THE HOUSE CONTRACT

Mr. FELL. Mr. President, 2 years ago, when President Clinton marked his 100th day in office, I said the occasion "should not be regarded as a magical threshold for defining achievement or failure."

The same thought applies now. This is a logical time to take stock, but the real measure of success can't be taken for many months—not until the rest of the Democratic process, namely the Senate and the President, bring their perspectives to bear.

I give the new House leadership credit for lots of energy and activity in the flush of electoral victory, but this should not be mistaken for definitive accomplishment.

The fact is the Contract With America is a contract made by Republican candidates for the House of Representatives. It is not a contract made by the Senate and certainly not one made by Senate Democrats or by the President of the United States.

Since the contract seems to be the product of pollsters and campaign consultants, it is not surprising that nearly everyone can agree with at least several of its objectives. But when we look at the fine print of some of them and when we get down to the hard job of deciding on the means for achieving those objectives, there are bound to be vast philosophical disagreements.

I certainly agree with the objectives of fiscal responsibility, welfare reform, continued action on crime control, job creation, fairness for senior citizens, and promotion of family values.

And I even agree with some of the means proposed, such as unfunded mandate reform and capital gains tax relief to create jobs, child support enforcement to advance family values and an increase in the Social Security earnings limit for the benefit of senior citizens.

But I find myself in profound disagreement with several of the major objectives as well as the means to implement them. These include:

- The balanced budget amendment, which I opposed because it would have cut too much too soon.
- The line-item veto, which I opposed because it yields too much congressional power to the President and because it is administratively unwieldy.
- Term limitations.
- Increased defense spending.
- Reinstatement of the death penalty and cuts in spending on social programs (such as midnight basketball) to control crime.
- Tax cuts without deficit reduction.
- Welfare reforms without compassion.
- Reduced support for the United Nations.
- Any reduction in support for education or elimination of support for the arts and humanities.

So, Mr. President, it is far too early to tally up score cards on a contract made by one party in one House of the legislative branch. Many of us simply don't subscribe to substantial parts of it and don't believe that implementation of it in toto would be good for the country.

The streamroller needs to be slowed down and the contract needs to be pruned, modified, and in some cases excised. This is the role that the Senate is so admirably equipped to do. And only when it has done so will the revised elements of the contract be candidates for Presidential consideration. Then and only then, when the executive branch has concurred, can the final score be tallied.

As I said 2 years ago, the true measure of success should be taken over the extended timeframe of this whole process, without drawing hasty conclusions here and now. One hundred days is only the first milestone of a long journey.

CONGRATULATING THE UCONN HUSKIES ON THEIR NCAA NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP VICTORY

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on Sunday, April 2, the University of Connecticut Huskies made history by becoming the second women's basketball team ever to finish an NCAA season undefeated and win a national championship. The Huskies' dramatic 70–64 come-from-behind defeat of the Tennessee Volunteers brought their final season record to 35–0, the best finish by any team—men's or women's—in the history of NCAA basketball.

On behalf of the citizens of Connecticut, I rise to congratulate and thank this remarkable group of young women.

Those who watched the game on Sunday afternoon may recall that as the Huskies celebrated their victory, the UConn pep band played Aretha Franklin's hit song, "Respect." Mr. President, there simply could not have been a more appropriate accompaniment for this long-awaited celebration. Perhaps as much as any sports team in recent memory, the UConn women's basketball team has generated the respect and admiration of all who have had the privilege of watching them play. In so doing, they have reminded the citizens of Connecticut, as well as people throughout the country, what college athletics is all about.

The Huskies' list of accomplishments on the court is nothing short of amazing. On their way to the NCAA title, they broke 34 NCAA records, including most victories, longest winning streak, most points, most points in a game and largest margin of victory. In addition, four Connecticut players—Rebecca Lobo, Jen Rizzotti, Kara Walters and Jamelle Elliott—were named to the all-tournament team. That is the first time in history that four players from the same team have received this honor.

This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.
No less impressive than their basketball heroics are the Huskies’ accomplishments off the court. Rebecca Lobo, winner of numerous individual basketball honors awarded by the NCAA and the Big East Conference this year, has maintained a near-perfect grade point average throughout her basketball career. Lobo, a biochemistry and political science major and was a finalist for the prestigious Rhodes Scholarship. Last semester, seven of the 12 Husky players were named to the University’s dean’s list.

What has touched basketball fans throughout the country more than anything else, however, are those qualities exhibited by the Huskies that cannot be measured by grade point averages, records or point tallies. Anyone who saw the team play this year was struck by their tremendous enthusiasm for the game of basketball, their unwavering commitment to fair play and good sportsmanship and their obvious dedication to and respect for one another and their coaches.

In this era of season-ending strikes, multi-million dollar contract disputes, recruiting scandals and low athlete graduation rates, this group of women has reminded us that the term, student-athlete is not just a catchphrase for college brochures. It is an attainable ideal to which all college athletes should aspire, and it is what makes collegiate athletics so special.

Mr. President, it is also important to recognize what this remarkable group of young women has done for women’s college athletics. This year, on average, roughly 8,000 people attended the women’s home games at Gampel Pavilion, which represents a 485 percent increase over the average crowd size during their 1991 Final Four season. Young girls, with their hair braided like Rebecca Lobo or wearing replicas of Jen Rizzotti’s number 21 jersey, watched the team play on national television. Autograph seekers mobbed the players before and after games, and the players’ mailboxes were literally flooded with letters from fans and well-wishers.

People of all ages in Connecticut and throughout the nation caught wind of “Husky-mania” and demonstrated that women’s athletics could generate every bit as much enthusiasm and spectator support as men’s. Nationwide, total attendance for women’s college basketball skyrocketed from 1.3 million in 1984 to 3.6 million in 1995.

As we look back on this spectacular season of women’s college basketball, it is important that we note just how far collegiate athletic programs for women have come. Once little more than small, poorly-funded intramural organizations, women’s collegiate athletic teams have begun to enjoy the same status as the men’s teams. This is due in part to Title IX of the Equal Education Act, 1972 legislation that guarantees women equal opportunity in all scholastic pursuits—including sports—at schools that receive federal funding.

Although disparities and inequities between men’s and women’s programs persist, it is clear that this law has forced colleges and universities to re-examine how they allocate resources. The law has helped ensure that scholarship money is available for women like Rebecca Lobo, Kara Wolters or Jamelle Elliott and that the coaching and facilities provided to female athletes allow them to develop their talents to the fullest.

While it is true that we may look upon the Huskies’ success as positive evidence of Title IX at work, it is also true that their accomplishments underscore the need for further progress in this area. Not all schools have made efforts to improve their women’s athletic programs, and many of those that have made significant progress have yet to fully comply with Title IX.

What is clear, however, is that the American people, as evidenced by the immense enthusiasm with which the UConn women’s basketball team, are ready and willing to lend their enthusiastic support to women’s collegiate athletics.

Mr. President, when the Huskies traveled to Washington earlier this year, they waited in line outside a White House gate only to be told that the White House was closed. However, it was just on the heels of the Huskies’ loss to Tennessee that a special invitation was extended to the team to enter the White House through the front door.

The President has honored his request.

Mr. President, when the Huskies walked through the front door of the White House, they will not only experience a great honor, but will also help ensure that the door remains open for future generations of female athletes.

In closing, Mr. President, I want to mention the names of all the UConn players and coaches who contributed to the 1995 undefeated title campaign: Geno Auriemma (Head Coach), Chris Dailey (Assistant Coach), Tonya Cardoza (Assistant Coach), Meghan Pattyson (Assistant Coach), Carla Berube, Kim Klett, Michelle Elliott, Jill Gelfenbien, Kelley Hunt, Rebecca Lobo, Brenda Marquis, Jen Rizzotti, Missy Rose, Nykesha Sales, Pam Webber and Kara Wolters.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Owen Canfield that recently appeared in the Hartford Courant as well as a 1992 editorial by Greg Garber, Lori Riley and Woody Anderson that was also printed in the Hartford Courant.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The best: It’s pure and simple

MINNEAPOLIS—Glory. Really. What a brave bunch, this UConn women’s basketball team, and a fighting bunch.

The NCAA Division I women’s college basketball championship flag will fly over the state university in Storrs. They should haul it down and have it dry-cleaned every day to preserve the just-concluded memorable season that ended with a surging, 70-64 victory over Tennessee at the Target Center.

The Huskies wound up 35-0. That’s pure.

Connecticut, indeed. Isn’t it? Bet you already have started planning back there? Wait for us, we who traveled here to watch. We’ll be home today.

The Huskies won all the games this year, and then it won the toughest game imaginable, under the most trying, challenging conditions.

The time was for it. Put it down as one of the more dramatic and gutty performances in the state’s sports history.

“We can, if we do it now,” a pessimist said after Rebecca Lobo picked up her third personal foul and had to go to the bench to sit out more than 11 minutes of the first half. And then, it was just two and a half minutes later when Nykesha Sales with three personals. And Kara Wolters with two before the half ended. UConn had to alter its game and its personnel. Emboldened, the Voluntears went up by one, by three, by five, by six.

“Okay now,” Joe Pessimist said. “It’s over.”

It wasn’t over. It hadn’t even started, friends. But you know that. You saw it, right?

Say it slowly and savor it: Connecticut is the national champion in women’s basketball.

“Mr. President,” coach Geno Auriemma said, “Sometimes you just don’t know what a victory means.”

—MORE WINS (35)—

said Nykesha Sales, the 18-year-old freshman who scored 10 points, “than I won in my whole [Bloomfield] high school career. Gosh. A perfect season.”

Yes sir. A perfect season. The last word.

Players on both teams cried at the end. It always happens. There are winners’ tears and losers’ tears. But these winners’ tears were different because . . . well, can you picture Jamelle Elliott crying over anything? She is the toughest person on the team, maybe the toughest in all of women’s basketball, while the game is in progress. But when this game was over, I stood flatfooted in one spot on the court and did a little public bawling.

Well, this was the time for it. There were no more games to win, no more criticism to answer and no more people to blame. Win one like this and the job is finished.

Time now to be human and celebrate not tears. Time to watch. Yes sir. A perfect season. The last word.

they're a lot bigger. And they're athletes. But you got some rebounds [three] and you played some defense. You were tough.' "I'd better be tough," Berube said. "I prac tice against a largeJamellie Elliott every day. I'd better be."

Referee Dee Kantner is said to be one of the best in the business, but it appeared to Connecticut people she was calling them too little too little. UConn does not have the depth of Tennessee, and coach Geno Auriemma had to improvise as never before after the Huskies and Bizzotti all got in first-half foul trouble. At time all three were on the bench, which meant that the responsi bility fell to Berube, the soph, and Sales, the frosh.

Did you say tough? "I think I got rid of my nervousness in the last game," Sales said. She didn't have to mention it. She did amazing things with the ball, made some astonishing championship moves to the hoop, and played 33 minutes bening to talk about it. I'll be honest, like many schools we don't fully understand it. That's why we're studying it. We need to find out where we are."

Even armed with the thick title IX manual and a battery of lawyers, schools have found that is not easy. For example, if numbers are awry, but a university determines by studies and surveys that there is no interest in a particular sport on campus, then the school may still be in compliance.

About seven years ago, a women's softball club was formed at Connecticut College. Last year, the 30-member club was turned down for varsity status. The proposal was approved by the student advisory board but was turned down by the administration. Athletic direc-

true of Civil Rights (OCR) is res Football Rights Division of the U.S. General Counsel's

"Playing Fair," for high school and college sports. They have more than enough players, a demonstrated interest. The school should add the team.''

her club become a varsity sport. Her coach, Deana Kiefer, doesn’t want to challenge Connecticut’s administration.

“I think if we keep petitioning, we’ll get it sooner or later,” she said. “I think it’s going to go sue for it; what are my chances of being the varsity coach if I did?” What is compliance? There are other factors by which compliance is measured, including the dollar amount and quality of equipment, locker rooms, practice facilities and playing fields. When assessing compliance, an overall comparison must be made between men’s and women’s programs. For example, if an assistant coach is provided for the men’s basketball team, the women’s school could still be in compliance if another men’s team did not have an assistant coach.

At the team level, comparisons of similar sports, such as baseball and softball, are also valid, even if the program is balanced overall. So, if the baseball team travels by airplane and the softball team uses a van, that could be a violation, depending on the distance traveled.

When University of New Hampshire administrators eliminated women’s tennis, they believed they were still in compliance because they also cut men’s wrestling. But when the tennis team threatened to sue, the OCR informed the school that they were out of compliance even if women’s ice hockey had been cut, as was rumored last spring.

Members of the ice hockey team’s alumni association and parent support groups complained suing the university if their team was eliminated. After consulting with the OCR, Yale cut men’s water polo and wrestling instead.

College administrators often say, “If you don’t count football, we’re fairly equitable.” Before Title IX took effect, the NCAA unsuccessfully tried to exclude football from the legislation.

Title IX makes no distinction between revenue-producing sports, such as football and baseball, and non-revenue sports such as cross country and swimming.

But if football is removed, more than women are affected. Women face cuts in sports at many schools. The University of New Haven, for example, has 147 male athletes and only 46 female athletes even when the football team isn’t counted.

That means men’s athletes would outnumber women athletes by 3-to-1 although they outnumber women only 2-to-1 in the student body.

“If we’re out of whack there, we’re out of whack in all the other areas,” said Debbie Chin, New York University’s athletic director. “I take the blame for this.”

Glass ceiling drops while women are underrepresented

Fifteen of the state’s 18 schools have male athletic directors. Nationally, there are only 57 women directors among the 860 coed college athletic departments.

“The glass ceiling in the gymnasium appears to be even lower than in the nation’s business office,” said Brooklyn College physical education professor Vivian Acosta, a principal investigator for the study. “In athletics, it appears that women are being carved out of the workforce.”

Six years ago, UConn associate athletic director Pat Meiser-McKnett found herself discussing the vacant athletic director’s job at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond at the annual meeting of the NCAA convention. The conversation took place in a hotel lobby and lasted less than 30 minutes. Meiser-McKnett submitted a three-page letter to VCU, but was not formally interviewed.

Months later, Meiser-McKnett was stunned to read in The Courant that she was one of three finalists for the job.

“I was furious,” Meiser-McKnett said. “It was so absurd. They were suing me to fill the slot—I was the token female.” VCU officials say they did not release Meiser-McKnett’s name as a finalist. However, John Packett, a reporter at the Richmond Times-Dispatch, says he got his information from a university source.

It was, Meiser-McKnett says, the Old Boy network at work. According to a 1988 Brooklyn College study by Acosta and fellow professor Vivian Holowaty, women are vastly more likely to be left off the Old Boy network—made up of males in power who aren’t willing to recognize women as equals—is the main reason women don’t get hired for the jobs.

“Who do they look [to hire]?” said Linda Wooster, director of women’s athletics at Quinnipiac. “People not posing a threat, people they’re comfortable with. It’s frustrating sometimes.”

In the Ivy League, all eight athletic directors are men. Recently, 13 of the 28 associate athletic directors are women. Recently, Columbia University in New York had the chance to break up the male monopoly.

“I was approached last year by a search committee for a varsity program in July,” said David Davidson, Central’s athletic director. “The four finalists were two women [including David- son] and two minority men. And then, they decided they didn’t want to hire any.”

“They hired a white male who fits the traditional image of an AD. You can’t tell me of those four people there wasn’t one qualified. I just don’t think the Ivy League is ready for a woman AD.”

Fred Knobel, director of public information at Columbia, said “Davidson’s inference is incorrect.”

“The search for an athletic director was continuous until a consensus was reached,” he said. “Special efforts were made to seek out minorities and women. Along the way, a number of strong candidates withdrew, including one woman who did so for personal reasons at the last moment.”

Often, there is a smaller pool of qualified female applicants than male for each open position. There is also a feeling among some women in athletic administration that women are less willing to work through the low-paying low-status coaching and administrative positions.

“Men, for whatever reasons, are more willing to take those entry-level jobs,” Davidson said. “They will do anything they have to to get in the door.”

In 1975, UConn offered 12 sports for men, eight for women. Women’s soccer, a fledgling sport nationwide, was not one of them. Today, women at the private Connecticut College for Women, a part of a large soccer-playing family. When she went to UConn and found no team, she lobbied for it. She said the administration told her she was a team member. In the same year, the OCR descended on Eastern and tied up the athletic director’s and president’s office for several weeks with paperwork, the money for a fenced-in field and dugouts suddenly appeared.

Said Holowaty: “When softball saw what we [baseball] had, they had to have it too. I was approached last year by a search committee for a varsity program in July.”

Willimantic. When coach Clyde Washburne at Eastern Connecticut State University in Willimantic, when Clyde Washburne hit balls in practice, he had to compete with errant Frisbees and footballs.

Meanwhile, the baseball team enjoyed a state-of-the-art facility. The baseball coach was athletic director Bill Holowaty. “I told the athletic director, I told the president, that it wasn’t fair to my players safety-wise or to me as a teacher,” Washburn said. “By the time practice began, you were angry. It was not doing to taught, and you don’t want to do that.”

Said Holowaty: “When softball saw what we [baseball] had, they had to have it too. I was approached last year by a search committee for a varsity program in July.”

When the complex was built, the softball players would look up through the skel-eton of the dugout frame at the dark sky and say, “Isn’t this a great place to get in out of the rain?” It was two years before roofs were added.

At some colleges, the scramble to accommodate women led to controversy.

Barakat, the former field University men’s basketball coach, was furious to discover one day, in the mid-1970s, that his office was literally cut in half to make room for the women’s basketball coach.

“There was no warning. I was shocked by it,” said Barakat, now the assistant commis- sioner of the Atlantic Conference.

Twenty years ago, it was the bridegroom. I wanted to show recruits what other Division I programs were showing recruits, like a nice office. None of us were ready for it. Coaches didn’t understand it.”

Now, Barakat says of equal opportunity for women: “It’s here to stay and we’d better deal with it.”

In 1975, UFCoffered 12 sports for men, eight for women. Women’s soccer, a fledgling sport nationwide, was not one of them. When coach Clyde Washburne hit balls in practice, he had to compete with errant Frisbees and footballs.

Duffy didn’t have eight years. Recently, the athletic program for men outnumbered those for women at the school, she contacted lawyers and then-U.S. Rep.
Mr. President, contemporary writers, pundits, and philosophers have long been moaned the absence of leadership figures worthy of our emulation and adoration. Young Americans are frustrated by athletic heroes who fail to lead exemplary lives off the playing field. The Olympics are focused solely on their re-election prospects or movie stars whose real-life personas pale in comparison to those of the characters they portray on screen. In Rebecca Lobo, however, America has found a role model that not only meets our expectations, but exceeds them.

Ms. Lobo’s accomplishments on the basketball court are well known. On her way to leading the Huskies to an undefeated season and national championship, Lobo averaged 17 points, 10 rebounds, 3.5 blocked shots and 3.7 assists per game. She was named a first team All-American and the national player of the year, and, despite having to sit out much of the first half with three fouls, her dramatic second half come-from-behind victory over Tennessee in the NCAA championship game.

Her accomplishments in the classroom are equally impressive. As a Po-tential Academic All-American, Lobo has maintained a 3.63 grade-point average and was a nominee for the prestigious Rhodes scholarship. She was also named a first team Academic All-American both this season and last.

Yet what sets this talented young athlete apart is not just her athletic or academic accomplishments, but her care for and commitment to her teammates and her fans.

As Connecticut Head Coach, Geno Auriemma is quick to point out, Rebecca’s greatest weakness as a player is that she is too unselfish and too unwilling to grab the spotlight. Foremost in her mind is her connection and responsibility to her team, a trait which is shared by Huskies and which is undoubtedly the source of their great success.

Mr. President, beyond Rebecca Lobo’s athletic and academic accomplishments lies her ability and willingness to reach out to her numerous fans and admirers. Along with her teammates, Rebecca made it a point to chat with fans and sign autographs for an hour after each game. Despite being overwhelmed by letters, she has devoted hours to personally answering each and every piece of correspondence she has received, and she has been a regular at summer basketball camps and clinics, where she has patiently worked with aspiring basketball stars of all ages.

Mr. President, Rebecca Lobo has reminded people of what being an athlete, a student, and a human being is all about. She has struck a balance and a harmony between her goals and those of the people around her. In this day and age, when many athletes defiantly proclaim on television commercials that they are not role models, Rebecca Lobo reminds us that being a role model is not a blight but a privilege. It is a privilege for her to be afforded the opportunity to showcase her talents and it is a privilege for us watch her and urge others to follow her lead.

In closing, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article written by Ira Berkow that was printed in the New York Times be printed in the RECORD.

(From the New York Times, Mar. 3, 1995)

UCONN CAN COUNT ON LOBO

(BY IRA BERKOW)

MINNEAPOLIS—Rebecca Lobo’s parents hadn’t spoken with her before the game, the game yesterday afternoon that would decide the N.C.A.A. women’s national basketball championship between Connecticut and Tennessee.

“We rarely do talk with her beforehand,” said her mother RuthAnn, in section 129 of the Target Center arena. “But we can guess how she’s feeling: anxious.”

A couple of hours later, with 29.9 seconds left in the game, RuthAnn and her husband, Dennis, were the obviously anxious ones, as the huskies gathered and went in their seats. Rebeca, as they call her, was stepping to the free-throw line. It was perhaps the single most important moment in their daughter’s brilliant athletic career—no, her brilliant college career.

After all, Rebecca Lobo, the 6-foot-4-inch senior forward with the French braid and the determined demeanor, the player who sparked a 70-64 victory in the championship game to complete an undefeated season, is Connecticut’s basketball version of Frank Magazine. Eleanor Bird and Carolina, Dennis said, had rolled into one. For the last two seasons, she has been first-team all-American. In her spare time, the political science major has been a candidate for a Rhodes scholarship.

She epitomizes the women’s game, because for the most part the women are truly scholar-athletes, not just jocks majoring in eligible, often only of slam-dunk highights in the pros.

And she is part of a game that is substantially different from the men’s game, one in which egos seem to meld into the concept of the team, and which makes the game so satisfying for a basketball fan.

And this moment on the free-throw line was what one dreams about, or sweats over. Lobo’s Huskies were up by 3 points, 65-62.

She has a one-and-one: if she makes the first she gets a second.

If she misses either, Tennessee is still in the game.

Now, Lobo bounces the ball and looks up at the rim.

It had been a long, long day for Lobo, a day in which she quickly picked up three fouls and played just eight of the 20 minutes in the first half, scoring just 3 points.

And when undefeated Connecticut went into the locker room at halftime, the team was losing by 38-32. It was only the second time this season that UConn was behind at the half, the first being last week in the East regional final, when it came back from a 7-point deficit to beat Virginia.

Could the Huskies defend?

Lobo returned to the lineup for the start of the second half, though she still seemed away from the action, affected by her fouls. But her teammates were keeping the team in the ballgame. Jen Rizzotti, who was aptly described as being all ponytail and knee guards, stole a pass, hit a drive,
Jamelle Elliott, the junior from Washington's inner city whom Coach Geno Auriemma calls their rock, battled for rebounds and banked in a shot, and Nykesha Sales, the smooth but sometimes nervous freshman, hit a key 3-pointer.

Then Lobo struck, again and again: she hit a spin shot, threw in a drive, sank a jumper from the left side, and Connecticut was back in the ball game, 3 points off the lead, with seven minutes to go.

"When the game is on the line," said Pat Summitt, the Tennessee coach, "you naturally go to your all-American." One recalled the time last year when Rebecca Lobo learned that her mother had breast cancer, and she broke down in tears. Her mother said, "You do what you have to do, and I'll take care of my end." RuthAnn's cancer is in remission, and she never misses a game, because Becca says she always wants her there. And so it seemed not unusual for Rebecca to be taking responsibility, on or off the court. RuthAnn remembers a significant moment, when Rebecca was 6 years old, and had taken an eraser from the home of Mrs. Lukasik, a neighbor in Southwick, Mass.

"I told Rebecca that the eraser wasn't hers, and she had to return it," RuthAnn said. "And as she walked, sobbing, to Mrs. Lukasik's house, it broke my heart to see it, but I think it helped her understand right from wrong. And to think about other people."

If there was one criticism Coach Auriemma had of Lobo, it is that she has sometimes thought too much about other people. He had wished her at times to be more selfish, to shoot more. But the blend was there in this game. And now on the free-throw line she had a chance to show there. She will be her first free throw and with that her teammates on the floor mobbed her. RuthAnn, in section 129 and seated beside Dennis, clasped her hands in anticipation of the second free throw.

Rebecca bent, perched the ball near her ear, and let it go. It sailed right through the hoop, giving Connecticut the lead, at 67-62, that they would not relinquish.

Shortly after the victory, it was announced that Lobo had been named the outstanding player in the Final Four.

It was a hugely satisfying comeback for the Huskies, for a couple sitting in section 129 and for Becca Lobo. The fans cheered, the band blasted, and the team joyously cut down the nets.

As for Mrs. Lukasik, one imagines that she still has her eraser and the memory of a lifetime.

Many Block Islanders have fond memories of Fred from their school days. Beginning at the island's high school baseball coach, Fred went on to teach auto shop, carpentry, machine repair, and driver instruction until he retired at the age of 69. His contributions to the youth of Block Island have extended to several generations, and the island is richer for it.

I commend Mr. Benson for his years of selfless community service and wish all the best to him and his many island friends. Mr. Benson is a truly remarkable man and dedicated educator. I am proud to honor him on this joyous occasion.

TRIBUTE TO MARTHA HANSON KILPATRICK

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the best teachers I ever had, Martha Kilpatrick. She taught me at Colbert County High School and has kept in touch over the years by attending my town meetings in Reform, AL, her hometown, and by sending me letters and news clippings from time to time. She is a dear friend to me, and I know she had a great deal to do with guiding me at an early age and pointing me in the right direction. Her wisdom, advice, and encouragement were helpful to me not only as a student long ago, but also throughout the several stages of my career.

It might surprise my colleagues to learn that I still have former teachers who are alive and well, but Martha is indeed among them. On April 25, she will turn 80, and Reform is planning a gala celebration of this milestone in her life, to take place on the 22d at the Methodist Church there. She will be surrounded by many friends and family members, each of whom have been influenced by Martha in special and unique ways.

Martha Hanson was born in Columbus, MS, and as a baby moved with her family to Carrollton, AL, where she spent her formative years. Her family later moved to Reform, where she graduated high school. That same year, she entered Alabama College at Montevallo, where she majored in education. Her entire career was spent as a teacher in Alabama and Georgia. Her husband, Wilbur Kilpatrick, was born and raised in Reform, and although they lived in a variety of places during their married life, Reform was always home to them.

Martha continued her own education in Atlanta, earning her masters degree and teaching in that school system for many years. When Kay and Joe, were grown, Martha and Wilbur retired and moved back to the quiet peace of their roots in Reform, where she remains today. She has three grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Her home is a virtual museum of the things she has collected over the years—bottles, stamps, salt and pepper shakers, antique Christmas ornaments, pictures, linens, glassware, and books. Her husband has passed away, and Martha lives alone in the large, comfortable museum of her life. She stays busy doing things for others, as she has always done.

One of Martha's great characteristics is making and keeping friends. She is part of her local post office's best private customer, keeping an active correspondence with friends and family all over the world, including myself. She never forgets birthdays, anniversaries, special holidays, and her cards saying "Get well soon" or "With deepest sympathy" are always the first to arrive when a crisis hits.

Martha Kilpatrick has been one of the true treasures of my life and the lives of many others. I am proud to commend her on an outstanding life, one that has been lived out in the best American tradition, her nurturing of young minds, and her sincere love for family and friends, whom she counts as her most valuable collection of all. As she turns 80 later this month, I trust those many family members and friends will reflect on the outstanding qualities this extraordinary lady has exhibited throughout her life. We can all learn from her.

ALABAMA BUSINESS CONNECTIONS 1995

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, each year, the Alabama Minority Supplier Development Council holds a major event known as Alabama Business Connections. This year, it will be held in Birmingham June 27–28, when more than 5,000 individual businesses will be actively participating.

During Alabama Business Connections, suppliers and purchasing personnel from majority and government organizations network and exchange information in order to develop mutually-beneficial business opportunities. This important event also furthers the year-round efforts of the Alabama Minority Supplier Development Council. The council is dedicated to providing economic and educational opportunities for certified minority and corporate-government members.

I am proud to call the attention of my Senate colleagues to the vital work accomplished each year during Alabama Business Connections, and wish the Alabama Minority Supplier Development Council all the best for a successful event this summer. They are to be commended for their outstanding work toward the cause of furthering business opportunities for minority suppliers.

REINVENTING PUBLIC BROADCASTING

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, another thoughtful voice has joined the debate in favor of re-inventing public broadcasting. Jack Kemp has written an article, published in today’s Wall Street Journal, making the case that public broadcasting can be re-invented and become self-funding. This would be a win-win proposition for taxpayers, for television and radio audiences, and for the public broadcasting industry.

Secretary Kemp’s analysis is timely, because the recession will Congress has an opportunity to begin an orderly and reasonable phasing out of Federal subsidies for public broadcasting. I support the approach of the House of Representatives, to begin phasing out the subsidies in a significant measure, now.

Secretary Kemp just this week has been named chairman of the new National Commission on Economic Growth and Tax Reform. This is by appointment of Majority Leader DOLE and Speaker GINGRICH. Secretary Kemp is superbly qualified for this position. I offer Secretary Kemp my hearty congratulations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD Secretary Kemp’s article, entitled “Privatizing PBS Doesn’t Mean Killing Big Bird,” from today’s Wall Street Journal.

There being no objection, the article was agreed to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Wall Street Journal, April 5, 1995

PRIVATIZING PBS DOESN’T MEAN KILLING BIG BIRD

By Jack F. Kemp

Politics doesn’t have to be a zero-sum game, even when it comes to budget cutting—and especially when it comes to contentious an issue as cutting the public television budget. I believe it’s possible to find a compromise where both sides of this debate emerge winners and happy.

First, let’s look at the impasse we seem to have reached in Congress. On the one hand, we have a new generation of Republicans who are absolutely serious when they talk about limiting the size, scope and power of the federal government. For these “neo-Fed-erals,” it’s not enough that a program have expenditures, or give increased membership contributions (from the redundant “non-core” stations that have been eliminated), as well as corporate and foundation grants. Meanwhile, others would, by dint of age and several years of entrepreneurial by developing and owning stations that would sell around the world, as well as merchandising rights to its children’s productions (an area of funding that officials admit they have not taken proper advantage of).

Will there be resistance to this plan? Yes, by those who distrust the private sector, no matter what. And by those politicians who like having a PBS station in their district that is required to carry local school board or city council meetings, giving incumbents a free platform. But for those who honestly want to cut the budget deficit, and for those who care about the future of PBS, this is a plan that makes everyone a winner.

WAS CONGRESS IRRESPONSIBLE?

THE VOTERS HAVE SAID YES!

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the incredible Federal debt which long ago soared into the stratosphere is in about the same category as the weather—everyone talks about it, but nobody has undertaken the responsibility of trying to do anything about it until immediately following the elections last November.

When the 104th Congress convened in January, the U.S. House of Representatives approved a balanced budget amendment. In the Senate all but one of the 54 Republicans supported the balanced budget amendment but only 13 Democrats supported it. Thus, the balanced budget amendment failed by just one vote—there will be another vote later this year or next year.

As of the close of business yesterday, Wednesday, April 5, the Federal debt stood—down to the penny—at exactly $4,878,158,190,719.92.

REED LARSON’S 40 YEARS:

TIRELESS DEFENSE OF FREEDOM

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, a little over 40 years ago—January 28, 1955—the Nation’s pre-eminent defender of workers’ freedom was founded in the basement of Washington’s Mayflower Hotel.

It was named the National Right to Work Committee, and it was organized by a small group of railroad workers and small businessmen. The Right to Work Committee has grown into a proud home for freedom-loving Americans who believe that while workers may have the right to unionize, no American worker should ever be compelled to join, or even support, a labor union.

Mr. President, upon the founding of the committee, its first president, Congressman Fred A. Thompson, of New Jersey, declared, “[We] will not shrink because of attacks which may be made against us. We intend to do everything possible to educate the American people to the perils of compulsory unionism and to encourage them to resist it.’’

Three years later, in 1958, after piloting the successful fight for Kansas’ Right to Work Law, a dedicated American named Reed Larson left his job as an engineer in Kansas to lead the right to work movement in America.

At the time, the power of the Big Labor bosses was virtually unchecked. By 1965, the unions had rolled up what appeared to be a filibuster-proof majority in the U.S. Senate favoring legislation to obliterate the one obstacle in their path to total dominance of the American work force: State Right to Work Laws.

Such legislation was Big Labor’s number one priority. The bosses were backed by the majority Lyndon Johnson and the Congressional leadership.

But, Mr. President, Reed Larson and the Committee’s members refused to be intimidated by the power arrayed against them. With the help of legendary Senate Republican Leader Everett Dirksen and after a fierce 2 year struggle, the Committee defeated the enemies of worker freedom.

The fight to preserve State Right to Work laws marked the coming of age of the National Right to Work Committee. From that moment on, the Big Labor bosses realized that someone was finally going to stand up to their ceaseless demand for power over the lives of American working men and women.

As further protection for working Americans, Larson in 1968 founded the American Working Men’s Foundation to aid workers in legal contests.

In the 27 years since, the Foundation has been a leader in protecting the legal rights of workers and has won several significant Supreme Court cases—including the landmark 1968 Beck case which declared that forced union dues for politics is unconstitutional.

During the 1970s the Committee battled attempts by Big Labor and its Congressional allies to throw the net of compulsory unionism over the American construction industry with the “Complete Situs” picketing scheme.

Big Labor steamrolled this legislation through both the House and Senate amid President Ford’s Labor Secretary John Dunlop’s assurances of presidential approval.

Against all odds, Reed Larson launched what was at the time the largest grassroots mobilization in American history, flooding the White House with over 700,000 cards and letters of protest.

Despite the pleas of his own Labor Secretary (who resigned shortly afterward) Reed Larson维度 the bill.

When the Common Situs Picketing bill returned in 1977, Larson rallied the same grassroots coalition he had so painstakingly assembled the year before and did battle with a seemingly stronger Big Labor political machine.

However, Mr. President, in one of the most stunning upsets in American political history, Right to Work forces emerged victorious in the House of Representatives by a slim 217 to 205 vote.

As Reed stated after the vote, ‘‘The history and death of the coercive piece of legislation should serve as a very important lesson to powerful union officials . . . seemingly limitless doses of money and muscle are no match for the will of the American people.’’

In 1978, Big Labor was razor close to enacting a so-called ‘‘Labor Law Reform’’ bill which would have given union organizers tremendous powers to blackmail employers into granting forced-dues contracts.

Reed Larson mobilized the majority of Americans opposed to compulsory unionism through a massive mail, media, and lobbying campaign which generated over 4 million cards and letters to the Senate during the course of the fight.

Mr. President, after a marathon of six separate cloture votes in the Senate, the labor bosses gave up.

Throughout the 1980s, Larson and the Committee kept up their campaign to bring the benefits to workers freedom to more and more Americans. That campaign resulted in the successful 1986 referendum making Idaho the Nation’s 21st Right to Work State.

But the decade of the 1980s opened with yet another big labor power grab. This time it was the Pushbutton Strike bill, or the so-called ‘‘Anti-Striker Replacement bill.’’ And once again, Reed and the Committee cracked up their grassroots network of freedom loving Americans to put the heat on Congress.

This bill would have handed union czars new strike powers so they could blackmail employers into signing contracts forcing their workers to pay union dues.

The campaign ran from coast to coast, education availing the benefits to workers freedom and growing, stands on the vanguard of the Campaign resulted in the successful 1986 referendum making Idaho the Nation’s 21st Right to Work State.

But the decade of the 1980s opened with yet another big labor power grab. This time it was the Pushbutton Strike bill, or the so-called ‘‘Anti-Striker Replacement bill.’’ And once again, Reed and the Committee cracked up their grassroots network of freedom loving Americans to put the heat on Congress.

This bill would have handed union czars new strike powers so they could blackmail employers into signing contracts forcing their workers to pay union dues.

In response to Larson’s letters and phone calls, the Senate was flooded with nearly two million cards, letters, faxes, and phone calls.

After 3 long years (and four more cloture votes) Larson and the Committee emerged victorious once again.

Today, the National Right to Work Committee, 1.9 million members strong and growing, stands on the vanguard for worker freedom and has compiled an outstanding record of commitment to principle and effective action.

So, Mr. President, I proudly salute the members of the National Right to Work Committee—and especially my good friend, Reed Larson, upon his 35th anniversary as president of the Committee for their unwavering dedication and tireless action on behalf of every American’s birthright not to be forced to join a labor union to get or keep a job.

COMMERCE COMMITTEE ACTION ON S. 565, PRODUCT LIABILITY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation met in executive session this morning and voted 13-6 to report favorably S. 565, the Product Liability Fairness Act of 1995, with an amendment. The amendment, a Chairman’s mark, is an amendment in the nature of a substitute for S. 565. However, it did not replace the bill’s original content. Rather, it built upon the good work of Senators GORTON and ROCKEFELLER.

I want to have the amendment printed in the RECORD so that my colleagues have the opportunity to review the legislation over the recess period we are about to begin. I understand the leadership intends to take up S. 565 when we return from the recess and I want all Senators to have ample time to understand its provisions.

