PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 109th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 151

WASHINGTON, MONDAY, JUNE 13, 2005

No. 77

House of Representatives

The House met at 12:30 p.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 13, 2005.

I hereby appoint the Honorable DANIEL E. LUNGREN to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 4, 2005, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) for 5 minutes.

TIME FOR REAL REFORM AT THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, last December we created an independent panel to simply come up with ways to make the United Nations more transparent and more effective. Today it is being reported that the panel's work is done, and their 174-page report will soon be made available to all of us. I am very interested to see what this bipartisan panel has to say about changing and reforming the United Nations.

I understand from this report that its recommendations perhaps do not go far enough. It does criticize the U.N. for being too bureaucratic, but it hardly lays the blame where I think we all know it belongs, of course, to the Secretary General Kofi Annan. It squarely should be on his shoulders.

Here is what has occurred at the U.N. under Mr. Annan's watch: We have had genocide in the Sudan; countries such as Cuba, Libya, and China are on the U.N. Commission on Human Rights; kicking the United States off the U.N.'s Narcotic Trafficking Commission; claims of sexual harassment in the United Nations; an attempt to impose global gun control. The U.N. even thought about sending observers over here to assess and evaluate our election process here in the United States.

It is noted also that our Supreme Court Justices are using a U.N. treaty to justify abolishing capital punishment for minors. And, of course, there is the infamous Oil For Food Program. This is a scandal. It is a program which has resulted in over $20 billion being stolen from those who need it in Iraq and which enriched the totalitarian regime of Saddam Hussein. And most recently, U.N. peacekeeping soldiers in the Congo have been discovered soliciting sex from local girls, some as young as 12 years old, in exchange for money and food.

Mr. Speaker, too many times the United Nations has gone against American values. I happen to believe that the American people should not be required to pay for this organization unless there is a huge amount of reform and change. We are the biggest donor to the United Nations, contributing 22 percent of the regular operating budget and nearly 27 percent of the peacekeeping budget.

How many American taxpayer dollars went to Saddam Hussein or are paying for immoral U.N. peacekeepers?

Now more than ever we need to reassess our involvement with this troubled organization. This week we will debate two measures that have to do with the United Nations. First, we will be debating the Science, State, Justice and Commerce appropriations bill in which we propose to pay the United Nations over $400 million in our annual dues. I plan on speaking on this and perhaps introducing an amendment to make sure that none of these funds go to pay for new headquarters that Kofi Annan desires. This headquarters is estimated to cost $1.2 billion.

I have previously introduced legislation to move the United Nations headquarters out of New York City and out of the United States altogether. I still believe, in the aftermath of all of these scandals and all of these corruptions and all of this anti-Americanism, and this massive waste of U.S. taxpayer dollars, that Turtle Bay is no longer an appropriate place for the United Nations. There are many other cities in Europe that perhaps could have the headquarters, such as Paris, France; Geneva, Switzerland; or Bonn, Germany that would be perfect hosts for the United Nations. We should give these countries the opportunity to have the United Nations. I just hope they do not plan on collecting for parking tickets from the diplomats who do not pay.

Later this week we will also consider the Hyde proposal to enact serious and substantive reform at the United Nations. This bill appears to provide real reform with teeth, and I look forward to debating and discussing this measure.

Last, Mr. Speaker, in other U.N. reform related news, hopefully this week John Bolton may finally get his up or down vote in the Senate. The President's choice to be Ambassador to the United Nations is the right man at the right time to shake up the U.N. establishment and provide real reform to the institution before it becomes even more obsolete and outdated.

It is critically important that we enact these serious and substantive reforms, both for America and the rest of the world. As John Bolton once said, "American leadership is critical to the success of the United Nations, an effective U.N., one that is true to the original intent of its charter's framers."

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 36 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida) at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and merciful Lord, Father of all, Your ways are inscrutable, Your glory without blemish, Your compassion for Your people without limits and Your forgiveness for all our faulty judgments is inexhaustible. In the mystery of Your presence we find peace.

Hear our prayer which rises before You from a world scorched by violence and desperation because You are forgotten, Your holy name is not invoked with reverence, Your laws are questioned and Your presence is doubted. Because we do not know You, we have no peace.

Help this Nation and the leaders of government to resolve inner contradictions that words may again contain meaning; deliberated actions may give evidence to words, by providing vision; and agreements may unify the energies of Your people.

In You, O Lord, we place our hope for peace now and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House her approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, June 10, 2005.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 2(h) of Rule II of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received the following message from the Secretary of the Senate on June 10, 2005 at 10 a.m.

That the Senate passed without amendment H. Con. Res. 159.

Appointments: Mexico-United States Interparliamentary Group.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely,

JEFF TRANDAHL,
Clerk of the House.

RESTORING ORDER TO THE UNITED NATIONS

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Madam Speaker, Saddam Hussein was able to siphon off almost $10 billion from a UN-administered program that was designed to provide food and care to the Iraqi people. As Iraq continues to recover from Hussein's rule of dictatorship, I will urge the United Nations to recover these funds for the Iraqi people.

Unfortunately, the Oil-for-Food scandal was only one example of a long litany of scandals associated with the United Nations. This week Congress will vote on the United Nations Reform Act of 2005, which will ensure efficiency, accountability and effectiveness at the U.N. If the organization fails to enact these changes, America's contributions to the U.N. assessed budget will be reduced by 50 percent.

These reforms will assure the American people that their dollars are used only for legitimate and valuable U.N. projects. When we contribute billions of American dollars to the United Nations each year, the United States should not continue to pay for U.N. programs that operate with essentially a blank check.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September 11.

TIME TO RENEGOTIATE CAFTA

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam Speaker, the administration, desperate after a series of failed attempts to gin up support for the Central America Free Trade Agreement, now has resorted to making all sorts of fantastic promises: bridges, highways and other pork projects, and outrageous threats.

The Washington Post reported yesterday that Tom Donohue, President of the United States Chamber of Commerce, warned a group of Hill leaders and business people, "If you are going to vote against it, it is going to cost you."

We know from past experience that if CAFTA comes to the House floor, it will come in the middle of the night, when votes are held open, threats are made on the House floor and a one-vote margin is secured to force through what most of us in Congress agree is bad policy.

Fast track won by only one vote. The same Mr. Donohue said back then, "A one-vote margin is all that we could afford."

Madam Speaker, this agreement has languished in Congress for more than a year. It is time for the President and Ambassador Portman to stop wasting time with toothless, meaningless side deals. It is time to renegotiate a better Central American Free Trade Agreement.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule xx.

Record votes on postponed questions will be taken after 6:30 p.m. today.

PATIENT NAVIGATOR OUTREACH AND CHRONIC DISEASE PREVENTION ACT OF 2005

Mr. GILLMOR. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1812) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize a demonstration grant program to provide patient navigator services to reduce barriers and improve health care outcomes, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 1812

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Patient Navigator Outreach and Chronic Disease Prevention Act of 2005".

SEC. 2. PATIENT NAVIGATOR GRANTS.

Subpart V of part D of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 256) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 340A. PATIENT NAVIGATOR GRANTS.

"(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Health Resources and Services Administration, may make grants to eligible entities for the development and operation of demonstration programs to provide patient navigator services to improve health care outcomes. The Secretary shall coordinate with, and ensure the participation of, the Indian Health Service, the National Cancer Institute, the Office of Rural Health Policy, and such other offices and agencies as deemed appropriate by the Secretary, regarding the design and evaluation of the demonstration programs.

“(b) USE OF FUNDS.—The Secretary shall require each recipient of a grant under this section to use the grant to recruit, assign, train, and employ patient navigators who have direct knowledge of the communities they serve to facilitate the care of individuals, including by performing each of the following duties:

“(1) Acting as contacts, including by assisting in the coordination of health care services and provider referrals, for individuals who are seeking prevention or early detection services for, or who following a screening or early detection service are found to have a symptom, abnormal finding, or diagnosis of, cancer or other chronic disease.

“(2) Facilitating the involvement of community organizations in assisting individuals who are at risk for or who have cancer or other chronic diseases to receive better access to high-quality health care services (such as by creating partnerships with patient advocacy groups, charities, health care centers, community hospice centers, other health care providers, or other organizations in the targeted community).

“(3) Notifying individuals of clinical trials and, on request, facilitating enrollment of eligible individuals in these trials.

“(4) Anticipating, identifying, and helping patients to overcome barriers within the health care system to ensure prompt diagnostic and treatment resolution of an abnormal finding of cancer or other chronic disease.

“(5) Coordinating with the relevant health insurance ombudsman programs to provide information to individuals who are at risk for or who have cancer or other chronic diseases about health coverage, including private insurance, health care savings accounts, and other publicly funded programs (such as Medicare, Medicaid, health programs operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs or the Department of Defense, the State children's health insurance program, and any private or governmental prescription assistance programs).

“(6) Conducting ongoing outreach to health disparity populations, including the uninsured, rural populations, and other medically underserved populations, in addition to assisting other individuals who are at risk for or who have cancer or other chronic diseases to seek preventative care.

“(c) PROHIBITIONS.—

“(1) REFERRAL FEES.—The Secretary shall require each recipient of a grant under this section to prohibit any patient navigator providing services under the grant from accepting any referral fee, kickback, or other thing of value in return for referring an individual to a particular health care provider.

“(2) LEGAL FEES AND COSTS.—The Secretary shall prohibit the use of any grant funds received under this section to pay any fees or costs resulting from any litigation, arbitration, mediation, or other proceeding to resolve a legal dispute.

“(d) GRANT PERIOD.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), the Secretary may award grants under this section for periods of not more than 3 years.

“(2) EXTENSIONS.—Subject to paragraph (3), the Secretary may extend the period of a grant under this section. Each such extension shall be for a period of not more than 1 year.

“(3) LIMITATIONS ON GRANT PERIOD.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary—

“(A) shall ensure that the total period of a grant does not exceed 4 years; and “(B) may not authorize any grant period ending after September 30, 2010.

“(e) APPLICATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—To seek a grant under this section, an eligible entity shall submit an application to the Secretary in such form, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

“(2) CONTENTS.—At a minimum, the Secretary shall require each such application to outline how the eligible entity will establish baseline measures and benchmarks that meet the Secretary's requirements to evaluate program outcomes.

“(f) UNIFORM BASELINE MEASURES.—The Secretary shall establish uniform baseline measures in order to properly evaluate the impact of the demonstration projects under this section.

“(g) PREFERENCE.—In making grants under this section, the Secretary shall give preference to eligible entities that demonstrate in their applications plans to utilize patient navigator services to overcome significant barriers in order to improve health care outcomes in their respective communities.

“(h) DUPLICATION OF SERVICES.—An eligible entity that is receiving Federal funds for activities described in subsection (b) on the date on which the entity submits an application under subsection (e) may not receive a grant under this section unless the entity can demonstrate that amounts received under the grant will be utilized to expand services or provide new services to individuals who would not otherwise be served.

“(i) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROGRAMS.—The Secretary shall ensure coordination of the demonstration grant program under this section with existing authorized programs in order to facilitate access to high-quality health care services.

“(j) STUDY; REPORTS.—

“(1) FINAL REPORT BY SECRETARY.—Not later than 6 months after the completion of the demonstration grant program under this section, the Secretary shall conduct a study of the results of the program and submit to the Congress a report on such results that includes the following:

“(A) An evaluation of the program outcomes, including—

“(i) quantitative analysis of baseline and benchmark measures; and “(ii) aggregate information about the patients served and program activities.

“(B) Recommendations on whether patient navigator programs could be used to improve patient outcomes in other public health areas.

“(2) INTERIM REPORTS BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary may provide interim reports to the Congress on the demonstration grant program under this section at such intervals as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

“(3) REPORTS BY GRANTEES.—The Secretary may require grant recipients under this section to submit interim and final reports on grant program outcomes.

“(k) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This section shall not be construed to authorize funding for the delivery of health care services (other than the patient navigator duties listed in subsection (b)).

“(1) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘eligible entity’ means a public or nonprofit private health center (including a Federally qualified health center (as that term is defined in section 1861(aa)(4) of the Social Security Act)), a health facility operated by or pursuant to a contract with the Indian Health Service, a hospital, a cancer center, a rural health clinic, an academic health center, or a nonprofit entity that enters into a partnership or coordinates referrals with such a center, clinic, facility, or hospital to provide patient navigator services.

“(2) The term ‘health disparity population’ means a population that, as determined by the Secretary, has a significant disparity in the overall rate of disease incidence, prevalence, morbidity, mortality, or survival rates as compared to the health status of the general population.

“(3) The term ‘patient navigator’ means an individual who has completed a training program approved by the Secretary to perform the duties listed in subsection (b).

“(m) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2006, $5,000,000 for fiscal year 2007, $8,000,000 for fiscal year 2008, $6,500,000 for fiscal year 2009, and $3,500,000 for fiscal year 2010.

“(2) AVAILABILITY.—The amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) shall remain available for obligation through the end of fiscal year 2010.”

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GILLMOR) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GILLMOR).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GILLMOR. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 1812, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLMOR. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1812, the Patient Navigator Outreach and Chronic Disease Prevention Act of 2005.

After the House passed similar legislation last fall, I would like to commend the initiative of the gentleman from Texas (Chairman BARTON) in bringing H.R. 1812 before us again for consideration. I was very pleased to be a cosponsor of that bill last year, and I want to commend both the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) and the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE) for their sponsorship of the legislation this year.

H.R. 1812 authorizes a 5-year demonstration program to evaluate the use of patient navigators. Patient navigator programs provide outreach to communities to encourage more individuals to seek preventative care and coordinate health care services for individuals who are at risk for or have a chronic disease.

Specifically, the legislation requires trained individuals, or “patient navigators,” to coordinate health care services and provider referrals, facilitate involvement of community organizations to provide assistance to patients, facilitate enrollment in clinical trials, help ensure prompt diagnostic care and treatment, and to coordinate with health insurance programs and conduct ongoing outreach to rural or health disparity populations for preventative care. H.R. 1812 authorizes a total of $25 million over a 5-year period to conduct the demonstration project.

Furthermore, this measure will be particularly helpful to sprawling districts such as my own in northwest Ohio, in which patients must drive or be driven by friends or family long distances for basic medical care and services.

Madam Speaker, I again urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 1812.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Too many Americans, as my friend from Ohio said, face financial barriers to health care. The American Cancer Society and other patient advocates support H.R. 1812 because they know that many Americans also face serious nonfinancial barriers; racial, cultural, linguistic and geographical barriers; barriers that have contributed to striking disparities across racial and ethnic lines in the incidence and treatment of cancer and other serious diseases.

This is by no means a minor or inconsequential issue. It is a crisis, and addressing it should be one of our Nation's highest priorities. According to former Surgeon General David Satcher, more than 80,000 African Americans die every year because of continuing disparities in health care; 80,000.

African American and Latino adults are disproportionately more likely than whites to suffer from chronic conditions such as heart disease, cancer, asthma, depression, diabetes and high blood pressure. Modern medicine can combat these conditions, but only if it is available to those that need it. The earlier people receive preventative, diagnostic and treatment services, the better.

Prevention and timely treatment are not only optimal from a public health perspective, they are optimal from a budget perspective. Timely care is cost-efficient care. The complexity and fragmentation of our health care system is perhaps the most daunting barrier of all. It exacerbates racial and ethnic disparities and reduces the efficiency of health care across the board.

The patient navigator bill lays out a comprehensive strategy designed to foster prevention, early diagnosis and efficient treatment of serious illnesses. The goal is twofold: To reach those who are currently disenfranchised from the health care system, and to help ease the way for those who face a serious illness, an intimidating array of treatment options and uncertainty about the best course of action.

This bill establishes a year-round community outreach program to promote cost-effective preventive services, including cancer screening. Early detection saves dollars, and, more importantly, saves lives.

The program features culturally and linguistically competent patient navigators who are trained to assist and empower patients, serve as their advocates in negotiating our complicated and too often impersonal health care system, and help patients overcome barriers to health care services.

With this legislation's passage, we can expect to see increased enrollment in clinical trials, greater community involvement and health awareness, a more coordinated approach to health care delivery, and enhanced access to timely health care services for racial and ethnic minorities.

H.R. 1812 has the endorsement of the American Cancer Society, the National Association of Community Health Centers, the National Council of La Raza, the American Diabetes Association and the American Medical Association.

I want to commend the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) and the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE) for their hard work on this legislation. I am pleased to support it.

Mr. DINGELL. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1812, the Patient Navigator, Outreach, and Chronic Disease Prevention Act of 2005. This legislation establishes a five-year, $25 million demonstration grant program to evaluate the use of "patient navigators," who are individuals trained to assist persons who are at risk for or who have cancer or other chronic diseases. Assistance provided by patient navigators would include coordinating health care services for patients such as enrollment in clinical trials, facilitating community involvement, and coordinating health insurance ombudsman programs to improve health care options. Simply put, this bill reduces barriers to access and improves health care outcomes.

H.R. 1812 ensures year-round outreach to target communities and funds culturally and linguistically competent patient navigators to conduct outreach, build relationships, and educate the public, while encouraging prevention screenings and follow-up treatment. It also ensures that navigators are available to help patients make their way through the health care system—offering a wide variety of services including translating technical medical terminology, making sense of their insurance, making appointments for referral screenings, following-up to make sure the patient keeps that appointment, or even accompanying a patient to a referral appointment.

This bill will support the placement of patient navigators in a variety of health care settings. Eligible entities for patient navigators include community health centers, cancer centers, rural health clinics, academic health centers, and facilities operated by the Indian Health Service.

This bill is supported by many patient advocate organizations, health care providers, and others, including the American Diabetes Association, the American Cancer Society, the National Hispanic Medical Association, the National Rural Health Association, and the National Association of Community Health Centers. I know that the bipartisan support for this bill involved the work of many of my colleagues. I would especially like to thank Representatives MENENDEZ and SOLIS for their hard work on this legislation. I will support H.R. 1812 and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1812, the Patient Navigator, Outreach, and Chronic Disease Prevention Act of 2005. I applaud my colleague, friend and chair of the Democratic Caucus, Congressman ROBERT MENENDEZ of New Jersey for introducing this bill and getting it to the floor today. I also want to thank Chairman BARTON and Ranking member DINGELL for their support of measure.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I have come to this floor on numerous occasions call attention to the racial and ethnic health disparities in this Nation. For years, research has told us that minorities and low-income populations are the least likely to receive the health care they need to live a long, healthy life. There are many barriers to access which go beyond just the complex nature of the system.

While I am pleased that today we have a bill that will begin to break down these barriers, and open up access to healthcare for many who might otherwise be left out, I would have to say though that I am deeply disappointed that the Committee did not see it fit to include some of the provisions that specifically addressed the additional barriers that people of racial and ethnic minority populations face, such as those related to language and unique cultural factors.

Considering that people of this color bear such a disproportionate share of ill health and premature death, and that our lack of access contributes greatly to the skyrocketing cost of health care, it would have seemed to me to be only natural that a bill such as this would have sought to include the extra provisions that would ensure that every American would have the extra help, according to their need to get the health care services they need.

Nevertheless the bill we are passing today while greatly modified meets an important need and I join the many organizations which support it in asking my colleagues to pass this bill, and then continue to work with Democrats and the minority caucuses to address all of the other deficiencies in the health care system that keep wellness out of the reach of people of color in this country.

The bill before us provides that navigators will be available to help patients make their way through the health care system—whether it's translating technical medical terminology, making sense of their insurance, making appointments for referral screenings, following up to make sure the patient keeps that appointment, or even accompanying a patient to a referral appointment.

Madam Speaker, I also want to acknowledge that the original concept for the legislation comes from Dr. Harold Freeman's "navigator" program, which he created while he was Director of Surgery at Harlem Hospital. It is our hope that Dr. Freeman's navigator concept and its laser shape focus on comprehensive modeling of prevention services will eventually be fully translated in legislative terms.

I would also want at this time to recognize Brenda Pillars, the chief of staff to Congressman TOWNS who labored hard on this bill and who passed away last evening. Her passion for the health of all Americans but particularly the African American community, and her work in this body will be missed but long be remembered.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I also want to thank Karissa Willhite of Mr. MENENDEZ's office and John Ford and Cheryl Jaeger of the Energy and Commerce Committee along with other staff that enabled this bill to come to the floor. I urge my colleagues to vote for its adoption.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak in support of The Patient Navigator, Outreach and Chronic Disease Prevention Act of 2005. As a cosponsor of the bill last year, I am fully aware of the benefits the bill will provide. Specifically, the bill would establish a 5-year, $25 million demonstration program for patient navigator services through Community Health Centers, National Cancer Institute centers, Indian Health Service centers, and Rural Health Clinics, as well as certain non-profit entities that provide patient navigator services.

Further, the goal of a patient navigator is to improve health outcomes by helping patients, particularly in underserved communities, to overcome the barriers they face in getting early screening and appropriate follow-up treatment.

Patient navigators are individuals who know the local community and can help patients navigate through the complicated health care system. They help with referrals and follow-up treatment and direct patients to programs and clinical trials that are available to help them get the treatment and care they need to fight cancer and other chronic diseases. In addition, the patient navigator guides patients to health coverage that they may be eligible to receive. They also conduct ongoing outreach to health disparity communities to encourage people to get screenings and early detection services.

Racial and ethnic minorities benefit from patient navigators because they ensure that patients will have someone at their sides who understands their language, culture, and barriers to care, helping them get in to see a doctor early and work their way through our complicated health care system to get the coverage and treatment they need to stay healthy. The same applies to those in rural communities who face significant geographic barriers and limited access to care.

Again, I strongly support this legislation and I hope my colleagues will do the same.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of HR 1812, the Patient Navigator legislation. This legislation would help reduce health disparities and barriers to health care through the increased use of patient navigators.

Under the program, Community Health Centers, National Cancer Institute centers, Rural Health Clinics and other non-profit groups can utilize federal funding to help patients navigate through the complex health care system. Patient navigators can help to stem the rising number of uninsured in our country by helping individuals understand their eligibility for health care coverage. These kinds of services are needed throughout the country, but they are particularly helpful in underserved communities, where uninsured individuals too often put off health care either because of a lack of coverage or due to the difficulties in finding the appropriate health care home.

In my hometown of Houston, patient navigators have made tremendous strides in helping patients find an appropriate health care home. Our Harris County Community Access Collaborative has implemented a Navigation Services program that has helped 31,000 patients find health care homes.

In a related navigation service, the collaborative began an Ask Your Nurse phone service, whereby nurses are available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to steer patients to the best providers for their health care needs. Studies have shown that 57 percent of the diagnoses in Harris County safety net hospitals' emergency rooms could have been treated in our clinics and primary care physician offices. With this kind of ER overutilization, the Ask Your Nurse services are a welcome addition to the public health care infrastructure in our county and steer an average of 2,700 patients each month to the best health care provider for their condition.

This legislation we consider today would allow other communities to replicate the successes we've achieved in Harris County. In addition, the legislation places an important emphasis on patient navigator services for individuals with cancer and other chronic conditions. For these diagnoses, it is extremely important that patients receive the scheduled follow-up treatment, and patient navigators can play a critical role in ensuring that patients receive the necessary care to successfully manage their health care conditions.

I would like to thank my friend and Chairman, JOE BARTON, for the bi-partisan nature in which he shepherded this bill through committee. I offer particular thanks to Mr. BARTON for his willingness to work with me to eliminate an unnecessary reference in the bill to the H-CAP program—a program that is important to me and my constituents. This is just one example of the lengths he will go to seek consensus, and I thank him for those efforts. With that, Madam Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting this bi-partisan legislation that will help many more Americans gain access to quality health care.

Mr. MATHESON. Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to share my remarks on H.R. 1812, the Patient Navigator Outreach and Chronic Disease Prevention Act. I rise in strong support of this important legislation.

H.R. 1812 would authorize the Department of Health and Human Services to make grants for the development and operation of a pilot "patient navigator program." This demonstration project would provide Community Health Centers, National Cancer Institute centers, Indian Health Service centers, Rural Health Clinics, and other health providers with funding to help patients "navigate" what can often be a complicated and confusing health care system.

Under this legislation, patient navigators would help individual patients and their families overcome obstacles to the prompt diagnosis and treatment of their diseases by helping them understand the processes for receiving medical care and insurance, helping them coordinate referrals between different providers and specialists, helping them identify and possibly enroll in life-saving clinical trials, and even helping them manage their treatment plans.

The bill ensures that particular attention is paid to patients with significant barriers to high-quality health care services including those who are geographically isolated, those with cultural or linguistic barriers, and the uninsured. In their endorsement of this important legislation, the American Cancer Society noted that despite notable advances in prevention interventions, screening technologies, and high-quality treatments, a disproportionate burden of cancer falls on the uninsured, those who live in rural areas, and minority and other medically underserved populations. These populations have higher risks of developing cancer and poorer chances of early diagnosis, optimal treatment, and survival.

I believe that this pilot project will be helpful in providing patients with much-needed information. As receiving a diagnosis of cancer or another chronic disease can be overwhelming for an individual and their family members, this pilot project should ensure that information is available in an accessible, understandable format. I encourage my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILLMOR. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GILLMOR) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1812, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT TO REAUTHORIZE STATE MEDIATION PROGRAMS

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 643) to amend the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 to reauthorize State mediation programs.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 643

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REAUTHORIZATION OF STATE MEDIATION PROGRAMS.

Section 506 of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 (7 U.S.C. 5106) is amended by striking "2005" and inserting "2010".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS) and the gentlewoman from South Dakota (Ms. HERSETH) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS).

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 643. S. 643 will reauthorize USDA's Certified State Mediation Program through 2010.

The State Mediation Program provides agricultural producers and the government with the means to allow a neutral third party to settle disputes between producers and USDA instead of going through potentially costly and time-consuming court cases.

I have introduced S. 643's companion bill in the House, H.R. 1930. Since the bills are identical, it would be the most expedient thing to simply pass S. 643 so that the bill can go on to the White House for the President's signature.

What is the Certified State Mediation Program? When producers and the USDA are in disagreement regarding loans, wetlands remediation, conservation compliance, grazing, pesticides, and other issues deemed appropriate by the Secretary of Agriculture, any State with a program can allow a mediator to help solve the differences between the producers and USDA. Both sides must agree to the mediator chosen to help resolve the dispute.

Mediators can only help reach an agreement that both sides agree to abide by. The mediators are not arbitrators whose decisions are legally enforceable. The mediators work to find consensus. If the two sides involved in the dispute cannot reach agreement, they still have all the legal options available to them. States that decide to participate in the program must go through a certification process and provide 30 percent of the program's operating costs.

The program is authorized to spend up to $7.5 million per year but, in 2004, only $3,950,000 was needed to operate the program in over 30 States. The program provides a great deal of bang for the buck and has been highly successful and useful.

The USDA's Farm Service Agency, FSA, works with States to ensure that their mediation programs are meeting all required standards, and it also helps those States that are interested in becoming certified to navigate and complete the approval process. One of the most important aspects of the program is that it provides strict confidentiality for those who decide to use the mediation program.

I have a breakdown of the States that are currently certified mediation States and the amount of money they received in 2004, I am happy to make that information available to any interested Member.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on S. 643 to ensure that an extremely practical and cost-efficient program continues to be utilized.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. HERSETH. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I also rise today in strong support of S. 643, which is the companion legislation of H.R. 1930 introduced by my distinguished colleague on the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS).

This legislation would extend the authorization for the State Mediation Grant Program carried out by USDA's Farm Service Agency to provide Federal matching grants to State mediation programs.

Currently 32 States, including my home State of South Dakota, are certified to receive matching funds under this program, and two more States are working on becoming certified. To receive Federal funding, a State program must meet certain criteria and have at least a 30 percent match in State funding.

This program was created in 1987 as a result of the credit crisis facing agriculture in the mid-1980s. Since its inception, an original intent of dealing with credit and loan disputes, Congress has expanded its scope to cover a number of other issues stemming from farm program participation, everything from wetland determinations to commodity program eligibility and pesticide drift.

Early on, leaders in South Dakota recognized the value that such a program could provide to the farmers, ranchers, and lenders in our State, and they created a program in 1988 to deal with agricultural credit disputes. It has been a resounding success. In the more than 16 years that the South Dakota Department of Agriculture has operated its mediation program, it has received more than 4,500 requests for mediation.

In South Dakota, mediation is available for agricultural credit disputes involving any amount of money. However, a creditor must submit to mediation in any credit dispute involving more than $50,000.

This popular program provides many benefits to both agricultural borrowers and lenders in many States across the country. We all know that lending disputes can become contentious, and this program enables participants to negotiate and create their own mutually agreeable solutions to such disputes.

Also, the cost of mediation is much less than the formal appeals process at USDA, averaging less than $700 per year, as opposed to the thousands of dollars it can cost to go through the National Appeals Division. The length of time to reach conclusions is also much shorter, normally several days, in contrast to appeals cases that can stretch for months.

Mediation works because it is a time-saving and affordable alternative to litigation and appeals. It also promotes communication between disputing parties rather than confrontation and animosity. And, in my communications with the South Dakota Department of Agriculture staff, mediation generally results in more successful and enduring resolution to most credit disputes.

This program has worked for farmers and agricultural lenders in South Dakota and across the country for almost 20 years, and I am pleased to support S. 643 to extend the authorization of this program through 2010.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 643.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on S. 643, the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

COMMENDING THE ESTABLISHMENT IN COLLEGE POINT, NEW YORK, OF THE FIRST KINDERGARTEN IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 47) commending the establishment in College Point, New York, of the first kindergarten in the United States, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 47

Whereas in 1854, Conrad Poppenhusen, a successful businessman from Germany, built a factory in College Point, Queens, New York, and, breaking with many entrepreneurs of his time, worked to create an environment beneficial to the immigrant community, which included schools;

Whereas the Poppenhusen Institute was established in 1868 with a $100,000 donation;

Whereas the Poppenhusen Institute was to serve the fundamental educational needs of the community and began as a free adult evening school for the residents of Flushing Town;

Whereas in 1870, the Poppenhusen Institute's services expanded to serve as the first free, public kindergarten in the United States for the children of Mr. Poppenhusen's factory and the community;

Whereas children who attend a high-quality kindergarten demonstrate higher levels of reading and mathematics knowledge and skills than those who do not attend kindergarten;

Whereas a number of studies, including studies commissioned by the Department of Education, demonstrate that children enrolled in kindergarten more rapidly acquire the knowledge and skills integral to succeed in school and life;

Whereas the United States is a stronger, better place because of the children who are able to enrich their academic and social development through free kindergartens across the country;

Whereas for some children, kindergarten is the first common ground where they interact with students from a myriad of cultural, economic, racial, and religious backgrounds to learn about their world, each other, and themselves; and

Whereas universal, free, high-quality kindergarten for the Nation's children provides benefits both to these children and to society at large: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That—

(1) the Congress commends the Poppenhusen Institute and the College Point community for establishing the first free, public kindergarten in the United States; and

(2) the Congress supports the strong beginnings kindergartens across the United States provide for the Nation's children.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE) and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H. Con. Res. 47.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 47 commending the establishment of the first free public kindergarten in the United States. Madam Speaker, we can all agree on the merits of early education to the academic success of America's children. From the time that Conrad Poppenhusen offered free, public kindergarten to his community in College Point, New York, millions of American children have benefited from a foundational first year of school.

Kindergarten is a common experience for most American children. Today, 98 percent of children of kindergarten age in America attend kindergarten programs for at least half of the school day, and a growing number of schools, today about 60 percent, now offer full-day kindergarten programs. At age 5, the age at which most children enter kindergarten, children's development varies greatly. Because they often begin with a range of knowledge and skills, the kindergarten experience can substantially reduce educational disparities and help build a foundation for future school success.

Research demonstrates that children generally develop both cognitive and noncognitive knowledge and skills during the kindergarten year. In the year 2000, the National Center For Education Statistics, a research arm of the U.S. Department of Education, published findings from a large-scale study to evaluate the effectiveness of kindergarten. The study showed that after a year of kindergarten, children demonstrate a greater understanding of reading and mathematics concepts, as well as specific knowledge and skills. By the end of the kindergarten year, nearly all children recognized letters, numbers, and shapes, and an increased number of children can add and subtract numbers.

Madam Speaker, in closing, I would like to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) for recognizing the importance of kindergarten and the contribution of Conrad Poppenhusen for establishing the first free, public American kindergarten.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SKELTON. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in support of House concurrent resolution 47, which recognizes the establishment of the first free, public kindergarten in the United States located at College Point, Queens, New York.

I am pleased to manage the time on this legislation, which is offered by my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) who represents College Point, Queens, here in the House of Representatives.

The history of kindergarten in America has been colorful. Many areas of the country can claim credit for advancing education of our youth through kindergarten classes. From Wisconsin to Massachusetts to New York, many folks have had a hand in developing kindergarten. However, Queens, New York is home to the first free, public kindergarten class, and it is proper today, Madam Speaker, that we honor that achievement. Public kindergarten has played a meaningful role in the lives of many Americans, including the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), the author of this legislation, as well as me.

For many children in Missouri, in New York, and throughout the countryside, kindergarten is the first place in which students interact with youth from many cultural backgrounds and where they learn about the world into which they were born. Kindergarten also reinforces and builds reading and math skills which are important tools for our children to have when advancing through the educational system.

The establishment of the first free, public kindergarten in College Point, Queens, New York, has made our Nation stronger.

I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), and I thank the House for considering this bill today.

Mr. PETRI. Madam Speaker, today the House considers H. Con. Res. 47, Commending the Establishment in College Point, New York, of the First Kindergarten in the United States.

The resolution honors the first free Kindergarten established in the United States in 1870 by Conrad Poppenhusen. I would like to note for the record that Margarethe Meyer Schurz—wife of Carl Schurz—opened the first Kindergarten in the United States in Watertown, Wisconsin in 1856.

The following is an article from the August 19, 1998 Capital Times (Madison, WI) detailing the work of Margarethe Schurz that led to the first U.S. Kindergarten in Watertown, Wisconsin.

[From the Capital Times, Aug. 19, 1998]

AUG. 27, 1832: 1ST KINDERGARTEN SPROUTS; SCHURZ WANTED THE BEST EDUCATION FOR HER DAUGHTER

(By Kathy Maeglin)

As a young mother in Watertown in 1856, Margarethe Schurz wanted her little daughter to have the educational advantages she would have had back in their native Germany.

So Margarethe invited four little cousins to come to the house each day for games, singing and crafts. She had been an early student of the "kindergarten" movement in Germany, and now she was employing what she had learned in her own frontier home.

As word of Margarethe's "class" spread, friends petitioned her to let their own children join in. The group moved to a more convenient location downtown, and thus the first kindergarten in America was created.

As Hannah Werwath Swart wrote in her biography "Margarethe Meyer Schurz," Margarethe's background likely would have led her to establish the first American kindergarten even if she had not had any children of her own.

Margarethe Meyer was born on Aug. 27, 1832, to a wealthy merchant family in Hamburg, Germany.

In 1850, when she was a teenager, her older sister Bertha became involved in a Jewish-Christian women's group that had decided to focus on training young children as a way to promote idealism and understanding among all people.

The group invited Friedrich Wilhelm August Froebel, the man who created the first kindergarten in 1840, to come to Hamburg to help them establish one there. Margarethe listened to Froebel's lectures for two years, thereby gaining the knowledge and inspiration that would motivate her later in life.

When she was 19, she moved to London to run a kindergarten that had been established there by her sister Bertha. It was there that she met Carl Schurz, a German revolutionary who had fled his native country.

Carl Schurz was determined to migrate to America, where he could have the free citizenship he so desired and where much of his family had already gone. So after their marriage, the two idealistic young Germans set sail for America.

After living in Philadelphia for a few years, the couple eventually settled in Watertown, which at the time was the second largest city in Wisconsin.

It was shortly after they arrived in Watertown that Margarethe started the activities that would result in the kindergarten (which is German for "children's garden").

But Watertown did not turn out to be the major railroad center that Carl had hoped when he chose to settle there. So Carl made the most of his speaking skills and passion for politics, and he ended up serving as a minister to Spain, a general in the Civil War and finally a U.S. senator from Missouri.

Since her husband's career took her away from Wisconsin, Margarethe entrusted the continuation of her kindergarten to Carl's cousin, Miss Juessen.

Others took over the school in later years and it continued until World War I, when it was closed because the teacher refused to teach in any language other than German, which had become unpopular.

Margarethe Schurz died at the age of 43 on March 15, 1876, in Washington, D.C. But her legacy lives on in schools throughout the country as young minds are cultivated in kindergartens, which Margarethe once described as gardens "whose plants are human."

Mr. CROWLEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Resolution H.

Con. Res. 47, which recognizes the establishment of the first, free public kindergarten in the United States, located in College Point, Queens, New York.

As a native of Queens, I grew up learning about the history of this community, which includes the creation of the first free public kindergarten in the United States.

The community of College Point, just a stone's throw from LaGuardia Airport, Shay Stadium—home of the Mets—and Flushing Meadows-Corona Park—the home of the U.S. Open Tennis tournament—this community was one of the first seeds in the creation of public education in America. Something that represents the Great Equalizer in American society.

It all started in 1854, when Conrad Poppenhusen, a businessman from Germany, built a factory in College Point.

There, he stressed an environment in which his immigrant workers could educate themselves in order to succeed financially, socially, and, most significantly, intellectually.

Just as Henry Ford paid his employees high wages so they, in turn, could purchase his cars, Conrad Poppenhusen represented another industrial genius—that if educating his workforce to make them and their families more successful people in the community.

Fourteen years later, in 1868, Mr. Poppenhusen continued his illustrious educational work by donating $100,000 and establishing the Poppenhusen Institute.

His Institute sustained his original educational mission and expanded on it, by promoting the education of all adults from the greater community—not just his employees.

In 1870, the Poppenhusen Institute once again expanded its educational services to include the first, free, public kindergarten in the United States, a seminal moment in American education and something we celebrate today with this resolution.

The history of kindergarten has been a colorful one in America . . . and one that is big enough for all of us to share, recognize, and honor today.

My friends from Wisconsin will happily point out that the first kindergarten in the United States was based in Watertown, Wisconsin and was founded in 1856 by Margarethe Meyer Schurz.

This private, German-language kindergarten represented a landmark in the educational development of young Americans and we all salute her accomplishments.

Additionally, any debate on the history of kindergarten would be incomplete without reference to the works of Elizabeth Palmer Peabody, a Massachusetts educator who opened the first English-language kindergarten in the United States in 1860.

When she opened her kindergarten in 1860, the concept of providing formal schooling for children younger than six was largely confined to German practice.

These educational pioneers led to the creation, by Conrad Poppenhusen, of the Nation's first, free public kindergarten—a sweeping educational development and a strong basis for the kindergartens we all know and recognize in our country today.

It has always been known that education is the Great American Equalizer—the first step in young Americans lives to live the American Dream.

The actions of Conrad Poppenhusen and his revolutionary kindergarten—the first kindergarten free and open to all, helped engrain the idea of free and public kindergartens throughout our great Nation—opening up the ideals of the American Dream to tens of millions of Americans since then.

The American Dream of using education as a foundation for supporting oneself, one's family. The American Dream of using education as a foundation for a good job, home ownership, and a brighter future overall.

This important moment, when this kindergarten opened in 1870 in College Point, Queens, NY, is all the more profound today, as Department of Education studies show the impact of kindergarten on the children that attend.

Children who are enrolled in kindergarten benefit immensely from the knowledge and skills they learn, while simultaneously profiting from their interaction with children of a similar age.

The reading and math skills, which students learn in kindergarten, are invaluable to a child's later education.

Moreover, for many children, kindergarten is one of the first places in which they interact with students from a multitude of cultural, economic, racial, and religious backgrounds. These early interactions are pivotal in establishing relationships, which promote awareness of the importance of numerous cultures and ideas, something particularly important in Queens, New York, which is seen as one of the most diverse areas of the country.

The effort that began in College Point today remains a significant feature of our education system.

One of the greatest aspects of our nation is that through education, which often starts in kindergarten, each successive generation of children can succeed.

Quite simply, the establishment of the first free, public kindergarten in College Point has made our nation a stronger, better place for generations.

I want to close by recognizing the continued importance of the Poppenhusen Institute and those who serve it. This notable list extends from the first days of class to the work that persists. This list must include the first teacher, Bertha Ploedterl, all the way to Susan Brustmann, the current Executive Director, and James Trent, the President of the Board of Directors.

Today, the work of these individuals and this community has resulted in activities, exhibits, and programs for people of all ages. Programs cover the fields of music, drama, karate, stress reduction.

There are exhibits, such as one on the tragic events of September 11th as well as another on Native Americans.

Individuals can take tours reviewing the archives of College Point to learn, not only about the history of this community, but about our shared American history, in this area, one of the most diverse and welcoming in the world.

Additionally, the Institute collects the living histories of area seniors, so that they are documented for future generations.

While the earliest days of this kindergarten will be remembered for being truly significant to New York and our nation, the true testament to the significance of this Institute is in the proud legacy that continues to live on through its works.

Mr. SKELTON. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I have no further speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 47, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The title of the concurrent resolution was amended so as to read: "A concurrent resolution commending the establishment in College Point, New York, of the first free, public kindergarten in the United States."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HONORING THE SIGMA CHI FRATERNITY ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 163) honoring the Sigma Chi Fraternity on the occasion of its 150th Anniversary, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 163

Whereas the Sigma Chi Fraternity was founded in 1855 by 7 young men at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio in order to establish "an association for the development of the nobler powers of the mind, the finer feelings of the heart, and for the promotion of friendship and congeniality of feeling";

Whereas the Founders of the Fraternity believed that admission to the Fraternity should include men of good character and fair ability with ambitious purposes, congenial dispositions, good morals, a high sense of honor, and a deep sense of personal responsibility;

Whereas for 150 years, the Sigma Chi Fraternity has played an integral role in the positive development in the character and education of hundreds of thousands of young men;

Whereas the brothers of Sigma Chi, being of different talents, temperaments, and convictions, have shared countless friendships and a common belief in the founding ideals of the Fraternity;

Whereas the Sigma Chi Fraternity experience has served as a foundation for post-collegiate success and achievement in all fields of endeavor, from the sciences to education to business to professional athletics to public service;

Whereas the Sigma Chi Fraternity has 202,600 active brothers in 219 active chapters at colleges and universities in 2 countries, making it one of the most highly respected and well-regarded national fraternities in the world; and

Whereas Sigma Chi brothers continue to enrich and contribute to the quality of life in their communities by volunteering innumerable hours of service to nonprofit activities and organizations locally and, at the national level, to the Children's Miracle Network, an alliance of 165 hospitals and healthcare facilities across the United States and Canada that provide needy children with critical healthcare services: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Congress recognizes and honors the Sigma Chi Fraternity on its 150-year anniversary; commends its Founders and all Sigma Chi brothers, past and present, for their bond of friendship, common ideals and beliefs, and service to community; and expresses its best wishes to this most respected and cherished of national fraternities for continued success and growth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE) and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H. Con. Res. 163.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of H. Con. Res. 163 offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GERLACH). House Concurrent Resolution 163 honors the Sigma Chi Fraternity on the occasion of its 150th anniversary.

The Sigma Chi Fraternity was founded in 1855 at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, by seven young men that wanted to establish, and I quote, "an association for the development of the nobler powers of the mind, the finer feelings of the heart, and for the promotion of friendship and congeniality of feeling," close quote.

Today the Sigma Chi Fraternity continues to thrive. Its membership has grown to 202,600 active brothers in 219 chapters at colleges and universities throughout the United States and Canada. Its members continue to enrich and contribute to the quality of life in their communities by volunteering countless hours of service to nonprofit activities and organizations at the national and local levels.

The members of Sigma Chi exemplify the characteristics that the founders of the fraternity believed they should have for admission to the fraternity, good character and fair ability with ambitious purposes, congenial disposition, good morals, a high sense of honor and a deep sense of personal responsibility.

The Sigma Chi Fraternity has also played an integral role in the positive development in the character and education of these young men that have served as a foundation for success and achievements in all fields of endeavor, from the sciences to education to business to professional athletes and to public service.

Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to recognize and honor the Sigma Chi Fraternity on the celebration of its 150th anniversary and commend the fraternity and its members for its service and achievements over the years.

I urge my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 163.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SKELTON. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, it is an absolute privilege and thrill for me to take this opportunity to cosponsor this resolution.

Madam Speaker, I am a Sigma Chi. My father was a Sigma Chi. My next younger brother is a Sigma Chi. And each of our three sons are Sigma Chis. So this moment, when we honor the fraternity of our choice on the occasion of the 150th anniversary, it has added meaning to me and to us.

I also wish to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GERLACH) for introducing this resolution, which is cosponsored by other Sigma Chis, the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR), the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PICKERING), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SCHWARZ), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), as well as me.

I also wish to thank the Education and Workforce Committee and the House leaderships for bringing this resolution to the House floor so very quickly.

Sigma Chi Fraternity was established by its seven founders on commencement day at Miami University June 28, 1855. These seven young men broke away from the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity to form "an association for the development of the nobler powers of the mind, the finer feelings of the heart, and for the promotion of friendship and congeniality of feeling."

In 1951, I had the opportunity to pledge this fraternity at the University of Missouri at Columbia, and from that time on I have been aware of the many outstanding members of our fraternity through the years, people like Andy Grabau, people like John Wayne, Larry McMullen, Ed Matheny, Herbert Shouse Jones, John Alden Tower, Governor James Blair and so many, many others.

Sigma Chi currently has 202,600 active brothers in 219 active chapters at colleges and universities in two countries.

It is one of the most highly respected and well-regarded national fraternities in the world. It also encompasses not just our country, but the country of Canada.

Sigma Chi brothers continue to enrich and contribute to the quality of life in their communities.

Perhaps tie something in regard to the House of Representatives to the people working together with their colleagues in which they learn of good character and fair ability and ambitious purposes, congenial dispositions, good morals, a high sense of honor and a deep sense of personal responsibility. All of this has added to our country.

The history of Sigma Chi is long and interesting. Being founded in 1855 at Oxford, Ohio, it went through the War Between the States and went through the First World War where 103 brothers of the fraternity lost their lives and gave the full measure of devotion to World War I. It also went through the Second World War where so many members of the fraternity fought, some who died and some who were missing. One who received the Medal of Honor, a Captain Maurice Britt from Arkansas received such an honor.

On a more personal level, the chapter to which I belong at the University of Missouri in Columbia was founded on September 26, 1896. At that time one of the founders, a former brigadier general in the Union Army, Benjamin Piatt Runkle, who, by the way, is buried over here at Arlington Cemetery, gave a speech to that crowd and to those new fraternity members. In that speech he spoke to them by saying, you are the offspring of the grandest civilization the world has ever seen. High places are vacant, and men filled with a fraternal spirit must take them. Go forward, faithful, patient, courageous and obedient, ever remembering that the hope of the Nation is in her young men, and that behind the great unknown stands God keeping watch over his own. And what Benjamin Piatt Runkle said on that day in September 1896 in Columbia, Missouri, is just as true today.

So it is a real privilege and honor for me to cosponsor and represent this side of the aisle in honoring the Sigma Chi Fraternity on the occasion of its 150th anniversary, which will be celebrated on the 24th and 25th of this month in Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE SIGMA CHI FRATERNITY: A HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

1855—Sigma Chi Fraternity is founded at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio

1861—During the Civil War, 265 of the 432 total Sigma Chi membership (That's 60%) fight in the conflict. Of this number, 147 were in the Union forces, and 118 were with the Confederacy.

1861—"In Hoc Signo Vincas," a secret motto since 1856, becomes the official public motto.

1870—The eighth Grand Chapter, held in Philadelphia, adopts blue and gold as the fraternity's colors. These colors are now standardized as Blue and Old Gold.

1882—Delegates of the 14th Grand Chapter, held in Chicago, elect John S. McMillin, DePauw 1867, as the first Grand Consul.

1893—Honorary Sigma Chi, President Grover Cleveland, is initiated on January 26. He is the only Sigma Chi to have held the office of President of the United States.

1911—"The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" song was written in June for the 25th Anniversary Reunion of Alpha Pi Chapter at Albion College, Michigan. Byron D. Stokes, 1913, wrote the words in one afternoon in class. He then gave them to F. Dudley Vernor, 1914, who set them to music

1914—The Fraternity adds 103 Brothers to its Fraternity Gold Star Honor Roll for giving their last full measure of devotion during World War I.

1922—After 67 years as a national organization, Sigma Chi becomes international when it installs the Beta Omega Chapter at the University of Toronto on April 22.

1929—L.G. Balfour, Indiana 1907, establishes the Balfour Award, the highest undergraduate honor in the fraternity. The annual award recognizes the most outstanding graduating senior of each undergraduate chapter, province and International Fraternity of that Academic Year.

1929—Past Grand Consul George Ade, Purdue 1887, writes "The Sigma Chi Creed"

1935—The Fraternity creates the Significant Sig Award. This award would be presented at Grand Chapter to alumni whose achievements brought honor and prestige to the Fraternity. Seven Medals were presented at the 42nd Grand Chapter held in Chicago.

1942—Several thousand Sigs, stationed all over the world, serve in the Armed Forces during World War II. Congressional Medal of Honor winner Captain Maurice L. Britt, Arkansas, 1941, becomes the war's most decorated United States Officer. During the War the Fraternity lost 724 members, seven times as many as it lost in World War I.

1948—Sigma Chi commences the Order of Constantine, the fraternity's highest honor, which is bestowed upon alumni members who have devoted long and distinguished service to Sigma Chi 1955—The Fraternity celebrates its Centennial in June 28 in Oxford, Ohio, as a part of the 50th Grand Chapter, which met in Cincinnati.

1971—The Grand Chapter marks the climax and resolution of the nearly 15 years of internal strife in the Fraternity over the proposed initiation of minority groups. Grand Chapter delegates voted to remove the restrictive passages in the Fraternity's Governing Laws, validating earlier actions of the Executive Committee and granting active chapters increased autonomy in membership selection.

1977—The Fraternity recorded its 150,000 initiate.

2001—Eleven Sigma Chis die in the September 11th terrorist attacks on the United States.

2005—Grand Consul Lee Beauchamp announces the Fraternity's zero tolerance policy for hazing, alcohol abuse, and substance abuse. The Executive Committee approves a new statement of Position on Academic Performance. Among other provisions, it requires members to attain a GPA of 2.5 out of 4.0 (or the equivalent), or a GPA that is above the campus' all-men's average, whichever is lower.

2005—Sigma Chi celebrates its 150th birthday with a grand celebration in Cincinnati.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I will be very brief. I just want to add my congratulations to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) on being a proud member of this fraternity. And it is exciting, I am sure, to see a father-to-son tradition established there. So I extend my congratulations to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) and all my colleagues who are fortunate enough to be a member of this very great fraternity.

I urge all my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, I am proud to rise today in strong support of H. Con. Res. 163, honoring the Sigma Chi Fraternity on its 150th anniversary.

Like hundreds of thousands of men across the country I am honored to be a member of the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

Although I was a Sigma Chi at the University of Maryland, I share a strong bond with my brothers across the country and around the world, including my fellow Sigma Chi men in Congress. We are connected by the shared tenants of our fraternal organization and we try to live our life by the "Jordan Standard"—the Cornerstone of the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

Sigma Chi played an important role in my personal development and provided me with relationships that will last a lifetime. These experiences are not unlike the experiences that millions of other men and women have had with their respective fraternities and sororities.

Although sometimes ridiculed, the Greek system on the whole—without question—has made countless positive contributions to society.

Many of our Nation's leaders, from those in business to those in public service, are members of fraternities or sororities, including our current President. The benefits to our communities from these individuals—whose first leadership and service experiences were often through their involvement with the Greek System—are immeasurable.

Furthermore, beyond planting the seeds of leadership, fraternities and sororities compel their members to conduct themselves in accordance to the highest standards of honor, morality, and academic excellence.

Since its inception in 1855 at Miami University in Oxford, OH, Sigma Chi has helped young boys develop into strong, well-rounded, Sigma Chi men. I am proud to be a part of this fine organization and I congratulate Sigma Chi on its 150th year anniversary. May its good deeds and reputation of excellence endure for the next 150 years.

I ask my colleagues to join me and the other original cosponsors, Representatives GERLACH, FARR, HYDE, OXLEY, PICKERING, SCHWARZ, SHUSTER, and SKELTON, in support of this legislation.

Mr. KLINE. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 136, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FLOYD LUPTON POST OFFICE

Mr. DUNCAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2326) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 614 West Old County Road in Belhaven, North Carolina, as the "Floyd Lupton Post Office".

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2326

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FLOYD LUPTON POST OFFICE.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 614 West Old County Road in Belhaven, North Carolina, shall be known and designated as the "Floyd Lupton Post Office".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the "Floyd Lupton Post Office".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DUNCAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 2326.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNCAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

On behalf of the Committee on Government Reform, I rise in support of H.R. 2326. This bill would designate the postal facility located at 614 West Old County Road in Belhaven, North Carolina, as the "Floyd Lupton Post Office." Floyd Lupton, who passed away on Tuesday, May 10th of this year, was chief of staff to former Congressman Walter Jones, Sr., who served with such great distinction in this body from 1966 until 1992.

H.R. 2326 was authored by Mr. Jones' son, the distinguished current Member from North Carolina, Congressman WALTER JONES, Jr., one of my closest friends in this body and one of our finest Members. All Members of the North Carolina State delegation have cosponsored this legislation, and I join them in strong support.

Madam Speaker, Floyd Lupton, Sr., was born and raised in the town of Pantego, North Carolina, near the Atlantic coast in 1922. He went to college at North Carolina State University, but like so many of his generation, his education was interrupted by World War II. Floyd left home to heroically serve in the Army's 99th Infantry Division, with which he fought in the Battle of the Bulge, among other combat experiences. For his heroism Floyd earned the Bronze Star, and he was honorably discharged as a first lieutenant.

After the war, Floyd Lupton returned home to work on the family farm in Pantego. He later worked stints with Norfolk Western Railroad, the State Wildlife Commission and the Beaufort County Sheriff's Department.

But most notably, Madam Speaker, Floyd served for 26 years as the top aide to the late Congressman Walter Jones, Sr. Floyd Lupton earned a tremendous reputation with Members of Congress, staff and constituents as both a very dedicated adviser to Congressman Jones and an empathetic liaison with the people of North Carolina's First Congressional District.

One of the most difficult jobs in this Nation is to work on a congressional staff, and Mr. Lupton did it with great honor for 26 years. He took very seriously his responsibility working in the people's House and greatly valued all opportunities to help his friends and neighbors throughout his years of public service.

Mr. Lupton retired after 26 years on Capitol Hill in December of 1991 and returned home to Belhaven. There he enjoyed an active retirement with his beloved wife, Doris Ambrose. Floyd and Doris were married nearly 48 years before Doris unfortunately passed away on June 24th of 1996. Floyd passed away on May 10th of this year, but this post office will memorialize his career of service to the State of North Carolina and to the country that he loved so much.

Madam Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) for working to honor his father's trusted assistant, Floyd Lupton. I support this meaningful piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, H.R. 2326 would designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 614 West Old County Road in Belhaven, North Carolina, as the Floyd Lupton Post Office.

As the ranking member of the Committee on Government Reform, I am pleased to join my colleagues in the consideration of this bill, legislation designating this facility in Belhaven, North Carolina, after the late Floyd Lupton. This measure was introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) on May 12, 2005, and it was unanimously reported by the Government Reform Committee on May 26, 2005. It enjoys the support and cosponsorship of the entire North Carolina State delegation.

Floyd Lupton, a native of North Carolina, grew up in Pantego, North Carolina. He attended North Carolina State University when he left to join the Army. He served in the 99th Infantry Division, received a Bronze Star and was honorably discharged.

After serving in the military, he returned home to Pantego. In 1966, he began working for the late Congressman Walter Jones, Sr., as his administrative assistant. He held that position for 25 years until his retirement in 1991. As administrative assistant Fred earned the reputation as a person who was dedicated to the Congressman, the district and the constituents. He was always available to all, night or day, and never forgot who he was or where he was from.

□ 1445

Upon his return, Mr. Lupton served on numerous boards, associations and community organizations. At the time of his death, he was serving as a member of the Beaufort County Community College Board of Directors. Sadly, he passed away on May 10, 2005.

Madam Speaker, I commend my colleague for honoring the legacy of the late Floyd Jackson Lupton, Senior, and I urge the swift passage of this bill.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Madam Speaker, I yield for such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES), my colleague, the author of H.R. 2326.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from California. His remarks were absolutely excellent and to the point, a very fine public servant.

I am only going to take a few minutes. I certainly want to thank the chairman and the ranking member of the committee in getting this legislation to the floor.

Madam Speaker, as fate would have it, Floyd Lupton and my father were a team. I do not know anyone that knew anything about the congressional office that would not say the same thing because my daddy, as many of my colleagues remember, who served with him on the floor of the House, at one point in his career became chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and it took a great deal of his time. Floyd always was there to take care of the needs of the people of the 1st Congressional District and to make sure that the office was running as smooth as a congressional office can.

I think about the personal relationship that my family had with Floyd Lupton. We were like family, quite frankly.

Floyd would drive my daddy home most of the weekends from Washington, D.C., to eastern North Carolina, and I would know that my father was coming home. My mother would call and say, "Walter, your dad is going to be here pretty soon with Floyd; don't you want to come up here and have a bit of time with him and socialize?" I did that so many times.

Those days of being there with my father and Floyd, when they were driving back from Washington, in a house in a little town of Farmville, 5,000 people, were very special times for me and my family because we were a family.

When Floyd came to Washington, Madam Speaker, he spent I do not know how many hours after the Congress had finished of staying out at 7:30, 8:30, 9:00 at night, calling constituents back home to say hello, trying to help someone who had a problem that they finally had answers and/or they could at least listen to that constituent to see if they could find answers.

Floyd, as has been said by the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) never, not one time, did he seek anything for himself. His only concern were the people of the 1st District of North Carolina, and I think about how humble a man Floyd Lupton was, a man that always had time. He never would look past anybody when he was talking to them. He would look them straight in the eye. He would always take time when maybe he did not have the time, but no one ever realized that he had something else to do as he always had a way about himself so that people knew that he cared.

Sadly, at his funeral, which I know that he is in heaven, there is no question in my mind about that, with his lovely wife Doris, but they asked me to speak at his funeral. It was an extremely emotional time for me, and I remember when one thing I did say that if anybody wanted to know the definition of public service, all they would have to know is Floyd Lupton because he exemplified exactly what a public servant is.

I have just a couple of more comments and then I will yield back my time. Too many times when buildings, and whether it be a post office or a Federal building or State building, we always seem to think about someone who was elected to public life and, therefore, it is easier for that person who was elected to public life to be remembered, but in this case, I want to say again to the ranking member and to the Chamber that I am grateful that today we will hopefully pass legislation that will remember a public servant that never held public office. He could have probably if he had been a younger man, but he gave 26 years, as has been stated, to serving my father and to serving the people of the 1st District at the same time.

This is so fitting, and I know I speak on behalf of thousands of people in eastern North Carolina who knew Floyd Lupton when I say thank you to the committee of jurisdiction for getting this legislation to the floor. I know also I speak for his family as well. They will be thrilled and excited that we got this legislation to the floor of the House, and hopefully it will pass this evening.

Secondly, I want to say that this Congress, I have the greatest respect for this institution and the fact today that we will hopefully pass H.R. 2326 on behalf of a man who never asked anything but what can I do to help you. That is the legacy of Floyd Lupton.

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I have no other requests for time, but I do want to say how moved I was by the gentleman's presentation. I have known Floyd Lupton only through the descriptions and the information, the cold statistics, that have been furnished to us, but the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) has given us a picture of a man who, through his service and his availability and his commitment to the public good, is well deserving of the tribute that we are bestowing upon him by naming this facility after him. I hope it will stand as an example for others to look at, the plaque that will be posted there, as a tribute to a man that they should remember as an example for all people to be committed to the kinds of ideals that he stood for.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to thank our colleague the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) for his very moving and heartfelt tribute to Mr. Floyd Lupton who obviously was a great American, and I am proud to be associated with this legislation. I, again, urge passage of H.R. 2326.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2326.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

NET WORTH AMENDMENT FOR CREDIT UNIONS ACT

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1042) to amend the Federal Credit Union Act to clarify the definition of net worth under certain circumstances for purposes of the prompt corrective action authority of the National Credit Union Administration Board, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1042

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Net Worth Amendment For Credit Unions Act".

SEC. 2. CLARIFICATION OF DEFINITION OF NET WORTH UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES FOR PURPOSES OF PROMPT CORRECTIVE ACTION.

Subparagraph (A) of section 216(o)(2) of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1790d(o)(2)(A)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "the" before "retained earnings balance"; and

(2) by inserting " together with any amounts that were previously retained earnings of any other credit union with which the credit union has combined" before the semicolon at the end.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BACHUS. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 1042.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACHUS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation, H.R. 1042, the Net Worth Amendment for Credit Unions Act, which I and the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), the ranking member, introduced along with 16 other cosponsors, evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats, including ranking members of both committees.

It is a so-called technical amendment, but it is also a very important piece of legislation designed to address the potentially harmful and unintended consequences of the recently proposed FASB accounting rules of mergers of financial institutions and, in particular, credit unions.

Because this new accounting rule is expected to become effective early next year, it will impact, going forward, credit union mergers, and it is essential that we have in place H.R. 1042 prior to that time. This legislation has been endorsed by FASB. It has the endorsement of the Federal credit union regulators.

I had testimony which I would like to introduce from NCUA chairman Joanne Johnson who testified before the Committee on Financial Services this past Thursday in strong support of this legislation. In fact, she said without this legislation, it would be hard to, in cases of mergers, provide the safest, most efficient and most beneficial mergers to the benefit of credit union consumers, and she says this legislation is essential for credit union consumers and for their protection.

It has no opposition that I know of. As far as explaining the rule, I am going to submit in its entirety two different pieces on actually what the issue is, what the solution is. The solution is 1042, and then I would like to introduce this two-page summary.

Let me briefly try to very briefly state what this does.

Under the current FASB rule, credit unions are able to use the pooling of interests method of accounting for mergers; however, the new rule will require use of the purchase method.

In doing that, they did not anticipate the current definitions in the National Credit Union Act. Under the new approach that FASB will be instituting, an institution is not permitted to bring over the retained earnings of the acquired institution onto its own balance sheet as retained earnings, but rather as acquired equity. Thus, the surviving institution, the institution which is taking the other institution into its corporate being, would not be able to count the retained earnings of the merged institution in its net worth for purposes of prompt corrective action purposes under the Federal Credit Union Act.

And the Prompt Corrective Action, as those of us on Committee on Financial Services know, is the mechanism to bring credit unions into compliance as far as safety and soundness. This change, therefore, would have the unintended effect of lowering the merged credit union's net worth category classification.

We have taken testimony of Board members of FASB who say this was not their intent; and as I said, they are in favor of the current legislation. So the practical effect of FASB's directive changing the accounting treatment of credit union mergers from the pooling method to the purchase method are perhaps illustrated by a simple hypothetical.

Under the pooling method previously used to account for a combination of two credit unions, if a credit union with $2 million in retained earnings merged with a credit union with $2 million in retained earnings, the surviving credit union would have $4 million in retained earnings, simply, two plus two equals four, which counted as its net worth for purposes of applying the Prompt Corrective Action capital requirements outlined above.

However, under the new purchase method of accounting mandated by the new FASB rule, if a credit union with $2 million in retained earnings merges with another credit union with $2 million in retained earnings, the surviving credit union would only have $2 million in retained earnings, not a result that makes any sense, and our legislation simply preserves the two plus two equals four.

As I say, Madam Speaker, the legislation simply amends the Federal Credit Union Act's definition of net worth to include retained earnings of both credit unions that merge in the net worth of the credit union that continues after the transaction. Failure to make this statutory change will create major disincentives to otherwise merged credit unions.

We took testimony last week from George Reynolds, Senior Deputy Commissioner of the Georgia Department of Banking and Finance, and I would like to include his statement, but what he and others have pointed out to the committee is that oftentimes, whether it be a bank or a thrift or a credit union, if you have one credit union that is sound and one that may be in need of corrective action, one of the alternatives is to merge the weaker institution into a stronger institution for the protection of the members of that credit union.

The NCUA, and also the different State commissioners of banking and bank supervisors, and credit union supervisors had not been able to do this because of the anticipation of the FASB rules. It has resulted in a lot of hesitancy in merging these institutions and, in many cases, is slowing corrective action because of this. So failure to make the statutory change will, as I say, create major disincentives.

A credit union seeking to merge with another union institution would be faced, in many situations, with a marked decline in its capital for PCA purposes once the merger went through, giving rise to a supervisory intervention by the NCUA designed to limit its growth and restore its now depleted capital to acceptable levels when actually there would have been no depletion of capital at all.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I rise today to urge the House to suspend the rules and adopt H.R. 1042, the Net Worth Amendment For Credit Unions Act. I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit, for bringing this issue before the Committee on Financial Services in a timely manner. I would also like to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), and members of the committee who joined with Chairman Bachus and me in sponsoring this somewhat technical but important legislation.

H.R. 1042 addresses a potential problem for a growing number of credit unions that arises under the Basel II negotiations on international capital accounting standards. In 1996, the Financial Accounting Standards Board, known as FASB, and the International Accounting Standards Board, initiated a joint project to develop a single uniform standard for assessing the value of the assets and liabilities acquired in business mergers and acquisitions.

The effort resulted in the issuing of FASB statement 141 back in June of 2001. This statement required the use of the "purchase method" of accounting as the most appropriate standard for assuring that the assets of an acquired business will be uniformly measured at their fair market value at the time of acquisition.

Thus, FASB abolished the then very popular "pooling method" of accounting, which had been widely used to measure the assets of surviving credit unions in credit union mergers. The pooling method had permitted the combining of the retained earnings of both the surviving and the merged credit unions to determine the net worth of the surviving credit union. Under the purchase method, which is now required under FASB 141, the retained earnings of the merged credit union must be listed as "acquired equity," a concept that did not exist at the time the Federal Credit Union Act was last amended on this issue.

Currently the Credit Union Act recognizes only retained earnings in calculating a credit union's net worth and its net worth ratio. Accounting procedures that fail to recognize that the retained earnings of the merged credit union would seriously reduce the postmerger net worth ratio of the surviving credit union. This could have the effect of discouraging a number of needed mergers between smaller or weaker credit unions with a healthy credit union, and it could result in determinations that the surviving credit union in the merger is technically undercapitalized, even when that surviving credit union has a large amount of capital. It is simply that some of that capital is listed as "acquired capital," or "acquired equity" a term that did not previously exist in our law, and some of it is listed as "retained earnings."

H.R. 1042 provides a narrow technical fix for the problem of postmerger accounting of credit union net worth. It amends the current definition of net worth for purposes of the Federal Credit Union Act to allow both retained earnings of a credit union and "any amounts that were previously retained earnings of any other credit union with which the credit union has combined" to be included in calculating a credit union's net worth and its net worth ratio.

Where the FASB 141 standard became effective for most business combinations initiated after June 30, 2001, FASB had agreed to defer the implementation for mergers and acquisitions among so-called mutual business enterprises, including credit unions, until the end of 2005. The National Credit Union Administration approved 330 mergers involving federally insured credit unions in 2004, many of which could have resulted in technically undercapitalized credit unions if FASB 141, imposing the purchase method, had been applicable. The Agency projects a similar number of mergers in 2006 that would be adversely affected unless we pass this legislation.

Madam Speaker, H.R. 1042 is bipartisan legislation which addresses a potential problem for credit unions that needs to be resolved this year, because next year FASB 141 will be applicable to mutual businesses, including credit unions. It is supported by the National Credit Union Administration, the National Association of State Credit Union Supervisors, and also by both national credit union trade associations, the Credit Union National Association, CUNA, and the National Association of Federal Credit Unions, NAFCU.

I am aware of no opposition to this bill, and I urge the House to suspend the rules and adopt the Net Worth Amendment for Credit Unions Act.

Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BACHUS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and let me simply conclude by saying that when the NCUA seeks a healthy credit union, or when there is a troubled credit union and the NCUA seeks a healthy credit union to rescue it through merger, the pooling of potential White Knights is presently limited because of the present interpretation. And as they have said, "They are limited by the prospect of a significant postmerger reduction in capital for the acquiring credit union under the present interpretation, if the FASB rule goes forward without this legislation." It goes on to say, NCUA, that "this will inevitably make NCUA-assisted mergers more difficult to execute, resulting in more credit union failures and a higher cost to the National Credit Union's Share Insurance Fund, which insures the deposits to credit union members."

So I conclude by saying that for this reason, among others, not only the NCUA but also the National Association of Federal Credit Unions, NAFCU, and the Credit Union National Association, CUNA, strongly support this legislation to ensure an accurate depiction of net worth in credit union mergers and to avoid creating unintended obstacles to mergers that would otherwise benefit credit union members.

In addition, FASB has stated that, while it does not take positions on public policy initiatives unless they could impair the mission and independence of FASB, it believes H.R. 1042, and I quote, "does not propose to establish or change general purpose standards of financial accounting and reporting and, therefore, has no impact on the standard-setting activities of FASB."

I would like to again thank, and I will name as I close, the cosponsors of this legislation: Introduced by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), myself, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE), the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FEENEY), the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY), the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY), the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY), the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE), the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. GUTIERREZ), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KANJORSKI), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATOURETTE), the gentlewoman from

New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RENZI), and as I said, the main cosponsor, ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

So that, I think, illustrates not only what the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) said, that there is no opposition to this legislation, but also the strong bipartisan support that this has across this Congress.

Madam Speaker, I submit for the RECORD herewith the various documents referred to throughout my remarks:

NASCUS

[Written Testimony of George Reynolds, Senior Deputy Commissioner, Georgia Department of Banking and Finance on behalf of the National Association of State Credit Union Supervisors Before the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit, United States House of Representatives, April 13, 2005]

NASCUS HISTORY AND PURPOSE

Good afternoon, Chairman Bachus, and members of the Subcommittee. I am George Reynolds, Senior Deputy Commissioner for the Georgia Department of Banking and Finance. I appear today on behalf of the National Association of State Credit Union Supervisors (NASCUS), the professional state credit union regulators association. NASCUS represents the 48 state and territorial credit union supervisors, dedicated to defending the dual chartering system for credit unions and advised by the NASCUS Credit Union Council, which is comprised of more than 500 state-chartered credit unions.

In addition to being a state regulator, I am a certified public accountant allowing me to study and understand the accounting standards recommended by the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB). Today I have made recommendations on behalf of NASCUS regarding the impact of changes to the accounting standards regarding mutual institutions.

The mission of NASCUS is to enhance state credit union supervision and to advocate policies that ensure a safe and sound state credit union system. We achieve those goals by serving as an advocate for a dual chartering system that recognizes the traditional and essential role that state government plays as a part of the national system of depository financial institutions.

NASCUS applauds the introduction of H.R. 1042, the Net Worth Amendment for Credit Unions Act, which amends the definition of net worth to include the net worth of a credit union merged with a surviving credit union. We appreciate the earnings" after the merger, period. There is no room, then, for discretion and that has pros and cons.

Other federal banking regulators have authority to exclude items from measures of pre-merger equity that do not have value to the insurance fund in a liquidation scenario, e.g., core deposit intangibles, goodwill, etc., thus not "overvaluing" resulting postmerger capital. The language provided by NCUA last year was intended to provide NCUA a comparable capital (GAAP equity) starting point and comparable authority to subtract similar items from "retained earnings" in mergers.

However, concern surfaced with the earlier language that somehow NCUA might be put in the position of adding to what qualifies as "net worth" and consequently the more precise language of HR 1042 was agreed upon.

5. How is "secondary capital" accounted for in mergers currently, and will this change under HR 1042?

Post merger, secondary capital counts as part of PCA net worth only if continuing FISCO is low income designated.

6. Is NCUA seeing an unusual rise of voluntary mergers of insured credit unions this year, in anticipation of the FASB rule being implemented for credit unions?

No

7. Does NCUA support SFAS 141?

It's fair to say that the credit union industry is not welcoming the accounting rule change from the pooling to the purchase method for financial accounting purposes. However, that is not what we are addressing or trying to influence here today or in HR 1042. NCUA and the credit union industry are trying to prepare for and adjust to the pending implementation of SFAS 141—and conform to the options provided to others by FASB to bring capital over as "acquired equity" when there are business combinations.

NCUA and the credit union industry are grateful to FASB for their consideration of mutual enterprises (thus, cooperative credit unions) by providing an exception to the rule when it was implemented in 2001 for others—this has given all of us time to explore ways to address the unexpected consequences.

Is 8. NCUA trying to interfere with FASB's accounting rulemaking authority?

Absolutely not. NCUA has nothing to do with financial accounting reporting standards and FASB will proceed as it deems appropriate. NCUA's interest is limited to supporting a solution to the unintended consequences that impact our proper safety and soundness role under the prompt corrective action provisions of the FCUA. The FCUA needs to be amended so NCUA can recognize the retained earnings of a merging credit union, and this is comparable to what Congress permits in its statutes for other financial institutions.

I would also point out that our reform proposal addresses an important technical amendment needed to the statutory definition of net worth. NCUA anticipates that the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) will act soon to lift the current deferral of the acquisition method of accounting for mergers by credit unions, thereby eliminating the pooling method and requiring the acquisition method. When this change to accounting rules is implemented it will require that, in a merger, the net assets on a fair value basis of the merging credit union as a whole, rather than retained earnings, be carried over as "acquired equity," a term not recognized by the "Federal Credit Union Act" (FCUA). Without this important change, only "retained earnings" of the continuing credit union will count as net worth after a merger. This result would seriously reduce the post-merger net worth ratio of a federally insured credit union, because this ratio is the retained earnings of only the continuing credit union stated as a percentage of the combined assets of the two institutions. A lower net worth ratio has adverse implications under the statutory "prompt corrective action" (PCA) regulation. This result will discourage voluntary mergers and on occasion make NCUA assisted mergers more difficult and costly to the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund (NCUSIF). Without a remedy, an important NCUA tool for reducing costs and managing the fund in the public interest will be lost. Thus, our reform proposal provides for a revised definition of net worth to include any amounts that were previously retained earnings of any other credit union.

PRESERVING CREDIT UNION CAPITAL IN MERGERS CURRENT LAW

Current law and FASB rules permit the recognition of the "retained earnings" of both the surviving and merged credit union after a merger. In 2004, there were 338 mergers involving federally insured credit unions (237 voluntary, 7 assisted and another 94 mergers pending). In 2003, there were 299 mergers (294 voluntary, 5 assisted).

THE PROBLEM

The Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) is expected to act in 2005 to lift the current deferral (and use of the pooling method) and thereby begin the use by credit unions of the acquisition method of accounting in mergers by early 2006. This will eliminate the practice of accounting for mergers as a pooling of interests which credit unions have relied upon. When this change to accounting rules is implemented it will require, in a merger, that the retained earnings-like component of one credit union be carried over as "acquired equity," a term that is not recognized by the FCUA.

Without a change to the Federal Credit Union Act, only the "retained earnings" of the continuing credit union will count as net worth after the merger for purposes of PCA. This can seriously reduce the post-merger net worth ratio of combined federally insured credit unions. A lower net worth ratio has adverse implications under the statutory "prompt corrective action" provisions in the Federal Credit Union Act, and it is this result that will strongly discourage voluntary mergers and, on occasion, make NCUA assisted mergers more difficult and costly to the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund (NCUSIF).

H.R. 1042 "NET WORTH AMENDMENT FOR CREDIT UNIONS ACT"

On March 2, 2005, Representative Spencer Bachus (R-AL) and Bernard Sanders (I-VT) introduced H.R. 1042, the "Net worth Amendment for Credit Unions Act." They were joined by the following original co-sponsors: Representatives Ed Royce (R-CA), Paul Kanjorski (D-PA), Steven LaTourette (R-OH), Luis Gutierrez (D-IL), Sue Kelly (R-NY), Carolyn Maloney (D-NY), Rick Renzi (R-AZ), Carolyn McCarthy (D-NY), Brad Sherman (D-CA), Bob Ney (R-OH), Tom Feeney (R-FL), Darlene Hooley (D-OR), Ginny Brown-Waite (R-FL).

WHY THIS LEGISLATION SHOULD BE ADOPTED

This amendment to the Federal Credit Union Act (FCUA) is needed to provide certainty for the recognition of pre-merger "retained earnings" for purposes of PCA as necessitated by SFAS 141.

The FASB has expressed support for a legislative solution and has indicated that a legislative redefinition of capital (net worth) in the FCUA will not affect their standards-setting activities.

When crafting the prompt corrective action provisions of the FCUA in 1998 applicable to federally insured credit unions that only recognized "retained earnings" of a single credit union as net worth, the drafters did not anticipate this merger accounting policy change by FASB.

The consequence of not making this change will dramatically alter the treatment of retained earnings and net worth in a manner that will make it difficult or impossible for many credit unions to consider combining their strengths through merger. This seriously reduces the post-merger net worth ratio, because that ratio is the retained earnings stated as a percentage of the combined assets of the institutions. Potential acquiring credit unions would naturally find the prospect of being demoted to a lower net worth category, and potentially subject to more supervisory actions, too high a price to pay to merge with another credit union.

Failure to make this change will undermine the purpose of "prompt corrective action" which is to resolve the problems of credit unions while minimizing losses to the National Credit Union Administration Share Insurance Fund (NCUSIF). Fewer willing merger partners mean fewer opportunities to avert losses to the NCUSIF by merging a troubled credit union. Credit union mergers have traditionally been effective in accomplishing both objectives while preserving the continuity of credit union service to the target credit union's members.

Banks and their insurers do not have the same concerns because their existing capital definition under relevant law is broader. The FASB rule, in combination with their broader statutory definition of capital, would not result in similar problems for banks and thrifts because they are allowed to include virtually all components of "equity" in their capital.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1042.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12(a) of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 6:30 p.m. today.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 14 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until approximately 6:30 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. GILCHREST) at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 8, rule XX, proceedings will resume on motions to suspend the rules previously postponed.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

S. 643, by the yeas and nays.

H.R. 2326, by the yeas and nays.

This will be a 15-minute vote followed by a 15-minute vote.

AMENDING AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT TO REAUTHORIZE STATE MEDIATION PROGRAMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the Senate bill, S. 643.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 643, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 371, nays 2, not voting 60, as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 242, I was detained concerning a pressing legislative matter, Base Realignment in the 3rd District of Arkansas, and unable to vote. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent from this Chamber today. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on rollcall votes 241 and 242.

NO CHILD LEFT BEHIND SUCCESSES

(Mr. PRICE of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in classrooms across the country, schools are making the grade when it comes to No Child Left Behind. In my home State, Georgia is making significant gains. The achievement gap is narrowing as students in schools are held accountable for their performance. Educators know that merely promoting students to the next grade level is not the solution to low test scores.

In 2002, 64 percent of African American fifth-graders passed the State math test compared with 86 percent of white students, a 22 percentage point gap. Now, thanks to No Child Left Behind, 80 percent of African American students passed the test, compared with 92 percent of white students, a 10 percent improvement.

In 2002, 71 percent of Hispanic third-grade students passed the State reading test compared with 90 percent of white students, a 19 percentage point gap. This year, 86 percent of Hispanic students passed the test compared with 96 percent of white students. Again, nearly a 10 percent improvement.

Mr. Speaker, No Child Left Behind is working. Student test scores are rising. But more importantly, students are leaving the classroom with the fundamental skills necessary to succeed at the next level and in life.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KUHLE of New York). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

SMART SECURITY AND IRAQ WITHDRAWAL PLAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, one would not travel to a foreign country without making a plan. And one would not buy a house without first making a plan, so why does the Bush administration insist on fighting a quarter trillion dollar war without a plan to end it? It is totally irresponsible for the White House to ask 150,000 United States troops to serve in a dangerous country halfway around the world without a plan to bring them home.

With over 1,700 American soldiers killed in action thus far, representing more than 1 percent of our total force in Iraq, our government owes them the courtesy of planning on how we are going to bring them home.

Unfortunately, the government has failed our troops in Iraq from the very beginning. First, we did not have a plan on going in and why we were going in.

Next, the Pentagon neglected to provide life-saving body armor for each and every one of our troops. A study by the Pentagon released last year stated that nearly one-quarter of those killed during the first year of the war could have been saved with the proper body armor; but we did not plan to protect them well.

Now with over 1,700 American soldiers dead, the government has continually neglected to plan for an end to this disastrous war. President Bush likes to talk about the importance of high troop morale, but he needs to talk to the Veterans Against the Iraq War. They will tell Members the best way to ensure high morale, and they will say the best way is for our soldiers to be assured they will actually be coming home, they will leave Iraq and there will be a plan to make it happen.

The way to ensure that and to raise their morale is by starting to bring them home. Why then has President Bush not stated America's long-term intentions in Iraq? His comments on the subject have been limited to statements like, We will stay until the mission has succeeded and not one day longer.

Mr. Speaker, how does he define the mission as succeeded when he will not even acknowledge that there is an actual end to the mission?

Even if the President will not create a plan to end the war in Iraq, there are many in Congress and around the country who will. Earlier this month nearly one-third of the House voted for the amendment I offered to the defense authorization bill to urge the President to create a plan for the withdrawal of troops from Iraq. This sensible amendment would not have whisked our troops out of Iraq prematurely, it simply asked the President to get busy and develop a plan for the end of this war.

Believe me, if he does not, we will because the people of this country want to bring our troops home. Fortunately, there is a plan that would secure America for the future, SMART Security. SMART is Sensible, Multilateral American Response to Terrorism for the 21st Century. SMART will help us address the threats we face as a Nation and will make war the last option.

SMART Security will prevent acts of terrorism in countries like Iraq by addressing the very conditions that allow terrorism to take root: Poverty, despair, resource scarcity and lack of educational opportunity.

SMART Security encourages the United States to work with other nations to address the most pressing global issues. SMART addresses global crises diplomatically instead of by resorting to armed conflict.

Efforts to help the Iraqi people must follow the SMART approach, humanitarian assistance coordinated with our international allies to rebuild Iraq's war torn physical and economic infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, the American people clearly prefer the SMART approach to our current policies in Iraq. Nearly 60 percent of Americans believe the war in Iraq has been handled poorly and that the United States should immediately begin withdrawing some or all of our troops. Let us support our troops in Iraq and the will of 60 percent of the American people. We can do both by beginning to bring home our troops serving in Iraq. The time is now. The time is now to end the United States military occupation of Iraq.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise again tonight on the floor of the House to talk about the issue of prescription drugs and how much Americans pay relative to consumers in the rest of the industrialized world. What we have on this chart are the prices effective February 7, 2005, so they are relatively new. We have prices here from the Metropolitan Pharmacy in Frankfurt, Germany, and a local pharmacy in my hometown of Rochester, Minnesota.

Over the last year, we expected the prices to narrow because of what has happened to the dollar relative to the euro, but, in fact, the price difference between what Americans pay and Germans pay has actually gotten worse.

