House of Representatives

The House met at 9 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. GILLMOR).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE
The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, D.C.
June 16, 2006.

I hereby appoint the Honorable PAUL E. GILLMOR to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER
The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

As one Nation, indivisible, constant in vigilance, seeking liberty and justice for all, we place all our fears, anxieties, problems and concerns under Your protection, Almighty God.

As we pray for our troops, first responders in times of emergency, peacekeepers and all who fight the war against terrorism, this Chamber also seeks your guidance in all decision-making that we may prove ourselves worthy of their noble sacrifice.

Motivated by their bravery and willingness to shed their blood for our life and liberty as a Nation, we ask what is it You require of us that we may become the virtuous people responsible to uphold the sound principles that brought this country into being?

May law and order not only be the words echoed in the halls of government and the courts of this land, but let us give firm evidence to our promise to uphold the Constitution of this Nation by deeds. May goodness flow from the way we live. May integrity be found in the common practice of business and in the daily discourse of our people.

Lord, finally, awakened from our indifference to violence, evil and poverty, may we be a people truthful in our words and committed only to those actions which exhibit justice and lead to peace, now and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair examined the Journal of the last day’s proceedings and announces Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. PALLONE led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain up to five 1-minute speeches on each side.

STREET TERRORIST STRIKES AGAIN
(Mr. POE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, a self-claimed sadistic pervert, Jerry Inman, is branded with tattoos of skulls, daggers, bats and the pentagram, the symbol of hell. The two-time convicted sex offender, after serving time in two southern States for several rapes, kidnappings and robberies, has been released and has struck again.

He recreated hell for 20-year-old Clemson University student Tiffany Souers. He stalked her, in the shroud of darkness of the night, he broke into her apartment, strangled her, raped her and then murdered her. This devil of the South should not even have been in South Carolina, but the good behavior got him released from another State prison.

Mr. Speaker, rapists try to steal the very souls of their victims. Then they steal their lives. And as we fight the global war on terror, we need to fight the street terrorists in America. Repeat rapists are never cured. We cannot say they are misunderstood or need therapy or counseling, because some are just evil, and if we do not lock them up indefinitely, then it seems that outlaws like Inman are wasting good air breathing.

And that’s just the way it is.

LEAVE IRAQ NOW
(Mr. KUCINICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KUCINICH. While soldiers are killing insurgents, insurgents are killing our soldiers. Iraq’s Prime Minister is said to have considered amnesty for the growing number of insurgents, quote, as long as their hands weren’t stained by Iraqi blood.

This kind of talk will only encourage more aggression against U.S. troops, more U.S. casualties, more U.S. deaths. Our soldiers are sitting ducks in a shooting gallery. If we really cared about them, we would bring them home.

Iraq’s leaders will ultimately seek peace and reconciliation with its diverse armed groups through renouncing U.S. presence. Yet we are building permanent bases there.

It is time for our Nation to seek truth and reconciliation over 9/11 and... the war in Iraq. Otherwise our national agenda will continue to be held captive in Iraq.

The Bible says, “Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free”. The truth is, Iraq had nothing to do with 9/11. We did not have weapons of mass destruction. The truth is that in the name of fighting terrorism, we are creating more terrorists. ‘Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free.’ We must free ourselves from this war. We must reconcile with those who wrongly took us into Iraq. We must seek the truth.

FISCAL DISCIPLINE IS DRIVING DOWN THE DEFICIT

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, House Republicans have been working hard to exercise fiscal restraint and keep taxes low. These pro-growth policies are not only helping our economy grow at a rapid pace, they are helping drive down the Federal budget deficit as well.

This past Tuesday, the Wall Street Journal published a story I would like to quote, “Surging individual and corporate income tax receipts in May continued to help the Federal Government shrink the budget deficit to $227 billion for the first eight months of the fiscal year, down 16.6 percent from the same period a year earlier. To date, much of the deficit reduction stems from taxes being paid by corporations, which are seeing increased profits, and from high-income individuals, who are paying taxes on capital gains.”

Mr. Speaker, fiscal restraint and tax relief is boosting the economy and increasing tax revenues. The Treasury Department predicts that if these Republican-led trends continue, we will cut the Federal deficit in half well before President Bush’s goal of 2009.

BOGUS RESOLUTION ON IRAQ

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, Republican leaders say that this unamendable, nonbinding, purely ornamental resolution crafted behind closed doors is a referendum on the war on terror. And it is, but not in the way they characterize it.

It is a blanket endorsement of the failed policies, of the diversion of troops and resources from Afghanistan, and the effort to eradicate the Taliban, al Qaeda and Osama bin Laden. Remember him, the leader of the 9/11 plot? He is still out there.

It is about the redirection of the bulk of our military intelligence efforts to an unnecessary, preemptive war against the bloody, loathsome dictator who did not have weapons of mass destruction, was not involved in 9/11, was contained, and no direct threat to the United States.

Secretary Rumsfeld, Vice President Cheney said we would be in and out of Iraq in 90 days. Three years, 3 months later, 2,500 dead, we are still there in the middle of a civil war.

A vote for this resolution is a vote to stay the course, unconditionally, indefinitely in Iraq, and leave our troops in the middle of that war. You should not support it. If you want to lead our troops out of the middle of a civil war in Iraq, redeploy and redirect these efforts to a more productive use of our Nation’s resources and put an end to al Qaeda and the Taliban once and for all.

In fact, the average college senior is graduating this year with more than $17,000 in student debt. Another problem looms for them, however, if they do not consolidate their loans before July 1st. That is when interest rates will nearly double on their Federal student loans.

Mr. Speaker, to avoid dramatic hikes in interest rates and to lock in rates as low as 4.75 percent, I strongly encourage students and graduates to consolidate their Federal loan payments before July 1. Consolidating your loans could save you thousands of dollars over the next decade.

GLOBAL WAR NOT WORTH THE COST

(Mr. MORAN of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of visiting our troops in Iraq last month. I asked General Casey, the commander of our troops, how the political carping in Washington affected the troops. He responded, It doesn’t really affect the troops so much, but it really grates on their families back home.

During Vietnam, I will never forget, as a young Air Force officer flying combat, how much we despised the politicians in Washington who were undermining the war effort. We visited the Iraqi leaders and Prime Minister al Maliki said, Welcome to a free and democratic Iraq. He said, Please tell the American people of our deep gratitude for the sacrifices that your sons and daughters have made to give us our freedom. He said, Please finish the job. Don’t abandon us. Don’t go backward.

Mr. Speaker, I don’t question the patriotism of our opponents in this manner, just their judgment. The cause of freedom is too important to quit. The world and the terrorists are watching. Let’s not lose our resolve.

CONSERVATION OF STUDENT LOANS

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, the Republican leadership is doing nothing to help with rising college education costs. The average cost for 4 years in college at a State university is now over $40,000, and the cost to attend a private university now tops $107,000.

These massive costs are far too much for many families to cover. Republicans have limited the availability of student aid, and both students and their parents are forced to take on huge loans in order to earn their college degree.

But in the end, they may not get a college education, or they may not get a college degree. A college education is the ticket to a good life, a well-paying job, and a comfortable retirement.

We need to pass legislation that will help the parents of these young people who are in college and are in such dire straits now.

I ask all colleagues to join me in the advocacy of helping these kids today. We owe them that much.”
HONORING MATT MAUPIN

(Mrs. SCHMIDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. SCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, as we focus on the global war on terror, I am reminded of the brave actions of our military, including Matt Maupin, the only soldier missing and captured in Iraq on April 9, 2004. Matt and his family live in my district. His parents, Keith and Carolyn Maupin, continue to support our military through their yellow ribbon campaign, sending literally thousands of boxes of food and other items to Iraq and Afghanistan for our brave men and women.

Please continue to pray for Matt and all who are fighting for us.

DECLARING THAT THE UNITED STATES WILL PREVAIL IN THE GLOBAL WAR ON TERROR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 868, proceedings will now resume on the resolution (H. Res. 861) declaring that the United States will prevail in the Global War on Terror, the struggle to protect freedom from the terrorist adversary.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The SPEAKER pro tempore.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to recognize for 3 minutes the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) who chairs the House Agriculture Committee and who sits on the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, just over 3 years ago the world watched as a treacherous tyrant disregarded United Nations resolutions and burrowed into the bunkers of Baghdad. Within a short period of time, coalition forces dismantled Saddam Hussein's regime, which was built on fear, murders, assassinations, torture and lies. And today this despotic dictator stands on trial before the Iraqi people in a courtroom that is a stone's throw from his prison cell.

While insurgents and terrorists continue their attempts to dismantle the progress that the Iraqi people have made, our resolution to see a free Iraq must remain as strong as ever. Iraqis have also demonstrated their commitment to rebuilding their nation from the ashes of tyranny by their overwhelming participation in three democratic elections.

On the eve of completion of Iraq’s democratically elected government, coalition forces and Iraqi police tracked down and killed the man Osama bin Laden referred to as the prince of al Qaeda in Iraq, Abu Musab al Zarqawi. Zarqawi led one of the bloodiest insurgent groups in Iraq in a bloody campaign of shootings, bombings beheadings and kidnappings aimed at derailing democracy in Iraq.

America is the world’s leader in laying the foundations for freedom and future peace. We have stood for the spread of democracy around the world. We believe in it and have stood for it, not only for ourselves, for Europeans, Latin Americans, Asians and Africans. We have stood for it in the Middle East for the Israelis and now for Arabs in the wider Muslim world, in Afghanistan and in Iraq.

With our leadership ideals that have inspired our history, freedom, democracy and human dignity are increasingly inspiring individuals in nations throughout the world, because free nations tend toward peace. The advance of liberty will make America more secure.

Americans have felt the sting of the terrorist threat on our own soil, and we must make clear that we are dedicated to preventing any future attacks by tracking and eliminating terrorist threats. America is more secure today, thanks to the brave men and women of our Armed Forces whose dedication, patriotism and bravery are helping advance freedom and democracy in Iraq and around the world.

President Bush said it best while speaking to our troops during his recent visit to Iraq: this is a moment, this is a time where the world can turn one way or the other, where the world can be a better place or a more dangerous place. The United States of America and citizens such as yourselves are dedicated to making sure that the world we leave behind is a better place for all. Support freedom, support peace, support our troops, support this resolution.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) for a unanimous consent request.

(Mr. ETHERIDGE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to add my voice to the debate on this resolution on Iraq. I will vote for House Resolution 861 because I strongly support our troops.

Mr. Speaker, I recently returned from Iraq, which was my second trip to that war zone. I am tremendously proud of all the men and women serving there, especially all the North Carolinians who have served and continue to serve there. I am pleased that we have made progress in training the Iraqi military to begin to provide for that country’s security needs. Unfortunately, there is a great deal of work to be done to train the Iraqi police and other civil institutions that are critical to a stable and functioning society. There is a long way to go to make Iraq a sustainable, peaceful country, and the administration must change course to build coalitions with our allies and all peaceful nations of the world to cooperate in rebuilding Iraq.

Although I strongly support our troops, I have serious concerns about the administration’s current policies regarding Iraq. I believe the ultimate goal must be victory in Iraq. We need more burden-sharing support from other countries because the whole world has a tremendous stake in a stable Iraq and a peaceful Middle East. The administration must do a better job of providing for our soldiers in the field and at home. Specifically, the communities surrounding Fort Bragg in my district need more Federal funds to build new schools to meet the needs of the children of our servicemen and women. I have asked every time to approve the funds to rebuild Iraq, but if we can spend billions of American tax dollars on building new roads, water treatment plants and schools in Iraq, we can invest some public resources in our urgent infrastructure needs here at home.

Congress has played a critical role in issues like providing armor for our troops and their vehicles, improving pay and incentives for better recruitment and retention of our troops and care for their families and creating the Homeland Security Department to protect our people from the threat of terrorist attack. I call on Congress to reject the administration’s proposed cuts to our vital National Guard, and I will continue to work on the U.S. House Committee on Homeland Security to support our first responders, veterans and military families here at home.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I regret the partisan manner in which this resolution has been brought to this floor, which my North Carolina colleague Republican Congressman WALTER JONES has rightly termed “a charade.” From the very beginning, the Bush White House and Republican congressional leadership have exploited the Iraq war. I believe the blood of our soldiers should be off limits for political gamesmanship, and with more than 20,000 American soldiers killed or wounded in Iraq, the American people deserve better than petty politics on this issue.

I want to go over a couple of things here that some of it was talked about yesterday and I said we need a plan. We also need a change of direction.

Now, why do I say we need a change of direction? A number of people brought up Beirut. I remember being on the floor, and the Speaker of the House asked me to go to Beirut after the President had deployed 1,400 troops to Beirut. Go over to Beirut, see what is going on. I did.

A friend of mine who had been in Vietnam with me was there, the commanding officer, and the rules we engaged in were very loose. Only had 1,400 people, did not even have people on the high ground to protect themselves. They were shooting down at the Marines down in the valley.

I came back and I told the President, I told Weinberger. I told Tip O’Neill, you have got to get them out of there. They did not, 241 Marines were killed. The President saw it was a mistake; he changed direction. One thing about President Reagan, he understood when to change. He understood when you change direction. He had one of the biggest tax cuts in the history of Congress, and then he had one of the biggest tax increases. President Clinton, he had a tax increase because he wanted to change direction.

He changed directions in Central America. I supported him. They burned me in effigy back at home because I supported Reagan all through the Central American thing, but we came to compromise in the end, and he saw we had to change direction and he did.

What I am saying today, Somalia, I told President Bush I do not go into Somalia because if you go into Somalia you will not be able to get out. He said to me, I will have them out by inauguration day. He had lost the election by that time. He went in after the election was over, and he said, I will have them out by inauguration day. Well, he did not get them all out by inauguration day, and we changed direction there. We changed direction in the wrong direction. We went after Adile, who was a tribal leader. We sent in special forces. They bungled the thing. They brought the Somalis in, wounded and killed. They had accountability, and President Clinton changed direction. We redeployed.
So these are not times to criticize President Bush. This is something that needed to be done.

Now, we are in the same position here. Iraqi civilian deaths, 2003, 250; Iraqi civilian deaths in 2006, 1,500 a month, if the average. If they are not somewhere else, we are there. And that is how many deaths. Iraqi kidnappings per day, 2003; two; today, there is 35 a day, 35 a day. U.S. troop fatalities, there were 37 in May of 2003; in May of 2006, 68. We are there. We are there. My goodness, if we continue to kill civilians in Iraq, Iraq Armed police fatalities were 10 in 2003; 149 in May of this year.

Now, this is not progress. We are on the ground with 138,000 troops. The number of estimated insurgents, and I do not know how they find out who they are, but he said there is 3,000, Mr. Speaker, in May of 2003. There is now 20,000 insurgents. Now why did that come about? Because they look at us as occupiers. Only the Iraqis can solve this problem. The United States cannot solve the problem as a foreign occupier, and our troops are caught in between a civil war.

Daily attacks by insurgents, 2003, there were five per day; today, there is 90. Monthly incidents of sectarian violence, you want to know what sectarian violence is? Sectarian violence is civil war. May 2003, 5; May of 2006, 250. We are there. We are there in the country, and it has increased from 5 to 250.

So do not tell me stay the course is the answer. We need a change in direction. We need to assess this situation and change. All of us want the same solution. We want a stable Middle East. It is important not only to the United States; it is important to the international community.

Bush I worked with the international community, and he got a coalition together. He got a successful coalition. We knew the limitations of what he could do. He did not go into Iraq, even though there were some zealots who wanted to go into Iraq. He knew, and he said in his book, if I go into Iraq, I will have to occupy it, I will have to re-construct it, and I will lose the coalition. So he did not go into Iraq, and he was absolutely right. I supported him at the time, even though a lot of people had said they did not support what he was doing.

Somebody yesterday said, oh, you cannot measure the amount of water they have per day, that does not mean anything, the amount of electricity. Let me tell you something. I was without electricity for 8 hours last winter. It is not pleasant. I was cold. Now, it does not get that cold in Iraq, but I was without it for 8 hours and the house got cold. I thought to myself, in Iraq, they only have sometimes 8 to 10 hours of electricity a day. Water, they have 1 hour of water.

There is less oil production than before. Deputy Secretary Wolfowitz said we are going to pay for this with the oil production. Well, it has fallen far short of that. I think he OMB chairman, I think he at the time predicted this war would cost maybe $50 billion, and Wolfowitz said it would cost nothing because they would pay for it. Well, right now we have spent $450 billion. We pay more for electricity, than the more we pay in lives, in hurt to the families, the more we pay in financial resources.

It took us 15 years to get over the Vietnam War. We had 18 percent interest rates. We had 15 percent unemployment. If my administration the Federal Reserve had to increase rates to 21 percent. I remember because at the time I was trying to buy a house. I remember trying to buy it at first, and I said 7 percent, I am not going to pay 7 percent. It went up to 21 percent. So we suffered because it was guns and butter. Here it is the tax cuts and troops in the field paying for the war.

So stay and pay is not a solution. I say redeploy and be ready. Get your troops out of harm’s way and put them on the periphery and let the Iraqis settle this themselves. Only the Iraqis can settle this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds just to say I do not dispute the figure given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I dispute his logic.

I question the cause-and-effect relationship. Our presence has not created terrorists. Terrorists were around much before that. In the instance he cited with previous Presidents, yes, they did react, but obviously the total- ity of their reaction did not stop ter- rorism. We have a different plan, a dif- ferent approach. That is what this President is following.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gent- man from Indiana (Mr. PENCE), a member of the Judiciary Committee.

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given per- mission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentle- man for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong sup- port of this resolution and commend the Re- publican leadership of the House of Representatives for facilitating this extraordinary debate over the war on terror that they were fighting. It was the kind of war we cannot fight. We could have gone all out and obviously destroyed Hanoi, but we had to worry about the Russians and the Chinese.

This is a real problem. It is guerrilla- type war, and when we fight, we have to use overwhelming force. When we use overwhelming force, you make ene- mies, and when you make enemies, you lose the hearts and minds.

I am saying the same thing you are. We want to win some kind of. I do not say victory. We want to win some kind of victory in the Middle East. That is the key be- cause it is important to the free world. That is what is so important.
So we all are saying the same thing. One of the top generals said to me, that part cannot be won militarily all the time they will say. General Pace said it cannot be won militarily. So how do we do it? Diplomatically, politically and when the Iraqis say we are going to give amnesty to people that killed Americans, I mean, they fired the guy, okay, but that is a signal to them. We have 47 percent of the Iraqis say that they want to kill Americans. They think that is patriotic for them to kill Americans. They are willing to do it.

The reason I started speaking is, one of the reasons, I remember I was in the hospital. One young woman said to me, with her husband lying there on the bed, wounded after a second trip, she said, you know, he did not enlist, he was drafted, he was drafted. One young woman said to me, to fight for the Iraqis. She said, you know, he did not enlist, he was drafted, he was drafted, he was drafted.

The Vietnam War is much better for us than is currently the case. In Iraq, which I visited last year, I believe it is important and imperative that this Congress must have a serious, sober discussion about the consequences of failure in Iraq and what that means for the future. Failure in Iraq means a more destabilized Middle East that will be manifested by increasing sectarian strife and a political vacuum that will be filled by murderers and anarchists who most assuredly are not committed to the rule of law.

What is worse, the war will continue, not only in a destabilized Middle East, but elsewhere and in places we would rather not fight. Our friends and allies will be at greatest risk and more exposed than is currently the case.

There were mistakes that have been made in Iraq from intelligence to de-Ba‘athification to the destructive events of Abu Ghraib, but these mistakes should not stop us from our goal: the establishment of a stable, representative, national unity government that can manage the security situation much better itself and that lives in peace with its neighbors.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to submit for the Record detailing the efforts of the House Homeland Security Committee’s contributions in fighting this global war on terror.

The Global War on Terror is, by virtue of its title, a war with world-wide scope. As a member of the Homeland Security Committee, I am particularly concerned about the way in which this war can impact our way of life here, in these United States. And I believe that we have been doing a fine job of trying to make sure that terrorists or agents of foreign powers Do Not harm us on our shores.

Since September 11, the Homeland Security Committee has enacted or sponsored legislation designed to insure the safety of the people living in this country. In H.R. 1544, the Faster and Smarter First Responders Act, we tried to make sure that homeland security grant dollars are spent according to risk, and not with regard to political concerns. In H.R. 1817, the Homeland Security Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006, we authorized the recruitment and training of 2,000 new border patrol agents to ensure that terrorists are not able to penetrate our land borders.

As part of the Global War on Terror we have likewise worked hard to make sure that goods moving into this country are secure. In H.R. 699, the SAFE Port Act of 2006, the Committee authorized $821 million annually for port security programs. This bill further requires the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, to deploy nuclear and radiological detection systems at 22 U.S. seaports by the end of FY07, an action that will cover 98 percent of incoming maritime containers. Further, it makes sure that the people working at our port facilities are properly cleared and identified by forcing DHS to set deadlines for the implementation of the Transportation Worker Information Credential, TWIC, program, a biometric-based identification card system designed to make sure that those who would seek to commit acts of terrorism against us are Not allowed to work within the U.S. port system.

We have also worked hard to make sure that our transportation modalities are also protected in this Global War on Terror. In H.R. 5441, the Homeland Security Appropriations bill, which the House passed on May 25, 2006, we appropriated $2.05 billion for Coast Guard port and waterway security operations, $6.6 billion for rail and mass transit security, $13.2 million for railroad security inspectors and explosive detection canines, and $458 million for chemical, biological, and explosives countermeasures to protect the Nation’s critical infrastructure.

Of course, in addition to securing our transportation modalities, we have also taken steps to make sure that terrorists in the Global War on Terror are not able to access what they clearly would most like to get their hands on—nuclear materials. The SAFE Port Act codifies into law the Domestic Nuclear Detection Office, DNDO. Earlier this year I had the opportunity to visit the DNDO facility in Nevada, and I am firmly convinced of the importance of maintaining the vitality of this organization. The DNDO has one of the most important missions within the DHS—the detection and identification of nuclear materials. During my visit, I observed first-hand the testing of nuclear and radiological countermeasures, including detection devices designed to identify vehicles transporting nuclear materials, devices for radiological material intended for illicit use. The SAFE Port Act further requires the DNDO to conduct testing of next-generation nuclear and radiological detection equipment and to put forth a timeline for completing installation of such equipment at all U.S. ports.

Members of the Homeland Security Committee have worked hard to insure the safety of Americans, our commerce, and our infrastructure. Since September 11, we have not had a major terrorist incident in this country. And I believe that it is appropriate to attribute this positive development at least in part to the efforts of the leadership of this Committee, which is determined to make sure that the homeland is indeed a safe place.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT), a member of the Homeland Security Committee and the Government Reform Committee.

Mr. DENT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the President’s 2007 Budget. Today, the global war on terror is being waged on two primary fronts, as we know: Afghanistan and Iraq.

In Afghanistan, a resurgent Taliban is attempting to undermine the efforts of the United States and our NATO allies. The threat from these murderous extremist terrorists remains real, and if one does not believe us, then I suggest reviewing the events of recent days in Canada, where the terrorists, motivated by Canada’s participation in Afghanistan, unsuccessfully attempted to decapitate the Canadian government. Mr. Speaker, the United States and our NATO allies must remain resolute in Afghanistan.

In Iraq, which I visited last year, I believe it is important and imperative that this Congress must have a serious, sober discussion about the consequences of failure in Iraq and what that means for the future. Failure in Iraq means a more destabilized Middle East that will be manifested by increasing sectarian strife and a political vacuum that will be filled by murderers and anarchists who most assuredly are not committed to the rule of law.

What is worse, the war will continue, not only in a destabilized Middle East, but elsewhere and in places we would rather not fight. Our friends and allies will be at greatest risk and more exposed than is currently the case.

There were mistakes that have been made in Iraq from intelligence to de-Ba‘athification to the destructive events of Abu Ghraib, but these mistakes should not stop us from our goal: the establishment of a stable, representative, national unity government that can manage the security situation much better itself and that lives in peace with its neighbors.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to submit for the Record detailing the efforts of the House Homeland Security Committee’s contributions in fighting this global war on terror.

The Global War on Terror is, by virtue of its title, a war with world-wide scope. As a member of the Homeland Security Committee, I am particularly concerned about the way in which this war can impact our way of life here, in these United States. And I believe that we have been doing a fine job of trying to make sure that terrorists or agents of foreign powers Do Not harm us on our shores.

Since September 11, the Homeland Security Committee has enacted or sponsored legislation designed to insure the safety of the people living in this country. In H.R. 1544, the Faster and Smarter First Responders Act, we tried to make sure that homeland security grant dollars are spent according to risk, and not with regard to political concerns. In H.R. 1817, the Homeland Security Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006, we authorized the recruitment and training of 2,000 new border patrol agents to ensure that terrorists are not able to penetrate our land borders.

As part of the Global War on Terror we have likewise worked hard to make sure that goods moving into this country are secure. In H.R. 699, the SAFE Port Act of 2006, the Committee authorized $821 million annually for port security programs. This bill further requires the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, to deploy nuclear and radiological detection systems at 22 U.S. seaports by the end of FY07, an action that will cover 98 percent of incoming maritime containers. Further, it makes sure that the people working at our port facilities are properly cleared and identified by forcing DHS to set deadlines for the implementation of the Transportation Worker Information Credential, TWIC, program, a biometric-based identification card system designed to make sure that those who would seek to commit acts of terrorism against us are Not allowed to work within the U.S. port system.

We have also worked hard to make sure that our transportation modalities are also protected in this Global War on Terror. In H.R. 5441, the Homeland Security Appropriations bill, which the House passed on May 25, 2006, we appropriated $2.05 billion for Coast Guard port and waterway security operations, $6.6 billion for rail and mass transit security, $13.2 million for railroad security inspectors and explosive detection canines, and $458 million for chemical, biological, and explosives countermeasures to protect the Nation’s critical infrastructure.

Of course, in addition to securing our transportation modalities, we have also taken steps to make sure that terrorists in the Global War on Terror are not able to access what they clearly would most like to get their hands on—nuclear materials. The SAFE Port Act codifies into law the Domestic Nuclear Detection Office, DNDO. Earlier this year I had the opportunity to visit the DNDO facility in Nevada, and I am firmly convinced of the importance of maintaining the vitality of this organization. The DNDO has one of the most important missions within the DHS—the detection and identification of nuclear materials. During my visit, I observed first-hand the testing of nuclear and radiological countermeasures, including detection devices designed to identify vehicles transporting nuclear materials, devices for radiological material intended for illicit use. The SAFE Port Act further requires the DNDO to conduct testing of next-generation nuclear and radiological detection equipment and to put forth a timeline for completing installation of such equipment at all U.S. ports.

Members of the Homeland Security Committee have worked hard to insure the safety of Americans, our commerce, and our infrastructure. Since September 11, we have not had a major terrorist incident in this country. And I believe that it is appropriate to attribute this positive development at least in part to the efforts of the leadership of this Committee, which is determined to make sure that the homeland is indeed a safe place.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to today to celebrate the new freedoms that have recently been won in the Middle East, freedoms that the hard-working heroes in uniform have given them, freedoms they now not only cherish but themselves will fight for.

There are 50 million new lovers of freedom in Iraq and Afghanistan. Their liberation from oppression should compel every freedom-loving citizen on Earth to rejoice. I too am so proud of the freedom we as a Nation have brought to the oppressed.

However, some were more oppressed than others. Women had no voice, no opportunity, no hope, no dreams. All of that is changing, changing because we have championed the cause of freedom. Millions of young girls this very day are getting something they dared not dream about a few short years ago: an education. Today, women are voting. They are also serving as legislators in town councils and places where, before our commitment to liberation, they dared not even look a man in the face. They have been liberated. We are their liberators. We can and should be proud.

Yes, more needs to be done, but in lands where women were treated worse than cattle, a revolution is occurring, a revolution of respect, a liberation of lives. Our actionsily dismantle the lives of millions of women not just better on the margins but have actually giving them hope, endowed them with freedom, and dared them to dream.

We have much to be proud of. I am proud of our men and women in uniform who stand in our behalf. I am proud that this great country stands for good and opposes evil. I am proud that this Congress and this President—understand that freedom is God's gift to all mankind and that evil tolerated is evil assisted.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

Mr. MURTHA. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Democratic leader, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Pelosi), who, on her first trip overseas, went with the President to Iraq to talk to the troops and tell them how much she supported the troops.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, at the opening of the debate, Mr. SKELTON asked observers a moment of silence for the 2,500 troops that we have lost in the war in Iraq. The number is staggering one, but we warned them one person at a time. I hope their families live with great pride. I know they will live with great sorrow.

My uncle was killed at the Battle of the Bulge, and for my father's entire life it was as if it had happened yesterday. As if it had happened yesterday. We know that experience has been repeated over and over again across our country.

In remembering those who died, and their families who mourn them, let us also salute all of our men and women in uniform who are doing their jobs with great courage, with great patriotism and dedication, and their families who are making enormous sacrifices; 2,500 killed, 18,000 wounded, more than half of them permanently, straining our military readiness and eroding our reputation in the world.

The President of the United States says, stay the course. Stay the course? I don't think so, Mr. President. It is time to face the facts.

On every important aspect in the Iraq war, President Bush and his advisors have been wrong; wrong on the reason to go to war, wrong on the reception our troops would receive, wrong on the rapidity with which the Iraqi economy would be able to pay for our troops if it attempted to use to secure and develop Iraq's economy. I repeat: defense and intelligence expert Anthony Cordesman recently wrote: "The U.S. aid process has failed. It has wasted at least half of the $22 billion in U.S. aid funds in an attempt to secure and develop Iraq's economy." This is outrageous. Where is the accountability? In fact, Mr. Cordesman concludes that the U.S.-managed Iraq reconstruction efforts have been as failed as the U.S. response to Hurricane Katrina.

The Bush administration has diverted resources and attention from what should be the focus of our effort against terrorism in places like Afghanistan. The lack of stability and the deteriorating security situation in Afghanistan is a casualty of the war in Iraq. The war has not made our country safer. It has not made our military stronger. It has caused great damage to our reputation in the world, and it has hindered the fight against terrorism.

In face of this incompetence and the cost of the war, I repeat, the President urges us to "stay the course." Stay the course, Mr. President, is not a strategy. It is a slogan.

I will vote against this resolution because it is an affirmation of the President's failed policy in Iraq, and in doing so I will be pleased to join Mr. MURTHA and Mr. SKELTON. And I would like to at this moment salute them for their prior dedication to our country. They are second to none, as Mr. SKELTON said in his remarks. They are second to none in this Congress and in this country in looking out for the troops and being concerned and knowledgeable about troop readiness, about the strains on our military this war is putting on them and in determining our ability to respond to other threats.

I recognize for their leadership and, in fact, their courage. Because here we have the Republicans putting on the floor a vacuous resolution, a challenge that if you say that you support the troops, you have to vote for this. That day is over. That day is over. The Bush administration's real security for our country, be it homeland security, be it willing to project military might to protect America's interests at home and abroad, we all share a that. So don't put something on the table that says you support the troops if you support the troops or you don't.

This resolution is one thing and one thing only: it is an affirmation of President Bush's failed Iraq policy. The American people know the policy has failed. The American people know that. Hopefully, it will dawn on the President, and he, instead of stay the course, will change the course. He will stop digging the hole he is digging in and the time to do that is right now as to what is the right direction.

Across the country, Americans have had free and open debate about this war. But when the time came to debate Iraq in the 2006 Congress, shut down debate with a closed rule. This is not only an affront to the Democrats; it is an affront to the American people. Closed rule. Limited debate. Twice as many people on our side of the aisle would like to have spoken, but there wasn't enough time. There wasn't enough time to give Members of Congress the opportunity to give voice to the concerns of their constituents about a matter as important as sending and keeping our troops at war.

That is a sad commentary on our democracy. We supposedly are going to Iraq to promote democracy, yet we don't even have it on the floor of the House of Representatives. What is sad about that is that we owe so much better to so many, much for the American people, particularly to the brave men and women we have sent to fight in Iraq.

Democrats are calling for a new direction in Iraq. Our new direction is to say to the Iraqi people that we will not be in your country indefinitely, we will not construct permanent bases, and we will not control the flow of your oil. We will work with you and your neighbors diplomatically to ensure that the reconstruction of Iraq is successful. We will do as Mr. MURTHA advocates. We will redeploy and be ready.

Republicans in Congress continue to try to mislead the American people by trying to link the war in Afghanistan and the war in Iraq. They are distinct, as Mr. SKELTON has repeatedly and eloquently stated. They are distinct. And efforts to portray one as part of the other are a disservice to the truth and to the men and women sent to fight in Baghdad, Kirkuk, and Ramadi. The huge cost of the Iraqi war in lost lives, life-altering wounds sustained, and billions of dollars spent demand better of us.

The defense authorization bill, as was quoted again by Mr. SKELTON, enacted last year, declares 2006 to be a year of significant transition to full Iraqi sovereignty, creating the conditions of the phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq. That is in the 2006 DOD authorization bill; the phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq. That is the law of the land. You all voted to support it.

We are halfway through 2006. Significant transition has not occurred, and the redeployment of United States forces into Iraq, not out. The war in Iraq has been a mistake. I say a grotesque mistake. It must be our resolve to end the war as soon as possible and to resolve to not make similar mistakes in the future. We owe it to the American people. We owe it to the young men and women that we send in to fight the fight.

Again, Democrats take our responsibility very seriously. We provide for the common defense very seriously. We are proud to have leaders like Mr. MURTHA and Mr. SKELTON to lead that charge for us.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to yield a real 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), the chairman of the Government Reform Committee.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution before us today. I would like to first offer my gratitude to those brave men and women who are fighting or have fought in Iraq and Afghanistan. We owe you a debt which we can never repay.

Since the United States invaded Iraq, I have seen this as a high-stakes gamble. If we were successful in not only defeating the Army, but in the more difficult task of establishing a democratic government, we would be far down the road to affecting a paradigm shift in the Middle East, one which would replace potentates, dictators, and repression with representative governments, transparency, and opportunities for both men and women.

If we were to fail, the cost would be incalculable. It would be a reaffirmation for many in the world that the United States lacked the fortitude to see a mission through to its completion. It would embolden terrorists the world over; threaten those states in the Middle East, such as Jordan and Israel, that are friends of the United States.

Regardless, the situation in Iraq is what it is. There is no question Iraq is a petri dish for terrorists now. Our main nemesis in Iraq is called “al Qaeda in Iraq.” Thus, our activities in both Iraq and Afghanistan are now clearly linked to a global war on terror. There is no other way to view the situation.

I am eager to build on the recent successes in Iraq. I truly hope that we have turned a corner with the death of Zarqawi and the forming of the government. If voter turnout is any indication, the Iraqi people are eager for democracy. They had a higher voter turnout than we did in Virginia in our gubernatorial race. But make no mistake, what we are trying to do in Iraq has been and will continue to be extraordinarily difficult. Even with Zarqawi gone, there are many dangerous people who will stop at nothing to stop us.

I don’t support a public date of certain withdrawal from Iraq. Doing so creates an untenable situation for our forces and our Iraqi allies and presents a real gift of predictability to the enemy. But there has to be a sense of urgency. We are in a war that we have to win, but we cannot plod along indefinitely.

Our Founding Fathers had 13 years between the beginning of the American Revolution, the ratification of the Constitution, and the inauguration of George Washington. We don’t have that luxury in Iraq. Our troops are giving their lives in Iraq. Our country is spending billions upon billions of dollars. We can’t pull the rug out from under the Iraqis, but we can’t babysit the situation either. We don’t have time to waste on activities that are ineffective. We don’t have money to waste on bad equipment and services.

Some have charged that this Congress has been asleep at the wheel and has done no oversight. That’s not true. I have. Our committee has held four hearings on contracting practices in Iraq, including a day for whistleblowers at Halliburton, and I intend to hold more.

Our subcommittees, particularly the one chaired by Mr. SHAYS, have held dozens of others. What we have found is not oversight, but mistakes in management and oversight. But remember, this is the first time we have contracted this extensively in a combat situation. Everything about doing business, everything in a war zone is difficult and costly, and it is disingenuous to deny this.

If we are going to see this mission through successfully, there must continue to be vigorous, comprehensive, constant oversight to ensure we stay on the right path. We should do everything we can to hasten the day when Iraq is able to handle its own affairs. Our role in Congress is to conduct the oversight that the people expect of us.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FATTAH) for a unanimous consent request.

(Mr. FATTAH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise again today in opposition to the war in Iraq, a position I have consistently supported the President has failed, stating shortage has been the lack of leadership to guide their mission. Surely the most devastating shortage has been the lack of leadership in this conflict. The President has failed, since the beginning, to chart a course for victory, to correct mistakes as they have arisen, to secure that the ideals for which the American forces are fighting are never compromised.

I rise in honor of the sacrifice that far too many men and women have been called to make and in the hope that this conflict will find a new direction, one which will support American victory, security and justice. I look forward to working with my colleagues as a new direction. One which will support the American people. We owe it to the American people. We owe it to the future security and American victory, security and justice. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to chart a better course and plan a better future for the people of America and the people of Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) for the purpose of a unanimous consent request.

(Mr. KILDEE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, let us be very clear on the points we can agree.

Every Member of this House was horrified by the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. Every Member of this House believes we must do what is necessary to protect our country and our people from future attacks and to eliminate the threat of terrorism.

And every Member of this House supports our troops and their families, and we commend them for their honorable service under very difficult and stressful circumstances.

But today, Mr. Speaker, this House debates the ongoing war in Iraq, not the struggle against terrorism - a war we voted no when the House considered the Congressional Resolution authoring the President to invade Iraq.

At that time, I had several crucial questions that needed clear answers:

1. What is the nature and the urgency of the Iraqi threat to the United States?
2. What is the mission of our troops?
3. How much international support will we have?
4. Will this military operation in Iraq increase terrorism or decrease terrorism?
5. How is the exit strategy to withdraw our troops from Iraq?

Despite my questions on the rationale for the war, I have consistently supported the funding for our troops.

They deserve our full support, and they deserve to have everything necessary for their mission.

As the father of two sons who have served in the military, I would want no less.

Mr. Speaker, we now know that Saddam Hussein did not have weapons of mass destruction.

President Bush has publicly acknowledged that there was no link or connection between Saddam Hussein and the terrorist attacks on 9/11.
The mission of our troops seems to change and expand daily.

As for international support, the American taxpayer has footed the vast majority of the costs to the tune of hundreds of billions of dollars.

And American fighting men and women, and their families, have borne the vast majority of the deaths and injuries to coalition troops, over 2,500 killed and 18,000 wounded.

Moreover, many of the original members of our coalition have withdrawn or are withdrawing their troops from Iraq, leaving the U.S. to shoulder the burden almost alone.

Are we safer today than we were before the invasion of Iraq?

According to U.S. State Department data, there were 175 international terrorist attacks in 2003, and that was a 20-year high.

In 2004, the number jumped three-fold to 650 attacks.

In 2005, 11,111 terror attacks were reported by the state department.

Finally, the Bush Administration does not now nor ever has had a viable exit strategy for our troops in Iraq.

Saying, “we will stand down as the Iraqis stand up” puts the fate and future of American troops completely at the mercy of the competence of the Iraqi government and its security forces.

I agree with the resolution before us, we should not set an “arbitrary” date for withdrawal of U.S. troops from Iraq.

But we should set intelligent, well-thought out benchmarks that make the most sense for American national interests.

Setting reasonable benchmarks for the departure of our troops would send several important messages.

To the Iraqi national government—get your house in order now!

To the Iraqi Sunnis opposing our occupation now is the time to cut your best deal with the Shiite and Kurdish factions while the U.S. is still able to act as an honest broker.

To our American military leaders—here is a date to which you can plan, knowing when the rebuilding of our military capabilities can begin.

To the American people we have done what we could.

From this point on, it is now up to the Iraqi people to find their way, with the support of the international community.

And finally, to the terrorists the Iraqi people will deal with you now if you remain in Iraq.

For all the other terrorists outside of Iraq, the United States can now shift the full force of its military, diplomatic, law enforcement, and economic resources to the single task of hunting, destroying, and bringing you to justice.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER) for the purpose of a unanimous consent request.

(Mr. OLVER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks on Iraq.

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution before us.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 861 is a whitewash justification of every erroneous action of the Bush-Cheney administration in their war of choice on Iraq.

It’s no surprise that Bush, CHENEY and Rumsfeld seek this late coating of whitewash that this resolution attempts to provide. The war on Iraq was unjustified, has been egregiously mismanaged, and has made all Americans less safe.

Americans were told repeatedly by President Bush and Vice President CHENEY that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction. None were ever found.

President Bush and Vice President CHENEY repeatedly implied that Iraq was involved in the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon on September 11, 2001. The preponderance of intelligence before the attack on Iraq contradicted that and no such evidence has been found.

The conduct of President Bush’s war of choice has been plagued with incompetent civilian leadership decisions that have cost many lives and rendered the war on and occupation of Iraq a strategic policy disaster for the United States. The incompetence and corruption involved in the reconstruction have rendered that expensive effort largely ineffective.

The most critical, much-cited incompetent decision on the part of the Bush administration was to commit far too small a force for the huge, dangerous and multifaceted tasks at hand. Because of that egregious blunder in judgment and planning by the Bush administration, our severely overextended troops took many more casualties than necessary, and they could not do their job.

Stop the looting of the treasures of Iraq’s ancient culture and the public institutions of present day Iraq—its schools, universities and hospitals;

Seize control of Saddam’s huge conventional weapons depots which have been used to kill our service men and women throughout the insurgency;

Control the borders against the influx into Iraq of senior terrorists from Bin Laden’s international network who wanted to be part of killing Americans;

Provide the Iraqi civilian population security from the Sunni-Baathist insurgency as it grew in strength; and

Hold the ground fought over with insurgents in search and destroy missions which left whole cities in ruins and whatever remained of the civilizing and economic life of the innocent Iraqi people.

The incompetence regarding body and vehicle armor rises almost to a level of criminal negligence.

The military’s own report says that one-third of deaths and casualties could have been avoided if proper body armor and vehicle armor had been provided from the start of the war. Our soldiers’ civilian leaders did not follow a first maxim of war: protect your troops.

American service men and women deserved far better, and the civilian leaders who failed them should be held accountable.

But instead of honoring our soldiers now with an honest debate about the war, its conduct and its prospects, we are presented today with a thick coating of whitewash. This resolution is dishonest on its very face.

Even though there was no connection between Afghanistan and Iraq, H. Res. 861 seeks desperately to make that false connection. It seeks to transform the bad decision to wage war on Iraq as a valid component of the global war on terror. It seeks to cast the incompetence in Iraq as progress in the global war on terror. Even though there was never any philosophical or operational connection between Saddam Hussein and Al Qaeda, the President and his Republican allies in Congress seek by this resolution to re-write history and re-cast the war on Iraq as having positive implications in the war on terrorism.

Exactly the opposite is true.

After 9/11, in part because so many nations lost citizens in the World Trade Center, America enjoyed virtually total global support and willingness to collaboratively destroy the Bin Laden Al Qaeda network. The opportunity was there to work carefully with the world, including almost all Muslim nations, to make Americans and the whole world safer by isolating and shutting down Al Qaeda.

Did we complete that mission? No; Bin Laden is still at large and the conditions in Afghanistan are deteriorating. Instead, President Bush started a second war unrelated to 9/11 and the hunt for Bin Laden’s networks and his followers.

We’ve now spent well over $350 billion on an effort that has not achieved its own goals and, due to its astronomical cost and resource drain, has severely undercut our ability to pursue and destroy Bin Laden’s international terror network with its many cells that existed in 2002, continue to exist today and certainly will exist into the future.

Twenty-five hundred fine young American men and women have lost their lives, 95 percent of whom have been killed since President Bush declared “Mission Accomplished” more than 3 years ago.

America has also forever lost the service of thousands of good soldiers who are now disabled as a result of battle wounds in Iraq. Many others will need mental and emotional rehabilitation before they can return to normal life. The multiple re-deployments of Guard and Reserve troops have severely diminished the re-tention and recruitment prospects for the fighting force we depend upon to protect us.

President Bush and his administration have defended torture and rendition and ignored the Geneva Conventions. America has lost the moral high ground with the rest of the world, and we have fewer allies as a result. President Bush and his administration have undermined the war on terror by using tactics outlawed by international treaty and condemned by even our closest friends and allies.

And, finally, President Bush’s war on Iraq has provided Al Qaeda a training and recruitment ground that it could not have hoped for in its wildest dreams, as well as a golden opportunity to target Americans right in the unprotected center of the Middle East. President Bush’s war on Iraq is viewed broadly in Islamic communities as an attack on Islam, and thus the President has alienated a large part of one fifth of the world’s population. The most extreme individuals and factions in Islamic countries are now more motivated than ever to kill Americans, and the number of potential terrorists has greatly expanded.

So a truthful assessment of how America is doing in the war on terror as a result of President Bush’s war on Iraq is that we have been set back by decades. Bad decisions and incompetence have achieved a vast determination in countless desperate, impoverished, disaffected and oppressed young Muslim men and women to take out their anger and express their fundamentalism and radicalism by attacking Americans and their friends and interests.

We are far less safe as a nation and will remain so throughout our lifetimes and our children’s lifetimes.
Clearly, a stable, unified and democratic Iraq cannot be achieved militarily by the U.S. Our servicemen and women have done the best job that can be done in the situation into which their civilian leaders have placed them, and they deserve the highest level of gratitude from all Americans. They have already taken too many casualties—too many dead, too many wounded—because they were too few and too poorly provided with the armor they needed to succeed safely.

If a unified and stable Iraq is to emerge out of the ethnic and sectarian violence that is so pernicious a feature of war, the Iraqi people and their government must make the political compromises necessary to secure a successful democracy. They must find in themselves a new nation. We cannot do that for them; we can only give them the opportunity to do it.

Nor should we accept the President’s mantra, “When the Iraqis stand up, we will stand down.” A nice slogan, but that is simply a recipe for an unlimited occupation.

We need to make it clear that we will withdraw from Iraq within 6 to 9 months—so that the Iraqi people will know that they must stand up and defend the opportunity given to them.

We should immediately state that we will seek no permanent military bases in Iraq. In the remaining months, we should focus on achieving more robust international involvement of coalition soldiers, police, trainers, and other elements needed to end the sectarian and civil conflict and build Iraq’s future. And we should prepare for the safe and orderly withdrawal of our troops.

The Bush administration has made many grievous and costly errors in Iraq over the past 3½ years and made little, if any, progress in the war on terrorism thereby. It is time to bring our young people home.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California.

The gentleman just before I spoke talked about how long it took America to get its independence. Actually, it is more than 3½ years. We won through the Civil War, but they were all Americans. It was not an occupying force that was trying to force democracy on the United States. Can you imagine what we would have done if we had an occupying force here trying to force democracy on the United States? It would not have worked. But of course they were not democracies in any case in those years.

So I just want to point out that in Iraq we have become the occupiers, and 47 percent of the people in Iraq, and this is a poll only 3 months old, says it is okay to kill Americans. One of the officials in the Iraqi government offered amnesty. Since I spoke out on November 17, things have gotten worse. We have 130,000 troops in Iraq. Every day it gets worse. From May to May, it gets worse and worse. It is not a matter of the course. It is a matter of change direction.

I said a little earlier, Ronald Reagan understood when it was time to change direction. He did one of the biggest tax cuts in history. He turned around a little bit later and adjusted that. This didn’t call it a tax increase, it was an adjustment.

In Beirut he decided we have to make a change, it won’t work. In Somalia, President Clinton did the same thing. And over that mistake and it was subsequent to the Secretary of Defense resigned because he had lost the confidence of the military in the way he handled the situation in Somalia. We changed direction there. We went in the wrong direction. We went after a terrorist leader named Al Qaeda.

In Iraq, unfortunately, the way we operate as a military, and there is no one who understands better than the gentleman with the 173rd in California, understands what the military does when it goes into a place. You have to use overwhelming force. I promote that, I am in favor of that. I do everything I can to make sure that the military has what they need to prevail and protect American lives.

But who would be—first of all, you inadvertently kill people and you make enemies. Abu Ghraib was another example of the enemies that we made, and the public relations battle has been lost worldwide. People have discredited the United States and have little confidence in our ability.

Somebody brought up Spain yesterday. They said ask Spain about terrorism. Well, 56 percent of the people in Spain think the United States is more of a threat than Spain is in the world. So we have got a lot of things we can talk about as rhetoric. The facts are the situation is not getting better. We have 130,000 troops on the ground and only Iraqis can handle this.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Sweeney) for a unanimous consent request.

Mr. SWEENEY. I thank the gentleman. I do hope that despite my concerns that this debate provides a clearer understanding of the threats we really face and the opportunity to develop a strategy that protects our troops and enables our military to develop a comprehensive strategy to win this war, transfer the power to the Iraqi people and bring them home. It should also demonstrate that the “cut and run” agenda of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle is the wrong approach to the problem and encourages the terrorists to wait us out and undo all that our soldiers have worked through blood, sweat, tears and their lives to establish—a victory for our nation and a stable and secure democracy in the Middle East.

Lastly, and most importantly, I will continue to stand by and support U.S. troops. I must take this opportunity to pay a personal tribute to the brave lives that have been claimed from my district: Nathan Brown, Stephen Madison, Kevin Kimberly, Isaac Nieves, and Joseph Robisky. Their sacrifice, and the sacrifice of those thousands and thousands more who embody the spirit of our great nation and principles of democracy we hold dear.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Gillmor) for a unanimous consent request.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my support for the efforts of our brave men and women in uniform fighting to protect our Nation in the global war on terror. Today, some people are...
Mr. Speaker, we are the world’s last remaining superpower. We are the leader of democracy and the pinnacle of freedom. If bands of murderous terrorists in Iraq and Afghanistan can convince this body to abandon our mission, they will have won. And they will not stop at simply expelling America from Iraq. They will work to destroy the western world, our values and our freedoms.

Our mission in Iraq has changed. Our forces easily defeated and captured Saddam Hussein and his henchmen. Now, our mission is to finish the job by building up Iraqi security forces and the Iraqi Government so that they can defend and govern themselves. I believe President Bush when he says, “As Iraqis stand up, we will stand down.”

Today the Iraqi forces have gained great strength and are more than twice as many members of the Iraqi Security Forces as there are U.S. forces serving in Iraq. Iraqi forces are now a part of more than 90 percent of all operations in Iraq. With the complete formation of the presidential cabinet, three free elections and the elimination of al-Qaeda leaders in Iraq, the global war on terror is indeed progressing and advancing freedom and democracy across the world.

Mr. Speaker, our debate today is a useful one. It is an opportunity to say to the world that we stand behind our troops 100 percent. This debate shows that we support the mission of our American patriots. Today, the United States Congress should pass this resolution and demonstrate to the world, once again, our commitment to freedom and democracy.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH) for a unanimous consent request.

Mr. RADANOVICH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to discuss the Global War on Terror in Iraq and Afghanistan. With the events of the past few weeks, including the completion of a democratically elected government and the elimination of al-Qaeda terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, we have seen the development of democracies and another strong blow against terrorism. The importance of staying the course in Iraq and Afghanistan is evident with every success.

Steadfast determination in Iraq is key to the security of the United States and the global community. I strongly support the United States’ continued military involvement in the Global War on Terror. The importance of keeping our country safe by standing up for democracy and freedom is our number one priority.

I had the opportunity to visit with our troops in Iraq and felt so proud. Their determination to bring peace and hope to the Middle East and end the terrorist threat to the U.S. was humbling and inspiring. Nothing demonstrates our military families’ commitment more than the family of Corporal Michael Anderson Jr. who came to Washington, from Modesto, California, recently to honor is life. It was a privilege to meet such an inspiring family, who, in the face of tragedy, demonstrated unwavering patriotism.

Our courageous soldiers, who are fighting with courage and our way of life, deserve the full support of the American people. We owe it to those who have given their lives, to stay and complete this mission.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the resolution declaring the United States will prevail in the Global War on Terror.

We have made great strides in the War on Terror. The men and women of our Armed Forces along with coalition partners deserve our continued support. They have displayed nothing short of true dedication and continued professionalism in carrying out their mission.

It is with high esteem that I rise to say we are winning the Global War on Terrorism. This is highlighted by the capture of Osama bin Laden’s Prince of Iraq, al-Zarqawi. This is truly a milestone in the continuing hundreds of raids which continue to provide an enormous amount of new intelligence to our commanders in the field. As political polls show, a majority of Iraqis wants the violence to end, and that Sunnis, Shites, and other tribes were coming together to help make that happen. As an example of progress on the ground, he said that the number of intelligence “tips” had increased from 400 per month to 4,000 which makes the capture of terrorists like al-Zarqawi possible.

The newly elected prime minister, Nuri al-Maliki, the first constitutional prime minister of Iraq since the revolutionaries toppled the Iraqi monarchy and murdered the royal family in 1958, has been successful in establishing a diverse government; one that has demonstrated a willingness to work together. This cooperation has transcended to the general population. A new Iraqi society, one that seeks to live in harmony with each other and believe the government can improve the situation in Iraq, is a society that is much safer because the Iraqi Security Forces now conducted over 32,000 patrols during the month of April. There are 263,400 forces assigned to the Ministry of Defense and they are capable of conducting over 86 percent of the planned operations. It is projected by the end of this year, the Iraqi Security Forces will have responsibility and capability to fulfill a 100 percent of such operations.

Mr. Speaker, our goal of defeating terrorists, establishing a free and independent Iraq is achievable if we continue to pursue our current course.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HENSARLING), who sits on the Budget Committee and the Financial Services Committee.

Mr. HENSARLING. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate very carefully the last day or nearly those who want to debate whether we should have gone into Iraq. That point is moot.

There are some who want to debate immediate withdrawal regardless of the consequences. That is dangerous.

Some just want to criticize the administration yet offer no plan of their own. That is political posturing.

Finally, there are some who want to debate that victory is not possible in Iraq, it is essential to our security. Count me among their numbers.

Like many Members of this body, I have been to Iraq to visit with our troops. Those whom I have spoken to, they believe we are winning. And they also believe it is essential, like one soldier told me, Congressman, I hate being here, but I know how important it is to my family and how important it is to my country and I will do what is right.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the American people are anxious, and I know that many days progress comes three steps forward and two steps backwards. And unfortunately, the national media tends to only portray the two steps backwards.

Mr. Speaker, Saddam Hussein has been captured. He has been defeated. extremist al Zarqawi that we number one terrorist in the region, has been eliminated. A quarter million of the Iraqi troops have been trained, equipped, and on patrol. After years of halting progress, we now have a fully functioning, democratic government in Iraq. This is important because we are not threatened by democracies. We are threatened by despotic regimes and terrorist ideologies.

But the news stories that are most important about why we are there are never written. I come from Dallas, Texas. I have never read the story that today no suicide bomber exploded in North Park Mall. I have never read the story that today no car bomb went off in Poteet High School, and I know I have never read the story that today JEB and Melissa HENSARLING put their 4-year old and 2-year old to bed in a safer, more secure Dallas, Texas, U.S.A.

Victory is costly. Defeat is even more costly.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for standing up for the last 10 hours in defense of our country and the troops that serve us and, most importantly, throughout his entire life, and I thank him for demanding that the Iraqi people stand up for their own country and responding to the American people who are demanding that this Congress stand up for our Nation’s interest. Staying the course in Iraq is not in our Nation’s interest.

Several times the proponents of this resolution have cited Winston Churchill. Wonderful, lofty rhetoric, but they are advocating a pol-

It has been argued if we redeploy it might hurt our credibility around the world. As has been said, our approval ratings around the world are the lowest they have ever been. People rank us down with Russia in terms of trust and respect.

It has been argued if we redeploy it might encourage terrorists. Our continued presence is the rallying cry for terrorists around the world. It has been argued that it might hurt American troops’ morale. Mr. Speaker, 2,500 brave men and women dead, 18,000 seriously wounded and you want to stay the course?

It has been argued that there might be a civil war if we redeploy. There is a civil war today. The fact is the Iraqis are going to have to seize control of their own country. We have to redeploy. We won’t leave the region, but we will be there to fight off foreign terrorists. But the Iraqis are going to have to determine their own future.

That’s why this resolution is not in America’s interest. Defeat this resolution. Changing the course, having a definable objective in Iraq is in America’s interest.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 1 1/2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. McHENRY).

(Mr. McHENRY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McHENRY. Mr. Speaker, resolve, untested, is only an idea.

Today we are fighting a war against Islamic extremists. Make no mistake about it, this is a generational challenge. It was my grandparents’ generation that fought the communists. It is our generation that is fighting Islamic extremists wherever they are.

The left in this country have a policy that they are advocating here today, and that is advocating a policy called cut and run. They are advocating a policy of waving the white flag to our enemies. It is a policy, make no mistake about it, that the left in this country are advocating.

But we are fighting a war. We are fighting a war against Islamic extremists that hate the very fiber of our being as Americans. They hate our freedoms and they hate the fact that we embrace equality here in this country, although imperfect. They hate the fact that we have religious freedom and freedom of speech in this country. Make no mistake about it, these are important things to Americans, and our enemy hates those important things.

We are having a great debate here, 10 hours of debate here in this Congress on this war policy, and I am proud that the majority of this country will stand up to fight and win this war. It is not about status quo, it is about victory.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to me, we stand here and fight in the air-conditioned Chambers of the United States Congress where these fellows are walking around in Iraq, men and women, with 70 pounds every day facing IEDs, never knowing when they may go off with tremendous stress. They are being deployed three and four times. It is easy to stay in an air-conditioned office and say I’m going to stay the course.

But let me tell you something, those troops, I hope they believe in what they are doing. That’s what America is all about. But standing here and talking about policy and criticizing people just because they disagree with a policy is absolutely absurd. All of us support the troops and want them to come home as soon as they can.

What we need is a change in direction so we will be able to work this out. All of us want stability in the Middle East. That is what this whole thing is all about. We just disagree on how you do it. We disagree. Ever since the troops have been there, everything has gotten worse.

Electricity production is below pre-war levels; water only 1 hour a day in some parts. In Anbar Province no water, no power, no body payment. Not one project in Anbar Province. So it is not a matter of whether it is good or not. It is a matter only that the Iraqi’s should solve this thing.

And when I hear somebody standing here sanctimoniously saying we are going to fight this out, we are not fighting at all. It is the troops that are doing the fighting, the families that are doing the sacrificing, a very small proportion of families in this country are doing the sacrificing. And that is why I get so upset when they stand here sanctimoniously saying we are fighting this thing. It is the troops that are doing the fighting, not the Members of Congress that are doing the fighting.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) for a unanimous consent request.

(Mr. GINGREY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. Speaker, I rise in full support of H. Res. 861.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this resolution, H. Res. 861, and to emphatically declare that we will prevail in the War on Terror across the globe, and in Iraq. We’ve already amassed a long list of accomplishments. Mr. Speaker, since being liberated from the oppressive Taliban regime, native Afghans have returned to their homeland in droves, many of whom are highly educated healthcare providers, and community leaders that were thrown out of the country by the Taliban.

The Afghan economy continues to power ahead and previously unheard-of opportunities are opening up, particularly for Afghani women.

Regrettably, these accomplishments don’t seem to generate much enthusiasm with the mainstream media or our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. If you did nothing but listen to their negativity, you would not know that more than 3,600 schools in Iraq have been rehabilitated, or that 240 hospitals and 1,200 medical clinics have been reopened, nor that 13 power plants have been built, providing about 60 percent of Iraq’s power generation that over 50,000 security forces have been trained, equipped, and are fighting on the front line against the insurgency!

Further, Mr. Speaker, without our policies and efforts in carrying out the War on Terror, Libya would not have given up their WMD programs, free elections would not have taken place in Afghanistan and Iraq, a national unity government would not be in place in Iraq, and Abu Musab al-Zarqawi would still be carrying out terrorist operations.

Instead of heralding the unparalleled successes of our troops and our policies in prosecuting this war, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle would have the American people believe we are losing.

Perhaps Mr. Speaker, the hope of political gains has some of my colleagues seeking to exploit the few missteps we have incurred while ignoring a much greater number of victories.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot give in to the anti-American rhetoric, which only serves to embolden our enemies while offering little hope and little vision. It is always easier to pull back the reigns and watch from the sidelines, but we in America choose to be active in determining the course of history. Make no mistake, we are in a tough fight for the future of peace, freedom, and democracy in the Middle East and around the globe, but winning should be our only option.

As we debate this resolution today, let us not forget that nearly every colleague on the other side of the aisle when presented with the same pre-war intelligence that President Bush had concluded with high confidence that Iraq was continuing its WMD programs contrary to U.N. resolutions. For those who now want to claim the pre-war intelligence was in some way fabricated, both the bipartisan Senate Intelligence Committee in 2004 and bipartisan Robb-Silberman Committee in 2005 did not find any evidence to support that claim. It is shameful that “Monday Morning” critics who hate Secretary Rumsfeld and President Bush and who are now resorting to false claims about pre-war intelligence countries in the past, along with his desire to bring us harm. Republicans and Democrats alike reached consensus that the potential for him to either harm us directly with these weapons, or indirectly by passing them on to terrorists, was too great a risk to take. The terrible possibilities of such a scenario are now demonstrated by Sadaam and his blatant disregard for repeated U.N. resolutions were further compelling grounds for our bi-partisan action.

Mr. Speaker, none of these facts have changed. What has changed is the resolve of many on both sides of the aisle. In the process of changing their footing on the war, have become more interested in playing politics than in defeating terrorism and defending freedom. When these Members of Congress who are advocating a defeatist strategy, something referred to as “cut and run”, were presented with the opportunity in November 2005 to vote on withdrawing our forces from Iraq immediately, only 3 of those behind these calls stood by their words.

Mr. Speaker, Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki of Iraq made the following statements this past Friday: “We believe we will soon reach a tipping point in our battle against the terrorists as Iraqi security services increase in size and capacity, taking more and more responsibility away from the multinational forces. With our allies, we are determined to make Iraq a prosperous democracy in the heart of the Middle East.”

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to see great hope and potential in the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people. However, I also recognize that shortsighted strategies threaten any chance of Iraq becoming a bastion for democracy in the Middle East. I sincerely hope the defeatist rhetoric of the minority party will not dishearten the brave men and women who are defending and advancing freedom around the globe.

Therefore Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support this resolution. Let our brave men and women in uniform know that we will never break faith with them. Let the Iraqi people know that their patriots have not died in vain.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am pleased to be joined by the gentleman after an absence of 16 years, he was one of the first people to greet me. I have enormous respect for the work we did together with others here 25 years ago in fighting common battles. I have a general disagreement with him on this approach. I don’t question your patriotism. I certainly am attempting not to be sanctimonious about this. But I think there are some real problems I think we must point out. One of them would be: I have heard it said from your side of the aisle that we are attempting to force democracy on this country, and it will never work.

Look at the three elections they had, the one in 2005, 3 percent of the people showed up, 3 percent of the registered voters. I would suggest if we were on this floor talking about Iraq where only 3 percent supported, people would say democracy is a failure. I am not willing to give up on the Commonwealth of Virginia. I hope we are not willing to give up on Iraq.

Secondly, the question about Vietnam. And I have the greatest respect for the gentleman; he served there with distinction, just as my father served in World War II with distinction. But I would suggest there are a number of differences between Vietnam and this experience. And one of the chief ones is: this war is not complete. There was a clear victory in Vietnam. We did not follow us. If we leave Iraq, the terrorists would follow us.

Some would suggest that it is a shame that we are fighting them there. I say it is wonderful that we are fighting them there rather than here.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may use.

I didn’t mean to imply that the gentleman from California is sanctimonious. It is just some of the speakers who have been sanctimonious. But that is not the point. We want the same thing. We want stability in the Middle East. It is important. We use more oil than any other country in the world, 20.6 million barrels of oil a day. The closest to us is Pakistan, 1.5 million barrels of oil a day. The whole free world wants stability in the Middle East. It is how we get it.

What I am saying is there is more instability in Iraq because of us, because of our troops becoming occupiers. This is the thing that worries me. That is why I think we have to change direction.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from Wyoming (Mrs. CUBIN).

Mrs. CUBIN. Mr. Speaker, there is no greater faith in the goodness of the people of this Nation than to protect their freedom and their safety. We owe it to the public to pursue those who seek to destroy our way of life.

