House of Representatives

The House met at 10 a.m. The Reverend Phil Fulton, Pastor, Union Hill Church, Peebles, Ohio, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Creator of Heaven and Earth, and all that is therein, we thank You for this great congressional body. I pray You would bless them with wisdom, knowledge, and that the spirit of bipartisanship would prevail in all their decisions for the inherent good of this great Nation.

I pray they would remember well the words of President Cleveland: "That those who manage the affairs of government are by this means reminded that the law of God demands that they should be courageously true to the interests of the people, and that the Ruler of the Universe will require of those who manage the affairs of government a strict account of their stewardship."

In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, I pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. SCHWARTZ) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Ms. SCHWARTZ of Pennsylvania led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mrs. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1036. An act to amend title 17, United States Code, to make technical corrections relating to Copyright Royalty Judges, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 341. An act to protect members of the Armed Forces from unscrupulous practices regarding sales of insurance, financial, and investment products.

S. 348. An act to make technical corrections to the Violence Against Women and Department of Justice Reauthorization Act of 2006.

WELCOMING REVEREND PHIL FULTON

(Mrs. SCHMIDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize my friend, Reverend Phil Fulton, who is serving as guest chaplain for the House of Representatives today.

Reverend Fulton is from Adams County which is located in the district I represent. Reverend Fulton was born and raised in southern Ohio, and now serves our community daily.

For the last 30 years, he has worked as pastor of Union Hill Church, an independent community church which is located in Peebles, Ohio. He plays a very active role in our local area, helping those around him.

As vice president of Love, Incorporated, he has reached out to many folks by meeting their intimate needs in a very personal way. He is chairperson of the Ten Commandments Committee which is working on issues related to the display of the Ten Commandments in public places.

Reverend Fulton is not only an active member of our community, but he is also a devoted member of his family. He has been married to his lovely wife, Sharon, for 40 years, and they have two children and five very energetic grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all of my colleagues to join me in welcoming Reverend Phil Fulton to the House of Representatives as our guest chaplain.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain up to 10 one-minute requests per side.

PROTECTING EMBRYOS RIGHT THING TO DO

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, constituents throughout my district have been contacting my office in opposition to using embryonic stem cells for research purposes. They join me today in applauding the President's veto of the Stem Cell Research Enhancement Act.

As stewards of hardworking Americans' tax dollars, we cannot ask our constituents to fund the killing of human embryos. It is imperative that we do all we can to protect the most vulnerable members of our society, the unborn.

Embryonic stem cells have been available for research for nearly 5 years, and during that time research on those stem cells has produced nothing and cured no one. In the meantime, ethical biomedical treatment not derived from embryos, like that at the Wake Forest Institute for Regenerative Medicine in my district, has helped cure over 70 diseases. In this time of incredible medical advances, unethical research is unnecessary and desecrates the sanctity of human life.
PREPARE FOR PEACE

(Mr. KUCINICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, how is it that even with the constant moral and financial support of our Nation, our friends, Israel, is it not safe and secure. If we insist upon the security and survival of Israel, and we must, then we must also insist upon the security and survival of the Palestinians and the Lebanese.

We cannot negotiate with those who have sworn to destroy us or our allies, but history shows us that every conflict was resolved by doing exactly that. We prepare for war so grandly; let us prepare for peace grandly by looking fearlessly and deep into the hearts of those who wish us harm, and find that spark of recognition that connects us to a common humanity and from that draw a flicker of hope to enkindle the warm glow of peace.

After 9/11, we asked, Why do they hate us? Isn’t it time for us to ask, Why do we hate them?

Do we think about what hate does to our own hearts? Isn’t it time to put on the invincible armor of human compassion to explore human relations as the science of the human heart, in which we always have the capacity through courage, communication, patience and understanding to turn hate into love, and to beat our swords into plowshares.

LONE STAR VOICE: CHARLES HAMILTON

(Mr. POE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, Americans pay millions a year of their money in health care costs for illegals. Now it is time for those renegade businesses that hire illegals and the Mexican Government to pay.

Charles Hamilton of Spring, Texas, writes me: “Texas taxpayers should not be made to pay the brunt for the high concentration of illegals here that the Feds won’t stop from coming into our country. It might be an incentive for employers not to hire illegals if a tax was levied on each illegal hired. Employee rosters showing names and Social Security numbers should be checked by the Government each year. Companies with illegals would pay a tax to cover the illegals’ hospital costs.”

Mr. Speaker, Dallas County, Texas wants to bill illegal workers for the hospital costs of illegals. But get this: The Mexican consulate arrogantly says, “You can’t do that, it’s illegal.”

Mr. Speaker, the coconspirators of businesses that exploit illegals and the Mexican Government that encourages illegals to pay for the health care. It is morally wrong to expect American citizens and legal immigrants to pay.

And that’s just the way it is.

SUPPORT EMBRYONIC STEM CELL RESEARCH

(Ms. SCHWARTZ of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHWARTZ of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise disappointed and angered by the President’s veto of the Stem Cell Research Enhancement Act, and I rise in solidarity with my 237 colleagues and the 63 Senators who voted to overturn the Bush administration’s policies that have stifled the promise of stem cell research and sound and ethical science.

Since 2001, stem cell research in the United States has been tharted by the Bush administration’s misguided policies. And yesterday, President Bush once again let politics, not science, not the health and well-being of American families, and not the will of the majority of Americans, dictate his decision making.

It is a sad day when the President of the United States stands in the way of life-saving medical research. And with this veto, President Bush failed to give American families the promise of this research. American families want cures, not politics. And they want hope, not loss.

I, along with millions of Americans, am outraged, but we are not deterred. We will keep fighting and we will succeed in fighting the President’s restrictions on stem cell research.

Those of us who voted to override the presidential veto, voted:

- to maintain the United State’s stance as the world leader in medical research and scientific advancement;
- to advance scientific discovery in an ethically and responsible manner;
- to enhance the ability of medical professionals to care for their patients;
- to fulfill our obligation to use our human resources and capabilities to the greater good; and most importantly, to benefit the millions battling disease and injury.

TRIBUTE TO SECRETARY NORMAN MINETA

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, for more than 5 years, we have been honored to have Norman Mineta serve as Secretary of Transportation, selected by President Bush, to be the longest-serving Secretary in American history.

Secretary Mineta served as an intelligence officer in the U.S. Army in both Japan and Korea. He was the 59th mayor of San Jose, California, and served as a Member of Congress for 20 years. He was the first Asian American elected mayor of a major city, and the first to hold a Cabinet position when he served as Secretary of Commerce from 2000 to 2001.

As the Secretary of Transportation, Norman Mineta oversaw an agency with almost 60,000 employees and a $62 billion budget. Created in 1967, the department brought under one umbrella air, maritime, and surface transportation missions. Today, I honor his service to the American people and wish him and his wife, Deni, the best in their future endeavors.

In conclusion, God bless our troops and we will never forget September 11.

PRESIDENTIAL VETO WRONG

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, when I voted to override President Bush’s veto of stem cell research, I was thinking of ex-Governor Booth Gardner of Washington State. I saw Governor Gardner in the San-Tan Airport Monday as I was flying back here. He was flying to San Francisco for advanced treatment for Parkinson’s, a disease he has been battling for some time with great courage and grace.

And yet this promising research, we have a President who decided he is not going to let Americans have because he, from his exalted realm on Pennsylvania Avenue, has taken it upon himself to dictate to Americans what our morals should be.

Let me suggest that the President who started the war in Iraq based on false information, the President that mishandled Hurricane Katrina relief, the President who has created the largest deficit in the history of the solar system, is not entitled by any law, religion, morality, ethics or common sense to dictate to the American people one sense of morality, much less any other.

It was wrong for him to deny Booth Gardner treatment, it is wrong for him to take it away from millions of Americans.

SUPPORT HOMEOWNERS TAX RELIEF ACT

(Mrs. KELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge passage of the Homeowners Tax Relief Act. I have introduced this act to help bring much-needed property tax relief to middle-class families.

Taxes are one of the most critical issues our constituents face. When I talk with residents of the Hudson Valley in my New York district, they repeatedly tell me they are at wit’s end because their property tax rates are increasing faster than their incomes.

We have passed significant tax relief legislation in this Congress, but we can do more to show our constituents that we are committed to tax cuts, not tax increases.
My legislation is particularly aimed to help middle-class families. It would enable homeowners to deduct on their Federal tax forms the amount of property and school taxes that they pay in excess of the national average. This also brings a first-of-its-kind property tax deduct cost to homeowners who use the standard deduction. The IRS estimates that two-thirds of taxpayers use the standard deduction. They would be able to get this tax relief.

Mr. Speaker, both Republican and Democrat cosponsors are on my bill. We need to move it forward to bring additional tax relief to middle-class families in New York and throughout the country.

VOTE “NO” ON OMAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

(Mr. MICHAUD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, last night several of our colleagues stood on this floor and listed all of the terrorists that are no longer threats to the United States. I couldn’t be more pleased that this list of potential threats is getting shorter. So why are we going to vote today on a proposal that will add major new threats to that list?

The Oman Free Trade Agreement would require the United States to allow any Omani company to provide landside U.S. port activities if they so choose. A new CRS report confirms that fact.

We know that al Qaeda wants to launch more attacks here. Do you think that this deal presents a golden opportunity for al Qaeda to infiltrate our ports, to smuggle weapons of mass destruction into the United States?

Last year more than 11 million cargo containers entered the United States. Do you want a company in Oman managing this flow who knows what went into our borders? Would you let any company that operates in Oman run our airport security?

The Oman Free Trade Agreement hands over the keys to any company that operates in Oman. Think about it, and vote “no” on this stupid, ridiculous deal.

When the American people find out about the port provision of this agreement they will be outraged.

PIEDMONT HEALTH CARE

(Mr. GINGREY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate two Georgia hospitals, Piedmont and Piedmont Fayette, which this month were named two of the Nation’s Most Wired Hospitals by a Benchmarking survey.

The Piedmont health care group is known for its longstanding commitment to health information technology. With this award, the whole Nation now understands how these hospitals are using electronic medical records, e-prescribing, and digital radiology to help streamline practices and to reduce medical errors.

I am a strong supporter of health information technology because it saves lives, time, money. And as a physician, I know that encouraging the adoption of health care technology is one of the most important ways we can work to lower costs while also raising quality of care.

This is why I have introduced legislation to incentivize more physicians to adopt information technology. And I hope the success of Piedmont health care will encourage other providers to look at the real savings that this technology offers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me in congratulating Piedmont for their leadership in the field of health information technology.

HOUSE REPUBLICANS FAIL TO ADDRESS THE ISSUES OF REAL CONCERN TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, all year long House Republicans have failed to provide real leadership on issues that affect Americans. Earlier this month the Associated Press reported that President Bush had only signed two substantial bills into law this year.

And, now, House Republicans want to spend the entire week distracting and dividing our Nation with pieces of legislation that will never be signed into law. This is not what the American people sent us here to do.

They have yet to join us in offering a stand-alone vote to increase the minimum wage, which about 60 to 70 percent of people polled said they agree with.

Because of their cozy relationship with Big Oil, they have yet to provide American consumers any relief at the gas pump. In my district it is over $3.35.

Earlier this year, House Republicans promised they would clean up the place after several Republican lobbyists pleaded guilty in the Abramoff scandal. But still we have yet to pass any final legislation.

Mr. Speaker, no wonder House Republicans are trying to distract the American public. This is not a record I would want to run on either.

FISCAL MISMANAGEMENT

(Mr. FLAKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, last year’s highway authorization bill, better known as SAFETEA-LU, which brought us the bridge to nowhere, seems to be a gift that keeps on giving. It has now cleared the path for a program that may set a standard for fiscal mismanagement and favoritism by the Federal Government.

This program, made to the Railroad Rehabilitation and Improvement, or RRIF, program in SAFETEA-LU, the administration is considering awarding one of the largest loans to a private company in the history of the United States. This would be a $2.5 billion loan to the Dakota, Minnesota and Eastern Railroads, or DM&E, a loan larger than the Chrysler bail-out.

SAFETEA-LU expanded the loan authority of the RRIF program from $3.5 billion to $36 billion and removed any prohibition on the size of any single loan, paving the way for the DM&E loan application.

If drastically expanding the program’s loan authority opened the door for DM&E, a handful of other changes to the program all but drive the loan application home.

Mr. Speaker, the RRIF program is on the verge of being used to provide a competitive advantage. It is inappropriate for the taxpayers to finance it.

HOUSE REPUBLICANS ARE PREVENTING MEDICAL ADVANCES

(Ms. SCHAKOWSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, the editorial in yesterday’s USA Today, entitled “Bush Readies First Veto, Dashes Hopes of Millions,” says it all. The editorial begins: “A quarter-century from now, when the benefits of embryonic stem cell research are finally realized, Americans are likely to shake their heads in astonishment at this week’s events in Washington.”

But President Bush is not the only one to blame. House Republicans had a chance to join us in overriding the President’s veto. They refused. Instead, they rubber-stamped the wishes of the President and, in doing so, dashed the hopes of millions of Americans.

The legislation offered us a real opportunity to find cures for diseases such as diabetes, Parkinson’s, Alzheimer’s, cancer and MS that are currently afflicting millions of Americans. This research has been put on hold for far too long by an administration that chooses to stifle groundbreaking science.

Mr. Speaker, this was a golden opportunity for this Congress to give scientists and researchers the tools they need to save lives. House Republicans refused to join us in moving this Nation forward. That is why yesterday is the latest example of why new leadership is needed to take our country in a new direction.
CREDIT CARD ABUSE AT HOMELAND SECURITY

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, the GAO recently reported that 9,000 credit card holders at the Department of Homeland Security used their official cards for more than $420 million worth of goods and services last year, making it the top purchasing agency in the Federal Government.

The purchases were made using government credit cards with a congressionally approved spending limit of $250,000 that the GAO said resulted in numerous cases of fraud and abuse of taxpayers’ dollars.

Nearly half the purchases were made without prior written authorization, and 63 percent did not have evidence that the goods or services were actually received, the report said. How terrible and outrageous this abuse is. Surely the spending limit is too high.

It is very important that this agency enforce adequate internal controls to ensure that card holders are responsibly using their cards. I call upon the homeland security officials to stop this abuse.

REPUBLICANS CHANGE TUNE ON IRAQ

(Mr. EMANUEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, just 6 weeks ago, Zarqawi was killed in Iraq.

Five weeks ago, the House held a debate on Iraq in which Republicans belittled Democrats for questioning the President’s strategy.

Said my colleague from North Carolina: “There are those who want to deny that we are making progress in Iraq.”

But no matter how hard my Republican colleagues try, they cannot escape the facts on the ground. After the most violent month in Iraq and a U.N. report estimating that more than 100 Iraqis are being killed per day, the Republicans are singing a different tune.

This morning’s Washington Post reads: “GOP Lawmakers Edge Away from Optimism on Iraq.” And that same North Carolina lawmaker is quoted as saying: “We can’t look like we won’t face reality.”

Well, here’s reality: when the President went to war with too few troops, not enough body armor, and not enough time, he was wrong, and without a plan for occupation, the Republican Congress failed their oversight responsibilities.

Lieutenant General Greg Newbold said, “To be sure, the Bush administration and senior military officials are not alone in their culpability.” Members of Congress defaulted in fulfilling their constitutional responsibility of oversight.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for a change. It is time for a new direction.

NATIONAL SECURITY

(Mrs. BLACKBURN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, you know, we are seeing it on the front page of Roll Call today, talking about the security message, where the leadership in this House has been focused for a long time now.

We know that national security is securing this country, making an aggressive move in the war on terror, being sure that we support our troops, making sure that we have a Nation that is safe, where we can live, where we can work, go to school, go to our businesses, have secure communities and be secure in our American hopes and dreams.

We also know that a key component of this national security agenda is border security, and I commend the House leadership for staying focused on securing the border first.

It is an imperative for us, Mr. Speaker. We have stopped illegal entry into this country. Illegal entry has turned every State into a border State, every town into a border town, and the people of this Nation know that it will not change until we secure our border.

RAMAPO AMONG BEST PLACES TO LIVE

(Mr. ENGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that Money Magazine has just named the town of Ramapo, in Rockland County in my district, as one of the 100 Best Places to Live in the United States, ranking Ramapo as 49.

I congratulate Ramapo and its town supervisor, Christopher St. Lawrence, who has done a wonderful job in leading that town. Ramapo, with a population of 110,000 residents, is the largest town in Rockland County, with a third of Rockland’s inhabitants. It combines such densely populated places as Spring Valley, Muncie, New Square such with the country settings of Chestnut Ridge, Suffern, and Wesley Hills. Half of Ramapo is designated park land. Businesses have invested more than $1 billion in the past 4 years. The town has the highest bond rating in the country. A new state-of-the-art cardiac care unit has opened at Good Samaritan Hospital in Suffern. They have great schools, and $125 million has been invested in a water treatment plant.

Three years ago, Money Magazine named Ramapo as the second best place to live in the Northeast. This year the ranking was done on a nationwide basis.

I am proud to represent Rockland and Ramapo in the U.S. Congress, and I congratulate the people of Ramapo on achieving this great honor.

THE WAYWARD REID-KENNEDY SENATE IMMIGRATION BILL

(Mr. PRICE of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, some have asked why the House will be holding hearings around our country about illegal immigration. Well, the concise reason is the out-of-touch Reid-Kennedy Senate bill.

The Senate passed legislation that clearly flies in the face of common sense. The American people don’t want amnesty. The Reid-Kennedy Bill includes it. The American people don’t want to provide Social Security benefits to illegal aliens. The Reid-Kennedy bill includes it.

The Senate voted to give illegals that America and legal American citizens, don’t get, like in-state college tuition for all. This makes no sense. It is unacceptable and it is unbelievable and it is just plain wrong.

The American people are fed up with this reckless attitude and poor policy. Acceptance of the Senate plan is something for which the House will not stand; and once the American people know about it, through our hearings, they won’t stand for it either. Then the American people will speak with such passion and vehemence and clarity that the House and Senate may act together and do the right thing first, control our borders and enforce current law.

HOUSE REPUBLICANS DISTRACT AND DIVIDE

(Mr. CARNAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough that out of the 201 days this year this House has only been in session for 63. We are on track for this House to meet even less than the notorious “Do Nothing Congress” that Missouri’s Harry Truman ran against in 1948.

But now the House Republican leadership has dedicated themselves to a distract and divide agenda, even while we face growing challenges at home and crisis abroad.

This week their agenda called for supporting President Bush’s veto of the landmark stem cell bill that would move us closer to lifesaving cures for diseases like Parkinson’s, Alzheimer’s, and cancer. Majority Republicans are cutting off hope for millions of Americans, all so they can satisfy their base on the far right. Do they really want to keep research from finding cures to those diseases so we can save millions of lives? Their agenda is not our agenda.

With only one week left before the August recess, House Republicans... refuse to address the issues that are of real concern to American people. It is time we take America in a new direction.

STEM CELL RESEARCH
(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)
Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, President Bush issued the first veto of his Presidency yesterday, and it was the right thing to do.
By sustaining that veto last night, after more than a year of rhetoric, much of it misleading, we have come down on the side of protecting human life. And we have saved the American taxpayer from being forced to fund unethical and unsuccessful research involving the destruction of human embryos.
Though a chapter in this debate has now been closed, this issue is not going away. As we move forward, I hope we will keep in mind what we have learned. The choice doesn’t have to be between doing stem cell research and not doing stem cell research. There are ethical, life-affirming methods of doing this research that are producing successful treatments today using adult stem cells.
Let’s move forward with stem cell research, Mr. Speaker, but let’s do it in an ethical way.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5684, UNITED STATES-OMAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT
Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I call up House Resolution 925 and ask for its immediate consideration.
The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 5684) to implement the United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement. The bill shall be considered as read. The bill shall be debatable for two hours equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. Pursuant to section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion.
Lastly, the resolution provides that during consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the operation of the previous question, the Chair may postpone further consideration of the bill to a time designated by the Speaker in consonance with section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 925 provides for the consideration of H.R. 5684, a bill to implement the United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement, in accordance with trade measures negotiated under the Trade Promotion Authority. Under these procedures, once the administration formally submits the final legislative language to Congress, it may not be amended.
Former United States Trade Rep Rob Portman signed the United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement on January 19, 2006. Under the agreement, all consumer and industrial goods traded between the U.S. and Oman will immediately be duty free, and 87 percent of the U.S. agricultural tariffs will gain immediate duty-free access with the remaining tariffs phased out over a 10-year period. It provides wide access and sets a strong precedent for opening up opportunities for services for U.S. firms, contains robust protections for U.S. intellectual property rights holders, and includes strong labor and environmental provisions.
Oman enacted broad labor reforms in 2003, Mr. Speaker, and has followed up on its agreements to ensure that its laws provide strong protections for workers consistent with international standards. Oman enacted many of these reforms earlier this month and has pledged to enact the remaining reforms by this November. This agreement makes clear that it is inappropriate for Oman to weaken or reduce domestic labor protections or environmental laws to encourage trade or investment and that this obligation is enforceable through specific dispute settlement mechanisms.

Mr. Speaker, the United States makes up only 4 percent of the world’s population. Therefore, we must recognize that we have an opportunity to create and expand the marketplace for U.S. goods and services by reaching fair trade agreements with our international trading partners. This agreement will contribute to economic growth and enhance trade between the U.S. and Oman; generate export opportunities for U.S. companies, farmers, and ranchers; help create jobs in both countries; and help American consumers save money while offering them greater choices.

My home State of Washington, for example, is one of the most trade-dependent States in the Nation, and our economy depends on fair trade. From agriculture to high tech to manufacturing industries, Washington State and our Nation are in a position to benefit by having more trading partners.
One area where trade with Oman shows great promise for America is in the area of commercial aircraft. Oman Air recently purchased Boeing 737 airplanes valued at $200 million at catalog prices. We want to continue to encourage these kinds of sales to Oman and in the broader Middle East, which, of course, creates new jobs here at home.

In addition to the new commercial opportunities it provides, this agreement will support many of the recent government, legal, and economic reforms in Oman, which are important to building stability to the Middle East region. In 2003 President Bush proposed completion of a Middle East Free Trade Area by 2013 as part of a plan to fight terrorism by supporting Middle East economic growth and democracy through trade.
The United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act would be the fifth bilateral trade agreement reached between the United States and a Middle Eastern country. It is yet another step in the right direction toward integrating fair trade policies and economic reforms to support a more stable and prosperous Middle East. This agreement will send a strong signal to countries in that region about the benefits of closer economic and political ties to the United States.

The Committee on Ways and Means favorably reported H.R. 5684 last May. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 925 and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding me this time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Ms. MATSUI asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)
Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, today we debate another free trade agreement. We all know well-crafted trade policy is capable of spreading benefits to a broad portion of the population while promoting innovation and solidifying settlement partnerships between and among nations.
As a leader in the global economy, the United States has the ability and the responsibility to use trade agreements to effect positive change here at home and abroad. Unfortunately, the Oman Free Trade Agreement, which we are considering, continues the recent trend toward divisive partnership on trade.

Because of the majority’s approach on trade policy, you have a lot of Democrats, who I believe are inclined to vote for free trade agreements, voting against this pact. I am disappointed the administration and the Republican leadership have missed another opportunity to return to a bipartisan consensus on trade. The majority once again cut Democrats out of the negotiations and produced another free trade agreement that fails to protect the basic rights of workers.

Like the Central American Free Trade Agreement, CAFTA, which I voted against a year ago, the labor provisions of the Oman Free Trade Agreement only require Oman to enforce its own labor laws. At this time Oman’s laws do not come close to meeting International Labor Organization standards. This is a threshold that Ways and Means Democrats have set for labor provisions in trade agreements and agree with reasonable. The United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement does not meet it.

Of utmost concern, Oman’s laws do not guarantee the freedom of association and the right to bargain collectively. They do not even prohibit human trafficking and forced labor.

In Oman today unions do not exist. There are only labor management committees where management holds over 70 percent of the leadership positions. In no way is this even close to representation the workers here have achieved for decades of struggle.

Ways and Means Committee Democrats tried to work with the Government of Oman to revise its labor laws, and they are clear about what steps needed to be taken: Specifically, make sure Oman’s laws conform to basic labor standards and begin to implement existing laws in a manner that complies with the principles established by the International Labor Organization. These are not radical requests. Yet the majority and Oman have not acceded to them.

Just yesterday Representative CARDIN offered a reasonable amendment that does not have delayed implementation of this agreement until Oman came into compliance with these standards. That amendment was rejected. The Omani Government attempted to pacify our labor concerns with an 11th-hour royal decree. Unfortunately, it fully addressed only one of the 10 deficiencies outlined by Ways and Means Democrats. So this is not a valid argument.

The situation I just described is quite a contrast to the United States-BahRAIN Free Trade Agreement negotiations. Bahrain made commitments to modify its laws to adhere to International Labor Organization standards and took steps to make sure those standards were being adhered to on the ground immediately. Oman has taken no such actions. As a result, the United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement falls workers in Oman and here in the United States.

This sends a message to the world that the United States does not respect the hardworking men and women that fuel the global economy. That is extraordinarily unwise, particularly considering the lives we are facing all around the globe today.

I had hoped that the bipartisan opposition to CAFTA might make it clear to the Bush administration that a broadly cross-section of this House would not accept trade agreements which fail to ensure fundamental rights for workers. That is apparently not the case because this agreement is another step backwards for workers. Further, it demonstrates this administration’s refusal to use trade to raise the lives of the broad portion of working families, not a select few.

And yesterday at the Rules Committee, Representative CARDIN highlighted a serious concern about port security. The provision imposes a burdensome process should the United States Government choose to protect its citizens from potentially dangerous foreign control over United States port operations. Representative CARDIN offered a second amendment yesterday in the Rules Committee that would have addressed this concern. However, like his other commonsense amendment on labor provisions, it was rejected. This scenario is another reason Members should reject this agreement as currently written.

I know these amendments would in the work that the cosponsors have done in their own jurisdiction. I had hoped that the bipartisan opposition to CAFTA might make it clear to the Bush administration that a broadly cross-section of this House would not accept trade agreements which fail to ensure fundamental rights for workers. That is apparently not the case because this agreement is another step backwards for workers. Further, it demonstrates this administration’s refusal to use trade to raise the lives of the broad portion of working families, not a select few.

I urge Members on both sides of the aisle to commit to achieving it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will respond to a couple of points that my friend from California. She voted in favor of the Bahrain trade agreement, as did the gentleman from Maryland, whom she referenced.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to respond to the concerns that this agreement poses national security issues that concern that the tribunal would have ultimate say over our security issues.

The U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement, like previous trade agreements, treats Omani landside service providers and investors no less favorably than our own landside service suppliers. These landside activities include unloading vessels, marine cargo handling, and ship cleaning.

When an entity participates in these landside aspects of port activities, it does not control, manage or operate a U.S. port. That always remains the responsibility of the port authority.

Nothing in this agreement, Mr. Speaker, before us today prohibits the U.S. from reviewing foreign investment transactions in order to ensure our national security. More importantly, it expressly permits the U.S. to block a potential port acquisition by claiming national security interests.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, all of our trade agreements, including this one, contain an article called “essential security,” which is self-judging, meaning that it is up to an individual country to determine whether a particular matter is necessary for the protection of its essential security interests. All the commitments that we undertake in trade agreements are subject to this provision.

Under this article, nothing in an agreement can prevent us from applying measures that we consider necessary for the protection of our essential security interests. Therefore, the ultimate decision on what is necessary to protect our essential services rests with the United States, not a third-party tribunal.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, history and precedent also indicate that no third-party dispute panel or tribunal has ever heard any arguments, much less issued a decision, related to the scope and application of any national security exception contained in a national trade or investment agreement.

So those issues, while they may be nice to talk about, really have no bearing on our agreements that we have had in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from California for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed today that we are about to consider a free trade agreement with Oman that I would have hoped we would have worked out so we could have had strong bipartisan support. Unfortunately, the agreement comes up short on international labor standards, and I believe we could have achieved those international labor standards to make sure that Oman complies with ILO standards. But, unfortunately, there was an unwillingness on the part of the negotiators to complete the agreement in a way that could have gotten more support.

The second issue that I take, particularly with this rule, because I am going to support the gentleman's position of opposing the previous question, is to deal with a very sensitive issue of port security. So let me try to explain the port security issue, because I think there have been some misstatements on the floor of the House.

This agreement permits Oman to operate ports of its own choosing, including operation and maintenance of docks, loading and unloading of vessels directly to and from land, marine cargo handling, operation and maintenance of piers, ship cleaning, stevedoring, transfer of cargo between vessels and trucks, trains, pipelines and wharves and waterfront terminal operations.

That is exactly what Dubai Ports World tried to do in ports in this country, including my own Port of Baltimore, and the American people spoke up against allowing a foreign company to operate port facilities here in the United States, and we blocked that transaction. It was the right thing to do for the security of America and the security of our ports.

Under this agreement, if Dubai Ports World had an operation within Oman, they would be permitted to apply to do those operations here in the United States and they would be permitted to do that under the free trade agreement.

I have heard my colleagues suggest that we can just invoke the essential security exception to an agreement, and if you're correct, we can invoke the essential security exception and block the transaction. But then we are subject to dispute settlement procedures. We never give up our sovereignty in trade agreements, but we changed our tax laws because of international pressure when we thought we didn't have to, because otherwise we would have been subjected to tariffs against U.S. products. The same thing is true here. If the dispute panel rules against us, then we are subjecting ourselves to sanctions.

Our USTR says this is absolute, they can't do that. But let me remind you, we have lost 83 percent of our cases in dispute settlement procedures where sanctions have been imposed against our country. So we haven't been that successful in these international tribunals.

Let me also point out that by including this language in this bill, there will be continued pressure on this administration to allow foreign government companies to operate ports here in the United States. We have an administration that is friendly towards that.

We have the responsibility in Congress to protect our ports and protect our Nation. It is our responsibility. I urge my colleagues to defeat the previous question so that we can protect the ports here in America and make it clear, by simply taking out that one provision, how the operation of port facilities potentially by companies owned by countries that are not friendly to the United States.

This is an important issue, and I urge all my colleagues to pay attention to this. This is our vote and our opportunity, and I urge the defeat of the previous question.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. Ros-Lehtinen).

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for the time.

I rise in strong support of the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement. Following the U.S.-Bahrain Free Trade Agreement last year, Mr. Speaker, the U.S.-Oman FTA sends a clear message that we are committed to improving our relationship with the Middle East while improving our international trade interests.

The agreement goes beyond addressing trade issues. As part of the FTA, Oman commits to intensifying its political reform efforts to enhance participation of all of its citizens in the process. Oman has also implemented economic changes that will make entry into its domestic and international markets more accessible to private citizens.

Additionally, the FTA has stipulations that Oman complete labor reforms by October 31 of this year. However, of its own volition, Oman began enacting these reforms beginning in 2003, and earlier this month many of the remaining reforms were implemented by a royal decree. Some of the recent changes include dispute settlement procedures for labor representatives, the ability to call for strikes, and strengthening of legal protections for women and foreign workers.

Oman has withdrawn International Labor Organization conventions against child and forced labor.

Not only has Oman undertaken domestic reforms, but it has also made strides to change its international policies, pulling out of an international boycott of Israel and repealing all aspects of the boycott. This shows a clear commitment to Oman's desire to function in accordance with international trade norms of equality and full marketplace access.

The 9/11 Commission report states that economic reforms will be the key to changing the cultural landscape in the Middle East. As such, this FTA is about much more than trade; it is a tool for advancing U.S. strategic interests. Oman is a key ally in the global war on terror and has provided critical assistance to our Armed Forces in Iraq and Afghanistan.

In short, this U.S.-Oman FTA will help to improve our market access and increase national security; and, therefore, I would like to reiterate my strong support for this mutually beneficial agreement.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Linda T. Sánchez).

Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to vote 'no' on the previous question. This would allow us to consider the Cardin amendment to close the loophole in the agreement that would allow a foreign company based in Oman to operate U.S. port facilities.

Earlier on I was opposed to the Oman Free Trade Agreement because it undermines fundamental workers' rights. This free trade agreement is another bill to work against more of our jobs overseas. But I was shocked to learn that it could underpin the basic safety and security of those who I was sent here to represent.

I come from a community that is directly tied to this Nation's largest port, the Port of Long Beach. The safety and security of this port and all other American ports are essential to our country.

The Oman FTA directly threatens our ability to control our Nation's ports. The creators of this deal completely ignored Congress' overwhelming response to the Dubai Ports World deal because, just like that deal, the Oman FTA has a very far-reaching provision hidden completely from the public eye.

Buried deep in the annex of this agreement, our country’s right to determine which ports it operates is overturned when it deems new entry is given by the new arrangement. Who gets the new right to control vital American infrastructure? Any group of people or government that incorporates to do business in Oman.

Then there are people who supported the Dubai Ports World deal are now telling us that this is, again, nothing to worry about. They were wrong then, and they are wrong now. We should not export the safety and security of Americans. I urge again my colleagues to vote “no” on the previous question.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CONAWAY).

Mr. CONAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support today of the Oman Free Trade Agreement. It is an important outreach and step that this country ought to be making and I think we will make. It was not just left on a couple of the previous speakers. They appear to be relying on stock certificates to protect our ports. The truth of the matter is, I agree with them wholeheartedly that protecting our ports is in the vital interests of this country. No one would argue about that.

But simply the fact who owns a particular company is scant comfort when it comes to control of the ports, as well as the security surrounding all of the ports. All the conduct that goes on, the goods and services are moved through there. The scheduling and the actual control of our security by the Coast Guard, to me is a much better way to secure our ports than simply worrying about the stock certificates of the companies that provide the services of scheduling, loading and unloading.

The United States free trade agreement with Oman represents more than just simple economics and trade. Support for this agreement represents building a relationship and strengthening with a peaceful ally in the Middle East that has a proven track record.

Let me run through a couple of things that I think are important when we talk about who is Oman and why should we enter into some sort of bilateral free trade agreement with Oman.

Oman has been a proven leader in the Persian Gulf in establishing trade and other ties with Israel. Since 1970, Oman has pursued a moderate foreign policy and expanded its diplomatic relationships dramatically.

Oman has also worked to develop closer ties with its neighbors in the Middle East. Oman joined the six-member Gulf Cooperation Council when it was established and traditionally supports Middle East peace initiatives.

In 1979, Oman supported the Camp David Accords and was one of only three Arab League states which did not break relationships with Egypt after the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty in 1979. In April of 1994, Oman hosted the plenary meeting of the Water Working Group of the peace process and was the first gulf state to do so.

On December 26, 1994, Oman became the first gulf state to host an Israeli Prime Minister, again trying to build on a relationship of peace with another important ally of ours in the Middle East.

Oman has eliminated all aspects of the Arab boycott of Israel. In 2005 and 2006, senior Omani officials issued letters affirming that Oman has no boycott in place against Israel. Oman was one of the first regional states to offer recognition to the U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council in 2003 and backed the Iraqi elections that took place in January 2005.

This agreement with Oman illustrates the importance of trade liberalization and security cooperation, both of which further our national interests from an economic and security standpoint. We must not turn our backs on the peace-promoting leader in this region. Oman is dependable, and it is critical that we continue to build on this relationship.

Please join me in supporting the previous question on table and in support of the Oman Free Trade Agreement that will be brought to the floor later today.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this agreement. Unfettered free trade is one of the major reasons why in our country today the middle class is shrinking; why our median income has declined, while in the last 5 years 5 million more Americans have slipped into poverty; why millions of Americans are working longer hours for lower wages.

Yes, I acknowledge at a time when the CEOs of large corporations earn 400 times what their workers are making, at a time when large corporations are throwing American workers out on the street and moving to low-wage countries, we have found very, very well for the large multinationals. But maybe, just maybe, once in a long while, the Republican leadership might want to consider the middle class of this country, working families, lower-middle class, and not just the wealthiest people.

Mr. Speaker, the American middle class should no longer be forced to compete against workers in China, Vietnam, and other countries where desperate people, through no fault of their own, are forced in some cases to work for wages as low as 30 cents an hour. That is not a level playing field.

Throwing American workers out on the street, moving to countries where people are paid pennies an hour, is bad public policy. It has failed. One of the definitions of insanity is to do the same thing over and over again. That is what this Congress does. It fails every single time.

Mr. Speaker, before we vote for unfettered free trade with Oman, we should consider this. In Oman, the minimum wage ranges from absolutely zero to $1.30 an hour. The average wage in Oman is about $250,000; the poverty line for a single mother with one child living in this country.

Is that fair competition for American workers? In addition, Mr. Speaker, we hear a lot from this administration and my Republican colleagues about the need to support freedom. Well, are the people in Oman free to elect their leader? What was the result in the last election? We didn’t hear much about that, because they don’t have elections.

Oman is a hereditary monarchy. Is there freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of the press in Oman? No, there is not. Mr. Speaker, in the last 5 years alone, we have lost nearly the number of deaths due to firing jobs, 17 percent of our total. In 1990, before NAFTA, our trade deficit was over $70 billion. Last year, after unfettered free trade, it was over $715 billion. This year it is expected to top $800 billion.

The time is now to change our policy with regard to unfettered free trade.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the Oman Free Trade Agreement that will be brought to the floor later today.

Mr. Speaker, as a union member and as a Member of this body, and as someone who wants to ensure American workers are not being forced to compete against workers in countries where the profits of the American company are even higher, I think we are obligated to support that the Bush administration is doing.

We have called for such standards in every agreement negotiated by this administration, and each time we have been let down by the President and his allies here in Congress. In sending the Oman trade agreement to the Hill, the Bush administration has also astonishingly opted to send Congress an agreement in which he refused to include a prohibition on forced or slave labor.

Is this how we spread democracy in the Middle East? Is this how the U.S. government advances our own security interests? Another bizarre decision the President made is to put in jeopardy the security of our ports and other critical homeland security functions. This Oman agreement explicitly paves the way for companies like Dubai Ports World to gain control of our ports.

Those who disagree with this argument refuse to acknowledge that the fact that in the best-case scenario, with the President utilizing every national security waiver at his disposal, the final decision on such a matter will be left out of U.S. hands and left to an international tribunal.

I would think the Republican leadership could at least agree that we should not outsource our core homeland security functions and decisions. In a country like Oman, where meager rights for workers fall well below the International Labor Organization’s standards, where the Sultan can change any law by decree, and where there are no independent unions, Congress should be especially vigilant.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I thank my very good friend from the Rules Committee for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate Ms. Matsui’s leadership. Mr. Speaker, this legislation needs to pass. This trade agreement is very much in the interests of the United States. Oman is our ally. It is an example of exactly what we need to keep bringing throughout the Arab world.

Now, I do not know if everyone in this body knows where Oman is located. It sits at the Strait of Hormuz and at the entrance to the Persian Gulf. It is in a critically strategic location. Across that strait lies Iran. More than 20 percent of the world’s oil supply passes through that strait.

Oman has remained our ally, notwithstanding all of the pressure that it has received over generations. It has been our ally since 1833 when we passed the Treaty of Amity and Commerce. It was the first Arab country to send an Ambassador to the United States. Today it is the first and only Arab country to have a female Ambassador to the United States.

It is one of the most open, liberal societies in the Arab and Muslim world. They signed a 10-year military access agreement in 1981 with the United States, and they have renewed it twice. They want to be one of the most important logistical and operational support areas for the present war in Iraq, and were so in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what more they can do. They are an active supporter of the United States against terrorism, and as this letter from AIPAC says, they have been willing to take on the Arab world and break the Arab boycott against Israel, the primary supporter of the Arab boycott. And here we are, we debated all night last night about the resolution in the Middle East.

We know the number of lives that are being lost, the conflagration that is taking place internationally, and we will not reach out to an Arab nation that is our most important ally, that is exactly what we are hoping to achieve in terms of economic and social liberalization.

They have agreed to comply with all of the International Labor Organization’s standards. They will have collective bargaining, unionization. They are going to open up their industries to outside review and competition. And what do they want to buy? They want to buy transport equipment and manufactured products, products that generate jobs in the United States.

And what are they going to sell to us? It is primarily oil that does not generate jobs in the Arab world. That is part of the reason why the Sultan of Oman understands that the vast majority, more than 60 percent of his population, are under the age of 18. He gets it. He understands. He needs to move into the modern world. But he needs American products.

This trade treaty needs to pass.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DREIER) the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, who is probably one of the individuals in this body that works on trade issues more than anybody else.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding. I will correct him by saying that I take a back seat to no one in terms of what we are doing. But I thank him by saying that I take a back seat to no one in terms of what we are doing.

Now, this agreement that we are about to consider is probably one of the most important job creation in the United States.

And, frankly, we have as an institution been, I think, doing a great job in helping emerging and reemerging democracies around the world, political pluralism, the rule of law, self-determination.

And, frankly, we have as an institution been, I think, doing a great job in helping emerging and reemerging democracies around the world, political pluralism, the rule of law, self-determination.

One has to look at the overall policies of the United States of America and look at the economic policies pursued by this administration and this Congress. We have to realize the fact that we have minority home ownership at an all-time high. We have unemployment at a 4.6 percent rate.

The first quarter of this year, we saw greater domestic product growth at 5.6 percent. We have seen inflation, based on the projections outlined by the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Mr. Bernanke, yesterday, tempering. We are seeing predictions for strong economic growth. And, Mr. Speaker, it is due in large part to our pursuit of breaking down barriers to expand the opportunity for greater trade and for job creation right here in the United States of America.

Now, this agreement that we are going to be facing today, which I am very pleased will enjoy bipartisan support, as I said, is an agreement that I believe really transcends the simple economic questions that we face today, the economic questions of important job creation in the United States.

But the vote that we face today is a very important geopolitical question. Not only is my friend from Virginia (Mr. MORAN) talked about the strategic importance of Oman. My friend from Texas (Mr. CONAWAY) earlier talked about the fact that Oman was the first gulf nation to host an Israeli Prime Minister.

We have talked about the fact that over the past many decades, we have seen a very important relationship that has existed between Oman and the United States of America. And one of the things that is important to note is that we, with huge bipartisan numbers, put into place the U.S.-Bahrain Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement is by every account an even stronger, better agreement from a perspective of workers’ rights and the other labor standards that are raised by so many, better than the U.S.-Bahrain Free Trade Agreement.

Now, as I talk about the geopolitical issue, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for us to note that one of the things that we as an institution are doing on a regular basis is encouraging the building of democratic institutions around the world, political pluralism, the rule of law, self-determination.

And, frankly, we have as an institution been, I think, doing a great job in helping emerging and reemerging democracies. A year ago this spring, Speaker HASTERT and Minority Leader PELOSI put into place a great new commission, which I am privileged to chair, and our colleague from North Carolina, DAVID PRICE, serves as the ranking minority member on. It is a bipartisan, 16-member commission.

The Speaker pro temp is a member of our commission. And, as we have done is we have said we need to take new and reemerging democracies around the world and help them build their parliaments.

Now, as we look at the geopolitical importance of this issue, Mr. Speaker,
I have to tell you that we just, 2 weeks ago, had our commission in Lebanon, and we just, days before the attack by Hezbollah against the Israelis, the kidnaping of the IDF troops, military, we were on the tarmac in Beirut, having just come from meetings with the Lebanese, with the parliaments, with the Supreme Court, with the judges, with the attorney general, with the ministers, with the parliamentary leaders, with the parliamentarians in Lebanon and many other parts of the world who are hoping very much to be able to build those parliaments, to establish their libraries, to put into place a committee structure that will allow for adequate oversight of the executive branch, and to do many of the things that we have a tendency to take for granted around here.

Now, we know that Oman isn’t an American-style democracy; we recognize that. A lot of people have been critical because of it. But the fact of the matter is, we need to do all that we can to help those countries that are moving towards the rule of law, and Oman is one of them. Moving towards a rules-based trading system, and other countries in the region that are seeking to stand up in this global war against Islamo-fascism to do all possible to help us.

Free trade and economic liberalization is a very important part of that goal. I can’t think of a more important vote after, as Mr. Moran said, the debate we had last night on the resolution that we are going to be voting on before too terribly long, supporting the State of Israel and their action and their right to defend themselves. And now this agreement really goes hand in hand with our quest to take on those who want to do in our way of life, who want to undermine opportunities for freedom.

This is a very good agreement. It is a good rule that, under the standard structure that we have, allows for its implementation. So Members should vote “yes” on the previous question when it comes forward over here, and they should vote “yes” for the rule and “yes” on final passage for the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement.

Ms. Matsui. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. Kaptur).

Ms. Kaptur. I thank the gentlewoman from California for yielding me this time and wish to say to my colleague from California who just left the podium that one of America’s problems in the Middle East is that we have become too identified with the superrich, undemocratic leaders of those countries who ignore the teeming masses of the poor among them. That is where “the resistance” comes from.

Mr. Dreier. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. Kaptur. As I finish my statement, I will yield some time to the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, today the House will consider another so-called free trade agreement, this time with Oman, a nation that is not a democracy. In fact, far from it. It is a sultanate with rule by the superrich. This agreement will yield no more liberty.

We should defeat the resolution and this bill. Oman is not a free country. Free trade should only exist among free people. Trade should enhance liberty and freedom, not undermine it by empowering the superrich to assure their privileges to the exclusion of others.

Exploitation of Oman’s working class by its own rulers, along with imported labor from poorer countries who have no rights, underpin the ugly underbelly of Oman, no matter how the gold on their ships, their palaces glitters. Of Oman, no matter how the gold on their ships, their palaces glitters, the former Treasury Secretary and Senator from Texas, he said, were it not for the North American Free Trade Agreement, this very serious problem that we have of illegal immigration would be much, much worse today than it is. Now, if one realizes that in Mexico we have a burgeoning middle class, a middle class that is today larger than the entire Canadian population, and it is continuing to grow, those areas that have benefited most greatly from the North American Free Trade Agreement in the northern states of Mexico have seen tremendous booms in their standard of living.

Mr. Kaptur. Would the gentleman be happy to yield me a couple of seconds on his time?

Mr. Dreier. I am happy to yield to my friend.

Ms. Kaptur. You know, it is amazing how two people can live in this world and view it so differently. The exploitation of Mexico’s rural countryside is a continental sacrilege. The reason we have all this illegal immigration to our country is NAFTA wiped across Mexico’s countryside. Does the gentleman have no conscience for them?

Mr. Dreier. If I could reclaim my time, Mr. Speaker. May I reclaim my time?

Ms. Kaptur. What about our workers? Millions lost jobs because of NAFTA?

Mr. Dreier. Could I reclaim my time, Mr. Speaker? Am I in control of my time?

She is claiming that I am somehow exploiting the underclass of Mexico.

Mr. Hastings of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. Kolbe). The gentleman is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. Dreier. I would say to my friend, obviously we want to do everything that we can to see the standard of living and quality of life for that underclass that she refers to, as she leaves the floor, as I am trying to engage in this colloquy with her.

I will say that I believe that our policies have played a big role in enhancing the standard of living and quality of life, and I am not going to be satisfied until every single one of those individuals does, in fact, see their quality of life improve.

I believe in that economic liberalization and creating economic opportunity, which we have done for so much of Mexico, through the existence of the—

Ms. Kaptur. Would you be kind enough to yield?
Mr. DREIER. I am happy to yield.

Ms. KAPTUR. I will just say to the gentleman that post-NAFTA, the wages of Mexicans were cut in half. Two million people are streaming across this continent because their way of life has been destroyed. Travel with me to Mexico, and in their Nation, the middle class has lost a million jobs to Mexico. Why is it the gentleman refuses to see this continental tragedy.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, that is just plain wrong. That is just plain inaccurate. If you look at, again, the standard of living and quality of life in Mexico, it is substantially greater today than it was before the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Ms. KAPTUR. Not for the ordinary people.

Mr. DREIER. I believe that these policies are very important for the United States and the world.

Ms. KAPTUR. Only for those at the top.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to vote "no" on the previous question. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to vote "no" on the previous question. If the previous question is defeated, I will amend the rule to make in order a critical amendment that was offered in the Rules Committee yesterday by Subcommittee Ranking Member CARDIN, but unfortunately was rejected by a straight party-line vote.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print the text of the amendment and extraneous materials immediately prior to the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

Ms. MATSUI. The Cardin amendment seeks to make our Nation more, not less, secure.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, that is an inaccurate characterization.

Ms. MATSUI. The Cardin amendment, Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, if the issue is on port security, then I would like to remind my colleagues of what I had said earlier, that in these trade agreements there are articles that speak to essential security, and these articles are self-judging, which means it is up to the individual country to make the determination as to what their security interests are.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this agreement that can prevent us from applying what we consider to be security issues.

But don't take my word for it. The Congressional Research Service, a non-partisan organization, said, in addressing the issue, and having an international tribunal judge this, that national security issues have never been subjected to review by trade panels.

Further, the Congressional Research Service concludes that "The U.S. should appear to be on solid legal grounds for asserting not only that the panel does not, the independent panel, does not have legal authority to determine the validity of such a matter, but also that the inconsistent measure is permitted and justified, given the broad self-judging language in the national security exemption."

So clearly the argument that the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement will make our Nation less secure, in fact, has no basis in fact. There is no question, however, Mr. Speaker, that fair trade promotes economic development and political cooperation.

In fact, the 9/11 Commission specifically cited Middle Eastern free trade agreements and calls for action on a comprehensive U.S. strategy that President Bush has, I might add, engaged in that includes economic policies encouraging development, more open societies and opportunities for people to improve their lives.

Mr. Speaker, approving this agreement would close a dangerous loophole in the current agreement, a loophole that could jeopardize our Nation's port security. In other words, in its present form, this agreement would allow a foreign company based in Oman to operate landside aspects of U.S. port facilities. The Cardin amendment provides that the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement cannot take effect until the U.S. withdraws its commitment to allow Omani companies to operate landside aspects of U.S. port activities.

Unless we vote on the Cardin amendment today, we could once again be faced with a risk that the management of our vital ports might again be handed over to an entity with no security.

The House must have the chance to weigh in on this matter of national security. It is time for this House to stop giving rubber-stamp approval to this administration at the expense of our national security. The Cardin amendment is the only way to ensure that this free trade agreement doesn't compromise our ports.

Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues may argue that the adoption of this important amendment will shut off the fast-track process in the Senate for this bill. True, perhaps, but we should not allow any process to trump our national security and the duty of this Congress to protect its citizens from harm.

If we have to send this agreement back to the drawing board, so be it. However Members of this House feel about this trade deal, I would hope that they would all realize the danger that lies hidden in the proposal. Vote "no" on the previous question so we can protect our ports.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.
The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to clause 8 and clause 9 of rule XIX, this 15-minute vote on ordering the previous question on H. Res. 925 will be followed by 5-minute votes on adoption of H. Res. 925, if ordered; and on the motion to suspend the rules on H. Res. 921.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 227, nays 196, not voting 9, as follows:

[Roll No. 389]

[The list of roll call votes is not transcribed here.]

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The Speaker then declared 227 yeas to have it.
Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This will be a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 237, nays 187, not voting 10, as follows:

TITLE IV—PROCUREMENT

SEC. 401. ELIGIBLE PRODUCTS.

Section 5308(4)(A) of the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 (19 U.S.C. 25308(4)(A)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or" at the end of clause (I);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (V) and inserting "or"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(VI) a product or service of a country or instrumentality which is covered under that Agreement for procurement by the United States.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 925, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) each will control 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, this particular agreement is an important not from an economic standpoint, but because it represents a fundamental right of our country, we ought to keep it on this side of our flag and not have to expose it to the world. The agreement is significant in the advancement of opening trade in a number of areas very quickly, sort of a solid, leading-edge kind of agreement that we would like to see in a number of other countries. We should agree that we should have a free trade agreement. And to Oman, I think that is a limited resource. They are interested in investing in their people. We are interested in helping them do that.

But it cannot go unmentioned that we also need, as we look at the globe or the atlas, to make note of the location of Oman, and that this agreement can be seen in any number of ways, and one of them is as a step towards a closer economic relationship with a friend that has had a close security relationship with the United States.
know what USTR intends to put in the bill.

Now, over the years, all we have said is this: The the details of a bill should be fair, and as far as I am concerned, America should have a fair advantage. We should be able to see that our products have access to their markets. But there is also something that I think is a principle that is American, and that is that the basic rights of the workers should be protected. On so many bills that religious leaders, the labor leaders, the farmers, the peasants come to us and say, Please support the bill but please make certain that you have the same type of protections in that bill to protect our rights as a assembly, to protect our rights to strike, as you have in that bill for intellectual property rights.

We have taken the lowest possible denominator and taken the International Labor Organization regulations. And we have said they have no problem with that, but somehow that is never, but never, discussed in our committee even though we have an amendment that deals with the Peruvian Free Trade Agreement. And this very moment is in the hearing room. We are not talking about it. We are debating an amendment. What we should be talking about is what is good for both of these countries and can we walk across the table and agree to these trade agreements knowing that it is good for America, but we are not driving the workers to the lowest possible denominator; but we would like to be able to say that there are basic protections for the people especially in developing countries that we do business with.

So, Mr. Speaker, Democrats have to be respected. We may be in the minority, but we should not be excluded in participating in discussions with the United States Representatives. And the United States Trade Representatives should not send us to foreign representatives in order to see what we can get in the bill. They are supposed to be our negotiators the same way they are the majority party's negotiators. That does not happen. I do believe that it should.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), who is the senior member of the Trade Subcommittee, who has put in hours of work on this, and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control the 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER).

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, in 2003, President Bush called for the creation of a Middle East Free Trade Area in 10 years to bring the Middle East into an expanding circle of opportunity. To date the administration has successfully negotiated free trade agreements with Bahrain, Jordan, and Oman to provide a solid foundation for the MEFTA initiative.

As the Wall Street Journal noted in an editorial the other day: "The deal would make all U.S. industrial and consumer prices drop immediately and phase out farm tariffs over 10 years."

The promise of the Omani agreement before us is expanded market opportunities for U.S. exporters, greater financial integrity in the world economy, and enhanced regional stability. Overall, by developing greater economic friendship in the Middle East with modernizing economics like Oman, we also advance America's national security objectives in the broader war on terrorism.

As the 911 Commission report recommended, "Any comprehensive U.S. strategy to counterterrorism should include economic policies that encourage development, more open societies, and opportunities for people to improve their lives." The U.S.-Oman FTA embodies this principle.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement and urge its passage in the House.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE).

(Mr. KILDEE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 5684.

Mr. Speaker, this Oman FTA is harmful and unbalanced and threatens our National Security.

This FTA is just a small part of a larger trade policy that has not been in the best interest of U.S. workers, small businesses, farmers or the economy and environment.

I have voted against every harmful and unbalanced trade agreement that has come before this House.

I want to welcome the opportunity to vote for an agreement with strong and enforceable labor and environmental protections.

Unfortunately the U.S.-Oman FTA has neither of these and I will be voting against this bad trade deal.

The FTA fails short of the labor protections that must be included to make an acceptable agreement.

We need a time-out on trade and stop this "race to the bottom."

Our trade agreements have not significantly raised the living standards in foreign nations.

And U.S. trade policy has forced American workers to compete on an uneven playing field.

By defeating this FTA, we will tell the Administration that no longer will we accept harmful and unbalanced trade agreements.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition to the Oman Free Trade Agreement. I do that for two basic reasons.

First, this agreement contains provisions that would allow companies owned by foreign governments to move into port operations. That is one of our first opportunities to deal with this since this matter became a matter of attention of this body earlier this year when Dubai Ports World attempted to enter port operations in many ports in the United States, including my own port of Baltimore. We spoke pretty decisively about our concern about allowing companies owned by foreign countries to be involved in principal port operations.

The language in this free trade agreement opens the door for exactly that to occur. Under the services provision, there is a provision that allows landside aspects of U.S. port activities, anything other than port maintenance of docks; loading and unloading of vessels directly to and from land; marine cargo handling; operation and maintenance of piers; ship cleaning; stevedoring; transfer of cargo between vessels and trucks, trains, and wharves; and waterfront terminal operations, to be given out to the Omani companies that could very well be owned by that government.

To make the matter even worse, if the Dubai Ports World were to establish operations in Oman, then they could actually come in and operate our ports under the protection of this agreement.

You will hear during the course of this debate that the United States has the ability to prevent that from happening. And, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge that under any trade agreement, no other country can order us to do anything other than what we want to do. We maintain sovereignty.

But let me remind you that under trade agreements there are certain penalties that are imposed if we do not live up to those provisions. And Congress were required to change our Foreign Sales Corporation tax laws. We did it. We didn't have to do it, but if we did not do it, tariffs would have been imposed and continued to be imposed against our products.

So this is a serious issue. The United States has the opportunity under this agreement to block such an operation under the essential security exception. However, Oman would have the right to challenge that under dispute settlement, and under chapter 20 we have not excluded this determination from dispute settlement resolution. It can happen. The pressure can build on our country. We do not have a very good track record adversarial international tribunals. In fact, our record is around less than 20 percent success when it comes to imposing penalties against the United States. This administration has already shown a willingness to allow companies owned by foreign countries to operate port facilities in the United States. This is another opportunity for them to move forward on this. Mr. Speaker, it is our responsibility. We have a chance to speak on this, and we should speak with a clear voice in rejecting this agreement.

The second area of concern that I will talk about during the course of this speech deals with Oman’s failure to meet International Labor Organization standards. And I will give you chapter and verse of letters that we have written because, as you know, the standard is enforce your own laws, and Omanian laws are not up to ILO standards, and for that reason alone this agreement should be rejected.

So whether it is a matter of national security in regards to our ports or a matter of standing up for basic international worker rights, this agreement comes up short and should be rejected.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Moran of Virginia. Mr. Speaker. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This trade agreement needs to pass. This trade agreement is so clearly in America’s interest.

Now, when you look at the total amount of trade between the two countries, it may not seem like a big deal. A billion dollars, what is that? Four one-hundredths of 1 percent of our economy, $500 million each way. That is no big deal.

But that was my daughter calling, and that is what this is really about. This is about the future: whether we engage with the peaceful and progressive Arab world or whether we blow up the bridges that they are trying to build with America and with the modern Western world.

Oman was the first Arab country to send an Ambassador to the United States. Today, they have the first woman and the only Arab woman Ambassador to the United States. They are showing by their actions that they get it. They understand that when 60 percent of their population is under the age of 18, they have got to go forward, not backward to fundamentalism and to the kind of theocracy that has hampered their neighbors. They do not need to move forward. But they need the help of the United States to move forward.

Now, as I say, the amount of trade is inconsequential. It is not going to affect organized labor here. It is not going to affect any particular industry, although I have to say that it is pretty much a one-way street. What they buy from us is transport equipment, manufactured goods, investment in oil jobs in this country. And what we buy from them is largely natural resources, and some textiles, but mostly oil and gas. They want to be able to buy more. They want to make it easier for us to sell by reducing tariffs and quotas.

But, most importantly, is the larger context of this agreement. Oman sits next to Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia has been the instigator and the promoter of an Arab boycott against Israel, and this relatively small country has dedicated itself to breaking that boycott.

We have a letter from AIPAC here supporting this because Oman has been working to put an end to secondary and primary boycotts of Israel. Here is the letter right here.

Now, when we were attacked on 9/11, 2001, we put together a bipartisan commission of very thoughtful and knowledgeable people, and one of the most important recommendations that that commission came up with was that we as a country need to reach out to the modern, progressive Arab world. We have got to do it. We can’t isolate ourselves from a billion-and-a-half Muslims, because then that is going to radicalize people in their country. We have got to walk through these doors that they are willing to open up and show what happens when you trade with the United States, when you trade with progressive democracies. This is exactly what that 9/11 Commission recommended.

I am pleased that we overwhelmingly supported the Bahrain Free Trade Agreement, but this is an even better trade agreement. It is hard to believe that we are questioning the fact that this is in America’s interest. It is so overwhelmingly in America’s interest.

A couple of red herrings have been brought up; and as much as I respect and admire who have brought up these red herrings, we are all entitled to our own opinions, but not our own set of facts.

The facts are that we asked the Congressional Research Service to look into this. They came up with a report that was compelling and definitive: there is no national security interest involved here, because if we decide there is a national security threat, which we self-define, that trumps everything else, and at any time we can raise the essential article of justification. No one else has the authority to second-guess what it takes for us to protect our national security, and there is no precedent for any kind of international panel second-guessing us. There is no national security issue here.

The language, the provisions in this treaty, are the same as have been in all the others. It is the same language as Bahrain, the same language as Central America. There is no change here.

In terms of labor law, and I will address this subsequently after people address it on the Democratic side to layout their objections, but I have read the communication from the Sultan, as I trust others have. He is willing to agree to the labor rights issues. He wants to abide by the International Labor Organization’s standards. He wants to do everything it takes to show that he gets it, that he wants a higher quality of life, a better standard of living and more worker protections in Oman than his people have today.

Now, the democratically elected Advisory Council is not in session right now, and the Sultan is trying to take the time, number one. They all passed. When the Sultan says he is going to do it, that is it. We may prefer the niceties of a democracy and so on, but the reality is that these laws are going to be changed if the Sultan chooses to change them.

So I really urge my colleagues to support this.

One other aspect that I haven’t mentioned, and I will get into it in a greater degree later, Oman has a military access agreement with us. They have had it since 1981. They keep renewing it. We keep putting more and more forces through Oman for the war in Iraq. They were of immense help in the Gulf War. I don’t know what one country can do to be more deserving of a trade agreement with the United States.

Mr. Thomas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I do so with a degree of trepidation, because I take the time, number one, to thank my colleague from Virginia. I hope my acknowledgment doesn’t do him too much damage, because his statement was not only eloquent, but accurate and, we all know, prescient.

It is absolutely critical that we continue to build the kind of relationships in that portion of the world that this agreement reflects.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time and control of that time to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Stearns), the chairman of the Trade Subcommittee; and prior to that, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Weller).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida will control the balance of the time.

There was no objection.

Mr. Weller. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of what is a very good trade agreement, both for the United States as well as for our friend and ally, the nation of Oman.

It was interesting, I hear a lot of references in this body to those who argue that every one of the bipartisan 9/11
Commission recommendations should be implemented. Today, we have before us one of those recommendations, that is, the 9/11 Commission recommended that we as the United States work to further expand trade agreements with our friends in the Mideast, and Oman is one of our oldest allies. As my colleague from Virginia noted, we have 170 years of friendship with the small nation known as Oman, a friend and ally, a cooperative partner.

That is a recommendation that is before us is good for U.S. manufacturers, it is good for Illinois manufacturers, it is good for Illinois workers, it is good for Illinois farmers. Immediately, once it goes into force, 100 percent of manufactured goods exported from the United States to Oman are duty free. Immediately, 87 percent of U.S. farm products, corn and soybeans from Illinois, are duty free, and the remaining tariffs are phased out over a short period of time. Again, this is good for Illinois workers and manufacturers and farmers.

Also know that Oman has implemented significant labor reforms, enacted major labor reforms in 2003 and, like Bahrain, has followed up with specific commitments to ensure that its laws provide protections for workers. Again, this is a good agreement for workers as well.

Some on the other side of the aisle are trying to manufacture new issues; trying to claim that somehow by having a trade agreement with Oman, a Middle Eastern country, that we are jeopardizing our port security. It is a red herring. It is a phony issue.

The Congressional Research Service has stated that those statements are misleading. Under the review process this agreement is not affected. This agreement deserves bipartisanship support.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute to correct the record.

To my friend in Virginia who quoted AIPAC, the letter was the letter addressed to the congressman, complimented the manner in which we have worked in a bipartisan manner to deal with the Arab boycott, in both the Bahrain agreement and the Oman agreement; but it does not talk about support for this legislation.

I would also point out that our friends from the WTO have been pretty clear about the dispute settlement system working: “It must not be possible for one country to evade its operations simply by sending its national security is involved, however farfetched such a claim may be. Yet when national security is really involved, laws that are contrary to international trade rules must be permissible.” But they said that “no country should be allowed to be the judge and jury of its own case.”

We don’t give away our national sovereignty, but we are able to be second-guessed by a dispute settlement panel. They can rule against us, and we can put pressure on us through tariffs so we in fact compromise our security.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 3½ minutes to a senior member of the Ways and Means Committee, an expert on international trade and worker rights, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, Oman is a small nation, but there are some large issues here. It is an important place, and I would like to support an FTA with Oman. I guess as I and many others did with Bahrain.

There is an important issue that relates to the path of globalization. Globalization has become increasingly controversial. Expanded trade, that is my favorite, has been hitting road bump after road bump. One major reason is because too many people within countries are not sharing in the benefits. Too many people are being left out. And that is why we have to care.

Among those who are being left out are workers. We make sure that workers participate, are part of the process? By making sure in free trade agreements that they have their basic international rights. These are the basic ILO core labor standards, not just the American specifically the right to associate and to bargain.

In Oman, workers do not have those rights. There are no worker organizations today in Oman. There are only labor management committees, representative committees. In a document that the Department of Labor gave to us a few weeks ago, it stated that management holds 70 to 75 percent of the leadership positions in those committees. There is an umbrella committee of these RCs, and management holds all of the positions on the executive committee.

So, look, we need to have a free trade agreement that meets the basic ILO standards in practice and in law. In Bahrain that, in practice and they made commitments to do so in law. In Oman, Mr. MORAN and others, there is no semblance, semblance, of workers having their rights. There are no worker organizations.

Oman said to us they could not do anything until November because the Sultan had to consult. Then in the last few weeks, actually the last few days, we have a kind of statement of decrees of the Sultan. I guess he did not have to consult with the legislature. But so many of these have to be implemented by ministerial decree.

Mr. MORAN said the Sultan is willing to agree to anything. Let us see laws in place, with meaning as to what they imply.

I want to close this. The Trade Representative has said this, our new Trade Representative, Ambassador Schwab: “Erosion of America’s traditional bipartisan support is the most pressing problem we face in trade today.”

How true. And it affects the WTO negotiations. Proceeding like this today is another nail in what is a near coffin of bipartisan trade foundations in this country. It is unnecessary.

We could take the time to see what these decrees mean, whether they are beginning to meet basic ILO standards, so that more and more people will participate in the benefits of globalization. If that doesn’t happen, globalization will continue to be in deep trouble. It will lose ground when it should not.

That is one of the major reasons to oppose this agreement that is before us, to oppose it. You are turning your back on any chance of bipartisanism.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Maryland and their colleagues for raising any number of labor issues in their discussion of the mark-up of the Omani trade agreement. In fact, a large part that resulted in the Sultan issuing a decree that incorporated virtually all of those labor laws that he could decree. And his decree is law.

For example, on July 8, 2006, this decree prohibited forced labor, including coercion by withholding travel documents of foreign employees. It endorsed collective bargaining and the use of strikes as a legitimate tool. It prohibited termination of employment on the basis of belonging to a labor organization or in any other kind of retribution for union activity. It terminated effective immediately the Omani government’s representation in union activities. It provided specific enforcement tools for violations of collective bargaining rights, and it provided rights of workers against forced or coerced labor and against child labor.