Let me give a couple of examples. A drug called Norvasc, 30 tablets, 5 milligrams, in Rochester, Minnesota, $54.83. In Germany, only $19.31.

Drop down to another drug, and these are 10 of the most commonly prescribed drugs in the United States and in Europe. Zocor, $85.39 for a month's supply in the United States, and in Germany it is $23.83.

Mr. Speaker, what is important about that particular drug is for many of the programs, including many of the Federal employees, the copay here in the United States for that drug is $30. You can walk in off the street and buy it at the Metropolitan Pharmacy in Frankfurt, Germany, for less than the copay in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the chart speaks for itself. The total for the 10 most commonly prescribed drugs in Germany is $455.57. In the United States it is more than double that at $1,040.04.

The question is how does this happen? The answer is Americans are held hostage because pharmaceutical companies get a special provision that nobody else gets. They deal with intellectual property, and the cost of that first product coming off the line is very expensive and that is why they have to have these high prices. I understand that. The cost of the research for a new drug is extremely high. That first new pill can cost 350, 400, maybe even $500 million. But it is the same thing for Intel when they develop a new chip, but Intel does not get the same protections. They cannot sell their chips to Germans for half the price they sell them to Americans because the suppliers would start selling them back in the United States. That is what is called parallel trade, and that is what they have had in Germany for a long time.

Throughout the European Union, a pharmacist in Germany can buy their supplies from Spain or from Norway or wherever they can buy that Zocor cheaper. As a result, they have a competitive marketplace over there. If Members want to learn more about that, we have a videotape by Dr. Peter Rost, who is an M.D. and he is an executive with one of the largest pharmaceutical companies in the world, and he has come out in favor of parallel trading.

He is very strongly in favor of the bill I have introduced which is cosponsored by a wide range of Members of the House which would open up the pharmaceutical markets, much as we do with everything else.

I also want to say a special tribute to Minnesota's governor, Governor Tim Pawlenty, because he was one of the first governors to recognize that Minnesotans should not be held hostage. And now he has opened up not just the drugs from Canada, but we have actually opened up to Great Britain as well.

One of the things that he often says is the industry says this is unsafe. He says if it is really unsafe, show me the dead Canadians and the dead Europeans and the dead Germans.

The truth of the matter is they do this every day and they are not genetically smarter than we are. We ought to have the same ability to use parallel trade to reduce these outrageous prices here in the United States.

I also want to show a letter that I, and 220 of my colleagues, sent to the Speaker of the House recently. A majority of the Members of this House want to have a vote to allow Americans to have access to world-class drugs at world market prices, and we are going to continue to put pressure on the leadership, on the administration, on the FDA, whoever it takes to make certain Americans get fair prices.

Mr. Speaker, ultimately we do not want something for nothing. We do not believe we ought to take advantage of somebody else, but we do not think we should be taken advantage of either, and it is time Americans get fair prices. It really is time that the world's best customers have access to the world's best drugs at world market prices.

I hope more Members will join me in this effort because I believe the time has come to make that certain we open up these markets so we get fair prices for consumers. Whatever their particular condition, we want fair prices and we want them now.

AMERICAN FOREIGN SERVICE ASSOCIATION AWARD WITHDRAWN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to express my disappointment with the American Foreign Service Association, and its decision to withdraw awarding a "Constructive Dissent" award to U.S. Armenian Ambassador John Evans.

Ambassador Evans was due to receive the Christian A. Herter Award for intellectual courage, initiative, and integrity later this week. The award was as a result of courageous statements he made regarding the recognition of the Armenian genocide.

In a series of public statements, Ambassador Evans, who has studied Russian history at Yale and Columbia and Ottoman history at the Kennan Institute stated, "I will today call it the Armenian genocide."

Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Evans has studied history of Armenia, and based on his substantial studies of the issue, he is willing to go on the record and define the actions taken Armenians as genocide. The Armenian genocide was the systematic extermination, the murder, of 1.5 million Armenian men, women and children. To this day, the Republic of Turkey refuses to acknowledge the fact that this massive crime against humanity took place on soil under its control, and in the name of Turkish nationalism.

Unfortunately, some 90 years later, the U.S. State Department continues to support Turkey's demands and denials despite all evidence to the contrary. It is not likely that the State Department was happy that their Ambassador to Armenia acknowledged the Armenian genocide. And, therefore, Ambassador Evans retracted his remarks after receiving substantial pressure from the State Department.

Well, now the selection committee at the American Foreign Service Association has decided to withdraw the award with no reason for its actions. I find the timing of the decision peculiar. The sharp turnaround came right before Turkish Prime Minister Erdogan arrived in Washington for a meeting with President Bush. Based on past history, it is clear that the State Department, the Bush administration, and the pro-Turkish lobby pressured AFSA to withdraw Ambassador Evans' award.

It is simply unacceptable for this administration to continue to penalize the ambassador for his comments. Ambassador Evans did a courageous thing. His statements did not contradict U.S. policy, but rather articulated the same message that this administration has sent to the public. The only difference in this case is that Ambassador Evans assigned a word to define the actions taken against the Armenians.

This was a refreshing break, I must add, from a pattern on the part of the State Department of using evasive and euphemistic terminology to obscure the full reality of the Armenian genocide. Ambassador Evans pointed out, and I quote, that no American official has ever denied it, and went on to say, and I quote, I think we, the U.S. Government, owe you, our fellow citizens, a more frank and honest way of discussing this problem.

Ambassador Evans was merely recounting the historical record, which has been attested to by over 120 Holocaust and genocide scholars from around the world. By doing this, he earned a prestigious award that was taken from him because of politics and denial.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add my voice to all those who, in Ambassador Evans' own words, and again I am quoting, think it is unbecoming of us as Americans to play word games here. I believe in calling things by their name. Evans was right, and the American Foreign Service Association was correct in awarding him the Christian A. Herter Award. We should encourage our Ambassadors to speak the truth, and, more broadly, end, once and for all, our complicity in Turkey's campaign of genocide denial.

Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Evans has been penalized for simply telling the truth. The American Foreign Service Association has set a terrible example by retracting Ambassador Evans' award. I guess, even in America, the Turkish Government is able to stifle debate.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2862, SCIENCE, STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2006

Mr. GINGREY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 109-122) on the resolution (H. Res. 314) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2862) making appropriations for Science, the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2006, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KUHLMANN of New York). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. OSBORNE addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

CAFTA: A LOSE-LOSE PROPOSITION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GENE GREEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight during the 5-minute time in opposition to the flawed free trade agreement the administration signed with the Dominican Republic and Central American countries. My colleague from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) has an hour later, but I wanted to do a 5-minute on the Central American Free Trade Agreement and the Dominican Republic.

Over the past year we have continued to learn about this agreement. During this time the opposition to CAFTA, as it is called, has only grown stronger. The more we learn, the more we realize that CAFTA is a lose-lose proposition. It is no secret that CAFTA is modeled after the NAFTA agreement that was supposed to create new markets for U.S. products and lift up the low-income people in Mexico. The unfortunate result of NAFTA was the loss of 50,000 jobs and a widening of the income gap in Mexico.

Make no mistake, wealth in Mexico has increased since NAFTA, but it has not been evenly distributed. Since NAFTA, an additional 19 million Mexicans are impoverished, and President Vicente Fox has stated that 54 million Mexicans are too poor to meet their basic needs. With 10 percent of the Mexican population controlling half of the nation's wealth, it is easy to see that the average Mexican worker has not benefited from NAFTA. One would think our country would learn from the many failures of NAFTA instead of applying the nearly identical trade provisions to the Central American and Dominican Republic.

I have long opposed free trade agreements with countries with substantially lower standards of living than we have here in the United States. I am proud to represent the third most blue-collar district in our country. The workers in our district benefit from the labor laws on the books of our country. While our labor laws could certainly be strengthened, they ensure that our blue-collar workers receive a living wage and make up a thriving middle class in our country, although a shrinking middle class in our country, might I add.

I have no doubts whatsoever about the skills and productivity of our American workers, but they cannot compete against similar workers in Nicaragua, for example, where wages average about $200 a month. This salary differential puts the American worker and American products at a disadvantage, one that this country should not allow to be exploited through a free trade agreement.

The labor laws of the CAFTA countries do not come close to meeting international standards. Each of the DR-CAFTA countries has been cited by the International Labor Organization for policies which provide inadequate protection against antiunion discrimination. Four of the five countries have laws on the books that significantly impede workers' ability to strike, and each of the countries has laws that restrict union formation or union leadership.

Mr. Speaker, free enterprise includes not only me as a businessperson, but also me as a person to be able to collectively bargain for my wages and my working conditions. What is worse, the CAFTA agreement has no real enforcement mechanism to force a change in these labor laws. True, the agreement technically requires the enforcement of all labor laws, and as a penalty for failing to enforce its labor laws, a CAFTA country must pay a fine to improve the labor conditions. However, the agreement contains no guarantee that the fine will be used for that purpose. In fact, as a party to the CAFTA agreement, the U.S. has the ability to withdraw trade benefits only based on whether that fine is paid, not on how that money is used.

This provision violates the spirit of the fast track negotiating authority under which Congress will consider CAFTA. Under fast track, all parts of an agreement must be subject to equal remedies. Yet under CAFTA, the penalties for labor violations are much weaker than those involved in commercial disputes, whether it be copyright or some other commercial dispute.

Make no mistake about it, this agreement is not in the interest of the Central American worker or the American worker. This agreement would just open the door for American multinational corporations or other countries' multinational corporations to shift their operations overseas for cheap Central American labor. In the interest of both American workers and the Central American workers, I encourage my colleagues to join me, and a majority of this House, in opposition to DR-CAFTA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

IRAQ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EMANUEL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, this Congress approved an additional $82 billion for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. That is on top of the other $220 billion that we had appropriated, raising the total cost of this war to more than $300 billion. If that was not enough, this week we are about to approve another $45 billion as a bridge loan for the operations in Iraq, bringing the cost up to $350 billion. What have we gotten ourselves and what have we accomplished in the last 2 plus years and after nearly now $350 billion of American taxpayer money?

We defeated Saddam Hussein's regime, but today we find ourselves mired in an endless occupation with the inability to find a way out of our occupation of Iraq. In fact, the generals there say we are years off from ever being able to extricate ourselves from Iraq. Operation Iraqi Freedom was a war of choice. As President Kennedy once said, "To govern is to choose."

One can only hope that the war in Iraq was the right choice.

Every President in the middle of a war has thought and laid out a vision of America after that war, how to see of all the sacrifices that America made, how the benefits of the war would come home. President Lincoln thought of the land grant colleges and the transcontinental railroad system in the midst of a civil war. He saw a way of building America when it became clear we were going to win that war. President Roosevelt, the GI bill and universal health care; President Truman, the minimum wage, universal health care; President Eisenhower, on the heels of the beginning days of the Cold War as well as the closing days of the Korean War, the Interstate Highway System today. President Kennedy, in the midst of Vietnam and the early days of his administration of a cold war, envisioned a man on the moon and NASA, where America would dominate space and all the benefits that would come from that. President Johnson saw health care as his vision, Medicare and Medicaid.

While we are fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan, while Americans have lost 1,700 of their fellow citizens, over 10,000 who have been wounded and cost us $350 billion of taxpayer-funded entities and a taxpayer-funded war, what is our vision? What has this President said? How does he see America down that horizon, that point out there on the horizon as you look forward? What are we going to build? What vision do we lay for the next generation for all the sacrifices Americans have made, not just in blood and in treasure, but for our sense of our country?

As I said, President Lincoln saw an intercontinental railroad system. This President wants to eliminate Amtrak. President Eisenhower built highways. The highway system we have today was laid out by President Eisenhower. President Bush is threatening to veto the highway bill. President Kennedy saw a man on the Moon. The President has walked away from his vision of putting a man on Mars. President Roosevelt saw a GI bill for the troops to come home. Just this last week we cut or eliminated the opportunity for our National Guard and reservists to get health care.

Every President during the midst of a war has had a vision of America after that war that was bigger, grander and worth all the sacrifice that said the benefits of that war, America's prestige, would come home in material benefits to America. That is why we have an intercontinental highway system. That is why we had a railroad system. That is why we had the land grant colleges. That is why we put a man on the Moon. We saw a vision, every President that led this country both through war and then through peace.

It is at this time that this President needs to lay out a vision, and, let me tell you, it needs to be larger than a tax cut. That is not a vision. Somehow, do we have a universal broadband, so America leads again technologically? Would you see in the midst of a war a President who submits a budget that cuts the National Institutes of Health, a President who eliminates from the National Science Foundation $100 million from its budget, yet we placed 16th for the first time in computer sciences? That is not a vision of America that goes forward. That is a smaller, a reduced America, an America that does not see itself in the grand scheme of things.

When President Bush ran for the nomination in 2000, he announced that he was against nation-building. You look sometimes at this budget, you look at what he has done, and who knew it was America he was talking about when it came to nation-building? It is time for this President to lay out a vision that says, with all the sacrifices, his vision for America, what we are going to do. We are going to build in the science, we are going to build in the medical field, we are going to provide universal health care. What is it? It has got to be more than a veto of a highway bill, and it has got to be more than the elimination of 60 vocational programs. It has got to be more than walking away from landing a man on Mars. It has got to be a vision that says the sacrifice was worthy of this country and its great commitment to democracy around the world.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. WATERS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Ms. WATERS addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

CAFTA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. SOLIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, today I also rise to join my colleagues in opposition to the Dominican Republic Central American Free Trade Agreement, known as CAFTA. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) and other Members of Congress will shortly be speaking for a special hour to take note of the negative effects that CAFTA will have not only on the American public, but also our relatives and friends that live in Central America.

I have the distinction of being one of the few Members of Congress with family that lives in Central America. I have seen firsthand for myself the conditions that people are currently living in there right now, in a small country known as Nicaragua where the poverty levels are just outrageous. There is no relief that will come through CAFTA, in my opinion.

As I see it right now, what we have learned from the NAFTA trade agreement that was passed some 10 years ago, before I came to this House, we will see the same pillaging occur with individuals who represent Central American countries, particularly young women. The pattern does not change.

In my visit there 2 years ago, I had a chance to see women outside at 5 o'clock in the morning, over 300 women lining up to enter into these maquilas, these assembly plants, if you will, in free trade zones that were set up in El Salvador and Nicaragua. In El Salvador they were lined up to begin their work of 12 to maybe 14 hours a day, gaining maybe less than $30 a week, living far from their families in areas that would not provide them with decent housing or even sanitation. And I am concerned because when we talk as a country, a great Nation protecting the rights of our workers here, we also set an example for those individuals that represent other foreign countries when we say we want to open up fair trade agreements.

In my opinion, this is not an agreement that I support. I can tell you by hearing from people there firsthand that have told me that they do not believe that they are going to reap any benefits; that the profits will go to the big corporations, whether they are U.S. or other foreign entities. That money, I do not believe, will stay there to help restabilize and provide infrastructure, clinics, education and decent housing for the people that will be working there for many years to come.

In fact, what we have seen occur in Mexico is that, yes, we set up our maquiladoras there along the border in an area like Ciudad Juarez, and soon we found that they could go for cheaper labor by leaving there, almost half of those maquilas, and transporting their factories to China where they could get a lower cost for wage labor and provide less protections for people in the workplace. Meanwhile, those products are coming back to this country.

My question is, why is it that this country feels somehow that it is good to provide incentives for big corporations who do not pay taxes here and allow for the squalor and mistreatment of people in an inhumane way abroad, yet we are supposed to be setting an example?

I know that the President a year ago introduced this proposal, and he has yet to bring it up because I understand that his own party is not in support. He has many Members that are very reluctant to support CAFTA because we have seen a number of jobs, over 750,000, that have left this country. In my district alone during NAFTA, we lost more than 1,000 jobs, many in the textile and agricultural industry, many of those low-paying jobs that were held by Latinos.

So when I think about CAFTA, I think about what is going to happen again to those individuals in this country, people who are right now trying to make a living and will see soon their jobs leave this country and go abroad. What will they then be left with holding the bag?

All I can tell everyone is that there are many of us here, including the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, 14 members, a good majority of our Members, who voted against CAFTA, and I hope that everyone here is paying attention because we are not just speaking from our own districts, but we are talking also about individuals representing those different countries who have come here on different pilgrimages to come and talk and inform us as legislators. They too will be here this week to talk to us about what they see in terms of the wrongness about this CAFTA agreement.

And I hope that Members in our party as well as the other side of the aisle will come to some reason that we could maybe put this aside and maybe renegotiate this whole effort because I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are heading down a wrong path. I do not want to see any more of our jobs leaving and then bringing about what I would call a suppression of the workforce in those Central American countries, particularly when it affects women. When we see 14- and 15-year-old women having to work for 14 and maybe 16 hours a day, 6 days a week, not being able to go to school, not having any health care coverage, not having a decent wage to help support their own families, then I have to ask the question why are we heading down that path? And that is something that I truly believe my constituents support me on, and I have heard from them as well. We had a forum at Cal State Los Angeles recently where we had ten individual witnesses speak, and there is a resounding no for CAFTA.

So I would urge my colleagues to pay attention and to heed the concerns that we have here in the Congress such as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) and other Members that have been leading the cause.

THE UNITED NATIONS REFORM ACT OF 2005

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KUHLMAN of New York). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the Members about the United Nations Reform Act of 2005, which the House will be considering on Thursday of this week. I would like to commend the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE), whose skillful leadership was essential in both crafting and moving this important bill through committee, and I would like to thank the House leadership, whose commitment and support to this legislation of global importance has been critical to moving it swiftly to the House floor for consideration.

The United Nations Reform Act of 2005, Mr. Speaker, aims to institute long-overdue U.N. reforms by addressing and correcting the numerous scandals and institutional failings that have characterized the United Nations, a flawed structure that gives rise to discrimination and negligence at best, and corruption, profiteering, and collusion at worst.

The Oil-for-Food scandal is a primary example of these failings. As a result of the mismanagement of the contracts, out right graft and corruption when the administration of the Oil-for-Food program by the U.N. staff and by Saddam Hussein was implemented, it not only made a mockery of the humanitarian aid program, but it collected an estimated $20 billion while the U.N. turned its head. Yet the Oil-for-Food program is but one example of an institution that is rife with financial scandal.

Some other notable examples include in 1995, for example, scandal consumed the Kenya office of UNICEF, the U.N. body created to provide assistance to the world's disadvantaged children, when that office defrauded or squandered up to $10 million in agency funds. Another example, in 1996, a senior U.N. official at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the body providing technical assistance for the least developed countries, was investigated on suspicion of embezzling between $200,000 and $600,000.

Another example, in 1997, 16 past or present employees of the United Nations Development Programme, which was created to help countries design and carry out development programs in poverty eradication, employment creation, and sustainable livelihoods, they were placed under investigation after more than $6 million was siphoned off over an 8-year period.

To combat these deficiencies, the United Nations Reform Act before us this week has built in budget certification requirements, accountability provisions to address the mismanagement and the corruption, including: holding the United Nations Secretary General accountable to certify that the United Nations' budget is maintained at the approved level; two, requiring that the U.N. budget be more transparent by requiring more details on the budget categories; three, creating an Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Board of External Auditors, including the ability to appoint a special investigator and staff to investigate matters involving senior United Nations officials and also creating an Office of Ethics which will be responsible for creating and managing a code of ethics for all United Nations employees, including education and annual training and publishing of U.N. staff salaries.

The scandals involving U.N. peacekeeping are even more horrible than these. One example, Mr. Speaker, while

I finish this Special Order, of these terrible crimes is appalling and unacceptable, but, unbelievable, the appearances of crimes involving sexual misconduct on the part of U.N. peacekeepers over the past decade have become frequent to include incidents of, for example, the Congo, where the U.N. peacekeepers and civilian personnel stand accused of widespread exploitation in a sexual manner of refugees; two, Burundi, where two U.N. peacekeepers were suspended following allegations of sexual misconduct; three, Sierra Leone, where U.N. peacekeepers were accused by Human Rights Watch of systematic rape of women; and, four, Bosnia, where the U.N. police mission was accused of misconduct, of corruption, and sexual trafficking.

This is just horrendous. The U.N. repeatedly and reportedly quashed an investigation into involvement of U.N. police in enslavement of Eastern European women in Bosnian brothels.

In response, the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is going to have some provision to deter these horrible incidents and bring a level of respect to the United Nations, and I hope that our colleagues will support this Hyde bill this week.

Among others, it includes provisions that mandate the: adoption of a minimum standard of qualifications for senior leaders and managers; adoption of a uniform Code of Conduct which applies equally to all personnel serving in U.N. peacekeeping operations regardless of category or rank; written acknowledgement by personnel sent as peacekeepers that misconduct may include immediate termination of participation in an operation; and establishment of a permanent, professional, and independent investigative body dedicated to United Nations peacekeeping.

It is monstrous that an international organization charged with operating peacekeeping missions around the world and with assisting nations to rebuild after major turmoil has experienced an alarming number of scandals involving sexual exploitation, rape, sex trafficking, misconduct, harassment, and other criminal acts.

However, not only has systemic mismanagement and corruption been a recurring characteristic of the United Nations, but the U.N. organization is being corroded by discrimination against Israel and anti-Semitism as never before.

The viciousness with which Israel continues to be attacked at the U.N., and the reluctance of Member states to defend Israel or to accord it the same treatment as other countries, suggests that there is a considerable anti-Semitic component behind the policies pursued in U.N. forums.

In addition to multiple manifestations of anti-Semitism at the U.N., the most notorious being the 1975 U.N. General Assembly resolution equating Zionism, the national liberation movement of the Jewish people, with racism, Israel continues to be subject to debilitating forms of discrimination within that organization.

Israel is not allowed to present candidacies for open seats in any U.N. body, is not able to compete for major U.N. bodies, and cannot participate in U.N. conferences on human rights, racism and a number of other issues.

By contrast, there are several U.N. groups devoted to "Palestinian Rights," and a disproportionate representation of Palestinian issues through different committees and commissions.

This Act seeks to end discrimination against Israel in the United Nations system and ensure fairness and objectivity in the United Nations' handling of Israeli-Palestinian issues by: expanding WEOG to afford Israel permanent membership in this group with full rights and privileges; mandating a State Department review and assessment of the work performed by the various United Nations commissions, committees, and offices focusing exclusively on the Palestinian agenda, followed by the submission of a report recommending areas for reform, including proposals for the elimination by the U.N. of such duplicative entities and efforts; and withholding proportional U.S. contributions to the United Nations until such time as the recommendations are implemented.

The Commission on Human Rights and its feeder body, ECOSOC, are also emblematic of these deficiencies within the U.N. system.

There remains great difficulty in securing support for condemnations of gross human rights violators, when the worst offenders sit on the actual Committee, dictate the agenda and block any meaningful resolutions from being adopted.

Yet, there have been few condemnations and measures, if any, addressing the continuing gross human rights violations by serial abusers such as Iran and Syria.

While gross human rights offenders such as Syria, Libya, Iran, and Saudi Arabia have been members of this U.N. human rights body, these regimes have not been censured, condemned, or held accountable in any way for their deplorable human rights record.

In response, among other provisions, this Act stipulates that: a Member State that fails to uphold the values embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or are under U.N. Security Council sanctions be ineligible for membership on any United Nations human rights body; secret voting in the Economic and Social Council should be abolished, and a recorded vote must be conducted to determine such membership of the Commission; and countries that meet that criteria should be ineligible for membership on the Commission.

Similarly at the IAEA we remain concerned that serial proliferators continue to be accorded full rights and responsibilities within this organization.

A few years ago, proliferators such as Iran and Iraq, who was under Security Council sanctions at the time, were scheduled to serve as Chairs of the Conference on Disarmament.

Iran, a nation who continues to be under investigation by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) due to its breaches and failures of its safeguards obligations, served on the Board of Governors of the IAEA.

Countries who are in non-compliance of their obligations under international agreements and in violation of the rules that serve as the basis for individual U.N. bodies, cannot and must not be entrusted with the enforcement of those very rules and obligations.

This Act addresses these and other concerns by seeking the establishment of: an Office of Compliance and Enforcement within the Secretariat of the IAEA to function as an independent body of technical experts that will assess the activities of Member States and recommend specific penalties for those that are in breach or violation of their obligations; and a Special Committee on Safeguards and Verification to advise the IAEA Board of Governors on additional measures necessary to enhance the agency's ability to detect undeclared activities by member nations.

Furthermore, it seeks the suspension of privileges for Member States that are under investigation, or are in breach or non-compliance of their obligations, and seeks to establish Membership criteria that would keep such rogue states as Iran and Syria from serving on the IAEA Board of Governors.

The IAEA section of this Act reinforces U.S. priorities concerning the safety of nuclear materials and counter proliferation by: calling for U.S. voluntary contributions to the IAEA to primarily be used to fund activities relating to Nuclear Security or Nuclear Verification and inspections; by seeking to prioritize funding for inspection to focus on countries of proliferation concern; by seeking to prevent states-sponsors of terrorism, proliferations, and countries under IAEA investigation from benefiting from certain IAEA assistance programs.

The United Nations Reform Act of 2005 also ensures transparency in the IAEA budget process by calling for a detailed breakdown of expenditures.

The U.N. is accountable to neither taxpayers nor voters.

As a safeguard, the United Nations Reform Act of 2005 targets crucial areas of the U.N. organization to ensure that U.S. taxpayer money hauled off to Turtle Bay is spent in an efficient, transparent, and accountable manner.

Additionally, the bill empowers the Administration to fix the U.N. by making it very clear that U.S. funding to that body will be drastically cut unless the U.N. takes the appropriate actions to save itself.

I look forward to Thursday's debate and ask my colleagues to render their full support to this much-needed legislation.

CAFTA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, at a White House news conference 2 weeks ago, President Bush called on Congress to pass the Central American Free Trade Agreement this summer. Last week in this Chamber, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), the most powerful Republican in the House, promised a vote by July 4. Well, he actually promised a vote last year, and then he promised a vote again in May, but this time he means it, I think, and we are going to actually vote on this by July 4.

I am joined tonight by the gentleman from Niles, Trumbull County, Ohio (Mr. RYAN) and the gentlewoman from Toledo, Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), two of my colleagues from my State; and there will be the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) and others coming along later.

Mr. Speaker, many of us who have been speaking out against the Central American Free Trade Agreement have a message for the President, and that is we should renegotiate CAFTA.

President Bush signed CAFTA more than a year ago. Every trade agreement negotiated by this administration has been ratified by Congress within 2 months of its signing. Australia, Singapore, Chile, Morocco, each of those trade agreements the President signed was passed, was ratified, was voted on by Congress within a couple of months. CAFTA, however, has languished in Congress for more than a year without a vote because this wrong-headed trade agreement offends both Republicans and Democrats. It offends small manufacturers and labor. It offends environmentalists and food safety advocates. It offends religious organizations in Central America and in our country.

But most importantly, Mr. Speaker, look at what our trade policy has brought us. In 1992 the United States trade deficit, in other words, how much we import versus how much we export, our trade deficit was $38 billion, the year I first ran for Congress, in 1992. Last year this trade deficit was $618 billion. It went from $38 billion to $618 billion in literally a dozen years. It is hard to argue our trade policy is working when the deficit goes from $38 billion to $618 billion in just a dozen years.

Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, the Senate Finance Committee is scheduled to take up CAFTA in what is called a mock markup. In tomorrow's mock markup, 10 legislators from Central America will attempt to offer statements on behalf of the hundreds of thousands of Central Americans who oppose this dysfunctional cousin of the North American Free Trade Agreement. I say these legislators will "attempt" because they have not been asked nor, the word we get, will they be allowed to offer any official remarks at any hearings on CAFTA.

Instead, the administration and CAFTA supporters in Congress crafted a one-sided plan to benefit multinational corporations at the expense of U.S. workers and businesses, U.S. farmers and ranchers, and Central American workers and businesses and Central America's farmers and ranchers. Opponents to CAFTA know it is simply an extension of NAFTA, which clearly, as the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) has pointed out on this floor for a dozen years, has not worked for our country.

It is the same old story, Mr. Speaker. Every time there is a trade agreement, the President says it will mean more jobs for the U.S., it will mean increased manufacturing in the U.S., increased exports of American-produced goods to other countries, and better wages for developing countries.

But look at this chart, Mr. Speaker. The States here in red are States that in the last 5 years have lost 20 percent of their manufacturing. Michigan, 210,000 jobs, more than 20 percent of their manufacturing base; Illinois, 224,000; Ohio, 216,000; Pennsylvania, 200,000 jobs; North Carolina, 228,000; Mississippi and Alabama combined, about 130,000 jobs. In State after State after State, we have lost 20 percent of our manufacturing base. In many of the other States, we have lost thousands of jobs also.

So they continue to promise more jobs, more manufacturing, more exports, a higher standard of living in the developing world. But with every trade agreement, their promises fall by the wayside in favor of big business interests that send U.S. jobs overseas and exploit cheap labor abroad. In the face of overwhelming bipartisan opposition, the administration and Republican leadership have tried every trick in the book to pass this CAFTA.

As I said earlier, we in this body could agree on a Central American Free Trade Agreement, but not one that is tilted against American workers, not one that is tilted against workers in Central America, not one that is tilted for the drug industry and against the environment and against worker rights.

But this year, because nothing else seems to be working in convincing Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, the administration is linking CAFTA to helping democracy in the developing world. Defense Secretary Rumsfeld, Deputy Secretary Zoellick, both have said CAFTA will help in the War on Terror. I am not sure how. They have never really explained that. But that is what they claim.

Ten years of NAFTA, Mr. Speaker, has done nothing to improve border security between Mexico and the United States; so that argument does not wash. Then in May, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in one of their famous junkets that we hear more and more about from some of our friends in this body, flew the six presidents from Central America and the Dominican Republic around our country, hoping they might be able to sell CAFTA to newspaper editors, to our country's voters, to our country's Congress. They flew to Albuquerque. The Chamber of Commerce flew these six presidents to Albuquerque and to Los Angeles; to New York; to Miami; to Cincinnati, my home State of Ohio.

Again they failed. And after the trip, the Costa Rican President broke off from the group and announced that his country would not ratify CAFTA unless an independent commission could determine the agreement will not hurt the working poor.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have seen demonstration after demonstration in Central America, 45 demonstrations with more than 150,000 workers, opposing this agreement. Some of their Presidents might be for it, some of them might be, but their workers certainly are not. In this case, this was in Guatemala, when the police went up against 8,000 workers, two of these workers were killed by their country's security forces.

Now the administration is trying something different. They have opened up the bank. Desperate after failing to gin up support for the agreement based on its merits, CAFTA supporters now are attempting to buy votes with fantastic promises. If history is any example, should the promises fail, they will try and force votes their way with outrageous threats.

Instead of wasting time with toothless side deals, U.S. Trade Ambassador Portman should negotiate a CAFTA that will actually pass Congress. Republicans and Democrats, small manufacturers and labor groups, farmers, ranchers, faith-based groups in all seven countries, religious leaders, environmental human rights organizations and workers are all speaking with one voice: Renegotiate CAFTA; give us a CAFTA, but one very different from this.

This CAFTA will not enable Central American workers to buy cars made in the district of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) or the district of the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR.) They will not enable Central American workers to buy software developed in Seattle, or prime beef in Nebraska.

A Nicaraguan worker, Mr. Speaker, earns $2,800 a year. The combined economic output of the Central American nations is equivalent to that of Columbus, Ohio, or New Haven, Connecticut, or Orlando, Florida, or Memphis, Tennessee. Workers in the United States make $38,000 a year on average.

Workers in Costa Rica make $9,000; Dominican Republic, $6,000; Nicaragua and Honduras, the average makes significantly less than $3,000 a year. They are not going to buy the cars made in the district of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) or the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR). They are not going to buy steel made in my district. They are not going to buy apparel made in North Carolina. They are not going to buy software from Seattle, or prime beef from Kansas. They simply cannot afford to do this.

This CAFTA is not about exporting American products. It is about U.S. companies moving plants to Honduras, paying $2,600 a year; outsourcing jobs to El Salvador, where workers make less than $5,000; exporting cheap labor in Guatemala where workers make $4,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, when the world's poorest people can buy American products and not just make them, then we will know that our trade policies are working.

Mr. Speaker, we should renegotiate; defeat this Central American Free Trade Agreement, start again and renegotiate a CAFTA that will lift up workers and environmental standards in all the involved countries.

I would like to yield to my friend from Toledo, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), and thank her for her terrific work for years on trade issues.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the able Member the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for spearheading this Special Order this evening and for the great work he always does, and the gentleman from Youngstown, Ohio, and the surrounding areas, for being so much a part of our efforts to change America's trade policy so it again works for America's communities, America's workers and America's farmers.

If you loved NAFTA, you are going to love CAFTA, and I cannot think of a single American that really loves NAFTA, because we have lost so many jobs, nearly 1 million jobs, since that agreement was passed in 1993.

It is really amazing to me to think about everything that is needed in this country and what the Bush administration is trying to push through this Congress. Just look at rising gas prices. Is this administration and Congress really trying to do anything to help America become energy-independent again? No, not really. We continue to become more dependent on imported petroleum than before this administration took office.

All of our pension funds are underfunded. The Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, which is supposed to undergird all of our Nation's pension funds in private industry, needs over $23 billion to try to restore just the current needs in that bill. Are we getting a bill to fully fund the Nation's pension guarantee fund? No. The bill is not coming up here on that.

What about Social Security? Well, their answer is privatize it. Try to divert money from the regular trust fund, rather than finding a way to make sure that Social Security is healthy long term.

Health care, is anything really being done to insure America's families and to try to take care of all those in our nursing homes who do not have enough nurses at bedside? No, that bill is not coming up here.

Or veterans, to make sure we have enough money in the accounts of this country to take care of all the disabled veterans returning home? We see our Family Assistance Centers having to raise money to buy special access ramps to people's houses and to try to take care of families because we lack TRICARE when our veterans come home. No, we are not getting a bill to do anything about that.

What we are getting is we are getting a bill that would expand NAFTA to include five more countries, actually six more countries if you count the Dominican Republic. What it would do is add over 50 million more people into this NAFTA union, people who have hands to do work, but who through that work cannot really increase their own standard of living, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) has said, who could buy the goods that are made in this country, because they do not earn enough to afford them. But it would add 50 million more people to this trade effort.

That means that our jobs, as happened with NAFTA, would continue to be outsourced, shipped out, even in greater quantity than they already are, to Guatemala, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, all these places so very far from home, and more of our agricultural production as well.

So we are literally being asked in this agreement to add a State the size of California, 50 million people, or four States the size of Ohio, actually five Ohios, if you look at the population of the countries that they are trying to add to this DR-CAFTA agreement, add that many more people to our union and then say it is all going to work.

This is an example of what has happened since NAFTA was passed back in the early 1990s and what has happened to our trade deficit, if you add NAFTA, if you add the special agreement with China and all these other trade agreements. We have fallen every year into deeper and deeper and deeper deficit. We are now over half a trillion dollars a year more goods coming into this country than exports going out.

I just wanted to place the record as I begin my comments this evening that in the last official count in March-April of this year, the overall U.S. trade deficit in goods and services rose another 6.34 percent from March to April, climbing from $53.6 billion to $57 billion overall, on top of all of the deficit we already had from last year, and this represents the fourth highest combined monthly deficit on record for our whole country.

The deficit with Mexico in that period of time rose to $4.4 billion, up another 3.29 percent, and the deficit with Canada rose to $5.4 billion, just for that month, another 8.9 percent increase.

If I could just demonstrate these other two charts as I begin this evening, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) referenced the trade deficits in various countries.

With Canada, since NAFTA was signed, the proponents said, just like they are saying now, if we sign this agreement, we are going to have all the trade. Except it is modeled after the NAFTA accord. And after we signed NAFTA with Canada, though we already had a deficit with NAFTA, after the signing of NAFTA it just went deeper and deeper to where it doubled and tripled, more production in Canada than here in the United States. With Mexico, the very same pattern.

This type of accord provides America with lost jobs, lost income, more imports coming in here than exports going out. With Mexico when NAFTA was signed, we actually had a little trade surplus with Mexico. We have fallen into heavy, heavy deficit, now nearly $50 billion a year in the hole with Mexico.

Finally, before I yield back the time the gentleman was kind enough to give me, we already have today a $1.9 billion deficit in goods with these nations already. All CAFTA is going to do is push those numbers further down, which means more lost jobs in Ohio, more workers who cannot afford to own their home, these increasing bankruptcies we see across our country, and the same-old-same-old being thrust upon the American people voted on here in this Congress by some of the most powerful economic interests on the face of the globe.

So I am very thankful that the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SOLIS) was speaking earlier this evening, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GENE GREEN), now the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN), to talk about, you know what, it is time to draw a line in the sand and say if an agreement has been out of whack, seriously in deficit for more than 3 years, it ought to be renegotiated, and we should not add any more pain to the American economy than we already have.

I want to thank the gentleman for allowing me to speak this evening.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank my friend for her terrific work representing American workers.

I yield to my friend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN).

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) and the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) for their leadership on this issue. For years and years you guys have been at the forefront of this issue, and now it is becoming a little more trendy, a little more popular, to be against some of these trade agreements. I would like to thank you as a new Member, second term. I am a lucky guy to have two Members in the Ohio delegation with such strong leadership on this issue.

As we talked about the trade deficits, whether they are with one country or the overall trade deficit, I think it is important, and this is the real disconnect that I think the administration and many of the people who are supporting CAFTA are missing. The disconnect is with those people who are in our district, those people who lose manufacturing jobs, those people who lose textile jobs, whether in the Southern States, those are the people we are here to represent.

If the trade agreements that we have been signing, whether it was NAFTA or PNTR or Most Favored Nation with China over years and years and years, if they are not working for everyone, then they are not good trade agreements for the United States of America.

I am sure both of you represent counties that probably have the same kind of situations that the counties in my districts have. They cannot pass a sales tax; they cannot pass police and fire levies, library levies, school levies. I think two-thirds of the school levies that were on the ballot in Ohio last year failed, two-thirds.

So years ago we were promised when we had the debate, we are going to pass NAFTA, but we are going to invest in education. We are going to trade with the Chinese, but we are going to make sure that our workers are the most skilled, educated and healthiest workers on the planet. We failed to do that on this end, and at the same time we sign agreements that do not have the labor standards, do not have the environmental standards to help lift these people up.

As the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) pointed out earlier, with the average wage of a Nicaraguan worker, what are they going to buy here? What are they going to buy that comes out of the United States? Not a Jeep from Toledo, not a Cobalt from Lordstown, Ohio. They cannot afford it. It would take them 10, 15, 20 years to come up with the kind of money that they would need to just buy a car coming out of the United States of America.

I think it is important, because it is not just about CAFTA. If we take a step back and we try to look at how the world is going to look in the next 10 or 20 years, we have high-tech jobs making their way to India and China, and we have a lot of our manufacturing going to China that has come from Mexico, first it went down to Mexico and then over to China, and everyone keeps talking about this new economy and what is it going to be.

Well, we do not really know what it is going to be. Nobody seems to know what this new economy is going to be like. We are going to have the high-tech jobs, and our people are going to work, and it is going to be great. It will be like America is going to be one big country club. Everybody is white collar, everybody gets to golf and go to the swimming pool, and it is going to be great. That was the idea they were trying to pitch to us in the 1990s, and it did not work out that way.

So it is important for us, I think, not only those of us against the trade agreements, but as Democrats, to say this train is so far down the track, we do not even know how much we are going to be able to stop it. I think it starts with CAFTA would be a good place for putting our stake in the ground and trying to go in another direction.

But at the same time, we have got to invest in education, we have got to make sure we have healthy citizens. Eighty-five percent of the students that go to Youngstown city schools qualify for free and reduced lunch. That is probably the same, if not higher, in Cleveland and Toledo. Fifty or sixty percent of those kids live in poverty.

So even if we just, for the sake of argument, say these trade agreements are great, let us all compete; let us educate our kids; let us do what we have to do to compete with them, free markets, which we do not always buy, but let us for the sake of argument say that. How are we going to have the kids in Youngstown able to compete against these workers in the other countries if we are not investing in education and not making sure they are healthy, lifted out of poverty and on the playing field?

I will say this before I yield back: We are going on the global field of competition with less than half a team because these kids are not getting the kind of education, the kind of health care that they need.

So here we are trying to compete with the Chinese, now we want to do it with some other countries, and we just are not making the proper investments to even come to the point where we are going to be able to lift all of our citizens up to compete with over a billion Indians and 1.3 billion Chinese. And until we do that, fix these trade agreements and make those investments, we are going to see these trade deficits continue, we are going to see other countries like the Chinese and the Indians outpace us with engineers, computer scientists, and all of these other high-tech workers and, eventually, every community is going to be like some of the communities we represent, struggling to fund their schools, struggling to fund basic police and fire, libraries, the basic services that government needs to provide.

So I am happy to join my colleagues here tonight, and I thank the gentleman again for his leadership, and I yield back.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN). One of the things that the gentleman pointed out is talking about school kids in Youngstown or talking about police and fire in his community, and we do a lot of talking about statistics and numbers and the trade deficit going from $13 billion to $618 billion in a dozen years, but then we think about what this means. When President Bush, Senior, said for every billion dollars in trade surplus or trade deficit, that translated into 12,000 jobs; for every billion-dollar trade surplus, it is 12,000 more jobs for our country; for every 12 billion-dollar trade deficit, it is 12,000 fewer jobs, many of those manufacturing jobs.

So when we have this kind of trade deficit of $618 billion, you multiply that times 12,000 jobs, according to President Bush, Senior, however you do the math, these are a lot of people that lose jobs, communities that experience plant closings, a lot of police and fire who protect our communities who get laid off when these plants close. These are a lot of cuts to public education. As the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) says, you then need to pass school levies and it is so hard to pass school levies when people have lost their homes and lost their jobs and are barely able to make ends meet, and have taken a job where they were making $35,000 a year and are now making $17,000 a year, and they cannot afford a property tax increase, so schools lose out and kids lose out, and it is just a downward spiral.

So when you see these numbers, you think about people in our communities, it does not matter if they are Democrats or Republicans, because these job losses, as we have pointed out, these job losses in manufacturing alone, particularly throughout the Midwest and the south, North and South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and States from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana and Illinois, up into Wisconsin, think of these 200,000 per State manufacturing job losses is a whole lot of people, a whole lot of bread winners and families that come home to their kids and cannot do what they were able to do before they lost their jobs. Their schools are hurting, their public safety is hurting, they are not able to send their kids on to school, all the kinds of things that go with lost jobs. That is why this is so important.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman makes a great point. The whole idea of us representing the whole country is that these agreements are benefiting the very few people who are doing really well, and they are the same people who are qualified for the tax cut that goes to the top one percent. So there is a philosophical debate here: is the legislation and the trade deals that come out of this Chamber going to represent everyone, going to be good for everyone, or are they going to be good for the very few.

That is the kind of philosophy. It has been divide and conquer down here for the last few years, and hey, if you get screwed out of your job, then so be it, that is where you are; my friends are doing good and they get to donate to my campaign, so we are just going to ignore you.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the States in white, and there are two of them, actually had manufacturing job growth. In these two States, total population is about 2 million people out of a country of 280 million, so these two States represent less than one percent of our country. Not that they are not important if you live in those two States, but they are the only States that have had manufacturing job growth.

All of the States in red have lost 20 percent of their manufacturing, 20 percent, hundreds of thousands of jobs in many of these States. The States in blue have lost up to 20 percent, 15 to 20, so it is State after State after State has just been hurt badly by this. And as we have all talked, it clearly translates into people's lives.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, people in our country intuitively know something is wrong. They go to the store and they try to buy something and they see "made in China," or they see "assembled in Mexico." And they also know that the quality of production is going down, that the metals that are used are not as good as they used to be; that the clothing is comprised of fabrics that do not breath as well and they do not wear as well. People know this.

Shoes. They know that the shoes, most of which are imported now, they are not good quality. There is not rubber on the bottoms anymore on good leather. Now we have these combination fabrics and your feet hurt.

We think about, and at least I, of the three this evening who are talking, am old enough to remember when America made American-made, quality goods. We used to even make American flags. And when they had that rally over here, the Speaker handed out flags made in China.

Mr. Speaker, I can remember an America where there really was an America here, where we really made things, and we were proud of what we made. When you have these kinds of trade deficits that are massive, over a half a trillion dollars a year in deficit, more imports coming in here than exports going out, you are displacing production.

I had an experience this past week in my district where I went through an old power plant, and the innards are being taken out because it is passe, its technology is passe. I said, well, now, where are we sending the copper to be reprocessed and used? They said oh, the copper was bought up by China. I said, oh. Well, what about the turbines? Well, the turbines are going down to Argentina. I said, you mean there is nobody in America that even wants to use the scrap metal?

We look at the prices of steel and, in terms of coking, there are no coking operations here. The Chinese have us around the neck because they have been charging $43 a ton for coke and making steel production so expensive in our country. We are seeing parts of us being dismantled and sent somewhere else.

I was down in North Carolina talking with some of the producers of hogs and turkeys and chickens down there, and the grains, rather than coming from the Midwest, is coming from Argentina delivered at the Port of Wilmington. The farmers in North Carolina and South Carolina want to buy grain from the Midwest, but yet it is coming from Argentina. It is very interesting to think what is happening to our country.

Then, on the side of some of these nations, take the Dominican Republic. We had a couple of young people come to Toledo from the Dominican Republic a couple of years ago from one of our church groups, and they actually worked in a company making apparel; it was a South Korean contractor on contract to the government of the Dominican Republic, and these young women were making T shirts that were to be sold in the United States, all of their production came here. They were paid 12 cents a T-shirt. They worked 14 to 18 hour days, 7 days a week; they had absolutely no say in their company, nothing, forget it. They were just bonded workers. If they spoke up, they were fired. They worked behind barbed wire fences and gates, the plant was inside, it was like a reservation, actually.

When they came to Toledo, we took them to a couple of shopping centers to try to find the shirt that they had made and, sure enough, we did. We found the T shirts hanging on a rack. This young woman, she just went up to it, she pulled it off and then we looked at the price tag. It was $20. I cannot forget her face. She just stood there. She said, you mean in America it is sold for $20 and I earn 12 cents? She could not even, she could not even fathom it.

I said, yes, and let us think about who made the money off the sweat of your brow. This was actually sweat shop goods coming into the United States from the Dominican Republic by way of a special contract signed with the South Korean manufacturer who is doing business and, really, whose practices cannot be monitored well, and these young women were earning nothing.

Now, is that the kind of world that we want to create? We are.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we hear the word "freedom" come out of this Chamber a lot. Is that young girl free? She is trapped. She is an indentured servant just like there has been throughout the history of, many times in this country, and many others. She is not free.

So we use freedom when it is convenient for us, but in the instance where it may hurt some corporation to reduce their profits, freedom does not mean anything.

Ms. KAPTUR. As the gentleman says, it ought to be called not free trade, because it is not free trade. It is not good trade, we know that. It certainly is not positive trade, because all we are yielding are deficits. Maybe we should call it sweat shop trade or indentured trade. There is some other word that should go here.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) mentions freedom. Another word or phrase that is thrown around here a lot is Christian values and fair play and morality. And when we pass a trade agreement that throws American workers in these numbers out of jobs and then exploits a worker that the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) talked about making 12 cents that makes a product that sells in the United States for $20, what kind of exploitation, what kind of family values, what kind of morality that does describe our actions?

Yet, it is pretty clear to an awful lot of people in this body, I think, and it is pretty clear to a whole lot of Americans that the values that we hold dear, no matter what your religion or your faith, if your religion or your faith is based on our country doing the right thing, it simply does not fit, to pass a trade agreement that costs people these kinds of jobs, that exploits the most defenseless people in the developing world, the people that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) says are trapped, the women that the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) describes, and then go home and talk about practicing our faith and family values and morality. It just does not work.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we may have developed a new word or new phrase. We are advocating for value-centered trade, trade that represents our values and, hopefully, what we are trying to spread around the world, value-centered trade.

Ms. KAPTUR. And part of that I think is the development and sustenance of the middle class.

We know that the workers in these other countries, because of the way the countries operate, are not creating a middle class. They are endowing the very top. In fact, they have a word for this, they call it oligarchies or plutocracies, they are endowing the wealthy, and the vast majority of people are poor. In Mexico, post-NAFTA, more people are poor today than before NAFTA was passed, and many of their small businesses were drummed out of existence, and many of their independent farmers are wandering across North America trying to find even enough to eat.

In our country, we have been drumming down the middle class. These other countries do not have a chance to build a middle class. Who is really benefiting off of the pain that is felt by the workers of our country and these other countries? It is very clear. There are a few extraordinarily powerful corporations that are trading workers off against one another.

And we as a Congress have a responsibility to stand for the development of the middle class and trade agreements that sustain the middle class in our country and help these other countries develop economies where their wealth comes from demand-led growth inside their own countries, not exporting everything they make to other places, paying their workers nothing, and then charging us high prices for those goods here in this country.

We do not have that kind of trade regimen. That is why we need to stop CAFTA and go back and renegotiate NAFTA, and any other trade agreement where we have sustained massive deficits over the last 3 years. That ought to be the priority of the President of the United States and of this Congress.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, CAFTA specifically protects, if you look at the text of CAFTA, it specifically protects the prescription drug companies, but offers no real protection to workers. It specifically protects and supports Hollywood films and CD-ROMs, but does not have protection for the environment and for food safety. I mean, if that does not tell us something about values; we will write a trade agreement that will help the most privileged, wealthiest people in both our country and the six CAFTA countries, but we will not protect the workers, we will not protect and help and enhance the environment, food safety, safe drinking water, clean air, all of that.

We are joined by my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) who also has been in this Chamber, came with me in 1992 and has been a part of these discussions on trade for many, many years, and I thank the gentleman for joining us.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for asking me to come down and speak with him and speak out against the Central America Free Trade Agreement called CAFTA. I am pleased to be here with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN) and the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), all from the great State of Ohio. As we continue to look at just your map there, the job loss is 216,000 in Ohio, 210 in Michigan.

Just one slight correction, if I may, on your map. The Upper Peninsula of Michigan still belongs to Michigan, not to Wisconsin. But anyone saw me down here arguing this from my district and knowing that I live in the Upper Peninsula, they would say, whoa, what happened here?

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. If the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) would yield, we left Ann Arbor in Michigan.

Mr. STUPAK. But, you know, if CAFTA passes, there might as well not be an Upper Peninsula of Michigan just because we have lost so much. In fact, Michigan, right now our unemployment remains the highest in the State at about 7 percent. The small and the medium-sized manufacturing jobs are gone. We just have great difficulty with it.

One industry we still have left in Michigan, and a little bit that it is, but it is vitally important, a new part of my district down there by the thumb area, as we call it, is the sugar industry. And CAFTA will just really wipe out the sugar industry in Michigan.

We recently just have been declared a disaster area because of higher than normal temperatures in the region, where we lost 200,000 tons of sugar. That cost $33 million to our farmers. But now if we pass this trade agreement, and if it goes into effect, U.S. markets will be flooded with sugar imports, striking an even greater blow to our Michigan economy, especially our agriculture and sugar. And sugar actually ranks fourth in the country in production, Michigan sugar does. So we have a vital stake in the sugar industry in this Nation, being fourth in the country in production.

And our sugar comes from sugar beet. And the sugar beet economy in Michigan, if you will, is about 2000 farms, employs thousands of people, and annually it is a $300 million product to agriculture in Michigan. Michigan farmers know how damaging CAFTA would be to them. We will also endanger many of the thousands of jobs at the mid-Michigan-based Michigan Sugar Company. That is a cooperative, and they have worked very hard to maintain their jobs. And if CAFTA goes through, we think the Michigan Sugar Company would be history.

We in Congress we need to send a strong signal to the Bush administration that this is one instance where sugar, if you will, does not belong on the table, so to speak.

What can we expect from CAFTA? And I know all my colleagues here joined me in that fight in NAFTA about some 10 years ago. A significant job loss. Over the past 10 years we have 766,000 jobs lost here in the United States. And where did they go? They went to Mexico and other places for lower wages and labor standards that are appealing to big corporations.

How many more American jobs can we afford to lose as a result of CAFTA? Why would CAFTA, under the same labor and environmental framework as NAFTA, be anything better for our manufacturing industry, our sugar industry or the American worker?

CAFTA would allow foreign corporations to challenge U.S. environmental laws once again by establishing a three-member panel of international judges who meet behind closed doors with the power to award billions of dollars of U.S. taxpayers to multinational corporations.

CAFTA's environmental provision is a sham. The agreement says that nations would simply enforce existing environmental laws, even though many of those laws are inadequate. Even that provision, the environmental provision, even that one fails to have a meaningful enforcement mechanism. CAFTA does not ask other nations to better preserve or protect their environments. It just says whatever laws you have is fine.

In the U.S. we have many environmental laws to protect our food, other residents, our natural resources. Yet if CAFTA passes, we will import goods from countries that do not have the same safety standards.

We all know about the food. I know the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) has helped on the Energy and Commerce Committee where we both sit on food safety issues, whether it is tomatoes out of Mexico versus Florida tomatoes. In this country we still, we pass every year a labeling law to label our food. So we could say, okay, these tomatoes are from Florida. We know what standards they are grown by. These are from Mexico. We do not know what standards they are grown by. We pass it, but yet it is never implemented by the current administration. People are willing to pay a few extra pennies, if you will, on their fruits or vegetables or beets or seafood just to know where it comes from, because our standards, our environmental standards, our consumer standards, our health standards, our safety standards are so much greater in this country than elsewhere.

So CAFTA, in a way, wipes out all these protections for the American worker, for the American homeowner, for our American family. CAFTA also fails to protect Americans workers. It fails to offer protections to Central American workers who fall victim to their country's own diminishing standards.

CAFTA does have its benefits. The only benefits I can find are to companies that would leave the U.S. to exploit cheap labor in countries with minimal protections. We need to be promoting business development and jobs in the U.S., not sending more of them overseas.

Michigan, as I said, has lost, and on the gentleman from Ohio's chart there, 210,000 manufacturing jobs. Just since NAFTA alone, we can draw a direct line between NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement, and 130,000 manufacturing jobs, just manufacturing jobs in Michigan. Companies are practically crawling all over one another to leave the U.S. for cheap labor in countries with little protection for their workers or the environment.

Now I want to be clear, and I am sure all of us here tonight, we support fair trade agreements; however, CAFTA is unfair at its worst. It is unfair to workers both at home and in Central America. It is unfair to small businesses. It is unfair to our communities, unfair to our environment. So I would urge the administration and this Congress to stop the exodus of jobs from the U.S., stop the challenges to our environmental protection laws.

And when I came down here tonight to join you, you were talking a little bit about what about a faith base or a moral basis for some of these agreements, especially here in the United States. When you take a look at the United States Catholic Conference and the United States Catholic Bishops and the Catholic Relief Services have all come out opposing this trade agreement on basic fundamental human rights issues. Trade is all about people, their livelihood and how they live their lives. And they found CAFTA, you know, Catholics for Faithful Citizenship, they found that CAFTA is a trade investment agreement negotiated between the United States and six countries, and they are, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Dominican Republic. And the President wants us to pass this trade agreement. But before we go ahead and do it, just from a moral and faith-based perspective, we have to ask questions like how will CAFTA address the needs of small and medium-sized manufacturing and farms here in the United States and Central America?

How will CAFTA protect the rights of worker and the environment?

How will CAFTA impact the lives of people throughout this hemisphere, be it U.S. and Central America?

What is the intellectual property provisions for protection of your intellectual property? What does CAFTA have? Very little.

What is CAFTA's purpose, or how does CAFTA promote really human development and human rights, especially amongst poor people in Central America?

If you start asking these questions, it is very clear this trade agreement is not negotiated in the best interests of the American people. It is not negotiated in the best interests of faith-based people. It is not negotiated in the best interests of people who come to this floor or go to work every day with a moral purpose of what they do.

I have always been taught you work hard, you play by the rules, and good things will happen. Unfortunately, with these trade agreements, you work hard, you play by the rules, not only do you lose your job, but your job is shipped overseas, and it is sort of a race to the bottom, because the job you had before, now you earn so much less when you try to pick up a new job because there is just not the jobs there.

I mentioned Michigan at about 7 percent unemployment. A month or two ago it was 7.5 percent. The tourism industry is starting to take off, so we are starting to see a little bit of an improvement in our economy, but still at 7 percent. We just cannot. The auto industry is hurting terribly in this Nation, and as we ship more and more jobs south to produce more and more cars, to produce our sugar, to produce our meats, our vegetables, our fruits, what is left for the farmers?

And you cannot tell me these farmers in Central America are making the money. They really are going to be squeezed. The small and medium-sized farmers will be squeezed out in these countries as the big international conglomerates will take over, and they will reap the profits, and these people will continue to live in poverty and in misery.

So when the United States Catholic Bishops and the Catholic Relief Services come out against a trade agreement because they do not believe it will do anything to lift the workers, the farmers, the peasants out of poverty in Central America, at the expense of U.S. jobs, that is a strong statement.

So I would hope people would take a very close look at CAFTA. Take a look at it from just your own job in our own district. Take a look what it does to the United States. But take a look at it from a moral and ethical perspective and say, is this the kind of trade agreement I can honestly vote for and go to church this Sunday and say, you know, I did the right thing?

I think when we examine the questions put forth by all of you here tonight, I think the American people would agree that this CAFTA is just a bad deal not just for U.S. sugar, but for all of the United States and all of our manufacturing, and does nothing to help the people it professes to help in the Central America region of this hemisphere.

So I would hope that people would not support this agreement. There is a lot of pressure being applied by the White House right now. There are meetings going on all the time. There is actually a picnic this Wednesday at the White House. I am sure they will be asking Members there in between their enjoyment to vote for this trade agreement. The President has sort of staked part of his administration upon it, and I hope we would see through all this and see what is done to our Nation, all these trade agreements that are really unfair. Again, not against trade agreements, but they have to be fair to both countries, to all the countries involved, and they have to be enforceable, and we are just not enforcing it.

I mentioned the intellectual property rights. We have had hearings in our committee on China where they just openly are manufacturing these games that we see that young people play, whether it is their Gameboy or all of these video games, openly doing it in front of the Chinese officials. And they say, yeah, but they will not crack down on it. The intellectual property rights. The movies. The intellectual property rights is one of the last few industries we have left in this country where we have world supremacy on it, but yet we cannot get countries like China to enforce it, to protect it, even though it is part of all these trade agreements. It is just amazing. It is just simply amazing that we have these trade agreements we know are being violated, nothing is being done.

Let us not do another trade agreement, this one being the Central America Free Trade Agreement, that is going to harm us not just from an agricultural point of view and manufacturing point of view, but even our intellectual property rights. If they cannot protect something like a video game, how are they going to protect your best interest when it comes down to these trade agreements? So I would hope that this House would reject this CAFTA. And remember, it is an agreement, and when it comes to the floor we cannot amend it, we cannot change it, we cannot alter it. It is either a yes or no vote.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK). And before calling the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY), I would like to reiterate a couple of things that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STUPAK) said, talking about people playing by the rules, and American workers who played by the rules and were involved in their community and raised their kids and worked their jobs and put their time in, that they lose their jobs; people who have played by the rules in Central America, who have been exploited in these jobs that have been outsourced; and all the groups, all the religious leaders and all six of these, the six Central American countries and including the Dominican Republic; and the United States religious leaders that oppose these because they know that people that have played straight and played by the rules have been hurt by these trade agreements in the past.

And I want to mention one thing before turning to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) because of what the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) said and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN), and the opposition to these agreements from the public. People know they are getting hurt by these agreements, people in Niles, Ohio, that work at Lordstown, people in Lorain or in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan or in Chicago that have been hurt by these agreements, people in Central America that have been hurt by these agreements. Because of that it is clear if this vote were to come to the House today, there is no doubt that we would defeat this trade agreement by 30 or 40 votes. But that is today. And the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STUPAK) pointed out the White House is beginning all kinds of ways to convince this Congress to do something to vote for the agreement.

Just a couple of days ago Tom Donahue with the Chamber of Commerce told a bunch of Members of Congress, if you vote against CAFTA, it will cost you. Those kinds of threats. At the same time the President and his people are now putting out carrots, not just sticks. They are, in a sense, bribing Members of Congress with everything from promising highways and bridges and other kinds of pork to now saying that they are going to put $20 million in labor enforcement assistance into something called the Department of Labor's Bureau of International Affairs.

Now the administration cut the ILAB from $148 million in 2001 down to $12 million, from 148- to $12 million. Now they are saying they are going to add 20 million to it, as if that is helping something, when they have no interest, they have written a trade agreement that does not enforce labor standards or provide labor standards. Now they are saying they are putting a little money in even after they have cut it. At the same time something called the International Labor Organization, which is a multinational group that sets labor standards, were one of, I believe, two countries out of 80 that said we are going to vote against the funding for that international body.

So it is pretty clear all the promises they want to make about enforcing labor standards, they wrote weak standards, they cut funding on enforcement. Now they are trying to buy off a few Members' votes by promising to put a little money in enforcing labor standards.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY), who has been a stellar outspoken advocate for workers' rights and the environment, both internationally and in the gentlewoman's Illinois district and around this country.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Well, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) so much for the opportunity to join the gentleman tonight, and thank the gentleman for his leadership. As I have said, I have learned a lot from the gentleman. Actually wrote the book on trade agreements called the Myths of Free Trade. You can get it at a book store. If they do not have it, order it. It is a good read and educational.

What we are seeing right now is a growing bipartisan consensus that CAFTA is not a good idea.

I realize there are all kinds of pressures going on on the side to get Members to vote for it, and I think the reason is very simple.

Why do we have trade agreements? Well, of course, we have now an increasing global economy. That is inevitable. It is going to happen as the world gets smaller, because of technology, because of our capacity to trade with each other across borders, and that is a good thing. But we are at a point now where we have to decide what are the beneficiaries, who are going to be the winners and the losers of this international trade.

Clearly, we are talking about businesses being able to sell their products and import products and to set a level playing field, but we want to make sure that it is not just multinational corporations, the huge companies that benefit from this global marketplace, but that it is consumers, that it is workers, and that at the same time we are not damaging our environment. The thing about trade agreements is that it is possible to craft trade agreements that are not only good for business, but they are also good for workers and that they do take into consideration the environmental impact.

We had a trade agreement with Jordan that, if we used it as kind of a template for how we write these agreements, could have been a model for how we do it around the world, but instead, this trade agreement speeds up or at least contributes to what we call the race to the bottom; that is, the kind of agreement that does nothing to lift the wages or the living standards of people in the Central American countries and the Dominican Republic, and makes it easier to actually lower the standards of workers here in the United States. It starts pushing down wages, pushing down working conditions, and that is not the kind of globalization we want, where the whole world is diminished in terms of its workers by these trade agreements.

I went to Ciudad Juarez right across from El Paso at the 10th anniversary of NAFTA, and it was a trip that was organized in large part by the gentleman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR). When I went there, what I saw were workers living in the packing crates of the products that they were manufacturing, often American companies, who had crossed the border and set up shop there so that they could pay very low wages to Mexican workers who were benefiting hardly at all.

I mean, yes, they wanted some kind of a job, but their standard of living was to live in packing crates without health care, without certainly any kind of a living wage. In fact, we saw children who looked pretty sick, but they could not afford to take them to the doctor or even to send their children to school.

Is this the kind of world that we want to help create with these trade agreements? Is this good for the people in Mexico? Is this good for Americans? Because then those jobs go to places where there are low wages and where it is dangerous to try and organize for higher wages and higher benefits. It is dangerous to talk about unions. In our country, every 23 minutes a worker gets fired for trying to organize a union. In some of those places, you can get killed if you try to organize a union. It can be very, very dangerous.

So the United States is the richest country in the history of the world. It could be a leader in saying we want to establish rules that lift all people, that make it possible for our workers to have a living wage here at home, to have our consumers be able to buy products from other countries where the people who produce them are not living in slave or near slave labor conditions. I feel bad because often it is posed, you are either for trade agreements or you are not; you are an isolationist; you do not want to.

It is not that at all. We could craft an agreement. We could go back to the drawing board, and we could craft an agreement that would work for workers here and workers there, too.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY). She is exactly right. I think the point she made is so important.

First of all, at the beginning of her comments, she said there is a growing bipartisan group, and it is clearly way larger than a majority of this Congress, large numbers of people in both parties, who do not like our trade policy, who see that we have seen this incredible growth in the deficit from $38 billion to $618 billion in 12 years. It is clear our policies are not working.

We have seen the kind of job loss that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) and others have talked about, particularly in these red States, with losing 200,000 jobs.

She talked about that we are not against trade agreements; we are against this Central American Free Trade Agreement. We are against this trade agreement because we know who the winners and losers are. The winners have been the drug companies, the largest most powerful corporations. The losers are small manufacturers that are from my district and in Chicago or in the upper peninsula of Michigan. The losers are workers all over the country.

When these workers lose, it is not just 216,000 Ohioans who lost their jobs. It is the families. It is the children. It is the school districts, the police and fire protection, and the safety of these communities.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that we can simply do better, that we should reject the Central American Free Trade Agreement as presented to us for this vote; renegotiate CAFTA; come back here and pass a trade agreement that lifts standards up, that lifts workers' standards up in our country and Central America; that protects and preserves the environment; that speaks to food safety and all the things that matter in our lives.

In closing, I would add both comments from the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) about what do we stand for as a Nation, what kind of values, and when I look at the fact that religious leaders in all seven of these countries, the six countries south of us and our country, religious leaders have spoken out saying they are not against trade either, but they can do better, they believe we can do better and come up with a negotiated trade agreement so that working families and the poor in these countries, the environment benefits, food safety benefits. We do better with all of those things that we care about.

So I thank my friends for joining us tonight, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. RYAN), the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY), and just again saying we should renegotiate CAFTA, start again. It has been a year and a month since this agreement was signed by the President. We can do better. Let us start again and do it right this time.

BYRNE-JUSTICE ASSISTANCE GRANT AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. REICHERT). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight in favor of the Byrne-Justice Assistance Grant, JAG, amendment that we will debate and discuss in tomorrow's appropriation, Justice appropriations tomorrow.

This is a grant that our local police and sheriffs have relied on to form task forces, multijurisdictional task forces to fight our drug problems in our communities, particularly meth. At least in Nebraska, the State that I have the responsibility and honor to represent, meth is by far the number one drug of choice. It started mostly as a rural drug where the ingredients were fairly easy to get, anhydrous ammonia, pseudoephedrine from your local grocery store or pharmacies. The Sudafed that they can break down, the components, and using a variety of other chemicals, even ammonia, they would be able to manufacture in small labs using basic chemistry sets to make this drug.

This drug has spread throughout the rural communities across our Nation, devastating these communities, devastating families. The drug is highly addictive. Part of the symptoms of the drug while you are high on this drug is the tendency to be violent, staying up for long periods of time, and in fact, because of the toxicity of this, it even breaks down your skin. It breaks down your gums and your teeth and your hair. You can have open sores. As I mentioned a minute ago, the consequences of this highly addictive drug run deep in our social and family infrastructure.

I am pleased that we have so many Members on both sides of the aisle that are coming forward to help our local police and sheriffs with their part being on the front lines in the drug war.

I have the honor now of recognizing the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) who represents the Law Enforcement Caucus and is a great supporter of our local law enforcement, and I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for yielding and thank the gentleman for his leadership on this issue.

We have had this issue a couple of times come before the Congress, and each time we have been pretty successful in trying to defeat the changes and the cuts in the appropriations to the Byrne grants because, as all my colleagues know, the Byrne-Justice Assistance Grants are of great importance to all of our States, to our local, our city police, especially in the fight against drugs because of the drug task force that they do fund.

Our law enforcement officers who are in our communities who serve and protect us every day have asked repeatedly that we not cut this one vital program, which gives them discretion at the State level on where to put these justice grants, these Byrne grants, if you will, and how to use them in their States.

Unfortunately, this program is grossly underfunded in the bill that we will have up this week, and it is going to cut funding from $634 million that was provided last year to $348 million for this fiscal year. That is about a 40, 45 percent cut.

So, tomorrow, I look forward to joining with my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTEAD), my other co-chair of the Law Enforcement Caucus, and others to offer this important amendment.

Our amendment will ensure that our local law enforcement has the resources it needs to control and eliminate drug threats, keep our court systems up and running smoothly and provide funding for anti-terrorism training. As a former city police officer and a Michigan State police trooper, as well as the co-chair of the Law Enforcement Caucus, I understand how much our local communities need and rely upon the Byrne grants. In fact, we had hearings in the Law Enforcement Caucus earlier this year about what these Byrne grant cuts would mean to law enforcement, and law enforcement from Maryland, Illinois and all over the country came and testified the devastating effect it would have.

So what our amendment would do to tomorrow is restore the $286 million that is being cut out of the Byrne grants by making a .448 percent cut, that is less than a half a percent, from every agency in this bill to fully fund Byrne grants. Why should every agency take a hit? Because this is how important the Byrne grants are to law enforcement and our continuing fight against drugs in this country.

So I am hopeful that the entire House of Representatives will take to heart the importance of the funding of the Byrne grant program and vote for this amendment.

Most of us are well aware that the funding this grant provides is instrumental to our law enforcement teams, but this Byrne grant does so much more that is often overlooked.

In fact, the Byrne grants actually provide funding for 29 different programs, vital programs such as anti-drug education programs, treatment programs, alternative sentencing initiatives, giving the States the ability to choose the programs where funding would be most useful to them back at home.

The Byrne grants also fund programs important to our court and prison systems. It provides funding to improve the operational effectiveness of the court process by expanding judicial resources and implementing court-delay reduction programs such as automated fingerprint identification systems.

The Byrne grants provide long-range corrections and sentencing strategies and fund programs that teach inmates to acquire marketable skills and to make restitution payments to their victims.

Byrne grants can also be used to implement antiterrorism training programs, enforce child abuse and neglect laws, improve the criminal justice system's response to domestic and family violence, and, finally, the grants can also be used to establish cooperative programs between law enforcement and the media, such as the AMBER alert system, which we use when there is an abduction or a missing child or young adult. We flash it across the highways, the byways, the TVs, and radios. That is all funded by the Byrne grants. So why would we put a 40, 45 percent cut in that system that we seem to be relying upon, unfortunately, more and more each day?

As most of us have been hearing from our local drug enforcement teams back home, and the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) certainly articulated those needs, we have to provide the funding so our drug enforcement officers can do their jobs. We can do this only by fully funding the Byrne grants. We have a list we are putting out, and the gentleman from Nebraska has worked on this, and all of us who are supporting this amendment tomorrow. If you look at California, our largest State, it has 58 drug enforcement teams, task forces. If these cuts go through, they will be down to 32. They will lose 26 drug task forces; Georgia, 16; Louisiana, 17; New York will lose 34 of their 76 teams; Ohio will lose 14 of their 32; Texas will lose 21 of the 46 drug enforcement teams; and Wisconsin, my neighboring State, will lose 15 of their 34. Basically, of the 828 drug enforcement teams we have across this Nation, we will lose 373, or 45 percent of them.

So really, if we are to keep our communities safe and drug free, we really have to fund this. Local drug enforcement teams are crucial to keeping our communities drug free. If the Byrne grants are funded at the level currently in the bill, as I said, our teams would not be able to hire the officers they need to sustain drug enforcement teams. In my home State of Michigan, we would lose 11 out of our 25 drug enforcement teams. Losing the task forces would have a devastating and far-reaching effect on Michigan, especially in rural communities like I represent.

Let me be clear. When it comes to drug abuse, no community, urban or rural, in this country is immune from the problem. The methamphetamine problem alone, as the gentleman from Nebraska just spoke of, is destroying families and taking lives in rural America.

To highlight how important these drug enforcement teams are, there was a recent article in one of my little local newspapers in the First Congressional District of Michigan which cites that back 2 months ago, on April 13, HUNT, the Huron Undercover Narcotics Team, HUNT as we call them, seized 3,000 OxyContin tablets from one home in rural Presque County. This critical seizure is just one example of the work our narcotics teams do each and every day to keep our communities safe.

These local agencies, like HUNT, who do so much for our local communities, will take the brunt of the Byrne grant cuts. It is a scary thought, considering that 90 percent of the drug arrests nationwide are made by States and local law enforcement. Ninety percent of all drug arrests are made by local and State. And where do they get the bulk of their money? The Byrne grants.

Our country's drug problems are not going away. In fact, with the emergence of prescription drug use, methamphetamines, and OxyContin, some would argue our problem is only getting worse. So my question is why would we, as a Congress, cut the funding that enables teams like the HUNT undercover narcotics team to exist and combat this problem that is only becoming more severe?

I know we have other Members who wish to speak, but I am hopeful as Members take to the floor tonight, they will keep in mind and urge their colleagues to support the Terry-Stupak-Ramstad amendment tomorrow to restore the funding to this critical program. Again, we talk about drugs tonight, but there are 29 different programs. It is one of those few programs where we say to the States, here is some money, we want you to do it for law enforcement, and do what is best for your State. We do not mandate it, but here is a pot of money you can take it from, and we hope you do what is best in your State. After all, you know what is best.

The State and Antidrug Task Forces are just one example that we all deal with day in and day out, and I would hope people would support our amendment by cutting less than 1/2 of 1 percent from the other agencies in this bill to fully fund the Byrne grants.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back to the gentleman and thank him once again for his leadership on this issue, and I look forward to arguing this amendment with him tomorrow on the floor.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's assistance and help on this.

The gentleman from Michigan did make one point that I want to highlight before I call on my next speaker, and that is the cuts in funding.

Remember, about 2 years after I got here, we were funding our criminal justice grants to our local police and sheriffs at about slightly over $1 billion. In 2005, we condensed several of those grant programs, like local law enforcement block grants, Byrne and JAG, into one, and lowered that to 600-, and it was zeroed out. And chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), did a good job of doing what he could to get 300- of that 600- put back. But as the statistics that the gentleman from Michigan just read off, that means even at the current level of funding that will come to the floor tomorrow, of about $300 billion, a 60 percent reduction, a 70 percent reduction from just 4 years ago, at the time that meth problems are increasing in our communities, I cannot fathom the impact it is going to have to eliminate these drug task forces.

The gentleman also mentioned that local police officers make over 90 percent of the drug arrests. And it just astounds me that we are, in this war against drugs and meth, taking our front-line people off the front line. It would be like fighting the war on terrorism by just funding the Pentagon and not funding the Army and the Marines and the Air Force and properly equipping them. So I do appreciate those comments.

It is now my honor to call to the microphone my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE), who has been a continuous fighter in his terms here. He has raised the meth issue and been consistent in bringing the message to all of us here of how to fight and why we should fight methamphetamine.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman yields to our colleague, may I comment on one point that he brought up, if I may?

Mr. TERRY. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I yield once again to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. If my colleague would be so kind, and I appreciate our colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE), being down here to work with us on this issue.

These local teams understand they are not just getting Federal money, and the Federal Government is funding the whole thing. Whether it is Presque County or the little city of Escanaba, where I was a police officer, or whether it is the big city of Detroit, the local units of government must put in money. It is a matching grant program. They have to put in resources. So it is a unified effort between local, county, and State police working together, and the seed money is really the Federal Government. Without the seed money, there is no incentive or urging of the county board of commissioners to fund an officer to work on the undercover task force team, because there will not be any.

So it is always a fight every year to keep these teams together and keep them properly funded and staffed with personnel. And if we lose the Federal funding, a 45 percent reduction, the problems that I am sure the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) and I have spoken about will only get 45 percent worse within the year. So I appreciate the gentleman's leadership and the Members now with us.

Mr. TERRY. And just to take that thought and put it in context for someone like our colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE), who represents 68½ counties, this funds the multijurisdictional aspects that the local jurisdictions would not be able to fund because of their rules on funding. So this allows intra-agency and counties in the district of the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) to actually work together.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from Nebraska.

Mr. OSBORNE. I thank the gentleman, and particularly thank him for organizing this Special Order and for his leadership on this issue. And it is great to see my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), and any others who will speak tonight.

Just a little background. Methamphetamine first came into prominence during World War II, and was used probably most prominently by kamikaze pilots. If you want to put a guy in a plane and give him enough fuel to hit a target, but not enough to get back, you had to maybe alter his thinking a little bit. And that is really where methamphetamine was first used and made prominent. At the present time it is rather easy to make and relatively cheap.

The good news is that in many areas we see cocaine and we see heroin decreasing. The bad news is the reason for this is that methamphetamine is so much more powerful and so much more addictive, it simply runs those other drugs out of business. So we are really alarmed by what is happening.

We find methamphetamine is available almost everywhere in our country. In 1990, California had 20 meth labs, Texas had 20, and the rest of the country was relatively unscathed from the meth problem. We will see the progression very rapidly here. In 1998, you can see that about two-thirds of the country had at least 20 meth labs in each one of these red States. It was still relatively uncommon on the east coast and parts of the Great Plains, the northern plains, were not affected.

Now we will look at what has happened more recently, and we see that in 2004, just a corner of the Northeast was pretty much left unscathed. And some of these States, for instance, Missouri, had 2,700 meth labs last year; Iowa, 1,300; Tennessee, 1,300; Oklahoma, 500; Arkansas, 800. Most of these States had 300, 400, 500, or 600 labs. And the important thing to remember is that a high percentage of these labs are not detected. So when we are detecting 400 or 500, that means there are probably three or four or five times that many out there, and these are simply indicators of the use of methamphetamine and how quickly this has spread.

Methamphetamine creates a euphoric state that lasts from 6 to 8 hours. It dumps a huge amount of dopamine, the chemical in the brain that enables us to feel pleasure, and may create as much as 1,000 times the amount of dopamine released into the system as a normal pleasurable experience; like making a free throw or asking somebody out for a date and being accepted, or whatever it may be.

The reason that people get hooked on this stuff is that many times you are addicted on the first occasion. And there are quite a few people who accidentally run into this thing. Maybe they are drinking; maybe somebody gives them something they are not even aware of what it is, and they are hooked. And it takes only, in many cases, one time.

People who are oftentimes addicted are young mothers who are overwhelmed by the chores of taking care of their kids, maybe working two jobs. Sometimes college students are staying up late at night to study; truck drivers. And quite often alcohol is the gateway drug. When somebody is inebriated, sometimes they will take almost anything somebody gives them, and, as a result, they are hooked.

However, what goes up must come down, and the fruits of the continued use of methamphetamine are anxiety, depression, hallucinations, and, in many cases, it actually results in psychosis. One person who is an expert in this area said it hard-wires the brain to become a paranoid schizophrenic. And if anyone knows much about mental illness, they realize paranoid schizophrenia is probably the most difficult mental illness to kill.

Oftentimes people experience crank bugs. They assume that there is some type of a bug under their skin, so they begin to pick their skin, trying to get the bugs out. So usually people on meth have huge skin lesions and oftentimes do not look very attractive, and, of course, ultimately the final end is death itself.

So why is it important to address this at this point? It is so powerful, it is so addictive, and it always damages the brain. For instance, if you take a brain scan of someone who has been on methamphetamine for 1 year, let us say an 18- or 19-year-old young person has been on meth for 1 year, you will find the brain scan will look almost identical to an 80-year-old Alzheimer's patient. There are that many brain lesions that have been created. Unfortunately, in most cases, those lesions have resulted in irreparable harm. There is nothing you can do to reverse it.

It is cheap and readily available almost everywhere, and this is the result of methamphetamine use. This is a young lady who was first arrested for using meth at about age 30, and then she was arrested each year for the next 10 years. You see the progression of what has happened to her. It was along about in here that the police assumed that she may have begun to inject the drug, and from that point she went downhill very, very fast. Usually, the teeth are gone after a period of time. This was the final picture that was taken. It was taken in the morgue. And so she lasted roughly 10 years on this drug, and that is a little unusual. A lot of people who get into it use it heavily and do not last that long. So it is a devastating picture.

Just a few other things I would like to say before I turn it back over to my colleague. Actually, these meth labs are tremendously toxic. It costs about $5,000 to clean up one meth lab. As we said, many of these States have 1,000, 2,000, almost 3,000 meth labs a year to clean up.

One-third of the homes with meth labs in Nebraska were also homes where there were children. So almost all of these children suffer some type of harm from exposure to these chemicals. Much of the child abuse in Nebraska, I would say at least one-half of the child fatalities due to homicide are related to meth addiction. And we had roughly 3,000 young people, kids, in our country this last year who were harmed because they were in a situation where methamphetamine was being manufactured.

Roughly 40 percent of our Federal prison cells are occupied by those people who have been involved in the meth industry. In the State of Nebraska, each meth addict will commit 60 crimes a year to support that habit. So if a small community has 10 meth addicts, that is 600 crimes. So a lot of these communities where at one time left your keys in your car, left your doors unlocked, the whole atmosphere, the whole culture, has had to change.

I ran into a couple of farmers who called the hotline and said they were perplexed. They were having a hard time making it in farming, and somebody dropped by their farm and said if you stay away from your farm this year, do not show up much, you are going to make more money, we will pay you more money than you can ever make farming. They were going to use the barn or a couple of sheds to make methamphetamine. That is how insidious this whole thing is out in the countryside.

We have talked a lot about meth labs, and meth labs may comprise 25 to 30 percent of the total meth used in the United States. Most of it comes from super labs. At one time some came down out of Canada. This has been fairly well shut off, and now most comes from the southwest, most out of Mexico. It is critical that we get a handle on these superlabs, and particularly the pseudoephedrine used to make meth. There are only 7 or 8 countries where pseudoephedrine is made.

In Mexico, there is way more pseudoephedrine coming into that country than they will ever use in cold medicines. Somehow if we can get a handle on where that is going, I think we can begin to get a handle on the superlabs.

Lastly on the Byrne funding, the local law enforcement officers are the first line of defense. They break up the meth labs, but they also pick up the methamphetamine that is coming across Interstate 70, Interstate 80, and I-29. These are the people that have to intercept and interdict methamphetamine or it is not going to be done.

A lot of rural counties in Nebraska, 70 to 80 percent of law enforcement dollars are eaten up by the meth issue. It has become overwhelming. If we do, as is suggested in our upcoming appropriations bill, if we reduce this spending by one-half, and it was already cut in half, so we are down to roughly $300 million instead of $1 billion, we are simply going to be awash in methamphetamine.

I hate to oppose the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) on this issue because he has done a remarkable job of working with limited resources. He has been a great friend of law enforcement, but his hands have been tied. Maybe at this point the gentleman's amendment is the only resource that we have, which is to take one-half of one percent of that funding and at least get back to where we were last year, and we are still only half of where we were 2 or 3 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his amendment and thank the gentleman for hosting this Special Order tonight, and hope we are successful tomorrow.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE). The gentleman did a great job of laying it out. The Justice Department provided statistics, and last year we saw a decrease in the numbers of labs. There is one way of looking at that, that these Byrne grants have done their job by helping local law enforcement.

The reality is that while it is our local law enforcement that is finding these labs and breaking them up, and there is one that just moved away from my house, and a month or so before that they found one in the trunk of a car at super department store in a very affluent neighborhood in west Omaha, so these can be anywhere.