Democrat wartime President Franklin Roosevelt understood this when he said, “When you see a rattlesnake poised to strike, you do not wait until he has struck before you crush him.”

Policies of appeasement did not work against Nazi Germany. They did not work against the Soviet Union, and they will most certainly not work against terrorists right now plotting violence and bloodshed against our citizens.

Our actions taken in Iraq and Afghanistan are aimed unequivocally at crushing global terrorism. We must complete our mission.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just point out to the Speaker that Franklin Roosevelt might have said that, but he waited until they attacked us at Pearl Harbor before he took any action. He tried to build up the forces, but certainly didn’t take any military action until we were attacked at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Almost, in fact a little bit more than 61 years ago, the 101st Airborne parachuted into Normandy. And a few miles away the Fourth Infantry Division was wading through bloody waters into Utah Beach. And thousands of miles away, the First Marine Division wasculminating a series of island operations, including Guadalcanal, Pelaihue and many others, very dangerous, very bitter.

We call this the Greatest Generation. And you know, today, the 101st. Airborne anchors the Sunni Triangle. The Fourth Infantry Division, including many of the grandchildren of those great members of the Greatest Generation, are in Baghdad. And the First Marine Division is out in that very dangerous al Anbar Province in towns called Ramadi and Fallujah. I call them the New Greatest Generation.

But there is a difference between them and their forefathers. The 101st and the Fourth Infantry Division and the First Marine Division, and that is that the Greatest Generation of World War II had a Congress that was united behind their mission. I think we owe it to this New Greatest Generation to unite behind their mission, and not just because it is their mission and we are Congress and we oversee national security, but because we gave them the mission. We voted overwhelmingly in the House of Representatives to go into Afghanistan and Iraq. We, not somebody else, we gave them the mission. They have carried out that mission. They have carried it out in thousands of firefights at 10,000-plus elevations in Afghanistan, taking down safehouses in Mosul and Tikrit and Fallujah and many other areas in Iraq, winning 45,000 bronze stars for valor and meritorious service, among many other medals, and you while taking on the enemy, they inoculated over 5 million children against disease, re-stood up over 3,000 schools, built hundreds of hospitals, and they carried the free elections of the Afghan and Iraqi people on their shoulders. That is why we had free elections in those two countries.

Now, you know, when we started this, and if you look at the literature of al Qaeda and the terrorist organizations, they question the capability of the American troops. They no longer question that capability. Mr. Zarqawi does not question that capability. Saddam Hussein does not question that capability. They have been convinced of it in hundreds or thousands of the re-enlistments, after multiple tours of more than 130 percent of the require-
They don’t question the continued commitment of the President. They have seen this President go through highs and lows in the polls and continue his commitment to the mission that we launched together. The only question they have now is, ‘Will they continue?’ And our patrols and our security forces have been highly effective. And this resolution, Mr. Speaker, is a chance to unite this House of Representatives by restating our commitment to this mission. Let’s do it so that tonight, when those troops come home, when they say their final goodbyes, those of us who have done our jobs will be able to say to the American people or to the Iraqi people, ‘They were doing their best, and that is what we asked of them.’

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

The problem is, 42 percent of the people don’t know what the mission is. When I talk to the young folks in the hospitals, they tell me their mission is to go and fight the enemy, those is activating devices. Their mission is to be a deterrent. They want to solve these problems themselves. The Americans cannot force democracy on Iraq. The American people cannot force democracy on Iraq. The American people cannot force democracy on Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Daniel E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER). (Mr. MILLER of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, having returned from my fourth trip to Iraq over the Memorial Day break, I rise in support of H. Res. 861.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of America. I rise in support of our active troops and those who have given their lives and those who will give their lives so that we will prevail in this global war on terrorism. These troops are part of an all-volunteer force that is the envy of the world.

I rise to reassure the American and Iraqi people that we reject any timetable for the withdrawal or redeployment of U.S. forces in Iraq before victory.

Al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations have attacked our family, neighbors and friends numerous times over the last three decades. What has been the response? For the most part, there has not been an adequate response.

And Mr. Speaker—that is hard to admit. Some would tell you we didn’t respond due to lack of political will, others would say America just didn’t have the stomach.

From the killing of 241 U.S. service members in Beirut in 1983 to the attack on the USS Cole in 2001, America responded in a cautious manner. This is no longer the case. Due to the events of September 11, 2001 our country was forced to reevaluate our defensive and offensive strategies.

Led by our Commander-in-Chief and with the support of the Congress, our government decided to take the fight to every cave the enemy overlords and prevent him from reaching our shores.

Having been to Iraq during the recent Memorial Day holiday, I am pleased to report the message is getting across. Our enemies are starting to realize that America and its allies are not leaving and are not intimidated.

I say to the Iraqi people—we will not abandon you. We are committed to the completion of the mission to create a sovereign, free, secure and united Iraq.

During my 4 trips to Iraq in the last 3 years I have had hundreds of conversations about commitment in keeping our troops there. They are worried about it to a person. They said they will leave before capable.

Then the Associated Press reports, yesterday morning Iraq’s Vice President has asked President Bush for a timetable for withdrawal of foreign forces from Iraq. And Iraq’s Vice President’s office said Vice President of Iraq made the request during his meeting with Bush on Tuesday when the U.S. President was in surprise visit. I supported him, the President said. Eighty percent of the Iraqi people want us out. They want to solve these problems.
This important step demonstrates many things: we will hunt down terrorists and eliminate them wherever they are hiding, the shackles of decades long terrorism are being removed from the Middle East, Iraqi security forces are stepping up to the challenge; Iraqi citizens want to be free of terrorists and they are not going to sit idly by.

Success breeds success.

Never has that been more evident than this past week.

While Zarqawi was eliminated—finding him brought a treasure trove of information allowing U.S. and Iraqi forces to dismantle many more pieces of Al Qaeda’s puzzle.

Success breeds success.

Iraq just this past week selected 3 more officials—cabinet ministers—to serve in its standing government.

Success breeds success.

It is also important for us to recall and reiterate why we are engaged in this war.

It is imperative during this debate that we re-examine the conditions that required the United States to take military action in Afghanistan and Iraq in the aftermath of the attacks of September 11, 2001.

Just a short look at recent history—just the last 20 years—vividly demonstrates the death, destruction and terror brought to Americans by our enemy.

November 4, 1979—Iranian radicals seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and held 53 hostages for 444 days.

April 18, 1983—Sixty-three people, including the CIA’s Middle East director, were killed when our U.S. Embassy in Beirut was bombed.

October 23, 1983—Simultaneous suicide bomb attacks on American and French compounds in Beirut, Lebanon; killing 242 Americans and 58 French troops.

March 16, 1984—Islamic Jihad kidnapped and later murdered Political Officer William Buckley in Beirut, Lebanon.

October 7, 1985—Achille Lauro Hijacking—terrorists seized the Italian cruise liner and murdered one American invalid in a wheelchair.

April 5, 1986—Berlin Discotheque Bombing—Two U.S. soldiers were killed and 79 Americans were injured in a Libyan bomb attack in West Berlin, West Germany.

December 21, 1988—Pan Am 103 Bombing—Pan Am 103 blown up over Lockerbie, Scotland by bomb placed by Libyan terrorists—all 259 people on board were killed.

February 26, 1993—First World Trade Center Bombing—car bomb exploded in an underground garage killing 6 people and injuring over 1000.

November 13, 1995—car bomb explodes at U.S. military complex in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, killing 14 U.S. citizens, several foreign national employees of the U.S. government and over 40 others.

September 11, 2001—Terrorist Attacks on U.S. Homeland—Two hijacked airliners crashed into the twin towers of the World Trade Center. Soon thereafter, the Pentagon was struck by a third hijacked plane. A fourth hijacked plane, suspected to be bound for a high-profile target in Washington, crashed into a field near Shanksville, Pennsylvania. The attacks killed 3,025 U.S. citizens and other nationals. Treating these incidents as crimes—not acts of war—and providing reactionary measures rather than moving proactively—will not work.

How do we know? Because that is precisely what we did—decades—and the consequence was 9–11.

The attacks we witnessed that day serve as a reminder of the dangers we face as a nation in a post-9/11 world. We can no longer expect oceans between us and our enemies to keep us safe.

Policy of containment has been proven to be a dismal failure.

Just as the battle in Afghanistan was not simply to remove the Taliban. The battle in Iraq was not simply to remove Saddam Hussein and his regime.

One has to look no further than the action of our enemy to see that we are fighting those who want to bring their brand of terror and fear to our shores.

We must not forget those threats that have been disrupted here at home and on our allies: the West Coast Airliner Plot; the Heathrow Airport Plot; and The Jose Padilla Plot.

The campaign against the United States and its allies is ambitious, simple and clear.

Terrorists will stop at nothing to achieve their distorted sense of reality.

Now, we could have easily stayed out of this conflict.

However, giving terrorists free reign would not make us any safer—history has proven that.

The price would be more innocent lives lost—more bombings—and not an ounce of peace.

We must not be held hostage by terrorism—that is not living in liberty and freedom!

There are defining moments every generation must face. For this generation that defining moment is how we engage in this War on Terror—highlighted by a very different post 9–11 world. When we came to that defining moment—that tragic day—we, as a nation with our allies around the world, decided we would not allow terrorists to win.

The choice is clear, our resolve is clear. We will and must prevail.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, we have just two minutes.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank you for presiding over this important debate and for the opportunity to address the House as this debate nears its conclusion.

Let’s be clear about what is at stake today as we debate this issue. Whether or not we are successful in winning the global war on terror will define the future of America and it will define what we believe America’s capable of doing and about whether the global war on totalitarianism is worth fighting.

Our actions here on the House floor are being watched not only by our enemies, but by our friends and allies as well. The message we send will be received by the coalition partners fighting with us, the people and leaders of Afghanistan and Iraq, and the Americans fighting for peace and freedom who believe in their mission.

This vote, I know, is not being taken lightly, and believe me, it should not be taken lightly. The resolution we are considering is clear and unambiguous. We are declaring that the United States will prevail in the global war on terror.
commitment that the Afghan people were worried about.

Today we will tell our friend, President Karzai, that America will not abandon our Afghan friends, that we will not close that embassy again and lock the door and walk away for 10 years.

In Iraq, which al Qaeda has called the central front, and that is their quote, not mine, the central front in their war against the West, the sentiment for America to stay is even more pronounced. In Baghdad I spoke with Speaker Mashhadani, a Sunni politician, a leader who had been very opposed to the United States coming to Iraq, but now believes that the presence of the United States, again, until democracy takes root, is essential to the establishment of democracy in that country.

And while visiting the newly formed Kurdish regional government in Erbil, I spoke with those leaders who have recently fled and hunting down differences in favor of a unified Iraq. Officials from the new Iraqi Government I met with gave me additional reasons to be hopeful for the future. These elected leaders are committed to governing. Their predecessors had been committed to a political goal in each case, to write a Constitution, to conduct a temporary election, to conduct a permanent election.

This government is the first democratically elected government in the history of not just the country of Iraq that has only been in existence since World War I, but the history of the people who live in this area have never before had a permanent democratically elected government. This government also happens to be a broad-based government that is committed to serve.

I have said many times before, as many have said on this floor in the last 2 days, that only the Iraqis are ultimately responsible for solving their problems. The only way to solve them is through increased transparency, economic reform, and democratic participation in government. None of this will be easy, and I have nothing but admiration for Iraqi leaders who are undertaking these tasks in the face of enormous personal risk.

It is in the context of this personal risk that I appeal to my colleagues, who live peacefully and safely in the world’s oldest constitutional democracy, the United States of America, not to turn their backs on the leaders of the world’s newest democracy.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I have three unanimous consent requests.

I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the gentlewoman from Minnesota (Ms. MCCOLLUM).

Ms. MCCOLLUM of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put my statement in the RECORD on House Floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Ms. MCCOLLUM of Minnesota, Mr. Speaker today we mourn the death of the 2,500th American soldier in Iraq and are disgusted by the headline in yesterday’s Washington Post stating, “Iraq Amnesty Plan May Cover Atrocities.”

Amin Abdul Qudus being asked by an American soldier killed and the news of Iraqi Prime Minister al-Maliki seeking amnesty for insurgents who have killed and maimed U.S. troops, this House debates H. Res. 861, a meaningless, nonbinding Republican resolution that is a political campaign ploy, not a serious attempt to address the failings and mismanagement of this disastrous Iraq policy. Our troops in Iraq are in harm’s way, they are sacrificing tremendously for all Americans and the Iraqi people, and this Republican Congress honors their sacrifice with a farcical debate—it is shameful.

A majority of Americans know that the Bush administration’s Iraq policy is strategically bankrupt and it has put U.S. troops in the unenviable position of fighting insurgent and organized criminals when their stated goal is to protect the Iraqi Government, which has been added to our Nation’s national debt with the burden for the financial cost of this war on the backs of all of our children and the grandchildren, including those of the very soldiers who are now fighting and sacrificing in Iraq. Image, this Congress and White House have looked the other way as almost $9 billion have disappeared, the very corruption that is endemic and financial mismanagement the norm. Every American should feel betrayed by this Congress and its disregard for oversight and accountability with regard to the hard-earned tax dollars of U.S. citizens. As Americans fight and die in Iraq and Americans pay hundreds of billions of dollars for this war, it is remarkable to hear the words of Iraq’s Prime Minister al-Maliki. President Bush earlier this week, in a moment of poetry, looked into the prime minister’s eyes. It was unclear what the president saw, but we do know the words the prime minister has used on June 1, 2006 to describe U.S. troops when he stated, “Iraqi civilians with their vehicles and kill them just on suspicion. This is completely unacceptable.” The Prime Minister called the U.S. violence against Iraqis a “daily phenomenon.” Now, President Bush’s soul-mate wants to provide amnesty for those who murdered and maimed as many as 20,000 U.S. troops. Is this why the Republicans in Congress want to stay the course in Iraq?

Mr. Speaker, there is a civil war—a 21st Century civil war—raging in Iraq. It is based on religious events that cannot be remedied by 130,000 U.S. troops whether they remain as an occupying force for 1 more year or 50 years. What we have achieved in Iraq is certain. The end of Saddam’s regime, three elections, an Iraqi constitution, a new parliament, and the trained and the trained leashed forces that are beyond the control of U.S. troops that are antithetical to U.S. interests.

On May 26, 2006, Tom Lasseter reported for Knight Ridder that “Southern Iraq, long touted as a peaceful region that’s likely to be among the first areas returned to Iraqi control, is now dominated by Shiite Muslim warlords and militants who are laying the groundwork for an Islamic fundamentalist government, say senior U.S. officials in their reports.” Even with 130,000 U.S. troops and 200,000 U.S. troops and thousands more from coalition partners, Iraq is not on a path that will yield a free, democratic state in the Middle East. The occupation has cleared the way for the establishment of a theocratic order that will ensure clerics and militants dictate obedience to religious law—Sharia law—with absolutely zero tolerance for any form of pluralism. The current situation in Basra only highlights the incomprehensible ignorance of the designers of U.S. Iraq policy to consider the powerful cultural and religious forces the U.S. invasion of Iraq unleashed. Tragically, the 2,500 U.S. troops who have been killed, the almost 20,000 who have been wounded and the tens of thousands of Iraqi women, children and men who have been killed—often times brutally—have suffered the consequences of President Bush’s Iraq policy.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 861 purposely avoids the dangerous reality and dismisses the tremendous challenges confronting U.S. troops in Iraq and America’s real challenges with regard to terrorism and extremist threats. This resolution is a dishonest attempt to inject raw policy into a congressional debate that will do nothing to keep America secure or bring U.S. troops home safe and soon. As we look to the future, my intention is to continue to support a comprehensive strategy to combat terrorism, keep America secure from real strategic threats and to redeploy U.S. troops from Iraq’s civil war. All Americans support our troops, but it is time for Congress to support a policy that ensures U.S. troops have an exit strategy from Iraq. This resolution should be defeated and I will vote against it.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DIXON). (Mr. DICKS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution. Mr. Speaker, it has been my honor to serve as a member of the Defense Appropriations Committee for 28 years here in the House of Representatives and to often engage in debates over important issues of national defense and national security here on the floor of this Chamber. It has always been my view that partisanship should end at the water’s edge, and that all of us here in this body have a solemn obligation to consider the best interests of the Nation as we debate military involvement, especially at times when U.S. troops are involved in military actions.

With that said, let me make two points about this debate today over H. Res. 861. First, the House Leadership has brought this Resolution before the full membership of the House with the assertion that it will launch a full and open debate of Iraq policy. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the process of drafting the Resolution we are to consider today was totally closed to members of the Democratic party, and that the expressed intent of the Republican Leadership, as betrayed by the memorandum that was sent to Republican members by the Majority Leader, was to demonstrate that the Democrats are interested in “conceding defeat on the battlefield” and that we as a party “sheepishly dismiss the challenges that America faces in a post 9/11 world.” Mr. Speaker, no political party in American history has ever been put in a position to state with certainty that no member of either political party has any interest in conceding defeat or in ignoring real threats to our national security. This type of partisanship is unnecessary at any time, but especially in this debate today.

Secondly, if we are to have a full and open debate over U.S. policy in Iraq, it should be an ongoing activity here in the House, where we legitimately share the constitutional responsibility to “provide for the common defense” and to protect our nation on our nation’s behalf. I can state with certainty that no member of either political party has any interest in conceding defeat or in ignoring real threats to our national security. This type of partisanship is unnecessary at any time, but especially in this debate today.

So as we debate this particular Resolution today it must be said that all Members of this House support the troops who have been engaged in the conflicts in Afghanistan and Iraq, and that we are all encouraged when terrorists such as Abu Musab al-Zarqawi are brought to justice. To imply any different in today’s debate would be an injustice.

But that is not all that this Resolution states. Nor is it all that it implies by the words that are printed in it or, even more revealingly, by the things that are omitted from it. Again, this is why it is inappropriate to draft a Resolution of this importance without any input or consultation with Members of the Republican party, and why this exercise today is not, in my judgment, worthy of the trust that the American people put in their Representatives here in the House.

The Resolution we are debating today, Mr. Speaker, misstates the mission of the United States actions in Iraq—implying very directly that there was a direct relationship between the 9/11 attacks and our invasion of Iraq, in addition to ignoring the use of the WMD threat in justifying the invasion to our coalition partners and to the American people. Beyond that, the only actions it says that we, as the House of Representatives, resolve to promote are actions that support the status quo, inferring that the Members of this Chamber are clearly satisfied with the status quo and believe the Administration’s policies are the right direction. I would contend, Mr. Speaker, that very few of the Members of this Chamber actually are satisfied with the status quo, and certainly it is clear that the American people, whom we represent individually and collectively in this House, believe we need to change course and adopt a new strategy in Iraq.

That is precisely what I believe the House should be doing today, instead of debating the merits of a partisan measure that effectively congratulates Secretary Rumsfeld for pursuing a responsible course of action. We need to change direction. Our strategy in Iraq is not working. It will not produce the victory we all say we believe in. Nor will it allow us to see far enough ahead to the time when we can legitimately redeploy our troops and bring them home. What has been needed, and what is still required, is accountability, and we can only accomplish that, Mr. Speaker, by greater oversight, more thoughtful questioning of the decisions that are made at the Pentagon and in the field, and more openness in considering new directions and new strategies, even if it risks conceding that some of the actions this Administration has taken have been wrong. The Resolution we are addressing today, Mr.
Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield today is a disappointment. This resolution is a political document timed just before the fall elections rather than a serious substantive debate about our involvement in Iraq, Afghani- stan and redirected them into Iraq. As a consequence, Osama Bin Laden is still at large, Al Qaeda remains a global threat with global reach, and that the person who was directly responsible for 9/11 to justice. It sends a terrible message to would-be terrorists who may be interested in striking us that all they have to do is go hiding and lie low until we get distracted on another adventure. Instead, the President should have, with the support of the American people and international community which we enjoyed at the time, made it our mission to never rest, never sleep until those responsible for 9–11 were brought to justice. Instead he diverted precious resources and personnel from Afghani- stan and redirected them into Iraq. As a consequence, Osama Bin Laden is still at large, the Taliban are reconstituting themselves and the others to offer an alternative resolution. The others to offer an alternative resolution. They, however, were not finding what the president suspected Hussein was hiding.

It is not irresponsible for us to suggest that the American people are paying a very high price in loss of lives and resources due to this rush to war. We are helping, and should continue to help, restore the power grids, the water supplies and the oil production facilities so the Iraqi people will see signs of progress that thus far have disappointed them. We must continue to encourage the new Iraqi Prime Minister al-Maliki and his government in its campaign for national reconciliation and in its effort to disarm the militias, reduce the sectarian violence and establish social and economic stability to the nation. I remain hopeful about the future of a Democratic Iraq, but as we work with the new government to accomplish these objectives, Mr. Speaker, I believe it may be time to take the training wheels off, and to communicate directly to the Iraqis that they are running a nation, as unsteady as it may seem in the near future.

But above all, what we should be doing today in the House of Representatives is sending a clear signal to the American people and to the international community that we are in favor of changing the course of moving beyond the status quo and adopting a new and more successful strategy to achieve a peaceful and stable Iraq.

This Resolution, Mr. Speaker, unquestioningly endorses the status quo, and for that reason I cannot and will not support it.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous-consent request to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the outstanding service provided by our men and women in the armed forces for the terrific job they do for us across the globe each and every day, often in very difficult and dangerous circumstances. This is especially true today in places such as Afghanistan and Iraq.

Active military, guard, and reserves forces from western Wisconsin have honored the call to service in the most recent conflict with global terrorism. I have been to numerous deployment ceremonies and witnessed the anguish in the hearts and faces of family and friends as they say goodbye to their loved ones being deployed abroad for lengthy stays. I have also been to numerous welcome home ceremonies to honor their service and to thank them for their sacrifice.

During my three visits to Iraq, I met with our military command and troops in the field, as well as many of our leaders and civilians. I can honestly say that nothing made me prouder to be an American than seeing the performance of our troops in the field. They are well-trained, well-motivated and an inspiration to us all. They are, in short, the best America has to offer. I am sure everyone here today wishes them godspeed and safe travels as they carry out their missions.

Specifically, I would like to take a moment to recognize the Third Congressional District of Wisconsin who have lost their lives in the Iraq war: First Lieutenant Jeremy Wolfe of Menomonie, Major Christopher Splinter of Platteville, Private First Class Bert Hoyer of Ellsworth, Private First Class Andrew Halverson of Muscoda, Staff Sergeant Todd Olson of Black Earth, Sapper Christopher Bossert of Fountain City, Specialist Charles Kaufman of Fairchild, Sergeant First Class Trevor Diesing of Plum City, Benjamin Smith of Hudson, Private First Class Anthony Gaunky of Sparta, Sergeant Andy Allen Stevens of Tomah, and Petty Officer 2nd Class Jaime S. Jaenke of Bay City. I would also like to recognize Christopher Lem of Lyndon Station who lost his life while working in Iraq as an independent contractor.

Furthermore, I would like to highlight the president's failure to provide us with a plan for the day after or even a clear exit strategy once we got there. We now know by many retired generals, the president ignored the advice of our military leaders. My big regret is in believing the president when he said that the decision to go to war would be a matter of days rather than another adventure. That is what the resolution required but instead the president ordered the inspection teams out of Iraq, even though they wanted to stay and finish their work, and then he ordered our military in. Today, our troops and our country are paying a very high price because we have lost so many lives and resources due to this rush to war.

I was concerned that the main threat against the United States, Al Qaeda, was still a global threat with global reach, and that the person who was directly responsible for 9/11, Osama Bin Laden, was still at large and safe. I believed the President was taking his eye off the ball in Afghanistan and not doing everything in our power to bring those responsible for 9–11 to justice. It sends a terrible message to would-be terrorists who may be interested in striking us that all they have to do is go hiding and lie low until we get distracted on another adventure.

Instead, the President should have, with the support of the American people and international community which we enjoyed at the time, made it our mission to never rest, never sleep until those responsible for 9–11 were brought to justice. Instead he diverted precious resources and personnel from Afghani- stan and redirected them into Iraq. As a consequence, Osama Bin Laden is still at large, the Taliban are reconstituting themselves and Al Qaeda remains a global threat.

But we are where we are today. The question now is how do we move forward and what is at stake. Now that we have gone into Iraq, I believe the outcome in Iraq is important, not only for the Iraqi people, to whom we owe a duty to be responsible, but also for the region and for our Nation's long-term security interest. If the Iraqi people are successful in establishing a representative government, a government that respects human rights, religious toler- ance, minority rights and the empowerment of women in their society, he should be- come a powerful model for change and reform in a region of the world that’s in desperate need of reform.
I believe that a precipitous withdrawal from Iraq today will leave chaos, bloodshed and civil war in our wake. I believe that setting an artificial time for withdrawal will force our policy to merely revolve around that date rather than on the mission to be accomplished. And I’ve been out of my military command in Iraq as well as our troops, that they do not desire a date certain because we could be setting them up for failure. They fear that conditions could change on the ground that they have no control over which might make adhering to a date difficult or ill-advised. They do not want artificial dates for the sake of political expediency.

I also believe, however, that this must be a crucial year of transition for us. Now that the Iraqis have established a coalition government and Iraq that we have helped train over 250,000 Iraqi security forces, now is the time to put pressure on the Iraqi people to take control of their own future, through self-governments and security responsibilities. We cannot do this if we continue to define the President’s proposals. We cannot want a free, stable and secure Iraq more than the Iraqi people want it. Such a change in tactics will enable us to begin the redeployment of our troops first within Iraq, off the front lines, and return to the region and eventually bring our troops back home to their families. It’s time for a responsible and successful exit strategy to be implemented. In short, it’s time to take the training wheels off.

There have been recent successes in Iraq that we all can applaud. Thanks should be given to our troops in their successful campaign against Abu Musab Al Zarqawi, the notorious and ruthless terrorist whose goal was to create chaos and destruction and fan the flames of civil war.

The Iraqis should be commended for finally, after months of planning, handing their police and army trained. They have more confidence in their army than they have in the United States forces; yet they are only 1,000 foreign fighters. We have sectarian violence which is growing throughout the world, not just through the Middle East, to charities and schools that support the teaching of radical Islam and helps turn a new generation of young people against us in the region. And again, there is no plan by the administration for a new direction.

The problem is because of the way we handled this at first, it got out of hand, and United States forces had to use overwhelming force in many cases. Fallujah, for instance, they went in and put 300,000 people outside of their homes. Only 100,000 have come back.

In Anbar Province we have no electricity at all. They have 2 million people there. They have zero projects in Anbar Province. That is the province where we had the most trouble. And then as I go through the liturgy of things that have happened with 190,000 troops there, this is the point: in May of 2003, we had 3,000 insurgents. In May of 2006, we have 20,000 insurgents. Now, we are there. The United States forces are occupying Iraq. The estimated number of foreign fighters in 2005 was 100. This comes from our intelligence people. And today there is an estimated 1,500. I think it is a little less than that, but it is estimated at 1,500.

Now, think. We have got 130,000 troops. They support 45 percent of the 205,000 police and army trained. They have more confidence in their army than in the United States forces. Russia wants us in Iraq, and China wants us in Iraq. Russia wants us in Iraq. Iran wants us in Iraq. North Korea wants us in Iraq. Al Qaeda wants us in Iraq. Iran wants us in Iraq. Russia wants us in Iraq, and China wants us in Iraq. Why? Because we are depleting our financial resources and our human resources. Because we are destroying our credibility and viability of the Army. We have $50 billion in backlog right now for the Army, equipment that needs to be repaired. We have had to lower the standards for the Army, taking category 4s, which we did not take for a long time. We have had Air Force people and Navy people we transferred over to the Army because they do not have enough people. And we can talk about reenlistment, but they had no reenlistment bonuses. I do not know if we are going to get the old days. They now have up to $150,000 that they pay people in reenlistment bonuses. So we are having real problems. I agree the troops are doing everything they can. Their mission is actually accomplished.

I want to get the real news. Monthly attacks on oil and gas assets: there were five in 2003, and it has gotten worse in 2006. Oil production is less than the prewar level. Oil production. Somebody complained not long ago that electricity doesn’t make any difference. I don’t know. I could tell you something. If you have ever gone without electricity in your house, you know that it makes a difference.

I tell you something. If you have ever gone without electricity in your house, you know that it makes a difference.
I am just saying that we have 130,000 troops there, and it is not going well. That is what I am saying. I am saying we have a problem, and our troops are not able to solve the problem. We have become the enemy. It has got to be won on the ground.

We are giving a microphone to be people like Zarqawi. We talk about Zarqawi. We talk about all these foreign leaders and what they say. Why should we pay attention to what they say? Why should we pay attention when Zarqawi says they are going to drive us out of there? That is just rhetoric. That is only rhetoric.

The only way it is going to be won is a change of direction. I gave some examples before. When President Reagan went into Beirut, he went in with 1,400 people, and he decided he needed to change direction. When he had the biggest tax cut in history at that time, he decided he had to make some adjustments later on. He changed direction.

When President Bush went into Somalia, President Clinton changed direction in Somalia because we made a mistake and we went after Adid. There are times in our history when we have to be big enough as a country to change direction.

All of us want the same thing: stability in the Middle East. All of us want to find a way to stabilize the Middle East. If we stay, we are going to pay; and we are going to pay long term. After the Vietnam War, it cost us through the Reagan administration to pay for it. Now, I voted against every tax cut because I felt very strongly that we couldn’t fight a war and cut taxes. Now, there is an argument about that and you can argue about the benefit of the tax cut. But you cannot fight a war and have tax cuts. And we will have spent $450 billion by the end of this fiscal year.

My proposal, if anybody has read, is to redeploy and be ready. Redeploy to the periphery. Now, we went after Zarqawi. What happened when we went after Zarqawi? The Iraqis reported to the Iraqis, and then the Iraqis reported to the United States forces and they worked together. This did not come from inside Iraq. This came from outside Iraq. This was the periphery. The F-16s came from outside of the country to go after him. And this was not something that just happened overnight. This was a long-term thing that they had been working on for a long time.

So in my estimation, the only way we can change things in Iraq is to change direction. It has to be changed on the ground. What we say here today, as President Abraham Lincoln said in the Gettysburg Address, is going to mean very little. It will get lost in the rhetoric. What means something is what happens on the ground. All of us support the troops. If you vote for the appropriation bill, the defense appropriation bill, you vote to support the troops. If you voted for the Armed Services bill, you voted to support the troops.

I believe this resolution, if you vote for it, you are voting to support a failed policy wrapped in illusion. And I would recommend to the Members they vote against this resolution.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, at this time is my pleasure. In the balance of my time to the distinguished majority leader (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding.

This week the House has engaged in an important debate on the war in Iraq and how best to combat terrorism in a post-9/11 world. And there are major differences between those of us who support a strong national defense and national security policy and understand what we have at stake and those who would prefer to retreat from the world stage and attempt to manage the threat of terrorism and the danger that it poses.

During the 1990s, the enemies of freedom acted terror and violence in futile attempts to intimidate the United States and the cause of freedom. I will remind all of my colleagues that on February 26, 1993, we had the first World Trade Center bombing. It killed six people and injured more than 1,000 people. And on June 25, 1996, at a U.S. facility in Saudi Arabia, the Khobar Towers, was bombed, killing 20 people and injuring some 372 more. On June 7, 1998, our embassy in Kenya was bombed, killed 213 people and injuring 5,000 people. And on June 7, 1998, the same day, our embassy in Tanzania was bombed, killed 11 people, injured 68 more. On October 12, 2000, the USS Cole was bombed, killing 17 of our sailors and injuring 39 more.

What was our response? During the 1990s, world leaders looked at the mounting threat of terrorism, looked up, looked away, and hoped the problem would go away. But what happened on September 11, 2001? 3,000 Americans were killed by terrorists. And in a post-9/11 world, looking up, looking away, and hoping the problem would go away is no longer the answer.

That is why we are having this important debate here on the floor today. The American public deserves to hear how their elected leaders will respond to international terrorism and those enemies who seek to destroy our American way of life.

Will we fight or will we retreat? That is the question that is posed to us. Some of my friends on the other side of the aisle often refer to Iraq as a distraction. They have called Operation Iraqi Freedom a war of choice that isn’t part of the real war on terror. Someone should tell that to al Qaeda. Let’s be clear here. Those who say this is a war of choice are nothing more than wrong. This is a war of necessity that we must fight.

But you don’t have to believe me. Just listen to al Qaeda’s own leader, their number two leader. Ayman al Zawahiri knows how important the future of Iraq is to his cause. In a 6,000-word letter to al Qaeda’s then commander in Iraq, the recently eliminated Zarqawi, he made clear that the terrorism Al Qaeda as a central battlefield in its global war.

For some reason, this brazen declaration from one of our nemesis about Iraq’s importance hasn’t registered with many opponents of the war who insist on conceding defeat and withdrawing. If the terrorists directly see Iraq as a central front on their violent ambitions across the globe, should we dismiss it? Should we dismiss their claims and simply wait for them to attack America?

Operation Iraqi Freedom was hardly a war of choice. Saddam was already a menace and a threat to international order when he ordered several divisions of the Iraqi army into Kuwait in 1990. He routinely supported and openly condoned the acts of terrorism. He relentlessly persecuted and tortured his own civilian population, including Shiias, Sunnis, Kurds and others. He engaged in a multi-billion dollar scandal involving a number of our allies aimed at gaining the world’s sympathy and putting us in place after the gulf war, and abusing the Oil-for-Food Program, thus causing even greater harm to his own people.

He refused to disclose and forewarn his maniacal pursuit of weapons of mass destruction and ignored international sanctions and resolutions passed by the United Nations Security Council. Saddam made the case for his ouster better than anyone else could.

President Bush said, on the eve of the American-led invasion, that we would meet the threat before it became imminent, so that we would not have to meet it later with armies of fire-fighters, police, doctors and others on the streets of our own cities.

September 11 made it clear that we could no longer afford to ignore madmen who threaten our peace and stability. We can no longer let rogue regimes go unchecked and unchallenged. And because of the combination of modern technology and a murderous ideology, we can no longer count on vast oceans or our own military supremacy to keep America safe. The enemy we must confront does not accept political negotiations or coexistence. Their aim is to destroy us. Their view of the world is contrary to our values, beliefs or political systems which are contrary to their warped and repressive ideology.

Their aims are to destroy the cause of freedom and democracy itself. That is why retreat is not an option in Iraq. As part of the global war on terror, the stakes for the American people are too great. The action we took in Iraq was in the best interests of the American people and the world community. It is the only way we can ensure that we had to show our own resolve as the world’s premier defender of freedom and liberty before such ideals were preyed upon rather than after standing witness to their demise at the hands of our enemies.

Some of my friends on the other side have called the war in Iraq a failed effort. This is curious, given the constant drumbeat of progress since the toppling of the Hussein regime. More children are going to school now in Iraq than at any point in their country’s history. The Iraqis have held successful elections, drafted and ratified a national constitution, and have put together a coherent government with the capability and fortitude to wage a prolonged fight against these terrorists, and the leader of nations who was killed in action in places like Fallujah Gate, freedom trumps those ancient hatreds. The freedom to raise your family, the freedom to walk your kids to school and make them live in peace. As Ronald Reagan said, it is always freedom that is the victor.

President John Kennedy said once so eloquently, the cost of freedom is always high, but Americans have always paid it. And one path we shall never choose, and that is the path of surrender or submission.

This week’s debate has given all of us an opportunity to answer a fundamental question, and we are going to confront that question again and defeat it, or will we relent and retreat in the hope that it just goes away?

Achieving victory is our only option. And for the sake of the American people and our kids and theirs, we have no choice but to confront these terrorists, win the war on terror, and spread freedom and democracy around the world.

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the war in Iraq reached another troubling milestone yesterday with the announcement that 2,500 American soldiers have now been killed in the 3-year conflict. In Massachusetts alone, more than 35 families have mourned the loss of a loved one, killed in action in places like Ramadi, Fallujah and Najaf. And since President Bush declared an end to “major combat operations,” more than 17,000 troops have been wounded in combat.

Every Member of Congress supports the heroic efforts of our troops in Iraq, Afghanistan and around the world. These brave men and women in uniform, and their service to our country, should never be forgotten. We have the finest armed forces in the world and they represent the United States of America with remarkable courage, honor and dignity.

During a memorial service for a young soldier from western Massachusetts who was killed in Iraq, a Marine Commander paid tribute to our fallen service members by saying: “we weep at their passing, honor their service and cherish their memories.” I would simply add that we are also grateful for the enormous sacrifice they have made for our nation.

We are here today in this historic chamber to discuss the future of a war that has already taken so much from so many. A war that a majority Americans now disapprove of.

In October 2002, when this institution first debated authorizing the use of military force, I raised a number of concerns about a pre-emptive war with Iraq including its cost, the lack of a legal basis in U.S. law, and 9/11, and the fact that Iraq was not a credible threat to the United States. I also believed that a pre-emptive strike would act as an effective recruiting tool for radical Islamic fundamentalism worldwide. For these reasons, I was 1 of 133 House Members who against the Iraq war resolution.

I would point out to my colleagues that former White House economic adviser Lawrence Lindsey lost his job for predicting that the war would cost a mere $200 billion. From the start, the Bush administration has not been straight with the American people about the cost of the war in Iraq. And this partisan resolution does nothing to address that.

In fact, the White House has not been straight about most aspects of the war from the existence of weapons of mass destruction to the threat of the insurgency, and from Iraq’s purchase of yellow cake uranium to Saddam’s ties to al-Qaeda. And with this resolution, House Republicans will simply rubberstamp President Bush’s poor planning and mismanagement. I believe it is time for a new direction in Iraq.

More importantly, so do many military leaders. Marine Corps General Anthony Zinni, Army Major General Charles Swannack, Army General John Batiste, Marine Corps Lieutenant General Gregory Newbold and others have all expressed real concerns about our future in Iraq. These are individuals who were deeply involved in the planning and execution of the war. And they do not like what they see.

As General Zinni recently said, “we are paying the price for the lack of credible plan. Ten years worth of planning were thrown away, troop levels disappeared out of hand. . . . These were strategic mistakes, mistakes of policy made back here.”

Mr. Speaker, like most Americans, I believe it is time for a new course in Iraq. I believe we need to develop an honorable exit strategy. I will vote against this resolution to give President Bush an open-ended commitment in Iraq. Let’s bring the troops back home.

Ms. SCHWARTZ of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for my colleagues who have served in the House and the Senate. I respect them for their service and for their dedication to their constituents. However, Mr. Speaker, I take offense that any member of this House would stand here and challenge the patriotism of a colleague—such a charge is unworthy of this institution and the democracy we fight for every day. I refuse to allow anyone on the other side, as they have done today and have since this war in Iraq began, to question—whether directly or indirectly—my love of our country, my unwavering commitment to our troops, or my belief that we must do whatever necessary to defend the citizens of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I will oppose the resolution before us today. And, I do so because I love this country and who we are and what we stand for. My reason for opposing this particular resolution comes down to one word—accountability. At every level, the Republican majority here in Congress, has failed to hold this Administration accountable. It is simply astonishing that most of my Republican colleagues have time and time again simply bent to the will of the Administration and have allowed themselves to believe meaningless rhetoric without asking tough questions. I urge my colleagues on the other side to abandon their blind faith in this Administration’s rhetoric and instead demand accountability. For it is through information, recognition of errors, and the development of an honest plan that we will ultimately ensure our success in Iraq.

Misjudgments and miscalculations have led to a war that has three very clear objectives the President declared “mission accomplished.” History will judge the President and his cabinet for their performance. But, it is our responsibility as members of Congress to call for a clear plan going forward. It is past time that the Administration implement a strategy to meet our mission and bring our troops home, and it is past time that this Congress demand it.

Instead, this resolution supports a “stay the course” policy that has failed our troops and failed our nation. We all want to see a safe and democratic Iraq. However, the President’s open-ended declaration to stay as long as it takes—a policy that this resolution defends—will not require the Iraqi government and the Iraqi people to make the tough choices that need to be made. That is why we must make clear that any presence of our troops is contingent upon progress in the formation of a stable and functioning Iraqi government. We have to make it clear that we expect the Iraqis to take responsibility for their government and for their security. We will support them, but the time for a serious and visible presence is limited. To make that clear, we should begin to bring our Reservists and National Guard home, and put in place a strategy to bring the rest of our young men and women out of Iraq as soon as possible.

My colleagues, today, we could have had the opportunity to discuss these important policy issues, demand answers, and work together to better define our objectives in Iraq and our strategy for completing our mission. Instead, we are once again stuck in neutral—playing politics with resolutions about whether Republicans or Democrats support the troops and whether Republicans or Democrats are stronger against terrorism. Let’s be clear: we all support the troops and we are all committed to fighting terrorism. That is not the issue. The issue is the Bush Administration’s failed policy in Iraq and how Congress—as a separate and independent branch of government—should demand accountability for their failures and demand a real strategy to achieve success and bring our troops home. We owe this to our constituents. We owe it to the brave Americans serving this country overseas. And, we owe it to our great country and its legacy.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to offer supplemental remarks to the remarks I entered into the RECORD yesterday. Today, June 15 and continuing into this morning, Friday, June 16. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, to anyone who reads the 730 words contained within the body of H. Res. 861 that this resolution concerns three principal objectives: (1) general support for American troops, (2) the Congress’s stated belief that the United States will win the war on terror, and (3) the encouragement of the new permanent unity government in Iraq and Prime Minister Nuri Al-Maliki to succeed, toward the ultimate goal of stabilizing Iraq and returning American troops back to the United States. Like so many of my colleagues, I wish this resolution said much more: I wish that the Rules Committee had allowed amendments to this legislation; I wish that a Democratic substitute had been allowed. But none of those things occurred. Try as they might, the spin doctors and the pundits on the other side of the aisle are trying to make this a vote indicating support for the war in Iraq. It is most certainly not that, but is instead a political football that this Majority sees no problem kicking around.

I was not a member of Congress when initial authorization was given to this President to enter into this conflict; I neither support this war nor President Bush’s handling—or, rather, his mishandling, of it. This mismanagement has been evident practically from the conflict’s inception.

The very simple fact is that the vote today on H. Res. 861 and the surrounding circumstances, are highly political, and not substantive in nature. All those voting on this measure today know and understand that this is a vote scheduled by the Republican majority in Congress only to put Democrats into what Republicans perceive is a potentially difficult political spot. While I did not take a vote to authorize this war, it is my responsibility to work with my colleagues to deal with its aftermath—something that is far more difficult. And I take that responsibility very seriously. Americans demand it right now. In my view, the establishment of an arbitrary deadline for a pullout—whether it is tomorrow, a month or a year from now—is irresponsible. Our military intervention has destabilized Iraq; as a result, this Nation maintains a duty to stabilize the situation by turning full control back over to the Iraqis. We must leave Iraq as soon as possible, but we must do so responsibly.

Unfortunately, H. Res. 861 does nothing toward ending the instability. It is emotive. It inflames passions. It is red-meat election year politics at its worst.

As I have said throughout my time in Congress, Iraq will be, in the end, what Iraqis themselves will make of it. Congress and the administration need to press forward and continue to work toward the well-intentioned but arbitrary deadlines for withdrawal of our troops into responsible, tangible plans that will serve to bring our troops home. We need to shunt aside the inflamed politics of the day—the politics that leads the House to take a day and a half to consider a resolution that accomplishes nothing—and begin a serious discussion about a responsible date for withdrawal of American troops from Iraq—a plan that builds upon the small but substantial positive steps we have seen in Iraq, such as the approval of a constitutional amendment, the holding of free elections and the institution of a democratic government under the leadership of Prime Minister Al-Maliki.

It is sad that June 15 to June 16, 2006, will be known more for slogans and empty election-year rhetoric than for a realistic solution to a difficult problem. Sadder still is the majority’s steadfast commitment to inflaming the passions of the American populace for political gain. I supported H. Res. 861 today, but I eagerly look forward to a day when the majority overcomes its singular focus on politics and instead how to responsibly bring conclusion to our role in Iraq. I look forward to the day when we can set aside the rhetoric and meaningless non-binding resolutions and focus on a responsible and workable solution to the morass that the President and this administration have created half a world away.

MS. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply disappointed in the Republican Congress and its leadership for focusing on the truth in Iraq. Calling today’s spectacle a true debate of ideas on Iraq does not pass the “straight face test.” If House Republican leadership choose to have a real debate on Iraq, Members of the House should be able to offer alternatives and ideas. Instead, they have blocked all alternatives by Democrats and for 10 hours the American people are left with the same empty rhetoric they have been hearing from the House Republicans on the floor for 3 years.

My constituents in the 37th District want a strategy in Iraq. They want to know when our brave young soldiers will return home to their families safely. Given this, I find disingenuous for Republican leadership to talk tough about the war on terror when this debate is so clearly about American soldiers in Iraq. It was the Republican leadership who could not wait to divert resources from the war on terror to chase after Saddam Hussein in the first place. Many Democrats said this was a dangerous path, and sadly, that is exactly what we have found ourselves doing.

Mr. Speaker, I support withdrawing our troops at a specific time and redeploying them to the periphery of the arena. Redeploying our troops is the natural and timely evolution to our mission in Iraq. But now is the time that we need to start the process and planning of bringing our troops home. Our troops have contributed to the building of a democracy, assisted in training an Iraqi police and military force and overseen three elections as well as the drafting of a national constitution. They have accomplished a great deal. And we have supported them throughout.

I join the American people in their deep patriotism and love for our great land, and I join them in their solemn appreciation for the thousands of American families who have sacrificed a son or daughter.

However, our troops have been in Iraq for over 3 years. We knew that when we entered this conflict that our troops were not going to be the permanent fixture in Iraq. But now is the time that the understanding Congress had with the administration and the American people. The men and women who have given their lives in liberating Iraq have completed their mission and they have done so with valor.

Now it is time for the Iraqi people to rebuild their communities and it is time for us to make our communities whole again by bringing our troops home.

The resolution today is not what the Republican leadership had notified us of. I can only hope that the next Iraq debate on House floor takes place both soon and with greater substance.

Mr. AL GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, although I am in opposition to the resolution, I strongly support our men and women in uniform who are fighting to protect our freedom. These brave men and women have made, and continue to make, the ultimate sacrifice on behalf of our great country. Approximately 2,500 soldiers have given their lives for our country in this war. Approximately 2,500 families across America have been left devastated by the loss of a loved one. Mothers and fathers have lost their cherished sons and daughters, men and women have lost their spouses, children have lost parents. Their sacrifices will forever be remembered.

Our Government has spent more than $250 billion on the war in Iraq, and that number is increasing at the rate of $177 million per day. However, just as we cannot put a dollar figure on the cost of lives lost, we also cannot put a dollar figure on the amount of pride that we as citizens have for them. While our soldiers fight and persevere because they, more than anyone, realize what is at stake in Iraq, it is my sincere hope that we can bring them home soon and reunite them with their loved ones.

Mr. Speaker, although I am in opposition to this resolution, today, tomorrow, and as long as our precious Republic shall exist, we should continue to honor our men and women for their sacrifice, devotion, and continued defense of our country.

God bless America and thank God for the sacrifices made by our brave men and women in uniform.

Mr. FERCCE. Mr. Speaker, all of history—and indeed, all of life—is a series of choices. International relations—and our national security—are mostly about choices.

The world chose to watch when Hitler published his blueprint for genocide in Mein Kampf. The world also chose to watch as Hitler took power on January 30, 1933; directing the boycott of Jewish businesses and opening the first concentration camp just 6 weeks later. The world continued to stand by and watch as Hitler breached the Treaty of Versailles while denying Jews their fundamental rights through the Nuremberg Race Laws.

Then, on September 30, 1938, British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain hailed “peace for our time” after appeasing Hitler in Munich. Thirty-four years later, a terrorist massacre on our soil came the Khobar Towers bombing in 1996—rather than what it was: an act of war. Then, our government treated it as a police matter—having no accounting.

When terrorism first came to American soil with the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, our government treated it as a police matter rather than what it was: an act of war. Then came the Khobar Towers bombing in 1996 and the U.S.S. Cole attack in 2000. America—and the world—chose to stand by and watch. 9/11 was the most visible manifestation of a war that had been raging between the terrorists and civil societies around the world for decades. But even as the terrorists plotted to kill us, we had refused to engage them until President Bush committed America to fighting the global war on terror.

The global War on Terror is a series of choices. When terrorism first came to American soil more than 3 years after President Bush declared “mission accomplished”, 2,500 brave young Americans have died, over 18,300 have been wounded. The needs of our veterans are being shortchanged. Some of our troops are on their fourth deployment since 2001. Our military readiness is affected somehow has to be fought in the same basic manner. We are not going to have a financial crisis, and we will have a political crisis. We, the American people, are being shortchanged. Our government and bring our men and women in uniform home as soon as possible. Neverthe-lese, we have a responsibility to our troops...
Speaker, with this result it is time to rethink our continued occupation as it is the failure of the President to plan for a transition to peace.

As a member of the Out-of-Iraq Caucus, I have co-sponsored and continue to support Representative MURTHA’s solution, House Joint Resolution 73.

It makes it clear to the Iraqi people that our Nation renounces any claim to permanent bases in their country.

It declares that we will bring our troops home at the earliest practicable date.

And it provides a plan for peace.

Saddam Hussein is no longer the ruler of Iraq.

A reasonably democratic constitution has been ratified.

A democratic government has been elected.

Now, the Iraqi people must forge their own future, knowing their own future is what 80 percent of Iraqis want—allowing them to do so would represent true freedom and democracy for Iraq.

Now, this Congress is duty-bound to heed the reasoned assessments of American military commanders that we make both Iraqi and American soil less secure by our continued assistance as they rebuild their country, without our military occupation.

We should help them defend their borders if the need arises.

We should help provide the conditions that Iraqis need to provide adequate safety in Iraq. Insurgent bombings, ethnic battles, and mass abductions by rival Sunni and Shiite militias are clear indications that our occupation has not provided for the conditions that Iraqis need to form an effectively functioning government.

United States reconstruction and infrastructure investment has had little impact in 3 years.

The American public also overwhelmingly allows Iraqis to stand up and take responsibility for a responsible troop redeployment and a new policy on Iraq.

The American public also overwhelmingly believes this war was not worth the human or financial burden, and how can we blame them?

At a time when our education system needs vast improvement, our schools are deteriorating, and our children are losing their edge in the fields of math, science, and engineering, we are sending billions of taxpayer’s dollars overseas on a weekly basis.

While we have spent a half a trillion dollars over to Iraq, here at home many Americans still do not have the basic necessities they need to live whole, fruitful lives.

Millions of our citizens do not have healthcare, and millions more are working overtime just to make ends meet. Sadly, many Americans are not feeling the great economic boom that the Administration is trying so desperately to tout.

Constituents in my districts are feeling the pinch in their pockets due to skyrocketing fuel costs, an overpriced housing market, and debt that will follow them to their graves.

My constituents are starting to wonder, how can we continue to justify spending billions of dollars out of the country when they need better services and resources here at home?

How can we ask our men and women in uniform to give their lives for a cause that was built on deceptions and mis-information?

Our national defense is fast approaching $8 trillion, I repeat $8 trillion, and yet Congress is not more concerned with enacting tax cuts for the wealthy, while simultaneously spending billions in Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, something has to give.

We cannot continue on this path that we are currently on. The resources of this country, as great as they are, are being stretched too thin.

Our forces, as mighty as they are, are being stretched too thin for the long-term health of the country.

Mr. Speaker, for the sake of this great Nation, we need to set a new course. We need a new policy on Iraq and Congress needs to start focusing its attention on the problems facing our citizens here at home.

I urge all of my colleagues to support the Murtha Resolution, which establishes a time line for a responsible troop redeployment and allows Iraqis to stand up and take responsibility for the course of their own nation.

As long as we are there doing the job that Iraqis should be doing for themselves we cannot expect them to stand up and take control of their own country.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, GEN Anthony Zinni and other retired generals have been outspoken in their opposition to the planning and execution of our occupation of Iraq. The administration rejected their sound recommendations, which predicted exactly what would happen if we didn’t plan for the occupation.

These generals explain that our forces were not provided enough resources to do the job, that we alienated allies that could have helped in rebuilding Iraq, and that the Defense Department ignored planning for the post-war occupation, unaware of the growing Insurgency.

One has heard from too many families whose children have been wounded or killed in duty. Their grief is so much harder to bear knowing that we did not adequately equip their sons and daughters in battle.

I have met many times with Lila Lipscomb, a proud mother from Flint, Michigan, who lost her son Michael in Iraq. Initially, Lila supported the war on the assumption that the government knew best. A week after finding out her son had died, Lila received a letter from her son in which he forcefully argued that we should not be in Iraq because there was no connection between Iraq and Osama bin Laden.

Cindy Sheehan lost her son Casey in Iraq and became a voice for mothers of soldiers who oppose the war. Cindy’s loss motivated her to unite with other grieving mothers in opposition to the war. Having willingly given her truth to power has drawn attention to the misconduct of the war and the terrible price that servicemen and women and their families have paid.

We have endured strategic missteps and now find ourselves with insufficient troop levels to provide adequate safety in Iraq, insurgent bombings, ethnic battles, and mass abductions by rival Sunni and Shiite militias are clear indications that our occupation has not provided for the conditions that Iraqis need to form an effectively functioning government.

United States reconstruction and infrastructure investment has had little impact in 3 years.

The American administration’s emphasis on unilateral action in this conflict has left America bearing too much of a military and financial burden. If Iraq is going to be stabilized and move toward a democracy, it will need a commitment and a will far greater than what America itself can provide on its own.

Why haven’t we learned from the first Gulf war? In the 1991 gulf war, our coalition partners shouldered over 75 percent of the cost of the war. We had over 100,000 Muslim troops fighting alongside a broad coalition of forces.

We need to encourage our friends and allies around the globe to help with Iraq’s reconstruction and peacekeeping. We just don’t have sufficient resources to manage this work on our own.

If we can bring the international community into Iraq to help establish a democracy, protect its citizens, and rebuild its infrastructure, it will free American forces and resources to address the real problem we face: terrorism.

Let’s heed the advice of my colleague JOHN MURTHA and redeploy our troops to find Osama bin Laden and fight terrorists. If we can shatter the myth that occupying Iraq is the same thing as fighting terrorism, then these 10 hours of debate will have been worth something after all.

Mr. MOORE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share my comments and concerns regarding H. Res. 861. While this resolution is purely symbolic and does not have the force of law, it, as I agree with the majority of the sentiments it expresses. In 2003, I voted for the use of force resolution, based upon what we later learned was flawed intelligence about the existence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. While I am glad that Saddam Hussein was removed from power and hope that the new Iraqi government is successful, the U.S. must move toward a new policy in Iraq.

As I stated in a letter to President Bush last month, the time has come for the United States to give the Iraqis strong incentive to stand on their own feet and take control of their own affairs. I acknowledge this will be a challenge, as there is a persistent and strong insurgency, which continues to kill Iraqis every day. Therefore, they must speed up the process of training Iraqi security forces that are willing and capable of defending their country. There are many former members of the Iraqi Army who are still unemployed. The United States and the administration need to send a clear message to the Iraqis that we will not have a permanent military presence in Iraq. Taking this step will motivate Iraqis to take charge of their own affairs and create incentives for involvement from regional players and the international community.

Additionally, we need to begin private discussions with the leaders in Iraq regarding a timeframe for the withdrawal of our troops. To date, more than 2,500 U.S. soldiers have been killed and 19,000 wounded in Iraq. Extended and multiple deployments have eroded U.S. ground forces and overall military strength. A Pentagon-commissioned study recently concluded that the Army cannot maintain its current pace of operations in Iraq without doing permanent damage to the quality of the force. More than three years of continuous deployment of U.S. troops in Iraq has contributed to serious problems with military recruitment, forcing the Army to lower the standards and expand its recruitment efforts. This erodes and erodes the ability of ground forces to do their jobs in Iraq, and undermine the ability of the U.S. National Guard to deal with problems at home.

While I agree with concerns that publicly announcing a timetable for withdrawal would put our troops at risk, I am concerned that political parties and new governments are very much like some people. If you undertake to do something for a person, some individuals will stand back and let you continue—and never step up to the plate to do for themselves.

We have saved the Iraqi people from Saddam Hussein, but we cannot save the Iraqi people from the Iraqi people—if they are not able and willing to fashion a political solution and bring the Iraqi people together. We must encourage and reinforce their government and give them strong incentive to assume responsibility and stand on their own.

Our fighting men and women have served bravely. We must commit ourselves to an outcome in Iraq that honors their sacrifices.

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution, which inaccurately describes the war in Iraq as part of the Global War on Terror. While I strongly and proudly support our courageous and dedicated troops, coalition partners, and the Iraqi Security Forces who put their lives on the line each and every day to fight for a democratic, stable and secure Iraq, I cannot support a resolution that does not paint an accurate picture of what the true situation is.

It is imperative that we acknowledge these realities: since we invaded Iraq in March 2003, more than 2,500 American service men and women have been killed in Iraq; 18,000 have been wounded. More than 100,000 innocent Iraqi civilians have lost their lives. Nearly $350 billion of U.S. taxpayer dollars have been spent. Terrorist leader al-Zarqawi has been killed and Saddam Hussein is in prison, but the pacification and reconstruction of Iraq have been a failure. Every single fact that the President has offered to justify both the invasion and the sustained U.S. military presence in Iraq has proven to be wrong. The President said that the war would be short-lived, aided by our allies, paid for by Iraqi oil, welcomed by the Iraqi people, and would result in a reconstructed Iraq with an improved quality of life for its citizens. His strategy in Iraq is not working and, as we have seen so many times, he and his administration are incapable of admitting mistakes—even when those mistakes are irrefutable.

This war has exhausted our military, hurt our war on terrorism, damaged our country’s credibility internationally, and strained our economy. I strongly believe that the President’s current “stay the course” plan in Iraq is not working. We need a new strategy. We need to take our troops out of Iraq.

I strongly disagree with the assertion in this resolution that our continuing presence in Iraq is a vital part of fighting our war on terrorism. After all, the attacks on our troops in Iraq are not coming primarily from al-Qaeda. There are only approximately 1,000 al-Qaeda amidst the 26 million people of Iraq. The attacks on U.S. troops are planned by an insurgency that is not coming primarily from al-Qaeda. There are perhaps 4,000,000 of the majority Shiites and 2,500,000 of the minority Sunnis. We have and continue to defeat terrorists by separating terrorists from their sponsors and support will deny availability of critical assets needed to plan, train for, and conduct operations. Denying sanctuary will prevent the terrorists from having the opportunity to breed, organize, and operate to the detriment of the United States and its partners support. Separating terrorists from their sponsors and support will deny availability of critical assets needed to plan, train for, and conduct operations. Denying sanctuary will prevent the terrorists from having the opportunity to breed, organize, and operate to the detriment of the United States and its partners.

A terrorist that is constantly on the move to survive does not have time to plan or conduct major operations. We have and continue to work with the international community to diminish the underlying conditions that terrorists seek to exploit. It is in our best interest to continue focusing on resources and efforts towards at-risk regions to prevent the emergence or the re-emergence of terrorists.

The United States Government, through our dedicated public servants, courageous men and women in uniform, and attentive intelligence officers are protecting the United States, our citizens, and our national interests at home and abroad—24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year. American values, liberty, and lives are at stake. While we engage the enemy on foreign soil, we are also simultaneously establishing homeland defenses, and extending such defenses to identify and neutralize any emerging threats as early as possible.

The American public is one of the world’s most informed societies—the American people understand that the threat against our Nation and values are real and imminent.

And to mischaracterize the American people’s support for the global war and the men and women in uniform fighting at the front lines of this war is unpatriotic and disingenuous. U.S. forces will withdraw from Iraq as soon as the mission is successfully accomplished. Success will be achieved when there is a free Iraq in which Iraqis themselves are sponsors of their own liberty and security. The criteria for withdrawing Coalition forces from Iraq and Afghanistan are conditions based, not calendar based.

For America will remain the land of the free, home of the brave as long as Americans are willing to fight for the principles of freedom and democracy.

I urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 861.

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the comments of the ranking member of the Committee on Armed Services. Mr. IKE SKELET. Had I not been called away to perform a funeral, I, like him, would have voted against this resolution, or, may have even walked out to protest this mockery in the People's House.

Mr. Speaker, today we debate an issue whose importance reaches farther than the citizens that live within the boundaries of our individual congressional districts—it touches citizens all over the world.

Frankly, it is easy for us in this legislative body to praiseworthy efforts of our efforts in Iraq. It is easy for us to come to this floor and talk about the violence in Iraq and the difficulties in forming a free, safe and secure government, then return to our offices and send out press releases.

It is easy because none of us have had to serve in a government that is breathing free air for the first time. None of us have had to form a government under intense international pressure to include members of all viewpoints to avoid sectarian violence. None of us have had to hold elections under the threat of terrorism. We have had to sacrifice some under the oppression of a tyrant, nor have we had to fear that speaking our minds could lead to our execution or the execution of our family.

And now that the light of freedom is shining into the darkness that was Iraq, many criticize the American leadership's ability to adjust to the light. When did we become this arrogant? At what point did seeing over 70 percent of Iraqi citizens risk their lives to participate in electing a free and democratic government not be good enough for us?

It would be easy to characterize our nation's early history as a smooth transition. Sectarian division, violence, and human rights abuses were prevalent in the early United States. I would submit that our adversaries aren't ignorant of this. They understand that the work of forming a stable democracy cannot be accomplished in three and one half years. They are smart enough to recognize the monumental successes that have been achieved by the Iraqi people and our extraordinary men and women in uniform in the face of immense challenges. And they are determined to use the most horrific tactics to stop the spread of freedom.

Their opposition is a strategy of oppression and we must stand united to make sure it does not succeed. I would hope that every so often, the debate on this floor can be about more than temporary politics. I would hope that every once in a while, we can ask ourselves the hard questions and come together to find good answers to the problems not only in this country, but the problems facing the world.

We have risen to the challenge before. On June 9, 1944, shortly after the beginning of the D-Day invasion, the following appeared in the Washington Post: "There is a noise of wrangling on Capitol Hill which has a discordant, ugly sound today. There is a jostling among us for preferment which is incongruous in comparison with the unity among those safeguarding us overseas. Like them, we need to remember now how much unites us, and again draw together."

These words are just as relevant and commanding today as they were 62 years ago. The question we must answer is still the same as it was then: do all men and women deserve to be free? If our answer is yes, then what is our responsibility toward that goal? I was taught that to whom much is given, much is expected. In this nation we have been given a great gift of freedom. Will we now fail to remember what unites us and deny our hand of assistance to those that seek the same gift we are fortunate to enjoy?

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee to have a frank discussion about the Iraq war. We need to make hard choices to ensure that our presence in Iraq does not do long-term damage to our military and endanger the men and women who proudly defend our Nation. However, this resolution doesn’t address any of those questions nor does it provide answers for a Nation that demands them. Instead, Republicans have given us more of the same.

In October 2002, I voted against the resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq, but since then, I have supported every supplemental appropriations measure to fund our troops because it is Congress’s responsibility to give them the resources needed to accomplish our objectives.

To what end, why are we sending our brave men and women overseas? Why are we spending more than $100 billion dollars to support the troops that motivates me to point out how we may do irreparable harm to our military if we do not alter our mission in Iraq quickly. Our men and women in uniform have performed admirably in difficult conditions—in many cases adapting quickly to missions outside their traditional roles, such as policing and reconstruction. However, the current pace of operations is untenable, and we are seeing evidence of the impact it is having on our military.

Our troops have faced numerous deployments to the area, with the National Guard and Reserve in particular demand because of their expertise in needed skills such as policing, civil affairs, and engineering. Nearly 500,000 members of the Selected Reserves have been mobilized since September 11, with more than 10,000 members having been deployed more than three times. We are spending more and more money in an attempt to meet recruiting and retention goals in the active military and reserve components, and we are nonetheless starting to see increasingly more mid-level officers exiting the force—a dangerous sign for the future health of the military.

Furthermore, the harsh desert conditions in Iraq—coupled with the high operational tempo—have taken their toll on our equipment, which is wearing out at twice to nine times the normal rate. The National Guard has only one-third of its equipment on hand, which weakens our ability to respond to a natural disaster or other major event on U.S. soil. Despite the billions we have provided in supplemental appropriations, it will take years and tens of billions more dollars to restore our forces to appropriate levels.

