates came down, even with the small gesture that we made at that point.

Listen to the lead witness against the balanced budget amendment 2 years ago before the House Budget Committee, Professor Laurence Tribe, of Harvard. I want to make clear he still opposes a balanced budget amendment: Listen to what he said:

Despite the misgivings I expressed on this score a decade ago, I no longer think that a balanced budget amendment is at a conceptual level an ill-suited kind of provision to include in the Constitution. The Jeffersonian notion that today's populace should not be able to burden future generations with excessive debt does seem to be the kind of fundamental value that is worthy of enshrinement in the Constitution. In a sense, it represents structural protection for the rights of our children and grandchildren.

People say, "Well, let's just do it with statutory action." I voted for Gramm-Rudman, but as soon as it started to squeeze too much, we changed the law. It is just too easy. For people who say, "Well, we're not going to pay attention to the Constitution"—JOHN ASHCROFT when you took that oath of office right over there, you took only one oath, to uphold and defend the Constitution. I cannot imagine any Senator, no matter how extreme, standing up and saying, "Let's ignore the Constitution." That just is not going to happen. We are going to pay attention to it.

The language that we have devised, that we have cleared with a great many people, is constitutional in nature, and those who say we are violating the spirit of the Constitution by requiring more than a majority vote ignore the fact that eight times in the Constitution it requires more than a majority vote to prevent governmental abuse. Have we had governmental abuse in this area? I do not think anyone can say anything to the contrary.

I also hear, "Oh, this is just a gimmick." I was in a press conference with OLYMPIA SNOWE, our new colleague in the Senate, when she was in the House, and a reporter said, "Isn't this just a gimmick?" And she responded, unfortunately with too much accuracy, "If it was just a gimmick, Congress would have passed it a long time ago." And I am afraid there is some truth to that.

If it were just a gimmick, my friend—and he is my friend—Senator ROBERT BYRD, would not be working so hard against this. The reality is, this has teeth. That debt increase means something.

People say, "Well, we have to show how we are going to do it. If they are talking in broad principles, I am all for, once this passes, spelling it out.

Let me give you one option, and that is we follow the present limits we set forth in our agreement through 1998 and then a combination of the Bush program for reducing the deficit and the Clinton program, something somewhat similar, neither of which did any great harm to anyone, that will do it by the year 2002.

I say to my colleagues who oppose this, who make these great speeches, "We can do it without a balanced budget amendment," they insist we spell out what we are going to do, and I am for spelling it out in broad terms. But I think there is a responsibility on the part of those who say we can do it without a balanced budget amendment to spell it out.

We save at least, by the most conservative estimate, about $140 billion in interest and some people say as much as $600 or $700 billion in interest. But there is that substantial savings. There is not that savings on the other side.

Finally, Mr. President, let me just give you one illustration why we need this. Two or 3 years ago, I introduced a bill for long-term care, a problem that is going to escalate in this country. I had with it a half-percent increase in Social Security to pay for it. Two of my colleagues in the Senate, one of whom is still in the Senate, came to me and said, "We really like your bill for long-term care. If you will just drop the taxes to pay for it, we would like to cosponsor the bill."

My friends, that is our problem. Nothing is there to restrain us from doing that. Now, my colleague from Michigan and my colleague from Missouri may differ with me on whether or not we ought to have the program. That ought to be a legitimate area of debate. There should not be a debate that if we have the program, we have to be willing to pay for it, and if we are unwilling to pay for it, we cannot have the program. That is what it is all about. We need pay-as-you-go Government.

I hope this body will take a look not just at all the pressure groups that are coming at us right now, but take a look at future generations, take a look at those pages, take a look at your children and your grandchildren and ask: How do we best protect them?

Deficit reduction is a tax cut for future generations.

Do I make a little sacrifice myself so that my three grandchildren can live better? That is the real question. I do not have a hard time answering that. Are we going to have to make some unpopular decisions if we pass this? You bet. If it was easy, we would have done this a long time ago. That is why we need a constitutional amendment.

So I hope my colleagues will do the right thing—not politically but for future generations. The right thing clearly I think is adopting this balanced budget amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I thank the Chair.

I rise today in strong support of the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, and I would like to preface my remarks by extending a compliment to the Senator from Illinois for his extensive work over many years on this issue. Thanks to his leadership, we are already moving in the House and here in the Senate toward adoption of this after many years of debate.

In my judgment, the amendment would change the way Congress makes budgetary decisions by severely limiting the option to borrow money. Currently, when faced with demands for more spending, the Congress makes the easy choice to borrow money. Under the balanced budget amendment, Congress would be forced to make the tough choices, to either raise taxes or reduce spending elsewhere, unless it mustered the necessary supermajorities required to deficit spend.

With last week's historic vote in the House of Representatives to approve the balanced budget amendment by a bipartisan margin of 300 to 132, the American people sent a clear and powerful message to the Senate: It is time to restore fiscal control of the Federal budget and prevent politicians from increasing Government spending.

In my view, the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution embodies the spirit of the electorate that voted for a Republican Congress for the first time in 40 years last November, and I believe that we in the Senate must not let them down.

When I was out on the campaign trail in Michigan in this most recent campaign, I encountered people all over the State. It did not matter where they lived. From Detroit to the Upper Peninsula, from Grand Rapids to Saginaw, north to south, and east to west, they all said the same types of things about the way Congress does business. They were totally perplexed and incapable of understanding why the Congress of the United States could not operate the way they did in their families or the way businesses did in trying to meet a bottom line of staying in the black.

I was constantly asked, "Why is that the case? Can you make a difference?" The one thing that was a clear note of consistent opinion across the spectrum was that the best and surest way to get the Federal Government under control was by adoption of a balanced budget amendment. The attitude in my State was not one of asking us to come up with a fancier bookkeeping way of handling Federal spending. They did not want me to come down here and say, "Well, we will have a balanced budget amendment, but we will leave exceptions for this or that program; we will put something off budget and make you feel better about the bottom line."

They said, "Why can't you go down and do what we have to do every day in our lives here in Michigan?" And that is what I came here to do.

Now, I have heard some people say in the course of the debate in the Judiciary Committee and already in the Chamber that this is not the way people behave. The families of the people of Michigan do not operate really in the black. They buy a house, and when they buy a house they have a debt. And if you put that debt into consideration, at the end of the year they still have that debt. They just make payments on the debt. And to them balancing the family budget really means that the amount of income they have is equal to the payments they make for the goods and services and the debts they encounter.

My response to those people, as I responded in the campaign was, "But wait a minute. There is a very simple distinction here. Those people are spending their own money and we are spending the taxpayers' money."

If people choose in their own lives to buy a house, I do not think that is the Federal Government's business. But if the Federal Government and those of us entrusted with the responsibility of spending over $1.5 trillion a year do not keep the public's interests in mind, I think we have made a huge mistake. And so in this campaign I got a clear message. It was a message that I should come here, that I should fight as hard as possible to put this country on a course to bring about a balanced budget as fast as possible and that the surest way to do it was with a balanced budget amendment. And so today I wish to speak about why that is so critical.

I believe that requiring a balanced Federal budget should no longer be a question for serious debate. For the past 25 years, the Congress has demonstrated its inability to manage effectively the Nation's purse strings. The national debt now stands in excess of $4.7 trillion. The Federal Government currently owes more than $13,000 for every man, woman, and child in America.

One of the major reasons for this explosion in Government spending and debt is that we have abandoned the implicit balanced budget requirements established by the Nation's Founding Fathers. Indeed, the Founding Fathers recognized that persistent Government deficits and the unfettered growth of Government had consequences for the long-term stability of our democracy and threatened our individual freedoms. The reason the Founding Fathers did not include a balanced budget requirement in the Constitution is because they felt it would be superfluous. Balancing the budget and reducing the outstanding debt were considered the highest priorities of Government. I think Thomas Jefferson summarized it best when he said that:

The public debt is the greatest of dangers to be feared by a republican Government.

Because of this implicit balanced budget requirement, Government spending remained low, rarely exceeding 10 percent of our national income, for the first 150 years of this Republic. But starting in the mid 1930's, the rise of Keynesian economics gave politicians an economic rationale to increase Government spending. As a result, fiscal discipline was abandoned. Today, Federal spending as a share of our national income stands at 22 percent. Deficit spending has now become the fiscal norm. The purpose of the balanced budget amendment is to restore fiscal discipline upon the Congress by placing the balanced budget obligation in the supreme law of the land. Absent such an amendment, the Congress has proven itself incapable of making difficult spending decisions, given its free and easy access to deficit spending.

The amendment would contribute to a balanced budget by transforming the critical questions asked by Members of Congress who confront spending interests. Instead of asking merely, "Is this a desirable spending measure or program?" they will instead have to ask, "Is this spending measure so desirable that we should either reduce spending for some other spending measure or raise taxes on the people to pay for it?"

The psychology of the budget process will also be transformed. No longer will spending interests be competing against the taxpayer for a portion of an unlimited budget. Rather, they will be competing against each other for a portion of a limited budget. No one doubts that Governors of States with balanced budget requirements will propose balanced budgets because they are obligated to do so. When the Congress is also obligated to do the same, I believe they, too, will propose balanced budgets. The details will inevitably be fought out in the budget process, where they should be. Without a balanced budget amendment, this Nation could be looking at Federal deficits in the trillions of dollars within 15 years.

All the opponents of the amendment want to talk about is the cost of reducing spending programs for special interests. But what about the economic costs of running high deficits and high levels of Government spending and taxation on the general public? The weight of economic evidence from around the world strongly suggests that as the size of government increases as a share of national income, the rate of economic growth and job creation declines. I was sent here by people who think it is time to put the welfare of the general public ahead of the special interests.

The proposed amendment does not read into the Constitution a mandate for any particular economic policy outcomes. It only restores the historical relationship between levels of public spending and available public resources. National solvency is not, nor should it be, a partisan political principle. It should be a fundamental principle of our Government.

Mr. President, I would like to spend a few moments on the question of judicial enforcement of the balanced budget amendment. There are many provisions of the Constitution that are effective in achieving their purposes, yet which do not require judicial enforcement. For example, the Senate does not introduce revenue bills despite the Court's refusal to involve itself in such political questions. The moral power of the Constitution itself serves as an enforcement mechanism.

The balanced budget amendment is largely self-enforcing and self-monitoring. Congress and the President are to establish procedures for compliance. Congress and the President are to monitor the actions of each other, and actions by the Congress and the President will be subject to even more effective monitoring by the public.

I would argue that the balanced budget amendment is already working, despite the fact that the Congress has not yet passed it. Indeed, the mere prospect of the congressional approval of the amendment has already forced congressional leaders to seriously consider a 7-year plan to reduce the growth rate of Government spending and balance the budget. Does anyone truly believe that this debate would be occurring in the absence of the debate over the balanced budget amendment?

Once the amendment is actually approved by both Houses of Congress, we will be under enormous political pressure to produce a balanced budget plan which achieves balance by the year 2002.

As the debate over the balanced budget amendment proceeds in the Senate, I will address in more detail why we should not exempt any special areas of the budget from the balanced budget requirements. In essence these efforts are, in my judgment, nothing more than escape valves designed to alleviate the pressure on lawmakers to spend in different areas of priority than would otherwise take place. These exemptions violate the whole point of having a balanced budget amendment.

The Nation believes we already have enough tax revenue to balance the budget. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office projects that tax revenue collected by the Government will naturally increase from the $1.36 trillion in 1995 to $1.88 trillion in the year 2002. I know the people in Michigan, and I think most people across this country would agree, that $1.88 trillion is more than enough to run the Federal Government.

Finally, I am a strong supporter of the proposed supermajority requirements to limit tax increases. I think the inclusion of the tax limitation language would help avert the bias in our current system toward higher taxes. Although I am concerned about a balanced budget amendment that does not simultaneously place an explicit limit on taxes, I believe this can be accomplished through other means, not the least among them the wrath of an over-taxed electorate. Further, I believe that to truly limit the tax burden on the American people we must explicitly limit the total size of Government. It is for this reason I strongly support either legislation or a constitutional amendment to limit to a fixed percentage of our national income, except in times of emergency, the spending level of Government. Limiting total spending limits total taxes.

In my State of Michigan we have a similar government spending limitation in our State constitution called the Headlee amendment. Under that amendment, the size of State government is limited by holding State tax revenue to the same fraction of personal income that it was when the amendment passed in 1978. A blue ribbon commission appointed by Gov. John Engler to study the Headlee amendment recently concluded that it had been effective in limiting the growth of our State government.

This spending limitation proposal offered by Senator JON KYL does essentially the same thing as the Headlee amendment. It requires that the Federal Government only grow in size relative to the size of the national income. I think such a spending limitation concept ought to be a key ingredient as we proceed to the subsequent implementing legislation to balance the budget.

In conclusion, before we begin the necessary task of limiting the growth rate of Government spending, we ought to be able to assure the American people that any consequent pain will not be for naught, that cuts in spending will finally translate into reduction in the Federal deficit. A balanced budget amendment to the Constitution would restore a necessary, basic, and broad governing principle for our country; namely, that Government should spend no more than it takes in.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose the proposed balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution. I also rise as a person who I hope can be described as one of the strongest advocates of actually balancing the Federal budget. I believe the American people really want a balanced budget more than they want a balanced budget amendment. Although this may seem strange to a lot of people—and it is going to be very important to make this point both here and across America as we have this debate—I think passing the balanced budget amendment will make it less likely rather than more likely we will actually achieve a balanced budget in the next few years.

A number of respected authorities have raised a variety of significant points of concern with regard to the amendment itself. Some say the problems related to the role of the courts and the power it might confer on unelected judges to set our national budget policy is a reason not to vote for this.

Some talk of the damage the proposal could do to Social Security unless some changes are made to the current draft. I think that is a very, very important issue.

Others say there will be unintended changes to the Presidential impoundment authority. That is something we have to look at.

And still others say that unnecessary and possibly dislocating restrictions on our ability to establish capital or investment budgets will be a problem, producing the very surprising result that the Federal Government could end up being the only government anywhere that we know of that does not have a distinction between a capital and operating budget.

These are all very serious concerns and there are other ones as well that are being discussed and will be discussed in the coming weeks as we consider the balanced budget amendment.

My principal objection to the proposed balanced budget amendment is that it will most likely damage our efforts to reduce and eliminate the Federal deficit. I believe strongly in eliminating the Federal deficit. Along with health care reform, that was the issue on which I focused my campaign for the U.S. Senate, and it is the issue on which I focused the greatest amount of my time during the 2 years I have been here. But there is evidence that suggests strongly that this proposed constitutional amendment will only undercut the work I have had a chance to do, the work that others have done to bring down the deficit and clean up the mess that was created throughout the 1980's.

First, consider the basic argument of those who support the proposed amendment. The essence of the arguments made by supporters of the amendment is the assertion that a constitutional amendment is absolutely necessary in order to spur lawmakers into making the tough decisions they are otherwise unwilling to make. The amendment's supporters maintain that once the constitutional requirement is in place, lawmakers will suddenly make the tough decisions because they will be able to say this to their angry constituents: I am sorry I cut your program, but the Constitution made me do it.

I find it hard to believe that kind of conversation is going to really occur, but that is in effect what is being suggested, that Members of Congress will suddenly do what they must do and should have done a long time ago because they will be able to say, "My hands are tied. I am going to have to hurt you by cutting this program."

The notion that lawmakers require the Constitution of the United States to provide political cover is the defining rationale for the supporters of this proposed amendment. After all, if a constitutional refuge were not required, then the need for this amendment would vanish.

This assessment of our political process, I believe, ignores a basic political reality, that those who require political cover in order to make tough decisions under our current rules may end up being the very same people who will find a way not to make the tough decisions even if the balanced budget amendment is passed by this Senate and even if it does become a part of our Constitution.

As the distinguished economist Herbert Stein noted in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee:

Objection to a balanced budget amendment is not an objection to balancing the budget. It is, instead, objection to using an appeal to a traditional symbol as a smokescreen behind which to hide unwillingness to face our real problems.

The only way we can balance the Federal budget is by enacting specific legislation that spells out a series of individual spending cuts that add up to sufficient cuts to eliminate that deficit. But the proposed constitutional amendment does not contain one single spending cut. The sponsors of it do not have to put their name on the line for any cut in order to go about their States and say: I fought to balance the budget.

I am not sure the people of the country realize this. I think what they are saying is: Balance the budget. I think many folks think the balanced budget amendment will also include the identification and, in fact, requirement of a series of cuts to achieve that. But there is nowhere in the balanced budget amendment where any of the courage that is required to identify specific cuts is demonstrated. It is just the reverse. It is just the reverse. In fact, in many ways, it is the easiest vote in the world.

Mr. President, this raises a second point. Many of the supporters of the proposed constitutional amendment are unwilling to outline those spending cuts they would pursue in order to balance the budget. The majority leader of the other House, RICHARD ARMEY, a strong proponent of the constitutional amendment, has been quoted as saying that if Members of Congress knew what it took to comply with the proposal "their knees would buckle."

That is a candid statement, but a very disturbing one. Majority Leader ARMEY is also reported as saying that:

Putting together a detailed list beforehand would make passing the balanced budget amendment virtually impossible.

Mr. President, this second point is a natural outflow of the underlying political view held by the amendment's supporters. That view I think is based on cynical assumptions about the American public and our democratic process. It implies that, if the people realized what it would take to balance the budget, they would just refuse to support such action.

Let us consider for a minute what this reasoning suggests. I think it assumes a very low opinion of the American people, the electorate. Supporters suggest that, rather than deal honestly with the people, we should evade, delay and dissemble. Mr. President, in my view that perception of the American people is a good example of the politics as usual that got us into this mess in the first place, and which I believe voters have been rejecting, not just on November 8 of last year but for the past several years where we have had two monumental elections.

Mr. President, I mentioned that I ran on the issue of deficit reduction in 1992, and, as a matter of fact, so did all of my three opponents in that race. I strongly believe that one of the reasons for my victory was that I spoke specifically with the voters about the deficit issue. While others supported the balanced budget amendment, they generally refused to specify how they would reduce the deficit. I opposed the balanced budget amendment but presented a specific 82-point plan—that has grown since—that pointed to exactly all the different ways we could cut the Federal budget which would add up to the elimination of the Federal deficit over 5 years.

Mr. President, despite the statements that nothing has been done here in the last couple of years, and that this institution is incapable of cutting spending without a balanced budget amendment, I can tell you that during the past couple of years many of those specific cuts that I had identified—and that many others had identified—were included in the President's deficit reduction package in 1993, passed, and became law. Why did the balanced budget amendment advocates refuse to even take seriously the progress that has been made in reducing the deficit during the past 2 years? Well, maybe it is not good politics. But it is unfair to the American people to continue to tell them that nothing has been done, that no effort has been made, that no progress has been made, and that no tough votes have been taken, because they have.

I regret that no Member of what is now the majority party chose to participate in either the other House or this House in trying to help us make those specific cuts. But that does not take away from the fact that those cuts were made. Why are we not out here telling the folks across America that, for example, we significantly cut hundreds of millions of dollars out of overseas broadcasting, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty? Why are we not telling the American people that we finally had the guts to get rid of the superconducting super collider, and the wool and mohair subsidy? My constituents say, "These agriculture programs are eating us alive." The truth is we eliminated a program like that. It was not always fun for me with several thousand wool farmers in Wisconsin. But that was done here in this body in the last 2 years, and we are not telling the American people something that they need to hear.

This week I was informed that one of the cuts that we achieved, one of the changes we made, is actually working out better than the CBO estimated. I believe the estimates were that the FCC spectrum auction would achieve $7 billion. I hear now it may end up being $10 billion that we are now able, through a more sensible proposal, to use and to help reduce the Federal deficit. That story is not being told out here because, if that story were being told out here, the advocates of the balanced budget amendment would have an awful hard time saying what they always say; that is, there is no way to reduce the deficit and balance the budget without a balanced budget amendment.

I find it amazing that this is glossed over. And I believe that it is our obligation, as we go through this debate of the balanced budget amendment, to say that during the past 2 years—although certainly I would not describe it as the Camelot of deficit reduction—it was a very good start, and it helped our economy. And it reduced the deficit significantly. Now it just a question of finishing the job, and we have the power to do that today. And that is what we should be focusing on, not a balanced budget amendment that simply gives political cover.

So, Mr. President, I think it is interesting to realize that the ratification of the proposed constitutional amendment itself may be threatened by the failure of its supporters to be specific and direct to the American people about how it is going to be achieved. More importantly, even if the proposed amendment is ratified, the cause of fiscal prudence and deficit reduction could be severely jeopardized if we do not have the broad-based support of the Nation and of the people of this country. In the end without that support, without the support of the American people, an unpopular plan would be overturned, and we would be left with the balanced budget amendment that only serves to degrade and undermine the authority of our laws, and even worse the authority of our Constitution.

Mr. President, it should be reiterated that a majority of those supporters of the proposed amendment who were here in 1993 opposed the President's deficit reduction package. That package included many difficult provisions, including significant cuts to very popular programs. But this is precisely the kind of specific reduction package that will have to pass in this body, if we are ever going to really have a balanced budget, not a balanced budget amendment.

(Mr. COATS assumed the chair.)

Of course, if we are going to have what the American people really want, which is a balanced budget, I think one certainly can favor reducing the deficit but oppose a specific plan. But, Mr. President, many of the supporters of the proposed balanced budget amendment oppose any specific plan. In their best of all worlds, you do not propose a plan and identify the cuts, but you say that you supported the balanced budget amendment and you have done your job. You can go home and start focusing on other issues.

On another matter, some supporters of the proposed constitutional amendment promised to offer a specific plan of action but they promised to do it only after the joint resolution is adopted by both Houses of Congress after it is sent out to the States but before it is ratified by the States. But, if we apply those folks' own test, this would doom the proposed constitutional change because what it means is, even though it may have passed the House and the Senate and it is sent out to the States, the plan would be revealed before ratification. The specifics would come out, those same specifics that would make our knees buckle and that would make it impossible to pass the proposed amendment in Congress presumably would be so terrible and so upsetting to the States that they would not pass the balanced budget amendment.

Perhaps the supporters of the constitutional change would just keep the specifics secret throughout the whole ratification process. Taking this argument to its logical conclusion—the argument that we should not lay out the plan as we passed this amendment—the reasoning of the supporters of the proposed constitutional amendment dictate that a specific plan apparently could not be offered until after the States had ratified the amendment.

In fact, under this argument, no plan could be offered until the first year the article was to take effect which, of course, is fiscal year 2002 at the very earliest, for not until the constitutional mandate is in force would the needed political cover be in place to protect those lawmakers that amendment supporters maintain are too hesitant to act without that protection.

Is this what the balanced budget amendment supporters want? Is that what they are saying? We are going to keep a tight lip in 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001, and then suddenly in the year 2002 we are going to magically present this plan that will eliminate the Federal deficit, at which point, I assure you if we do this, will dwarf the deficit that we have now? Political cover will have made sure that this institution did not have to act during that time period, and it will not act. It will simply stand back and wait for the States to decide whether to pass this amendment.

This reasoning produces the absurd result that Congress would be paralyzed to act to reduce the deficit until the first balanced budget is required, which again is fiscal year 2002 at the earliest.

Mr. President, we know any delay in acting to eliminate the deficit only makes future action that much more difficult and politically distasteful. Waiting clearly makes it harder. In the world depicted by the amendments supporters, delay could be fatal for efforts to balance the budget as legislators would be confronted with an increasingly more difficult task and increasingly more difficult choices.

Thus, Mr. President, even using the reasoning of the balanced budget amendment supporters, adoption of the amendment would make it more difficult to actually balance the budget. I think that kind of delay is a tremendous disservice to our economy, and especially to our children and our grandchildren. As a result of this action by the Congress, the States will end up with a bigger debt and a bigger deficit. The specific plan to reduce the deficit must be passed before a constitutional amendment is sent to the States for ratification.

A budget plan is not only a safeguard against later inaction, it ensures that Congress deals with the American people honestly. I know I have not been the only Member of the Senate to propose a specific plan. I believe my colleague on the other side, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], has put together a similar kind of specific plan to eliminate the Federal deficit. I was delighted to work with him during the past 2 years on a bipartisan basis, and with Senator KERREY of Nebraska, to craft that kind of a proposal. We signed onto it and we signed onto the specifics. No, we did not succeed in the vote on the floor, but we worked together to identify the cuts. That kind of approach is the only way we are going to reduce the deficits, not by letting Members of the Senate off the hook by providing them with the political cover of adopting a constitutional amendment that does not say one single thing about what should be cut and when and who should get hurt.

Professor Stein, in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee, commented on this very point. He testified:

I believe it is basically improper and unfair to propose a balanced-budget amendment without revealing how the balance would, or might, be achieved—by what combination of expenditure cuts and tax increases. I do not think the American people should be asked to commit themselves to a constitutional limit on their future decisions without knowing what would be involved.

Mr. President, a specific plan of deficit reduction is the only way the budget will be balanced.

Passing a specific plan before the proposed amendment is sent to the States helps preclude delay and evasion. Without it, Congress could adopt the proposed amendment, declare victory, and do absolutely nothing. It is a great formula for politicians who have to run for reelection. They can sit back and say: Let the States do it; it is not my problem. I voted for the balanced budget amendment. It is up to the States now to worry about the Federal deficit.

That is what might be called a free pass. In fact, I think it is the equivalent of a politician winning the lottery. To not even have to talk about what cuts, to be able to say for the next 7 years it is up to the States to ratify the constitutional amendment, is like the political jackpot, because you do not have to say where the cuts should come from. That is what is going on here. It is punting to the States. It is leaving it up to the elected State legislatures instead of the people sent here, who took an oath to solve the Nation's problems themselves. That is what this balanced budget amendment is about.

Mr. President, equally as important, before the voters and local governments and State legislatures are asked to ratify the amendment, I think they are entitled to know what the supporters of the balanced budget amendment mean to do, before they modify the Constitution of the United States to endorse that action. I believe the Constitution is our great national contract. Before the people are asked to support a change in that contract, they are entitled to read the fine print.

Mr. President, there is at least one other issue that should raise serious doubts in the minds of Members. That is this clamor for a middle-class tax cut or an across-the-board tax cut by many of the same people who are saying they are dedicated to a balanced budget amendment and to the balanced budget. I think it is obvious to almost any American that this makes no fiscal sense. To give a big tax cut now, either to the middle class or across the board, and to maintain you can have a balanced budget amendment in the coming years is flim-flam, voodoo mathematics. The American people do not believe that we can have a tax cut and balance the budget.

I will have more to say on this subject later in the debate.

For now, I only want Members to note this obvious inconsistency and to consider that the two apparently contradictory positions really share one thing in common: They both flow from the politics of the free lunch.

In closing, let me add a brief personal note about one of the principal sponsors of the amendment, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON]. Unlike many who support the proposed amendment, he has consistently fought for deficit reduction and has taken tough stands in that effort, including voting for the President's deficit reduction bill. That vote, obviously, was essential, as was the vote of every Senator who voted for it, including, of course, the Vice President of the United States.

Senator SIMON has joined with a number of us who are questioning the wisdom of the tax cut bidding war that has started. So I want to say, out of great respect for the Senator from Illinois, that the supporters of the proposed amendment could have no greater champion than Senator SIMON. Though he and I differ on this issue, I regret very much his decision not to seek reelection.

I yield the floor.

THE TAXPAYERS DESERVE A BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, when our ancestors were on the verge of a revolt against the British Government, Edmund Burke rose in the House of Commons to urge his fellow Members of the House of Parliament to refrain from using force to impose taxes on those in the United States, which were then Britain's American Colonies. Burke had the courage and the wisdom to speak for conciliation. He foresaw what no one else did—that if England persisted in taxing this country, it would lose its empire and would fight a long war for a bad cause. Burke told the Members of Parliament that in attacking America through taxation, they were really attacking their own British liberties.

As we discuss the balanced budget amendment, we usually talk about the impact of runaway spending on our economy and on our future. Those are our fundamental considerations. But we also must not lose sight of considerations that are far more fundamental and profound. Protracted deficit spending empowers the central Government with the means to undermine our basic liberties.

We hear it said in this Chamber, and by the media, that the American people are selfish because they want the benefits of Government without the cost of taxes. We forget that the power to impose taxes is a standing threat to freedom.

Mr. President, the acknowledgment that we can only control Government by controlling its capacity to take our money is as old as the idea of democracy. Money was—and is—the source of the Government's basic power. The tale of history bears testament to this truth. The Magna Carta prescribed that the King could not impose taxes except through the consent of the Great Council. Charles I was executed because he tried to govern without seeking the consent of Parliament in spending public money. Let us not forget that the American Revolution itself was rooted in the relationship between taxation and representation.

Congress today does not have to vote to raise more revenue in order to spend more money. Instead, our legislature takes the debtor's path: Spend and beg; spend and plead; spend and borrow. Our current system lets the Government spend on credit and sign the taxpayers' name on the dotted line. When the credit card bill comes due, it is the American people who are confronted with the dilemma. They can either send more money to Washington to pay the bill or default on the debt incurred in their name.

When the American people express the belief that Government is out of control—as they did in this past November's election—they, indeed, are correct. For too long, this body has assembled to satisfy the appetites of narrow interests at the public's expense. The American people are fed up with a Congress that spends the yet unearned wages of the next generation.

Mr. President, deficit spending is not only a threat to our prosperity and our children's future, it is the method by which Washington's imperial elite has circumvented the public, the law, and the Constitution. Deficit spending allows beltway barons to run this country without regard for the people. Whether it is pork projects or political payoffs, the Washington elite know how to play the game.

That must end. A balanced budget amendment will compel the Members of this body to raise taxes if they want to spend more money. What better way to restrain spending than that? A balanced budget amendment will make it clear to all that the special interest is rewarded when the citizen is penalized and that we should refrain from penalizing citizens to reward special interests.

What will a balanced budget amendment mean? It will mean accountability to the Constitution and restraint on our spending—in short, it will mean integrity in Government. It will rightly return the power of the purse to the people.

Two centuries ago, in a nation across the sea, Edmund Burke reminded his fellow Members of Parliament of a fundamental principle. Burke said:

* * * the people must in effect themselves * * * possess the power of granting their own money, or no shadow of liberty [can] subsist.

Mr. President, if we truly wish to preserve the liberties first inscribed into the Magna Carta and then brought to these shores—and preserved through the blood of revolutions on two continents—it is imperative that we return to the people the power of the purse.

We must take the American Express card away from the Congress and eliminate the expense account of the beltway barons. We must make the Members of this body accountable to the taxpayers—not to the lobbyists. We can do this if we have the will.

The balanced budget amendment is not a quick fix. But it is real reform and it will be felt. I know—from my service as Governor of one of the States—that 49 States, in effect, require a balanced budget. It is not a gimmick. We balance the budget.

I balanced budgets 8 years in a row while I was Governor. As a matter of fact, we put into place a cash operating reserve fund of several hundred millions of dollars. We established a rainy day fund—such as the emergency fund that the senior Senator from Illinois has suggested we have for the Federal Government—because we knew there would be episodes of fiscal crisis and financial difficulty in the future that we would need to meet. And we knew, since we were required by our constitution to have a balanced budget, that we would need to prepare for it in advance.

So, Mr. President, let me say it again for emphasis. A balanced budget requirement is not a gimmick. It is not a quick fix either, but it is real reform. It will reestablish the responsibilities observed in this country for decades—prior to the last two or three—that we would have balanced budgets except in time of war.

A balanced budget is a political reform that will be felt first and foremost by the imperial elite who have long run this town. It will be felt by a brood of beltway barons—both elected and unelected—who are robbing the next generation of their inheritance. And, most importantly, it will be felt by the American people who will have succeeded in restoring their right to self-governance.

There are those in this body, Mr. President, who suggest to us that we somehow have to forecast the next 7 years of priorities in spending for the United States of America in order to give allegiance to a balanced budget amendment. Nothing could be further from the truth as far as I am concerned.

I know of no State which tries to lock itself into a 7-year budget which would deny subsequent legislatures the opportunity to adjust to priorities, to respond to circumstances, and to create budgets which meet the real needs of the individuals in the jurisdiction at the time.

When President Kennedy came before the United States of America—and before the House and Senate—and suggested that we as a nation, adopt and embrace an aspiration to put a person on the Moon as an expression of our ability to expand our technological and scientific awareness, he did not have every answer for every way in which everything would happen, but he expressed it as an aspiration—an aspiration toward greatness.

The desire to climb a mountain does not always contain in it all the plans and processes and procedures, but you commit yourself to the objective and you launch your endeavor and you work your way toward the objective. And it is essential that we do that at this time.

The suggestion that our aspirations regarding Federal spending can be accomplished without a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution calls history a liar. For decades and decades, the United States of America has conceded the necessity—but never developed the discipline—to get this job done. It is time now that we make this commitment to a noble objective, to protect the birthright of a generation of Americans yet to come, to protect the opportunity for productivity and competitiveness for the next generation. It is time that we made this commitment for ourselves—and for those who follow us.

Mr. President, I am grateful to have had this opportunity to address this body on these issues. I note that Senator HEFLIN desires to speak, so I yield the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise again to express my support for a constitutional amendment requiring the Federal Government to achieve and maintain a balanced budget. The time has finally come to pass this legislation and send it to the States for ratification. This amendment is not a gimmick, nor is it chicanery; it is good common sense.

We have seen in the House, on January 26, overwhelming, bipartisan support and passage of a balanced budget amendment. The vote in the House 300 to 132, 12 more than the two-thirds majority required for passage of a constitutional amendment, proves that the time for action is now. This momentum, shown by the House, is one which I believe will only grow as the Senate and eventually the State legislatures debate and vote to pass this vital amendment to our Constitution.

I commend the Members of both parties in the House, who formed an alliance to produce the vote, which was a culmination of over 10 years of House deliberation and debate. I applaud all for their determination to see this legislation succeed, as well as the many House Democrats who have worked unceasingly toward this victory.

And, as the waves of this tide roll into the Senate we should be aware of where the original swell began, the American people.

Since I first came to the Senate in 1979, every Congress I have introduced legislation proposing a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget, and I have dedicated myself to many years of work with my colleagues to adopt a resolution which would authorize the submission to the States for ratification of a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

For much of our Nation's history, a balanced Federal budget was the status quo and part of our unwritten constitution. For our first 100 years, this country carried a surplus budget, but in recent years this Nation's spending has gone out of control. Indeed, the fiscal irresponsibility demonstrated over the years has convinced me that constitutional discipline is the only way we can achieve the goal of reducing deficits.

As you know, in 1982, the Senate did pass, by more than the required two-thirds vote, a constitutional amendment calling for a balanced budget. There were 69 votes in favor of it and that time. It was sent to the House of Representatives, where, in the House Judiciary Committee it was bottled up. The chairman would not allow it to come up for a committee vote, in order that it might be reported to the floor of the House of Representatives.

In order to bring the measure up for a vote in the House of Representatives, it was necessary to file a discharge petition. This is a petition that has to be signed by more than a majority of the whole number of the House of Representatives, and then it is brought up and voted on without amendment. The Senate-passed amendment failed to obtain the necessary two-thirds vote that was required in the House of Representatives at that time.

In the 99th Congress, after extensive debate, passage of a balanced budget amendment by the Senate failed by one vote—but got 66 votes. During the 101st Congress, I supported a measure which passed the Judiciary Committee, but it was never considered by the full Senate. In the 102d Congress, the Judiciary Committee favorably reported a balanced budget bill, but since an amendment failed to pass the House of Representatives by the necessary two-thirds vote, this killed the possibility of favorable action by the Senate.

In the 103d Congress, the Senate narrowly defeated an amendment, which I cosponsored, by a vote of 63 to 47—4 votes short of the 67 votes needed for passage.

All the while, there has been considerable debate, various articles have been written in numerous publications, and editorials have appeared in countless newspapers. Many speeches have been made on the floor of the Senate, and I have made numerous speeches advocating the adoption of a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget.

Mr. President, I hope the time has come to finally adopt this long-overdue amendment and begin to move toward our goal of a balanced Federal budget.

Section 1 of the amendment requires a three-fifths vote of each House of Congress before the Federal Government can engage in deficit spending. A 60-percent vote in the Senate is a very difficult one to obtain. This requirement should establish the norm that spending will not exceed receipts in any fiscal year. If the Government is going to spend money, it should have the money on hand to pay its bills.

Section 2 of the amendment requires a three-fifths vote by both Houses of Congress to raise the national debt. In addition to the three-fifths vote, Congress must provide by law for an increase in public debt. As I understand it, this means presentment to the President, where the President has the right to veto or sign. If the President chose to veto the bill, it would be returned to Congress for action to possibly override the veto. It is also important to note that section 1, regarding the specific excess of outlays over receipts, contains this same requirement that Congress act by law.

Section 2 is important because it functions as an enforcement mechanism for the balanced budget amendment. While section 1 states outright that "Total outlays * * * shall not exceed total receipts" without the three-fifths authorization by Congress. Therefore, section 2 will require a three-fifths vote to increase the national debt. This provision will increase the pressure to comply with the directive of this proposed constitutional amendment.

In my judgment, section 2 puts teeth into the constitutional amendment. We have had many statutory enactments that say we are going to have a balanced budget. We have a procedure under this constitutional amendment that makes it more difficult to engage in deficit spending. This is a procedure by which, if there is an excess of outlays over receipts—and that means deficit spending during a fiscal year—we must approve that specific amount by a three-fifths vote of the whole membership of both Houses. That in and of itself is fine, but it is largely directory. It does not have an enforcement procedure. An enforcement procedure is provided by section 2 of the amendment, which is the public debt provision.

The public debt provision makes it more difficult for Congress to vote a deficit. It means that if we vote a deficit and fail to increase the public debt, then Government will come to a halt. If we do not increase the public debt, eventually, we run on a balanced budget.

Therefore, section 2 has the intention of making it more difficult. So I say it is not for the purpose of making it harder to pay our debts, it is to make it harder to go into deficit spending and to give an enforcement procedure—a process, a mechanism that is so important because it is not just words that we could pass by and ignore.

Other than just being directory, the amendment, by way of section 2, has some teeth and that is what is so important if we are going to do away with deficit spending and operate so that we do not spend any more money than the amount coming into the Government.

That is what we are trying to achieve here.

Section 3 provides for the submission by the President of a balanced budget to Congress. This section reflects the belief that sound fiscal planning should be a shared governmental responsibility by the President as well as the Congress.

Section 4 of the amendment requires a majority vote of the whole number of each House of Congress any time Congress votes to increase revenues. This holds public officials responsible, and puts elected officials on record for any tax increase which may be necessary to support Federal spending.

Section 5 of the amendment permits a waiver of the provision for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect. This section also contains a provision long-supported by myself—that of allowing a waiver in cases of less than an outright declaration of war—where the United States is engaged in military conflict which causes an imminent and serious threat to national security, and is so declared by a joint resolution, which becomes law. Under this scenario, a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress may waive the requirements of a balanced budget amendment.

I firmly believe that Congress should have the option to waive the requirement for a balanced budget in cases of less than an outright declaration of war. Looking back over the history of our Nation, we find that we have had only five declared wars: The War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Spanish-American War, the First World War, and the Second World War.

The most recent encounters of the United States in armed conflict with enemies have been, of course, undeclared wars. We fought the gulf war without a declaration of war. In addition, we fought both the Vietnam and Korean actions without declarations of war.

This country can be faced with military emergencies which threaten our national security, without a formal declaration of war being in effect. Circumstances may arise in which Congress may need to spend significant amounts on national defense without a declaration of war. Congress and the President must be given the necessary flexibility to respond rapidly when a military emergency arises.

In the future, there could be a war like the Vietnam war—which went on for 11 years. Without a waiver for situations regarding less than an outright declaration of war, each year you would have to waive the constitutional amendment pertaining to a balanced budget by a three-fifths vote. We might look back and we would see that the vote to withdraw the troops from Vietnam carried by only eight votes. The difference between a majority and a three-fifths vote is a difference between 51 and 60, which is 9 votes.

As I previously stated, the United States has engaged in only five declared wars, yet the United States has engaged in hostilities abroad which required no less commitment of human lives or American resources than declared wars. In fact, our Nation has been involved in approximately 200 instances in which the United States has used military forces abroad in situations of conflict. Not all of these would move Congress to seek a waiver of the requirement of a balanced budget, but Congress should have the constitutional flexibility to provide for our Nation's security.

Twice since the end of the Second World War, first in Korea and then in Indochina, this Nation has been heavily engaged in armed conflicts abroad. In other instances, American troops have been sent to foreign countries in times of crisis—Lebanon in 1958, and the Dominican Republic in 1965. Other critical situations, including the confrontation in the Formosa Straits in 1955, and the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962, have been met by use of American military forces.

I think it is wise to look at some of the other instances in which we have had undeclared war and to see how serious they were. During 1914 to 1917, a time of revolution in Mexico, there were at least two major armed actions by United States forces in Mexico. The hostilities included the capture of Vera Cruz and Pershing's subsequent expedition into northern Mexico.

In 1918, Marines landed at Vladivostok in June and July to protect the American consulate. The United States landed 7,000 troops which remained until January 29, as part of an allied occupation force. In September 1918, American troops joined the allied intervention force at Archangel and suffered some 500 casualties.

In 1927, fighting at Shanghai caused American naval forces and Marine forces to be increased. In March 1927, a naval guard was stationed at the American consulate at Nanking after national forces captured the city. A United States and British warship fired on Chinese soldiers to protect the escape of Americans and other foreigners. By the end of 1927, the United States had 44 naval vessels in Chinese waters, and 5,670 men ashore.

When a pro-Nasser coup took place in Iraq in January 1958, the President of Lebanon sent an urgent plea for assistance to President Eisenhower, saying Lebanon was threatened by both internal rebellion and indirect aggression. President Eisenhower responded by sending 5,000 marines to Beirut to protect American lives and help the Lebanese maintain their independence. This force was gradually increased to 14,000 soldiers and marines who occupied strategic positions throughout the country.

The most recent military involvement of the United States in an undeclared war is, of course, the Persian Gulf war. Although the actual gulf war lasted just over a month, this country had a peak strength of 541,000 troops. In addition, the Department of Defense estimates the cost of operation Desert Storm at $47 billion.

We should recall the circumstances which occurred on January 12, 1991, when the Senate, agreeing with the House, voted by a slim margin of 52-47 to approve the use of force to stop Iraqi aggression against the State of Kuwait. This slim margin illustrates how difficult it would be without such a provision, to achieve the needed 60 votes to take a budget into deficit posture in order to finance the gulf war. Thus, circumstances may arise in which Congress may need to spend significant amounts on national defense without a declaration of war. Congress and the President must be given the necessary flexibility to respond rapidly when a military emergency arises.

Section 6 of the amendment permits Congress to rely on estimates of outlays and receipts in the implementation and enforcement of the amendment by appropriate legislation.

Section 7 of the amendment provides that total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived from borrowing. In addition, total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal. This section is intended to better define the relevant amounts that must be balanced.

Mr. President, the future of our Nation's economy is not a partisan issue, which was proven with the recent vote of the House. Furthermore, the problem of deficit spending cannot be blamed on one branch of Government or one political party. Similarly, just as everyone must share part of the blame for our economic ills, everyone must be united in acting to attack the growing problem of deficit spending. I recognize that a balanced budget amendment will not cure our economic problems overnight, but it will act to change the course of our future and lead to responsible fiscal management by our national Government.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KOHL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. I thank the Chair. I will not be long.

I come here this afternoon to speak in favor of the balanced budget amendment. This is not a surprise to my colleagues. I have been in support of a balanced budget amendment now for quite some time. I wish to add my voice to the voices in support of those who have up to this point indicated their support for the balanced budget amendment.

I would like to give one or two arguments that I believe are very important as we consider this very important amendment to our Constitution.

There is no question that we should not amend our Constitution very often and unless the reason is very, very important. We have only had 27 amendments to our Constitution over our history, so when we consider an amendment to our Constitution we clearly have to consider whether or not that amendment is of great importance. If it is not, we should not amend the Constitution.

In this case, we have to ask ourselves whether or not financial responsibility, however it is defined, is a very important measurement and indicator of how our country is functioning at the Federal level and whether those who are entrusted with the responsibility of presiding over the Federal Government have a responsibility to be financially responsible.

I think the answer is clearly yes. I do not think any of us, whether we favor or oppose the balanced budget amendment, would argue that we have a responsibility to exercise control and good judgment over our Nation's finances.

In my opinion, one need not look very far back in our history to conclude that enough time has gone by during which time we have not exercised financial responsibility to argue very strongly of the need for the balanced budget amendment.

Let us not forget that from 1789 to 1978, we had accumulated a total of less than $1 trillion of debt. In all the years, almost 200 years of history, our country had accumulated less than $1 trillion of debt.

In the 16 or 17 years since then, we have gone from less than $1 trillion to almost $5 trillion. I do not think anybody in the Senate would argue that the past 16 or 17 years is an indicator of financial responsibility; that there is no need to pass a balanced budget amendment because the Congress and the administrative branch of Government have been acting in a responsible way.

I do not think that argument can be made. In fact, any economist who would look at our present level of debt, which is about two-thirds to 70 percent of our gross national product, would argue that this is a very unhealthy and dangerous level of debt for our country to be in. So in terms of our history over the past 15 years, 17 years, there is no indication that we are prepared to exercise financial responsibility absent something more than what we have on the books now, which is basically nothing, by way of constraint.

I do not think any of us would argue that we are not in the process now of leaving to our children an enormous debt which will cloud their lives, make their lives less happy, make them less able to take care of their needs and their generation. We are head over heels in the process of adding to the debt and providing to our children that kind of a yoke around their neck. We should not do it. We are not able to stop ourselves. And so I think that argues for the need for a balanced budget amendment.

Oh, yes, there are those who say, "Well, look at what we have done over the past several years." I voted for the budget that is now in the process of reducing our debt. But we all know it is a quick fix or a short fix. We all know that what we voted for is not going to bring down our deficit to a proper level, not even going to bring us within hailing distance of a balanced budget in the foreseeable future and that, indeed, after these 3 years of reducing the Federal deficit, our deficit is going to start to increase in the outyears.

There is nobody suggesting we are prepared to make the hard decisions that will be required to bring what will be an increasing deficit into balance without something more than what we have on the books now, which is basically nothing, by way of restraint.

So I think it is clear that we have demonstrated we need more on the books, more restraint, more legal mechanisms, and, if you will, a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

Now, there are those who say, "But this amendment is draconian. This amendment is something that will tie our hands. This amendment that we are considering right now, although it does lay on the books in the Constitution a requirement to balance the budget"—and that is a good idea in concept—"we do not like."

That is fine. Let us come down here now and try to change that amendment. Let us come down here now and try to improve that amendment.

There are those who say we have to get Social Security out of that constitutional amendment consideration. I agree. And I support that. So let us see if we can argue it through and get to an elimination of Social Security as part of this constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

There are those who say we need some provision for capital outlays every year, that States that have balanced budget requirements in their constitutions have a provision for capital outlays. So, fine, let us work to get that in this constitutional amendment.

There are those who say that we should not be required to balance our budget every year, that that would not be a smart economic move. Fine. Let us see if we cannot get, instead of the 60-vote requirement, which does exist in this constitutional amendment, which would allow us to unbalance the budget in any year for any reason if we can muster a 60-percent vote in either House of the Congress—to those who say that is draconian, let us try to amend that to 55 percent, 51 percent of the vote.

If you do not believe in that, if you do not believe in coming down here to try to amend this amendment to the Constitution so that it more nearly conforms to what your ideas of what the balanced budget should look like, if you do not want to even argue that, then I would conclude that you do not want a balanced budget; that you do not believe in balanced budgets; that you do not believe we have a responsibility in normal years to balance our books.

If you do not believe that, then you ought to come down and say, well, that is the way I would argue it and this is the way, and maybe you can convince us and the American public that you are right.

