PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 104th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 142

WASHINGTON, THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1996

No. 106

House of Representatives

The House met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. KOLBE].

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
July 18, 1996.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM KOLBE to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NEWT GINGRICH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our hearts, our thoughts, our prayers go out to the families of those whose lives were lost in the airplane tragedy of last evening. And yet, our words of comfort seem to fall short when we realize the depth of anguish and pain that they must feel. So we pray, O loving and gracious God, that Your words of eternal life and hope, Your spirit of grace, and Your hand of strength will be with them in this moment of great need. May Your peace, O God, that passes all human understanding, be with the families and all who mourn, now and evermore. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARR] come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. BARR of Georgia led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

S. Con. Res. 64. Concurrent resolution to recognize and honor the Filipino World War II veterans for their defense of democratic ideals and their important contribution to the outcome of World War II.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 497. An act to create the National Gambling Impact and Policy Commission.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

CRACK USERS ALLOWED TO WORK AT THE WHITE HOUSE

(Mr. FUNDERBURK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FUNDERBURK. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in testimony before the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee, two Secret Service agents, Arnold Cole and Jeffrey Undercoffer, testified that administration officials were allowed to work at the White House even though they were known to have been users of crack cocaine and other drugs.

Agent Cole testified that several White House employees were initially denied access to the White House because of their recent drug use, but were allowed to stay because they were placed in a special testing program.

It was also revealed late yesterday that Bill Clinton had personal knowledge of these events.

Certainly the White House cannot spin this as another bureaucratic snafu. How can the American people take Bill Clinton's war on drugs seriously when he thinks it is perfectly acceptable to hire employees who have smoked crack.

CALLING FOR INDEPENDENT COMMISSION ON ELECTION REFORM

(Mrs. MALONEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, reform week is here. The most important reform—campaign finance, will not get reformed. Everyone knows that money plays too much of a role in politics, everyone except the Republican Congress.

Under their extreme bill, a wealthy contributor can give three times what current law allows to Federal candidates. Three times the current limit to each national party committee. And, this bill allows over 10 times more money to State party committees. The Republican bill would allow $12.4 million in contributions from one family in a single election cycle. This isn't election reform, it's an auction.

I support the Democrat bill, the Farr bill, which voluntarily limits contributions and expenditures. The contrast between the two bills is staggering.

But, as much as we need campaign finance reform, I predict that partisanship will live and campaign finance reform will die. We don't need a Democratic bill or a Republican one—we need a workable one. The only way to do that is to create an independent commission to agree on general principles and develop a plan for a vote. Over a year ago, the Speaker and the President shook hands on it. Mr. Speaker, let's turn the promise of your handshake into the reality of a law.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SGT. EUGENE POPE ON HIS RETIREMENT AFTER OUTSTANDING CAREER IN LAW ENFORCEMENT

(Mr. BARR of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Sgt. Eugene Pope, who retired this week, from the Rome, GA, police force after 40 years of outstanding service.

Officer Pope began his law enforcement career in a time when officers actually walked their beats. Since then, he has held virtually every job in the Rome Police Department.

Gene Pope has served his city through an outstanding career and performed his duties as a police officer with pride and dignity. He has been acclaimed by his fellow officers as a loyal friend and dedicated policeman, true to his principles and the safety and well-being of his community.

His retirement, on July 15, 1996, marked a career in law enforcement that exemplifies leadership, courage, and devotion to duty.

He takes with him the respect and admiration of his fellow officers and leaves an example to those who follow.

On behalf of the citizens of Rome and Floyd County, as well as the people of the Seventh District of Georgia, I join in congratulating Sgt. Gene Pope, wish him well, and thank him for a job well done.

REPUBLICANS PULL THE PLUG ON REFORM WEEK

(Mr. DOGGETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, last year these Republicans promised revolution, a reformed Congress. Indeed America witnessed a year of zealotry that culminated in a billion and a half dollars of squandered taxpayer resources on costly Government shutdowns.

So this year the Republicans narrowed their focus from 1 year to 1 reform week. This week. And now that also has vanished because after weeks of Speaker GINGRICH trying to convince the American people that the solution to special interest influence in this Congress was more money and congress-sional campaigns instead of less special interest money, and when that approach was rejected by the citizen watchdog groups and even by a few Republicans, the Speaker pulled the plug on reform week.

It seems that yesterday's arrogant cries of revolution have been replaced by this year's whimpers of partisan failure.

TAXING EXORBITANT PAY OF MOVIE STARS, ATHLETES, AND CEO'S

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, last week we passed a cost-of-government-day resolution noting that the average person now pays half of his or her income in taxes counting taxes of all types: Federal, State, and local. This is terrible and getting worse, Mr. Speaker. President Clinton's budget estimated in 1994 that young people born that year would pay average lifetime tax rates of an incredible 82 percent. So I am no fan of higher taxes, and we need to drastically simplify our Tax Code. Yet I have come here this morning, Mr. Speaker, because of reports that a basketball player has now signed a 7-year, $140 million contract.

This is sickening. No one could ever really deserve or earn this much money. Most people will not earn this much, even one-tenth this much, in their entire careers, $20 million for playing basketball for 1 year.

I oppose increasing our overall tax burden, Mr. Speaker, but we need to greatly lower our taxes on middle and lower income people and make it up by greatly increasing our taxes on these movie stars, on the athletes and CEO's who are earning such exorbitant and undeserved rates of pay.

EXPRESSION OF PROFOUND SORROW TO FAMILIES AND FRIENDS OF THOSE ABOARD TWA FLIGHT 800

(Mr. GEPHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to express my personal sadness at the loss of 229 passengers and crewmembers, as a 747 airplane bound for Paris crashed into the Atlantic Ocean last night.

It is hard to even find words for the pain and confusion and grief that I feel and that all of us feel. I am especially concerned that some crewmembers and passengers might be from my own town of St. Louis. But we do know from news reports that wherever they came from, the victims include schoolchildren, and parents with children left behind.

This is a time for all Americans to come together, and grieve together, to realize that while there may be no way to make sense of this kind of tragedy, no way to find meaning in its loss, it is a reminder of how precious our lives and our community really are.

On behalf of the Congress, I can only say that we are committed to finding the facts that lay behind this profound tragedy. In the meantime, my heart goes out to the families and friends of those aboard flight 800, and those still waiting to learn if a friend or a loved one may have been on board. Their loss is our loss, and we stand with them in this terrible and difficult time.

PERMISSION FOR SUNDRY COMMITTEES AND THEIR SUBCOMMITTEES TO SIT TODAY DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I, and I am sure all Members, would like to associate themselves with the very fine remarks made by the minority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT].

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following committees and their subcommittees be permitted to sit today while the House is meeting in the Committee of the Whole House under the 5-minute rule: The Committee on Banking and Financial Services, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Economic and Educational Opportunities, the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Resources, the Committee on Science, the Committee on Small Business, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the minority has been consulted and there is no objection to these requests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3734, WELFARE AND MEDICAID REFORM ACT OF 1996

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 482 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 482

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3734) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 201(a)(1) of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1997. All time for general debate under the terms of the order of the House of July 17, 1996, shall be considered as expired. Further general debate shall be confined to the bill and amendments specified in this resolution and shall not exceed two hours equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Budget. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. An amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of H.R. 3829, modified by the amendment printed in part 1 of the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution, shall be considered as adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. The bill, as amended, shall be considered as the original bill for the purpose of further amendment and shall be considered as read. No other amendment shall be in order except (1) the further amendment printed in part 2 of the report of the Committee on Rules, which may be offered only by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget or his designee, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole; and (2) a further amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of H.R. 3832, which may be offered only by the minority leader or his designee, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, and shall not be subject to amendment. All points of order against the further amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill, as amended, for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill, as amended, to the House with such further amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, and any further amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, this is a modified closed rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 3474, the Personal Responsibility Act of 1996, a major reform measure. As Members know, this has twice attempted to reform welfare only to be stopped dead by a Presidential veto. It is my hope that three times will prove to be the charm and we can actually succeed in ending welfare as we know it.

This rule waives all points of order against consideration of the bill and provides 2 hours of additional general debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Budget.

As Members know, a unanimous consent agreement was reached to allow Members to proceed last night with 2 hours of general debate so today's time will bring to 4 hours the general debate time.

This legislation is brought to the House under the procedures of reconciliation as provided by the budget resolution we adopted earlier this year. For that reason, the time is controlled by the Committee on the Budget, although I know members of the Committee on Ways and Means and agriculture committees will have time to comment on the bill's provisions.

The rule provides for the adoption in the House and the Committee of the Whole an amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of H.R. 3829, as modified by the amendment printed in part 1 of our committee on Rules report. This amendment makes this complex bill better and broadens its support.

It includes a review of State work requirements, limits on transfers into title XX programs, an assurance that States may spend their own money even after the 5-year Federal limit is reached, a compromise on the so-called maintenance of effort requirement that States have, and Medicaid contingent for cases where work requirements are not satisfied. These provisions are highly technical but also extremely important to the ability of our States to make the best use of these reforms.

In addition, the amendment incorporated by this rule addresses the issue of child support and the allocation of fees, ensuring that a percentage of such funds are dedicated to local child support offices.

The rule further provides that the text of H.R. 3829, as modified by the amendment I have just described, shall be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment. In that regard, the rule provides for consideration of an amendment printed in part 2 of the Committee on Rules report, if offered by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget or his designee, which shall be debatable for 20 minutes, equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent. This amendment shall not be subject to amendment and all points of order against it are waived. It provides for a more stringent work requirement for able-bodied adult food stamp recipients who have no dependents.

In addition, the rule provides for consideration of a second amendment printed in part 2 of the Committee on Rules report if offered by the minority leader or his designee. All points of order against this amendment, which consists of the text of H.R. 3832, are also waived.

This amendment shall be debatable for 1 hour, with the time equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent. This amendment shall not be subject to amendment. It is my understanding that this amendment reflects the bipartisan proposal put forth by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER]. Some Members know of this as the Castle-Tanner amendment.

Finally, the rule provides for a motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, it is a somewhat complicated rule, as I have just described, but it is fair, it is comprehensive, and it does the job very well. This is an extremely complicated subject. Welfare reform has been one of the most vexing issues in modern times. Our majority has made it a priority to address the root causes of the failure of the current welfare system.

I think everyone now agrees that the welfare system is, indeed, failing us as Americans. Thirty years and more than $5 trillion after it began, welfare programs we know today have very little to show for all of the good intentions they had; they have very little to show, tragically, except a self-perpetuating cycle of dependency. We have more children and families than ever before trapped today by the very same programs that were designed to set them free from poverty.

It is a devastating fact that more than three-quarters of those folks currently on welfare will stay on for more than 5 years. In fact, the average family on welfare stays on for 13 years.

Mr. Speaker, the bill we consider today and hopefully send to the President, and receive his signature this time, is a bold break with the failed policies of welfare as we know it. This bill says that we are committed to moving people off welfare into productive jobs. This bill says we trust our State and our local officials to make crucial decisions about solving their own welfare problems.

This bill says that if you are able to work, we will help you get training and show you the way. But we expect you to go to work in exchange for cash benefits. This bill says if you are on welfare and you have more children, your benefits will not increase unless your State votes to allow it.

This bill says States can enforce some tough love policies when it comes to requiring unmarried teenagers who have children to live with an adult and stay in school. This bill cracks down on deadbeat parents and boosts child support enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize what this bill does not do. This bill does not take away the safety net for children. In fact, this bill has increased levels of funding for child care programs so parents can make the transition from welfare to work. This is not a small matter. It is in excess of $4.5 billion, so I am told.

This bill also ensures that families will continue to receive food stamps, nutrition assistance, and health care. Even if they lose their cash benefits they will still be able to get these emergency needs met.

This bill also grants States the flexibility to exempt up to 20 percent of their caseload from the 5-year limit, to deal with those who cannot make the transition from welfare to work. And there will be some, and they are provided for.

The bottom line is that we have tried the one-size-fits-all, Washington-knows-best approach to welfare, and it has failed. It has failed tragically. It has failed miserably. It has failed pathetically. Our States and localities are asking for opportunity to do better.

Under this bill, welfare reform programs such as Wisconsin Works and Florida's WAGES initiative will no longer be derailed by the Federal bureaucracy. Under this bill States will utilize on-target, creative solutions within a flexible and responsible Federal framework.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is also a budget saver. It does provide for an increase of $137 billion of the taxpayers' dollars over the next 6 years as compared with what we spent on welfare in the last 6 years, but it meets our budget targets.

We are demonstrating that we can invest in our people, provide new opportunities to better deliver necessary services, and to still meet our budget targets. That is what we mean by ending welfare as we know it. We are offering something better, much better. It is true reform.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD a document entitled "The Amendment Process Under Special Rules."

The material referred to is as follows:

THE AMENDMENT PROCESS UNDER SPECIAL RULES REPORTED BY THE RULES COMMITTEE,¹ 103D CONGRESS V. 104TH CONGRESS

[As of July 17, 1996]

Rule type	103d Congress		104th Congress
	Number of rules	Percent of total	Number of rules	Percent of total
Open/Modified-Open ²	46	44	79	59
Structured/Modified Closed ³	49	47	37	28
Closed ⁴	9	9	17	13
Total	104	100	133	100

² An open rule is one under which any Member may offer a germane amendment under the five-minute rule. A modified open rule is one under which any Member may offer a germane amendment under the five-minute rule subject only to an overall time limit on the amendment process and/or a requirement that the amendment be preprinted in the Congressional Record.

³ A structured or modified closed rule is one under which the Rules Committee limits the amendments that may be offered only to those amendments designated in the special rule or the Rules Committee report to accompany it, or which preclude amendments to a particular portion of a bill, even though the rest of the bill may be completely open to amendment.

⁴ A closed rule is one under which no amendments may be offered (other than amendments recommended by the committee in reporting the bill).

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, welfare reform is a very serious issue.

There is probably not a person in this country who thinks we should leave our welfare system as it is.

But there are also about a million suggestions out there as to how to fix it.

Unfortunately, my Republican colleagues have taken the wrong suggestions.

This Gingrich welfare bill, Mr. Speaker, is tough on children, weak on work, and soft on deadbeat parents.

Luckily, this rule will allow the House to vote on another, much better, bipartisan welfare bill.

Mr. Speaker, the American people have said time and time again that they want us to work together. They have said that they want us to put politics aside and work for the benefits to the entire country.

They have also said that they want to see fewer people on welfare and more people out there working for a living.

And today, Mr. Speaker, we have a chance to give the American people what they asked for.

We have a bill crafted by Republicans and Democrats alike. We have a bill President Clinton believes he can sign. And we have a bill that takes some serious steps toward helping parents find and keep work without punishing their children for their parents' poverty.

And today we will have a chance to vote for either that bill or the Gingrich bill.

It's question of priorities.

And, on the subject of priorities, Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to remind my colleagues of something I think is very very important—when we talk about welfare, when we talk about food stamps—we are talking about children, about 15 million American children who live in poverty in this country today. And Mr. Chairman, as far as I'm concerned this Congress has no greater responsibility than to those children.

About two out of every three people on welfare is a child, Mr. Speaker. A fact that I think is too often overlooked.

So when we talk about welfare, let's remember that its full name is Aid to Families With Dependent Children—and those children are depending on us to take care of them, regardless of who their parents are or whether they have a job. For that reason, this Republican welfare proposal is woefully inadequate.

The Republican welfare bill will cut food stamps for families of three earning $6,250 a year. Most families with children will lose $470 a year in food stamp benefits.

The Republican welfare bill will push over 1 million children into poverty.

It will decrease the likelihood that poor children get the medical attention they need by failing to guarantee Medicaid eligibility.

The Republican welfare bill actually weakens current law and increases Federal costs in updating child support orders.

And the Republican bill has an extremely weak work program which will not help parents get jobs to support their families but will more likely leave poor children, and their parents, out in the street.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues, when you think about welfare reform, remember: The majority of people on welfare are poor children who need every single bit of help this Congress and this country can give them.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that apparently we have received the approbation of the minority with the rule. We may not agree on all of the exact bits and tenets of the different versions of the welfare bill, but we apparently have a good rule on the floor. I am pleased that everybody agrees with that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman from Sanibel, FL, for yielding me the time. I will not take that much time, because this is a good rule.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in very strong support of the rule and the very vital underlying legislation it brings to the floor. I concur with the gentleman from Florida, with everything he has said about the failed welfare system in this country. The status quo, Mr. Speaker, must go. This bill guarantees that it will go.

Mr. Speaker, the welfare reform issue at the national level I think is very difficult for the American people to track, as President Clinton's position seems to twist and contort with each new development that the States bring forward, the States who know how to deal with it. As many Members are aware, it is the States, our laboratories of democracy, that have pioneered welfare reform, which attempts to grapple with the problem of poverty at the local community level, and that is where we need to deal with it, not inside this beltway here.

The Clinton administration, through bureaucratic inertia, has blocked these bold efforts at the State and local levels. They have blocked it time and time again right in my own State of New York by not giving us the States' rights ability to deal with these problems.

The recent experience of the State of Wisconsin, attempting to receive Federal waivers through the Federal bureaucracy, just like my State of New York has tried to do, and the overwhelming endorsement of this program on this floor by a vote of 289 to 136, that is overwhelming, is a compelling argument that the waiver process should be junked. The fact that imaginative and creative local officials must traipse to Washington and get down on their hands and knees and beg for approval to implement reforms that their constituents want, Mr. Speaker, is an absolute disgrace.

This bill provides local flexibility to deal with these important problems. My constituents in upstate New York want to help lower income families and single moms with kids, but they want to do it in their own communities with their own solutions, not with Washington solutions, which have failed so miserably by creating second- and third- and now fourth-generation welfare recipients.

Most importantly, this Personal Responsibility Act of 1996, the welfare bill before us, requires work for able-bodied people. It imposes time limits on benefits that recipients may receive.

Twice this week, at around midnight, I have an apartment over across the river in Virginia, and when I left here at 11 or 12 o'clock at night I went into a chain grocery store called the Giant grocery store. And as I was shopping there, getting some food to go home and eat at midnight, which you should not do, Mr. Speaker, I watched the people going through those checkout lines. They were very, very young people, I think 19, 20, 21 years old, I do not think they were parents. One fellow was drunk as a skunk and he had a whole handful of food stamps, and he could not even count them. The things they were buying were not nutritious food.

Those are the things that we deal with in this bill. In other words, we cannot let people like that continue to be second-, third-, and fourth-generation welfare recipients. We want to help them. We want to establish a work program and let them get off this welfare and become meaningful citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is about time for the President to become a player in this debate, especially in light of his ambitious promise on this subject in his 1992 campaign. If one were to listen to his recent speeches on this subject, one might think that he is an individual who truly supports welfare reform. A casual observer may forget that it was President Clinton, as the gentleman from Florida has said, who has now twice vetoed compassionate welfare reform in this body.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but I think we all understand the issue. We need to get this bill on the floor, we need to pass it, and we need to get it to the President's desk so that he can sign it.

I urge strong support of the bill and I urge the President to make the compassionate public policy choice and to sign this bill.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

We all hear stories about abuse of welfare, but all I want is for everybody in this Chamber to realize that 2 out of every 3 people on welfare are children. I think that is a fact that we overlook too often. We hear all the stories about food stamps and the people buying all kinds of things. I remember President Reagan brought some abuse of welfare to light and when it was investigated it could never have happened and it did not happen. Let us not look at some of the false stereotypes we fall into and just remember the full name of welfare is Aid to Families with Dependent Children. They are dependent upon us. I think we should remember that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. MEEK].

(Mrs. MEEK of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule to H.R. 3437, a rule that is designed to protect this fatally flawed bill.

There are two main problems with this legislation as I see it. First of all, we need to separate politics and bipartisanship from the lives of children in this country. Until we do that, we will see this kind of report coming before the Congress. We were elected to represent the people and not any particular political party. Let us put the children in the middle of this and let our influence start out from there.

One is the harsh treatment of legal U.S. residents in this bill. Children are in that minority of legal immigrants you are talking about. You want to ban food stamps from these people and these children, you want to ban SSI from them, and you want to keep them from becoming what they could, and, that is, true American citizens as you have become. The bill even bans non-emergency medical care under Medicaid for new legal immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell Members a little bit about these people that the Republican majority wants to cut out in this rule. They have played by the rules. They meet every requirement of the law. They live and they work hard. They pay taxes. They serve in the military. You are going to say to me that you are not going to protect their children? This rule does that. So you want to be sure to look at these flaws.

The other one is the costs that were paid by the Federal Government for care, AFDC and welfare to these children will now be paid by the States. You keep talking about States rights but you are not giving them that much money to do the job you want them to do. All of this is going to be shifted to the counties and the States. This is an unfunded mandate, if you ask me, because what they are going to do is make the States and the counties provide the medical care which they cannot provide wholly. So we are going to have a 2- or 3-tier system of health care for these people.

Let me give a concrete idea of how unfair this rule is in protecting this bill. My own State of Florida estimates it will lose almost $600 million a year in Federal funds because of this bill. What are they going to do with these funds? They were designed to protect the children. Now what you are doing, and let no one fool us, this particular rule is there just to protect this bill.

The second thing it does, it takes away the earned income tax credit which is saying we are going to help you on one hand and then we are going to take it away on the other. Every time I come to this floor I talk about the earned income tax credit because it is for the working poor to protect their children. I want to say to this Congress, there is no reason why you should let this flawed rule take care of a flawed bill. The best thing to do is to vote against the rule. That will put some stops on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I want the American public to know that what the Republicans are doing is taking away the safety net for children.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I would just note for the record that this is H.R. 3734. I think it has been misspoken a few times this morning as H.R. 3437, for those Members who are watching and tracking. It is H.R. 3734.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from San Dimas, CA [Mr. DREIER], the distinguished vice chairman of the Rules Committee.

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me this time. Let me begin, as many of my colleagues have this morning, in extending our heartfelt thoughts and prayers to those loved ones of the victims of the tragic TWA Flight 800 crash that took place off Long Island last night.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that I strongly support this rule. I do so because we have been struggling for years and years and years to try and reform the welfare system. From our side of the aisle, there have been a wide range of proposals over the past several years designed to do just that, to try and end welfare as we know it.

We were all very enthused in 1992 with the commitment that President Clinton made to end welfare as we know it, and I have to say that right after that election in 1992, I had the privilege of writing an article for my home town newspaper, the Los Angeles Times, in which I stated that I looked forward to working with the President on issues like reforming welfare, because when he said that he was committed to ending welfare as we know it, we all took him at his word.

Now I believe that we have put together a product that I hope he will be able to sign. We know that he has twice vetoed the welfare reform package that we have moved out of this Congress, and it has been very, very difficult for us to face the fact the President who wanted to end welfare as we know it would veto welfare reform legislation, but I hope and pray that this will do it.

Why? Because we are not only concerned about those U.S. taxpayers who are saddled with perpetuating the cradle-to-the-grave welfare system that we have had over the past three decades, but we are equally if not more concerned with those people who have been subjected to the welfare state for years and years and years and have seen the perpetuation of this cycle, generational cycle, of dependence.

My friend from Sanibel, Florida [Mr. GOSS] talked about the fact that we have seen the average use of the welfare system, 13 years. We also know of extreme examples where it has gone on for generation after generation. We looked at the poverty rate as it existed in the mid 1960's when the Great Society began and the War on Poverty began, and the poverty rate was about 14.7 percent.

Beginning with the Great Society programs, we started spending billions and billions of dollars, and we have now spent $5.3 trillion on subventions combating the welfare problem. What is it that we have seen? Well, the poverty rate has gone from 14.7 percent up to 15.1 percent.

Mr. Speaker, there is bipartisan recognition, Democrats and Republicans alike. Democrats who represent constituents who are on welfare and subjected to this generational cycle of welfare, they acknowledge that the welfare system that we have today has failed. That is why I believe that we are taking a very positive step in finally moving forward with this.

My friend from Glens Falls, I am told, just mentioned a situation that he encountered last night when he was in a grocery store looking at someone who was obviously abusing the Food Stamp Program. just a couple of hours ago I was running here on Capitol Hill and I was around one of the parks, and I was over at one of the benches and had seen a number of people who obviously rely on food stamps for their survival, and what was on the ground but cracked crab legs.

It seems to me that when we have people who are abusing the Food Stamp Program and living extraordinarily well off the Food Stamp Program, it obviously is a system that has failed. That is why looking at creative approaches, as the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Ways and Means have done, and allowing the amazing proposals that have come from States like Massachusetts under Governor William Weld and Wisconsin under Governor Tommy Thompson, my State of California, Governor Pete Wilson's action allowing creativity for dealing with poverty and the welfare structure, to come from those States is, I believe, a very positive sign.

Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the fact that we, I believe, have legislation which President Clinton will be able to sign, and I am pleased that also it is very bipartisan. I hope we will be able to move ahead as expeditiously as possible to get this measure to his desk so that we can all be part of ending welfare as we know it.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, once again we all hear horror stories, but as far as the definition of food, I think crab legs is a healthy diet. It is not ketchup. I think it is something that could be bought with stamps. I think that that is not a bad diet.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY].

(Ms. WOOLSEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, for certain it is getting closer to election day. I understand that my friends on the other side of the aisle want to take credit for getting tough on welfare. But what they are really doing is getting tough on children. You see, when I look at the welfare reform bill, it leaves me asking, What about the children? Two out of three welfare recipients are children. Have they forgotten about the children? Apparently so. Because, Mr. Speaker, this bill demands that mothers go to work but fails to provide the education, the training, and the support that these mothers need to take care of their children so that they can get off welfare permanently.

When a mother is kicked off the welfare rolls, there is no safety net for her children, no guarantee that her children will receive food and shelter, no guarantee that they will have any medical care, no guarantee that they can survive. In fact, this bill says to poor children, "Don't get hungry, don't get sick and for heaven's sake, don't get cold, because your time is up and we don't think you're important enough to protect you."

Mr. Speaker, no other Member of this body knows better than I do how wrong this is. This is the wrong way to fix the welfare system. When I was a single working mother with three small children, my children were 1, 3, and 5 years old, I could not have stayed in the work force without the safety net of health care, child care, and food for my children. That safety net was provided by the welfare system.

I urge my colleagues, do not take this vote lightly. Do not vote for this rule. This bill is not about helping welfare recipients, about helping people get off welfare and into jobs that pay a livable wage. Rather, it is a vote for making poor children even poorer despite the political hoopla, despite all this rhetoric around the debate. Your vote today is a matter of life and death for millions and millions of children. Make no mistake, your vote will have consequences for children long after election day.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, we hear the tales about generation after generation of people on welfare. The statistics as I have heard them is that the average stay on welfare is 2 years, single female, white. I would just like to clarify that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE].

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule because I do not believe it allows for sufficient amendments that would change this terrible Republican leadership bill. I do want to say, though, that I am pleased that the Castle-Tanner substitute is in order because I think that that does make things better, if you will, for the two major problems that I see with this Republican legislation. One is that it really does not do anything to get people to work or provide the resources so that the States can get people off welfare and get a job.

Second, because this Republican legislation also is very tough on kids and basically takes away almost all the protections for children that exist in the current system, the Castle-Tanner substitute would at least provide sufficient or at least more resources to get people to work and, also, I think, protect that safety net for children.

I was listening to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] said about the need for a compassionate public policy, and that that is why this Republican bill has been brought forward, but I would say this does just the opposite.

If we want to get people to work, if we want to protect kids in a situation where we are changing radically the nature of the welfare system, then we cannot move forward with this Republican bill.

I wanted to mention two things, because I listened to what some of my colleagues said on the other side. The gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] talked about the fraud in the welfare system. He mentioned the crab legs. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] talked about people waiting in line who he did not think needed welfare. Well, do not give us these examples, which are a small percentage of the people that are on welfare.

In addition to that, this Republican bill does not do anything to curb fraud or to end benefits for people who fail to comply with work requirements or to reduce administrative costs in the welfare program. The largest share of this Republican welfare bill's cuts or savings would come from across-the-board cuts in the food stamp benefit program.

What that means is that the average person who gets food stamps now is not going to be able to continue to have a sufficient level of food.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to say that if the Republican welfare bill goes through, this pushes 1 million children into poverty, and this is from a family that already has one parent working.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I was very dismayed yesterday because I thought that we were going to bring this bill to the floor and that a bill, the Castle-Tanner bill, would not be allowed to be debated and voted on, and I found out I was wrong. That is why I am going to vote for this rule and speak for this rule because it allows Castle-Tanner to come to the floor.

The Castle-Tanner bill answers the Republican demand for State flexibility at the same time that it looks to the concerns of Democrats for protecting children. Most important, the bill addresses the bipartisan desire to make welfare to work, the transition and the main point.

I am not suggesting Castle-Tanner is perfect, because no compromise is, and the men and women that worked on this bill worked very hard to bring about a bill that I think, under the right circumstance, we all could vote for. The Castle-Tanner bill would require work after 2 years and it would pose a 5-year limit, like the majority bill does. However, unlike the majority's bill, the legislation would not prevent States from helping children at the point where their parents get cut off.

Second, food stamps. The Castle-Tanner bill would reform the food stamp program, but it would not threaten the nutritional safety net established by an optional food stamp block program.

We have heard talk this morning about food stamps. Of course we all know of situations where there has been abuse of food stamps, but what many of us who come from cities know about is the need, the absolute importance for food stamps for young children and for their nutritional futures and for their health in their future.

I know, having worked with food stamps for years, that crab is nutritional and crab certainly is under the guidelines, and what gets us off the track is when we start getting into these anecdotal situations.

Third, unlike the majority legislation before us, Castle-Tanner has mandatory funding needed to make tough work requirements a reality. All of us have read the Congressional Budget Office letter that has already predicted that many States will not meet the majority's work requirement because the bill does not have adequate funding in it.

Finally, the bipartisan Castle-Tanner bill does not consider State accountability incompatible with State flexibility. The bill has a strong maintenance-of-effort requirement, and I salute the majority for increasing their maintenance-of-effort requirement just very recently, but Castle-Tanner still has the best, and that is 85 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with every policy decision in the Castle-Tanner bill, but I do commend the people for getting together from both sides of the aisle to make this bill a bill, as I said, that we can all vote for because it represents a good faith effort to find the common ground on welfare reform.

Welfare reform is an issue we all agree on. Welfare reform is something that has to be done. The status quo is not working. So I urge all my colleagues to vote for a bill that would demand responsibility, reward work, protect children, and I thank the chairman of the Committee on Rules for letting Castle-Tanner come to the floor.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to say that the CBO has said that most States cannot meet the work requirements, given the resources the Republicans wanted to vote to the cause of work. In fact, the Republicans, according to CBO, their bill is $10 billion short of what the CBO said is needed for the work program.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

(Mr. LEVIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, welfare reform is essential. It is about getting people off welfare into work and helping, not hurting, the child; in a word, tough on work, protective of children. That is the American value.

When this process started last year, the Republican proposals were weak on work, tough on kids, not providing any additional resources to States to help move welfare recipients into work, causing people to go without health care if they went to work, providing no or inadequate day care for children, hitting severely handicapped kids, and raising taxes on low- to moderate-income working families.

The Republicans have moved away in some areas from extreme or inadequate positions, but they have considerably further to go. Castle-Tanner is much stronger on work and providing resources to the States to get people to work, in requiring States to use Federal moneys for welfare to work, not for other purposes, and in making sure that if a recession hits, people who want to work or kids who are innocent bystanders do not get hurt.

Taking food from kids is not welfare reform, whether the parent is a citizen or other legal resident. The Republican bill does far too much of this. Tanner-Castle is more protective of children.

Tanner-Castle has been the only bipartisan effort in the House. We need more, not less of such effort. The only way to achieve more is to vote for Tanner-Castle and against the Republican bill. That is the best hope that in the end welfare reform will be what it must be, not a political football but an instrument to break the cycle of dependency for the sake of parents, surely of their children, and for taxpayers who foot the bill.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WYNN] who knows something about crab cakes.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this rule. It supports a very bad welfare reform bill. That is unfortunate, because in point of fact we ought to put people to work.

The welfare system should be reformed, and we ought to set time limits for people receiving welfare. The problem is the Republican bill hurts children and does not do a lot about putting people to work. It hurts innocent children because there are no vouchers in the program.

What happens at the end of the period for benefits? The children are hurt because there are no provisions made after the benefits are exhausted. Three hundred thousand legal immigrant children will be harmed because they will be ineligible for food stamps. Why is that? Why are we hurting children? Let us just put people to work; 1.2 million women and children will lose Medicaid benefits. They will not have health care. Why are we doing that? That does not have anything to do with putting people to work.

The bill is weak on work. Fortunately, we have an alternative. The Castle-Tanner bill makes provisions. It provides vouchers for when benefits are exhausted. It provides continued Medicaid coverage so children can get health care. It provides food stamps for legal immigrant children so that they will not starve.

The Republican proposal is weak on work. According to the CBO, the bill is $12 billion short of what is needed to meet the work requirements. It is an unfunded mandate on the States. The CBO, one of their favorite authorities, also says they do not provide adequate child care. They are $800 million short in terms of adequate child care benefits.

On the other hand, the bipartisan Castle-Tanner alternative provides additional funds for work. They provide an additional $2 billion to provide child care so that people can go to work.

We are not debating whether we ought to reform the welfare system; we are debating what makes sense and whether we ought to punish children as the price of welfare reform.

Mr. Speaker, I urge rejection of the Republican proposal.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, could you inform my dear friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS], and myself how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] has 11¼ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware, Governor CASTLE.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding me this time.

I would like to address my comments this morning strictly to this rule, rather than either to Castle-Tanner or to the bill itself, because the rule is a little bit different than some of the rules we normally take up here on the floor, in that it has a self-enacting amendment in it that has some substantive concerns that I think we really need to at least bring forth.

Let me just say first and foremost, and I think this is vitally important, I very much appreciate the very good work which the Committee on Rules has done. They have allowed, in a free-standing way, the Castle-Tanner legislation, which is the Gephardt substitute in this rule, to come to the floor.

There will be no objections as to dollars. There is a dollar differential; it is $53 billion versus $60-some in the Republican bill, but it will be allowed to be considered. That was a concern of mine, and it was a concern of a number of my contemporaries on the other side of the aisle, and I am very pleased that was able to be worked out. That is important, I think, for the whole process of hearing and voting in this Chamber. And, of course, I am supportive of that legislation.

I want to point out, however, that there are some changes in the rule that we should pay some attention to, and there are five that I have singled out here that we need to look at.

One is the review of the implementation of the State work programs. It would be an understatement to say that this is going to be simple. When we require people to work for a number of hours, and we require up to 35 hours a week, when we require a percentage of the population, up to 50 percent of the welfare population, to be able to go to work, we have to keep track of that. We have to determine what work is. We have to go through definitional phases. Benefits can be lost or whatever it may be.

I think it is extremely important that we make sure that is going to be able to work. And one of the amendments here states that 3 years after enactment, the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Banking and Financial Services shall conduct hearings and other appropriate activities to review the status of these areas. And that is before they get into the greater demands, because it is on an incremental basis. That is a very important change.

Another important change is the limitation on amounts which can be transferred to the title XX programs. This is a social service block grant. There are several block grants being set up; most of them deal with welfare: The TANF, the transitional aid to needy families, the child care, and the child welfare.

We are all for transferring to child care where necessary. It allows the 30-percent transfer. But when we get into social services, there are certain areas that are not as welfare oriented, and it also points out that all funds so transferred into the social service block grant must be services for children or their families, so that it keeps that money in welfare, so that States cannot all of a sudden fund other programs away from welfare. We thought that was a very significant change to make, and we did get it.

It also states very clearly there will be no limitations on State spending beyond the 5 years. I am not totally happy that some of the Federal benefits are going to be eliminated all together, although I am an absolute believer that welfare should cease after 5 years, but I think there are certain vouchers and other things that should be continued. They are not going to be, but I want to make sure that States would have the ability to do that with their own money, and it does state that very clearly.

The maintenance of effort has been raised by what the States have to do. I am also concerned the States are going to step back, and we have raised that to 80 percent in this legislation, or 75 percent if the States do a good job. So that what they have done starting in 1994, in terms of funding, would have to continue as far as the future is concerned.

We have made in the modifications to the legislation in this rule, specifically in this rule, not as a separate amendment to come up, we have made some positive changes which makes the bill more palatable even to those who might object. I understand that some may object otherwise. At least there has been consideration of various areas that I think needed to be examined if we were going to be able to support the legislation.

I think with the combination of being able to allow Castle-Tanner to come to the floor to be debated, with the changes which are here, the rule is a good rule. That does not mean you have to agree with the underlying legislation. That is up to everyone here. I happen to be very supportive.

Obviously, it is Castle-Tanner and I will support the Republican proposal, too. But it does mean that we will have the opportunity for full and open debate. I also appreciate the fact that there are 2 extra hours so that everyone's views can be aired. This is a very, very important subject. It is not simple. This legislation is not simple. The interactions with these families and these children are very complicated. Putting the programs in place in the States is also very complicated, and we need to do this very carefully. I think this rule at least gives us that opportunity. I support the rule and would urge everybody to do so.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank very much the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY].

I rise this morning to consistently repeat what I have already said, that I enjoy and appreciate the need for real welfare reform. I would hope, however, that we as Americans would focus on ensuring that our children would fare well. The Republican bill cuts some $60 billion from our children.

I rise this morning to support this rule because I want us to discuss on the floor of the House today a real way to reform welfare. I want the American public to understand that many times welfare goes to those families who in economic recessions or depressions lose the opportunity to work and, therefore, food stamps are a necessity for survival. The Republican plan block grants, puts a certain small amount of money for food stamps; and when a crisis occurs in a community and there is need for the bridge for those families once they can find work, we have no resources in the Republican plan.

The Castle-Tanner bill does answer that question. In fact, even when there is a cutoff time, the Castle-Tanner bill allows States to provide vouchers. The Castle-Tanner bill recognizes that legal immigrants pay taxes and they are in fact contributors to this community and they have children. It provides a bridge for those children so that we do not become a burden on local communities. The Republican bill cuts off those who work hard in this country. Then I offered an amendment yesterday evening to respect work and to respect the women in my district on welfare who have said to me: Congresswoman, we want to work. But we need child care, job training, health care and, yes, jobs.

I offered an amendment that would provide transitional child care once a parent gets a job and needs to work. The Republican bill does not offer sufficient child care. Then with the idea of Medicaid, who in their right mind would not want children to have good health care?

I will support this rule because I want real welfare. I want Americans to fare well. I would hope that we would defeat ultimately the Republican plan.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. VELÁZQUEZ].

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to the welfare budget agreement. Once again, a far-right, out-of-touch, radical minority is pushing for welfare reform that eliminates survival programs that millions of poor children desperately depend on.

The cuts in this bill are vicious. H.R. 3734 would block grant AFDC benefits and arbitrarily throw thousands of children and families off the welfare rolls after 2 years—even if they cannot find a job.

Genuine welfare reform must help poor people gain the skills and resources needed to become self-sufficient. Yet this short-sided bill includes work requirements without providing jobs. In fact, according to the CBO, most States will not be able to satisfy the work requirements included in H.R. 3734.

This bill also gives legal immigrants the shaft. Most of us here today descended from immigrant roots. Yet H.R. 3734 calls for an unprecedented denial of benefits for legal immigrants who, despite their contributions by working hard and paying taxes, fall on hard times.

I support real welfare reform, but not by hurting children, not on the backs of legal immigrants and not without real job creation. The main target of any welfare legislation ought to be poverty, not children.

This bill is an outrage. I implore my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to support fairness and basic decency and reject this heartless legislation.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT].

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, Americans realize that the welfare system is working neither for the taxpayer nor for those it is designed to help. But the question is not whether to change the system but how to change it.

The question is, will we provide the means to escape welfare or will we simply be plain mean to poor people? Like most every other problem that this Gingrich Congress has faced, the best way to solve the problem is with a bipartisan approach. I have not found any party or, for that matter, any individual who has got a perfect answer to this challenge.

Unfortunately, like strengthening Medicare, like trying to get a balanced budget, like trying to avert these costly Gingrich Government shutdowns, when some of us have said, let us work together and find a common moderate approach, others have replied, it is NEWT's way or no way.

That is where we are this morning. Do we pursue a bipartisan approach such as that advanced by Governor CASTLE and by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. TANNER, and try to place the emphasis not on targeting poor kids but targeting what is wrong in this system, or do we take an extreme approach that is more designed to address the political welfare needs of those who have failed again and again in this Congress rather than repairing the real welfare reform system?

I believe we have got an approach that will work, imperfectly, to get us out of the welfare problems we have today. Let us get about adopting it in a bipartisan way.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. BLUMENAUER].

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, we have reached a point where there is a national consensus that is emerging that our No. 1 priority in social welfare is to protect poor children. There is a consensus that welfare, in fact, tracts children in poverty, and the key is to allow families to work to escape.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Republican bill hinders that progress that is so critical and undercuts that national consensus.

I come from a State, Oregon, that is actually moving people off welfare into gainful employment. The bill that we have looming before us is going to undercut the progress of my State.

First of all, by having inflexible work participation requirements, you will actually penalize the successful State as it ratchets down into the next century. By having all child support in a centralized bureaucratic system, which my State tried in the 1970's, found to be unnecessary, found to be expensive and found that we had better ways, we will be forced back into that unnecessary bureaucracy, unnecessary expense.

By having a 5-year arbitrary limit on child care, we deal with the ironic situation of having some successful families who are fighting to remain employed to be forced back into poverty. This is lunacy.

I appreciate at least having the Tanner-Castle amendment being put before us as an alternative. We need to keep this progressing so that the President and the Senate can work with people of good faith to have a bill that will work so poor children do not pay the price for our inability to square rhetoric with reality.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the statement of the gentlewoman from Ohio, Ms. DEBORAH PRYCE, a member of the Committee on Rules, who is unable to be here.

Ms. PRYCE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in strong support of this fair rule and the underlying Welfare Reform Act.

Mr. Speaker, a generation ago, President Lyndon Johnson launched his much-celebrated War on Poverty with the hope of creating a Great Society here in America. Well, here we are in 1996, 30 years and more than $5 trillion later, ready to launch a new war. Only this time, the war is not so much against poverty itself, but against a failed welfare system that has trapped the less fortunate in our society in a seemingly endless cycle of poverty and despair.

The bill that we will soon consider under the terms of this structured, but very fair and balanced rule, takes welfare in an entirely new direction—one which replaces strict Federal control with increased flexibility and more room for innovation at the State and local level.

Instead of promoting dependency and illegitimacy, this bill seeks to replace a failed system with one based on the dignity of work and the strength of families. Most importantly, this legislation promotes creative solutions closer to home and offers a real sense of hope to the truly needy and less fortunate among us.

Unfortunately, we'll hear some complaints from those who prefer to keep the status quo in place. But, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with a welfare reform plan that advocates commonsense principles like requiring welfare recipients to find work, or even cutting off benefits for parents who refuse to cooperate with child support authorities.

And speaking of children, who are often the most vulnerable in our society, I've seen the effects of generational welfare in my courtroom, and I can say that the current welfare system takes a terrible toll on the well-being of children. That's why I am very pleased that this bill looks out for the best interests of children by emphasizing child care, protection, and nutrition.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to vote for this fair rule and to support putting an end to the status quo in our welfare system. It takes courage to vote for change, but change is exactly what is so badly needed if we are to transform welfare into a temporary helping hand in times of trouble, and not a hand-out that becomes a way of life. Vote "yes" on the rule and "yes" on the Welfare Reform Act.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], vice chairman of the Committee on Rules, from greater San Dimas, CA, and surrounding areas.