There are further International Labor Organization standards that the Omani Government intends to pass. It has to wait until its advisory panels meet and puts the implementing regulations into effect. But that will be done in the next month or so. That is a pretty short period of time. The end of October is when the Sultan committed to implementing all of his labor commitments into effect.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. So does that mean that those provisions are not in Omani law today?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Those provisions are law but a number require regulations.

Mr. LEVIN. But they are not in law, right, until there is action?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. The Sultan’s decree is law. Mr. LEVIN, the purpose of a trade agreement is to advance progress and communication and economic interdependence, it seems to me. And that is what we can, to promote social progress.

There is an enormous, profound agreement here on Oman’s part that it
Mr. ENGLISH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the opposition to this fairly straightforward trade agreement has generated not one, not two, but a whole school of red herrings that I think have to be knocked down quickly in successsion.

We have heard a little of it already this afternoon on the floor. What is fairly clear is that the U.S. FTA with Oman clearly has worked through and worked closely with the International Labor Organization, and also with civil society in the United States, Congress, and the U.S. executive branch.

The measures that have been developed have gone through a legally mandated legislative, consultative process, and it has resulted in clear guarantees on labor.

On the matter of port security, critics of the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement have manufactured an issue, and we have heard this reiterated this morning, by claiming that the agreement gives foreign service providers unprecedented access to U.S. ports and is a threat to U.S. security. This is absurd.

May I introduce for the RECORD a letter from Speaker HASTERT from the Secretary of the Treasury who says, in part... ‘The FTA negotiated with Oman neither subjects national security interests to a third-party tribunal’s assessment, as some have alleged, nor does it alter, amend or adjust the President’s Exon-Florio statutory powers to protect the Nation’s security in any way.’

Dear Mr. Speaker: I understand that concerns have recently arisen over the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement, FTA, and its possible link to the security of U.S. ports—particularly regarding the dispute settlement provisions.

First, this agreement is strongly supportive of our national security in general and the war on terror specifically. It marks part... ‘The FTA preserves the right of Congress to alter, amend, or adjust the President’s Exon-Florio statutory powers to protect the Nation’s security in any way.’

May I introduce for the RECORD a letter from Speaker HASTERT from the Secretary of the Treasury who says, in part... ‘The FTA negotiated with Oman neither subjects national security interests to a third-party tribunal’s assessment, as some have alleged, nor does it alter, amend or adjust the President’s Exon-Florio statutory powers to protect the Nation’s security in any way.’

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY.
SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.
WASHINGTON, DC, July 20, 2006.
Hon. J. Dennis HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WASHINGTON, DC.

Dear Mr. Speaker: I understand that concerns have recently arisen over the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement, FTA, and its possible link to the security of U.S. ports—particularly regarding the dispute settlement provision.

First, this agreement is strongly supportive of our national security in general and the war on terror specifically. It marks another step in our efforts to deepen and strengthen commercial ties with countries in the Middle East that are trying to modernize and give their people long-term economic opportunities and political rights.

The United States should be a catalyst for economic growth and stability in the region and an active supporter and partner of countries such as Oman to integrate into the global trading community. Oman has been a solid ally in our efforts in the Middle East and in the war on terror, and we need to demonstrate to all countries that our allies in this effort have a reliable friend in the United States as they seek a better economic future.

Second, Article 21.2 of the U.S.-Oman FTA provides for a national security exception that allows the United States to take measures that we determine are necessary for the protection of our essential security interests.

Foreign acquisitions of companies in the United States that operate port terminals are subject to the Defense Production Act, the Exon-Florio amendment, which authorizes the President to block and/or force divestment of any proposed or ongoing foreign investment in the United States that threatens to impair U.S. national security. The Exon-Florio Amendment fails in its national security exception as noted above, as a provision that the United States ‘considers necessary for . . . the protection of its own essential security interests . . .’ as national security interests is not managed by port terminal operators. A combination of municipal and State port authorities, the U.S. Customs and Border Protection, and the U.S. Coast Guard are responsible for our Nation’s port security.

As the Secretary of the Treasury, it is my responsibility to ensure the Exon-Florio amendment is executed. Protection of the national security is my highest responsibility. To be clear, the FTA negotiated with Oman neither subjects national security interests to a third-party tribunal’s assessment—as some have alleged—nor does it alter, amend, or adjust the President’s Exon-Florio statutory powers to protect the Nation’s security in any way.

The FTA with Oman provides greater opportunities and opens new markets for U.S products, investors, and workers. I urge you and your colleagues to pass the legislation to implement this FTA as soon as possible.

Sincerely,
HENRY M. PAULSON, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I have studied this issue extensively, and so has the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service. And what becomes fairly clear is that there is absolutely no merit to this charge. The Oman FTA provides no new rights to supply port-related services. In fact, as CRS notes, ‘The agreement actually places further restrictions on Oman port services, because it makes market access conditional upon equal access for U.S. suppliers.’

The FTA preserves the CFIUS process, and does not interfere with it or in any way weaken it. In addition, the FTA preserves the right of Congress to strengthen the CFIUS process for national security reasons without running afoul of our obligations under the agreement.

Critics have taken shots at the essential security exception and have manufactured a bizarre hypothetical to scare Members into voting against the facts and against our key ally.

The essential security exemption provides complete protection, applying to all investments whether they are subject to the CFIUS process or not. Importantly, no party can appeal the essential security exception. In other words, if the U.S. blocks investment for national security reasons, those reasons are defined solely by the U.S. itself, then that is the final word. This self-judging standard provides foolproof tools to the U.S. to block investment when it is counter to our national security.

I realize there is an argument that an entity can somehow set up a shell corporation in Oman and attach itself to the mutually beneficial provisions of the FTA. But even in this situation, the facts remains in any instance, the U.S. can invoke its essential security exception and block an investment in the U.S., be it by an Omani company or by a company from any other country with substantial business activity.
We have heard that the WTO might entertain a challenge to this provision. But the fact remains there is no example of the WTO challenging successfully any country’s use of this exception. This is purely a red herring. This is empty rhetoric. We need to approve this FTA.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds to just clarify the record. Let me assure my friend from Pennsylvania that the efforts by Dubai Port World was real to the port of Baltimore and other ports. This is not a hypothetical.

Let me also assure my colleagues, I heard the same discussion when we were changing incorporation laws to help exporters, only to find that we were rejected by international panels. We don’t have the unilateral right to make these determinations. We do give that to dispute panels.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. MICAUD), who has been one of the leaders on fair trade here in this body.

Mr. MICAUD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to oppose the Oman Free Trade Agreement. I say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, if we are really serious about national security, especially given the bipartisan outrage over the Dubai Port World situation earlier this year, we must reject the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

Simply put, foreign tribunals should not determine what is, in fact, a security matter for the United States of America. This provision should not be in this trade agreement. The international trade agreement would require the United States to allow any Omani company to provide landside aspects of U.S. port activities.

A new CRS report further confirms that a company operating in Oman could use the Oman Free Trade Agreement to obtain this new right guaranteed by the international trade agreement, Dubai-United States ports operations.

Who is to say that al Qaeda would not set up shop in Oman to gain access and control of our ports? We have already seen how they have worked this in the past. They set their men in United States soil years before the September 11 attack to take flight lessons.

They know how the system works. They are strategic in their planning. Do you think terrorists could not take advantage of this provision? It is bad enough that we are asked to support agreements that will shift more jobs overseas, that undermine our environmental standards, and that ask us to surrender the United States of America to the demands of human rights violations.

But it is simply unacceptable to ask this Congress to support legislation that could potentially undermine the security of our Nation. At the very least, USTR should exclude the ports from this deal and all future deals.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of one Member of Congress who would support weakening our national security, and this agreement does do that. We should stand united and demand that these free trade agreements start with us negotiating for the best interests of the United States.

We will continue to see more unless we do that today. I urge my colleagues to reject this agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement. As mentioned, I chair the Subcommittee on International Terrorism and Nonproliferation of the International Relations Committee. There are several reasons to support this agreement. My comments will be focused on viewing this agreement as a means to advance our struggle against terrorism. Our country is facing deep and complex challenges, deeper than most Americans probably realize.

We are in a deadly serious struggle against Islamist terrorism and against its state sponsors. And in this struggle we need every friend that we can get. And Oman has been a friend. The fact is that Oman has been helpful in advancing our strategic interests in the Persian Gulf region. We store military equipment there.

Oman has been helpful in combating terrorism. It has checked the flow of money to terrorist organizations, something we need to do more on and with in terms of other Gulf States. Other major countries use trade to advance their strategic interests. I am going to explain for a minute that China is doing this, and China is certainly doing it also all over Africa. I have been in 22 countries in Africa, and I have watched China do this from North Africa to sub-Saharan Africa.

Unfortunately, there we are competing in trade through AGOA, competing for influence. You know elsewhere around the globe, China is competing for access to oil and other strategic resources. They are gaining political friends.

The difference is that China undermines transparency and the rule of law in many countries. But the U.S.-Oman agreement strengthens transparency and the rule of law, which are longstanding American values.

This agreement is good economics. In that sense, it is like the African Growth and Opportunity Act. This agreement will increase access to the Oman market for American exporters of agricultural products, health care and engineering services, but it is good strategy too. The 9/11 Commission recommended that we pursue this type of policy.

It is true that the agreement’s economic significance is not that large. U.S. trade with Oman will remain modest. But its rejection would set back an important strategic relationship, one that has and this previous administrations have done a very good job advancing.

Let’s not go that route. I ask my colleagues to support this agreement.

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, we need to get one thing straight here before I start, and that is that those of us who oppose this trade agreement are not against trade, are not against exchange. How dare anybody stand on this floor and refer to the 9/11 Commission’s report. Chapter 12. I have read the 9/11 Commission’s report, by the way. I think that is a good start.

The 9/11 Commission report, chapter 12, talks about global strategy. If you read the entire chapter and you want to talk about strategy, trade must be part of when we are communicating with other countries. There is no question about it.

For those of us who believe that we need to support this trade deal, this unfair trade deal, and it is going to help workers in Oman, as well as in the United States, we were in the United States, I don’t know what you need to refer to. Because the State Department, our own State Department, says that foreign workers at times were placed in a situation amounting to forced labor in Oman, this deal isn’t for workers. This deal is for the few, like most of the trade agreements that we have given into.

We have surrendered our ability, as a branch of the government of this country, under Article 1, section 8, that the Congress be in charge of commerce. We have surrendered our ability to be trade negotiators to the executive branch of government.

I have high hopes for Oman and its people. We need more moderate and forward-thinking nations like Oman in the Middle East. We need to look at how much foreign aid we provide to Oman, and even Lebanon, who want to help the Lebanese stop Hezbollah, and then we give them $14 billion.

I am not against free trade. I am against these free trade agreements which do not benefit the American worker. I am not a protectionist, but I think we should protect the American worker. This agreement is good for the liking of a few wealthy CEOs here in America, it may be to the liking of the Sultan of Oman, but it does not represent the interests of workers in this country. It is time for a new direction in free trades. We need free trade which is modeled around human beings and not around big business interests, because human beings are the ones who drive our economy. They are the ones who will build our partnership with other nations.

We need free trade agreements that enforce the principle of workers’ rights. That is right. That is what this debate is all about: will we defend the rights of workers of Oman, or will we take a step back in the right of all workers to organize freely. This country doesn’t recognize the right of workers to organize. We need to defeat this trade agreement.

The proponents of the Oman Free Trade Agreement would have you believe that my colleagues and I who oppose this agreement do so because we are against free trade or maybe because we are against the nation of Oman. Both claims could not be further from the truth.

The fact is that I have high hopes for Oman and its people. We need more moderate and forward-thinking nations like Oman in the Middle East.

In fact we gave Oman only $16.5 million in foreign appropriations, which I think would be a more effective vehicle to build a strong partnership rather than through this flawed free trade agreement.

An example of this is the sad fact that we gave Lebanon only $43.2 million in foreign appropriations, of which only a scant $7.7 million went to the military and counterterrorism efforts. Perhaps if we had invested more into Lebanon we could have avoided the deadly situation we are currently witnessing.

Similarly, I am not against free trade, what I am against are these free trade agreements which benefit a few at the detriment of workers. This agreement may be to the liking of a few wealthy CEO’s here in America and it may be to the liking of the Sultan of Oman, but it does not represent the interests of the workers here in the United States or in Oman.

My colleagues and I are tired of seeing the same flawed free trade model, time and time again. It is time for a new direction in free trade agreements.

We need free trade agreements that are modeled around human beings and not around big business interests. Because human beings are the ones who drive our economy, they are the ones who will build our partnership with other nations.

We need free trade agreements that enforce the principle of workers rights and the right of all workers to organize freely. Instead of just paying lip service to the problem as this agreement may be to the liking of the Sultan of Oman, that they are forced to work? Are you denying that State Department report?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Yes, I am, because the fact a government takes your passport, any number of governments do that. The German Government doesn’t know if they do it now. That doesn’t mean that is forced labor. They hold your passport, but that doesn’t mean that you can’t get it when you want to leave the country.

But the fact is that now the decree has been issued, and that tactic cannot be used.

Mr. PASCRELL. It is used.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. It is no longer legal to use such a tactic. It is not the kind of thing that thegentleman from New York (Mr. MEeks).

The fact is that I have high hopes for Oman and its people. We need more moderate and forward-thinking nations like Oman in the Middle East.

In fact we gave Oman only $16.5 million in foreign appropriations, which I think would be a more effective vehicle to build a strong partnership rather than through this flawed free trade agreement.

We need free trade agreements that enforce the principle of workers rights and the right of all workers to organize freely. Instead of just paying lip service to the problem as this agreement does.

We need free trade agreements that respect our sovereignty and our right to have full control over our critical security infrastructure. Instead this agreement takes us back to the problem we had with the Dubai Ports deal and that is simply unacceptable.

We need free trade agreements that respect environmental concerns, the rights of women and the rights of minorities. I could go on longer, but I think you get my point.

My colleagues and I would be standing here championing this agreement if it met the standards it should, but sadly it does not.

It is time that we have real free trade agreements; it is time that we stand up for the workers here in America and workers throughout the world. I implore you to stand up for them today!

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in response to my good friend from New Jersey, and also in response to my good friend from Michigan (Mr. LEVY), who asks about, and makes accusations with regard to, the situation in Oman, I should remind him that there were 33 strikes in 2004, more than 6,000 workers went on strike. Strikes continue to this day with no repressive tactics, no government reprisals.

And the Omani Government has representatives of the International Labor Organization on the ground in Oman working with them to develop more and stronger standards.

Mr. PASCRELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I will shortly. I am about out of time. If you can refute that, I will yield 15 seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. PASCRELL. Thank you. Do you deny that the State Department has put us on alert as to how workers are treated, foreign workers particularly, in Oman, that they are forced to work? Are you denying that State Department report?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Yes, I am, because the fact a government takes your passport, any number of governments do that. The German Government doesn’t know if they do it now. That doesn’t mean that is forced labor. They hold your passport, but that doesn’t mean that you can’t get it when you want to leave the country.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. It is no longer legal to use such a tactic. It is not the kind of thing that the government used to do it. I don’t know if governments do that. The German Government doesn’t know if they do it now.

But the truth is that we are wanting to achieve, and I thank Mr. PASCRELL’s help in achieving that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. MEeks).

Mr. MEeks of New York. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, initially it was not my intent to come discuss this bill on the floor, but last night we were into a serious debate, a serious debate about workers rights and freedom and democracy. We have talked about Hezbollah and Hamas and how they were not for peace and how they were for destruction.

But at that time took the floor, because I agreed with that significance of Israel defending itself, and here, on the very next day, as I was listening to the debate, we have a country that has come a mighty long way in a short period of time. We have a country that says they want peace, and they have exhibited the kind of progress that they want to live in peace. They have been a strong ally to us. I have a letter from AIPAC indicating that they don’t have any objection to this.

What kind of message are we sending to one of the most important areas, and volatile areas, in this world? Here we have an Arab country, a moderate Arab country, a country, as we say oftentimes, we are not against them, we are not against people who happen to be Muslim, et cetera, but they are doing everything we have asked of them.

The Sultan came in with a decree because he wanted to make sure we had a bipartisan debate. He didn’t want anything to be divided Democrat or Republican. The Sultan said, I am going to live up to my word, giving us all of the indications that they are going to do the right thing.

Now I heard in this debate some say, well, there is no agreement that it happened where there is a promise before the vote on the bill. I just thought to myself, I said, that is not true. Because I know in this bill, as in other bills, IP protections, there is a lot that is taking place, to be changed after this bill has been passed.

We did it in Bahrain. I have a letter right here that was signed by Rob Portman at the time saying, basically, that we want to make sure that Bahrain, and this was a commitment letter and a clarification letter, saying that after the bill was passed that they would do certain things in their law. That is no different, no different, than what we are doing in this bill.

So I say we have got to do what is right. If it was right, and we sent the right message to Oman. This is a small country. It is no going to have a heavy impact on the United States of America. It is not going to make a difference to John Q. Public and the United States of America with reference to jobs, but it can make a difference with reference to the message that we are sending to the Arab world and to peace across this globe. It sends a huge message, and I will support this free trade agreement.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to a distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. RYAN).

I would like to, before I yield the floor to him, point out that my friend from Maryland brought up the United Arab Emirates debacle that he and I have been opposed very strongly to. We are opposed to a free trade agreement with the United Arab Emirates, so a free trade agreement in no way facilitated that action. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. I appreciate the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, what this is about is finding peace and security in the world. The future of peace and security in the world largely rests upon the future of peace and security in the Middle East. The question is what we are as Americans going to do to help Middle Eastern countries, moderate Middle Eastern countries, be more open, be more fair, be more free, be more democratic, be more peaceful. This agreement does that.

Now, for one reason or another. Members here, I believe, have decided to oppose this agreement and then look for reasons to justify that opposition. They have raised two big red herrings, labor and ports. We asked the Congressional Research Service to look at this port issue, to look at this red herring issue.
I want to read from the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service that did two studies this month on this issue. Upon close inspection of the language in this agreement, it appears that this claim is misleading because it appears that Omani companies are already bound to perform the service and port services. Phrased another way, the United States has reserved the right to maintain our existing legal restrictions with respect to those aspects of maritime transportation in which we already have limitations, as well as adopt new measures in these categories that may be more restrictive.

In some ways, it imposes new opposition and new restrictions that don't currently exist with respect to management of ports.

In conclusion, report number two: while it is theoretically possible for Oman to bring a legal challenge to the actions of the United States before a third-party tribunal, the United States would appear to be on solid legal ground for asserting not only that the panel does not have the legal authority to determine the validity of such a matter, but also that the inconsistent measure is permitted and justifiable, given the broad self-judging language of the national security exemption.

This means we decide unilaterally, we decide if any of these transactions are not in our national security interest, it doesn't happen. There is nothing the WTO can do about it.

Now, what about labor? This is another agreement that we have had, the labor standard invoked. This is the strongest labor agreement of any trade agreement we have brought to the floor in this Congress and in previous Congresses.

Now, in an effort to be bipartisan, in an effort to work with the other side of the aisle, we have had an exchange of letters and agreements between the Omani, Democrats and our government USTR.

In November 2005, the ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee asked Oman to clarify six areas of law and asked for nine concessions in labor law. In January, Oman responded in detail to all of those concerns. In February 2006, the Democrats forwarded another set of demands and questions, raising new issues. In March, in response to those concerns, Oman made eight commitments to the United States and agreed to enact all of these reforms.

It goes on and on: new demands being requested, new demands being met, to the point where the Omanis have, by decree, already implemented many of these higher labor standards. Any of those that they didn't already decree just a couple of weeks ago, they have promised to put them into law by October 30.

What did we do with Bahrain? With Bahrain they promised to introduce legislation to raise their labor standards.

That was the Bahrain standard. With Oman, no, they did not promise to implement legislation. They promised to implement law by a date certain this year.

So we have increased labor standards. Oman is raising labor standards for their workers. Because of this agreement, Omanis are making their country more free and more transparent for their people. Because of this agreement, we are saying thank you to an ally. Let us continue to move toward peace and prosperity.

Why do I care so much about this? Because I do not want my kids to face the war on terror that we are facing right now. And how do we do that? We do that by making sure that these countries, from which many terrorists become, have opportunities for their young people.

I do not want a young person, the next generation, growing up in tyrannical dictatorships susceptible to the whims of authoritarian to the madrassas. I want young people in these countries growing up, reaching their dreams, reaching their potential, having freedom, having the ability to determine where they want to go with their lives, being creative, being able to channel their energy in a positive direction so our children do not have to face this war or on terror.

We must pass this trade agreement because it is vital to our national security interests.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds just to point out to my friend that under this agreement, we now give third-party tribunals the opportunity to review issues on national security, and that was not there before this agreement. I offered an amendment to eliminate that. It should have been made in order.

Then regards labor standards in Bahrain, there is the legal operating ILO standards. We do not have that in Oman.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to my good friend from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), a senior member of the Ways and Means Committee, one of our real leaders on trade issues.

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank Mr. CARDIN and I appreciate this time. I wanted to come and speak on this because I voted against this agreement on the Ways and Means Committee when it was reported out a couple, 3 weeks ago. I did so out of sheer frustration and exasperation with the lack of democratic process in the committee as it relates to these agreements.

Those of us who philosophically want to support agreement, engagement, with the rest of the world have had a very difficult time in the committee. As the chairman of the committee, the way it has been run recently in some of these, the democratic process is really an abomination of that word.

But beyond that, regardless of one's personal feelings, regardless of how one views the way these bills have come to the floor from that committee, one has to determine for one's self what is in the best interests of the United States of America.

I have determined because history, if history teaches anything, it teaches one that engagement is better than nonengagement, and economic partners eventually become political and military partners.

So the geopolitical aspects of these trade agreements, while they are not that big in scheme of things with respect to trade itself, are very huge, and some of these other speakers have alluded to that, in terms of our role in the world and fostering all the things and values we hold dear.

I cannot see how turning down this agreement today on the floor is going to further our ability to influence things for the better in Oman or, for that matter, in that part of the world or, for that matter, in our own country.

And so for those reasons, even though I have made my feelings known about the way some of these are handled procedurally, I am going to support this agreement today. I think it is in the best interest of this country to do so, for a whole host of reasons, many of which you will hear.

I unfortunately talk so slow I do not have time to go through all of the reasons why I think that it is better on balance than it is worse on balance, and why; therefore, as one weighs what one should do for one's country in this regard, one has to make the decision yes or no. I have made that decision, and I intend to support it, and I would urge other Members to take a look at it.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is left on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) has 2½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) has 36 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) has 21 minutes remaining.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAW, Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE).

(Mr. KOLBE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding the time, and I am pleased to have a day to rise in strong support of this agreement, the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

With the Doha Round of multilateral talks teetering on the brink of collapse, we need more than ever to push for a bilateral trade agenda that makes some real gains for American workers and American consumers who, after all, are one and the same. That is

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

H5519

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), a member of the Ways and Means Committee who has been articulate and a leader on fair trade and international issues.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by responding to Mr. SHAW’s comments. None of the modest steps he cited respond to the fact that we have an $800 billion trade deficit and an Administration with a trade policy that will do nothing but make it worse.

This agreement with a small but strategically important country like Oman ought to have been approved unanimously, and it could have been. But there is a very big problem, and that problem is not in Oman on the other side of the world; it is on Pennsylvania, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, to be more precise.

The problem is that just as this Administration has shown consistent disfavor for the rights and needs of workers in America, just as it has shown consistent disdain for environmental protection—ready to manipulate science whenever it needs to for political purposes to justify degradation of our air, our water, and our other environmental resources—today it shows continued disdain for the environment and for workers in our international trade agreements.

What we need is a modern, bipartisan trade policy that recognizes that you cannot measure how good your trade policy is based solely on how many dollars in goods transverse international borders. You have to consider the impact of that trade on the workers that produce the goods and on the environment that surrounds them.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), a member of the Ways and Means Committee, who has been extremely active on fair trade and international issues.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I hate to say it but I think it has become very obvious that our system for devising trade agreements is so very important to this country’s functioning around the world, has not only broken, but it has broken completely.

Today, we have a trade regime which has led to the largest trade deficits this country has ever experienced. The latest report is that the trade deficit for the month of May was almost $64 billion. We purchased $64 billion more in goods than we were able to sell to others across the world.

We are on pace this year to have a trade deficit that is larger than $800 billion. We have never faced that before, but we continue to put forward trade agreements like these that leave us in a fair trade competition that is neither fair nor free.

Today, Mr. Speaker, you find that for every six ships that China sends laden with goods from China into this country, only one of those six ships returns with American goods in it for Chinese purchase. And we continue to bring forward trade deals like these that say simply this when it comes to protecting the rights of workers, whether in this country or in the country to which we reach an agreement—Enforce your own laws. And even though we know in most cases many of the countries, including Oman, do not have laws that protect their workers, which means that our workers will suffer.

We rejected that opportunity for a Dubai company to come in and run our ports. We dealt with this issue with the Dubai Ports World issue. Yet in this agreement we have something that would allow that to happen.

I know many of my friends on the Republican side say that will never happen, we have got the national security interests, we have got a protection exemption. Then why is it in the agreement in the first place? What you do is you set us up to go before a trade dispute resolution panel that is not ours. It is not our courts that will decide. It will be some other body.

We have now today a system that has led to these large trade deficits, and they continue to come forward. It is time for a change. We need a new direction when it comes to our trade policy. It is broken in this Congress the way it has been broken.

What we need is a modern, bipartisan trade agreement that says simply this when it comes to environmentally just labor practices, you have got to produce the goods and on the environment that surrounds them.

During the consideration of this bill in the Ways and Means Committee, we offered very modest amendments to try to address these concerns. On upholding international labor standards and on an amendment that I offered to prevent trade in endangered species, the Committee and the Administration would have none of it because if they showed basic dignity and respect for workers and the environment with...
Oman, a small country, they might have to do it everywhere, maybe even here in America. You can tell the level of the Administration commitment by the level of enforcement remedies that they provide for the environment and for workers. Then enforcement mechanisms are critically important national security assets in the American ports.

So today they must, as has been done so often on so many issues, raise the specter of 9/11 and the war on terrorism. How many times has that threat been misused in this building and down the street on Pennsylvania Avenue to debase the most basic and fundamental values that make this a unique country?

It is pulled out again today. It is an issue here, as the Gentleman from Maryland has indicated, because they plan to transfer the issue of port security to this body to an unaccountable, international tribunal that will be empowered to decide whether or not we can restrict foreign acquisition of American ports.

This Administration stood by and encouraged the pursuit of our port security once before, and under this agreement they can transfer all responsibility to an unaccountable international tribunal.

Because this agreement fails to adequately respect the needs of American workers and the needs of the environment around the world, it ought to be rejected.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California, a strong advocate of fair trade, Representative SOLIS.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I also want to register my strong opposition to the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

As I see it, it is a flawed trade policy, largely to blame for the loss of so many jobs because of the various trade deals we have had. Three million manufacturing jobs have been lost over the last few years. In the last 4 years, our deficit has increased by $725 billion. Trade deficit, $725 billion.

Not only does this particular trade agreement turn its back on American workers, it forces the race to the bottom by allowing Oman to continue to ignore labor unions, discrimination against women in the workplace, and excludes guest workers from even minimal worker protections.

If shipping jobs overseas and encouraging discrimination isn’t bad enough, this agreement would also allow foreign firms to acquire and operate important national security assets in the U.S. Our only recourse would be at an international court.

Mr. Speaker, supporters of this agreement argue that they are trying to spread democracy and stability around the world. But democracy and stability can’t be achieved by trade agreements such as this which ignore the rights and freedoms that are inherent in the fabric of a free society.

I urge a strong “no” vote on the Oman Free Trade Agreement, and let’s make a priority to help our economy in our countries here before we start selling short our jobs and many of our manufacturing corporations to foreign countries.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY), a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the leadership of Chairman SHAW as we try to open new markets around the world for American products and services.

I strongly support this agreement with Oman. As you know, America is so open to other countries selling their products and goods into America, but around the world, we find that their markets are not so open. And so we try to open those markets through trade agreements to allow our farmers, our small businesses, our manufacturers, our banks, everyone, to sell our products around the world.

And these trade agreements are succeeding in doing that.

In each one that we have had, our sales in those countries have nearly doubled. So we are creating jobs here at home and producing. This free trade agreement does the same thing. It is not huge, but for those who are selling to them, it is very important.

Not only does this help America, but this is an important cog in our Middle East free trade agreement, which is key, because I think that a lot of unrest is caused when people don’t have hope, when they don’t have a chance to better themselves, when they don’t have a living standard of living. The more we are able to create job opportunities and hope in the Middle East, I think the sooner we do that the safer we will have that region. This won’t do it by itself, but everything helps move that peace process along.

And I support it because Oman, while it may not be where we want it to be on labor yet, they have made tremendous progress in labor issues and in the rule of law and in a number of areas all the same. It is important that we ought to be supporting as a country.

Let me conclude with this. This agreement stands on itself, but there is more than that. I have a soft spot for countries that have come to the aid of our American soldiers. My baby brother served in Iraq as an Army medic and is now a sergeant major and has just returned from his tour in Iraq. Recently I just attended two funerals of local soldiers who died defending us. When we have countries like Oman who allow our aircraft to fly there and land there, when we have a country like this that houses our personnel, basically makes them safer while they are away from their families trying to defend our freedom, I think we ought to reward these countries.

To me on national security when I see this intellectually dishonest argument about our port security, what I want to do is to reward those countries who want to punish the countries that are helping our soldiers, punishing countries who are coming to help our men and women who are trying to fight for our freedom. We ought to be rewarding our friends and punishing those countries. I support this agreement.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LINDA T. SÁNCHEZ) who has been one of our leaders on fair trade.

Ms. SÁNCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, as a cochair of the Congressional Labor and Working Families Caucus, I rise today in strong opposition to the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

The Oman FTA contains no effective mechanisms to enforce labor or human rights laws. Instead, this agreement relies on the empty promises that Oman will enforce its own labor laws.

I accept this deal, we are saying to foreign countries: It is okay to force labor among three-fourths of your workers. We are telling them it is okay to deny workers the right to organize for safer working conditions and better wages.

If we accept this deal, we turn a blind eye to poor working conditions and organized human trafficking to fill sweat shops. I would remind my colleagues that the terms and conditions of trade agreements determine what is and is not acceptable.

Let me be clear. If we agree to a deal that does not live up to basic labor and human rights standards, then we are deliberately establishing a lower standard for worker rights in this country and around the world. We should be setting a fair trade standard that allows the benefits of commerce to raise and not lower standards for everyone.

Vote “no” on Oman FTA.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARkey) who has been one of the leading spokespersons about international human rights and worker rights.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much and for all of his work on these issues.

Make no mistake about it, this vote is not just a vote as to whether or not you support free trade. This is also an up-or-down vote on whether or not you support our national security and our homeland security.

Just 5 months ago, the Bush administration tried to ram through an approval of the U.S. port operations to Dubai Ports World, a company owned and operated by the Government of the United Arab Emirates.
Mr. MORAEN of Virginia. And I am reserving because I have so little time left, as the gentleman knows, so I am trying to be any time.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 6 minutes to our distinguished whip, my colleague from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), who has been a spokesperson not only on trade but on security internationally.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank Mr. SHAW and Mr. CARDIN for proceeding on this debate, as well as Mr. MORAEN. I think I have voted with all three of them on various different occasions.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a strong advocate for the United States. It is incumbent, however, upon us to foster global trade, to engage our part in the global economy.

Increasing global interdependence is a reality in the 21st century, and it presents our Nation with an opportunity to promote democratic reform, the rule of law, and respect for basic human rights.

It is incumbent, however, upon us to foster global trade, to engage our part in the system based on rules and law, and to work to raise the living standards of working men and women; and not to recoil from the rest of the world.

Philosophically, I count myself a proponent, a strong proponent of free trade, and have voted for many of the trade agreements that have come before the House.

This agreement, I think, is relatively insignificant as it relates to trade and the volume of trade and the impact on our domestic economy. It may have a much more substantial impact, obviously, on the Oman economy. But in terms of our own economy, it will have, I think, relatively little impact.

However, the Oman Free Trade Agreement I believe is flawed, and it undermines fundamental worker rights. Thus, I intend to oppose it.

What this debate, from my perspective, is about is the criteria that we will tell the world is necessary for us to enter into agreements with them. In many respects, as I understand it, those trading partners with whom we might enter into agreements are not in opposition to that which we are seeking. In fact, it is my understanding that there are Members of this Congress and members of the administration who are more concerned with the issues that I will discuss than are the partners who enter into agreements with us.

Oman today does not meet the five basic International Labor Organization standards, including those who participate in collective bargaining, bans on child labor, slave labor, and discrimination in employment. They say they are going to meet those, but they have not yet met them.

As Americans, I believe, feel very strongly about all of those provisions in our own domestic law and in international law.

And it seems to me appropriate that we pursue agreements in that context. There are no labor unions in Oman today. The only labor organizations are, essentially, management labor committees. And what of workers in Oman are expatriates, there is little, if any, participation by foreign workers in administering such committees. In other words, most of the workers are from outside of Oman. But almost all of the workers are not from Oman.

For 8 months Oman has failed to take a number of steps to ensure that its practices immediately comply with ILO standards and to bind those commitments under the agreement, as was done by Bahrain last year.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the Congressional Research Service confirmed just yesterday that the trade agreement would make it more difficult to protect U.S. ports and block a takeover by foreign government-owned companies such as Dubai Ports World. That raised a tremendous amount of concern just recently when the CFUS process did not work as we thought it ought to.

It is regrettable that Republicans on the Rules Committee rejected amendments offered by my good friend, Congressman CARDIN, that would have closed this loophole, and it would have made it more difficult to protect U.S. ports and block a takeover by foreign government-owned companies such as Dubai Ports World. That raised a tremendous amount of concern just recently when the CFUS process did not work as we thought it ought to.

That raised a tremendous amount of concern just recently when the CFUS process did not work as we thought it ought to.
Mr. Speaker, this agreement will also improve the national security of the U.S. In the recent 9/11 Commission, they recommended that the U.S. pursue policies to promote more open and freer societies to defeat the root causes of terrorism. That means trade. A free trade agreement with Oman will do just that, which is critical to our current situation in the Middle East.

The nation of Oman has been a friend of the U.S. for over 170 years. They have been a valuable ally during the Cold War, as well as aiding us in the overthrow of Saddam Hussein’s regime in Iraq. They continue to be an important ally in the global war on terror, having taken a very strong stand against Islamic extremism that begets terrorism.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, for over 200 years America has benefited from free trade and competition. I urge my colleagues to once again reject raw protectionism and partisanship and instead stand for freedom and security and support the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important, with what little time I have left, to recapitulate what was said in this debate. In the first place, there is no disagreement that Oman is located in a highly strategic area, right at the Strait of Hormuz. More than 20 percent of all the world’s oil supply goes through there. It is right across the strait from Iran. Very critical position.

It has also been completely agreed that Oman has been a principal ally to the United States. Everything we have asked them to do since 1833, 173 years, Oman has stood up there in a very difficult part of the world and said to the world “We are America’s ally.”

When we asked Oman for a military agreement so we could stage troops and provide logistical support in the Persian Gulf War, and now in the Iraq war, they said, “Yes, you can do that and we will protect them.” And they have all been protected. Our troops have never had a problem in using Oman. Oman has come under pressure, but they have protected American troops in every possible way. No disagreement.

We all agree that almost two-thirds of Oman’s population is under the age of 18, so we know that Oman is entering a period of unrest that is without doubt an economic issue.

We also know that while there isn’t a whole lot of trade, what Oman is buying from us generates jobs in the United States. We get oil from Oman in return.

So what is at dispute is whether this is a national security threat and whether this is an issue with regard to labor rights. Well, in the first place, with regard to national security, there is no question, according to the Congressional Research Service, that if there is a national security issue that the United States raises, that that trumps everything else. And these panels that my friends and colleagues have been referring to, these are panels of American and Omani negotiators, and if an American negotiator says, we think this is a security interest, it is dead. The language that is in contention is reciprocal language we wanted better. We think there are provisions in the agreement that would have been better. They would have been provisions that would have been better for both countries, who would like possibly to buy port facilities there. That was our doing. But it can be preempted by national security concerns.

So, on national security, the Congressional Research Service tells us that there is not a security threat. CFUS will determine if foreign investment in U.S. parts is a security threat and can block the purchase if it comes to that. But there is not going to be any security threat. And of course they were the first Arab nation to send an ambassador to the United States, incidentally.

But every Ways and Means Democrats have recommended the Sultan put in the decree. This is law now. They can continue to collective bargaining. They’re going to protect workers’ rights. There will be no repercussions. They’re going to eliminate any forced labor. If you can do it, in fact, they have invited the International Labor Organization personnel, ILO professionals to Oman, and they are working with them on the ground as we speak. And by October 31, they are going to put all these protections into law, anything that hasn’t been fully implemented by the decree by the Sultan.

I don’t know what more they can do. They have done everything we have asked.

This is a good trade agreement and, it is in the interest of the United States to pass it. I hope this body will.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, before I yield the balance of my time to our distinguished leader, let me just make it clear that the Sultan has not, by decree, answered the issues that were raised in letters that were sent by our staff. In fact, they dealt with primarily one issue, and six or seven are yet to be dealt with; and that is why they are setting an October date for changing their law.
And let me also make it clear that unlike Bahrain, the Omanis have not, on the ground, changed their labor practices to meet ILO standards. So they fall far short of Bahrain.

And lastly, on the security issue, I have heard our colleagues put a lot of confidence in our ability to unilaterally use the essential security provisions to prevent action on our ports. And I just wonder what attitude we would have if one of our insurance companies, for example, wanted to do business with a company that is going to have a lot of confidence in our ability to unilaterally use the essential security provisions to prevent action on our ports. And we say we don’t have the right to challenge that?

So what are we putting there that we would put out there? Why are we making ourselves vulnerable? Why didn’t we take it out of the agreement? Why do we want to subject America to that risk?

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to yield the balance of our time to our distinguished leader who has put forward an agenda that is our primary responsibility. And at the same time, these same people who brought you these free trade agreements have not enforced core labor principles and are unfair to American workers, and advocate incentives for companies to take jobs offshore. That is why on the first day of Congress, Mr. RANGEL will come to the floor, God willing, if the Democrats take power, he will come to the floor on the first day and repeal those incentives to companies to take jobs offshore. One small step for American workers.

Democrats have a long history of supporting free and fair trade. Enforceable labor rights that follow basic core principles are a crucial part of ensuring that American companies and workers will not be disadvantaged by unfair competition from countries that do not adhere to the core standards.

Core ILO, International Labor Organization, standards ensure that our trading partners abide by the most fundamental standards of common decency and fairly are core labor rights a matter of decency and fairness, but they are also in our national economic interest. Basic enforceable, with the emphasis on enforceable, labor protections are critical to building a strong middle class in America, raising the disposable incomes so that they can buy American products.

Our trade deficit is likely to exceed last year’s recordbreaking deficit of $717 billion. Every day we have $2 billion more in goods coming into the country than going out. This is unbelievable. Over $2 billion more a day in goods and services coming in than going out. I do not know what is fair and free about that. I do know America’s middle class is paying the price.

The Republican trade agenda has failed to break new ground by opening large markets for U.S. goods. Instead, it would give these little tiny agreements that establish a precedent and erode core labor principles, and they have not opened the large markets that are crucial to creating new jobs for American workers.

Despite a record trade deficit, the Bush administration has focused on negotiating trade agreements with countries where the opportunities for U.S. companies are limited.

The Oman Free Trade Agreement will have negligible impact on our balance of trade, and that is why it can wait. It is just not a big deal. It can wait until these core principles are in the treaty and not just by decree. Not, but not, if we have to.

This year U.S. trade with Oman will be about $1 billion, just 0.04 percent of the total U.S. trade.

Democrats recognize the importance of engaging Oman, but we must do much more in terms of fairness. Democrats are committed to addressing the challenges of increasingly competitive global markets. Our success depends on our ability to innovate and create new products and create new markets, new markets, overseas for those goods and services.

That is why Democrats have put forth our innovation agenda, our commitment to competitiveness to keep America number one. We will secure America’s continued leadership and innovation and unleash the next generation of discovery, invention, and growth. And in that way, we will be preeminent in the world’s markets; but not, not, not, if we are tied by the precedent established by these little agreements.

Again, in addition to our innovation agenda and fairness to American workers, businesses and farmers, on that very first day, in addition to raising the minimum wage, Mr. RANGEL will call for the repeal of incentives to go overseas.

Just think of it. If you are a middle-income person in middle America, our technological base, our manufacturing base, our industrial base in those parts of the country are eroding. Jobs and services are going overseas with the help of tax incentives of this Republican administration and this Republican Congress, and then we engage in free trade agreements that do not even pay the respect due to American workers to have core labor principles, a minimal standard, the ILO standard. A minimal standard. This is not anything big.

And by the way, we are not asking for anything different for labor, for America’s workers. This is not special treatment. What Democrats are asking for is the same thing that the Bush administration is giving to other industries: the right to enforce the provisions. Businesses have that right in the deal, but workers do not. It is just not fair. It is just not fair.

So we want to take our country in a new direction, passing free trade agreements that do expand our markets, spur economic growth, raise the living standard of workers here at home and abroad, and have enforceable provisions that are fair to American workers.

Unfortunately, this trade agreement fails on all of these counts, and that is why I ask my colleagues to vote ‘no.”

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I cannot stress enough the importance of the legislation that is now before this body. Yes, this agreement is a good economic agreement for those doing business in Oman. In fact, it is one of the best free trade agreements that this body has considered, granting the United States some of its broadest market access ever, and establishing a strong standard as we push to open the large, emerging Middle East market through a Middle East Free Trade Area.

I am particularly pleased that my home State of Florida will receive duty-free treatment on much of its citrus products.

However, while the economics of United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement are compelling, I believe that there are more important issues for the Members to consider as they cast their votes in this critical trade agreement. Voting yes not only vote that will tell the people of Oman and, perhaps most importantly, the people throughout the violent Middle East as the conflict today threatens to spark a new war.

Mr. MORAN spoke quite eloquently of the dangerous neighborhood that Oman is in, right across the straits from Iran. I was just handed a CNN report that just came out within the last hour in which Assistant Secretary of State Chris Hill said that the Iranians were belief was at peace and at war at North Korea’s July 4 missile test. I wonder why.

As Chairman THOMAS indicated, Oman has long been a strong ally of the United States. Yet beyond that, Oman has also been a leader in its relations with Israel. Oman has no law that establishes or enforces primary, secondary, or tertiary boycotts of Israel. In the context of congressional consideration of this free trade agreement, Oman has reiterated its commitment to give any aspects of the boycott on Israel in letters of September 28, 2005 and June 15, 2006. Last month, Oman issued an official government document to its relevant agencies, again reiterating the policy and commitment. If any Member still has any doubt, they should know that in the recognition of the importance of this issue by both the United States Trade Representative and the Government of Oman, language was included within the Statement of Administrative Procedure that the United States Trade Representative will monitor and report to us on this issue. On June 28, 2006, the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, known as AIPAC to the Members of Congress, wrote to me in support of the language, and I am pleased with its inclusion and Oman’s position on the boycott.

After these repeated assurances and Oman’s leadership, Congressional Record, Member representations that Oman is not fully committed on this issue ignore the facts and are fundamentally disrespectful of one of the greatest allies for peace and against terror in the world. That is why I have maintained these claims and even sent Dear Colleague letters on this issue, after receiving the letter from AIPAC, receiving direct assurances from Oman officials, and seeing the text of the official Oman documents stopping any boycott, is disgraceful, and I believe that Oman deserves an apology.

While Oman’s action in this area alone sends a powerful message to this in the Middle East. As you may have a history of going beyond, to actual engagement. After the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty in 1979, Oman was one of the few Arab countries that did not break off relations with Israel.

In its letter to me and to the ranking member of the Trade Subcommittee, AIPAC stated, “The breakdown of these kinds of economic barriers can, hopefully, help lead to the development of important political relationships between Israel and the Arab World.” I could not agree more. As we watch hostilities in the Middle East and they continue to worsen, it is through economic relationships such as these that we can have the chance to win the hearts and minds of the future leaders of the Middle East who the workers in the region begin to see the benefits of participating in the worldwide economy, they are more likely to pick up tools to better their lives, rather than tools of destruction.

Will passing this agreement cause an immediate end to hostilities in Israeli, Lebanon, Gaza, Iraq, or Afghanistan? No. But none other than the 9/11 Commission has specifically highlighted the importance of Middle East free trade agreements in fighting terror. The free trade agreement will continue to undermine the arguments that terrorists use in recruiting. With increased economic opportunities will come an increased incentive to remain a peaceful, active participant in society.

Oman has been a leader in this region in its friendship with the United States, its friendship with Israel, its commitment to economic and labor reforms, and its desire to work economically with the United States. It is now up to the Members of the House of Representatives whether to reward the leadership or reject it based on politics and arguments that have no basis in fact.

Let me run through a few of the arguments that have been made here today. We have talked about American workers. I know of no legal authority, and I am sure if there was one, that would have been brought out in this debate.
Yesterday, we had a very fine debate, and this debate was about our friendship with Israel. It was about the dangers that Israel is facing. It was about our support of Israel. Now we have another vote today, and that vote is about our best friends that Israel has in the region. And for us to vote them down would not only be an insult to them, but I believe would be an insult to Israel.

I would urge all Members of this body to think for yourself, is this a good agreement, or do you follow your party line. Vote for yourself, what you think. You are sent here to represent your constituency. Represent them and cast a vote today that is going to mean something. We aren’t puppets around here. Each one of us represents a particular congressional district and we should vote that district. Vote for the people that sent us here.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong opposition to the Oman FTA. This is deeply concerning because we supported the way we voted against CAFTA – now we have the Oman FTA.

What we have here is identical language to the problematic and inadequate language that was contained in CAFTA and NAFTA before that. The administration has slipped language into the Oman FTA that will threaten U.S. port security. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I represent the Port of Boston. To me, this FTA really hits home and is particularly disturbing.

The simple fact is that under this agreement, if an Omani company sought to acquire landside services at U.S. ports and the U.S. government took action to stop or limit that acquisition, the Omani company could sue the U.S. government for violating its FTA rights. The challenge would then be decided by a U.N. or World Bank tribunal.

The nonpartisan Congressional Research Service released a report a couple days ago that confirms that the Oman FTA would make it harder to protect U.S. ports. The CRS report makes clear that the Oman FTA would create a new right under an international trade agreement, which would require the United States to allow any Omani company to provide “landside aspects of port activities.”

The CRS report further confirms that Dubai Ports World, DPW, could use the U.S.-Oman FTA to obtain this new right guaranteed by an international trade agreement to buy U.S. port operations. All DPW would have to do is execute a subsidiary in Oman. DPW already has commercial operations in at least 10 countries. It would not be hard for DPW to meet the Omani FTA requirements, which business established in Oman is eligible to take advantage of the benefits of the agreement. Only businesses with “no substantial business activities”—a very low threshold—are excluded.

Mr. Speaker, not only does this FTA pose homeland security concerns, but instead of enforceable labor provisions with teeth, this free trade agreement suggests only that Oman adopt and enforce its own labor laws. It offers no assurance that existing labor problems will be resolved, and allows labor laws to be weakened or eliminated in the future, with no possibility of recourse.

In Oman, their 2003 labor laws remain in serious violation of the International Labor Organization’s most important and fundamental rights: freedom of association and the right to organize and bargain collectively. There are no independent unions in that country. In fact, Oman not only fails on labor rights, but on all human rights! The Bush Administration State Department’s 2006 “Trafficking in Human Persons” report downgraded Oman to a “Tier 2 Watch List” country, just one step above the countries with the worst human trafficking records. In 2005, Oman was only on “Tier 2” of the State Department’s human trafficking list, meaning that Oman’s trafficking practices and regulations worsened from 2005 to 2006.

We talk a lot about the war in Iraq, and the President of the United States has described it in many ways as an effort to export democracy. Well, I have got news for you; you do not export democracy through the Defense Department.

This is where you export democracy, in our trade agreements, through our Commerce Department. Democracy is all about opportunity, and we should, in our trade agreements, give these foreign workers an opportunity to stay in their own country, to buy goods from us that would create a good dynamic by creating jobs in this country. Democracy is about opportunity, and if, you know, if you are serious about exporting democracy, it starts right here. It starts with our free trade agreements.

Join me in voting “no” on the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act. This agreement contains the same flawed “enforce your own labor laws” provision that we have seen in recent trade agreements. These labor standards simply do not work when we are dealing with countries that lack strong labor laws and practices.

Mr. Speaker, before we move forward on this issue, I feel a moral obligation to pose the following questions to my colleagues and to the American people:

When negotiating trade agreements, why does this Administration always seem to lose its tenacity and its resolve when it comes to protecting the labor rights of some of the world’s most vulnerable workers?

What message does America send to the international community, when we will fight to protect pharmaceuticals patents and other intellectual property within our trade agreements, but we will not do the same for human beings?

Mr. Speaker, before the Members of the People’s House cast their votes on this agreement today, I ask that they take a long, hard look at our priorities and our values when it comes to trade policy. I am convinced that this Administration is not committed to negotiating trade agreements that will advance the interests of U.S. business and agriculture, while protecting the rights of workers.

I urge my colleagues to vote “no” on this flawed trade agreement.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in opposition to H.R. 5684, the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act. Once again, the Administration has not met its promise to work with both sides of the aisle to craft a fair trade agreement. While I favor expanding trade and barrier reducing restrictive tariffs and barriers, the U.S.-Oman agreement does not create a fair playing field for United States companies and workers to compete.

Oman is an important ally in the Middle East, and I respect their friendship. However, their labor laws are insufficient to create a level playing field for American companies. At this point, Oman apparently only meets three of the International Labor Organization’s five core labor standards. They are: lack of core labor standards alone should be reason enough to oppose the agreement.

Unfortunately, this agreement could also cede our ability to select companies to operate our own ports. As the President learned during the Dubai Ports World controversy just a few months ago, the American people want control over our critical transportation infrastructure, but language in this free trade agreement specifically permits foreign companies to operate our ports as long as the company operates a port in Oman.

In 2005, Rhode Island companies exported approximately $158,000 to Oman, or about .01 percent of the State’s worldwide exports. We must go back to the drawing board to ensure that the United States companies, jobs, and American security are not left behind for such a small price. I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing H.R. 5684 and encouraging the Administration to renegotiate a more equitable agreement.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, after the tragic events of September 2001, the United States Congress created the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States, commonly called the 9–11 Commission. This independent, bipartisan body was charged with preparing a complete account of the circumstances surrounding the attacks and with recommending policy changes designed to prevent future attacks. I have a great deal of respect for the individuals who served on this commission and for their final work product.

America is in the midst of fighting a long, complex war against terrorism that must be fought with unconventional tools. The 9–11 Commission recognizes the unique nature of our conflict and has recommended that the United States engage Middle Eastern nations positively in order to foster development and reforms in that troubled part of the world. Economic openness requires bilateral compromise and gives America an opportunity to positively influence the region. And, importantly, economic reforms and political liberties tend to be linked.

In the Middle East, the Congress has approved trade pacts with Israel, Jordan, Morocco, and Bahrain. I have supported them because I feel they are critical to enhancing our economic ties to the region. Today, we are considering an agreement with Oman, and after careful consideration, I have decided to support this legislation as well.

Oman is a small, oil-exporting nation located on the Arabian peninsula at the mouth of the Persian Gulf. It is strategically important to the United States and has played a meaningful role in our efforts to prevent terrorism. As Oman’s oil reserves diminish, its government has been working to liberalize and diversify its trade beyond oil and gas.

America’s economic partnership with Oman carries with it great promise. Boosting our economic ties with Oman could help us enhance our national security standing in a strategically critical area and will open doors to agricultural trade. The agreement will lower tariffs on U.S. agricultural commodities and products, thereby putting our Nation in a better position to increase exports and compete with other nations for market share. After full implementation, U.S. agricultural exports could reach $225 million or more.

No deal is ever perfect. Clearly, some improvements could be made in the bill, especially with regard to labor protection and human rights. But, as I studied the Oman Free Trade Agreement and heard from national security, agriculture, labor, and business leaders, I became convinced that this trade agreement is critical to U.S. national security and to Missouri's rural economy.

In the days leading up to today's debate on the Oman Free Trade Agreement, there has been much talk about port security. Despite the rhetoric, a non-partisan legal analysis from the Congressional Research Service has shown that Congress retains its ability to determine the national security interests of our country and to prevent port operations if need be. The CRS analysis is set forth below, as is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on this issue:

MEMORANDUM

Subject: Legal Issues Related to the Proposed Oman Free Trade Agreement and Port Security.

From: Todd B. Tatelman, Legislative Attorney, American Law Division.

This memorandum is in response to requests for a legal analysis of three arguments that have been advanced in opposition to the proposed Oman Free Trade Agreement (FTA). Each of the arguments relate to the proposed Oman FTA.

Annex II of the proposed Oman FTA allows the party to the FTA to make reservations with respect to labor protection and sub-sectors, or activities for which that Party may maintain existing, or adopt new or more restrictive, measures that are not in conformity with U.S. laws and that are imposed by the Agreement, such as National Treatment (Articles 10.3 or 11.2), Most-Favored-Nation Treatment (Article 11.4), Market Access (Article 11.4). With respect to the Transportation Sector, the U.S. Schedule to Annex II lists 12 types of measures that the United States has reserved the right to impose either maintain or adopt new more restrictive measures. These 12 types of measures generally reflect the current restrictions placed on foreign investment and ownership of maritime assets by U.S. domestic law. Phrased another way, the United States has reserved the right to maintain our existing legal restrictions with respect to the aspects of maritime transportation in which we already have limitations, as well as adopt new measures in these categories that may be more restrictive.

Additionally, the U.S. Schedule indicates that we do not include in our reservations either "value-added" or the "landside aspects of port activities." The noninclusion of these measures in our schedule merely indicates that the U.S. government is not reserving the right to impose a future restrictive measure with respect to "landside aspects of port activities." It does not appear possible to interpret this language as excluding the new business opportunity to Oman or Omani based companies. Moreover, with respect to "landside aspects of port activities" the language in Annex II specifically states that the promised treatment "is conditional upon obtaining comparable market access in these sectors from Oman." As a result of this language, it appears that the proposed Oman FTA does not grant any new opportunities for business investment to Oman that do not already exist, nor does it allow Oman to establish "landside aspects of port activities" unless it is determined that comparable market access is provided to U.S. companies in Oman. Indeed, it may be possible to argue that the reservation in Annex II in that potentially limits the opening of U.S. markets with respect to "landside aspects of port activities" because it imposes a comparable access requirement that does not currently exist under domestic law.

Another argument raised in opposition to the proposed Oman FTA is that it provides type of "pre-clearance" to businesses in Oman with respect to "landside aspects of port activities." It is unclear at this time what "pre-clearance" means in this context. For the purposes of the memorandum, however, we will assume that this language refers to the national security review conducted by Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS). CFIUS, as you may know, was the executive branch entity responsible for reviewing national security and other implications of the Dubai Ports World transaction. U.S. law permits the President, at his discretion, to investigate the national security implications of a particular transaction, and to take such actions as he determines are necessary to prevent either an Omani-owned company (state controlled) or any other foreign-owned company (regardless of whether the company is state owned or controlled) from contracting with port owners to perform "landside aspects of port activities" in the United States. In other words, if an Omani company (either state or privately owned) wants to engage in contract negotiations with port owners to provide for the types of services envisioned in the United States, there is no U.S. law that would expressly prevent them from receiving said contracts.

Based on our review of the proposed Oman FTA, there appears to be no provision that would amend, alter, or adjust this statutory process or its requirements in any way. As a result of the proposed Oman FTA, should a privately owned company in Oman seek to establish a store front in the U.S. or a "shell corporation," a CFIUS review could still be performed at the discretion of CFIUS, pursuant to the statute. Similarly, should a company owned or controlled by the Omani government wish to engage in any "landside aspects of port activities" at a U.S. port, they would still, pursuant to U.S. law, be required to proceed through the CFIUS process and receive approval from the committee prior to beginning operations. The proposed Oman FTA thus does not create a new statute that would exempt Oman or Omani government controlled companies from these domestic legal requirements.

Finally, it has been argued that the proposed Oman FTA would allow so-called "shell corporations" to be established in Oman for the purpose of benefiting from the FTA's provisions. For example, it was alleged that Dubai Ports World (DPW), a company controlled by the government of Dubai, were to establish a store front in the United States with the sole purpose of taking advantage of the FTA's investment, market access, and national treatment provisions. Presumably, part of the incentive for doing this would be for DPW or other Omani-controlled entities to avoid themselves of the investor-state dispute mechanism should their attempts to do business in the United States be denied.

The memorandum, however, assumes that the proposed Oman FTA assumes that the United States would either have to grant DPW access to the U.S. market or face considerable costs in defending our denial of market access. Should the government deny market access, the ensuing litigation could result in an adverse decision costing taxpayers a substantial amount of money in compensatory payments to Dubai. A careful review of the text of the proposed Oman FTA, however, indicates that this scenario is unlikely to occur. As you may know, Article 10.11(2) addresses this concern by stating that a "Party may deny the benefits of CFIUS to an investor of another Party that is an enterprise of such other Party and to investments of that investor if the enterprise has substantial business activities in the territory of the other Party and persons of a non-Party, or of the denying Party, own or control the enterprise." Thus, the proposed FTA, by its own provisions, clearly permits the United States to deny benefits under the Investment Chapter to any company or individual unless there are "substantial business activities" established in Oman. The president of CFIUS would likely not be considered the establishment of "substantial business activities" and, as a result, the United States would be entitled to deny benefits.

This legal position is consistent with administration and bipartisan legal analysis from the Congressional Research Service.
established. ‘This language appears to establish a very high threshold for “substantial business activities” by requiring both central administration and principal place of business. The phrase before benefit can be claimed. Given this interpretive language, it does not appear that DPW, or any other foreign corporation, would be able to satisfy such a threshold in a “substantial manner.” In addition, for Oman to obtain any of the benefits listed in Annex II with respect to “landside aspects of port activities” they will, at a minimum, have to provide “reciprocal market access” or else the United States has an additional legal basis to deny market access to Oman companies.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR Mr. Speaker: I understand that concerns have recently arisen over the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement, FTA, and its possible link to the security of U.S. ports—particularly regarding the dispute settlement.

First, this agreement is strongly supportive of our national security in general and the war on terror specifically. It marks another step in our effort to deepen and strengthen commercial ties with countries in the Middle East that are trying to modernize and give their people long-term economic opportunities and political rights. The United States should be a catalyst for economic growth and stability in the region and an active supporter and partner of countries, that are seeking to integrate into the global trading community. Oman has been a solid ally in our efforts in the Middle East and in the war on terror, and we need to do everything we can to all countries that our alliance in this effort have a reliable friend in the United States as they seek a better economic future.

Second, Article 21.2 of the U.S.-Oman FTA provides for a national security exemption that allows the United States to take measures that we determine are necessary for the protection of our national security interests. Foreign acquisitions of companies in the United States that operate port terminals are subject to section 21.2 of the Defense Production Act, the Exon-Florio amendment, which authorizes the President to block and/or force divestiture of any proposed or ongoing foreign investment in the United States that threatens to impair U.S. national security. The Exon-Florio Amendment falls within the national security exemption, noted above, as a provision that the United States “considers necessary for . . . the protection of its own essential security interests.”

Port security in our country is not managed by any one entity. A combination of municipal and State port authorities, the U.S. Customs and Border Protection, and the U.S. Coast Guard are responsible for our Nation’s port security.

As the Secretary of the Treasury, it is my responsibility to ensure the Exon-Florio amendment is executed. Protection of the national security is my highest responsibility. To be clear, the FTA negotiated with Oman neither subjects national security interests to a third-party tribunal’s assessment—alleged—or does it alter, amend, or adjust the President’s Exon-Florio statutory powers to protect the nation’s security in any way.

The FTA with Oman provides greater opportunities and opens new markets for U.S. products, investors, and workers. I urge you and your colleagues to pass the legislation to implement this FTA as soon as possible.

Sincerely,
HENRY M. PAULSON, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 5684, the United States-Oman Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act. While the agreement would provide some benefits both for the people of the U.S. and Oman, I think the agreement contains more flaws than benefits, and I believe it must be rejected.

The agreement, which is similar to free trade agreements (FTAs) with Middle Eastern countries Morocco and Bahrain, would provide the U.S. and Oman duty-free access for almost all consumer and industrial goods, with special provisions for agriculture, textiles and apparel. Both countries would phase out all tariffs on the remaining eligible goods within 10 years.

I have supported a number of trade agreements to expand access to foreign markets for exports as part of a long-term strategy to strengthen the American economy. While expanding market access for American industry, financial markets and farmers is critical, I believe it needs to be done responsibly, accounting for the treatment and protection of workers and the environment.

The agreement makes efforts to do so but in my opinion needs to go further.

Regarding the agreement’s labor provisions, I am concerned that Oman is not in compliance with International Labor Organization (ILO) core labor standards. There are no labor unions in Oman today. The royal decree issued by Sultan Qaboos—which prohibits forced labor and endorses the use of collective bargaining and strikes—is a step in the right direction, but more needs to be done. It’s important that the provisions in the recent decree be implemented before Congress considers this agreement. Regardless of the outcome of today’s vote, I urge the Administration and the United States Trade Representative (USTR) to monitor and take necessary steps to ensure the implementation of this decree.

I think the Administration and the USTR would be well served by including labor provisions, such as those contained in the U.S.-Jordan Free Trade Agreement, in the body of future trade agreements and making them subject to sanctions via dispute resolution procedures. The dispute resolution procedures continue to fall short in FTAs negotiated by the Bush Administration, and the Oman FTA is no exception. It is important that the United States takes steps to ensure our trading partners provide workers with basic labor rights.

I am also concerned that the U.S.-Oman FTA would create a new right requiring the U.S. to allow any Oman company to buy U.S. port operations. Given the uproar earlier this year over the news that Dubai Ports World had been permitted to take over several of our nation’s port facilities, it seemed only reasonable today to pass the Cardin amendment, which would close the loophole in the current trade agreement that allows a foreign company with operations in Oman to operate U.S. Port facilities. But the Republican leadership would not allow the amendment to be considered.

Expanding the liberalization of trade in goods and services between the U.S. and Oman can help us build a stronger relation-ship with a strategic country in the Middle East. I firmly believe the Bush Administration squandered this opportunity by not paying sufficient attention to national security concerns and by not ensuring basic labor standards in the agreement, which is why I must oppose H.R. 5684 today.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement (FTA). We need a new trade policy that recognizes today’s realities of the global economy by promoting worker rights, environmental protection and access to health care. This Oman deal fails to meet that test. Expanding trade opportunities can lead to job growth and economic vitality in Maine and around the country. Trade policy should reflect all our important societal values, not just commercial concerns, in order to create a stronger and more competitive America, encourage broader prosperity at home and abroad, and create a better, healthier future for ourselves and our children.

Inevitably, trade agreements create winners and losers within the U.S. economy. No trade deal is considered fair unless it contains other policies designed to help those who will be shortchanged. Unfortunately, recent U.S. economic policies will make matters worse. The President’s budget, adopted by the majority in Congress, cuts programs vital to helping America’s displaced by trade—displaced by trade agreements: job training, vocational education, adult education, community development, and small business aid. It is irresponsible and immoral to inflict a double blow on our most economically vulnerable citizens.

If we do not reverse the disturbing disappearance of manufacturing and information technology jobs, the American economy will suffer even greater job losses and long-term damage.

The U.S.-Oman FTA falls short in the area of worker rights. Its only enforceable labor obligation is a requirement that Oman enforce its own labor laws, even though Oman’s laws fail to comply with basic international standards in 10 specific areas. We should mandate Oman abide by core labor rules, to be fair to our own workers and keep trade on a level playing field.

The Oman pact continues a dangerous trend of using trade policy to extend anti-competitive protections for the highly profitable brand name drug industry. Although generic drugs lower prices and therefore improve public health, the intellectual property provisions inserted by the Bush Administration would delay entry of generic prescription drugs by imposing restrictive rules on the developing countries covered by the agreements.

Trade policy provisions could come back to hurt Americans, as Congress’ ability to legislate on health care could be restricted by international trade obligations. In essence, the Administration is giving powerful drug makers legal standing to challenge domestic U.S. health care laws through trade dispute mechanisms.

We see the double standard. The Administration champions international trade standards when they protect pharmaceutical industry profits, but reject them when they protect workers’ rights.

I voted against the fast track/Trade Promotion Authority bill, in part because I believed that it ceded too much authority to the Executive Branch. The experience with this Oman deal validates my concern. In June, the Senate Finance Committee approved an amendment to the pact stipulating that goods made in Oman with forced labor may not benefit from the trade agreement. When the White House later submitted the agreement to Congress, it left the forced labor provision out. The Administration has ignored the will of Congress. The blank check permitted by this fast track authority is a clear case where bad process leads to bad policy.

I urge my colleagues to reject the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement, and insist on a new, balanced trade policy guided by consensus, not ideology.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Oman FTA, though not without reservation. Increased economic, social, and political ties with Oman are noble goals and ones for which we should strive. However, the facts behind the crafting of the Oman FTA suggest that this is a hurried trade agreement.

I can support an agreement that serves to support the interests of all parties at stake. I have voted for FTAs that vouch for free trade agreements by this standard, and by this standard, I have decided to vote against the Oman FTA. While I do not doubt that some sectors of the U.S. economy will benefit from passage of this bill, I am fearful of the repercussions that will face many of our manufacturing industries.

I recognize that Oman is a key ally in the War on Terrorism and a leader in improving the relationship between the Arab world and Israel, but trade agreements should not be judged by beneficial strategic alliances alone. The United States has other allies in the Middle East on the War on Terrorism and should make agreements with those allies in which jobs held by the American people are not sacrificed.

In addition, the Oman FTA may include a dangerous loophole that jeopardizes our Nation’s port security. In its present form, this agreement allows a foreign company with operations in Oman to operate U.S. port facilities. The Cardin amendment would provide that the Oman Free Trade Agreement cannot take effect until the U.S. withdraws its commitment to allow companies with operations in Oman to operate “landsides aspects of U.S. port activities.

Furthermore, the OFTA would expand the failed model of the Central American Free Trade Agreement. This model has been devastating to the U.S. industrial base, accelerating job loss and lowering living standards in the United States while exacerbating poverty and social disparities in the developing nations which were traded.

Current Omani law does not come close to meeting core International Labor Organization standards. Despite some improvements made to Oman’s legal framework, Oman’s labor laws today do not provide for the exercise of the most important and fundamental workers’ rights: freedom of association and the right to organize and bargain collectively.