I do not think it is fair to say, "I believe in balancing our books but I do not believe in a balanced budget amendment, regardless of what it looks like."

That to me is a specious argument, and I think it deserves to be pointed out. I think those people who believe that we should not have an amendment to balance this country's books should come down and really say why. If the fact is they do not like this amendment, I would like to see how they would tailor an amendment they could accept to the concept that we have a responsibility to balance the books of this country, if not every 1 year, every 3 years.

Bring that to the floor of the Senate and let us argue that. But do not say, "I believe in a balanced budget, but I do not believe in a balanced budget amendment." To me that is a very difficult argument to make.

So I come down here to lend my support to those who believe we need to have an amendment to see that we exercise financial responsibility in the Congress. I look forward to this debate. I know it will be vigorous. It is very important. Undoubtedly, it will take more than just a few days, and it should take more than just a few days. I am looking forward to having that discussion with my colleagues.

I thank the Chair.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABRAHAM). The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the legislation before us: a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, this year marks an important anniversary in our national history: the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II. But as we celebrate the victory of one struggle, this year we also mark the anniversary of a loss in another battle—one whose fiscal implications are almost as prophetic as the battles of 50 years ago.

But this anniversary is one that Congress has in fact marked each year since 1969—26 years of continually running budget deficits.

This is one of the longest losing streaks in Congressional history. It is a fiscal losing streak that every American citizen has had to pay for over the past generation.

But let us be sure of one thing—this debate is not about yesterday. It is not really even about today—1995. But it is most assuredly about America's future; it is about our children's future. As one American said when he was asked about his concern for our tomorrow, "Of course I am concerned about the future. It is where we will spend the rest of our lives."

Yet, tragically, we are squandering our future in spiralling debt—mortgaging our children's future down a vacuum of debt as we selfishly avoid the challenge of balancing our Federal budget.

Now we have another remarkable opportunity—an historic opportunity—to pass this amendment to the Constitution. I would like to commend our leader, Senator BOB DOLE, for bringing this legislation to the floor at such an early date.

I would also like to especially thank the sponsors of this bill—the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for providing exceptional leadership on this issue, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON] for providing bipartisan support for this measure—as well as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] for his ongoing efforts on this critical amendment.

An early debate in this session of Congress is gratifying for many of us who have been working for more than a dozen years for a balanced budget amendment. We have already seen our efforts produce positive results—just recently, a requisite two-thirds majority in the other Chamber passed a resolution calling for a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. The decision our colleagues made on that vote to pass this legislation for the first time, Mr. President, presents us with a renewed opportunity to act—and pass—this amendment in this Chamber, getting the requisite two-thirds majority.

We in Congress are at a precipice—in our relationship with the American people. We can either rise to the occasion and meet their expectations, or, we can merely do nothing and uphold the economic status quo.

Congress' focus on this measure comes after the American people cast resounding votes for change in November. By pulling the lever for action and progress, they also issued a call for an end to the economics-as-usual, an end to recurring deficits. An end to trillion-dollar debts and an end to fiscal irresponsibility and reckless spending.

In this debate, we have another opportunity to show the American people that, yes, we did listen to them, and we do get it.

And, perhaps most importantly, they voted to make Congress accountable for its actions. Thus far in this session we have taken great strides toward that responsibility. We passed legislation on congressional accountability, mandating Congress to abide by the same laws that we have passed onto the American people. And we passed legislation that will curb unfunded Federal mandates on State and local governments, which is presently being debated in the House of Representatives.

Now, we have the historic opportunity to send another message of accountability to the people by passing the balanced budget amendment. We will demonstrate our commitment to the American people. We will balance our budget, and put our Nation's fiscal house in order—permanently.

I am confident that this is the right thing to do: Every American family must balance their budget; they are not at liberty—as the Federal Government has been—to simply run annual household deficits. They play by the rules. They live by the rules. And Congress should not be living by any other standards.

For too long, we have spent without regard to our income, and in the process, we have squandered our children's future. How can we support the fiscal status-quo of increasing national debts and bequeath misery on the next generation of Americans?

We can begin a new regimen this year by facing up to our responsibilities. This is what accountability is all about. We must set our priorities within our income. We must stop borrowing against our children's future.

Without question, these will be difficult decisions, but we are not alone in facing these decisions. Nearly every State, every small business, every family, and every citizen faces similar choices each year in keeping spending under control.

I have seen firsthand the tough choices that must be made. For the past 8 years, my husband served as Governor of Maine. Like the Governors of 48 other States, he was required to balance our State's budget, irregardless of economic conditions or the State's financial status.

This means that Congress will have to make tough choices. But, with discipline these decisions are as possible as they are necessary. And lest anyone think that the States do not consider a balanced budget worthy of being a part of the U.S. Constitution, 49 States already require a balanced budget.

If accountability and discipline work at the State level, we can and should make it work at the Federal level. Congress should be able to confront the economic realities and challenges that 49 States—and every American—face as well. They have made the difficult choices even with declining revenues and a declining economy.

When we speak of interest payments, deficits, and the debt—we throw around numbers in the millions, billions and trillions. We paint a big picture that sometimes obscures the direct impact this issue has on each and every American family. We must now focus on exactly what these numbers mean in terms of people's daily lives.

There is little doubt that deficits and debt place a crippling burden on hard-working families in my home State of Maine and across our great land. An analysis compiled by the Concord Coalition, for example, suggests that the deficit takes an alarming toll in national productivity. In real terms for American families, increased productivity would mean an average American family income of $50,000 annually, instead of the current $35,000 a year. Lost income of $15,000 and untold costs, Mr. President: our constituents do not deserve this injustice.

How many children, I wonder, go without a proper education because of that missing $15,000?

How many couples or single parents forego proper, safe child care because of these numbers? How many Americans make difficult choices on health care coverage because they do not have these funds to provide coverage to their spouses or children?

Is this what has become of the American Dream when, by ignoring the deficit, we deny American families the opportunity to prosper financially, or survive economically?

But even more devastating for our workers looking for stable jobs with a good wage, the Federal deficit has had an alarming impact on our Nation's economic growth and job creation. The New York Federal Reserve Bank attributes a reduction in savings to the deficit, and says that in the 10 years from 1979 to 1989, this reduced growth in the gross national product and in personal income by 5 percent. This has a devastating effect on jobs in our Nation: 3.75 million jobs in 10 years—650,000 for every percentage point in the GNP—lost because of the deficit, according to a study by the Congressional Budget Office.

That is an astounding cost for our inaction that rests on the shoulders of every American worker.

Unfortunately, the statistics and examples of the burden our debt and deficit inflicts on each American continues to be staggering: Since 1980, our national debt has grown from $1 trillion to $4.7 trillion. This is expected to grow to $6.3 trillion by 1999—a 453-percent rate of growth since 1980. During the same timeframe, the annual interest we pay on our growing national debt has ballooned out of control, rising from $117 billion in 1982 to almost $300 billion in 1994 to $373 billion in 1999, or a 219-percent growth rate between 1982 and 1999. These numbers mean that in the next 5 years, the burden of this debt for every man, woman, and child in the United States will rise from $17,938 to $22,909—growing by about $5,000 in just 5 years. Just in 1½ years that per capita debt had increased by $1,300.

As the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] has emphasized, our national debt represents the most unfair tax ever imposed. The Office of Management and Budget has already estimated that if we continue our current spending spree, future generations will be forced to suffer a tax rate of 82 percent in order to pay our bills. Those same generations have no say, no voice, and no vote.

But the prices of our inaction do not just come on an annual basis. Every day, we add $819 million of daily interest to the national debt.

One would think that, in the face of this track record that Congress would have mustered the courage long ago to meet the challenge of a balanced Federal budget, stopping short of an amendment. That is a major debate here as to whether or not we should have a constitutional amendment or a statutory approach.

It is interesting to note in the last 15 years in the Congress we have had seven opportunities to consider a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. Time and time again we heard from critics of such constitutional approach that we can do it, we do not need a constitutional amendment. All we need is to have the will and the courage and the discipline to make those choices. We have learned otherwise from that approach.

Mr. INHOFE. Will the Senator yield?

Ms. SNOWE. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. INHOFE. I thank the Senator from Maine for yielding, but I could not help thinking, when she was talking about what was going to happen to future generations, about people who keep coming up with this idea, saying, "Where are you going to cut?" And they try to single out all the programs to show that the individual who is trying to do this somehow lacks compassion. Yet, as the Senator pointed out, future generations, if we do not do something today and stay on the track where we are today, are going to have to pay for everything we are doing today.

If it gets down to a discussion of compassion, then why would we not be in a position to say that, if you really want to be compassionate, let us bite the bullet today? Let us do it.

I think the CBO and others have come up with the figures projecting out where we would be in the next 10 to 20 years if we do not make a change. If we do not pass something like this immediately, it gets down to a very personal basis. I have two grandchildren, ages 20 months and 21 months. It works out, if we do not do something and we continue on this trend that we have right now, that during their lifetimes they are going to have to pay 75 percent of their lifetime income just to service the debt.

So I guess I would ask the Senator from Maine if this is not really the most compassionate route to take, to go ahead, bite the bullet now and be responsible now?

Ms. SNOWE. Absolutely. I think the Senator makes an excellent point about that because clearly what we are doing is just deferring to future generations for payment of the bills. There is no doubt about it. I think the Senator from Oklahoma recognizes, having served in the House of Representatives over the years, as well, that it is institutionally incapable of making those decisions.

Ironically, the only time we had a lower deficit was back when we had the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation. That was because that was a tool to force the Congress to meet certain targets. But I know that many times in which I have been engaged in deficit reduction efforts as a member of the House Budget Committee in the last Congress, and previously back in the mid-1980's, I offered specific budget cuts on the floor in conjunction with some of my colleagues so that we could reach a balanced budget statutorily. And on each and every occasion, we had people objecting to every cut. There was a reason. For one, we could not cut any program.

So there are always those who have to make some tough choices. But I think the American people can do it fairly and prudently, and to prioritize and decide. What can we afford or can the American people afford? I think the American people have lost confidence in this institution, in the fact that their hard-earned taxpayer dollars are being spent wisely, because we have never been forced to make any choices here other than to spend and spend and tax and tax.

As the Senator from Oklahoma will recall, in the last Congress, we provided specific line-item reductions in numerous programs that we offered as Republicans in the House Budget Committee, and with the support of the Senator and all other Republicans on the floor. Those specific line-item cuts were ignored. We ultimately got the largest tax increase in the history of this country. Ironically, the CBO just indicated that we will get lower-than-anticipated revenues from those tax increases.

Mr. INHOFE. If the Senator will yield further, she has hit upon something that is very significant; that is, we cannot do it any other way. We served together for 8 years in the House of Representatives, and she was there before that. And I am sure what was going on before. But we tried again and again to do it from a statutory perspective, and it did not work.

I am a little embarrassed to say that it was one of the Members of the House from the State of Oklahoma that challenged in the courts the Gramm-Rudman approach to balancing the budget, which was an excellent approach. It was ingenious. However, apparently it did cause the administration to infringe upon legislative powers and there was some constitutional problem with it.

But those same people who took that to court and were able to strike it down so that we did not have to comply with the targets are the ones who say we do not want a balanced budget amendment in the Constitution because that is our job to do it. I say yes. I agree in this case with those who object to it. It is our job to do it. But we have clearly demonstrated for 40 years that we are incapable of resisting the insatiable appetite to spend the money that we generate from future generations.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I say to the Senator that 25 years ago was the last time we had a balanced budget. The Senator from Oklahoma will probably agree that we are hearing today, "We will produce a 7-year budget to achieve the balanced budget amendment." We know it is a give-and-take process. But more than that, I say the burden of proof is on those opponents of the balanced budget amendment because the statutory approach has failed. They have had an opportunity, let us say, over the last 15 years, when they objected to a balanced budget amendment, to come up with a statutory approach. We have had statutory remedies, all of which have failed.

So now we are at the point of deciding the future of this country. Do we enact a constitutional amendment? There are those who will probably fundamentally disagree with having a balanced budget whatsoever. They disagree in principle. I happen not to. I think it is most important that we do it for the country, as the Senator does. But I think it is ignoring the choices that we are required to make. I think that this is the only way in which we are going to make those tough decisions on what exactly is affordable and acceptable to the American people.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I think it is a significant point to make that if it is not going to be done their way, it is not going to be done at all. I do not know of one person who goes out and campaigns for office and says: Elect me, because I want to increase your deficit. I honestly do not think they really want to increase the deficits. But there is the temptation to get these programs today, saying, "Well, there is nothing wrong with it. We are borrowing from ourselves." They do not stop to think and realize sometimes what they are doing to the future generations.

I would also ask the Senator if she might stop and think about how long we have been looking at this. There was a very outstanding Senator from Nebraska by the name of Carl Curtis, many years ago. In 1970, I was in the State senate in the State of Oklahoma. At that time, just to remind you how far we have come, I can remember that the National Taxpayers Union had an advertisement that they showed on television. They said: Do you really want to know how bad the debt in this country is? Mr. President, they said: If you want to know how bad the debt is, if you took $100 bills and stacked the $100 bills on top of each other, by the time it reached the height of the Empire State Building—that was a tall building in those days—it would be the amount of our debt, which is $400 billion. Now, look where it is today.

Back in 1972, this Senator from Nebraska, Carl Curtis, had a brilliant idea. He was the author of the Senate budget balancing amendment at that time. So he called me up one day. I was a State senator. He said, "INHOFE, if you would just try something new here. Let us break down the resistance in the U.S. Senate and in Congress, because these people up here live in their ivory towers, and they don't have a sense of what is going on at home." He said, "Why don't you present a budget balancing amendment out in the State of Oklahoma?" I said, "Well, that is an ingenious idea." His thought was that if he could get 38 States to do that, it would indicate there was grassroots support for a balanced budget amendment.

Keep in mind this is 1972. So in 1972, I introduced and got passed in the State of Oklahoma a ratifying resolution. And I remember that there was a guy named Anthony Kerrigan, a syndicated columnist, who wrote an article entitled "A Voice in the Wilderness." Way out in Oklahoma, there is a State senator that is going to figure out a way to balance the budget. Here it is now, a couple of decades later, and we still have not done it. But we found in that short period of time that there is such a ground swell for support, when you get closer to the people, that we are willing to do it. And we had commitments from 38 States in 1972 to ratify such a resolution.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I say to the Senator, look where we are today in terms of the level of debt since that period of time. The Senator mentioned that he was a State senator. I, too, was a State senator in the State of Maine. We had to balance our budgets. We have had to balance our budgets in some very difficult economic times regardless of the downturn in the economy, which certainly has been the case in New England and in the State of Maine, where we have had the most difficult downturn since the Depression. They have had to balance the budget. They made tough choices.

I know in the debate on the floor in the House of Representatives, the Senator will recall in the last Congress and back in 1992, Members of the House said, "How can we possibly and accurately estimate revenue projections? How can we estimate inflation rates or interest rates or unemployment rates?"

That is going to be a very difficult and taxing responsibility. That is what every State has to do in the country, and every local government, every business, and each family does, in the final analysis. They have to make those projections and they have to correct those projections. So they have made those choices. They do not live in fiscal fantasyland like we have here in Congress. I think the American people have recognized that, and that is why they are demanding this most important and fundamental change.

Mr. INHOFE. If the Senator will yield further, going back to our years as State senators—and probably the same thing was true in Maine as in Oklahoma—people yell and scream about it. They do not like it. There are members in the house and senate in Oklahoma who, every year, try to figure out ways to either inflate projections of income and revenues or minimize expenditures to circumvent this thing; yet, in the final analysis, they know that we have a type of sequestration that sets in. If they do not do it, they are going to have to bite the political bullet of all those people who have their programs cut by 1 or 2 percent, whatever it takes. And it works.

People in this body quite often talk about the States that have a balanced budget amendment. Look at the cities. I was mayor of the city of Tulsa—a major city—for three terms. In our charter, we had the same thing. There are always people on the city commission who want to circumvent that and somehow want to spend more money than comes in, but they have not been able to do it. For all those individuals who say this is different, the Federal Government should not be like States or should not be like the cities and the other subdivisions, they have yet to come up with any logical justification for that statement. If it works at the State level in almost all of the States and it works in almost every city charter, it would work in the Federal Government.

Ms. SNOWE. I think the Senator makes outstanding points, and I think we agree. What is more fundamental than providing fiscal order, especially for the future of this country, in making those kinds of choices, albeit difficult, but ones that are compelling and ones that need to be made? I thank the Senator for the points he has made.

In conclusion, Mr. President, might I just say, in terms of what we can expect for future deficits, it is disturbing to note the trend. The Congressional Budget Office, in fact, testified before the Senate Budget Committee recently and indicated that according to their recalculations, the deficit will increase by $25 billion over the next 5 years. So we can expect more debt over the next 5 years than we originally anticipated because of interest rates and, in fact, lower than anticipated revenue from the income tax increases and other tax increases of 1993. Between now and 2002 we will add a cumulative total of nearly $2 trillion to the existing debt if we make no changes in fiscal policy.

One further point. The CBO, in their testimony, indicated that, obviously, one of the positive benefits of a balanced budget would be to increase productivity because of less debt, but also, most importantly, increase the amount of personal savings in this country. And if you look at the testimony that was provided by Mr. Greenspan, that is clearly essential for the future, because the personal saving rate, in his words, has been running at its lowest level in nearly half a century. He said,

If we were a high-saving nation, we might be in a position to better tolerate the Federal fiscal imbalance. But, as you can see in the chart, the Federal deficit has generally been absorbing half or more of the available domestic saving since the early 1980's.

Looking back at the history of the past century or more, the record would suggest that nations ultimately must rely on their domestic savings to support domestic investment.

He went on to say,

The challenge for the United States over the coming decade is clear. We must sustain higher levels of investment if we are to achieve a healthy increase in productivity and be strong and successful competitors in the international marketplace. To support that investment, we shall need to raise the level of domestic saving. Absent a rise in private saving, it will be necessary to eliminate the structural deficit in the Federal budget.

So that is what it is all about—making choices, increasing the standard of living, not only for the present but for future generations, by improving productivity, job creation, and finally, I should say, improving the way in which we approach our budgetary process.

There was some testimony presented to the Budget Committee by Mr. Fosler, President of the National Academy of Administrators, saying we should have performance-based budgeting. This is an idea whose time has come, is long overdue, and in fact was proposed at the beginning of this century. I hope we will take these creative and innovative approaches as we begin the historic debate on a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

Let me close with words of hope for a brighter future for our entire Nation. As Winston Churchill said in the days of World War II: "This is not the end. This is not even the beginning of the end. But it is, perhaps, the end of the beginning."

I hope that will be the case, because if you say "no" to a constitutional amendment to balance the budget, you are saying "yes" to the economic status quo, "yes" to the continued levels of deficits of $200 to $300 billion. I assure you, that is not an answer the American people want to hear, and it is one they do not deserve to hear.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mrs. FEINSTEIN] is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I voted for the balanced budget amendment last year. I also voted for the Reid amendment to exempt Social Security, take it off budget, last year. I want to state for the RECORD—and it is my intention—that I want to vote for a balanced budget amendment.

There are two reasons I want to vote for a balanced budget amendment. The first is my own life experience. The year I was born, 61 years ago, the entire Federal debt amounted to just $25 billion. When my daughter was born, the entire Federal debt amounted to about $225 billion. And 2 years ago, when my granddaughter, Eileen, was born, the entire Federal debt was 150 times greater than when I was born; it was nearly $4 trillion. My life experience shows me that, with business as usual, the Congress is not going to be able to balance a budget that, in 61 years, has gone from $25 billion to $4 trillion in debt.

So, in a nutshell, I want to support a strong balanced budget amendment. But I want to support the right balanced budget amendment.

In my first 2 years as U.S. Senator, I have had the opportunity to observe the standard operating procedure of the Senate—the budget, authorization, and appropriations processes—and I have become convinced that a balanced budget amendment is in order. The American people are sitting on a debt time bomb. It jeopardizes the economic security of my daughter, my granddaughter, and even generations to come, because if it continues to be business as usual, the Nation's path is one toward bankruptcy and that, quite frankly, is not acceptable.

I have listened to a lot of arguments about why we should not require a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. In theory, certain of these have a great deal of merit. But historical and present day practices often demonstrate the wide variation between theory and practice when it comes to dealing with the Federal budget.

In theory, the Government might run deficits in times of recession to stimulate the economy, or in war simply to pay its bills, and surpluses in times of prosperity because revenue increases and unemployment decreases. In fact, though, that has not happened. In the last 35 years, the Federal Government has balanced its budget exactly twice—once in 1960, a surplus of $300 million, and again in 1969, a surplus of $3.2 billion.

In the last quarter of a century, the Federal Government has run up this $4 trillion in debt without once balancing the budget. And during this time, the Nation has experienced war and peace and economic booms and recessions. Yet, never was this Government able to balance the Federal budget, let alone run a surplus.

As mayor of San Francisco, I balanced nine budgets, and I know it is tough to do so. I support this amendment, and I support a line-item veto, because I know that failing to balance the budget is a choice that this Nation can no longer afford, for the reasons so stated.

Let us talk for a moment about two charts which, when I came here, convinced me—and I regret that these are so small; we thought we had them enlarged, but we do not. These two charts, I think, are very instructive. If you can see them, Mr. President, in 1969—these are Federal outlay charts—military spending consumed 45 percent of our Federal outlays. In 1994, about 19 percent of our Federal outlays were military. So military spending has gone from almost one-half to just slightly under a quarter.

In 1969, entitlements—Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, and AFDC—consumed about 27 percent of Federal outlays.

In 1994, they consumed almost 50 percent of Federal outlays. There is the rub. In 1969, interest on our debt consumed slightly less than 7 percent. In 1994, interest on the debt had doubled to nearly 14 percent of total outlays.

What is left? Discretionary spending—education, health, environment, Commerce, Interior, all those departments—in 1969 consumed 21 percent of Federal outlays. In 1994, 18 percent; actually down. Discretionary spending has gone down, military spending has gone down dramatically.

What has gone up? Interest on the debt and entitlements. And there is the rub. There is the answer I believe to the right to know. That is the road that lies before us. If we really want to make the budget balanced, those are the hard choices: What to do about interest on the debt—which today net interest consumes 40 percent of every person's tax dollar—and how do we control entitlements, Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, and so on?

The Federal Government now spends $226 billion just on interest on its nearly $5 trillion debt. Our interest payments alone are $59 billion greater than the projected deficit of $176 billion for the year 1995. This means that if we did not have to service the debt, there would be no deficit this year. If we did not have to service our debt, there would be no deficit. As a matter of fact, there would be a small budget surplus. That is the irony of the problem that we have.

So if current policy continues, the CBO estimates that net interest payments will reach $387 billion by the year 2004, or roughly 58 percent of the amount that is expected to be spent on all discretionary programs, $669 billion will go by the year 2004 just to pay for interest on the debt. That is not for Commerce. That is not for Interior. That is not for an education program. That is not for a health program. That will not purchase a tank or an aircraft carrier or a battleship. It will be just paper to service the debt.

Today, every dollar in personal income taxes collected west of the Mississippi is used to pay for nothing more than interest. And that is the sad story, because the interest is growing and we need to stop it.

So what has 35 years of accumulated deficits meant on our committee? According to a study by the New York Federal Reserve Board, the low national savings rate, now under 3 percent—and it is the lowest of any major industrialized power—is mostly attributable to large Federal deficits. And it has resulted in a net loss of 5 percent of national income during the 1980's. That impacts interest rates, it impacts jobs, it impacts the ability to buy a home, a car, to afford an education. It impacts the job base. It impacts everything we do every day in our life.

And as it gets worse, I think what the Senator from Maine was saying is it impacts our children's destinies and our grandchildren's destinies as well.

So for all of these reasons—and I want my chairman on the Judiciary Committee to understand this—I want to vote for a balanced budget amendment because I do not believe we can make the hard choices without it. And as I have said, they are all in that 50 percent—Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, AFDC—and then that 15 percent which is interest on the debt for the most part.

Now, I do not think Congress should push through just any amendment, no matter what. It has to be an amendment which balances the budget wisely and honestly.

And that is the rub for me. This is where we come to Social Security. Let me be frank. I do not want to speak in detail because we will go into this later.

But because of a statement I made yesterday indicating my position—and I am particularly delighted that my chairman is on the floor so that he can hear this. I consider the greatest flaw in the amendment that we have before us is the fact that it places moneys placed in reserve through the FICA tax to pay for retirements in the future. It places those revenues on budget. And I believe that that is not an honest way to balance the budget.

I believe that this puts Social Security essentially on budget. It reverses congressional action and it undermines the integrity of the Social Security system.

Now between its creation in 1935 and 1969, Social Security was always off budget. Then in an attempt to cover the cost of the Vietnam war and to mask the growing deficit, Social Security was put on budget by this Congress. This was a misuse of the Social Security trust fund.

In 1990, 2 years before I came to this place, the Congress saw that and they put an end to it. They declared as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts and disbursements of the Federal Old Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund shall not be counted as new budget authority, outlays, receipts, or deficit or surplus for purpose of:

- (1) the budget of the United States Government as submitted by the President,
- (2) the congressional budget, or
- (3) the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

In this body, that vote was 98 to 2. So clearly, Members said we must not use Social Security revenues held in trust for retirement to balance the budget. And, boom, the right thing was done and it was taken off budget.

What this amendment does is put it back on budget again.

This would clearly include Social Security. It would overturn both the historical treatment of Social Security and Congress' recent decision to affirm the off-budget status of Social Security.

Worse, it would allow the misuse of Social Security funds to continue.

The important point is, Congress has already debated this. They have taken it off budget. It is not a loophole. This amendment is not meant to be an escape hatch.

I know that there is an amendment at the desk called S. 290. I reviewed that amendment. That amendment is flawed because that amendment deals with benefits. It does not deal with the moneys that are taken from the FICA tax paid by employees and employers and held in trust for retirees.

Now, even without this balanced budget amendment, just for one short moment let us look at what happens with Social Security now off budget.

Here we are today in 1995. Social Security is generating surpluses.

As a matter of fact, Social Security will generate these surpluses, up to the year 2002. In 1995, $69 billion; 1996, $142 billion. It climbs and it climbs. In 1999, it is $394 billion. It goes up to $705 billion of surpluses from the FICA tax held in trust to pay retirements for the baby boomer generation that is now, alas, beginning to retire.

What happens? What happens is this: There is $3 trillion by the year 2015 in revenue surpluses. Then they plunge. They go down to the year 2030, $700 billion negative. Negative. Now, here is the rub with this amendment. It takes all of these revenues and it puts them on budget. So these revenues are used to balance the budget. The way to avoid $705 billion in 2002 when this becomes relevant is to create a surplus of $705 billion. Nobody here believes we will be able to create a surplus of $705 billion to protect Social Security.

So what is the answer? The answer is, in an honest amendment, take it off budget. Do not allow those revenues to be used.

Now, I would like to have printed in the RECORD a letter I received today from Martha McSteen, the president of the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare. She says:

I am writing with regard to S. 290, introduced recently by Senators Kempthorne, Dole, Thompson and Inhofe. The fact that the sponsors of S. 290 believe that it is necessary to take action to protect Social Security under a balanced budget amendment is, in my view, proof that it is imperative that the Senate adopt your amendment to exclude Social Security from the balanced budget amendment.

The pending balanced budget amendment reverses the 1990 law removing Social Security from a consolidated budget and put Social Security back on budget as part of the Constitution. This represents a serious problem for Social Security which cannot be addressed by S. 290 or any statutory measure. Sponsors of S. 290 cannot bind future Congresses to their legislation or, for that matter, ensure that this Congress will not modify or overturn this legislation while Social Security would remain on budget as part of the Constitution.

I also note that while S. 290 attempts to prohibit Congress from increasing Social Security revenues or reducing benefits to balance the budget, it will allow Congress to continue using the surplus in the Social Security trust fund to conceal the deficit. This only confirms our understanding that the proponents of the balanced budget amendment intend to continue this budgetary charade, thereby avoiding balancing the budget well into the next century.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter in its entirety be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COMMITTEE TO PRESERVE
SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE,
Washington, DC, February 1, 1995.

Hon. DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: I am writing with regard to S. 290, introduced recently by Senators Kempthorne, Dole, Thompson and Inhofe. The fact that the sponsors of S. 290 believe that it is necessary to take action to protect Social Security under a balanced budget amendment is, in my view, proof that it is imperative that the Senate adopt your amendment to exclude Social Security from the balanced budget amendment.

The pending balanced budget amendment reverses the 1990 law removing Social Security from a consolidated budget and puts Social Security back on budget as part of the Constitution. This presents serious problems for Social Security which cannot be addressed by S. 290 or any statutory measure. The sponsors of S. 290 cannot bind future Congresses to their legislation, or for that matter ensure that this Congress will not modify or overturn this legislation while Social Security would remain on budget as part of the Constitution. I also note that while S. 290 attempts to prohibit Congress from increasing Social Security revenues or reducing benefits to balance the budget, it will allow Congress to continue using the surplus in the Social Security trust funds to conceal the deficit. This only confirms our understanding that the proponents of the balanced budget amendment intend to continue this budgetary charade thereby avoiding balancing the budget until well into the next century.

The nearly six million members and supporters of the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare strongly oppose this practice of using the surplus generated by the Social Security payroll tax to fund deficit reduction or mask the true size of the general fund deficit.

Let's not forget that the continued borrowing from the Social Security trust funds will only create huge debts for the next generation which will be forced to redeem the bonds through massive tax increases.

The only way for proponents of the balanced budget amendment to live up to the many promises not to harm or undermine Social Security is to explicitly exclude it from the text of S.J. Res. 1.

Sincerely,

MARTHA A. MCSTEEN,
President.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I earnestly implore my committee chairman, the key is simply to exclude the revenues from balancing the budget in an amendment to this amendment, and that would be presented next week. I believe it is the only way to have an honest amendment. I also believe that it makes sense.

There are 40 million people today on Social Security. By the time this amendment is ratified and the first balanced budget is prepared, there will be 80 million Americans on Social Security. Young people working today can expect that the money will not be there to pay for their retirement, and yet they are paying FICA taxes. That is not right. They should not have to pay if the money is not going to be there. If the money is used to balance the budget, it just brings the crunch to Social Security that much sooner. I do not think that that should be a by-product of a balanced budget amendment. More fundamentally, I believe it is a flaw that will cause its nonratification by enough States to make it the law of the land.

What I want to say, the bottom line is if we can adopt the amendment—and I just read the amendments to the Constitution again this morning—I think if we are going to have monetary policy in the Constitution, it is fitting, just as there are technicalities in other amendments on double jeopardy and that kind of thing, that there be an amendment which simply exempts the revenues from the trust funds that hold the FICA taxes.

As I said yesterday, absent those, absent that amendment, I cannot vote for a balanced budget amendment. With that amendment, I can vote for a balanced budget amendment. So I say these things today, for whatever help it might be to my chairman in considering where this matter rests.

Mr. President, in the year that I was born, the Federal debt amounted to less than $25 billion. In the year my daughter was born, the Federal debt was about $225 billion—10 times greater. My granddaughter Eileen was born 2 years ago. At the time of her birth, the Federal debt was more than 150 times greater than it was when I was born—nearly $4 trillion.

That, in a nutshell, is why I am a strong supporter of a constitutional balanced budget amendment. The path we are on is unsustainable. We do not have another generation to allow this problem to fester. The time for action is now.

In my first 2 years as a U.S. Senator, I have had the opportunity to observe the standard operating procedure of the Senate—the budget, authorization, and appropriations processes. I am convinced that without a constitutional amendment, this body will simply be unable to balance the budget.

Let me share what I see the problem to be.

The American people are sitting on a debt time-bomb jeopardizing the economic security of generations of Americans to come and I believe that without the imposition of an amendment such as this, it will continue to be business as usual. In my opinion, business as usual just isn't acceptable.

Although amending the Constitution is strong medicine, I am convinced that without this strong medicine, America's fiscal health will not improve.

I have listened to the various arguments about why we should not require a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. In theory, certain of these arguments have merit. But, I am afraid that historical and present day practices often demonstrate the wide variation between theory and practice with regard to the Federal budget.

In theory, the Federal Government might run deficits in times of recession to stimulate the economy or in war simply to pay its bills, and surpluses in times of prosperity because revenue increases and unemployment decreases. In fact, that has not happened.

In the last 35 years, the Federal Government has balanced its budget exactly twice. Once in 1960, a surplus of $300 million and again in 1969, a surplus of $3.2 billion.

In the last quarter of a century, the Federal Government has run up more than $4 trillion in debt without once balancing the budget. During this time, this Nation has experienced war and peace and economic booms and recessions. Yet, never did this Government balance the Federal budget, let alone run a surplus.

As mayor of San Francisco, I balanced nine budgets in a row. I know how difficult it is to do. But that is why we are elected—to make those tough choices. I support this amendment and the line-item veto because I know that failing to balance the budget is a choice that this Nation cannot afford.

INTEREST ON THE DEBT

The Federal Government now spends over $226 billion annually just to pay the interest on its nearly $5 trillion debt. Our interest payments alone are $59 billion greater than the projected deficit of $176 billion for fiscal year 1995. This means that if the United States did not have to service this enormous debt, there would be no deficit this year. In fact, we would have a small budget surplus.

If current policies continue, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that net interest payments will reach $387 billion by the year 2004 or roughly 58 percent of the amount that is expected to be spent on all discretionary programs—$669 billion will go just to pay for interest on the debt.

Today every dollar in personal income taxes collected west of the Mississippi is used to pay for nothing more than interest on America's staggering Federal debt, or put another way, that's 40 percent of each taxpayers' tax dollar. This money is not used to build new highways, planes, or ships, provide medical care to a child or grandparent, or education to our Nation's students. Americans receive no services, no public infrastructure, no investment for these interest payments. They get nothing for 40 percent of their taxes. Left alone, that will become 50 percent, then 60 percent, and on and on till bankruptcy.

What has 35 years of accumulated deficits meant to our economy? According to a study by the New York Federal Reserve Board, the low national savings rate, now under 3 percent—the lowest of any major industrialized country—mostly attributable to large Federal deficits, and it has resulted in a loss of 5 percent growth in our national income during the 1980's. Now that's a big deal. Let me tell you what it means.

ISSUES OF CONCERN

For all those reasons, I believe the time has come to pass a constitutional balance budget amendment. I recognize, however, that amending the Constitution of the United States is very serious business. It has been amended just 17 times since 1791.

Congress should not push through just any amendment that says just balance the budget no matter what. We must pass an amendment which will let us balance the budget honestly and wisely.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENT

I must be frank. I don't believe that legislation before us is the best constitutional amendment. Its greatest flaw is that it continues the process of misusing Social Security funds. Let me explain how:

First, this amendment would put Social Security on-budget, thereby reversing congressional action and undermining the integrity of the system.

Between its creation in 1935 and 1969, Social Security has always been off-budget. In an attempt to cover the costs of the Vietnam war and later to mask growing deficits, Social Security was put on-budget.

This was a misuse of the Social Security trust fund. In the 1990 Budget Enforcement Act, Congress put an end to this by declaring Social Security funds off-budget. The act states:

* * * the receipts and disbursements of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund—which together make up the Social Security Program—shall not be counted as new budget authority, outlays, receipts, or deficit or surplus for purposes of—

- (1) the budget of the United States Government as submitted by the President;
- (2) the congressional budget, or
- (3) the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

An amendment in the Senate to exclude Social Security from budget calculations was passed in the 101st Congress by a vote of 98 to 2. Every Member there that served in the 101st Congress voted for that amendment.

The joint resolution before us now requires total outlays not to exceed total receipts for any fiscal year. This would clearly include Social Security and thereby overturn both the historical treatment of Social Security and Congress' recent decision to affirm the off-budget status of Social Security.

Worse, it would allow the misuse of Social Security funds to continue.

The important point is, Congress has already debated this matter and decided to take Social Security off-budget. This is not a loophole. It was an informed decision to budget honestly. Now this constitutional amendment will reverse that. This amendment would enshrine this abuse of Social Security in the U.S. Constitution.

This debate is not about who wants to protect Social Security and who does not. It is about who wants to be honest with the American people in our budgeting and fiscal policy and who does not. To be honest, Social Security must remain off-budget. Including Social Security in the budget calculations would be the enormous loophole. It is not the Federal Government's money and should not be used as if it is.

Second, Social Security is not like other Government programs and should not be treated like other Government programs.

Social Security is a publicly administered, compulsory, contributory retirement program. Through the Federal Insurance Contributions Act [FICA], workers are required to contribute 6.2 percent of their salaries to Social Security. Employers are required to match that amount. This 12.4 percent contribution funds the Social Security system. By law, these funds are required to be held by the Federal Government in trust. They are not the Federal Government's funds, but contributions that workers pay in and expect to get back.

Third, Social Security does not contribute to the Federal deficit.

In fact, the Social Security trust fund surpluses are masking the true size of the deficit. In 1995 Social Security will take in $69 billion more than it will pay out in benefits. By 2001, Social Security will be running surpluses of more than $100 billion a year. By including Social Security in the constitutional balanced budget amendment, Congress would obfuscate the true deficit problem.

Fourth, the failure to save Social Security's surpluses could undermine the system's viability.

In the late 1970's and early 1980's, Congress changed the way the Social Security system was financed. Recognizing the large demand on the system that would be created by the retirement of the baby boomer generation early next century, the Social Security system was changed from a pay-as-you-go system to a system that would accumulate large surpluses now to prepare for the vast increase in the number of retirees later.

Rather than saving these large surpluses, however, Congress has used them to finance the deficit. That means beginning in 2019, when Social Security is supposed to begin drawing down its accumulated surpluses to pay for the benefits of the vast numbers of retiring baby boomers, there will be no money saved to draw on.

Congress will be forced to either raise taxes, cut benefits, or cut other spending programs to meet the obligations workers are paying for now. In short, the American workers will have to pay twice for the retirement of the baby boomers because we are not saving what they contribute now.

As the chart next to me illustrates, the Social Security surpluses will decline and then plunge dramatically into deficit. The deficit will reach $700 billion a year by 2029.

Between 1995 and 2002, Congress will essentially steal $705 billion from the Social Security trust fund. That is the amount of surplus that is supposed to be saved over that period, but instead will be used to balance the budget. If we are to save that money, the budget would have to run a surplus of $705 billion and we know that will not happen.

By the year 2018, the Federal Government will owe the Social Security system $3 trillion. Those who say that Social Security is not on the table with this amendment are incorrect. It is—bigtime; to the tune of $3 trillion of reserves for retirement that will be involved unless our amendment is passed.

Clearly, unless we begin saving the Social Security surpluses and addressing the long-term needs of the system, we will be spearheading a financial Armageddon for Social Security.

The only way to save the Social Security surpluses to pay for future retirements is to balance the budget exclusive of Social Security.

The impact of this, of course, would be that the Federal Government would run a unified budget surplus—a balanced Federal budget and a surplus in the Social Security trust fund. In this way, we would cut the Federal debt and save Social Security funds, not just watch the debt keep growing. That is what the amendment Senator REID and I are offering would do—it would require a balanced Federal budget exclusive of Social Security.

Social Security system does have a long-term financing problem. In my opinion, an expert advisory board should be formed to advise Congress on how to adjust the system to restore balance and make the system live within its means.

The point, however, is that Social Security changes should be made to shore-up the long-term solvency of the Social Security system, not for any other reason. By keeping Social Security in this amendment, Congress would continue the shell game.

My support for maintaining the integrity of the Social Security system reinforces my support for the balanced budget amendment. But, a balanced budget amendment that uses Social Security funds is not truly balanced.

I support a constitutional balanced budget amendment that is honest, but I cannot support a balanced budget amendment which would enshrine the theft of Social Security trust funds in the U.S. Constitution.

If my vote is needed to pass this amendment, then Social Security will have to be exempted.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I personally understand what the distinguished Senator from California is saying and trying to do.

Keep in mind that although that curve goes up and down, in the year 2030, it starts going into a deficit. If the balanced budget amendment is in play, it will not be allowed to go into the deficit. It is one way we can protect Social Security.

Under the Senator's approach, it would go into the deficit. The only way to protect it is to increase taxes. Now, under the Senator's approach, there is no limitation on increasing taxes on Social Security. They can just go up every year. There is no way to stop it. With a balanced budget amendment, when that heads into deficit, we have to balance that account.

Now, I might also mention that the distinguished Senator knows that every penny of surplus of Social Security is being used to buy Government instruments now. Every nickel of that so-called surplus is being used to buy Government instruments; in other words, pieces of paper that say the U.S. Government owes the Social Security fund so much money. By the year 2030, it goes into deep deficit. The Senator is absolutely right on that. The balanced budget amendment forbids it from doing that because we cannot allow it to go into deficit.

The fact of the matter is that during this whole time, while that curve goes up and then down, all of that money is gone anyway, because they have purchased Government bonds, which if we do not get spending under control and if we do not get this economy under control, which only a balanced budget amendment can do, none of that surplus is going to be there when we need it, anyway. That is why we have to have a balanced budget amendment.

Now, I have listened to my dear friend and colleague from California. She said she wants to support a balanced budget amendment. I do, too. If I had the sole authority to write this amendment, it would undoubtedly be different. I did not have that luxury. Neither does my friend from California. As much as the Senator is sincere in trying to protect Social Security this way, she is not protecting it. If I had the sole authority, I would write it differently. I think the Senator from California would, also.

Let me just end this one thought. We have worked on this for 12 years—Democrats, Republicans, liberals, conservatives, moderates, people from all over the country. This is it. This is the best we can do. It is good. It is not perfect; nobody claims that it is. But it is as near perfect as we can get it, with the many varying viewpoints and differences that divide Members on both sides of this Capitol Hill and in both parties. So this is it.

If we do not pass this balanced budget amendment, then all the sincerity in the world that the distinguished Senator from California has in trying to protect the Social Security Trust Fund—and I am with her on that, and I will do everything in my power to help her throughout her whole Senate career to get there—everything she is arguing for will go down the drain for sure.

Because interest rates are going to go higher, the debt is going to get bigger, our children's future is going to be mortgaged away, and we are all going to wind up without the funds anyway because there will not be any way the Government can pay the instruments of debt that it is signing everyday on Social Security.

So I urge my colleague to really think this through because it is going to take both sides of the floor to really save Social Security from what really is a voracious Federal Government, a powerseeking monster that does not seem to care what the future is all about.

If we do not take this and seize this one opportunity to put through this bipartisan consensus amendment, which both Democrats and Republicans have worked on, and we let this go, I guarantee you—I guarantee you—that if we ever put through another one, it will be a lot tougher and a lot worse than this one, in the eyes of most people from the more liberal persuasion.

That is, if we get one at all, and if we do not get a balanced budget amendment at all, there will be no fiscal mechanism to force us to make priority choices among competing programs. I am willing to continue this dialog with my friend because I value her viewpoint, I value her, the distinguished Senator from California.

I know the sincerity that she has on this, and I know what she is trying to do. I am there with the Senator, but we will never get there without a mechanism called a balanced budget amendment in the Constitution. We all know it. I do not think anybody doubts it.

The fact of the matter is, this is it. There is nothing we can do to make it any better and keep the very close votes that we have to have to pass it. I might add, the distinguished Senator from California is a critical vote in this matter. We value that vote. Even though the Reid amendment went down last time, the distinguished Senator from California voted with us because it was the best we could do.

I have to say, as a Senator from Utah and as somebody who has worked on this for years who really, really, really has given everything he has to try and get this done, that I wish it could be otherwise. I wish we could solve every problem there is, but there is no way we can do it in this context, there is no way we can do it in this Congress. But we can move ahead by solving a lot of the problems and, I think, in the process protect Social Security better than it is protected today because we will be protecting the economy which, after all, is what Social Security depends upon.

If we reach a point where the debt has to be monetized, where we use cheap and worthless dollars to pay off the debt to get it off our backs, and inflation shoots up dramatically, which it will, 250-percent-plus range and we become like most of the Third World countries that are presently going through those problems, where is Social Security going to be at that time? Where are our seniors going to be? Where are the young people going to be? Where is the future?

The greatest country in the world is going to go down because we do not have the fortitude and the strength of mind and presence of mind and the guts to do the only thing that we can do right now. Look, there are people on my side who feel like killing because they are not getting a three-fifths vote requisite to increase taxes. They are just beside themselves. We saw 252 of them over in the House just beside themselves. I told them at the beginning of this Congress there is no way they can get more than 260 votes over there. We certainly do not have the votes here unless somebody tries to manipulate others, who do not want the amendment anyway, into voting that way.

(Mr. THOMPSON assumed the Chair.)

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the Senator does not control the floor.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from California controls the floor. I am trying to make this one point: I know what the Senator is trying to do. I appreciate it. I want to help her, and I will help her all the time that I am here in the Senate because I do not want to see the Social Security trust fund compromised in any way. I believe everybody on this side will help her. But if her point of view becomes—well, it will not become because there is no way we will have a balanced budget amendment if she insists that this has to be there and enough people do that we do not have the votes, there is no way we can have a balanced budget amendment.

But if her point of view becomes the law, then come the year 2028, 2029, 2030, we are going to be in a tremendous deficit, that is if we make it that far. In the interim time, of course, our debts are going to mount up, our interest rates will go off the charts, our economy is going to go bust and all those debt instruments that are supposed to pay this surplus to help people on Social Security are going to default, or else—we would never let them default—they would be paid by cheap dollars, by dollars that are worthless and people on Social Security will not be able to buy the food, clothing, the shelter that they need under those circumstances.

So the best thing we can do right now, if we are really concerned about it, is pass a balanced budget amendment, get this mechanism in place, make us make priority choices among competing programs, have us live within our means, and keep this trust fund strong and keep Social Security strong well into the next century and beyond the year 2030.

I wanted to make those points. I am willing to work with the Senator from California. I am willing to line up with her and try and help solve these problems. It is just there is so much we can do on this balanced budget amendment. This is it. It depends on the good faith of all of us here whether we are going to pass it or whether we are not going to pass it. I believe we will in the end, but it is going to take an awful lot of effort by all of us, and I suspect it is going to be a long, hard debate.

I hope the distinguished Senator from California will keep an open mind and work with us on it, and I promise I will try to help her in her goals and her desires to make sure this trust fund is protected for everybody in our society.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator from California yield for a question?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we had a discussion yesterday on the floor about the authority of the courts with respect to a balanced budget amendment, whether they would have authority to enforce that, and the distinguished Senator, Senator HATCH, responded to that in part. I will have more to say about that later.

Mr. President, my question today has to do with the authority of the President with respect to the balanced budget amendment. I wonder if the Senator from California can tell me when the President, on Inauguration Day, raises his hand and swears to uphold the Constitution of the United States, which at that time, let us assume, includes this amendment, my question is, what authority or what duty does the President have under this amendment to balance the budget if the Congress, in fact, has not balanced that budget?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I cannot answer that with specificity, but it would seem to me that if Congress fails to balance the budget that the President would have some authority, and whether this automatically confers a line-item veto or whether we do it separately, it would seem to me that the President should be a player and a dominant player in being able to assure that the budget is balanced.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the Senator assumes that this amendment gives to the President that line-item veto, I assume that the Senator also assumes that that power is without limitation; that is to say, if the President has the authority under this amendment to balance the budget if Congress has failed to do so, then the President can take whatever part of the budget he wants and impound it without limitation. He can impound Star Wars, he can impound Social Security, he can impound railroad retirement, or any part to any degree of the Federal budget. Would the Senator agree with me on that?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Not necessarily, I say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

If I might refer this to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I think it would be most interesting to have his response to this question.

Mr. HATCH. I am sorry; I was not listening.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes. The question I had, Mr. President, was to what extent does the President of the United States have a duty or authority under the Constitution, which he is sworn to uphold, to balance this budget if the Congress has failed to do so?