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me this time.

This has been a very interesting debate over the past few minutes, Mr. Speaker. My friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT], said it is NEWT's way or no way. The fact of the matter is, the Democrats did not come up with any proposal whatsoever to deal with welfare reform, and we are still giving them two opportunities with, first, the substitute which they said they requested, which is the Castle-Tanner substitute and, second, a motion to recommit. So without coming up with proposals, they call it NEWT's way or no way. We are giving them two opportunities to offer alternatives to this package.

Second thing I heard during this debate is that the system, this proposal, would be vicious and heartless. I am told that my friend, the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. VELÁZQUEZ], just said that.

Mr. Speaker, what is vicious and heartless about doing what we can to encourage opportunity for those who are at the lower end of the economic spectrum?

A few moments ago I was talking with my friend, the gentleman from South Boston, MA [Mr. MOAKLEY], who said that it is true that we so often hear about the extreme cases of abuse of the welfare system. The fact of the matter is, the average welfare recipient out there is that single mother who is struggling to make ends meet with two or three children. We do not want to do anything possible, we do not want to do anything at all that would jeopardize the opportunity for that mother to be able to benefit from this program as long as we continue to do everything possible to ensure that she has opportunity there.

We can improve this economy so that we can have the chance for that mother to get off of that cycle of dependence, which has been generational, and back onto a running of that economic ladder so that she can see improvement. We want to end the cycle which has created drug dependence and alcohol abuse and the crime problem that exists. Most everybody who has looked at the welfare system has said that we have seen the crime as a byproduct of the welfare system.

We do not know that any of the proposals that we are going to be voting on are the panacea. James Q. Wilson from Harvard University has said that no one has the guaranteed solution, but we have looked at the situation that has existed for the past three decades and we all know that it has failed. We are moving ahead again with a package that I believe will create the opportunity for us to improve the system. The President should sign this measure as we move forward. I thank my friends who have worked in a bipartisan way on this.

I again thank my very distinguished friend from Sanibel, FL, for yielding the time to me.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Republican initiative that is being presented before us by this rule. Obviously, there are some changes in the rule, to in fact, eliminate some of the most egregious positions in the Republican bill. That is good, but I think that my Republican colleagues should be moving further to a center position on the matter of welfare reform.

In the first instance, I think if we take away the bumper strip welfare reform label and look behind it, we find much more than simply welfare reform. We find significant cuts in food and nutrition programs, we find significant, an attack really; half the savings in this bill are extracted from the legal immigrants in this country, whether it be California, New York, or my home State of Minnesota.

In my State of Minnesota in my school district in St. Paul, nearly a quarter of the kids come from Southeast Asia, families and their parents and those kids would be denied significant benefits that are today available. The legal immigrants, Southeast Asians are working, they are paying taxes. If they become disabled, if they become unable to make ends meet, they would be denied the benefits simply because they did not pass the citizenship test by the policies within this Republican bill.

Now, this bill is wrong because it does not protect kids. Seventy percent of those on welfare are children, 8.8 million persons of the 12.8 million that collect AFDC are children. That is not the way we need to deal with our budget problems; we need to protect children and the vulnerable. We ought to empower people so they can go back to work. That costs money in terms of training and education. But this measure pays lip service to those needs.

There are other issues that need to be addressed. In our State we reduced the welfare load because we provided health care for those that needed it. That substantially reduced the need for welfare in our State of Minnesota.

We should not be targeting the legal immigrants. As and I said, half the dollar savings in this measure is cut from legal immigrant benefit programs. Illegal immigrants are not eligible for much of anything today, so let us not confuse the two.

Plus, we ought to maintain the State effort. I trust my State will maintain their effort, but I do not know, given the pressures that Minnesota will go through and be under. We should be requiring them to at least do what we are doing today. Not just 175 percent or 80 percent of the effort that the Republican bill requires.

And we need to deal with the economic cycle in terms of downtown so that we do not leave people out in the cold. Our Nation doesn't need more homeless, we do not need that type of problem in the name of welfare reform. We need to address our concerns and help State and local communities respond to the needs of the vulnerable in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill, H.R. 3734.

Instead of helping people out of poverty and off the welfare rolls, this Republican measure simply ignores the needs of poor families and children. H.R. 3734 does include work requirements, which I agree should be a part of the effort to reform welfare. However, this bill does not provide welfare recipients with essential services, such as child care, health care, education and training, that would help them down a successful path to the world of work. These expenses can devastate a poor family's income and throw them back into the welfare system, and in this bill, these types of support are grossly inadequate.

The underlying measure mandates work, however, it eliminates the guarantee to one of the key services that give parents the ability to go to their jobs, child care. While this bill does take a significant step forward regarding child care programs by adding extra dollars for child care initiatives, it eliminates the guarantee of that assistance, making these services dependent on the availability of State resources to continue funding such programs. These funds are also given to States as a block grant, a funding mechanism that would not allow funding levels to rise along with need. At the same time, the measure reduces funds targeted for increasing the quality of child care.

For many poor families, a single medical emergency or health problem can push them into poverty and onto welfare. This is one reason why access to adequate medical care is an essential element in the struggle to get welfare families off the rolls and out of poverty as well as keeping other families from entering this cycle of poverty and welfare. This Republican measure, however, ignores this logic by eliminating the guarantee for some families to Medicaid, the main provider of medical care to the poor. With two out of every three welfare recipients being children, we cannot afford to abandon this type of assistance. Having adequate, affordable health care is also vital to parents, directly impacting their health and ability to work. At one time in Congress, we were talking about expanding health care coverage so no American would be denied adequate medical care. Now, this 104th Congress has designs to take medical coverage away from our most vulnerable and poorest residents. In fact, about half the cuts in the Republican's budget proposal are in the Federal health care programs, Medicare and Medicaid.

Conveniently, this bill simply takes the criteria of need out of welfare eligibility requirements. State budgets replace that characteristic to become the determining factor in whether our poorest families and children receive essential food, shelter, and medical assistance. The unrealistic part of this scenario is that the needs of these poor families and their children do not conveniently disappear when funding to provide such assistance runs out.

While this bill dramatically reduces spending on welfare programs at the Federal level, the bill also allows States to follow suit and reduce their funding of welfare-related programs. In this bill, regardless of need, States will only be required to spend 75 to 80 percent of the amount they spent in fiscal year 1994 on welfare programs. While I understand that States and local public officials care about the well-being of their citizens, the funding shortfall included in this bill will force them to do more with less, and that willingness to maintain the social safety net provided in current law will be greatly strained. State and local officials may benefit by the flexibility provided but this measure, but flexibility cannot make up for such an inadequate level of funding provided by this bill, which will hamper States' abilities to meet the expensive work requirements in the bill without endangering the health and well-being of America's poorest residents. The Congressional Budget Office has pointed out that the Republican bill's spending provisions fall far short of the necessary funds needed to meet the work requirements. In addition, in some instances, funds can be moved out of the program for which they are allocated and be expended on unrelated programs.

One provision in this measure, which claims big cuts and savings, would deny benefits to legal immigrants, noncitizens who pay taxes and contribute to our economy. Half the funding cuts in this bill come on the backs of these hard-working members of our communities. Such is the case with the Southeast Asians, especially the Hmong, natives of Laos who have a concentrated population in Minnesota and in other parts of the Nation. Because they have failed their citizenship test largely based on language difficulties, they would be denied essential and basic public assistance benefits under this bill.

Individuals in our society should be expected to do what they can for themselves, but policies should be careful to differentiate between those who cannot and those who will not. Cutting off assistance to those who are trying to lift themselves out of poverty and off of welfare is not sound public policy. Unfortunately, that is exactly the policy that this bill puts forth. We must help those in need help themselves. I urge my colleagues to oppose this underlying measure and renew our efforts for real welfare reform so that those dependent can truly achieve self-sufficiency.

The Tanner-Castle substitute offers the basis for true compromise and real welfare reform. And, while I have misgivings about the measure, which would abandon the entitlement commitment, the provisions of this measure are generally funded adequately. Also, the issue of expansion of need during economic downturns is addressed. The required State commitment is greater, and children as well as other vulnerable populations are protected. This measure, the Castle-Tanner bill, isn't perfect, but it is a sound foundation and format to transition from today's welfare system to a welfare program with greater State flexibility with a reasonable prospect of meeting the problems of those who are in need in our society.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I think we are, and I sense that we are, right here in one of the finest hours of this Congress. We are taking one of the thorniest, most difficult political issues for all of the Members on both sides, and we are opening up the rule to this extent. I think it is truly remarkable and speaks very well of the leadership in this Congress and the faith that the Republicans, as the majority, has in the Democrats as the minority. We are not only allowing a second bill to be introduced and we are not only allowing the motion to reconsider, but also we are also relaxing the dollar figure because this is a reconciliation process.

Under the rules the minority party could have been absolutely shut out of this process by simply saying, "Adhere to the rules, and the rules means you've got to save $60 billion." This was not done, and I think that is absolutely in the absolute tradition of fairness.

Now we are going to be faced with a bill that is a substitute. Interestingly enough, both the Republican bill and the substitute that is going to be offered here today in the entitlement of welfare; that is a quantum leap. It shows confidence in the States in block granting them to the States. That is a quantum leap for this Congress, and I think that it speaks very well of those that support either one of those issues.

And then those that do not really believe that the States should take over the welfare system, the Democrats are given the opportunities on a motion to recommit. So, if they want to hold on to much of the status quo and hold on to the Federal grip on welfare, they will have the opportunity to do so and put it forth in a Democrat process, and that is absolutely amazing, and it is wonderful that this is happening, particularly in these days where we see that there are so many gotchas and oneupmanships going on in this House.

So I want to compliment all of the people, to very briefly that one might say, "Well, if the Castle-Tanner bill and the Republican bill both block grant welfare, then what is the difference?" Well, there are two, really two, basic differences that we are going to be asked to consider ourselves and to decide between. Those of us who are going to oppose the Castle-Tanner bill, those of us on the Republican side who oppose that particular bill, we do not believe that American taxpayers should simply still be required to shell out their money to pay welfare to non-citizens. This is a growing, growing area where the alien population on welfare is growing at a much higher percent than the U.S. citizen group. So we feel that Castle-Tanner is going the wrong way on that.

We also feel that in the area of time-limited welfare, to put out vouchers after the 5 years is counterproductive to what we want to do. But we are compassionate, we do say that 20 percent of the case load can be made an exception, and if the States want to go ahead and pay that amount out after 5 years, they can, and we also explicitly state in the bill that the States that want to use their own dollars to pay out after 5 years, they simply can do that too. We are not strapping the States, we are not limiting the States, in that regard.

But I look forward to a very healthy debate, one in which we will voice very honest differences of opinion today. I think this is going to be one of the finest hours that we will have in this Congress, and we are now given the tremendous opportunity to end the stagnation of welfare that has destroyed so many lives, and that is the important thing, and that is what we have got to accomplish.

And after we get through with this democratic process, I hope that the President will follow suit, not play politics, and sign this bill.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield all my remaining time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLEMENT], my last speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOLBE). The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 1¾ minutes.

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, since I have been a Member of Congress, I have been a strong advocate of a tough but reasonable welfare reform bill that empowers rather than punishes, one that calls for responsibility rather than dependence. America was built on the principles of hard work, determination, and individual initiative. In effect these are the same values our current welfare system penalizes.

Today we are called upon to enact a meaningful welfare reform. We must not struggle to establish a Democratic or Republican reform plan, but rather we must strive for a compromise that results in an American resolution of this most difficult problem.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Castle-Tanner welfare reform bill achieves this effect as a bipartisan proposal that strikes a balance between the welfare reform plans advocated by the two parties. The Castle-Tanner alternative provides tough welfare reform that protects children and moves able welfare recipients to work.

This bipartisan substitute provides $3 billion in mandatory funding that States can access for work programs. Consequently, if mothers and fathers trying to escape welfare to work, they must have an adequate funding for child care. Castle-Tanner contains $4.5 billion more than the current law for child care assistance to families that leave welfare for work. In effect, this proposal provides States with the flexibility to develop successful work programs tailored to the needs of local communities.

Support this legislation. Let us pass welfare reform this year.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BUNNING].

Mr. BUNNING of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the rule and also in support of H.R. 3734, the Republican welfare reform bill.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote for the Republican welfare reform bill before the House today. I supported it in both the Ways and Means Committee and the Budget Committee, and I am going to vote for it today.

The case for welfare reform is pretty clear. The system that we have now just does not work. Period. During the last 30 years, we have spent over $5 trillion on antipoverty programs, but we have not reduced the percentage of Americans who actually live in poverty. In fact, the poverty rate has slightly risen during that time.

It's time for some tough love, and I think that this legislation fits the bill.

If we are going to help people escape poverty, we have to encourage personal responsibility. The welfare system that we have now is supposed to act as a safety net to help people when they need a hand, but instead it acts to trap them in poverty and ends up becoming a way of life.

We simply say that if you are able, you should work. If you are noncitizen, you should not come to the United States expecting a handout. And if you are a felon, you are going to be kicked off the dole.

All of the recent innovation in welfare has taken place in the States. They have raced ahead of Washington in attacking poverty with new, inventive approaches and we should give them the latitude they need to craft programs at the local level that really work and help people. Our bill does that.

Very important to me, our proposal also attacks the problem of illegitimacy. Welfare now actually encourages out-of-wedlock births and induces single, teen mothers to move out on their own to try to raise their children. We think that this is absolutely wrong-headed, and that's why our bill ends the practice of subsidizing out-of-wedlock births and tells teen mothers that they have to live with their families if they want to continue to get public assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I am also compelled to speak about the transracial adoption section in this bill. I deeply appreciate my Chairman, Mr. ARCHER, agreeing to add to it the base bill.

We know that many children, mainly minority kids, are left to languish in foster care because of the skin. The practice of race-matching that prevails in the adoption community is discriminatory, and we have to stop it if we are going to give these kids a chance and get them into permanent, loving homes.

In the past 18 months, the House has twice passed legislation that penalizes adoption agencies that continue to race-match, but the President vetoed our first effort and the other bill's future in the Senate is up in the air because of the gridlock in that body. By including the transracial section in this bill, we are only improving our chances at actually passing legislation this year and bettering the lives for the half a million children who are stuck in foster care today.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the bill before us today to my colleagues. It takes welfare in a new direction and I believe that it will give hope and expand opportunity to millions of Americans who are trapped in poverty.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to a few of the remarks that were made.

First of all, one of the speakers from the other side said this bill is tough on welfare. This bill is tough on welfare abuse. We all know that there is a lot and we need to deal with it. We are dealing with it.

Others have said that we have not provided enough for children. I would add that in the areas of child support, child nutrition, child care, we have added more than there is now under the existing system. In child care alone I understand there is an additional, beyond what we have today, $4.5 billion provided for, and I frankly believe it is in both versions that we are going to have an opportunity to consider.

I also need to point out that compared to the last 6 years, which has been a time when we have been spending maximum dollars on welfare, in the next 6 years we are going to spend $137 billion more. I do not think that means we are dodging the issue. We are targeting the money better, and we are going to take care of more people with true need and stop the waste, fraud, and abuse in this program that President Clinton has asked us to deal with.

I would also point out in the options that we have today the two that we are going to be voting on frankly are more similar than they are different. The point is they both bring substantial reform. I obviously prefer H.R. 3734, but others have spoken to the fact that there are great differences. Actually there are not that many differences.

I would point out that we are giving in this rule two bites of the apple to the other side, which has not always happened in the past when the other side was in the majority under the reconciliation process.

There was some statement made that we are having some cuts in the EITC. One of the speakers mentioned that. No; there are not cuts. There are some attempts to reduce fraud and abuse in the EITC, again as the President has asked.

Mr. Speaker, I have run out of time. I urge strong support for this rule. It is an excellent rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the grounds that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 358, nays 54, not voting 21, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

WELFARE AND MEDICAID REFORM ACT OF 1996

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. KOLBE]. Pursuant to House Resolution

482 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3734.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3734) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 201(a)(1) of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1997, with Ms. GREENE of Utah in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. ORTON. Madam Chairman, I rise to make a point of order against consideration of H.R. 3724.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ORTON. Madam Chairman, section 425 of the Congressional Budget Act prohibits us from considering legislation which would create an unfunded mandate upon the States. The Congressional Budget Office has ruled that H.R. 3734 falls $12.9 billion short in funding necessary to fund the work requirements of the bill. Also the National Governors Association has stated: We are concerned that the bill restricts State flexibility and will create additional unfunded costs.

This bill clearly creates an unfunded mandate, violates section 425 of the Congressional Budget Act, and I would further point out that section 426 of the Congressional Budget Act prohibits this House from considering a rule which would waive section 425. So that in any event we would have a vote and a determination as to whether or not a bill does in fact create an unfunded mandate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would respond to the gentleman's point of order as follows. Points of order against consideration of the bill H.R. 3734 were waived by unanimous consent on July 17, 1996. Further, a point of order against consideration of House Resolution 482 would not be timely after adoption of that resolution.

The gentleman's points are not in order.

Mr. ORTON. I thank the Chairman. I think it is clear to the House and the country that in fact we are violating the first bill we passed in this Congress with the adoption of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, July 17, 1996, all time for general debate pursuant to the previous order of the House had expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 482, there will be 2 additional hours of general debate. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO] will each control 1 hour.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] be allowed to control the time for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] temporarily and be allowed to yield time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, since 1965, roughly 30 years ago, government in this country has spent $5.5 trillion on welfare programs, more than has been spent on all of the wars fought in this century. Yet people are poorer and more dependent than ever. Despite our best efforts, despite the expenditure of these massive amounts of money, we have lost the war on poverty.

Madam Chairman, today, we stand on the threshold of a new effort, an effort that can win the war.

With the vote we take today, we recognize that the Great Society's welfare programs have not helped people. They have destroyed people. They have not kept families together. They have torn them apart.

These policies haven't turned urban areas of America into shining cities on a hill. They have made them into war zones where law-abiding citizens are afraid to go out at night.

They have led to the creation of two Americas. One marked by hope and opportunity. The other by despair and decay.

In short, the welfare state has created a world in which children have no dreams for tomorrow and parents have abandoned their hopes for today.

The people trapped in welfare, the mothers, the children, the fathers, are our fellow citizens, one and all. We have a moral obligation to them, as Americans, to lend a helping hand.

For the people on welfare aren't abusing welfare, as much as welfare is abusing them.

We are on the threshold of improving America by fixing our failed welfare state. We're improving America for the children on welfare, for the parents on welfare, and for ourselves.

Our reforms are based on five pillars. The pillars represent the values that made America great.

One—we think people on welfare should work for their benefits. A welfare worker I spoke with told me the biggest beneficiaries of work aren't the moms or the dads. Yes, they benefit. But she said it's the children who watch their parents get up each morning, go to a job, and return home at night who are the big winners. These children get better grades in school, have fewer problems with crime, and are less likely to end up on welfare because the values and virtues of work, not idleness, are instilled in them at a young age.

Two—Time limit benefits. Welfare should be a temporary helping hand, not a way of life.

Three—Provide no welfare for felons and noncitizens. America always has been and always will be the land of opportunity for immigrants. But it's not right to ask hardworking, taxpaying Americans to support noncitizens who come here and then go on welfare.

Four—Return power and control of welfare to the states and communities where help can best be delivered. We must remove Washington's control over welfare. This city built the failed welfare state. It's time to get Washington out of the welfare business.

Five—Reward personal responsibility and fight illegitimacy. We shouldn't have a welfare system that promotes illegitimacy and discourages marriage. It's time to change signals and return to old-fashioned values.

Madam Chairman, today's vote will be historic.

It represents the biggest, most helpful change to social policy in America since the 1930s.

This vote recognizes that America is a caring country, that Americans are a giving people, and that welfare recipients are capable of success if we would only let them try.

Our colleague, J.C. WATTS, has a wonderful way of expressing it. He says America's welfare recipients are eagles waiting to soar.

Madam Chairman, I think it's time we removed the heavy hand of the Federal Government from their wings. We must let our fellow citizens on welfare reach new heights as they climb the economic ladder of life.

That's what this bill does. It helps people to help themselves. It restores hope and it provides opportunity. It's strong welfare reform and it's what the American people have wanted for years.

Madam Chairman, there is no good reason why this bill should not be passed by the Congress and signed into law. The American people expect nothing less, and families on welfare deserve much, much more than the sad status quo.

For the sake of all Americans, I hope the President will let this bill become law.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MATSUI].

Mr. MATSUI. Madam Chairman, yesterday we heard the chairman of the Budget Committee say that this debate was really about Judeo-Christian ethics. That is why I was somewhat disappointed last night when I read Congress Daily. In the Congress Daily we talked about welfare reform and we talked about what this debate was really all about. The chairman of the subcommittee that has jurisdiction over welfare was quoted as stating from a political point of view, the President of the United States is in a box.

Madam Chairman, that is what this debate is all about—to jeopardize 9 million children who will be affected by this bill just to put the President of the United States in a box.

What kind of people would draft legislation for political purposes to affect so many children of America? This bill is weak on work and tough on America's children.

The Congressional Budget Office, their own agency, hired by the Republican House and Senate, has said that the 1.7 million jobs that the Republicans say will be created by a woman going off welfare is an illusion. It is deceptive, it is not going to happen, because they do not provide the resources for it. Their own agency has said they will not obtain those 1.7 million jobs. So this is not a jobs bill. This is not a bill to get people off of welfare into work.

But the worst part of this bill is what it will do to children. Because of those time limits and because of the fact that the Republican bill prohibits the States from using Federal funds for vouchers or any kind of assistance after a woman meets those time limits, she will then become destitute, she will become homeless, her children will probably have to go into foster care, even though she might be a good mother.

This is what this is all about. It is about politics to hurt America's children. I urge a "no" vote on this legislation.

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Ways and Means, the chairman of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, a person who is so greatly respected on our committee and has given such great service to this House, the country, in all of those roles.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill, and I could not disagree more with the preceding speaker. We have to change the future. Welfare cannot be a way of life for either women or children. It is not a satisfactory way of life. There is no hope, there is no opportunity when you are on welfare.

Now, remember, under this bill at the end of 5 years you get Medicaid, nutrition assistance, housing assistance, energy assistance, all those programs that provide services, on a means-tested basis. In addition, 20 percent of the whole caseload can be carried forward. So we are not talking about a draconian system; we are talking about reform and creating hope and opportunity in our welfare system for both the women and children on welfare.

This bill, let me show you, will allow States, for instance, to be free of the rigid law that now governs income disregards.

The woman is on welfare and starts earning money, and we right away start reducing benefits. Under this reform bill States will have complete freedom to design a fairer system. They may choose to keep her benefits up, and, as her salary goes up, to then decline her benefits. States have the power to help her get a good start in those 5 years. They have the power to educate and train, but to combine that with work experience. Under this program, women on welfare could immediately go to work for half a day in new day care centers, use State day care subsidies to give informed leadership to those centers as skilled master teachers. Let welfare mothers, who are good care providers, be the soldiers in those day care centers and then in the afternoon go on education and training centers while other welfare recipients staff the day care centers. It will cut the cost of day care and it will allow the money to be used powerfully in the transition period. This gives opportunity to States to create the kind of humane and supportive system women need to literally change their lives.

In addition, the terrible decline in the cities is in part the result of non-payment of rent. Part of the problem of our cities is that if a welfare recipient fails to pay their rent, it takes at least 6 months to solve the problem and sometimes much more than that. Under this new system, States can say you miss a month's rent? Fine, we will pay it directly now until you get on your feet. So we can prevent the degradation of our housing stock in the cities just by requiring personal responsibility on the part of welfare recipients and providing States the flexibility to create a more realistic support system, under the umbrella of Federal concern, compassion and support.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, if I might inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, we are curious if there is a final version of the bill and if there is a final summary of the last minute changes?

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABO. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, the Committee on Rules had the statutory language of the bill. That was made a part of the rule we voted on.

Mr. SABO. Is there a summary of the last minute changes that were made?

Mr. ARCHER. Not to my knowledge, although the gentleman is aware that this bill did not come out of the Committee on Ways and Means; it came out of his committee, the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SABO. Well, it has been substantially changed since it came through the Committee on the Budget. Many of us are curious what the final form of the bill is.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY].

(Ms. WOOLSEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Chairman, we all agree that welfare does not work, the welfare system does not work for the taxpayers, and it does not work for the families who are on welfare, and we all agree that the welfare system must be overhauled. It must be overhauled so that it helps recipients get jobs and stay off welfare permanently. But that is the easy part.

The challenge and responsibility we face as legislators, however, is finding the answers to, what if's. What if a mother on welfare cannot find a job? What if she is not earning enough to take care of her family? What if her benefits are cut off and she is unable to provide her children with food, with clothes, and with health care?

Madam Chairman, this bill does not even attempt to answer these, what if's. In fact, the majority has gone out of its way to prevent States from meeting the basic needs of children, children whose parents are unable to get a job.

This bill says to poor children, do not get hungry, do not get sick, and, for Pete's sake, do not get cold, because your time is up, and we do not think you are important enough to provide you with the basics that you need to survive.

Madam Chairman, no other Member of this body knows better than I do that this is the wrong way to fix welfare. As a single mother with three small children, working, many years ago, I could not have stayed in the work force if I did not have the safety net of health care, child care, and food that the welfare system provided for my family.

So I urge my colleagues, do not take this vote lightly. Your vote today will have consequences, consequences for children long after election day, and it will be too late to answer the, what if's tomorrow.

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HERGER], a respected member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HERGER. Madam Chairman, over the last three decades the American taxpayer has spent $5 trillion on our welfare system. Working Americans may be asking themselves, what have we gained from all that spending? Do we have less poverty in the United States? No; are welfare recipients spending less time on welfare? No; after spending $5 trillion on welfare, have we solved the problems of poverty and dependency on Federal dollars? Is it extreme to think that maybe there is a better way of running our welfare system? Madam Chairwoman, the Republican welfare reform proposal will allow welfare to work better for all Americans. Our welfare reform makes welfare a way out—not a way of life. It promotes work over a continual cycle of welfare. It returns power and money to the States and encourages personal responsibility. Madam, Chairwoman, this reform proposal also denies welfare for noncitizens and includes a provision I developed with a sheriff in my district to deny imprisoned criminals welfare and create an incentive for local law enforcement officials to help stop this abuse. Currently, an estimated 5 to 10 percent of inmates in local and State jails are illegally receiving welfare checks. Without this welfare reform, the American taxpayer will allegedly give prisoners $270 million over the next 7 years in welfare payments.

Madam Chairwoman, our current welfare system is inefficient, unfair, and damaging to those it is supposed to help. The American people deserve a better welfare program that is unaccepting to those abusing the system and compassionate to those in real need.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this welfare reform.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

(Mr. RANGEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Chairman, we have gotten off the subject now of substantive legislation, and we are now dealing with Presidential politics.

Well, let us do it. The welfare bill now has become like a tennis ball in a political volley, and the question is, Does it make more sense to force the President to keep his commitment to change welfare as we know it, or really do we want to get the President in the position that he has to veto the bill?

Well, we have tried so many times on the Republican side to find out just what is it that the President hates. Obviously, it was the tremendous cuts that were recommended by the other side as relates to Medicaid. So what was the solution? Continue to make certain it was one package, until it becomes politically expedient to change that and to put another poison pill, and several other poison pills, so you can go home and say the President has vetoed the welfare bill once again.

Who really suffers? It is really the voters, or it is our children? This obsession in saying that the Federal Government cannot take care of them has no responsibility to our children, but that the Governors should be trusted. And then to have the Christian coalition to come up and embrace this in a Christian way.

Well, thank God we have the National Council of Catholic Bishops that say the program stinks. Thank God we have the Jewish Council Against Poverty that says it is no good. Thank God we have the Protestant Council that says it is no good. It may be good politics, but it is bad for the children of our Nation.

The whole concept that we are saying 5 years, but the Governors can say 2: We are relinquishing our responsibility to the children of the United States of America, and it is a bad day in the congressional history.

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the very respected gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MCCREERY], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MCCREERY. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Madam Chairman, I want to talk for just a while about the basis for reform. I think it is worthwhile to examine the current welfare system and its results over the last few years.

This chart shows very graphically, this line right here is the poverty rate in the United States. Beginning in 1950, you can see it drops until about 1965 or so.

Well, it just happens to be that 1965 was the beginning of the Great Society programs, and the avalanche of welfare spending in this country; as it has been said, $5 trillion over the last 30 years.

What happens in 1965? It flattens out, the poverty rate, and then even goes up. So nothing has happened on the poverty rate. It has even gone up a little bit since 1965, since we have spent $5 trillion.

This blue line right here is spending on welfare. Look, it is going off the chart in 1995. We are not getting the results, folks, that were advertised with all the taxpayer spending that we have done.

It is the current system that is trapping children in poverty. It is the current system that is cruel to children. And if you do not recognize that, you have not been paying attention.

Now is the time, not next year, not 5 or 10 years from now, now is the time finally to do something about this terrible welfare system that we have got. The status quo stinks. Admit it. Let us do something about it and quit talking about it.

We sent the President two welfare bills. We are going to send him another one. We keep modifying it. This one is patterned after the bipartisan Governors' proposal. I have met with the President to talk about welfare reform, and this is very, very close. This bill is very, very close to what the President says he wants.

Let us pass it, send it to him, and I hope he signs it.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Madam Chairman, let me thank my colleague for yielding me time.

Madam Chairman, much of today's welfare news is good. There are fewer welfare and food stamp recipients today than when President Clinton took office. The poverty rate is down and teen pregnancy rates are lower in most States. Teen birth rates have dropped as well. Child support collections have grown and welfare reform is alive and well in States, thanks to 38 waivers approved by the Clinton administration.

That is all good news for the President and even better news for American families.

Unfortunately, Madam Chairman, we have not made much progress on national welfare reform. Partisan politics seems to have gotten in the way, and that is a shame. President Clinton has twice sent Congress welfare reform proposals. He has sent clear signals about the kind of reform he will sign into law. He wants a bill that requires work, promotes responsibility, and protects children. He would impose tough time limits and work requirements, provide more funding for child care, require teen parents to live at home and stay in school, and crack down on child support enforcement. And that is real welfare reform.

He vetoed the Republican plan, H.R. 4, because it was not real welfare reform. He rejected H.R. 4 because it was weak on work, it did little to move people from welfare to work, it did not guarantee child care, it gutted the earned income tax credit, it was tough on children, it made unacceptable deep cuts that undermined child welfare, school lunch, and aid to disabled children. It was a step backward in an effort to get health care coverage to all Americans and it eliminated the guaranteed medical coverage that single parents need to move from welfare to entry-level jobs.

Thanks to the National Governors' Association, today we will try again to send another welfare package to the President. I remain skeptical about what my Republican colleagues want as a bipartisan effort in a Republican bill. Admittedly, this new Republican plan corrects some of the worst mistakes of the vetoed bill, confirming that the President was right to say "no" to the last Republican plan, but it looks to me like the Republicans want to make certain that this bill is also unacceptable to the President.

I want one point to clear, Madam Chairman. I support welfare reform. So does our President. But we also want to make sure that needy children are not the victims of excessive election-year posturing. Real welfare reform should give children a safety net on which to rely, and it makes certain children are not punished for the mistakes of their parents.

Mr. ARCHER. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY], the whip of the House.

Mr. DELAY. Madam Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time, and I rise in support of this legislation. I really commend the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on the Budget for their efforts in producing this legislation.

Madam Chairman, as my colleagues ponder their vote on this important issue, I would just urge them to consider this question: Does the current welfare system help people realize the American dream? If the answer is no, we should vote for this reform legislation.

I believe that the current welfare system has destroyed the American dream for too many people, and this bill represents an important part of our agenda to restore the American dream. It also represents a core philosophical principle; that a hand-up is better than a hand-out.

The American people have rightfully demanded that we fix this welfare system. They instinctively understand that the current welfare system undermines incentives to work, encourages the expansion of the underclass, breaks up families, and promotes welfare as a way of life. And they understand that the current system is a perversion of basic American values that value work, that promote personal responsibility, and that foster freedom.

This reform legislation values work. It requires that every able-bodied welfare recipient work for their benefits within 2 years. It promotes personal responsibility. It cracks down on dead-beat dads, giving States the tools to track down men who leave or abandon their families and leave their children to fend for themselves. And it fosters freedom.

Scripture says if you give a man a fish, he can eat for a day; but if you teach a man to fish, he can eat for the rest of his life.

Our reform plan gives welfare recipients the incentives to gain their freedom, to gain control of their lives and to become productive members of society.

Madam Chairman, some on the left call our efforts mean and extreme. Well, I say that defending the status quo is extreme. Continuing the current system that has destroyed families and promoted dependency is mean. The legislation, this legislation, is a common-sense effort to restore the basic American values of work, personal responsibility and freedom to our Federal welfare system. It is a necessary step to restore the American dream for those who are currently in the welfare system.

I urge my colleagues to have the courage to change this system. Stand with the American people and vote for this commonsense reform plan.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, Republicans and Democrats agree that the current welfare system does not work. Instead of requiring work, it punishes those who go to work; instead of instilling personal responsibility, it encourages dependence on the Government; and instead of encouraging marriage and family stability, it penalizes two-parent families and rewards teenage pregnancies.

We all agree that welfare must be dramatically reformed, and that welfare should only offer transitional assistance leading to work, not a way of life. Where we disagree, however, is whether the Republican bill will make transition to work a reality or whether it is just empty rhetoric.

Real welfare reform must be about replacing a welfare check with a paycheck. Real welfare reform gets people into the work force as quickly as possible. In order to do that, real welfare reform provides enough money for the work requirements to be effective.

The Congressional Budget Office has concluded that the Republican bill will not work because most States will fail to meet the work requirements. It will be less expensive for the States to accept the penalties for failing to meet the participation rates than it will be to meet the costs of the work programs.

Creating a system that is prone to failure from the outset is not real welfare reform.

The Castle-Tanner bipartisan bill provides $3 billion in supplemental funds for States to meet the costs of work programs for welfare recipients. This is money in the bank, not just an authorization backed by a hope that someday we might actually find this money.

The Castle-Tanner bipartisan bill provides real welfare reform and I urge my colleagues to support this plan.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ZIMMER], a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ZIMMER. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding me this time, and I commend him for his tenacious and principled support for true welfare reform.

Madam Chairman, welfare as we know it has unmercifully condemned generation after generation of Americans to a life without hope and without access to the American dream. This bill will foster independence by breaking the chains that bind families to the welfare state.

The current system, which fosters poverty, despair, hopelessness, and illegitimacy will be replaced with a program that generates hope, optimism, and self-esteem. People will be accountable for their own lives. Mothers and fathers will be responsible for the children they bring into this world.

What this bill proposes is very straightforward: No more money for nothing. It tells the poor that we will help you get on your feet but we owe it to you as well as to ourselves, to require that you work for your benefits, and that after a specified period of time you get a real job.

You see, work is not punishment. Work is the foundation of the American dream. It gives us self-respect and gives our children respect for us and for themselves.

I urge those who have rejected reform in the past to reconsider for the sake of our future. I urge this House to pass this legislation. I urge the President to sign this legislation.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON].

Mrs. CLAYTON. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, in a ideal world we would not be forced to save money while sacrificing even some of our children. In an ideal world we would provide something to wear, something to eat, and a place to sleep for all of our children, even those who happen to be born in circumstances not of their own creation or their own will. In an ideal world we would not set time limits and spending caps and impose budget savings requirements on the most vulnerable people of our society, our children.

I realize, however, we do not live in an ideal world. I too believe we must reform our welfare system because the current welfare system surely is not working. However, the proposed welfare system by the Republicans is doomed not to work either. In fact, I offer to say that it will not work for millions of children and for millions of mothers that we want to be self-sufficient and who desire to work.

I intend to vote for Castle-Tanner because it treats our children better than the bill before us treats them. It honors people's will. The bill before us is short on reform, weak on work, and tough on our children. Millions of children will be abandoned.

I admonish my colleagues, as they consider the decision they will make in the context of the decisions we make all the time, and the ones we have made. Last week this House refused to fund teenage pregnancy prevention programs by $30 million, yet now we are talking about teenage pregnancy as if we wanted to prevent it. We are now willing to punish them, however, if indeed they happen to have a child.

We should have stepping stones for our children and not have them as stumbling blocks. Recently the education funding was slashed. Where is the development in our children? This House has voted numerous times to cut nutrition programs.

We should not abandon our children. The proposal before us does not honor the principle of work, responsibility and caring for children.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to advise the last speaker who said that our bill is tough on children that the bill she referred to, which will be the Gephardt substitute, mimics exactly what is in the bill that she is criticizing as far as the children's program are concerned.

I would also tell the gentlewoman that in the bill there is some $6 billion of cuts in EITC, which is what the President criticized the Republicans for as calling that a tax increase. It is not in our bill, it is in her bill.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Washington

[Ms. DUNN], a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Ms. DUNN of Washington. Madam Chairman, I am involved in this debate on welfare because I believe that the current welfare system and what it does to children, and families is a crime. The system is cruel, it is broken, and it needs to be fixed.

For the third time today, Madam Chairman, we are going to vote to send to the President a welfare bill so he can keep his promise that he made in his campaign to reform welfare. It is a clean bill and it protects children.

It is based on three principles: One, that welfare should not be a way of life; that these poor children, some of whom never have a working role model in their lives, will not be put in that position ever, ever again. It is also based on the second principle of returning flexibility to the States; and, third, it is based on the principle that if Government is going to provide incentives in our lives, that the incentive in welfare should be to encourage personal responsibility in our citizens.

Today I want to focus on one thing that is probably the most important thing in this whole debate, and that is the children. Back home in Washington State women tell me, "Jennifer, my child support is the sole difference between making ends meet and going on welfare." On behalf of these women, we have a responsibility to make sure that deadbeat parents pay their child support to their own flesh and blood children.

Today in this Nation, Madam Chairman, $34 billion is owed by parents who have left their children's home to custodial parents. Thirty percent of these people leave the State in order to avoid that responsibility. I think it is outrageous. The tools this bill provides give us the way to track those deadbeat parents down.

I know what it is like to raise children as a single parent. I have done that. I worried about money, and I worried about child care. I worried about how you fit a full-time job around the responsibilities of my own children's needs. It is hard enough in my case, Madam Chairman, where I did receive support. I cannot imagine what it would be like when a parent did not receive that support.

It is the mothers and the children that we have included in these provisions. As far as I am concerned, Madam Chairman, the President needs to sign this bill for the sake of our children.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON].

Mrs. CLAYTON. Madam Chairman, I want to respond to the distinguished chair of the Committee on Ways and Means. The bill that he said that I am supporting, I am delighted to be supporting, Castle-Tanner, really indeed allows States to provide for vouchers, wherein his bill does not.

Castle-Tanner also provides Medicaid coverage for children, where his bill indeed does not. Castle-Tanner also has a no caps on assistance in the event of an economic turndown. The bill he has makes no provisions for that, or very limited, in their contingency fund.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Madam Chairman, I along with many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle have been working for almost 4 years to dramatically reform our Nation's welfare system. The current system has failed. A new system is needed. The Federal Government in partnership with our States needs to provide temporary compassionate assistance to those who have genuine need, making it clear that people who receive welfare must become employed as soon as possible in a private sector job. We must move people off of welfare to work.

My concern is that the Republican bill will move people off of welfare, but in far too many cases our children will end up on the streets.

The Republican bill is woefully inadequate in providing resources to our States. It is inadequate in financing safe, affordable day care for welfare parents. It does not adequately deal with one of the principal problems in our welfare system; that is, preventing out-of-wedlock births, particularly among our teenagers.

Quite frankly, the failure of the Republican bill is because it was developed in a partisan political manner, rather than in an open legislative format. We have not even really had a chance to review this bill because it was developed by the Republicans in a closed meeting, rather than using an open forum so that we could debate some of these issues and could work out some of these issues.

The Castle-Tanner bill substitute is the only bill that has been worked out in a bipartisan manner in an open forum. I urge my colleagues to support the Castle-Tanner substitute. It is far better than the Republican bill and although I believe it can be improved, I urge my colleagues to vote for the substitute and against the underlying bill.

Then let us work together, Democrats and Republicans, to dramatically change our welfare system. It can be done this year. If our objective is to get a welfare bill enacted, I urge my colleagues to follow that action. If our objective is to get the President to veto another bill, then I understand what the Republicans are doing.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from the State of Georgia [Mr. COLLINS, a valued member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Madam Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding the time to me.

Madam Chairman, we have previously debated and passed legislative proposals that will change the welfare system. And although President Clinton vetoed those measures, he has proposed welfare legislation of his own.

So today, we have two different approaches to welfare reform. We must clearly understand that the real debate is about whether we are going to just piecemeal reform the broken welfare system, or if we are going to entirely change welfare as we know it.

We all agree the welfare system is a failure. It is an open-ended Federal entitlement that encourages people to believe that receiving a welfare check, free health care, and other free services without working is their right. By the end of the decade, American workers will have spent over $6 trillion on welfare programs. After 30 years under the current system, our poverty rate remains unchanged and we have millions of people trapped, dependent upon broken welfare programs.

Americans are tired of paying for a welfare system that just doesn't work. And although Presidential candidate Clinton once stated that he intended to change welfare as we know it, his proposal will only make limited reforms to a system that fails those who receive welfare and those working people who pay the bill.

In sharp contrast to the President's patchwork plan, the Republican majority's proposal changes the welfare system as we know it. The Republican plan will remove the one-size-fits-all entitlement system. This measure will transfer the management authority from the bureaucratic Federal level to the States. Local authorities will finally have the ability to design a welfare program that best meets the needs of the poor in their region. Welfare programs will be administered on a local level through a State/Federal financial partnership. The responsibility for administering welfare programs will be where it needs to be: closer to those who know what works, closer to those who need the assistance, and closer to the workers who pay the bill.

Working Americans support the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act because it will comprehensively change the welfare system as we know it.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Republican welfare bill. This legislation masquerades as reform, but it is not that. It is instead a giant step back into poverty for millions of American children.

But it is more. This bill will have a devastating impact on the health care system in many urban areas and in many States in this Nation because of its mean-spirited and shortsighted provisions to deny Medicaid funds for necessary medical care for legal immigrants.

Whatever the view Members may have as to whether we should provide cash support to legal immigrants who end up in need of assistance, there can be no justification to deny health care services to persons who are legally in this country. Cutting Medicaid funds is not going to keep people from getting sick. It is not going to keep them from needing health care services. All this bill will accomplish is to keep them from going for care when they need it and causing them to be sicker and more costly cases when the situation becomes so bad they end up in an emergency room.

Local hospitals and local governments are going to be left holding the bag for these costs. The sad fact is, they cannot afford it. There should not be a Member from California in this House that supports this policy. It will have devastating consequences for Los Angeles, and it will have devastating consequences for the State of California.

The $12 billion reduction in Medicaid expenditures resulting from these provisions is fully one-fifth of the expenditures my Republican colleagues were trying to cut from Medicaid with their block grant proposal. Trying to achieve a big chunk of those so-called savings through the back door of the welfare bill by taking away any access to Medicaid for legal immigrants is wrong. It will hurt urban hospitals. It will hurt innocent people. It is the wrong thing to do.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAXMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, is what the gentleman is saying that this bill will mean a significant transfer from Federal resources to obligations on the local property tax?