General Barry McCaffrey recently traveled to Iraq and Afghanistan to assess U.S. operations there. Upon his return, he briefed the Armed Services Committee on his findings and gave us a very frank assessment. He has stated that we should know by the end of the year whether the new Iraqi government will be effective in controlling the insurgency. He has also claimed that we cannot sustain our current level of operations beyond Christmas without breaking our military and endangering our ability to fight future missions. In other words, we are quite possibly six months away from a point of no return that could have long-ranging effects on our military and the stability of the Middle East.

So what is our strategy to prevent the worst-case scenario from occurring? Where is the accountability? Where is the Congressional oversight? I’ll tell you. I don’t think we’re not in the resolution we’re debating today. The Republican leadership promised a debate on Iraq but then refused to consider any alternatives to their own bill, preferring to preempt the status quo and ignore the very difficult decisions this Congress needs to make. We deserve better. Americans deserve better. The American people deserve better.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, it is right for Congress to ask the President to implement a plan to start bringing our troops home from Iraq. That would be the right message to send to the Iraqis: they must assume the responsibility for security of their own country.

Congress needs to have a real and meaningful debate on the future role of the U.S. military in Iraq as we approach the fourth anniversary of the congressional authorization to use force in Iraq. Congress should take seriously its obligation to oversee our military.

The majority has given us one option with this resolution, which is to make a political statement in support of President Bush. The majority has also refused to consider any amendments to this resolution. It is interesting that we are committed to building democratic institutions in Iraq but we are not willing to let the Members of Congress vote on alternative policies in Iraq. Our men and women in uniform are putting their lives on the line every day deserve the full attention of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, we all agree with those parts of the resolution that: honor Americans who died in defending freedom; support the efforts of the Iraqi and Afghan people to build stable democratic institutions; and support the sacrifices of American, Iraqi, and Afghan military forces, and the families of those troops; congratulate the Iraqi people for holding free and fair elections, under a new democratic constitution; support the efforts of the Iraqi and Afghan people to live in freedom; and declare that the United States will prevail in the global war on terror.

We should be debating whether or not and how to withdraw or redeploy United States Armed Forces from Iraq, and members should be permitted to offer amendments to this resolution. We should not simply be asked to “stay the course.” Congress must reclaim its oversight responsibility and ask serious questions about the Iraq war and reconstruction effort.

I am convinced that we must change course to the repositioning of our troops would help us to regain the focus of the war on terror.

The President came to Congress in October 2002 and asked Congress to authorize force against Iraq. I voted against giving the President this authority, and parted ways with most of my colleagues in Congress. This was not a popular vote at the time, but it was the right vote. I was proud of my vote then as I am now.

I have remained an outspoken critic of President Bush’s policy in Iraq. There was no connection between the events of 9/11 and the Saddam Hussein regime. The Bush Administration distorted and misused intelligence information about Saddam Hussein’s actual... would be able to stage our troops outside of Iraq to work with our allies and the international community to fight the war against international terrorism. The repositioning of our troops would help us regain the focus we have lost on the war on terror. Finally, bringing our troops home would help us preserve the strength of our armed forces and improve our troop morale and boosting our efforts to improve recruitment of new soldiers.

The United States should convene an international conference on Iraq which would include the government of Iraq. As the sole remaining superpower, the United States needs to mend diplomatic fences. Such a conference should achieve three primary goals. First, it should produce a verifiable cease-fire. Second, it would establish a mechanism for the completion of the training of Iraqi security forces. Finally, it would coordinate all international humanitarian and reconstruction assistance to the new Iraqi government.

Finally, we must honor our commitment to our military and veterans' families, which will strengthen our recruitment efforts for new troops and support our military in danger. The morale of our troops is suffering due to longer tours of duties and budgets that have not fully funded veterans' benefits, particularly in meeting their health care needs.

Our recruitment efforts have fallen short in the past. Both the Army National Guard and Army Reserve have only met roughly 80% of their recruiting goals. The answer is the proper deployment of our troops, and the full funding of our veterans' benefits, particularly their health care needs. These benefits include care of wounded veterans and collecting their health care needs.

Mr. Speaker, I call on the President to immediately change course in Iraq, including the implementation of a plan to start bringing our troops home from Iraq.

In April, I had the opportunity to travel to Iraq and visit with these members of the Maryland Guard and Reserve troops. Our troops have performed with honor and distinction and have done everything that we have asked of them. Our troops deserve to come home to their families and a grateful nation.

Yet the President still says that we must stay the course. We need to immediately change course in Iraq, which must include the drawdown of U.S. troops from Iraq. We currently have approximately 130,000 troops in Iraq, roughly 20 percent of which are Guard and Reserve troops. Military experts have recommended a drawdown of at least 10,000 troops a month. It is not necessary for us to announce a specific timeline for the withdrawal of our troops. It is reasonable to expect, however, that one-half of our combat troops should come home by the end of 2006, and that all of our combat troops should come home by the end of 2007.

We should make sure that our National Guard and Reserve troops come home, as they were never intended to be used as the primary military force for overseas conflicts. Our Guard units should be made available for local needs.

The drawdown of American troops from Iraq back home will allow us to achieve certain necessary objectives. First, we will bring our troops home to their families, and take them out of the middle of a civil war. Our soldiers should not be used as police officers. Second, we will send an important message to the Iraqi government to take responsibility. U.S. soldiers cannot defend Iraq indefinitely. Third, we will remove a powerful propaganda and recruitment tool for Al Qaeda that the United States is an occupation force. Fourth, we
We are not in Iraq and Afghanistan today because the President seeks for us to be. We are there because the public was outraged after the attacks of September 11, and rightly so. We were deliberately attacked by a terrorist regime seeking to cripple the United States. It was the dramatic escalation of decades of terrorist attacks. We were not just deeply in our financial center of New York, at the Pentagon, and were almost hit at the heart of our Government, the Capitol building, were it not for the brave passengers of Flight 93.

But as a nation, we chose to not lie dormant anymore. We resolved America and defeat the enemy of terrorist regimes and the countries that harbor them. I support the policy of not giving in to totalitarianism or terrorist threats. And I support the military if force becomes the necessary method of resolution. Progress is being made in Iraq, and our troops will be successful in supporting this new democratic government. We are not propping up a dictatorial regime; we are working to help democracy take hold in the Middle East. And our efforts are paying off.

The idea that all people desire to be free is a powerful one. This idea is our single biggest weapon, and will ultimately bring success to this fight. The government that allows its citizens to steer their own course is unendurably strong and peaceful. I believe our troops are making incredible progress and so are the people in Iraq who are working for an inclusive, stable government. I remain committed to supporting all of their good works.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition. I say reluctant opposition—because I agree with much of what this resolution says.

I support its statements about honoring the sacrifices of our troops and their families. There’s no question that our military is the most professional fighting force in the world, and we are all grateful to our men and women in uniform for putting their lives on the line for our country.

I support the resolution’s statements congratulating the new prime minister upon formulating a government for his people for the first time, their courage in participating in elections, and calling on the nations of the world to work together for global peace.

I even agree with the statement that we should not set an arbitrary date for the redeployment of our troops.

I opposed the Iraq war resolution, but I have resisted supporting an artificial deadline for withdrawing troops. I believe that how we withdraw is as important as when we withdraw. This means giving the Iraqi time to get their newly independent government up and running and establish the means for international support. We must exercise deep care in the way our country withdraws because leaving a failed state in Iraq will deeply endanger our country.

But I profoundly disagree with the overall tone of the resolution and disagree even more with the way this debate was conducted.

Mr. Speaker, a few months ago—in response to pressure from both sides of the aisle—the Republican leadership promised a full debate on Iraq.

What we got was certainly a long debate, but it was far from "full." A full debate would mean that Members would have been able to offer alternatives to this resolution. We would then have been able to debate the merits of all the resolutions offered.

I had hoped to offer the bipartisan resolution I introduced with my colleague JOE SCHWARZ of Michigan that recognizes political progress in Iraq, including the establishment of a national unity government, but also recognizes the need for the new government to make progress needed, and that the Iraqis must meet their own deadline for modifications to their new constitution.

As it is, the debate has been tightly controlled, and our only choice is to vote up or down on a status quo resolution that doesn’t focus on Iraq and that doesn’t reflect reality on the ground.

If this were a real debate on Iraq, it would be about where we are versus where we thought we’d be, and where we should go from here. Just last year, Congress called for 2006 to be a year of transition in Iraq that would allow U.S. forces to begin to redeploy. But we’re into the middle of June, and we are actually adding troops.

A real debate would begin by recognizing that Iraq is a distinct issue, only part of the “war on terror” and inseparable as the global security vacuum in Iraq has attracted terrorists. But as the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SKELTEN, has said—Iraq is a separate conflict, an insurgency with terrorist elements and sectarian violence.

A real debate would have been honest about how continuous deployment in Iraq hurts our military personnel and their families, strains recruiting and retention, and damages readiness.

A real debate would have looked at the human cost. We are losing one battalion every month of killed or wounded soldiers. Just yesterday the military reported that we’ve hit a tragic milestone. A total of 2,500 American men and women have lost their lives in Iraq. More than 18,000 have been wounded. Attacks on U.S. forces are now at their highest rate ever—900 a month.

A real debate would have looked at the financial cost. We are mortgaging our future and the future of our children. So far Congress has appropriated $320 billion for Iraq alone, a rate of $9 billion a month. That’s $2 billion every week, or $286 million every single day.

And if we were really concerned about the well-being of our troops, we would be talking about the fact that every one of the Army’s available active duty combat brigades has served at least one 12-month tour in Iraq or Afghanistan, 40 percent of the National Guard and Reserves has been mobilized since September 11th, and nearly half of those mobilized have been deployed two or more times.

We need to consider that the readiness of Army units here in the U.S. is at the lowest level since the late 1970s.

We would also have considered what it means for current and future readiness that the fully 40 percent of the Army and Marine Corps ground equipment is deployed to Iraq and that equipment in Iraq is wearing out five times faster than the rate in peacetime. If the war in Iraq ended today, the Army would require two years of supplemental appropriations and at least $24 billion dollars to repair and replace equipment.

If we were properly concerned about our National Guard, we would have addressed the fact that it only has about 34 percent of its equipment on hand, down from 75 percent of its requirement in 2001. The missing equipment has been left in Iraq or transferred to units deploying to Iraq. The Army National Guard has been directed to transfer more than 75,000 pieces of equipment valued at $1.76 billion to the Army Reserve to support units deploying to Iraq. There is no plan to replace these items.

No matter how each Member chooses to vote today, there is no question that we all honor and support our troops. But I would argue that if we really cared for our troops, we would not make them have the equipment and training they need. We wouldn’t make it less possible for them to meet some future mission. No one wants a new mission for our troops, but if we had to fight somewhere else, we wouldn’t have the equipment or forces to do it.

These are the things that we should have been debating, not the “feel good” messages included in the Republican resolution. We all want to feel good about Iraq and believe that progress is possible. But we can’t want progress without looking at the reality on the ground.

Of course, it’s hard to know reality on the ground if Congress does no oversight. Congress has a fundamental responsibility to review how the money it appropriates is being spent. The Republican majority would have us believe that asking questions makes us unpatriotic.

But that’s just wrong. We abrogate our responsibility to the American people if we shut our eyes to how their tax dollars are being spent.

The Republican leadership seems unable to come up with anything other than the same old tired lines. They will all toe the Administration line when they vote today, but we all know that even Republicans are having doubts as to the wisdom of the President’s decision line when they vote today, but we all know that even Republicans are having doubts as to the wisdom of the President’s decision.

Mr. Speaker, we were led into war as a divided nation and today we are even more divided. A successful withdrawal from Iraq can only happen if Congress and the Bush Administration work to bring unity at home.

This resolution doesn’t bring us together, Mr. Speaker, and I regret that the Republican leadership continues to seek to divide this House. But that is the course they have chosen, and so they have left me no choice but to reluctantly oppose this resolution today.

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the brave soldiers who have sacrificed so much to ensure our Nation’s freedom.

I am extremely proud of all of Western North Carolina’s brave men and women, including the 501st and 211th Military Police Units, who have fought courageously to establish a united, free, and sovereign Iraq.

The sacrifices these men and women make are unimaginable, whether it’s spending time away from their families, enduring financial hardships, or laying their very lives on the line for freedom. And while these sacrifices are great, we must not forget that they are fighting to protect the world from the grip of terrorism. By risking their lives in Iraq and abroad, these brave men and women, including my son, are protecting our way of life and defending American families and making our country safer.

Four men from Western North Carolina have given their lives in the Iraq conflict. At-tending the funeral of one of those men—CW3 Mitchell Carver—served as a stark reminder that freedom is not free. It is not the press who protect a Nation’s right to free speech; instead, it is men like Mitch Carver who choose the responsibility to do so. And Mitch Carver is not alone. In the eight years since the attacks of 9/11, there have been thousands of young men and women who have sacrificed their lives in the war on terrorism. Mitch Carver is but one of the brave men and women that have fought in Iraq and to these brave men and women, including my son, I wish to express my sincere gratitude to our brave troops and our Iraqi allies. We owe the men and women in our Armed Forces a debt of gratitude for what they have done and the sacrifices they have made.

But more than this we must also show our appreciation to those who have supported our troops, both military and civilians alike, helping the arm of government to succeed.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the brave soldiers who have sacrificed so much to ensure our Nation’s freedom. We must stop the use of force in Iraq and bring our troops home. Our troops have done their job; it is time for a new direction. Mr. Speaker enough is enough! It is time to bring the troops home.

Iraq has a new democratic government; it is our responsibility to help them secure their country. This country can help Iraq, as it helps other countries, protect itself by providing resources and equipment. We need to let them fight for their country in their way. It is time to be friends and not guardians, let Iraq fight for Iraq. Our troops have done their job; it is time to bring them home.
hemorrhaging of tax dollars that could go to meet our Nation's vital domestic needs.

This war of choice in Iraq is undermining the very fabric of American society.

By the end of this year, the costs of the invasion and occupation of Iraq will total $450 billion. So much of our nation’s credit is spent in Iraq, worries about how much of it going to corrupt, many contractors.

All of the President’s statements amount to excuses for an open-ended, seemingly never-ending commitment of our troops to occupy Iraq. He is trying to salvage the terrible wager he made in Iraq by doubting down the bet with human lives: Iraqi and American.

While this debate today is a belated effort to inform the American people, it is nevertheless an empty gesture. It is time to admit our mistake in Iraq and begin to bring our troops home with honor.

Mr. MATHESON. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the current situation in Iraq, as are the vast majority of Americans. We need an honest assessment from the civilian leadership at the Pentagon about what is working and what is not working, and what needs to change in terms of our strategy.

I strongly oppose efforts to weaken the position of our military by setting an arbitrary deadline for withdrawal of our military forces. We all want American troops to return home from Iraq as soon as possible. Some members of Congress have called for an immediate withdrawal from Iraq—I disagree with them.

As a longtime supporter of our military, I believe that a calendar deadline for withdrawal serves only to encourage the insurgents. It also places a target on the backs of American troops. Finally, I am very concerned that the immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops would leave a volatile vacuum of power in Iraq, which would rapidly be filled by insurgents. A better alternative is for Congress to clearly delineate the conditions that, if met, would permit a U.S. withdrawal.

Standing around arguing about why we’re in this position doesn’t serve a good purpose, in my opinion. Instead, I think today’s debate is an opportunity to talk about how we can develop a strategy for success. Regardless of when the last American soldier leaves Iraq, I want to be able to look at him or her and be able to say that the service of our military achieved something greater than the political ends of a few here in Washington. I hope all of my colleagues share that desire. A strategy for success should be comprehensive—it should include not just a military role, but also a plan for political, diplomatic, and economic success.

In the next few weeks, a field artillery unit from my district—the 222nd—is heading home after a long year in Iraq. These soldiers have made immense sacrifices on behalf of our great Nation and I am so grateful that they’re going to be back in Utah. We all have constituents serving overseas and I would like to take this opportunity to talk about how we can develop a strategy for success.

Mr. GRAVES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 861. Since the tragic events of September 11, 2001, we have pursued terrorists and brought them to justice around the world. In this Global War on Terror—where evil, bloodthirsty fanatics kill to prevent democracy and liberty from taking root—there is no option for the forces of freedom but victory. This resolution affirms our commitment to victory. It is a solemn declaration that we will prevail over the terrorists, and that we will do so hand in hand with all who cherish freedom and repudiate extremism.

Mr. Speaker, as I sat in a tent in Kuwait eating dinner with troops from Texas, I was struck by how young most of them were. Those soldiers with me were 18–20 years old. They have experienced and their stories humbled me. Never in my life have I felt such emotion and love for our service men and women than when I sat and looked at these brave young soldiers. Barely out of high school, yet each day these heroes awaken knowing of the perilous path ahead. Danger surrounds them, but they continue to make a great sacrifice each day so that you and I can be free.

Sometimes I feel that we Americans take our freedoms and our lives for granted. We forget the images of 9/11. Yet while on my trip to the Middle East, the London bombings occurred. This was yet another stark reminder that if we don’t fight terrorists abroad, they just get closer to our home.

Mr. Speaker, the War on Terror is a global effort; it reaches beyond a small concentration of countries in the Middle East. I’d like to share the story of Marine Staff Sergeant Nathan Fletcher, Sergeant Fletcher’s wife, Mindy, lived in Dallas and also worked for another war hero, my fellow Texas Congressman Sam Johnson, on Capitol Hill. While on my trip to the Middle East, the London bombings occurred. This was yet another stark reminder that if we don’t fight terrorists abroad, they just get closer to our home.

After my last trip in October 2005, I came to the present circumstances and revitalize our mission right. I support winning the Global War on Terror. For these reasons, I cannot support this resolution. It is too open-ended, too blind to the reality of the dilemma we are facing, and too simplistic a resolution for the complex situation in which we find ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the resolution before us today, despite the fact that it barely touches on the war in Iraq, which is the stated purpose of our debate, and makes some claims I do not agree with. While I will vote yes, I want to absolutely clear that I am doing so to emphatically support our troops and the bravery they display every day in fighting the war on terror. I do not doubt that we could and should have won the Iraq War and continue to believe it was a mistake. I do not agree with parts of this resolution that misstate the original administration arguments for invading Iraq. The heart of this discussion needs to be that the Bush administration has been almost totally inept in its planning and prosecution of the war and occupation of Iraq. Time and again, the Bush administration has been wrong. Before invading Iraq, we were told that Saddam Hussein was an imminent threat to the United States. After attending the briefings provided by the administration, I did not feel that administration officials made this case, and the lack of weapons of mass destruction certainly undercuts this argument. Even worse, we were given a stream of incorrect assumptions about the costs of the invasion and occupation of Iraq. Then-Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz testified before a Senate Committee and predicted that the monetary cost of the war to the United States would not exceed $2 billion. Including the money to be appropriated this year, we are approaching $400 billion, and continue to spend $8.1 billion every month in Iraq. Wolfowitz also said Iraq had no history of ethnic strife.

It is important to remember that the Bush administration assertions were not conventional wisdom at the time. Both then-Army Chief of Staff, GEN Eric Shinseki, and then-Bush economic adviser Larry Lindsey, soon left their positions after publicly stating, respectively, that the war would take large numbers of troops and hundreds of billions of dollars to prosecute.

Further, it quickly became clear that the planning of the occupation of Iraq was woefully inadequate, placing our soldiers in increasing danger. Stories of inadequate supplies of bulletproof vests and armor for humvees documented this fact. The outspoken concern of former generals in regard to these preparations further underscored the problems. The intensity of the insurgency caught the administration by surprise.

The United States has allocated $50 billion to private contractors for reconstruction and rebuilding efforts in Iraq since the beginning of the war. Nine billion dollars in reconstruction funds are unaccounted for, while the Defense Department estimates that $1.47 billion spent by the Halliburton Corporation was excessive or insufficiently documented. Oil production is at 2.2 million barrels per day—down from 2.6 million barrels per day prior to the war.

The resolution we are debating also says “... the terrorists have declared Iraq to be the central front in their war against all who oppose their ideology.” This is true only because we gave them the opportunity to do so. Iraq clearly was not the central front before the invasion—another unfortunate outcome of poor planning.

I continue to believe that part of our decision making process concerning how to move forward in Iraq must include an analysis of how we got there. It is not enough to say that since we are there, we have to make the best of it. I agree that we cannot just walk away, and do not support a certain date for our exit, but we still do not have any framework for evaluating our progress there. While the death of Al Zarqawi is great news, and it seems that Iraqi security forces are taking some re- responsibility, does anyone really believe that in one year, or two years, or even five years, that Iraq will be able to defend itself?

I said at the outset of this war that the United States was going to pay the vast majority of its costs, in both lives and dollars, and this has clearly been the case. We must reengage the international community to take on more of the burdens of the occupation, and seek to bring our troops home as soon as possible.

Unfortunately, this year I join my colleagues in celebrating the extraordinary efforts and accomplishments of our troops. But I do not celebrate our country’s undertaking of the invasion and occupation of Iraq. It was a bad decision followed by numerous other bad decisions, and while I hope it ends well, we will feel the ramifications in many ways for years to come.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, the members of this House have had a lengthy and passionate debate today. When these hours of debate are over, I think the American people need a clear understanding of what the Democrats propose to do.

Let’s look at the Democrats’ blueprint, the Murtha Plan.

The Murtha Plan proposes to have our forces “redeployed at the earliest practicable date” with no detail about what that means. Moreover, it is the Iraqi leadership only days ago requested for our forces to continue their side-by-side work with Iraqi forces. The Democrats plan advocates redeployment before the job is done, which is nothing short of retreat.

The Murtha Plan calls for the creation of a “quicken reaction force” and an “over-the-horizon presence of U.S. Marines” with, again, no details about what exactly that means. The Democrats continue to advocate retreat, while... our President has stated time and time again that our commanders on the ground will determine the tactical plans, not politicians in Washington.

The Murtha Plan calls for America to “pur- sue security and stability in Iraq through diplomacy.” Are Democrats suggesting that we can negotiate with terrorists? This is a war unlike any other. If we leave this front now, the terrorists will come after us somewhere else. This is not about territory or conquest. This is a fight for the future of the free world.

The plan supported by the Demo- crats is nothing more than an enormous step backwards in the fight against the Islamic fas- cists. It is a rehash of the same old policies of appeasement and retreat that contributed greatly to our lack of preparedness for the 9/11 attacks. The policy of appeasement and non-engagement has only emboldened terror- ists in the past.

Thankfully, our President has charted a new course to take the fight to the terrorists so we do not have to fight them here at home. We must aggressively keep our resolve in this decades-old war with the terrorists.

Mr. SABO. I come to this House debate deeply frustrated over the chaos in Iraq. I voted against authorizing President Bush to take us to war in Iraq. I believed in 2002, and am more certain today that this war has been a grave mistake.

If we leave Iraq now, we will lose the war. The United States has a critical role in helping Iraqis to build a peaceful, democratic soci- ety. I still seek answers to questions I asked De- fense Secretary Rumsfeld in appropriations hearings earlier this year: What is your plan for success in Iraq? When and under what conditions can our honorable men and women serving there come home? The House debate on H. Res. 861 will not provide the answers, and I am still waiting for a thoughtful and cred- ible response from Secretary Rumsfeld.

Mr. DeFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss H. Res. 861. The Republican leader- ship has been promising for weeks that the House would have a genuine debate about the future of U.S. military involvement in Iraq. Given that promise, I am disappointed that H. Res. 861 is not what I expected. Despite the eloquent words used, the resolution has no le- gal binding impact. It does nothing to require a re-evaluation of U.S. policies in Iraq or to change the status quo. It does nothing to ad- dress the mistakes that have been made in Iraq. The resolution’s calls for particular- ly our troops serving honorably in difficult cir- cumstances in Iraq, deserve more than cheerleading and sloganeering. Unfortunately, empty promises are all this resolution offers.

A vote for this resolution is a vote for the status quo. It is a vote for standing inde- finitely in Iraq, perhaps a decade or longer. It is a vote for continuing with the current policies with no end in sight. I cannot support endors- ing the status quo. On March 21, 2006, Presi- dent Bush actually said that the question of bringing home our troops “will be decided by future presidents,” signaling that U.S. troops will not be home until 2009 at the earliest. The American people need to under- stand that a vote in favor of this resolution is a vote to stay in Iraq until at least 2009.

Let me address my specific concerns with the text of the resolution.

First, I am concerned that the resolution inappropriately lumps Iraq in with the so-called global war on terror. It was Osama bin Laden and al-Qaeda who attacked the U.S. on Sep- tember 11, 2001. In my view, the resolution’s call for “American and Iraqi forces to fight al-Qaeda around the world” is a crutch. Establishing a timeline to bring the bulk of our troops home and redeploy oth- ers to fight al-Qaeda would force the Iraqi people, politicians and security forces to re- solve their differences, establish an effective government, governors, U.S. and Iraqi security forces, and a democratic society. The U.S. military cannot solve the sectarian problems in Iraq. Only the Iraqis can.

Proponents of the resolution say that those like me who want our troops to come home are defeatist and want to cut and run from Iraq.

To the contrary, I believe the U.S. military has already done all that has been asked of them. Saddam Hussein is on trial. The threat from alleged weapons of mass destruction programs in Iraq has been neutralized. The programs do not exist, and didn’t before the war for that matter. The Iraqi people have writ- ten and adopted a new constitution and elect- ed a new government. It is time to turn over control of the country to the Iraqi government, Iraqi security forces, and the Iraqi people to build their own future.

Second, the resolution contains the blatantly false assertion that negotiating a timeline for bringing U.S. troops home with the Iraqi gov- ernment undermines national security. Such a statement shows a misunderstanding of the enemy we face in Iraq.

Although today the president and pro-ponents of this resolution fail to distinguish be- tween the various elements that make up the insurgency. The one huge element he left out was nationalist Shiias, such as those influ- enced by Moqtada al-Sadr.

The reality is that the extremists, Saddamists, and nationalist Shias, who com- bined with Sunnis, are by far the largest and most dangerous elements in Iraq, have no interest in attacking the U.S. homeland. They just want U.S. military forces out of their own country. They have no de- signs on our country. So it is misleading, at best, to argue that if we don’t fight the insur- gents there, we will fight them in the streets of the United States. Even the foreign terrorist elements in Iraq seem more focused on ignit- ing a Shia-Sunni civil war in the Middle East.
and attacking regimes they consider infidels in the region, such as the Jordanian monarchy.

It is also misleading to pretend that if the U.S. leaves that somehow Osama bin Laden will take control of Iraq. There is no chance that the Shiias and Kurds, who represent approximately 80 percent of the population in Iraq, will allow foreign terrorist elements to take over the country. Even the majority of the Sunnis have grown tired of foreign terrorists operating in Iraq.

With respect to the argument about waiting us out, if the insurgents, the Sunni, Shia and Kurds cannot resolve their political differences, violence will continue in Iraq. It is not a matter of whether we’re there or not. It is ridiculous to assume that the insurgent elements will stop attacking once a timeline for bringing U.S. troops home is announced and will wait to start again until after we leave.

I believe that negotiating a timeline for bringing U.S. forces home is a prerequisite for stabilizing Iraq over the next several months.

Announcing the termination of the open-ended U.S. commitment in Iraq today, and providing a concrete plan, including a timeline negotiated with the Iraqi government, for bringing our troops home would undermine support for insurgents. Public opinion polls show that nearly 9 in 10 Iraqis support an American agenda to bring our troops home as a prerequisite for stabilizing Iraq, could unite Iraqis, Sunni, Shia and Kurd, against the foreign terrorists operating in Iraq. That would be a key turning point in stabilizing the country.

A timeline for bringing U.S. troops home that is negotiated with the Iraqi government would also boost the Iraqi government’s legitimacy and claim to self-rule, and force the Iraqi government to take responsibility for itself and its people. If the Iraqi government were coming to the table and negotiating a timeline and a plan, that could振兴 a lost strategy with the Iraqi government could, more possibly anything else, improve the standing of the Iraqi government in the eyes of its own people, a significant achievement in a region in which the standing of rulers and governments is generally low.

Similarly, establishing a firm timeline for bringing our troops home would accelerate the development of Iraqi security forces and deepen their commitment to defending their own country and their own government. It would eliminate, in my view, the current political game now being played with what many of them see as an occupying force. It would allow them to defend a sovereign Iraqi government, rather than fight alongside U.S. forces.

A plan to bring the bulk of our troops home from Iraq and free up intelligence and defense assets to redeploy to fight al-Qaeda, particularly in Afghanistan and along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border, could also help the United States in its broader fight against Islamic terrorists with global ambitions. It would make the U.S. safer by taking away a recruiting tool for jihadists, signaling to the world that the U.S. is not winning the war on terror. Twenty-eight percent of respondents, including 26 percent of the conservatives, said the Iraq war is the principal reason the U.S. is less safe, second only to homeland security.

While I agree with most of the content of H. Res. 861, I cannot vote in favor of it because it does not acknowledge the need for a new direction in Iraq. This resolution was offered without any opportunity for amendment, preventing the House of Representatives from holding a full and fair debate on the most important matter facing our nation today. Our troops, and all Americans, deserve a better and more responsible debate. While I will not support this resolution, I will always continue to stand by our troops and their families.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak against this politically motivated resolution. Our country is under a real and serious threat from extremists. We do not have time to waste engaging in cheap political strutting to distract us from the unity and sense of purpose that we should all have together, as Americans, in confronting the real threat.

We need to have a real debate on real solutions to determine an effective course of action in Iraq. An honest debate does not under- mine our soldiers’ morale, as some have suggested in an attempt to silence all questions. What is actually demoralizing to our service men and women is to be sent into harm’s way lacking body armor and supplies and a definitive plan for success; and then coming back from our service men and women only to be harassed by creditors because the VA did not take steps to protect them, or not receiving the necessary treatment for medical issues like PTSD.

In fact, a real, open discussion of the facts on the ground and the challenges we face globally would show our soldiers that we are serious about this endeavor and their safety and that we want to be successful. That is good for our troops.

The way our current debate on Iraq is conducted, with resolutions like this, all of us are in the process ofgrandstanding. We can no longer allow political leaders to shield a badly conducted policy in Iraq behind the cloak of 9/11.
We were attacked on 9/11, and we had a united country and a united world join together in approval as we sought to stop the terrorists in Afghanistan. This had nothing to do with Iraq. And now, five years later, we find ourselves with a divided nation, and few allies who support our policies. This has everything to do with Iraq.

Despite the courage, dedication and professionalism of our men and women in uniform, our military has been strained as a result of the poor and extremely shortsighted leadership of the Secretary of Defense. Recruitment is down. The National Guard has assumed a greater burden in military operations then ever before and as a result our homeland security is weakened.

The invasion of Iraq and our continuing occupation has damaged our standing in the world. Abu Ghraib, massive civilian casualties, lawlessness and little economic hope in Iraq have undermined the global support that we had to hunt down and destroy terrorists around the world. The war has not made us safer from terrorists—it has created more terrorists. It has given the insurgents in Iraq the rationale to fight.

The sad reality is that we have created thousands of terrorists where there were none before.

But a review of these errors does not solve the problems. Now, we must look forward. We must make the right choice for our nation, our soldiers, and the Iraqi people? A policy of “Stay the course” does not address the real situation on the ground in Iraq. It does not provide a clear and understandable path to success and to bringing our troops home. It does not help us to address the damage that we have seen to our moral authority around the world and it certainly does not provide a plan to destroy al Qaeda and similar terrorist organizations.

Instead, we must have a new course in Iraq, a way of instituting fundamental change in our role there, and a way of removing our military presence. It is time for the Iraqi people to take full control of their country. The United States military cannot act as the dominant security force in Iraq indefinitely. I believe, as many leading military experts do, that our presence in Iraq facilitates and perpetuates the violence.

We need a timeline for withdrawal so that the elected government of Iraq can fully assume its duties in the political, economic, and security arenas.

The principle of our efforts must be that: this we cannot want a free and stable Iraq more than the Iraqis themselves do. It is time for them to take control of their own country, and their own destiny.

I strongly believe that we must continue to support the efforts of the Iraqi people to establish a free, secure and sovereign state, but we cannot do this by occupying the country and dominating its internal security and economic development. International cooperation, economic aid, security training, and assistance for infrastructure development should be our aims.

Too many American and Iraqi lives have been lost. Too much money has been diverted to this endeavor instead of going toward hunting down al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations, who are the true enemies of our American freedom.

It is time for us to move forward together, in support of our soldiers, in support of the Iraqi people, with the support of our allies, and in the firm belief that with a change in approach in Iraq, we can secure greater freedom and prosperity here and abroad.

Mr. SODREL. Mr. Speaker, Sir Winston Churchill once said “An appeaser is one who feeds a crocodile—hoping it will eat him last.” We followed the appeasement with terrorists for too long. We ignored the jihadists for too long, and they finally arrived on our soil.

Let me highlight a few examples of terrorist attacks for which we responded with appeasement.

December 21, 1988, Pan American Airlines Flight 103 was blown up by a bomb over Lockerbie, Scotland killing all 259 passengers on board;

February 26, 1993, an Islamic terrorist group attempted to blow up the World Trade Center using a bomb in an underground garage;

On October 12, 2000, they attacked the USS Cole while docked in Aden, Yemen killing 17 sailors and injuring 70 others;

After the loss of the World Trade Center and the attack on the Pentagon on September 11, 2001 our military was finally ordered to take the fight to the terrorists.

When a new recruit is inducted into the U.S. military he or she takes an oath. In part this oath pledges the soldier, sailor or airman to “protect and defend the United States Constitution from all enemies foreign and domestic.” If I had to distill the U.S. Constitution down to a single word I would define it as “liberty.”

Young Americans fought and died at Tren-ton and Yorktown to achieve liberty. They died at Gettysburg and Vicksburg to extend liberty to all Americans. They gave their all at Normandy and Iwo Jima to restore liberty to people.

We followed the process of appeasement with terrorists instead of going toward hunting them down.

I know the value of liberty. As part of the “The Greatest Generation” he risked life and limb in defense of liberty.

In my youth I heard the President of the United States say “Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe, to assure the survival and success of liberty.” That President was John F. Kennedy. He knew the value of liberty. As part of “The Greatest Generation” he risked life and limb in defense of liberty.

The Greatest Generation spent 144 percent of our Gross Domestic Product defending liberty. Not 144 percent of the Federal budget, but 144 percent of the total annual output of goods and services in our country. Over 40 percent of young Americans died in the effort.

There are 9,387 crosses in the American cemetery on the bluffs overlooking the beaches of Normandy. The Greatest Generation of Americans was willing to pay any price, and bear any burden, in defense of liberty.

We have seen people today who know the price of everything and the value of nothing. Has liberty depreciated so much? Is she worth less to us than she was to our parents? And their parents? Shall we tell those who lay at Flanders’ fields we are not willing to support our friends, to make the world safe and secure for liberty?

Any who does not understand that Osama bin Laden is an enemy of liberty, despite himself. Anyone who believes al Zarqawi was not determined to kill liberty is feeding the crocodile. The value of anything is determined by the price paid. For Americans throughout our nation’s history we would not sell our liberty for any price. For our Founders it was an hereditary right. It was that which they lived, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

It took us 13 years after the start of our revolution to adopt our current constitution. The Iraqi people are progressing to a constitutional government at a comparatively rapid rate. I have a great deal of respect for those who are willing to serve in their government. Serving in our government often brings verbal abuse. Serving in the Iraqi government is often life threatening for them and their families. And I have the utmost respect for those serving in the U.S. military and coalition forces.

Mr. Speaker, as a young man grows up he is often confronted with bullying and intimidation. When my son, Noah, was a little boy I gave him two rules on fighting. The number one rule is never start a fight. I told him if I ever caught him pulling a fight I would make him regret it. Looking for a fight is unacceptable behavior for our family. He asked me what the second rule was. I told him we don’t lose fights. If he finds himself in a fight he should not instigate, if he is engaged in a fight through no fault of his own, then I expect him to win.

We did not ask for this fight, Mr. Speaker. The people who went to work at the World Trade Center on September 11 were not trying to pick a fight. The Americans at the Pentagon weren’t spoiling for one. The enemies of liberty after being fed for two decades came to eat us at last. We all want our soldiers, sailors and airman home safely, but not until the job is finished. Appeasement is not a logical policy and losing is not an option.

Mr. CAMP of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, throughout the centuries a test of the human spirit has arisen; a test of our foresight; and, a test of our most basic, fundamental belief that one must pay any price, and bear any burden, in defense of liberty.

Today, we face a new evil that is unique in history. It comes not in the form of another nation; it comes from within ourselves. It calls for a new form of fighting—war on every front and in every country, spreading quietly like a cancer awaiting the most opportune time to strike.

The question we face is simple: Will we rise to that challenge or will we exit the arena leaving future generations to battle a more emboldened enemy?

We, as Americans, are blessed as a free people and are obliged to defend liberty. It is an inherited responsibility that does not end at our borders; and while the major battlefield is halfway around the globe, the true battlefield cannot be dismissed by distance—a fact the last two World Wars should have taught us well.

On September 11, 2001, terrorists, in a murderous rage, sought to shake our foundation in hope we would abandon the cause of freedom. Since that bloody day, our men and women in uniform have not only answered our Nation’s call to duty; they have not only served ably and nobly; but they, like thousands of American soldiers before them, have responded without hesitation to freedom’s call for help and they have followed her voice into the darkest corners, bringing new life and new light to generations of the oppressed.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

June 16, 2006
Today, because of their actions Afghanistan is rid of the Talib; Iraq has been released from the iron grasp of Saddam Hussein; Osama bin Laden has been sent scurrying; and, his “Prince of Al Qaeda,” Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, has been delivered to his final fate. After nearly two decades of being circum-
ously unchallenged, we are now emerging back and beating back the terrorists. This is not a war on paper; it is a war with real costs and real lives are being lost—not the least of them the more than 3,000 innocent civilians who were murdered on 11.

We care for them and the men and women now serving on the front lines who have given the ultimate sacrifice an un-repayable debt of gratiitude. We must live our lives in such a way as to be worthy of their sacrifice and we must pick up their cause and see it through to the end.

Make no mistake about it, the debate we are having today is an important one. The war we wage will dictate the course of human freedom for years to come. We can allow the terrorists to turn Iraq into a safe haven from which they can launch their plans to destroy our way of life, or we can create a stable Iraq that is an ally to free and democratic nations around the globe.

At every turn the people of Afghanistan and Iraq have made the right choice. Despite threats to our lives, Iraqis voted not once but twice in national elections to establish a new government with new leaders. They have now completed the formation of that government and are on the brink of reclaiming their country.

My friends, I choose to continue to support our new friends, the Iraqi people, in their struggle. I choose to support our men and women in uniform. And, I choose to stand steadfast in this global war on terror.

I urge my colleagues to join with me and support this resolution.

Mr. BLIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support H. Res. 861 and to stand beside the members of our armed services who have gal-antly fought and died for our freedom.

Early in the morning on September 11, 2001, our Nation was at peace. Then at midning a group of terrorists attacked us. What had we done to deserve such an attack? We saved the world from fascism in the 1940s; then rather than punish our enemies, we helped them rebuild their war-torn countries. We saved the world from communism and helped those who were trapped in darkness behind the Iron Curtain see the light of freedom. We are the world’s first responders to every emergency, but because a group of murderous cowards hate our way of life, our liberty, our compassion and values, they attacked us.

Last September, I traveled to Iraq and had the privilege of seeing firsthand our troops’ brave actions in combating terrorism. I spent a great deal of time listening to them and learning their perspectives. And these perspectives are contrary to what the American people hear from the media.

Their morale is extremely high and they are proud to serve their country. They believe that we are winning the fight against terrorism and that perseverance and patience will ensure our long-term victory. The most moving part of my trip came when I visited the Air Force Theater Hospital in Balad, Iraq. I was not surprised, but deeply touched, to see that all those I spoke with who were wounded in com-mint were eager to return to their units.

Mr. Speaker, I respect every Member’s opinion on this extremely important subject. However, I submit that we cannot say we support our troops and also continue this overmanning of the military in being a so-mistake or an “un-winnable war.” This undermines the efforts of our troops and jeopardizes our mission—just as was done during the Vietnam war. Having served on active duty for 4 years in the early 50s, I understand that.

Our brave men and women are winning this fight for us in the streets of Baghdad so we do not have to face terrorists on the streets of America. As long as I am in this body, I will continue to fight for our troops and veterans and I ask my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. KILPATRICK of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H. Res. 861, the global war on terrorism resolution. I am opposed to the resolution because it is terribly flawed, nonbinding, and does not provide a viable plan that protects our soldiers or serves our country.

The general assumption is that the debate on the global war on terrorism, GWOT, will be a full and honest debate. In fact, the process we are engaged in represents nothing more than an exercise in rhetoric. H. Res. 861 is flawed because it does not reflect bipartisan agreement to offer our substitute or amend the Republican resolution.

Further, I strenuously disagree with the lan-duage contained in the resolution.

I want to strongly emphasize that the failed Republican resolution includes bili-planning that left troops without critical equipment, and provided no plan for success. The war in Iraq exemplifies gross mismanagement, as evidenced by $9 billion that is either lost or stolen and cannot be accounted for. There has been no oversight of spending to date. The Republican controlled Congress has refused to oversee military conduct and the policy that contributed to the war. There has been a complete lack of accountability regarding this war. No investigating committee has ensured taxpayer dollars were legally and well spent. This administration is guilty of entering into no-bid contracts, totaling $17 billion to Halliburton alone.

Let me be clear, Democrats want and demand a new direction in Iraq. We want a responsible redeployment of U.S. troops to take place immediately. We must redeploy and be ready.

I disagree with the resolution premise that the U.S. will prevail in the Global War on Terrors due to the fact that the “terrorist adversary” cannot be identified or quantified. The misguided perpetrators of this war consist of disparate and loosely federated groups, some of whom are religious zealots that justify their terrorist actions based on their Islamic beliefs; others are mercenaries seeking to retaliate against the U.S. for our invasion of Iraq. The terrorists identified as members of Al Qa'ida led by Osama bin Laden do not adhere to a traditional command and control military structure, thereby making it impossible for our military forces to engage in traditional battlefield strategies.

H. Res. 861 presents the proposition that Saddam Hussein’s regime supported terrorists and posed a threat to global peace. There is no document to support this premise. These allegations have been wholly disproved, yet supporters of the war and the architects of the resolution continue to propagate these mistruths. This is why today I reaffirm my steadfast opposition to another in a long list of resolutions that seek to delude Americans into believing that we are debating legislation that provides a practicable strategy and a return of our troops as soon as possible.

The resolution does not address that our President, the Secretary of State, the Sec-detary of Defense, and the National Security Agency, NSA, all provided the American public with his calls for a reevaluation of our military and contribute mightily to the Federal deficit. The resolution does not address that our President, the Secretary of State, the Sec-

the world. An FBI supervisor has confirmed that the PATRIOT Act led to the breakup of an al Qaeda cell in suburban Buffalo, NY. And just a few days ago, months of painstaking investigation gathering by U.S., Iraqi, Jordanian, and other sources resulted in the killing of the terrorist leader Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.

For all the well-earned kudos that have been heaped upon the military and intelligence communities for their successful mission against Zarqawi, most of their successes aren’t widely known and can’t be publicly broadcast. The intelligence community can’t take credit for giving gays and lesbians about their modes and methods of gathering this valuable information.

Which is why the revelation in the media last year of the National Security Agency’s terrorist surveillance program was an outrageous breach of national security. This leak—timed to coincide with Congress’s debate on reauthorizing the USA PATRIOT Act—let al Qaeda and other terrorist groups know that the NSA had been intercepting the international communications of individuals with links to their groups.

Then-CIA Director Porter Goss confirmed before the Senate Intelligence Committee that the damage caused by the leak was “very severe,” leading to the loss or disruption of some sources and methods—not to mention a loss of confidence in our intelligence counterparts in other countries.

This program has provided valuable intelligence on terrorist activities. CIA Director Michael Hayden, who oversaw this program at the Agency, said that without it we could “only speculate that there were no WMD; the twisting of truth about the lack of an Iraqi program of developing nuclear weapons and the lack of a connection between the Iraqi Government and 9/11; a belief that military action would not only be easy to take, but would bring about the rapid development of a democracy in Iraq; inadequate equipment to safeguard our troops from the dire consequences of guerrilla and radical insurgent attacks; and a vast and deep distrust of our Nation among peoples of the Middle East, Europe and elsewhere.

The situation in Iraq is not getting better. It’s getting worse. As of today, 2,500 American soldiers have been killed in Iraq. Nearly 18,000 of our soldiers have been wounded. Tens of thousands of Iraqis have died. Iraq is teetering on the brink of a full-fledged civil war. Sectarian killings have risen rapidly.

This resolution represents a seal of approval of the Bush administration’s approach to Iraq. I oppose it. It is essential that we change the course, not simply stay the course, and adopt new strategies that heighten, not bring about that change and accelerate the reduction of American military involvement in Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I pride myself on being unapologetically supportive of a robust military. I do believe that President Wilson was correct when he said the United States can help make the world safe for democracy. I believe that we must stand decisively against totalitarianism in whatever form it takes—and today, it takes the form of a twisted interpretation of Islam that is extremist, dangerous, and murderous. And nothing is more important to me, as a member of the House Armed Services Committee, than supporting and honoring our troops.

Sadly, rather than giving the administration credit for their efforts to rebuild the intelligence community and “connect the dots,” the outrage of some in this Congress has been directed not at those who leaked information about the program, but at the NSA and the White House. Unbelievably, four of our colleagues in the other body even introduced a resolution to censure the President over this program—a program that, had it been in place before 9/11, could have led the NSA to locate and identify two of the 9/11 hijackers who settled in San Diego in 2000.

It’s simply irresponsible to claim that this program is outside the administration’s authority, since leaders of both parties have had every opportunity to express misgivings over the last 4½ years. Frankly, it smacks of political grandstanding that criticisms were raised only after the program’s existence was leaked to the New York Times.

Some have tried to minimize the significance of this leak, saying that terrorists obviously know that we’re spying on them. But the truth is that terrorist cells need to communicate, and the methods of communication that they know to work—and stop using methods that have been compromised. You can guarantee they’ll move on to other modes of communication, now that details of the terrorist surveillance program have been publicized.

It also defies logic to suggest that the privacy of communications with known terrorists is constitutionally protected. Just like in every military conflict our Nation has fought, the interception of enemy communications has been a fundamental part of the war on terror. The day after Pearl Harbor, President Franklin Roosevelt authorized the interception of all communications into and out of the United States. That act was necessary and lawful—and it is a more focused interception of al Qaeda communications, given the nature of the enemy and the threat we face.

Future al Qaeda attacks on our homeland are likely to be conducted by operatives who are already here. Identifying and tracking them is a sizable challenge, and it’s preposterous to suggest that our intelligence professionals will fail to do their job. Just as the privacy of ordinary American citizens in doing this work. They don’t want useless information that takes them off the trail of criminals and terrorists; they have neither the time nor the resources to waste. They’re constantly working against both the enemy and terrorist sympathizers who are preparing to attack when and where they can.

As a special agent of the FBI, I conducted wiretaps. They’re wrapped in layers of legal protections and never done without probable cause. The NSA’s actions simply give intelligence services the same wiretap authorities that have been available to those fighting organized crime and drug lords. Americans not in contact with al Qaeda can be assured that their rights have not been violated. Even as we armed and brought terrorist groups are plotting to kill Americans. If the NSA tracks a call from a known terrorist in Afghanistan to a phone number somewhere in the U.S., it’s in our best interest to know who’s on the other end of that call and what they’re talking about.

This is no time to let our guard down or publicize details of our clandestine intelligence work. The fact that we have not had a major terrorist attack in this Nation since 9/11 is no accident. The focused efforts of our intelligence officials have helped detect and prevent attacks, and we as a nation are safer as a result. They deserve our gratitude, as do all of our service men and women serving on our behalf on all fronts in the global war on terror.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, the rationale for the Bush administration’s going to war in Iraq has been one of shifting sands.

The first reason given for the action in Iraq was that it was necessary because Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction, which turned out to be wrong. Then the rationale was the threat of nuclear weapons from Iraq’s alleged purchase of uranium from Africa, which also was not true and was seriously questioned within the Bush administration before the military action.

It is a sign of this Republican leadership that they would introduce a resolution on an issue as critical as the war in Iraq; then refuse to include in that resolution a single idea, a single solution, a single policy that would actually win the war in Iraq; then refuse to allow sufficient debate and consideration of alternative resolutions that would demonstrate our national resolve as well as our constructive ideas on how to prevail. Who can be against the resolution’s operative statement: “Declaring that the United States of America is committed to its own national security and the well-being of the Iraqi people, the war on terrorism, the war in Iraq, and the well-being of our troops. I passionately agree with the resolution’s language because it would have offered to hold bipartisan consultations to find language that would unite Congress and the American people. Instead, they put partisanship ahead of bipartisanship on an issue that demands cooperation from both sides of the aisle: the war on terror, the war in Iraq, the well-being of our troops, the honor of their sacrifices. Mr. Speaker, let me make two final points. First, the importance of honoring our troops. I passionately agree with the resolution’s call for honoring our troops. In fact, while the House debated this resolution on the floor yesterday, I secured a public commitment from the Army at an Armed Services Committee hearing that they would end the short ages of life-saving coagulant products that help our soldiers from bleeding to death. Every day for the past 2 weeks I have been working on this issue. It is proper that we pass a non-binding resolution on our troops. But I have secured a commitment from the Army to bind their wounds. So I will not take second place to anyone in this body on the issue of supporting and honoring our troops. And I am insulted that some of the very same people who rail against not degrading the morale of our troops will use the vote on this resolution to degrade the morale of our troops.

Second, Mr. Speaker, instead of passing non-binding resolutions that are political documents, let us pass a binding policy to win the war in Iraq. The resolution we should be voting on today would require the President to certify to Congress that number of Iraqi forces that have reached combat proficiency, and deploy an equivalent number of U.S. forces. It would commit some of those forces to containing the growing resurgence of the Taliban in Afghanistan and finding, once and for all, the murderer who escaped our grasp and started the real war on terror—Osama Bin Laden. It would commit ourselves to properly funding our troops so that no American citizen has to dig into their pocketbooks and mail life-saving coagulants to our troops because they were not properly equipped.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if those who wrote this resolution spent more time unifying us around these principles and less time dividing us on the rhetoric we might be able to ensure that by now, and relentlessly finding, capturing and killing those who masterminded the attacks on our country in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY). Pursuant to House Resolution 98, the resolution is considered read and the previous question is ordered on the resolution and on the preamble.

The question is on the resolution. The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that theyeas appeared to have it.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, on that demand the yeas and nays.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). Members are advised that 2 minutes remain in this vote.

Mr. OBERSTAR and Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated against:
Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 16, 2006, had I been present, I would have voted "nay" on H. Res. 861, the resolution on the War in Iraq.

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, had I been present for rollcall vote 288, for H. Res. 861, I would have voted "nay" on this non-binding and toothless sham of a resolution, that was not a meaningful legislative document.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, on June 15, 2006, I was unable to be present for rollcall vote 287 due to a family emergency.

On rollcall vote No. 287, if present, I would have voted "aye."

On June 16, 2006, I was unable to be present for rollcall vote 288 due to the same family emergency.

On rollcall vote No. 288, if present, I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I was regrettably unable to be on the House Floor for rollcall vote 288, final passage of H. Res. 861: Declaring that the United States will pre-vail in the Global War on Terror, the struggle to protect freedom from the terrorist adversary. Had I been able to be here I would have voted "aye" on rollcall vote 288.

We are in a world war against terrorism, a world war, and Iraq is a major battlefield of that war right now. The reason we are not being attacked in large part here in the United States, in my opinion, is because our your men and women in uniform serving in Iraq are making sacrifices over there, in the middle of the storm, where terrorism has its genesis, where Iran and Syria and other countries are supporting terrorism. The terrorists and their state-sponsors do not want democracy to flourish over there, because they know their days will be numbered if democracy succeeds. The killing of Al Qaeda leader Abu Musab al-Zarqawi shows that our young men and women fighting over there are making the terrorist days numbered, in my opinion.

I would like to just make one quote from Sir Winston Churchill, when I think about my colleagues on the other side of the aisle and they start talking about how we have to get out of there right now. Sir Winston Churchill, who was one of the greatest leaders of the 20th century, said in a speech that he made entitled "We Shall Fight on the Beaches," which is very famous, he says: "Wars are not won by evacuations." You do not win by retreating.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 4157

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be withdrawn as a cosponsor of H.R. 4157, the Health Information Technology Promotion Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the removal of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purposes of inquiring of the majority leader the calendar.

I yield to my friend Mr. BOEHNER, the majority leader.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the whip for yielding.

Next week we will convene on Monday at 12:30 for morning hour and 2 o'clock for legislative business. We will consider several measures under suspension of the rules. A list of those will be sent out by the end of today. Any votes scheduled on these will be rolled until 5 p.m. on Monday. I want to repeat that: 5 p.m. we will vote on Monday.

For the balance of the week, the House will consider on Tuesday, the Department of Defense appropriation bill; Wednesday, the King of Prussia Rights Act, the reauthorization and several amendments; and on Thursday, we will do the legislative line item veto.

I will remind Members there are no votes next Friday.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the leader for his information.

The leader and I had a brief conversation, as you recall, with reference to the time when we would vote on Monday. I know that you have considered that, but I would again reiterate, as you know, one of the problems is in order for a Member on the west coast to get here, they need at least until 5:30 to be assured of being available for a vote. I know you must have considered this.

Mr. BOEHNER. If the gentleman would yield.

Mr. HOYER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. We have discussed it. It is somewhat subjective, but I think what I would say to my colleagues is let me keep working with you to see if we can’t come to some agreement. I think 6 o’clock would be too late but 5:30 may work. We will continue to work with you on that.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman. I look forward to working with him on this to accommodate those Members on the west coast in particular.

There is a change in the announced schedule with regard to first votes, as we have been advised and I appreciate your responding to that.

With respect to the Labor-Health-Education appropriations bill, which was reported out of committee this week, would be on the floor this coming week. As you know, that included within it a bipartisan-approved increase in the minimum wage, by $2.10, to $7.25 over the next 30 months. I notice that that bill is not on the schedule for next week. Can you tell me the status of the Health and Human Services appropriations bill?

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. We are continuing to work with the appropriators, trying to resolve some issues in order to find a way to bring it to the floor, but we do not expect to consider it next week.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for that information.

If I might follow it up, we would very much hope that the amendment that was adopted, and we believe is supported by over 80 percent of the American public, would be protected under the rule. We obviously understand that this legislation on an appropriation bill and would require a waiver, as many have been given in the past. I would respectfully request that you look at that and, in light of the fact the bipartisan support in the committee is serious not to give us hope to give a waiver so that that matter may be considered on the floor with a vote by the membership.

If you have any comment, I would be glad to yield.

Mr. BOEHNER. I understand your interest.

Mr. HOYER. It will be continuing. I thank you.

We understood next week was supposed to be health care week. Yet no health care legislation is listed. For example, the Health IT or the bill authored by Mr. SHADEGG are not on your announcement. When do you anticipate we may see either of these pieces of legislation on the floor?

Mr. BOEHNER. We were hoping to do that Health IT bill next week. We have got some scoring issues and some what we believe are problems with CBO that we are trying to iron out. So I would expect hopefully those will be ironed out next week and possibly bring that bill up for the following week.

Mr. HOYER. Thank you.

The last question I would ask you, Mr. Leader, you and I have had a discussion. You have been in the leadership for the consideration of the pension reform legislation. Obviously, we all know it is critical to employees, critical to companies. It has been now pending in conference for many, many months. I am wondering whether or not you might give us some thought as to its status and its prospects.

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. As the gentleman knows, I do several media events every week where members of the press routinely ask me every Tuesday and every Thursday the same question, and as you know, this is a very difficult issue. Protecting Americans’ pensions and the commitments that have been made to them by their employers is very important, and trying to strengthen the funding rules over these plans is critically important.

I can tell you that there are some issues that we are hung up on. We have had a lot of conversations. We are continuing to have conversations. I am a little more optimistic today than I was yesterday, but we are not there yet. There are Democrat Members who have been involved in at least informal conversations on both sides of the Capitol with other Members of Congress as well, but no timeline yet.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for those comments.

As you recall when we discussed this matter, it is still my understanding that the Democratic conferences have yet to be really engaged in the conference proceedings. You and I had a discussion on that, and I would hope that that might happen.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield.

Mr. HOYER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. Most of the Republican conferences have yet to sit down at the table as well. The principals have been involved and the leadership on both sides have been involved, and as I said, there have been a lot of informal conversations with Democrat Members on both sides of the Capitol.

Mr. HOYER. Reclaiming my time, you indicate that the leadership on both sides of the aisle have been involved.

Mr. BOEHNER. I said Democrat Members have been involved on both sides of the Capitol.

Mr. HOYER. I mean the leadership of the committees is what I was talking about.

Mr. BOEHNER. The leadership on the Senate side and the House side have been engaged in this as well.

Mr. HOYER. I appreciate the comments and would hope that is the case, and we will talk to our leaders on that so that we can both, working together, move this bill forward.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McHENRY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JUNE 19, 2006 AND HOUR OF MEETING ON TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 2006

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning hour debate; and further, when the House adjourns on that day, it adjourn to meet at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, June 20, 2006, for morning hour debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

REMOVING MEMBER FROM COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Democratic Caucus, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 872) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. Res. 872

Resolved, That Mr. Jefferson is hereby removed from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

REAPPOINTMENT AS MEMBER TO ELECTION ASSISTANCE COMMISSION BOARD OF ADVISORS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to section 214(a) of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (42 U.S.C. 15344), and the order of the House of December 18, 2005, the Chair announces the Speaker’s reappointment of the following member on the part of the House to the Election Assistance Commission Board of Advisors for a term of 2 years.

Mr. Thomas A. Fuentes, Lake Forest, California.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 4, 2005, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Emanuel) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. Emanuel addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

IRAQ

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, it has been almost 39 months since our troops were sent to Iraq; and today, more than 37 months after the President declared their mission accomplished, they are still there, still fighting a guerrilla war for which they weren’t properly trained or equipped, still paying for the tragic blunders of their civilian superiors, and still risking life and limb because of a security threat that never even existed.

If American troops are still in Iraq at year’s end, and, unfortunately, it appears they might be, we will have been in Iraq longer than those soldiers’ mothers fought in World War II. The difference is that that was a much different war, with a clearer objective, a national consensus, a moral core, and a just cause.

Not only has Iraq not made us safer; it has actually harmed our national security, making the United States an international pariah, provoking the range of anti-American jihadists around the Muslim world, and stoking the fires of an insurgency that gets stronger every day, every day that we are in Iraq.

And that doesn’t even take into account the staggering human cost, the 2,508th American soldier killed just yesterday, more than 1,000 soldiers gravely wounded, thousands of others mentally and physically traumatized by their combat experience, not to mention the countless tens of thousands of Iraqi civilians who died for the cause of their own so-called liberation.

Mr. Speaker, the sham resolution that the Republicans in Congress brought to the floor yesterday and that we voted on just a few minutes ago is yet another partisan divisive attempt to stay the course and to link support for this war to support for our troops.

We could have debated particulars of a military disengagement. We could have had a substantive discussion that resulted in an actual change in the Nation’s Iraq policy. Instead, we did nothing more than a little Kabuki dance that at the end of the day won’t change a single thing except to prove that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are willing to distort the facts and use the war and our troops for politics.

There is nothing inconsistent about having the deepest contempt for the war, but the utmost admiration for the soldiers on the front lines. Last fall, I traveled to Iraq and visited with our troops. My conversations with them only confirmed what I already knew, that these are uniquely loyal, intelligent, and courageous Americans. They represent the very finest our country has to offer, and they deserve our unyielding gratitude every hour of every day.

If only they had civilian leaders who were worthy of their service and their sacrifice. If only the people who are running this war had half the honor, half the integrity of the men and women who are fighting it. It is because I support the troops that I have advocated so passionately for their return home. And we can do that, and we can do it without abandoning Iraq.

We must establish a multilateral security force to keep the peace in Iraq.
while shifting the U.S. role from military occupier to reconstruction partner. This is what the American people want, Mr. Speaker. They want to help Iraq rebuild and become a free democratic society, but they want it done without “a drop of American bloodshed. They want their sons and daughters, they want their mothers and fathers, their brothers and sisters, their friends and neighbors back home where they belong.

What we need now is action from Washington, not platitudes and photo opportunities, not inconsequential resolutions that require lawmakers to risk absolutely nothing. The American people are looking to Washington. They are begging for leadership. It is time this Congress and the President of the United States provided some.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Jones) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. Jones of North Carolina addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

WAR ON TERROR

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, international terrorism is an issue of life and death, not just for each of us individually but for our Nation and our way of life.

We did not want this fight. We didn’t invite it. We didn’t wish to engage in this battle. However, once our enemy crossed over the line and confirmed for us and the world that they were unwilling to respect international law, respect individual liberty, and respect the sovereignty of nations, and that they were willing and desirous of engaging in mortal battle, no other option was left to us or to the civilized world.

Abu Musab al Zarqawi, on January 23, 2005, said this: “We have declared a fierce war on this evil principle of democracy and those who follow this wrong ideology.” So this discussion over the past few days comes down to a fundamental question: What is the appropriate strategy and tactic to adopt to win the war on terror? Will we withdraw and simply defend a policy of isolation and containment, or will we aggressively combat terrorism and take the battle to our enemy?

Now, this war is unlike any other in history. Our enemy has no single home. It resists its army’s advance, and those nations around the world. The only unifying element is hate, hate for democracy and hate for liberty. Thankfully, we have stayed the course. Thankfully, we have persevered in both Iraq and Afghanistan, because the greatest threat to terrorism is freedom and liberty and democracy in the Middle East and beyond.

And great progress is being made. Last week, the U.S. and Iraqi forces eliminated al Qaeda’s top terrorist, Zarqawi. This was accomplished with excellent intelligence, and that information came from Iraqi citizens themselves. A very positive sign. And while Zarqawi is eliminated, finding him brought a wealth of information, allowing U.S. and Iraqi forces to dismantle many more pieces of al Qaeda’s puzzle. And Iraq just this past week selected three more officials, cabinet ministers, to serve in its standing government. These are very positive accomplishments.

But it is also important for us to remember what led up to this war, and just a short look at a couple of the incidents over the last 30 years will bring it into focus and vividly demonstrate the death, destruction, and terror brought to Americans by our enemy.

The Iran hostage crisis in 1979, where our hostages were held for 444 days; 1983 suicide attacks in Beirut, Lebanon, killing 424 Americans; 1985, the Achille Lauro hijacking, where an invalid American was murdered in his wheelchair; 1986, Pan Am 103 bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing 219 people on board; February 26, 1993, the first World Trade Center bombing; 1996, Khobar Towers bombing, U.S. Air Force barracks in Saudi Arabia, killing 19 U.S. military personnel; 1998, U.S. Embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania, killing over 300; The year 2000, the USS Cole bombing, killing 17 U.S. sailors; And then, September 11th. Now, treat these incidents as crimes and not as acts of war, providing reactionary measures rather than moving proactively will not work. And how do we know? Because that is precisely what we did for decades, and the consequence was 9/11.

The campaign against the United States and its allies is ambitious, simple, and clear. Terrorists will stop at nothing to achieve their distorted sense of reality. We could have stayed out of this conflict. However, giving terrorists free rein would not make us any safer, and history has proven that. The price would be more innocent lives lost, more bombings, and not an ounce of peace. We must not be held hostage by terrorism. That is not living in liberty and freedom.

There are defining moments for every generation. And for this generation that defining moment is how we engage in this war on terror, highlighted by a very different post-9/11 world. When we were attacking moments, to that tragic day, we, as a Nation, with our allies around the world, decided we would not allow terrorists to win.

Mr. Speaker, freedom isn’t free. The choice is clear, our resolve is clear: we must and we will prevail.