Mr. HATCH. Well, every President has a duty to do his best or her best, to try to bring our fiscal house into order. But for the last 26 years no President has been able to really submit a balanced budget to the Congress. They may have once or twice.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What I really have in mind is what is the limit of the President's impoundment authority under this amendment?

Mr. HATCH. He has no authority at this point.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Under this amendment, if this amendment passes?

Mr. HATCH. That is right. Do you mean under the balanced budget amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. If this constitutional amendment passes and becomes the law of the land and the President takes the oath to uphold this Constitution—

Mr. HATCH. There would be no impoundment authority under this balanced budget amendment. Under Senate Joint Resolution 1, or House Joint Resolution 1, there is nothing in either amendment, either the House or the Senate version—and they are both identical except for one comma—

Mr. DODD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HATCH. Under either version, there is no right to impound. It is not the intention of this amendment to grant the President any impoundment authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is that the Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand it—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And may only yield for a question.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand it, she wanted me to answer these questions.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would take unanimous consent.

Does the Senator yield?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Yes, I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I would like to pose the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then let whoever wishes answer it. I think it is a very serious question. And I do not think it is answered by the terms of the amendment or by the legislative history here. After all, we have a Budget Control and Impoundment Act, but this is the Constitution we are expounding. I think it is at least arguable, if not persuasive, that this constitutional amendment would overrule that Budget Control and Impoundment Act and would return us to the days of President Nixon where he felt that he had the inherent power to impound. Indeed, he might feel as if he had the inherent duty to impound. I think we better find the answer to that and, if it is not clear under the amendment, make it clear.

I might say to my friend from California that I propose later on to make it clear what the authority of the courts is by an amendment which I am working on, and I would like to also make it clear what the power of the President is. These are fundamental constitutional questions with overriding importance to the country, and before we pass a constitutional amendment we need to know whether it is enforceable and, if so, by whom.

So I hope the Senator will work with us and will withhold some judgment. Assuming she can get her Social Security issue successfully solved, I hope she will also understand the gravity of the question of enforceability and the absolute necessity to clear up what is an overhanging ambiguity in this amendment. It is an ambiguity so great that it is almost impossible to fly through that fog, and I hope she will work with us in trying to get that cleared up.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Senator. I do yield.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I must raise a point of order. Under the rules of the Senate, you cannot yield through comments. You cannot yield through the person who holds the floor for someone else to ask questions. We have people who are waiting to speak. We have an order under which they speak. And I think if people want to speak, they should wait, be recognized, make their point, raise these profound questions about what happens if we do not do what the American people want us to do. The debate here is about how we do what the American people want us to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is going to enforce the rules of the debate. The Senator may only yield for a question.

Mr. HATCH. May I ask a question—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. HATCH. Of the Senator from California. Then I will bring this to a close.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Absolutely.

Mr. HATCH. The question I have is would the Senator like me at this point to answer the question of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. That would be helpful.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to respond to the impoundment argument that Senator JOHNSTON has just raised. In each of the years the balanced budget amendment has been debated, I have noticed that one specious argument is presented as a scare tactic by the opponents of the amendment. This year the vampire rising from the grave is Presidential impoundment. Supposedly, a President, doing his best Charles I of England impersonation, when faced with the possibility of budgetary shortfalls after ratification of the balanced budget amendment, will somehow have the constitutional authority—nay duty—to arbitrarily cut social spending programs or even raise taxes. Well, Charles Stuart literally lost his head when he claimed as a prerogative the powers of the Commons. So too, a President may not claim authority delegated by the Constitution to the people's Representatives. The law is our Cromwell that will prevent impoundment.

I want to emphasize that there is nothing in Senate Joint Resolution 1 that allows for impoundment. It is not the intent of the amendment to grant the President any impoundment authority under Senate Joint Resolution 1. In fact, there is a ripeness problem to any attempted impoundment: indeed up to the end of the fiscal year the President has nothing to impound because Congress in the amendment has the power to ameliorate any budget shortfalls or ratify or specify the amount of deficit spending that may occur in that fiscal year.

Moreover, under section 6 of the amendment, Congress must—and I emphasize "must"—mandate exactly what type of enforcement mechanism it wants, whether it be sequestration, rescission, or the establishment of a contingency fund. The President, as Chief Executive, is duty bound to enforce a particular requisite congressional scheme to the exclusion of impoundment. That the President must enforce a mandatory congressional budgetary measure has been the established law since the 19th century case of Kendall v. United States ex rel. Stokes, 37 U.S. (12 Pet.) 542 (1838). In Kendall, Congress had passed a private act ordering the Postmaster General to pay Kendall for services rendered. The Supreme Court rejected the argument that Kendall could not sue in mandamus because the Postmaster General was subject only to the orders of the President and not to the directives of Congress. The Court held that the President must enforce any mandated—as opposed to discretionary—congressional spending measure pursuant to his duty to faithfully execute the law pursuant to Article II, section 3 of the Constitution. The Kendall case was given new vitality in the 1970's, when lower Federal courts, as a matter of statutory construction, rejected attempts by President Nixon to impound funds where Congress did not give the President discretion to withhold funding. E.g., State Highway Commission v. Volpe, 479 F.2d 1099 (8th Cir. 1973).

The position that section 6 implementing legislation would preclude Presidential impoundment was seconded by Attorney General Barr at the recent Judiciary Committee hearing on the balanced budget amendment. Testifying that the impoundment issue was in reality incomprehensible, General Barr concluded that "the whip hand is in Congress' hand, so to speak; under section 6 [the] Congress can provide the enforcement mechanism that the courts will defer to and that the President will be bound by."

What we have here then, is an argument based on a mere possibility. Under the mere possibility scenario of an impoundment we would have to include any possibility, however remote, in the amendment. The amendment would look like an insurance policy. Why place something in the Constitution that in all probability could never happen, especially if Congress could preclude impoundment by legislation?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I am going to get to the issue of Social Security toward the end of my speech, but I think it is very interesting that the focal point of the debate here is what would happen if we did not do what the American people want us to do, after we have amended the Constitution to require that we do it. It seems to me that the focal point of debate ought to be how do we do what the American people have demanded in overwhelming numbers that we do. That is, how do we balance the Federal budget?

Mr. President, there are a lot of issues about which I wish to talk. I certainly want to speak about Social Security because one of the things that I believe many people watching this debate do not know is that because of a profound election result on November 8, if every Democratic Member of the Senate were to vote the way that Senator did when we voted on the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution the last time, we will adopt it—the House has already adopted it—it will go to the States; it will be ratified; and it will become the law of the land.

So it is of some profound importance when Senators who voted for this very amendment in the last Congress now raise a multitude of objections against the very amendment that they voted for in the last Congress when there was no chance of it being adopted, when we were not shooting with real bullets, because now we are in fact shooting with real bullets and we have the opportunity to change the Constitution and to change the history of the United States of America.

Mr. President, I wish to begin by pointing out that, while I am sure there are a lot of people who believe this debate on the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is driven by the tax and spend history of our country in the last 40 years, a history of runaway Government spending, of the explosion in growth of the Federal Government, of an explosion in the tax burden, in reality we are engaged today in an old debate and not a new debate.

In fact, no less of an authority than Thomas Jefferson, when he first saw the Constitution, raised his concern about the absence of a provision which in essence is the provision that we are debating today. If some of you will remember, Thomas Jefferson was the Minister to France when the Constitution was written, and he is one of our Founding Fathers who did not attend the Constitutional Convention.

When Jefferson had an opportunity to read the Constitution and to understand its provisions, he talked in a letter about one change that he would like to make. Some of us are familiar with this quote, but many engaged in the debate are not, and I wish to read it. Here is what Jefferson wrote:

I wish it were possible to obtain a single amendment to our Constitution. I would be willing to depend on that alone for the reduction of the administration of our government to the genuine principles of its Constitution. I mean an additional article taking from the government the power of borrowing.

So, Mr. President, there is no doubt that we are here today debating a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution because of the utter failure of the Congress and the President, Democratic Presidents and Republican Presidents, primarily Democratic Congresses, but both to get the job done. But this is not a new debate. Thomas Jefferson recognized at the beginning of the Republic that it was desirable to put into the Constitution a limit on the ability of government to borrow money, and in a sense we are correcting a problem in the Constitution that Jefferson recognized from the beginning.

While I am on the subject of Jefferson, it is important to note that we see each day, I believe, in the numbers that we look at on the deficit, a debate which Jefferson engaged in with John Adams. Jefferson and Adams were political enemies during their careers, but once they had retired they became close friends. They engaged in correspondence. And part of that correspondence has become famous as the Jefferson-Adams debate.

It is more than I will outline, but the essence of the debate was as follows.

Adams, ever the pessimist, argued that people would discover that they could use Government to redistribute wealth and that once they made the discovery that Government power could be used to redistribute wealth, Adams argued that it would reward indolence, that it would impose a burden on productive behavior, and that democracy would fail.

Jefferson, ever the optimist, argued that people would make the discovery—they would discover that Government, through taxing and spending, could be manipulated by special interests and that it could be used to take the fruits of the labor from the laborer and give it to people who were not equally productive or who were more powerful politically. But Jefferson argued that the American people would always be so committed to broad-based opportunity that they would recognize that what the Government could take from someone else today and give to them, they could take from them and give to someone else tomorrow, and Americans would therefore reject Government as an instrument for redistributing wealth.

In a very real sense, today we are immersed in the Jefferson-Adams debate. While I believe that Jefferson is right, the debate as it is now structured is biased in favor of the Adams argument. Let me give a practical example.

I guess my first experience in budgetary politics was after I was elected to Congress in 1978 as a Democrat. In 1979 and 1980 the country got into trouble. We had 13.5 percent inflation, we had 21.5 percent interest rates under President Carter, and President Carter in 1980 withdrew his budget, in an extraordinary action, and he sent to the Congress, as best I can remember, about a $6 billion savings package. Most of the package was phony. Some of it supposedly saved money by spending money sooner rather than counting it in the future year. We have all seen that happen and some have practiced it. He also moved some spending to a future year. But there was $1 billion of real savings that he proposed by denying Government retirees a twice a year cost-of-living increase.

That saved $1 billion by giving Government retirees a once a year cost-of-living increase instead of a twice a year cost-of-living increase. At the time, 98 percent of all private retirees had no cost-of-living increase, but my purpose is not to debate the merits.

When we voted on the Carter budget revision, over 250 Members of Congress voted with the President to try to save the $1 billion. I was one of them. And then, when a conservative Republican, as it turned out, offered an amendment to force us to vote straight up or down on the twice a year cost-of-living increase rather than voting on the general concept of dealing with the deficit, as I recall there were about 50 brave souls in the House who stayed with the once a year cost-of-living increase and I was one of them. I was up for reelection at the time. I was running against a candidate who, at least initially, appeared to be a potential challenge. So I was doing a poll. It is a very small poll but it made a very big impression on me and I wanted to share it with my colleagues and with the people who are interested in this debate.

I asked in that poll: "How many people knew that we had a vote on the twice a year cost-of-living increase for Federal employees and how many people did not know?" Interestingly enough, not one person that I polled in my district who was not a Federal employee or a Federal retiree even knew the vote had occurred. But every Government employee and every Federal retiree that we polled knew it. In addition, on the second question, "Knowing it, how did it affect your support in the upcoming election?", every person who knew it planned to vote against me because of the vote. There is nothing wrong with that. The essence of democracy is accountability.

But here is my point. The reason the system is biased in favor of spending is because we vote on individual issues and every time we vote on spending money we have special interest groups—and we are all part of them—looking over our left shoulder, sending letters back home telling people whether we care about the old, the poor, the sick, the retired, the bicycle riders—and the list goes on and on.

Nobody is looking over our right shoulder telling people back home whether we care about the people who do the work and pay the taxes and pull the wagon in America, or whether we care about our children and their future.

I remember in 1979 we were going through a fairly boring period in Congress. As a young freshman Member I tried to keep up with real votes we cast. Not votes on big bills that cost billions of dollars where the vote would be 380 to 20, but actual amendments. In my little casual empiricism I made a discovery. The discovery basically was this. The average little amendment add-on we were voting on cost about $70 million. The average beneficiary, as best I could estimate, got about $1,000 to $1,500 apiece. And since there were 100 million taxpayers the average taxpayer was paying about 70 cents. You did not need a Ph.D. in economics to understand that a few people are willing to do more to get $1,500 than a lot of people are willing to do to prevent spending 70 cents.

My conclusion was that only if we change the way we spend money do we have any chance of gaining control of spending, because what tends to happen—and our colleague in the Chair is a new Member here, but as he will discover—what tends to happen is the only people who ever know how you vote on spending issues are the people who wanted the money and they remember most when they do not get it. It is like in a religious sense saying if you do good that when you get to the Golden Gate and Saint Peter opens the books that there is not going to be anything written down; no record of it. You are asking people to be responsible simply because that being responsible is the right thing to do.

The problem is, the Lord did not make many zealots. And that is why we have consistently, vote after vote, year after year, been losing the battle on Government spending. And as a result the Government has become bigger and bigger and bigger, more and more distant, more and more hostile, more and more burdensome. And that is why we are here debating this issue today.

In trying to deal with this problem we passed what was called the Gramm-Rudman law. On the day it passed, I stood up and said in that debate that the bill was the engagement but the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution was the marriage; that the problem with the Gramm-Rudman law was that it was a law, and what Congress could make, Congress could unmake.

I did not realize, when I was saying that in 1985, that exactly that was going to end up happening. What happened under the law is that we were able, in the 4½ years it was in place, to lower the deficit burden on the economy by about 42 percent. We were able to limit the growth of Government spending to 1.4 percent a year while the economy grew by 3.1 percent a year and the Government actually got smaller relative to the economy for the first time in the postwar period of the country.

But what happened is when the hill got steep from the recession and S&L bailout, then Congress bailed out on the Gramm-Rudman law, gave the new President the power to suspend it, and the first official act of Bill Clinton was to suspend the Gramm-Rudman law.

What is the problem we are looking at in terms of the deficit? I have some charts. Let me just basically go through them. We are engaged in an intensive debate here on what happens if we balance the budget but with relatively little attention paid to what happens if we do not. This chart is basically the question of when are we going to do it? But all of this red shows going back to 1969. The one time in the last 34 years, since 1961, that we have actually had a tiny little surplus was in 1969. From that point on, every year, we have run a Federal deficit. And right here is where we are headed if we do not adopt a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution and if we continue business as usual.

This next chart is a projection from the Congressional Budget Office. If you look at the last 34 years, this is what it looks like. Starting in 1961, we ran a deficit. We ran a deficit every year to 1969. That year we had a tiny little surplus, which is a lot of money for anybody but Ross Perot; $3.2 billion. But in the big scheme of things, it is a fairly small surplus. But every year thereafter, since 1970, we have run a cumulative deficit which has raised the debt by $3.4 trillion.

Given current projections, nobody can honestly anticipate, short of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, that we will balance the budget anytime in the next 15 years. I ask my colleagues, is it possible for a country, year after year after year for half a century, to spend more money than it takes in and to pile up these debts so that the interest on the debt in the year 2005 will be greater than the total level of Government spending in 1975?

If we do not pass a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, given the bills that are already the law of the land, given the spending that we are already committed to, by the year 2005, 10 years from now, we are going to be spending $334 billion a year simply paying interest on all of this debt. That is more money than we spent on Social Security, defense, discretionary spending, and every other single program of the Government in 1975. In fact, there are a number of Members of this body who were Members of the Senate in 1975. We are not talking about that long ago.

What happens if we do not balance the budget has to do with real people and real families. People talk about the difficulty of balancing the budget and the supposed excruciating pain that is presumed to result from what we are going to have to do, but I hear relatively little discussion about the excruciating pain that is going to occur if we do not do something about the deficit. Let me talk about that very briefly.

In 1950, the average family in America with two children sent $1 out of every $50 it earned to Washington, DC. Today, that average family is sending $1 out of every $4 it earns to Washington, DC. And if we do not pass a single new law in the next 20 years, if we just pay for the laws that are already on the books, if we just pay for the Government that we have already thrust upon the American people, that average family is going to be sending $1 out of every $3 it earns to Washington, DC. That is the cost of doing nothing.

The General Accounting Office has estimated that, if we pass a balanced budget amendment and we enforce it, the impact of balancing the budget will mean that our children can expect their family income to be 36 percent higher than if we do not eliminate a situation where government is borrowing 50 cents out of every $1 available meaning that 50 cents out of every $1 saved in America does not go to build a new home, a new farm, a new factory, to generate new economic growth; it instead all goes to pay for Government deficit spending.

The last time that we had a sustained period of a balanced budget so that the Government was not borrowing 50 cents out of every $1, mortgage rates were 3.5 percent. In fact, in the history of this country, whenever we have had any kind of prolonged period where the Government was living within its means, long-term interest rates have been down around 3 percent. The average home in America would have a mortgage payment of $500 a month less today if we had the fruits of a balanced budget.

So when we are talking about all of the excruciating pain that is held out, about what it would mean if the Government had to do what families and businesses have to do every year, I think it is important to ask ourselves what is going to happen if we do not do it.

A couple of other points: I just mentioned that over the next 10 years, the interest payment on the debt, at the rate at which we are piling up new debt, is going to rise by $134 billion. We are going to be paying an additional $134 billion a year in 10 years on interest payments because we are not balancing the Federal budget.

Do you know what we could do with $134 billion a year? The Senator from California got up and talked about Social Security. With $134 billion a year put into the Social Security trust fund, we could guarantee that we could finance the retirement of the baby boomers. With $134 billion a year, which we are going to be squandering on interest while we debate whether the world will come to an end if we have to live within our means, if we took that $134 billion a year and used it to cut taxes, we could double the personal exemption and have a flat tax rate of 17 percent.

We are talking about a tremendous ability to let working families benefit from their own creativity, from their own hard work. But what is going to happen if we do not do it? What is going to happen if we do not do it is that $134 billion is not going to go to Social Security. That $134 billion a year is not going to be returned to families to invest in the American dream. That $134 billion is going to be squandered the way the $200 billion a year we are spending this year is being squandered in paying interest on a debt that we have run up because this Congress and others like it have refused to say no to any organized special interest groups.

How would we balance the budget? This is a much discussed issue. We have heard some of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle make an argument that runs basically as follows: We have not balanced the budget since 1969. We are out of practice. We do not know how we would do it. How could we commit to do something when we cannot tell you exactly how we are going to do it?

I am going to talk about how to do it for a moment. But let me submit that is not the way people operate in the real world. In the real world, we commit to do things all the time even though we cannot tell you going in exactly how we are going to get the job done.

If, in the real world, you had to be able to say exactly how you were going to achieve something down to the finest detail, before you committed to a good and worthy goal, no one would ever commit to one.

If you had to know how you were going to pass all those courses when you went off to the university, nobody would ever go off to college. If you had to outline exactly how you were going to make your business work in good times and bad, nobody would ever start a business. If you had to figure out how you were going to make a marriage successful before you got into it, how you were going to deal with the 1,001 problems that you know are going to come up, nobody would ever get married.

After my wife-to-be turned me down for the second time and I got down on one knee in San Antonio and said, "If you will marry me, I will spend the rest of my life trying to make you happy," my wife did not look down at me and say, "Well, how are you going to do it?" She looked at me and tried to gauge how much I was committed to it, and 25 years later I am still working on it. So forgive me if I feel a little bit cynical toward my colleagues who say, "How can we commit to balancing the budget if we cannot sit down and write out in the greatest detail how we are going to do it," knowing that if anybody wrote out the detail, then they would stand here and say the world is coming to an end if we have to do these things.

I hope when people hear this debate, they will always remember these numbers—and nobody disputes these numbers. The White House, the Congressional Budget Office, nobody disputes these numbers. What I have here on this chart is a projection of Federal Government spending, which is the line in red, and then Federal Government revenue, which is blue. One thing that is clear, if you look at this chart, is that both of them have been growing. Both of them have been growing very rapidly. The problem is that the spending has been growing more rapidly. What has happened is that, since 1969, spending has been growing by an average of 8.7 percent a year. In fact, spending by the Federal Government has been growing 2½ times as fast as spending by the American family has been growing. I think that is a real index of our problem.

Revenues have been rising, but they have not been rising as fast as spending has been rising. So if you look here, in 1995, where that red ends and the yellow begins, that is where we are.

The Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office project that over the next 7 years, the economy is going to grow—not as fast as it is growing now, but at a fairly modest rate compared to the kind of growth we had in the 1950's and 1960's.

If we could limit the growth of Government spending to no more than 3 percent a year, where we are spending only 3 percent more next year than we spent this year, we would balance the budget by the year 2002, which is what we are calling for in this balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Here is my point. I know that there are many people who say we cannot balance the budget, that it means hard choices, and that we have a Congress that in 40 years has not said no to any organized group with a letterhead. Obviously, it is a self-fulfilling prophecy. But I think if you go to main street America and you say to the people, "Would you want the Government to balance the budget, to eliminate the kind of debt burden and taxes that we are looking at in the future if we do not do it, if it requires that the total growth of Federal spending be limited to no more than 3 percent a year for 7 years?" my guess is that 95 percent of the people in this country would say "yes." The other 5 percent are the people who understand this well enough to know that they are getting the 7 percent a year spending increase, and that they do not want it balanced; even if it mortgages the future of the country, it is worth it to them to get this extra spending.

I am not saying this is easy. I have worked on the budget as long and as hard as any person who has served in the Senate in the period of time I have been here. Limiting the growth of Government spending to 3 percent means you have to reform welfare, which we need to do anyway; it means you have to reform Medicaid; it means you have to reform Medicare.

When the average insurance policy in the private sector did not go up in price last year, and Medicare went up by 10.5 percent, and the Government is paying for it and our senior citizens are paying for it, we ought to go back and look at it and we ought to be reforming it. It also means you have to go through discretionary spending, because there are some parts of it that are going to grow, and that should grow, and you have to set priorities and cut spending elsewhere.

The point is, how many families in Illinois last year, or in Tennessee, or Texas, had to deal with budgets that were tougher than limiting their growth in spending to 3 percent? On almost every street, on almost every block in the Nation, there were families that had to make tough decisions last year. They did not like it, but they did it. They had to say "no," not to strangers but to people they love. They did not want to do it, but they did it. How many businesses in America have had to restructure their business in the last 10 or 20 years, compared to which living within a 3 percent growth rate would look like child's play? Literally hundreds of thousands of them. What is the difference? Families and businesses live in the real world, and the Federal Government does not. The balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is an effort to bring it into the real world.

I now want to address the Social Security issue. First of all, there are profound questions that have to be answered if you are suddenly deciding that you want to not count the second-largest Federal revenue flow and the second-largest outlay flow as transactions of the Federal Government.

We heard the distinguished Senator from California talk about protecting Social Security. But the reality is that taking Social Security out of the budget in no way protects Social Security. In fact, when we ran into trouble with Social Security in 1982, what did we do? What we did is we started shifting money from trust funds; we started shifting money from among the various trust funds, and we took money out of general revenue and we saved Social Security, and we went back—finally, when we were shamed into it, when our parents were about not to get a check—on a bipartisan basis and we made the changes we needed to make. Had we had this provision in place, we would not have been able to do that.

But there is a more profound question. If you balance the budget and you did not count Social Security's revenues or the expenditures, you would be, today, running a surplus of about $80 billion. Do we want the Federal Government to run a surplus of $80 billion? We have done that, by the way. From 1867 to 1879, the Federal Government, as a policy, took in more than it spent. And what happened is, it imposed a deflationary pressure on the economy, prices fell, on average, 1 percent a year, and we resumed our gold payment at $20.67 an ounce, which is what it had been in 1860. That was the objective of the Government, but it achieved it by pushing prices and wages right through the floor. Is that a policy we want to undertake? My view is that if we do, it is something we need to make a fundamental decision about. The reality is that we have always lived up to our commitment under Social Security. We have always kept the promise on Social Security without any constitutional requirement. But we have not balanced the budget in a quarter of a century and with no realistic prospect of doing so any time in the next decade, we clearly have an urgent need for a constitutional requirement to do so.

I also have to admit that I am somewhat amazed at this sudden desire of our Democratic colleagues to protect Social Security, because I remember that last year when we had the Social Security tax increase go into effect, one of our own colleagues—I believe Senator MCCAIN—offered an amendment that said that the Social Security tax increase had to be dedicated to the trust fund, and his amendment was defeated on a partisan vote.

In fact, if you look at your new IRS 1040 income tax form, which every American is about to get in the mail, you are going to find that on page 7 it has a new section. The new section says "Social Security Benefits." And it says, "If your income, including one-half of your Social Security benefits, is over $34,000 a year," and then it goes on and says you have to pay taxes on it.

This Senate in the last Congress voted to dedicate those taxes not to the Social Security trust fund but to spend on social programs, which was the policy of the Clinton administration. Now we have the same people saying, "Well, I voted for the balanced budget amendment in the last Congress, but now I do not know that I can vote for it because of Social Security."

My point is this: The way to protect Social Security is to deal with this deficit. If we do not deal with this deficit, if we let it continue to mount, we are not going to be able to fulfill our promises anywhere.

If people are for protecting Social Security—which I am absolutely dedicated to and I believe that every Member of this Congress understands that it is a commitment that has been made. The Contract With America makes it clear that Social Security is not going to be tampered with as part of the deficit. There is a 60-vote point of order in the Senate for doing anything that lowers the solvency of the Social Security system. So we have a built-in protection.

It is clear, when you look at the fact that, if every Democrat who voted for this amendment in the past votes for it again, and based on the election of 11 new Republicans, the balanced budget amendment is going to pass and subsequently become the law of the land. When we start having people say, "Well, look, I am for this and I voted for it in the past, but before I vote for it again, you have to fix this, you have to fix that," it raises the specter that now because we are shooting with real bullets, and are actually on the verge of achieving something, we are starting to see the possibility that this whole thing could come apart. And I hope it does not.

I think we have reached the moment of truth. I think we have to decide whether or not we want to force the Government to live on a budget like everybody else.

I know that there are some of my colleagues who say, "Well, what could a President do if you did not fulfill the Constitution?" Well, I hope a President, who had put his hand on the Bible and sworn to uphold, protect, and defend the Constitution, would live up to the commitment.

But I think we are asking the wrong questions. We are asking the wrong questions about what the President will do and what the courts will do. The question we should be asking is: What are we going to do?

Everybody understands the current system is broken. Everybody understands the current system is not working. Everybody understands that if we stay on the road that we are on today, in 20 years we are not going to be living in the same country that we grew up in. We are going to lose the unique opportunity that has been part of America—the opportunity for someone to grow up in Tennessee I say to my distinguished colleague in the chair and, from very humble beginnings, have an opportunity to go to college, to go to law school, to be successful, to become a Senator; the opportunity for people all over the country to do extraordinary things. That is what is on the line here. That is what this vote is about.

A final point—and I have spoken a long time, but I wanted to be sure I addressed all these issues. This is not a new amendment that we are talking about. The Senator from Illinois and many people on our side and many people on his side have worked on this amendment for many years. I have been working directly or indirectly on this amendment for 15 or 16 years. I have sat in on numerous meetings with Congressman STENHOLM, who is a Democrat, with Senator SIMON, who is a Democrat, and we have worked out an amendment that we can agree on.

I would love to have a three-fifths vote requirement to raise taxes. I think the country would be better off if we had it. I want to deal with the deficit not by raising taxes but by cutting spending. But I am willing to fight it out. And I can tell you right now, if we impose a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution and if I am here or if I am involved in Government debate, I will not support raising taxes. I want to deal with this problem by controlling spending. I am sure there are others who feel differently.

But the point is, I cannot get 67 votes for the three-fifths tax protection requirement. There are always things that we could do that would be improvements. But, as Benjamin Franklin said so long ago when the original Constitution was written, you come down to a point where you have to make a decision.

If we want to alter American history, this is the amendment to alter it with. We have the votes to pass it. The House has already acted. The Nation is now looking to us to see if we have the will and the courage.

And I know you could come up with 1,001 excuses for changing your vote. But I believe the American people will understand that this is a test about who is serious about forcing the Federal Government to live within its means, who is interested in changing politics as usual in Washington, DC.

I am hopeful, prayerfully hopeful, that those on the other side who are now talking about changing their vote at the critical moment when we have the votes to pass the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution will engage in some prayerful deliberation and realize that, if they do that, we are going to lose a golden opportunity. We have no guarantee that the opportunity is going to come back and America's future is going to be permanently altered one way or another by what we do here. I hope people will look at this opportunity and not squander it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HUTCHISON). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Chair.

Madam President, I rise this afternoon to address the issue of the balanced budget constitutional amendment.

Madam President, my intention will be, over the coming days, to address this issue from several different perspectives. I am very much opposed to dealing with our serious fiscal problems using this approach.

It has been pointed out in public survey after public survey that there is deep concern about the fiscal policies of the country and the direction in which we are headed. People are worried about whether or not we are going to be able to reduce significantly the size of the national debt and our deficits. I do not think there is any debate about that at all.

Madam President, I arrived here in January of 1981. The deficit in that year was about $35 billion, and the national debt was under $1 trillion. That debt had been accumulated over almost 200 years, through a Civil War and two World Wars, the Great Depression, and several smaller depressions.

I was, I believe, the second Member of my side of the aisle to support the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction measure at that time. I thought that was an honest and strong effort statutorily to get our arms around what was then a very small problem by comparison today. Regrettably, that solution did not work, primarily, in my view, because an awful lot of exceptions were created to it.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was to apply to, initially, the entire budget. And then, because of the way this institution has run for 200 years and, I suspect, will for as many more years as we are here we began creating exclusion after exclusion. One constituency group after another with major causes came before us and started to peel away the effects of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings so we were incapable of dealing with the budget deficit.

I then offered a pay-as-you-go budget—I was in the minority in those days, as I am today. My proposal would have required that every increase in every aspect of the Federal budget had to be paid for it. I got 22 votes for that idea. Had my pay-as-you-go proposal been adopted we could have achieved a balanced budget by 1987. We did not, of course.

I strongly urge my colleagues, if they have some time—and I guess they will in the next couple of weeks as we debate this issue—to read David Stockman's book where he described the economics policy decisions of the early 1980's.

I present that, Madam President, as background. I have always supported strong deficit reduction measures, but I believe that a balanced budget amendment will not achieve those goals. Adopting a constitutional amendment is the easy part of this. Clearly the amendment is popular before you start talking about the cuts it would require. The amendment would change the organic law of our country to deal with a contemporary fiscal problem. It would incorporate an economic theory as to how we ought to address our current deficit problem.

I have deep, deep, reservations about it based, first and foremost, on my concern that we ought not allow the organic law of the country to become a place where we deal with contemporary, perplexing problems that we face. I think there is a distinction between the organic law of a nation and a set of statutes and ordinances that allow us to come to terms with those questions.

I am also concerned, Madam President, with the view that somehow by amending the Constitution of the United States a bolt of lightning will strike the Congress and we will depart from our historic pattern of finding the easy way out of problems.

I noticed a moment ago the Senator from Texas was talking about a budget proposal here a year or two ago that included a tax implication dealing with Social Security, and Democrats were terrible people over here because we did that. There will be an amendment, I gather, offered that will take Social Security recipients and exclude their benefits from the constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

I suppose it would not do me any good to offer an amendment that to exclude 6-year-olds, as well. I could make a pretty good case that being a child in America today, based on age and circumstances, is very difficult. I am not trying to minimize the problems that all our seniors face. I simply cannot imagine anyone wanting to write into the Constitution an exclusion for people based on age to avoid the serious fiscal problems we face. Yet, that is an example of what some have proposed we do to the Constitution.

I have strong reservations about the constitutional amendment, and other ideas that would preclude us from facing all the difficult choices that we will be forced to confront.

Madam President, just briefly this afternoon, I would like to focus on one particular concern I have about this amendment. It relates to this issue of what I would call the gimmickry associated with the constitutional amendment. My concern, Madam President, is that if we pass a constitutional amendment, Congress will use every imaginable gimmick, sleight of hand, and tool of evasion to get around the requirements of a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

If this happens, in my view, we will first of all have done nothing to get our fiscal house in order. And we will have done a great deal of harm in undermining public faith in the U.S. Constitution by increasing the public cynicism that exists about our Government generally, and more specifically about the institution of Congress.

My argument, Madam President, is not that Congress is somehow inherently dishonest or genetically programmed to cheat, but I do think if we showed some political courage and some bold leadership, we could honestly deal with our fiscal problems without resorting to gimmickry. In fact, what we are saying, in many ways, is that by writing a balanced budget requirement into the organic law of the Nation we will be precluded from coming up with other ideas to get around and circumvent our responsibilities. In some ways I wish that were true. But having served here for a few years, I am profoundly convinced that it will be untrue.

The courage and the leadership, in my view, must come first. We will not create them by changing some words, even in the Constitution. If we simply change the law without mustering the will to do the right thing, then we will come up with ways, in my view, to get around the law.

I think all Members know, Madam President, and experience should have taught us, who bears the greatest cost of this gimmickry. That is working Americans. When rosy scenarios lose their luster and the magic asterisks lose their magic, and the train wreck inevitably comes economically, it is always working Americans who are left to pick up the pieces and pay the price.

Perhaps the boldest budget gimmick of all time was the so-called supply-side economic approach I mentioned earlier. I arrived here in 1981 in the minority. President Reagan pointed to something called the Laffer curve and told all of us we could balance the budget, while at the same time cutting taxes and increasing spending. It was an Alice-in-Wonderland view of economics where up was down and down was up, and tax cuts always increase revenue. President Reagan's first budget submission in 1981 projected a balanced budget by 1984 and a $28.2 billion surplus by 1986. The budget confidently stated:

The new policy of tax rate reduction is expected to expand the economy's productive base, lower unemployment, and reduce budget outlays. As a result, the decline in tax rates is likely to generate both strong economic improvement and impressive gains in receipts, paving the way for a balanced budget.

That was 1981. Well, that sure sounded very optimistic and nice but unfortunately, it does not bear much similarity to what actually happened. Let me tell Members what actually happened. In 1984, the year the supply-siders projected a balanced budget, we had a $185 billion deficit. The deficit went from $35 billion in 1981, to $185 billion by 1984, 3 years later. By 1986, the year the Laffer curve was supposed to produce a $28 billion surplus, we were $221 billion in the red. That was 5 years after our national deficit was $35 billion. Madam President, it got worse and worse and worse.

During those years, the national debt quadrupled. Today, every American—man, woman, and child—owes almost $13,500 on publicly held debt. In inflation-adjusted terms, that is 2.5 times more than what they owed in 1980. That is the legacy.

Madam President, I do not fault President Reagan for trying. It was an idea. There were many people, Democrats included, who thought it would work. I had my suspicions. I was one of 11 Members here who voted against it. But the point is here, when it did not work, we could change it. We could change it, and we did. We paid a price. What we were doing is fooling with the appropriations of the country, the Tax Code of the country, the statutory law of the country. We made a mistake, an awful one, and it has cost us dearly, but it was a statutory mistake. A mistake in appropriations, a mistake in the Tax Code, is mistake that could be corrected with much greater ease than if these policies had been written into the Constitution.

Imagine, however, in 1981, if we had incorporated in the Constitution of the United States an economic approach and then faced what David Stockman properly has pointed out, by good-intentioned and well-intentioned people, similar demands for greater spending. A situation where the Secretary of Defense said, "Wait a minute, not me. I understand you want to cut here, but we have serious problems. We have a stronger Soviet Union," and those here or not here made a strong case and prevailed. And a situation where others came and said, "Wait a minute; not Medicare, not Social Security." People said, "Not me."

Does anyone really believe here we will not face similar kinds of challenges? And the difference is that it will not be that easy to change now because it is written into the organic law of the country, an economic idea, a theory? Again, I do not fault, necessarily, President Reagan for having tried an idea. I think we need to do that, but not to write them into the Constitution.

In fact, to his credit, to President Reagan's credit, there was a lot of pressure on him to push for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. As most people know, maybe to the disappointment of some, it was not really pushed. I suspect, President Reagan had serious doubts and concerns about changing the Constitution of the United States to incorporate economic ideas from people whom he trusted and liked and believed in, but had his doubts about whether or not we ought to incorporate their ideas into the most fundamental document that outlines the principles and the values of our Nation.

So, for those reasons, Madam President, I have serious reservations. I am willing to try some of the ideas that people have suggested. My colleague from Texas said maybe we just ought to cut across the board 3 percent.

I have my real suspicions about that approach, but it is an idea. And if we have 51 votes here and there is a majority in the House, it might be tried. If it did not work, it could be changed. I hope we will not want to incorporate that idea into the Constitution of the United States. It is economic theory. This is not a science. This is speculation.

I am reminded of Harry Truman's wonderful old line that he wished he could find a one-armed economist, someone who talked straight to him, instead of saying, on the one hand, one idea and, on the other, something else. Economics is full of theories. No one can say with absolute certainty anything. If that was not the case, we would have many more millionaires in the country. Economists talk about the projections of the market and others trust it will work out that way.

The point is, working Americans end up paying an awful bill when we substitute theories, gimmicks and cosmetic changes in law for good old courage and political will. At the end of the day, no matter how many times you change the Constitution, we are going to have to confront it. American workers will have to pay when we dodge and weave to get around the balanced budget amendment.

Our Federal budget is a highly complex document, and we necessarily rely on projections to forecast spending and taxes. To preserve the integrity of the budget process, I think we should strive to keep politics as much as possible out of those projections and economic calculations.

I will point out again that the potential for political abuse is huge, in my view. Last year, Stanley Collender, the director of Federal budget policy for Price Waterhouse, illustrated how effective altering such projections could be. Collender estimated a 1 percentage point drop in unemployment projections would reduce projected deficits by $37 billion the first year and $57 billion the next. To paraphrase and modify the words of our late colleague, Everett Dirksen, of Illinois, a percentage point here and a percentage point there and pretty soon you are talking about, of course, real money.

There is already some disturbing evidence that the authors of gimmickry are abroad, surviving and doing well in the land. The distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, and some others, have said they want to change the Consumer Price Index, which measures inflation, as a way of trying to cut spending and increase revenues. These advocates of the so-called "contract" know that their promises simply do not add up. They cannot cut taxes, increase defense spending and balance the budget without draconian spending cuts, cuts they so far have been unable to spell out.

So we already see people resorting to some of the gimmicks I worry about if this constitutional amendment is adopted to get the job done. One of the first was to try and cook the books with changes in the technical calculation of the CPI.

I think there is a legitimate debate in the country as to whether or not the inflation figure is too high or too low. A lot of very sound economists debate that point. That is a legitimate discussion, and, in fact, if it has been too high, it can be brought down, then it seems to me we ought to examine that thoroughly and do so. But any changes must be based on sound economic reasons, not political ones.

The distinguished Speaker, as my colleagues no doubt have heard, threatened to cut off the funding of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, not exactly what you would call a partisan agency or organization in town, within 30 days if they did not get it right with regard to inflation. I admit, there is a legitimate debate about inflation, but I do not think it serves anyone's interest to be threatening the budget of an independent agency on whom all of us rely to get some indication of what the Consumer Price Index ought to be. That is what I worry about.

When people say, "What do you mean by gimmicks," that is what I worry about. I worry about people beginning to fool with the numbers to make it all come out right and yet, at the end of the day it is otherwise and, of course, we are faced with terrible, terrible problems. So I worry about the gimmicks being used.

Senator DORGAN, Senator HARKIN and I offered a sense-of-the-Senate amendment in this body that simply stated that the CPI changes ought not to be politicized and economists ought to look at this and give us their sound judgment. The amendment was rejected, unfortunately. But I hope that my colleagues will discourage anyone threatening the budgets of agencies because we do not like the numbers we see.

Another effort recently to monkey with the books goes by the name of dynamic scoring. Dynamic scoring would provide cover for Members of Congress whose economic plans for the country simply do not add up. They draw up a budget that balances on paper but bounces in the real world. This dynamic scoring idea is to try and put the most favorable light on tax cuts.

I think it is important that we have accurate projections of what changes a tax cut may create. I recall opposing the tax cut on luxury automobiles and boats a few years ago. Those who offered that proposal projected there would be great revenue gains. It turned out quite the opposite. In fact, those provisions helped to destroy the boating industry in my part of the country. But they had rosy projections about revenues we were going to gain.

Again, I think it is important that as Members of Congress, before we vote, we ought to have some idea about what the projections are apt to be in these areas. But do I think we ought to incorporate it as part of the budget process? Should we not, in fact, be more conservative as we look at these matters, hope they turn out better, hope that they will, in fact, produce the revenues?

I never had anybody come to my office and say, "You know, Senator, I would like you to support this tax cut and, by the way, let me tell you something, it is really going to cost the taxpayers some money."

Everyone who ever has come to my office in 14 years here with a tax-cut proposal in mind has promised me—promised me—that this was going to produce revenues. In some cases they have. In many cases they have. But, not in all.

So when we are looking at how to score tax cuts, I would think it is in our collective best interests here to look at it with the most conservative point of view in mind. If it does a lot better, we are all winners, but if we project it is going to produce some fantastic results and it does not, then you have run right back into the problem I am talking about.

So, again, I think we have to be very, very careful as we look at these gimmicks. Hence, I come back to the point of why I am concerned about incorporating in the Constitution of the United States conclusions, demands that we will then be determined in our own way to try and reach through efforts that will be less than candid or up front with the American people.

Going beyond such narrow projections in an attempt to measure the impact of tax changes on the overall economy is very difficult. If we are going to get into the game, we can just as easily measure dynamic effects in education, I suppose, or job training.

I know there are those here who make the case that if we invest in education that we will get returns to the country. In health care, you can make a strong case, I suppose, that if we put all the money needed to eradicate some of the major diseases in the country, that would be a real net gainer for us in terms of the budget.

I do not know anybody who would want to accept the notion that if we invest x amount of the taxpayers' money to cure a particular disease, that we ought to score that as a great savings to the American public. The same thinking ought to be applied when we talk about tax cuts. As much as we may hope that they will produce the desired results, if that becomes a part of the budget process, then I think we do ourselves a great disservice.

The argument is often used that balanced budget requirements have successfully imposed fiscal discipline on our State governments. But the evidence on this is unclear as well. Gov. Lowell Weicker, a former Member of this body, testified in 1992 that Connecticut's $1 billion deficit came to pass in our State despite a balanced budget law that had been on the books for 53 years. The Constitution said balance the budget and yet we had, because of dreadful economic conditions, a $1 billion deficit in our State. All of the language in the Constitution did not change the economic realities.

Many States, of course, use creative budgeting now to comply with their constitutional requirements. Clever tools include: Delaying payments to suppliers. That happens all throughout the country.

Accelerating tax collections. How many times have we heard that used?

Shifting programs off budget. That is a great gimmick we use. Well, we will not count it as part of the budget. That is off budget. Somehow, miraculously, it does not end up in our accounting. Even though we are in the red, it has been pushed to a new category so it does not fit into the budgetary requirements.

The gimmick of choice for Governor Whitman of New Jersey has been delaying State contributions to employee pension plans—it is legal and it certainly saves money in the short term. But at some point a future Governor, a future legislature is going to have to belly up and pay those costs, and the taxpayers are going to have to pay. So you get a rosy picture in the short term but the reality is you are faced with those expenditures down the road.

Governor Whitman and others have also taken a lesson from the Federal playbook by shifting costs to more local units of government. In New Jersey there is going to be a State income tax cut of some $290, close to $300. Simultaneously, property taxes are going up in New Jersey about $1,000, a little more than that—roughly $1,000.

Now, it is great news that State income taxes are getting reduced, but if, simultaneously, property taxes are going up almost four times that amount, a taxpayer is a net loser. They may see headlines that read, "State income taxes cut." You shift the costs to the towns; the property taxes go up; and you the taxpayers are net losers.

I do not think people are fooled by that in this country. Once again, we will have engaged in the kind of gimmickry people so detest and makes them so angry. We will have failed to confront head on the problems of getting our fiscal house in order.

So, Madam President, if we pass this constitutional amendment, I fear we are going to borrow some of the clever tactics that have been used at the State level. If we mimic their balanced budget requirements, we may also mimic their tricks of getting around them. The balanced budget amendment is, of course, the grand gimmick that would spawn 100 lesser ones, I fear.

The amendment itself is a statement that we do not have the will to make the tough choices. If we did, we would not be confronting ourselves with changing the organic law of the country—if we did face up and do it.

Let me point out here that for the first time now in almost 4 decades we have had 3 consecutive years of deficit reduction. The last President to submit a balanced budget was Jimmy Carter, and the last Congress and President to achieve a balanced budget was Lyndon Johnson in 1969.

Now, if we can get back on track and keep reducing our deficits, create incentives for growth and for people to work, make the kind of intelligent investments that reduce long-term costs—then I think we can continue down that path and achieve the desired results.

I would suggest to my colleagues and those who are listening that merely writing something into the Constitution, making it sort of a New Year's wish list, does not get the job done. Why not add, as I have said before, the eradication of ignorance, poverty, disease; all of these are desirable goals.

If we are going to turn the Constitution into nothing more than a wish list, then we devalue the very document that we have relied on for 200 years. It has only been amended 27 times in 11,000 efforts, by the way—11,000 amendments to the Constitution since 1789. We have gone through a Civil War, a Great Depression, two World Wars. We did not find it necessary when we confronted every contemporary crisis to resort to the Constitution as a way of solving the problem. We faced up to them and made the tough choices. Our predecessors did the job when confronted with crises that were far more serious than this one, as bad as it is.

So I would urge my colleagues—and I know there are those who are weighing the benefits and the liabilities of approaching our fiscal problems by amending the Constitution of the United States—people do want to see us get our fiscal house in order, but I think they would like us to do it the old-fashioned way. That is, to make the cuts and to encourage the kind of growth that can get the job done, not to wait 7 years and leave it to some future Congresses to grapple with.

Madam President, I urge my colleagues to think hard and long before they go this route. My view is the States will very quickly ratify this constitutional amendment, if it is adopted here. It is very appealing. They will assume that someone at a later time will have to deal with the problem.

The Constitution requires that we vote on the matter, that we do so here. I do not think it is proper or appropriate for us to just hope someone else might protect us and protect the document when we have the opportunity to do it as Members of the Senate.

So I urge rejection of the amendment and hope that we would get about the business of doing the hard work of reducing the cost of Government, to shrink the size of Government, to make the proper investments and to get people back to work. Those are the kinds of things that I think will get us on a better fiscal path than what we have been on for far too long.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, we have had an interesting day here today. We have had a lot of interesting speakers. I particularly want to pay tribute to Senator SIMON and his very extensive and good remarks that he made this morning. A lot of people feel he is a very unlikely person to be leading the fight on the balanced budget amendment, but I feel he is exactly the type of person who should do it because he understands the importance of our national spending decisions and he understands the importance of our taxing decisions and he understands the importance of fairness.

There have been a number of other excellent remarks here today. I would like to pay tribute to each and every person who has spoken today, including persons on the other side. They have raised issues that have been raised before and that we think we have answered before and that we intend to answer throughout this debate.

On the other hand, this has been an orderly and very sophisticated debate thus far. One thing I really want to make clear. That is, regardless of whatever arguments are brought against this amendment, this is the amendment. This is the best we can do. This has been worked out among Republicans and Democrats of good faith. It is the only hope I see for putting a mechanism into the Constitution or into the daily functioning of Congress—a mechanism that we cannot avoid—that might get us to make priority choices among competing programs. It is the only amendment that the House of Representatives has ever seen fit to pass by the requisite two-thirds vote, plus 10. It was a big victory over there. It was something that never happened before. And it took Democrats and Republicans to do it. Almost every Republican voted for it, and we had 72 courageous Democrats who stood up against the majority in their party and voted for it. And only 132 people were against it.

Now, we have an opportunity to do something in the Senate that is absolutely historic. The Senate up to now has been the only body that has passed a balanced budget constitutional amendment by the requisite two-thirds vote until that House vote.