In order to ensure progress, we must establish a system of improved standards in education, labor, and environment, among others. In this regard, the OFTA fails short of established standards. The OFTA has not sufficient nor enforceable labor provisions. This omission of labor standards will result in the continuation of severe labor conditions for both adults and children. This agreement could permit businesses to profit by exploiting the impoverished. I cannot accept an agreement that allows businesses to increase their profit margins at the expense of the underprivileged.

It seems clear to me that under the current refrain of “free trade to fight poverty,” sufficient resources are not being used to help the poor. Businesses are often more interested in the bottom line than the bottom of society. Foreign governments are often far too eager or invite these industries into their nation. This is not the best manner to help fight poverty in the Third World. In order to fight poverty, we must insist on the utilization of resources to protect the poor, not to exploit them. We must insist on better labor and environmental standards in order to ensure that the poor also benefit from free trade agreements.

Over 400 American organizations have announced strong opposition to the Oman FTA. These organizations represent a large number of Americans who oppose the OFTA. Of the 400 groups opposed the OFTA, there are at least six prominent organizations from the city that I have the privilege of representing. These organizations include the: Harris County Central Labor Council; Houston Globalization Working Group; Houston Peace and Justice Center; International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 716; and The Sheet Metal Workers Local 54. More than three million manufacturing jobs have been lost in the US since 1998. Increasingly, offshore outsourcing is impacting even highly educated and highly skilled workers. Protecting American jobs generally and especially those jobs belonging to my constituents in the 18th district of Texas is of the utmost priority to me. Thus, I can not stand by and let Americans continue to lose their jobs.

Therefore, we must insist that our trade agreements contain more than an expansion of business interests; they must also contain provisions that expand social and political interests. We must ensure that trade agreements benefit the wealthy and the poor, men and women, young and old. This agreement fails to meet these standards, and I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Ms. Lee. Mr. Speaker, today we are considering yet another fundamentally flawed free trade agreement—the U.S.-Oman FTA. How many times will it take to learn that the current model just isn’t cutting it? Given the failures of NAFTA and CAFTA, you would think that the U.S.-Oman FTA would be an improvement. Sadly, the same misguided formula is being applied again.

Just look at who you simply cannot camouflage a race to the bottom. So please don’t be fooled by the word games that proponents of this deal will play. FTAs should promote democracy and offer new opportunities for all parties involved. They shouldn’t be used to enrich the rich and bankrupting the poor.

We should be protecting labor standards, human rights, the environment, access to medicines, and national sovereignty—not sac- rificing them under the guise of promoting business and economic growth. When will we learn that these are not contradictory goals?

But again, these critical issues are shoved to the margins in empty promises and side-letters. There is no excuse for why this trade deal is not fair and balanced. I urge all of my colleagues to vote against another ludicrous trade deal.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives has an opportunity to support the U.S. intellectual property industries by approving the U.S.-Oman Free Trade Agreement.

The agreement is supported by both the International Intellectual Property Association, which is comprised of seven copyright-based trade associations representing over 1,900 different companies, and the Information Technology Industry Council, representing 35 leading high-tech industries, because it will raise the level of intellectual property protection in Oman in a number of ways.

The agreement would ensure the WIPO Internet Treaties, which provide standards for digital copyrighted material; it protects copyrighted works for extended terms, including 95 years for sound recordings and performances; and it ensures that copyright owners will have the exclusive right to make their works available online.

The agreement will also strengthen the enforcement of intellectual property rights in Oman by including agreed upon criminal standards for copyright infringement with stronger remedies and penalties and by criminalizing end user piracy. These provisions will provide a strong deterrence against piracy and counterfeiting.

Finally, Oman has committed to zero tariffs on all software, movies, music, consumer products, books and magazines exported into the country and to zero tariffs on technology products used to access the Internet.

I urge my colleagues to support this important sector of the U.S. economy and vote in favor of the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the issue of trade has remained contentious over the years.

I believe in the ideals of free trade but it must also be fair trade. We have to take a close look at each agreement and weigh them on their individual merits.

If the President wants to receive overwhelming support on these agreements he has the power to do it. President Bush has the power to make trade an issue that is strongly supported by all of my colleagues, but he resists any task that would lead to what Democrats have been demanding on labor and the environment.

When I look at an agreement, various factors go into making my decision process, are we opening new markets for our goods and services, will labor standards be protected, what is our relationship with our potential free trade partner.

As a member of the Middle East subcommittee on the International Relations Committee, I view Oman not as just a trade bill but also as a foreign policy tool.

Oman has been a strong friend and ally of the United States and is providing critical assistance in the global war against terrorism and this agreement will continue to strengthen our relationship.

The 9/11 Commission has recommended that the United States build stronger relationship with moderate Muslim nations such as Oman to build an economic and political partnership.

Besides the economic benefits the United States will enjoy from the implementation of this free trade agreement it also has spurred our friends in Oman to move beyond their current labor laws. While I would like to see a more progressive stance on labor, I believe these new reforms are genuine.

Oman has shown they are a stable nation in a sea of conflicts in the Middle East and my hope is that this agreement will help move them further down the path of moderation.

I think it is worth noting that during Israel's recent conflict with Hezbollah and Hamas, Oman has been noticeably restrained in criticizing the Jewish State for protecting its citizens.

Oman is a valued member of the Middle East community and this agreement will make them even more so.

At the core of this trade initiative is the belief that through economic opportunity and partnership, with the United States and Israel, that the goal of peace in the region can be furthered.

I understand that perfection can be an unattainable goal but sometimes you must weigh all the pros and cons and on Oman the pros tipped the scale. I also want to address the point of the Dubai port sale raised by the opponents and the ability of an Omani company or another company to base themselves in Oman to try to purchase American port facilities or other infrastructure.

Without a doubt, the theoreticals as to what could or could not happen, any purchase of an American asset by an Omani company would be subject to review by the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States, CFIUS. As the lead sponsor along with Rep. representatives ROY BLUNT, CAROLYN MALONEY, and DEBORAH PRYCE of a bipartisan CFIUS reform, I understand the purchase of American assets by foreign companies or governments well.

This agreement with Oman does not change one bit the CFIUS process and doesn't make it any less secure.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my views regarding the Oman Free Trade Agreement.

I have supported certain trade agreements in the past because I believe they can be an important tool to help the United States.

I also believe that the economic interdependence that flows from these trade agreements can help create a more cooperative and peaceful world bysolidifying ties between nations. That is why I supported agreements with Australia, Chile, Morocco, Bahrain and Singapore.

This outlook informs my approach to trade agreements and as I carefully considered the provisions of the Oman Free Trade Agreement, its potential for opening Oman's market to U.S. agriculture, manufacturing and the services industry. But a trade agreement is about more than trade; it is also about the fair treatment of workers and other considerations.

With respect to worker's rights, the Oman FTA is seriously flawed. Like CAFTA, the Oman FTA only requires the Omani Government to enforce its own labor laws. And when violations occur, the Omani Government is only required to pay a financial penalty to itself. This provision is a source of concern to me in light of reports by the international labor community that Oman's labor laws fall far short of meeting the International Labor Organization's core labor standards and do not provide Omani workers with the fundamental protections needed to prevent workplace exploitation.

Oman has a massive guest worker population, comprising over 75 percent of Oman's total work force. According to reports, in Oman, workers are reported to be exercising their international labor rights and have reportedly been jailed for complaining about the working conditions and violation of labor rights.

My concerns about the Oman FTA were re-inforced by news reports coming out of Jordan about violations of Jordanian workers rights. Before these incidents, the Jordan Free Trade Agreement was considered the gold standard for labor provisions in trade agreements. Jordan's labor laws are strong and it has years of experience administering them. That is why, when I read the May 3, 2006, New York Times article describing the abusive conditions in Jordan's apparel industry, I also grew concerned about the lack of protections for workers in Oman.

Reports are emerging from Jordan of an environment where workers put in 20-hour days with little or no pay and where physical abuse is rampant. If workers rights are not enforced in Jordan, there is little hope that workers in Oman—where independent unions are outlawed—will have their rights protected.

Trade agreements must at least hold open the reasonable prospect that workers will be treated fairly. This agreement fails that test.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5684, the Oman Free Trade Agreement, because I think it is the right thing to do. I am going to vote for this agreement because I believe that free trade can be a way to promote our national security through international cooperation and economic growth.

The country of Oman is an important ally of the United States in a part of the world where we need more friends. It is also a country that is growing, one that will provide economic opportunities and jobs to our Nation through increased exports. Upon passage of this agreement, Oman will provide immediate duty-free access to 87 percent of U.S. agricultural exports and 100 percent duty-free trade in industrial and consumer products.

Mr. Speaker, Oman is a friend to the United States and a leader in the Middle East region. Oman has demonstrated its passing tough new labor laws, normalizing relations with Israel, and supporting the U.S. efforts in Iraq.

Passage of this agreement will demonstrate that we can do more to enhance our Nation's national security through cooperation and economic development.

Although this legislation is not perfect, approving the Oman Free Trade Agreement is in America's national interest, and I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this bill.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM
(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of inquiring of the majority leader the schedule for the week to come; and at this time, I yield to my friend, the majority leader, Mr. BOEHNER of Ohio.

Mr. BOEHNER. I appreciate my colleague from Maryland for yielding.

Mr. BOEHNER. The House will convene next Monday at 12:30 for morning hour and 2 p.m. for legislative business. We will consider a number of measures under suspension of the rules. A final list of those bills will be sent to Members' offices by tomorrow afternoon.

For the balance of the week, the House will consider on Tuesday H.R. 1956, the business activity tax bill from the Judiciary Committee.

On Wednesday morning at 11 there will be a joint meeting of Congress to receive His Excellency Mr. Maliki, Prime Minister of the Republic of Iraq. Also on Wednesday we will consider H.R. 5682, the United States and India Nuclear Cooperation Promotion Act from the International Relations Committee.

On Thursday, we will consider H.R. 5766, the Government Efficiency Act, and possibly H.R. 3282, the Abolishment of Obsolete Agencies and Federal Sunset Act from the Committee on Government Reform.

At this point, Friday is still up in the air. Our goal is to finish on Thursday. It is a commitment but it is my goal, and I am hopeful that we will be able to meet it. It really will depend on the number of conference reports that may or may not be completed and whether we can fit those in during the week, if they come inside, like the gentleman understands.

I am hopeful that the Voc Ed conference report can be brought up. As the gentleman knows, we have been working on the pension conference. There is no agreement as yet, but I think we are moving toward one, and I am hopeful. But we will see.

I also have an announcement about September votes, which is a change in the calendar. There will be no votes on Tuesday, September 5. I anticipate that we will consider H.R. 503, to amend the Horse Protection Act to prohibit the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption. We expect that to be considered that first week we are back, and I just wanted Members to be aware of it.

Mr. HOYER. Reclaiming my time, I was very pleased to hear that we are going to be dealing with the Horse Protection Act. I am sure that all of us are concerned about that. I say that seriously.

But can you tell me when we might be doing the Worker Protection Act, particularly those that are working at the lower end of the scale, the minimum wage act?

Mr. BOEHNER. If the gentleman would yield.

Mr. HOYER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. We are continuing to have conversations about that issue, but no decisions as of yet. If there is, I will make sure that everyone is notified.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman, and I meant that seriously on the Horse Protection Act. I am sure it is an important piece of legislation, but we are very concerned and continue to be concerned. Many, many Members on your side of the aisle continue to be concerned, about the 9 years that have transpired since we adjusted the minimum wage, no cost of living attached to it, and we are very hopeful that the majority side of the aisle will see fit to bring that forward.

We hope that you will bring it forward in a fashion that will not dilute the attention and focus on the workers, and by that I say attaching it to a tax bill or some other piece of legislation. We would hope that that would be a clean vote on the floor, and we think the majority of this House are for it. We think it is a very, very important piece of legislation, and we ask you to very seriously consider bringing it up next week if possible, but as early in September as possible.

September 29 has been put in the press as the target date at least. You mentioned one of the pieces of legislation that might be on in September. Can you tell me how definitive or definite a date that September 29 may be for the possible adjournment prior to the election?

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. It is very definite.

Mr. HOYER. That is going to be the date?

Mr. BOEHNER. We are gone September 29. We will be back on November 13.

Mr. HOYER. November 13. There are all sorts of things I could say about post-election.

Mr. BOEHNER. I am sure you could. Mr. HOYER. We will be happy when we get back here on the 13th.

Mr. BOEHNER. And we will be happy, too.

Mr. HOYER. To proceed with whatever legislation we decide ought to be considered, realizing we won't be sworn in until January as the majority party. Mr. BOEHNER. What we call the lame duck session.

Mr. HOYER. Yes, it will undoubtedly be a lame duck session, I tell the majority leader.

Mr. BOEHNER. The only question is who will be lame.

Mr. HOYER. We could go on a long time on this. We probably ought to move along with the schedule because you and I have a different view as to who is going to be lame and who is going to be the duck and other issues of great importance to the American people.

On the issues, the Labor-Health bill, obviously the minimum wage is one of the issues on that bill, but there are a lot of other issues on that bill as well. Do you have any expectation the Labor-Health bill might move either next week, I know it is not on the calendar, or in September?

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. I appreciate my colleague for yielding. There are a number of issues related to that bill. I think it is doubtful that it will be up next week. I am hopeful that we will be able to consider it in September.

Mr. HOYER. Moving on to the pension conference report, there have been some reports that there may have been some progress in the pension conference, but I want to tell the leader again, very seriously, I read in one of the journals that the conference, or a group, had been meeting. There had been five Republicans and two Democrats.

I want to tell my friend, in all seriousness, and I have asked you to engage on this, not one Democrat from the House of Representatives has been engaged in the these meetings. The two Democrats that are mentioned in that story are both Democratic United States Senators. They may be very fine United States Senators. This is a two-House, bicameral Congress.

The gentleman made a representation to me, and I take him at his word. I believe he means it, that a conference is better or a discussion on where we are going on this pension bill, a critically important bill that has been pending now for almost or longer, I suppose, the gentleman knows the exact date of that, and has not moved, and during that period of time, the Democrats from the House of Representatives have not been included in the pension conference. I have been, I think, pretty polite on my request to you, Mr. Leader, but this is not the process that we ought to be following.

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. I appreciate the gentleman's concerns, and hopefully we will have all of the Members together very soon. The gentleman from Maryland understands that I am not the chairman of the conference. I don't decide when we meet, who meets or what room we meet in. I have expressed the gentleman's concerns, and hopefully we will have all of the Members together very soon.

Mr. HOYER. I hope that is the case, Mr. Leader, and again, I take you at your word. While you are not the chairman of the conference, you are the majority leader of the majority party in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BOEHNER. If the gentleman would yield, the other body is chairing this conference, and the gentleman has been on a number of conferences over the years and understands this process, that the body who chairs the conference makes those decisions.

Mr. HOYER. Reclaiming my time, one option, of course, is the Republican Members from the House of Representative that are participating in these meetings indicate to our Senate colleagues that they are not prepared to proceed unless there are Members of the minority party present in those meetings to discuss issues of critical importance to literally millions of people in this country.

Mr. BOEHNER. If the gentleman would yield, I will be happy to make that suggestion to Mr. McKeon and Mr. Thomas.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 2830, PENSION PROTECTION ACT OF 2005

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct:

The Speaker pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 2830, PENSION PROTECTION ACT OF 2005

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The Speaker pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Speaker pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 7 of rule XXII, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KLINE) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as we just heard in the colloquy between the majority leader and the minority whip, there is expectation that a conference committee may conclude on the pension reform bill, and that is why I rise today because that bill may, in fact, be coming to the floor of the Representatives and to the Senate within the next week.
The conference language draft by the Republican conference is a pension Trojan horse and allows companies to legally renege on their promises to workers who played by the rules, who were told that they could accrue benefits to retire, especially those who spent decades in the company.

Here is what AARP CEO William Novelli says about this backroom Republican deal for older workers. AARP is deeply troubled that members of the pension conference committee are considering adopting language from the House bill that would severely undercut pension protections against age discrimination currently provided older workers under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. We cannot support legislation that would undermine the age discrimination laws and permit the reduction of pension benefits for older workers, thus discouraging older workers from continuing to participate in the workforce, and older workers in general, care a great deal about these issues, and we will be informing them of the outcome of this action.

The Senate passed its pension bill with these protections 97–2. And the House vote on those measures overwhelmingly in a motion to instruct earlier.

It also not only cuts cash balance, but it cuts the protections to the pilots. Pilots who are required under Federal law to retire at age 60 now take a double hit with their pensions going into the PBGC. Because they retired early, not that they wanted to retire, they are required under Federal law to retire early, but because they retired early, they take an additional hit on their pension, and this affects many, many airline pilots and is an unfair treatment to these individuals.

Again, the House and the Senate have voted twice to protect older workers in pension conversion, and the House voted twice to protect airline pilot from unfair pension cuts at the PBGC.

This motion to instruct is about fundamental fairness to older workers, specifically for those older workers suddenly faced with cash balance conversions and for those airline pilots faced with federally mandated early retirement.

During the 1990s, hundreds of large employers switched to these cash balance plans, including IBM, CSX, Verizon, and the Federal Government. When we changed our pension plan back in the 1990s, we did this. Motorola, Dow Chemical, Federal Express, Wells Fargo Bank and Honeywell, they all made the decision to provide a transition and a protection for older workers, realizing that those older workers had an expectation of retirement benefit. That was not going to happen, but they would provide them some protection at they didn’t take the full brunt of those changes.

It is the decent thing to do. It is what Secretary Snow did when he was at CSX. It is what he voted to do at Verizon. This is the decent thing to do for workers. The benefits to the companies are immense, even if they protect these older workers in this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. Mr. KLINE, Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this motion to instruct for two reasons, because of process and because of substance.

First, on process. As the pension conference draws to a close, the matter before us today is little more than a last desperate attempt by some to distract from the fact that we are on the verge of the most fundamental reforms to the private pension system in a generation.

In fact, this is more of a motion to obstruct than it is a motion to instruct. This kind of obstruction shouldn’t surprise us, however. It has been going on for quite a while. Let’s not forget that those offering this motion were the same Members who could not even bring themselves to vote “yes” or “no” on the House pension bill when it was being considered by the House Education and Workforce Committee last spring, when I was present. It is not only acknowledging that they were, in fact, in the room.

While they attempted to politicize this issue, did they ever offer a comprehensive pension reform plan of their own? Did they ever go to the sidelines trying to obstruct our progress, just like they are today?

I also oppose this motion because of its substance. This pension reform debate is and always has been about the massive underfunding in worker pensions, about the need to change the status quo. This obstructionist motion to instruct does just the opposite: It essentially preserves the status quo and even makes the situation worse.

First, on hybrid plans. This motion to instruct essentially codifies benefit expectations in hybrid plans, tying the hands of those who voluntarily offer them. To require a guarantee of minimum benefits before participants have actually earned them sets a very bad precedent. Let’s not forget that hybrid plans are the sole bright spot in the defined benefit world. If not for these plans, the defined benefit system would be withering on the vine. To place restrictions on a system that actually provides more generous benefits for the majority workers than do traditional plans would be neither reasonable nor responsible.

And on the airline pilots provision, again, this would make matters worse for the pension system and the American taxpayer. The motion to instruct would actually increase the deficit of the PBGC even though this pension reform process is designed to save the agency from insolvency and taxpayers from a massive bailout.

It is estimated that if this provision were applied, the cost to the PBGC for all pilots’ plans would probably exceed $2.5 billion over the next 10 years. That additional debt would be borne by all the other companies that sponsor and fund defined benefit pension plans. Again, this is neither reasonable nor responsible.

Mr. Speaker, our ultimate goal is to ensure our defined benefit system remains viable for generations to come. This motion to instruct would undermine that effort. It is as simple as this: I urge my colleagues to vote “no” on the motion to instruct and reject this attempt to obscure progress on pension reform.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

(Mr. ANDREWS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct; and I hear my friend’s comments about process and responsibility. This has been the most irresponsible pension conference process one could imagine. Mr. Speaker, I was sent here, as were my colleagues, duly elected by my constituents to speak for them. I was appointed by the leadership of my party to participate in this conference to speak for all of our constituents. There have been many meetings; we have been invited to none. There have been many discussions; we have participated in none.

So if you want to talk about a responsible process, let’s talk about one where every person duly elected to represent his or her constituents has a chance to do so. This process is a travesty.

Now, on to the substance.

The words “cash balance plans” are a little hard to understand if you are 50 years old and you have been working somewhere for 25 years and you are planning your retirement assuming you are going to get $100 every month every month in the mail as a check that you have earned.

And then, one, the HR department comes in and says we have changed our mind. Instead of getting a check for a certain amount every month that you have earned, we are going to give you a lump sum instead, and assume that when you invest it, you will get about the same amount.

Mr. MILLER’s motion says two things: It says that the version of this idea that passed the Senate 97–2 should be the version that applies; that maybe we should give some workers the chance to choose whether to go into this system or not, to put more power into the hands of the worker and the retiree to choose what happens to them, rather than have the employer make that decision. That sounds reasonable to me.

And the second thing that Mr. MILLER does is to say let’s take the assumptions that are most protective to the retiree. Let’s err on the side of giving the retiree too much, not too little. I don’t think that is too much to ask. I think the House should join with 97 Senators from both parties and adopt the version of this idea that is in the Senate version of this idea on Mr. Miller’s motion to instruct.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Mr. MILLER for this motion to instruct the pension conference because a defined pension plan is a promise. It is a promise that workers count on when they come to the end of their employment. It is a promise that they plan their future around.

Many workers have been promised benefits at the end of their work service. In fact, many have accepted retirement benefits instead of pay increases. Now remember that. Many people choose to forgive a pay increase and get an increase in their pension instead.

Now, unless we have reform that allows companies to convert to cash balance programs, programs that don’t consider the older worker, a worker who has planned for years and years how they are going to live the rest of their lives in dignity, we have broken a great promise to these wonderful workers.

Not protecting their retirement would result in many, many times reducing their benefits by at least half. Imagine trying to live, through no fault of your own, on half of what you had planned on. We would not expect people to live on half of the amount of food or half the amount of medicine they would need; how can we expect them to live on half of a pension?

These pension benefits have been earned. They must be honored. Mr. Speaker, these workers were promised defined retirement benefits. They have earned those benefits. The Congress cannot allow companies to go back on their word. We, as a Congress, must support them. We must ensure these hardworking Americans that they will get the pension benefits they have been promised so they can plan, they don’t have to look over their shoulders or go live with their kids or have half of their medications.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the Miller motion to instruct.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS). Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

We also need to draft rules that protect older workers because they can be vulnerable during such conversions. But we must also address the issue of providing retroactive legal certainty to 1,100 employers whose cash balance and hybrid pension plans are unfairly caught in line.

Addressing retroactivity is important to the retirement security of thousands of American workers that gain from these hybrid pensions which are defined benefit plans. It has been for 7 years that employers of sponsored cash balance and other hybrid plans have been caught in a web of legal uncertainty.

Beginning in 1999, the Internal Revenue Service felt it necessary to temporarily stop issuing determination letters for converted hybrid plans, and litigation through our court system has left the legality of all cash balance plans up in the air.

In my congressional district I have four major employers that offer pension benefits to their employees through cash balance or other hybrid pension plan. Some of these plans were acquired through merger and acquisition, while some were adopted through conversion.

These employers treated their employees fairly, giving them the choice as to whether or not to convert their plans and ensuring that workers’ benefits were not diluted. And these four employers are not alone. There are a lot of good actors out there.

According to a recent AARP-funded study, 23 of the 25 largest cash balance plans, in other words, 92 percent, provided transition protections for their older employees when converting from defined traditional plans to cash balance plans.

Nonetheless, four employers in my district, as well as 1,100 others, are caught in a web of legal uncertainty. And we are in an era where companies are eliminating pension plans, including hybrid plans.

Failing to fix this problem will only perpetuate that trend. A cash balance plan is a defined benefit plan, and it is the future of our defined benefit system.

It is not correct that others have not offered alternatives. I specifically introduced H.R. 4274 to address this specific issue.

I ask all of my colleagues to pay attention to the issue. Cash balance plans are the future plans. They are portable. It is a way a worker can go from one place to another.

We need to protect older workers, and we need to make sure that this motion to instruct is passed.

I thank Mr. MILLER for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SANDERS).
The Senate language is supported by the AARP, the AFL-CIO, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, the National Legislative Retirees Network, and the Pension Rights Center.

Today, just like we did in April, I have the opportunity to do the right thing for American workers. We can and should instruct the conference committee to adopt the Senate language on cash balance plans.

Mr. Speaker, there are some who support cash balance schemes. They argue that these plans benefit employees. Well, a couple of years ago I asked the Congressional Research Service a simple question: What would happen to Members of Congress if their pensions were converted to a cash balance scheme? If it is so good for millions of American workers, clearly it must be good for the Members of Congress.

Well, shock of all shocks. Our Republican friends decided not to debate that issue in the House. And unless I am mistaken, they still do not want to convert Members’ pensions to cash balance schemes, for good reason. Because if they did it, every Member would see a huge reduction in the pensions they knew and were looking forward to.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I think that is an important point. When the Federal Government made the decision to change to the TSP system, which is turning out to be a very successful system, we provided this kind of transition. What the conference committee is about to impose on the American working public no Member of Congress would impose on themselves. They would be asking for some kind of transition, some kind of hold-harmless so that people would be protected who are older, who have more years into the system, because they don’t have the ability to gather other income.

And I think the gentleman makes a very important point that, once again, life is different inside of the Beltway than it is outside of the Beltway. And the people outside of the Beltway have a lot less ability to try to make up for that lost savings to manage their retirement.

I thank the gentleman for making the point. I continue to yield.

Mr. SANDERS. Let me just pick up and agree with the gentleman.

The CRS did a study on this issue: What would happen to congressional pensions if we went the direction of cash balance? Well, among other things, the Speaker of the House would not be too happy about this. His pension went down by 70 percent.

So, today, I would ask the opponents of the Miller motion this question: If cash balance plans are so good for American workers, why don’t we go first and adopt them here?

Well, obviously, that is not going to happen. If it is not good for Members of Congress, it is not a good idea for millions of American workers. Let’s support the Miller motion and stand for the rights of millions of American workers today.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I would yield.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I just want to again thank him for the point that this pension bill cannot be considered in a vacuum. The very same people who have worked as a result of companies that convert to cash balance that will not provide this kind of protection, they can do it voluntarily, but they will not, and many of them won’t, and the gentleman has struggled with companies who thought that they didn’t have to.

These are the same people that are getting their retirement health care benefits cut back, that are having trouble with or are going to have trouble with paying for prescription drugs. Today, people continuing to work, and people say to people, you know, just save more money.

Well, as we know, most people, the average American working person has a great deal of difficulty saving. And to tell them now, if you are 50 years old, according to the GAO, you will lose about $338 a month. If you are 40 years old, you will lose about $188 a month. If you are 50 years old, this has to be net savings that you are going to have to try to save. You have to save, before your retirement, a net $40,000, outside of your rent, outside of your house payment, outside of your kids, outside of everything else, if you could get 5 percent return on your money.

Where does the American family go to get that kind of money? Congress is about to take away from them? Where do they go? Most families, both people are working. And if you are 50 years old, it is pretty hard to say that you are going to go out and find a job that is going to replace this loss of savings.

So when people say, well, we can’t guarantee the expectations of these workers. No, what we are guaranteeing is a contract that this worker made with the company and the company made with the worker. We understand the benefits and the changes for young workers, and this isn’t about being against cash balance plans. It is about fairness.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SANDERS. Let me reiterate the point Ms. WOOLSEY made a few moments ago. We have people who have worked for a company for 20 or 30 years. During their careers, in many instances, they had offers to move elsewhere, but they said, no, I am going to stay here because I have a good retirement plan. And suddenly, for no fault of their own, that retirement plan is being pulled out from underneath them. What we are doing is helping people and their retirement plans.

And that is what we are asking that this conference committee do.

You do not have to throw these older workers onto the wood pile. They can be protected. The company can realize billions of dollars over the life of the pension plans in savings that they can reinvest in their company, and they can change their pension plans. We just ask that you don’t decimate older workers.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SANDERS. What was the vote in the Senate on this issue?

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. The vote was 97–3.

Mr. SANDERS. So overwhelmingly a bipartisan vote. Let’s stand with the Senate. Let’s protect American workers.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. It was 97–2.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely fascinating to listen to the speakers, one extolling the virtues of cash balance plans, and the other condemning them.

I believe that the gentleman from California has the right to close, so at this time I would like to yield the balance of our time to the chairman of the Education and Workforce Committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. MCKEON).

Mr. MCKEON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and thank him for running this debate for us.

It is interesting. You know, I don’t know what thrill there is in coming to the floor and trying to scare people that the Federal Government is trying to take away their pensions and trying to destroy their lives.

We have been working hard to try to fix up this pension conference. It is a very complicated, very complex issue. It hasn’t been done at this level by the Congress for decades. And we are working hard on this.

And this week we have made tremendous progress. The fact is that what we have done this week, we are very, very close, and we should be able to wrap this up next week. And that is what we should be spending our time on, trying to finalize this bill, trying to get the help that is needed for these people and their pensions.

A few years ago, we had over 100,000 defined benefit plans. We are down now to about 30,000. And the whole purpose of this bill is to protect the American people, to protect the worker.

Promises have been made. Promises should be kept. And so the fine line that we have been working on throughout this conference is to be able to strengthen the law that is currently in place, keep companies from going bankrupt, and keep companies from dropping their defined benefit plans. That is the goal; that is where we are.

We are, you know, if this were a marathon, we are down to the last few yards, and hopefully we will bring this to the floor next week for a final vote. And that is what we should be spending our time on, instead of this political charade.

I would encourage my colleagues to vote against this motion to instruct.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California.

Let me inquire how much time I have left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 8½ minutes left.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I would hope that when this vote comes on Monday, that the House would, once again, reaffirm its obligation and its commitment to older workers in this country.

This is a defining moment for these workers. This is a defining moment about what kind of retirement many workers in this country have been working for 20 or 30 years in a company, what kind of retirement they will have.

Will they have the retirement that was promised to them and that they have expected and that they have built their financial planning around, that they have built the decisions today about tomorrow around their families, their children, and others? That is really what this is about.

The gentleman is quite correct. They are quite close. They have been working very hard. It has been a one-party bill, but they have been working very hard, the Members of the House in this conference committee, and they are very close. They are just also very wrong. They are very wrong in how they treat the older workers of this country because, as we see from the GAO report, under the GAO report, under the plan that the Republicans want to bring to the floor, if the conversion plan is done the way it is allowed under the conference report, which will be Federal law, the average 50-year-old worker will lose about $238 in income each and every month of their retirement plan.

The question that most Members of Congress will not ask is, Where does that worker, where does that family, go to make up that income? Where do you go to earn the 40, the 60, the $80,000 you have and have over your retirement life? And there is the black? Most people cannot accumulate that kind of money in a 5- or 10-year period of time. So these workers who are under assault in terms of the retirement health care benefits, their retirement benefits, where do they go?

We know what the savings rate is. We keep telling America to save more. And the fact of the matter is most Americans who are at the end of the month have very little left to save. It is simply not there. Can Congress be that insensitive to how most of America lives? Most of America is bombarded from Money Magazine, from CNN, from Lou Dobbs, from all these people about how to save for your retirement. And they try. Some could do better. But for many families they are doing the best they can. But for many people in their fifties is knowing that they have a retirement plan that they thought they could count on. But the fact of the matter is when they pick up and read the business section of the newspaper, they see that some of the biggest, most reliable corporations in the country are changing their pension plans. United Airlines just went into bankruptcy. Without any showing of this report, the end of the plan for their employees. Talk to those first attendants when you fly home tonight or you fly home tomorrow. Talk to those pilots and realize the extent to which their retirements have been devastated, absolutely devastated. But it has happened to people in all of the industries around the country.

And all that we are saying is follow the model by companies that have done it the right way, companies like Verizon, companies like Federal Express, companies like Wells Fargo, Bank, Honeywell. There is a way you can do this and you can realize billions of dollars of savings, which are necessary, necessary. They are going to be changed, but they ought to be changed in a way that protects the older workers.

That is why the AARP, the American Association of Retired People, is so dead set against this provision. It recognizes the impact this is going to have on future retirees. It recognizes the impact it is going to have on current workers and on their ability to plan for their retirement.

They want to act like this is a carefully crafted pension plan and anybody who wants to suggest another alternative is only for the status quo and does not care about pensioners.

The Senate voted 97–2 to treat these older workers right. It is the Republican leadership that has stepped in and twisted that away. We didn’t get a chance to vote on that in the House. When the bill passed, the House voted overwhelmingly to protect older workers.

Another class of workers who are at risk in this pension plan are the taxpayers. We now see that PBGC is telling us that current law is a better deal for the taxpayers than the plan they are coming up with to the tune of about $2 billion over the next decade.

Don’t shake your head. It is right here. You guys had this information for months. We just had to get it under a FOIA agreement under your wonderful bipartisan arrangements.

So there is a lot to be concerned about with this plan. It is not going to have protection for older workers. And Members of Congress ought to understand that when those older workers start to come to you, as their pension plans are dramatically changed by this conference committee, and they are going to want to know where you were, and this is a vote which will tell them where you stand on this. And, hopefully, you will influence the pension committee because it has to be done. As we said, the Senate, after long deliberations on the pension bill, they voted 97–2 to do it the right way.

So I would hope that people would support this. I would hope that you understand what this truly means to working people in this country and to their families and to their retirement.

It is a devastating picture when you meet your constituents who have lost their retirement, who have lost big chunks of their retirement, and they come up and they talk to you at the shopping center, they talk to you at the grocery store, they talk to you at a town hall, and they tell you what it means to their plans.

We were all stunned as a nation when pensioners got their plans wiped out and devastated by Enron. We called those people criminals. Here we call the legislators, because people are going to get a devastating hit on their pensions and we are going to say it is the law. There we said it was a crime. We said it was a crime.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California.

You have plenty of time on your side. You say it is a crime.

Mr. McKENZIE. But I hadn’t been called a criminal.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California.

What are you doing to people? What are you doing to people?

You have controlled the conference. You control the White House. You control the House. You control the Senate. Control your time.

The fact of the matter is this is the same thing. We are making a conscious decision, a conscious decision, to rip away these pension benefits from these workers. And the most devastating thing about this decision is it is not necessary. You can have massive pension reform to the benefit of the employees, to the benefit of the employ- ers, to the benefit of the shareholders, without devastating the older workers.

So why don’t we do it right? Why don’t we do it in a humane way? Why don’t we do it right, recognizing the situation that America’s older workers find themselves in, people 50, 55, 60 years old? What are they going to do? Take a second job for their retirement? Maybe their spouse can go out and take a third job for their retirement?

That is not the way we should treat American citizens. That is not the way we should treat taxpayers. And that is not the way we should treat hard-working families who simply do not have enough money to make up for this kind of devastating cut in their retirement.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the motion to instruct. It will be up sometime, I believe, Monday, and I would strongly encourage you to vote “aye” on this motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MCKEON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that the gentleman’s words be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TERRY). Could the gentleman describe the words he is referring to?

Mr. MCKEON. I would like to know for sure if he was calling us criminals.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. No. Well, read the words back. Maybe we can clarify it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The words complained of were spoken too far back in the debate for the gentleman’s request to be timely. Other debate has ensued.

Mr. MCKEON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to reclaim my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 4, 2005, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

THE OCCUPATION OF IRAQ AND CONTINUED VIOLENCE

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, today is the 161st time that I have come to the floor to deliver a 5-minute Special Order about the United States occupation of Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, this effort would not have been possible, it would have been totally impossible, without the excellent words and guidance and general assistance of a member of my staff, Eric Powers.

Mr. Speaker, Eric will be leaving my office tomorrow, after 3 years of service and 161 5-minute speeches, to attend Washington University in St. Louis, law school, where he will have the opportunity to further his work in the international law department. Mr. Speaker, believe me, Eric Powers will be missed and, believe me, Eric Powers is appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, Iraq is burning. It is becoming hard even to read the news accounts. The last few days have been marked by two of the deadliest attacks on civilians in months.

A new U.N. report concludes that roughly 6,000 Iraqi civilians have been killed just in the last 2 months. Random violence, fear, and lawlessness are ruling the day. People cannot leave their homes. Vicious thugs and vigilantes control the streets where people are pulled from cars, where they are tortured and executed.

Do not bother calling the police. They have been infiltrated by militias and are brutally corrupt themselves. One Sunni sheikh laughed as he said this about the police to the New York Republic: “The good ones just take bribes . . . the bad ones rip off your head.”

Monday’s New York Times cited an Iraqi Army official who notes that in a recent attack some of the gunmen wore the uniform of the Iraqi Security Forces. As he put it, “You cannot recognize your friend from your enemy.”

To those who insist that all hell will break loose if our troops leave, I say hell has already broken loose. How much worse can it possibly get, and how many American lives must we endanger for a civil war that we are virtually powerless to stop?

I am not saying that democracy will be busted under our nose over the last American soldier takes her last step on Iraqi soil. But we cannot begin the process of putting Iraq back together again until our troops come home. Every day that the occupation continues will make it that much harder for the United States to play a constructive nonmilitary role in Iraq as a construction partner rather than a military occupier.

If you will recall, the architects of the earlier Iraqi war and the resulting occupation did not just promise us democracy in Iraq. According to their fairy tale, an invasion was going to have this glorious ripple effect, spreading peace and freedom across the Middle East. These were Vice President CHENEY’s words in 2002.

Regime change in Iraq would bring about a number of benefits to the region. Extremists in the region would have to rethink their strategy of jihad. Moderates throughout the region would take heart, and our ability to advance the Israeli-Palestinian peace process would be enhanced.

Of course, this week’s open hostilities between Israel and Lebanon have proven that statement tragically wrong. The Iraq war hasn’t spread freedom anywhere. It has made all of us, Iraq, its neighbors, the United States and the world, less safe.

There is no question, we have reached a point of diminishing returns in Iraq. In fact, the bloodbath in Baghdad has only gotten worse in the month since we moved more troops into the capital as part of a security crackdown that we called Operation Forward Together.

You know how the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over and expecting different results? Well, last week, General Casey said that we might need still more troops to contain the violence in Baghdad. This is madness, Mr. Speaker. Our soldiers were not trained for this. They are largely powerless to control hostility that is rooted in a religious conflict that dates back centuries. It is time to bring them home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CONAWAY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. BILIRAKIS addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

HONORING THE EXTRAORDINARY LIFE OF STAFF SERGEANT DUANE DREASKY

Mr. MCCOTTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCOTTER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor the extraordinary life of Staff Sergeant Duane Dreasky of Novi, Michigan, and mourn his passing. Staff Sergeant Dreasky proudly served in the 1st Battalion, 119th Field Artillery Regiment, of the Army National Guard in Lansing, Michigan, and he devoted his life to serving our country.

As a student at Walled Lake Western High School, he enjoyed studying military history and playing football, but dreamed of serving his country as a soldier. Despite being a versatile athlete who wrestled, ran track, sky dived and taught martial arts, Staff Sergeant Dreasky suffered a knee injury, which threatened to prevent him from serving in the military.

In March of 2000, Staff Sergeant Dreasky married his best friend, Mandy, who served in the United States Army. When Mandy was deployed to Iraq in 2003, Staff Sergeant Dreasky transported members of her unit to Wisconsin for training and helped loved ones communicate with soldiers overseas. Finally, after writing to elaborate on the fact that he had lost his desire to enlist, he was able to join the National Guard in June of 2003.

After basic training, Staff Sergeant Dreasky served in Cuba before voluntarily deploying to Iraq for Operation Iraqi Freedom. On November 21, 2006, an improvised explosive device detonated near his military vehicle near Habbaniyah, Iraq. He sustained severe injuries and was transported to the burn center at Brooke Army Medical Center in Fort Sam Houston, Texas, for treatment.

Wrapped in medical bandages and unable to stand, he struggled to salute President George W. Bush, who visited him in the hospital. With his father, Roger; mother, Cheryl; sister, Dawn; and Mandy by his side, Staff Sergeant Dreasky never lost his patriotism.

For 8 months, Staff Sergeant Dreasky fought courageously for his life, but ultimately passed away on July 10, 2006. His legendary commitment to his family, community, and country is a testament to his enduring and selfless love. Staff Sergeant Dreasky is remembered as an inspiration to the citizens of Michigan, a soldier of unyielding dedication and a hero. He will be sorely missed.

Mr. Speaker, during his 31 years, Staff Sergeant Dreasky enriched the lives of everyone around him. Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in mourning his passing and honoring his contributions to our community and our country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I asked unanimous consent to claim Mr. Emanuel’s time.
the Roman Empire. The Roman Empire at this time in the year 364 wasn’t just Italy. It controlled all the area to the Balkans, the Mediterranean coastline, including North Africa, France, and even Spain and part of what is now England; and the emperor at the time was Flavius Valens. He controlled basically the eastern part of the empire.

And while he is Caesar, the barbarian nation of the Goths to his northeast started coming toward the Roman Empire. The reason was because the Huns, another barbarian group, had taken over the Goths’ land and moved them toward the Roman Empire. So they migrated toward the Roman Empire, and at the time that this occurred, they came on the border.

They were led by a person that was supposedly a friend of Rome, his name was Fritigern, King of the Goths, and he asked permission to come into Rome with some of the Goths.

Normally the Roman Government would not allow this, to have a state within a state; but, you see, Valens needed more people to be in his army and he needed more workers in the Empire of Rome. So he granted permission for some of the Goths to come in legally. But when the crossing started, the Roman Government didn’t have enough border guards to control entry, and so massive waves of Goths came into the Roman Empire.

What started out as a controlled entry mushroomed into a massive influx. Several hundreds of thousands came across the Roman Empire.

But the Goths did not take the oath to support the emperor. They did not assimilate. They did not become Roman. And a few years later, this state within a state revolted and internal war started.

It culminated at the Battle of Adrianople. Most Americans don’t know where that is, but that is a place over in that area. It was the Waterloo for Valens. And the Goths and other barbarian tribes assembled and took to the field. Of course, one of the Goth leaders was a person by the name of Fritigern, this supposed friend of Rome.

The battle ensued and the Goths, with their large confederation, engaged the Roman cavalry. The Roman cavalry left. The Roman infantry was annihilated. Over two-thirds of these thousands of legionnaires were murdered. The Goths, of course, was killed.

I have a coin of Valens, it is about 1,600 years old. He is not on our wall. I just have this coin of him, and just his head, because that was all that remained of him after the Goths executed him, cut his head off, put it on a stake and marched around the Gothic camp.

Rome negotiated with all Goths and allowed them permanent status on Roman soil, and historians say this is one reason for the eventual fall of Rome, to allow a state to come into their state and refuse to make them assimilate. And in 410, the Goths sacked the City of Rome.

History speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker. Failure to control illegal entry into a country causes some problems, and we are not talking about legal entry. We are talking about illegal entry. And it encourages a state within a state. And when people come illegally to a nation and refuse to take allegiance to that country, start sending money to another nation and they don’t even learn the language, is America asking for trouble? Is America becoming just another Rome?

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons for the fall of Rome, but one of those reasons is simply the failure to control who came into their nation. I think the analogy is obvious. And that’s just the way it is.

that advanced the ideals of our founders, and which made America a beacon to millions of people who were suffering under fascism and communism.

Most importantly, these men knew the limits of any one Nation’s ability, and that only by marshaling our strength with that of other free-dom-loving people. They listened to the counsel of our allies and members of both parties here at home.

The current administration has too often believed that it has the answers and does not need to pay attention to the ideas of others. This refusal to listen to other voices and an excessively partisan and ideological approach has resulted in an America that is more isolated than at any time in the post-war era.

Around the world, among nations that should be our strong allies, we are less often seen as a force for good in the world, and this has jeopardized the cooperation we must have to win the war on terror. This has been most clearly seen in Iraq, where insistence on invading the country without the broad international coalition we assembled in the Gulf War, and then our brushing aside offers of help from the international community, have seriously undermined the war effort and increased the burden that our troops and our country must bear.

But Iraq is not the only challenge facing our Nation. The ongoing crisis involving Iran, Hamas and Hezbollah terrorists, Iran’s standoff with the international community over its nuclear program, and a similar faceoff with North Korea are all competing for the attention of American policymakers.

In each of those crises, America’s ability to marshal international support and use the full range of our power to effect a positive outcome has been undermined by the administration’s ineffective approach of our national security. Democrats have developed a comprehensive blueprint to better protect America and to restore our Nation’s position of international leadership.

Our plan, Real Security, was devised with the assistance of a broad range of experts, former military officers, retired diplomats, law enforcement personnel, homeland security experts and others, who helped identify key areas where current policies have failed and where new ones were needed.

In a series of six Special Orders, my colleagues and I have been sharing the American people our vision for a more secure America. The plan has five pillars, and each of our Special Order hours have been addressing each of them in turn: Building a military for the 21st century, winning the war on terrorism, securing our homeland, a way forward in Iraq, and achieving energy independence for America, the subject of Ma’s KAPUT’s recent 5-minute speech.

During our first Special Order we discussed the first pillar of our plan, building a military for the 21st century. To briefly summarize what we discussed 2 weeks ago, here are the elements of that pillar: Rebuild a state-of-the-art military; develop the world’s best equipment and training, and maintain that equipment and training; acquire and integrate intelligence for success; a GI bill of Rights for the 21st century; and strengthening the National Guard.

We next discussed a comprehensive plan to win the war on terror, which focused on a wide-ranging series of strategies to destroy the threat posed by Islamic radicalism. This involves destroying al Qaeda and finishing the job in Afghanistan; doubling special forces andaging intelligence; eliminating terrorist breeding grounds; pre-ventative diplomacy and new international leadership; securing loose nuclear materials by 2010; stopping nuclear weapons development in Iran and North Korea.

The job of securing our homeland remains unfinished. In the wake of 9/11, there have been numerous commissions and investigations at the Federal, State and local level, a multitude of private studies. All of them, all of them, have pointed to a broad systemic and other flaws in our homeland security program.

Almost 2 years ago, the independent 9/11 Commission published its report, but most of its recommendations have yet to be implemented. Our homeland security plan requires the implementation of all of the 9/11 Commission recommendations. It provides for the sourcing and training of all our forces.

It safeguards our nuclear and chemical plants. It prohibits outsourcing of ports, airports and mass transit to foreign interests. Trains and equips our first responders and invests in public health to safeguard Americans.

In early June we discussed our plan for Iraq, a new course to make 2006 a year of significant transition to full Iraqi sovereignty, with Iraqis assuming primary responsibility for securing and governing their country with a responsible redeployment of U.S. forces. Democrats will insist that Iraqis make the political compromises necessary to unite their country and defeat the insurgency, promote regional diplomacy, and strongly encourage allies and other nations to play a constructive role.

For the remainder of today’s hour, we will discuss the fifth pillar of Real Security: it is our responsibility to ensure that our energy plan can better secure our Nation, save our environment, and become the world leader in this cutting-edge industry.

To achieve this vision, the Real Security Plan offers fresh policy ideas. These ideas are drawn from a broad range of stakeholders, academic experts, government administrators, energy industry executives, environment- mentalists, and a vibrant grass-roots community.

The Real Security Plan pushes the Federal bureaucracy to overcome its business-as-usual approach and it encourages American entrepreneurs to innovate. While many of the ideas are new, some have been around for years. For example, experts have for many years recommended updating the Corporate Average Fuel Efficiency or CAFE standards. This year even the majority on the Government Reform Committee stated in a report that the fuel economy standards have stagnated for years.

Unfortunately, while the President has talked about the Nation’s addiction to oil, he has had little to say about the simple action of updating the CAPE standards. The President may believe that fuel efficiency standards are a burden on American manufacturers, or a constraint on the American consumer, but, sadly, he has underestimated American ingenuity and the willingness of Americans to sacrifice in the war on terror.

In contrast, in 1961 President Kennedy announced his vision for the Apollo project to put a man on the Moon in one decade, by saying, “I believe that this Nation should commit itself to achieving the goal before this decade is out.

“But I think every citizen of this country as well as the Members of Congress should consider the matter carefully, if not frightfully, to which we have given attention over many weeks and months, because it is a very heavy burden. And there is no
When you submit a budget the day after your State of the Union address, in which you say that the country is addicted to oil, and we have got to do something about it, and you submit a budget that cuts individuals’ pay at one of the greatest national labs actually cut about 40 employees who were working on renewable energy at that lab.

And so the difference is really the one between actually doing something about an issue or just talking about an issue.

Because when you submit a budget the day after your State of the Union address, in which you say that the country is addicted to oil, and we have got to do something about it, and you submit a budget that cuts individuals’ pay at one of the greatest national labs actually cut about 40 employees who were working on renewable energy at that lab.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Well, that is exactly right. Let us say you had an alcoholic. The last thing you want to do to help that person kick the habit is to provide a subsidy, for example, to the alcohol industry to sell alcohol at different prices. So we have got a real contradiction here between what we now acknowledge should be our national priority, a national priority, and what we are actually doing about it.

Now, I have got to believe that the America understands that energy security is a very important part of our national security. But if we are going to address energy security in a meaningful way going forward, we need to do it in a new manner. We cannot just be doing the same old thing.

Now, I think many of us were pleased back in January when the President delivered his State of the Union address. He said to the Congress assembled and to the American people that the United States was addicted to oil.

In fact, his exact words were: The United States is addicted to oil which is often imported from unstable parts of the world.

I am pleased that the President finally acknowledged that. That was kind of the headline in the newspapers the next day.

The confusing thing, I thought, was that most of America already knew that we were overly reliant on oil, especially on foreign oil. But it was news that this administration had begun to at least acknowledge that problem.

The question is, having acknowledged the problem, whether we are serious as a Nation about doing something about it. Unfortunately, if you look at the record to date from the Bush administration, despite the rhetoric he gave at the time he addressed the United States Congress, we have not seen the follow-through in terms of a new plan. And we need a new direction in energy policy.

For example, last night he talked about the fact that we need to do more in the area of renewable energy, which we do; as you, Mr. SCHIFF, have said, that many of us have been pushing for, many times. But I think we all remember that it was not long after the President gave his State of the Union address that he flew off to the National Renewable Energy Lab out in Colorado, which is part of NOAA, and discovered that in fact the budget that he was submitting to the State of the Union address actually cut about 40 employees who were working on renewable energy at that lab.

And so the difference is really the one between actually doing something about an issue or just talking about an issue.

Because when you submit a budget the day after your State of the Union address, in which you say that the country is addicted to oil, and we have got to do something about it, and you submit a budget that cuts individuals’ pay at one of the greatest national labs actually cut about 40 employees who were working on renewable energy at that lab.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Well, that is exactly right. Let us say you had an alcoholic. The last thing you want to do to help that person kick the habit is to provide a subsidy, for example, to the alcohol industry to sell alcohol at different prices. So we have got a real contradiction here between what we now acknowledge should be our national priority, a national priority, and what we are actually doing about it.

That is why I think it is very important that we are here today to talk about a new direction, because I do believe that if we want to really help break that addiction and reduce our reliance on oil, we need a new national effort. That is why many of us have joined together to introduce the new Apollo Energy Act, which says we need to harness the great potential of this Nation, the grant entrepreneurial spirit, to make sure we commit ourselves to this real national effort, in addition to the fact that we need to encourage, not just more renewable energy, but in the immediate short-term we can also encourage greater energy efficiency.

We waste an awful lot of energy as a Nation through inefficient use of energy. So the Federal Government has tried and gave us a push to try to encourage States and local jurisdictions, the American people, to find ways to improve energy efficiency. But if you look at the President’s budget with respect to energy efficiency efforts, you see dramatic reductions in the budget that he submitted for that purpose.

In fact, Diane Sheehan, the executive director of the National Association of State Energy Officials, has said that the assistance that the States received from the Department of Energy going to be as small as it was in the past. This year, the year after the President stood at this podium right here in this Chamber and said this is a national problem, we have got a national addiction, we have got to do something about it.

Yet he reduced the efforts that we had put in place and were trying to develop to try to help people with energy... efficiency, because we know that if we can use energy more efficiently, obviously, then we need less to produce the same output and the same quality of life.

So if you look at all of these different areas, you can see a growing gap between what the Bush administration says it wants to do and what it is actually doing. It is a credibility gap that is growing. I think the American people recognize that fact, and they are looking for an alternative that is real.

This is why we need a consensus on this proposal. We call it a real security plan, not a fake one, not one where you say one thing and do another, but a real plan, which really makes the national commitment to this effort in many, many different areas.

The new Apollo Energy Project is part of that. A project to provide greater efforts in the area of ethanol is part of that. A whole series of concrete steps that are in a proposal that is put together, that is a consensus on this proposal. We need to act on that proposal, and we need to start acting today if we really want to reduce our dependence on foreign oil, improve our national security situation, and do what is necessary to protect the environment, address the issue of global climate change, which we necessarily need to address as well.

I would be happy to yield to our colleagues, Ms. MARY KAPTUR, and the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF) for their own energy and helping America shape a different century and different millennium in this 21st, and to say that there could be no more important dedication for us as public officials than to meet America’s chief strategic vulnerability in imported petroleum with real answers.

To do so, as Congressman SCHIFF reminded us, when President Kennedy helped to do what was hard and lead America to land a man on the Moon, it was done within 10 years.

At that time, I remember as a child, it seemed so impossible to land a man on the Moon. Yet now we see space shuttles. When you stand outside and look at the sky, and you watch the shuttle come before the Moon and then go back around again, you may see what this Nation has achieved since the 1960s.

But, indeed, we did land a man on the Moon in 10 years. I am troubled by the long-time horizon on new forms of energy, because if the government of the United States were serious, within 10 years it could use its own power to help convert this Nation.

I will just discuss two of the committees on which I serve that have major roles to play in this conversation. Both Congressmen SCHIFF and Congressman VAN HOLLEN have talked about the Department of Agriculture.

What Congressman VAN HOLLEN has said is true, that although the President, in his State of the Union, talked about energy addiction and the importance of transitioning America to be energy independent, the cost-cutting budget of the Department of Agriculture, under his administration every single year, has cut funds for renewables.

Farmers struggle in the rural communities across this country to try to piece together the investment dollars and have the confidence that what they are doing will weather the kind of beating that they have heard from the oil cartels, who command the marketplace and control the price in this country. Please don’t try to convince me it is a free market. Oh, no, it is only a free market for those who control the spigots.

It isn’t a free market for the consumer at all. Because in the community I represent, even if I want to buy a car that runs on ethanol, there is only one pump, and that was only put in at a gas station by someone who has time to go farther over to another part of the State or another part of the city to go fill up, with families having the pressures that they have on them in the workplace today.

No, land a man on the Moon, it was done within 10 years. When you stand outside and look at the sky, and you watch the shuttle come before the Moon and then go back around again, you may see what this Nation has achieved since the 1960s.

So the Federal Government isn’t in the lead on this in agriculture. It is actually following in the wake of real progressive States like Minnesota, which I call the Thomas Alva Edison Center of the 21st century. What they are doing, they are viewing new energy production and new renewables and new investment there as economic development for the State of Minnesota.

We have a lot to learn from them. The Federal Government ought to just copy what the State of Minnesota has done and make it available across the country. But it is a tragedy now because even though Detroit makes dozens and dozens of vehicles that will run on these new renewable fuels, there are no gas pumps around the country.

There were a few incentives in one of the bills that we passed here in terms of tax credits and incentives for companies to put in tanks in the ground, but it is not serious. It is just sort of limping along. It isn’t the kind of great challenge President Kennedy gave to us and the challenge that the Nation met.

If I could just say a word about the Department of Defense, it is incredible the Secretary of Defense in this Nation would come before the Defense Appropriations Committee, when asked the question, what role did he see for his Department, the largest purchaser of petroleum in the United States of America, and petroleum products, to help erase this strategic vulnerability that we had due to the fact that we import three-quarters of our petroleum, he said, That is not my job. That’s the Department of Energy’s job. I couldn’t believe it. I went up to him afterwards, and I said, well, if it isn’t our job, why do we have our Fifth Fleet porting in Bahrain holding up that government? You start looking around where we have put our defense forces to protect the oil lanes, we vote here today on Oman. It is pretty clear the Strait of Hormuz is very strategically important to us, because we are totally dependent on that oil lifeline.

To me, that is certainly the chief of defense vulnerability. So why doesn’t Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld know about it? He doesn’t want to know about it. Know what, the generals know about it. The generals at the Air Force know it, the generals at the Navy Department know it. The generals over at Army know about it, and they know about the soldiers in the field.

We have research projects going on at DOD to try to have solar tents where the sun’s rays are used if we have to move battalions around and try to provide alternative ways of powering these different defense systems that we have in theater. People on the ground know. The Guard and Reserve know, America has to change.

I hope the Secretary or somebody in his office will give him some of my remarks, because the Department of Defense ought to be in the lead. Then many of the other Federal agencies will follow.

The Federal agency that deserves the biggest star for doing what is right is the postal service. The postal service, with its vehicles, and some of them only get 12 miles a gallon, we ought to convert those, has done more than any other Federal agency to use its power to try to use vehicles that run on new fuels, batteries, new technology, hybrids, which Congressmen SCHIFF and Congressman VAN HOLLEN have referenced in their remarks.

The Federal Government itself, as major a share of the U.S. economy as it is, we wonder why we do not see great if the President had hybrids as part of the White House lineup? Wouldn’t it be great if the Secretary of Defense could see his way to thinking about this and integrating the energy mandate into what the Department of Defense does?

Wouldn’t it be great if the Secretary of Agriculture actually helped the farmers of this country become owners in the new energy industries that are being created across the fields of Minnesota, Iowa, Ohio, Indiana and so many other places, rather than making these farmers struggle and be threatened with bankruptcy because they can’t, there have been several obstacles to our energy independence, that has been a lack of vision in terms of where we need to go as a country in the administration and in the Defense Department, as you point out, but there have obviously been within the oil industry efforts to stop this from happening.

I have to imagine the best and quickest way to bring oil prices down is to make other sources of energy competitive. If we can incentivize the development of these biofuels and make them more readily available, the oil companies are going to drop their prices in a hurry in order to undercut this new industry, if nothing more.

But what really kind of gawns at me is when we look around the world at what China is doing with solar power and solar cities now, at what South American countries are doing at making themselves energy independent with biofuels, and what Japan is doing in terms of development of hybrid technology and how they are passing us by, that really grieves me because it hurts our national security interests. It hurts our economy.

Let me do a reality check with Mr. VAN HOLLEN’s district: which is 3,000 miles from mine. If I ask my constituents, would you be willing to make a sacrifice so that you could tell the oil producing Nations of the world, many of which are not our friends, we do not want your oil, but if you do not need your oil, you can take your oil and whatever, my constituents would leap at that.

How would your constituents feel?

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. I think despite the fact there are 3,000 miles between the area you represent and the area I represent, that is certainly one of the things that brings our constituents together. I think what they are all looking for, regardless of where they live in this great country of ours, is some real leadership on this very important issue.

This House just a few weeks ago had another opportunity to send a statement on the fact that we wanted a forward-looking energy plan with a new direction or whether we just wanted to go the same old, same old.

Our colleague, Congressman MARKEE of Massachusetts, offered an amendment. It said let us put an end to another threat to provide for deepwater drilling for oil, regardless of where they live in this great country of ours, is some real commitment to energy independence by 2020 or even sooner than that.

Mr. SCHIFF. I thank the gentleman for giving me a chance to say a few words here this evening. I share your absolute commitment to energy independence by 2020 or even sooner than that.

Mr. SCHIFF. I thank the gentleman for giving me a chance to say a few words here this evening. I share your absolute commitment to energy independence by 2020 or even sooner than that.

Mr. SCHIFF. I want to pick up briefly on the point that our colleague here, Ms. KAPTUR, made with respect to the issue of the Federal Government leading by example.

It is hard for all of us to ask people around this country to do things in the area that our colleague here, Ms. KAPTUR, has been leading, how the Federal Government itself has been such a deadbeat on this. The Federal Government, after all, is the largest single consumer of energy in the United States and yet, again, after the President gave his State of the Union address, he submitted the fiscal year 2007 budget, and that was the lowest request ever for Federal Government energy efficiency efforts. In fact, that was lower, despite the fact in 2004 the Federal Government consumed more energy than at any other time in the last 10 years.

So, again, I get back to the point, you got to say what you mean and you got to follow through.

Mr. SCHIFF. I wanted to make one comment and I have a question for Ms. KAPTUR.

When we talk about sacrifice during the War on Terror, really the only people in America who have been asked to sacrifice are the men and women in uniform and their families, and they are sacrificing big time: multiple deployments to Iraq, to Afghanistan, families left behind, wondering if their loved one is going to come back all, some base to make ends meet while they are gone.

I met when I was in Iraq a young man serving there who was on his way back home. His wife was also in the service. She was on her way to Iraq. They were going to be like two ships passing in the night. The level of sacrifice of the men and women in uniform is nothing short of outstanding.

Apart of that group, though, Americans have not been asked to sacrifice for the greater good, but we are sacrificing in an unexpected way, and that is when we go to the pump. We are paying a heavy price. The problem is that the price we are paying is not going for anything productive.

Yes, we are paying a lot more at the pump. But where is that money going? It is going in two places. It is going into the record profits that Mr. VAN HOLLEN mentioned, which it is not just record profits for the oil industry. The oil companies have had the largest profits of any corporation in American corporate history, and these are the same companies that are enjoying the tax subsidies that we keep passing. And then there is still another problem, how are they using the money that they are taking these profits. It is not compelling them to charge that price at the pump, but it is giving them the opportunity to, and they are taking it. So part of the money is going there.

Where else is the money going? Well, a lot of the money is going to the Middle East. A lot of it is going to countries that, either openly or covertly, are funding people who are trying to kill us. That is not a worthwhile sacrifice for Americans to make. And the terrible tragedy of this is, and I think probably the biggest missed opportunity of this administration is if we had started 5 years ago, or even after 9/11, and we said we are going to make the sacrifice now to wean ourselves off of oil, we might have had to pay a little bit more in terms of our conservation measures, but that money would be an investment in our security. Now we are paying 10 times as much, and it is going to some of the people trying to kill us.

What I wanted to ask Ms. KAPTUR, I know other countries in South America, for example, have gone a long way in terms of using biofuel, have made themselves energy independent, have done what we have not been able to do. If we did have the right package of incentives, if the government was a leader and worked with the agriculture industry, how much of our domestic consumption of energy could be supplied by biofuels?

Ms. KAPTUR. I think the honest answer to that is initially about 15 percent. If one looks at the current type of production where we have field crops, if we compare ourselves to Brazil where they have many fewer cars than we do but they are really heavily biofueld right now, they have got well over half of their vehicles that are running on alcohol-based fuels. Under current technologies and types of plants that we use, and current refining capacity, I think we could get up to about 15 percent.

Mr. SCHIFF. I want to pick up briefly on our country, and the fact there are 3,000 miles between mine. If I ask my constituents, would you be willing to make a sacrifice so that they can’t get up to the $40 million level for investment?

So I thank the gentleman for giving me a chance to say a few words here this evening. I share your absolute commitment to energy independence by 2020 or even sooner than that.

Mr. SCHIFF. I want to pick up briefly on the point that our colleague here, Ms. KAPTUR, made with respect to the issue of the Federal Government leading by example.

Under current technologies and types of plants that we use, and current refining capacity, I think we could get up to about 15 percent.
I do believe that with biotechnology and the introduction of more oil-rich seed crops we could push that number up, and that is part of the horizon of cracking the carbohydrate molecule, as we in the 20th century cracked the carbon that produces gasoline and refine it off of petroleum.

We are really neophytes in terms of really using oil seeds in order to produce the maximum number of BTUs per acre and per ton. So I think if one looks at the period of a decade, we could be an amount of oil from the areas where we have field crops already in production.

I would say that for the future, the Midwest would have a larger share of its vehicles that run on alcohol-based fuels than perhaps California. California might have more of a mix of hybrid battery technology, maybe hydrogen-infused systems. I do not think that there is just one answer here.

But right now, because the oil companies have pushed the biogas at the pump, we cannot move the vehicles that are already being made and sell them. Most Americans who are driving these flex-fuel vehicles do not even know it. So I would say that biofuels is at least one answer, and then we have to look to fuel cells. We have to look to hydrogen-infused systems.

I think that in the future, we are working on one project in the Midwest, we are taking the rays of the sun and converting them to hydrogen. Then we will have the plug-in vehicles, the experimental plug-in vehicles.

So there is a series of technologies being used and developed. But imagine if the Federal Government were a partner rather than just sort of a bystander in this effort. We could ratchet up the usage so much more quickly.

Mr. SCHIFF. I thank you very much for your leadership on this, and it seems to me there is maybe no other issue of cost-cutting, energy conservation, and such a positive synergy, since that to the degree we so lean weans ourselves off of foreign oil, that helps us with our national security and our foreign policy.

To the degree we can develop these new technologies, that helps us economically. There has been tremendous demand in China, India, and elsewhere that are energy-starved countries with strong GDPs. So it is an economic winner.

In terms of our environment, not sending all of those ozone-depleting gases and the greenhouse effect and the global warming, it is an environmental imperative.

In terms of rescuing the family farm and helping our agriculture industry, it could be a vital part of the answer.

Almost every challenge we face as a Nation intersects at the intersection of energy independence. Now, some people point at other solutions, and I want to ask the gentleman about this.

Probably the most prominent debate we have on energy kind of tells you where we are here is on drilling in Alaska. From my point of view, that does not make much sense, both in terms of how long it would take to extract the oil, the environmental costs, but I wanted to ask your thoughts on that.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Well, the gentleman is right, and I think the statistics on this are clear, that even if you took all the oil you could possibly drill out of Alaska, with all the costs and the environmental damage, it would deal with only a very short period of 1 year. Less than one and a quarter weeks to months in terms of our total energy use.

So if you are trying to break an addiction, you do not keep feeding that addiction. What you need to do is have a different approach in general.

As Ms. KAPTUR has said, it is not just one different thing, it is many different technologies and different ideas that you need to work on. But what you do not do if you want to kick a habit is keep encouraging that habit to remain.

And yet that is what we have been using so much of our natural resources to do. We are saying taxpayer money to do the oil and gas subsidies. Rather, we should be using our efforts to encourage these other ideas that are in our national interest.

The President has said we have a problem. That is not the issue, apparently. But the issue is what are we doing about it. That is why I think this discussion is important.

I really do believe it is a terrible thing when so many of the others around the world are ahead of us in so many areas where we should be leading the way. We have a great entrepreneurial spirit. We have the resources and talents to do this. There is no reason why other countries should be beating us in the area of renewable energy, energy efficiency technologies. And yet they are.

I think that is because of a lack of national leadership. Other countries have made this a priority. In this country we have made it a priority for sound bites, but we have not made it a priority for policy.

Ms. KAPTUR. Coming from the industrial Midwest, I think I have more automotive plants in my district than the entire State of California has, so I come from where the automotive industry was born and hopefully is being reborn. But it is amazing to me the way in which the U.S. automotive industry chose to meet foreign competition. It was not to try to pry open Japan’s marketplace, which remains closed to the goods of all countries.