REPORT ON H.R. 5631, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2007

Mr. YOUNG of Florida, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 109-504) on the bill (H.R. 5631) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2007, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 1, rule XXI, all points of order are reserved on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DeFazio) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. DeFazio addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

IRAQ

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to claim the time of the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I call upon the President of the United States to present a plan to Congress to start bringing our troops home from Iraq.

It has been almost 4 years since the President came to Congress and sought the use of force in Iraq. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I voted against giving the President the use of force. It was not a popular vote in my congressional district, but it was the right vote. I was proud of my vote 4 years ago, and I am proud of my vote today.

I have remained an outspoken critic of the President’s policies in Iraq. There was no connection between Iraq and the attack on our country on September 11. There was no evidence of any weapons of mass destruction or nuclear weapons, and other weapons information was distorted. There was no direct threat against the United States.

We have paid a heavy price for the war in Iraq. Over 2,400 soldiers have died, 18,000 have been injured, and we have spent $300 billion-plus of taxpayer money.

Our international standing has suffered. In December 2004, I visited the troops in Iraq. I wanted to see firsthand what was happening in Baghdad. My experiences I will not soon forget. I thanked our soldiers for their service to our country. They deserve to come home to their families and a grateful Nation.
A lot has changed in Iraq. It has been 3 years since the Saddam Hussein regime fell. It has been 2 years since an interim government was formed and the sovereignty of Iraq was transferred to that interim government. It has been 15 months since the first elections in Iraq's new constitution. They have elected a permanent government.

In December of 2005 we went on record in the defense authorization bill that 2006 should be a year of transition in which the Iraqi security forces take control of their own security. That has not happened.

It is time to change the policies in Iraq, and yet the President still says let's stay the course. We need a new direction in Iraq. That direction should include the drawdown of American troops. We have 130,000 soldiers serving in Iraq. 20 percent are from our National Guard and Reservists. Military experts have recommended a drawdown of 10,000 a month.

Although we should not announce a specific time schedule, it is reasonable to expect that one-half of our combat troops could be home by the end of 2006, and all of our combat troops home by the end of 2007. It should start with our National Guard. They were never intended to be the primary coverage for a military operation. We need them home to meet local needs.

This would allow us to achieve certain necessary objectives, bringing our troops home to their families and not in the middle of a civil war. It is an important message to the Iraqi government that they cannot assume that American soldiers will be there indefinitely to take care of their own security needs. It would remove propaganda for al Qaeda in which they look at the United States as being an occupation force, and it allows us to stage outside of Iraq to work with our allies and internationally to fight the war against international terrorism. We have lost our focus in the war against terror. It would help preserve a volunteer military.

We also need to organize an international conference, including the Iraqi government and our friends internationally. The United States is the only superpower. We need to mend our diplomatic fences. We need to engage the international community. It is in their interest to help us in Iraq, to support the Iraqi government and its militia, train the security forces, and coordinate humanitarian aid and infrastructure assistance.

We need to honor our commitment to our military veteran families and strengthen troop recruitment. The voluntary military is in danger because of excessive deployments. Morale is down because of long tours of duty and our failure to live up to our commitments on veterans' benefits.

The desirable goal in 2005 was 6,000, and our National Guard and Reservists have only hit 80 percent of their goal. The answer is the proper deployment of our military and honoring our veterans, commitments on benefits, including health benefits, so that the 18,000 who are returning injured from Iraq and the 50,000 who we anticipate will have battle fatigue related issues are dealt with as we have promised.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the President to change course in Iraq in order to further U.S. interests.

FISCAL RESTRAINT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. McHENRY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McHENRY. Mr. Speaker, there is an ongoing joke here in Washington that the Democrats have no agenda. It is a joke, Mr. Speaker, and it would be very funny if it were not so true. There are ongoing press reports, just this week there is a press report that the Democrats planned to roll out their agenda this week. Well, it is funny because they decided not to. Well, it is also funny because this is a press report that got back since November of last year. They kept these press reports that say we are going to roll out our agenda next week. The next week comes and goes, and no Democrat agenda.

It is an amazing thing that such a formerly great party with such high ideals and strong agenda can’t even get together an election-year agenda. It is an amazing thing to me as a conservative who has an agenda, who is a member of a party who has an agenda. It is a wonderful thing that the party leadership won’t come together. The party leadership won’t come together and issue an agenda.

Now I know there are some on the other side of the aisle that have high ideals and have an agenda, but the Democratic leadership in Washington won’t come together and issue an agenda. I am hopeful they will because I think what their agenda will show, when they do issue their agenda, it will show two things: Waving the white flag on the war against Islamic extremists and raising taxes. It is a two-part agenda, and I am going to boil it down to those two things.

They are going to wave the white flag and say this war is not worth fighting, let’s bring all of our service men home. Let’s just work with terrorist attacks on our home soil rather than taking the fight to the enemy wherever they are.

The second part of that is big government. How do you have big government, Mr. Speaker? You have big government by having big taxes, by taking more out of the economy and bring it here to Washington, D.C., by taxing people more. Unlike they are in this Neighborhood, Mr. Speaker, by taxing them more, and bringing that money here to Washington and running programs out of Washington.

Big government liberalism is still at the heart of the Democratic Party, and that is something that is very out of step with what the American people want.

Let’s talk about what the Republicans have done and what our conservative leadership here in Washington has done. Just in the last 33 months, we have had wonderful job growth across this Nation. Within the last 3 years, we have had 5.3 million new jobs. Why? Because we have restrained spending in Washington. Well, not as much as I would like as a conservative, but we have been able to restrain spending here in Washington, and excessive growth of government. And we have been able to pass tax cuts that let Americans keep more of what they earn.

Those two things have led to this wonderful job creation, and that is why this House continued to pass tax cuts every year since we elected the majority as Republicans. Every year we have passed tax cuts since 1995. And those results that we have shown the American people have led to the economy expanding.

Moreover, when the economy expands and people have jobs through these lower taxes, through conservative fiscal policy, you know what happens? As they make more money, they pay more taxes. The Federal Government gets more revenue when people are working, Mr. Speaker.

These things work, and the American people know it and they are benefiting from the prosperity that through conservative fiscal policy, we have helped lead the Nation in this right direction.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is a very severe contrast between the two ideologies that underpin the Democratic Party and the Republican Party. They are two disparate views of the world and how we defend our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, we should have this great debate, not just on the war, which we have had for the last 10 hours on the House floor, but also have a debate about fiscal policy.

As a conservative, I don’t believe we have done enough in terms of fiscal policy, but we are making progress and that progress is getting real results. That is a wonderful agenda for a conservative party to stand for. Now we look forward to our opposition on the other side of the aisle to one day to come up with an agenda.

REDEPLOY OUR TROOPS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, we were promised another chance to debate our policies with respect to the war in Iraq. Yesterday and today we had that debate. But those who listened to that debate need to understand that it was mere theater.

We had before us today a resolution that could only be voted up or down, yea or nay. If I wished to offer an amendment giving voice to my desire and that of the majority of my constituents to redeploy our troops from Iraq, I could not. You heard me correctly, the rules of this debate that we had agreed to today precluded me from taking any substantive action.

I believe that one of the fundamental functions of the Congress is to act as a check and a balance to the executive branch. Yet here we are in the people’s House, the people’s House, unable to do the people’s will.

Mr. Speaker, America is the lone superpower in an increasingly interconnected and interdependent world. Alone with its awesome and unprecedented power comes responsibilities to humankind and the planet itself.

America’s reasons for maintaining her superpower status must be to export the best of our democratic system of governance and the hope of the American dream to the rest of the world. But these cherished ideals cannot be exported through force. We must teach and lead by example. Leading by example means modeling the behaviors we teach and lead by example. Leading by example means teaching our troops to respect civil rights and liberties. We must respect the rule of law. We must not export through force. We must model the behaviors we teach and lead by example. Leading by example means teaching our troops to respect human rights.

Mr. Speaker, we must renounce the preemption doctrine. President Kennedy had this to say about the use of military force: “The United States, as the world knows, will never start a war. We do not want war. We shall be prepared if others wish it. We shall be alert and try to stop it, but we shall never march into that part of the world of peace where the weak are safe and the strong are just.”

Mr. Speaker, I voted against authorizing use of force in Iraq. I believed then, as I do today, that Iraq posed no threat to America’s security. I believe with the 9/11 Commission members that there was no credible link between Iraq and the 9/11 terrorists. I feared that war in Iraq would divert our attention from anti-terrorism efforts and serve to make us less safe and secure.

I called upon the President to tell Congress and the American people what circumstances would be required in order to bring our troops from Iraq. I demanded an articulable plan with benchmarks and an exit strategy was sent to the President before the war even started, and to this day that letter remains unanswered.

Mr. Speaker, since that time I have participated in fearful troop sendoffs and joyous homecomings. I have nothing but respect for our brave soldiers. During the past 4 years, I have embraced and stood and prayed with Wisconsin families as they said their last good-byes to brave sons, fathers and brothers.

As of yesterday over 2,500 young men and women of our military have given their lives in Iraq. During the past 4 years, I have also heard from parents who clearly see that it is their children and grandchildren who will pay the $320 billion that this war has cost to date.

Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Out of Iraq Caucus and a proud cosponsor of Mr. MURTHA’s resolution, H.J. Res. 73, to redeploy our troops. I only wish it was that resolution that we had debated over the past 2 days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McHENRY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.

THE WAR IN IRAQ

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent to speak out of order and assume the time of Mr. BURTON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I requested this Special Order to read a statement that I earlier placed in the RECORD during the debate on the Iraq war resolution.

I did not request time during the debate because it was obvious that the chairmen controlling the time, all good friends of mine, wanted only speakers who support the war, and I did not want to place them in an uncomfortable position.

I did not request time from the Democrats because many of my colleagues in the minority were using this debate in a bitterly partisan way. Surely, war should be the last thing that should become partisan.

Yet 80 percent of the House Republicans, including me, voted against the bombings in Bosnia and Kosovo when President Clinton was in the White House. I believe 80 percent of Republicans would have opposed the war in Iraq if it had been started by President Clinton or Gore, and probably almost all the Democrats would have then been supporting it, as they did the bombings in Bosnia and Kosovo.

Much of the resolution that was just passed by this House contains language that everyone supports, especially the praise for our troops. Our troops do a great job everywhere they are sent. And it is certainly no criticism of them to criticize this war.

In August of 2002, 2 months before Congress voted for the war in Iraq, Dick Arney, then our Republican majority leader, said, “I don’t believe America will justifiably make an unprovoked attack on another nation. It would not be consistent with what we have been as a Nation.”

Jack Kemp wrote before the war, “What is the evidence that should cause us to fear Iraq more than Pakistan or Iran? Do we reserve the right to launch a preemptive strike exclusively for ourselves, or might other nations such as India, Pakistan or China be justified in taking similar action on the basis of fears of other nations?”

Mr. Kemp said, based on the evidence he has seen, there was not ‘a compelling case for the invasion and occupation of Iraq.’

William F. Buckley wrote that if he had known in 2002 what he knew then in 2004, he would have been against the war. Last year he wrote another column against the war, saying, “A point is reached when tenacity conveys not steadfastness of purpose, but misapplication of pride.”

The very popular conservative columnist, Charley Reese, wrote that this war was “against a country that was not attacking us, did not have the means to attack us, and had never expressed any intention of attacking us. And for whatever real reason we attacked Iraq, it was not to save America from any danger, imminent or otherwise.”

Many years ago, Senator Robert Taft expressed a traditional conservative position: “No foreign policy can be justificable except one that is consistent with what we have been as a Nation.”

Millions of conservatives across this Nation believe this war was unconstitutional, unaffordable and worst of all, unnecessary. It was waged against an evil man, but one who had a total military budget only two-tenths of 1 percent of ours.

We are not going to be able to pay all our military pensions, civil service pensions, Social Security, Medicare and all the other things we have promised if we are going to turn the Department of Defense into the Department of Foreign Aid and attempt to be the policeman of the world.

This is contrary to every traditional conservative position on defense and on huge deficit spending. The conservative columnist Georgie Ann Geyer wrote, “Critics of the war against Iraq have said since the beginning of the conflict that Americans, still strangely complacent about overseas wars being waged by a minority in their name will inevitably come to a point where they will see they have to have a government that provides services at home, or one that renews empire across the globe.”

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I found out that a rating service called voteview.com which studies all of our votes from the last Congress, 472 votes I think it was, from last year, in this Congress, rated me as the sixth most conservative Member of this body. And yet I am steadfastly opposed to this war and I have been since the beginning.
Mr. Speaker, we need to start putting our own people first once again and bring our troops home, the sooner the better. And when somebody says we can’t cut and run, I surely hope they don’t mean that we should stay there forever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Pallone) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. Pallone addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

THE WAR IN IRAQ

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask to address the House out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Poe) is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I follow the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee. I thank him for his honesty, and I thank him for being an honest American. And I hope that we will have had every voice to have been able to be heard on this question. This is not a Democratic or Republican issue about the forces in Iraq, the freedom of this Nation, the right to defend our Nation, the right to tell the American people the truth that Saddam Hussein had nothing to do with the tragedy, the horrific, heinous act of 9/11.

If you looked at the 19 terrorists, you might think that we need to be engaged in war with Saudi Arabia. But we are not. That is why this debate had such insignificance because all of us believe in our troops. More importantly, we believe in the families and the wounded that have come home.

But I stand here today, Mr. Speaker, and I want to talk about the war in Iraq. We need to begin bringing our troops home, the sooner the better. And when somebody says we can’t cut and run, I surely hope they don’t mean that we should stay there forever.

I am reminded of the somber presentation that Secretary Powell made before the United Nations; all the world was in awe. All the world watched and saw that what we were fighting in Iraq was not the war on terror, but the global war on terror, we have misdirected and misconstrued the truth.

I am reminded of the somber presentation that Secretary Powell made before the United Nations; all the world was in awe. All the world watched and saw that what we were fighting in Iraq was not the war on terror, but the global war on terror, we have misdirected and misconstrued the truth.

The war in Iraq has increased the burden on taxpayers. We are paying $300 million a day, a day, for this war. And yet we do not have monies for our enlisted personnel. Our soldiers’ families are on food stamps, and veterans health care has been cut when soldiers are coming with catastrophic injuries, brain injuries that they have yet not diagnosed of how long they will be impacted by what we call closed-brain injuries.

We asked the administration to tell the truth. We asked them to recognize the young soldiers that were kind enough to sign this scarf. Yes, they are true and the brave, and this is not a question of challenging the soldiers’ bravery and duty. This is a burden on the policymakers like Secretary Mccain, who indicated that he was wrong in the Vietnam War. But, oh, what a price we paid: 50,000 dead in Vietnam and broken hearts and broken families and yet some years later was willing to admit they were wrong.

Well, I voted against this resolution and I voted because I never want it to be said that any war to which we send our young soldiers into battle, the military into battle does not have the truth and the strength to withhold the understanding that America’s freedom is at risk.

I close, Mr. Speaker, by saying when I went to Iraq and visited many bases, one sailor took this off of his chest. It is a badge of honor I wear.

We are not cutting and running. We are holding up the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. We want our soldiers to be able to pursue happiness, and we want a sovereign Iraq to protect its own nation.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Poe) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. Poe. Mr. Speaker, news from the front: the war on the border continues. More disturbing news, this time from the forgotten front.

We have just voted to finish successfully the war on the first front, Iraq and Afghanistan. Our second front is the fight against armed illegals, human smugglers, drug runners and possible terrorists not just wanting to penetrate our homeland border with Mexico and Canada, but the forgotten front, Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, here I have a map of the Caribbean islands. Puerto Rico is a part of the United States, the location: in the Caribbean islands next to the Dominican Republic, southeast of Cuba, east of Jamaica. It has earned a reputation among our patrol agents as America’s biggest threat.

This is not a photo, the second one here, of Americans storming the beach at Iwo Jima or Normandy. Mr. Speaker, this is a photograph of 100 illegal immigrants with landing craft storming the American beach in the yola, a homemade wooden boat. The boat is from the Caribbean islands. Its cargo, Dominicans, Middle Easterners and others from the islands. The Border Patrol says when people storm the American beaches here in Puerto Rico, they capture maybe one out of 10. And here we have a Blackhawk helicopter, at this particular time, having to view this firsthand.

One U.S. Border Patrol agent says he interviews the survivors of these ill-fated trips, and they say they are coming to America for that free amnesty. Once they get to Puerto Rico, they can go anywhere in the United States with only a birth certificate or an easily forgeable photographic ID, if the one Border Patrol agent at the San Juan airport happens to ask for that identification.

We must remember that one of the 9/11 hijackers made his way into the United States through the Virgin Islands. Then he took flight lessons at San Juan, Puerto Rico. More than 2,600 illegals have been found entering the country just this way in Puerto Rico the past year. How many more weren’t caught at all? And just where are they going and what are they taking with them?

Most of them, we must remember, are not from south of the border or north of the border; but they come from all over the world. Since we don’t require passports to legally enter the United States from Mexico, Canada or the Caribbean islands, people can easily get to Puerto Rico pretending to be from these countries. Even people illegally getting into Puerto Rico then board a plane anywhere in the United States with some fake document that is mistaken for a valid American identification.

We have 22 border patrol agents in Puerto Rico, but only four of them are on duty at any one given time. They are doing the best they can, but they need help.

The border war must be won. We do it by first requiring all people in the Western World to have a passport to get into the United States legally. Our 9/11 Commission recommends it. It is a national security issue of the United States. And then we give the resources to our border agents to make sure they can keep people from landing on our beaches and invading our country. It is a border security issue. We must win the war on this second front and prevent the unlawful invasion into America. Keep these landing craft from invading our beaches.

Mr. Speaker, lawlessness on our border breeds more lawlessness in the heartland of America.

Mr. Speaker, that is today's news from the front. And that's just the way it is.

The WAR IN IRAQ

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. SCHIFF addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, over 3 years our Nation has invested in Iraq. In human and political costs it has been a heavy toll. We have lost thousands of American and Iraqi lives, spent billions of dollars, and squandered the greatest outpouring of international support in decades. And through it all, we have misplaced our focus on the threat of Islamic terrorism.

It is time for us to prepare to redeploy our forces from Iraq by the end of the year. Mr. MUSTHA is right: redeploy but be ready. Some successes have occurred.

Mr. STEPKAN is recognized for 5 minutes.

The recent killing of Islamic extremist al Zarqawi by coalition forces offers an opportunity to stem the steady tide of internal terrorist attacks in Iraq, while the welcome news that several important cabinet ministers have been appointed demonstrates that progress is being made. Nevertheless, these glimpses of optimism cannot mask the overwhelming recognition that this was a war of choice. The administration invaded Iraq without the necessary international support and without plans for stability, reconstruction, and governance.

Earlier this year I visited Iraq and saw firsthand the reality of our investment. While our troops bravely fight, there were few areas of security or safety. Sectarian violence and civil strife have eclipsed the progress of free elections. Unemployment remains unabated. Radical clerics promote hate, and anti-American sentiment has spread with fervor. At the same time the President is urging that we stay the course, we are approaching 2,500 American troops killed, and more and more we are learning the costs back home, families losing loved ones and soldiers physically and mentally scarred by war.

We have helped sow the seeds of democracy, but none of the people of Iraq must take charge and bring about their own destiny. We cannot force our way of life or our ideals upon another nation, nor should that ever be our mission. Rather, we must encourage them to bring about their own change and promise that as long as democracy and liberty is their desire, we will be their ally and be devoted to their success. To prolong this transition will only deepen their dependence on our resources, will further radicalize those who use our presence as an endorsement for hate, and will distract us away from where our focus must lie.

It was only a few years ago that this Congress, with bipartisanship and unity, supported the President in embarking against the terrorist threat by ousting the Taliban from Afghanistan. All of our allies and some of our enemies recognized the strength of our convictions in defeating those who promote radicalism and extremism, and we were joined by the largest coalition in history. But then we detoured and launched an ill-advised military operation in Iraq. The results have been damaging, and instead of achieving success globally, we have reached and sowed frustration and recalcitrance.

I believe we are seeing ever increasing signs that our resources in Iraq must now be shifted to finish the job in Afghanistan and work with our allies to defeat the terrorist threat around the world. Not because we have failed or succeeded but because the process of democracy is never ending. And it is time for the Iraqi people to stand up and lead the way toward their future. Through redeployment and reallocation, we can provide regional support to those areas most susceptible to terrorism. We can refocus our attention to eradicating the leaders of hate who use global networks to promote radicalism. And we can strengthen our ability to develop multilateral approaches, realizing that regional key alliances is the best way in which to bring about democracy and stability throughout the world.

There are some who will argue that patriotism and criticism are mutually exclusive. This is utterly false. Our strength of promoting democracy, liberty, and freedom must be coupled with the wisdom of recognizing our fallibility. The difference between those who believe we must stay the course in Iraq and those who believe we must change course lies not in degrees of patriotism but rather in truthful disagreement over policy. Confusing the two leads only to division and partisanship. We must put all costs to allow an issue of such importance to be clouded with such rhetoric.

Mr. Speaker, I was against our Nation going to war in Iraq, but at every step of the way I have supported our men and women in uniform in their mission. I have objected to the heavy-handed foreign policy of this administration but have desired to see hope and progress for the Iraqi people. And now I call for our troops in Iraq to be redeployed by the end of the year.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Thank you to my good friend from Florida, Mr. MEEK.

We are proud to wear the colors today, Mr. Speaker, and we have got the beads on. And because we could not be there with the Heat during their triumphant victory last night and the other night, we decided to stir up some spirit here and send some good karma home to them. And I can tell you that I have a little gastronomic wager with one of the good friends Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Dallas. I am looking forward to enjoying some lunch, courtesy of her and her staff after the Heat grabbed the championship. And hopefully, we will be able to be down there with them on Sunday and take home some of the spirit that we have been able to generate up here.

Thanks to your good leadership and firing up the Heat troops up here. I have worn these beads all over the place the last couple of days and yesterday, we have been down, and that is something that is a great series going on. And in honor of the Heat center. At Little River Middle School, they have actually put some computers in, and they have been there over the years, but they have made a new commitment to that center and they have named it after the late wife of the Heat owner. So we want to encourage the NBA to keep doing what they are doing.

I yield to Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ.

Also helping working families. It is not a question of if we will. It is we will raise the minimum wage. And that is what we are saying on this side of the aisle. There is no question about it. The minimum wage will be raised, and that is a promise. Cutting also and reversing many of the Republican major- ity increases on student tuition. This is a very important point and we are going to talk a little further about it before we will decide whether all that is reaffirmed now to reverse that, make sure that families have tax credits and make sure students don’t have to pay through the nose and come out of college in debt more than they are today.

Also ensuring that seniors and individu- als receive Social Security benefits, need it be survivor benefits or need it be the disabled or just simple retirement, not privatizing Social Security. The “security” part is to make sure that’s all right. There is some level of income for those individuals who have worked their entire lives. And requiring fiscal responsibility. This is the most important, if not the point, of the Democratic agenda of making sure if we say we are going to spend it, we had better show how we are going to pay for it. Not like we are doing now, spending and borrow- ing from foreign nations, making this country more indebted to foreign countries than at any other time in the history of the republic. And in our plan, it is important we have legislation that is going to talk a little further about it.

Mr. Speaker, I know you when you were in the Chamber this afternoon you talked about what you would like the American people to believe. And I know it sounds good to continue to say that the Democrats do not have an agenda. Well, sadly for you, Mr. Speaker and our Republican colleagues, that is not the point. And the priorities of the Democratic Caucus.

Mr. Speaker, I know you were in the House once again, the 30-something Working Group. I would like to thank the Demo- cratic leader, NANCY PELOSI, and also Mr. Speaker, who is our whip; Mr. JAMES CLYBURN, our chairman; and also Mr. LARSON, who is our vice chairman.

And I think that it is very appropriate at this particular time. Mr. Speaker, to talk about the great comeback by the Miami Heat in the series of the NBA finals. And I can say on behalf of Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ and those of us from the south Florida delegation and from the Florida delegation that we are very, very pleased of the outstanding play by the Heat. We want to continue to support them in every waypossible. We know that they will be victorious. We have been wrestling with our friends in the back in the Speaker’s lobby from Dallas and the other night, we decided to stir up around them now that is it even.

With that, Mr. Speaker, we would like to do it now. So we will do it. As it relates to the 30-something Working Group, talking about the issues that we have been meeting on, wanting to bring to the floor and share with the American people and also share with the Members of the House.

We talk about the agenda that was released, “A New Direction for America” by the Democratic Caucus, and not talk about what we may do when we take the majority if the American people fit for us to take the ma- jority, but what we will do, and I think it is important to say “will.” And I always say we have the will and desire to lead. We have the will and desire to pass legislation. We also have the will and desire. Mr. Speaker, to take the rubber stamp out of the Republican majority’s hands and put it in the garbage because that is not what this Con- gress should be all about. It should be oversight. It should be evaluation of policies that we would like to pass, not rubber stamp out of the Republican policy, need it be economic development. And in our plan, it is important to understand that we want to make health care more affordable for Ameri- cans, make sure that we have a fair share as it relates to prescription drugs on behalf of the American people, making sure that we can move into the area of investing in stem cell research for medical research for the sake of the people that we can do. Also work to- ward alternative fuels, making this country independent of the Middle East and invest in the Midwest as it relates to E-85, alternative fuels, making sure that we pass legislation to bring about flex vehicles.

So we will talk a little further about that and define this a little bit more as we go along.

I would like to yield to my colleague, Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, and we will focus more on these issues as we go through the points again.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Thank you, Mr. MEEK. It is a pleasure again to be here with you and spend some time talking about these priorities of the Democratic Caucus.

Mr. Speaker, I know you when you were the Chamber this afternoon you talked about what you would like the American people to believe. And I know it sounds good to continue to say that the Democrats do not have an agenda. Well, sadly for you, Mr. Speaker and our Republican colleagues, that is not the point. And the priorities of the American people we do have an agenda. We have had one for quite a long time. It is right here.
Many times it is easier to graphically depict things as opposed to just using words, and we can take you through, as Mr. MEEK just did, our agenda so that, Mr. Speaker, when you are finding yourself standing in front of a chair behind the podium on this floor, you will keep in mind that you would like to say that we don’t have an agenda because that is absolutely inaccurate.

The Democrats’ New Direction for America, as Mr. MEEK said, pledges that we will make health care more affordable. And many of our Republican colleagues have failed the American people and don’t work.

Under Republicans for the last 14 years, Mr. Speaker, you have college tuition that has increased 40 percent. You have gas prices that have increased 47 percent. You have health care costs that have increased 55 percent. And median household income, Mr. Speaker, has decreased by 4 percent. The direction that Republicans would like the country to continue to go, then, are right, the American voters in November should vote for the Republicans and continue more of the same. But if they want a new direction, if they want to make sure that we can have a leadership in this Congress and in this country that is committed to making sure that college and higher education is more affordable, not less, if they want to make sure that we can expand access to health care and that go uninsured and that have to wait till their family members are so sick that they have to take them to the emergency room before they can get them some health care treatment, then they should continue to vote for more of the same and elect Republicans. If they want to make sure that they can move this country in the direction that most Americans would like to go in, then they will change things and we will make a commitment to expanding alternative energy sources, expanding our commitment to making sure that we don’t have a continued addiction to foreign oil.

Mr. Speaker, I find personally that sometimes graphic depictions, sometimes three-dimensional demonstrations are really incredibly helpful. You see, if you see this is a gas pump. Apparently our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, many of them don’t appear to have seen one of these since they looked like this. The gas pumps from what I understand looked like this in the 1990s. It appears as though many of our Republican colleagues haven’t put gas in their own car since they looked like this, because if they had then they would realize that in most places in this country, gas is now more than $3 a gallon, that it costs a mom or a dad that drives their kids around in a minivan or in an SUV more than $50 to fill up their tank, and I feel quite certain that if our Republican colleagues were actually pumping their own gas, there are actually more than one of them on the floor and our colleagues could see what a gas pump looks like so that they could remember the pain that Americans go through when they have to spend that much on a gallon of gas. Then maybe we would have our colleagues on the other side of the aisle not continue to vote like the rubber stamps that my colleague Mr. MEEK always talks about. Maybe they would get some courage. Maybe they would realize that they shouldn’t be voting for an energy policy that actually gives money away to the oil industry, to an oil industry that has made record profits. Mr. MEEK, more money than any corporation in American history in the last quarter of last year. It is just unbelievable.

I am hopeful that by my three-dimensional depiction, by my bringing an actual model of a gas pump to the floor, Mr. Speaker, then maybe some of our colleagues will keep in mind the actual difficulty that most Americans are going through when they actually have to fill up their gas tank by using one of these. I just wanted to provide a public service to some of my colleagues.

I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Thank you so very much, Ms. Wasserman Schultz. I am glad that you brought a visual aid down because this is important. Mr. Speaker, that we break this down for the Members because we want to make sure that Members don’t go back home in November and giving political speeches saying that, oh, well, I didn’t know we were doing that. Or I didn’t know we were doing this. I didn’t know we were borrowing from foreign nations. We want to make sure that the Congressional Record reflects that those of us on this side of the aisle actually brought it to the floor in a form that a middle school or a fifth grader can understand. And it is important that we break it down to this point so that no one can say that they misunderstood, they didn’t quite know what they were doing. I want to make sure for the record that whatever the case may be because now, in this day, in this Congress, we are making history in all the wrong places and in all the wrong ways.

I think it is important that we point this out. I want to make sure that I get that Washington Post article that talked about a special meeting at the White House. The innovation agenda, I want to make sure that the Members go on housedemocrats.gov and get a copy of the innovation agenda so that hopefully folks can be enlightened on what we have been talking about and promoting, not just yesterday, not just last month, this has been around, and the only reason why it is not implemented is that the majority will not allow legislation to come to the floor outside of the original thoughts of President Bush or the Republican leaders.

I think it is important that we understand an innovation agenda. We talk about education and creating the workforce for the future, making sure that there is math and science education, that we work on that and we provide the necessary dollars for it.

Invest in research and also development that promotes public-private partnerships, where many CEOs you will see on housedemocrats.gov have already become a part of what we are talking about and encouraging that to happen.

Affordable, guaranteed broadband access throughout the country. Need it be if you are in the heartland of America, you are on the east coast, you are on the west coast, you are down south, you are up north, you are able to have an opportunity at this broadband initiative that we have for all Americans.

Achieving energy independence. We talked about that, within 10 years. Not maybe one day, not counting on the oil companies to do it but the Congress setting the stage, this House setting the stage for that to happen.

Providing small businesses with the tools that they need to be able to create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I am just going to take about 10 minutes here breaking this thing down, if not shorter, of talking about how we are making history in all the wrong ways. The Republican majority, I must say, has done an outstanding job on behalf of President Bush. You have got to hand it to them. If there was an Oscar, an Emmy or a Grammy to give out, the Republican majority would get it as it relates to rubber-stamping everything the administration hands down.

I hold here, Mr. Speaker, and this is no secret to many of the Members and it should not be a secret to the staff that works here in the House of Representatives, this chart, this chart of the fact that in just 4 years, President Bush and the Republican majority has borrowed $1.05 trillion from foreign nations. We have the Republican Congress right under the President’s picture because he couldn’t do it by himself.

Forty-two United States Presidents, 224 years, were only able to borrow $1.01 trillion from foreign nations. How could that be? One may say, how can you borrow 1.05 trillion dollars from foreign nations. In 224 years, 200 years shy of what the President has been able to do, $1.01 trillion.

Let me tell you, that is staggering. That is not something that it happened in the forties or it happened in the thirties once upon a time. Calculate it. Forty-two Presidents, 224 years. Mr. Speaker, we are not just here as the 30 Something Working Group and dreaming up something. Those numbers are from the Department of Treasury. Who do we owe? Who has their hands in the pockets of the American taxpayer? I don’t care if you are a Republican, independent, you don’t vote yet, or whatever the case may be, a Democrat, have to have a problem with these nations owning a piece of the American apple pie.

Japan. Like it or not, I know it is painful for some of the Members to hear this, but this is the reality under a Republican majority. Japan, $902 billion. China, the former of the American apple pie thanks to the Republican majority rubber-stamping the Bush policies.

China, $249.8 billion of the American apple pie that they own right now, not because of the American people lack of making the right fiscal decisions but it is because the Republican majority has allowed it to happen with the American taxpayer dollar.

The U.K., $223.2 billion. Canada, $115.3 billion. Taiwan, $71.3 billion. OPEC nations. Oh, my goodness, OPEC nations. We can’t do enough for them, but they are buying our debt, $97.8 billion. Germany, $65.7 billion. Korea, $66.5 billion. And Canada, $33.8 billion.

The reason why, Mr. Speaker, you see the American flag in silhouette as it relates to the United States of America, excluding Alaska and Hawaii and Puerto Rico and other U.S. territories, but just to show this silhouette of the mainland of the United States of America, the reason why we have that, if you want to do away with the debt, elect a Democratic majority because we have done it.

The Republican majority, they are saying, well, we’re going to cut it in half. It is almost like if there is a cliff, Mr. Speaker, and you are in a vehicle and you want to do away with the debt, it goes over the cliff. We are saying stop. You are saying go at half speed. You go at half speed, you are going over the cliff regardless. We have stopped the deficit from continuing to continue on when we balanced it, without one Republican vote. And so it is important if the American people, if they are looking at the resume, they will elect a Democratic majority to lead.

What are we doing right now, Mr. Speaker? I think it is important for us to outline this. We are saying pay-as-you-go. If you are going to spend a hundred dollars, you better talk about how you are going to pay for it. What they are doing right now, they are spending a hundred dollars and they are saying put it on a foreign credit card so we would owe foreign countries money and leave it for future generations and this generation, which is unfair to our young people. Before they even get a chance at life, they are already going to owe folks that they don’t even know because of the wrong decisions that have been made here in the Republican majority and they have not been rubber-stamping.

Substitute amendment to House Concurrent Resolution 95 in the 2006 budget resolution. Mr. SPRATT, who is our ranking member on the Budget Committee, put forth an amendment for pay-as-you-go. Not one Republican voted for it. To say that we are going to have fiscal discipline, not one Republican voted for it. 228 Republicans voted against it.

Again in 2005, a substitute amendment for pay-as-you-go. Not one Republican voted for it. Mr. Speaker. 224 Republicans voted against it.

I am coming in for a close. I just want to share this with you. I mentioned the issue about energy. Oh, well, the Republican answer, the Republican majority here in this House because I do know some Republicans who do feel that the Congress should not be rubber-stamping everything that the administration wants. And I just read my article real quick to bring this into focus. I thank my colleague for bearing with me.

November 16, 2005 front page of the Washington Post. White House documents show that executives from big oil companies met with Vice President Dick Cheney’s energy task force in 2001, something long expected by environmentalists but denied as recently as November 2005, last week by industry officials testifying before Congress. This document obtained this week by the Washington Post shows that officials from ExxonMobil, also Shell Oil Company, BP of America met in the White House complex with Cheney aides who were developing a national energy policy, parts of which became law, parts of which are still being debated.

I wanted to just read that to show you that when we talk about alternative fuel and we talk about flex vehicles, I don’t think the oil companies are with us on this.

This is actually a picture of an ExxonMobil pump where it shows regular, special, super. That is keeping us, like the President says, addicted to oil. And that is an interesting statement, too, by him.

E85 is an alternative fuel. ExxonMobil has said you cannot use your Mobil credit card to purchase this. I can take an E85 card when I go there to put gas in the tank. I can go in there and buy a bag of chips.

I am not a cigarette smoker, but somebody can go in and buy a carton of cigarettes with their Mobil card. Someone can go in there, probably end up in some States, buy a Lotto ticket with their Mobil card. But they can’t buy an alternative fuel that is made here in America by American farmers and should be supported by the American people.

They are trying to make it even harder. They are putting the block in front of them, because they want to keep this thing going. Now I am not a Member of the House with a conspiracy theory; but, Mr. Speaker, Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ talked about record profits.

Here are the facts. This is not fiction; this is fact. In 2001, a meeting took place in the White House. Then all of a sudden we started being handed down legislation, Republican majority by the Bush administration went up $34 billion in 2001. I think that was a meeting worth scheduling.

In 2003, oil profits went up $59 million, billion, goodness gracious. I am getting confused by saying a million, a billion dollars. In 2004, $84 billion in profits; and 2005, $113 billion.

What I can’t help, Mr. Speaker, is to say that it will be over $113 billion in oil profits in 2006 even before the year has ended, because when you have the Republican majority passing subsidies, and you don’t have to spend your own money for quote, unquote, innovation, you can have those kinds of profits and have the American people paying through the nose.

Last point on the relationship, just one more chart here. I could care less about the former CEO of ExxonMobil as a person. You know, I am not going after him as a person. I am just saying that the Republican majority has allowed this to happen. He has $396 million of a retirement package, and on top of the Republican majority’s tax policy, he gets a $2 million tax break.

You want to talk about the winners and losers in America, this is a perfect example; and this is allowed to happen here in this House and here in this democracy because the special interest has a special relationship. Here is the King and the President, talk about relationships.

We are on the side of the American people. It is just that simple. “Energy a Roadmap of America.” You can go to the Energy of America, go to the White House, you get a copy of it, and you will see whose side we are on. If you are a Republican, you got to have a problem.
with the way this House has rubber-stamped what the President has hand- ed down.

If you are an Independent, you have to have a problem with the K Street Project that was alive and well to allow their interests to get paid and you play as it relates to getting policy passed on to the House. If you are Independent and if you are a Demo- cratic, you have to have a problem that there is no input as it relates to bipar- tisan approach to policymaking.

Because with what we did have a bipartisan approach, I wouldn’t be able to stand here with a straight face, Mr. Speaker, and share with the Members and American people what has happened here in this House with the facts backed by third-party validators by the U.S. Department of Treasury and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I just want to make sure that we break out many casuals because some Members of this House seem to be a little confused about what is happen- ing and what is not happening.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. You are absolutely right. No apology neces- sary. It is really important that we have the floor, and that is why we appreciate Leader PELOSI giving us this opportunity to make some substantive arguments that actually demonstrate how we are going in the wrong direction and also to lay out the Democrats’ plan for taking us in a new one.

What has really boggled my mind since I arrived in the Congress, at the beginning of last year, is that our friends on the other side of the aisle should seem to have no qualms about just ceding their decisionmaking authority here to the executive branch. Why show up for work? Why run for Con- gress? This is not an easy job. This is a job that requires a lot of responsibility, it requires our thoughtful decisionmaking, it requires time away from our family and all of which, at least each of us on our side, and I know many of our Re- publican colleagues feel this way, that this is an awesome responsibility that we are given when we are elected to the United States Congress.

The Founding Fathers did not separate the United States Government into three branches in order for the Congress to just be a rubber stamp of the executive. They feared tyranny. They feared an executive that was too strong, and they wanted to make sure that there was a system of checks and balances, so that when questions that come from the executive come before the Congress, that we aren’t just a rubber stamp, that we aren’t here just to say, yes, Mr. President, absolutely, can I get your hat, can I hold your coat, Mr. President.

Our role here is to ask questions, to exercise oversight, to put forth initia- tives and to actually represent our con- stituents—like you said, in the people’s House. That is why I was very sur- prised, but pleasantly, to see the former leader of this Chamber under the Republican revolution, Mr. Ging- rich, the former House Speaker, when he cited in the Knight Ridder news- papers, third-party validator that we like to bring out on this House floor, so that that way people understand it is not just by the way, says DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ or TIM RYAN or BILL DELAHUNT. Mr. Gingrich cited a series of blunders under the Re- publican rule from failures in the after- math of Hurricane Katrina to the mis- management of the war in Iraq. He said that the government has squandered bil- lions of dollars in Iraq.

You know, just had 10 hours of de- bate yesterday, which if you listen to our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, according to them, what President Bush is doing, everything is won- derful. Everything is coming up roses.

Now, I think we could all acknowled- ge in this entire Chamber that we are, although I certainly am never pessimistic about any one individual’s demise, because, obviously, we value life, but there were not too many Ameri- cans shedding tears about Mr. al Zarqawi’s demise and the American contribution to it. The world, such as the region, when we removed Saddam Hussein, is a more peaceful place without him being in it.

But you cannot, based on one individ- ual’s demise, in the cesspool that has been created by this President’s poli- cies, based on no agenda, today, no, you know, everything is great, this is the beginning of the end, this is the turn- ing point.

Listening to our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. In the last 10 hours, one would think that this bomb- ing of the leader of al Qaeda in Iraq was the be-all and end-all, and that is the thing that Americans were looking for to end this. Nothing could be fur- ther from the truth. That is why 42 people were killed in Iraq today, 42.

I mean, it is not like much has changed on the ground in that country. Our real security agenda that would take this country in a new direction, if we were able to win the majority back in November, Americans would see the direction that Democrats would take this country.

We would make a commitment to our troops. We would make sure that we had a real commitment to our troops, that they were united into a 21st-century one of military strength, and we would honor them. We would rebuild a state-of-the-art military by making the needed investments in equipment and manpower so that we can make sure we can handle the di- versified needs and the diverse activity that we have going on across the globe.

What happened to Afghanistan, Mr. MEEK? I mean, when we first were at- tacked after 9/11, and we went into Af- ghanistan, and the Americans were united in that effort, we actually re- moved the Taliban. We were able to bring that country into the 21st cen- tury, restoring quality for women, and making sure that we had a democracy, democratic seedlings planted there.

Now, you fast forward to 2006, be- cause we virtually pulled out of Af- ghanistan, save for about 17,000 troops that are still left on the ground. Now you have the rise of the Taliban. You have Afghani women who are say- ing that they have been subjected to the same inequality and the same re- quirements of wearing the burqa and not being able to get an education.

If we have abandoned our friends on the other side of the aisle, and, instead, we have added our resources in our effort to making Iraq more of a cesspool than it already was. If we are able to implement our real security agenda, we will make sure our troops are well equipped, that we are funding the appropriate activity and making sure that we actually go after Osama bin Laden. We will make sure that the war on terror is waged both here and across the globe and that we strike a balance, so that Americans don’t have to worry about being attacked in the United States.

We will make sure that we make a commitment to moving the country in a new direction militarily instead of continuing to fund an endless war in Iraq, that no matter what has been said in a 10-hour debate that occurred on this floor, still has no end in sight, still has more than 2,500 troops dead; and we know more to come every day.

Mr. MEEK, you are a member of the Homeland Security Committee and Armed Services Committee, so you are potentially more expert in this than I am. But I literally heard in the last day and a half a policy of denial on the part of our Republican colleagues. It would be nice if they put both hands on the ground and yanked their heads out of it so that we could talk about this together and have a real debate, a real debate.

Yes, bring out that rubber stamp, because that is exactly what happened on this vote this morning. If we were al- lowed to have a real debate, if we were allowed to put forward a policy, if we were allowed to file amendments, I would have been willing to consider to be able to vote for something and would have been appreciative for the opportunity to vote for something other than what the majority tried to cram down.

They certainly did cram it down on their colleagues’ threats. We refused to allow it to be crammed down ours. You know, I know that, I don’t check my brain at the door of the Chamber when I walk in the door. I represent my constituents.

You know, not everyone will agree with me back home in the 20th district of Florida. That is okay, because I stamp anyone’s policy, not NANCY PELOSI’S, not Mr. BOEHNER’S, not the President. I was elected as an indi- vidual.
Unfortunately, our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, they do check their brains at the door. They bring in that big old rubber stamp, and they just pound it on whatever is put in front of them by the Republican leadership and say, yes, Mr. Leader, yes, Mr. President, here is what you want, and the heck with the checks and balances of the Constitution and our role here as a Member of the United States Congress.

At the end of the day, why be here, why run, why make the sacrifice, why check their memory and say, yes, Mr. Leader, yes, Mr. President, just pound it on whatever is put in that big old rubber stamp, and they do what they are told to do anyway. Really, they could go spend quite a bit of other time doing something useful and certainly could make sure that the country could begin to see what is really going on in this Chamber.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. I am glad you pointed out the fact that a lot of rubber-stamping is going on. The reason I voted against the Iraq resolution today, Mr. Speaker, is I will not dishonor the memory of those individuals that have died and those individuals who have been forever maimed or lost a leg or limb or that mother or that father that will never see their son or daughter, or that child that will never see their father, aunt, uncle or niece again.

The reason why I did that is that many men and women in uniform are fighting on behalf of, what, a democracy or something like it. You have a resolution that says, Democrats, we are not even going to allow you to put anything on the floor, we are not going to allow you to amend the resolution.

The rules are set on the third floor by the Speaker and the rules Committee that says we won’t even allow an alternative resolution. They say we won’t even allow. Yes, welcome to the floor, and you will talk. But you know something? Talk is cheap. Action means everything.

So as a member of the Armed Services Committee along with my ranking member and along with a lot of other members of the Armed Services Committee, we voted against the resolution today, not because we believe in something else; we do believe in democracy. But we do believe in a fair debate in oversight and policy.

That is why it is important, Mr. Speaker, that we move in a way that will have our Constitution honored at the same time, and we move in a way as it relates to fairness for every Member of this House.

One thing that Leader PELOSI, if the Democrats take control will be the Speaker, had said we will work in a bipartisan way, and Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ talked about the whole rubber-stamping issue. This rubber stamp has been used far too many times for the Republican majority. How did we get in the deficits, the deficits as far as the eye can see? Because of the rubber stamp?

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we are moving in the flag this week and talking about who is a patriot and who is not, and I will not stand judgment even on my Republican colleagues, many of whom that have cast dye on some of the Members of the Democratic side of saying who is with the troops or who is not with the troops.

I just want to say that fact, not fiction, always prevails in history and also in the future.

We want to make sure, in the Republican budget, that we point out the fact that there will be a copayment for veterans. There will be a copayment of some $250 for veterans because that is the Bush White House, the Republican budget package. That is a fact. Their prescription drug costs will go up. That is a fact.

So, if we want to get all drapped up and tear-y-eyed and saying I have a tattoo, saying I support the troops more than you do, your car, my car, I want to say that I support the troops. It is not what you say or hear on this floor. It is about how you vote and where your dollars are as it relates to respecting the veterans.

That is why it is important, and I take issue with the fact because I will not let their memory be dishonored. I take issue with the fact that individuals are coming to the floor saying one thing and doing another with their vote as it relates to those individuals.

When our men and women come home, they are going to have issues. They are going to have issues because they are not going to be able to deal with the effects of the IEDs that are going off, their friends being maimed, and there is not a way that relates how we are going to deal with the issue of Iraq, how we are going to take the training wheels off the Iraqi government.

The only resolutions that have been put forward to deal with those issues are on the Democratic side of the aisle, and because the President does not want to talk about it, the Republican majority does not want to talk about it.

What is so frustrating is the fact that we have plots on this side to have discourse and dialogue in a bipartisan way so that those individuals that are there now in some areas in the Western parts of our country in rural America that are eating okay, MREs, for those individuals and those individuals that are talking to their children by long distance, saying I am coming home soon and they really cannot answer the question because I have a 1-year-old son and I have an 11-year-old daughter.

I have been to Iraq twice, but you know something, when a Member of Congress goes to Iraq we are coming back in two or three days on a Federal plane, being served food and drink. We are coming home. We are going to land at Andrews Air Force Base, and the air force people, God bless them and I love them, they are going to give us a ride back to the Capitol. We are not going to get out and we are going to go home, not like those individuals who volunteered, not drafted, volunteered to serve this country.

If they agree or not, they deserve a policy from this side of the aisle as much as a Democratic policy. It is not a Republican majority saying, you know something, enough is enough, let us put politics aside; let us make sure that we put the American people first. It is a conference committee in a real discussion on a strategy of dealing with Iraq, dealing with education, dealing with how we are going to treat our veterans when they come home.

When they arrive home, they are going to sit down at the dining room table with their families, and we cannot be stuttering when they get back as it relates to our commitment to those individuals that has sand in their teeth and are away from their families 12 months, in some cases being extended beyond that another 6 months, to say that, oh, well, we had to go up on your copayment because we promised that we will provide health care to you because we want to make sure we preserve these tax cuts for these billionaires.

Now, I think it is important and I think that we should get passionate and we should get emotional about what we should be doing versus talking about the who is backing whom; we have to see it in black and white in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and legislation and resolutions that are passed here on this floor that are going to benefit those individuals in harm's way.

If that is the topic of the d---, then let it be the topic of the day. Let us see resolutions that come to the floor from the Democratic side of the aisle about how do we deal with Iraq, with Republican input. Let us see if there is some sort of resolution outside of a bunch of words saying, well, you know, we feel that the war on terror, and you know, the President and people are doing good work, and you know, the indicators show what the indicators show.

That is not policy. That is a speech for someone to go home and say you see, I voted for this because it said a lot of good things, but it did nothing. To say that we are passing this to send a message, well, guess what, that message is not penetrating the reality of this war, and it is important that we deal with it in a way that the American people and the troops know that we have their back 110 percent or reassurance that America is backing them back 110 percent by not shuttering our policy responsibility. Right now we are punting. The Republican majority is punting because the White House does not want to do anything. Yet the White House, the White House says we listen to our military commanders.

Can we bring our military commanders out. We have eight generals that are retired that have said that they do not agree with how the way things are going now, eight of them, eight generals, eight generals that are saying they do not know what is happening. They have questions on what is happening, eight generals. So many generals are saying I was there, these policies are not right, but no one wants to listen. I guess they are not patriots now. I guess these generals, they have a cowardly way about them because they disagree with the President and they disagree with the Republican major-

The thing about it is, in America someone should be able to say what they want to say, and there should not be any repercussions. I think, too, it is fighting in Iraq to try to bring some semblance of democracy to a war that is so much in the front seat, the Iraqi government cannot even get in the front seat because we have a policy that no one can figure out on the Republican side.

So I guess we are not going to figure it out. Forget about what those Democrats are saying in the House and Senate, about how can we do it in a comprehensive way and pull it together.

Maybe, Mr. Speaker, other coalition forces and other countries come in and say now how are you going to deal with Iraq and have the Iraqi government take over security operations in Iraq, maybe we want to be part of it because we do not want to continue to go on with the plan of just saying let us just go on.

I will use this analogy by saying this as I close, Mr. Speaker. To pass a resolution without true instruction on how we are going to deal with the issue in Iraq is almost like taking a carton of milk out of the refrigerator and opening it, saying, oh, it is sour, let me put it back in, it will be fresh tomorrow. It may be okay when the issue is a carton of milk, but it is not okay when we are dealing with the lives of the American troops that are in Iraq and in harm's way at this time.

It is not the right policy, and it is not the right thing to do when we have got kids coming home from school saying, I am Dad or Mama home yet. It is not the right policy as it relates to those individuals that are our generals and our commanders in Iraq that are looking for some policy direction from the Congress on what we feel because we are the representatives of the American people. It is not the right way to do things.

So I am here to say, Mr. Speaker, we want to talk about what we are going to do. We know we have a new direction, that is almost like taking a carton of security policy on this side of the aisle. We know that we have a policy as it relates to those individuals that are our generals and our commanders in Iraq that are looking for some policy direction from the Congress on what we feel because we are the representatives of the American people. It is not the right way to do things.

We should be coming together as Republic and the one Independent in this House and Democrats, and figuring out how do we work our way out of this. It will take a generation fiscally for us to work ourselves out of the deficit that has been put forth here today and has been led on by the Republican majority because it has been handed down by the Bush White House.

Now, the President can invite as many Members of the House and the Senate to the White House for tea and coffee and cookies, but guess what, that is not going to cut it. That is not going to cut it. What is going to cut it is a Republican majority saying, you know something, enough is enough, let us put politics aside; let us make sure that is what we can get a conference committee in a real discussion on a strategy of dealing with Iraq, dealing with education, dealing with how we are going to treat our veterans when they come home.

With that, I say for the Members to go on, if they want to get a copy of everything we talked about here today, to housedemocrats.gov/30something, that is housedemocrats.gov/30something. You can get everything, everything I showed here, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to thank the Democratic leader for allowing us to have this hour, and I want to thank my colleagues in the 30-something Working Group for all of their assistance and time that they have spent, and I would like to thank the staff. It was an honor addressing the House.

Today, surround them with the shield of Your favor and use them as instruments of Your will. May their thoughts and actions please You, for You are the one Who fills our lives with gladness.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, today, at 10:45, the Senate will resume consideration of the Department of Defense authorization bill. The bill’s two managers, Chairman WARNER and Senator LEVIN, will be here to continue to work on this important bill. Although there will be no votes today’s session, Senators are encouraged to come today and speak on the bill. Senators who are intending to offer amendments should be consulting with the managers on getting their amendments in the queue.

Senators are reminded there is a scheduled vote for 5:30 on Monday on a U.S. circuit judge nomination. We could possibly have additional votes on Monday evening on amendments to the Defense bill.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, just very briefly, I want to comment on the supplemental appropriations bill we passed yesterday morning.

I commend Senator COCHRAN and really both of the managers, and all of our colleagues, as well as the House, and especially Congressman LEWIS, for their leadership in crafting a package that reflects our commitment to economic growth, that keeps America moving forward, that is fiscally responsible.

As the majority says time and time again, the Federal budget is not the Government’s money. It is the taxpayers’ money. Americans work hard to get what they earn. And it is our responsibility to spend that money wisely, appropriately.

That is why we are working hard to crack down on excessive Washington spending. And I think the way that supplemental bill was handled from the beginning, and especially at the end, reflects that fiscal responsibility. As we all know, that bill did reflect a lot of priorities of this body, but it grew and grew and grew. Once that bill was taken to conference, under the leadership of Chairman COCHRAN and Congressman LEWIS, it was scaled back down to meet the specific guidelines and request of the President of the United States. I think we exercised fiscal restraint and responsibility, but still there is a lot needed to do in terms of demonstrating that fiscal restraint and that responsibility.

One of our big challenges is the fact that much of our spending is on autopilot. We see that in our entitlement programs. Also, our budgetary process—how it is conducted—leaves little time for oversight as to the spending.

I mention that because I want to express my strong support for the efforts of our budget chairman, Senator GREGG, for an act that is called the SOS Act, called the Stop Overspending Act, that will be marked up by his committee, addressed in his committee next week. What it is—and he introduced it to many of us this week—is a broad package on the budgetary process. It is a package of reforms that will tamp down and give us the tools and ways to control excessive spending.

It adopts the President’s proposal to establish a legislative line-item veto. It would reestablish spending caps which have been used effectively in the past. It initiates across-the-board reductions in entitlement spending if the Federal deficit fails to meet specific established targets.

It includes a proposal I have been very supportive of and introduced actually when I first arrived in the Senate to put the budget on a 2-year budget cycle, thereby giving us time for appropriate oversight.

I realize enacting this entire bold package—comprehensive in many ways, this SOS package—would be a huge challenge, particularly in Washington where the forces of spending from below, from within, remain so strong. But achieving even one of the reforms or, hopefully, several of the reforms of this package would be a major
Mr. President, there is something else we owe our troops; an acknowledgment of their tremendous sacrifice.

Yesterday, as we know, we had a moment of silence in this Chamber because we lost our 2,500th troop in Iraq. Mr. President, 2,500 of our finest have been killed in Iraq. The reason we had a moment of silence is because it was a solemn milestone, which we should acknowledge.

But over at the White House, I guess they have a different feeling. They appear to be, perhaps on occasion differently. With all the news around the country today, there is a quote from Tony Snow, the President’s Press Secretary, who said, in response to the news: “It’s a number.” “It’s a number.”

I say to Tony Snow, and others at the White House, it is more than a number. It is somebody’s son or daughter. It is someone’s father or mother, a neighbor, an uncle, or an aunt.

Yesterday, Democrats offered an amendment to express the sense of the Senate that Iraq not grant amnesty to terrorists who kill our troops as part of their reconciliation plan. The amendment came in response to reports that the Iraqi Prime Minister was in favor of such a proposal. But instead of joining us in a debate about this amendment, the majority, the Republicans, decided to play a political game and quickly claimed the Iraqi Prime Minister had been “misquoted” and offered some procedural gimmicks to stop a vote from taking place on this amendment.

Just this morning, there is more news that the Prime Minister has talked about and does favor amnesty to those Iraqis who kill American troops. It is all over the country in the news. For example, it is on page 22 of the Washington Post. The aide who first leaked the story has now resigned, but he stands by what he said. Today, he is quoted as saying:

“The prime minister himself has said that he is ready to give amnesty to the so-called resistance, provided they have not been involved in killing Iraqis.

What that says is just what we said yesterday: Amnesty will be granted to those who kill Americans, but not to those who hurt Iraqis.

I think this sounds like it deserves more numbers than the people who have been wounded. They are not numbers. They are people, in many instances, who have lost arms or legs or eyes or are paralyzed. They are not just numbers.

I think maybe we should discuss briefly what a Republican Congressman said yesterday. I know this man. I know him well. I have been going to the House gym for a lot of years. He is a man by the name of WAYNE GILCHREST. He is my friend. He is a Republican Congressman from Maryland.

We were standing in the House gym. I have known him for many, many years. And because of our knowing one another—he was shaving actually, with his shirt off. And on his back he had—I noticed it for years—a real scar.

I said: WAYNE, what is that scar? He said: I was shot.

I said: Tell me about it.

He was in Vietnam. He was a sergeant. He raised his arm to fire, and as he did that, somebody shot him through the chest. The bullet came out of the back. He has a big scar in the back. The words he remembers are: “Sarge’s been shot. I hope he’s not dead.”

He survived, but after many months in hospitals. He was a school teacher. He came back from Vietnam and taught kids. Now he is a Member of Congress, and has been for some time.

Here is what he said in yesterday’s Washington Post:

I can’t help but feel through eyes of a combat-wounded Marine in Vietnam, if someone was shot, you tried to save his life . . . While you were in combat, you had a sense of urgency to end the slaughter, and around here we don’t have that sense of urgency.

That is a direct quote. He went on to say:

To me, the administration does not act like there’s a war going on. The Congress certainly doesn’t act like there’s a war going on. If you’re raising money to keep the majesty. If you’re thinking about gay marriage, if you’re doing all this other peripheral stuff, what does that say to the guy who’s about ready to drive over a land mine?

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will be a period for the transaction of morning business until 10:45 a.m., with Senators able to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, my understanding is that we are to end morning business and go on to the bill at 10:45. The hour of 10:45 has arrived, and I note that the chairman and ranking member are not here. I believe they are at a briefing. They are expected to be here shortly. But what I would like to do is ask consent that I be allowed to speak in morning business for up to 10 minutes. When the chairman of the committee and the ranking member arrive, I will ask them for permission to continue, if necessary, but if they have other business, I will understand that.

I think the priority is the Defense authorization bill.

So I ask unanimous consent to continue in morning business for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INDIAN HEALTH CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have come to the floor today to talk about the Indian Health Care Improvement Act and some frustration I should say enormous frustration—that I and Senator McCaskill have about what is happening with a piece of legislation that is so very important.

In this country, we have responsibilities for health care for two groups of people: Federal prisoners who are incarcerated in prison—we are responsible for their health care. If they get sick, they go to an infirmary, they go to a hospital, we are responsible. We provide health care for Federal prisoners. We also have trust responsibility for providing health care for American Indians. That is our trust responsibility.

It is interesting and enormously disappointing to me that we spend twice as much per person on health care for Federal prisoners as we do in providing health care, as is our obligation, for American Indians.

I want to talk a little about that because we have written a piece of legislation called the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, which builds on a piece of legislation that was passed some while ago. I want to talk about what American Indians are facing out in the country with respect to health care.

Let me describe it first with respect to a story. This is a very typical story about a member of the Mandan, Hidatsa, and Arikara Nation, which is called the Three Affiliated Tribes in North Dakota. It is a story about a fellow who had diabetes. By the way, I held a hearing some years ago on that reservation. On that reservation, the rate of diabetes is not double, triple, or quadruple the rate of diabetes elsewhere. At that reservation, at that point, it was 12 times the rate of diabetes that existed elsewhere.

The story I am speaking about on the Three Affiliated Tribes or Fort Berthold Reservation is Laidmen Fox, Sr. He was a Native American who had struggled, as other members of his family had, with diabetes. He had his feet amputated. Later he had his knees amputated. Finally, his entire legs were amputated. He was on dialysis. And, finally, the doctors told him he would have to have his hands amputated. At that point, Mr. Fox said he wanted to be taken off of the dialysis machine and to be able to come home to die. He died 2 years ago. He went home to be with family and friends, having lost his feet, his knees, then his legs, and then told he would lose his hands. He died, was taken off dialysis.

Just this last February, his daughter—who was 41 years old, and blind from diabetes, and also on dialysis—chose to have herself taken off the machine and went home to die in a similar manner.

We now have in this country something nobody wants to talk about. We ration health care for American Indians. Yes, there is health care rationing. There is something called contract health services. That means that when American Indians show up at a clinic or a hospital and, through the Indian Health Service, seek treatment for their problems, the only treatment they will get and the only reimbursement they will get for that medical condition is if it means "life or limb." Otherwise, in most cases, under the contract health provisions, there is no health care available.

Let me talk about some other examples. If I might.

A member of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians in my State was suffering from cancer. He went through chemotherapy, and went through a number of years through referral from the Indian Health Service to the University of Minnesota. All of a sudden the Indian Health Service said to him: We don't have any more funding. And they refused to pay for any additional treatment, even after he had a number of relapses.

This is not unusual for American Indians to face this sort of thing.

Another American Indian fell as a result of insulin shock at his home. He hit his hip, and hurt his hip badly in the fall. He was taken to a hospital by ambulance, given a shot for the pain and told he was to be released. His father objected because he said: My son can't walk. You can't release him. And the father said: I can't carry him. He can't walk. He must stay here.

The doctor said he could stay in the hospital for one night's observation. The next day, when the pain did not subside, they gave him an x-ray, found out his hip was broken, and referred him to another facility. And because so much time had elapsed since the accident, he had to have a full hip replacement.

Another tribal member was a Vietnam veteran and should have had the services of both the Indian Health Service and the VA available to him. He died. The Indian Health Service denied his request for a referral for him to be seen by a lung specialist at the Mayo Clinic. The IHS told him they had no money to send him to a specialist, and this Vietnam veteran died as a result.

In Montana, an Indian man went to the Indian Health Service clinic seeking assistance for gallstones. He was told it was not a "life or limb" situation, which would get him referred to a health provider off the reservation under the contract health provisions I have just described. Subsequent to that, his duct ruptured and he became infected. He had to have part of his pancreas removed, and now he is on dialysis.

Several months ago, a 24-year-old man at the Spirit Lake Nation went to the IHS clinic complaining he had abdominal pain. He was given some medicine and was advised he was not considered a "priority" patient. He ended up in the emergency room in a nearby hospital, off the reservation, and then transported to a larger medical center 125 miles away. His appendix had ruptured, that was about a month ago, and he is still in the hospital 3 months later, as they attempt to try to control his body temperature and other related matters.

He was determined not to have a "life or limb" emergency medical need, and so his actual condition was overlooked, with the results of several months now of acute care in a hospital.

Mr. President, I have spoken a number of times on the floor of the Senate about a young girl named Avis Little Wind. I brought her picture to the floor of the Senate. I did that with the permission of her relatives. She was 14 years old, and she hanged herself. She killed herself 2 years after her sister had killed herself.

I went to the reservation because we have had a cluster of suicides of young teenagers on Indian reservations. I talked to this young girl's teachers, school administrators, people in the mental health area, tribal council folks, to try to understand what is wrong here.

What I discovered is this little 14-year-old girl, named Avis Little Wind, laid in a bed for 90 days in a fetid position. Clearly, something was seriously wrong with this young woman. Yet, it did not send a signal to anybody. Her father killed himself. Her mother was dysfunctional, a substance abuser. This young girl's world somehow slipped through the system, and she got up one day out of that bed and took her own life.

Avis Little Wind is one person, but a person whose future was stolen from her. We need to do more. I would think someone who misses 90 days of school at age 14 would send alarm bells all over, but it did not. There is not enough money in the Indian Health System to deal with it.

Senator MCCAIN and I have passed some legislation recently dealing with the issue of Indian teen suicide and trying to begin to address that issue. But there is a serious lack of attention to the health care needs of Native young people, and teenagers like Avis Little Wind and the tragedy that resulted in her death.

It is not uncommon to see 75 people stand in line waiting to have a prescription filled. It is not uncommon for them to stand in line only to find out they can't get the prescription filled because the medicine is not available there.