Now, some people have had the temerity to say that the only reason the Senate passed the balanced budget amendment by 69 votes back in 1982 and the only reason we had 63 votes last year was because some in this body voted for it knowing it would not pass the House.

I do not believe that. I believe that people who voted for this voted for it for the right reasons. They voted for it because they knew it was the best we could do. They voted for it because they knew it was a bipartisan consensus amendment, and they voted for it because they knew it would work and they knew it would force Members of Congress to stand up and do what is right for a change.

Now we are down to bait-cutting time. It may take us another 2 or 3 or 4 weeks. I do not care how long it takes. I want this amendment to pass, and I am going to do everything within my power, physical and otherwise, to get this amendment passed. I hope everybody out there in this country will start working with their Senators, help them to realize this is it. This is our best chance to save this country.

I hate to put it that dramatically, but that is what it comes down to, because if we do not do this, those who are concerned about Social Security are really going to have a reason to be concerned because we cannot continue to be the profligate spenders we are and run the huge deficits we do and have the interest rates go up the way they will and lose the jobs we are going to lose and have the interest against the national debt continue to exponentially go higher and higher without hurting Social Security, without hurting Medicaid, without hurting Medicare, without hurting welfare, without hurting veterans' pensions, without hurting everybody's pensions, and without reducing the value of our dollar to the point where all of us are going to have a rough time.

If the United States starts to slide in this way, what about the rest of the world? There will be a worldwide recession or depression like never before. That is going to happen unless we bite the bullet and do what we have to do here.

There is good reason why you cannot amend the Constitution easily or readily. There have only been 27 amendments to the Constitution and most, if not all, of them have been hard fought. But never in history has there been a more important amendment than this one at this particular time. This is the chance for us to do something that could save the country. And it will not happen—and I say this to every citizen of this country—it is not going to happen unless you get mad and you let the Senators in this body know that you want them to adopt this amendment. They need to vote for this and we need 67 votes to do it.

The Founding Fathers made it very tough to amend the Constitution. That is as it should be. This amendment has been through 12 years of very tough treatment, very hard fighting, and very serious intellectual consideration. It is the best we can do.

Everybody here would like to add something or take something away. But sooner or later we have to come down to the conclusion this is the best we can do. We have always looked at anybody's ideas, and we will continue to see if there is some way we could find that will help to satisfy the distinguished Senator from California, Senator FEINSTEIN, and others. But I have to tell my colleagues the more I think about it, the less inclined I am to make a change like that because of the loophole it would be, and because it will not solve the problem for Social Security anyway. The best thing we can do for Social Security is pass a balanced budget amendment that will keep our country strong. It will make us live within our means. It will make us treat budgetary matters in a fiscally responsible manner. That is the best thing we could do for Social Security, because no matter how much you pay people, if the money is worthless, it is not going to buy food or anything else.

There are people today who suffer because of their poor economic situation who rely on Social Security. But they are relatively few, and we have to work on them and try to resolve their problems within our budgetary process. But there are millions who are getting by on Social Security and consider it their life's blood. They are not going to be able to if we do not put this constitutional amendment into the Constitution and force the Congress to live within its means.

How can anybody doubt that the way we spend, the way we increase deficits, the way our interest against the national debt is exponentially rising, that that will affect everybody in this country at some time in the future unless we are forced to get serious about it?

We talk about being serious. We have tried every statutory budget mechanism we possibly can and none of them have worked over time. All of them have failed. This amendment will force us to succeed. It would force us to get serious. It would force us to do the things that have to be done. And that would protect Social Security in the long run.

I do not want to just look at things in the short run. I want to look at them in the long run, and this amendment will help us in the long run. If we put an amendment in that refers to a statute in the Constitution, and try to define in the Constitution what that statute means, I guarantee it will be a loophole through which you can fit any kind of spending program you want. All you have to do is call it "Social Security," call it "the trust fund," or call it whatever fits the language of the statutory reference in the constitutional amendment and that is it, it is over.

I know people are sincere and they are trying to do what is right here. But the place to deal with these issues is in implementing legislation. That is why we have implementing legislation. That is why section 6 says that the Congress has the power to implement this amendment. Through the implementing legislation we can resolve some of these problems and we can resolve them in a way that still forces us to make priority choices among competing programs, and Social Security will always fare well in competition with other spending programs in our budget. I do not think anybody doubts that.

So let us not get into an issue that really is a phony issue. Let us keep constitutional amendments the way they should be. Everybody knows the game here. Everybody knows this amendment is written in a constitutional form. Everybody knows what it is intended to do.

There will always be those who try to play games to get around a constitutional provision they dislike, but if we stand strong and we vote for this and we get it through, I guarantee it will work and it will go a long way toward resolving the problems of this country—which are not being resolved at the current time.

I know the distinguished Senator from Nevada wants to speak, so I yield the floor at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, probably the most famous bank robber of all time was a man by the name of Willie Sutton. After Willie Sutton got out of prison, after having spent many, many years there, he was asked why he robbed banks.

He said, "Because that's where the money is."

Madam President, Social Security is where the money is and that is why we must protect Social Security recipients, whether they be my granddaughters or whether they be me or the millions of people around this country who today depend on Social Security.

The reason we must exempt Social Security from the balanced budget amendment is that is where the money is. This year the surplus in the Social Security fund will be some $70 billion. Shortly after the turn of the century the surplus in the Social Security fund will be $800 billion. I say "will be." It will be if we protect those moneys. If we do not, if we do not set aside those moneys from the balanced budget amendment, when people go to draw their Social Security, when my granddaughters go to draw their Social Security, or my children, there will be no money left. Because that is where the money is and that is how the budget will be balanced.

There is no place else to get the money in those large sums. I offered a year ago on this floor an amendment to the balanced budget amendment that was then on the floor. In that amendment I included capital budgeting; I included as part of the amendment that, if in fact we were in a recession for a period of 3 years, we could waive the balanced budget amendment. Madam President, I have thought about this for the past year and I have come to the conclusion that what I need to do is focus on Social Security. Capital budgeting is important; 3 years of recession are important; but those are to one side. I now am focusing only on Social Security.

As my friend, the senior Senator from Utah, knows, I am going to offer this same amendment again. I am going to offer this amendment with the support of Senators CONRAD, DORGAN, FEINSTEIN, FORD, HEFLIN, HARKIN, GRAHAM of Florida, BAUCUS, and BOXER, and I am sure there will be others. I am doing this because there has been a lot of talk during these past few months about a Contract With America.

I think some of the things that have been focused during these past few months in the Contract With America are important. I have supported the two issues that have come through this body already. But I want to talk today for a few minutes, in preparation for the debate that will take place probably next week when we offer the balanced budget amendment, about the first contract, the real contract of this century with the American people.

That contract was initiated in 1935 during the throes of the Great Depression when Members of this body and Members of the other body together with President Roosevelt got together and said we think we need to make a Social Security contract with the people of America, and they did.

What was that contract all about? It said if you, the employee, pay into a fund along with your employers, during your golden years you can draw retirement, not welfare. You can draw retirement that you have earned, you have paid into this fund. That in fact is what the contract is all about.

Madam President, what we have done is we have taken these moneys that are collected from the employees of America and the employers of America and put them into a trust fund. That word of art "trust fund" means something. It means that you have a very important fiduciary relationship. We, the people, who control this trust fund, have a fiduciary relationship with the people who will draw money from that trust fund, a relationship that we must do what we can to protect the integrity of that trust fund.

I practiced law before coming to the Congress. I had a trust fund set up for my clients, a client trust fund. That money that I collected on behalf of my clients I could not make my car payments with, I could not buy myself a suit, I could not pay the law firm rent or the rent at home with any moneys out of that trust fund. If I in fact did that, I would be subject to disciplinary action by the State bar association and possibly by the criminal prosecutors in the State of Nevada. I could go to jail for violating the trust that I had in protecting my clients' money.

The term "trust fund" that I used as a practicing attorney is not the same connotation as trust fund for Social Security. It is identical. We have an obligation to protect that trust fund.

My friend from Utah, the senior Senator, is someone that I have great respect for. But on his statements regarding Social Security, he and I disagree. I recognize, as I think we all should and certainly the people within the sound of my voice should appreciate the fact, that Social Security does not contribute one penny to the Federal deficit. Social Security, as I have already explained briefly here, is running in excess, a surplus. It does not contribute to the deficit. In fact, it has been used to erase the deficit in years past. We worked very hard to have the Social Security trust funds not be part of the general revenues of this country. We set up a separate fund for Social Security. We set up a separate agency. Social Security does not contribute to the deficit.

We have heard statements, rightfully so, that the American public supports the balanced budget amendment. They do. Eighty percent of the people in Texas, Utah—I see my friend from Ohio coming onto the floor—and Nevada. It is about the same all over. About 80 percent of the people support the balanced budget amendment. But when those same people are asked, "Do you want to balance the budget by taking Social Security surplus?" the answer is 70 percent "no." Only 10 percent of the original people who say they want a balanced budget amendment supported it if you say you are going to use Social Security. That is the original Contract With America of the century. That is the program that people want protected. They know Social Security is not welfare. This part of the Social Security fund that we are conducting deals with old age benefits. It does not deal with Medicare. It deals with the old age portion of that fund.

There have been statements made on this floor that the amendment creates a large loophole. I respectfully submit that if we could argue this case to a jury of our peers, we would win because it does not create a loophole. Anything that changes the long-term actuarial plan of Social Security is subject to a 60-vote point of order before this body. If someone wanted to place education or aid to families with dependent children into Social Security, it would not work. You would have to get 60 votes. If you use that reasoning, Madam President, you can look at the amendment as it is written. The amendment as it is written—the one that is before this body now—has exceptions. Congress may waive the provisions of this article, says section 5, for a number of reasons. One reason is it can be waived if there is a military conflict in which an imminent and serious military threat to national security is declared. Does that mean that, if this were in effect, taking the troops into Haiti would mean that we could waive the balanced budget amendment? It does not say to what extent it can be waived. It does not say it can be waived for the actual cost of the imminent danger or whether it could be waived to the tune of billions of dollars more.

So let us stick with the facts. I do not think that this body would do that. I do not think that we would say that the event taking place in Haiti, or Rwanda, would be such that we could waive the balanced budget amendment that was in effect to the tune of billions of dollars. Having Social Security exempted from the balanced budget amendment does not—I repeat, does not—create a loophole. This is one of those figleaves that is being waived around this body so often on this amendment.

A point of order, of course, means that the truth would be brought to bear on any form of legislative shenanigans. That is why the 60-vote point of order is in effect. My amendment is intended to safeguard an easily identifiable and narrowly defined program.

There have been those in this body who have said, "We will take care of this in implementing legislation." Let me explain to my colleagues and to the American public what this means. This means that there are people who recognize the danger of going where Willie Sutton said you need to go if you need money; that is, where it is. And that is why he went to the bank. The only place we can go is Social Security. But there are those who tell me that we are going to take care of this with implementing legislation. How? "Well, we are going to pass a law when the balanced budget amendment passes that says we cannot touch Social Security." Boy, we should not fall for that one. I know that the senior groups in this country will not fall for that. The AARP and others are not going to fall for that because they know that a law which we could pass this morning—it is now 5 o'clock approximately in Washington, DC—this morning in Washington, DC, we could pass a law, and we could pass another law to take the place of that one at 5 o'clock this afternoon. We could pass a law and pass another one to take the place of it that same day. Implementing legislation will not protect Social Security. We could pass implementing legislation this year and repeal it next year. It simply is no way to protect Social Security.

Implementing legislation is another one of the figleaves that is so transparent that you should not wear it because it will not work. If you oppose raising the Social Security trust fund, you should support the simple amendment that I am going to offer with my colleagues which expressly prevents any looting of the Social Security trust fund.

I was on this floor a year or so ago with Senator MOYNIHAN, the senior Senator from New York. We were talking about the unfairness of collecting Social Security taxes, withholding taxes, when the moneys were not going to Social Security; they were going to help relieve the deficit.

During the colloquy between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Nevada, we talked about the Social Security trust fund, and we talked about maybe it really was not a trust fund; maybe it had become a slush fund. Well, it has not become a slush fund yet. But if we allow the balanced budget amendment to pass and do not protect Social Security, it will no longer be a trust fund, it will be a slush fund.

Again, I remind everyone here that people who are trying to balance the budget will go to where the money is; that is, Social Security. Remember, we are not talking about surpluses of a few thousand a year, a few million a year, a few billion a year; we are talking about surpluses that, after the turn of the century, will be in the trillions of dollars. Why do we need that much money in the trust fund? Because there is going to come a period of time when the outflow from the trust fund will be far in excess of what is coming into it. We need those surpluses.

We have been told that placing a statute in the Constitution is unprecedented. Well, Madam President, it is unprecedented. My friend, the senior Senator from Connecticut, said it the way it is. We have had 11,000 attempts to amend the Constitution of the United States. We have succeeded less than 30 times. This is the first time that we have tried to do an amendment to the Constitution fixing fiscal policy. So if we are talking about fiscal policy, should we not be concerned about one of the largest fiscal elements of our society, namely Social Security? Of course, the answer is yes. And we need to place it not in a statute; it would be part of the constitutional amendment. It would lose its statutory life and become part of the Constitution of the United States.

We also certainly should not allow talk about future generations being protected if we lump Social Security into the balanced budget amendment—that is, that Social Security will be easy picking, prime pickings to balance the budget. That will not protect future generations. Quite the contrary.

This debate is not about senior citizens versus children; this debate is about children who will become senior citizens and need their Social Security benefits. This is not an amendment that protects old people in America today. This is an amendment that protects all people in America today, because Social Security benefits are for the young and for the old because, if we are lucky, we all get old.

In effect, safeguarding Social Security in this trust fund means that Government will not be able to continue to borrow from this trust fund. Ending this robbing Peter-to-pay-Paul practice will allow us to maintain the trust fund for future generations of Americans.

Madam President, we have also heard last week on this floor that the Seniors Coalition supports passing the balanced budget amendment and does not support my amendment. When I first heard of this organization, I was running for office. I was very concerned that a senior organization, after my work on the Aging Committee and doing a lot of things over the years for senior citizens, would not be helping me. Why would they oppose me? Well, what I have come to realize, Madam President, is that the Seniors Coalition has a history of employing exaggerations and falsehoods—which is a nice word for lies—because they want to make money from senior citizens by scaring them.

According to a 1993 article in the National Journal—the founders of this particular group have sent letters out against most Democratic candidates running for public office on the Federal level. The National Journal said that the founders of this particular group have been under investigation for fraud by the FBI, two U.S. attorneys, New York State's attorney general, and the Postal Inspector. In 1980, Richard Viguerie, father of the direct mailing system for the Republican Party, or certainly one of the founding fathers of that organization, and a man by the name of Dan Alexander, started the taxpayers education lobby to raise money through appeals of school prayer and other conservative policies. In 1986, Dan Alexander was indicted for extorting kickbacks from school construction projects and he served 4 years in prison for doing this.

In 1989, the Seniors Coalition was formed by his wife, a woman by the name of Fay Alexander, with help from Mr. Viguerie. In 1992, the coalition claimed to become independent of the taxpayers education lobby, though there remained a contract that paid Mrs. Alexander $20,000 a month, money seniors sent this organization, and paid her husband about $3,000 a month for consulting fees. Remember, this is the man that is in jail. In 1992, the board consisted of Fay Alexander and a business associate. For its first 3 years in operation, the coalition's president was Susan Alexander, the couple's teenage daughter. Mr. Alexander told the New York Times—and I am sure this is an understatement—that he hired his daughter because it was hard to find outsiders of any stature to serve on the board in view of his record. The coalition now has outside directors.

I will not go into a lot more detail. But I do not think it would be a good idea to cite the Seniors Coalition, and we should not base any vote in this body on what they do or do not do. I may talk a lot more about them later if we hear a lot more about the Seniors Coalition, because I have a lot more to say in that regard.

Let me say, Madam President, that the balanced budget amendment is something that should pass—if Social Security is protected. If Social Security is not protected, everyone should be very, very cautious and afraid in this body. But the fear generated from here should be for the people in America, those 70 percent of Americans who say you should not balance the budget on the backs of Social Security recipients, because if we do not exempt Social Security, as Willie Sutton has said, "We will go where the money is," and we will balance the budget, which will be fairly easy to do if you use Social Security. That is what will happen, and that is too bad.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DEWINE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DEWINE] is recognized.

Mr. DEWINE. Madam President, I rise today as a person who has spent the better part of the last 4 years traveling my great State and listening to the concerns of the people of Ohio. One thing I have found is that people are more skeptical than they have ever been before. I have really heard it everywhere I went. Today, people measure politicians not by the promises that they have made, but rather by the promises that they have kept. Empty promises simply no longer work. The people of this country want concrete action, not just promises.

Madam President, in 1992, people voted for change. But then there was not enough change, and so people did not see the concrete results. And then in 1994, they voted for change again. I ran in 1992. I ran in 1994, and I can tell you that people are fed up with promises. They want change and they want action. For the American people, nothing symbolizes Congress' inability to change, to back up words with action, more than Congress' unwillingness to balance the Federal budget.

Despite all the talk, year after year, Congress continues to run deficit after deficit. And if it is true that nothing symbolizes people's perception of Congress' inability to change more than our failure to balance the budget, I think it is also true that nothing will do more to restore people's faith in Congress, in the Government, in the country, than by passing a constitutional amendment that will mandate and compel a balanced budget.

The balanced budget amendment to the Constitution does represent fundamental change. This, Madam President, is the change the American people demanded, demanded in 1992 and again in 1994.

Over the last couple of days, we have had a somewhat academic debate about the balanced budget amendment. And I expect this debate will go on for a few more days, a few more weeks. The opponents of the balanced budget amendment tell us that we do not really need a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. They say all we really need is the political will.

Well, Madam President, I suppose that is right. I suppose that is technically true. But is there really anyone in this Chamber, is there really any Americans who believe that Congress, without a balanced budget amendment, will balance the budget? Nobody I talk to believes that.

Let us do a reality check. Let us look at the past.

Madam President, we have not had a balanced budget since 1969—1969, the year I graduated from high school. We have had a deficit in 5 of the last 63 years. When we had a Republican President, we had a deficit. When we had a Democrat President, we had a deficit. When we had a Democrat Senate, we had a deficit. When we had a Republican Senate, we also had a deficit.

The reason the American people, 80 percent of them in a recent poll, support the balanced budget amendment is that they simply do not believe Congress will ever balance the budget any other way. And I must say, Madam President, the past would indicate the American people are absolutely correct. For 25 straight years we have not balanced the budget; 25 budgets in a row.

Madam President, what are the chances, without a balanced budget amendment, without the discipline that this will impose on this body, on the House, on the Congress, on the Government, what are the chances in the 26th year or 27th year or 28th year, 30th year, 35th year, we will not continue to do what Congress has done for the last quarter of a century and that is not balance the budget?

Madam President, a lot of people say that Americans are cynical today. I am not sure that is really true. But Americans have watched Congress try to balance the budget in each of the last 25 years and Congress has failed every time.

What the American people are saying is pretty simple. "Let's try something else. Let's try something else and see if that works."

Madam President, I do not call that cynicism. I call it realism.

You know, I do not think any of us who support the balanced budget amendment are really happy that we have to do this. It is a last resort. But really it is our only realistic hope. And I believe that we have to do it.

(Mr. THOMAS assumed the chair.)

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, the opponents like to talk about how the balanced budget amendment is a threat to our children; that it would devastate the investments we need to make in our children's future. Let us look at this and let us look at this argument because it is a very serious argument.

Mr. President, the word "cynical" might be the most appropriate way to characterize that particular argument. To run up a colossal mountain of debt, $4 trillion and rising, a debt that threatens to leave our children's generation bankrupt is bad enough. But to use these very same children as an excuse for not biting the bullet on the budget deficit is just plain wrong.

Again, Mr. President, let us face the facts. If we do not pass the balanced budget amendment, we simply will not have the money for investment in our children.

We are already paying over $235 billion a year in interest on the debt. As my colleague, the Senator from Illinois, pointed out earlier today, that is eight times what we today invest in education. It is 50 times what we invest in job training. It is 145 times what we pay for early childhood immunizations.

Every year we add to this mountain of debt and every year we are committing more of tomorrow's resource to pay for Congress' failures of today.

What does the future look like for children if we do not balance the budget? Well, let me tell you. This, Mr. President, is what it would mean to continue with business as usual.

If we continue with business as usual, next year the Federal budget deficit is set to start growing again. By the year 2003, just 8 years from now, spending on entitlements and interest alone, entitlements and interest alone, will exceed 70 percent of the whole Federal budget. If you take out defense, it leaves you just 15 percent of the budget for all the discretionary spending and domestic needs—15 percent out of entire budget.

That means less than 15 percent for education—and these are cumulative for everything—less than 15 percent for education, for job training, for the Women, Infants, and Children Program, the WIC Program, for Head Start, for drug treatment, for employment training, for the environment, for housing, for all the other programs that help the American people here at home—just 15 percent of the budget for all these programs, all these programs, Mr. President, combined.

And by the year 2012, just 9 years later, we will be looking back on that 15 percent as the absolute golden age of investment in our domestic needs because by that time, by the year 2012, just 17 years from today, there will be nothing left in the budget for these social needs—zero; no money for children—unless we change the direction we are going in. Every last red cent in the Federal budget will go to entitlements and interest payments. And 2012 is a year that has significance for my wife and I and for many other people, I am sure, because just a year before that, our grandson Albert, we hope, will graduate from high school; our daughter Anna will be in her first year of college—2012.

This is the human cost of Albert and Anna, all our children and our grandchildren, will have to pay because of Congress' unwillingness to change.

Mr. President, to hide these facts and then to hide behind these very children who will be hurt the most if we do not act is worse than absurd. I find it unconscionable.

The American people no longer, Mr. President, care what we say. They are tired of excuses, evasions, rhetoric. They do not care if some of us say we can balance the budget. What they care about is what we do. They are not listening to what we say. They are watching what we are about to do.

To say, Mr. President, that they are not happy with what Congress has done in recent years would certainly be a severe understatement. In the name of our future, in the name of our children, they are demanding change.

Mr. President, I will vote to create the change. I will vote in favor of the balanced budget amendment. It is a vote for less government, instead of more government. It is a vote for responsible government, instead of a runaway spending machine.

It is, Mr. President, the last hope of the American people for fiscal sanity and long-term solvency. This is the greatest gift we as Members of Congress can give to the next generation of Americans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have been interested and I want to personally thank the distinguished Senator from Ohio for the excellent remarks he has made today. He has brought this whole matter into focus when he talks about the effects on his children and his grandchildren. I feel exactly the same. Elaine and I have 6 children, and our 15th grandchild is on the way. We have 14 now, but the 15th will be here in a couple of months, and who knows when there might be some others. We are not sure.

The fact of the matter is we are very concerned about them. I am concerned about all the children, and grandchildren. The Senator from Ohio makes a good point. There will not be child care moneys if we do not get things under control. There will not be job training moneys. Forget about Job Corps. What about welfare? What money we have will not be worth anything. What about Social Security, if money becomes devalued through inflation and, therefore, worthless? How are people going to live? How are people going to live? There are people today in this affluent society who barely get by. Can you imagine what it will be like for the unlucky ones of the future? Such things should not happen. We ought to do something about it. But I will say, it will be everybody who will have trouble getting by if we keep going the way we are going.

I am not just using scare tactics. It is true. Everybody knows it. People feel it. This is the first time in the history of this country where parents are fearful that their children will not have lives as good as they did, will not have opportunities as good as they have. The first time in history where parents feel that their children will not have the great opportunities for growth and advancement that they had. The reason that is so is because Congress does not have the fiscal mechanism in place to force Congress to do what is right.

I want to thank the distinguished Senator from Ohio for his excellent remarks, and the other Senators today, especially our Senators who are here for the first time. They are here because of this issue, in part. People out there know this country is in trouble. They are here because people wanted them to vote for the balanced budget amendment. They are here because they make the difference.

Each Senator here makes a difference, including those who voted for the balanced budget amendment before. But these new Senators make up the difference from last year. We lost by four votes last time. Four votes. We had seven people who were here who voted with us last time who are now no longer here. That is 11 votes. We have picked up 11 new Senators, all of whom are on the Republican side and are going to vote for this balanced budget amendment. All of them were elected on the basis that they would vote for this balanced budget amendment. All of them are part of this revolution in our society, not a Republican revolution, but a revolution of people who are sick and tired of the way things are, of the status quo, who want a balanced budget constitutional amendment, for the express purpose of saving this country. Well, we have such an amendment here. It is not perfect. But nothing around here ever is. It is as perfect as it can be, as developed by both parties.

Now, let me just say a few words in response to the comments of my colleague from Nevada. And I do respect Senator REID from Nevada. He is a very dear friend and colleague. I have a great deal of feeling and affection for him. He said the Social Security trust fund will be raided if the balanced budget amendment is passed. That could not be more wrong. It just could not be more wrong. It will be raided if we devalue the dollar and make the dollars that are paid out in Social Security benefits worthless. And that is where we are headed if we do not have a balanced budget amendment.

The Social Security trust fund is not where the money is. This so-called surplus the distinguished Senator from California was showing us earlier with that big loop in the chart that she had, that money is not in a trust fund. Why this year's $70 billion surplus will be used to buy Treasury bonds. There is no stash of cash waiting to be raided. It is already going to be taken out of that trust fund. And there is going to be a nice little Treasury bond piece of paper saying "guaranteed by the Government of the United States of America." And we will take that $70 billion trust fund surplus and we are going to spend it on general budget items and spending programs.

That money is gone. There is no question about it. There is no trust fund full of money. There is a trust fund of paper promises that will be valuable only if we pass the balanced budget amendment and get this country's spending profligacy under control. But that big pile of paper will be valueless if we do not.

The only way we will get spending under control is to pass this balanced budget amendment. There are some who think even if we do this we might not get there. I was looking at James Q. Wilson's article yesterday in the Wall Street Journal. He is one of America's leading political scientists. He is one who was never for the balanced budget amendment, but boy he is now. He said, in essence, "I do not like it, but it is the only hope we have." I commend his reasons for now supporting the balanced budget amendment to my colleagues, and ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Jan. 30, 1995]

A BAD IDEA WHOSE TIME HAS COME

(By James Q. Wilson)

For yours I have been skeptical of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution for all of the reasons that most of my colleagues in political science and many member of Congress so clearly express. Now I am a reluctant convert, not because I think the arguments against it wrong but because I think them beside the point.

There is no economic case for always having a budget that is balanced or in surplus. One doesn't have to be a Keynesian to know the occasional desirability of stimulating the economy by spending more than one takes in or the necessity of going into debt to make capital improvements. There are even a few economists who claim that, if we do our accounts properly, the budget is already balanced.

The problem with the economic objections to balancing the budget is that they fail to take into account the changed character of the American people and their representatives. From the time of George Washington to the time of Dwight Eisenhower, budgets were almost never in deficit except in wartime. But in those days the public expected rather little from Washington. They did not expect a federal solution to every problem—drugs, crime, education, medical care, and the environment. Their representatives generally believed that deficit spending was wrong, not simply imprudent, and to vote for it was to risk not only electoral retaliation but public censure.

It is astonishing that this culture—one of limited federal responsibilities and stringent fiscal prudence—should have survived for so long. Politics offers citizens this deal: Vote yourself big benefits now and let your grandchildren (or better yet, somebody else's grandchildren) pay for them. If you let the government borrow the money, you can get something for nothing. Yet for more than a century and a half, we turned down that deal. As a result, the annual deficit amounted, as late as 1955, to only 6% of federal outlays. Thirty-five years later, it was 18%.

James Buchanan, the Nobel laureate in economics, concluded from his study of our fiscal history that something akin to a Victorian ethos had restrained our spending. Now that ethos is gone, and with looming deficits in Social Security and Medicare, matters can only get worse.

There are serious political objections to the amendment as well. Won't Congress somehow cook the books so as to comply with the letter of the amendment but not with its purpose? Or if it doesn't cook the books, what is to prevent Congress from simply appropriating in excess of revenues, no matter what it had earlier resolved to do?

For years Congress found ways to circumvent or ignore the Gramm-Rudman balanced-budget resolution.

And if Congress evades the amendment in any of these ways, how will it be enforced? Will a taxpayer sue the secretary of the Treasury for writing checks based on deficit appropriations? It is not obvious he or she would have standing in the courts. And even if a court heard the case, what would it do? Send U.S. marshals to arrest the Budget Committees? Issue an injunction to shut down government?

Many members of Congress have made these points publicly and many more make them privately. But notice what they are saying: You cannot trust us to do what you, the public, wants. Your amendment will not give us any backbone. We will evade and cheat. Therefore, do not enact such an amendment so that we can ignore your will with complete impunity.

And even those members of Congress who say they will comply with it are unwilling to divulge what cuts they would make or what taxes they would raise in order to comply. Critics love to play the Social Security trump card: "You won't discuss Social Security or other entitlements, and yet you say you favor a balanced budget. Shame!"

Now we are at the heart of the matter, face to face with the reason why the balanced budget amendment is a bad idea whose time has come. Congressmen are elected by voters who want lower taxes, no deficit, and continued (or even more) spending. Almost every poll since the 1960s shows the same pattern.

The public has inconsistent preferences; the public wants something for nothing. Of course members of Congress will conceal their preferences, pretend that the public need make no hard choices, and take Social Security and Medicare off the table. To do otherwise is to court electoral disaster. Some leaders will try to finess the issue by saying to the public that it can have lower taxes, no deficit, and more spending if only Washington would eliminate "waste, fraud, and abuse." It was never true, and I doubt many people still believe it.

Voters are the problem. The balanced budget amendment is aimed at them, not at politicians. When it is in place, the electoral logic changes. Now challengers can run against incumbents by saying, not simply that they didn't cut spending or didn't fund a popular program, but that they violated the Constitution. The enforcement of this amendment will be political, not legal. It will be an imperfect enforcement, but it will probably make a difference.

For one thing, it will put Social Security (and Medicare and everything else) back on the table. Congressmen will have to go to the public and say something like this: "What do you want, I cannot deliver. I wish I could. But you have to make some choices so that I can make some. What do you want most—lower taxes, more spending, or no deficit? I can't kid you anymore because the Constitution—and my opponent—won't let me."

I am not sure what the public will say. But whatever it is, it will be an improvement over its current free-lunch mentality.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Social Security trust fund will continue to invest any surplus in Treasury bills from here on in. We will have that mound of paper that will be worth something only if America is viable, but it will be worth nothing if we keep going the way we are going. And we will have sold Social Security recipients down the river. We can avert such problems only if we adopt and comply with the balanced budget amendment.

I cannot, for the life of me, understand why people are so upset on the other side of this floor about the consensus balanced budget amendment. They know that if we do not do something to put a fiscal mechanism in place which will cause us to make priority choices among competing programs and get spending under control, that those trust fund Treasury bonds are not going to be worth the paper they are written on.

In the year 2015 the trust fund will start to draw down this so-called surplus by redeeming those Treasury bills. The only way to protect those funds is through a balanced budget amendment. If we did not pass this amendment we will not balance the budget. If we did not balance the budget, the Federal Government will have a tough, if not totally impossible job redeeming those bonds.

In fact, if we do not pass this amendment and balance the budget, it is highly likely that the Federal debt will be monetized. Now, this will only reduce the value of the Treasury bonds held by the trust fund, but by monetizing the debt it means that we print more money, inflate the economy, reduce the value of our money, which might go down to zero, and we pay off the debt with worthless money, lose our credit standing in the world community in the process, and trigger a worldwide depression.

Now, that is where we are headed. Make no bones about it. The only way to protect the Social Security trust fund and the Treasury bonds it buys, is to pass this amendment and balance the budget.

Now, Senator REID says we must exempt Social Security because what is where the money is. That just is not true. That is where the Treasury bonds are. There is no money there. There are only IOU's which will be valueless if we do not get spending under control.

How do we protect Social Security? We who support this amendment know how, through good economics, and through a balanced budget amendment. It is the best protection we could give them. The Social Security trust fund is not where the money is. There is no money there. There are only IOU's there.

We have already used the money to pay for other bills of the Federal Government and other spending items. The reason why we need a balanced budget amendment and why it should apply to Social Security is to ensure that the money is there to pay the IOU's to our seniors when those IOU's come due, and that those dollars they receive, when they get them, are worth something. Without a balanced budget amendment, there is some question whether we could repay our debt to our seniors, or whether the dollars will be worth anything at all. And Mr. President, the trust fund itself will run a deficit in the future. And if it is allowed to run a deficit through an exemption in the balanced budget amendment there will be no incentive to balance the trust fund. But if the balanced budget amendment applies to Social Security, the Constitution will require Congress to have the money to pay our retirees. Real money. Not IOU's.

Not paper promises. Not a mountain of mere good intentions.

Well, I think it is very important that we understand these issues. If in the zeal to protect Social Security, such a proposed exemption defeats the balanced budget amendment, these folks in their zeal have will have actually killed Social Security, sooner or later.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada and I disagree on the merits of this issue, on the best way to protect Social Security, seniors, and our country's future. Let me reiterate that I believe the only way to assure that our Government is able to meet its obligation to future retirees is through the balanced budget amendment. It will help us ensure that we will have dollars that have worth, and that we have a nation and economy and a government that is worth passing on to our future generations.

That is what we are fighting for here. That is why I am spending this time and have for the last 18 years—now on the 19th year—spending my time trying to see if we can bring both sides together in a way that benefits this country, if not save the country.

This amendment is the best we can do, and it is as perfect as we can make it. It has bipartisan support. I really applaud those Democrats who are willing to stand up for it. There are not very many of them, but we hope that there are enough to pass this balanced budget amendment. We only need 15 to 17 of them out of the 47 that are here. I do not think that is too much to ask. And, frankly, there are courageous Democrats who are standing with us on the floor each day, like Senator SIMON, Senator HEFLIN, and others who are willing to pay the price to get this job done.

I just want to personally pay tribute to them and tell them how much I personally appreciate it. I really appreciate those 72 Democrats over in the House who had the guts to stand up against the majority in their party, had the guts to stand up and do what is right for this country.

Mr. President, I just want to make it very clear to everyone listening that if the American people do not get involved in this, if they do not realize that this is really bait-cutting time, if you folks out there do not start calling your Senators and letting them know how badly you feel about this and they had better support the balanced budget amendment, we may very well—not get this job done.

Right now I believe that we have the votes to get it done. I believe that Senators, when they are really faced with the realities of what is really happening, and what will happen if we do not adopt this amendment at this time—this one rare time in history—after the House for the first time passed the balanced budget amendment, if we do not get it done, it is going to be a disaster for this country. I think they will vote for this amendment. We are all counting on it. But they will not do it if the American people do not let them know they want this done.

This is the time. We can no longer afford to spend beyond our means. We can no longer afford to not face the music. We can no longer afford not to enact implementing legislation pursuant to a balanced budget amendment that gets us on a glidepath to a balanced budget in the year 2002, and we can no longer afford the phony arguments against this.

For those who say, "Well, you ought to outline every cut you are going to make," that is the most phony argument of all. It is ridiculous. It was said earlier that it is like trying to tell the weather each year 7 years from now.

The fact of the matter is, during all the years of Democratic control of both bodies, they have never been able to come up in these last 26 years with a balanced budget. Not once. And they know and we know that it is going to take all 535 Members of Congress working together on implementing the balanced budget amendment, over a period of a year or more, to come up with a glidepath that will get us to the result of a balanced budget in the year 2002.

They also know that we will never get there if we do not pass the amendment which will force us to work together to get there.

That is in spite of the sincerity of many people in both bodies who want to get there and are always talking about getting there and saying we ought to do it. But many of those who say that are the biggest spenders in Congress. We all say it, but many of those who are saying it and saying we do not need a balanced budget amendment—saying that we ought to just have the guts to do it—are those who are some of the biggest spenders in Congress, who never want a balanced budget amendment because they do not want their spending habits curtailed, because that is what they believe has reelected them time after time.

Unfortunately, in some ways, that is true. But now that time is gone. We have to do what is right for America and get spending under control.

Mr. President, we have had a good debate today, and I believe that we will keep plodding ahead until we get to the point where we all have to vote and we all have to show where we are going to be on this matter. I can live with whatever the outcome is. I have been through this so long that I can live with whatever it is. But it will be a tragic thing if we do not pass a balanced budget amendment. I believe we will if the American people will get involved.

With that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL WOMEN AND GIRLS IN SPORTS DAY

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is my understanding this has been cleared with the Democratic leader.

I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Resolution 37, National Women and Girls in Sports Day; that the Senate then proceed to its immediate consideration, and that the resolution be considered and agreed to; that the preamble be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution (Senate Resolution 37) and its preamble are as follows:

S. RES. 37

Whereas women's athletics are one of the most effective avenues available for women of the United States to develop self-discipline, initiative, confidence, and leadership skills;

Whereas sports and fitness activities contribute to emotional and physical well-being;

Whereas women need strong bodies as well as strong minds;

Whereas the history of women in sports is rich and long, but there has been little national recognition of the significance of women's athletic achievements;

Whereas the number of women in leadership positions as coaches, officials, and administrators has declined drastically since the passage of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972;

Whereas there is a need to restore women to leadership positions in athletics to ensure a fair representation of the abilities of women and to provide role models for young female athletes;

Whereas the bonds built between women through athletics help to break down the social barriers of racism and prejudice;

Whereas the communication and cooperation skills learned through athletic experience play a key role in the contributions of an athlete at home, at work, and to society;

Whereas women's athletics has produced such winners as Flo Hyman, whose spirit, talent, and accomplishments distinguished her above others and who exhibited the true meaning of fairness, determination, and team play;

Whereas parents feel that sports are equally important for boys and girls and that sports and fitness activities provide important benefits to girls who participate;

Whereas early motor-skill training and enjoyable experiences of physical activity strongly influence life-long habits of physical fitness;

Whereas the performances of female athletes in the Olympic Games are a source of inspiration and pride to the United States;

Whereas the athletic opportunities for male students at the collegiate and high school levels remain significantly greater than those for female students; and

Whereas the number of funded research projects focusing on the specific needs of women athletes is limited and the information provided by these projects is imperative to the health and performance of future women athletes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) February 2, 1995, and February 1, 1996, are each designated as "National Women and Girls in Sports Day"; and

(2) the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on local and State jurisdictions, appropriate Federal agencies, and the people of the United States to observe those days with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following concurrent resolution, previously received from the House of Representatives for concurrence, was read and referred as indicated:

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. HATFIELD):

S. 308. A bill to increase access to, control the costs associated with, and improve the quality of health care in States through health insurance reform, State innovation, public health, medical research, and reduction of fraud and abuse, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

THE HEALTH PARTNERSHIP ACT

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, many people count the death of health care reform as being in 1994, when the Congress failed to adopt the proposals that had been adopted as submitted by the President, by various factions within the Congress itself, by some groups that were external to the Congress. I personally think that is the wrong date for the death of health care reform in America. I believe the appropriate date for health care reform's demise occurred 20 years earlier, in 1974.

Prior to 1974 we in fact had a very vibrant, innovative, creative set of health care reform initiatives. They all had one principal characteristic, they were emerging from the States. We had a decentralized federalized system of health care innovation.

The State of the Presiding Officer was one of those States involved in those early efforts of health care reform, as was my State and the State of Oregon, the State of our colleague, Senator HATFIELD. Maybe the best known example of those innovations that occurred prior to 1974 was the State of Hawaii.

The State of Hawaii set some objectives in terms of increasing the percentage of its population covered, to reduce the cost of health care, and to focus attention on the prevention of illness rather than crisis intervention. Hawaii, as an example, has achieved almost all the objectives that were established two decades ago.

But in 1974 the Congress began to restrict the capacity of States to serve as the laboratories for health care innovation through restrictions on the ability of States to secure waivers from Federal laws such as Medicaid, the health care program for indigent Americans, and the restrictions on the States' ability to innovate as it related to persons who secured their insurance through a place of employment, the so-called ERISA restraints. States, for 20 years, have largely been restricted from their role of serving as centers of innovation, of field-based experience on what would actually work in terms of improving the health of Americans.

The legislation we are going to introduce today seeks to reverse that 20-year period of sterility. As Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis once said,

It is one of the happy incidents of the Federal system that a single, courageous State may, if its citizens choose, serve as a laboratory and try novel social and economic experiments without risk to the rest of the country.

We propose to restore that opportunity of States to serve as that novel laboratory to try things to see if they work; if they do, to enlarge them; if they do not, to discard them—but not put the entire Nation at risk as we experiment with new approaches to achieve the objective of better health for all Americans.

There are some principles behind the bill that Senator HATFIELD and I will introduce, and those principles include the concept of incrementalism. Incrementalism is not just a synonym for drift and indecision that you move willy-nilly from one step to the other. Incrementalism infers that you have a clear set of goals, destinations, and then you understand the steps that are required to get from where you are to that destination.

While these goals can be defined with greater specificity—and they shall be—the basic goals that we seek to attain with this legislation are:

First, to increase the access of Americans to health care services;

Second, to contain the level of increase of the cost of health care services;

Third, to reduce the incidence of illness and disease by a greater investment in those things that we know will tend to maintain a state of good health.

A second principle of our proposal is decentralization. One of the common elements of all of the health care legislation considered in 1994, no matter how much they differed in specifics, is that they all shared one thing in common; that is, they assume that the solution to health care was a centralized solution. There was an assumption that health care can be dealt with by one-suit-fits-all approach.

Senator HATFIELD and I believe that is fundamentally flawed—that in a Nation that is as large and diverse as the United States of America the attempt to have a central health care system for all of our almost 260 million citizens is an inherent prescription for failure. The differences just between let us say a State such as Wyoming, which has large land area and relatively few people who have a principal problem, is how to provide not the financing but just the actual access to health care professionals in such a diffused population compared for instance to a highly urbanized State such as New Jersey where the issues are fundamentally different. To attempt to have such a health care approach to such extreme circumstances is in our opinion not a logical beginning point for health care reform.

Finally, we believe in the concept of partnership, that States and local communities and individual citizens will bring a great deal to the table. They are the ones who are most directly affected by gaps in our current health care system. They are the ones who are most likely to have precise reality-based prescriptions to fill those gaps and current concerns with our system.

We believe that the sense of arrogance that has sometimes pervaded Federal-State relations—in which we assumed that we knew what the solution was and it was only for others to accept our infinite wisdom—those days are over, and we need to have a respectful relationship.

Let me, Mr. President, just briefly review the principal titles of our legislation. I will submit the legislation for introduction as well as a section-by-section analysis of the proposal. But the bill contains a title which relates to insurance reform.

In this area, we are building on a very successful recent experience which related to problems including out outright fraud that existed in the sale of so-called Medigap insurance policies. These are the policies that extend the normal reach of Medicare. The way in which the Congress chose to go about dealing with the problem of Medigap insurance was to ask the State insurance commission to work together to develop a standard set of principles to govern those types of insurance policies. Each State must then be required to adopt the basic principles that have been developed by these State officials. Each State deserves the right to go beyond what the standard set of principles were.

We are proposing a similar policy as it relates to health insurance. We are going to call on the 50 insurance commissioners of America to develop the programs on portability, on preexisting conditions, on the other gaps in health insurance coverage that have caused such anxiety and loss of insurance coverage to American families.

The second title is State innovation. It has two basic approaches. One, we are going to seek relief for States from some of the shackles that have been imposed upon them for 20 years so that they will have the ability to innovate. We want to make it easier for States for instance to get waivers from a risk, easier for States to get waivers from Medicaid, easier for States to shape their own approach to what they believe will best meet the needs of their people. We are going to go beyond this in that we are going to provide grants, grants over the next 5 years totaling $50 billion to States which apply and which can demonstrate that they have a plan that will move toward the three objectives of increased coverage, cost control, and provision. We believe this will give a positive encouragement to the States to accelerate a process of innovation that has been asleep for 20 years.

Third, in the area of public health we are proposing for a significant increase in the Federal role in public health. The Federal Government used to be the primary level of government in public health. It is a partnership with the States. Our partnership has been faltering. States have been taking up a larger and larger share. With the States' financial constraints, one of the problems is we are going to see frays in our public health system. Tuberculosis, for instance, which is a disease that we thought had been eradicated, has made a resurgence and a significant part of the reason for that resurgence is laid to the fact that we have gaps in our public health service that have allowed that to occur.

We also are proposing, in the next title, increases in assistance to medical research. Again the States will have a major role since many of the most significant health care training and research institutions are hospitals and medical centers which are associated with State government. We also are proposing increased funding for the National Institutes of Health. We believe that Americans want to have investments that will increase our knowledge, and therefore ability to arrest adverse health care conditions.

Finally, we come to what may be the bitter pill of that; that is, how we pay for it. We are proposing a $1 per unit increase in the tax on tobacco products as a means of financing these initiatives in State innovation, public health, in medical and health research. We believe this is appropriate in terms of the contribution that reduction in the use of these products will have on the health of America. It also will raise approximately $68 billion over the next 5 years which will be necessary in order to finance the various initiatives that we have outlined.

Finally, we have a provision that relates to fraud and abuse. I want to particularly commend Senator COHEN of Maine whose ideas are heavily involved in this particular title. He has done outstanding work in the area of Medicare fraud and abuse, and has helped to bring to the Nation's attention the shocking level of abuse in terms of inappropriate services, services not rendered, overbilled services which are estimated to be costing us $1 out of every $10 in our Medicare expenditures. But fraud and abuse is not limited to Medicare. It also occurs in other governmental programs such as CHAMPUS, which is the program for the Department of Defense. It occurs in Medicaid with the State-Federal partnership program, and it occurs in many private insurance programs. We believe that the frontal assault on fraud and abuse is an important element of this health care reform effort.

I close, Mr. President, by quoting a fellow Floridian, columnist and editorial writer of the St. Petersburg Times, Martin Dyckman, who stated that this approach that we are suggesting to health care reform is.

* * * of course, is how most of this country's important social reform including public schools, child labor laws, anti-sweatshop legislation, wage-hour laws and workers' compensation, came into flower. They originated not in Congress but with the States. It is the genius of federalism.

We seek to unleash that genius to the benefit of all of the American people. As we will learn more about what policies actually contribute to increased coverage, containment of cost and the prevention of illness, we will improve the lives of individual citizens within their States. And with that experience, we will have the opportunity to make better policies across America that will improve the lives of all of our citizens.

Mr. President, during the long, arduous and extended debate over health care last session of Congress, Senator HATFIELD and I were concerned that Congress had become fixed on thinking about health care reform from a single, centralized, one-size-fits-all, national model. In the bipartisan rush to attempt to solve the Nation's problems and federalize health care, Congress overlooked what may be the best opportunity we have—State-led reform.

In fact, that has been the case for over two decades. In the early 1970's, many States were working on initiatives to develop health care infrastructure or were, as in the cases of Hawaii, Maine, and California, undertaking progressive reform proposals to expand coverage. Hawaii passed its Prepaid Health Care Act in 1974 and has been the only State to receive necessary implementation waivers from Congress. As a result, Hawaii has managed to cover 96 percent of its citizens and has costs below the national average.

Unfortunately, most other State reform initiatives have been stalled by the overriding national health reform efforts of President Nixon and Congress in 1974, the growing federalization of Medicaid policy throughout the period and the passage of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act or ERISA in 1974.

These three efforts to nationalize health care have worked together to stall or limit State health reform efforts over the past two decades. In fact, ironically, due to the very fact that very little experimentation or innovation occurred in the States over the last two decades, virtually all of the national health reform proposals—whether it was managed competition, single payer, employer or individual mandates, pay or play, vouchers, the expansion of Medicare or market reform—had as their centerpiece a variety of untested reform theories in American society. In short, past efforts to limit state flexibility paradoxically helped thwart Congress' reform efforts last year.