In addition to the original provisions contained in S. 565, the Chairman’s mark incorporates the entirety of S. 303, the Biomaterials Access Assurance Act of 1995. Senators LIEBERMAN and MCGAIN introduced S. 303 on January 31 and the bill was referred to the Commerce Committee. I am proud to be a co-sponsor of S. 303. The biomaterials provisions are found in Title II of the Chairman’s mark.

The Chairman’s mark made two other notable changes to S. 565. Modifications were made to the vicarious liability of rental car companies and of equipment lessors. Such entities would be treated as “product sellers” under the mark.

Another exception was added to the statute of repose for durable and capital goods used in the workplace. Now, when there is an express warranty in writing as to the safety of the product involved, and the warranty period is longer than the 20 year statute of repose, a product liability action is timely for the duration of the warranty.

Mr. President, beyond these changes made by the Chairman’s mark, Senators will find S. 565 remains much as introduced several weeks ago. In other words, it remains very much a product liability reform bill. The Committee did not act to expand the legislation beyond its jurisdiction—tort reform connected to injuries caused by products in the stream of commerce.

I ask unanimous consent that the Chairman’s mark to S. 565, which the Commerce Committee voted to report this morning, be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S.565

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLe II—BIOMATERIAls AcCEss ASSURANCE

SEC. 201. SHOrTEt.

This title may be cited as the “Biomaterials Access Assurance Act of 1995”.

SEC. 202. FIndINgS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the use of biomaterials affects millions of citizens of the United States depend on the availability of lifesaving or life-enhancing medical devices, many of which are permanently implantable within the human body; and

(2) a continued supply of raw materials and component parts is necessary for the invention, development, improvement, and maintenance of the supply of the devices;

(3) the medical devices are made with raw materials and component parts that—

(A) are not designed or manufactured specifically for use in medical devices; and

(B) come in contact with internal human tissue;

(4) the raw materials and component parts also are used in a variety of nonmedical products;

(5) because small quantities of the raw materials and component parts for medical devices, sales of raw materials and component parts for medical devices constitute an extremely small portion of the overall market for the raw materials and medical devices;

(6) under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.), manufacturers and component parts for medical devices are required to demonstrate that the medical devices are safe and effective, including demonstrating that the products are properly designed and have adequate warnings or instructions;
(7) notwithstanding the fact that raw materials and component parts suppliers do not design or produce the parts, if a final medical device, the suppliers have been the subject of actions alleging inadequate—
(A) design and testing of medical devices manufactured from raw materials or parts supplied by the suppliers; or
(B) warnings related to the use of such medical devices;
(8) an impugned supplier of raw materials and component parts have very rarely been held liable in such actions, such suppliers have sold certain raw materials and component parts for use in medical devices because the costs associated with litigation in order to ensure a favorable judgment for the plaintiff exceeds the total potential sales revenues from sales by such suppliers to the medical device industry;
(9) unless alternate sources of supply can be found, the unavailability of raw materials and component parts for medical devices will lead to unavailability of lifesaving and life-enhancing medical devices;
(10) but when incidental to the other suppliers of raw materials and component parts in foreign nations are refusing to sell raw materials or component parts for use in manufacturing certain medical devices in the United States, the prospects for development of new sources of supply for the full range of threatened raw materials and component parts for medical devices are remote.
(11) it is unlikely that the small market for such raw materials and component parts in the United States could support the large investment needed to develop new suppliers of such raw materials and component parts;
(12) attempts to develop such new suppliers would be expensive and time consuming;
(13) courts that have considered the duties imposed on the suppliers of the raw materials and component parts have generally found that the suppliers do not have a duty—
(A) to evaluate the safety and efficacy of the use of a raw material or component part in a medical device; and
(B) to warn consumers concerning the safety and effectiveness of a medical device;
(14) attempts to impose the duties referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (13) on other suppliers of the raw materials and component parts would cause more harm than good by driving the suppliers to cease supplying manufacturers of medical devices; and
(15) in order to safeguard the availability of a wide variety of lifesaving and life-enhancing medical devices, immediate action is needed—
(A) to clarify the permissible bases of liability for suppliers of raw materials and component parts for medical devices; and
(B) to provide expeditious procedures to dispose of unwarranted suits against the suppliers in such manner as to minimize litigation costs.

RUSSIA TODAY

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I call the Senate’s attention to an important historic landmark. It is the 10th anniversary of the dissolution of the Soviet Union. This event occurred in December 1991 and will be commemorated throughout the month of December in Moscow, St. Petersburg, and across the former Soviet Union.

The dissolution of the Soviet Union has been a major event in world history, and it has had a profound impact on the political, economic, and social development of Russia and the other countries of the former Soviet Union.

The dissolution of the Soviet Union was a result of the policies of Mikhail Gorbachev, the last leader of the Soviet Union. Gorbachev was a reformer who sought to bring about a peaceful transition to a more open and democratic society. He introduced perestroika (restructuring) and glasnost (openness) to the Soviet Union, and he worked to reduce the cold war tensions with the United States.

However, the dissolution of the Soviet Union was not an easy transition. It was marked by a period of uncertainty and instability, during which the new states of the former Soviet Union struggled to establish their own identities and to find their place in the world.

Despite these challenges, the dissolution of the Soviet Union has been a major factor in the development of modern Russia. It has resulted in a greater degree of freedom and democracy, and it has led to a new emphasis on economic reform.

The dissolution of the Soviet Union has also had significant implications for the United States and other nations around the world. It has been a source of both progress and conflict, and it continues to shape the course of world events today.
of the 89 regions and republics of the Russian Federation. Many of its Deputies are regional leaders. It does not meet on a continuous, full-time basis and is more like the French or German upper chamber than the U.S. Senate. Deputies in both chambers serve 4-year terms. The first Federal Assembly, however, was elected in December 1993 for only a 2-year term, with new elections due this December.

After the December 1993 election, it seemed that the Duma might be dominated by an anti-democratic coalition and a hardline ultranationalists and communists. In its first year, however, the parliament avoided extreme confrontation with Yeltsin and, despite some missteps, supported some of the Government’s key economic reform legislation. Surprisingly, the parliament approved Government budgets for 1994 and 1995 that imposed relatively strict fiscal discipline and sharply restrained defense spending despite intense pressure from the military-industrial complex. The parliament also enacted key parts of a new commercial code and laws protecting property rights.

There is strong parliamentary opposition to Yeltsin’s actions in Chechnya. Many Deputies were angered by Yeltsin’s failure to consult them in advance or seek parliamentary approval of a state of emergency. Both chambers voted their disapproval of the actions, despite the large majorities, calling for the cessation of hostilities and a political resolution of the conflict. Parliamentary opposition, however, has had minimal impact on Russian policy in Chechnya, in part because the Constitution gives predominance power to the president on national security issues.

The Federal Assembly is a political training ground in which an important segment of the post-Yeltsin generation of parliamentarians is learning democratic principles and skills that are not part of traditional Russian political culture, such as compromise and coalition-building, respect for the rule of law and representative government. Most Russian Deputies are overwhelmed by the enormity and urgency of their legislative responsibilities and the meagerness of their experience and resources. They know that they have a great deal to learn and the majority are not only willing but eager to benefit from foreign experience, including U.S. experience. Despite, or perhaps because of, the legacy of the cold war, many Russian Deputies view the U.S. Congress as an important and appropriate model. They are also stuck by similarities in the size and demographic diversity of our counties and our constitutional systems based on separation of powers, bicameralism, and federalism. Imperfect as our own institutions are, from a Russian perspective they are impressive examples of stability and continuing federalism; they provide a peaceful resolution of competing political, economic, social, ethnic, and spiritual interests.

There is already a significant level of informal travel between Washington and Moscow by Members of Congress and Russian Deputies. This is healthy and should be expanded as much as possible. There are already overtures from the Russian side for formal intergovernmental consultations focused on issues of mutual interest. Staff consultations, exchanges, and training are another fruitful avenue. Frankly, on the American side the constraints are not so much financial but the commitment to intergovernmental consultation. But I would urge my colleagues to think about the potential payoff on a modest investment of time in such endeavors. Russian Deputies are so eager to learn about U.S. legislative procedure and about the U.S. experience on a wide range of legislative issues. Here is an opportunity to influence positively and perhaps even help to shape the procedures, policies, and perspectives of the legislature of the world’s other nuclear superpower. This should be done not in spite of the conflict in Chechnya, but all the more because of it. The Chechen crisis underlines the increased importance of the Russian parliament.

The Congressional Research Service is already embarked on an ambitious program of assistance to the Russian Federal Assembly. Funded by the Agency for International Development, $3.5 million over 3 years, beginning in May 1994, with congressional approval, the CRS program aims to:

- Help the Russian Federal Assembly create its own research and analysis capability independent of the executive branch.
- Enhance the automation and interconnectivity of both chambers of the Federal Assembly and the Parliamentary Library.
- Strengthen the collections and capabilities of the Russian Parliamentary Library.
- Provide training in Moscow and Washington for Russian parliamentary staff specializing in automation, research and policy analysis, and legislative drafting.
- Bring a leadership delegation from each chamber of the Federal Assembly to Washington to learn and observe first hand about development and oversight of legislative research and policy analysis.

CRS has considerable experience in such activity, having been directed by Congress to provide similar parliamentary assistance through the Gift of Democracy to Poland, program, which was subsequently expanded under the House of Representative Special Task Force on Development of Parliamentary Institutions in Eastern Europe, to include assistance to the parliaments of Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Bulgaria, and Albania. There is a comparable AID-funded program to the Development of Parliamentary Institutions in Central and Eastern Europe and now hope to do the same in Russia. At the same time, these programs provide CRS and the Congress with literally unique access to and insight into political developments in those countries. It is an activity from which all parties benefit in a variety of ways.

The Russian parliamentary leadership delegation that has been invited by CRS to visit Capitol Hill in the first week of April 1995 is led by Mikhail Mityukov, First Deputy Chairman of the Duma and Valerian Viktorov, Deputy Chairman of the Federation Council, and includes the chairmen of five important committees from both chambers.

On behalf of the Congress I would like to welcome these distinguished visitors in the spirit of interparliamentary cooperation and exchange. I would also encourage my colleagues to meet with their Russian counterparts to help them gain a deeper appreciation of our legislative experience as well as our shortcomings so that they may benefit both from our example and from mistakes as they build the foundation of their own legislature. At the same time, this will give Members an unusual opportunity to discuss legislative issues of mutual interest with senior Russian Deputies and to learn first-hand about developments in Russia as it struggles to redefine itself politically, economically, socially, and spiritually.

The Congress is not only a historic moment for Russia but also a historic opportunity for both our countries to redefine the relationship between us. Cooperative interparliamentary relations can play a role in this redefinition.

HONORING THE 1995 KIMBALL HUMANITARIAN AWARD RECIPIENTS

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to three outstanding citizens of New Jersey who are being honored by the Kimball Medical Center Foundation of Lakewood, NJ on Wednesday, April 12, 1995.

At the Ninth Annual Awards Program, Edmund Bennett, Jr., Thomas F. Kelaher, Esq., and Robert H. Ogle will each receive the Kimball Humanitarian Award as a way to recognize extraordinary leadership to the nonprofit sector of society, to acknowledge distinguished service towards the advancement of health care, and to honor individuals whose daily lives reflect the essence of humanitarianism.

Today, when the fragile ecology of our social environment is as threatened as that of our natural environment, I am delighted to have the opportunity to pay tribute to the efforts of these three individuals who recognize the importance of society. Civilizations cannot be constructed out of government and markets alone—we must also have a healthy and robust civic sector—a place in which the bonds of community can flourish.

Edmund Bennett, Thomas Kelaher and Robert Ogle recognize that civil society is the place where Americans make their home, sustain their marriage and raise their kids. They know that civil society is in our schools, fraternities, community centers, church, PTAs, libraries and local voluntary associations. They recognize that a sense of common purpose and consensus need to be forged to tackle our national problems. Civil society is the personal, everyday realm that is governed by values such as responsibility, trust, fraternity, solidarity and love. With every meeting attended, board sat on, speech delivered and helping hand that is extended, these three men challenge the notion that life today is too fast-paced and global in scope for individuals to make a difference in their own communities. I salute them, Thomas Kelaher and Robert Ogle for their spirit of volunteerism, leadership among local voluntary organizations and their continuing contributions to their community.

COMMEMORATING THE SESQUICENTENNIAL OF MCCARTER & ENGLISH OF NEWARK, NJ

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the sesquicentennial anniversary of the founding of McCarter & English, the oldest and largest law firm in New Jersey.

Originally a small firm with fewer than a dozen lawyers, McCarter & English has grown in both size and prominence in the century and a half since its founding. At its current size of 210 lawyers, with five offices and a sizable international legal services group, McCarter & English has established a reputation as one of the preeminent firms in New Jersey and the country.

If you were to ask a member of the New Jersey business community to describe McCarter & English, they might use the word prestigious or perhaps venerable; if you were to ask a New Jersey historian the same question they would undoubtedly use a much different word and it would be colorful. Since its founding, McCarter & English has played an on-going leadership role in evaluating educational, cultural and civic organizations in the State. Generous contributions to the New Jersey Center for Performing Arts and other projects have played a vital role in the revitalization and development of Newark. This commitment to the city of Newark, where McCarter & English has been headquartered since it moved from Newton, Sussex County in 1865, has helped Newark weather difficult times over the past three decades.

McCarter & English has grown in both size and prominence in the century and a half since its founding. At its current size of 210 lawyers, McCarter & English played an historic role in the development of New Jersey’s business and legal communities and continues to play a vital role in these arenas. Once again, I congratulate McCarter & English on its 150th anniversary.

CONFERENCE REPORT ACCOMPANYING S. 244, THE PAPERWORK REDUCTION ACT OF 1995

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the Conference Report on the “Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995” , S.244, a bill which I introduced on January 19, with strong bipartisan support. The conference report will be accepted by the Senate. The leadership of the House is eager to take action before the recess. Representatives of the administration have stated that the President is equally eager to sign into law this legislation to substantially strengthen the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980, and reauthorize appropriations for the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs [OIRA], which has been without an appropriation since October of 1989.

Mr. President, before making some observations about the substance of the conference report upon which the Senate is about to act, I would like to briefly share with some of our newer colleagues some highlights of the very long march that had to be taken to get us to this point.

The effort has spanned more than 5 years, beginning in 1989. In the fall of 1989, the small business community, including Senators Bosch- witz, Kasten, and Pressler, had been original cosponsors. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], then chairman of the committee, had each time consented to serve as the principal Democratic cosponsor.

With the introduction of S. 1139, the effort has had the strong support of a broad Paperwork Reduction Act Coalition, representing virtually every segment of the business community, but especially the small business community.

Mr. President, I will have more to say about the Paperwork Reduction Act Coalition later in my remarks.

The 102d Congress ended without seeing any action on S. 1139. Consideration of that bill became ensnarled in the controversies regarding OIRA’s regulatory review activities on behalf of the President, conducted pursuant to executive order, and the activities of the Council on Competitiveness, chaired by Vice President Quayle.

At the beginning of the 103d Congress, I introduced S. 560, again with strong bipartisan support. Our former colleague from Missouri, Senator Danforth, had been the principal Republican cosponsor of the legislation sponsored by our former colleague from Florida, Lawton Chiles, that became the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980.

During the last Congress real progress was finally made. S. 560 was skillfully amended with Senator GLENN’s bill, S. 681. Both had the same basic objective—to reauthorize appropriations for OIRA. S. 560, as amended, approved by the Senate, passed as the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980. Each bill, however, reflected substantively different perspectives of how the Paperwork Reduction Act should be strengthened. A committee substitute for S. 560 was developed, reflecting the core of both bills. My friend from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], then chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee displaying skilful leadership and tenacity to break the logjam. Progress would not have been possible without the steadfast support of my friend from Delaware [Mr. ROTI], and many of my Republican friends on the Governmental Affairs Committee. Before the end of the last Congress, we were able to move the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1994, S. 244, as amended, approved by the Senate not once but twice in the closing days of the 103d Congress. S. 560 passed the Senate by unanimous voice vote on October 6, 1994. The following day, the text of S. 560 was attached to the conference report which was passed to the House. Unfortunately, neither bill was cleared for action before adjournment of the 103d Congress.
With the convening of the 104th Congress, I introduced the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995. S. 244, a bill substantially identical to the text of S. 560, passed by the Senate.

A substantially identical House companion, H.R. 830, was introduced in the House. H.R. 830 was passed by the House on February 22 by a rolcall vote of 418-0.

Given all of the bipartisan consensus that had been developed around S. 560 during the 103rd Congress, the Senate was able to promptly turn to the consideration of S. 244, following its being unanimously ordered reported by the Committee on Governmental Affairs on February 1. On March 7, the Senate passed S. 244 by a rolcall vote of 98-0.

Since the version of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995 passed by the House contained virtually all of the provisions of S. 244, as reported by the Governmental Affairs Committee, the conference’s focus was on those provisions of the House-passed bill that are sought to further strengthen provisions of the 1980 act and the provisions added during consideration on the Senate floor.

Mr. President, the text of S. 244 is truly not the least common denominator of the two versions of the bill, but rather almost an aggregation of the best features of both. Those who have worked long and hard on this effort for the past 15 years, within this body, within the House, and especially the organizations that comprise the Paperwork Reduction Act Coalition, can be justifiably proud of what has been accomplished. Only the fewest of House provisions to further strengthen the 1980 act were not included in the conference report.

S. 244 forcefully reaffirms the fundamental congressional objective of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980: to minimize the Federal paperwork burdens that so infuriates the public.

For example, S. 244 reaffirms OIRA’s authority to prescribe standards under which agencies estimate the number of burden hours imposed by a proposed paperwork requirement. Today, too many agency paperwork estimates severely underestimate the total burden likely to be imposed. It is not merely the time needed to complete the form. That is just part of the burden. The underlying burden is the time needed to understand the paperwork requirement, collect the information, and then array it in the manner requested, cannot be ignored. Further, if the paperwork requirement is to be a recurring requirement, it may require the establishment of a special record keeping system and the associated equipment and personnel. S. 244 modifies the Act’s definition of burden to capture the full range of regulatory paperwork compliance costs.

S. 244 clarifies and strengthens the act’s public protection features. The act currently permits a member of the public to ignore a paperwork collection requirement that does not display a valid OMB control number, indicating that the paperwork collection requirement has been approved by OIRA, and that approval has not expired. The conference agreement makes explicit that the protection afforded by the act may be asserted or raised in the form of a defense, whether the agency should seek to enforce compliance with the unapproved collection of information or impose a penalty through administrative or judicial action.

The enhanced public protection provision of S. 244 also requires the agencies to provide an explicit notice on the form that the public need not comply with a paperwork requirement that fails to display a valid control number. Such a warning label should help educate the public regarding the protections afforded them by the act against unauthorized collections of information.

The conference agreement reflects another provision of S. 244 designed to empower individual members of the public to help police unauthorized paperwork requirements. Under S. 244, a member of the public empowered to seek a determination from the OIRA Administrator regarding whether the manner in which an agency is implementing a paperwork requirement is in conformity with the act. The provision establishes response times and provides the OIRA Administrator with authority to seek appropriate remedial action by the agency, if warranted.

The conference agreement also includes a substantially strengthened requirement relating to paperwork reduction goals. S. 244 requires the establishment of a Government-wide paperwork burden reduction goal of at least 10 percent for each of the fiscal years 1996 and 1997. A Government-wide goal of at least 5 percent would be required in each of the fiscal years 1998 through 2000. In the event that the Government-wide goals, goals would be negotiated between OIRA and the individual agencies, which reflect the maximum practicable opportunity for paperwork burden reduction.

More important than the simple establishment of more aggressive Government-wide paperwork reduction goals is the provision adopted from the House-passed bill which will contribute to making them a reality. Under the conference agreement’s annual report to the Congress would identify those agencies which had failed to attain their burden reduction, set forth the reasons given by the agency for such failure, and specify the agency’s proposals for remedial action.

On the basis of a 40-hour work week, that’s the equivalent of 3 million Americans being employed full-time solely to meet the Government’s paperwork demands. And, these are conservative estimates, compiled by OIRA on the basis of the burden hour estimates assigned by the agencies to their approved paperwork burdens. Burden estimates, which many in the private sector oppose on the grounds that the end of these paperwork demands, believe to be very low. These estimates are contained in an Information Collection Budget, annually published by OIRA. Our former colleague, Lawton Chiles, the father of the Paperwork Reduction Act, used the word budget to emphasize that Federal paperwork requirements impose real costs on the public and the Nation’s economy.

Mr. President, at the same time, there can be no doubt that Government requires information to serve the people. We are in the Information Age. In the words frequently used by my colleague from Georgia the Speaker of the House the “Third Wave” is upon us. With Government’s real need for information, the key is to obtain only what is necessary and to do so in the least burdensome manner. Improving the Government’s use of information technology is, and should be, an important function of OIRA. It can simultaneously lessen the burden of information collection on the public, enhance Government’s effective use of the information collected, and foster dissemination of Government information for the benefit of the public. Although an era in which mechanical typewriters dominate Government offices, the Paperwork Reduction Act provides the broad legislative foundation to serve as a key tool for coping with the new demands being placed upon the Federal Government.

That foundation was broadened and substantially enhanced by the provisions in the Senate’s version of S. 244 derived from the work of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. GLENN].

Mr. President, I would like to highlight one additional point about S. 244, although it was not an issue in conference since both versions of the bill contained identical language. The Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995 clarifies the 1980 Act to make explicit that it applies to Government-sponsored third-party paperwork burdens. These are recordkeeping, disclosure, or other paperwork burdens that one private party imposes on another private party at the direction of a Federal agency, which is a burden on the public.

In 1990, the U.S. Supreme Court decided that such Government-sponsored third-party paperwork burdens were not subject to the Paperwork Reduction Act. The Court’s decision in Dole versus United Steelworkers of America created a potentially vast loophole. The public could be denied the act’s protections on the basis of the manner in which a Federal agency chose to impose a paperwork burden, indirectly rather than directly. It is worth noting that Lerner filed a amicus brief to the Supreme Court arguing that no such exemption for third-party paperwork burdens was intended. Given the plain words of the statute, the Court decided otherwise.

S. 244 makes explicit the act’s coverage of all Government-sponsored paperwork burdens. We can feel confident that this major loophole is closed. But given the experience under the act, it is prudent to remain vigilant to additional efforts to restrict the act’s reach and public protections.

The Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995, like its predecessor bills, has enjoyed the steadfast support of the Paperwork Reduction Act Coalition, representing virtually every segment of the business community. Participating in the coalition are the major national small business associations—the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB), the Small Business Legislative Council (SBLC), and National Small Business United (NSBU), as well as the many specialized national individual small business associations, like the American Subcontractors Association, that can maximize the membership of SBLC or NSBU.

Other business associations participating in the coalition represent many types of manufacturers, aerospace and electronics firms, construction firms, geometric manufacturers, technology services, retailers of various products and services and the wholesalers and distributors who support them. I would like to identify a few of the coalition’s member organizations; the Aerospace Industries Association (AIA), the American Consulting Engineers Council (ACEC), the American Subcontractors Association (ASA), the Associated Builders and Contractors [ABC], the Associated General Contractors of America [AGC], the Contract Services Association [CSA], the Electronic Industries Association (EIA), the Independent Bankers Association of America [IBAA], the International Communications Industries Association [ICIA], the National Association of Manufacturers [NAM], the National Tooling and Machine Association [NTMA], the Printing Industries of America [PIA], and the Professional Services Council [PSC].

Leadership for the Coalition is being provided by the Council on Regulatory Information and Management (C-RIM) and by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. A similar coalition for C-RIM is the Business Council on the Reduction of Paperwork, which has dedicated itself to paperwork reduction and regulatory reform issues for a half century.

The coalition also includes many other professional associations and public interest groups that support strengthening the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980. Because of their efforts, two deserve special mention. The Association of Records Managers and Administrators (ARMA) has worked long and hard. The conference agreement reflects their valuable contribution—a requirement that any collection of information imposing a record-keeping requirement also specify how long the public must retain the required record. According to ARMA, tens of millions of dollars are being wasted in the needless retention of records.

The coalition has also been substantially enhanced by the participation of Citizens for a Sound Economy [CSE]. With this victory nearly at hand, CSE has been working hard at reform of the Government’s basic regulatory process.

Given the regulatory burdens faced by State and local governments, legislation to strengthen the Paperwork Reduction Act is high on the agenda of the various associations representing our Nation’s elected officials. As Governor of Florida, Lawton Chiles, has worked hard for the cause with the National Governors Association [NGA]. NGA adopted a resolution in support of this legislation during its 1994 annual meeting, thanks to the work of Governor Chiles and others.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the conference report on S. 244, the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1993—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 41

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

To the Congress of the United States:

It is my special pleasure to transmit herewith the Annual Report of the National Endowment for the Arts for the fiscal year 1993.

The National Endowment for the Arts has awarded over 100,000 grants since 1965 for arts projects that touch every community in the Nation. Through its grants to individual artists, the agency has helped to launch and sustain the voice and grace of a generation—such as the brilliance of Rita Dove, now the U.S. Poet Laureate, and the daring of dancer Arthur Mitchell. Through its grants to art organizations, it has helped invigorate community arts centers and museums, preserve our folk heritage, and advance the performing, literary, and visual arts.

Since its inception, the Arts Endowment has believed that all children should have an education in the arts. Over the past few years, the agency has worked hard to include the arts in our national education reform movement. Today, the arts are helping to lead the way in renewing American schools.

I have seen first-hand the success story of this small agency. In my home...
State of Arkansas, the National Endowment for the Arts worked in partnership with the State arts agency and the private sector to bring artists into our schools, to help cities revive downtown centers, and to support opera and jazz, literature and music. All told, the United States, the Endowment invests in our cultural institutions and artists. People in communities small and large in every State have greater opportunities to participate and enjoy the arts. We all benefit from this increase, and yet, on average, each American payback in economic terms has always been several-fold. The payback in human benefit is incalculable.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

REPORT RELATIVE TO THE NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 42

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

To the Congress of the United States:

The United States has always been blessed with an abundance of natural resources. Together with the ingenuity and determination of the American people, these resources have formed the basis of our prosperity. They have given us the opportunity to feed our people, power our industry, create our medicines, and defend our borders—and we have a responsibility to be good stewards of our heritage. In recent decades, however, rapid technological advances and population growth have greatly increased our ability to have an impact on our surroundings, and we do not always pause to contemplate the consequences of our actions. Far too often, our short-sighted decisions cause the greatest harm to the very people who are least able to influence them—future generations.

We have a moral obligation to represent the interests of those who have no voice in today’s decisions—our children and grandchildren. We have a responsibility to see that they inherit a productive world that allows them to enjoy the same or greater opportunities than we ourselves have enjoyed. Those of us who still believe in the American Dream will settle for no less. Those who say that we cannot afford both a strong economy and a healthy environment are ignoring the fact that the two are inextricably linked. Our economy will not remain strong for long if we continue to consume renewable resources faster than they can be replenished, or if we are no longer able to develop substitutes; America’s fishing and timber-dependent communities will not survive for long if we destroy our fisheries and our forests.

Whether the subject is deficit spending or the stewardship of our fisheries, the issue is the same: we should not pursue a strategy of short-term gain that will harm future generations.

Since Henry Jackson and Ed Muskie, and Congressman JOHN DINGLE understood this back in 1969 when they joined together to work for passage of the National Environmental Policy Act. At its heart, the National Environmental Policy Act is about our relationship to the natural world, and about our relationship with future generations. For the first time, the National Environmental Policy Act made explicit the widely-held public sentiment that we should live in harmony with nature and make decisions that account for future generations as well as for today. It declared that the Federal Government should work in concert with State and local governments and the citizens of this great Nation to create conditions under which man and nature can exist in productive harmony, and fulfill the social, economic, and other requirements of present and future generations of Americans.

Over the past 27 years, America has made great progress in protecting the environment. The air is cleaner in many places than it was, and we no longer have rivers that catch on fire. And yet, this year in Milwaukee, more than 100 people died from drinking contaminated water, and many of our surface waters are still not fit for fishing and swimming. One in four Americans still lives near a toxic dump and almost as many breathe air that is unhealthy.

In order to continue the progress that we have made and adequately provide for future generations, my Administration is ushering in a new era of common sense reforms. We are bringing together, in new walks of life, the know-how and resources of stakeholders—representatives of industry, labor, State governments, and the environmental community—to develop a new strategy to protect the air and the water and improve public health. For example, the Superfund program will be faster, fairer and more efficient—and it will put more land back into productive community use.

Similarly, EPA is embarking on a new approach to make environmental and health regulation work better and cost less. This new common sense approach has the potential to revolutionize the way we write environmental regulations. First, EPA will not seek to adopt environmental standards that are inconsistent with predicted stakeholders—representatives of industry, labor, State governments, and the environmental community—will be involved from the beginning. Second, we will replace one-size-fits-all regulations with a focus on results achieved with flexible means. And at last, we are taking a consistent, comprehensive approach. With the old piecemeal approach, the water rules were written in isolation of the air rules and the waste rules, and too often led to results that were not affordable for the polluters—results that had too little health protection at two great a cost. With its new common sense approach, EPA will address the full range of environmental and health impacts of a given industry—steel or electronics for example—to get cleaner, faster, and cheaper results.

Better Stewardship of our Natural Resources—Just as representative of our new approach to the environment, and the new common sense—is the Administration’s commitment to ecosystems management of the Nation’s natural resources. For decades ecologists have known that what we do with one resource affects the others. For instance, the way we manage a forest has very real consequences for the quality of the rivers that run through the forest, very real consequences for the fishermen who depend on that water for their livelihood, and very real consequences for the health of the community downstream. But until recently, government operations failed to account adequately for such interaction. In many cases, several Federal agencies operated independently in the same area under different rules. In many cases, one paused to ponder the negative consequences of their actions until it was too late.

Often, these consequences were catastrophic, leading to ecological and economic train wrecks such as the collapse of fisheries along the coasts, or the conflict over timber cutting in the Pacific Northwest. When I convened Government, striving to make it work better and cost less. One of the best places to apply this principle in the environmental arena is the Superfund program. For far too long, far too many Superfund dollars have been spent in lawyers and attorneys—clearly not enough have been spent on clean-up. I’ve directed my Administration to reform this program by cutting legal costs, increasing community involvement, and cleaning up toxic dumps and quickly. The reformed Superfund program will be faster, fairer and more efficient—and it will put more land back into productive community use.

Similarly, government, striving to make environmental and health regulation work better and cost less. This new common sense approach has the potential to revolutionize the way we write environmental regulations. First, EPA will not seek to adopt environmental standards that are inconsistent with predicted stakeholders—representatives of industry, labor, State governments, and the environmental community—will be involved from the beginning. In many cases, one paused to ponder the negative consequences of their actions until it was too late.

Often, these consequences were catastrophic, leading to ecological and economic train wrecks such as the collapse of fisheries along the coasts, or the conflict over timber cutting in the Pacific Northwest. When I convened... the forest Conference earlier this year I saw the devastating effects of the Federal Government’s lack of foresight and failure to provide leadership. Here, perhaps more than anywhere else, is a case study in how a failure to anticipate the consequences of our actions on the natural environment can be devastating to our livelihoods in the years ahead. Our forest plan is a balanced and comprehensive program to put people back to work and protect ancient forests and future generations. It will not solve all of the region’s problems but it is a strong first step at restoring both the long-term health of the region’s ecosystem and the region’s economy.

Innovative Environmental Technologies—Environmental and health reforms such as EPA’s common sense strategy and natural resource reforms such as the forest plan provide an opportunity, and an obligation, to make good decisions for today that continue to pay off for generations to come. In much the same way, sound investments in environmental technology can ensure that we leave to future generations a productive, livable world. Every innovation in environmental technology supports and sustains one another. Making it possible to accomplish goals that have eluded us in the past. From the very beginning, I have promoted innovative environmental technologies as a top priority. We’ve launched a series of environmental technology initiatives, issued a number of Executive orders to help spur the application of these technologies, and taken concrete steps to promote their export. Experts say the world market for environmental technology is nearly $300 billion today and that it may double by the year 2000. Every dollar we invest in environmental technology will pay off in a healthier environment worldwide, in greener markets share for U.S. companies, and in more jobs for American workers.

Innovations in environmental technology can be the bridge that carries us from the threat of greater health crises and ecological destruction toward the promise of greater economic prosperity and social well-being. Innovation by innovation, we can build a world transformed by human ingenuity and creativity—a world in which economic activity and the natural environment support and sustain one another.

This is the vision that Jackson, Muskie, and Dingell articulated more than two decades ago when they wrote in the National Environmental Policy Act that we should strive to live in productive harmony with nature and seek to fulfill the social and economic needs of future generations. We share a common responsibility to see beyond the urgent pressures of today and think of the future. We share a common responsibility to speak for our children, so that they inherit a world filled with the same opportunity that we had. This is the vision for which we work today and the guiding principle behind my Administration’s environmental policies.

THE MORES K. UDALL PARKINSON'S RESEARCH ASSISTANCE AND EDUCATION ACT OF 1995

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if you want to know more about Parkinson's disease all you have to do is read the newspaper or watch the nightly news. You don't even have to read the whole paper, the information is usually on page 1. Prestigious and international papers such as the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal believe that the news is worthy of front page coverage. Prime Time had a feature on Parkinson's, and our very own Washington Post devoted three pages to promising new developments. What has caused the media fervor is the exciting new and dramatic medical discoveries in the field of neurology and neurosurgery. As I speak, scientists are uncovering new important data on nerve cell function and repair. Our biomedical research teams are on the cusp of breaking the code to nerve regeneration.

In these times of exciting new developments, we are unfortunately encountering a financial impediment. Last year, the Federal funding for Parkinson's disease at the NIH was $26 million. To put that number in perspective, the annual Federal budget for Alzheimer's is $300 million, $3 billion each for cancer and heart disease. Our commitment to eradicating Parkinson's disease is minuscule in comparison. I cannot understand the lack of financial support for a disease that affects over 1 million Americans and costs our society over $6 billion a year. This disease is so widespread that each one of us has a close friend or loved one who is facing the challenge of life with Parkinson's. We must change our message to the American public and declare that Parkinson's disease research is a worthy investment in the future health of our Nation.
Today, I am pleased to reintroduce legislation that accomplishes that goal. The Morris K. Udall Parkinson’s Research, Assistance, and Education Act of 1995, increases the Federal investment in Parkinson’s research to $100 million per year. The bill establishes an Interagency Coordinating Council, composed of representatives from the relevant agencies and NIH, which will develop a strategic plan for Parkinson’s research. At the heart of the bill is the funding of Morris K. Udall Parkinson’s Centers which will conduct basic and clinical research and patient care. Having these three individual areas of research and treatment linked in a center will assure that the research developments will be coordinated and the quality of patient care will be greatly improved. In addition, the centers may develop teaching programs for health professionals, engage in information dissemination and public information. To compile necessary data on patients and their families a clearinghouse will be established. Morris K. Udall Leadership and Excellence Awards will be granted to scientists who excel in Parkinson’s research. The need is evident for the affected individuals and their families to understand the disease. The Morris K. Udall Parkinson’s Disease Education Program will be established to provide technical assistance to advocacy groups and facilitate public understanding of Parkinson’s disease. Finally, a national Parkinson’s Disease Education Program will be established to provide technical assistance to advocacy groups and facilitate public understanding of Parkinson’s disease.

The important legislation honors Mo Udall, a dedicated Congressman from the Second District in Arizona. For 30 years, Mo represented his constituents with integrity, compassion, and humor. He is remembered for his stewardship with integrity, compassion, and humor.

The Coordinating Committee shall establish a committee to be known as the Interagency Coordinating Committee on Parkinson’s Disease (in this subsection referred to as the ‘Coordinating Committee’). With respect to Parkinson’s, the Coordinating Committee shall have the following duties:

(a) (A) provide for the coordination of the activities of the national institutes of Health regarding research and training, the dissemination of information, and other programs with respect to Parkinson’s disease.

(b) coordinate the aspects of all Federal health programs and activities relating to Parkinson’s in order to assure the adequacy, effectiveness, and technical soundness of such programs and activities and in order to provide for the full communication and exchange of information necessary to maintain adequate coordination of such programs and activities.

(c) the development of innovative multidisciplinary research and continuing education to health professionals; and

(d) conduct training programs for scientists and health professionals;

(e) conduct programs to provide information and continuing education to health professionals; and

(f) conduct programs for the dissemination of information to the public; and

(g) develop and maintain, where appropriate, a brain bank to collect specimens related to the research and treatment of Parkinson’s disease.

THE MORRIS K. UDALL PARKINSON’S RESEARCH, EDUCATION AND ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1995

SPECIAL REPORT

Section 1—Short Title: Morris K. Udall Parkinson’s Research, Assistance and Education Act of 1995.

Section 2—Findings and Purpose: Parkinson’s disease and related disorders affect as many as 1 million Americans, with costs to the society of nearly $6 billion annually. To date, the federal research effort has been grossly underfunded, providing about $25 million a year for research on Parkinson’s. It is the purpose of this Act to provide for the expansion and coordination of research concerning Parkinson’s, and to improve care and assistance to the afflicted individuals and family caregivers.

Section 3—Biomedical Research on Parkinson’s Disease: Amends Title IV, Part B of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 284 et seq.) with a new Section 409A—Parkinson’s Disease Research—

A. EXPANSION OF BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

1. Interagency Coordinating Committee—The Director of the National Institutes of Health (NIH) shall establish a committee to coordinate Parkinson’s research, composed of the directors of each of the national research institutes, representatives of other agencies, and patients and their families.