Even when the old Yugoslavia made Yugo, you couldn’t get them into Japan. So less than 3 percent of the cars on their streets are from anywhere else in the world, the second largest auto producer in the world.

They did not really choose a strategy of opening up closed markets or of converting here at home the largest automotive market in the world through the intervention of more fuel-efficient vehicles. They were forced to do that by CAFE standards and so forth here. But they fought that every step of the way and forced on the American people choices that were very, very consumptive choices. So SUVs came on the market, and yet you could look over to Europe and see a Mercedes diesel run on biodiesel operating over in Europe.

Yet here we had something like the Hummer comes out, and it gets 9 miles to a gallon at a time when we know that we have to have more fuel-efficient vehicles.

I had an interesting experience a couple of years ago. I went up to the Detroit auto show, and I said I would like you to show me the floor with the new flex fuel or the biofuel vehicles, and the salesman just looked at me.

Americans being given the very same choices as consumers in other countries? Why have they been able to be more fuel efficient than we are?

And if I can say just one thing on solar energy, since I represent the solar energy research center, we make solar panels at a third of the cost of the Japanese, and they are just as efficient. In fact, they are more efficient, but they are bigger. Because they are bigger, they are one-third the cost. All of the companies in my district that are making these solar panels, they are being exported to Europe because Europe has the special incentives for renewable applications. And the majority of the technology on solar roofing and solar panels is being shipped to other countries because we don’t have those same incentives here.

So our government, those in the leadership here, can’t see their way forward. America is she wants to. The American people are with us on that. They know we have to change. Why don’t we make it easy?

Mr. SCHIFF. That is one of the things that drive me crazy. One of my staff just got a Toyota Prius. She had to wait 6 months to get that Prius. There is a 6-month waiting time to get a hybrid made in Japan.
We don’t have a nonSUV hybrid yet that I am aware of, an American car out on the road that competes with the Prius or with the Honda Civic hybrid. Why is it that some of the foreign automakers seem to know the American market better than we know ourselves?

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. If the gentleman would yield, I understand your confusion, and I share that. I think it has been so shortsighted that we as a Nation didn’t take the steps that we needed to do years ago in regard in terms of updating in a significant way the CAFE standard, the corporate average fuel economy standards in this country.

When gas prices started going up over the last many months, all of a sudden you saw people running around with their heads cut off, trying to think of quick-fix solutions.

You had the majority leader of the Senate, Senator Frist, he floated this idea of a $100 rebate to every American, in what was somehow going to solve the problem. Quick fixes are not going to solve the problem. We need serious solutions.

One of the things that should have been done years and years ago was updating the CAFE standards. It is interesting to hear Members of Congress who have been here for a long time, I listened to Senator Roth and others on the other side talking about this. They said, gee, if we had known what we were going to see today in terms of gas prices, we would have supported an increase in the CAFE standards back then. Well, you know, we don’t all have crystal balls, but we have to exercise our best judgment.

And the fact of the matter is that is a long overdue measure. And it is not a quick fix because it takes time for the fleet of cars to turn over. You can’t just change the corporate average fuel economy standards today and, presto, have a result. It requires some forward thinking.

The fact that we didn’t do it before was a big mistake, and I think people should hold people accountable for their mistakes. On the other hand, it is better late than never. We need to get moving on that, and we need to get moving on the whole menu of other options that we have been discussing today. There is no silver bullet to this. You need an array of options. You need a number of efforts going on at the same time.

But in order to get all of those things going, you need one essential ingredient, and that is some leadership and a combination of this issue and a commitment to this issue and a commitment to have a new direction and not just rely on the failed policies of the past that continue to get us into the mess we are in.

Mr. SCHIFF. The gentleman is exactly right. We have this choice. We have had this choice for several years. We can have more of the same, more of the same $3.50-a-gallon gas, maybe $4-a-gallon gas at the pump, more warming of the global environment, more production of greenhouse gases, more pain economically in terms of higher energy costs for businesses.

Or we can have a new direction. I think we have talked about several of the ingredients of that new direction tonight. The investment of biofuels: That helps our farms and it helps our economy, it helps our energy independence, and it helps our energy independence and our national security. Investment in alternative energy sources like solar power where the profit points are almost there, almost there for a great expansion of solar power. They just need a little incentivization before they can be broadly employed.

The development of windpower, geothermal, and the whole host of renewable energy sources. This is the new direction we need to take this country in a way we have a flare-up in the Middle East, as right now we are having this tragic situation, Hezbollah has attacked Israel, kidnapped soldiers and prompted this conflagration of the region, gas prices are going through the roof.

Iran thumbs its nose at the international community and says we are going forward with our nuclear program, gas prices go through the roof.

Hurricanes in the Gulf shut out refining capacity. We can’t predict, as you say. We don’t have a crystal ball. We don’t know next year if it is going to be a hurricane, or next year it is going to be the Middle East, or the Venezuelan head of state who is anathema of the United States, but we do know it will be something. And if we don’t take action to change the direction of our country to a new direction, we are going to be continuing to be funding a lot of the people that are bent on our destruction.

Ms. KAPTUR. I just wanted to add that if one looks at the automotive industry, and I have all major companies in my district and in my State, and talking about this, along with our focus, we have to continue to open closed markets of the world. That’s where markets expand. You have to put some energy there. You can’t just kind of put it on the back shelf.

Many years ago President George Bush the first went to Tokyo. I still remember he got very sick at a dinner, and he was there for auto parts talks, market opening talks. And ever since that day has not ever been an aggressive effort by any administration to open up the second-largest market in the world. So we have failed on the trade front significantly.

And the major automotive firms have chosen a strategy rather than an innovation strategy. So they have been moving plants around the globe seeking cheap labor, whether it is in China, Mexico, wherever it is, rather than focusing on the innovation that is inherent in the American people that was responsible for the dawn of the automotive age in this country in the first place.

Those kind of minds are still out there, but we are kind of wed to old technology and the fact that if you sell a very large vehicle in this country, you make a little more profit than if you sell a smaller vehicle. The larger vehicles use more gas and petroleum-based products. So that is in that mold for a very, very long time.

And if you go out and ask the average consumer what they are looking for, and the lines are showing it, they are looking for the new technology, and it just was not enough.

So the strategy that was chosen in the 1980s and 1990s has not led our Nation toward energy independence in vehicles. Now we see ads on television by the big companies saying we are trying to catch up. Well, we really need to catch up very, very quickly or they are going to become another segment of our wealth that are purchased by foreign interests and no longer belongs to us. We are seeing a lot of that as we pawn off pieces of America to try to secure long-term what we owe to the future, which I am very upset about, but alone can’t solve.

Nonetheless, I think our automotive companies really need to focus on innovation, listen to what the consumer is saying, give them what they want, and open up the closed markets of the world. That would go a long way to helping this industry revive. And then we have the legacy costs of the companies that have been in existence for a very long period of time that this Congress could do something about in order to make whole the pension and health benefits that workers were promised. That is a whole other Special Order.

I thank Congressman SCHIFF and Congressman VAN HOLLEN for allowing me to speak about such an important subject and one that is at the top of the list in terms of domestic security, and that is energy independence.

Mr. SCHIFF. I thank the gentlewoman for her leadership on this issue and on so many other issues here in the Congress.

I want to wrap up by bringing this back to where we started, and that is the integral nexus between energy independence and national security. You can imagine what a positive to our national security policy it would be if in our dealings in the Middle East, our dealings with Russia and China and our dealings with South America, if energy was not an issue in the sense we were not dependent on other parts of the world, and particularly the Gulf States. What a transformative effect that could have in a positive way on our national security policy. Energy independence is really key.

Our new direction, as outlined by real security, is energy independence by 2025. This is an achievable goal. It was suggested by the President of the United States that President Kennedy talked about when he talked about the Apollo project, but it can be done.
I have great confidence in the American people and the American entrepreneur. We can do this. It would eliminate our reliance on Middle Eastern oil. We would increase production of alternative fuels in America. We would promote hybrid vehicles, cellulosic ethanol technology in manufacturing, and we would enhance energy efficiency and conservation incentives. This is the direction Democrats feel we need to bring this country in order to make sure that our security is in fact very real.

I want to yield to my colleague from Maryland for his closing remarks and once again thank you for not only this evening, but for all of your work on the national security plan.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. I thank my colleagues, Mr. SCHIFF from California, again, for his leadership. And I think we have had a lot of territory in this hour. I think we will have a continuing conversation here in the Congress, and I am sure we will have a continuing conversation throughout the country about this very important issue.

And, again, it goes to the question about whether we take our words seriously in terms of moving the policy of this country forward. And you can’t have a situation where you have the President say this is a national priority, on the one hand, and then have a President say this is a national priority, on the one hand, and then have a situation where you have the American people; and, number two, you lose credibility with the American people, and the American entrepreneur. We can do this. It would eliminate our reliance on foreign oil and move us towards a new, cleaner energy independent as soon as possible in this country.

Last night, Congressman UDALL and a bipartisan group that I participated in met with Vinod Khosla about this issue of cellulosic ethanol and what potential it has in this country for transportation. Earlier today I participated with Congressman INGLIS of South Carolina, who chairs the Fuel Cell and Hydrogen Caucus, and I was elected United States Senator, but I want to thank my colleague from California, Mr. SCHIFF, for his leadership on this issue.

As the cochairman of the bipartisan Renewable Energy and Energy Efficiency Caucus here in the House, which has over 216 members, a majority of the House belong to our bipartisan caucus, Congressman MARK UDALL of Colorado and I, the Republican cochairman; and we are working together to advance many of the initiatives that they have talked about as quick as we can. I do think that tremendous energy work is put behind the goal of becoming energy independent as soon as possible in this country.

So I want to thank my colleague for his leadership on this issue. And, again, it goes to the question about whether we take our words seriously in terms of moving the policy of this country forward. And you can’t have a situation where you have the President say this is a national priority, on the one hand, and then have a situation where you have the American people; and, number two, you lose credibility with the American people, and the American entrepreneur. We can do this. It would eliminate our reliance on foreign oil and move us towards a new, cleaner energy independent as soon as possible in this country.

Last night, Congressman UDALL and a bipartisan group that I participated in met with Vinod Khosla about this issue of cellulosic ethanol and what potential it has in this country for transportation. Earlier today I participated with Congressman INGLIS of South Carolina, who chairs the Fuel Cell and Hydrogen Caucus here in the Fuel Cell event we had in Cannon Caucus.

Just a few days ago we had the Renewable Energy Expo here, which Congressman UDALL and I participated in. Through all of that, I would say that what we are doing is not this particular technology or that particular technology, because in many ways our free enterprise system is going to sort the winners and losers out. But, really, our position is we have got to do all of the above. Time is of the essence. I don’t think we can pick and choose right now. We need domestic capacity as we go through this transition. We need to move towards advanced transportation systems. Clearly, hybrids are a bridge. We want to promote that. But we have got to move through all these technologies. I think fuel cells have great applications but, frankly, so do the E85-based fuels.

So I just want to say that that is something that many Members from both sides of the aisle are doing an awful lot about.

Last summer the Congress passed the Energy Policy Act of 2005. This President signed it into law. Today we hailed, many people in a bipartisan way, the successes that the Americans have made in the past year. We have got to go further. Clearly, aggression is part of the plan. And the jihadists don’t just surface through al Qaeda. The jihadists surface through Hezbollah, frankly, a seasoned terrorist organization that has now come out in the open to use power in Lebanon, supported, without question, articulated last night on the floor of this House, by Iran and Syria. Democrats and Republicans, over and over again, last night, as we debated the resolution in support of the State of Israel, talked about who is backing Hezbollah right now. Hamas, also elected to governmental leadership in Palestine, includes the jihadists, people who have declared war on the United States of America and its ally, Israel. And this really is a war of global proportions. And we need to be realistic about this and share with the American people the seriousness of the moment that we live in and rise to our generational call to address this issue and not just think that this is about Iraq.

If we pulled out of Iraq tomorrow, Islamic jihadism is on the rise. And they continue, as we see in Lebanon, to seek a very important piece of power in Lebanon, supported, without question, articulated last night on the floor of this House, by Iran and Syria. Democrats and Republicans, over and over again, last night, as we debated the resolution in support of the State of Israel, talked about who is backing Hezbollah right now. Hamas, also elected to governmental leadership in Palestine, includes the jihadists, people who have declared war on the United States of America and its ally, Israel. And this really is a war of global proportions. And we need to be realistic about this and share with the American people the seriousness of the moment that we live in and rise to our generational call to address this issue and not just think that this is about Iraq.

Now, to lay the groundwork for what I am going to talk about, with the help of a couple of my colleagues, Mr. MCCOTTER from Michigan has joined me already, and I think the gentleman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX) will join me shortly. I want to talk a little bit about world events, but then get to the meat of this hour, and that is the United Nations and whether or not it is living up to its original charter, whether or not it is a viable organization today, or whether or not, frankly, it has been corrupted over time, especially in recent years.

But I want to say, to begin with, that I think to define this war that we are in as a war on terror misses the point in many ways. Terror is a tactic that our enemy is using, but it is not really a war on terror. We need to be honest that we are at war with the Islamic jihadists. The jihadists are spreading their networks around the world.

Earlier today Mr. ZARRAQI and Mr. ZAWARHI laid out specifically that they wanted to use our involvement in the Middle East as an opportunity to remove the infidels from Iraq, and then expand the califate, according to Mohammed, from Morocco in the Northwest all the way to the Philippines. Clearly, aggression is part of the plan.

And the jihadists don’t just surface through al Qaeda. The jihadists surface through Hezbollah, frankly, a seasoned terrorist organization that has now come out in the open to use power in Lebanon, supported, without question, articulated last night on the floor of this House, by Iran and Syria. Democrats and Republicans, over and over again, last night, as we debated the resolution in support of the State of Israel, talked about who is backing Hezbollah right now. And we need to be realistic about this and share with the American people the seriousness of the moment that we live in and rise to our generational call to address this issue and not just think that this is about Iraq.

resigned upon his appointment as Secretary of State by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1933. Foreseeing danger to peace in the rise of dictators, he advocated rearrangement, pled for the implementation of a system of collective security, supported aid short of war to the Western democracies, condemned Japanese encroachment into Indochina, warned all branches of the United States military well in advance of the attack on Pearl Harbor to prepare to resist simultaneous surprise attacks at various points.

Although Hull participated in some of the policy-making conferences of the allies, his major effort during the latter stages of World War II was that of preparing a blueprint for an international organization dedicated to the maintenance of peace and endowed with sufficient legislative, economic, and military power to achieve it.

Shortly after the outbreak of the war, Cordell Hull proposed the formation of a new world organization in which the United States would participate after the war. To accomplish this aim, in 1941 he formed an advisory committee on postwar foreign policy composed of Republicans and Democrats.

Mindful of President Wilson’s failure with the League of Nations, Hull took pains to keep discussion of the organization nonpartisan.

By August of 1943, the State Department had drafted a document, entitled “Charter of the United Nations,” which became the basis for proposals submitted by the United States at the 1944 Dumbarton Oaks Conference.

Poor health forced Hull to resign from office on November 27, 1944, before final ratification of the United Nations charter in San Francisco. President Roosevelt praised Hull as the one person in all the world who has done his most to make this great plan for peace, in effect, a fact.

Following nomination by Roosevelt, the Norwegian Nobel committee presented the 1945 Nobel Prize for peace to Cordell Hull in recognition of his work in the Western Hemisphere for his international trade agreements and for his efforts in establishing the United Nations.

Too ill to receive the award in person, Hull sent a brief acceptance speech that was delivered by the United States Ambassador to Norway, in which he wrote: “Under the ominous shadow which the Second World War and its attendant circumstances have cast on the world, peace has become as essential to civilized existence as the air we breathe is to life itself. There is no greater responsibility resting upon peoples and governments everywhere than to make sure that enduring peace will, this time, at long last, be established and maintained. The hearing lessons of this latest war and the promise of the new organization, help to be the cornerstones of a new edifice of enduring peace and the guideposts of a new era of human progress.”

As a matter of fact, the U.N. charter preamble says this: “We, the peoples of the United Nations, determine to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom. And for these ends, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one an another as good neighbors and unite our strength to maintain international peace and security. And ensure by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods that armed force shall not be used save in the common interest, and employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples.”

Now, that is a bold plan for an organization, to secure international peace and guarantee international security. And I just want to say, fundamentally, a fair assessment of the United Nations in 2006 on its original mission is a low grade. If not an F, it has got to be a D. The United Nations today, as was written yesterday in a column by Norm Ornstein in Roll Call, is effectively impotent in certain areas of the world today.

Clearly, as we look at the observers in southern Lebanon and the U.N.’s role with peace keeping, we are facing the most difficult challenges of our generation with respect to war and peace, and the United Nations is not effective anymore. That is the sad truth today, and we are trying to change that.

Here in the House of Representatives, we passed the Henry Hyde United Nations Reform Act and sent that bill to the United Nations, where we can’t even get agreement on a conference report. As a matter of fact, that bill said that there were 38 recommendations for reforming the United Nations. We cleaned up the graft and corruption, make it more efficient and accountable, have it live up to its original charter; and unless 31 of those 38 reforms were implemented, we were going to, the United States of America, withhold up to 20 percent of our dues to that organization. And we are, and will show later in this hour, by far and away the number one contributor to the United Nations in the world.

We were trying to bring some accountability to the United Nations, and I have to tell you that the resistance to that accountability not only by the United Nations but by the United States and United Nations, but there is resistance even in this country for reforming the United Nations.

I have to say this Member of Congress from the State of Tennessee, much like the Member of Congress from Tennessee who received the Nobel Peace Prize for starting the United Nations, looks back on the legacy of Cordell Hull and, sadly, says that we need to reevaluate our participation in the United Nations as long as it is going in the direction that it is going in.

Before I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, I want to point to a book that has been written, called The U.N. Exposed, by Eric Shawn.

Eric Shawn is not an author trying to make money writing a book. Eric Shawn is a very legitimate journalist who has been incredibly effective over the years at reporting on the United Nations. It is very similar to a reporter covering city hall that sees so many things going on in city hall that, after a long period of time, they just kind of look themselves in the mirror and say, this stinks and somebody needs to write about it. And this book documents all of the graft, corruption, inefficiencies that exist at the United Nations. The U.N. Exposed. And I want to just read a page out of it in the introduction to set the stage and then yield the floor to the gentleman from Michigan.

In the introduction it says: “Terrorism is not a United Nations priority. The majority of its members are focused on ‘development,’” which is “diplomat-speak” for increasing the amount of money coming into their own countries. Through it should be the most pressing international issue of the 21st century, is simply not on most U.N. agendas.

“The United States is compromised. The United States funds a whopping 22 percent of the U.N.’s $3.6 billion budget, pays 27 percent of an additional $3.6 billion in peacekeeping operation costs, and provides billions more for the U.N. agencies and related operations each year. And yet the United Nations has become the coliseum for confronting and opposing the United States. With the end of the Cold War and the rise of one lone superpower, the United States’ veto-wielding rivals press their agendas at our expense and maneuver for their own advantages, not ours.

“The United Nations Security Council guaranteed security for the Iraqis and an unstable and untenable environment for American and British forces attempting to enforce the Council’s mandates from 1991, when Saddam surrendered in the Gulf War, to the 2003 invasion made necessary by the U.N.’s malfaisance. Had the Council and the United Nations held to moral principles and enforced their resolutions and requirements, the war could have been prevented. There would have been clarity, not confusion, regarding Saddam’s possessions of weapons of mass destruction. His weapons of mass destruction created conditions of uncertainty that empowered his regime.
"The same mistakes are now being repeated elsewhere. The U.N. is incapable of effectively resolving the nuclear threats posed by Iran and North Korea, member states that have in some cases lied to U.N. officials, including those of the International Atomic Energy Agency, or, in other cases, ignored their request.

"While the U.N.'s humanitarian programs are rightfully praised for providing food, shelter, and medicine to millions of the world's needy, they have also come under questioning and criticism. The U.N.'s own independent investigation, headed by former U.S. Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker found that even the gems of the U.N. system, such as the World Food Program, the World Health Organization, and UNICEF, operated in Iraq with 'little transparency and oversight' amid evidence of 'gross mismanagement.'"

A fair assessment says the United Nations is not effective at all in international peace and security and they do provide humanitarian assistance, but even their provision of humanitarian assistance is grossly mismanaged, and basically everybody involved in the leadership of the United Nations is, in one way or another, benefiting financially from the very programs that come through the United Nations.

We are going to document even more of that as we go on. But at this point I want to yield to the gentleman from Michigan, THADDEUS MCCOTTER.

Mr. MCCOTTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for yielding.

I am here as a Representative from Michigan. And as many of you know, and I am sure you do, Mr. Speaker, Senator Arthur Vandenberg from Michigan played a key role in bringing the United States into the postwar world. He firmly established Grand Rapids as an isolationist. And yet as he saw the gathering clouds of World War II and the impact of isolationism and appeasement upon the course of world events, he quickly became a believer in the United States' role in the world, and not simply being in the world itself and going along with the tide of history but trying to direct that tide of history towards a positive outcome for our own citizens and for humanity.

This is why today, as an admirer of Senator Vandenberg and, yes, as an admirer of President Roosevelt, we have to admit that today the dream of President Roosevelt has been turned into a nightmare by the corruption of the United Nations.

The dream which President Roosevelt inherited from President Wilson and his League of Nations, a torch that President Roosevelt carried throughout election after election, despite its being many times unpopular, has been put in the hands of people who operate the United Nations not as an entity to bring about global peace and prosperity and security through mutual diplomatic action but rather as a corrupt political machine. In fact, the United Nations has one advantage over a traditional municipal political machine. It is that the enormity of their crimes tends to mask their crime.

One of the things which is most striking, as the gentleman pointed out, is the fact that when we look back upon the search for weapons of mass destruction by the Security Council and the resolutions that were passed and passed and passed, and ignored and ignored and ignored, is the simple, ineradicable fact that Saddam Hussein had the Oil-for-Food program and turned it into an instrument not only for his aggrandizement and enrichment at the expense of starving people in his own nation, he also utilized it to buy influence amongst member countries at the Security Council level.

When viewed in that light, it is easy to see why there was such discord and such incomprehensible division amongst former allies and erstwhile allies in the international body. And the simple fact that they are operating in the world today. And I think it is very difficult for us not to confront the reality that it is not performing that function, largely due to its own corruption.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his commentary.

What is the United Nations? To a lot of people, they may not have been there, they may not realize it, but it is an 18-acre compound on the East River in Manhattan, in New York City. And that 18-acre compound, which is very meticulously delineated, Eric Shawn's book, is basically a safe haven for everyone who operates there. They are immune from virtually everything. They do not even have to pay sales tax on the food that they eat in New York City. They do not have to pay their parking tickets. They operate with such impunity that they, frankly, have become incredibly arrogant toward our country.

The number two guy at the United Nations, Malloch Brown, recently just delivered a scathing analysis of the United States' position toward the United Nations as if we had no business whatsoever meddling in their organization, as if we should not in any way exert oversight when, again, about a third of all of their revenues come from us and they have this autonomy here in our country.

The Oil-for-Food scandal, which an investigation was ordered on here in the Congress, it showed such gross graft and corruption that it could very easily be the largest case of grand larceny in the history of our country in terms of the billions of dollars that were siphoned off and used to manipulate, to effectively bribe member countries; even, as one of the chapters in the book shows, the media, the press that covers the United Nations, setting up these organizations where reporters could actually draw income from outside of their work at the United Nations. Now, if that is not a conflict of interest for a journalist, I do not know what is.

But Saddam Hussein methodically set out to use the revenues from the Oil-for-Food scandal to keep the countries that could very well force the United Nations or hold the United Nations back from going in and enforcing the resolutions in Iraq. He used the money. It was a scheme. It was a scam, a multibillion-dollar scam. That has been documented here on the floor, but I do not think the people in this country ever really got it. I do not think that they fully understood it.

A summary of the time line, after Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait in 1990, the United Nations barred him from profiting from sales of his country’s oil. The sanctions were meant to keep him from rebuilding his military and pursuing a nuclear weapons program. It also deprived the Iraqi economy of its main export, leading to hunger and deprivation among its people, according to him, a condition that Saddam both exacerbated by hoarding the wealth his country possessed, and then publicized to win international sympathy. Eric Shaw’s book points to the fact that a lot of it was just propaganda coming out of Iraq by Saddam that, indeed, a lot of the children that he had claimed were starving to death because of the lack of oil revenues were not, in fact, starving to death. But he won a lot of international sympathy.

So now the sanctions gradually eroded. And in 1996 the United Nations created the Oil-for-Food program through which Iraq could resume oil sales to pay for humanitarian goods such as food and medicine. Saddam exploited, though, the renewed oil flow in three ways:

First, he simply ignored the sanctions and illegally sold oil to Syria, Turkey, Jordan, and other countries with no U.N. supervision, which furnished him by far his biggest barrel of illicit oil at $3.6 billion according to a Senate subcommittee investigation.

Second, Saddam and his loyalists used tricky pricing schemes, surcharges, and kickbacks to milk another $7 billion or more from oil buyers and sellers of humanitarian supplies as a result of Saddam’s successful arguments at the United Nations, that as a sovereign nation Iraq should be allowed to negotiate contracts directly.

Legitimate Iraqi oil profits went to a U.N.-controlled escrow account, but kickbacks were secretly routed by complicit companies to hidden regime bank accounts.

And, third, Saddam bribed foreign officials and others. He oversaw a list of bank accounts. Complicit companies to hidden regime officials and others. He oversaw a list of bank accounts.

Money flowed. Investigations have run. People just looked the other way. Mr. Wamp, this turns us for exercising oversight, saying that the United States has just become anti-U.N.

Listen, we all believed in the original legitimacy of the United Nations, the original mission, international peace and security. But I will tell you what, the United Nations is, if anything, not only not helping with international peace and security; the United Nations is in the way today sometimes of international peace and security if they are unwilling to enforce their own resolutions.

You might say, well, you know, if it is not the United Nations, then what? I got to say the coalition of the willing needs a lot of work. That is the bottom line. The coalition of the willing means countries willing to fight Islamic jihadists, willing to stand strong against terror, willing to engage, to say we have to drive this threat back. The United Nations go back and meet its original charter. It is, frankly, not an organization worthy of this level of support by the American people today.

That is the bottom line.

Now, I am prepared to yield to the gentlewoman from North Carolina, if she is ready. Are you ready? Ms. FOXX. I am ready.

Mr. WAMP. Yield to VIRGINIA FOXX from North Carolina.

Ms. FOXX. Thank you, Mr. WAMP. I appreciate your inviting me to be with you all today. It is a real treat to listen to you and Congressman McCotter. The things you have said I agree with wholeheartedly. I am not nearly as eloquent as the two of you. I am a much more plain-spoken person, I think, a product of having grown up in the mountains of North Carolina, and I think that in many ways you are being very kind about the United Nations.

I agree with you that the United Nations was born in a spirit of optimism and that people had hoped very much that the United Nations could provide peace and stability in the world. And we all want that. We all want that to happen.

But I will tell you, as I talk to my constituents and as they talk to me about the United Nations, even the average American, you don’t have to look at the average American knows that the United Nations has failed miserably in its role as a peacekeeper in this world. All we have to do is look at what is happening right now in Lebanon, what is happening in Israel, to know that it has failed miserably. We would not be having the problems that we are having in the Middle East if the United Nations were doing its job. I think that it is high time for Congress and the American people to demand a great deal more from the United Nations.

I think that our Secretary of State is doing a fabulous job in her job, and I think that the President was right when we could not get Ambassador Bolton confirmed by the Senate to his job, and I think that the President was right to appoint him on an interim appointment and that he is speaking for the majority of the American people and saying the kinds of things that need to be said.

I want to quote HENRY HYDE. Again, there are very few people in this House who are as eloquent as Chairman Hyde, and I think that it is entirely appropriate that the bill produced, the United Nations Reform Act, was named for him. I want to just quote one quote from him relating to that bill and relating to the United Nations:

‘‘No observer, be they passionate supporter or dismissive critic, can pretend that the current structure and operations of the U.N. represent an acceptable standard. Republican and Democrat administrations alike have long called for a more focused and accountable United Nations. Members on both sides of the aisle agree that the time has come for far-reaching reforms.’’

I think that the comments, again, that have been made here by my esteemed colleagues have set the stage for some of the things that we ought to be talking about. The United Nations charter has laudable goals, but, as I said, I am a much more plain-spoken person than some others. But when the rubber meets the road, the U.N. has failed miserably to put these ideals into practice, especially in recent years. And we have a duty here in the Congress and as a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, the United States, we have a duty to insist on a higher standard. We have a duty to ensure accountability of each and every American taxpayer dollar that goes to the United Nations.

I know my colleague is going to point out some of the problems with the U.N. Oil-for-Food program. But I want to say that from that program, to the lack of action with respect to genocide in Darfur, Sudan, to the tremendous human rights abuses by the U.N. peacekeeping staff during their mission to Congo, the U.N. is associated with fraud and abuse and needs reform.

We could list these things, and there is a long list, and I am going to talk a little bit about the history of scandals in the United Nations: the Oil-for-Food Program, we will talk a little bit more about; the peacekeeping operations; the Center for Human Settlement or Habitat; Settlement Rehabilitation Bribes. A methodical effort to make oil revenues back to the United States. And again, if it comes and drives him back and basivades his neighbor, and the world is rightly isolating him.

The American people are much more familiar with the U.N. Oil-for-Food dollars because, fortunately, the popular press and the popular media picked up a little bit on that program and have talked about it. But all of these programs have had scandals associated with them, and I think that just by highlighting this one program, we can give an example of what some of the others are.

I would like to come back in a few minutes and talk about some other issues that have been touched upon by Congressman WAMP, but I am going to turn to Iraq so that I can explain in some detail some of what went wrong with the Oil-for-Dollars.

Mr. WAMP. I thank the gentlewoman.

Put this in perspective: think like North Korea today. Kim Jong Il is defying the international will in terms of developing a nuclear program and nuclear weapons capabilities, so the world is rightly isolating him.

So back in 1990, Saddam Hussein invades his neighbor, and the world comes and drives him back and basically begins to isolate him and he can’t sell his oil to the world.

So he comes up with a scheme. Hey, this is what we can do: we can claim that children are starving and that our country is experiencing all these humanitarian crimes, and, as a result, we have got to kick the oil revenues back in.

What happens is the $64 billion worth of oil revenues which Oil-for-Food was supposed to send through a New York escrow account and on back for humanitarian needs, and the administration associated with getting the money back there. And the way the thing ended up getting corrupted, it goes through Jordan and Lebanon and other countries and other accounts and back to Iraq, and what happens with the money: military equipment, weap-os from Belarus, Bulgaria, China, France, India, Jordan, Russia, Poland, North Korea, South Korea, Syria, Ukraine and Yugoslavia. He bought with all that the military arsenal to put himself back on his feet in the nineties.

And who was co-opted into believing all that? The United Nations, very easily. How are they? Well, kickbacks. Bribery. A methodical effort to make sure that the very people that could expose this or stop this were all somehow on the payroll.

That is exactly what happened. It is one of the most outrageous stories in the history of the world, especially in an organization that most people have a good impression of. After all, when the light-blue flag of the United Nations shows up around the world, people think good thoughts. It is like the American Red Cross. They say, hey, that is nice, they are here. Little do they know, though, that there is this kind of fraud and abuse and corruption at the United Nations.

This is all documented now. We really need to evaluate how long this country is going to participate in a scam like this and then be criticized by the rest of the world every time we try to hold them accountable as being arrogant or too bossy, the things that they say.

Eric Shawn has done this country a service by putting all this in a document, his book, “The U.N. Exposed.” He really has. Again, he is just a journalist. He is just trying to show what he learned over the years reporting on the United Nations.

In an interview they asked him about Iran, because we now know what a threat Iran is. Iran is backing Hezbollah. That is all about this war. And, frankly, Ahmadinejad, the President of Iran, has denied that the Jews were even through the Holocaust. He says the Holocaust didn’t exist, and he wants to end Israel. He wants to destroy Israel. That is a stated objective of the guy running Iran now.

All right. So they asked Shawn about the Iran nuclear program, and he says this: “The United Nations has given Iran a 21-year head start in its development of nuclear technology, a country whose President now vows to wipe Israel off the map. It seems inconceivable, but the United Nations’ own nuclear watchdog, the IAEA, didn’t even know about Iran’s nuclear facilities for 18 years. Then in 2003, after Iran’s program was exposed, Iranian controversy and confirmed all of Iran’s violations. It took another 3 years for the issue to even reach the Security Council. Russia and China served as Iran’s linebackers on the governing board of the agency, refusing to allow Iran’s admission to be reported to the Security Council until earlier this year. The latest IAEA report details Iran’s many violations, such as the existence of uranium metal designs that can only be used for nuclear warhead production. It focuses on many unresolved questions about Iran’s nuclear capabilities as a whole.

“Despite the crisis, Russia and China, whose economic interests clearly lie in protecting Iran, have already rejected by decree any declaration they oppose sanction, creating the impossibility of full council-backed action. Even a legally binding Chapter 7 resolution would not result in a vote for sanctions, a naval blockade or any other war. The problem may require another coalition of the willing to effectively deal with what the Security Council is unwilling to achieve.”

He says in his book: “It was not the U.N.’s effort that exposed the extensive global black market in nuclear technology peddled by Pakistan’s Dr. A.Q. Khan. No U.N. committee ordered Muammar Qaddafi to surrender his weapons of mass destruction programs. Those successes are among the achievements of the proliferation security initiative, the brainchild of Ambassador John Bolton under the Bush administration. Compare PSI’s actual achieve-mants with the U.N. failure on the nuclear weapons front. Iran only has to look at Security Council’s crippling by Saddam to understand why President Ahmadinejad calls the U.N.’s resolutions meaningless.”

That is the bottom line. Their resolutions are now meaningless. They have no credibility. Our enemies know that they have been co-opted and corrupted and bribed and that they are not going to enforce their resolutions. Iran now knows that they can get away with anything that the United Nations does.

How dangerous is that? Well, I would say the average citizen, not just in this country but around the world, they know, though, that there is this kind of fraud and abuse and corruption at the United Nations. They say, hey, we think good thoughts. It is like the American Red Cross. They say, hey, that is nice, they are here. Little do they know, though, that there is this kind of fraud and abuse and corruption at the United Nations. They know it. And so they just laugh off anything that the United Nations does.

As a matter of fact, they are AWOL, AWOL, absent without leave, on the critical issues of terrorism and international security. They will not stand tall.

On the issue of human rights, what a disaster the human rights activities of the United Nations are today. They have put the fox in charge of the hen house. They have let some of the most egregious human rights violating countries play a prominent role in human rights decisions by the United Nations. How absurd is that? I yield to Mr. McCotter.

Mr. McCOTTER. Mr. Speaker. I thank the gentleman. I am very happy, too, with Mr. Shawn producing this book, because I hope it brings light to the problems at the United Nations. I would also like to thank the gentlewoman for her kind remarks about it.

For us to say, well, what is the problem? We know that the world is not perfect. And somehow carry out its original charge of international peace and security.

I have been a Member of the United States Congress for 12 years. I am not an expert on these things, but I have studied them and I learned them. I have very little faith in the United Nations to do much of anything on intern-tional peace and security.

They do feed people that need to be fed. They do reach humanitarian needs. That is good. But that does not mean all of the other things that they do are good.

As a matter of fact, they are AWOL, AWOL, absent without leave, on the critical issues of terrorism and intern-national security. They will not stand tall.

On the issue of human rights, a disaster the human rights activities of the United Nations are today. They have put the fox in charge of the hen house. They have let some of the most egregious human rights violating countries play a prominent role in human rights decisions by the United Nations. How absurd is that? I yield to Mr. McCotter.
the proper rectitude that is expected or the proper perspicacity that is required under an international crisis.

Many people in my district and throughout America will say to themselves, well, the U.N. is corrupt. That is not news to us. We are not surprised that champagne-sipping, caviar-chomping globalists are making a mess of the jobs that we have entrusted to them.

But there are several points that are important. Even if we are tempted to shut out the ramifications for the world of the United Nations corruption, let us remember that we are paying for it. The United States taxpayers are the largest contributors to the United Nations.

Now, by any objective measurement, this is not a sound investment for the American taxpayers, given the current circumstances occurring at the United Nations. I think that that is insane for us to subsidize a corrupt political machine. I do not think it is wise for us to subsidize it at all. I think that we should terminate it if it proves that the reforms that we are trying to achieve are impossible.

I think that we should now be prepared to decide that we continue to demand accountability from them. But I think it is also important, as Mr. WAMP from Tennessee and Ms. FOXX from North Carolina and others are trying to do, is to make the American public aware that this is not some esoteric exercise in international law. This is a direct threat to your sovereignty, inalienable constitutional rights as an American citizen.

If we do not demand accountability from the United Nations, if we continue to allow the United Nations to believe itself, as a self-aggrandized harbringer and herald of a new world order, then we will feel the ramifications not only in places like North Korea and Iran and Iraq, we will feel those ramifications in Iowa and New Hampshire and Idaho.

That is why we are engaged in this discussion tonight. It is not only to decry and curse the darkness of the past, it is to try to light a candle upon the unsavory activities of the United Nations, to try to engage the American public with an awareness of the realities of the consequences to them should U.N. reform not occur; again, in our own way, to try to start the journey of the thousands of miles that is U.N. reform, and put that organization back on a track that will serve the people of the United States, that will serve the citizens of other nations, and will again rekindle Franklin Roosevelt's dream for that organization.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his participation and his contributions to our country. He is one of the most articulate Members of the U.S. House of Representatives, very bright man. I am grateful for his leadership. He talked about the U.S. paying 22 percent of the overall dues to the United Nations, and 27 percent of the peacekeeping operations around the world.

You know, China has the same Security Council power at the United Nations as the United States. China pays 2 percent of the United Nations dues. So at the very least, one of the reforms should be Security Council reforms on the balance of power.

Because frankly, again I have been to the United Nations several times. They do not treat the United States well. And I do not understand why. I know there are a lot of excuses why. But I will tell you this. We are footing the bill and many other countries are not. And the ones that have the same kind of veto power through the Security Council need to be carrying more of the weight, especially when you consider the gross trade imbalance that our country now has with China. It is not exactly like China needs a lot of help financially, they need to pull their weight. So I am prepared to yield to the gentlewoman from North Carolina.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I thank Mr. WAMP. I appreciate that very much. I would go even farther than you have gone in terms of talking about the amount of money that we have put into the United Nations.

I think that we should lower completely, to a very low amount, what we give to the United Nations. And if we get other countries to increase the amount of money that they give, then I think that we should seriously think about withdrawing from the United Nations altogether.

It is such a corrupt organization. It does so little for what it should be doing, that I think that it is something that we definitely should give some thought to.

I want to go back. You mentioned the Malloch Brown speech. I really think it is that we little bit about that, because I think that Malloch Brown's speech and the comments that he made are an indication of the fact that the members of the United Nations, people at the United Nations, are not out of touch with the world.

You described the little spot of ground that the United Nations sits on. I have been there too, went there last year for the second time in my life. I went there as a young person to visit the United Nations, you know, thinking again idealistically about what the United Nations did.

I went there and took my grandchildren to show them the United Nations and get them a little bit of sense of what it is. But those people who come here from other countries I think really, really are out of touch. I want to make a couple more comments about what Malloch Brown said. I find it so ironic that he would come in and criticize the American people.

We are the only superpower in the world. We are undoubtedly the most successful country in the world. And yet we are criticized by people in nations of the world, by almost everybody in the United Nations, for what we do. I find it so ironic that we provide so much of the money for the United Nations.

When you look around, you see that we are the most successful country in the world, and how these people can come in and criticize us for what we do. I want to say, our Ambassador Bolton said, it was a criticism of the American people. I think that is absolutely true.

He criticized our people. I think that is such an affront to us, and I think the American people understood that as an affront. And he chastised the Bush administration because we had not constructively engaged the American people in what good things the United Nations was doing. He is telling us we are too inadequate to explain that.

Well, the American people are very smart people. We are the smartest people in the world too, I think. They understand, rightfully, if the United Nations was doing what it was supposed
I want to thank Congressman WAMP for bringing this Special Order here tonight. I think you are right. We need to talk about this. What is going on in the Middle East right now is because of the failure of the United Nations, not the failure of the United States, not the failure of the Bush administration, not the failure of President Bush. It is the failure of the United Nations to keep peace in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I think we need to keep the pressure on them to reform the way they do things, and if they do not, I think we need to get out.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for all she contributes here in the House of Representatives. Let me say in closing, this is not now a far-out wild kind of a position that we are taking.

You know, I am a very reasonable person, with friends all around the world. The last 12 years I have, through the National Prayer Breakfast, and other ways, engaged friends all around the world. I am very much for us being engaged in the world, investing in the world. This is not a close-minded kind of a position. It is not a paranoid position. This is looking at the facts, really analyzing the bottom line of the United Nations. It is not meeting its mission. It has become ineffective, inefficient. It has lost credibility. The very people that are criticizing our country are enjoying the multimillion-dollar townhomes they live in in Manhattan. They enjoy the fruits of our free enterprise system, but they do not recognize the human rights and the responsibilities.

The original charge of the United Nations was to ensure international peace and security. So I would just say if we want to be guaranteed international peace and security and sleep comfortably at night, we better not put our faith and trust in the United Nations. Put it in the men and women in the uniform of the Armed Forces of the United States of America and our allies who are willing to stand against tyranny and destruction. That is the last best hope for freedom, not the United Nations.

30-SOMETHING WORKING GROUP

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MEEK) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to address the House here on this Thursday evening. As you know, the 30-something Working Group comes to the floor daily to not only share with Members of the House, but also with the American people, issues that are facing our Nation and things and ideas that we have on this side of the aisle that can assist us in moving this country in the right direction.

Here in the House, as you know, we have been sharing, not only with the Members, but also with the American people a plan for a new direction for America, and a new direction that will be helping a number of Americans in their everyday lives, making sure that we have affordable health care, as it relates to fixing the issue on prescription drugs and as it relates to costs, also dealing with issues such as the minimum wage, making sure that American workers are able to receive an increase, just like we have received an increase here in the House of Representatives over a period of a number of years, year after year. We will talk about that a little further.

As you know, we have a plan here in the House, where we have been not only calling for a vote, but asking the Republicans to join us here and increase the minimum wage.

We want to increase it to $7.25 an hour. It is now $5.15. There are millions of Americans that are still, since 1977, not able to see an increase in minimum wage.

Also cracking down on price gouging, we have talked about that, we have tried to fix that issue. The Republican majority has blocked us from being able to do that.

The simple fact is, Mr. Speaker, the majority actually wins here in this House. Right now, that is the Republican majority, and it is important that folks understand that that is the case, and that we have the will and the desire to lead in that area and making sure that American people are able to receive an increase in the minimum wage.

Another issue, in putting America in a new direction, is making sure that we cut costs as it relates to student loans, cut interest rates in half and make sure that it is affordable for families. So many families are going to be sending their children off to college this fall. Some will not, because they can’t afford it.

Student loans have gone up. Student aid has gone down. It is important that we not only cut costs but also demanding the next generation of leaders and making sure that we have an educated America, to make sure that parents and grandparents are able to see their children or grandchildren do better than what we had one generation, mainly, because of affordability, and also access.

Also making sure, ensuring that retirees can retire in dignity, protecting Social Security, making sure that it is not privatized, making sure that it is here for future generations is our goal. We want to make sure we are able to do that and being able to place America in a new direction.

Also, something that the Republican majority has failed to do is pay as we go, making sure that whatever we invest in that we show how we are going to pay for it. I think it is very, very important.

Mr. Ryan and I here this evening will point out a number of these issues that are not being addressed. But we have already made a commitment to the American people in housedemocrats.gov, in our commitment of putting America in a new direction, making sure that we meet the needs of everyday working Americans. So with that, Mr. Ryan, if I can, I would be more than happy to yield to you, sir. It is once again a pleasure to be on the floor with you, to be able to hold a flag with the 30-something Working Group, to make sure that we share with the American people things that we are working on, will try to work on and will, if given the opportunity to, do so.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I always enjoy our afternoon sessions here much better than the late night sessions that we normally have. But you made a point earlier that I think we need to expound upon, that is, the issue of debt and balancing the budget. You mentioned PAYGO.

One of the fundamental issues we need to get our hands around, as the country blesses us with the majority in the fall, is that we have got to figure out how we are going to live within the tremendous debt that we have.

We have, as a country, borrowed more, and you have a great poster up there, we have borrowed more from foreign interests in the last 5 years than every President prior to George W. Bush has in the last 224 or 225 years. That’s a lot of money that we owe Japan, China, OPEC countries.

We don’t have the money to be giving the tax cuts that we have, war spending, military spending. We don’t have the money so we go out and borrow it. It is very important that we will do as a Congress, and the first few days that we are here as a Democratic majority,
Mr. RYAN of Ohio. What this really illustrates is our plan, as we have it here before I get into the homeland security, our plan is, as we begin to rein in the spending from the Republican Congress, cut out the corporate welfare, cut out the Medicare and Social Security, and all the major subsidies that are going to all the big pharmaceuticals and health care industries, what we want to do is—

So for the parent loans and the student loans, in the first day or two that we are here, we will cut the interest rates on those loans in half. You will save thousands of dollars over the life of your loan, about $5,000 for the average loan. We will raise the minimum wage, and that is for a single mom who works for minimum wage, who lives in poverty right now. That is unacceptable in the United States of America.

Another thing that we will invest in that this administration and the Republican-led Congress have failed to address is the issue of border security. These are facts that are going to show you here. When you compare, because I think again the rhetoric on the other side is right where it needs to be, but the reality is something drastically different. If you look at here, Clinton, and these are all comparisons, President Clinton and what he was doing under his term, two terms, and what happened under President Bush and trying to compare, the average number of new Border Patrol agents added, per year, under the Clinton administration, the average was 642 Border Patrol agents per year.

Under the Bush administration, 411 per year. It is one thing to say you are for protecting this country from illegal immigration, and it is another thing to do it. Under President Clinton, we were able do it under his leadership.

Fines for immigration enforcement, through the INS, in 1999, under President Clinton, 417 Completion immigration fraud cases, 1995, under President Clinton, 6,455; in 2003, 1,389, 78 percent fewer. Democrats understand how to administer government and what needs to be done. Under the leadership of President Clinton, we were able to achieve success.

I wish we could keep going in the right direction.
But, unfortunately, under the Republican Congress, under the Republican House and Senate, under President Bush, this Congress has consistently taken the country in the wrong direction, and I think it is frustrating for a lot of people because I think the rhetoric is there.

The numbers for 2004 have come in, and a lot of our friends on the other side want to tell us how great the economy is doing. I invite all to come back to my district where we have thousands of Delphi workers and thousands of General Motors workers and steelworkers and people who are not doing so well, and an increase in the minimum wage would affect them.

But the numbers have come in from 2004; and in 2004, the top 1 percent, their real income grew by 17 percent for the top 1 percent. Same people that get the corporate welfare, same people that get the tax cut, real income grew by 17 percent. The bottom 99 grew by 1½ percent.

Is there economic growth? Yeah. The problem is it is not affecting everybody. The problem is it is just 1 or 2 percent of the people. Even upper-income, upper-middle-class people did not benefit from real wage growth like they should have.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. It is so lopsided and so one-sided. Of course, Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress would come to the floor and say, oh, the economy is doing great, what are you talking about? I do not know what these folks are whining about that are making $5.15 an hour; I do not know what their problem is. Why are they talking about an increase in the minimum wage? Matter of fact, what is the minimum wage?

Well, let me just say this, they would not know because the Republican majority has not raised the minimum wage since 1997. The cost of whole milk has gone up 24 percent. Bread has gone up 25 percent. A 4-year public college education has gone up 77 percent. Health care costs have gone up 97 percent, and of course, regular gas, and this is just regular gas, has gone up 136 percent.

We have Republican leaders that are here saying in so many words not over my dead body am I going to raise the minimum wage. Of course, what are you talking about? The economy is doing great. If you let the Republican majority tell you that, you know what? In 1998 Members of Congress received $3,100 in a raise. In 1998, no minimum wage increase. In 2000, $4,600 raise for Members of Congress; in 2000, minimum-wage workers, zero. 2001, $3,800 increase, just got one the year before, Members of Congress; 2001, zero for minimum-wage workers. 2002, $4,900 increase, we just had an increase, but you know what? That is not good enough. $4,900 increase; 2002, of course, 2003, Members of Congress, $4,700, who believe it is kind of good when you can press the button and give yourself a raise, but then you turn around, no increase for minimum-wage workers. They need to suck it up.

We are okay. $3,400 increase, thanks to the Republican majority; 2004 minimum wage, no increase, thanks to the Republican members of Congress, $4,000, hey, it is a wonderful thing; minimum-wage workers wish they can go to work and say, hey, guess what I want, a $4,000, I know you just gave me one last year, I want another one this year for minimum-wage workers. 2006, $3,100 proposed for Members of Congress, and if it is like previous years, this is what it will be; 2006, zero as we stand here today.

So as people start talking about well, you know, the economy is doing great on the Republican side. Oh, do you not know this is great. The indicators of the indicators say it is going to be a great year for Members of Congress and for the top 1½ percent or 1 percent that is making millions and millions and millions that are millionaires. For these big-time oil executives that are with the $338 million retirement package, it is going to be great for them.

It is going to be great for the oil industry after they had that meeting over in the White House complex thanks to the rubber-stamp Congress. They made the energy policy there, rubber-stamp Congress approved it, and look at these profits for big oil companies: $34 billion profits in 2002; 2003, $59 billion; in 2004, $84 billion; and in 2005, $113 billion.

Now, I am not on the floor as a Democrat so Congress complaining about things not going my way. Well, guess what. It is not about my way. It is about the American way, and no one tells you, no one says when you pull up to the gas pump, hey, you over there, let me see your party affiliation. Are you a Democrat or a Republican? As you pull up to the gas pump, hey, you over there, let me see your party affiliation. Are you a Democrat or a Republican? Since there has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Since there has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil.

The cost of whole milk has gone up 24 percent. Bread has gone up 25 percent. A 4-year public college education has gone up 77 percent. Health care costs have gone up 97 percent, and of course, regular gas, and this is just regular gas, has gone up 136 percent.

Since there has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Since the bottom line with the minimum wage is that the increase in the minimum wage is good for the economy. In 1997, when it was raised, there were 11 million new jobs that were created after the increase in the minimum wage, 11 million new jobs. States that have a higher minimum wage than the Federal minimum wage have an increase in business start-ups, an increase in sales, retail sales, because it is a different philosophy. It puts the money in the pockets of the consumers and allows them to go out and spend the money, and that stimulates the economy. There has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil, Mr. MEEK of Florida. Since there has been oil.

We have now witnessed what it looks like when the neconservative agenda is implemented, and just look around. If you want to know what happens, just look around. You see it.

Well, we are trying to say is an increase in the minimum wage, cutting student loans in half, implementing the 911 recommendations, shoring up our border security, these are things that we are going to do; and we have a long history in our party of doing it, and we will continue to do it when we take over.

But it is important to recognize that the statistics are there regarding the minimum wage. We could sit here and make moral arguments all night long because it is, it is the morally right thing to do; but at the same time it is good for the economy and it is good for people all over the country, and I think the more we recognize that, the better off we will go.

I want to make one more point. When you talk about this 7 million people who make minimum wage and the underclass and the people all over our country who are living in poverty, and the more we recognize that, the better off we will go.

This is what an increase in the minimum wage does. That is what cutting interest rates on student loans in half, that is what does. That is when you look at the Democratic Party’s innovative incentives for venture capital and research and all of these things that we are doing, broadband access for all Americans in the next 5 years, when you look at what we want to do with alternative energy sources, by God, we cannot just reject science outright.

Let us turn it up. You know, let us get America focused on an alternative energy plan, and we can do that and that is doable; but we need the leadership here in Congress and the resources. Instead of going to the top 1 percent to give them a tax cut, we should be focusing on what is the next generation of alternative energy going to be?

Let us implement the recommendations from the 9/11 Commission. Let us secure our ports. We can do all these things; and at the same time as we are doing this, we have to talk about what Mr. TANNER came down here a couple of weeks ago to talk about with us, Dennis Cardoza from California, his piece of legislation, that says we are going to audit, we are going to audit the Federal Government, and we are going to make sure that there is no fat, no waste, no abuse, no misappropriate funds, no wasted money, no misallocated funds, and frankly, like in Iraq, there are funds missing, $9 billion. Nobody knows where it is.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. In Iraq missing? We are missing money here.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. I know.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. There are agencies, Mr. Speaker, in the millions, oh, we do not know what happened to $20 million. They just write it off like it is nothing. I mean, you do not even have to go as far as Iraq, right here in Washington, D.C., because the rubber-stamp Congress will not call these individuals in. People are in committee talking about, I do not know where it went; it came to us.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. You know what Mr. TANNER’s bill says, it is our bill, it says that if you are the Secretary of the Department and you cannot pass these audits after a couple of years, you have got to come back before the United States Senate and you have got to get confirmed again because you are not doing your job.

We are trying to govern that is based, it looks like it is 1950, but society has moved forward. Society has decentralized, and the Republican Congress, they are like dinosaurs that just do not recognize the changes that have come in this world and have not done the due diligence necessary to reform government.

I mean, you can say, well, here is the Democrats making this up again. We do not have to make anything up. Look how FEMA worked with Katrina. Look at how after the military portion of the war in Iraq, look at how we have done after that, not only losing money but not achieving the objective, not really having an objective, to having a big problem there, too.

Mr. MEEK. 1845

As Newt Gingrich said last week on Meet the Press, with all that is going on around the world, our bureaucracies do not have the capabilities of handling all these situations. State Department, Pentagon, Department of Defense, all of these. Come on. We need to reform this government and we don’t have time to wait.

Because if there is going to be a terrorist attack in the United States of America, it is not going to be like Katrina where we have 5 days where we could watch it on the Weather Channel and know it is coming. This government needs reformed and it needs reformed immediately and that means getting to the bottom of things. That means getting all the facts necessary. That means government.

That what also means, Mr. MEEK, is that some people are going to get embarrassed. Maybe people just need to come before Congress and say, “Mr. MEEK, under this system, no one could do this job.” Maybe that is the case. I will give you the benefit of the doubt.

You appointed equestrian attorneys and all this other stuff to key positions. Yes, there has been a lot of cro- nyism here, let’s not make any mistakes. It takes money to buy votes and money during Katrina, bottom line. But at the same time, maybe there are good people, hardworking Americans, that want to serve their government that are trapped in a bureaucracy that was designed in the 1930s or 1940s or 1950s or 1960s and have done and they can’t work within this bureaucracy.

Have the decency and the guts to try to reform it.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Somebody needs to be embarrassed? Somebody needs to be fired.

Embarrassed? Oh, please. They are not just following the lead of the Republican majority. If I was an agency department head or secretary or someone confirmed by the Senate, I mean, when I look at my chart here, when I look at $1.05 trillion in borrowing from foreign nations, dethroning 42 Presidents, 224 years of history where they only borrowed $1.01 trillion, how in the world could I re-in a department head where I have endorsed this, in the trillions of dollars, $1.05 trillion in 4 years alone. It is almost like me calling my children into the room and to say: You’re eating the ice cream sitting right in front of you. You’re going to eat heavy. You’re going to get sick.

They say: Well, Dad, look at you. You have eight gallons of ice cream sitting right in front of you. How can you talk to me about not eating at 11 o’clock at night and eating too much sugar?

How in the world can the Republican Congress go to these department heads and can’t find $27 billion dollars that are missing in their agency and they have borrowed, here in this Congress, $1.05 trillion, record breaking, from foreign nations.

I am not going to even spend time taking the stuff off because I wish I had time to deal with it but I don’t.

The bottom line is these are the countries that own a part of the American apple pie because of the mismanage- ment of the Republican majority. That is the bottom line. It is the countries that we don’t need to call them out. They are buying our debt. If you came to me and said, my good friend, can I borrow $50 from you? I consider us good friends, but if I loaned you $50, our relationship is now changed. Even if you pay me back, which I think you will, within 5 or 6 days, our relationship has changed because you have asked to borrow some of the money that I work hard for, that I can spend on issues doing with my family.

These countries have bought our debt. The relationship has changed, thanks to the Republican majority and the White House. $1.01 trillion, 224 years, Mr. Speaker, of the country’s history, 4 years under the Bush admin- istration and the rubber-stamp Con- gress. You dethrone 224 years of history, of borrowing from foreign nations. We borrow a record number and these are the nations: Japan, China, the UK, the Caribbean, Taiwan, OPEC nations. Who are the OPEC nations? Let’s just go down the list because there are so many but they own $67.8 billion of our debt: Iran, Iraq, Libya, Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, Nigeria, Ku-wait, Qatar, the UAE. I can go on. Es- sentially I can go on and on and on. Meanwhile, folks come to the floor and get all swollen and saying, we need to watch these foreigners and what they’re doing and how they’re doing it.

The bottom line is these foreigners have bought our debt, thanks to you. It is upsetting. It is upsetting to the point that we have veterans that are out there allowing us to salute one flag, laid their life down, watched their friends die, and we are sitting here giving tax cuts to billionaires and misappropriating dollars and not providing the oversight. So how in the world a Member of Congress can sit up here, especially on the majority side and talk about someone in Congress who has misappropriated dollars and they don’t know where they are. This rubber-stamp Republican majority has given the White House everything they want. And what do we have to show for it?

Let’s look at the Middle East. Let’s look at something as far as the eye can see that folks start talking about an exit strategy. How in the world can you come up with a strategy when you have done it alone and have given the White House everything they wanted? The Congress, well-documented, misled. You got the White House saying, well, you know, we were misled, too. The President has said, well, as it relates to the situation on the ground, saying that they have to provide their own security, that’s for a future President to deal with. He has already pointed and said, That’s for a future President to deal with.

Congress, of course, rubber-stamp Republican Congress, yes, sir, Benny Hill salute, yes, sir. Whatever you want. So shall it be written, so shall it be done. Mr. President.

This is the case in a democracy. Bill Clinton did not celebrate that relationship. Even Bush I did not celebrate that relationship. It goes to show you when democracy breaks down and government breaks down and you have this rubber-stamp, rally-rally-rally Congress, that we’re going to support you no matter how bad your policies are, we’re going to rubber-stamp everything that you do, how in the world can they rein someone in and have oversight and say, we don’t know where the $24 million that we’ve given you of the taxpayers’ dollars are and how they were spent? Or wasted? You can’t answer that? You’re fired.

The bottom line is we are going to subpoena you and the rest of the folks that work in that agency until we find out where the $24 million has gone. The real issue is this. The American people, Democrat, Republican, Independent, someone that is not voting now and is now taking interest in what is happening in Washington, D.C., has to have a problem of what’s going on. I am just going to say that the facts are what they are. Some nights I come to the floor, I say, it’s not even fair. It’s just too much stuff. It’s too much to talk about. It’s too much to even shed light on. We come to the floor and we share the same information many times because it is so historical. It is historical in a way to where that never, never before in the history of this country has it ever been this way. I know it took me 10 minutes to answer your question that you put out there, but I had to put it out there.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. I appreciate you cutting your answer short.

I agree with you wholeheartedly. If we don’t recognize and understand from A to Z what needs to be done in reforming the Government to make these schools there that need these dollars of our constituents, we are in the service industry down here. We administer programs and we regulate commerce and we take care of foreign policy and we build a military, raise a military, raise an army. We have that obligation. I commend you for your passion and your support and your ideas which do not go unnoticed. But it is so important for us to recognize when we get down here, the few decisions that we will make immediately will have an immediate impact on the lives of every American. By auditing the Government and by going back to make sure that we can figure out how Government needs to look and run and be administered and executed in the 21st century based on an economy that is based on knowledge and information and science, not necessarily industry and huge auto companies and huge auto companies and big bureaucracies were needed to combat and administer and account for the entire cost. If we can even maintain a common denominator we need to maintain those principles, but at the same time Government needs to change.

There are so many programs that have to be reined in on, the programs that will ultimately lead to economic development: the manufacturing extension program, the Small Business Administration 7(a) loan program. These are the kind of things that local economic development folks can use. We need to focus on how we export goods out of this country. We have been playing a lot of defense and I think the sentiment that you feel in places like Ohio and Indiana and Pennsylvania and the fact is the country is working and we can do more from a production standpoint, but it is not the case in a democracy. That is not the case in a democracy.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. In closing, we really have to look at what is happening right now. I know we are doing all that we can. We can only legislation. We were able to stop the privatization of Social Security by having over 500 town hall meetings throughout the country. The President burned all kinds of Federal jet fuel flying around the country trying to convince people that they need to privatize their Social Security. That was very, very unfortunate. Taxpayers’ money was spent. Still the plan was abandoned.

We also pushed very hard to make sure that we pay as little as possible on the floor. We are still fighting on that as it relates to our Federal spending. You talk about the tax and spend and whatever the case may be. I can tell you that Republicans can’t look in the mirror here in the House, the majority can’t look in the mirror and say that they are the example of fiscal responsibility because I think the history of this country will show and this 109th Congress, and even the Congress before that, that there has been more spending in this Congress than any other Congress in the history of this country, especially when you look at what happened during the Lyndon Johnson years versus the Bush years. Because right now you are seeing with the rubber-stamp Congress and President Bush that the Lyndon Johnson administration and the Congress at that time has been dethroned as it relates to spending.

So I think it is very important that we look at that. I think it is also important to look at our plan, America going in a new direction, going into a new direction, making sure that they have representation here in this House. And this is for every American, not just Democrats, not just Republicans, not just Independent, not just individuals that have decided to participate in the political process, making sure that we help working families every day and the individuals that are retired and our veterans and all of the folks that we should be fighting for in a very fierce way.

I think it is important that if you folks really want to look at making sure these oil companies no longer price gouge Americans, making sure that we have affordable health care and prescription drug care, making sure that there is a way to make a livable wage, that is something that we are working very hard on.

We are going to start with the minimum wage, moving that to $7.25 from $5.15, making sure that the Congress maximum wage, moving that to $7.25 from that working families are able to make that we have affordable health care and folks really want to look at making our way.

And so our leadership that we provide from Article I, section 1 of the United States Constitution, which creates this House of Representatives, I am excited about the possibilities, come January, that we will have, when we are running this government, at least from the House side and hopefully from the Senate side too.

But like you said, we want to use all of the talents, all the creativity, all of the ability and intellect that this country can muster to make sure we are pushing it forward. As you said, with alternative energies and investments in education and getting action with how we are going to create wealth in the 21st century, through business incubators and some of these small business programs that we have that can go and help and retool small businesses that don’t have the wherewithal to pay $1 million for consultants to come in.

We have a public program that allows businesses to retool themselves for 80 or $90,000. And I have had people in my office who have experienced this program. It led to tremendous job growth here in the being.

So there are things that we can do. And I think it is an exciting time for all of us. And I very much look forward to us doing this in January.

I am going to come back to that quote later, Mr. Speaker, because I think it says so much about some of the things that we learned while we were in Iraq. Most importantly, I will come back and tell you who it was that originally said that.

The first thing I want to say tonight, though, is an enormous thank you and congratulations to the brave Americans who serve the United States in uniform.

When you get off the plane in Baghdad, you realize what they have to put up with, particularly during the summer. When the door opens on that plane, it is like opening the door of an oven. And there to greet you are bright young Americans, and they are in full uniform, helmets, heavy flak jackets. And I don’t know what the temperature was, but it was the hottest I have ever experienced in my life. And those are the conditions under which our brave Americans do their business every day. And it is not just that they do it for 8 hours a day with long lunches and coffee breaks. The folks over there are working 12 hours a day seven days a week, in many cases. And we have seen and produced some of the greatest individuals in the history of the world, and being an American is an adventure.

The most frustrating part, I believe, in the last several years, and we have said this before on this floor, is that after 9/11, with all of the political capital that the President had, with the whole country watching him, the best, greatest most demanding challenge he could come up with was for the American people to go out and go shopping. You know, that, I think, illustrates the kind of leadership we do not need in all of these changing times.

And so our leadership that we provide from Article I, section 1 of the United States Constitution, which creates this House of Representatives, I am excited about the possibilities, come January, that we will have, when we are running this government, at least from the House side and hopefully from the Senate side too.

with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

VACATING 5-MINUTE SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the 5-minute Special Order for the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) is vacated.

There was no objection.

HONORING OUR TROOPS IN IRAQ

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCEIN). Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to be here on the House floor tonight to report to my colleagues and those who may be watching what I learned during the last long weekend. I was privileged to go with Chairman PETE HOEKSTRA of the House Intelligence Committee to Iraq. It was my first trip to Iraq. It was a very eye-opening experience, Mr. Speaker and Members, one that I won’t soon forget.

Before I get started talking about that trip and some of the lessons that I learned while we were there, I would like to start with a quote. And I will come back to this later. The quote is: “Do not try to do too much with your own hands. It is their war, and you are here to help them win it, not win it for them.” I am going to come back to that quote later, Mr. Speaker, because I think it says so much about some of the things that we learned while we were in Iraq. Most importantly, I will come back and tell you who it was that originally said that.

The first thing I want to say tonight, though, is an enormous thank you and congratulations to the brave Americans who serve the United States in uniform.

When you get off the plane in Baghdad, you realize what they have to put up with, particularly during the summer. When the door opens on that plane, it is like opening the door of an oven. And there to greet you are bright young Americans, and they are in full uniform, helmets, heavy flak jackets. And we have seen and produced some of the greatest individuals in the history of the world, and being an American is an adventure.

The most frustrating part, I believe, in the last several years, and we have thanks that we have for the sacrifices that they make for serving this country. I should also say a very special thank you to their families. The ones that I met and the ones that I was able to talk to, we came to their homes and they talked to us about how much they missed their families and wanted to make sure that they knew that they were okay and that they were doing their jobs and that they missed home. But more importantly, many of them said that they really felt that they were doing something that was important and that was important.

So I want to, first of all, just recognize the professionalism that we saw every step of the way. When we left Kuwait, we were flying on a C-130, and I was lucky enough to get the long straw, so I got to sit up in the cockpit. And the young people who were flying that plane, and I almost called them kids, because I don’t think even the pilot was 30 years old, but they were among the most professional pilots and crew that I have ever had the privilege to fly with.

As we got closer to Baghdad, all of a sudden this young pilot and all the crew became very animated and they were paying a lot of attention to what was happening on the ground. And eventually, they quickly figured out what they were doing. They were looking for any puffs of smoke or anything that might be fired at the C-130 we were flying in.

Finally, as we got closer to Baghdad, the pilot literally turned that big, fat C-130 into a dive bomber. And they make a special approach when they landed at the Baghdad airport. And in spite of that almost dive-bomb approach, he made an incredibly smooth and soft landing. And I want to thank him for that.