Mr. WAXMAN. Absolutely.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his answer.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ENGLISH], a valued member of the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ENGLISH of Pennsylvania. Madam Chairman, today we will vote on fundamental welfare reform legislation, a mainstream proposal that working families across the Nation have been demanding for years. Three decades and $5 trillion ago, this Nation declared war on poverty. What was the outcome? All we have to show are casualties. Children killing children, boys and girls growing up without fathers, and welfare recipients spending an average of 13 years out of work because work does not pay as well as Uncle Sam.

Madam Chairman, generations have been trapped in this soul-destroying system, prisoners of the lost war on poverty. I have to ask this House: How many more of our children must we lose to poverty and violence before we say, enough is enough? We have the opportunity today to change America by fixing the failed welfare state and restoring the American dream for an abandoned underclass.

Under this bill, welfare will be converted into a work program. Every person receiving welfare must work within 2 years or cash benefits will end. Under our bill, lifetime welfare benefits will be limited to 5 years but up to 20 percent of families can be exempted for hardship. States are required to have 50 percent of welfare families working by 2002.

Our bill will end welfare payments for noncitizens; those we welcome to our country as guests should not abuse the hospitality of hard-working Americans. American families are spending $8 billion every year on welfare for noncitizens. That is not fair.

Our bill will stop the destructive practice of giving Social Security cash benefits to drug addicts and alcoholics, blighting their lives at great public expense.

Madam Chairman, we in Washington need to learn from past mistakes. We must create a welfare system that ties welfare rights to responsible behavior.

I urge all of my colleagues to put aside petty partisan politics. Support this bill and allow this Congress to leave an enduring legacy of social reform.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. MEEK].

(Mrs. MEEK of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Madam Chairman, I thank my ranking member for yielding the time to me.

I say over and over again, this is a flawed bill. It is not hard to see it. They are wrapping it in politics to try and save the fact that there is no substance in this bill that is going to save the children of this country.

Everything I have heard from the majority side makes me know they have never, ever experienced welfare. Now they are beginning to try to reform it. I want to reform it. I know it needs to be reformed. But it does not have to be reformed on the backs of the children of this country. It does not have to be reformed on food stamps. And they are having a similar idea that people who get food stamps, AFDC, do not know how to choose their food. That is not correct. The same Members who feel that way are the ones who drafted this bill.

This bill is going to deny 300,000 children of legal immigrants from getting food stamps. Do they want to cut children off from food? They have said they have a family-friendly atmosphere in the Republican Party. This does not meet the test of family-friendly.

Until yesterday they have changed back and forth so much, it is hard. I have not seen this new language. But yesterday their bill prohibited benefits and vouchers. Now they have switched over and now they are making that, they are putting that in, but they are not requiring it. They are not fooling me, because they are making it permissive. They cannot do it or they may do it. Why not say, as our bills do, that they will be required to provide vouchers to these children who will go off Medicaid?

My colleagues have exceeded the limits of care and sympathy and compassion which this Congress is supposed to give to the American people. They are not fooling the American people by saying this is a good welfare bill. We all want to reform welfare. Why can we not get together, both Republicans and Democrats, put our heads together and reform this without having a one-sided view toward Medicare and toward welfare?

I say to my colleagues, turn this bill back. I do not blame the President of the United States. Every time we send him a bad bill, he should veto it, no matter how many times.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Washington [Ms. DUNN].

Ms. DUNN of Washington. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding the time to me.

I am very alarmed at the misinformation I have heard last evening and today coming out on the issue of child care. I want to set something straight. In the Republican bill, the bill that we are debating and voting on today, in fact, we have been told by the people who make these estimates that we need, in child care, $16 billion to perform the duties that are outlined in the bill. We have, in fact, in the Republican bill provided $23 billion.

Madam Chairman, I just want to say in my book of mathematics, that leaves $7 billion aside that can be helped to ease working mothers off AFDC into the working world.

In addition, Madam Chairman, that is $4.5 billion more than is in the current child care portion of the welfare bill. It is also very important, as it is also $2 billion more than the President has in his own legislation.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ENSIGN], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam Chairman, I think we have to ask ourselves a couple of fundamental questions. First of all, has the current welfare system worked? Has it helped children? Is it compassionate, especially to those children? Should we continue to give cash payments to prisoners and drug addicts?

The answers to these questions are obvious. Out-of-wedlock births have skyrocketed since our welfare system began. Crime rates have skyrocketed. This is federally funded child abuse.

Madam Chairman, we tell the teenage mom, "If you have a child out of wedlock, move away from your parents, we'll get you an apartment. By the way, don't work, don't save, and if you want a little extra money, have another child out of wedlock." This is truly federally funded child abuse.

Our bill does something remarkable. It reforms welfare in a compassionate way. It has $2 billion more, as the previous speaker talked about, for child care than the President does so that in the transition from welfare to work we can help families do that.

We also provide transitional health care, which is one of the biggest incentives to staying on welfare, the lack of health care coverage.

We also stopped cash payments to noncitizens and prisoners. There is a fundamental disagreement between that side of the aisle and this side of the aisle on whether we should continue cash payments to noncitizens. We believe, I believe strongly, that it should be reserved for U.S. citizens.

We also fundamentally believe that we to have a limit, a time limit on the amount of time that somebody can receive welfare benefits. There is no greater incentive than to know that at the end of a certain period of time they are going to have to get a job, they better get their life together, they better get out there, take advantage of the job training we provide, get their life together so that they can get off of welfare so that they can take care of their own family and have that personal responsibility.

Lastly, from somebody who grew up with a deadbeat dad, I am applauding this bill for the strong child support enforcement provisions that it has so we can go after those deadbeat parents who are abandoning their children and not taking full responsibility.

I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for writing a great bill.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute to say I find it very unfortunate when we compare legal immigrants in this country with prisoners and put them in the same category.

In fact I find it sort of personal. My parents were both immigrants to this country. I remember when my mother became a citizen. I also hear this discussion of nothing has ever been given or done in conjunction with legal immigrants. My father was a home-steader. That was how he and many other immigrants got started in this country, and they worked hard and did well.

But regardless of how one feels on this question, to rhetorically combine legal immigrants with prisoners I think is totally unfortunate.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Madam Chairman, there is a consensus on this floor that our welfare system undermines the core values Americans believe in: responsibility, work, opportunity, and family. Too many people who do not want to be on welfare cannot escape it. Too many people who want to be on welfare are allowed to coast at the taxpayers' expenses.

We agree that we must create a different kind of social safety net which will uphold the values our current system undermines. It must require work, it must demand responsibility, and it must protect children.

Today the House will consider two alternative welfare reform proposals. One, offered by the House Republican leadership, I suggest, is not reform at all, although it has much in it with which we agree and Castle-Tanner agree. It lacks the funds for serious work requirements. CBO says so, not us. And under this bill children can be denied all support, even in an emergency, when their families are cut off welfare due to time limits.

When the American people demanded an end to welfare, this is not what they had in mind.

The so-called welfare reform bill offered today by the Republican leadership makes a mockery, in my opinion, of the American values of work and family. It does have progress in it. But it is not bipartisan, and that is what the American public wanted. They wanted us to come together in-bipartisan manner and reform welfare. Governor CASTLE, now a Congressman, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] have done exactly that. Their bill brings together and reinforces family values, while meeting our responsibilities to our people and reinforcing our expectations on their personal responsibility.

I urge my colleagues to come together in a bipartisan fashion, as most of the Members on this side of the aisle will do. Democrats will support a bipartisan effort to accomplish this objective. All of us should do the same.

America's welfare system is at odds with the core values Americans believe in: Responsibility, work, opportunity, and family. Too many people who don't want to be on welfare can't escape it. Too many people who want to be on welfare are allowed to coast at the taxpayers' expense. In both cases, this broken system weakens families, undermines personal responsibility, destroys self-respect and initiative, and fails to move able-bodied people from welfare to work.

A complete overhaul of the welfare system is long overdue. We must create a different kind of social safety net which will uphold the values our current system destroys. It must require work. It must demand responsibility. And it must protect children, to break the generational cycle of poverty.

Today, the House will consider two alternative welfare reform proposals. First, offered by the House Republican leadership, is not reform at all. It lacks the funds for serious work requirements. It shreds the safety net for children. The Nation's Governors adopted a resolution expressing their concern about restrictions on States' flexibility and unfunded costs in the Job Program, a shortfall of $13 billion which will knock the teeth out of the much-touted work requirements in the Republican bill.

The second alternative, the bipartisan Tanner-Castle welfare reform proposal, will truly reform our broken system. It, and it alone, requires all recipients to start work—real work, in real jobs—within 2 years. It provides funding to make those requirements real. It establishes a 5-year lifetime limit for welfare benefits, with a State option to create a shorter limit. It requires teen parents to live at home or in a supervised setting, and teaches responsibility by requiring school or training attendance as a condition of receiving assistance. It includes tough child support enforcement provisions to make sure deadbeat parents live up to their responsibility to support their children.

Unlike the Republican leadership proposal, the Tanner-Castle bill is tough on work without being tough on kids. It includes additional funding above the leadership bill for child care, to make sure children aren't left on the streets when their parents go to work. Under the Republican leadership bill children could be denied all support, even in an emergency, when their families are cut off welfare because of a time limit. The bipartisan bill provides vouchers to meet the needs of children if their parents exceed the welfare time limit. While the Republican leadership bill would deny Medicaid coverage for children in families who exceed a time limit, the bipartisan bill ensures that no child loses medical care because of welfare reform.

The so-called welfare reform bill offered today by the Republican leadership makes a mockery of the American values of work and family. It contains a hollow promise of work requirements which the Nation's Governors and the Congressional Budget Office both concede States can never achieve. It strips poor children of food assistance and medical care. I do not believe that when the American people demanded an end to welfare as we know it, this is what they had in mind.

The bipartisan Tanner-Castle bill supports those American values we all share. It demands work and personal responsibility without shredding the social safety net and abandoning children. I urge my colleagues to reject the Republican leadership bill, and support the bipartisan Tanner-Castle proposal.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would like to respond very quickly to what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO] said. Nobody in this House is criticizing or putting anything saying that people coming into this country to experience the American dream are in the class of felons. That is ridiculous. That argument falls on deaf ears. It has no relevancy.

But I would like to share this with him. When his parents or grandparents came into this country, they made a pledge not to become a public charge, and I would bet next week's paycheck that they did not become a public charge. They came for a better way of life, and they went to work. They made something of themselves, and they had a child or a grandchild that came to the U.S. Congress.

I would also like to say, when we are talking about aliens, aliens over 65 are five times more likely to go on SSI than citizens over 65. Alien SSI applications have increased 370 percent from 1982 to 1992. We have got to stop making welfare available for citizens of other countries. It is that simple.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CHRISTENSEN], a valuable member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CHRISTENSEN. Madam Chairman, welfare reform is an issue, like the previous speaker said, that we can agree on, that we can come together on in a bipartisan fashion and that we can work together on. I think all agree that the welfare system has caused people to rely on the Government instead of themselves. I think Senator JOHN ASHCROFT said it best last week when he talked about the system, that it has deprived hope, it has diminished opportunity, and it has destroyed lives.

But there are questions that we have to ask. After spending billions of dollars, has the Government solved the problems of poverty and of dependency? How many more families are we going to allow to be trapped in the current system before we get a bill out of this House? How many more children must we sacrifice to poverty before we say enough is enough?

As my colleagues know, we have heard many people say, and I think the statement is accurate, the fact is we cannot have a moral environment to raise children in America when we have 12-year-olds having babies, 15-year-olds killing each other, 17-year-olds dying of AIDS, and 18-year-olds who are graduating with diplomas that they cannot read. If we are to restore our moral health in this country, we must change the system that fosters that environment.

As Franklin Delano Roosevelt said in the late 1930's, giving permanent aid to anyone destroys them. Our bill gives people a chance. It puts a hand out so they can help themselves.

It is time that we worked together in a bipartisan fashion to end welfare as we know it.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

(Mr. MCDERMOTT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Madam Chairman, the gentlewoman from Florida put her finger on the fundamental problem here, and that is that the Republican bill will not guarantee support to children if all else fails.

Now, my brother runs the public assistance program in the State of Washington. I know the facts. In the State of Washington there are 100,000 adults on welfare, 125,000 people, unduplicated count, on unemployment. That is 225,000 people on average every month in the year 1995. If they all showed up for a job on tomorrow, there would be jobs.

Last year they created 44,000 new jobs in the State of Washington. That means 181,000 adults in the State of Washington, that DRI, McGraw-Hill, the economic forecaster says is the fifth most rapidly growing State in this country, could not get jobs, 181,000 people.

Now the Labor Department has recently said that the unemployment rate is as low as it ever is. Tomorrow Mr. Greenspan is going to meet with the Federal Reserve to talk about raising the interest rates so that we can slow the economy so we do not have inflation. Now, we cannot slow the economy and stop job creation when we have 181,000 people in the State of Washington who could not get a job and say to their children, "Hey, folks, kids, I'm sorry. Your Ma went down for a job, but there was none, and you can't eat." That is what the Republican bill says. They will not give a voucher if they have done everything, and there is no way.

I think the President, who cares about the kids in this country, is going to take a long careful look at what comes out of this body because, if we are not careful of how we deal with the weakest and the most vulnerable in our society, we are not a civil society.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, Mr. SAM JOHNSON, from the Committee on Ways and Means.

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Chairman, I have to disagree with the gentleman that just spoke. It is a shame, but I tell my colleagues that. The Government has been spending billions of dollars, and I would just like to know, has the Government solved our problems of poverty and dependency? I think not. How many more families are going to be trapped in the current system while we spin our wheels here in Washington, DC, talking about it? Do my colleagues not think that State and local governments, churches and communities can do a better job of caring and providing for our Nation's welfare recipients? Of course they can.

As my colleagues know, how many more of our Nation's cities are we going to surrender to poverty and violence before we here in Washington decide to act? Why does Washington continue to promote a welfare system that encourages illegitimacy and discourages parents? Should not Washington encourage work? I think so.

I tell my colleagues what this bill is about: compassion, hope and opportunity. It is about people coming together and taking charge of a system that has failed them and every mother and child on welfare.

Do we trust Washington, or do we trust the local charities, the churches, community centers, and local government officials? I trust and believe the American people at home will have the answer. Can we not do better than the welfare system that we have in place right now?

This strong welfare reform bill ends welfare as we know it. It gives power back to the States, power back to the communities, power back to the people at local communities to solve their own problem. It is a must that we act today to pass this legislation.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Ms. WATERS].

Ms. WATERS. Madam Chairman, both of these welfare reform bills before us are little more than poll-driven political responses to a real problem. This is not true welfare reform. Instead we are placing a foot on the necks of poor children and families and calling it reform. Every Member of Congress understands the difference between an AFDC entitlement and not having one. We all understand the difference between block grants and Federal involvement in this problem.

In desperation, I appeal to each Member's spiritual sense. I challenge those who claim moral values. To the Christian Coalition supporters, I challenge you today, the Bible is replete with examples of how we are obligated to treat the poor. Witness Proverbs 14:31: He who oppresses a poor man insults his maker, but he who is kind to the needy honors him.

Proverbs 29:7: A righteous man knows the rights of the poor; a wicked man does not understand such knowledge.

Ecclesiastes 4:1: Defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long.

Ecclesiastes 4:4: Reject not the supplication of the afflicted; neither turn away thy face from a poor man.

Proverbs 21:13: Who so stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

And Deuteronomy 15:7-8: Thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WAMP].

(Mr. WAMP asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WAMP. Madam Chairman, one of the most wonderful lessons for the young people of this country is that great things can be done in our society when it does not matter who gets the credit. The Republicans should be commended for taking Medicaid off of their welfare bill because the President, our President, came here in January and asked us for a clean welfare bill and said he would sign it into law. We should not worry if he gets the credit for doing that.

This is the clean bill that he asked for; it is. We disconnected Medicaid so he would sign it, not so he would veto it. We should pass it today and give him this clean bill. It does not matter if he gets the credit. The Democrats should not care if the Republicans get the credit, because it is these children that are trapped in dependency and poverty that are going to get the benefit and the reward.

We are doing the people's business. We should support the conference report when it comes back, and we should support the President so he can sign this bill into law and do the people's business.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO of California. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the bipartisan welfare reform bill offered by MIKE CASTLE and JOHN TANNER.

The Castle-Tanner bipartisan bill is a much better bill than the alternative presented by the other party. It requires work, and provides the support needed to make the commitment to work a reality and not just rhetoric.

The bipartisan bill contains many provisions which represent a moderate, more balanced approach to welfare reform while still achieving over $50 billion in savings.

It includes stronger protections for children and families under the block grant and assures the maintenance of a national nutrition safety net so that families will not go hungry and children will have the nutrition they need to grow and learn.

The bipartisan welfare reform bill improves past efforts made by this House in significant ways while continuing to promote personal responsibility as its central theme.

Indeed, this approach requires all welfare recipients to sign an individual responsibility contract which outlines a plan for the recipient to become self-sufficient as quickly as possible.

And the bipartisan bill holds dead-beat parents responsible for their children through strong child support enforcement measures.

Castle-Tanner also ensures greater State flexibility by giving the States the option of providing vouchers for the needs of the child, or emergency assistance to families that have reached the time limits but have been unable to find a job.

This bill also provides a more substantial contingency fund to assist States with high unemployment or increases in child poverty. If the fund is exhausted during hard times, the bill creates an uncapped contingency fund for real emergencies.

My colleagues, this bill provides greater resources to ensure that welfare reform will succeed, it improves State flexibility, and it guarantees fiscal and personal responsibility. Above all, it protects innocent children.

We have an historic opportunity to pass a meaningful, bipartisan, welfare reform bill that the President will sign. Let's not squander this chance. I urge you to vote "yes" on the bipartisan substitute.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from California if he is aware that the bill that he has endorsed imposes a tax increase which the President characterized as a tax increase on the working poor by slashing EITC?

Mr. FAZIO of California. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Madam Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Florida, certainly this side of the aisle has been totally opposed to the Republican plans to slash the EITC and the budget.

Mr. SHAW. Reclaiming my time, Madam Chairman. I would advise the gentleman from California that his bill does precisely that. Our bill does not.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Madam Chairman, I support the bill. While Congress has tried with good intentions, the Congress of the United States has failed. What began as a hand up is now a hand-out. Generation after generation are literally trapped at the bottom of the ladder without a good view of what America has to offer. The welfare system is not only broken, it is token. It has become a social placebo with a failing track record.

I ask all who are in here today to deny the following. I say the welfare system currently promotes dependency and illegitimacy, discourages thrift, discourages work, separates, separates and destroys families, isolates children, and from an early age, stifles their ambition, no less.

There is one other element here, folks, in this formula. Our current welfare system penalizes hardworking Americans who pay for this failing train that keeps rolling down the track at us, hurting us.

This is not about Republican and Democrat. There should be more consensus today. This is about a welfare system that is bad for America. Let me submit that the Founders are rolling over in their graves looking at the great Constitution and saying, my God, how could this great instrument somehow be so misused, misapplied, that there are now Americans without hope, Americans without goals, and Americans without ambition? Shame, Congress. Come together on this issue. Pass this bill.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Madam Chairman, I would indicate to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] that all the EITC changes in Castle-Tanner rely on compliance. None of them change the phase-out rates as proposed originally by the House Republican plan. Those are not included in Castle-Tanner. Fortunately, you have pulled those provisions out of your bill but they are scheduled to reappear in your budget resolution in reconciliation bill No. 3, and then some further additional cuts in EITC even beyond what you did in this bill originally.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLVER].

(Mr. OLVER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OLVER. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Chairman, along with every Member of this Chamber, I believe that the current welfare system needs to be reformed. Over the course of this debate, which has continued now for more than a year, each and every one of us has voted to end welfare as we know it. Some of us want to move people to work while protecting the well-being of our children. Others want to squeeze as much money as possible from the system even if the action is punitive, unworkable, and threatens children. That is the crucial difference between the Republican bill and the bipartisan bill that we have before us today.

Madam Chairman, H.R. 3734, the Republican bill, offers little protection for poor children. H.R. 3734, the Republican bill, prohibits vouchers for children of parents who have reached the time limit on welfare but cannot find jobs. H.R. 3734 slashes food stamps, the ultimate social safety net, assuring that more of our own children, our own poor children, will go hungry in a country whose farmers are so magnificently productive that they can feed half of the world.

H.R. 3734 ends the guarantee of child protection and child abuse services, and worst of all, it ends the guarantee of health coverage for millions of poor women and children. We all want to see welfare reformed, Madam Chairman, but we should not jeopardize the health and well-being of children who are really totally without responsibility for the conditions that they are forced to grow up in.

I urge a "no" vote on the Republican bill, Madam Chairman.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would invite the gentleman from Minnesota to read on page 7, subtitle B, the earned income tax credit of the gentleman's bill. It provides and it has been scored that that is a $6 billion statement. The gentleman stands there and tells us that we are going to somehow put this into our bill. It is not in our bill, it is in the gentleman's bill.

It is a tax increase. It is the gentleman's problem, and he is going to have to deal with it. We took it out of our bill because we did not want a tax increase on the working poor. He left it in his bill because obviously he wanted to take $6 billion out of the pockets of working Americans.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Ms. DUNN].

Ms. DUNN of Washington. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Chairman, Democrats have been arguing today that noncitizens are less likely to receive welfare than citizens, but the leading scholar in this area, whose name is George Borjas of the Kennedy School, says just the opposite.

We have a chart here that I would like Members to look at. These numbers are percentages of households receiving welfare programs. The first line says "Aid to Families with Dependent Children," our AFDC program. 4.4 percent of immigrant households receive this kind of aid, as opposed to 2.9 percent of folks who are citizens of the United States, and the chart continues.

In short, Madam Chairman, I just want to say that there is simply no question that some Members are today on this floor spreading misinformation. Welfare for noncitizens has gotten out of hand. We have an opportunity through this legislation to change that.

Madam Chairman, I would say, too, that America is a generous country. We welcome legal immigrants into this Nation, as long as they are here because they want to take advantage of a nation of opportunity. But we can no longer ask our citizens who work for a living to support people who are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, the Republican bill is weak on work. It does not provide the resources, according to CBO. I want to say something, though, to my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], on the tax subject. Look, we forced you to drop your tax increases on the working poor. They were in your bill and you know it. We forced them out. Every bit of the EIT change in Castle-Tanner relates to compliance.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. You forced it out, and where did it go? It went to your bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, I take my time back. The gentleman is 100 percent wrong. You had a phasing down of the amount of money people could earn and still be eligible for the EITC. You had changes in terms of calculation of Social Security and its impact on EITC. We do not change the substance of the EITC law as it affects the working poor.

We forced you not to do that, so do not use that sham argument. We say there should be compliance. We say the law should be followed. That is where all of our money is, and it is disgraceful that you do not have it in, and that you for months and months wanted to hit the working poor. Shame on you for using that argument.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I want to respond to my good friend, a valued Member and a good friend of mine, and someone who has really worked hard, trying to work on welfare reform.

Madam Chairman, I can tell the gentleman from Michigan, he is wrong. He has the increase in his bill. We do not have the increase in our bill. The gentleman gets up there and says shame on us for having it in there and then taking it out. That is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, compliance is not an increase.

Mr. SHAW. Modification is. I would tell the gentleman, read section 1023 of your bill.

Mr. LEVIN. I have read it.

Mr. SHAW. Modification of Adjusted Gross Income Definition for the Earned Income Tax Credit. You take working poor out by a modification of the definition.

Mr. LEVIN. That is simply not true.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. POMEROY].

Mr. POMEROY. Madam Chairman, the plan of the majority to reform the welfare system is weak on work and tough on kids. In my comments, I will talk about the work requirement.

We must reform the welfare system. This reform is in fact overdue. The heart of the reform has to be time-limiting benefits and instilling a tough work requirement. There is broad agreement in the Chamber on that point. But the key distinction between the proposals before us this afternoon is that the bipartisan plan has a work requirement which will succeed and the majority's plan cannot.

This is a very complex issue. There is nothing all that tough about understanding what it takes to make a work requirement succeed. Individuals presently receiving welfare benefits and not in a workplace must have the training required to achieve vocational skills before they will be employable and can stand on their own as constructive members in the workplace. Folks without jobs just will not be able to get jobs if they do not have job skills and employers. We cannot expect employers to hire folks that offer nothing in terms of what they need in the workplace.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office has assessed the two plans on this critical point. They say the work requirement in the bipartisan plan can succeed but the work requirement in the majority's proposal falls $9 to $12 billion short of what it takes to make a work requirement succeed.

That is the choice. The bipartisan plan, which time-limits benefits and gets today's recipients off welfare into the workplace as constructive members of our society, versus the majority's proposal which, while it claims to have a work requirement, by the Congressional Budget Office's own evaluation it falls short of what it takes to create a work requirement which has any chance of getting people off of the welfare rolls and into the workplace.

Vote "yes" on Castle-Tanner and no on the majority proposal.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Madam Chairman, there are differing opinions on how to reform welfare. But one area that we all agree on is the need to improve our child support laws. In fact, this might be the single area where we have had consistent bipartisan cooperation.

However, a last-minute change was inserted into the bill's child support title that weakens assurances of fair child support awards.

The majority's welfare bill now guts a provision in current law that requires States to review child support orders every 3 years for AFDC families.

I should first point out that this change will cost the Federal Government $63 million over the next 6 years. Child support paid on behalf of families on AFDC helps offset the cost of welfare. Therefore, regular updates in child support orders mean fewer dollars being spent on AFDC. The change in the bill ignores this fact and lets non-custodial parents off the hook, while sticking Federal taxpayers with the bill.

I am also concerned this change in modifying child support orders might hurt families leaving AFDC. If we want families to leave welfare and become self-sufficient then we should ensure that they have the child support they are owed.

I urge my colleagues to think twice before watering down child support enforcement, while preaching getting tough on young mothers. Let's all agree that we need tough child support enforcement that says both parents should be involved in providing for their children.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HAYES], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

(Mr. HAYES asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYES. Madam Chairman, it was the mid-1960's, and I remember the day very well when as a student in a Louisiana public high school and part of a debate squad, we were talking about Lyndon Johnson's effort at a Great Society with an alleged war on poverty. Three decades later, that same high school is in the midst of a war with drugs, teen pregnancy, and guns. Poverty has not changed. Over the course of that 30 years, America has spent $5 trillion, an amount ironically close to the total national debt, on a fake war on poverty.

So what happens to real veterans of real wars? Oh, I represent many of them. I represent a young man who was in a real war in Vietnam, who has got to find a way through his impaired health to get someone to drive him almost 100 miles to go to a real military installation to have a real druggist give him an honest, legitimate prescription.

Unfortunately, within my congressional district there are crack addicts that cannot be evicted from Federal public housing because their neighbors cannot find a legal way to throw them out to prevent their own kids from being sold crack, and that person has a Federal welfare check delivered to their doorstep.

I represent a group of Americans who in that three decades now knows that today they must work and work and work until May 7 of each year just to pay Government taxes. Then they get to earn money for their own family. Within the course of that work they recognize that there is almost $200 billion a year, most of which is thrown away on the dole to families who put work behind the rewards of a Federal handout. In 17 States, the equivalent of welfare for starting welfare recipients is above $10 an hour. In 40 States, including my Louisiana, a starting welfare recipient is above $8 an hour, which is better than in many counties a starting teacher or a starting police officer.

There are the kind of things where America looks and says: We don't want to change welfare as you folks in Washington know it, we want to change welfare as we know it in our neighborhoods, where senior citizens are terrified to leave at night because the monies that are diverted in a failed system for three decades prevent our own safety, our own sanctity, and the educational future of our own children.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Madam Chairman, do you not love all this talk about how we are going to get money from these poor people to give money to other constituents who are more deserving? Yet this same Republican majority who is talking about cutting $53 billion from welfare has no problem giving a tax cut of $245 billion over 7 years, better than half of which goes to individuals and families with incomes of $100,000 or more.

It seems to me that our Republican friends are against welfare for the poor but they have no problem with welfare for the rich. I do not want to hear my Republican colleagues talk about local control, because I worked in a State legislature and I know what block granting is all about. This mantra of States rights, let the States decide, let the States manage it, in my State of Rhode Island, that is a prescription for disaster. I will tell Members why. Because without the assistance that comes through entitlement programs, the money goes to the States. So the money goes to the State bureaucrats; it does not go to the women and children and the poor people who need the assistance.

Once again under States rights, just as it stood 30 years ago, States rights means justice will depend on geography. If you are a poor person in Rhode Island, you will not be treated the same as if you are a poor person in a State like Tennessee, which has got a much better economy than we have in Rhode Island.

Finally, my last point is that what this bill does to legal residents is shameful. To cut assistance to people who already pay taxes and in fact tax-paying, legal residents who do not enjoy many of the exemptions that regular citizens enjoy because they have not attained citizenship. They will be denied the same benefits as citizens. This to me represents no more than the same immigrant bashing that this majority has continued all 2 years it has been in the majority.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GILCHREST].

Mr. GILCHREST. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, I think to a large extent the debate has covered most of the material on why it is important to change the welfare system as we know it today. I do not think there is one person in this Congress that would say the welfare system is working. It has perpetuated the paralysis of poverty far too long.

There are some minor disagreements about how we ought to move forward. But at least we as a Congress want to move forward to make a fair assessment, to provide a program so that people have a sense of opportunity for the wonders that this Nation has to offer.

This program that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] is offering before this Congress does some amazing things. He discovers, in my judgment, the mystery of human initiative, and that is a sense of responsibility and a sense of dignity for all Americans.

This is a fair bill, it is fundamentally sound. It will offer opportunity for individuals, whether they are on welfare now or may be on welfare in the future.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for Mr. SHAW's bill.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Madam Chairman, the existing welfare system is broken, it needs radical overhaul. There is no doubt about that. But in doing it, I ask every Member of this House to please put the politics aside. Taxpayers are tired of people who will not work taking a bite out of their tax dollars. They want us to be tough, but they do not want us to be mean.

They do not want us to say to a worker who is laid off because his company moved out of town or out of the country, "Tough luck, Charlie, you're on your own, baby." They do not want us to say to a sick or hungry kid, "Sorry, kid, God gave you the wrong set of parents. You're on your own." They do not want us to pass a political document that will never become law, that is just designed to define the differences between Bill Clinton and Bob Dole one more time. They want us to work it out. They want us to get it done.

That is what Castle-Tanner does. It is a bipartisan package. It does work it out. It is tough, but it is not mean. A friend of mine in the legislature used to say, "You know, the problem with politics is that all too often it gives the poor and the rich the same amount of ice, but the poor get theirs in the wintertime."

That is the difference between the Castle-Tanner bill and the committee bill. Vote for Castle-Tanner. It is a tough, good welfare reform bill that gets the job done without being mean.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSTAD].

(Mr. RAMSTAD asked and was given permission to revise and expend his remarks.)

Mr. RAMSTAD. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act.

Madam Chairman, in 1992, Presidential candidate Bill Clinton pledged to "end welfare as we know it." Today 4 years later, welfare recipients and taxpayers are still waiting for President Clinton to make good on his promise.

The President could keep his word by signing the welfare reform waiver proposals on his desk from Wisconsin and Minnesota, as well as the comprehensive Federal welfare reform bill before us today which would empower States to proceed with innovative changes.

To hasten approval of badly needed welfare reform, we in this Congress took a bold step toward meeting the President halfway when we separated welfare reform from the Medicaid reform bill that had threatened to doom both reforms.

The time for action is long overdue. Our Nation's welfare system is in dire need of reform. America has spent $5.4 trillion on social welfare programs since the beginning of the "War on Poverty" in the 1960's. Yet, the poverty rate has not decreased and the number of families on welfare has skyrocketed from 1.9 million in 1970 to 5 million today. The sad history of welfare is one of three generations of people who have become trapped in a cycle of dependency. Since 1993 alone, the number of single women who are heads of households in poverty has increased by 175,000 women.

Frustrated by inaction at the Federal level, individual States have moved forward with their own reform proposals. Minnesota and Wisconsin, for example, have put together comprehensive welfare reform plans to move welfare recipients from welfare to work. A Minnesota Department of Human Services pilot project—the Minnesota Family Investment Plan [MFIP]—has resulted in reduced case-loads for the Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] program in the seven counties in which it operates. Minnesota would like to expand MFIP throughout the State as well as implement a number of additional pioneering measures recently passed by the State legislature.

Wisconsin would like to implement "Wisconsin Works," the welfare plan praised by President Clinton during his May 18 Saturday radio address as a "sweeping welfare reform plan, one of [the] boldest yet attempted in America * * * We should get it done."

Unfortunately, since the President has twice vetoed welfare reform passed by Congress that would allow States to change the welfare system in ways which meet the needs of their residents, States must still go through an arduous special waiver process to enact their reform plans.

But the President has yet to approve the waiver requests of Minnesota and Wisconsin. Minnesota submitted its waiver requests last March 28. According to the Minnesota Department of Human Services, it is critical these waivers be approved before the end of this month. And while the President said he would make the final decision on the Wisconsin waiver request by mid-July, he has yet to do so. I remain hopeful the President has truly had a change of heart and will approve both States' requests.

It should be pointed out that the Clinton administration has granted several waivers to allow other States to implement similar proposals. But why should we approach this in a piecemeal, one-waiver-at-a-time fashion and waste valuable time and taxpayer dollars—time and money which could be better spent helping families and children escape the web of welfare dependency?

How much longer can we continue to wait for the President to "end welfare as we know it?" How much longer will the President defend the welfare status quo and deny people in need and American taxpayers the opportunity for true reform?

I believe the time is right to move beyond the piecemeal waiver process, put partisan politics aside and pass the comprehensive welfare reform legislation before us today.

Madam Chairman, it's time to change the failed welfare system's vicious cycle of dependency.

When this legislation is placed before the President again soon, we will find out if he has, indeed, really changed his position or if he will continue to fight to preserve the status quo. I hope the President will take the opportunity to support the Minnesota and Wisconsin plans—as well as proposals for the 48 other States—and sign the bill. Without national welfare reform for all 50 States, the cycle of poverty is destined to continue indefinitely.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

(Mr. SHAW asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, today I think is a defining day in the history of this Congress. We are going straight at probably one of the biggest problems that we have in this country and something that I can only describe as a national disgrace.

I respect every Member of this body, and I respect the great diversity all across this country. I respect the Governors of this country, and I respect the 50 States.

But I would say to all of my colleagues, let us recognize that we have a failed welfare system in this country. Let us realize that at one time or another, every sitting Member of this Congress who has been here through the 104th Congress has at one time voted against the existing welfare system.

What brings us together is that we all agree that the existing welfare system is not worth defending. We must change. We have got stagnation of population. We have tremendous problems out there that have been caused by a welfare system that the Congress procrastinated with, did nothing about, did not change. Now we are bringing forth change.

Last year there was a Democrat substitute which took the vote of every Member on the minority side, and then there was a Republican bill that prevailed and went on to the President, and he vetoed it. It went to the President again and he vetoed it.

What we are giving to the President today is another chance, another chance to deliver upon his promise to change welfare as we know it today.

That is tremendously important. Those of you who vote for the Castle-Tanner substitute which will be put forth by Mr. GEPHARDT at a later time today, you are saying you will have faith in the States and you are willing to send the programs back to the States and let them run it, and you are going to give them great latitude in designing it.

I have great respect for the authors of that bill and what is in that bill. But can we do better? Yes, we can do better. We can do better by passing the bill that the Republicans have put forth, that has come to us from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Why is that a better bill? One, it does not slash the earned income tax credit. I would like to read a provision from the Executive Office of the President in talking about the Republican bill when the Republicans were cutting EITC.

He says the bill would still raise taxes on millions of working families by cutting the earned income tax credit. This is a letter written on July 16 to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON]. At a later time I may put it into the RECORD.

Now, when is a tax increase not a tax increase? To hear some of the Members come to the floor, they say it is not a tax increase when it is in the Democrat bill, but it is when it is in the Republican bill.

Mr. Chairman, we took it out. We were criticized for it. We went back and looked at it and said, "You are right," and we took it out and we are not going to put it back in. But it is in the substitute, in the one we are going to be asked to vote on later this evening.

That is an important distinction for many of the Members on the Democrat side of the aisle. I respect that. I respect it so much that we took it out of our bill.

What else have we done? The President said that Medicaid was a poison pill. We took it out of our bill.

This is not an exercise in politics. This is a rescue mission by the Members of Congress to smash a corrupt system that has led to poverty across this country, has perpetuated it, and led to stagnation of people, an unforgivable sin, a stagnation of people within our inner cities all across this country who are paid to do nothing with their lives, paid not to get married, paid not to work, paid to have children, who then themselves turn around and go into the welfare system.

This is a rescue mission. I respect every Member for wanting to change that system, but I would say that the best way to go is with the Republican bill. Vote against the substitute that will be offered by Mr. GEPHARDT.

If you truly believe that noncitizens who are growing on our welfare rolls at a tremendous speed, if you believe they should still receive welfare, fine, vote for the Gephardt substitute. If you believe that welfare should truly not be time-limited, fine, vote for the substitute. But vote for something. That is what is very important.

This I think is an historic moment. I think that the President will end up signing the bill that we will send him. It makes a lot of sense. It is a good bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 10 seconds.

To the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], what we force Republicans to take out in the EITC change relating to rates, Democrats do not put back in period. That is a fib.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BECERRA].

(Mr. BECERRA asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BECERRA. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Let me begin by trying to dispel some myths and correct something that the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means has just said. Legal immigrants are not over utilizing welfare, AFDC, for example. In fact, they use it as a lower rate than does the citizen population.

What we find is a skew in the numbers because of the refugee population, which by definition comes without anything because they are escaping persecution. We have in the law a requirement that we try to aid them as they try to transition from a place they had to escape without bringing anything with them.

We hear people say that we have to deny immigrants, legal immigrants, not undocumented, access to services for which they pay with their taxes, because in every respect they do what a citizen does. They must contribute in their taxes.

We are saying here in this bill, "Let's deny them services because they are coming in this country to get welfare." Absolutely not true. A respected, well-known research center, conservative research center which the Republican majority often uses, the Cato Institute, told us immigrants contribute about $285 billion to the economy, pay $70 billion in taxes, and net, in other words, in excess, they contribute $25 billion more than they use in services from the government.

Now, why do we hear all this talk? Because they cannot vote, they cannot hurt people who attack them, and they are an easy target, especially when we call them non-citizens. On behalf of my parents who were immigrants, on behalf of the over 1 million active and now veteran legal immigrants who served this country in time of war, and on behalf of the two Congressional Medal of Honor winners who served this country, both legal immigrants, that I can talk of, I say they do not come here to take, they come to give.

The proof is in the pudding, and we should not attack a group just because it happens to be politically tenable to go after them, because they cannot go after us. It is unfortunate it is done. Let us have some decent debate on this and get meaningful welfare reform, but let us not attack folks trying to make this country better than what it is.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would say to the gentleman in the well, we exempt veterans who are non-citizens.

Madam Chairman, I yield the balance of my time back to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] and ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS].

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Madam Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman for yielding me time.

Madam Chairman, Margaret Thatcher once said, "Pennies do not come from heaven, they have to be earned here on earth."

For years we have asked the question, does increased social spending equate with a better childhood? Since 1960, the $5 trillion spent on social programs has increased at a rate above inflation. The simple answer, however, is that children are still suffering because the system is flawed.

I would like to give, Madam Chairman, another quote. "Work banishes those three great evils: Boredom, vice, and poverty." That came from the great philosopher, Voltaire. There is nothing wrong with work.

Our plan increases funding for welfare. Now, we are going to hear on that side of the aisle that there are huge cuts that affect children, huge cuts that affect the underprivileged. But as Margaret Thatcher said and the philosopher Voltaire said, work does not hurt anyone.

Yet, even notwithstanding that fact, if we look at this graph, we will see welfare spending will increase 31 percent. Spending will increase $137 billion under the House welfare reform plan. Clearly when we hear the President say there is not enough money, there is going to be plenty, ample amounts of money for their program.

I would say to my colleagues on this side of the aisle, it is time we force the President to end this double talk on welfare and keep his promise to end welfare as we know it, correcting the inequalities that are in the system. This bill does it. The Republican bill does it, and it enforces the things that President Clinton talked about in his 1992 campaign.

So, by signing our bill, he has nothing to lose. Continuing to pour more money into the welfare system is not the answer.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY].

(Mrs. MALONEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MALONEY. Madam Chairman, the American people do not want to hurt children. The Republican bill is so removed from reality, it punishes children and penalizes working families. The bill would hurt millions of innocent children by making deep cuts in benefits, especially during economic downturns, by limiting the contingency fund to only $2 billion. The Tanner-Castle substitute has an uncapped contingency fund for use during these troubling times.

When we completely eliminate the Federal guarantee, those of us who have worked in city and State legislatures know that given the financial pressures, the poor will often fall through the cracks.

This Republican bill just tells defenseless children, tough luck. This bill will not put people to work. CBO says that it needs $10 billion more for the program, for their work program. It will put families with children out on the street. That is not welfare reform, it is a blueprint for disaster.

Say yes to welfare reform, and no to this cruel and senseless bill.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. MYRICK].

Mrs. MYRICK. Madam Chairman, back home in Charlotte, we have many successes in moving people off of welfare—because we have created programs that work best for the folks in our community.

As mayor of Charlotte, I worked closely with many people who found themselves needing the helping hand of welfare assistance.

Many people on welfare are young, single mothers. In working with them, I learned what kind of help they need to become self-sufficient.

Our bill will offer them exactly that form of help.

It will restore power and flexibility to the States, confirming our commitment to send power, money, and influence back home—and finally get Washington bureaucrats out of the picture so we can design our own programs at home.

It will help young mothers obtain jobs so they can feel good about themselves, and their kids can be proud of them.

Child care is one of their major concerns. Our bill has specific provisions for child care assistance. I was a working mom and I know that it is difficult to go out in search of a better life when you have your kids to care for.

It will also ensure that children receive nutritious meals at school through the school breakfast and lunch programs, as well as the special milk program.

Our bill will offer protections, as well as assistance, by assuring that certain vulnerable people—such as pregnant women and people certified as physically or mentally unable to work—are exempt from the work requirement.

In short, our bill makes sure that the needy are helped—and that those that can—help themselves.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY].

Mrs. LOWEY. Madam Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Republican welfare bill and in support of the bipartisan alternative, the Castle-Tanner bill. We all agree that reform of our failed welfare system is long overdue. The system is failing both the taxpayers who fund it and the individuals that it is supposed to help.

Welfare must be reformed to better reflect and reinforce our shared American values of work and responsibility, but, unfortunately, the Republican welfare bill does not reflect our values. It is just too tough on children and too weak on work.

The American people want welfare reform to move Americans into the work force, not to punish children. This bill fails this fundamental test.

In reforming the welfare system, our focus must be on moving people into real jobs. Unfortunately, this bill will not move welfare recipients into the work force. It does not create a real incentive for the States to move people off welfare and on to jobs, and it does not improve access to education and training so that people have the skills they need to get a job.

Quite simply, this bill imposes time limits without giving recipients the skills and education they need to find jobs before the time limits kick in. That is cruel and unfair. Real welfare reform should move recipients off the dole and on to jobs, not off the dole and on to the streets.

The other major flaws in the Republican bill: The legislation prohibits Federal assistance from going to children if their parents reach the bill's time limit. That is wrong. We must not punish children for the failures of their parents.

By contrast, the bipartisan Castle-Tanner bill requires States to provide help to children if their parents reach the time limit. Castle-Tanner also preserves the nutritional safety net for our children instead of giving States the option to block grant food stamps.