2. Annual Report—Not later than 120 days after the end of each fiscal year, the Coordinating Committee shall prepare and submit to the Secretary of Health and Human Serv-
Huntington’s disease may be cured if adequate resources are devoted to the problem. The Udall Bill would establish research and education centers, promote a coordinated research agenda, establish research and education grants and establish a national education program.

More than 1 million Americans are affected with Parkinson’s disease. Approximately 50,000 Americans are diagnosed with Parkinson’s each year. Parkinson’s disease is estimated to cost the U.S. $6 billion a year in direct health-related expenses, lost productivity and indirect disability costs.

I am able to speak in regard to this matter with authority and experience. Three years ago my oldest daughter ran away. With increasing disability, I had to leave my job at the Prosecuting Attorneys Office 8 months ago which I had loved and still miss every day. In a year and a half I will lose my benefits with my previous job and my family will be responsible to pick up the costs of skyrocketing prescription costs. At the present time my drug treatment and circulation management treatment which will only increase with progression. We are scared, really scared and no longer make plans for our future. Do we even have a future?

I urge you to co-sponsor the Morris K. Udall Parkinson’s Research, Education and Assistance Act of 1994 to give my family and so many families HOPE! I look forward to hearing your views on this subject.

Sincerely,

Karen Kidwell
President
The Parkinson’s Institute, Sunnydale, CA, March 29, 1995.

Hon. Mark Hatfield
U.S. Senate
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HATFIELD: I wish you well with your bill, the Morris K. Udall Parkinson’s Research and Education Act, which you will reintroduce to the Senate on April 6th. As a physician and scientist who has spent the last 20 years trying to improve the treatment of Parkinson’s disease, I am delighted to see a proposal which recognizes that Parkinson’s disease must be cured and adequate resources are devoted to the problem for the next few years.

Even with the current low level of Federal research support for Parkinson’s disease, this disease is still the neurologic disorder most likely to be cured in the next decade. While neural transplantation with fetal tissue has already been shown to produce substantial clinical benefit in some patients, genetically engineered alternatives to fetal cells offer promise to supply a limitless amount of tissue for brain repair. These and other fundamental breakthroughs will certainly occur with accelerated research.

Your bill recognizes this unusual opportunity. If we can cure Parkinson’s disease, the lessons that we learn will apply to many other disorders such as Alzheimer’s disease, Huntington’s disease, and epilepsy. Research in other areas such as diabetes will also be benefited.

Although we live in a time of fiscal constraint, I can assure you that money spent on research for Parkinson’s disease will be repaid many times over by increased productivity and reduced medical costs. Research success will take people who are frozen invalids and give them back the freedom to move.

Yours sincerely,

Bruce R. Freed, M.D.,
Professor and Head, Division of Clinical Pharmacology and Toxicology.
This is an extremely exciting time in neuroscience research. Breakthroughs in our understanding of how the brain functions in normal and diseased states as well as new therapies to treat neurological disorders are occurring at an unprecedented pace. Research relating to Parkinson's disease (PD) is at an especially exciting crossroads, since we understand more about PD than any other neurological disorder. Novel therapies, such as neural tissue transplantation, selective neural ablation techniques, and protective drug therapies, are being aggressively studied in laboratories at the University of Minnesota, as well as in laboratories across the country. These important studies hold promise for the more than one million people in the United States who have Parkinson's disease, as well as the many more people in the next generation destined to be struck down with this devastating disease.

I would like to make one additional point about this type of neuroscience research. The death of neurons in Parkinson's disease undoubtedly employs cellular mechanisms similar to that which occurs in many other neurodegenerative diseases. Therefore, advances made in Parkinson's disease research today will be applicable to many, many other neurological diseases. The knowledge gained from research on diseases such as Alzheimer's and Huntington's diseases, as well as stroke and cerebral palsy, to name just a few. This bill promises to give a boost to so many areas of neuroscience research which affect each and every one of us.

Thank you for your attention and your support of these important efforts. Please keep in touch with me if there is anything that I can do to answer questions or to help facilitate the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

ELIZABETH M. JANSEN
AXION RESEARCH FOUNDATION,

Hon. MARK O. HATFIELD,
Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HATFIELD: The Axion Research Foundation, its supporters, and researchers are most grateful to you and other supporters for the re-introduction of the Morris K. Udall Parkinson's Research and Education Act.

Our Foundation has played an important role in carrying out and funding important breakthroughs related to cellular and genetic manifestations and treatments for Parkinson's disease. We have recently helped to develop the first practical diagnostic test for Parkinson's disease, which should dramatically facilitate studies aimed at determining its cause. Other research areas also offer great promise at the present time. But it is clear that the combined efforts of both the private sector and the federal government must increase to produce clinical benefits for patients and the reduction of health care costs which would result from a cure.

The Morris K. Udall Parkinson's Research and Education Act is a great step in the right direction and will be eagerly supported by patients, their families, and neuroscience researchers.

Sincerely,

Hon. MARK O. HATFIELD,
Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HATFIELD: As director of the Neural Transplant Program at Yale University, I am writing to thank you and other supporters for re-introducing the Morris K. Udall Parkinson's Research and Education Act to the 104th Congress.

This is a particularly exciting period of research in which novel treatments for Parkinson's disease are being developed and evaluated, and research is progressing to determine the cause of the disease. Although there is no cure for in‐

In addition, the Morris K. Udall Parkinson's Research and Education Act allows Congress to embark on a major effort to increase the knowledge of the causes, treatments and cures for these disorders. It further sets patient, care giver, support services and community understanding as a priority in raising the quality of life of those affected by these disorders.

We commend you for your leadership in this very important legislative initiative. Your leadership is much appreciated as is your support by the Young Parkinson's Support Network of California.

Sincerely,

TOM G. BROWN,
President.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 4, 1995]

DISEASES THAT ATTACK THE BRAIN

She was a retired Swedish lawyer, 69, and during the past eight years she had sunk into the foggy oblivion of Alzheimer's disease. Long gone were the details of case law and logical arguments on which she had built her career. Now she was housebound and confused, unable to survive without round-the-clock care. He was a 45-year-old high school teacher and basketball coach in Menlo Park, Calif, who began to notice a loss of strength in his hands—some difficulty unscrewing jars or turning house keys. Then he watched in despair over the period of months as the muscles in his arms and neck grew flaccid and weak. The diagnosis: amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease, the paralytic syndrome that stole the strength and ultimately the life of the baseball great.

The alzheimer analogy is apt. Viewed under a microscope, nerve cells look a lot like trees and shrubs, with bifurcating roots and boughs sprouting from either end of a trunk or stem. As every gardener knows, fertilizer is the key to growth, and scientists have long assumed that the body makes its own neural nutrients—in large quantities, no doubt, during embryo development, but perhaps in smaller maintenance doses throughout life.

The challenge faced by neuroscientists pursuing nerve regeneration was to identify those naturally occurring products and mass manufacture them in the laboratory so they could be given as drugs. Their quest to discover such substances, researchers have gone to great and gory lengths.

Figuring the best place to look for a nerve-nurturing compound was around nerve cells themselves, one team grew in up 100 pig brains. They distilled from that mass less than a drop of a rare brain chemical called BDNF, which does indeed now show promise as a tool to protect nerves in patients with Lou Gehrig's disease.

Another team teased thousands of sciatic nerves from the legs of rats, then ground the natural raw material into something they call CNTF, which is also now in clinical trials in Lou Gehrig's patients.
Yet another group isolated a potent nerve growth factor from the juices of hundreds of mouse salivary glands. Saliva, it turns out, is rich in natural healing compounds—a fact that no one had previously considered worth looking into one’s wounds. The salivary substance, known as NGF, is now being tested in diabetic patients with peripheral neuropathy and in a handful of patients with Alzheimer’s disease.

Then there was the 63-year-old woman from Stockholm with Parkinson’s disease. For the past 18 years her condition had gradually worsened, despite treatment with the best available drugs, like L-dopa. At times now her entire body would suddenly freeze up, becoming so rigid she would crash to the floor. At other times her hands trembled so severely and her head shook so much that she felt as though the whole world were crumbling.

Three patients with three very different diseases. But all of them have one thing in common: They are among the first to enter a radical new field of medicine, in which doctors are using a novel class of drugs to regenerate dying nerve cells in the brain and spinal cord.

No one can say yet whether the treatments will work. Preliminary results from about 1,000 patients getting a handful of different compounds for various neuro-degenerative diseases indicate long-term disappointment. In some cases, patients’ symptoms subsided but were replaced by worrisome side effects.

But each of these diseases the prognosis is so poor that even a sliver of improvement—or a brief reprieve from the otherwise inevitable decline—would be welcome.

“We are using diseases that are uniformly fatal,” said Ted Munsat, a neurologist and professor of neurology at Tufts University in Boston, “so the hope and anticipation in the family is more than ever.”

It’s almost impossible to get all nerve cells to grow, or to get injured ones to sprout new ones. Unlike most peripheral neuropathies, the painful nerve irritation that afflicts many people with advanced diabetes and some patients getting cancer chemotherapy, Huntington’s disease (the dementia-inducing brain disease that strikes by surprise in the prime of life) or the paralysis and serious neurological diseases—Alzheimer’s and Parkinson’s—the neurons that are dying are deep within the brain, where no nerve growth factor can get on its own. So with the physiological potency of growth factors now well established, the challenge of making these compounds into useful drugs is actually more a problem of engineering and delivery than of medicine or biology.

In muscle and skin, where growth factors have gotten around this problem by injecting doses directly into the creatures’ brains. And though most neuroscientists have been reluctant to try this in people, a team of scientists in Sweden is doing so.

The first patient to get such a treatment was the 63-year-old woman with Parkinson’s disease. Lars Olson and his colleagues at the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm surgically implanted a pump the size of a hockey puck into the woman’s abdomen. They ran a thin plastic tube from the pump up through the hollowness of her torso and neck, all within her body, and underneath her scalp to the crown of her head, where a hole was made, through her skull and fed the hidden tube through the opening and into a space in her brain near the area that degenerates in Alzheimer’s disease. Fetal cells produce copious quantities of dopamine, the brain chemical lacking in Parkinson’s patients.

Such transplant do seem to hold some promise. More than 40 patients with Parkinson’s disease have been treated that way in the United States, and some patients are showing modest improvement. But 95 percent or more of the transplanted fetal cells generally die in the weeks or months after transplantation.

Olson and his colleagues in Sweden recently treated nerve growth factor to the precise part of the brain where it is needed, and so risks stimulating “innocent bystander” neurons better left alone.

“A good drug in the wrong place can give serious side effects,” said Fred Gage, a neuroscientist at the University of California–San Diego.

Gage and others suggest that the best way to give the brain a healthy dose of growth factors is to arrange for those factors to be made on-site, in the brain itself. “Instead of giving a drug,” Gage said, “you engineer some cells to make what’s needed.”

The idea of implanting robust, fetal-neurosecreting cells into the brain to nurse all nerve cells back to health has its roots in a older and more controversial strategy for Parkinson’s disease. In the original approach, scientists took brains of aborted fetuses and transplanted them into the brains of people with Parkinson’s disease. Fetal cells were copious quan-tities of dopamine, the brain chemical lacking in Parkinson’s patients.

hardy, laboratory-reared skin cells, instantly endowing those ordinary cells with the specialized ability to churn out the therapeutic factors. They have transplanted those newly endowed cells into the brains of rodents with a condition resembling Alzheimer’s disease, with the hope that these growth-factor mini-factories might revitalize failing nerve cells nearby.

Sure enough, the animals began to spout new and healthy neurons in the area around the transplanted cells, raising the possibility that the highly experimental, the approach is about to get its clinical debut. This month, Swiss researchers will insert CNTF genes into cells and implant the spliced-in genes into the spinal cords of patients with Lou Gehrig’s disease, marking the first human test of cells engineered to produce a nerve growth factor. They hope that these new-look neurons will help to turn around the walking motor neurons there more effectively than if the substance were injected into the skin.

Avenues of Hope

Even if researchers find a good way to administer nerve growth factors, there is no guarantee that patients will be able to tolerate the drugs. CNTF injections already have been used in preliminary experiments in Lou Gehrig’s patients, causing flu-like symptoms and weight loss serious enough to drive one company to go out of business. Another company is now trying smaller doses, and others are testing BDNF. Though side effects have been rare in these latter experiments, doctors have said that the more mellow regimens will be potent enough to stem the disease’s progress.

Similarly, some of the early tests of NGF injections into the brains of patients with Parkinson’s disease have been plagued by a serious side effect: A super-sensitivity to pain that makes normally innocuous stimuli unbearable, a lukewarm reception for people, can turn an excruciatingly painful experience in which drops of water feel like little burning arrows.

Ultimately, scientists said, a cocktail of different nerve growth factors—perhaps delivered by a variety of different routes—may work best of all. “We now have a number of molecules looking good,” said Ronald Lindsay, a neuroscientist at Regeneron, a biotech company in Tarrytown, N.Y., biotech company developing nerve growth factors. “It doesn’t make sense to bet on a single horse.”

Unfortunately, the race is still far from the home stretch, and that’s disappointing news for people already suffering from nervous system diseases. The lawyer with Alzheimer’s, for example, has continued down the path of senility since receiving her experimental nerve growth factor. And her counterpart with Parkinson’s is again subject to freez-ups and jitters.

On the other hand, the basketball coach with Lou Gehrig’s disease has improved substantially since getting treated with CNTF. “He has more neck strength and breathing strength,” said Benjamin Brooks, a professor of neuroscience and director of the University of Wisconsin’s ALS Clinical Research Center in Madison. “Now he’s back at work one hour a day, which is something he never would have expected with this disease.”

Brain and Nerve Diseases for Which Nerve Growth Factors May Help

Alzheimer’s Disease—4 million patients in the United States

Nerve growth factor (NGF) is being infused directly into the brains of a few patients in Sweden; potentially serious side effects have been reported, including extreme sensitivity to pain. NGF is also being given by injection under the skin in the United States as an experimental treatment for peripheral nerve injuries. The experience has raised the specter of tremors common among diabetics and patients getting cancer chemotherapy.

Parkinson’s Disease—1 million patients in the United States

One patient in Sweden has received brain infusions of NGF to enhance survival of healthy neurons that previously transplanted into his brain, with some possible benefits. A newly discovered nerve growth factor, called glial cell line-deleted neurotrophin (GDNF), looks promising in animal studies and may enter human trials in the next year or two.

Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (Lou Gehrig’s disease) 500 new cases a year in the United States

A nerve growth factor called ciliary neurotrophic factor (CNTF) is being injected into the skin absorbed by nerves. Doses have recently been lowered, however, because of side effects. Swiss researchers are about to transplant the first engineered cells into the spines of ALS patients. Another growth factor, brain-derived neurotrophic factor (BDNF), is also in clinical trials with apparently fewer side effects, though side effects have been rare in these latter studies, it has been plagued by a serious side effect: A normally innocuous stimuli unbearable. A lukewarm reception for people, can turn an excruciatingly painful experience in which drops of water feel like little burning arrows.

Scientists emphasized that the new factors are that protective, the new experiments provide persuasive evidence that the factor plays an important role in the life cycle of neurons, and that scientists may be able to exploit that role in their search for new medicines against degenerative nerve diseases.

GDNF “is by far the most powerful nerve growth factor we have tested yet,” said Ronald Lindsay, vice president for neuroscience research at Regeneron Pharmaceuticals Inc., Tarrytown, N.Y., produced troubling side effects when tested last year in ALS patients. Regeneron, Amgen and Genentech and several other biotech companies are researching other promising nerve-growth factors.

Even so, the new experiments, published today in the British journal Nature, provide several hints that in uncovering GDNF, scientists have found a new doorway to the treatment of nerve diseases that continue to strike one in 200,000 adults, causing flu-like symptoms and weight loss serious enough to drive one company to go out of business.

Regeneron, noting that “it provides strong competition for the [factors] we’ve been working with.”

In several experiments using GDNF developed by Dr. Collins, researchers used the substance to protect nerve cells from destruction caused by a toxic substance called MPTP. When given to mice, MPTP produces symptoms similar to the debilitating muscle tremors caused by Parkinson’s disease in humans.

In one surprising experiment by scientists at Karolinska Institute in Stockholm and at Synergen in Boulder, Colo., GDNF restored nerve activity to cells already damaged by the MPTP toxin.

GDNF was first isolated in 1990 by Frank Collins, a biologist working at Synergen. He identified it in glial cells, which provide nutrients to neurons. Dr. Collins didn’t publish the discovery until 1993, when Synergen received a patient. About the same time, Dr. Collins was hired by Amgen. In an interview, Dr. Collins said that acquiring the rights to GDNF was one of the reasons Amgen bought Synergen several months ago.

“I’ve been given the green light to go full steam ahead in developing GDNF for use against Parkinson’s disease,” says Collins, senior director of neuroscience research at Amgen. He said it may be possible to begin testing the substance in humans within a year or two.

Currently, the symptoms of Parkinson’s disease can be treated with several medicines, but their effectiveness wears off after time. More promising, GDNF can protect nerve cells being relentlessly killed by the disease, thereby prolonging the existing treatments’ usefulness. But GDNF will do nothing to stop the underlying cause of the illness, which is still unknown.

A significant hurdle facing GDNF is that cells under attack by Parkinson’s disease are located in the brain. Because GDNF is a large molecule that can’t get into the brain if ingested or injected into the bloodstream, it will have to be infused directly.

S. 685. A bill to provide for the conveyance of certain lighthouses located in the State of Maine; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

LIGHTHOUSE CONVEYANCE LEGISLATION

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would help to preserve historic lighthouses in the State of Maine and ensure that future generations will be able to appreciate these treasured landmarks.

The legislation, also known as the Maine Lights Program, authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to convey four lighthouses in Maine to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and (29) others to the Island Institute of Rockland, ME. Founded in 1983, the Island Institute is a nationally recognized non-profit organization dedicated to the preservation and protection of Maine’s coastal resources. This legislation was crafted in close coordination with the Island Institute, and it is an extraordinary opportunity to preserve the most obvious symbols of Maine’s living maritime heritage.

The Maine Lights Program is strongly supported by the U.S. Coast Guard. The Coast Guard currently owns each of these lighthouses, and it is a strong proponent of preserving their historic character. But the cost of maintaining these historic structures is becoming particularly difficult for the Coast Guard in these times of tight budgetary constraints. These lighthouses were built in an age when they had to be manned continuously. Today’s advanced technology makes it possible to build automated aids to navigation that do not require around-the-clock manning, and this technology has made these historic lighthouses expensive anachronisms for the Coast Guard. The Maine Lights Program would relieve the Coast Guard of the financial burden of maintaining these lighthouses.

The program also mandates continued Coast Guard maintenance of the active aids to navigation in these lighthouses—the lights and horns—and it ensures that each lighthouse will remain an effective marine navigational aid despite the conveyance. Maritime safety will not be sacrificed in the process. The Coast Guard will still be responsible for maintaining the aids to navigation themselves. Only the lighthouses and structures associated with them are impacted by this program.

By conveying these lighthouses to the Island Institute, the program ensures that the lighthouses will be preserved as an important part of our coastal maritime heritage. The Island Institute will never be allowed to sell these properties. The Institute would be required to transfer the lighthouses to third parties without any compensation to itself within a 3-year period beginning on the date of the conveyance of the lighthouse to the Institute by the Coast Guard.

The Island Institute would be required to identify appropriate nonprofit corporations, educational agencies, community development organizations, and any Federal, State, or local government or other eligible entity that would assume responsibility for the lighthouse.

This legislation sets specific eligibility requirements for organizations and entities that wish to take the responsibility of a lighthouse. They must be financially able to maintain the lighthouse, and they must agree to regular inspections by the State historic preservation officer of the State of Maine in order to ensure that the lighthouses are being properly maintained in a manner that preserves their historic character.

Those receiving a lighthouse must also assure continued public access to the lighthouse.

This legislation also provides that if the Secretary of Transportation determined at any time that a lighthouse is not being used or maintained as required by the law, that the lighthouse would revert to the United States and then be transferred to other institutions or entities according to existing law.

Finally, the legislation requires the Secretary to report to Congress after 5 years about the effectiveness of the program in maintaining, preserving, and repairing historic lighthouse properties, maintaining public access, and finding and transferring lighthouse property to appropriate third parties.

The Island Institute has already identified suitable candidates for receiving many of these lighthouses. For example, the town of Camden will receive the Curtis Island Light, which is located in Camden Harbor. The town already owns Curtis Island and all of the buildings on it except for the light tower itself, and this program will appropriately convey the light tower to the town of Camden.

The Maine Lights Program is an innovative approach to historic maritime preservation. It will become a model for the conveyance of other lighthouses for historic preservation all across the country. At the same time it will save the Coast Guard hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars a year in maintenance costs. I urge all of my colleagues to support this legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. KYL (for himself and Mr. McCAIN):

S. 868. A bill to establish a Commission to examine the costs and benefits of the impact on voter turnout, of changing the deadline for filing Federal income tax returns to the date on which Federal elections are held; to the Committee on Finance.

THE VOTER TURNOUT ENHANCEMENT STUDY COMMISSION ACT

Mr. KYL, Mr. President, I introduce the Voter Turnout Enhancement Study Commission Act, a bill to establish a temporary Commission to consider whether the deadline for filing Federal income tax returns should be changed to the date on which Federal elections are held.

Our constituents demonstrated last fall that they want real change. I can't think of anything that would change the Congress more than to move tax day to election day so the American people could vote as they pay. It would not only enhance voter turnout rates, but also give the American people an opportunity to vote at the same time they pay their taxes, thus holding politicians accountable to the people on the day they are most focused on the cost of their Government.

While just about every day of the year is celebrated by special interest groups around the country for the Government largesse they receive, the taxpayers—the silent majority—have only one day of the year to focus on what that largesse means to them—how much it costs them—and that is tax day.

The Voter Turnout Enhancement Study Commission Act would provide for a thoughtful and thorough analysis of the date change, its potential impact on voter turnout, as well as any economic impact it might have. The bill explicitly requires that an independent Commission conduct a cost-benefit analysis—a requirement that Congress would be wise to impose routinely on legislative initiatives to sort out good ideas from the bad, and save taxpayers a lot of money in the process. A number of other cost-limiting provisions have been included to protect taxpayers' interests.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 868

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Voter Turnout Enhancement Study Commission Act".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the right of citizens of the United States to vote is a fundamental right;

(2) Federal, State, and local governments have a duty to promote the exercise of the right to vote to the greatest extent possible;

(3) the power to tax is only guardedly consonant with the duty to protect the electoral process and scrutinize the costs and benefits of government policies.

The Committee shall conduct a comprehensive study of all matters relating to the possibility of changing the filing date for Federal income tax returns to the 1st Tuesday after the 1st Monday in November. The study shall include an analysis of—

(a) the costs and benefits of the change in filing date; and

(b) the likelihood that establishment of a single date on which individuals can fulfill obligations of citizenship as both electors and taxpayers will increase participation in Federal, State, and local elections.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT.

There is established a commission to be known as the Voter Turnout Enhancement Study Commission (in this Act referred to as the "Commission").

SEC. 4. MEMBERSHIP.

(a) NUMBER AND APPOINTMENT.—The Commission shall be composed of 9 members appointed as follows:

(1) 3 members appointed by the President.

(2) 3 members appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the joint recommendation of the majority leader and the minority leader of the Senate.

(3) 3 members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, upon the joint recommendation of the Speaker and the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(f) COMPENSATION.—(1) RATE OF PAY.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), members of the Commission shall serve without pay.

(2) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—Each member of the Commission shall be entitled to receive travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(g) QUORUM.—A majority of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number of members may hold a hearing.

(h) CHAIRPERSON AND VICE CHAIRPERSON.—The Commission shall select a Chairperson and Vice Chairperson from among its members.

(i) MEETINGS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairperson or a majority of its members.

(2) INITIAL MEETING.—The Commission shall hold its initial meeting not later than 30 days after the date on which all members of the Commission have been appointed.

SEC. 5. DUTIES.

(a) STUDY.—The Commission shall conduct a study of all matters relating to the possibility of changing the filing date for Federal income tax returns to the 1st Tuesday after the 1st Monday in November. The study shall include an analysis of—

(1) the costs and benefits of the change in filing date; and

(2) the likelihood that establishment of a single date on which individuals can fulfill obligations of citizenship as both electors and taxpayers will increase participation in Federal, State, and local elections.

(b) CONSULTATION.—The Commission shall consult with Governors, Federal and State election officials, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and to the person, agency, or entity that the Commission determines to be appropriate.
Mr. President, I held a hearing on child support enforcement last July to try to better understand why this money is not being collected. This hearing lead me to conclude that until we improve the way the system works at the local, State, and Federal levels we will not ensure that children receive the financial support from their respective families to which they are entitled.

There were many issues raised in the hearing that are worthy of attention, but one I wish to especially highlight is the caseload of most of the State workers who are trying to help custodial parents collect their payments.

One witness, a caseworker from Virginia, testified that she could only spend about 12 minutes a month with any one client. Mr. President, 12 minutes a month is simply not enough time to effectively deal with all of the complex issues involved in these cases.

Another witness was Ms. Judy Jones Jordan, the administrator of the Child Support Enforcement Program in Arkansas. My State is indeed fortunate to have an outstanding administrator of such a critical program. She testified that the system had bogged down. Rather than have a clear mission, the State programs are subject to so much Federal oversight that getting the job done has become almost impossible. She said:

The program has changed from one designed to reduce the cost of public assistance programs to one focused on passing audits and avoiding Federal penalties.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today is an attempt to address the problem identified by Ms. Jordan. In a country where the default rate on used car loans is 3 percent and the default rate on child support orders is nearly 50 percent, we need to greatly improve the way that the partnership between the Federal Government and the States works.

This legislation that I am introducing addresses the key issues that I think will make a significant difference in the operation of the child support system. First, the Federal audit requirements will be revised so that they become a far less onerous burden on the States. In fact, I believe the new procedures will transform this process into a helpful and necessary evaluation tool that the States will find useful information on the effectiveness of their program while ensuring accountability of Federal dollars.

The second thing that my legislation would do, is the funding system will be modified to address the GAO’s finding that the present system does not provide incentives to States for improving the performance of the program.

Third, the legislation will require States to suspend drivers licenses and other licenses, both professional and recreational, of parents who are delinquent in their child support payments.

My State of Arkansas has found that this program is very effective in encouraging noncustodial parents to promptly pay their child support obligations.

Finally, the legislation attempts to address the difficult issue of the overburdened case workers in the State child support offices. The Department of Health and Human Services and the States will sit down and determine the level of staffing necessary for each State to effectively carry out its child support program. It is my hope that with the benefit of this joint effort, the State programs will then be able to at least partially address this critical area.

Mr. President, while personal responsibility is the key to taking care of children, it is my belief the Government has a limited but important role to ensure that it is easy for noncustodial parents to fulfill their duties, and difficult for them to avoid it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that additional material be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Title 1—Eligibility and Other Matters Concerning Child Support Enforcement Program Clients

Sec. 101. Cooperation requirement and good cause exception

Section 101 amends the CSE, AFDC, and Medicaid statutes to require that, effective 10 months after enactment (or earlier, at State option), the State CSE agency (rather than the AFDC and Medicaid agencies, as under current law) will make determinations of whether applicants for AFDC and Medicaid are cooperating with efforts to establish paternity and obtain child support, or have good cause not to cooperate.

The AFDC and Medicaid agencies must immediately refer applicants needing paternity establishment services to the CSE agency, and the CSE agency must make an initial cooperation or good cause determination within 10 days of such referral.

The mother or other custodial relative of a child born 10 months or more after enactment of these amendments will not be found to cooperate with efforts to establish paternity unless that individual names the putative father and supplies information that could assist the IV-D agency to identify him; and cooperation with initial efforts to establish paternity (except where good cause is shown) is a precondition to eligibility for program benefits, except where the applicant is eligible for emergency assistance under title IV-A or is a pregnant woman presumptively eligible for Medicaid, where an appeal of a finding of lack of good cause is pending, or where the CSE agency has not made a timely determination.

Sec. 102. State obligation to provide paternity establishment and child support enforcement services

Section 102 requires State laws to require that—

Every child support order established or modified in the State on or after October 1, 1995, must be entered in a central case registry to be operated by the IV-D agency (see section 301 of the bill);
Child support be collected (except where parents agree to opt out under limited circumstances) through a centralized collections unit to be operated by the IV-D agency or its contractor (see section 302 of the bill).

On and after October 1, 1998, in all cases being enforced under the State plan; and

On and after October 1, 1999, in all cases entered in the central case registry.

Section 102 amends the IV-D State plan requirements to eliminate distinctions between support recipients and other applicants for IV-D services with respect to services available and fees for such services. Under current law, no fees may be imposed on any custodial or noncustodial parent.

After September 30, 1998, for application for IV-D services.

At any time, for inclusion in the central state registry.

No other fees (other than those specified in current law for genetic testing and tax refund offset) may be imposed on the custodial parent; and

Any other costs of fees may be imposed on the noncustodial parent (but any fees for support collections through the centralized collections unit must be added to and not deleted from the support award).

Sec. 102. Distribution of payments

Section 103 amends the provisions of title IV-D concerning the order of priority for distribution of child support collections, to provide that:

A family not receiving AFDC shall be paid the full amount of current support, plus arrearages for any period after the family ceased to receive AFDC, before any amount is retained by the State to reimburse AFDC;

The State would have the option, in the case of a family receiving AFDC, to make distribution as under current law or to pay to the family the amount of current support due before retaining any amount to reimburse the AFDC agency;

Where the parent owing support marries (or remarries) a custodial parent, and the parents' combined income is less than twice the Federal poverty line, the State must, upon application by the parents, suspend or cancel the obligation of the State on account of AFDC paid to the family.

This section also requires the Secretary to promulgate regulations—

Under title IV-D, establishing a uniform national standard for distribution where a parent owes support to more than one family;

Under title IV-A, establishing standards for States choosing the alternative distribution formula, to minimize irregular monthly payments to AFDC families.

Finally, this section, together with the corresponding amendment to title IV-A in title VII of this bill, increases the amount of monthly support to be paid to the family by the CSE agency and disregarded for purposes of AFDC eligibility and benefits. The new “passthrough and disregard” amount would be the lesser of $50 increased by the CPI, or such greater amount as the State may choose.

Sec. 104. Due process rights

Section 104 requires State IV-D plans, effective October 1, 1996, to provide for procedures to ensure that:

Parties to cases in which IV-D services are provided receive notice of all proceedings in which support obligations might be established or modified, and of any order establishing or modifying a support obligation within 10 days of issuance; and Individually, IV-D services have available to them fair hearing or other formal complaint procedure.

Sec. 105. Privacy safeguards

Section 105 requires State IV-D plans, effective October 1, 1996, to provide for safeguards to protect privacy rights with respect to sensitive and confidential information, including safeguards against unauthorized use or disclosure of information relating to paternity and support proceedings, and prohibitions on disclosing the whereabouts of persons who individual to whom such information is retained by the State is subject to a protective order, or convicted of criminal assault or abuse against such individual, or against whom a proceeding is pending seeking such a protective order or conviction.

Sec. 106. Requirement to facilitate access to services

Section 106 requires State IV-D plans, effective October 1, 1996, to include outreach plans to increase parents’ access to CSE services, including plans responding to the needs of working parents and parents with limited proficiency in English.

Title II—Program Administration and Funding

Sec. 201. Federal matching payments

Section 201 increases the basic eral matching rate on State programs (currently 66 percent) to 69 percent for FY 1997, 72 percent for FY 1998, and 75 percent for FY 1999 and thereafter.

Section 201 also adds a maintenance of effort requirement that—

Total State expenditures (other than for automated data processing systems development) under deducting Federal matching payments (but not incentive payments) not be less than such expenditures for FY 1996, and

Total State expenditures for FY 1997 and 1998, after deducting Federal matching payments and incentive payments, not be less than such expenditures for FY 1996.

Sec. 202. Performance-based incentives and penalties

Section 202 replaces the system of incentive payments to States under section 458 of the Act with a new program of incentive adjustments to the Federal matching rate. Under this program, States could receive increases of up to 5 percentage points based on Statewide paternity establishment, and increases of up to 3 percentage points based on overall CSE performance.

Section 202 also makes amendments (effective with respect to quarters beginning on and after the date of enactment) for a penalty reduction of AFDC matching payments where a State’s CSE program does not meet specified performance standards: Section 452(g) is amended to make minor and technical amendments to the formula for determining the paternity establishment percentage under the IV-D program (the amendments correct errors introduced by OBRA 1993).

Section 403(h) is amended (effective with respect to cases beginning one year or more after enactment) to simplify the penalty reduction procedure. The penalty is to be deferred for one year pending State corrective action, and to be canceled if all deficiencies are eliminated by the end of that year.

The Secretary would specify in regulations the levels of accomplishment (or improvement) needed to qualify for each incentive adjustment rate. States would report performance data after the end of FY 1998 and every year or more after enactment, and the Secretary would determine the amount (if any) of adjustment due each State, based on State data determined by the Secretary to be reliable, and would distribute the adjustment to matching payments for the succeeding fiscal year (beginning with FY 1997).

Sec. 203. Federal and State reviews and audits

Section 203 makes amendments, effective beginning one year after enactment, shifting the focus of title IV-D audits from the manner in which activities are conducted to performance outcomes; and

A new State plan element requires the States annually—

To certify, and report to the Secretary concerning, conformity with State plan requirements; and

To extract from their ADP systems, and transmit to the Secretary, data and calculations concerning their compliance with Federal performance requirements.

The Secretary’s responsibilities are revised to require—

Annual review of the State reports on plan conformity; determinations of amounts of penalty adjustments to States; and provisions of comments, recommendations, and technical assistance to the States; Evaluation of elements of State programs in which significant deficiencies are indicated by the State reports; and Triennial audits of State reporting systems and financial management, and for other purposes the Secretary finds necessary.

Sec. 204. Automated data processing

Section 204 recognizes and clarifies title IV-D, establishing standards for automated data processing, and also requires States to maintain the State agency ADP system procedures to—Meet all Federal performance requirements.

To extract from their ADP systems, and transmit to the Secretary, data and calculations concerning their conformity with Federal performance requirements.

Congressional Record — Senate April 6, 1995 S5415

The Secretary would study and report to Congress on the staffing of each State’s CSE program.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

S5416

CSE program (including a review of needs created by requirements for ADP systems, central case registries, and centralized support collections).

Sec. 206. Nesting or secretarial assistance to State programs

Section 206 makes available to the Secretary, from annual appropriations for payments for State programs under title IV-D for FY 1995 and succeeding fiscal years, to use for assistance to State IV-D agencies through technical assistance, training, and related activities; projects of regional or national significance.

An amount equal to 1 percent of the Federal share of child support collections on behalf of FY 1996 and succeeding fiscal years, to be used for assistance to State IV-D agencies through technical assistance, training, and related activities; projects of regional or national significance.

An amount equal to 2 percent of the Federal share of such collections, for operation of the FPLS and the National Welfare Reform Information Clearinghouse established by section 305 (to the extent such costs are not recovered in user fees).

Sec. 207. Data collection and reports by the Secretary

Section 207 amends data collection and reporting requirements, effective with respect to FY 1994 and succeeding fiscal years, to conform to arrangements to the copies made by the bill, and to eliminate require-ments for unnecessary or duplicative information.

Sec. 208. Coordination with income eligibility verification system

Section 208 amends the authority for the Income Eligibility Verification System (IEVS) to permit IEVS information furnished to state CSE programs to be used to assist in carrying out any title IV-D program purpose (rather than only for income eligibility verification); and

To require the state CSE agency to make information in the central State case registry available to State agencies administering the AFDC, Medicaid, Food Stamp, and unemployment compensation programs.

TITLE III—LOCATE AND CASE TRACKING

Sec. 301. Central State case registry

Section 301 requires the State IV-D agency’s ADP system—

To perform the functions of a single central registry containing records with respect to each case of support services is being provided to the State agency (including each case in which an order has been entered or modified on or after October 1, 1995);

For each case, to maintain and regularly update a complete payment record of all amounts collected and distributed; and

To permit access to that record for the purpose of monitoring and enforcement requirements.

Sec. 302. Centralized collection and disbursement of support payments

Section 302 requires State IV-D agencies, on and after October 1, 1996—

To establish a centralized, automated unit for collection and disbursement of child support payments;

Which is operated directly by the State IV-D agency or by a contractor responsible directly to the State agency;

Collects and disburses support in all cases being enforced by the State agency (including all cases under orders entered on or after October 1, 1996);

Uses automated procedures, electronic processes, and computer-driven technology to the maximum extent feasible, efficient, and economical; and

Is coordinated with the State agency’s ADP system;

To use the State agency ADP system to assist and facilitate the operations of the centralized collections unit, through functions including—

Generation of wage withholding notices and orders to employers;

Ongoing monitoring to promptly identify nonpayment; and

Automatic use of administrative enforce-ment mechanisms; and

To have sufficient State staff (including State employees and contractors) to carry out these monitoring and enforcement re sponsibilities.