But as I say, we had an opportunity to meet with a number of the folks who were serving over there. I am going to talk just a little bit tonight about one of the National Guard unit from the State of North Dakota.

What they do every day, Mr. Speaker, is they go out on the roads, mostly at night, and they look for these IEDs, these improvised explosive devices. And they told us that since they have been there, and they have been there 10 months, they have found 562 of those devices that they were ultimately able to have disposed of so that they caused no damage to people or to property along the roads of Iraq.

Forty-two of those explosives devices, however, went off while they were trying to work with them. Forty-two. In fact, I talked to one young man, I believe his name was Lynch, from North Dakota, and he had been involved in four incidents where the IED went off. And I really can’t say enough about the people who do that kind of thing every day.

As I say, there is no way that we in Congress have no words that we could offer here in Congress which could repay the debt of gratitude that I think we and the people of Iraq have to the brave Americans like that unit from North Dakota.

We also had a chance to visit a field hospital there, and it was kind of ironic because one of the people that we met there was someone that I already knew, a professor of surgery at the Mayo Clinic, and I am privileged to represent Rochester, Minnesota and the Mayo Clinic. Dr. Mike Yaszemski, and Dr. Yaszemski was there and had been in Iraq since about the Fourth of July, and he and some of the other surgeons that I had been up with had been up since 2:00 that morning, performing surgery on five folks who were involved with an IED that night.

And later we got to go in and visit in the hospital there with some of the soldiers who had been treated. And one of them was more than happy to tell his entire story. And while they were pinning the Purple Heart on the sheet on his bed, he told his entire story and what it was like to go through one of these explosions. Perhaps the most moving moment, though, was, as he was telling his story, how the Humvee that he had been in had essentially been blown about 150 feet off the ground, and I can’t remember whether it went through the ground or the Humvee came down on its side, but the vehicle was on fire, and one of his buddies, a private, said get out. You have got to get out. You have got to get out. And he said, well, I am paralyzed from the waist down. And he couldn’t get out of the Humvee himself.

Now, this was a fairly large guy. I would guess he probably weighed 230 pounds. And he said that the private was a pretty small little guy. And here this private, when he realized that his buddy was caught in the Humvee and it was on fire and he hollered out that he was paralyzed from the waist down, he couldn’t get out, this young private got down on his stomach, and got down on his hands and knees, didn’t know exactly how he pulled him out, but it was an amazing story. And this young individual wanted to make sure that before they loaded him on to one of the big transport planes, the C-17 to fly him to the hospital in Germany at Landstuhl, he wanted to make sure that he got a chance to say thank you to that private, because he said he saved his life.

And as he told his story, we were standing around, and I know what I was thinking, was he going to be paralyzed for the rest of his life?

“Well, thanks to the good work of surgeons like Dr. Mike Yaszemski, I am happy to report that that soldier is going to be able, as he laid there, he smiled and he says, ‘I can wiggle my toes.’ And what a happy story it was for all of us in that room.

And we owe such a debt of gratitude to the staff, including people like Dr. Michael Yaszemski from Mayo Clinic for the magic that they do and the hard work that they do and the dedication that they have every single day.

You know, the U.S. military, I think, is unmatched in the world and perhaps in the history of the world in terms of the execution of conventional war. There is little doubt that we have no adversaries in the rest of the world who can match the firepower, the technology and, most importantly, the professionalism of the Americans who serve us in uniform. No one can really challenge the United States in a conventional war.

But as we toured around Iraq and went to several of the bases and, more importantly, as we spent time in Baghdad, it became obvious to me that the security situation was not what I had expected. As a matter of fact, we had to fly in helicopters, Black Hawk helicopters, to fly from the airport into the Green Zone. And it had been my understanding that we were serving over there, that we were coming to visit, like myself and the rest of our delegation, could actually drive into the Green Zone. But somebody told us that it is now the most dangerous highway in the world.

And somehow after 3 years and over $332 billion, I guess I was somewhat surprised that the security situation in Baghdad was as bad as it is. And, again, I kept coming back to this notion that, indeed, our military is unmatched and unchallenged, I think, in the world in terms of conventional warfare. But I think we have to be honest with ourselves that our military is not well suited to be an occupation force, and even less suited involved in the nation-building business. And I think that is something that I felt and I believe other members of our delegation felt, that we are really asking our military to do some things which they are not particularly well suited to do.

And I just wanted to offer some of those observations because as we were returning from Iraq, and it is a long flight, one of my colleagues who was on the trip with us had a copy of an article which I am going to refer you to in the Record if it is possible. Mr. Speaker, but I would like to talk a little bit about the article, and I will enter this into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the end of my remarks.

What it is is a column that was written by former Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird, who served as Secretary of Defense from 1969 to 1973. He was also a counselor to the President for domestic affairs in the Nixon White House. And the article that I am talking about appeared in Foreign Affairs back in the November/December of 2005 edition. The title of the article is “Iraq: The Learning Lessons of Vietnam.”

And in many respects, Melvin Laird is in a very unique position to talk about both the history of that but, more importantly, what we should learn from those years and how we could apply them to the situation that the United States finds itself in today. Mr. Speaker, I would like to read from the article because I think it says...
a lot in a few sentences right here that really illustrate what I think is a conclusion and the takeaway that I had from this particular visit to Iraq.

He says: Another great tragedy of Vietnam was the Americanization of the war. It was never the Japanese or the Greeks who took over the war. Our troops were our focus. And as we drove into Kurdistan, we saw that it was much the same. We spent quite a bit of time talking about the Kurds and their history, and about their culture. They had factionalization. They had terrorists. But they adopted what I would describe as a zero-tolerance policy. In fact, they described one particular incident where someone had committed an act of terrorism and then fled to Baghdad. They went after them, and they brought them back.

You see, they have the advantage that they speak the language, they understand the culture, but, most importantly, they know who the bad guys are. And as I sort of distilled this story, it became clear to me that they considered the wealth of the Kurdish region, one of our colleagues said, Well, but you have oil.

And the Prime Minister smiled, and he said, The whole country has oil. He said, The difference is we have decided to work together to develop our resources so that we can have an economic future of prosperity for all of our people, whether they happen to be Christians or whether they happen to be Shiites or Iraqis or to be Sunnis, whatever. And the only thing they have said is that they will not tolerate terrorism in their territories.

And there are two things that they demand from the national government: for them to be religiously and for their journalists to be treated as journalists in the rest of the country.

Sunnis, whatever. And the only thing they have said is that they will not tolerate terrorism in their territories.

And there are two things that they demand from the national government: for them to be religiously and for their journalists to be treated as journalists in the rest of the country.

And he said, The whole country has oil. He said, The difference is we have decided to work together to develop our resources so that we can have an economic future of prosperity for all of our people, whether they happen to be Christians or whether they happen to be Shiites or Iraqis or to be Sunnis, whatever. And the only thing they have said is that they will not tolerate terrorism in their territories.

And there are two things that they demand from the national government: for them to be religiously and for their journalists to be treated as journalists in the rest of the country.

And there are two things that they demand from the national government: for them to be religiously and for their journalists to be treated as journalists in the rest of the country.

But what really struck me was the fact that the second thing that they said they demanded is an equitable distribution of oil royalties. And when you see what they have accomplished up there, you can understand why now that they have done all the work, they do not want to share all of their revenues with the people of the rest of Iraq.

But, most importantly, we asked him, Don’t the Kurds really want to be independent?

And again he smiled and he said, Well, if you polled my constituents, I suspect that almost universally they would be in favor of independence. But, he said, that is not practical. In fact, he said, we Kurds have decided that we have our best opportunity to work with the rest of the people of Iraq and be part of a strong and united and economically prosperous Iraq.

We all sat there and listened to this, and we met with the members of the Parliament. They threw an enormous breakfast for us of some of the finest food I have ever had in my life. And as we sat and listened and visited and learned from them, I said to myself, and it is one of my favorite expressions, I said, Success leaves clues, and if you really want to know what Iraq can look like, you would have to visit the Kurds.

And it is unfortunate that too many of our colleagues have not had the chance or taken the chance when they visited Iraq to go up and visit the Kurds. But a few years ago, I met one of our leaders from the Kurds, and he said, My Kurds may not be a part of the national government, but they are part of a strong and united and economically prosperous Iraq.

And we went into town, and we got to meet with some of the political leaders including their Parliament. It was interesting to learn that the Parliament that they have there in the Kurdish area is very representative. Over 16 percent of the members of the Kurdish Parliament are women. We even met a Christian who is a member of the Kurdish Parliament. It is very open and very pragmatic. And we met with the Prime Minister and he is coming to Washington here in the next month or so. I hope all Members will get a chance to meet him. In fact, I think he is coming in September. He is one of the most charismatic, articulate leaders that I ever met. He was very candid with us.

First of all, he thanked us. He thanked us for all that America has done for the Kurdish people. Now, admittedly, the Kurds from a cultural standpoint are different than many of the other Iraqis, but they are Muslims. And he told us that they faced all the same problems in 1991 that the southern part of Iraq is facing today. They
We go on the ground to Baghdad, get met at the airport by someone who interned in my office about a couple of years ago, interned in my office, went to Hope College in my district, got to be a good friend with a number of the people in the church that we go to, so we went to a political church. He is not embedded in the international zone where you and I were, he is embedded with Iraqi troops that have been trained. So there are like eight to ten U.S. troops with a large group of Iraqi troops, and he says, Man, am I glad I am here. He hadn’t been there long, but he said, You know, this is where I wanted to be. This is where I want to be right now. I am working with Iraqi troops. I have been to their homes. I have been to their families. We need to do this, and we need to see the mission through.

And like I said, he had just been there a couple of months. And like I said, this is a kid that I know. If he did not feel that way, he would have told me. But he had just gotten there, and they also see the sacrifices that the Iraqi people are making.

There have been a lot more Iraqi troops, police and citizens that have been killed over the last number of months than U.S. troops. They are willing to go to the front lines. They are willing to pay the price and make the difference.

You and I both saw, there is lots of work to be done. It is not a pretty picture on certain occasions. The day we were there, the folks went in and got the chairman of the National Olympic Committee.

Maybe you have talked a little bit about some of the other things we observed. We can talk about the training of the troops, the need to secure Baghdad. I heard you talk about Kurdistan. But rather, it is more about doing a couple of steps forward, one step back. But it is clearly a war against radical Islam that is moving forward, that needs to be completed.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I was talking about the Kurds, and I think every part of the trip, in my opinion, was a highlight. I hate to say one was more important than the other.

But what I had said before you came in, Congressman HOEKSTRA, was that I was so impressed with the Kurds and what they have done in taking responsibility for their own area, of having essentially a zero tolerance policy. I said that I think that may be the example that Maliki can use for the rest of the country.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. If the gentleman will yield, that is a conclusion that we probably reached on a bipartisan basis, that it is absolutely essential to as rapidly as possible train up the Iraqis and transfer sections of the country to Iraqi troops with U.S. advisers. They know the neighborhood, they know the culture, and I think they have the desire and commitment to do it. We need to provide them with the training and the resources, but then get them at the front lines so that the Iraqi people in the communities see them. This is their opportunity to get the country back.

I think the other thing you said, it was my first time to Kurdistan. There was never a need to go there before. Now you can see what happens in a period of 14 years. Remember, what was the number 25,000, 26,000, to 182,000. Iran was active in creating mischief. There was an ethnic cleansing going on in the southern part of Kurdistan.

But over a period of 14 years, they have got political stability. The two major parties have come together to form a unity government, the economy is doing well and the security situation is good.

So if the rest of the country can see Kurdistan as a model and embrace the kinds of reforms, I think that is the other thing that happened in Kurdistan. They are doing the things that are attracting foreign investment and foreign confidence in what they are doing. Because you cannot rebuild Iraq with just U.S. money. You need to get the private sector coming in, and Kurdistan is doing that in the laws they are shaping to encourage and welcome foreign investment into their area. You do it in the south and the rest of the country, you have got oil, you have got agriculture, you have got some manufacturing, but you have got to put in place the right legal framework.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I think you said it exactly right. When I left, there was progress. I was looking for progress. I think it is a three-legged stool. I think you have to have military or security progress.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. That is all about securing Baghdad right now.
can protect them, you can protect their immediate family, but when you go out and get their brothers and sisters and parents and all that, these are people who are committed to success and there is no other way to look at it. There is no other commitment here.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. No. I was very impressed with the character of the parliamentarians. Hopefully, with the help of our Speaker, we can get some of them over here so that more Members of Congress can actually get a chance to visit the country, to learn from them, to talk to them and perhaps to ask them some questions.

What I was talking about earlier as well is from an article that I think we both read on the plane on the way home that was written by Melvin Laird. If anyone would like a copy, they can just send me an e-mail at GI1@mail.house.gov. We will send you a copy of this article.

I think from my perspective it actually is pretty instructive a lot of the things we saw on our visit and why it is so important as soon as we can and as much as we can, we need to turn more of the authority, the responsibility for managing the affairs of the Iraqi people, back to the Iraqis themselves.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It is much like what we talk about for some of our domestic policies. The longer we are there propping them up, the more we have the potential of creating a situation of dependency, where they are looking to the U.S. Government to fix their political problems, to fix their security problems and to fix their economic problems.

I think we were very clear when we went to Arbil, and there were two or three instances where we were able to add, they understand the language. One thing you didn't mention, I want to add to the disadvantages they face is that they can't understand the culture.

You said something else earlier about the advantage that the Iraqis have when they are doing the heavy lifting. You said they understand the culture. One thing you didn't mention, I want to add, they have the advantage that the Iraqis have.

You can't really understand a culture if you weren't raised in it. So in many cases we were asking our soldiers sometimes to do some things that are very difficult. Not that they aren't very professional and they do it very well, but there is no question that the Iraqis out there policing the streets can do a much better job than Americans.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Talking about soldiers that do things well, I mean, we went to Arbil, and there were two or three instances where we were able to add, they understand the language. That is incredibly important. That puts our forces sometimes at a huge disadvantage, because they really don't understand.

I think we also heard the number that, you know, the vast majority of injuries today are coming from the IEDs. These things are becoming more and more sophisticated. But, you know, it shows that the enemy is not engaging us, they are moving to what we would call tactical, or what I would call, the insurgent tactics. They are not engaging us or the Iraqis directly. They are using these improvised explosive devices or they are attacking civilian targets, where fitting to their name they can create terror.

But, you know, if the government’s goal is to try and divide the country between Sunnis and Shiias. And this is why the government has to, the Iraqi Government has to step up and provide the security envelope so that the militias can be disbanded, the militias that are forming in the Shia areas and the Sunni areas. Because our understanding, when I talked to David Pate from my district, he said, you know, when you talk to the Iraqi soldiers, they do not say, if you ask them, you know, you a Shia or a Sunni, the Army is moving to the level of professionalism where they say, you know, they do not say I am a Shia or a Sunni, what they say is I am an Iraqi.

So that is the focus on the country. That is not everybody. You know, sectarian violence is something that we are very, very concerned about. It is evident. I do not think neither you or I are saying, man, it is done. There is a lot of work to do over there.

But there continue to be signs of real progress.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I think the real progress that we are all looking for is, of course, the Iraqis. Now that Prime Minister Maliki has got a government, and I think he needs to know that America is going to be there to support him.

You know, I was misquoted that I was in favor of immediate withdrawal. That is simply not true. What I have said is that America needs to be there for quite some time to come. We still have troops in Germany. We still have troops in Japan. We still have troops in South Korea. But our real role has to begin to change, so that we provide the umbrella of security.

If, for example, some militia being to mass and begin to directly confront the government or other forces, then I think from a conventional standpoint, we are in a strong position to make sure that that gets dealt with quickly and effectively. And nobody can do it better than our military.

But in terms of some of the sectarian things and the thugs who are at large in some of the neighborhoods, since we cannot speak the language and we do not understand the culture, it is just much more difficult for us to get to the bottom of that. That is where the Iraqis need to step up. That is the progress we are looking for.

When it rains and, when people start to feel as secure in Baghdad as they do in Erbil, then you will see the economy begin to improve. Because, it is obvious to me that the overwhelming majority of Iraqis want what most Americans want. They want to live in peace. They want to be able to raise their families in a secure neighborhood. They want to look forward to an economic future that is worth living.

They can do that. And that is why, again, I hate to refer too much to what we saw up in northern Iraq. But it was like night and day. It was like going to a different universe. That is where the progress has to step up and provide the security envelope so that the militias inside are protected.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. We will always remember the North Dakota boys. Especially one young man, I think his name was Lynch. He had been involved in four of these explosions. And, yes, it is true the equipment they have is specially designed to sort of take the explosion and the concussion in a ‘V’ section so that the folks inside are protected.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It is still a real experience.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. The concussion of it and what it did to those heavy vehicles, it is amazing that they have only had one KIA. Again, let me join you in sharing our sympathies to that family and that unit, because they were obviously a very close knit unit from North Dakota.

They went to war together. They do their jobs together. They live together. They pray together. And it was inspiring to me.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I think you have also got to give a real set of kudos to the folks in the background. You know, we talk about the troops that are going out and they are finding the IEDs. We are talking to the C-130 pilots who are flying in. You and I were there. It is a harsh environment. You got the dust, you got the sand, you got more sand, and then you throw a little bit of heat on it.

When we were coming off the one plane in Erbil where we walked through the backwash of the props, it must have been 130, 140 degrees right there. Of course we were doing it for a short period of time. But you are wearing the body armor, you are wearing the helmet, our troops are doing that all day long.

The other folks, there is lot of folks over there that deserve kudos, but it is the guys in the back, they are the guys you would say, hey, we go out, we are near an explosion, an IED, our equipment is damaged. We bring it back, our mechanics know that they need to get this fixed, because we are going out again on patrol.

They may have not a spare, but they have got another truck or another vehicle that they can take out. But, they have got to get this one working again.

And the mechanics, they work 24 hours straight to get this stuff up and running.

Same thing with the C-130s. We are putting lots of hours on some of these machines. I think the first plane that we flew in on from Kuwait to Baghdad was a 1961 C-130, from Selfridge Air Base in Michigan. And, you know, there are maintenance people back there who in this environment, that plane goes on, I think it was doing two trips a day there, that day back and forth to Baghdad.

You know, when that plane goes back to Kuwait that night, there is going to be some maintenance people all over that thing, you know, getting it back together. They are back there in the next morning it is going to be able to fly again.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I mentioned earlier, we also need to say thank you and kudos to the families. You cannot help but think about what the families in North Dakota must feel every day. I am sure they do not know all that that group does in terms of going out and looking for these IEDs.

But not only do the folks in uniform, they pay quite a price for us, but their families just work hard. What is going to happen today, what is going to happen tomorrow. You just really have to admire the families. And we need to say a special thank you to them. Because, you know, the guys that are there, they are all of the time. In fact, one of the things they said was we do not mind working long days and long hours because it helps the time go faster.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. There is not much else to do. But absolutely, you know, the families pay a tremendous price with the amount of time that their husbands or wives or sons or daughters are spending in Iraq, knowing that the conditions are tough, the environment continues to be dangerous. And so there are sacrifices that continue to be made by all of these families, by the whole military family.

You know, we were talking a little bit about comparing some of the stuff we do in the United States. One of the things that is different about the United States and sometimes moves us a little bit away from the military, but when you go on one of these trips, what really does connect you back to the military is being there with the troops.

But, you know, the military folks are so few in number to who we are as a Nation. In Israel, since there is compulsory service, and I am not promoting compulsory service, but in Israel where everyone is required to serve in the military, knows and understands the risks that the soldiers, military people have to take.

And it is “somebody over there”. We have got to remember, it is not somebody over there. It is a neighbor, it is somebody from our community. They love this country. They have a family. They go to church. They share the values that we have. And they have just chosen a different career. You know, we have got to... folks who have chosen business, finance, banking, marketing, whatever. These guys have chosen a career in the military.

It is a unique career. It is a special service that they provide to this country.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I am going to close up here. If you have any closing thoughts, Chairman HOEKSTRA, go ahead. Then I am going to close up and yield it back here in just a few minutes.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. No, I appreciate you doing the Special Order. I appreciate you yielding me the time and the opportunity. The one thing we did not talk about was Serbia, that on the way back we stopped in Serbia, so that we had an opportunity to see a part of Iraq that had been divided, that was coming out of a very tough time and after 14 years of war prosperity.

We then stopped overnight in Serbia, met with the three Presidents in Serbia at Sarajevo; and, again, there is an evolving success story that, 10 years ago, the brutal and the bitter conflict, we still have some troops there. There are a lot of Europeans, more European troops over there, but, again, they have made significant progress.

It takes a while to move from the ethnic religious strife to the steps forward. What is happening in Kosovo, or Serbia, and the region, is that the European Union finally embraced them, they have moved forward, Serbia is moving forward, Kurdistan is moving forward.

What we now also have to have is the modern Islamic or moderate states in the Middle East. They need to embrace Iraq. They need to invest. They need to have their people there, their businesses there, to show that they stand with this new democratically elected government and that they are invested in the success of a new Iraq, in what the people of Iraq are.

It is possible. It is not easy, but there are two examples of how this can work. It was very painful, but by sticking to it and moving through it, you can get to where you want to be.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to mention, and I am glad you did bring up the fact that we stopped in Bosnia Herzegovina.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I forget where I go sometimes.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Sarajevo. I was in Sarajevo 10 years ago, and at that time the city was essentially in, the center city, essentially rubble. Many buildings had large pockmarks. Some of them was still there. Many, though, have been fixed; and it now is a vibrant city.

If I had predicted 10 years ago that we would see the life in the city that we saw, a lot of people said it cannot happen.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. But you can walk down, what is it called, Sniper Alley?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Yes, Sniper Alley.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. That we could walk down Sniper Alley Sunday night, and that we could walk through the streets of Sarajevo in Bosnia, and that we could walk through the streets of Bosnia on Monday morning, and, you know, that it was a vibrant city, people sitting at the cafes, getting their country moving forward. Again, problems, high unemployment rate, slow economic development, but secure.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I think we should share the story that the general told us about the man who worked at the military facility there. Every day, when he would come to work, he would stop, and this is a Bosnian individual, he would stop and salute the American flag.

Then he would say a prayer. When he would leave work that night, he would again salute the American flag. They had a special ceremony that finally, the general said, we need to do something for that guy. So they presented him with a U.S. flag, one of these little wood cases that we have around here.

When they presented it, he literally, with tears running down his cheeks, he said, I thank God every day for America and what America did to bring peace to this city, because it was America that saved us from that war.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It is why they are nervous about us pulling our final troops out, because we are the ones that have earned their trust, and they still look to you, and I both hope and pray for the day where the same type of result, as we see in Kosovo, as we see in Bosnia, that we can see that same kind of result in the rest of Iraq.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think there are reasons to be optimistic. But I want to close with this quote. I started with this quote tonight:

"Do not try to do too much with your own hands... It is their war, and you are to help them, not win it for them." That quote is from T.E. Lawrence, better known as Lawrence of Arabia.

In some respects, I think it is prophetic. We can only do so much in Iraq. We are doing our share. Our military is doing a marvelous job. The next step, Mr. Chairman, is up to the Iraqis.

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

PRAYER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today's prayer will be offered by the Reverend Ed Sears, Grace Baptist Temple, Winston-Salem, NC.

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Let us pray together.

Our Father and our God, as we assemble today in the Senate Chamber, we do so with a keen sense of awareness of our special need of You. Our Nation has a rich history of Your many blessings, and we ask for those blessings to continue upon us. May Your presence be felt, and may Your hand of divine provision be realized.

In this awesome assembly today, give to each person wisdom and understanding for the times that are at hand. With the rich bounty of our history and the awesome opportunities of this present hour, may we move into this day with a special sense of Your call.

With our confidence in You and our responsibility to each other, we invite Your guidance and direction in the affairs of state this day. In times of debate and difference, may we remember that at the end of the day we are, indeed, "one nation under God."

Protect those who serve the cause of freedom around our world, especially those serving in our Armed Forces.

May the love of God the Father, the grace and mercy of the Lord Jesus, and the communion of Thy spirit rest upon the Members of this Senate as they gather to conduct our Nation's business. In Jesus's Name. Amen.

Mr. BURR. Mr. President, it is my honor and pleasure to welcome our guest Chaplain this morning, the Reverend Ed Sears of Winston-Salem, NC. Reverend Sears is the senior pastor at Grace Baptist Temple in Winston-Salem. He has faithfully served Grace Baptist's congregation of over 1,000 members for the past 25 years. In addition to his service to his church and his community, Reverend Sears holds the distinction of blessing both the House of Representatives and the Senate. In 2003, Reverend Sears was the guest Chaplain in the House and now honors us this morning in the Senate. Grace Baptist Temple, the city of Winston-Salem, and I appreciate his faith and fellowship.

FANNIE LOU HAMER, ROSA PARKS, AND CORETTA SCOTT KING VOTING RIGHTS ACT REAUTHORIZATION AND AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2006

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of H.R. 9, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 9) to amend the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this morning we are proceeding directly to H.R. 9, the voting rights reauthorization bill. We have a unanimous consent order that provides for up to 8 hours of debate today, although I do not expect all that time will be necessary. We will proceed to a vote on passage of H.R. 9 whenever that time is used or yielded back, and therefore that vote will occur sometime this afternoon, and I expect passage of that voting rights reauthorization bill.

There are several circuit and district court judges that will require some debate and votes today. We will have a unanimous consent agreement on those debate times shortly, and we will likely consider those judicial nominations following the passage of the Voting Rights Act.

We have been working on an agreement on the child predator legislation for a short debate and vote, which will occur today, and we hope to have that agreement as well.

Finally, we have an order to proceed to the child custody protection bill today, and we have Senators who would like to speak on this issue later today as well.

Having said that, the schedule will require votes over the course of the day—possibly into the evening—in order to finish. Although there is a lot to do and people have requested time... to be set aside, I think a lot of that time can be yielded back over the course of the day and we will be able to complete the schedule as I have laid out.

In a few moments, after the chairman's statement and the votes on the Voting Rights Act reauthorization, I will return with an opening statement as well. It has been a process we have expedited in many ways because the importance and significance of this legislation is very clear. So I am delighted to light the way and to get to it this morning and that we will be passing it later this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Are we prepared to proceed at this time with the consideration of the Voting Rights Act?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this is a historic day for the Senate and really a historic day for America as we move forward with Senate action to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. This action, coming from the Judiciary Committee in our executive session yesterday and passed unanimously this morning and that we will be passing it later this afternoon, moves the Senate toward completion of this reauthorization today and for submission to the President and for the formal signing next week.

In an era where many have challenged the gravity of the Congress to function in the public interests and in an era where there is so much partisan disagreement, it is good to see the two parties in the House and the Senate coming together to reauthorize this very important legislation.

I thank and congratulate the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee for pulling together and moving ahead at this time, with a prodigious amount of work, to bring this important matter to the floor. The committee has proceeded with 9 hearings. We have had 46 witnesses. We have had 11 leading academics come to testify from such distinguished institutions as the Yale Law School, Stanford University, the University of Pennsylvania Law School, New York University Law School, and others.

The House of Representatives held 12 hearings to gather evidence on voting discrimination, featuring testimony from 46 witnesses.

We have had some of the leading luminaries in the Nation testify, such as Professor Chandler Davidson, coauthor of the landmark book on the Voting Rights Act “Quiet Revolution in the South”; Theodore Shaw, Director Counsel and President of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund; Fred Gray, veteran civil rights attorney who began his career in the midst of this movement; Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and Mrs. Rosa Parks.

We have been mindful in presenting these witnesses and compiling this record that the Supreme Court has required very extensive records. The Supreme Court struck down parts of the landmark legislation protecting women against violence because the Court disagreed with the congressional “method of reasoning.” It is a little hard to understand how the conclusion, but they have the final word. They have a test on the adequacy of the record; that it be congruent and proportional. It is sometimes hard to understand exactly what that test is, but we are looking at an extremely extensive record in order to avoid having the act declared unconstitutional.

The bill which we will vote on today accomplishes many important items. First, it strengthens voting rights protections nationwide by allowing voters who successfully challenge illegal voting practices to recover reasonable expenses of litigation. Second, it extends the protections for voters with limited English skills for 25 years. Those voters will enjoy the protection of bilingual ballots and assistance at the polls. It also extends for 25 years the requirements that the Department of Justice preclear any voting change in certain covered jurisdictions where there has been a history of discrimination.

The bill clarifies how the preclearance protections should work, guaranteeing that voting laws enacted with a discriminatory purpose never get enacted into law. So, it moves America in the right direction.

The benefits and effects of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 have been profound, to put it mildly. It is the political power of the minorities for whom the Voting Rights Act was designed who pushed the Congress forward a year in advance of the expiration of the Voting Rights Act, to move ahead and get this important job done early.

If you contrast 1964, before the Voting Rights Act was passed, with what is happening today, you see a different America. It is a different political reality. In 1964, there were only approximately 300 African Americans in public office, including just 3 in the Congress. Few, if any, Black elected officials came from the South. Today, there are more than 9,000 Black elected officials, including 43 Members of Congress. This is the largest number ever. Quite a record.

The Voting Rights Act has opened the political process for many of us who have never had an opportunity. In the last 11 years, the results are stunning.

For example, in the 2004 election, 880 covered jurisdictions had violated Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. That is the provision that prohibits discrimination against minority voters. During that time, six cases have found that a noncovered jurisdiction committed unconstitutional discrimination against minority voters. If the data is focused on the last 11 years, the results are even more dramatic. Since 1986, only six cases in eight or nine court cases find them guilty of violating the Constitution.

Looking at voting rights cases paints a similar picture. In 1982, 39 court cases ended with a finding that one of the 880 covered jurisdictions had violated Section 2. Not a perfect record; but it shows that discrimination has become more incidental and less systematic.

There is no doubt this improved record is a direct result of the Voting Rights Act. When we take a look at civil rights legislation generally, the Voting Rights Act is the most important part of our effort to give minorities—give all Americans—their full range of constitutional civil rights.

The Congress of 1965 relied on evidence that Black registration was so dramatically lower than White registration that the differences could only be explained by purposeful efforts to disfranchise Blacks. Indeed, in some cases, the gap was 50 percentage points. In Alabama, Black registration was just at 18 percent, and in Mississippi, a little over 6 percent. Today, in Alabama and Louisiana, Blacks are registered at approximately the same rate as White voters, and in Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Texas, Black registration and turnout in the 2004 election was higher than that of the Whites.

The Congress of 1965 relied on findings of the Federal courts and the Justice Department that the covered States were engaged in the practice of deliberate unconstitutional behavior. For example, the 1965 Senate report noted that Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi had lost electors to other States by using a consent decree finding that one of the 880 covered jurisdictions had committed unconstitutional discrimination against minority voters. During that time, six cases have found that a noncovered jurisdiction committed unconstitutional discrimination against minority voters. If the data is focused on the last 11 years, the results are even more dramatic. Since 1986, only six cases in eight or nine court cases find them guilty of violating the Constitution.

Today, the statistics paint a starkly different picture. Only six cases have ended in court ruling or a consent decree finding that one of the 880 covered jurisdictions had violated Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. That is the provision that prohibits discrimination against minority voters. During that time, six cases have found that a noncovered jurisdiction committed unconstitutional discrimination against minority voters. enormous contribution which they have made. Mrs. King, the widow of pioneering civil rights leader Martin Luther King, Jr., devoted a lifetime to opposing racism, whether the 1960s segregation Alabama or the 1980s apartheid in South Africa. Fortunately, she lived long enough to see the progress America has made. Sadly, her husband, Dr. King, did not see that.

I recall, not too long ago, when Mrs. King came to the Senate, in the adjoining room to the Senate Chambers, and spoke about the issues of civil rights. She was a real hero in America, to pursue the work of Dr. King.

Every American schoolchild knows the story of Miss Rosa Parks who, on December 1, 1955, refused to give up her seat to a white passenger. She explained her motivation simply:

People always say that I didn’t give up my seat because I was tired, but that isn’t true. I was not tired physically... I was 44 years old. Ms. Hammer later explained that, despite death threats and criticism, she was tired of giving in.

Fannie Lou Hamer first learned that African Americans had a constitutional right to vote in 1962, when she was 26. Hamer explained that, despite death threats and violence, she was determined to exercise her constitutional rights and said:

The only thing that they could do to me was to kill me, and it seemed like they had been trying to make a little dot at a time over since I could remember.

So we come to this day in the Senate where we are on the verge of passing the Voting Rights Act, reauthorizing it as the House has done. The President will be speaking within the hour to the NAACP convention and doubtless will refer proudly to the acts of the Congress in presenting him with this bill.

I want to pay tribute to the Judiciary Committee. All the members worked hard to get to the floor of the Senate yesterday when the Judiciary Committee hearing on the minority voting. The Supreme Court unanimously affirmed that, in view of the proof of racial motivation and continuing racially discriminatory effect, the state law violated the Fourteenth Amendment.

African American plaintiffs in the City of Foley, Alabama, filed suit to require the City to adopt and implement a nondiscriminatory annexation policy and to annex Mills Quarters and Beulah Heights. Plaintiff also claimed that violation of section 5 and section 2. As a result of negotiations, the parties entered into a consent decree. The decree had established “a prima facie violation of section 2 of the Voting Rights Act and the United States Constitution.” Id. at p. 59.

The Supreme Court Justices and have moved the immigration bill out of committee. All 31 senators commented with different aspects of the Voting Rights Act. I want to pay tribute to the Judiciary Committee staff that additional materials be printed in the RECORD. Below is a summary of all the cases that Senator Judiciary Committee staff has located in which the American Civil Liberties Union found a constitutional violation of voting rights.

Only six cases resulted in a finding that a covered jurisdiction committed unconstitutional discrimination against minority voters. Six cases ended in a finding that found a constitutional violation, and six cases ended in a finding that the covered jurisdiction did not constitute discrimination against minority voters.

Plaintiffs objected and filed a plan in which all seven trustees would be elected from single-member districts. The court, applying Gingles and the totality-of-circumstances tests, held that defendants' plans violated section 2 and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. The court ordered that a seven-member district plan for electing trustees be held immediately, but did not order it to district boundaries drawn by the court.

In 1997, several black plaintiffs challenged the Third Congressional District in federal court as an unconstitutional racial gerrymander. In 1997, the district court invalidated the Third Congressional District. The court held that the race had predominated in drawing the district and that the defendants could not adequately justify their use of race as a districting factor.

In July 1994, the ACLU filed suit on behalf of African American voters challenging the at-large method of city elections in the City of Newport News. On October 26, 1994, a consent decree was entered in which the City admitted that its practice violated section 2 as well as the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. The consent decree required the City to implement a racially fair election plan.

II. NON-COVERED JURISDICTIONS

CALIFORNIA

Latino voters alleged that district lines for the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors were gerrymandered to dilute their voting strength. Plaintiff sought creation of a district with a Latino majority for the 1990 Board of Supervisors election. The Ninth Circuit affirmed that the County had adopted and applied a redistricting plan that resulted in dilution of Latino voting power in violation of section 2, and by establishing and maintaining the plan, the County had intentionally discriminated against Latinos, violating the Fourteenth Amendment's Equal Protection Clause.

Black plaintiffs claimed that the at-large election of county commissioners in Escambia County diluted their voting power in violation of section 2 and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. The district court found that the State had not implemented the plan with a racially discriminatory purpose, and it had maintained it with such a purpose.

HAWAI

A group of Hawaiian citizens of various ethnic backgrounds sued the State of Hawaii alleging that the requirement that those appointed to the Hawaii Affairs Commission be of Native Hawaiian ancestry violated the Fourteenth Amendment, the Fifteenth Amendment, and section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. The Ninth Circuit found that the restriction on candidates running for Office of Hawaiian Affairs on the basis of race violated the Fifteenth Amendment as well as section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. The Ninth Circuit vacated the district court's judgment that the Fourteenth Amendment had also been violated because plaintiffs did not have standing to challenge the appointment procedures.

The United States sued pursuant to sections 2, 12(d), and 203 of the VRA, alleging violations of the VRA and the 14th and 15th Amendments arising from Socorro County's election practices and procedures as they affected Native American citizens of the county. Hearing before the House Judiciary Committee on the 15th Amendments.

PENNSYLVANIA

Republican candidate for Senate State, Bruce Marks, the Republican State Committee and other plaintiffs challenged the election of Democrat William Stinson for the Second Senatorial District. Although Marks received approximately 500 more votes from the Election Day voting machines than Marks received from absentee voting, Marks and the other plaintiffs contended that Stinson and his campaign workers encouraged voters to undermine proper absentee voting procedures and requirements, such as falsely claiming that they would be out of the county on Election Day. Plaintiffs also contended that Stinson and the other Defendants had focused their efforts to encourage illegal voting by large numbers of minorities.

The court held: (1) defendants violated plaintiffs’ First Amendment rights of association because plaintiffs were denied the freedom to form groups for the advancement of political ideas and to campaign and vote for their chosen candidates; (2) defendants’ actions denied plaintiffs’ right to Equal Protection because they subjected African American candidates and by treating persons differently because of their race; (3) defendants violated plaintiffs’ Substantive Due Process right to vote in state elections by abusing the democratic process; and (4) defendants improperly applied a “standard, practice, or procedure contrary to or inconsistent with the one person, one vote principle, in violation of the VRA, targeting voters based on race and denying minority voters the right to vote freely without illegal interference. Finally, the court ordered the certification of Bruce Marks as the winner of the Second Senatorial District seat for the 1995 Special Election because Marks would have the best chance but for the illegal actions of the defendants.

TENNESSEE

Black citizens of Chattanooga sued the Board of Commissioners for its use of at-large elections. The court held: (1) applying the one-person, one-vote test, the ACLU sued the Board of Commissioners violated section 2 because the electoral practice resulted in an abridgment of black voter’s rights; and (2) the Federal Voting provisions of the Chattanooga charter violated the Fourteenth Amendment under rational basis review because permitting a nonresident who owns a trivial amount of property to vote in municipal elections does not further any rational governmental interest. III. CONSTITUTIONAL-violations not Residents of Dorchester, Berkeley, and Charleston Counties, in South Carolina, filed suit in the allegedly constitutionally defective state legislative delegation structure against the Fourteenth Amendment’s one-person, one-vote requirement and was adopted with an unconstitutional purpose to discriminate against African American voters. The district court rejected both claims. The Fourth Circuit held that the structure violated the one-person, one-vote rule (noting no findings of discriminatory intent) and did not address the second claim.

The Board of Trustees of Abbeville County School District 60 traditionally consisted of nine members, five of whom were elected from single member districts and two each from two multi-member districts. African Americans were 52% of the population of the school district, but all the districts were majority white and only one member of the board was African American. In 1993, black residents of the district and the local NAACP chapter filed suit challenging the method of electing the board of trustees as violating the Constitution’s one person, one vote requirement and alleging vote diluting minority voting strength. The court decided that the existing plan for the board “is an unconstitutionally malapportioned plan, and is in violation of sections 2 and 5 of the Voting Rights Act.” Id. at 584.

Suit challenging districting plans for Board of Education and Board of Commissioners, which had been used to be malapportioned after the 1990 census. Plaintiff’s sought, and obtained, a preliminary injunction finding that the election districts were “constitutionally malapportioned.” Parties entered consent decree that retained five single member districts for both boards and established two majority black districts. Plan was precleared by DOJ.

1979 suit to enjoin the use of at-large elections for failure to comply with Section 5. The county had changed to at-large voting in 1967 following increased black registration. A three-judge panel enjoined the at-large scheme, finding it had never been submitted for preclearance. Plan then created five single member districts, two of which were majority black, and two at-large seats. After the 1990 census, black voters were reorganized into majority black districts were malapportioned. According to the ACLU report, “the district court entered an order enjoining the upcoming primary election for the board because of the malapportioned plan. The parties then agreed upon a new plan that complied with the equal population standard and maintained two of the districts as majority black.”

The county had failed to preclar its at-large system and the failure to comply with Section 5. The court found a section 5 violation, which resulted in a return to single-member districts. After the 1990 census showed the commission districts to be malapportioned, the ACLU agreed to create equal districts which was not precleared before a 1992 legislative poison pill provision rendered it void), the ACLU agreed to a redistricting plan in which they removed one of the existing majority black districts. The count

The ACLU filed suit on behalf of black voters in 1994, alleging that the county board of commissioners and board of education districts were constitutionally malapportioned after the 1990 census. According to the ACLU’s report, “in a hearing on December 19, 1995, county officials agreed that ‘the relevant voting districts in Cook County are malapportioned in violation of the equal proportions clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.’ A consent decree allowed setting commission and board of education districts. The consent decree memorialized a new plan, correcting the malapportionment for the 1996 elections.”

2002 suit alleged single-member districts were malapportioned in violation of the con-stitution’s one-person-one-vote principle. The plaintiffs won summary judgment and a preliminary injunction to prevent elections from taking place under the plan. The court approved a plan that maintained two majority-black districts.

Suit by the city, represented by the ACLU, sued in 2003 to enjoin use of an allegedly constitutionally malapportioned districting plan and requested that the court supervise the development and implementation of a remedial plan that complied with the principle of one person, one vote, and the VRA. According to the ACLU report, “In a hearing on August 7, 2003, the court granted the plaintiffs’ motion for summary judgment, enjoined the pending elections, adopted a remedial plan prepared by the state reapportionment office, and directed that a special election for the mayor and city commission[be] held in February 2004.”

(9) Woody v. Evans County Board of Commis-

In 1992, the ACLU filed suit on behalf of black voters challenging an allegedly malapportioned districting plan for the county commission and board of education under the Constitution and Section 2 of the VRA. According to the ACLU report, “on June 30, 1995 the court enjoined holding further elections under the existing malapportioned plan for both districts.”

(10) Bryant v. Liberty County Board of Edu-

tionally apportioned election districts for the county. The court granted plaintiffs’ mo-dition for preliminary injunctive relief on July 7, 1992, and the following year the parties agreed to a redistricting plan in which two of the six single member districts contained majority black voting age populations. The plan was precleared by the Justice Department on April 27, 1993.”

According to the ACLU Report, “The [Georgia] general assembly failed to redisttract the two boards during its 1992, 1993, and 1994 sessions, and in 1995 the ACLU filed suit on behalf of Macon County residents against county officials seeking a constitutional plan for the 1994 elections. On July 12, 1994, the district court enjoined the upcoming election and ordered the parties to present remedial plans by July 15, 1994. In March 1995, the court ordered a five district plan that remed the one person, one vote violations and ordered special elections be held.”

Suit to block the use of a constitutionally malapportioned districting plan following the 2000 census. According to the ACLU Report, “Black residents of Baconton, with the assistance of the ACLU, then filed suit in federal court to enjoin use of the 1993 plan on the grounds that it would violate Section 5 and the Fourteenth Amendment. On the day before the election the election court held a hearing, and, hours before the polls opened, granted an injunction prohibiting the city from implementing the unprecleared and unconstitutionally plan.”

According to the ACLU report, the 1990 census showed that the five single member districts for the county board of commissioners and board of education were constitutionally malapportioned. “After the legislature failed to enact a remedial plan, the ACLU filed suit on behalf of black voters in Newton County in June 1992, seeking constitutionally apportioned districts for the commission and school board. The suit also sought to enjoin upcoming primary elections, scheduled for July 21, 1992, as well as the November 3 general election. The parties settled the case the following month and the court issued an order that “[t]he 1984 district plan does not constitutionally reflect the current population.””

Black residents of the county, represented by the ACLU, filed suit in 1992 to enjoin upcoming elections under an allegedly constitutionally malapportioned plan. According to the ACLU report, “On October 14, 1992, the district court entered a consent order involving the board of Education, affirming that ‘Defendants do not contest plaintiffs’ allegations that the districts as presently constituted are malapportioned and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution.’”

(15) Cook v. Randolph County: Civ. No. 95-113-COL (M.D. Ga.) (ACLU Report at 389-93). According to the ACLU Report, “On October 5, 1993, black voters, represented by the ACLU, filed suit. They asked the court to enjoin elections for the school board and board of commissioners on the grounds that the districting plan for both bodies was either malapportioned in violation of the Constitution and Section 2, or had not been precleared pursuant to Section 5. Later that month, on October 29, the parties signed a consent order stipulating that the existing county districts were malapportioned, and agreeing on a redistricting plan containing five single member districts with a total deviation of 9.35%. Three of the five districts were majority black.”

The ACLU brought suit in 1984 on behalf of black county residents charging that the five member board of county commissioners was malapportioned in violation of the Constitution and Section 2 of the VRA. The suit also charged defendants with failing to secure preclearance of a valid reapportionment plan under Section 5. According to the ACLU Report, “After plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction to block the 1984 board of commissioners election, a consent order was issued acknowledging that the districts were malapportioned, and instructing both parties to submit reapportionment plans to the court. . . . On February 27, 1985, after trial on the merits, the court ruled the challenged plan unconstitutional and directed the defendants to adopt a new plan and seek preclearance under Section 5 within 30 days.”

After the release of the 1990 census, the ACLU brought suit on behalf of black plaintiffs, alleging that the county’s commission districts were malapportioned in violation of the constitutional principle of one person, one vote. On July 27, 1992, the district court entered a consent order finding “malapportionment in excess of the legally acceptable standard.”

After the 1990 census, the ACLU, on behalf of black residents, sued to enjoin further use of an allegedly constitutionally malapportioned districting plan. According to the ACLU Report, “On July 7, 1992, the district court, finding that the existing plan was malapportioned, enjoined the July 1992, primary elections for the board of commissioners and board of education until such time as an election could be held under a court ordered or a precleared plan.”

In September 1986, the ACLU filed suit on behalf of five black voters alleging that the county board of education was malapportioned. According to the ACLU Report, “On October 31, 1986, less than a week before the November general election, the court entered a consent order staying the elections, ordering a new apportionment plan, and providing for a special election. The court found that ‘Plaintiffs have established a prima facie case that the current apportionment of the Board of Education is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment,’ and required the defendants to develop and implement a new apportionment for the school board within 60 days.”

The ACLU sued in August 2002, alleging that the county commission lines were malapportioned in violation of the Constitution and Section 2 of the VRA. According to the ACLU Report, “After plaintiffs filed suit, the county stipulated that its commission districts were malapportioned, and that ‘It is possible . . . to draw a five single member district plan with at least one majority black district in Telfair County.’ The plaintiffs then filed for summary judgment and asked the court to hold the existing plan unconstitutional and order a new plan into effect. . . . Ruling that the existing plan was malapportioned and ‘violates the one person, one vote standard of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment,’ the court noted that the plan had been submitted for Section 5 preclearance and ruled that the motion for summary judgment was ‘largely moot.’”

In June 1992, the ACLU filed suit on behalf of black voters challenging the malapportionment of the county board of commissioners under the Constitution and Section 2 of the VRA. According to the ACLU Report, “After the reapportionment suit was brought in 1992, defendants admitted the plan was malapportioned. . . . The parties negotiated a new redistricting plan, corrected the malapportionment, and created two effective majority black districts. Despite this agreement, the county proposed, and had the 1996 Georgia General Assembly adopt, a redistricting plan which plaintiffs did not support. . . . In February 1994, the Department of Justice precleared the county’s redistricting plan over the objections of the black community. . . .”

According to the ACLU Report, “In November 1994, the ACLU again brought suit on behalf of black voters in Soperton, challenging the five member city council as malapportioned in violation of one person, one vote. . . . A consent order was filed August 7, 1995, in which both parties agreed the city election districts were malapportioned, and adopted a districting plan with a total deviation of 6.8% that contained two majority black districts of 75.34% and 72.92% black voting age population, respectively.”

1) The University of Michigan Law School’s Voting Rights Project reviewed every case on Westlaw or Lexis that addressed a Section 2 Claim since June 29, 1982, when Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act was amended. Researchers then located all related decisions and organized them by lawsuit. Within each lawsuit there were often multiple appeals and remands, and researcher determined which opinion provided the final word in a given series of litigation. Most often, the final word case in each lawsuit is the last case that assessed liability on the merits and determined whether Section 2 was violated.

If there was not a liability decision on Section 2, researchers coded the final word as the last published case in the lawsuit that made a determination for or against the plaintiff, including whether to approve a settlement, order a remedy, issue a preliminary injunction, or grant fees.

_Cottier v. City of Martin_, 445 F.3d 1113 (8th Cir. 2006), a case decided after the completion of the University of Michigan Law School’s Report on the Voting Rights Initiative, was entered into the Senate Judiciary Committee record on May 9, 2006, and is included in this chart.

2) On November 8 2005, the House Judiciary Committee held a hearing on “The Voting Rights Act –Section 203 Bilingual Election requirements.” Witness Bradley J. Scholzman attached as an appendix to his testimony copies of complaints, consent decrees and orders in enforcement actions filed by the United States under the language minority provisions of the voting rights act (section 4(e), 4(f)(4) and 203). See appendix at pgs 69-1381.

3) The Civilrights.org Network, a project of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights Education Fund, produced a number of State Reports offering evidence in favor of an extension of the Voting Rights Act. The State Reports analyzed for this chart are Alaska, Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, and Virginia. When these reports listed a successful Section 2 case, that case was compared with the list of cases provided in the University of Michigan Law School’s Voting Rights Project.
Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, it is with special thanks that I acknowledge Senator LEAHY’s leadership and cooperation, that I now yield to him. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President pro tempore, my dear friend, the senior Senator from Alaska, I see the majority leader on the floor. Is he seeking recognition?

Mr. PRIST. I will be making some comments, as I mentioned earlier, after the distinguished ranking member.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, before I begin, I assume you will go back and forth, from side to side of the aisle on this. But as Democrats are recognized, I ask it be in this order: Senator KENNEDY for 20 minutes, Senator DURBIN for 15, Senator FEINSTEIN for up to 20 minutes, Senator SALAZAR for up to 15 minutes, as Democrats, are recognized. I ask unanimous consent to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I appreciate what the senior Senator from Pennsylvania said. Senator SPECTER and I have been friends for many years. I think we have accomplished a great deal in the Judiciary Committee. I agree with him this is the most important thing we will do. But I might also note, on a personal note about the Senator from Pennsylvania, much of what was accomplished during that time he was fighting a very serious illness. I compliment the Senator from Pennsylvania for his perseverance during that time.

The Voting Rights Act is the cornerstone of our civil rights laws. We honor those who fought through the years for equality by extending the Voting Rights Act to ensure their struggles are not forsaken and not forgotten, and that the progress we have made not be sacrificed. We honor their legacy by reaffirming our commitment to protect the right to vote for all Americans.

The distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts, who is on the floor, was in the forefront of this battle. He and his family, his late brothers, the President and brother Senator Robert Kennedy—President Kennedy, Senator Robert Kennedy, and now Senator EDWARD KENNEDY, have been in the forefront of the civil rights battle. This has been a personal thing for them. It has been a commitment that has spoken to the conscience of our Nation, and I applaud my friend from Massachusetts for what he and his family have done.

Reauthorizing and restoring the Voting Rights Act is the right thing to do, not only for those who came before—the brave and visionary people who fought for equality, some at great personal sacrifice, some even giving their lives—but also for those who come after us, our children and our grandchildren. All of our children, all of our grandchildren, should know that their right to vote will not be abridged, suppressed or denied in the United States of America, no matter their color, no matter their race, no matter what part of the country from which they come. I do thank the chairman for following the suggestion to convene the Judiciary Committee yesterday in special session to consider what really is bipartisan, bicameral legislation to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. In fact, our Senate bill, S. 2703, is cosponsored by the distinguished Republican leader and the distinguished Democratic leader, by a bipartisan majority of the Judiciary Committee and by a bipartisan majority of the Senate. In fact, at the end of our committee meeting yesterday, we had a rollcall vote. We voted unanimously to report our bill favorably to the Senate.

I mention that because so many of the people who have to go through the Judiciary Committee tend to be of a divisive nature. This was a unanimous vote. I have commended all those in the Judiciary Committee who worked so hard over the last several months to build a fair and extensive record and bring us to this point today. As I said earlier, I commend Senator KENNEDY for his work. I agree with Senator SPECTER, when he gets passionate about a subject he doesn’t need a microphone.

I commend those who started with doubts—and there were serious doubts; some regional, some for legal matters. But those who had doubts have now come around to supporting our bipartisan bill.

Because the bill we take up today and the bill from the committee to report are so similar, I know the Senate debate will be informed by the extensive record we have built before the Judiciary Committee. Over the last 4 months, we held nine hearings on all aspects of this matter and on the overall bill itself. In another indication of bipartisanship, those hearings were chaired by large numbers of members of the committee and chaired by both Republican and Democratic Senators who wanted to send a signal that this is not an exercise.

All of those hearings were fairly conducted. Those Senate hearings supplement those held in the House on this matter. Indeed, our first hearing was held to express purpose of hearing from the lead sponsors from the House and to receive the results of their hearings into our Senate Record. In fact, in anticipation of this bill coming to the floor, I have included statements in the Record in the course of this week to help make sure we have a complete record before the Senate before we vote. For example, on Tuesday, my statement focused on the continuing need for Section 5. On Wednesday, my statement focused on the continuing need for Section 203. They reflect my views as the lead Democratic Senate sponsor.

We have fewer than two dozen legislative days left in this session of Congress, so I appreciate the willingness of the Republican and Democratic leadership to take up this important measure without delay. I know the House of Representatives had to delay consideration of the Voting Act for a month due to the recalcitrance of some, recalcitrance that was overwhelmed in their vote. Here, I hope we do not suffer the same delay. This is a time for us to debate, consider, and vote on this important legislation. We should pass the bill in the same form as the House so it can be signed into law before the Senate recesses for the remainder of the summer.

There has been speculation about why we are here today. Some tied it to the fact that for the first time in his Presidency, President Bush is going to appear before the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the NAACP. I, for one, applaud him for going before the NAACP. All Presidents should, Republican or Democrat. And in fact, if that had anything to do with the success in getting this bill moved expeditiously through the Senate, I have a number of other organizations I hope will invite him to get other legislation moving.

The House-passed bill and the committee-reported bill is very similar. We introduced them in a bipartisan, bicameral, coordinated effort in May. The only change made to the House-passed bill was the inclusion of a governmental study added in the House Judiciary Committee. I hope the Senate will accept that addition.

The only change made during the Senate Judiciary Committee was to add an Hispanic civil rights leader to the roster of the civil rights leaders for whom the bill is named. We did this at the suggestion of Senator Salazar. It is a good suggestion. We did this unani-mously. I commend the Senator for it. As Senator Salazar has reminded us, "Cesar Chavez is an American hero. He sacrificed his life to empower the most vulnerable in America. He believed strongly in the democracy of America and saw the right to vote as a cornerstone of our freedoms. I offered the amendment to the Judiciary Committee and it was adopted without dissent.

I told Senator Salazar that I recall the dinner with Marcelle and myself, our son-in-law, Carl, and our granddaughter Francesca in the small Italian restaurant, Sarducci's, in Montpelier, Vermont. A family next to us came over to introduce themselves. It was Cesar Chavez's son. He apologized for interrupting our dinner. He wanted to say hello. I told him how proud I was to be interrupted and to meet him because his father had been a hero of mine. They were in Vermont because they were going to the Barre Quarry where the memorial to his father was carved.

I have also consulted with Senator Salazar. Neither of us wants to complicate final passage of the Voting Rights Act so I urge the Senate to proceed to the House-passed bill and resist amendments so it can be signed into law without having to be reconsidered by the House. With respect to the short title of the bill and the roster of civil rights leaders honored, I have committed to work with Senator Salazar to conform the law to include due recognition of the contribution to our civil rights and voting rights by Cesar Chavez in follow up legislation.

The Voting Rights Act reauthorization is named for three very important civil rights leaders, as the Senator from Pennsylvania pointed out. Fannie Lou Hamer was a courageous advocate for the right to vote. She risked her life to secure the right to vote for all Americans. Coretta Scott King is a tenacious fighter for equality for the civil rights movement in the 1960s, and right up to the time of her passing. Many of us in this chamber met the late Mrs. King. Everyone in the Senate can remember when less than a year ago the body of Rosa Parks lay in state in the Capitol. She was the first African American woman in our history to be so honored. She was honored because of her dignified refusal to be treated as a second-class citizen. She was also the subject of boycotts that are often cited as the symbolic beginning of the modern civil rights movement.

Everyone in this Chamber would be horrified to think that somebody would treat somebody different because of the color of their skin, but in the lifetime of every Senator sitting in this Chamber today, we have seen such discrimination. Let's make sure we take this step. It will not remove all discrimination, by any means, but it is a major step. A step that let us know that all of us are equal as Americans with equal rights, despite the color of our skin.

Last week, after months of work, the House of Representatives, led by Congressmen John Conyers, Mel Watt, John Lewis, and Chairman Sensenbrenner, rejected all efforts to reduce the sweep and effect of the Voting Rights Act. Congressman John Lewis — America's most courageous leader during those transformational struggles only decades ago, a man who was nearly killed trying to retain the rights of African Americans, said during the House debate:

"When historians pick up their pens and write about this period, let it be said that those of us in the Congress in 2006, we did the right thing. And our forefathers and our foremothers would be very proud of us. Let us pass a clean bill without any amendments.

That is my friend John Lewis from the House of Representatives. I want our foremothers and forefathers to be proud of us, but I want our children and our grandchildren to be proud of us, too.

The bill we are considering in the Senate today passed the House by 390 votes in favor. In fact, the other body rejected all four amendments. They wanted to have a clean bill. They listened to John Lewis. They listened to the others. I congratulate the House cosponsors, both Republicans and Democrats, for their successful efforts. I hope we can repeat them in the Senate.

On May 2, when our congressional leadership joined together on the steps of the Capitol to announce a bipartisan and bicameral introduction of the Voting Rights Act, it was a historic announcement. I noted in my journal it was one of the proudest moments I had in my years in the Senate, an occasion almost unprecedented during the recent years of partisanship.

Let's not retool in our fight for the fundamental civil rights of all Americans. Working together, we should pass a clean bipartisan voting rights bill. Congress has reauthorized and revitalized the act four times, each time with overwhelming bipartisan support, pursuant to our constitutional powers. This is not a time for backsliding. This is a time to move forward together.

So let us unite to renew this cornerstone, let us re dedicate ourselves to its noble purpose, and let us commemorate the many who suffered and endured to bring our cherished ideals closer to reality for millions of our fellow Americans. Let us guarantee those rights for millions of our fellow Americans to come.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Burns). The Senator from Tennessee.

MR. FRIST. Mr. President, it was about 3 weeks ago that I joined President Bush on a trip to Memphis, TN, where we were joined by a close personal friend of mine, a man who is legendary in Tennessee and, indeed, throughout the country, the Rev. Dr. Ben Hooks.

Dr. Hooks is a widely recognized, widely acknowledged champion of civil rights. He presided with great courage and bold vision over the NAACP for 15 years as its executive director. He is in town this week for the NAACP meeting which is going on as I speak.

He guided President Bush and myself, my wife and the First Lady as we walked through the remarkable and inspiring National Civil Rights Museum which has been constructed at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, which was the actual site of Martin Luther King, Jr.’s assassination. It was an inspiring visit, those rooms where we were shown to see how we as a Nation pushed through that time, how we as a Nation persevered to correct injustice just as we have at other points in American history.

It reminded me of our ability to change, that when our laws become destructive to our unalienable rights—life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness—it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it.

It reminded me of the importance, the absolute necessity, of ensuring the permanence of the changes we make, the permanence of our corrections to injustice.

About 2 years ago, in the spring of 2004, Senator MCConnell and I came to the Senate and offered an amendment to extend the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act permanently. However, at the insistence of a number of my colleagues we withdrew our amendment, I believe, clearly that we were absolutely committed to renewing this important piece of legislation. Indeed, that day has come.

A few months ago, I stood with Speaker HASTERT, Chairman SPECTER, and Chairman SENSENIBRENNER on the steps of the Capitol where we re-affirmed at that time our commitment to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. Thus, I am pleased this Congress will act to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. Indeed, today, right now, the United States is doing just that.

We expedited it through committee under the leadership of Chairman SPECTER so we could bring it to the Senate as quickly as possible. We will complete that action in a few hours today.

Today, the Senate is standing together to protect the right to vote for all Americans. We stand together, putting aside partisan differences, to ensure discrimination at the voting booth remains a relic of the past. We are working for a day when equality is more than a principle upon which our laws are founded, a day when equality is a reality by which our society is defined. We are working for the day when our equality, our oneness, is reflected not only in our laws but in the hearts and minds of every American.

I hope and pray the day will come when racism and discrimination are only a part of our past and not our present.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 enshrined fair voting practices for all Americans. The act reaffirmed the 15th amendment to the Constitution, which says that: “The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.”

The Voting Rights Act ensured that no American citizen and no election law of any State could deny access to the ballot box because of race, ethnicity, or language minority status. It took much courage and sacrifice to make that Voting Rights Act into law, the courage and sacrifice of leaders such as Rosa Parks, Martin Luther King, Jr., Congressman JOHN LEWIS, to name a few.

They paved the way to end discrimination and open the voting booths for millions of African Americans and other minorities who were previously denied the right to vote.

In the 41 years—yes, it has been 41 years—since then, we have made tremendous progress. Thousands upon thousands of minorities have registered and have voted. Minorities have been elected to hold office at the local level, at the State level, and the Federal level in increasing numbers.

In short, the Voting Rights Act has worked. It has achieved its intended purpose. We need to build upon that progress by extending expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act today.

We owe it to the memories of those who fought before us, to those people right now, are reflected in those words of Dr. Hooks that we heard as we traveled through that Civil Rights Museum, and we owe it to our future—a future where equality is a reality, a reality in our hearts and in our minds, not just the law—to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act.

I hope my colleagues will join me in voting for this critical legislation. I look forward to the President signing it into law.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I rise to speak on the Voting Rights Act, and I thank my colleague from Massachusetts who was here before me for allowing me to now speak briefly on this particular issue.

The right to vote is quite literally the bedrock of the representative democracy we enjoy today. We must enable American citizens to fully participate in the promise of the Civil War amendments a century after that terrible war had ended.

The Voting Rights Act cannot be underestimated. It has transformed the face of our Republic and vindicated the noble values of our Nation. America has moved a long way in the last four decades, and it is my hope that the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act will help us to continue to extend the promise of democratic participation to every American. It is the right of the people to register, to do the civil rights pilgrimage that the Faith in Politics group has sponsored to Selma, AL, to Montgomery, to several different places, and to hear from the firsthand experiences of individuals who were involved in the civil rights movement and in the freedom trails of the bus rides and in the protests, about the importance that the VRA was to them, was to getting involved, and is central in getting everybody participating in the democracy and a true opportunity to register and to actually vote. It was and is critical. It is critical that we extend it.

I also want to recognize and thank the Senator from Massachusetts for the central role his family has played in ensuring the passage for this particular language, and I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for this legislation. And it is important.

Out of a strong desire to achieve this goal of everybody participating equally in this democracy, a bipartisan majority of Congress passed, and President Bush signed, the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The aim of the act generations ago was to fulfill the democratic promise of the Civil War amendments to the Constitution—a promise left unmet for a century after that terrible war had ended.

The civil rights landscape has greatly improved in the country since 1965, thanks in great part to the Voting Rights Act. The act has resulted in a tremendous increase in the ability of millions of African Americans and other minorities to fully participate in our political system, both as voters and as candidates. The number of minority legislators has grown substantially.

I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the pending Voting Rights Act reauthorization bill which the Judiciary Committee reported out unanimously yesterday. This bill recognizes the achievements of many and particularly of three champions of the civil rights movement: Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King. I believe we have a responsibility to carry on the work of these great Americans by reauthorizing the expiring sections of the Voting Rights Act.

The bill does provide a flat bar to unconstitutional racial discrimination. It speaks clearly, aggressively, eloquently, and importantly on this topic. We cannot have racial discrimination in this country, period. We are extending this act. It is an important act. It is one that will help make the values of democracy real on a tangible basis to individuals, and it is important that we extend it into the future.
Mr. President, I am delighted to be a cosponsor of this bill. I urge my colleagues to pass it. I believe it will pass overwhelmingly.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is an historic day. In the quietness of the moment, on the floor of the Senate, we are talking about a major piece of legislation that is basic to the fabric of what America is all about. But the quietness does not belie the fact that this is a momentous piece of legislation that marks the continuation of this Nation as a true democracy.

I want, at the outset, to commend my friends and leaders on the Judiciary Committee, Senator SPECTER and Senator LEAHY. I can remember talking with both of them early on about putting this on the Senate agenda, putting it on the Judiciary Committee agenda, and particularly putting into this body who are more committed to this legislation than Chairman SPECTER and Senator LEAHY.

We are here today because of their leadership and their strong commitment to the great project of making sure that America is going to be America by insisting on the extension of this voting rights legislation. They have both been tireless during the course of the series of hearings that we have held. They have been meticulous in terms of determining the circumstances that we would have and in building the legislative record, which is so important and of such great consequence in terms of maintaining the constitutionality of this legislation, which is, of course, so important. So I thank both of them for their leadership and their generous references earlier during their statements.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States is an extraordinary document. It is the greatest charter that has ever been written in terms of preserving the rights and liberties of the people. Still, slavery was enshrined in the Constitution. And this country has had a challenging time freeing itself from the legacy of slavery. We had a difficult time in fighting the great Civil War. And we have had a challenging time freeing ourselves from discrimination—all forms of discrimination—but particularly racial discrimination. We have had a difficult time, particularly in the early 1960s, in passing legislation—legislation which could be enormously valuable in freeing a country from the stains of discrimination. But it takes much more than just legislation to achieve that.

It was fortunate enough to be here at the time we passed the 1964 civil rights bill that dealt with what we call public accommodations. It is difficult to believe that people were denied access to public accommodations—the ability to go to restaurants, hotels, and other places because of the color of their skin—in the United States of America. Mr. President, this legislation was debated for 10 months. Not just 1 day, as we all have today on voting rights, but for 10 months, the Senate was in session as we faced a filibuster on that legislation.

Then, finally, Senator Everett Dirksen responded to the very eloquent pleas of President Johnson at that time and indicated that he was prepared to move the legislation forward and make some adjustments in the legislation. We were able to come to an agreement, and the law went into effect.

In 1965, we had hours and hours and hours and hours during the course of the markup of the Voting Rights Act, and hours and hours and hours on the floor of the Senate to pass that legislation, with amendment after amendment after amendment. We were ultimately successful. And just off the Senate Chamber, in the President’s Room—just a few yards from where I am standing today—President Johnson signed that legislation.

Now, we continue the process. It has not always been easy during the continuation and the reauthorization of the Act. Rarely have we been as fortunate as we are today with the time we have had for agreement that we will proceed to consider and finalize this evening, in a way that will avoid a contentious conference with the House of Representatives that could have gone on for weeks and even months, as we’ve seen in the past. This legislation will go to the President’s desk, and he will sign it.

There is no subject matter that brings out emotions like the issue of civil rights. That is, perhaps, understandable. But it is still very true. No issue that we debate—health care, education, increasing the minimum wage, age discrimination, environmental questions—whatever those matters are, nothing brings out the emotions like civil rights legislation.