I have been to a health care facility where one dentist is working in a small trailer house serving 5,000 people. Is that fair? Is that the right thing to do? We can do better than that as a country. Yet, somehow, this issue of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act is not a priority. The administration has dragged its feet, and dragged its feet for months and months. Senator McCAIN and I have just written the administration a letter saying: How about some help here? How about some cooperation? Let's find a way to solve this and fix it.

While we talk and while we dither and while the administration decides to delay, we have people losing their lives, and we have people going to health care facilities with very serious problems being told: We don’t have the money to refer you.
Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. DORGAN. The tribal chairman for the Three Affiliated Tribes in North Dakota says: Everybody up there on the reservation understands, don’t get sick after June. Just don’t get sick after June because the money has run out on contract health services. If you get sick after June, there is no money. They are not going to send you to a hospital. Or if you go to the hospital, the hospital will charge back to you because they won’t get the money from the Indian Health Service. It will ruin your credit, and you will have to file for bankruptcy. But don’t get sick after June because the money won’t be there.

What kind of message is that to the American people, especially the most vulnerable in our society? These reservations are where there is substantial poverty, great difficulty.
I have not mentioned methamphetamine. We have had hearings about that. It is unbelievable what is happening with respect to these reservations and health care, and yet somehow there is no urgency here.
Senator McCAIN and I are asking for a little cooperation from the administration and some cooperation here in the Senate to move this bill.
We witnessed just the other day at a hearing about methamphetamine on reservations. Methamphetamine is a scourge all across this country.
Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 2 additional minutes.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. DORGAN. One of the witnesses at that hearing on methamphetamine on reservations, who is the chairman of an Indian tribe, lives on a rural reservation with 13,000 Native Americans who live on that reservation. She told us that one-half of the babies who have been born to tribal members on that reservation—one-half of the babies—have tested positive for alcohol or drugs, including methamphetamine. Think of that.
I was in a hospital one day when they showed me a young baby that was born with a .12 blood alcohol content lying in the nursery. This baby was born with a .12 blood alcohol content, and the mother was down the hall and refused to see the baby because she did not want the baby. She checked into the hospital dead drunk.
The Senate is working on serious problems with methamphetamine and substance abuse and teenage suicide, and all of these issues, and we have a health care system on Indian reservations that is a rationing system. When the chairman of the tribe in my State says, “All the Indians can’t get sick after June because the money is not there under contract health to help you,” that is a serious problem.

All I am asking for and all Senator MCCAIN is asking for is a little help and a little cooperation from the administration and, yes, from our colleagues to move this legislation called the Indian Health Care Improvement Act. It is the right thing for this country to do. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee is here, and I will, at this point, yield the floor.
I do have an amendment I wish to offer on the Defense authorization bill today, and I am available to do that when it is convenient. But the chairman and ranking Member are here, so at this point I yield the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.
Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I was much taken by the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota. I have great respect for the Senator from North Dakota. I tell you, you do a lot of homework. You do a lot of independent work. And while I do not have the expertise with regard to the reservations that you have, any of us listening to your comments would immediately come to the conclusion that we better step in to help. And I say to the Senator, you can count on me when the time comes. I think that matter should be addressed as quickly as we can by the Senate.
I thank the Senator.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2007
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 2766, which the clerk will report.
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:
A bill (S. 2766) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2007 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.
Pending:
McCain amendment No. 4241, to name the Act after John Warner, a Senator from Virginia.
Nelson (FL)/Menendez amendment No. 2465, to express the sense of Congress that the Government of Iraq should not grant amnesty to terrorists who have attacked, killed, or wounded members of the Armed Forces of the United States.
McConnell amendment No. 4272, to commend the Iraqi Government for affirming its positions of no amnesty for terrorists who have attacked U.S. forces.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.
Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I say to my distinguished ranking member, I think at this time it would be appropriate if the Senator wishes to bring up his amendment.
We are in business, I say to my colleagues wherever they are, for purposes of amendments. The Senator from Michigan and I will be here for some period of time in hopes of processing amendments.
Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from North Dakota. He covered such a wide range of issues with such depth and integrity that is really quite extraordinary. We are ready for his amendment. I think he is prepared to proceed with the amendment. We look forward to hearing from him on that matter.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.
AMENDMENT NO. 4292
Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendments are set aside.
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:
The Senator from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN), for himself, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. HARKIN, proposes an amendment numbered 4292.
Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
(The amendment is printed in today’s RECORD under “Text of Amendments.”)
Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the Senator from Virginia for his kind comments. He did not say he welcomed my amendment because he probably knows that this amendment is one which we have dealt with before. But I feel so strongly the need to continue to offer the amendment, if only by voice vote, which says what is going on I think is dreadfully wrong and needs to be corrected. I know the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Michigan are legislators with goodwill and good skills. I hope they will join with me as I once again describe the issues of contracting that exist because we are spending so much money in such a hurry that there is waste, fraud, and abuse which simply cannot be addressed in the regular order.
I believe this amendment is once again a proposal whereby there was a Truman-type committee, the type that existed when Harry Truman served in the Senate, a Democratic Senate then, the White House.
Harry Truman, I am sure, caused some real angst at the White House by saying: I think there needs to be a special bipartisan committee established to take a look at waste, fraud, and abuse in military contracting. He traveled all across this country to military installations to meet with contractors. His committee unearthed a substantial amount of waste.
I offer it again, as I have offered it on previous occasions. Senator DURBIN and I have not been successful, but I offer it again only because I don’t think the problem has abated. I think the problem still exists.
Just the other day, in a supplemental emergency appropriations bill, we spent $92 billion. Some of that was for Katrina relief, but the rest of it, by and large, will find its way into the Pentagon accounts—to restore accounts.

Then the Senator from Illinois just came in, and the Senator from Illinois and I have jointly worked on this issue. Senator HARKIN has asked to be a cosponsor as well. I offer it on behalf of myself and Senators DURBIN and HARKIN: This is something that we have talked about at some length over a period of time.

We have approved emergency supplemental appropriations bills to the tune of tens and tens and tens of billions of dollars. I believe it is now over $340 billion. Think of that: almost a third of a trillion approved without being paid for. This adds right on the top of the Federal debt.

The spending is in support of our military. I voted for it because we can't send our troops abroad and not provide them the equipment and things they need.

But when you spend this much money, including $18 billion-plus for reconstruction in Iraq, and then begin to see who gets hold of this money, it is hair raising to hear the stories about what is happening.

I am not suggesting that there would never be any waste as a result of this war. Wartime is a different circumstance. I understand that. But I think it is safe to say that there has been more waste, more fraud, and more abuse of taxpayers' money in the recent short time, several years, than in the history of this country. I think it is unparalleled. I think we have a responsibility to deal with it.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, will the Senator field a question?

Mr. DORGAN. Yes.

Mr. DURBIN. Through the Chair, I am happy to join him in this effort in which we are trying to have some oversight of the billions of dollars that are being spent in this war. The Senator and I have worked on this concept together. We went back to a day when the Senator from Missouri, Harry Truman, decided to ask the same hard questions of the administration during the Second World War, trying to find instances where tax dollars were being wasted and people were profiteering and soldiers were getting equipment that wasn't up to standard.

I ask from North Dakota: Isn't it curious that Senator Harry Truman, a Democrat from Missouri who created this commission and asked hard questions, when there was a Democratic President named Franklin Roosevelt, was suggesting that when it came to Congress, Congress doesn't do the administration nor the people of this country any favors by saying we are going to protect our own party in the White House? Shouldn't we be dealing with a nonpartisan issue of waste at the expense of taxpayers and, more importantly, at the expense of soldiers?

Isn't it true that at the hearings which Senator DORGAN has chaired bringing together whistleblowers who tell us these terrible stories of waste of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, that absent these hearings there has been very little done on Capitol Hill by way of oversight of the giants who are winning these no-bid contracts, our taxpayers' money is being wasted and wasting too much of taxpayer dollars?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, it is the case that whistleblowers from Kuwait, Iraq, and various parts of the United States have come to me and said: What is going on is wrong. We have held some hearings through our policy committee to take a look at it. They have wanted to testify.

Let me give you one example. I talked about Rory before. A man named Rory, an engaging fellow, who was a supervisor at a food service operation in Iraq, he said to us that what was going on was wrong. He worked for Kellogg, Brown & Root, a subsidiary of Halliburton.

No. 1, he said we were charging for thousands of meals that we weren't serving.

No. 2, we were feeding the troops food that had expired date stamps on them. He brought it to the attention of his superiors. They said: It doesn't matter. Feed it to the troops. It doesn't matter.

He said: We had conveyors of trucks that were attacked on the road with food in them. You go into that truck bed and you find out what food has shrapnel in it. If you find good pieces of shrapnel, you give it to your supervisors as souvenirs, but feed the food to the troops.

The other thing that was very interesting, talking about employees of Kellogg, Brown & Root, a subsidiary of Halliburton, he said: We were told when Government auditors come around, don't you dare talk to them. You are forbidden to talk to them. If you do, one of two things will happen. You will either be fired, or you will be sent to a part of Iraq where there is active, hostile shooting going on.

This fellow, in fact, was sent to one of the active areas of Fallujah. He had the courage, guts, and temerity, and decided he would talk to Government auditors.

It is unbelievable to me to hear a whistleblower say that a contractor which was paid with Government funds told the employees: Don't you dare talk to Government auditors. If you do, you will be fired.

That is so fundamentally wrong.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if I may ask one more question, in one of the hearings that I attended, I recall that Senator DORGAN brought in one of these whistleblowers who talked about the monogrammed towels they were charging the Government to be put into certain facilities. The Senator talked about the price of gasoline that they were charging to the Government. I hope the Senator will recount those particular instances.

But I would like to ask the Senator, when Members of Congress get up here and say: We love our soldiers and we love our troops and we stand behind them, how can we then cast a blind eye and overlook the obvious? When our soldiers aren't getting the right equipment when our soldiers aren't getting the goods they deserve, when they are not getting the supplies they need to be safe and successful, how can that reflect any love of our troops? If we are truly committed to these soldiers, wouldn't we be holding hearings, bringing in under oath these whistleblowers and their bosses? Let us bring them in and put them before the cameras and ask them if they are wasting taxpayer dollars and endangering the lives of our troops. Wouldn't that be the true measure of our commitment to these men and women in uniform?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, clearly that is what we ought to do on behalf of soldiers.

I tell the Senator that the most recent allegations have been made by two people who worked for, once again, Kellogg, Brown & Root, a subsidiary of Halliburton Corporation, about the water that was provided to the military installations. Let me describe that.

Taking water from the Euphrates River—and some of it goes into a system where it is purified and used as potable water, thinking it was used as nonpotable water. But the way they designed the lines to serve nonpotable water to the base, which is used for showering, shaving, and brushing teeth, and so on, the water that was coming out nonpotable areas was actually more contaminated with E. Coli, bacteria, than the raw water coming out of the Euphrates River from the sewage disposal.

Halliburton said it is not true. The Pentagon said it is true.

It just wasn't one base. We have a memorandum from the person from KBR, a Halliburton subsidiary in charge of water to all the military installations in Iraq. That memorandum, which has now been made public, was from the person who was in charge on behalf of Halliburton, or KBR, of all the water for all the installations. That memo admits that they have a serious problem, and they have made big mistakes that could have caused serious problems, including death.

After we held hearings, a young woman, an Army captain in Iraq, wrote us a long, unsolicited e-mail. She said: There is something going on on my base. I saw there was some questions about water to our military installations in Iraq. I am here. I am treating people for all kinds of skin problems. And I began to see things that made me suspicious that there was something wrong with the water.

She said: I had my staff track back to the water line. She said: What I found out was they were providing nonpotable water to the soldiers on this base that was contaminated.

This is from a doctor who is there today. This isn’t conjecture, speculation, or accusation. This is from a doctor who is actually treating people. Yet, once again, we are paying a contractor to provide water service to these bases, connect and purify the water and provide the water to soldiers, denied publicly that anything was wrong. We have two eye witnesses who have testified, whistleblower who worked for the company. We have the internal document from the company that discussed how they had made these mistakes, and we have a doctor, a physician, who works for the Army. This is like the old Western movie: ‘Who are you going to believe, me or your own lying eyes?’

The fact is, we know what is happening there, yet no one seems much concerned about it. I write to the Defense Secretary about this and say it is quite unpleasant. They tell me the water is being supplied to troops for showering, brushing their teeth, and shaving. No one seems to get really excited over that. It seems to me the Secretary of Defense ought to say, Wait, what on Earth is going on? Let’s put a stop to this.

I will talk in a few minutes about how all of this happens. It happens because we have sole-source, no-bid contracts and very little oversight.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator will yield for one last question, what strikes me is there is not a sense of outrage that American tax dollars are being wasted but, even more important, that American troops are being shortchanged.

What do we ask of these men and women in uniform? Quite simply, we say, take an oath to wear this uniform and risk their lives while we stand in the comfort and safety of this Senate.

I don’t understand why there isn’t a sense of outrage in this Congress on a bipartisan basis, on both sides of the aisle, that we are not only being ripped off as taxpayers by these no-bid contracts but that we are shortchanging these men and women who are risking their lives while we stand in the comfort and safety of this Senate.

I know Halliburton is a big political force in this town. I know in some quarters you are not supposed to question Halliburton. This is some sacred institution politically. I don’t buy it. I count the soldiers that are putting their lives on the line to be much more sacred and much more valuable than any big, huge, no-bid corporation.

I say to the Senator from North Dakota, we have done this before, the two of us joined together, and said let’s put together a bipartisan commission that will ask the hard questions, a commission that will bring people in and put them under oath, find out if they are cheating us, find out if they are profiteering during a war, find out if they are shortchanging our soldiers, and let the chips fall where they may. If we find there is a violation of law, even if it reaches all the way to the boardroom, so be it.

How many times have we come to the Senate, I ask the Senator from North Dakota, refresh my memory, how many times have we brought this option to the Senate and said to our colleagues, please, for the sake of the troops, let’s have real oversight, let’s ask these questions.

How many times have we done this during the course of this 3-year war, I ask the Senator from North Dakota who has been the leader in this effort, and I have been glad to join him, how often have we tried?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we have had three recorded votes on this, and we have brought this to the Senate maybe six times now, altogether. I know it is repetitive. I know it probably is not pleasant to hear all of these things again, yet I don’t think there is any choice.

If I might, just for the benefit of my colleague from Illinois, Senator DURBIN and others, I would read a quote from a memorandum that was written May 13, 2005, an internal Halliburton memorandum, written by Will Granger, the man who was paid with taxpayer funds to do this contract for Halliburton for all of the water issues in Iraq. These are the water issues for the U.S. bases in Iraq that directly affect United States soldiers.

Will Granger, the Halliburton employee:

No disinfection to the non-potable water was occurring [at Camp Ar Ramadi] for water designated for showering purposes. This caused an unknown population to be exposed to potentially harmful water for an undetermined amount of time.

This event should be considered a ‘NEAR MISS’ as the consequences of these actions could have been VERY SEVERE resulting in mass sickness or death.

The deficiencies of the camp where the event occurred is not exclusive to that camp; meaning that country-wide, all camps suffer to some extent from some or all of the deficiencies noted.

That is what was covered up. This was not made public until I was able to dig it out. But when a whistleblower said this is happening—and I am not sure, unfortunately, whether for the towels, his company said, no, no, you cannot buy those regular towels that way. Towels have to have our logo embroidered on them.

So this is what he had to buy, at more than double the cost of the regular towels, so that the logo could be put on the towels, and the taxpayers could be charged twice as much. I am sure the soldiers didn’t care one way or another whether there was that embroidered logo on the towel. But it is a loss for the taxpayer. You buy these. And don’t ask any questions.

Henry, the purchaser, was told: You cannot buy these towels, his company said, no, no, you cannot buy those regular towels that way. Towels have to have our logo embroidered on them.

And here is the internal Halliburton report that says it is happening, No. 1, and No. 2, this camp was a ‘near miss’ and:

. . . the consequence could have been VERY SEVERE resulting in mass sickness or death.

A lot of people are making a lot of money, spent by this Congress, in support of our soldiers who are at war, and those people who are not playing straight with the soldiers or the American people.

I ask consent to show two items on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. A man whose name was Henry Bunting came to a hearing I held. I believe Senator DURBIN was at that hearing. Henry Bunting worked for Kellogg, Brown & Root, a subsidiary of Halliburton in Kuwait. In Kuwait, he was the purchaser of supplies for the U.S. Army. They wanted some hand towels, needed some towels, so a purchase requisition goes to Henry. Henry is going to buy some towels, he tells the person for Halliburton, except for the towels, his company said, no, no, you cannot buy those regular towels that way. Towels have to have our logo embroidered on them.

So this is what he had to buy, at more than double the cost of the regular towels, so that the logo could be put on the towels, and the taxpayers could be charged twice as much.

I am sure the soldiers didn’t care one way or another whether there was that embroidered logo on the towel. But the taxpayer does. You buy these. And don’t ask any questions.

Henry says, You know, the American taxpayer got charged double and he didn’t like it and he want to speak publicly. And not just this, it was thousand other examples of costs being run up, from $45 for a case of Coca-cola, to $7,500 a month to lease an SUV. Henry said, It is not just the towels, but he brought the towels along to show us what was going on. It was really wrong. The American people are taking a bath here and it undermines the soldiers, as well.

Thank God there are some whistleblowers who are willing to come forward.

What we need now, of course, is the opportunity to legislate and see if we can stop this.

I will not go much longer, although I don’t see anyone preparing to offer another amendment yet. I do want to make a couple of points I made the other day on the broader amendment that was turned down by the Senate. That amendment dealt with contracting as well, but it was a much broader amendment than this.

I made the point then, and this actually had to do with Bunmatine Greenhouse. I know there are some who do not want to hear about this anymore. But I don’t think we have any choice. This was the top civilian contracting official at the Corps of Engineers. She was made responsible for overseeing the contracts.

Through the Corps of Engineers, Halliburton and KBR got no-bid, sole-source contracts, giant contracts. Over one half of the contracts in the war theater are Halliburton.

By the way, this has nothing to do with the Vice President. Whenever you mention that term, they say, You are attacking the Vice President. No, he has been gone a long time. It doesn’t have anything to do with him. It has to do with a company that got over 50 percent of the contracts in Iraq.

Bunnatine Greenhouse, the top contracting officer for the Corps of Engineers who lost his job, now, as a result of telling the truth, says:

I can unequivocally state that the abuse related to contracts awarded to KBR represents the most blatant and improper contract abuse I have witnessed during the course of my professional career.

For that, she got demoted. Pretty harsh treatment for people who are whistleblowers in this town. She has been replaced, by the way, by someone without any experience. When I asked the general who runs the Corps of Engineers, he said the person that is replacing Bunnatine Greenhouse is now being trained. Not much consolation or confidence, in my judgment, in that for the American people.

One final story. If the issue of water does not motivate someone, let me tell you again about Custer Battles. I have plenty of people come to me about Mr. Custer and Mr. Battles. This is an example of what is going on with so much money available.

Mr. Custer and Mr. Battles show up in Iraq without any money, without much experience in contracting, and decide, I will get some of this; I want to get some of this that is for us to fix it, for us to do the fixing. They went to the warehouse, painted them blue and took them somewhere else, put them in trucks out of the Baghdad airport, and said, Here are the things they did not belong to them. They repainted them, painted them blue and sent them back and sold them to the Pentagon for $2 million in contracts.

This $2 million actually went to Custer Battles. They took a picture of it. He in turn had to throw these around as footballs, Saran Wrapped $100 bills. They threw them around as footballs in the office. And down below they had billions and billions of dollars, apparently.

Lest there be any question about the misuse of money, let me show you $2 million Saran Wrapped just before it went to Custer Battles. How did this happen? Because this guy right here, this fellow right here, told me that our message to everyone was “bring a bag because we pay in cash.”

Does anyone doubt there is going to be dramatic waste, fraud, and abuse in those circumstances? Does anyone doubt that at all, and after all of these stories? Doubling the price of hand towels; 25 tons, 50,000 pounds of nails laying on the sands of Iraq because they were ordered in the wrong side, dumped in the sand.

I could go on forever from what I learned from whistleblowers. I will not do that, only to say this: The next step for this Congress, I think, is to establish a Truman-type committee. We have done it before and we can do it again. Never has it been more needed than now. There is, I think, plenty of evidence that the most significant waste, fraud, and abuse that has ever been visited on the taxpayers of this country is occurring now and has occurred in the last 3 years.

The remedy for that? It is not to blame the buck. The remedy for that is for us to fix it, for us to do something. What should we do? Let’s put together the type of thing that worked previously. Harry Truman had the guts to do it.

Harry Truman was a Democrat. There was a Democrat in the White House. I am sure they all were gnashing their teeth at what Harry Truman was trying to do, but on a bipartisan basis Harry Truman put together, with the consent of the Senate, the Truman Committee to look into the abuses of contracts during World War II. He did an incredible job for a lot of reasons. One, he took on the abuse, the waste, the fraud that existed. He unearthed it. He brought it out in the daylight. He made a major contribution to our troops and to the taxpayers. It was such an important contribution that his temporary ad hoc special committee then became a Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

So that the origin of our Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations which now exists over at the Homeland Security Committee was the special Truman Committee. That is how big an impact that Truman Committee had. And I am wondering whether or not that little bit of history shows us in addition to all of the reasons that were given by the Senator from North Dakota how vitally important these special committees can be, what a contribution they can make to the war effort and to saving taxpayers’ dollars.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, first let me compliment the Senator from North Dakota. He has been absolutely steadfast on this issue. He has made a major contribution on this issue.

If the Senator will stay for a moment, I want to ask him a question about the Truman Committee which he has made reference to. Perhaps I will make a brief statement and then ask him if he concurs with this history.

When then Senator Truman was appointed to head up the special committee to look into the abuses of contracts during World War II, he did an incredible job for a lot of reasons. One, he took on the abuse, the waste, the fraud that existed. He unearthed it. He brought it out in the daylight. He made a major contribution to our troops and to the taxpayers. It was such an important contribution that his temporary ad hoc special committee then became a Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

That is a minnow compared to the whale that exists at the moment in waste, fraud, and abuse. It is required of us, in my judgment, required of us to pass this legislation.

Having said all of that, let me compliment the chairman and the ranking member for doing it because it is obligatory but because I really do think they do a great job. I hope they decide to strongly support this amendment. Then I will come back and compliment them some more.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, first let me compliment the Senator from North Dakota. He has been absolutely steadfast on this issue. He has made a major contribution on this issue.

If the Senator will stay for a moment, I want to ask him a question about the Truman Committee which he has made reference to. Perhaps I will make a brief statement and then ask him if he concurs with this history.

When then Senator Truman was appointed to head up the special committee to look into the abuses of contracts during World War II, he did an incredible job for a lot of reasons. One, he took on the abuse, the waste, the fraud that existed. He unearthed it. He brought it out in the daylight. He made a major contribution to our troops and to the taxpayers. It was such an important contribution that his temporary ad hoc special committee then became a Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

So that the origin of our Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations which now exists over at the Homeland Security Committee was the special Truman Committee. That is how big an impact that Truman Committee had. And I am wondering whether or not that little bit of history shows us in addition to all of the reasons that were given by the Senator from North Dakota how vitally important these special committees can be, what a contribution they can make to the war effort and to saving taxpayers’ dollars.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator is absolutely correct, first, about the history and, second, about the importance of this. Harry Truman used to have a sign on his desk saying, the buck stops here. Well, the buck stops here in the Congress on this issue. We are the ones who have to go find this waste, fraud, and abuse and put a stop to it. If we don’t do it, it won’t happen.

Harry Truman was a straight talker, a straight thinker. He used to say at war meetings one-armed economists because he didn’t want people around him saying “the one hand” and “the other hand.” He decided to sink his teeth into the issue of waste, fraud, and abuse, and he made a big difference at a time when he was facing substantial waste, fraud, and abuse.

But I would venture to say there has never been a case in our history where we have pushed hundreds of billions of dollars out the door in a very large hurry and put them in the hands of no-bid, sole-source contracts with big companies and said, “Have a good time.” It is unbelievable what is going on, and it is our responsibility to stop it—not tomorrow, it is our responsibility to stop it now.

This is the bill in which we should do it. This amendment fits exactly in this piece of legislation. My hope is that when the dust settles, we will have decided to accept this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. I again thank the Senator from North Dakota for the amendment and I hope that we can get some bipartisan support for it.

There have been reports on abuses. Reports are no substitute for hearings. When you have hearings following a special committee investigation, you have people who are put under oath, who in the public spotlight so that we can bring a focus on these whistleblower complaints, and that is what has been missing. We have not had a place where the whistleblowers and the people who defend against their charges are brought together, both put under public forum so that we can then try to end what seems to be so clearly the abuses which have existed.

One of these contracts is a $10 billion contract-plus, basically. It is for indefinite quantities of indefinite goods. There have been only two hearings in our subcommittee. I compliment our chairman. Our committee and our subcommittee every year have to deal with a bill, and this bill is in the Chamber. It takes a huge amount of our time as a practical matter. The two subcommittees that have hearings on this issue which Senator DORGAN raises simply have not been able to put in the kind of time that a special Truman Committee can put in. And that is why I very much support the appointment by the Senate of a Truman Committee on Iraq contracting.

When you have this many tens of billions of dollars which are being spent and when you have allegations by whistleblowers, people who are in the know, that we have been unable to get into or have not gotten into for one reason or another, they have not been investigated. I think that might make this, this really needs a focus if we are going to have some credibility in the expenditure of these huge amounts of money in the Iraq war. And this should be done on a bipartisan basis. It would be with a Truman Committee. It needs to be done in a way which is free of any kind of political taint or political slant. But it needs to be done. We have to restore credibility and confidence in this contracting system, and the only way we can hope to see is to have a bipartisan Truman-like committee that spends the time, has the staff focus on it, making recommendations which I think will be similar to the ones that were defeated yesterday but they should not be prejudged. In any event, it could make recommendations to this body, and I would hope we would all welcome those kinds of recommendations.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, if I could engage my distinguished ranking member in a colloquy, historically this amendment is almost identical in form to it in previous years. On 14 September last fall, 2005. It was defeated by a vote of 53 to 41. And that was on the Commerce-State-Justice appropriations bill. Then, with the tenacity of our good friend from North Dakota, he brought the same amendment up again on October 19, 2005. Again, it was defeated by a vote of 54 to 44 on the Transportation appropriations bill.

So the Senate on two occasions has examined this before other committees and defeated it.

Now, let’s go back a little bit in history, and this is a part of Senate history that you have greater familiarity with than do I. Your distinguished predecessor, Senator Nunn, when I was on the Armed Services Committee, was the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee—there would be times when he would say, “John, I simply have to take off a week; I have this special committee.” He was then on the Armed Services Committee. I think, throughout your tenure in the Senate; now called Homeland Security, it used to be called Government Operations. And the Senate as a body some time ago decided to take the roots of the Truman Commission, which, indeed, was a successful operation, and repose it, place it into the Government Operations Committee, now the Homeland Security Committee.

Mr. LEVIN. I have been on that committee as long as I can remember. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Another 28 years.

Mr. LEVIN. That subcommittee has a major agenda and a whole host of areas that the chairman has identified, frequently with my support, and it has a very full plate. This committee, our committee, has something that that committee does not have, and that is we have the knowledge, we have the information because we are the committee that specializes in the work of the committee on which you served. I think, people who have the experience in terms of what the troops need and how it is provided to the troops. And so our committee also has the ability to handle these hearings. Neither committee seems fit, either because it has too full a plate already—and I think our committee from firsthand knowledge in that situation—has a very full plate, and therefore has not been able or for whatever reason has decided not to look at what are clearly excesses which need to be reviewed, either because it.

So it is a matter of finding, identifying Senators who have an interest in this matter who would focus on this
I will highlight three recent examples:

No. 1, Section 817 of last year’s defense authorization act addressed the need for a joint contingency contracting plan;

No. 2, Section 841 of that same legislation required GAO to review efforts of the Department to identify and assess areas of vulnerability for contracting waste, fraud and abuse. This report should have come out later this summer.

No. 3, the committee included a provision in this year’s bill to build on previous oversight efforts in the contracting area. Section 864 of our bill would require the Department to develop contingency program management plans. This section is part of a series of provisions designed to improve acquisition and contracting outcomes across the department through better overall program management.

I believe our activities, which I have very briefly outlined here, represent the best approach to conducting oversight. We bring in the experts and have them address systemic and specific problems.

We want to avoid an approach that would lead to wasting much of our oversight efforts on anecdotes of individual fraudulent acts which may not show that we have a systemic problem. We need to prosecute those singular cases and protect against fraud, waste and abuse in a way that can still deliver goods and services to the warfighter as quickly as possible.

So I say to my colleague, I appreciate his concerns and I look forward to working with him to address problems with Federal acquisition.

However, I do not support the establishment of a new special committee which would duplicate the work of this Committee and would only look at selected Federal expenditures and contracts.

I come back to this creation of the entity that the Senator from North Dakota wants and I again draw attention to the fact that Homeland Security has been given by the Senate the overall responsibility and an investigating committee with special funding, special staff to do investigations. Senator Nunn utilized it frequently when he was chairman of our committee. But there isn’t a committee in this body that is not faced from time to time with the subject of fraud, waste, and abuse. Rather than have each of the committees have their own special investigating team, to put together this subcommittee in the Government Operations Committee to do this work.

What I would suggest to my friend and just ask, why should we create something additional to what is already present, structured by the Senate to address the fraud, waste, and abuse problems in all the committees that we serve on and it was placed in the Homeland Defense Committee?

Mr. LEVIN. There have been requests—I believe from the chairman of the Homeland Security Committee—to get into this. And if the chairman would be willing to sign a letter with me making another request to that chairman to try to find time in either his committee work or in Senator COLEMAN’s committee, I would again be very happy to join in that request.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would certainly entertain that.

Mr. LEVIN. If we are unable to do that on our own committee, which we have not been able to do anything that needs to be done here—and I understand the time pressures on the committee because of this annual bill we have; I know what is on the plate over at the Government Affairs Committee and on the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations—

Mr. WARNER. You serve on that committee.

Mr. LEVIN. That is exactly right. I have been there throughout my tenure, I am personally familiar with the work they have undertaken. But if Senator WARNER would be willing to sign a request to Senator COLLINS, I would be delighted to join that request.

Mr. WARNER. What I would suggest we do is have a consultation with Senators COLLINS and LIEBERMAN and then follow up with a letter, if we deem appropriate.

Mr. LEVIN. That would be fine.

Mr. WARNER. That committee has done a prodigious amount of work. I certainly commend the chairman and ranking member of the Homeland Security Committee. They are workers.

Mr. LEVIN. I am on that committee, as you pointed out. I know the workload they have. Just yesterday, they completed a markup on one bill which took 2 days. I don’t know of any people who work harder in the Senate than do Senator COLLINS and Senator LIEBERMAN.

Mr. WARNER. So we have a procedure on that. For the moment, I suggest we set aside the pending amendments and turn to the matter of trying to clear some amendments on this side. Is that appropriate at this time?

Mr. LEVIN. That would be fine.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 4254 AND 4295, 4296, AND 4297, IN BLOC

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I send a series of amendments to the desk which have been cleared by myself and Mr. LEVIN. I am on that committee. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the amendments en bloc, the amendments be agreed to, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to these individual amendments be printed in the Record.

Mr. LEVIN. Reserving the right to object, and I will not, I just wonder if the Senator would identify the Senator who has sponsored the amendment so that they will hear their amendments have now been cleared.

Mr. WARNER. Fine. The Senator I have indicated here on my sheet are
Mr. LEVIN. The amendments were agreed to, as follows:

(Purpose: To make technical corrections to provisions related to the National Museums of the Armed Forces)

On page 65, line 16, insert “facility designated by the Secretary as the” before “National”.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan and I have been here, together with the leadership of both parties, making it clear we are ready to conduct business on such amendments as may be brought before the Senate on this bill. I believe at this time we have now completed such business as was ready. I anticipate the leadership will advised us of the schedule on Monday, and most certainly we will be back up at some point in time during that day to continue. I hope I will be joined by my distinguished colleague from Michigan urging Senators to come to the floor.

On our side of the aisle, I only know of perhaps two amendments that might be offered—one, as you are quite familiar with, by the Senator from Georgia with regard to certain aircraft programs. That is clear on its face. The other one I will work through. Frankly, I would have to say to my colleagues throughout the Senate, most particularly to my ranking member, I believe that at the end of the tunnel, certainly as regards the amendments that could be forthcoming from this side of the aisle.

Mr. WARNER. I know the Senator from Georgia wishes to offer his.

Mr. LEVIN. On your side of the aisle. After Senator DORGAN offered his today, it would then go to your side of the aisle to offer the amendment, if we want to keep that informal order which has been established.

Mr. WARNER. Correct.

Mr. LEVIN. Then we could perhaps pick up the Dorgan amendment on Monday after the debate on the judge.

Mr. WARNER. I think the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts intends to revisit his strong approach to some of the situations, particularly regarding troop structure.

Mr. LEVIN. I wouldn’t want to speak for the Senator from Massachusetts. I do believe, though, he is working on an amendment. There will be at least two amendments on this side relative to Iraq.

Mr. WARNER. In addition to the one from the Senator from Massachusetts? Mr. LEVIN. There is one Senator Jack Reed and I are working on, and I think there is one Senator Kerry is working on. I can’t speak for others. There may be a number of amendments on this side.

Mr. WARNER. I see the distinguished minority whip here. Maybe he could advise us what his ascertainment might be with regard to the balance of amendments on that side.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I have an amendment related to the rendition of prisoners which I would like to say a word about before we adjourn today. There may be an indication that there are still a few more amendments to be forthcoming, I will bring my amendment to your attention today, and I hope all Members will do the same so that you can plot the schedule for the upcoming week.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, we believe there are a number of amendments which will need debate. It would be useful on either Monday or Tuesday morning, if they could, to let us know what amendments they are planning on offering so we could get an estimate—I know you would agree as the floor manager—as to how many amendments there will be.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, Senator Fnirst and I have discussed that. I believe he is in conversation with the leadership on your side. I heartily endorse that approach. Perhaps we could formalize it in some way.

Mr. LEVIN. I think we might be better off not formalizing it.

Mr. WARNER. Only in the sense that the two leaders and you and I come to the floor, I am not suggesting cloture or anything of that nature. I would hope this bill could be passed on by the Senate without the benefit of any cloture motion.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I would like to ask through the Chair, if this would be an appropriate moment, I would like to speak to the amendment which I will offer and a few other remarks not to exceed 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. WARNER. Whatever the distinguished Senator from Illinois wishes, please proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recognizing the Senator from Illinois for 10 minutes?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, after wars are completed, history stands in judgment of the leaders, not just whether there was a victory or defeat in the war but whether the war was conducted properly. Almost without fail, history has been a brutal, sometimes difficult judge of the conduct of war. When put up in concern about protection and security, nations do things which don’t stand the test of time and reflection. The man I think was our greatest President, Abraham Lincoln, in the course of the Civil War suspended the writ of habeas corpus. By suspending that writ, he held prisoners without charges and without due process for long periods of time. It was concerned with a universal. Later on, it was judged that perhaps President Lincoln had gone too far.

In the midst of the First World War, with our concern over espionage, Congress enacted the Sedition Act which unfortunately tarred and condemned innocent Americans, and later on we came to realize that. In World War II, the most notorious act by our own Government was against our fellow citizens of Japanese ancestry who were interred in camps, innocent people. I know some of them. I have grown up with some of them. I know they carry scars from that incarceration. Throughout our history, as we reflect, we find there are things we should not have done in the course of a war. I have been in the floor in times that I believe eventually will be a very strenuous judge of our conduct in this war on terror when it comes to the use of torture. For decades, the United States had established a policy which we had never engage in torture—cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment. Then after 9/11, in the shock and fear that followed, this administration ended up trying to rewrite the standards for interrogation and torture. They are a proud chapter in our history. We now know the administration abandoned that effort after some time. We know as well that some of the people who were involved in it have been reluctant to even discuss what they were doing. But there was a good ending when last year Senator John McCain offered an amendment in the Senate to state unequivocally that the United States would not engage in the torture of prisoners, not engage in cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment of prisoners.

The reasons are obvious. Prisoners who are being tortured will say anything. It doesn’t have to be true. Secondly, the standard we set in the treatment of our prisoners—a one day be used against Americans who are taken as prisoners. So not only does it give you invalid information, it sets a standard that we never want our soldiers to be subjected to. By a vote of 90 to 9, the Senate enacted John McCain’s standard for torture, saying that we were not abandoning our longstanding commitment to it. I was happy to cosponsor that effort. There was a debate where Vice President Cheney came forward and we said we need to make an exception for agents of intelligence agencies in our Government. Thank goodness, the Vice President’s recommendation was rejected. The President signed it, and I hope he is living by it. Sadly, most of what he said afterwards, and we won’t know for a long time, if ever, whether it is being followed. I trust the word of the President when he says we are not engaging in torture. Now comes the next chapter.

If the President’s words are an indication, Guantanamo Bay is likely to be closed. That is a good thing. Guantanamo Bay and the prisoners who are there are in a different situation. If they are in fact a danger to the United States or to any soldiers or any person we value, they should be charged and held or held as enemy combatants. But if they are being held for intelligence purposes, we should be honest. For good or for honesty, for “goodness’ sake, what value could they possibly bring to our intelligence?

Several hundred men are being held. Last week, there was the startling discovery that three had committed suicide. It is an indication to me that Guantanamo Bay should be closed, as the President has suggested. I hope it is sooner rather than later.

Then what will happen to the prisoners? The amendment I will offer says that there are going to be transfers in the rendition of these prisoners, the transfers of these prisoners to some other place, some other country, we need to make sure that country abides by the same standards of humane conduct that we demand of ourselves. We cannot be content in sending these prisoners to some other place where they will be subjected to torture if, in fact, we have expressed a value in the United States that we are opposed to torture. I think this amendment will say, that we make that effort to ascertain and to review regularly those detention facilities to make sure they live by that same standard.

There has been a debate this week in Washington over the war in Iraq. It was also a week when the Department of Defense reported that we have lost 2,500 soldiers. White House spokesman Tony Snow was asked to comment on this loss of 2,500. I am sure the President, who made that comment, he didn’t reflect what he really feels in his heart when he said:

It’s a number.

I am sure he feels as we all do that it is more than a number. It is more than an aggregate. It is 2,500 precious lives that have been lost by men and women in uniform willing to stand and serve and risk their lives for America.

I have attended some of the funerals. They are heartbreaking. Most of the soldiers were very young men who are in the course of the Civil War suspended the writ of habeas corpus. By suspending that writ, he held prisoners without charges and without due process for long periods of time. It was concerned with a universal. I have attended some of the funerals. They are heartbreaking. Most of the soldiers were very young men who are that of grief which will be shared by families for years to come.

We are debating now what should we do in Iraq. The idea that we pull out our troops quickly, precipitously, is unacceptable. It would leave a situation in Iraq and would send a signal to our enemies in Iraq that we are here to stay, that may be a strong message to our enemies of our resolve, but it is the wrong message to our allies and friends. The Iraqis have to understand we are not going to stay definitely. Think of what we have done in this country, not only giving 2,500 of our best and bravest lives, not only having 20,000 of our soldiers come home, half of them with serious permanent injuries, 2,000 of them with head injuries, not only spending $300 billion in blood, but what we are doing in Iraq, this time that this administration had missed us as to what was happening there, this threat of weapons of mass destruction and nuclear weapons and connections with 9/11. It turned out they were all false.
None of them proved to be true. None of it to war anyway. We were told as soon as we arried that the Iraqi Army would turn on Saddam Hussein and join us in the fight, and that didn't happen. We were told the Iraqi people would greet us with open arms, and I know many are appreciative for what we have done, but it is still so unsafe in that country.
The average soldier just going down the street in a military vehicle is riskning his life every single day, more than 3 years after our invasion.

We are debating now what should we say. We are debating how to authorize for war, though, I have voted for every penny this President asked for. I lived through Vietnam. I remember what happened. An unpopular war was taken out on our soldiers, and that is not what I want them to do. I asked what we asked of them in the Vietnam war, as they are doing today. Politicians and selected officials can debate and differ on policy, but the bottom line is our soldiers are serving us and we should stand by them. This is an example and because of one basic standard: If it were my son or daughter in uniform, I would want them to have everything they needed to come home safely. That is the way I feel, and that is why I voted this week for the supplemental appropriation. But that won't stop me today and in the coming days from challenging this administration and challenging this Congress to make it clear that the Iraqis have to stand and fight and defend, and the American troops will stand with them. It is only time when that happens that we can truly say that our mission is accomplished.

Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I would like to share a few thoughts about the Strategic Forces Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, which I chair, which deals with the intercontinental ballistic missiles, and many of the other high-tech systems on which our Defense Department relies. But I just want to respond to my colleague, Senator DURBIN. I don't think he actually meant to say that our soldiers are coming home broken in body and spirit, but he came close.
That is not what I am hearing. Go out to Walter Reed. They may have broken bodies and broken bones, but they are not broken in spirit.

The night before last, I attended a wonderful event of the 231st birthday of the U.S. Army. I was talking with soldiers there. We were talking about the war and the politics of the Capitol. They are aware of what is going on. I told them that I thought the Congress would not vote for any immediate withdrawal, and indeed we voted yesterday 93 to 6 against any kind of withdrawal requirement for this government. That vote represents a strong bipartisan consensus of the Senate. One of those soldiers said: I will tell you what we want, Senator: "We want to win." We want to win this war.
That is what the American people want, that is what the soldiers who are there want, and that is what they believe in. The soldiers who have been there believe in what they have done. They have been courageous in performing their mis-

It is difficult for me and for them to understand this idea that we can support the soldiers but not support the mission we sent them on, sent them by a three-fourths vote of this Senate. A majority of Democrats and Republicans voted for the Iraq war. They are not going to stay the course, we are going to help our military succeed, and we are going to help them win.

The point I pick up more and more as I talk with these soldiers, what I am learning from these heroes, is that we are going to mess it up. They believe they are winning. They believe they are doing their job. They believe they will be successful. And they are really worried that this Congress will vote in a way that will lose its nerve and not stand with them after they put their lives on the line for this country.

I believe this is a big deal, and that success in Iraq is important for our Nation. I visited that region recently. I talked to the leaders of Turkey, Kuwait, Afghanistan, and Pakistan. What would it mean for us if we had a disastrous event in Iraq where the terrorists take over that country? What would it mean to their neighbors? What would it mean to the region? All nations of good will know we must succeed.

Iraq is stepping up. There are now 260,000 Iraqi soldiers and security personnel in uniform and reaching higher and higher levels of performance. They are doing a much better job every day.
They will soon be at 350,000 by the end of this year. They are being better equipped and better trained, and I believe we are doing a much smarter job of imbidding our soldiers with the mission. If we do that, if we do that so we can provide support, we can provide mentoring, we can provide advice, we can call on other kinds of support, if they need it, to be effective.

A majority of the raids and actions that are taking place in Iraq are taking place by the Iraqis. Iraqi soldiers are taking more casualties than American soldiers. We are not babysitting them.
This image of millions casting their ballots for a freely elected government of Iraq is not a bad image for us to remember. We need to remember that, and it is important for us, let me note first and foremost, that this Nation not allow the terrorists to win in Iraq.
We are going to be successful. But I realize the American people are concerned. They don’t like to see violence and continued death. They don’t like to see our soldiers at risk. I certainly understand that; neither do I.

I call on the leadership of General Abizaid, CENTCOM commander, and his team of generals because General Abizaid has always resisted the temptation to see how many troops we can put in Iraq. He said that is not the way to win this war. We ought to get the right number of troops, and we need to begin to draw them down as soon as it is appropriate to draw them down and lift up the Iraqi Army. That is what we need to do.

Some want to have the President set forth a detailed plan so they can criticize it, basically. How will some sort of formalized plan help our soldiers be effective in the battle? It just tells your enemy what you are going to be doing. More importantly, a detailed plan is not going to change the enemy. It will take time to change because the enemy changes. As soon as you shut off one avenue of enemy success, they take another one and you have to respond to that. That is the history of warfare. That is the way you have always been fought: you constantly adjust and constantly alter your efforts to be successful toward your ultimate goal of victory. That is what our military is doing.

Trying to demand a date from our military commanders, or trying to demand from them a plan of what they are going to do 5 months from now fails to understand and recognize the nature of this conflict, and this conflict more than most conflicts because we face an asymmetrical enemy, a nontraditional enemy, who knows it cannot stand and fight our military successfully, so it devises devious and sneaky ways to pit one religion against another, to attack American soldiers, to attack the local police, to create the Government of Iraq. But it hasn’t happened. Iraqis are still signing up and becoming policemen. Iraqis are still signing up and the army is growing. The Government of Iraq has elected, for the first time, their permanent leadership.

Prime Minister Maliki is in office. His whole Cabinet now has been established. The two key Cabinet positions on which they spent extra time, Defense and Interior, have now been confirmed and voted on by the 275 member Parliament. So they have their government now, fully elected, a permanent government, just like any other nation in the world. There is no interim government now.

I believe they are going to be successful, and I tell you, it is going to be important for the United States that they are. We have invested a lot; our soldiers have invested a lot. They are proud of what they are doing. They are not breaking in spirit. They want to be successful and win.

I have some numbers I will share with my colleagues and those around the country who might be listening. In this conflict, the Army has had the largest number of people serving in Iraq, yet their enlistment rate through May of this year was 104.3 percent. It is demeaning, it is dishonest, it is wrong to suggest that we have a policy to torture prisoners. With regard to Guantanamo, I know the President said he would like to see it closed. Well, I want to know what he is going to do with those prisoners. I have seen therein soldiers doing their jobs under difficult conditions every single day. They are highly professional. They do not allow themselves to be baited into overreacting when these prisoners display the worst kinds of anti-Americanism. They were their efforts to attack and undermine the United States. Their fervent desire was that Members of this Senate and the House of Representatives would use their deaths to speak on the floor to try to support our war against terrorism to make us less successful in the war on terrorism. That is exactly what their goal was. And, I would say this: does anyone in this Chamber doubt that if they had access to a bomb, they would have put that bomb on their body and killed anybody they could have? They would have killed themselves to promote their terrorist agenda. If they had been given the opportunity, wouldn’t they have put a bomb on and killed others at the same time?

I say those suicides are an absolute indication that we have in Guantanamo some of the most dangerous terrorists in the world.

Now, I heard an official of our great ally, the United Kingdom, say we ought to close Guantanamo. I wanted to write him and say: Do you want to take these prisoners to the U.K.? Do you want to hold them? And then if you were going to put them in the U.K., which they are just going to let them go in London on your subways and on your buses? Then the critics worry that if we turn them back to their home countries and we have a rendition of the prisoners back to their home countries, that we have to guarantee that they are going to be treated wonderfully. So we can’t keep them in Guantanamo, we can’t—who else wants them? We can’t even send them back to their home countries to be held in prison, apparently.

So we have the storage of nuclear waste. Everybody has nuclear waste, but nobody wants to do anything with it, and they use the argument that you can’t dispose of nuclear waste to try to block nuclear power. So this is just another attempt to make it more difficult, in my view, for us to be successful in handling these prisoners. They are not being tortured at Guantanamo. It is not the policy of the United States to torture prisoners and we get to duke it out and we get to have our say. We just voted yesterday 93 to 6 to declare we have no intention of any precipitous withdrawal from Iraq; that we are going to stand there with our soldiers, and we are going to stand with our allies in Iraq and help them establish a free, decent, democratic government, a government that will be to our national interests to an incredible degree. It will be more valuable than it is today. Do you want to go to most countries and to the world to have a decent, peaceful Iraq and to defeat the terrorists there who want to take it over and make their place.

The other good news is that we have had the very successful attack on the CEO of terrorism, Zarqawi, and he has been killed. He clearly was the No. 1 executive officer of terrorism in the world, and that was a big victory.

We also now completed the confirmation of the new Interior Minister for Iraq, so the entire Cabinet, and an entire government is in place. The Iraqi Army continues to get better, and it continues to grow, and we are beginning to see the possibility that our troops can be withdrawn. If we have to send more troops there, I will listen to the commanders. If they can bring the troops down, that will make me happy. We are going to listen to our commanders and do what it takes and continue this process of progress towards the end to what? Victory. That is that the soldiers we have sent there want, that is what the American people want, and that is what we in this Congress have to do; to figure out how to help our military people go forward and achieve victory. That will be my effort, and I think for the most part that is the bipartisan consensus of this Senate.

Mr. President, again, I finish with a tribute to the professionalism of those in service, to the risk they have incurred; how they have attempted to conduct the violence of war in a way that mitigates civilian casualties and that reflects the highest ideals of the United States of America. I could not be more proud of our service. The conduct of this war on terrorism will be received as the most humane and careful war in history.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator for Wisconsin.

Mr. WYDEN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, let me begin by saying I very much share the view of the Senator from Alabama about our troops. Day in and day out, they bring the utmost professionalism and the utmost courage and valor to the cause of standing up for American values. I very much share his views with respect to the tragedy we ought to be paying to the brave men and women who wear the uniform of the United States and who do it with such extraordinary patriotism and service to our country.

(Mr. SESSIONS assumed the Chair.)

What I am here to talk about, though, is the political decisions that are made and how they affect those courageous troops and how they affect the security of the country.

In March of this year, at a press conference, a reporter asked President Bush:

Will there come a day, and I’m not asking you when, not asking for a timetable—will there come a day when there will be no more American forces in Iraq?

The President responded:

That, of course, is an objective and that will be decided by future Presidents and future governments of Iraq.

I found that statement troubling for two reasons. One reason is I have been arguing in Iraq for years and years, in my view, will threaten Americans’ preparedness to deal with a host of other threats that ought to concern all of us. Certainly at the top of that list would be oil. The Iraqis own a great interest in military affairs. No Senator who looks at the facts and the world in a realistic way would conclude otherwise. It is a dangerous world.

I serve on the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. I know the distinguished Senator from Alabama has concern about corruption in the Iraqi oil sector. I brought that to the attention of the Defense Minister and the Interior Minister for Iraq, so the entire government is in place. The Iraqi Army continues to get better, and it continues to grow, and we are beginning to see the possibility that our troops can be withdrawn. If we have to send more troops there, I will listen to the commanders. If they can bring the troops down, that will make me happy. We are going to listen to our commanders and do what it takes and continue this process of progress towards the end to what? Victory. That is that the soldiers we have sent there want, that is what the American people want, and that is what we in this Congress have to do; to figure out how to help our military people go forward and achieve victory. That will be my effort, and I think for the most part that is the bipartisan consensus of this Senate.

Second, it seems to me that making this kind of open-ended commitment to stay in Iraq, an open-ended commitment that in effect says we will be there at least until 2006, doesn’t send the right message to the Iraqis about getting serious about their most serious challenges. For example, when I was recently in Iraq with my colleague, Senator Snowe, I was especially troubled by the Iraqi concerns about corruption in the Iraqi oil sector. We all know that 90 percent of the revenue generated in Iraq comes from oil, and there has been one independent analysis after another documenting widespread corruption in the oil sector. I thought that to the attention of the officials Senator Snowe and I met with on our trip. Essentially, the response was one of denial: Well, Senator, it really isn’t that bad; well, Senator, we are getting serious about it; well, Senator, we are thinking about trying X, Y, and Z.

But I say to the Senate today that we continue to read these independent analyses which have documented widespread corruption and malfeasance in the Iraqi oil sector. Yet it is not being dealt with. My view is that to say the future of American forces in Iraq will be decided by future Presidents is yet another reason that we have plenty of time to deal with serious problems like corruption in the oil sector, which should have been dealt with some time ago.

Again, I share the view of the Senator from Alabama concerning the professionalism of our troops. Our country, and the world is better as a result of the death of Mr. Zarqawi. The kind of carnage and the brutal campaign that Mr. Zarqawi conducted is well understood. We are all very hopeful, because we all root for success in Iraq, that this will deal a blow to the insurgency. Our soldiers and all concerned ought to be proud of what they accomplished in taking down Zarqawi. I am proud of them. I know the Senator from Alabama is as well.

But let us think about the implications of overstretching our Armed Forces. That is why I say I am troubled about how we are going to happen in Iraq and maintain America’s preparedness for a dangerous world if we stay and stay and stay—until at least 2009. Oregon Guard members, for example, of whom we are exceptionally proud, are on their third rotation in the theater. Some Active-Duty Forces are on their fourth rotation. Others are getting ready for their fifth rotation into harm’s way. I am sure that is also the case in Alabama. I am sure it is also the case in every part of the United States. I will tell the Senate today that I think the stress our courageous Armed Forces are dealing with now is at the point where, if we can’t get the Iraqis to speed up securing their own defense, this is going to undermine America’s preparedness to deal with a dangerous world.

Our Armed Forces are maintaining an exceptional level of professionalism under exceptional stress, but at a certain point it is just not possible to continue in that way and be ready for the kinds of crises and the kinds of national security challenges that exist today. So the preparedness of our U.S. military to deal with a host of national security challenges hinges on what happens in Iraq. The more responsibility the Iraqis take for their future, the less the United States must shoulder, and the sooner we can start bringing our troops home.

When our President says that a future American President will decide when to bring U.S. forces home, it seems to me that sends a message to the Iraqis that they have a lot more time. For the sake of preparedness, for the sake of Iraq securing its own future, we have to speed this timetable up. American troops cannot and should not be in Iraq forever.

Shortly, I will introduce a very simple resolution. It is a sense of the Senate on the President’s intention to keep U.S. forces in Iraq until at least 2009. The resolution is very simple. I will just read it this afternoon:

That it is the sense of the Senate that—
(1) the members of the Armed Forces serve the enormous respect and support of the Senate and the American people for the sacrifices that they are making on behalf of our country; and
(2) the President’s intention, as stated on March 21, 2006, that “future Presidents” will determine whether to keep members of the Armed Forces in Iraq undermines the preparation of the U.S. forces, and their capacity to respond to other crises and should not be supported.

I will close. Again I pick up on the Chair’s statement about the commitment of our troops and their courage and their valor. This is not, today, a debate about whether it was right to go to war. We had that debate. I was on the side that voted against, and other Senators were for it. We are long past that point. What we are dealing with now is how to win the peace. That is something which all Senators should be looking to try to work together on and find some bipartisan common ground.

I commend the Senator from Alabama for his statement about our troops. But I do believe we have to find a way to get beyond some of these artificial choices—like cutting and running or staying the course. Hopefully we can do that. I believe one area for bipartisan cooperation should be to try to speed up Iraq taking over its own future.

I was very troubled by the statement that it was the President’s intention that the future of our Armed Forces in Iraq would be dealt with by future Presidents. We have to deal with it now. We have to find a way to win the peace and do it on a bipartisan basis. I intend to work with colleagues on both sides of the aisle to advance this goal, which is not about whether you are for the war or against the war, it is today about winning the peace, and that is why I will be offering my resolution.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GREGG, Mr. President, as chairman of the Budget Committee, I regularly comment on appropriations bills that are brought to the Senate for consideration and present the fiscal comparisons and budgetary data. I believe it is useful to spend this time, when required, for authorization bills that we consider.

S. 2766, the national Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 2007, is, of course, one of the most important bills the Congress brings up on an annual basis. As Senators know, the Budget Committee does not enforce because passage of this bill and its signature by the President would constitute the vast majority of programs and projects addressed. Ultimately, those authorizations of appropriation only spend money once the Appropriations Committee acts on its Defense bill.

But there is another category of spending in the Defense authorization bill which the Budget Committee does enforce because passage of this bill and its signature by the President would create automatic spending. By that, I mean the direct spending or mandatory spending provisions in the bill.

According to a Congressional Budget Office estimate of June 9, 2006, S. 2766 as reported increases budget authority for mandatory spending by $458 million in fiscal year 2007 and $1.508 billion over the next 5 years. Corresponding outlays are $307 million in fiscal year 2007 and $1.416 billion over the next 5 years.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table of direct spending for S. 2766 excerpted from CBO’s official cost estimate be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, in evaluating our needs in the Department of Defense authorization bill, key factors will be our relationship with Iran and North Korea as we face two major problems of two nations: one having nuclear weapons and the other appearing to be intent on developing nuclear weapons. I applaud the President’s recent move to agree to bilateral negotiations with Iran subject to certain conditions, and I think he was precisely correct in saying that notwithstanding the difficulties with Iran and their apparent intransigence, that all diplomatic efforts ought to be explored before any consideration is given to the use of military force. I think that is a way to approach the international issues. While we deal with some of these issues in our neighborhood, all of our adversaries should theoretically remain on the table. But to the extent that these problems can be solved through diplomacy, that is obviously the preferable course.

In dealing with countries such as Iran and North Korea, it is difficult when the United States has branded them as the “axis of evil.” But President Reagan invited Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev to a dialogue within weeks after labeling the U.S.S.R. as the “evil empire.” So it is possible to have some tough dialogue and some tough rhetoric and, at the same time, work toward negotiations, no matter how difficult the adversary or potential adversary may be.

Early in my activities and public service, when I was an assistant district attorney in Philadelphia, I had an occasion to interview inmates at the State prison, Rockview, who were under the death sentence. Joining the district attorney’s office, I was low man on the totem pole, and the low man got the job of traveling to the State prison and talking to people under the death penalty, people who wanted to have their death sentences commuted. It was quite an experience. Very, very tough people who had committed heinous crimes, outrageous lives, bad backgrounds, about as tough a gang as you could find off the streets of Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and other parts of the State who had committed murders so atrocious that they had gotten the death penalty. That taught me a lesson, leading me to the conclusion that if you could talk to people like that, you could talk to anybody. You might disagree with people, but there is no reason not to talk. I am aware that it is a significant transfer to apply that kind of an experience to international diplomacy, but I think it has some weight.

There are those who oppose talking to Iran or North Korea on a bilateral basis because we don’t want to recognize them, we don’t want to give them any status. I think a comprehensive answer was made to that by Richard Armitage, who was Deputy Secretary of State right under Colin Powell during President Bush’s first term. This is what Mr. Armitage had to say:

It appears that the administration thinks that dialogue equates with weakness, that we have called these regimes evil and, therefore, we won’t talk to them. Some people say that talking would legitimize the regimes. But we are not trying to change the regimes, and they are alreadyigmatized in the eyes of the international community. So we ought to have enough confidence in our ability as diplomats to go eye-to-eye with people, even though we disagree in the strongest possible way, and come away without losing anything.

Our relationship with Iran has obviously been extremely difficult since the Shah was deposed in 1979. And Iran is a proud country with a proud history. There is, at least, some part of the motivation to become a nuclear power, nuclear military force to be with the big boys as a matter of international status. I think if we were willing to meet with Iran in a straightforward, diplomatic way as negotiating equals—the United States is never going to be equal with Iran because of the great difference in our power in the international field—but I do believe that our foreign policy would be enhanced if we treated foreign leaders, foreign countries with more dignity and respect. I think it would be a significant step forward if Iran were treated as a diplomatic and negotiating equal, that it might take some of the pressure off their determination to be a nuclear military power or, at a minimum, I think it is worth a try.

I made my first trip to the Middle East back in 1964, and in the intervening 42 years I have made almost 30 trips to the region. I tried to go to Iran shortly after the Iran-Iraq war ended in 1988, and my efforts to go there have never been successful. It is possible to travel to Iran as a tourist, but it is not—they are not receptive to having an official visit.

In the absence of being able to go to Iran, I have contacted and had discussions with two of the Iranian Ambassadors to the United Nations. I made my first contact back in May of the year 2000, a little more than 6 years ago, and I discussed with the Iranian Ambassador to the United Nations the possibility of an exchange of parliamentarians; that a group of Members of Congress and the House of Representatives might meet with a group of parliamentarians from the Iranian Parliament. I invited the Iranian Ambassador to the United Nations to a dinner in my hideaway, my office here in Washington, attended by a number of Members. I then met with his successor in August of 2003 and had moved toward concrete plans to have a group of Iranian parliamentarians meet with Members of Congress in Switzerland in January of 2004. Unfortunately, those plans fell through because there was a concurrent, harsh exchange of rhetoric, and the Iranians were not willing to meet at that time.

There was a significant development when the Iranian President, on May 8 of this year, sent President Bush an 8-page letter, and the President appropriately responded, showing interest in having negotiations with Iran. We had been pursuing efforts to have diplomatic efforts with Iran in concert with our European allies, trying to involve China and trying to involve Russia, and then Secretary of State Rice signified a shift of U.S. policy by indicating our willingness to negotiate directly with Iran by putting conditions on that offer to negotiate. To repeat, I believe that we ought to be willing to negotiate without conditions. We have similarly sought to deal with North Korea in collaboration with other nations, including Japan and South Korea, China, and Russia, and here again, it would be my hope that we would seek and be willing to have those talks without preconditions.

I was part of a CODEL led by Senator BIDEN in August of 2001, at the time when Senator BIDEN was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and we traveled to the Far East and had plans to meet with the North Korean President, and that did not materialize because of the same kind of pressure applied by Iran in our CODEL in concert with our European allies, trying to involve China and involving Russia, and then Secretary of State Rice signified a shift of U.S. policy by indicating our willingness to negotiate directly with Iran by putting conditions on that offer to negotiate. To repeat, I believe that we ought to be willing to negotiate without conditions. We have similarly sought to deal with North Korea in collaboration with other nations, including Japan and South Korea, China, and Russia, and here again, it would be my hope that we would seek and be willing to have those talks without preconditions.

I have found that in the meetings I have had on foreign travels that, at least in my opinion, they have been a bit productive. In the 25 years of my service in the Senate, I have been on the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, and for 8 years I served on the Intelligence Committee, chairing that committee during the 104th Congress in 1995 and 1996, and those committee assignments and my interests generally in foreign policy have taken me to some 93 countries.

One of the countries I have visited on many occasions is Syria. I have visited Syria on 15 trips, on nine occasions I have had the opportunity to meet with President Hafez al-Assad. I was the only Member of Congress to accompany the Secretary of State to his funeral in the year 2000, and I have since had an opportunity to visit on three occasions with President al-Assad.

In the course of those meetings I got to know President Hafez al-Assad. The first meeting was in 1988, and it lasted for approximately 4½ hours. I had long heard about President Assad’s willingness to engage in extended discussions. We covered a wide variety of subjects. We talked about Syrian relations with Israel. We talked about the Palestinian problems. We talked about the Iran-Iraq war. We talked about U.S.-Soviet relations. A number of occasions I suggested that I had taken too much of his time. On each occasion he would say: No, I am interested in talking more.

In the course of meeting President Hafez al-Assad on some nine occasions, it developed into a cordial relationship, even, you might call it, a joking relationship. I would urge President Assad to meet with Israeli Prime Ministers and say that our meeting, always attended by the local photographers, would appear on the front page of the Syrian newspaper, the Damascus newspaper, but if President Assad would meet with the Israeli Prime Minister, it would be world news.

I told him when Prime Minister Rabin and Foreign Minister Perez and Palestinian Authority Chairman Arafat got the Nobel Peace Prize, if he would work for peace with Israel, that he would get the Nobel Peace Prize in Stockholm.

He replied: Well, I might be welcome in Stockholm under the arrangement you suggest, but I might not be able to get back to Damascus.

In 1986 I suggested to President Assad that he permit the Jewish women in Syria to leave the country because there were very few Jewish men for them to marry. That was a subject which Congressman Stephen Solarz had undertaken, and I was carrying forward some of the suggestions that he had suggested to meet. President Hafez al-Assad said to me that anyone who came to claim a Syrian Jewish bride would be permitted to take the bride with him out of the country. I relayed that message to the large Syrian community in Brooklyn. Nothing much ever came of it. But in 1992, President Assad permitted all the Jews to immigrate out of Syria. My exhortations might have had some effect—whom knows as to what that might have been.

I could not urge President Assad to negotiate with Israel, and he would say that he would not do so but entertained the possibility of negotiations with Israel if sponsored by the big 5: sponsored by the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France, and the China. Israel was unwilling to engage in those negotiations because only the United States would be neutral or perhaps friendly toward Israel. Finally, President Assad agreed to try to go to Madrid, in 1991, to negotiate with Israel.