The Republican bill is also bad for New York. The Republican bill shifts Medicaid costs from the Federal Government to State and local governments, and we are going to lose $1.8 billion in Medicaid costs.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York, the young Mr. LAZIO.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Madam Chairman, I want to take a moment to express my deepest sorrow over the tragedy of TWA flight 800, which went down just last night off the shore of my own home on Long Island. Our thoughts and our prayers are with the families of the victims as they deal with their loss, and our gratitude goes to the rescuers throughout the country who are helping to recover important evidence.

Today almost 1.5 million people in my home State of New York are receiving some sort of public assistance. That is a big number. And far too often that is exactly how these people are treated, as numbers to be fed into a broken welfare system, processed and pushed out again.

The current system is inefficient, unfair and damaging to those it is supposed to help. Is this how we are supposed to show compassion? I think we can do better. This reform will replace our failed welfare system with one based on individual responsibility, accountability and hope for future generations.

By destroying the work ethic and encouraging fathers to leave home, our current system results in broken families, a disintegration of moral standards and devastated communities.

In contrast, these reforms would strengthen families, require able-bodied recipients to work, attack fraud and abuse, and crack down on deadbeat parents. Most importantly, it provides hope for children by giving them the tools to break the cruel cycle of dependency. We will give them the incentive and tools to break out of the welfare trap that holds them down and limits their potential. By honoring work we allow people to assume responsibilities for themselves.

By providing more funding, more funding for child care, we will provide them with the opportunity to provide a better life for their children and end the cycle of dependency that has resulted in families raising a fourth generation on public assistance.

As a result of a welfare system that discourages two-parent families, today's illegitimacy rate among welfare families has continued to rise. This plan seeks to reverse this trend by increasing efforts to establish paternity and by demanding deadbeat fathers pay child support. Under the plan all mothers will be encouraged to identify the father of their children or face the risk of reduced benefits.

Most importantly, this reform gives hope to our children, the most defenseless victims of our current system. The system fosters dependency, crime, violence and despair, yet somehow we expect children born and raised under these circumstances to be able to break the cycle of dependency. That is simply not fair.

Madam Chairman, I am proud to support this bill. It moves us in the right direction.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

(Mr. OWENS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OWENS. Madam Chairman, welfare reform is very much in order. The business of policymakers is reform. As legislators, the constant improvement of Government functions and programs is our job. Reform is a permanent, ongoing process. There is not a single Government program in existence that cannot use some reform. But reform should not be driven by manufactured hysteria and scapegoating. Welfare reform should not become the oppression and persecution of the poor.

At the heart of the welfare program is the aid to families with dependent children. Children are the primary recipients. The survival and development of children is what aid to families with dependent children is all about. Children are our Nation's greatest resource, and the AFDC program is about the salvation of those children.

Welfare reform can be accomplished without the kind of extremism and the persecution of the poor which is involved in the Republican reform bill.

Put the problem in perspective. We are talking about 1 percent, approximately 1 percent, of the total Federal budget. There are many other subsidy programs we should be looking at which would cost us far more. The farm subsidy program, farmers home loan mortgages, and the subsidies to farmers not to grow grain or plant or plow fields; those are very expensive subsidies.

We give aid to people who are in earthquake zones, we give aid to people who are victims of hurricanes and floods. We have numerous places where we subsidize people.

There are also other areas where there is definite waste in Government that we should take a hard look at.

The CIA found they had $3 billion they did not know they had in a slush fund. The Federal Reserve Board has $3 billion for rainy days, and they have not had a rainy day in 79 years. So we have a lot of places to look for waste and improving Government and reforming Government. We do not have to persecute the poor in order to get rid of waste.

AFDC is a program for children. It has been badly administered. It is not administered by poor people. We can improve the administration of it. We can find ways to improve it in many ways, but we should not persecute the poor. We should not persecute children in the process. This is about developing children, and we should be about the business of developing children.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from the State of Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, we are able to come to the floor today and offer the American people a meaningful welfare reform proposal because of the work done by my colleagues Representatives CASTLE and TANNER. I have remained committed to changing the welfare system as we know it and worked with Representatives CASTLE and TANNER to continue the welfare debate. Their efforts continued the discussions between the majority and minority in the House, the administration, and the Governors to find a workable welfare compromise. I am pleased that the Republican majority have incorporated many of the suggestions included in the Castle-Tanner proposal. Therefore, I will join my fellow colleagues in support of H.R. 3734 as offered by the Republican majority.

Madam Chairman, this bill answers the American people's demands to reform the current welfare program and addresses many of the concerns of the bipartisan Castle-Tanner group, the Governors and the administration. Over the past 18 months, this Congress has set out to truly reform the welfare program, and twice our efforts have been stopped by two Presidential vetoes.

Madam Chairman, the American people recognize that the current welfare system is a failure. It traps welfare recipients in a cycle of dependency, and undermines the values of work and family that form the foundation of communities. The welfare state has created a world where children have no hope for tomorrow. Welfare cannot be a way of life for women and children. This bill provides women with the support to become working members of our society through the job training and child support programs.

This bill restores power and flexibility to the States through the cash welfare and child care block grants. States will be given maximum flexibility to reform welfare, to develop income-support programs, and move families into the work force.

We all agree the program must be changed, however some of my colleagues are saying the changes we are making is going to cut welfare programs, and that is simply untrue.

Madam Chairman, over the last 6 years the Federal Government has spent over $441 billion on welfare programs. Through the next 6 years, through 2002 our welfare bill proposes to spend $578 billion. It is not cutting spending in the welfare bill that will be sent to the President, it increases it by $137 billion. This is not a cut to welfare. We should support this bill.

This bill ends the long-term dependency of the welfare program and encourages self-sufficiency through imposing tougher work requirements. This bill guarantees that welfare becomes a helping hand and not a lifetime hand-out by imposing a 5-year lifetime limit for collecting AFDC. This bill is a common-sense effort to restore the basic values of work and restore the American dream for those currently in the welfare system.

This bill restores power and flexibility to the States, confirming our commitment to give the decisionmaking, money, and influence back to the States and get Washington bureaucrats out of your pockets. Through the cash welfare and child care block grants States will be given the maximum flexibility to reform welfare, develop income-support programs, and move families into the work force.

Washington's answers have not ended the war on poverty. We have found that the best welfare solutions come from those closest to the problems—not from bureaucrats in Washington. It is time to get the Washington bureaucrats out of the welfare system.

We all agree the program must be changed, however, some of my colleagues are saying these changes will cut funding to welfare programs—this is completely untrue.

Madame Chairman, over the last 6 years the Federal Government has spent $441.3 billion on welfare programs, including aid to families with dependent children [AFDC], child care, child support enforcement, food stamps, and child support.

Over the next 6 years, through 2002, our welfare bill will spend $578.3 billion. Our bill is not cutting spending in the welfare bill that will be sent to the President. In actuality, over the next 6 years, even after reform, welfare spending will increase by $137 billion. Let me say this again, the Federal Government will spend an additional $137 billion on welfare over the next 6 years. This is not a funding cut to the welfare program.

Madame Chairman, we are presenting to the President a meaningful welfare plan that incorporates changes requested by the governors and the bipartisan Castle-Tanner group. It is bipartisan effort and I urge my colleague to join me in supporting this welfare proposal and I encourage President Clinton to move beyond his words of support and sign our bill.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, how much time is remaining on both sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO] has 11½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAURO].

Ms. DELAURO. Madam Chairman, today is a sad day for those of us who support real welfare reform. The Republican bill fails to meet the goal of moving people from the welfare dole to the working rolls. It fails to protect children from the ravages of stark poverty. This bill is tough on kids and weak on work.

The American people want welfare reform that replaces dependency with the dignity that is earned from working for a living. At the same time the American people want us to protect innocent children who have no means to take care of themselves, and this bill moves in the opposite direction on both counts.

The Republicans' Congressional Budget Office says that the Gingrich welfare plan underfunds the work program by $10 billion, by $10 billion, making it impossible to take people from welfare to work. It builds in the failure of getting people to work.

Under this bill's food stamp block grant plan more than 1 million children in this country could be forced into poverty. One million. It is outrageous. This bill is an unforgivable assault on our Nation's values and what we are about.

Fortunately, today, we have a viable and a fair substitute, a bipartisan plan, Tanner-Castle, I repeat bipartisan, that puts people to work without throwing more kids into poverty. It has strong work requirements and the needed funds to make them work. It reforms AFDC and ends the cycle of dependency for welfare recipients and their families. It emphasizes the dignity of work over the punishment of children.

We have precedent here. Last year the Republican leadership tried to drop 2 million children from the school lunch program. Now they are targeting kids again. It is wrong, and I call on my colleagues to reject it.

We must not miss the opportunity today, it is an historic moment, to deliver real welfare reform that this country needs. Let us stand together for a bipartisan commonsense approach. Reject this failed agenda and support Tanner-Castle.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from the State of Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS], a member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SHAYS. Madam Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, this new Republican majority has three primary objectives: One is to balance our Federal budget and to get our financial house in order; the second is to save our trust funds for future generations; and the third, and that is the one most involved with this effort today, we are trying to transform our caretaking social and corporate and welfare state into a caring opportunity society.

There is nothing caring about our present welfare system. When I see my own communities, I see young children having babies, I see young children selling drugs, I see young children killing each other. In my communities there is nothing humane or caring about the system that we have. I see 24-year-olds who have never had a job, not because a job does not exist, because maybe it is a dead-end job, in their view. If I had ever said that to my dad, my dad would have doubled the amount of time I took that job.

And 30-year-old grandparents. We basically have three generations of people on welfare. We have helped subsidize and create the very system we are trying to eliminate.

Madam Chairman, I believe that child care and job training should be designed by the States, not the Federal Government. I believe child care and job training should be designed by local governments, not the Federal Government. I want to move power and money and influence out of this place and back to local communities, who know how to spend the money.

Madam Chairman, I want to add to what the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE] said: $441 billion for welfare up to $578 billion, an increase of $137 billion. Hardly a cut. We need to change the system, and this bill does it.

I would conclude by saying that in the final analysis, it is not what we do for our children but what we have taught them to do for themselves that will help make them be successful human beings. We need to teach them how to grow the seeds, how to grow the seeds, not just hand them the food.

This is a caring bill, and the sooner we pass it, the better.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

(Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DINGELL. Madam Chairman, we must reform welfare. But as we work to reform welfare it is important to remember that we do not need to provide welfare assistance solely for altruistic reasons.

We provide welfare assistance and financial assistance to those in need because it is in the best interest of our society to do so as we fit them for return to work and to membership in this society and in the productive units of this society.

Madam Chairman, work works. One of the highest priorities must be giving States and their residents the tools to find and keep good-paying jobs. No

Federal, State, or local government funds should be given to individuals without expecting something from those individuals in return. The purpose of welfare is to give financial lift to help people out of difficult times. Yet it must also provide them with the tools, training, education to support their families and to become productive parts of our work force.

The Castle-Tanner bipartisan reform welfare program, of which I am proud cosponsor, provides the States with tools to reduce welfare rolls through education and training of recipients. I support this proposal for this reason, because it is the only version of welfare reform being considered today which will help Michiganians off welfare by providing the skills to achieve good jobs.

Madam Chairman, we must care for the kids. Twenty-one percent of our children through no fault of their own are living in poverty. The Castle-Tanner bipartisan welfare reform will improve our welfare system so that abused children are protected. Neglected children get care, and hungry children will be fed. It will provide families with the support they need to care for their children while they move to become useful working components of our society. Without a guarantee for our children for food, shelter, and medical care, we will have a failure in this bill.

The Republican bill fails by comparison. It does not take care of children. It does not take care of the hungry. It does not provide means for getting people back to work.

I urge support of Castle-Tanner.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding the time.

I think that I really know America. I know an America that rose to help the victims in Oklahoma City. I know an America that rushed to the Midwest when floods overtook that community. I know an America that extended themselves to help those in hurricane-ridden Florida. And I know an America who stood on June 1, 100,000 strong and stood for our children.

The Castle-Tanner bill is what we call real welfare reform. It fares well for Americans. We do not need a bill that cuts Americans who need some $60 billion, as the Republican bill does. We need a bill that has Americans who work hard and pay taxes joining us in saying that is fair. If you have a cutoff, then require the States to provide a bridge for those who may not yet be able to be independent after a 5- or 2-year cutoff. Provide vouchers. If you cut Medicaid, allow families with children to still carry Medicaid. Excess shelter provision is needed, and the Castle-Tanner has that.

Although we are in a climate of bashing hard-working immigrants, of which many of us came to this Nation in so many shapes and sizes, they pay taxes. They work. This provision in the Castle-Tanner bill allows for legal immigrants who have fallen on hard times, who cannot find work, to be able to be provided for.

Yes, the Castle-Tanner bill does not increase the taxes of working poor, people who have made the decision that I would rather stand up and be counted in the work force but yet still need food stamps in order to carry the day for their children.

I do not know about my colleagues, but the bill to pass today for real welfare reform that fares America well is the bill that supports our children. Why can we not do this in a bipartisan manner and stop the accusations? I am going to stand for the children of America and not cast aside those who are least able to serve.

Please support the Castle-Tanner legislation.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH].

Mr. HAYWORTH. Madam Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, my colleague from Ohio, for this time.

Madam Chairman, she is called by an unlikely nickname, Pee Wee. Pee Wee Mestas of Holbrook, AZ, operates the Wayside Drive-in and offers a true spirit of compassion that goes beyond bromides to putting her philosophy and, yes, her faith in action. For, you see, Madam Chairman, Pee Wee Mestas, the operator of the Wayside Drive-in in Holbrook tries to do a gigantic job, not only providing for her family but trying to introduce the concept of work to young ladies in her hometown who have had children out of wedlock.

Recently Pee Wee shared with me her frustration, for inevitably, Pee Wee says, when she offers jobs to these young ladies, they come and they work for a couple of weeks. But then invariably, and this is the sad fact, then invariably they say: Pee Wee, listen, I appreciate the opportunity to have this job, but, you see, the government will pay me more to stay home and do nothing.

Madam Chairman, I respectfully submit that the issue is not about the care of children, for all of us in this Chamber truly care for children. The issue is teaching those mothers, those parents who have failed to take responsibility, they need responsibility, they need work. That is genuine compassion. Vote for the majority plan.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NEAL] who has worked very hard on the issue of welfare reform.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NEAL] is recognized for 5½ minutes.

(Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Madam Chairman, there is a great verse from the old folksong that goes like this: When will we ever learn?

Two years ago, one side in this institution learned that they would be unsuccessful in imposing their will on the other side when it came to the health care debate. And for the better part of 18 months, the majority in this House has failed to successfully pass welfare reform.

The truth is, today, and Members will never hear them give any credit to this gentleman, but Bill Clinton forever changed the culture of the welfare debate in this country when he said we would end welfare as we currently know it.

There is but one piece of legislation in front of this House today that commands the respect of Democrats and Republicans alike. That is the Castle-Tanner legislation. That is legislation based upon the hard-won experience of the former Governor of Delaware and the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, because they worked diligently to come up with a piece of legislation that Republicans and Democrats alike could support.

No Member of this institution supports or defends the status quo when it comes to the current welfare system in America. We reject the notion that one out of three children being born out of wedlock in the long run ensures the social viability of this Nation. But as Al Smith used to say, let us take a look at the facts.

Members will never hear it from the majority in this House, but today there are 1.3 million fewer welfare recipients across this Nation. Bill Clinton has granted 67 experiments in 40 States. Seventy-five percent of the welfare recipients in this country today are in work programs across this Nation.

But let us not lose sight of this fact. I reject the suggestion of the previous speaker on the Republican side, when he said that this debate was not about children. There are 12.8 million AFDC recipients in America today; 8.8 million of those AFDC recipients are children.

Despite the mistakes of parents who may well have been involved in anti-social behavior or, through no fault of their own, receiving welfare benefits, we ask ourselves today, what do we do about those 8.8 million children? Is there anybody of the Jewish faith or the Protestant faith or the Catholic faith today or other faiths in this institution that would reject the instruction of those religious creeds and say that we have an obligation to those children to move them through this difficult time in their lives? Their only mistake was to be born into circumstances over which they had no control.

But what is ironic about much of this debate today is that we have an opportunity in this Chamber to reject the status quo, to do it as Democrats and Republicans alike and, indeed, everybody would acknowledge how far the Democratic Party has moved during the last 18 months on this issue.

Do my colleagues know what else is extraordinary? As the Democratic Party has moved to the center in this debate, the Republican Party has moved more to the right. The goal of welfare reform has been elusive because there is an element on the other side that does not want to change in policy. They want a campaign issue for November. And the nominee of the Republican Party really had very little interest in coming to terms with a welfare bill that he knew that the President of the United States would sign.

We have a chance in the next hours of this day to create a welfare bill that Republicans and Democrats can go home and point to as a tangible achievement and to remind the American people that the system really does work when there is an element of goodwill that governs our lives.

The choice is relatively simple today. Will we vote for a piece of legislation that protects 8.8 million American children, or will we be caught up in a political issue for the fall?

I would remind all that, again, it was Bill Clinton who changed the culture of the welfare debate in this country and has said repeatedly, if a good, sound welfare bill is put on his desk, he will sign that legislation. Do Members know what else is interesting? He has already stated he will sign the Castle-Tanner bill if put on his desk.

We can accomplish that in the next few hours. Vote for Castle-Tanner and to welfare say farewell.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I want to compliment the previous speaker. I think he did a pretty good job down here putting out his point of view, some of which I would agree with and some of which I would not. But I think he did a nice job with his remarks. I do want to say that when we look at what is happening in the House of Representatives, I said it this morning and have been saying it now for many months, the kind of change that we have seen in this House of Representatives is absolutely breathtaking.

We have had a welfare system that did not have time limits, did not have good work requirements, did not have good incentives for people to go to work, did not have good training requirements.

The American people are very smart. They knew we did not have a system that worked. I think the American people, because I am one of them, kind of grew up with the philosophy of Judeo-Christianity. We help people who need help and to teach people how to help themselves. That is the bottom line.

Somebody may have something, may fall on hard times, we are there at the doorstep. But it gets old after awhile when those very same people who needed the help decide for whatever reason not to help themselves.

What does this bill do? It says, look, you have got to go to work; you have got to get trained. You cannot be on welfare forever. If you are down and out, if you are down on your luck, if you need some help, if your kids are sick, if you are sick, we are going to help you.

But at some point, in fairness to all those people, frankly, who are in this building today, who get up and go to work and pay their taxes, this is what they want. They want the time limits. They want the training requirements. They want the work requirements, and they want people to go to work.

And for those who can never go to work because they are just not capable, we are going to take care of them, but for the vast majority of Americans who want to work, we are going to fundamentally change the system.

For those that wonder about this Congress, as my colleagues know, the President did make a campaign speech a couple years ago saying he was going to change welfare as we know it. He has vetoed two bills, third time is the charm, but he vetoed the two bills that we sent to him since this Republican Congress took control.

Now, this is not braggadocio or partisanship. Frankly, it is the facts. The facts are the reason why we are debating fundamental welfare reform is because this Congress kept its word. The reason why people who go to work are going to feel better about the newly created welfare program is because we kept our word, and it is significant. The substitute that is being offered is a pretty positive substitute. Does not go far enough; it is too much, too much give, too much compromise, too much of the old system. But the compromise legislation ends the entitlement. It has work requirements. It has some form of time limits.

Can my colleagues imagine, the Republicans and Democrats today in the House of Representatives are debating the most fundamental change in welfare since the program was created, and we are doing it because we want to help those people who are poor, we want to help those people who are disadvantaged get to work, and at the same time we are sticking up for the taxpayers in this country who go to work, who are willing to share their income with those who are less fortunate but who only ask that at some point in time those who are less fortunate get out and help themselves.

I think this is a win-win today. I would defeat the substitute, I would pass the bill. Let us have real welfare reform, and I think at the end of the day the President signs it and this Congress will go down in history as the Congress that stood up for working people in America.

Mr. NADLER. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 3734, the Republican Welfare Reform Act being considered today on the House floor.

This welfare reform bill is a direct assault on America's children, and on America's future. Most of the provisions of this bill would have their primary impact on low-income children. This bill would cut $61.1 billion from vital family survival programs, denying benefits to millions of children who are in desperate need.

This bill eliminates AFDC as an entitlement program, and creates a block grant to the States, denying the assurance of basic necessities to poor families and children when they are in need.

The child care assistance provided in this bill is insufficient. How do the authors of this legislation expect low-income families to get off welfare if they can't even afford a safe, decent, place for their children to be cared for while they work? According to the CBO, this bill falls $800 million short of the costs of providing child care assistance to individuals required to work.

Furthermore, the CBO has estimated that this bill would fall $12.9 billion short of the funding necessary to meet the work program requirements in the bill. If we are to move families effectively toward financial independence, we must—before we remove a vital safety net—provide the training necessary to perform jobs that will provide financial independence.

Madam Chairman, the magnitude of cuts to and elimination of programs that provide children and families important protections is unprecedented. Not only does this bill take away the assurance of emergency assistance for the very poor, but it also reduces drastically funding for child nutrition programs and food stamps. More than half of all food stamp recipients are children, and this bill slashes food stamp spending by $28.4 billion over 6 years, putting many children in jeopardy of not receiving the nutrition they need.

Madam Chairman, this bill is counter to the so-called family values about which there has been much discussion during the 104th Congress. If this really were a bill to promote and foster independence, it would focus on creating jobs and providing training, educational opportunities, and child care assistance. But instead, this legislation's focus is on removing basic assistance from children in dire need.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote against this very damaging bill.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Chairman, I would first like to commend Mr. SHAW and Mr. ARCHER, along with the other members of their respective committees, for once again forging legislation which will truly end welfare as we know it.

Although we had previously passed welfare reform legislation on two separate occasions, Mr. Clinton, in failing to keep his promise to the American people twice vetoed our welfare bills. Madam Chairman, I am hopeful that once this monumental legislation is again passed and presented to the President, he will sign the bill this time, if for no other reason than it will be politically expedient for him to do so.

As you are aware Madam Chairman, this welfare proposal includes a general rule which prohibits States from providing cash assistance under the family assistance block grant to a child born to a recipient of cash welfare benefits or who received cash benefits any time during the pregnancy. This has been referred to as the "family cap" provision. However, the bill does permit States to opt out of this prohibition if a State passes legislation specifically exempting the State program funded under the family assistance block grant from application of the prohibition. I worked hard for this relief option and I am hopeful that most States will utilize it.

For those States, however, that do not opt out, Madam Chairman, and in particular for the children of these States, I am pleased that the bill includes my amendment that permits States to provide vouchers for children born to families receiving assistance. I worked diligently to have this amendment included in our original welfare reform bill (H.R. 1214 and H.R. 4), where it was passed overwhelmingly during consideration of that bill—352 to 80.

I admit the original family cap-child exclusion had surface appeal to many Americans who are fed up with people being on the dole. Americans want the abuse of the system to end.

However, the voucher-exception provision to the family cap will help the weakest and most vulnerable people in our society—children. I am sure everyone agrees that we must not punish children for the sins of their parents.

My voucher-exception amendment now included in this legislation enables us to accomplish the goal of the family cap provision—i.e., discouraging out-of-wedlock pregnancies—without driving children further into poverty or forcing their mothers to have an abortion. My provision maintains the restriction on cash benefits, but allows vouchers to be used to pay for particular goods and services specified by the State as suitable for the care of the child involved.

This means that State's will be able to provide for the most essential needs of the children: clothing, shoes, diapers, powders, bedding, laundry detergents, and travel to the doctor.

Over the years numerous studies have shown that money—or more precisely the lack of it—heavily influences a woman's decision to abort her child. Without my amendment, we would be saying to mothers, "the State will not help you feed your child, but we will—as they do in many States—pay for you to destroy your child."

A major study by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a research organization associated with Planned Parenthood, which performs or refers for 230,000 abortions a year found that 68 percent of women having abortions said they did so because "they could not afford to have a child now." Among 21 percent of the total sample, this was the most important reason for the abortion; no other factor was cited more frequently as most important.

The voucher-exception provision permits states to provide compassionate care for children—care which offers help to women who do not want to have abortions, or who may otherwise feel trapped by a State program that limits their ability to care for another child.

Mr. PORTMAN. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of real welfare reform—something that is long, long overdue.

The current welfare system is broken. It needs a major overhaul. No one can doubt the fact the war on poverty has failed—no one. We have spent over $5.4 trillion on welfare in the last generation, but, in the long term, the current system has more often harmed the very people it was designed to help.

Madam Chairman, the welfare reform issue has been thoroughly and, I believe, thoughtfully studied and debated by this Congress. Remember, this marks the third time this session that this Congress will pass a welfare reform bill and sent it to the President.

This new proposal is a fundamental change in the direction of our welfare system. It is the product of many, many hours of hearings and many sensible compromises. We are not, as some might have you believe, turning our backs on welfare recipients, nor should we. This bill continues to protect the children that are the most vulnerable people affected by our broken welfare system. It will continue to protect and to strengthen the role of families. But, it also protects our taxpayers. We're telling our taxpayers that, for now on, welfare will be a helping hand, not a handout.

The new plan contains the major provisions I have worked for—work requirements, flexibility to allow States to address their own unique needs, and a 5-year time limit for those on welfare. My home State of Ohio has developed creative and innovative solutions closer to the real needs of people on welfare.

I applaud Subcommittee Chairman SHAW, Chairman ARCHER, and Chairman KASICH for their leadership and urge my colleagues to support this bill. I think this bill is long overdue and urge the President to sign it.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, I rise today to speak out against a great injustice—an injustice that is being committed against our Nation's children—defenseless, nonvoting, children. I am referring of course to H.R. 3734, the Welfare Budget Reconciliation Act for fiscal year 1997.

We speak so often in this House about family values and protecting children. At the same time however, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, have presented a welfare reform bill that will effectively eliminate the Federal guarantee of assistance for poor children in this country for the first time in 60 years and will push millions more children into poverty.

This partisan bill is anti-family and anti-child. The Republican bill continues to be weak on work and hard on families. Without adequate funding for education, training, child care and employment, most of our Nation's poor will be unable to avoid or escape the welfare trap. Even before the adoption of amendments increasing work in committee, the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimated that the Republican proposal is some $9 billion short of what would be needed in fiscal years 1999 through 2002 to provide adequate money for the States to carry out the work program. Furthermore, the increase in the minimum work hours requirement, without a commensurate increase in child care funding, will make it almost impossible for States to provide child care for families making the transition from welfare to work. True welfare reform can never be achieved and welfare dependency will never be broken, unless we provide adequate education, training, child care, and jobs that pay a living wage.

I am also concerned about block grants in the bill which would eliminate any assurance of Federal funding for the prevention of child abuse. Child protection systems across the Nation are overwhelmed by the crisis facing families and their children. Federal, State and local efforts to prevent abuse have done little to alleviate the problem. In its April, 1995 report on child abuse and neglect fatalities, the U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect reported that almost 2,000 infants and young children die from abuse and neglect at the hands of parents and caretakers each year. The vast majority of these children were under age 5 when they died and 45 percent were under the age of 1. It is critically important that child protection agencies increase their efforts to help children earlier in their lives. This bill does not go far enough to protect the Nation's children.

Similarly, the proposed cuts in the Summer Food Program will seriously jeopardize the program's continued viability—threatening the health and well-being of the 2 million low-income children who rely on the program.

More children will be hurt by the bill's denial of benefits to legal immigrants. The Republican bill would cut benefits for immigrants by about $19 billion and only 6 percent of these savings would come from denying benefits to illegal immigrants. Low-income legal immigrants would be denied aid provided under major programs such as SSI, Medicaid and food stamps. They would also be denied assistance under smaller programs such as meals-on-wheels to the homebound elderly and prenatal care for pregnant women. Under this bill, nearly half a million current elderly and disabled beneficiaries who are legal immigrants would be terminated from the SSI program. Similarly, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that by 2002, approximately 140,000 low-income legal immigrant children who would be eligible for Medicaid under current law would be denied it under this legislation. Most of these children are likely to have no other health insurance. I cannot believe we would pass legislation that would result in even one more child being denied health care that could prevent disease and illness.

This bill also changes the guidelines under which nonimmigrant children qualify for benefits under the SSI program. As a result, the CBO estimates that by 2002, some 315,000 low-income disabled children who would qualify for benefits under current law would be denied SSI. This represents 22 percent of the children that would qualify under current law. The bill would reduce the total benefits the program provides to disabled children by more than $7 billion over 6 years.

Madam Chairman, mandatory welfare-to-work programs can get parents off welfare and into jobs, but only if the program is well designed and is given the resources to be successful. The GOP bill is punitive and wrong-headed. It will not put people to work, it will put them on the street. Any restructuring of the welfare system must move people away from dependency toward self-sufficiency. Facilitating the transition off welfare requires job training, guaranteed child care and health insurance at an affordable price.

We cannot expect to reduce our welfare rolls if we do not provide the women of this Nation the opportunity to better themselves and their families through job training and education, if we do not provide them with good quality child care and most importantly if we do not provide them with a job.

Together, welfare programs make up the safety net that poor children and their families rely on in times of need. We must not allow the safety net to be shredded. We must keep our promises to the children of this Nation. We must ensure that in times of need they receive the health care, food, and general services they need to survive. I urge my colleagues to oppose this dangerous legislation and to live up to our moral responsibility to help the poor help themselves. Therefore, I support the Castle-Tanner welfare reform legislation which remedies many of these problems and fairly moves people from welfare to work.

Mr. BUYER. Madam Chairman, in passing real welfare reform, thus ending welfare as millions know it, Congress is giving more hope, more opportunity, and more responsibility to families across America.

Our current welfare system destroys lives by providing permanent aid to anyone. It creates poverty, dependence, hopelessness—repeated generation after generation in the same families. Some people are saddened that President Clinton vetoed real welfare reform not once but twice. I am more than saddened—I am angry. By keeping in place the same failed welfare policies of the past, the President has retained the status quo and denied the American Dream to millions of families. This is wrong. Government at the very least should not continue programs that hurt families and especially children. Welfare should be a helping hand in times of trouble, not a hand-out that becomes a way of life. I urge the President to not offer his veto a third time, but to provide his signature for the first time.

The current welfare system subsidizes illegitimacy, destroys families, and promotes waste, fraud, and abuse. It is not a morally healthy environment when you have 12-year-olds having babies, 15-year-olds killing each other, 17-year-olds dying of AIDS and 18-year-olds graduating with diplomas they cannot read. Welfare as we now know it is a system that keeps over a third of poor Americans locked in a seemingly endless cycle of destitution that has not stemmed a steady and growing epidemic of people living in poverty—14.5 percent of Americans in 1994.

The debate surrounding welfare should not be centered around cost—although the costs have been enormous over the years—but rather about principles such as purpose, dignity, and hope. Currently welfare consists of 80 Federal programs which provide cash payments, food, housing, and medical benefits. When created, it was thought that providing these handouts would allow individuals time in which to make the necessary changes in their lives to become a productive and self-sufficient member of society.

It is important to note that among industrialized nations at the start of this decade, the United States had the most murders, the worst schools, the most abortions, the highest infant mortality, the most illegitimacy, the most one-parent families, the most children in jail, and the most children on government aid.

Many of our successes in fighting welfare have begun in communities and neighborhoods. There are a number of alternatives to Washington bureaucracy. Habitat for Humanity is one such example. While the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] requires absolutely nothing from tenants, Habitat requires recipients to learn the responsibility of home ownership and requires them to build a home for someone else before they help build their own home. One works to foster responsibility while the other fosters only more dependence. HUD requires only taxpayer dollars while Habitat for Humanity requires hard work and commitment from the individual, the family and community volunteers and donations. One works, the other does not work.

The 104th Congress has passed two dramatic welfare reform plans, only to see them end at the desk of President Clinton and his veto pen. The overriding messages of this bill are compassion, work, and responsibility. Our welfare reform plan includes:

Deadbeat dads: This bill assures that children receive the support necessary by establishing State tracking procedures, promoting automation of child support procedures in every State, takes measures to establish paternity, and toughens child support collections.

Work requirement: In 1979, 14 percent of welfare beneficiaries were working at paid jobs. By 1990, the number had dropped by one-half to 7 percent. Today, fewer than 7 percent of AFDC recipients work. Approximately 4.7 million families currently are on AFDC and over 90 percent will spend more than 2 years on welfare, and 77 percent will spend more than 5 years on welfare. This bill provides tough work requirements and enforces those work requirements. Able-bodied food stamp recipients between the age of 18 and 50 years with no dependents are required to either work 20 hours per week in a job or participate in a State work or training program within 120 days for receipt of benefits. It also gives incentives to reward States who are successful in moving families off welfare and into work. Work offers the best opportunity for long-term prosperity.

Congress also worked with the Nation's Governors to assure single parents will be able to balance work with caring for their young children. At the Governors' requests, exceptions can be made at the State level to the lifetime 5-year benefits limit if a hardship exists. States must have 50 percent of welfare families working by 2002 or face losing Federal funds.

Child care: This bill provides for child care to allow parents to receive proper training and education in pursuit of employment.

Child nutrition: Child nutrition programs are streamlined to reduce costs without making cuts in school lunch, school breakfast or WIC programs.

Food stamp program: Food stamps remain a Federal program but it requires able-bodied single adults to spend at least 20 hours a week in work-related activity or lose food-stamp benefits. In addition, it allows States to use one set of eligibility rules for families seeking cash welfare and food stamps.

Supplemental security income: Denies SSI to prisoners, people who fraudulently receive SSI while in prison, people who receive SSI from two or more States, fugitive felons, and probation and parole violators.

Provisions for noncitizens: Present law requires that when aliens come to the United States to live they must sign an affidavit that states they will not become dependent on the State, in other words they will get a job and become productive members of society. Unfortunately, many come to the United States, never become U.S. citizens, and receive assistance from taxpayers. This bill ends, 1 year after enactment, Medicaid and food stamps for most noncitizens now on the welfare rolls until they become citizens.

This welfare reform plan is the first step to allow millions an opportunity at the American Dream. Washington has finally come to the realization what our States and local communities have long known that dollars alone won't solve this problem.

In changing welfare we must also change people's habits. If beneficiaries believe, as many currently do, that all they need to do is sign-up for benefits and wait for the check, then they have no incentive to find work. In contrast, if able bodies individuals know they only have 2 years to find a job, they will have to change their behavior and seek training that will lead to a job. By passing this bill we are extending our hand and offering real assistance, not just a handout but an opportunity for a new and better life. We are offering a way out of a system which has trapped adults and children for the past three decades.

This welfare reform bill moves toward individual responsibility, work ethic, learning, and commitment. It allows individuals in their own communities to reach out and help their neighbors. It helps children, encourages families to stay together, puts people back to work and strengthens America's moral fiber. It returns the program to its original intent—a temporary helping hand for those most in need. In the end, it provides opportunities that do not currently exist for welfare beneficiaries to seek the American Dream with a sense of purpose, dignity, and hope.

Mr. COYNE. Madam Chairman, in 1935 the Social Security Act became law. It established a commitment by the Federal Government to provide a guaranteed safety net for people who need assistance in making ends meet. The Republican welfare reform legislation currently being considered by the House of Representatives ends this 60-year commitment to poor families and leaves their economic fate to the vagaries of State politics. Further, this bill makes substantial cuts in the earned income tax credit [EITC], puts millions of children in jeopardy of losing their access to health care, and gives the States millions of Federal taxpayer dollars and provides inadequate Federal oversight to ensure that they will spend these funds wisely. For these reasons, I cannot support this legislation.

The bill before us today will end the Federal guarantee of economic assistance for families in need. This means that individual States will determine who will be eligible for assistance and how to provide for these families with limited Federal dollars. Under this system, if you are poor and happen to live in New York, you may be eligible to receive welfare assistance, while if you are poor and happen to live in Mississippi, you may not be eligible to receive any assistance at all. This is hardly an equitable means of distributing Federal dollars. Eliminating the Federal commitment to the Nation's poor is something that I simply cannot support. Families in need of assistance should have somewhere to turn, regardless of the State in which they live.

Under this legislation, many children who currently have access to health care services through the Medicaid Program may lose this critically important access. It is estimated that as many as 1 million children may lose their health care coverage under this legislation. This legislation will allow States to deny health care coverage to children who are currently receiving cash assistance but who will become ineligible for assistance under this bill. Not only will this legislation make many children ineligible for economic assistance, it will hit them twice by making them ineligible for health care services as well. At a time when the number of uninsured children is rising, it is unconscionable that we are considering legislation that will increase the number of uninsured children.

It is ironic that the Republican majority has chosen to make the working poor pay for the costs of this bill through cuts to the EITC. This bill actually raises taxes on approximately 4.3 million working families earning between $17,000 and $29,000 per year by phrasing out the EITC more quickly. Instead of placing the burden of funding their welfare proposal on those who can best afford it, the Republican majority has chosen to place this burden squarely on the shoulders of those who can least afford it.

During the Ways and Means Committee's consideration of this bill, the Democratic minority was assured that the cuts in the earned income tax credit would be balanced by a nonrefundable $500 per child tax credit. However, because this child tax credit is non-refundable, millions of working poor families will not be eligible to receive the child credit because they do not earn enough income. Many families who are hurt by the cuts in the EITC will be ineligible to receive the child tax credit. Not surprisingly, the bill before us does not contain the $500 per child tax credit but retains the devastating cuts to the EITC.

This legislation sends a mixed message to welfare recipients. Under current law, States are prohibited from counting families' EITC payments in the calculation of their welfare eligibility and benefits. The legislation under consideration today will permit States to use EITC payments in these calculations. Individuals who are trying to make ends meet through paid work but who just don't make enough money to get by, face punishment by the State for their efforts. I offered an amendment during the Ways and Means Committee's markup of this legislation that would have required States to continue the current policy of disregarding EITC payments in welfare determinations, but it was defeated by the Republican majority. The EITC was established and has enjoyed bipartisan support because it rewards work—exactly what this bill is trying to accomplish—and so I do not understand why my Republican colleagues insist on allowing States to punish families who are genuinely trying to make work pay.

I believe that individuals who can work and who can find a job should do so. I also believe that families who play by the rules should not be penalized for their inability to find work. This legislation does exactly that. By refusing to acknowledge that not everyone who currently receives welfare will be able to find a job that will provide a living wage, the Republican majority is setting up its welfare reform proposal to fail. It will fail because it will harm innocent children as well as their parents. The welfare reform bill before the House of Representatives contains provisions that will push more children into poverty—some estimate as many as 1.5 million—with little hope of ever getting out. The bill explicitly leaves open the possibility that children will suffer for the deeds of their parents and allows States to use children as pawns in influencing the behavior of their parents.

The Republican majority, during markup of this legislation in the Ways and Means Committee, repeatedly refused to soften provisions in the bill that will undoubtedly hurt the children of individuals who cannot find work within the bill's arbitrary time limit. Under this legislation, States are prohibited from using Federal block grant funds to provide vouchers for the children whose parents who are cut off from cash assistance because of the time limit. This means that children will be punished because their parents cannot find work. I cannot support legislation with these effects on millions of our Nation's most vulnerable citizens.

This bill grants States millions of Federal dollars and gives the Federal Government sorely inadequate oversight in return. Under this legislation, States must outline for the Department of Health and Human Services how they plan to meet the bill's requirements. However, the bill provides no organization, department or entity with the authority to ensure that States do what they say they are going to do. It will be exceedingly easy for States to submit fair and equitable plans to move individuals from welfare to work, yet fail to do so in practice. The Federal Government, although it will supply funding for the States' assistance programs, will have no recourse to protect beneficiaries from the failure of the States to act fairly.

The Republican majority is again placing before the House of Representatives legislation that is part of a partisan political agenda. They know as well as I do that President Clinton's welfare reform efforts have already yielded substantial results. They know that the President has granted 67 welfare waivers to 40 States to allow them to experiment with different types of welfare-to-work strategies. They know that welfare rolls are down by nearly 10 percent since President Bush left office—that represents nearly 1.3 million fewer individuals receiving welfare checks each month. They know that teen pregnancy rates are down in 30 of the 41 States that report such rates. In the face of these statistics, I do not understand the Republican majority's uncalled-for attempt to bring radical and punitive change to the Nation's 60-year-old safety net for the poor.

The bill before us today ends the Federal guarantee of assistance to poor families. It punishes children for the deeds of their parents and will almost surely force millions more children into poverty and deprive them of health care.

Welfare reform does not need to be punitive. It does not need to end the responsibility of the Federal Government for the economic well-being of its citizens. The Republican majority's brand of welfare reform does little to address existing barriers to economic self sufficiency: inadequate education and training opportunities, unaffordable health care, inadequate child care and a dearth of viable job opportunities. Instead, the Republican majority has chosen again to continue its agenda of pursuing policies that injure our Nation's most defenseless citizens while doing little to reduce the pernicious effects of poverty.

Mr. REED. Madam Chairman, I believe it is vital that we pass a meaningful welfare reform bill. Meaningful welfare reform should move individuals to work and instill individual responsibility, while ensuring that children are protected.

The Republican bill debated today, just like the one vetoed by the President last year, does not pass these essential tests. In fact, the Republican bill fails to provide sufficient funding to move welfare recipients to work; does not provide adequate resources for States and individuals in the event of a severe recession; and unduly and unnecessarily harms children. The Republican bill can be summed up as weak on work and tough on children.

I support the Castle-Tanner alternative which is a tough, balanced, and bipartisan welfare reform bill that can be signed into law if the Republicans would let it reach the President's desk. Castle-Tanner contains the funding States need to put people to work according to the Congressional Budget Office. In addition, Castle-Tanner contains time limits for welfare benefits, guarantees protections for children, requires State accountability in operating welfare programs, and improves the response to economic downturns.

In my State of Rhode Island, a coalition of State officials, business leaders, and anti-poverty groups are currently working out the final details of a compromise welfare reform package. Unlike the Republican bill which would jeopardize this Rhode Island welfare reform effort, Castle-Tanner compliments it by providing the necessary resources and flexibility to move Rhode Island welfare recipients into work.

I urge my colleagues to support the Castle-Tanner substitute. Castle-Tanner is the only bill offered today that will provide the funding, flexibility, and protections necessary to create a reformed welfare system that promotes work. Castle-Tanner is responsible and meaningful welfare reform and it is a better bill for both Rhode Island and America.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of welfare reform.

The current welfare system is in desperate need of reform. For public aid recipients trapped in the system, for those who exploit the welfare system, and for the taxpayers who foot the bills, an overhaul of welfare in America is a high priority.

The fundamental problem with our current system is that for many people welfare becomes more than a helping hand; it becomes a way of life. For some who enroll in the primary welfare program, Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC], welfare becomes a trap they cannot escape. Some are afraid to lose the health benefits they receive through Medicaid. Others are unable to secure child care to enable them to go to work. We must eliminate these barriers and chart a clear path for welfare recipients to go after a paycheck instead of a welfare check. Welfare should be viewed as temporary assistance, not a lifestyle.

I believe welfare benefits should be cut off for recipients who are unwilling to pursue work, education or training. I also believe we must strengthen child support enforcement. Billions of dollars in child support payments go uncollected each year. By establishing paternity at birth and pursuing deadbeat parents, we can reduce the number of families that are impoverished by the failure of non-custodial parents to fulfill their financial obligations.

Today the House of Representatives is considering two proposals—the Gingrich bill and a bipartisan proposal offered by Representatives CASTLE and TANNER. The bipartisan Castle-Tanner welfare reform bill is dramatically better than the Gingrich bill.