Sec. 303. Amendments concerning income withholding

Section 303 requires State laws concerning income withholding to provide—

That all child support orders issued on or after October 1, 1995, which are not otherwise subject to income withholding, will become subject to income withholding immediately if arrearages occur, without need for a judicial or administrative hearing;

That employers withholding wages must forward payments to the State centralized collections unit within 5 working days after the amount withheld would otherwise have been paid to the employee;

That the notice from the State to employers directing wage withholding must be in a standard format prescribed by the Secretary;

For the imposition of fines against employers who fail to withhold support from wages, or to make appropriate and timely payment to the State centralized collections unit.

This section also makes amendments—

Conforming the income withholding re quirements of the requirement for a centralized collections unit; and Requiring the Secretary to promulgate regulations defining income and other terms for purposes of the requirement.

Sec. 304. Locator information from interstate networks and labor unions

Section 304 adds a requirement for State laws providing—

That the State will neither finance nor use any automatic locator system network for purposes relating to (i) motor vehicles or (ii) law enforcement unless all Federal and State IV-D agencies (including the FPLS and the new Federal data matching services) have access on the same basis as any other user of the system or network (but only, in the case of law enforcement services, where such access is otherwise allowed by State and Federal law); and Requiring labor unions and their hiring halls to furnish to the IV-D agency, upon request, locator information (relating to resi dence and employment) on any union mem ber against whom a paternity or support ob liation is sought to be established or enforced.

Sec. 305. National Child Support Information Clearinghouse

Section 305 amends title IV-D to require the Secretary to establish and operate a National Child Support Information Clearinghouse (NCSIC).

The NCSIC would include Federal Parent Locator Service under section 435 of the Act, the clearinghouse data on arrearages to establish within the NCSIC, by October 1, 1998, two new automated data matching services de signed to locate individuals (and their assets) for CSE purposes.

The National Child Support Registry would contain minimal information (including social security numbers, other uniform identification numbers, and State case identification numbers) on each case in a State central case registry, based on information furnished and regularly updated by State IV-D agencies.

The National Directory of New Hires would contain identifying information—

Supplied by employers, within 10 business days of hiring (or, if the employer makes automated reports, 10 business days after the close of the corresponding payroll period), on each individual hired on or after October 1, 1996, and

Consisting of extracts from reports to the Secretary of Labor under the Federal Unem ployment Tax Act, supplied by States either quarterly or on such more frequent basis as such reports are supplied to the Secretary of Labor, in such format and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

An employer failing to make a timely report concerning an employee would be subject to a civil money penalty of the lesser of $500 or 1 percent of the wages paid to the employee.

The Secretary is required to disclose or match data in the Clearinghouse as follows: Data are to be shared with the Social Security Administration for the purpose of verifying the accuracy of identifying information reported.

The New Hire Directory and Child Support Registry are to be matched every 2 working days, and resulting information is to be reported to State CSE and AFDC agencies, to the extent found effective.

Data in Clearinghouse registries are to be disclosed through the IEVS system to the AFDC, Medicaid, unemployment compensation, food stamp, and territorial cash assistance programs, for income eligibility verification and any other purpose permitted under section 1157 of the Act.

Data in Clearinghouse registries are to be disclosed to the Social Security Administration for use in determining the accuracy of supplemental security income payments under title XVI and in connection with benefits under title II of the Act.

Data in the New Hire Directory are to be disclosed—

To the Secretary of the Treasury, for administration of the earned income tax credit program and for verification of claims concerning employment on tax returns; and

To State agencies administering unemployment compensation and workers compen sation programs, to assist determinations on the allowability of claims.

The Secretary may disclose Clearinghouse data, without personal identifiers, for re search serving the purposes of specified pro grams under title IV of the Act.

This section provides for reimbursement by the Secretary to SSA and to State em ployment security agencies (to the extent they were reimbursed) for their costs of carrying out this section; and for reimbursement to the Secretary by State and Federal agencies receiving information from the Clearinghouse. This section also in clude provisions designed to safeguard in for mation in the Clearinghouse from inappro priate disclosure or use.

Section makes related amendments to the Federal Unemployment Tax Act and title III of the Social Security Act, requiring SSEs to furnish wage and unemployment compensation information to the Directory of New Hires.

Section 306. Expanded locate authority

Section 306 makes various amendments to remove and otherwise increase the effectiveness of electronic data matches for CSE purposes. The FPLS authority is amended to:

- Broaden the purpose of the FPLS to include locating information on wages and other employment benefits, and on other assets (or debts), for purposes of establishing or enforcing the amount of support obligations;
- To require the FPLS to obtain information from consumer reporting agencies; and
- To authorize the Secretary to provide reasonable record disposition requirements to other Federal agencies, State agencies, and consumer reporting agencies for the costs of providing information to the FPLS.

This section also makes complementary amendments to other laws, as follows:

Section 608 of the Fair Credit Reporting Act is amended to make available to the FPLS all information on individuals in the files of consumer reporting agencies (rather than only locate information, as under current law).

Section 6103(1) and (6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (providing for IRS and Social Security Administration disclosures of tax and Social Security information to Federal, State, and local CSE agencies) are amended

- To eliminate the restriction that IRS may disclose return information only if the information is not reasonably available from any other source; and
- To permit disclosures by the Social Security Administration to OCSE.

Section 307 requires the Secretary—

- To study, report, and make recommendations to the Congress concerning issues involved in (1) making FPLS information available to noncustodial parents, and (2) operating electronic data exchanges between the FPLS and major consumer credit reporting business.

To fund State demonstrations testing automated data exchanges with other State data bases, the Secretary shall make funds available to the Secretary for technical assistance to States under the provision added by section 616 of the bill.

Section 308. Use of Social Security numbers

Section 308 requires State laws requiring the recording of social security numbers of the parties on marriage licenses and divorce decrees, and of parents on birth records and child support and paternity orders.

This section also makes an amendment to title II of the Act, to clarify that social security numbers of parents must be recorded on child support establishing and enforcement records, but that this requirement authorizes release of social security numbers only for purposes related to child support enforcement.

Title IV—Streamlining and Uniformity of the Jurisdictional Networks

Section 401. Adoption of uniform State laws

Section 401 requires States, by January 1, 1996, to adopt in its entirety the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, with the following modifications and additions:

- The State law is to apply in any case (1) involving an order established or modified in one State and for which a subsequent modification is ordered in the other State, in which interstate activity is required to enforce an order;
- The State law shall provide that a tribunal in the jurisdiction over a child who is a resident of the State has jurisdiction over both parents;
- The State law shall provide that the State may modify an order issued in another State if (1) all parties do not reside in the issuing State, and either reside in or are subject to the jurisdiction of the State furnishing the order; and (2) if any other State is exercising jurisdiction which it would otherwise lose because the parties are no longer present in that State.
- The State law shall authorize release of Social Security numbers of parents to the child support enforcement agency of that or any other State, information on employment, compensation, and benefits of any employee or contractor of such entity.
- Section 401 provides for expedited appeal to the Supreme Court of any district court ruling on the constitutionality of the above provision concerning long-arm jurisdiction based on the child support obligation.

This section also makes conforming amendments to authorities requiring States to provide full faith and credit to other States' child support orders.

Section 402. State laws providing expedited proceedings

Section 402 requires State laws to provide the Secretary with IV-D agency the authority (and recognizes) to:

- Establish or modify a support obligation where appropriate preconditions are met;
- To enter a default order—establishing a support obligation where a putative father refuses to submit to genetic testing; and
- To establish or modify a support obligation, where an obligor or obligee fails to respond to notice to appear;
- To subpoena financial or other information needed to establish, modify, or enforce an order, and to sanction failure to respond to a subpoena;
- To obtain access (including automated access, if available), subject to appropriate safeguards, to:
  - Records of other State and local government agencies, including records on vital statistics; tax and revenue; real and personal property; occupational and professional licenses; records of corporations and other business entities; employment security; public assistance; motor vehicles; and corrections;
  - Customer records of public utilities and cable television companies; and
  - Information held by financial institutions on individuals who owe or are owed support (or against or with respect to whom a support obligation is sought);
- To order wage or other income withholding;
- To direct that the payee under an order be paid in the State agency to the appropriate government entity;
- For the purpose of securing overdue support—
  - To intercept and seize any payment to the obligor or through a State or local government agency;
- To attach and seize assets of the obligor held by financial institutions;
- To attach retirement funds (where permitted by the Secretary);
- To impose liens and, in appropriate cases, to force sale of property and distribution of proceeds; and
- To increase monthly support payments to include amounts for arrearages.

Section 402 also requires State laws to provide for the following substantive and procedural rules and authority, applicable to all proceedings to establish paternity or to establish, modify, or enforce support orders:

- Procedures permitting presumptions of notice in child support cases, under which parties to a paternity or child support proceeding must file with the tribunal, and update, information on location and identity, which may be relied on in any subsequent proceeding, the effectiveness of administrative data matches between the same parties for purposes of providing notice and service of process (if due diligence has otherwise been exercised in attempting to locate such party);

Procedures ensuring Statewide jurisdiction in child support cases, under which the IV-D agency and tribunals hearing child support and paternity cases have Statewide jurisdiction; their orders have Statewide effect; and (where orders in such cases are issued by local jurisdictions) a case may be transferred within the State without loss of jurisdiction.

This section would bar the Secretary from granting State exemptions from State law requirements under section 466 of the Act concerning procedures for paternity establishment; modification of orders; recording of orders in the central State case registry; recording of social security numbers; interstate enforcement; or expedited administrative procedures.

Finally, this section requires the IV-D agency's ADP system to be used, to the maximum extent feasible, to implement the above expedited administrative procedures.

Title V—Paternity Establishment

Section 501. State laws concerning paternity establishment

Section 501 amends the provisions concerning State laws on paternity establishment to require such laws—

- To permit the initiation of proceedings to establish paternity before the birth of the child concerned;
- To provide authority to order genetic testing upon request of a party when such request is supported by a sworn statement establishing a reasonable possibility of parentage;
- To require the IV-D agency, when it orders genetic testing, to pay the costs (subject to State option to recompense the putative father if paternity is established), and to obtain additional testing (upon advance payment) where test result results;
- To require the State to admit to evidence results of any genetic test that is of a type generally acknowledged by accreditation bodies designated by the Secretary as an established standard of paternity, and performed by a laboratory approved by such an accreditation body;
To make cooperation by hospitals and other health care facilities in voluntary paternity acknowledgment procedures a condition of Medicaid participation; to require that a State that treats a voluntary acknowledgment as a rebuttable presumption to provide that the presumption become effective more than one year (unless rebutted or invalidated); to provide that parties to a paternity proceeding are not entitled to jury trial; to require issuance of an order for temporary support, upon motion of a party, pending an administrative or judicial determination of parentage, where paternity is indicated by paternity testing or other clear and convincing evidence; to provide that bills for pregnancy, childbirth, genetic testing, and child support arrearages, where the father cooperates or acknowledges paternity, will be discharge promptly; to grant discretion to the tribunal establishing paternity and support to waive rights to modify an order made to the State (but not to the mother) for costs relating to pregnancy, childbirth, genetic testing, and child support arrearages, where the father cooperates or acknowledges paternity; to ensure that putative fathers have a reasonable opportunity to initiate paternity actions; and to require that all Federal matching funds be available without foundation testimony.

Section 502 authorizes the Secretary to establish national guidelines for a voluntary program for the establishment and modification of child support orders. States are required to establish procedures to ensure that child support orders are modified promptly, to require that Federal matching funds be available for the purpose of modifying child support orders, and to make Federal child support arrearages available only for minor or disabled children who are still owed current support and Federal income tax refunds, as follows:

- The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to provide that child support arrearages (whether owed to the family or to the State) against income tax refunds would take priority over debts owed Federal agencies (other than debts owed to the Department of Education for student loans).
- The Secretary is authorized to collect support from employers of taxpayers (whether owed to the family or to the State) against income tax refunds.

This section also amends 10 U.S.C. to require employers of Federal employees who are taxpayers to make higher tax refunds available to parents of disabled children who are still owed current support, to permit higher fees to be charged for the offset service, and to provide for the collection of child support arrearages from Federal employees who are taxpayers.

Section 703 amends the provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (now the Secretary of Health and Human Services, HHS) to bar imposition by IRS of additional fees for adjustment to the amount of arrears previously certified with respect to the same obligor.

To eliminate disparate treatment of families not receiving public assistance, by requiring uniform procedures to provide for collection of child support arrearages against Federal income tax refunds, as follows:

- The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to provide that child support arrearages (whether owed to the family or to the State) against income tax refunds would take priority over debts owed Federal agencies (other than debts owed to the Department of Education for student loans).
- Make the offset available only for minor or disabled children who are still owed current support.

Set a higher threshold amount of arrears before tax offset is available; and

- Permit higher fees to be charged for the offset service.

Section 704, Authority to collect support from employment-related payments by the United States, amends the provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (now the Secretary of Health and Human Services, HHS) to bar imposition by IRS of additional fees for adjustment to the amount of arrears previously certified with respect to the same obligor.

Section 704 authorizes the Secretary to collect support from employment-related payments by the United States, and to set a higher threshold amount of arrears before tax offset is available; and to permit higher fees to be charged for the offset service.

Section 705 amends the title IV-D requirements for State laws concerning child support awards.

Sec. 504. Incentives to parents to establish paternity

Section 504 authorizes the Secretary to approve IV-D State plan amendments providing for incentive payments to families to encourage paternity establishment. State payments for this purpose would be matched as ordinary IV-D expenditures.

This section also amends 10 U.S.C. to require employers of Federal employees who are taxpayers to make higher tax refunds available to parents of disabled children who are still owed current support, to permit higher fees to be charged for the offset service, and to provide for the collection of child support arrearages from Federal employees who are taxpayers.

Sec. 601. National Commission on Child Support Guidelines

Section 601 authorizes the Secretary to establish a National Commission on Child Support Guidelines to consider the advisability of a national child support guideline (or parameters for State guidelines) and, if appropriate, to develop a proposed guideline for congressional consideration. The Commission is to consider matters including the adequacy of State guidelines; the definition of income and circumstances under which income should be imputed; tax treatment of support; cases in which the family has obligations to more than one family; treatment of expenses for child care, health care, and special needs; the appropriate duration of support, and issuance of custody.

The Commission would have 2 members appointed by the Chairman and 1 by the Ranking Minority Member of the Senate Finance Committee; 2 appointed by the Chairman and 1 by the Ranking Minority Member of the House Ways and Means Committee; and 6 appointed by the Secretary. Members would be appointed by March 1, 1996, and would make a final report to the President and the Congress within 2 years after appointment.

Appropriations are authorized of $1 million for each of FYs 1996 and 1997, to remain available until expended.

Sec. 602. State laws concerning modification of child support orders

Section 602 requires States, effective October 1, 2000, to have in effect laws concerning modification of child support order under which—

- The IV-D agency modifies all support orders (including judicial orders) included in the central case registry in accordance with State guidelines on award amounts.
- All orders in the central case registry are revised and adjusted at least every 36 months unless adjustment is necessary in the child’s best interests, or unless both parents decline modification in writing.

Support orders must be reviewed upon the request of either parent whenever either parent’s income has changed by more than 20 percent, or other substantial changes in circumstances have occurred, since the order was established or most recently reviewed.

This section also amends current due process provisions to eliminate specific Federal timetables and to require instead application of State due process procedures. The Secretary is authorized to certify child support agencies.

Sec. 603. Study on use of tax return information for modification of child support orders

Section 603 requires the Secretaries of HHS and Treasury to conduct a study to determine how tax return information might be used to facilitate the process of modifying child support awards.

Sec. 604. Cost-of-living adjustment of child support awards

This section directs the States to include in their State plan procedures to ensure that child support awards are adjusted an annual basis in line with the Consumer Price Index.

Title VII—Enforcement of Support Orders

Sec. 701. Revolving loan fund for program improvements to increase collections

This section authorizes appropriation of a total of $100 million ($10 million each for FYs 1999 and 2000, and $20 million each for FYs 2001 through 2004) to establish and title IV-D a revolving fund for loans by the Secretary to States for short-term projects making operational improvements in State and local IV-D programs with the potential for achieving substantial increases in child support collections.

Loans from the fund could not exceed 50 percent of the State or $1 million per project (or $5 million for a single Statewide project in a large State); loan durations could not exceed 3 years. Loans would be repaid through offsets against the increase in State incentive payments, plus additional offsets against State IV-D payments as necessary to ensure full repayment in 3 years. Loan funds received by a State could be used by the State as the non-Federal share of expenditures under the State IV-D program.

Sec. 702. Federal income tax refund offset

This section makes amendments, effective January 1, 1997, relating to the authority to offset child support orders against Federal income tax refunds, as follows:

- The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to provide that offsets of child support arrearages (whether owed to the family or to the State) against income tax refunds would take priority over debts owed Federal agencies (other than debts owed to the Department of Education for student loans).

Title IV-D is amended—

- To eliminate disparate treatment of families not receiving public assistance, by requiring uniform procedures to provide for collection of child support arrearages against Federal income tax refunds, as follows:

- The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to provide that offsets of child support arrearages (whether owed to the family or to the State) against income tax refunds would take priority over debts owed Federal agencies (other than debts owed to the Department of Education for student loans).

Set a higher threshold amount of arrears before tax offset is available; and

- Permit higher fees to be charged for the offset service.

Sec. 703. Internal Revenue Service collection of arrearages

This section amends the provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which provides for collection of child support arrearages against Federal income tax refunds, as follows:

- The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to provide that offsets of child support arrearages against Federal income tax refunds would take priority over debts owed Federal agencies (other than debts owed to the Department of Education for student loans).

Set a higher threshold amount of arrears before tax offset is available; and

- Permit higher fees to be charged for the offset service.
respect to child support arrears to require that States have and use procedures to place liens on titled motor vehicles owned by individuals owing child support arrears equal to two months of support. Such liens would take precedence over all other encumbrances on a vehicle title, other than a purchase money security interest, and could be used to form liens on the vehicle.

Sec. 706. Voiding of fraudulent transfers

Section 706 requires States to have in effect the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act of 1981, the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act of 1984 as State law providing for voiding of transfers of income or property made to avoid payment of child support.

Sec. 707. State law authorizing suspension of licenses

Section 707 requires enactment of laws giving the State authority to withhold, suspend, or restrict use of driver’s licenses, professional and occupational licenses, and recreational licenses of individuals owing overdue child support or failing to respond to subpoenas or warrants relating to paternity or child support proceedings.

Sec. 708. Reporting arrears to credit bureaus

Section 708 amends the requirement for a State or the reporting of child support arrears to consumer credit bureaus (which currently must permit such reporting) to require such reporting when payment is one month overdue.

Sec. 709. Extended statute of limitation for collection of arrearages

Section 709 requires that State law provide a statute of limitations on child support arrears expiring at least until the child reaches age 30. (This amendment would not require a State to revise any payment obligation which had lapsed on the effective date of the State law.)

Sec. 710. Charges for arrearages

Section 710 requires State laws to provide, not later than October 1, 1998, for assessment of interest or penalties for child support arrearages.

Sec. 711. Visitation issue barred

Section 711 requires State laws to provide that failure to pay child support is not a defense to denial of visitation rights, and denial of visitation rights is not a defense to failure to pay child support.

Sec. 712. Denial of passports for nonpayment of child support

Section 712 amends 4 U.S.C., effective October 1, 1996, to provide that the Secretary of State may not issue by certification by a State IV-D agency that an individual owes child support arrears of over $5,000, must refuse to issue a passport to the individual and may revoke or restrict a passport to a person who has not made payments, including interest, for child support.

Sec. 713. Denial of Federal benefits, loans, and guarantees

This section provides that no Federal agency may make a loan to, provide any guarantee for the benefit of, or provide any benefit to any person who has a child support arrearage exceeding $1,000 and who is not in compliance with a plan or an agreement to repay this obligation. This provision is designed to provide the issue of child support in the operations of the Federal government.

The Federal agencies determine, for example, if a contractor is on the suspension and debarment list before the agency awards a contract to the company. The purpose of this section is to create this type of screening system for child support obligations.

Sec. 714. Other provisions

This section provides that the distributor of lottery winnings, insurance settlements, judgments, and/or property seizures shall first seek a determination from the State child support enforcement agency as to whether the person owes a child support arrearage. If there is an arrearage, then there shall be a notification of that amount which shall be sent to the Child Support agency for distribution.

Sec. 701. Child support enforcement and assurance demonstrations

Section 701 requires the Secretary to fund grants to 3 States for demonstrations, beginning in FY 1998 and lasting from 7 to 10 years, providing assured levels of child support for children in poverty and support and have been established. The projects would be administrated by the State IV-D agency or the State department of taxation and revenue. Annual benefit levels set by States could range from $1,500 to $3,000 for a family with one child, and from $3,000 to $4,500 for a family with four or more children. States could require absent parents with insufficient income to pay support to work off support by participating in work programs.

Ninety percent Federal matching would be available from appropriations for payments to States under title IV-D, but total Federal funds available for these demonstrations would be capped at $27,000,000 for FY 1998; $55,000,000 for FY 1999; $70,000,000 for each of FY’s 2000 through 2003; and $55,000,000 for FY 2004. This section authorizes appropriation of $10 million, to remain available until expended, for the Secretary’s costs for evaluating demonstrations under this section.

Sec. 802. Social Security Act demonstrations

Section 802 amends section 1115(c) of the Act (which currently requires that IV-D demonstrations not result in increased costs to the Federal Government under AFDC) to require that demonstrations that result in increased costs not result in an increase in total costs to the Federal Government.

TITLe IX—ACCESS AND VISITATION GRANTS

Sec. 901. Grants to States for access and visitation programs

Section 901 adds a new section 469A of the Act providing for a new capped entitlement program of grants to States for programs to provide financial support for noncustodial parents’ right to access and visitation of their children. The program would be funded at $5 million for each of FY’s 1997 and 1998, and $10 million for year thereafter. Feder matching would be available to match 90 percent of a State’s expenditures up to the amount of its allotment under a formula based on the numbers of children living with only one biological parent. State programs could be administered by the CSE agency either directly or through courts, local public agencies, or non-profit private entities, and could be Statewide or geographically limited.

TITLE IX—EFFECT OF ENACTMENT

Sec. 1001. Effective date

Section 1001 provides that, except as otherwise specified:

Provisions of this title requiring enactment of State laws or revision of State IV-D plans shall become effective October 1, 1996; and

All other provisions of this title become effective upon enactment, subject to provisions—

Affording a State until after the end of the next State legislative session beginning after enactment, in the case of any provision of this title requiring enactment or amendment of State laws; and Affording a State up to 5 years to comply if a State constitutional amendment is required to permit compliance.

for expedited enforcement remedies to be implemented immediately upon delinquency. Many of the IV-D agency’s cases have been delinquent for months or years when they enter the central monitoring system. This is critical if we as a nation are to have an effective child support program. Collections should not become delinquent. If they do become delinquent, immediate enforcement actions must be taken.

3. New Hire Reporting—New hire reporting has been under fifteen states. It is an effective tool to locate job hoppers. Employers report new hires to the state IV-D agency or in cooperation with state employment security agencies. A new employee can be hired. At present, there is no way to locate a job hopper for at least one quarter of the year when withholding is first reported. Custodial parents need to feed and clothe their children. There are those who feel that this is too heavy a burden upon employers. It need not be. It could be as simple as forwarding a copy of a W-4 form. We have found employers to be responsive and concerned about child support issues. When new hire reporting was erroneously reported as having passed our legislature, employers called wanting to know how to report new hires. There was no opposition in the employer community but certain people presented an opposition to the measure. It is difficult to win approval for such a measure on the local level and to lose it on a state level. Thus...

4. License Revocation—License suspension or revocation is a proven and effective administrative procedure to compel payment of support. It is somewhat controversial because of vested interest and licensing agencies reluctance to participate, but it has proven to be effective in Maine, California and Texas. Nineteen states have adopted some form of license suspension or revocation. To be an effective remedy all states need to have access to licensing revocation and suspension. For interstate enforcement a request to suspend a license in another state would be most beneficial and would be a deterrent to nonpayers to flee from one state to another to avoid paying child support.

In addition to new enforcement techniques, support from the federal government not just in dollars and cents but in cooperation is paramount if we are to solve the national nonpayment problem. Federal government agencies have information we need to locate nonpaying noncustodial parents and their assets. Yet, it is difficult to obtain that information. The information we gather is used solely to determine parentage of the children. The IV-D agencies have the information we need to locate delinquent noncustodial parents. The decision to change that could affect national security, certainly child support contractors should have access to all information needed to pursue a case. Something is very wrong when an agency is unable to obtain information on delinquent noncustodial parents affecting the ability of a child to receive the support he deserves.

3. IRS Full Collection—The IRS full collection process could be a valuable enforcement tool. It is known that child support cases receive a low priority when referred to the IRS field office. We suggest that Congress provide funding for staff and systems to assure the full collection process and require that child support cases receive priority over all other collection cases.

4. Automated Systems—The new child support data systems being developed nationwide are sorely needed to manage the growing number of delinquent child support cases. These systems will assist child support workers who have caseloads of 500 to 1000 cases to be more productive and enhance their ability to collect support. However, the resources of both the private vendors and states have been exhausted in their attempt to make fifty statewide systems a success. Federal involvement is essential if we as a nation are to have an effective child support collection. One alternative might be the award of Cost of Living Allowances (COLA). This method could be automated and more evenly applied.

Arkansas has implemented an administrative process to revoke or suspend Commercial Driver’s License of noncustodial parents who are six months behind in their child support obligations. A total of 107 commercial driver’s licenses have been suspended and 76 noncustodial parents have signed agreements to pay delinquent accounts and avoid suspension of their license. The cost of the money we spend to collect is the independent truck driver. With this program, drivers are detained in weigh stations throughout the nation or at their terminals until the child support issues are resolved. Arkansas has recently extended the license suspension for nonpayment of child support to all business and professional licenses. dramatically. Caseloads, nationally, have increased by 128% with collections increasing by 345% during the same period, FFP has decreased by 3.7%. States are continually asked to do more with less funding, which has contributed to the growing problem of uncollected child support. While the intent of the current proposal being considered is to provide some relief and to redistribute federal dollars among states, it is important to understand the effect of the proposed funding scheme. Under the proposed distribution rules, states will lose dollars in the form of retained AFDC collections which provide match dollars for half of all child support collections. Currently, states can earn more than 100% funding. Some make a profit. Under the new scheme, the best a state can do is 90% FFP. Since many states pass incentives on to the contractors providing services in some local jurisdictions, many local offices will be asked to enter into contracts knowing that they will experience at least a 10% loss each year or state cost will increase. Once again, as Congress attempts to improve the nation’s child support problem, a funding cut is proposed. We know that more dollars must be invested in case workers and automation if we are to work more cases and collect more child support. Why then reduce funding to state programs by a tenth when you want them to do more? If we are to remove custodial parents from welfare and make parents financially responsible for their children, a strong child support infrastructure is necessary. A return to the proposed 75% FFP plus incentives would be helpful and we recommend that incentives by sufficient to allow for a 100% reimbursement. Any funds over 100% should be returned to the federal government.

We greatly appreciate your interest in child support enforcement. Thank you for the opportunity to express our views on these very important issues. We join in your commitment to assist the children and families of Arkansas and the nation to realize their full potential.

Sincerely,

Judy Jones Jordan, Administrator.

S. 688. A bill to provide for the minting and circulation of $1 silver-plated coins; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

THE U.S. SILVER DOLLAR COIN ACT OF 1995

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would permit the minting of a $1 silver-plated coin with a likeness of President Dwight D. Eisenhower on the front and a rendering of the Iwo Jima monument on the reverse side of the coin. I am pleased that Senator GRASSLEY is joining in this effort that will provide a boost to our domestic silver mining industry and could serve to reduce the Federal deficit.

Our currency system has not been significantly altered over the past century even though the economy has fundamentally changed. Not long ago, an individual could use one coin—a nickel, dime, or quarter—to purchase a coke from a vending machine or ride a bus. Today, that’s just not possible. Vending machines require two, three, or four coins, or a dollar bill. And you know how frustrating those dollar bill readers can be on vending machines and Metro fare machines. To make matters worse, a dollar bill reader on a vending machine costs $400 to $500—an utterly unnecessary cost if a dollar coin were available.

According to the Coin Coalition, processing dollar coins instead of dollar bills could save the coin industry alone more than $124 million a year. The Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority would save $3.5 million a year if it did not have to expend the time and labor in processing—unwrinkling dollar bills. Those dollars could be used too buy 24 new buses to move people instead of paper. The Chicago Transit Authority does its own bill-unfolding, at a cost of $22 per thousand. Processing coins costs just $1.64 per thousand.

In addition, many economists project that a dollar coin could save the Federal Government several million dollars. Although coins cost more to mint than dollar bills to print, coins last far longer. A bill wears out in an average of about 17 months while coins can last 30 years.

Since this is the 50th anniversary of the allied victory in World War II, I believe it is appropriate that the new coin present a likeness of President Eisenhower and the Supreme Commander in Europe. The rendition of the raising of the flag on Mount Surabachi on Iwo Jima has become a symbol of the dedication and valor of our Armed Forces in restoring freedom in the Pacific.

I hope my colleagues will join me in getting this coin modernization enacted into law this year.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 689. A bill to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act regarding the use of organic sorbents in landfills, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

THE LANDFILL TECHNICAL IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 1995

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I am introducing today the Landfill Technical Improvements Act of 1995. This legislation will allow us to maximize technical advances of the last decade in carrying out our Nation’s environmental protection strategy. It will also promote small business and entrepreneurialism and help our Nation compete in the global market for new, environment-driven technologies.

By passing the 1984 Hazardous and Solid Waste amendments, Congress required the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to issue regulations restricting the disposal of organic absorbents in hazardous waste landfills. In the past decade, however, developments in natural absorbent technologies show more efficiency than traditional sorbents produced for fossil fuel in the fourth sentence, by striking “the dollar, half dollar,” and inserting “the half dollar”; used. Moreover, innovative and environmentally conscious technologies, such as those developed by this small company in my State, are discriminated against.

The administration has clearly stated its preference for such high-technology materials, but this flawed regulation has prejudiced the widespread availability and use of these products. This is to the detriment of our national environmental goals.

This bill remedies this situation, allowing the fullest use of environmentally sound landfill technologies.

S. 690. A bill to amend the Federal Noxious Weeds Act of 1974 and the Terminal Inspection Act to improve the exclusion, eradication, and control of noxious weeds and plants, plant products, plant pests, animals, and other organisms within and into the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

The Federal Noxious Weed Control

By Mr. AKAKA, Chairman:

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Federal Noxious Weed Control Improvement Act of 1995. Senators CAMPBELL and DORGAN have joined me as cosponsors of this bill. The objective of this legislation is to curb the threat by noxious weeds that is sweeping over productive rangeland, agricultural land, and native ecosystems across America.

I hope my colleagues saw the article on invasive alien species that appeared in the New York Times magazine last November. It vividly described the threats to the tropical ecosystems of Hawaii posed by nonindigenous species. In Hawaii, gorse, ivy gourd, and the banana poa vine are ravaging native forest and rangeland. But Hawaii is not alone in facing this threat. Nearly 200 species of troublesome imported weeds infest the continental United States.

We see evidence of this problem within a few miles of the Capitol. Drive to the edge of the Potomac or through Rock Creek Park and you will see impenetrable mats of hydrilla and honey-suckle. Another weed, kudzu, topples grown trees and smothers shrubs and plants. In New England, Oriental bittersweet and porcelain berry vine cause similar problems. Purple loosestrife has decimated wetlands across the country from Maine to Washington.

Leafy spurge, spotted knapweed, cheatgrass, thistle, salt cedar, and Medusa-head cover millions of acres of grasslands in Montana, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. All of these weeds are foreign to the United States. Some are toxic to livestock. Others are heavy consumers of water, or fuel forest and rangeland fires. These weeds ruin the grasslands for birds, elk, and grizzly bears. In Montana alone, cattleman suffer millions of dollars of forage losses due to spotted knapweed. At its current rate of spread, Montana’s projected losses due to spotted knapweed could exceed $100 million by the year 2000. Another weed, leafy spurge, occupies over 2.5 million acres in 30 States. Nationwide, $100 million in direct and indirect losses to livestock are attributable to this weed.

The cost of weed control and losses due to weed infestation are estimated at over $20 billion per year, more than the combined losses for all other pests. Nearly 16 million acres of Federal land are infested with noxious weeds. On Bureau of Land Management lands, weed infestation expands at a rate of 2,000 acres per day. If current trends continue, a quarter of BLM lands in the continental United States could be overrun with weeds by the turn of the century.

At least one hundred of our national parks face serious harm to their natural resources as a result of invasive foreign plants. Everglades National Park and Big Cypress National Preserve are overrun with Australian melaleuca tree. More than 400,000 acres of the everglades are infested by this tree, and 50 additional acres are consumed each day. Wildlife habitat and water supplies are also threatened by melaleuca in the National Wildlife Refuge. Another tree, the Brazilian pepper, is crowding out the mangroves along Florida’s southwest coast. Both of these alien trees make habitat unsuitable for native water birds.

Competition from 25 exotic plants threatens the habitat of rare plants in Great Smoky Mountains National Park. Among the damaging species are stink tree, multi-flora rose, and an imported grass with a scientific name I won’t even attempt to pronounce.

River margins and rare desert springs in the beautiful slickrock parks of Utah, including Canyonlands and Zion National Parks, as well as in Death Valley National Park, have become overgrown with tamarisk, a tree which literally sucks the water out of the ground, depriving wildlife and native plants of precious water supplies.

Efforts to safeguard private and public land from these threats are grossly inadequate. In 1993, the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment called U.S. efforts to counter the effects of exotic invasive species “a largely uncoordinated patchwork of laws, regulations, policies, and programs.”

The Secretary of Agriculture is responsible for preventing noxious weeds from entering the country either accidentally or as intentional imports, as well as for spearheading control efforts for weeds of economic importance. The Secretary of Agriculture must wait until a weed is an established, documented nuisance before action can be taken. That’s like waiting until the cows have run away before you close the barn door.

For example, tropical soda apple, a plant in the nightshade family, was introduced from Brazil into pastures in Florida. It was first observed in 1987 and now occupies more than 400,000 acres in Florida. Although cattle cannot eat the plant because of its sharp spines, seeds from this invasive weed easily contaminate hay and other forages. Tropical soda apple presents a particularly difficult control problem because seeds are passed through cattle manure. In Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia, more than 20 outbreaks have been linked to cattle purchased in Florida. Tropical soda apple can also be transported in commercially packaged manure used for gardening. Despite the danger and the relative ease of dealing with the original infestation, it took the U.S. Department of Agriculture 8 years to declare it a noxious weed. During that time, the threat has become so widespread that containment may be beyond hope.

‘To correct weaknesses in the Federal Noxious Weed Act of 1974, my bill grants emergency authority to prohibit the entry of foreign weeds that have not been formally added to the Federal noxious weed list. Weeds could also be added to the list through a petition process. Also, the bill would provide the interagency coordinating body with authority to list State noxious weeds across State lines except under permit. Finally, this legislation would establish a Noxious Weed Technical Advisory Group to evaluate weed species, develop appropriate classification criteria for noxious weeds, and make recommendations to implement the act.

As the hearings that I chaired during the 103rd Congress clearly demonstrated, the lack of coordination between Federal agencies that are responsible for the control of alien weeds is a serious problem. There are 9 Federal agencies located in 8 different Cabinet departments. While these agencies have responsibility for pest control, they enforce more than a dozen major laws, and a host of minor ones.

With so many statutes and so many agencies, Federal policy resembles a jumbled mess. Foreign pests are streaming through the holes in policy and enforcement. Hawaii and other States suffer the consequences of piecemeal Federal enforcement.

I ask my colleagues to support the pending passage of this bill. I hope that we can consider this legislation as part of the 1995 farm bill. All of our constituents will benefit from a stronger and more secure foundation for agriculture and conservation of our natural resources.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Federal Noxious Weed Control Improvement Act of 1996 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

   1. Improvement in the exclusion, eradication, and control of noxious weeds in the United States.

   11. SEC. 2. FINDINGS.
      Congress finds that—
      (1) the importation or introduction in interstate commerce of foreign noxious weeds, except under controlled conditions, is detrimental to the environment, agriculture, and commerce of the United States and to the public health in that the growth and spread of weeds in the United States—
         (A) interfere with the growth of useful plants;
         (B) clog waterways and interfere with navigation;
         (C) cause disease or have other adverse effects on the environment; and
         (D) directly or indirectly interfere with natural resources, agriculture, forestry, native ecosystems, and the management of ecosystems;
      (2) uncontrolled distribution within the United States of foreign noxious weeds, after importation or introduction of the weeds, has similar detrimental effects;
      (3) the distribution of noxious weeds poses long-term problems for agriculture, and native or natural ecosystems and ecosystem management, including—
         (A) economic injury to natural resources, agriculture, and the economy of the United States;
         (B) impairment of interstate and foreign commerce;
         (C) diminishment of biodiversity in native ecosystems of the United States; and
      (4) in light of the adverse consequences of uncontrolled importation or distribution of foreign noxious weeds, the regulation of foreign noxious weeds as provided in this Act is necessary to protect interstate and foreign commerce and the public welfare.

S. 691. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for coverage of early detection of prostate cancer and certain drug treatment services under part B of the Medicare program, to amend title V of the Federal Noxious Weed Act, to amend chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, to provide for coverage of such early detection and treatment services under the programs of the Department of Veterans' Affairs, and to expand research and education programs of the National Institutes of Health and the Public Health Service relating to prostate cancer; to the Committee on Finance.