I had extensive discussions with a very distinguished Syrian diplomat, Walid al-Moualem. When Benjamin Netanyahu was Prime Minister of Israel, in 1996, upon taking office Prime Minister Netanyahu made a forceful declaration that Israel and he would hold Syria responsible for the actions of Hezbollah in southern Lebanon. That led to a realignment of the Syrian military, and for a time it looked as if that was a tense situation. I was in Israel at that time and was asked by Prime Minister Netanyahu to carry a message to President Assad that Israel was ready to pass a message to President Assad and later, when I met with Walid al-Moualem, the Syrian Ambassador to the United Nations—met with him here in Washington—he told me that the conversations I had had the message I carried from Prime Minister Netanyahu to President Assad had been, as he put it, “helpful in deescalating the dangerous tensions.”

Ambassador Moualem later told me I had gained the confidence and personal relationship with President Assad because, as he put it, “they viewed me as being objective” even though, as he put it, “nobody could question my support for Israel.”

I am not making any major contents, or making any claims as to what effect these visits would have had. But every little bit helps. In getting to know Assad and getting to know his son, it does provide an opportunity for a statement as to our values in the United States. I believe there is a case to like to see happen. I think it is helpful and certainly can do no harm.

In January of 1989, I made my first trip to Iraq and returned a year later with Senator SHELBY.

I will conclude briefly and will supplement my remarks today with more specification at a later time on exact dates, based on trip reports which I have summarized. Most of what I have said has come from floor statements which I have made in the past 25 years. And I will document this further at a later time when there is more time for the pursuit of negotiations with the Iranians.

In the body of the speech, I do not know if it would have ever been possible to have dissuaded Saddam Hussein from his practices of aggression, but on that occasion Senator SHELBY and I had a professional conversation with him, and it is my view conversations of that sort have the potential to be helpful.

I had an occasion to visit with Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat on some eight occasions. I have conveyed messages from Prime Minister Netanyahu to Chairman Arafat about the terrorism issue. Whether it had any effect or not I do not know. I have had occasion to visit Cuba on three occasions, meeting with President Fidel Castro on a wide range of conversations, urging him to have respect for human rights. I questioned him about the Soviet missiles in 1962, asking about possible involvement in the assassination of President Kennedy, which he denied in talking to him about assassination efforts. I believe there is a fruitful basis to have cooperation with Cuba on drug interdiction, and it is something I have pursued and intend to pursue in the future.

I have had occasion to visit China on four visits. I have had discussions with the Chinese leader about their failure to respect human rights, about the detention of a librarian from Dickerson College, who later was freed after a controversial resolution was filed in the Senate, and I have taken the lead in urging the Temple University to establish a school in Beijing to inform Chinese leaders about the due process of law.

I had an opportunity to meet with President Chavez in Venezuela last August. There was a controversy over drug enforcement. The Venezuelans would not meet with our ambassador, and I asked for a meeting of President Chavez with our ambassador. I met with the Venezuelan Minister of the Interior. I don’t have time to summarize it now, but President Chavez was willing to discuss a protocol for drug cooperation.

I believe the talks with people, even our tough adversaries, our toughest adversaries, can be fruitful. As we structure our legislation for the Department of Defense and look later to the Department of Defense appropriations subcommittee, a subcommittee on which I serve, it is my hope that the United States would be in the suit of negotiations with Iran on the same unconditional basis—again treating them with respect and seeking to find a way to have an international protocol which would contain and control the significant threat posed by North Korea.

As I say, Mr. President, I have generalized. Most of what I have said has come from floor statements which I have made in the past 25 years. And I will document this further at a later time when there is more time for the pursuit of negotiations with Iran.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to thank the Democratic Leader, Senator Reid, for his leadership and the hard work he has done to include an amendment to National Defense Authorization Act which increases protections for the dedicated women and men throughout our judiciary. The recent shooting of a State judge in Nevada provides another terrible reminder of the vulnerable position of our State and Federal judges. Unfortunately, this is not the only recent reminder. Last May, the Judiciary Committee heard the courageous testimony of Judge Joan Lefkow of Chicago, the Chicago judge whose mother and husband were murdered in their home. We must protect judges where they work and where they and their families live.

The amendment now incorporated into the bill which I cosponsored with Senator REID, Chairman SPECTER, and Senator DURBIN, would enact provisions from the Court Security Improvement Act of 2005, CSIA, S. 1968, which Chairman SPECTER and I introduced last November. Our bill and this amendment authorize additional resources to improve security for State and local court systems. We also respond to requests by the Federal judiciary for a greater voice in working with the U.S. service to determine their security needs. This amendment provides criminal penalties for the misuse of restricted personal information to seriously harm or threaten to seriously harm Federal judges, their families or other individuals performing official duties. It provides criminal penalties for threatening Federal judges and Federal law enforcement officials by the malicious filing of false liens, and provides increased protections for witnesses. It also includes an extension of lien benefits for creditors, bankruptcy, magistrate and territorial judges, and provides health insurance for surviving spouses and families of Federal judges, both of which are provisions that I suggested be included.

Finally, this amendment contains provisions which have passed the Senate several times extending and expanding to family members the authority of the Judicial Conference to redact certain information from a Federal judge's financial disclosure report. This redaction authority is intended to be used in circumstances in which the release of the information could endanger the filer or the filer's family. I hope that the House of Representatives finally takes up and passes this extension and expansion of redaction authority.

U.S. MARINE CORPS BASE CAMP LEJEUNE WATER CONTAMINATION

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, the motto of the U.S. Marine Corps is Semper Fidelis. Translated, it means, “Always Faithful,” but among members of the Marine Corps the motto holds a deeper meaning. Semper Fidelis represents our Nation’s shared commitment to those who dedicate their lives to protect us. As a Navy veteran, I know we must always honor the men and women of our Armed Forces and their families for the sacrifices they make for our Nation everyday.

Lately, I am afraid Congress has not fulfilled its commitment to our men and women in the military, and this is especially evident in the lack of support for our military veterans and their families. Our lack of assistance for those exposed to the highly contaminated drinking water at U.S. Marine Corps base Camp Lejeune in North Carolina is one of the best examples of this body’s shortcomings.

Camp Lejeune is the site of one of the largest drinking water catastrophes in our Nation’s history. Between 1980 and 1985, the Marine Corps drinking water samples collected by the Marine Corps found high levels of volatile organic compounds used by the Marines in solvents for industrial degreasing. The contaminated wells were closed in 1985; however, the contamination itself may date back until the late 1950s. To put the contamination in perspective, the current EPA health standard for these chemicals is 5 parts per billion. The tap water samples taken at homes and the elementary school between 1980 and 1985 routinely reached as high as 1,400 parts per billion.

While the health effects of exposure to the contaminants at Camp Lejeune are still being studied, the U.S. Agency for Toxic Substances, ATSDR, has documented at least 100 babies exposed in utero to the contaminated drinking water at Camp Lejeune have birth defects and cancers, including spina bifida, leukemia, and cleft palates. This is at least twice the rate found in the general population.

For the last 20 years, the calls for assistance from those affected by this contamination have gone unanswered. The Department of Defense’s cooperation has been slow, and the political will in Congress has been lacking. I will offer a modest amendment to answer the call for help.

Senator Dole’s amendment would do two things. First, it would provide veterans’ health care benefits to those exposed to contaminated water at Camp Lejeune. The in utero exposure to Camp Lejeune’s contaminated water happened under the Marine Corps watch, and it is our responsibility to assist those who were harmed. Medical assistance is a modest step to help restore faith among our veterans and their family members in the Government’s commitment to them.

Second, it requires the Marine Corps to notify those who may have been exposed to the contamination upon the completion of the ATSDR’s study on the human exposures to drinking water. To date, the Marine Corps has issued targeted press releases, but information has not been sent to all who may have been exposed. The ATSDR’s modeling of the contaminated water will make it possible to notify exposed segments of the Camp Lejeune population, without creating undue worry among the greater population that resides on base. This amendment will require the Marine Corps to provide notice to those who may have been exposed, to outline the events leading to the exposures, to describe the potential adverse health effects, and to give the affected people resources they can use to obtain more information.

I thank Senator Dole for her leadership on this issue. Without her, this tragic situation would not have gotten the attention it deserves.

Nevertheless, concerns have been raised about this amendment. The people exposed to the highly contaminated drinking water at Camp Lejeune have waited for decades for answers. Congress needs to take steps now and not delay for years debating this amendment.

For this reason, I have worked with Senator Dole on a second, compromise Dole-Jeffords amendment. This amendment would require a comprehensive National Academy of Sciences study to be completed within 18 months to evaluate the strength of the link between TCE and PCE exposure and adverse health impacts for prenatal, childhood, and adult exposures at Camp Lejeune. It requires the Navy to notify those potentially affected by the water contamination at Camp Lejeune so they can learn what happened, how it may have affected them, and what steps they may want to consider taking now to minimize the potential health impacts. While I am told by the Defense Department that individual notification by letter to each person affected is impractical, under this compromise amendment, the Navy would carry out a media blitz and place a letter on its Web page providing the information that those affected deserve to have.

Again, I thank Senator Dole for taking a bipartisan approach to this issue and for pushing to make constructive progress. We have a moral responsibility to support our troops and their families, and any failure to do so, is a failure to fulfill our commitment embodied in the Marine’s motto Semper Fidelis. I urge my colleagues to approve this compromise amendment.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period of morning business, with Senator Dole also permitted to speak for up to 30 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FATHER’S DAY

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, in a few moments we will be closing for the week. Before we leave, I want to take just a few moments to reflect on a very special holiday coming up this weekend that is Father’s Day.

On Sunday, families all across America will celebrate their dads with dinners and lunches and gifts and, if my family is typical, some gentle teasing over the course of the day. It is a day that we show our gratitude and how important our dads are—and have been and continue to be—in our lives.

In my own case, I cherish my memories of my dad. I think of him each and every day. He was my mentor in medicine, mentor in public service, mentor in humanitarian efforts, and my friend. It was his love and his wisdom and his encouragement that gave me the confidence to work outside of the box, to take risks, and to set high goals. As I was thinking back a few moments ago as to what I would say, I remembered in great vividness, after returning back to Nashville, TN, and working at Vanderbilt—after having been away from Nashville for a long period of time with college and medical school and my internship and residency and training and moving back to Nashville—every day I would drive by my parents’ home on the way to work at Vanderbilt Hospital.

As I would go by that house—and, ironically, it is the same house I live in today, but as I would go by that house, I would think, each day, about the values that dad—both parents and really the entire family—instilled in each of us.

I also used it as a marker place in coming home every night. As I drove by that white house, I would call. That number would be dialed as I was driving by. And by the time I got home, we would complete our conversation, on a daily basis—each and every day. Indeed, he was an extraordinary man in many ways, not in his accomplishments or just being a great physician, a humble physician treating people throughout middle Tennessee, but in his acts of generosity and in his kindness, his thoughtfulness throughout the community for his good works.

My father died in 1998. Mother and Dad both died within about 36 hours of each other of totally independent causes. In truth, it was referred at the funeral to a love story. A lot of people arrived for the funeral of my dad—my mother died about 30 hours later—and there were two caskets there. Thinking about how tragic it was, in truth it was a manifestation of what was a great love story, a marriage of over 65 years.

Dad, not too long before he died, wrote a letter to his grandchildren and great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren that he would never know—that is the way he opened the letter to them—passing on in about a two-page letter the insights he had in very simple ways, humble ways. It is a long letter, and I won’t read the whole of it but just a few paragraphs.

Again, this is a letter he left to be passed on to future generations. His advice was:

Be happy in your community. Charity is so important. There’s so much good to do in the world and so many different ways to do it. A little bit later in the letter he wrote:

The world is always changing, and that’s a good thing. You have to walk wisely and tovoy yourself in the world that doesn’t change. Morality, integrity, warmth, and kindness are the same things in 1910, when I was born, or in 2010 or later when you’re reading this. And that’s a good thing, too.

Dad is the one who had the high ideals. I have done my best to try to live up to those ideals and to that sterling example he set before us. I have worked hard as a dad to instill those same values and commitments in my own sons.

This weekend, as we celebrate our fathers and the good news that America’s fatherhood is more present in their children’s lives than ever, we all realize that they have a huge impact. Children involved with loving fathers are more likely to do well in school, to have healthy self-esteem, to show empathy, to avoid destructive behaviors. Kids do better with their dads around.

For a while, America seemed to forget this. But they were many in our kids what we have always known in our hearts: America’s dads deserve our respect and our support, dads on the frontline who risk their lives for our freedom, dads on the home front who work hard to support their families.

Fatherhood is the most important responsibility a man will ever take on. It is also the most rewarding.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, banks of day lilies are celebrating their brief moments of glory as they turn their vibrant orange faces to the sun. The days are warm and mellow, not too hot for working in the garden or in the yard. The evenings linger, fading slowly into velvet nights filled with the trill of nightingales, the chirking of crickets, the sparkle of lightning bugs, and the soft songs of whippoorwills. These are perfect evenings to spend on a country porch, watching the day slide into night. Late spring, almost summer—it is a lovely time of year.

On Sunday, June 16, the Nation will celebrate Father’s Day. Father’s Day does not arrive with quite the same fanfare as Mother’s Day. To be sure, stores have been busy reminding us to shop for Father’s Day, and the racks are full of Father’s Day cards, but the there does not have the same level of intensity as that which surrounds Mother’s Day. The long distance lines will not be as busy. Florists will not be swamped with orders. But fathers around the country will be treated to brunch or to some other family gathering. They will open presents of golf shirts, ties, or cologne bought by family members frustrated because dad always just buys what he really wants whenever he wants it. He is forgiven for this fault only because his family is often more significantly influenced by the approach of any holiday, including Father’s Day. Of course, fathers will put their dramatic skills to the test in order to express their gratitude. The comedian Bill Cosby famously once said, “Fatherhood is pretending the present you love most is ‘soap-on-a-rope.’”

This is not to say that Nation does not appreciate men. Far from it. We observe the birthdays of our Founding Fathers. We celebrate the fathers and other men who brave the terrors of distant battlefields to defend the Nation. We have monuments and parks, schools and museums that honor the men who have won battles, made important discoveries, or who have contributed to the growth and prosperity of our Nation. But rarely, if ever, are these memorials dedicated to the important role that men play in their own families. The role that fathers play in the lives of their children, in helping to shape the future of the Nation, certainly merits this one day of recognition.

The poet William Wordsworth observed: “Fatherhood is pretending the present you love most is ‘soap-on-a-rope.’”

Fathers carry a heavy load of duty, responsibility and worry. Every day, and during many sleepless nights, they worry about big things, like the state of the economy or trade agreements on their jobs. Will they be able to support their families and make their mortgages on time? Will they keep their job or lose it to an overseas competitor? Is their pension secure? Will they have health care? And for themselves, for men are not very good about going to the doctor regularly, but for their families. Fathers also worry about small details, like oil level in the lawn mower or that suspicious drip under the sink. Is the prime interest rate going up or down, and how will that affect their ability to pay the monthly bills? Everything that can affect their families is a concern for fathers, who take their role as providers for their families very seriously, indeed.

By June 16, children are out of school at last. In days past, that would mean long summer days to while away with swimming and in play, and idle hours spent reading a book in the shade. In today’s world, however, summer vacation for children out of school is often a headache for families with two working parents. Summer becomes instead a scheduling nightmare of day camps or sitters, or of latchkey kids who must spend the day indoors behind lock and key because there is no adult available to supervise their play. Instead of two working parents meaning a better life, today two working parents may as easily signal a family working hard just to keep up. Many fathers endure long commutes between work and home so that their families can live in a nicer neighborhood than those same families did growing up. Fathers are often portrayed as workaholics who live for their jobs and whose families are a mere annoyance. If they dislike them at all. In truth, fathers worry about their jobs because they fear that, if they do not concentrate on their work, they will lose their jobs and not be able to provide for their families. Today's economy is too uncertain, too volatile, and too global to take for granted.

This Father's Day, so many fathers are in harm's way in Afghanistan or in Iraq facing daily dangers that have already taken too many other fathers from their wives and children. To them and to their families, I offer my prayers of thanks and of safekeeping. May God bless them safely home. The families for whom this Father's Day will be a mix of loving remembrance and painful loss, I can offer only the comforting words of sympathy and the acknowledgment of their sad, sad loss. These fathers in heaven, if they are, still have an important place in the family. Like all fathers, they teach by example. In this case, their example is one of bravery and sacrifice, patriotism and service.

Clarence Budington Kelland once wrote of his father: "He didn't tell me how to live; he lived, and let me watch him do it." These fathers in uniform, like good fathers everywhere, teach by the example of their own lives. These words that a father speaks to his children in the privacy of home are not heard by the world, but, as in whispering-galleries, they are clearly heard at the end and by posterity." Jean Paul Richter made that observation, and I agree with him. As he stood by my side and said: I've found him worthy and just as fine.

A prince of men—that dad of mine.

THAT DAD OF MINE

He's slowing down, as some folks say,
With the burden of years from day to day;
His brow bears many a furrowed line;
He's growing old—that dad of mine.

His shoulders sag, and his step is slow;
And his hair is white, as white as snow;
But his kind eyes sparkle with a friendly light;
His smile is warm, and his heart is right.

He's old? Oh, yes. But only in years.
For his spirit soars as the sunset nears.
And blest I've been, and wealth I've had,
In knowing a man like my old dad.

And proud I am to stand by him.
As he stood by my side and said: I've found him worthy and just as fine.

A prince of men—that dad of mine.

REFERRAL OF NOMINATION

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE, SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE,

Hon. BILL FRIST, Senate Majority Leader, Washington, DC, June 15, 2006,

DEAR MR. MCDONNELL: On June 15, 2006, the Committee on the Judiciary reported favorably the nomination of Kenneth L. Wainstein to be the Assistant Attorney General for National Security. Pursuant to section 170(b)(1) of S. Res. 400 of the 94th Congress (as amended by Section 506(d) of the USA PATRIOT Improvement and Reauthorization Act of 2005 (Mar. 9, 2006)), I request that the nomination of Mr. Wainstein be referred to the Select Committee on Intelligence for a period not to exceed 20 calendar days.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

PAT ROBERTS, Chairman.

Mr. MCDONNELL. Mr. President, I today salute a hero for all Americans, a leader for his party, and my friend, Senator Robert J. Dole.

This week marks 10 years since Senator Dole retired from this Chamber, a day I remember well. Senator Dole left as the longest-serving Republican leader in Senate history. In fact, the beginning of his leadership tenure coincided with my first term in the Senate, starting in January 1985.

Even then, it was clear that Senator Dole was and is not just another Senator, but a national fixture in American politics. Author Michael Barone, writing in his Almanac of American Politics, has this to say about our friend from Kansas:

"Senator Bob Dole is one of the large political figures of our time, in the middle 1990s towering over everyone else in the political landscape, even the President . . . . for Bob Dole is not only one of the most successful politicians of the second half of the 20th Century but also one of the most enduring."

Powerful words about a powerful leader. Many of my colleagues have already recounted Senator Dole's extensive political career, his record of legislative accomplishment, and his leadership of the Republican Party, here in the Senate and as the Republican candidate for both President and Vice-President of the United States. Beginning with his chairmanship of the Republican National Committee in 1971, Senator Dole was a prominent player on the national stage for a quarter-century.

Senator Dole's heroism on the battlefield is well-known and revered by us all as well. In 1945, a young Lieutenant Dole from Russell, KS, found himself on the hills of Italy with Nazis. Suddenly pain exploded in his back. Paralyzed by his war injury, Bob Dole spent 4 years in hospital wards, relearning how to do simple tasks, like button his shirt. To this day his right arm remains largely paralyzed.

I believe the determination and focus Senator Dole must have had to recover from that injury explains his success in politics, and with the American people. After struggling to regain control of his body, lining up a vote on a difficult bill might be a little less daunting. I have heard Senator Dole say before that no honor that has come his way has ever surpassed the pride he felt at wearing his country's uniform.

Bob Dole, a Republican. It was about results, not symbolism or showmanship. President George H.W. Bush, for instance, cited him as instrumental in the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act in 1990. Out of office, he has continued to serve his country, fundraising for worthy causes and raising awareness of the dangers of prostate cancer.

Senator Dole is also famous for his dry, Midwestern wit, which has lifted many of us here in the Senate in times of despair as well as levity. This is a man who, after losing the Republican Presidential nomination in 1988, assured an audience that he "went home and slept like a baby. Every couple of hours, I'd wake up and say, 'Boy, I'm sorry.'"

My colleagues and I continue to be graced every day in this chamber by the presence of another prominent Senator Dole, the Senator from North Carolina, ELIZABETH, I wish to express how happy we all are Bob has found you, and you have found Bob. You remind us of him every day, and we hope that you will tell him how much we all respect and miss him, and how pleased we are to honor his service.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, last Sunday marked the 10th anniversary of Senator Bob Dole's retirement from the Senate. Bob Dole served the people of Kansas and the people of the United States of America as a Member of Congress for more than three and a half decades. He was an inspiration to many issues, but, above all, I will always admire his tireless, passionate advocacy on behalf of people with disabilities.

The first speech that Bob Dole ever wrote, he has continued to serve—on April 14, 1949—was about the challenges faced by Americans with disabilities. That date was the 24th anniversary of the day he was gravely wounded in World War II. In fact, every year that he was in the Senate, on or about April 14, Bob Dole made a statement on the floor about the challenges faced by individuals with disabilities. But Bob Dole did much more than just talk about expanding access and opportunities for people with disabilities. He was an outstanding leader in bringing about change for the good.

Most importantly, I will always be grateful for Senator Bob Dole’s leadership in helping to pass the Americans with Disabilities Act in 1990. Bob told me and I remember the day that it was signed into law as one of the proudest in our entire legislative careers.

It is hard to believe, but it has been nearly 16 years since we passed the Americans with Disabilities Act. Just as many predicted, ADA has taken its place among the great civil rights laws in our Nation’s history. Today, the impacts of ADA are all around us. Drive-through restaurants have visual displays that ensure deaf and hard of hearing to place their orders. Banks have talking ATMs, now, to assist those with visual impairments. Cities have installed curb cuts and ramps to allow wheelchair users easier access. And at least as important, because of ADA, we have seen an enormous change in attitudes. These changes that we see today, that we feel today, would not have been possible without the hard work and dedication of Senator Bob Dole in working cooperatively to get the ADA passed.

On a bipartisan basis, we miss Bob Dole here in this body. But the good news is that there is still a Senator DOLE in the Senate, and our friend Bob has found a richly satisfying life after the Senate. Today, he continues to serve the American people in a whole range of voluntary capacities, proving President Reagan’s dictum that “you don’t have to be on the public payroll to be an outstanding public servant.” I salute my good friend, Bob Dole, and I wish him all the best.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, of all my colleagues, I suppose that in 1996 I was the one most hoping that Bob Dole would not retire from the Senate. That was because I was doing my best to defeat him in the New Hampshire Presidential primary. If I had, Bob had told several friends he was “going back to the Senate.” Well, Pat, I wish of us a few percentage points, and Bob beat me. Within a few weeks, I was back in Tennessee at a press conference endorsing Bob Dole and presenting him with one of my red and black plaid shirts. “I hope it’s his last one,” Bob’s friend Howard Baker was heard to mutter, referring to my shirt.

I should have known better. In my first Iowa poll in June of 1995, pollster Whit Ayres said, “Governor, this is the professional challenge of my career.” The polls say, “Dole 54, Alexander 3, margin of error 4 percentage points.” The end result in the caucuses 6 months later was a good deal closer, but Bob Dole won because he had earned for himself the unofficial title of “President of Iowa.” Iowans liked his spare talk, his good humor, his war record, and his Middle-American brand of politics.

So did and does the rest of America. Not everyone comes out of a Presidential race more admired than when he or she went in. But Bob Dole did. He ran three times, the last time securing the Republican nomination. And, I would judge, he is even more admired today than 4 years ago when he retired from the Senate.

Bob Dole is an emblem of America’s greatest generation. He and our colleague ELIZABETTA are together one of our country’s most admired couples. When we think of him, and of them, we think of what is best about public service in America and about our country itself.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. President, today I honor a great American, a man who dedicated his life to this nation and to the just principles he believed in. Born in Russell, KS, Robert J. Dole would serve our country as a war hero, risking his life for a fellow soldier fighting the forces of fascism and Nazism. And as a Senator, a great Majority Leader, my party’s candidate for Vice President and President and today as an active private citizen fighting for veterans and the causes in which he believes.

For his bravery in World War II, Bob Dole received two Purple Hearts for his injuries, and the Bronze Star Medal for his attempt to assist a downed radio man, Bob Dole served in the House and Senate representing his home State of Kansas. In 1971, President Nixon asked him to be the Chairman of the Republican National Committee, a post he held for 2 years. Then in 1976, President Ford selected Bob Dole as his running mate for the Republican nomination.

Rest assured, Bob Dole rose to the pinnacle of our leadership here in the U.S. Senate as the Majority Leader. He was a tireless and effective champion of conservative principles, a strong foreign policy and personal freedom and responsibility.

One decade ago, Senator Dole resigned his post to devote himself fully to his 1996 presidential campaign. As my party’s nominee he crossed the country running on a platform of lower taxation and smaller, more accountable government. Unfortunately, he didn’t win, but he developed a good working relationship with President Clinton and the two leaders have devoted their time and energy to many notable causes over the years. Shortly after the 1996 election, President Clinton bestowed upon Senator Dole the highest civilian award in Government, the Presidential Medal of Freedom.

To those who know him, Senator Dole is a regular comedian. One story goes that in his campaign trail in his home state of Kansas, he would spend an hour at each stop telling jokes and only 10 minutes talking about politics.

Senator Dole was always able to demonstrate a quick wit, while also showing that he was well grounded in decency.

Senator Dole continues today to serve the many veterans of World War II who fought so valiantly to liberate our country and defeat the Axis. Most recently, it was his personal dedication and determination to see a monument honoring the sacrifice of the World War II veterans that led to the construction of the beautiful tribute to selfless service that now graces the National Mall.

I wish Senator Dole and his lovely wife, my colleague, Senator ELIZABETH DOLE, more happy years together and many happy returns to the United States Senate.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I was first elected to the Senate in 1993 in a special election to fill the remainder of Lloyd Bentsen’s term. Bob Dole, like my predecessor Lloyd Bentsen, is a member of the “Greatest Generation” —the generation of men who never wavered in answering the call to duty, fighting in distant lands to protect the free world, and returning home to build the greatest Nation on Earth. Bob Dole epitomizes the “Greatest Generation,” not only for his heroic service in battle, but also for what he did when he came home, ultimately serving in the U.S. Senate.

When I first arrived in Washington, Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas was the only other female Republican Senator. Fortunately, our leader Bob Dole understood the unique and important voice women brought to the Senate. He graciously welcomed me from the first day, and I enjoyed working with him as he ascended from minority leader to majority leader. He was great in both roles, and I appreciate the leadership and support he provided in my early days.

One of my first discussions with Bob was committee assignments. I told him I wanted to serve on the Armed Services Committee, as there are more military members serving in Texas than any other State. To help carry on the great tradition of helping our men and women in uniform like so many Texas Senators before me. He understood why this committee assignment was important to me and realized the unique perspective I would bring to the national discussion. I was the first woman to sit on this committee in over 30 years. Today, there are three women serving on the Armed Services Committee, including Bob’s wife, Senator ELIZABETH DOLE, who was elected after Bob retired from her home State of North Carolina.

On the 10th anniversary of Bob Dole’s retirement from the Senate, I am proud to honor him for his many accomplishments and tireless service to our country. While we all regretted to see him go, we are grateful for the legacy he left behind, and I hope we can carry it forward for generations to come. He was a giant during his time.
in this institution, and when the history of the Senate is written, I am confident that he will be fondly remembered as one of our great leaders.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, it was just about 10 years ago that Bob Dole announced his retirement from the Senate. It was 1996 and the Nation was in the midst of an intense campaign for the Presidency. Bob Dole had decided to resign his Senate seat for the good of his home State of Kansas, his party, and the country knowing how he would have to focus all his energies on his campaign for President if he were to be successful, so he left Washington to answer another call to serve his country and provide a choice to the people of Kansas and the rest of the United States when the election was held in November of that year.

We really shouldn’t have been surprised. Answering the call to serve his country was nothing new for Bob Dole and he was proud to be able to do it. Over the years he had worn many hats, a legislator, a decorated war hero, and a leader both inside and outside of the Senate. Through the years, Bob Dole always answered the call to serve his country when he was needed, and I have no doubt that he will continue to do so for many years to come.

It’s not secret. Bob Dole has made it clear all his life. You want to know and understand him, you must first understand Russell, KS—the people who live there and the values and principles they hold dear. By coming to know the people of Russell, you understand the philosophy that Bob Dole has lived by his entire life. It’s a philosophy of hard work, and of always giving your best to whatever you choose to do. It is a reflection of his father’s view of the world—‘stewers versus doers.’ Needless to say, you will always find Bob Dole in the ‘doers’ group.

That is why the story of Bob Dole’s life is intertwined with the story of Russell, KS. For it was when he was growing up in Russell that Bob Dole committed himself to the service of God, Country and family. They came to become his core values as he learned at a young age that there are things worth fighting for and that is what drew him to his service in the military.

Those who have chronicles those difficult years in our history have called him part of our greatest generation. Without his heroism, Bob Dole left everything he called dear behind to face a challenge as great as any generation had faced before. Pearl Harbor had been attacked and the whole world had taken up arms in a battle against an unspeakable evil that had been unleashed upon the world. World War II had called him to action and Bob Dole was a young man serving in the U.S. Army. He would never be the same again in mind or body. Given the circumstances, I don’t think anyone would have blamed him for staying home and leaving the battlefields of Europe and the South Pacific and not have been changed forever.

As he bravely fought in the mountains of Italy, he was wounded in action, but still he fought on. Then, he was wounded again, this time far more seriously. The odds were against him, but he somehow made it through those vital first days. He then began what would be a long trip to recovery. He had a long stay in the hospital and despite the efforts of those who attended him, he had lost the use of an arm.

When he was released from the hospital, he was still thinking of a special place of Russell, KS, again reached out to him with open arms and provided him with the support he needed to continue to recover from the wounds he had suffered on the battlefield. Once again, the bonds that tied him to the people of Russell and Kansas became stronger. Those bonds helped Bob Dole to regain his strength and begin to plan for the future.

Soon he heard the call to serve again. With the support of the people of his home State of Kansas, he returned to the U.S. Congress. His leadership skills were quite apparent and he compiled quite a record in the Senate. He progressed through the ranks and his service and leadership would then be rewarded when he became Senate Majority leader. Every day on the Senate floor, he took a leadership role on a wide variety of issues that he knew were important to the people of his home State. Through the years he worked to make sure our American values were protected and preserved in all the proceedings of Congress. It was a remarkable record of service that continued until that day, ten years ago, when he resigned to pursue the call to carry the Republican banner for President.

Although that final political campaign of his was not successful, Bob Dole will always be remembered for a lifetime of service to the United States. For many honors for his service to the United States, and for being a part of a noble cause that the greatest generation took up for which so many fought and died. He never forgot those with whom he served or the needs of our Nation’s veterans. In fact, it was those ties from so many years ago that led him to join the effort to construct a memorial for World War II to recognize those with whom he served—especially those who never returned. His leadership in that effort resulted in the dedication of a beautiful memorial that will stand forever in the shadows of the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument on the Mall in our Nation’s Capital.

Today, Bob Dole and his wife Elizabeth continue to be a great team as she serves the people of North Carolina with the same care and attention that Bob Dole has always provided the people of Kansas.

Bob Dole always said that his goal in life was to defend and serve the America he learned to love in Russell. I think the record shows that he succeeded in that effort and, in so doing, left his mark throughout much of the world as he fought in Europe to free the oppressed, and, in the Senate, for the principles and values he had learned to cherish as a young boy growing up in Russell, KS.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to congratulate my friend, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who has achieved the distinction of being the longest serving Senator in the history of the Senate. Even though this is definitely a noteworthy achievement, what has set Senator BYRD apart from all others who have served as Senators is the dedication he has shown to the duties of his office, his respect for the traditions of the Senate, and his leadership of this body during his service in the Senate.

Mr. BYRD, as Senate majority leader, and chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has succeeded in protecting and enforcing the rules of the Senate, first written by Thomas Jefferson during his service as Vice President and the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and he used his leadership skills to successfully lead the Senate in changing the rules when a consensus for modernizing the rules permitted.

Perhaps his greatest contribution to our understanding of the Senate was his authorship of the ‘Addresses on the History of the United States Senate,’ the most comprehensive account of the role the Senate has played over the years.

I commend the Senator from West Virginia for his illustrious and record-breaking career in the Senate, and I wish for him many more years of service to this body.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am sorry that I was not present on the floor on Monday when my colleagues paid tribute to my friend, ROBERT C. BYRD, but I would like to add my voice to the chorus speaking on his unsurpassed contributions to the U.S. Senate and to America.

I say without hesitation Senator BYRD is one of the most remarkable men I have ever had the privilege to work with. Although he has been here for 33 years, he is the only Member whom I have looked up to as my senior—my senior in every way.

When my days are finished in this Chamber, my children, my grandchildren, and my great-grandchildren will be here and I can only say, more than any man I’ve ever known.”

I say the same of ROBERT BYRD. When he walks on the floor, Constitution in his pocket, and he looks around, raises his voice, points his finger, he is our stonewall. He is the unshakeable rock of this institution. He is our foundation. He is the protector of this body.

I am absolutely certain that the Senator’s service, knowledge, and contributions to this Senate will never be surpassed. This country gentleman has no peer. No one has given as much to this institution or loved it as much as the senior Senator from West Virginia.

The first is: Your life is what it is because of ROBERT BYRD. And he is our wise senior, not because of the records but because he is a man of his conviction. He has told the truth on every issue that confronts our country. He is our rock of integrity.

When I was elected at age 29, and 6 weeks later, before I was sworn in, my wife and daughter were killed in a terrible car accident, Senator BYRD came to the funeral home. He waited in a long line to pay his respects. It was an act of kindness that I have never forgotten.

I know how bittersweet this honor is for him, as his life mate, Erma, would have been 89 years old this week. We all admire the love and devotion the two of them had for each other, in health and in sickness. We know his first love was not in the Chamber; it was at home. We also know how proud he would be of him this week.

One of America’s favorite West Virginians, who can cite a lot of records in his day, is Mr. Clutch. Jerry West. He once said: “You can’t get much done in life if you only work on the days when you feel good.”

Senator BYRD has worked 17,331 days—days that have been good and bad. In all that time, he has made the most out of every one of them and gotten more done than anyone will ever know. It has been an honor serving with him for 12,209 of those days. I look forward to many more days and years together.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in paying tribute to one of our most distinguished Members, the Senior Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD.

As he passes the milestone of becoming the Senate’s longest serving Member, I would remind him of a statement by Yogi Berra when they asked him about one of his many records, He said, “I knew it would stand until it was broken.” Perhaps when medical science allows us to live to be 150 years old his record may be broken, but until then, I think he is safe.

Knowing the Senator’s affection for the simple truth, I just want to make three points: I want to recognize this achievement which he embodies to an extraordinary degree.

The first is: Your life is what you make it.

Our former colleague, Senator Dave Durenberger told me the story of a Friday afternoon in the Senate in 1987 when he was standing in for Senator Dole for the procedural “wrap up” with Senator BYRD. The Twins were in the World Series at the time and on the Record, Senator Durenberger asked Senator BYRD if he wanted to come to Minnesota to see one of the games.

Senator BYRD said he had not seen a professional baseball game, or football game for more than a decade. But he said he had not been idle. He shared that he had read the Bible cover to cover many times, had read all the plays of Shakespeare, all the Lives of Plutarch and the entire Oxford University Press. He is the protector of this body.

Many of us wonder what we might accomplish without the many distractions of modern life. We should look to Senator BYRD for the answer.

The second point I would like to make is: People change.

When we look at ROBERT BYRD’s upbringing and the person he has become, it underlies a basic truth which has been made clear by all the great hearts and minds of history. Life is not what happens to you, but what you do with what happens to you.

Change and growth is always possible in people’s lives, if they have the courage to change and discipline to grow.

And my third point is: This Senate is unique.

For the sake of the 100 of us who temporarily occupy these seats, Senator BYRD has embodied the truth that the Senate is unique in human history and its value must be preserved.

The genius of the Founders was their understanding of the heights and depths of human endeavor and their ability to translate those thoughts into practical institutions which maximized the heights and minimized the depths.

They knew that the philosophy of democracy must honor both the principle of majority rule and the protection of minority rights. And so in article I of the Constitution they created a House to operate mostly by majority rule and a Senate to protect minority rights. The balance they struck has given a dynamic quality to the Congress that serves our Nation well on every conceivable issue.

I have often gone up to Senator BYRD on this floor and told him that he has given me something I could not get from any other source: a proper appreciation for the living history of the Senate that leads to reverence for this institution.

I think America could use more devotion like that.

In closing, I congratulate Senator BYRD on his amazing accomplishments and to his 17,331 days in service to his country in the U.S. Senate. When the history books record his deeds and actions, he will truly be remembered in the pantheon of legends that have forever left their mark on our great nation.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, just a few days ago Senator ROBERT C. BYRD set a very remarkable record. He is now the longest serving Senator in the history of the Senate. The Senate, the legislative body that means so much to him, now honors him for his achievement and for the remarkable record of service that he has given to the United States. I think it is fair to say that no one has done so with a greater awareness of what it means to be a Senator and of all the institution of the Senate represents. He is truly our institutional memory and he is the master of the Senate’s rules and procedures. No one knows better than he the precedents and prerogatives of the Senate, and no one is a better protector, promotor and defender of them than he is. It is not just for the length of his service that Senator BYRD is being honored, however. It isn’t so much the years he has served but the service he has provided to the people of the United States and his State of West Virginia. He has earned him the praises that he has received and will continue to receive from his colleagues and his constituents.

Our celebration of this moment and all he has achieved is softened by the loss of his beloved wife Erma, his greatest friend and supporter, his companion through life and almost 69 years of marriage, who passed away recently. I am sure she is looking down on us all, proud and thrilled to see Senator BYRD on a variety of issues, most recently the Miner Safety Act. We were there at the President’s side as he signed that bill into law. As he did, he noted Senator BYRD’s presence because he knew the bill was the result of Senator BYRD’s heartfelt concern for the miners of his State, for their safety, and the security of their families.

I have no doubt that if we were to look up Senator BYRD’s life in any book it would immediately refer us to Senator BYRD’s work in the Senate. He has been an active and effective advocate for the people of West Virginia and his work is based on a profound and substantive mastery of the history and meaning of the U.S. Constitution and the role it plays in shaping our values and our way of life as Americans. We both have a habit of carrying a copy in our pocket to remind us of our job here in the Senate and our responsibility as Senators to adhere to the provisions of the Constitution and all it says and requires us to do.

Whenever I think of Senator BYRD, the first thing that comes to mind is his incredible knowledge and understanding of world history and the American experience. He also has a profound and substantive mastery of the legacy of the written word. When he steps forward to take to the floor to present his views on an issue, he has a ready reference to the precedents of the past, or the words of some great author who had written something appropriate to the moment.

Now, Senator BYRD, the great student of the history of our Nation and so much more, is himself a part of the great story of America and the traditions of the Senate. Every day he joins us here to deliberate on the issues before the Senate, he writes another chapter in our history, a story that will be forever told and retold back in his home State, in the mountains and valleys of West Virginia, by the people who live there who will forever remember him and his legacy as their Senator—a legacy that will never be forgotten.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES
1ST SERGEANT MICHAEL MATTHEWS
SENIOR SERGEANT KENNETH KRAUS
STAFF SERGEANT JACOB LONG
MR. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, it is my honor today to pay tribute to three courageous soldiers from the city of Roswell, GA, whose service to country and community merits grateful recognition.

1SG Michael Matthews has served 21 years in the U.S. Army and Army National Guard and is currently a member of Charlie Co., 108th Armored Regiment, 48th Brigade of the Georgia Army National Guard. On August 30, 2005, Sergeant Matthews was seriously wounded when two Iraqis detonated an Improvised Explosive Device next to his convoy 25 miles south of Baghdad. Sergeant Matthews continues to recover from his injuries, and following his recovery, the Roswell Police Department will welcome him back to his position on the force. Sergeant Matthews was a uniformed police officer and SWAT team member and, in 2005, was named the Police Officer of the Year.

SGT Kenneth Kraus served as a U.S. Marine on duty at the U.S. Embassy in Iran during February of 1979. As revolutionaries overpowered the Embassy, Sergeant Kraus successfully negotiated the release of several American civilians before he was wounded and taken prisoner. He was interned in Iran and interrogated repeatedly, he was given a 20 minute trial and sentenced to die the next day. Sergeant Kraus was pulled from his cell in the hours after his sentencing by a representative from the U.S. Embassy and finally released. He was flown to Germany for medical treatment and then home to the United States. The Roswell Police Department has been fortunate to have Sergeant Kraus work with them as a detective for over 11 years.

SSG Jacob Long serves as Company Master Gunner in Charlie Co., 1st Battalion, 121st Infantry Regiment, 48th Brigade of the Georgia Army National Guard. On April 22, 2006, Staff Sergeant Long returned from a year-long deployment in Iraq during which Charlie Co. became responsible for sending Baby Noor, an Iraqi infant with spinal bifida, on a flight to obtain vital treatment in the United States and Baby Noor underwent successful surgery in Atlanta. In addition to his service abroad, Sergeant Jacob has worked with the Roswell Parks and Recreation Department for over 10 years.

These individuals continue to better their community and their Nation with selfless dedication to their careers in public service. I am proud to join the city of Roswell, the State of Georgia, and our Nation in honoring these brave men who have exemplified service to others on the local, national, and international level.

A BLOW TO GUN TRAFFICKING

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, a unique type of gun trafficking sting operation was completed recently. Teams of undercover law enforcement officials wearing hidden cameras traveled to Georgia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Virginia to make purchases which were designed to appear to be what are known as “straw purchases.” Straw purchases are transactions that violate Federal law in which one individual submits to the requirements for a gun that is clearly intended to be used by someone else. These purchasers play a crucial role in the illegal trafficking of guns by purchasing with the intention of reselling them to prohibited buyers.

In addition, a lawsuit was filed by the city of New York. The suit, filed in U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York in Brooklyn, asks the court to enforce gun laws regarding such sales and require extra training for U.S. Division of dealers. The lawsuit also seeks punitive and compensatory damages. According to New York City’s Web site, its police have... confiscated more than 500 guns that were sold by the 15 dealers named in the lawsuit and subsequently used in crimes there.

In January 2001, a 12-year-old boy in New York compiled a list of gun dealers based on data it received from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives. Investigators worked in pairs. One looked at the merchandise, talked with the salesman and handed the weapon while the other wandered the store, seemingly uninterested. When it came time to complete the necessary background check forms, the first operator, often a man, would call over his partner, frequently a woman, who had not been part of the discussion of the weapon. The second investigator would fill out the background paperwork, and the first one would pay for the gun in cash. This procedure was used to clearly illustrate that the second person was making a "straw purchase" for the first person.

Gun-control advocates praise the sting operation and the lawsuit. This type of action sends a message to dealers that more government officials are not willing to look the other way. Other cities, including Gary, Indiana, Chicago and Detroit, have taken similar approaches in their own jurisdictions, often using local law enforcement officials. This operation however, marks the first time investigators across the nation participated in such a sting involving a number of States.

I would like to commend everyone on both the Federal and local levels who added in this investigation. This kind of illegal activity can be stopped by vigorously enforcing our existing gun laws, providing law enforcement with more tools to crack down on gun trafficking and corrupt gun dealers, and by passing sensible gun safety legislation.

PRELIMINARY 2005 UNIFORM CRIME REPORT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about a very sobering report just issued by our FBI—its Preliminary 2005 Uniform Crime Report. This is the gold standard of crime reports in our country, taken from statistics by more than 12,000 law enforcement agencies all across our country.

Here is what the report says: Murders are up. This means that there were 16,900 victims in 2005—16,900 in a single year. This is the most murders since 1998 and the largest percentage increase in 15 years. Violent crime more generally, which also includes forcible rape, robbery, and aggravated assault, rose 2 percent after seeing decreases over the last 3 years.

Some areas of the country were especially hard hit. For example, saw violent crime rise 5.7 percent. Medium-large towns—those with populations between half a million and 1 million—saw an increase in violent crime of 8.3 percent. Murders increased more than 2 percent in towns with populations of 250,000. These troubling increases come after more than a decade of record decreases in crime.

These historic decreases in crime happened for a reason and, I fear, the recent and dramatic increase in murders and violent crime are also happening for a reason.

Let me explain. In 1994, we passed the most sweeping anticrime bill in history. At the time, we faced a national crisis with respect to violent crime. Despite the tough-on-crime rhetoric of the 1980s, the Federal Government until that point had very little impact on crime rates. This is largely because only about 3 percent of all crimes are handled by the Federal Government.

We recognized in 1994 that the only way to seriously address crime in our communities would be to vigorously and consistently support State and local law enforcement. We made a commitment to do just that by creating the Community Oriented Policing Services Program—more commonly known as COPS.

This ambitious new program committed to put more than 100,000 new officers on the streets and to expand the concept of community-oriented policing. Crime rates went down every year for 8 consecutive years. Violent crime was reduced by 26 percent. The murder rate went down by 34 percent.

In just one year, America went from being afraid to go out on their streets to living in the safest neighborhoods in a generation. By giving State and local law enforcement the support they needed, we were able to improve the lives of millions of Americans.

I recognize there are many factors involved in whether crime rates go up and down and that the COPS Program was not the sole reason for this historic drop in violent crime. At the same time, the legacy of COPS is unmistakable. The Government Accountability Office, GAO, released a report in October 2005 that concluded what many police chiefs and sheriffs have said all along—the COPS Program helps reduce crime. Specifically, the GAO found that "as a demonstration of whether a federal program can affect crime rates through hiring officers and changing policing practices, the evidence indicates that COPS contributed to declines in the rate above the levels of declines that would have been expected without it." For every $1 in COPS hiring grant expenditures per capita, there was a reduction of almost 30 index crimes per 100,000 persons.

FORMER ATTORNEY GENERAL JOHN ASHCROFT CALLED THE COPS PROGRAM A "miraculous success." But, unfortunately, I fear that some of us have other ideas. Specifically, the Bush administration has forgotten the lessons we learned from the COPS Program. Despite the dramatic and historic COPS successes, President Bush has systematically eliminated the programs that helped to lay the foundation for our crime drop.

President Bush has proposed to cut support for State and local law enforcement every year for the past 5 years, proposing a budget in 2007 that cut $2 billion in guaranteed funding for State and local law enforcement from the amount we provided only 5 years ago. President Bush has steadily tried to kill the COPS hiring program, routinely trying to zero out all hiring funding.

down by over 1,000 agents. As a result, drug investigations have dropped by 60 percent and violent crime investigations have been reduced by 40 percent.

This has created a perfect storm for law enforcement, and I hope that these latest dramatic and troubling crime statistics serve as a wake-up call to Congress and the President.

We must build on the successes of the past; we must never become complacent. When I speak to law enforcement groups on the subject of crime, I make the point that keeping crime rates low is like cutting the grass. You mow your lawn and it looks great. You let it grow for a week, and it starts looking ragged. You let it grow for a month and you have a jungle.

The preliminary numbers released yesterday show that we have not been cutting the grass. In Cleveland, from 1994 to 2001, we spent $3.2 million per year for COPS hiring. From 2002 to 2005, we only spent $375,000 per year. A 2004 report noted that Cleveland had lost 250 officers, a reduction of 15 percent in their force. In their latest crime numbers, murder is up 38 percent; violent crime is up 7 percent. In St. Louis, from 1994 and earlier, we spend $770,000 per year for COPS hiring. From 2002 to 2005, that number was zero. A 2003 study found that St. Louis had lost 168 officers, a reduction of 11 percent in their force. In their latest crime numbers, murder is up 16 percent, violent crime up 20 percent. The pattern is, unfortunately, clear.

In Philadelphia from 1994 to 2001, we spent $3,250,000 per year for COPS hiring. From 2002 to 2005, that number was again zero. Last year, I asked the Philadelphia police chief about the number of officers they have lost recently. He said since 2003, they were down 600 officers. In Philadelphia’s latest crime numbers, murder is up 14.2 percent, violent crime up 3.4 percent.

Now is the time to see the error in our recent ways. It is my hope that the Appropriations, Commerce, Justice, and Science Subcommittee will see fit to fully fund the COPS Program, the Justice assistance grants, and other critical crime control programs when it reports out its appropriations bill later this summer. If they do not, I will be offering an amendment to restore full funding for the COPS Program. I have done this for the past several years.

The Senate has previously not adopted my amendments, however—with opponents arguing that the COPS Program has worked, so we should kill it, or that it is not a Federal responsibility to fund local law enforcement. Critics will also argue that adding funding to the COPS Program will bust the budget.

I believe that the safety of the American citizens is our No. 1 priority, and I cannot accept the argument that we cannot find funding for local law enforcement at the same time we are giving a tax cut to our nation’s millionaires. They did not ask for this tax cut, and I know that they would be willing to give that back in order to keep their communities safer.

The COPS Program helps us prevent both crime and terrorism, and I hope my colleagues will support me in restoring funding for this critical program.

THE LIFE OF DR. JAMES CAMERON

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, Dr. James Cameron, sadly, passed away on June 11, and with his passing, the Nation has lost one the 20th century’s greatest civil rights pioneers.

James Cameron was born in 1914 in La Crosse, WI, but it was during the time that he lived in Marion, IN, that he would have a terrifying experience that would forever change the course of his life.

On August 7, 1930, when he was just 16, he was wrongly accused of and arrested for the murder of a White man and the rape of a White woman. While in jail, a mob broke in, dragged him, and the other two charged with the crime, out into the street. A rope was placed around Cameron’s neck, but he was spared when a man in the crowd proclaimed Cameron’s innocence. While Cameron survived the beating and attempted lynching, the other two men were lynched and killed.

Cameron was convicted as an accessory to involuntary manslaughter—for which he was later pardoned—but no one was ever accused, charged, or arrested for the lynching and murder of the other two men.

After surviving this horrific experience, Dr. Cameron dedicated his life to raising awareness of racial injustice in America. He organized several chapters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, NAACP, in Indiana. As the Indiana State director of civil liberties from 1942 to 1950, Dr. Cameron worked to end segregation. The strong presence of the Ku Klux Klan in Indiana at the time made his job that much more difficult and dangerous. Dr. Cameron faced threats of violence, including threats to his life.

After he moved to Milwaukee, he continued his civil rights work by protesting against segregated housing and police brutality. During the 1960s, he took part in marches in Washington, DC, with civil rights leaders Martin Luther King, Jr., and Coretta Scott King.

Furthing his commitment to civil rights education, Dr. Cameron mortgaged his home in 1982 to publish 5,000 copies of his memoir, “A Time of Terror.” The book provides a moving account of his near-death experience in 1930.

After visiting Israel’s Holocaust Museum, Dr. Cameron was inspired to construct a similar museum in Wisconsin, dedicated to the history and struggles of African Americans. His dream became a reality in 1988 when he opened the Black Holocaust Museum, which has made an important contribution to Milwaukee and an invaluable contribution to our understanding of American history.

It was particularly fitting that Dr. Cameron was able to watch in person as the U.S. Senate finally passed a resolution apologizing to victims of lynching. His monumental efforts were central to that important and long-overdue moment.

Dr. Cameron dedicated his life to ending racial injustice. Now his strength and resilience must inspire all of us as we carry on that critically important work. James Cameron’s incredible story of survival is a part of history. But Dr. Cameron was more than just a part of history—he helped to shape today. It is with his determined commitment to promoting civil rights. With everything James Cameron did, he served the cause of justice. He led a courageous, remarkable life, and he will be greatly missed.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF MADISON, WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, it is with great honor that I recognize the 100th anniversary of the founding of the town of Madison, WV. A celebration will take place today, and I would like to take this opportunity to speak for a few moments about this wonderful Appalachian community.

Madison was incorporated as the county seat of Boone County, which it remains today. It is the location of a number of exemplary schools and dedicated churches. Madison has long been noted for its rich coal mining heritage, and was named for Colonel William Madison Peyton, pioneer coal operator and leader of the movement that led to the establishment of Boone County.

A significant percentage of Madison residents are employed by coal mining corporations, or related businesses. That makes it fitting that the township is the home of the Bituminous Coal Heritage Foundation Museum and the location of the West Virginia Coal Festival. Each year, thousands of people travel to Madison for this festival to celebrate coal heritage. This year, the festival will include a memorial service to the 18 West Virginians who tragically lost their lives in recent months in mining accidents. In light of these events, along with State and local officials and miners working to better ensure the safety of all West Virginia coal miners. Another important asset to the City of Madison is Boone Memorial Hospital which serves the community with personalized care and respect for all in need of medical attention.

The town of Madison is the historical site of a crucial Union victory during the Civil War. The Battle of Boone County Courthouse, the name of the town before it was known as Madison, occurred early in the war on September 1, 1861, at a time when the Union army had suffered many devastating defeats. The original court house in Madison was destroyed during the battle as a result of the skirmish. Madison’s centennial celebration will take place on the grounds of the restored structure.

On the grounds of that courthouse stands a memorial to soldiers who died in service of their Nation. Madison is located in Boone County, as all of West Virginia, have given more than its share of brave men and women to the service of our Nation. Boone countians are fiercely patriotic and dedicated to their families, their community and their God. They are resilient and determined, having suffered the ups and downs of the coal economy. They are also kind-hearted people. When I first came to West Virginia as a young man in the VISTA program over 40 years ago, it was to a community on the Boone-Kanawha county line. The people of that community taught me so much and forever changed my life. I will forever have a special place in my heart for Boone County, the town of Madison, and their residents. I certainly wish the town and its people the best for the centennial celebration and much success during the next 100 years. I hope my fellow Senators and fellow West Virginians will join me in celebrating this special occasion, the centennial of Madison, WV.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS
By Mr. ENZI (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. KERRY, and Mrs. MURRAY):
S. 3534. A bill to amend the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 to provide for a YouthBuild program; read the first time.
Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the YouthBuild Transfer Act. I am pleased to be joined in this important effort by Senator KENNEDY, the ranking member of the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, and Senators DEWINE, KERRY, and MURRAY.
This bill transfers the YouthBuild program from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, HUD, to the Department of Labor, DOL, as an amendment to the Workforce Investment Act, WIA. YouthBuild was enacted in 1992. It provides programs for young adults aged 16 to 24 to build or rehabilitate housing for homeless or low-income individuals in their communities while they study to earn their own high school diploma or GED. These youth gain occupational and technical skills while building their knowledge to help them become and remain productive participants in the workforce.
By transferring YouthBuild to DOL, the program will be more closely aligned with and benefit from collaboration with the larger workforce system at the State and local levels. It will continue to serve those young adults most in need of these services, and enable them to serve their communities by building affordable housing, and assists them in transforming their own lives and roles in society.
YouthBuild assists young adults not currently enrolled in school gain needed education, skills and knowledge. The skill and literacy requirements of today’s and tomorrow’s workplace cannot be met if we do not provide everyone access to lifelong education, training and retraining.
Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.
There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:
(The bill will be printed in a future edition of the RECORD.)
Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor and express my strong support for the YouthBuild Transfer Act which will preserve and enhance the YouthBuild by transferring its operations from Department of Housing and Urban Development, HUD, to the Department of Labor, DOL.
Last year, President Bush’s budget request recommended transferring the operations of the YouthBuild Program from HUD to DOL. In November 2005, I introduced the YouthBuild Transfer Act of 2005, S. 1999, to authorize that transfer, and it is very similar to this legislation being introduced today.
I express my appreciation to Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Chairman ENZI and the ranking member, Senator KENNEDY, for their work in developing this consensus legislation. I also thank Senator DEWINE for his efforts in both developing this legislation and for his efforts to obtain funding for YouthBuild for many years. I believe this bill continues the bipartisan spirit which has been the hallmark of the YouthBuild Program.
Poverty, neglect, abuse, and depriva-from reaching their true potential. Many of those who have fallen off track, suffered losses, and made mistakes can recover. If given the opportunity, they can learn to cope with obstacles and care effectively about their communities. YouthBuild helps young people who have lost their way to turn their lives around.

YouthBuild is a uniquely comprehensive program that offers at-risk youth an productive role rebuilding their communities. While attending basic education classes for 50 percent of program time, students also receive job skills training in the construction field, personal counseling from respected mentors, a supportive peer group with positive values, and experience in civic engagement. They build houses for homeless and low-income people while earning their own GED or high school diploma.

YouthBuild is built on success. During the initial YouthBuild’s future founder, Dorothy Stoneman, formed the Youth Action Program to rebuild homes in New York City. The successful renovation of an East Harlem tenement led to a citywide coalition and in 1990, YouthBuild USA, an organization created to replicate this program around the Nation.

After visiting a YouthBuild site, I introduced legislation in 1992 authorizing Federal funding for YouthBuild through the Department of Housing and Urban Development which was enacted into law as part of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act. Since then, I have led a coalition of Senators in support of Federal funding for this important program. The $600 million that has been appropriated through HUD since fiscal year 1993 has leveraged over $1.5 billion of additional public and private investment at the local level due to the resourcefulness of local leaders and the high demand for YouthBuild programs.

The results have been dramatic. Since 1994, YouthBuild has helped more than 60,000 disadvantaged youth into productive employment, higher education, and civic engagement across the Nation. At the same time, YouthBuild has helped rebuild low- and moderate-income communities by creating more than 15,000 units of affordable housing. Over 1,000 local organizations in every state have applied for HUD funds to bring YouthBuild to their communities.

Research on 900 YouthBuild graduates, several years after they had completed the program showed that more than 75 percent of them were either employed at an average wage of $10 an hour or attending college and were positively contributing to their communities. Of those who had completed felonies, the recidivism rate was a strikingly low 15 percent and all studies shown up to this point indicate a true and continuing 60 percent recidivism rate for most prison systems.

Today there are over 226 YouthBuild programs in 43 States engaging 8,000 young adults, and the number of programs could easily be expanded. Last year alone, 260 communities were denied YouthBuild funding. The demand is overwhelming. Young people—in 2003 local programs turned away over 10,000 applicants solely for lack of funds, and in 2004 they turned away 12,000. The 20 percent cut suffered for fiscal year 2006 could cause the closing of 25 programs. If funds are restored and expanded, some of these closings can be averted. I am hopeful that the YouthBuild Transfer Act will be enacted into law. However, YouthBuild already made in Federal funds in fiscal year 2007 in order to remain a successful program.

President Bush included $50 million for YouthBuild in his fiscal year 2007 budget request to Congress. Senator Sessions aftermath of Katrina, I wrote a letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee in support of $90 million for the program. I look forward to working with the members of the Appropriations Committee to insure that this critical program receives an increase in Federal funding next year.

Increasing Federal funding for YouthBuild will help address critical national problems that cost society dearly. Over one in three of America’s youth are dropping out of high school with no prospect of becoming gainfully employed, contributing members of society, taxpayers, and in inner-city communities, that percentage—rises to 50 percent. Still more are opting to receive year per person to house 365,000 16 to 24 year olds, 65 percent of whom have dropped out of high school. In addition, the construction industry is short 80,000 workers. Furthermore, in the aftermath of Katrina, the need for construction workers is increasing, and YouthBuild programs are a resource in the gulf, sending trained crews to Mississippi to rebuild homes as part of their service to the Nation.

YouthBuild is on the cutting edge of education reform for dropouts and effective re-entry for offenders. Forty YouthBuild programs have now been chartered by their States or authorized by their superintendents of schools to provide high school diplomas and to receive public funds as successful public schools reclaiming high school dropouts. In several States, the criminal justice departments are now supplementing HUD funds to expand the capacity of YouthBuild programs as successful re-entry programs for ex-offenders. To maximize the investment already made in YouthBuild as a resource for education of dropouts and re-entry of ex-offenders, it is imperative to keep the foundation of its Federal funding strong.

I ask all of my colleagues to support the YouthBuild Transfer Act to allow the YouthBuild Program to expand this unique comprehensive program to provide at-risk youth an immediately productive role rebuilding their communities.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 4292. Mr. DORGAN (for himself, Mr. DURBAN, and Mr. HARKIN) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2766, to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2007 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.

TITLE XV—SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF SENATE ON WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION CONTRACTING

SEC. 1501. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The wars in Iraq and Afghanistan have exerted very large demands on the Treasury of the United States and required tremendous sacrifice by the members of the Armed Forces of the United States.

(2) Congress has a constitutional responsibility to oversee the expenditure of United States Government funds.

(3) Waste and corporate abuse of United States Government resources are particularly unacceptable and reprehensible during times of war.

(4) The magnitude of the funds involved in the reconstruction of Afghanistan and Iraq and the war on terrorism, together with the speed with which these funds have been committed, presents a challenge to the effective performance of the constitutional oversight function of Congress and the auditing functions of the executive branch.

(5) The Senate Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program, popularly known as the Truman Committee, which was established during World War II, offers a constitutional and historical precedent for wartime contracting that can also be extended to wartime and postwar reconstruction activities.

(6) The Special Committee is credited with an extremely successful investigatory effort, performance of a significant public education role, and achievement of fiscal savings measured in the billions of dollars.

(7) The public has a right to expect that taxpayer resources will be carefully disbursed and honestly spent.

SEC. 1502. PURPOSE AND DUTIES.

(1) The purpose of the Special Committee is to investigate the awarding and performance of contracts to conduct military, security, reconstruction activities in Afghanistan and Iraq and to support the prosecution of the war on terrorism.

(3) subcontracting under large, comprehensive contracts;

(4) oversight procedures;

(5) consequences of cost-plus and fixed price contracting;

(6) allegations of wasteful and fraudulent practices;

(7) accountability of contractors and Government officials involved in procurement and contracting;

(8) penalties for violations of law and abuses in the awarding and performance of Government contracts; and

(9) lessons learned from the contracting process used in Iraq and Afghanistan and in connection with the war on terrorism with respect to the structure, coordination, management policies, and procedures of the Federal Government.

(c) INVESTIGATION OF WASTEFUL AND FRAUDULENT PRACTICES.—The investigation by the Special Committee of allegations of wasteful and fraudulent practices under subsection (b)(6) shall include investigation of allegations regarding any contract or spending entered into, supervised by, or otherwise involving the Coalition Provisional Authority, regardless of whether or not such contract or spending involved appropriated funds of the United States.

(d) Evidence. In carrying out its duties, the Special Committee shall ascertain and evaluate the evidence developed by any relevant governmental agencies regarding the facts and circumstances relevant to contracts described in subsection (a) and any contract or spending covered by subsection (c).

At the end of subsection B of title XXXI, add the following:

SEC. 3121. EDUCATION OF FUTURE NUCLEAR ENGINEERS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Department of Defense and the United States depend on the specialized expertise of nuclear engineers who support the development and sustainment of technologies including nuclear reactors, strategic weapons, and nuclear power plants.

(2) Experts estimate that over 25 percent of the approximately 58,000 workers in the nuclear power industry in the United States will be eligible to retire within 5 years, representing both a huge loss of institutional memory and a potential national security crisis.

(3) This shortfall of workers is exacerbated by reductions at the University Reactor Infrastructure and Education Assistance Agreement, the civilian nuclear scientists and engineers. The defense and civilian nuclear industries are interdependent on a limited number of educational institutions to produce their workforce. A reduction in nuclear scientists and engineers trained in the civilian sector may result in a further loss of qualified personnel for defense-related research and development.

(4) The Department of Defense’s successful Science, Math and Research for Transformation (SMART) scholarship-for-service program serves as a good model for a targeted scholarship or fellowship program designed to educate future scientists at the postsecondary and postgraduate levels.

(b) REPORT ON EDUCATION OF FUTURE NUCLEAR ENGINEERS.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary of Energy shall study the feasibility and merit of establishing a scholarship or fellowship program to educate future nuclear engineers at the postsecondary and postgraduate levels.

(2) REPORT REQUIRED.—The President shall submit to the congressional defense committees, together with the budget request submitted for fiscal year 2008, a report on the study conducted by the Secretary of Energy under paragraph (1).

At the end of subsection D of title X, add the following:

SEC. 147. MULTI-SPECTRAL IMAGING CAPABILITIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) The Chief of Staff of the President for fiscal year 2007, as submitted to Congress under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, and the current Future Years Defense Program adopts an Air Force plan to retire the remaining fleet of U-2 aircraft by 2011.