As a result, on September 22, 1994, Senator HATFIELD and I introduced legislation that would attempt to attain the goals of health reform—expanded coverage and access, cost containment and improved quality—with State innovation as an underlying theme. After working to improve the legislation over the recess, we are reintroducing the Health Partnership Act today. We introduce this legislation as a working document and encourage any and all comments to help further refine the proposal.

First, the legislation recognizes that, in a nation as diverse as ours, one solution or means cannot be formulated for the wide range of health programs and needs in our country. For example, Florida, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Rhode Island, and West Virginia have 50 percent more elderly per capita than do Alaska, Utah, Colorado, and Georgia. Addressing the long term care needs and specific health care problems associated with aging would clearly be a greater point of emphasis in the former States than in the latter.

As former Governors and as Senators from States that have enacted substantial health reform plans, Senator HATFIELD and I believe the States have demonstrated some tremendous creativity and ability to implement innovative health care initiatives often in the face of stiff resistance from the Federal Government.

As Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandies said in 1932,

It is one of the happy incidents of the Federal system that a single courageous State may, if its citizens choose, serve as a laboratory; and try novel social and economic experiments without risk to the rest of the country.

To summarize the Health Partnership Act, the bill establishes increased coverage, cost containment, improved quality and decentralization as its overriding goals. Our proposal would achieve this through Federal-State partnerships in five areas: insurance reform, state innovation, public health, medical and health research, and fraud and abuse.

INSURANCE REFORM

The first title deals with insurance reform. Through recommendations from our Nation's State insurance commissioners, our bill would address the longstanding problems of portability, preexisting conditions, solvency standards, community rating, and other needed insurance market reforms.

The State insurance commissioners would establish a set of national minimum insurance standards that would be approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. This is modeled after the Baucus amendment to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 that related to the development of the largely successful Medicare supplemental insurance standards or Medigap. In our bill, States that wish to do beyond the minimum standards established by NAIC could proceed with more progressive reforms.

STATE INNOVATION

Title II is concerned State and local innovation. Both States and localities would be allowed to submit health reform projects that—if they meet the health reform goals of expanding coverage, cost containment and improving quality—would enable them to receive broad flexibility in the Medicaid Program, Public Health Service programs, the maternal child health block grant and the social services block grant.

To further improve the Federal-State partnership, our legislation would grant these waivers and greatly expanded flexibility through the vast reduction of process requirements and regulation. Instead, the Federal Government and States would jointly develop performance and accountability measures that specifically relate to the State's project. For example, if a State were to submit a children's health initiative as a health reform project, performance measures might include infant mortality, immunization rates or unnecessary pediatric hospitalization rates.

Eligible States would also have available $50 billion in grants to enact their reforms over a 5-year period.

The bill also gives states greater flexibility by clarifying the impact of the ERISA preemption. While ERISA was intended to recognize the desire by multi-State corporations to have uniformity in their employee benefit programs, it has gone beyond what is required for that purpose. The result has been the preemption of an increasing number of State laws.

For example, it does not make sense to preclude States from having access to data, from establishing quality standards for HMO's and from raising revenue through providers to fund uncompensated care pools. In effect, States are prevented by ERISA from enacting some reforms that would reduce the numbers of uninsured, contain costs and ensuring, or enhancing quality. Our intention in the bill is to find a balance between the legitimate and proper interests on business and labor in ERISA and that of States.

Consequently, the bill provides for the establishment of an ERISA Review Commission to study the issues affected by ERISA and to make recommendations on points of compromise between States, business, and labor.

PUBLIC HEALTH

Title III promotes prevention, public health, cost effective treatment, and improved overall health through four distinct approaches: First, strengthening the partnership with and capacity of local and state public health departments to carry out core public health functions; second, expanding access to preventive and primary care services for vulnerable and medically underserved communities; third, supporting applied research on prevention and effective public health interventions, and fourth, addressing public health work force needs and access problems.

At a time when tuberculosis, AIDS and other public health problems such as E. coli increasingly threaten the public's health, as investment in our Nation's public health infrastructure as necessary and overdue.

Dr. C. Everett Koop and other members of the Health Project Consortium published an article in the New England Journal of Medicine in 1983 noting that 70 percent of all illness is preventable and that there are about 1 million deaths annually that are preventable. That amounts to in excess of $600 billion annually in costs. However, our Nation now invests less than 1 percent of our total health care costs on health care. The waste of both lives and money must be addressed.

As a result, our legislation would increase the investment in public health by $9 billion over 5 years.

MEDICAL AND HEALTH RESEARCH

Title IV emphasizes medical and health research. Our initiative recognizes the importance of medical and health research and would provide $6 billion over a 5-year period in increased funding for that function. This builds on the excellent track record of medical research in our Nation's State-supported research and medical centers. In addition, if finding the cure for diseases such as AIDS, Alzheimer's, and cancer is to be achieved, such an investment is critical.

FRAUD AND ABUSE

Title V is a section tackles the issue of fraud and abuse. Senator BILL COHEN, who has studied this issue at length and contributed to this section, recently said,

As much as $100 billion is lost each year to fraud and abuse, driving up the cost of health care in America for million of patients and families—as well as for the American taxpayer. Losses over the last 5 years are almost four times the total costs to date of the entire savings and loan crisis.

One of the provisions establishes closer coordination of fraud investigation among the Federal, State, and private sector. This would positively impact State and local governments as providers, payers, and employers.

COST

The bill's costs over a 5-year period would be $65 billion which Senator HATFIELD and I propose to be financed with a $1 tax on tobacco products. This funding source, while providing funds for our proposal, would also discourage smoking and improve the overall health of Americans.

WHY STATE-LED REFORM?

Why federalism or state-led reform? First and most obvious, the Federal Government failed and will continue to fail to truly address the agreed upon goals of this nation in health care.

Second, the combination of Federal failure, hinderance of State flexibility through Medicaid regulations and ERISA, and anticipate budget cuts to Medicare and Medicaid this year would result in what I would call triple-negative health reform. We should break that downward spiral at the second point and grant State and local governments increased flexibility to improve our Nation's health care. The contrast would be further Federal inaction and arbitrary budget cuts, neither prescriptions for improved health.

Third, the diversity in our Nation dictates federalism. As St. Petersburg columnist Martin Dyckman said in a column endorsing our approach,

This, of course, is now most of this country's important social reform including public schools, child labor laws, anti-sweatshop legislation, wage-hour laws and workers' compensation, came into flower. They originated not in Congress but with the States. It is the genius of federalism.

Fourth, States have historically led in reform—Hawaii, Minnesota, Florida, New York, Maryland, Oregon, and Washington and others come to mind. States have led in reform because they can respond quicker to the rapid changing dynamics of health care. They are also more efficient. One look at the Medicare fraud problem in south Florida would shy anybody away from having Washington, DC, too involved in reform.

Fifth, doing nothing is unacceptable. State and local governments continue to bear the brunt and serve as much of our Nation's safety net. As last year's

Advisory Committee on Intergovernmental Relations report entitled "Local Government Responsibilities in Health care" noted, "Local governments spend an estimated $85 billion per year on health care services—about one of every eight dollars spent by local governments."

Failing to recognize this important contribution and failure to address it will only increase this heavy burden. Uninsured rates will only continue to increase, costs will continue to explode while problems such as infant mortality, where the United States ranks 21st in the world, are not going away.

Finally, waiting for uniformity is a pipedream. As many of you know only too well. Medicaid regulation and ERISA have effectively preempted the ability of State and local government from enacting anything other than incremental reform for 20 years due to what everyone thought was impending national health care reform. Since that time, States have largely been held back from enacting reforms while Presidents Nixon, Ford, Carter, Reagan, Bush, and Clinton have all failed to enact comprehensive national health reform.

Therefore, the purpose of our bill is to free the States to be innovative to addressing their specific health care needs and problem while providing States the resources to encourage and accelerate the process. Mr. President, I believe the time for State-led reform is now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and additional material be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Americans support universal coverage. The people of this country agree that all Americans should be guaranteed access to affordable, high-quality health care.

(2) Although there is common agreement on the goal of universal coverage, there are many different ways to achieve this goal. The States can play an important role in achieving universal coverage for our population, demonstrating additional health reforms that may be needed on a national level to enhance access to affordable, high-quality health care. A number of States have already initiated health care reform that takes into account their special economic, demographic, and financial conditions. These State models combine unique reform innovations with the various strengths of their existing State health care systems, including market competition, employer pools and association plans, technology review and public health outreach projects. The States can also serve as testing grounds to identify effective alternatives for making the transition to universal coverage, while maintaining the strengths of the current health care system.

(3) Maintaining the high quality of health care Americans expect and controlling costs are also important goals of health care reform. As payers of health care, the States have a strong incentive to ensure that such States purchase high-quality, cost-effective services for the residents of such States. The States can develop and test alternative payment and delivery systems to ensure that these goals are achieved.

(4) In light of the success of various State-initiated reforms and in the absence of comprehensive Federal health reform, there are many health-related issues that should be addressed at the State level. As with social security and child labor protections, States can lead the way in testing ideas for national application or application in other States.

(5) The States should have the flexibility to test alternative health reforms with the objectives of increasing access to care, controlling health care costs, and maintaining or improving the quality of health care.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

Unless specifically provided otherwise, as used in this Act:

(1) NAIC.—The term "NAIC" means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(2) PERFORMANCE MEASURES.—The term "performance measures" means measurable indicators that are used to assess progress towards achieving the broad goals of increasing access to care, controlling health care costs, and maintaining or improving the quality of health care.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(4) STATE.—The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Marina Islands, and America Samoa.

TITLE I—HEALTH INSURANCE REFORM

SEC. 1001. ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS.

An individual whose coverage is canceled or nonrenewed under this subparagraph shall, as part of the notice of termination or nonrenewal, be notified of the right to enroll in other medicare supplemental policies offered by the issuer or its affiliates.

“(2) If an entity is not defined in either of such sections, the reference in this title to the entity has the meaning provided by the Secretary, except that the Secretary shall require for purposes of this title that the entity be accredited for the provision of the education or training involved.

“SEC. 2799. RELATION TO OTHER FUNDS.

TITLE IV—MEDICAL AND HEALTH RESEARCH

SEC. 4001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Medical and Health Research Act of 1995”.

SEC. 4002. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Nearly 4 of 5 peer reviewed research projects deemed worthy of funding by the National Institutes of Health are not funded.

(2) Less than 2 percent of the nearly one trillion dollars our Nation spends on health care is devoted to health research, while the defense industry spends 15 percent of its budget on research.

(3) Public opinion surveys have shown that Americans want more Federal resources put into health research and support by having a portion of their health insurance premiums set aside for this purpose.

(4) Ample evidence exists to demonstrate that health research has improved the quality of health care in the United States. Advances such as the development of vaccines, the cure of many childhood cancers, drugs that effectively treat a host of diseases and disorders, a process to protect our Nation's blood supply from the HIV virus, progress against cardiovascular disease including heart attack and stroke, and new strategies for the early detection and treatment of diseases such as colon, breast, and prostate cancer clearly demonstrates the benefits of health research.

(5) Among the most effective methods to control health care costs are prevention and cure of disease and disability, thus, health research which holds the promise of cure and prevention of disease and disability is a critical component of any comprehensive health care reform plan.

(6) The state of our Nation's research facilities at the National Institutes of Health and at universities is deteriorating significantly. Renovation and repair of these facilities are badly needed to maintain and improve the quality of research.

(7) Because the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 freezes discretionary spending for the next 5 years, the Nation's investment in health research through the National Institutes of Health is likely to decline in real terms unless corrective legislative action is taken.

(8) A health research fund is needed to maintain our Nation's commitment to health research and to increase the percentage of approved projects which receive funding at the National Institutes of Health to at least 33 percent.

SEC. 4003. NATIONAL FUND FOR HEALTH RESEARCH.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States an account, to be known as the “National Fund for Health Research” (hereafter referred to in this section as the “Fund”), consisting of such amounts as are transferred to the Fund under subsection (b) and any interest earned on investment of amounts in the Fund.

In the case of a joint return of a husband and wife, each spouse may designate one-half of any such overpayment of tax (not less than $2).

Such designation shall be made either on the 1st page of the return or on the page bearing the taxpayer's signature.

“(c) OVERPAYMENTS TREATED AS REFUNDED.—For purposes of this section, any overpayment of tax designated under subsection (a) shall be treated as being refunded to the taxpayer as of the last day prescribed for filing the return of tax imposed by chapter 1 (determined with regard to extensions) or, if later, the date the return is filed.

“(3) 1 percent of such amounts during any fiscal year for carrying out section 301 and part D of title IV with respect to health information communications; and

“(4) the remainder of such amounts during any fiscal year to member institutes of the National Institutes of Health and centers in the same proportion to the total amount received under this section, as the amount of annual appropriations under appropriations Acts for each member institute and center for the fiscal year bears to the total amount of appropriations under appropriations Acts for all member institutes and centers of the National Institutes of Health for the fiscal year.

GRAHAM-HATFIELD HEALTH PARTNERSHIP ACT

Purpose: To proceed with health care reform that increases access, controls costs and improves the quality of health care in states through state innovation, public health, medical research, insurance reform and control of fraud and abuse.

States are making significant progress to reform their health care delivery systems. In light of the inability of Congress to enact comprehensive reform, this bill would provide the states with the flexibility to continue their reform efforts. It would also provide limited federal funding to assist states in this effort.

The bill includes the following provisions:

TITLE I—HEALTH INSURANCE REFORM

Establishment of National Minimum Standards.—Congress would direct the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) to develop national minimum standards with respect to renewability, portability, guaranteed issue, community rating, solvency and stop-loss. The Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) would review the standards developed by NAIC. Upon approval, these national minimum standards would be established for the states, but they would be given authority to enact and implement more progressive reforms than those specified. This is modeled after the Baucus Amendment to OBRA-90 relating to the development of Medicare Supplemental Insurance Standards or Medigap.

Medicare Select.—The 1990 Medigap legislation created 10 standard Medicare supplemental benefit packages that could be offered nationwide. Managed care networks could offer these benefits to Medicare beneficiaries in 15 states. This program, Medicare Select, provides supplemental coverage to hundreds of thousands of Medicare beneficiaries, but the program will expire on June 30, 1995. This provision would reauthorize the program and extend it to all 50 states.

TITLE II—STATE INNOVATION

State Innovative Health Reform Projects.—States interested in enacting health reform proposals that achieve the goals of increased health coverage and access, control costs and maintain or improve the quality of health care could submit their projects to the Secretary for Medicaid, Maternal Child Health Block Grant, Social Services Block Grant and Public Health Service Act waivers and approval. An approved state innovative project that can demonstrate the ability to meet the goals of health reform would receive grant monies from the federal government to encourage and help states fund the projects. $50 billion will be made available to states over a five-year period.

Limited State Health Care Waivers.—States would also be allowed to pursue more limited state health care waivers that are likely to increase administrative efficiencies or provide guidance for the development of improved health delivery systems. The waiver application for both the comprehensive and limited waiver projects would be placed on an expedited approval process.

Evaluation, Monitoring and Compliance.—The Secretary and an established State Health Reform Advisory Board would be responsible for monitoring the waiver projects. Waiver projects could be terminated by the Secretary for good cause and states would not be allowed to supplant state funding with grants received under this program.

Lessons from the States/Report to Congress.—At the end of the five-year period, the Board would report to Congress on the progress made by states with respect to expanding health insurance coverage and cost containment. The Board would also make recommendations to Congress concerning any further action Congress should take concerning health care reform from the information and experiences drawn from the states.

Existing State Laws.—States that have existing Medicaid and Medicare waivers are continued and not preempted by this Act. Hawaii would be granted a continued exemption from ERISA preemption.

ERISA Review.—To allow states to move forward with meaningful comprehensive health care reform while fully recognizing the needs of employers in administering self-funded plans across state lines, an ERISA Review Commission is established to find common ground, clarify what is permissible under ERISA and ensure the interests of self-insured plans are addressed. The Commission will be composed of representatives from state and local government, business, labor and the federal government.

TITLE III—PUBLIC HEALTH, RURAL AND UNDERSERVED ACCESS IMPROVEMENT

Core Functions of Public Health.—Core functions are those activities and programs that emphasize population-based health measures such as the investigation and control of threats to the health of communities such as communicable diseases (tuberculosis, HIV, measles, influenza), environmental hazards (air pollution, radon, radiation, waste and sewage disposal), toxic pollutants (lead-based paint, contaminated drinking water) and emerging patterns of acute and chronic disease and injury (food borne poisoning, cancer, heart disease).

Other Programs.—Funding is also made available for comprehensive evaluation of disease prevention and health promotion programs, Schools of Public Health, Area Health Education Centers, Health Education Training Centers, Regional Poison Control Centers, school-related health services, Community and Migrant Health Centers, the National Health Service Corps, satellite primary care clinics and community health advisors.

Funding.—This title is allocated $9 billion over a five-year period.

TITLE IV—MEDICAL RESEARCH

National Institute of Health (NIH) Funding.—$6 billion would be allocated over a five-year period under this title to expand our national commitment to health research. Monies are allocated to the NIH Institutes and Centers on the same basis as annual appropriations. Five percent of the monies will be directed to extramural construction and renovation of research facilities, the National Library of Medicine and the Office of the Director.

TITLE V—FRAUD AND ABUSE

Federal-State-Private Sector Coordination.—This title tracks much of the language from Senator Bill Cohen's "Health Care Fraud Prevention Act of 1995". An improved federal-state-private sector collaboration to combat fraud and abuse would be established. Moreover, certain existing criminal and civil penalties would be expanded to eliminate waste in the health care system.

TITLE VI—FINANCING PROVISIONS

Tobacco Tax.—The bill will be financed through a $1 tax on tobacco products. This tax is expected to raise $65 billion over five years.

NOT INCLUDED—MEDICAID AND MEDICARE CUTS

There are no Medicaid and Medicare cuts included in the Graham-Hatfield proposal.

THE HEALTH PARTNERSHIP ACT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, on the first day of the 104th Congress, I introduced a package of five bills—my legislative priorities for the coming session. At that time, I stated that one of my main priorities during the 104th Congress will be to look for ways to re-define Federal programs to enhance the efforts toward reform already underway in the States. The three bills I introduced on that first day are designed to decrease the burden of Federal compliance and oversight measures in key policy areas. In exchange for loosening the Federal regulatory straitjacket, we will transform accountability from paperwork requirements to performance-based results. I call this the flexibility factor in Government and it entails finding a path through every Federal agency where innovation at the State and local levels is nurtured and rewarded.

It is in that context today that I join my good friend and colleague from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM, in introducing the Health Partnership Act of 1995. This bill is very similar to the legislation we introduced at the end of the 103d Congress when it became apparent that efforts to pass comprehensive reform would fail. Rather than federalizing health care, this bill would encourage the States to innovate and help build the best approaches to addressing our health care problems—a return to the true essence of federalism.

To date, six States have enacted comprehensive health care reform proposals—Hawaii, Massachusetts, Oregon, Minnesota, Florida, and Washington. In addition, 44 States have enacted small group insurance reform; 44 have enacted data collection systems, and 41 have Medicaid managed care experiments underway.

Although many reforms are underway, States have often had to struggle with the Federal Government to move forward with their reform plans. Securing the necessary waivers from the Federal Government has become an increasingly burdensome process. For example, it took nearly 3 years and two administrations for Oregon to obtain the Medicaid waivers it needed to implement its Medicaid expansion. This expansion has provided health care for nearly 100,000 additional Oregonians since its implementation in February 1994. And although there have been problems that came with implementation, the overwhelming majority of Oregonians continue to support the Oregon health plan.

Mr. President, I am fortunate to come from a State which is willing to look at new and innovative approaches to reform in the public and private sectors. Recently, Oregon was granted a welfare waiver to implement their Jobs Plus Program. Oregon has also recently signed a memorandum of understanding with the administration to move forward with the Oregon Option, a partnership designed to deliver Government services in a better and more efficient manner. We are also hopeful that our State will be designed an "ed-flex partnership State" by Secretary Riley as soon as the Goals 2000 process is in place. This designation will allow our State to waive Federal law in certain areas in which the State has already demonstrated a commitment to change. Frankly, it seems like I am spending much of my time these days pursuing waivers of Federal law for my State—nearly all of the innovation that has come forth from my State in recent years has required a Federal waiver for implementation. Oregon is willing to persevere—but not all States are.

Due to the arduous process a State must go through to obtain Federal waivers to enact comprehensive health care reform, many States have held off in attempting comprehensive reform. In addition, one of the biggest barriers to State reform is the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA]. This Federal law is one of the broadest Federal laws on the books, and it has effectively prevented States from enacting reform that achieves universal coverage. ERISA waivers can only be granted by the Congress and have been few and far between—only Hawaii has one and it was granted 20 years ago.

The issue of ERISA reform is a sensitive one. On one hand, States feel that ERISA preemption is a major roadblock to their reform efforts. States argue that ERISA prevents them from reaching a significant percentage of the insurance market in order to fully implement reform proposals that increase access to health care and control costs. On the other hand, business, especially employers with businesses in many different States, argue that they need uniformity in the administration of their employee health benefit plans. They argue that their ability to manage their health care costs and assure that all employees are getting equal benefits will be undermined by State health care reform if the ERISA preemption is lifted.

Both sides raise compelling arguments, but where does that leave us? In the absence of comprehensive national reform, the status quo is not acceptable. Thus, in the bill we are introducing today, we have included a mechanism which will hopefully lead to a fair and equitable resolution of this problem. In order to allow States to move forward with meaningful comprehensive health care reform, while fully recognizing the needs of employers in administering self-funded plans across State lines, an ERISA Review Commission is established to find common ground, clarify what is permissible under ERISA and ensure the interest of self-insured plans are addressed. This limited duration Commission will be charged with making recommendations on ERISA reform to the Secretary of Labor, and will be composed of representatives from State and local government, business, labor, and the Federal Government.

We consider this piece of our bill as work in progress. We firmly believe that the dialog between the two sides must begin. And we look forward to finding ways to improve and expand upon the proposal we put forward in today's legislation.

I have long advocated that we look to the States to help develop the database we need to determine the appropriate Federal role in health care reform. In my opinion, this is the essence of the federalism on which our country was founded. With no consensus on comprehensive reform in Congress, we should turn to the States to lay the foundation for reform. All of the ideas that we debated last session—from insurance reform to universal coverage to malpractice reform—are being tested in our States. We should then distill the information and data obtained from these innovations and use it to reach consensus on national reform.

The bill that we are reintroducing today does that. It says to the States, we believe in you. Put together a plan to expand access to health care, control costs, to improve quality and health outcomes in your State and we will give you the waivers you need to implement your innovative ideas. We believe this should be a partnership and so we will even provide you with some Federal funds to help you achieve your goals. Then at the end of 5 years, we will evaluate what you have done. Has it been successful? Have you met your goals? How can we use this information to put together a plan that works for the rest of the Nation?

And if a State wants to develop a more limited plan, the bill will allow that State to apply for a limited project waiver. This will encourage more of the limited reforms that are already proceeding so successfully in many States, on a much more rapid basis.

In addition, the bill includes provisions to improve public health services and access to health care in rural and underserved areas. This will spur the development of our health care delivery infrastructure and will lead to better health outcomes.

This bill also includes a proposal I have long-championed with Senator HARKIN of Iowa—the National Fund for Health Research. While I intend to introduce this piece of the bill as free-standing legislation later in the year, I feel it is important to have at least one option on the table for increasing our commitment to medical research. Therefore, a minimum of $6 billion will be provided over 5 years to supplement the annual appropriations to the National Institutes of Health.

Medical research is the sole hope we can provide to millions of Americans who will face disease and disability either in their own lives or in their families. We can care for them in our hospitals and clinics but we cannot alleviate their pain or end their suffering without cures and preventative treatments. Cures are the direct result of our investment in medical research.

Mr. President, our Nation spends about $1 trillion each year on health care, but only 2 to 3 percent on medical research. I submit to the proponents of cost containment, that the cornerstone of cost containment is the cures and improved treatments arising from medical research.

I want to cite two examples of the tremendous strides taken in medical research that have totally reversed the prognostic indications for certain diseases. In 1960, we had a U.S. Senator, Richard L. Neuberger, die of testicular cancer. At that point in time, this diagnosis carried a death sentence. Today, because of the advances in medical research, 95 percent of testicular cancer is curable. That is but one example of the strides we have made in the eradication of disease. Research in other fields such as heart and lung disease, stroke, and juvenile leukemia have increased the quality of life and lifespans of many afflicted individuals.

The other day, I was amused by the current commercials on treatments for upset stomachs and more specifically, peptic ulcers. A research study at the Michigan Research Center concluded that peptic ulcers are not caused by stress or diet, but by simple bacteria. The causative bacteria is treatable with common antibiotics and, therefore, ulcers are curable. That one singular research project was responsible for altering our treatment of a common ailment, and alleviating the constant pain of its sufferers.

Additionally, I want to emphasize that medical research has a broad base of public support. One recent poll indicated that 77 percent of the American people supported a health care premium increase of $1 per week, if it were earmarked for medical research. Another 75 percent of the American people said they would accept a $1 increase per week on their income tax bill, if it were earmarked for medical research.

The American public realizes that there is a direct link between medical research and improved health care, cost containment, and discovery of disease cures. I cannot emphasize enough the necessity of undergirding the National Institutes of Health with better funding mechanisms than what exists in the annual appropriations process.

Finally, we have added a title to our bill to address the enormous problem of fraud and abuse in our health care system. The focus of this title is on Federal, State, and private sector coordination to combat fraud and abuse. Much of the language in the title tracks the legislation recently introduced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] in the Health Care Fraud Prevention Act of 1995.

Beginning the process to reforming our health care system does not come without cost.

Currently, we are witnessing increasing doubts about the dependability of funding for our medical research initiatives. With the squeeze on discretionary nonmilitary funding, we are going to have even greater pressure put upon our ability to find innovative financial support.

Thus, our proposal will be fully funded by a $1 tax on tobacco products. The Congressional Budget Office has indicated that a $1 increase will result in $65 billion in revenues. As a long-time advocate of increased tobacco taxes, I believe this is an appropriate revenue source not only because of the revenue that is gained through the tax, but more importantly, because of the health benefits that result from such a tax. This tax will save lives and will have a great effect on the number of teens who smoke. As my colleagues know, the number of teenage smokers is rising significantly despite our efforts to educate teens about the health dangers of tobacco use. We must redouble our efforts to halt this increase in young smokers.

Mr. President, I strongly believe that the approach we are putting forward today is a positive first step toward the foundation of national reform. There will be those who argue that a State approach will lead to a fragmented health care system. I disagree. We will likely not achieve comprehensive national health care reform this year. Let us not make the mistake of missing an opportunity to gather data from the States that will help us in the years ahead. Ours should be a partnership with the States to facilitate the development of health care reform—we should invite them into the process as our partners, not fight their innovative efforts.

By Mr. BENNETT (for himself, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. JOHNSTON):

S. 309. A bill to reform the concession policies of the National Park Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

THE CONCESSION POLICY REFORM ACT OF 1995

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I rise today to offer a piece of legislation which will be known, I hope, when it becomes law as the National Park Service Concessions Policy Reform Act of 1995.

This particular act is cosponsored by two of my friends on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, the former chairman of that committee, Chairman BENNETT JOHNSTON and Mr. BUMPERS, DALE BUMPERS, from Arkansas, who was the chairman of the subcommittee that handled this legislation in the previous Congress.

Mr. BUMPERS has been pursuing reform in the Park Service concession policy for, I think, his entire career in the Senate. I was delighted to join with him last year and bring about the passage of this bill in the committee and the Senate. It was reported out by the committee by a vote of 16 to 4, a majority of Republicans and a majority of Democrats both supporting it. And it was passed on this floor a year and a half ago by a vote of 90 to 9, demonstrating tremendous bipartisan support for this.

Unfortunately, our friends in the House did not act with the same dispatch that we did and, as a consequence, it got hung up there, tragically, for enough months to mean that when the conference report came before this body, it ultimately got caught in the trap of the yearend logjam, traffic jam and, as a result, the conference report was not adopted.

So it is necessary for us to introduce it again this year. I think this year we will see it move rapidly through both the Senate and the House and become law.

The bill that I am introducing is very similar to the one that passed this body 90 to 9 last year, and the arguments in favor of it are the same as they were on that occasion. Very specifically, Mr. President, our national parks, like everything else in life, are changing. That is, the number of visitors to the national parks is going up. As a consequence, the need for services is changing.

If I can refer to a national park in my own home State—and we in Utah are proud of the fact that we have as many national parks as any other State in the Union, it is a particularly gorgeous place in Utah—Zion National Park in the last 10 years has seen the number of visitors go from 1.4 million in 1983 to 2.9 million in 1993, doubling in a 10-year period. Obviously, in that kind of a circumstance, the sort of concession policy that you had 10 years ago needs to be examined in the light of this increase.

There, of course, are other reasons why this needs to be examined. The Park Service is itself running out of money. It is one of the tragedies that we have the crown jewels of the National Park System being starved for resources just as more and more Americans want to take advantage of the beauty of these parks. As a consequence, one of the places people are looking for money is to the royalty payments to come from the concessionaires.

Oh, say some, well, that means the Government is trying to beat up on the concessionaires, the Government is trying to punish the concessionaires for being successful. I do not think so. What we are trying to do in this legislation is open up the concessions for competitive bidding and let the marketplace determine what these concessions are worth.

I come from the business community. I have listened to the concessionaires as fellow business people when they come and say to me, Senator, you can't change the rules. Well, the rules change all the time as markets change. I knew that when I was in business. I reminded them of that in their business circumstance.

But the most important reason we need to change this is because we do need the power of competition to help set the rates. We do need the opportunity for new blood and new ideas to come in, even if the concessionaire does not change. I say to those who are saying, We're going to lose what we have now under the new policy you are proposing, Senator, we're going to lose the concession that we have, I say,

No you are not. If, indeed, you are as capable as you say you are, and I believe you are, if you have the expertise of 10, 15, 20 years experience as you say you have, you will be able to compete. But the mere fact that you will be forced to compete with an outside bidder will, indeed, make you sharper even if you are, indeed, the ones who hang on to the concession as it currently exists.

So, Mr. President, we are dealing with a piece of legislation here that really is relatively noncontroversial, given the vote that it had in the last Congress; something that I think is long overdue, given the changes that are occurring in the national parks; something that is sound financial policy, given the fact that the parks do not have the kind of money that I think they should have. It is good public policy.

I was pleased to be associated with it in the previous Congress, and I am happy to have the opportunity to offer it again in this Congress.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, now that the Senator from Arkansas has joined us in the Chamber, I do not intend to use the remainder of my time. I would like to comment now that he is here on his leadership on this issue.

I came to the Senate knowing nothing about it. I sat in the committee listening to the hearings where the issue was outlined and decided that the Senator from Arkansas was correct, that something needed to be done. I conferred with my then ranking member on the committee, the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Wallop, who suggested that with my business background it might be appropriate that I get involved in this.

I must, for the accuracy of the RECORD, point out that Senator Wallop was not convinced and was one of the four in the committee and one of the nine in the Chamber who decided they could not support this particular approach. But I was very grateful to him for his overall support of my involvement and to the Senator from Arkansas for his leadership and tenacity on this issue. He was very instrumental in giving me the background and the education and the understanding of these issues. Had he not been willing to act as my tutor and mentor in this circumstance I undoubtedly would not have come to the point that I have here today.

So as I yield back the remainder of my time and end my statement, I do so with a comment of gratitude to the senior Senator from Arkansas for his leadership and his tutelage on this issue.

I also must add to that my gratitude to the senior Republicans on the energy committee who also helped me understand this issue and who supported this in committee: Senator HATFIELD, Senator DOMENICI, Senator NICKLES, and others who supported us in committee on the Republican side. As I said in my earlier comment, the bill was supported by a majority of both Republicans and Democrats, even though there were both Republicans and Democrats in committee who decided they could not support it.

So, Mr. President, I am delighted to turn the floor over to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] and thank him for his patience in helping this more junior Senator understand the nature of this issue and the importance of it. I am delighted to have him as an original cosponsor on this bill.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join Senator BENNETT in sponsoring the National Park Service Concession Policy Reform Act of 1995.

I first started trying to reform park concession policies in 1979. Over the past 16 years, we have held numerous legislative and oversight hearings, but until last year, had been unable to move the bill beyond the hearing stage. During last year's hearing, Senator BENNETT offered to work with me to find a compromise, and in large part because of his efforts, we reported a bill with bipartisan support from the Energy and Natural Resources Committee. That bill, S. 208, was overwhelmingly supported by the Senate, passing by a vote of 90 to 9. The bill enjoyed equally strong support in the House of Representatives, passing with relatively minor changes by a vote of 386 to 30. Despite such strong support in both Houses, the bill died last Congress because two Senators refused to allow the final compromise version to be brought up on the Senate floor during the final days of the 103d Congress.

The bill that Senator BENNETT and I are introducing this year is essentially the same as last year's Senate-passed bill. This bill will make much-needed changes in the current system and ensure that the American public receives a fair return for allowing private entities the privilege of doing business in units of the National Park System. As I have said many times, the Concessions Policy Act of 1965, the law under which the National Park Service authorizes concessions to provide visitor services inside units of the National Park System, is outdated and anti-competitive, and should be repealed.

Private visitor service facilities have been operating in our national parks for nearly 100 years. Prior to 1965, the National Park Service provided for in-park visitor services by administrative action under very general provisions in the 1916 National Park Service Organic Act. In 1965, Congress enacted the Concession Policy Act, making the National Park Service the only Federal land-managing agency with a specific concessions statute.

Current concession operations in parks vary in size from small, family-owned businesses providing services such as canoe rentals and guiding services, to major hotel and restaurant facilities operated by large corporations. Although the number fluctuates because of seasonal changes, there are currently about 650 concessioners operating inside units of the National Park System.

Concession permits are issued for most smaller or seasonal operations, while concession contracts are used for larger, more long-term operations. Total gross revenues generated by concessioners currently amount to more than $657 million annually. Significantly, about 50 concessioners—less than 8 percent—account for over 80 percent of these revenues.

Concession policy and the need for significant reform have been topics of intense interest for many years. In addition to the hearings we have conducted, this issue has been the subject of numerous studies, reports, and analyses prepared by the Congress, the General Accounting Office, the Department of the Interior's inspector general, the National Park Service, and a variety of private research organizations. All of these studies have identified problems with the current law which need to be addressed.

FRANCHISE FEES

One of the problems with the current system concerns franchise fees, the fees paid by concessioners to the United States for the privilege of operating a business inside a national park. These fees are too low and should be increased. This is especially true for the larger concessioners who are operating under long-term concessions contracts entered into many years ago. At present, the U.S. Treasury receives approximately $18 million in franchise and related fees from concessioners who do in excess of $657 million worth of business in our national parks. In addition, another $7.8 million is retained within parks in special accounts. Combined, these franchise fees and special accounts average only 4 percent of the total gross revenues earned by concessioners. This low rate of return results in a giveaway of some of our Nation's most valuable resources.

I am pleased to note that some of the most recent contracts have provided for a better rate of return. For example, the new contract to provide visitor services at Yosemite National Park increased the rate of return to the Government from three-quarters of 1 percent to almost 20 percent. However, this change was the result of a very unique set of circumstances which permitted several companies to compete for the new contract; in general, the Concession Policy Act of 1965 continues to prevent serious competition for the awarding of any new contract. In addition, there is no assurance that a future administration would not reverse course and return to the abysmally low returns of the past.

Rather than arbitrarily establishing a minimum franchise fee in the legislation, my bill will ensure that these fees be set at more realistic levels by encouraging and facilitating increased competition for concession contracts.

In addition, under existing law, franchise fees are deposited as miscellaneous receipts in the U.S. Treasury. Since these funds do not directly benefit the parks and the people who use them, there is little incentive for the Park Service to aggressively pursue increased fees, or for concessioners to pay them. The Concession Policy Reform Act of 1995 would deposit these receipts into a special account in the Treasury to be used to benefit park operations, resource management maintenance, visitor services, et cetera. The bill also directs the Park Service, where practicable, to establish a park improvement fund in lieu of collecting all or a portion of the franchise fees.

While I believe it is important to try and ensure that the Federal Government achieves a higher return from these contracts, the operation of facilities in national parks should not be determined simply on the basis of the highest bid. This legislation explicitly states that consideration of revenue to the United States shall be subordinate to the objectives of protecting and preserving park areas. In addition, the bill grants the Secretary the authority to reject any bid, regardless of the amount of franchise fee offered, if the Secretary determines that the bidder is not qualified, is likely to provide unsatisfactory service, or is not responsive to the objectives of protecting and preserving the park area. So that there is absolutely no doubt about the priority of concessions operations within national parks, the bill explicitly directs the Secretary to evaluate franchise fee proposals only from among those companies that the Secretary determines will be responsive to protecting and preserving park resources.

PREFERENTIAL RIGHT OF RENEWAL

Perhaps the most significant impediment to competition concerns the statutory preferential right to contract renewal which, as currently interpreted by the Park Service, gives an existing satisfactory concessioner the right to meet the terms of a better offer submitted by a competitor and to retain the contract if the existing concessioner's offer is substantially equal. In my view, in most cases, this is anti-competitive and should not be granted as a matter of law. While such a preference may have been warranted years ago to encourage certain developments in parks and ensure the continuity of concession operations, it can also limit both the Park Service's influence in dealing with concessioners and the ability of most Americans to compete for concession contracts. In many instances, the right to provide visitor services inside National Parks is a very desirable and very valuable privilege which can attract a host of extremely competent and qualified prospective concessioners. The Park Service ought to be able to choose from these qualified applicants without being constrained by a preferential right. This legislation will eliminate the preferential right of renewal in future concessions contracts, with the limited exception of outfitter and guide operations who currently operate in a largely competitive environment, and small contracts with gross annual revenues of $500,000 or less, which I will discuss in detail shortly.

NOTICE OF OPPORTUNITY TO BID ON NEW CONTRACTS

It is apparent that the Park Service does not adequately publicize new concession contracts or contract renewal opportunities, nor does it always pro- vide interested parties with the specific financial and other submission requirements needed to submit competitive proposals. The Concession Policy Reform Act would establish a detailed competitive bidding procedure for the awarding of all concessions contracts. This process would require that advance notice of all concessions contracts be published, that specific minimum bid requirements be established and made public, and that the details of the previous contract for the park area and other important information be made available to prospective concessioners.

POSSESSORY INTEREST

The other most significant obstacle to competition for concession contracts involves a provision in the current law which allows the granting of a possessory interest to a concessioner. When a concessioner makes an improvement on land inside a National Park, that concessioner is entitled, with the approval of the Secretary, to a possessory interest in that improvement, which consists of all incidents of ownership except legal title. The method of valuation for this property interest as set forth the 1965 act is sound value. Sound value is defined as current reconstruction cost, less depreciation, not to exceed fair market value. This effectively gives concessioners a right of compensation for the appreciated value of their improvements. This current practice of routinely granting sound value can result in concessioners being entitled to millions of dollars in possessory interest, which can effectively make it impossible for the National Park Service to terminate a contract or award it to a new concessioner. This practice is not financially warranted in all circumstances, serves as a barrier to new and qualified concessioners, and limits the Park Service's flexibility in managing concessions facilities.

The Concession Policy Reform Act of 1995 will continue to recognize a current concessioner's possessory interest, if there is one. With respect to new concessions contracts, however, the bill provides that if a concessioner's contract is terminated, the concessioner shall be entitled to the actual cost of building or acquiring the structure, less depreciation. Last Congress, the legislation was modified to provide for the depreciation of the structure over its useful life, up to the depreciation period used for Federal income tax purposes, which is currently 39 years. As modified, I believe the bill allows for a more reasonable depreciation schedule, while at the same time, permitting a concessioner to be compensated for its nondepreciated interest in the structure, thus protecting the concessioner's investment.

In addition to these major changes, the legislation would adopt a number of other recommendations identified by the General Accounting Office, the Inspector General, and the Department's Concessions Task Force.

Over the past few years, the bill has been modified several times to incorporate many constructive suggestions and proposals. These changes include eliminating what some perceived to be excessive reporting and regulatory requirements, clarifying the criteria by which a contract is to be awarded, narrowing the uses for revenues generated from franchise fees, and other clarifying and conforming changes.

This year's bill retains the provision in last year's Senate passed bill to recognize a preferential right of renewal for outfitters, guides, and river runners, as well as for small operations with gross annual revenues of under $500,000. While I believe such a right is anticompetitive in general, I believe a limited exception is warranted in these cases. Unlike most concessioners, river runners and other companies providing outfitter and guide services operate in a competitive environment within a park, with several companies providing the same or similar services. In addition, guide and outfitter operations do not have a possessory interest in park structures, unlike many other concessioners. The legislation directs the Secretary to grant a preferential right of renewal for these outfitters, but only if the operator does not have a possessory interest in a structure, and only if the company has been evaluated as operating satisfactorily during the previous contract. I think this approach recognizes the needs of this class of concessioners, but is consistent with the overall thrust of this legislation.

The bill also provides a preferential right of renewal for small operations with gross annual revenues of less than $500,000. This encompasses almost 80 percent of all concession operations. I have always maintained that concession reform should not be a means to force small operations, especially family operations, who have in many instances provided service to a particular park for decades. At the same time, the bill ensures that the contracts with gross annual revenues exceeding $500,000, which account for over 90 percent of all concession revenues, are awarded based on a competitive basis.

I would also like to repeat an observation that I have made continuously during the past several years, one that I am sure Senator BENNETT would agree with. The purpose of this bill is not to eliminate concession operations from our national parks. I do not subscribe to the theory all visitor facilities in national parks are inappropriate. Many of the facilities and services provided by concessioners are entirely appropriate and benefit the park visitors. I only want to ensure that when concession contracts are awarded, the American people receive a fair return, and that there is an opportunity for competition for these desirable business opportunities.

Mr. President, this bill represents responsible reform of national park concession policy. As demonstrated last Congress, this issue has strong bipartisan support in both Houses of Congress. In addition, concession reform has been a high priority within the Department of the Interior. I urge my colleagues to continue their strong support for this much-needed reform, and I look forward to its swift enactment this year.

In summary, Mr. President, I again wish to pay tribute to my distinguished colleague and very good friend, the Senator from Utah, ROBERT BENNETT. I have to confess that after working 16 years to reform the concessions policy of this country in the national parks, I had annually hit a stone wall until BOB BENNETT came to the Senate.

I am not only grateful to him and to his values and his integrity, political, and every other way, but also because of his background in business and the recognition, once he delved into the issue, that this was a policy which was long, long ago outdated and needed dramatically to be reformed.

Let me further say that even my own efforts on this through the years have not been, as some concessionaires thought, punitive in nature. It is just one of those things that has been going on for 50 to 100 years in this country and nobody ever did anything about it.

Once I realized how badly it needed reform, I went to work on it. As I say, it was not until 1993 and 1994, after Senator BENNETT came and sat on the Energy Committee with me where the original jurisdiction on this issue lay—and I never will forget the morning that he made what I thought was one of the most sensible presentations in the committee I ever heard, and that was we believe in competition. We pride ourselves on being a capitalistic nation. We believe in free enterprise, and that entails competition. And there was, Mr. President, virtually no competition in this field.

In 1993, the concessions of this country took in $657 million, and the U.S. Treasury derived the princely sum of $18 million. The one contract that we have let under something similar to this bill was let in Yosemite, and this Yosemite contract pays up to 20 percent.

Now, we want to keep the rentals as low as we can because the lower they are, the lower the prices are and that is good for the American people who visit the park. But we also want the U.S. Government, which owns the parks and is responsible for them, to get a decent return based on competition.

So, Mr. President, I wish to say this is a very happy day for me. We passed this bill out of our committee last year, and one Senator killed the bill in the last 2 weeks of the session. As a matter of fact, that same Senator killed about 35 to 40 bills out of the National Parks Subcommittee of the Energy Committee and now we have to have hearings on those bills all over again this year at a staggering cost to the taxpayers, report the bills, go through the House, go through concessions, go through everything we went through before in order to pass the bills again.

One other thing I would like to point out is that one of the things that occurred to me, which made this concessions policy absolutely necessary, was the policy of allowing concessionaires in the parks to build hotels and other structures and, of course, depreciate those things on their tax books but at the end of the lease, if they lost the lease, be entitled to what was called sound value, which was effectively market value.

If you had the concession at Yosemite and you decided to put $5 million into a hotel, at the end of your lease, say 15 years later, you are entitled to the market value of the hotel if you lost the lease, and that might be $20 million. The fair market value of the hotel might actually be more than it was when you paid for it, yet you had been able to depreciate that hotel on your tax books for tax purposes for 15 years. It gets a little more complicated than that, but I just want to say that was the thing that first caught my attention on these leases. The other was the extremely low rental that the Federal Government was getting.

What the Government will get in years to come is not going to balance the budget. It is not a large amount. But it does deal with what Congress ought to be alert to all the time, and that is the elemental principle of fairness.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today I am joining with Senator BENNETT and Senator BUMPERS in sponsoring the National Park Service Concession Policy Reform Act of 1995. The legislation that we are introducing today is very similar to a bill which passed both the Senate and House last year by overwhelming margins but failed to clear the Senate in the final days of the 103d Congress.

This legislation, which is supported by the Department of the Interior as well as a number of other conservation and park user groups, would correct the many deficiencies of the 1965 act which currently governs concession operations inside units of the National Park System. It would end the granting of a preferential right of renewal to an incumbent concessioner; it would end the granting of a preferential right of renewal to an incumbent concessioner; it would reformulate the method by which possessory interest is valued; it would establish a competitive bidding procedure to ensure competition and that the Government receives fair value for the privilege of doing business in our national parks; and it would provide that franchise fees and other revenues collected from concessioners are available for use in the parks rather than simply returned to the Federal Treasury.

In this regard, I am pleased that the bill we are introducing today includes language which I offered as an amendment during the committee's deliberations last year which would authorize the Secretary to establish park improvement funds in the individual park units where franchise fees could be deposited by the concessioner and used at the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for badly needed projects in the parks. This practice is currently followed in several parks, most notably the recent Yosemite contract, and has proven very successful.

I look forward to working with Senators BENNETT, BUMPERS, and others who were supportive of our efforts last year, and hope we can enact this measure early in this Congress.

By Mr. WARNER (for himself and Mr. ROBB):

S. 310. A bill to transfer title to certain lands in Shenandoah National Park in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

THE SHENANDOAH NATIONAL PARK TRANSFER ACT OF 1995

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to once again introduce legislation for myself and Senator ROBB which would authorize the Secretary of Interior to transfer without reimbursement all right, title, and interest in certain lands in Shenandoah National Park to the Commonwealth of Virginia, town of Front Royal, and Warren County School Board.

In order to recognize the need for this legislation one must first understand the history of the creation of the Shenandoah National Park.

In 1923, Stephen Mather, Director of the National Park Service, persuaded Secretary of Interior Hubert Work to appoint a five-member committee to investigate the possibility of establishing a national park in the southern Appalachians. At that time there were no parks in the country east of the Mississippi River. In 1924, the committee was formed to find a site for such a park. Thus began a difficult 11-year effort to establish a park in the southern Appalachians.

On February 21, 1925, President Coolidge signed into law legislation which had been introduced by Senator Swanson of Virginia and Senator McKellar of Tennessee which called for the creation of a national park in the southern Appalachians and the Great Smoky Mountains.

In 1926, Congress authorized the park to be acquired by donation, without the expenditure of any Federal funds. This act did not officially create the parks but set forth the conditions of their establishment although in indefinite terms. The Secretary of Interior and the committee were given the difficult task of raising the necessary funds for land acquisition. Therefore, while there was strong support for the creation of the park, its realization remained highly conditional since no Federal funds would be made available to purchase the park lands.