'THE PROSTATE CANCER DIAGNOSIS AND TREATMENT ACT OF 1995

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Prostate Cancer Diagnosis and Treatment Act of 1995. Prostate cancer is the leading cancer and the second leading cause of cancer death among American men. Over 215,000 Americans will be diagnosed with the disease this year and over 40,000 men will die from it.

Despite recent advances in the early detection and treatment of prostate cancer, we know that the number of deaths continue to rise. Prostate cancer is as common today in men as breast cancer is in women, and the death rates for the two diseases are similar as well. Over this decade, prostate cases and deaths are expected to continue their rapid rise—with cases increasing by 37 percent and deaths by 90 percent between 1985 and 2000.

Early detection has been greatly improved with the development of the prostate specific antigen [PSA] test—a simple and inexpensive blood test for the presence of prostate cancer. As a result, the American Urological Association and the American Cancer Society now recommend that men over 50 and over get an annual screening with the PSA test.

Over this decade, prostate cases and deaths are expected to continue their rapid rise with cases increasing by 37 percent and deaths by 90 percent between 1985 and 2000.

Early detection has been greatly improved with the development of the prostate specific antigen (PSA) test—a simple and inexpensive blood test for the presence of prostate cancer. As a result, the American Urological Association and the American Cancer Society now recommend that men over 50 and over get an annual screening with the PSA test. Treatment has been improved through new surgical techniques that remove the cancer without disastrous side effects, and through drug therapy that can extend life expectancy and improve patient comfort for patients with advanced stage cancer.

These improvements have meant the difference between life and death for many men. The ability to detect prostate cancer in the first stage of the disease has made it possible to surgically remove the cancer when it is still confined to the prostate. Over 70 percent of patients treated in this way never have a recurrence of the disease. Waiting until the second stage or later, which was necessary under previous techniques, greatly increases the risk that the cancer has spread, with small hope for a cure.

I know how important it is to get screening and early treatment for prostate cancer—I am a prostate cancer survivor. I had a PSA test—I had a positive score—I had my prostate removed—and I am here to tell about it as a result. A number of my colleagues in this Chamber—Senator Dole, Senator Stevens, among them—are here with us today because their prostate cancer was spotted early and treated effectively. General Schwarzkopf, the hero of the gulf war, is another man nearly felled by prostate cancer, but saved through screening and surgery. General Schwarzkopf has become a national spokesman for prostate cancer detection. General Schwarzkopf and all of us in Congress are lucky to have the kind of insurance coverage we do through the military and the Federal Employees Health Benefit plans and the Veterans Health care.

We can all be sure we get our annual PSA test and any treatment we may need.

The tragedy is that 13 million American men who are at the highest risk for this disease do not have health insurance coverage for the best early detection methods and drug therapies. They do not have it because we, the Congress, have not seen fit to provide it for them through the Medicare and Veterans Health programs. Medicare covers the old diagnostic test but does not provide for an annual PSA test. The Veterans Health services could provide annual tests for their resident and in-patient populations, but rarely do they do the tests or the follow-on surgery. Both of these programs cover medical facilities and doctors at Walter Reed Hospital among other places.

yet receives one-fourth as much research money. This is a serious oversight that we should correct to increase the pace of research and develop conclusive evidence on what really works and does not work in treating prostate cancer.

The Prostate Cancer Diagnosis and Treatment Act of 1995 would take three important steps to halt the progression of this disease. First, it would nearly double spending on research to develop more effective treatments of the disease. Second, it would make PSA tests available under the Medicare and Veterans Health programs. Third, it would extend Medicare and Veterans Health coverage for prostate cancer drugs to cover the disease's radiation therapy including oral drugs that can significantly extend and improve the lives of prostate cancer victims.

Mr. President, it is important that we increase our efforts to combat this deadly disease and address these deficiencies in our Federal health coverage and research programs. I urge my colleagues to join me in sponsoring the legislation that could make a difference for thousands of men who might otherwise have suffered greatly or died an untimely death from prostate cancer.

By Mr. KYL:

S. 693. A bill to prevent and punish crimes of sexual and domestic violence, to strengthen the rights of crime victims, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Sexual Violence Prevention and Victims' Rights Act be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

PROVISIONS OF THE SEXUAL VIOLENCE PREVENTION AND VICTIMS' RIGHTS ACT OF 1995

Title II—Sexual Violence, Domestic Violence, and Offenses Against the Family

Sec. 101. Right of the victim to restitution.

Makes issuance of a full order of restitution for victims only in violent crime and sexual offenses cases. Current law provides such a right for victims in violent crime and sexual abuse cases, though the offender has the right to make an allocution in all cases.

Sec. 102. Right of the victim to fair treatment in legal proceedings.

Sec. 104. Rebuttal of attacks on the victim’s character.

Provides that if a defendant presents negative character evidence concerning the victim, the government can include negative character evidence concerning the defendant.

Sec. 105. Right of the victim to allocution in sentencing.

Repeals provision that notices to state and local law enforcement concerning the release or death of an offender and notification of offenders can only be used for law enforcement purposes. This removes an impediment to our legitimate use of such information, such as advising victims or potential victims that the offender has returned to the area.

Sec. 106. Right of the victim to review of rules for sexual assault and child molestation cases.

Provides for equal representation of prosecutors with defense lawyers on committees in the judiciary concerning rules affecting sexual assault and child molestation cases. Provides that F.R.E. 413-15, which establishes general rules of admissibility for similar crimes evidence in sexual assault and child molestation cases, will take effect immediately.

Sec. 201. Implementation of evidence rules for sexual assault and child molestation cases.

Provides for sexual assault and child molestation cases. Current law allows defendants to introduce evidence concerning the victim, such as the victim’s sexual history, to prove that the victim consented to the sexual contact. The law allows the judge to exclude any evidence that is unduly harmful to the victim, confusing the issue of consent, or otherwise unreliable or unfair to the accused. The Sexual Violence Prevention and Victims’ Rights Act of 1995 provides for an equal right of the prosecution to present evidence concerning the victim and the accused, but it removes an impediment to our legitimate use of such information, such as advising victims or potential victims that the offender has returned to the area.

Sec. 202. HIV testing of defendants in sexual assault cases.

Provides for sexual assault cases. Current law allows defendants to introduce evidence concerning the victim, such as the victim’s sexual history, to prove that the victim consented to the sexual contact. The law allows the judge to exclude any evidence that is unduly harmful to the victim, confusing the issue of consent, or otherwise unreliable or unfair to the accused. The Sexual Violence Prevention and Victims’ Rights Act of 1995 provides for an equal right of the prosecution to present evidence concerning the victim and the accused, but it removes an impediment to our legitimate use of such information, such as advising victims or potential victims that the offender has returned to the area.

Sec. 203. Clarifying amendment to extraterritorial child pornography offense.

Clarifies that the extraterritorial child pornography offense, like the domestic child pornography offense, covers cases involving the transmission of child pornography by computer.

Sec. 204. Evidence of defendant’s disposition towards victim in domestic violence cases and other cases.

Clarifies that evidence of a defendant’s disposition towards a particular individual—such as the violent disposition of a domestic violence defendant towards the victim—is not subject to the impermissible evidence of “character.”

Sec. 205. Battered women’s syndrome evidence.

Clarifies that “battered women’s syndrome” evidence is admissible under the federal expert testimony rule, to help courts and juries understand the behavior of victims in domestic violence cases and other cases.

Sec. 206. Death penalty for fatal domestic violence offenses.

Authorizes capital punishment under the federal death penalty for fatal domestic violence offenses, for cases in which the offender murders the victim.

S. 695. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve in Kansas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve Act

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague from Kansas, Senator DOLE, to introduce legislation to create a tallgrass prairie preserve in the Flint Hills of Kansas.

At a time when some in Congress are asking hard questions about the cost and role of some units in the national park system, one may wonder why I am proposing the addition of another preserve to an already overburdened system. I am aware and sympathetic to those who complain that some members of Congress have taken a parochial interest in the park system, passing bills to create parks and historical sites more for their economic benefits to neighboring communities than because the area is nationally significant, either naturally or historically.

James Ridenour, former director of the National Park Service under President Bush, calls this the “thinning of the blood” of park system and points out that we are spreading limited personnel and scarce funds too thin. As a consequence, we have been spending an increasing percentage of Federal dollars on sites with questionable significance and devoting less to protecting the nation’s natural and historic resources. However, Mr. Ridenour strongly supports the bill being introduced today as a unique solution to the creation of an important addition to the park system.

This legislation was drafted in response to these concerns. It creates for the first time a private-public partnership where capital from a conservation organization is combined with limited funds from the Federal Government to create a national preserve open to the American public. We will be doing this at a fraction of the cost that the Federal Government would otherwise spend if we were to purchase the property for preservation. By taking this approach, we will be preserving for the first time an ecosystem that is found nowhere in the park service system. The approach taken in this bill is the kind of new thinking we in Congress must explore if we are to wisely spend scarce Federal dollars to protect important natural and historic areas in the future.

For those who have never been to the Flint Hills of Kansas, let me explain why this area is so unique and special. From Nebraska to Oklahoma there remains a narrow swath of tallgrass prairie—the remnants of a once vast tallgrass prairie ecosystem that covered 400,000 square miles from Ohio to the Rocky Mountains, from Canada to Texas. Today, less than 1 percent of this ecosystem remains, much of it in the Flint Hills, which are too steep and too rocky to farm.

There is no better example of this tallgrass prairie ecosystem in the Flint Hills than the 10,894-acre Spring Hill Ranch in Chase County. Hundreds of species of native plants and grasses grow on the ranch. Nearly 200 kinds of birds, 29 species of reptiles and amphibians, and 31 species of mammals can be found on the property. The National Park Service, after an extensive survey of the property in 1991, concluded the property was nationally significant because of its resources and its role in the kidney it deserved conservation as a unit of the national park system.

Beyond the natural splendor of the ranch, the property includes a house, barn, and several outbuildings listed on the National Register of Historic Places because of their unique second empire architectural style. Each of these buildings was built in the 1880s from hand-cut cottonwood limestone quarried in the area. They illustrate the elegance and style of the ranch’s first owner, a local cattle baron. A mile way from the house, over a rise in the land, also sets a one-room prairie school built in 1882.

For the past 14 years, I have been involved in efforts to preserve this ranch and open it to the public. Last year, the National Park Trust, a private conservation organization, purchased the ranch and has been working with members of the Congress, the Federal Government, and representatives of the Kansas congressional delegation to develop legislation to preserve the ranch through a private-public partnership. The results, which have come only after painstaking negotiations with the Trust, Interior officials, and representatives of Kansas’ agricultural and conservation groups, is reflected in the legislation I am introducing today.

The Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve Act will allow the National Park Service to purchase or accept donations of up to 180 acres, or less than 2 percent of the ranch. In meetings I have had with Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt, he has stated that he would like to see the National Park Service own, maintain, and operate this historic core area, which includes the house, barn, and outbuildings.

The rest of the ranch will continue in private ownership, but the Secretary of the Interior is given the authority in this bill to enter into a cooperative agreement with the National Park Trust to provide interpretative and resource management assistance for the rest of the ranch, as well as police and emergency services.

What is different about this proposal and why it makes such sense from the standpoint of the Federal Government is that the ranch owner is willing to work with the National Park Service to develop this partnership. They have gone to great lengths to ensure the quality of this Park Service unit will not be compromised, while remaining open to suggestions to new ways of approaching issues. As former Director Ridenour says in a letter endorsing the legislation, this bill “represents the kind of creative thinking that will have to take place to guarantee that we take care of our great parks in the future.”

In addition to the care that was taken to draft this private-public partnership, equal care was given to address the legitimate concerns of area ranchers. In this bill, National Park Service ownership is limited to 180 acres, and no further expansion is permitted. Language was incorporated into the bill to address concerns regarding fence maintenance and to require compliance with State noxious weed, pesticide, animal health, and water laws. The bill establishes an advisory committee consisting of conservationists, landowners, local community officials, and range management specialists to help determine how the ranch should be managed. The bill also incorporates language that requires the Federal Government to be a good partner with neighboring communities and work cooperatively to deliver emergency and other services.

Mr. President, we have a wonderful opportunity to protect for future generations a portion of the tallgrass prairie—the only ecosystem not currently represented in the National Park System. Passage of this bill will give the American public an opportunity to enjoy and explore this beautiful area and grow to appreciate its history and importance. I ask unanimous consent that a letter from James Ridenour be included in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and other material be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The National Park Trust acquired the Spring Hill/Z Bar Ranch last June as a first important step toward ensuring that this country’s tallgrass heritage is preserved and interpreted for all Americans. The Trust is a 501(c)(3) non-profit educational and charitable corporation which is celebrating more than ten years as the land conservancy of the National Park System. Its pivotal role is to assist the National Park Service in the acquisition of holdings from willing sellers, and to acquire and protect properties, such as the Spring Hill/Z Bar Ranch, in the public interest. The Trust’s mission is to assist the National Park Service in the acquisition of inholdings from willing sellers, and to acquire and protect properties, such as the Spring Hill/Z Bar Ranch, in the public interest. The Trust’s mission is to assist the National Park Service in the acquisition of inholdings from willing sellers, and to acquire and protect properties, such as the Spring Hill/Z Bar Ranch, in the public interest.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, for several years there have been attempts to create a national tallgrass prairie preserve on nearly 11,000 acres in Kansas, known as the Z-Bar Ranch. Proposals for this preserve have faced valid opposition from concerned citizens and landowners in the area. Today, Senator Kasparek is introducing legislation which I expect will establish a successful public/private partnership.

I commend Senator Kasparek’s leadership efforts to establish a prairie park in Kansas. In January 1992, she organized the Spring Hill/Z-Bar Ranch Foundation to raise money for the purchase of the ranch. This private foundation also addressed many of the concerns of local residents and landowners.

Last summer, the Z-Bar Ranch was sold to a private trust. But establishing Z-Bar as a national preserve requires legislation. Senator Kasparek has worked diligently to strike a balance which is acceptable to all parties. This bill authorizes the Federal Government to purchase or to accept a donation of up to 180 acres of the Z-Bar Ranch.

I have always supported Senator Kasparek’s efforts to encourage private participation in the establishment of a national prairie preserve. With a private/public partnership, we can officially recognize the tallgrass prairie while limiting the involvement of the Federal Government.

This year, the National Park Trust, which currently owns the ranch, offered to donate the core area of land to the Federal Government. This will minimize the cost of establishing the preserve. In my view, a compromise which includes minimal Federal ownership and continued local input sets this proposal apart from other efforts.

The tallgrass prairie is a vital part of the natural environment and heritage of the high plains. We must protect and preserve it. Anyone who has driven through the Flint Hills or Kansas appreciates the beauty of this prairie. I am pleased to join Senator Kasparek today in cosponsoring this legislation. Her success in creating a partnership between public and private efforts will help preserve the history of the Midwest.

By the way, Mr. President, in support of your efforts to set aside a tallgrass prairie park, I may say that I was Director of the National Park Service in the Bush Administration.

In lectures I have been giving around the country, I have been saying that the last great natural park to be purchased is a tallgrass prairie park. We may have some trades between various federal agencies from time to time, but the park is one in which private ownership will be involved.

You have reached a unique solution to creating the park. Private ownership has been recognized and respected while the Federal Government has maximized the cost of establishing the preserve. In my view, a compromise which includes minimal Federal ownership and continued local input sets this proposal apart from other efforts.

The tallgrass prairie is a vital part of the natural environment and heritage of the high plains. We must protect and preserve it. Anyone who has driven through the Flint Hills or Kansas appreciates the beauty of this prairie. I am pleased to join Senator Kasparek today in cosponsoring this legislation. Her success in creating a partnership between public and private efforts will help preserve the history of the Midwest.
This legislation closely parallels other education reform initiatives on education reform and career preparation. I look forward to working closely with other Senators to achieve the bipartisan support we need in order to do a better job of preparing students for the workforce.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY, FINDINGS, AND PURPOSE

Sec. 2. (a) Declaration of Policy.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States that, in order to meet new economic challenges brought about by changing technologies and increasing international economic competition, the Nation must put in place a system that enables all students to obtain the education needed to pursue productive and adaptable careers.

(b) Declaration of Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) although employment and earnings increasingly depend on educational attainment and the ability to acquire skills among jobs in broad clusters of occupations or industry sectors, a majority of high school graduates in the United States lack sufficient curriculum focus to prepare them for completing a two-year of four-year college degree or for entering careers with high skill, high-wage potential;

(2) enactment of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act has helped to establish a new framework for education reform, based on challenging State academic standards and industry-based skill standards for all students;

(3) enactment of the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1994 has helped to catalyze the development, in all States, of statewide system offering opportunities for all students to participate in school-based, work-based, and connecting activities leading to postsecondary education, further learning, and, for first jobs in high-skill, high-wage careers;

(4) the GI Bill for America’s Workers, of which this Act is a key component, will further strengthen the capacity of States, schools, and businesses, working together, to upgrade the skills of youth and to prepare them for high-wage careers;

(5) local, State, and national programs supported under the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act have assisted many students in obtaining occupational and academic skills, as well as employment, but not these programs must become part of the larger reforms taking place under the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1994;

(6) when properly aligned with related Federal initiatives and the broader reforms that States and localities carry out under the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, this Act can enhance the capacity of States to establish school-to-work opportunities systems that serve all students, enable a greater number of students to achieve to challenging State academic standards and industry-based skill standards, and contribute to enabling all Americans to prosper in a highly competitive, technological economy;

(7) certain individuals (including students with disabilities, educationally or economically disadvantaged students, students of limited English proficiency, incarcerated youth, migrant children, foster children, school dropouts, and women) often face great challenges in acquiring the academic knowledge and occupational skills needed for successful employment and thus may need special assistance and services. All programs to participate fully in career preparedness activities;

(8) Federal resources currently support a maze of employment-related education and training programs which serve on specific content areas or populations, have conflicting or overlapping requirements, and are not administered in an integrated manner, thus inhibiting the capacity of State and local administrators to implement programs that meet the needs of individual students and families.

"(9) The Federal Government can—through a performance partnership with States and localities based on clear programmatic goals, improve accountability, performance, and management improvement of opportunity systems, and increase the participation of students who are members of special populations.

"(10) The Federal Government can—through a performance partnership with States and localities, to acquire the knowledge and skills they need to meet challenging State academic standards and industry-based skill standards, and to prepare for postsecondary education, further learning, and a wide range of opportunities in high-skill, high-wage careers. This purpose shall be pursued through support for State and local efforts that—

"(1) build on the efforts of States and localities, to acquire the knowledge and skills they need to meet the challenges State academic standards and industry-based skill standards; and to prepare for postsecondary education, further learning, and a wide range of opportunities in high-skill, high-wage careers. This purpose shall be pursued through support for State and local efforts that—

"(2) develop and disseminate curriculum and instructional materials, including assistance and are provided under this title, on the achievement of challenging State academic standards and industry-based skill standards; and

"(3) integrate reforms of vocational education with all State reforms of academic preparation in schools.

"(4) promote, in particular, the development of activities and services that integrate academic and vocational instruction, link secondary and postsecondary education, link school-based and work-based learning, coordinate efforts for in-school and out-of-school youth, and enable students to complete career majors in broad occupational clusters.

"(5) increase State and local flexibility in providing services and activities designed to develop, implement, and improve school-to-work opportunities systems, as well as integrating these services and activities with services and activities supported with other Federal, State, and local funds, as those under the Job Training Partnership Act, in exchange for clear accountability for results.

"(6) benefit from national research, development, demonstration, dissemination, evaluation, capacity-building, data collection, training, and technical assistance activities that support State and local efforts to implement successfully services and activities that are funded under this Act, as well as to implement State and local career preparation activities that are supported with their own resources.

"(c) DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to assist all students, through a performance partnership with States and localities, to acquire the knowledge and skills they need to meet challenging State academic standards and industry-based skill standards and to prepare for postsecondary education, further learning, and a wide range of opportunities in high-skill, high-wage careers. S. 697. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for the training of health professionals students with respect to the identification and referral of victims of domestic violence, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

THE DOMESTIC VIOLENCE IDENTIFICATION AND REFERRAL ACT

Mr. President, I introduce the Domestic Violence Identification and Referral Act with my colleagues Senator MIKULSKI, Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN, Senator JACOBSON, and Senator BRADLEY. Representative WYDEN and Representative MORELLA are introducing identical legislation in the House.

Spouse abuse, child abuse, and elder abuse injures millions of Americans each year, and is growing at an alarming rate. An estimated 2 to 4 million women are beaten by their spouses or former spouses each year. In 1992, 2.9 million children were reported abused or neglected, about triple the number reported in 1985. We also know that as many as 20 percent of all rape victims and nearly 50 percent of all cases of spouse abuse and child abuse often go unreported.

While many medical specialties, hospitals, and other health care professionals are on the front lines of this abuse, they cannot stop what they have not been trained to see or talk about. The Domestic Violence Identification and Referral Act addresses this need by encouraging medical schools to incorporate training on domestic violence into their curricula.

There is a need for this legislation. While many medical specialties, hospitals, and other organizations have made education about domestic violence a priority, this instruction typically occurs on the job or as part of a continuing medical education program. A 1994 survey by the Association of American Medical Colleges [AAMC] found that 60 percent of medical school graduates rated the time devoted to instruction in domestic violence as inadequate.

The bill I am introducing today would give preference in Federal funding to those medical and other health professional schools which provide significant training in domestic violence. It defines significant training to include identifying victims of domestic violence and maintaining complete medical records, providing medical advice regarding the dynamics and nature of domestic violence, and referring victims to appropriate public and nonprofit entities for assistance.

The bill also defines domestic violence in the broadest terms, to include battering, child abuse, and elder abuse. I hope my colleagues in the other chamber of this legislation is a critical next step in the fight to bring the brutality of domestic violence out in the open. It mobilizes our Nation’s health care providers to recognize and treat its victims—and will ultimately save lives by helping to break the cycle of violence.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Domestic Violence Identification and Referral Act of 1995”.

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT, FOR CERTAIN HEALTH PROFESSIONS PROGRAMS, OF PROVISIONS REGARDING DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a health professions entity specified in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall, in making awards of grants or contracts under this title, give preference to any such entity (if otherwise a qualified applicant for the award involved) that, in the opinion of the Secretary, is effecting the requirement that, as a condition of receiving a degree or certificate (as applicable) from the entity, each student have had significant training in carrying out the following functions as a provider of health care:

“(A) Identifying victims of domestic violence, and maintaining complete medical records that include documentation of the examination, treatment given, and referrals made, and recording the location and nature of the victim’s injuries.

“(B) Examining and treating such victims, within the scope of the health professional’s discipline, training, and practice, including, at a minimum, providing medical advice regarding the dynamics and nature of domestic violence.

“(C) Referring the victims to public and nonprofit private entities that provide services for such victims.

“(2) RELEVANT HEALTH PROFESSIONS ENTITIES.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a health professions entity specified in this paragraph is a health professional entity that is a school of medicine, a school of osteopathic medicine, a graduate program in mental health practice, a school of nursing (as defined in section 83), a program for the training of physician assistants, or a program for the training of allied health professionals.

S. 698. A bill to designate the Federal building at 33 College Avenue in Waterville, Maine as the "George J. Mitchell Federal Building"; and for other purposes.

THE GEORGE J. MITCHELL FEDERAL BUILDING
ACT OF 1995

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, at the request of the City of Waterville, Maine, I am introducing S. 698, legislation to designate a federal building in Waterville the "George J. Mitchell Federal Building." As most of you know, George Mitchell and I shared more than the position of Senator from Maine. We both grew up in similar circumstances with very similar backgrounds. George Mitchell is half Irish and half Lebanese. I am half Irish and half Jewish. Both of us graduated from Bowdoin College and both became lawyers before entering public service. Together over the years on many issues of concern to Maine people and wrote a book together on the Iran-Contra Affair.

From a quiet young lawyer in Waterville, Maine, came a great leader who has done honor and his State proud. George Mitchell was born in Waterville in 1933. Waterville is located 18 miles north of the State capital on the west bank of the Kennebec River. It was settled in 1764 and became the county seat of Waldo County. Waterville is home to Colby College. Hathaway Shirt Company, and the Redington Museum which exhibits a number of 19th and 19th century artifacts from the region including the revolver used by Lieutenant Charles Shorey, of Waterville, at the Battle of Gettysburg.

George attended St. Joseph's grammar school and graduated from Waterville High School in 1950. He graduated from Bowdoin in 1954. He then served in the U.S. Army Counterintelligence Corps in Berlin, Germany, from 1954 to 1956; and then went on to Georgetown University to get his law degree.

In 1980, he was appointed by Governor Brennan to fill the unexpired term of Senator Muskie who was appointed by President Carter to be Secretary of State. There is a Chinese proverb that says "when drinking the water, it is important to remember those who dug the well." To really understand George's success, one need look no further than to the fact that Ed Muskie was his mentor. Ed, like George, began his political career in Waterville as a young lawyer. Ed provided George with the basic principles of public service which have guided him over the years. It was no surprise that George Mitchell demonstrated many of the qualities which typify Senator Muskie and Maine: intelligence, integrity, and independence. Senator Mitchell was elected Senate Majority Leader in 1988 and served his colleagues and the institution with distinction.

George Mitchell was a gifted public servant. His voice reminds us that public service is a noble calling. It was both a pleasure and an honor to serve with him. I hope my colleagues will work with me in passing this legislation as a means of paying tribute to the many years of outstanding service Senator Mitchell has given to the State of Maine and the country.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, it is my pleasure today to offer my strong support for legislation to honor our colleague and my predecessor, former Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell. This legislation, which I am proud to cosponsor with my colleague, represents the consensus which would designate the Federal building at 33 College Avenue in Waterville, Maine, as the "George J. Mitchell Federal Building.

This is perhaps no more fitting tribute to George Mitchell than naming the federal building in his home town—Waterville, Maine—in his honor. George Mitchell is a man who dedicated himself to government. Following his graduation from George-town Law School, Senator Mitchell served in the U.S. Attorney's Office in Washington. George Mitchell devoted himself to public service at the U.S. Justice Department; as the leader of his party in the State of Maine; as one of Maine's gubernatorial candidates; as a federal, U.S. District judge; and, for the past fourteen years, as Maine's junior senator. George Mitchell devoted himself to government because he believed in government, and it is appropriate today that we name the seat of our federal government in his hometown in his honor.

George Mitchell's story is well known in Waterville, Maine. His mother was a first-generation Lebanese immigrant; his father, an orphan, was a janitor at Colby College. They instilled strong values in their son. George Mitchell dedicated himself to learning, to knowledge and justice, and throughout his youth he surpassed the arbitrary ceilings our society so often places on us. He graduated from Bowdoin College, served in the Army, and then went on to law school. He typified the Maine work ethic, and that ethic served him well as an attorney, a judge, and as a United States Senator.

George Mitchell came to the U.S. Senate when another distinguished Mainier, Senator Edmund Muskie, resigned his seat to become Secretary of State. Immediately, Senator Mitchell put a lifetime of experience to work. He became one of the earliest advocates of a Chief special in the landmark Clean Air legislation that passed a decade later, in 1990. He recognized the importance of standing up for Senator LEVIN and I have long been proponents of strong ethics laws. We serve as the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member on the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management which has jurisdiction over the Office of Government Ethics (OGE) and the Executive Branch. Senator LEVIN and I have made many changes to strengthen the ethics laws since the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, which created OGE, was passed. We authored the Independent Counsel provision of the Ethics in Government Act which provides for the appointment of an independent counsel to investigate allegations of criminal wrongdoing by top level Executive Branch officials, and we worked together to strengthen the revolving door laws. Moreover, Senator LEVIN and I have consistently sought to aid OGE in its mission of providing overall direction to the Executive Branch in developing policies to prevent conflicts of interest and ensure ethical conduct by Executive Branch officers and employees.

The reauthorization bill Senator LEVIN and I are introducing today is nearly identical to the legislation we introduced last Congress which was passed by both the House and the Senate. Unfortunately, however, no action was taken by the House of Representatives prior to Congress adjournment.

OGE’s authorization expired on September 30 of last year. It is very important, therefore, that the Congress move as quickly as possible to reauthorize the agency. The bill will reauthorize OGE for seven years. This is a slightly longer reauthorization than we have sought in previous years. As in the past, we want to avoid the need to reauthorize OGE during the first year of a Presidential term when a large portion of OGE’s resources are devoted to the nominee clearance process.

The bill would also, for the first time, grant OGE the authority to address the problem that arises when federal government facilities are not adequate either in terms of size or equipment resources to accommodate OGE’s ethics education and training programs which are held around the country. This authority is intended to enable OGE to accept the use of certain non-federal facilities, such as an auditorium that might be offered by a State or local government or a university, which may be better suited for OGE’s needs.

As I have often noted in the past, the Office of Government Ethics is a small office with large responsibilities. Over the years, we have imposed more responsibilities on OGE and we haven’t always provided the necessary staff or resources to carry out those responsibilities. Specifically, I would note the additional functions OGE had to perform when it became an independent agency in 1989 and in complying with the Ethics Reform Act of 1990. Congress moved to make OGE a separate agency because it was believed that OGE was not independent enough. In addition, Congress wanted to enhance the agency’s prestige and authority within the Executive Branch given its important and sensitive responsibilities.

While OGE’s budget has increased rather significantly since we last reauthorized the agency in 1988, OGE still has a lean budget with which to operate when you consider the critically important responsibilities of the agency. As I said, in light of budget deficits, OGE, like all agencies will be called upon to meet its responsibilities in the most cost-effective manner possible. The bill also contains a number of technical changes to the ethics laws.

OGE’s mission is critically important in ensuring strict ethical standards in government. I hope my colleagues will move expeditiously to pass this legislation and reauthorize this important agency.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today, Senator COHEN and I, in our capacities as the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member of the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, are introducing a bill to Reauthorize the Office of Government Ethics (OGE). Reauthorization of the OGE is essential so that the agency can continue to perform its mission to provide overall direction of executive branch policies related to preventing conflicts of interest on the part of officers and employees of any executive agency.

The OGE’s previous authorization expired on September 30, 1994.

Senator COHEN and I first introduced this bill bank in August of 1993. The Oversight Subcommittee held a hearing on the reauthorization in April of 1994, with the Director of the OGE, Stephen Potts, as a witness. The reauthorization bill was reported out of the Oversight Subcommittee. The Government Affairs Committee with strong bipartisan support and was approved by the Senate. The bill subsequently died when the House of Representatives failed to act upon the reauthorization in the last Congress. Therefore, Senator COHEN and I seek to reauthorize the OGE, so that the agency can carry on its very important responsibilities.

OGE was created in 1978 as part of the Office of Personnel Management. Over the years, Congress has given OGE more authority and autonomy to the OGE, making it a separate agency as of October 1, 1989. This was an important step in recognizing the significance of OGE’s role and its need for independence. In addition, through Executive Order, President Bush and President Clinton have given the OGE new responsibilities for guiding and implementing ethics program throughout the Executive Branch. The responsibilities of the OGE range from teaching to enforcement, from issuing regulations to providing guidance and interpretation; from reviewing financial disclosure forms to auditing agency ethics programs.

In the process of developing this bill, the Oversight Subcommittee reviewed OGE’s budget, its personnel, and its accomplishments. Based on that effort, the committee is satisfied that the OGE has improved in areas where weaknesses were identified in the past and that the agency is currently on track in performing its duties in an effective, professional manner.

In addition to reauthorizing OGE, this bill would give OGE authority to accept donations or gifts that would facilitate the agency’s work. A federal agency can’t accept gifts unless it has specific statutory authority to do so. Many agencies have such authority but, up until now, the OGE has not been one of those agencies. The reason OGE seeks this authority is in connection with its training mission. OGE conducts multiagency ethics training sessions around the country, and sometimes there is no nearby Federal facility that is appropriate in terms of size and services. This gift acceptance authority would allow the OGE to accept the use of non-Federal facilities—for example, auditorium and related services such as might be offered by a State or local government or a university.

I hope that the Senate will act quickly in reauthorizing this important agency.

S. 700--A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to revise the tax rules on expiration, to modify the basis rules for nonresident aliens becoming citizens or residents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation designed to address a problem that has come to light recently concerning the ability of U.S. citizens to avoid taxes by abandoning their citizenship. We should not countenance the evasion of taxes by those who renounce their citizenship. The Senate should act to address this problem expeditiously, and the bill that I introduce today will, I hope, represent significant progress towards that end. It is a revision of provision passed by the Senate Finance Committee recently, and responds to some of the criticisms that have been raised concerning the original proposal.

A genuine abuse exists in this area. Although the current tax code contains provisions, dating back to 1966, designed to address tax-motivated relinquishment of citizenship, these provisions have proven difficult to enforce and are easily evaded. One international lawyer described the effort, I quote, as polishing a child’s play. Individually, this substantial wealth can, by renouncing U.S. citizenship, avoid paying taxes on gains that accrued during the period that they acquired their wealth and were afforded the myriad advantages of U.S. citizenship. Moreover, even after renunciation, these individuals can maintain substantial connections with the United States, such as keeping a residence in the United States for up to 120 days a year without incurring U.S. tax obligations. Indeed, reports indicate that certain wealthy individuals have renounced their U.S. citizenship and avoided their tax obligations while retaining their families and homes in the United States, being carefully mere to avoiding being present in this country for more than 120 days each year.

Meanwhile, the rest of Americans who remain citizens pay taxes on their gains when assets are sold or when an estate tax becomes due at death.

It was this Senator who made the first proposal in the Senate to deal with the expatriation tax abuse. On February 6, the President announced a proposal to address the problem in his fiscal year 1996 budget submission. Three weeks ago, on March 15, during Finance Committee consideration of the bill to restore the health insurance deductions fully, I offered a modified version of the administration’s expatriation tax provisions as an amendment to the bill. My amendment would have substituted the expatriation proposal for the repeal of exclusions or brevity preferences as a funding source for the bill. The amendment failed when every Republican member of the Committee voted against it. Subsequently, Senator BRADLEY offered the expatriation provision as a free-standing amendment, with the $3.6 billion in revenue that it raised to be dedicated to deficit reduction. Senator BRADLEY’s amendment passed by voice vote. That is how the expatriation tax provision was added to the bill that came before the Senate.

After the Senate Finance Committee reported the bill, but before full Senate action and conference with the House, the Finance Committee held a hearing to further review the issues raised by the expatriation provision. Tax legislation routinely gets polished in its technical aspects as it moves through floor action and conference. At the Finance hearing, we heard criticisms of some technical aspects in the operation of the provision, as well as testimony in opposition to it. I offered a modified version of the provision, and the American Law Division of the Congressional Research Service reached agreement on it. However, there were dissenting views, most notably Prof. Hurst Hannum of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University, who first wrote to me on March 24.

This is where this legislation stood when the House-Senate conference met on March 28. The weight of authority appeared to be on the side of legality under international law, but there was some question, and the bill had to move at great speed. As my colleagues well know, the legislation restoring the self-employed’s health insurance deduction for calendar year 1994 needed to be passed and signed into law well in advance of this year’s April 17 tax filing deadline, so that the self-employed would have time to prepare and file their 1994 tax returns. The decision regarding the expatriation provision had to be made without further opportunity of deliberation. I opted not to risk making the wrong decision with respect to international law and human rights.

The decision to drop the expatriation tax provision from the final conference version of the bill has been the subject of much debate over the past week. I certainly don’t presume to speak for the other conferees. But for myself I repeat as I have said on two occasions on this floor over the past week: we should proceed with care when we are dealing with human rights issues, particularly when the group involved is a despised group—that is, millions who renounce their citizenship for money.

As the Senator who first proposed the expatriation tax provision, I will see this matter through to a conclusion. We are getting more clarity on the human rights issue, and it appears that a consensus is developing to the effect that the provision does not conflict with our obligations under international law. In particular, it is worth noting that Professor Hannum, who first wrote me on March 24 expressing his concern that that expatriation provision would conflict under international law, has, after receiving additional and more specific information about the expatriation tax, now written a second letter of March 31 stating that he is convinced that neither its intended nor its potential would constitute present U.S. obligations under international law. This is the growing consensus, although it is not unanimous.

As for criticisms of the technical difficulties of the original proposal, I believe they can be satisfied. Indeed, I would venture that if some of those criticizing the provision’s technical aspects had put even half as much effort into devising solutions as in highlighting shortcomings, we would already be much further along toward a satisfactory statute.

One final point of utmost importance. As we take the time to write this law carefully, billionaires are not slipping through some loophole and escaping tax by renouncing their citizenship. I made it effective for taxpayers who initiated a renunciation of citizenship on or after that date. This was an entirely appropriate way to put an end to an abuse which is currently law. Both the proposal that I initiated, and the one that was ultimately adopted by the Finance Committee, also used February 6, 1995, as the effective date of the Finance Committee, also used February 6, 1995, as the effective date of the new provision preventing tax evasion through expatriation. The House conferees had proposed slipping the effective date to March 15, 1995— the date of the Senate Finance Committee action on the provision. The two chairmen of the tax-writing committees ultimately resisted that overture, and have issued a joint statement giving notice that February 6 may be the effective date of any legislation affecting the tax treatment of those who relinquish citizenship. Given the potential for abuse under current law, I believe that February 6 must be the effective date for a new rule. In any event, given the President’s announcement in the budget, the Finance Committee action, and the joint statement of the two chairmen of the tax-writing committees who are contemplate renunciation of their U.S. citizenship are on fair notice of the February 6, 1995, effective date.

