

crimes legislation. Each Congress, Senator KENNEDY and I introduce hate crimes legislation that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society. Likewise, each Congress I have come to the floor to highlight a separate hate crime that has occurred in our country.

On July, 17, 2004, a 32-year-old gay man left a local Austin, TX, bar with two men, and walked home. The two men, Donald Bockman and Darren Gay, returned to the victim's home later that evening where they proceed to beat him and sexually assault him. Police say the two men dragged, tied-up, beat, cut, then sexually assaulted the victim. According to police, this attack was motivated by the victim's sexual orientation.

I believe that our Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, in all circumstances, from threats to them at home. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a major step forward in achieving that goal. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND GUN VIOLENCE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, last Thursday, in the midst of National Safe Schools Week, a student was nearly shot to death inside a Michigan high school. This tragic incident further underscores the need to do more to combat youth violence, especially gun violence.

According to published newspaper reports of the shooting, around noon last Thursday, a tenth grade student fired as many as three shots at another student in a crowded high school hallway. The 15-year-old victim was struck once in the chest by a .380 caliber bullet, which missed his heart by less than an inch. Fortunately, he is expected to live.

The suspect, who is also 15 years old, allegedly used a stolen .380 caliber pistol in the shooting and now faces life in prison after being charged as an adult. Reportedly, the suspect also has a previous conviction involving a firearm violation. The shooting last Thursday came less than a month after two other students were injured in a drive-by shooting outside the same high school. Unfortunately, youth gun violence continues to threaten communities, destroy families, and change the lives of too many young people forever.

Only a day before last Thursday's shooting, thousands of young people across the country observed a Day of National Concern About Young People and Gun Violence, which was designed to empower children and teenagers to do what they can to eliminate gun violence in their communities. In many communities, students were given the opportunity to sign a voluntary pledge against gun violence. Since the first Day of National Concern About Young People and Gun Violence in 1996, more than 7 million students have signed the pledge. Here is what the pledge says:

I will never bring a gun to school; I will never use a gun to settle a dispute; I will use my influence with my friends to keep them from using guns to settle disputes. My individual choices and actions, when multiplied by those of young people throughout the country, will make a difference. Together, by honoring this pledge, we can reverse the violence and grow up in safety.

I applaud the organizers and students who participated in this year's Day of National Concern About Young People and Gun Violence for their efforts to reduce gun violence. The thousands of students who signed the pledge this year, and the millions before them, have promised to do what they can to prevent tragedies like last week's school shooting in Michigan. Congress should do its part by adequately funding important law enforcement programs and by passing commonsense gun safety legislation.

BREAST CANCER ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH ACT

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month and 2005 marks more than 20 years that National Breast Cancer Awareness Month has educated women about early breast cancer detection, diagnosis, and treatment.

Yet, more than three million women currently live with breast cancer and the causes of this disease are still mostly unknown. While we have made significant advances in treatment, so much more needs to be done when it comes to prevention of this often fatal disease.

The Breast Cancer Environmental Research Act, S. 757, would enhance breast cancer environmental research across the country. This bill which is modeled after the Department of Defense Breast Cancer Research Program, would over 5 years, invest $30 million through a peer-reviewed grant process to establish a multi-disciplinary approach.

At this time, four research centers study prenatal-adult environmental exposures that may cause breast cancer. And while this is a good start, we need a nationally focused, collaborative and comprehensive strategy to approach this and the Breast Cancer Environmental Research Act would do just that.

This country has great resources when it comes to medical and scientific research. I believe this bill would provide an efficient and effective strategy for developing research in the environmental causes of this tragic disease.

RECOGNIZING SIXTY-FIVE YEARS OF FACTS ON FILE

• Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, it doesn't seem all that long ago that one of our most popular television shows featured a detective with a catch phrase that soon became part of our national vocabulary. When questioning someone who was offering more opinions than observations he would often interrupt and say, "Just the facts." Those few words sum up the history of a publication that has grown from an in-depth look at World War II to an incredible collection of all forms of data that covers just about everything from the beginnings of recorded history to the exploration of the furthest ranges of our universe.

Sixty-five years ago, Facts on File World News Digest was founded in 1940 by three emigrants from Hitler's Europe who knew there would be a need for a publication devoted to the issues of World War II. They had witnessed the rise of Nazism in the 1930s and recognized the need for a U.S.-based publication that focused on both world and domestic news events in the years leading up to World War II. Their first issue dealt with the presidential race between Roosevelt and Wilkie and their first bound volume of the events of the day was written, as described in the forward, as an effort to provide a clear and concise guide to help the reader navigate through a "hopeless maze of thousands of facts."

Nowadays, by comparison, we are deluged by tens of millions of facts and other pieces of data from around the world almost every day. Through it all, Facts on File has continued to sift the trivial from the significant and put together volume after volume of written information placing the facts about a myriad of subjects online and at our fingertips.

Facts on File World News Digest was originally conceived as a source of information for radio and news journalists. Today, it serves an ever widening group of people who need quick and easy access to the basic facts about an endless list of items. Teachers rely on the publications for their lesson plans. Students rely on the easy access their database provides them for help with their homework, background for their papers, or just to encourage a genuine curiosity about the history of the world around them and how things work.

Weekly Reader, which is now a part of the Facts on File family, took a poll of its readers recently. They discovered that almost 70 percent of today's students reported that they look for and find most of the facts they need for their homework on the Internet. Their use of the latest technology was the good news. The bad news was they often do not question the material they find or use another source to double check it. They just assume what they have found is correct.

That is why it is so vitally important that we make sure our children, students and researchers have access to online materials on the web that put a premium on facts—not opinions. For that reason and so many more, Facts