But here we have a very important piece of civil rights legislation that is going to be favorably considered, and I will speak about that in just a few moments. We have to understand, as important as this legislation is, it really is not worth the paper it is printed on unless it is going to be enforced. That is enormously important. As we pass this legislation and we talk about its importance, and the importance of its various provisions, we have to make sure the law is administered and a Justice Department that is going to enforce it. That has not always been the case.

Secondly, it is enormously important that we have judges who interpret the legislation the way we intended for it to be interpreted. We have, in this situation, a bipartisan interpretation. We have a bicameral interpretation. There should be no reason that any court in this country—and particularly a Supreme Court that is looking over its provisions—should not understand very clearly what we intended, the constitutional basis for it. We need judges who are going to interpret this in good faith. That has not always been the case, and I will refer that in terms of my comments.

Then, we have to make sure we have a competitive and systematic debate, even if we have the legislation, and even if we have a Justice Department correctly interpret it, and even if we have judges correctly interpret it, we have to make sure there are not going to be other interferences with any individuals’ ability to vote. That is the subject for another time, but enormously important.

We need all of those factors, at least, to make sure that this basic and fundamental right, which is so important, and which we are addressing today, is actually going to be achieved and accomplished for our fellow citizens.

Mr. President, we are, as I mentioned, poised to take another historic step in America’s journey toward becoming the land of the free. As we all know, the battle for racial equality in America is far from over. The landmark civil rights laws that we have passed in the past four decades have provided a legal foundation, but the full promise of these laws has yet to be fulfilled.

Literacy tests may no longer block access to the ballot box, but we cannot ignore the fact that discrimination is sometimes as plain as ever, and that more subtle forms of discrimination are plotted in back rooms, to be imposed by manipulating redistricting boundaries to dilute minority voting strength, or by systematic strategies on election day to discourage minority voting.

The persistence of overt and more subtle discrimination makes it mandatory that we reauthorize the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act. This act is perhaps Congress’s greatest contribution to the march toward equality in our society. As Martin Luther King, Jr., said, voting is “civil right number one.” It is the right in our democracy that preserves all others. So long as the vote is available and freely exercised by our entire citizenry, this Nation will remain strong and our other rights will be protected.

For nearly a century, the 15th amendment guaranteed that “the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude,” but it took the Voting Rights Act of 1965 to breathe life into that basic guarantee. And it took the actions of many brave men and women, such as those who gathered at the Edmund Pettis Bridge and faced the shameful violence of those who would deny them the right to vote, before the Nation finally acted.

I’m honored to have fought in the Senate for the Voting Rights Act each time it was before Congress—from its historic passage in 1965 to the votes to extend the act in 1970, 1975, and 1982 and to strengthen it along the way. I recall watching President Lyndon Baines Johnson sign the 1965 act just off this chamber in the President’s Room. We knew that day that we had changed the country forever. And indeed we did. In 1965, there were only three African-American Members of Congress. Today, there are 41 African-American Members in the House of Representatives, one African-American Senator, 22 Latino House Members, and two Latino Senators. It would not have been possible without the Voting Rights Act.

I recall extending the expiring provisions of the act in 1970. I remember extending it again in 1975, and adding protections for citizens who needed language assistance. We recognized that those voters warranted assistance because unequal education resulted in high rates of illiteracy and low rates of voter participation in those populations.

And I recall well extending the act again in 1982. That time, we extended the expiring provisions of the act for 25 years and strengthened it by overturning the Supreme Court’s decision in Mobile v. Bolden. That decision weakened the act by imposing an intent standard pursuant to section 2 of the act, but despite the opposition of President Reagan and his Department of Justice, we were able to restore the act’s vitality by replacing that standard with a results test that provides greater protection for victims of discriminatory treatment.

Finally, in 1992, we revisited the act to extend and broaden its coverage of individuals whose English language ability is insufficient to allow them to participate fully in our democratic system.

In memory of Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, Martin Luther King, Jr. and Coretta Scott King, and Cesar Chavez, I feel privileged to have the opportunity to support extension of the act once again for another 25 years.

Some have questioned whether there is still a need for the act’s expiring provisions. They even argue that discriminating in voting is a thing of the past, and that we are relying on decades-old discrimination to stigmatize certain areas of the country today.

I have heard the evidence presented over the past several months regarding the current state of the Voting Rights Act. The fact that the number of section 5 objections is a small percentage of the total number of submissions shouldn’t be surprising. Jurisdictions take section 5 objections in good faith, and the act promotes the constructive dialogue that the act requires.

Consider the Dinwiddie County Board of Supervisors in Virginia. It moved a polling place from a club with a large African-American membership to a white church on the other side of town, under the pretext that the church was more centrally located. We saw this three times when we reauthorized the act in 1970. We didn’t expect to see it again in on the eve of the 21st century, but we did.

Some have argued that there has been a drop in the number of objections in recent years. As the record shows, that decline is explained by a number of reasons. First, of course, the Supreme Court’s restrictive interpretation of the purpose standard, which we will correct today. In addition, the numbers do not account for proposed changes that are rejected by the district court or proposed changes that are withdrawn once the Department of Justice asks for more information or litigation begins in the District Court. Equally as important are the discriminatory changes the act has deterred covered jurisdictions from ever enacting, and the dialog the act promotes between local election officials and minority community leaders to ensure consideration of minority communities’ concerns in the legislative process.

And, of course, there are matters that merit objection, but have been precleared by the Bush Department of Justice because the Department’s political leadership refused to follow the recommendations of career experts.

The Department twice precleared Georgia’s effort to impose a photo identification requirement for voting. The first time, the district court threw it out as an unconstitutional poll tax. That’s right, a poll tax in 2006. In 2005, we fought the poll tax during the debate of the original Voting Rights Act. After the Supreme Court ultimately held it unconstitutional, we thought this shameful practice had ended. But the court found that the Georgia law was just a 21st century version of this old evil.

Georgia reenacted the law without the poll tax, and the Court still found that it unlawfully disadvantaged poor and minority voters, who are less likely to have the required identification.

Recently, the Supreme Court held that the Texas Legislature had violated the Voting Rights Act by shifting 100,000 Latino voters out of a district just as they were about to defeat an incumbent and finally elect a candidate of their choice. Once again, section 5 would have blocked this practice, but the leadership of the Department of Justice overruled career experts who recommended an objection.

The fact that the number of section 5 objections is a small percentage of the total number of submissions shouldn’t be surprising. Jurisdictions take section 5 objections seriously, and it’s reasonable to expect that most will correct today. In addition, the number of objections under section 5 has remained large since we last reauthorized the act in 1982.

Astonishingly, Professor Anita Earls of the University of North Carolina Law School testified that between 1982 and 2004, the Department of Justice lodger 682 section 5 objections in covered jurisdictions compared with only 461 objections prior to 1982. In Mississippi alone, the Department of Justice objected to 120 voting changes since 1982. This number is roughly double the number of objections made before 1982.

Behind these statistics are stories of the voters who were able to participate in the political process because the Voting Rights Act protects their fundamental right to do so. For example, in 2001, the town of Kilmichael, MS, cancelled its elections just three weeks before election day. The Justice Department asked that the cancellation be vacated, finding that the town failed to establish that its actions were not motivated by the discriminatory purpose of preventing African-American voters from electing candidates of their choice. The town had recently become a majority African-American and, for the first time in its history, several African-American candidates had a good chance of winning elected office. Section 5 prevented this discriminatory change from being implemented, and as a result, a record number of African-American candidates were elected to the board of aldermen and an African-American was elected mayor for the first time.
the fact that there continue to be objections and voting changes like the ones that I have described.

It has also been argued that the section 5 coverage formula is both over and under-inclusive. The act addresses that by permitting jurisdictions where Federal oversight is no longer warranted to “bail out” from coverage under section 5. We have letters from two of the jurisdictions that have taken advantage of the bailout process explained that they did not find that process to be onerous. So far, every jurisdiction that has sought a bailout has succeeded. For jurisdictions that should be covered but aren’t, the act contains a mechanism by which a court may order a non-covered jurisdiction found to have violated the 14th or 15th amendments to obtain section 5 preclearance for its voting changes. As a result, the act’s preclearance requirement applies only to jurisdiction where there is a history and a threat of such violations.

The act will also reauthorize the provisions of the act that mandate the provision of election assistance in minority languages. In the course of our consideration of this bill, we heard substantial evidence demonstrating that these provisions were still necessary. The original rationale for enactment of these provisions was twofold. First, there are many Americans who speak languages other than English, many of whom are United States citizens by birth. These include Native Americans, Alaska Natives, and Puerto Ricans. These Americans should not be denied the opportunity to be full participants in our democracy because of the languages they speak. They know they need to learn English to succeed in this country. That’s why classes to learn English are oversubscribed all over the country.

Additionally, Congress concluded that many Americans—including Natives of this country, Alaska Natives, Asian Americans, and Hispanic Americans—suffer from inadequate educational oppportunities that deny them the opportunity to master English at a sufficient level to fully understand electoral issues and cast meaningful ballots. The nationwide statistics illustrate the problem. Only 75 percent of Alaska Natives complete high school, compared to 90 percent of non-Natives, and only 52 percent of all Hispanic Americans have a high school diploma, compared to over 80 percent of all Americans. We heard testimony that while many of these people may speak conversational English, they have been denied the educational instruction—often as a result of intentional discrimination—that would allow them to understand complex electoral issues and technical voting terminology in English alone.

Finally, it is crucial that we extend the guarantees of all of the temporary provisions of the act for 25 years. Twenty-five years is not a long time when compared to the centuries of oppression that the law is intended to overcome. While we have made enormous progress, it takes time to overcome the deep-seated patterns of behavior that have denied minorities full access to the ballot. Indeed, the worst thing we could do would be to allow that progress to slip away because we ended the cure too soon. We know that the act contains a mechanism that it is deterring discrimination. And we know that despite the act, racial bloc voting and other forms of discrimination continue to tilt the playing field for minority voters and cannot simply wait for its expiration, but must eliminate discrimination root and branch.

The time has come to renew the Voting Rights Act. This historic piece of legislation renews our commitment to the fundamental values of America. It ensures that all of our citizens will have the right to play an effective role in our democracy. John Breaux continues us down the path toward a democracy free of the blight of discrimination based on race, ethnicity and language. As Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. said: “The time is always right to do what is right.” The right thing to do is to pass this bill and the time to do it is now.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sen-
tor from Georgia.

Mr. ISAACSON. Mr. President, I rise as a Senator from Georgia to express my support and join a unanimous Senate in support for extension of the Voting Rights Act. I come to the well to speak from a different perspective than some. I was born in the South in 1944, educated in its public schools in the 1950s and 1960s. I was in the fourth grade when Brown v. Board of Education was the ruling of the Supreme Court. I was in high school when the public schools of Atlanta were integrated. I was in college when the University of Georgia when the first students integrated that institution. I lived through all the changes that many refer to as history about which they have read.

I lived through it, being there and seeing the heroes and the challenges and the transition through which the South has gone. Still, in speeches today we hear very often about the South in historic times, where wrong practices have been righted, but somehow it is delivered or how we make the Voting Rights Act go from a piece of paper and a law to practical reality in the South.

I am proud of so many citizens in Georgia. Black and White, urban and rural. Republican and Democrat, who over the past 41 years have made not only the letter of that law but the spirit of that law the spirit of our State—not the least of whom is Congressman John Lewis, a man of unquestioned character and for anyone who lived through the 1950s and 1960s, unquestioned courage. He and I are of different races and different political persuasions, but he is a man whose courage and conviction I honor and pay tribute to.

Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., was a White mayor of Atlanta in the 1960s whose actions would see to it that the actions passed in Congress were made a reality smoothly in the city, which gained the respect of our nation. We made a transition in a difficult time. We righted difficult wrongs. We made the letter of the law the spirit of the law.

Andrew Young, the first African-American mayor of Atlanta, in following Sam Massell, who followed Ivan Allen, ensured that those transitions continued in the 1980s, and that voting rights and all rights were the primary responsibility of our government and its leadership.

Carl Sanders, the Governor of Georgia, probably lost his chance at a sec-ter term because of his courageous stand on behalf of seeing to it that the South continued to make progress. John Breaux, from rural Georgia, who was Governor in the 1980s, continued in tandem with Andrew Young to see to it that our capital city and State remained committed to all of the provisions of equality in our society.

The attorneys general in this issue are so important. Republican Mike Bowers, during many years of service to our State as attorney general, time and again saw to it that what was inscribed in the Voting Rights Act was the practice in our State.

Our current attorney general today, an African American, Thurbert Baker, is a tribute to the progress our State has made and is an outspoken defender of the Voting Rights Act and our State’s intention to ensure that all of Georgia’s legal residents, regardless of race or ethnicity, have the right to vote.

A great Senator, Sam Nunn, served in the Senate, whose office I hold now downstairs. Sam Nunn, during the years of the 1970s and 1980s and early 1990s, was a steadfast beacon of support for ensuring that we continued the spirit and the letter of the Voting Rights Act.

The late Senator Paul Coverdell, a Republican from Georgia, in his term in the Georgia legislature in the House and Senate, over 20 years of service, fought tirelessly to ensure that our State maintained the guarantees of the right to vote for all Georgians.

As we reflect on the true wrongs that existed in the 1950s and 1960s, and where those wrongs may have taken place, we owe it to history and to the credit of these great individuals to pay tribute to those who took the law and made it a reality. I am proud of my State. I am proud of the transition it has made. I pay tribute to its leaders.

My vote today in favor of the extension of the Voting Rights Act is in tribute to the乔治亚州的法律保证了所有乔治亚州公民的投票权和所有权利，我们State continued to make progress. John Breaux, from rural Georgia, who was Governor in the 1980s, continued in tandem with Andrew Young to see to it that our capital city and State remained committed to all of the provisions of equality in our so-

My vote today in favor of the extension of the Voting Rights Act is in tribute to the George.
I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, the right to vote is the most basic right in any democracy. At the signing of the Voting Rights Act in 1965 in this very Capitol Rotunda, the President of the United States, Lyndon Johnson, said these words:

The vote is the most powerful instrument ever devised by man for breaking down injustice and destroying the terrible walls which imprison men because they are different from other men.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 was a critical breakthrough in the struggle for civil rights. However, the Voting Rights Act, which came the next year, 1965, is considered the most important and successful civil rights law of the 20th century, because it finally ensured every citizen of this Nation a voice in his or her own fate.

In 1973, California passed a law allowing the use of languages besides English in polling places and required county clerks to recruit bilingual deputy registrars and precinct board members.

In 1975, California allowed voters to register to vote by mail.

In 2001, California passed the California Voting Rights Act—the first State voting rights act in the Nation—to combat racial bloc voting.

Unfortunately, however, the end of the 20th century did not mark the end of efforts to disenfranchise minority voters in my State and the Nation. I believe, the sunset provisions of the Voting Rights Act will expire in August of 2007 if we don’t take this action today.

Two of the provisions set to expire are particularly significant. The first is section 5, which requires jurisdictions with a history of discrimination to clear any changes in voting procedures with the Department of Justice before instituting any change.

The second is section 203, which requires language assistance for bilingual voters in jurisdictions with a large number of citizens for whom English is a second language.

The section 5 so-called “preclearance” provision is critically important. I guess this is the section that has drawn the most comment on this reauthorization. It is important because it stops attempts to disenfranchise voters before they can start, not after they start.

In the last decade, the Department of Justice has repeatedly struck down proposed changes to voting procedures under section 5 preclearance. This section has prevented the redrawing of municipal boundaries designed specifically to disenfranchise minority voters. It has excluded minority candidates from the ballot, denied efforts to change methods of elections intended to dilute minority voting strength, kept polling places from being moved to locations that would have reduced minority voter turnout, and it has thrown out redistricting proposals that would have marginalized minority voters. Clearly, this section has served us well.

In California, the rejection of a discriminatory redistricting plan in Monterey County Boards of Supervisors is one example of the first election of a Latino to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors in more than 100 years.
As I said, California’s ballots can be long, and despite ballot simplification, which is now a part of the California ballot, they can still be very confusing.

Section 203 enables the full comprehension of a ballot, and I believe that is very important.

We are reauthorizing this bill today. I don’t believe we can permit these provisions to expire and leave the next generation of Americans without full protection of their voting rights. That is why I am very proud to be a co-sponsor of the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King, and Cesar E. Chavez Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006.

This legislation will reauthorize the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act for an additional 25 years so that it can continue to be a kind of deterrent to any chicanery, any manipulation, anyone’s ill intent to prevent any group of voters from exercising their right to vote under the Constitution of the United States.

Under the guidance of Chairman SPECTER and Ranking Member LEAHY over the last 2 months, our committee, the Judiciary Committee, has held 10 hearings on reauthorizing this act—10 hearings. As a matter of fact, I can’t remember any reauthorization in the 14 years I have been on the committee that has had 10 separate hearings. The exhaustive testimony from these hearings has confirmed both that these expiring provisions are still needed and that these provisions are constitutional.

In response to this record, yesterday the Judiciary Committee unanimously voted to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. I was also pleased to see the House pass the reauthorization last week with broad, bipartisan support. Today, this full Senate now has the opportunity to offer its own resounding endorsement of this very important bill.

Thomas Paine wrote over 200 years ago that:

“The right of voting for representatives is the primary right by which other rights are protected.”

I couldn’t agree more. Today will be a historic occasion as we reauthorize this important bill for another 25 years. I am very proud to play a small role as a member of the Judiciary Committee in this vote.

I thank the Chair. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SALAZAR, Mr. President, at the outset of this historic day in the Senate, let me give my accolades to Senator SPECTER and to Senator LEAHY for their leadership in the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act. This is one of the finest days of the Senate of the 109th Congress because it is a demonstration of Republicans and Democrats coming together to deal with the very important question of our Nation.

I congratulate the Judiciary Committee and all of those who have created a template for how we should do business in the Senate.

Almost a year ago, I stood on the Senate floor to pay tribute to the Voting Rights Act on the occasion of its 40th anniversary. In my remarks on that day, I urged my colleagues to rise above the partisanship that often plagues this body to renew the promise of the landmark civil rights legislation by reauthorizing the key provisions that were set to expire in 2007. I am extremely pleased that the Senate today is poised to take action on this important legislation.

Without enforcement and accountability of our Nation’s voting laws for all Americans—for all Americans—the words of the Declaration of Independence declaring “All men are created equal,” the words written in the Constitution guaranteeing an inalienable right to vote, and the maxim of one person, one vote, those principles enshrined in our elected laws, are little more than empty words. The reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act is fundamental to protecting these rights and values and to ensure that they translate into actual practice, actual representation, and an actual electoral voice for every American.

I especially thank Senator LEAHY for offering an amendment on my behalf in the committee that incorporated the name of Cesar E. Chavez, a true American hero, into the title of the Senate’s reauthorization bill.

Like the venerable American leaders who are now associated with this effort, Cesar Chavez sacrificed his life to empower the most vulnerable in America. He fought for all Americans to be included in our great democracy. It is only fitting that his name be a part of the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act.

As we move forward, I believe incorporating the names of these historic American leaders underscores the importance of reflecting on the history of our country and our never-ending—not yet completed—quest to become a more inclusive America.

When one looks back at our history, one learns some very painful lessons from that past. We must keep in mind that the first 250 years of our history allowed one group of people to own another group of people under a system of slavery simply based on the color of their skin. It took the bloodiest war of our country’s history, even more bloody than World War II—the Civil War, where over half a million people were killed on our soil in America—to bring about an end to the system of slavery and to usher in the 13th and 14th and 15th amendments to our Constitution. In my estimation, the judgment of the Constitution is the bedrock of the proposition that all constitutional liberties are endowed upon all Americans without exception. But it took many long years for the promise of these amendments to be realized in our own Nation.

Notwithstanding the tremendous loss of blood and life during the Civil War, some years later, in 1886, in Plessy v. Ferguson, our own U.S. Supreme Court sanctioned a system of segregation and the doctrine of “separate but equal.” The Court’s decision to uphold an 1890 Louisiana statute mandating racially segregated but equal railroad carriages ushered in another dark period in our country’s history when it was the law of the land throughout the South. Similar laws applied to other groups. Throughout the Southwest, Mexican Americans in many places were systematically denied access to “White Only” restrooms and other places of public accommodation. Just as there were signs that said “No Blacks Allowed” in the South, there were also signs in many places across our country that read “No Mexicans Allowed.”

In the now infamous Plessy case, Justice Harlan, writing for the dissent in that case, looking ahead at the century to come, made the following observation:

“The destinies of the races, in this country, and indissolubly linked together and the interests of both require that the common government law shall not permit the seeds of race hate to be planted under the sanction of law.”

Justice Harlan’s statement was profound in its forecast for America. It is unfortunate that his words of warning were largely ignored for the next half century. It was not until 1920, for example, that our Constitution ever guaranteed the right of women to vote, and it was not until 1954 that the U.S. Supreme Court, under the very able leadership of Chief Justice Warren, struck down the “separate but equal” doctrine as unconstitutional under the 14th amendment in the Board of Education case. That case was argued by Thurgood Marshall, another American hero who gave his life for equal opportunity for all Americans.

More hard-won change followed that 1954 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court.

While the 15th amendment, which was ratified in 1870, guaranteed all citizens the right to vote regardless of race, in 1965—that wasn’t long ago—only a very small percentage of African Americans were registered to vote in States such as Mississippi and Alabama. In Mississippi in that year, only 6.7 percent of African Americans were registered to vote, and in Alabama less than 20 percent were registered to vote.

The various tactics that were used back then to impede and discourage people from registering to vote and casting their right in our democracy on election day ranged from literacy tests, poll taxes, and language barriers, to overt intimidation and harassment. The Voting Rights Act went on to attack those discriminatory practices in people’s exercise of their fundamental right to vote.

On August 6, 1965, when President Lyndon Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act, America took a critical step forward in fulfilling our constitutionally guaranteed right to vote. Just a year earlier, President Johnson had signed the Civil Rights Act of 1964 proclaiming that in America, as he said:

“We believe that all men are created equal, yet many are denied equal treatment. We believe that all men have certain unalienable rights, yet many Americans do not enjoy those rights. We believe that all men are entitled to the blessings of liberty, yet millions are being deprived of those blessings because of their own failures, but because of the color of the skin.”

President Johnson knew then what we still recognize today on this floor of the Senate:

“...the enactment of both of these critical pieces of legislation in the 1960s was another major step forward in our country’s journey to become an inclusive America for all citizens—for all citizens—and enjoy the rights and protections guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution.

When he recalled the day when the Voting Rights Act was signed by President Johnson, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., wisely pointed out that:

“The bill that lay on the polished mahogany desk of the President in violence in Selma, Ala., where a stubborn sheriff had stilled against the future.”

Dr. King was, of course, referring to Bloody Sunday, the Selma incident which took place on March 7, 1965, where more than 500 nonviolent civil rights marchers attempting a 54-mile march to the State capital to call for voting rights were confronted by an aggressive and violent assault by the authorities.

In response to the violence in Selma and the death of Jimmy Lee Jackson, who was shot 3 weeks earlier by a State trooper during a civil rights demonstration, President Johnson addressed Congress and the Nation on March 8, 1965, to press for the passage of the Voting Rights Act. Indeed, President Johnson’s speech served as a rallying call to the Nation and to the Congress. In that speech, Lyndon Johnson said to the Nation:

“...at times history and fate meet at a single time and point in man’s unending search for freedom. So it was at Lexington and Concord. So it was a century ago at Appomattox. So it was last week in Selma, Alabama.

This time, on this issue, there must be no delay, no hesitation and no compromise with our purpose. We cannot, we must not, refuse to protect the right of every American to vote in every election that he may desire to participate in.

Five months later, on August 7, 1965, President Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act of 1965 into law.

In America’s history in America, we have often stumbled, but great leaders, such as Dr. King and those whose names are associated with this authorization—Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King, Fannie Lou Hamer, and Cesar Chavez—those are people who gave their lives to make certain that when we stumble, we get up and we continue our path of America forward, we continue an America that works.

Since the passage of the Voting Rights Act, the doors to opportunity for political participation by previously disenfranchised groups have swung open. Their voices are now heard and counted. This progress is evident through the Nation in all levels of government today. The number of Black elected officials nationwide has risen from only 300 in 1964 to more than 9,000 today. In addition, today there are over 5,000 Latinos who now hold public office, and there are still hundreds more Asian Americans and Native Americans serving as elected officials.

It is with this history in mind—and with the increasing diversity of our country—that I took to the future of an inclusive America continuing to fulfill the promises and guarantees to all Americans that our Constitution provides.

Our work is not yet done. Although significant advances to ensure voting rights for all Americans have been made, the testimony presented before the Senate Judiciary Committee points to an unfortunate truth: that Americans are still too often being kept from the polls.

The greatness of this country depends on our learning and not forgetting the painful lessons of our past, including poll taxes and literacy tests that prevented countless of individuals from exercising their right to vote.

I believe the United States, the Federal Government must remain vigilant and dedicated to the protection of the right to vote. This legislation today is a manifestation of that vigilance of the Congress. It represents the Senate working at its best.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I know the distinguished Senator from Virginia is going to be recognized, but I have a quick housekeeping issue.

The distinguished chairman, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, and I want to make sure we go back forth, side to side. So following the distinguished Senator from Virginia, we will take up the distinguished Senator from North Dakota. Following the next Republican, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Mr. DURBIN, be recognized for 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from Colorado for his speech. I mentioned him earlier in my speech on the floor and his tremendous contribution to this bill. We can all agree the time to end discrimination is still here, and we can work to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise to commend the Judiciary Committee but most importantly commend to my colleagues on the passage of the Voting Rights Act renewal.

I spoke right before Independence Day last month on June 29 on the importance of certain principles as we celebrated the Declaration of Independence. I will quote again the importance of this document which is the spirit of America:

We hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness—That to secure these Rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just Powers from the Consent of the Govern... So in our representative democracy, in our Republic, voting is how the owners, the people of our country in their cities, towns, and states, express their views for the just powers of our government.

I spoke on how it was important for the Senate to act on this measure as promptly as possible and to the chair of the Senate on the passage of the Voting Rights Act renewal this afternoon. The enactment of the Voting Rights Act was absolutely necessary 41 years ago during a tumultuous time in our Nation’s history. History has proven, though, that this law was just and clearly appropriate to provide equal opportunities and protections to persons with the desire to express themselves and give their consent at the ballot box.

We are all better off—we are so much better off—for the choices made during that time because this strengthened the fabric of our country. It has made our country a more perfect union—and as we strive to be a more perfect union, it has made us stronger as we have faced the challenges of recent years, presently, and in the future.

What this legislation does is help ensure the fundamental right of all eligible citizens to vote. It sends a strong message, a renewal, a reconfirmation that no matter one’s gender, race, ethnicity or religion, you have an opportunity to vote if you are a law-abiding citizen in this country. It is the core—it is absolutely the core of a representative democracy, that we do have the participation of an informed people. Again, the people are the owners of the Government.

Virginia has come a long way. They have come a long way because the Constitution said: You have the right to vote, but we all know that not every one did have the right to vote. It took many years before African Americans were allowed to vote, but in there were all sorts of devices that prevented them from voting. It took many years before women were given the right to vote. Virginia has come a long way.
since the Voting Rights Act was enacted 41 years ago. I think it is important that the Act is reauthorized, not just for Virginia but throughout the United States. It applies everywhere from Florida to Alaska to New York.

Some will argue that cities and counties cannot be removed from or “bail out” of preclearance if they so desire and have a good record. The facts are that there are 11 counties and cities in Virginia that have been able to submit to the Voting Rights Act by proving that “no racial test or device has been used within such State or political subdivision for the purpose or with the effect of denying or bridging the right to vote on account of race or color.” The counties in Virginia that have been removed from this preclearance review are Augusta, Fredericksburg, Prince Edward, Shenandoah, and Warren and the cities of Fairfax, Harrisonburg, and Winchester.

The renewal of this act does not mean that the reauthorizing States still engage in voter discrimination on the basis of race. Renewal should instead be viewed as a continued unflagging commitment to ensuring the protection of a law-abiding person’s right to vote without subversion or guaranteed interference.

Thanks in part to the Voting Rights Act, Virginia was the first State in our Union to popularly elect the first Governor African American. I hope that after this November’s elections, Virginia will not be the only State to have a Governor elected who is an African American. In fact, I would be happy if there were two more Governors elected this year who are African American. The election in Virginia represented an inspirational success for one person, L. Douglas Wilder, who was elected Governor because of his perseverance in winning. But it is also a matter of African American pride, and a matter of pride, I think, and an achievement of the Commonwealth of Virginia, which only decades earlier had counties that closed their public schools rather than integrate them to comply with the Brown v. Board of Education decision.

Now, we realize we have made progress, but we need to continue to make strides. We need to strive to be a society, as Martin Luther King, Jr., stated, “Where people are judged by the content of their character rather than by the color of their skin.”

We must join together in our great country, a country that has tremendous promise, to make sure that everybody, no matter their race, or their ethnicity, or their religion, or their gender, has that equal opportunity to lead a fulfilling life, to compete and to succeed in our country.

The reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act is a tool that has, and can, and will help achieve this goal of fairness in America. I urge my colleagues this afternoon to renew and pass this important piece of legislation. We can and have debated the issue, but we also know the results. The results of the Voting Rights Act has made this a more perfect union. Let’s keep this country moving forward, making sure that this is a land of opportunity for all. I commend this measure to the positive vote of all my colleagues.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for their attention, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I just this morning spoke to a couple of hundred young people called Junior Statesmen who are gathered in the Capitol. It is an organization that comes to the Capitol and learns about Government. I talked to them about the Voting Rights Act some, and I talked to them about what we take so much for granted in this country, including the right to vote.

I described what happened, at least as I read the history books, on November 15, 1917. That was the day on which a great number of women were severely beaten at the Occoquan Prison. Several dozen women were picked up because they demonstrated in front of the White House. They were arrested for demonstrating, insisting that women ought to have the right to vote in this country. Because they demonstrated, demanding the right to vote, they were arrested, they were to be tried for demonstrating, insisting that women ought to have the right to vote in this country. Because they demanded the right to vote, demonstrating in the streets of Washington today that we have had and have to be taken to the Occoquan Prison. Among those women were Lucy Burns and Alice Paul.

The description of what they did to those women includes putting handcuffs on Lucy Burns, tying the handcuffs with a chain, and then putting the chain above a cell door and letting her hang the entire evening, with blood running down her arms. That was the fate of Lucy Burns. Alice Paul had a tube forced down her throat. They tried to force Paul and she nearly drowned. The transgression of these women: They were demanding the right of women to vote.

It is interesting what some people have done to demand the right of citizenship and what others so often and so regularly take for granted.

My colleague was talking, I believe, about the struggle that minorities in this country, including especially African Americans, have made to have the right to vote, and I believe the previous speaker was talking about Selma, AL, on March 7 in 1965, when State troopers brutally beat civil rights workers. The marchers were fighting for their right to vote. On that day, in 1965, that day in March, they were beaten because they insisted on the right to vote, just as Alice Paul and Lucy Burns had done some 60 years before that.

Lyndon Johnson said this about what is called the Selma history—"heated.

At times, history and fate meet at a single point in man’s unending search for freedom. So it was at Lexington and Concord. So it was last week in Selma, Alabama. There, long-suffering men and women peacefully protested the denial of their rights as Americans. Many were brutally assaulted. One good man, a man of God, was killed.

From that, we know that the Voting Rights Act was passed a very short time later.

Days later, in a joint session of Congress, President Johnson outlined the Voting Rights Act, and within months, the Congress had passed it.

Let me talk about another minority in this country, Native Americans, the first Americans, those here first—American Indians. Although the Voting Rights Act applies to all Americans and all minorities, let me talk just a little about its impact on Native Americans, American Indians.

They were first given U.S. citizenship rights in 1924. Think of that. Almost a century and a half of this country’s experience passed before Indians were recognized. It took from 1924, nearly 40 years for all the States in this Nation to say to American Indians: Yes, you have the right to vote. You have the full rights of American citizenship. The last State to clear the hurdles and the obstacles to voting by American Indians was Arizona, in 1962, only 3 years before the Voting Rights Act.

I believe it has been almost a quarter of a century since we have done that; 1962 was the last time Congress reauthorized the Voting Rights Act. It has been hailed by many as the single most effective piece of civil rights legislation that has ever been passed.

I was in Philadelphia some weeks ago and went to the Constitution Center. At the Constitution Center they have these statues of the 55 men who sat in that hot room in the hot summer and wrote the Constitution of the United States. The three words that began that great document were, “we the people”—not just some of the people, all the people—"we the people." And all of the power in this document called the Constitution of the United States is vested in the power of one—one American casting one vote at one time. That is all the power in this Government. That exceeds all the power of all the Presidents, all the power of all the Senators—the power of one person to cast one vote on one day to alter the destiny of this country.

Except we have learned over time that some have been denied that opportunity: African Americans, American Indians, women. It has taken a long time and a bloody struggle, regrettably, to make certain that everyone has the right to exercise the power of one vote of "we the people."

My guess is that the spirit of Lucy Byrne and Alice Paul exists in this debate about voting rights. The spirit of the civil rights marchers who were beaten brutally—one lost his life on that bloody Sunday—their spirit exists as this Congress turns again to the subject of voting rights and asks the question: Will we do everything possible to ensure that every American is able to exercise the power of one as part of “we the people” in this great country? That is why this is such an important piece of legislation. That is why some take it for granted day after day. It is why others have given their lives for it.

Today, when this Congress passes the Voting Rights Act, to extend the Voting Rights Act once again, I think it will have been one of its finest hours. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if you are a student of history, this is a moment that you should reflect on and savor. Just a short time ago, I came to the floor of this House to read the story listened as Senator Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts spoke. I wanted to be here to see it because Senator Ted Kennedy was one of the few who was a Member of the Senate when the Voting Rights Act passed in 1965, more than 40 years ago. I want to thank the Senator for what led to the passage of that legislation—and it was a struggle. He talked about President Lyndon Baines Johnson coming back to Capitol Hill, with which he was so familiar as a Member of that body, and the feeling of shock and the shock of being there at that moment, to have been part of that historic march across the Edmund Pettus Bridge, but I missed it and regretted it ever since.

Three years ago, Congressman John Lewis, from the State of Georgia, invited me, Senator Brownback of Kansas, and others on this historic commemorative pilgrimage to the Edmund Pettus Bridge. Early one Sunday morning we got up and drove over to Selma and John Lewis and Sam Brownback and I walked across the Edmund Pettus Bridge. John Lewis was the perfect person to bring us on that pilgrimage because he had been there on that bloody day when the first march took place. When we went there on that Sunday morning, it was quiet and peaceful. But I marched us down to the very spot where the Alabama State Troopers turned and started beating him—beating him unconscious. He fell to the ground and nearly died. But he survived and that cause survived and today John Lewis is a Congressman.

What does that have to do with this debate? Just last week, Congressman John Lewis spoke in the House about the history of the Voting rights Act, and here is what he said:

Today is a triumph for freedom as huge as any victory that Americans don’t think about. I have thought about that many times, how I wished I had been there at that moment, to have been part of that historic march across the Edmund Pettus Bridge, but I missed it and regretted it ever since.

What powerful and hopeful words. It is wrong for us to equate racism and prejudice with the South in America. Sadly, it has touched every corner of our great Nation. Every one of us in our towns and communities and villages, North and South, East and West, have struggled with some form of racism in the course of our history.

In the 1960s, Illinois fielded its first African-American candidate, a woman named Fannie Jones from East St. Louis, IL, my hometown, who ran for clerk of the Illinois Supreme Court. She lost. It wasn’t even close. But she was the first to try to run statewide.

Now bring it to the present day, and I am honored that my State, Illinois, the land of Lincoln, can claim that the two biggest vote getters in its history are African Americans: my close friend, Secretary of State Jesse White, and my colleague, in whom I have such great pride, BARACK OBAMA the two who will be the next mayor of Lincoln. It says a lot about how far we have come just in my short political lifetime.
Yesterday, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted to reauthorize this bill. Today, the Members of the Senate have an opportunity to make history by passing this strong, bipartisan extension of the Voting Rights Act. A lot of people think it began that it was unnecessary. Voting rights? Where is that a problem in America, they said? I wish it were not a problem.

Listen again to what Congressman John Lewis said last week:

Yes, we have made some progress. We have come a distance. We are no longer met with bullwhips, fire hoses, and violence when we attempt to register and vote. But the sad fact is, the sad truth is, discrimination still exists, and that is why we still need the Voting Rights Act... We cannot separate the debate today from our history and the past we have traveled.

We had hearings before the Senate and House Judiciary Committees, more hearings than I have ever seen on any single piece of legislation: 21 hearings on the Voting Rights Act over the past 9 months, 12 in the House, 9 in the Senate. Over 100 witnesses appeared or submitted statements for the Record, thousands of pages of reports and evidence—could be no question about the need for this bill.

I attended and listened to some of these hearings. They were contentious. People were debating whether we needed a Voting Rights Act or whether this was some vestige of America’s past which had no relevance today. But the evidence shows that attempts at voter discrimination are not simply a chapter from our history; they continue to threaten us and our democracy today. We have made progress as a nation over the past few decades, but discrimination endures, many times in more subtle forms.

A recent example was in the State of Georgia which passed two different voter ID laws over the past year, over the strong objections of the African Americans who live in that State. They argue that new Georgia law would diminish the voting rights of the minorities, the poor, the elderly, and those without formal education. Both of Georgia’s laws were struck down by Federal courts. The first law was determined to constitute a modern day poll tax, an unconstitutional infringement on the fundamental right to vote. The second law, slightly improved, was struck down last week by a Federal judge who ruled it was discriminatory and unconstitutional.

This is what the New York Times said recently about “Georgia’s new poll tax,” as they call it:

In 1966, the Supreme Court held that the poll tax was unconstitutional. Nearly 40 years later, Georgia still is charging people to vote, this time with a new voter ID law that requires many people without driver’s licenses, which is disproportionately poor, black, and elderly—to pay $20 or more for a state ID card. Georgia went ahead with this even though there is not a single place in the state where voting cards are sold. The law is a national disgrace.

And a reminder that laws which we now look back on with embarrassment, laws that required African Americans to pay a poll tax before they could vote, laws which had literacy tests and constitutional tests before a person can vote, and say: That is the past; thank goodness it is behind us. This Georgia law that the Justice Department challenged, for a voter ID, which would have cost many voters $20, was, in the view of the Federal court system, a new poll tax.

Unfortunately, it is part of a pattern. Since 1962, the Federal Justice Department has challenged nearly 100 proposed changes to election procedures in Georgia alone on the grounds that the changes would have a discriminatory impact on minority voters. The Justice Department has sent Federal observers to monitor nearly twice the number of elections in Georgia since 1982 as it did between 1965 and 1982.

Let me add again, though I am giving examples from Georgia, I do not stand alone. We are seeing attempts at voter discrimination in the South and race has haunted our Nation from coast to coast. It is naive and wrong to believe it is only a southern phenomenon, but the fact is, the State of Georgia, repeatedly minority voters have been challenged and have been denied the right to vote.

Both of the protections, the requirement the Justice Department approve changes to election procedures in States with histories of voter discrimination and Federal monitoring of elections in such jurisdictions, are only possible because of the sections of the Voting Rights Act that must be renewed.

Let’s take another case that is not in the South. Eighty-three percent of Buffalo County, South Dakota, is Native American, but they were packed into a single State legislative district. Native Americans, who make up 17 percent of the population of the county, controlled two out of three seats on the county commission. Buffalo County was successfully sued in the year 2003 in South Dakota Supreme Court and the legislature agreed to a consent decree. In that consent decree, Buffalo County, South Dakota, admitted that its plan was discriminatory and agreed to submit to Federal supervision of future change.

Once again, it was one of the provisions of the Voting Rights Act which would expire without our action today—section 5—that entitled the U.S. Justice Department to protect the rights of Americans to vote in South Dakota.

In another case in 2004, a Federal judge invalidated South Dakota’s redistricting plan. In her opinion, the judge described the State’s long history of discrimination against Native Americans, including some very recent examples. The judge quoted a South Dakota State legislator who, in expressing opposition to a bill that would have made it easier for Native Americans to register to vote, said in the year 2002:

I’m not sure we want that sort of person in the polling place.

The record is thorough and clear. Voter discrimination continues. It remains a threat to American democracy. We need to pass this renewal of the Voting Rights Act. We need to step back as a nation and ask some important questions, not pat ourselves on the back on a bipartisan basis for passing this.

Why is it so many voting machines in cities where the poorest people live don’t work? Why is it people are denied their choice of hours? Why are they stuck with voting machinery that is antiquated or just plain dysfunctional? Why is it those who are challenged time and time again turn out to be the poor, the dispossessed? Why is it they have the toughest time when it comes to voting in America, if this is truly going to be a land of equal opportunity?

There were attempts in the House and Senate to weaken this Voting Rights Act and I am glad they did not pass. I am glad we already before the Senate today is a strong, clear version of renewal this law. I want it to pass, but I don’t want the conversation to end at that point. I hope we will accept the responsibility to challenge any State and to those of our ourselves if we are creating unnecessary and unfair obstacles to voters who are trying to exercise the most basic right they have as Americans.

Whether you are Republican, Democrat, or Independent, we need to be united in supporting the Voting Rights Act. This law, above all others, should be above politics and partisanship. We need to make sure that today in the Senate, we are all on the right side of history. The Voting Rights Act has served as a beacon of our democracy for over 40 years. It should not be allowed to expire until voting discrimination has expired.

When it passed in 1965, it was because of the moral and physical courage of people such as Congressman John Lewis of Georgia, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Coretta Scott King, Rosa Parks, Fannie Lou Hamer, and so many others. Passing the Voting Rights Act also required the persistence and courage of Members of Congress.

No one in the Senate pushed longer and harder for voting rights for all Americans than a man named Paul Douglas of Illinois. My connection to the Senate began as a college student in 1966, a year after this law passed. I was an intern in the office of Senator Paul Douglas. I had the privilege to work in his office. I guess I was lucky in that he needed me every day. I cannot say that very often for an intern, but he needed me because Senator Douglas was a veteran of the Marine Corps, fought in World War II, and had lost the use of his left arm in combat. He insisted on signing every letter, so we would call the mail that had been typed by all the people in his office, and Senator Douglas would sit at the long table, starting at 5 o’clock, signing the letters, making little notes, making corrections. I got to sit next to him and pull the letters away. I was dazzled. There I was within a foot or two of this great man who had done so much.

He was fighting the war to fight for the rights of those who were being discriminated against. He gave a lot of political blood in the Senate for civil rights. If you read the LBJ books, stories of Lyndon Baines Johnson, you know that in the early 1960s Senator John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky was the great champion of the civil rights that he was in his late career, he was in pitched battle with the likes of Estes Kefauver, Hubert Humphrey, and Paul Douglas over the issue of civil rights, but the day finally came in 1965 when the Voting Rights Act passed. Senator Paul Douglas said it was his proudest achievement as a Senator.

Today, American troops are risking their lives—and many have given their lives—for the right to vote for the people of Iraq and Afghanistan. The absolute least we can do is to have the courage to protect the right to vote for all Americans by giving resounding, bipartisan support to the renewal of the Voting Rights Act. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Graham). The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act that I had made in the two previous summers, for a week or so, I happened to be in Senator Cooper’s office on the day President Johnson was to sign the 1965 Voting Rights Act in the Rotunda of the Capitol. Senator Cooper came out, grabbed my arm in the reception room of his office, walked me over to the Rotunda where I got an opportunity to watch President Johnson sign the voting rights bill. The Rotunda was full of people. I was not exactly standing beside President Johnson—I was way off in the distance—but I do recall the presence of President Johnson. He was an enormous man. Not only was he very tall, he had a huge head, huge features, and he sort of stood out above this mass of humanity in the Rotunda of the Capitol. And so it was, indeed, a memorable day. I happened to have been there the day the original voting rights bill was signed.

This is a piece of legislation which, obviously, has worked. African-American voters are participating throughout the United States, and some statistics indicate in greater percentages, really, in the South than in other parts of the country.

Coming on the heels of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, this bill, the very next year, eliminated the barriers to voting, so that all Americans could participate in the basic opportunities each of us has to go into an establishment of our choice—that decision having been made in 1964—and then to vote and to have an impact on elections—that decision having been made in 1965.

We have, of course, renewed the Voting Rights Act periodically since that time, overwhelmingly on a bipartisan basis, year after year after year because Members of Congress realize this is a piece of legislation which has worked. And one of my favorite sayings that many of us use from time to time is that the Voting Rights Act is a good piece of legislation which has served an important purpose over many years.

I had an opportunity, as many of us did, yesterday to meet with members of the NAACP—which happens to be meeting here in Washington, as we speak—from my State in my office. They were excited to be here. There were older people, middle-aged people, and younger people in this group, all of them thrilled to be in Washington and to be in Washington, potentially, at the same time this very important legislation is going to be reauthorized. We know the President will be speaking to the NAACP and will be signing the bill. We will be able to pass it here in the Senate in a few hours. And this landmark piece of legislation will continue to make a difference not only in the South but for all of America and for all of us, whether we are African Americans or not.

Mr. President, obviously, I rise today in support of this bill.

America’s history is a story of ever-increasing freedom, hope, and opportunity for all. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 represents one of this country’s greatest steps forward in that story.

Our most basic founding ideal is that sovereignty flows up, from the people to their elected leaders. The governors must have the consent of the governed. In order for that ideal to mean anything, every American must have freedom of political expression—including the free, unfiltered right to vote.

But prior to the Voting Rights Act’s passage, for far too many African Americans, America did not live up to its promise that “all men are created equal.” Many African Americans were denied the right to vote. Thanks to brave men and women who held sit-ins at lunch counters, rode in Freedom Rides, marched in our Nation’s capital, or simply refused to give up a seat on a bus, America was forced to look itself in the mirror, admit its failing, and recommit itself to its founding ideals.

I am especially proud to stand in support of the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act because, as I said, I was there when President Johnson signed the original Act in 1965.

I was overwhelmed by witness such a man, a hero, Senator Cooper, at the spur of the moment, had brought me to witness it.
It fills me with personal pride that I can today carry on a small part of Senator Cooper’s legacy by voting to reauthorize the bill he worked so hard and so courageously to pass 41 years ago.

The Voting Rights Act has proved to be a major tool in advancing the civil rights of all Americans. On March 15, 1965, President Johnson spoke before a joint session of Congress and challenged them to pass this historic legislation.

At that time, he said:

The time of justice has now come, and I tell you that I believe sincerely that no force can hold it back . . . and when it does, I think that day will brighten the lives of every American.

History has proven President Johnson correct. The Voting Rights Act brought about greater justice for all. And while we celebrate that achievement, we must continue to strive for more.

I know my colleagues will join me in recognizing that our country will and must continue its progress toward a society in which every person, of every background, can realize the American Dream. With the passage of this bill, we advance that Dream.

I believe I am safe in predicting this legislation will be approved overwhelmingly this afternoon, and it is something all Members of the Senate, on both sides of the aisle, can feel deeply proud of having accomplished.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Voting Rights Act. I have in my pocket here a small copy of the U.S. Constitution that Senator Byrd gave me a few months ago. It is something I cherish.

In February of 1870, the Constitution was amended with the 15th amendment. It says, in section 1:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2 says:

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

That was passed in 1870. Just a few years after the close of the Civil War, the 15th amendment was added to the Constitution. But it took this Congress 95 years before it acted, in a meaningful way, to implement that second section which allows Congress to implement that law.

I am reminded that in the last 50 years we have made a lot of progress when it comes to race relations in this country. We have opened doors. We have provided opportunities. We have changed things. It has really been a remarkable change for the better. However, I think every Senator would acknowledge today that there are still miles that need to be traveled. I know that when Lyndon Johnson rallied the Nation to pass the Civil Rights Act back in 1965, he said:

This time, on this issue, there must be no delay, no hesitation and no compromise with our purpose. We cannot, we must not, refuse to protect the right of every American to vote in every election that he may desire to participate in.

Five months after the march in Selma, AL, President Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act into law. The Voting Rights Act, in that context, in that time, put an end to literacy tests, poll taxes, and other less direct methods to prohibit or discourage people from voting. They were clearly discriminatory tactics used all over this country but in the South particularly.

In the South, after the Voting Rights Act passed in 1965, African-American registration and voter registration did increase within just a few years after the passage of the Voting Rights Act.

It has been an amazing success. When it was enacted, there were only 300 African-American public officials in this country. In 2006, the number of minority elected officials is over 9,000. And the number of Latino elected officials is over 6,000.

So there is no doubt the Voting Rights Act is important, that it has been very effective. I have no doubt that it is one of the most important things Congress has done to equalize and give opportunity to all Americans. It is also—there is no question about it—just as important today as it was four decades ago.

I know the NAACP national convention is being held in Washington this week. I know they are very supportive of this. There are countless civil rights groups and organizations that are supportive of the Senate’s effort to reauthorize, and restore this act. I appreciate that, and I respect that. But also, in a broader context, this vote today allows us to stand not just with the NAACP, not just with civil rights groups but to stand with America.

We have made, as I said, significant strides. We have done some great things, provided a lot of opportunity, opened a lot of doors. And we still have a few miles to go.

One thing I have noticed, as former attorney general of the State of Arkansas, is that over the last few years there has developed a new generation of tactics to prevent people from voting, and some of these are very subtle. Some of these have to do with annexations or even redistricting that could be done for discriminatory purposes or changing the polling place without a lot of notice or making it very difficult for some people to get to The Voting Rights Act is important today to make sure those practices end as well.

It is hard for some of us to admit today—because we have made so much progress—that we still need this important legislation. I think everybody here wishes we did not. We would love to say we have accomplished the task and that we have equal voting opportunity for every American. We would all love to say that, But in reality, we know we do not, and we know we must continue to strive for the better.

I am also reminded, in closing, what Woodrow Wilson said about this country. One time he said:

America is the only idealistic nation in the world.

I think he was right about that. We are an idealistic nation. We always strive for the better. In fact, we strive for perfection. We try to reach the ideal. We do not always get there. Certainly, the treatment of African Americans through the history of this Nation is a clear example of that. We do not always get to the ideal. We do not always get to the goal we set for our ideals. But one thing makes America different from a lot of countries is that we try. We try. And we go the extra mile to try to make opportunities for people in this country and to try to live up to the ideals of our Founding Fathers and those ideals on which this Nation was founded. The Voting Rights Act is a very important part of that.

I thank my colleagues for listening today, and I thank my colleagues for their votes today.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I, too, rise today to speak in support of the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation that the Senate Judiciary Committee has done due diligence in examining this issue. But you do not have to take it from me, of course. The comprehensive record the committee has compiled powerfully demonstrates the importance of the reauthorizing legislation before us today.
Even in recent election cycles, Americans continue to be disenfranchised by discriminatory redistricting plans, through the denial of voting materials they are entitled to under the law, and through changes to election procedures that disadvantage minority candidates and voters, among other things.

It is also worth noting that just a few weeks ago, the Supreme Court recognized that discriminatory redistricting plans are not simply a vestige of the past—finding a purposeful effort to disfranchise minority members of Congress. We must ensure that the Voting Rights Act is fully enforced.

Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act has been instrumental in bringing about the dramatic improvements in voting rights and representation for minorities in covered areas. Keeping it in place, with a reasonable bailout provision, is the best way to be sure we do not lose the progress that has taken place.

Let me just say in response to some comments that were made during the Judiciary Committee’s hearings that all Members of Congress, regardless of whether they represent a covered or noncovered jurisdiction and regardless of their political affiliation, have an interest in ensuring the continued effectiveness of the Voting Rights Act. As Federal legislators, we have a responsibility to eliminate or prevent any discrimination wherever it is found. The integrity of our elections and of our democracy depends on it.

Let’s not falter now. Let’s not stop or turn back the clock but, rather, build on the extraordinary success of this legislation and reaffirm the promise that all citizens, no matter what the color of their skin, can participate fully and equally in the electoral process. We must reauthorize the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act today. If we do not ensure that section 5 can continue to serve as a powerful deterrent to violations in areas of the country with a history of systemic discrimination at the polls.

We must also reauthorize section 203, which has empowered many voters with limited English proficiency to participate in our democratic process. It is also important that the Senate restore the original understanding of the act with respect to the opportunity to elect standard and to election procedures with discriminatory intent.

There is much more work to do in terms of eradicating discrimination from our elections process, and reauthorizing and strengthening the Voting Rights Act is, of course, a step in the right direction. I want to vote in favor of H.R. 9, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Ms. STABENOW. Thank you, Mr. President. Before speaking about this very important piece of legislation we are about to pass, I wish to briefly just indicate a thank you to the State Department.

(The remarks of Ms. STABENOW are printed in today’s RECORD under “Morning Business.”)

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise this morning to extol the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King, and Cesar Chavez Voting Rights Reauthorization Act of 2006. We all know that this reauthorizes existing but currently expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. It has been 25 years since the Voting Rights Act was last extended. I personally believe that when this was instituted in 1965, there should not have been an expiration date and would prefer that in this bill there not be an expiration date. But I am appreciative of the fact that we have bipartisan support to continue this provision, and hopefully at some point we will be able to take off the ending date.

I think about standing in this very important spot in the Senate. Right around the corner from us is a room we call the President’s Room that President Lyndon Johnson used in 1965 to sign the original legislation because of its significance. We all know this is the bedrock of our democracy, the right to vote, the right to vote without harassment, intimidation, with correct information, knowing your vote in fact will be counted.

I am proud of the fact that one of the folks who this bill is named after is Rosa Parks, who is from Detroit. We are so proud of all she has done, along with the others this bill has been named after. But we are very proud that the mother of the civil rights movement is from our own beloved Detroit.

Before 1965 and the bill’s passage, we had communities with explicit poll taxes and literacy tests to prevent people of color from voting. We have in fact made great progress on civil rights since the original law. But as many of those who sit on the far right have said, there is much more to be done. Now, unfortunately, we have more subtle and sometimes not so subtle forms of voter intimidation and suppression. Voters too many times are being told of the wrong polling place or flyers and phone calls tell people that the election was moved. I know in my State we have struggled with misinformation going out around elections. Why is it that it is predominantly in our cities where the lines are the longest, the machines are the oldest, and, in fact, there are fewer machines? We need to know we are not done with what this bill represents until those things are fixed, until every voting machine works, until there is enough to make sure everyone can vote. Until there is a backup so that we know the votes are being recorded accurately, and until every person or group that attempts to harass anybody in terms of exercising their American right to vote has been stopped.

These practices are a reminder that our laws are only as good as the people who enforce them. That is the commitment we have behind it, to make sure that the principles and ideals of our democracy and of America are upheld.

Passing this bill is a very important step for us. I am pleased this has been placed on the agenda and that we are going to come together overwhelmingly and pass it today. We need to make sure we are willing to take the next steps. We have election reform legislation introduced in the Senate that needs to be passed. For the life of me, I cannot imagine why when I go to the ATM machine, I can get a piece of paper, a receipt that tells me about my transaction, and yet there is resistance to us having a paper backup so we know that in fact the integrity of our vote and the voting process has been maintained. I hope this will be phase one in a series of things we do to make it clear that everyone in America has the right to vote, that we are stronger because of that. We certainly know we are a better country, a stronger country, when we move the right direction. I will vote in favor of this bill, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I urge adoption of the bill and thank the Chair.
The Voting Rights Act is already a statute, but certain of its provisions will expire if we do not do this. We have the privilege to do so today.

The 19th amendment of the Constitution says: The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The 19th amendment was adopted later in 1920, which extended that right to women. But as I said, not until the Voting Rights Act were all the subtle and insidious barriers dropped around the country that prevented African Americans from exercising their franchise.

Lyndon Johnson said, when he signed this act, that he did so so the full blessings of American life can be fully realized. For the full blessing of American life must be at the ballot box. Tragically, not all Americans exercise their right to vote, but those who want to should be able to have access, that their vote be cast and counted and that it be done so without intimidation or without fear.

I rise to fully support this. My mother used to always say, treat others as you would want to be treated. That is another way of saying, treat others the way you would want to be treated. I have heard from many of our African-American citizens who have urged my vote for this. I proudly and with pleasure do so today. I suspect we will vote on this later.

I believe the law is a teacher. The Voting Rights Act has taught Americans all over the continent that this is a central right and, therefore, I believe we are doing the right thing in reauthorizing these provisions that otherwise will expire.

(The remarks of Mr. Smith and Mr. Wyden pertaining to the introduction of S. 3701 are located in today's RECORD under “Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.”)

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I also congratulate our colleagues who have worked tirelessly to ensure the authorization of the exceptionally important Voting Rights Act. This law plays a critical role in ensuring that the right of all Americans to vote is protected. I intend to speak more extensively later on about the Voting Rights Act.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I rise today with the support of my colleagues-Senators CORNYN and HATCH from the Judiciary Committee—Senator HATCH having chaired the committee for several years—and the assistant majority leader of the Senate, Senator McCONNELL, to speak on the legislation renewing the Voting Rights Act.

Let me begin by saying I support the Voting Rights Act extension. This law was passed after 50 years of voting discrimination against African Americans in the South. Prior to this law, many States enforced discriminatory policies that were designed to and that did prevent African Americans from voting. Since that law was enacted, there have been times where African Americans first voted in far lower numbers than Whites now have higher percentage of African Americans voting than other races.

The Voting Rights Act is a historic achievement that has corrected one of the glaring injustices of our Nation's past. It has been an important step in our Nation's continuing progress toward our founding ideal that all men are created equal.

I wish to address some questions that have been raised about this reauthorization and ask my colleagues if they concur in my interpretation.

The bill amends section 5 by legislatively abrogating two Supreme Court cases interpreting the act: Reno v. Bossier Parish and Georgia v. Ashcroft. These changes are related to one another. They are designed to operate together to achieve a common objective: the prevention of existing or recurring legislative districts with a majority of minority voters.

The two changes to section 5 accomplish this goal by enhancing and re-focusing the operation of section 5. These changes simultaneously bar redistricters from denying a large, compact group of minority voters a majority-minority district that it would receive in the absence of discrimination, and also to bar redistricters from creating a compact minority-majority district that has been created in the past.

Some have raised the specter that Federal bureaucrats will abuse the authority we are giving them under this provision, that they will characterize all manner of practices as having a “discriminatory purpose.” In particular, there has been some suggestion that the new language will be abused by the Justice Department to require the creation of a maximum number of Black majority districts possible or the maximum number of so-called coalition or influence districts, in which minority voters are combined with enough White voters of similar partisan leanings to elect a candidate.

I don’t think this is what the bill does, or that it can be reasonably read to do this. To say something has a discriminatory purpose is a term of art. It is the language of the jurisprudence of the 14th amendment, of cases such as Washington v. Davis, which define when particular action constitutes racial discrimination and violates the Constitution.

There is a well-defined body of case law defining when racial discrimination violates the U.S. Constitution. That case law provides clear borders to the limits of the Executive discretion being granted in this bill. The Justice Department’s important standard for identifying unconstitutional racial discrimination is to ask whether the challenged court action departs from normal rules of decision. In the case of redistricting, courts and the Justice Department have held the decision not to create a Black majority district a departure from ordinary districting rules? If a State has a large minority population concentrated in a particular area, ordinarily rules of districting—following political and geographic borders and keeping districts as compact as possible—would recommend that these voters be given a majority-minority district. If the redistricters went out of their way to avoid creating such a minority district would be created under default districting rules. Nor does the bill require the creation of coalition or influence districts. It bars discrimination against racial minorities, not against electoral advantages sought by either Republicans or Democrats. Moreover, no group is entitled to be included in a district where the candidate of its party will prevail.

This section’s abrogation of Bossier Parish does not permit a finding of discriminatory purpose that is based, in whole or in part, on a failure to adopt the optimal or maximum number of compact minority opportunity districts or on a determination that the plan seeks partisan advantage or protects incumbents. With the language of this bill, we are importing the constitutional test in section 5, and nothing else. With this understanding, I support this improvement to section 5 of the Voting Rights Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I add that I share the views of my colleague from Arizona. Like he, I represent a State that is covered by section 5 of the Voting Rights Act which is one of the sections that is being reauthorized today, hopefully. I thus paid close attention to the changes being made in that section.

Like my colleague from Arizona, I support the provision that effectively instructs the Justice Department to refuse to preclear a voting practice that is motivated by a discriminatory, unconstitutional purpose. I also agree this is all this change does. It does not authorize the Justice Department to determine that a state has a “discriminatory purpose.” The Constitution and the courts have already done that, and it is that constitutional definition that is being incorporated in this legislation. That standard bars discrimination against a racial group, and it does not require discrimination in favor of any racial group. Thus, it does not require those making decisions to consider positional or competitive bias against ‘missapen districts simply in order to create as many majority-minority districts as possible. Nor does it require that minority voters be placed as often as possible in districts where candidates of the party they support will prevail.

The equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution does not say all citizens are equal, but that some are more equal than others. Nor should the Voting Rights Act say that. The Voting Rights Act should not be read to require creation of so-called coalition districts that produce a Democratic or a Republican representative, as the case may be. I think that would raise serious constitutional questions if we adopted a reading defining a purpose—or authorized the U.S. Department of Justice to invent one—that is untethered from the Constitution itself. I think this is sufficiently clear from the bill’s incorporation of concepts of art that I am confident this is how the provision will be applied by the Justice Department and by the courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I would simply add there is a general agreement among Senators on this point. If someone is saying the bill authorizes the Justice Department to block a voting change because of a perceived discriminatory purpose—that would be created if race were not considered—that would be created if instead only traditional districting principles were applied. Certainly a constitutionally grounded approach does not—does not—require the creation of the maximum number of majority-minority or Democratic or, for that matter, Republican-leaning districts. If those doing the redistricting refuse to create a naturally occurring majority-minority district, they are discriminating against a racial group. But if they simply refuse to create a district where different races combine to elect a candidate of their preferred party, the discrimination is not against the races—it is hard to see how anyone could discriminate against both races by the same act—but rather it is against that party. And as unhappy as that party might be about being denied such a district, the denial does not violate the Constitution. Obviously, giving the Justice Department discretion to redefine what constitutes a discriminatory purpose would be controversial. This is consensus legislation precisely because it avoids such litigation traps. It enforces the Constitution’s requirements and no more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I think the point the distinguished minority leader made is very important, and I am glad there is agreement on this important matter.

I also wish to discuss one other of the bill’s changes to section 5. That is the new subsection (d). That is the Supreme Court’s decision in Georgia v. Ashcroft. That Supreme Court case held that, when conducting a retrogression analysis of section 5 under the act, a court or the Justice Department should gauge whether a new electoral map has diminished a minority group’s opportunities to participate in the political process by looking, in part, to whether the new plan creates coalition districts, or influences districts—that is the term any one—all other things being equal, positions in legislative leadership for minority representatives, and whether minority representatives support the new plan. Many people objected to this aspect of the Ashcroft decision because of its perceived potential to put a partisan thumb on the scale, so to speak, in the redistricting process. Their concern was if the fact that a coalition or influence district elects a candidate that minority voters largely voted for, then even if that candidate was not the minority group’s preferred candidate of choice, any plan that does not preserve that district would be considered retrogressive under the Voting Rights Act.

Similarly, there was concern that under Ashcroft, if a new voting map were to give advantage to legislative races to one party, and minority representatives—including committee chairmen—overwhelmingly were members of the opposite party, then that plan, too, would be deemed retrogressive for that reason. Personally, I do not think the Ashcroft decision should be read that way. I think it is clear the court intended to give States the option of using influence or coalition districts, but it did not intend to require the use of such districts, or to prevent them from later changing such districts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as one of those strong supporters of the Voting Rights Act, I have supported it before. In my Senate service, I have been very interested and, frankly, pleased with the comments that have been made. Let me add to what Senator KYL said. Moreover, even if we are wrong about how George v. Ashcroft would have been interpreted and applied in the future, in any event, today’s bill clearly ends any risk that section 5 of the Voting Rights Act will be applied as a one-way ratchet favoring Democrats or Republicans at the expense of one or the other.

As the House committee report makes clear, the bill “rejects” the Supreme Court’s interpretation of section 5 in George v. Ashcroft and establishes that the purpose of section 5’s protection of minority voters is, in the words of the bill’s new subsection (d), to “protect the ability of such citizens to elect their preferred candidates of choice.” It is important to emphasize this language does not protect just any district with a representative who gets elected with some minority votes. Rather, it protects only a district in which “such citizens”—minority citizens—are the ones “electing the preferred candidate of choice” with their own voting power. I emphasize the words “such citizens” and “preferred” because they are key to this part of the bill and keep it consistent with the language abrogating Bossier Parish. Both parts have a limited but important purpose: protecting naturally occurring majority-minority districts.

The new subsection guarantees that districters will not discriminate in creating such districts. And this new subsection (d) ensures they will not break up such districts, at least not when neutral districting principles continue to commend the creation of such a district.

In passing the bill forcing the preservation of a noncompact major- or minority district likely would run afoul of the Supreme Court’s ruling against racial gerrymanders in Shaw v. Reno. And, like subsection (c), all that subsection (d) does is protect naturally occurring majority-minority districts. By limiting non-retrogression requirements to districts in which “such minority citizens” are able with their own vote power to elect “preferred candidates of choice”—not just a candidate of choice settled for when forced to compromise with other groups—the bill limits section 5 to protecting those naturally occurring, compact major-ity-minority districts with which section 5 was originally concerned, and that nothing in this section of the act should be interpreted to require that the competitive position of the political party favored by minority groups be maintained or enhanced in any district. This change made by the bill is not intended to preserve or ensure the electability of candidates of any political party, even if that party’s candidates are supported by members of minority groups.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I agree very much, and I am glad that we can put this issue to bed.

By anchoring section 5 in the concept of “preferred candidates of choice”—another term of art whose meaning is cemented in the Supreme Court's precedents—I think this bill eliminates any risk that section 5 of the Voting Rights Act will be interpreted to protect coalitions and influence districts and other tools of purely partisan gerrymandering. The term "preferred candidate or a choice" has been redefined to protect the court's precedents: Minority candidates elected by a minority community.

I think the use of this language eliminates the risk that courts will construe section 5 to protect candidates who rely on minority votes for their margin of victory in the general election but are not elected by a majority-minority district. And I agree that it may be good policy for a State to create districts in which different groups will combine to elect a common party candidate, but Federal law should not be used to require that the State permanently preserve such a district.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VITTER). The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I would simply add to the comments of the assistant majority leader that I, too, am glad to be eliminated from the need to explain in Georgia v. Ashcroft, and section 5 would be applied to require preservation of anything other than districts that allow naturally occurring minority-group majorities to elect minority candidates. Locking into place so-called coalition or influence districts would wreck havoc with the redistricting process and would stretch the Voting Rights Act beyond the scope of the Congress's authority under the 14th amendment.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I have some additional remarks that I would like to make on this important legislation.