To repeat, as the Senator who first offered the proposal to end the expatriation tax abuse, I will do everything I can to see that this matter gets resolved. We will do it this session. Fundamental justice to all taxpaying Americans requires no less.

In an effort to advance that goal, I am today introducing legislation embodying a revised expatriation tax proposal. I do so in the interest of ensuring that the issues that have been raised are addressed satisfactorily, and in a timely manner. This bill represents a serious effort to address the criticisms that have been raised, and I believe it represents a major step forward. It will provide an opportunity for us to consider this matter again in addition, I anticipate that the Joint Committee on Taxation will include an analysis of this bill in its comprehensive study of the subject of expatriation that the Committee staff has been directed to submit to the chairmen of the tax-writing committees.

Mr. President, we will end this abuse, and promptly, but in a careful and orderly way, as we should do in matters of this importance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and additional material be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part IV of subchapter O of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to special rules for gain or loss on disposing of interests in a trust) is amended by redesignating section 1061 as section 1062 and by inserting after section 1062 the following new section:

‘‘Sec. 1061. Basis of assets of nonresident alien individuals becoming citizens or residents.

(A) GENERAL RULE.—If a nonresident alien individual becomes a citizen or resident of the United States, gain or loss on the disposition of any property held on the date the individual becomes such a citizen or resident shall be determined by substituting, as of the applicable date, the fair market value of such property (on the applicable date) for its cost or other basis."

(B) EXCEPTION FOR DEPRECIATION.—Any deduction under this chapter for depreciation, depletion, or amortization shall be determined without regard to the application of this section.

(c) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

(2) RESIDENT.—The term ‘‘resident’’ does not include an individual who is treated as a resident of a foreign country under the provisions of a tax treaty between the United States and that country and who does not waive the benefits of such treaty applicable to residents of the foreign country.

(3) TRUSTS.—A trust shall not be treated as an asset by reason of being a beneficial owner of a foreign entity for purposes of determining fair market value.

(d) ELECTION NOT TO HAVE SECTION 877A EFFECTIVE..

An individual may elect not to have the provisions of section 877A apply to any asset (on the applicable date) for its fair market value. Such election shall apply only to property specified in the election and, once made, shall be irrevocable.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall apply only with respect to the first time the individual becomes either a citizen or resident of the United States.

SEC. 877A. Tax responsibilities of expatriation.

(1) application to long-term residents. The tax on expatriation would apply to long-term residents. A long-term resident would be an individual who has been a lawful permanent resident of the United States (i.e., a green card holder) in at least 8 of the prior 15 taxable years. For purposes of satisfying the 8-year threshold, taxable years for which such individual was a resident of another country under a treaty tie-breaker rule would be disregarded. The tax on expatriation would apply to a long-term resident when (a) the individual is no longer treated as a lawful permanent resident of the United States as that term is defined in section 7701(b)(6), or (b) the individual is treated as a resident for a taxable year beginning after the enactment date by reason of the treaty tie-breaking provisions of a U.S. income tax treaty (and the individual does not elect to waive treaty benefits). Long-term residents would be treated as being domiciled in the United States for purposes of calculating the tax on expatriation.

2. FAIR MARKET VALUE BASIS ADJUSTMENT. An individual who has been a nonresident alien individual becomes a permanent resident of the United States would be required to provide security to ensure payment of the tax on expatriation. However, the amount of any transfer tax so imposed would be limited to the amount of income tax that would be due if the property were transferred for its fair market value immediately before the transfer or death, taking into account any remaining portion of the expatriate’s $600,000 exclusion. To make this tax avoidance unavailable, a taxpayer may elect to use the fair market value basis for its property of a trust, and the beneficiary elects to defer payment of the tax on expatriation with respect to the trust interest, a U.S. trustee of the trust would be required of a departing alien who intends to maintain U.S. residence. A. Allow deferral of tax on expatriation where estate taxes would be deferred. Payment of the tax on expatriation should be extended in circumstances that are similar to those in which estate taxes may be extended under current law. Therefore, the time for the payment of the tax on expatriation could be extended for an expatriate at the request of the IRS District Director that has complied with all U.S. income tax obligations. This provision would be modified to require any citizen or resident alien of the United States who becomes a nonresident alien to file a tax return within 90 days of the date that he ceases to be a U.S. citizen or resident, and pay the relevant tentative tax. No tax return would be required of a departing alien who intends to maintain U.S. residence. 5. TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS

A. Allow deferral of tax on expatriation where estate taxes would be deferred. Payment of the tax on expatriation should be extended in circumstances that are similar to those in which estate taxes may be extended under current law. Therefore, the time for the payment of the tax on expatriation could be extended for an expatriate at the request of the IRS District Director that has complied with all U.S. income tax obligations. This provision would be modified to require any citizen or resident alien of the United States who becomes a nonresident alien to file a tax return within 90 days of the date that he ceases to be a U.S. citizen or resident, and pay the relevant tentative tax. No tax return would be required of a departing alien who intends to maintain U.S. residence.

B. Method of providing security. If a taxpayer is required to provide security under this section, it is anticipated that in many cases adequate security could be provided by contributing assets to a trust (subject to the direction of the U.S. trustee under section 6159 to facilitate the collection of tax liens). Other mechanisms determined to be effective by the Secretary could be used, such as providing a bond or letter of credit. If an expatriating individual is the beneficiary of a trust, and the beneficiary elects to defer payment of the tax on expatriation with respect to the trust interest, a U.S. trustee of the trust would be required of a departing alien who intends to maintain U.S. residence. C. Exceptions for relinquishment of citizenship by certain minors

The tax on expatriation would not apply to an individual who resided in the United States for a substantial portion of the test of section 7701(b)(1)(A)(ii) for less than five years and relinquishes U.S. citizenship by the age of 18 years and 6 months.

D. Ownership of interests in trusts

The amount of any interest in a trust which is not determined under the general facts and circumstances rule of section 7701(f)(1)(A) will be allocated to the grantor if the grantor is a beneficiary of the trust. Otherwise, the ownership of the trust interest will be based on the rules of intestate succession. Unless otherwise prescribed by the applicable rules of intestate succession will be the rules under the Uniform Probate Code as promulgated by the American College of Trust and Estate Counsel.

E. Coordination with estate and gift tax rules

The tax on expatriation would be allowed as a credit against U.S. estate or gift taxes to the extent that the property subject to the tax on expatriation is subsequently subject to the extent that the property subject to the tax on expatriation is subsequently subject to the tax on estates or gifts.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to introduce, along with Senator MOYNIHAN, a bill that would close a tax loophole that allows wealthy citizens who renounce their American citizenship to avoid paying their portion of the tab.

Mr. President, significant deficit reduction will be necessary to put our country back on the right track. However, until we close these special-interest tax loopholes for the few, we cannot ask for the shared sacrifice from the many that will be necessary to reduce the deficit.

S. 701. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to limit the interest deduction allowed corporations and to allow a deduction for dividends paid by corporations; to the Committee on Finance.

The EQUITY INCENTIVE ACT of 1985

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code to limit the interest deduction allowed corporations and to allow a deduction for dividends paid by corporations.

Our current system of taxation encourages American businesses to use debt, rather than equity, to provide needed financing. My bill would encourage firms to shift from greater debt to more equity financing by limiting the interest deduction allowed corporations and allowing a deduction for dividends paid by corporations.

My proposal would be revenue neutral, although in the long run it should add to revenue because it would help the economy.

I propose that, while 80 percent of interest payments remain deductible, 20 percent of the interest paid by the smallest corporations (including farm corporations) should be disallowed. And 50 percent of dividends should be deductible.

If a corporation borrows money to acquire another company or to buy equipment or for any other purpose, the interest on that debt is deductible, even though the debt can—and often does—put the corporation in a precarious position. But if the same corporation borrows money to pay dividends, there is no deduction. The tax laws favor debt.

That same corporation, if it cannot meet the payments of principal and interest, will have to sell itself or go bankrupt, neither of which are desirable goals. But if that corporation issues stock, and there is a downsizing in the economy, the only penalty the corporation will have to pay is that it cannot issue dividends. It can continue to thrive, survive, and be a productive part of our society.

Our tax laws have encouraged corporations and banks and law firms to make "the fast buck," rather than take the slow, constructive steps that are necessary to build their businesses and the economy of this Nation. I favor tax laws that give corporations deductions for research, for creating jobs, for adding to the productivity of the Nation.

My proposal would provide the incentive corporations need. It would encourage investment and help the growth of productivity. It would also help eliminate the excessive debt our country has accumulated, and it would go a long way toward strengthening the economy.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, Mr. President. It may need to be refined, but the idea is sound. I hope we can make it a part of the Tax Code.

S. 704. A bill to establish the Gambling Impact Study Commission; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

THE NATIONAL GAMBLING STUDY COMMISSION ACT

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would establish an 18 month commission to review the impact gambling has had on State and local governments, and native American tribes. As these entities find themselves strapped for financial resources, many public officials and residents believe gambling can be an economic panacea.

Gambling is now one of the largest growth industries in the country. Legal wagering now totals almost $600 billion compared to $17.3 billion in 1974, according to the last—and only—national gambling study released in 1976 by the Commission on the Review of the National Policy Toward Gambling.

Federal policy on gambling should not be a moral one, rather it should be a practical one. Gambling is a matter of personal choice, and I have no problem with individuals who enjoy and are able to play the lottery or the slots. But I am concerned with the substantial costs to individuals, families, and society. Legalized gambling can lead to problem and pathological gambling, deterioration of family relationships, lost work productivity, unpaid taxes, bankruptcy, and higher crime rates, and increased costs to the criminal justice system.

On the other hand, legalized gambling offers the promise of economic development, tourism, increased jobs and tax revenues, which is extremely appealing to State, local and tribal governments that compete with one another for financial resources.

While State governments have primary responsibility for regulating gambling, the scope of gaming has broadened to a national level in recent years. I am introducing the Gambling...

S. 707. A bill to shift financial responsibility for providing welfare assistance and medical care to welfare-related medicaid individuals to the States in exchange for the Federal Government providing financial responsibility for providing certain elderly low-income individuals and non-elderly low-income disabled individuals with benefits under the medicaid program under title XVIII of the Social Security Act and long-term care benefits under a new Federal program established under title XIX of such act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

THE WELFARE AND MEDICAID RESPONSIBILITY EXCHANGE ACT OF 1995

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a revision of the “Welfare and Medicaid Responsibility Exchange Act of 1995” with my colleague Senator BROWN. This legislation incorporates the changes which I indicated would be forthcoming when we introduced the “swap” legislation earlier this year.

The basic principle embodied in both this legislation and the earlier proposal is that true reform will occur only when there is a clear delineation of responsibilities between the federal and state governments.

The legislation we are introducing today shifts to the states responsibility for the nation’s largest welfare programs—Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children (WIC), Food Stamps, and the AFDC portion of Medicaid. In exchange, the Federal Government will assume responsibility for that portion of the Medicaid program designed to provide acute care and long-term care to elderly and disabled Americans.

Currently, the overlapping regulation and dual administration of the AFDC and Medicaid programs, in particular, has resulted in a significant lack of accountability. In contrast, this legislation makes a clear-cut decision about who is responsible for the programs, who will finance them, who will make key decisions, and who will be responsible for the outcomes.

This legislation will allow both the States and the Federal Government to build a more cohesive safety net for the populations each sector is serving. At the end of a five-year transition period during which the States will be freed from the vast majority of restrictive Federal regulations, the States will have complete autonomy for designing welfare programs that serve low-income individuals—without Federal mandates, but with their own money at stake.

The Federal Government will be able to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) Medicaid program—a program which now consumes 70 percent of Medicaid costs yet serves only 30 percent of the Medicaid population—by better coordinating long-term care services for elderly and disabled Medicaid recipients, by promoting competition, and by allowing these individuals to have a broader choice of private health plans. To reduce the reliance on Medicaid, the legislation also includes tax incentives for the purchase of private long-term-care insurance and long-term care services, and standards for long-term care insurance. These provisions are similar to those contained in legislation which was introduced earlier this year by Senator COHEN.

I would like to highlight some of the other key components of this revised swap legislation:

State responsibilities: As in the earlier swap legislation (S. 140), the states will assume full costs for the AFDC, WIC, and Food Stamp programs. In addition, however, the states also will assume responsibility for providing transitional Medicaid services for Medicaid recipients (non-elderly and non-disabled individuals). This population represents about 30 percent of current Medicaid expenditures.

Federal responsibilities: Instead of assuming the full cost of the Medicaid program, under the revised legislation the federal government will assume financial responsibility for the “SSI-related Medicaid” program (elderly and disabled individuals). This group represents the remaining 70 percent of Medicaid costs.

Five-year transition period: The revised legislation still contains a five-year transition period during which states will have freedom to design low-income assistance programs and time to build the infrastructure to support these programs. During this period, an independent Commission will work with Congress to develop the specific provisions of the federal Medicaid program for elderly and disabled individuals. Also, the federal government will continue to provide funding to states during this period so that no state will suffer significant losses of funding.

State maintenance-of-effort: During the program, states must spend the funds made available by the swap and any money previously used as a state match for AFDC, food stamps, WIC, and AFDC-related Medicaid, to provide cash and non-cash assistance to low-income individuals and families. Unlike S. 140, however, the states may direct up to 15 percent of these funds annually to savings or other uses.

Medicaid during the transition: Under the revised legislation, federal Medicaid benefits and coverage requirements for children will be frozen at 1995 levels during the transition. Beyond that, however, the states will be given significant freedom to redesign the AFDC-related Medicaid program without applying for federal waivers.

At the end of the transition period: Under the revised legislation, Congress must determine at the end of five years whether to continue this arrangement or, instead, to grant the states complete financial responsibility to run their own welfare and low-income medical care programs. If this complete swap goes into effect, states that experience a significant loss of federal funds and have the greatest need for public services will be eligible for a targeted grant program.

Mr. President, if I am serious about returning substantial authority, autonomy, and responsibility to state and local governments; if we are serious about rejecting the “one-size-fits-all” approach to income support programs which has frustrated those who have sought innovative solutions; and if we are serious about breaking the cycle of dependence that has frayed the current social welfare system; then I believe we must make systemic changes that will have a profound and long-lasting impact on the way services are delivered to needy Americans. We must cross the threshold from a Washington that simply shares power with the states to a Washington that actually surrender power.

This legislation goes a long way toward achieving that goal. I hope my colleagues will join me in working toward its passage.

By Mr. NICKLES:

S. 708. A bill to repeal section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

THE ELECTRIC UTILITY RATEPAYERS ACT

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I introduce legislation to repeal section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (“PURPA”).

Section 210 of PURPA is no longer in the public interest. It is costing consumers billions of dollars in higher electric bills. It is interfering with the increasingly competitive wholesale market for electricity. It has been overtaken by changes in energy policy, particularly the transmission access and PUHCA reform provisions of the Energy Policy Act of 1992. It is no longer needed to promote a once-fledgling independent power industry. In short, it is time to repeal section 210 of PURPA.

Enacted in 1978, PURPA was one of several laws created by President Carter to address the energy crisis. All involved heavy government interference in the marketplace; all but PURPA have since been repealed.

PURPA was created to stimulate the construction of non-conventional electric powerplants, referred to by PURPA as a qualifying facility (QF). A QF can be a cogeneration powerplant of less than 30 megawatts capacity, or a small power production facility of less than 80 megawatts. A cogeneration powerplant is a facility which produces heat along with electric power. with electric power. A small power production facility is as a renewable driven electric power generator, such as a windmill, a biomass or waste-fueled powerplant, a geothermal generator, a solar power facility, or a hydroelectric dam.

Section 210 of PURPA encourages QFs in two ways. First it requires electric utilities to purchase the power they produce—whether or not it is needed to satisfy load requirements—electric utilities to pay an avoided cost price for the electricity purchased from the QF—which may or may not bear any relationship to actual market price.

When PURPA was enacted, everyone thought that QFs would benefit primarily unconventional power generating facilities, such as solar, geothermal, wind, and waste. These were unproven technologies at the time, and even with the host of benefits provided by PURPA plus tax incentives, it was not clear that they could ever be profitable. Instead, PURPA has primarily benefited the more traditional turbine-powered cogenerators. According to data from the Edison Electric Institute, more than three-fourths of installed QF generation capacity are cogenerators. Small power producers—solar, geothermal, wind and waste—account for less than one-fourth of installed QF generation capacity.

PURPA was also enacted on the assumption that it would not increase the price of electricity to consumers. Congress thought that it had guarded against this by limiting the price of QF electric that it would avoid including the price that the electric utility would have incurred had it generated the electricity itself or had it purchased it from someone else. But it did not work out that way. The Edison Electric Institute estimates that nationwide PURPA will add $38 billion to the future price of electricity, calculated in net present value. This continues to occur for several reasons.

First, in many instances PURPA’s avoided cost rate is being based on fuel price projections which often prove to be wildly wrong. Second, several States are setting the avoided cost rate above true avoided cost in order to encourage QFs. QFs are viewed as being socially desirable, even if not the cheapest source of power. The FERC has recently acknowledged that over the years it has given State public utility commissions wide latitude in implementing PURPA in order to maximize the development of QFs. Third, environmental adders continue to be included in the avoided cost rate to promote certain types of QF facilities. This further increases the price of QF power above avoided cost. Finally, because PURPA requires QF power to be purchased whether or not it is needed, utility-owned generation will continue to be idled, which someone has to pay for. Thus, unless we repeal PURPA section 210, this will continue for new QF contracts.

Mr. President, some will argue that section 210 ought to be retained because it fosters competition in the wholesale power marketplace, but that is not true. The essence of competition is allowing choice, not mandating what must be purchased. Moreover, there are other key reasons why the wholesale electric market has become competitive. They include the following: First, state public utility commissions have required their utilities to become more competitive. Second, Congress opened the wholesale market to all electric generators through transmission access and PUHCA reform. Third, and most importantly, the market itself denies everyone the luxury of avoiding competition. Thus, the repeal of PURPA section 210 will not adversely affect competition.

Mr. President, while everyone agrees that renewable energy can and should play a role in the future energy mix, that should not be accomplished through PURPA’s mandated purchase requirement. Indeed, in this connection, I might note that there are other programs on the books to promote renewables. For example, section 1212 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 provides a renewable energy production incentive of 1.5 cents per kilowatt hour, subject to appropriations, for solar, wind, biomass, and geothermal powerplants. Section 1914 provides a tax credit of 1.5 cents per kilowatt hour for wind and closed-loop biomass. This is not subject to appropriations. Section 1916 provides a permanent extension of the energy investment credit for solar and geothermal properties.

Mr. President, I am a strong believer in contract predictability. The bill I am introducing does not abrogate existing contracts; they will continue to operate by their own terms. Section 4 of the bill specifically states that “Nothing in this Act abrogates any existing contract.”

Mr. President, it is clear the time has come to repeal section 210 of PURPA. It is distorting competition and it is hurting consumers. It is time to substitute the discipline of the market for price fixing. In short, it is time for PURPA section 210 to go. I urge my colleagues to join me in my efforts to update our energy policy to benefit consumers and our economy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 708
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assemled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This Act may be cited as “The Electric Utility Ratepayer Act.”

SEC. 2. FINDINGS. The Congress finds that—
(1) implementation of section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 results in many consumers paying excessive rates for electricity;
(2) the Energy Policy Act of 1992 gives producers of electricity additional access to the wholesale electric market through transmission access and exemption from the Public Utility Holding Company Act; and
(3) in light of the increasingly competitive wholesale electric marketplace being brought about by the Energy Policy Act of 1992, there no longer is any justification for section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978.

SEC. 3. REPEAL. Section 210 of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 824a-3) is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. TRANSITION. Nothing in this Act abrogates any existing contract.

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE. The provisions of this act are effective April 7, 1995.

By Mr. BOND (for himself and Mr. BRYAN):

S. 709. A bill to amend the Fair Credit Reporting Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

CONSUMER REPORTING REFORM ACT

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I join my colleague, Senator BRYAN, in introducing the Consumer Reporting Reform Act of 1995. We have spent several sessions of Congress in perfecting this legislation, and I expect this bill to enjoy wide bipartisan support. In particular, this legislation balances the needs of the consumer to have accurate credit information, while ensuring that the credit industry provides such information without the imposition of unreasonable regulatory burdens.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act is overdue for revision and reform. I know that we have all heard too many horror stories about inaccurate credit information and the inability of consumers to get the information corrected. The Fair Credit Reporting Act was written long before computer technology was as sophisticated as it is today. These technological advances have meant a drastic increase in the amount of information that can be kept and is kept on individuals. Current law simply does not adequately protect consumers.

For example, currently the law only requires that credit bureaus reinvestigate within a reasonable period of time. It was not uncommon for it to take months, even years, to get a credit report corrected and cleaned up. And even in cases where a consumer does succeed in getting the incorrect information removed or corrected, there is nothing to prevent the incorrect information from being put back on the credit report.

I believe that the single most important consumer protection provision in this legislation is the 30-day limit on the reinvestigation procedure. If the disputed information cannot be verified or is found to be inaccurate within 30 days, then it is corrected or removed from the credit report and cannot be reinserted without a notice to the consumer.
This is the cornerstone of the legislation—the most significant improvement over current law.

In addition, I realize that the credit bureaus have voluntarily instituted a 30-day standard in recent years, but there is no law behind it to hold them to it. I congratulate the credit bureaus for taking steps to make the system more accurate, but I feel that legislation is still needed. It was the threat of this legislation that has cleaned up the system, and I think we have an obligation to finish the job. This legislation, in particular, will address concerns about accuracy in the system and the need for consumer privacy.

I emphasize that I have met with many of my constituents to listen to their horror stories of trying to fix mistakes on their credit reports. They have met with many of the same obstacles that millions of other consumers have faced—months of waiting for their credit reports to be fixed, credit grantors who are unresponsive, and no one to talk to who will listen to their complaints. As you know, these problems are not new. I have been hearing about these problems for years and trying to find a way to address them. This legislation is designed to address these problems.

Because it traditionally takes a long time for the credit bureaus to respond and fix credit reports, the bill requires the process to be completed in 30 days. As I have said, if the information in the report cannot be verified by the creditor who submitted it within 30 days, it will be removed from the report. In addition, it cannot be reinserted later unless the consumer is notified.

When a consumer goes through the reinvestigation process with the credit bureau and the problem is still not fixed, our bill gives the consumer the right to sue the creditor who will not fix the information submitted to the credit bureau.

This bill also contains limited Federal preemption to ensure that there are uniform Federal standards to govern a number of procedural issues which are part of credit reporting and which will reduce the burdens on the credit industry from having to comply with a variety of different State requirements. For example, the bill preempts requirements regarding prescreening and information shared among affiliates, reinvestigation timetables, obsolescence time periods and certain disclosure forms.

In addition, the civil liability section makes it absolutely clear that there are only private causes of action against a furnisher after that furnisher has had an opportunity to reinvestigate and fix any mistakes.

I believe that this legislation is a well-designed bill that will benefit all parties benefit from this bill. The free flow of accurate information will help all sides by promoting good economic decisions in our free market economy.

Consumers get increased disclosure and a 30-day reinvestigation time period and the credit industry gets a limited Federal preemption, the ability to share information among affiliates, and broader prescreening abilities.

Mr. BOND today in introducing amendments to the Fair Credit Reporting Act. I want to again express my appreciation for the efforts of Senator BOND. I have enjoyed teaming up with him to get this legislation en-acted into law last Congress. Versions of this bill passed the Senate 87 to 10 and passed the House of Representatives on several occasions. Unfortunately because this came up at the end of the session, one Senator was able to get an amendment to this bill into law. I am confident we can get this legislation to the President’s desk this year.

This legislation is similar to the version that passed the Senate and House of Representatives last year. Senator Edwards and I have made some refinements but the guts of the bill are intact.

The heart of this legislation is the investigation process which is undertaken when a consumer discovers a mistake on his or her credit report. We all know that mistakes will occur when you are entering billions of pieces of data in computer banks every month. That is inevitable.

What is not inevitable is the frustration consumers experience getting these mistakes removed from their files. This bill requires credit bureaus and the businesses which supply information to verify it within 30 days or remove it from the consumers’ file. Thereby, the burden of proof is transferred from consumers to businesses to verify the accuracy of the information in a file.

I was struck by the testimony of Nevadans who were forced to jump through a series of hoops to prove that the information in their file was faulty. They spent countless hours on the telephone trying to track down information and to explain to credit bureaus what mistakes have been made. Through no fault of their own, these people were put through the ringer. This legislation should rectify this situation.

The bill also brings businesses who furnish information into the regulatory process. Without such a provision, bad actors can wreak havoc on the credit reporting system and on consumers. I would have preferred a higher standard of liability for these businesses but believe this is a good first step.

On this point, I must express my total disgust at the behavior of the J.C. Penney Co. In my entire career of public service, I have never seen a more disingenuous lobbying effort by any organization, and I will not soon forget it.

This legislation tries to craft a delicate balance on the issue of State pre-emption. Senator BOND and I are both former Governors so we take States’ rights very seriously. We have tried to avoid preempting those areas of this law which affect the operational efficiencies of businesses but do not harm consumers. Setting a national uniform standard for disclosure forms or time-tables, does not set the consumer movement back, yet should help the business community operate more efficiently.

I would like to put everyone on notice that I feel very strongly that we should not preempt States’ rights in the area of liability—particularly if we set a low-liability standard as we do in this bill. Certain members of the business community have and will continue to push to preempt this area of State law, but I will fight such efforts and will have to reconsider the merits of this bill, should I lose on this issue.

I believe the issues in this bill have been compromised and refined over several years of consideration and do not need much more massaging. They represent an equitable balance with benefits to both the consumers and businesses. I hope we can move this along swiftly. I urge my colleagues to support it.

By Mr. KERREY:

S. 710. A bill to promote interoperability in the evolving information infrastucture maximum competition, innovation, and consumer choice, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS INTEROPERABILITY ACT

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, earlier this week I came to the floor of the Senate to discuss my concerns relating to the pending Telecommunications Competition and Deregulation Act of 1995, S.652. I have been concerned that this bill does not do enough to promote competition and consumer choice. As we on Capitol Hill work to revamp the regulatory regimes governing the telephone and cable television companies of today, a much larger dynamic is taking hold in our country.

The digital age is upon us, and we must try to take this larger picture into view if we are to be truly effective in our efforts to pass telecommunications reform that will serve our country, not only today, but tomorrow, and for the years to come. We need to take this opportunity, not only to address the regulatory issues currently being discussed, but to think about what kind of world we want this digital age to create.

Today, I am introducing legislation, the Communications Interoperability Act of 1995, that I hope will stimulate a vigorous public debate on how we can best achieve a truly ubiquitous National Information Superhighway. I am Introducing this bill as a discussion vehicle, and welcome reactions or comments on this legislation from interested parties.

The National Information Superhighway, or National Information Infrastructure, as it is called, is evolving as we speak. This new digital age brings with a convergence of technology and vast new opportunities for Americans to gather and disseminate information. This NII pays no mind to the linchpin of our industry sectors but have existed in the past. The NII is a conglomeration of pieces, including various high-speed, interactive, narrow and broadband networks that exist today and will emerge tomorrow. It is the satellite, terrestrial, and wireless telecommunications that deliver content to homes, businesses, and other public and private institutions. The NII is a term that encompasses all the pieces and conveys a vision for a nationwide, invisible, seamless, dynamic web of transmission mechanisms, information appliances, content and people. This ubiquitous network of networks has the potential to improve the quality of life for all Americans—regardless of location, age, economic status, or physical handicap. However, this potential will only be realized if we have interoperability in our information infrastructure.

Interoperability is the ability of two or more systems to interact with one another. Interoperability allows diverse systems made by different vendors to communicate with each other so users do not have to make major adjustments to account for differences in products and services. Open interfaces at critical points of connection will allow interoperability to occur.

Interoperability will allow components of the NII to work together easily and transparently. A high school student in Nebraska will be able to use research facilities anywhere in the country, and discuss that research with students at distant schools. It will allow teachers in Nebraska to share information about experiences with other teachers around the country. If, while on vacation, a person becomes ill, a doctor in another State will be able to easily reach the family physician in Nebraska to consult and access complete medical records online.

Interoperability will make the NII accessible to everyone—both users and vendors. Users will not be limited to a particular vendor’s products. Vendors will be able to make their services available to anyone who wants to use them. A small business or entrepreneur in Nebraska will be able to fully realize their potential digitally because from their home office they will have the ability to easily reach customers across the Nation and around the world.

Interoperability also allows all Americans to benefit from information consumers and information providers. This means that a citizen in Lincoln, NE, will not only be able to access the vast amount of information using an information appliance of her choice, at the same time, she will also be able to publish her newsletter on fishing in Nebraska to interested readers wherever they reside.

Interoperability promotes competition among technologies, providers, and media, leading to the greatest number of choices, the lowest prices, and maximum innovation. Interoperability based on open interfaces, will help propel a global playing field for the future of communications. Rather than attempting to create or adapt regulations to ever changing technologies, open interfaces, and interoperability will help ensure access and competition by allowing new entrants into the marketplace.

Interoperability must be led by industry, but Congress can help by promoting the vision of an interoperable information infrastructure. Not suggesting that Government get involved setting standards or dictating what technologies the private sector should use. What I am suggesting is that we all have an interest in monitoring progress and facilitating the development of a system that will best serve American business, and American citizens.

Without interoperability, we will simply have pockets of information and services that will not be nearly as valuable because they will not be easily linked to other parts of the infrastructure. Interoperability will allow information to be transmitted between and among technologies, allowing for the most efficient distribution of services.

In some areas, wire lines or fiber optic cable may be dominant, while in other more rural areas we may need to rely on satellite and wireless technologies. Unless all these different parts of the system are interoperable, the digital age will divide us into information haves and have nots. I am concerned about the potential for rural States like mine to be left behind as the digital age charges forward.

The distinguished Senator from Maine introduced legislation earlier this week to promote competition and consumer choice in consumer electronics used in conjunction with the current cable system. Certainly an important piece of the overall infrastructure, but as the distinguished Senator pointed out in his introductory statement, this bill is only focused on one particular narrow communications. The legislation I am introducing today focuses on the bigger picture, providing a broader, over-arching vision for our digital information age.

By looking ahead, and providing some policy initiatives we can use this opportunity to address not only past and current regulatory issues, but to project some expectations for the future of communications. Expectations which include an information infrastructure that expands our educational system, expands commerce, improves the delivery of health care, and enhances participatory democracy.

I hope we will embrace this opportunity to herald the future.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 719

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION I. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Communications Interoperability Act of 1995.”

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the rapid convergence of communications, computing and video technologies holds the promise of bringing revolutionary new forms of information and other communications services to the American public;

(2) interoperability will promote competition among technologies, providers, and media, leading to the greatest choices, lowest prices, highest value, and maximum innovation;

(3) interoperability at key interfaces of the developing information infrastructure of the United States will ensure that existing and new components work together easily, efficiently, effectively, and economically;

(4) interoperability will help ensure that the information and communications infrastructure of the future will be accessible to the broadest number of people, both users and vendors of products and services;

(5) open interfaces at critical connection points are essential to achieving interoperability and the smooth transfer of information throughout the system; and

(6) the development of an interoperable information infrastructure based on open interfaces is in the interest of all Americans, and the Federal Government should act as a facilitator to achieve this goal.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) INTEROPERABILITY.—The term “interoperability” means—

(A) the ability of two or more systems (such as devices, databases, networks, or technologies) to interact in concert with one another, in accordance with a prescribed method, to achieve a predictable result;

(B) the ability of diverse systems made by different vendors to communicate with each other so that users do not have to make major adjustments to account for differences in products or services; and

(C) compatibility among systems at specified levels of interaction, including physical compatibility.

The compatibility described in subparagraph (C) should be achieved through open interface specifications.

(2) INTERFACE SPECIFICATIONS.—The term “interface specifications” means the technical parameters for the manner in which systems, products, and services communicate with each other and may be limited to the information necessary to achieve interoperability, leaving the implementation and remaining product design to the creative abilities of competitive suppliers.

SEC. 4. PROMOTING INTEROPERABILITY.

The Federal Communications Commission, and other appropriate Federal Government agencies (such as the National Institute of Standards and Technology), shall monitor the voluntary industry standards processes, and assist private sector standards bodies in the identification and promotion of open and interoperable interface specifications as needed.

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. ABRAHAM, and Mr. GRASSLEY): S.J. Res. 32. Joint resolution expressing the concern of the Congress regarding certain recent remarks that unfairly and inaccurately maligned the integrity of the Nation's law enforcement officers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution expressing the Nation's gratitude to its law enforcement officers, and ask that it be passed by unanimous consent.

Every day, the brave men and women of our Nation's police forces put their lives on the line as they patrol our streets to keep the rest of use safe. These fine public servants are far too often told that stands between the rule of law and the tyranny of crime and chaos.

The job of a law enforcement officer is increasingly dangerous. Across America, 70 law enforcement officers were murdered in the line of duty in 1993. Assaults on officers are commonplace. Yet these men and women go out every day and perform their jobs with courage and integrity.

Attacks from criminals, however, are not the only assaults out law enforcement officers are suffering from today. They are also being victimized by malicious, mean-spirited, and misleading verbal attacks from those who should know better.

Officers daily put their lives in jeopardy to prevent crime, and to investigate crimes that have been committed, in order to bring the guilty to justice. They are expected to act perfectly with often imperfect information, and must ensure both the safety of the community and the integrity of the criminal justice process.

The Nation's police officers perform these tasks admirably. And on those rare and regrettable occasions when they falter, it is the police who are most aggrieved, seeking to redress the failure to uphold the public's trust. They recognize that without that trust, they cannot enforce the laws. So we forget the faith with which the police attempt to discharge their duty. Whenever the public is led to believe without cause that their law enforcement officers are less than true to their oaths “to serve and protect,” the rule of law is endangered. For any society in which the law is in disrepute, or its fair enforcement in doubt, is only a step away from a society without law.

America owes a debt of gratitude to its police officers that it really cannot repay. However, Congress can and should take this opportunity to acknowledge that debt, and express the American People's thanks for the continuing service of its law enforcement heroes.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this joint resolution.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today, I and Senator HATCH are introducing a joint resolution to express the concern of the Congress regarding some recent remarks that inaccurately malign the integrity of the Nation's law enforcement officers.

It has been my privilege to work closely with our Nation's State and local police officers throughout my career. And, whether I have been dealing with officers who protect citizens in one of Delaware's smallest towns or those who patrol our Nation's largest cities, I have been impressed by the level of honor, commitment and integrity they have consistently upheld. Indeed, the evidence is that vast majority of our Nation's law enforcement officers are conscientious public servants who have a job where they must literally be willing to lay their life on the line everyday they go to work.

Let me be clear, I do not being to claim that there are no “bad apples” among the Nation's 540,000 police officers--as in every profession, there are “bad apples” who violate the law. But, this does not justify any sweeping indictment of the ethics of the entire police profession, any more than a case of malpractice by a doctor justifies sweeping criticism of the entire medical profession.

Because I believe it is simply unfair to make allegations about a whole profession based on the actions of a tiny minority and because I have enjoyed such a close and, I hope, mutually respectful relationship with our Nation's police officers, I am introducing this legislation so that the Congress is on record as recognizing the integrity of our Nation's police profession. I am happy to be joined by Senator HATCH on this measure, and I look forward to other Senators joining us in this effort.

The morale of our Nation's police officers is dependent upon the respect they feel from all of us, such as the case for any profession. This resolution is but one of many chances the Senate will have this year to indicate our confidence in our Nation’s police. Later this year, I expect that the Senate will be faced with legislation that will nullify the Violent Crime Control Act of 1994 that will add 100,000 more police to our streets. Those who believe that our Nation's police do not live up to the highest ethical standards may oppose this effort to add 100,000 officers to their ranks. But, those of us who know that the overwhelming majority of our police meet these high standards, must protect this effort to add 100,000 state and local police to America’s neighborhoods.

I admit that the resolution I introduce today offers but some small measure of rhetorical support. The real support for our Nation's police will be shown by continuing our commitment to add 100,000 more officers to the ranks of those who protect us all. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Dodd (and Lieberman) Amendment No. 551
(Ordinary to lie on the table.)
Mr. DODD (for himself and Mr. LIEBERMAN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to amendment No. 420 proposed by Mr. HATFIELD to the bill H.R. 1158, supra; as follows:

Amendment No. 551
At the appropriate place, insert the following:

Sec. 2. Sense of Congress concerning disaster relief.
(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—
(1) there have been a number of costly natural disasters in recent years, including flooding of the Midwest and California, hurricanes in Hawaii and Florida, and earthquakes along the west Coast;
(2) scientists at the United States Geological Survey and other prominent scientists predict the occurrence of several major natural disasters in coming years;
(3) if an earthquake equal in magnitude to the earthquake that recently hit Kobe, Japan, occurred in the United States, direct losses could exceed the total net worth of the entire United States property insurance industry;
(4) (A) taxpayers have paid over $45,000,000,000 during the last 10 years in disaster assistance; and
(B) studies estimate that the cost for just 1 major future natural disaster could run as high as $50,000,000,000 to $80,000,000,000; and
(5) the Federal Government must reform the current method of Federal financing costs associated with natural disaster relief and develop and implement a financing mechanism that does not add to the deficit or rescind funds that have already been committed to other purposes.
(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that Congress should—
(1) establish a disaster relief fund financed through a dedicated revenue source that provides sufficient reserves to respond adequately to extraordinary and catastrophic disasters;
(2) encourage sensible, cost-effective mitigation programs to prevent disaster losses before the losses occur;
(3) strengthen efforts to encourage persons living in areas at high risk of natural disaster to purchase private insurance; and
(4) encourage the insurance industry to establish privately funded pool to spread the risk of natural disasters and minimize the risk of catastrophic losses.