The bipartisan bill will move people from welfare to work. It provides sufficient funding for work programs, and provides needed child care assistance for mothers who will be required to work and for working poor families.

The bipartisan bill protects children. It requires States to provide vouchers for the children of families who are removed from welfare before they reach the 5-year time limit, and it gives States the option of providing vouchers for children of families who exceed the 5-year limit. It allows families to continue their Medicaid coverage if they lose welfare benefits because of a time limit. And it continues the eligibility of the children of legal immigrants for SSI and food stamps.

In contrast, the Gingrich welfare bill is weak on work and tough on children. It cuts resources for programs that move people from welfare to work, potentially leaving States with a $9 billion deficit over 6 years. It discourages work by reducing the Earned Income Tax Credit, which has the effect of raising taxes on more than 4 million poor working families. It makes deep cuts in food stamps, endangering the nutrition of millions of children and elderly Americans. It denies food assistance to more than 300,000 children simply because they or their parents are immigrants. It does not ensure Medicaid eligibility when States change their welfare rules, endangering the health of millions of poor families. And it fails to ensure that child support orders are updated regularly to reflect the growing income of the non-custodial parent.

I still have significant problems with parts of the Castle-Tanner bill, particularly provisions relating to legal immigrants. Legal immigrants play by the rules and contribute to the progress of our country, just as all of our ancestors have done. I support effective requirements on the sponsors of legal immigrants who apply for benefits, but I do not believe that people who live legally in our country should be treated unfairly.

I am supporting Castle-Tanner in the hope that bipartisan welfare reform will become a reality this year. But before I support sending a measure to the President, I hope that the House-Senate conference committee addresses the serious flaws in the House effort.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Madam Chairman, I oppose this closed rule which prohibits this House from taking a vote on issues critical to Native American tribes.

Yesterday, I testified before the committee on two amendments important for the safety and futures of American Indian children. My amendments would have restored the current set-aside level for tribes under the Child Care Block Grant and made tribes eligible for Title IV-E adoption and foster care assistance funds.

I am disappointed that the Congress will not have an opportunity to vote on these important issues.

Because of my particular concern about the Title IV-E adoption assistance and foster care program, I will be introducing legislation to make Indian children eligible for this assistance. I strongly believe this is an issue that this Congress on obligation to vote on whether it is a part of welfare reform or a free standing bill.

Mr. HORN. Madam Chairman, after the billions of taxpayer dollars spent to end poverty, why do the welfare rolls continue to grow?

Why can't we do better than the welfare system we have in place right now?

How many more families will be trapped in the current welfare system before Congress and the President finally act?

Isn't it time that the President lived up to his campaign promise to "end welfare as we know it?"

And, isn't it time for Congress to act?

These are the questions that America wants answered. I urge my colleagues to provide those answers by voting for welfare reform today.

Mr. COSTELLO. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the welfare reform plan presented to this House today. This plan is another mean-spirited attack on the most vulnerable citizens in our society, who have been asked to endure huge cuts in programs to pay for tax cuts for the very wealthy. In the interest of scoring political points, the leadership of this House has offered to send the President a bill that begs to be vetoed. This bill should not go forward.

I fully believe our welfare reform system is in dire need of reform. For too long, it has fostered dependence and not provided the resources or incentive for work. However, I cannot in good conscience support a bill that as a policy turns its back on poor and needy children. This bill eliminates the Federal safety net of Medicaid and food stamps for many kids, and cuts millions of dollars by denying Supplemental Security Income [SSI] assistance to the poor and disabled. And, by mandating that individuals work without providing adequate employment resources and child assistance, this bill threatens the health and safety of thousands of children who now rely on their parents care. This legislation is now responsible reform, and the real losers under this bill are the 1 million children who will be pushed into poverty under this so-called reform.

I urge my colleagues to support the Castle-Tanner substitute, which represents a modest compromise that will protect children while reforming our welfare system. The Castle-Tanner proposal guarantees protections for children and provides the support necessary for individuals to move into work. Castle-Tanner is serious about moving individuals from welfare to work. It imposes work requirements within 2 years of receiving assistance and ends subsidies after 5 years. It does not however, end food or medical assistance to children whose parents no longer qualify. Further, the Castle-Tanner substitute holds fathers responsible for their children through strong child support enforcement.

Castle-Tanner provides States with broad flexibility to develop successful welfare programs based on the needs of local communities. However, unlike the Republican bill, the Castle-Tanner compromise does not allow States to shirk their responsibilities to provide for their citizens. Under Castle-Tanner, States must continue to spend a reasonable and responsible amount of State dollars on assistance programs. Successful welfare reform must be a thoughtful joint partnership between the States and the Federal Government.

Madam Chairman, we have a responsibility to pass meaningful reform in this House. We cannot abuse this responsibility by passing legislation that will hurt thousands of children. I urge my colleagues to defeat the Republican bill and pass the bipartisan Castle-Tanner substitute, so that we can achieve meaningful, lasting welfare reform that President Clinton can sign into law.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Madam Chairman, welfare as we know it today, had its roots in American society almost 75 years ago. It is challenging to observe what the public and private sectors are doing to support children and families in the transition from welfare to work to self-sufficiency. Congress has the important role of providing a national view and in assuring that national priorities are addressed at the State and local levels of service administration and delivery. Many families need help to transition from public assistance, known as welfare, to self-sufficiency. We, as the national representatives of our society, must help build bridges and extend ladders to support parents and families as they move from welfare to work to self-sufficiency.

Work, responsibility, empowerment, and self-sufficiency should be the hallmarks of this welfare reform debate. The Republican philosophy is simply to get people off the public payrolls, with no attention to or concern about what these families will do when they face the challenges that may be inevitable for many of them. The best plan is one which must not come about at the expense of the children, and which will help people make the difficult transition from welfare to work. That's the real test of welfare reform.

There are five basic principles that must be considered in any welfare reform effort: Welfare reform must protect children. Their well-being must be our top priority; parents must take responsibility for their families, personally, emotionally, and financially; it is critically important to empower young people to reduce teen pregnancy and out-of-wedlock childbirth; quality child care is an issue that must be addressed and provided; and there must be access to quality health care.

We, as Federal legislators, must assure that the children are protected. They must not be required to pay for either the mistakes of their parents nor for the failures of our educational or private, corporate system that has left too many parents without adequate life and work skills to be self-sufficient. Reform ought not be just a race to save money by kicking needy families off welfare. Instead, our emphasis must be on enabling and empowering, not punishing parents and families—a true profamily agenda. Workable welfare reform legislation has to have not only real requirements for work, but also for job training, counseling, and personal as well as financial support.

One positive approach is based on a simple compact: Job training, job contracts, child care and child support enforcement to transition people to work; plus time limits on cash assistance to ensure parents' self-sufficiency so that welfare is not a way of life. Most people will find jobs in the private sector, but for those who do not, we should take the money which would have been spent on welfare checks and use it to find a subsidized job, preferably within the private sector. Merely passing the problem back to the States with reduced resources is not the answer. Job skill for real work is the answer.

CHILD SUPPORT COLLECTIONS

It is my belief that both parents should be required to support their children. Child support enforcement is an integral part of real welfare reform. For example, we have to develop and implement a multipronged approach to increasing child support collections. Therefore, paternity should be required to be established in the hospital, at the birth of the child, if at all possible, and without penalizing the mothers. I'd like to see a Federal law requiring uniform State laws which will prevent parents from evading their responsibilities by crossing State lines. This would require centralized registries and new hire reporting procedures or a national employment registry, which could be the IRS.

There are over 19 States that are using professional license suspension or revocation as a method to enforce child support payments. The threat of taking away driving, professional, and other work-related licenses works. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that the Federal Government could save over $146 million in welfare payments in the first 5 years as a result of a nationwide license revocation or suspension program. Therefore, it is reasonable to predict that just one major child support enforcement proposal would help boost child support collections to $20 billion by the year 2000.

TEEN PREGNANCY AND POVERTY

The link between teen births and poverty is clear: 80 percent of the children born to teenage parents who dropped out of high school and did not marry are poor. That contrasts to only 8 percent of children born to married high school graduates over 20. Simply denying AFDC benefits to a teenage mother, as the original Republican plan proposed, won't do anything to move her family toward self-sufficiency. It's mean-spirited and makes the children pay the price. This approach will lead to more dependency, not less. One solution is possible when there is a stable functional home environment: Require teen mothers to live at home with their parents, identify their child's father, finish high school, learn parenting skills and work. Welfare reform efforts must be flexible.

CHILD CARE

There are welfare reform experiments in place that have been testing various ways we can use requirements to move from welfare to self-sufficiency. All of them stress work and responsibility. When we talk about empowering families to move from welfare to self-sufficiency we must also talk about child care. Child care support is particularly critical for low-income parents because it is such a significant part of a low-income family's budget. On average, poor working families pay more than a quarter of their income on child care.

The child care development block grant signed into law by President Bush with bipartisan support has made a significant contribution to low-income working families. In 1993, 65 percent of the children served were in families with incomes at or below the poverty line. Real welfare reform requires more child care, not less. The original Republican plan would reduce Federal funding for child care by $1.6 billion, or 15 percent over 5 years, and yet it kicks mothers off welfare after 2 years. This is hypocritical. That would mean 320,000 fewer children would be served by the year 2000. That means working families would be pitted against welfare recipients for scarce child care assistance. That's not the way to reform welfare and move families to self-sufficiency.

Recent studies have shown that children from low-income families are more likely to be in low-quality centers. The child care development and block grants have been instrumental in raising the standards for child care programs. We need to focus not only on safe, nurturing environments for children while their parents work and go to school, but also on the quality of the developmental and educational environment for the children's benefit; and, we must continue to expand child care opportunities to help working parents stay out of the welfare system, and for parents on welfare to transition off.

In summary: Work, responsibility, and empowerment are the keys to helping people make the transition from welfare to self-sufficiency. Budget cutting is not welfare reform. Supporting parents to develop self-sufficiency is. Putting people to work is. With continue advocacy, we can make the changes that are necessary. We can establish and maintain the bridges from welfare to self-sufficiency for families. I have recently learned a startling statistic prepared by The Brookings Institution. A chart showing change in adjusted real personal income demonstrated that the top levels of income increased from 30 to 40 percent over the last two decades. The middle incomes saw a modest increase in adjusted real personal income; however, the lowest levels of income saw a dramatic decline of down to a 30-percent decrease. From a plus 40-percent increase for the very wealthy to a 30-percent decrease for the very poor, and the Dole-Gingrich Republicans want to decrease welfare.

I cannot help but wonder whether the Dole-Gingrich Republicans even know who the welfare recipients are. Well, let me put a face on them. They are the single mom who dropped out of high school as a pregnant teenager, who was abused by adults as a child and abused by her spouse or partner as an adult. She receives a pittance in Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] and an allotment for food stamps. She can't get a midlevel paying job because she has no skills. Even if she could get a low paying job—where the competition is tough—there aren't any health care benefits; and after she pays for babysitting and transportation she is hard pressed to pay the rent. And heaven forbid if the kids get sick—she can't afford medical care.

Will the Dole-Gingrich Republicans give her a job? Will they help support jobs training programs so she can develop some employable skill? Not in this original bill. That mom and her kids make up the largest population of welfare recipients. The next large population group that the Federal Government subsidizes with welfare are the disabled—and the eligibility is that they cannot hold a job. Will the Dole-Gingrich Republicans employ that person with disabilities? Or will they support training programs or funding to assist an employer with providing any adaptive or assistive equipment that would make most persons with disabilities employable. Their record of little compassion and understanding for the least fortunate doesn't indicate that they will.

Madam Chairman, I stand for responsible government, for responsible parents, and for a responsible and responsive private sector. We all must join together to achieve reform of a system that can benefit all sectors by enabling all families to be proud and self-sufficient.

While I do not agree with several of the provisions of the Castle-Tanner substitute it is better than the Republican bill.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Republican welfare reform proposal. Instead of solving the welfare problems in this country, this bill creates new ones. By relying on block grants to distribute money to States, the neediest and most vulnerable people of this country could be left out in the cold.

Sending money in the form of block grants is a virtual guarantee that rapid growth States like Florida will either have to make up for the loss of money on their own—or deny assistance to the neediest families in their jurisdiction. We need to balance this country's budget in a way that holds everyone responsible—not just the poor and the needy.

By cutting the earned-income tax credit, the Republicans are simply punishing low-income working families. And by getting rid of job training programs, the Republicans are eliminating the chance that welfare recipients will have the necessary skills to get a job.

The Republican proposal is a mean-spirited attempt to punish those who are already suffering.

Ms. ESHOO. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill and in strong support of the Tanner-Castle substitute for welfare reform.

The Tanner-Castle proposal is sounder policy for our country and reforms a broken system by focusing on two critical elements: It protects children and it promotes and assures work.

The Tanner-Castle proposal differs from H.R. 3734 in several other important areas: It provides $3 billion in mandatory resources for work programs; it requires vouchers for the needs of children during the 5-year time limit for benefits; enough mandatory funding is provided for child care for all welfare recipients; local governments are allowed greater participation in the process of setting up programs in their areas that meet the needs of their citizens; it includes an open ended contingency fund for States to access in the event of an economic recession; it requires a greater annual commitment by the States for welfare programs; it provides food stamp benefits for the children of legal immigrants.

These are not differences that negate the reforms of the welfare system that my Republican colleagues are seeking. The provisions I have listed ensure that when we make these reforms we are improving the current system while maintaining a safety net for those who need it. Change for the sake of change is not good enough unless there is a regard for the impact it will have.

Madam Chairman, the Tanner-Castle legislation meets the test that those who are in the system are given the assistance they need to move from welfare to work. H.R. 3734 does not.

Our country must have a sound, workable, and fair welfare reform policy. H.R. 3734 is tough on kids and weak on work. More than 1 million children could be pushed into poverty and in 70 percent of these families, one of the parents is working. The bill makes it less likely that child support orders will be updated regularly—actually weakening current law on deadbeat parents—while increasing Federal costs. I urge my colleagues to support the Tanner-Castle substitute and oppose the underlying bill.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Madam Chairman, in the board game called life, there is no welfare square that keeps your game piece there indefinitely. Instead, there is hope, opportunity to go to college, to go to work, to get married and have a family, to be a success and win the game. We teach these values to our children through the games that they play, yet our Government over the years has changed the values for our children to live by.

Today on the House floor we are not playing a game. Today we are taking a step, hopefully with the President's support, to restore our American values and reform the welfare system so that welfare is no longer a way of life. We can offer our citizens and children a chance—a chance to work, a chance to go to school, and a chance to be a success and win the real game of life.

H.R. 3734 promotes work and helps mothers on welfare by providing the job training and child care they need to achieve this goal. This bill says no more handouts to prisoners and noncitizens who have imposed on our system, and reduced opportunities for those who truly deserve assistance.

In addition, this bill restores power and flexibility of the welfare program to the States. You and I both know that Washington bureaucrats do not know what is best for Nevadans—most of them have not even been to the Silver State to learn what Nevadans need and what challenges must be faced. The best solutions can come from those who know us best, our own State government. To help our States, the bill provides appropriate funding and additional funding opportunities for those States, like Nevada, with growing populations.

Lastly, and I find most importantly, the bill encourages responsibility of families to reduce illegitimacy rates and to have parents take financial responsibility for their children. Today's illegitimacy rate among welfare families is almost 50 percent and is expected to rise. This bill takes bold steps to establish paternity and to make fathers pay child support. These are tough provisions, and it is about time that the Federal Government helps States track down parents who are unwilling to take care of their own family members. You see, Madam Chairman, this is not a game—the 104th Congress means business.

H.R. 3734 helps our future by helping our children. Our children will be our leaders someday and we must instill in them the values we grew up with. Responsibility for family, hope to go to college or have a good job, dreams to be a success—they are not just squares on a board game, but are attainable goals in the real game of life. H.R. 3437 is a first step in making these goals become a reality, and I encourage my colleagues to support this legislation, and urge the President's to sign this essential bill for our children.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Madam Chairman, I am committed to reforming our failing welfare system. Our Nation needs a welfare reform that gives people back the dignity and control that comes from work and independence.

Our current system pays cash assistance when people lack adequate means to provide for their families rather than providing them with the means to support themselves.

My voting record reflects what I want to see in a welfare reform bill.

I believe that welfare should be a temporary program that provides a safety net for people who fall on hard times. I have voted for a program that limits persons to a 5-year lifetime limit for welfare assistance.

I believe that able-bodied adults with no children should not be eligible for food stamp benefits if they are not working at least part time.

I also believe that welfare recipients must be aggressively looking for a job. I have voted for legislation which terminates a persons benefits if they refused to work, to accept a job, or refused to look for work. If a job is not available, welfare recipients should be put in community service jobs.

Central to the welfare debate are our children. I believe that people should not have children until they are able to support them. I support provisions which reduce benefits for teen parents who fail to maintain minimum performance in school and denies teen parents assistance unless they are living with a parent or responsible adult.

Additionally, I believe that parents—both parents—have responsibilities to support their children. I have voted for legislation which withholds paychecks for parents who do not pay child support.

At the same time we are holding parents responsible for their children, we should not punish a child whose parents fail. We have a moral obligation to provide that no child goes hungry, is denied needed medical care, or is left with inadequate supervision.

Welfare reform must include child care monies for people entering the work force with small children.

I also believe a welfare reform plan should give people access to the training they need, but expect them to work in return. I am disappointed that H.R. 3734 has no provisions to move people into the work force.

Madam Chairman, I am ready to make welfare reform a reality. Welfare reform must be tough on work, but fair to children.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I rise to oppose this partisan and politically motivated welfare bill that would push 1 million more children into poverty.

Were it not for the fact that many have exploited this issue for raw political purposes, perhaps we could reform a welfare system badly in need of revision.

Were it not for the fact that those promoting an agenda of slashing domestic assistance programs to finance unfair economic priorities, perhaps real welfare reform could be achieved. Were it not for the fact that the Republican majority in this House is willing to exploit the condition of our Nation's poor in a desperate attempt to resuscitate their extreme and failed agenda, perhaps a proposal could be framed that fostered realistic work requirements and compassionate safety nets.

Rather than exhausting my time objecting to the most reprehensible provisions of this Republican plan, let me focus on some of the things that must be contained in any welfare reform bill I can support in good conscience:

First, welfare reform must contain realistic work requirements, not harsh punitive measures devised to appeal to a crazed, cynical, public scapegoating of the poor. Most welfare recipients want what is best for themselves and their families. They want fulfilling jobs that pay a livable wage. But when those clamoring for workfare oppose adequate resources for job training, and education, their sincerity is called into question. When those championing workfare in place of welfare show no concern that jobs are available which pay decent wages, welfare reform is an empty vessel.

Second, welfare reform must ensure that parents seeking to stay off welfare are able to leave their children in safe and healthy child care settings. Without adequate child care funding, welfare reform is a bizarre notion.

Third, welfare reform must ensure that the poor are protected against hunger and illness.

There must be an adequate contingency fund- ing to shelter the poor against recessions. Adequate food stamps must be available for poor families so they don't starve, and, Medi- caid must be preserved to protect welfare re- cipients from the range of health risks that threaten the medical well-being of the poor and the elderly.

Welfare reform must preserve critical Fed- eral efforts to protect children from abuse and neglect. It must not be used as a vehicle for reckless experimentation with those protec- tions.

Madam Chairman, we have a solemn re- sponsibility to address the Nation's problems with logical, compassionate legislation. The Republican welfare bill before us has little to do with logic, compassion or the reform of welfare.

I urge my colleagues to reject this mis- named, misdirected bill that espouses unreal- istic, inhumane expectations. The architects of this flawed plan are willing to inflict suffering and misery on children. Their bill speaks vol- umes about the warped morality of those who would let children and the elderly starve.

Madam Chairman, the mere consideration of this trashy legislation evidence that this Congress and the American people who insist on this perversion of decency have lost all sense of purpose. This assault on the poor is driven by dishonesty and deception. It con- stitutes a reckless abandonment of humane values.

I urge its defeat.

Mr. BEREUTER. Madam Chairman, this Member is pleased to support welfare reform legislation currently before the House for con- sideration.

This Member has been a long-time sup- porter of efforts to reform our current welfare system to ensure that only those who are un- able to provide their own basic needs receive assistance.

Enactment of a strong welfare reform meas- ure that places an emphasis on work as its centerpiece is long overdue. The Congres- sional Budget Office has estimated that 1.3 million families now on welfare will be working in fiscal year 2002 as a result of the enact- ment of this legislation which converts welfare into a work program.

President Clinton promised to end welfare as we know it during his 1992 Presidential campaign. The President should be true to his initial instincts and campaign promise and sign this much needed welfare reform measure. The President's prior two vetoes of welfare re- form legislation represented another broken promise to the American people for they were consistent with what the President requested. This Member is hopeful that speedy action will be taken to enact this welfare reform bill. It provides a compassionate solution for a failed welfare system.

However, this Member is concerned that once again, the President by his rhetoric in the past week, is laying the groundwork to reverse his course, violate his own statements, and again veto strong welfare reform legislation. It seems that Marian Wright Edelman will op- pose any welfare reform bill that is worthy of reform. It would seem that as long as Marian Wright Edelman is opposed to this welfare re- form bill, Mrs. Clinton will oppose it, and the President will veto this legislation and every welfare reform bill that is worthy of being called a reform bill.

For millions of poor Americans trapped in a system of despair, this measure offers them hope to escape the welfare cycle. It does that by replacing our current welfare bureaucracy with reforms based on the dignity and neces- sity of work for the able-bodied, and on the strength of families. States are also granted maximum flexibility to help needy individuals achieve self-reliance.

In addition, this important legislation ensures that absent parents are not allowed to walk away from their moral and financial respon- sibility to care for their children. Deadbeat par- ents currently compound the Nation's welfare problems, causing millions of children to live in poverty.

Madam Chairman, this Member urges his colleagues to support this strong welfare re- form measure which ensures that the system of something for nothing is ended, and to re- quire that welfare recipients meet reasonable and responsible standards.

Mr. KLECZKA. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the welfare proposal put forth by the majority today.

I commend my colleagues on their decision to remove the poison pill of Medicaid from this bill.

And I commend my colleagues for the sub- stantial steps they have taken to address the President's concerns, and the concerns of my Democratic colleagues.

This new bill ensures the continuation of health care coverage for those no longer eligi- ble for AFDC. It deletes the unwarranted re- ductions to the earned income tax credit that were included in the original bill. And, it adds in $3 billion in work program funding.

No piece of legislation is perfect; this one is no exception. We know full well that we will revisit this issue repeatedly as problems arise.

I would have preferred to see more Federal funding for job placement and training, for child care, and for protection during reces- sions.

I would have preferred to increase State flexibility by giving States the option to use Federal funds to provide vouchers for children whose parents hit the time limits, rather than removing the protection of those vouchers by including a mandate against them.

I have fought, unsuccessfully, for stronger nondisplacement language so that America's workers can be assured that their jobs won't be put in jeopardy. This omission still con- cerns me.

However, this legislation is a solid start.

It gives our States the tools and the flexibil- ity they need to enact meaningful, constructive reform.

A reform based upon personal responsibil- ity, and personal achievement. A reform that moves people into the work force—perma- nently.

Congress must put aside partisan dif- ferences and pass this plan—to reform and re- vitalize our welfare system.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, we can all agree that the welfare status quo is unaccept- able. But the Republican welfare reform pro- posal will make the problems of poverty and dependence much worse because it refuses to make work the cornerstone of welfare reform.

Real welfare reform is about work. Opportu- nities for work, jobs that pay a living wage, job training opportunities to provide skills nec- essary to earn a living wage are long-term so- lutions for a permanent and productive reform in our welfare system.

Real welfare reform must emphasize the im- portance of work. Real welfare reform must also aid rather than punish children. Fourteen million children live in poverty in the United States. Passage of this legislation would add millions more to that statistic. This welfare bill is punitive and unrealistic.

Abolishing the safety net for children, impos- ing family caps, denying legal immigrants ben- efits, imposing arbitrary time limits, and failing to provide adequate child care, health care, education, job training, and work opportunities for people in need will thrust millions more into poverty.

This bill cuts almost $60 billion from the poor in this country. These cuts will affect chil- dren whose parents are on welfare. These cuts will trap countless women in abusive re- lationships, with nowhere to turn—without a re- alistic way to gain independence, gain work, and provide for their children.

Welfare reform must be about education, job training, and work. We must keep families together, rather than ripping them apart. We cannot simply reduce the deficit at the cost of our poorest Americans. This proposal has little wisdom, conscience, or heart.

Some of my colleagues will vote for this bill and then wash their hands of welfare reform, saying they have done their job. But the job of welfare reform is more complex and dire. Peo- ple living in poverty are not cardboard cut- outs—they do not have the same stories, they do not need the same services. This bill treats everyone alike—with unrealistic time limits and no real, lasting, and effective plan to move welfare recipients to work at a living wage.

The denial of benefits to legal immigrants in this legislation will do great harm to children and have a devastating impact on the health care system in our country. Only 3.9 percent of immigrants, who come to the United States to join their families or to work, rely on public assistance, compared to 4.2 percent of native- born citizens. According to the Urban Institute, immigrants pay $25 billion more annually than they receive in benefits. Yet the myth persists that welfare benefits are the primary purpose for immigration to the United States. Instead of appreciating legal immigrants for their signifi- cant contributions to this, their adopted coun- try, this bill blatantly punishes them, especially young children and the elderly. It bans SSI and food stamps for virtually all legal immi- grants. It tosses aside people who pay taxes, serve our country, and play by the rules. This lacks compassion and common sense.

If we want to achieve real welfare reform, we need to offer some long-term solutions to help people move up and out from the cycle of poverty.

The current welfare system is not adequate, but this bill makes it far worse. I urge my col- leagues to oppose the Republican bill and work together for meaningful reform that puts people to work and pulls them out of poverty for good.

Mr. SERRANO. Madam Chairman, I rise in emphatic opposition to the Republicans' wel- fare reform bill. I am tempted to simply repeat the remarks I made last year, on the so-called Personal Responsibility Act, since the flaws in this bill are remarkably similar. But I do have a few new things to say.

It is clear to all thinking people that our cur- rent welfare system fails the people it is meant to help, and every Member of this House, Democrat as well as Republican, has voted for some form of welfare reform in the last 2 years. But the Republicans' approach will make the situation of the poor—and of the charities that help them and the cities that contain them—much worse.

The clearest sign that this bill is totally misguided is that it saves so much money. Everyone knows it takes more spending, not less, to give poor mothers the tools they need to get and keep jobs and to escape poverty. They need education, training, job-search assistance, day care and health care for their children, and jobs—and that means jobs that don't displace others.

Cost is the main reason Congress has been slow to face welfare reform in the past. But this bill cuts the programs that sustain our neediest families. It slashes the safety net for the poorest children and families.

And, Madam Chairman, it is incomprehensible to me that we have now reached a point where not one of the proposals before the House today preserves the entitlement—the guarantee that some modest assistance will be there for those families whose desperate circumstances make them eligible. What recourse will these wretched families have?

A very, very big problem with this bill is how it treats our children. No child chooses to be born into a poor family, but an eighth of the country's children now receive some support from the welfare system, and the Republican bill will push more than 1 million additional children into poverty.

But, Madam Chairman, I want to concentrate on provisions related to immigrants and public assistance. The immigrant provisions in this bill—and, sadly, in the otherwise superior Castle-Tanner substitute—are a disgrace, and an absolute bar to my supporting either bill.

The United States is a nation of immigrants. That is a cliché precisely because it is true. We all have roots beyond the borders of the United States; we all have ancestors, as near as our parents or as remote as our many-times-great grandparents, who, willingly or not, came to America.

We know that immigrants don't come for public assistance; they come to join family members and to provide a better life for their children. They work, they pay taxes, they participate in their schools and churches and communities, and they play by the rules. Why should they be targeted by this bill? Why should fully half the savings in this bill be achieved on the backs of legal immigrants who are in trouble or who wish to better themselves?

I can think of only one reason. For the past several years, this country has seen a rising tide of antiimmigrant feeling, whipped up by public officials who find naming scapegoats easier than dealing with the real problems facing their constituents. If the economy turns down, why, it must be immigrants. If schools are crowded, immigrants must be the reason. Crime? Immigrants. Deficits? Immigrants. Strange languages on the subway? Immigrants.

The assault is broad and comprehensive. It may begin with legitimate concerns over control of our Nation's borders, but it quickly moves to encompass those immigrants who have done everything we have asked of them—and more—to qualify for the rights to live here, work and pay taxes, and become Americans.

The antiterrorism bill has already made long-term immigrants with deep roots in America suddenly subject to detention and deportation for long-ago, mostly minor brushes with the law.

The immigration bill—supposed to deal with control of our borders and enforcement of our employment eligibility laws—included provisions to deny citizens and legal residents the right to reunite their families in America.

Both the immigration bill and this bill would go way beyond enforcing sponsors' obligations to support the immigrants they bring to this country. Instead, they would make it impossible for our society to meet its moral obligations to help people in trouble. It would also deny immigrants the ability to better themselves through education and training.

Funds for bilingual education are slashed, even as some Members of this House would impose English-only policies on government. Bilingual ballots and voting assistance are under attack, when even life-long English speakers think they need law degrees to understand some of the propositions that appear on our ballots.

Madam Chairman, one thing that disturbs me very much is that this assault seems to be related to changes in the ethnicity of many recent immigrants. This suggests that ethnic discrimination is likely to rise. If immigrants are singled out as the class of people who are not worthy of, or entitled to, assistance available to citizens, those who look or sound foreign are at risk of extra scrutiny. You may recall reports that, after proposition 187 passed in California, Hispanics' rights to buy a pizza were questioned. People who look like you, Madam Chairman, are unlikely to be asked, but increasingly, people who look like me are being questioned about our immigration status. This is illegal, undemocratic, unfair, but increasingly real.

Madam Chairman, I could go on, but I will close by urging all of my colleagues to reject the Republicans' ugly, mean-spirited welfare reform bill. It is simply too far off course. We need to return to basic principles and start all over again if welfare reform is to result in a welfare system that is compassionate, workable, and, above all, fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam Chairman, I rise today in reluctant support of H.R. 3734 so that we may move forward with needed welfare reform in this country. While I preferred the bipartisan approach taken in the amendment by Mr. CASTLE and Mr. TANNER, which gives States more flexibility to develop and implement workfare programs, it is paramount that we no longer accept the status quo. The provisions in H.R. 3734 are much improved compared to H.R. 4 of last year, which I could not support and was also vetoed by the President. It is too late in the congressional session to start over, and my vote for H.R. 3734 is a vote to keep the debate and the possibility of a bipartisan agreement on welfare reform alive.

The welfare reform bill which passed the House today was an improvement over H.R. 4 because it does the following: First, deletes the elimination of Medicaid changes that threatened access to medical care for the most vulnerable in our country; second, deletes the block granting of the child nutrition program; third, adds resources for child care above the level in previous bills; fourth, includes a work performance bonus that gives States an incentive to move people from welfare to work; and fifth, preserves funding for foster care and adoption assistance programs.

There are several things that I believe must and will be improved via Senate and conference committee action on this legislation. Among these, I believe we simply must further ensure that children who happen to have been born into difficult circumstances do not go hungry. Punishing innocent children is not a solution nor should it even be an option. We must require States to protect children if their parents are removed from the welfare rolls.

As this bill moves to conference, it is my judgment that we must address the concerns raised recently by the National Governors Association regarding the restrictions on State flexibility and unfunded costs in the work requirements of H.R. 3734. The Congressional Budget Office has concluded that most States would fail to meet the work requirements and that most would simply accept the penalties rather than implement the requirements for work. The most important reform we can enact in the welfare system is to move people to self-sufficiency. We must not fail in that regard and therefore I am hopeful that this bill is improved in conference to ensure adequate resources to States to implement solid work requirements.

We must ensure that no families lose health care coverage when States change AFDC rules. Even though the Medicaid reconciliation provisions have been removed, we need to guarantee that families do not lose health care coverage even if they are removed from welfare rolls.

Madam Chairman, our Nation demands that we reform our welfare system. This legislation moves a long way toward needed reform, but it can still be better. I offer my reluctant support and hope that the Senate and the conference committee address my concerns and make this bill the best that it can possibly be.

under a work supplementation or support program, as defined under section 16(b), that is attributable to public assistance.

“(B) DEDUCTION.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), a household with earned income shall be allowed a deduction of 20 percent of all earned income to compensate for taxes, other mandatory deductions from salary, and work expenses.

“(C) EXCEPTION.—The deduction described in subparagraph (B) shall not be allowed with respect to determining an overissuance due to the failure of a household to report earned income in a timely manner.

“(3) DEPENDENT CARE DEDUCTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A household shall be entitled, with respect to expenses (other than excluded expenses described in subparagraph (B)) for dependent care, to a dependent care deduction, the maximum allowable level of which shall be $200 per month for each dependent child under 2 years of age and $175 per month for each other dependent, for the actual cost of payments necessary for the care of a dependent if the care enables a household member to accept or continue employment, or training or education that is preparatory for employment.

“(B) EXCLUDED EXPENSES.—The excluded expenses referred to in subparagraph (A) are—

“(i) expenses paid on behalf of the household by a third party;

“(ii) amounts made available and excluded for the expenses referred to in subparagraph (A) under subsection (d)(3); and

“(5) HOMELESS SHELTER ALLOWANCE.—A State agency may develop a standard homeless shelter allowance, which shall not exceed $143 per month, for such expenses as may reasonably be expected to be incurred by households in which all members are homeless individuals but are not receiving free shelter throughout the month. “(6) EXCESS MEDICAL EXPENSE DEDUCTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A household containing an elderly or disabled member shall be entitled, with respect to expenses other than expenses paid on behalf of the household by a third party, to an excess medical expense deduction for the portion of the actual costs of allowable medical expenses, incurred by the elderly or disabled member, exclusive of special diets, that exceeds $35 per month.

“(B) METHOD OF CLAIMING DEDUCTION.—

“(III) not require further reporting or verification of a change in medical expenses if such a change has been anticipated for the certification period.

“(7) EXCESS SHELTER EXPENSE DEDUCTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A household shall be entitled, with respect to expenses other than expenses paid on behalf of the household by a third party, to an excess shelter expense deduction to the extent that the monthly amount expended by a household for shelter exceeds an amount equal to 50 percent of monthly household income after all other applicable deductions have been allowed.

“(B) MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF DEDUCTION.—In the case of a household that does not contain an elderly or disabled individual, the excess shelter expense deduction shall not exceed—

SEC. 4101. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:
(1) Marriage is the foundation of a successful society.

(2) Marriage is an essential institution of a successful society which promotes the interests of children.

(3) Promotion of responsible fatherhood and motherhood is integral to successful child rearing and the well-being of children.

(4) In 1992, only 54 percent of single-parent families with children had a child support order established and, of that 54 percent, only about one-half received the full amount due. Of the cases enforced through the public child support enforcement system, only 18 percent of the caseload has a collection.

(5) The number of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children (in this section referred to as "AFDC") has more than tripled since 1965. More than two-thirds of these recipients are children. Eighty-nine percent of children receiving AFDC benefits now live in homes in which no father is present.

(I) was 3,300,000 in 1965;

(II) was 6,200,000 in 1970;

(III) was 7,400,000 in 1980; and

(IV) was 9,300,000 in 1992.

(ii) While the number of children receiving AFDC benefits increased nearly threefold between 1965 and 1992, the total number of children in the United States aged 0 to 18 has declined by 5.5 percent.

(B) The Department of Health and Human Services has estimated that 12,000,000 children will receive AFDC benefits within 10 years.

(C) The increase in the number of children receiving public assistance is closely related to the increase in births to unmarried women. Between 1970 and 1991, the percentage of live births to unmarried women increased nearly threefold, from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent.

(6) The increase of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and births is well documented as follows:

(A) It is estimated that the rate of non-marital teen pregnancy rose 23 percent from 54 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried teenagers in 1976 to 66.7 pregnancies in 1991. The overall rate of nonmarital pregnancy rose 14 percent from 90.8 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried women in 1980 to 103 in both 1991 and 1992. In contrast, the overall pregnancy rate for married couples decreased 7.3 percent between 1980 and 1991, from 126.9 pregnancies per 1,000 married women in 1980 to 117.6 pregnancies in 1991.

(B) The total of all out-of-wedlock births between 1970 and 1991 has risen from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent and if the current trend continues, 50 percent of all births by the year 2015 will be out-of-wedlock.

(7) The negative consequences of an out-of-wedlock birth on the mother, the child, the family, and society are well documented as follows:

(A) Young women 17 and under who give birth outside of marriage are more likely to go on public assistance and to spend more years on welfare once enrolled. These combined effects of "younger and longer" increase total AFDC costs per household by 25 percent to 30 percent for 17-year-olds.

(B) Children born out-of-wedlock have a substantially higher risk of being born at a very low or moderately low birth weight.

(C) Children born out-of-wedlock are more likely to experience low verbal cognitive attainment, as well as more child abuse, and neglect.

(D) Children born out-of-wedlock were more likely to have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(E) Being born out-of-wedlock significantly reduces the chances of the child growing up to have an intact marriage.

(F) Children born out-of-wedlock are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they grow up.

(8) Currently 35 percent of children in single-parent homes were born out-of-wedlock, nearly the same percentage as that of children in single-parent homes whose parents are divorced (37 percent). While many parents find themselves, through divorce or tragic circumstances beyond their control, facing the difficult task of raising children alone, nevertheless, the negative consequences of raising children in single-parent homes are well documented as follows:

(A) Only 9 percent of married-couple families with children under 18 years of age have income below the national poverty level. In contrast, 46 percent of female-headed households with children under 18 years of age are below the national poverty level.

(B) Among single-parent families, nearly 1/2 of the mothers who never married received AFDC while only 1/5 of divorced mothers received AFDC.

(C) Children born into families receiving welfare assistance are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they reach adulthood than children not born into families receiving welfare.

(D) Mothers under 20 years of age are at the greatest risk of bearing low-birth-weight babies.

(E) The younger the single parent mother, the less likely she is to finish high school.

(F) Young women who have children before finishing high school are more likely to receive welfare assistance for a longer period of time.

(G) Between 1985 and 1990, the public cost of births to teenage mothers under the aid to families with dependent children program, the food stamp program, and the medicaid program has been estimated at $120,000,000,000.

(H) The absence of a father in the life of a child has a negative effect on school performance and peer adjustment.

(I) Children of teenage single parents have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(J) Children of single-parent homes are 3 times more likely to fail and repeat a year in grade school than are children from intact 2-parent families.

(K) Children from single-parent homes are almost 4 times more likely to be expelled or suspended from school.

(L) Neighborhoods with larger percentages of youth aged 12 through 20 and areas with higher percentages of single-parent households have higher rates of violent crime.

(M) Of those youth held for criminal offenses within the State juvenile justice system, only 29.8 percent lived primarily in a home with both parents. In contrast to these incarcerated youth, 73.9 percent of the 62,800,000 children in the Nation's resident population were living with both parents.

(9) Therefore, in light of this demonstration of the crisis in our Nation, it is the sense of the Congress that prevention of out-of-wedlock pregnancy and reduction in out-of-wedlock birth are very important Government interests and the policy contained in part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 4103(a) of this Act) is intended to address the crisis.

SEC. 4102. REFERENCE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, wherever in this subtitle an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of the Social Security Act.

"(iii) Ensure that parents and caretakers receiving assistance under the program engage in work activities in accordance with section 407.

“(ii) the average monthly number of families that received aid under the State plan approved under part A (as in effect on September 30, 1995) during fiscal year 1995.

The minimum participation rate shall not be reduced to the extent that the Secretary determines that the reduction in the number of families receiving such assistance is required by Federal law.

“(B) ELIGIBILITY CHANGES NOT COUNTED.—

The regulations described in subparagraph (A) shall not take into account families that are diverted from a State program funded under this part as a result of differences in eligibility criteria under a State program funded under this part and eligibility criteria under the State program operated under the State plan approved under part A

(as such plan and such part were in effect on September 30, 1995). Such regulations shall place the burden on the Secretary to prove that such families were diverted as a direct result of differences in such eligibility criteria.

“(B) terminate such assistance, subject to such good cause and other exceptions as the State may establish.

“(2) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a State may not reduce or terminate assistance under the State program funded under this part based on a refusal of an adult to work if the adult is a single custodial parent caring for a child who has not attained 11 years of age, and the adult proves that the adult has a demonstrated inability (as determined by the State) to obtain needed child care, for 1 or more of the following reasons:

“(h) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT STATES SHOULD IMPOSE CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS ON NONCUSTODIAL, NONSUPPORTING MINOR PARENTS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the States should require noncustodial, non-supporting parents who have not attained 18 years of age to fulfill community work obligations and attend appropriate parenting or money management classes after school.

“(i) REVIEW OF IMPLEMENTATION OF STATE WORK PROGRAMS.—During fiscal year 1999, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate shall hold hearings and engage in other appropriate activities to review the implementation of this section by the States, and shall invite the Governors of the States to testify before them regarding such implementation. Based on such hearings, such Committees may introduce such legislation as may be appropriate to remedy any problems with the State programs operated pursuant to this section.

“Disposal of Resources for Less Than Fair Market Value

“(c)(1)(A)(i) If an individual who has not attained 18 years of age (or any person acting on such individual's behalf) disposes of resources of the individual for less than fair market value on or after the look-back date specified in clause (ii)(I), the individual is ineligible for benefits under this title for months during the period beginning on the date specified in clause (ii) and equal to the number of months specified in clause (iv).

“(ii)(I) The look-back date specified in this subclause is a date that is 36 months before the date specified in subclause (II).

“(II) The date specified in this subclause is the date on which the individual applies for benefits under this title or, if later, the date on which the disposal of the individual's resources for less than fair market value occurs.

“(iii) The date specified in this clause is the first day of the first month that follows the month in which the individual's resources were disposed of for less than fair market value and that does not occur in any other period of ineligibility under this paragraph.

“(iv) The number of months of ineligibility under this clause for an individual shall be equal to—

“(I) the total, cumulative uncompensated value of all the individual's resources so disposed of on or after the look-back date specified in clause (ii)(I), divided by “(II) the amount of the maximum monthly benefit payable under section 1611(b) to an eligible individual for the month in which the date specified in clause (ii)(II) occurs.

“(B) An individual shall not be ineligible for benefits under this title by reason of subparagraph (A) if the Commissioner determines that—

“(C) For purposes of this paragraph, in the case of a resource held by an individual in common with another person or persons in a joint tenancy, tenancy in common, or similar arrangement, the resource (or the affected portion of such resource) shall be considered to be disposed of by such individual when any action is taken, either by such individual or by any other person, that reduces or eliminates such individual's ownership or control of such resource.

“(D)(i) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), this subsection shall not apply to a transfer of a resource to a trust if the portion of the trust attributable to such resource is considered a resource available to the individual pursuant to subsection (e)(3) (or would be so considered, but for the application of subsection (e)(4)).

“(ii) In the case of a trust established by an individual (within the meaning of subsection (e)(2)(A)), if from such portion of the trust (if any) that is considered a resource available to the individual pursuant to subsection (e)(3) (or would be so considered but for the application of subsection (e)(2)) or the residue of such portion upon the termination of the trust—

“(I) there is made a payment other than to or for the benefit of the individual, or

“(II) no payment could under any circumstance be made to the individual, then the payment described in subclause (I) or the foreclosure of payment described in subclause (II) shall be considered a disposal of resources by the individual subject to this subsection, as of the date of such payment or foreclosure, respectively.