But what my local police officers are telling me is while the labs are a major part of the supply or a significant part of the supply, it is actually more now from the gang drug network coming in from the superlabs in Mexico that the gentleman spoke about. So as we are fighting the good fight and shutting down the labs, the drug dealers have found a new way to create supply in a different country across the border. They are using the already existing cocaine distribution system, and are using our kids to do that, which I think is one of the most horrible things that has happened in our society.

Mr. Speaker, with that I yield to the gentleman from western Iowa (Mr. KING), also a member of the meth caucus, and has been one of the loyalists in our fight to protect our families from this horrible drug.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for organizing this Special Order tonight. I also thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for his work on methamphetamines and drug interdiction, and for his work in this battle for our children and save and preserve the human resources that are our young people in this country.

Something that I think brings methamphetamine to the Midwest ahead of many places in the country is because we have a strong work ethic. We have people who want to put a lot of their energy and their time into working, and they do not feel so guilty about using some drugs to get behind the steering wheel of a truck or do some other things. We have cleaned up a lot of that with the commercial drivers' licenses and the drug testing that is part of it. It is far safer on the road than it used to be. But the culture remains.

As the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) said, we also have access to the materials, especially anhydrous ammonia in the corn belt. That access to the materials to make drugs and that kind of culture that encourages people to use it has caused us to be more sensitive.

I watched it come into Iowa 10 years ago. I have spent my life in the construction business running bulldozers and scrapers and excavators and loaders and trucks, and out in the sun, heat, cold and rain. We have some element that comes into that industry that does use drugs. I have hired a lot of people over the last 28 years that I spent in business. We were not without a problem or two in our crew. We were not without a confrontation of me inviting that employee into my office, closing the door, setting my chair in front of the door and taking a stand that no one will leave this room until we come to an agreement that there is going to be some rehab, some therapy, there is going to be some treatment, and you are coming out the other side of this thing a productive human being again.

I have invested in this from a human standpoint, from a financial standpoint, and from a policy and legislative standpoint. In fact, the one single bill that I worked the hardest on in my entire legislative career was 2 years in the Iowa Senate to pass a good workplace drug testing law that we have in Iowa today. It took 2 years to get there, and it took nearly 12 months out of every year of relentless pounding to get that last vote, and we passed it by one vote. It has been in law since St. Patrick's Day of 1998. It allows private sector employers in Iowa to guarantee a drug-free workplace.

We are invested in this Iowa. We are invested in this in an intensive way. We understand the loss of human resources. In fact, if I had a magic wand, if God granted me the power to do a single thing today, and his message was to pick one thing, cure either cancer or eliminate illegal drugs, particularly methamphetamines, in a heartbeat I would say Lord, get rid of the illegal drugs. We will find a cure for cancer eventually. We are coming along cure by cure; but drugs steal human potential. They go into a person's life when they are young and full of potential, and they change the course and direction of that life, sometimes to the morgue, as the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) pointed out. That lady was from Iowa, by the way. And sometimes it ruins their potential. Their children suffer.

I believe that we need to do a lot of things to bring this drug scourge under control. One of them is to step up and do the funding necessary to support our law enforcement in their interdiction efforts.

I brought along this chart, this chart is similar to the chart that the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) pointed out. It fits the same numbers. It is a little different way of presenting it, but it works out like this. The Byrne and the local law enforcement block grants fit in these categories in these previous years. And then we got to 2006, rolled them all together under the JAG grant, the Justice Assistance Grants, cut the funding and rolled them into one grant.

Our President, a man whom I admire, made a proposal that we go to zero on this. I agree with the gentlemen that the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) has done good work to get us where we are today. Going from the President's recommendation of zero on up to $348 million is no small thing. But we have a big, big problem all across this country, and we need to address it with the resources. So this increase in funding is necessary. It is unusual for an individual like me to come down and say we need to increase spending, but if it is invested in anything that provides return on that investment, it is going to be in fighting and interdicting drugs.

The effect on Iowa would be, as near as we can calculate, this: There would be 14 fewer multi-jurisdictional drug enforcement task forces. There would be only 11 left of 25. So there would be 41 fewer counties that had operations in them, 31 where there are 72 counties today. Out of 99 in Iowa, 72 have functioning operations. That would cut that 72 down to 31. We would have 57 fewer drug task force officers. That would be officers, prosecutors, treatment providers and other jurisdictional personnel.

So we would 36 out of 93. And the volume of illegal drugs confiscated in Iowa would be reduced by 1.4 tons due to fewer task force operators and officers, and the law enforcement agencies responses to protect the public from toxic meth labs would be delayed by 709 cases. All in all, 1,919, a calculated estimated number, fewer individuals would be brought forward for assistance for substance abuse treatment and adjudication for their crimes.

We know associated with illegal drugs are a whole series of crimes. These crimes include larceny, armed robbery, burglary, assault, raped, domestic abuse, child abuse and homicide. There will be fewer Iowans, fewer Americans alive a year, 2 years from now if we do not get this funding back up to where we can provide the proper resources for our law enforcement personnel.

In fact, I want to say a few words about the Regional Training Center in Sioux City, Iowa, which has done a magnificent job of training law enforcement officers. They were first put into place with the assistance of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LATHAM) from the fourth district, the north central part of Iowa. They have reached out and done some exceptional things. I bring this sheet along to point out far the Regional Training Center has reached. They have trained 19,308 law enforcement officers from 38 different States and several foreign countries. If you step into that Regional Training Center, there are arm patches from police departments from all over the country and foreign countries.

They bring the officers in, teach them the technology, the infrared technology, the sensor technology, the means to apply their law enforcement.

They put them through the gymnasium. They are working out in 90 and 95 degrees, working up a sweat, working out the physical part of their job that sometimes is necessary to arrest and bring the drug users to justice.

Also, they have implemented a new course there, a new course in the Regional Training Center that has for years trained law enforcement officers, over 19,000 of them. They have graduated 10 of the canine corps. I met all 10 of the canine corps one day. They were all lined up at attention. The dogs sit at attention, and they speak a foreign language.

They do that so they listen to their officers. Their officers speak a foreign language to them, and they respond to that so no one else can control the dogs. These dogs all graduated with good records and fine grades as far as I could tell and by the reports that they gave me.

By the way, the return on drug dogs is the best return on an investment dollar that I have seen in law enforcement with regard to dealing with drugs. The dogs are there all the time. They are essentially available 24 hours a day. It takes an officer to handle them, an officer to be trained with them. They are not cheap in their purchase and in their training, but once they go out into the field, they bring another element to them. They can sniff out drugs, they can sniff out bombs, they can control violent intruders, and they are trained to do all of that.

Additionally, there is just the intimidation effect. There is the effect of when there is a dog there that is sniffing everything you have, you are not likely to bring drugs through there, and he will find them.

I am looking forward to the next class to graduate. I understand that the next class is a class of 20. That will be the size of the canine corps so we can keep filling up the Midwest and the rest of the country, if all goes well, training drug dogs continually along with training officers. We will soon be over 20,000 officers. But that budget was cut last year from a $2 million previous appropriation and a $2.5 million cut, was cut down to $250,000. Some thought the decimal point just inadvertently fell in the wrong place in middle of the night with a bleary-eyed staffer, but there are not a lot of coincidences. They need their appropriation. I will be speaking with the chairman about that.

I want to thank also the chairman for including that line item for the regional training center at least in the budget, although there are no earmarks for this budget, and each, according to the way it is proposed, will have to compete for those grants. I am hopeful that the Regional Training Center in Sioux City will be able to do that. They certainly have served 38 countries. It qualifies them as a national center. In fact, the name has just recently been changed to the National Training Center.

Again, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for bringing this subject before us. I look across at the speakers that have spoken so far and those to speak yet tonight. You can tell that this is a nationwide effort that we have. We care about our young people, our human potential. We want to give the tools to the people that have their lives on the line protecting us.

Mr. TERRY. I appreciate the gentleman's efforts on this cause. It is a great training center, by the way. He mentioned the patches. I happen to know that at least several, if not every one, of the departments that I have the pleasure of representing from the Second Congressional District have patches up there.

Mr. KING of Iowa. We will see if we can get those dogs to shake hands with you.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER), who also is the head of the Speaker's Drug Task Force and probably the most impressive person in this body on his granular knowledge of the war on drugs.

Mr. SOUDER. I want to thank the gentleman from Nebraska for his continued leadership over the past few weeks in trying to help make the rest of Congress aware of this and the importance of the votes we have this week, and to try to address the devastating proposals that came out of this administration that just flabbergasted those of us who are Republicans, in particular who support this President, have supported this administration. And it is just unbelievable that a conservative President of the United States would have proposed to nationalize and take away the dollars that were going to local drug law enforcement and the years of effort that we put together to get State, local and Federal cooperation and, in one budget, attempt to wipe out this by zeroing out category after category.

First, I want to thank Chairman WOLF for putting some of this back, but clearly there is a revolution going on in the House of Representatives, in the United States Senate, that is furious at this administration's proposals.

Before I make a few comments here, I wanted to make Members and their staff and others aware that if you want to learn, the best source of information right now on meth is ironically by a reporter named Steve Suo from the Portland Oregonian newspaper. He has spent and deserves a Pulitzer Prize. He has dug into this. He has identified that China and India are the primary precursor chemical countries, as well as Mexico, the amount that is coming in from Mexico; details more of this over the last 2 years; has covered hearings throughout the country, the different problems around the country. You can get through their home page a lot of information, the best information that exists currently on meth.

Also, for Members in their districts, while our national ad campaign has been very disappointingly silent on meth, silent on meth, the Partnership For a Drug Free America has, in fact, created a number of ads that have started to run around the country. They have offered that any Member who would like to run these in their districts or figure out how to get them in the schools, they will make those available to any Member for free, produced by the top ad guys in the country. They are going to continue to develop additional ads because in spite of the Federal Government not responding aggressively enough on meth, at least the Partnership For a Drug Free America is.

A lot of times people say, How come you guys can't work together across the aisle? Why isn't there bipartisan effort? A few years ago, probably now about 6 years ago, I would guess, Congressman Doug Ose of California was the first to raise this question of the superlabs and meth in California. It was just starting to move. It may have even been 8 years ago now that we had our first hearing. I chair the narcotics subcommittee over in Government Reform. We had our first hearing in California. I was not chairman at that time. I think the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) was chairman.

At this point we have held multiple hearings through our committee. Two Members, the gentleman from Hawaii (Mr. CASE), which is historically, along with California, the oldest State to face the meth problem, and the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BOOZMAN), which is arguably, along with southwest Missouri, the hardest hit right now in the congressional districts with the number of labs combined with the superlab material coming in, asked for hearings, and we did those, the gentleman from Hawaii being a Democrat, the gentleman from Arkansas being a Republican. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KENNEDY), who is here on the floor, has asked for a hearing in Minnesota along with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT), the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON) and the gentlewoman from Minnesota (Ms. MCCOLLUM), four Members from Minnesota. We are having a hearing in St. Paul at Congressman KENNEDY's request next Monday on meth. The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), who chairs the Committee on Homeland Security, has a tremendous coordinated effort to try to address meth and OxyContin in Kentucky. We are going to be going down there and looking at theirs. We have hearing requests in from at least 10 congressional districts on this hearing, including from the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WALDEN) and the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY), where we have a lot of pressure, as well as Washington State.

I say that because this is bipartisan. When you see a bipartisan effort coming out of the House of Representatives throughout the entire Nation, why in the world would the President's budget propose to zero out the meth hot spots program, to zero out the Byrne grants, to zero out and transfer the money, basically wipe out the HIDTAs and move that to the Federal Government, to zero out program after program that was addressing this question and as an alternative propose nothing except the nationalization and say, well, this problem isn't at the local level. It is fine to say that, but as we have heard earlier, and this is from the FBI reports, 95 percent, I heard earlier 90, according to the FBI, 95 percent of the arrests of drug violators are at the State and local level, not at the Federal level.

If you think about it, we are working so aggressively on border security right now, but what happens the other week? A guy comes across the Canadian border, even though he was supposed to be at a hearing, so the RCMP said that he should have been held, comes across with a bloody chainsaw, with knuckles, with knives and guns, and he comes across. How does he get picked up? The information goes out, but he was not caught by the FBI, he was not caught by the DEA, he was not caught by the Department of Homeland Security; he was caught by a State and local official, because when the Federal Government put out the announcements, that is who picks them up.

If you are looking for major drug dealers, often you get them like Al Capone. You get them on some other count. You do not get him on murder. You get him on an IRS charge.

In the case of drug violators, gang violators, the State and locals get notified by the Federal system, but ultimately they are the people to pick them up. But if there are no State and local drug task forces, if they do not have any money, nobody is going to be picking them up. And so what if you have a bunch of great task forces sitting here in Washington. Nobody is going to be out there to coordinate and arrest them and get the information. You can send out all the bulletins you want, but if there are not any drug task forces in America, nobody is going to go find the criminals that you sent your notices out about.

Let me make a couple of comments. We held a hearing on the HIDTAs and the Byrne grants in my subcommittee. Sheriff Jack Merritt of Greene County, Missouri, suggested by our majority whip, Congressman BLUNT, his hometown sheriff, said this, that he would not be able to maintain the joint DEA, State and local antimeth task force in his county if these funds were cut. Vital equipment such as bulletproof vests and in-car cameras, which his officers need to protect themselves while carrying out meth traffic investigations, could not be purchased because the administration proposed to get rid of the CPOT funding. He spoke eloquently of the children he and his officers find at meth lab sites, children who are at severe risk. He stated that if his task forces are forced to shut down, he wonders how many more generations of children will be condemned to the same fate.

Mr. Mark Henry, president of the Illinois Drug Enforcement Officers Association in the Speaker's home State of Illinois, said that Byrne grants help local police departments fill a critical gap which exists between Federal drug enforcement programs. The overwhelming majority, 87.6 percent, of all police departments in the United States have less than 50 officers, and Byrne grants play a critical role in supporting multijurisdictional drug task forces which are the backbone of law enforcement agencies. So we had asked Mr. Henry, and he came to our hearing with a list of comments from the State of Illinois that said the following: If Federal funds under the Byrne program are eliminated, our unit will lose three agents. The loss of these agents will cripple our ability to continue effective narcotics investigations. Narcotics trafficking will go unchecked and spread. We might as well turn the keys to our communities over to the gangs.

Another sheriff said, Although the local law enforcement agencies, the business and education community rely heavily on the task force expertise in combating the fight against drugs, without the existence of the task force, violent crime and burglaries will likely increase dramatically.

Another sheriff said, The elimination of the Byrne grant would have a catastrophic effect on the metropolitan enforcement group of southwest Illinois.

Another sheriff in Illinois said, Without the funding that we currently receive from the Byrne grant, our mission would be all but nonexistent.

Another sheriff said, and this is the Illinois Narcotics Officers Association polled their State membership, The elimination or reduction of Byrne funding would force police officers off the street to do clerical work, eliminate communication equipment such as pagers and cell phones, and eliminate Federal funding to reimburse a portion of officer overtime cost.

Yet another department said, The elimination of the Byrne funding will have a very negative impact on our ability to address the drug problems in the Lake County area of Illinois. The loss of funding will cause us to eliminate the staff positions. This will cause the jobs they now perform to be reassigned to police officers.

Yet another department said, Task Force 6 is the primary drug enforcement entity in this area and has been a fixture in this area since 1983. Proposed Byrne cuts will result in the closure of this unit. Narcotics-related crime will increase dramatically, and drug dealers will operate at will without the presence of Task Force 6.

Yet another department said, The elimination or reduction of this grant would have a very severe impact on the task force. At the present time the funding accounts for 50 percent of the task force funds, with the remaining 50 percent made up from fines and forfeitures. I strongly believe the elimination of this funding will force the task force to close its doors. That is from the Speaker's home State of Illinois.

From my home State of Indiana in Fort Wayne, Indiana, we do not have a HIDTA. We did not apply for a HIDTA because we have Byrne grants. Our task force has told me in northeast Indiana, it will shut down without the Byrne grants. Fifty percent means only 50 percent shuts down.

We have tremendous budget pressures in the United States, and all of us know we have these tremendous budget pressures. But the people back home are not telling us, Let the criminals go free. Let's concentrate on foreign aid. Let's concentrate on all sorts of different programs. What they believe is the minimum standard out of the Federal Government is that we should be shutting down crime, controlling our borders, getting rid of the threats to their daily lives.

It is just incredible to me that a conservative administration would propose bringing the power to Washington rather than leaving it at the grassroots where we are having an effect, where drug use in the United States has been declining. And where is our drug czar? Where is our administration? As we are making progress, they are proposing to go backwards.

I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for his leadership and the others here tonight because we have to stand up and say, you cannot forget the people back home and say, we are going to turn you loose, and good luck in fighting all these criminals.

Mr. TERRY. Absolutely. I really appreciate your forceful and passionate words on the floor tonight and just how staunchly you have stood on this fight. I thank you for those efforts.

Just one little bit of trivia. You talked about how our own police officers on the front lines have to be trained to deal with meth. In fact, one of the new things adopted by the Omaha Police Department, they are now having the emergency response or the snipers go with the officers when they exercise a warrant on a meth bust now because usually when you break into somebody's home or you are smashing the door down exercising a warrant, these people are so extraordinarily violent that we have had to go to those level of measures in the metropolitan area.

Mr. SOUDER. The gentleman brings up a very critical other point. That is that the map we saw earlier that Coach, Congressman, maybe Governor OSBORNE had up here showed all these States where meth has been in. But it has been predominantly in the rural areas. But what we are seeing is that it is starting to come into towns like Fort Wayne, a town of 230,000, in Omaha, and if this stuff hits the major cities, if it gets into Minneapolis and St. Paul, as it comes in from the rural areas and into the suburbs and into those cities, we are going to see an epidemic in America like we have not seen in a long time. Things like what you are talking about with the snipers, in one place in Hawaii, they are now charging people to go in, I think it is $200, to get their apartment cleaned before they come in because if somebody has been cooking in Honolulu and a kid gets into that, they can get sick and die. So now there is a charge in some apartment complexes to be able to go in.

Mr. TERRY. I am pleased to have as one of our last speakers for tonight the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KENNEDY), who has also been a very forceful fighter against meth and is a member of the Meth Caucus and actually one of the coauthors of the amendment that has been referenced several times tonight.

Mr. KENNEDY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for holding this Special Order. I thank the gentleman from Indiana (Chairman SOUDER) for his leadership on all of this.

It is going to take all of us together to make sure that we address this very important issue. We have concerns that we are not putting enough resources into funding to help out local law enforcement address the very challenging issues that are tearing up our communities with methamphetamine and drugs. And as the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) pointed out, this started out in just a few States, but it has really spread all way from San Diego to the Shenandoah Valley. That is why we have to support these good, working anti-drug programs.

One key, though, is that these drug task forces need to be supported. There are 800 around the country. If we go through with what the President proposed or even what the good work of the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman WOLF) and his committee have resulted in, we are going to be losing those drug task forces that have been doing such great work.

As we think about what this is all about, I am thinking about a tragic story of a young girl named Megan from a beautiful town in Minnesota. She started on meth when she was in seventh grade at the age of 13, when some of her friends offered her the drug. And in her words, she liked meth so much that she knew she would use it over and over again. But when she could not afford the addiction, she, like so many other female addicts, was exploited into becoming a prostitute to pay for the meth she craved every second of the day.

After hitting rock bottom at the age of 18, Megan is managing to pull her life back together now after 5 years have been stolen from her by meth. But she has too much company in the treatment and addiction programs because about one in five of those treated for meth use in the State of Minnesota are 17 years old or younger. But just as Megan is finding a way out of this black hole, we are thinking about cutting the funding for Byrne grants that help local police address the meth issues.

These cuts are wrong. They will cut task forces in our State and across the country, and who will be there to protect the children from those making and pushing the poison if this House approves such a devastating cut in the Byrne-Justice Assistance Grant program?

Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleagues that there has to be a better way, and there is. We can help young people like Megan reject meth before they even try it by restoring Byrne grants to the fiscal year 2005 funded level. Doing so will send a strong signal that Congress is serious about fighting the scourge of the meth. We must send a signal that the Byrne grant program is important to Congress and that we do support the work of the local officials. We must send a signal to the pushers of this poison that they are not welcome in our communities. Most importantly, we must send a signal to our law enforcement officers who wake up every morning to protect our families that we stand with them in fighting against drugs and we will work with them to give them every tool they need to be successful.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment that the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) and I have helped to put forth. Let us stand with law enforcement. Let us protect the Byrne grant program.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his comments.

And this is Angela from Iowa. Like the little girl in Minnesota, this is her school picture. I do not know if our C-SPAN cameras can get tight on this or not. This is her 12-year-old picture, her school class picture. This is her at 13, a year later, after similar friends turned her on to meth. And this had a little different, tragic end. This little girl, after her mother found her and tried to clean her up, could not kick the habit of meth and committed suicide. And, unfortunately, that is the way that many of these tragedies end.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE).

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for sponsoring this legislation.

Based on my experience as a judge and prosecutor for almost 30 years combined, this epidemic of methamphetamine is a disease that is affecting a lot of people. It crosses all barriers, all social economic barriers, all races, all ages, both sexes. And it is incumbent upon Congress to make sure that our local law enforcement officials have the ability to fight the war on drugs, to fight it the way they understand best, and the nationalization of this whole process is a very bad idea.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I appreciate the gentleman's coming over to the floor and speaking in favor of this amendment against meth, and he certainly has had some worldly experiences that he can speak from.

HAS THE SUPREME COURT LOST ITS WAY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JINDAL). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to ask a question, and that question is relatively simple. By what legal authority do justices of our Supreme Court use foreign world tribunals, global opinion, and the philosophy of European elites in making their decisions, those decisions that affect all Americans of this Nation? By what license, by what authority do members of America's highest court ignore our Constitution, the Constitution they took an oath to defend, and why do they cite foreign court decisions at all, decisions from England, the European Union, the World Court, Belgium, and numerous other nations? The Constitution clearly does not give them the power to abandon the scriptures of the Constitution. So where do they obtain such authority? Mr. Speaker, has the Supreme Court lost its way?

I imagine that these justices wonder who I am to question them and their use of foreign court decisions in making laws that apply to the rest of us. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I am a citizen of the Republic just as they are. I am an elected representative of this House that represents the people. Furthermore, I possess a loyal and lengthy relationship with the law. I am a former instructor in constitutional law. I was a trial prosecutor for 8 years, trying every type of criminal case from theft to kidnapping to capital murder, including cases where the death penalty was assessed and executions were actually carried out.

But more recently, I spent 22 years as a felony court trial judge in Houston, Texas. I heard over 20,000 criminal cases. In fact, I suspect I heard more criminal cases in 1 year than all the nine judges of the Supreme Court decided in an equal amount of time. As a criminal court judge, I used the Constitution, particularly the first 14 amendments, every day. I made decisions that affected people, real people, defendants, victims, and the community. Those decisions affected those individuals for the rest of their lives. I determined whether individuals should lose their property, their liberty, and their freedom. Sometimes the decisions I made even resulted in those individuals losing their life. Yet every one of those 20,000 cases was rooted in the United States Constitution.

Individuals who came to my court, whether they were defendants, victims, or members of the community, knew that the basis of all American law is in the Constitution. Not my personal opinion, not the rulings of foreign nations, and not the World Court. Not even what the French think. It is the Constitution that gives all courts from trial courts to the courts of appeal their foundation, their identity. If I had used any other law but that of the Constitution, I would have been removed from the bench.

In the jury trials over which I presided, the jury too would take an oath to follow the law and the evidence. They were to internalize the law of the Constitution and make their decisions. They were expected to decide the case with domestic law, our law, not the law in some other nation.

Mr. Speaker, if our Supreme Court uses foreign court decisions, why cannot our trial courts use foreign court decisions in their opinions? If the Supreme Court justices are our example, why cannot that example be followed by other judges in America? Is it not good for the gander what is good for the goose?

Using foreign court decisions across the board would create, of course, judicial chaos, judicial anarchy. But yet the Supreme Court does exactly this. Why should the Supreme Court be left to its own devices? If there is any other standard other than the Constitution, than what is next?

Mr. Speaker, looking to foreign court decisions is as relevant as using the writings in "Reader's Digest," a Sears and Roebuck catalogue, a horoscope, my grandmother's recipe for the common cold, looking at tea leaves, star gazing, or the local gossip at the barber shop in Cut N' Shoot, Texas. Mr. Speaker, has the Supreme Court lost its way?

Also, how do our justices know which foreign decisions they will embrace and which ones they will reject? Why have they discriminated and not used the decisions of our neighbors in South and Central America or even Mexico? I have personally witnessed trials in Russia and in China. Why not use those courts' decision in determining American jurisprudence? Who exactly decides what will be used to decide? Is there any longer predictability or uniformity in our legal system?

Mr. Speaker, many of the judicial matters for which our justices consult the opinions of other nations deal with the issue of cruel and unusual punishment. That is a concept addressed in our very own Constitution. Just like the provisions for a jury trial are in our Constitution. Now, I ask this question: If the Supreme Court justices look to foreign courts to define what should be cruel and unusual punishment in our Nation, then I ask what is to restrain them from determining that our guarantee of a jury trial should not be modified? After all, many of the international entities that these justices confer with on judicial principles do not even subscribe to jury trials. Europeans use tribunals. In fact, they disdain the concept of the jury trial. What is next? Will someone on the Supreme Court conclude that the American jury trial system is outdated and should be abolished because it is not the European way?

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, Justices Anthony Kennedy, Stephen Breyer, Ruth Ginsburg, David Souter, and Sandra Day O'Connor are suffering from the Black Robe disease, an incapacitating, invasive infection imported from Europe. There is a cure to the Black Robe disease, however. It is a dose of the Constitution. A strong dose of our United States Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, trial judges, like I was once was, deal with real people every day. Many of our Supreme Court justices, with all due respect, have for the most part only handled cases on review and on appeal. The consequences of our Constitution occur in our trial courts. Having been down there in the mud and the blood and the beer with people, I have seen the impact of the Constitution on the lives of Americans. We call those consequences justice. Our Supreme Court justices deal in judicial theory, judicial thought. Simply put, it is judicial review. We are talking about the fundamental difference between the original applications of the law and the trenches in a trial court versus the pontifications about the law on the "mount." As a side note, the Supreme Court should not make law. Their duty is to review the Constitution, not revise it, not reinvent it, and certainly not rewrite it.

The Constitution, Mr. Speaker, is the people's document. It is ordained by and subject to the will of the people. It should not be meddled with by anyone, including members of the Supreme Court. If we believe the Constitution delivers justice, does not injustice, on the other hand, flow from calling upon standards like foreign courts, global norms, and international organizations?

Mr. Speaker, I do not criticize the results of the Supreme Court decisions. No one respects the role of the judiciary more than I do. My grave concern, however is rooted in the process and method by which the Supreme Court makes those decisions that affect the rest of us.

Their use of foreign court opinions in interpreting American laws. How can the result be fair if the basis for the result is something other than the Constitution?

Mr. Speaker, a historical review of a few Supreme Court decisions is in order. In Thompson v. Oklahoma, Justice John Paul Stevens maintained it would be offensive to civilized standards of decency to execute a person who was less than 16 years of age at the time of the offense.

Referencing the views of other nations that share Anglo-American heritage, as well as leading members of the Western European community, he had tremendous confidence in this decision. Further citing the abolishment of the death penalty in nations like West Germany, France, Portugal, the Netherlands, all Scandinavian countries, and the Soviet Union, as well as the scant use of that penalty in New Zealand and the United Kingdom, Justice Stevens suggested Americans should consider global norms in determining our system of criminal punishments. By what authority does he use these nations as an example for American law?

Mr. Speaker, has the Supreme Court lost its way?

When we hear, as in this case, Mr. STEVENS' reference to the United Kingdom's practices, it makes one wonder whether he recalls his high school American history class. I suspect more history is in order at this point.

While engaged in an intense revolution in 1776, our forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence, which boldly sets out the 13 colonies' desire to disband their political union with England forever. In that document, which is just down the street from this building, Thomas Jefferson penned among the list of grievances against King George of England that he combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our Constitution and unacknowledged by our own laws.

Americans, Mr. Speaker, fled from England and Europe because they did not want to be subject to those unfair laws.

Mr. Speaker, over the course of 8 years in the American War of Independence, patriots spilled blood to secure liberty for us and preserve constitutional rights. Their will was to permanently cut the ties with England.

We won the war for American independence, but in 1812 we had to do it all over again, because the British invaded the United States once again because they still wanted America to be subject to the King of England and the law of England. The British were resolute on the recapture this free Nation of America. They even burned this city. They burned this very Capitol, the symbol of democracy. Americans, however, defeated the British for a second time, showing them that we will not do things the English way, the European way or any way except the American way.

Nonetheless, justices here in America across the street from this Capitol choose to use British court decisions and European thought in interpreting the Constitution of this country. What the British never could accomplish by force has our Supreme Court raised the white flag and surrendered to them voluntarily. Has the Supreme Court become like a Benedict Arnold and betrayed the Constitution for the rule of the British empire?

Let us move on to other decisions by our Supreme Court. In Atkins v. Virginia, the justices once more glanced across the seas toward foreign courts, and although over a decade earlier our Supreme Court decided that decisions of international courts were not to be used in the determination of sentencing in the United States, the Supreme Court did a judicial backflip. The justices in this case now in this particular matter listened to the voice of the European Union and the global community at large in making this inconsistent decision.

I ask once again, why not just use the Constitution? Is it because the Constitution does not allow them to do what they do, so they grab European law to justify the decisions that are imposed on the rest of us? Has the Supreme Court lost its way?

Now let us turn to a case in my home State of Texas, the case of Lawrence v. Texas. One of the most egregious perpetrators of citing foreign court decisions is Justice Kennedy. Justice Kennedy referred to international standards in the court's decision and consideration of Texas laws in Lawrence v. Texas. In this instance, writing for the majority, he clung to a previous ruling handed down from one of the most excellent high courts, the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Speaker, people in Texas do not care what the European court says about much of anything, but they do care what the Constitution says. Why are we looking to Europe at all, with its not-so-glamorous history and the long lamentable catalogue of human conduct. Europe is no righteous stalwart of human rights.

Europe, you remember. That part of the world that brought us two world wars in the last century. That part of the world where history is littered with episodes of massive religious intolerance and persecution of races. That part of the world where political murder and drawing and quartering were done for entertainment. All the while, a poor man could be hung for killing the king's deer.

Why do we turn for advice to that civilized world? Is that not why we established our Nation to begin with? Is that not why we established the Constitution of the United States?

Just recently, in April, the Supreme Court heard Small v. United States. In 1992, Gary Small shipped several multi-gallon electric water heaters from the United States to Japan. Japanese custom officials searched the container and they uncovered rifles, numerous semiautomatic pistols and several hundred rounds of ammunition. So he was tried and convicted of violating Japanese customs and weapons laws and he went to jail in Japan.

Once he got out of that Japanese jail, however, about one week after he got out, he came to the United States and purchased a 9 millimeter pistol. Following a search of his residence, his vehicle and his business, U.S. Federal authorities discovered this .380 caliber pistol and several hundred rounds of ammunition. Deeming a convicted gun smuggler apprehended with additional ammunition could constitute a danger to society. Federal prosecutors, using common sense, prosecuted him under a U.S. statute which says ex-convicts for weapons violations may not possess guns.

This statute, passed by this Congress prohibits, "Any person convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding a year to possess any firearm." Notice the statute says any court, it does not say U.S. court or state court, but any court.

Nevertheless, when this case went on appeal, the justices of the Supreme Court trumped the law, a law that is on our books, on America's books. They concluded that Congress ordinarily intends its statutes to have domestic, not foreign application. They determined that involving foreign convictions would raise the possibility an individual may not have the entire fairness of the American legal system.

Now it appears the Supreme Court is inconsistent on which foreign decisions they will follow and which ones they will not. Is this the law of chaos? Is this the law of arbitrary decisions?

Just as a side note, Mr. Speaker, the Japanese Constitution was written for the most part by General Douglas MacArthur after the end of World War II.

In any event, something is amiss. This is perplexing. It is appearing that the Supreme Court is becoming inconsistent on which foreign laws they will apply and which ones they will not. With this type of reasoning, when do we accept foreign court opinions and when do we ignore them? Is there any rhyme or reason to this arbitrary justice?

In a rare public debate, Justice Anthony Scalia rightly asked his colleague Justice Breyer this question: "Do we just use foreign law selectively when it agrees with what the justice would like the case to say? You use that foreign law, and when it does not agree with you, you ignore that foreign law. Nevertheless, the use of foreign law marches on."

The Supreme Court has also used the law of Jamaica in deciding cases to get a desired result, a result that we in America have to follow.

Further, when the Supreme Court justices have cited opinions from foreign courts in far away lands like that bastion of civil rights, Zimbabwe, was that based on an overriding confidence in the inherent standards of fairness in the country of Zimbabwe and its legal system?

Mr. Speaker, that dog just will not hunt. The last time I checked, Zimbabwe was an authoritarian government ruled by a cold and callous conniving Robert Mugabe, who oppresses political challengers, civil rights activists and jails representatives of the media. It appears the Supreme Court may have lost its way.

It also appears that some of the justices have no intention of curbing this arbitrary and alarming habit any time soon. The black robe disease is spreading. According to Justice O'Connor, the Supreme Court will rely increasingly on international and foreign courts in examining domestic issues. Why? Why do that? Well, she says, because the impressions we create in this world are important.

It sound like the justice makes her decisions based upon the opinions of a worldwide focus group.

Listening to Justice O'Connor, one would think the Supreme Court is the agent of a popularity contest. In Justice O'Connor's view, "The world really is growing together, through commerce, globalization, the spread of democratic institutions, immigration to America. It is becoming more and more one world of many different kinds of people, and how they are going to live together across the world will be the challenge, and whether our Constitution and how it fits into the governing documents of other nations will be a challenge for the next generations."

Mr. Speaker, this defies common sense.

Justice Breyer argues that for years, people all over the world have cited the Supreme Court, why do we not cite them occasionally and give them a leg up, so they may then go to some of their legislators and others and say, see, the Supreme Court of the United States cites us.

Well, why not just cite Reader's Digest? Mr. Speaker, this defies common sense.

Justice Scalia concedes foreign authorities may prove useful in devising a Constitution, but not interpreting the Constitution. In fact, the Federalist Papers, which flush out many of the particulars concerning the Founding Fathers' vision and what they thought about America and our Constitution, has discussions of systems of government from other countries, for example, Switzerland and Germany. But there is a difference in using foreign courts and foreign thought to write a Constitution and using foreign thought and courts to interpret our Constitution now that it has been established.

Justice Scalia asks, why? Why is foreign law relevant to what American judges do when they interpret our Constitution? He goes on, answering his own question. The court's discussion of these foreign views is meaningless. It is dangerous, since this court, talking about the Supreme Court, should not impose foreign moods, fads or fashions on Americans.

But that is what happens. That is what happens when our Supreme Court cites foreign courts in making its decisions about the United States Constitution.

Justice Scalia's assessment, Mr. Speaker, is further echoed by the Chief Justice of our Supreme Court, William Rehnquist, who in a dissenting opinion of Atkins v. Virginia wrote, "The viewpoints of other countries simply are not relevant, and that global notions of justice are, thankfully, not always those of our people."

One could even travel an additional mile, as Justice Clarence Thomas has, to suggest that citation of foreign authorities really reflects a sign of weakness, an admission that the position for which the foreign authority is cited really lacks support in the United States legal sources, specifically lacks support in the Constitution.

Our Constitution is sacred, Mr. Speaker. It is not a mere list of suggestions. Its values are timeless. The Constitution is complete. It needs no help from foreign courts. America's standards are timeless, and they are in our very own Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a Democrat or a Republican, liberal or conservative issue. It is an issue of stand with the Constitution and who will go the way of the wayward foreign courts.

When asked during a recent ABC interview whether a day will come when the Constitution will no longer be the last word on the law, Justice O'Connor shared the following. She said, "Well, you always have the power of entering into treaties with other nations, which also became a part of the law of the land. But I can't really see the day when we won't have a Constitution in our Nation."

While Justice O'Connor hardly predicts the dark and dreary demise of America's Constitution, her words, Mr. Speaker, are sad. Her words fall far short of assuring us that forever and always the U.S. Constitution will be the lifeline of our land's existence. The more we hear from our Nation's top jurists like Justice Ginsberg that "our island" or "lone ranger mentality is beginning to change," and that they "are becoming more and more open to comparative and international law perspectives, it concerns me a great deal. The Supreme Court has lost its way, and the Black Robe disease is still infecting our court. People speak of the independence of the judiciary. Mr. Speaker, that is a legal myth. A judiciary cannot be independent of the Constitution but, rather, it must be dependent upon its words.

Mr. Speaker, let us in this body, as fellow defenders of the Constitution of the United States, help all people, including those in the Supreme Court, remember our heritage. And until they decide to rejoin the cause of championing our Nation's identity, let us purposefully grip our Constitution with both hands. The Constitution does not give judges, any judges, the authority to use anything as a basis for their decisions except that very Constitution.

Thomas Jefferson, who I cited earlier in writing the Declaration of Independence, years later, in 1820, saw the bleak future for our judiciary and predicted future judicial subversion. He said, "The judiciary of the United States is the subtle core of individuals and miners constantly working underground to undermine the foundations of our fabric. A judiciary independent of a king or executive alone is a good thing, but independence of the will of the Nation is a travesty." And that will of the Nation, Mr. Speaker, is the Constitution uttered straight from the will of the people. Let us remember some of its words. How about the first words of the Constitution to bring us back, back home, back to a perspective of our law. Those words that say, "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

The Constitution belongs to the people. It is ordained by the people. It does not belong to the Supreme Court for them to bend, rewrite, reinvent, or ignore it under any circumstances. Section 1 of the Constitution dictates that "The judges, both of the Supreme Court and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior. I ask this question: Mr. Speaker, does citing foreign court opinions constitute good behavior? History will reveal whether it does or does not. If, however, I carried on like this in my courtroom in Texas, I would have been removed from the bench, and rightfully so. People from where I come from would not stand for a judge citing foreign courts to make decisions that affect Americans.

Perhaps the Justices, Mr. Speaker, should think long and hard about the meaning of good behavior. Serving this Nation is a privilege; it is not a right. We are all accountable to the Constitution that have taken an oath to defend the Constitution.

All of us in this body, this House of the people, this House of Representatives took an oath, an oath that people throughout the lands have taken, people from school boards, police officers, firefighters, city councils, mayors, big cities, and little cities, legislators, Members of Congress; all judges, State, local, and Federal, and the judges of the Supreme Court. We have all taken the same simple and solemn oath, to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States. We owe it to the American people, we owe it to the Constitution, to follow that oath. That is our duty. That is our obligation, and we can do nothing but follow that oath.

PROBLEMS WITH CAFTA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MACK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. LEVIN. The Dominican Republic-Central America Free Trade Agreement presents an important crossroads for trade policy. It involves issues broader than those, for example, relating to sugar or textiles; and indeed, as President Bush said recently, it involves issues beyond trade, including ramifications for the future path of democracy.

It is an important test for globalization. What has been unfolding in Latin America, including Central America, is that substantial portions of the citizenry are not benefiting from globalization. They have increasingly responded with votes at the ballot box or in the streets. Doing so, they have raised sharply an underlying issue and that is whether the terms of expanded trade need to be shaped to spread the benefits or simply to assume that trade expansion by itself will adequately work that out.

It is for these reasons, not more narrow interests, why the issue of core labor standards in CAFTA is important for Central America and for the United States of America. The way it is handled in CAFTA undermines the chance that the benefits of expanded trade will be broadly shared. The goal of globalization must be to expand markets and raise living standards, not promote a race to the bottom.

An essential part of this leveling up is the ability of workers in developing nations to have the freedom to join together, to have a real voice at work, so they can move up the economic ladder. This is not true in Central America where recent State Department and International Labor Organization reports confirm that the basic legal framework is not in place to protect the rights of workers and enforcement of these defective laws is woefully inadequate. Regrettably, CAFTA as negotiated preserves the status quo or worse, because it says to these countries "enforce your own laws" when it comes to internationally recognized labor standards.

The Latin American region possesses the worst income inequality in the world and four of the Central American nations rank among the top 10 in Latin America with the most serious imbalances. Poverty is rampant in these countries. The middle class is dramatically weak. As has been true in the experience of other nations, including our own, this will not change unless workers can climb up the ladder and help develop a vibrant middle class.

A huge percentage of workers in this region are not actively benefiting from globalization because the current laws in these nations do not adequately allow them to participate fully in the workplace. The suppression of workers in the workplace also inhibits the steps necessary to promote democracy in society at large. The core labor and environmental provision in CAFTA—that each country must merely enforce its own law—is a double standard. This standard is not used anywhere else in CAFTA, whether as to intellectual property, tariff levels, or subsidies.

"Enforce your own laws" is a ticket to a race to the bottom. Such an approach is harmful all around: for the inability of workers to earn enough to enter the middle class so badly lacking in and needed by Central American countries; for American workers who resist competition based on suppression of workers in other countries; and for our companies and our workers who need middle classes in other countries to purchase the goods and services that we produce.

CAFTA is a step backwards also from present trade agreements. The Caribbean Basin Initiative standard states: in determining whether to designate any country a benefit country under CBI, the President shall take into account "whether or not such country has taken or is taking steps to afford workers in that country, including any designated zone in that country, internationally recognized rights."

The GSP, Generalized System of Preferences, standard is this: the President shall not designate a country, a GSP beneficiary country if "such country has not taken or is not taking steps to afford internationally recognized worker rights to workers in that country including any designated zone in that country."

So CAFTA is a step backward from these standards. The provisions in CAFTA on worker rights as currently negotiated are substantially weaker than current U.S. law and would replace that current law. I will give you an example. In Guatemala over 900 Del Monte banana workers were fired in 1990 for protesting labor conditions. A GSP petition led USTR for the first time ever to self-initiate a worker rights review for Guatemala in October 2000. Guatemala subsequently passed labor reforms in April 2001, which included granting farm workers new rights to strike.

In preparation for CAFTA, however, Guatemala's constitutional courts struck down key parts of the 2001 labor reforms. In August of 2004, the Court rescinded the authority of the Ministry of Labor of that country to impose fines for labor rights violations, a key element of the 2001 agreement. Under CAFTA, the U.S. would have no recourse to challenge that development.

Now, let me go on, if I might, to a next point and that relates to the examples of Morocco and Chile and Singapore because those agreements are often used as examples as to why we should vote for CAFTA. I supported the agreements with Chile, with Morocco, and with Singapore. The situation in each of those countries was very different from Central American countries.

Chile has the international labor standards incorporated in their laws and they enforce them. There is a vibrant labor movement and an active middle class. The same is essentially true in Singapore, active labor movements, workers have their right to associate if they want to organize, to form unions; and they have a tradition of a labor movement in Singapore.

Morocco, the question is asked, well, I voted for Morocco, why not CAFTA? And the answer is there are vast differences between the situations. Morocco took steps in the last years before the free trade agreement with them to truly, truly reorganize their labor laws. Also, Morocco has a tradition of a vibrant labor movement in the private sector as well as the public sector. So Central America is very different.

We voted, many of us on the Democratic side, for Morocco, Chile and Singapore; we believe in expanded trade as long as the terms of those of that trade agreement and of those trade agreements are shaped to spread the benefits across the population.

Let me say a word about Central American countries and the deficiencies in their laws, because much has been said of this and much was said today by our new USTR, a former colleague, Rob Portman. Look, USTR has tried to gloss over what the ILO says. They have tried to gloss over what is in the State Department reports themselves. But any objective look confirms that those reports say that the laws of those countries in terms of the basic international standards are defective. And this was spelled out in a letter that was sent by us on April 4 by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), and myself to the acting trade representative, Peter Allgeier.

Mr. Speaker, this letter will be placed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

What the reports show is exemplified in a fairly recent case, and I will refer to it briefly. It relates to port workers in El Salvador. In that case they tried to organize, they tried to be represented, they tried to bring about democratic rights within the workplace. Thirty-four of the workers were fired last December when they were trying to form a union. And not only did the law not require their reinstatement, but only severance pay, which is a cheap bargain for an employer who wants to violate rights.

But a month later, the labor ministry denied the labor union's registration petition since now there were only seven workers left. Others had been fired. El Salvador law requires at least 35 members to form a labor organization, a provision that itself has been criticized by the International Labor Organization.

I just ask everybody to read the letter that we sent to Mr. Allgeier and the attached analysis of laws from the ILO reports and State Department reports.

President Bush has correctly talked about freedom and democracy. He has said that everywhere. But what this CAFTA does is to sanction the status quo where there is no democracy in the workplace.

President Bush last month urged a vote for CAFTA because it would bring "stability and security" to the region.

I think the opposite is true. If workers are suppressed, it is a step towards insecurity and towards instability. Labor market freedom is a source of security, undercutting insecurity. What is a threat, what is a real threat to undemocratic forces, those who do not believe in democracy, is democracy in the workplace.

The President likes to quote the writings of Natan Sharansky, who has been minister in Israel until recently. Natan Sharansky says that a test of democracy is whether somebody can arise in the town square and speak his or her mind without punishment. If you use that test to the workplace, most places in Central America, the answer is there is no democracy. If somebody raises their voice too often, they are fired.

Now, let me just say a word about another argument that is used and that is, well, the problem is enforcement and the United States is going to help the nations of Central America with their enforcement. We are going to provide monies so that there is a stronger department of labor, et cetera, et cetera.

Well, today, Rob Portman, our ambassador, outlined a number of proposals for more funding to help CAFTA countries in technical assistance to strengthen enforcement of labor laws. He said the problem is not labor laws; it is enforcement. The correct analysis is there is a deep problem in their laws and a severe problem with the enforcement of flawed laws. But when you look at what was urged today by Mr. Portman, and I do not question his good faith about it, but I do question the credibility of it because it is the record, not the rhetoric, that really matters. And the record of this administration in providing technical assistance for the strengthening of labor unions in other countries is miserable.

This year, I just give a few examples, this year President Bush proposed crippling cuts to the budget for the International Labor Affairs Bureau known as ILAB. He proposed cutting funding by 87 percent from $94 million to $12 million.

According to the President, the 2006 budget, "returns the agency to its original mission of research, analysis and advocacy." Well, what that means is there is not any emphasis on technical assistance.

Also, the President's five budget requests in previous years proposed funding cuts for ILAB of more than 50 percent.

So I do not believe that the answer is simply more money going to agencies in other countries. I think the laws have to be in order. The regulations must not strangle efforts of people to assert their freedom in the labor market, but I do think better enforcement would be useful of good laws. The record of the administration in terms of technical assistance is terribly weak, in fact.

Now, let me discuss another issue that has come up when we discuss CAFTA. Increasingly, this administration has used our trade challenges from China as a reason to vote for CAFTA. This is happening more and more. It is not credible. It is at best boot strap. Look, we have to shape trade policy so that there can be effective competition with China, that is for sure. That relates to currency, and we just a short time ago had, I think, a rather ineffective meeting with the administration on the currency issue.

It also includes trade in apparel and textiles. We have seen a major influx of apparel from China with the end of the quotas. In order to have an effective trade policy, vis-a-vis, China, in the apparel and textile areas, we have to do the following.

Number one, we have to actively use remedies that were written into the agreement with China in its accession to the WTO. We worked hard to get those provisions into the WTO China accession agreement, and the administration has hesitated to use them effectively. They did not effectively anticipate this problem, and when the problem really sprouted, their response initially was very weak.

Second point regarding this: We do need to have and take steps to bring about a strong Caribbean apparel and textile structure, Caribbean including the United States. To do that, one of the steps that is necessary is to have compliance with international core labor standards. That would be a source of strength, not of weakness. It would be trying to compete and compete effectively, rather than trying to compete with China as to who can most suppress worker rights.

In that regard, I do think we ought to look at what is sometimes pointed to, and that is, the Clinton legacy because I have read some articles that have said that those of us who have raised this set of issues about globalization, who have raised this set of issues about shaping trade policy and have applied it to this critical step, vis-a-vis, CAFTA, that those of us who are doing that are taking a step backwards from where the Clinton administration was. The contrary is true. The contrary is really what this is all about.

For example, Jordan. Today, Ambassador Portman, and I am glad to call him ambassador now, he was a colleague, said that the Jordan agreement is not as strong as CAFTA when it comes to core labor standards. That simply is an incorrect analysis of Jordan. Jordan has a clear reference to the core standards: child labor, forced labor, anti-discrimination and the right of workers to associate and to bargain collectively. It has references to those five core labor standards in the Jordan agreement, number one.

Number two, Jordan has a provision to make sure that Jordan cannot slip backwards, cannot move away from that standard. That is not true in CAFTA. Enforce your own laws, it can be present laws or revised laws that are even worse.

Thirdly, as to enforcement, it is not at all correct to say that the provisions in CAFTA, that those provisions are nearly as strong as was negotiated with Jordan. Essentially the Jordan FTA, the U.S.-Jordan FTA said that each country could take the necessary steps to enforce the obligations of the other, and it is true the Bush administration later entered a letter, a side letter, that put some brakes on the ability of the Bush administration to implement the Jordan agreement, but that is not what was negotiated.

What President Clinton did increasingly in his later years was to say to the world, I favor expanded trade, I believe in it, it has to be done in ways that shape so that there is a leveling up and not down. That is language that he used in his speeches. He referred to them at the University of Chicago speech, and that was the flavor of his speech at Davos. I was there when he gave the speech. He spent half of his time talking about the benefits of expanded trade. He also spent the second half saying if those benefits were going to be real and move globalization ahead, there needed to be, he said, a leveling up and not a leveling down.

When people say we cannot impose standards on other countries, and that was said I think it was yesterday or maybe earlier today by the chairman of our committee, I do not understand that. Trade agreements, like any other contract, involve imposition. We are going to have to change laws as a result of trade agreements. That was true under the Uruguay Round agreements. It is true of tariffs. We are going to have to change our laws regarding tariffs.

Now we are not talking about imposing American standards in CAFTA. What we are talking about is placing internationally recognized standards in the declaration of the ILO that every country involved here, Dominican Republic, Central American, U.S., has endorsed putting them into the agreement, in the body of the agreement enforceably with reasonable transition. That is important.

So let it be clear, the opposition to CAFTA, as negotiated, is not being led by those the administration likes to dismiss as in "protectionists" or "isolationists." Those shoes do not fit. The opposition leadership involves those of us who have favored expanded trade and have helped to shape and pass trade agreements in the last decade.

For us, CAFTA is an important line in the sand, affecting the future effectiveness of globalization. If the U.S.

does not seize the opportunity to shape the rule of trade and competition in CAFTA, it will have chosen simply to be on the receiving end of the consequences, both positive and negative of globalization.

I favor a CAFTA but not this agreement as it stands, and we can quickly fix this agreement by renegotiating CAFTA to include internationally recognized labor standards, with enforcement and a reasonable transition. In doing so, we would advance the interests of U.S. businesses and workers and expand the benefits of globalization beyond the status quo and any privileged minority in any of these countries.

We would take also an important step, and I want to emphasize this, an important step towards reestablishing a bipartisan foundation for trade. That bipartisan foundation has been eroded under this administration, and it is that bipartisan foundation that needs to be reestablished because it is so critical for tackling tough trade issues ahead, for example, in the Doha Round. We cannot tackle these tough issues of agriculture, various parts of agriculture, or of services, including financial services, we cannot tackle them, nontariff barriers, unless there is a solid, nonpartisan, bipartisan foundation. We cannot do it by trying to squeeze out a one vote majority.

Security, economic and political, is best achieved in the region of Central America by closing the dangerous gap between rich and poor, by development of a real middle class and a larger middle class and by expansion of freedom operating in the workplace and spreading throughout the society, it did, by the way, not only in our country, but in Poland and so many other places.

I want to close by emphasizing what is at stake, that this security, economic and political, is in the self-interest of our country, of our businesses and of our workers. We need to address this issue of core labor standards, not only for the benefit of the workers in the other countries, of the development of a so badly needed middle class in those countries, but also because our workers increasingly refuse to compete with countries where the workers are suppressed. That is eroding the support for international trade in this country, and we need to reaffirm its importance by reaffirming some basic principles. That is going to be good, as I said, for our country, for our businesses, and for our workers.

I am not sure of the timetable for CAFTA. What I am sure is as of today, it would not pass. There may be an effort to try to make it pass by all kinds of deals, which those of us who favor expanded trade would never agree to. It may be endeavored to pass through some kinds of deals unrelated to trade, offering this and that, unrelated again to trade. That would be a terrible mistake.

We have an opportunity here to reconfigure CAFTA in a way that would bring about strong bipartisan support and be a foundation for the development of stable relationships within Central America and the Dominican Republic and between them and ourselves.

Also, as I said, we would be able to reestablish the bipartisan foundation that once prevailed for international trade in this institution. Without it, CAFTA, in my judgment, should not and cannot pass, and there is likely trouble in tackling the other issues that need to be addressed boldly, honestly and effectively.

The material I referred to previously I will insert into the RECORD at this point.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
Washington, DC, April 4, 2005.

Hon. PETER ALLGEIER,
Acting U.S. Trade Representative,
Washington, DC.

DEAR AMBASSADOR ALLGEIER: In recent weeks, advocates for the Central American Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA) have made assertions that the CAFTA countries' laws comply with basic, internationally-recognized rules that ensure common decency and fairness to working people. These advocates argue that the only outstanding issue concerning the rights of workers in the CAFTA countries is a lack of adequate enforcement of existing labor laws.

Unfortunately, CAFTA advocates' rhetoric is not supported by the facts. There are still no fewer than 20 areas in which the CAFTA countries' labor laws fail to comply with even the most basic international norms, as documented by the International Labor Organization (ILO), the U.S. Department of State and multiple non-governmental organizations.

More than a year ago, in November 2003, a number of us wrote to you outlining these problems in detail. We had hoped that doing so might lead to actions to remedy those problems, or at least to a constructive dialogue about them. However, the Members who signed that letter have yet to receive any response to the list of problems documented in that letter—either from your office or from the countries concerned. In fact, the labor laws in at least one of the CAFTA countries have been weakened in recent months.

In light of the fact that Congress may soon be considering the CAFTA, it is important to move beyond rhetoric to the facts. We urge you to provide documented information concerning any amendments CAFTA countries have made to their laws to address the shortcomings noted in the attached list. Those shortcomings cannot be overcome with better enforcement efforts. Even the best enforcement of inadequate laws—whether relating to intellectual property, services regulation or technical standards for manufactured products—cannot yield acceptable results.

We support the right CAFTA for the Central American countries and the Dominican Republic, just as we have strongly supported the Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI) programs. These programs have done much to strengthen economic ties with our friends and neighbors in Central America and the Caribbean in ways that benefit both the United States and the region.

However, the CBI programs were built on the dual pillars of expanded economic opportunity and a strong framework for trade. In particular, the programs were expressly conditioned on the countries making progress in achieving basic labor standards. By contrast, the CAFTA moves backward by not including even these minimum standards, and using instead a standard for each country of "enforce your own laws." Ensuring that the CAFTA countries both adopt and effectively maintain in their laws the most basic standards of decency and fairness to working people is important to their workers, their societies, and to U.S. workers. It also is critical to ensuring strong and sustainable economic growth and promoting increased standards of living.

We welcome and support all efforts to improve the capacity of Central American countries to improve the enforcement of their labor laws. In fact, for the last four years, we have fought for better funding of such programs and against massive Administration budget cuts for labor technical assistance programs—many of these programs eroded-out or slashed by up to 90 percent in budgets submitted by the Administration. The Administration's track record gives us little confidence that the one-time grant of $20 million included in the FY05 Foreign Operations Appropriations Act for labor and environmental technical assistance in the CAFTA countries represents the kind of real and sustained commitment needed in these areas. Moreover, such efforts on enforcement are no substitute for getting it right on basic laws.

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
Ranking Member, Subcommittee on Trade.

Member.

SANDER M. LEVIN,
Ranking Member, Subcommittee on Social Security.

U.S. STATE DEPARTMENT AND INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION REPORTS CONFIRM DEFICIENCIES IN CAFTA LABOR LAWS

The 2004 U.S. State Department Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, the October 2003 ILO Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work: A Labor Law Study ("the Report"), and other ILO reports released in recent years confirm the existence of at least 20 areas in which the labor laws in the CAFTA countries fail to comply with two of the most basic international norms of common decency and fairness to working people—the rights of association (ILO Convention 87) and to organize and bargain collectively (ILO Convention 98).

Each of these deficiencies, discussed in detail below, was identified in a letter sent in November 2003, from Reps. Rangel, Levin and Becerra to then U.S. Trade Representative Zoellick. Neither USTR nor the governments of the Central American countries have provided information responding to these inconsistencies.

COSTA RICA

Use of Solidarity Associations to Bypass Unions. Costa Rican law allows employers to establish "solidarity associations" and to bargain directly with such associations, even where a union has been established. The failure to explicitly prohibit employers from bypassing unions in favor of employer-based groups violates ILO Convention 98.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "[T]he report of the technical assistance mission . . . drew attention to the great imbalance in the private sector between the number of collective agreements and the number of direct pacts . . . the CEACR recalled that direct negotiation between employers and workers' representatives was envisaged 'only in the absence of trade union organizations.'"

(2) Onerous Strike Requirements. Costa Rican law includes a number of onerous procedural requirements for a strike to be called. These requirements contravene ILO guidelines for regulation of strikes, and taken as a whole, make it nearly impossible for a strike to be called. For example, Costa Rica requires that 60% of all workers in a facility vote in favor of a strike in order for it to be legal. These requirements violate ILO Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "The general requirements set out by the legislator [sic] for a strike to be legal . . . include the requirement that at least 60 per cent of the workers in the enterprise support strike action. The CEACR has stated that if a member State deems it appropriate to establish in its legislation provisions for the requirement of a vote by workers before a strike can be held, 'it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast, and that the required quorum and majority are fixed at a reasonable level.'"

(3) Inadequate Protection Against Anti-Union Discrimination. Costa Rica's laws do not provide for swift action against anti-union discrimination. For example, there is no accelerated judicial review for dismissal of union leaders.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "[A]s the CEACR has indicated, legislation needs to be amended 'to expedite judicial proceedings concerning anti-union discrimination and to ensure that the decisions thereby are implemented by effective means.'"

EL SALVADOR

(1) Inadequate Protection Against Anti-Union Discrimination. El Salvador fails to provide adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In particular, El Salvador fails to provide for reinstatement of workers fired because of anti-union discrimination, which violates ILO Convention 98. There also are widespread reports of blacklisting in export processing zones of workers who join unions. Salvadoran law does not prohibit blacklisting, as it bars only anti-union discrimination against employees, not job applicants.

The 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices confirms this deficiency: "The Labor Code does not require that employers reinstate illegally dismissed workers. . . . Workers and the ILO reported instances of employers using illegal pressure to discourage organizing, including the dismissal of labor activists and the circulation of lists of workers who would not be hired because they had belonged to Unions."

(2) Restrictive Requirements for Formation of Industrial Unions. El Salvador has repeatedly been cited by the U.S. State Department and the ILO for using union registration requirements to impede the formation of unions. These formalities violate ILO Convention 87.

The 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices confirms this deficiency: "[I]n some cases supported by the ILO Committee on Freedom of Association . . . the Government impeded workers from exercising their right of association. . . . [T]he government and judges continued to use excessive formalities as a justification to deny applications for legal standing to unions and federations."

A 1999 Report by the ILO Committee on Freedom of Association confirms this deficiency: The Committee observes that "legislation imposes a series of excessive formalities for the recognition of a trade union and the acquisition of legal personality that are contrary to the principle of the free establishment of trade union organizations. . . ."

GUATEMALA

(1) Inadequate Protection Against Anti-Union Discrimination. Guatemala's laws do not adequately deter anti-union discrimination. The failure to provide adequate protection from anti-union discrimination violates Convention 98.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: "An ineffective legal system and inadequate penalties for violations hindered enforcement of the right to form unions and participate in trade union activities. . . ."

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "[T]he CEACR hopes that . . . 'measures will soon be adopted to ensure rapid and effective compliance with judicial decisions ordering the reinstatement in their jobs of workers dismissed for trade union activities and that effective penalties will be established for failure to comply with such decisions.'"

Note: In August 2004, the Constitutional Court of Guatemala issued a ruling rescinding the authority of the Ministry of Labor to impose fines for labor rights violations. Following this decision, it is not clear whether Guatemala's law permits any fines to be assessed for labor violations.

(2) Restrictive Requirements for Formation of Industrial Unions. Guatemala requires a majority of workers in an industry to vote in support of the formation of an industry-wide union for the union to be recognized. This requirement violates Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: The high, industry-wide threshold creates "a nearly insurmountable barrier to the formation of new industry-wide unions."

(3) Onerous Requirements to Strike. Guatemalan law includes a number of provisions that interfere with the right to strike. The Guatemalan Labor Code mandates that unions obtain permission from a labor court to strike, even where workers have voted in favor of striking. In addition, the Labor Code requires a majority of a firm's workers to vote in favor of the strike. These laws violate Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: Noting that "procedural hurdles" helped to make legal strikes rare, the Report states, "The Labor Code requires approval by simple majority of a firm's workers to call a legal strike. The Labor Code requires that a labor court consider whether workers are conducting themselves peacefully and have exhausted available mediation before ruling on the legality of a strike."

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "[O]ne of the general requirements laid down in the legislation . . . is still under criticism by the CEACR: 'only the votes cast should be counted in calculating the majority and . . . the quorum should be set at a reasonable level.'"

(4) Ambiguity in Certain Criminal Penalties. Guatemala's Penal Code provides for criminal penalties against anyone who disrupts the operation of enterprises that contribute to the economic development of the country. Whether and how these penalties apply to workers engaged in a lawful strike is unclear, and this ambiguity has deterred workers from exercising their right to strike. The CEACR has stated that application of these penalties to a worker who engaged in a lawful strike would violate ILO Conventions 87 and 98.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "The CEACR has drawn the attention of the Government to the fact that certain provisions of the Penal Code are not compatible with ILO Conventions . . . noting that . . . sentences of imprisonment can be imposed as a punishment . . . for participation in a strike."

(5) Restrictions on Union Leadership. Guatemala maintains a number of restrictions with respect to union leadership including: (1) restricting leadership positions to Guatemalan nationals; and (2) requiring that union leaders be currently employed in the occupation represented by the union. These restrictions violate Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "Both the Constitution and the Labour Code prohibit foreign nationals from holding office in a trade union. . . . The Labour Code requires officials to be workers in the enterprise. . . . These restrictions have given rise to observations by the CEACR."

HONDURAS

(1) Burdensome Requirements for Union Recognition. Honduran law requires more than 30 workers to form a trade union. This numerical requirement acts as a bar to the establishment of unions in small firms, and violates ILO Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: "The [ILO] has noted that various provisions in the labor law restrict freedom of association, including . . . the requirement of more than 30 workers to constitute a trade union. . . ."

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "[T]he requirement to have more than 30 workers to constitute a trade union . . . has prompted the CEACR to comment that this number is 'not conducive to the formation of trade unions in small, and medium size enterprises.'"

(2) Limitations on the Number of Unions. Honduran law prohibits the formation of more than one trade union in a single enterprise. This restriction violates ILO Convention 87 on the right of workers to join or establish organizations of their own choosing, and fosters the creation of monopoly unions.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: "The [ILO] has noted that various provisions in the labor law restrict freedom of association, including the prohibition of more than 1 trade union in a single enterprise. . . ."

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "Such a provision, in the view of the CEACR, is contrary to Article 2 of Convention No. 87, since the law should not institutionalize a de facto monopoly. . . ."

(3) Restrictions on Union Leadership. Honduras requires that union leaders be Honduran nationals, and be employed in the occupation that the union represents. These restrictions violate ILO Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: "The [ILO] has noted that various provisions in the labor law restrict freedom of association, including . . . the prohibition on foreign nationals holding union office, the requirement that union officials must be employed in the economic activity of the business the union represents. . . ."

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "The Labour Code prohibits foreign nationals from holding trade union offices and requires officials to be engaged in the activity, profession or trade characteristic of the trade union. . . . The CEACR has objected to these provisions, which it deems incompatible with Article 3 of Convention No. 87. . . ."

(4) Inadequate Protection Against Anti-Union Discrimination. The ILO CEACR has faulted Honduras for a number of years for not providing adequate sanctions for anti-union discrimination. For example, under the law, only a very small fine equivalent to approximately US$12-$600 can be assessed against employers for interfering with the right of association. This Honduran law violates ILO Convention 98.

This deficiency was confirmed by a 2004 Report of the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations (CEACR): "The penalties envisaged . . . against persons impairing the right to freedom of association (from 200 to 2,000 lempiras, with 200 lempiras being equivalent to around $12) had been deemed inadequate by one worker's confederation. . . . The Committee once again hopes that [legislation will be prepared] providing for sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against all acts of anti-union discrimination."

(5) Few Protections Against Employer Interference in Union Activities. Honduras prohibits employers or employees with ties to management from joining a union; it does not, however, prohibit employers from interfering in union activities through financial or other means. The failure to preclude employer involvement violates ILO Convention 98 on the right to organize and bargain collectively.

This deficiency was confirmed in a 2004 Report of the ILO CEACR: "[T]he Convention provides for broader protection for workers' . . . organizations against any acts of interference . . . in particular, acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of employers or employers' organizations, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations. In this respect, the Committee once again hopes that [labor law reform will include provisions] designed to . . . afford full and adequate protection against any acts of interference, as well as sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against such acts."

(6) Restrictions on Federations. Honduras prohibits federations from calling strikes. The CEACR has criticized this prohibition, which contravenes the right to organize.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "Federations and confederations do not have a recognized right to strike . . . which has prompted the CEACR to recall that such provisions are contrary to Articles 3, 5 and 6 of Convention No. 87 . . ."

(7) Onerous Strike Requirements. Honduras requires that two-thirds of union members must support a strike for it to be legal. This requirement violates ILO Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: "[T]he CEACR has recalled that restrictions on the right to strike should not be such as to make it impossible to call a strike in practice, and that a simple majority of voters calculated on the basis of the workers present at the assembly should be sufficient to be able to call a strike."

NICARAGUA

(1) Inadequate Protection Against Anti-Union Discrimination. Nicaragua's laws permit employers to fire employees who are attempting to organize a union as long as they provide double the normal severance pay. This allowance violates ILO Convention 98.

This deficiency was confirmed in the October 2003 ILO Report: The Annex to the Report states that the Labor Code provides that "if the employer does not carry out reinstatement, he/she shall pay double the compensation according to the length of service."

(2) Use of Solidarity Associations to Bypass Unions. Nicaragua allows employers to create "solidarity associations" but does not specify how those associations relate to unions. The failure to include protections against employers using solidarity associations to interfere with union activities violates ILO Convention 98.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: "The Labor Code recognizes cooperatives into which many transportation and agricultural workers are organized. Representatives of most organized labor groups criticized these cooperatives and assert that they do not permit strikes, have inadequate grievance procedures, are meant to displace genuine, independent trade unions and are dominated by employers."

(3) Procedural Impediments to Calling a Strike. Nicaragua maintains a number of restrictive procedural requirements for calling strikes. (According to the 2002 U.S. State Department Human Rights Report, the Nicaraguan Labor Ministry asserts that it would take approximately 6 months for a union to go through the entire process to be permitted to have a legal strike.) Since all legal protections may be withdrawn in the case of an illegal strike, the practical outcome is that workers who strike often lose their jobs, thus undermining the right to strike protected by Convention 87.

This deficiency was confirmed in the 2004 U.S. State Department Report on Human Rights Practices: "Observers contend that the [process for calling a strike] is inappropriately lengthy and so complex that there have been few legal strikes since the 1996 Labor Code came into effect . . ."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for today on account of personal reasons.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for today on account of business in the district.

Ms. LINDA T. SANCHEZ of California (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for today on account of official business in the district.

Mr. SESSIONS (at the request of Mr. DELAY) for the week of June 13 on account of taking his sons to scout camp.

Mr. TOWNS (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for today.

Ms. WATERS (at the request of Ms. PELOSI) for today on account of personal business.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. PALLONE) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Ms. WOOLSEY, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. PALLONE, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. EMANUEL, for 5 minutes, today.

Ms. WATERS, for 5 minutes, today.

Ms. SOLIS, for 5 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. GUTKNECHT) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. GUTKNECHT, for 5 minutes, June 20.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana, for 5 minutes, today, June 14, 15, 16 and 17.

Mr. NORWOOD, for 5 minutes, June 16. (The following Member (at her own request) to revise and extend her remarks and include extraneous material:)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN, for 5 minutes, today.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 21 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 14, 2005, at 9 a.m., for morning hour debates.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of rule XII, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2293. A letter from the Comptroller, Department of Defense, transmitting a report of a violation of the Antideficiency Act by the Department of the Army, Case Number 02-01, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

2294. A letter from the Under Secretary for Acquisition, Technology and Logistics, Department of Defense, transmitting certified materials provided to the Base Closure and Realignment Commission; to the Committee on Armed Services.

2295. A letter from the Deputy Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting notification concerning the Department of the Navy's Proposed Letter(s) of Offer and Acceptance (LOA) to Japan for defense articles and services (Transmittal No. 05-27), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on International Relations.

2296. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting Determination Related to Serbia Under 563(c) of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2005 (Div. D, P.L. 108-447); to the Committee on International Relations.

2297. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting pursuant to section 3(d) of the Arms Export Control Act, certification regarding the proposed transfer of major defense equipment from the Government of Australia (Transmittal No. RSAT-02-05); to the Committee on International Relations.

2299. A letter from the Secretary, Department of the Interior, transmitting the semi-annual report on the activities of the Office of Inspector General covering the six month period of September 30, 2004 through April 1, 2005, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. app. (Insp. Gen. Act) section 5(b); to the Committee on Government Reform.

2300. A letter from the Acting White House Liaison, Department of Commerce, transmitting a report pursuant to the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998; to the Committee on Government Reform.

2301. A letter from the Acting White House Liaison, Department of Commerce, transmitting a report pursuant to the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998; to the Committee on Government Reform.

2302. A letter from the Acting White House Liaison, Department of Commerce, transmitting a report pursuant to the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998; to the Committee on Government Reform.

2303. A letter from the Chairman, National Endowment for the Arts, transmitting the Semiannual Report to the Congress of the Inspector General and the Chairman's Semiannual Report on Final Actions Resulting from Audit Reports for the period of October 1, 2004 through March 31, 2005, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. app. (Insp. PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 109th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

WASHINGTON, MONDAY, JUNE 13, 2005

No. 77

Senate

The Senate met at 2 p.m. and was called to order by the Honorable RICHARD BURR, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Eternal spirit, You have made of one blood all the people of the Earth. You are the God of our weary years and silent tears.

Lord, American history contains triumphant and tragic chapters. We read about freedom, justice, liberty, and equality, but also about slavery, injustice, violence, and racism. Thank You for the seasons in a nation's life that enable it to admit mistakes and seek to right wrongs.

Forgive the negligence and passivity of our lawmakers that nurtured thousands of documented and undocumented American lynchings. Forgive the failure to act that permitted more than 99 percent of the perpetrators of these sins to escape punishment.

In these challenging days, help our Senators to remember that all that is necessary for evil to thrive is for good people to do nothing. Transform our contrition into service that will today bring liberty to captives, sight to the blind, and comfort to the bruised.

Bless the descendants of those who were lynched. Remind them that You can transform dark yesterdays into bright tomorrows and make the crooked places straight. Give them the wisdom to see that in everything, You are working for the good of those who love You.

Lord, empower all of us to continue to strive for right, until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable RICHARD BURR led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 13, 2005.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable RICHARD BURR, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, to perform the duties of the Chair.

TED STEVENS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BURR thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, today the Senate will debate Executive Calendar No. 66, the nomination of Thomas Griffith to be a circuit judge for the DC Circuit. The vote on confirmation will be at 10 a.m. tomorrow. I am pleased we will be able to have a vote on this nomination, the sixth circuit court judge to be confirmed in the last couple of weeks.

Following the debate on the Griffith nomination, the Senate will then debate S. Res. 39, the antilynching resolution, under a 3-hour time agreement. As was announced last week, there will be a voice vote on the adoption of the resolution. We will have no recorded votes during today's session.

Tomorrow, following the vote on the Griffith nomination, the Senate will proceed to consideration of H.R. 6, the Energy bill. Chairman DOMENICI will be on the Senate floor ready to start the amendment process tomorrow morning. I encourage Senators to work with the bill managers so we can make significant progress on that important bill this week.

As a reminder, there will be no votes this Friday, June 17, to accommodate the Democratic retreat.

With that, Mr. President, I am going to turn to the Democratic leader, and then I will have a longer opening statement following his remarks.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have a statement of a few minutes. Does the Senator want me to do that now?

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, let's proceed with the Democratic leader, and I will follow with my statement.

Mr. REID. I appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished majority leader. I do have something to do, so I appreciate that.

TRIBUTE TO FORMER SENATOR JAMES EXON

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I am terribly saddened by the death of Jim Exon. Those of us who had the opportunity to serve with him are so troubled by his death. He was an outstanding Senator. He was fair. He worked on both sides of the aisle. He protected the State of Nebraska and our country so well.

• This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

I have so many fond memories of him. His enthusiasm for the work he did here was contagious. His sense of humor was wonderful. Jim Exon loved Nebraska football. He cared about a lot of issues, but other than his family, Nebraska football came first. He is going to be buried in Lincoln, NE, on this Wednesday. He died, I believe it was Friday night. BEN NELSON called me Saturday morning. Jim Exon was certainly a mentor of BEN NELSON. We will all miss him very much.

I hope those who have some knowledge of Senator Exon will recognize we hope to take an airplane trip to Nebraska Wednesday afternoon to attend his funeral. He was a wonderful man. I miss him so much.

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this past Friday, I was in Cincinnati. I had some business to conduct there, but my plane got in early, and I had some time on my hands. My staff said: Would you like to go to a new museum that opened in August of 2004? I said: Sure, I will be happy to. It is a museum that is dedicated to forcing us to remember what went on in the dark days of the history of this country dealing with slavery.

The museum is done so well. You walk in, and the first thing you see is this large facility—big, tall—and it is a facility that was used in the late 1700s, 1800s for holding slaves. The upper story—using that term loosely—was for the men and the bottom for the women. They still have the shackles there, the chains that were used to hold these people. They have the writing on the walls used to describe what these human beings were worth, how much money, and for what they could be used.

So it is very appropriate that I returned to Washington today since we are going to debate some legislation that is very pertinent.

In this body's two centuries of history, we have done many great things. We sent men to the Moon, created schools for our kids, fed the hungry, and lent a helping hand to struggling families. But today I rise to speak about one of this institution's great failures—its shameful refusal to enact antilynching legislation in the first half of the 20th century.

Today, one of the saddest chapters in our Chamber's history will come to a close when we apologize for the Senate's inaction. I join my colleagues in apologizing to the deceased victims of lynchings and their surviving loved ones. I pray this Chamber will never fail to see this injustice that was done. We must realize and understand what it was. It was an injustice.

While the exact number is impossible to determine, records indicate that since 1882—the best records we have—4,749 individuals have died from lynching, men and women, mostly men, and most of them by far African Americans. These Americans were killed, tortured, mutilated, and maimed with near impunity. Most were denied due process under the law, and their killers rarely—very rarely—faced consequences for their actions, as indicated by the prayer offered today by our Chaplain which indicated little less than 1 percent who saw some retribution in the courts. The Senate's inaction helped create a culture of acceptance toward these heinous crimes against humanity.

Photos from this book—"Without Sanctuary" is the name of the book—a book of lynchings that occurred in America, and it is depicted in photographs—photographs that are so hard to accept—is the principal reason we are here today, this one book.

This book shows men, women, children donning their finest clothing and gleefully posing in front of deceased people who had been hanged and, prior to being hanged, often mutilated. Even worse, many photos were turned into postcards, until 1908, when the Senate at least amended U.S. Postal Service regulations to forbid the mailing of lynching photographs made into postcards. Think about that.

American history is rich with stories of heroes and heroines, as well as patriots, of patriotism. However, the lynching of so many Americans will always be a stain on our great democracy. Only after passage of time, only after growing pressure from civil rights organizations, only after over 200 antilynching bills, condemnation by foreign nations, petitions from seven U.S. Presidents, and outcries from the African-American press and some mainstream publications did the occurrence of this horrible act decline. But this book, published in 2000, is the real reason we are moving today.

It is my sincere hope that the relatives of the victims of these horrible acts will accept this body's sincere apology and take solace in the Senate finally recognizing its shortcomings.

It is also my sincere hope that the Senate does not stop with its apologies. There is much more to be done. We can honor the legacy of these victims by continuing to confront the challenges in civil rights before us in enacting legislation that will protect, for example, voting rights and improve the lives of so many Americans.

First, I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to stand strong in support of reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act.

Second, disparities between African Americans and Whites in health care and education are still too great. I encourage this body to support legislation that will improve health care among African Americans, improve educational resources, and provide opportunities for African Americans in many different avenues.

Finally, I ask the families of the victims of these terrible crimes to accept the Senate's apology, and I pray that my colleagues will act positively on upcoming legislation to honor the souls of those passed and that they may finally rest in peace.

Mr. President, again, I extend my appreciation to the majority leader in allowing me to go before him this afternoon.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader.

AFRICA

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this morning, President Bush, accompanied by the Presidents of five African States—Botswana, Ghana, Niger, Mozambique, and Namibia—announced the African Growth and Opportunity Act forum that will be held in July of this year in Senegal.

At that joint meeting and announcement of the Senegal meeting, I had the opportunity to sit down and talk with each of these African leaders, the Presidents of their respective countries, about the particular challenges their countries face and how the United States of America, working in partnership with them, can help.

We discussed our continuing efforts to help the nations of Africa fight disease and hunger and to develop sound, healthy, and accountable governance.

In our conversations, I underscored the need for continued political reform, for economic development, for investment in human capital, especially as we combat an issue the President talked a lot about earlier in the press announcement, and that is the tyranny of HIV/AIDS. We also discussed the President's plan to offer additional emergency aid to Africa at the upcoming G8 summit in July. This money is in addition to the $674 million the President announced last week during Prime Minister Tony Blair's visit to Washington.

Needless to say, the African Presidents were overwhelmed by these initiatives. They were impressed by the leadership of Prime Minister Blair and President Bush and by the generosity of the American people.

Meanwhile, on Saturday, in what Treasury Secretary John Snow called an achievement of historic proportions, the G8, led by the United States and the United Kingdom, agreed to cancel more than $40 billion in debt owed by 18 of the world's poorest countries, including 14 African nations.

Two hundred and eighty million African citizens will no longer labor under massive debtloads that have been crippling their ability to grow and prosper. This agreement wipes the slate clean. Their governments will see a combined savings of an estimated $1.5 billion a year. As we discussed this morning, their challenge now is to invest those savings wisely and effectively.

If this money is used wisely, the people of these countries will see better education, cleaner water, less disease, and live better and more productive lives. Countries such as Rwanda, Uganda, Zambia, Mozambique—all will be better able to focus their resources on economic development, education, health, infrastructure, and all the fundamentals that we know help to build prosperity.

They will be able to once and for all break the loan-debt-forgiveness cycle that has undermined their ability to grow and to invest.

Saturday's agreement will help many of Africa's poorest countries get on their feet and make meaningful strides toward the future.

President Bush and the Republican-led Congress have been steadfast supporters of Africa's development. I personally have had the opportunity to visit the continent of Africa on eight separate occasions, both as majority leader and as part of medical mission work on that wonderful continent. We have consistently championed efforts to promote accountability, good governance, political reform, and economic growth. Overcoming the problems that afflict the continent is tough work, it is difficult work, it is challenging work, but we are committed to helping Africa realize its rich potential.

Instead of seeing only problems and obstacles, we seek solutions. Instead of offering a Band-Aid, we offered smart aid. We as a country have much to be proud of in terms of our contributions. One only need to look at the statistics. So far this fiscal year, the United States has provided the continent of Africa with $1.4 billion in humanitarian relief. President Bush has tripled America's contributions.

Today, nearly a quarter of every aid dollar to Africa comes from America, up from just 10 percent 4 short years ago. Yes, we really for the first time demand accountability from these investments. These aid dollars today are tied to economic and political reforms. Our goal is to help these countries root out corruption, to address human rights, to protect human rights, to promote the rule of law, and to build a stable, civil society, one that can meet the needs and demands of a growing and modern society.

Meanwhile, the African Growth and Opportunity Acceleration Act, also known as AGOA, is already demonstrating its poverty fighting power. Last year, the Senate passed and the President signed the African Growth and Opportunity Acceleration Act. As a result, U.S. exports to sub-Saharan Africa have increased by 25 percent and America's imports from these participating countries are up 88 percent. Economic growth in sub-Saharan Africa is at an 8-year high.

Our goal is to break with the old approaches of the past where success was measured in dollars. Instead, we want real, measurable results, proof that the African people are benefiting from our efforts. And they are coming. I applaud the President for his strong and principled leadership. He understands that Africa can be and is a place of great hope and opportunity. He sees both the practical and the moral dimensions of America's leadership.

Every human being needs and deserves the fundamentals of life: food, shelter, water, safety. Countries that fail in any of these basic functions become dangerous places for their citizens and potential threats to America's security. It is in our mutual interest to promote peace and stability on the African Continent.

As a physician, I have had the opportunity to travel extensively throughout the continent. I have had the opportunity to perform surgery and operate in the oldest medical school on that continent in Uganda. I have had the opportunity to treat patients for war injuries, injuries from a civil war in southern Sudan, to treat patients with HIV/AIDS.

From that perspective, I was so proud when the President today was talking at the press conference with the Presidents of those countries about his HIV/AIDS initiative: $15 billion committed by the United States, by our U.S. Congress, to combat what I believe is the greatest moral, humanitarian, and public health challenge of our times. I am also participating in an effort to help expand health care and spread goodwill through that health care across the globe. I believe—and I have had that little window to be able to see directly—that through the good works of many talented women and men of compassion medicine can be not only an instrument of health but by the delivery of that medicine and by the delivery of that public health care can be a true currency for peace.

I have seen that real tangible intervention can help bridge the gaps and misunderstandings that so often divide people, that can divide societies. We see that phenomenon in Afghanistan and Iraq and we saw it in Southeast Asia in the aftermath of the terrible tsunami tragedy. Countless health care professionals from all over the world, both volunteers and government workers, rushed to that devastated region to offer assistance. Private companies, corporations, and nongovernment organizations offered services and supplies. The outpouring of support from all over the world, led in many ways by American efforts, was truly an extraordinary event, a moving testament to our shared humanity. That is why in April I introduced the Global Health Corps Act of 2005. America possesses a vast reservoir of talent, skills, knowledge, and compassion that can both help heal but also promote health, both literally and figuratively, promoting our global ties. This is just one of the many efforts we are making to help promote peace and well-being on the African Continent. We are also reaching out directly to individual countries to help them tackle their most pressing problems.