TITLE IV—MEXICAN DEBT DISCLOSURE
SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE.
This title may be cited as the “Mexican Debt Disclosure Act of 1995”.

SEC. 402. FINDINGS.
The Congress finds that—
(1) Mexico is an important neighbor and trading partner of the United States;
(2) on January 31, 1995, the President ap-national Settlements, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Bank of Canada, and several Latin American countries;

(4) the involvement of the exchange stabilization fund and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System means that United States taxpayer funds will be used in the assistance effort to Mexico;
(5) assistance provided by the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the Inter-American Development Bank may require additional United States contributions of taxpayer funds to those entities;
(6) the immediate use of taxpayer funds and the anticipated involvement of future United States contributions of taxpayer funds necessitates congressional oversight of the disbursement of funds; and
(7) this assistance to Mexico is contingent on the pursuit of sound economic policy by the Government of Mexico.

SEC. 405. TERMINATION OF REPORTING RE-QUIREMENT.
The requirements of sections 403 and 404 shall terminate on the date that the Government of Mexico has paid all obligations with respect to swap facilities and guarantees of Mexican securities made available under the program approved by the President on January 31, 1995.

currencies to Mexico, or a swap of the exchange stabilization fund or by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may be ex-

THE THEATER MISSILE DEFENSE ACT OF 1995

WARNER (AND OTHERS)  AMENDMENT NO. 568

(Ordered referred to the Committee on Armed Services.)

Mr. WARNER (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. LOTT, Mr. COHEN, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. KYL, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. COCHRAN, and Mr. SMITH) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by the title III of the bill (S. 383) to provide for the establishment of policy on the deployment by the United States of an antiballistic missile system and of advanced theater missile defense systems; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE III—DEVELOPMENT AND DEPLOYMENT OF THEATER MISSILE DEFENSES

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Theater Missile Defense Act of 1995.”

SEC. 202. POLICY ON DEVELOPMENT AND DEPLOYMENT OF THEATER MISSILE DEFENSES.

It is the policy of the United States that advanced theater missile defenses should be developed and deployed as soon as possible in order to provide protection for United States military forces stationed or deployed in foreign theaters of operation and for allied forces participating in operations with those United States military forces.

SEC. 203. POLICY ON USE OF FUNDS TO LIMIT THEATER MISSILE DEFENSES UNDER THE ABM TREATY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that a missile defense system, system upgrade, or system component capable of countering modern theater ballistic missiles has not been tested in an ABM mode nor been given capabilities under such treaty, to research, development, testing, or deployment of a theater missile defense system, a theater missile defense system upgrade, or a theater missile defense system component; or

(2) taking any other action to provide for the ABM Treaty, or any limitation or obligation under such treaty, to research, development, testing, or deployment of a theater missile defense system, a theater missile defense system upgrade, or a theater missile defense system component.

(c) COVERED THEATER MISSILE DEFENSES.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), subsection (b) applies with respect to each missile defense system, missile defense system upgrade, and missile defense system component that is capable of countering modern theater ballistic missiles.

(2) Exception.—Paragraph (1) does not apply with respect to a missile defense system, missile defense system upgrade, or missile defense system component when such system, system upgrade, or system component has been field tested against a ballistic missile which, in that test, exceeded (A) a range of 3,500 kilometers, or (B) a velocity of 5 kilometers per second.

SEC. 204. ADDITIONAL COMMITMENT.

While the other provisions of this title specifically address our growing threat of theater ballistic missiles, Congress also hereby affirms its commitment to ultimately provide the United States with the capability to defend the people and territory of the United States from attack by ballistic missiles.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today, in continuation of my longstanding efforts—working with many others—on missile defense, to introduce the Theater Missile Defense Act of 1995. I am pleased to have as original cosponsors of this legislation Senator DOLE, Senator THURMOND, Senator LOTT, Senator COHEN, Senator NICKLES, Senator KYL, Senator STEVENS, Senator COCHRAN, and Senator SMITH.

Mr. President, few would argue with the compelling need we are facing for defenses against the growing threat of attack from theater ballistic missiles. Indeed, poll after poll has shown that the overwhelming majority of Americans believe that we already possess a highly effective capability to defend forward-deployed troops—and indeed the United States—from ballistic missile attack today are only slightly better than they were during the Gulf war.

Iraqi SCUD missile attacks during Desert Storm brought home to all Americans the vulnerability of United States forward-deployed troops to short-range ballistic missile attacks from third world nations. Although the Iraqi SCUD’s were rudimentary, comparatively inexpensive, weapons which were not considered militarily significant, the brought havoc on allied operations, alerts disrupted the front lines as well as the rear echelons. And on February 25, 1991, an Iraqi SCUD missile attack that struck a United States military barracks in Saudi Arabia represented the largest single American casualties during Desert Storm.

Currently, over 30 nations have short-range ballistic missiles. And 77 nations have cruise missiles in their inventories. The defenses being developed to counter theater ballistic missiles will also incorporate some capabilities to counter cruise missiles. In addition, the Department of Defense is actively pursuing a dedicated effort to develop defenses which are focused specifically on the growing cruise missile threat.

As the U.S. military demonstrated, the threat such missiles pose to the men and women of the U.S. Armed Forces is real, immediate, and growing. We must accelerate the development and deployment of highly effective theater missile defense systems to protect our troops. We owe it to the brave men and women who serve in uniform to provide them with the most advanced defense systems which we are technologically and financially capable of producing. Work on such defenses should not in any way be constrained by restrictive and erroneous interpretations of the ABM Treaty—a 23-year-old treaty with the former Soviet Union. I would also like to point out to my colleagues that the restrictions of the treaty currently hamper the defense efforts of only two countries—the United States and Russia.

To the extent we allow the U.S. to be “handcuffed” by the limits of this Treaty, the U.S. fails to utilize its full scientific potential while other nations are free to pursue their defenses against ballistic missile attack unrestricted by this treaty.

Mr. President, the ABM Treaty was never intended to limit or restrict the development of defenses. The administration concemes this point. In addition, I have had the opportunity to discuss this issue recently with two individuals who were intimately involved in the ABM Treaty negotiations. John Foster and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. They both agreed that defenses against theater missiles were never contemplated during the ABM Treaty negotiations. According to Secretary Kissinger, the focus of the negotiations was on defenses against intercontinental ballistic missiles because “those were the only systems that were in existence.”

But, unfortunately, this administration is pursuing a policy—and is in the process of negotiating some type of legal obligation, or “demarcation agreement” with the Russians—that would allow ABM Treaty limitations to restrict our theater missile defense efforts. Indeed, an administration delegation headed by Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott left last evening for Moscow to discuss a number of issues, possibly including the demarcationation talks. I note that Deputy Secretary of Defense Deutch dropped off of this trip, in part because of concerns expressed by a number of Members of Congress that he intended to conclude a demarcation agreement with the Russians while in Moscow.

I hope that the submission of this legislation today will send a clear and unequivocal signal to the administration, and particularly to that delegation headed to Moscow, that the Senate will not sit idly by and allow the administration to sacrifice our theater missile defense capabilities in the interest of concluding a deal with the Russians. I hope the Russians will come to the realization that they need effective, advanced theater missile defenses as much as the U.S. does, and that they will not damage the U.S. military with a demarcation that is not in the best interests of either country.
Mr. President, in the Missile Defense Act of 1991, the Congress urged the President to pursue discussions with the parties to the ABM Treaty to clarify the demarcation line between theater missile defenses and antiballistic missile defenses for the purposes of the ABM Treaty. Those negotiations should have been undertaken for the sole purpose of making clear that theater missile defense systems were not limited by the ABM Treaty.

Unfortunately, those negotiations are seriously off-track. Recently, I joined with a number of Senators in sending two letters to President Clinton expressing our concern that the administration had indicated a willingness to accept significant performance limitations on our theater missile defense systems, and urging a suspension of those negotiations. Despite these clear expressions of congressional concern, subsequent meetings that I and other Republican Senators have had with administration officials in recent weeks have confirmed that the administration is intent on concluding an agreement with the Russians that would limit the technological potential of the United States and deny it the deployment of the most effective theater missile defense system we can build. Who is willing to stand up and say we owe less to our armed forces?

In addition, it has become clear to be that the administration does not contemplate submitting any such “demar- cation agreement” to the Senate for advice and consent, as required by legislation which I sponsored to last year’s Defense authorization bill. I am troubled that the Senate will not be allowed a role in an international agreement that will impose major new limitations and obligations on the United States.

It is time for the Congress to act to ensure the development of the most capable, cost-effective theater missile defense architecture to protect our forward-deployed forces.

Therefore, I am submitting this amendment today, together with my cosponsors, to prohibit the obligation or expenditure of any funds by any official of the Federal Government for the purpose of applying the ABM Treaty, or any limitation or obligation under that Treaty, to the research, development, testing or deployment of a theater missile defense system, upgrade or component. The standard which we have used in this legislation to define the demarcation between antiballistic missile defenses which are limited by the ABM Treaty, and theater missile defenses which are limited by the ABM Treaty, and theater missile defenses which are not, is similar to the one used by the administration at the beginning of the demarcation negotiations—that is, a missile defense system which is defined as a missile defense system which has been field-tested against a ballistic missile which, in that test, exceeded: First, a range of more than 3,500 kilometers, or second a maximum velocity of more than 5 kilometers per second. Put simply, if a missile defense system has not field-tested in an ABM mode—and therefore has not demonstrated a field-tested capability to counter intercontinental ballistic missiles—it should not be limited in any by the ABM Treaty.

In addition, this amendment declares that it is the policy of the United States that “advanced theater missile defenses should be developed and deployed as soon as possible in order to provide protection for United States military forces deployed in foreign theaters of operation and for allied forces participating in operations with those United States forces.”

I don’t know of anyone who would disagree with that goal. We should proceed expeditiously with this important mission, and remove the “handcuffs” from our theater missile defense efforts. We should not permit the Russians to have a veto over theater missile defense systems which are vitally needed by our armed forces.

Mr. President, I want to make clear that this amendment, narrowly drawn to the immediate issue of theater missile defenses, should in no way be interpreted as implying any lessening of the commitment of the co-sponsors to a national missile defense. Indeed, section 4 of the amendment states that Congress hereby affirms its commitment to ultimately provide the United States with the capability to defend the people and territory of the United States from attack by ballistic missiles.

In this amendment we have dealt in more detail with theater missile defense systems because it is those systems which are in a more advanced stage of development, and which are currently being jeopardized by limitations which the administration may soon sign up to with the Russians.

We are acting along with this legislation to either reaffirm or reject the ABM Treaty. That is a debate for another day.

I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

countries, but would only support sales of defense articles to a select number of countries. It would allow American defense companies and workers to compete on a level playing field for legitimate defense sales that promote our National interests.

Since the height of the Reagan build-up in 1985, the defense budget has been declining every year. In particular, the Department of Defense has reduced the procurement of weapons systems that our defense industry now builds to defend our Nation’s interests. As a result of these cuts in procurement, large parts of our defense industrial base are closing their doors. Today, we have concerns about the ammunition industrial base, the small arms industrial base, the shipbuilding industrial base, the tank industrial base, and the helicopter industrial base. As the defense committees look at the defense industrial base, we know that we will need these manufacturing capabilities in the future, and we must do all we can to find ways to preserve these assets.

One way we can help preserve this important industrial base is to allow defense companies to use export financing similar to that available to every American exporter in the United States. And that is what my amendment would do.

The United States currently dominates the international arms market. In my mind, our dominance in this market is a result of the superiority of our weapons, as demonstrated in Operation Desert Storm, and the sharp reduction in arms exports from the former Soviet Union. But we still have strong competition in the international arms market. Today, American defense exporters face stiff and increasing challenges from many of our European allies who have access to Government-supported export financing. American companies do not compete on a level playing field and this may erode U.S. marketshare at precisely a time when our own modernization program is in budgetary jeopardy. This situation is what my amendment seeks to address.

My amendment would give the Secretary of Defense the discretion to create a self-financing program to extend Government-backed loan guarantees for the export of defense articles and services. The buyer or the seller would pay full cover of the Federal Government’s exposure cost of the loans. The list of eligible countries would be limited to NATO allies, major non-NATO allies, the emerging democratic states in Central Europe and members of the Asian Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC). Two years after enactment, my amendment calls for the President to issue a report that assesses the costs and benefits of the program and that recommends modifications.

Mr. President, my amendment has strong bipartisan support but I know some Members of the Senate oppose this type of program. I am open to any suggestion for improving this amendment, but this amendment represents a solid start for addressing this issue. The important point is that our defense companies and workers, the men and women who won the cold war for the United States, need our help to compete in the international market. No one argues that defense exports alone will not make up for the effects of a 70-percent reduction in the defense procurement budget over the last 10 years. By providing this export guarantee authority, however, we have a chance to help preserve at least some of the most important segments of the industrial base that our country will surely need in the future. We will also have a chance to save good, high-paying American jobs, and we owe it to ourselves, and to our future, to let our workers enjoy the benefits of a level playing field in the international defense marketplace.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to H.R. 1240, the Sexual Crimes Against Children Prevention Act of 1995. H.R. 1240 seeks to enhance prison time as well as fines for child pornographers who use computers to trade in child pornography. I believe that this penalty enhancement is an important measure and the Grassley-Hatch-Thurmond amendment merely clarifies what the House intended to do in order to remove any possible confusion about the future.

Computers are now the preferred business forum for child pornographers. Due to modern technology, predatory pedophiles sell, purchase and swap the most vile depictions of children engaged in the most outrageous types of sexual conduct.

Simply put, child pornography on computers is dangerous and must be stopped. In the past, whenever, State or Federal law enforcement agents arrested a child pornographer, or ring of child pornographers, they seized and then destroyed the child pornography. This kept child pornography out of the hands of child molesters and preserved the privacy of the children who had been so callously violated. But now, because of digital computer technology, it is nearly impossible to actually destroy child pornography. That means there will be more child pornography for child molesters and less protection for abused children. We in Congress must do something.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senators Grassley and Thurmond in offering the Sex Crimes Against Children Prevention Act of 1995.

Obscenity is a plague upon the moral fabric of this great Nation. It poisons the minds and spirits of our youth and fuels the growth of organized crime. Child pornography, a particularly pernicious evil, is something that no civilized society can tolerate.

To this end, I am introducing legislation to increase the penalties imposed under sections 2251 and 2252 of title 18 of the United States Code, upon those who exploit and degrade the weakest and most helpless members of our society, our children. Those persons who choose to engage in sexual exploitation of children, whether to satisfy prurient desire or to gain filthy lucre, must be made to feel the full weight of the law and suffer a punishment commensurate with the seriousness of their offense.

In addition to increasing the penalties for distributing child pornography or otherwise sexually exploiting children, I am pleased to note that this legislation helps our law enforcement efforts in this area. By keeping pace with changing technology by increasing the penalties for the use of computers in connection with the distribution of child pornography. As an ever-increasing percentage of Americans, and especially our young people, enter the information superhighway, it is critical that we act to ensure that this highway is not littered with the debris of child pornography flows.

SEXUAL CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN PREVENTION

GRASSLEY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 595

Mr. THOMPSON (for Mr. GRASSLEY for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. THURMOND) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 1240) to combat child pornography by enhancing the penalties for certain sexual crimes against children; as follows:

The bill also directs the Sentencing Commission to assess the impact of these increased penalties and to report to Congress any necessary modifications in the law. The Sentencing Commission will also be required to survey the recidivism rates for those who commit sex crimes against children and analyze the effect of treatment for those offenders.

I commend my colleagues from Iowa, Senator Grassley, and South Carolina, Senator Thurmond, for joining me in introducing this bill. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

MANY OBSTACLES TO BALANCING OF BUDGET
• Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the more thoughtful observers of the political scene through the years has been Melvin Brooks, now retired as a professor at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale.

Recently, he had an op ed piece in the Southern Illinoisan, a newspaper published in Carbondale, IL. He discusses the many obstacles to balancing the budget and why it is important to the future of our country.

His concluding paragraph says it all: “Failure to balance Federal budgets without such an amendment appear almost certain and the consequences of failure to pay as we go are virtually certain. Few people seem to realize how many shattering consequences are almost inevitable.”

Mr. President, I ask that the Melvin Brooks op ed piece be reprinted in the RECORD.

The piece follows:
[From the Southern Illinoisan]

MANY OBSTACLES TO BALANCING OF BUDGET
(By Melvin Brooks)

The obstacles to balancing the federal budget are indeed formidable, some believe too formidable to overcome.

One obstacle is the behavior of members of Congress, presidents, other politicians, and special interests seeking to influence national policies. Most members of Congress want to be re-elected, have good mental ability and are politically knowledgeable. They know (or at least think they know) how to obtain enough votes to get re-elected.

One way is to tell voters what they like to hear regardless of logical inconsistency, and by all means avoid disagreeing with the favorite prejudices of their constituents. This they do.

It seems like increasing majorities of candidates for Congress criticize big government and promise to make large reductions in government spending, reduce taxes, balance the federal budget, yet prevent any reductions in Social Security or in military expenditures in order to keep the United States strong.

This is, of course, a plausible combination and they know it. Yet they also know that if they omit some of these promises, opponents who make all of them are likely to obtain more votes.

They also know that if they support the policies desired by special interests, especially those strong in their districts or states, they are likely to receive campaign contributions which otherwise would probably be given to an opponent.
And the more money a candidate has the more he can spend on television and thus increase his chances of winning. The temptation to play along with special interest groups is great, even though it will tend to increase national deficits.

The other huge obstacle to reducing federal deficits is the apparently high percentage of those taxes that are not well-informed about federal financial problems and/or are easily influenced by political propaganda. That includes people who pay little attention to federal government activities, and those who fail to vote because “all politicians are dishonest” or “my vote won’t make any difference” make it easier for the candidate with the most to spend to get elected.

Of course the special interest groups which spend large sums on campaign contributions (in effect a form of bribery) and seek by special privileges from the government, are a very important cause of our inability to eliminate deficits. As long as they can prevent comprehensive campaign finance reforms such as those narrowly defeated by the Republicans and some moderate Democrats a year or two ago, expect little change.

Other causes of budget deficits are the failure of our educational system and the mass media to educate the public better concerning basic political functioning.

Can politicians who get elected to high office really be blamed for our dangerously high and still growing national debt of nearly five trillion dollars? After all, even fewer of them were elected by more votes than those who were defeated.

My answer is yes. Either most or many of them at times put their personal interests, the interests of their party and/or the interests of their key supporters ahead of the long-run best interests of the United States.

Let me illustrate with the issue of the extremely narrow defeat of the proposed balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

Leading Democrats charge that Congress can balance the budget any time there is the will to do it. They claim that whenever the Republicans control Congress they propose to achieve a balanced budget, then the Democrats will negotiate with them to achieve a balanced budget.

They know that the Republicans will not, probably cannot, do this. The President is still smarting over the way Republicans and Mountain State Democrats defeated the balanced budget amendment. If the amendment were adopted, Republicans might succeed in raiding Social Security funds so extensively that the system would be bankrupted when the baby boom generation retired. There are very good arguments against both of these extreme positions.

A reasonable compromise would be an excellent solution but was not seriously considered by either side. Apparently many Republicans and Democrats alike feared that the amendment could force them to make very unpopular cuts which might jeopardize retaining their positions in Congress.

Right-wing Republicans favor policies which could easily result in a bigger gap between rich and poor and even greater deficits as happened between 1981 and 1994. Many liberal Democrats point out the serious potential risks of passage of the proposed amendment to balance federal budgets. But these are only potential.

Failure to balance federal budgets without such an amendment is almost certain and dreadful consequences of failure to pay as we go are virtually certain. Few people seem to realize how many shattering consequences are almost inevitable.

HONORING MICHIGAN STATE UNIVERSITY BASKETBALL COACH JUD HEATHCOTE ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

- Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to a great man and a great head coach. Jud Heathcote of the Michigan State Spartans. After this season ends, players and fans of college basketball at Michigan State will have to learn to live without the institution that is Jud Heathcote. He will be sorely missed.

Jud Heathcote’s 340 wins in 19 seasons at MSU make him State’s all-time winningest coach. Jud passed the previous mark of 232 in February 1990. His teams hold the first through seventh-higher marks in MSU’s all-time single-season list. To top it off, Coach Heathcote’s Spartans won the NCAA championship in 1979 and won the Big Ten in 1978, 1979, and 1990.

As he retires, Jud, his wife Beverly, and their children Jerry, Carla, and Barbara can look back on a long-running, successful career. Jud capped off a very successful tenure as Head Coach at the University of Montana by serving as assistant coach of the U.S. Pan American team in 1975—a team which brought back the Gold Medal. Beginning at MSU in 1976, Coach Heathcote became Big Ten Coach of the Year by the 1977–78 season. He repeated this performance in 1985–86 and went on to become the National Association of Basketball Coaches’ Coach of the Year in 1989–90 and College Sports Magazines’s Coach of the Year in 1994–95.

Noted for his special expertise in coaching defense, Jud also produced at MSU a team that this year led the Big Ten in field goal percentage, and was ranked seventh nationally. His dedication to the game, his concern with the well-being of the players and the integrity of the MSU program and his personal warmth and decency all make him a candidate for coach of the year award.

We will miss Coach Heathcote, but are grateful for his many contributions to basketball, MSU and Michigan. And wish him all the best in his retirement.

TRIBUTE TO DR. MAURICE VANDERPOL

- Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on April 22, 1995, many special guests from the Netherlands and this Nation gathered at the Wang Center in Boston to celebrate the permanent endowment of Young at Arts, the Wang Center’s educational outreach program, with special recognition to Dr. Maurice Vanderpol for his enthusiasm and outstanding leadership in this effort.

In 1989 Dr. Vanderpol established the Walter Suskind Memorial Fund in memory of Water Suskind, whose courageous efforts to save thousands of children from Nazi concentration camps during the Second World War. The fund was established as a permanent endowment for Young at Arts. This program teaches a curriculum in the arts to young children around Boston, possibly some of whom are the grandchildren of those Walter Suskind saved 60 years ago.

Due to Dr. Vanderpol’s tireless effort over the past 6 years, the campaign to raise $1 million for the endowment was successful. This success, along with Dr. Vanderpol’s exemplary leadership and extraordinary support in keeping alive the memories and the dreams of a people brutalized by the horrors of war, is why I wish to recognize Dr. Maurice Vanderpol on this day.

FAREWELL TO BISHOP LOUIS HENRY FORD

- Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, Bishop Louis Henry Ford died last Friday, after many years of service to his church, and to the people of Chicago.

Bishop Ford was the presiding International Bishop of the Church of God in Christ, and the spiritual leader to over eight million people, as well as the founder and pastor of the St. Paul Church of God in Christ in Chicago.

Bishop Ford arrived in Chicago in 1933, after graduating from Saints College in Mississippi, and was soon ordained an Elder in the Church of God in Christ. Three years later he founded St. Pauls and embarked on his long career of saving souls and strengthening the church around him through religion. It is through his efforts that the membership of Church of God in Christ has risen to 8.7 million parishioners in 52 different countries, and is now the largest Pentecostal Church in the United States.

Indeed, Bishop Ford’s involvement in the community was much more than just religious. He served many years on the Cook County Board of Corrections and often was called upon to consult with the city government, especially on Chicago schools and race relations issues. He was respected as a leader in the civil rights movement, and he continued that tradition as he rose to leadership in the Church of God in Christ. Throughout the years Bishop Ford has been given numerous honors and awards, including the declaration of October 25th, 1990, as Louis Henry Ford Day in Chicago. Indeed, his work was recognized by President Clinton in 1993, when he addressed the 86th Annual Holy Convocation.

Bishop Louis Henry Ford was a well-loved and important member of our community. He spent his life helping people through the church. My greatest sympathy is with his wife Mother Margaret Ford, and his children Charles H.M. Ford and Janet Oliver Hill, and all his family members.

It is clear that Bishop Ford’s legacy in the church will continue to help inspire怎么可能, and strengthen the community he loved long into the future. Bishop Ford will be greatly missed, but never forgotten.

BISHOP’S VIEWS ON WELFARE REFORM

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, Howard J. Hubbard, Bishop of Albany, recently presented his views on welfare reform in the diocesan newspaper, the Evangelist. The bishop served for 4 years as chaplain at Community Maternity Services, a diocesan program for pregnant teens and their children, so his statement is based on practical experience. Having worked with many welfare reformers, he believes that systemic solutions are needed to address the vicious cycle of poverty.

The current system isn’t working. There seems to be a consensus that a major focus of attention must be the growing number of women, especially teenagers, having children out of wedlock.

Teenage pregnancy is a national crisis. Teens and their children are in danger of failing to develop to their full potential, and too often, they become dependent, rather than contributing, members of society. Adolescents who have children are still children themselves.

In the past decade, teen pregnancy in particular and child care in general have become a top priority of our national agenda. Teenage sexual activity and childbearing have increased in recent years, and a growing proportion of births to teenagers takes place out of wedlock.

In 1989, more than one million U.S. babies were born to unwed women:

Almost 500,000 of those babies were born to women younger than 16.

Nearly three-fourths of American children growing up in single-parent families experience poverty for some period during their first ten years.

Becoming a parent as a teenager increases their chances that a mother will not complete high school, that she will fare poorly in the job market, and that she and the child will live in poverty.

THOUGHT AND EMOTIONS

On the rational level, policymakers are seeking to address the aspects of the welfare system that foster dependency and contribute to a permanent underclass where lack of family stability, child abuse, drug usage and inferior education perpetuate the vicious cycle of poverty.

On the emotional level, however, there is the cry of frustrated citizens who feel that they are bearing the brunt of a system out of control.

That mentality—which is so often heard on the talk shows or reflected in letters to the editor—can carry a certain emotional weight, or only fractional effect, in an era of so many other competing issues.

Then we can reflect carefully upon who these women are and what motivates their behavior before arriving at solutions. Let me share a few snapshots of the young women I came to know at CMS:

Sharelle was in a series of foster homes (her mother was 15 when she had Sharelle) and is now living on her own with her infant son. She dropped out of school, and her only hope is to meet someone who will support them.

Gail represents the young girls who had abortions in the past year. She made no plans for future sexual overtures and carried within her womb the baby back. Pregnant again a year later, she thought maybe this was God’s way of letting her repent. She thought her penance was to be a perfect mother to this child.

Tammie was an unpopular and unattractive teen who was unhappy with herself. She would respond to any attention from any of the young men in her presence. She felt terribly lonely the morning after.

Amy, almost 16, has been dating Joe, 18, for a year Amy’s parents have not talked to her about sex, what she has learned has come from afternoon soaps. By the time Amy and Joe had promised each other it wouldn’t happen again, she was pregnant.

Cheryl was active in CYO, played her guitar at Mass and was the pride of her family. She fell madly in love with Tom. They occasionally agreed to intercourse because “loves all” and because “maybe virginity is selfish.” She prayed that soon she would be able to talk her boyfriend out of this; but before she could, she became pregnant.

While those young women come from a variety of economic and social backgrounds, they all share the same characteristics: lack of self-esteem, little self-confidence, poor communication with parents, and a desire to escape their present situation by pursuing the type of happiness and fulfillment that MTV or the soap promises.

SOLUTIONS

There is no simple or single solution to their situations. Each woman differs in her personality and the way she learns has come from afternoon soaps. By the time Amy and Joe had promised each other it wouldn’t happen again, she was pregnant.

Cory, 16, has been in the welfare program for 4 years, and she is still in school. She is happy with her boyfriend, but she is not sure if she wants to get married. She is undecided about whether she wants to keep her child, at a minimum financially.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, How much research examining the effect of welfare reform designed to address their needs comprehensively?

1. Welfare programs are not among the priorities of our national agenda.

2. Programs and of intervention with mothers and their children must be cogent of and sensitive to the unique circumstances and diverse needs.

3. Where possible, birth fathers must be involved.

4. Quality, affordable and accessible affordable daycare and health care as well as ongoing education and job training are prerequisites for success.

5. There must be a strong moral component in any program for single mothers as well as a values-laden dimension which promotes marriage, family life, caring, truth-telling, the goodness of sexuality, and the importance of its discipline and the value of schooling and work.

6. There must be a pragmatic component with addresses health, family life, caring relationships.

7. Where possible, birth fathers must be part of the program, which should include a focus on their rights and responsibilities, especially their responsibility for supporting their child, at a minimum financially.

PREFACE TO DR. MICHAEL H. MESCON

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Dr. Michael H. Mescon, Dean Emeritus of Georgia State University, as he is honored by the United States Small Business Administration (SBA) with their 1995 award of SBA Georgia Veteran Advocate of the Year.

This SBA award recognizes Dr. Mescon's 12 years of volunteer contributions and support of the Georgia Veterans Leadership Program Small Business Training initiative. In his position as Dean of the Georgia State University School of Business, Dr. Mescon provided the Georgia Veterans Leadership Program with facilities, administrative support and access to the Georgia State University Small Business Development Center. He also gave his own time as a lecturer at seminars and special functions. These contributions, along with Dr. Mescon's perseverance and leadership, helped the fledgling program gain the necessary attention, support and credibility to successfully launch it.

This Small Business Training initiative, begun in Georgia in 1983, has now been replicated across the nation. The Georgia Veterans Leadership Program has conducted seminars in 16 cities across the state of Georgia as well as in a dozen other states, reaching more than 10,000 businesses. The Georgia Veterans Leadership Program Small Business Training initiative has generated over 650 Small Business Administration-Veterans direct and guaranteed loans—for a total of nearly $400 million in loans.

Helping Dr. Mescon in his important work over the past 12 years has been a dedicated team of volunteers including Mr. Ron Miller, Mr. Tommy Clack, Mr. Rodney Alsup, Mr. Max Carey, Mr. Tom Carter, Mr. Ted Chernak, Mr. Andrew Farris, Mr. Dixon Jones, Ms. Mary Lou Keener, Mr. John Howe, Mr. Jim Mathis, Mr. Michael Mantegna, Mr. John Medlin, Mr. Steve Raines, Mr. Chuck Reaves, Mr. Richard Schuman and Mr. Dan Wall and the Honorable Max Cleland.

Mr. President I applaud the dedicated work of these Georgians and the many others who have helped with this initiative over the years. I congratulate Dr. Mescon for his receipt of the 1995 SBA Georgia Veteran Advocate of the Year and hope he will continue in his tireless work in support of Georgia's veterans.

FRANK AUCOIN: SOUTH CAROLINA'S SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Frank AuCoin, South Carolina's small-business person of the year for 1995. He is owner and president of Sign It Quick, a computerized sign-making company based in Charleston.

Success has not simply knocked on the door for Frank. He has done it the old fashioned way. He's working hard. He is a self-made businessman whose sign-making chain now boasts nine franchises in South Carolina, Florida, and Tennessee. The chain generated nearly $4 million in sales just last year.

While Frank and his wife, Teresa, were operating a chain of bookstores in South Carolina and Georgia in the early 1970's, they realized the potential in the sign-making business which they could not get their signs made quickly enough. So they started making their own. By the late 1980's when the technology became available to generate computer-aided signs, Frank realized that he could start a business to create and mass-produce signs easily. In 1987, Frank and his wife invested their life savings into the concept of a computer-generated sign-making company and Sign It Quick was born.

Mr. President, I am delighted to commend Frank AuCoin's many successes as a small businessman. When he opened his first store he created the world's largest sign—one that was the length of five football fields. Since then, he has created signs for two Super Bowls, the Hard Rock Cafe, Euro-Disney, and Donald Trump.

Recently, the Post and Courier in my hometown of Charleston, reported that Frank was South Carolina's small-business person of the year. Now he is competing for the national honor from the U.S. Small Business Administration this month. I hope he wins.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

(From the Post and Courier, Mar. 18, 1995)

Sign It Quick named South Carolina's small-business person of the year.

Mr. AuCoin, owner and president of Sign It Quick, has been named South Carolina's small-business person of the year for 1995.

The honor was announced Friday by its sponsor, the U.S. Small Business Administration.

"I'm really happy for the city of Charleston because this is the first time a company from here was ever in the running for this," AuCoin said.

Sign It Quick is a computerized sign-making company with franchises in South Carolina, Florida and Tennessee. The company, formed in 1987, is headquartered at 501 Dorchester Road in Charleston Heights. Sign It Quick has 60 employees. Company-wide sales were $3.7 million last year. Coincidentally, South Carolina's small-business person of the year for 1994 was a Sign It Quick franchise owner, Julie Wetherell of Columbia.

The SBA will recognize its top small-business honorees next month in Washington, D.C. On behalf of all the states, the District of Columbia, Guam, and the Virgin Islands/Puerto Rico. The national small-business person of 1995 will be picked from the 53 business owners. Also, AuCoin will be honored at a luncheon in Columbia May 4.

SBA bases its selections on factors such as innovations, staying power, employee growth and sales increases.

DEFENSE EXPORT LOAN GUARANTEE AMENDMENT TO S. 570

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues as a cosponsor of this amendment to S. 570, to create a defense export loan guarantee program. I believe the loan guarantee program will be critical to preserving our defense industrial base and is, therefore, an investment in America's long-term security.

In the post-cold war period, the United States has rightly reduced its procurement of expensive weapons systems. This has resulted in cost savings to the U.S. Treasury, but it has under-financed many of the manufacturers. We have encouraged conversion of some of the defense industry into production of other products. However, in the long run, we cannot afford to have all defense manufacturers convert to nondefense production. Even if the world's current trouble spots do not erupt into conflict, prompting another round of rearmament, the U.S. military must maintain an up-to-date inventory of the world's most capable equipment. To do that, we must preserve a minimum threshold of defense production, lest we face either astronomical startup costs or the disappearance of one or more critical defense producers. The current U.S. defense procurement is not sufficient to keep some of these industries going; we must help them in their own efforts to export abroad.

I commend the administration for its recent review of arms, export policy. That review concluded with the President's decision to preserve the current policy to discourage arms proliferation but to take into account as well U.S. manufacturers' economic interests in reaching a decision on applications for arms export licenses. I do not propose to change that policy in any respect.

While we do not want to make arms export licenses any more freely available than they are under current policy, I believe we should do more to level the playing field for U.S. manufacturers once an export license has been approved. U.S. defense industries face extremely tough competition for arms exports in the current international environment. Not only the United States, but also most of Western Europe have cut defense spending and military procurement budgets. In this shrinking market, U.S. defense manufacturers must compete against European and Canadian manufacturers who benefit from the extensive support—in some cases, including subsidies—of their governments.

Buyers have the advantage in the current, competitive international arms market. Having the best product, track record and support network is often not enough to win a competition. In many cases, one must also provide financing for the whole system, the only source of financing for U.S. weapons systems exports are commercial banks, whose loan rates often make the price for U.S. weapons exports uncompetitive. French, German, British, Italian and Canadian defense manufacturers can get subsidized or guaranteed loans for weapons exports. These governments are prepared to pay... a high price to preserve their defense industries and keep jobs at home.

In my own State of Connecticut, Norden, a corporation which produces advanced electronic systems for military vehicles, was forced to move some of its production to Canada in order to qualify for the Canadian export loan program essential to Norden’s winning a competing export sale. Several two Norden workers in Connecticut lost their jobs, good, skilled jobs, as a result. And they are not alone; defense industry workers in Rhode Island, Colorado and elsewhere have had their jobs exported for similar reasons.

In the current tight budgetary environment, we cannot afford a new subsidy for the defense industry, but neither can we afford to export highly-skilled, good-paying jobs abroad in order to keep our defense industries alive. This draft legislation fits within those constraints. In many ways, it could be a model for the 104th Congress. It is not foreign aid and does not require appropriated funds, yet it leverages the credit of the United States to help a sector of America’s industry compete in the world market. This program is entirely self-financing; exporters and buyers together would provide money to cover the exposure fees and administrative costs associated with each loan. Furthermore, this program could not be used by poor countries to purchase arms they can ill afford; it would only be available to NATO allies, Central European countries moving toward democracy and members of the organization for Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation. Although limited in scope and requiring financial contributions from participating corporations, this program would be significant for U.S. defense manufacturers. A similar program operated by the State of California since 1985 has produced a steadily growing business in exports of defense equipment to the Netherlands, Spain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand at a consistent 1-percent default rate. By supporting economic competitiveness at very modest cost to the U.S. Treasury, this program could be a model for the 104th Congress.

Although I am persuaded that this program has a significant contribution to U.S. defense manufacturers’ competitiveness, I would like to see proof. That is why we have included in the legislation the requirement for a report from the administration on the program’s impact after 2 years. If it does not prove to be constructive contribution to the viability of the defense industry that I expect it to be, it should be ended. However, I expect the administration will report that this program has made a big difference in keeping the industry competitive in product and keeping good jobs at home. I invite my colleagues to join us in working for adoption of this legislation.

URUGUAY ROUND AGREEMENTS ACT

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, following the approval of the Uruguay Round implementing legislation, statements have been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD providing individual interpretations of the antidumping and countervailing duty provisions contained in title II of that Act. As one who was also deeply involved in the development and passage of that legislation, I, of course, respect the right to make those statements, but I would like to offer some further clarification.