“(2)(A) At the time an individual (and the individual's eligible spouse, if any) applies for benefits under this title, and at the time the eligibility of an individual (and such spouse, if any) for such benefits is redetermined, the Commissioner of Social Security shall—

of ineligibility for benefits under this title for individuals who make certain dispositions of resources for less than fair market value, and inform such individual that information obtained pursuant to clause (ii) will be made available to the State agency administering a State plan approved under title XIX (as provided in subparagraph (B)); and “(ii) obtain from such individual information which may be used in determining whether or not a period of ineligibility for such benefits would be required by reason of paragraph (1).

Subtitle D—Restricting Welfare and Public Benefits for Aliens

SEC. 4400. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION.

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(1) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country’s earliest immigration statutes.

(2) It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that—

(A) aliens within the Nation’s borders not depend on public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations, and

(B) the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

(3) Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates.

(4) Current eligibility rules for public assistance and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

(5) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

(6) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

(7) With respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning the eligibility of qualified aliens for public benefits in this subtitle, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classification in determining the eligibility of such aliens for public assistance shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling governmental interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

“(B) meets all of the requirements of title XVI with respect to eligibility for supplemental security income benefits; or

“(C) is a child whose costs in a foster family home or child-care institution are covered by the foster care maintenance payments being made with respect to his or her minor parent;

“(2)(A) would have received aid under the eligibility standards under the State plan approved under section 402 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this part, adjusted for inflation, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary) in or for the month in which such agreement was entered into or court proceedings leading to the removal of such child from the home were initiated;

“(B) would have received such aid in or for such month if application had been made therefor, or had been living with a relative specified in section 406(a) (as so in effect) within 6 months prior to the month in which such agreement was entered into or such proceedings were initiated, and would have received such aid in or for such month if in such month such child had been living with such a relative and application therefor had been made; or

“(C) is a child described in subparagraph (A) or (B); and

“(3) has been determined by the State, pursuant to subsection (h) of this section, to be a child with special needs.

“(e) DETERMINATION OF PAYMENTS.—The amount of the payments to be made in any case under subsection (b) shall be determined through agreement between the adoptive parents and the State or a public or nonprofit private agency administering the program under this part, which shall take into consideration the circumstances of the adopting parents and the needs of the child being adopted, and may be readjusted periodically, with the concurrence of the adopting parents (which may be specified in the adoption assistance agreement), depending upon changes in such circumstances. However, in no case may the amount of the adoption assistance payment exceed the foster care maintenance payment which would have been paid during the period if the child with respect to whom the adoption assistance payment is made had been in a foster family home.

“(f) PAYMENT EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding subsection (e), no payment may be made to parents with respect to any child who has attained the age of 18 (or, where the State determines that the child has a mental or physical disability which warrants the continuation of assistance, the age of 21), and no payment may be made to parents with respect to any child if the State determines that the parents are no longer legally responsible for the support of the child or if the State determines that the child is no longer receiving any support from such parents. Parents who have been receiving adoption assistance payments under this part shall keep the State or public or nonprofit private agency administering the program under this part informed of circumstances which would, pursuant to this section, make them ineligible for such assistance payments, or eligible for assistance payments in a different amount.

“(g) PREADOPTON PAYMENTS.—For purposes of this part, individuals with whom a child who has been determined by the State, pursuant to subsection (h), to be a child with special needs is placed for adoption in accordance with applicable State and local law shall be eligible for adoption assistance payments during the period of the placement, on the same terms and subject to the same conditions as if such individuals had adopted such child.

“(h) DETERMINATION OF CHILD WITH SPECIAL NEEDS.—For purposes of this section, a child shall not be considered a child with special needs unless—

“(1) the State has determined that the child cannot or should not be returned to the home of the child’s parents; and

“(2) the State had first determined—

“(A) that there exists with respect to the child a specific factor or condition such as the child’s ethnic background, age, or membership in a minority or sibling group, or the presence of factors such as medical conditions or physical, mental, or emotional handicaps because of which it is reasonable to conclude that such child cannot be placed with adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance under this part or medical assistance under title XIX; and

“(B) that, except where it would be against the best interests of the child because of such factors as the existence of significant emotional ties with prospective adoptive parents while in the care of such parents as a foster child, a reasonable, but unsuccessful, effort has been made to place the child with appropriate adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance under this section or medical assistance under title XIX.”

(e) PAYMENTS TO STATES; ALLOTMENTS TO STATES.—Section 474 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 674) is amended to read as follows:

“(C) 50 percent (or, if the quarter is in fiscal year 1997, 75 percent) of so much of such expenditures as are for the planning, design, development, or installation of statewide mechanized data collection and information retrieval systems (including 50 percent (or, if the quarter is in fiscal year 1997, 75 percent) of the full amount of expenditures for hardware components for such systems) but only to the extent that such systems—

“(i) one-half of any additional amounts expended by such State for such programs; or “(ii) the maximum additional amount for such State under subsection (e)(1) of such section.

“(b) AUTOMATED DATA COLLECTION EXPENDITURES.—The Secretary shall treat as necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan all expenditures of a State necessary in order for the State to plan, design, develop, install, and operate data collection and information retrieval

“(A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with subsection (a), and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived;

“(3) PRO RATA SHARE.—The pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary, of the net amount recovered during any quarter by the State or any political subdivision thereof with respect to foster care and adoption assistance furnished under this part shall be considered an overpayment to be adjusted under this subsection.

“(d) ALLOWANCE OR DISALLOWANCE OF CLAIM.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Within 60 days after receipt of a State claim for expenditures pursuant to subsection (b)(1), the Secretary shall allow, disallow, or defer such claim.

“(2) NOTICE.—Within 15 days after a decision to defer a State claim, the Secretary shall notify the State of the reasons for the deferral and of the additional information necessary to determine the allowability of the claim.

“(3) DECISION.—Within 90 days after receiving such necessary information (in readily reviewable form), the Secretary shall—

“(A) disallow the claim, if able to complete the review and determine that the claim is not allowable; or

“(B) in any other case, allow the claim, subject to disallowance (as necessary)—

“(i) upon completion of the review, if it is determined that the claim is not allowable; or

“(ii) on the basis of findings of an audit or financial management review.”

"(B) MAXIMUM ADDITIONAL AMOUNT.—The maximum additional amount to which a State shall be entitled under section 474(a)(4) for a fiscal year shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the additional ceiling for such fiscal year as the basic amount of such State bears to $45,000,000.

"(2) REALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—If any State does not apply for funds under this section for any fiscal year within the time provided in subsection (c), the funds to which such State would have been entitled for such fiscal year shall be reallocated to one or more other States on the basis of their relative need for additional payments under this section (as determined by the Secretary).

"(3) SUPPLEMENT TO OTHER FUNDS.—Any amounts payable to States under this section shall be in addition to amounts payable to States under paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 474(a), and shall supplement and not replace any other funds which may be available for the same general purposes in the localities involved.

Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this chapter, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation, as appropriate, with the heads of other Federal agencies, shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a legislative proposal providing for such technical and conforming amendments in the law as are required by the provisions of this chapter.

SEC. 4722. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING TIMELY ADOPTION OF CHILDREN.

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) too many children who wish to be adopted are spending inordinate amounts of time in foster care;

(2) there is an urgent need for States to increase the number of waiting children being adopted in a timely and lawful manner;

(3) studies have shown that States spend an excess of $15,000 each year on each special needs child in foster care, and would save significant amounts of money if they offered incentives to families to adopt special needs children;

(4) States should allocate sufficient funds under this subtitle for adoption assistance and medical assistance to encourage more families to adopt children who otherwise would languish in the foster care system for a period that many experts consider detrimental to their development;

(5) States should offer incentives for families that adopt special needs children to make adoption more affordable for middle-class families;

(6) when it is necessary for a State to remove a child from the home of the child's biological parents, the State should strive—

(A) to provide the child with a single foster care placement and a single coordinated case team; and

(B) to conclude an adoption of the child, when adoption is the goal of the child and the State, within one year of the child's placement in foster care; and

(7) States should participate in local, regional, or national programs to enable maximum visibility of waiting children to potential parents. Such programs should include a nationwide, interactive computer network to disseminate information on children eligible for adoption to help match them with families around the country.

SEC. 4723. REMOVAL OF BARRIERS TO INTERETHNIC ADOPTION.

(a) STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.—Section 422(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 622(a)), as added by section 4701 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(15) CERTIFICATION REGARDING REMOVAL OF BARRIERS TO INTERETHNIC ADOPTION.—A certification that, not later than January 1, 1997, the State has in effect such laws and procedures as may be necessary to ensure that neither the State nor any other entity in the State that receives funds from the Federal Government and is involved in adoption or foster care placements may—

"(A) deny to any person the opportunity to become an adoptive or a foster parent, on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the person, or of the child, involved; or

"(B) delay or deny the placement of a child for adoption or into foster care, on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the adoptive or foster parent, or the child, involved."

(b) ENFORCEMENT.—Section 423(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 623(e)), as added by section 4701 of this Act, is amended by redesignating paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (6), (7), and (8), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (4) the following:

"(5) PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO REMOVE BARRIERS TO INTERETHNIC ADOPTION.—

"(A) REDUCTION OF PAYMENTS TO THE STATE.—If a State's program operated under this part is found, as a result of a review conducted under section 1123, to have violated section 422(a)(15) during a quarter with respect to any person, then, notwithstanding any regulations promulgated under section 1123(b)(3), the Secretary shall reduce the amount otherwise payable to the State under this part, for the quarter and for each subsequent quarter before the 1st quarter for which the State program is found, as a result of such a review, not to have violated section 422(a)(15) with respect to any person, by—

"(i) 2 percent of such otherwise payable amount, in the case of the 1st such finding with respect to the State;

"(ii) 5 percent of such otherwise payable amount, in the case of the 2nd such finding with respect to the State; or

"(iii) 10 percent of such otherwise payable amount, in the case of the 3rd or subsequent such finding with respect to the State.

"(B) RETURN OF FUNDS PAID TO OTHER VIOLATORS.—Any other entity which is in a State that receives funds under this part and which violates section 422(a)(15) during a quarter with respect to any person shall remit to the Secretary all funds that were paid by the State to the entity during the quarter from such funds.

"(C) PRIVATE CAUSE OF ACTION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Any individual who is aggrieved by a violation of section 422(a)(15) by a State or other entity may bring an action seeking relief from the State or other entity in any United States district court.

"(ii) LIMITATION.—An action under this subparagraph may not be brought more than 2 years after the date the alleged violation occurred.

"(D) NO EFFECT ON THE INDIAN CHILD WELFARE ACT OF 1978.—This paragraph shall not be construed to affect the application of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978."

(c) CIVIL RIGHTS.—

(1) PROHIBITED CONDUCT.—A person or government that is involved in adoption or foster care placements may not—

(A) deny to any individual the opportunity to become an adoptive or a foster parent, on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the individual, or of the child, involved; or

(B) delay or deny the placement of a child for adoption or into foster care, on the basis of the race, color, or national origin of the adoptive or foster parent, or the child, involved.

(2) ENFORCEMENT.—Noncompliance with paragraph (1) is deemed a violation of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

(3) NO EFFECT ON THE INDIAN CHILD WELFARE ACT OF 1978.—This subsection shall not be construed to affect the application of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978.

(d) CONFORMING REPEAL.—Section 553 of the Howard M. Metzenbaum Multiethnic

Placement Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C. 5115a) is repealed.

(2) CLOSING OUT ACCOUNT FOR THOSE PROGRAMS TERMINATED OR SUBSTANTIALLY MODIFIED BY THIS CHAPTER.—In closing out accounts, Federal and State officials may use scientifically acceptable statistical sampling techniques. Claims made under programs which are repealed or substantially amended in this chapter and which involve State expenditures in cases where assistance or services were provided during a prior fiscal year, shall be treated as expenditures during fiscal year 1995 for purposes of reimbursement even if payment was made by a State on or after October 1, 1995. States shall complete the filing of all claims no later than September 30, 1997. Federal department heads shall—

(A) use the single audit procedure to review and resolve any claims in connection with the closeout of programs; and

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. NEY

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as the designee of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEY:

Subsection (o) of section 6 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2015), as added by section 1033(a), is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking “, during the preceding 12-month period,”

Section 1033 is amended by striking subsection (b) and making such technical and conforming changes as may be appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 482, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEY] and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO] will be recognized to control the time in opposition.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEY].

Mr. NEY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, caring for people is not necessarily synonymous with taking care of people. Anyone can say that they feel pain, and many people obviously do feel pain for others that have not had the path of opportunity in this country. We have to work with all Americans to try and alleviate and minimize and finally end the pain once and for all. We need to reach out a helping hand to every person currently in the welfare system and say to them: If you want to work, we're going to help you climb that ladder of opportunity in this great country.

My amendment, which is the Kasich-Ney amendment, and I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], for his guidance and support on this amendment; this amendment to H.R. 3437 is just that: It is a ladder. The amendment will tell every able-bodied person without children between the ages of 18 and 50 that there is no escalator built by Washington that will carry them up the ladder of opportunity, but with a little help from us, and if they are willing to help themselves, they can have a chance in this country.

Madam Chairman, as my colleagues know, under the base text of the bill, able-bodied adults between the ages of 18 and 50 who have no children are permitted to receive food stamps without working for 4 months out of every 12-month period. This means they could potentially work 8 months and take 4 months off. The amendment, while retaining the exemptions in the base bill; I would like to just restate those exemptions for the record; this is who the amendment does not affect: Anyone under 18 or over the age of 50, anyone medically certified as physically or mentally incapable or unable to be employed, a parent or other member of the household responsible for a dependent child or a pregnant woman.

Those are the persons that are not included in this amendment. They are exempted from it.

What I am talking about, very clearly, are people who have no dependents, that are 18 years old to 50 years old that are able to work and are receiving food stamps. So instead of the 4 months off potentially every year, there will be a 3-month lifetime ability to take off.

Now, they have to remain employed for at least 20 hours, be in a job training program or one of the workfare programs.

I believe that this is a very fair measure. I believe that this is a measure that will help people on the opportunity scale in this country.

I would ask, Madam Chairman, why does Washington continue to promote a welfare system that discourages work? Is it extreme to think that we can do better? Is it extreme to want to give welfare recipients hope instead of an endless cycle of dependency? Should we not be trying to encourage work?

And that is what this amendment does, but it is an amendment that provides some safety, it provides a course of a safety net, it has the ability to have waivers from the State departments of human services. So it is a well-crafted, very fair amendment, but it simply says: If you want assistance from your government and you are 18 to 50 years old, and you don't have any dependents, and you are capable of working, then you have to simply work.

This is a fair amendment, it provides the change that is necessary in this country, and let me just say in closing, as my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], many times refers to the end of the day, this amendment is referring to the end of the day because that day has come that we have to step up to the plate and take the responsibility to help people.

The easy path is to say to an individual man or woman in this country, Take the check, don't be seen, take 4 months of the year off, we don't want to address the problem of what we do with you.

What we are doing is forcing this issue to be addressed, but we are providing help to a person. But we want to say that, yes, we are going to be there. There are going to be some problems throughout the course in welfare reform, we better believe there are. But I can tell my colleagues for sure that the current system is in hard failure, and the current system is not creating opportunity, and what the bottom line of this Congress is and the bottom line of this change in this country, this is about children, and each and every one of us as human beings are responsible, we are responsible for whether this planet is going to be safe and prosperous and peaceful for children, and we do not want to have a legacy of children who know nothing but the welfare system. We want to provide opportunity.

This is another step in the right direction, it is a caring step, and it shows that we are a Congress that cares to help involve people in that ladder of opportunity.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

(Mr. STENHOLM asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to this single-bullet amendment to this year's first reconciliation bill. I understand full well the political advantage which is sought with amendments such as this. I am certainly not interested in ever defending a wasteful use of food stamps. But I am also interested in abandoning people in real need, confronted by unexpected, uncontrollable circumstances who count on food stamps for their survival.

I find it amazing that the Rules Committee took the unprecedented action of allowing an amendment other than a complete substitute. Had I known there was any possibility of such amendments being made in order, I assure my colleagues I would have had a number of my own to offer, and I know dozens of other Members would have wanted to do the same.

This unprecedented change of the rules aside, I must point out that this particular amendment is not about a food stamp time limit; it is a lifetime ban on food stamp benefits if ever they have received them in their adult life for 3 months and been unable to find work during that 3 months. If they have faced unexpected and uncontrollable circumstances in their life, if they have been laid off from their job in a period of recession, if they went on food stamps, searched high and low for work and found nothing after 3 months, it is tough luck for them. They are off the food stamp program and until they have reached age 50 or until you have found a job. It does not matter if they are following all of the rules, looking for work, in real need of a hand up, the food stamp program just will not be there for them.

The implication behind this amendment is that finding some kind of job is always easy. That simply is not true.

For example, food stamp data show that more than 40 percent of those who would be affected by this provision are women, and nearly one-third of those women are over the age of 40. Whether widowed, divorced, or facing some other difficult life circumstance, these 40-plus women typically have a very difficult time finding employment. Their skills may be out of date or underdeveloped because they have been raising their families, and there simply are not many jobs out there for which they are qualified without training, which is another shortcoming of the base bill.

Coming from a rural district, I know very well that this amendment will hit particularly hard because there are an especially limited number of new employment opportunities in many small towns and rural communities of America.

This amendment is much more extreme even than the original bill passed by the House last year. Under that bill, people who were unable to find work could have continued to get food stamps if they participated in job search programs. This amendment cuts those people off the program and imposes the harshest work requirement of any proposal made during this Congress.

The amendment cannot be said to be toughening the work requirements. Such a statement assumes that for every person cut off from food stamps there is a job. Common sense tells us that is not the case. If this amendment were really intended to put people to work, it would provide a number of things, including funding for additional workfare slots. But, of course, that would cost money, and this amendment is intended to save an additional $2.2 billion. This is just another example of how extreme philosophy and this year's budget, not sound policy, are driving welfare reform.

This amendment is bad policy, a paperwork nightmare, and I urge every Member to vote against it.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON].

Mrs. CLAYTON. Madam Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to the Kasich-Ney amendment.

I believe that the 4-month time limit presently contained in this legislation is egregious. This amendment would further reduce this already short period of time by 30 days.

According to data collected by USDA, three-fourths of able-bodied, nonelderly food stamp recipients leave within 9 months because they have found a job or another alternative means to augment their income, but over one-half of those people need more than 4 months to do so.

Even our current unemployment compensation system acknowledges that people need about 6 months to find a job.

That is why I offered an amendment, albeit unsuccessful, during the Agriculture Committee consideration of the food stamp title to increase the limit from 4 months to 6 months, which is consistent with last year's Senate welfare reform package.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that 700,000 unemployed people who are willing to work and willing to comply with the tenets of a work program would be denied food stamp assistance under the 4-month ceiling contained in H.R. 3734, whereas under the 6-month scenario of my amendment only 450,000 workers would be cut off.

If the proposed 120-day limit is shortened further to 90 days, 90 days, close to 1 million Americans will be denied food stamp assistance, 1 million of the poorest of the poor.

Madam Chairman, the majority must be credited here for the inclusion of the 4-month bridge, which is not as long as I would like it to be, but it is far better than the 3-month ceiling that this punitive amendment seeks to introduce.

Thirty days, Madam Chairman; imagine not eating for 30 days? That is the reality that some poor Americans who are actively looking for work will have to face, if the Kasich-Ney amendment passes. Is the small budget reduction gained by this proposal worth the large loss of food assistance, sustenance if my colleagues will, to those 1 million Americans denied assistance under a 90-day ceiling?

Mr. NEY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, let me make clear what the amendment does so that there is no confusion. If you are able-bodied, single, between the ages of 18 and 50 and you get food stamps, we are saying you have to work 20 hours a week. It is no more complicated than that. If you cannot get a job, you go in a workfare program; 45 out of 50 States have a workfare program.

Let me just suggest to the Members, if there is any program that Americans who go to work are frustrated about, it is food stamps. They get frustrated to stand in line at the grocery store and just observe what goes on and the way in which people buy. They think people are trading them, they think there is a lot of fraud involved in the program. The American people, while supporting a food stamp program, they want the food stamp program cleaned up, tightened up, and fixed and reformed.

Madam Chairman, what this amendment says is that if you need to get food stamps and you are single, you are able-bodied, you are between the ages of 18 and 50, you have to do some work in exchange for the food stamps.

The opposition to this amendment, frankly, is opposed to the very premises that underlie our bill, our welfare bill. Our welfare bill says at some point you have to get trained, you have to go to work. You have to get off the system and get a job.

What this amendment says is very simple. If your people at home are frustrated about food stamps, this amendment does not take away food stamps. It says, though, if you are going to get food stamps, you are going to work 20 hours a week; 20 hours a week.

If you cannot find a job, you go to work for the State in a workfare program, and maybe you whitewash the graffiti, or maybe you clean up the neighborhood, but you participate in a program where you do some work in exchange, in exchange for the food stamps that you get.

Madam Chairman, it is not complicated. There is not a reason that I can think of as to why you should not be able to put in 20 hours a week if you are able-bodied, between the age of 18 to 50, in exchange for that program.

I would say to the House, think about this. If my colleagues support the underlying parts of this bill that call for people to work, that call for people to get trained, then clearly they support this concept. We are not asking people to work overly generous hours. In fact, there is already a requirement that says you have to work 8 months out of the year. What we say is we will give you a little exemption up front for 3 months, you have your 3 months, but after that if you need the food stamps you have to put in a little bit of work.

I think that is fair for the people who get the food stamps, and I think it is eminently reasonable and fair for the people that pay the bills for those who get the food stamps.

Support the Ney amendment.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, I want to tell the gentleman from Ohio I fully share, and indeed I have worked hard for the concept, off of welfare and into work, with time limits. But this amendment goes far beyond it.

Take the State of Michigan in the early 1980's. We had unemployment rising for 3 years in a row. We had about 115,000 more people on food stamps. In the Detroit metropolitan area, unemployment did not hit the 10 percent mark at any point.

So what about people, able bodied, who have been working all their lives, who are thrown out on the streets because there is no work? They had been on food stamps for 3 months 10 years earlier. What the gentleman is saying to those people: Starve. Oh, Members say all they have to do is get a job through workfare. Is there a workfare program in Michigan for 50,000 people or 100,000 people thrown out of work in a recession? Of course there is not.

I believe unequivocally people on welfare, able bodied, get to work with the adequate support protections in Castle-Tanner. What I do not say is to the hard-working person, with or without kids, if you cannot find a job, if you are working hard, looking hard to find one, we are going to say you starve, because 10 years ago you were on food stamps for 3 months.

Yes, Madam Chairman, I think this shows the difference between the two bills. They just insist on thinking tough means mean. I think tough means getting people off of welfare to work, but not hurting the hard-working person who hits hard times.

Vote against this amendment. It has been considered in the Senate before and rejected, across the board, on a bipartisan basis. This violates the spirit of getting tough on work but not being mean to kids or mean to anybody else.

Mr. NEY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEY] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. NEY. Madam Chairman, let me make this point very clear. This does not apply to children. Let me read the exemptions once again: Anyone under 18 years old or over 50, this does not apply to them. Anyone medically certified as physically or mentally incapable or unfit for employment, it does not apply to them. A parent or other member of a household responsible for a dependent child, it does not apply to them. A pregnant woman, it does not apply to her.

Also, if the gentleman wants to talk about unemployment, if we read the text, there are hardship exemptions. It can be waived. There are safeguards in this. The bottom line is it saves $2.2 billion on the fiscal side, but the real bottom line is it is responsible. It is a good amendment. It is fair. It is an amendment, and I cannot even believe some of the statements I have heard about this amendment. It is a very responsible amendment.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. In other words, Madam Chairman, if you are under the age of 18 or over the age of 50, this does not apply to you. Only if you are childless and able-bodied and if there is an unemployment rate over 10 percent, it can be waived, is that correct? So if you have high unemployment or if you have children or if you are sick, it does not apply. It is only if you are able-bodied, if you are childless, and you live in an area where you are getting food stamps and there are jobs available, then it applies.

So if you are able-bodied and there are jobs available, you go and you have to work 20 hours to get your food stamps. Then of course if you cannot find a job then you do workfare. That is what it is. But there are a number of exemptions in here for people who find themselves in particularly difficult circumstances and in a State with high unemployment. Or you can be in job training. They can go to job training.

Mr. NEY. The gentleman is correct. It just means you simply have to work, just like everyone else. This is responsible, it is fair, it has exemptions. I urge support of the amendment.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. Madam Chairman, I guess I do not understand what the gentleman talks about, asking about a waiver. How would you get that? Would it have to do with the percentage of unemployment in this district?

I have been in this place for 22 years. I have seen some mean-spirited amendments in this place. To me this is the most mean-spirited amendment that I have ever seen on any bill that has come before this House. If this is what you have to do to get reelected to this Congress, I do not want to be a part of this body any longer if I have to vote for such mean-spirited legislation as this. It is not worth it to be in this most deliberative body in the world. I do not think it speaks well for this body as a whole to accept a mean-spirited amendment like this. It is degrading.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Florida [Mrs. THURMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. THURMAN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. THURMAN. Madam Chairman, I have to tell the Members, I am shocked at this attempt one more time to further erode one of the few protections we have for laidoff and downsized employees in America. The Kasich-Ney amendment actually penalizes people who play by the rules and do exactly what we want people on welfare to do: find a job.

Someone who loses her job during a recession is often forced to turn to food stamp assistance to meet her basic needs. If this person acts responsibly and finds a new job within 3 short months, she should not be disqualified, yes, for the rest of her adult years, from further food stamp assistance. If 10 years later this welfare success story is downsized, as so many people in modern America have been, the Kasich-Ney amendment would deny her the temporary assistance needed for her to get back into the job market.

Why? Because it is about money, not policy. Good policy would be to reinforce the goal of moving people to work instead of offering an amendment that penalizes people who are trying to fulfill that goal. I sit on the Committee on Agriculture in the House. No one came before our committee to offer this amendment. In fact, we had a discussion about how the 4-month time limit in the majority's bill was unrealistic if job slots are not available.

I was actually encouraged by the conversation and believed we may have been able to reach a compromise on this issue. Now, all of a sudden, an amendment surfaces to not only cut back the time limit to 3 months, but to prohibit 18- to 50-year-olds from any further food assistance. The logic escapes me. Is it not the people that we want to work that we are trying to help? This amendment simply is another example of money over policy. While the majority may believe that this saves them money, the policy is quite costly.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEY].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. NEY. Madam Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

- TITLE I—BLOCK GRANTS FOR TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES
- SEC. 101. FINDINGS.
- The Congress makes the following findings:
- (1) Marriage is the foundation of a successful society.
- (2) Marriage is an essential institution of a successful society which promotes the interests of children.
- (3) Promotion of responsible fatherhood and motherhood is integral to successful child rearing and the well-being of children.
- (4) In 1992, only 54 percent of single-parent families with children had a child support order established and, of that 54 percent, only about one-half received the full amount due. Of the cases enforced through the public child support enforcement system, only 18 percent of the caseload has a collection.
- (5) The number of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children (in this section referred to as "AFDC") has more than tripled since 1965. More than two-thirds of these recipients are children. Eighty-nine percent of children receiving AFDC benefits now live in homes in which no father is present.
- (A)(i) The average monthly number of children receiving AFDC benefits—
- (I) was 3,300,000 in 1965;
- (II) was 6,200,000 in 1970;
- (III) was 7,400,000 in 1980; and
- (IV) was 9,300,000 in 1992.
- (ii) While the number of children receiving AFDC benefits increased nearly threefold between 1965 and 1992, the total number of children in the United States aged 0 to 18 has declined by 5.5 percent.
- (B) The Department of Health and Human Services has estimated that 12,000,000 children will receive AFDC benefits within 10 years.
- (C) The increase in the number of children receiving public assistance is closely related to the increase in births to unmarried women. Between 1970 and 1991, the percentage of live births to unmarried women increased nearly threefold, from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent.
- (6) The increase of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and births is well documented as follows:
- (A) It is estimated that the rate of non-marital teen pregnancy rose 23 percent from 54 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried teenagers in 1976 to 66.7 pregnancies in 1991. The overall rate of nonmarital pregnancy rose 14 percent from 90.8 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried women in 1980 to 103 in both 1991 and 1992. In contrast, the overall pregnancy rate for married couples decreased 7.3 percent between 1980 and 1991, from 126.9 pregnancies per 1,000 married women in 1980 to 117.6 pregnancies in 1991.
- (B) The total of all out-of-wedlock births between 1970 and 1991 has risen from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent and if the current trend continues, 50 percent of all births by the year 2015 will be out-of-wedlock.
- (7) The negative consequences of an out-of-wedlock birth on the mother, the child, the family, and society are well documented as follows:
- (A) Young women 17 and under who give birth outside of marriage are more likely to go on public assistance and to spend more years on welfare once enrolled. These combined effects of "younger and longer" increase total AFDC costs per household by 25 percent to 30 percent for 17-year olds.

(B) Children born out-of-wedlock have a substantially higher risk of being born at a very low or moderately low birth weight.

(C) Children born out-of-wedlock are more likely to experience low verbal cognitive attainment, as well as more child abuse, and neglect.

(D) Children born out-of-wedlock were more likely to have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(E) Being born out-of-wedlock significantly reduces the chances of the child growing up to have an intact marriage.

(F) Children born out-of-wedlock are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they grow up.

(8) Currently 35 percent of children in single-parent homes were born out-of-wedlock, nearly the same percentage as that of children in single-parent homes whose parents are divorced (37 percent). While many parents find themselves, through divorce or tragic circumstances beyond their control, facing the difficult task of raising children alone, nevertheless, the negative consequences of raising children in single-parent homes are well documented as follows:

(A) Only 9 percent of married-couple families with children under 18 years of age have income below the national poverty level. In contrast, 46 percent of female-headed households with children under 18 years of age are below the national poverty level.

(B) Among single-parent families, nearly 1/2 of the mothers who never married received AFDC while only 1/5 of divorced mothers received AFDC.

(C) Children born into families receiving welfare assistance are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they reach adulthood than children not born into families receiving welfare.

(D) Mothers under 20 years of age are at the greatest risk of bearing low-birth-weight babies.

(E) The younger the single parent mother, the less likely she is to finish high school.

(F) Young women who have children before finishing high school are more likely to receive welfare assistance for a longer period of time.

(G) Between 1985 and 1990, the public cost of births to teenage mothers under the aid to families with dependent children program, the food stamp program, and the medicaid program has been estimated at $120,000,000,000.

(H) The absence of a father in the life of a child has a negative effect on school performance and peer adjustment.

(I) Children of teenage single parents have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(J) Children of single-parent homes are 3 times more likely to fail and repeat a year in grade school than are children from intact 2-parent families.

(K) Children from single-parent homes are almost 4 times more likely to be expelled or suspended from school.

(L) Neighborhoods with larger percentages of youth aged 12 through 20 and areas with higher percentages of single-parent households have higher rates of violent crime.

(M) Of those youth held for criminal offenses within the State juvenile justice system, only 29.8 percent lived primarily in a home with both parents. In contrast to these incarcerated youth, 73.9 percent of the 62,800,000 children in the Nation's resident population were living with both parents.

(9) Therefore, in light of this demonstration of the crisis in our Nation, it is the sense of the Congress that prevention of out-of-wedlock pregnancy and reduction in out-of-wedlock birth are very important Government interests and the policy contained in part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 103 of this Act) is intended to address the crisis.

SEC. 102. REFERENCE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, wherever in this title an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 103. BLOCK GRANTS TO STATES.

Part A of title IV (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 401. PURPOSE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The purpose of this part is to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to—

"(1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their own homes or in the homes of relatives;

"(2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting job preparation, work, and marriage;

"(3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and establish annual numerical goals for preventing and reducing the incidence of these pregnancies; and

"(4) encourage the formation and maintenance of two-parent families.

"(b) NO INDIVIDUAL ENTITLEMENT.—This part shall not be interpreted to entitle any individual or family to assistance under any State program funded under this part.

"SEC. 402. ELIGIBLE STATES; STATE PLAN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—As used in this part, the term 'eligible State' means, with respect to a fiscal year, a State that, during the 2-year period immediately preceding the fiscal year, has submitted to the Secretary a plan that meets the requirements of subsection (b) and has been approved by the Secretary with respect to the fiscal year.

"(b) CONTENTS OF STATE PLANS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan includes the following:

"(1) OUTLINE OF FAMILY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—

"(A) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—A written document that outlines how the State will do the following:

"(ii) Determine, on an objective and equitable basis, the needs of and the amount of assistance to be provided to needy families, and treat families of similar needs and circumstances similarly, subject to subparagraph (B).

"(iii) Require a parent or caretaker receiving assistance under the program to engage in work (as defined by the State) once the State determines the parent or caretaker is ready to engage in work, or once the parent or caretaker has received assistance under the program for 24 months (whether or not consecutive), whichever is earlier.

"(iv) Ensure that parents and caretakers receiving assistance under the program engage in work activities in accordance with section 407.

"(v) Grant an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual to whom assistance under the program is denied, reduced, or terminated, or whose request for such assistance is not acted on with reasonable promptness.

"(vi) Take such reasonable steps as the State deems necessary to restrict the use and disclosure of information about individuals and families receiving assistance under the program attributable to funds provided by the Federal Government.

"(vii) Establish goals and take action to prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with special emphasis on teenage pregnancies, and establish numerical goals for reducing the illegitimacy ratio of the State (as defined in section 403(a)(2)(B)) for calendar years 1996 through 2005.

"(B) SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

"(i) The plan shall indicate whether the State intends to treat families moving into the State from another State differently than other families under the program, and if so, how the State intends to treat such families under the program.

"(ii) The plan shall indicate whether the State intends to provide assistance under the program to individuals who are not citizens of the United States, and if so, shall include an overview of such assistance.

"(iii) The plan shall contain an estimate of the number of individuals (if any) who will become ineligible for medical assistance under the State plan approved under title XIX as a result of changes in the rules governing eligibility for the State program funded under this part, and shall indicate the extent (if any) to which the State will provide medical assistance to such individuals, and the scope of such medical assistance.

"(2) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL OPERATE A CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM.—The plan shall include a certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will operate a child support enforcement program under the State plan approved under part D.

"(3) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL NOT OPERATE A SEPARATE FINANCIAL SUPPORT PROGRAM WITH STATE FUNDS TARGETED AT CERTAIN CHILD SUPPORT RECIPIENTS.—The plan shall include a certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will not operate a separate financial support program with State funds targeted at child support recipients who would be eligible for assistance under the program funded under this part were it not for payments from the State-funded financial assistance program.

"(4) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL OPERATE A CHILD PROTECTION PROGRAM.—The plan shall include a certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will operate a child protection program under the State plan approved under part B.

"(5) CERTIFICATION OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAM.—The plan shall include a certification by the chief executive officer of the State specifying which State agency or agencies will administer and supervise the program referred to in paragraph (1) for the fiscal year, which shall include assurances that local governments and private sector organizations—

"(A) have been working jointly with the State in all phases of the plan and design of welfare services in the State so that services are provided in a manner appropriate to local populations;

"(B) have had at least 60 days to submit comments on the final plan and the design of such services; and

"(C) will not have unfunded mandates imposed on them under such plan.

Such certification shall also include assurance that when local elected officials are currently responsible for the administration of welfare services, the local elected officials will be able to plan, design, and administer for their jurisdictions the programs established pursuant to this Act.

“(6) CERTIFICATION THAT THE STATE WILL PROVIDE INDIANS WITH EQUITABLE ACCESS TO ASSISTANCE.—The plan shall include a certification by the chief executive officer of the State that, during the fiscal year, the State will provide each Indian who is a member of an Indian tribe in the State that does not have a tribal family assistance plan approved under section 412 with equitable access to assistance under the State program funded under this part attributable to funds provided by the Federal Government.

“(7) CERTIFICATION OF NONDISPLACEMENT AND NONREPLACEMENT OF EMPLOYEES.—The plan shall include a certification that the implementation of the plan will not result in—

“(A) the displacement of a currently employed worker or position by an individual to whom assistance is provided under the State program funded under this part;

“(B) the replacement of an employee who has been terminated with an individual to whom assistance is provided under the State program funded under this part; or

“(C) the replacement of an employee who is on layoff from the same position filled by an individual to whom assistance is provided under the State program funded under this part or any equivalent position.

“(c) APPROVAL OF STATE PLANS.—The Secretary shall approve any State plan that meets the requirements of subsection (b) if the Secretary determines that operating a State program pursuant to the plan will contribute to achieving the purposes of this part.

“(d) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF STATE PLAN SUMMARY.—The State shall make available to the public a summary of any plan submitted by the State under this section.

“(B) STATE FAMILY ASSISTANCE GRANT DEFINED.—As used in this part, the term ‘State family assistance grant’ means the greatest of—

“(i) $\frac{1}{3}$ of the total amount required to be paid to the State under former section 403 (as in effect on September 30, 1995) for fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994 (other than with respect to amounts expended by the State for child care under subsection (g) or (i) of former section 402 (as so in effect));

“(II) the rate of induced pregnancy terminations in the State for the fiscal year is less than the rate of induced pregnancy terminations in the State for fiscal year 1995.

“(B) ILLEGITIMACY RATIO.—As used in this paragraph, the term ‘illegitimacy ratio’ means, with respect to a State and a fiscal year—

“(i) the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which such information is available; divided by “(ii) the number of births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which such information is available.

“(C) DISREGARD OF CHANGES IN DATA DUE TO CHANGED REPORTING METHODS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall disregard—

“(i) any difference between the illegitimacy ratio of a State for a fiscal year and the illegitimacy ratio of the State for fiscal year 1995 which is attributable to a change in State methods of reporting data used to calculate the illegitimacy ratio; and

“(ii) any difference between the rate of induced pregnancy terminations in a State for a fiscal year and such rate for fiscal year 1995 which is attributable to a change in State methods of reporting data used to calculate such rate.

“(B) PRESERVATION OF GRANT WITHOUT INCREASES FOR STATES FAILING TO REMAIN QUALIFYING STATES.—Each State that is not a qualifying State for a fiscal year specified in subparagraph (A)(ii) but was a qualifying State for a prior fiscal year shall, subject to subparagraph (F), be entitled to receive from the Secretary for the specified fiscal year, a grant in an amount equal to the amount required to be paid to the State under this paragraph for the most recent fiscal year for which the State was a qualifying State.

“(C) QUALIFYING STATE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this paragraph, a State is a qualifying State for a fiscal year if—

“(I) the level of welfare spending per poor person by the State for the immediately preceding fiscal year is less than the national average level of State welfare spending per poor person for such preceding fiscal year; and “(II) the population growth rate of the State (as determined by the Bureau of the Census for the most recent fiscal year for which information is available) exceeds the average population growth rate for all States (as so determined) for such most recent fiscal year.

“(ii) STATE MUST QUALIFY IN FISCAL YEAR 1997.—Notwithstanding clause (i), a State shall not be a qualifying State for any fiscal year after 1997 by reason of clause (i) if the State is not a qualifying State for fiscal year 1997 by reason of clause (i).

“(iii) CERTAIN STATES DEEMED QUALIFYING STATES.—For purposes of this paragraph, a State is deemed to be a qualifying State for fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000 if—

“(I) the level of welfare spending per poor person by the State for fiscal year 1996 is less than 35 percent of the national average level of State welfare spending per poor person for fiscal year 1996; or “(II) the population of the State increased by more than 10 percent from April 1, 1990, to July 1, 1994, as determined by the Bureau of the Census.

“(ii) NATIONAL AVERAGE LEVEL OF STATE WELFARE SPENDING PER POOR PERSON.—The term ‘national average level of State welfare spending per poor person’ means, with respect to a fiscal year, an amount equal to—

“(I) the total amount required to be paid to the States under former section 403 (as in effect during fiscal year 1994) for fiscal year 1994; divided by “(II) the number of individuals, according to the 1990 decennial census, who were residents of any State and whose income was below the poverty line.

“(iii) STATE.—The term ‘State’ means each of the 50 States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

paragraph, in a total amount not to exceed $800,000,000.

“(F) GRANTS REDUCED PRO RATA IF INSUFFICIENT APPROPRIATIONS.—If the amount appropriated pursuant to this paragraph for a fiscal year is less than the total amount of payments otherwise required to be made under this paragraph for the fiscal year, then the amount otherwise payable to any State for the fiscal year under this paragraph shall be reduced by a percentage equal to the amount so appropriated divided by such total amount.

“(G) BUDGET SCORING.—Notwithstanding section 257(b)(2) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the baseline shall assume that no grant shall be made under this paragraph after fiscal year 2000.

“(4) SUPPLEMENTAL GRANT FOR OPERATION OF WORK PROGRAM.—

“(A) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—An eligible State may submit to the Secretary an application for additional funds to meet the requirements of section 407 with respect to a fiscal year if the Secretary determines that—

“(i) the total expenditures of the State to meet such requirements for the fiscal year exceed the total expenditures of the State during fiscal year 1994 to carry out part F (as in effect on September 30, 1994);

“(ii) the work programs of the State under section 407 are coordinated with the job training programs established by title II of the Job Training Partnership Act, or (if such title is repealed by the Consolidated and Reformed Education, Employment, and Rehabilitation Systems Act) the Consolidated and Reformed Education, Employment, and Rehabilitation Systems Act; and “(iii) the State needs additional funds to meet such requirements or certifies that it intends to exceed such requirements.

“(B) GRANTS.—The Secretary may make a grant to any eligible State which submits an application in accordance with subparagraph (A) of this paragraph for a fiscal year in an amount equal to the Federal medical assistance percentage of the amount (if any) by which the total expenditures of the State to meet or exceed the requirements of section 407 for the fiscal year exceeds the total expenditures of the State during fiscal year 1994 to carry out part F (as in effect on September 30, 1994).

“(C) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall issue regulations providing for the equitable distribution of funds under this paragraph.

“(D) APPROPRIATIONS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, there are appropriated to the Secretary for grants under this paragraph—

“(ii) AVAILABILITY.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to clause (i) shall remain available until expended.

“(b) CONTINGENCY FUND.—

“(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a fund which shall be known as the ‘Contingency Fund for State Welfare Programs’ (in this section referred to as the ‘Fund’).

“(2) DEPOSITS INTO FUND.—

“(A) Out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, there are appropriated for fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001 and 2002 such sums as are necessary for payment to the Fund in a total amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C).

“(B) If—

“(i) the average rate of total unemployment in the United States for the most recent 3 months for which data for all States are available is not less than 7 percent; and then there are appropriated for that fiscal year, in addition to amounts appropriated under paragraph (2)(A), such sums as equal the difference between the amount needed to pay all State claims for that quarter and the amount remaining in the Fund.

“(ii) there are insufficient amounts in the Fund to pay all State claims under paragraph (4) for a quarter in that fiscal year;

“(C) If—

subject to such good cause and other exceptions as the State may establish.

“(2) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a State may not reduce or terminate assistance under the State program funded under this part based on a refusal of an adult to work if the adult is a single custodial parent caring for a child who has not attained 11 years of age, and the adult proves that the adult has a demonstrated inability (as determined by the State) to obtain needed child care, for 1 or more of the following reasons:

“(A) Unavailability of appropriate child care within a reasonable distance from the individual’s home or work site.

"(3) The provisions of section 406(h) (as in effect on July 1, 1996) shall apply, in relation to this title, with respect to individuals who receive assistance under a State program funded under part A of title IV (as in effect on and after October 1, 1996) and are eligible for medical assistance under this title or who are described in subsection (b)(1) in the same manner as they apply before such date with respect to individuals who become ineligible for aid to families with dependent children as a result (wholly or partly) of the collection or increased collection of child or spousal support under part D of title IV.