Today, I also had the opportunity to speak with the President of Namibia. Namibia is one of Africa's greatest success stories. We were just there on a congressional delegation about 2 years ago.

Just 15 years after attaining its independence from apartheid-led South Africa, Namibia has emerged as a multiparty, multiracial democracy with a stable market-based economy. Like many African countries, the greatest threat to Namibia's development and continued success is the spread of the virus of HIV/AIDS. Namibia is one of the countries most adversely affected by HIV/AIDS. Already, 22 percent of sexually active adults in Namibia are infected by HIV. AIDS accounts for half of the deaths among individuals between the ages of 15 and 19 in Namibia and for 75 percent of all hospitalizations in public facilities.

The continued spread of this disease will have a devastating impact on the Namibian people and their efforts to build on their already remarkable achievements. For this reason, it is critical to continue to fund the President's emergency plan for AIDS relief, or PEPFAR, to assist Namibia in their battle against this terrible disease.

PEPFAR funding for Namibia has increased from $23 million in 2004 to an estimated $36 million in 2005. The administration has requested $49 million for 2006, and I encourage my Senate colleagues to support this funding as the Namibian people continue their fight against HIV/AIDS.

Despite its openness and competitiveness, the Namibian economy still faces a number of challenges. Since 1990, the annual per capita GDP growth rate in Namibia has averaged just 1.6 percent. The African Growth and Opportunity Acceleration Act is helping to capitalize Namibia's economic potential. Already, AGOA is estimated to have created 9,000 new jobs in Namibia. In addition, Namibia's 2004 exports to the United States under AGOA are valued at $161 million.

These achievements I mention because they are a model for political and economic reform throughout the African Continent. Steady American support will enhance Namibia's ability to contribute to Africa's peace, security, and stability. The President has said America has a special calling to come to the aid of the African people and that "we will do so with the compassion and generosity that has always defined the United States."

I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Senate and with the President to continue helping the continent heal and grow. We care deeply about the future of Africa. With time and an unwavering commitment to progress, I believe that together we can help Africa and its people share in the blessings of peace and prosperity.

TRIBUTE TO JESSE R. NICHOLS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 168, which was submitted earlier today.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 168) expressing gratitude and sincere respect for Jesse R. Nichols.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FRIST. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 168) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 168

Whereas, Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., faithfully served the United States Senate and the Committee on Finance as the Government Documents Clerk and Librarian from Nineteen Hundred Thirty-Seven through Nineteen Hundred Seventy-One; and

Whereas, Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., was born on June 14, 1909, in Clarksdale, Mississippi, and was the first African American Clerk employed by the United States Senate; and

Whereas, he carried out his duties in exemplary fashion, bringing credit to the Committee and to Congress; and

Whereas, Jesse Nichols worked effectively under the guidance of Democratic and Republican Chairmen, including Pat Harrison of Mississippi, Walter F. George of Georgia, Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia and Russell B. Long of Louisiana from the 75th Congress through the 91st Congress.

Whereas, the Committee on Finance will long remember the commitment, service and leadership of Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., as documented in an oral history posted on the Senate Historian's Web site; and Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the United States Senate expresses its deep gratitude and sincere respect for Jesse R. Nichols for his unflinching service and his dedication to the United States Senate. The Senate hereby expresses condolences to the family due to the death of Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., on February 18, 2005.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this resolution expresses our gratitude and respect to the family of Jesse Nichols. I will take just a couple of moments to comment on Jesse Nichols, who was the first African-American clerk to be employed by this body, the Senate.

Jesse Nichols was born on June 14, 1909, in Clarksdale, MS. In 1930, Jesse enrolled at Howard University where he hoped to study medicine, but his plans were derailed by the Depression, and he, as so many others, had to join the employment line.

After a stint working at a local delicatessen, Jesse secured a position at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Then in 1937, Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi hired Jesse Nichols to join the Finance Committee as document clerk/librarian. He became responsible for the committee's immense collection of tax codes and hearings, witness statements, and other publications.

Over the days and the weeks ahead, Mr. Nichols became indispensable to the committee staff and the Senators who depended on his professionalism and accumulated knowledge. On his 30th anniversary in the Senate, Member after Member rose to pay tribute to Mr. Nichols. Senator Russell Long praised Mr. Nichols for his consummate professionalism, diligence, and devotion to this body. Delaware Senator John R. Williams testified that over his three decades of service Jesse Nichols "earned the respect of those former giants of this Senate, each of whom was proud to call him a friend."

Jesse Nichols was deeply respected by his colleagues and was dearly missed when he retired from the Senate in 1971. On February 18th of this year, Jesse died a few months short of his 96th birthday. Jesse Nichols lived a full and long life. On behalf of the Senate family, I recognize the contributions of Jesse Nichols to this venerable body. We are sincerely grateful for his service and dedication.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to Jesse R. Nichols, Sr. Mr. Nichols, who passed away on February 15, was the first African-American clerk for the Senate Finance Committee and one of its longest serving staff members. He worked with the committee from 1937 to 1971.

Born in Clarksdale, MS, Mr. Nichols came to the Finance Committee at a time early in the building of its staff. Back then, there were few, if any, African-Americans on staff with the Senate. At Finance, there were just three staff members with the committee and no standing subcommittees. Today, there are 70 staff members and 5 standing subcommittees.

During his more than 30 years with the committee, he created the committee's archival system and became our resident historian. He also contributed to the history of the Senate as a whole. In 1994, he generously participated in an extensive oral history for the Senate Historical Office. In it, he describes some of his most memorable moments during his long tenure. Mr. Nichols rubbed elbows with some of the most important leaders of the day—but he was excluded from eating in the Capitol's restaurant and cafeterias because of his race.

On the day that Mr. Nichols celebrated his 30th anniversary with the committee, several Senators paid him homage on the Capitol floor. They noted that Mr. Nichols outranked every member of the Finance Committee in terms of length of service. Senator Long in particular called Mr. Nichols a "senior member" of the committee and "one of God's best people." When Mr. Nichols finally retired in 1971, the committee had to hire two people to carry on his extensive work.

I salute Mr. Nichols for his long and trusted service to the Senate and send my heartfelt condolences to the Nichols family.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I want to pay tribute to the life of Jesse Nichols, Sr., who passed away on February 22, 2005. Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., faithfully served the U.S. Senate for over 30 years. He was the first African American Clerk employed by the U.S. Senate.

Jesse Nichols was born on June 14, 1909, in Clarksdale, MS. He began his service when the late Pat Harrison of Mississippi was the distinguished Chairman of the Finance Committee—the committee I am now privileged to chair.

Jesse was appointed as a messenger for the Finance Committee in 1936, and was elevated about 6 months later to assistant clerk of the Committee. At that time, the staff of the Finance Committee numbered only three.

In 1967, on the occasion of his thirtieth anniversary on the Senate staff, several members of the Finance Committee, led by Delaware Republican John J. Williams, rose in the Senate chamber to pay tribute to Jesse Nichols who had "earned the respect of those former giants of the Senate, each of whom was proud to call him a friend."

Senator Williams added that:

It is refreshing to meet a man who throughout the years has served the Senate and his country with but one thought in mind, and that is, to do his job to the best of his ability, always remembering that as a Government employee he is a servant of the people.

Senate Republican Leader Everett Dirksen added his endorsement, noting that:

Thirty years of faithful and devoted service certainly deserves to be taken account of in the proceedings of this body.

An oral history interview conducted by the Senate Historical Office from March 26 to April 12, 1994, is available on the Senate Web site. The history documents Jesse's employment by the Committee on Finance from the 75th Congress through the 91st Congress.

He worked under the guidance of Democratic and Republican Chairmen, including Walter F. George of Georgia, I Senator Eugene Millikin of Colorado, Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia and Russell B. Long of Louisiana.

Jesse Nichols' service was faithful, exemplary and noteworthy. He served not only the Finance Committee with class and grace, but also the Senate as a whole during that critical period in American history. I join my colleagues in recognizing Mr. Nichols' life and am grateful to his service to our country.

S. RES. 168

Whereas Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., faithfully served the United States Senate and the Committee on Finance as the Government Documents Clerk and Librarian from nineteen hundred thirty-seven through nineteen hundred seventy-one;

Whereas Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., was born on June 14, 1909, in Clarksdale, Mississippi, and was the first African American Clerk employed by the United States Senate;

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF THOMAS B. GRIFFITH TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session and proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 66, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas B. Griffith, of Utah, to be United States Circuit Judge for the District of Columbia.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed as in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. MCCONNELL are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, is the Griffith nomination before the Senate?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Thomas B. Griffith to serve as a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

Because Tom Griffith served as Senate legal counsel from 1995 to 1999, many Members of this body are very familiar with his character, judgment, and record. For the benefit of those new members of this body and those members of the public who are not familiar with Tom Griffith, I want to spend the next few minutes detailing why his education, experience, and expertise make him an excellent nominee for this extremely important Federal court.

As I will set forth, Tom has broad support on both sides of the aisle. In the far too often partisan debate over judicial nominations that has occurred over the last few years, it is refreshing to have before us a nominee whose past record of achievement has resulted in so many current supporters who are firmly convinced that his future service on the bench will be successful.

One of the many reasons why I am particularly proud to support Tom Griffith is because he is a constituent of mine. Mr. Griffith serves as assistant to the president and general counsel of Brigham Young University.

As might be expected, Tom has many supporters at BYU. Here is what associate dean and Professor Constance Lundberg at the J. Reuben Clark School of Law has to say about the nominee:

[Tom] is also a lawyer of unexcelled ability. He understands the differences between law and policy and has a deep understanding of the powers and prerogatives of each of the three branches of government. He is immensely fair and compassionate. The laws and Constitution of the United States could not be in better hands.

Tom also has his supporters among law school faculty off the BYU campus. For example, please listen to what Harvard Law Professor William Stuntz has said about the qualifications of Tom Griffith:

I know a great many of talented men and women in America's legal profession; I've taught more than three thousand students at three top law schools, and I have friends scattered across the country in various kinds of law practice and in academics. I do not know anyone whom I would rather see on the federal bench than Tom Griffith. If he is confirmed, he will not just be a good judge. He'll be a great one.

That is certainly strong praise and, as I remember law school, getting praise from law professors is never easy unless you truly earn it.

In order to become the lawyer he is today, Tom received a solid education.

Back in 1978, Mr. Griffith received his Bachelor's degree from BYU. I am proud to say that we both graduated from BYU. I am also proud to tell you that Tom graduated summa cum laude. For those of us who are proud to call Brigham Young University our alma mater, I want to note that BYU is our Nation's largest private university and is recognized by many as one of the finest institutions of higher learning anywhere in the world.

Tom Griffith was the valedictorian of the BYU College of Humanities. He was chosen as the recipient of the prestigious Edward S. Hinckley Scholarship.

Mr. Griffith pursued his legal studies at the University of Virginia School of Law. Once again, he distinguished himself by being selected as a member of the law review at the University of Virginia. This is an honor that very few law students achieve.

Upon graduation from law school in 1985, Tom commenced his legal career as an associate in the Charlotte, NC, law firm of Robinson, Bradshaw and Hinson. During this time, Mr. Griffith was engaged in corporate, commercial, securities and employment litigation.

In late 1989 Tom Griffith joined the well-known and highly regarded Washington, DC, law firm of Wiley, Rein and Fielding, first as an associate. Tom specialized and excelled in complex environmental insurance litigation and regulatory investigations and was made a partner in the firm.

Between March, 1995 and March, 1999, Tom Griffith served as Senate legal counsel. This is a highly demanding job as the Senate legal counsel advises the Senate on all legal matters related to the Senate including Senate investigations, the work of Senate committees, and defending acts of Congress and Senate resolutions.

During his time as Senate legal counsel, Tom faced the many challenges of advising the Senate during the impeachment of President Clinton. If there was ever a circumstance to test the temperament of a lawyer, his ability to ascertain what the law is and what prudence dictates, and to provide objective legal advice in a fair and even-handed manner in a highly charged atmosphere, surely it was the unique circumstances of the impeachment trial. By all accounts, Tom Griffith came through in flying colors.

After the impeachment trial, Tom rejoined the firm of Wiley, Rein and Fielding for about one year before taking his current position in Utah as the general counsel of Brigham Young University.

As you can tell from this thumb nail sketch of Tom Griffith's career, he is an achiever. He has had a terrific education and has done very well at very demanding schools. He has also distinguished himself in the practice of law with one of the great law firms in this country, as Senate legal counsel, and in his current capacity as assistant to the president and general counsel at BYU.

Many have relied upon Tom Griffith for sound legal advice. That is because he is an excellent lawyer who provides excellent advice.

Despite the claims on his time made by the various legal positions Mr. Griffith has held, he still found the time to take on a number of voluntary assignments that demonstrate a commitment to serving those in need. For example, between 1991 and 1995 Mr. Griffith spent several hundred hours of his own time attempting to overturn the sentence of a death row inmate. Ultimately, the strategy devised by Mr. Griffith was successful in obtaining a pardon by then-Governor, now-Senator GEORGE ALLEN on the eve of the scheduled execution.

Tom has volunteered to represent disadvantaged public school students in disciplinary proceedings and has helped operate soup kitchens or people in need.

I would also like to make my colleagues aware of Tom's interest in, and commitment to, the emerging democracies in Central Europe. For the last 10 years, Tom has worked on the American Bar Association's Central Eurasian Law Initiative, serving on the ABA Advisory Board in this area. In this capacity, he has helped train judges and lawyers in Croatia, Serbia, the Czech Republic and Russia. He has been very active in helping establish a regional judicial training center in Prague. Let me just mention what some of his peers in the international legal community have said about Tom Griffith.

Here is what David Tolbert, the Deputy Registrar at the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia has said about Tom Griffith:

Mr. Griffith is without question one of the best professionals with whom I have worked, given not only his capability as a lawyer but his integrity as a person. He also shows an open-minded approach to legal and other issues, and I have discussed many issues with him, a number of which we come to at somewhat different angles, and his intellectual honesty and integrity are outstanding.

That is indeed high praise. Mr. Tolbert is not alone among those in the international legal community who have come to know Tom and speak highly about him.

Mark Ellis, the executive director of the International Bar Association has made the following comments about Tom.

The duty of a judge is to administer justice according to the law, without fear or favor, and without regard to the wishes or policy of the governing majority. Tom Griffith will fervently adhere to this principle. As is natural in a democracy, people will not always agree with Tom's decisions from the bench. I will certainly not always agree with those decisions. However, there will never be a question as to the veracity behind them.

I think that Mr. Tolbert and Mr. Ellis have made some important observations about Tom Griffith's competence and character.

In addition to his international work in helping to bring democratic institutions into formerly totalitarian regimes, Mr. Griffith has also served as a Commissioner on the Secretary of Education's Commission on Opportunity in Athletics. There are many difficult issues that universities across the country face in operating balanced athletic programs vis a vis male and female athletes in an era of constrained budgets. Tom has been a constructive voice in this important dialogue and sometimes thankless task. I prepared to speak at further length on his activities in this area but will not do so at this point. I will tell you that—not surprising for a father of five daughters—Tom has worked, consistent with the law, to bring opportunities for women athletes.

In addition to these activities, between 1996 and 2002 Tom Griffith served as vice chairman of the Federalism and Separation of Powers Practice Group of the Federalist Society. As a long time friend and supporter of the Federalist Society and its leader, Leonard Leo, I am pleased that Tom has provided his thinking and energy to the important areas of federalism and separation of powers.

As befitting a man of his experience, Mr. Griffith has also given many speeches in educational settings that cover a wide variety of legal topics including, The Rule of Law; The Line Item Veto Act; Disciplining Congress; The Taxing and Spending Powers, and, of course, The Impeachment of President Clinton.

In addition, Tom has authored several scholarly articles that have appeared in legal periodicals including his law review note, Beyond Process: A Substantive Rationale for the Bill of Attainder Clause and his more recent 2003 article in the Utah Bar Journal entitled, Lawyers and the Rule of Law.

The record is clear that Tom Griffith is an accomplished lawyer and an outstanding member of the bar. Despite the many highlights of academic achievements and professional accomplishments that I have just reviewed, I have no doubt that Tom would describe his greatest joy in life as his 28-year marriage to his wife, Susan, and the six children that their marriage has produced. Tom and Susan have five daughters—Chelsea, Megan, Erin, Victoria and Tanye and a son, Robert. Tom and Susan were recently made grandparents for the first time. They have a month old grandson, William Sawyer Watts. His parents are Chelsea and Eric Watts. I would be remiss if I did not mention that Tom's only other married child, Megan, is married to Ryan Clegg.

I think it is both important and appropriate to note that Tom has spent considerable time in positions of leadership in his church.

Now that I have spent a few minutes describing the basic facts about Tom Griffith's education and experience, I will spend the next few minutes making some qualitative judgments about him.

I am all for Tom Griffith. Everyone knows that. I first became familiar with Tom through his work in the Senate. As Senate legal counsel, he impressed many in this body for being hard-working, fair-minded, and honest. I am aware of no one who believes that he carried out his responsibilities as Senate legal counsel in a partisan manner.

And let's face it, the role of Senate legal counsel is not an easy job. We all know about the challenges and difficulties associated with the impeachment trial. But let me just list a few other significant legal matters that Mr. Griffith handled while in the Senate.

These include representing the Senate in various lawsuits relate to the Line Item Veto Act; advising the Senate of its institutional interests in the Senate campaign finance investigations held by the Committee on Government Affairs with respect to fund raising of the 1996 elections; representing the Senate in the investigations related to the contested 1996 Louisiana Senate election; and, many matters, including a Senate subpoena directed to the White House, related to the Senate Whitewater investigation.

You can see that the inherently controversial issues that the Senate legal counsel is compelled to confront could easily end up in making some particular Senators less than pleased from time to time. Add to that the mother of all contentious issues—a Senate impeachment trial—and I hope you can see why a person like Tom Griffith, who came through the impeachment trial with bipartisan respect, might be exactly the type of individual we need on the D.C. Circuit.

But do not take it just from me. I will spend the next few minutes to tell you what judgments that others—leading Republicans and Democrats alike—have made about Tom Griffith.

Let me start by reciting from the testimony that my colleague from Utah, Senator BENNETT, gave to the Judiciary Committee last fall. Here is what Senator BENNETT said:

... Tom Griffith really needs no introduction to the Senate because he served as Legal Counsel to the Senate in what is perhaps the Senate's most difficult experience, at least the most difficult experience in the time that I have been here. Tom Griffith was Counsel to the Senate when we went through the historic impeachment... trial of President Clinton—only the second time in our Republic's history where the Senate has had this kind of challenge. I was involved in that, as were members of this Committee.

The primary burden of dealing with that challenge fell upon the two leaders, Senator Lott as Majority Leader and Senator Daschle as the Minority Leader. I watched with interest and then admiration as Tom Griffith negotiated through that particular mine field, giving very sound, calm, carefully researched and reasoned advice to both sides. He was not a partisan counsel. From my observation, Senator Daschle was as reliant upon Tom Griffith's legal expertise as was Senator Lott.

If I can take us back to the memory of that experience, virtually everyone around us in Washington predicted a melt-down. The comment was made that this case was toxic. It had soiled the House of Representatives and it was going to soil the United States Senate.

... the Senate came out of that experience with its reputation enhanced rather than soiled, and to no small degree that fact... is due to Tom Griffith.

There are very few nominees for the Federal bench who have had the experience of going through that kind of fire, who have had their judicial temperament tested in that kind of an atmosphere. Tom Griffith therefore comes before this Committee unique in terms of his experience and with the Senate as a whole, and indeed in the national spotlight.

I think that there is much wisdom in Senator BENNETT's reflections. I understand that Senator BENNETT will come to the floor this afternoon and make some remarks about Mr. Griffith. I hope my colleagues will listen carefully to my colleague and friend from Utah.

Unlike the vast majority of the nominees the Senate reviews, judicial and executive branch, many of us have had the chance to know Tom Griffith personally and to see how he acts under extremely stressful, and sometimes extremely partisan, circumstances. He has more than passed the test. Tom Griffith has been in the crucible of major political and legal events. He performed well under the sometimes scorching heat of the situation and helped all of us get through that unique test.

But do not take it from me and Senator BENNETT alone, after all we are both Republicans and Mr. Griffith is our constituent. Here is what some leading Democrats have said about Tom Griffith.

Let me start with Senator DODD, our colleague from Connecticut. Upon Mr. Griffith's departure from the Senate, Senator DODD made the following remarks on the Senate floor:

Mr. DODD. As an original cosponsor of the resolution, I rise today to add my remarks in support of, and in gratitude to, our former Senate legal counsel, Mr. Tom Griffith.

It is always with mixed emotions that I speak on occasions such as this. While I am glad for Tom and wish him well in his return to private practice, I know that the Senate will miss the wise counsel and dedication he demonstrated during his nearly 4 years of service to this body.

The ancient Chinese had a curse in which they wished their victim a life "in interesting times". For better or for worse, Tom lived such a life as Senate legal counsel. From my place on the Rules Committee—first as a member and now as Ranking Member—I had a unique perspective on the legal counsel's efforts to deal with numerous "interesting" issues presenting novel, rare, and in some cases, historic issues, including implementation of the Congressional Accountability Act, resolution of the Louisiana election challenge, and, of course, the recent impeachment trial. Speaking for myself—and, I suspect, most of my colleagues—I must say that Tom handled those difficult responsibilities with great confidence and skill.

A more contemporary observer—and one of Connecticut's most famous residents—Mark Twain, once suggested: "Always do right—this will gratify some and astonish the rest." During his tenure as legal counsel, Tom exemplified this philosophy, impressing all who knew him with his knowledge of the law and never succumbing to the temptation to bend the law to partisan ends. All of us who serve here in the Senate know the importance of the rule of law; but let us never forget that it is individuals like Mr. Thomas Griffith whose calling it is to put that ideal into practice.

Once again, I wish to express my gratitude to Tom for his years of service, and I ask that my colleagues join me in supporting this resolution.

To me, these comments by Senator DODD speak volumes about the precise qualities we should all want in our judiciary.

As an old litigator myself, I can tell you that it is possible for layers arguing against each other, fighting tooth and nail against each other every day, to come out of litigation with mutual respect. Of course it is possible for adversarial advocates to come out of trial with less than admirable feelings towards one another.

Whatever your views on the merits of President Clinton's impeachment, I think that most everyone would agree that David Kendall and Lanny Breuer were zealous advocates in the President's defense.

So was Chuck Ruff. We all miss him. He was a good man and a great lawyer.

As you would imagine, during the course of the impeachment trial both David Kendall and Lanny Breuer got to know Tom Griffith. They came to respect him.

I am prepared to debate more extensively on some concerns that have been raised and may be raised today about Mr. Griffith's bar membership. I might add that the ABA has looked into this matter very carefully and gave Mr. Griffith a qualified rating. And you would think that if the ABA was satisfied on a matter relating to bar membership, that this should put the matter to rest.

Nevertheless, some questions have been raised. This issue has been fully explored and, I think, put to rest in two Judiciary Committee hearings on Tom Griffith. In any event, it has been the subject of a few stories in the press. I might add that one of the newspapers that carried this story, The Washington Post, ultimately editorialized in support of the nomination of Mr. Griffith.

I thought it noteworthy that two leading Democratic lawyers, David Kendall and Lanny Breuer undertook a public act by writing a letter to the editor to the Washington Post that stated as follows:

For years Tom has been a leader in the bar and has shown dedication to its principles. The Federal bench needs judges like Tom, an excellent lawyer supported across the political spectrum.

Their letter goes on to say: "We support Tom and believe he has the intellect and judgment to be an excellent judge."

I want to emphasize that these are President Clinton's lawyers talking about a Republican judicial nominee—Tom Griffith—whom they got to know during the Senate impeachment trial.

But they are hardly alone. Many other leading Democratic lawyers hold Tom Griffith in high esteem. These include Seth Waxman, solicitor general of the United States in the Clinton Administration. Here is what Mr. Waxman wrote to The Washington Post in the aftermath of its story on Mr. Griffith's bar status:

I have known Tom since he was Senate legal counsel and I was Solicitor General, and I have the highest regard for his integrity . . . For my own part, I would stake most everything on his word alone. Litigants would be in good hands with a person of Tom Griffith's character as their judge.

That is high praise from one of the most skilled Supreme Court practitioners in this country. And once again, I point out that it is coming from a leading Democratic lawyer in support of one of President Bush's judicial nominees.

Support for Tom Griffith is equally vigorous on the part of leading Republican lawyers. Despite having been recently exposed as not being Deep Throat—after 30 years of speculation to the contrary—Fred Fielding, former White House Counsel to President Reagan, is still properly regarded as one of the best lawyers in Washington, DC, or anywhere else for that matter. Tom Griffith was his law partner so they know each other well.

Mr. Fielding, the former chairman of the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, has described Mr. Griffith as "a very special individual and a man possessed of the highest integrity. He is a fine professional who demands of himself the very best of his intellect and energies."

Speaking of former White House Counsels supportive of Tom Griffith, I would like to point out that Abner Mikva, a leading Democratic attorney, firmly supports Tom Griffith. Abner Mikva was a Democratic Congressman, and a Democratic appointee to the very court to which Mr. Griffith has been nominated to serve. Here is what he says about Mr. Griffith:

Tom Griffith will be a very good judge. I have worked with him indirectly while he was counsel to the Senate and more directly as a major supporter to the . . . Central and Eastern European Law Institute of the American Bar Association. Tom was an active member of CEELI's advisory board, and he and I participated in many prospects and missions on behalf of CEELI.

I have always found Tom to be diligent, thoughtful and of the greatest integrity. I think that the bar admission problems that have been raised about him do not reflect on his integrity. Rather, they appear to be understandable mistakes and negligence which cannot be raised to the level of ethical behavior. Tom has a good temperament for the bench, is moderate in his views and worthy of confirmation.

I think that Judge Mikva, a leading Democrat got it exactly right. Tom is a man of high integrity and competence. Problems stemming from failure to timely pay bar dues—a problem that besets some 3,000 members of the District of Columbia Bar Association each and every year and was immediately corrected by Mr. Griffith when brought to his attention—should not be artificially magnified. As Judge Mikva has commented on this issue: ". . . this is a whole lot of nothing."

And that assessment—a whole lot of nothing—is from the former chief judge of the DC Circuit, former White House counsel to President Clinton and former Congressman. If during this debate somebody tries to make something out of nothing with respect to the bar membership issue, I just want you to remember what Ab Mikva has concluded because he has a lot of experience in making these type of judgments from his time in Congress, at the White House, and on the bench.

Unfortunately—and with apologies to George Gershwin's Porgy and Bess—sometimes in judicial confirmations, nothing's plenty for some.

Those who have known and worked with Tom Griffith praise him. Another name partner of Mr. Griffith's old firm, Richard Wiley, has this to say about him: "Tom is an outstanding lawyer, with keen judgment, congenial temperament and impeccable personal integrity. He would bring great expertise and fair-minded impartiality to the bench and, in my judgment, would be a considerable credit to the DC Circuit and the Federal Judiciary as a whole."

While Dick Wiley is a leading Republican attorney, not all of the attorneys at the firm he founded are Republicans. Here is what Tom Brunner of Wiley, Rein and Fielding has to say about Tom Griffith.

I offer these views from the perspective of a life-long and politically active Democrat. While Tom and I don't always agree on partisan political issues, I have the highest regard for his integrity and for his open-mindedness. As a judge, he would approach each case without prejudice, with a willingness to be educated and considerations he did not previously understand and a rock-solid commitment to fairness.

Last year I received a letter from 13 leading Democratic attorneys, including former Representative Jim Slatery, Bill Idle, President of the ABA in 1993-1994, and Sandy D'Alemberte, President of the ABA in 1991-1992. Here is what this distinguished group of Democratic lawyers had to say about Tom Griffith:

Each of us has had extensive contact with Tom and believes him to be extremely well qualified for service on the D.C. Circuit. For year Tom has been a leader in the bar and has shown dedication to its principles. The Federal bench needs people like him, one of the best lawyers the bar has to offer. We urge the Senate to confirm his nomination.

I must say that I heartily join them in urging the Senate to confirm Tom Griffith to the DC Circuit.

Over the past several years, we have heard many criticize President Bush for nominating individuals that my friends across the aisle find too divisive. As I have just shown, in nominating Tom Griffith, President Bush has made a conscious attempt to submit the name of an individual that has broad bipartisan support.

I just hope that my colleagues across the aisle will recognize the simple fact that President Bush is offering a nominee that he hopes, and I hope and expect, will gain a broad bipartisan vote of support.

I was pleased that despite some concern expressed by some Democrats on the Judiciary Committee that Tom Griffith received the support of many Committee Democrats, including the support of both Senators DURBIN and SCHUMER, both of whom would acknowledge the fact that they are sometimes among the toughest critics of President Bush's judicial nominees.

The minority leader, Senator REID, has expressed a willingness to bring the Griffith nomination up for a vote and I hope that he supports Mr. Griffith.

Tom Griffith is an extraordinarily qualified nominee. He has the education, experience, judgment, and character to make a fine judge. Those of you who worked with him while he was Senate legal counsel know this to be the case. I ask that those of you who are new to this body or did not work with Mr. Griffith while he was here ask the opinion of those of us who were in the Senate and worked closely with him.

I am old-fashioned enough to believe in the notion of the Senate family. Tom Griffith is part of the Senate family. I, and many of my Senate colleagues, have reputations for helping deserving members of the Senate family because we recognize that some of the most public-spirited individuals in our country choose to work in the Congress, including some of our most energetic, smart and idealistic young people.

I also recognize that given the extraordinary capabilities of staff members, such as Tom Griffith, it is only fitting and natural for Congressional staff to move into positions of great responsibility within the judicial and executive branches of government. So I always try to help along and give the benefit of the doubt to Congressional staffers who are nominated to serve by the President—any President, Republican or Democrat.

I take great pride in lobbying on behalf of a former Democratic Chief Counsel of the Judiciary Committee, Stephen Breyer, to serve on both the 1st Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court.

I would hope that my colleagues will continue to join me in this approach of recognizing those who have done well for the American public in serving the Senate.

I urge my colleagues to act to send Tom Griffith off to the D.C. Circuit with the type of broad bipartisan confirmation vote that reflects the broad bipartisan support that his nomination has engendered.

For me, this is an easy vote. I know Tom and his record. I hope that after all of my colleagues have considered his qualifications, it will be an easy vote for them as well. Tom Griffith is a good man and has what it takes in terms of education, intelligence, judgment and character, to become a great judge.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of Tom Griffith to serve on the D.C. Court Circuit.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there was 4 hours of debate evenly divided.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair. I will take such time as I may need.

Mr. LEAHY, Mr. President, I oppose the nomination of Thomas Griffith to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the DC Circuit. Mr. Griffith's decision to practice law without a license for a good part of his career should be disqualifying. Mr. Griffith has foregone at least 10 opportunities to take the bar in Utah, and has continued to refuse during the pendency of his nomination. In this regard he appears to think he is above the law. That is not the kind of person who should be entrusted with a lifetime appointment to a Federal court and, least of all, to such an important court as the DC Circuit, which is entrusted with protecting the rights of all Americans. This is the wrong nomination for this court and I will vote against it.

The DC Circuit is an especially important court in our Nation's judicial system for its broad caseload covering issues as varied as reviews of Federal regulation on the environment, workplace safety, telecommunications, consumer protection, and other critical Federal statutory and constitutional rights. The White House has rejected all Democratic efforts to work together on consensus nominees for this court and refused to engage in consultation. That is too bad and totally unnecessary. This is another in a series of inappropriate nominations this President has made to this court. Last week, Senate Republicans voted in lockstep to confirm Janice Rogers Brown to this court. The takeover of this court is now complete. Mr. Griffith is the third nominee from President Bush to be considered by the Senate. If confirmed the eleven judges on the court will include a majority of seven judges appointed by Republican Presidents.

At Mr. Griffith's hearing last March, I noted that unlike the many anonymous Republican holds and pocket filibusters that kept more than 60 of President Clinton's moderate and qualified judicial nominees from moving forward, the concerns about Mr. Griffith were no secret. Unlike the Republicans' pocket filibusters of Allen Snyder and Elena Kagan, who were each denied consideration and an up-or-down vote when nominated to the DC Circuit, Mr. Griffith knows full well that I think he has not honored the rule of law by his practicing law in Utah for five years without ever bothering to fulfill his obligation to become a member of the Utah Bar.

He has testified that he has obtained a Utah driver's license and pays Utah State taxes, but he is not a member of the bar despite admitting practicing law there since 2000. According to his answers to my questions, he has taken no steps to fulfill the requirements for practicing law in Utah by taking the Utah bar exam and becoming a member of the Utah Bar. He was also derelict in his duty toward the DC Bar, and less than forthcoming with us on questions related to his repeated failures to maintain his D.C. Bar membership and his failures to pay his annual dues on time not just once, not twice, but in 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001. He was twice suspended for his failures, including one suspension that lasted for three years.

As was reported last summer in The Washington Post, and confirmed through committee investigation, Mr. Griffith has spent the last five years practicing law in Utah as the General Counsel to Brigham Young University. In all that time he has not been licensed to practice law in Utah, nor has he followed through on any serious effort to become licensed. He has hidden behind a curtain of shifting explanations, thrown up smokescreens of letters from various personal friends and political allies, and refused to acknowledge what we all know to be true: Mr. Griffith should have taken the bar.

Mr. Griffith has so far foregone ten opportunities to take the Utah bar exam while applying for and maintaining his position as general counsel at BYU. This conscious and continuous disregard of basic legal obligations is not consistent with the respect for law we should demand of lifetime appointments to the Federal courts. Neither has Mr. Griffith yet satisfactorily explained why he obstinately refuses to take the Utah bar.

This is not Mr. Griffith's first or only bar problem. He was suspended for failing to pay his DC Bar dues and then misled this committee on the facts of that suspension as well as other late payments. Contrary to his misleading testimony at his hearing, it seems that the only year Mr. Griffith actually paid his DC bar dues on time, after coming to the Senate in 1995, was in 1995. Two suspensions from the practice of law in two years, three late or non-existent payments in four years, and an attempt to mischaracterize this embarrassing record are hardly just a single "administrative oversight" unless by that Mr. Griffith means to indicate that his single admitted error is that he does not comply with the law.

What may be more disturbing than Mr. Griffith's failure to pay his DC dues, is his lack of concern about the implications of having practiced law in DC without proper licensure. When I asked him if he had notified his clients or law firm from the period he was suspended, he brushed me off, telling me that his membership in good standing was reinstated once he got around to paying his unpaid dues. Of course, that ignored my question, which was about the ramifications of having been suspended for two separate periods over the course of years while he continued to practice. Clients and partners should have been notified and courts should have been informed.

The Department of Justice apparently agrees that suspension for failure to pay bar dues is a serious matter. Recent newspaper reports disclosed that the Department's Office of Professional Responsibility takes such a matter seriously enough to have opened an investigation into the case of a longtime career attorney there who, like Mr. Griffith, was suspended from the DC bar because he did not pay his dues. Unlike Mr. Griffith's case, the Department is concerned enough about such a suspension that they filed notices with the courts in every case this attorney worked on during the period of his suspension, notifying them that he was not authorized to practice at the time. Practicing law without a license is a serious matter.

The facts surrounding Mr. Griffith's nonexistent membership in the Utah bar are even more troubling. He began his service as assistant to the president of the university and general counsel of BYU in 2000. At that time he was not a member of the Utah bar, he was suspended from membership in the bar of the District of Columbia, and he was an inactive member of the North Carolina bar. Mr. Griffith's own testimony is that for the last five years, as part of his responsibilities as BYU general counsel, he has been practicing law in Utah.

So, what made Mr. Griffith think he could practice law without being a member of the Utah bar? Mr. Griffith testified that he relied on an in-house counsel exception that does not exist in Utah statutes and is not recognized by the Utah Supreme Court, as Mr. Griffith was forced to concede. It was a most convenient and self-serving excuse. There is no such "general counsel" exception in Utah and there never has been. He could not point to any Utah statute or Utah Supreme Court pronouncement allowing this behavior—because it does not exist as a matter of law. Moreover, his predecessor at BYU and the general counsels of the other universities in Utah are all members of the Utah bar.

Mr. Griffith has never been able to identify who at the Utah bar he claims advised him that he did not need to join the bar. This fundamental refusal to abide by the law is all the more troubling by Mr. Griffith's obstinate behavior in refusing to take the bar in order to cure his failure. This is not complicated: Get licensed. Indeed, during the course of committee consideration he admitted that when he asked a second-year law student to research the matter she came back to him and advised that he should take the bar. Yet here we are, with the Senate being urged to confirm someone to a lifetime appointment as a Federal judge on a court with jurisdiction over important cases that can have nationwide impact and that nominee has adamantly refused to follow legal requirements in his own legal practice.

The general counsel of the Utah bar, Katherine Fox, wrote to Mr. Griffith on May 14, 2003, telling him she was "surprised" he thought there was a general counsel exception, and explained that there was no way under his circumstances to waive into the Utah bar without taking the bar exam. This response from a career lawyer in the Utah bar made before political pressure was ratcheted up to defend a Republican nominee seems pretty straightforward to me. In plain, simple to understand words, Ms. Fox instructed Mr. Griffith to take the bar examination at the earliest opportunity. That was more than two years ago. Mr. Griffith refused to comply.

In an interpretation worthy of the Queen of Hearts from Alice in Wonderland, Mr. Griffith and his supporters have defied logic and reason by turning Ms. Fox's letter upside down in an attempt to characterize it as something other than it is and to condone his conduct. If he will make this self-serving interpretation in this case, what makes anyone think that he will not be the same sort of ends-oriented judge that will twist facts and law in cases he rules on from the Federal bench? Ms. Fox's recommendation that he "closely associate" himself with a Utah lawyer until he takes the bar and becomes a member of the bar was not offered as an indefinite safe harbor that permits him to violate Utah law. Ms. Fox's letter is being misused and mischaracterized as an invitation to flout the law. This is the kind of reinterpretation in one's own interest that characterizes judicial activism of the worst sort when employed by a judge.

There are more reasons for serious concern about Mr. Griffith's fitness to be a member of the DC Circuit Court. His judgment is brought into serious question by his views on Title IX of our civil rights laws. This charter of fundamental fairness has been the engine for overcoming discrimination against women in education and the growth of women's athletics. I urge all Senators to think about our daughters and granddaughters, the pride we felt when the U.S. women's soccer team began winning gold medals and World Cups, the joy they see in young women with the opportunity to play basketball and ski and compete and grow.

With the recent reinterpretation of title IX being imposed by this administration in ways that will no doubt be challenged through the courts, we may now understand why the Bush administration sees the appointment of Mr. Griffith to the DC Circuit Court as such a priority. His narrow views on title IX were unveiled during his efforts as a member of the Bush administration Secretary of Education's Commission on Opportunity in Athletics, to constrict the impact of title IX. Does anyone doubt that he would rule that the Bush administration's revision through regulations should be upheld?

The United States Supreme Court recently decided that whistleblowers are protected in the title IX context. That was a close, 5-4 decision, in which Justice O'Connor wrote for the majority. Just the other day the Justices refused to hear a challenge to an appellate court decision that essentially found that title IX could not be blamed for cutbacks in men's athletic programs. These recent legal developments regarding Title IX serve to remind us how important each of these lifetime appointments to the Federal courts is. In light of the record on this nomination, I am not prepared to take a chance on it and will vote against it.

I also note that during the Clinton presidency, Senate Republicans ensured that the 11th and 12th judgeships on the DC Circuit were not filled. They had argued since 1995 that the caseload of the DC Circuit did not justify a full complement on the court. Indeed at a 1995 hearing, they called Judge Lawrence H. Silberman of the circuit to so testify. Republicans have argued for years this circuit's caseload per judge is one of the lightest in the country. In a May 9, 2000, letter to Senator KYL, Judge Silberman argued that the DC Circuit's caseload continued to decline from 1995 to 2000 and to oppose confirmation of additional Clinton nominees.

In fact, the DC Circuit caseload has continued to decline and in 2004 was less than it was in 1999, when Senate Republicans refused to consider two highly qualified and moderate nominations by President Clinton to vacancies on the circuit. With the confirmation of Janice Rogers Brown to that court, there are now ten confirmed, active judges for the DC Circuit, which is what Republicans maintained was appropriate since 1999.

With all the self-righteous talk from the other side of the aisle about their new-found principle that every judicial nominee is entitled to an up or down vote, the facts are that in 1999 and 2000 the nomination of Elena Kagan to the DC Circuit was pocket filibustered by those same Senate Republicans. Ms. Kagan is now dean of the Harvard Law School. Qualified? Yes. Was she given consideration in a Republican run Senate? Not on your life. Likewise the nomination of Allen Snyder to a vacancy on the DC Circuit was never voted upon. Mr. Snyder is a former clerk to Chief Justice Rehnquist and was a highly respected partner in a prominent DC law firm, the same law firm from which President Bush nominated John Roberts to the same court. Senate Republicans pocket filibustered President Clinton's nomination of Mr. Snyder but unanimously supported the confirmation of Mr. Roberts. Senate Republicans played a cruel joke on Mr. Snyder when they allowed him a hearing but would never list him for a vote before the Judiciary Committee or the Senate.

In September 2002, Senator SESSIONS explained that Clinton nominees Elena Kagan and Allen Snyder were blocked: "Because the circuit had a caseload about one-fourth the average caseload per judge. And the chief judge of the circuit said 10 judges is enough, instead of 12. And I actually thought that was too many. I thought ten was too many."

Well, the DC Circuit's caseload per judge is lower now than it was during the Clinton administration. Let us see whether the votes of Republican Senators this time will be based on the same rationale they gave to pocket filibuster Clinton nominees.

Last week we witnessed a Republican Senator, who had voted against the confirmation of a Clinton judicial recess appointment and had explained his vote as opposition to recess appointments, reverse himself to vote for a Bush judicial recess appointment. Last week we witnessed dozens of Republican Senators, who had voted against confirmation of Ronnie White of Missouri in 1999 and explained their vote as compelled by the opposition of his home-state Senators, reverse themselves and vote in favor of Justice Janice Rogers Brown and ignore the strong, consistent and well founded opposition of her two home-state Senators.

Tomorrow we will see whether the many Republican Senators who delayed and opposed the confirmation of Judge Merrick Garland in 1996 and 1997 and who pocket filibustered the nominations of Allen Snyder and Elena Kagan in 1999 and 2000 will vote against a Bush nominee to the DC Circuit because the caseload of the circuit does not justify more judges. Tomorrow we will see if many Republican Senators again retreat from their earlier rationale because today a Republican controls the White House.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for as much time as I may consume.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCENTRATION OF MEDIA BROADCASTING

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, a couple of things have happened in the last several days that I want to visit. First, I wish to talk for a moment about public broadcasting and, secondly, to talk about a Supreme Court decision that was announced this morning here in Washington, DC, and the relationship between the two.

First, I will talk about public broadcasting. I confess I am a big supporter, a big fan of public broadcasting. I think they are an organization that provides an independent view of a range of issues to the American people. The Corporation for Public Broadcasting, public television, and public radio, I think, provide a significant service to this country.

In a time when there is this enormous concentration in the media, more and more television stations are being bought up by fewer and fewer companies—one company owns over 1,200 radio stations in this country—the Federal Communications Commission writes new rules that get overturned by the courts, frankly, that say you can even buy up more of these properties. In fact, the rules the Federal Communications Commission developed some while ago said it is going to be all right in one of America's major cities for one company to own three television stations, eight radio stations, the dominant newspaper, and the cable company. That is unbelievable. Are they dead from the neck up? What possibly could they be thinking?

Fortunately for us, the Federal courts struck down the new rules and, fortunately for us, this morning the Supreme Court decided that the court had justification in striking down these new ownership rules.

Again, I do not think it makes any sense to have a handful of people in this country determining what the American people see, hear, and read, and that is exactly what is happening.

That brings me back to public broadcasting. It is interesting that at a time of this concentration in the media—one company owning a lot of radio stations, 1,200 of them, one company and several companies owning a lot of television stations—at a time when there is not much room for discord and voices, which, incidentally, I think strengthens a democracy.

There is this old saying when everyone is thinking the same thing, nobody is thinking very much. This democracy of ours, this system of self-government, this country that is full of self-expression is strengthened, in my judgment, by an exchange of views of people who have different views. But that, regrettably, is seen somehow as being disloyal these days.

Oh, I know, someone in the Dixie Chicks said something that was unpopular about the President, and then we had tractors driving over the CDs from the Dixie Chicks and big rallies to burn their music. Just before the last election, one television consortium decided they were going to run a clearly partisan film designed to attack only one Presidential candidate and not allow time for the opposing view. This was a television consortium that nearly every single night was doing editorials against one of the Presidential candidates.

In Minot, ND, late one evening, a train ran the tracks and some cars of anhydrous ammonia spilled a plume over that community of nearly 50,000 people, and that deadly cloud of anhydrous ammonia enveloped that community at about 2 o'clock in the morning. There is some disagreement about the events of that night, but reports are that the telephone calls went to the local radio station, and were not answered. All the radio stations in Minot are owned by one company.

What is happening in these broadcast facilities these days is they are running a broadcast out of a board someplace 1,000 miles away, someone who is homogenizing the music to run it through the local station. There is no local broadcasting in many cases. What you have is a company 1,000 miles or 1,500 miles away deciding they are going to run some homogenized music through the sound board. You do not even need people around to do that.

The Minot, ND, story is one that has been well repeated. I know there is some dispute about a number of the details, but the fact is, there should not be any dispute about what is happening with this concentration. We now have people who sit in a basement, perhaps 20, 30 miles from here—one of the examples I heard was over in Baltimore, a guy sitting in a basement studio saying: It is sunny in Salt Lake City. What a beautiful morning to wake up in Salt Lake City. He was not in Salt Lake City. He was in a basement in Baltimore.

He was reading off the Internet, pretending he was broadcasting to the local folks over the local station in Salt Lake City. They have a term for that. They also have a term for the kind of homogenized television news that is put out by people who are not in your region to make it look like it is locally produced news.

We have this massive concentration in the media, which I think is awful, the FCC promoted rules that says we will let them concentrate even further. As I said, in a major city, under the FCC rule, one would be able to own eight radio stations, three television stations, the cable company, and buy the dominant newspaper all at the same time. I think it was one of the single most complete cave-ins to the biggest corporate interests in this country I have ever seen: The public interest be damned.

The FCC had three-quarters of a million people write to it to say: Do not do this. It did not matter to them. They just did it. Now they have been enjoined by a court. The Supreme Court says they cannot continue and so now they have to start over. Perhaps when they start over they will understand they also have a responsibility to work for the public interest, which brings me to public television.

A couple of things are kicking around about public television. Last week, I believe on Thursday or Friday, the appropriations subcommittee in the House decided to cut funding for public broadcasting. The cut in funding probably meets the interests of some who would like to abolish it. I do not know. I know we had one of our colleagues some years ago decide to get in a big fight with Big Bird and, frankly, Big Bird won. Public broadcasting is widely supported in this country.

In recent years, we have heard a drumbeat by people who say public broadcasting, public television, public radio, is biased. It has a liberal bias, they say. No evidence of that, to my knowledge. Still, the mantra seems to try to brand it as something that is anathema to fairness or balance.

The other day I called Mr. Tomlinson, who is the Chairman of the Board of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. He has been in the news a great deal. In fact, as Chairman, he is one who has made the point that he believes that some of the programming is not balanced, is in fact biased towards the liberal view.

I talked to Mr. Tomlinson by telephone the other day. I do not know him. I do not have anything bad to say about him. But I called him because of what I had read in the public domain that he has said as chairman of the board.

I knew he had hired, with public funds, a consultant to come in and take a look at programming, particularly Bill Moyers', called "NOW." I believe it was titled, to see if it was fair. I will not use "fair and balanced" because that belongs to another brand.

So I wrote to Mr. Tomlinson and asked: Why do you not send me the work papers, send me the summary. I would like to see this report that you empaneled with public funding. He did. He sent me what he called the raw data. The raw data is here. This is raw, certainly, and I guess it is data, but there is no summary. So I called to ask: Would you please also send me summary.

If one looks through the raw data, it is unusual and strange. I will not enter this into the record. I will not put all of this information into the record. I am not going to read from all of it. I am still awaiting a summary. But I must say that the Chairman of the Board of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting hired a consultant to do an evaluation of programming. Then we have all of these sheets that describe the guests and it says: anti-Bush, anti-Bush, pro-Bush, anti-Bush. It appears to me to be not so much an evaluation of is this slanted, is it liberal, does it have an agenda; it is the evaluation of is this program critical of the President?

Is that why a consultant was employed, to see whether public broadcasting is critical of our President? God forbid that we would be critical of the President of the United States.

I find it interesting that in this evaluation—this one is incidentally conservative/liberal, C or L. This was not anti-Bush but C or L. My colleague, Senator HAGEL from Nebraska, appeared on one of the programs, and he apparently disagreed with a portion of President Bush's strategy with respect to Iraq. So my colleague, Senator HAGEL, is referred to as liberal. He is a liberal contributor to National Public Radio. My guess is that is going to surprise a lot of Nebraskans.

If he were on the floor he would probably say he is a pretty good conservative Republican, someone for whom I have deep admiration, but he kind of claimed the liberal status according to the consultant.

This is pretty unseemly, frankly, spending public money on a consultant who then sits down and looks at all of these programs to see if something is being said that might be critical about a President or Congress.

Well, I guess that is enough to say about this particular report. I will await the summary, but as someone who supports public broadcasting and thinks it contributes a great deal to this country—and by the way, who do my colleagues think has been willing to do programs about the concentration of media ownership in this country, about the fact that one company has gobbled up over 1,200 radio stations and fewer people are involved in what we hear, what we see and what we read in this country because they are gobbling up all the television stations as well? Who do my colleagues think has the guts to do programs on the question of what does the concentration in the media mean in America?

Is it ABC, or CBS, or NBC? Get real. Do my colleagues think they are going to do that? They are involved in the concentration. Public broadcasting did it. Public broadcasting is willing to take this on.

How about a program that describes waste in the Defense Department? I am on the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. I feel very strongly about our country having a strong defense. I feel passionate about supporting men and women who wear this country's uniform. We need to honor them and support them in every way possible. I also happen to think that the Pentagon is one of the largest bureaucracies in the world, and there is massive waste there. So public television did one program in which they talked about waste over at the Pentagon. Do you know how that is described? Antidefense. God forbid that you should describe waste at the Pentagon because then you will be classified, according to this consultant, as antidefense.

Let me describe something that was going on deep in the bowels of the Pentagon about a year and a half ago. They spent about $8 million, and they were going to create what was called a futures market for terrorism. It was basically supposed to be an online betting parlor.

For example, you would be able to bet on such things as: How many American soldiers would be killed in the next year? Would the King of Jordan be assassinated within the next 12 months?

Yes, that is exactly what the Pentagon was preparing to put up and operate in a real way on the Internet. They were within 3 days of doing it, and they wanted $8 million to continue it for the next fiscal year.

Senator WYDEN and I discovered what they were trying to do. We blew it wide open. We had a press conference, described what they were doing, had on the Internet to show that they were only days away from implementing this crazy strategy, and the next day, the Department of Defense shut it down.

At the press conference, I said this idea of setting up an online betting parlor to take bets on terrorism was unbelievably stupid. Can you imagine, setting up a futures market by which Americans can buy futures contracts and effectively bet on how many soldiers will be killed in the coming year? That is exactly what was going to happen in the bowels of the Pentagon.

Just as an aside, one of my staff people, about 4 months later, used a Google search and typed in the words "unbelievably stupid," and my name came up. That is the danger of Google, I suppose.

But the fact is, what was happening in the bowels of the Pentagon was, in fact, unbelievably stupid and a tragic waste of the taxpayers' money and very unseemly, so we shut it down. Would that be called antidefense? I guess so. I guess, according to this consultant, that is antidefense. It may even be anti-Bush, I don't know.

On top of all this, the attack on public broadcasting by cutting the funding in the U.S. House, by hiring a consultant—unknown to the Board, by the way—with public funding to try to determine what is anti-Bush and pro-Bush or liberal or conservative—on top of all that, last week, the Washington Post reports that the search for the new president of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting has narrowed. I don't know whether it is true. I am just telling you what was in the papers last week. It has narrowed to two candidates, and the leading candidate is a former co-chair of the Republican National Committee. A former co-chair of the Republican National Committee they are going to make head, the president of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting? I don't think so. At least those who worry about bias, those who worry about objectivity, ought not be thinking about presenting to this Congress something as unprecedented as that.

I want public broadcasting in this country to be what it has always been: a proud symbol of independence, willing to search for the truth wherever it exists and willing to take on tough subjects. I mentioned that it falls to the Public Broadcasting System to air the programs about concentration in the media. Do you know why? Because FOX News is not going to do it, CBS is not going to do it, NBC and ABC won't do it. So the American people will be spoon-fed this intellectual pabulum that says: All this is really good. If one company owns all the radio stations in your town, good for you.

It is not good for you. Who is going to broadcast the local baseball games? Who is going to broadcast the local parade? Who is going to report on local issues, when someone in a basement in a city not far from here is broadcasting over a radio station in Salt Lake City and pretending to be living there when, in fact, they have never set foot in the town?

Enough about that—only to say that some of us in this Chamber and some of us in Congress care very deeply about the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, about public television and public radio. I happen to listen to NPR, National Public Radio, on the way in the mornings, in to work in the Capitol. I think it is some of the best news you can find.

Let me say I listen in the evening, when I can, to Jim Lehrer. I challenge you to find a better newscast than that which exists on public television. There are those who believe they want to abolish funding for it. If there are those who believe they want to have a former co-chair of the Republican National Committee now assume the presidency at a time when they themselves have raised all these questions and hired consultants about objectivity, I want them to know they are in for a fight because some of us care deeply about the future of public broadcasting in this country.

I wish to talk just for a moment about an announcement last week. Coming in, listening to the radio this morning, I heard a report that the dollar had strengthened just a bit recently. It has strengthened on the news that last Friday, at 8:30 in the morning, our trade deficit was announced, and our trade deficit last Friday was announced to be only $57 billion. It actually went up to $57 billion, a significant increase from the month before, but a bit less than had been expected. On the strength of that, the dollar improved a little bit because the currency market, which is probably on medication of some type, believes that is marginally good news.

This is the fourth highest monthly trade deficit in the history of this country, the fourth highest trade deficit ever. What it means is we are drowning in a sea of red ink. Going back to 1998, these are our monthly trade deficits on this chart. It means we are buying more from abroad than they are selling, importing much more than we are exporting. So each day, we sell about $2 billion worth of America. Each and every day, 7 days a week, we sell about $2 billion worth of our country.

This is what we expect. If we take a look at the first 4 months of trade deficits this year, it is 22 percent higher than last year. You see, last year was a big record. This year, we are probably headed toward $750 billion in the annual trade deficit.

To a lot of people, the trade deficit doesn't matter; it is just a term. There is nobody in this Chamber wearing a dark-blue suit who is ever going to lose his job because of a trade deficit. It is just folks working on production lines and working for American companies who discover that this trade deficit means we are buying from abroad what we used to buy at home and sending American jobs abroad. We are firing the workers at home and doing it relentlessly, day after day after day.

There are some who say, "I know you are using these statistics and this data, but what really matters is how it relates to the entire economy." You can see how it relates to the economy. It is going up, up as a percent of our GDP.

Finally, while our trade deficit is a serious problem with Japan, with Canada, with Mexico, with Europe, this is the 500 pound gorilla—China. It is a dramatic problem.

I have spoken at length. Some do not want to hear it anymore, but it is worth saying again because, you know, repetition is important, at least for slow learners. For others, it is important just to remember. Let me describe some specific examples.

Incidentally, I notice the Presiding Officer smiled a bit. I am not speaking about anyone in this Chamber being a slow learner. These are all advanced learners who serve in the Senate, I am sure. But let me describe some stories, if I might. I have used them all.

Huffy bicycles. In fact, I got a letter from Huffy bicycles. They didn't like what I said. Huffy bicycles used to be made in Ohio. It was 20 percent of the bicycle market in the United States. You buy them all at Wal-Mart, Kmart, Sears. The people in Ohio who made Huffy bicycles actually put a little decal between the handle bar and the front fender. The decal was the American flag.

The workers in Ohio who made Huffy bicycles were fired because they were making $11 an hour plus benefits, and their jobs went to China for 30 cents an hour by people who work 7 days a week, 12 to 14 hours a day.

The last job performed by those folks in Ohio was to take off the little flag decal on the Huffy bicycle and replace it with a decal of the globe. Huffy bicycles are not American any more. They are Chinese. Why? Because American workers were making $11 an hour plus benefits. They were paid too much money.

Radio Flyer, the little red wagon that all the children in this country played with, was an American company for 110 years. It is gone now. Little red wagons are made elsewhere. Why? Because the American workers cost too much.

Levis? There is not one pair of Levis made in the United States. None. It is an all American company. Levis are gone.

Fig Newton cookies. Want to buy some Mexican food? Fig Newton cookies are made in Monterey, Mexico. They left this country to be made in Mexico.

Fruit of the Loom underwear, shorts, shirts—gone.

I could go on and on at great length. But these are companies who took their jobs elsewhere. Why? Because you can find labor dirt cheap, you can instantly move technology and capital, and then you can produce that product—yes, bicycles, wagons, underwear, shirts, shoes, trousers, trinkets, you name it—you can produce it elsewhere. Then you can ship it to Toledo, Fargo, to Los Angeles, Boston, New York, and sell it to the American consumer.

It is a brilliant strategy, if you are a big corporation that wants to maximize your profits. It is a devastating strategy, if you have worked all your life in a factory, proud of what you produce, and have just been told your job is gone.

Thirty years ago, the largest American corporation was General Motors. People frequently worked for that corporation for a lifetime, generally were paid a pretty good wage, were paid health care and also retirement benefits. Now, the largest corporation is Wal-Mart. I don't have to tell you what the average wage is, what the turnover is. The fact is, it is dramatically different, with less stability, fewer benefits, lower wages.

This country is in a race to the bottom, and what we ought to be doing with the strategy on international trade is lifting others up. Instead, we are pushing American workers down.

The other day, I found out that Lama boots, Tony Lama boots—I talk about Levis being all American, when you spot someone with Tony Lama boots, you think that is all American. Tony Lama boots has now moved to China.

The list goes on and on and on.

So the question is, when will this country stand up for its own economic interests? Not build walls around America, but at least develop a straight strategy that tries to lift others up rather than push us down. There is a feeling among some that workers do not matter very much, workers are like wrenches, like screwdrivers and pliers. Use them, use them up, and you throw them away. And throwing them away is as easy as saying, sayonara, so long, we are off to China, off to Sri Lanka, off to Bangladesh.

The thing is, none of this works. Henry Ford used to believe that he wanted his workers to earn a sufficient income so they could buy the product they produce. He wanted the workers at Ford Motor to have enough in wages to be able to buy Ford cars. Very simple. Simple economics.

This is an unsustainable course. We cannot continue this course of trade deficit after trade deficit, $50, $60 billion a month, month after month after month.

There is a lot of discussion about crisis around here. The President says Social Security is in crisis. It is not. Social Security, if nothing is done, will be wholly solvent until George W. Bush is 106. Clearly, it is not a crisis. Do we have to make some adjustments because people are living longer? Yes, and we will, and we should. But it is not a crisis. The trade deficit is a crisis. In a presidential campaign, some time ago, this issue was described as that giant sucking sound, that giant sucking sound that sucks American jobs out of this country.

People say, well, more people are working. But what is happening in this country? What is happening is good American jobs are leaving. And, no, it is not just the manufacturing jobs. It is now all too often engineering jobs, programming jobs, system design jobs, and others as well. What are the American workers replacing the lost jobs with? Jobs that pay less. Jobs with less security. Jobs without health care. Jobs without retirement capability. That is what is happening in our country.

Again, this town will snore through it. Last Friday, at 8:30 in the morning, we get an announcement that in the previous month we had a $57-billion trade deficit. What was the reaction to this town? Just roll over and continue laying down and taking another long nap because nothing much like this matters. This is not a crisis. This is not urgent, they say.

This country has an identity crisis. It has to decide what it wants for its future, and who will stand up for it. We fought for 100 years on these issues. We had people die on the streets of this country for the right to organize as workers. People literally died in the streets for the right to organize. Now a company can shut down their U.S. operation, ship the jobs to China, and if those workers, at 30 cents an hour, try to organize, they are fired like that. Just that quick.

We had people fighting in the streets over child labor laws, over safe workplaces, the right to work in a safe plant, the right to expect that a plant is not going to dump its chemicals into the air and into the water. Nowadays, corporations can instantly decide to pole-vault over that. We will just fire the American workers and move the jobs to another country.

The other day, I saw a report about the 470 workers laid off at a General Electric plant making refrigerators. They were told on April Fool's Day of this year, April 1, it would be the last day for 470 workers. G.E. was going to discontinue the production of midline, side-by-side refrigerator models that supposedly are not competitive or do not have the right product features, but a very similar new line of refrigerators will be started up in the G.E. Plant in Celaya, Mexico. And that plant will be funded with a loan from the Export Import Bank, which is to say U.S. taxpayers.

This may not matter much to someone around here who wears a white shirt and a blue suit to work and who is never going to lose their job to cheap foreign labor. I don't know of one journalist or one politician in this country that has ever lost their job to cheap foreign labor. It is just the folks on the assembly line, folks that work for a living in the plant, often the folks that have to come back in the evening and at supertime and tell their family, I lost my job today. It wasn't because I did a bad job. I have worked for that company for 15, or 20, or 25 years. I love that job. I love it, but I cannot compete with 30 cents an hour.

This country has to try to figure out what is going on in how it deals with it. This country really needs to understand that this is a crisis and this requires action and an urgent response by this President and by this Congress.

There is so much to say about trade. I am tempted to continue to talk about the 600,000 cars we get from Korea every year. We get the opportunity to send 3,000 cars back into the Korean marketplace. Unbelievable to me. Just unbelievable. There are 600,000 vehicles coming our way from Korea, and we do not get cars into Korea.

I could talk about automobiles in China, talk about beef to Japan, I could talk about potato flakes to Korea. The length of the presentation could be nearly endless.

But for now let me say last Friday's announcement of one more trade deficit sells just a bit more of this country in a way that Warren Buffet, a fellow I greatly admire, says will one day put us in the position of being sharecroppers because we are selling part of America with these dramatic trade deficits. And it is not just selling part of our country when you are buying more than you are selling. Not only are your jobs leaving—and in this case they are leaving for much lower wages—but in addition to that, you end up, unlike the budget deficit, which you can argue as an economist we owe to ourselves, you end up providing, in the hands of foreign governments, currency, stock, or real estate claims against our country. That affects foreign policies, virtually everything else we do.

I will have more to say about this. But I did not want Friday's moment to pass, despite the rather sleepy attitude here in Washington, DC. In the hot, lazy months of summer, I did not want it to pass without some people understanding that some of us think what is happening is nuts. And some of us believe it is time—long past the time—for Congress and the President to have the backbone, the nerve, and the will to stand up for this country's economic interests and say: We represent this country. We represent the United States.

The next time there is a trade agreement negotiated, they ought to wear a jersey that says "USA." And maybe they could just look down briefly to see who they represent and say: I stand for this country and this country's long-term interests. Without that—and we have not had that for a long while—this country, in my judgment, is consigned to a future of lower wages and a lower standard of living.

You will not, in my judgment, long remain a world economic power without addressing this issue directly. My hope is sooner, rather than later, my colleagues will join me.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for 5 minutes as in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. HAGEL are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning business.")

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, thank you. I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TOBACCO SETTLEMENT

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise to speak on an issue that appeared in the newspapers last week. Last week a client was sold out by his lawyer. It happens across America on a regular basis. It is unfortunate. It is unethical, unprofessional, and basically wrong, but it happens.

The reason why this caught my attention, and the attention of many, was that the lawyer in this case was the Attorney General of the United States; the client, the American people. At issue was a lawsuit brought against the tobacco industry by the Department of Justice. It was a lawsuit started under President Clinton and carried on under President Bush. The case was made that the tobacco industry in America over 50 years deceived and deliberately misinformed the people about the dangers of the product they were selling.

Last week our lawyers, the Attorney General of the United States and the Department of Justice, the people who are supposed to be working endlessly every day to protect the best interests of America, basically walked away from their own case. The Department of Justice chose to dismiss credible testimony from its own witnesses, people it had brought into this lawsuit.

A few months ago, Michael Fiore, who spent his entire career in public health and the study of tobacco use and cessation, recommended a comprehensive smoking cessation program across America, funded at $5.2 billion a year for at least 25 years. Mr. Fiore's testimony was that we would take the money and profits the tobacco companies had made by deceiving the American people about the danger of tobacco and cigarettes and use it so that Americans currently smoking, addicted, or who might be tempted to smoke would have a chance to be spared from the disease and death which follows from that addiction.

Last week, the Justice Department's lawyer, a gentleman working for Attorney General Gonzales by the name of Stephen Brody, shocked the court and the American people by announcing that the Justice Department would only seek a fraction of the money which his own witness had said should be recovered by the people. This Assistant Attorney General, Stephen Brody, walked into a courtroom and said that instead of the $130 billion the tobacco companies would owe to the people to help them avoid tobacco addictions, he would only seek $10 billion.

Before I was elected to Congress, I used to be a trial lawyer. I used to go through this routine. But it certainly didn't involve billions or even millions of dollars. They were much smaller cases. If I was being sued and someone had said, Listen, we need $100,000 and that is it, come up with $100,000 or we are going to trial, I would have to make an assessment. Is this case one that I am likely to win or lose, if I am being sued, $110,000, $100,000 on the line? But if a few days before the trial they walked in and said, No, we are wrong. It isn't $100,000, it is only $10,000, I would think to myself, They don't have much of a lawsuit, on one day to ask for $100,000 and the next to ask for $10,000.

In this case, our Attorney General, through Mr. Brody, was asking the court for $130 billion. And then last week, to the surprise of everybody, he walked in and said, No, only $10 billion.

Does this administration really believe the people of the United States won't notice the Government is willing to leave $120 billion on the table and walk away from it?

Well, they did notice. Newspapers across the country have run editorials and articles criticizing the Department of Justice for what appears to be bad representation of the American people, the fact that the American people were cheated by their lawyer, newspapers are from all over the country: Houston, TX; Lowell, MS; Lakeland, OH; Harrisburg, PA; Tacoma, WA; Albuquerque; Denver; Racine, WI; Los Angeles; New York; and the Washington Post. The country has noticed that a lawyer sold out his client because it is a big sell-out.

The Albany Times Union wrote:

So, why the sudden about face? Yes, it's routine for attorneys to suddenly change a client's demand if it appears that the merits of the case are weak, or that a judge or jury appears likely to rule against them. But most legal experts had widely believed the government would win this case because it was based on the same evidence used successfully by state attorneys general to win $246 billion. That evidence . . . showed they knew cigarettes were addictive even as they conducted campaigns to get young people to smoke.

The Denver Post editorial was headlined, "What Are the Feds Smoking?" Good question.

The Lowell Sun says:

The dramatic change [in government strategy] was both shocking and outrageous. Allowing political pressure to interfere in any trial—particularly one of such importance—is beyond unacceptable, it's unconscionable.

Finally, the Houston Chronicle, from the President's own home State of Texas, quotes a civil attorney who says he would be "thrilled" if he were representing a tobacco company in this case. The lawyer said:

I've never seen anything like this happen unless there's political pressure.

It is obvious something happened in this case, and it wasn't about law. It was clearly about politics.

The Chronicle concludes:

If this illustrates the compassion [Attorney General] Alberto Gonzales promised to bring to the job, then he is feeling sorry for the wrong people.

I agree. This administration has never demonstrated much enthusiasm for this tobacco case, which it inherited from the Clinton administration.

To its credit, though, the Department has avoided public discussion of settlement, prosecuted a strong case, brought in the witnesses, until last week. I have joined several of my colleagues in the House and Senate asking the Attorney General to initiate an investigation surrounding this decision last week to basically sell out the American people when it comes to this tobacco lawsuit. I call on the Attorney General, through his inspector general or directly, to answer the question: Why did you walk away from the American people in this tobacco lawsuit?

This Government has signaled to the tobacco industry that the settlement will be cheap. While the American people deserve more, the people's lawyers appear to be winking at the other side. It is hard to imagine a settlement after last week that would be a good deal for the American people. I encourage the Department to hold off any settlement discussions until we replace the DOJ officials who sold us out last week. Those who put pressure on Stephen Brody have to go. If The Department of Justice can walk into that courtroom and sell out the American people, the American people need a new lawyer.

The purpose of this lawsuit was to hold accountable the promoters of tobacco use for what has become the leading cause of preventable death in America. An early settlement in this case will miss that point entirely. The Department of Justice set out a detailed case establishing the tobacco industry's role in misleading America. This is a rare opportunity to hold tobacco companies accountable for the preventable deaths tobacco causes and to reach those who are addicted to tobacco today.

The Department of Justice chose to walk away, leaving $120 billion and 43 million American lives behind.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I rise to speak on behalf of Mr. Thomas B. Griffith for confirmation to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. I could not be here in my capacity as chairman of the Judiciary Committee to open the debate this afternoon because we had a field hearing on juvenile crime in Philadelphia. But I am here now because I want to express my views as to why I believe Mr. Griffith is preeminently well qualified to take on the important job of circuit judge in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Griffith has an extraordinary academic background. He graduated from Brigham Young University with his bachelor's degree in 1978, with a summa cum laude rating and high honors. He also was valedictorian of his college. He earned his law degree from the University of Virginia. During law school, Mr. Griffith was a member of the Editorial and Articles Review Board of the Virginia Law Review, which is a very high position at a prestigious law school.

Following law school, Mr. Griffith worked at the Charlestone, NC, law firm of Robinson, Bradshaw & Hinson. He then continued his very distinguished professional career as a partner at Wiley, Rein & Fielding. In 1995, by unanimous resolution, the Senate, sponsored by the Republican and Democratic leaders, appointed him to the nonpartisan position of Senate legal counsel.

During his tenure as Senate legal counsel, Mr. Griffith tackled a very tough issue relating to the impeachment of President Clinton. He did an outstanding job. He also argued, on behalf of the Senate, two very important matters involving committee investigations and the line item veto litigation, which resulted in two landmark decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States. At the conclusion of his tenure, Mr. Griffith was unanimously endorsed by a bipartisan resolution, co-sponsored by Senator Daschle, Senator LOTT, Senator DODD, and Senator MCCONNELL, expressing the Senate's gratitude for his services as Senate legal counsel.

There were especially complimentary remarks made by Senator DODD, who said, "Mark Twain once suggested, 'Always do right. This will gratify some people and astonish the rest.' During his tenure as legal counsel, Tom exemplified this philosophy, impressing all who knew him with his knowledge of the law and never succumbing to the temptation to bend the law to partisan ends. All of us who serve here in the Senate know the importance of the rule of law; but let us never forget that it is individuals like Mr. Thomas Griffith whose calling it is to put that ideal into practice."

Senator Thurmond also expressed high praise for Mr. Griffith, as did Senator LOTT.

Beyond his work in the profession, Mr. Griffith has found time to give back to the community. He serves as an advisory board member to the ABA Central European and Eurasian Law Initiative. Furthermore, while in private practice, Mr. Griffith took on a significant pro bono representation of a death row inmate, which led to the commutation of the inmate's sentence by the Governor of Virginia.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, statements of support on behalf of Mr. Griffith.

There being no objection, the material was to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPORT

Seth Waxman said of Mr. Griffith's nomination, "I have known Tom since he was Senate Legal Counsel and I was Solicitor General, and I have the highest regard for his integrity. For my own part, I would stake most everything on his word alone. Litigants would be in good hands with a person of Tom Griffith's character as their judge."

Glen Ivey, former counsel to Former Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle, wrote to this Committee, stating, "I believe Mr. Griffith is an exceptional nominee and would make an excellent judge. Although Mr. Griffith and have different party affiliations and do not agree on all political matters, I learned during the Senate's Whitewater and Campaign Finance Reform investigations that Mr. Griffith took seriously his oath of office. Even when we were handling sensitive and politically charged issues, he acted in a non-partisan and objective manner. I believe Mr. Griffith has the intellect and the temperament to make an outstanding jurist."

According to David Kendall, personal counsel to President and Senator Clinton, "For years Tom has been a leader in the bar and has shown dedication to its principles. The federal bench needs judges like Tom, an excellent lawyer who is supported across the political spectrum. . . . [W]e support Tom and believe he has the intellect and judgment to be an excellent judge."

Harvard Law Professor William Stuntz has known Mr. Griffith for over twenty years. He wrote, "Few people I know deserve to be called wise; very few deserve to be called both wise and good. Tom is a wise and good man. I believe he will be one of this nation's finest judges."

Abner Mikva, a former White House Counsel for President Clinton and a former Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, wrote to Senator Leahy, "I write as an enthusiastic supporter. . . . I have known Tom Griffith in the public sector and in the private sector, and I have never heard a whisper against his integrity or responsibility. Tom Griffith will be a very good judge. I have always found Tom to be diligent, thoughtful, and of the greatest integrity. . . . Tom has a good temperament for the bench, is moderate in his views and worthy of confirmation."

Finally, Senator Dodd of Connecticut noted that Mr. Griffith handled his difficult responsibilities as Senate Legal Counsel with great confidence and skill. . . . impressing all who knew him with his knowledge of the law and never succumbing to the temptation to bend the law to partisan ends."

Mr. SPECTER. There has been a challenge against Mr. Griffith, with respect to his Utah bar membership. Because he serves as general counsel to

Brigham Young University, there were some questions raised as to whether he should have been a member of the Utah bar. I think that issue has been clarified, although some are still contesting it. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a full explanation of the Utah bar membership issue.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOM GRIFFITH: UTAH BAR MEMBERSHIP FACTS

As soon as Mr. Griffith accepted the position of Assistant to the President and General Counsel of Brigham Young University ("BYU"), he sought to determine what Utah's requirements were for in-house counsel by consulting with Utah attorneys.

Mr. Griffith always has complied with the advice he received—when his responsibilities require that he provide legal advice to the University, he does so only in close association with active members of the Utah Bar.

Mr. Griffith was told that, as in-house counsel, he need not become a member of the Utah Bar provided that when he gives legal advice, he does so in close association with active members of the Utah Bar.

Mr. Griffith has always provided legal advice in conjunction with one of four attorneys in his office who are licensed with the Utah Bar, or an outside counsel who is licensed with the Utah Bar. As BYU's General Counsel, he has made no court appearances, nor has he signed any pleadings, motions, or briefs.

Mr. Griffith communicated with Utah State Bar officials who were aware that he had not sat for the Utah Bar exam. These officials advised Mr. Griffith to associate himself closely with a Utah Bar member whenever giving legal advice pending his admission to the Utah Bar—which he did. Not once did Utah Bar officials warn Mr. Griffith that his arrangements were contrary to accepted practice—because they weren't. The Utah Bar has affirmed that such arrangements do not constitute practicing law without a license.

Numerous former and current Utah Bar officials have written letters affirming that the precautions taken by Mr. Griffith were appropriate and in accordance with the Utah Bar rules.

Five former Presidents of the Utah Bar: "While there is no formal 'general counsel' exception to the requirement that Utah lawyers must be members of the Utah bar, it has been our experience that a general counsel working in the state of Utah need not be a member of the Utah Bar provided that when giving legal advice to his or her employer that he or she does so in conjunction with an associated attorney who is an active member of the Utah Bar and that said general counsel makes no Utah court appearances and signs no Utah pleadings, motions, or briefs."—John Adams, Charles Brown, Scott Daniels, Randy Dryer, Dennis Haslam, Letter to Chairman Hatch, June 28, 2004.

John Baldwin, Executive Director of the Utah Bar: "To those general counsel who cannot avoid circumstances which approach or may cross that line, we have consistently advised that under such circumstances they should directly associate with lawyers who are licensed in the state and on active status. Our policy has also consistently been that of those who follow that advice are not engaged in the unauthorized practice of law."—Letter to Chairman Hatch, July 2, 2004.

Ethics experts have explained that Mr. Griffith has at all times been in compliance with rules of ethical professional conduct.

"[T]he requirement of membership in a particular bar is not in itself a rule of ethical professional conduct, but a lawyers' 'guild rule' (like minimum fee schedules and restrictions on advertising) designed to restrict competition.—Monroe Freedman, Law Professor at Hofstra University and Thomas Morgan, Law Professor at GW Law School, Letter to the Editor, New York Times, July 4, 2004.

"At best, the requirement of a license is intended to assure that one who holds himself out to the public as a lawyer is indeed competent to serve as a lawyer. In that regard, there is no question about Mr. Griffith's competence, which is the only ethical issue that is material." Id.

The ABA and the American Law Institute Restatement both support a policy of not requiring in-house counsel to be licensed in state, as long as the attorney is licensed in at least one state.

ALI Restatement: "States have permitted practice within the jurisdiction by inside legal counsel for a corporation or similar organization, even if the lawyer is not locally admitted and even if the lawyer's work consists entirely of in-state activities, when all of the lawyer's work is for the employer-client and does not involve appearances in court. Leniency is appropriate because the only concern is with the client-employer, who is presumably in a good position to assess the quality and fitness of the lawyer's work."—ALI Restatement, Section 3, Comment f.

ABA Model Rules: "(d) A lawyer admitted in another United States jurisdiction and not disbarred or suspended from practice in any jurisdiction, may provide legal services in this jurisdiction that (1) are provided to the lawyer's employer or its organizational affiliates and are not services for which the forum requires pro hac vice admission."—Model Rule 5.5(d)(1).

Mr. Griffith's sole employer, BYU, was aware that Mr. Griffith was not a member of the Utah Bar and did not require him to be a member. BYU is the largest private university in the U.S., with campuses and programs throughout the world—much like a multinational corporation.

Former Dean of BYU Law and Chair of BYU General Counsel Search Committee, Professor H. Reese Hansen: "The fact that Mr. Griffith was not a member of the Utah Bar was, of course, well known to all relevant decision makers when he was recommended for and hired as Assistant to the President and General Counsel to BYU."—Letter to Chairman Hatch, June 29, 2004.

Dean Hansen: "A lawyer who is employed as General Counsel to a [multinational corporation] and who provides legal and other services only to his or her employer is obviously not licensed to practice in every jurisdiction where the entity has suppliers, customers, or shareholders or where its advertisements may reach. I view BYU's Assistant to the President and General Counsel in exactly the same situation in regard to his bar membership. . . . I believe that Mr. Griffith has conducted his professional service to his sole client, Brigham Young University, in a completely appropriate manner in all regards and consistent with common practices of general counsel to large U.S. entities who conduct multi-state and international activities." Id.

Mr. SPECTER. Similarly, there had been an issue regarding Mr. Griffith's lapsed membership in the District of Columbia bar, which occurred because of an administrative oversight.

Excuse me; nothing is as troublesome as a pesky summer cold. Without this cold, my speech would be considerably longer, Mr. President, so there are some advantages, at least, for anyone who may be watching on C-SPAN—if anyone watches C-SPAN during these late afternoon proceedings of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that a full explanation of the DC Bar membership issue also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOM GRIFFITH: D.C. BAR MEMBERSHIP FACTS

In 2001, Mr. Griffith discovered that his D.C. Bar membership had been suspended for failing to pay his annual dues. As soon as he became aware of the problem, he paid the dues and was reinstated as a bar member in good standing.

Mr. Griffith accepts full responsibility for the oversight, and he brought the lapse in his membership to the attention of the Senate Judiciary Committee in his questionnaire.

Having worked as an attorney at a large D.C. law firm from 1991–1995, Mr. Griffith became accustomed to the firm's practice of paying its attorney's bar dues.

When Mr. Griffith became Senate Legal Counsel, he was late in paying his 1997 D.C. Bar dues, and as a result, was suspended from the D.C. Bar for approximately five weeks. As soon as Mr. Griffith became aware of the problem in January 1998, he paid the dues and was reinstated as a member in good standing.

In 1998, while still serving as Senate Legal Counsel, Mr. Griffith unintentionally failed to pay his 1998 D.C. Bar dues and was suspended as a result. He was unaware of his suspension at the time.

When Mr. Griffith returned to his former law firm in March 1999, he wrongly assumed, based on his prior experience at the firm, that the firm was paying dues on his behalf. He continued to have no knowledge of suspension.

Mr. Griffith paid his back dues as soon as he discovered the problem in 2001. He was promptly reinstated as a member in good standing of the D.C. Bar. Since then, he has paid his D.C. Bar dues in a timely manner and remains a D.C. Bar member in good standing.

Mr. Griffith's situation is not at all unusual. D.C. Bar counsel quotes that every year over 3,000 D.C. lawyers (and a number of sitting judges) are "administratively suspended" for late payment of dues.

An inadvertent failure to pay bar dues does not reflect poorly on Mr. Griffith's character or ability to serve as a judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Abner Mikva, former Chief Judge, U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit: "I cannot believe the [the Washington Post] or anyone else thinks that the inadvertent failure to pay bar dues because no bill was sent is a mark of a lawyer's character. I have known Tom Griffith in the public sector and in the private sector, and I have never heard a whisper against his integrity or responsibility."—Letter to the Editor, Washington Post, June 8, 2004.

David Kendall, private attorney to former President Clinton, and Lanny Breuer, former Associate Counsel to President Clinton: "Contrary to the Post's implication, Tom is an outstanding attorney who takes his responsibilities as a member of the bar seriously. . . . As soon as he realized that bills were unpaid, he paid them. Tom took the common and proper course of action under the circumstances. This innocent oversight has no bearing on his ability to serve as a judge."—Letter to the Editor, Washington Post, June 11, 2004.

Former ABA Presidents Bill Ide and Sandy D'Alemberte, along with 11 other attorneys: "By immediately paying his dues when he became aware of the oversight, Tom took the proper course of action. According to D.C. Bar counsel, such an oversight is entirely common and of no major concern, particularly where no reminder notice is sent out. In fact, Tom was promptly reinstated after he paid his accrued dues, without any questions raised about possible sanctions."—Letter to Chairman Hatch, June 14, 2004.

Ethics Expert, Professor Monroe H. Freedman, Hofstra University Law School: "In the District of Columbia, Mr. Griffith had in fact been a member of the bar in good standing; the only problem was a temporary lapse in the payment of dues, which he promptly remedied when he became aware of it. He thereby once again became, and remains, a member of the D.C. Bar in good standing. Neither the bar nor anyone else has ever questioned Mr. Griffith's competence to practice law."—Letter to Chairman Hatch, June 29, 2004.

Mr. Griffith was "administratively suspended" from the D.C. Bar for failure to pay his bar dues. No disciplinary action was ever taken against him.

*Former ABA Presidents Bill Ide and Sandy D'Alemberte, along with 11 other attorneys: "The Post improperly equated Tom's situation to 'disciplinary suspension,' a rare sanction imposed only when a lawyer knowingly refuses to pay bar dues. It was nothing of the kind. When advised of the problem, Tom promptly paid his dues in full."—Letter to Chairman Hatch, June 14, 2004.