Forty-one years ago, when signing the landmark Voting Rights Act of 1965 into law, Lyndon Johnson, the President of the United States, a former member of the Senate whose seat I am privileged to hold, described the act's passage as "a triumph for freedom as huge as any victory that has ever been won on any battlefield." President Johnson's words captured the importance of the act's passage. It was a hard-fought victory at a tense time in American history.

It is not by chance why the Voting Rights Act was necessary. It was adopted at the height of the civil rights movement, when numerous jurisdictions throughout the United States had intentionally, systematically disfranchised Blacks and other minorities from the electoral process higher.

As a witness before the Senate Judiciary Committee noted, a Senate report from 1965 found that in every voting discrimination suit brought against Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi, both the district court and the Court of Appeals found "discriminatory use of tests and devices"—devices such as literacy, knowledge, and moral character tests. The Senate concluded that these were not "isolated deviations from the norm" but, instead, "had been pursuant to a pattern or a practice of racial discrimination." Such practices had driven down to 29.3 percent the average registration rate for Black citizens in these States.

Worse yet, violence and brutality were common. In 1961, a Black voter registration drive worker in McComb, MS was beaten by a cousin of the sheriff; a worker was ordered out of the registrar's office and then hit with a pistol; a Black sympathizer was murdered by a State representative; another Black who asked for Justice Department protection to testify at the inquest was beaten and killed 3 years later; a White activist's eye was gouged out; and, finally, 12 student nonviolent coordinating committee workers and local supporters were fined and sentenced to substantial terms in jail. And those were just some of the many terrible incidents that occurred.

This type of bigotry and hatred at the polls, coupled with escalating violence and even the murder of activists, is the backdrop against which the Voting Rights Act was permanently enshrining into law the long-unfulfilled promise of citizenship and democratic participation for all Americans as guaranteed by the 15th amendment to the United States Constitution.

The permanence of the Voting Rights Act is something that I am afraid is sometimes misunderstood or mistated in the popular press. The act's core provision found that section 2 prohibits the denial or abridgement of the right of any citizen to vote on account of race or color.

That provision is permanent. That provision will never expire, and we are not addressing this permanent provision by the reapportionment that we will vote on.

Instead, we are addressing what at the time was a temporary, 5-year period where provisions were adopted to subject certain jurisdictions to Federal oversight of the voting laws and procedures until the intent of the Voting Rights Act was accomplished. This provision, section 5, along with later-added provisions designed to protect voters from discrimination based upon limited English proficiency, has been renewed several times where it was originally passed will expire in the summer of 2007. Those are the provisions which we are addressing here today and which this vote today will reauthorize.

Today, we are considering the renewal of these provisions at a time when we can look back with some pride as a country and say that the Voting Rights Act has fulfilled its promise. It worked.

Today, we live in a different—although still imperfect—world. Today, no one can claim that the kind of systemic, invidious practices that plagued our election systems 40 years ago still exist in America. Today, the voter registration rates among Blacks, for example, in the covered jurisdictions is over 68.1 percent, as this chart indicates, higher than the 62.2 percent found in noncovered jurisdictions.

I want to repeat that, Mr. President, because I think it is important. Earlier, you heard me say that as a result of the violence and the discrimination against Black voters in three Southern States before the Voting Rights Act was passed, voter registration rates for African Americans was about 29 percent. But today, 40 years later, as a result of the fact that the Voting Rights Act has accomplished its purpose, we now see voting registration rates nationwide at 62.2 percent. Perhaps the most amazing thing is that the rate of voter registration in those areas that were covered by section 5, because they had a history of discrimination and violation of the voting rights of minority voters, is actually higher than the rest of the country—as opposed to 62.2 percent for the noncovered jurisdictions.

A review of the voter registration data since the act's original passage shows that the covered jurisdictions have higher voter registration rates among Black voters as noncovered jurisdictions since the mid-1970s.

I realize, though, this is not the only measure of the permanence of the act. Another important indicator of its success is the continual decline—almost to the point of statistically negligible numbers—of objections issued by the Department of Justice to plans submitted under section 5 for pre clearance. You can see on this chart that I have demonstrated here, going back to 1982, to 2005—and again, this is for the nine covered jurisdictions—this is what we are focusing on with this reauthorization. In those nine covered jurisdictions that were covered under section 5 to submit their election changes for preclearance, you see that in 1982, for 2,848 submissions, there were 67 objections to those changes or a rate of roughly 2.32 percent. But if you jump down to 2005—let’s go to 1995—it shows that this is really a bipartisan success under both Republican and Democrat Presidential administrations. In 1995, you can see that out of 3,999 submissions, requests for pre clearance under section 5, there were only 3 objections as required through the required procedures.

So you see actually the number of objections dropping from 2.32 percent to, in 1995, under one-half of 1 percent. And the good news is, it just keeps getting better. In 2005, there were 3,811 submissions, and only 1 objection for preclearance of a change in voting practices or procedures in the covered jurisdictions. So I would submit that both the voter registration rates for African American voters in the covered jurisdictions, and the plummeting, really, of objections sustained to submissions requesting preclearance under section 5, are strong and compelling evidence that, in fact, the Voting Rights Act has achieved—largely achieved—the purposes that Congress had hoped for and that no doubt millions of people who had previously been disenfranchised had prayed for.

The evidence demonstrates the continued improvement of access to office for minorities. The statistics in the House record indicate that hundreds of minorities are now serving—not just getting to vote, they are actually serving in elected office, accomplishing again one of the important purposes of the Voting Rights Act. Indeed, in Georgia, minorities are elected at rates proportionate to or higher than the numbers proportionate to the general population would otherwise indicate. While Georgia’s population is 28.7 percent African American, 30.7 percent of its delegation in the United States House of Representatives, and 26.5 percent of the officials elected statewide are African American, a remarkable accomplishment.

Black candidates in Mississippi have achieved similar success. The State’s population is 36.3 percent African American, and 26.0 percent of its representatives in the State House, 27.0 percent of its delegation in the United States House of Representatives are African American.

In light of this strong indication that the act has largely achieved the purposes that Congress had intended, of course, the logical question before us is whether these provisions under section 5 should be reauthorized. The Judiciary Committee hearings were enlightening on this point, and I want to congratulate Chairman Specter for readiness ceding to requests that were made to have a complete record so that not only Congress but the courts that may later examine this record can see what the facts are. Senator Specter worked hard to ensure that the record was thorough and balanced, but given our busy schedule on the Senate floor, that was not always easy to accomplish. However, I think it might have been beneficial for the long-term viability and success of the Voting Rights Act had we engaged in serious, reasoned deliberation over some of the suggested possible improvements, some suggested by our witnesses—improvements that would underscore the act’s original purpose—modernize it to reflect today’s reality. It would possibly expand the coverage of section 5 to jurisdictions where recent abuses have taken place or, perhaps, have improved the so-called bailout procedures for those jurisdictions that had a successful record of remedying, indeed eliminating, discrimination when it comes to voting rights.

One idea that was offered was to update the coverage formula. I don’t know if that is a good idea, but I would like to see an update that would gut the act. I, for one, certainly don’t want to see that happen. I don’t want to see the act gutted.

But I am skeptical that this would be the result. The amendment that was voted on in the House, for example, would have updated the coverage trigger to the most recent three Presidential elections from the current point, or trigger, of 1964, 1968, and 1972 elections.

As I understand it, the map, after an update to cover the most recent three Presidential elections, would look something like this. In other words, rather than the nine covered jurisdictions you see around the country, both at the State and local level—primarily at the local level—that would focus on the places where the problems really do exist and where the record demonstrates with some justification for the assertion of Federal power and intrusion into the local and State electoral processes.

If this is an accurate reflection of the effects of updating the trigger to the most recent three Presidential elections, it covers the map. But I suggest, just looking at this, it hardly guts it.

It would have also been beneficial for us to have had a full discussion of ways to improve the act to ensure its important provisions were applied in a congruent and proportional way, something the Supreme Court will take into consideration when it considers the renewed act.

Yesterday, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted overwhelmingly to extend the expiring provisions of the act and adopt several substantial revisions included by the House, so I think it is important to comment on the House revisions to the act. In other words, we are not just reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act as it existed previously, there have been changes made. So I think it is important for us to identify those changes and reflect on them for a moment.

There has been some debate about the meaning of these provisions. My understanding is that the purpose of these provisions is fairly straightforward, and I think the House legislative history reflects this; that is, the purpose is to ensure minorities are not prevented from holding elected offices in bodies such as Congress and ensure that no intentional, unconstitutional discrimination is allowed to proceed. It is important that our understanding about these provisions be clear so that the application be likewise clear.

I think the colloquy that we had on the Senate floor just a few moments ago helps to make that as clear as we possibly can.

In short, the Voting Rights Act is simply the most important and most effective civil rights legislation ever passed, bar none. The extension of the expiring provisions is important for the continued protection of voting rights, even though it would have been preferable and possibly constitutionally advisable for us to review the application of the act’s preclearance and other provisions.

Unfortunately, the act’s language was a bit of a foregone conclusion, prohibiting the kind of debate and discussion and perhaps amendment process that might have been helpful to protect the act against future legal challenges. Few issues are as important to our system of democracy and the promise of equal justice under law as the Voting Rights Act. I support reauthorizing the expiring provisions because the purpose of the Voting Rights Act is noble and its success, as I hope to have demonstrated, is unparalleled.

But I do want to say in conclusion that I share the concerns expressed by Chief Justice Roberts in the most recent redistricting case that has been heard by the U.S. Supreme Court. I hope the day will come when we will no longer to use his words, be “divvying us up by race.” It is my sincere hope that we will move beyond distinctions based on race in our policymaking, lest we, in the words of Justice Anthony Kennedy, make “the offensive and demeaning assumption that voters of a particular race, because of their race, think alike, share the same political interests, and will prefer the same candidates at the polls.

The question in the end is, Is this bill that we will vote on today the very best possible product? I would have to say the answer to that is, apparently not.

In response to the question, is this the very best that we can do at this time? I would answer, yes, it is. And I support it for that reason.

I see my distinguished colleague from New York on the Senate floor.

I yield the floor to her and anyone else who seeks an opportunity to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I am also here to voice my support for the reauthorization. I had the good fortune of voting with, Lou Hamill, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006. It is so fitting that this legislation reauthorizing this landmark Civil Rights Act would be named for three women who are so well known as heroines of the struggle for civil rights in our own country.

Thousands of Americans risked their lives, and some unfortunately lost them, during the civil rights movement to take back a democracy that had prevented millions of our fellow citizens from exercising their constitutional right to vote.

After a long struggle by activists and everyday citizens, President Johnson signed into law the Voting Rights Act of 1965 into law.

I vividly remember the day, 41 years ago, when I sat in front of our little black and white television set and watched President Johnson announce the signing into law of the Voting Rights Act. He opened his speech to the Nation that night with these memorable words:
I speak tonight for the dignity of man and the destiny of democracy.

That was the culmination of a long struggle which continues even now because we still must work vigilantly to make certain that those who try to vote and are denied to do so, and that we keep watch to guarantee that every vote is counted.

President Johnson was right all those years ago. When you deny a person his or her right to vote, you strip that individual of dignity and you weaken our democracy. The endurance of our democracy requires constant vigilance, a lesson that has been reinforced by the last two Presidential elections, both of which were affected by widespread allegations of voter disenfranchisement.

I believe we have a moral as well as a political and historical obligation to ensure the integrity of our voting process. That was our Nation's obligation in 1965; it remains our obligation today.

As we turn on our news and see the sights of sectarian violence, as we struggle to help nations understand and adopt democracy in their own lands, we are again called upon to reassert that America is the place where the right to vote is fully and equally available to every citizen.

We still have work to do, to renew protections for the right to vote, to enforce laws that guarantee the right to vote, and strengthen our election laws so that our right to vote is not impeded by accident or abuse. While parts of the Voting Rights Act are permanent, there are three important sections set to expire next year unless they are renewed.

Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act requires that the Federal Government or a Federal court approve or, in the language of the act, “preclear” all changes in voting procedures by jurisdictions that have a history of discrimination. The importance of this provision cannot be overstated. Section 5 is the bulwark. It stands to ensure that all minorities have equal access to the ballot box. Not only has Section 5 been used to strike down potentially discriminatory changes to election laws, but it has also deterred them.

Equally important is the reauthorization of sections 6 through 9, which authorizes the Government to send examiners and observers to jurisdictions with a history of voter discrimination and voter intimidation, and to ensure that by the presence of the Federal Government—which represents all of us—not only will engage in such despicable behavior.

Finally, section 203 of the Voting Rights Act requires bilingual assistance for areas with a concentration of citizens with limited English proficiency, including bilingual ballots if necessary. Voting with limited English proficiency would in many instances be unable to participate in our political process and to fully exercise their rights of citizenship if this assistance were not available to help them understand what is on a ballot.

Sometimes, even though I speak English, I think I need help understanding what is on some of our ballots and when they have bond issues and other kinds of activity. Imagine if you are, as are some of the people I have met, a legal immigrant from Latin America who is so proud to be a citizen and so worried she will make a mistake and vote no or don’t vote, or an elderly gentleman who came to this country fleeing oppression in the former Soviet Union, who speaks only Russian but has become a citizen, is learning English and wants to be able to understand what he is voting for. At a time when we are embroiled in a debate about how best to assimilate immigrants and to send out the message that we want people in our country to learn English, to participate as citizens, we don’t want to set up any artificial barriers to them feeling totally involved and supportive of and welcomed by our great democracy.

These expiring sections of the Voting Rights Acts, sections 5, 203, 6 through 9, have all been reauthorized—first in the House and then a House-Senate conference committee yesterday here in the Senate. I am very pleased that has happened because I think we still need them.

Of course, we have made so much progress. I am very proud of the progress we have made, when you go back and look over more than 200 years of history, what we have accomplished—it is just a miraculous, wonderful happening that could only occur in this great country of ours where we have steadily and surely knocked down the barriers to participation.

But are we perfect? Of course not. There is no such thing as perfection on this Earth. We have survived as a nation because of our rule of law, not of men. So this reauthorization is critical to making sure we still have the framework to make it possible for every person to believe that he or she can vote, and that vote will matter. Of course, the Voting Rights Act only works if it is actually enforced. We can have all the laws in the world. We have seen in so many authoritarian regimes, totalitarian regimes, where they have great sounding laws. The laws sound as though they are next to paradise, but it does not matter because no one enforces the laws.

Unfortunately, I am worried we may be at that point in our own country when it comes to voting rights. The civil rights division at the Department of Justice has been purged by many of the people, career lawyers who enforced the law regardless of whether it was against Democrats or Republicans or in any part of the country. Now it is filled with political appointees who often choose ideology over evidence.

That has resulted in a failure to enforce the Voting Rights Act. There are lots of examples. Look at the news coverage this past December: Six career lawyers and two analysts in the Department of Justice’s civil rights division, it was reported, were basically overruled when they recommended against Georgia’s voter photo ID requirement which disadvantaged African Americans, the elderly, and other voters. Finally, that law was enjoined by a Federal court.

These are isolated incidents in some people’s minds, but I see, unfortunately, a pattern. We need to make sure our laws have teeth; otherwise, they are just for show, they do not make any difference at all. Unfortunately, almost two-thirds of the lawyers in the voting section of the civil rights division have left in the last few years. That sends a very disconcerting message that maybe the Voting Rights Act will be honored by word but not by deed.

I hope when we reauthorize it, as I am confident we will do in the Senate, high on our agenda is to make certain that it is to be enforced and that it means something; otherwise, we are not going to be fulfilling the promise of a Constitution that sets voting and democracy at its core. I hope we will not only reauthorize the Voting Rights Act, that we will enforce the Voting Rights Act and, third, we will change some of our other laws to protect against some of the abuses now taking place around the country when it comes to voting.

We have to strengthen our electoral system so that basic democratic values are protected as voting technology evolves and as it threatens to undermine the right to vote. We need to put a few simple principles into law and we do not want to be more than a generation from counting our individual vote. We must do it sooner rather than later so that we count every vote and we make sure every vote is counted.

That is why I drafted and introduced, along with some of my colleagues in both Houses, the Count Every Vote Act, because I believe all Americans ought to have a reasonable opportunity to register and cast their vote if they are citizens. That should be part of being a citizen.

In fact, I met with a group of young high school students from New York. We were talking about how we can get more young people involved in voting. One of them asked, when we turn 18, why aren’t we automatically registered? That is a great idea. Citizens should be automatically registered. We need to make this part of the growing up in America. You turn 18, you get registered to vote, beginning a lifetime habit of voting.

We also need to make sure every American citizen will be able to count his or her vote and that their names will not be illegally purged from the voter roles. We have seen that happen. It is still happening. What happens is, someone in the political position of a State says, we will purge the voter roles to get rid of people who have moved or who may not be eligible to vote. I don’t disagree with that. People who don’t live in a jurisdiction or are not eligible should not be permitted to vote.

Instead of purging on that very limited basis, oftentimes they purge hundreds and thousands of people unfairly, unlawfully. Someone shows up to vote and they are told, we are sorry, you are not registered to vote. The person does not know what has happened, but they are prohibited from voting.

Every American voter who shows up at the polls should be confident they do not have to wait hours to cast ballots. I did a town hall meeting in Cleveland with my friend Congresswoman STEPHANIE TUBBS JONES. We heard testimony from some students from Kenyon College who had to wait for 10 and 12 hours to be able to vote. They were eligible, they were registered, they were anxious to vote. Because of the way the number of voting machines was allocated and the discouragement that was meant to be sent that you would have to wait so long, it was an unfair treatment of these young people and not how we want to run our elections. This is a needed first step to get us back on the track of making sure that the world’s oldest democracy demonstrates clearly how we know to run elections that people have confidence and trust in and that we will be second to none. We can make decisions about who governs us— that we will be second to none. We cannot say that now because other countries, frankly, are doing a better job than we are today. It is a needed first step to get us back on the track of making sure that the world’s oldest democracy demonstrates clearly how we know to run elections that people have confidence and trust in and that we will be second to none.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise in support of a bill to extend the expiring provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. While I support this bill, I continue to have some serious concerns with several aspects of it, not the least of which is the extension for an extraordinary 25 years.

The act, originally passed in 1965, was unquestionably needed to bring the promise of the Constitution to many of our citizens who had been shut out of our national political process. The original act, a remedial measure to deal with past discrimination, provided that certain provisions would sunset after 5 years. I have grave concerns that a 25-year extension may well, by itself, doom the act in a future constitutional challenge, given the Supreme Court’s jurisprudence concerning the need for narrowly tailored remedial measures to deal with past discrimination.

Members of the House raised legitimate concerns last week and advanced positive amendments which I believe would have strengthened this bill and updated it to reflect the reality of profoundly improved race relations which exist today in my home State of Georgia.

Let me talk about the positive progress. Today, a higher percentage of Black citizens in Georgia has climbed steadily, from 30 in 1970 to 249 in 1980, a 730-percent increase, to 582 in 2000.

Let me talk about my home county which is in rural Georgia, the very southern part of our State. Our community is a beneficiary of this Voting Rights Act. Over the years, several members of our Black community have been elected to city council, county commission, and school board posts.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support.

I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for up to 20 minutes after the distinguished Senator from Illinois acknowledged that voting discrimination occurs in noncovered States yet he has so far unaddressed the issue of whether the formula adopted in 1964 should be modernized to reflect the reality of 2006, so that appropriate discrimination can be dealt with wherever it exists.

Despite these concerns, I will vote in favor of this bill. It is a symbol of progress so far, and it should be modernized to reflect the reality of 2006.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support.

I yield the remainder of my time.
that after Senator Obama speaks, and after a Republican has spoken after Senator Obama, that I could be recognized for up to 20 minutes at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the revised unanimous consent request?

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. I will not object, but I do reserve the Senator from Oregon if we could have the Senator from Illinois proceed, then the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. GRAHAM, proceed, and then the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, that is exactly the kind of scenario I envisioned, and I appreciate that from the Senator from Georgia, and renew my unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. OBAMA. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I rise today both humbled and honored by the opportunity to express my support for renewal of the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. I thank the many people inside and outside Congress who have worked so hard over the past year to get us here. I owe a great debt of gratitude to the leadership on both sides of the aisle. We owe special thanks to Chairmen Sensenbrenner and Specter, Ranking Members Conyers and Leahy, and Representative Mel Watt. Without their hard work and dedication, and the support of voting rights advocates across the country, I doubt this bill would have come before us so soon.

I thank both Chambers and both sides of the aisle, as well, for getting this done with the same broad support that drove the original act 40 years ago. At a time when Americans are frustrated with the partisan bickering that too often stalls our work, the refreshing display of bipartisanship we are seeing today reflects our collective belief in the success of the act and reminds us of how effective we can be when we work together.

Nobody can deny we have come a long way since 1965. Look at the registration numbers. Only 2 years after the passage of the original act, registration numbers for minority voters in some States doubled. Soon after, not a single State covered by the Voting Rights Act had registered less than half of its minority voting-age population.

Look at the influence of African-American elected officials at every single level of government. There are African-American Members of Congress. Since 2001, our Nation’s top diplomat has been an African-American. In fact, most of America’s elected African-American officials come from States covered by section 5 of the Voting Rights Act—States such as Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Georgia.

But to me, the most striking evidence of our progress can be found right across this building in my dear friend Congressman John Lewis, who led the original civil rights movement, risking life and limb for freedom. On March 7, 1965, he led 600 peaceful protesters, demanding the right to vote, across the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma, AL. I have often thought about the Edmund Pettus Bridge that day, not only John Lewis and Hosea Williams, who led the march, but the hundreds of everyday Americans who left their homes and their churches to join it. Black preachers, teachers, bankers, shopkeepers; what Dr. King called a beloved community of God’s children ready to stand for freedom.

I wonder sometimes: Where did they find that kind of courage? When you are facing row after row of State troopers on horseback, armed with billy clubs and tear gas—when they are coming toward you spewing hatred and violence, how do you simply stop, kneel down, and pray to the Lord for salvation?

But the most amazing thing of all is that after that day, after John Lewis was beaten within an inch of his life, after people’s heads were gashed open and their eyes were burned, and they watched their children’s innocence literally beaten out of them—after all that, they went back and marched again. They marched again. They crossed the Edmund Pettus Bridge that day, that bridge is a nation’s conscience, and not 5 months later the Voting Rights Act of 1965 was signed into law. It was reauthorized in 1970, in 1975, and in 1982.

Now, in 2006, John Lewis—the physical scars of those marches still visible—is an original cosponsor of the fourth reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act. He was joined last week by 389 of his House colleagues in voting for its passage.

There were some in the House, and there may be some in the Senate, who argue that the act is no longer needed, that the protections of section 5’s “preclearance” requirement—a requirement that ensures certain States are upholding the right to vote—are targeting the wrong States. Unfortunately, the evidence refutes that notion.

Of the 1,100 objections issued by the Department of Justice since 1965, 56 percent occurred since the last reauthorization in 1982. Over half have occurred since 1982. So despite the progress these States have made in upholding the vote, it is clear that problems still exist.

There are others who have argued we should not renew section 203’s protection of language minorities. These arguments have been tied to debates over immigration and they tend to muddle a noncontroversial issue—protecting the right to vote—with one of today’s most contentious debates.

But let’s remember, you cannot request language assistance if you are not a voter. You cannot be a voter if you are not a citizen. And while voters, as citizens, must be proficient in English, many are simply more comfortable voting in their languages without making errors. It is not an unreasonable assumption.

A representative of the Southwestern Voter Registration Project is quoted as saying: “Citizens who prefer Spanish registration cards do so because they feel more connected to the process; they also feel they trust the process more when there are people speaking their language.”

These sentiments—connection to and trust in our democratic process—are exactly what we want from our voting rights legislation.

Our challenges, of course, do not end at reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act. We have to prevent the problems we have seen in recent elections from happening again. We have seen political operatives purge voters from registration rolls for no legitimate reason, prevent eligible ex-felons from casting ballots, distribute polling equipment unevenly and deceive voters about the time, location, and rules of elections. Unfortunately, these efforts have been directed primarily at minority voters, the disabled, low-income individuals, and other historically disfranchised groups.

The Help America Vote Act, or HAVA, was a big step in the right direction. But we have to do more. We need to fully fund HAVA if we are going to move forward in the next stage of securing the right to vote for every citizen. We need to enforce critical requirements such as statewide registration databases. We need to make sure minority voters are not the subject of some deplorable intimidation tactics when they do go to the polls.

In Wisconsin, a flyer purported to be from the “Milwaukee Black Voters League” was circulated in predominantly African-American neighborhoods with the following message:

If you’ve already voted in any election this year, you can’t vote in the presidential election. If you violate any of these laws, you can be sent to jail for 10 years in prison, and your children will get taken away from you.

Now, think about that. We have a lot more work to do. This occasion is a cause for celebration. But it is also an opportunity to renew our commitment to voting rights.

As Congressman LEWIS said last week:

It's clear that we have come a great distance, but we still have a great distance to go.

The memory of Selma still lives on in the spirit of the Voting Rights Act. Since that day, the Voting Rights Act has been a critical tool in ensuring that all Americans not only have the right to vote, they have the right to have their vote counted.

Those of us concerned about protecting those rights cannot afford to rest on our laurels upon reauthorization of this bill. We need to take advantage of this rare, united front and continue to fight to ensure unimpeded access to the polls for all Americans. In other words, we need to take the spirit that existed on that bridge, and we have to spread it across this country.

Two weeks after the first march was turned back, Dr. King spoke, and he told a gathering of organizers and activists and community members that they should not despair because the arc of the moral universe is long, but it bends toward justice.

That is because of the work that each of us does that it bends toward justice. It is because of people such as JOHN LEWIS and Fannie Lou Hamer and Coretta Scott King and Rosa Parks—all the giants upon whose shoulders we stand—that we are beneficiaries of that arc bending toward justice.

That is why I stand here today. I would not be in the Senate had it not been for the efforts and courage of so many parents and grandparents and ordinary people who were willing to reach up and bend that arc in the direction of justice. I hope we continue to see that spirit live on not just during this debate but throughout all our work here in the Senate.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

I wish to take a few moments to add my voice to the Senate debate in terms of my voice being added to the debate, is that I recognize it is just a voice, that I am in the Senate—I just turned 51 years old, a child of the South. I grew up in the 1950s and 1960s, and I went to segregated schools until, I think, the fifth or sixth grade.

My life is charger because of the civil rights movement.

It has enriched the country. I have been able to interact with people in ways that would have been impossible if segregation had stood and, as SenatorObama indicated, his career in the Senate is possible. I would argue that most Americans' lives are better because in America you can interact in a meaningful way now. And one of the interactions is to be able to vote.

But it is just a voice I add. To get here, literally, to get the Voting Rights Act passed back in the 1960s, people died. They shed their blood, their sweat. They put their hopes and dreams for their children on the line. They were willing to die for their inalienable right to participate in their democracy. And the most meaningful way you can participate is to be able to vote without fear.

Dr. King is a fascinating historical figure now. He was a fascinating man, a pacifist in the military for quite a while. I have been around a lot of brave people—pilots who take off and fly in harm's way. I sort of have an affinity for military history. I always admired the people who were willing to risk their family's safety, or their family, or their lives, to stand with their comrades when it looked as though all hope was lost because that was the right thing to do.

They were willing to sacrifice their life not only for their country but for their fellow service members, the people in their unit. How hard that must have been. Some people rise to the occasion and some don't. Those who rise to the occasion are called heroes, rightly so. Those who are not the occasion are called human beings.

All human beings me included, should celebrate the heroes. The thing that I admire most about Dr. King and his associates is that it is one thing to put your own life at risk. It is another thing to put your family at risk. I would imagine, never having met Dr. King, that one of his biggest fears was not about his personal safety but about what might happen to his family. To the thing of bravery, to know that if you do nothing, your family is going to be locked into a system where life is very meaningless. And to do something so heroic and so challenging that you put your family at risk had to be a very hard decision.

So as we reauthorize the Voting Rights Act, we need to remember, all of us who vote, that it is not that big a deal. There is no one in the Senate. Hardly anyone is listening. We have some visitors here in the Capitol. It is going to pass pretty quickly. Everyone knows the outcome. In the 1960s, people did not know the outcome. I argue that the fact we reauthorized this without a whole lot of discussion and rancor is the best testament to its success. All the fears and all the playing on people's prejudices that would come from integration, if it came about, or allowing everyone to vote, if it came about, they were just—baseless fears. All from 2006 over the history of the Voting Rights Act, there is nothing to fear. Allowing Americans to fully participate in a democracy has been a wonderful thing. Allowing people to go to the polling place and vote on the day that they want to vote. And to do something so heroic and so challenging that you put your family at risk. I never having met Dr. King, his associates is that it is one thing to risk your life for your country. It is another thing to risk your family's safety, or your family, or your friends, or your community, or your neighborhood, or your city, or your county, or your state, or your nation, or your continent.

That says nothing about this generation being good and the last generation being evil. It speaks to the weakness of humanity. Within all of us there is a fear that can be tapped into. We have to remember, no one is going to be on constant guard not to let the issues of our day play on our fears.

I argue that one of those issues we are dealing with today that is playing on the fears of the past and the weaknesses of the immigration issue. I hope as we move forward on the immigration issue, we can understand that obeying the law is an essential part of America, and people need to be punished when they break it. But there is another strength of the Voting Rights Act, is that it allows people from all over the world, from different backgrounds, races, and creeds, and allowing them to share in the American dream. We should do it in an orderly way, not a chaotic way.

To the issue at hand, the Voting Rights Act will be extended. I believe it is for 25 years. Some of the data in the act is based on 1968, 1972 turnout models. The act does not recognize the progress particularly in my region of the country. I think it should have, but it didn't. So we will just move on.

South Carolina has made great strides forward in terms of African American voting participation and minority African American representation at all levels of State government and local government. My State is better for that. I am proud of the progress that has been made. To those who made it happen, those who risked their blood, sweat and tears, I owe you a debt. Everyone of my generation, and beyond, who can vote today, it will be in your honor and your memory.

I hope 25 years from now it can be said that there will be no need for the Voting Rights Act because things have changed. Is it the better. I can't read the future or predict what the world will be like 25 years from now or what America will be like. But if we keep making the progress we have in the last 25 years, it can happen.

This is important. No one in each Member of this body—regardless of political differences, party affiliation, or personal background—to try to bring out the best in our country no matter how hard the issue might be, no matter how emotional it might be, and no matter how much people play on our fears. Just as those who came before us rejected the desire to play on fears and prejudices and risked their personal safety, I reject the temptation of political leaders that I am now a part of will live up to the ideals demonstrated by Americans in the past who were brave, who risked it all for the common good.

I will close with this thought: As Senator OBAMA said, if we can embrace good, brave, who risked it all for the common will live up to the ideals demonstrated just as those who came before us re.

The Act's spirit that led to the Voting Rights Act—a sense of fair play, fair treatment—and apply it to other areas and other issues facing our Nation, we will be much stronger. It is with that sense of purpose and hope that I will vote to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act.

To my fellow South Carolinians, you have come a long way. You have much to be proud of. But we, like every other part of this country, still have a long way to go.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for the reauthorization of the landmark Voting Rights Act of 1965. I was a member of the Indianapolis School Board and mayor of Indianapolis during the civil rights movement, and I witnessed firsthand the critical importance of promoting justice and understanding in our communities.

Following the tragic death of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., while I was serving as mayor, so many of my friends and neighbors in Indianapolis came together in peace and reconciliation, and I am grateful that our city served as a model to so many other cities that were unfortunately stricken with violence and division.

It is in the spirit of justice, harmony, and compassion that we must join together to support this important legislation. This is a signal moment for the Senate, and I am pleased that President Bush will sign this bill into law as the 41st anniversary of the signing of the Voting Rights Act approaches on August 6.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I rise to voice my support for reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act of 1965. H.R. 9, the bill to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act, is an important piece of legislation that seeks to express the views of the American people on the great progress prompted by the Voting Rights Act in my State, as well as to express a few concerns.

My home State of Alabama—the site of the Selma to Montgomery voting rights march—had a grim history on voting rights. Before 1965, only 19 percent of African Americans in our State were registered to vote, and they were denied the right to vote through any number of tactics and strategies. But I believe that the extraordinary nature of the “tests and devices”—lay a ruthless decision to deny Black citizens the right to vote so that the majority of the White community could maintain political power.

The results of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 were some of the best things that ever happened to Alabama. Before the Voting Rights Act, Alabama had fewer than 30 African American officials. As of 2001, the most recent figures available, Alabama had over 750 African-American office holders—second only to Mississippi. These elected officials include a U.S. Congressman, 18 state senators, 67 representatives of the State House of Representatives, 46 mayors, 80 members of county commissions, school board members, town council members and the like.

Voter registration rates for Blacks and Whites in Alabama are now virtually identical. In fact, in the last Presidential election, according to the Census Bureau, a larger percentage of African Americans voted than Whites in the State of Alabama. Now, that was the goal of the act—to have this kind of progress over the past 15 years, Alabama has not had a single court find the State guilty of violating the 15th amendment or the very broad protections afforded by section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. The same cannot be said now:

Ohio: Maryland; Massachusetts; Missouri; Montana; Nebraska; Wisconsin; Chicago, IL; Hempstead, NY; Los Angeles County, CA; or Dade County, FL—none of which are covered by section 5’s pre-clearance requirement.

The people of Alabama understand that these changes in our State are good, and they do not want to do anything that would suggest that there is any interest in moving away from the great right to vote. We want to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. How we reauthorize the act is something that is worthy of discussion, however. The witnesses we have heard in the Judiciary Committee over the past couple of weeks have had many different ideas, and after hearing from them, I am concerned that we should have listened more carefully to some of their recommendations.

My concerns stem, in part, from the extraordinary nature of some of the temporary provisions of the Voting Rights Act particularly the “pre-clearance” requirement of section 5. Section 5 requires Alabama and other covered jurisdictions to “pre-clear” any change in the “manner or method of voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting.” The pre-clearance requirement applies to “[a]ny change affecting voting, even though it appears to be minor or indirect.” As a representative of the Department of Justice testified in the House of Representatives, “There is no de minimis exception” to the pre-clearance requirement.

In 1966, the Supreme Court in South Carolina v. Katzenbach upheld section 5’s pre-clearance requirement as “a necessary and constitutional response to some States’ ‘extraordinary stratagem[s] of contriving new rules of various kinds for the sole purpose of perpetuating voting discrimination in the face of adverse federal court decree.’” The Court acknowledged that suspension of new voting regulations pending pre-clearance was an extraordinary departure from the traditional relations between the States and the Federal Government,” but “held it constitutional as a permitted congressional response to the unremitting attempts by some state and local officials to frustrate their citizen’s equal enjoyment of the right to vote.” In other words, the pre-clearance requirement was an extraordinary response to an extraordinary problem—unrelenting efforts by some State and local officials to contrive new rules for voting and elections after each defeat in Federal court.

During the reauthorization process, we have been presented relatively little present-day evidence of continued “unremitting attempts by some state and local officials to frustrate their citizen’s equal enjoyment of the right to vote” as was the case in 1965—especially the kind of change-the-rules-after-losing tactics that prompted the section 5 pre-clearance requirement.

According to Richard L. Hasen, William H. Nannon Distinguished Professor of Law at Loyola Law School in Los Angeles: “In the most recent 1998 to 2002 period, DOJ objected to a meager 0.05 percent of pre-clearance requests. Updating these data, DOJ interposed just two objections nationwide overall in 2004, and one objection in 2005.” These data suggest relatively isolated attempts to interfere with voting rights not widespread, “extraordinary stratagem[s]” to perpetuate discrimination in voting.

To be sure, there have been examples of misconduct, such as the cancellation of the June 5, 2001, city council and mayoral elections in the town of Kilmichael, MS, and I do not want to minimize those violations in any way. Such misconduct did not appear to be common or widespread, however, and it could have been remedied through ordinary litigation under section 2 of the act and 42 U.S.C. § 1983. In fact, a disturbing aspect of the Kilmichael incident is that the attorney general’s objection to the cancellation of the election came on December 11, 2001, over 7 months after the election had been canceled. This was no doubt due in part to the town’s failure to submit the change in a timely fashion, but it nonetheless appears that minority voters would have received justice more quickly through a lawsuit in Federal court, accompanied by a request for a preliminary injunction and/or a temporary restraining order.

In light of the dearth of present-day pre-clearance objections or evidence of violations that, due to their nature or number, cannot be remedied through litigation, I am concerned that reauthorizing section 5’s pre-clearance requirement for 25 years as proposed in H.R. 9 will not pass constitutional muster in the litigation that is certain to follow its enactment. In City of Boerne v. Flores, the Supreme Court held that when Congress enacts legislation to enforce constitutional guarantees, it must have a congruence and proportionality between the injury to be prevented or remedied and the means adopted to that end. The Court cited the Voting Rights Act of 1965 as an example of appropriate congressional legislation. In that case, the Court observed, however, that “[s]trong measures appropriate to address one harm may be an unwarranted response to another, lesser one.”

I am worried because, in extending section 5’s preclearance requirement for another 25 years, H.R. 9 does little to acknowledge the tremendous progress made over the past 40 years in Alabama and other covered jurisdictions. Today is not 1965, and the situation with respect to voting rights in Alabama and other covered jurisdictions is dramatically different from 1965. What about the 14 noncovered jurisdictions that Federal courts have found guilty of constitutional or section 2 violations in recent years? Those years and those jurisdictions could easily be added to the list in section 4(b), but H.R. 9 does not update the coverage formula to include them. Given the dearth of preclearance objections, it seems that some minor or de minimis voting changes ought to be removed from the preclearance requirement, as well.

Congress also needs to make changes to improve the “bailout” process in section 4(a) of the act. According to the Department of Justice, out of 914 covered States and political subdivisions, only 11 covered jurisdictions, all in Virginia, have bailed out from coverage, and thus preclearance, under section 4(a). It is obvious that bailout is not working. In 1965, the Supreme Court held in L v. S. it is not the purpose of this Act to alter the Supreme Court’s decision in Georgia v. Ashcroft in Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, Bossier Parish II. In its decision in Bossier Parish II, in particular, the Court warned that the interpretation of section 5 rejected in that case “would also exacerbate the ‘substantial’ federalism costs that the preclearance procedure already exacts perhaps to the extent of raising concerns about §5’s constitutionality.”

I am also concerned about H.R. 9’s language adding new subsections (b), (c), and (d) to section 5 of the Voting Rights Act to alter the Supreme Court’s decisions in Georgia v. Ashcroft and Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, Bossier Parish II. In its decision in Bossier Parish II, in particular, the Court warned that the interpretation of section 5 rejected in that case “would also exacerbate the ‘substantial’ federalism costs that the preclearance procedure already exacts perhaps to the extent of raising concerns about §5’s constitutionality.” All these decisions, both to the risks taken in failing to modernize and modify the provisions of the Voting Rights Act to address the voting rights problems of the 21st century. It is particularly important therefore, that these new provisions be interpreted.

The “ability . . . to elect their preferred candidates of choice” language in new subsections 5(b) and 5(d) prevents the elimination of what the Supreme Court called “majority-minority districts” in Georgia v. Ashcroft, in exchange for the creation of what it called “influence districts.” Neither the language of new subsections 5(b) and 5(d) nor the “any discriminatory purpose” language of new subsection 5(c) required by the Court, nor the “any of its purposes” or “coalitional” districts, however. The concept of “influence” or “coalitional” districts is far too amorphous to impose as a requirement of Federal law. Imposing such new restrictions on the redistricting process would prove both unworkable and unconstitutional.

I agree with the comments made earlier this afternoon by Senator McConnell, Senator HATCH, Senator Kyl, and Senator Conrad. The bipartisan support for this bill indicates that both Republicans and Democrats do not expect or intend it to be interpreted to advantage one party or the other. Although the Voting Rights Act is now 40 years old, many of my constituents have vivid recollections of discrimination at the ballot box, and they have strong memories of the civil rights movement that led to the most historic changes that were encapsulated in the Voting Rights Act. These are wonderful people. They love America and are proud of the changes in Alabama and our Nation. They have a strong attachment to the Voting Rights Act. All Alabamians want to see the progress continue. In light of the wrongs that have occurred in the past and out of respect for those who placed their very lives at risk for change, I will vote in favor of H.R. 9.

Mr. BURR. Mr. President, I rise today in support of reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act. The bipartisan process of citizens electing those who will govern them is a cornerstone of America. It is this design which has contributed greatly to making our Nation stable, resilient, and a leader in the world. Every election over the age of 18 who can legally vote has a constitutional right to do so.

The 15th amendment of the Constitution states, “The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.”

To enforce the 15th amendment, President Lyndon Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act into law on August 6, 1965. This legislation prevented States from suppressing or denying African Americans and others the opportunity to participate in the electoral process, and it continues to do so today.

Most of the Voting Rights Act is permanent law. However, certain sections of the law are set to expire in 2007 if not reauthorized by this Congress. The sections, known as requirements for Federal review of State and local election laws, the placement of Federal election observers, and voting assistance programs for bilingual American citizens, were established so that Congress could periodically reevaluate and amend them if needed.

I stand here today representing a State, portions of which have been classified by this act as having a troubled history, and support reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act.

North Carolina is proud of the progress it has made over the last several decades. North Carolinians continue to learn from history and will continue to strive to serve as a model for the rest of the Nation in equality and fairness.

I must emphasize that regardless of the outcome of this reauthorization vote, which I will support and I am sure my colleague is, no member of any political party can vote nay. The right to vote is fundamental to our democratic system. If any member votes against reauthorization, no one will lose the right to vote in 2007 as a result of any expiring provisions. As Members of Congress, we have the responsibility to preserve the constitutional rights of all individuals but also to make sure that the law of the land is evenly and fairly applied and enforced.

Voting rights for African Americans or any other citizen group are granted by the 15th amendment. Voting rights for American citizens are permanent.

We must ensure public confidence in our electoral system.
As I have said on the floor of the Senate before, “as our country plants the seeds of democracy across the world, we have the essential obligation to continue to operate as the model.”

I urge my colleagues to support this reauthorization.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act. Let me first commend everyone who has been involved with getting this bill to where we are today, including the chairman of the Judiciary Committee here in the Senate, Chairman SPECTER. Chairman SPECTER has attempted to ensure that everyone involved in this process received the opportunity to explore the issues about which they had further questions, while still moving the bill through expeditiously. Thanks to all these efforts, we will see final passage of the Voting Rights Act reauthorization today, nearly a year ahead of the expiration of any of the temporary provisions.

I have long been a supporter of the Voting Rights Act. I had the opportunity to work with Senators DOLE and KENNEDY and others in 1982 to continue the VRA’s vital protections, to ensure that Americans truly have the right to vote.

As I explained during the reauthorization of the VRA in 1982, the right to vote is fundamental. Only through voting can we guarantee preservation of all our other rights. The right to vote is the very cornerstone of democracy and merits the highest protection of law.

People of all races have been guaranteed the right to vote since passage of the 15th amendment in 1870. For far too long, though, this was a right only in theory. Many minorities were discriminated against in the days before the Voting Rights Act was introduced. Since this Act was passed, we have seen a tremendous change in the voter registration rates as well as the proportion of the populations increase dramatically. The Voting Rights Act has had very significant success in fighting racial discrimination, probably more than anything else that Congress has done since the adoption of the Civil War amendments.

Next year, important provisions of the Voting Rights Act will expire. The right of every American to have a voice and vote is the essence of America’s strength. As was the case in 1982, conditions have improved since the original Voting Rights Act was passed. It is our duty as the ultimate custodians of the public trust, however, to ensure that we never return to a world in which some of our citizens do not truly have the right to vote.

For this reason, I stand with Chairman SPECTER as an original cosponsor of the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006. Members, including the bill’s authors, members of the Judiciary Committees in both Houses, and thousands of civil rights activists, have worked incredibly hard to see this reauthorization become a reality.

I will repeat what I said on this floor 15 years ago: It is our duty to guarantee that all citizens have the same opportunity to participate in the political process and select representatives of their choice. All of us here today recognize that it is our duty, as elected representatives of the people, as guardians of democracy, to protect the right to vote. I remain confident, as was President Reagan’s, in our ability to ensure that all citizens have the opportunity to fully participate in the American political system, both as voters and candidates. At the time the act was first adopted, only one-third of all African Americans of voting age were on the registration rolls in the specially covered States compared with two-thirds of White voters. Now African Americans’ voter registration rates are approaching parity with that of Whites in many areas, and Hispanic voters in jurisdictions added to the list of which I am a cosponsor in 1975 are not far behind. Enforcement of the act has also increased the opportunity of African Americans and Latino voters to elect representatives of their choice. Virtually excluded from all public offices in the South in 1965, African Americans and Hispanic voters are now substantially represented in the State legislatures and local governing bodies throughout the region.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it is without hesitation that I support the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006, which ensures that the right of all citizens to vote, including the right to register to vote and cast meaningful votes, is preserved and protected as guaranteed by the Constitution.

Reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 may be a foregone conclusion; however, I believe that today’s debate and vote are of great consequence because we are protecting each citizen’s right to vote and preserving the integrity of our Nation’s voting process. Passage of this measure is not merely symbolic; it is an essential reaffirmation that we the people are securing the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. I firmly believe that the right of citizens of the United States to vote should not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race.

The right to cast a vote is fundamental in our system of government, and the importance of each person’s voting rights is reflected by the fact that they are protected by the 14th, 15th, 19th, 24th, and 26th amendments to the Constitution. President Ronald Reagan described the right to vote as the crown jewel of American liberties. Like President Reagan, I also believe that the right to vote is a great privilege worth protecting.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 was initially passed in response to post-Civil War Reconstruction efforts to disenfranchise Black voters. The voting Rights Act of 1965 was amended in 1970, 1975, 1982, and 1992. It remains one of the most significant pieces of civil rights legislation in American history. This legislation now ensures that the Voting Rights Act for an additional 25 years, several provisions of which will expire on August 6, 2007, unless Congress acts to renew them. Reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act will ensure many privileges including bilingual election assistance for certain language minority citizens in certain States and subdivisions, free to vote for millions of U.S. citizens. This right, as outlined in the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution, is fundamental to our Country's foundation. It is the life-blood of our democracy. The very legitimacy of our government is dependent on the access all Americans have to the electoral process.

We must ensure that when citizens choose to vote, they do not face obstacles created to disenfranchise them. Every U.S. citizen, regardless of race or gender, should have opportunity to cast their vote without fear of discrimination.

The Voting Rights Act has been the case. Our Nation's history can provide examples where the person's right to vote has been impeded whether it be through literacy tests or poll taxes. This is unacceptable and is a powerful reminder of the hardships this Nation has experienced. The Voting Rights Act has provided protection to minority communities that may fall victim to some of those impediments, or even worse, to threats or intimidation during the electoral process.

I believe the Voting Rights Act was a good idea and necessary in 1965. I also believe we have come a long way since 1965 and would like to recognize the many changes and progress made all across the Country. I firmly believe this progress will only continue to grow.

I come from a State that is committed to civil rights, and I believe that our Forefathers said it best that we are one Nation, undivided, with liberty and justice for all. I look forward to seeing this commitment to justice renewed today as we reauthorize the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Mr. President, I am confident that the Voting Rights Act will be reauthorized today and urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this very important piece of legislation, the Voting Rights Reauthorization Act of 2006.

As we all know, Congress first passed the Voting Rights Act in 1965, when many jurisdictions had numerous laws and regulations aimed at denying the right to vote to many of our citizens—in direct violation of the 15th amendment to the Constitution. The Voting Rights Act made it clear that our society would no longer tolerate such abuses. It also made clear that all citizens—men and women—have the opportunity to directly exercise this right freely and easily, without harassment, intimidation, or other barriers to voting. Its passage was one of the proudest moments of the civil rights movement.

The Voting Rights Act has been an extraordinary success, and we can see its results in towns, counties, and States across the country, as well as in the House of Representatives and in the U.S. Senate. Minority voters have had their voices heard and their votes counted, and have helped elect a wide range of officials who reflect the diversity of our great Nation. Unfortunately, despite the great advances we have made as a country, we still have more work to do. Both the House and the Senate have investigated this issue thoroughly, and after numerous hearings and thousands of pages of evidence being accepted into the record, it is clear that it is time to reauthorize the expiring provisions of the Act. More time and effort is needed to completely fulfill the promise of the Voting Rights Act and to assure every citizen that his or her 15th amendment rights are fully available, and this bill will allow us the time we need.

The House of Representatives has already passed the Voting Rights Reauthorization Act, and I am glad we are going to move it forward today. We can then quickly put this critical legislation in front of the President, who supports the bill and is waiting to sign it into law. I am hopeful that at the end of this 25-year reauthorization, we will all be able to agree that no further legislative action is necessary—that we have accomplished our goal of assuring every American citizen the equal right to vote.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, the 15th amendment of the United States Constitution provides: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." In 1965, with the passage of the Voting Rights Act, Congress finally began to enforce the Nation's promise embodied in the 15th amendment. The Voting Rights Act was designed to "foster our transformation to a society that is no longer fixated on race," to an "all-inclusive community, where we would be able to forget about race and color and see people as people, as human beings, just as citizens." The mere mention of this act conjures up profound images of the civil rights movement, a fight by many courageous men and women for equality and justice.

In 1965, Congress wisely decided to make the most significant sections of the bill permanent. The permanent provisions apply to all States equally. One section of the original act suspended all "tests or devices" that States used to disfranchise racial minorities. Section 2, which is also permanent, is the heart of the enforcement mechanism, confirming by statute that no political subdivision may deny or abridge voting rights on account of race or color and that all individuals have recourse to discriminatory election procedures in Federal court.

That legislation passed temporary remedial measures to address voting practices and discriminating in seven Southern States, where registration rates for Black voters averaged only 29.3 percent. Section 5 was crafted to remedy the low voter registration and turnout among the minority communities caused by discriminatory registration practices and intimidation at the polls. Indeed, the Voting Rights Act has succeeded tremendously. Statistician Keith Gaddie reported that the registration and turnout rate of Black citizens is higher in covered jurisdictions than throughout the rest of the country. He additionally revealed that the registration of Black citizens in Alabama during the 2004 elections was 72.9 percent of the voting age population; in Georgia, 64.2 percent; in Louisiana, 71.1 percent; in Mississippi, 76.1 percent; in South Carolina, 74.1 percent, and in Virginia, 57.4 percent of the voting age population. Voter turnout rates were equally improved.

If we applied registration and turnout data from our most recent Presidential elections to the trigger formula for coverage, many covered States would no longer require renewal. This is important because the Supreme Court requires that any laws that we write must be "congruent and proportional" to the problems we seek to remedy. While these provisions were necessary because State practices discriminated and the prejudices of individuals kept eligible citizens from being able to cast a ballot free from the threat of intimidation or harassment, it is important that we ensure that the correct jurisdictions are covered in order to preserve the constitutionality of the act.

We held nine hearings, and many individuals from diverse backgrounds and different races have both praised and criticized the temporary provisions of the VRA set to expire one year from now. At each hearing, multiple witnesses suggested ways to amend and improve this Act. Yet I was the only Senator on the committee prepared to offer substantive amendments to improve the act so that it addresses the problems it seeks to remedy today.

I was prepared to offer three amendments. The first would define the term "limited English proficient," the second would reauthorize the amended provisions for 7 years instead of 25 years, and the third would require a photo identification in all Federal elections. Yet I only offered one amendment in committee yesterday because it was clearly counterproductive that we should pass the exact bill that the House passed regardless of the merits of certain amendments. In fact, even though the committee did pass a non-substantive amendment to amend the title of the bill, Senate leadership brought the House bill H.R. 9 to the floor without the title change accepted in committee. Political expediency clearly trumped the will of individual Senators.

There are other amendments that should have received considerations. During hearings, some Senators discussed possible amendments that they... appeared to support with witnesses. Yet I believe that political fear and perceived intimidation prevented them from offering any amendments. For example, there was discussion based on the testimony of numerous witnesses that the bill added an amendment to create more reasonable bailout procedures. States and counties wishing to ballot out are only permitted to make their case here in Washington rather than at a Federal court closer to their home. Another amendment that received some support among witnesses would have included more recent data to determine coverage of areas with a recent history of discrimination rather than relying on data only from the 1964, 1968, and 1972 elections.

Even if no amendments offered were accepted, this bill is dramatically different from reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act as renewed in 1982. This bill amends the Voting Rights Act, section 5 to 5(c) and section 2(b) that the purpose of [section 5] is to protect the ability of such citizens to elect their preferred candidates of choice.” Such language has never before been inserted into section 5 preclearance requirements where there is no judicial review of those actions made by the Department of Justice, DOJ employees. Additionally, section 5(c) of the bill rewrites the Voting Rights Act to require that DOJ refuse to preclear a plan that employs “any discriminatory purpose.” These were not debated and that witnesses suggested we amend. Those suggestions were never even discussed or considered. I am at a loss as to why we are inserting new standards for 25 years without knowing the potential consequences and clarifying congressional intent in the language of the act.

Some Senators have said that we have carefully considered this bill and the effects it will have on our Nation based on open discussion of hearings that had been held. Yet Member attendance at these hearings was incredibly low. At the first two hearings on section 5, only one Senator attended. At the third, five Senators attended. Five Senators did not attend any of the committee’s hearings. Five Senators attended only portions of one hearing. This is not meant as criticism because I only attended part of two hearings.

My point is that it is unfortunate that we failed to hold these hearings that we should have had. Yet Member attendance at these hearings was incredibly low. At the first two hearings on section 5, only one Senator attended. At the third, five Senators attended. Five Senators did not attend any of the committee’s hearings. Five Senators attended only portions of one hearing. This is not meant as criticism because I only attended part of two hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, often when the Senate passes something unanimously, it means that the matter is not so important. That is not the case here. The Voting Rights Act is as important as it gets. Senators of both political parties deserve great credit for bringing this vitally needed legislation to the floor of the Senate today. I have come to salute those inside and outside the Senate for their work to bring this extraordinarily important issue before the country and before the Senate and to make an appeal to Senators and those outside the Chamber to work for more.

In the past three successive election—2000, 2002, and 2004—there were scores of accusations of voter intimidation, rigged voting machines, conflicts of interest among elected officials, and other serious electoral abuses. Many newspaper articles, State and Federal government investigations, private studies and scores of lawsuits have described in considerable detail the toll that election abuses now take on our democracy. As much as it is an accomplishment that the Senate will be voting to authorize the Voting Rights Act today, that law cannot cure many of the problems that we have seen in the last three election cycles. But there is a proven system that can reduce many of these abuses, and I hope that the leadership in the Senate will take steps to promote it. It is known as vote by mail.

My State of Oregon adopted this election system back in 1998, with nearly 70 percent support of our State’s voters. It has been a resounding success any way one looks at it, and it has not been seen in any way as a kind of partisan tool that advantages one particular party or one particular philosophy.

What I want to do this afternoon is describe briefly how the State of Oregon uses the vote by mail system works and then talk about why the Senate ought to be taking steps to promote it nationally as a way to deal with some of these problems that have swept across our land over the last three election cycles.

In Oregon the system works in this way. At least 2 weeks before election day, election officials mail ballots to all registered voters. The voters mark their ballots, seal and sign their ballots and then return them by mail or by placing them in a secure drop box. Election officials count the votes using optical scanning machines that confirm the signature on the return envelope matches the signature of the voter on file. Each county also provides options for the disabled or those living in areas where it is difficult to get to the polls on election day as well as those who need special accommodations or prefer to vote onsite.

The bottom line is that vote by mail can address many of the problems that plague this country’s elections. For example, with vote by mail, there is no waiting in line in the polls for hours. All through our country over the last election we heard complaints about people having to wait in line, often for hours and hours on end. It doesn’t happen with vote by mail. Each voter receives a ballot in the mail. They can complete it at home, at work, or wherever is convenient for them. And you don’t have to line up in front of polls voting in line for hours and hours to exercise their franchise.

With vote by mail, no one would get the run-around about which polling place to go and supposed to vote at. The ballots are mailed to the citizen’s home.
If, for some reason, a voter’s ballot does not arrive 2 weeks before the election as it is supposed to, the voter has enough time to correct the problem, get their ballot, and then cast it.

Americans who face the toughest time getting to the polls, such as citizens with disabilities and the elderly, report that they vote more often using vote by mail. Women, younger voters, stay-at-home parents report they vote more often using vote by mail. Once again, it is an opportunity on a bipartisan basis to deal with a very serious problem that we have seen over the last few election cycles.

Citizens get the run-around at the polling place when they show up on election day to vote and are told:
“You really shouldn’t be here; you ought to be there.” “We can’t really tell you where you ought to be.” “We have all these people in line, and we will try to help you later.” All of that is eliminated through vote by mail because folks get their ballot at their home.

Third, with vote by mail there is less risk of voter intimidation. A 2003 study of voters in my home State showed that the groups that would be most vulnerable to coercion now favor vote by mail. Over the last few elections, we saw again and again, reports of folks saying that they feared coercion. They were concerned about intimidation in the exercise of their franchise.

We have documentary proof in our home State, a specific study that I have done, that those who are most vulnerable to intimidation and coercion feel more comfortable voting by mail.

Next, with vote by mail, malfunctioning voting equipment is a thing of the past. Everyone heard the stories in 2004 of citizens who said they voted for one candidate only to see the electronic voting machine indicate that the voter had cast a ballot for somebody else. Such incidents such as this cannot occur in vote by mail. Each voter marks the ballot, reviews it, and submits it, the ballot is counted, and it becomes a paper record—a paper record that is used in the event of a recount.

I have to keep my transparency people coming up: why can this not be done? It is just common sense.
My home State has led the way to ensure that through our vote-by-mail system there is a paper trail.

With vote by mail, the risk of fraud is minimized. When an Oregon county receives a voter’s marked ballot, the ballot is then sent to elections workers trained in signature verification who compare the signature on each ballot against the person’s signature on their voter registration. This can be done quickly and easily because each voter’s registration card has been electronically scanned into the system. No ballot is processed or counted until the county is satisfied that the signature on the ballot matches the voter’s sig-name on file. If someone tries to commit fraud, they can be convicted of a Class C felony, spend up to five years in prison, and pay $100,000 in fines.

Vote by mail can help make the problems of recent elections a thing of the past. In doing so, it will make our elections fairer and help reinstit a confidence in our democracy, which frank-lly, has been lacking.

There are a number of other reasons why I think this country ought to be doing everything possible to encourage citizens to adopt vote by mail. This approach increases election participation. For example, vote by mail helps make voter turnout in Oregon considerable higher than the average national voter turnout. Oregon experienced a record turnout of more than 70 percent in the 2004 Presidential election, compared to 58 percent nationally.

Vote by mail, we find, gets more citizens involved in the issues because folks get their ballots weeks before the final day when their ballot is due, and they have the time to quiz candidates, examine issues that are important to them, and do it in a deliberate fashion that gives them more time.

Next, vote by mail has produced huge savings at the local level for election costs. Vote by mail reduces those election costs by eliminating the need to transport equipment to polling stations and to hire and train poll work-ners. My home State has reduced its election-related costs by 30 percent since implementing vote by mail. So we have the results. We have the results to show the rest of the country why we ought to be encouraging across the land vote by mail.

In a survey taken 5 years after we implemented this system, more than 8 out of 10 Oregon voters said they preferred voting by mail to traditional in-person voting. I am confident that the rest of our country would embrace it the very same way.

What this is all about, and why I have taken time to discuss our approach, is that I think it is very much in line with both the spirit and the text of the Voting Rights Act. America needs to make sure that no eligible voter, based on color, creed or any other reason, would be disenfranchised.

What we are doing in the Senate today by reducing the use of paper ballots is the right thing. It is clearly a step in the right direction for these difficult times. But I do think much more can be done to improve the election process. I intend to press at every possible opportunity for a way to encourage an approach that has empowered people in my home State in a manner that has far exceeded the expectations of even the biggest boosters. It has been totally nonpartisan.

In Oregon, we were amused in the beginning of our discussion about vote by mail. At the beginning of the discussion, it seemed that a fair number of Rep tublicans were for vote by mail, but a number of Democrats were skeptical.
Then, after I won the Senate special election in 1996—and Senator SMITH and I have laughed about this often over the years—there was an about face, and it seemed then that Democrats liked vote by mail and Republicans were a little cautious. Our State’s citizens said enough of all this nonsense and overwhelmingly voted, on a bipartisan basis, to say this is just plain good government, and this is the way we want to go.

I think the Oregon story can be copcied across the country, and I am going to do everything I can to encourage it.

Joe Conboy declared in the Reynolds v. Sims case

[i]t has been repeatedly recognized that all qualified voters have a constitutionally protected right to vote . . . and to have their casts counted.

Promoting vote by mail across our land will help make this constitutional right a reality. I encourage my colleagues to look and study the approach we have used in our State, an approach that I believe will advance the Voting Rights Act today and work with us to build on its incredible importance in the days ahead.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes and, following me, Senator BOXER be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes, and following her, Senator SCHUMER for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oregon for his discussion of an important way of having accountability in voting. I must say that that approach that works out in Oregon works well. It works brilliantly, as a matter of fact. People have a lot of time to be able to vote. They don’t have to struggle with work issues or being sick or other things. They have plenty of time to be able to have the kind of transparency and accountability that makes the system work.
There are other States where you are allowed to start voting early—in New Mexico and elsewhere.

It is amazing that in the United States we have this patchwork of the way our citizens work in Federal elections. It is different almost everywhere. I had the privilege of giving the graduation address this year at Kenyan College in Ohio, and there the kids at Kenyan College wound up being the last people to vote in America in the Presidential race in 2004 in Gambier, at 4:30 in the morning. We had to go to court to get permission for them to keep the polls open, so they could vote at 4:30 in the morning.

Why did it take until 4:30 in the morning for people to be able to vote? They didn’t have enough voting machines in America. These people lined up not just there but in all of Ohio and in other parts of the country.

So I thank the Senator from Oregon for talking about the larger issue here. He is right. The point he made is that the first job of his State is one that the rest of the country ought to take serious and think seriously about embracing.

This is part of a larger issue, obviously, Mr. President. All over the world, this country has always stood out as the great exporter of democratic values.

Back in 1986, I was part of a delegation that went to the Philippines. We took part in the peaceful revolution that took place at the ballot box when the dictator, President Marcos, was kicked out, and that revolution has stayed out as the great exporter of democratic values. In the years that I have been privileged to serve in the Senate, I have had some extraordinary opportunities to see that happen in a firsthand way.

In the Ukraine, the world turned to see the outcome of a Presidential race in 2004 in Gambier, at 4:30 in the morning. We had to go to court to get permission for them to keep the polls open, so they could vote at 4:30 in the morning.

Why did it take until 4:30 in the morning for people to be able to vote? They didn’t have enough voting machines in America. These people lined up not just there but in all of Ohio and in other parts of the country. An honest appraisal requires one to point out that where there were Republican secretaries of state, the lines were invariably longer in Democratic precincts, sometimes with as many as one machine only in the Democratic precinct and several in the Republican precinct; so it would take 5 or 10 minutes for someone of the other party to be able to vote, and it would take literally hours for the people in the longer lines. If that is not a form of intimidation and suppression, I don’t know what is.

So I thank the Senator from Oregon for talking about the larger issue here. He is right. The point he made is that the first job of his State is one that the rest of the country ought to take serious and think seriously about embracing.

By reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act, we are taking an important step, but, Mr. President, it is only a step. We would pretend that reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act solves the problems of being able to vote in our own country. It doesn’t. In recent elections, we have seen too many times how outcomes change when votes that have been cast are not counted or when voters themselves are prevented from voting or intimidated from even registering or when they register, as we found in a couple of States, their registration forms are put in the wastebasket instead of into the computers.

The Voting Rights Act, if it is going to be able to cast his or her ballot without fear, without intimidation, and with the knowledge that their voice will be heard. These are the foundations of our democracy, and we have to pay more attention to it.

For a lot of folks in the Congress, this is a very personal fight. Some of our colleagues in the House or Senate were here when this fight first took place or they took part in this fight out in the streets. Without the courage of someone such as Congressman John Lewis who almost lost his life marching across that bridge in Selma, whose very name is seared in our minds, who remembers what it was like to march to move a nation to a better place, who knows what it meant to put his life on the line for voting rights, this is personal.

For somebody like my colleague, Senator Ted Kennedy, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who was here in the great fight on this Senate floor in 1965 when they broke the back of resistance, this is personal.

I would even have this landmark legislation today if it weren’t for their efforts to try to make certain that it passed.

But despite the great strides we have taken since this bill was originally enacted, we have a lot of work to do.

Mr. President, I ask for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on this particular component of the bill, there is agreement. Republicans and Democrats can agree. I was really pleased that every attempt in the House of Representatives to weaken the Voting Rights Act was rejected.

We need to reauthorize these three critical components especially: The section 5 preclearance provisions that get the Justice Department to oversee an area that has a historical pattern of discrimination that they can’t change have people vote without clearance. That seems reasonable.

There are bilingual assistance requirements. Why? Because people need it and it makes sense. They are American citizens, but they still may have difficulties in understanding the ballot, and we ought to provide that assistance so they have a fully informed vote. This is supposed to be an informed democracy, a democracy based on the real consent of the American people.

And finally, authorization for poll watching. Regrettably, we have seen in place after place in America why we need to have poll watching.

A simple question could be asked: Where would the citizens of Georgia be, particularly low-income and minority citizens, if they were required to produce a government-issued identification or pay $20 every 5 years in order to vote? That is what would have happened without section 5 of the Voting Rights Act. We have successfully imposed what the judge in the case called “a Jim Crow-era like poll tax.” I don’t think anybody here
Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, before Senator KERRY leaves the floor, I want to thank him. The issues he raised about the Voting Rights Act are absolutely critical to the debate. I will address them after he leaves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, before Senator KERRY leaves the floor, I want to thank him. The issues he raised about the Voting Rights Act are absolutely critical to the debate. I will address them after he leaves.

The reason I stood up and objected to the Ohio count is because I knew firsthand from the people of Ohio who came and talked with me through STEPHANIE TUBBS JONES that they were waiting in lines for 6, 7 hours. That is not the right to vote. I think Senator KERRY’s remarks and the remarks of the Senator from Oregon are very important.

So let me make a few remarks here from the Senate floor today that we are not stopping our efforts to make sure people can vote with the very important passage of this very important legislation. I am very pleased to follow him in this debate.

I rise in support of a very historic bill named after three amazing women whom I truly admire—Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King. These three legendary women were part of the heart and soul of the civil rights movement in this country, and those women helped move the conscience of this Nation in the 1960s and, frankly, inspired me to serve in public service.

In 1960, I was a little girl and I was in Florida with my mother. I went on a bus. It was a crowded time of day. A woman came on the bus. Her hands were filled with packages. To me she looked really old. I guess she was my age. I jumped up because I was taught to do that, and I said: Please, please, take my seat. My mother kind of pulled at my sleeve, and the woman put her head down and she walked to the back of the bus.

I was perplexed by this. I said to my mother: Why was she rude to me? Why didn’t she say thank you and take the seat?