TITLE IV—RESTRICTING WELFARE AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

SEC. 400. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION.

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(1) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country’s earliest immigration statutes.

(2) It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that—

(A) aliens within the nation’s borders not depend on public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations, and

(B) the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

(3) Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates.

(4) Current eligibility rules for public assistance and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

(5) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

(6) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

(7) With respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning the eligibility of qualified aliens for public benefits in this title, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classification in determining the eligibility of such aliens for public assistance shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling governmental interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

the individual recipient's income or resources; and (iii) are necessary for the protection of life or safety.

(E) Programs for housing or community development assistance or financial assistance administered by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, any program under title V of the Housing Act of 1949, or any assistance under section 306C of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, to the extent that the alien is receiving such a benefit on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(F) Assistance or benefits under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 482, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] and a Member opposed will each control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER].

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would like to thank the minority leader for allowing us to present the so-called Castle-Tanner amendment to the matter pending before the body in this fashion. I want to, at the outset, thank my cosponsor, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE], the cosponsor of this Castle-Tanner bill. It has received some favorable comment around, and I appreciate it being considered on the floor today.

Madam Chairman, with those words, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE].

Mr. CASTLE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Madam Chairman, I will say very briefly, because we do not have much time, it has been a tremendous pleasure working with the gentleman and the others who worked on this for many, many months, in what is truly a bipartisan and bicameral piece of legislation, to resolve the problems of welfare in the United States of America. It was a bipartisan problem, and I think it is going to take a bipartisan solution to get there.

The differences between the Castle-Tanner proposal and the Archer legislation have been, I think, overstated as I have listened to the debate. Both are very tough, they end welfare as we know it, and they require work. There is unanimity of opinion that we need to reform welfare.

I think what I need to do in the brief time which I have is highlight some of the differences between these two pieces of legislation so people can make up their minds which they are going to support, or, as in my case, if they are going to support both.

First in the case of vouchers, Castle-Tanner continues benefits that can be used for the care of the child after a State-imposed time limit, be it up until the time of a job, 2 years, 5 years or after 5 years, while the Archer legislation strictly prohibits it. That is a highly important change, and, quite frankly, that has to be done before we pass any welfare reform bill.

Our bill has an additional $3 billion for work funding. There simply is not enough money in the Republican proposal right now to make it work. Maybe it can be put in later, but let us do it now. It is authorized in the Republican bill. It is committed in this particular bill.

The lack of money for the work requirement also gives States flexibility in terms of being able to put together programs to put people to work. There just is not sufficient money, and what we have really is an unfunded mandated if it goes to that level.

The maintenance of effort is extremely important. We are requiring the State spend at least 85 percent of what they spent in 1994. The States are doing very well by this in terms of saving money, maybe even better than the Federal Government. This is a minimal requirement in my opinion, and something we should do.

There is a contingency fund. I can tell Members that the Archer legislation does not provide a safety net if the contingency fund is wiped out by recession. Ours is more responsive to economic downturns. It gives people an opportunity.

There will be economic downturns. Welfare will never get better than it is now in terms of people not being on it with respect to the economy we have.

Transferability is important, for example. We want to limit the transferability to some degree between these different block grants which are being created to make sure the children receive the benefits of that. I believe our bill does that better.

Medicaid linkage is important. If you qualify now, you qualify later. People should have access to medical care.

In the area of food stamps, our bill ensures the food stamp safety net is not cut off if people are not working after 4 months, even if job slots are not available.

There are other changes in our legislation. There are many things which address this. But, overall, we have the same fundamental focus of ending welfare as we know it. I think we have carefully crafted the safety nets in a variety of areas to help the States carry out their programs, to give them flexibility, to make sure particularly the children, but those who are in the situation in which they cannot take care of themselves, are served by the piece of legislation we have before us.

I do not know what the will of the House is today. My preference is to pass this legislation, but I would be satisfied in passing the Republican legislation. But we must move forward with a concept of welfare reform. I hope before anyone votes on this, they will look at it carefully and decide this is the best way to do it, and support Castle-Tanner.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], the chairman of the Committee on Economic and Educational Opportunities.

(Mr. GOODLING asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, there is good news to announce on the floor of the House today. The good news basically is that all of those who have, over the last 30 some years, generated an unworkable welfare program, have now come to the floor and admitted that it does not work.

Well, obviously, anyone knew it was not going to work if the idea was to help Americans get a part of the American dream. It certainly worked very well if the intention was to make sure that millions of Americans would become wards of the State and never have an opportunity to get part of the American dream.

I want to point out some of the things that came from our committee, because they have been misrepresented, and why I feel so strongly that the Republican proposal is the way to go.

First of all, we designed the program with several things in mind. We said welfare must be a safety net, not a way of life. There must be very clear emphasis on work and on getting those on welfare into work. We need to stop abuses of the system. We need to return power and flexibility to the States because they have a better idea of how to handle it than we do. Welfare should not encourage, it should discourage destructive personal behavior that contributes so clearly to welfare dependence as well as a host of other social problems.

Now, let me talk briefly about the bill. Under our bill, States must ensure an increasing percentage of their caseload as participating in work activities. The percentage increases to 50 percent by the year 2002. What is unique about the Republican welfare bill is that these are meaningful, honest numbers, unlike the numbers that we will hear in the other bill.

One of the easiest things to do in putting in work participation rates is to put in a high percentage, but then either exempt most welfare recipients from the calculation or count those who cycle on and off welfare toward meeting those numbers. That is one problem with the bill being offered by the other side. The work participation numbers are not honest numbers. We try to balance the need for States to have flexibility and how they put people to work with tough and meaningful goals and accountability.

Second, working together with the Committee on Ways and Means and others, I am pleased that the bill authorizes more money for child care, more money than anybody ever dreamed could become available. Clearly, if welfare reform is to succeed, there must be adequate child care.

We have increased funding to nearly $5 billion more than the current law and more than the President offered when claiming our bills were short on child care. One problem may arise, however. All of the working poor and those from low, middle income are going to say we cannot get child care but we are going to have to pay for someone else's.

We also made some other important improvements in child care. We consolidated programs to try to help both the States and, more importantly, families access child care. The bill increase the amount of money set aside for quality improvement activities and maintains the language on health and safety standards that is the child care development block grant.

The second, on child protection, we consolidated again six small separate single purpose grants into a new block that would be distributed by formula to the States. The results, more flexibility and more money for States to use in setting up programs to prevent as well as treat child abuse and related problems.

In the areas of child nutrition, the bill saves some money, primarily by means testing the family day care program, the only program that is not means tested, the only nutrition program. So it does not matter what the income is, we take from the money that we would have to feed the low income and the poor and give it to those who can otherwise pay for the care.

I would also note, unlike the substitute bill, the leadership welfare reform bill makes no reduction in reimbursement rates for school lunch and breakfast. Is it not ironic: All the misrepresentation last year when we talked about school lunch and child nutrition, and all of the abuse that got? And now the very people who made those promises and those abuses are doing just what they thought we were doing when we were not. They, as a matter of fact, are reducing the amount of money available for school lunch and school breakfast.

I would finally point out that we have come a long way on both sides. We are getting closer all the time. I truly believe that the Republican proposal is the way to go for meaningful welfare reform.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to parenthetically note that the gentleman's criticism of our plan with respect to work participation is what the Governors' conference told us that they thought they could achieve. The numbers came from the Governors, not from us.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Madam Chairman, I rise today in recognition of the contributions of the previous speaker through the Committee on Economic and Educational Opportunities to improving this bill, but it is not sufficient to improve the work that came out of other committees and, therefore, I rise in support of the Castle-Tanner substitute.

I am opposed to the Republican bill not because it tries to reform welfare, but because it tries to do so on the cheap. The Republican plan is based on the premise that the primary goal and the first objective of welfare reform ought to be to save money, and sadly it cannot be that alone.

If personal self-sufficiency for every American were easy or cheap, it would have been done long ago. The fact is that real and lasting and effective welfare reform will save money in the long run, but it will be difficult and costly and different in every State no matter what we do here today.

Today we have before us two bills that stand in stark contrast to one another, and what we do will make a difference. In one bill we ask the children to pay the price. It does not pay for work requirements, but it takes away the guarantee of food and health care for America's children.

We have another bill, the Castle-Tanner bill. It is tough. It requires self-sufficiency of adults, but it protects the children. It makes sure that at every level, no matter what we expect of adults, the children are fed and cared for. It has adequate funding for work programs. It recognizes this country sometimes has hard times, and it will not make the poorest and the youngest pay the most when the whole country is in a downturn.

Madam Chairman, we frequently point out that the devil is in the details. In this case both bills are filled with mind-numbing details, but the cumulative consequences of all those details are clear. We should not make the children pay an arbitrary and unfair share of the cost of reform, but we do need to reform.

Therefore, I support and urge my colleagues to support the Tanner-Castle bill because it is responsible, it puts people to work, and it looks out for America's children.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 5½ minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. ROBERTS. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute and for real welfare reform, and I want to take time to thank the gentlewoman for the splendid and fair job that she is doing in presiding over a controversial issue, but a very important issue.

There have been many speeches over the past 2 days, 2 years, for that matter, and there has been quite a bit of talk about what is compassionate, what is caring, what is humane, what is inhumane about welfare reform.

Well, let us apply these markers to the Food Stamp Program. Now, that is the provision of the part of welfare reform that comes under the jurisdiction of the House Committee on Agriculture and to a great extent has been ignored in this debate.

Does it help the poor to run a program that has no work requirements? What is compassionate about running a program so rife with abuse and mismanagement that the public has lost faith in food stamps? How does it benefit the needy to run a program that the Department of Agriculture's own inspector general says is overrun with instances of trafficking food stamps for guns and drugs?

Evidence of those abuses, by the way, became national news on television as a result of the first hearing held by the Committee on Agriculture at the beginning of this Congress.

That is not compassion. That is not caring. Those are failures and they are failures of the current system that we address and reform in the committee bill.

Now, let me address another recurring part of this debate, and that is the gridlock or the inability of the Congress and the President to reach a compromise. We have worked with the Department of Agriculture, we have worked with the administration and we have reached accord on many items, 72 percent, in regards to this bill.

I respect the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER]. They are two fine Members, with unimpeachable integrity, and I respect their views. But there are significant differences. The substitute does not structurally reform the Food Stamp Program. It achieves much of its savings by cutting food stamp benefits, and then in later years reintroduces something called indexing. That is not real reform.

Now, we have also heard much debate, especially from the administration, in reference to strong work requirements. My colleagues should know the substitute's work program actually costs $25 million more than current law. Current law. This substitute's work requirement is hollow, hollow because it does not apply, does not apply if a State does not provide every covered individual a position in a work training program. That is not a real work requirement, that is government make-work.

Our bill requires that able-bodied persons between the ages of 18 and 50, who have no dependents, may receive food stamps now for up to 3 months, and then the person is disqualified from food stamps unless they work for 20 hours a week or participate in a work program.

Who are we talking about? Two percent of the people that receive food stamps. Two-tenths of 1 percent of the population, able-bodied.

Now, let us talk about something that should be talked about regarding this debate, and that is the spending that has been out of control. This program has been on automatic pilot. It went from $10 billion to $27 billion in 10 years. If the economy improved, it went up. If the economy went bad, we would expect it to go up.

Our bill actually cuts the standard deduction provided to all applications below current levels to achieve savings. But then it goes back to indexing, the very cause of past runaway spending. Our bill takes the Food Stamp Program off of automatic pilot by keeping the deductions at current rates, but allowing the food stamp benefits to be adjusted to reflect the changes in the cost of food. Food stamps. We adjust the cost of food. That is simply basic.

Let us talk about unique and innovative work programs. True compassion. The substitute does not allow States to operate work support programs, our bill does, programs in which public assistance is provided to employers who hire recipients and then are used to pay part of the wages. Hiring, employers, wages: Real work. That allows food stamp recipients to gain the experience of working in real jobs to earn a paycheck.

Our bill allows certain States to pay cash in lieu of food stamp benefits to a household if a member of the household works in a nonsubsidized job for 90 days, earns at least $350 a month, and is eligible to receive welfare. My colleagues, that is incentive. That is not disincentive, that is incentive to work.

Now, let us talk about the real difference in these bills, and that is how our savings are achieved. Our bill is focused on making fundamental structural reforms, at the same time a careful and conscious decision was made to preserve the food assistance levels that are currently available.

The substitute, which relies on the proposals of the Clinton administration, preserves the failed structure of the old Food Stamp Program. Castle-Tanner achieves their savings by significantly cutting the benefit levels for the poor. Sixty percent of the savings in this substitute are derived from cuts in the current food assistance program.

In other words, saving the old failed system is so important that they would rather take food from the mouths of food stamp recipients today than make the needed changes to the structure of the program. We preserve the existing benefit levels. We make the needed reforms in the structure of the program.

If we are going to be compassionate and caring and humane, defeat the substitute and adopt the committee bill. Truly reform the Food Stamp Program.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield 10 seconds to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE].

Mr. CASTLE. Madam Chairman, I admire the Agriculture Committee chairman greatly, but the Castle-Tanner bill requires all able-bodied food stamp recipients to work within 6 months of receiving benefits. Unlike the Republican leadership bill, Castle-Tanner does not deny food stamps to individuals who are willing to work but are not able to find a job. Participation in the food stamp program is a fair program.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ORTON].

Mr. ORTON. Madam Chairman, let me begin with my sincere congratulations to my Republican colleagues.

They have come a long way in the last 18 months since their original proposal, H.R. 4, which was a harsh and an unworkable bill. I would also like to congratulate my friends, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER], and all the others who worked together with us on the bipartisan compromise legislation. The Castle-Tanner bill is a good reform bill which should be enacted into law.

While H.R. 3734 is getting much closer to a viable reform package, it is not quite there yet. I will not again list the problems with the majority bill and explain how Castle-Tanner resolves them. Others have done or will do that adequately. Let me just summarize my concerns in two major categories: the impact of this legislation on States and on America's children.

If we are going to fix welfare, then our fix must be adequate. The Republican bill is inadequate, particularly in the area of work requirements. The National Governors Association 2 days ago adopted a resolution on welfare which states in part, we are concerned that the bill restricts State flexibility and will create additional unfunded costs. CBO in the report accompanying the Republican bill stated that in fact the estimate of the unfunded mandate will be at $1.9 billion. By the way, a footnote: The first day we were in session in this Congress we adopted legislation to prevent us from implementing unfunded mandates on States.

In my home State of Utah, we have adopted welfare reform with strong work requirements, but there is concern whether this legislation provides sufficient flexibility for Utah to continue that program. Most importantly, our welfare reform should not hurt innocent children who have no choice where they are born or whether their parents can find work. The Castle-Tanner provisions on child care funding, vouchers, maintenance of efforts, contingency funding and limits on shifting funds from block grants are all designed to protect innocent children in a way better than the majority bill. These are cured in the Castle-Tanner bill, and I urge adoption of the measure.

Madam Chairman, I am pleased that the House is debating welfare reform today. I have frequently stated that there are few things that people in our Nation agree upon more than the fact that our welfare system is a failure. I believe we all agree that the welfare system should be reformed so that it is based on work, and I have worked diligently to ensure that Congress adopts welfare reform which will be signed into law this year.

In order to achieve this goal, we must put aside partisan differences and concentrate on issues like requiring work, strengthening child support enforcement, and increasing State flexibility. At the same time, we need to provide sufficient funds for States to meet work requirements and to provide adequate child care, foster care, adoption assistance, and health care services to make it economically feasible for parents to go to work. If we fail to meet these objectives, we are either settling for a system that is designed to fail, or we are imposing an unfunded mandate on the States.

I am pleased to be a part of the bipartisan effort that has led to the creation of the Castle-Tanner bill. The House will have the opportunity to consider this legislation today, and I strongly urge my colleagues to support this proposal because it is the only welfare bill that meets all of the objectives I have just stated.

In March of last year, the House passed the Personal Responsibility Act. I voted against that bill because it included several extreme provisions that would have imposed restrictive mandates on the States and decimated the safety net for American children. My greatest concerns were that it provided inadequate funding for child care, it imposed one-size-fits-all work requirements on States, and it did not provide for accountability of Federal tax dollars.

Adequate child care and health care funding is essential as we move parents into the workforce. No one wants innocent children to be in an unsafe environment because their parent is working. In addition, while everyone supports the concept of greater State flexibility in designing a welfare program that meets the needs of their population, it is essential to provide for accountability of Federal tax dollars. The Personal Responsibility Act provided no guarantee that States would use Federal grant funds for their stated purpose.

Finally, one of my central concerns in considering the Personal Responsibility Act was determining the impact of the legislation on the successful Single Parent Employment Demonstration [SPED] program in Utah. The premise underlying the Utah program is universal participation: everyone works toward self-sufficiency. This program has enjoyed national and local support, and is exactly the kind of program you would expect welfare reform to be based upon. Certainly, you would expect that the Utah program would be allowed to continue down the same successful path under a reformed system.

Instead, the Utah State Department of Human Services was concerned with the original bill because restrictive work participation definitions in the Personal Responsibility Act posed a threat to the program. The restrictive definition meant that a person faithfully following a self-sufficiency plan specifically designed to assist them in entering the labor market could be considered a non-participant by the Federal Government. The bill contained a Federal definition that would prevent States, who are dealing directly with individuals, from determining what would best assist a person in getting a job.

Ironically, while the bill did not allow States to count many active participants toward meeting mandatory rates, people who were forced to leave the system because of reaching a time limit could be counted toward meeting work participation rate even if they have never received any work-related assistance services.

The original bill simultaneously restricted successful State reform efforts and offered no protection to people on welfare who were willing to work—it was the worst of both worlds.

This original bill, which I opposed, was the same song only a different verse. It imposed a one-size-fits-all Federal solution, only it prohibited certain actions of States rather than mandating them.

The Democratic alternative was far superior, but not perfect solution. Subsequently, many of us, Democrat and Republicans have worked together and forged a bipartisan compromise, which has forced both the Republicans and the President toward a centrist compromise. Today's Republican welfare reform bill has been improved dramatically since its original version last year in the following areas:

It provides an additional $4 billion for child care funding, allowing more parents to be assured of their children's safety as they enter the workforce,

It removes the annual food stamp spending cap that would have hurt people during times of economic recession by limiting the food stamp program regardless of economic downturn,

It no longer allows conversion of child nutrition programs to State block grants, therefore we as a nation will remain committed to a basic level of nutrition for all of America's needy children,

It guarantees services to children in the foster care and adoption assistance programs where many children are waiting to be placed with a loving family, and

It enhances States' ability to create a flexible program by providing a work performance bonus, additional funding through the contingency fund, and a greater hardship exemption.

I commend my colleagues on the other side of the aisle for moving toward us on these critical issues. However, there still remain some very serious problems with the current Republican proposal that are addressed in the Castle/Tanner bill.

Before outlining important differences, it is critical to point out that where the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] has determined that the Republican bill provides inadequate funding to meet the requirements of the bill, the bill imposes an unfunded mandate on the States. One of the first actions of this Congress was to prohibit unfunded mandates.

The bipartisan Castle/Tanner bill, of which I am an original cosponsor, contains the following superior provisions:

Castle/Tanner adopts the recommendations of the National Governor's Association to give States greater flexibility to meet work requirements. On the other hand, the Republican bill contains an unfunded mandate. CBO estimates that the bill provides $12.9 billion less than necessary to achieve the work requirements in the bill, and concludes that most States would fail to meet the work requirements. Finally, CBO assumes that States would choose to accept penalties rather than meeting the costs of the program. In addition, the National Governors' Association has recently adopted a resolution regarding welfare reform in which the Governors state they are concerned that Republican majority bill H.R. 3734 because it "restricts State flexibility and will create additional unfunded costs."

Castle-Tanner provides for contingency funding for protection during times of economic downturn, when States are experiencing a regional recession or when the Nation is in recession. Without this provision, there will be no funding to assist States when they need it most.

Castle-Tanner provides adequate child care funding. CBO estimates that the Republican bill provides $800 million less than what is necessary to serve the children who need care as their parents enter the work force. Further, Castle/Tanner limits the transfer of block grant funds to anything but child care whereas the Republican bill would allow transfer of funds to other programs.

Castle-Tanner requires that States maintain at least 85 percent of their current level of effort. In contrast, the Republican bill allows States to decrease their current expenditures by 25 percent, even if they are not having any success in getting people into jobs. The Castle/Tanner bill allows some States to decrease their level of expenditures to 80 percent if they have been successful in getting people to work. This is a sensible provision that guarantees that States keep up their end of the partnership with the Federal Government, and that they are rewarded for their success.

Castle-Tanner requires that individuals in similar situations are treated similarly. This is a commonsense provision. In addition, it requires that States have objective and equitable standards for determining eligibility.

In conclusion, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Castle-Tanner welfare bill. It outlines tough common sense reforms, but provides States with assistance in times of economic downturn. Let's not settle for anything less than welfare reform that works.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I would point out to the gentleman in the well that the letter from the Congressional Budget Office to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means states that the work requirements contained in the portion of H.R. 3734 titled Temporary Assistance for Needy Families do not constitute an intergovernmental mandate as defined under the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

It is a bogus argument.

Madam Chairman, I include for the RECORD the letter to which I referred:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 18, 1996.

Hon. BILL ARCHER,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: At the request of your staff, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) is providing a more detailed explanation of why the work requirements contained in the portion of H.R. 3734 titled Temporary Assistance for Needy Families do not constitute an intergovernmental mandate as defined under the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-4). On June 26, 1996, CBO transmitted an intergovernmental mandates statement for H.R. 3734, the Welfare and Medicaid Reform Act of 1996, as ordered reported by the House Committee on the Budget on June 18, 1996.

Even though the proposed work requirements would be more stringent than those in current law, the additional requirements would not constitute a mandate because states would have the flexibility to offset the cost of the requirement by reducing their own financial or programmatic responsibilities. Public Law 104-4 defines a federal intergovernmental mandate, in part, as:

“* * * any provision in legislation, statute, or regulation that relates to a then-existing Federal program under which $500,000,000 or more is provided annually to State, local, and tribal governments under entitlement authority, if the provision—

“(i)(I) would increase the stringency of conditions of assistance to State, local, or tribal governments under that program; or

“(II) would place caps upon, or otherwise decrease, the Federal Government’s responsibility to provide funding to State, local, or tribal governments under the program; and

“(ii) the State, local, or tribal governments that participate in the Federal program lack authority under the program to amend their financial or programmatic responsibilities to continue providing required services that are affected by the legislation, statute, or regulation.”

Under the program titled Temporary Assistance to Needy Families, states would have the flexibility to determine who is eligible for assistance and the size of the benefit. Therefore, the bill would not require states to devote additional funds to assistance for needy families. States would have the flexibility to offset the cost of the work requirements by tightening eligibility for assistance to needy families or by reducing the size of the benefit.

If you wish further details on this analysis, we will be pleased to provide them. The staff contact is John Patterson who can be reached at 225-3220.

Sincerely,

JAMES T. BLUM

(For June E. O’Neill, Director.)

Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY], distinguished Republican whip.

Mr. DELAY. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to this substitute offered by my good friends, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE]. I thought they worked very hard on this substitute. To me, this substitute is one last desperate attempt by the minority to cling to the status quo.

They are making an argument about unfunded mandates, yet they still do not understand the concept of block grants and flexibility given to the States to make decisions based upon where the money will be spent among these programs. Our children cannot afford this status quo.

I ask my colleagues this question: Is it right to preserve a system that has ruined opportunities, destroyed hope, and hurt generations of our Nation’s children?

I say to my colleagues that the current system is tough on children, weak on work, and easy on deadbeat dads. It is this system that I think the minority has fought so fiercely to expand and protect.

This substitute does not go far enough to change the current system. It has loopholes that make any time limits worthless.

It still allows people who will have been on welfare for 5 years to continue to receive benefits. It puts the States in a straitjacket, giving them very little freedom to design their own reform programs. In fact, this substitute gives Secretary Shalala veto power over State welfare plans.

Madam Chairman, I just urge my colleagues to vote for real reform, defeat the Tanner substitute and let the American people know that the status quo is just not good enough.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, one could categorize our bill as a lot of things, but status quo it is not.

Madam Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLEMENT].

(Mr. CLEMENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLEMENT. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of Tanner-Castle. It is a good piece of legislation.

Let me tell you about Charles Davis, a former NBA basketball star who grew up in south Nashville on welfare. By utilizing his athletic skill, he was able to receive a scholarship to college and eventually play for the Chicago Bulls.

While he may be best known as a basketball great, he remains most admired in our community for his dedication to helping the disadvantaged. After years in the spotlight from his basketball achievements, he never forgot those less fortunate than himself, and he established the Charles Davis Foundation to provide funds that help individuals who are on welfare. He never forgot these people, because he knew firsthand what it was like to grow up on welfare.

As a Congress, we to cannot forget these individuals. We can no longer delay welfare reform and we must enact a tough, balanced proposal while striving to preserve the basic guarantees of assistance to the disadvantaged. Reflecting the principles of work, family, and responsibility, I feel that the Castle-Tanner welfare reform bill achieves this effect.

It is the Castle-Tanner substitute that requires work while providing the necessary support to make it a reality. We cannot forget the mothers trying to compete for jobs that provide real routes out of poverty but who find it extremely difficult to get the education or training they need. We cannot forget the value of good nutrition and health for the millions of children, working families, and the elderly on welfare.

I will support the Castle-Tanner substitute that guarantees protections for children and moves able welfare recipients to work. We must follow Charles Davis’ example and not forget the individuals on welfare. The Castle-Tanner substitute is welfare reform that we can all support.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Missouri [Ms. MCCARTHY].

Ms. MCCARTHY. Madam Chairman, I rise as a cosponsor of the Castle-Tanner proposal and in strong support of this substitute. Castle-Tanner is a fiscally responsible, bipartisan approach to putting people to work and protecting our children. It is encouraging to see that the House leadership has made changes in their bill attempting to move toward the Castle-Tanner substitute; however, many substantive differences still remain.

This proposal will give States the tools they need to achieve genuine welfare reform. Adequate funding is essential to a successful welfare reform and the Castle-Tanner substitute provides the resources for States to meet the participation rates required in their work programs. It will require a more reasonable State maintenance of effort, while still rewarding States that exceed their work participation rates. In times of economic downturn, it will ensure additional contingency funds for States to meet the increased demands.

The bipartisan alternative protects children. It requires States to provide vouchers for the needs of children in families removed from welfare rolls as a result of State imposed time limits less than 5 years, and it gives States the option of offering vouchers for children who leave welfare after the 5-year time limit. Castle-Tanner also protects legal immigrant children by exempting them from the ban on food stamps and SSI. The substitute contains strong child support enforcement provisions to ensure that parents take responsibility for their children. In addition, the Castle-Tanner substitute protects the nutritional safety net by maintaining the entitlement in the Food Stamps Program.

The Castle-Tanner substitute moves more people from welfare to work. The substitute establishes reasonable work participation requirements and guarantees States the resources needed to meet those requirements rather than another unfunded Federal mandate.

So that families working their way out of poverty will be able to put food on the table.

According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, under the majority’s welfare reform bill, households in Missouri could experience a decrease in food stamp benefits of $301 in 1998 and as much as $435 in the year 2000. When families are struggling to free themselves from poverty, punitive reductions in food stamp benefits make that job more difficult. The Castle-Tanner substitute ensures that families working their way out of poverty will be able to put food on the table.

As a State Legislator in Missouri, I worked diligently to reform the welfare system in my home State and implement reforms similar to provisions contained in the Castle-Tanner proposal. Our plan requires self-sufficiency pacts, similar to the personal responsibility contracts in this substitute, and we impose time based on these pacts.

We established successful State initiatives such as the Futures Program, which moves individuals with long-term dependency from welfare to work, and the Local Investment Commission [LINC] to encourage local businesses to put recipients to work a sustainable wage. One Futures participant, Scotti has two children and was on the verge of being homeless when she entered the program. She was able to find housing, enroll in computer training classes, and find employment in 10 months. Scotti, along with the other Futures participants were able to reach their goal of self-sufficiency by utilizing the support of Food Stamps and other public assistance programs.

All of the Missouri participants were willing to take risks to change the direction of their life by being confident their children's basic needs of food and nutrition and health care would not be jeopardized. These programs have been instrumental in assisting individuals to leave welfare and become productive taxpayers, and the Castle-Tanner substitute will give each State the opportunity to make reforms and experience similar success.

The Castle-Tanner substitute is a fiscally responsible approach to welfare reform that will move people from welfare to work, encourage responsibility, and protect children. This substitute is supported by a bipartisan group in Congress and is a bill that the President can sign. I urge my colleagues to support the Castle-Tanner substitute.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

(Mrs. ROUKEMA asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Tanner-Castle alternative to the underlying welfare reform package contained in H.R. 3734.

I want to be very clear that I have been in the forefront of welfare reform that can be correctly characterized as "tough love" and I also support the block grant approach. The flexibility of block grants is meritorious as long as we preserve the maintenance of effort standards, protect the safety net with a rainy day fund and the food stamp program. I support block grants, in other words, does not become a blank check for the Governors. Tanner-Castle will not open the possibility that innocent children will go hungry and homeless.

I was quite distressed to learn, late last night, that the welfare reform package we are debating today contains changes to the food stamp program that undermine the food stamp program, and in doing so move our country in exactly the wrong direction—away from maintaining a true safety net for those truly in need, especially innocent children.

This welfare reform package—as opposed to our prior Republican plans—gives the States, and their Governors, newfound discretion over the food stamp program, which I readily suspect will be used in an attempt to block grant food stamps.

Block granting food stamps was subject to extensive debate and analysis last year, and ultimately this Congress correctly rejected this notion.

It is my strongly held position that block grants for food stamps was intentionally rejected because it represents beginning of the end of the food stamp program as a safety net for families with children in need.

Allowing Governors to block grant food stamps is a loophole that deeply concerns me and many others who have worked so hard to ensure that these programs help those who need it because they cannot help themselves.

Throughout all of the debate in recent years over how best to implement welfare reform, I have repeatedly made clear that I simply will not support any legislation that results in innocent children going hungry or homeless.

In my view, the Tanner-Castle alternative meets this test, while the underlying bill does not.

After reviewing both plans last night, I have concluded that Tanner-Castle does not erode our Nation's commitment to provide a safety net for those among us who cannot provide for themselves.

For example, the underlying bill calls for $23 billion in food stamp savings, while the Tanner-Castle amendment calls for $20 billion in savings.

Unfortunately, the underlying bill calls for food stamp benefits to be terminated if a welfare recipient does not find work within 4 months, regardless of the circumstances. Under this policy, what happens to the innocent children in this family?

Thankfully, the Tanner-Castle amendment stipulates food stamp assistance cannot be denied to someone on welfare who can't find work because jobs aren't available—this is exactly the kind of protections that will ensure our Nation's safety net remains in place in order to protect children and ensure that they don't go hungry through no fault of their own.

I agree with today's New York Times editorial which voiced its clear support for the alternative plan by saying that Tanner-Castle "preserves a federally-guaranteed food stamp program," in addition to the editorial in today's Washington Post which said endorsed Tanner-Castle saying it will "preserve the income floor [provided by food stamp benefits] and reduce the severity of the cuts" proposed by the underlying bill.

Finally, this legislation allows States to use vouchers—instead of cash benefits—to pay for certain services needed by welfare recipients if a State has terminated cash benefits as part of its sanction program.

This is a large step in the right direction, because even if a welfare recipient is playing by all of the rules and has not found a job when the time limits become effective, the use of vouchers for services plays an important role in helping the family and its children keep their head above the waterline.

Although last night I indicated my support for the underlying legislation, I have withdrawn my support for this plan because I believe that the Tanner-Castle alternative is a more equitable, balanced approach to welfare reform.

Last April, I supported the initial House version of welfare reform legislation with some reservations. I was very pleased to see subsequently that the conference committee report on H.R. 4 last November included many significant improvements from the Senate-passed bill, which have properly been retained in the legislation before us now.

I might add that, at that time, I stressed and received explicit assurances from our House Agriculture Committee that food stamps would not be clock granted.

There should be no question that we must enact strong welfare reform legislation this year. The American people are correctly demanding that we restore the notion of individual responsibility and self-reliance to a system that has run amok over the past 20 years.

Although I have strongly supported some welfare reforms that have been described as tough love measures for several years now, I want to reiterate that my goal has always been to require self-reliance and responsibility, while ensuring that innocent children do not go hungry and homeless as a result of any Federal action—the Tanner-Castle plan meets that test, too.

Let me also be clear about the need for more flexibility for the States—I support giving Governors and State legislatures more freedom to design a welfare program that meets the needs of their people. However, the notion of block grants giving States more freedom and flexibility to better design programs for their local areas does not meet that the Federal Government gives the States a blank check for which they are not held accountable.

For example, I believe that block grants must still require so-called maintenance of effort requirements on States in order to ensure that the safety net of our Nation is maintained, and that States don't simply fund welfare programs with only Federal funds.

It is primarily for these reasons that I cannot support the underlying legislation, and must instead vote for the Tanner-Castle alternative.

First, this bill requires welfare recipients to work—a big step in the right direction.

Second, this bill places time limits on welfare benefits—no longer will people be allowed to live their lives on welfare.

Third, this bill keeps the family cap in place, which means that mothers on welfare don't get extra cash benefits for having babies.

In other words, the United States will no longer be the only nation in the Western World that pays young girls to have babies.

New Jersey already has this policy in place, and I am pleased to see that H.R. 3734 retains this worthwhile reform—I should mention that the New Jersey family cap law was sponsored by a Democratic State legislator, and gained strong bipartisan support and was ultimately signed into law by a Democratic Governor.

Fourth, this bill has a strong and effective child support enforcement reform title, which is something that I have worked on here in Congress for more than 10 years.

As I have long maintained, strong child support enforcement reforms must be an essential component of any true welfare reform plan, because improved child support enforcement is welfare prevention: one of primary reasons that so many mothers with children land on welfare rolls is that they are not receiving the child support payments they are legally and morally owed.

Failure to pay court-ordered child support is not a victimless crime. The children going with these payments are the first victims. But, the taxpayers who have to pick up the tab for deadbeat parents evading their obligations are the ultimate victims.

The core of these child support enforcement reforms is the absolute requirement for interstate enforcement of child support, because the current, State-based system is only as good as its weakest link.

Specifically, I want to note that the Roukema amendment on license revocation, which the House overwhelmingly approved last April 426 to 5, has been included in this bill. It requires States to implement a license revocation program for deadbeat parents who have driver's licenses, professional licenses, occupational licenses, or recreational licenses.

This reform has worked very well in 19 States—the State of Maine, in particular, has been a leader—that already have it in place, and if license revocation is implemented nationwide I am convinced it will work even more successfully.

Earlier today, I asked the Rules Committee to include a second child support enforcement proposal—a requirement that States enact criminal penalties of their own design for willful nonsupport of children—as part of the manager's amendment to H.R. 3734. I hope that the Rules Committee will do the right thing, and include this tough reform in the legislation we will vote on tomorrow.

Fifth, I believe that the legislation's reforms for nutrition programs represents significant progress in maintaining the safety net for those in our society who are unable to provide for themselves.

During both Opportunities Committee markup and floor debate on welfare reform last year, I repeatedly attempted to protect the current safety net for school lunches so that, during times of recession, when more families move toward or beyond the poverty level and become eligible to participate in the School Lunch Program, additional money would be available to provide nutrition services.

Thankfully, the Senate saved the House from itself with its decision to preserve the current Federal safety net for school lunches, and H.R. 3734 follows the Senate position on this issue, which I wholeheartedly support.

I have always preferred to see the School Lunch Program completely maintained at the Federal level, and this legislation correctly does just that.

I am also extremely pleased that the welfare reform package before us does not block grant nutrition services for WIC, the nutrition program serving low-income, postpartum women with children and infants.

Finally, I am gratified to see that this bill incorporates a rainy day fund for those States that suffer a recession or economic downturn.

Last year, I repeatedly advocated that this kind of provision be included in any kind of welfare reform package that contains block grants in order to ensure that those who truly depend on our safety net programs can continue to rely on them during times of economic distress.

Earlier this spring, the National Governors Association called upon the Congress to put $2 billion of funding into the rainy day fund, and this legislation meets that goal—I enthusiastically support this provision.

We have been so close to passing meaningful welfare reform for so long. Let us today finally move that process forward one more step by passing this comprehensive welfare reform bill.

This is the bill. This is the time. The people of America should not have to wait any longer. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important package.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE].

Mr. HOKE. Madam Chairman, what mean-spirited right winger said the following:

The lessons of history, confirmed by the evidence immediately before me, show conclusively that continued dependence upon relief induces a spiritual disintegration, fundamentally destructive to the national fiber. To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit. It is in violation of the traditions of America. The Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief?

We heard the gentleman from Utah quote CBO. I am quoting another well known, much better known three-letter icon in American history, FDR, who made it very clear, the Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief because the lessons of history make clear that to administer it is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit.

I rise in opposition to this amendment and in support of the underlying bill. The reason that I do is because there is a fundamental difference that I want to highlight. It is the fundamental difference between allowing non-citizens to have access to our welfare safety net and not. The Castle-Tanner bill makes it very clear that non-citizens will have greater access to the welfare system; certainly, much more access than under the underlying bill.

What happens under the welfare reform bill that we are going to vote on later today is we completely eliminate welfare benefits to noncitizens except for emergency medical treatment and some other exceptions for elderly people.

The fact is that we have got to, if we are going to fix the immigration, illegal immigration problem, and even legal immigration problem, if we are going to fix that and if we are going to have those people coming to America because they want to be in America, because they want to give to America, not take from America, then we have to eliminate the welfare magnet that we have created here.

The real solution to the immigration problem lies in eliminating and changing the way that we dole out relief, dole out welfare to anyone who is in this country, whether legally or illegally, citizen, or noncitizen. That is a fundamental problem.

We have a certain responsibility with respect to safety nets to citizens of the United States of America. That responsibility does not extend to noncitizens. If we are to, in fact, as a compassionate nation that is able to take care of its own who are falling through the cracks, if we are to be able to do that in a proper way, then we must eliminate the welfare that goes to noncitizens.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, in response, I would simply say we have a modest exemption in our plan for kids and people who are legally in this country working and paying taxes.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROEMER].

Mr. ROEMER. Madam Chairman, this bill, Castle-Tanner, reflects common sense because it is produced on common ground. How refreshing, Madam Chairman, to see Democrats and Republicans working together and trying to fix the welfare system that all Americans want us to fix.

I compliment the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] for bringing us together, and I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation.

This is how the system is supposed to work.

Now, why will this bill work? Welfare reform will create work, it makes people work because it gives people work because it gives people the skills to work.

This bill protects children with child care, it protects children with foster care, and it cares about making sure that people work. Way too many people get on to welfare and then too quickly go off to welfare and come right back on again. Figures indicate that it might be from 50 from 60 percent of people are on welfare for a year and then get off and then come back on. We want to make sure we put a bill together to keep them off of welfare.

This bill puts $3 billion extra into the worker training programs. It provides the States with the needed flexibility so that Indiana can do some things differently from California in order to do and make people work. It also saves, Madam Chairman, $53 billion for the taxpayer.

So it puts people to work, and it still saves money.

Finally, in our State, in Indiana, the worker training programs are working if we put money into them and they are getting people off of welfare. We have had an impact program in Indiana which as seen a job placement increase of 162 percent and a 26 percent decrease in AFDC caseloads.

So I would encourage our Members to vote for a bipartisan bill that puts people to work and gives them the skills to work.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Washington [Ms. DUNN], a Member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Ms. DUNN of Washington. Madam Chairman, I commend all the people who have been active in this debate on welfare. It has been a tough long haul. We have produced two very good bills, sent them to the President. He has vetoed both of them. We are working now to put together a bill that he will sign, and I certainly understand and appreciate the concern and the compassion of all the folks who have been involved.

I like this alternative bill, but I simply believe that our original welfare bill is far better balanced and has looked at every issue with a better eye. There are three areas where I am a bit concerned, Madam Chairman, about the lay of the land on the substitute bill.

First of all, it reduces earned income tax credit payments to low-income families by over $3 billion over our original bill. I am concerned about that. I think that we have been far more careful in revising the EITC and that this cuts it too much for working families.

Second, this substitute continues welfare after 5 years. There needs to be an end to welfare. Sixty months is enough in most cases, and as we continue food stamps and as we continue Medicaid, I believe 5 years is enough and that the voucher system is not a good part of the substitute bill.

Madam Chairman, Americans are generous people. We have opened our arms to people from all over the world as long as they come to this Nation realizing it is a Nation of opportunity, not a Nation where we lean on the Government. We have in our original bill tightened the sponsor agreements. I believe that it is very, very bad to provide welfare to able-bodied noncitizens. I urge a vote against this substitute.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would simply say that insofar as the EITC matter is concerned, once again we make no substantive change in the law. What we do is have savings scored because of compliance with the law.

Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAMER].

Mr. CRAMER. Madam Chairman, I thank my colleague from Tennessee for yielding this time to me, and I rise in strong support of the Tanner-Castle substitute here today, and I want to congratulate my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] as well as the entire Conservative Democratic Coalition, the Blue Dogs, as we are fondly known.

We have worked long and hard to make sure that we had an opportunity to get to this day when we could engage in some effective give and take, some effective dialog of this issue to make sure that we had the opportunity to see that the American people have this chance to see this worn-out, burned-out welfare system redesigned.

Now, this is not an easy thing to do, and I think that is why my colleagues need to pay attention. The Tanner-Castle substitute is the better way to go. When we look at the bottom line of what we are about to do, we need to do what is effective, not just window dress this issue. I am concerned about the States, where the States are coming from and what they will be able to do effectively when we pass part of this burden, a significant part of this burden, on to the States, and I think the Tanner-Castle is the reasonable approach to take.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] to find out how he saves $6 billion on EITC without affecting any benefits.

I mean I have been debating this as a straightforward bill, but I am wondering how in the world he saves that without affecting the benefits.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I am advised that we made no substantive changes, that we get scoring for that savings because we cut out waste, fraud and abuse and maintained compliance. For example, if one has a trust fund income of $50,000 and has a job that pays 12, one would not be able to claim the EITC because they have a $12,000 income because we count the $50,000 unearned that they received from a trust fund.

So, as we score that, we are entitled to savings, and they have been so stated.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I would simply say to the gentleman that those same provisions are in our bill, and we certainly do not save any $6 billion.

Madam Chairman, I yield to the 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TALENT].

Mr. TALENT. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Madam Chairman, I have 1½ minutes; let me get right to the point.

I appreciate very much the tone of the debate to this point, but I think the reason we ought to oppose the Democratic substitute is that it is much weaker on work than the underlying bill. It is better than the ones they have offered in the past, but it is much weaker on work. In fact, that is one of the things trumpeted as a virtue of it. We have heard that the Governors like that bill. Of course, they like that bill. They do not have to do very much under that bill, particularly in the earlier years. That is what they want, freedom and more money and not to have to do very much, particularly with regard to work requirements, and that is what the Democratic substitute does.

First, on face value, in terms of the face work participation requirements, the main bill is stronger than the substitute. But we have to look beyond face value when we look at work requirements.