Although private donations were being made, then-Governor Harry F. Byrd, realized the need to pursue other financing means if sufficient funds to acquire the acreage were to be obtained. In January 1928, Governor Byrd asked the general assembly for a $1 million appropriation to make possible the purchase of park lands. A few days later, the State legislature agreed and appropriated the funds. This $1 million appropriation, coupled with the $1.25 million raised from private sources, enabled Virginia to purchase the necessary acreage to establish the park.

With the financial means in hand, the Virginia General Assembly passed in 1928 the National Park Act which authorized the State Commission on Conservation and Development to acquire land for transfer to the Federal Government to establish the Shenandoah National Park. In that same year, Senator Swanson and Representative Temple—both of Virginia—introduced legislation in both Houses of Congress "to establish a minimum area for the Shenandoah National Park, for administration, protection, and general development * * *". This legislation passed both Houses of Congress and was signed into law by President Coolidge on February 16, 1928.

Due largely to the appropriation by the Commonwealth of Virginia and what historians called Virginia's "heroic land acquisition efforts," the necessary acreage was acquired and the land titles were given to the Federal Government. On December 26, 1935, the Shenandoah National Park was officially established.

The Commonwealth's generous donation of lands to the Federal Government for the creation of this great park has now placed the Commonwealth in an unfortunate situation in which the State can no longer maintain the roads within the park. My legislation addresses this situation.

The transfer of land from the Commonwealth to the Federal Government specifically voided all rights of way for road purposes except for U.S. Highway 211 and 33. According to the deeds, the Commonwealth transferred ownership of all other roads and road rights of way on those lands to the Federal Government. Absolutely no reservations were retained by the Commonwealth for such roads.

Since 1935, the National Park Service at Shenandoah National Park has allowed the Commonwealth to maintain existing secondary roads on the fringes of the Park that it wished to maintain through documents called special use permits. The Department of Interior Solicitor General has reviewed the applicable statutes in 16 United States Code and has determined that continuation of these special use permits is not appropriate. Special use permits may be used only to grant a temporary use of lands in national parks. The Solicitor has ruled that the established roads are not a temporary use and require complete ownership and control of the lands by the user. These permits expired over 3 years ago and the Department of the Interior will not reissue them. VDOT has been maintaining the roads without the permits, although there is no guarantee this maintenance can continue. Furthermore, the NPS does not have the necessary equipment to maintain these roads at Shenandoah National Park and, therefore, future maintenance of these roads is in serious question.

Federal law does not allow the National Park Service to convey park land for secondary road purposes. The only legal means to grant the Commonwealth road rights of way is an equal value land exchange authorized under the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act.

Mr. President, facing this dilemma, the Virginia Department of Transportation has acquired land for this purpose, thereby placing the Commonwealth in the position of buying private land to give to the Federal Government to reacquire the right of way of land that the Commonwealth gave away when the park was established.

Due to the unique circumstances of the park's creation, this equal value land exchange requirement is strongly opposed by the local communities and elected officials. I, too, strongly join in this opposition. The Department's position has led to the Virginia General Assembly's passage of a resolution prohibiting the Virginia Department of Transportation from exchanging land for the road segments in the park.

Mr. President, I have introduced legislation to resolve this controversy. My bill would allow the Secretary of Interior to transfer to the Commonwealth, the town of Front Royal, and the Warren County School Board—without reimbursement—all right, title, and interest in and to the roads within the park specified in the legislation.

Due to the Commonwealth's generous donation of lands to the Federal Government for the creation of the park, the Commonwealth should not be required to give the Federal Government additional land in exchange for maintaining and improving roads within the Park.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 311. A bill to elevate the position of Director of Indian Health Service to Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services, to provide for the organizational independence of the Indian Health Service within the Department of Health and Human Services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE LEGISLATION

• Mr. MCCAIN Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to redesignate the position of the Director of the Indian Health Service [IHS] to that of an Assistant Secretary for Indian Health within the Department of Health and Human Services. I am pleased that Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL and Senator CRAIG THOMAS have joined me as original cosponsors of this important legislation. Last Congress, I introduced a similar measure which was overwhelmingly passed by the Senate. Unfortunately, the bill was not considered by the House prior to adjournment.

The Indian Health Service is an agency under the Public Health Service within the Department of Health and Human Services. Under the current structure the Indian Health Service Director's authority to set health policy for American Indians is extremely limited. For example, the Indian Health Service Director must report directly to the Assistant Secretary for Health, and yet the Director is responsible for administering the entire branch of the Indian Health Service health care delivery system.

The Indian Health Service consists of 143 service units composed of over 500 direct health care delivery facilities, including 49 hospitals, 176 health centers, 8 school centers, and 277 health stations and satellite clinics and Alaska village clinics. It provides services ranging from facility construction to pediatrics, and serves approximately 1.3 million American Indians and Alaska Native individuals each year. The IHS serves the most impoverished population in the United States. American Indian and Alaska Native populations are afflicted by diabetes at a rate that overwhelmingly exceeds other national populations. American Indian and Alaska Native populations continue to suffer from mortality rates that exceeds all other segments of our population for tuberculosis, alcoholism, accidents, homicide, pneumonia, influenza, and suicides. American Indians have also experienced a tremendous increase in the number of individuals contracting HIV and AIDS. Yet, today American Indians and Alaska Natives are among the least served and the most forgotten when it comes to improving America's health care delivery systems.

There are several critical reasons which lead me to believe that this legislation is necessary. First, designating the IHS Director as an Assistant Secretary of Indian Health would provide the various branches and programs of the IHS with better advocacy within the Department and better representation during the budget process. The IHS Director currently relies on the Assistant Secretary for Health to advocate for these programs.

Last Congress, the Principal Deputy to the Assistant Secretary for Health at the Department of Health and Human Services testified before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs that a priority within the Department was to listen to the health care delivery concerns of Indian country. Obviously, this message was never received. At the same time that the Department was listening to Indian country, the funding request to meet Indian health care needs was dramatically cut at every level of the administration by the Public Health Service, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Office of Management and Budget. As a result of this process, the President's budget for the IHS for fiscal year 1995 called for a $247 million reduction and the elimination of nearly 2,000 staff positions. Once all of the budget gimmicks were eliminated, such as the incredible assumption that the IHS would be able to increase third-party collections by 463 percent, the IHS budget cuts surpassed $300 million. At the same time, the Department was listening to the calls of Indian country for resources to meet the growing health problems in Indian country.

I am convinced that neither the Public Health Service, the Secretary for Health and Human Services, or the Office of Management and Budget have an adequate understanding of the day-to-day health care needs of American Indians. Therefore, I believe that the IHS is in dire need of a senior policy person who is both knowledgeable about the programs administered by the IHS and can strongly advocate for the health care needs of Indians and Alaska Natives.

Second, an Assistant Secretary for Indian Health would eliminate unnecessary bureaucracy that plagues the Indian Health Service system and permit timely decisions to be made regarding important Indian health care issues. For example, an Assistant Secretary for Indian Health would have the authority and ability to communicate directly with the other operating divisions within the HHS. Requesting the expertise and assistance of other HHS departments on problems of alcohol and substance abuse, HIV/AIDS, and child abuse for American Indians and Alaska Natives would be easier and have more far-reaching results. Currently, the IHS Director must forward such requests for assistance through the Assistant Secretary for Health.

Third, an Assistant Secretary for Indian Health would have the ability to call on private sector organizations that have not traditionally focused on Indian health care needs and concerns, but who have the expertise and resources that can enhance IHS' ability to deliver the highest quality of health care, by providing technical assistance to Indian tribes who choose to operate their own health care programs.

Finally, I would like to clarify a couple of points relating to section 2 of the bill. Section 2 of the bill provides for the organizational independence of the Indian Health Service within the Department of Health and Human Services. This section is necessary because the IHS is currently an agency of the Public Health Service which is headed by the Assistant Secretary for Health. Creating an Assistant Secretary for Indian Health will require relocating the IHS to the same organizational level as the Public Health Service.

Section 2 also clarifies that this bill is not intended to diminish the ability of the IHS to utilize the service of the U.S. Public Health Service Commissioned Corps. While I certainly hope that the HHS would not prohibit the IHS from being served by the Commissioned Corps personnel in the delivery of health care to the Indian people, in light of the previous budget and staff reductions recommended by the Clinton administration I am compelled to insert bill language to make clear the intent of the Congress on this particular matter.

Mr. President, the Senate passage of this legislation last Congress indicates that this legislation is long overdue. Redesignating the Director as an Assistant Secretary for Indian Health would not only reaffirm the special relationship that exists between Indian tribes and the Federal Government, it would send a powerful message to Indian country. At a time when the Nation focuses on health care reform, it is critical that the health care needs of the American Indian are taken into consideration. For those in the administration and the Congress who would make a plea for a national health care system, passing this legislation would serve as an example of a commitment to improving this Nation's first health care system for Americans, the Indian Health Service.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill and section-by-section be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 312. A bill to provide for an Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands in the Environmental Protection Agency, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THE ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR FOR INDIAN LANDS ACT FOR 1995

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to provide for an Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands in the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA]. I want to thank my friend, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii and the vice chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Senator INOUE, for joining with me as an original cosponsor of this bill.

The bill we are introducing today would establish the position of Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands at EPA. The President would appoint this individual, subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Assistant Administrator for Indian lands would be responsible for coordinating and implementing Federal environmental laws and all EPA activities with respect to Indian lands, including the 1984 Indian policy.

This bill is similar in concept to an amendment which I offered in the last Congress to provide for an Assistant Secretary for Indian lands in the proposed Department of the Environment. That amendment won the overwhelming bipartisan support of the Senate with 79 Senators voting in favor of it. As we all know, no final action was taken by the House of Representatives on the issue of cabinet status for EPA. Many Indian tribal governments supported the Senate's action in the 103d Congress, and I fully expect that there will be strong support for the bill we are introducing today.

I want to take a moment to express my gratitude to Administrator Browner for the actions she has taken in the past year to establish a Tribal Operations Committee and an American Indian Environmental Office within EPA which is under the leadership of a highly qualified native American, Mr. Terry Williams. Each of these actions reflects a sincere commitment on the part of the Administrator to try to ensure that EPA addresses environmental protection on Indian lands.

While I support the actions which have been taken by Administrator

Browner, I believe that much more needs to be done. Issues involving Indian land must be addressed at the highest policy levels of EPA on a consistent basis. This will only occur when the Indian tribes are assured a seat at the policy table. The bill we are introducing today will provide that assurance.

Indian lands comprise nearly 5 percent of all of the lands in the United States. This is an area equal to the size of New England and the States of Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey combined. The Navajo Nation alone is equal to the size of the State of West Virginia.

Mr. President, the environmental problems on Indian lands in the United States are serious, widespread, and complex:

There are at least 600 solid waste landfills on Indian lands that do not meet Federal standards. Many of these sites are potentially hazardous.

Federal officials have testified before the Committee on Indian Affairs that of 108 sanitary landfills constructed by the Federal Government on Indian lands, no more than 2 are in compliance with EPA regulations.

The Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota has contaminated drinking water from uranium mining and numerous unsanitary landfills.

Landfills located on the Devil's Lake Sioux Reservation in North Dakota and the Oneida Reservation in Wisconsin have been described as being laced with arsenic, mercury, and other illegally dumped chemicals.

The Navajo Reservation in New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah has an estimated 1,000 sites polluted by old uranium mines or uranium waste. Navajo officials have testified that there are as many as 1,200 open solid waste dumps on the reservation, some of which were built and used by Federal agencies.

Mercury pollution on Seminole land in Florida threatens fishing and the gathering of food.

The worst spill of low-level radioactive waste in American history occurred 13 years ago at a uranium mine on the Navajo Reservation in New Mexico.

I want to remind my colleagues that these environmental maladies are afflicting the very poorest communities in the United States. Unemployment in Indian country averages 50 percent and on some reservations exceeds 90 percent. More than 15 percent of Indian homes lack basic sanitation facilities—rate eight times worse than the rest of the United States. On the Navajo Reservation alone, more than 11,000 homes lack running water and sewage disposal.

These disturbing facts have a definite cost in human lives. According to the Indian Health Service, over half of the infant deaths in Navajo country in 1989 occurred in homes without running water.

In monetary terms, the funds that are needed to address environmental problems on reservations are enormous, and far beyond the scarce resources of most Indian tribes. The Indian Health Service has estimated that the unmet needs of tribes for health related water systems, sewage treatment, and solid waste disposal are at least $700 million.

A 1989 EPA report found that since 1972, $48 billion in Federal funds had been awarded to the States to construct wastewater treatment facilities, but only $25 million had been made available to the Indian tribes by the States. The same EPA report estimated that the tribes will need at least $470 million to comply with the wastewater treatment provisions of the Clean Water Act.

Since 1986, the Congress has acted to ensure that Indian tribes are eligible for treatment as States under the Clean Water Act, the Clean Air Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, and Superfund. We have enacted the Indian Environmental Regulatory Enhancement Act and the Indian Environmental General Assistance Act to authorize funding to assist Indian tribes in the development of environmental regulatory capacity. Funding from EPA to the tribes has steadily increased since the announcement in 1984 of EPA's Indian policy. All of these steps were important, but the record clearly demonstrates that much more must be done.

The bill we are introducing today constitutes another important step in the process of ensuring that Indian lands receive the full measure of environmental protection afforded to other areas of the United States. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a summary of it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 312

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR FOR INDIAN LANDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint within the Environmental Protection Agency an Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands.

(2) COMPENSATION.—The Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands appointed under this subsection shall be compensated at a rate provided for in level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) DUTIES.—The Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands appointed under this section shall—

(1) coordinate the activities of the Environmental Protection Agency with respect to Indian lands and federally recognized Indian tribes; and

(2) implement the stated policy of the Environmental Protection Agency commonly referred to as the "1984 Indian Policy".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands, Environmental Protection Agency."

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

Section 1, Subsection (a) of this section provides that the President shall appoint an Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands in the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). The appointee is subject to Senate confirmation and will be compensated as a level V Executive branch employee.

Subsection (b) provides that the Assistant Administrator for Indian Lands will coordinate all of the activities of EPA with respect to Indian lands and federally recognized Indian tribes, including the implementation of the 1984 Indian Policy.

Subsection (c) is a conforming amendment to section 5316 of title 5 of the United States Code.

• Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Chairman JOHN MCCAIN of the Committee on Indian Affairs in introducing legislation which would provide for the creation of an assistant administrator for Indian Lands within the Environmental Protection Agency.

Mr. President, in 1984, the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] adopted an Indian policy. In the ensuing 10 years, major environmental statutes have been amended to recognize the importance of tribal governments in the administration of environmental regulatory activities on Indian lands. Its record of action makes clear that the Environmental Protection Agency is committed to achieving the goals of its Indian policy.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, Administrator Carol M. Browner, for initiating efforts to improve communications with Indian tribal governments through the recent establishment of the new Indian Environmental Office in EPA.

However, although we have accomplished a great deal working together, it is also clear that our work is not complete.

This legislation will be a key to the continued successful implementation on the Environmental Protection Agency's Indian policy by ensuring that the Agency develops a national infrastructure to protect and ensure equitable treatment for Indian tribal governments comparable to the treatment afforded the programs that are administered by the several States.

Mr. President, one of the obstacles to effective implementation of EPA's Indian policy has been the lack of involvement, including line authority, in decisionmaking processes. The solution is to authorize critical positions in the chain of command. The process of reviewing Agency actions for their consistency with EPA's Indian policy must be institutionalized; it must become second nature to all levels of the Environmental Protection Agency organizational structure.

Mr. President, I believe that the creation of an assistant administrator for Indian lands would be an effective means of addressing this problem.

The assistant administrator would have responsibility for ensuring that the decisions and actions of the central or regional offices are consistent with EPA's Indian policy in areas ranging from major policy and legislative initiatives to the most basic programming decisions.

This legislation will continue to move the Environmental Protection Agency in a direction that will enhance environmental quality on reservation lands and help build strong tribal governmental capacity for the management of the environment in Indian country.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to give their careful consideration to this legislation. ●

S. 314. A bill to protect the public from the misuse of the telecommunications network and telecommunications devices and facilities; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

THE COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT

● Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce legislation to expand the decency provisions of the Communications Act of 1934 to clearly cover the new technologies which are increasingly part of the American way of life.

As a strong supporter of telecommunications reform, I am anxious to pass legislation which will free the private sector to create the information superhighway. This exciting technology will put unprecedented information power into the hands of every citizen. The opportunities for education, culture, and entertainment are limitless.

Sadly, there is a dark side to the bright flicker of the computer screen. The explosion of technology also threatens an explosion of misuse. The legislation I introduce today, known as the Communications Decency Act, establishes legal protections against that misuse.

It modernizes the current law against telecommunications misuse in the digital age.

This legislation will extend and strengthen the protections which exist against harassing, obscene, and indecent phone calls to cover all such uses of all telecommunications devices and increase the penalties for misuse of the public switched network.

This much-needed legislation increases the penalties for obscene cable and radio broadcasts. The bill also insures that adult pay-per-view programs are fully scrambled, so that homes which do not subscribe to such services are not invaded by unwanted audio or video. The legislation also prohibits the use of toll free 800 numbers from being used as a ruse to charge callers or telephone numbers for adult and other pay-per-call services.

In addition, the legislation modernizes the protections against unauthorized eavesdropping on conversations, electronic or digital communications.

In addition, this legislation includes provisions Senator GORTON and I crafted last year to give cable operators the power to refuse to transmit any public access or leased access program or portion of such program which includes obscenity, indecency, or nudity.

Mr. President, the information superhighway should not become a red light district. This legislation will keep that from happening and extend the standards of decency which have protected telephone users to new telecommunications devices.

Once passed, our children and families will be better protected from those who would electronically cruise the digital world to engage children in inappropriate communications and introductions. The Decency Act will also clearly protect citizens from electronic stalking and protect the sanctuary of the home from uninvited indecencies.

Mr. President, to illustrate the need for this legislation, I ask unanimous consent that a Washington Post article be included in the RECORD. The article warns parents about the dangers of pedophiles who use computers to lure children. It is a sad day in America when this type of warning is necessary.

Mr. President, I urge all my colleagues to carefully study this important legislation. It was approved last year by the Senate Commerce Committee as a part of the Communications Act of 1994. ●

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOLESTING CHILDREN BY COMPUTER
(By Sandy Rovner)

Those amazing computer games, bulletin boards and E-mail services that bedazzle children and bewilder many parents may not be as benign as they appear.

Some of them, in fact, may be prowled by real-life villains every bit as evil as those in the fantasy games the youngsters play on-line.

"You can become very close to people very quickly when you're on-line," says Dan Fisher, a Palm Bay, Fla., police investigator and a member of the Law Enforcement Electronic Technology Assistance Committee, part of a new effort to make police as familiar with the computer world of virtual reality as these savvy criminals. Law enforcement officials say that children, often not realizing the danger, sometimes give out their names, addresses and phone numbers to people they meet over the computer network. This makes them vulnerable targets for a number of illegal activities, including sexual abuse, officials say.

For people who have computers with modems that allow them to call outside the home and connect up with networks, there are a number of online services, such as Prodigy, America on Line and Compuserve, that offer a wide variety of options to users. Included in these services are forums called bulletin boards that allow users to talk electronically with other users by posting public notes. These boards are divided into special interests, such as arts, television, lifestyles, seniors, health or teens. These permit individuals to contact other computer users privately by sending electronic mail, known as E-mail, through the Internet, the vast network of computer connections throughout the world.

Although there are laws banning transmission of child porn by computer, the FBI does not monitor bulletin boards, and, in a special statement issued recently on computer bulletin boards, it notes that it does not keep statistics on the problem. Law enforcement efforts are complicated by the fact that E-mail transmissions are "regarded as having the same privacy rights of surface mail," the FBI statement noted.

Frank Clark, a computer crime specialist in Fresno, Calif., who helps teach other police departments about electronic crimes, said there are about 25,000 private boards on the Internet in the country. Yet, "we found that virtually no one was working those kinds of crimes at all," he said.

He travels throughout the United States and Canada giving courses to law enforcement agencies on computer crimes. He cites one episode at a meeting last month in Ottawa at which he had a group of investigators sign on to a major computer service with false identifications and pretend to be children. "Then I had them post a couple of innocuous messages on teens' boards," he says. "The next day we had solicitations for nude pictures, phone sex and offers to meet in person for sex."

Myrna Blinn, an Idaho grandmother, has worked with child abuse groups for years and is among a number of volunteers who warn teenagers via computer bulletin boards not to give away too much personal information to overly friendly electronic mail pals.

She said she received an anguished E-mail letter from a 14-year-old girl who had been corresponding on-line with someone she thought was a teenage boy. She had given him her phone number, but the boy turned out to be a 51-year-old man and he began barraging her with indecent phone calls. She was afraid to tell her family. Blinn and two of her friends confronted the man electronically and turned over information about him to police officials, who are investigating the case. They have arranged for the girl to get counseling.

Clark believes the tide is beginning to turn as parents and law enforcement officials are recognizing the possibility of problems. Computer services are also beginning to monitor their bulletin boards and helping police stop any unlawful activities, he said.

Despite increasing concerns, parents are often stymied in their efforts to monitor their kids because "the children are more computer-literate than the parents," Clark says. To counter that, Clark and his colleagues have developed a brochure they distribute at schools, churches and community meetings. It recommends:

If possible, keep the computer in a common area of the home. If a modem is being used, monitor times and numbers dialed.

Know the warning signs of "computer addiction" to make sure children aren't becoming obsessed with the computer service. One clue is the storage of computer files ending in GIF, JPG, BMP, TIF, PCX, DL and GL. "These," the brochure notes, "are video or graphic image files and parents should know what they illustrate."

The brochure also offers "Tips for Safe Computing" for teens and parents.

Never give out personal information, especially full names, addresses or financial information, to anyone you meet on computer bulletin boards.

Never respond to anyone who leaves you "obnoxious, sexual or menacing E-mail."

Never set up face-to-face meetings with anyone you meet on a bulletin board.

The brochure also urges parents to notify police of "all attempts by adults to set up meetings with your children. This is by far the most dangerous situation for children."

By Mrs. KASSEBAUM (for herself and Mr. DOLE):

S. 322. A bill to amend the International Air Transportation Competition Act of 1979; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

THE WRIGHT AMENDMENT REPEAL ACT OF 1995

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE, joins with me today in offering this bill to address an injustice that has developed out of current law. The bill would repeal a restriction in the International Air Transportation Competition Act of 1979 pertaining to air carrier service at Dallas' Love Field. There is now broad recognition of the anticompetitive situation that has developed because of this section of law, and it is our intent to resolve the unfairness of this situation.

The restriction which this bill seeks to repeal was originally passed to protect the then-relatively new Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport [DFW] and ensure that commercial air carriers moved from Love Field to the new airport. Today, DFW is the third busiest airport in the country. The gates at DFW are full, and planes wait in long lines for takeoff. It is clear that DFW has reached a point where it no longer needs to be protected from competition.

Under current law, commercial air carriers are prohibited from providing service between Dallas' Love Field and points located outside of Texas or its four surrounding States. This effectively limits travel into and out of this airfield to destinations only in Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and New Mexico. Flights originating from any other State must fly into the Dallas-Fort Worth airport in order to have access to the highly traveled Dallas area. This limitation on flights into Love Field is arbitrary and, in many cases, forces passengers to pay artificial and unreasonably high air fares. Moreover, the restriction causes unnecessary delay and inconvenience for passengers attempting to fly into or out of Love Field from cities outside Texas and its four contiguous States.

The criteria the current law uses to restrict flights into Love Field—that a flight must originate in Texas or one of its contiguous States—are not based on any standard appropriate for the airline industry. It is not based on the number of miles flown. It is not based on the size of the city served. It is not based on the amount of noise generated by an aircraft. Instead, it is based on State boundaries that were in place long before the Wright brothers began flying airplanes.

Today, planes are allowed to fly directly from Love Field to El Paso which is 576 miles from Dallas. Yet, direct flights are prohibited between Love Field and many cities which are much closer to Dallas, such as St. Louis, Kansas City, Memphis, Birmingham, and Wichita. This makes no sense.

Mr. President, a great deal has been written recently about unwanted and unnecessary Government rules and regulations. People are frustrated by Government rules that are out of touch with reality, that lack common sense. I think the Wright amendment is a prime example of why so many people have lost confidence in their Government.

In addition to being a law based on policial concerns rather than practical realities, the Wright amendment has distorted the free market. For a number of Americans, the restrictions on Love Field have forced them to pay more to travel to Dallas than their neighbors. Again, this is regardless of the flight distance or the size of the city served by the flight. The reason for this absurd situation is that the one airline which serves Love Field is the low-cost carrier for the market, Southwest Airlines. In those cases where Southwest is allowed to compete with the major airlines for direct flights to Dallas, the cost of a ticket to Dallas is dramatically cheaper than when restrictions prevent Southwest from offering competitive flights.

Another effect of the Love Field restrictions is that they work a terrible inconvenience for those travelers located outside of Texas and the contiguous States who choose to take a nondirect flight to Dallas on Southwest Airlines. Passengers in this situation are not allowed to buy a round-trip ticket to Dallas on a flight which has a stop-over in a city that meets the Love Field restrictions. Instead, these passengers must buy two round-trip tickets. One round-trip ticket to a city in Texas or one of the contiguous States and another from that city to Dallas. This requires the travelers not only to change planes in the connecting city but to collect their baggage and recheck it to Dallas. The unnecessary inconvenience of having to collect and recheck baggage can be especially difficult for the elderly, the disabled, or those traveling with small children.

To allow this situation to continue would be to condone anticompetitive law and to encourage discrimination against many for the benefit of a few. I believe it is essential to encourage competition within the transportation community in order to protect the interests of the traveling public. The case with Love Field is no different than that of all the other small airfields across the country, none of which is restricted based on their location. Love Field has been subject to this unique statute for more than 15 years, and it big time to close this loophole.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I join my distinguished colleague from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM, to introduce legislation to repeal the so-called Wright amendment. Senator KASSEBAUM and I have been working to repeal this anti-competitive regulation which restricts commercial airline flights to and from Dallas Love Field. Make no doubt about it, the time to act is now.

Last year's U.S. Supreme Court decision which let the Wright amendment stand makes the legislation we are introducing all the more important. I stated at the time the decision was issued that I would continue to work to ground the Wright amendment and protect air travelers from getting gouged and now the only relief for the traveling public is through this legislation we are offering today.

The Wright amendment was originally introduced to protect the fledgling Dallas-Forth Worth [DFW] International airport. This airport is now one of the busiest airports in the Nation. Dallas is the top destination for passengers flying from Wichita, and there is no reason they should not have the option of flying into Love Field or Dallas-Forth Worth airports. This regulation not only places restrictions on passengers from Kansas, but from 44 States across the Nation. In my view, the DFW airport no longer needs protection, and it is time to lift the restrictions on Love Field.

The restrictions placed on flights from Love Field 15 years ago deny affordable air transportation to citizens of my State and States throughout a vast portion of our country which do not fall into the limitations of the Wright amendment. The restrictions make it impossible to fly directly into Love Field except for those flights originating within Texas and States neighboring Texas. Not only is it impossible to take a direct flight, but if you are flying into Love Field, a passenger is required to purchase separate tickets, reclaim baggage, and change planes in these neighboring States. Let's assume this passenger is traveling from Wichita. At Oklahoma City, the passenger, having used the first ticket must change aircraft. And not just that, the passenger must take physical possession of all checked baggage, haul the baggage back to the ticket counter and recheck the baggage for the flight into Love Field.

A 1992 U.S. Department of Transportation study reported that these restrictions cost air travelers $183 million a year in higher air fares. That's why Kansans have been demanding the repeal of the so-called Wright amendment—they're tired of higher air fares, reduced travel options, and a distinct second-class status for Kansas air travelers.

Not only are Kansans inconvenienced, but Texans as well. I have a letter from a Texan who has to fly to the connecting airport in another State to assist her mother in a wheelchair who must "change planes, meet her there, transfer her luggage, and recheck her onto another flight." I would like to enter her letter of concern in the RECORD.

The Wright amendment is a burden for Kansas consumers and a barrier to economic development. It's high time we grounded the Wright amendment.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOVEMBER 29, 1994.

Re: Wright amendment—its repeal.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE.

U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: I agree with you 100 percent—the Wright Amendment restricting the use of Love Field in Dallas, Texas, is wrong, wrong, wrong!

I believe the amendment needs to be challenged in terms of the Americans Disability Act. It is my understanding that the purpose of this act is to give better access to public places to people with a disability. I feel this right is being severely restricted by the Wright Amendment. It is almost impossible for a person with a walker, wheelchair, crutches, etc. to disembark from a Southwest flight, get to baggage claim, pick up their luggage, and get rechecked at another gate, without considerable inconvenience, pain, and discomfort. Have you ever tried to carry luggage and manipulate a wheelchair, crutches, or the like? This is certainly not granting better access.

My mother is 82 years old and was faced with that very problem. She is in a wheelchair and was unable to accomplish all of the above. The fares were prohibitive for her to fly with another airline. I had to fly to the airport where she had to change planes, meet her there, transfer her luggage, and recheck her onto another flight. It seems to me that the Wright Amendment unfairly discriminates against the elderly and people with a handicap.

I think on these grounds the Wright Amendment should be challenged and eliminated. I would be more than happy to work with you or any other group that is interested in pursuing this course of action. Repeal of the Wright Amendment is becoming a mission in my life.

Sincerely,

PAULETTE B. COOPER.

DALLAS, TX.

P.S. I noticed recently that Continental Airline is being given access to several gates at Love Field. Will the Wright Amendment affect them in the same ways that it affects Southwest Airlines? If not, why not?

S. 323. A bill to amend the Goals 2000: Educate America Act to eliminate the National Education Standards and Improvement Council, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE NATIONAL EDUCATION STANDARDS AND IMPROVEMENT COUNCIL REPEAL ACT OF 1995

• Mrs. Kassebaum. Mr. President, I introduce legislation to eliminate the National Education Standards and Improvement Council [NESIC]. NESIC was created by the Goals 2000: Education America Act signed into law last year for the purpose of reviewing and certifying voluntary national education standards.

The recent controversy over proposed standards in the field of history underscore the difficulties with any Federal involvement in the standard-setting process. No matter how much one might emphasize the voluntary nature of any standards, the perception remains that the Federal Government is prescribing a uniform curriculum for our Nation's students.

Writing recently about the history standards, University of Chicago history professor Hanna Holborn Gray observed:

The trouble with the "national standards" is not that they are far-out, or radically revisionist, or aimed at brainwashing the impressionable young. * * * No, the real trouble with the national standards, is that they exist at all—or exist under that title and under quasi-official auspices and with some kind of "certification" in the offing.

As one who believes strongly that the strength of our education system lies in its local base and community commitment, I do not believe it is appropriate to expand Federal involvement into areas traditionally handled by States and localities. For this reason, I was troubled when we first started down the path of providing Federal funding for the development of national standards—an action which predated the enactment of the Goals 2000 legislation.

One reason I opposed the Goals 2000 legislation is that it took Federal activities in this area yet another step further by including an authorization for a national council—NESIC—to review and certify the national standards. The existence of such a council only serves to sow further confusion regarding whether the standards are truly voluntary.

As has been repeatedly emphasized in various congressional debates on this subject, there is no Federal law which requires that these standards be adopted or used by any State or school district. Although standards in various subject areas have been developed with the support of Federal funds, they have been designed by professionals in the field, not by Federal employees as some may think. However, there is still great confusion and serious concern by the public about the nature of the Government's involvement in this whole endeavor.

I believe it is time to clear up some of this public confusion and concern. My bill will help do that by getting the Federal Government out of the loop in an area which I believe is best handled by States and localities. Most of our States are already developing standards with the input of their own teachers and parents. Those States clearly do not need to have a Federal seal of approval to validate their efforts.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill and a summary of its provisions be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. THOMAS, and
Mr. SIMPSON):

S. 324. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to exclude from the definition of employee firefighters and rescue squad workers who perform volunteer services and to prevent employers from requiring employees who are firefighters or rescue squad workers to perform volunteer services, and to allow an employer not to pay overtime compensation to a firefighter or rescue squad worker who performs volunteer services for the employer, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTER AND RESCUE SQUAD WORKER ACT

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. This is a companion measure to legislation, H.R. 94, introduced in the House of Representatives by Virginia Congressman HERB BATEMAN.

My bill may be referred to as the Volunteer Firefighter and Rescue Squad Worker Act of 1994.

The purpose of the Volunteer Firefighter and Rescue Squad Worker Act is to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to exclude from the definition of "employee" firefighters and rescue squad workers who perform volunteer services. In addition, it will prevent employers from requiring employees who are firefighters or rescue squad workers to perform volunteer services, and will allow an employer not to pay overtime compensation to a firefighter or rescue squad worker who performs volunteer services.

The need for this legislation stems from a 1993 U.S. Department of Labor ruling which found that a career firefighter cannot serve as a volunteer firefighter within the same county as they are employed. This ruling is commonly referred to as the Montgomery County, Maryland decision.

The Department of Labor's interpretation of the Fair Labor Standards Act in the Montgomery decision has promoted a great deal of concern from volunteer fire and rescue groups across the Nation, including Virginia. The decision was made to prevent counties—employers—from coercing career firefighters to work overtime without overtime compensation.

While protection from coercion is a worthy and necessary element of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the administrative decision offers a presumption of guilt on the part of law-abiding counties. In addition, it precludes men and women who wish to volunteer their services within their own community from doing so, if they reside in the same community as they are employed.

Finally, it represents yet another unfunded Federal mandate and an intrusion on the rights of citizens to decide for themselves what services local government should provide.

Historically, volunteer fire and rescue services have played an important role in our communities. These men and women are private citizens who selflessly answer the call to duty, day and night, to protect the lives and property of others.

In many parts of Virginia today, indeed in many parts of the Nation still, the difference between life and death in the "golden hour" is the initial emergency medical services provided by volunteer rescue workers. Many localities are a good 45 minutes to an hour away from the nearest hospital and the aid administered by volunteers is critical to the survival of victims.

The volunteer fire departments and rescue squads provide fire and emergency medical services [EMS] for 82 percent of all fire and EMS services in Virginia. Of the 602 fire departments in the Commonwealth of Virginia, 67 are combined career and volunteer departments and 535 are strictly volunteer departments. These statistics only begin to tell about the important role that the 20,000 volunteer firefighters in Virginia play in our daily lives.

Mr. President, the intent of my legislation is quite simply to help to preserve the spirit of volunteerism in our communities and to assist our volunteer fire and rescue workers in their mission to provide vital lifesaving and property protection services.

Many of our valiant career firefighters come from the ranks of the volunteers and received their initial training from those departments. In turn, many career firefighters have volunteered their service and expertise to the volunteer departments. I believe that my legislation will help to preserve this unique relationship.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I would briefly like to outline what my legislation would do.

Section one simply cites the legislation as the Volunteer Firefighter and Rescue Squad Worker Act.

Section two would exempt career firefighters and rescue squad workers who volunteer their off-duty services at locations—fire companies—where they are not employed during the course of normal duty hours from the Fair Labor Standards overtime provisions.

Section three would allow career firefighters and rescue squad workers to waive their claim to overtime compensation.

Section four would prohibit employers from directly or indirectly requiring firefighters or rescue squad workers to volunteer their services during any period in which they would otherwise be entitled to receive overtime compensation.

Mr. President, I urge my fellow Senators, particularly members of the Congressional Fire Caucus, to join me in support of this important measure. ●

By Mr. THOMAS:

S. 325. A bill to make certain technical corrections in laws relating to native Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN STATUTE AMENDMENTS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise today as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs—and a former ranking member of the House Subcommittee on Native American Affairs—to introduce legislation to make certain technical amendments to laws relating to native Americans.

Congress typically considers legislation like this once or twice a year. It affords us the opportunity to address a series of technical corrections or minor amendments to Indian bills in one fell swoop, without having to introduce several separate bills.

Sections 1 and 2 deal with two bills that were passed last year which extended Federal recognition to three Indian groups in Michigan: the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi, and the Little Traverse Bay Bands of Odawa Indians, and the Little River Band of Ottawa Indians. The bills, passed in September, failed to include a usual provision requiring the newly recognized groups to submit membership rolls to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. These rolls are important because they allow the BIA to know exactly who is a member of the band and thus entitled to Federal benefits available to members of recognized tribes.

To correct this oversight, in October—as part of another technical corrections bill—we amended both the September bills to include the membership roll requirements. Unfortunately, in the crush of legislation of the final days of the session, the two amendments were transposed. The Pokagon bill, which deals with only one band, was amended in the plural; concomitantly, the Odawa/Ottawa bill, which deals with several bands, had an amendment worded in the singular. This bill would simply retranspose the October amendments.

Section 3 of the bill repeals the Trading With the Indians Act. Enacted in the early 1800's, the act prohibits Federal employees from trading with Indians. At the time, the act was seen as a way to protect the unsophisticated tribes from unscrupulous War Department employees who might have used their positions over the tribes to enter into business deals with them on terms less than advantageous to the Indians.

Today, though, the act has become both an anachronism and a nuisance. Not only are the tribes no longer in need of the paternalistic protections the act affords; but it makes criminal such simple everyday acts as the sale of a used car by the wife of a BIA employee to an Indian neighbor. Both the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior agree that the act is unnecessary, and should be repealed. My good friends Senators MCCAIN and KYL worked diligently on this issue in the last Congress, but time constraints prevented its passage by both Houses before adjournment sine die.

Mr. President, I look forward to working closely with my chairman, Senator MCCAIN, in securing swift passage of this legislation.

By Mr. HATFIELD (for himself, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. HARKIN):

S. 326. A bill to prohibit U.S. military assistance and arms transfers to foreign governments that are undemocratic, do not adequately protect human rights, are engaged in acts of armed aggression, or are not fully participating in the U.N. Registrar of Conventional Arms; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CODE OF CONDUCT ON ARMS TRANSFERS

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, a little more than a year ago I was approached by citizens who share my concern about conventional weapons transfers. They told me of an international effort to curb the arms trade by limiting transfers only to nations which adhere to principles of human rights, democracy, and peace. This initiative, called the Code of Conduct, appeared to be a common-sense approach to decisions regarding weapons transfers and I agreed to introduce it as legislation in the Senate.

Last year on this day Congresswoman CYNTHIA MCKINNEY and I held a press conference to announce our intent to push the Code of Conduct through Congress. Both of us have spent a great deal of time over these past months promoting the bill and contributing to the public's education about the glut of conventional weapons. It is with great pleasure that I reintroduce this bill today and that I am again joined by Representative MCKINNEY, who is introducing its companion in the House of Representatives.

The legislation alters U.S. arms transfer policy by significantly increasing the conditions upon which a nation may receive U.S.-built weapons. By stating as a basic requirement that U.S. arms should not go to nations which have poor human rights records, are undemocratic or are engaged in illegal acts of war, our policy allows arms transfers only to nations which are unlikely to emerge as security threats to their neighbors or to the United States themselves.

I have spoken to groups around the country about this bill and the response has been very strong. Americans agree that no arms should go to dictators. Many citizens are beginning to question why millions of their tax dollars are going to subsidize weapons manufacturers who seek to export fighter jets, tanks, and other armaments. And many individuals have shared with me their concern that we will have repeats of Panama, Somalia, Iraq, and Haiti, where United States troops faced weapons either paid for or provided by our own Government.

Despite the fact that the safety of our troops has been threatened by arms exports, the administration seems intent upon broadening the justification for arms sales approval to also include considerations of U.S. economic interests. In other words, the administration wants to allow jobs to dictate whether or not lethal weaponry should go to nations, many of which have poor human rights records and are not democratic.

The escalating global arsenal must be reduced and nonproliferation must start with the United States. I believe that the only hope for fundamental change in policy is Congress and I will ask the Senate to vote on the Code of Conduct this year because I believe it is time for Congress to assume a greater responsibility for our arms export policies. I hope that my colleagues will take time to review this proposal, join me as a cosponsor and support this bill when it comes to the floor. •

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. EXON, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mr. KERREY):

S. 327. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide clarification for the deductibility of expenses incurred by a taxpayer in connection with the business use of the home; to the Committee on Finance.

HOME OFFICE DEDUCTION ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am proud to introduce the Home Office Deduction Act of 1995. I am joined today by my friends and colleagues, Senators BAUCUS, EXON, LIEBERMAN, GRASSLEY, JOHNSTON, and Senator KERREY of Nebraska. This bill will clarify the definition of what a "principal place of business" is for purposes of section 280A of the Internal Revenue Code, which allows a deduction for an office in the home. An identical bill has been introduced by Representative BILL ARCHER in the House as part of H.R. 9.

Last year, we introduced similar legislation that had 15 bipartisan cosponsors in the Senate. Also, the companion bill in the House, introduced last year by Representative Peter Hoagland, had the bipartisan support of 88 cosponsors.

This bill is designed to reverse the 1993 Supreme Court decision in Commissioner versus Soliman. When this decision was handed down, it effectively closed the door to legitimate home-office deductions for hundreds of thousands of taxpayers. Moreover, the decision unfairly penalizes many small businesses simply because they operate from a home rather than from a store front, office building, or industrial park.

Mr. President, until the Soliman decision, small business owners and professionals who dedicate a space in their homes to use for business activities were generally allowed to deduct the expenses of the home office if they met the following conditions: First, the space in the home was used solely and exclusively on a regular basis as an office; and second, the deduction claimed was not greater than the income earned by the business. Through the Soliman case, the Supreme Court has narrowed significantly the availability of this deduction by requiring that the home office be the principal business location of the taxpayer. This requirement that the home office be the principal business location has proven to be impossible to meet for many taxpayers with legitimate home-office expenses.

For example, under the Soliman decision, a self-employed plumber who generates business income by performing services in the homes of his customers would be denied a deduction for a home office. This is because, under the rules, his home office is not considered his principal place of business because the business income is generated in the homes of the customers and not in his home office. This is the case even though the home office is where he receives telephone messages, keeps his business records, plans his advertising, stores his tools and supplies, and fills out Federal tax forms. In fact, having a full-time employee in the office who keeps the books and sets up appointments would still not result in a home-office deduction for the plumber. This is preposterous, Mr. President, and we need to correct it. My bill would rectify this result by allowing the home office to qualify as the principal place of business if the essential administrative or management activities of the business are performed there.

The truly ironic effect of the Supreme Court's decision is that a taxpayer who rents office space outside the home is allowed a full deduction, but one who tries to economize by working at home is penalized. This makes no sense to me.

The Home Office Deduction Act of 1995 is designed to restore the deduction for home-office expenses to pre-Soliman law. Rather than requiring taxpayers to meet the new criteria set out by the Court, the bill allows a home office to meet the definition of a "principal place of business" if it is the location where the essential administrative or management activities are conducted on a regular and systematic basis by the taxpayer. To avoid possible abuses, the bill requires that the taxpayer have no other location for the performance of these essential administrative or management activities.

Mr. President, today's job market is rapidly changing. New technologies have been developed and continually improved that allow instant communication around the once expansive globe. There is even talk of virtual offices, which are equipped only with a telephone and a hookup for a portable computer. These mobile communications have revolutionized the definition of the traditional office. No longer is there a need to establish a business downtown. Employees are telecommunicating by facsimile, modem, and telephone. Today, both a husband and wife could work without leaving their home and the attention of their children. In this new age, redefining the deduction for home-office expenses is vital. Our tax policy should not discriminate against home businesses simply because a taxpayer makes the choice, often based on economic or family considerations, to operate out of the home.

In most cases, startup businesses are very short on cash. Yet, for many, ultimate success depends on the ability to hold out for just a few more months. In these situations, even a relatively small tax deduction for the expenses of the home office can make a critical difference. It is important to note that some of America's fastest growing and most dynamic companies originated in the spare bedroom or the garage of the founder. Our tax policies should support those who dare to take risks. Many of tomorrow's jobs will come from entrepreneurs who are struggling to survive in a home-based business.

Mr. President, the home-office deduction is targeted at these small business men and women, entrepreneurs, and independent contractors who have no other place besides the home to perform the essential administrative or management activities of the business. The Soliman decision drastically reduced the effectiveness and fairness of this deduction and must be reversed.

This legislation can also have an important effect on rural areas, such as in my home State of Utah. Many small business owners and professionals in rural areas must spend a great deal of time on the road, meeting clients, customers, or patients. It is likely that many of my rural constituents will be unable to meet the requirements for the home-office deduction under the Soliman decision. Mr. President, we must help these taxpayers, not hurt them, in their efforts to contribute to the economy and support their families.

The Home Office Deduction Act of 1995 not only has strong bipartisan support in the Congress, but also has the support of the following organizations: The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, the National Federation of Independent Businesses, the Family Research Council, the Small Business Legislative Council, the National Association of the Self-Employed, the National Association of the Remodeling Industry, the National Association of Small Business Investment Cos., the Direct Selling Association, the Promotional Products Association International, the Illinois Women's Economic Development Summit, the Alliance of Independent Store Owners and Professionals, the American Veterinary Medical Association, the Bureau of Wholesale Sales Representatives, the National Association of Home Builders, the International Home

Furnishings Representatives Association, the National Association of Women Business Owners, Communicat- ing for Agriculture, and the National Society of Public Accountants.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join us as a cosponsor of this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 327

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Home Office Deduction Act of 1995".

SEC. 2. CLARIFICATION OF DEFINITION OF PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS.

Subsection (f) of section 280A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) as paragraphs (3), (4), and (5), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS.—For purposes of subsection (c), a home office shall in any case qualify as the principal place of business if—

"(A) the office is the location where the taxpayer's essential administrative or management activities are conducted on a regular and systematic (and not incidental) basis by the taxpayer, and

"(B) the office is necessary because the taxpayer has no other location for the performance of the essential administrative or management activities of the business."

SEC. 3. TREATMENT OF STORAGE OF PRODUCT SAMPLES.

Paragraph (2) of section 280A(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking "inventory" and inserting "inventory or product samples".

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

• Mr. LIERBERMAN, Mr. President, I am delighted to join in the introduction of this important bill to restore the home-office deduction. As an original cosponsor of this bill in the last Congress, I hope that we will succeed in passing this bill in the 104th Congress.

After being turned down by two tax courts, the IRS succeeded in narrowing the definition of the home-office deduction by taking their case to the Supreme Court. In essence, the early 1993 decision narrowed the home-office deduction test to businesses where income is generated in the home and to businesses where customers come to the home.

These new tests are flawed. They disallow the deduction for a whole host of legitimate home businesses. Take plumbers or house painters. Both plumbers and painters may run virtually all aspects of their businesses from the home but in the end they must travel to the customer. A plumber simply cannot insist that a bathtub be brought to the office. There is a clear and compelling reason for a house painter to make house calls.

Mr. President, this issue is of particular importance to my home State of Connecticut where laid-off workers are using severance packages to start businesses out of their homes, where underemployed workers are making ends meet through part-time home businesses. There are people I think of as forced entrepreneurs. They are people who have struck out on their own in such numbers that they appear to be showing up in labor statistics in my region of the country. To quote an October 1993 report by the New England Economic Project:

Households have been reporting more buoyant employment conditions than establishments have. The number of New Englanders now indicating they are working is 2 percent higher than a year earlier. This upturn appears to reflect a rise in self-employment and the emergence of small young businesses that are not yet tabulated in the establishment survey. In other words, people may be adjusting to shrinking job opportunities at the region's traditional employers by becoming entrepreneurs.

Mr. President, these rules take us in the wrong direction. They ignore the trend toward home-based businesses by those who have lost traditional office jobs, they ignore those who are working second jobs to make ends meet, and they ignore those parents who choose to stay at home with the children while still earning a much-needed income.

In the past, there have undoubtedly been abuses of this deduction. I believe there has been cause to tighten these rules. But the solution to these abuses has clearly not been found. To exclude whole sectors of legitimate home-office businesses is hardly the answer to the problem of abuse of this deduction. I should also point out that in this economy, the last thing we should be doing is hurting legitimate businesses.