(2) This retirement would eliminate the multi-spectral imaging capabilities provided by the high-altitude imaging system (SYERS-2) high-altitude imaging system.

(3) The plan referred to in paragraph (2) provides high-resolution, long-range, day-and-night image intelligence.

(4) The infrared capabilities of the system referred to in paragraph (2) can detect enemy ground forces and efforts to use camouflage or concealment, as well as provide images through poor visibility and smoke.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Air Force should investigate ways to retain the multi-spectral imaging capabilities provided by the high-altitude imaging system after the retirement of the U-2 aircraft fleet.

(c) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of the Air Force shall submit to Congress a report on the study conducted by the Secretary of Energy under subsection (a) as follows:

At the end of subsection B of title XXXI, add the following:

SEC. 352. NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES STUDY ON AN EXPOSURE TO CONTAMINATED DRINKING WATER AT CAMP LEJEUNE, NORTH CAROLINA.

(a) STUDY REQUIRED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall enter into an agreement with the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a comprehensive review and evaluation of the available scientific and medical evidence related to human exposure to contaminated drinking water at Camp Lejeune, take appropriate actions to notify each person who may have been exposed to such drinking water of the likelihood of such exposure, and to provide health care under this section directly or by contract or other arrangement with a health care provider.

(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the rights or obligations of any person or entity, including the Federal Government, under any other law.

(e) NOTICE ON EXPOSURE.—

(2) ELEMENTS.—The notice provided under paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) A description of the events resulting in exposure to contaminated drinking water at Camp Lejeune.

(B) A description of the duration and extent of the contamination of drinking water at Camp Lejeune.

(C) The known and suspected health effects of exposure to the contaminants in the contaminated drinking water at Camp Lejeune.

(d) A description of sources of additional information on—

(i) the contaminated drinking water at Camp Lejeune.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL STYLES, FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVANT AND DESERT CIVIC LEADER

HON. JERRY LEWIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to pay tribute to a dedicated public servant for both the Federal government and the desert communities in my district—Michael B. Styles, the longtime national president of the Federal Managers Association and one of the guiding lights of Copper Mountain College.

My good friend Mike Styles has been a dedicated member of the Federal Manager Association’s General Executive Board since 1986. He served as national vice president, zone president, and chapter president. As national president for some 15 years until this past March, his efforts are a testament to the highest level of commitment an individual can demonstrate on the behalf of federal workers.

His leadership among federal managers was recognized when in 1991 the President appointed him in 1995 to the National Partnership Council, which advises the President on federal labor-management issues and relations. His six years on the council helped open up communication between the management industry and the Government.

In his long career in Tactical Data Systems management with the Department of the Navy and United States Marine Corps, Mike helped make significant improvements in systems acquisition and logistics support. The Fleet Marine Force, one of his main projects, has been improved considerably by his efforts.

He spent 30 years as a lecturer, facilitator and consultant, specializing in education theory and practice. Since 1986, Mike has taught graduate and undergraduate courses as adjunct professor at the National University School of Management and Technology. He is a tremendous asset as President of the Federal Management Institute, the association’s education division, having received a master’s degree in education from the University of Redlands. He was also a fellow at Syracuse University’s Maxwell Center for Advanced Public Management.

The citizens of Joshua Tree, a desert city in my congressional district, are particularly grateful for Mike Styles’ contributions to the Copper Mountain Community College District. Mike was the original founder of the Friends of Copper Mountain College, established in 1983. This charitable organization provides students with educational support and introduces them to community service. He has served on the college’s board of directors since 1996, and has been president of the College Foundation for the past two years.

This college is especially important to our federal workforce, since it serves Marines and their dependents who are stationed at the nearby Air-Ground Combat Center at TwentyNine Palms.

The Morongo Basin has also benefited greatly from Mike’s community service. He serves on the United Way’s Board of Directors, is a member of the Knight of Columbus, and plays an active role in the chamber of commerce. Having worked with Mike for over the years, I can attest to his dedication in bettering the Inland Empire region of California.

Mr. Speaker, Mike Styles has been an exemplary public servant and civic leader, and thousands of our federal employees and students have been benefited from his dedication to education excellence. In addition to ending his long service as FMA president this spring, Mike is stepping down as president of the college foundation. Please join me in thanking him for his dedication, and wishing him well in his future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSE ANESTHETISTS (AANA) ON THEIR 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BEN CHANDLER OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute today to an outstanding group of representatives from the Commonwealth of Kentucky, the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists (AANA) on their 75th anniversary of their founding, as well as the Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists (CRNAs) for their dedication to quality anesthesia care and patient safety.

CRNAs are advanced practice nurses who are the hands-on providers of approximately 65 percent of all anesthesia given in the United States each year.

Nurses were the first professional group to provide anesthesia services in the United States. Established in the late 1800s, nurse anesthesia has since become recognized as the first clinical nursing specialty. On June 17, 1931, pioneer nurse anesthetist Agatha Hodgins founded the National Association of Nurse Anesthetists (AANA) in Cleveland, Ohio. Eight years later, AANA officially changed its name to the present AANA. The oldest national organization of anesthesia providers in the country, the AANA is the professional association for more than 35,000 CRNAs and student nurse anesthetists.

CRNAs administer anesthetic and provide care for every type of surgery or procedure, from open heart to cataract to pain management. CRNAs practice in every setting in which anesthesia is delivered: traditional hospital surgical suites and obstetrical delivery rooms; critical access hospitals; ambulatory surgical centers; the offices of dentists, podiatrists, ophthalmologists, plastic surgeons, and pain management specialists; and U.S. Military, Public Health Services, and Department of Veterans Affairs healthcare facilities.

CRNAs are the only anesthesiology providers in approximately two thirds of all rural hospitals in the United States, enabling these healthcare facilities to offer obstetrical, surgical, and trauma stabilization services. In some states, CRNAs are the sole providers in nearly 100 percent of the rural hospitals.

Since World War I, nurse anesthetists have been the principal anesthesia providers in combat areas of every war in which the United States has been engaged. During the Panama action, only nurse anesthetists were sent with the fighting forces. Nurse anesthetists have been held as prisoners of war, suffered combat wounds during wartime, and have lost their lives serving their country. The names of two CRNAs killed in the Vietnam War are engraved on the Vietnam Memorial Wall in Washington, DC. Military nurse anesthetists have been honored and decorated by the United States and foreign governments for outstanding achievements, dedication to duty, and competence in treating the seriously wounded. In the 21st Century, CRNAs continue to care for servicemen and women, their dependents, and veterans—whether on the frontlines of Iraq and Afghanistan, or in military hospitals and VA facilities.

I, therefore, ask my colleagues to join me today in recognizing the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists (AANA) and their 35,000 Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists (CRNAs) as they celebrate 75 years of invaluable service to their patients and to our country.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CORAL REEF LEGACY ACT OF 2006

HON. RICHARD W. POMBO
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce the Coral Reef Conservation Legacy Act of 2006, an important environmental conservation bill, during Congressional Oceans Week.

This legislation builds on the foundation of bills introduced earlier this Congress by Senator Inouye and Congressman FaLaeOMawaega. Both of those bills sparked a discussion on coral reef conservation. I appreciate the leadership of these two gentlemen on this issue and I look forward to working with them as the legislation moves through Congress.

The development of the Coral Reef Conservation Legacy Act is a result of a collaborative effort to incorporate comments from a number of coral reef experts within the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, the Coral Reef Task Force, and non-governmental organizations. All of these groups made suggestions on ways to improve the earlier legislation and this bill incorporates a number of their suggestions.

I believe the Coral Reef Conservation Legacy Act will benefit coral reef conservation and will strengthen the roles of the states and territories through community-based planning.
grants and through the Local Action Strategies. The bill supports the continued use of these successful conservation management tools. To be successful in the long-term it is imperative to have the local and regional entities involved in the conservation of coral reef resources from the beginning.

This legislation also recognizes the important role the Department of the Interior has played in coral reef conservation and would authorize much needed funding for their activities. This bill, however, does not change the fundamental jurisdictions and roles of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Commerce, but recognizes that the Department of the Interior has a role in this endeavor. In addition the bill continues to support and recognize the accomplishments and conservation efforts of the Department of Commerce. Both agencies have participated in coral reef conservation activities and this bill encourages their continued cooperation and coordination.

While the Coral Reef Conservation Act of 2000 has been very successful in restoring and protecting coral reefs, it has had limitations in its grant program. The Coral Reef Conservation Legacy Act would allow for multi-year cooperative agreements between the Federal Government and other agencies, states, territories, academic institutions, and non-governmental organizations. This multi-year authority will allow more stability in funding for important projects that might now be finalized in or limited to one year.

This legislation also codifies the U.S. Coral Reef Task Force. The Task Force has been an important voice for coral reef activities and has coordinated the activities in support of coral reef conservation. This codification recognizes the important work of the Task Force and the indispensable role they have played in the conservation of coral reefs.

The Coral Reef Conservation Legacy Act will continue the ongoing efforts to protect and restore coral reefs. I look forward to working with my colleagues as this bill moves through the legislative process.

STATEMENT HONORING ROGER ANDAL

Ms. HERSETH. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to honor the life of Roger Andal, Vietnam veteran and former South Dakota Commander of the Disabled American Veterans, who died on Tuesday, June 13, 2006, at the age of 57 from complications after surgery in his battle against Crohn’s disease.

I am deeply saddened by the news that my good friend Roger Andal has passed away. Roger lived a life of service to his fellow Americans. He was drafted in July 1969 and was sent to Vietnam that December where he served as a platoon medic with the Army’s 4th Infantry Division. Roger served the next five months in the jungle around Pleiku in the central highlands of Vietnam before being hit by shrapnel from a rocket propelled grenade. He spent the following five months in military hospitals before being honorably discharged on April 13, 1971.

Following his tour of duty in Vietnam, Roger became one of the most tenacious and most effective advocates for veterans that South Dakota, or the nation, has ever seen. Roger’s cause was righteous and his will was unyielding. But even in those tough and passionate battles on issues he cared about, he also brought his customary hearty laugh, and a ready hug that touched all who knew him. Roger relished a good battle, but he was as kindhearted as he was dogged in his pursuit of ensuring that the federal government keep its promises to our nation’s veterans. As State Commander of the South Dakota Disabled American Veterans, he was a true leader, who fought the tough fights and led by example. He quietly suffered the effects of his own injuries while working so hard to ease the pain of others, including the physical and mental pain experienced by his fellow combat veterans years after their service to the country.

Today, we remember and honor the noble service and the undeterred commitment of Roger Andal to the United States of America. I join with all South Dakotans in expressing my sympathies to his family. Roger’s commitment to and sacrifice for our nation will never be forgotten. The lives of countless veterans and their families, including my own, were touched and helped by Roger’s work, and we all have a heavy burden to carry in his absence. My thoughts and prayers are with Roger’s wife Peggy, his children and all his family. In this time of sorrow and I look forward to continuing to fight for those things Roger cared about so deeply.

COMMUNICATIONS OPPORTUNITY, PROMOTION, AND ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2006

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I also want to add that Mr. McNerney wanted to cosponsor H.R. 5252, but was unable to do so because the bill already had been reported by the House Energy and Commerce Committee. I certainly appreciate his interest in cosponsoring the bill nonetheless.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO PATRICK JENNINGS

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Patrick Jennings, who has diligently served the Subcommittee on the Federal Workforce and Agency Organization, of which I am the Chairman, for the past several months.

Prior to Patrick beginning his service with the Subcommittee, he served as the retirement policy expert on law enforcement and firefighter issues for the Office of Personnel Management (OPM). In this role, he took the lead for retirement-related input to the Congressionally-mandated OPM report entitled Federal Law Enforcement Pay and Benefits (July 2004). Patrick served as primary expert for the Center for Retirement and Insurance Services on competing survivor claims, state laws on inheritance and marriage, and foreign marriages. He also acted as agency representative in administrative litigation before the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board, thereby promoting OPM’s position in a variety of retirement areas.

Patrick began his service with the Subcommittee on the Federal Workforce and Agency Organization in January 2005, as a detailee from the OPM. Over the course of the past year and a half, Patrick has proven himself and again as a man of exemplary professionalism. As Senior Counsel, Patrick’s service was of an extraordinary caliber, where he made recommendations on a variety of issues and legislation before the Subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor Patrick Jennings. The dedication he has shown to the work of the Subcommittee on the Federal Workforce and Agency Organization is greatly appreciated, and he will be sorely missed. I wish him the best in his future endeavors.

IN HONOR OF WYNNE ANTONIO

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor, recognition and gratitude of Mrs. Wynne Antonio, upon her retirement after 35 years of dedicated service in the Cleveland Municipal School District.

For 35 years, Mrs. Antonio has loved, nurtured and taught Cleveland’s school children with all her heart. She has worked collaboratively with parents and students to involve them in both decision-making as well as supportive roles. Mrs. Antonio went beyond the call of duty to expose her students to the arts, culture and government of Ohio to prove that a child’s education goes beyond the classroom.

In addition to her dedication to her students, Mrs. Antonio has been an active leader in the Cleveland Teachers Union as a building chair, a member of many internal committees, and the chair of Community Relations for the Cleveland Teachers Union Executive Board. On a political level, Mrs. Antonio has been active in local, state and national political campaigns. It is also not uncommon to find this distinguished educator at street rallies for peace, human rights and economic justice. Just this past spring, my office had the privilege of giving her and the students of Carl F. Shuler Middle School a tour of the Capitol building during their visit to Washington DC.

Mr. Speaker and Colleagues, please join me in honor, recognition and gratitude of Mrs. Wynne Antonio for commitment to education in Northeast Ohio. Mrs. Antonio’s dedication to her students serves as a model to her peers and an inspiration to us all. I wish Mrs. Antonio many blessed years of happiness and am sure that while her professional career has

HON. LOUISE MCELHENY SLAUGHTER OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Ms. Slaughter. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the accomplishments of James (Jim) Williams, the Director of the Department of Homeland Security’s US–VISIT program. After a strong tenure heading up US–VISIT, Jim has agreed to take on new challenges as Commissioner of the Federal Acquisition Service in the General Services Administration.

Jim is a selfless public servant, and has been an effective leader at the Department of Homeland Security. US–VISIT is a continuum of security measures that keep America’s doors open and our Nation secure. US–VISIT begins overseas, at the U.S. consular offices issuing visas, where visitors’ biometrics are collected and checked against a database of known criminals and suspected terrorists. When the visitor arrives at the port of entry, US–VISIT uses the same biometrics to verify the person at the port is the same person who received the visa.

Jim understands that strong security measures, when done right, keep the Nation secure and open to legitimate travelers and tourists. He has had the vision and follow-through to oversee the installation of biometric entry procedures at 154 land border ports of entry and at airports and seaports with international arrivals. In turn, US–VISIT has processed nearly 60 million visitors to date, and denied entry to more than 1,100 criminals and immigration violators. At the same time, US–VISIT has not affected wait times at the border and in some instances has actually reduced inspection times. These accomplishments have been appropriately recognized by the ten members of the 9/11 Commission, who gave US–VISIT the highest grade on their final report card.

Thanks in large part to Jim and the team he has assembled, we now have 21st century tools to address our emerging security challenges. These tools are allowing the U.S. to deal more effectively with threats of terrorism, while keeping us competitive in the global economy. I know that Jim will be missed at US–VISIT, but I wish him well as he takes on new challenges at the General Services Administration.

HON. JON C. PORTER OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. Porter. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Ariel Cohen for her remarkable recovery from pediatric stroke and the inspiration she has provided to pediatric patients at the National Rehabilitation Hospital (NRH).

Ariel’s life was profoundly changed on November 30, 2005 when she was struck with a very rare, often initially misdiagnosed, and almost always seriously debilitating condition—pediatric stroke. Having initially experienced complete paralysis on the left side of her body, Ariel was truly fighting for her life. After eight days in Pediatric Intensive Care Unit, Ariel entered NRH, often her arrival, Ariel quickly progressed in the Pediatric Unit at NRH to the point of being able to sit unassisted, and was soon capable of limited weight bearing on her left side.

The first two weeks at NRH saw a striking turn in Ariel’s recovery as the strength and control of her stroke-ridden hand and face progressed rapidly. The Cohen’s credit NRH, and specifically the National Center for Children’s Rehabilitation, for offering Ariel a well balanced approach to recovery, one that utilized the many disciplines of physical rehabilitation, counseling and aquatic therapy, the most technologically advanced equipment and processes, as well as the incorporation of peer support and an incredible amount of positive reinforcement.

Within the first week, Ariel learned to really like and trust her therapists. She looked forward to her sessions, and she was always made to feel successful—no matter how small the gain.

For all that Ariel has received; she has given back—cooking her famous chocolate chip pancakes for the NRH team members who assisted in her rehab, using her own room decorations, surprising a fellow teen at NRH with a room makeover in a well-timed “sneak attack.” She was an inspiration for all the pediatric patients at NRH—working incredibly hard with a spirit and determination to recover that has never waned. And while it is true that no 13-year-old girl wants to stand out, Ariel has taken in stride that by standing out, she offers much to other victims of pediatric stroke. From that day in November and Ariel’s subsequent ongoing recovery springs a wealth of knowledge on the part of the medical community and, as Ariel hopes, educational resources for other families coping with the effects of pediatric stroke. Every day, Ariel pushes herself to recover more fully, always keenly aware of the gifts she received as a patient at NRH—the keys to her room, the ability to cook and physically. As the signs and symptoms of her stroke fade by the day, a complete recovery of use and function now appears probable.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor Ariel Cohen. Her recovery from pediatric stroke is truly an inspiration and her efforts to assist in the recovery of her fellow patients are commendable. When I met Ariel, I couldn’t help but be inspired by her determination and passion, which is why I am recognizing her today. She is truly a remarkable young woman, and I wish her the best in her continuing recovery.

INTRODUCTION ON THE IRAQ CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT ENHANCEMENT ACT

HON. MADELEINE Z. BORDALLO OF GUAM
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Ms. BORDALLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Iraq Congressional Oversight Enhancement Act. I serve on the Committee on Armed Services in the House and have traveled to Iraq 8 times. These trips have allowed me to see Iraq first-hand, to meet with our fighting men and women and civilians serving there, and to learn from them the facts on the ground in that country. This legislation recognizes the complexity of the mission in Iraq and the need for enhanced Congressional oversight based upon comprehensive reporting from the administration.

This legislation is intended to enhance Congressional oversight of our operations in Iraq. This bill would not seek to dictate the withdrawal of troops from Iraq. This bill would require that the President transmit periodically to Congress a consolidated, comprehensive report on the implementation of the National Strategy for Victory in Iraq. This bill would also provide the Congress the vital measures or other benchmarks for Iraq’s political, safety, security, and economic development and metrics by which progress towards these benchmarks can be more effectively measured and assessed.

This legislation would affirm Congress’s support of our troops and civilian personnel in Iraq, and express its concern regarding the continued, deadly insurgent attacks against them. This legislation also would affirm our support for a democratic, pluralistic, federal, and united Iraq, while urging elected Iraqi leaders to maintain and preserve a national unity government for the Iraqi people. Moreover, this bill recognizes the complex and interdependent nature of the challenges associated with the political, security, infrastructure, and economic development of Iraq, including governance capacity building at and between the various levels of government in Iraq.

The National Strategy for Victory in Iraq, presented by the President on November 30, 2005, is an informative document. The Strategy represents progress toward defining the terms for victory in Iraq. I believe, however, more progress on defining the current mission in Iraq and the benchmarks for achieving victory are necessary. This legislation would require the President to transmit to Congress a report to back-up the Strategy by identifying benchmarks and by using metrics.

It is true that two recent legislative initiatives have produced reports that describe the political and security challenges associated with the political, security, infrastructure, and economic development of Iraq, including governance capacity building at and between the various levels of government in Iraq.

These reports, provided to Congress by the Secretary of Defense, contain useful information. But, when taken together, the reports are not sufficient for Congress to fully exercise its oversight responsibilities pertaining to this war. These reports also do not provide the American people a clear and full picture of what the United States seeks to achieve in Iraq, what the United States Armed Forces and civilian personnel are doing to achieve those objectives, and where we are in the process of achieving them—at the various levels of government within Iraq.

Our service in this body is never more consequential than it is when our troops are in harm’s way. Debate regarding issues of war and peace deserves sober reflection, reasoned thinking, critical focus, and balanced perspective. This is an institutional responsibility for the House of Representatives. But it is also a personal responsibility for each of us as representatives of our constituents. The sacrifices made by our military and civilian personnel serving in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, those made by Coalition personnel, and those made by those Americans required not only to defend themselves but to further reinforce the need to elevate our discussion on the merits of and challenges associated with what remains of the mission in Iraq.

I believe an honest and open exchange of views on the substance of what our country and our allies seek to achieve in Iraq is needed. This legislation would provide us the information we need to make better informed decisions on policy with regard to Iraq.

CELEBRATING THE 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF CHESTER AND IRENE BROZEK

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to pay tribute to Chester and Irene Brozek of Three Rivers, Massachusetts, upon the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary.

It was June 16, 1956, that Chester and Irene wed at Saints Peter and Paul Church in Three Rivers, Massachusetts. They have lived their lives together in that small town, attended the same schools—in the same class—and raised four sons and a daughter; Steven, Jim, David, Carolyn and Michael.

Chester, or Zab, worked at the Monsanto Company in Indian Orchard for more than 30 years. Irene worked for the Town of Palmer in the Tax Collector’s Office, becoming the tax collector and retiring from that position.

On Saturday, June 24th Chester and Irene will return to Saints Peter and Paul Church to celebrate with their children, their 12 grandchildren, relatives and friends this momentous occasion. I congratulate them and wish them health, best wishes and happiness in their years to come.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO GIBRAN BAYDOUN

HON. JON C. PORTER
OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Gibran Baydoun for winning the 2006 National Endowment for the Arts Nevada Poetry Out Loud State Championship.

Gibran Baydoun attends Green Valley High School in Henderson, Nevada and recently won the Nevada State Finals for the National Endowment for the Arts Poetry Out Loud contest held in Carson City. Created by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Poetry Foundation, this program encourages high school students to memorize and perform great poems. Poetry Out Loud invites the dynamic aspects of slam poetry, spoken word, and theater into the English class. This exciting new program helps students master public speaking skills, build self-confidence, and learn about their literary heritage.

Mr. Speaker, having met and listened to Gibran Baydoun, I am proud to honor him for his success at the Nevada Poetry Out Loud State Championship. Gibran’s successful memorization and performance of great poems at the Nevada State Finals is a worthy achievement.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

HON. TED POE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, the costs of Hurricane Katrina and Rita are far more than dollar amounts. For days, thousands of people fought for survival among the rising flood waters, lack of food and water, and outlaws victimizing the weak and helpless. In an attempt to lead the smallest victims of the hurricanes to safety, desperate, yet well-meaning parents sent their children with family and evacuation workers fleeing for safety. Their hope was to reunite after the storm; however, full panic soon engulfed Louisiana and Texas. Many parents found that their children were among the missing children once the storms had passed. Terrified parents made heart wrenching pleas to anyone who would listen. They spent countless hours praying for news of their kids.

Mr. Speaker, one organization heard their prayers and responded with the will and manpower to find these children. The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children would undertake the tremendous task of locating 5,172 missing children. Mr. Speaker, after the winds stopped and the flood waters receded, all 5,172 children were found. It was only through the unwavering and relentless dedication that these children were found, and returned to the safe arms of their parents. I now pay tribute to those tireless children crusaders.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, NCMEC, was established in 1984 by John and Reve Walsh in response to the kidnapping and disappearance of their son, Adam, in 1981. The center makes it their mission to locate, and successfully bring home, missing children across the United States. When Hurricanes Katrina and Rita hit Louisiana and Texas, the U.S. Department of Justice requested NCMEC’s help in locating the displaced children of the hurricanes’ victims. NCMEC responded with lightning speed, establishing a Katrina Missing Persons Hotline, with 224 telephones and 160 highly trained Project ALERT and Project ADAM volunteers to man the hotlines. Over the next few days, they would report thousands of missing child sightings.

These child crusaders spent long days and nights looking throughout America for these missing children. Photographs were used to help identify these children. The center tracked down leads, handled phone calls, and in the end, reunited families. They did not perform these tasks all on their own, however. The U.S. Postal Inspection Service, USPIS, American Airlines, and volunteers, along with the NCMEC in the successful recovery of all 5,172 missing children.

The U.S. Postal Inspection Service responded to the prayers for help much like the NCMEC. These highly dedicated lawmen and women used the U.S. Postal Service’s change of address information system to reunite these families. Safety precautions were taken by the USPIS to ensure no misuse of the information, however, the NCMEC, as well as the NCMEC case analysts, worked in cooperation with the special Hurricanes Katrina and Rita change of address operation in Tennessee, reunited children with parents. American Airlines, including the angels in the sky for the NCMEC, donating numerous airline tickets, which successfully led to 89 children being brought home safe.

I was present when First Lady Laura Bush held a reception on Monday, June 12, at the White House to show appreciation to all those wonderful people. She invited these heroes to join her, along with six Members of Congress, and several of the reunited families. Everyone extended heart-felt gratitude for the tireless efforts achieved by these individuals. Rebecca Gonzales, wife of Attorney General Alberto Gonzales and John and Reve Walsh were present as well. The First Lady praised the collaborative efforts of these organizations and individuals, expressing her gratitude for the heroes who relentlessly crusaded for the most helpless victims of the hurricanes—the children.

It is my honor to pay tribute to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, as well as the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, American Airlines, and thousands of volunteers for answering the prayers of the devastated hurricane parents. Today, 5,172 children have been led back to their families, another example of Americans helping Americans when the tidewaters of trouble have risen.

WE THE PEOPLE ALABAMA CLASS PLACES FOURTH AT NATIONAL COMPETITION ON THE CONSTITUTION

HON. SPENCER BACHUS
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, from April 29–May 1, 2006, approximately 1,200 students from across the country participated in the national finals competition of We the People: The Citizen and the Constitution, the most extensive educational program in the country developed specifically to educate young people about the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights.

I am pleased to announce that Vestavia Hills High School from Birmingham, Alabama placed fourth in the competition. The We the People program is administered by the Center for Civic Education and funded by the U.S. Department of Education by act of Congress. The We the People national finals is a three-day academic competition that simulates a congressional hearing in which the students “testify” before a panel of judges on constitutional topics. Students demonstrate their knowledge and understanding of constitutional principles as they evaluate, take, and defend positions on relevant historical and contemporary issues. Among the questions students responded to in the competition includes, “Is judicial review essential for the functioning of our American constitutional democracy? Explain and justify your position.”

Mr. Speaker, the names of these outstanding students from Vestavia Hills High School are as follows:

I also wish to commend the teacher of the class, Amy Maddox, who was responsible for preparing the student class for the national finals competition. Also worthy of special recognition are Janice Cowin and Kerri Williamson, the state coordinators and Jeff Northrup, the district coordinator, who are among those responsible for implementing the We the People program in my district.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues in the House, please join me in congratulating these young constitutional experts for their outstanding achievement.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO FRANCES WILSON

HON. JON C. PORTER

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Frances Wilson, a wonderful woman whom I have known and admired all of my life. My Aunt Frances will be celebrating her 80th birthday on June 17th in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Born on July 1st, 1926, Frances was the youngest of four, with three older brothers: Don, Russ, and my Dad Ron. She spent her childhood years in Humbolt, Iowa. On January 19, 1947 Frances married the late Daryl “Buck” Wilson and had two children, Sandra and Brian. She also has two grandchildren: Joshua, who married Renee, and Jacob. She also has two great-grandchildren, Sidney and Sawyer.

In 1955 she began work as a telephone operator and was one of the first working mothers in her family. As a very hard-working independent woman, Aunt Frances finished a long employment career in the gift shop of the Gold Strike Hotel and Casino in Boulder City, Nevada, which is now known as the Hacienda Hotel and Casino, retiring at age 77. She currently resides in Denver, Colorado where she is close to her daughter and often visits her son and his wife Carleen in Minnesota.

She is proud of her family and has openly admitted that her greatest joy comes from spending time with her great-grandchildren, who adore their great-grandmother tremendously.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize my aunt, Frances Wilson on the floor of the House. I commend her for her contributions to me, the rest of my family, and for her commitment to the community.

INTRODUCTION OF A RESOLUTION HONORING OUR NATION’S SENIOR CITIZENS

HON. CHARLES A. GONZALEZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a House resolution recognizing and honoring America’s senior citizens. Such a resolution is important because our seniors have made many major sacrifices and contributions that have helped make this country great. This resolution is an opportunity for Congress to officially recognize the impact of this influential segment of our society.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank my colleague, Representative WALTER JONES, for his fervent support of this resolution. His efforts reflect his value for senior citizens and the role they play in our society and our national conscience.

Undoubtedly, senior citizens have played an important role in the development of this nation. They have fought in significant military conflicts such as World War I, World War II, and the Korean War. I have full confidence that Americans throughout the ages will remember and honor such monumental sacrifices.

During their lifetimes, senior citizens have also experienced a myriad of profound social and cultural changes that have made this country what it is today. I believe that nothing is more important to our ability to effectively address our present than understanding the lessons learned from those who have come before us. This resolution encourages children and students to take the time to learn from senior citizens. The knowledge and experience that older Americans have acquired over their lifetimes serve as a window to our collective past.

As we recognize the contributions of seniors, it is important that we understand their needs. So much of what we do in Congress directly impacts the lives of elderly men and women. The decisions that we make on Capitol Hill have tangible effects on the health, pocketbooks, and livelihood of each and every senior citizen. It is essential that we remember the individuals that our actions will impact as we consider issues such as Medicare, Social Security, veterans’ benefits, housing, and healthcare.

After a lifetime of working, raising families, and contributing to the success of this nation in countless other ways, senior citizens deserve to retire with dignity. This resolution is a step in honoring the service of our seniors. However, I encourage all Americans to express their appreciation for and respect toward senior citizens in their lives.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the House to pass this resolution in the coming weeks. My esteemed colleagues in Congress should give deserved recognition to America’s senior citizens for the contributions they have made, and continue to make, to this great nation.

TRIBUTE TO WALTER MEYERHOF, PH.D.

HON. ANNA G. ESCHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Ms. ESCHO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Dr. Walter Meyerhof who died on May 27, 2006, at the age of 84 of complications from Parkinson’s disease.

Walter E. Meyerhof was Professor Emeritus of Physics at Stanford University. He was born in Kiel, Germany, in 1922, the same year that his father, Otto Meyerhof, won a Nobel Prize in Medicine. His mother, Hedwig Schallenberg, was a painter.

Dr. Meyerhof’s parents were Jewish but raised their three children as Lutherans in an attempt to protect them from burgeoning Nazism. Despite this ruse, the family suffered from anti-Semitism and was ultimately helped to flee Vichy France by “The American Schindler”, Varian Fry. Fry, a non-Jew who went to France to operate a rescue network, saved at least 2,000 people. In 1992, Meyerhof established and directed a foundation to honor the memory of Varian Fry. His film about Fry was narrated by Meryl Streep and distributed to more than 35,000 schools.

Dr. Meyerhof earned his M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Pennsylvania. At age 24 he married Miriam Rubin, who had worked at a child-care center directed by Anna Freud. In 1949 he began his distinguished 43-year career as a Professor of Physics at Stanford University.

Dr. Meyerhof was instrumental in the construction of the Stanford Linear Accelerator. He was awarded the Lloyd Dinkelspiel Teaching Award, the Tenured Faculty Development Award and was given an Honorary Doctorate by the University of Frankfort in 1980. He was named U.S. Senior Scientist by the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation in 1980–1981.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in extending our sympathy to Mrs. Meyerhof and the entire Meyerhof family. Dr. Walter Meyerhof was a national treasure, who loved his community and his country and served them exceedingly well. He will always be missed and never forgotten.

INTRODUCTION OF FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ENHANCEMENT ACT

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the Family and Medical Leave Enhancement Act. This legislation is identical to legislation introduced by Senator DODD of Connecticut.

Mr. Speaker, since enactment in 1993, more than 50 million employees have taken leave under the Family and Medical Leave Act. The Act guarantees eligible employees working for covered employers access to up to 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave within any 12-month period to care for their health or the health of their families without putting their jobs or health insurance at risk. About 11 percent of private sector businesses are covered under FMLA; 77 percent of employees work in these covered businesses (although about 62 percent of employees are eligible for FMLA).

According to data from a 2001 Department of Labor study, 52 percent of leave-takers have taken time off to care for their own seriously ill parent; 42 percent have taken time off to care for a new child or for maternity disability reasons; 13 percent have taken time off to care for a seriously ill parent; 12 percent have taken time off to care for a seriously ill child; and 6 percent have taken time off to care for a seriously ill spouse, or parent of the employee, if such individual is addressing domestic violence and its effects.

While the Family and Medical Leave Act has proven invaluable to many Americans, too many are still not covered by the law and others cannot afford to take leave under the Act because leave is unpaid. Many women and men cannot afford to take time off to care for their families, whether due to the arrival of a new child or when a medical crisis strikes. More than three in four (78 percent) employees who have needed but who have not taken leave report that they simply could not afford it.

The Family and Medical Leave Expansion Act would expand the scope and coverage of FMLA to ensure that even more American workers do not have to choose between job and family. Too many eligible individuals simply cannot afford unpaid leave. Many forgo leave or take the shortest amount of time possible because the current FMLA law requires only unpaid leave. The Family and Medical Leave Expansion Act would:

- Establish a pilot program to allocate grants to states to provide paid leave for at least 6 weeks to eligible employees responding to caregiving needs resulting from the birth or adoption of a child or family illness. States may provide for wage replacement directly or through the use of state temporary disability or unemployment compensation programs, or other mechanism. Such paid leave shall count toward an eligible employee’s 12 weeks of leave under FMLA.
- Expand the number of individuals eligible for FMLA by covering employers with 25 or more employees (to enable 13 million more Americans to take FMLA).
- Expand the reasons for leave to include eligible employees addressing domestic violence and its effects, which make the employee unable to perform the functions of the position of such employee or, to care for the son, daughter, or parent of the employee, if such individual is addressing domestic violence and its effects.
- Establish a pilot program within the federal government for the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to administer a partial or full wage replacement for at least 6 weeks to eligible employees responding to caregiving needs resulting from the birth or adoption of a child or other family caregiving needs. Such paid leave shall count toward an eligible employee’s 12 weeks of leave under FMLA.

Allows employees to use a total of 24 hours during any 12-month period to participate in a school activity of a son or daughter, such as a parent-teacher conference, or to participate in literacy training under a family literacy program.
TRIBUTE TO MR. JOEL M. CARP
ON HIS RETIREMENT FROM THE JEWISH FEDERATION OF METROPOLITAN CHICAGO

HON. JUDY BIGGERT
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Joel M. Carp on the occasion of his retirement from the Jewish Federation of Chicago. For more than 30 years, Joel has devoted his life and considerable talents to helping the disadvantaged in our community and across the country. As the Senior Vice President for Community Services and Governmental Relations of the Federation, Joel was the voice of the Federation, both in the community and in the halls of the capitals in Springfield and Washington, D.C. Many were the times that he was a source of guidance and advice for me and my colleagues there, and for that I am grateful.

Joel's contributions to the social service network in Chicago have been enormous. His work with the poor, the sick and the homeless ensured that countless members of our community had access to health and human services in their hour of need.

As a public policy advocate and a writer, Joel has helped to steer local, State, and Federal Governments toward greater social responsibility. He has served on numerous task forces to address the needs of both the homeless and underprivileged children. In addition, he has supervised the Illinois State refugee and immigrant programs. Finally, through his writing and teaching, he has advanced the study and practice of social work.

Mr. Speaker, Joel Carp is truly an outstanding individual whose lifetime of work will continue to benefit communities throughout the Chicago area for generations to come. So, once again, I thank Joel Carp for his service, his humor and his humanity, and I congratulate him on a well-earned retirement.

HONORING PRESTON A. ENGLERT
AFTER 25 YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE NATIONAL KIDNEY FOUNDATION OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL AREA

HON. TOM DAVIS OF VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Preston A. Englert for twenty-five years of service to the National Kidney Foundation of the National Capital Area.

Mr. Englert, President and CEO of the National Kidney Foundation of the National Capital Area, has served at the Foundation since 1981.

Mr. Englert graduated from Louisiana State University in 1970 and attended graduate school at the University of Tulsa and George Washington University. A native of Memphis, Tennessee, Mr. Englert served as the Executive Director of the American Heart Association branches in Tulsa, Oklahoma and Atlanta, Georgia before joining the National Kidney Foundation in 1981. In July of 1986, Mr. Englert became the Vice President of the Foundation and he was named President and Chief Executive Officer in 1999.

The National Kidney Foundation has grown substantially under Mr. Englert's leadership. He is responsible for outreach programs, increased early detection screenings and the expansion of both patient services and public awareness. Mr. Englert is extremely invested in the community, indicated by the numerous accolades he has accumulated over the years. He was named the Active Member of the Year by the Greater Washington Society of Association Executives in 1989. Mr. Englert is a shining example of one man's ability to affect change. His creativity and innovation has turned the National Kidney Foundation into one of the most successful affiliations nationwide. He has dedicated his life to giving a voice to kidney disease patients around the country and he has made a lasting impact. I ask my colleagues to join me in applauding Preston A. Englert and congratulating him on this distinguished achievement.
hand deliver the required documents for his son’s application to West Point admissions officials, Patrick was waitlisted and instead attended Iona College.

Patrick K. Dowdell proved to be both resilient and determined, and sought admission to West Point the following year while he excelled at Iona and was elected as Freshman Class Representative in the student government. Supported by teachers, neighbors and friends offering praise and letters of support, Patrick again asked for my nomination, with his father leading the charge.

When the dust of September 11, 2001 settled, Patrick Dowdell and his family learned that Lt. Kevin Dowdell was last seen entering the burning towers to help his fellow citizens and had been lost. Patrick Dowdell, as determined as ever to serve his country and make his dad proud, volunteered in the clean up efforts and continued to pursue his dream of attending West Point.

Patrick K. Dowdell was designated as my principle nominee in 2001 and was a member of the West Point graduating class. In President Bush’s commencement speech last month to the first class to enter the academy as a second lieutenant.

Marty is respected by both her superiors and peers and has served as a mentor principal and was a member of the Chancellor’s Distinguished Faculty, where she trained new principals. Martha worked with Hunter College in the design and implementation of a new program for the training of future administrators.

It is through Martha’s dedication, tenacity and courage that she has been able to make a positive impact on her school community and it is because of these very qualities that she now serves as a local instructional superintendent in Region 5 as well as the community superintendent for Community School District 19.

Patrick is now looking forward to serving his country and continuing to honor his father’s memory. He also serves as a source of encouragement to his younger brother James Dowdell, who has followed in their father’s footsteps by joining the New York City Fire Department, serving in Ladder 174 and providing support to his proud mother, Rose Ellen Dowdell.

Therefore, on behalf of the United States House of Representatives, I congratulate Patrick K. Dowdell upon the completion of his studies at West Point and upon his commission as a second lieutenant.

TRIBUTE TO THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF FILIPINO MIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES

HON. KENDRICK B. MEEK
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the more than three million Filipino-Americans and Filipino immigrants across the United States on the occasion of the 100th Anniversary of Filipino Migration to the United States. This is a significant milestone in the storied tradition of Filipinos in our Nation ever since the first fifteen farm workers, called sakadas, were recruited by the Hawaiian Sugar Planters Association, arriving in Hawaii on December 20, 1906. They were to become the precursors to millions of other contract workers, who soon came to build America in the succeeding years.

It was in 1919 that Filipino leader Pablo Manlapit organized the first labor union to demand higher wages and better working conditions for the farm workers of Hawaii. He was to be joined by other Asian farm workers, especially those coming from Japan. Though in 1920, some 12,000 farm workers from the sugar plantations were cruelly evicted and thrown out of work; their rugged determination and gritty character typified their conviction that America must live by its creed of equal opportunity and simple justice for all.

The downtrodden and the disenfranchised—these defined the miserable conditions to which those first immigrants were mercilessly subjected. What better way to memorialize those hardy spirits than to invoke their courage under fire during this Centennial of their epic journey to self-reliance and recognition. They came to forge a better life and contribute to the building of America in Hawaii’s sugar cane and pineapple fields, in the canneries of Alaska, and throughout the verdant farm lands of California and other west coast States.

In his stirring novel, America is in the Heart, Jones Bulosan described the first Filipino immigrants’ abject exclusion from American society when he wrote: “I know deep in my heart that I am an exile in America.” I feel like a criminal running away from a crime I did not commit. And this crime is that I am a Filipino in America.” Despite this inglorious past, their pioneering efforts and resilient spirit were drawn by their genuine belief in America’s spirit of idealism as the land of opportunity and promise.

I am confident that under the aegis of this Centennial, America will join Filipino-Americans in recognizing the untold sacrifices of the early Filipino immigrants whose faith in God and whose work ethic sustained them in their ordeal. In converging this celebration with the indomitable spirit of those pioneers, we hope to be enlightened and enriched by the messages they wrote through their silent struggles to be recognized and appreciated. It is on this historic occasion that I congratulate the National Federation of Filipino American Associations (NaFFAA), the Philippine-American Federation of South Florida (PhilAmFed) and other bona fide groups for their steadfast efforts in sensitizing us to the contributions that Filipino immigrants gave and continue to give to buttressing America’s stature as the envy of world today.

Filipino-Americans in my District, and millions of others across this great Nation, may take heart in Mr. Bulosan’s prophetic words: “America is not a land of one race or one class of men. We are all Americans that have toiled and suffered and known oppression and defeat. . . . America is not merely a land or an institution. America is in the hearts of men that died for freedom; it is also in the eyes of men that are building a new world. America is a warning to those who would try to falsify the ideals of free men. All of us, from the first Adams to the last Filipino, native born or alien, educated or illiterate—We are Americans!” Indeed, this Centennial is a proud reminder of the nobility and quiet dignity of Filipino Americans whose predecessors migrated to America 100 years ago, paving the way for countless others.

FREEDOM FOR RICARDO PUPO SIERRA

HON. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about Ricardo Pupo Sierra, political prisoner in totalitarian Cuba.

Mr. Pupo Sierra is a member of the Cuban Human Rights Party and a pro-democracy activist. Mr. Pupo Sierra has been a constant advocate for human rights for those currently toiling under the nightmare of repression called the Castro regime. He has bravely denounced the cruel policies of the tyrant and demanded that the people of Cuba be allowed their inalienable rights.

Mr. Pupo Sierra was arrested by the dictatorship and, after a sham trial, thrown into the totalitarian gulag. According to Prima News, in August 2005, Mr. Pupo conducted a hunger strike to protest the abhorrent treatment of prisoners in the grotesque gulag. According to Directorio, he began a hunger strike on June 9, 2006, to demand access to religious services.

Mr. Pupo Sierra also sent this message to the Cuban people saying: “Do not be afraid of the regime. Do not allow yourself to continue being deceived: dissent. Speak the truth without fear. Do not be discouraged. We are reaching the final point of the ruling system in Cuba. The regime is no longer there, free, democratic Cuba with the rule of law.”

Mr. Pupo Sierra is a brilliant example of the heroism of the Cuban people. His message exemplifies the Cuban desire to live in liberty, free of the tyrannical repression imposed on them by the murderous despot. Mr. Pupo Sierra knows the violence, abuse, and repression that will be used to try to break him. Yet he stands strong in the strength of his conviction: “We will soon have a free, democratic Cuba with the rule of law.” Mr. Pupo Sierra is a true apostle of freedom for Cuba.

Despite incessant repression, harassment, incarceration and abuse, he remains committed to the conviction that liberty and human rights are the birthright of the Cuban people. It is a crime against humanity that Castro’s totalitarian gulags are full of men and women, like Mr. Pupo Sierra, who represent the best of the Cuban nation. Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear, Mr. Pupo Sierra is languishing in the grotesque squalor of the gulag—designed for spiritual freedom for all Cubans. My Colleagues, read his message often. We must demand the immediate and unconditional release of Ricardo Pupo Sierra and every political prisoner in totalitarian Cuba.

SIKH, CATHOLIC LEADERS MEET

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, recently a group of Sikh leaders met in New York with Catholic leaders in an all-day event hosted by the Interfaith Center of New York. The leadership included Dr. Manohar Singh, Dr. Tarunjit Singh Butalia, and Dr. Anahat Kaur Sandhu. Monsignor Felix Machado, an official at the Vatican, also attended the meeting.

It is good to see this kind of pluralistic cooperation and I thank Dr. Gurmit Singh Aulakh, President of the Council of Khalistan, for bringing it to my attention.

Contrast this to the situation in India, where Sikhs, Christian, Muslims, and other minorities are subject to brutal and ongoing repression from the government. Perhaps "the world’s largest democracy" could learn a thing or two from the meeting in New York.

We should stop our aid to India and we should demand self-determination for all the people of South Asia so that they can live in peace, freedom, harmony, and prosperity, as they do here in America and other Western democracies.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to put the article from India-West into the RECORD.

[From India-West, June 2, 2006]

Sikh, Catholic Leaders Meet in New York

(By a Staff Reporter)

Representatives of the World Sikh Council-America Region met with Catholic leaders in New York in an all-day event hosted by the Religions for Peace—USA, the Sikh group has said.

Dr. Manohar Singh, the group’s chairman, and Dr. Taranjit Singh, chair of the group’s Interfaith Committee, led the Sikhs. The Center for Interfaith Relationships delegation was headed by Rev. James Massa, executive director of its Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interfaith Affairs.

Monseigneur Robert Machado, undersecretary of the Pontifical Council for Inter-religious Dialogue at the Vatican in Rome, was a special guest and adviser.

Two observers of Religions for Peace attended the May 20 meeting.

“The universal message of Sikhism respects pluralism and we welcome our Catholic friends with open arms,” Manohar Singh said. “This dialogue is an opportunity for our communities to begin a conversation at the highest level on how we may be able to work with each other in trust and friendship to make this world a more peaceful and just place for all.”

Machado responded by saying the Catholic Church appreciates this dialogue with the Sikh community. “Sikhs respect us, not suspect us,” he said.

Sikh and Catholic leaders expressed shared concerns over the challenges faced by immigrant communities in the U.S., the curtailing of religious freedom and human rights in South Asia, and the challenges of secularism to both religious communities.

The participants said they would meet again this year with a focus on “Divinity, Humanity and Creation.” They also pledged to continue to meet at least once a year through a working committee.

After the meeting, the Catholic and Sikh participants visited the Mata Sahib Kaur Gurdwara Sahib in Glen Cove, N.Y., joined the evening service and partook of langar meal.

A TRIBUTE TO STANLEY HENRY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Stanley Henry, a distinguished member of the Brooklyn, New York community. It behooves us today to honor a man who has exhibited the will to succeed, and the insatiable drive to bring his goals into fruition.

Stanley Henry is a man that went from working menial night jobs and attending high school during the day, to owning his own hardware distribution store and contracting firm and being one of the most respected men in Brooklyn.

Mr. Henry was born in British Guyana, South America in 1945. While he attended the Mackenzie Government and Technical High School during the day, he worked nights, a feat especially commendable for a teenager. After graduating in 1965, Mr. Henry worked as a construction apprentice with the Canadian Baukite Company. In 1967, he migrated to Brooklyn. Not needing much time to adapt to a new culture, Mr. Henry graduated from The Delhany Institute of Structural Design within 2 years. He then entered a position with Ewell W. Finley Engineer PC and for the next 10 years, Mr. Henry stayed with this company. While still employed with the company, Mr. Henry continued his education. He graduated from both the Institute of Design Construction adding to his structural engineering experience and from NYC Technical College to enhance his administrative skills.

Mr. Henry later moved on to establish Annie Henry General Hardware, his own building materials supply business named after his beloved mother. The name was later changed to Henry Wholesale & Resale Distributors, LLC. He is also the proud owner of Henry Builders, a contracting firm that not only knows the people that it serves, but the people it serves knows and loves him. Mr. Henry’s businesses have been a fixture on Broadway for over 35 years and he is affectionately known as the “Mayor of Broadway” and “The Master Builder.”

Mr. Henry embodies the entrepreneurial spirit that is essential to any small business.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of Stanley Henry as he offers his talents and services for the betterment of our community.

Mr. Speaker, Stanley Henry’s selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication and today we should recognize this man and pay homage to a life truly worth celebrating.

TRIBUTE TO THE GAY, LESBIAN, BISEXUAL & TRANSGENDER COMMUNITY CENTER OF COLORADO

HON. DIANA DeGETTE

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Ms. DeGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the exceptional leadership and invaluable contributions of the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Center of Colorado. “The Center,” on the occasion of its 30th anniversary, is fitting that we recognize The Center for its record of extraordinary service in providing support and advocacy for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender, GLBT, communities in the 1st Congressional District and throughout Colorado.

The Center has been on the front lines of progress since its inception and has proven to be a powerful force in transforming the landscape of our State. Founded in Denver in 1976, The Center is a statewide, nonprofit community center and is one of the oldest organizations serving GLBT communities in the country. It is a powerful advocate on a broad range of issues that affect GLBT people in our State and is a catalyst for community organizing and providing needed services.

Health and wellness is a key focus of The Center. Its Healthy Living Program offers extensive health care services including free HIV testing in conjunction with Denver Health, low-cost hepatitis vaccinations, free mammograms for uninsured women, health care provider referrals and access to mental health services. It also devotes sizable effort to community health education as well as disease prevention. The Lesbian Cancer Support Service strives to increase early detection and a higher rate of cancer survival in lesbian and bisexual women. The Center also maintains Rainbow Alley, a drop-in center designed for GLBT youth that provides health care services, counseling and referral. Youth have access to a medical clinic, computer lab, kitchen and the Terry Mangan Library, all of which are drug, alcohol, tobacco and human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) free.

The Center’s advocacy and legal initiatives have done much to advance the cause of civil liberty and provide necessary assistance to those who experience discrimination, harassment and unequal treatment. The Legal Initiatives Project, CLIP, was founded in 1992 to challenge a discriminatory amendment to the Colorado Constitution. Amendment II would have precluded any action by the State or local governments designed to protect GLBT people. Amendment II passed by a slim margin, but due to CLIP’s leadership, a lawsuit was filed and injunctive relief was granted to prevent the measure from taking effect. The decision was appealed to the United States Supreme Court and a national coalition of civil rights groups joined CLIP to uphold the lower court ruling. In a historic decision—Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620 (1996)—the Supreme Court determined that Amendment II was unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. In 2000, CLIP merged with The Center and became its legal services program. It accomplishes its mission through the CLIP Program, the Terry Mangan Library, legal advocacy, mediation, media work and public education. CLIP focuses on cases and issues that move the civil rights agenda forward serve the most oppressed and disadvantaged in the GLBT communities.

We are indeed fortunate to have The Center in our community. It is an invaluable resource and I am deeply appreciative of the good work the Center does in addressing systemic inequalities and providing continuity and stability in the efforts to secure greater equality, justice and participation in our democracy. The Center has helped provide a place at the table for GLBT people. It has provided needed health and community services. In summary, The Center’s leadership and engagement has made a real difference in peoples lives and thereby in the communities it serves.

Please join me in commending the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Center of Colorado. It is the strong leadership and meaningful service it provides on a daily basis that continually enhances our lives and builds a better future for all of our people.
CHILD WELFARE LEAGUE OF AMERICA TESTIMONY

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL
NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to your attention Part II of the testimony of the Child Welfare League of America (CWLA) when they testified before the Human Resources Subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee on May 23, 2006.

The purpose of the testimony given was to share with the Subcommittee important measures to improve our nation’s child protective services. It is my hope that my colleagues will find this information useful as well as informative as we focus on legislation that addresses the needs of our children.

CWLA POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION

The Reauthorization of Promoting Safe and Stable Families—Of most immediate importance for this Committee is the reauthorization of the Promoting Safe and Stable Families program (PSSF) by FY 2006. PSSF supports four vital services that address four different types of families in need: (1) those in need of basic support services to strengthen the family and keep them whole; (2) families being reunified, families we are trying to intervene, and adoptive families in need of support. As you review some of the key needs included in this testimony, the Subcommittee can see how the issues of prevention, aftercare, permanency and stability and reunifying families are all addressed by these categories.

CWLA believes these services and families should continue to be the target for PSSF in a reauthorization bill.

Family Support Services (FSS) were developed to respond to the concerns, interests, and needs of families within a community. Family Support Services are targeted to families with difficulties and concerns related to the proper functioning of the family and children. The focus of the program is on prevention. The services address the need to improve the well-being of a child, family functioning, and the parent’s ability to care for the family, both during and after crises. These interventions are intended to prevent the necessity of out-of-home placement of children or to promote family reunification. The services are intended to protect a child in a home where abuse and neglect have occurred, prevent subsequent abuse or neglect, prevent placement of a child, or reduce the stay for a child in out-of-home care. FSS services are usually referred by public welfare agencies. Services are provided within 24 hours of referral and the family’s involvement is voluntary. These services respond to families on a 24-hour basis, including services such as family therapy, budgeting, nutrition, and parenting skills.

Adoption support is an important need as the number of adoptions have increased. There is still more work to be done. Services may include information and referral, case management groups and range of other services. Of the 325,000 children in foster care in 2003, approximately 119,000 were waiting to be adopted, with the majority of these 65,000 children free for adoption (parental rights had been terminated). Of the children waiting, 40 percent were black non-Hispanic, 37 percent were white non-Hispanic, 17 percent were Hispanic, and 4 percent were of undetermined ethnicity. In 2003, the median age of children waiting to be adopted was 6.7 years; 3 percent of the children waiting to be adopted were younger than 1 year; 32 percent were ages 1 to 5; 28 percent were ages 6 to 10; 30 percent were 11 to 15; and 6 percent were 16.

Use Of $90 Million PSSF Increase—CWLA supports the extension of the $40 million in mandatory funding that was included in the Deficit Reduction Act and we want to work with the Subcommittee and members of Congress to see that PSSF is at a minimum fully funded at the level of $505 million as adopted by this Subcommittee in 2001. We feel there is still more work to be done. As indicated earlier in our testimony, forty percent of children substantiated as abused or neglected do not receive follow-up services. One reason may be repeated that there is need for more reunification, adoption and other support services than PSSF attempts to address. To truly address this gap, the Subcommittee and Congress need to address the specific needs of this country needs to go much further in its funding and priority of the entire child welfare system.

CWLA recognizes that the Subcommittee and members of Congress see the $40 million in mandatory funding as an opportunity to address some additional issues in the child welfare field. Part of the reauthorization of the Deficit Reduction Act and of the $40 million appropriated to Congress we strongly urge you to make this the first step in a comprehensive strategy over the next few years to more fully address the needs of children in crisis.

The draft legislation includes a workforce element tied to caseworker visits. CWLA supports regular and on-going visits to children in care. In the child welfare field visitation is not an isolated service or stand-alone intervention. Rather it is part of a larger case planning process. To reach this visitation goal we need a comprehensive strategy to strengthen the child welfare workforce.

We would not want a system of care where turnover, higher education levels, adequate case loads, initial training and on-going training, adequate supervision and the proper partnerships with educational institutions and other partners in workforce development are lacking.

For each state this will be different so we would urge the Subcommittee to craft legislation around such a flexible allocation of funding and planning with the states to develop outcomes and provide related data that can demonstrate progress toward a comprehensive workforce strategy or goals. We recommend this strategy that requires federal, state and local partnerships. It should also be recognized that $40 million for fifty states may limit the states’ ability to reach this goal. In addition, it will be difficult to determine how this designation of $40 million can best support the current state efforts since it will overlap with Title IV-E Administrative funding used for these critical purposes but we do highlight this important piece ofwork.

Possible Improvements—Access For Tribal Communities—In your reauthorization, CWLA suggests that the Subcommittee include in its recommendations being proposed by the National Indian Child Welfare Association, National Congress of American Indians and the Association of American Indian Families be to waive the joint project that the reserved amounts of funding for tribal governments at 3 percent in both the mandatory and discretionary program of tribal governments could also apply for the funding and we endorse an authorization of a tribal court improvement program.

Data—As part of the application process, states submit information on how they intend to allocate their PSSF funding. This information should be collected and included in an annual report. We also urge the Subcommittee to include legislative language that would direct HHS to work with states to determine how to compile and collate the data that will provide a stronger picture of why that funding is important to so many human service programs.

Mentoring of Children of Prisoners—We commend the Committee for including the reauthorization of the prevention of Children of Prisoners program in this legislation. Mentoring for this population is an effective way to engage at-risk children and youth, provide needed connections to important and perhaps most importantly, builds relations among family members during and after incarceration. We know there are many areas in the country today where children of prisoners are not able to access this mentoring service due to lack of availability. Expansion is necessary and the Committee is to be commended for focusing on this. We urge the committee to carefully consider the following issues as this new initiative is implemented.

Currently there are 218 federally funded sites around the country where this mentoring is taking place, involving thousands of children. It would be tragic for these children to have their mentoring disrupted or ended prematurely. We urge the Committee to include provisions to allow these efforts to continue.

Researchers and mentoring experts have concluded that children facing multiple developmental risks benefit more from mentoring than other children; however, they require a higher quality of mentoring program and are more likely to be adversely affected by poor quality mentoring. We urge the Committee to examine carefully the expertise and background of all potential national entities specific to mentoring children of prisoners. New trainings, techniques and curricula, have recently been developed. Whatever entity is chosen will need to be fully knowledgeable of these tools and prepared to make them available.

IV–B Part 1 Child Welfare Services—CWLA appreciates the Subcommittee’s efforts to better align IV–B Part 1, Child Welfare Services program with that of FSSS. This can add clarity to the understanding of funding sources although it is unclear to what extent IV–B funds are spent on adoption, foster care and child care on an annual basis. In practical terms, since federal Title IV–E funds cover half or less than half of the children eligible for IV–E by relying on other federal funds, state funds, local funds or a combination of all three.

CWLA also appreciates the Subcommittee’s efforts at updating the state plan requirements. In addition we suggest the requirement to include a description of efforts to address the overrepresentation of children of color in the child welfare system. These children represent African American/Black, Latino/Hispanic, American Indian/Alaskan Native, Asian Hawaiian/Other Pacific Islander, or two or more races.

Conclusion—CWLA appreciates the opportunity to offer our testimony and comments to the Subcommittee in regard to this reauthorization of Promoting Safe and Stable Families. As this legislation moves forward, we look forward to a continued dialogue with the Subcommittee and Members of Congress. We also hope that this reauthorization serves as a building block for future efforts that will create a comprehensive reform that reduces the number of children who are abused and neglected and safer and permanent families for those children who do come into contact with the child welfare system.

IN MEMORIAM TO DAVID HANSBERGER, FOR HIS CIVIC LEADERSHIP IN YUCAIPA CALIFORNIA

HON. JERRY LEWIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to express my sadness at the passing of a friend, David Hansberger of Yucaipa, whose civic leadership helped guide this growing community to cityhood and set it on a course to become a highly-desired destination city in my California district. Mr. Hansberger passed away this week, and all of his friends will feel the loss.

David Hansberger is a native of Redlands, my hometown, and received all of his education in our area. As he grew up, the Inland Empire grew from a semi-rural group of small cities to a population powerhouse and New England church was started and it continued and protected the building.

Mr. BRADLEY of New Hampshire. Mr. Hansberger became a charter member of the city planning commission, and helped set a tone of top-quality home development that has made the city a beautiful place.

The friends of David Hansberger are legion—indeed, most people who knew him would say he never let anyone be a stranger for long. His genuine concern and compassion drew people to him, and he welcomed them as friends.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in expressing condolences to Mr. Hansberger’s wife of 41 years, Sheila, and his children, grandchildren, parents and siblings. I ask you to join me as well in celebrating his wonderful contributions to making his community, and our world, a friendlier and more livable place.

HONORING ARTHUR GLIDDEN, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF THE WOLFEBORO CENTRE COMMUNITY CHURCH

HON. JEB BRADLEY OF NEW HAMPSHIRE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. BRADLEY of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Arthur Glidden for his hard work and dedication to the continuation and protection of the Wolfeboro Centre Community Church for over 43 years. Arthur Glidden is 83-years-old and has been a resident of my hometown of Wolfeboro for his entire life. Arthur’s wife, Dotty, is also a lifelong resident of the community and a supporter of the church.

In 1941, a group of Wolfeboro citizens purchased one third of an acre for $17 to build a non-denominational worship center for the Christian members in the area. This traditional New England church was started and it continued in operation with the generous help of the congregation. In 1964, Arthur Glidden became President of the Church Board and began what has now become his long-standing devotion to the parishioners and the care and preservation of the building.

Arthur has taken the traditions of when the meeting house was first built and he has raised them to a higher level. For almost 25 percent of the life of the Wolfeboro Centre Community Church, he has been its greatest protector and benefactor. At times, almost single-handedly, Arthur lifted the church up to save it from declining membership and carried it forward until it was safe and secure again.

Arthur Glidden is to be commended for his steadfast dedication to the Wolfeboro Centre Community Church, and all of his efforts to improve the community in which he lives.
fair access to U.S. telecommunications. I am concerned that the anti-discrimination policy contained in the bill does not go far enough in ensuring fair access to service and in allowing fair access to group claims and protections in the event that consumers feel that they and their neighbors have been discriminated against.

I also continue to remain concerned that this bill does not contain a stronger network neutrality provision—which would prevent Internet providers from discriminating against Internet content—whether through pricing or speed of delivery. The Internet has been a negotiation medium that has flourished due to the fact that content has moved freely and equally without interference from network providers. Financial incentives to move some content through the Internet rather than another content would undermine the innovation that has spurred competitive Internet content and services. It is my opinion that the network providers should not be the ones in charge of favoring one application over another—consumers should be in charge of that.

A broad coalition of groups opposes this bill for a variety of reasons, including the National Conference of State Legislatures, the National League of Cities, the National Association of Counties, the National Association of Telecommunications Offices and Advisors, and the National Association of Councils. Other groups share in the concern about the need for strong network neutrality provisions, including a broad coalition representing AARP, the American Library Association, colleges and universities across the country, and many others. I share in their concerns and that is why I rise today to oppose passage of this bill.

EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR DEFENSE, THE GLOBAL WAR ON TERROR, AND HURRICANE RECOVERY, 2006—CONFERENCE

SPEECH OF
HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, June 12, 2006

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, from the beginning, the Bush Administration's policy on Iraq has been based on distortions and misjudgments. Prior to the invasion, I fought to prevent this war. I parted with most members of Congress and cast a vote against the resolution authorizing the use of military force in Iraq. The President misled the American people into believing there was a link between Iraq and the terrorist attacks of September 11.

I understand the frustration and heartbreak that have led many Americans to conclude that it is now time for us to remove ourselves from this misguided quagmire and bring our troops home. That is why I have called on the President to change course. America simply cannot continue indefinitely to pay the high costs in both lives and dollars to stay on the same failed course in Iraq.

In December 2005, I voted for H.R. 1815, the FY 2006 Defense Authorization bill, which the President signed into law in January 2006. Section 1227 of that bill, United States Policy on Iraq, states that it is the sense of Congress that "calendar year 2006 should be a period of significant transition to full Iraqi sovereignty, with Iraqi security forces taking the lead for the security of a free and sovereign Iraq, thereby creating the conditions for the phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq."

It is time for the President to implement this policy. We should not have American troops in the middle of a civil war. President Bush is wrong to say that we should stay the course in Iraq. We need a new direction in Iraq.

The President should present a strategy to Congress to draw down American troops from Iraq and return them home to their families. This strategy must ensure that our National Guard troops are the first to come home, as they were never intended as our primary force for overseas military missions. We need our National Guard troops to be home and available for our local needs.

Military experts have recommended a drawdown of 10,000 troops per month. Although we should not announce a specific timeline for troop withdrawal, it is reasonable to expect that we should have half of our combat troops home by the end of 2006, and all of our combat troops home by the end of 2007. Even with such a drawdown of American troops in Iraq, this supplemental appropriations is necessary in order to insure the proper funding of our military operations during such a drawdown.