Mr. SPECTER. We had a second hearing for Mr. Griffith this year, after I became chairman, because his original hearing was not well attended. It was held at the end of the last session. At the hearing this year, I think we explored in considerable detail the issue of his D.C. bar membership.

It is always a difficult matter when a lawyer is a member of one bar and seeks to become a member of another. I know I went through a similar issue when I took the New Jersey bar, 23 years after I attended law school. It is an experience, but I went through it. However, I think this by no means disqualifies Mr. Griffith, and I think the issue has been adequately explained on the record.

Tom Griffith is well known in the Senate, perhaps better known than virtually any other judicial nominee who comes here, because he had been legal counsel to the Senate. I think many people who know Mr. Griffith on a personal, intimate basis know of his high ethical standards, his scholarship, and his legal ability. He is soft spoken. He is mature. He is knowledgeable. I think he will make a fine circuit judge.

Mr. Griffith comes with an especially strong recommendation from the former chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH, who has known Mr. Griffith personally for many years, and speaks very highly of him.

Regrettably, I cannot be here tomorrow to speak again, as is the practice for the chairman to speak immediately before leadership, because I will be traveling in Pennsylvania with President Bush. Tom Griffith is an outstanding candidate, and I urge my colleagues to vote to confirm him.

Mr. President, in the absence of any Senator seeking recognition, in fact, in the absence of any other Senator on the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I understand the debate is on the qualifications of Thomas Griffith.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to make a few comments with respect to Mr. Griffith. I ask all Members of the Senate to think back on what for many of us will be the most dramatic experience we had as Members of this body. It was an unprecedented situation, certainly in this, the last century. You had to go all the way back to Abraham Lincoln's time to find anything similar to it, when we met in this body with the Chief Justice of the United States, William Rehnquist, sitting in the chair, and held an impeachment trial of the President of the United States.

I doubt very much that will ever happen again. It was a very different kind of trial than the one that occurred with Andrew Johnson the first time this happened. That was purely political with Andrew Johnson, and everybody recognized that. I remember a Member of this body saying that we had actually had three impeachment situations in our history: The first, Andrew Johnson; the second that never got to the Senate, which was Richard Nixon; and the third, President Clinton. The Senator said Andrew Johnson, clearly not guilty, clearly a political vendetta; Richard Nixon, clearly guilty, clearly should have been removed—he stopped that by resigning; and then he said the Clinton one was in between. It was a close case that could have gone one way or the other.

Some of my friends on the Democratic side of the aisle said it is not a question of whether he did it. It is not a question of whether it was a high crime and a misdemeanor. The only question was whether it was a serious enough high crime and misdemeanor on the part of the President of the United States to justify removing him from office. I think that was a thoughtful summary of where things were.

Why am I saying all of this with respect to Thomas Griffith? Because during the period that the Senate went through that very difficult and historic debate, the counsel to the Senate of the United States was Thomas Griffith. In that position, he served both sides.

He was not counsel to the majority, he was not counsel to the minority, he was the Senate's counsel.

I remember very well the conversations that took place here, both formally and informally.

I remember the time when we were in a quorum call where the then minority leader, Tom Daschle, and the then majority leader, TRENT LOTT, met in the well of the Senate, other Senators pressed forward, and pretty soon we had about 30 Senators gathered around talking: What can we do, how can we resolve this, where can we go?

The decision was made, as a result of that, the Senate would go into the old Senate Chamber in executive session, where there were no television cameras, there were no reporters, there was no staff, other than the absolutely essential one or two. We talked about how we could get through this difficult time.

One of the speeches given in that chamber made this comment about the impeachment proceedings with respect to President Clinton. He said: This case is toxic. It has sullied the Presidency. It has stained the House of Representatives. It is about to do the same thing to us.

Unfortunately, the Senator made that prediction, with which I agree, but had no solution. He was just short of explaining how difficult that was going to be out of a sense almost of resignation that this particular case was going to end up besmirching the Senate as badly as it had stained the Presidency and the House of Representatives.

When it was all over, some 30 days later, that particular prediction had not come true. The Senate had not been stained. Indeed, it was one of the Senate's finest hours. We had come together in a civil way, with a deliberate understanding of our responsibility. We had acted responsibly. Every Member of the Senate had voted his or her own conscience, and we had disposed of the case in a manner that reflected well upon the Senate.

In that situation, the legal mind that was counselling both Senator Daschle and Senator LOTT was Tom Griffith, the Senate's counsel who would sit down with the Republicans and describe to Senators the precedent, outline what the consequences would be if we did this, that, or the other. He would then sit down with the Democrats and do exactly the same thing from a standpoint of evenhandedness, fairness, great respect for the law, and through documentation and examination, thorough scholarship and research.

The Senate counsel who did all of those things and helped the Senate through, arguably, one of its most difficult times in the last 100 years, is the man now before the Senate to be a circuit judge.

I am very surprised people have such short memories. People who were complaining about Tom Griffith not being qualified for the circuit court bench, where were they when he was qualified and performing magnificently on their behalf as the counsel of this body? Have they no memory of the professionalism, the deep research, the evenhanded fairness that Tom Griffith showed on that occasion? Don't they remember how he served, regardless of party, the law, the precedent, and the institution?

We can talk about opinions. We can talk about papers written. We can talk about positions taken. All of these are important in deciding what we should do with respect to a circuit court judge. But I cannot think of any place where we could duplicate the crucible in which a potential judge's capabilities are tried that would approach the crucible through which Tom Griffith has come.

I intend to support him. I urge my colleagues to support him. He will make an outstanding circuit court judge.

I, ultimately, come to a very personal kind of test. If I were on trial for some very complicated situation, some very Byzantine kind of charge that required a great legal mind to cut through to the real issues, would I want that case to be tried before Tom Griffith sitting on the bench? My answer, as I have thought about it, is clearly, yes. If I were on trial, and I needed a judge who had the capacity to cut through all the extraneous matter and get to the heart and render an accurate decision, I would want Tom Griffith to be the judge in that kind of case.

I hope I am never on trial in a case that goes before the circuit court. But there are those who will be. There are those who will have that challenge and have that experience. The best thing I can do for them is to vote to put Tom Griffith on the court so he will be there to render that kind of service and that kind of expertise on their behalf.

I hope he is confirmed. I will vote for his confirmation. I urge all of my colleagues to do the same.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. VOINOVICH are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for what time is required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A FAILING OF THE SENATE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, in 45 minutes or so, we will be turning to an important issue which people have spoken to over the course of the day, an issue we will be spending the evening on. It is an issue that is one of the worst failings of this institution in our history, a failing surrounding a refusal to act on our part against lynching, against vigilantism, against mob murder. It has been a shame in many ways. We have to be careful when we use that word, but when we look at the reality of missed opportunities to act, we can, with justification, use the word "shame" on the institution and a shame on Senators who didn't just fail to act but deliberately kept the Senate and the whole of the Federal Government from acting and from acting proactively.

Although deep scars will always remain, I am hopeful we will begin to heal and help close the wounds caused by lynching. Four out of five lynch mob victims were African American. The practice followed slavery as an ugly expression of racism and prejudice. In the history of lynching, mobs murdered more than 4,700 people. Nearly 250 of those victims were from my State of Tennessee. Very few had committed any sort of crime whatsoever. Lynching was a way to humiliate, to repress, to dehumanize.

The Senate disgracefully bears some of the responsibility. Between 1890 and 1952, seven Presidents petitioned Congress to ban lynching. In those same 62 years, the House of Representatives passed three antilynching bills. Each bill died in the Senate, and the Senate made a terrible mistake.

The tyranny of lynch mobs created an environment of fear throughout the American South. Lynching took innocent lives. It divided society, and it thwarted the aspirations of African Americans. Lynching was nothing less than a form of racial terrorism.

It took the vision and courage of men and women such as Mary White Ovington, W.E.B. DuBois, George H. White, Jane Adams and, of course, fellow Tennessean Ida Wells-Barnett to pass Federal laws against lynching and put an end to the despicable practice.

Ida Wells-Barnett, indeed, may have done more than any other person to expose the terrible evils of lynching. A school teacher from Memphis who put herself through college, she became one of the Nation's first female newspaper editors. A civil rights crusader from her teens, Ida Wells committed herself to the fight against lynching after a mob murdered her friends—Thomas Moss, Calvin McDowell, and Henry Stewart.

These three men, driven by their entrepreneurial energy, opened a small grocery store that catered primarily to African Americans. They took business away from nearby White business owners. Driven by hatred and jealousy, by rage and prejudice, an angry White mob stormed their store. Acting in self-defense, Wells' three friends fired on the rioters. The police arrested the grocers for defending themselves. The mob kidnapped all three from jail, and all three were murdered in the Memphis streets.

These brutal murders galvanized Wells into action. Her righteous anger, blistering editorials, and strong sense of justice further enraged Memphis bigots. They burned her newspaper presses and threatened to murder her. Wells moved to Chicago and became one of that city's leading social crusaders. Wells' book "Southern Horrors: Lynch Law in All Its Phases" and her dogged investigative reporting exposed millions of Americans to the brutality of lynching. In a nation rife with racism and prejudice, Ida Wells and her colleagues began the civil rights movement. They helped bring us integration. They paved the way for equality. And they taught all of us that racism is a terrible evil.

After many years of struggle, after many setbacks, and after much heartache, they won. From President Truman's Executive order ending segregation in the Armed Forces to the 1964 Civil Rights Act, a series of civil rights laws moved the Nation toward legal equality.

But no civil rights law is as important to our Nation's political process as the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

It enfranchised millions of African-American voters and it brought many black politicians into office.

Section 4 of the Voting Rights Act will be up for reauthorization in 2007. President Reagan signed into law a 25-year reauthorization in 1982.

Section 4 contains a temporary preclearance provision that applies to Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, and parts of Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Idaho, and North Carolina.

These States must submit any voting changes to the U.S. Department of Justice for preclearance. If the Department of Justice concludes that the change weakens the voting strength of minority voters, it can refuse to approve the change.

While I recognize that this can impose a bureaucratic burden on States acting in good faith, we must continue our Nation's work to protect voting rights. That is why we need to extend the Voting Rights Act.

Quite simply, we owe civil rights pioneers such as Ida Wells nothing less.

I hope the day will come when racism and prejudice are relegated completely to our past. This resolution is a positive step in the right direction.

Transforming our Nation requires that we recall our history—all of it. We can become a better people by celebrating the glories of our past—but also our imperfections. That includes continuing to do our utmost to protect voting rights for all Americans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I ask unanimous consent that the debate time on the Griffith nomination be yielded back and the Senate proceed to legislative session in order to consider S. Res. 39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now return to legislative session.

APOLOGIZING TO LYNCHING VICTIMS AND THEIR DESCENDANTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 39) apologizing to the victims of lynching and the descendants of those victims for the failure of the Senate to enact anti-lynching legislation.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk proceed with the reading of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill clerk read as follows:

Whereas the crime of lynching succeeded slavery as the ultimate expression of racism in the United States following Reconstruction;

Whereas lynching was a widely acknowledged practice in the United States until the middle of the 20th century;

Whereas lynching was a crime that occurred throughout the United States, with documented incidents in all but 4 States;

Whereas at least 4,742 people, predominantly African-Americans, were reported lynched in the United States between 1882 and 1968;

Whereas 99 percent of all perpetrators of lynching escaped from punishment by State or local officials;

Whereas lynching prompted African-Americans to form the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and prompted members of B'nai B'rith to found the Anti-Defamation League;

Whereas nearly 200 anti-lynching bills were introduced in Congress during the first half of the 20th century;

Whereas, between 1890 and 1952, 7 Presidents petitioned Congress to end lynching;

Whereas, between 1920 and 1940, the House of Representatives passed 3 strong anti-lynching measures;

Whereas protection against lynching was the minimum and most basic of Federal responsibilities, and the Senate considered but failed to enact anti-lynching legislation despite repeated requests by civil rights groups, Presidents, and the House of Representatives to do so;

Whereas the recent publication of "Without Sanctuary: Lynching Photography in America" helped bring greater awareness and proper recognition of the victims of lynching;

Whereas only by coming to terms with history can the United States effectively champion human rights abroad; and

Whereas an apology offered in the spirit of true repentance moves the United States toward reconciliation and may become central to a new understanding, on which improved racial relations can be forged: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) apologizes to the victims of lynching for the failure of the Senate to enact anti-lynching legislation;

(2) expresses the deepest sympathies and most solemn regrets of the Senate to the descendants of victims of lynching, the ancestors of whom were deprived of life, human dignity, and the constitutional protections accorded all citizens of the United States; and

(3) remembers the history of lynching, to ensure that these tragedies will be neither forgotten nor repeated.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, tonight this body will take an important and extraordinary step. The Senate will, belatedly but most sincerely, issue a formal apology to the victims of lynching and their families, some of whom are with us tonight in this Chamber, for its failure to pass antilynching legislation.

Without question, there have been other grave injustices committed in the noble exercise of establishing this great democracy. Some have already been acknowledged and addressed by this and previous Congresses, and our work continues. However, there may be no other injustice in American history for which the Senate so uniquely bears responsibility. In refusing to take up legislation passed by the House of Representatives on three separate occasions and requested by seven Presidents from William Henry Harrison to Harry Truman, the Senate engaged in a different kind of culpability.

Beginning in 1881, this tragic phenomenon of domestic terrorism was documented in large measure through the groundbreaking and heroic efforts of Ida B. Wells-Barnett and the independent newspapers and publications. From that year until 1964, 4,742 American citizens were lynched. These are the recorded numbers. Historians estimate the true number to be much higher.

An apology alone can never suffice to heal the harm that was done, and for many victims justice is out of reach. Yet I believe, and this resolution lays forth the principle, that a sincere and heartfelt apology is a necessary first step toward real healing.

It is important that the people of our country understand the true nature of this unprecedented rampage of terror. Many Americans have images from popular books and movies, like "To Kill a Mockingbird," that cloud their understanding of lynching. A group of angry White men take an accused and presumed guilty Black man deep into the woods and hang him. Those are the images, although accurate and tragic, but they delude us from the true nature of lynching in this dark period of American history.

The thought of a small, angry mob murdering Black prisoners in the dead of night ignores the reality of lynching in most respects. We are fortunate and grateful that a passionate and resolute independent scholar named James Allen saw something catalytic in the photographic evidence of lynching, and he began to collect these gruesome and horrific photographs. His work, "Without Sanctuary," showed the real faces of lynching, and the images he unveiled began to change the way people viewed these tragic events and called to several of us in the Senate to issue this apology tonight. It is because of his work, this book, that the Committee for a Formal Apology and the families of the lynching victims—and some victims themselves who are here—are here today and that this important historic resolution is before the Senate.

I would like to show some of these photographs now. This is one of the hundreds—thousands of photographs of men, women, and children who were lynched in this Nation, lynching that occurred—a citizen of our Nation, lynched. As your eyes look at this picture, they are immediately drawn to the victim. These hangings were sometimes—in most instances—very brutal events. Sometimes the hanging itself came after hours of torture and just excruciating fear and humiliation.

After this book was published and these pictures came into more full view of the American public, what happens is your eyes leave the figure of the victim and move to the audience. This is part of the story that, in my mind, has not been completely told, and it needs to be told tonight and every day into the future.

As you can see, there are children gathered here. These are children looking up at this man hanging from a tree. History will record that some of these children were let out of Sunday schools to attend the lynchings. History will record that some businesses closed down so that the whole town could attend these lynchings. History will record that these lynchings did not occur mostly at night or in the back woods or across the levees—lynchings were a community event. In many instances, it was a form of public entertainment. It was mass violence, an open act of terrorism directed primarily against African Americans and others who sympathized with their cause.

If we are truly to understand the magnitude of this tragedy, we must study the stories behind this grim parade of death.

In March of 1892, three personal friends of Ida B. Wells opened the "People's Grocery Company," a store located across the street from a White-owned grocery store that had previously been the only grocer in the area. Angered by the loss of business, a mob gathered to run the new grocers out of town. Forewarned about the attack on their store, the three owners armed themselves for protection, and in the riot that ensued, one of the businessmen injured a White man. All three were arrested and jailed. Days later, the mob kidnapped the men from jail and lynched them. This was the case that led Ida B. Wells to begin to speak out against this injustice.

Her great grandson is with us today. He has told this story through the halls of Congress to give testimony to her life and to her courage and to her historic efforts. Without the work of this extraordinarily brave journalist, this story never really could have been told in the way it is being told now, today, and talked about here on the Senate floor. To her, we owe a great deal of gratitude. She knew these men personally. She knew they were businessmen. They were not criminals. She knew they were successful salespeople, not common thugs. And she wrote and she spoke and she tried to gather pictures to tell a story to a nation that simply refused to believe.

Forty-two years and thousands of lynchings later is the case of Claude Neal of Marianna, FL. After 10 hours of torture, Claude Neal "confessed" to the murder of a girl with whom he was allegedly having an affair. For his safety, he was transferred to an Alabama prison. A mob took him from there. They cut off his body parts. They sliced his side and stomach. People would randomly cut off a finger here, a toe there. From time to time, they would tie a noose around him, throw the rope over a tree limb. The mob would keep him there in that position until he almost died then lower him again to begin the torment all over.

After several hours, and I guess the crowd exhausted themselves, they just decided to kill him. His body was then dragged by car back to Marianna, and 7,000 people from 11 States were there to see his body in the courthouse of the town square. Pictures were taken and sold for 50 cents a piece.

One might ask, how do we know all the grizzly details of Claude Neal's death? It is very simple. The newspapers in Florida had given advance notice. They recorded it one horrible moment after another. One of the members of the lynch mob proudly relayed all the details that reporters had missed in person. Yet, even with the public notice, 7,000 people in attendance, and people bragging about the activity, Federal authorities were impotent to stop this murder. State authorities seemed to condone it, and the Senate of the United States refused to act.

Time went on. In 1955, just 9 years before Congress passed the Civil Rights Act, the world witnessed the brutal lynching of Emmett Till. Fourteen years old, Emmett Till was excited about his trip from his home on Chicago's southside to the Mississippi Delta. Like many children during the summer, he was looking forward to visiting his relatives. Prior to his departure, his mother, Maimie Till Bradley, a teacher, had done her very best to advise him about how to behave while in Mississippi. With his mother's warning and wearing the ring that had belonged to his deceased father, on August 20, 1955, Till set off with his cousin, Curtis Jones, on a train to Mississippi.

Once there, he and some friends went to buy some candy at the general store. According to his accusers, this young 14-year-old whistled at a store clerk as he left. She happened to be a white woman.

Armed with pistols, the mob took Emmett from his uncle's home. His uncle is with us tonight. They took him in the middle of the night. Three days later his little body was discovered in the Tallahatchie River, weighed down by a 75-pound cotton gin fan tied around his neck with barbed wire. His face was so mutilated when Wright identified the body he could only do so based on the ring that he had been wearing.

Coincidentally, through no asking of our own, but I guess it is appropriate, the trial of his accused murderer, Edgar Ray Killen, begins today in Mississippi.

While the details that led to the lynching are not always clear from just these few that I have described, there is little doubt what took place at the lynchings themselves. In most instances, prelynching newspaper notices, school closings to allow children to view the spectacle, special order trains to carry people to the event, are all part of a gruesome but true part of America's history.

Jazz legend Billy Holiday provided real texture in her story and song "Strange Fruit." She defied her own record label and produced and published the song on her own, was threatened with her life because she continued to sing it. But like so many things, words can't always describe what is happening, even though speeches were given, words were written, newspapers were published.

The words to the song are as follows:

Southern trees bear a strange fruit
 Blood on the leaves and blood at the root,
 Black body swinging in the Southern breeze,
 Strange fruit hanging from the poplar trees.
 Pastoral scene of the gallant South,
 The bulging eyes and the twisted mouth,
 Scent of magnolias sweet and fresh,
 And the sudden smell of burning flesh.
 Here is a fruit for the crows to pluck,
 For the rain to gather, for the wind to suck,
 For the sun to rot, for a tree to drop,
 Here is a strange and a bitter crop.

Something in the way she sang this song, something in the pictures that described the event, must have touched the heart of Americans because they began to mobilize, and men and women, White and Black, people from different backgrounds, came to stand up and begin to speak. They spoke with loud voices and with moving speeches and with great marches.

But the Senate of the United States, one of the most noble experiments in democracy, continued to pretend, to act like this was not happening in America and continued to fail to act.

It would be a mistake to look at this ugly chapter in our democracy's development with pity and hopelessness, however. The truth is, today's apology should be seen as a tribute to the endurance and the triumph of African-American families.

There is a particular family here, the Crawford family. I think there are over 150 of them. Earlier today I talked with some of the leaders of the family. I said: What doesn't kill you makes you stronger. They nodded because that is exactly what happened to this family. The town tried to kill this family, to run them out, and, in fact, ran them out of the town, but this family just grew stronger, and with their love and lack of bitterness, but with a determination to find justice some way, they are here today. In fact, it was the progress of African Americans that spurred this terrible reaction to them in the first place.

As I stated earlier, the early lynchings were not of criminals. The early lynchings were of successful farmers, of successful businessmen, leaders in their communities because these lynchings were an act of terrorism to make American citizens feel they had no voice and no place.

W.E.B. Dubois summarized the motivation behind these slayings perfectly when he said:

... [The South feared more than Negro dishonesty, ignorance and incompetency, Negro honesty, knowledge, and efficiency.

With slavery abolished by the Civil War, a group of Americans had to mentally justify as inferior and subhuman those who suddenly were equals and competitors. Having lost the war throughout the South, watching the progress of former slaves was simply too much in that region and in other regions throughout the country, as well.

As a senior Senator from the State of Louisiana, I feel compelled to spend just a few moments, before I acknowledge my friend and cosponsor in the Senate, Senator GEORGE ALLEN, who has brought this resolution to the attention of our Senate colleagues.

Louisiana has a distinct history from much of the United States due to its long colonial ties with both France and Spain. One consequence of this history is that Louisiana had more free people of color than any other Southern State. Nearly 20,000 Louisianians who were largely concentrated in New Orleans formed a large and very prosperous African-American community in the 1860s. They enjoyed more rights than most free men of color. A large percentage spoke only French and educated their children in Europe. The community, the records show, owned more than $2 million worth of property, which was quite a large sum in those days, and dominated skilled labor areas such as masonry, carpentry, cigar making, and shoemaking.

That is why Louisiana's prominent role in lynchings is so bitter. It mars a long history of tolerance and integration that to this day distinguishes Louisiana from other places in the South.

Still the difficult fact remains that only three States have had a higher incidence than Louisiana of these occurrences. The NAACP, which was founded over the issue of lynchings, recorded 391 such murders in my State.

I ask unanimous consent that a list of all the Louisiana victims compiled by Professor Michael Pfeifer, author of "Rough Justice, Lynching and American Society," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ms. LANDRIEU. It is also true that members of the Senate delegation from Louisiana participated in the actions that led us to not act.

However, I am very proud to stand here with my colleague from Virginia and to note that the other Senator from Louisiana, a Republican, stands with me. We are united in our support of this resolution to offer the sincere apology to try to bring to light the facts about lynching, to encourage people to seek the truth.

I said earlier today people are entitled to their own opinions. But they are not entitled to their own facts. And the facts about this terrible domestic terrorism and rash of terrorism stand today and will not be pushed aside. It is with humility but with pride that I support and put forth before the Senate today, with the Senator from Virginia, this resolution.

The junior Senator from Louisiana is an original cosponsor of this resolution, as are a number of sons of the South. Furthermore, in Louisiana's legislature in Baton Rouge, a very similar resolution passed today. Thus, the people of Louisiana can truly say we are trying to open a dialogue, and bring closure to a bitter history.

This is a particularly important step for the South. For while lynchings occurred in 46 of the 50 States, and people of all races were affected, it would be a mischaracterization to suggest that this was not a weapon of terror most often employed in the South, and most often against African Americans. That is why I am so glad to be joined in this endeavor by the junior Senator from Virginia, Mr. Allen. He has been instrumental in getting us to this point of consideration, and I truly appreciate his hard work and dedication to our joint effort.

It is also important to acknowledge the bravery of those who took personal risks long before this day in opposition to lynching. First and foremost, we must acknowledge the pioneering journalism of Ida B. Wells. Though personally threatened with death, Ms. Wells continued to document these outrages before justice, so that future generations might know the history of this era. It should be noted that it was her example that led other women, such as Jane Adams, to join in her fight against lynching. In fact, women, generally, are viewed as having played a major role in the antilynching campaign.

There was tremendous political courage shown in Georgia. Georgia was the first State to adopt antilynching legislation in 1893. Yet, the State continued to experience a disproportionate share of lynching attacks. However, starting with Governor Northen in 1890, several of Georgia's Governors fought lynch violence in their State resolutely. In many cases it came at personal cost. Gov. William Atkinson, having left the Governor's mansion, personally challenged a lynch mob of 2,000 people in his home town. It is a record of political leadership upon which Georgia can now proudly reflect.

Another great voice in the antilynching crusade was Congressman George White of Tarboro, NC. He was the last former slave to serve in Congress—ending his congressional career in 1901. He introduced an anti-lynching bill to stem the rising tide of violence, with 107 attacks having occurred in 1899. While his bill was defeated in the House of Representatives, he initiated one of its first political considerations.

Finally, we cannot ignore the Senate's own passionate voices to end the practice of lynching. Senator Champ Clark of Missouri famously posted photos of a recent Mississippi lynching in the Democratic cloakroom with the caption: There have been no arrests, no indictments, and no convictions of any one of the lynchers. This is not a rape case. Regrettably, those photos and his convictions could not bring these terrible events to a close. We also salute the efforts of Senators Robert Wagner of New York and Edward Costigan of Colorado. The Wagner-Costigan bill was yet another noble effort to inject Federal resources into combating lynching. While it was again filibustered, it was another noble effort that demonstrated that people of good will remained the majority.

Because of the courage of these and other individuals, by the 1930s public opinion had turned against lynching. In 1938, a national survey showed that 70 percent of Americans supported the enactment of an antilynching statute. Even in the South, at least 65 percent of these surveyed favored its passage. In short, even if southern Senators had the political latitude to endorse Federal antilynching legislation, most seemed to be too mired in personal prejudice to accept that fact. Where these southern Senators were concerned, justice was mostly deaf, but never color blind.

In closing, I would like to acknowledge several members of my staff: Jason Matthews, Kathleen Strottman, Nash Molphus, Sally Richardson, and many others, who have helped, along with others, put this resolution before the Senate today.

I want to end with one of the most moving comments that I read in the book "Without Sanctuary," as I have read excerpts from publications and magazines and newspapers about this situation, and have been reading them now for months on this issue. It is taken from McClure's Magazine, in 1905, by Ray Stannard Baker, who wrote about one of the lynchings—I think it was of a Mr. Curtis. I will submit that for the RECORD. He says:

So the mob came finally, and cracked the door of the jail with a railroad rail. The jail is said to be the strongest in Ohio, and having seen it, I can well believe the report is true. But steel bars have never yet kept out a mob; it takes something much stronger: human courage backed up by the consciousness of being right.

Mr. President, the Senate was wrong not to act. It was wrong to not stand in the way of the mob. We lacked courage then. We perhaps do not have all the courage we need today to do everything we should do, but I know we can apologize today. We can be sincere in our apology to the families, to their loved ones, and perhaps now we can set some of these victims and their families free and, most of all, set our country free to be better than it is today. However great it is, we can most certainly improve.

I yield the floor for my colleague, Senator ALLEN, from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of the resolution of apology that Senator LANDRIEU of Louisiana and I have submitted. I thank the Senator from Louisiana for her leadership on this matter. It has been a pleasure to work with her on this and other matters, but this is undoubtedly the most historic.

I got involved in this because I received a letter from Dick Gregory. I know Members of the Senate received thousands of letters and e-mails and phone calls. He asked me to join with Senator LANDRIEU last year on this. He was signing this letter on behalf of Dr. E. Faye Williams, Martin Luther King III, Dr. C. DeLores Tucker, and others. But he asked me. He said:

I respectfully ask you to serve as an original cosponsor of the Landrieu resolution. . . . We realize life will go on and your world will not be affected if you choose to do nothing.

That struck me as: Well, I am going to choose to do something. He asked me to sponsor this on the Republican side "because it is the right thing to do."

That says it all, really, when we see an affront to the basic principles that were enunciated in the spirit of this country in the Declaration of Independence. When we seceded from Britain, we talked about freedom, liberty, and justice, trying to constitute that here in this country, fighting for so many years to free ourselves from the monarch to construct a free and just society, with freedom of religion, freedom of expression, due process of law, equal protection, as well as the rule of law.

In so many of those key pillars of a free and just society, when one looks at what happened with the lynchings, the torchings, the whippings to death of people because of their race, because of their religion, because of their ethnicity, the cold-hearted hatred of it, and the countenance of it—and the fact that this wonderful Senate, with these historic desks where you can pull out drawers and see some of the great minds, the great orators of our history who had argued magnificently and inspiringly things on this Senate floor—you see there were times in our history when Senators ended up looking the other way. They did not take a stand. They turned their eyes, they turned their heads when something positive could have been done to disapprove, deplore, and obviously pass a law to make lynching a Federal crime.

This Chamber is part of our representative democracy. We are to represent the "Will of the People." We are also to represent those foundational principles of our country. Unfortunately, that has not always occurred.

Daniel Webster, standing in the Old Senate Chamber, told his colleagues in 1834 that a "representative of the people is a sentinel on the watchtower of liberty." Indeed, the Senate has been a great watchtower of liberty. Many individuals have been outstanding orators, brilliant men and women in the world's greatest deliberative body. Unfortunately, this August body has a stain on its history, and that stain is lynching. Americans died from hangings, from whippings, from a torch, from evil hearts outside of this Chamber.

Three-fourths of the victims of these injustices—and these have been documented and researched by the respected archives of the Tuskegee Institute—were perpetrated against African Americans. Mr. President, 4,749 Americans died by lynching, whipping, torturing, and mutilation, starting in 1882. Many times these lynchings were not lone acts by a few white men. Rather, they were angry gangs, as Senator LANDRIEU talked about. They were occasions, they were events, mobs who were whipped into frenzies by the skewed mentalities of what is right and what is wrong.

These cruel and unjust acts are so contrary to the rule of law, due process, and equal protection that we pride ourselves on in the United States. Again, three-quarters of the victims were African Americans. But this hatred also was perpetrated against those who are Asian, primarily Chinese; against American Indians; against Latinos; against Italians; and against people who are Jewish; and others who found themselves unprotected.

Mr. President, Senator LANDRIEU and I, as well as my colleagues who are joining us right now in the Chamber—Senator KERRY and Senator PRYOR—are rising this evening to make history, to try to right history. We are standing to give our heartfelt and formal apology, not for what anybody here presently in the Senate had done, but what this body, this continuous body, failed to do in the past. And it is an apology to all the victims and descendants of those who were lynched, who were whipped to death, who were torched to death, who were mutilated to death.

Many of the victims' descendants are currently watching in our gallery. This is a somber, not happy time but also one of reflection. It is one of the failures of the Senate to take action when action was most needed. It was a time where we were trying to make sure all Americans had equal opportunity. However, that clearly was not the case.

Senator LANDRIEU showed those photographs. These were vile killings. They captivated front-page headlines. They drew crowds with morbid curiosity and left thousands and thousands, mostly African Americans, hanging from trees or bleeding to death from the lashing of whips. By not acting, this body failed to protect the liberty of which Daniel Webster spoke.

One of those who suffered this awful fate was an African American named Zachariah Walker, from Coatsville, VA. In 1911, Walker was dragged from a hospital bed where he was recovering from a gunshot wound. Accused of killing a white man—which he had claimed was in self-defense—Walker was burned alive at the stake without trial.

Such horrendous acts were not just a regional phenomenon of the South. States such as Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, and even the Washington, DC area experienced this sort of mob violence and injustice. Lynching was not just a regional problem; it was a crime throughout our Nation, which occurred in 46 States of our country. It was because of the national scope of these atrocities that the Senate should act.

The Senate, of course, failed to pass any of the nearly 200 antilynching bills introduced in Congress during the first half of the 20th century. Three bills passed the House of Representatives, but they were filibustered on the Senate floor. In addition, seven Presidents had asked that such laws be passed.

One might ask: What impact would such a Federal law have had? Would that have saved all 4,749 people who were lynched, torched, mutilated, or whipped to death? Probably not in all cases because some had occurred before such bills were passed.

However, it would have sent a message, as it was read in newspapers across the land—whether in small towns, big cities, or in the country—that as a nation, we must stop such horrendous injustices being perpetrated on people, that we stand for the rule of law and equal protection and due process. By the Senate not acting, guess what message was sent. It sent the message that there are some people who may not think this is a good idea, that the Senate apparently condones it because they failed to act, notwithstanding the request of Presidents and the passage of such bills in the House of Representatives.

Why was Federal legislation needed? Because out of these 4,749 injustices of lynching, torching, and whipping, only 1 percent were prosecuted. In many cases, local authorities were complicit and involved in these cruel acts of injustice. Virginia was one of the States that actually passed an antilynching law which means that while there were 100 such lynchings, torchings, and burnings—and 100 is too many—compared to other States in the South, that was less. I have learned a lot since we introduced this bill. North Carolina's Governors, in the early 1900s, protested against such mob violence in their State and, therefore, they had less than in other States.

Another reason I got involved is to carry on the tradition of a man named Champ Clark, a Senator from Missouri whose son was actually one of my mentors when I first became involved in organized politics. He moved to the Charlottesville area when I was Governor, and I appointed him to the University of Virginia Board of Visitors. Sadly, he died a few years ago.

I found that his father, Senator Champ Clark of Missouri, posted photos—similar to those Senator LANDRIEU had—in our cloakrooms, of mutilated bodies. I will read from a document entitled, "The U.S. Senate Filibusters Against Federal Anti-Lynching Legislation: The Case For A Formal Apology." It states:

Unlike in 1935, when senators killed anti-lynching legislation in just six days, the 1937-38 filibuster took six weeks. One reason: in April 1937, a Mississippi mob, in collusion with local law enforcement, removed two African Americans from their jail cells, whipped them with chains, gouged out their eyes with ice picks, and put them to death with acetylene blowtorches. Senator Champ Clark of Missouri posted photos of these victims' mutilated bodies in the Senate cloakroom with a caption, "There have been No arrests, No indictments and No convictions for any one of the lynchers. This is NOT a rape case."

One month later, a mob in Georgia, consisting partly of women and teenage girls, forced its way into a funeral home and seized the body of a lynched twenty-four-year-old African American. After dumping the body into the trunk of a car and carrying it through town in a horn-blowing motorcade, the mob took it to a baseball field and burned it.

Horror-struck by these incidents, Senators sought to invoke cloture. If nothing else, they recognized that not only were African Americans in high lynch states at risk, but their own constituents were unprotected if they were black and traveling through these areas. Sadly, after courageously battling on the Senate floor for six weeks, they abandoned their effort to obtain cloture.

Six weeks with all this and no action. Historians will no doubt disagree as to a single reason why Senators blocked antilynching legislation in the 1920s through the 1940s. My desire is not to get into motivations. Regardless of their reasoning, one reason that I can see from all this is that there is no reason. There is no rationale. They were clearly wrong. They turned their eyes. They turned their heads. That is why it is so important that we set aside these hours to apologize for this lack of action by the Senate—because there was no reason. There was no tolerance. There was an acceptance and a condonation of vile, hate-filled activity.

Thankfully, justice in our Nation has moved forward and left such despicable acts history. In ignoring the protections of our Founding Fathers, that everyone is innocent until proven guilty, the Senate turned its back on our foundational principles of justice and freedom.

I look around the Chamber and note that all of us serve with a great deal of honor and integrity, and many have throughout our history.

As Ephesians teaches us: All things that are reprov'd are made manifest by light. This apology has been a long time in coming.

I thank my colleague, Senator LANDRIEU, for her tireless efforts in getting this resolution agreed to. I thank also leader FRIST for making the legislation a priority and taking time on the Senate schedule to recognize the significance of the moment.

I thank the cosponsors. We have nearly 80 cosponsors and will most likely have more by the end of the day. They recognized the importance of a resolution and knew that the Senate owed an apology to the victims of lynching, their families and descendants. I also thank James Allen, as Senator LANDRIEU has, for his authorship of "Without Sanctuary: Lynching Photography in America," for bringing to us these horrendous, but important, issues and making us react, recognizing how violent and hate-filled they were.

I also thank Janet Langhart Cohen and Mark Planning for their spirited leadership and teamwork in getting support for this resolution. I want to share with my colleagues some excerpts from Ms. Cohen's comments.

While some members of the Senate question why so many of us have been seeking the passage of this official expression of apology at this time, the real question is why the Senate action was not forthcoming decades ago.

This is important for us to understand the meaning for those who are descendants of victims of lynching and torture and whipping.

She continues:

Consider the scope and depth of the crimes committed against humanity: more than four thousand men and women were hung from trees, many of them disembowled, their limbs and organs amputated, and then set on fire. These heinous acts . . . were designed to terrify African American citizens, remind them that they have fewer rights and protections than animals, and drive them from their land—all while serving as entertainment for white society.

The point is, this was to intimidate people.

Ms. Cohen says that she comes to the Senate today—she is in the gallery with many other descendants—for many reasons. She writes:

As a Black woman, as the spouse of a former Senator, and as one who had a family member lynched, I need to bear witness to an act of decency that has been deferred, indeed filibustered, for far too long.

We know she is here with many others and recognize that it has been filibustered far too long.

She also states that:

It's important to remind the American people about the evil chapters in our history. It is the reason we construct museums in Washington and beyond, to hold up for all to see how capable we are of descending into the heart of darkness. It's important for us to look back into the past so that we can pledge never again to allow racial hatred to consume our ideals or humanity.

President Bush, in his second inaugural address, stated:

Our country must abandon all habits of racism because we cannot carry the message of freedom and the baggage of bigotry at the same time.

She concludes with these statements:

An apology, I concede, will do nothing for the thousands of people who perished during what has been called "the Black Holocaust." It cannot repair the battered souls of their survivors. It is, after all, only a symbolic act. Our symbols, however, the Eagle, Old Glory, Lady Liberty, to mention but a few, are but short hand narratives of who we are as Americans.

It is through an acknowledgment of the Senate's abdication of its duty to protect and defend the rights of all American citizens that, perhaps, we can begin to understand the pain and anger that still lingers in the hearts and minds of so many who have been deprived of the equality promised in our Constitution.

My friend and mentor, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., once said that "the arc of history bends toward justice."

Today, as the Senate Members cast their historic votes, that arc dips closer to its destination.

Signed, Janet Langhart Cohen.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 13, 2005.

First, I want to commend Senators George Allen and Mary Landrieu for their leadership in introducing Senate Resolution 39 and for their persistence in bringing it to a vote today. I also wish to express my profound gratitude to Mark Planning who has been indefatigable in his quest for the passage of this measure.

While some members of the Senate question why so many of us have been seeking the passage of this official expression of apology at this time, the real question is why Senate action was not forthcoming decades ago.

Consider the scope and depth of the crimes committed against humanity: more than four thousand men and women were hung from trees, many of them disemboweled, their limbs and organs amputated, and then set on fire. These heinous acts, carried out and protected under the claim of "states rights" were designed to terrify African-American citizens, remind them that they had fewer rights and protections than animals, and drive them from their land—all while serving as entertainment for white society.

Picnics were even held by white communities so that those who claimed to be decent, law abiding citizens could witness and rejoice in the mutilation of those whose ancestors had been ripped from their homeland, separated from their families, sheared of their identities, brought in chains to America, and sold on the auction block as sub-human chattels.

It is inconceivable that any person of reason or conscience, of any faith, Christian or non-Christian, could possibly tolerate such barbarism, such a display of pure evil. But people did, of course. They tolerated it and sanctioned it, not during the Dark Ages, but during my lifetime. And those who sanctioned it were not uneducated barbarians; they included men who held positions of office and honor at all levels of government, including the United States Senate. The parliamentary delaying tactics that currently are the subject of so much debate took place in the nation's Capital, on the floor of this hallowed institution.

I have come to the United States Senate today for many reasons. As a Black woman, as the spouse of a former Senator, and as one who had a family member lynched, I need to bear witness to an act of decency that has been deferred, indeed filibustered, for far too long.

I am told that some members of the Senate are not prepared to support this measure because they think that an official apology is too trivial, meaningless and irrelevant to the times in which we live.

The passage of time can never remove the stain of institutionalized terrorism from our history or permit any public official to dismiss the pain of those who have lost family members to the savagery of lynch mobs as something unworthy of the Senate's agenda and deliberations.

It's important to remind the American people about the evil chapters in our history. It is the reason we construct museums in Washington and beyond, to hold up for all to see how capable we are of descending into the heart of darkness. It's important for us to look back into the past so that we can pledge to never again allow racial hatred to consume our ideals or humanity.

In his Second Inaugural Address, President Bush stated that, "Our country must abandon all habits of racism because we cannot carry the message of freedom and the baggage of bigotry at the same time." These are noble words and they deserve to be acted upon as well as invoked.

Finally, let me say that this Resolution is but a first step in the process of educating the American people about our history; of not allowing this part of our past to be reduced to a footnote, or glossed over and air brushed into oblivion.

An apology will not erase the criminality that was once considered a cultural or regional privilege. An apology does not purport to serve as an absolution for the sins of the past.

An apology, I concede, will do nothing for the thousands of people who perished during what has been called, "the Black Holocaust." It cannot repair the battered souls of their survivors. It is, after all, only a symbolic act. Our symbols, however, the Eagle, Old Glory, Lady Liberty, to mention but a few, are but short hand narratives of who we are as Americans.

It is through an acknowledgement of the Senate's abdication of its duty to protect and defend the rights of all of America's citizens, that, perhaps, we can begin to understand the pain and anger that still lingers in the hearts and minds of so many who have been deprived of the equality promised in our Constitution.

My friend and mentor, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. once said that, "The arc of history bends towards justice."

Today, as the Senate members cast their historic votes, that arc dips closer to its destination.

JANET LANGHART COHEN.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am proud that this resolution will pass tonight. The Senate is going to be on record condemning the brutal atrocities that plagued our great Nation for over a century.

I will close with the words of our resolution:

Whereas, an apology offered in the spirit of true repentance moves the United States toward reconciliation and may become central to a new understanding, on which improved racial relations can be forged. Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) apologizes to the victims of lynching for the failure of the Senate to enact anti-lynching legislation;

(2) expresses the deepest sympathies and most solemn regrets of the Senate to the descendants of victims of lynching, the ancestors of whom were deprived of life, human dignity, and the constitutional protections accorded all citizens of the United States; and

(3) remembers the history of lynching, to ensure that these tragedies will be neither forgotten nor repeated.

My colleagues, I ask you to join all of us in examining our history, learn from history, never again sit quietly, and never again turn one's head away when the ugly specter of racism, anti-semitism, hate, and intolerance rises again. It is our responsibility to stand strong for freedom and justice.

In the future, I am confident that this Senate will perform better than it has in the past. We will protect the God-given blessings of all people to life and liberty, regardless of their race, their ethnicity, or their religious beliefs. The Senate can do better; we have done better tonight. But the real measure of what we have learned when such acts occur in the future is, will this Senate rise and condemn it to protect those God-given liberties? I know that Senator LANDRIEU and I believe the Senate will rise appropriately.

Mr. President, with that, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the previous agreement, the Senate now proceed to the vote on the pending resolution; I further ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding adoption of the resolution, the remaining time under the previous agreement remain available for Senators who wish to make statements, provided that any statements relating to the resolution appear prior to its adoption in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 39) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. What is the status of the time? Is it under control, or is it just open?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Louisiana control the time.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts in just a moment. He has been very patient. As a cosponsor of the resolution that just passed, it is a privilege and it is appropriate for Senator KERRY to be one of the first Senators to speak upon its passage.

I wish to just mention very briefly, because I am not sure he is going to be able to stay with us much longer, Mr. James Cameron has been with us all day. Mr. Cameron is 91 years old. He lives in Marion, IN. In 1930, when he was 16 years old, a mob dragged him from a cell at Grant County Jail and put a rope around his neck. He was accused of a murder and a rape. He was nowhere around when it occurred. His associates, Abe Smith and Thomas Schipp, were both lynched that night. A man in the crowd spared him by proclaiming that he, in fact, was innocent and should be let go. He then went on to live an extraordinary life without bitterness, with a lot of love. He has been married for 67 years, has 4 children and multiple grandchildren. Senator Evan Bayh, who serves in this body—when he was Governor of Indiana, he pardoned Mr. Cameron. But he is really the one who has forgiven us for what was done against him.

I yield the floor to Senator KERRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I start by thanking Senator LANDRIEU and Senator ALLEN for their leadership on this effort and for all those descendants of families who have been absolutely extraordinary in the way in which they relived their pain, brought it to the public view, kind of laid their hearts out on the table in a very real and emotional way—that has been a wonderful part of this process—and the way in which the book Jimmy Allen put together has helped to unleash a pain that was never lost, never forgotten by anybody, but never quite had a place to play itself out—until this public effort that is being made by the Senate.

There is no small irony, I suspect, in the fact that the Senate is here sort of making good on what the Senate failed to do. I personally am struck by even, at this significant moment, the undeniable and inescapable reality that there are not 100 Senators as cosponsors. Maybe by the end of the evening there will be, but as we stand here with this resolution passed by voice vote, there are not.

Moreover, all the people in the Senate and the press understand how we work here. It is critical that we take the step we are taking and have taken, but at the same time wouldn't it have been just that much more extraordinary and significant if we were having a recorded vote with all 100 Senators recording their votes? We are not.

So even today, as we take this gigantic step, we are also saying to America that there is a journey still to travel. I don't want to diminish one iota—and I don't mean to because I believe what is happening here today is so significant, but at the same time, it has to give all of us a kind of kick in the rear end to get us out there to do that which is necessary, which gives fuller meaning to the words that are going to be expressed here and have been expressed here—most important, to give fuller meaning to the emotions that have been laid bare for all of America to understand better by the families who have come here to share this with us.

I also join not just in thanking Mr. Cameron and Ms. Johnson, and others, but Janet Langhart, who is here with our former colleague and the former Secretary of Defense, Bill Cohen. We certainly appreciate her commitment to this effort and the meaning of this to her and to all of the families who have come here together.

It is pretty incredible to think about it. Lynchings really replaced slavery. They came in the aftermath of slavery, around the 1880s. Between the 1880s and 1968—I have to pause when I think about that because I was already a young officer in the military. I had left college. I remember the early part of the 1960s devoted to the civil rights movement, the Mississippi voter registration drive. We were still recording lynchings during that period of time, but I did not know it, not in the sense that we know it today.

I thought I knew history pretty well, but I will tell you, until I saw this array of photographs which then sparked my curiosity to read more about it, I had always thought, like most Americans, that a lynching was just slinging a rope over a branch of a tree and that was it. The story is so much more gruesome than that, so much more dark and horrendous as a moment in American history that it is really hard to believe it happened at all in our country, which is another reason it is so important that we are taking this step to remember.

We have seen revisionism in almost every part of history, including the Holocaust. So it is good we are taking this step today, and it is good we have these photographs now brought together as a compilation of history, and it is good that the Senate is taking this effort tonight.

It is extraordinary to think that 99 percent of the perpetrators of lynchings escaped any reach of the law whatsoever. It is incredible to think that almost 5,000 people are recorded as incidents, and how many are not recorded? How many went without the local authorities in each of those communities—who were already complicitous in what happened, standing by, permissive, turning away from basic human rights—how many of those incidents were not recorded?

A lot of us have read a lot about World War II and the Holocaust and other moments of history where there is a knock on the door and life changes. But you have to stop and really think what it was like in all but four States in our country, not just for African Americans but for new people, for folks who had come here from other places to live the American dream. In some cases, they were not knocked, they were just angry mobs screaming and yelling with torches and running rampant through a household, dragging out people screaming. In other cases, there was a pretext, more polite, but it was never polite in what it ended up as.

Lynchings were not just lynchings; they were organized torture. They were incidents of kinds of torture that defied imagination, about which you do not even want to talk, the kinds of things that any decent society ought to stand up against. People were literally tortured for sport in front of people, and crowds would cheer—bedlam. Children were brought to be spectators. Some of these photographs show kids standing there with their eyes wide open and adults standing beside them, who were supposed to be more responsible, glued to the horror they were witnessing.

In the first half of the last century alone, in the 20th century, over 200 antilynching bills were introduced in the Congress—200. Three times, the House of Representatives passed antilynching legislation. Seven Presidents asked for this legislation to be passed. The Senate said no.

So it is important that we are here today to apologize. Some people wonder what the effect of an apology is. We can understand that question being asked. This is sort of a day of reckoning for us as a country, it is a moment for the conscience of our country to be listened to by everybody. It is an embarrassingly and unforgivably late moment in coming, but we are addressing a stain on our history, and we are working to heal wounds across generations. I believe that is important. Some people might try to diminish that, but the very lack of unity I mentioned earlier, in fact, goes to show why this apology is so important and why we all have to keep moving in this direction.

No words, obviously, are going to undo the horror of those 5,000 Americans losing their lives. No apology is going to just wipe away the memories of Mr. Cameron and others, though they have shown a greater graciousness of understanding than others even at this moment.

The fact is that this resolution can be one more step in the effort for all of us to try to get over the divide that still exists between races and as a result of Jim Crow in this country, but only if we face the truth. It is the Bible that reminds us that it is the truth that sets us free. And so it is that we have to embrace it, commit ourselves to putting our hearts and our actions where our words have now preceded us. This should be an important step forward, but, frankly, it will only do that if we do not stop here.

The truth is that it is not enough to face the horror of lynchings if we then just walk out of here and consciously turn away from legally separate and unequal schools in America. It is not enough to decry decades of refusing to use the force of law against lynchings if today we refuse to use the force of law to tear down the barriers that prevent people from voting, barriers in the economy, divisions in the health care system that works for too few of those who are in the minority in America.

It is only by reconciling the past that we have to understand where we have to go in the future and get there. I remind my colleagues to remember the words of Julian Bond when he dedicated that beautiful, simple memorial in Montgomery, AL, to those who gave their lives for civil rights. He said it was erected as much to remember the dead as it was for those young people who cannot remember the period when the sacrifices began, with its small cruelties and monstrous injustices, its petty indignities and its death dealing in inequities. There are many too young to remember that from that seeming hopelessness, there arose a mighty movement, simple in its tactics, overwhelming in its impact. That is why we have to remember the period of the lynchings. That is why this resolution is important—for the young people who do not know what it means to wake up in the middle of the night to hear that knock, for young people to need to commit to help our country complete the journey in order to guarantee we make it all that it promises to be and can be.

We will never erase what Mr. Cameron or Mr. Wright and too many others went through, but we certainly can honor the legacy of these civil rights heroes and the martyrs who came before us by doing right by them and by the country. I hope this resolution will help us do that.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I yield such time to the Senator from Illinois as he should use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. OBAMA. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this resolution. Before I make any further remarks, I would like to recognize Doria D. Johnson, and thank her for coming. She is from Evanston, IL. Ms. JOHNSON is the great, great-granddaughter of Anthony Crawford, a South Carolina farmer who was lynched nearly 100 years ago for the crime of being a successful Black farmer. I am sure that this day has special meaning for her, and for the other family members of those who were impacted by these great tragedies of the past. I thank her and others for being here today.

Since America's darkest days of Jim Crow, separate but equal, fire hoses, church bombings, cross burnings and lynchings, the people of this great Nation have found the courage, on occasion, to speak up and speak out so that we can right this country's wrongs, and walk together down that long road of transformation that continues to perfect our Union. It is a transformation that brought us the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act; a transformation that led to the first Black Member of Congress, and the first Black and White children holding hands in the same playground and the same school; a transformation without which I would not be standing here speaking today. But I am. And I am proud because, thanks to this resolution, we are taking another step in acknowledging a dark corner of our history. We are taking a step that allows us—after looking at the 4,700 deaths from lynchings, the hate that was behind those deaths, and this Chamber's refusal to try and stop them—to finally say that we were wrong.

There is a power in acknowledging error and mistake. It is a power that potentially transforms not only those who were impacted directly by the lynchings, but also those who are the progeny of the perpetrators of these crimes. There is a piercing photographic exhibit in Chicago right now that displays some of the lynchings that occurred across the country over the past two centuries. These photographs show that what is often most powerful is not the gruesome aspects of the lynching itself, nor the terrible rending of the body that took place. No, what is most horrific, what is most disturbing to the soul is the photographs in which you see young little White girls or young little White boys with their parents on an outing, looking at the degradation of another human being. One wonders not only what the lynching did to the family member of those who were lynched, but also what the effect was on the sensibilities of those young people who stood there, watching.

Now that we are finally acknowledging this injustice, we have an opportunity to reflect on the cruelties that inhabit all of us. We can now take the time to teach our children to treat people who look different than us with the same respect that we would expect for ourselves. So it is fitting, it is proper, and it is right that we are doing what we are doing today.

However, I do hope, as we commemorate this past injustice, that this Chamber also spends some time doing something concrete and tangible to heal the long shadow of slavery and the legacy of racial discrimination, so that 100 years from now we can look back and be proud, and not have to apologize once again. That means completing the unfinished work of the civil rights movement, and closing the gap that still exists in health care, education, and income. There are more ways to perpetrate violence than simply a lynching. There is the violence that we subject young children to when they do not have any opportunity or hope, when they stand on street corners not thinking much of themselves, not thinking that their lives are worth living. That is a form of violence that this Chamber could do something about.

As we are spending time apologizing today for these past failures of the Senate to act, we should also spend some time debating the extension of the Voting Rights Act and the best way to extend health care coverage to over 45 million uninsured Americans. We should be considering how we can make certain that college is affordable for young African-American children, the great, great-grandchildren or the great, great, great-grandchildren of those who have been wronged. These are the ways we can finally ensure that the blessings of opportunity reach every single American, and finally claim a victory in the long struggle for civil rights.

Today is a step in the right direction. Today's actions give us an opportunity to heal and to move forward. But for those who still harbor anger in their hearts, who still wonder how to move on from such terrible violence, it is worth reflecting for a moment on one remarkable individual: Mamie Till Mobley.

Mamie Till Mobley's child Emmett was only 14 years old when they found him in the Mississippi River, beaten and bloodied beyond recognition. After Ms. Mobley saw her child, her baby, unrecognizable, his face so badly beaten it barely looked human, someone suggested that she should have a closed casket at his funeral. She said: No, we are going to have an open casket, and everybody is going to witness what they did to my child.

The courage displayed by this mother galvanized the civil rights movement in the North and in the South. And, despite the immensity of the pain she felt, Mamie Till Mobley has repeatedly said: I never wasted a day hating. Imagine that. She never wasted a day hating, not one day.

I rise today, thanking God that the United States Congress—the representatives of the American people and our highest ideals—will not waste one more day without issuing the apology that will continue to help us march down the path of transformation that Mamie Till Mobley has been on her whole life, and that the people in attendance in the gallery have been on for generations.

I am grateful for this tribute, and I am looking forward to joining hands with my colleagues and the American people to make sure that when our children and grandchildren look back at our actions in this Chamber, we do not have something to apologize for.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I join my colleagues today to talk about one of our Nation's darkest periods, a stain in history we would rather forget but that we cannot ignore. While White mobs committed 4,742 hangings, floggings and burnings of African Americans, the Senate watched indifferently, failing to pass any of the 200 separate bills before it to make lynching a Federal crime. S. Res. 39, expressing the Senate's apology for failing to adopt antilynching legislation, is long overdue. I express my sincere apologies and regret to the families in Arkansas and the Nation, especially to the victims and their descendants, that this body failed to help at a time when they needed it most.

I hope that acknowledging these grave injustices of the past will help begin to heal the wounds that exist today. Even more so, this acknowledgement should serve as a lesson that government must step in to help foster racial reconciliation, ensure the mob mentality never returns, and protect those who are most vulnerable.

The Senate can start by continuing to advance civil rights and equality, and work to close the divide that continues in our neighborhoods, schools and workplaces. I am afraid that if we don't start truly addressing inequities we will look back once again at the Senate's inaction with disdain and remorse.

Most of the worst offenses of lynching occurred in the south and Arkansas was no different. Between the years 1860–1936, 318 lynchings occurred in Arkansas. Of this number, 230 were black, including 6 females. Three-quarters of the lynchings in our State that are recorded were against African Americans.

Of course, statistics don't have a face, they don't feel pain, nor do they hold memories. But people and families all over Arkansas do, and they remember these crimes and the Senate's inaction to protect them.

In March 1892, a reporter from the Christian Recorder reported the chaos and hopelessness occurring throughout the state:

There is much uneasiness and unrest all over this State among our people, owing to the fact that the people all over the State are being lynched upon the slightest provocation; some being strung up to telegraph poles, others burnt at the stake and still others being shot like dogs.

In the last 30 days there have been not less than eight colored persons lynched in this State. At Texarkana a few days ago, a man was burnt at the stake.

In Pine Bluff a few days later two men were strung up and shot, and this too by the brilliant glare of the electric lights. At Varner, George Harris was taken from jail and shot for killing a white man, for poisoning his domestic happiness.

At Wilmar, a boy was induced to confess to the commission of an outrage, upon promise of his liberty, and when he had confessed, he was strung up and shot. Over in Lonoke County, a whole family consisting of husband, wife and child were shot down like dogs. Verily the situation is alarming in the extreme.

There were few honest press accounts of such lynchings, a problem that continues to trouble historians today as they put together the pieces of this period. Most Arkansas press accounts were no different. Lynchers were considered heroes, officers conniving, and the accused guilty.

A case in point:

In 1919, Arkansas would be home to a terrible racial injustice—the so-called Elaine Race Riot.

According to sketchy accounts that have been pieced together by historians, in September 1919, black sharecroppers met to protest unfair settlements for their cotton crops from white plantation owners. Local law enforcement broke up the union's meeting, and the next day a thousand white men, and troops of the U.S. Army, converged on Phillips County to put an end to the black sharecroppers' so-called "insurrection".

The number of African-American deaths from this lynching is disputed, ranging from 20 at the low end to 856 men and women on the high end.

The details of the Elaine Race Riot of 1919 have never been formally written down, but Mayor Robert Miller of Helena, AR remembers them vividly.

At the time, Mayor Miller's four uncles were preparing for a hunting trip. Three of them had traveled to a town near Elaine, Helena, AR, for this special occasion, which turned tragic when a mob saw the brothers with guns in hand, and assuming they were part of the "insurrection," all four were immediately killed.

Of the anti-lynching legislation we are considering today, Mayor Miller says, "It won't change what happened, but at least it's a good thing, a movement in the right direction."

A 2000 article from the Arkansas Times reports on Arkansas' most high-profile lynching and the lasting impact it has had on families in Arkansas today.

In May 1927, a mentally retarded black man named John Carter was accused of attacking a white mother and daughter. Upon his capture near Little Rock a mob of 100 quickly gathered and prevented police from taking him to Little Rock, where police would protect him from being lynched.

After hanging him from a utility pole, the mob dragged John Carter's body through the city, and burned it in downtown Little Rock at 9th and Broadway.

The Arkansas Times article recounts a conversation that occurred 30 years later, in September 1957 of a mother talking to civil rights pioneer Daisy Bates about the John Carter lynching. The mother had this to say:

I am frightened Mrs. Bates. Not for myself, but for my children. When I was a little girl, my mother and I saw a lynch mob dragging the body of a Negro man through the streets of Little Rock. We were told to get off the streets. We ran. And by cutting through side streets and alleys, we managed to make it to the home of a friend.

But we were close enough to hear the screams of the mob, close enough to smell the sickening odor of burning flesh. And, Mrs. Bates, they took the pews from Bethel Church to make the fire. They burned the body of this Negro man right at the edge of the Negro business section.

The woman speaking to Daisy Bates was named Birdie Eckford. Her daughter Elizabeth, one of the Little Rock Nine, would walk through an angry, threatening crowd the following day to claim her right to an equal education at Little Rock Central High School.

Little Rock Central High School today reminds us of some of the darkest days during the civil rights movement. As a former student, however, I can tell you that it also represents hope and achievement.

The year 2007 will mark the 50th anniversary of the desegregation process at Little Rock Central High School. Last Friday, I spoke with seven members of the Little Rock Nine to tell them that we are closer to funding an adequate visitor center and museum in time for his landmark anniversary.

Minni Jean Brown Trickey, one of the Nine, said this Visitors' Center will serve many purposes, but what struck me was her assurance that the Center "is an opportunity for healing."

Today's resolution offers similar opportunities. It allows us to remember the past, begin healing from that past, look at how far our Nation has come to address equality and discrimination and rededicate ourselves to acknowledging how much further we must go from here.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, I rise this evening to speak in support of S. Res. 39, apologizing for the Senate's failure to enact antilynching legislation. It is important for us to reflect on the statements that have been made by my colleagues, including the distinguished Senator from Louisiana and the distinguished Senator from Virginia, so that we can remember the history of this country and how America has been an America in progress. The past can be painted in statistics or it can be painted in the stories of people who have suffered from the unjust result of the absence of an antilynching law.

We can speak about the time between 1882 and 1968 when there were nearly 5,000 lynchings. These lynchings that occurred were not lynchings that occurred just in the southern part of the United States of America but happened throughout most of the States of our country, including in my own home State of Colorado, where a historian has in his own research concluded that there were about 175 lynchings in Colorado between 1859 and 1919.

It is appropriate and fitting that today we apologize for the absence of those laws, that we recognize people like James Cameron who became a survivor of the lynchings of that time period, recognize that this Senate today says we apologize for that past.

It is perhaps even more important to look to the future of America and to look at the racial issues and the challenges we face as a nation to create an America that truly is an America of inclusion. It is one thing to stand in the Chamber of the Senate today, to look at our history, and to learn from that painful history, but it is equally as important to look to the future and to recognize the challenges we face in this America in the decade ahead, and the 100 years ahead require us to learn from those very painful lessons of the past.

When one looks at those very painful lessons of the past, we have to recognize for the first 250 years of the beginnings of this Nation we had a system of law that recognized it was OK for one group of people to own another group of people under our system of slavery just because of the color of their skin. It is important for us, also, to recognize that it took the bloodiest war of the United States during the Civil War, for over half a million people were killed on our own soil in America to bring about an end to the system of slavery and to usher in the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments which are the bedrock of the constitutional liberties we now endow upon all people of America.

Notwithstanding the fact that in that time period of the Civil War we saw the blood and life of so many Americans laid down in this country, we still continued through another period of almost 100 years where we divided our Nation according to groups. It was over 100 years ago when Justice Harlan, writing for the dissent in the now famous case of Plessy v. Ferguson, made the following observation, disagreeing with the U.S. Supreme Court on the segregation system which was ushered in under that decision, saying:

The destinies of the races, in this country, are indissolubly linked together and the interests of both require that the common government law shall not permit the seeds of race hate to be planted under the sanction of law.

That was over 100 years ago. Yet it took more than half a century, until 1954, in the decision of Brown v. Board of Education, for the U.S. Supreme Court under the leadership of Justice Warren to say in these United States, separate but equal was unconstitutional under the 14th amendment. It took more than half a century more for the U.S. Supreme Court to make that statement.

So when we look to the future of America, when we look to the diversity that defines our country, it is my belief that this next century will be defined by how we as an American society embrace the concept of an inclusive America. When we embrace a concept of an inclusive America, we talk about including people of all backgrounds—be they Anglo Americans, French Americans, African Americans, Latinos, Native Americans, women—that we as an American society will be challenged in the century ahead by how we deal with the issue of inclusion, and the greatness of this country will be defined by how successful we are in making sure we are inclusive of all people.

There are some who have recognized this. Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, in writing for the U.S. Supreme Court in the now famous decision of the University of Michigan from several years ago, made the following comment about the importance of diversity in higher education in the majority opinion:

These benefits are not theoretical but real, as major American businesses have made clear that the skills needed in today's increasingly global marketplace can only be developed through exposure to widely diverse people, cultures, ideas, and viewpoints.

That was from the brief submitted by General Motors. She went on to say:

What is more, high-ranking retired officers and civilian leaders of the United States military assert, based on their decades of experience, a highly qualified racially diverse officer corps is essential to the military's ability to fulfill its principal mission to provide national security.

It was in that articulation by Justice Day O'Connor, where she articulated the challenge and the opportunity that we have as an American society, the 21st century unfolds in front of us.

In my estimation, the greatness of this country depends on our learning and not forgetting the painful lessons of the past, including the lynchings that occurred across America, while also looking forward to the challenge of including people of all backgrounds and all races in all of the business affairs and civic affairs of this Nation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, I am very glad we are passing this resolution. There have been attempts in the past by other Members of Congress, such as my good friend, the former Congressman Tony Hall of Ohio, who had tried several years back to get a resolution of apology with regard to slavery. They never could work out all the details. I am very glad the Senate has come to this point that it could critique itself for this legislative body's failure to enact antilynching laws back at a time when it would have been so important to stop these kinds of mayhem and murderous rampages where mobs would take, supposedly, justice into their own hands.

Thank goodness we have come to a point at which we can admit our mistakes, even though this is several generations later, and pass such a resolution as we will do tonight.

Interestingly, one of my political heroes is a person who Americans rarely hear about. He was a British Parliamentarian in the late 1700s and the early 1800s named William Wilberforce. Wilberforce was elected to the Parliament at the age of 21 along with one of his best friends, William Pitt, the Younger. And in 3 years, at age 24, Pitt was elected Prime Minister. Of course, Wilberforce could have been in his Cabinet. But at that point Wilberforce had recognized the great evil of the day and dedicated his life to the elimination of the economic order of the day, which was the English slave trade where the captains would take the boats down off the coast of Africa under the guise of friendship, round up native Africans, put them in the holds of those slave ships, and take them to the New World and sell them.

Wilberforce is a hero to me because, as a government official, a member of Parliament, he would not even join William Pitt, the Younger's Cabinet. He wanted to devote his life to the elimination of the slave trade. It took him 20 years to do it. Time after time, he was beat back, but he persevered, and he finally won, 20 years later. Then, before Wilberforce died, he saw that Parliament actually abolished slavery. That was some 30 years before slavery was abolished here in America.

So it is a privilege for me to be here at long last to join our colleagues to apologize for the Senate's failure in the 1930s to pass legislation outlawing the barbaric practice of lynching. For more than a century, this country presented two realities to its citizens. Enshrined in our Constitution is a government and a legal system designed to protect the rights of all Americans so that our freedom cannot be taken away or infringed upon without due process of law. But for many decades, however, this system of justice and respect for the rule of law did not apply to all of the citizens of this country.

In 1857, in the Dred Scott Supreme Court decision, that guarantee in the U.S. Constitution that all men are created equal was not intended to include Blacks by that decision. For many years later, Black Americans found few protections in the constitutional guarantees of liberty and freedom and equal protection under the law. A Black man accused of a crime against a White person found that he had no access to the courts to prove his innocence, he had no access to a fair and impartial jury of his peers. All too often, White citizens, armed with guns and feelings of righteousness, would take the accused, as law enforcement officers stood by, and brutalize them and hang them in a public setting for other members of the community to view and feel avenged. How horrible would that be, a public spectacle that was supposed to intimidate, that was supposed to strike fear. Did it? You bet it did. It was meant to send a message to the members of the Black community that they better remain in their place, to remember that the guarantees of freedom and fairness in the Constitution did not include them.

In my State of Florida, there were 61 lynchings of Black Americans between 1921 and 1946, which, of course, represents only a fraction of the total number that were committed in my State. There is no justification or explanation for these horrible acts of violence. As a nation that respects the rule of law and court-prescribed justice, what happened was vigilantism and mob rule. That is what determined "justice." And that is never justifiable.

There is a place in Florida called Rosewood. It was the site, in the 1920s, of what many describe as a massacre. That Black community was destroyed by Whites. No arrests were ever made in as many as 27 racial killings in that location.

Florida finally passed the Nation's first compensation for Blacks who suffered from those past racial injustices. It was all directed back to the massacres that had occurred at Rosewood, FL. The 1994 Florida Legislature passed the Rosewood Claims Bill to compensate victims for loss of property as a result of the failure to prosecute those individuals responsible. I felt as a Floridian that this acknowledgement was long overdue, and it made me proud to see, at long last, that we addressed the tragedy of Rosewood.

Now, as a Member of the Senate, I believe this resolution we are passing tonight is long overdue. In being proud of this event, I am also humbled to stand up as a Member of the Senate and to personally apologize for the Senate's failure to act—a failure to outlaw barbaric acts such as lynchings and racial massacres.

I am proud, too, that we can today reaffirm that we are a nation of laws designed to protect the freedom and liberty of all Americans—all Americans—regardless of race.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, this is an issue that will be considered by the Senate later this evening, an issue of historic importance. It will be an official apology by the Senate for the Senate's failure to protect victims of lynching in America.

Fifty years ago, on August 20, 1955, a Chicago woman named Mamie Till took her 14-year-old son Emmett to the 63rd Street Station in Chicago to catch the southbound train to Mississippi. Emmett was going to spend the summer with his great uncle and aunt in a town called Money, MS, in the heart of the Mississippi Delta.

The next day, August 21, 1955, young Emmett Till arrived in Mississippi. He spent the next few days helping out around the house, working with his great uncle, Moses Wright, in the cotton fields.

On August 24, after a long day of working in the fields, Emmett and a group of teenagers went into town to Bryant's Grocery Store for some refreshments. The store—owned by a White couple named Roy and Carolyn Bryant—served primarily Black workers, sharecroppers, and their kids. Emmett went into Bryant's Grocery Store to buy some bubble gum. Some kids who were hanging out outside the store accused Emmett of whistling at Carolyn Bryant, one of the proprietors of the store.

Four days later, on August 28, Carolyn Bryant's husband and his half brother went to Moses Wright's home at 2:30 in the morning. They kidnapped young Emmett Till from his bed, and they committed one of the most notorious and horrific lynchings in American history. They brutally beat this young man from Chicago, IL, Emmett Till. They gouged out his eyes, they shot him in the head, they tied a large metal fan around his neck with barbed wire, and they threw his mangled, dead body into the Tallahatchie River.

A few days later, his broken and bloated body was found floating in the river. Emmett Till was returned to his mother in Chicago in a coffin. On September 3, 1955, Mamie Till held a historic funeral for her son at Roberts Temple Church of God in Chicago. She did a courageous thing: She directed that the casket remain open so that everyone could see what hatred and racism had done to her little boy.

Tens of thousands of Chicagoans came to say goodbye to 14-year-old Emmett Till, a young man who just a few weeks before got on that train to visit his family in Mississippi. News coverage of that funeral reached millions more around the world. Jet Magazine made a historic decision: They decided to print actual photographs of Emmett Till's mutilated body lying in the casket and cover his funeral. The decision by that magazine and the publicity that came with Emmett Till's tragic death changed people across America. I cannot tell you how many African Americans I have met who said that the world changed after the murder of Emmett Till. They came to realize that what happened to him should not be allowed to happen in America.

One of my favorite friends in Congress, one of my heroes of all time, is a man named JOHN LEWIS. He represents Atlanta, GA, as a Member of the House of Representatives. He was one of the pioneers in the civil rights movement. He was 15 years old, 1 year older than Emmett Till, growing up in Alabama, when he saw those photographs of this young man. Like millions of African Americans, JOHN LEWIS was haunted by the image. He told a Washington Post reporter recently: I remember thinking it can happen to anyone, me or my brothers or my cousins. It created a sense of fear that it could happen to anyone who got out of line.

Those images of Emmett Till inspired more than fear. In many people, they inspired courage and resolve. There was a decision made by so many at every level of life in America to no longer ever tolerate the brutal inhumanity of hatred and racism of Jim Crow laws. When Rosa Parks, the legendary civil rights leader, refused to give up her seat on that bus in Montgomery, AL, it was 100 days after Emmett Till's murder. She said, when asked later: How did you show the strength to do that, stand up against everybody and say, no, I will not sit in the back of the bus, she said she got her courage by thinking of that young man, Emmett Till.

Eight years later, in a song entitled "The Murder of Emmett Till," the great poet/songwriter Bob Dylan had the following lyrics:

If you can't speak out against this kind of thing,

a crime that's so unjust,

your eyes are filled with dead men's dirt, your mind is filled with dust.

Today, 50 years after Emmett Till's brutal murder, the Senate will formally and officially offer apologies to not just the families of Emmett Till but the nearly 4,800 other Americans who died at the hands of lynch mobs in our country, in this great Nation of America, between 1882 and 1968. We offer our apologies as well to the countless millions of Americans who were forced to live with the fear that they could be the next victim.

Emmett Till's cousin, Simeon Wright, was lying next to Emmett the night he was kidnapped and lynched. Simeon Wright is with us today. Doria Johnson, from Evanston, IL, also is with us today. Her grandfather, Anthony Crawford, was lynched by a White mob in Abbeville, SC, in 1916. He was beaten, hanged, and shot more than 200 times. What kind of offense would merit that kind of punishment? What had Anthony Crawford done? Anthony Crawford, in 1916, in South Carolina, a Black man, got into an argument with a White man over the price of cotton seed at a store.

To them and to all who lost a loved one to lynching and to those who lost a piece of their own childhood and their own sense of security, we say today formally and officially in the Senate that we were wrong—wrong for failing to protect them, wrong because we never said we were sorry.

The murders of Emmett Till and Anthony Crawford are among those documented in a groundbreaking book and museum exhibit called "Without Sanctuary: Lynching Photography in America." The exhibit has traveled all over the United States and opened just last week at the Chicago Historical Society.

Mr. President, just a few days ago, the Chicago Sun-Times did an editorial on this issue of lynching and this exhibit. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Sun-Times, June 12, 2005]
EXHIBIT OF LYNCHING PHOTOS SHOWS EVIL WE MUST REMEMBER

The Chicago Historical Society's "Without Sanctuary: Lynching Photography in America" seems an unlikely exhibition to launch in a Northern city. But the link between Chicago and "murder by a mob of an individual outside the confines of the legal system," a definition that comes halfway through the exhibit, is long-standing. It has been 50 years since Chicagoan Emmett Till was lynched in Mississippi. That case is still with us.

Till's murder, for allegedly whistling at a white woman, shocked an entire nation and sparked the civil rights movement in the North, but lynching had gone on for decades. Journalist Ida Wells-Barnett was crusading against it in 1892 when three successful black businessmen were lynched. Through her fearless reporting, Barnett established that lynching was not the white man's response to a black man's abuse of white women, but that most lynchings were caused by "economic competition and racial hatred."

In 1893, Barnett stood outside the Chicago World's Fair and protested the exclusion of African Americans, while handing out copies of her pamphlet: "Southern Horrors: Lynch Law in All Its Phases." Still, except for protest art such as Claude McKay's "The Lynching" and Billie Holiday's "Strange Fruit," the sadistic killing of black Americans has mostly been hidden from America's mainstream.

The Chicago Historical Society's exhibit will change that. And it strikes us as fitting that photographs and documents, many of which are on loan from private collections, have ended up here. Although the re-opening of the Till murder case has sparked new interest in this subject, many young Chicagoans probably do not know how widespread this crime was or that it occurred outside of the South in places such as Downstate Cairo.

"No part of the nation was immune," as the exhibit recalls with a quotation from W.E.B. Du Bois. "We must remember because if the world forgets evil, evil is reborn."

The 53 images of lynchings that took place between 1870 and 1961 constitute a shocking testament to America's shame. The lynching exhibition runs through Dec. 4. Don't miss it.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, this editorial from the Chicago Sun-Times urges people to attend the exhibit and notes that "many young Chicagoans probably do not know how widespread this crime was or that it occurred outside of the South in places such as downstate Cairo," IL. That is an important point. Lynching was not just a southern shame, it was an American shame. While most lynchings occurred in the South, they also happened in the North.

I commend Senators MARY LANDRIEU and GEORGE ALLEN for authoring this resolution and working so hard to have the Senate take it up and right this historical wrong. It is my hope the Senate will match the words of this resolution with action. It is not enough to apologize for the failure of our predecessors to protect their fellow citizens from violent prejudice. We have a responsibility to protect those who are targets of today's hate crimes as well. Senator TED KENNEDY, a Democrat, and Senator GORDON SMITH, a Republican, have been trying for years to persuade Congress to pass a new, stronger Federal hate crimes bill. Year after year, they have met with resistance.

Listen to the arguments of those who oppose a stronger hate crimes bill today, and you hear the same arguments that were made against a Federal antilynching bill decades ago. The names have changed, the arguments and the excuses are the same.

They say we in Congress cannot pass a strong hate crimes bill because it will infringe on States rights or because the Constitution does not give Congress explicit authority to pass such a law.

Listen to what a Member of the House of Representatives, James Woods of Virginia, said in 1922:

This bill, commonly known as the "antilynching bill" would be described more accurately if designated—from the standpoint of its effects rather than from its purpose—as a "bill to override the Constitution of the United States, to foment race hatred, and to revive sectional animosity." If it were possible to put an end to lynching by a lawful act of Congress, none would support such legislation more earnestly than we of the South.

The Constitution does not say anything explicitly about the Civil Rights Act, which the Senate passed 41 years ago, or the Voting Rights Act, which turns 40 today. There always will be political voices that will find excuses to delay acting on the moral challenges of our time.

Finding the moral courage to deal with those challenges in our own time is the real test of leadership. What is it we are doing or failing to do today that would lead the Senate 50 years from now to apologize? That is the question.

I hope Congress will pass the Kennedy-Smith hate crimes bill as tangible proof to the victims of lynching that we will never again withhold our protection when Americans are persecuted and killed simply for being who they are.

When Mamie Till put her son on that train for Mississippi, he was wearing a watch he had been given by his father before his father died. The hands on that watch stopped when Emmitt Till was tortured and murdered.

Much has changed in the 50 years since Emmitt Till died, but some small part of America's soul has always remained frozen in that time because of our failure to formally acknowledge that what happened was wrong. By apologizing to the victims of lynching—and by having the courage to protect the victims of hate crimes today—we can reclaim that piece of our soul and move forward in time as one Nation indivisible.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the opportunity has finally come to make the record right—to begin to balance what has been an imbalance. We have come to this floor to apologize for the silence of the U.S. Senate regarding the lynching of our fellow Americans, primarily African Americans.

Tonight, we begin to redress the lynching madness that swept our country from the 1880s and which continued unchecked through the 1950s, and even as recently as the 1960s. It is estimated that nearly 5,000 Americans were lynched during this time. African Americans were strung up from trees, burned at the stake, mutilated in the town square for all to see. Those who committed such atrocities went without punishment. Justice was not only denied, it was ignored, abdicated, and overthrown.

The victims were not just those who were killed. A lynching is not only a heinous and savage act against one person; it is an act of violence against the rights of an entire community. Its victims are everyone who hears its hateful message.

Ida B. Wells-Barnett explained well the nature of lynching in America. Born in Mississippi a few months before the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation, Ida Wells-Barnett was the editor and co-owner of a Black newspaper called "The Free Speech and Headlight." In 1900, she wrote:

Our country's national crime is lynching. It is not the creature of an hour, the sudden outburst of uncontrolled fury, or the unspeakable brutality of an insane mob. It represents the cool, calculating deliberation of intelligent people who openly avow that there is an "unwritten law" that justifies them in putting human beings to death without complaint under oath, without trial by jury, without opportunity to make defense, and without right of appeal.

Lynching was an attack on the rule of law itself, and yet the U.S. Senate did not act against it. Antilynching legislation was called for by seven U.S. Presidents. The House of Representatives passed three antilynching bills. This body passed none, though many were introduced.

In 1935, Senator Edward Costigan spoke in favor of an antilynching bill he had introduced with Senator Robert Wagner. Having made a careful yet passionate argument for his proposed legislation, Senator Costigan concluded:

If one can mention, much less picture such appalling facts as I have recited without being revolted, he is indeed hardened out of all semblance to humanity. They destroy our claim to civilized life. They must not be permitted to multiply. Every repetition of mob brutality denies its victims the right of speedy and impartial trial and the equal protection of laws guaranteed by the Constitution. No man can be permitted to usurp the combined functions of judge, jury, and executioner of his fellow men; and whenever any state fails to protect such equal rights, I submit that the federal government must do its utmost to repair the damage which is then chargeable to us all.

Faced with both the opportunity and the responsibility to act, the Senate simply failed. That failure is a permanent stain on this body, and we are not trying to wipe it away. We only hope that acknowledging it will allow for some national healing.

To the families of victims of lynching who sit in the Senate Gallery tonight, let me offer my personal sorrow over the injustice you have suffered. I hope our action today will bring you some comfort, though it cannot ease your loss.

As the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, I also want to say a special word about the members of the American Armed Forces who were lynched in the country they had defended. Following both World War I and World War II, returning soldiers were lynched, many while still wearing their military uniforms. It is difficult to imagine a more unjust situation. There would be no new respect for these brave African Americans who had fought for our country, only the old order of injustice and hate.

Mr. President, it is easy for the Senate to apologize now. This is not a tough decision, only a somber one. But there are still tough decisions ahead. While we cannot bring justice to those who were lynched, we can continue to bring about the just society that was mocked and shredded by acts of lynching.

In that spirit, I hope that today is part of a larger effort toward racial reconciliation and justice. We can continue by honoring the Tuskegee Airmen with the Congressional Gold Medal for their contributions to our Nation's defense and to its progress, as proposed in bipartisan legislation, S. 392, introduced on February 16, 2005. And we can make progress on so many vital issues—education, health care, jobs—that would improve the lives of African Americans and all Americans. We have moved past lynching, but we have not reached justice. I hope we will not fail to act.

In closing, I would like to thank my able colleagues, Senator MARY LANDRIEU and Senator GEORGE ALLEN, for their diligence and leadership in bringing this healing resolution, which I was pleased to cosponsor, before the U.S. Senate.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this important resolution. I commend my friends and colleagues, Senator LANDRIEU and Senator ALLEN, for their leadership on this important issue.

It is difficult to address this subject without noting the shameful record of Senate inaction on the issue of lynching. As noted in the text of the resolution, 4,742 people were lynched in the United States between 1882 and 1968. During that time, 7 U.S. Presidents pushed for Congressional action on what had succeeded slavery as the ultimate expression of racism. Between 1920 and 1940, the House of Representatives passed strong antilynching measures on three different occasions. Sadly, the Senate failed to do its duty to enable antilynching legislation to be enacted, thus allowing this despicable, murderous practice to continue.

This Senate Resolution is long, long overdue. As we all know, the Senate has a basic Federal responsibility to provide protection to those in need. While our predecessors failed in that regard, we have an opportunity today to begin healing the wounds that this body's failures have inflicted upon the African American community for so many years.

The apology we issue today comes too late for the thousands of Americans brutally slain in this abhorrent manner. Hopefully, by our acknowledgment of wrongdoing, and our sincere apology, we can bring some solace to the family members who still recall—all too vividly—the horror of having a loved one murdered by lynching.