I encourage my colleagues to join me as a sponsor of this legislation. •

S. 330. A bill to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 to require producers of an agricultural commodity for which an acreage limitation program is in effect to pay certain costs as a condition of agricultural loans, purchases, and payment, and for other purposes.

S. 329. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to submit a plan to Congress to achieve full and fair payment for Bureau of Reclamation water used for agricultural purposes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

WATER SUBSIDY LEGISLATION

• Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, yesterday all Senate offices received a copy of a new report entitled "Green Scissors," written by Friends of the Earth and the National Taxpayers Union and supported by 23 other environmental and consumer groups. The premise of the report is that there are a number of subsidies and projects, totalling $33 billion in all, that could be cut to both reduce the deficit and benefit the environment. This report coalesces what I and many others in the Senate have long known, we must be diligent in eliminating practices that can no longer be justified in light of our enormous annual deficit and national debt.

I am pleased today to reintroduce two related pieces of legislation that I introduced in the 103d Congress aimed at reducing water subsidies that cost the Federal taxpayers millions of dollars each year. This legislation was profiled in the "Green Scissors" report, and the high cost of these subsidies was highlighted in yesterday's Washington Post, New York Times, and USA Today. These are part of a series of subsidy reducing measures that I will propose in the 104th Congress. The first bill, amends the Agricultural Act of 1949 to require agricultural producers that grow a crop for which an acreage limitation program is in effect to pay the full cost of water provided by the Federal Government. The second bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to submit a plan to Congress to continue these savings by highlighting ways to eliminate water subsidies for agricultural producers growing crops that do not fall under the commodity program.

Mr. President, the first bill eliminates multiple subsidies codified in our Federal law which provides dual payments to agricultural producers—one as a direct payment to limit production of certain surplus crops and the other as a discount, undercharging for federally subsidized water to produce these crops. Its premise is simple. If an agricultural producer is receiving Federal payments under a Federal acreage limitation program—payments designed to discourage production of a particular crop—that producer is not eligible to receive below-cost water from the Federal Government to produce the crop which the Federal Government is paying the producer not to grow. In other words, the Federal taxpayers should not be asked on the one hand to provide payments to discourage production of a crop while at the same time paying for the delivery of below-cost water for that same crop.

It has been estimated that the cost of providing below-cost water to agriculture producers in the acreage limitation program costs the Federal Government between $66 and $830 million each year. The Department of Agriculture pays farmers approximately $500 million not to grow these same crops. Mr. President, these double payments cannot continue. Elimination of western water subsidies, and a wide range of reclamation subsidies, should be pursued as legitimate deficit reduction opportunities. It is clear that the conflicting policies of the Federal Government in this area are examples of Federal waste and abuse.

The second bill, Mr. President, creates an institutional obligation to review agricultural water subsidy practices, and provides Congress with important information necessary to proceeding along a path of reducing burdens on the Federal budget. I am proud to be joined by my colleague from Wisconsin, Senator KOHL, introducing this measure. The Bureau of Reclamation will be required to develop a plan for charging accurate water prices no later than September 1995 and to report that plan to Congress. At that time I will ask my colleagues to think aggressively about new legislative changes that may be needed to bring market prices to irrigation water provided by the Federal Government.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I am pleased that these bills will be among the first of major efforts by this Senate to seek opportunities to reduce the deficit by reforming subsidy practices. I will continue to remain committed to that goal. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. KOHL:

S. 331. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for the rollover of gain from the sale of farm assets into an individual retirement account; to the Committee on Finance.

FAMILY FARM RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT

• Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Family Farm Retirement Equity Act of 1995, a bill to help improve the security of our Nation's retired farmers.

As we begin the 104th Congress, we can anticipate legislative action dealing with the tax treatment of retirement savings. President Clinton has laid out his proposals for changes in tax rules on savings, and the Republicans have made their proposed changes to the individual retirement account rules, as well; 1995 will also be the year that Congress reauthorizes the farm bill. This heightened attention to both retirement taxation issues and farm income issues affords this Congress the perfect opportunity to address an issue of great importance to rural America: farmer retirement.

Farming is a highly capital-intensive business. To the extent that the average farmer reaps any profits from his or her farming operation, much of that income is directly reinvested into the farm. Rarely are there opportunities for farmers to put money aside in individual retirement accounts. Instead, farmers tend to rely on the sale of their accumulated capital assets, such as real estate, livestock, and machinery, in order to provide the income to sustain them during retirement. All too often, farmers are finding that the lump-sum payments of capital gains taxes levied on those assets leave little for retirement. It is with that problem in mind that I am introducing the Family Farm Retirement Equity Act.

This legislation would provide retiring farmers the opportunity to rollover the proceeds from the sale of their farms into a tax-deferred retirement account. Instead of paying a large lump-sum capital gains tax at the point of sale, the income from the sale of a farm would be taxed only as it is withdrawn from the retirement account. Such a change in method of taxation would help prevent the financial distress that many farmers now face upon retirement.

Another concern that I have about rural America is the diminishing interest of our younger rural citizens in continuing in farming. Because this legislation will facilitate the transition of our older farmers into a successful retirement, the Family Farm Retirement Equity Act will also pave the way for a more graceful transition of our younger farmers toward farm ownership. While low prices and low profits in farming will continue to take their toll on our younger farmers, I believe that this will be one tool we can use to make farming more viable for the next generation.

This proposal is supported by farmers throughout the country, and I am proud to introduce this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. D'AMATO, and Mr. LEVIN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 75

Whereas January 30, 1995, is the 113th anniversary of the birth of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in Hyde Park, New York;

Whereas almost a half-century after the death of President Roosevelt, his legacy remains central to the public life of the Nation;

Whereas before becoming President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt served in the New York State Senate and later was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and in 1928 became Governor of New York;

Whereas as President of the United States between 1933 and 1945, Franklin Delano Roosevelt guided the Nation through 2 of the greatest crises of the twentieth century, the Great Depression and the Second World War, and in so doing, changed the course of American politics;

Whereas a memorial in stone in the District of Columbia will soon be dedicated to his memory, as authorized by Congress in 1955; and

Whereas a month commemorating the history of Franklin Delano Roosevelt would complement the dedication of the memorial: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That October, 1996, should be designated "Roosevelt History Month". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to submit a resolution designating October 1996 as "Roosevelt History Month," to coincide with the dedication of the new Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial now being built in the District of Columbia. A national history month celebrating the achievements of Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt is an appropriate and necessary complement to the new memorial.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was born on January 30, 1882, in Hyde Park, NY, and entered politics in 1910 with his election to the New York State Senate. Later, he was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy and then sought and lost a bid for a seat in the U.S. Senate. Despite a debilitating attack of polio, he went on to become Governor of New York in 1928, establishing New York's first program of unemployment relief.

As President of the United States from 1933 to 1945, Franklin Delano Roosevelt guided this Nation through two of the gravest crises of the 20th century, the Great Depression and the Second World War. In so doing, he defined our national stature and secured his place as one of the greatest American Presidents of the 20th century.

It is therefore fitting that our country honor his efforts, and those of his wife, with a celebration of Roosevelt History Month. Citizens and organizations across the Nation may observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities to learn about a President and a generation who gave much to the Nation. Soon, a new granite memorial will be dedicated to President Roosevelt. I rise today and urge my colleagues to join me in dedicating a month to his legacy, a memorial of thought and history to complement the one of stone.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO IONE DUKE

• Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding Kentuckian. Ms. Ione Duke of Morgantown, KY, gives fully and wholeheartedly of herself to her church and community. She deserves to be recognized for her many contributions as she turns 90 years young.

Ms. Duke joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1915. For the past 79 years Ms. Duke has devoted much of her time to religious service throughout western Kentucky. Among her accomplishments are serving as the first president of the Local Missionary Society and Organization, her appointment by the Bowling Green district as the Rural Woman of Kentucky, and presiding as the church choir director and pianist from her youth until 1980.

Ms. Duke's musical talent allowed her to pursue a career in teaching public school music and directing high school choir in several schools throughout Butler County. Ms. Duke has also directed countywide cantatas that encompassed a group of singers from all denominations.

Ms. Duke has been actively involved in many civic organizations. She is a member of the Historical Society of both Butler and Ohio Counties. She was involved in the Women's Civic League. She has contributed her energy and talents to many other organizations and projects in which she volunteered tirelessly.

Mr. President, Ms. Duke's church and community should be very pleased to have such an outstanding member. Her community owes her a debt of gratitude and I feel that she deserves much recognition for her accomplishments and contributions. It is impossible to list everything Ms. Duke has done to make western Kentucky a better place, but she is truly an outstanding person and I extend to her my congratulations on her many accomplishments. ●

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I believe that many senior citizens will be confused by the floor debates and amendments on Social Security offered last week during debates on the unfunded mandates legislation, and in the future in regard to the balanced budget amendment. Such confusion is understandable. Both sides tend to claim to be protecting Social Security.

Last week, I voted for Senator HARKIN's amendment to the S. 1, the Unfunded Mandate Reform Act of 1995, instead of Senator KEMPTHORNE's amendment, because I believed that the language of the Harkin amendment was much stronger language to protect Social Security trust funds if a constitutional amendment to balance the budget is adopted.

Personally, I oppose a balanced budget amendment, and I hope that over the course, of time people will understand how such an amendment will affect programs that are vital to the citizens in their States and that such a balanced budget amendment will not be added to the Constitution.

But because the fate of a constitutional amendment to balance the budget remains unclear, the Harkin amendment is a very important symbol of the intention of the Senate not to jeopardize or play games with Social Security or use the Social Security trust fund in calculations to balance the budget.

I voted last week for Senator HARKIN's amendment which says that Social Security should be exempt in any calculations required by a balanced budget. I did it to protect the Social Security trust funds and to reassure senior citizens who rely on Social Security benefits. My record in fighting to protect Social Security and senior citizens is clear. ●

In addition to the annual induction of two new members, the Hitters Hall of Fame will recognize four active players, two from the National League and two from the American League, for their hitting prowess. This year the Hall would like to recognize Tony Gwynn, San Diego Padres, Jeff Bagwell, Houston Astros, from the National League; and Frank Thomas, Chicago White Sox, and Ken Griffey, Jr., Seattle Mariners, of the American League.

As you know, Mr. President, my family has a long history of association with major league baseball. It is a great honor for me to be able to recognize these heroes of America's national pastime, and I am proud that their memories will live on in the Ted Williams Museum in Hernando, FL. ●

EVERETT MCKINLEY DIRKSEN: PRAGMATIC CONSERVATIVE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, Everett McKinley Dirksen of Pekin, IL, who served this body so well as the Republican leader of the U.S. Senate, was one of the most capable political figures of his time and of the modern era.

Historians generally acknowledge, for instance, that without Everett Dirksen's backing, such landmark legislation as the 1964 Civil Rights Act almost certainly would not have passed.

Thomas McArdle, offers an insightful profile of Everett Dirksen in a recent article published by Investor's Business Daily.

Mr. President, I call the attention of my colleagues to this article and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SEN. EVERETT DIRKSEN: HE EPITOMIZED THE NOTION OF "PRAGMATIC CONSERVATISM"

(By Thomas McArdle)

Today, the country's most influential Republican leader, Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., proclaims that he will cooperate with President Clinton, but is unwilling to compromise.

What a contrast to the late Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen, who was fond of replying to detractors who accused him of not standing for very much, "If there were no compromise, there might not have been a Constitution of the United States."

Dirksen is remembered as a honeytoned orator who could endear himself even to a hostile audience. His baggyclothes and unkempt hair were legendary, but it was a rumpled, folksy image he deliberately cultivated.

Moreover, he was far from being just the colorful, lovable clown political cartoonists loved to peg him as. He may have been the senator who delivered an annual speech in praise of the marigold, but there was substance underneath of idiosyncracies.

Dirksen was both in Pekin, Ill., part of Rep. Abraham Lincoln's congressional district in the 1840s. As a boy, Dirksen knew some old-timers in the town who actually knew Lincoln personally. His sentimentality towards Lincoln would pervade his speeches and statements all of Dirksen's career.

His parents were immigrants from Ostfriesland in northern Germany. His father, like many of his fellow German-immigrant and native-born neighbors in Pekin, had an unquestioning loyalty to the Republican Party unheard of today. Dirksen's middle name came from then-Ohio Governor William McKinley, soon to become the next Republican president. His twin brother was named after the sitting GOP speaker of the House and his older brother after the last Republic president, Benjamin Harrison.

When he was five, Dirksen's father suffered a debilitating stroke and the young sons were forced to work hard on the family's small farm. Rising before dawn each workday was a habit Dirksen would maintain all his life.

He displayed extraordinary political acumen early on, gaining his first term in the House of Representatives by beating a multimillionaire, five-term GOP incumbent in the party primary. He then handily defeated the Democratic challenger—in 1932, the year voters were so mad at Republicans for the Great Depression that Franklin Roosevelt won the presidency in a landslide and a national realignment in favor of the Democratic Party began. Dirksen won the district by almost as great a margin as Roosevelt.

Republican leaders were wary of him even this early. He had run a campaign aimed at garnering the votes of those who would be supporting FDR, and even praised Democratic candidates for other offices.

It was a pragmatism that would characterize Dirksen throughout his career. On his death in 1969, conservative columnist William F. Buckley, Jr., then much more a firebrand than today, would assess the senator in an otherwise glowing obituary as "so much the pragmatist that you couldn't really count on him in a pinch."

The Chicago Sun-Times once estimated that in his 17 years in the House of Representatives, Dirksen changed his mind 62 times on foreign policy, 31 times on military affairs, and 70 times on agriculture issues. Then, in the Senate he outdid that record.

His most famous about-faces were on the nuclear test-ban treaty and the Civil Rights Act. In the summer of 1963 he opposed the enactment of federal guarantees of the right of blacks to use any hotel, restaurant or other public accommodation on property rights grounds, the core of the proposal by President Kennedy, though he supported its other provisions.

The next year, with Johnson having replaced the assassinated JFK, some savvy maneuvering by Democrats for Republican support in the House forced Dirksen in the Senate to soften. He ended up becoming instrumental in passage of the Civil Rights Act, using his party to provide the margin of victory.

Sen. Richard Russell, D-Ga., "says the Attorney General (Bobby Kennedy) has nailed my skin to the barn door to dry," Dirksen told a reporter in typical Dirksenesque language. "Well, nobody has hung up my conscience and my sense of history to dry. Pardon me for the sermon."

Dirksen also immediately opposed upon hearing about it the administration's treaty with the Soviet Union to ban nuclear tests in the atmosphere. But by September Dirksen realized that public support for the treaty was very strong. He ended up turning 180 degrees, supporting the test ban entirely, but only after he persuaded Kennedy to write a letter assuring that the U.S. nuclear weapons program would not be slowed down.

"They called him the Wizard of Ooze," recalled former National Review Publisher William A. Rusher, author of "The Rise of the Right," a chronicle of conservatism's struggle to power in the GOP. But Dirksen's smoothness never seemed to leave him alienated from conservatives the way many of today's Republican "pragmatists" are. Much of that undoubtedly stemmed from his support of isolationist Sen. Robert Taft's R-Ohio, failed run for the party presidential nomination in 1952 and Dirksen's opposition to the Senate's censuring of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis., in 1954 (though he severed relations with McCarthy very soon after that).

"Certainly, speaking as a conservative, I regarded Everett Dirksen as a friend and I think he would be delighted to see all that's happened," Rusher added.

Lee Edwards, president of the Center for International Relations and author of a soon-to-be-released biography of Barry Goldwater, noted that Dirksen had a strong role early on the Goldwater's rise to power.

On a trip to speak to the Arizona GOP, Dirksen personally took Goldwater aside and advised him to run for the U.S. Senate when the Arizonan was only a city councilman.

"Goldwater has admitted on more than one occasion that it did make a difference in his decision to run," according to Edwards.

His heavy smoking and drinking eventually caught up with Dirksen and he died of complications from lung cancer surgery in 1969. One of the three Senate office buildings across the street from the U.S. Capitol bears his name, the two others named after Democratic senators. He lay in state under the dome of the Capitol on the same black catafalque as Lincoln, then only the third senator so honored.●

TRIBUTE TO KATHERINE M. LIDDLE

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to pay tribute to Katherine M. Liddle who died in Reston, VA, on December 1, 1994. Mrs. Liddle was a long-time resident of Pineville, KY, and will be remembered and missed by many.

Mrs. Liddle was born in Oaks, KY. She was a graduate of Pineville High School and Union College in Barbourville, KY. Mrs. Liddle began teaching within the county system in a one-room school with six grades. In 1973 she began teaching the sixth grade at the Pineville Independent School where she finished her teaching career 20 years later.

Mrs. Liddle was the wife of the late James J. Liddle. She had one son, Jack, who now resides in Reston, VA. She was a long-time member of the First Baptist Church in Pineville, KY.

Mr. President, I ask that my colleagues join me in sending the Chamber's sincere condolences to the family of Katherine M. Liddle. I am confident that her strength of character will remain a standard of excellence for generations to come.●

HUMAN RIGHTS REPORT ON TIBET

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today the Department of State has taken an important step toward recognizing the reality of the status of Tibet. The annual "Country Reports on Human Rights Practices" was released today and for the first time there is a separate section on Tibet.

For years there has been a fundamental difference in the way Congress and the executive branch have viewed Tibet. While the executive branch has attempted to obscure the fact that at one time we did support Tibet, Congress has stated its determination that Tibet is an occupied country. By separating the Tibet section from the China section on the human rights report, there is finally an acknowledgement that the administration recognizes Tibet as distinct from China.

This new Tibet section fulfills one aspect of a provision which I introduced and was later signed into law as part of the State Department authorization act for fiscal year 1994-95. While I do not agree with certain portions of the report on Tibet, it is not without merit, and its authors deserve respect as able diplomats.

This will send a clear signal to those in Beijing as well as those in Dharmasala, India where the Dalai Lama lives in exile, that the United States recognizes the special situation the Tibetans face. Those in Dharmasala have long known Congress supports them; now they can more clearly gauge the sentiments of the administration.

This has been confusing. As the eminent journalist A.M. Rosenthal, who visited the Tibetans in exile in 1988, wrote:

People in Dharmasala are understandably hazy about the intricacies of American government. They cannot quite get it straight how the Congress can be so warm to Tibet and the State Department and the White House make it clear that they intend to disregard Congress and continue the sellout of Tibet.

Perhaps this marks a new chapter in United States foreign policy in which support for the people of Tibet will no longer be hazy.●

records directly from the claimant's physicians, health care providers and entities that provided medical care; and

(vii) with respect to demand for a compensation that includes an amount for medical expenses, wages lost or other special damages suffered as a consequence of the injury, relevant documentation thereof, including records of earnings if a claimant is self-employed and employer records of earnings if a claimant is employed.

(C) A claimant's attorney shall provide copies of each demand for compensation under this paragraph to the claimant and to each allegedly liable party at the time of the dispatch of the demand for compensation. Where reproduction costs would be significant relative to the size of the settlement offer, the claimant's attorney, may, in the alternative, offer other forms of access to the materials, convenient and at reasonable cost to allegedly responsible party's attorney.

(D) A contingent fee attorney who fails to file a demand for compensation under this paragraph shall not be entitled to any fee greater than 10 percent of any settlement or judgment received by the claimant client after reasonable expenses have been deducted.

(B) If within 30 days after the date of the receipt of a demand for compensation under paragraph (4), an allegedly liable party notifies the attorney of the claimant that such party seeks to have a medical examination of the claimant, and the claimant is not made available for such examination within 10 days after the date of the receipt of such a request, the 60-day period described under subparagraph (A) shall be extended by one day for each day that such request is not honored after the expiration of such 10-day period. Any such extension shall also include a further period of 10 days from the date of the completion of the medical examination.

(C) A response under this paragraph shall be open for acceptance for a minimum of 30 days from the date of the receipt of such response by the attorney of the claimant and shall state whether such response expires in 30 days or remains open for acceptance for a longer period or until notice of withdrawal is given.

(D) A settlement offer in a response under this subsection may be increased during the 60-day period described under subparagraph (A) by issuing an additional response.

(E) If an additional response has been sent under this paragraph, the time for acceptance shall be 10 days from the date of the receipt of such additional response by the attorney of the claimant or 30 days from the date of the receipt of the initial response, whichever is later, unless the additional response specifies a longer period of time for acceptance as described under subparagraph (C).

(6) MATERIAL TO ACCOMPANY SETTLEMENT OFFER.—An allegedly responsible party and the attorney of such party shall include in any response stating a settlement offer under paragraph (5) copies of materials in their possession concerning the claim upon which the allegedly liable party relied in making a settlement offer, except for material which such party believes in good faith would not be discoverable by the claimant during the course of litigation. Where reproduction costs would be significant relative to the size of the settlement offer, the allegedly responsible party, may, in the alternative, offer other forms of access to the materials, convenient and at reasonable cost to claimant's attorney.

(7) EFFECT OF PRE-DEMAND SETTLEMENT OFFER.—A settlement offer under this subsection to a claimant represented by a contingent fee attorney made prior to the receipt of a demand for compensation, which is open for acceptance for 60 days or more from the time of its receipt and which conforms to the requirements of paragraph (6), shall be considered a post-retention offer and shall have the same effect under this subsection as if it were a response to a demand for compensation.

(8) PRE-RETENTION OFFER.—(A) An attorney retained after a claimant has received a pre-retention offer under this subsection may not enter into an agreement with the claimant to receive a contingent fee based upon or payable from the proceeds of the pre-retention offer which remains in effect.

(B) An attorney entering a fee agreement that would effectively result in a claimant's paying a percentage of a pre-retention offer to the attorney for prosecuting the claim shall be considered to have charged an unreasonable and excessive fee. With respect to an attorney where a pre-retention offer has been provided—

(i) the attorney may contract with a claimant to receive an hourly rate fee or fixed fee for advising the claimant regarding the pre-retention offer; or

(ii) the attorney may contract with a claimant to receive a contingent fee applicable to any amount received by a claimant, by settlement or judgment, above the amount of the pre-retention offer.

(9) POST-RETENTION OFFER WHERE A PRE-RETENTION OFFER HAS BEEN MADE.—A claimant in receipt of a pre-retention offer under this subsection which such claimant has not accepted and who later receives a post-retention offer which is accepted, is not obligated to pay the retained attorney a fee greater than the hourly rate fee calculated on the basis of the number of hours the attorney has worked on behalf of claimant in furtherance of the claimant's claim, but not exceeding 20 percent of the excess of the post-retention offer less the pre-retention offer.

(10) POST-RETENTION OFFER WHERE NO PRE-RETENTION OFFER HAS BEEN MADE.—A claimant not in receipt of a pre-retention offer under this subsection who has received a post-retention offer which is accepted, is not obligated to pay the retained attorney a fee greater than the hourly rate fee calculated on the basis of the number of hours the attorney has worked on behalf of claimant in furtherance of claimant's claim, but not exceeding 10 percent of the first $100,000, plus 5 percent of any amount above $100,000, of the accepted post-retention offer after reasonable expenses have been deducted.

(11) CALCULATION OF ATTORNEY FEE WHEN THERE IS A SUBSEQUENT RESOLUTION OF THE CLAIM.—If an allegedly liable party's post-retention settlement offer under this subsection is rejected, but a later settlement offer is accepted, or there is a judgment in favor of claimant, the claimant, irrespective of any pre-retention offer, is not obligated to pay the retained attorney a fee greater than the sum of—

(A) the amount of the fee that would have been calculated under paragraph (10) had the post-retention offer been accepted but only as applied to the subsequent settlement offer or judgment up to the amount of the post-retention offer; and

(B) the product of multiplying the contingent fee percentage negotiated between the contingent fee attorney and claimant and the amount by which the subsequent settlement or judgment exceeds the post-retention offer, after reasonable expenses have been deducted.

(12) PROVISION OF CLOSING STATEMENT.—Upon receipt of any settlement or judgment under this subsection, and prior to disbursement thereof, a contingent fee attorney shall provide the claimant with a written statement detailing how the proceeds are to be distributed, including the amount of the expenses paid out or to be paid out of the proceeds, the amount of the fee, how the fee amount is calculated, and the amount due the claimant.

(13) EFFECT ON CONTRAVENING AGREEMENTS.—(A) A contingent fee attorney who enters into a fee agreement with a claimant which violates the provisions of this subsection is deemed to have charged an unreasonable and excessive fee.

(B) A claimant who has entered into an agreement with a contingent fee attorney which violates the provisions of this subsection is entitled to recover from the attorney any reasonable fees and costs incurred to establish such agreement violated the provisions of this subsection.

(C) The failure by the claimant's attorney, or the attorney for an alleged responsible party, to comply with the provisions of this subsection may be considered grounds for disciplinary proceedings and sanctions as determined appropriate by the licensing or regulatory agency or court of the State in which the claim arose.

(c) AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.—Rule 11(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is amended—

(1) in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall";

(2) in subdivision (1)(A) in the third sentence by striking out "may" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(3) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by amending the first sentence to read as follows: "A sanction imposed for a violation of this rule shall be sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated and to compensate the parties that were injured by such conduct."; and

(B) in the second sentence by striking ", if imposed on motion and warranted for effective deterrence,".

(d) PREVAILING PARTY COSTS AND ATTORNEYS' FEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), in any civil action filed against any person in any Federal or State court, based on any cause of action (including, but not limited to negligence, strict or product liability, breach of implied warranty or professional malpractice) in which damages are sought for tortious physical or mental injury, property damage, or economic loss the court may award each prevailing party costs and reasonable attorneys' fees.

(2) AMOUNT OF AWARD.—An award of costs and reasonable attorneys' fees under paragraph (1) may not exceed—

(A) the actual cost incurred by the nonprevailing party or the attorneys' fee payable for services in connection with such civil action; or

(B) if no such cost was incurred by the nonprevailing party due to a contingency fee agreement, an amount equal to the reasonable costs that would have been incurred by the nonprevailing party for a noncontingent attorneys' fee payable for services in connection with such civil action.

(3) LIMITATION.—

(A) Notwithstanding paragraph (1) or (2), the court shall not award an attorney's fee in any case in which the nonprevailing party—

(i) had a taxable income of less than $75,000 in the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the civil action was filed, if the nonprevailing party is an individual; or

(ii) had an average taxable income of less than $50,000 for the 3 calendar years preceding the calendar year in which the civil action was filed, if the nonprevailing party is not an individual.

(B) The court shall retain discretion to refuse to award or may reduce the amount awarded as an attorney's fee under paragraph (1) to the extent the court finds would be in the interests of justice.

“(7) The term ‘intentional misconduct’ means conduct, whether by act or omission, which intentionally causes, or attempts to cause, by the one who acts or fails to act, injury or with knowledge that injury is substantially certain to follow. A person does not intentionally cause, or attempt to cause, injury if such party's act or failure to act is for the purpose of averting bodily harm to such party or another.

“(8) The term ‘replacement services loss’ means reasonable expenses incurred in obtaining ordinary and necessary services from others, not members of the injured individual's household or family, in lieu of those the injured individual would have performed for the benefit of the household or family, but does not include benefits received by the injured individual.

“(9) The term ‘serious injury’ means bodily injury which results in dismemberment, significant and permanent loss of an important bodily function, or significant and permanent scarring or disfigurement.

“(10) The term ‘wanton conduct’ means conduct that the allegedly responsible party must have realized was excessively dangerous, done heedlessly and recklessly, and with a conscious disregard to the consequences or the rights and safety of the claimant.

“(11) The term ‘work loss’ means loss of income from work the injured individual would have performed if the individual had not been injured, reduced by any income from substitute work actually performed by the individual or by income the individual would have earned in available appropriate substitute work that the individual was capable of performing but unreasonably failed to undertake.

“(b)(1) In any civil action or claim against any person, filed in any Federal or State court, based on any cause of action to recover damages or compensation for tortious physical or mental injury, property damage, or economic loss, any allegedly liable defendant shall have the option to offer, not later than 120 days after an injury or after the initiation of the liability claim, to compensate a claimant for reasonable economic loss, including future economic loss, less amounts available from collateral sources, and including reasonable hourly attorneys' fees for the claimant. A claimant who agrees in writing to such offer shall be foreclosed from bringing or continuing a civil action against any allegedly liable defendant and any other individuals or entities included under subsection (c). The claimant may extend the time for receiving the offer.

“(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude a State from enacting a requirement that compensation benefits offered under paragraph (1) shall include a minimum dollar amount in response to a claim for serious injury.

“(c) An offer under subsection (b) may include other allegedly liable defendants, individuals, or entities that were involved in the events which give rise to the civil action, regardless of the theory of liability on which the claim is based, with their consent.

“(d) Future economic damages shall be payable to an individual under this section as such damages occur.

“(e) If, after an offer is made under subsection (b), the participants in the offer dispute their relative contributions to the payments to be made to the individual, such disputes shall be resolved through binding arbitration in accordance with applicable rules and procedures established by the Attorney General of the United States.

“(f)(1) In no event shall a civil action be foreclosed under subsection (b) against any allegedly liable party if the injured individual elects to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the allegedly liable party caused the injury by intentional or wanton misconduct.

“(2) This subsection shall not apply with respect to a personal injury unless the injured individual provides the allegedly liable party making an offer with a notice of such an election not later than 90 days after the date the offer of compensation benefits was made.

“(g) Nothing in this section shall be construed to effect any applicable statute of limitations of any State or of the United States.”.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 111 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

“1659. Early offer and recovery mechanisms.”.

SEC. 7. REFORM OF JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY.

(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term “concerted action” or “acting in concert” means the participation in joint conduct by 2 or more persons who agreed to jointly participate in such conduct with actual knowledge of the wrongfulness of the conduct.

(b) IN GENERAL.—(1) Except as provided under subsection (c), joint and several liability may not be applied to any civil action or claim against any person, filed in any Federal or State court, based on any cause of action to recover damages or compensation for tortious physical or mental injury, property damage, or economic loss.

(2) A person found liable for damages in any such action—

(A) may be found liable, if at all, only for damages directly attributable to the person's pro rata share of fault or responsibility; and

(B) may not be found liable for damages attributable to the pro rata share of fault or responsibility of any other person (without regard to whether that person is a party to the action), including any person filing the action.

(c) LIMITATION.—This section shall not apply to persons acting in concert where the concerted action proximately caused the injury for which one or more persons are found liable for damages.

SEC. 8. SINGLE RECOVERY.

(a) INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.—In any civil action or claim against any person, filed in any Federal or State court, based on any cause of action to recover damages or compensation for tortious physical or mental injury, property damage, or economic loss, the court shall not allow the admission into evidence of proof of economic losses that have been or will be paid by—

(1) Federal, State, or other governmental disability, unemployment, or sickness programs;

(2) Federal, State, or other governmental or private health insurance programs;

(3) private or public disability insurance programs;

(4) employer wage continuation programs;

(5) any other program or compensation system, if the payment is intended to compensate the claimant for the same injury or disability which is the subject of the claim; or

(6) persons other than family members of the claimant.

(b) ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.—Only evidence of economic loss that has not or will not be paid by the sources described under subsection (a) shall be admissible in an action or claim covered by this section.

(c) ELIMINATION OF SUBROGATION.—An entity that is the source of the payments for losses that are inadmissible under subsection (a)—

(1) shall not recover any amount against the claimant;

(2) shall not be subrogated to the rights of the claimant against the defendant; and

(3) shall not have a lien against the claimant's judgment, on account of its payment to the claimant for economic loss.

(d) PRETRIAL DETERMINATION.—The determination of whether a claimant seeking damages or compensation has received, will receive, or is entitled to receive, payment from any one or more sources described under subsection (a) (1) through (6) shall be made by the court in pretrial proceedings.

SEC. 9. LIMITATION ON PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under section 1977A of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C. 1981a), the amount of punitive damages that may be awarded in any civil action or claim filed in any Federal or State court, based on any cause of action to recover damages or compensation for tortious physical or mental injury, property damage, or economic loss shall not exceed the greater of—

(1) 3 times the amount awarded to the claimant for the economic injury on which such claim is based; or

(2) $250,000.

(b) APPLICATION BY COURT.—This section shall be applied by the court and shall not be disclosed to the jury.

SEC. 10. ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.

(a) GENERAL POLICY.—The policy of the United States is to encourage the creation and use of alternative dispute resolution techniques, and to promote the expeditious resolution of such actions, because the traditional litigation process is not always suited to the timely, efficient, and inexpensive resolution of civil actions.

(b) NOTICE OF AVAILABILITY OF ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.—In any civil action or claim arising under any Federal law or in any diversity action in Federal court, each attorney who has made an appearance in the case and who represents one or more of the parties to the action shall, with respect to each party separately represented, advise the party of the existence and availability of alternative dispute resolution options, including extra judicial proceedings such as minitrials, third-party mediation, court supervised arbitration, and summary jury trial proceedings.

(c) CERTIFICATION OF NOTICE.—Each attorney described under subsection (b) shall, simultaneous with the filing of a complaint or a responsive pleading, file a certification to the court that the attorney has provided the notice required under subsection (b) to the client or clients of such attorney. The attorney shall state in the certification whether such client will agree to one or more of the alternative dispute resolution techniques.

(d) AGREEMENT TO PROCEED WITH ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.—If all parties to an action agree to proceed with one or more alternative dispute resolution proceedings, the court shall issue an appropriate order governing the conduct of such proceedings. The issuance of an order governing the proceedings shall constitute a waiver, by each party subject to the order, of the right to proceed further in court.

SEC. 11. RELIABILITY OF EXPERT EVIDENCE.

Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence is amended—

(1) by striking out “If” and inserting in lieu thereof “(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (b), if”;

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

“(b) ADEQUATE BASIS FOR OPINION.—Testimony in the form of an opinion by a witness that is based on scientific knowledge shall be inadmissible in evidence unless the court determines that such opinion is—

“(1) based on scientifically valid reasoning; and

“(2) sufficiently reliable so that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the dangers specified under rule 403.

(c) EXPERT OPINIONS ON NOVEL SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES OR DISCOVERIES.—Where testimony in the form of an opinion by a witness is sought to be used to establish a novel scientific principle or discovery, it shall be admissible only if the principle or discovery, or its scientific underpinning, is sufficiently established to have gained general acceptance in the field in which it belongs.

“(d) DISQUALIFICATION.—Testimony by a witness who is qualified as an expert under subsection (a) is inadmissible in evidence if such witness is entitled to receive any compensation directly or indirectly contingent on the legal disposition of any claim with respect to which such testimony is offered.”

SEC. 12. EXPRESS AUTHORIZATION FOR PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

“§ 1368. Private right of action

“No district court shall have jurisdiction over any civil action filed by a party based on a private right of action, unless such private right of action is expressly authorized in the statute on which such action is based.”

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

(c) STATE COURTS.—No Federal statute shall be construed to give rise to a private right of action in a State court, unless such private right of action is expressly authorized in the statute on which such action is based.

SEC. 13. APPLICABILITY.

(a) PREEMPTION.—This Act shall preempt and supersede other Federal or State laws only to the extent any such law is inconsistent with this Act. This Act shall not preempt any Federal or State law that provides for defenses in addition to those contained in this Act, places greater limitations on the amount of attorney's fees that can be collected, or additional disclosure requirements upon attorneys, or otherwise imposes restrictions on economic, noneconomic, or punitive damages. Any issue arising under this Act that is not governed by the provisions of this Act shall be governed by applicable Federal or State law.

(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed to—

(1) waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by any State under any provision of law;

(2) waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by the United States;

(3) affect the applicability of any provision of chapter 97 of title 28, United States Code;

(4) preempt State choice-of-law rules with respect to claims brought by a foreign nation or citizen of a foreign nation; or

(5) affect the right of any court to transfer venue or to apply the law of a foreign nation or to dismiss a claim of a foreign or of a citizen of a foreign nation on the ground of inconvenient forum.

(c) STATE ELECTION REGARDING APPLICABILITY.—A provision of this Act shall not apply to a State if such State enacts a statute—

(1) citing the authority of this subsection; and

(2) declaring the election of such State that such provision shall not apply to the State.

SEC. 14. SEVERABILITY.

If any provision of this Act or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of any provision to any other person or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 15. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect and apply to claims or actions filed on and after the date occurring 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

RECOGNITION OF ALBANIA AT THE HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a deserving, befitting occasion for Albania and the friends of Albania everywhere. Today we have rectified an unintentional omission of Albania from the scroll of the "Righteous Among Nations" here at the Holocaust Memorial Museum. This omission resulted from the fact that for more than 50 years Albania had been sealed behind a wall that was erected by one of the most repressive governments in this century. Its citizens were forbidden from any contact with the rest of the world, and its history was a forbidden topic of discussion among the Albanian population. One of the most noble chapters in that history is the contributions that the people of Albania made in shielding its Jewish population, as well as many Jews who fled to Albania, from the ravages of the Holocaust.

The evidence of this considerable contribution came to light when my good friends and colleagues, former Congressman Joseph DioGuardi, and Congressman TOM LANTOS visited Albania shortly after the fall of the Communist dictatorship there in 1990. They discovered there was hard evidence that during the dark days of the Second World War in this mostly Moslem country, people of conscience risked their lives to protect their fellow men, women, and children from the monstrously inhumane period we now call the Holocaust.

Former Congressman Joe DioGuardi brought back this rudimentary evidence and commenced the painstaking task of identifying the names of individuals and linking them to the heroic actions which we recognize today. Joe's research was then turned over to the experts in this country and to those associated with Yad Vashem, the Holocaust Memorial in Jerusalem, who after some period of time were able to verify the names of the Albanians which are now unveiled on the wall of the Righteous Gentiles—names which now are engraved in stone so that history will not once again be able to overlook them.

I salute Joe DioGuardi and TOM LANTOS for their excellent work in helping to add to our collective consciousness of the fact that out of even the most horrible evil, good can surface. In Albania, as in everywhere else in Europe that was subjected to the boot of the Nazis, people resisted, and attempted, at risk to their lives and those of their families, to protect the innocent people who were slated for extermination simply by virtue of their adherence to the Jewish faith.

To our Albanian friends joining us today, it is hoped the examples of your forebears whose names are now inscribed in this memorial will serve as an inspiration as we again face new conflicts fueled by ethnic hatred in the Balkans. May you preserve and keep alive their dedication, their spirit of toleration, and reverence for life.

UNFUNDED MANDATE REFORM ACT OF 1995

SPEECH OF

HON. LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 30, 1995

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5) to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments, to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and to provide information on the cost of Federal mandates on the private sector, and for other purposes.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Jackson-Lee/Clay amendment to H.R. 5 which will help ensure that the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act will not apply to, among other things, laws and regulations necessary to protect American children against the tragedy of hunger and homelessness.

In cities and rural areas throughout our Nation, millions of American men, women, and children go to sleep on our streets cold and hungry and without hope. It is estimated that twelve million children under age 18—one in five—go hungry each day. On any given night in Los Angeles County, there are up to 84,000 homeless people and, more tragically, 9,000 are children.

Chronic hunger and homelessness are among the greatest threats facing our Nation's children. At a time when they are in greatest need of adequate nutrition and shelter, hungry and homeless children are likely to have their physical and emotional growth and educational development permanently limited. If we doom the chance of American children to become productive workers by failing to invest in them and protect them now, we forge a dubious future for this Nation.

Since the 1970's, the Federal Government has recognized that it must play a major role in addressing homelessness and hunger for families and their children. We have recognized that we have a moral obligation of the highest order as the greatest democracy in the world to protect the most vulnerable members of our society—our children. Existing programs to supplement the nutritional needs of children are critically important to maintaining a safety net for children and their families.

At a time when we should be mounting an unrelenting attack on poverty in America, H.R. 5 threatens a massive retreat from the war on hunger and homelessness. The conditions of hunger and homelessness, and its resultant human suffering, are growing and pervasive problems that will only be exacerbated by the procedural barriers imposed by H.R. 5 and other provisions of the Republican contract with America.

Those who argue that the problem can be addressed through charitable groups are turning a deaf ear to the warnings of organizations such as Catholic Charities, one of the largest in the country, that clearly state they cannot shoulder this responsibility on their own.

We must not be so short sighted in our efforts to bring the Federal deficit under control to abandon our children and leave them without adequate nutrition or housing.

While the road to a total solution for hunger and homelessness is a long and difficult one, our responsibility as Members of Congress is clear: We must continue to protect American children from hunger and homelessness. The Jackson-Lee/Clay amendment is an important step in that direction.

TRIBUTE TO EDWARD HIDALGO

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to pay tribute to a former Secretary of the Navy, Edward Hidalgo, who recently passed away. Hidalgo, who served the Navy as the Secretary from 1979 to 1981 was also a lawyer in Washington who specialized in international corporate law.

Hidalgo, born in Mexico City, came to the United States in 1918 and grew up in New York. He graduated magna cum laude from Holy Cross College in 1933 and in 1936 he graduated from Columbia University Law School. He received another law degree in civil law from the University of Mexico Law School. He practiced law in New York before his service in the Navy.

He began his service in the Navy in 1942, during World War II, during which time he was assigned to the State Department where he was a legal advisor in 1942 and 1943. He was later assigned to the Pacific as an air combat intelligence officer aboard the carrier Enterprise. Hidalgo received the Bronze Star for his service.

Following World War II, in 1945, he worked on the Eberstadt Committee on the unification of the Armed Services. He was special assistant to Navy Secretary James Forrestal in 1945 and 1946. After which he continued to practice international law in Mexico and then Paris.

Hidalgo became the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for manpower, reserve affairs, and logistics in 1977. In October 1979, he became the Secretary of the Navy.

Edward Hidalgo not only faithfully served this country throughout his lifetime, but lived his life to the fullest in all that he partook. I urge my colleagues to join me in sending sympathy to the members of his family that he leaves. Survivors include his wife, Belinda, four children, and six grandchildren.

INTEREST RATES SHOULD NOT BE RAISED

HON. JOHN JOSEPH MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge Alan Greenspan and the Federal Reserve to not raise interest rates again for the seventh time in a year. For months we have seen good numbers in unemployment and the gross national product, yet our working people have not seen this prosperity. This recovery is a slow one, and many have not felt its positive affects on their lives. While we all struggle to find an answer to these puzzling economic times, one thing seems clear: Another interest rate hike by the Fed is not the answer.

True, many traditional indicators are up. However, there are many warning signs that the economy is slowing down. Commercial real estate, retail sales and single-family home construction is lagging behind, as is the recovery of our working people.

These are difficult times. People in my district are working longer hours for less pay, in jobs that they are often over-qualified for. Many don't even know if the job they have today will be there for them tomorrow. In many companies, the trend is to hire workers for temporary positions, those that do not provide health care and other benefits. This kind of instability and uneasiness does not make my constituents feel like the economy is strong—they wonder when the recovery will help them.

It is true that the Fed needs to guard against inflation—but these times do not warrant another change. Inflation indicators show no signs of a drastic change upward. Therefore, the Fed has no need to make drastic moves in raising rates. Since our economic recovery has begun, the Fed has kept monetary policy tight, in order to keep growth slow. Now, it is time for the Fed to allow the recovery to reach those that need a boost the most—the working people of America.

LINE-ITEM VETO

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, my Republican colleagues and I came prepared to cure Congress of its spending addiction. We offered up our prescription in our Contract With America. Now we are busy carrying out the treatment.

Last week, we passed the balanced budget amendment, and this week we are ready to administer the next part of the cure—the line-item veto. Our President will have at his disposal the same legislative scalpel that 43 of our Nation's Governors use to cut wasteful spending out of their budgets.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize former President Ronald Reagan as the "Godfather" of the Federal line-item veto. It would be a great honor to cure this Nation of its spending illness and pass on the legacy of the Reagan budgetary remedy—the Federal line-item veto. This is the fiscal treatment the American people have been waiting for.

Mr. Speaker, the American taxpayer works hard for every dollar they earn and have to send to Washington. The least we can do is make sure that we work together to spend those dollars wisely.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained by official business outside of the Chamber, and was therefore unable to vote during rollcall No. 80. Had I been present I would have voted "aye."

RIVERHEAD PUBLIC SERVANT

HON. MICHAEL P. FORBES

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, an invaluable public servant is retiring after years of exemplary service as the town supervisor of Riverhead. Since 1979, Joe Janoski has been well respected by many people throughout the State, county, and town governments for his knowledge and experience in local government. In addition to this service, Joe serves as a member of many community organizations including: Knights of Columbus; Lifetime Member of the Polish Town Civic Association; and the Boy Scouts of America.

He is known and respected for his presence at all community functions. He is recognized for his outstanding service and dedication to the community by numerous community organizations including the Riverhead Tri-Club—Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions—and was awarded Man of the Year by the Riverhead Chamber of Commerce.

His greatest accomplishments are the re-birth of balanced economic growth of the town and the professionalization of Riverhead government. He led the way for townwide extension of public water, upgrading and improvement of the town's sewer district facilities, establishment of a scavenger waste facility, establishment of a juvenile aide bureau, and many other milestone projects.

We all wish Joe the best in his well-deserved retirement and owe him a big thank you.

THE STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, February 1, 1995, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

THE STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS

There was a lot of pressure on President Clinton going into his State of the Union Address, with many calling it one of the most critical speeches of his presidency. Americans want him to cooperate with Congress, but also to show he has backbone and can stand up for his principles. The changes voters called for in November have clearly put him on the defensive and have left him struggling to find his agenda for the next two years. The President spoke about where he wants to take our country and how he intends to work with the new Congress to accomplish his goals for the nation. He had mixed success.

Overview: President Clinton said the country is stronger than it was two years ago, but he is concerned that not all Americans shared in the gains. He insisted that government should work better for average Americans.

His overall emphasis was that we should work together for the common good. He is clearly worried that the "common bonds of community" have become "badly frayed"—citizens are working together less and shouting at each other more. He stressed the shared responsibilities of government and citizens. In contrast to his speech in 1994, he articulated no new major federal programs. His speech was short on demands for action, but long on appeals for responsibility and comity.

He endorsed some traditional programs—school lunch, Head Start, clean air and water—and called for an increased minimum wage and a national campaign against teenage pregnancy. He considerably scaled back his goals for health care reform. He sounded conservative themes when he advocated downsizing government, cutting regulations, reforming welfare, cutting taxes, and strengthening defense. He attacked lobbyists, and called on Congress to pass lobbying and campaign finance reform. He spoke only briefly about foreign affairs, urging Congress to pass the Mexican loan guarantees, the START II Treaty, and new legislation to strengthen our hand against terrorists.

Apparently the American people still listen to President Clinton. Polls indicate that some 80% of viewers approved of the direction he laid out for the country in his speech.

Drawbacks: The speech was too long—eighty-one minutes. This president clearly likes to talk; as usual, he spoke easily and forcefully. He spoke with humor, extended a conciliatory hand, and acknowledged his own mistakes.

But I left the speech feeling that in some ways an opportunity was lost. He had a chance to explain his core principles to the American people in simple terms. Yet the speech was clearly too long and too diffuse, and did not convey forcefully his convictions and his agenda. It covered some three dozen different programs and subjects, making it hard for listeners to pick out a few central themes.

Major Points: Politically his speech was right down the middle—a very centrist speech. He avoided the extremes of the right and the left, favoring a smaller, less costly government but still acknowledging a role for government.

The President stressed putting away partisan differences and pettiness and working toward the common good. These comments were well received by the American people, but the partisan nature of Members' applause throughout the speech instead might suggest a difficult year ahead.

"Opportunity" and "responsibility" were words often repeated, and he talked at length about a "new covenant" between government and the American people: Government will help them obtain the tools they need to improve their lives, while in return asking them to take responsibility for themselves and their communities. This means, for example, asking welfare recipients to work when possible and college students to perform community service in return for student loans.

He said that the federal government can be downsized. He noted the 100,000 federal jobs he has already cut and pointed out how changes already in the works will result in the smallest federal workforce next year since the days of President Kennedy. At the same time, he said that government still has an important role to play. He does not view government as the enemy, but as a partner: It should not do things for us that we can do ourselves, but we should use government to do those things we can only do together.