Initially, it is important to emphasize that it is the statutory language that Congress enacted which must guide the implementation and interpretation of this legislation by the International Trade Commission, the Department of Commerce and their reviewing courts. To the extent that the statutory language is considered ambiguous, it is the Statement of Administrative Action, as well as the Senate and House committee reports—not the statements of individual Senators—which provide the primary sources of interpretation of H.R. 5110.

Given the statements that have been made, I also believe that it is important to provide the following clarification with respect to specific aspects of the antidumping and countervailing duty provisions contained in the Uruguay Round Act H.R. 5110. international Trade Commission’s determination of injury and threat. Several statements have addressed the Commission’s implementation of H.R. 5110, “Capitive Products.” I am the author of the Senate provision dealing with situations in which a captive production consideration should be used. Section 222 of H.R. 5110 was adopted to make clear to the Commission that, in certain captive production situations, it should use data relating to competition in the merchant market, rather than data for the industry as a whole. Despite this language and clearly expressed legislative intent, it has been suggested that the Commission should continue to base its conclusions on an analysis of the industry as a whole, rather than of the merchant market. This suggestion is clearly contrary to the explicit language of section 222, as well as the intent expressed in the Statement of Administrative Action and the House and Senate committee reports.

Statements have also been made indicating that the Commission should apply the same criteria used in evaluating the domestic like product to evaluate whether it is appropriate to focus on noncaptive imports. These statements are also inconsistent with the plain language of section 222, which contains no restriction or direction as to how the Commission should analyze imports. While there may be circumstances under which captive imports should be analyzed in a similar manner as captive domestic production, this should only be done after the Commission determines that captive imports do not compete with the relevant domestic like product—as was made explicitly clear in the implementing legislation that I authored.

Negligible Imports. It also has been suggested that the Commission must terminate an investigation unless import levels are found to be very close to the statutory negligibility threshold at the time of the preliminary determination and above that threshold at the time of the final determination. This suggestion is contrary to the unambiguous statutory language, which provides that the Commission may treat such imports as non-negligible in the threat context whenever it determines that there is a potential for such imports to increase to non-negligible levels. Thus, the Commission is under no obligation, and indeed would be acting contrary to the statute, to automatically terminate an investigation merely because imports are below the statutory negligibility threshold at the time of either the preliminary or final investigations. This is particularly true given that, as the Commission practice and section 222 recognize, the filing of a petition may itself have a dampering effect on import levels. As a result, it is expected that the Commission will consider the negligibility provisions carefully and that it will only find imports to be negligible in the context of threat where there is no potential for an imminent increase in imports.

ANTICIRCUMVENTION

Statements have been made suggesting that section 230 of H.R. 5110 should be interpreted to limit Commerce’s ability to apply the anticircumvention provisions and that, before Commerce enlarges the scope of an order, the Commission may be required to make a finding regarding that enlarged scope. These statements, however, are contrary to the statute and the Statement of Administrative Action. As explained in the Statement of Administrative Action, this amendment was adopted because the former statute failed to provide a full or adequate remedy for the circumvention occurring in the marketplace. As a result, section 230 clearly provides Commerce with broad discretion in its application of the anticircumvention provisions, so that it can address the different types of circumvention encountered. Further, neither the statute nor the Statement of Administrative Action require the Commission to issue the new injury determination before Commerce enlarges the scope of an order, although the two agencies will engage in consultations before Commerce makes its final determination.

SUNSET REVIEWS

Several statements have been made with respect to different aspects of Commerce’s and the Commission’s application of the new sunset provisions, particularly with respect to short supply, the extension of orders and duty absorption.

Short Supply. Both the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance affirmatively called short supply proposals during consideration of the Uruguay Round implementing legislation. Statements have been made, however, suggesting that the Commission and Commerce should use their authority under the sunset provisions to revoke orders where merchandise is not available from domestic sources. Further, it has been suggested that the Commission should find no adverse impact from imports where petitioning companies are not producing a competing product.

The newly adopted sunset provisions require both Commerce and the Commission to consider a multitude of factors in determining whether orders will be revoked. Consequently, it is expected that the Commission will continue to consider all aspects of this issue in reaching a final determination. Given that the lack of current domestic production may oftentimes be a symptom of the injury sought to be remedied, in particular, does not alone warrant revocation, even with respect to the product for which there is a lack of production. Finally, the Commission is expected to continue to consider all domestic production factors in analogy with the reduction of the petitioning companies alone.

Extension of Orders. It also has been suggested that the sunset review provisions create a presumption against the extension of orders. This is, however, inconsistent with both the statute and the Statement of Administrative Action, which create no such presumption. Nor, as some statements have suggested, is the substantial evidence standard for all sunset reviews; where responses have not been filed or are inadequate, Commerce’s and the Commission’s final determinations are, by the express terms of the implementing legislation, reviewable under the arbitrary and capricious standard, and not the substantial evidence standard.

Duty Absorption. Pursuant to section 221 of the Uruguay Round legislation, Commerce and the Commission are authorized to consider the issue of duty absorption in the course of their sunset reviews. Some statements have suggested incorrectly, however, that (1) Commerce may not quantify the level of duty absorption or initiate a duty absorption investigation without evidence that duty absorption is occurring, and (2) the Commission must give less weight to duty absorption findings based on best information available.

None of these issues are addressed by the statute. While Commerce is not expressly required to quantify the level of duty absorption, it obviously retains the authority to do so and it is expected that Commerce will quantify duty absorption where circumstances so warrant. Given the difficulty in obtaining information on duty absorption, the Statement of Administrative Action makes it clear that Commerce must initiate a duty absorption review whenever it is requested to do so; thus, there is no additional evidentiary hurdle prior to initiation. Finally, the Commission is required to consider the issue of duty absorption whenever Commerce has made a duty absorption finding. It is within the Commission’s discretion, however, to determine the weight to be given to this issue, including the significance of a respondent’s failure to cooperate with Commerce’s investigation and Commerce’s use of best information available. There is simply no basis for the suggestion that less weight be given to Commerce’s findings when they are based on best information available. In fact, such a requirement would create a significant incentive for respondents not to cooperate with Commerce so that best information available would be used and the Commission would give less weight to the issue of duty absorption. Clearly this is not what Congress or the statute intended.

Calculating Anti-Dumping Duties

Several statements have also been made regarding specific aspects of Commerce’s calculation of anti-dumping duties, as addressed below.

Fair comparison/normal value adjustments. Pursuant to section 224 of the implementing legislation, Commerce is required to make a fair comparison between export price and normal value. Statements have been made, however, suggesting that this provision generally requires Commerce to adjust normal value and export price (or constructed export price) for the same costs and expenses and to make either a level of trade adjustment or a constructed export price offset adjustment to normal value for any adjustment to constructed export price is used.

This is not, however, what the statute or Statement of Administrative Action requires. Although expenses may be nominally the same in both markets, the actual circumstances surrounding the relationship between such expenses and claimed adjustments often differ. As a result, Commerce clearly has the authority to treat expenses differently in the U.S. and foreign market. For instance, Commerce is expected to continue its practice of closely assessing all potential adjustments on a case-by-case basis and not mechanically making adjustments without analysis of the circumstances involved.

Moreover, there is no requirement for Commerce to make a level of trade or offset adjustment in every case. Indeed, the express language of the statute and Statement of Administrative Action indicates that there are circumstances where neither adjustment is appropriate or permissible. For example, Commerce may only make a level of trade adjustment where there are different levels of trade and where that difference is shown to affect price comparability. Commerce’s analysis of these issues must be based on the actual circumstances involved.

Constructed export price profit deduction. Section 223 of H.R. 5110 provides that petitioner may deduct their portion from constructed export price. It, however, has been incorrectly suggested that this provision only authorizes Commerce to base its calculation on data for the subject merchandise in the U.S. and foreign market.

While the statute and Statement of Administrative Action indicate that the use of data specific to the costs of the subject merchandise is appropriate, they also allow for the use of alternative methodologies when full cost of production information is not on the record. In particular, it is expected that, if the necessary profit data for the subject merchandise is unavailable, Commerce will use the next broader category of merchandise to calculate this deduction.

Startup costs. Section 224 of the implementing legislation governs Commerce’s treatment of start-up operations. In considering the circumstances surrounding start-up operations, Commerce should apply this provision strictly to prevent foreign producers from using it as a loophole to evade the application of anti-dumping duties in the early stages of a product’s life-cycle. In particular, Commerce should carefully review the claimed duration of start-up periods so that they are not improperly expanded.

Export price and constructed export price definitions. Renaming “purchase price” to “export price” and “exporter’s sales price” to “constructed export price” should not affect the “criterion” used to categorize U.S. sales as one or the other. The Statement of Administrative Action indicates that “no change is intended in the circumstances” under which a sale would be characterized as one or the other. Commerce continues to retain the authority to alter any of the particular factors that it considers in making its determinations.

Reimbursement of antidumping duties. In the antidumping duty context, Commerce will increase the amount of antidumping duties when it finds that the exporter has failed to remit the reimbur- sed antidumping duties.

There is no such expectation. The Senate report language, written with the acquiescence of the administration, states that Commerce should promulgate a regulation to make an adjustment in the U.S. The language applies to the importer for payment of such duties. Although there has been no change in the law, statements have been made suggesting that Commerce is expected not to treat reimbursed countervailing duties the same way that it treats reimbursed antidumping duties.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 58, the adjournment resolution, just received from the House; that the concurrent resolution be considered and agreed to; and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY AND MANAGEMENT ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of calendar No. 49, H.R. 1345.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1345) to eliminate budget deficits and management inefficiencies in the government of the District of Columbia through the development of the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill. AMENDMENT NO. 593

(Purpose: To amend the bill in several respects)

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators Cohen, Roth, and Jen-...
During the entire time of this gathering storm, the Congress has time and again deferred to the local government to take corrective action. All opportunity have been afforded to the locally elected officials to avert the very action that they today hold as tantamount to there is no need to recite the history of this sad course of events we know all too well, it is sufficient to state for the RECORD that congressional warnings of intervention have been unmistakable.

The sweeping changes we are introducing into the current local structure must now be given every opportunity to succeed. The District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority must have all of the powers it needs to restore the confidence of everyone concerned for the well-being of the Nation’s Capital. I do have serious concerns as to whether the legislation is sufficiently clear in this regard and will raise those concerns with my colleagues.

Let me state, today’s action is not a victory of one political idea over another. Today’s action is being taken because the path leading to it is littered with failure. We cannot fail the people of this City and the many people who visit it each year. I support the passage of H. R. 1345.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, the Nation’s Capital is in financial trouble. This bill provides the mechanism to restore the city to fiscal health, but make no mistake, the responsibility for acting rests squarely on the shoulders of the elected leaders of the District of Columbia. This Authority has the tools to get the job done, but the District government has the responsibility and accountability to act.

This bill is not perfect. There are things that I would change, I am sure most Senators feel that way, however on balance it has the essentials to get the job started and desires our support. The amendments proposed make improvements and clarifications, and I encourage our House colleagues to accept these changes and send the bill on to the President so that the Authority can begin its work.

There is a financial crisis in the city, we should not delay action and send the message to the citizens of the city, to the financial markets, and to the District government that the Congress does not consider this crisis worthy of our attention.

Every Senator who has worked on this bill, and indeed probably every Senator in this body, wants to preserve home rule for the citizens of this city. Other cities have gotten into financial difficulty and their states established a financial control board which for a time assisted the city government in managing its fiscal affairs. But there are important features of those state statutes that are also part of this bill which preserve to the local citizens the management responsibility. While difficult decisions, these features include provision for reduction of the Authority’s powers upon certain events, principally achieving balanced budgets during 4 consecutive years. In short, there is a clear definable end to this intrusion on the city’s way over its fiscal matters, this bill preserves home rule.

I want to express my appreciation to Senators COHEN and ROTH for bringing this bill to the Senate for consideration. They and their staffs have worked tirelessly to make sure that this bill reached this point today. In the long-term this bill will make a positive difference to the citizens of the District.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleague on the Government Affairs Committee, the chairman of the subcommittee with jurisdiction over District affairs, about one aspect of this legislation in particular. I have been concerned that the bill does not make clear our intent that the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority must have sufficient authority to ensure that its recommendations are adopted. I have thought that such authority should be expressly stated in the statute, in order to leave no ambiguity about our purpose in enacting this bill. The authority is too important to the underlying purpose of the legislation to leave at all in doubt, which I am concerned it may be. Is it the Senator’s belief that the intent of Congress is sufficiently clear and unambiguous, that the Authority may implement any recommendations it has made to the Mayor or Council, but which were rejected?

Mr. COHEN. The full scope of the authority’s power to implement its rejected recommendations is well stated in the House report that accompanied the legislation. First of all, any non-response to a recommended action is deemed a rejection under the act. Likewise, if the District government does not respond that it will adopt the recommendation, but then fails to do so to the satisfaction of the Authority, this shall be considered the same as if it had originally rejected the recommendation under section 207.

Mr. ROTH. The language of this section provides that in such a case, “the authority may by a majority vote of its members take such action concerning the recommendations as it deems appropriate”. From reading the House report, it is clear that this is very broad power, including the ability to enact local laws and ordinances, provided there is a period of congressional review of such legislation, as in the case of an act of the D.C. Council. Is this your understanding of that section’s intent?

Mr. COHEN. Yes it is. Any recommendation made by the authority to the District government which either the Mayor or the Council has the authority to adopt, may itself be adopted by the Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority, if rejected as I described previously, and if the authority first consults with the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs and the House Committee on Government Reform and Oversight. This includes the authority to enact local legislation, which would go into effect after a congressional review period. It also includes such matters as personnel actions and structural reforms to the District government. It is clearly the intent of this to give the Authority a broad range of legislative, executive, and administrative powers as the Mayor and Council possess, while expecting that the District government will be given the opportunity to act first.

Mr. JEFFORDS. As chairman of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, I too have been closely involved in the development of this legislation, and I can say that the Senator from Maine (Mr. COHEN) has in his description accurately reflects the scope of authority being granted this new entity, which we are here creating.

Mr. COHEN. I believe it is correct to say that the drafting of this legislation, in both Houses of Congress, understand that the authority is to have the full authority to adopt any recommendation that it deems appropriate, as submitted under this section of the act, if the District itself does not adopt such a recommendation, subject to the conditions that I have already mentioned.

Mr. ROTH. I thank my two colleagues for their explanations and for clarifying this important point. I have one other point. We are today adopting several useful modifications to this legislation, but I have other improvements that I would have liked to have seen added. I know that my colleagues are aware of these provisions that I think are important, and I hope that in the near future we will be able to make those improvements to this law.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I can assure the Senator that I will work with him to enact those provisions as soon as is feasible.

Mr. ROTH. I thank my friend for his support as I know he has a strong interest in making this work. I know that we all have a great concern for our Nation’s Capital, and especially for the citizens who live and work here, and that we look forward to the day when the actions taken under legislation are no longer necessary.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, the District of Columbia is facing the most serious financial crisis in its...
The District made a number of major mistakes and bears a major portion of the responsibility for the current debacle, however, the Federal Government also played an important part in creating this emergency because of its refusal to give the District the chance to govern itself. The District is not a State. States have the ability to step in and help avoid fiscal problems within its cities. Since the District has not been granted Statehood, Congress must step in at this point to establish this control board. This bill establishing the D.C. control board has particular elements of the Philadelphia and the New York City boards. These great American cities worked constructively and fruitfully with similar authorities without any evidence that their monitors had somehow made them less self-governing. The boards in those cities did not have to use their strong powers because the elected city officials did what was necessary themselves to revive their own cities and I expect no less in the District.

As important as it is to save the city, however, I will not support a D.C. control board that undermines the autonomy of the city. That is why I am glad that the type of control board being proposed in this legislation has been used by a number of other major cities in the United States, such as New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland, which no one said did not remain fully self-governing.

To address the city’s projected $722 million shortfall, H.R. 1345 establishes the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority. The Authority’s five members will be appointed by the President, in consultation with Congress. The members will be responsible for managing the District’s finances until the District balances four budgets in a row.

The bill authorizes the District’s Chief Financial Officer to prepare the financial plan and budget for the District and implement programs and policies for budgetary control. The bill also establishes an Inspector General for the District, who will make an independent assessment of budget assumptions and report those findings to the board.

This bill allows the Mayor to retain his budgetary and operational authority and the Council to retain its lawmaking powers. However, the Board is responsible for monitoring these activities to ensure that the city is not acting inconsistent with fiscal prudence.

I would hope that we can act today to pass this legislation in an effort to ensure that the fiscal crisis will be on its way to recovery when Congress reconvenes. But the truth be told, the real long term solution is not control boards and less home rule; the real long term solution is the expansion of the District’s autonomy, increasing home rule. The citizens of the District of Columbia deserve to have full democratic privileges like all other United States citizens enjoy.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment (No. 593) was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be deemed read a third time and passed; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; and that any statement relating to the bill be placed at the appropriate place in the RECORD.

COMMENDING THE HUSKIES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 107, a resolution commending the University of Connecticut women's basketball team for capping a perfect season by winning the 1995 NCAA women's basketball championship, submitted earlier today by Senators Dodd and Lieberman; that the resolution be agreed to; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; and that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read.

Resolved: That the Senate commends the Huskies of the University of Connecticut for capping a perfect season by winning the 1995 NCAA Women's Basketball Championship.

NATIONAL ATOMIC VETERANS DAY

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 108, a resolution submitted by Senator Wellstone and others earlier today designating July 16, 1995 as "National Atomic Veterans Day"; that the resolution and preamble be agreed to; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; and that any statements on this measure appear in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So the resolution (S. Res. 108) was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:
Whereas July 16, 1995, is the 50th anniversary of the first detonation of an atomic bomb at Alamagordo, New Mexico; Whereas the members of the Armed Forces who have been exposed to ionizing radiation as a result of the detonation of a nuclear weapon or device are considered to be America's "atomic veterans"; Whereas atomic veterans are in many ways one of the most neglected groups of United States veterans; Whereas atomic veterans served their country patriotically and proudly, believing fully that the United States Government would protect them from any serious hazards to their health; Whereas atomic veterans were not told of the hazards they faced from exposure to ionizing radiation, often were provided with little protection from such exposure even when deployed at or near ground zero immediately after test detonation of weapons, and on occasion were not provided film badges to measure their exposure to radiation during such detonations, and were provided with no follow-up medical care or other monitoring to determine the health consequences of such exposure; Whereas for 40 years after World War II Federal law contained no provisions specifically providing veterans compensation or health care for atomic veterans for service-connected radiogenic diseases; and Whereas the Armed Forces Radiological Health Service, which has over 250,000 members of the Armed Forces who participated in post-World War II atmospheric nuclear testing were forbidden from publicly revealing such participation or the hazards they faced from exposure to ionizing radiations, and received no recognition for their important contributions to the United States and the Armed Forces: Now, therefore, be it
Resolved: That July 16, 1995, is designated as "National Atomic Veterans Day"; and the President is authorized and requested to proclaim, by such proclamation calling on the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, the State and local governments, and the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. WELLSSTONE. I was pleased to submit today, along with my colleagues, Senators Simon, Jeffords, Dasinche, Pryor, Rockefeller, Akaka, Heid, and Leahy, a Senate resolution to designate July 16, 1995, the 50th anniversary of the first detonation of an atomic bomb at Alamagordo, NM as "National Atomic Veterans Day."

Atomic veterans, members of the armed forces who were exposed to ionizing radiation as a result of the detonation of a nuclear weapon or device, for 50 years have been one of the most neglected groups of veterans. While they served their country patriotically, unquestioningly, and proudly, they were not informed of the dangers they faced from exposure to ionizing radiation, often were provided with little or no protection from such exposure, and for many years were provided with no follow-up monitoring or care to determine the health effects of their exposure. In fact, for 40 years after World War II, there were no provisions in Federal law specifically providing veterans compensation or health care for atomic veterans for service-connected radiogenic diseases.

Many atomic veterans who participated in atmospheric nuclear testing were forbidden from publicly revealing their participation for reasons of national security. Despite their valuable contributions to the United States and the Armed Forces, they have not received the recognition that is due them.

The National Association of Atomic Veterans, AMVETS, and the Vietnam Veterans of America have expressed their strong and unequivocal support for this resolution.

I urge my colleagues to show their support by cosponsoring National Atomic Veterans Day.

Williams-Bridgers to be Inspector General, Department of State; that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration; further, that the nominations be confirmed, en bloc; that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc; that any statements relating to the nominations appear at the appropriate place in the RECORD; and the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action.

Nomination of Mr. Robert Pitofsky

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering the nomination of Mr. Robert Pitofsky to serve on the Federal Trade Commission [FTC]. The President has indicated his intention to name Mr. Pitofsky as Chairman of the FTC, if he is confirmed.

Having previously served as a Commissioner and staff member, Mr. Pitofsky certainly understands the FTC's goals and duties. The Commission's two primary functions are first, to protect consumers from unfair and deceptive practices, and second, to ensure the operation of an efficient and competitive market-place. The Commission administers a number of Federal statutes, including the Federal Trade Commission Act—which provides the Commission its consumer protection authority—and the Robinson-Patman Act, Clayton Act, and Robinson-Patman anti-trust statutes, as well as the Fair Credit Reporting, Fair Debt Collection Practices, and Truth in Lending Acts.

A few of the specific duties include safeguarding the public from false advertising of goods and services, telemarketing fraud, unfair pricing of products, unfair mergers and acquisitions, illegal boycotts, and other unfair methods of competition.

As we enter the 21st century, and a new era of global trade, the FTC undoubtedly will face many challenges in fulfilling its responsibilities. Mr. Pitofsky will, if confirmed, chair the Commission at a time when Federal agencies are facing the possibility of severe budget reductions.

Mr. Pitofsky is aware of the tremendous challenges confronting the FTC. He is committed to the principles and goals of the Commission, and is prepared to take on the responsibilities of the FTC Chairman. I urge my colleagues to approve his nomination.

Nomination of Dr. Jackson

Mr. LAUTenberg. Mr. President, I rise to express my unequivocal support for Dr. Shirley Jackson's nomination to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Dr. Jackson is a fellow New Jerseyan, and has spent most of her career teaching and working in our State. But that's only one of the many qualifications that make her so ideal for this position.

Dr. Jackson has devoted her life to the study of science. Over the course of her career, she has gained worldwide renown and she has broken many societal barriers.

Dr. Jackson was the first African-American woman to receive a PhD from MIT.

She has accumulated more than two decades of research and management experience in high energy physics, nuclear physics and condensed matter physics. She has been a professor and a consultant. And she has also found time for public service, serving for 10 years as founding member of the New Jersey Commission on Science and Technology.

Dr. Jackson is currently a consultant to AT&T Bell Laboratories on Semiconductor Theory, vice chair of Governor Whitman's Economic Master Plan Commission and a member of the
On Wednesday, the conferees completed work on this bill, which will ensure that the readiness, quality of life and pay for our Armed Forces will not be impacted by the costs of overseas peacekeeping and humanitarian missions.

As chairman of the Defense Subcommittee, there is no question in my mind that we must act on this bill prior to the recess.

In summary, this bill provides $3.94 billion in new funding for the Department of Defense, and $28.3 million for the Coast Guard, to pay for these contingency operations, and other emergency requirements.

For DOD, in addition to the contingency operations amounts, $258 million is included to meet the increases in overseas personnel costs due to the decline in value of the dollar.

These amounts go directly to the men and women, and their families, who are fighting overseas, to defray the increased expenses they face because of this devaluation.

All new DOD spending in the bill is offset by rescission to DOD, defense related and foreign aid appropriations.

From available DOD funds, $2.26 billion is rescinded. Also, $200 million from function 050 nuclear facility funds, $100 million from military construction funds, and $120 million from foreign aid and other accounts.

The conferees worked to ensure that no significant military program was damaged by these cuts. Most reductions come from savings in programs underway, or from reduced efforts in lower priority programs.

Some of these funds will need to be replaced in 1996, but will not reduce military readiness or capability this year.

The amount rescinded from DOD represents an increase of $300 million over the levels adopted by the Senate.

These reductions were necessary to ensure that these new appropriations did not increase the deficit, thus hampering our ability to provide needed funds for 1996.

All the military services have identified the severe cuts in training and readiness that will result if this bill is not enacted early this month.

Navy fleet steaming days will be reduced. Flight training will be reduced. Ships will not undergo needed overhaul at shipyards, resulting in substantial layoffs.

Air Force flight training will be slashed by 25 percent. Aircraft will be parked on the ramp, because they will not receive necessary depot maintenance.

In short, we face a return to the hollow force that many of us remember from the 1970's. We cannot permit this.

In the 1970's, that hollow force was the result of the Congress not appropriating the funds needed for military readiness. This crisis if the result of the President diverting the funding provided by Congress for the military.

Let me make clear, the 1995 Defense appropriations bill provided the funds needed to maintain military readiness and training for 1995.

During the last quarter of 1994, and the first quarter of 1995, the President used these funds to undertake the overseas missions in Kuwait, Korea, Bosnia, Iraq, Somalia, Cuba, and Haiti.

In no case did the President come to the Congress, to seek approval, and funding, for these missions.

The result was a $2.5 billion diversion of readiness and personnel appropriations.

I want the Senate to know that the appropriations committees of the House and Senate are determined in their commitment that this circumstance should not happen again.

Included in the statement of the managers on the conference report is an explicit statement of our objections to the course followed by the administration. This bipartisan, bicameral statement reflects our views. I ask unanimous consent that this statement be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONTINGENCY AND NONTRADITIONAL MISSIONS

The conferees express their deep concern over the process by which U.S. military forces are being deployed on major, large scale contingency operations. The conferees note that the Administration neither sought nor received advance approval of or funding for military operations from the Congress in support of peacekeeping and humanitarian missions. The missions involving Somalia, Rwanda, Haiti, and refugee relief in the Caribbean all mark significant departures from previous emergency deployments of American forces dealing with valid threats to the national security. The conferees strongly believe that military deployments in support of peacekeeping or humanitarian objectives both merit and require advance approval by the Congress.

This issue is of special concern to the conferees because of the effect these operations have had on the defense budgeting and planning process. There is the belief that the recent spate of “contingency” deployments, none of which was approved in advance by Congress nor budgeted for, have caused havoc upon the ability of the Department of Defense to maintain military readiness. These operations have led to substantial and repeated diversions of funds intended for training, equipment and property maintenance. From the Secretary of Defense to commanders in the field, there is universal acknowledgment that this practice has led to degradations of military readiness.

A related issue involves the rapid increase in Defense Department participation in activities which under both law and tradition are the responsibility of other Federal departments. The principal example of this trend is the use of DoD funds, personnel, and facilities to deal with the issue of Cuban and Haitian refugees. The operations involved in these missions has been almost entirely borne by the Department of Defense, even though other Federal entities have long had primary responsibility for dealing with refugees and immigration issues and have, in the past, reimbursed the Department of Defense for such support in accordance with the Economy Act. As presented, DoD would bear $1 million per day in costs for these operations, out of funds intended to be used for military operations, training, and readiness. The conferees believe DoD should not be forced to bear the cost of operations which are not its responsibility, especially when it results in a substantial diversion of funds provided by the Congress expressly for military activities.

These problems underline the need for the Executive to seek congressional approval for unanticipated nontraditional military operations in advance. The conferees intend to address these issues in connection with the fiscal year 1996 appropriations process, in order to avoid the recurrence of situations such as those which created the need for the appropriations contained in this measure. It strongly encourages Administration to provide detailed and timely proposals to assist in resolving these issues.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, there was no reluctance on the part of the conferees to meet the needs of our Armed Forces. This was accomplished in a fashion that is fully offset in new budget authority, and virtually offset in new outlays for 1995 from rescissions.

The Senate-passed version of this bill fully offset all new outlays. This conference agreement results in only $4.3 million in additional outlays for fiscal year 1995, though it provides over $3 billion in new spending.

I want to thank our chairman, Senator HATFIELD, and Senator BYRD for their leadership and commitment to move this bill forward prior to the recess.

In our first conference with the new House team, I want to report the exceptional efforts of the Defense Subcommittee chairman, BILL YOUNG, and the full committee chairman, Bob LIVNOSTON, to work with us to move this bill forward prior to the recess.

They drove a hard bargain of many of the differences between the two bills, but we were united on our commitment to meet the needs of the military services.

As I stated when this bill was presented to the Senate last month, the work of the Defense Subcommittee reflects the longstanding partnership between myself and Senator INOUYE on defense matters.

His efforts were invaluable in seeking compromises with the House on matters of interest to the Senate, and I am indebted to him once again for his hard work and wise counsel.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will act immediately to pass this conference report, and send this bill to the President.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I support adoption of this supplemental appropriation bill, H.R. 889, and compliment the distinguished chairman, Mr. HAYEFIELD, for his excellent work in putting together this conference report prior to the April break. It was a difficult task, but it was driven by the need to replenish vital funding for the readiness accounts of our armed services.

The conference agreement includes a total of over $3 billion for these vital defense purposes. These accounts were seriously depleted in fiscal year 1995 because of unanticipated operations, in particular Somalia, Rwanda, and Haiti, as well as elsewhere, and the conference had to balance this need to restore DOD readiness funding with the goal of maintaining our progress toward deficit reduction. The result was to show the strongest commitment to the priority items in the defense budget to replenish these readiness accounts.

Mr. President, I note that the conferees, in the statement of managers, have addressed their deep concern and desire not to perpetuate the problem of engaging in expensive, non-traditional, humanitarian-oriented military operations without a more careful assessment of the costs. The conference agreement rightly recommends that prior congressional approval should be sought and obtained for such operations. Given the budgetary constraints we are facing in discretionary spending, including defense spending, I do not think that the Congress will easily provide the funds in the future such as we have before us today, for operations which do not have the advance-approval of the Congress. Certainly it is in the interest of the President to have Congress on board if and when he decides to launch the Nation into these kinds of expensive, non-traditional operations, which are not directly related to the vital interests of the United States.

In addition to over $2 billion in DOD rescissions, the conference agreement includes a number of rescissions of international and domestic funds, including foreign operations, the Departments of Transportation, Commerce-Justice-State, Interior, Education, Veterans Affairs, and a variety of other accounts. The net effect of the bill on Federal spending is a reduction in excess of $700 million.

Again, I compliment the chairman of the committee, as well as the managers of the Defense Chapter, specifically, Mr. STEVENS and Mr. INOUYE for a particularly workman-like job in rearranging, in a deficit-neutral manner, the department’s accounts so as to support the basic readiness of our armed forces.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I want to commend my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee for a conference agreement which is, on the whole, an excellent bill. It is fully paid for.

It contains needed funds to reimburse DoD for the costs of conducting humanitarian and peacekeeping operations.

It provides full funding for authorized military personnel.

It rescinds $300 million from TRP and places restrictions on the ability to provide grants for projects with little or no military relevance.

It also rescinds $122 million from the Service R&D accounts for general science and technology programs—low-priority programs with little demonstrable relevance to defense requirements.

It puts in place a requirement to notify Congress in advance of large obligations from the Emergency and Extraordinary Expenses account.

It rescinds funding from excess Guard and Reserve equipment which was added by Congress.

It rescinds much of the funding in the BRAC cleanup and construction accounts that is recommended for resciss in H.R. 1158, the domestic rescission bill currently before the Senate.

I particularly want to thank my colleague from Montana, Senator BURNSS, for his successful efforts at obtaining an excellent compromise with the House regarding elimination of military construction at closing bases. I understand the opposition he faced in defending the provision adopted by the Senate, and I appreciate his diligence. The compromise—which prohibits obligation of funds for military construction at closing bases or for realigning functions—is actually an improvement over the Senate position, since it makes these funds available for other nonpriority defense purposes rather than returning them to the Treasury.

Mr. President, there are a few rescissions with which I am not in agreement, namely, the rescission of environmental cleanup funds in the Departments of Defense and Energy. I believe it is irresponsible to reduce these accounts at a time when all indications are that the cost of cleaning up Federal facilities is skyrocketing. These funds will likely have to be restored in the fiscal year 1996 appropriations process.

On March 1, I provided a list of more than $6 billion in suggested rescissions of low-priority and non-defense items funded in the fiscal year 1995 defense bill. With a few exceptions, the Senate chose not to rescind these funds, and they were therefore not within the scope of the conference. However, I believe rescinding earmarked funds would have been a much better decision for the conferees than rescinding environmental restoration funds.

In addition, I am disappointed that the conferees chose to restore $400 million for construction of two aeronautical wind tunnels, as proposed by the House. Our nation’s fiscal crisis requires that we eliminate projects that do not return good value to the American people. I believe half a billion dollars for two wind tunnels in New York, when many other train stations in the country could probably use some additional funds to upgrade their facilities. I understand that this requirement arises from safety concerns and recent fires at the station, but I have not seen any official estimates or certifications for this project.

I also question the necessity to set aside additional funds in this emergency bill to renovate Penn Station in New York. When many other train stations in the country could probably use some additional funds to upgrade their facilities. I understand that this requirement arises from safety concerns and recent fires at the station, but I have not seen any official estimates or certifications for this project.

I also question whether Penn Station can provide a return on this investment. As I have stated before, cost-sharing was an essential element of providing Federal funding for this project.
Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference agreement accompanying H.R. 889, the emergency defense supplemental appropriations and rescission bill for the fiscal year 1995.

The bill provides for a net decrease in fiscal year 1995 budget authority and outlays of $4.0 billion and $1.3 billion, respectively. These are real cuts to the deficit.

Title I of the bill provides supplemental appropriations of $3.1 billion in budget authority and $1.2 billion in outlays for the Department of Defense. These funds, largely for unanticipated contingency operations, are necessary to maintain the readiness of our Armed Forces.

This title also rescinds $2.9 billion in budget authority and $1.2 billion in outlays for various defense programs to help offset the cost of this additional military spending.

Title II provides for non-defense rescissions amounting to $1.1 billion in budget authority and $0.3 billion in outlays for fiscal year 1995. Most of these savings are to be devoted to deficit reduction.

The final bill does include the emergency designation for these additional funds as requested by the President and approved by the House.

I must note, however, that the spending in this bill is largely offset by the rescissions in the bill, and I think this is an important achievement by both the Senate and House.

I thank my colleagues for the fine job they have done, and I urge the adoption of this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tables showing the relationship of the pending bill to the Appropriations Committee 602 allocations and to the overall spending ceilings under the fiscal year 1995 budget resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1In accordance with the Budget Enforcement Act, these totals do not include $1,394 million in budget authority and $6,466 million in outlays in funding for emergencies that have been designated as such by the President and the Congress, and $877 million in budget authority and $935 million in outlays for emergencies that would be available only upon an official budget request from the President designating the entire amount as an emergency requirement.

2In accordance with the Budget Enforcement Act, these totals do not include $3,070 million in budget authority and $1,333 million in outlays in funding for emergencies that have been designated as such by the President and the Congress.

3Of the amounts remaining under the Labor-HHS Subcommittee’s 602(b) allocation, $1.3 million in outlays is available only for appropriations from the Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund.

4Of the amounts remaining under the Appropriations Committee’s 602(a) allocation, $1.3 million in budget authority and $1.4 million in outlays is available only for appropriations from the Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund.

Note: Details may not add to totals due to rounding.

Prepared by SBC majority staff, Apr. 6, 1995.
Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to note that the conference report for the Department of Defense supplemental appropriations bill includes an appropriation of $21.5 million for capital improvements associated with safety-related emergency repairs to Pennsylvania Station in New York City.

Pennsylvania Station is the busiest intermodal station in the Nation, with almost 40 percent of Amtrak’s passengers nationwide passing through every day. Unfortunately, it is also the most decrepit of the Northeast corridor stations, others of which, such as Washington, DC’s own Union Station, have been renovated with Federal grants. Today, Pennsylvania Station handles almost 500,000 riders a day in a subterranean complex that demands improvement. According to the New York City Fire Commissioner, there have been nine major fires at the station since 1987. Luckily, these fires have occurred at off-hours; as it stands, the station could not cope with an emergency when it is crowded with the 42,000 souls who pass through every workday between 8 and 9 a.m. In addition, structural steel in the station has shown its age and needs immediate repair. And these are just the most pressing needs.

There is a redevelopment plan to change things for the better, a $315 million project to renovate the existing Pennsylvania Station and extend it partially into the neighboring historic James A. Farley Post Office, almost doubling the emergency access to the station’s platforms which lie far below street level beneath both buildings. Moreover, there is a financing plan in place that could do this with $100 million from the Federal Government ($31.5 million has already been appropriated), $100 million from the State and city, and $115 million from a combination of historic tax credits, bonds supported by revenue from the project’s retail component, and building shell improvements by the Postal Service, owner of the James A. Farley Building. Governor Pataki of New York and Mayor Giuliani of New York City strongly support the project and have made available funding in their budgets in accordance with a Memorandum of Agreement signed in August, 1994.

Thanks to our colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations, $21.5 million can now be used immediately for pressing safety repairs at the existing station, in the first step of the overall redevelopment effort. These are the first Federal funds into the project that will actually go toward construction, and they will count towards the Federal share of the $315 million project to transform the station into a complex capable of safely handling the crowds that have made Pennsylvania Station the Nation’s busiest intermodal facility. For myself and the 75 million other people a year who use the station, I would like to thank all those who have labored hard to make the station safer, in particular our colleagues Senator HATFIELD, Senator BYRD, and Senator LAUTENBERG.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So the conference report was agreed to.