We must never forget the thousands of men, women and children who were deprived of life, human dignity, and the Constitutional protections that are to be accorded all U.S. citizens. We have a responsibility—to all Americans—to ensure that the tragedy of lynching, and this body's failure to address it, will neither be forgotten, nor repeated.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in condemning the shameful role of lynching in the Nation's history and the decades of refusal by the Nation, especially the United States Senate, to act against it. I commend my colleagues Senator LANDRIEU of Louisiana and Senator ALLEN of Virginia for bringing this important issue before the Senate floor and taking this long overdue action. And I thank the family members of the victims of lynching, many of whom traveled great distances to be here today.

The history of lynching is a stain on the Nation's past. Over 4,700 persons were lynched in the United States from the 1880s to the 1960s.

These lynchings involved acts of unspeakable cruelty. Many victims were shot, burned or hanged. Some of the victims were accused of criminal offenses, while others were attacked because of something they said or because they were in the wrong place at the wrong time.

The vast majority of victims were African Americans who were killed solely because of their race. In the year 1892 alone, 230 persons were lynched—at least one victim every other day. We must never forget that injustice. Many whites also fell victim to this brutality, singled out for their religion or ethnicity, their refusal to accept the racial hierarchy, or other reasons.

Lynching was devastating to African American communities. It struck fear into the hearts and minds of African Americans, who knew they could be killed at any time for the most trivial of offenses or for no offense at all.

Year after year, the Federal Government and State and local governments failed to respond effectively to the danger. The perpetrators had little reason to fear that they would be prosecuted or convicted. In some cases, scheduled lynchings were announced in newspapers beforehand, demonstrating the unwillingness of local law enforcement to intervene. Photos of lynchings show onlookers grinning at the camera. The failure of local authorities to prevent these atrocities dehumanized, demoralized, and terrorized black Americans.

When the 370,000 African-American soldiers who served in World War I returned home, many believed that they had earned the equality they had previously been denied. Their hopes soon turned to frustration, as the discrimination of the pre-war years was renewed and reinvigorated. Even newly discharged soldiers were lynched, still wearing their uniforms.

Lynching was more than isolated acts of brutality. It was vigilante mob murder that became systemic, ritualized and condoned by a racist society. It became a cruel weapon of white supremacy which took the lives of many African Americans and terrorized whole communities. Along with Jim Crow laws, segregated schools and dismal lack of property rights, lynching was used as an organized weapon of oppression that denied the fundamental rights of tens of millions of African Americans. As W.E.B. DuBois stated, the things that "the white South feared more than Negro dishonesty, ignorance and incompetency, [were] Negro honesty, knowledge, and efficiency." Lynching was part of an organized attempt to oppress African-American communities and exclude them from the American dream.

In 1900, African-American Congressman George White introduced the first antilynching bill, only to see it die in committee. Brave men and women like Ida B. Wells, W.E.B. DuBois, and others in the NAACP, lobbied tirelessly for Federal antilynching legislation in the first half of the twentieth century. Their efforts succeeded in the House of Representatives, which passed such legislation three times between 1922 and 1940. Each time, however, the legislation died in the Senate.

In 1945, President Truman proposed a new antilynching bill, to make lynching a crime under Federal law. His proposal never made it out of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

We cannot undo the Senate's past failures to act against lynching. But we can and must do all we can to erase its bitter legacy.

Today, there is strong need to strengthen laws against hate crimes and other violence motivated by bigotry. As the Supreme Court has stated, bias-motivated violence is "more likely to provoke retaliatory crimes, inflict distinct emotional harms on their victims, and incite community unrest." Like acts of terrorism, hate crimes have an impact far greater than the impact suffered by individual victims; they are crimes against entire communities and against the whole Nation. Whether based on prejudice against the victim's race, religion, ethnic background, gender, disability, or sexual orientation, hate crimes are modern-day lynchings which threaten not just individuals, but our entire social and political order.

My colleague, Senator SMITH and I have introduced bipartisan legislation to strengthen our laws against hate crimes, and I urge all of our colleagues to support it. That bill passed the Senate last year and died in the House. We will not give up until it becomes law.

As each of us knows, the past has consequences for the present, and past acts of lynching over many decades contributed substantially to the disparities between African American and Whites. We cannot undo that history, but if we are sincere in our apology today, we must match our words with deeds and work harder together to close the gaps.

At the beginning of this year, members of the Congressional Black Caucus put forward a plan for doing so, and we should work to implement it as one of the most important issues before us in this Congress.

We need to do more to ensure the job security of African Americans, whose unemployment rate is 10.1 percent—almost double the national average and more than double the unemployment rate of Whites.

Thirty-four percent of African American children live in poverty, nearly double the national average. We know that education is the key to opportunity and a better life, and we should be doing more to improve education at every level. We need to do more to help the youngest children in American—and the earlier, the better. Head Start has a 30-year track record of achievement in preparing children for kindergarten. It makes an enormous difference for 300,000 young African American children.

We must meet our promise of fully funding the No Child Left Behind Act. The President's proposed budget shortchanges elementary education under the Act by $12 billion—for a total deficit of $39 billion since the school reform law was first enacted. The No Child Left Behind Act is already leaving 3 million children behind.

In fact, the President's proposed budget contains the first absolute reduction for education in a decade. It has a cumulative cut of $40 billion for education over the next 5 years. One out of every three programs eliminated by the President is a program in the Department of Education.

We should also be doing more to fund opportunities for college. We know that African Americans are only half as likely as Whites to earn a college degree. The current annual unmet need of a typical undergraduate now averages $5,800. It is more important than ever to increase grant aid. Yet the Bush administration has proposed only a $500 increase in the maximum Pell grant this year.

The budget also reduces a number of important programs to help African Americans, while preserving tax cuts for the rich and powerful. It proposes a 5-year freeze on child care funding, which will reduce the number of low-income children receiving this assistance by 300,000 in 2009. The budget also cuts $10 billion over 5 years from Medicaid, the program that provides basic health care for the poor.

As we review our legislative priorities, we cannot forget that we have a special duty to address the malignant disparities created by long-standing racial bigotry in this country—of which lynching was the most vicious example but far from the only example.

It's fitting that we enact this apology today, the first day of the long overdue trial for the brutal lynching of civil rights workers James Chaney, Andrew Goodman, and Michael Schwerner in 1964. Those murders, 41 years ago this month, took the lives of three young men whose only offense was attempting to register African Americans to vote in Mississippi, and it shows how deeply rooted racial violence once was in American life. All of us hope that the prosecution now taking place in that case, like the Senate apology today, can begin to heal these bitter wounds of injustice that the nation still feels because of the sordid legacy of lynching.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to achieve the great goal of genuine equal opportunity for all our citizens. May the passage of this resolution mark a new beginning of race relations in America.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I rise to clarify the record concerning my support for the resolution before us today.

I chose to cosponsor this resolution because of my abhorrence for the crime of lynching. I have been told that the passage of this resolution will enable people whose families were affected by this terrible crime to resolve their frustration that Government authorities did not do more to stop it. If this resolution helps people deal with the past so that they can move on to the future, it is a worthwhile statement to make.

Having said that, I am aware of concerns that have been raised about possible "next steps" based on the Senate's action on S. Res. 39. Let me just say that this resolution should not be interpreted—at least so far as this Senator is concerned—as any kind of an endorsement for some claim of compensation based on any action or inaction of the Federal Government.

In fact, what brings me to the floor is a concern that the actions of a particular Senator long ago may be subjected to unfair, revisionist criticism from our perspective today. The Senator in question is my predecessor, known as "the Lion of Idaho," William Borah.

Senator Borah was one of the leaders of the Senate in blocking consideration of the anti-lynching legislation. I think it is important for the record to show that whatever motives others may have had at the time for blocking this legislation, William Borah offered convincing justifications for his position rooted in serious constitutional and policy concerns.

This is the conclusion I have drawn from considerable historical research of the debates of the time, which has been condensed into a report by a talented law student, David Palmer, who served as my law clerk earlier this year. I am going to ask that this report be printed in the RECORD so that all my colleagues can review it. It is an absorbing read, and I think it supports the conclusion that Senator Borah made a principled stand at the time.

I ask unanimous consent that the report of David Palmer concerning William Borah's arguments against Senate action be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Re: William Borah's arguments against Senate anti-lynching bills in the 1920's & 1930's

William Borah spoke out in opposition to the anti-lynching bills presented to the Senate on several occasions during the 1920s and 1930s. He did this primarily for two reasons: first, Senator Borah felt that such a bill represented an unconstitutional exercise of federal rights in the realm of criminal law (an area which had previously been reserved for the states); second—to a lesser degree—Senator Borah argued that even if such a bill were constitutional, it would be an ineffective law meant largely to penalize the South. Combining these rationales, and noting that lynching was a relatively infrequent crime of increasing rarity with each passing year, he argued that the tremendous costs to state sovereignty through federal intrusion in this matter would be much more dangerous to the good of all than any uncertain benefits that might come through passing such a bill. In short, Senator Borah was not a racist; rather, he was a man of deep commitment to this nation's federalist system, and this memo will present his respective constitutional and policy arguments against the anti-lynching bills of his day.

1. WILLIAM BORAH'S CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS

Senator Borah felt that there were a number of constitutional infirmities with the anti-lynching bills he faced, although they all revolved around his firm belief in states' rights as a centerpiece of the entire government. His constitutional problems with the various anti-lynching bills, as well as his reasons for championing state sovereignty so strongly, are detailed below.

A. BORAH: THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT IS NOT AN ACCEPTABLE CONSTITUTIONAL BASIS FOR ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS

To put Senator Borah's arguments in context, the proponents of the anti-lynching bills typically based their opinion that such bills were constitutional on two grounds: first, that the Federal Government must guarantee a republican form of government to all citizens; second, that the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause allowed for federal action in the face of state failure to prosecute lynchings. 79 Congo Rec. 6, 6524 (1935). Borah felt that the first point was "utterly irrelevant" (id.), and apparently so did his debating opponents, as almost all the constitutional debates Borah participated in dealt with aspects of the 14th Amendment.

Regarding the 14th Amendment, Borah consistently argued that any attempt to apply the amendment to the actions of individuals by the Federal Government should be rejected, as the amendment's framers specifically rejected this idea. Id. at 6362. The anti-lynching bills invariably allowed the Federal Government to step in at some point to prosecute the perpetrators of a lynching if a state had not done its law-enforcement job, thus mandating federal intrusion into law enforcement against individual action which was not undertaken by the states. Borah argued that this simply cannot be justified under the 14th Amendment, as such a capacity for law enforcement by the Federal Government (against individuals not acting as official representatives of a state) was explicitly rejected by those who originally passed the 14th Amendment. Id.

In a later debate (in 1937), Borah similarly argued that the 14th Amendment contains no clause whatsoever allowing the Federal Government to go into a state and establish civil liability for damages between citizens of the state, or between citizens and a subdivision of a state (as would have been allowed in that year's bill). He further argued that this anti-lynching bill was such a new proposition—constitutionally speaking—that the people of the United States should be consulted in the form of passing this bill as a constitutional amendment. Borah feared that it would ultimately result in the "elimination of the states." 81 Congr. Rec. 8,8746-8 (1937).

Additionally, Borah argued that if our nation were really concerned about the equal protection of the law being enforced where it is needed, then the 1937 bill should not have exempted violence due to "gangsterism" and racketeering. This was the area in which he felt that most states had truly failed to enforce the law. Instead, the exemption reinforced in Senator Borah's mind that the anti-lynching bill was really a sectional bill aimed at punishing the south while exempting the northern states for their own law enforcement failures. Id. at 8753.

Finally, in 1938 Senator Borah cited several Supreme Court cases for the proposition that the 14th Amendment was not designed to transfer any power from the states to the Federal Government for protecting the lives, liberty and property of a particular state's citizens. 83 Congr. Rec. 2, 1492 (1938). Borah concluded his 14th Amendment arguments by stating that the only way a state could be liable under that amendment—in this area of the law—is if it were to not pass laws protecting its citizens from lynching. Id. at 1495. Because the states had done that, and given that the framers of the 14th Amendment (and the Supreme Court) had rejected the idea that the amendment transferred any power to the Federal Government for enforcing the criminal law, Senator Borah strongly opposed using the 14th Amendment as a basis for the anti-lynching bills.

B. BORAH: MCCULLOCH V. MARYLAND PRECLUDES THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS

Senator Borah attacked the 1938 anti-lynching bill on an additional ground: it would have allowed the Federal Government to bring suit on behalf of an individual against a division of a state (a county) if the officials of the division had not enforced anti-lynching laws. Borah noted that this ability for one sovereign to bring suit against another sovereign was precluded by a continuous line of Supreme Court cases beginning in 1819 with McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S.316. Id. at 1490.

Senator Borah began this argument by pointing out that McCulloch held the ability of one sovereign to tax another is the ability to destroy it, and this therefore is not constitutionally permissible. He further argued that the ability of one sovereign to bring suit against another is an equivalent power, and therefore it is unconstitutional on that ground as well. Finally, in response to another senator's argument, Borah went through a detailed list of how the Supreme Court had repeatedly issued decisions supporting his view (even in the cases decided since the passage of the 14th Amendment). Id. at 1491.

There are three key points Borah made in support of this McCulloch argument. First, he pointed out that the anti-lynching bill would have allowed the Federal Government to sue counties on behalf of individuals, and these suits against counties would constitute direct interference by the Federal Government with the power of states over their counties. Numerous Supreme Court decisions have disallowed such actions because of their impingement on state sovereignty. Id. at 1492.

Second, Borah argued that suing counties was the same thing as suing states (an idea supported by numerous Supreme Court decisions), and states could never consent to be sued by another sovereign (at most they could consent to be sued by their citizens). Id. at 1493.

Last, he argued that states cannot be found liable for the actions of their employees when those employees are not acting in an official capacity. As states already had anti-lynching laws on their books, Borah argued that any lack of enforcement by state officials of those state laws indicated that county officials were not acting in an official capacity during the dereliction of their responsibilities. Therefore, to allow the Federal Government to take action against those officials would be to allow the government to sue the states (through their counties) in situations where no official state conduct had occurred. 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 141 (1938). This, Borah argued (citing several Supreme Court decisions for this proposition), is constitutionally impermissible. 83 Congr. Rec. 2, 1494 (1938).

C. BORAH'S MISCELLANEOUS CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENTS

In addition to the constitutional arguments already discussed, William Borah included two other, albeit less-emphasized, legal objections to the anti-lynching bills in his speeches. One such argument was an objection to the trigger of Federal intervention under these bills: when only one man committed a lynching, it did not allow Federal jurisdiction; rather, it required the actions of a group of people, and thus "the Constitution is being made subject to construction in accordance with the number of persons present when the crime takes place." 79 Congr. Rec. 6, 6677 (1935). Borah concluded this argument by saying that the act should be rejected because "we certainly have not one Constitution for a half dozen and another Constitution for an individual." Id. at 6504.

Another point that Borah made regarding the constitutionality of the anti-lynching bills dovetails with his McCulloch arguments. He posed a question on the floor which implied that the particular anti-lynching bill before the Senate would create a cause of action for an individual against a county (and therefore a state), thus allowing an individual to sue a state—which is explicitly barred by the 11th Amendment. 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 965 (1938). While the senator to whom Borah asked this question replied that the suit technically was to be brought in the name of the United States Government on behalf of an individual, it is clear that this question was designed to cover Senator Borah's bases. In other words, if the suit was undertaken by the United States against a state, then the McCulloch reasoning would apply to make it unconstitutional; alternatively, if the action was undertaken by an individual, the 11th Amendment would apply. In either case the act would be unconstitutional.

D. BORAH: THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS WOULD DESTROY ESSENTIAL STATES' RIGHTS

Near the conclusion of William Borah's final speech regarding the anti-lynching bills, he summarized his position by stating that his only interest in opposing these bills was in preserving the integrity of the State. To him, the state was and remained "the fountain source of the people's power in the Government; and when that is destroyed, democratic government is at an end." 83 Congr. Rec. 2, 1496 (1938). Racism did not enter that consideration, as his words and actions reveal a man of great devotion to the ideals of our federal system. Moreover, given the complete lack of a constitutional basis for any federal anti-lynching law, Borah felt that such a measure would constitute a naked intrusion by the Federal Government into state sovereignty. Furthermore, while Senator Borah repeatedly said that he had great respect for what the senators backing the anti-lynching bills were trying to do, he also could not allow any such bill to pass out of the Senate in order to have its constitutionality ruled on by the Supreme Court (as several senators had suggested as a course of action) without "stultifying" his own convictions. 79 Congr. Rec. 6, 6673-4 (1935). If the law were to be somehow found constitutional under an increasingly activist court, Borah felt that through this bill the Congress would "have utterly annihilated all State sovereignty." Id. This was a possibility he could never support.

A primary reason Senator Borah so passionately opposed the anti-lynching bills was that allowing federal intrusion through those bills would create a principle of law that he felt would justify further intrusion in almost unlimited circumstances. While supporters of such bills could argue that the legislation only allowed federal intrusion under limited circumstances, the legal principle of the matter was of supreme importance to William Borah. He stated "[i]f the Federal Government can send a United States marshal into the State of Tennessee to arrest a sheriff because he has failed to protect a colored man from violence, it can, under the same principle, send a United States marshal into the State of New York to arrest a sheriff, or other officer on whom the duty is imposed, because he neglected to protect the life of a citizen against the violence of thugs." 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 141 (1938). Therefore, while an anti-lynching bill might only take a limited amount of power from the states in the short-term, Senator Borah was a man who looked at the long-term future; he saw that any such bill such held grave implications for the sovereignty of states. Along these lines, he also argued that allowing this level of federal intrusion would indicate the complete displacement of our nation's federalist system. After all, if a state could not be entrusted exclusively to enforce its own laws, then he felt there was no such thing as local government. Id.

Additionally, Senator Borah included in his speeches some powerful language as to why he felt so strongly about protecting states' rights. In one speech, he explained that the experiences uniquely gained in local government shaped the political views of the founders of this nation. 83 Congr. Rec. 2, 1496 (1938). In another debate, he explained that in 1922 he opposed, in committee, the Dyer anti-lynching bill in part because he was convinced that it is not sound national policy "to remove responsibility from the different local governments of the communities for the enforcement of the law. In the long run that results in breaking down all sense of duty upon the part of the citizen." 79 Congr. Rec. 6, 6673-74 (1935).

Moreover, this opposition to encroaching federal power is consistent with Senator Borah's views on other New Deal legislation as detracting from state sovereignty. Regarding such legislation he went on record as stating that "we can only have a great Federal Union by having great individual sovereign States." Id. Concerning all of these measures (including the anti-lynching bill), Borah expressed his heartfelt feeling that "there is nothing in all the realm of government more essential to the happiness and well-being of the American people than the right of local self-government," and the increased power by the Federal Government constituted an ever-growing threat to this happiness and well-being. Id.

In sum, Senator Borah felt that states necessarily had to retain their sovereign powers to make this union a great one. Any detraction from that power, particularly one with such far-reaching principles for federal intrusion as would be created under this bill, would be devastating to our federal system. Given the complete lack of constitutional support for such a bill in his eyes, William Borah could not in good conscience allow any of the anti-lynching bills to leave the Senate and potentially destroy the sovereignty of the states under an overreaching Supreme Court. Senator Borah was a deep believer in states' rights, his words and actions consistently supported that view, and to ascribe racism to him as a motivation is to both blatantly ignore the historical record as well as demean a man who dedicated his Senate service to furthering the form of government that would provide the greatest good for Americans of all races. As the Senator himself put it (in reference to the final anti-lynching bill put before him): "[t]his, Mr. President, is another compromise with a vital principle of our dual system of government. It is bartering with the future for the supposed and transient demands of the present, and at a time when the present is taking care of the problem. It is another instance in which our confidence in our scheme of government is not strong enough to say to all races, all creeds, all groups, and all factions: Your problems, however serious, are subordinate to the principles of this Government, and you must work them out within the compass of the long-tested and well-accepted principles of democracy." 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 143 (1938).

II. WILLIAM BORAH'S POLICY ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS

Although Senator Borah's opposition to the anti-lynching bills was primarily based on his belief that such legislation represented an unconstitutional infringement on states' rights, he also opposed the bills as poor policies. In his view, even if such bills were constitutional, they would merely result in an ineffective law that would destructively penalize the South. Given that lynching was declining each year as a crime, Borah believed that instituting an ineffective—and potentially damaging—bill to stop a disappearing crime was simply not worth the price to be paid in greatly eroded state sovereignty. This section will detail William Borah's beliefs that creating federal anti-lynching laws would be poor national policy—even if they were somehow deemed constitutional.

A. BORAH: THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS ARE POTENTIALLY HARMFUL SECTIONAL MEASURES

In an extended speech given in 1938, Senator Borah assumed, for purposes of arguing the wisdom of adopting such a policy, that the anti-lynching bill before the Senate was constitutional. He then attacked the potential law on several grounds, beginning with his belief that the bill was nothing more than a sectional measure aimed at the South. 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 138-9 (1938). By sectional measure, Borah meant that he believed this legislative measure to be based on the same idea that inspired so much of northern policy towards the South during Reconstruction: a desire to punish the area because the southerners were incapable of self-government. Id. Although the senator did not offer in his 1938 speech a great amount of evidence as to why this was a sectional measure, it seems clear from his earlier speeches regarding the exception of "gangsterism" from prosecution that he felt anti-lynching legislation was aimed at a crime primarily occurring in the South while simultaneously exempting northern cities and states from their own law enforcement failures.

Senator Borah further explained that a measure aimed at the South would be both undeserved by the region and potentially harmful to the nation. He felt that the South had dealt as well as could possibly be expected with its "race problem" in the 70 years since the Civil War, and this was in part evidenced both by the economic progress of southern blacks as well as the lower per capita arrest rate by southern blacks (as compared to northern blacks). He finally stated his belief that nations are held together by more than just laws; mutual respect, confidence and tolerance from one part of the country to another is essential too. Borah feared that passing such a sectional bill would arouse old problems in the south that could potentially disrupt national unity. Id.

B. BORAH: THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILLS WILL BE INEFFECTIVE

Another policy argument that Senator Borah advanced against anti-lynching legislation was that it would be ineffective. He first stated this belief in the Congressional Record in 1935 when he argued that the legislation would be useless because lynching can only be effectively prevented by educating people. 79 Congr. Rec. 6, 6674 (1935). Borah reiterated that same argument in 1938, when he stated that educating both races "to understand their responsibility to society" would be the best way to end lynching, and he also noted that such education was underway in the South. 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 139 (1938).

Additionally, Borah argued that the actual enforcement of the federal law would be ineffectual for two reasons. First, he pointed out that the Federal Government is simply incapable of enforcing criminal law; he cited the federally-controlled District of Columbia and its extraordinary murder and crime rate as his primary example of this ineptness. Id. His second reason aligned with his concern that this was a sectional bill: Senator Borah felt that if Congress were to pass a bill that the South would interpret as aimed at them, then it would be completely unrealistic to expect southerners—even those employed by the Federal Government—to enforce the anti-lynching laws to any greater degree than the state anti-lynching laws. He firmly believed that laws could not be enforced without being backed by public opinion. Id.

C. BORAH: LYNCHING IS DISAPPEARING AS A PROBLEM IN THE UNITED STATES

A final policy argument that Senator Borah made against anti-lynching laws is that it was a disappearing crime. In 1937 he offered the statistic that 40,000,000 Americans were living in poverty to support Senator Pepper's argument that the Senate should be dealing with the problems of the nation's poor instead of "debating an anti-lynching bill, when the total toll of lynching last year, I think, was about 11, one of the minor categories of crime, nationally speaking, in the United States." 82 Congr. Rec. 1, 158 (1937). One year later Borah argued that lynching had dramatically decreased in the United States since 1918, and it had almost disappeared in many states by 1938. Given the extremely small number of lynchings in the two years prior to the introduction of the 1938 anti-lynching bill (combined with the national trend towards fewer lynchings each year) Senator Borah concluded that there was not a sufficient problem to justify judging the southern states (through passing a sectional measure against them) as having failed in their provision of free government. 83 Congr. Rec. 1, 140 (1938).

III. POTENTIAL PROBLEMS WITH WILLIAM BORAH'S STATEMENTS

Although Senator William Borah's speeches convey the message that his real motivation for opposing anti-lynching legislation was based on his concern for state sovereignty, he did make one particular comment that needs to be addressed for its potential racial offensiveness. In 1938, Borah referred to a quotation by Henry W. Grady as true, and this quotation described the white and black races as two "utterly dissimilar races on the same soil—with equal political and civil rights—almost equal in numbers but terribly unequal in intelligence and responsibility." Id. at 141. While this quote does on its face seem to be an overtly racist comment, there are a few reasons why this quote should not be taken as evidence that William Borah fought the anti-lynching bills because he was himself a racist.

The first reason this is so is that following this quotation, Borah put what he meant by it in context. As he explained, he felt that no race of people would have the capacity to assume full citizenship following years of being enslaved. Id. (Borah then argued that the efforts by the South in the years since Reconstruction were the best that could be expected given the circumstances of the region's past, and therefore the region should not be punished by this sectional bill.) Given his statement that no race could have assumed full citizenship following such treatment, it implies that Borah considered any lack on the part of the blacks to be a result of their slavery rather than an innate racial defect. While it is not a flattering statement, it is not strictly a racist remark; instead, Borah does seem to indicate that any race under similar conditions would be unequal in some regards to the enslaving race.

More important, William Borah's other speeches all strongly reinforce the point that his opposition to the anti-lynching bills were purely based on his views of the importance of state sovereignty. He repeatedly praised the intentions of his Senate colleagues who supported the anti-lynching bills, and none of those opponents ever imputed any racist motives to his beliefs. While opposing senators may have disagreed with his constitutional views, there is no record whatsoever that Borah's views were not legitimately held in this and other areas of federal expansion. To try and read such a motivation into the Congressional Record is to engage in revisionist history with no basis other than a personal agenda. Any description of William Borah as being racially motivated to oppose the anti-lynching legislation ignores all of the written record in order to manufacture a preferred reason for the senator's views.

IV. CONCLUSION

Senator William Borah was a passionate advocate for states' rights, and this—rather than racism—was the basis for his opposition to the anti-lynching bills presented to the Senate during the 1920s and 1930s. Senator Borah felt that those bills were unconstitutional for several reasons, and the 14th Amendment was certainly not a sound basis for them to pass constitutional muster. Moreover, Borah saw the anti-lynching bills as creating a principle that would justify repeated and destructive federal intrusion into the state sovereignty that was necessary for our nation's well-being. Finally, as lynching had dramatically decreased in the United States by the late 1930s, and given the Senator's feelings that anti-lynching legislation would be an ineffective solution to that disappearing problem (while at the same time threatening national unity), William Borah strongly believed that passing an anti-lynching bill would needlessly destroy our nation's federalist system without solving any problems at all.

In his final Senate speech against an anti-lynching bill, Senator Borah eloquently concluded by arguing that a loose interpretation of the 14th Amendment would contribute to the downfall of our governmental system, and that "a few lives will be lost if we do not pass this measure, . . . which we will all regret. But many lives were lost to establish this Government, to establish this dual system, and the happiness and contentment of many millions will be lost if we do not preserve it." 83 Congr. Rec. 2, 1497 (1938).

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today not only to show my support for S. Res. 39 but also to honor the achievements of Dr. James Cameron, the oldest living lynching survivor. Dr. Cameron moved on from his horrific early experience with racial hatred to found America's only Black Holocaust Museum. His life story and work are a source of hope and pride for many survivors of racial violence.

Dr. Cameron was born in LaCrosse, WI, in 1914 and moved to Indiana as a teenager. In Indiana, he accompanied two friends involved in an armed robbery that turned to rape and murder. Though Dr. Cameron ran away well before the crime was committed, all three young men were taken to jail. The Ku Klux Klan stormed that jail on August 7, 1930, hung Dr. Cameron's two friends and beat Dr. Cameron severely. Dr. Cameron survived but spent another 6 years in jail for crimes he did not commit.

Dr. Cameron has never let us forget the injustice done to him and to too many other victims of lynching and other forms of racial violence. After moving back to his home State of Wisconsin, he founded the Black Holocaust Museum in Milwaukee. This unique museum lays bare our Nation's violent past of racism and slavery. Dr. Cameron's efforts to shine a light on this disturbing aspect of our history have opened the eyes of thousands to the suffering of African-Americans—not only in the age of slavery but also in the decades that followed. As painful as the exhibits in his museum are to view, they are a necessary reminder of the costs of racial hatred—and of the apology we owe to the families torn apart by acts of racial hatred.

Because of my great respect for Dr. Cameron—and because he has opened our eyes to the great crimes committed by this nation by not ending lynching—I am cosponsoring S. Res. 39, a resolution apologizing to the victims of lynching and the descendants of those victims for the failure of the Senate to enact antilynching legislation. The history of lynching in America is an atrocious one indeed. Between the years 1882 and 1968, some 4,700 people were lynched. And though, over that same period, nearly 200 antilynching bills were proposed, none made it past the Senate.

That lack of action is truly a black mark on this institution's history and legacy. An apology cannot erase our crimes—but an acknowledgment of the costs of our inaction is a first step toward ensuring we never again let hate and racism run unchecked through our great Nation.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor and strong supporter of S. Res. 39, an apology on behalf of the United States Senate, for its inaction during one of this Nation's darkest chapters. Today, my colleagues and I, through this legislation, offer an apology to the victims of lynching, and their families and descendants, for the Senate's failure to enact antilynching legislation throughout the course of this Nation's history. Despite the fact that, at key junctures in our Nation's history, the House of Representatives passed, and the President stood ready to sign, Federal law to actively eliminate lynching throughout the country, such legislation died in the Senate, as did the many victims of this heinous crime who might have been saved by the passage of such law.

Following the Civil War, and as Reconstruction ended Federal troops withdrew their presence from the States that had been in rebellion, lynching became the most extreme form of racial oppression in the South. Between 1881 and 1964, at least 4,749 reported lynchings took place, with most of the victims being black; all but four States had at least one lynching on record. However, 99 percent of the perpetrators of these crimes escaped any punishment, as State and local authorities refused to investigate and prosecute these cases, and those who were charged with lynching were regularly acquitted by all-white juries.

Unprotected by State authorities, African-Americans and civil rights groups sought protection from the Federal Government, the same authority that rid this Nation of the scourge of slavery. As a result of the Reconstruction amendments to the Constitution, the Federal Government had the express power to pass legislation under the 13th and 14th Amendments to use the full force of the Federal Government's law enforcement authority to put an end to lynching. In fact, between 1890 and 1952, seven Presidents petitioned Congress to halt lynching, and almost 200 antilynching bills were introduced in Congress. Most notably, on three on three occasions between 1920 and 1940, the House of Representatives passed strong antilynching bills. And equally as regrettably, all three of these bills died in the United States Senate.

That is why I find S. Res. 39 to be entirely appropriate, and frankly long overdue. This resolution, offered by my colleagues Senator LANDRIEU and Senator ALLEN, constitutes a formal apology by the Senate "to the victims and survivors of lynching for its failure to enact antilynching legislation." It further expresses this Chamber's sympathy and regret to the descendants of these victims. Undoubtedly, a measure of this nature may stand as insignificant when compared to the sad legacy of men, women, and children dying at the hands of racist, bigoted vigilantism. Yet it is my hope that this resolution, which we will pass tonight, will help heal some of the wounds for the surviving family members of the victims of lynching.

This effort has been a long time coming, and I am thankful for the involvement of my colleagues, present and former, who have taken part in supporting this effort. I thank the sponsors of this resolution, Senators ALLEN and LANDRIEU, as well as all other cosponsors of this resolution, 60 in number altogether. I also want to thank Janet Langhart Cohen and her husband, our former colleague and fellow Mainer Bill Cohen. Their devotion to championing this cause helped to raise my awareness of this issue, and I am sure many of my colleagues have similar feelings.

For decades after the Civil War, too many of our fellow Americans suffered from the murderous actions of lynching bees and the fear and intimidation that accompanied those actions. People of all backgrounds fell victim to lynch mobs in nearly every State, but this burden fell especially hard on our fellow citizens in the African American community. Needless to say, the Senate bears no direct responsibility for these crimes, nor does this resolution suggest anything along those lines. However, the Senate's sin was one of omission. At critical junctures in our history, when the tide of the terror wrought by lynching could have been stemmed by passage of Federal legislation, the Senate single-handedly blocked such action. For this inaction, at times when this legislative body was needed the most, we in the Senate express our heart-felt apology to those whose suffering could have been avoided.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I would like to state my support for the nomination of Thomas B. Griffith to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. I believe that Mr. Griffith will serve the Federal judiciary with honor and distinction.

Mr. Griffith served as Senate Legal Counsel while I was majority leader, and I found him to be intelligent, honorable, and supremely qualified for this position on the Federal bench. As Senate Legal Counsel, he represented the Senate, its committees, Members, officers, and employees in litigation relating to their constitutional powers and privileges; advised committees about their investigatory powers and procedures; and represented the institutional interests of the Senate with honor.

He was appointed to that nonpartisan position by a unanimous resolution sponsored by the leaders on both sides of the aisle. In addition to his service to this body, Mr. Griffith has obtained extensive legal experience in private practice in civil, criminal and regulatory matters.

Mr. Griffith currently serves as assistant to the president and general counsel of Brigham Young University, a position he has held since August of 2000. As general counsel for BYU he is responsible for advising the university on all legal matters, including the management of all litigation involving the university.

Evidence of qualification can also be found in Mr. Griffith's outstanding academic record. He graduated summa cum laude from BYU, receiving high honors with distinction from its Honors Program. He later received his Juris Doctor from the University of Virginia School of Law and served on the editorial and articles review board of the Virginia Law Review.

Mr. Griffith has the support of a broad, bipartisan group of attorneys and law professors, including Abner Mikva, former Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

This nominee has also served on the American Bar Association Central European and Eurasian Law Initiative's Advisory Board. With the CEELI, he participated in the training of judges and lawyers in Croatia, Serbia, Russia, the Czech Republic and several other countries and has actively worked to establish a regional judicial training institute in Prague. His experiences in these unique endeavors should be of particular value during his tenure on the bench.

Additionally, between 1991 and 1995, Mr. Griffith dedicated hundreds of hours in the pro bono representation. He has also represented disadvantaged students in the public school system in North Carolina during due process hearings that accompanied disciplinary actions.

The American Bar Association has stated that Mr. Griffith is qualified for this position in the Federal judiciary, and I concur.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the resolution for consideration today details the Senate's shameful failure to pass anti-lynching legislation despite several attempts. Even as seven Presidents called for anti-lynching legislation, and the House three times passed such bills, the Senate has steadfastly refused to act.

At least 4,749 people were reported lynched between 1881 and 1964, with the vast majority of the victims being African-American. Shockingly, 99 percent of the perpetrators of these horrible acts escaped punishment from State or local authorities.

My State was one of only four or five States that did not have a lynching during that time. It wasn't just one or two States. It was every State in the Union, every State of the then-48 States with the exception of only four or five.

Even though my State did not have any, I cosponsored this resolution because I believe an apology is in order. I have cosponsored this resolution because an apology is surely in order, and I believe Senator LANDRIEU deserves great credit for bringing this important issue to the Senate's attention.

This public act of contrition is an important gesture today to take responsibility for the civil rights misdeeds of the past. But it is also an opportunity for Congress to show the country that we will not tolerate similar offenses. As we pass this resolution, it is fitting to carry this principle to the present and act in kind to prevent civil rights and human rights abuses occurring now in this country and around the world.

As we pass this resolution, we should also recognize that it is long past the time to pass the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, which would strengthen and extend our Federal hate crimes law. The Senate has repeatedly passed this bill, with 65 votes in the last Congress. The Republican leadership in the House, with the acquiescence of the Bush White House, has killed it. It is fitting that we apologize for past inaction, but that does not obviate the need to solve today's problems.

By the same token, we should reauthorize the Voting Rights Act in this Congress and not wait for 2007. We need to ensure that this law, one of the most important bills of the 20th century, remains in effect to safeguard the fundamental right of all citizens to participate fully in our democracy.

We should also remember the leading role this country played in drafting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which was modeled on our own Bill of Rights. As the country that, especially since the Second World War, has been looked to around the world as a beacon of hope for victims of arbitrary arrest, torture, and the denial of fundamental freedoms, we need to set a far better example than we are today. The atrocities and dehumanizing mistreatment that have occurred in U.S. military detention facilities in Afghanistan, Iraq and Guantanamo, are eerily reminiscent of some of the despicable acts described in this resolution. In addition, the continued assistance the administration is providing to foreign security forces that violate human rights, directly contradict the message we are trying to send with this resolution. We should not be satisfied with long overdue apologies. There are serious human rights problems that we need to address today.

A few years ago, I had the opportunity to examine the book "Without Sanctuary: Lynching Photography in America," which is referred to in this resolution. The haunting photographs in this book make plain the evil that lurked in this Nation not very long ago, and make it impossible to accept the fact that the individuals and mobs that committed these heinous acts by and large suffered no consequences. This resolution deserves our immediate approval, and I hope it provides some comfort to the descendants of the victims of these horrible crimes.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, it is every citizen's duty to know American history. One fact we must reckon with is that our experiment in self-government began in a compromise with the existence of slavery. As the American experiment went forward, protections granted to slavery in the Constitution—a document that never explicitly mentioned slavery—were dismantled. The cost was great: Brother fought against brother in the Civil War, largely over whether "the peculiar institution" would be allowed to thrive in the United States. When, at the end of that terrible conflict, the 13th amendment was put in the Constitution, slavery was abolished.

Yet while a pernicious institution was now, thankfully, illegal, its aftereffects were still felt in the former slave States. Postwar reconstruction was supposed to restore the natural and the civil rights of the former slaves and their descendants; but State and local authorities did not enforce those rights. The lynching of African Americans, and other forms of persecution, would persist into the 20th century, to the shame of every decent citizen.

Candidly facing this history is important. We must not forget the wrongs of the past—nor that we have had leaders willing to come forward and stand against those wrongs. From the Continental Congress passing the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, which banned slavery in the region northwest of the Ohio River, to the words and deeds of Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln, to the civil rights movement of the 1960s, brave men and women reaffirmed for all of us the principles of human equality and consent of the governed on which our Nation was founded.

Lincoln declared: "Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves, and under a just God, cannot long retain it."

I support Senate Resolution 39 in the name of honesty and national unity. As Senators representing Americans of all colors and creeds, we ought to give due recognition to past injustices. Even more importantly, we ought to live today by Lincoln's dictum. We must make sure our laws and our practices always reflect our belief in individual worth and equality under the law. This belief held in common is what has helped Americans—whatever their race, religion, or background—to succeed.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, the Senate has accomplished some wonderful things for this country. But sometimes this body makes grave mistakes. Today, by passing the resolution apologizing to the victims of lynching, we acknowledge one of the gravest. The use of the filibuster and other dilatory tactics to prevent the enactment of a law criminalizing lynching is among the darkest chapters in the history of the U.S. Senate. This resolution is a small but important step toward helping us come to terms with the Senate's disgraceful failure over a period of many years, at the beginning of this century, to protect our citizens. I congratulate Senators LANDRIEU and ALLEN for their work to bring this resolution before the Senate.

There are few crimes as despicable and contrary to the rule of law as lynching. The practice was born of hatred, racial or otherwise, and disdain for our criminal justice institutions. Unfortunately, lynching occurred throughout the United States, with cases documented in all but four states. From 1881 to 1964, there were 4,749 recorded victims of lynching. Of these victims, 3,452 were African Americans. Worse still, in nearly all cases of lynching before 1968, local and state law enforcement officials failed to investigate or prosecute the perpetrators.

An anti-lynching law would have allowed Federal prosecutors to bring the perpetrators of lynching to justice. On three occasions, the House passed anti-lynching bills, but each time a small group of Senators filibustered the proposals in the Senate.

Although a resolution cannot make up for the terrible injustice perpetrated against the victims of lynching and their families, this resolution is, at least, a positive step toward recognizing the Senate's past mistakes. There is much more that the Senate must do to address continuing racial injustice in this country. But this resolution is a worthy effort. I am proud to support it, and I am pleased that the Senate will pass it tonight.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President. I rise today in support of Senate Resolution 39.

This resolution acknowledges a dark period in the history of our Nation and the history of this institution. It was a time of racial intolerance, hatred and violence, that took the lives of 4,742 people, mostly African Americans, between 1882 and 1968. It was also a time when this body failed to fulfill its moral and constitutional responsibilities to pass significant legislation which may have prevented many of these deaths.

During this time, there were 284 victims of lynching in my home State of Arkansas. It was a crime that was documented in over 46 States. To properly punish those responsible, Congress tried on over 200 occasions to pass antilynching legislation but on each occasion it came to the Senate floor, it was defeated.

While we can never adequately express the deep sympathy and regret in our hearts, I am hopeful this long overdue acknowledgment and apology brings some sense of solace to the descendants of victims of lynching. This was a moment in our nation's history that was at odds with the principles upon which we were founded, and a moment at odds with our future. When we acknowledge the misdeeds of our past and demonstrate a willingness to learn the lessons from those actions, we build upon the many things that unite us all to make our Nation stronger and a better place to live.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, today we in the Senate are finally apologizing to the descendants of the nearly 5,000 victims of lynching, primarily African Americans, for our failure to enact antilynching legislation.

Even though the House of Representatives passed three strong antilynching measures between 1920 and 1940, the Senate filibustered all of those measures. This was wrong, and this resolution is long overdue.

Lynching, a widely acknowledged practice that continued until the middle of the 20th century, was a shameful chapter in our history. It was mob justice at its most heinous, motivated by racial and ethnic hatred. And it was a national problem occurring in all but four States in our country.

While passing this apology is important, it not going to right every wrong. And it does not absolve us of our responsibility to continue to work to provide justice in American society.

Justice at the polls for those who are made to stand in line for hours to exercise their right to vote.

Justice in the schools so that every child has an equal educational opportunity.

Justice in the workplace so that no worker will face discrimination.

Let us use this opportunity not only to apologize for a shameful injustice but to dedicate ourselves to eradicating the remaining injustices in our society.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am here to speak on the Senate's need to redress a past wrong. For more than 6 decades, the Senate attempted to pass legislation outlawing the terrible act of lynching. And for more than six decades, against the wishes of many Presidents and a majority of Congressmen and Senators, a small minority of Senators prevented any antilynching legislation from passing this body. Three times the House passed bills with severe penalties for perpetrators of this crime, and three times companion bills failed to garner enough support to stop a filibuster in the Senate. Today, it is time for atonement—and for a belated apology on behalf of the United States Senate.

My colleagues and I have drafted this resolution to apologize for the past mistakes of this governing body. This terrible crime was a widespread phenomenon in the late 19th century and throughout the first half of the 20 century. It was practiced in some 46 states.

Mark Twain once termed lynching as an "epidemic of bloody insanities." Compounding the tragedy of lynching is that fact that some 99 percent of the perpetrators of these crimes failed to receive any punishment for their actions.

This resolution cannot make up for the Senate's past failures, but it will serve as a statement of remorse from this body. It has been said that one cannot judge the past through the lens of the present, but lynching should have been viewed as a crime in any time. The Senate, through this legislation, apologizes for its past mistakes, and seeks to redress the failure of this body to protect Americans from violent and sadistic behavior.

No longer will this body permit an "epidemic of bloody insanities" to overtake this Nation.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I would like to express my support for Senate passage of S. Res. 39, a resolution of apology for the Senate's failure to pass anti-lynching legislation.

Some may wonder about the need to pass this resolution concerning events that occurred decades ago. I believe it is important that light be shown upon, and a discussion occur, about these horrific events. As the famous saying goes, "Those who do not know history are doomed to repeat it." There were almost 5,000 documented cases of mob lynching in the United States since the Civil War. It is important to note that many historians believe this number should be doubled to include the undocumented cases that occurred.

Lynchings occurred almost everywhere in the United States, and were in many cases examples of so-called mob justice which thwarted the decisions of or shortcut the American judicial system. Despite the national scope of these events, the Senate refused to pass anti-lynching legislation that would provide greater protection to innocent victims and bring the guilty to justice.

While we cannot reverse the decisions made by previous Senates, we can at the very least, offer our apologies and highlight this shameful period in American history. Only by exposing these terrible events, discussing how they occurred, and learning from them can we hope to avoid repeating them in the future.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, today the Senate acknowledges the dark side of our history. We apologize for a terrible wrong—the Senate's repeated failure to adopt anti-lynching legislation. This legislation is long, long overdue. I join my colleagues in offering this resolution as a way of saying how profoundly sorry we are that the Senate did not act decades earlier—when action might have saved lives. We also recommit ourselves to ensuring that this will never happen again.

The horrific practice of lynching is a stain on our Nation—and on our souls. There were over 4,700 documented lynchings in the United States. There were 29 documented lynchings in Maryland. These lynchings were public events, with members of the community colluding—either directly or indirectly—in this horrifying practice. It was no accident that they made them public—they were sending a message to other African Americans in the community. These crimes left thousands of people dead and families and communities scarred. Yet 99 percent of these murderers were never arrested or tried for their crimes.

For many in Maryland, the history of lynchings is not an abstraction—it is the history of their family or their community. The Washington Post reported about a 1906 lynching in Annapolis, where Henry Davis was lynched on a bluff near College Creek just days before Christmas. There was George Armwood, who was lynched and burned by a mob in Princess Anne's County, and King Davis—who was lynched in Brooklyn, MD on Christmas Day in 1911. Many institutions throughout the Nation have tried to document the extent of this racial violence—but so many incidents went unreported that we will never have a true account of how many African Americans were murdered.

Billie Holiday, a Baltimore native, tried to capture the despicable practice of lynching in her 1939 song "Strange Fruit." Her career suffered because of the painful honesty of this song. Her record label refused to record it, and some of her concerts were cancelled. Yet Holiday's perseverance turned "Strange Fruit" into one of the "most influential protest songs ever written" and an inspiration for those fighting for racial justice.

The Senate tried several times to put an end to this monstrous practice by outlawing it, but each time the measure died. This is a horrific failure that cost American lives. This failure will always be a scar on the record of the United States Senate.

Today we apologize for this tragedy, though no action now can right this wrong. Although we acknowledge this dark side of our history, we cannot and should not want to erase it. We must ensure that it serves as a lesson about a time when we failed to protect individual rights and preserve freedom.

This legislation is important to recognizing the evil of lynching and the failure of government to protect its citizens. It also stands as a symbol of our commitment to move our Nation forward so we can truly be a symbol of democracy.

Next week in Baltimore, we will open the Reginald Lewis Museum of African American History and Culture. It will be a proud day—the celebration of a strong and proud history that has made our Nation great. This museum documents the courageous journeys toward freedom and self-determination for African Americans in Maryland and in America. Yet history must also acknowledge this dark side of our history. We must educate the next generations about the proud history, and mighty struggle that African Americans have endured in the United States.

Today, this resolution stands as a painful reminder of that history. Yet it should also stand as a guiding principle—that we must always fight to protect the rights of all Americans. This resolution acknowledges that the Senate was wrong when it failed to enact anti-lynching laws. But it also empowers us to move forward to do all that we can to strengthen opportunity for all Americans, to fight discrimination in every form and to ensure that we vigorously protect the rights of all Americans.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, this past February, I introduced the resolution celebrating Black History Month that follows these remarks. Thirty five other Senators have joined me in this effort. I offered this resolution in the spirit of my late friend Alex Haley, who lived his life by the words “Find the Good and Praise It”. These six words are etched on his tombstone in the front yard of his grandparents’ home in Henning, TN. When Alex was a boy, he would sit on the front porch steps of that home on summer evenings listening to his great aunts rock in their chairs and tell the stories that eventually became Roots, the story of the struggle for freedom and equality.

It is in that spirit that the Black History Month resolution honors the contributions of African Americans throughout our history, recommitments the United States Senate to the goals of liberty and equal opportunity for every American, condemns the horrors of slavery, lynching, segregation, and other instances in which our country has failed to measure up to its noble goals, and pledges to work to improve educational, health, and job opportunities for African Americans and for all Americans.

African Americans were brought forcibly to these shores in the 17th century. From that dark beginning, however, these men and women and their descendants have overcome great obstacles. They continue to do so, and have taken a prominent place among the many people of diverse backgrounds who have come together here to form a single nation. African Americans have made and continue to make significant contributions to the economic, educational, political, artistic, literary, scientific, and technological advancement of the United States of America.

Black History Month, and this discussion in the Senate today, offer an opportunity to remind ourselves that the United States of America is a work in progress. Ours is the story of a people establishing high ideals, and then struggling to reach them, often falling short, rarely achieving them, but always recommitting ourselves to trying again. This is why we continue to say that anything is possible in America, that no child shall be left behind, and that we will pay any price to defend freedom, although we well know that we will never quite reach such lofty ideals.

Perhaps the most ambitious of our goals is the proposition, expressed in the Declaration of Independence, that “all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness. . . .” Our most conspicuous failure to reach this goal is the treatment of African Americans. Slavery, lynching, and segregation are all disgraceful examples of times when this Nation failed African Americans, when we failed to live up to our own promise of that fundamental truth that all men are created equal.

However, for almost every time that we have failed, we have then struggled to come to terms with the disappointment of that failure and recommitted ourselves to trying again. Where there once was slavery, we enacted the 13th and 14th amendments abolishing slavery and declaring equal protection under the law for all races. After segregation, came Brown v. Board of Education and the Voting Rights Act. There are so many moments like these in our history. We should celebrate these moments, but we should not stop there. We celebrate and remember our history so that we can learn its lessons and apply them today. Today’s wrongs are begging for attention. African Americans in this country face significant and often crippling disparities in education, health care, quality of life, and other areas where the Federal Government can play a role.

There are different ways to acknowledge those times when Americans have failed to live up to our lofty goals. The Senators from Louisiana and Virginia, who are also co-sponsors of our Black History Month resolution, have chosen to apologize for the actions of some earlier Senators as a way of expressing their revulsion to lynching. I also condemn lynching, and this Black History Month resolution condemns lynching. But, rather than begin to catalog and apologize for all those times that some Americans have failed to reach our goals, I prefer to look ahead. I prefer to look to correct current injustices rather than to look to the past. Maya Angelou once wrote, “History, despite its wrenching pain, cannot be unlived, but if faced with courage, need not be lived again.”

There is no resolution of apology that we can pass today that will teach one more child to read, prevent one more case of AIDS, or stop one more violent crime. The best way for the United States Senate to condemn lynching is to get to work on legislation that would offer African Americans and other Americans better access to good schools, quality health care and decent jobs. By joining together in our Black History Month resolution, 35 members of this body commit ourselves to do just that, to find more ways to look to the future, and to continue to contribute to this work in progress that is the United States of America.

I don’t know what my friend Alex Haley would say about this Senate resolution or that Senate resolution. But I do know how he celebrated Black History Month. He told wonderful stories about African Americans and other Americans who believed in the struggle for freedom and the struggle for equality; he minced no words in describing the terrible injustices they overcame. He said to children that they were living in a wonderful country of great goals, and that while many in the past often had failed to reach those goals, that we Americans always recommit ourselves to keep trying.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the articulate and poignant remarks of the junior Senator from Tennessee. He is absolutely right, of course, that the era of widespread lynching in our nation’s history is deplorable. And he is right that we must look to the future, to ensure that such crimes are never again allowed to occur.

There are different ways to acknowledge those times when Americans have failed to achieve the goals we have set for ourselves. The Senator from Tennessee quotes Maya Angelou, who once wrote, “History, despite its wrenching pain, cannot be unlived, but if faced with courage, need not be lived again.” Indeed, let us learn from the past, and look forward with such courage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ISAKSON). The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I know we have other Senators on their way to the Chamber to speak.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I am here tonight on behalf of my colleague from Virginia, Senator ALLEN, and all of our colleagues who participated in the debate to close out this evening on this very important and historic resolution, S. Res. 39, which has apologized formally, officially, and with great sincerity to the thousands of victims of lynching and to their descendants. It was, as was stated most eloquently and passionately on this floor, a very dark chapter, indeed, in American history, but a real mark against this Senate that, despite the repeated pleas of the victims and their families, thousands of Americans, the House of Representatives, and seven Presidents, of both parties, the Senate failed to act.

Tonight the Senate has admitted its mistake and has taken a very positive step in admitting failure so that we can have a brighter future. I know that many of these victims and their families—"survivors" is really a better word—have triumphed against this evil. Many were African Americans, but they were people of all different races and religious backgrounds. Many of them were here tonight and have been with us all day today.

I know their names are part of the record, but again they were James Cameron, 91 years old, a victim of lynching who miraculously survived to tell his story; Doria Johnson, the great-granddaughter of Anthony Crawford—Grandpa Crawford, as he has been called—from Abbeville, SC—what a story that family has to tell. Dan Distel, the great-grandson of Ida Wells. What a brave and historic journalist she was. In the face of literally constant threats to her life, she continued to write. What a role model for journalists everywhere of the courage of what it really takes to tell a story. And she did it.

We had many other family members and history professors with us today. There was a tremendous effort that enabled us to get to the floor tonight. As I wrap up, I want to again thank the staff. I thank my staff, including Jason Matthews, my deputy chief of staff; Kathleen Strottman, legislative director; Nash Molpus, who is with me on the floor. Our staff has been very helpful. Senator ALLEN's staff has also been remarkable and so many have contributed to this effort.

I had many quotes to choose from, Mr. President, to end tonight. Really, there were hundreds of them that would be appropriate. But one was especially appropriate, for the close of this debate because, while it ends one chapter, it begins many new chapters in the history of our Nation. The woman I will quote from is one I have admired my whole life. I have read much about her and have been taught a lot about her. I will read this quote from this particular woman because it took guts to say what she did, at a time when people in America didn't want to hear it. This came at a time when people didn't want to hear what women had to say, generally, about any subject, let alone the subject of injustice and intolerance not only in our Nation but the world.

The woman I will quote is Eleanor Roosevelt, who actually led a group of descendants into this Chamber in 1938 to urge the Senate, hopefully by their presence, to act—men and women who came with their own being, their own bodies to try to tell the Senate what you are reading about isn't true; these are innocent people. Eleanor Roosevelt escorted them to this Chamber and, of course, through all of their mighty efforts, actions were not taken, but not through any fault of hers. What I want to quote is what she wrote about universal human rights. I read this as a young legislator. Of course, we read lots of things, and some things stick and some don't. This particular quote is seared into my heart. I try to remember it every chance I get. I read it often, and I would like to read it tonight because it is very relevant to the debate that we have had. She wrote:

Where, after all, do universal human rights begin? In small places, close to home—so close and so small they cannot be seen on any maps of the world. Yet they are the world of the individual person, the neighborhood he lives in, the school or college he attends, the factory, farm, or office where he works. Such are the places where every man, woman, and child seeks equal justice, equal opportunity, equal dignity without discrimination. Unless these rights have meaning there, they have little meaning anywhere. Without concerted citizen action to uphold them close at home, we shall look for them in vain in the larger world.

We have heard stories today—hundreds of stories about these small places close to home—trees in a public square, river banks, levees, streets, alleys, open fields, behind school buildings, and in front of stores. This is where people want to experience dignity and justice. Some of these towns are so little they may still not be on any map of the United States. Maybe in some of these towns—because of what happened in the past—there are very few people who live there. And some of these places are quite large, where you can find them on the map. I think it is instructive for the Senate, as we make this sincere apology tonight, that we really take a breath and be very introspective to think about where these small places are in America, where these places of any size are in America, and recommit ourselves to be honest about our failings and our shortcomings, to be honest about the fact that we are not always as courageous as we should be.

But when we come to a point where we know we made the wrong decision, we didn't act in the best interests of our country or the American citizens who look to us for their protection and their support, we should at least be able to sincerely say we are sorry. That is what we did tonight. I thank Eleanor Roosevelt. I am forever grateful for her great leadership for the country and for thousands of Americans, people of all races, who advocated for justice and freedom at great expense to their own life—which is not what most of us experience today, gratefully—with great expense to their reputation, their livelihood. She was really not understood or appreciated in the world in which she lived.

There were many children in the Senate today, these children and great, great, great-grandchildren. Some of the victims and some of the journalists who have written about this in the past were here. Let's make sure they know the truth and they know that tonight we apologize.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the presentations that have been made on the floor and wish to be associated with the sentiments involved.

I come from a State that does not have a history of lynchings, but that does not mean I should be absolved from the concern that all Americans should have over the lynchings that have occurred. I note that it was the filibuster that made it possible for the Senate to be the body that blocked this legislation in the past. I would hope that in the future, we would all realize that the filibuster should be used for more beneficial purposes than that.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IMPORTANCE OF CONSULTATION ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I spoke on the Senate floor last week about the benefits to all if the President were to consult with Members of the Senate from both sides of the aisle on important judicial nominations. I return today to emphasize again the significance of meaningful consultation on these nominations because it bears repeating given what is at stake for the Senate, the judiciary and this country.

In a few more days the United States Supreme Court will complete its term. Last year the chief justice noted publicly that at the age of 80, one thinks about retirement. I get to see the chief from time to time in connection with his work for the Judicial Conference and the Smithsonian Institution. Sometimes we see each other in Vermont or en route there, and I am struck every time by his commitment. I marvel at him. I think that his participation at the inauguration earlier this year sent a powerful positive message to the country. I know that the chief justice will retire when he decides that he should, not before. He has earned that right. I have great respect and affection for him and he is in our prayers.

In light of the age and health of our Supreme Court justices, speculation is accelerating about the potential for a Supreme Court vacancy this summer. In advance of any such vacancy, I have called upon the President to follow the constructive and successful examples set by previous Presidents of both parties who engaged in meaningful consultation with Members of the Senate before selecting a nominee. This decision is too important to all Americans to be unnecessarily embroiled in partisan politics.

I said again last week that should a vacancy arise, I stand ready to work with President Bush to help him select a nominee to the Supreme Court who can unite Americans. I have urged consultation and cooperation for 4 years and have reached out, again, over the last several months to this President. I hope that if a vacancy does arise he will finally turn away from his past practices, consult with us and work with us.

Some Presidents, including most recently President Clinton, found consultation with the Senate in advance of a nomination most beneficial in helping lay the foundation for successful nominations. President Reagan, on the other hand, disregarded the advice offered by Senate Democratic leaders and chose a controversial, divisive nominee who was ultimately rejected by the full Senate.

In his recent book, "Square Peg," Senator HATCH recounts how in 1993, as the ranking minority member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, he advised President Clinton about possible Supreme Court nominees. In his book, Senator HATCH wrote that he warned President Clinton away from a nominee whose confirmation he believed "would not be easy." Senator HATCH goes on to describe how he suggested the names of Stephen Breyer and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, both of whom were eventually nominated and confirmed "with relative ease." Indeed, 96 Senators voted in favor of Justice Ginsburg's confirmation, and only 3 Senators voted against; Justice Breyer received 87 affirmative votes, and only 9 Senators voted against.

The Constitution provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint" judges. For advice to be meaningful it needs to be informed and shared among those providing it.

Those recent examples are not the only examples of effective and meaningful consultation with the Senate. According to historians, almost 150 years ago, in 1869, President Grant appointed Edwin Stanton to the Supreme Court in response to a petition from a majority of the Senate and the House. More than 70 years ago, in 1932, President Hoover consulted with Senator William E. Borah regarding who he should nominate to succeed Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. According to historical reports, as has been confirmed by Republican Senators, Senator Borah counseled the President to select Benjamin Cardozo from his list of potential nominees.

Bipartisan consultation would not only make any Supreme Court selection a better one, it would also reassure the Senate and the American people that the process of selecting a Supreme Court justice has not become politicized.

Recently, a bipartisan group of 14 Senators joined together to avert an unnecessary showdown in the Senate over the effort to invoke the "nuclear option." That would have changed 200 years of Senate tradition and the protection of minority rights. In their agreement the bipartisan coalition say the following:

We believe that, under Article II, Section 2, of the United States Constitution, the word "Advice" speaks to consultation between the Senate and the President with regard to the use of the President's power to make nominations. We encourage the Executive branch of government to consult with members of the Senate, both Democratic and Republican, prior to submitting a judicial nomination to the Senate for consideration.

Such a return to the early practices of our government may well serve to reduce the rancor that unfortunately accompanies the advice and consent process in the Senate.

We firmly believe this agreement is consistent with the traditions of the United States Senate that we as Senators seek to uphold.

I agree. Bipartisan consultation is consistent with the traditions of the Senate and would return us to practices that have served the country well. They are right to urge greater consultation on judicial nominations.

In that regard, I was pleased to see the President respond to a question at a news conference 2 weeks ago by agreeing to consult with the Senate about his nomination should a vacancy arise on the Supreme Court. I see that as a positive development. More troubling are reports that the White House plan does not include meaningful consultation at all, but a "war room" and some sort of preemptive contact to allow them to pretend they consulted without anything akin to the kind of meaningful consultation this important matter deserves. If the White House intends to follow that type of plan, it would be most unfortunate, unwise and counterproductive.

Though the landscape ahead is sown with the potential for controversy and contention should a vacancy arise on the Supreme Court, confrontation is unnecessary. Consensus should be our mutual goal. I would hope that the President's objective will not be to send the Senate nominees so polarizing that their confirmations are eked out in narrow margins. This would come at a steep and gratuitous price that the entire Nation would have to pay in needless division. It would serve the country better to choose a qualified consensus candidate who can be broadly supported by the public and by the Senate.

The process begins with the President. He is the only participant in the process who can nominate candidates to fill Supreme Court vacancies. If there is a vacancy, the decisions made in the White House will determine whether the nominee chosen will unite the Nation or will divide the Nation. The power to avoid political warfare with regard to the Supreme Court is in the hands of the President. No one in the Senate is spoiling for a fight. Only one person will decide whether there will be a divisive or unifying process and nomination. If consensus is a goal, bipartisan consultation will help achieve it. I believe that is what the American people want and what they deserve.

If the President chooses a Supreme Court nominee because of that nominee's ideology or record of activism in the hopes that he or she will deliver political victories, the President will have done so knowing that he is starting a confirmation confrontation. The Supreme Court should not be an arm of the Republican Party, nor should it be a wing of the Democratic Party. If the right-wing activists who were disappointed that the nuclear option was averted convince the President to choose a divisive nominee, they will not prevail without a difficult Senate battle. And if they do, what will they have wrought? The American people will be the losers: The legitimacy of the judiciary will have suffered a damaging blow from which it may not soon recover. Such a contest would itself confirm that the Supreme Court is just another setting for partisan contests and partisan outcomes. People will perceive the Federal courts as places in which "the fix is in."

Our Constitution establishes an independent Federal judiciary to be a bulwark of individual liberty against incursions or expansions of power by the political branches. That independence is at grave risk when a President seeks to pack the courts with activists from either side of the political spectrum. Even if successful, such an effort would lead to decision-making based on politics and forever diminish public confidence in our justice system.

The American people will cheer if the President chooses someone who unifies the Nation. This is not the time and a vacancy on this Supreme Court is not the setting in which to accentuate the political and ideological division within our country. In our lifetimes, there has never been a greater need for a unifying pick for the Supreme Court. At a time when too many partisans seem fixated on devising strategies to force the Senate to confirm the most extreme candidate with the least number of votes possible, I have been urging cooperation and consultation to bring the country together. There is no more important opportunity than this to lead the Nation in a direction of cooperation and unity.

The independence of the Federal judiciary is critical to our American concept of justice for all. We all want Justices who exhibit the kind of fidelity to the law that we all respect. We want them to have a strong commitment to our shared constitutional values of individual liberties and equal protection. We expect them to have had a demonstrated record of commitment to equal rights. There are many conservatives who can meet these criteria and who are not rigid ideologues.

This is a difficult time for our country and we face many challenges. Providing adequate health care for all Americans, improving the economic prospects of Americans, defending against threats, the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the continuing upheaval and American military presence in Iraq, are all fundamental matters on which we need to improve. It is my hope that we can work together on many issues important to the American people, including maintaining a fair and independent judiciary. I am confident that a smooth nomination and confirmation process can be developed on a bipartisan basis if we work together. The American people we represent and serve are entitled to no less.

GUANTANAMO BAY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, it has been well over 3 years since the administration began to hold detainees at the U.S. Naval Base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. The first batch of then only 20 detainees arrived in January 2002. There are now more than 500 detainees at Guantanamo. I cannot give you an exact number because our own Government refused to tell the American people an exact number.

In fact, there is much that we do not know about our Government's activities at Guantanamo. From the start, the administration's answer to every question regarding this secret detention facility has been: Trust us. Trust us that we know the law and that we will comply with it. Trust us to treat detainees humanely and in accordance with our laws and treaties and the great and wonderful traditions of the United States. Trust us that Guantanamo will make Americans safer. More than 3 years later, the one thing we know for sure about Guantanamo is that any trust we may have had was misplaced.

First, the administration either did not know or did not follow the law. The list of reversals of this administration's policies and practices at Guantanamo is long. From the Supreme Court's rejection of the claim that Guantanamo Bay is a land of legal limbo or, as one administration official said, "the legal equivalent of outer space," to a recent district court holding that the current military commission regulations are unlawful, there is much that needs attention and correction.

Secondly, the administration has not lived up to its promise to treat detainees humanely. Even with the administration's continuing stonewalling against any independent investigation into the mistreatment of detainees, we continue to learn of more abuses on an almost daily basis. Does anybody question that if American POWs were being treated in this way, we would have demonstrations in the streets of America, and everybody from the President down through every single Member of Congress would be up in arms and calling for changes? But when these actions take place at Guantanamo, the administration refuses to acknowledge any wrongdoing. The dangerous implications that this posture has for our own troops and citizens becomes more obvious every day.

Third, and this is the bottom line: Guantanamo has not made our country safer. It is increasingly clear that the administration's policies have seriously damaged our reputation in the world, and they are making us less safe. The stain of Guantanamo has become the primary recruiting tool for our enemies. President Bush often speaks of spreading Democratic values across the Middle East, but Guantanamo is not a reflection of the values that he has encourages other nations to adopt. The United States has often criticized other nations for operating secret prisons where detainees are hidden away and denied any meaningful opportunity to contest their detention. Now we have our own such prisons. Even if the administration fails to see the hypocrisy of this situation, I can assure you, the rest of the world does not.

Guantanamo Bay, in addition to Abu Ghraib, is a national disgrace and international embarrassment to us, to our country's ideals, and a festering threat to our security. It is a legal black hole that dishonors the principles of a great nation. America was once very rightly viewed as a leader in human rights and the rule of law, but Guantanamo has drained our leadership, our credibility, and the world's good will for America at alarming rates. Even our closest allies cannot condone the policies embraced by this Government, not to mention the significant damage that has been caused by allegations and proven incidents of detainee abuse in Iraq, Afghanistan, and Guantanamo. These are not the policies of a great and good nation such as ours. This is not the American system of justice that I have grown up honoring and appreciating.

Within the last 2 weeks, I was at a meeting of NATO parliamentarians. These are parliamentarians from the countries that are our closest allies. They are members of the NATO alliance with the United States and proud to be part of that alliance. Every one of them I spoke with said the same thing: How can America continue to be a beacon for democracy with the stain of Guantanamo? Some of these countries were countries that originally had been behind the Iron Curtain. With the efforts of this administration and the Clinton administration, we see them now as proud members of NATO. They look to the United States for leadership, and they ask us: Why Guantanamo?

The 9/11 Commission understood that military strength alone is not sufficient to defend our Nation against terrorism. There has to be a role for working cooperatively with the rest of the world. In its report, the Commission said that the Government "must define what the message is, what it stands for. We should offer an example of moral leadership in the world, committed to treat people humanely, abide by the rule of law, and be generous and caring to our neighbors." Guantanamo Bay is not the way to do this.

The administration got itself into this mess because it refused to accept Congress as a partner in its so-called war on terror and insisted on acting unilaterally. It would not even involve Congress, even though Congress is controlled by members of the President's party. Following the start of combat in Afghanistan in October 2001, I urged President Bush to work with Congress to fashion appropriate rules and procedures for detaining and punishing suspected terrorists. All of us agree, if you have terrorists, if it is proven they are terrorists, they should be detained and punished. As I noted at the time, our Government is at its strongest when the executive and legislative branches of Government act in concert. Unfortunately, the President was determined to go it alone.

Up until now, this Republican-led Congress has been content to go along for the ride. As the administration dug itself deeper and deeper into a hole, we stood idly by. Instead of providing checks and balances, we simply wrote one blank check after another.

This has to change. The Constitution provides that Congress, not the President, has the power to "make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water." Congress, not the President, has the power to "define and punish Offenses against the Law of Nations." And perhaps most importantly, Congress, not the President, has the power of the purse. Maybe each one of us should take a few moments and reread the Constitution that we are sworn to uphold.

What is the administration's plan for Guantanamo Bay, assuming there is one? What does the administration intend to do with the more than 500 detainees still imprisoned there? How many will be released and when? How many will be charged and tried and when?

The administration consistently insists that these detainees pose a threat to the safety of Americans. The Vice President said that the other day. If that is true, then one would have to assume we have credible evidence to support it. If there is such evidence, then let's prosecute these people. If we have the evidence, prosecute them.

But we also know that some of the detainees have been wrongly detained. I suspect there are others who have not yet been released against whom the evidence is weak at best. It is one thing if they are being detained in accordance with the Geneva Conventions. But if not, they do not belong there.

Guantanamo Bay is causing immeasurable damage to our reputation as a defender of democracy and beacon of human rights around the world. It is becoming a legal black hole, a rallying cry for our enemies, fueling hostilities against us and our policies.

We have always been able to say that those who strike out against us do not uphold the rule of law as we do. We have always been able to point out that the kind of actions they carry out are horrible, horrific. And every one of us, Democrat and Republican, have found them abhorrent and have said so.

Yet the administration has not articulated a coherent plan to repair the damage. Every one of us knows from what we hear around the world that we have been damaged by Guantanamo. Why carry out acts that do not follow our own laws, our own Constitution, our own tradition? We need a plan from the administration to repair this damage. The Congress has abdicated its oversight responsibility for far too long. The Administration has placed this nation in an untenable situation, and it is time for Congress to demand a way out.

Mr. President, as I said, this doesn't reflect the feeling of just the Democratic Senator from Vermont. Similar expressions have been made by Republicans and Democrats, leading people in this country, people I respect greatly, who point out what we all know—and maybe we don't like to talk about it—Guantanamo is a blot on the conscience of America—a good and great conscience, one that has been a shining beacon to so many countries. Let's not allow this blot. Let's take the steps necessary to erase it.

CONGRATULATIONS ZOE DELL NUTTER

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I rise to celebrate the remarkable life of one of Ohio's most extraordinary women, Zoe Dell Nutter, a person whom my wife Janet and I count among our very dearest friends.

Professional dancer and model, successful businesswoman, renowned aviatrix, newspaper columnist and generous philanthropist, Zoe Dell Nutter has been each of these and so much more.

Today, she has one more entry to her long list of credits, awards, and achievements—her 90th birthday. Zoe Dell's life has taken her to so many places, called her into so many fascinating career pursuits, driven her to give so much back to her community, State, and Nation, and, lastly, rewarded her with so many accolades, honors along the way that I could never do her story justice on this floor.

I will spend a moment describing the wonderful friendship Janet and I have shared with Zoe Dell. It was truly a friendship at first sight when we all met on a long day back in 1979. Erv and Zoe Dell were the loves of one another's eyes, true life partners who shared the same dreams, interests, and passions through their marriage. Janet and I were always so impressed with how supportive they were of one another and how proud and respectful they were of each other's careers. They had a genuine concern for their family, extended family, and community. Above all else, they were a truly devoted couple. And I know that the bond Janet and I forged with them is, in part, a reflection of the devotion to each other we have treasured over the 42 years of our marriage.

I would ask each of you here today to reflect on your own lives, and on those special friendships that are so vital to your happiness. Sometimes I think our fellow citizens do not realize that the most significant friendships enjoyed by those of us in public service are usually with people who are far removed from politics and governing. So it has been with the Nutters and the Voinovichs.

Of all the remarkable things Zoe Dell has done in her life, perhaps nothing else quite compares with her love for flying and her accomplishments both as a gifted aviatrix and a tireless champion of aviation. She first took to the skies in the 1940s, when women were not exactly encouraged to be pilots. Zoe Dell persevered and excelled. And in so doing, she helped make it possible for little girls around the world to add "aviation" to the list of dreams that they might dream.

One of Zoe Dell's greatest contributions to aviation was a dream of her own—a vision that the industry should have its own hall of fame. Because of her, I became interested, as Governor, in helping to make her dream a reality in Ohio. And why not? Let me repeat the names of some of America's foremost aviation pioneers: the Wright Brothers, John Glenn, Neil Armstrong, and, yes, Zoe Dell Nutter—Ohioans, one and all.

Janet and I worked tirelessly with Zoe Dell and Erv on the hall of fame project, but it was always Zoe Dell who was the heartbeat of the initiative. We were successful in making it a true public-private partnership and today the Aviation Hall of Fame in Dayton is a sparkling jewel in the crown of Ohio's contributions to aviation. Thank you, Zoe Dell, one more time, for your vision, for your commitment, and for your own numerous contributions to aviation.

Zoe Dell hung up her pilot's wings a number of years back. But I can guarantee you, she is wearing another set of wings that will be with her all the days of her life—angel's wings.

Janet and I treasure our friendship with Zoe Dell. And I am humbled to place this tribute into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, acknowledging the venerable milestones Zoe Dell Nutter has reached on this day, and, more importantly, a life so fully lived.

May she enjoy many more years of good health and God's blessing.

LATVIA, UKRAINE, RUSSIA, JORDAN AND IRAQ

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, over the Memorial Day recess my colleagues from Idaho and South Carolina joined me on a trip to Europe and the Middle East to review political and economic developments in emerging democracies, and U.S. security and foreign assistance activities that support the march of freedom in those regions. I want to take a brief moment to share with my colleagues some of the trip highlights.

Our first leg took us to Latvia, where Senators CRAPO and DEMINT and I met with senior government officials and President Vaira Vike-Freiberga. Although a young democracy, Latvia is unquestionably headed in the right direction. A painful and horrific past under Soviet occupation has seemingly steered in that country's national consciousness a drive and determination toward freedom and free markets. Not surprisingly, Latvian officials today are keenly aware of events in neighboring Russia, and expressed concern with what they perceive as growing authoritarianism in Moscow.

A member of NATO and the EU, Latvia recognizes that while it continues to make forward progress at home, including passage of important money-laundering legislation, it has an important role to play in the region and beyond. I again want to express my heartfelt appreciation to the people of Latvia for their support of military operations in Iraq and democracy in neighboring Belarus, Ukraine, and Georgia.

U.S. Ambassador Cathy Bailey and her staff, particularly Mark Draper, deserve praise for representing America's interests in Riga ably, continuing to strengthen U.S.-Latvian bilateral relations, and providing outstanding support throughout our visit, including setting up a meeting with the Belarusian opposition. I am particularly proud of Cathy as she is a Kentuckian; she is doing the Commonwealth proud.

From Latvia we traveled to Russia, where the contrast between the two countries was immediate. Although Moscow has physically changed since my last visit in 1993, a bumbling Soviet-era bureaucracy and suspicion of the United States unfortunately remain.

Cooperation on issues of mutual importance to the United States and Russia must continue, including countering terrorism, preventing the proliferation of weapons and materials of mass destruction, and dealing with the challenges of Iran and North Korea. However, concerns expressed in Latvia—and later in Ukraine—on the rollback of democracy in that country were underscored in a meeting we had with a dynamic member of Russia's Duma, and the 9-year prison sentence handed down to ex-YUKOS tycoon Mikhail Khodorkovsky while we were in Moscow.

I echo the calls by President Bush and Secretary of State Rice for greater support and respect for democracy and the rule of law by President Putin and the Russian Government. I would only add that with respect to regional relations, it is in Russia's interest that its neighbors are democratic. It is my view that greater freedom can provide the stability that the Kremlin apparently seeks in Ukraine, Georgia and elsewhere.

In Ukraine, we met with a broad range of government and former government officials to discuss the Orange Revolution, and the need for critical economic reforms that Ukraine must implement in order to fulfill its aspirations for entry into the WTO, EU and NATO. While it is clear that President Yushchenko and Prime Minister Tymoshenko understand the hard work that lies ahead, they—and other key leaders—must keep their collective noses to the grindstone to implement economic reforms as quickly as possible.

As a long time Ukraine-watcher, it is my hope that Yushchenko and Tymoshenko do not repeat the mistakes of previous governments that led to massive corruption and political shenanigans following independence in 1991. The recent failure of the Rada to pass intellectual property rights legislation—which is essential to WTO entry—is a cause for concern. However, Ukrainians should know that America is ready and willing to help further freedom in their country. This was no more clearly demonstrated than through the $60 million provided for Ukraine in the recently passed emergency supplemental.

I know my fellow Senators will agree that U.S. Ambassador John Herbst and his staff deserve recognition for doing a great job. They made sure that our visit included differing views on the Orange Revolution, including those of former President Leonid Kravchuck and Yushchenko-challenger Viktor Yanukovich, both of whom were at dinner one night at the Ambassador's house, and had very different views, obviously, than those expressed by the President and Prime Minister.

From Ukraine we traveled to Jordan where we met with King Abdallah. We discussed regional issues, particularly Iraq and prospects for peace on the West Bank and Gaza. King Abdallah is clearly engaged on both issues and we appreciate that he continues to be a valued partner for peace.

Given aircraft mechanical problems, our visit to Iraq was somewhat abbreviated. Nonetheless, we departed Baghdad with an unmistakable conclusion: 2005 is a critical year for the future of democracy in that country—and for our own country's efforts to help the Iraqi people secure the blessings of liberty. The Iraqi people face a number of looming deadlines, including drafting a new constitution by August 15, holding a national referendum on the constitution by October 15, and conducting national elections to form a new government by December 15. So they have several deadlines ahead of them on the road to democracy. The participation of Sunni, Shiite and Kurdish representatives in this process is absolutely imperative. According to an Iraqi parliamentarian we met, the Iraqi people are up to this challenge. They should know that America will continue to stand with them.

In Baghdad, we met with David Satterfield, our Charge d'Affaires, General George Casey, and General David Petraeus. The view expressed by our general officers in Baghdad—that the Iraqi Army has made considerable progress—was shared by the Commander of the Second Marine Expeditionary Force in Fallujah, General Steve Johnson.

In Fallujah, we met with a task force of Marines determined that the heroic combat operations required to take the city should be followed by successful reconstruction efforts. They told us that Iraqi forces are combat ready, and determined in the face of enemy opposition. Recent press reports regarding Operation Matador, and the discovery of an insurgent underground bunker system, reveal only a small part of the great work that our forces are doing in Anbar province.

On a personal note, in Fallujah I was reunited with 2LT Joe Bilby of the Third Battalion, Eleventh Marine Regiment. This young officer once worked on my staff here in the Senate, heard the call of duty, and earned a commission in the Marine Corps. His unit is executing a mission critical to our success in Iraq. The people of Kentucky, and the rest of the country, should be proud of Lieutenant Bilby and his Marine band of brothers.

Let me close by pointing out that critical to the success of freedom in any country is strong and effective leadership that includes the political will to implement needed political, economic and legal reforms. As in previous years, my staff and I will be using this measurement as we put together the fiscal year 2006 State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs appropriations bill in the weeks to come.

CBO REPORT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, at the time Senate Report No. 109-78 was filed, the Congressional Budget Office report was not available. I ask unanimous consent that the report, which is now available, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE
Energy Policy Act of 2005—As ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on May 26, 2005

Summary: The legislation would authorize funding for several programs aimed at energy production, conservation, and research and development. It would authorize the use of energy savings performance contracts (ESPCs), make several changes to the regulatory framework governing the nation's electricity system, and establish a mandate for the use of renewable fuels.

Most of the bill's estimated costs would stem from changes in spending subject to appropriation. We estimate that implementing the bill would cost $5.1 billion in 2006 and $35.9 billion over the 2006-2010 period from appropriated funds, assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts.

CBO estimates that enacting the bill also would increase direct spending by $728 million over the 2005-2010 period but would reduce direct spending by $591 million over the 2005-2015 period. CBO estimates that enacting the bill would increase net revenues by $75 million in 2006 and would result in a net loss of revenues totaling $1.2 billion over the 2006-2010 period and $1.0 billion over the 2006-2015 period.

The bill contains numerous mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) that would affect both intergovernmental and private-sector entities.

CBO cannot determine the cost of all the mandates in the bill because several of the requirements established by the bill would hinge on future regulatory action about which information is not available. Though CBO cannot estimate the cost of each mandate, we expect that the total cost of private-sector mandates in the bill would exceed the annual threshold established in UMRA ($123 million in 2005, adjusted annually for inflation). That conclusion is based on our analysis of the renewable fuels standard, which would impose substantial costs on the motor fuels industry.

CBO estimates, however, that the total cost of complying with intergovernmental mandates in the bill would not exceed the threshold established in UMRA ($62 million in 2005, adjusted annually for inflation). The bill also would authorize numerous grants and initiatives that would benefit state, local, and tribal governments; any costs those governments incur for these projects and initiatives would result from complying with conditions for receiving this federal assistance.

Based on its review of the bill, CBO expects that the mandates contained in the bill's titles on renewable energy (title II), nuclear energy (title VI), electricity (title XII), and energy efficiency (title I) would have the greatest impact on private-sector entities and state and local governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimated budgetary impact of the legislation is shown in Table 1. The costs of this legislation fall within budget functions 270 (energy), 300 (natural resources and environment), 350 (agriculture), 450 (community and regional development) and 800 (general government).

Basis of estimate

For this estimate, CBO assumes that the Energy Policy Act of 2005 will be enacted near the end of fiscal year 2005. Additionally, CBO assumes that the authorized and necessary amounts will be appropriated for each year and that spending will follow historical rates for ongoing activities. Table 2 details the components of estimated spending subject to appropriation under the bill. (Table 3, provided later, details the bill's direct spending effects.)

Spending subject to appropriation—Overview

The bill contains several provisions that specify amounts authorized to be appropriated for programs related to energy research, development, production, and conservation. Additionally, the bill would authorize unspecified amounts to be appropriated for energy conservation, loan guarantees for certain energy facilities and projects to develop innovative technologies, incentives to use renewable energy, and several other energy programs, studies, and reports. Assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts, CBO estimates that implementing these provisions would cost $5.1 billion in 2006 and $35.9 billion over the 2006–2010 period. The following two sections detail the costs of specified and estimated authoriza-tions. (A discussion of direct spending and revenue effects follows the next two sections.)

¹ The 2005 amount is the amount appropriated for that year for energy conservation, development, production, and science programs.