Madam Chairman, at any given time, if we take a snapshot of the welfare caseload at any given time, there are people coming on and people going off. Naturally, without doing anything, people are leaving the welfare caseload, but others are coming on, and historically it has been growing, and we have been paying more and more money. The substitute would count people who leave naturally from the caseload towards meeting the work participation requirements. That is like a 10-percent bonus every year. What it would mean is that in order to meet the work requirements in the first year the Governors would have to do very little. They have to get another 4 percent of the caseload working.

That is the reason that they like it.

What we have heard basically is that this bill has to be reasonable, it has to be effective. Of course, it has to be effective. This system is terrible. Why are we arguing that we should be moderate in approaching it? If we are going to get substantial change, we have to have a bill that achieves substantial change and enforces that in the States. Vote for the main bill and vote against the substitute measure.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield a minute and a half to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. THURMAN].

Mrs. THURMAN. Madam Chairman, I too would like to take this time to congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] and, I might add, Mr. CASTLE, being a former Governor, I think lends some respectability to the issues that we are speaking about today.

I, too, am an original cosponsor of the Castle-Tanner because I think it does give us real reform and real responsibility. We demand responsibility not only from welfare recipients, but from the Federal Government and the States who are our partners in this system. We require work and hold beneficiaries responsible for their actions, but we do not make these demands and then not live up to our end of the bargain.

Our commitment requires adequate funding levels for the work requirements in the bill. Castle-Tanner meets this need. The majority bill does not.

Our commitment requires that we have a plan in the event of a national or regional rescission. We have seen that in this country. Castle-Tanner has a real contingency fund to meet this need. The majority bill has an underfunded contingency fund with unrealistic limits on a State's access to the fund.

In the Castle-Tanner we are more realistic. If there is no job, one cannot lose something as basic as food stamps.

We also provide better protections for children. Children must not be made to suffer for their parents' action. We allow vouchers so that families who reach that time limit on welfare can still care for the very basic needs of their children. The majority's bill prohibits the use of Federal funds to help children once their families have met the time limit.

These are both tough bills and reform bills. We are just as strict on fraud and abuse as the majority's bill. But the fact is the Castle-Tanner treats people fairly withholding them, and we save $53 billion as well.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

(Mr. LEVIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN. Madam Chairman, let me respond briefly to a couple of points. First of all, on time limits.

The time limits remain in Tanner-Castle. There are exceptions in both bills. They have a 20-percent exemption allowed to the States. Castle-Tanner has a similar provision. The question is whether the States should have the flexibility to use Federal funds for vouchers for kids because of the time limit. They say "no." They say they are for flexibility, but if the States want to use Federal funds not for cash benefits but to help kids, they say "no." Castle-Tanner is much better in that respect.

EITC, I want to reiterate, we do not touch the rates. They tried to in their original bill. We scared them off it. We do not change the basic EITC. We get savings through compliance efforts, basically leaving the structure as it is, and it is so ironic they would come here after trying to take 15, 20 billion from EITC, from working families, and all of a sudden they are defending them.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. I mean the gentleman has been asking us to work with him in a bipartisan way, we come toward his position, and he says they scared us off of it. Come on. Let us lighten up.

Mr. LEVIN. All right, look. They agreed with us finally. All right, they can call it what they want. We hit them hard, and they finally said "OK," as they did on a lot of other things where they were weak on work and hard on kids. They have moved our way. They simply have to come further.

Now I want to talk about States getting people off welfare into work, which is so critical. CBO says, "You do not have money to help States get people off welfare to work." That is the key.

Now they say there is an authorization now. They have given this to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE]. The rumors are they will take it back in a conference. I hope those rumors are wrong. But I do not care, because it is only an authorization.

What Tanner-Castle says is we are serious about welfare to work. We are tough on that and we are going to provide the States the moneys to do it. They provide zero, and CBO says they are between $9 and $12 billion short.

If my colleagues want a bill that is tough on work, getting people off welfare to work, and does not hurt kids, Castle-Tanner is much closer to the mark, and they are further away. Vote for the Tanner-Castle bill. Vote for it, and then against the Republican bill. I hope the Tanner-Castle bill will pass. It is the only bipartisan effort so far. We need to keep that bipartisan spirit going.

□ 1500

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FRANKS], a distinguished member of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRANKS of Connecticut. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Chairman, as we argue and continue to delay the passage of real welfare reform, more families are getting trapped or continue to be trapped in a system that, to me, is like the slavery system we had years ago. It is the 20th century version of slavery. We, the Government, will provide food and shelter but little hope of real change.

There are differences, however. Slaves were black. Most welfare recipients are white. Slaves worked but were not paid. Welfare recipients do not work but they are paid. The Republican bill will take a major step removing the shackles of Government dependency.

As we have argued and delayed passage of welfare reform over the years, more fathers have not been getting identified so they can be forced to take care of their own children. The growth of the single-parent household in the black community will hit 80 percent and in the white community 40 percent by the year 2000 if we continue to do nothing.

Compassion. It has been proven that these youngsters are more likely to get lower grades, more likely to be involved in crime, and more likely to fall victim of our welfare state. Compassion will be demonstrated when we change this slide downward.

As we have argued and delayed passage of welfare reform over the years, more young ladies have been getting more money for having more babies. How wrong.

As we have argued and delayed passage of welfare reform over the years, more drugs have been bought with taxpayers' dollars. Studies have shown that 25 percent of welfare recipients are drug abusers. So where are they getting the money? They are getting the money from you, the taxpayer.

The Republican bill will encourage the adoption of a debit card electronic benefits transfer system and will move us towards eliminating cash in our current welfare system.

Madam Chairman, it is like Nero during the Roman Empire. We fiddle while our welfare state continues to destroy lives. In 1992 Mr. Clinton promised that he would end welfare as we know it, and he has failed to do so. The President has vetoed two bills. He has failed to present his own bill, and he expressed support for the Wisconsin bill and a Senate bill, but failed to sign on to either one of them. The record of the Democratic-controlled Congress would be no better. In my first 4 years in Congress we never even voted on a welfare reform bill.

Madam Chairman, it took Abraham Lincoln, a Republican, to end slavery. I am becoming more and more convinced that it will take a Republican-controlled Congress and a Republican President to end welfare as we know it. I strongly support the Republican plan and I would strongly suggest opposition to the substitute.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his previous remarks, and would point out that our bill contains the electronic transfer provisions as well.

Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

(Mr. STENHOLM asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, let me first begin by commending my colleagues, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE], for the tireless work they have put in on this issue, and also to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], for his very constructive handling of this bill. With the lone exception of the rhetoric on EITC, I have appreciated the gentleman's approach and attitude toward the development on this issue.

To set the record straight one more time, I simply want to reiterate that Castle-Tanner ensures that scarce EITC dollars go to the working poor who need it, not to the individuals with substantial business income who do not need it. And I suspect the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] would like to see the same provision in his bill today.

Also, I do not see my friend and colleague, the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture on the floor, but I find it very, very interesting that he would be complaining about the fact that our bill attempts to maintain indexation of housing benefits for the very poor, those who have to spend over 50 percent of their income for housing; and at the same time the majority will have next week on the floor a bill dealing with campaign reform in which they will say indexation of those who would contribute to us is OK but those who would index those of the very poorest among us is bad. I find it very, very interesting.

Madam Chairman, I want to take a couple of minutes and try to make it as plain and simple why I support Castle-Tanner versus the base bill. I want to do it in a way that is perfectly understandable.

First is the matter of political practicality. I am weary of political posturing, and we have heard it from a few today over and over, language that is intended more for campaign platforms than for realistic problem-solving. The Castle-Tanner proposal was developed to try to break that partisan stalemate on this issue and reach a consensus on welfare reform that can be signed into law. Our proposal is a true compromise, as evidenced by the fact 26 Democrats and 16 Republicans have cosponsored the legislation.

The principles and policies of this substitute can be supported by both parties in both bodies of Congress. The bill can be signed into law by the President. The base bill cannot.

Second is the matter of unfunded mandates. One of the first pieces of legislation passed by the 104th Congress was a resolution ensuring that the Federal Government pay the cost incurred by State and local governments in complying with Federal statutes and regulations.

The work mandate placed on the States in the base bill is not matched by financial support necessary to meet the mandate. CBO says so, the National Governors Association says so, and in addition to the unfunded work mandate, there is also an unfunded mandate on health care providers that will result from Medicaid changes for current welfare recipients.

So, $7 billion in Medicaid will no longer be available for those recipients, and yet health care providers in our States will still be morally if not legally obligated to provide care for these people. Castle-Tanner does not have unfunded mandates. The base bill does, as ascertained by CBO.

Third is the matter of how our Nation treats its children. Tanner-Castle is much stronger than the Republican bill in protecting children, all children.

This substitute requires States to provide vouchers for the needs of the child for families removed from welfare rolls as a result of a time limit of less than 5 years, and gives States the option of providing vouchers for families cut off as a result of the 5-year time limit. The base bill explicitly prohibits States from using block grant funds to protect innocent children from being harmed because of the mistakes of their parents.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for the bipartisan, bicameral, commonsense, achievable, enforceable Castle-Tanner substitute, and against the final passage of the base bill in its current form.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. McCRERY], a most valuable member of the Committee on Ways and Means who was very instrumental in crafting the bill before us.

Mr. McCRERY. Madam Chairman, I have a lot of things to talk about.

First of all, the issue of unfunded mandates. I have in my hand here a letter from the CBO that my dear friend, the gentleman from Texas, kept referring to, in which the CBO states clearly:

The work requirements contained in the portion of H.R. 3734 titled "Temporary Assistance for Needy Families" do not constitute an intergovernmental mandate, as defined under the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act of 1995.

So I hope that will put that to rest once and for all.

The issue of earned income tax credit. We received not too long ago a letter from the President in which he said, in listing his objections to our bill, the underlying bill on the floor today, the bill would still raise taxes on millions of working families by cutting the earned income tax credit.

Madam Chairman, in trying to satisfy the objections of the President, we took that out of our bill. We do not raise taxes any more, using the President's terminology, on working families by cutting the EITC, but the substitute we are about to vote on does. It does. They do lower the threshold for disqualified income under the EITC in their substitute. They do add additional sources of income to disqualified income under the EITC. Also, they add additional income to the definition of adjusted gross income, which affects the level of the EITC.

So we can talk around it all we want, but the fact is the substitute on the floor cuts the EITC by $3 billion in real money to real people. Do not get me wrong, I agree with the cuts. I think they are good.

Madam Chairman, I think it is good, our EITC changes. I wish we had more of them. We took them out, trying to satisfy the objections of Democrats and the President. Members ought not to say they do not have those cuts in there, because they do.

I think the Castle-Tanner substitute is a good bill. It is far superior to the present welfare system. The base bill, though, is a little better, so I hope people will vote against the substitute and for the underlying bill.

Medicaid, I heard my good friend, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE], talking about how the substitute is better on Medicaid. Again, we have made a change in our bill to satisfy the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] and the President. Our provision is exactly the same as the Castle-Tanner substitute, maintenance of effort. They have 85 percent, we have 80 percent. My goodness, an 80 percent maintenance of effort requirement is a tough requirement.

Vouchers. Our bill provides for a 20-percent hardship exemption at the option of the States. Twenty percent of their entire caseload can be exempted from the 5-year time limit. That is a very generous exemption. You do not need vouchers and you ought not to have them. You ought to have a strict time limit with an exemption for hardship cases. That is what we do in this bill.

Food stamps, there are very strict requirements in the base bill for block grants. CBO estimates very few States will qualify.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I would state again for the record, we do not do anything with the EITC substantively.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO of California. Madam Chairman, we have heard a lot of talk about work requirements and where they really exist and where they are merely a sham. I argue that the Castle-Tanner bill really does the job of providing the States with the necessary funding to put welfare recipients to work.

The Republican leadership bill, as drafted, falls $12.9 billion short of the funding necessary to put people to work. The CBO, which is headed by a person appointed by the Republican leadership, has done a study. I refer Members to this chart, because CBO confirms that work requirements under this bill, the Republican leadership bill, are empty promises.

CBO concludes that most States would fail to meet the work requirements. They assume most States would simply accept penalties rather than implement the work requirements. In other words, the Republican bill places such a tremendous unfunded mandate on States that they would not even try to comply with the requirements to put welfare recipients to work.

Castle-Tanner provides States with the flexibility to design work programs that are appropriate for their local communities. In fact, the Republican leadership bill rejects the recommendations of the National Governors Association for State flexibility. This is an organization made up, obviously, of many, many Republican Governors, a majority of them. The NGA unanimously adopted a resolution stating:

"We are concerned that the Republican leadership bill restricts State flexibility and will create additional unfunded costs."

So unless the States are given the flexibility to design work programs and given the resources to implement those programs, as the Tanner-Castle bill does, rhetoric about tough work requirements is either an empty promise, as CBO would maintain, or the greatest unfunded mandate in history; this, of course, in the Congress of devolution.

So really, who has the sham work requirement? It is obviously the Republican leadership bill. The bipartisan Castle-Tanner bill is the only one that really puts people to work.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. HARMAN].

(Ms. HARMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. HARMAN. Madam Chairman, I commend the gentleman for his leadership in this important subject.

Madam Chairman, the Castle-Tanner bipartisan welfare reform bill is smart, fair, and comprehensive. It gives States both flexibility and the resources necessary for welfare-to-work programs, even in times of economic downturns. It is also fair to children whose parents are denied cash benefits. I urge my colleagues in the strongest terms to support it.

But if the House will not endorse this plan, in my view we cannot delay any longer enacting welfare reform. I have twice before voted against proposals which went too far and hurt children. I have many concerns about the underlying welfare reform plan. I would like to see Congress increase resources for moving people into the work force, less dramatic cuts in the eligibility of legal immigrants for some programs, and vouchers for children whose parents are ineligible for cash benefits.

But the underlying bill includes significant improvements over the bills the President vetoed. It provides an additional $4 billion for child care, removes the earlier bill's spending caps on food stamps, and increases the minimum required spending by States to 80 percent of fiscal 1994 levels.

I also believe the Senate will continue to improve the bill.

Madam Chairman, we must act now to move welfare reform forward. I urge my colleagues to vote for the Castle-Tanner amendment and to support final passage of welfare reform today.

Mr. TANNER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Madam Chairman, I want to thank again, as I said at the outset, the cosponsors of this legislation. Particularly it has been a pleasure working with the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] and his staff in trying to put together a truly bipartisan approach to what is an American crisis and will require an American solution.

The American solution to me means a bipartisan solution, one that both sides maybe cannot embrace in total but can accept.

That is really what we have tried to do, because we are honestly, sincerely, and for no other purpose, interested in changing and reforming a broken system. Everyone has spoken to that today, and that is the sole purpose for the countless hours that we have worked on this and brought it to this point.

We have tried to sail a partisan ship through this place twice this year, and it has not worked. What happens when we do that? We all fail; the White House fails, the Congress fails. It does not matter whether one is Democrat or Republican. We fail to deliver welfare reform to the American people when we insist on sailing this partisan ship through the Halls of this Congress.

Our bill does not do that. We have got 42 cosponsors, 26 Democrats and 16 Republicans. Our premise started when we sailed that ship of partisanship through here, and it became obvious to us that the Republican leadership and the White House had a gap. They were apart. So we got together and said, "Let's see what we can do to bridge the gap."

Our substitute is much like the base bill as the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE] said in his opening remarks. We impose time limits on welfare. We change the system. We require personal responsibility. We have tough work requirements. No one can say that we do not. We have provisions to combat illegitimacy, and two-parent families we encourage. We have tough child support measures and so on.

It is clear to anyone, I think, to be fair, who reads these measures that both of them dramatically reform the current system and end, hopefully, this destructive cycle of generational dependency.

So why should a Member vote for Castle-Tanner over the base bill? First of all, one of the speakers, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] said, we have a chance to pass and actually enact law, if we do, one that is close to the Republican bill in many respects but is better for kids.

We can pass this and actually make a law this year. We do not have to wait until next year. The President mentioned it in his radio address last Saturday morning. He has moved and said he would move to something like Castle-Tanner.

Second, we do a better job, we think, in providing the necessary structure, or infrastructure, to actually put people to work. That is the whole purpose of this bill, getting people off welfare, some say off the dole, into meaningful jobs, so that they will be role models for their kids and so on.

We are better, we think, on the State-Federal partnership theory. That really is what any social program like this ought to be under our system of government. We provide and we are better on the economic and necessary responsiveness to a downturn. And then, finally, it has been alluded to many times, we are really better for the kids.

I do not know anyone who is the most fervent supporter for welfare reform that thinks that treating a 4-year-old child like they are a 34-year-old person who will not work is a good idea. If we read the Republican underlying bill, that is what is happening. I hope Members will support this amendment.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Madam Chairman, I want to join my other colleagues in congratulating the chairman for the way that she has presided over this body today. She has brought us great dignity.

I would like to also speak to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER], my good friend, who I think has done a wonderful job. I think it is incredible that the name MIKE CASTLE, as a Republican Member, a most distinguished Republican Member, appears first on a bill that is being offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT]. My goodness, what in the world is this Chamber coming to?

But I think there are a few things we need to correct here. These are some of the characteristics that have been and some of the charges that have been laid toward H.R. 3734, the base bill that we are going to vote on this afternoon.

We hear speaker, after speaker who has gotten up and said how it is weak on work. For goodness sake, one of the last speakers gets down with a poster that says we are weak on work. Which is it, are we too weak on work or too strong on work? They say that the work requirements are not even obtainable. Come on, we cannot have it both ways.

At the request of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE], we also put in our bill, because he is concerned about, as a former Governor, whether or not the States are going to be able to meet these requirements. We provide that the States are going to report back to the Ways and Means and the Finance Committee in 3 years to take another look at these work standards to be sure that we have not made them too strong. That has been the concern that has been voiced here.

Let us put all the cliches aside, obviously the soundbite, weak on work, hard on kids. Come on. This is not the case. You know that, I know that. The dignity of this debate should bring us above that, and we should be talking in specifics. When we have honest disagreements as to what to do with non-citizens, I think we should face those. But I think it is also important to understand that in such matters as higher education, we allow noncitizens to continue to get Pell grants. We allow them, by the way, to sign a college loan by themselves. Castle-Tanner provides that the sponsor has to cosign that loan. We did not require that, because we do not consider higher education as welfare. That is part of the American dream. This is something that we desperately want to preserve.

I would tell my colleagues as members of this committee that, when we talk about harder on kids, sure, we do not provide for vouchers out of the Federal funds after 5 years. You might argue that that is hard on kids. I do not think so. We provide, however, that the States can provide 20 percent of the funding for their case load, of the Federal funds, to go beyond the 5-year work level. What does that mean? It means that, if they want to create with that 20 percent a voucher system, they can do it.

So there is virtually no difference in the two bills when you look at the practical application of what the States can do. But we set forth the national policy, and the national policy is that we are for now, and once and for all, going to time-limit the period of time someone can be on welfare. That is going to be the national policy.

We are going to also allow the States to craft their own bills. We are not going to continue to make welfare available to noncitizens. That is a very big difference of opinion that we have here in this hall, and I respect that difference of opinion.

But soon we are going to be taking a vote, I think, that is going to be most historic. When we talk about a bipartisan approach, I sincerely hope, and we have reached out to the Democrat side of the aisle in bringing Members in and talking to them. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] has said on the floor that he made us do it. Well, whether he made us do it or whether it is bipartisan, it happened, and it happened with the Democrats and Republicans coming together.

We are receptive to good ideas not only from the Republican side but from the Democrat side as well. Once the minority party is fulfilling its responsibility of criticizing legislation that is provided by the Republican side, they are fulfilling their requirement under the system in which we work. When we listen to you, we are working in a bipartisan way. We are not getting bullied into any position.

One thing I want to answer, too, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] said, talked about all the rumors that are around about how we are going to cut this and that out of the bill. I can say the rumors are starting from my colleague's side; they are not starting on our side. I do not intend to take any of those provisions out that my colleague has talked about as being rumored to come out in conference. I would hope that the other body would move swiftly and pass this bill, that we could conference it and get it to the President's desk.

I would also hope on final passage that many of the Democrats who feel strongly about welfare reform, as I do, and as the Republicans do and as the President has stated, that my colleague will join us and show support of welfare reform coming out of this body so that, when we put something on the President's desk, we can truly say this is a bipartisan effort, this has bipartisan support, because we have worked with many of you on the Democrat side.

My colleagues have had input into this bill. I would now earnestly ask them after the substitute, support H.R. 3734.

Mrs. MALONEY. Madam Chairman, the American people do not want to hurt kids.

The Republican bill is so removed from reality. It punishes children, penalties working families, and denies benefits to virtually all legal immigrant children.

The bill would worsen poverty and hunger for 9 million innocent children by making deep cuts in benefits, especially during economic downturns by limiting the contingency fund to only $2 billion.

The Castle-Tanner substitute has an uncapped contingency fund for use during these troubling times.

Working families, who play by the rules, will see their food stamp benefits cuts by as much as 19 percent.

When you completely eliminate the Federal guarantee, those of us who work in State and city legislatures know that, given the financial pressures, poor people often fall through the cracks.

The Castle-Tanner bill provides State vouchers for needed support for families.

But the Republican bill we're considering today would make a bad system much worse by allowing only State funds.

This Republican bill just tells defenseless children, tough luck.

This bill won't put people to work. According to the CBO, the bill is $10 billion short of what they need to carry out their work program.

It will put families with children out on the street.

It's a blueprint for disaster.

Say yes to welfare reform Castle-Tanner.

Say no to this cruel and senseless bill.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Madam Chairman, today is a landmark day in congressional history. Today we will pass needed welfare reform that will hopefully move our Nation's low-income citizens from passively accepting a welfare check to actively earning a paycheck.

Most of my colleagues in this Chamber would agree with me that the current welfare system needs to be changed. No one should get something for nothing, and if the American people are going to be generous with their tax dollars, they should get something in return.

Madam Chairman, the bipartisan Castle-Tanner substitute, of which I am an original cosponsor, provides responsible reform through three main goals: personal responsibility, State flexibility, and work.

Personnel responsibility: Under our plan, all recipients must work within 2 years of receiving benefits, and the proposal establishes a 5-year time limit on cash assistance. Also, our plan requires teenage mothers to stay in school and live with an adult to receive assistance, and it establishes a family cap halting benefits for additional children born to welfare recipients. In addition, the bipartisan Castle-Tanner substitute holds fathers responsible for their children through strong child support enforcement.

State flexibility: Our plan provides States with the flexibility to design innovative welfare reform proposals within broad Federal guidelines. States can develop successful work programs that reflect the needs of their local communities, and States can deny cash assistance to teenage mothers. In addition Castle-Tanner gives States the option of providing vouchers for children or noncash emergency assistance to families and have lost cash assistance as a result of a time limit.

Work: Unlike the Republican proposal before us today, our substitute provides the amount of funding that the Congressional Budget Office has stated is necessary to fund the work programs, thereby ensuring no unfunded mandates for our States. Our bipartisan proposal provides $4.5 billion more than the Republican measure for child care assistance to families that leave welfare for work and need child care help in order to remain employed and stay off the welfare rolls.

But most importantly, Madam Chairman, if my colleagues want to pass welfare reform that has the best chance of being signed into law, then I encourage support of the bipartisan Castle-Tanner substitute. It is the only proposal that the President has promised to sign.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Madam Chairman, there is an old saying "the poor will be with us always." And another that "a person never stands so tall as when he or she bends to help a child." When a child is poor, that child is at greater risk of being undernourished and undereducated. My constituents in the Seventh District of Illinois are among the richest and the poorest of the Nation. I am told that I am the longest serving African-American female Member in the history of the United States House of Representatives, and as such, I have for 23 years fought strong and sometimes bitter battles for the benefit of the vulnerable, the disenfranchised, the young, old, disabled, and poor. That is what I hope to be remembered for when I retire from this body at the end of the year.

So, I rise today with some reservations about the Tanner-Castle substitute welfare reform measure which really is a compromise for me. I do not like the idea of block granting welfare benefits, but with sufficient Federal criteria and oversight, perhaps they can work. If so, they will be the wave of the future.

This substitute requires States to enter into personal responsibility plans with parents who seek to receive this public assistance. As long as this is a two way street, spelling out what the States' responsibilities are as well as those of the parents' it could possibly financially protect the families. The States have asked for block grants and will be called upon to demonstrate that they can act responsibly to all vulnerable populations in a nondiscriminatory manner. My fear and recollection of contemporary history is that many of them will not.

The Tanner-Castle substitute also incorporates time limits as a widely accepted way to provide measurements toward performance for both the family receiving public assistance and the State in providing sufficient training, guidance and support—both personal and monetary.

A requirement of work is not unreasonable if the person has the skills to get and perform a meaningful job. Thus, with that requirement for work by the parent—and let's get it clear about whom we're talking: this welfare reform is for parents—the State has a comparable responsibility to provide that parent with the tools and means to perform and succeed in a job that pays a living wage.

I consider a living wage to include the ability to pay the family's bills: the rent, food, clothing, transportation, medical care, and child care. Without that ability, no parent now benefiting from AFDC should be made to take a job when there is no means of providing health care for a sick child, or which would provide insufficient food for their bellies. Let's stop making parents look like the bad guys in this debate.

A special problem has arisen because of the large number of teenage parents who are, for the most part single, and have not completed their education—and many will not. They, too, need to have a stable, dependable support system. Whether that is that teen parent's biological or substitute parent or a publicly funded shelter, should be the decision of that child-parent.

I also believe that the Federal Government must oversee the States to assure that those extremely vulnerable family units of "kids having kids" have alternative homes that will provide the shelter and life-skill training from which they can draw strength, skills, nurturing, and self-esteem.

There is a provision in the substitute that I strongly object to. It ties an arbitrary abortion rate within a State to an illegitimacy rate for which a State may receive additional bonus funding. I will monitor this provision as legislation progresses through Congress to assure the States fair and honest availability to receive performance bonuses when they develop successful programs to reduce their out-of-wedlock births.

States that currently have waivers of various measures would have the option to continue under those options until the expiration of those waivers.

The Tanner-Castle substitute does have a strong child support enforcement provision. As long as those provisions are implemented universally and non-discriminatorily nationwide, it may succeed in providing those vulnerable single parents a valuable additional resource. I wholeheartedly agree that parents should be responsible for their children, but when short duration public assistance is needed, they are entitled by our God almighty, to a decent life.

On the issue of Medicaid eligibility, until and unless Congress can achieve meaningful health care reform to provide for universal access to health care financing, there must be Medicaid eligibility for the unemployed, uninsured families who receive public assistance. Tanner-Castle retains current law for child protection funding, guidelines, and requirements. Child protection is what this welfare reform is really supposed to be all about. It is protecting the vulnerable children of our Nation against poverty and despair, against hunger and sickness, and against fear and helplessness. I think that for the most part, the Tanner-Castle substitute attempts to do that.

Mr. POSHARD. Madam Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Castle-Tanner Welfare Reform Act, a tough, balanced welfare reform proposal that moves able welfare recipients to work and protects children. I am a cosponsor of this reform bill because I believe it provides States and our local communities with the resources, support, and flexibility they need to successfully move welfare recipients into the work force.

The Castle-Tanner Welfare Act requires all welfare recipients to begin work within 2 years of receiving assistance and imposes a 5-year time limit on cash assistance. However, the plan also gives States the option of providing continued assistance to children and non-cash emergency assistance to families that have lost cash assistance as a result of a time limitation.

The bill further requires that minor mothers must stay in school and live with an adult in order to receive assistance, and stops additional benefits for additional children born to individuals on welfare. In addition, the Castle-Tanner plan rewards States that are able to reduce illegitimacy without increasing the abortion rate. The bill also holds fathers responsible for their children through strong child support enforcement.

The Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimated that the Republican welfare reform proposal, which we are also considering today, would fall nearly $13 billion below the funding level necessary to meet the work requirements outlined in the Republican bill, and $800 million short of the necessary funds to providing child care assistance to individuals who are required to work.

The Castle-Tanner plan ensures that States would be able to meet the work requirements in the bill by providing $3 billion, over the Republican plan, in additional mandatory funds they can access in order to meet the costs of moving welfare recipients to work. In addition, this plan gives more flexibility to States in meeting the bill's work requirements. The Castle-Tanner plan gives States the opportunity and the resources to meet the goals all of us support.

CBO has estimated the Castle-Tanner plan contains enough mandatory funding to provide child care assistance to all welfare recipients who need such assistance in order to comply with the work requirements in the bill. The additional funds contained in this plan for transitional and at-risk child care will give States an important tool in preventing individuals from returning to welfare.

I am also concerned with the fact that the Republican welfare measure would cut food stamp funding by $23 billion or 19 percent by converting the program into a block grant. Instead, the Castle-Tanner plan maintains the national food stamp program as we know it without allowing an optional block grant that would freeze funding for food for children and families.

Madam Chairman, I agree it is time to reform the current welfare system, but let us do it in a manner that reflects the values of this country. Let us reform the system to encourage men and women who have come to rely on welfare to return to work. We must also insure that the children of those on welfare are not punished in the process of reforming this system. I believe the Castle-Tanner Welfare Reform Act meets these goals, and I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this reasonable, but effective reform measure.

Mrs. MORELLA. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Castle-Tanner bipartisan welfare reform substitute that will dramatically overhaul our welfare system. This substitute is based on the welfare bill that we crafted earlier this year to improve upon the Governors' plan.

I support bold welfare reform that moves recipients from welfare to work and encourages personal responsibility. This substitute does that, allowing States to try new approaches that meet the needs of their recipients. States are already experimenting with welfare reform. Over 40 waivers have been given to States by the Department of Health and Human Services, and the results are encouraging. It is clear that we must dramatically change our system to give women and children hope and opportunities to build a better future. This substitute does that. In giving leeway and dollars to States, however, we must ensure that we protect children and the disabled by adopting Castle-Tanner.

This substitute requires that States invest the resources necessary for welfare reform to succeed by establishing an 85-percent maintenance of effort requirement. It also ensures that States will have sufficient funds to provide work programs to move people off welfare into work.

We know that child care funding is the cornerstone of successful welfare reform. Without it, women cannot even go to work or job training. This substitute improves the Governors' plan by increasing child care funding by $4 billion and requiring States to spend 100 percent of their 1994 child care dollars before they can draw down Federal funds. It also provides States the flexibility to permit women with children under 6 to work 20 hours a week and maintains health and safety standards set by States for child care providers.

This substitute protects children by requiring States to provide vouchers for children in families removed from the welfare rolls as a result of a time limit of less than 5 years, and gives States the option of providing vouchers for families cut off as a result of the 5-year time limit. It also preserves the national food stamp safety net and does not allow food stamps to be converted into a block grant. Its humane immigration provisions would exempt children from the food stamp ban and exempt disabled children from the SSI ban.

I have been working with the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues for many years to enact child support reform that will finally crack down on deadbeat parents by enacting penalties with real teeth and establishing Federal registries to help track deadbeats. This substitute contains these critical provisions.

Madam Chairman, I am pleased that H.R. 3734 contains substantial improvements over the House-passed bill and the conference report. The Castle-Tanner substitute, however, is our best opportunity yet to enact welfare reform that moves people from welfare to work while protecting children. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Castle-Tanner substitute.

Mr. CRAMER. Madam Chairman, do we want welfare reform? That is the bottom line here today. The Castle-Tanner bill is a bipartisan bill. It shares and improves upon the leadership's ideas on how to restructure our welfare system that has become a burned-out, broken-down bureaucracy.

Like the leadership's bill, Castle-Tanner creates a single cash welfare block grant to replace the current AFDC, JOBS and Emergency Assistance programs. It requires recipients to work within 2 years and limits benefits to 5 years. Castle-Tanner requires able-bodied individuals with no dependents between the ages of 18 to 50 to participate in a work program in order to receive food stamps. It requires minor mothers to stay in school and live with an adult to receive assistance. In addition, Castle-Tanner creates a $2 billion contingency fund for States to meet their need in time of recession.

In this era of giving the States more responsibility, Castle-Tanner honors the Governor's request for greater flexibility. The leadership's bill, however, rejects the Governor's request. The National Governor's Association says "the bill greatly restricts State flexibility and will result in increased, unfunded costs for States, while undermining States ability to implement effective welfare reform programs. CBO estimates the leadership's bill would fall $12.9 billion short of the funding needed to meet the work requirements under their measure. Castle-Tanner remedies this by providing States necessary help in implementing their work programs.

I have focused much of my work in Congress on helping our children. One of the most important additions to the leadership's bill is Castle-Tanner's protection of our Nation's children. States must be able to provide for the needs of children. Castle-Tanner requires vouchers for those children whose families lose cash assistance as a result of a State time limit less than 5 years. Castle-Tanner contains sufficient child care assistance for mothers participating in work programs and provides additional child care assistance for working poor families in jeopardy of losing employment if child care assistance is not provided. Fathers are held responsible for their children through strong child support enforcement provisions. Unfortunately, CBO estimates the leadership's bill would fall $800 million short of the child care funds necessary to meet the legislation's work requirements and maintain current levels of spending on transitional and at-risk child care.

We must permanently erase the current, broken welfare state. To do this, we must ensure people are able to move into the workforce and enable them to stay there. Castle-Tanner does this while at the same time preserving the most sacred of American values—the family. The working poor should not be required to choose between caring for their children and the opportunity to be productive, working members of our society.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I know it has been a long debate. Almost everything that can be said has been said about the bill. I do not intend to use the full 5 minutes.

The motion to recommit is a laser beam about children. The Castle-Tanner substitute that was just voted down requires States to provide vouchers for the needs of the child for families cut off as a result of State-imposed time limits of less than 5 years, and gives States the option of providing vouchers for families cut off as a result of the Federal 5-year limit.

The bill that we are about to vote on in a minute explicitly prohibits States from using Federal funds to provide vouchers for children after this 5-year time limit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think both of these bills, under the debate that has occurred, a fair reading by any fair-minded individual would conclude both of these proposals are a complete and dramatic reform and change of the present system, which everybody wants. Our substitute and time limits, personal responsibility, work requirements, State flexibility, just like the base bill.

I am going to talk about State flexibility. Why in the world, when we are going to a block grant and telling the States, "You fashion the program that you think is best for your State," would we go then and after 5 years prohibit the States from using any Federal funds for noncash vouchers for kids whose parents have run over the 5-year or run out of the 5-year limit?

Mr. Speaker, according to the New Testament there is only one individual in the whole of human history who was privileged or enabled to decide the circumstance and the place and time of his birth, and that was decided for him by his father. These children come into this world and they cannot help their circumstance.

Now, for this body to say to the State, "You cannot use block grant money that is put there for you to devise for children in welfare programs," for this Congress to say, "But, by the way, you cannot use any of this money to provide noncash assistance to children because their," according to some, "deadbeat parent has overstayed his welcome in society," I think is just plain wrong.

This motion to recommit days that States will simply have the option to use part of the Federal grant money they receive to take care of these people in vouchers, noncash vouchers for children. I do not know of anyone who wants a welfare system where we reform it and say to a 3-year-old child, "You are just cut off, and it is too bad because your 33-year-old parents are not taking care of you." That is not welfare reform.

This will cure that, and I would urge a "yes" vote on this very simple, straightforward motion to recommit.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I want to address some of the remarks made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER].

This bill has been very, very carefully crafted, and it is something we did not draw up last night or even last year. We have been working on this thing for so long, we have had so many drafts, and I think it has been done in the most compassionate way possible.

I would like to recognize Dr. Ron Haskins as someone who has been a great resource not only for the Republican side but he has also been a great resource for the Castle-Tanner people.

To address the question that is immediately before us can States craft vouchers after 5 years, the bill that is before us, that we are about to vote on on final passage, has a 20-percent exception in it. It provides that States can take 20 percent of their caseload and take it out of the welfare reform picture.

This simply means that they can use that money, the 20 percent, to issue vouchers if they want to, so in effect it does what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TANNER] is talking about.

Mr. Speaker, this is extraordinarily important. Also, we particularly provide in the bill, so that we do maintain States' rights in the bill, specifically that there is absolutely no Federal hold on what the States do with their own funds. So, in effect, what Mr. TANNER wants to do can be done.

The difference is what message do we send from this body. Are we for genuine welfare reform? Are we for time limits on welfare reform? That is the message that we have got to send from this Congress if we are going to look for the people to get up and go to work and cooperate with us and take hold of their lives. This is the message that we carry with us when we are trying to rescue people from a corrupted system of welfare that has prevailed in this country now for 60 years.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a "no" vote on the motion to recommit and a "yes" vote on final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARTON of Texas). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1462

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor from H.R. 1462, due to my concerns that it allows the NIH to expand its research using tissue from aborted babies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

TEAMWORK FOR EMPLOYEES AND MANAGERS ACT OF 1995

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H.R. 743, to amend the National Labor Relations Act to allow labor management cooperative efforts that improve economic competitiveness in the United States to continue to thrive, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Senate amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Teamwork for Employees and Managers Act of 1995".

SEC. 2 FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) The escalating demands of global competition have compelled an increasing number of employers in the United States to make dramatic changes in workplace and employer-employee relationships;

(2) such changes involve an enhanced role for the employee in workplace decisionmaking, often referred to as "Employee Involvement", which has taken many forms, including self-managed work teams, quality-of-worklife, quality circles, and joint labor-management committees;

(3) Employee Involvement programs, which operate successfully in both unionized and nonunionized settings, have been established by over 80 percent of the largest employers in the United States and exist in an estimated 30,000 workplaces;

(4) in addition to enhancing the productivity and competitiveness of businesses in the United States, Employee Involvement programs have had a positive impact on the lives of such employees, better enabling them to reach their potential in the workforce;

(5) recognizing that foreign competitors have successfully utilized Employee Involvement techniques, the Congress has consistently joined business, labor and academic leaders in encouraging and recognizing successful Employee Involvement programs in the workplace through such incentives as the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award;

(6) employers who have instituted legitimate Employee Involvement programs have not done so to interfere with the collective bargaining rights guaranteed by the labor laws, as was the case in the 1930's when employers established deceptive sham "company unions" to avoid unionization; and

(7) Employee Involvement is currently threatened by legal interpretations of the prohibition against employer-dominated "company unions".

(b) PURPOSES.—The purpose of this Act is—

(1) to protect legitimate Employee Involvement programs against governmental interference;

(2) to preserve existing protections against deceptive, coercive employer practices; and

(3) to allow legitimate Employee Involvement programs, in which workers may discuss issues involving terms and conditions of employment, to continue to evolve and proliferate.

SEC. 3. EMPLOYER EXCEPTION.

Section 8(a)(2) of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by striking the semicolon and inserting the following: "": Provided further, That it shall not constitute or be evidence of an unfair labor practice under this paragraph for an employer to establish, assist, maintain, or participate in any organization or entity of any kind, in which employees who participate to at least the same extent practicable as representatives of management participate, to address matters of mutual interest, including, but not limited to, issues of quality, productivity, efficiency, and safety and health, and which does not have, claim, or seek authority to be the exclusive bargaining representatives of the employees or to negotiate or enter into collective bargaining agreements with the employer or to amend existing collective bargaining agreements between the employer and any labor organization, except that in a case in which a labor organization is the representative of such employees as provided in section 9(a), this proviso shall not apply:".

SEC. 4. LIMITATION ON EFFECT OF ACT.

Nothing in this Act shall affect employee rights and responsibilities contained in provisions other than section 8(a)(2) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

Mr. GOODLING (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MARTINEZ. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do so not because I will object, but because I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], the chairman, to explain this measure to us.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTINEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1434 the TEAM Act, passed the House September 27 last year and it recently passed the other body in the exact same form. Unfortunately, due to a procedural glitch during the other body's consideration, further action in the House is required before the bill can be presented to the President. The other body did not directly consider and pass H.R. 743 without amendment.

Technically, they passed H.R. 743 with an amendment, even though the amendment was the exact text passed by the House. Since the House would be adopting the same language of the bill we already passed, this unanimous consent will hurdle this procedural disagreement between the two bodies.

I rise in strong support of this legislation and I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the explanation.

Mr. Speaker, although I oppose the bill and will continue to oppose the bill, I see no reason to rehash the same old debate.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BONO. Mr. Speaker, yesterday on July 17, 1996, I was unavoidably detained and missed rollcall vote 323, for final passage of the Treasury, Postal appropriations bill, H.R. 3756.

Had I been present, I certainly would have voted in support of its passage.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER], what the schedule will be for the rest of the week and for the following week.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the House has concluded its legislative business for the week.

We will meet on Monday, July 22, at 10:30 a.m. for Morning Hour, and 12 noon for legislative business. Members should note that the House will postpone any recorded votes until 5 p.m. On Monday the House will first consider a number of bills under suspension of the rules before turning to the District of Columbia Appropriations Act. Mr. Speaker, I will not read through the list of suspensions now, but a complete schedule will be distributed to all offices.

On Tuesday, July 23, the House will meet at 9 a.m. for Morning Hour, and 10 a.m. for legislative business. We hope to consider the following measures: H.R. 2779, the Soft Metric Conversion Act, on the Corrections Day Calendar; H.R. 3564, the NATO Enlargement Facilitation Act, as a suspension; and H.R. 3814, the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill, which will be taken up under an open rule.

For Wednesday, July 24, and the balance of the week the House will consider the following bills: H.R. 3814, the Energy and Water appropriations bill, under an open rule; H.R. 3760, the Campaign Finance Reform Act, under a modified closed rule; and H.R. 2391, the Compensatory Time for All Workers Act, which will be granted a rule next week.

Due to the full agenda next week, we may have to work later on Tuesday and Wednesday nights. However, we will finish legislative business by 2 p.m. on Friday, July 26.

I would also like to remind the Members that on Thursday, July 25, the annual congressional baseball game will be held, and I believe we can finish the votes that night in time for batting practice.

It is my personal hope that the Republicans' stellar one-game winning streak can be extended, although I understand that the Democrats have gotten themselves an unusually good left field this year and that may cause us a problem.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I would say to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that having just come from practice today, I can assure the gentleman that the Democrats are very strong up the middle, and I would also say to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on the way to practice this morning I went by the field that the Republicans were practicing on and I noticed everybody shagging fly balls along the right field line, so we are looking forward to the game, and we are pleased that we will be out on time to enjoy that evening next Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, I have a comment or a question to raise to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He mentioned late nights next week on Tuesday and Wednesday, I believe. How late is the gentleman anticipating that we might be those evenings?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I would say to the gentleman that we are going to proceed under open rules on the appropriations bills. I think the Members could expect that it could go until 9, 10, or 11 o'clock on those two evenings.

Mr. BONIOR. I thank the gentleman for that information.

How about Friday? Are we certain to have votes on Friday, and if so, does the gentleman anticipate a certain specific bill coming up on Friday?

Mr. WALKER. We have a very full legislative calendar. If we could get through some of this expeditiously and complete the schedule, including not only the appropriations bill but the compensatory time bill and some of those, it is possible, this gentleman would love to think personally that it could take place that we would not have a session on Friday, but we would intend to complete the schedule, and I think now Members should plan on a Friday session being over by 2 o'clock.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, we were all very disappointed to see that virtually all of the items on reform week were pulled from the schedule this week. We hate for all of these reform measures to die in this Congress. Is the gentleman sure we are going to deal with campaign reform next week?

Mr. WALKER. That is certainly our intention. We believe it will be up on Wednesday if the time for the appropriation bills allows that. If not, it would probably come on Thursday.

Mr. BONIOR. Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me just say to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to others on the other side of the aisle who may want to comment on this, Members on this side of the aisle and the public in general have been reading conflicting reports from the Republican leadership about the continuing resolution and a possible early adjournment date in this Congress.