Bringing our troops home allows us to achieve certain necessary objectives. First, we will bring our troops home safely to their families and remove them from being in the middle of a civil war. Second, we should send an important message to the Iraqi government to take responsibility for their government—after they ratified a new constitution, held elections, and installed a new government—because American troops cannot and should not remain in Iraq indefinitely. Third, we would remove a powerful propaganda and recruitment tool for Al Qaeda that the United States is an occupation force. Fourth, we would be able to stage our troops to work with our allies and the international community to fight the war against international terrorism. The repositioning of our troops would help us to regain our focus on the war on terror. Finally, bringing our troops home would help us preserve the volunteer military by improving troop morale and boosting our efforts to improve recruitment of new soldiers.

I have repeatedly called for a change in America's policies so that we can bring our troops home as soon as possible. In December 2004, I visited our troops in Iraq. I thanked them for their service and listened to their stories. It was a moving experience for me. I honor the sacrifices they and their families are making each day.

The men and women of our armed forces are demonstrating tremendous dedication to our nation through their performance in Iraq. These brave soldiers have put their lives in harm's way for our country, and we are forever grateful.

This bill also contains crucial provisions, which I support, that would provide nearly $20 billion for Hurricane Katrina relief, including funds for housing, community planning and development, flood control, and small business loans. In addition, the House should take up H.R. 4197, a comprehensive Hurricane Katrina recovery bill introduced by the Congressional Black Caucus.

I am encouraged that the bill provides nearly $500 million to address the ongoing genocide in southern Sudan and Darfur. These funds are critical to meeting the immediate needs of victims of the Darfur crisis, such as shelter, health care, and access to water and sanitation. Sudanese government-backed Arab militias have slaughtered hundreds of thousands of villagers, and they have burned entire villages. Up to two million refugees have fled this genocide to neighboring countries, but the small, poorly-equipped, and underfunded African Union (AU) force cannot offer them adequate protection. This bill provides needed funding to help transition the AU peacekeeping operation to a United Nations mission. It is also encouraging that in April the House passed H.R. 3127, the Darfur Peace and Accountability Act, which I co-sponsored, and which I urge the Senate to take up without delay.

Mr. Speaker, this emergency supplemental is a necessary measure that will provide essential support for our troops in their arduous mission in Iraq, vital funding for the global war on terror, and desperately needed assistance for our own Gulf region and the many Americans who have been uprooted by Hurricane Katrina.

MINE IMPROVEMENT AND NEW EMERGENCY RESPONSE ACT OF 2006 (S. 2803)

HON. BETTY MCCOLLUM OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Ms. MCCOLLUM of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the recent tragedies of the Sago and Aracoma Alma mine disasters have been a difficult lesson in the efforts to improve mine safety regulations effectively and permanently. I rise today in strong support of long overdue coal miner safety legislation. Unfortunately, the Mine Improvement and New Emergency Response Act of 2006, S. 2803, while an improvement over current efforts to address three simple, much-needed reforms that could save lives, I cannot support the bill before us today because I support stronger improvements to miner safety—which have been supported by miners, miner families, and industry. This legislation would be made stronger with three additional requirements: Provision of no less than a 2-day supply of breathable air for trapped miners; Assurance that within 15 months, communications and tracking devices will be available to find and communicate with trapped miners; regular inspections of miners' individual oxygen packs, known as self-contained self-rescuers, by the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration.

Congress can do better for working men and women by adopting these three provisions. In fact, since this bill passed the Senate, reports have indicated that these reforms could be easily implemented at very little cost. Unfortunately, the Republican leadership would not allow these simple and agreeable provisions to be offered as amendments to this bill.

The Bush administration has failed to make miner safety a priority and instead has proposed budget cuts and deregulation. Despite six U.S. mine tragedies and more than 30 miners' deaths this year already, the President did not request funding for additional safety enforcement personnel in his Fiscal Year 2007 budget. This proposal is after years of budget cuts to the Department of Labor's Mine Safety and Health Administration, MSHA, resulting in a decline of 170 full-time employees at MSHA and a decline of 217 employees in coal enforcement. In addition, President Bush has appointed former mining executives to the top political positions at the Mine Safety and Health Administration.

I will continue to support efforts to implement stronger miner safety laws. I oppose this bill and urge my colleagues in joining me to fight for stronger regulations that will save lives and to fight for our working men and women.

A TRIBUTE TO WALTER T. MOSLEY III

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Walter T. Mosley III, a distinguished member of the Brooklyn, New York community. It behooves us to pay tribute to this outstanding leader and I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing his impressive accomplishments. Walter T. Mosley III served as Staff and Counsel to New York State Assemblyman William F. Boyland, Jr. Prior to his current assignment, Mr. Mosley served as Legal Counsel to the Deputy Speaker of the Assembly, Hon. Clarence Norman, Jr. from 2001 to 2005. In this capacity, he served as advisor to the Deputy Speaker on legislative and public policy issues related to statewide and borough-wide initiatives.

Mr. Mosley's current responsibilities include proposing and recommending legislative items and statewide sponsorship requests, serving as the assemblyman’s consultant to social programs and economic development projects within central Brooklyn. He also serves as his re-election consultant, and manager of his staff, both in Brooklyn and Albany, New York.

Prior to accepting his current position with the New York State Assembly, Mr. Mosley served as a political consultant on several local and countywide campaigns, and in 2004, was assigned by the Democratic National Committee to work on behalf of Senator John Kerry's presidential campaign. From 1998 to 2001, Mr. Mosley was a Legislative and Oversight Analyst and Investigator for the New York City Council's Office of Oversight and Investigations. In that capacity, Mr. Mosley issued a number of citywide reports and studies on several public policy issues for the City Council.

Mr. Mosley is involved with many community activities, which include his personal work with literacy programs, youth and civic organizations that have made him keenly aware of the importance of helping others while providing opportunities for individuals to reach their full potential. Presently, Mr. Mosley serves as a State and Volunteer Member to “Future Giant,” a non-profit Harlem/South Bronx community based organization formed to support and mentor adolescents and young adults; Board Member, Bedford YMCA; Chairman of the Economic Development & Job Creation Committee for Community Board 2; Board Member, CUSH Campuses Schools in Brooklyn, NY; Mentor, Penn State Fast Start Program for incoming freshmen from New York City; and an active member of the Brooklyn Branch of the NAACP.

Recently, Mr. Mosley co-founded and is managing partner for the consulting firm, Ad- versant Consulting Group, LLC where he helps to advise and organize not-for-profit groups in New York City. In his spare time, Mr. Mosley serves as a volunteer youth coach with the Brooklyn Skyhawks Football Club and as a participating coach with the National Football League's Junior Players Development Program. Mr. Mosley is a member of the oldest African-American fraternal organization in America—Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Incorporated.

In addition to his volunteer work, Mr. Mosley actively fundraisers for the internationally acclaimed HIV/AIDS advocacy group, The Balmain Gilead, where he participates yearly in their annual marathon. Mr. Mosley sincerely hopes the level of his commitment not only helps to generate funding and awareness in the fight against HIV/AIDS, but will encourage other young adults to join in his efforts to raise money and awareness towards the fight against this horrible disease.

This year, Mr. Mosley intends to run in the New York City Marathon to raise funds for the Bedford YMCA. As a result of his tireless work and efforts, Mr. Mosley is the recipient of numerous community awards and recognitions.

CONCERNING THE THREE SUICIDES AT GUANTANAMO BAY

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, there has been no organization, no strategy and no plan for the handling of the prisoners at Guantamano Bay. They have been in prison for years and years, with no hope of being formally charged. They are given none of the rights afforded prisoners of war under the Geneva Convention nor are they given the rights of criminal suspects in the U.S. justice system. In fact, out of the roughly 500 detainees at Guantanamo Bay, only four have been charged with war crimes. And, since these detainees are classified as enemy combatants, they can be held until the war is over. Since none can accurately determine when the war will end, the prisoners could be detained for an indefinite amount of time.

Mr. Speaker, I visited Guantamano Bay in 2003. I saw firsthand the conditions of the prisoners and the facilities in which they were being held. These prisoners were being held in small cells for over a year without any hope of having their day in court—or even being formally charged with a war crime. With this desperate atmosphere, it is not surprising that there have been at least 41 unsuccessful suicide attempts by 25 detainees since the United States began taking prisoners to the base in January 2002.

I find it inexcusable that my own country has not demonstrated more concern for the basic Constitutional rights of these prisoners. If there is legitimate evidence of crime, these prisoners deserve a speedy trial.

Mr. Speaker, we must be a positive example to the world. We must prove to all those who would challenge our way of life that a worthy Democracy that upholds the rule of law even in the time of conflict, can exist. If we are to convince the world that terrorism is wrong and freedom is right and just, then as the most powerful voice of liberty, the United States of America must start acting as a leader and as an example.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. CANDICE S. MILLER OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, due to a family emergency I was not in attendance in the House between June 12th and June 14th, and during that time I missed a number of roll call votes.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on rollcall votes 250 through 262, 270, 273, 283, 286 and 287, and I would have voted “no” on rollcall votes 263 through 269, 271, 272, 274 through 282, 284 and 285.

I ask unanimous consent that this be entered into the RECORD in the appropriate place.

TRIBUTE TO MARK ABBOTT

HON. DARLENE HOOLEY
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Ms. HOOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Mark Abbott, Dean of the College of Oceanic and Atmospheric Sciences at Oregon State University, on his nomination to the National Science Board. Oregon has long benefited from Dean Abbott's impressive scientific knowledge and I am delighted that he will now have the opportunity to share this insight with the rest of the country.

We in Congress have already benefited from Dean Abbott's scientific expertise. In July, 2002, he testified before the House Committee on Science's Subcommittee on Environment, Technology, and Standards about satellite data management at NOAA from the perspective of the Earth science community.

During his time at Oregon State, Dean Abbott's research has been focused on the interaction of biological and physical processes in the upper ocean. He has been a pioneer in the use of satellite ocean color data to study coupled physical/biological processes and he has also advised the Office of Naval Research and the National Science Foundation on ocean information infrastructure. Dean Abbott was also recently appointed a co-chair of the State of Oregon's Climate Change Integration Group. This panel, appointed by Oregon Governor Ted Kulongoski, has been charged with tracking and projecting greenhouse gas emission reductions and looking at future economic and societal implications of climate change.
The National Science Board is the governing body of the National Science Foundation, an independent federal agency established to promote the progress of science, advance the national health, prosperity, and welfare, and secure the national defense. The National Science Board has the dual responsibilities of the national science policy advisor to the President and the Congress and serving as the governing board of the National Science Foundation.

Today, the Nation and the world are confronted with many questions about the possible impacts that human behavior is having on the environment. We need to make sure that our policy decisions are based on science and not the other way around. With Mark Abbott and others like him serving on the National Science Board, I know that this will continue to be the case.

A TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM D. PINKETT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of William D. Pinkett, a distinguished member of the Brooklyn, New York community. It behooves us to pay tribute to this outstanding leader and I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing his impressive accomplishments.

William D. Pinkett was born in New Haven, Connecticut to the late William Sheridan and Hattie Pinkett. He is the fifth of five brothers, all of whom have preceded him in death.

William (Bill as he is affectionately called by most) came to Brooklyn as an infant, when his parents came to New York seeking a better life.

Bill was educated in the New York public school system, attending PS 41, Junior High School 210 and Boys High School. He received his Bachelor of Arts Degree and Masters in Sociology from Brooklyn College. He also received a Masters of Science Degree in Educational Supervision from Pace University.

In 1950, the US Army drafted Bill and he served in the infantry in Korea. In 1953, Bill received an honorable discharge and was immediately hired by the US Postal System. While working as a clerk at night, Bill attended Pace University and taught in the NYC Public Schools.

After 10 years of postal employment, he assumed a fulltime career as classroom teacher and later earned a degree in administration of occupational education. He was subsequently appointed assistant to the Provost at Pace University.

Bill’s tenure at the New York City Board of Education lasted 33 years. He retired in 1991, as a licensed Senior Educational Administrator of Curriculum and Staff Development.

Wherever Bill worked, he also served as a union representative in those titles. Upon retirement at the Board it was to be expected that he would become an elected officer in the Retired School Supervisors Chapter of the Council of Supervisors and Administrators (CSA). It is also fitting that as a Trustee of the CSA Retiree Welfare Fund, Bill continues to serve as a champion for the rights and benefits for retirees of his former union.

Given Bill’s leadership abilities, it was not a surprise that he was elected Chairman of the City-Wide Council of Municipal Retiree Organizations (COMRO), which is comprised of retirees from over 40 New York City unions, representing in excess of 150,000 retirees.

Bill is completing his second term as Chairman of this distinguished organization of unified and civilian retirees, which seeks to maintain and improve the health benefits of all municipal retirees as well as keeping a watchful eye on legislation that impact upon New York City’s five pension systems.

Bill will be quick to tell you that whatever skills in public relations with workers and retirees he might have, came about because he learned so much from his master teacher (and late wife), New York City Councilwoman Mary Glover Pinkett.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of William D. Pinkett as he offers his talents and services for the betterment of our local and national communities.

Mr. Speaker, William Pinkett’s selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication that makes him most worthy of our recognition today.

TRANSPORTATION. TREASURY. HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT. THE JUDICIARY, THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT. 2007

SPEECH OF

HON. BOB ETHERIDGE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 14, 2006

The House in Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5576) making appropriations for the Departments of Transportation and Housing and Urban Development, the Judiciary, District of Columbia, and independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2007, and for other purposes:

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 5576, the Transportation-Treasury-Housing and Urban Development-Judiciary-DC Appropriations Act of 2007.

This bill will provide over $139 billion in budgetary resources, including direct appropriations and funds from the transportation trust fund. Our highways and infrastructure system built this Nation, and we need to maintain them. This legislation brings the funding level to the amount required in the recently passed transportation bill, provides over $1 billion for Amtrak and other rail service, as well as the funds needed to maintain our Community Development Block Grant and elderly housing programs.

But I believe that this could have been a better bill. The proposed cuts to the HUD programs such as Hope VI and Section 8 housing for the elderly should have been rejected.

I support H.R. 5576 as amended, and urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this bill.

TRIBUTE TO FRANCIS P. CANALI ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT FROM THE WORCESTER, MASSACHUSETTS PUBLIC SCHOOLS

HON. JAMES P. MCGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the retirement of Francis P. Canali on the occasion of his retirement from the Worcester, Massachusetts Public Schools.

The end of this school year marks the end of Frank’s distinguished thirty-four year career as a teacher and administrator at Worcester Vocational High School. During his long tenure, Frank has gained a well-deserved reputation as a talented professional educator who is widely respected and admired for his unflagging devotion to Worcester Voke.

The longevity of Frank Canali’s career is not only impressive, it is also inspiring. In an age when loyalty is becoming an increasingly rare quality, Frank’s steadfast commitment to the students, faculty and staff of Worcester Voke reminds us all what one man can accomplish when he dedicates his life’s work to the betterment of a single institution. When Frank walks out the doors of Worcester Voke for the last time, he will leave the school an infinitely better place than he found it.

Frank began teaching at Worcester Vocational High School in 1972 as a graphic arts instructor in the evening program. He later taught offset lithography, both in the Career Educational Training Program and at Worcester Vocational High School, before becoming head of the graphic communications department in 1980. Along the way Frank furthered his own education by earning a bachelor’s degree in science education and a master’s degree in administration of occupational education. He was subsequently appointed assistant principal in 2000 and ultimately principal in 2003. As Frank now prepares to end his career as principal, he leaves Worcester Vocational High School as one of the highest-performing public schools in the City of Worcester and with a new state-of-the-art facility that is the envy of every community in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Both remarkable achievements are due in no small part to the immeasurable and lasting contributions Frank has made during his career. His positive influence has benefited an untold number of young men and women, and his legacy will be that he tirelessly demanded that vocational education receive the attention, emphasis and investment it rightly deserves and that our nation so desperately needs.

Mr. Speaker, as the brother of two Worcester public school teachers, I know well the great challenges that our educators face on a daily basis. For thirty-four years, Frank Canali has met and mastered those daily challenges. He enters retirement with the quiet pride and satisfaction of knowing that he has truly made a difference. I wish to offer my heartfelt appreciation for Frank’s public service to the families of Worcester, and I wish him and his wife Patti, their children and grandchildren a happy and healthy retirement. He has earned it.
Economists have argued that aid can have adverse effects on a country’s economic system. It pushes up the local exchange rates, discouraging local manufacturing; it breeds foreign assistance dependency by cutting down room for internal development of industries and opportunities. At the same time our aid saves lives. “For pennies [we] can vaccinate a child and save his/her life. For only $5, [we] can buy a mosquito net and save several people from malaria.” In Darfur we haven’t done nearly enough to establish permanent peace and stability, but our aid has kept thousands of people alive.

Keeping these facts in mind, my dear colleagues, I ask you all to join me in taking constructive steps to increase both the amount of U.S. foreign aid and the efficiency in distributing it to nations that are in dire need of assistance. We, as representatives of the most powerful nation of the world, must lead the way and work with international organizations that can share this burden with us.

[From The New York Times, June 13, 2006]

(By Nicholas D. Kristof)

Don’t tell anyone, but a dirty little secret within the foreign aid world is that aid often doesn’t work very well. Now that talk has been aired (and sometimes exaggerated) in a provocative new book by William Easterly, “The White Man’s Burden.” Mr. Easterly, a former World Bank official, is now a economics professor at New York University, has tossed a hand grenade at the world’s bleeding hearts—and, worst of all, he’s on target.

Let me say right off that stingy Republicans should not read this book. It might inflame their worst suspicions. But the rest of us should read it, because there is a growing constituency for fighting global poverty, and we need to figure out how to make that money more effective.

I disagree with many of Professor Easterly’s arguments, but he’s right about one central reality: helping people can be much harder than it looks. When people are chronically hungry, for example, shipping in food can actually make things worse, because the imported food lowers prices and thus discourages farmers from planting in the next season. (That’s why the United Nations, when spending aid money, tries to buy food in the region rather than import it.)

On one of my recent trips to Darfur, I had dinner at a restaurant in Nyala called K2. Out back were 18 big white S.U.V.’s belonging to the U.N. and aid groups; that amounted to nearly $1 million worth of vehicles, in a country where people are starving.

The aid workers are struggling heroically in a dangerous and difficult place, and I don’t begrudge them reliable vehicles. But something seems wrong when international agencies are more successful at maintaining fleets of S.U.V.’s than they are at hiring teachers. When aid spending is done—annually, and one of the ways to spend a grant in a single year is to buy a vehicle—

It’s well-known that the countries that have succeeded best in lifting people out of poverty (China, Singapore, Malaysia) have received minimal aid, while many that have been flooded with aid (Niger, Togo, Zambia) have ended up poorer. Thus many economists accept that aid doesn’t generally help poor countries grow, but argue that it does stimulate growth in countries with good governance. That was the conclusion of a study in 2000 by Craig Burnside and David Dollar. Professor Easterly repeated that study, using a larger pool of data, and—alas—found no improvement even in countries with good governance.

Saddest of all, Raghuram Rajan and Arvind Subramanian of the International Monetary Fund have found that “aid inflows have systematic adverse effects on a country’s competitiveness.” One problem is that aid pushes up the local exchange rate, discouraging local manufacturing. Mr. Subramanian also argues that aid income and the same local companies and industries—such as palm oil producers—the same local companies and industries—such as palm oil producers—tried to compensate for a loss in per capita income—that famous “oil curse”—by breeding dependency and undermining local institutions.

All these findings can be pretty shattering to a bleeding-heart American. But cheer up. Some other studies indicate that aid does improve growth (economists don’t agree about this any more than they do about anything else). And whatever the impact on economic growth rates, aid definitely does something far more important; it saves lives. For pennies, you can vaccinate a child and save his or her life. For $5 you can buy a family a large mosquito net and save several people from malaria. For $250, you can repair a teenage girl’s fistula, a common childbirth injury, and give her a life again.

The Center for Global Development, a Washington think tank, has published a terrific book, “Millions Saved,” demonstrating how health projects have saved lives. Eradicating smallpox and reducing river blindness has improved the lives of millions of people for less money than almost any investment imaginable. In Darfur, we haven’t done nearly enough. But our aid shipments have kept alive hundreds of thousands of people.

For my whole adult life, I’ve sponsored children through Plan USA, and in visiting my “adopted” child in places like the Philippines and Sudan, I’ve seen how the kids’ lives are transformed by American sponsors. Aid is no panacea, but it is a lifesaver. So let’s not shy away from a conversation about the effectiveness of aid. The problems are real, but so are the millions of people alive today who wouldn’t be if not for aid. In the end, if we have tough conversations about foreign aid, then I believe Americans will acknowledge the challenges—and then, clear-eyed, agree to dig more deeply than ever, for that is simply the best way we have of asserting our own humanity.
Mr. Glover later moved to Bedford Stuyvesant and became very active with the Unity Democratic Club, where he served as Chairperson of Membership Committee and Office Manager. In his spare time, he loves to watch sports and two of his most beloved teams are the NY Yankees and the NY Football Giants.

Everyone who knows Mr. Glover knows that if you can’t catch him during the week, you will be sure to find him on Sunday at Mt. Carmel Baptist Church where he serves as a faithful Deacon. He is also a member of the Association of Deacons.

Mr. Glover’s motto is “If I Can’t Help Somebody Along the Way, Then My Living Would Have Been in Vain,” and his life is a living testament.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of Henry Glover, a man who offers his talents and services for the betterment of our community.

Mr. Speaker, Henry Glover’s selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication that makes him most worthy of our recognition today.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH HENRY WASHINGTON

HON. MELVIN L. WATT
OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. WATT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today as Chair of the Congressional Black Caucuses, to pay tribute to a fallen American hero. Joseph Henry Washington passed away on June 13, 2006. He was not well known beyond his Charleston, South Carolina community, but he represents so many unsung African American heroes who courageously defended America in the armed forces at a time when this country was at war with its civil rights.

Joe Washington was a survivor of Pearl Harbor. His life was an ordinary one, but on December 7, 1941, it became extraordinary.

Mr. Washington was the youngest son of Isaac and Elvira Delura McCants Washington. After his father’s death, his mother struggled to raise her two young boys by “taking in washing” for wealthy Charleston residents. Despite the hardships, no one wanted young Joe to leave home and join the Navy. Yet he was determined to see the world, and his mother gave permission for her son to fulfill his dream.

Navy recruiting officers welcomed young Joe. However, he quickly learned that the only place for men of color was as a Mess Attendant for Naval officers. Still he boarded a train for Raleigh, North Carolina and took the oath to dutifully serve his country. On August 9, 1937, Joe Washington reported for Basic Training in Norfolk, Virginia. In just three short months, he was prepared for his first assignment in the Ward Room on the USS Arizona.

His initial duties included seeing to the needs of the ship’s officers, including LCDR Commander Samuel G. Fuqua, a man Mr. Washington would later credit with saving many lives at Pearl Harbor.

While serving on the USS Arizona, he attended the Cook and Stewards School, which was the only upwardly mobile field open to African Americans in the Navy. After completing the course, Mr. Washington was assigned to Steward’s Duty and helped plan the meals.

His time on the USS Arizona passed uneventfully until the “day that will live in infamy.” While on duty in the Ward Room, Joe Washington heard a big explosion and then alarms sounded. His first thought was this was a drill, but when bullets began hitting the decks he knew this was the real thing.

Mr. Washington later recalled that a Japanese plane dropped a bomb right down the smoke stack directly into the ammunition room resulting in a terrific explosion. He joined his fellow sailors in securing the ship by closing portholes in their section to keep out the water and bullets. Then he tried to return to his quarters and found the hatches closed and locked by those who had gone before. He made his way to the deck and found most of the crew there dead or badly burned. He went to work helping those he could. A lifeboat came to rescue some of the men. Mr. Washington escaped by wading to shore. He came through the bombing without a scratch, and was one of only twenty-five surviving African Americans on the ill-fated Arizona.

Joe Washington spent two days at a hanger at Hickam Air Field in Washington. Yet because of his dedication to the Navy and his need to distract himself from the tragedy at Pearl Harbor, Mr. Washington volunteered to go back to work on the USS Oklahoma and the USS California.

In November 1946, Mr. Washington was admirably discharged from Navy. Some twelve years later, he returned to Hawaii to appear with then-retired Rear Admiral Fuqua on the popular television show “This Is Your Life.” During that visit, he returned to the site of the Arizona’s remains and said a silent prayer. In a 1985 interview he recalled, “I couldn’t help thinking that I hope they didn’t die in vain.”

Joseph Washington spent the rest of his professional career as a government employee at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in New York. He returned home to Charleston in the 1970s after retirement and became an active and faithful member of Morris Brown AME Church. He never spoke of the events of December 7, 1941 unless he was asked, yet when he did, he would always exclaim, “It was a miracle that I came through the bombing. I was one of the lucky ones.”

Joe Washington turns 87 years old this Tuesday at the age of 87, and will be buried in Charleston on Saturday. Mr. Washington never married. He leaves to mourn his passing a sister-in-law, and five beloved nieces including Emily E. Clyburn, the wife of our colleague Jim Clyburn.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in recognizing Joseph Henry Washington by saying that we are the lucky ones. We enjoy many freedoms today because men like him were willing to fight for their country even when they didn’t enjoy the full benefit of what it meant to be an American. Because of men like Washington, and so many other unsung heroes, today our country is truly the home of the brave and the land of the free.

IN TRIBUTE TO DR. JOHN H. LOUNSBURY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. John H. Lounsbury, of Milledgeville, GA for his efforts on behalf of Georgia’s children and for his long record of service in the field of education.

After serving our country during World War II, Dr. Lounsbury went back to school. He earned both a Bachelor’s and a Master’s Degree and quickly started his long, distinguished career in education. In 1954, he received his Doctorate and shifted his career from teaching students to teaching teachers. In 1960, he accepted the position of chairman of the Department of Education at Georgia College, and in 1977 became dean of the School of Education. Since 1983, he has served as dean emeritus.

Throughout his career, Dr. Lounsbury has been a leading force in middle grades education. He helped shape the future of middle grades education while working on the original development committee for Middle School/ Junior High School Evaluative Criteria as well as the revision committee a decade later. The long-lasting impact he’s had in this area is perhaps his most important legacy.

In addition to his work at Georgia College, Dr. Lounsbury has been the chairman of many professional associations, and has also served as a member or chairman of more than 25 visiting committees for the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, the National Council of Accreditation of Teacher Education and the Georgia State Department of Education.

Mr. Speaker, despite these many obligations, Dr. Lounsbury still found the time to author or co-author more than 130 articles, 2 college textbooks, and 5 national research reports. He has made scores of presentations to various professional conferences, professional institutes and conventions.

Roundly respected as a man who has truly dedicated his life to bettering education, Dr. Lounsbury has received so many awards and honors from his peers that I cannot name them all for fear I will omit one. The most recent of those honors included a presentation here in Washington, DC. Dr. Lounsbury received the Joan Lipsitz Lifetime Achievement Award, presented by the National Forum to Accelerate Middle Grades Reform “Schools to Watch” Program, for his significant and continuous contributions to the development, implementation and sustained growth of middle level education.

Mr. Speaker, there was a time when middle school students were treated no differently than their younger counterparts, with no attention to their unique needs, abilities and challenges. Today, we know that children learn differently at different ages. Dr. Lounsbury played a key role in getting us this important lesson. He is an architect of middle grades education and to this day remains a champion for this special age group.
Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Dr. Shelby Samuel, a distinguished member of the community. It behooves us to pay tribute to this outstanding leader and I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing his impressive accomplishments.

Dr. Samuel received his undergraduate degree at Yale University and his Medical Degree at Downstate Medical Center. Dr. Samuel is the recipient of awards for community involvement and leadership. He has been involved in efforts for promoting the academic advancement of young people at the level of junior high school, high school, college, and medical school. Dr. Samuel is involved in active research regarding problems in gastroenterology and hepatology that affect the minority community. He has presented his research findings at national academic meetings, including research findings on the knowledge and attitudes regarding colon cancer prevention in a high-risk urban population. Dr. Samuel has a private practice in gastroenterology with offices in Brooklyn and Manhattan.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of Dr. Shelby Samuel, a man who has made giant strides in the field of medicine, and whose service makes him most worthy of our recognition today.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Shelby Samuel’s selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication that makes him most worthy of our recognition today.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Alabama’s own Camp Mac, as well as all the other fine summer camps located throughout the country.

Truly an “institution” in Alabama, Camp Mac Summer Camp for Boys and Girls was established in 1948 by Mr. and Mrs. E.A. McBride. Today, almost 60 years later, Camp Mac is still owned and operated by the McBride family, a true success story spanning three generations.

Camp Mac is situated in the beautiful Cheaha Mountains and surrounded by the two hundred thousand plus acres that make up the Talladega National Forest. The location is ideal for the fun and safe summer programs that are the hallmark of Camp Mac.

Since its founding, Camp Mac has provided a refuge from the negative influences that the world has to offer today’s youth. Campers
EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL AP-PROPRIATIONS ACT FOR DE-FENSE, THE GLOBAL WAR ON TERROR, AND HURRICANE RE-COVERY, 2006—CONFERENCE

SPEECH OF
HON. HILDA L. SOLIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, June 12, 2006

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, the supplemental appropriations legislation passed by the House will spend nearly $95 billion of taxpayer money yet will not help our veterans, will not secure peace in Iraq, and will not make our homeland safer and better for working families.

The Bush administration continues to underfund the health care services for vet-erns and sent our troops to war without a plan to secure the peace. When our servicemen and women return home they are returning to a system that cannot care for them or provide the benefits they so greatly sacrificed for and deserve. And the hurricane season began again on June 1 but this Nation is no closer to be prepared for a hurricane under this administration than it was the day before Hurricanes Katrina and Wilma struck land.
This bill will not resolve these issues.

Instead of passing the biggest supplemental ever passed by Congress, Congress should take real steps to help protect our country and ensure our veterans and their families receive the care they need. We should pass the GI bill of rights for the 21st century to ensure affordable and accessible health care, education ben-fits and job training. We need to take seriously the impact of the war on veterans and their families and pass legislation I have introduced to ensure access to needed mental health counseling. We should develop a real plan to bring our troops home safely and secure the peace.

I strongly support our troops, our veterans and their families and will continue to fight to ensure they receive the well-deserved support of their country. I will continue to fight to improve the quality of life for working families.
And I will continue to make sure America is safer place.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. CLIFFORD YOUNG

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Dr. Clifford Young, a distinguished member of the medical community. It behoves us to pay tribute to this outstanding leader and I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing his impressive accomplishments.

Dr. Clifford Young is affectionately known by members of the Brooklyn, New York community as “The People’s Doctor.” Dr. Young is a man who overcame tremendous challenges to practitioners line, and then did his best to help people once he got his degree.

Dr. Young was born on the multiple island nation of St. Vincent and the Grenadines located in the eastern Caribbean. Upon gradu-aition from secondary school, he received a PAHO/WHO scholarship to the Barbados
Community College where he studied laboratory technology. After a short tenure at the lab of the Kingstown General Hospital, he mi-giated to the U.S. to continue his studies. In 1980, he enrolled at Hunter College of the City University of New York and in 1984 he graduated with a bachelor’s degree in chemistry. In 1989, he received a doctor of medicine degree from the State University of New York, Downstate Medical Center. After completing his residency, Dr. Young served as an attending physician at the Woodhull Medical Center in Brooklyn, a position he still holds today.

Dr. Young is also an attending physician in the Department of Medicine at the Brookdale University Hospital, and is the medical director of Citi Medical of Carnasie in Brooklyn. But Dr.
Young doesn’t stop there. He is also a clinical assistant professor with the Department of Medicine at Downstate Medical School, SUNY; a Diplomat of the Medical Board of Medical Examiners, a Diplomat of the American Board of International Medicine and a Fellow of the American College of Physicians.

In recognition of his outstanding charitable work and contributions, Dr. Young also received the Family Service Network of New York 2005 Community Health Award and the Thomas D. Fortune Professional Health Care
Award in 2003.

Dr. Young is happily married to the former Hilma Foster; they have two daughters, Nyasha and Chantay, and one son, Clifford Jr.
Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of Dr. Clifford Young, a man who has made giant strides in the field of medicine, and whose service makes him most worthy of our recognition today.

EXPANDING DEMOCRACY IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

HON. G.K. BUTTERFIELD
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an upcoming event that should be of interest to my colleagues. The Democratic Pacific Union was founded in August 2005 and its Pacific Congressional Caucus (Taiwan Chapter) was inaugurated on May 20, 2006. Chaired by Taiwan Vice President Lu Hsiu-lien, the Taiwan Chapter has been very active in promoting democracy, peace and prosperity through the publication of the Democratic Pacific Union Quarterly, the scheduling of regional meetings in the East and the West Pacific regions, the initiation of the Pacific Economic Advisory Group and the Pacific Congressional Caucus project.

I commend Chair Lu Hsiu-lien of the Demo-
ocratic Pacific Union for her hard work and applaud the Taiwan Chapter for all its initiatives on behalf of the Democratic Pacific Union in their pursuit of a stronger democratic process.

The Taiwan Chapter will also sponsor a symposium on constitutional reforms this summer in Taiwan. Dr. Young will speak at the symposium discussing the relationships between legislature and democracy, the electoral process, rules and campaign finance. As the world’s strongest democracy, the United States can contribute greatly to this event. I urge my colleagues to attend this symposium and share their knowledge and expertise with fellow lawmakers from the Pacific region.

TRIBUTE TO THEODORE FLOYD: RESPECTED COMMUNITY LEAD-ER AND DEVOTED PUBLIC SERV-ANT

HON. KENDRICK B. MEEK
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor a dear friend, Detective Theodore Floyd of the Indian River Sheriff’s Department.

As a former Florida Highway Patrolman myself, I have proudly worn the titles “law enforcement officer” and “first responder.” But Theodore Floyd is more than that, because he is truly a peace officer who takes a broader view of his responsibilities.

On Saturday, June 17, 2006, at St. Peter’s
Missionary Baptist Church in Vero Beach,
Florida, a service of appreciation will be held for Mr. Floyd, who has had a distinguished 15-year career in law enforcement with the Indian River Sheriff’s Department.

Detective Floyd recently implemented crime prevention strategies in communities throughout Indian River County. He has built strong relationships with community leaders and elected officials that have increased the secu-ritv and safety of Indian River County residents.

He has also led an active campaign to improve living conditions for the County’s less fortunate.

Detective Floyd has been very active in promoting democracy, peace and prosperity, through the publication of the Democratic Pacific Union Quarterly, the scheduling of regional meetings in the East and the West Pacific regions, the initiation of the Pacific Economic Advisory Group and the Pacifi
Congressional Caucus project.

I commend Chair Lu Hsiu-lien of the Demo-
ocratic Pacific Union for her hard work and applaud the Taiwan Chapter for all its initiatives
on behalf of the Democratic Pacific Union in their pursuit of a stronger democratic process.

The Taiwan Chapter will also sponsor a

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL DAY

HON. JAMES R. LANGEVIN OF RHODE ISLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay my respects to Michael J. Day, who tragically died in the line of duty earlier this week.
Mr. Day, the Deputy Assistant Fire Chief and 27-year veteran of the Providence Fire Department, was dedicated to his profession and to serving his community.
On June 13, Mr. Day had returned to the Washington Street Fire House after responding to a fire earlier in the night. As the overnight shift began, Michael had been working in his office when a coworker found him unconscious. While his fellow firefighters did all in their power to resuscitate him, they were unable to save him.

A lifelong resident of Providence, Mr. Day came from a family of firefighters, which included his father and three brothers. He attended LaSalle Academy and after graduating from the fire academy, he was appointed to the Providence Fire and Marines Department in 1979. He earned a Bachelor of Arts in Physical Education from Rhode Island College in 1980 and another B.A. in Fire Science at Providence College in 1981.

Michael was promoted to Lieutenant in 1989, the same year he was honored as the Providence Firefighter of the Year and received the Heroic Action commendation for rescuing four people from the roof of a burning house. This was just one of many times he would be recognized for his outstanding service and ability to perform his job. He was promoted to Captain in 1995, Battalion Chief in 2000, and most recently to Deputy Assistant Fire Chief on June 30, 2005. He oversaw operations at multiple fire stations and was the top ranking officer of his shift. Michael had just completed his final class in the Executive Officer program at the National Fire Academy.

As a beloved father figure to his fellow firefighters, I have no doubt that Michael Day will leave a lasting legacy to the entire Providence Fire Department and the Providence community. I extend my condolences to all who knew and loved him, especially his wife, Cynthia; his son, Michael; and his daughters, Amanda, Brianne and Stephanie. May we keep his loved ones in our thoughts and prayers as they endure this difficult period.

50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF SAMUEL R. AND JESTINE W. FOSTER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of the House a milestone in the lives of an all-American family. Fifty years ago, on June 14, 1956, Samuel R. Foster and Jestine Wright were united in a marriage that inspires all of us who know them. Both dedicated their lives to public service as schoolteachers and administrators. Early in the era of school integration, Sam Foster was selected as principal to start a new school, Northwestern High School in Rock Hill, South Carolina. This was a great challenge for an African-American educator, but Sam rose to the challenge and won the respect of students and parents, white and black. Sam Foster moved from education to elective office and served with distinction in the South Carolina General Assembly. He became known throughout the state for his wisdom and ability and especially for his facility to see all sides of an issue and for the essence of an argument. Sam Foster completed his career in public service as a commissioner on the South Carolina Employment Security Commission.

All who know the couple well know that Sam Foster has derived much of his wisdom and insight over the years from the counsel of his wife, Jestine.

Two sons were born to Sam and Jestine Foster, Sam and Alan, both of whom have been successful in their own right, bringing further distinction to their parent.

Mr. Speaker, I call the Fosters to the attention of the House because their marriage and family are exemplary and worthy of recognition throughout the Nation.

A STIRRING STORY ABOUT SERGEANT CEDRIC CALDWELL

HON. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR.
OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share with my colleagues a stirring story about Sergeant Cedric Caldwell, one of my constituents, from Rock Hill, South Carolina. His story is one example of the brave men and women serving in Iraq.

[From the Herald, May 28, 2006]

ROCK HILL SOLDIER SAVED LIVES OF COMRADES IN IRAQ WHEN BOMB SHREDDED CONVOY TRUCK

(By Andrew Dys)

The U.S. Army convoy rolled where death lives. About 30 miles north of Baghdad, Night in Iraq couldn't have been darker. Late April, a little more than a month ago.

Rock Hill’s “Corn Dog,” Sgt. Cedric Caldwell, manned the front machine gun on one of the convoy escort trucks. A sergeant from California named Torres was beside him. A private first class named Squires drove.

The truck looked like America. A black guy, a white guy and a Hispanic guy.

But Iraq in the night is not like America where so many spend nights howling about blacks and Hispanics. In Iraq in Alpha Battery, 3rd Battalion, 321st Field Artillery Regiment, your brothers who don’t look like you are all you’ve got.

No color matters but the indigo of night and the yellow of fire and the red of blood.

“All of a sudden, there was a loud explosion, and I fell down inside the cab on Times,” Caldwell reminisced.

The truck rolled and tipped over on its top.

“I must have gotten knocked out for a minute,” Caldwell said. “Then all I could see was flame and smoke everywhere. Except for the picture in my mind. It was just like a photograph. My wife and my daughter. It’s true. Your life does flash in front of your eyes, I saw it.”

Caldwell saw the hatch opening for the truck and climbed through as the calls of “I’m hit, I’m hit” pierced the night and cut through the flames.

Caldwell didn’t run for the safety of the roadside ditch. He didn’t call for a doctor for himself, for he knew he had to get to safety through the hatch. Then he dragged Torres about 20 meters from the truck so the explosions wouldn’t kill him.

The men on the truck were blowing up in the fire. Bullets, shells, shrapnel designed to kill the enemy now trying to kill him.

“I could still hear screaming,” Caldwell said.

PUTTING OTHERS’ NEEDS FIRST

Again, Caldwell didn’t run for safety.

“All I could see was Squires’ hand,” Caldwell said. “So I reached in, grabbed on, and pulled him out.”

Squires was burning alive.

“It was like a stunt double in the movies,” Caldwell said. “His whole legs were on fire. I rolled him around to try and put the fire out, but it didn’t work. So I took off my vest and my short to smother the fire.”

Finally, the fire was out, but Squires’ clothes were so hot Squires was still burning. Shirtless, bare-chested in a place where sniper fire was the law, Caldwell walked on the road and pulled off Squires’ clothes. Finally, he got Squires to the ditch.

Before the medics arrived, Caldwell poured what water he could find over Squires’ wounds.

“I kept telling him he was going to be OK, that he was going to live,” Caldwell said. “He was yelling. But I wasn’t going to let him die. Both of them are really good soldiers. They would have done the same for me.”

Torres suffered a broken arm and other injuries and is now back at Fort Bragg, N.C., where all three soldiers are based. Squires is in intensive care at the Brook Army Medical Center burn unit in San Antonio, Texas, hospital officials confirmed.

Caldwell suffered a concussion and has a burn to his neck. He also carried a broken bone in his leg. He has cuts and burns on his face and hands. His back is covered with an 18-inch burn.

STRONG SENSE OF HONOR, DUTY

He is a sergeant with responsibility for 14 men. He and Squires have put up in a Purple Heart for his wounds in action and a Combat Action Badge, and either a Bronze Star or Silver Star for valor.

Caldwell could have come home, too. But he chose to stay in Iraq.

“My men here need me,” Caldwell said by telephone this week.

Caldwell’s wife and parents were distraught that he was injured, but they rejoice he is alive. Maybe even more, they take pride in what he did. Caldwell did what every man hopes he would do when an overturned truck is on fire with men underneath that truck.

Caldwell did not run. He didn’t ask for help for himself. He helped his men.

“He went back,” said the Rev. Willie Caldwell, the father. “I prepared myself when he left that my son could come back in a pine box. I supported this war then and now. I believe in freedom. It’s not cheap. And then when he was at the hospital, he saw all these people who are hurt worse. He told me, ‘Daddy, I need to stay. Those guys need to come home, not me.’”

Caldwell’s wife, Tiffany, is a military child whose parents are both immigrants from the Caribbean. Her father came from Jamaica to the Air Force. He served in the first Persian Gulf War. Her mother came from Barbados to the Army.

Torres came from Mexico, Caldwell said. Americans gnash their teeth over immigration, and Caldwell is building or border walls to be shuttered, while the sons and daughters of immigrants or immigrants themselves fight the wars over freedom.

CORN DOG: A LOCAL HERO

“My best friend is ‘Corn Dog,’” said Travis Canty, who has been “like a brother” with Caldwell since both were little kids in Rock Hill. It is Canty who spilled the beans that the nickname “Corn Dog” comes from Caldwell eating corn dogs for lunch during school.

“He didn’t run. He didn’t hide. He saved those guys,” Canty said.

Caldwell went first to Kosovo when the war on terror began. He was home a short while, then spent almost a year in Afghanistan. A few months with his wife and then Iraq. Caldwell was home for a few days in January, just missing the birth of daughter Tiffany. He saw her, kissed her and his wife a few times, then went back to Iraq.

And then he cheated death. And still he stays in Iraq.

“I guess my military background prepared me for this,” Caldwell said. “I haven’t cried yet. My husband is alive. He is a soldier. He’ll come home when his deployment is finished.”

RETURN TO A SIMPLER LIFE

Caldwell’s enlistment is up in February. He said he’s not staying in the Army.

“No way, no more Iraq,” said Williatte, his mother.

“We are done,” said Tiffany, his wife. “He wants to go back to Rock Hill with his wife and daughter. He’ll play music in his father’s Abiezer Baptist Church. He wants to be a Realtor.

“I truly believe that without God, me and Torres and Squires would not have survived,” Caldwell said.

Caldwell may be right. Maybe God wanted the black and the Hispanic and the white guys to live.

But one thing seems to be for sure.

A Rock Hill guy. Northwestern High class of 1996 who joined the National Guard while still in high school then leapt into active duty and never left, didn’t leave his brothers to die in the blood of Iraq.

Monday, on Memorial Day, no monuments will be etched with the names Torres or Squires on granite.

STATEMENT IN OPPOSITION TO H. RES. 861—RESOLUTION ON THE WAR IN IRAQ

SPREECH OF

HON. ELJAH E. CUMMINGS
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 15, 2006

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, despite the crafty language in this resolution, there is no connection between 9/11 and Saddam Hussein. The Global War on Terror and the War in Iraq are not synonymous.

The President has admitted this, yet the Republican Party in this House continues to support his failed policies in Iraq under the guise of fighting terrorism. Consistently providing billions of dollars in funding, allowing fraud and abuse to go unchecked and failing to exercise even the semblance of oversight. So, instead of debating solutions for Iraq today, we are discussing a non-binding resolution that is equally as short-sighted and devoid of direction as President Bush’s Iraq policy.

We all have unwavering pride for our troops. The quagmire that Iraq has become is not the fault of the troops who have performed superlative—it is the failure of the President to plan for the protection of peace.

That is why I support the Murtha resolution. It would provide a plan for peace, redeploy our troops and allow us to bring them home as soon as practicable.

Let’s change the channel. Our presence in Iraq makes stability impossible. By remaining in Iraq, we make both Iraqi and American soil less secure. Let’s bring our troops home.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO GRACE COMMUNITY CHURCH

HON. JON C. PORTER
OF NEVADA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Grace Community Church in Boulder City, Nevada, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary this year.

The Grace Community Church began as an inter-denominational Protestant religious church in April of 1932, and the first service was held on January 29, 1933. The church was officially dedicated on February 22, 1933, “to the glory of God and the Blessing of Man.”

The church quickly became a center for various community groups, and assumed a key role in the development of the community.

The Reverend Thomas Stevenson of California, who gave his first sermon in the unfinished basement of the church, was chosen as the church’s first minister, and led the church’s congregation until 1937. The Reverend Harold Eymann replaced Reverend Stevenson, and the formal by-laws for the congregation were adopted and the church was incorporated under state law during Reverend Eymann’s ministry.

The Reverend Grace Community Church in 1942, feeling he should serve as a military chaplain during World War II, Reverend Winston Trever from Azusa, California served from 1942–1949. The Reverend Olaf Stoeve ministered at Grace from 1949–1953. The Presbyterian Reverend Earl Seymour Fox (1953–1961) found the congregation growing and recommended that two services be held on Sunday and a building be added next to the American Legion Hall, which soon became Fox Hall.

Grace Community Church when the land was purchased from Boulder City in 1990. The Reverend Dr. Ronald S. Freel (1999–2004), who was worshiping with and volunteering as an Associate Pastor, became the Senior Pastor. Pastor Kevin Roach, the new senior pastor, preached his first sermon on July 18, 2004, and has served to this date. Serving under the direction of Senior Pastor Kevin Roach are: Associate Pastor Gard Jameson, Music Director Carol Simak, Assistant Music Director Barbara Walker, and Sharon Wieczorek, who served as the Office Manager for the last 7 years is retiring, and is being replaced by Jan Liebhauser.

The church recently recognized 14 people who have been members for 48 years or longer, and four who have been members for more than 60 years. Carol Bourne, Jack and Dorothy Rants, Lin Diebold, Roy and Elnor Gear, Byron Miller, Robert Austin, Del and Eloise Blue, Agnes Lockette, Lillian Rigney, and Bob and Virginia Moore have all been members for 48 years or longer, and at the age of 94, Mary Eaton has been a member for 72 years. At 96, has been a member for 63 years, with Velma Stice a member for 65 years and Innis Risley being at the 60 year mark.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to recognize Grace Community Church and its accomplishments in Boulder City’s history. I commend the church for its long history of service to the city of Boulder City and wish them good fortune for the next 75 years.

A TRIBUTE TO CHRISTOPHER SMITH

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Christopher Smith, a distinguished member of the Brooklyn, New York, educational and civic communities. It behooves us to pay tribute to this outstanding leader and I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing his impressive accomplishments.

Mr. Smith considers that the very nature of education dictates that it takes place all the time, anywhere and anywhere. As an educator in the New York City Public School System, Mr. Smith employs the concept of “teachable moments” in and out of the classroom. Mr. Smith posits that teachable moments are times in the life of an individual where one consciously learns from trial and error. He believes that learning through this method allows students cognition to develop critically and to balance multitudinous tasks tossed at them by life.

The village it takes to raise a child is evident at Boys and Girls High School. Mr. Smith provides students and staff with many opportunities to learn how to develop, implement and evaluate programs and extracurricular activities. This includes the development of the Exemplary Mentoring Program, after-school tutoring, the Annual Scholarship Luncheon, the Annual Talent Show, the development of Black & Latino Awareness programs, the Academic Bowl, Pep rallies, Student Government, and other activities to increase school spirit. It is important to Mr. Smith that the legacy of this great institution continues.

Born and raised in Bedford Stuyvesant (Gates Avenue), Christopher Smith is a product of the New York City Public Schools system. After graduating from Boys and Girls High School in 1996, he received his Bachelor’s of Science degree in Business Administration at the State University of New York at Oswego, and received his Master’s Degree in General Education and Special Education from Touro College in New York City. This summer, Mr. Smith is embarking on a path in his pursuit of obtaining an Educational Administration Master’s Degree at the College of St. Rose in Albany, New York. When he successfully completes his Educational Administration Degree, he looks to earn his Educational Doctorate.

Mr. Smith works hard to keep the Boys and Girls High School legacy alive in the Bedford Stuyvesant community. He knows that his children are definitely the “Jewels of Bedford Stuyvesant.” Although this task is not easy, God has equipped him with valor to complete this mission. Mr. Smith writes in this speech to the following mantra: “It doesn’t matter where my children come from and where I hope to help them get to.”

Mr. Smith further states that when we derive pleasure from our daily lives, are stimulated or challenged by our work, enriched by the new things we learn, and by our contact with others; our lives are successful regardless of the specific setbacks of a particular day. When it is all said and done, and he recalls the day’s events; he is satisfied in knowing that he was able to help his community.

Mr. Speaker, Christopher Smith’s selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication that makes him most worthy of our recognition today.

SPEECH OF
HON. NYDIA M. VELÁZQUEZ
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 13, 2006

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5760) making appropriations for the Departments of Transportation, Treasury, and Housing and Urban Development, the Judiciary, District of Columbia, and independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2007, and for other purposes.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of restored funding for Section 8 vouchers. Our Nation is in the midst of an affordable housing crisis—and hard working families are bearing the brunt of the short fall. Yet again Section 8 is funded below the President’s request—this year $144 million less than proposed.

The Velázquez amendment will restore $70 million for Section 8, providing vouchers for approximately 10,000 families. This increase will ensure that families working to create a better life for their children will have a safe, decent place to call home—something that is critical to positive outcomes for the future.

The Section 8 program is a lifeline for millions of families struggling to make ends meet and end the cycle of poverty so common in low-income communities. In my district—and throughout the country—families have been waiting upwards of ten years for vouchers. We cannot turn our backs on families striving to achieve more for their children against the odds.

HONORING GENE & MARY MCCARTHY ON THE OCCASION OF THEIR RETIREMENT

HON. BRIAN HIGGINS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me a tremendous sense of pleasure the recognize the personal accomplishments and the long career of two of Western New York’s finest citizens, a couple I am proud to call my friends Mary Dories and William Eugene “Gene” McCarthy.

Mary and Gene McCarthy are lifelong—and tremendously proud—residents of the Old First Ward in South Buffalo, New York. Mary grew up on Sidway Street and Gene grew up a few streets away on Kentucky Street.

Mary and Gene were married on May 7, 1955 and resided on Hamburg Street before moving to 271 Katherine Street where they live today. They raised their three children, Patty, Billy and Maureen in this home in the Old First Ward Neighborhood.

This neighborhood holds great significance in my Congressional District because it has long been recognized for the Irish legacy instilled upon the area during the city’s formative years. Irish immigrants who worked on the construction of the Erie Canal made their home here. They went on to work in the shipping industry, as scoopers, railroad operators, and factory workers to name a few.

Gene McCarthy followed in this tradition working for several years in Buffalo’s grain mills, ending his industry career at Pillsbury Flour Mill to pursue a business venture of his own.

Gene and Mary opened the doors to McCarthy’s Tavern on July 20, 1964 at 73 Hamburg Street. McCarthy’s Tavern, a classic neighborhood Irish Pub that has become a First Ward Landmark and a favorite spot for grain workers, firefighters, police officers, politicians, lawyers and First Ward regulars alike. Hard work, long hours, true friendships and constant generosity were the hallmarks of Gene and Mary McCarthy’s life in the Tavern Business.

Mr. Speaker, It is my distinct honor to recognize Gene and Mary McCarthy on the occasion of their well deserved retirement from the tavern business after 42 years of service. The wonderful memories, stories, and good times shared by those who routinely came in for the welcoming atmosphere that McCarthy’s Tavern offered will be present in the minds and hearts of many Western New Yorkers for years to come.
TRIBUTE TO HENRY FRANK
HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006
Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Henry Frank, a distinguished member of the Brooklyn, New York community. It behooves us to pay tribute to this outstanding leader and I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing his impressive accomplishments.
Henry Frank was born in the Republic of Haiti, and was trained as an anthropologist. His research works have taken him all over Africa, Europe, the Caribbean and South America, particularly Haiti, the bastion of the African culture in Brazil. Dr. Frank has given lectures on the African Preserved Religions in the New World especially Vodoo as well as other aspects of the New World Cultures at many Universities and Museums in the U.S. and abroad. For nine years, Dr. Frank was Assistant Director of Caribbean Studies in the Education Department at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City. He has also participated in conferences and has given lectures at several prominent institutions, hospitals and healthcare facilities.

From 1982 to 1999, Dr. Frank served as a scholar for the New York Council for the Humanities program, “Speakers in the Humanities”. In April 1990, he was appointed Consul General of Haiti in New York in the government of Mme. Ertha Trouillot, the first woman president of Haiti. From 1986 to 1999, Dr. Frank served as the Executive Director of the Haitian Neighborhood Service Center (HNSC) in NYC while simultaneously serving as a lecturer on African/Caribbean Culture and History for the NYC Council for the Humanities.

Dr. Frank has participated in many radio and TV programs in the U.S. and Europe. He appeared on French and German television and was a specialist on African Preserved Religion in the Americas and narrator for FINNISH TELEVISION in Finland. He was a consultant for the Voodoo segment of the series “In Search of Voodoo by Landsburg Productions”. The program was first aired on WBNC-TV. He was also a consultant for WABC-TV in the 20/20 segment on “Zombification”. He appeared with Wade Davis, the author of The Serpent and the Rainbow, as a guest on The Geraldo Rivera Show in opposition to the film of the same name. Dr. Frank was a consultant for the fabulous exhibit at the American Museum of Natural History in New York entitled, “The Sacred Art of Haitian Vodoo” that was on view from October 10, 1998 to January 3, 1999 and attracted 70,000 viewers. He also gave numerous lecture presentations and participated in panel discussions in conjunction with the exhibit. He continually serves as a consultant for that scientific and cultural institution.

Since April 1991, Dr. Frank has been the Executive Director of the Haitian Centers Council, a consortium of eight Haitian Centers nationwide. It is important to note that the Haitian Centers Council (HCC) offers the most comprehensive HIV/AIDS education and prevention program to the Haitian community at large for over 20 years, but not exclusively. It also provides services to other Caribbean and minority communities including the speaking African communities. The organization has a 16 unit residential facility with support services for people with AIDS (PWA). In collaboration with the NYC Department of Education and United Way of NYC, HCC conducts programs for high school students pertaining to academic enhancement, cultural and historical enrichment, leadership and social skills. HCC has also provided a comprehensive Domestic Violence Prevention program to the Haitian community at large and other minority communities. Under Dr. Frank’s direction, HCC has been on the forefront of immigration issues, and the protection and defense of Haitian immigrant rights in the U.S. and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of Henry Frank, as he offers his talents and services for the betterment of our local and global communities.

Mr. Speaker, Henry Frank’s selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication that makes him most worthy of our recognition today.
CONGRATULATING BOXER BERNARD HOPKINS

HON. CHAKA FATTAH
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. FATTAAH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate celebrated boxer Bernard Hopkins on his illustrious career spanning 18 years and 53 fights as the former WBA, WBC, IBF, and WBO undisputed middleweight world champion and light heavyweight world champion.

At the age of 41, Bernard Hopkins accomplished what few other boxers were able to do successfully. A 3-to-1 underdog, Hopkins jumped two weight classes and soundly defeated light heavyweight champion Antonio Tarver, who previously had a 24-4 record. Hopkins’ victory over Tarver quieted critics who claimed Hopkins was overly ambitious in his desire to challenge Tarver for the light heavyweight championship, and secured his place in the boxing world as one of the best pound-for-pound fighters in history.

Overcoming adversity as an underdog is a situation in which Hopkins is well familiar. Born and raised in North Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Bernard Hopkins grew up in an environment surrounded by poverty, hardship, and violence. A repeat juvenile offender at the age of 13, Hopkins was a frequent visitor to a detention facility until the age of 22. It was in prison where Hopkins found religion and his inspiration to dedicate his life to boxing.

Citing his time of incarceration as a blessing, Hopkins boxed in prison and turned pro shortly after his release. Despite suffering several early career losses, Hopkins quickly gained the reputation of being an “old school” type fighter, dispatching his opponents mercilessly with speed and precision. By the end of 2000, Hopkins defended his IBF title 12 times without a loss, while beating upper-echelon fighters such as John David Jackson, Glennon Johnson, Simon Brown, and Antwun Echols. Perhaps the most defining fight of Hopkins boxing career occurred when he defeated six-division titleholder Oscar De La Hoya for the undisputed middleweight championship with a jarring knockout blow in the ninth round.

Mr. Speaker, please join me today in congratulating Bernard Hopkins for establishing his place in boxing history as one of the most prolific professional fighters of all time.

Mrs. Towns continues her leadership and commitment to education issues as a member of various national and local committees. Her accomplishments include raising over $850,000 for undergraduate and graduate scholarships as chairperson of the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) Spouses Annual Golf and Tennis Tournament. In the 10th Congressional District, she administers the General Mills/CBC Spouses scholarship program, which provides financial resources to undergraduate, graduate and doctoral candidates pursuing careers in a health-related profession.

Additionally, Mrs. Towns serves on the Board of Directors of the Brooklyn Children’s Museum, and as President of the Interfaith Medical Center Auxiliary where she coordinates Toys for Tots and insures that each patient is remembered during the holiday season. As co-chair of the Interfaith Medical Center Foundation’s annual fund raising ball, she is helping to ensure that the hospital continues to grow to meet the community’s needs. Mrs. Towns is also affiliated with the NYC Chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc., Concerned Women of Brooklyn, Zeta Phi Beta Sorority, Boys and Girls High School Women’s Day (Women on the “High”), Bridge Street Martin Luther King Day Award, Barber Scotia College, New Lots Lion Club, NAACP and Berean Missionary Baptist Church.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is incumbent on this body to recognize the accomplishments of Mrs. Gwendolyn Towns as she offers her talents and philanthropic services for the betterment of our local and national communities.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Gwendolyn Towns’ selfless service has continuously demonstrated a level of altruistic dedication that makes her most worthy of our recognition today.

SPEECH OF
HON. KENNY C. HULSFOSH OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, June 13, 2006

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5576) making appropriations for the Departments of Transportation, Treasury, and Housing and Urban Development, the Judiciary, District of Columbia, and independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2007, and for other purposes:

Mr. HULSFOSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Hooley-Hulshof-Skelton amendment to increase funding for the HIDTA program. For the past 5 fiscal years, the HIDTA program has essentially funded at $226 million. Our amendment increases the fiscal year 2007 amount by $8 million for a new total of $235 million. This increase is offset by reducing the bill’s funding level for the National Archives by $8 million, which will leave Archives with an estimated $1.4 million increase over last year’s funding level.

I would like to thank the gentlelady from Oregon for working with my office on this amendment. I know Oregon has a significant meth problem just like Missouri, and I’m glad that we can work together to combat this horrendous crime. I also want to thank my good friend from Missouri, Mr. SKELTON, for his support.

Methamphetamine use and production is a serious problem in my home State of Missouri. Since 2002, Missouri has led the Nation in the number of reported clandestine meth labs. These labs are an insidious problem. Not only are these labs highly volatile and prone to explosions, they create environmental hazards and pose significant health risks for those living in surrounding areas. The highly toxic by-product that meth makers leave in their wake pollutes the environment and groundwater, leaves homes uninhabitable and puts law enforcement and clean-up crews in peril.

But most importantly, we must take every step possible to stop the spread of this drug because of the terrible toll it is taking on people in our communities. Sadly, I think it is safe to say that all my colleagues are all too aware of the irreparable harm this drug takes on the physical health of its users. Many of you have seen the before and after photographs of these emaciated, scarred—both mentally and physically—and often toothless users.

The recent enactment of the Combat Meth Act was a step in the right direction. This law is a preventive measure designed to limit meth makers access to cold medicines containing pseudoephedrine, which is a common precursor to meth. While I am hopeful that this law will help curb domestic production, we must remain vigilant in our efforts to combat meth trafficking. That is why it is so crucial we continue to provide funding for law enforcement programs, such as HIDTA.

This joint endeavor between Federal, State and local law enforcement has been highly effective in combating the trafficking of illegal... narcotics. In 2005, Midwest HIDTA, which encompasses Missouri and five other States, arrested more than 9,000 individuals for various drug violations, seized more than 650 pounds of meth, almost 7,000 pounds of cocaine and seized nearly 1,700 firearms. Of these individuals, roughly 1,400 were charged with methamphetamine offenses.

This program is a key component of our national drug enforcement policy. HIDTA’s greatest strength is that it is a cooperative endeavor among local and national officials who coordinate and devise a strategy to effectively curtail drug trafficking in the U.S. I believe this is a worthwhile amendment, and I encourage my colleagues to support its adoption.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM “BILL” LAWRENCE

HON. TOM LANTOS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, June 16, 2006

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in profound sadness to express my deepest sympathy and condolences to the family and friends of William “Bill” Lawrence. Bill was a dear friend of mine who touched the lives of all who came in contact with him and I am privileged to have known such a wonderful person.

Bill was truly a great man who dedicated his life to our country. He began this service at the young age of 16 when he enlisted in the Navy. Following his four years of naval service in China in 1927, Bill was honorably discharged, and he chose to make his home in San Francisco. Once again, Bill sought a job that would benefit the public. He first worked as a cable car conductor on the Market Street Railway, one of the few union jobs in San Francisco at that time.

In 1938, Bill began working for the U.S. Postal Service in San Francisco, and he became an active and dedicated member of the Golden Gate Branch 214 of the National Association of Letter Carriers. He delivered mail in the City of San Francisco for 35 years and worked as Secretary of Golden Gate Branch 214 of the NALC for 6 years. Bill remained a member of the National Association of Letter Carriers until the day he died.

Bill’s dedication to his local community was even more evident when he began his political career. In 1970, Bill was elected to the Brisbane City Council and over the next two decades he continued in that position, serving twice as Mayor. In an effort to better his community, he oversaw the construction of Crocken Industrial Park. After his tenure on the City Council, Bill continued to act as the Legislative Liaison for the California State Association of Letter Carriers.

Bill’s love of public service and his desire to improve the quality of life in Brisbane residents led him to join the Brisbane Lions Cub. His unaltering dedication was obvious, as he insisted in participating in every Lions Club initiative. Each year, Bill Lawrence painted 1,800 Easter eggs and volunteered at the Christmas tree lot. He continued to attend meetings, even after his hearing and eyesight began to fade.

Although Bill Lawrence officially retired at the age of 65, he could not imagine not serving his country and local community. He refused to allow age and deteriorating health to stand in the way of public service. For the past 30 years, Bill has served as Brisbane’s “Santa Claus.” bringing smiles to many families during the holiday season. Only last year, at age 97, Bill finally was forced to retire from this post, which brought so much joy to him and children throughout the community.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to call Bill Lawrence my friend. He always said that his love of politics stemmed from the rewarding feeling he got from helping people. Indeed, Bill helped thousands of people throughout his lifetime. His naval service, postal work, and political activism allowed him to touch lives throughout the world for the past 98 years. It is rare to come across a man who not only dedicated his life to his country but also to his family, his dear wife, Honey Bee, and his children and grandchildren. Bill Lawrence will be sorely missed by the residents of Brisbane as well as by all who knew him, but Bill’s legacy of love for his country and for public service will forever remain alive in our hearts.