Spending subject to appropriation: specified authorizations

The legislation would specifically authorize the appropriation of $36.6 billion over the next five years for several energy-related programs. Assuming appropriation of the authorized amounts, CBO estimates that implementing the bill's programs with specified authorizations would cost $4.8 billion in 2006 and $34.3 billion over the 2006–2010 period. That estimate includes:

Nearly $2.5 billion for the Department of Energy's (DOE's) energy conservation programs (title I);

Nearly $700 million for renewable energy grants and research projects (title II);

$3.3 billion for programs related to federal oil and gas resources and for financial assistance to coastal states (title III);

$400 million to research and demonstrate new technologies that use coal (title IV);

$134 million for programs to research and develop energy resources on Indian lands (title V);

About $540 million for a new program to research, develop, design, construct, and operate an Advanced Reactor Hydrogen Cogeneration Project and $16 million for a nuclear decommissioning project in Arkansas (title VI);

About $450 million for research and demonstration of vehicles that use alternative transportation fuels (title VII);

$2.8 billion for research, development, and demonstration of hydrogen-based fuel technologies and infrastructure for hydrogen fuels (title VIII);

$23 billion to research energy efficiency technologies, renewable energy sources, fossil energy development, basic science, and other energy sources and new technologies (title IX);

$45 million to promote a technology infrastructure program and support small business participation in DOE research activities (title X);

About $300 million for training personnel to work in the energy technology industry, and providing awards and fellowships in science, mathematics, and energy education (title XI); and

About $40 million for incentive payments for advanced power technologies (title XII).

Spending subject to appropriation: Estimated authorizations

Based on information from DOE, the Department of the Interior (DOI), the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), other affected agencies, and industry sources, CBO estimates that implementing the provisions of the bill that are subject to appropriation and have no specified authorization level would cost $325 million in 2006 and $1.6 billion over the 2006–2010 period. Key components of this estimate are described below.

Energy Conservation at Federal Agencies. Title I would amend several energy conservation goals and requirements that apply to the federal government. CBO estimates that implementing those provisions would cost $500 million over the 2006–2010 period, subject to appropriation of the necessary amounts. Most of those goals, such as reducing energy use by 2 percent per year relative to 2003 consumption and purchasing energy-efficient products when economical, are being pursued under current executive orders. Where practical, the bill would require that hourly electricity meters be installed at all federal buildings by 2012. Such meters would provide data at least once daily and measure hourly consumption of electricity. The data would be available to facility energy managers.

Based on information from the DOE, we assume that it would only be economical to meter 20 percent of the government's inventory of 500,000 buildings and that installing meters would cost, on average, $4,000 per building. We assume that meters would be installed in 20,000 buildings per year until 2012, when the project would be complete. We estimate that implementing the metering provisions of the legislation would cost $57 million in 2006 and $323 million over the 2006–2010 period. CBO estimates that other requirements in this title, such as providing technical assistance to states, establishing new programs and rules for making products more energy-efficient, and monitoring the equipment installed using energy savings performance contracts would cost $19 million in 2006 and $177 million over the next five years.

Based on experience in the private sector, metering the hourly electricity use of buildings can lead to reduced energy consumption and reduce costs enough to recoup the cost of installing meters within two to four years. It is possible that this requirement could lead to a future reduction in appropriations for energy use in federal buildings, but any such savings would depend on how metering information is used by federal agencies. Additionally, metering can reveal where energy use is high, but capital investment and other changes in how federal buildings consume energy would likely be needed to achieve savings. In any case, any savings are not likely to be significant over the next five years because most of the new metering and required capital investment would not be completed until the end of that period or after 2010.

Loan Guarantees for Innovative Technologies. The bill would establish a credit assistance program for energy production technologies that reduce greenhouse gas emissions and employ new or significantly improved technologies over those currently available. Currently, DOE has no authority to provide credit assistance and has developed no plans for how it would use this authority. For this estimate, we assume DOE would provide an 80 percent guarantee of loans worth about $3.75 billion over the 2006–2010 period. Assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts, CBO estimates that implementing this provision would cost $400 million over the 2006–2010 period and an additional $200 million after that. CBO assumes—after providing loan guarantees for $3.75 billion worth of projects over the next five years—that DOE's credit assistance under the program would probably accelerate after that period as the department gained experience. The department could offer more or less credit assistance than we have assumed here. All costs of such credit assistance would be subject to appropriation.

Description of Loan Guarantee Program. The bill would provide DOE with broad authority to make loan guarantees to a variety of energy projects, ranging from renewable energy systems, to advanced nuclear energy facilities, integrated coal gasification combined-cycle technology, petroleum coke gasification technology, and carbon sequestration technology, as well as other new technologies. The legislation sets no limits on the number of projects, or total principal that could be guaranteed, nor does it indicate any priority for one type of project over another.

Under the bill, DOE could not guarantee loans for more than 80 percent of a project's cost; it could sell, manage, or hire contractors to take over a facility to recoup losses in the event of a default, or it could take over a loan and make payments on behalf of borrowers prior to a default. Such payments could result in DOE effectively providing a direct loan with as much as a 100 percent subsidy rate—essentially a grant—that could be used by the borrower to payoff its debts.

Under the Federal Credit Reform Act, funds must be appropriated in advance to cover the subsidy cost of loan guarantees, measured on a present value basis. The costs of such subsidies could vary widely depending on the terms of the contracts and the financial and technical risk associated with different types of projects. According to Standard and Poor's, the cumulative default risk for projects rated as speculative investments can range from about 20 percent to almost 60 percent, depending on a project's cash flows and contractual terms. Subsidy costs also are affected by amounts that could be recovered by the government in the event of default, which in turn depend on the value of the security backing the guarantee as well as contractual protections. For this estimate, CBO assumes that, over the next five years, DOE would not provide guarantees to projects with a subsidy cost greater than 20 percent.

The bill would authorize DOE to accept payments from borrowers sufficient to cover the subsidy cost of loan guarantees. However, because the technologies covered by the program would be new and would be seeking government backing, CBO expects that projects seeking a guarantee would not be in a position to fund the federal subsidy cost of a loan guarantee. The bill specifies that DOE shall charge fees to cover the costs of administering the credit program.

Types of Projects Guaranteed. The legislation contains general guidelines that projects must meet to qualify for credit assistance and specifies criteria for selecting at least two coal gasification projects. For purposes of this estimate, we assume that DOE would guarantee about $3 billion in coal gasification projects, which would include the two specified in the legislation and at least one other project. We also assume that the department would use the authority in the bill to provide loan guarantees for $625 million worth of renewable energy systems, such as biomass or geothermal electricity plants.

Coal Gasification. Gasification projects require large capital investments, ranging from over $500 million for a 400 megawatt gasification plant to $1 billion or more for a plant that would produce electric power and other fuels using petroleum coke. Such gasification technologies are not new—they have been tested and deployed to some extent in other countries—but they have not been proven economically competitive in the United States. Profitability would depend on numerous factors, including future electricity and fuel prices; the price, quality, and availability of feedstocks; and various regulatory approvals.

For this estimate, CBO assumes that DOE would provide an 80 percent guarantee on investments totaling about $3 billion over the next five years, which would include the planning and construction of the two coal gasification plants specifically mentioned in the legislation and additional investment in other clean coal technologies.

Given the current outlook for energy prices, CBO expects that the credit risk of gasification loans would likely fall within the middle of the range for speculative investments, but the risk of default could be higher or lower depending on the contract terms and specific technology. CBO estimates that loan guarantees for such projects would probably involve a 20 percent subsidy. Thus, we estimate that implementing this provision would cost $350 million over the 2006–2010 period, assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts. Additional outlays of $150 million would occur after 2010 as construction progressed on such projects.

Renewable Energy. The legislation also would authorize DOE to make loan guarantees for renewable energy projects such as biomass and geothermal sources for electricity generation. Such projects could range in cost from $10 million for a small 5 megawatt geothermal plant to $250 million for an ethanol production plant. We expect that subsidy rates for loans guaranteed under this title would be 20 percent. For this estimate, we assume that $625 million worth of renewable energy projects would receive an 80 percent loan guarantee over the next 5 years. Such loan guarantees for renewable energy systems would cost $50 million over the 2006–2010 period, and an additional $50 million after that period.

Nuclear Energy. Because of DOE's support of emerging nuclear technology through a current program called Nuclear Power 2010, we expect that the department would use the program to provide a guarantee to at least one new nuclear facility over the 2011–2015 period. Such a guarantee could be for more than $2 billion and carry a significant subsidy cost (perhaps as much as 30 percent).

Indian Energy Programs. Title V would authorize the Department of the Interior to provide grants and loans to Indian tribes for energy resource development projects. That title also would authorize DOE to provide loan guarantees for energy development projects on Indian land and to establish an Office of Indian Energy Policy and Programs. In total, CBO estimates that these programs would cost $21 million in 2006 and $244 million over the 2006–2010 period.

DOI Grants and Loans. The bill would authorize DOI to provide loans and grants to Indian tribes for energy resource development and integration and regulation of tribal energy resources and to develop energy resource agreements through leases, business agreements, and rights-of-way. Based on information from DOI, CBO estimates that such grants and loans would cost about $11 million in 2006 and $97 million over the 2006–2010 period.

DOE Loan Guarantees. Title V would authorize the Secretary of Energy to guarantee up to $2 billion in loans for energy projects on Indian lands. Based on information from the Council of Energy Resource Tribes, CBO expects that DOE would provide loan guarantees for a variety of projects on Indian lands, including electricity transmission lines, fossil fuel electricity generation, and renewable fuels. CBO expects that the subsidy cost of loans guaranteed under this program could range from 2 or 3 percent for routine conventional projects to 50 percent or more for unproven technologies.

For this estimate, CBO assumes that about half of the program would provide loan guarantees for electricity transmission lines, which should pose relatively little credit risk under standard contract terms. We assume that the remaining loan guarantees would be divided between fossil fuel electricity generation and renewable fuel projects. Under these assumptions, we estimate that the average subsidy cost for loans guaranteed under the program would be 10 percent. CBO expects that loans would be disbursed over the next 10 years, and we estimate that the loan guarantee program would cost $7 million in 2006 and $132 million over the 2006–2010 period, assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts for the estimated subsidy costs.

Office of Indian Energy Policy and Programs. The bill also would authorize DOE to establish a new office that would be responsible for promotion and development of Indian tribal energy concerns. Based on information from DOE, CBO estimates that the salaries, expenses, benefits, space, and travel costs of the DOE employees that would administer such programs would be about $3 million annually.

Renewable Energy Production Incentive (REPI). The REPI program currently provides cash payments to public utilities and electric cooperatives that generate energy using renewable sources. The payment is based on the annual kilowatt-hours of electricity generated using qualified renewable energy sources. Section 202 would reauthorize the REPI program for an additional 20 years, and make Indian tribes eligible for the program. Annual funding appropriated for the program has not kept pace with applications for payment from eligible utilities. Specifically, eligible utilities have generated electricity from renewable resources since 1994 in an amount that qualifies for about $76 million in REPI payments that have not been appropriated. Based on information from DOE, CBO estimates that fully funding this program, including the backlog of applications, would cost $70 million in 2006 and $163 million over the 2006–2010 period.

Cellulosic Biomass and Cane Sugar Loan Guarantee Program. Section 204 would authorize DOE to issue loan guarantees to help finance the construction of facilities to produce fuel ethanol from agricultural residue. The development of such facilities poses some risk mainly because the technology that would be used to process ethanol from such sources is new and is not well-proven.

For this estimate, we expect that such facilities would be debt-financed and sponsors would recover costs through the sale of ethanol. Prices for ethanol have a history of fluctuating widely and the likelihood of future fluctuations could contribute additional credit risk for such a project. Moreover, the cash flow for these projects also would rely heavily on the cost of purchasing feedstock. According to DOE, a plant's reliance on feedstock from these sources would increase a project's credit risk because prices for feedstock can become competitive if demand for such products increases.

Under credit reform procedures, funds must be appropriated in advance to cover the subsidy cost of loan guarantees, measured on a present value basis. Because of the significant level of risk associated with these types of projects, the costs of subsidizing such loan guarantees could vary widely. At worst, the government could absorb all of the risk, effectively converting the loan guarantees into grants. This provision would authorize DOE to issue loan guarantees limited to $250 million per project. However, the provision does not set any limits on the number of loan guarantees that could be made. Under this legislation, an applicant for a loan guarantee would have to be currently operating an existing facility that produces at least 50,000 gallons of ethanol per year.

CBO estimates that, over the next five years, DOE would probably provide loan guarantees for three projects, each with a total construction cost of about $250 million. Because the bill also would require applicants to contribute at least 20 percent of the project's total cost, CBO estimates that the value of each loan guarantee would be about $200 million. In addition, based on information from DOE, CBO assumes that the department would seek projects with a financial outlook similar to those of bonds rated B- or better by companies such as Standard and Poor's and Moody's. Projects with this rating typically have a cumulative default risk of over 40 percent. Under those assumptions, CBO estimates that loans guaranteed under the bill would be likely to have a subsidy rate between 15 percent and 20 percent and would cost $110 million over the 2006–2010 period.

Electricity Regulations. Title XII would require the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to establish several new rules for managing the nation's electricity system and governing the business practices of the electricity industry. Such rules would affect transmission services, construction and siting permits for building new transmission lines, and the reliability of the nation's electricity transmission infrastructure. The bill also would repeal the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, require FERC to take over certain regulatory procedures currently undertaken by the Securities and Exchange Commission, and amend the Public Utilities Regulatory Policies Act.

Based on information from FERC, CBO estimates that implementing these provisions would cost $11 million in 2006 and $47 million over the 2006–2010 period. Such costs would cover additional data processing and storage, additional staff, and travel related to the agency's new duties. Because FERC recovers 100 percent of its costs through user fees, such additional costs would be offset by an equal change in fees that the commission charges. Hence, these provisions would have no net budgetary impact.

Other Provisions. The bill includes several provisions that would authorize various new studies, reports, and activities related to energy consumption and production. Those provisions would authorize federal agencies to:

- Establish new programs related to federal oil and natural gas resources;

- Authorize a direct loan to upgrade a non-operational clean-coal technology plant in Alaska to a traditional coal-fired electricity plant;

- Reorganize certain offices within DOE; and

- Prepare several other studies and reports on energy resources and efficiency.

Based on information from the agencies that would be responsible for implementing these provisions, CBO estimates that these activities would cost $43 million in 2006 and $176 million over the 2006–2010 period, subject to the availability of appropriated funds.

Direct spending and revenues

Several provisions in the bill would affect direct spending and revenues. The estimated effects of these provisions are shown in Table 3. The bill would establish a mandate for the use of renewable motor fuels, provide permanent authorization for the use of energy savings performance contracts; establish an Electric Reliability Organization to manage the reliability of the nation's electricity system; allow the Western Area and Southwestern Power Administrations to accept up to $100 million in financing from private sources for electricity transmission projects; make changes to federal programs related to oil and natural gas; and require the Rural Utilities Service to change the terms of certain loans.

CBO estimates that enacting the bill also would increase direct spending by $728 million over the 2005–2010 period but would reduce direct spending by $591 million over the 2005–2015 period. CBO estimates that enacting the bill would increase net revenues by $75 million in 2006 and would result in a net loss of revenues totaling $1.2 billion over the 2006–2010 period and $1 billion over the 2006–2015 period. In addition, we estimate that new civil penalties imposed by the bill would result in an increase in revenues of less than $500,000 annually.

Renewable Fuels Requirement and Agricultural Support Programs. CBO estimates that enacting section 204 would lower direct spending by about $4.8 billion over the next 10 years and lower revenues by about $1.9 billion over the same period.

Section 204 would require that motor fuels sold by a refiner, blender, or importer contain specified amounts of renewable fuel. The required volume of renewable fuel would start at 4 billion gallons in 2006, escalate to 8 billion gallons for 2012, and increase thereafter at the rate of growth in gasoline consumption. CBO expects that the use of renewable fuels would be significantly affected starting in 2007, when the bill's renewable fuel requirement would exceed the amount of renewable fuel use CBO estimates under current law.

CBO expects that most of the fuel produced to meet the requirements under the bill would be ethanol. Because ethanol is primarily derived from corn, demand for corn would rise with the requirement to use more ethanol. CBO expects that corn prices would increase up to 10 percent by the end of the 2007–2015 period. Accordingly, the costs of federal programs to support farm prices and provide income support to agricultural producers would fall over the 2007–2015 period. CBO estimates that spending for farm price and income supports would decline by about $4.8 billion over the 2007–2015 period.

Section 204 also would affect revenues. Because ethanol-blended fuels are taxed at a lower rate than gasoline, receipts from taxes on motor fuels would change when ethanol use changes. CBO estimates that increased ethanol use would reduce revenues starting in 2007, and continue affecting revenues through part of 2011. Although ethanol use would increase significantly under the bill, the special tax treatment of ethanol fuels under current law will expire at the end of calendar year 2010. Therefore, changes in ethanol use would not significantly affect federal revenues after that time.

Energy Savings Performance Contracts (ESPCs). The bill would provide authorization for the use of energy savings performance contracts through 2016. Under current law, the authority to enter into such contracts expires at the end of fiscal year 2006. Overall, CBO estimates that entering into ESPCs would increase direct spending by $256 million in 2007 and $2.9 billion over the 2005–2015 period.

ESPCs enable federal agencies to enter into long-term contracts with an energy savings company (ESCO) for the acquisition of energy-efficient equipment, such as new windows, lighting, and heating, ventilation, and air-conditioning systems. Using such equipment can reduce the energy costs for a facility, and the savings from reduced utility payments can be used to pay the contractor for the equipment over time. Because the government does not pay for the equipment at the time it is acquired, the ESCO borrows money from a nonfederal lender to finance the acquisition and installation of the equipment. When it signs the ESPC, the government commits to paying for the full cost of the equipment as well as the interest costs on the ESCO's borrowing for the project. Since the ESCO faces higher borrowing costs than the U.S. Treasury, total interest payments for the equipment acquisition will be higher than if the government financed the acquisition of the equipment directly with appropriated funds.

The obligation to make payments for the equipment and the financing costs is incurred when the government signs the ESPC. Under current law, agencies can use ESPCs to acquire new energy-efficient equipment, paying over a period of up to 25 years without an appropriation for the full amount of the purchase price. Thus, consistent with government accounting principles, CBO believes that the budget should reflect that commitment as new obligations at the time that an ESPC is signed and that the authority to enter into these contracts without budget authority for the full amount of the purchase price constitutes direct spending.

CBO's estimate of direct spending reflects an amount equal to the cost of the energy conservation measures as installed, plus the portion of borrowing costs attributable to contract interest rates that exceed U.S. Treasury interest rates. (Borrowing costs equivalent to the amount of Treasury interest that would be paid if the equipment were financed with appropriated funds are not counted against this authority, consistent with the budget scorekeeping of regular interest costs associated with federal spending; that is, Treasury interest effects are not counted as a direct cost or savings to any particular legislative provision.)

Since 1988, the Department of Energy estimates that agencies have entered into ESPCs valued over $800 million, $252 million of that in 2003 alone. CBO estimates that, because the federal building inventory is aging, those contracts would continue to be used—over time at roughly the same rate as currently used—about $300 million in 2007 and increasing with anticipated inflation in each of the following years. Thus, we estimate that extending the authorization for ESPCs would increase direct spending by $2.9 billion over the 2007–2015 period.

Electric Reliability Organization. The bill would authorize the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to exercise authority over the reliability of the nation's electricity transmission system through the establishment of an Electric Reliability Organization (ERO). Under the bill, FERC would select an organization to become the ERO based on several criteria, including the ability of the organization to charge fees to end users of the electricity system to cover its costs. CBO believes the ERO's collections and spending should be included in the federal budget because this new entity would conduct inherently governmental activities that could not be undertaken by a purely private organization. FERC would approve and enforce the collection of fees charged by the ERO.

Based on information from the North American Electric Reliability Council (NERC), CBO estimates that the newly formed ERO and its regional affiliates would spend between $75 million and $150 million a year. For this estimate, CBO assumes that spending by the ERO and its regional affiliates would start at $100 million a year and increase by the rate of anticipated inflation.

Thus, we estimate that spending by the ERO would total about $100 million in 2006 and $1.1 billion over the next 10 years.

Because the ERO and the regional organizations created by it would be governmental in nature, CBO believes that the collection of these fees should be recorded as revenues in the budget. Based on information from NERC, CBO estimates that net revenues collected by an ERO and its regional organizations would total $75 million in 2006, $391 million over the 2006–2010 period, and $820 million over the 2006–2015 period.

Currently, the federal power marketing administrations, including the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Bonneville Power Administration, pay dues to the regional affiliates of NERC. We would expect that those payments would continue and would increase under the new regulatory scheme established by the ERO. Any increase in those fees would be offset by changes in the rates charged to customers of the federal agencies.

Financing of Federal Electricity Transmission Projects. The bill would authorize DOE's Western Area and Southwestern Power Administrations to accept from private entities up to $100 million to assist in the design, development, construction, and operation of transmission projects that would contribute to reducing congestion on existing electricity lines. Such financing would be equivalent to incurring new federal debt, and the spending of such borrowed amounts should be recorded in the budget as direct spending. We estimate that such spending would cost $10 million in 2007 and $100 million over the 2007–2015 period.

Federal Oil and Natural Gas Programs. Title III would make several changes to federal programs related to the production of oil and natural gas. Several of these provisions would provide private producers of those resources with various forms of royalty relief or other credits that would reduce federal receipts, particularly over the next few years. By creating incentives for greater production of oil and natural gas, CBO expects that net receipts from royalties would eventually increase under some of those provisions, but not for several years. Based on information from DOI, CBO estimates that these provisions would result in a net loss of offsetting receipts (a credit against direct spending) totaling $8 million in 2006 and $87 million over the next 10 years.

Assistance for Rural Communities with High Energy Costs. Section 210 of the bill would require the Rural Utilities Service (RUS) to change the loan terms offered to eligible electric cooperatives in Alaska that currently have loans provided by that agency. The bill would require that the term of loans be changed to reduce the electricity rates charged to customers. Under the Federal Credit Reform Act, the cost of a loan modification is the change in the subsidy cost of the loan (on a present value basis) because of the modified loan terms. CBO estimates that the cost of this provision would be $46 million and would be recorded in 2005, the assumed year of enactment.

Based on information from RUS, CBO estimates that six utilities would be eligible for the assistance authorized by the bill. The bill would require that the agency provide such assistance through deferrals, extensions, or reductions of loans. Currently, the six eligible borrowers have a total outstanding principal of $57 million, at an average interest rate of about 3.5 percent. It is possible that the agency could decide to provide zero-interest loans, or lengthen the term of loans, thereby reducing payments owed to the government. The legislation would authorize the agency to forgive the full amount of the outstanding principal without recourse to the borrowers. CBO assumes that the cooperatives in the highest distress areas would apply for loan forgiveness and the remaining cooperatives would apply to receive zero-interest loans. CBO estimates that the net present value for all payments that would have been provided under current law results in a cost to the government of $46 million, which would be recorded in 2005, the assumed year of enactment.

Civil Penalties. The bill also could affect governmental receipts and direct spending by establishing and increasing certain civil and criminal penalties. CBO estimates that any resulting increase in receipts and spending would be less than $500,000 annually. Such penalties would be established for violations of regulations relating to: Violations of the Price-Anderson Act, Nuclear safety at nonprofit institutions, willful destruction of a nuclear facility, the reliability of the nation's electricity system, market trading of electricity, and the sale of renewable fuels.

Section 385 would raise the maximum civil and criminal penalty amounts imposed for violations of the Natural Gas Act (NGA) and the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978. Currently the maximum amount FERC may assess varies depending on the violation, however, most fall between $500 and $25,000 per violation. The bill would increase those amounts to as much as $1 million for violations of the NGA. Based on information from FERC, CBO expects that the penalty increases and the additional civil penalty authority would serve as a significant deterrent so that firms would very likely comply with the regulations, resulting in no significant effect on revenues.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: The bill contains numerous mandates as defined in UMRA that would affect both intergovernmental and private-sector entities.

CBO cannot determine the cost of all the mandates in the bill because several of the requirements established by the bill would hinge on future regulatory action about which information is not available. Though CBO cannot estimate the cost of each mandate, we expect that the total cost of private-sector mandates in the bill would exceed the annual threshold established in UMRA ($123 million in 2005, adjusted annually for inflation). That conclusion is based on our analysis of the renewable fuels standard, which would impose II substantial costs on the motor fuels industry.

CBO estimates, however, that the total cost of complying with intergovernmental mandates in the bill would not exceed the threshold established in UMRA ($62 million in 2005, adjusted annually for inflation). The bill also would authorize numerous grants and initiatives that would benefit state, local, and tribal governments; any costs those governments incur for these projects and initiatives would result from complying with conditions for receiving this federal assistance.

Based on its review of the bill, CBO expects that the mandates contained in the bill's titles lion renewable energy (title II), nuclear energy (title VI), electricity (title XII), and energy efficiency (title I) would have the greatest impact on private-sector entities and state and local governments.

Renewable Energy (Title II)—Renewable Fuels Standard

Section 204 would impose a private-sector mandate on domestic refiners, blenders, and importers of gasoline by requiring that gasoline sold or dispensed to consumers in the contiguous United States contains a minimum volume of renewable fuels. The bill also II would establish a credit trading program for renewable fuels to allow producers who use more ethanol than would be required to sell credits to producers who would be in deficit. Those credits could only be used in the same year they are generated. The required volume of renewable fuel would start at 4.0 billion gallons in 2006 and increase to 8.0 billion gallons by 2012. CBO expects that the renewable fuels requirement would be met in 2006 without additional costs to the industry. The industry would begin to experience additional costs in 2007 as it begins to blend or purchase greater amounts of gasoline containing renewable fuels than it would in the absence of a standard. Based on Department of Energy estimates of the price impacts of similar renewable fuels standards on gasoline prices, CBO estimates that the direct costs of the renewable fuel requirement on private-sector entities would exceed UMRA's annual threshold for private-sector mandates.

Nuclear Matters (Title VI)—Increase in the Annual Premium

Under current law, in the event that losses from a nuclear incident exceed the required amount of private insurance, Nuclear Regulatory Commission licensees (both public and private) are assessed a charge to cover the shortfall in damage coverage. Section 603 would increase the maximum annual premium from $10 million to $15 million. CBO has determined that raising the maximum annual premium would increase the costs of existing mandates and would thereby impose both intergovernmental and private-sector mandates under UMRA. Because the probability of a nuclear accident resulting in losses exceeding the amount of private insurance coverage is low, CBO estimates that the annual costs for public and private entities of complying with the mandates (in expected value terms) would not be substantial over the next five years.

Electricity (Title XII)

Mandatory Reliability Standards. Section 1211 would require users of the bulk-power system to comply with standards issued by a newly established Electric Reliability Organization designated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. Those users include intergovernmental entities such as municipally owned utilities as well as private-sector entities, including utilities, nonutility generators, and marketers. Currently, the North American Electric Reliability Council (NERC), a voluntary organization, promotes electricity reliability. According to several industry experts, almost all public and private-sector users of the bulk power system voluntarily comply with standards issued by NERC. The mandate would impose no significant additional costs in the short term relative to current practice since the ERO is not expected to significantly change current standards. In the future, market conditions may prompt the ERO to impose stricter standards to maintain reliability. In that case, costs for users of the bulk power system—that could otherwise elect to disregard NERC standards under current law—could increase substantially.

Mandatory Assessments. Section 1211 would direct the ERO to assess fees and dues to cover the costs of implementing and enforcing ERO standards. Although there is some uncertainty as to how those fees would be assessed, the most likely scenario is that the ERO would assess fees on its members, which is the current practice of NERC. As NERC members include both public and private entities, such fees would constitute intergovernmental and private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA.

CBO estimates that the increment in fee collections for the proposed compliance, monitoring, "and enforcement activities under the bill would be about $50 million annually. Based on industry data, CBO assumes that roughly 80 percent to 85 percent of the collections would be borne by the private sector and another 10 percent to 14 percent would be borne by state and local government entities. The remainder would be paid by federally owned entities.

Regulatory Fees. The bill would require FERC to assume certain regulatory procedures that are currently under the jurisdiction of the Securities and Exchange Commission. In addition, the bill would require FERC to establish new rules for managing the nation's electricity system and governing the business practices of the electricity industry. Under current law, FERC has the authority to collect fees from investor-owned utility companies to offset its costs. The duty to pay those fee increases would impose a private-sector mandate on those entities. Based on information from FERC, CBO expects that investor-owned utilities would have to pay $11 million in 2006 and $47 million over the 2006–2010 period.

State Authority Over Electric Utilities. Section 1221 would preempt state authority to take action to ensure the safety, adequacy, and reliability of electric service within that state if the state's actions are inconsistent with the federal reliability standards. This preemption of state authority would impose no additional costs on state governments.

Sections 1251, 1252, and 1254 would require state regulators to review the use of net metering, time-based metering, demand-response systems, and interconnection services before permitting electric utilities to implement these federal standards. These sections contain intergovernmental mandates because they would increase a state's responsibilities under the existing mandates in the Public Utilities Regulatory Policies Act. However, CBO estimates that the states' costs to review additional standards would not be significant.

Jurisdiction over the Termination Payments of Certain Contracts. Section 1270 would grant the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether the requirement to pay termination payments under certain contracts entered into between sellers and buyers of wholesale electricity was unjust and unreasonable. These contracts are currently before the Bankruptcy Court in the Southern District of New York. FERC has asserted jurisdiction over termination payments under wholesale power contracts for periods a seller was found to be in violation of Commission orders. While legislative provisions that would severely limit or extinguish a person's rights in court have been considered to be mandates under UMRA, CBO cannot determine if the language in this provision would extinguish the sellers' rights before the Bankruptcy Court or would simply make clear FERC's jurisdiction over the termination payments.

Energy Efficiency (Title I)

Energy Conservation. Section 135 would direct the Secretary of Energy to prescribe energy conservation standards restricting "standby-mode" energy consumption of household and commercial appliances. According to industry sources and DOE, up to 9,000 types of household and commercial appliances could be affected by this provision, and further, many such products may require significant modification to meet the standard for energy consumption in standby mode. DOE has not yet determined how it would implement this provision. Therefore, we cannot estimate the incremental cost to the industry of meeting such requirements.

If DOE applies standards to the majority of products potentially affected, costs to industry could be substantial. The magnitude of the costs also depends on the stringency of new standards that would affect the appliance manufacturers. For example, the bill would require DOE to apply new energy conservation standards to certain furnaces. Roughly three million oil, gas, and electric furnaces would have to comply with the new standards. According to a DOE report, the incremental costs to manufacturers of improving energy efficiency could range from $5 to $175 per unit, depending on the level of the standard that must be met. If DOE applies relatively high efficiency standards to the appliances covered under the bill, the incremental costs to the industry could be large, and thus could exceed UMRA's threshold for private-sector mandates.

In prescribing the energy conservation standards required under sections 135 and 136 for household appliances and consumer products, the Secretary would preempt state and local energy efficiency standards currently in place for those products and appliances. CBO estimates that no costs would result from this preemption.

Testing Requirements. Section 135 would direct the Secretary of Energy to prescribe energy efficiency testing requirements for appliances specified in the bill and future appliances to be determined by the Secretary. The provision would require manufacturers of those appliances to have their appliances tested to determine energy efficiency ratings. The testing and rating would be conducted by the DOE. CBO estimates that the cost to comply with the mandate to have appliances tested would not be large.

Ban of Mercury Vapor Lamp Ballasts. Section 135 would prohibit the manufacturing and importing of mercury vapor lamp ballasts after January 1, 2008. A ballast is an electrical device for starting and regulating fluorescent and certain other lamps. The mercury vapor lamp ballast has been decreasing in its share of the market for ballasts during the last 20 years. Moreover, according to industry contacts, few, if any mercury vapor lamp ballasts are imported into the United States. The majority of such ballasts are manufactured in the United States for domestic use. According to industry sources, mercury vapor lamp ballasts are now only manufactured for rural street lights and residential floodlights. Based on information provided by industry and government sources, the value of annual shipments of such ballasts amounts to about $15 million. The cost of the mandate, measured in lost net income to the industry, would be less than that amount.

Energy Efficiency Resources Program. Section 141 would require ratemaking authorities for gas and electric utilities (including states, local municipalities, or co-ops) to either demonstrate that an energy efficiency resource program is in effect or to hold a public hearing regarding the benefits and feasibility of implementing an energy efficiency resources program for electric and gas utilities. CBO estimates no significant costs would result from this requirement.

Previous CBO estimates

Federal budget effects

On April 19, 2005, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 1640, the Energy Policy Act of 2005, as ordered reported by the House Committee on Energy and Commerce on April 13, 2005. Like this legislation, H.R. 1640 would authorize appropriations for a wide array of energy-related activities. Differences between the estimates of spending subject to appropriation under this bill and H.R. 1640 reflect differences in authorization levels, particularly for the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program and activities related to science and coastal impact assistance.

Like H.R. 1640, this legislation would authorize FERC to establish an ERO to oversee the nation's electricity transmission system. Both bills would authorize the new organization to collect and spend fees (which would be classified as revenues). However, H.R. 1640 would cap those fees at $50 million a year. This legislation contains no such cap; therefore, our estimates of direct spending and revenues related to the proposed ERO are higher than under H.R. 1640.

CBO previously completed two cost estimates for bills that would permanently authorize the use of ESPCs: H.R. 1640 and H.R. 1533, the Federal Energy Management Improvement Act of 2005. CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 1533, as ordered reported by the House Committee on Government Reform, on April 13, 2005. Provisions of this legislation and H.R. 1533 related to ESPCs are similar; however, H.R. 1640 would cap total payments under ESPCs at $500 million a year. Therefore, our estimate of spending for ESPCs is lower under H.R. 1640 than under this bill or H.R. 1533. Also, this bill would authorize the use of ESPCs through 2016.

Finally, on May 23, 2005, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for S. 606, the Reliable Fuels Act, as ordered reported by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on March 16, 2005. Like this legislation, S. 606 would require that motor fuels sold by a refiner, blender, or importer contain specified amounts of renewable fuel but with two key differences. First, the required level of renewable fuels under this bill would be higher than under S. 606. Second, S. 606 would allow producers of motor fuels to accumulate ethanol-use credits for exceeding the ethanol target in any year. Under S. 606, such credits could be used in subsequent years to meet the ethanol target. In contrast, this legislation contains no such provision for use of credits over multiple years. As a result, CBO expects that demand for corn-based ethanol under this bill would increase more than under S. 606, leading to higher demand for corn and, subsequently, a larger decrease in federal spending to support farm prices and provide income to farmers.

Mandates

The bill includes many of the same state and local mandates as in H.R. 6, the Energy Policy Act of 2005, as approved by the House Committee on Resources on April 20, 2005. However, the estimate of state and local mandates in this bill is not identical to the statement included in CBO's cost estimate for that earlier legislation. Section 1502 of H.R. 6 is not included in this bill. That provision would shield manufacturers of motor fuels and other persons from liability for claims based on defective product relating to motor vehicle fuel containing methyl tertiary butyl ether or renewable fuel. That provision in H.R. 6 would impose an intergovernmental mandate as it would limit existing rights to seek compensation under current law.

The state and local mandates in this bill that are the same as the mandates in H.R. 6 include the increase in the retrospective premiums, the mandatory reliability standards and assessments, the state authority over electric utilities, and the energy conservation provision. In contrast, section 141 of the legislation was not included in H.R. 6. That provision would require ratemaking authorities for gas and electric utilities (including states, local municipalities, or co-ops) to either demonstrate that an energy efficiency resource program is in effect or to hold a public hearing regarding the benefits and feasibility of implementing an energy efficiency resources program for regulated and nonregulated electric and gas utilities. CBO estimates that no significant costs would result from this requirement.

Regarding private-sector mandates, most of the mandates contained in the bill were also contained in the legislation considered in the House. H.R. 6 and H.R. 1640 contain a mandate establishing a renewable fuel standard for motor fuels, which would impose costs on refiners, importers, and blenders of gasoline similar to the one in the Renewable Fuels title of this bill. However, the renewable fuels standard in the House bills would require the industry to use a lower yearly level of renewable fuels than the standard contained in this bill. In the case of the House bills, CBO found that the motor fuels industry would be able to meet the renewable fuels requirement in the first five years that the mandate is in effect without significant additional costs to the industry. The House bills also contain a mandate that would extend the existing requirement for licensees to pay fees to offset roughly 90 percent of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's annual appropriation. That provision is not included in the bill.

Estimate prepared by: Federal Costs: Energy Savings Performance Contracts: Lisa Cash Driskill and David Newman; Oil and Natural Gas Resources: Lisa Cash Driskill and Megan Carroll; Indian Energy Programs: Mike waters; EPA Provisions and Loan Guarantee for Ethanol Production: Susanne Mehlman; Renewable Fuels Requirement and Agriculture Support Programs: David Hull; All Other Federal Costs: Lisa Cash Driskill; revenues: Annabelle Bartsch and Laura Hanlon; impact on state, local, and tribal governments: Lisa Ramirez-Branum; impact on the private sector: Craig Cammarata, Jean Talarico, Selena Caldera and Paige Piper/Bach.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for the Energy Policy Act of 2005.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Lisa Cash Driskill.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS HOLTZ-EAKIN,
Director.

OIL SPILL LIABILITY TRUST FUND MAINTENANCE ACT

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I am very pleased to cosponsor this legislation, the "Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund Maintenance Act", with my friend and Commerce Committee Chairman, TED STEVENS, as well as my other Senate colleagues. As most people know, after the terrible incident involving the Exxon Valdez, Senator STEVENS championed the passage of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990, OPA 90, as well as the mechanism for providing funding for the cleanup of oil spills.

That mechanism, known as the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund, is now in danger. In a recent report to Congress, the United States Coast Guard predicted that the Fund will run out of money before 2009. Given the recent spate of costly spills around the country, it may run out sooner. We simply cannot allow this to happen. The fund provides a critically important safety net. It aids the cleanup of oil spills and provides compensation to those harmed, particularly where no responsible party is identified or the responsible parties have insufficient resources.

Since the passage of OPA 90, we have significantly reduced the number and volume of oil spills in the U.S. Unfortunately, thousands of gallons of oil continue to be spilled into our waters every year, and the cost of cleanup has increased substantially. The amount of oil carried by tank vessels to and within the U.S. is predicted to increase. While we pray that we will never have another major oil spill, we must be ready to respond if necessary.

The bill introduced today would reinstate an expired fee on oil companies of 5 cents per barrel of oil. The fee, which ceased January 1, 1995, would increase the maximum principal amount of the fund from $1 billion to $3 billion, and if the fund drops below $2 billion, the fee would automatically be reinstated without the need for additional legislative action. Five cents a barrel translates to approximately $0.0011 per gallon of gas—or one eighth of one cent—and is worth about 3 cents per barrel in 1990 dollars. This is substantially less than the original rate of 5 cents.

I urge my Senate colleagues to take up this issue and pass this legislation without delay.

TAIWAN AND CHINA

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, in recent weeks Lien Chan of Taiwan undertook the task of meeting with key leaders in the People's Republic of China. This was no small task as the gulf between the two sides is much wider than the Strait of Formosa.

The substantive accomplishments of Chairman Lien's recent mission to mainland China surely put to rest any accusations that the event was little more than a symbolic gesture. In fact, the practical results should have a very positive impact on cross-strait trade, tourism, and culture if momentum can be maintained.

First and foremost, an essential mechanism of dialogue has been established, overcoming obstacles of politics and history. The precedent has been set. Further talks between mainland China and Taiwan should follow as a matter of course, to address a range of issues of mutual concern, provided there is enough goodwill on both sides. However, I think it is important to note that these meetings did not include elected officials of the Government of Taiwan. Although these initial talks were an important step, it is essential that future talks between Taiwan and China include the rightly elected leaders of Taiwan for there to be any real substance and hope for change.

Second, it seems that certain basic principles have been addressed that should help Taipei and Beijing re-open negotiations on an equal footing, even though they still disagree on the meaning of "one China" and what Taiwan's international status is. The basic concept of ending hostility and promoting cooperation has been embraced. Both sides believe it is a mistake to let small details create a deadlock forever, and that is a key principle for progress.

Third, even people who insist that all talk is meaningless unless it leads to policy changes should be able to admit that eliminating and/or reducing trade barriers on farm products, like fruit, is a concrete achievement. Both sides gain from such actions, and it sets a good example for further progress later on down the road.

Fourth, it is to be commended by any free society when a tightly controlled country like mainland China agrees to negotiate to allow its people to tour a democracy like Taiwan. Who knows what the long-term implications may be, when those who know few liberties are one day allowed to visit and see for themselves what real freedom feels and looks like.

Finally, even the most humorless critics surely must admit that "panda bear diplomacy" still trumps political stalemate and hostility. Critics can call it symbolism, but even symbolism has definite practical value when it lifts spirits and relaxes tensions.

History will record that this mission was blessed with genuine substance as well as great potential in building bridges where none existed before.

PRESS COLUMNS ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, a column published recently by Lino A. Graglia in the Wall Street Journal, and another by Charles Krauthammer in the Washington Post, frame particularly well the debate we are having in the Senate on judicial nominations. I ask unanimous consent that these columns be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, May 24, 2005]

OUR CONSTITUTION FACES DEATH BY DUE "PROCESS"

(By Lino A. Graglia)

The battles in Congress over the appointment of even lower court federal judges reveal a recognition that federal judges are now, to a large extent, our real lawmakers. Proposals to amend the Constitution to remove lifetime tenure for Supreme Court justices, or to require that rulings of unconstitutionality be by more than a majority (5-4) vote, do not address the source of the problem. The Constitution is very difficult to amend—probably the most difficult of any supposedly democratic government. If opponents of rule by judges secure the political power to obtain an amendment, it should be one that addresses the problem at its source, which is that contemporary constitutional law has very little to do with the Constitution.

Judge-made constitutional law is the product of judicial review—the power of judges to disallow policy choices made by other officials of government, supposedly on the ground that they are prohibited by the Constitution. Thomas Jefferson warned that judges, always eager to expand their own jurisdiction, would "twist and shape" the Constitution "as an artist shapes a ball of wax." This is exactly what has happened.

The Constitution is a very short document, easily printed on a dozen pages. The Framers wisely meant to preclude very few policy choices that legislators, at least as committed to American principles of government as judges, would have occasion to make.

The essential irrelevance of the Constitution to contemporary constitutional law should be clear enough from the fact that the great majority of Supreme Court rulings of unconstitutionality involve state, not federal, law; and nearly all of them purport to be based on a single constitutional provision, the 14th Amendment—in fact, on only four words in one sentence of the Amendment, "due process" and "equal protection." The 14th Amendment has to a large extent become a second constitution, replacing the original.

It does not require jurisprudential sophistication to realize that the justices do not decide controversial issues of social policy by studying those four words. No question of interpretation is involved in any of the Court's controversial constitutional rulings, because there is nothing to interpret. The states did not lose the power to regulate abortion in 1973 in Roe v. Wade because Justice Harry Blackmun discovered in the due process clause of the 14th Amendment, adopted in 1868, the purported basis of the decision, something no one noticed before. The problem is that the Supreme Court justices have made the due process and equal protection clauses empty vessels into which they can pour any meaning. This converts the clauses into simple transferences of policy-making power from elected legislators to the justices, authorizing a Court majority to remove any policy issue from the ordinary political process and assign it to themselves for decision. This fundamentally changes the system of government created by the Constitution.

The basic principles of the Constitution are representative democracy, federalism and the separation of powers, which places all lawmaking power in an elected legislature with the judiciary merely applying the law to individual cases. Undemocratic and centralized lawmaking by the judiciary is the antithesis of the constitutional system.

The only justification for permitting judges to invalidate a policy choice made in the ordinary political process is that the choice is clearly prohibited by the Constitution—"clearly," because in a democracy the judgment of elected legislators should prevail in cases of doubt. Judicially enforced constitutionalism raises the issue, as Jefferson also pointed out, of rule of the living by the dead. But our problem is not constitutionalism but judicial activism—the invalidation by judges of policy choices not clearly (and rarely even arguably) prohibited by the Constitution. We are being ruled not by the dead but by judges all too much alive.

Because most of the Supreme Court's activist rulings of unconstitutionality purport to be based on a 14th Amendment that it has deprived of specific meaning, the problem can be very largely solved by simply restoring the 14th Amendment to its original meaning, or by giving it any specific meaning. The 14th Amendment was written after the Civil War to provide a national guarantee of basic civil rights to blacks. If a constitutional amendment could be adopted reconfining the 14th Amendment to that purpose or, better still, expanding it to a general prohibition of all official racial discrimination, the Court's free-hand remaking of domestic social policy for the nation would largely come to an end. If the justices lost the ability to invalidate state law on the basis of their political preferences, their ability and willingness to invalidate federal law on this basis would likely also diminish.

Plato argued for government by philosopher-kings, but who could argue for a system of government by lawyer-kings? No one can argue openly that leaving the final decision on issues of basic social policy to majority vote of nine lawyers—unelected and lifetime-tenured, making policy decisions for the nation as a whole from Washington, D.C.—is an improvement on the democratic federalist system created by the Constitution. Yet that is the form of government we now have.

The claim that the Court's rulings of unconstitutionality are mandates of the Constitution, or anything more than policy preferences of a majority of the justices, is false. Rule by judges is in violation, not enforcement, of the Constitution. Ending it requires nothing more complex than insistence that the Court's rulings of unconstitutionality should be based on the Constitution—which assigns "All legislative Power" to Congress—in fact as well as name.

FROM THOMAS, ORIGINAL VIEWS

(By Charles Krauthammer)

Justice Thomas: "Dope is cool."

Justice Scalia: "Let the cancer patients suffer."

If the headline writers characterized Supreme Court decisions the way many senators and most activists and lobbying groups do, that is how they would have characterized the Supreme Court decision this week on the use of medical marijuana in California. It was ruled illegal because the federal law prohibiting it supersedes the state law permitting it. Scalia agreed with the decision. Thomas dissented.

In our current, corrupted debates about the judges, you hear only about results. Priscilla Owen, we were told (by the Alliance for Justice), "routinely backs corporations against worker and consumer protections." Well, in what circumstances? In adjudicating what claims? Under what constitutional doctrine?

The real question is never what judges decide but how they decide it. The Scalia-Thomas argument was not about concern for cancer patients, the utility of medical marijuana or the latitude individuals should have regarding what they ingest.

It was about what the Constitution's commerce clause permits and, even more abstractly, who decides what the commerce clause permits. To simplify only slightly, Antonin Scalia says: Supreme Court precedent. Clarence Thomas says: the Founders, as best we can interpret their original intent.

The Scalia opinion (concurring with the majority opinion) appeals to dozens of precedents over the past 70 years under which the commerce clause was vastly expanded to allow the federal government to regulate what had, by the time of the New Deal, become a highly industrialized country with a highly nationalized economy.

Thomas's dissent refuses to bow to such 20th-century innovations. While Scalia's opinion is studded with precedents, Thomas pulls out founding-era dictionaries (plus Madison's notes from the Constitutional Convention, the Federalist Papers and the ratification debates) to understand what the word commerce meant then. And it meant only "trade or exchange" (as distinct from manufacture) and not, as we use the term today, economic activity in general. By this understanding, the federal government had no business whatsoever regulating privately and medicinally grown marijuana.

This is constitutional "originalism" in pure form. Its attractiveness is that it imposes discipline on the courts. It gives them a clear and empirically verifiable understanding of constitutional text—a finite boundary beyond which even judges with airs must not go.

And if conditions change and parts of the originalist Constitution become obsolete, amend it. Democratically. We have added 17 amendments since the Bill of Rights. Amending is not a job for judges.

The position represented by Scalia's argument in this case is less "conservative." It recognizes that decades of precedent (which might have, at first, taken constitutional liberties) become so ingrained in the life of the country, and so accepted as part of the understanding of the modern Constitution, that it is simply too revolutionary, too legally and societally disruptive, to return to an original understanding long abandoned.

And there is yet another view. With Thomas's originalism at one end of the spectrum and Scalia's originalism tempered by precedent—rolling originalism, as it were—in the middle, there is a third notion, championed most explicitly by Justice Stephen Breyer, that the Constitution is a living document and that the role of the court is to interpret and reinterpret it continually in the light of new ideas and new norms.

This is what our debate about judges should be about. Instead, it constantly degenerates into arguments about results.

Two years ago, Thomas (and Scalia and William Rehnquist) dissented from the court's decision to invalidate a Texas law that criminalized sodomy. Thomas explicitly wrote, "If I were a member of the Texas Legislature, I would vote to repeal it." However, since he is a judge and not a legislator, he could find no principled way to use a Constitution that is silent on this issue to strike down the law. No matter. If Thomas were nominated tomorrow for chief justice you can be sure that some liberal activists would immediately issue a news release citing Thomas's "hostility to homosexual rights."

And they will undoubtedly cite previous commerce clause cases—Thomas joining the majority of the court in striking down the Gun Free School Zones Act and parts of the Violence Against Women Act—to show Thomas's "hostility to women's rights and gun-free schools."

I hope President Bush nominates Thomas to succeed Rehnquist as chief justice, not just because honoring an originalist would be an important counterweight to the irresistible modern impulse to legislate from the bench but, perhaps more importantly, to expose the idiocy of the attacks on Thomas that will inevitably be results-oriented: hostile toward women, opposed to gun-free schools . . . and pro-marijuana?

VETERANS HEALTHCARE AND EQUITABLE ACCESS ACT OF 2005

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, today I rise to speak on a matter of great importance, the state of care received by America's veterans. On April 28, I proudly introduced the Veterans' Healthcare and Equitable Access Act of 2005, which will honor America's veterans with the dignity and respect they have earned. This legislation was inspired by my work on the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I have had the privilege to come face to face with real heroes, like injured veterans returning from the battlefield and grieving survivors who proudly and bravely carry the memory of a fallen soldier with them as they struggle to move on. I have been moved by this experience and I offered this bill to honor their sacrifice and their struggles.

The Veterans' Healthcare and Equitable Access Act of 2005 takes a comprehensive approach to fix some of the major problems facing veterans today. Since I was a member of the House of Representatives, I have supported mandatory funding, and the legislation I have introduced underscores that commitment. The widening gap between demand for care and funding is a problem that must be faced head on and dealt with before it spirals out of control. The Veterans' Healthcare Eligibility Act and the Veterans' Millennium Healthcare Care and Benefits Act changed the nature of the VA, but did not change the manner in which the VA was funded. That is why I support mandatory funding for veterans' healthcare, so the VA can finally provide care to those who cared for us.

This bill will also end another problem that has plagued veterans in my home state for years: access to quality healthcare and equitable reimbursement for travel expenses. My legislation will allow rural veterans who are enrolled in the VA to obtain health care at local medical facilities closer to home or to travel to a VA facility and receive travel reimbursements at the same rate as Federal employees.

The veterans population is aging and we are losing great men and women every day. Today, the GI's who fought in Vietnam are reaching the age of retirement and Medicare eligibility. It is therefore unfair to ask the VA to shoulder a cost that Medicare should help pay for. Aging veterans are seeking care at the VA because it is one of the best care providers in the country. As I see it, the VA and Medicare need to share this cost in order to provide excellent care to those who need it most.

In March, I met Major Tammy Duckworth, an Army pilot who lost both of her legs after a rocket propelled grenade hit the Black Hawk helicopter she was in while flying in the skies above Iraq. Although now a double amputee, she is determined to both walk and fly helicopters again. Major Duckworth has my full support, but needless to say her life has been changed forever. That is why the legislation I introduced would require that a service member who has lost a limb from a service-connected injury receive a disability rating of not less than 50 percent. This is our way of saying thank you and helping our veterans achieve their dreams.

Some of the hardest hit victims of this war are not soldiers or veterans, but survivors of the fallen. These brave men and women need our help. This year I voted to extend survivor benefits from $12,000 to $100,000 and to extend military housing privileges from 6 months to 1 year. To complete our support for survivors, my bill will extend childcare privileges for survivors from 6 months to 2 years in any Federal childcare program, giving surviving family members the help they need to grieve, heal, and move on from a painful loss.

Mr. President, legislation such as this is not without costs and it will require the Senate to make difficult choices. Sending troops into harm's way is a difficult choice, even when that choice is clearly justifiable, like it is in Iraq and Afghanistan. But taking care of veterans and their families is not a difficult choice, it is one we must embrace. As General Omar Bradley once said: "We are dealing with veterans, not procedure—with their problems, not ours."

Scripture tells us there is a time for everything, a time for peace and a time for war. America is facing a time of war, and we are fighting an evil and determined enemy. We have to ensure that the men and women who are bearing the burden of this war are cared for and are confident they can count on their government in their hour of need.

I ask unanimous consent that this statement be entered into the RECORD as if read.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO THE NORTHERN KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY WOMEN'S SOFTBALL TEAM

• Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I pay tribute in the Senate to the Northern Kentucky University Women's Softball Team for their remarkable season and recent participation in the NCAA Division II World Series.

The NKU was the No. 1 ranked team in the country and were the NCAA Division II Great Lakes Regional Champs. The team finished the most successful season in school history with a 55-2 record. The 55 game winning streak is the longest in collegiate softball history.

The Commonwealth of Kentucky should be very proud of this team. Their example of hard work and determination should be followed by all in the Commonwealth. I want my colleagues in the Senate to know of the pride that I have in representing these athletes and their families: Sarah Newland, Jamie Patton, Becky Napier, Krystal Lewallen, Kara Lorenz, Ricki Rothbauer, Heather Cotner, Stephanie Leimbach, Michelle Logan, Angie Lindeman, Emily Breitholle, Jeni Schamp, Sarah King, Megan Owens, Rachele Vogelpohl, and Sara Becker.

Congratulations to the members of the team for their success. I also want to congratulate their coach, Kathy Stewart, along with their peers, faculty, administrators, and parents for their support and sacrifices they've made to help the NKU meet their dreams and achieve their goals.●

HONORING THE TOWN OF KENNEBEC, SOUTH DAKOTA

• Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish today to honor and publicly recognize the 100th anniversary of the founding of the town of Kennebec, SD. Kennebec has a strong sense of past and anticipates a bright future.

Since 1924, Kennebec has been the county seat for Lyman County, located in central South Dakota. Few people lived in the area prior to the town's establishment in 1905, as it was challenging to import the supplies necessary to sustain a substantial population. In 1905, however, railroad tracks were laid through the area, thus making it significantly easier for residents to build homes and other structures, since materials no longer needed to be hauled in from surrounding towns and cities. The railroad and influx of people mark the birth of Kennebec. By 1907, Kennebec was a bustling prairie town full of diverse and eager residents.

As years passed and the town flourished, a number of businesses opened, such as the hardware store operated by Albert Williamson. In addition to running the hardware store, Williamson also edited and printed the county newspaper known as the Prairie Sun. Also around this time, Sam Abdnor built and operated a store that survives to this day as the Kennebec movie theatre. Many of my colleagues will recognize the surname "Abdnor" and will recall that former U.S. Senator Jim Abdnor hails from Kennebec. He served admirably as Lt. Governor, in the U.S. House of Representatives for 8 years and in this body for an additional 6 years, having never forgotten the community of Kennebec or its people.

In the town's early days, there was only a single doctor in Kennebec, and water had to be hauled by horse-drawn wagons from wells over a mile and a half to the north of the community. All other needs were met by the railroad, which delivered merchandise to the stores and shops, as well as thousands of tons of coal, which was required to heat homes in Kennebec during the long winters. Not only did the railroad allow imports into town, but it also fostered the transport of Kennebec's main exports, which included cattle, sheep and hogs.

Kennebec had no electrical power until 1914, when John Spotts of Armour, SD moved into town. Spotts bought a track of land southeast of Kennebec and built a two-story brick building with a full size basement. The upper floors provided a dance floor and silent movie theater for Kennebec residents, while the basement served as the first electric power plant in the town.

After a hundred years, Kennebec supports a population of over 280 citizens and continues to modernize and improve itself in its role to serve the farmers and ranchers throughout the region. Kennebec's proud citizens celebrate their 100th anniversary on June 18, 2005, and it is with great honor that I share with my colleagues the achievements made by this great community.●

HONORING THE CITY OF RELIANCE, SOUTH DAKOTA

• Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it is with great honor that I publicly recognize the 100th anniversary of the founding of the city of Reliance, SD. It is at this time that I would like to draw your attention to and commemorate the achievements and history of this charming city on the western prairie, which stands as an enduring tribute to the moral fortitude and pioneer spirit of the earliest Dakotans.

Located in Lyman County in western South Dakota, the original town-site of Reliance was plotted in the summer of 1905 after officials decided the new railroad's route would not include the already-established towns in the area. As a result, a new town was created on the homestead of Mr. C.C. Herron in order to service the Milwaukee Railroad. This original town-site, located on the southwest quarter of Section 21, encompassed a mere eight blocks. However, several additions were made to this small city between 1905 and 1910 with the help of the Milwaukee Land Company. Today, the town is nearly one square mile in area.

Reliance's early years proved to be incredibly prosperous. The Dirks Mercantile Company, a two-story building used for general store business and public gatherings, was a central part of life in the early years of this small city. An advertisement in the Lyman County Record stated that Dirks Mercantile Company "would buy anything you wanted to sell and sell anything you wanted to buy."

Reliance grew rapidly and in less than a decade came to include two saloons, two blacksmith shops, two banks, two lumberyards, a livery barn, three stores, two hardware stores, one creamery, three elevators, one harness shop, one cafe, and two hotels.

Like many small agricultural communities in the area, Reliance experienced a great deal of economic prosperity in the years after World War I. In 1918, the town became the first in Lyman County to provide a 4-year accredited high school.

Today, Reliance is a popular fishing spot thanks to the dam built by the Works Project Administration (WPA) during the 1930s. The dam was heavily stocked with several species of fish and provides sportsmen with the opportunity to enjoy the recreational treasures of South Dakota.

While the small city of Reliance boasted a population of 317 at its peak in 1920, the town has seen small declines in recent years, and is home to 206 residents today. Despite its small size, in the years since its founding, Reliance has proven its ability to thrive and serve farmers and ranchers throughout the region. The proud residents of Reliance will celebrate their vibrant history and the legacy of the pioneer spirit to which our small cities stand as a living shrine with its 100th anniversary on July 25, 2005.●

HONORING THE TOWN OF PRESCHO, SOUTH DAKOTA

● Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to honor and publicly recognize the 100th anniversary of the founding of the town of Presho, SD. As the 100th anniversary approaches, Presho looks back on a proud history and looks forward to a promising future.

Named by the town's first Postmaster, Chris Hellekson, Presho is named for the extinct county in which it was originally located, Presho County. Now located in Lyman County, Presho was platted in June of 1905 when the Milwaukee Land Company purchased a plot of land from Sidney F. Hockersmith. On November 9, 1905, the Milwaukee Land Company divided the land into 16 lots and held a public auction. Peter B. Dirks and E.M. Sedgwick purchased the first lot for $500, and within eight minutes of completing the sale, Presho's first bank was moved onto the site, having already completed its initial transaction while en route.

Despite being only .7 square miles in area, Presho drew an enormous population as newcomers took the Milwaukee Railroad as far west as it went. Until 1906, the westernmost point was Presho, SD. Once the railroad was extended farther, however, Presho's population, which totaled 2,000 at its peak, gradually decreased. Currently, about 600 residents live in this flourishing community.

One of the town's most notable historic events was its first Fourth of July celebration and auto race, which took place in 1906. In fact, it is thought that this auto race is the first ever held west of the Missouri River. At least 5,000 people were in attendance.

Mr. President, Presho's proud residents celebrate their community's centennial anniversary on July 4, 2005, and it is with great honor that I share with my colleagues the history of this great community. ●

CAM NEELY'S INDUCTION INTO THE NHL HALL OF FAME

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, Cam Neely was recently inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame. That is the highest honor for a professional athlete, but I believe it is appropriate for us to honor him in the Halls of Congress as well. Cam Neely is a special citizen, one worthy of recognition and emulation.

As a hockey player, Cam Neely was unique. His rare combination of strength, size and skill made him difficult to stop and feared by all opponents. Whether fighting through pain or battles on the boards, Cam Neely's play taught us the meaning of hard work and perseverance. His career may have been cut short by injury, but there is no doubt that Cam Neely was one of the finest players to wear a Boston Bruins uniform, and indeed one of the greatest "power forwards" ever to play the game.

Since hanging up his skates, Cam Neely has devoted his life to service. The Cam Neely Foundation has raised over $11 million in the last decade to help cancer patients and their families during treatment. Thousands of New England families have found hope during difficult times due to the generosity and hard work of Cam Neely.

In his first career, Cam Neely brought us all the joy of victory. In his second career, Cam Neely brings joy to families who need it most, while providing a model of service to his countless fans. Cam Neely is an American in whom we can all be proud and who deserves our recognition today for a career that has been hall of fame in every respect. ●

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMEN'S LACROSSE

● Mr. OBAMA. Mr. President, on May 22, 2005, the women's lacrosse team from Northwestern University captured the NCAA Division I championship. This was the first championship for the Wildcats' women's lacrosse team and the first women's lacrosse champion to come from outside of the eastern time zone.

This championship also marks a milestone for Northwestern sports. It is the first ever women's team championship for the university and only the second team championship in school history. The men's fencing team was national champion in 1941.

This talented and dedicated team from the great State of Illinois secured the championship by defeating traditional lacrosse powerhouses, Dartmouth and Princeton. The Wildcats completed their undefeated, 21 win season with a 13-10 victory over defending champion Virginia. Since regaining varsity status in 2002, this outstanding program has taken only four seasons to capture the championship.

Congratulations to Abby Bangser, Donna McCann, Sarah Albrecht, Kristen Kjellman, Sara Crosby, Aly Josephs, Kristen Boege, Ashley Koester, Courtney Koester, Hilary Alley, Ashley Gersuk, Courtney Flynn, Christy Finch, Lindsey Munday, Emily Lovett, Laura Glassanos, Shelby Chlopak, Kaitie Lenahan, Lynda McCandlish, Abby Alley, Sarah Walsh, Lindsay Finocchiaro, Jenny Bush, Fallon McGraw, Quinn Cammarota, Lindsay

North, Meredith Philipp, Hannah Whitman, Rebecca Zazove, Annie Elliott, Bailey Su, Kate Darmody, Minnie Doherty, Kim Corcoran, Head Coach Kelly Amonte Hiller, Assistant Coach Alexis Venechanos, Assistant Coach Danielle Shearer, and Assistant Coach Scott Hiller.

Please join me in congratulating the Northwestern women's lacrosse team on its historic championship season.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Ms. COLLINS (for herself and Ms. LANDRIEU):

S. 1225. A bill to expand access to affordable health care and to strengthen the health care safety net and make health care services more available in rural and underserved areas; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from Louisiana, Senator LANDRIEU, in introducing the Access to Affordable Health Care Act, a comprehensive, seven-point plan that builds on the strengths of our current public programs and private health care system to make quality, affordable health care available to millions more Americans.

One of my top priorities in the Senate has been to expand access to affordable health care for all Americans. There are still far too many Americans without health insurance or with woefully inadequate coverage. As many as 45 million Americans—almost 16 percent of our population—are uninsured, and millions more are underinsured.

Health care coverage matters. The simple fact is that people with health insurance are healthier than those who are uninsured. People without health insurance are less likely to seek care when they need it, and to forgo services such as periodic check ups and preventive services. As a consequence, they are more likely to be hospitalized or require costly medical attention for conditions that could have been prevented or treated at a curable stage. Not only does this put the health of these individuals at greater risk, but it also puts additional pressure on our hospitals and emergency rooms, many of them already financially challenged.

Compared with people who have health coverage, uninsured adults are four times, and uninsured children five times, more likely to use the emergency rooms. The costs of care for these individuals are often absorbed by providers and passed on to the covered population through increased fees and insurance premiums.

Maine is in the midst of a growing health insurance crisis, with insurance premiums rising at alarming rates. Whether I am talking to a self-employed fisherman, a displaced worker, the owner of a struggling small business, or the human resource manager of a large company, the soaring costs of health insurance is a common concern.

Maine's employers are currently facing premium increases of as much as 20 percent a year. These premiums have been particularly burdensome for small businesses, the backbone of the Maine economy. Many small business owners are caught in a cost-squeeze: they know that if they pass on the premium increases to their employees, more of them will decline coverage. Yet these small businesses simply cannot afford to absorb double-digit increases in their health insurance premiums year after year.

The problem of rising costs is even more acute for individuals and families who must purchase health insurance on their own. Monthly health insurance premiums in Maine often exceed a family's mortgage payment. It is no wonder that as many as 150,000 Mainers are uninsured. Clearly, we must do more to make our health care system more efficient and health insurance more available and affordable.

The Access to Affordable Health Care Act, which we are introducing today, is a seven-point plan that combines a variety of public and private approaches to make quality health care coverage more affordable and available. The legislation's seven goals are:

No. 1. To expand access to affordable health care for small businesses;

No. 2. To make health insurance more affordable for individuals and families purchasing coverage on their own;

No. 3. To strengthen the health care safety net for those without coverage;

No. 4. To expand access to care in rural and under-served areas;

No. 5. To increase access to affordable long-term care;

No. 6. To promote healthier lifestyles;

And No. 7, to provide more equitable Medicare payments to Maine providers to reduce the Medicare shortfall, which has forced hospitals, physicians and other providers to shift costs onto other payers in the form of higher charges, which, in turn drives up health care premiums.

Let me discuss each of these seven points in more detail.

First, our legislation will help small employers cope with rising health care costs.

Since most Americans get their health insurance through the workplace, it is a common assumption that people without health insurance are unemployed. The fact is, however, that most uninsured Americans are members of families with at least one full-time worker. As many as 82 percent of Americans who do not have health insurance are in a family with a worker.

Uninsured working Americans are most often employees of small businesses. In fact, some 60 percent of uninsured workers are employed by small firms. Smaller firms generally face higher costs for health insurance than larger firms, which makes them less likely to offer coverage. Small businesses want to provide health insurance for their employees, but the cost of often just too high.

The legislation we are introducing today will help small employers cope with rising costs by providing new tax credits for small businesses to help make health insurance more affordable. It will encourage those small businesses that do not currently offer health insurance to do so and will help employers that do offer insurance to continue coverage for their employees even in the face of rising costs.

Our legislation will also help increase the clout of small businesses in negotiating with insurers. Premiums are generally higher for small businesses because they do not have as much purchasing power as large companies, which limits their ability to bargain for lower rates. They also have higher administrative costs because they have fewer employees among whom to spread the fixed cost of a health benefits plan. Moreover, they are not as able to spread the risks of medical claims over as many employees as large firms.

Our legislation will help address these problems by authorizing Federal grants to provide start-up funding to States to assist them with the planning, development and operation of small employer purchasing cooperatives. These cooperatives will help to reduce health care costs for small employers by allowing them to band together to purchase health insurance jointly. Group purchasing cooperatives have a number of advantages for small employers. For example, the increased number of participants in the group help to lower the premium costs for all. Moreover, they decrease the risk of adverse selection and spread the cost of health care over a broader group.

The legislation would also authorize a Small Business Administration grant program for States, local governments and non-profit organizations to provide information about the benefits of health insurance to small employers, including tax benefits, increased productivity of employees, and decreased turnover. These grants would also be used to make employers aware of their current rights under State and Federal laws. While costs are clearly a problem, many small employers are not fully aware of laws that have already been enacted by both States and Federal Government to make health insurance more affordable. For example, in one survey, 57 percent of small employers did not know that they could deduct 100 percent of their health insurance premiums as a business expense.

The legislation would also create a new program to encourage innovation by awarding demonstration grants in up to 10 States conducting innovative coverage expansions, such as alternative group purchasing or pooling arrangements, individual or small group market reforms, or subsidies to employers or individuals purchasing coverage. The States have long been laboratories for reform, and they should be encouraged in the development of innovative programs that can serve as models for the Nation.

The Access to Affordable Health Care Act will also expand access to affordable health care for individuals and families.

One of the first bills I cosponsored as a Senator was legislation to establish the State Children's Health Insurance Program, S-CHIP, which provides insurance for the children of low-income parents who cannot afford health insurance, yet make too much money to qualify for Medicaid. This important program has provided affordable health insurance coverage to an estimated six million children nationwide, including almost 13,000 who are currently enrolled in the MaineCare program. Even so, nationwide, millions of qualified children have yet to be enrolled in this program, many because their parents simply don't know that they are eligible for the assistance.

Our legislation builds on the success of this program and gives States a number of new tools to increase participation. The bill authorizes new grants for States and non-profit organizations to conduct innovative outreach and enrollment efforts to ensure that all eligible children are covered. States would also have the option of covering the parents of the children who are enrolled in programs like MaineCare. States could also use funds provided through this program to help eligible working families pay their share of an employer-based health insurance plan. In short, the legislation will help ensure that the entire family receives the health care they need.

And finally, to help make health coverage more affordable for low- and middle-income individuals and families who do not have employer-provided coverage and who are not eligible for the expanded public programs, our legislation would provide an advanceable, refundable tax credit of up to $1,000 for individuals earning up to $30,000 and up to $3,000 for families earning up to $60,000. This could provide coverage for up to 6 million Americans who would otherwise be uninsured for one or more months, and will help many more working lower-income families who currently purchase private health insurance with little or no government help.

The Access to Affordable Health Insurance Act will also help to strengthen our Nation's health care safety net by doubling funding over 5 years for the Consolidated Health Centers program, which includes community, migrant, public housing and homeless health centers. These centers, which operate in underserved urban and rural communities, provide critical primary care services to millions of Americans, regardless of their ability to pay. About 20 percent of the patients treated at Maine's community health centers have no insurance coverage and many more have inadequate coverage, so these centers are a critical part of our Nation's health care safety net.

The problem of access to affordable health care services is not limited to the uninsured, but is also shared by many Americans living in rural and underserved areas where there is a serious shortage of health care providers. The Access to Affordable Health Care Act therefore calls for increased funding for the National Health Service Corps, which supports doctors, dentists, and other clinicians who serve in rural and inner city areas.

The legislation will also give the program greater flexibility by allowing National Health Service Corps participants to fulfill their commitment on a part-time basis. Current law requires all National Health Service Corps participants to serve full-time. Many rural communities, however, simply do not have enough volume to support a full-time health care practitioner. Moreover, some sites may not need a particular type of provider—for example, a dentist—on a full-time basis. Some practitioners may also find part-time service more attractive, which, in turn, could improve recruitment and retention. Our bill therefore gives the program additional flexibility to meet community needs.

Long-term care is the major catastrophic health care expense faced by older Americans today, and these costs will only increase with the aging of the baby boomers. Most Americans mistakenly believe that medicare or their private health insurance policies will cover the cost of long-term care should they develop a chronic illness or cognitive impairment like Alzheimer's Disease. Unfortunately, far too many do not discover that they do not have coverage until they are confronted with the difficult decision of placing a much-loved parent or spouse in long-term care and facing the shocking realization that they will have to cover the costs themselves.

The Access to Affordable Health Care Act will provide a tax credit for long-term care expenses of up to $3,000 to provide some help to those families struggling to provide long-term care to a loved one. It will also encourage more Americans to plan for their future long-term care needs by providing a tax deduction to help them purchase long-term care insurance.

Health insurance alone is not going to ensure good health. As noted author and physician Dr. Michael Crichton has observed, "the future of medicine lies not in treating illness, but preventing it." Many of our most serious health problems are directly related to unhealthy behaviors—smoking, lack of regular exercise and poor diet. These three major risk factors alone have made Maine the state with the fourth highest death rate due to four largely preventable diseases: cardiovascular disease, cancer, chronic lung disease and diabetes. These four chronic diseases are responsible for 70 percent of the health care problems in Maine.

Our bill therefore contains a number of provisions designed to promote healthy lifestyles. An ever-expanding body of evidence shows that these kinds of investments in health promotion and prevention offer returns not only in reduced health care bills, but in longer life and increased productivity. The legislation will provide grants to States to assist small businesses wishing to establish "worksites wellness" programs for their employees. It would also authorize a grant program to support new and existing "community partnerships," such as the Healthy Community Coalition in Maine's Franklin County, to promote healthy lifestyles among hospitals, employers, schools and community organizations. And, it would provide funds for States to establish or expand comprehensive school health education, including, for example, physical education programs that promote lifelong physical activity, healthy food service selections, and programs that promote a healthy and safe school environment.

Finally, the Access to Affordable Health Care Act would promote greater equity in Medicare payments and help to ensure that the Medicare system rewards rather than punishes States like Maine that deliver high-quality, cost-effective Medicare services to our elderly and disabled citizens.

According to a study in the Journal of the American Medical Association, Maine ranks third in the Nation when it comes to the quality of care delivered to our Medicare beneficiaries. Yet we are 11th from the bottom when it comes to per-beneficiary Medicare spending.

The fact is that Maine's Medicare dollars are being used to subsidize higher reimbursements in other parts of the country. This simply is not fair. Medicare's reimbursement systems have historically tended to favor urban areas and failed to take the special needs of rural States into account. Ironically, Maine's low payment rates are also the result of its long history of providing high-quality, cost-effective care. In the early 1980s, Maine's lower than average costs were used to justify lower payment rates. Since then, Medicare's payment policies have only served to perpetuate the gap.

The Medicare Modernization Act of 2003 did take some significant steps toward promoting greater fairness by increasing Medicare payments to rural hospitals and by modifying geographic adjustment factors that discriminated against physicians and other providers in rural areas. The legislation we are introducing today will build on those improvements by establishing State pilot programs that reward providers of high-quality, cost efficient Medicare services. It will also establish a program to expand graduate medical education programs in rural and underserved areas of the nation.

Mr. President, the Access to Affordable Health Care Act outlines a blueprint for reform based on principles upon which I believe a bipartisan majority in Congress could agree. The plan takes significant strides toward the goal of universal health care coverage by bringing millions more Americans into the insurance system, by strengthening the health care safety net, and by addressing inequities in the Medicare system.

By Mr. AKAKA:

S. 1226. A bill to provide jurisdiction over Federal contractors who engage in human trafficking offenses; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Federal Contractor Extraterritorial Jurisdiction for Human Trafficking Offenses Act of 2005, which builds upon bipartisan efforts to combat the abhorrent practice of human trafficking.

Human trafficking is unfortunately among the fastest growing international criminal activities. According to the U.S. State Department's 2005 Trafficking in Persons Report, 600,000 to 800,000 victims are transported across international borders each year. These victims often come from the world's most vulnerable populations and regions affected by wars or humanitarian disasters.

With the promise of well-paying jobs, victims are often enticed to foreign countries, where upon arrival, their passports or travel papers are confiscated, and they are forced, many times beaten, until they agree to work without pay or serve as prostitutes. The perpetrators of human trafficking are typically motivated by profits derived from the use of forced labor or commercial sex exploitation. Because one of the common motivations of trafficking is forced prostitution: 80 percent of the victims are women and 50 percent of the victims are children.

In 2001, awareness of human trafficking grew in London during a murder investigation where the victim was a small African boy. While trying to determine the identity of the victim, investigators discovered that, in London alone, 300 African children between the ages of 4 and 7 could not be accounted for. That staggering statistic provides an insight into the pervasiveness of child trafficking and demonstrates that it can occur in all countries, including the most affluent.

This issue has long been a concern of mine. Nearly 6 years ago, I learned of a human trafficking ring that enslaved foreign workers and smuggled them to the U.S. Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, CNMI. The workers were forced to work in factories or serve as prostitutes. Senators Frank Murkowski, Jeff Bingaman, and I introduced S. 1052 to tighten immigration law in the CNMI to prevent future human trafficking rings. Although our bill passed the Senate, it was not taken up in the House.

Unfortunately, that was only one of numerous human trafficking conspiracies discovered within the United States. The State Department estimates that 14,500 to 17,500 human trafficking victims are brought into our country every year.

We cannot address this issue without recognizing the efforts of my friend and departed colleague, Senator Paul Wellstone, who through his leadership, the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000, P.L. 106-386, was enacted. This law first established our Nation's commitment to the prosecution of traffickers and the protection of victims of trafficking.

Since 2000, and the passage of this Act, there has been a surge in government activity relating to the prevention and prosecution of human trafficking offenses. In 2003 alone, there were approximately 3,000 convictions of human traffickers worldwide.

We have learned a great deal more about the conditions under which members of a population are likely to become victims of trafficking. Those who are displaced from their homes or suffering from poverty are much more likely to become victims of trafficking. Unfortunately, military forces and organizations charged with protecting and providing for vulnerable populations have, at times, actually encouraged the trafficking of humans.

There have been instances in the Congo and in Bosnia where increased demand for prostitution and forced labor caused by foreign peacekeeping troops and humanitarian aid workers accelerated the exploitation of already vulnerable populations.

There have even been reports where contractors, working on behalf of the United States Government, have contributed to, and even participated in, the trafficking of humans abroad. Nothing is more contrary to the freedoms we cherish than the trafficking of humans, which is why I introduce today the Federal Contractor Extraterritorial Jurisdiction for Human Trafficking Offenses Act.

My bill closes a loophole in U.S. criminal law. Under current law, Federal contractors who engage in human trafficking offenses abroad are subject to prosecution in the United States only if "employed by or accompanying the Armed Forces." The bill closes this loophole by permitting the prosecution of Federal contractors of "any executive agency."

I believe all U.S. contractors should be treated the same, and all should be held to the same standards. A paycheck from the United States should never be used to purchase a human life.

I wish to point out that this legislation respects the sovereignty of foreign governments to prosecute these crimes locally. If a prosecution has occurred or is pending by the foreign government, U.S. authorities are precluded from prosecuting except upon approval of the U.S. Attorney General.

Rather, my measure authorizes the prosecution of a U.S. contractor who engages in human trafficking abroad but flees the foreign country to avoid prosecution. This happened, according to at least one report, where an employee of a Federal contractor in Bosnia bought a woman to serve as a sex slave. This individual fled the country after local authorities discovered the crime, and he returned to the U.S. to avoid prosecution. My bill would empower U.S. prosecutors to bring such an individual to justice.

Mr. President, I ask by unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1226

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Federal Contractor Extraterritorial Jurisdiction for Human Trafficking Offenses Act of 2005”.

SEC. 2. FEDERAL CONTRACTOR EXTRA-TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION.

Chapter 77 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“§ 1596. Federal contractor extraterritorial jurisdiction

“(a) Whoever, while a Federal contractor, engages in conduct outside the United States that would constitute a violation of this chapter punishable by imprisonment for more than 1 year if the conduct had been engaged in within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States shall be punished as provided for that offense.

“(b) No prosecution may be commenced against a person under this section if a foreign government, in accordance with jurisdiction recognized by the United States, has prosecuted or is prosecuting such person for the conduct constituting such offense, except upon the approval of the Attorney General or the Deputy Attorney General (or a person acting in either such capacity), which function of approval may not be delegated.

“(c) An individual who is a victim of a violation of this chapter by a Federal contractor may bring a civil action against the perpetrator under section 1595 if a civil action would have been authorized under section 1595 had the conduct been engaged in within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

“(d) As used in this section, the term ‘Federal contractor’ means a person who—

“(1) is employed as a contractor (including a subcontractor at any tier), or as an employee of a contractor (or subcontractor at any tier), of any executive agency, as that term is defined in section 4(1) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(1));

“(2) is present or residing outside the United States in connection with such employment; and

“(3) is not a national of or ordinarily resident in the country where the violation occurred.”.

By Ms. STABENOW (for herself and Ms. SNOWE):

S. 1227. A bill to improve quality in health care by providing incentives for adoption of modern information technology; to the Committee on Finance.

Mrs. STABENOW. Mr. President, I am very pleased to introduce the “Health Information Technology Act of 2005” with my friend and colleague from Maine, Senator Snowe. This legislation will reduce costs for our businesses, improve systems for our providers, and improve quality of care for patients.

We know we need to reduce health care costs in this country. In 2004, United States national health expenditures, known as NHEs, amounted to $1.8 trillion, or about $6,300 per person, accounting for 15.8% of our GDP. This is almost twice the average among European Union countries.

And costs are expected to continue to skyrocket. The Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services, CMS, estimates that by 2013, NHEs in the United States will reach $3.4 trillion and account for 18.8 percent of our GDP.

It is without question that the increasing cost of employer-based health insurance hurts the global competitiveness of U.S. companies. General Motors now spends more than $1,500 per vehicle on health care costs, while their non-U.S. based competitors spend as much as $1,000 less.

Our large companies certainly aren’t alone in struggling to meet the health care needs of their employees—the average member of the Small Business Association of Michigan, SBAM spends nearly $8,000 per employee per year on health insurance premiums. SBAM explains very clearly one of the reasons for these high costs: “the way in which health care information is communicated is expensive, inefficient, and many times simply does not happen.”

The members of the Health Information Technology Leadership Panel, convened pursuant to the National Coordinator for Health Information Technology’s Framework for Strategic Action, recently agreed that “increasing health care costs pose a great and growing challenge to their industries and the broader U.S. economy..”.

But it’s not just the level of health care spending—at the same time that we are spending twice as much as many other countries, 45 million of our citizens lack health insurance, and a recent national study by RAND suggests that U.S. adults receive only 55 percent of recommended care.

The answer is not to cut payments or to ask patients to take less care, but to ensure the right information is where it needs to be at the time it needs to be there so that providers can give the best possible treatment and care. That will both reduce costs and improve quality of care.

However, most of our Nation’s health care providers don’t have access to information technology and services because it’s hard enough just to keep up with their daily costs, much less to invest in something new.

And, there’s another reason providers haven’t been quick to adopt these systems. The nature of our health care system means that in large part the value of these technologies—through the lower costs they will achieve—accrue to the payers of health care, rather than to the providers.

The costs of necessary information not being available are great. Too often, care is duplicated like an x-ray given twice, because an emergency room doctor didn’t have the results of an earlier x-ray, or the best and most appropriate care isn’t given. Our health care professionals can’t possibly provide the best care if they don’t have complete and accurate information about the patient sitting in front of them.

Multiple studies have found that as much as $300 billion is spent each year on health care that does not improve patient outcomes on treatment that is unnecessary, inappropriate, inefficient, or ineffective.

A March 2001 Institute of Medicine, IOM, study concluded that in order to improve quality, there must be a national commitment to building an information infrastructure. An October 2003 Government Accountability Office report found that the benefits of an electronic healthcare information system included improved quality of care, reduced costs associated with medication errors, more accurate and complete medical documentation, more accurate capture of codes and charges, and improved communication among providers enabling them to respond more quickly to patients’ needs.

By providing the most appropriate care at the most appropriate time, we can reap huge savings. A January 2005 Report by the Center for Information Technology Leadership, CITL, found that moving to standardized health information exchange and interoperability would save nearly $80 billion annually in the United States.

The benefits of adoption and use of health care information technologies, systems and services will be widespread: employers will realize cost savings, clinicians will gain new electronic support tools and patient information to help guide medical decisions, and patients will benefit from a more efficient health care system and from a safer health care system with fewer unnecessary treatments and more attention to preventive care. And, taxpayers and our federal programs will benefit. Researchers have suggested that up to 30 percent of annual Medicare health care spending could be saved by eliminating unnecessary and duplicative procedures, and improving quality by eliminating errors.

The benefits of health information technologies and services become most compelling on an individual level. I met an extraordinary woman just a month ago. Renae Wallace, a small business owner in Kingsley, MI told me about her son Randall. Randall is just about to turn 8, but because he was born with complex heart and lung defects, he has seen the inside of a surgery room more times than most people see in a lifetime.