The President said Congress should not go too far and roll back the progress made on cutting the deficit, reforming education, fighting crime, or improving public health and the environment. He said the new Congress should not respond to voter anger by taking it out on the most vulnerable in society—particularly the elderly and young children. As the President put it, we want lean government not a mean government.

The President stressed the need to prepare the American people for the demands of the new global economy. He mentioned vigilance on the deficit, reducing barriers to American exports, and his Middle Class Bill of Rights to help middle class families raise and educate their children, train for higher paying jobs, buy a first home, and save for retirement. He put a heavy emphasis on education as a key investment in our country's future.

The President was precise and forthright on some issues, like welfare reform and tax cuts, and oblique on others, like a balanced budget amendment, unfunded federal mandates, and deregulation. At times he displayed forceful leadership, and at other times he did not dispel the doubts about his position and his leadership.

What's Next: In the weeks ahead, the President must sharpen his vision for America. And then he needs to follow through. That will be the real test. Many Americans comment on a wide gap between the Clinton promises and the Clinton performance, and they question how long the President's positions will stand. He needs a strong follow through and a sharply focused agenda to build on the favorable reactions to his speech.

EYE BANK ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA—MARCH 1995 NATIONAL EYE DONOR MONTH PROCLAMATION

HON. LARRY COMBEST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, across the country, transplantation surgeries are saving and enhancing many lives. Eye, organ, and tissue donation and transplantation have benefited thousands of people nationwide. Today, I am asking that we take a moment to focus on eye donation and on the importance of preserving and restoring sight through the miracle of corneal transplantation. The benefits of sight restoring transplant surgery extend beyond the individuals who received the transplants; they also extend to the recipients' families, communities, and businesses. In recent years, the efforts of Congress, educators, and the media have had an enormous positive impact on the success of eye donor programs.

Every year thousands of corneal transplants are performed across the country, restoring precious sight to young and old. In 1993, over 90,000 eyes were donated to eye banks across the United States. From those eyes, over 40,000 corneas were used in transplantation procedures. The remaining eyes were used for research, training, and other surgical procedures. While the figures for 1994 are still being tallied, even greater totals are projected.

Anyone can be an eye donor. Neither cataracts, poor eyesight, nor age prohibit one from being a donor. However, it is important for individuals who want to be donors to inform family members of their wishes.

Since 1961, when the Eye Bank Association of America [EBAA] was founded, EBAA member eye banks have made possible one-half million corneal transplants, with a success rate of over 90 percent. The EBAA is the Nation's oldest national transplant association. The EBAA is dedicated to the restoration of sight through the promotion and advancement of eye banking. It has led the transplantation field with the establishment of medical standards for the procurement and distribution of eyes and comprehensive training and certification programs for eye banking personnel. These standards have been used as models for other transplantation organizations. There are over 110 member eye banks operating in over 150 locations in 43 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Canada, Saudi Arabia, England, and Australia.

Despite the extraordinary efforts of eye banks, there are still many people who wait in darkness for corneal transplant surgeries due to a lack of donated tissue. At any time in the United States, about 6,000 people are on waiting lists for corneal transplants. Public education is the best way to increase donation, as it enables people to talk to their loved ones and learn of their wishes before times of crisis and grief.

We, in Congress, can lead the effort to educate the public about the need for eye donation and encourage more Americans to become donors. We have joined the Eye Bank Association of America every year since 1983, and do so again by proclaiming March 1995 as National Eye Donor Month. In so doing, we call on all Americans to support us in promoting the worthy endeavor of enhancing the lives of fellow citizens through the restoration of sight.

25TH ANNIVERSARY OF RIDGEWOOD-BUSHWICK SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER

HON. NYDIA M. VELÁZQUEZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this moment to offer my congratulations to the Ridgewood-Bushwick Senior Citizens Center [RBSCC] on its 25th anniversary celebration.

Through the leadership of its founder and first director, Assemblyman Vito Lopez, and the support of its staff, the elderly community of Bushwick has a center that is dedicated and committed to them and their families. Like the arches that support our city's bridges, the RBSCC is the arch for the Bushwick senior community. It bonds the older generation with the younger one. It is a place where our pioneers interchange ideas and provide solutions. It provides nutritional, recreational, and support services to over 600 seniors. When the daily struggles of life become overwhelming, the center is a safe haven.

Its continuous success is greatly due to the endless commitment and dedication of its staff and volunteers. Their hard work exemplifies that they, like Assemblyman Vito Lopez, share a common vision for a growing community.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in congratulating Assemblyman Vito Lopez for realizing his vision, the staff and volunteers for their undying labor, and the seniors for giving us insight and strength. Congratulations.

TRIBUTE TO GOSHEN COLLEGE

HON. TIM ROEMER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and pay tribute to the significant achievement of an institution in my district, a college of distinction that has been educating young people for 100 years: Goshen College in Goshen, IN.

Goshen College was originally founded in 1894 as the Elkhart Institute. In 1903 this institution evolved into Goshen College and adopted the motto "Culture for Service." Throughout the college's long history, it has maintained a partners-in-education relationship with the Mennonite Church which has supported the college as it developed and helped shape its direction. True to the spirit of its motto, the college has focused a great deal of energy to developing multicultural awareness. In 1968 the college added a study service trimester to its general education requirement. This unique program gives students the opportunity to live in a foreign country while studying language and culture and completing a service project. Goshen College has pioneered multicultural education and has become a model for other foreign study programs at colleges throughout the United States.

The fact that Goshen College has been educating and molding young adults for 100 years speaks to the dedication of the people who have been a part of that tradition. Mr. Speaker, I commend Dr. Victor Stoltzfus, president of Goshen College, and the many fine faculty, staff, and students who have given their hearts and energies to the college over the years. I am proud and honored to recognize this milestone in this illustrious history, and I know that Goshen College will continue to thrive in its second century.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FEDERAL BUDGET STRUCTURE ACT OF 1995

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Federal Budget Structure Act of 1995. I am joined by my good friend and colleague, Representative BOB WISE, one of Congress' most forceful advocates of capital budgeting. While maintaining a unified budget, this legislation seeks to identify, define, and present separate operating and capital components of the Federal budget, and to distinguish between Federal funds and trust funds.

I want to emphasize that this legislation retains the unified budget. It does not attempt to reduce the appearance of the Federal budget deficit through smoke and mirrors by taking capital expenditures off-budget. It seeks to provide what the existing budget presentation does not—adequate information on the revenues, expenditures, surplus/deficit amounts, and financing requirements for capital activities of the Federal Government. It also attempts to provide a distinction between Federal funds and trust funds, and between capital and operating activities in a manner which does not hinder identifying the resources needed to meet the Government's capital infrastructure needs.

As a concept, capital budgeting is very simple. It is nothing more than a planning device relied upon by business leaders and many State and local officials to help prioritize spending for the future. A capital budget, properly implemented, would improve the budget as a reporting, control, accounting, priority-setting, and fiscal policy tool. A capital budget assumes that capital is a limited resource, and for planning purposes, there is a need to develop the best possible strategy to insure that future demands can be met.

The benefits of a capital budget are many. A capital budget:

Focuses attention to a greater degree on the deteriorating physical infrastructure of the Nation and allows us to make more rational investment decisions;

Promotes intergenerational equity by burdening future generations with debt service only for activities that provide future tangible benefits;

Provides more equitable budget treatment of capital activities by avoiding the current front-end loading of the full costs in the first year; and Shows that borrowing to finance capital investments is accompanied by an increase in the Nation's assets.

A capital budget that remains part of the unified budget may also help us better define "What is a balanced budget?" As we move in the direction of a balanced budget, we need to more fully explore whether it makes sense for the Federal Government to balance its annual budget under current bookkeeping practices.

I am always frustrated by the process by which we make our budget decisions and the lack of information at our disposal. Cuts are displayed either agency by agency, function by function, or program by program but generally there is no distinction about the substance of the cuts, whether they're reductions in investment spending such as new highways, or cuts in operational expenses of an agency.

When the House is fashioning budget resolution, as we're doing now, there is a similar lack of information about the nature of our spending proposals; that is, to what degree are we investing in assets, consumables, operating expenses, and human enterprise programs. The current budget process makes no distinction.

Capital budgeting can help all of us do a better job planning for future spending in a more informed manner. It is not a gimmick and does not attempt to gloss over one Federal activity at the expense of another. It simply seeks to identify two very fundamental and distinct economic activities—spending on assets, and spending on operations.

I encourage all Members to cosponsor and support this worthwhile legislation.

TRIBUTE TO MORTON A. SCHRAG

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask you and our colleagues to join me in congratulating Morton A. Schrag on the occasion of his retirement as director of the Westside Jewish Community Center in Los Angeles.

As a long-time member of the Westside Center, and as the congressional representative of a substantial number of its members, beneficiaries, and staff, I have profound gratitude for all Mort Schrag has done for the center and our entire community.

During the nearly two decades that Mr. Schrag served as the center's director, the constituency it served underwent radical changes. A previously Anglo area realized a sharp increase in the number of African-American families. In addition, a Jewish community consisting primarily of Jews who emigrated from Europe decades ago or were born in this country experienced an enormous influx of newly arrived refugees primarily from the former Soviet Union and Iran.

An individual less brilliant, creative, and dedicated than Mort Schrag would have been overwhelmed by the challenge of so many radical changes occurring over such a short period of time. Mort Schrag welcomed these challenges and used them to vastly expand the range of the Westside Jewish Community Center's programs.

Under Mort Schrag's leadership, the decades old educational and recreational programs were sustained and expanded. Intensive new programs were instituted to help immigrants acquire English language skills, master the culture of their new land and, in countless cases, achieve the coveted status of American citizen.

Two of Mort Schrag's innovations attracted national attention and emulation. He established a Senior Adult Day Care Center that addressed the special social, cultural, and interpersonal needs of individuals whose advancing age led to their social isolation and limited their ability to continue activities in which they were previously involved.

Mr. Schrag also established a Community College of Jewish Studies that brought Westside Center together with five area synagogues. This was a bold move and represented a dramatic collaboration of two traditions—the once secular centers movement and the traditional synagogue institutions—that had previously cooperated only at a minimal level.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and our colleagues to extend to Morton Schrag every wish for good health and success in all future endeavors, and for continued vigorous community involvement.

TRIBUTE TO PROCTOR CARTER

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker today I wish to pay tribute to a great Missourian, Proctor Carter, who recently passed away. Born on April 10, 1907, this former World War II Army veteran, served the State of Missouri as the director of State division of welfare for 27 years, the longest tenure served by any welfare director in the United States.

Educated at the University of Missouri, Carter received a bachelor's degree in journalism, and a master's degree in art. He worked for 1 year at United Press International in Dallas, TX. After that he was assistant to the administrator for the Missouri Relief Commission, and an assistant administrator of the State Social Security Commission. In 1946 he became the director of the State division of welfare. After his retirement, Carter was a consultant to the Missouri Senate, informing on welfare legislation and appropriations. Carter was also an active member of the Academy of Missouri Squires, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion, and the American Public Welfare Association.

I urge my colleagues to join me in sending sympathy to his two sons, Robert Joe Carter and John Wallace Carter. A wonderful friend and community leader, Proctor Carter will be missed by all who knew him.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to celebrate and honor the proud history of African-Americans during national Black History Month.

African-Americans have made invaluable contributions to the economic, cultural, scientific, and social fabric of our society. By celebrating February in this manner, our country can continue to learn about and draw upon the strength that this history of struggle, endurance, and achievement lends to us all.

This year we will pay tribute to the year 1895, and its importance to three prominent African-American leaders: W.E.B. DuBois, Frederick Douglass, and Booker T. Washington. In 1895, W.E.B. DuBois, a distinguished scholar, became the first African-American to receive a Ph.D. In that same year, we lost the Father of the Civil Rights Movement, as Frederick Douglass passed away. And Booker T. Washington, noted college president and statesman, gave his famous Atlanta speech. It was a significant period in the annals of African-American history.

As I reflect on the themes of accomplishment and selfless work, I am quickly drawn to my district and a gentleman who embodied the ideals of these great men, until his passing last December at the age of 96. The Rev. Robert Moody was a pastor, activist, educator, humanitarian, and friend to all who knew him.

For over 50 years, he championed the causes of equal rights and education as pastor of Shiloh Baptist Church. He mentored countless young people and emphasized the importance of education to young people. He broke Hartford's color barrier and became its first African-American member of the board of education. He uplifted his congregation and turned a once debt-ridden church into a thriving house of worship.

The Reverend Moody, like others we honor this month, was a rare and wonderful individual who, through words and action, helped make a difference to countless people throughout the State of Connecticut and the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, there are countless men and women who, like the Reverend Moody, improve the lives of many people on a daily basis. They may not be as famous as W.E.B. DuBois, or Frederick Douglass, or Booker T. Washington, but they are heroes in the same tradition. I honor the memory of the Reverend Moody, and the many others like him. And I also salute the future leaders who will challenge this Nation to reach its great potential.

DOROTHY QUINN OF NASSAU HONORED FOR OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO GOP

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, those of us here in Washington who were pleased with the results of last November's elections tend to forget that the spadework for the Republican tidal wave of victories was done, not here in Washington, but in the precincts, towns, and villages across the country.

Countless volunteers in our 22d Congressional District did a lot of that spadework over the years at the grassroots levels. I have personal reasons for being grateful, because these volunteers have repeatedly helped return me to Congress with more votes than anyone else in the whole New York delegation. They were equally instrumental last year in the election of George Pataki as Governor. I'd like to single out one of those outstanding volunteers today.

Dorothy Quinn of Nassau has been doing yeoman's work for the Republican Party since the Eisenhower years. Her first involvement in local politics was stuffing envelopes, but this experienced inspired her and several others to form a Nassau Women's Republican Club. In 1957 she was elected the club's first president, an office she has held more than once.

Under her leadership the club grew in leaps and bounds. That leadership was recognized in her being chosen vice chairman of the Rensselaer County Republican Committee, and in her serving on the New York State Committee.

Also under her leadership, the Nassau Women's Republican Club was an active player in State and national party affairs, including trips to Washington and the State Capital in Albany. Dorothy Quinn herself participated in State and national conventions.

Mr. Speaker, where would we be without dedicated individuals like Dorothy Quinn? Our political system, wisely crafted by our Founding Fathers, is the envy of the world precisely because it takes advantage of such talents and energies.

She will be honored at a dinner February 14. Mr. Speaker, let us rise to pay our own tribute to an outstanding lady I am proud to call my friend, Dorothy Quinn, of Nassau, NY.

IN MEMORY OF HON. BRADFORD MORSE

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty, in the midst of our busy schedules, to remind our colleagues of the passing of one of our former colleagues, a man whose service to this institution, our country, and to the cause of world peace, is one of the great political legacies of our time.

I refer to the Honorable Bradford Morse of Massachusetts, who served admirably in this Chamber from the time of his first election 1960, until he resigned in May 1972 to become Under Secretary General of the United Nations.

As a colleague in this body, Bradford Morse served with great distinction. His understanding of and concern for the conduct of American foreign policy, especially during the Vietnam war, demonstrated Brad's extensive abilities.

Brad left the House at President Nixon's request to assume the position of Under Secretary General of the United Nations which had been made vacant by the death of Nobel Peace Prize laureate, Ralph Bunche. As Under Secretary General—the senior American in the United Nations—Brad was concerned with political and General Assembly affairs, humanitarian affairs, and human rights.

Those fortunate enough to have served with him in the House will recall his willingness to contribute all his time and his energies to any task he was asked to undertake, and to work with others in a spirit of cooperation that transcended party lines. One of the sayings for which he is remembered is "Let's get on with the job," and when Bradford Morse said that you knew he would be the first to get on the job. He was the kind of man who knew not only the details of complex international policies, but the first names and family histories of security guards in the Congress at the United Nations.

His work in the international arena earned him the respect, the gratitude, and the love of all who worked with him. He became Administrator of the United Nations Development Program, from 1976 to 1986, and Director of the International Emergency Operation for Africa, from 1984 to 1986. It has been said of Brad that millions of Africans are alive today because of his selfless dedication and hard work, but not one of them knows his name.

It has further been said of him that he was always ready with a firm handshake, a welcoming smile, and a genuine effort to forge a consensus whenever conflict arose. That seems to me to capture the essence of this great public servant.

It is the nature of our calling to see colleagues come and go, in a blur of elections and in a whirl of events, one after the other. But some of those colleagues leave an indelible mark on this institution because of their character, their talents, their warmth, and their love of humanity. Bradford Morse was among this small, select group. He got on with the job, did his very best, and brought out the best in others. His service to our country, as a Congressman and as a statesman, is one of which his family, his home State of Massachusetts, and all his many friends should be proud.

Mr. Speaker, Bradford Morse left this body prior to my first election, so I never personally enjoyed the honor of serving with him as a colleague. However, I came to know him well throughout the 1970's and 1980's, when he was known nationally and internationally as one of the most knowledgeable individuals in the field of international development and relations. He was universally revered for his expertise and his professionalism.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of our colleagues to join with us in extending our condolences to Brad's family and in paying tribute to an outstanding public servant, one of those officials who make us all proud to be in public life.

Permit me also to avail myself of this opportunity to invite our colleagues to join at the graveside memorial services to be held at Arlington National Cemetery on Monday, February 6, 1995, at 3 p.m.

POSTHUMOUS TRIBUTE TO JAMES LERON CHERRY

HON. CARRIE P. MEEK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct honor to pay tribute to one of Miami's unsung heroes, James Leron Cherry. His untimely demise on January 16, 1995, leaves a great void in our community.

Born in Moultrie, GA, Mr. Cherry overcame the abject poverty into which he was born. He worked even at an early age helping his father do odd jobs to put food on the family's table and clothes on his siblings. But he also developed an insatiable thirst for education, along with the acumen for learning the intricacies of carpentry and woodwork. At his country's calling, he enlisted in the U.S. Army and was assigned to the European theater during World War II. After the war and through his resilience and gritty determination, he obtained his college education from my alma mater, Florida A&M University, graduating with both bachelor's and master's degrees.

Married to the late Representative Gwen Cherry, my dear friend and predecessor in the Florida Legislatures, Mr. Cherry fully lived up to his calling as an educator. He was employed by the Dade County Public Schools in Miami where his high standards for learning and achievement won him the accolades of his beloved community. Promoted as coordinator of adult education at Miami Northwestern High School in the early 1960's, his successes in educating many a wayward inner-city youth become legendary. He gained the confidence of countless parents who saw him as the educator par excellence, entrusting him with the future of their children and confident that they would learn from him the tenets of scholarship and the pursuit of academic excellence under the rigors of a no-nonsense discipline.

His approach to educating the inner-city young boys and girls who came under his tutelage emphasized personal responsibility. In times of crises crowding his students' learning, his forthright guidance and counsel was one based on faith in God and faith in one's ability to survive the vicissitudes of life.

Our community was deeply touched and comforted by his undaunted leadership, kindly compassion, and personal warmth. He preached and lived by the adage that the quest for personal integrity, academic excellence, and professional achievement is not beyond the reach of those who are willing to dare the impossible. This is the legacy that James Leron Cherry bequeathed to us. I am greatly privileged to have known this noble human being.

LEGISLATION AMENDING TITLE 18 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, for as long as I can remember Federal employees who are members of employee organizations, like credit unions, child care centers, health and fitness organizations, recreation associations, and professional associations, have been able to represent the views of the employee organization to the employing department or agency. I think all would agree that active employee participation in matters of employment should be encouraged.

Until now, Federal employees' ability to represent to their superiors the interests of their employee organization has peacefully coexisted with §205 of title 18, United States Code, which prohibits a Government employee, except in the performance of official duties, from acting as agent or attorney for anyone before any agency or court of the United States in connection with a covered matter. A covered matter is described at 18 U.S.C. §205(h) as including "any judicial or other proceeding, application, request for a ruling or other determination, contract, claim, controversy, investigation, charge, accusation, arrest, or other particular matter." Until now, issues affecting employees as employees, such as pay and benefits issues, have not been viewed as covered matters.

The Department of Justice [DoJ] has recently issued legal opinions and guidelines stating that managers or supervisors who are Federal employees and who represent the interests of their peers or associations before senior management officials are guilty of a violation of 18 U.S.C. §205 and could be prosecuted as felons and subject to imprisonment and fines. Technically, according to DoJ, an employee who asks to use office space on behalf of an employee organization may have violated the law and could be subject to criminal prosecution.

Mr. Speaker, 18 U.S.C. §205 was enacted in 1962 and there has not been a problem until DoJ issued its opinion. Now, if a Federal employee wishes to discuss child care on behalf of her employee organization, she is in technical violation of the law. This situation is outrageous and must be corrected. I have contacted the Attorney General about this issue and am awaiting a response. In the meantime, I am introducing legislation which reverses the Department of Justice's interpretation of the law to allow a Federal employee to represent an employee association or the interests of its members to the executive branch or any agency of the Government.

This small technical change will protect the rights that Federal employees have enjoyed for years until the Department of Justice removed them through its interpretation of the law. This legislation is a good-government measure, is good for Federal employees, and maintains the integrity and purpose of §205. Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to cosponsor this legislation and urge the House to make this technical change to the law as soon as possible.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

SECTION 1. REPRESENTATION OF VIEWS.

Section 205 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by redesignating subsection (h) as subsection (i) and by inserting after subsection (g) the following:

"(h) Nothing in this section shall prevent an officer or employee of the Government, if not inconsistent with the faithful performance of such officer's or employee's duties, from representing an employee association before, or the interest of the members of the association to, the Executive Branch or any agency of the Government. For purposes of this subsection, an employee association is an association or component of an association, a majority of whose members are officers or employees of the Government."

IN HONOR OF VIVIAN T. HOPE

HON. JACK KINGSTON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate Mrs. Vivian T. Hope on 50 years of service to the Glynn County School System.

Born and raised in Brunswick, GA. Mrs. Hope received her bachelor of arts degree from Albany State in Albany, GA and received master of education degrees from Armstrong State College, Savannah State College, and Georgia Southern University. She also holds an educational specialist degree from Nova University in Florida.

Vivian Hope began her career in Glynn County in 1965 teaching fifth grade at Burroughs Elementary School. In 1967, she became one of the first African-American instructors to teach at Goodyear Elementary School. She later continued her career at Risley Sixth Grade Center and Glynn County Middle School, where she served as a team leader and chairperson of the social studies department. Vivian has received numerous honors. While at Glynn County Middle School, she was selected the 1981 Teacher of the Year. In 1988–1990 she participated in various Georgia Educational Leadership Conferences; in 1992, she was selected to participate in the State of Georgia Governor's School Leadership Institute. Most recently, Vivian served on the Southern Association Visiting Team for Bibb County, located in the 2nd district of Georgia.

Mr. Speaker, throughout Mrs. Hope's career, she has been a role model to both students and aspiring young teachers. When asked, "If you had it to do all over again, would you? Her response, "Of course, with any job you have your good days and your bad, but for me, I wouldn't change a thing."

Too often, we forget to acknowledge those who spend 6 to 8 hours a day educating our children. Today, I salute Vivian Hope for spending 30 years with our children.

In conclusion, I also want to add that one of her best students is her own daughter, Theresa Hooper. Many of us know Theresa, and have had the pleasure of working with her on various State and national issues. She originally worked on the Senate Appropriations Committee, but in 1992, we on the House side had the good fortune of having her work with us. She is bright, intelligent and a true professional.

With people like Theresa serving as a sample of her mother's fine work, we can be sure that Mrs. Hope's legacy will live on for many years.

The world is clearly better for her outstanding contributions to America. Congratulations Mrs. Hope.

HONORING DELLA LAMB COMMUNITY SERVICES OF KANSAS CITY, MO

HON. KAREN MCCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Ms. MCCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Della Lamb Community Services, which will have its annual awards banquet on Sunday, February 5, 1995.

Della Lamb has stood as a beacon of hope in Kansas City for almost 100 years, providing a wide range of services to our central city. These services include day care, youth programs and summer camp, adult education, including GED and basic skills instruction, and special programs for senior adults, including much-needed transportation services.

The services provided by Della Lamb touch hundreds of Kansas Citians every month. I commend the staff, volunteers, and supporters of Della Lamb for the wonderful contributions they make to our community.

In addition, I would like to pay special tribute to the executive director of Della Lamb, William C. "Duke" Akers, who has served Della Lamb for 20 years.

During the tenure of Mr. Akers, Della Lamb has grown from a one-location neighborhood house to an eight-location charitable endeavor with an annual budget of $3.5 million. The growth of services coordinated by Mr. Akers and the Della Lamb family have an impact on people every day. I commend Mr. Akers for 20 years of service to Della Lamb and I thank him for the valuable contributions he makes to our community.

UNFUNDED MANDATE REFORM
ACT OF 1995

SPEECH OF

HON. LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 30, 1995

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5) to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments, to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and to provide information on the cost of Federal mandates on the private sector, and for other purposes.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Vento amendment to H.R. 5 which will ensure that the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act will not apply to laws and regulations that involve life-threatening public health and safety measures.

The amendment clearly recognizes the Federal Government's steadfast responsibility in protecting the health and safety of the American public. If we ignore this responsibility, the result will be devastating.

If the act passes without the Vento amendment, landfills, incinerators, hazardous waste dumps, toxic waste storage facilities, and manufacturers could pollute our air and our water unchecked by oversight of the Federal Government. This rampant pollution will have a severe negative impact on the health of the American public.

Children, the elderly and those with weakened immune systems are especially vulnerable to diseases caused by environmental pollution.

Many respiratory diseases and several forms of cancer are directly attributable to environmental causes.

These polluting facilities are disproportionately likely to be located in low-income and minority communities.

Currently, dust from a concrete recycling plant in the city of Huntington Park in my district is polluting that community's air and water.

Both the local rate of respiratory infection and of asthma in children have risen alarmingly since the plant began operation.

The citizens of that community are now turning to the government for assistance and protection against this threat to their health.

The industry assumption is that people living in these communities are politically weak and so consumed by the daily grind of making a living that they will not have the resources to organize against these facilities, as people in upper income communities tend to do.

Unfortunately, this assumption is firmly grounded in the reality of many communities throughout our country.

The Federal Government must not abandon its role in protecting the health of all Americans, particularly the most vulnerable in our country.

As Representatives of our respective communities, we have a clear obligation to protect the health and safety of the American people.

If we abandon it now, we may cause damage to future generations before our mistake can be corrected.

I urge the passage of the Vento amendment.

MR. HSU'S MEETING

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in every advanced society, regulation of the airways and the electronic media is both a necessity and a recognized duty of government. In the United States, we have long believed that the airways belong to the public. Therefore, the United States licenses frequency assignments in each market. Section 301 of the Communications Act of 1934 clearly states that no one may operate a radio, television, or other wireless transmission facility without a license from the Federal Communications Commission. This law was enacted to prevent several parties from attempting to use the same frequency and, in the process, destroying their ability to reliably broadcast. It also ensures that the public is compensated for one of its greatest assets and ensures that persons granted use of this resource do not abuse their privilege.

Mr. Speaker, other developed nations have followed the lead of the United States by enacting laws like our Communications Act. In 1993, the Republic of China on Taiwan enacted comprehensive legislation to permit the licensing of new radio stations and the establishment of cable television stations. Under this law, many former operators of underground radio stations, which had been operating illegally for many years, were permitted to apply for new licenses. To date, 17 of the 20 former operators of these underground stations have received licenses after their applications were reviewed by a nonpartisan professional licensing board. These licenses were granted without regard to the operators' political affiliations. In fact, three licenses were awarded to operators who are openly opposed to the current party in power.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of the Republic of China has been extremely generous in its licensing policies. In the United States, anyone found to be illegally operating a commercial radio station rarely gets a chance to obtain a commercial radio station after being found in violation of the law. Despite this generous policy, several operators of illegal radio stations in Taiwan have refused to apply for licenses and have continued to operate illegally, thereby jamming the frequencies lawfully allocated to licensed operators.

Mr. Speaker, one such illegal radio operator is Mr. Hsu Rongchi. This week, Mr. Hsu has requested and, in fact, has been granted, a meeting with a select few Members of the U.S. Congress to discuss the issue of licensing radio stations in the Republic of China. It is my expectation that Mr. Hsu will argue that the Republic of China on Taiwan has prevented him from exercising his right to free speech by shutting down his illegal radio operation.

Mr. Speaker, I fully respect Mr. Hsu's right to meet with Members of the U.S. Congress. I also respect the right of Members of Congress to solicit the opinion of foreign citizens on foreign policy related matters. At the same time, I am deeply concerned about how this meeting may be portrayed in the American and foreign media. In my 12 years in Congress, I have witnessed on numerous occasions foreign nationals who have deliberately misrepresented their interaction with Members of Congress in order to achieve their own political objectives.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is important to emphasize that Mr. Hsu has not been granted a hearing by the House Committee of International Relations or the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific. I sit on this full committee and this subcommittee. In the House of Representatives, they have exclusive jurisdiction to hold hearings on issues impacting United States-Republic of China relations. While Mr. Hsu and others may be billing this February 2, meeting with Members of Congress as a hearing, it is actually a meeting with a few Members of Congress. Furthermore, the fact that a few Members of Congress have conceded to meet with Mr. Hsu should not be portrayed as any affirmation by the U.S. Congress of Mr. Hsu's viewpoint, or for that matter, that the U.S. Congress views this issue of great importance. In fact, I believe that the majority of my colleagues would disagree with Mr. Hsu's opinions regarding the fairness with which the Republic of China on Taiwan licenses radio stations.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that my remarks will have clarified for all those interested parties what is and is not taking place this week in the U.S. Congress regarding the radio licensing issue.

PROPOSING A BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

SPEECH OF

HON. JAMES A. LEACH

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 26, 1995

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1) proposing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Chairman, some concerns have been expressed about how the balanced budget amendment, if ratified, could effect the Federal Government's ability to issue debt, manage its cash position, and borrow money at the lowest rate.

For instance, under present budgetary requirements, budget outlays for direct loans, such as those provided by the Eximbank and USDA, consist of the net present value of the subsidy, rather than the net disbursement of cash. However, Treasury still must borrow the full amount of the loan. It is expected that cash disbursements will exceed $70 billion during fiscal year 1995–99. Under House Joint Resolution 1, the debt limit would have to be increased by a three-fifths majority of each House in order to accommodate these disbursements, even if the budgets were balanced in those years and the loans eventually were paid back in full.

In addition, the Federal Government's cash requirements vary from year to year, making it difficult to estimate its revenue needs. For example, a large number of unexpected thrift and bank failures in 1 year could cause the budget to be unbalanced.

Finally, some have argued that given the constraints of a balanced budget amendment and the three-fifths requirement, Congress will look for ways to borrow money off budget, which is usually more costly than on-budget financing. A good example of a more costly off-budget financing scheme was the reliance on REFCORP bonds to finance part of the S&L bailout.

While the above budgetary concerns at first blush would appear problemsome, they should not pose insurmountable obstacles to successful implementation of a balanced budget amendment. Many of these cash management problems can be addressed with more prudential planning. Furthermore, section 8 of House Joint Resolution 1 allows Congress to enact laws to implement this constitutional amendment. Through legislative adjustments Congress retains the flexibility to square the various nuances and vagaries of Federal Government debt management with the constitutional requirement of a balanced budget.

PROPOSING A BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

SPEECH OF

HON. MICHAEL F. DOYLE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 26, 1995

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1) proposing a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support House Resolution 28, the bipartisan, bicameral balanced budget amendment. We have spent considerable time in this House debating and discussing the merits of competing balanced budget amendment proposals. The message that has resonated through this debate is this country's desperate need to balance its budget.

Currently, our national debt exceeds $4.3 trillion. Since this House last voted on a balanced budget amendment in March 1994, our debt has increased by more than $160 billion dollars. The gross interest payments on this debt alone are costing us $816 million per day. In fact, these interest payments have increased so significantly that 14 percent of the entire Federal budget is devoted to interest payments on the debt. Therein lies the insidious nature of this deficit debacle.

As the interest payments continue to skyrocket. Devouring larger and larger portions of the budget, there is a devastating regressive effect on the rest of the budget. These interest payments are severely hampering our ability to fund important discretionary programs. While future generations will suffer increasingly from this effect, the problem is also very real in the present. Our interest payments this year alone will be 8 times higher than expenditures on education and 50 times higher than expenditures on job training.

My constituents in western Pennsylvania will need continued assistance from job retraining and economic development programs. This is why I stand today in support of this balanced budget amendment. The Mon-Valley needs the help of innovative and intelligent Federal programs to assist in the retraining of displaced workers so they are prepared to join new, high-technology industries. Programs are needed to cleanup the abandoned industrial sites so fresh businesses will locate there bringing with them secure jobs in these growing industries. These are just the types of programs that are being crowded out by the increasing interest payments on our debt.

It is imperative that a balanced budget amendment passes both Houses of this Congress so that it can move to the States for the ratification process. Only then will people throughout the country be afforded the opportunity to closely examine how the amendment would work and what specific actions would be necessary to achieve a balanced budget early in the 21st century. However, the only way our citizens will have that opportunity is if we move now to pass the Stenholm/Schaefer alternative.

It is the only alternative that is purely bipartisan in nature and has a chance of also passing in the Senate. This is a practical reality that cannot be overlooked.

Language in this amendment would require a three-fifths vote in both Houses to allow an increase in our national debt level which gives this alternative the strong safeguard necessary for it to be effective, and I sincerely hope my colleagues will recognize the power of this rigorous balance. The Stenholm/Schaefer amendment unites the underlying principles of all versions of the balanced budget amendment. We cannot let another opportunity to pass this amendment slip away. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support the Stenholm/Schaefer alternative now, and when we take a vote on final passage.

HELSINKI COMMISSION HEARING ON DEVELOPMENTS IN BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Helsinki Commission, which I chair, convened its third hearing to hear from Dr. Haris Silajdzic, the Prime Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In 1992 and 1993, Dr. Silajdzic testified in his previous position as Foreign Minister, describing the horrors taking place in his country and, knowing they could have been prevented, urgently asking for help. The hearing reviewed the tragic situation that still exists in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as the continued relevance of policy options that should have been taken by the international community long ago. Having to do that was frustrating to me, and I cannot begin to imagine how it must frustrate the Prime Minister.

We must not, though, accept the unacceptable. That is exactly what the Serb militants want us to do. It is clear that the people of Bosnia, despite their endurance of a third winter of war, are not prepared to abandon the defense of their homes, their families, their country. Indeed, Bosnia and Herzegovina seems motivated to defend international principles, even if they must do so almost completely alone.

In contrast, much to my dismay, the international community has been beaten back by the Serb militants in what has become a game of bluff. The Serb militants clearly escalate the violence, because they know we are unwilling to escalate in response. Our threats against them lack any credibility. Officials directing United Nations and NATO efforts have failed not only to stop vicious Serb aggression, but also to enforce their own Security Council resolutions. Instead, they have resorted to mutual recriminations, twisted explanations, and even blaming the victims for their fate.

Last summer, the so-called Contact Group—comprising the United States, Russia, the United Kingdom, France, and Germany—offered the Bosnian Government and the Serb militants a plan on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, with a deadline for an unconditional answer and warnings of repercussions for any side rejecting it. Sarajevo accepted it, in time and without condition. The militants effectively rejected it. As sanctions were then eased on Serbia in response, the deadline for Bosnian Serb acceptance was extended indefinitely. Earlier this month, U.S. officials presented this plan as simply a starting point for negotiations, and met with the Bosnian Serb leaders in their stronghold, Pale. To my dismay, the Secretary of State concluded that the "Bosnian crisis is about Bosnia, but the NATO alliance is far more enduring, far more important than the Bosnian crisis." I was amazed and appalled.

Let's keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary's comment refers to what is, in fact, a well-documented genocide, and these diplomatic gestures were made toward those who orchestrated it. Through all the complexities of the Balkans that we must consider, one generic fact remains—you reward the aggressor, and you get more aggression. It is as simple as that.

The Helsinki Commission, through the leadership of the previous cochairs of the Helsinki Commission, noted that calls for a negotiated settlement, however correct, are meaningless if accompanied by an artificial neutrality and not by severe repercussions for those who operate outside acceptable parameters and seek what they want through the use of force. Collective partnerships, however desirable, will erode if partners allow one of their own to be carved into ethnic pieces.

Enunciating international principles, however promising, is empty if countries abandon them for historical affinities and big-power politics. Commemorations of the end of World War II a half century ago, however appropriate, ring somewhat hollow when genocidal acts that stir memories of the Holocaust are allowed to occur. The world's commitment to human rights, however boldly expressed, is questioned when our collective consciences are unaffected by the horrors that continue to be reported from Bosnia and Herzegovina today.

At the hearing, Prime Minister Silajdzic expressed his gratitude to the U.S. Congress for its strong and consistent support for Bosnia and Herzegovina through this terrible period. He noted that, 50 years after Auschwitz, concentration camps again appeared in Europe, this time in Bosnia, and this time the images are brought into our homes directly, especially through television. Rather than responding on the basis of principle, justice, and order, however, he described realpolitik and pragmatism as the order of the day. When a forceful response is eliminated, he concluded, the Bosnian Serb militants and their supporters in Belgrade are the only ones who benefit.

Given the current dynamics, the Prime Minister presented a reasonable course of action, specifically that the Contact Group meet at the ministerial level and set a deadline for a definite and final answer from the Serb militants. If the Serbs accept the plan in time, changes to the map could be made within 30 days, as long as these changes maintain the 51/49 percentage formula and are adopted by consensus. Negotiations on constitutional arrangements, international guarantees and other items would follow.

If, on the other hand, the Serbs reject the plan, the response adopted last July by the Contact Group foreign ministers should be reaffirmed, specifically the tightening of sanctions, the expansion and better protection of designated safe havens, including the use of air strikes, and lifting the arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina. On the latter, he added that recognition of the right to self-defense is the minimum that must be granted to the victims of this aggression.

I told the Prime Minister that the Helsinki Commission is dedicated not necessarily to the defense of his country, but to the promotion of principles adopted in Helsinki almost 20 years ago. In reality, however, these two different goals have come to mean the same thing. In this new Congress, the Commission will remain true to that goal and I, therefore, support his suggestions. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress will debate the current policy options.

As we do consider policy options, I would like to repeat a remark made at the hearing by fellow Helsinki Commissioner, Mr. STENY HOYER. He argued that one of the reasons we have allowed aggression and genocide to proceed in Bosnia is that some have convinced themselves that the conflict there is a civil war—an internal ethnic conflict—the inevitable result of age-old hatreds. To correct the picture, Mr. HOYER quoted from a recent book, "Bosnia, a Short History," by Noel Malcolm, the introduction to which states:

Paradoxically, the most important reason for studying Bosnia's history is that it enables one to see that the history of Bosnia itself does not explain the origins of this war. Of course, the war could not have happened if Bosnia had not been the peculiar thing that it was, which made it the object of special ambitions and interests. But those ambitions were directed at Bosnia from outside Bosnia's borders. The biggest obstacle to all understanding of the conflict is the assumption that what has happened in that country is the product—natural, spontaneous, and at the same time necessary—of forces lying within Bosnia's own internal history. That is the myth which was carefully propagated by those who caused the conflict, who wanted the world to believe that what they and their gunmen were doing was done not by them, but by impersonal and inevitable historical forces beyond anyone's control. * * * And the world believed them."

Why the world believed them, I do not know. Perhaps naive assumptions about what was happening as Yugoslavia disintegrated; perhaps a cynical realpolitik that cares little about human suffering. Regardless, we cannot allow the resulting disaster to continue.

THE TAX FAIRNESS FOR AGRICULTURE ACT OF 1995

HON. DAVE CAMP

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleague, Mr. PAYNE of Virginia, to introduce H.R. 783, the Tax Fairness for Agriculture Act of 1995, which clarifies the proper application of present tax law to membership payments to tax-exempt agricultural and horticultural organizations.

Agricultural and horticultural organizations are dedicated to the improvement of agriculture and agricultural conditions, products, and efficiency and have been exempt from the Federal income tax since its inception. These organizations are typically composed of first, farmer/rancher members and second, nonfarmer/rancher or associate members. Generally speaking, both classes of members pay the same amounts and enjoy most of the same rights and privileges of membership. Both classes of members pay the same amounts and enjoy most of the same rights and privileges of membership. Both classes of members are also typically entitled to purchase various goods and services, including insurance. The existence of associate members and the availability of various benefits to all members have been common practice among agricultural and horticultural associations for many decades.

Last year, the Internal Revenue Service [IRS] issued technical advice memorandum [TAM] 9416002 in connection with an audit of a State Farm Bureau. The TAM reversed longstanding IRS practice by asserting that the associate members of such organizations were not bona fide and their membership payments were taxable access payments to purchase insurance. Relying principally on the fact that associate members of the Farm Bureau had limited voting and office-holding rights, the IRS concluded that Farm Bureau's facts were indistinguishable from two 1991 court decisions involving unions in which associate members received absolutely no benefits other than access to an insurance program.

Mr. Speaker, the TAM conflicts with the longstanding recognized practice of agricultural and horticultural organizations and contradicts past IRS guidance and practice. At least two prior IRS rulings, technical advice memorandums 8302010 and 8302009, under materially the same facts now at issue, hold that associate membership payments of agricultural organizations are not taxable. These TAMs correctly conclude that membership payments were not taxable because, despite certain differences, the associate members received largely the same rights and benefits as "regular" members, whose membership payments are clearly not taxable. The availability of insurance to all members, associates included, was judged insufficient to taint the membership payments generally.

Mr. Speaker, although the TAM literally applies only to one State Farm Bureau, it is now being applied to other agricultural organizations around the country. If the TAM is allowed to stand and is extended to other entities, most county and State agricultural organizations could face potentially huge deficiencies for what has until now been unchallenged and appropriate conduct. These deficiencies and the costs of contesting them could jeopardize the continued economic viability of many agricultural organizations and, thus, the important exempt purposes they serve.

The legislation we introduce today, would effectively restore the historical position taken by the IRS, that the membership payments of associate members of agricultural and horticultural organizations are not taxable. The legislation has two components. First, agricultural organizations that reasonably relied on the prior authorities and practice I discussed before would be shielded from unwarranted and potentially devastating audits. For this purpose, it is recognized that the treatment of associate member payments as tax exempt has been the longstanding recognized practice of agricultural and horticultural organizations and reliance on that practice was reasonable. Also, the legislation would establish a prospective safe harbor for annual payments by members of agricultural organizations of $100 or less. Thus, regardless of whether an organization charged some of its members more than $100 or less were not bona fide members and, therefore, that their membership payments were taxable. This will preclude wasteful and costly disputes in cases involving relatively nominal membership payments.

WE NEED AN AFRICAN-AMERICAN MUSEUM ON THE MALL

HON. JOHN LEWIS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 1, 1995

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am once again introducing a bill to establish an African American Museum as part of the Smithsonian and to be located on the Mall in Washington, DC. I do this on the first day of black history month to highlight the need for and the importance of such a museum.

The story of black people in America has yet to be told. As a result, the understanding of American history remains incomplete.

African American history is an integral part of our country, yet the richness and variety of that history is little-known and little-understood.

Too few people know that Benjamin Banneker, an outstanding mathematician, along with Pierre L'Enfant, designed this city. Some of our Nation's greatest cowboys were black, including Bill Pickett and Deadwood Dick.

How many people know that Dr. Daniel Hale Williams was a pioneering heart surgeon in the last century? And that Ernest Everest Just, Percy Julian, and George Washington Carver were all outstanding scientists?

One of the greatest periods in America's cultural history was the Harlem renaissance. Writers, artists, poets, and photographers like Langston Hughes, James Van Der Zee, Countee Cullen, and Aaron Douglas were all part of the renaissance.

More recently, the civil rights movement changed the face of this country and inspired movements toward democracy and justice all over the world.

There is much, much more—and it must be told to all Americans. Until we understand the African American story in its fullness and complexity, we cannot understand ourselves as a Nation. We must know who we are and what we have done in order to truly consider where we must go from this day forward.

I am pleased and delighted that many of my colleagues have cosponsored this bill. I urge all my colleagues to support this worthwhile and important legislation.

Her most recent assignment was as special projects coordinator out of the Chief Judges Office, Office of Hearings and Appeals, SSA. In recognition of her work Margie's awards include the Ewell T. Bartlett Memorial Award, 1990 for Humanitarian Service and the Commissioners Citation, the highest award given at SSA after serving as the Federal coordinator of the Combined Federal Campaign.

Margie has been a long-time resident of Reston and been very active in her community. She is a charter member of the Reston Chapter of the Links, Inc.; past president of Reston chapter, and serves on area and local committees. UNFUNDED MANDATE REFORM

SPEECH OF

HON. WILLIAM J. MARTINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 30, 1995

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5) to curb the practice of imposing unfunded Federal mandates on States and local governments, to ensure that the Federal Government pays the costs incurred by those governments in complying with certain requirements under Federal statutes and regulations, and to provide information on the cost of Federal mandates on the private sector, and for other purposes:

Mr. MARTINI. Mr. Chairman, I rise this evening to congratulate my colleagues for passing H.R. 5, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

Monday in my hometown of Clifton, NJ I met with local officials to talk about the importance of this legislation. Most of us know how difficult it is to be a local official, I can tell you I know first hand. I have had to deal with unfunded mandates first hand.

As we dealt with this bill on the House floor, the burden of unfunded Federal mandates did not go away. Local governments are still toiling under their yoke, losing money by the minute in manpower and paperwork complying with one-size-fits-all regulations from Congress.

Take my home State of New Jersey for example. Just recently we avoided what would have amounted to one of the most costly mandates in the country. As a commuter State, New Jersey was faced with drastic measures to slow the growth of automobile emissions in order to comply with one of the most infamous unfunded mandates on the books, the Clean Air Act.

In order to meet the rigorous standards of the act, the Environmental Protection Agency informed New Jersey that it must use a new, unproven testing system. The State itself was not supposed to have any input on the testing method, but rather meekly submit to the commands of the EPA.

What did this do to New Jersey drivers? Well, it simply set up a system in which they could not win. First, they would have to take an emissions test that almost every car was expected to fail. Then, they would have to pay $300 to $400 each to repair their cars only to take the test again. Fortunately, the State was able to head off EPA sanctions at the last moment and avoid the imposition of such a test.

I will give another example. As I stated before, I came to Washington as a former local official, on both the municipal and county levels. On the county level, I met with special frustration when confronted with unfunded Federal mandates.

As the Passaic County Freeholder Board moved to restructure a government that, just like everywhere else, had its inefficiencies, we were continually confounded by obligations placed on us by Washington. I led the fight to reorganize the county health administration, and a little initiative and persistence paid off: I was able to shave $107,000 from that department's budget. Due to similar efforts from my fellow Freeholders, we were able to reduce county spending by 7 percent in 1993.

But, as you may have already guessed, the Passaic County taxpayers could not directly reap the rewards of the frugal actions of the Freeholder Board. In 1993, we were actually forced to raise taxes. That part of our county budget that was mandated from above went up 10 percent, even faster than we could cut discretionary spending.

I am sure many of my colleagues have had similarly frustrating experiences. Stories like these have to stop, and I believe they soon will.

With the passage of H.R. 5, this House took a major step in the right direction. But the fight against unfunded mandates is far from over. You see, H.R. 5 is first and foremost an accountability measure.

There is nothing in this bill that says Congress may never pass another unfunded Federal mandate again, it only makes sure that Congress knows exactly how much its legislation costs. Because of this we have to remain vigilant over the next 2 years and continue in the spirit of H.R. 5 by refusing to pass the buck down the line.

I congratulate this body as a whole, my colleagues on the Government Reform and Oversight Committee, and especially the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. CLINGER, for their strong leadership on this vital issue. You have all done your country a great service today.