Renae takes her son to providers in Traverse City, Grand Rapids, and Ann Arbor. But because there is no way for these providers to talk to each other, she has to carry around a file two inches thick of medical records—X-rays, MRI scans, surgical notes—on Randall. Otherwise, the health care professionals who are taking care of Randall wouldn’t have the benefit of the results of the treatment that Randall has gotten previously. Because they wouldn’t have all the information they need, Randall might not get the most appropriate care. Renae has made sure that all of the providers taking care of her son have as much of the information as possible—but it would make a lot more sense if the doctors and hospitals and nurses were able to have that information without Renae having to carry it around.

We need to ensure that our health care professionals have all of the relevant clinical information available to them in whatever setting a patient needs care, at the time the patient needs the care so that they can provide the best and most appropriate treatment possible. We know that adoption of health information technology can play a critical role in improving patient outcomes and at the same time greatly reduce costs. But it can't happen without the federal government playing a role.

The members of the Health Information Technology Leadership Panel concurred that without Federal leadership, neither their individual companies nor the industrial sector as a whole can achieve the breadth of HIT adoption that would be required to realize the needed transformation of health care.

The bill that Senator SNOWE and I are introducing recognizes that both Federal leadership and Federal investment are necessary and appropriate. The focus of the investment provided by the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005" is on improving health care for patients with heart disease, cancer, stroke, diabetes, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, asthma, and other diseases and conditions by driving transformation of systems in physician offices and other health care settings. Our bill includes a number of funding incentive approaches intended to improve health care through adoption of information technology.

First, we create a 5-year, $4 billion competitive grant program for hospitals, physicians, skilled nursing facilities, community health centers and community mental health centers to offset investments in new technologies and information services. Importantly, the grant program is funded by a mandatory appropriation from the Medicare trust funds. This is critical to ensuring that funds will actually be available for the grant program. It also makes sense as the trust funds will see savings through lower outlays due to less duplicative and unnecessary care.

The grant program would authorize funding for the: purchase, lease, and installment of computer software and hardware and related services; upgrade of existing computer technology; purchase communications capabilities necessary for clinical data access, storage, and exchange; services associated with acquiring, implementing, operating, or optimizing the use of new or existing computer software and hardware and clinical health care informatics systems; provision of education and training for staff on information systems and technology designed to improve patient safety; and purchase, lease, subscription, integration service of clinical decision support tools that provide ongoing continuous quality improvement functions.

Second, we allow accelerated depreciation of qualified health care information system expenditures in 2005-2010.

Third, we adjust Medicare payments to providers who use HIT that improves the quality and accuracy of clinical decision-making. We begin by addressing payments for treatment of Medicare beneficiaries with heart disease, cancer, stroke, diabetes, and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease because we know these conditions consume a large portion of our Medicare resources.

We know that the Medicare program will reap the benefit of providers using health information networks. The Office of the National Coordinator for Health Information Technology said on March 2 of this year that the annual savings attributable to widespread electronic health record adoption are likely to lie between 7.5 percent-30 percent of annual health care spending.

It only makes sense to establish new payment codes to account for the costs of purchasing and using health information technology and services with patient-specific applications.

Our legislation also will make it much easier for physicians and other health care professionals to treat patients by reducing the communication barriers that currently exist. The "Health Information Technology Act" provides that the Secretary shall adopt data standards for interoperability between providers and links funding to the adoption of those standards.

We know that electronic health care information systems can reap huge benefits. The GAO found these systems improve quality of care, reduce costs and improve communication among providers.

But we also know that we can't expect our health care providers to make this investment alone as they struggle to meet their daily needs. Our country must have a national commitment to building an information infrastructure, and the Federal Government needs to step up to the plate and provide much-needed funds to get the ball rolling.

We could only have dreamed about clinical computerized information systems when the Medicare and Medicaid programs began. Today, we have them at our disposal. The sooner we get them into our hospitals, physician offices, nursing homes, community health centers and community mental health centers, the sooner our patients, providers, and pocketbooks will see the rewards.

I am very pleased to announce the support of the following organizations: American College of Physicians, Federation of American Hospitals, National Council for Community Behavioral Healthcare, the National Association of Children's Hospitals, American Heart Association, National Rural Health Association, National Business Coalition on Health, American Academy of Family Physicians, National Association of Community Health Centers, American Health Care Association, IBM, Health Vision, Healthcare

Information and Management Systems Society, eHealth Initiative, AdvaMed, American Health Information Management Association, Verizon, Altarum, Michigan Health and Hospital Association, Automation Alley, Small Business Association of Michigan, Detroit Chamber, Michigan State Medical Society, Detroit Medical Center, Marquette General Health System, Oakwood Healthcare System, Henry Ford Health System, MPRO, Michigan's Medicare Quality Improvement Organization; Microsoft Corporation, Axolotl Corp, Delmarva Foundation, Dell Inc, DiagnosisOne, Greenway Medical Technologies, HealthInsight, Healthgate, Inland Northwest Health Services, Kyrptiq, Lumetra, Medical Review of North Carolina, Misys Healthcare Systems, National Alliance for Primary Care Informatics, Partners Healthcare System, Siemens Corporation, Philips Medical Systems, WebMD Corporation, and the Virgin Islands Medical Institute.

I am also very pleased to have the support of the AFL-CIO, Trinity Health, NextGen, The Society of Thoracic Surgeons, American Association of Homes and Services for the Aging, St. John Health, Michigan Primary Care Association, the American Health Quality Association, and Comtek and look forward to receiving their forthcoming letters.

I ask unanimous consent to have the text of the bill and additional material printed in the RECORD.

Hon. OLYMPIA SNOWE,

U.S. Senate,

Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS STABENOW AND SNOWE: On behalf of the 94,000 members of the American Academy of Family Physicians, congratulations on the introduction of the Health Information Technology Act. The AAFP strongly supports this legislation and we would be pleased to help you in your efforts to have Congress pass it.

The legislation recognizes that the main obstacles to widespread adoption of electronic health record systems are the significant up-front costs and the lack of general interoperability of many fragmented electronic systems. In the first case, the estimated costs of about $25,000 per physician to purchase an electronic health record system is a serious problem for family physicians in small practices that have very tight financial margins in which to operate. In the second case, even if the financing is available, a family physician will be reluctant to invest in health information technology that cannot communicate with a nearby lab or the specialist across town.

By helping physicians with the financing of these systems and by facilitating the development of interoperability standards, your legislation would go a long way to improving the quality and efficiency of health care delivery in this county.

Thank you for your leadership in this effort. We are committed to working with you to secure passage of this important legislation.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL FLEMING,
Board Chair.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMMUNITY HEALTH CENTERS, INC.,
Bethesda, MD, June 13, 2005.

Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR STABENOW, On behalf of health centers all across the country and the 15 million Americans who rely on them for health care, I want to express our strong support for the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005." The legislation would help to ensure that health centers have the additional resources they need to further harness the potential of information technology to improve the overall quality of health care delivered to patients in underserved communities.

Health centers recognize the value of healthcare information technology in facilitating the delivery of cost-effective, quality health care services. Indeed, through participation in the Health Resources and Services Administration's Health Disparities Collaboratives, health centers have demonstrated reductions in disparities and improved access to services through the use of electronic patient registries. However, the high cost of establishing these IT systems throughout the entire health center is a significant barrier for centers with few financial resources.

With that in mind, NACHC applauds you for including health centers as eligible recipients of competitive grant funding and tax incentives for the design and installation of new healthcare IT systems, the upgrade of existing computer hardware and software, and training and education of health center staff. We also appreciate that your legislation would require the establishment of national healthcare IT standards that promote the interoperability of health care information across all health care settings within 2 years.

Thank you once again for introducing the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005." We stand ready to work with you to advance this vital legislation in the 109th Congress.

Sincerely,

DANIEL R. HAWKINS, Jr.,
Vice-President for Federal, State, and Public Affairs.

AMERICAN HEALTH CARE ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, June 10, 2005.

Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR STABENOW: On behalf of the American Health Care Association (AHCA) and the National Center for Assisted Living (NCAL), the nation's largest association representing providers of quality long term care, I am writing to acknowledge our support for the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005."

This legislation, which you will soon introduce, has the potential to transform health and long term care by utilizing information technology to allow for the seamless transfer of health data while guaranteeing privacy and security. By creating incentives for providers to acquire health information technology and ensuring interoperability, you are taking critically important steps to improve patient safety and quality. With provisions such as allowing accelerated depreciation of qualified health care information system expenditures, you've clearly fast tracked the potential of this legislation reaching its ultimate goals."

Senator Stabenow, AHCA and NCAL fully support and commend you for the leadership you are providing with the introduction of the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005."

Sincerely,

HAL DAUB,
President & CEO.

IBM

Hon. OLYMPIA SNOWE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATORS SNOWE AND STABENOW: On behalf of IBM, I would like to congratulate you on the introduction of the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005, and we support its passage.

The Act includes number of funding incentive approaches intended to stimulate healthcare improvements enabled by information technology. Most important, the Act would adjust Medicare payments to providers who participate in a health information network that improves the quality and accuracy of clinical decision-making. With so many Americans in this one program, creating rewards for quality in Medicare will have a lifesaving impact for patients throughout the country.

The Act also authorizes grants for information technology software, hardware, and services to improve quality in health care and patient safety. Eligible grantees would include hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, federally qualified health centers, physicians, and physician group practices. Funding would be authorized for the years 2006 to 2010 as part of the Medicare program as permitted within the Budget Reserve Fund enacted in the 2006 Budget Resolution.

The legislation would also reduce the communication barriers that make it difficult for physicians to treat patients. The Act provides that the Secretary shall adopt data standards for interoperability between providers and links funding to the adoption of those standards. At the same time, the Act would implement procedures for the Secretary to accept the optional submission of data derived from health care reporting requirements. The funding will allow providers to adopt technology with standards that promote the efficient exchange of data.

Finally, the Act would amend the Internal Revenue Code to permit the expensing of health care informatics systems that meet standards adopted by the Secretary of HHS.

We thank you for advancing these important Medicare-related provisions and look forward to supporting the Act's passage this Congress.

Sincerely,

CHRISTOPHER CAINE,
Vice President,
Government Programs.

Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

Hon. OLYMPIA SNOWE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS STABENOW AND SNOWE: Healthvision, Inc. is dedicated to providing and supporting connected healthcare communities where information can be securely shared among, physicians, patients, consumers, hospitals and other interested constituents in the healthcare landscape. We congratulate you both for introducing The Health Information Technology Act. This legislation would provide grants to physicians, hospitals and skilled nursing facilities for purposes of improving patient safety and reducing medical errors.

We understand the positive role that health information technology (HIT) can play in promoting safety and the quality of care. We also are cognizant that financial barriers prevent physicians and patients from receiving and utilizing health information technology that is important to reducing medical errors and creating efficiencies in the healthcare system. The Health Information Technology Act (HIT Act) provides a solution to overcoming the barriers that prevent the use and utilization of HIT to improve healthcare. By providing incentives for providers to adopt HIT, promoting the adoption of national data and health communication standards to facilitate interoperability, leveraging federal investments in Medicare and Medicaid and creating special set asides for certain groups including rural providers and health professional shortage areas, the HIT Act provides considerable leverage to help build momentum in improving healthcare as we know it today.

Quality and safety challenges, according to the Institute of Medicine, cause an estimated 44,000 to 98,000 deaths yearly due to medical errors. Legislation to adopt HIT is essential to improving healthcare by replacing antiquated paper records with electronic patient records that can be shared across healthcare communities and among the necessary stakeholders in such communities.

The Healthcare Information Act of 2005 would be an important step toward addressing some of the quality and safety challenges identified by the Institute of Medicine. It is our belief that upfront investment in HIT will improve the quality of care, while returning savings through reductions in clinical and administrative costs over time.

We applaud your leadership and look forward to working with you to provide incentives for adoption of modern health information technology to improve the quality of healthcare.

Very truly yours,

SCOTT DECKER,
President and Chief Executive Officer.

JONATHAN TEICH,
Sr. Vice President and Chief Medical Officer.

eHEALTH INITIATIVE,
Washington, DC, June 9, 2005.

Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

Hon. OLYMPIA SNOWE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS STABENOW AND SNOWE: The eHealth Initiative and the eHealth Initiative Foundation, a multi-stakeholder consortium dedicated to driving improvement in the quality, safety, and efficiency of healthcare through information and information technology, congratulate you for introducing The Health Information Technology Act of 2005. This legislation would provide grants to physicians, hospitals and skilled nursing facilities for purposes of improving patient safety and reducing medical errors.

The Health Information Technology Act of 2005 recognizes the key role played by health information technology (HIT) to improve healthcare by providing incentives for providers to adopt HIT, promoting the adoption of national data and health communication standards to facilitate interoperability, leveraging federal investments in Medicare and Medicaid and creating special set asides for certain groups including rural providers and health professional shortage areas.

Legislation to encourage the adoption of health information technology to improve healthcare quality is essential, given that 90 percent of the 30 billion U.S. health transactions each year are conducted by phone, fax or mail and only 15 percent of US physicians use electronic health records. These quality and safety Challenges according to the Institute of Medicine, cause an estimated 44,000 to 98,000 deaths yearly due to medical errors.

Various studies have shown the potential of health information technology to make improvements in healthcare quality. For example, a rural community hospital prevented administration of over 1,200 wrong drugs or dosages using automatic identification technology and wireless scanners to verify both the identities of patients and their correct medications (GAO-04-224).

The Health Information Technology Act of 2005 would be an important step toward addressing some of the quality and safety challenges identified by the Institute of Medicare. It is our belief that upfront investment in HIT will improve the quality of care, while returning savings through reductions in clinical and administrative costs over time.

On behalf of the undersigned and other members of the eHealth Initiative, we salute your leadership and look forward to working with you to provide incentives for adoption of modern health information technology to improve the quality of healthcare.

- Hon. OLYMPIA SNOWE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS STABENOW AND SNOWE: On behalf of the Healthcare Information and Management Systems Society and our 15,000 individual and over 260 corporate members and 45 chapters nationwide, we are pleased to support the Health Information Technology Act of 2005. HIMSS members are very aware of the need for catalyst legislation to improve patient safety and cost effective healthcare in the U.S. Legislation like the Health Information Technology Act of 2005 provides the type of congressional leadership that will improve healthcare delivery for the nation.

HIMSS supports the concepts of this legislation because it represents a positive step forward in the national agenda to provide a catalyst to encourage substantial investments into information technology and management systems to improve the quality, safety, and efficiency of patient care. Through our members and the Society's advocacy outreach, we will continue to support and work for the bill's passage.

We are particularly encouraged by the provisions in the legislation to create a grant program to infuse almost $4 billion in federal funding into the provider community to encourage adoption of information systems and services, as well as the emphasis on interoperability that address the needs of providers in diverse geographic settings, including setting aside at least 20 percent for rural communities.

The HIMSS Board of Directors applauds your efforts in realizing and acting on the need for infuse federal funding into the provider community to adopt much needed information technology.

We look forward to working with you to gain additional healthcare industry support for the legislation. If we can be of any further assistance, please contact Mr. Dave Roberts, HIMSS Director of Public Policy.

Sincerely,

- Senator OLYMPIA J. SNOWE,
- Senator DEBBIE A. STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS SNOWE AND STABENOW: On behalf of Verizon, I applaud your introduction of the Health Information Technology Act of 2005. This legislation recognizes the vital role of information technology in making a difference in improving quality and reducing the cost of health care, both of which are important to Verizon, as well as the Nation. Verizon has a vital stake in seeing improvements in the health care system, as we provide health care coverage for over 800,000 employees, retirees and their dependents. We hope the health care system can benefit from the technologies that have worked so well in transforming our industry.

In particular, we appreciate your recognition of telecommunications technology and its significance in improving quality and patient safety. Verizon believes that broadband, wireless and other telecommunications services can also make a real difference in reducing barriers and improving access to quality health care. We look forward to working with you in passing this important piece of legislation to improve the health care system.

ALTARUM,
Ann Arbor, MI, June 5, 2005.

- Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR STABENOW: I am writing to convey to you Altarum Institute's strong support for the Health Information Technology Act, which you are about to introduce into the United States Senate.

As you well know, Altarum is now helping the state of Michigan to define, develop and deploy the Michigan Health Information Network—the underlying technical, standards and governance foundation that will ensure that promising health information technology efforts across the state are both interoperable and sustainable.

While with the MHIN we help to prepare the "foundation" upon which these health IT applications will rest, your bill takes a tremendous stride forward in helping healthcare providers actually make these health IT tools a part of how they do their business. We sincerely hope and trust that providers who, due to the grant programs envisioned in your bill, can begin to see their way clear to adopting health IT tools in their practices will be ready to work as part of a broader community to ensure interoperability, common standards and a governing model such as the MHIN will provide.

Your leadership in this critically important area is both timely and appreciated. We look forward to consideration and passage of the Health Information Technology Act.

Sincerely,

- KENNETH R. BAKER,
President.

MICHIGAN HEALTH
& HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION,
Lansing, MI, June 8, 2005.

- Hon. DEBBIE STABENOW,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR STABENOW, The Michigan Health & Hospital Association welcomes your efforts to assist with the capital investment requirements hospitals face for health information technology. The MHA supports your pending legislation, The Health Information Technology Act of 2005, which would provide needed funding for new health IT design, purchase and collaboration, as well as recognition of these costs within the Medicare reimbursement system. This issue will continue to develop in importance for Michigan hospitals and we look forward to working with you to identify how best to provide federal assistance for technology infrastructure, while keeping patient-focused safety and quality improvement as the primary goal for all concerned.

Thank you for your continued support. I may be reached at 517/703-86009 if you would like to discuss this matter in further detail.

Sincerely,

- BRIAN PETERS,
Senior Vice President, Advocacy.

Ms. SNOWE, Mr. President, today I join my colleague, Senator STABENOW of Michigan, in introducing the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005", which will serve to improve the quality of health care through implementation of information technology; IT, in hospitals, health centers and physician practices throughout the country. At a time when the Institute of Medicine (IOM) has reported that up to 98,000 Americans die each year due to medical errors, we cannot afford to wait. When we also consider the escalating cost of health care in this country, we must recognize that this level of growth in spending has created a crisis. Information technology is one solution, and this legislation will assert the federal government's role in providing leadership in this area and provide financial incentives to spur rapid adoption of information technology in medicine. Our legislation is necessary because as a nation we face two stark problems.

The first of these is a serious patient safety problem. The good news is that solutions exist: We have the technological ability to dramatically reduce medical errors and thus save lives. Many have heard about how drug interactions can be avoided by software systems which check a patient's prescriptions for hazards. Yet there are so many other applications which can improve health. For example, by reviewing and analyzing information, a health provider can help a patient better manage chronic diseases such as diabetes and heart disease, and avoid adverse outcomes.

Our second major problem is the escalating cost of health care. Costs are reduced when tests don't have to be repeated and data isn't delayed. In fact, a patient may obtain faster, higher quality care when, for example, multiple practitioners can review diagnostic test results right at their desktops. In an age where millions of Americans share family pictures over the internet in seconds, isn't it long past time that a physician should be able to retrieve an x-ray just as easily?

The President certainly recognizes the disparity in technology in health versus other parts of our economy. He has declared a goal for every American to have an electronic medical record within 10 years. I concur—we need this and more. In fact, once that record is in place we can do so many things better. From preventing drug interactions, to managing chronic diseases, to simply helping providers operate more efficiently. Most of us have been told at one time or another, "we're waiting to get the test results mailed", or "we're still waiting for your chart". Health care is one of the last bastions of such inefficiency.

The bad news is that high start-up costs and a lack of standards have prevented us from reaping the benefits of new technologies. I am certainly looking forward to the progress we will make with Dr. David Brailer heading the new Office of the National Coordinator for Health Information Technology at the Department of Health and Human Services. The President has made technology implementation a priority, and there is no doubt that a lack of standards has prevented IT adoption by many health care providers. One must know that a system purchased will be compatible with others, and that—no matter what may happen in the future to a vendor—the huge investment one makes in building an electronic medical record won't be lost. In other words, your system must be able to communicate with other systems, and your investment in building electronic medical records must be preserved. So when a patient moves, their electronic "chart" should be able to move right along with them, and their continuity of care shouldn't be interrupted.

Yet standards alone aren't enough. Today many providers are struggling to make these investments, and for those which serve beneficiaries of Medicare, Medicaid and SCHIP, it can be exceedingly difficult.

The legislation which we are introducing today will bring the solution within our reach. In the last Congress I worked with Senator BOB GRAHAM to introduce legislation which provided a grants program to give assistance to hospitals and long term care facilities to enable investment in IT. As I join today with Senator STABENOW to introduce this legislation, we have made several crucial enhancements to the previous bill. The legislation now includes both federally-qualified health centers and community mental health centers as eligible to receive IT grants. In addition, physician practices can also participate. All three are key treatment environments where both costs and errors must be addressed.

Our new legislation even provides an alternative to those for-profit providers who do not wish to apply for a grant. Under this bill, such providers will be able to expense the cost of a qualified system.

The legislation supports expenditures for a variety of expenses required to implement health care information technology. These include such components as computer hardware and software, plus installation and training costs. In addition, when installed we require that every system must meet the HHS Secretary's interoperability standards.

We know we will realize significant savings through information technology. On that there is bipartisan consensus. Yet as providers are facing even declining payment rates, they also are told they must institute changes in the way they practice, including implementing information technology. We know that much of the savings in health care IT will accrue to the patient and payer—in such aspects as fewer duplicate tests, greater efficiency, and better health management. Thus it is appropriate that the Federal Government would assist with the often prohibitive start-up costs—particularly for those who serve beneficiaries of Medicare, Medicaid and SCHIP.

I again want to stress the first goal of this legislation: To help build a safer medical-delivery system. The great successes of our health care system are largely due to our highly committed and talented health care professionals. The problem we are addressing today is not theirs, but is an endemic weakness of the system they depend upon. However, to utilize the solution, the Federal Government must step forward and provide the leadership necessary to make system changes a reality.

When the Medicare and Medicaid programs began, we could only have dreamed about computerized clinical information systems. Now, today, we have this technology at our disposal, and I strongly believe that we cannot afford to delay implementation. I hope my colleagues will join us in support of this legislation so we may soon achieve the goals of improving patient safety and reducing our escalating health care costs.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1227

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Health Information Technology Act of 2005".

SEC. 2. INFORMATICS SYSTEMS GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) GRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish a program to award grants to eligible entities that have submitted applications in accordance with subsection (b) for the purpose of assisting such entities in offsetting the costs incurred after December 31, 2004, that are related to clinical health care informatics systems and services designed to improve quality in health care and patient safety.

(2) DURATION.—The authority of the Secretary to make grants under this section shall terminate on September 30, 2010.

(3) COSTS DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term "costs" shall include total expenditures incurred for—

(A) purchasing, leasing, and installing computer software and hardware, including handheld computer technologies, and related services;

(B) making improvements to existing computer software and hardware;

(C) purchasing or leasing communications capabilities necessary for clinical data access, storage, and exchange;

(D) services associated with acquiring, implementing, operating, or optimizing the use of new or existing computer software and hardware and clinical health care informatics systems;

(E) providing education and training to eligible entity staff on information systems and technology designed to improve patient safety and quality of care; and

(F) purchasing, leasing, subscribing, integrating, or servicing clinical decision support tools that—

(i) integrate patient-specific clinical data with well-established national treatment guidelines; and

(ii) provide ongoing continuous quality improvement functions that allow providers to assess improvement rates over time and against averages for similar providers.

(4) ELIGIBLE ENTITY DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term "eligible entity" means the following entities:

(A) HOSPITAL.—A hospital (as defined in section 1861(e) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(e))).

(B) CRITICAL ACCESS HOSPITAL.—A critical access hospital (as defined in section 1861(mm)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(mm)(1))).

(C) SKILLED NURSING FACILITY.—A skilled nursing facility (as defined in section 1819(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(a))).

(D) FEDERALLY QUALIFIED HEALTH CENTER.—A Federally qualified health center (as defined in section 1861(aa)(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(aa)(4))).

(E) PHYSICIAN.—A physician (as defined in section 1861(r) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(r))).

(F) PHYSICIAN GROUP PRACTICE.—A physician group practice.

(G) COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH CENTER.—A community mental health center (as defined in section 1861(ff)(3)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(ff)(3)(B))).

(b) APPLICATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—An eligible entity seeking a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such form and manner, and containing the information described in paragraph (2).

(2) INFORMATION DESCRIBED.—The information described in this paragraph is the following information:

(A) A description of—

(i) the clinical health care informatics system and services that the eligible entity intends to implement with the assistance received under this section; and

(ii) how the system will improve quality in health care and patient safety, including estimates of the impact on the health of, and the health costs associated with the treatment of, patients with heart disease, cancer, stroke, diabetes, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, asthma, or any other disease or condition specified by the Secretary.

(B) Any additional information that the Secretary may specify.

(c) PRIORITY FOR CERTAIN ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—In awarding grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority—

(1) first, to eligible entities—

(A) that are exempt from tax under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

(B)(i) in which the total of individuals that are eligible for benefits under the medicare program under title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the medicaid program under title XIX of such Act, or under the State children's health insurance program under title XXI of such Act make up a high percentage (as determined appropriate by the Secretary) of the total patient population of the entity; or

(ii) that provide services to a large number (as determined appropriate by the Secretary) of such individuals;

(2) then, to eligible entities that meet the requirement under clause (i) or (ii) of paragraph (1)(B); and

(3) then, to other eligible entities.

(d) RESERVE FUNDS FOR ENTITIES IN HEALTH PROFESSIONAL SHORTAGE AREAS OR RURAL AREAS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary shall ensure that at least 20 percent of the funds available for making grants under this section to—

(A) hospitals and critical access hospitals are used for making grants to such hospitals that are located exclusively in an applicable area;

(B) skilled nursing facilities are used for making grants to such facilities that are located exclusively in an applicable area;

(C) Federally qualified health centers are used for making grants to such centers that are located exclusively in an applicable area;

(D) physicians and physician group practices are used for making grants to physicians and such practices that are located exclusively in an applicable area; and

(E) community mental health centers are used for making grants to such centers that are located exclusively in an applicable area.

(2) AVAILABILITY OF RESERVE FUNDS IF LIMITED NUMBER OF ENTITIES APPLY FOR RESERVED GRANTS.—If the Secretary estimates that the amount of funds reserved under subparagraph (A), (B), (C), (D), or (E) of paragraph (1) for the type of entity involved exceeds the maximum amount of funds permitted for such entities under subsection (e), the Secretary may reduce the amount reserved for such entities by an amount equal to such excess and use such funds for awarding grants to other eligible entities.

(3) APPLICABLE AREA DEFINED.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term “applicable area” means—

(A) an area that is designated as a health professional shortage area under section 332(a)(1)(A) of the Public Health Service Act;

(B) a rural area (as such term is defined for purposes of section 1886(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d))); or

(C) a rural census tract of a metropolitan statistical area (as determined under the most recent modification of the Goldsmith Modification, originally published in the Federal Register on February 27, 1992 (57 Fed. Reg. 6725)).

(e) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—

(1) AMOUNT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B) and paragraph (2), the Secretary shall determine the amount of a grant awarded under this section.

(B) CONSIDERATION.—In determining the amount of a grant under this section, the Secretary shall take into account the ability to take an expense deduction for health care informatics system expenses under section 179C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by section 5.

(2) LIMITATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A grant awarded under this section may not exceed the lesser of—

(i) an amount equal to the applicable percentage of the costs incurred by the eligible entity for the project for which the entity is seeking assistance under this section; or

(ii) in the case of a grant made to—

(I) a hospital or a critical access hospital, $1,000,000;

(II) a skilled nursing facility, $200,000;

(III) a Federally qualified health center, $150,000;

(IV) a physician, $15,000;

(V) a physician group practice, an amount equal to $15,000 multiplied by the number of physicians in the practice; or

(VI) a community mental health center, $75,000.

(B) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(i), the term “applicable percentage” means, with respect to an eligible entity for the period involved, the percentage of total revenues (excluding grants and gifts from Federal, State, local government, and private sources) for such period that consists of total revenues from the medicare program, the medicaid program, and the State children's health insurance program under titles XVIII, XIX, and XXI, respectively, of the Social Security Act.

(f) REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) COMPLIANT WITH STANDARDS.—A clinical health care informatics system funded under this section and placed in service on or after the date the standards are adopted under section 4 shall be compliant with such standards.

(2) FURNISHING THE SECRETARY WITH INFORMATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An eligible entity receiving a grant under this section shall furnish the Secretary with such information as the Secretary may require to—

(i) evaluate the project for which the grant is made; and

(ii) ensure that assistance provided under the grant is expended for the purposes for which it is made.

(B) COORDINATION.—The Secretary shall ensure that the requirements for furnishing information under subparagraph (A) are coordinated with other requirements for furnishing information to the Secretary that the eligible entity is subject to.

(g) STUDIES.—The Secretary shall conduct studies to—

(1) evaluate the use of clinical health care informatics systems and services implemented with assistance under this section to measure and report quality data based on accepted clinical performance measures; and

(2) assess the impact of such systems and services on improving patient care, reducing costs, and increasing efficiencies.

(h) REPORTS.—

(1) INTERIM REPORTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall submit, at least annually, a report to the appropriate committees of Congress on the grant program established under this section.

(B) CONTENTS.—A report submitted pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall include information on—

(i) the number of grants made;

(ii) the nature of the projects for which assistance is provided under the grant program;

(iii) the geographic distribution of grant recipients;

(iv) the impact of the projects on the health of, and the health costs associated with the treatment of, patients with heart disease, cancer, stroke, diabetes, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, asthma, or any other disease or conditions specified by the Secretary;

(v) the results of the studies conducted under subsection (g); and

(vi) such other matters as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(2) FINAL REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the completion of all of the projects for which assistance is provided under this section, the Secretary shall submit a final report to the appropriate committees of Congress on the grant program established under this section, together with such recommendations for legislation and administrative action as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(i) FUNDING.—

(1) HOSPITALS.—There are appropriated from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund under section 1817 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i) $250,000,000, for each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2010, for the purpose of making grants under this section to eligible entities that are hospitals or critical access hospitals.

(2) SKILLED NURSING FACILITIES.—There are appropriated from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund under section 1817 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i) $100,000,000, for each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2010, for the purpose of making grants under this section to eligible entities that are skilled nursing facilities.

(3) FEDERALLY QUALIFIED HEALTH CENTERS.—There are appropriated from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund under section 1841 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395t) $40,000,000, for each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2010, for the purpose of making grants under this section to eligible entities that are Federally qualified health centers.

(4) PHYSICIANS.—There are appropriated from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund under section 1841 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395t) $400,000,000, for each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2010, for the purpose of making grants under this section to eligible entities that are physicians or physician group practices.

(5) COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH CENTERS.—There are appropriated from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund under section 1841 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395t) $20,000,000, for each of the fiscal years 2006 through 2010, for the purpose of making grants under this section to eligible entities that are community mental health centers.

SEC. 3. ADJUSTMENTS TO MEDICARE PAYMENTS FOR HEALTH INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY ENABLED QUALITY SERVICES.

(a) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the “Secretary”) shall establish a methodology for making adjustments in payment amounts under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395 et seq.) made to providers of services and suppliers who—

(1) furnish items or services for which payment is made under such title; and

(2) in the course of furnishing such items and services, use health information technology and technology services with patient-specific applications that the Secretary determines improves the quality and accuracy of clinical decision-making, compliance, health care delivery, and efficiency, such as electronic medical records, electronic prescribing, clinical decision support tools integrating well-established national treatment guidelines with continuous quality improvement functions, and computerized physician order entry with clinical decision-support capabilities.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The methodology established under subsection (a) shall—

(1) include the establishment of new codes, modification of existing codes, and adjustment of evaluation and management modifiers to such codes, that take into account the costs of acquiring, using, and maintaining health information technology and services with patient-specific applications;

(2) first address adjustments for payments for items and services related to the diagnosis or treatment of heart disease, cancer, stroke, diabetes, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), and other diseases and conditions that result in high expenditures under the medicare program and for which effective health information technology exists; and

(3) take into account estimated aggregate annual savings in overall payments under such title XVIII attributable to the use of health information technology and services with patient-specific applications.

(c) DURATION.—The Secretary may reduce or eliminate adjustments made to payments pursuant to subsection (a) as payment methodologies under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395 et seq.) are adjusted to reflect provider quality and efficiency.

(d) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—In making national coverage determinations under section 1862(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395y(a)) with respect to maintaining health information technology and services with patient-specific applications, in determining whether the health information technology and services are reasonable and necessary for the diagnosis or treatment of illness or injury or to improve the functioning of a malformed body member, the Secretary shall consider whether the health information technology and services improve the health of medicare beneficiaries, including the improvement of clinical outcomes or cost-effectiveness of treatment.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) PROVIDER OF SERVICES.—The term “provider of services” has the meaning given that term under section 1861(u) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(u)).

(2) SUPPLIER.—The term “supplier” has the meaning given that term under section 1861(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(d)).

SEC. 4. INTEROPERABILITY.

(a) DEVELOPMENT AND ADOPTION OF STANDARDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the “Secretary”) shall provide for the development and adoption under programs administered by the Secretary of national data and communication health information technology standards that promote the efficient exchange of data between varieties of provider health information technology systems. In carrying out the preceding sentence, the Secretary may adopt existing standards consistent with standards established under subsections (b)(2)(B)(i) and (e)(4) of section 1860D-4 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-104).

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—The standards developed and adopted under paragraph (1) shall be designed to—

(A) enable health information technology to be used for the collection and use of clinically specific data;

(B) promote the interoperability of health care information across health care settings, including reporting to the Secretary and other Federal agencies; and

(C) facilitate clinical decision support through the use of health information technology.

(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE SECRETARY TO ACCEPT DATA USING STANDARDS.—

(1) DATA FROM NEW HEALTH CARE REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Not later than January 1, 2008, the Secretary shall implement procedures to enable the Department of Health and Human Services to accept the optional submission of data derived from health care reporting requirements established after the date of enactment of this Act using data standards adopted under this section.

(2) DATA FROM ALL REQUIREMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than January 1, 2010, the Secretary shall implement procedures to enable the Department of Health and Human Services to accept the optional submission of data derived from all health care reporting requirements using data standards adopted under this section.

(B) LIMITATION.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—On and after January 1, 2010, if an entity or individual elects to submit data to the Secretary using data standards adopted under this section, the Secretary, subject to clause (ii), may not require such entity or individual to also submit such data in an additional format.

(ii) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary may provide for an exception, not to exceed 2 years, to the limitation under clause (i) with respect to certain types of data if the Secretary determines that such an exception is appropriate.

SEC. 5. ELECTION TO EXPENSE HEALTH CARE INFORMATICS SYSTEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part VI of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to itemized deductions for individuals and corporations) is amended by inserting after section 179B the following new section:

“SEC. 179C. HEALTH CARE INFORMATICS SYSTEMS EXPENDITURES.

“(a) TREATMENT OF EXPENDITURES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—An eligible entity may elect to treat any qualified health care informatics system expenditure which is paid or incurred by the taxpayer as an expense which is not chargeable to capital account. Any expenditure which is so treated shall be allowed as a deduction.

“(2) ELECTION.—An election under paragraph (1) shall be made under rules similar to the rules of section 179(c).

“(b) LIMITATIONS.—

“(1) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—With respect to any eligible entity, the aggregate cost which may be taken into account under subsection (a)(1) for any taxable year shall not exceed, when added to any cost taken into account under this section in any preceding taxable year, the dollar amount specified under section 2(e)(2)(A)(ii) of the Health Information Technology Act of 2005.

“(2) APPLICABLE RULES.—For purposes of this subsection, rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (b) and paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) of subsection (d) of section 179 shall apply.

“(c) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) QUALIFIED HEALTH CARE INFORMATICS SYSTEM EXPENDITURES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified health care informatics system expenditure’ means, with respect to any taxable year, any direct or indirect costs incurred and properly taken into account with respect to the purchase or installation of equipment and facilities relating to any qualified health care informatics system. Such term shall include so much of the purchase price paid by the lessor of equipment and facilities subject to a lease described in subparagraph (B)(ii) as is attributable to expenditures incurred by the lessee which would otherwise be described in the preceding sentence.

“(B) WHEN EXPENDITURES TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Qualified health care informatics system expenditures shall be taken into account under this section only with respect to equipment and facilities—

“(I) the original use of which commences with the taxpayer, and “(II) which are placed in service after December 31, 2004, and before October 1, 2010.

“(ii) SALE-LEASEBACKS.—For purposes of clause (i), if property—

“(I) is originally placed in service after December 31, 2004, and before October 1, 2010, by any person, and

“(II) sold and leased back by such person within 3 months after the date such property was originally placed in service, such property shall be treated as originally placed in service not earlier than the date on which such property is used under the leaseback referred to in subclause (II).

“(C) GRANTS, ETC. EXCLUDED.—The term ‘qualified health care informatics system expenditure’ shall not include any amount to the extent such amount is funded by any grant, contract, or otherwise by another person (or any governmental entity).

“(2) QUALIFIED HEALTH CARE INFORMATICS SYSTEM.—The term ‘qualified health care informatics system’ means a system which—

“(A) has been individually approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services for purposes of this section,

“(B) consists of electronic health record systems and other health information technologies, and

“(C) meets the standards adopted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under section 4 of the Health Information Technology Act of 2005 by not later than the date which is 60 days after the date of the adoption of such standards.

“(3) ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—The term ‘eligible entity’ has the meaning given such term by section 2(a)(4) of the Health Information Technology Act of 2005.

“(4) PROPERTY USED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES, ETC., NOT QUALIFIED.—No expenditures shall be taken into account under subsection (a)(1) with respect to the portion of the cost of any property referred to in section 50(b) or with respect to the portion of the cost of any property specified in an election under section 179.

“(5) ORDINARY INCOME RECAPTURE.—For purposes of section 1245, the amount of the deduction allowable under subsection (a)(1) with respect to any property which is of a character subject to the allowance for depreciation shall be treated as a deduction allowed for depreciation under section 167."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 263(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to capital expenditures) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (H), by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (I) and inserting ", or", and by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(J) expenditures for which a deduction is allowed under section 179C."

(2) The table of sections for part VI of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 190 the following new item:

"Sec. 179C. Health care informatics system expenditures."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 2004.

SEC. 6. SENSE OF THE SENATE.

It is the sense of the Senate that the provisions of, and amendments made by, this Act should achieve deficit neutrality over the 5-year period beginning on October 1, 2005.

By Mr. REID (for himself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Ms. CANTWELL, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. KERRY):

S. 1229. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to extend, modify, and expand the credit for electricity produced from renewable resources and waste products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REID. Faced with uncertainties in electricity energy markets, turmoil in the Middle East, the need to cut back on the fossil fuel emissions linked to global warming, air pollution that contributes to high rates of asthma and fills even our national parks with smog, the United States must diversify its energy supply by promoting the growth of renewable energy.

Since 1999, Las Vegas electricity rates have increased by 50 percent. In the same time period, natural gas prices across Nevada rose 45 percent. We need to change the energy equation. We need to diversify the nation's energy supply to reduce volatility and ensure a stable supply of electricity. We must harness the brilliance of the sun, the strength of the wind, and the heat of the Earth to provide clean renewable energy for our Nation.

Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill with Senators FEINSTEIN, CANTWELL, SNOWE, JEFFORDS, LIEBERMAN and KERRY that expands the existing Section 45 production tax credit for renewable energy resources to cover all renewable energy resources. Our legislation accomplishes this by ensuring that geothermal, incremental geothermal, solar, open-loop biomass, incremental hydropower, landfill gas, and animal waste to the list of renewable energy resources that would qualify for a production tax credit.

Our legislation also makes the production tax credit permanent to signal America's long-term commitment to renewable energy resources. The existing production tax credit will expire at the end of the year. Since its inception in 1992, the production tax credit has expired and been renewed three times—in 1999, 2001, and 2004. Development of wind energy has closely mirrored these renewal cycles. Clearly, the private investment necessary to develop renewable energy resources requires the business certainty afforded by a long-term extension of the production tax credit. Our bill allows for co-production credits to encourage blending of renewable energy with traditional fuels and provides a credit for renewable facilities on Native American and Native Alaskan lands.

In northern Nevada, the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe is working with Advanced Thermal Systems to develop geothermal resources on Indian lands that will spur economic development by creating business opportunities and jobs for tribal members.

This legislation also provides production incentives to not-for-profit public power utilities and rural electric cooperatives, which serve 25 percent of the Nation's power customers, by allowing them to transfer their credits to taxable entities. The good news is that the production tax credit for renewable energy resources really works to promote the growth of renewable energy.

In 1990, the cost of wind energy was 22.5 cents per kilowatt hour and, today, with new technology and the help of a modest production tax credit, wind is a competitive energy source at approximately 5.5 cents per kilowatt hour. In the last 5 years, wind energy has experienced a 30 percent growth rate. The production tax credit provides 1.8 cents for every kilowatt-hour of electricity produced. Similar to wind energy, this credit will allow geothermal energy, incremental hydropower, and landfill gas to immediately compete with fossil fuels, while biomass will follow closely behind. The Department of Energy estimates that we could increase our geothermal energy production almost tenfold, supplying ten percent of the energy needs of the West. As fantastic as it sounds, enough sunlight falls on 100 square miles of southern Nevada that—if covered with solar panels—could power the entire Nation.

Let's never lose sight of the fact that renewable energy resources are domestic sources of energy, and using them instead of foreign sources contributes to our energy security. Renewables provide fuel diversify and price stability. After all, the fuel—from the wind, the sun, and heat from the core of the earth—cost nothing. And they provide jobs, especially in rural areas that have been largely left out of America's recent economic growth. The production tax credit for renewable energy resources is a powerful, fast-acting stimulus to the economy. According to the Western Governors Association, the Department of Energy's Initiative to deploy 1,000 Megawatts of concentrated solar power in the Southwestern area of the United States by the year 2006 would create approximately 10,000 jobs and estimated expenditures of more than $3.7 billion over 14 years.

Nevada has already developed 200 megawatts of geothermal power, with a longer-term potential of more than 2,500 megawatts; this development will provide billions of dollars in private investment and create thousands of jobs. Our production tax credit means immediate economic development and jobs.

In the U.S. today, we get 2 percent of our electricity from renewable energy sources like wind, solar, geothermal, and biomass. But the potential for much greater supply is here. For example, Nevada could use geothermal energy to meet one-third of its electricity needs, but today this source of energy only supplies 2 percent. I am proud to say that Nevada has adopted one of the most aggressive Renewable Portfolio Standards in the Nation, requiring 15 percent of the State's electricity needs be met by renewable energy resources in 2013.

After pouring billions of dollars into oil and gas, we need to invest in a clean energy future. Fossil fuel plants pump over 11 million tons of pollutants into our air each year. Federal energy policy must promote reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. By including landfill gas in this legislation, we systematically reduce the largest single human source of methane emissions in the United States, effectively eliminating the greenhouse gas equivalent of 233 million tons of carbon dioxide.

Medical studies have revealed an alarming link between soot particles from power plants and motor vehicles and lung cancer and heart disease. The adverse health effects of power plant and vehicle emissions cost Americans billions of dollars in medical care, and our cost in human suffering is immeasurable. Simply put, the human cost of dirty air is staggering. If we factor in environmental and health effects, the real cost of energy becomes apparent, and renewable energy becomes the fuel of choice.

America's abundant and untapped renewable resources can fuel our journey into a more prosperous and safer tomorrow without compromising air and water quality. Renewable energy is a critical component of a successful, forward-looking, and secure energy policy for the 21st Century.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1229

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Renewable Energy Incentives Act".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

SEC. 2. EXTENSION, MODIFICATION, AND EXPANSION OF CREDIT FOR ELECTRICITY PRODUCED FROM RENEWABLE RESOURCES AND WASTE PRODUCTS.

(a) PERMANENT EXTENSION.—

(1) Paragraphs (1) and (2)(A)(i) of section 45(d) are each amended by striking “, and before January 1, 2006”.

(2) Section 45(d)(2)(A)(ii) is amended by striking “before January 1, 2006, is originally placed in service and” and insert “is”.

(3) Section 45(d)(3)(A) is amended—

(A) by striking “owned by the taxpayer”,

(B) by inserting “owned by the taxpayer and” in clause (i)(I) after “is”

(C) by striking “and before January 1, 2006” in clause (i)(I), and

(D) by striking “originally placed in service before January 1, 2006” in clause (ii) and inserting “owned by the taxpayer”.

(4) Paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) of section 45(d) (relating to qualified facilities) are amended by striking “and before January 1, 2006” each place it appears.

(b) CREDIT RATE.—

(1) INCREASE IN CREDIT RATE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 45(a)(1) is amended by striking “1.5 cents” and inserting “1.9 cents”.

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(i) Section 45(b)(2) is amended by striking “1.5 cent” and inserting “1.9 cent”.

(ii) Section 45(e)(2)(B) is amended by inserting “(calendar year 2004 in the case of the 1.9 cent amount in subsection (a))” after “1992”.

(2) FULL CREDIT RATE FOR ALL FACILITIES PLACED IN SERVICE AFTER DATE OF ENACTMENT.—Section 45(b)(4)(A) (relating to credit rate) is amended by inserting “and placed in service before the date of the enactment of the Renewable Energy Incentives Act” after “subsection (d)”.

(c) FULL CREDIT PERIOD FOR ALL FACILITIES PLACED IN SERVICE AFTER DATE OF ENACTMENT.—Section 45(b)(4)(B)(i) (relating to credit period) is amended by inserting “and placed in service before the date of the enactment of the Renewable Energy Incentives Act” after “subsection (d)”

(d) EXPANSION OF QUALIFIED RESOURCES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 45(c)(1) (defining qualified energy resources) is amended by striking “and” at the end of subparagraph (F), by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (G) and inserting a comma, and by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

“(H) incremental geothermal energy production, and

“(I) incremental hydropower production.”.

(2) DEFINITION OF RESOURCES.—Section 45(c) (relating to qualified energy resources and refined coal) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

“(8) INCREMENTAL GEOTHERMAL PRODUCTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘incremental geothermal production’ means for any taxable year the excess of—

“(i) the total kilowatt hours of electricity produced from an incremental geothermal facility described in subsection (d)(9), over

“(ii) the average annual kilowatt hours produced at such facility for 5 of the previous 7 calendar years before the date of the enactment of this paragraph after eliminating the highest and the lowest kilowatt hour production years in such 7-year period.

“(B) SPECIAL RULE.—A facility described in subsection (d)(9) which was placed in service at least 7 years before the date of the enactment of this paragraph shall commence with the year in which such date of enactment occurs, reduce the amount calculated under subparagraph (A)(ii) each year, on a cumulative basis, by the average percentage decrease in the annual kilowatt hour production for the 7-year period described in subparagraph (A)(ii) with such cumulative sum not to exceed 30 percent.

“(9) INCREMENTAL HYDROPOWER PRODUCTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘incremental hydropower production’ means for any taxable year an amount equal to the percentage of total kilowatt hours of electricity produced from an incremental hydropower facility described in subsection (d)(10) attributable to efficiency improvements or additions of capacity as determined under subparagraph (B).

“(B) DETERMINATION OF INCREMENTAL HYDROPOWER PRODUCTION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), incremental hydropower production for any incremental hydropower facility for any taxable year shall be determined by establishing a percentage of average annual hydropower production at the facility attributable to the efficiency improvements or additions of capacity using the same water flow information used to determine an historic average annual hydropower production baseline for such facility. Such percentage and baseline shall be certified by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the determination of incremental hydropower production shall not be based on any operational changes at such facility not directly associated with the efficiency improvements or additions of capacity.”.

(3) FACILITIES.—Section 45(d) (relating to qualified facilities) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

“(9) INCREMENTAL GEOTHERMAL FACILITY.—

In the case of a facility using incremental geothermal to produce electricity, the term ‘qualified facility’ means any facility owned by the taxpayer which is originally placed in service before the date of the enactment of this paragraph, but only to the extent of its incremental geothermal production. In the case of a qualified facility described in the preceding sentence, the 10-year period referred to in subsection (a) shall be treated as beginning not earlier than such date of enactment. Such term shall not include any property described in section 48(a)(3) the basis of which is taken into account by the taxpayer for purposes of determining the energy credit under section 48.

“(10) INCREMENTAL HYDROPOWER FACILITY.—In the case of a facility using incremental hydropower to produce electricity, the term ‘qualified facility’ means any non-Federal hydroelectric facility owned by the taxpayer which is originally placed in service before the date of the enactment of this paragraph, but only to the extent of its incremental hydropower production. In the case of a qualified facility described in the preceding sentence, the 10-year period referred to in subsection (a) shall be treated as beginning not earlier than such date of enactment.”.

(e) CREDIT ELIGIBILITY FOR LESSEES AND OPERATORS EXTENDED TO ALL FACILITIES.—Paragraph (6) of section 45(d) is amended to read as follows:

“(6) CREDIT ELIGIBILITY FOR LESSEES AND OPERATORS.—In the case of any facility described in paragraph (1), (4), (5), (6), (7), (9), or (10), if the owner of such facility is not the producer of the electricity, the person eligible for the credit allowable under subsection (a) shall be the lessee or the operator of such facility.”.

(f) QUALIFIED FACILITIES WITH CO-PRODUCTION.—Section 45(b) (relating to limitations and adjustments) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(5) INCREASED CREDIT FOR CO-PRODUCTION FACILITIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a qualified facility described in any paragraph of subsection (d) (other than paragraph (8)) which adds a co-production facility after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, the amount in effect under subsection (a)(1) for an eligible taxable year of a taxpayer shall (after adjustment under paragraph (2) and before adjustment under paragraphs (1) and (3)) be increased by .25 cents.

“(B) CO-PRODUCTION FACILITY.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ‘co-production facility’ means a facility which—

“(i) enables a qualified facility to produce heat, mechanical power, chemicals, liquid fuels, or minerals from qualified energy resources in addition to electricity, and “(ii) produces such energy on a continuous basis.

“(C) ELIGIBLE TAXABLE YEAR.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ‘eligible taxable year’ means any taxable year in which the amount of gross receipts attributable to the co-production facility of a qualified facility are at least 10 percent of the amount of gross receipts attributable to electricity produced by such facility.”.

(g) QUALIFIED FACILITIES LOCATED WITHIN QUALIFIED INDIAN LANDS.—Section 45(b) (relating to limitations and adjustments), as amended by subsection (f), is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(6) INCREASED CREDIT FOR QUALIFIED FACILITY LOCATED WITHIN QUALIFIED INDIAN LAND.—In the case of a qualified facility described in any paragraph of subsection (d) (other than paragraphs (1), (2) and (8)) which—

“(A) is located within—

“(i) qualified Indian lands (as defined in section 7871(c)(3)), or “(ii) lands which are held in trust by a Native Corporation (as defined in section 3(m) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(m)) for Alaska Natives, and

“(B) is operated with the explicit written approval of the Indian tribal government or Native Corporation (as so defined) having jurisdiction over such lands, the amount in effect under subsection (a)(1) for a taxable year shall (after adjustment under paragraphs (2) and (5) and before adjustment under paragraphs (1) and (3)) be increased by .25 cents.”.

(h) ADDITIONAL MODIFICATIONS.—

(1) TREATMENT OF PERSONS NOT ABLE TO USE ENTIRE CREDIT.—Section 45(e) (relating to additional definitions and special rules), as amended by subsection (a)(2), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(11) TREATMENT OF PERSONS NOT ABLE TO USE ENTIRE CREDIT.—

“(A) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection—

“(I) any credit allowable under subsection (a) with respect to a qualified facility owned by a person described in clause (ii) may be transferred or used as provided in this paragraph, and “(II) the determination as to whether the credit is allowable shall be made without regard to the tax-exempt status of the person.

“(ii) PERSONS DESCRIBED.—A person is described in this clause if the person is—

“(I) an organization described in section 501(c)(12)(C) and exempt from tax under section 501(a),

“(II) an organization described in section 1381(a)(2)(C),

“(III) a public utility (as defined in section 136(c)(2)(B)), which is exempt from income tax under this subtitle,

“(IV) any State or political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, any possession of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing, or “(V) any Indian tribal government (within the meaning of section 7871) or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

“(B) TRANSFER OF CREDIT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A person described in subparagraph (A)(ii) may transfer any credit to which subparagraph (A)(i) applies through an assignment to any other person not described in subparagraph (A)(ii). Such transfer may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary.

“(ii) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as necessary to ensure that any credit described in clause (i) is assigned once and not reassigned by such other person.

“(iii) TRANSFER PROCEEDS TREATED AS ARISING FROM ESSENTIAL GOVERNMENT FUNCTION.—Any proceeds derived by a person described in subclause (III), (IV), or (V) of subparagraph (A)(ii) from the transfer of any credit under clause (i) shall be treated as arising from the exercise of an essential government function.

“(C) CREDIT NOT INCOME.—Any transfer under subparagraph (B) of any credit to which subparagraph (A)(i) applies shall not be treated as income for purposes of section 501(c)(12).

“(D) TREATMENT OF UNRELATED PERSONS.—For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(B), sales among and between persons described in subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be treated as sales between unrelated parties.”.

(2) CREDITS NOT REDUCED BY TAX-EXEMPT BONDS OR CERTAIN OTHER SUBSIDIES.—Section 45(b)(3) (relating to credit reduced for grants, tax-exempt bonds, subsidized energy financing, and other credits) is amended—

(A) by striking clause (ii),

(B) by redesignating clauses (iii) and (iv) as clauses (ii) and (iii),

(C) by inserting “(other than any loan, debt, or other obligation incurred under subchapter I of chapter 31 of title 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 901 et seq.), as in effect on the date of the enactment of the Renewable Energy Incentives Act, or proceeds of an issue of State or local government obligations the interest on which is exempt from tax under section 103)” after “project” in clause (ii) (as so redesignated), and

(D) by striking “TAX-EXEMPT BONDS,” in the heading and inserting “CERTAIN”.

(3) CREDIT ALLOWABLE AGAINST MINIMUM TAX WITHOUT LIMITATION.—Clause (ii) of section 38(c)(4)(B) (defining specified credits) is amended to read as follows:

“(i) the credit determined under section 45 to the extent that such credit is attributable to electricity or refined coal produced at a facility which is originally placed in service after October 22, 2004.”.

(4) TREATMENT OF QUALIFIED FACILITIES NOT IN COMPLIANCE WITH POLLUTION LAWS.—Section 45(d) (relating to qualified facilities), as amended by subsection (d)(3), is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(11) NONCOMPLIANCE WITH POLLUTION LAWS.—For purposes of this subsection, a facility which is not in compliance with the applicable State and Federal pollution prevention, control, and permit requirements for any period of time shall not be considered to be a qualified facility during such period.”.

(i) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to electricity and other energy produced and sold after the date of the enactment of this Act, in taxable years ending after such date.

STATEMENTS ON SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 168—EX-PRESSING GRATITUDE AND SINCERE RESPECT FOR JESSE R. NICHOLS

Mr. FRIST (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. BAUCUS) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 168

Whereas Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., faithfully served the United States Senate and the Committee on Finance as the Government Documents Clerk and Librarian from nineteen hundred thirty-seven through nineteen hundred seventy-one;

Whereas Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., was born on June 14, 1909, in Clarksdale, Mississippi, and was the first African American Clerk employed by the United States Senate;

Whereas he carried out his duties in exemplary fashion, bringing credit to the Committee and to Congress;

Whereas Jesse Nichols worked effectively under the guidance of Democratic and Republican Chairmen, including Pat Harrison of Mississippi, Walter F. George of Georgia, Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia, and Russell B. Long of Louisiana from the 75th Congress through the 91st Congress; and

Whereas the Committee on Finance will long remember the commitment, service, and leadership of Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., as documented in an oral history posted on the Senate Historian's website: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the United States Senate expresses its deep gratitude and sincere respect for Jesse R. Nichols for his unflinching service and his dedication to the United States Senate. The Senate hereby expresses condolences to the family due to the death of Jesse R. Nichols, Sr., on February 18, 2005.

SENATE RESOLUTION 169—EX-PRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE WITH RESPECT TO FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS THAT COULD ADVERSELY IMPACT CONSUMERS OF SUGAR IN THE UNITED STATES AS WELL AS UNITED STATES AGRICULTURE AND THE BROADER ECONOMY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SANTORUM (for himself and Mr. ENSIGN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 169

Whereas the President concluded negotiations with Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, and the Dominican Republic to form the Dominican Republic-Central America-United States Free Trade Agreement (“CAFTA-DR”);

Whereas the CAFTA-DR only provides the 5 Central American countries and the Dominican Republic with modest additional access to the United States sugar market that will have no impact on United States sugar producers;

Whereas United States farmers and ranchers need access to new markets to expand the agricultural sector of the United States economy;

Whereas the United States manufacturing and service sectors need access to new markets to expand the broader economy of the United States;

Whereas new market access for United States products is only possible through comprehensive free trade agreements that include all products and services;

Whereas the CAFTA-DR will help build democracy, security, and the rule of law, in addition to helping integrate the economies of the United States and countries in the region;

Whereas sugar growers are already one of the most highly protected special interests in the United States;

Whereas the provisions of the CAFTA-DR offer protection to United States sugar growers, in addition to the numerous existing mechanisms that have been designed to shield sugar growers from any competition;

Whereas the United States sugar program has caused the loss of thousands of jobs in the United States in the sugar product manufacturing and cane refining sector;

Whereas every effort has been taken by the administration and Congress to accommodate the United States sugar growers, but they continue to oppose the CAFTA-DR and any free trade agreement containing new market access for sugar; and

Whereas the United States sugar growers' intransigence in wanting to exclude sugar from all future trade agreements threatens to undermine trade opportunities for United States agriculture and the rest of the United States economy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should negotiate and sign free trade agreements that are comprehensive in scope in order to ensure that the entire United States economy can benefit from new market opportunities provided by such agreements

SENATE RESOLUTION 170—RELATIVE TO THE DEATH OF J. JAMES EXON, FORMER UNITED STATES SENATOR FOR THE STATE OF NEBRASKA

Mr. FRIST (for himself, Mr. REID, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. ALLARD, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BOND, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. BURNS, Mr. BURR, Mr. BYRD, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. CARPER, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. CHAMBLISS, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. COBURN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. COLEMAN, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. CORNYN, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. DEMINT, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. DODD, Mrs. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. ENSIGN, Mr. ENZI, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. GREGG, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. HATCH, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. INOUE, Mr. ISAKSON, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. KOHL, Mr. KYL, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. LOTT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. MCCONNELL, Ms. MIKULSKI, Ms. MURKOWSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. OBAMA, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. REED, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. SALAZAR, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. SMITH, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SPECTER, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. SUNUNU, Mr. TALENT, Mr. THOMAS,

Mr. THUNE, Mr. VITTER, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. WYDEN) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Whereas J. James Exon served in the United States Army Signal Corps from 1942-1945 and in the United States Army Reserve from 1945-1949;

Whereas J. James Exon served as Governor of the State of Nebraska from 1971-1979;

Whereas J. James Exon served the people of Nebraska with distinction for 18 years in the United States Senate where he was a proponent of a strong national defense and knowledgeable source on geopolitical matters;

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of the Honorable J. James Exon, former member of the United States Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate adjourns today, it stand adjourned as a further mark of respect to the memory of the Honorable J. James Exon.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 770. Mr. JEFFORDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, Reserved; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SA 771. Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself and Mr. KERRY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, supra; which was ordered to lie on the table.

TEXT OF AMENDMENTS

SA 770. Mr. JEFFORDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, Reserved; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 131, line 20, after "landfill gas," insert the following: "livestock methane,"

SA 771. Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, and Mr. KERRY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, Reserved; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 159, after line 23, add the following:

SEC. 211. RENEWABLE PORTFOLIO STANDARD.

Title VI of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 609. FEDERAL RENEWABLE PORTFOLIO STANDARD.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) BIOMASS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'biomass' means—

"(i) organic material from a plant that is planted for the purpose of being used to produce energy;

"(ii) nonhazardous, cellulosic or agricultural waste material that is segregated from other waste materials and is derived from—

- "(I) a forest-related resource, including—
- "(aa) mill and harvesting residue;
- "(bb) precommercial thinnings;
- "(cc) slash; and
- "(dd) brush;
- "(II) agricultural resources, including—
- "(aa) orchard tree crops;
- "(bb) vineyards;
- "(cc) grains;
- "(dd) legumes;
- "(ee) sugar; and
- "(ff) other crop by-products or residues; or
- "(III) miscellaneous waste such as—
- "(aa) waste pallet;
- "(bb) crate; and
- "(cc) landscape or right-of-way tree trimmings;

"(iii) animal waste that is converted to a fuel rather than directly combusted, the residue of which is converted to a biological fertilizer, oil, or activated carbon; and

"(iv) livestock methane.

"(B) EXCLUSIONS.—The term 'biomass' shall not include—

- "(i) municipal solid waste that is incinerated;
- "(ii) recyclable post-consumer waste paper;
- "(iii) painted, treated, or pressurized wood;
- "(iv) wood contaminated with plastics or metals; or
- "(v) tires.

"(2) DISTRIBUTED GENERATION.—The term 'distributed generation' means reduced electricity consumption from the electric grid due to use by a customer of renewable energy generated at a customer site.

"(3) INCREMENTAL HYDROPOWER.—The term 'incremental hydropower' means additional generation achieved from increased efficiency after January 1, 2003, at a hydroelectric dam that was placed in service before January 1, 2003.

"(4) LANDFILL GAS.—The term 'landfill gas' means gas generated from the decomposition of household solid waste, commercial solid waste, and industrial solid waste disposed of in a municipal solid waste landfill unit (as those terms are defined in regulations promulgated under subtitle D of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6941 et seq.)).

"(5) RENEWABLE ENERGY.—The term 'renewable energy' means electricity generated from

- "(A) a renewable energy source; or
- "(B) hydrogen that is produced from a renewable energy source.

"(6) RENEWABLE ENERGY SOURCE.—The term 'renewable energy source' means—

- "(A) wind;
- "(B) ocean waves;
- "(C) biomass;
- "(D) solar;
- "(E) landfill gas;
- "(F) incremental hydropower; or
- "(G) geothermal.

"(7) RETAIL ELECTRIC SUPPLIER.—The term 'retail electric supplier' means a person or entity that sells retail electricity to consumers, and which sold not less than 500,000 megawatt-hours of electric energy to consumers for purposes other than resale during the preceding calendar year.

"(8) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Energy.

"(b) RENEWABLE ENERGY REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For each calendar year beginning in Calendar year 2006, each retail electric supplier shall submit to the Secretary, not later than April 30 of each year, renewable energy credits in an amount equal to the required annual percentage of the retail electric supplier's total amount of kilowatt-hours of non-hydropower (excluding incremental hydropower) electricity sold to retail consumers during the previous calendar year.

"(2) CARRYOVER.—A renewable energy credit for any year that is not used to satisfy the minimum requirement for that year may be carried over for use within the next two years.

	Percentage of Renewable energy
"Calendar years:	Each year:
2006-2009	5
2010-2014	10
2015-2019	15
2020 and subsequent years	20

"(d) SUBMISSION OF RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To meet the requirements under subsection (b), a retail electric supplier shall submit to the Secretary either—

"(A) renewable energy credits issued to the retail electric supplier under subsection (f);

"(B) renewable energy credits obtained by purchase or exchange under subsection (g);

"(C) renewable energy credits purchased from the United States under subsection (h); or

"(D) any combination of credits under subsections (f), (g) or (h).

"(2) PROHIBITION ON DOUBLE COUNTING.—A credit may be counted toward compliance with subsection (b) only once.

"(e) RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDIT PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall establish, not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, a program to issue, monitor the sale or exchange of, and track, renewable energy credits.

"(f) ISSUANCE OF RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Under the program established in subsection (e), an entity that generates electric energy through the use of a renewable energy resource may apply to the Secretary for the issuance of renewable energy credits.

"(2) APPLICATION.—An application for the issuance of renewable energy credits shall indicate—

"(A) the type of renewable energy resource used to produce the electric energy;

"(B) the State in which the electric energy was produced; and

"(C) any other information the Secretary determines appropriate.

"(3) CREDIT VALUE.—Except as provided in subparagraph (4), the Secretary shall issue to an entity applying under this subsection renewable energy credit for each kilowatt-hour of renewable energy generated in any State from the date of enactment of this section and in each subsequent calendar year.

"(4) CREDIT VALUE FOR DISTRIBUTED GENERATION.—The Secretary shall issue 3 renewable energy credits for each kilowatt-hour of distributed generation.

"(5) VESTING.—A renewable energy credit will vest with the owner of the system or facility that generates the renewable energy unless such owner explicitly transfers the credit.

"(6) CREDIT ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible for a renewable energy credit, the unit of electricity generated through the use of a renewable energy resource shall be sold for retail consumption or used by the generator. If both a renewable energy resource and a non-renewable energy resource are used to generate the electric energy, the Secretary shall issue renewable energy credits based on the proportion of the renewable energy resource used.

"(7) IDENTIFYING CREDITS.—The Secretary shall identify renewable energy credits by the type and date of generation.

“(8) SALE UNDER PURPA CONTRACT.—When a generator sells electric energy generated through the use of a renewable energy resource to a retail electric supplier under a contract subject to section 210 of the Public Utilities Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 824a-3), the retail electric supplier is treated as the generator of the electric energy for the purposes of this section for the duration of the contract.

“(g) SALE OR EXCHANGE OF RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDITS.—A renewable energy credit may be sold or exchanged by the entity issued the renewable energy credit or by any other entity that acquires the renewable energy credit. Credits may be sold or exchanged in any manner not in conflict with existing law, including on the spot market or by contractual arrangements of any duration.

“(h) PURCHASE FROM THE UNITED STATES.—The Secretary shall offer renewable energy credits for sale at the lesser of three cents per kilowatt-hour or 110 percent of the average market value of credits for the applicable compliance period. On January 1 of each year following calendar year 2006, the Secretary shall adjust for inflation the price charged per credit for such calendar year.

“(i) STATE PROGRAMS.—Nothing in this section shall preclude any State from requiring additional renewable energy generation in the State under any renewable energy program conducted by the State.

“(j) CONSUMER ALLOCATION.—The rates charged to classes of consumers by a retail electric supplier shall reflect a proportional percentage of the cost of generating or acquiring the required annual percentage of renewable energy under subsection (b). A retail electric supplier shall not represent to any customer or prospective customer that any product contains more than the percentage of eligible resources if the additional amount of eligible resources is being used to satisfy the renewable generation requirement under subsection (b).

“(k) ENFORCEMENT.—A retail electric supplier that does not submit renewable energy credits as required under subsection (b) shall be liable for the payment of a civil penalty. That penalty shall be calculated on the basis of the number of renewable energy credits not submitted, multiplied by the lesser of 4.5 cents or 300 percent of the average market value of credits for the compliance period.

“(l) INFORMATION COLLECTION.—The Secretary may collect the information necessary to verify and audit—

“(1) the annual electric energy generation and renewable energy generation of any entity applying for renewable energy credits under this section;

“(2) the validity of renewable energy credits submitted by a retail electric supplier to the Secretary; and

“(3) the quantity of electricity sales of all retail electric suppliers.

“(m) VOLUNTARY PARTICIPATION.—The Secretary may issue a renewable energy credit pursuant to subsection (f) to any entity not subject to the requirements of this section only if the entity applying for such credit meets the terms and conditions of this section to the same extent as entities subject to this section.

“(n) STATE RENEWABLE ENERGY GRANT PROGRAM.—

“(1) DISTRIBUTION TO STATES.—The Secretary shall distribute amounts received from sales under subsection (h) and from amounts received under subsection (k) to States to be used for the purposes of this section.

“(2) REGIONAL EQUITY PROGRAM.—

“(A) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Within 1 year from the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall establish a program to promote renewable energy production and use consistent with the purposes of this section.

“(B) ELIGIBILITY.—The Secretary shall make funds available under this section to State energy agencies for grant programs for—

“(i) renewable energy research and development;

“(ii) loan guarantees to encourage construction of renewable energy facilities;

“(iii) consumer rebate or other programs to offset costs of small residential or small commercial renewable energy systems including solar hot water; or “(iv) promoting distributed generation.

“(3) ALLOCATION PREFERENCES.—In allocating funds under the program, the Secretary shall give preference to—

“(A) States in regions which have a disproportionately small share of economically sustainable renewable energy generation capacity; and

“(B) State grant programs most likely to stimulate or enhance innovative renewable energy technologies.”.

SA 772. Mr. JEFFORDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, Reserved; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 159, after line 23, add the following:

SEC. 211. RENEWABLE PORTFOLIO STANDARD.

Title VI of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(d) SUBMISSION OF RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDITS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—To meet the requirements under subsection (b), a retail electric supplier shall submit to the Secretary either—

“(A) renewable energy credits issued to the retail electric supplier under subsection (f);

“(B) renewable energy credits obtained by purchase or exchange under subsection (g);

“(C) renewable energy credits purchased from the United States under subsection (h); or

“(D) any combination of credits under subsections (f), (g) or (h).

“(2) PROHIBITION ON DOUBLE COUNTING.—A credit may be counted toward compliance with subsection (b) only once.

“(e) RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDIT PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall establish, not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, a program to issue, monitor the sale or exchange of, and track, renewable energy credits.

“(f) ISSUANCE OF RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDITS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Under the program established in subsection (e), an entity that generates electric energy through the use of a renewable energy resource may apply to the Secretary for the issuance of renewable energy credits.

“(2) APPLICATION.—An application for the issuance of renewable energy credits shall indicate—

“(A) the type of renewable energy resource used to produce the electric energy;

“(B) the State in which the electric energy was produced; and

“(C) any other information the Secretary determines appropriate.

“(3) CREDIT VALUE.—Except as provided in subparagraph (4), the Secretary shall issue to an entity applying under this subsection renewable energy credit for each kilowatt-hour of renewable energy generated in any State from the date of enactment of this section and in each subsequent calendar year.

“(4) CREDIT VALUE FOR DISTRIBUTED GENERATION.—The Secretary shall issue 3 renewable energy credits for each kilowatt-hour of distributed generation.

SA 773. Mr. JEFFORDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, Reserved; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate point, insert the following:

SEC. RENEWABLE PORTFOLIO STANDARD.

Title VI of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following: “SEC. 606. FEDERAL RENEWABLE PORTFOLIO STANDARD.

“(a) RENEWABLE ENERGY REQUIREMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each electric utility that sells electricity to electric consumers shall obtain a percentage of the base amount of electricity it sells to electric consumers in any calendar year from new renewable energy or existing renewable energy. The percentage obtained in a calendar year shall not be less than the amount specified in the following table:

“Calendar year	Minimum annual percentage
2008 through 2011	2.5
2012 through 2015	5.0
2016 through 2019	7.5
2020 through 2030	10.0

“(2) MEANS OF COMPLIANCE.—An electric utility shall meet the requirements of paragraph (1) by—

“(A) generating electric energy using new renewable energy or existing renewable energy;

“(B) purchasing electric energy generated by new renewable energy or existing renewable energy;

“(C) purchasing renewable energy credits issued under subsection (b); or “(D) a combination of the foregoing.

“(b) RENEWABLE ENERGY CREDIT TRADING PROGRAM.—

“(1) Not later than January 1, 2005, the Secretary shall establish a renewable energy credit trading program to permit an electric utility that does not generate or purchase enough electric energy from renewable energy to meet its obligations under subsection (a)(1) to satisfy such requirements by purchasing sufficient renewable energy credits.

“(2) As part of such program the Secretary shall—

“(A) issue renewable energy credits to generators of electric energy from new renewable energy;

“(B) sell renewable energy credits to electric utilities at the rate of 1.5 cents per kilowatt-hour (as adjusted for inflation under subsection (g));

“(C) ensure that a kilowatt hour, including the associated renewable energy credit, shall be used only once for purposes of compliance with this section;

“(D) allow double credits for generation from facilities on Indian Lands, and triple credits for generation from small renewable distributed generators, i.e., those no larger than one megawatt.

“(3) Credits under paragraph (2)(A) may only be used for compliance with this section for 3 years from the date issued.

“(c) ENFORCEMENT.—

“(1) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any electric utility that fails to meet the renewable energy requirements of subsection (a) shall be subject to a civil penalty.

“(2) AMOUNT OF PENALTY.—The amount of the civil penalty shall be determined by multiplying the number of kilowatt-hours of electric energy sold to electric consumers in violation of subsection (a) by the greater of 1.5 cents (adjusted for inflation under subsection (g)) or 200 percent of the average market value of renewable energy credits during the year in which the violation occurred.

“(3) MITIGATION OR WAIVER.—The Secretary may mitigate or waive a civil penalty under this subsection if the electric utility was unable to comply with subsection (a) for reasons outside of the reasonable control of the utility.

“(4) PROCEDURE FOR ASSESSING PENALTY.—The Secretary shall assess a civil penalty under this subsection in accordance with the procedures prescribed by section 333(d) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 6303).

“(d) STATE RENEWABLE ENERGY ACCOUNT PROGRAM.—

“(1) The Secretary shall establish, not later than December 31, 2008, State renewable energy account program.

“(2) All money collected by the Secretary from the sale of renewable energy credits and the assessment of civil penalties under this section shall be deposited into the renewable energy account established pursuant to this subsection. The State renewable energy account shall be held by the Secretary and shall not be transferred to the Treasury Department.

“(3) Proceeds deposited in the State renewable energy account shall be used by the Secretary, subject to appropriations, for a program to provide grants to the State agency responsible for developing State energy conservation plans under section 363 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6322) for the purposes of promoting renewable energy production, including programs that promote technologies that reduce the use of electricity at customer sites such as solar water heating.

“(4) The Secretary may issue guidelines and criteria for grants awarded under this subsection. State energy offices receiving grants under this section shall maintain such records and evidence of compliance as the Secretary may require.

“(5) In allocating funds under this program, the Secretary shall give preference to States, in regions which have a disproportionately small share of economically sustainable renewable energy generation capacity; and to State programs to stimulate or enhance innovative renewable energy technologies.

“(e) RULES.—The Secretary shall issue rules implementing this section not later than one year after the date of enactment of this section.

“(f) EXEMPTIONS.—This section shall not apply in any calendar year to an electric utility.

“(1) that sold less than 4,000,000 megawatt-hours of electric energy to electric consumers during the preceding calendar year; or

“(2) in Hawaii.

“(g) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—Not later than December 31 of each year beginning in 2008, the Secretary shall adjust for inflation the price of a renewable energy credit under subsection (b)(2)(B) and the amount of the civil penalty per kilowatt-hour under subsection (c)(2).

“(h) STATE PROGRAMS.—Nothing in this section shall diminish any authority of a State or political subdivision thereof to adopt or enforce any law or regulation respecting renewable energy, but no such law or regulation shall relieve any person of any requirement otherwise applicable under this section. The Secretary, in consultation with States having such renewable energy programs, shall, to the maximum extent practicable, facilitate coordination between the Federal program and State programs.

“(i) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) The term ‘base amount of electricity’ means the total amount of electricity sold by an electric utility to electric consumers in a calendar year, excluding—

“(A) electricity generated by a hydroelectric facility (except incremental hydropower); and “(B) electricity generated through the incineration of municipal solid waste.

“(2) The term ‘existing renewable energy’ means, except as provided in paragraph (3)(B), electric energy generated at a facility (including a distributed generation facility) placed in service prior to the date of enactment of this section from solar, wind, ocean, current, wave, tidal or geothermal energy; biomass (as defined in section 504(b)); or landfill gas.

“(3) The term ‘new renewable energy’ means—

“(A) electric energy generated at a facility (including a distributed generation facility) placed in service on or after the date of enactment of this section from solar, wind, ocean, current, wave, tidal or geothermal energy; biomass (as defined in section 504(b)); landfill gas; or incremental hydropower; and

“(B) for electric energy generated at a facility (including a distributed generation facility) placed in service prior to the date of enactment of this section—

“(i) the additional energy above the average generation in the 3 years preceding the date of enactment of this section at the facility from solar, wind, or ocean energy; biomass (as defined in section 504(b)); landfill gas or incremental hydropower.

“(ii) the incremental geothermal production.

“(4) The term ‘distributed generation facility’ means a facility at a customer site.

“(5) The term ‘incremental hydropower’ means additional energy generated as a result of efficiency improvements or capacity additions made on or after the date of enactment of this section or the effective date of an existing applicable State renewable portfolio standard program at a hydroelectric facility that was placed in service before that date. The term does not include additional energy generated as a result of operational changes not directly associated with efficiency improvements or capacity additions. Efficiency improvements and capacity additions shall be measured on the basis of the same water flow information used to determine a historic average annual generation baseline for the hydroelectric facility and certified by the Secretary or the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

“(6) GEOTHERMAL ENERGY.—The term ‘geothermal energy’ means energy derived from a geothermal deposit (within the meaning of section 613(e)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986).

“(7) INCREMENTAL GEOTHERMAL PRODUCTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘incremental geothermal production’ means for any year the excess of—

(i) the total kilowatt hours of electricity produced from a facility (including a distributed generation facility) using geothermal energy, over

(ii) the average annual kilowatt hours produced at such facility for 5 of the previous 7 calendar years before the date of enactment of this section after eliminating the highest and the lowest kilowatt hour production years in such 7-year period.

“(B) SPECIAL RULE.—A facility described in subparagraph (A) which was placed in service at least 7 years before the date of enactment of this section commencing with the year in which such date of enactment occurs, reduce the amount calculated under subparagraph (A)(ii) each year, on a cumulative basis, by the average percentage decrease in the annual kilowatt hour production for the 7-year period described in subparagraph (A)(ii) with such cumulative sum not to exceed 30 percent.

“(j) SUNSET.—This section expires on December 31, 2030.”

SA 774. Mr. JEFFORDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 6, Reserved; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 159, after line 23, add the following:

SEC. _____ . RURAL AND REMOTE COMMUNITY ELECTRIFICATION GRANTS.

The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) is amended in title VI by adding at the end the following:

“SEC. 609. RURAL AND REMOTE COMMUNITIES ELECTRIFICATION GRANTS.

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘eligible grantee’ means a local government or municipality, peoples’ utility district, irrigation district, and cooperative, nonprofit, or limited-dividend association in a rural area.

“(2) The term ‘incremental hydropower’ means additional generation achieved from increased efficiency after January 1, 2005, at a hydroelectric dam that was placed in service before January 1, 2005.

“(3) The term ‘renewable energy’ means electricity generated from—

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mark Hegerle, a staff member with Senator TALENT, be granted floor privileges during the consideration of the Energy bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELATIVE TO THE DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR J. JAMES EXON

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 170, which was submitted early today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 170) relative to the death of J. James Exon, former United States Senator for the State of Nebraska.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, on Friday, Nebraska lost one of the most dominant political figures in our State's history. Former two-term Governor and three-term U.S. Senator Jim Exon passed away in Lincoln at the age of 83.

Many in this Chamber today served with him and knew him well. Those who served with Jim Exon remember a serious and dedicated public servant who enjoyed life and loved his State.

Jim's voice was strong, and he spoke clearly and directly. No one ever had to guess where Jim Exon stood. As a Governor and a Senator, he fought for balanced budgets and restrained Government spending.

In the Senate, from his seat on the Armed Services Committee, he was a passionate advocate for a strong national defense. As a member of the Commerce Committee, he was a protector of our natural resources, and he had the foresight to author the Communications Decency Act.

Mr. President, today, when politics is too often a race to the lowest political common denominator, Jim Exon was a very effective leader, a partisan leader who always played it straight. He never lost an election. He won five statewide elections in Nebraska, more than any other Nebraskan. Under Jim Exon's leadership, the Democratic Party became the dominant party in Nebraska for 25 years.

Anyone who knows Nebraska understands what a remarkable accomplishment that was. He did it by listening to the people. He did it by being a leader.

I was Jim Exon's replacement in the Senate in 1996. Over the last 9 years, I came to know him well and respect his judgment. We did not always agree, but I always appreciated the opportunities I had to visit with Senator Exon on a wide range of issues. A child of the plains and a veteran of World War II, he is part of a generation of Americans who understood leadership, sacrifice, and war. In his later years, Jim Exon had much to say. And I had an opportunity to listen.

The voice and wisdom of Jim Exon and his generation is slipping away from us at a time of unparalleled change in our world. Just as with Jim Exon, while this great generation is still with us, we need to listen closely to them. I did listen to Jim Exon.

As a small businessman, two-term Governor and three-term Senator, James Exon, along with his wife Pat, served his State, his Nation, and this institution with distinction. He will be missed by the Nebraskans he served so well and loved so much.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 170) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 170

Whereas J. James Exon served in the United States Army Signal Corps from 1942-1945 and in the United States Army Reserve from 1945-1949;

Whereas J. James Exon served as Governor of the State of Nebraska from 1971-1979;

Whereas J. James Exon served the people of Nebraska with distinction for 18 years in the United States Senate where he was a proponent of a strong national defense and knowledgeable source on geopolitical matters;

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of the Honorable J. James Exon, former member of the United States Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit an enrolled copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That when the Senate adjourns today, it stand adjourned as a further mark of respect to the memory of the Honorable J. James Exon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate immediately proceed to executive session to consider Calendar No. 150, the nomination of Brian Montgomery to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. I further ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and the Senate then return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination considered and confirmed is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

Brian D. Montgomery, of Texas, to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now return to legislative session.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 2005

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 9:45 a.m. on Tuesday, June 14; I further ask that following the prayer and pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved, and that the Senate then return to executive session and resume consideration of the nomination of Thomas Griffith to be a U.S. circuit judge for the DC Circuit; provided that at 10 a.m., the Senate proceed to vote on the confirmation as provided under the previous order.

I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate recess from 12:30 p.m. until 2:15 p.m. for the Democratic Party luncheon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, tomorrow the Senate will resume consideration of the nomination of Thomas Griffith to be a circuit judge for the DC Circuit. At 10 a.m., the Senate will proceed to a vote on his confirmation. That will be the first vote of tomorrow's session. Following the confirmation vote, the Senate will begin consideration of the Energy bill. This bill was reported out of committee with strong bipartisan support. It is our hope that we can move this legislation forward in a timely manner. We will begin the amending process tomorrow and votes in relation to amendments are possible throughout the day tomorrow. At this time, I encourage those Senators who have amendments to contact the bill's managers so that they can establish an orderly schedule for their consideration.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:45 a.m.
TOMORROW

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order, as a mark of further respect for former Senator James Exon.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 8:19 p.m., adjourned until Tuesday, June 14, 2005, at 9:45 a.m.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate: Monday, June 13, 2005:

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

BRIAN D. MONTGOMERY, OF TEXAS, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT.

THE ABOVE NOMINATION WAS APPROVED SUBJECT TO THE NOMINEE'S COMMITMENT TO RESPOND TO REQUESTS TO APPEAR AND TESTIFY BEFORE ANY DULY CONSTITUTED COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, June 14, 2005 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