My mother explained to me the laws in those days that sent African Americans to the back of the bus. I at 10 years of age was astonished, shocked, angry. My mother said to me: Why don’t we just stand up. And that is what we did. We walked to the back, and we stood.

That was an America that is no more, but that is an America we cannot forget. That was an overt law to hurt people, to make America “we and them.” That is why the law we are passing today is so important—because it says that we all recognize that even though that America is no more, we have more work to do.

And then came the sixties. Of course, we know it was Rosa Parks who changed the world with that one act of defiance of hers, where she just went on that bus and she wasn’t going to the back.

When I met her, when President Clinton invited her to the White House and I went there, I stood in awe because it said to me how one person can make a difference in this nation in the world. We get so frustrated sometimes; we feel we can’t make a difference. Here is one woman saying, No, I won’t do that; that’s wrong; I’m one of God’s children. And that act of defiance changed the world so happy this bill is named after her and Fannie Lou Hamer who helped organize Freedom Summer in 1965 which helped lead to passage of this landmark bill we will vote on today. She had a very simple phrase that she used: “Nobody’s free until everybody’s free.” “Nobody’s free until everybody’s free.” That reminds us of the work that we certainly have to do today.

So Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King, who worked for a great human rights movement in the sixties and carried on his work after his horrific assassination, working for justice, worked for equality not only in this country but around the world.

In the late eighties, she worked tirelessly to help bring an end to apartheid in South Africa. I often quote Martin Luther King, almost in every speech I give, because he is one of my heroes. One of the lines he said, which isn’t really one that gets quoted all the time, is that “Our lives begin to end when we stop talking about things that matter.” “Our lives begin to end when we stop talking about things that matter.” That touched me and reached me.

I think his words, of course, reached every American, regardless of political affiliation. Don’t stop talking about things that matter, even though it might be easier to do so, even though it might be easier when you are at a friend’s house and somebody says something that is bigoted toward somebody else. It is sometimes easier for us to make believe we didn’t hear it. No, that matters, you matter, your view matters, your values matter. Speak up.

That is what we are doing, and I am proud to be in the Senate today because we are doing something good today. It is a privilege and an honor to vote for this reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act.

I had a number of people visit me from my State yesterday—old and young, children, grandparents, great grandmothers, granddads, lawyers, workers, doctors. They just jammed into my conference room and they said: Senator BOXER, we know you are with us. We know you have been on this bill. We know where you are. We have listened to you all these years. We wanted to come here and show our support for this vote for the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act.

I said: You don’t need to thank me. What you need to do is join with me so that after this vote, we truly get equal voting rights in this country.
That was touched on by Senator KERRY, and it was touched on by Senator WYDEN. The right to vote—without it we are nothing. Without it, we are not standing up for the principles upon which this Nation was founded: a government of, by, and for the people.

How do you have a government of, by, and for the people, if the people turn away from the voting booth? I hear every excuse in the world: Oh, you are all the same. What is the difference? I can’t make a difference. It is just false. It is just an excuse.

Show me two candidates running against each other at a local level, at a State level, at a Federal level, and I will show you the difference. If you pay attention, you will find out the differences, and you will cast your vote for the candidate that most represents you. You are not going to agree with them 100 percent of the time. That is another issue. Oh, I used to work with him, but he did three things, and I don’t agree with him anymore. Look at the totality. Look at the totality of the voting record. Look at the totality of the things you could make a difference on. Don’t just walk away. Don’t pull the covers over your head with excuses: They are all alike. I can’t make a difference. What is one vote?

We all know the election of John Kennedy was decided by a couple of votes per precinct. It could have been one vote per precinct. That is how close that election was.

In the voting booth, we are all equal. In the voting booth, we are all equal. Your vote, whether you are 18 years old or you are my age and a Senator, we are all equal in the voting booth. We have one vote. We should cherish it. The CEO of a giant company who earns multimillions of dollars a year is equal to a minimum wage worker. And if that minimum wage worker thinks it is time he got a raise or she got a raise after almost 10 years of not getting a raise, he or she ought to vote, and vote for the candidate who supports your right to join the middle class.

Every citizen of this country who is eligible to vote should be guaranteed that their vote is counted and that their vote matters. That is why it is so important that we maintain the protections of this historic Voting Rights Act, such as requiring certain localities with a history of discrimination to get approval from the Federal Government before they make changes to voting procedures. Why is this important? It is important because it is a check and balance on an area that has in the past not shown—not shown—the willingness to fight for every voter. And if you look at the jurisdictions in this country to provide language assistance to voters with limited English proficiency, and authorizing the Federal Government to send election monitors to jurisdictions where there is a history of attempts to intimidate the voters at the polls, we just want to make sure these elections are fair, wherever they are held.

The Federal Government must work hard to guarantee that the inequities we have seen in the past never recur face again. And won’t that be the day, when we have a system that we believe we can be proud of again.

I am here today with an opportunity to cast a vote to reauthorize provisions of the Voting Rights Act. But today didn’t come without struggle. Why did my people have to come all the way from California, spend their hard-earned dollars, to get on a plane? I will tell you why: Because this was a hard bill to get before this body. People objected. People complained. It was a hard bill to get before the House. But many people worked hard, and House Members listened to the people, and Senators listened to the people.

I want to thank my friends at the NAACP who were finally able to convince enough that, yes, this was something we had to do. We have to be honest. There was a desire to weaken this bill, but we succeeded in not allowing that to happen.

In my closing moments, I want to say that our work does not stop today, as Senator KERRY said and as Senator WYDEN said, as we, all of us, have introduced the Count Every Vote Act, a comprehensive voting reform bill that will ensure that every American indeed can vote, and every vote is counted.

Congresswoman STEPHANIE TUBBS JONES, who lived through a harrowing experience during the last election, with her constituents being given the runaround and standing in line for 6 and 7 hours. Is that the right to vote, standing in line for 6 and 7 hours, people who have to work, people who had health problems, people who couldn’t stand up, people whose legs were weakening beneath them? Is that the right to vote? I say it is not the right to vote. I say it is a disgrace.

Senators CLINTON, KERRY, LAUTENBERG, MIKULSKI, and I have introduced the Count Every Vote Act, and I want to highlight the two key provisions that are in this bill. The first is the bill would require electronic voting machines provide a paper record which will allow voters to verify their votes, and it will serve as a record if a manual recount is needed. We go to a restaurant, we get a receipt. We go to the store, we get a receipt. If there is a problem. When we vote, we should get a receipt. We should look at it, we should check it, just as we add up the bill from the restaurant. We should give it back and then it is stored. In case there is a problem, we have a paper trail.

The second provision: We say election day should be a Federal holiday. We all give speeches. We stand up and we stand behind the red, white, and blue. What a great, blue country this is, and indeed it is. Why shouldn’t we make the election day a holiday so that we can celebrate on every election day our freedoms, our history, our rights, our protections as citizens to choose our own leaders?

Let me say, we cannot even get to page 1 in terms of moving this bill forward. There is resistance to this bill. There are those in this body who don’t want a paper trail. They don’t want to make it easier to vote, and let’s call it what it is. That resistance exists, and that is wrong. So I call on the leadership of this body: Let’s do something for people. Let’s not have another situation where a Senator has to go over and protest a vote count because people said they had to stand in line for hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Then we have the people of Washington, DC. They are not represented with a vote. That is wrong. Over 500,000 people live in this great city of heart and soul of America for a long time, and there are not shown with their own leaders? They can’t cast their ballots in national elections for congressional representatives. The people don’t even stand up, people whose legs were weakening beneath them? Is the right to vote? I say it is not the right to vote. I say it is a disgrace.

So, again, I say what a privilege and honor it is for me to be here, to stand here, thinking back as a child when African Americans had to go to the back of the bus in some parts of the South, feeling the pain of that moment for DC residents.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I salute my colleague on her wonderful and heart-felt words.

Mr. President, this is a hallowed moment on the floor of this Senate. We don’t have too many of these hallowed moments these days, but passing, working for, voting for the renewal of the Voting Rights Act is just one of those. I rise in proud and full-hearted support of H.R. 9, which is a bicameral and bipartisan bill, thank God, to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act.

The bottom line, Mr. President, is this: Without the right to vote in a democracy, people have no power. And while I do believe that race and racism have been a poison that has afflicted America for a long time, and there are many ways to solve that, probably the best way is to give every single one of our citizens the bottom line, Mr. President, is this: Without the right to vote in a democracy, people have no power. And while I do believe that race and racism have been a poison that has afflicted America for a long time, and there are many ways to solve that, probably the best way is to give every single one of our citizens the best is the full and unrequited power to vote. For so long, that power was denied to people of color: Blacks, Hispanics, and others. Now it is not being.
I can tell by my own history, even here in the Congress, the progress we have made. When I got to the Congress in 1980, there were only 17 African Americans in the House. Today, there are 42. That is very close to the percentage of African Americans in American society. The progress we have made is not just as individuals; it is the progress we have made. Without the Voting Rights Act, clearly we would not have had it.

However, we sit in the Senate, and only 30 minorities elected to State, local, or Federal office. North, South, East, and West, people of color were not represented. Today, four decades later, in large part because of this Voting Rights Act, 10,000 minorities serve as elected officials. I have seen the Voting Rights Act have an effect on my city. New York is one of the most diverse cities in the country. And in our city, the Voting Rights Act has been extremely effective. In 1966, when President Johnson signed the bill into law, there were only 300 minorities elected to State, local, or Federal office. North, South, East, and West, people of color were not represented. Today, four decades later, in large part because of this Voting Rights Act, 10,000 minorities serve as elected officials.

In 1966, when President Johnson signed the bill into law, there were only 300 minorities elected to State, local, or Federal office. North, South, East, and West, people of color were not represented. Today, four decades later, in large part because of this Voting Rights Act, 10,000 minorities serve as elected officials.

I have seen the Voting Rights Act have an effect on my city. New York is one of the most diverse cities in the country. And in our city, the Voting Rights Act has been extremely effective. State Committee that deterred minorities from voting occurred during the 1981 gubernatorial election. This just illustrates voting rights violations can happen anywhere and at anytime, and are unfortunately a part of the historic fabric of our election process. Such violations go unchallenged in the 2000 elections that Congress enacted the Help America Vote Act. If anything, need to strengthen and update the Voting Rights Act is demonstrated in new ways every year passed by the Congress.

The Voting Rights Act has been effective in eliminating barriers to the ballot box. Yet, several key provisions of the act regarding preclearance, observers, and language assistance are scheduled to expire in 2007. H.R. 9 will reauthorize these important and temporary provisions for an additional 25 years. Personally, I support making these provisions permanent.

H.R. 9 is the product of a thoughtful, thorough, bipartisan, and bicameral effort to reauthorize the act and competing concerns and considerations that have been a part of the Voting Rights Act debate since its original passage. As my colleagues well know, the act has been extended on four other occasions, each time making it the most carefully reviewed civil rights measure in our Nation’s long history.

This legislation we have before us today would renew the Voting Rights Act’s temporary provisions for 25 years to restore the ability of the Attorney General, under section 5 of the act, to block implementation of voting changes motivated by a discriminatory purpose; clarify that section 5 is intended to protect the ability of minority citizens to elect their candidates of choice; and authorize recovery of expert witness fees in lawsuits brought to enforce the Voting Rights Act.

The right to vote is so fundamental to our citizenship, so vital, that we as Members of Congress must make every effort to ensure that this right is a reality across the length and breadth of this great Nation. The Voting Rights Act ensures that all American citizens have access to both the ballot box and the American political process, and a voice in determining their future. That is why the Voting Rights Act remains so desperately needed and why Congress must reauthorize the special provisions that are set to expire.

In a joint session of Congress on the very legislation we are debating today, President Lyndon Baines Johnson said:

In our time we have come to live with the moments of great crisis. Our lives have been marked with debate about great issues of war and peace, issues of prosperity and depression.

But rarely is any time does an issue lay bare the secret heart of America itself. Rarely are we met with a challenge, not to our growth or abundance, or our welfare or our security, but rather to the values, and the purposes, and the meaning of our beloved nation.

We must heed President Johnson’s admonition and take inventory of our Nation’s values, purposes and meaning. Some members of the House recently argued that the Voting Rights Act is somehow outdated, that it unfairly punishes those covered jurisdictions for past actions and sins. I have nothing but respect for the body and look fondly upon my years of service in that Chamber; but, I wholeheartedly disagree with some of my former colleagues.

In enacting the original Voting Rights Act and its four reauthorizations, past Congresses have declared to the world that America stands for freedom and democracy. But our rhetoric of equality and freedom must be ratified by an authentic pursuit of true freedom, true equality, and true democratic ideals. If we are to be a beacon of democracy and freedom to Baghdad, Beijing—and then we must first be a beacon of freedom and democracy to Bloomfield, Buffalo, and Birmingham.

Over 40 years ago, Senators stood on this floor to right a monumental wrong inflicted upon millions of Americans. Inspired by the quiet strength and principled courage of John Lewis and others like him, this body acted out of courage, conviction, and conscience.

I don’t know what senators will say 40 years from now. But, if nothing else, it is my prayer that they will say this Senate stood with the highest ideals and promises of this great Nation. And that Senators from all corners of America, and of all political stripes, stood up in defense of democracy and freedom here at home.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to strongly support this legislation and in doing so protect the voting rights of all Americans.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida, Mr. NELSON, has the floor.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, in the years before the Voting Rights Act was signed into law by President Johnson, discrimination and brutal force were used to deny African Americans the right to vote as guaranteed by the 15th amendment.

There are stories of local election officials requiring Black residents to pass arbitrary tests, like correctly guessing the number of bubbles that a bar of soap would produce, before being allowed to register to vote. And, of course, there were the more insidious forms of intimidation, which is a very sad chapter in the history of this country, with African Americans being lynched and murdered for attempting to vote or register others to vote.

In the 41 years since the enactment of the Voting Rights Act, America has made considerable progress in strengthening our democracy. Yet, some of the most egregious forms of voting rights violations, such as those that occurred in Florida, who were given the instructions to strike those 48,000 convicted felons from the rolls. The public was denied meaningful access to the lists to verify its accuracy because of a document proceed in the legislature in the previous few years.

CNN challenged the constitutionality of the law under the Florida Constitution. This Senator participated in that challenge by filing what is called an amicus curiae brief, or a friend of the court brief. A courageous Florida circuit court judge declared the law unconstitutional.

When the Miami Herald got their hands on the list of 48,000 names of convicted felons, guess what they found. First of all, they found the list was overwhelmingly minority; second, they found that the list was overwhelmingly minority African American; and third, they found about 3,000 legitimate registered voters on that list who were not convicted felons.

If not for that lawsuit 3,000 legitimate registered voters with names that were similar to the names of convicted felons would have gone to the polls on Election Day in November of 2004 and been told they were not registered voters and they could not vote.

It is 41 years since the Voting Rights Act. This just happened 2 years ago. We’re getting closer to the ideal, we’re just not there yet.

Reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act is going to move us further down the road and, most importantly, it will ensure that we never turn back.

Today, as I cast a vote in favor of reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act, I hope and pray that 25 years from now, at the end of the authorization of this act, our country will have progressed so that we do not have to continue this peculiar debate.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I join my colleagues today to speak in support of reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act of 1965. No act has done more to change the course of our Nation than this. I am pleased to see both sides of the aisle set aside their differences to ensure its passage today.

I first offer my thanks to Senators LEAHY and SPECTER for their efforts in bringing all sides together to renew this historic law.
This act protects and preserves our democracy by ensuring that every citizen is given the same opportunity to participate in the political process. The strength of our democracy, as well as its existence, depends on the fact that the Government is created to perform only those duties and to exercise only those powers that are inherent in a limited government, and that the ability to effect change in his or her community is highly limited.

We are given, each of us, many God-given gifts, but our responsibility with those gifts is to give of those gifts to those around us, to our community and to our country, to our fellow man. Without being able to participate in this community, we are not able to fully give back.

I think it is important to remember what voting means for today. Men and women not much older than I am made great sacrifices to be able to perform that most basic right of free men and free women—the right to vote. It is easy to take for granted. We often do. But to forget that this right represents the pain and hope of millions of Americans. It represents their efforts and their prayers.

The things that we do without giving them much thought, were not so for many of our fellow Americans. When we go to eat lunch, we sit wherever we would like. When we go to the movies, we sit wherever we would like as well. When we ride the bus, we sit wherever we like, and when we get to the polls, we take our ballot and we cast it without thinking about it.

It is easy for us to forget that it has not always been so. By way of example, the mother of one of my staff members became deeply involved in voter registration efforts in her college student. In the early 1960s, she was determined to secure the right to vote for herself and for her community. It was a life-or-death decision. She and her fellow students were told if they tried to encourage African Americans in the community to register, that they would be killed. They had every reason to take that threat seriously, but it didn’t matter to them. They knew that this right, the right to vote, was worth the cost, and they continue to encourage people to vote and to vote. And we know that others around the Nation were not so lucky.

These are the stories we must remember. We must ensure that the future of all Americans will ever have to endure second-class citizenship again. As elected officials, we are charged with representing and protecting the interests of our States and our districts. It is of utmost importance to protect the ability of a fair representation of our constituents.

The Voting Rights Act has played an enormous role in making sure that happens. Since becoming law in 1965, the number of African Americans and other minority voters who are registered and able to vote has increased dramatically. As an example, my home State of Arkansas saw an increase of more than 33,000 African-American registrants immediately after the act was passed. Extending the provisions of this legislation will ensure that we continue to build on the gains we have made since it first passed.

We have men and women spread across the country fighting for democracy and freedom. They are fighting for the right of citizens to hold free elections in which all, regardless of race, gender or creed, can participate. In many cases, this cannot be achieved without violence, unfortunately. Truth be told, we are not so far removed from our own violent past.

But by the mercy of God, we today will extend the blessings of liberty to all Americans with the recording of a vote’s action. That is a miracle that we dare not forget. Because of what we do tomorrow, the men and women who marched and stood still and sat down and stood up and rejoiced and cried and ultimately overcame, that we must be sure that their legacy will be carried on.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, briefly, I want to propound a unanimous consent request which has been agreed to by the leadership on the other side. And then people will know the scheduling for today and tonight.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pending bill, H.R. 9, occur at 4:30 today, with Senator REM recognized from 4 to 4:15 and Senator Frist in control of the time from 4:15 to 4:30; provided further that the remaining time be under the control of the minority.

I ask unanimous consent that following the vote on passage of H.R. 9, the Voting Rights Act, the Senate proceed to consider the nomination of Calendar No. 379, H.R. 4472. I further ask consent that the Hatch amendment at the desk be agreed to, and there then be 2 hours of debate equally divided between the leaders or their designees, and that following the use or yielding back of time, the bill, as amended, be read a third time, and the bill be temporarily set aside with the vote on passage occurring after consideration of the judges in executive session. I further ask unanimous consent that a vote on the title amendment be agreed to; provided further that following the debate on H.R. 4472, the Senate proceed to executive session for consideration of the following executive calendar numbers on bloc, under the designated times: Calendar No. 762, Neil Gorsuch, 5 minutes each for Senators SPECTER, LEAHY, ALLARD, and SALAZAR; Calendar No. 763, Bobby Shepherd, 5 minutes each for Senators SPECTER, LEAHY, and LOTT; Calendar No. 766, Daniel Jordan III, 5 minutes each for Senators PRIOR and LINCOLN; Calendar No. 765, Gustavo Gelpi, 5 minutes each for Senators SPECTER and LEAHY.

I further ask unanimous consent that following the use or yielding back of the debate times above, the Senate proceed to a vote on passage of H.R. 4472, to be followed by consecutive votes on the confirmation of the above-listed nominees in the order specified, without intervening action or debate, and that following those votes, the President be immediately notified of the Senate’s action, and the Senate then resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. President, again, very proudly, what this means is that we will be voting at approximately 4:30. We will then move to the John Walsh child predator bill, have debate on that, and have debate on the judges, and then we will have stacked rollcall votes beginning at approximately 7:15 or 7:30 tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, it is with a great sense of pride and privilege that I rise today in strong, strong support of H.R. 9, the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006.

In my view, of all the values which underpin a democracy, none—is more essential than the right of a citizen to participate in the election of those who will govern and represent them.

Voting is the participatory voice of our form of democracy. It is imperative, in my view, that we reaffirm this fundamental principle by expeditiously reauthorizing this fundamental voting rights legislation. It is for this reason that I will vote in favor of the Voting Rights Act extension. America must overcome its legacy of discrimination in voting.

Let me, first of all, applaud our colleagues, if I may, the leaders of the Judiciary Committee, Senator SPECTER, Senator LEAHY, and Senator KENNEDY for their extraordinary efforts to develop a truly bipartisan piece of legislation that has been brought to the floor here today. I feel very strongly about the need to reauthorize this law, and I commend our colleagues for the leadership they have shown in marking up a bill that I passed unanimously out of the Judiciary Committee and is before us today.
It was about 40 years ago when I was sitting up in these Galleries, watching the U.S. Senate as it engaged in an impassioned debate among our predecessors in this Chamber about whether to extend to all Americans equal rights at the polling place. I was a college student at the time. I listened to one U.S. Senator say: "Freedom and the right to vote are indivisible."

That U.S. Senator was my father, Thomas Dodd of Connecticut, speaking about the Voting Rights Act in that year. As I watched my father and his colleagues engage in a very heated debate, I was proud of how many Members of this body, on both sides of the aisle, worked to end discriminatory voting practices, Republicans and Democrats alike coming together.

It was following this debate, in 1965, that Congress took up and passed the Voting Rights Act—the first being the Civil Rights Act—as a response to the pervasive and explicit evidence of disenfranchisement of African-American and other voters in several States in our country. The Voting Rights Act was designed, of course, as we all know, to protect and preserve the voting rights of all Americans. Since 1965, this act has been the cornerstone of voting rights in our country, and its success is a tribute to those who have labored to create it. I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute to those that this act is named for: Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King. Many may recall, it was Fannie Lou Hamer who once commented that she was "sick and tired of being sick and tired." In 1962, Mrs. Hamer, the youngest of 19 children, daughter of sharecroppers, and granddaughter of slaves, attended a voting registration drive held by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. There she learned that African Americans indeed had the constitutional right to vote. She was the first to volunteer for a dangerous mission to the Indiana, MS, courthouse to register to vote. Courageously, she declared: "The only thing they could do to me was to kill me, and it seemed like they'd been trying to do that a little bit at a time ever since I could remember."

When Mrs. Hamer reached the courthouse, her companions were beaten and jailed. But she was not deterred. She went on to travel the country to encourage others to vote and later founded the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party to challenge the all-white Mississippi delegation at the Democratic Convention—not in the 19th century, not in the early part of the 20th century—but in 1964.

The Voting Rights Act was signed into law a year later. In my view, if Mrs. Hamer had not risked her life and limbs, the plight of minority voters shut out of their own democracy may have continued, unfortunately.

Rosa Parks was another pioneer of the civil rights movement. As a seamstress in Montgomery, AL, she famously challenged the Jim Crow laws of segregation in 1955. Mrs. Parks once recalled that as a young child: "I'd see the bus pass every day... But to me, that was a way of life; we had no choice but to accept what was the custom. The bus was among the first ways I realized there was a black world and a white world."

Her historic refusal to give up her bus seat to a white passenger led to her arrest, and sparked a citywide boycott of the bus system, which triggered two Supreme Court decisions outlawing segregation on city buses. In my view, her seat and protest tactics were a modern-day civil rights movement. And we owe her a great deal of debt for her courage.

In describing this incident, Mrs. Parks later recalled: "People always say that I didn't give up my seat because I was tired, but that isn't true. I was not tired physically, or no more tired than I usually was at the end of a working day. No, the only tired I was, was tired of giving in."

For more than four decades, Mrs. Parks dedicated herself to the fight for racial equality. I strongly believe that if Mrs. Parks had not refused to give up her seat and had gone to the back of the bus that day we would not be here today considering this historic legislation.

Let me mention the third individual for whom this act is being named today—Coretta Scott King, the wife of Dr. Martin Luther King. Her husband and thousands of others marched from Selma to Montgomery, AL, on Sunday, March 7, 1965. That march, of course, galvanized the core political will behind the civil rights movement and served as a catalyst for the Voting Rights Act.

These three women worked for a better life and an inclusive society for not only themselves and their children, but also for future generations of Americans. They selflessly and nonviolently challenged the laws and customs they believed were wrong. And they were right. Their ability to speak "truth to power" became their legacy. All three are iconic in the fight for the right to vote and a better life for all Americans.

Let me go on to point out here—I will not go into the specific sections of this bill. I know others have talked about that, why these sections are necessary to be continued for another 25 years. Let me, if I can, address some of the concerns that were raised in the other body in objections to the Voting Rights Act today—those who question why divisions of a 41-year-old law deserve to be reauthorized. And while I agree, progress has certainly been made—and we are all grateful for that—we still have many obstacles to overcome in the conduct of our elections.

Progress cannot be left to just serendipity. It must be guided by the rule of law. A little more than 5 years ago, we had an election in this country that forced us to confront the harsh reality that millions of Americans continue to be systematically denied their constitutional right to vote. Every citizen deserves, of course, to have his or her vote counted as well. There are legal barriers, administrative irregularities, and access impediments to the right to vote which disadvantage and disproportionately impact voters according to their color, economic class, age, gender, disability, language, party, and precinct. That is wrong. It is unacceptable. It is un-American. And it needs to be changed. It was unacceptable in 1965, and it is reprehensible in the year 2006. Congress must now reauthorize the expiring portions of the Voting Rights Act to continue to protect and preserve the voting rights of all Americans.

I have been closely following the reauthorization process in both Chambers. I was apprehensive when House Republicans attempted to amend the Voting Rights Act to undermine some of our most vulnerable citizens who had fought so hard to weaken this very important and fundamental law. They tried to repeal the current formula of section 5 in order to exempt States with historically discriminatory voting practices from continued coverage. They wanted to expedite the "bailout" process overriding the sensible framework for jurisdictions to demonstrate that they should not be subject to continued section 5 coverage. And I opposed requiring us to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act in only 10 short years. Finally, in what I think is the most alarming attempt to weaken this vital law, House Republicans wanted to strike section 203 which ensures that all American citizens, regardless of language ability, are able to participate on a fair and equal basis in elections.

I believe all Americans who are voting should learn to speak the English language. It should be our goal that all American citizens who vote should be able to understand an English language ballot. That is something we are wrestling with all the time. But we also recognize there are many here who are in the process of transition. Many of our citizens speak only one language as they are learning English. That makes them no less deserving. If they are citizens, of the basic rights and liberties that are extended to all Americans and are entitled to. Section 203 must be retained or its unique ability to remove barriers to this fundamental right to vote and to help promote meaningful participation among all segments of our country will be lost.

I am grateful that the civil rights groups, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the NAACP, the National Council of La Raza, the AFL-CIO and others, have worked so closely with the Democratic Members of the House of Representatives to prevail over this adversity and were able to defeat every single one of these amendments.
Central to the foundation of our democratic form of government is, of course, the right to vote. The Voting Rights Act today facilitates and ensures that right. In a representative democracy, voting is the best avenue, of course, by which voters can gain access and influence lawmakers in Federal, State, and local governments. Voting gives the people a voice. We must protect their ability to be heard and to speak.

Yesterday, I had the great privilege of meeting with 40 representatives from the Connecticut chapter of the NAACP about this important reauthorization. Their message was clear: the critical protections offered by the Voting Rights Act must be extended. We are not on the Floor today to reauthorize the right to vote. That right is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. We must continue to work to make tools to enforce that right for all Americans.

While it is critical that the Senate act to reauthorize these expiring sections of the Voting Rights Act today, it is important to recognize that this action alone will not secure the franchise for all Americans. Much more is needed to be done to ensure that every eligible American voter has an equal opportunity to vote and have their vote counted.

In addition to the obstacles that the Voting Rights Act is designed to address, too many Americans still face impediments to voting. The Presidential election of 2000 and 2004 are replete with examples of such obstacles, including: too few polling places or too few voting machines to serve the turn-out; eligible voters’ names not on the registration list; errors in the registration list; malfunctioning machines and machines that produce no audit trail; eligible voters turned away at the polls; disabled voters unable to cast a secret ballot; voters unable to correct mistakes on ballots or even receive a new ballot if the first ballot was spoiled, to name only a few.

Congress addressed some of these impediments in the landmark legislation enacted following the debacle of the presidential election in 2002 in the Help America Vote Act, or HAVA, which I was pleased to author in the Senate. That legislation established Federal minimum requirements that all States must have in place by the Federal elections of 2006 and 2008 are replete with examples of such obstacles, including: too few polling places or too few voting machines to serve the turn-out; eligible voters’ names not on the registration list; errors in the registration list; malfunctioning machines and machines that produce no audit trail; eligible voters turned away at the polls; disabled voters unable to cast a secret ballot; voters unable to correct mistakes on ballots or even receive a new ballot if the first ballot was spoiled, to name only a few.

As was said many years ago by Thomas Paine, the right to vote is the right upon which all other rights depend. But it doesn’t get this one right. Then all the other rights we depend upon as American citizens are in jeopardy. The Voting Rights Act speaks to that claim more than two centuries ago, that the right to vote is the right upon which all other rights depend. What a great message that would be to the American public that we still understand this Nation has yet to achieve the perfection that its Founders designed, but each generation strives to make it a more perfect union. Passage of this bill today will be a step in that direction.

I urge my colleagues to join me in achieving a unanimous vote to reauthorize the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act. Once Congress has completed its action on the Voting Rights Act, it is imperative that the Senate turn its attention to these further election administration reforms. As the ranking member of the Senate Rules and Administration, which has jurisdiction over election reform issues, I look forward to that debate and the action of the Senate to ensure that every eligible American voter has an equal opportunity to cast a ballot and have that ballot counted, regardless of color or class, gender or age, disability or native language, party or precinct, or the resources of the community in which they live.

I am very grateful to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and the NAACP. They were such strong supporters of the Help America Vote Act. That bill passed the Senate by a vote of 2 to 1 after a lengthy debate. We authorized close to $4 billion to the States to allow them to improve voting systems. It is not a perfect bill, but it is a major step forward. In the coming weeks, we will have appropriations matters before us, and as I said, I will be offering amendments to fully fund the HAVA bill and other such changes as I have offered in separate legislation to strengthen that particular effort. But there on this bill that we not complicate this important piece of legislation with modifications to the HAVA bill or additional ideas to improve voting access in this country. But we need to continue to work at it. It is unfortunate that in our country in too many of our elections the right to vote and have your vote counted depends upon the economic circumstances of the county in which you reside. That must change when it comes to Federal elections. My hope was we made a major step forward with the HAVA bill, and we continue to work at this on a bipartisan basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I commend the very able Senator from Connecticut, not only for the very eloquent statement he made but for the leadership which he has shown with respect to this critically important issue of the right to vote. The Senator from Connecticut has framed and crafted this bill that is on the floor as the Senate in recent years extremely important legislation designed to assure all Americans their right to the ballot.
Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I strongly and enthusiastically support the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Enforcement Amendments of 2006. The right to vote is the foundation of our democracy, and the Voting Rights Act provides the legal basis to protect this right. Ensuring that all citizens can vote and that every vote counts is surely one of our highest national priorities, and the passage of time has not diminished the need for such protections. Hearings held in the Senate and in the House in 2005 and 2006 revealed a new generation of tactics, including at-large elections, annexations, last-minute poll place changes, and redistricting, which have had a discriminatory impact on voters, especially racial and ethnic minority American voters. Most provisions in the Voting Rights Act, and specifically the portions that guarantee that no one may be denied the right to vote because of his or her race or color, are permanent. There are, however, three enforcement-related provisions of the act that will expire in August 2007. The first is section 5, which requires certain jurisdictions to obtain approval or "preclearance" from the U.S. Department of Justice or the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., before they can make any changes to voting practices or procedures. The second provision that will expire is section 203, which requires certain jurisdictions to provide bilingual language assistance to voters. And the third is a provision that is a concentration of citizens who are limited to English proficient. The third are those provisions in sections 6 to 9 which authorize the Federal Government to send Federal election examiners and observers to certain jurisdictions covered by section 5 where there is evidence of attempts to intimidate minority voters at the polls. The legislation before the Senate today authorizes the portions of the Voting Rights Act that will expire next year. I will now have the President's Government to address new challenges.

Today we are mindful of the fact that nearly 41 years ago, thousands of individuals risked their lives and some died in the challenge of systems that prevented millions of Americans from exercising their right to vote. For a hundred years after the Civil War, millions of African Americans were denied this fundamental right, despite the 15th amendment to the Constitution that prohibited the denial of the right to vote on the basis of race. Poll taxes, literacy tests, and grandfather clauses—as well as violence—were used to deny African-American citizens the right to vote in many Southern States. During the 1900s, to secure this most basic right, the cost was high: church burnings, bombings, shootings, and beatings. It required the ultimate sacrifice of ordinary Americans: James Chaney, Andrew Goodman, and Michael Schwerner, who simply sought to register African-Americans to vote. The march from Selma to Montgomery, the famous march from Selma to Montgomery; Viola Liuzzo, a White Detroit homemaker and mother of five who was killed by a Ku Klux Klansmen’s bullet after she participated in the Selma to Montgomery march; and the four little Black girls killed in the Birmingham church bombing—Denise McNair, Carole Robertson, Addie Mae Collins, and Cynthia Wesley: Medgar Evers, who had organized voter registration in Mississippi for the NAACP and was gunned down in his driveway; the horrible beatings of John Lewis and of Fannie Lou Hamer and Aaron Henry; Mississippis’s Little Rock; Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and Rosa Parks; their names are forever etched in this Nation’s history.

The impact of these tragic revelations and the subsequent enactment of the Voting Rights Act is stark. In Alabama, Black voter registration increased from 0.4 percent in 1940 to 23 percent in 1964 and more than doubled from 1954 to 1968, to 56.7 percent. Mississippi’s Black voter registration went from 2.3 percent in 1964 to 54 percent in 1968. And the increase was reflected in many other cities and States nationwide.

Let us do what we must do. Our democracy depends on protecting the right of every American citizen to vote in every election. Let us resoundingly reauthorize the Voting Rights Act.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to give my strong support of the Voting Rights Reauthorization Act. I am a proud cosponsor of this important and needed legislation.

In 2006, there are still places in America where voters are intimidated and turned away from the polls. Americans are being denied the most basic and fundamental right as an American the right to vote. That is why this bill is needed more than ever.

I am proud to be here to speak as the Senator from Maryland. From the dark days of slavery to the civil rights movement, Marylanders have led the way to end discrimination. The brilliant Frederick Douglass, who was the voice of the voiceless in the struggle against slavery; the courageous Harriet Tubman, who delivered 300 slaves to freedom on her Underground Railroad; and the great Thurgood Marshall, from arguing Brown v. Board of Education to serving as a Supreme Court Justice—all were Marylanders.

Not just Marylanders but civil rights leaders and activists from all over this country have fought to get the right to vote. Over 600 people marched from Selma to Montgomery they were stopped, beaten, but not defeated. These brave men and women continued to march, continued to fight until they got the right to vote.

They had to challenge the establishment and to say “now” when others told them to “wait.” Holding dear to their hearts the words of Frederick Douglass:

If there is no struggle, there is no progress. Those who profess to favor freedom, yet despise agitation are men who don’t want crops without plowing the ground. They want rain without thunder and lightning. The struggle may be a moral one, or it may be a physical one, but it must be a struggle. Power concedes nothing without demand. It never did, and it never will.

Their fight, their struggle resulted in the Voting Rights Act being passed. This legislation guarantees one of the most important civil rights that every citizen may vote. It is the very foundation of our democracy. It has eliminated discriminatory practices such as poll taxes and literacy tests. It has made it possible for African Americans to vote and hold elective office.

We have come a long way since the original Voting Rights Act was passed in 1965. Yet we have a long way to go.

As recent as 2004, we have seen voters disenfranchised, broken election machines, and problems with people casting their ballots on election day. We saw this in the 2000 Presidential elections, too.

In 2000, we all learned that many ballots, many peoples’ votes, were thrown out, lost, misplaced or miscounted. We saw election officials who did not know the rules and some who appeared to ignore the rules. And where did much of this happen: in neighborhoods, in cities, economically distressed areas across the Nation. I ask myself, is this just a coincidence? Those communities don’t think so. It is critical that we let them know we take their concerns seriously.

This legislation recognizes that election reform is still needed. Voters are scared to come forward and cast their vote in some parts of this country. There are places where voters are not getting assistance at the polls whether it is language access or access to accurate information. This is unacceptable. It is un-American.

Reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act will help guarantee the right to vote for all Americans, particularly the language barriers. According to the 2000 Census, 77 percent of Asian Americans speak a language other than English in their homes. Asian Americans who came as refugees are the most likely to face language barriers. For example, 67 percent of Vietnamese Americans over 18 are limited English proficient. They follow the news closely, but often by accessing newspapers and other media in their native languages. Section 5 of the VRA will help provide Asian Americans with equal access to the polls, ensuring that they are able to participate in the political process and empowering them to make a difference in their communities.

Over the years, our country has come a long way. But unfortunately, barriers to equal political participation remain. Some minority voters still face obstacles to making their political voice heard. There is evidence of attempts to make it more difficult for minority voters via unfair redistricting. Further, the lack of bilingual ballots prevents some voters from even casting their vote. This type of ongoing discrimination proves why we still need the VRA.

Over the years, Congress has reauthorized the VRA four times. The bill before us today would reauthorize three key enforcement provisions of the VRA which would otherwise expire in 2007: Section 5, which requires jurisdictions with a history of discrimination to obtain Federal clearance to introduce new voting practices or procedures; Section 203, which requires communities with large populations of
The Voting Rights Act was signed into law 41 years ago as a direct reaction to the vicious attacks against civil rights demonstrators crossing the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma, Alabama. After these attacks, President Johnson was able to end a long deadlock with certain Members of Congress attempting to weaken the legislation. The act passed in August 1965 and successfully prohibited that localities had developed to disenfranchise racial and ethnic minorities, such as literacy tests, “grandfather clauses,” character assessments, poll taxes, and intimidation techniques, often violent. It was also designed to prevent the racial gerrymandering, at-large election systems, staggered terms, and runoff requirements certain jurisdictions were using to dilute the effect of the minority vote.

Since then, sections 2 and 4 of the law, prohibiting the use of tests and devices intended to dissuade minority voting, have made obvious attempts to engage in disenfranchisement and vote dilution. Since the last reauthorization, the Supreme Court, in Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, has also curtailed the intent of section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, deciding that the act does not prohibit redistricting with the purpose or effect of weakening minority votes. Many of the changes in such a bill before us were drafted as a direct response. This act not only renews the expiring provisions, it restores the original intent of section 5 by prohibiting the approval of any proposed election law change having the effect of diluting a minority voting population.

As my courageous colleague, John Lewis, has said, “The sad truth is discrimination still exists. We must not go back to the dark past.” This reauthorization will provide the tools we need to honor our constitutional commitment to allow all of our citizens to vote. It reinvigorates the guarantee that is the foundation of our democracy the right to vote and it is a reaffirmation of another pledge, as Martin Luther King said, “The denial of this sacred right [was] a tragic betrayal of the highest mandates of our democratic tradition.”

I am honored to support this bill and would like to thank my colleagues, Senators SPECTER and LEAHY, for their work and leadership in bringing it to the floor.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, today the Senate will debate and consider the Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006. We can all agree that the Voting Rights Act was one of the most significant civil rights laws ever enacted in this country. Yesterday, the Judiciary Committee unanimously supported this bill, and today we hope the full Senate will pass it as soon as possible.

This landmark law reversed nearly 100 years of African-American disenfranchisement. It took years for Congress to devise a law that could not be circumvented or ignored through lengthy litigation or creative interpretation. After numerous failures, a stronger remedy free of litigation was needed to break the 85-year-old obstacle to Black voter participation.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 provided the solution. That law was and remains unique by enforcing the law before a new State voting statute goes into effect rather than waiting out after the fact for years in court. The section 5 “pre-clearance” procedure—along with the banning of literacy tests, poll taxes, and the like—finally worked. Soon, African-American voters did not face an unequal burden to simply exercise their constitutional right to vote.

Yet our work was far from over in 1965. Arguably, the great successes of the act we speak of today would not have been realized had Congress not amended and extended the act in 1970, 1975, 1982 and 1992. Important improvements were made to the Act during that time, including the addition of bilingual voter assistance in jurisdictions with a substantial number of non-native English speakers. Accordingly, our bill includes amendments which address recent Supreme Court decisions that have made enforcement of some parts of the act unclear.

As we all know, key provisions of the Voting Rights Act are set to expire next year. We have made enormous gains for voting rights since 1965, but we should not assume that the vigorous protections of the act have outlived their use. To the contrary, extending the act for another 25 years will ensure that these hard-fought rights will remain in place.

Evidence supports this sentiment when one considers that the Department of Justice deemed 626 proposed election law changes discriminatory since the last extension of the act in 1992. Past experience teaches us that we cannot rely upon the courts alone to protect the constitutional right to vote. Quite simply, the Voting Rights Act, and specifically section 5, has worked. The record demonstrates that it continues to be needed to enforce the guarantees of the 14th and 15th Amendments.

We commend Chairman SPECTER for holding this series of hearings on the Voting Rights Act. Furthermore, we noted the House passed its reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act last week without amendment, and I trust we can and will do the same here in the Senate. Most of us believe the record demonstrates that the act should remain in force, and I strongly urge my colleagues to support extension.

MS. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, the Voting Rights Act of 1965 was written to prevent both direct and indirect actions that would Circumvent the clear intent of the law. It outlawed the poll taxes and literacy tests and established a system of Federal marshals to help African Americans in the South vote. It also required covered jurisdictions to get Federal preapproval before changing their election laws or any other voting procedure.

These changes have made our political system more representative and
The central fact of American civilization— one so hard for others to understand—is that freedom and justice and the dignity of man are not just words to us. We believe in them.

As we are approaching the 41st anniversary of the act, perhaps it is important to remember the words of President Lyndon Johnson who signed this bill into law on August 6, 1965, as Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. looked on.

Mr. President, history tells us that the justification for the continuance of this law is compelling. It also tells us that enforcement of this law is essential, too. That is why I cast my vote for justice. That is why I cast my vote for the Fannie Lou Hamer, my vote for justice. That is why I cast my vote for the full and fair enforcement of this act, that full and fair enforcement of this act is working as intended, whether or not it achieves the ideal where each and every vote cast in this great democracy of ours has the same voice and carries the same weight and that everyone who wants to vote can do so with ease and without fear of discrimination.

I urge my colleagues to pass this legislation today because the march to victory next year.

As Martin Luther King said on the front steps of the Lincoln Memorial, a speech I heard in person, we can never be satisfied until every citizen can vote and every citizen has something to vote for.

As long as there are efforts to dilute the votes of some or to make it more difficult for any of our fellow citizens to vote, we need the Voting Rights Act and the provisions that are set to expire next year.

Every family across this great, entire, entire country, is that for one reason or another, some or all of those constituents’ own parents and grandparents could not even cast a vote without fear for their own lives. And that was for one reason—because they were Black. Those were tragic times for America.

I urge my colleagues to pass this legislation today because the civil rights march must continue because we cannot confuse progress with victory.

Mr. President, the Voting Rights Act is as necessary today as it has ever been. The Supreme Court has said voting rights are so important because they are a preservative of all rights. Those were exceptionally few anywhere in the country. In 1964, there were only 300 African Americans in public office, including just three in Congress. There were exceptionally few anywhere in the South. Today, there are more than 9,100 Black elected officials, including 6,000 Latino elected officials.
Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I grew up in Danville, VA. The town of Danville, a town of about 30,000 people right on the North Carolina border, was famous for three things when I was growing up there. It was the home of the Dan River cotton mills, it was famous for being the last capital of the Confederacy. I remember as a child riding back and forth to Danville, VA from our house outside of town and riding in the front of the bus, knowing that other people of color would ride in the back of the bus. I remember visiting downtown and going to restaurants, knowing if you were white you could eat there, and if you were not white, you could not. I remember seeing the water fountains, whites only, colored only.

I remember going to the Rialto theater with my sister, watching three movies on a Saturday afternoon for 25 cents. If you were white, you got to sit on the first floor. If you were not, you sat up in the balcony. I remember going to catch the bus across the street from my house and going about 10 miles on a bus to high school and knowing that the kids of color, about 100 yards further away from us, would get on their bus and head out to go to their school, driving by mine and going another 10 miles to their own school.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator from Delaware indicate how much more time he needs?

Mr. CARPER. If I could have 3 minutes.

Mr. REID. I yield the Senator 3 minutes.

Mr. CARPER. In addition to not being able to use the water fountains with us, eat in the same restaurants, go to movies, ride on the bus or go to school with the rest of us, the other thing that folks of color couldn’t do in my hometown was vote. They couldn’t vote because they didn’t pay a poll tax. They couldn’t vote because they weren’t smart enough allegedly to pass the test they had to take in order to become voters.

I came here in 1965, barely out of high school, 18 years old. I went to the Rayburn Building and happened to walk into a hearing in 1965 by the House Judiciary Committee on this legislation, the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The enactment of that legislation did more to change things in my town of Danville, VA, and a lot of towns in this country, especially in the South, than any one thing I can think of.

Yesterday, as several of us in the Senate rolled out something we called the Restoring the American Dream Initiative, we started off by trying to make sure that everybody who wanted to go to college had the ability to get to college. If we are going to be successful as a nation in the 21st century, we need a world class workforce.

We can’t have that unless we have well-educated, college-educated people. In order to have those kinds of opportunities, before we ever get to college we have to make sure kids have a decent chance to go to elementary, middle, and high schools. And in order for anybody to have the American dream, it is important to have a chance to get a decent job, have a chance to be a homeowner, raise a family, work hard, and live in a community and practice your faith.

The one best way to ensure that people of all walks of life have those opportunities is to make sure that they have the opportunity every November, or whenever, to go into the voting booth, be registered to vote, and exercise their constitutional right. By the passage of this legislation today, we reaffirm our commitment to that sacred right.

As one who came here 41 years ago, when my very first experience in the Capitol as an 18-year-old teenager was the debate on this legislation, to be back here today as a Member of the Senate, something possible, is an uplifting experience for me. I hope it serves as an inspiration to young men and women of whatever race or background they might be. I thank the leader.

I yield back my time.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, how much time did the Senator from Delaware use?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Vermont, Mr. Leahy.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon when I was not on the Senate floor, a few Republican Senators gave statements that reflected their individual views of what the legislation we are considering today will do to address the Supreme Court’s interpretation of legislative intent in the Georgia v. Ashcroft and Reno v. Bossier Parish cases. While I am not fully informed of their positions, I certainly disagree with what I heard.

In the Senate Judiciary Committee we received extensive testimony about these two provisions over the course of several hearings that informed our Committee vote yesterday. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a full explanation of the testimony we received that informed our vote yesterday and my understanding of the purpose and scope of these two provisions as an original and lead sponsor.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GEORGIA V. ASHCROFT FIX

The first of these provisions is commonly referred to as the “Georgia vs. Ashcroft fix.” In the Judiciary Committee we received evidence that the Voting Rights Act had been significantly weakened by the Supreme Court’s decision in Georgia v. Ashcroft because it narrowed the standards prescribed by Section 5. Prior to the Ashcroft decision, an objection would be raised by the Department of Justice if the voting change made the position of minority voters worse off in terms of their ability to elect candidates of their choice. In Ashcroft, the Supreme Court replaced the clear and administrable “ability to elect” standard with an unworkable “totality of the circumstances” standard that appears to permit the trading away of districts in which minority voters have the opportunity to elect candidates of their choice for districts in which minority voters may (or may not) have an “influence” over who is elected.

It is my understanding that the bill we are considering here today clarifies congressional intent after the Georgia v. Ashcroft decision by re-establishing that Section 5 requires that there be no retrogression of minority voters’ ability to elect the candidate of their choice—the standard described in Beer v. United States. The governing agencies’ 5 preclearance decisions prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in Ashcroft.

The majority concluded that “ability to elect” was the proper standard because it preserves the gains made in minority voting power and provides a more manageable and fair guide covering elections. The Court rebutted two arguments against this standard. First, it noted that trade away districts in which minority communities have been successful under the Voting Rights Act. Second, the Court noted that the majority of districts in which African-Americans have served as an expert witness in over 600 cases concluded that districts in which minority voters have the ability to elect were not designed to dilute minority influence. In the 1970s and 1980s, only about 1% of majority white districts in the South elected an African-American to a state legislature. As late as 1992, no African-American had been elected from a majority white district in Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, or South Carolina. Voting in South Carolina, voting has been, and still is, polarized by race. This voting pattern is general throughout the state.” Ten years later, in 2002, another three-judge court made a similar finding: “Voting in South Carolina continues to be racially polarized to a very high degree in all regions of the state and in both primary and general elections.”

In the Judiciary Committee we received extensive testimony about the harm that the Ashcroft decision has had on the power of Section 5 to protect minority voters. Political science professor Theodore Arrington, who has served as an expert witness in over 30 voting rights cases, testified at the Committee’s hearings that the Ashcroft case created an “unworkable standard” because there is “no way to know how to comply with the Court’s mandate.”

The legislation we are considering today will add needed clarity.

The difficulty of measuring minority “influence” was well-illustrated by the results in Georgia v. Ashcroft itself, as was pointed out in the Committee by Professor Pamela Karlan. The Court noted that the districts in which African-Americans make up more than 20% of the electorate are majority-Democratic, which the Court concluded “is likely as a matter of fact that African-American voters will constitute an effective voting bloc, even if they cannot always elect the candidate of their choice.” However, in the three districts where African-American voters supposedly retained an “influence” on their elected representatives, elected white representatives switched from the Democratic to the Republican party in the two-week period between their election and the inauguration, which the court described as “Democratic loss of control of the Georgia State Senate.” This result undermined the Supreme Court’s view that representatives elected in a minority “influence district” will listen and respond to their sizable minority constituents despite not being these voters’ preferred candidates.

The aftermath of Georgia’s elections supports the dissenters’ view: that it is impossible for a court to measure minority influence, and thus a state should not be granted preclearance for redistricting plans that trade away districts in which African-Americans have the ability to elect their preferred candidates for ones in which they might have the ability to influence candidates. As demonstrated in the VRAA case, as was noted by Professor Arrington and Professor Persily at the Committee hearings, reducing the number of minorities in a district is perfectly consistent with the pre-Ashcroft understanding of Section 5 as long as other factors demonstrate that minority voters have the ability to elect their preferred candidates. As demonstrated in the VRAA case, the amendment to Section 5 does not, however, freeze into place the current minority voter percentages in any given district. As stated by the dissenters, this is an understandable standard because it allows Congress to tweak the districts at issue, as was the case under the Beer standard.

The “ability to elect” standard does not lose minority districts at a particular threshold. Determinations about whether a district provides the minority community the ability to elect must be made on a case-by-case basis. Indeed, prior to Georgia v. Ashcroft, the Department of Justice utilized case-by-case analysis to determine whether a voting change impacted the minority community’s “ability to elect.” Specifically, DOJ performed an intensely jurisdiction-specific review of election results, demographic data, maps and other information in order to compare the minority community’s ability to elect under benchmark and proposed plans. After informed DOJ outlined in the Procedures for the Administration of Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, ‘28 C.F.R., Part 51, the extent to which a reasonable and legitimate justification for the change exists, the extent to which the jurisdiction followed objective guidelines and fair and conventional procedures for adopting the change, the extent to which the jurisdiction afforded members of racial and language minority groups an opportunity to participate in the process for making the change, and the extent to which the jurisdiction took the concerns of members of racial and language minority groups into account in making a change. This analysis allows jurisdictions a degree of flexibility in the adoption of their voting changes.

In sum, to avoid violating Section 5’s non-retrogression standard, a covered state’s redistricting must ensure that it has not diminished minority voters’ ability to elect their preferred candidates. The “ability to elect” standard that is being reestablished through the VRAA prevents all types of retrogression, from the dispersion of a minority community among too many districts (cracking) or the overconcentration of minorities among too few (packing).

BOSSIER FIX

The second of these provisions is usually referred to as the “Bossier Fix.”

We have acted in this reauthorization to restore the VRA’s original standing and effectiveness. After hearing extensive testimony and carefully reviewing the record created at these Senate and House Rep. hearings, we concluded that the Supreme Court’s holding in a case called Reno v. Bossier Parish (‘Bossier II’), went against both the original intent of Congress and the established Department of Justice and judicial precedent. Section 5 of the VRA requires that all changes in covered jurisdictions “not have the purpose and ... not have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color.” According to that pre-Ashcroft understanding of Section 5 as long as other factors demonstrate that minorities have the ability to elect their preferred candidates. The amendment is intended to make clear that the addition of districts in which minorities might have some influence, but not decisive influence, to trade away the districts in which minorities have the ability to elect a preferred candidate. But there is no “magic number” that every district must maintain to satisfy the “ability to elect” standard; the percentages will vary depending on such factors as the percentages of white voter turnout, voting and white crossover voting, registration rates, citizenship variables, and the specific circumstances of each case.

As demonstrated in the VRAA case, the VRAA restores Section 5 to its original intent of Congress and the Supreme Court’s original holding, as was the case under the Beer standard. The “ability to elect” standard does not lose minority districts at a particular threshold. Determinations about whether a district provides the minority community the ability to elect must be made on a case-by-case basis. Indeed, prior to Georgia v. Ashcroft, the Department of Justice utilized case-by-case analysis to determine whether a voting change impacted the minority community’s “ability to elect.” Specifically, DOJ performed an intensely jurisdiction-specific review of election results, demographic data, maps and other information in order to compare the minority community’s ability to elect under benchmark and proposed plans. This analysis allows jurisdictions a degree of flexibility in the adoption of their voting changes.

In sum, to avoid violating Section 5’s non-retrogression standard, a covered state’s redistricting must ensure that it has not diminished minority voters’ ability to elect their preferred candidates. The “ability to elect” standard that is being reestablished through the VRAA prevents all types of retrogression, from the dispersion of a minority community among too many districts (cracking) or the overconcentration of minorities among too few (packing).
and effectiveness of the purpose prong has been dramatically limited.

That is why we are amending the VRA to make clear that a covered jurisdiction does not have to disprove the existence of a Section 2 violation to obtain Section 5 preclearance. Rather, contrary to the suggestions of a handful of my colleagues who wish to undermine what we achieved today, this bill amends the VRA to make clear that it prohibits all voting changes enacted with a discriminatory purpose.

The controversy in Bossier II arose when the school board (“the Board”) of Bossier Parish, Louisiana sought to redraw the districts that elected its members. At the time of the 1990 Census, the African-American population was made up approximately 20% of the parish’s population. They did not, however, comprise a majority in any of the twelve school board districts in the parish. In 1990, the Board adopted a new redistricting plan that did not create any new majority-African-American districts, rejecting an alternate plan that would have created two majority-African-American districts.

In January of the following year, the Board submitted its redistricting plan for preclearance to the Department of Justice. Upon objection by the Attorney General, the Board filed suit for a declaratory judgment in the federal district court to obtain preclearance to the Department of Justice. The Attorney General argued that the plan should not be approved under Section 5 for two reasons. First, the plan diluted the voting strength of African-American voters in violation of a separate provision of the VRA, Section 2. Second, the plan was enacted with a discriminatory purpose.

At trial, DOJ presented extensive evidence that the plan was, in fact, enacted with a discriminatory motive. The Board’s refusal to draw a single African-American-majority district in 1990, the Attorney General argued, was evidence of the Board’s deliberate, discriminatory intent.

In Bossier II, Justice Scalia argued that since “purposive” and “effect” both incorporate a measure of the intensity of the predominant purpose of the statute—“denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color”—they must prohibit the same activity. If Beer held that the effects prong alone is sufficient for a “retrogressive” violation, the Court’s majority reasoned that Section 5 would only prohibit retrogressive intent. The end result of this argument was a change in the Department of Justice’s understanding of the effects prong.

In spite of this evidence, the trial court held other-changes enacted with a discriminatory intentent.

BOSSIER II UNDERMINE THE EFFECTIVENESS OF SECTION 5

Bossier II has had a striking impact on the Section 5 pre-clearance mechanism by reducing the number of purpose-based objections and undermining the overall ability of Section 5 to block discriminatory electoral practices in covered jurisdictions. The recent history of pre-clearance objections suggests that the purpose prong under Bossier II has become inconsequential and has no meaningful purpose-based objection. After Bossier II, there was a steep drop in the number of Department of Justice objections based on purpose alone. In the 1960s, 25% of the DOJ objections in total were based on intent alone; in the 1990s, this number increased to 43%, with 151 objections solely based on discriminatory intent. In the five years following Bossier II, only two out of a total of forty-three objections (4%) have been interposed because of retrogressive intent, the only purpose prohibited by Bossier II. In the words of one House Judiciary Committee witness, Mark Posner, the purpose prong “has effectively been read almost entirely out of Section 5. According to Posner’s testimony, the impact of Bossier II on Section 5 enforcement is evident from the recent history of Department of Justice objections. After the 1990 Census, the Department of Justice objected to 7% of redistricting plans filed by covered jurisdictions; this rate increased to 8% after the 1990 Census. In contrast, DOJ objected to only 1% of redistricting plans filed after the 2000 Census. There is strong evidence that the drop is significantly attributable to the absence of purpose-based objections.

The inability of Section 5 to block changes enacted with a discriminatory intent is highly troubling. At its core, the Voting Rights Act was designed to fight discrimination in American politics; the VRA is a vehicle to enforce the 14th and 15th Amendments, which themselves prohibit intentional discrimination in various settings. Section 5 was the centerpiece of this effort, effectively shifting the burden of fighting racial discrimination from the victims to the state. Allowing discriminatory practices to attain pre-clearance solely because the voting strength of a minority group is too weak to be further weakened undermines the original intent of the Act and its general, and the original intent of Section 5 in particular. Furthermore, it shifts the burden of fighting voting discrimination back to its victims.

REASONING: SECTION 5 PURPOSE INQUIRY

For the reasons I have described, we find it necessary to amend Section 5 to restore the purpose prong to its original scope, enabling the Act to play a meaningful and the District Court of the District of Columbia to object to any voting changes enacted with a discriminatory intent. The VRARA accomplishes this by adding subsections (b) and (c) to Section 5, which state that, “(b) Any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting or registration, the deemed exposed or without the effect of diminishing the ability of any citizens of the United States on account of race or color, or in contravention of the guarantees sections in subsections (a), and (b) of this section shall include any discriminatory purpose.”

These sections reject the holding in Bosierre II and reaffirm the constitutional rights that Section 5 prohibit all voting changes enacted with a discriminatory purpose. This would also realign the purpose prong with constitutional standards, allowing Section 5 to prohibit intentional discrimination that would otherwise be unconstitutional under the 15th Amendment. Specifically, Section 5 that would allow explicitly discriminatory voting changes to be precleared, solely because the voting strength of the minority group is further diminished. I believe that the VRARA remedy this problem and restores the purpose prong of Section 5 to prevent purposeful discrimination.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, as the Senate stands poised to conclude this debate and reauthorize the Voting Rights Act, I recall the words of Martin Luther King Jr. in his famous “I have a Dream” speech, where he noted: “When architects of our republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a /thman’s /fen/ as critical to our American was to fall heir.” The Voting Rights Act is one of the most important methods of enforcing this promise and upholding the Constitution’s guarantees of equal protection under law. We owe it those who struggled so long and hard to transform the landscape and make America a place of political inclusion to reauthorize this important Act. We all enjoy these protections and take them for granted. No Senator would ever be denied the right to vote, but the same cannot be said about millions of others. We act so that all Americans can enjoy America’s bounty, its blessings and its promise.

On May 2, our congressional leadership stood together on the steps of the Capitol—an historic announcement in an era of intense partisanship. We came together in recognition that an era of intense partisanship. We came together in recognition that, as a Nation, and to American citizenship, as voting. In sharp contrast to the tremendous resistance and bitter politics which met the initial enactment of the Voting Rights Act, our efforts this year have overcome rough discussions, the hearing process and by developing an overwhelming record of justification for extension of the expir-

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE S8007

July 20, 2006
The record also supports renewal of Sections 203 and 4(f)(4), which require bilingual voting assistance for certain language minority groups, to ensure that all Americans are able to exercise their fundamental right as citizens to vote. The record is replete with evidence from the Census, more than 70 percent of citizens who use language assistance are native born, including Native Americans, Alaska natives and Puerto Ricans. Many of those who benefit from Sections 203 and 4(f)(4) suffer from inadequate educational opportunities to learn English.

These Americans are trying to vote but many of them are struggling with the English language due to disparities in education and the incremental process of learning. We can and we must reauthorize these provisions to make sure there is no literacy test at the polling place. We endured a time in our Nation's history when such tests disenfranchised many voters. Renewing Sections 203 and 4(f)(4) will help enable all Americans to participate fully in our Nation's democracy.

The record also supports the need to amend the VRA to restore its original purpose in response to two Supreme Court decisions that have limited its effectiveness. The bill remedies the Supreme Court's holding in Reno v. Bossier Parish, by making clear that a voting rule change motivated by any discriminatory purpose violates Section 5. The record also supports the Supreme Court's holding in Reno v. Bossier Parish, certain voting rule changes passed with the intent to discriminate against minorities could pass Section 5 muster. Because such an interpretation is inconsistent with congressional intent and the purpose of the Voting Rights Act to eliminate discriminatory tactics that undermine the guarantees of the 15th Amendment, our bill fixes this inconsistency by clarifying that a voting rule change motivated by any discriminatory purpose also cannot be pre-cleared.

The bill also remedies the Supreme Court's holding in Georgia v. Ashcroft. In this case, the Supreme Court provided an unclear and unworkable test for assessing a jurisdiction's challenge to denial of Section 5 pre-clearance. Congressional intent was to protect the ability of a minority community to elect a candidate of its choice. This legislation clarifies our congressional intent and provides a necessary tool for theOriginal understanding of the Voting Rights Act to protect the minority community's ability to elect their preferred candidates of choice.

It has often been said that those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it. We must make certain that the significant gains in voting rights over the past four decades do not suffer the same fate as the voting rights provided during Reconstruction. After the Civil War, the Reconstruction era guarantees of the 15th Amendment would be realized. Between 1870 and 1900, 22 African-Americans served in the United States Congress. In 1868, Louisiana elected an African-American Lieutenant Governor, Oscar Dunn, and 87 African Americans held seats in the South Carolina legislature. However, these Reconstruction-era gains in African-American voting and representation proved to be short-lived. Following the end of Reconstruction, the rights of African-Americans to vote and to hold office were virtually eliminated in many areas through discriminatory, legal barriers, violence, and intimidation. The changes were swift, systematic, and severe. By 1896, Representative George White of North Carolina was the only African American remaining in the U.S. Congress, and it would take 72 years after Representative White left Congress for African-American voters in the South to elect another candidate of their choice to Congress.

In Mississippi, the percentage of African-American voting-age men registered to vote plummeted during the Reconstruction period to less than 6 percent in 1892. Between 1896 and 1900, the number of African-American voters in Louisiana was reduced from 130,000 to a mere 5,000. Unlike the short-lived gains made by African-American voters during Reconstruction, their exclusion from the ballot box was persistent. Only 3 percent of voting-age African-American men and women in the South were registered and voting in 1964. The latest figures released by the Census Bureau in Mississippi. These numbers provide a lesson we cannot ignore.

The passage of the Voting Rights Act in 1965 was a turning point. We have made progress toward a more inclusive democracy since then but I fear that if we fail to reauthorize the expiring provisions of the Voting Rights Act, we are likely to backslide. In his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, civil rights lawyer Robert Moses said:

No place more than Mississippi has been torn by slavery, by the slow promise of emancipation after the Reconstruction period, by the resurgence of racist power in the latter part of the 19th century and most of the 20th, and by the legacy of poverty and racial separation that still exists. While people's behavior and people's hearts can change over time, vigilance is required to ensure that barriers and structures remain in place to prevent us as a society from turning back to the worst impulses of the past. Occasional flashes of those impulses illustrate the need for that kind of vigilance. Important changes have come to pass in Mississippi in the last 40 years—changes due in large part to the mechanisms of the Voting Rights Act and the pre-clearance provision of Section 5. But, like the gains that were washed away after the nation abandoned the goals of Reconstruction in 1876, the progress of the last 40 years is not assured for the future.

When we have such legal protections that are proven effective when enforced, we should not abandon them prematurely simply in the hope equality will come. Reauthorizing and re-storing the Voting Rights Act is the right thing to do, not only for those who came before—the brave people who fought for equality—but also for those who come after us, our children and our grandchildren. No one’s right to vote should be abridged, suppressed or denied in the United States of America.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 is one of the most important laws the Congress has ever passed. It helped to usher the country out of a history of discrimination into the greater inclusion of more Americans in the decisions about our Nation’s future. Our democracy and our Nation are better and richer for it. We can only hope that the fundamental civil rights of all Americans, Congress has reauthorized and reauthorized the Voting Act four times pursuant to its constitutional powers. This is no time for backsliding, this is the time to move forward together.

As the Senate completes consideration of this important legislation—the culmination of many months of legislative activity to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act—I welcome the President’s statement of support today. It was a long time coming, and the long way round, but he got there. The President is right to have spoken of racial discrimination as a wound not fully healed. We all want our revitalization of the Voting Rights Act we consider today to help in that healing process and in guaranteeing the fundamental right to vote.

I was reminded today of when the President spoke dramatically last September in New Orleans’ Jackson Square and pledged to confront poverty with bold action. I look forward to that bold action. He spoke then of helping our people overcome what he called “deep, persistent poverty,” “poverty with roots in a history of racial discrimination, which cut off generationsمير يف لا يش.”

I agree with him. We must, as the President said that night, “rise above the legacy of inequality.” That is a shameful legacy that still exists and still needs to be overcome. The President is right that “the wounds” of racial discrimination need to be fully healed.

In my judgment, based on the record before this Senate, the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act is needed to ensure that healing.

We heard so often during the civil rights movement “we shall overcome.” But it is not just a case of we shall overcome, it is “we must overcome.”

I am grateful for the support of others who have come recently to this cause and struggle. I welcome our Senate bill cosponsors who joined us after the companion House bill had already won 390 votes and even those who joined after the Senate bill was successfully voted out of our Committee, 18-0. It is never too late to join a good cause, and protecting the fundamental right to vote and have Americans’ votes count is just such a cause.

Someone who was not late to the struggle but who has been at its forefront since his election to the Senate in 1962 is the senior Senator from Massachusetts. He worked to pass the original landmark Voting Rights Act in 1965. On this issue he is the Senate’s leader. It has been an honor to work beside him in this important effort. And work he did. To assemble the record required work. He came to our hearings, helped organize them, helped assemble the additional Senators from the majority were unavailable, and I proceeded with the permission of our chairman to chair those hearings. We would not be passing this bill without the overwhelming support that we have and that it would not have been for Senator KENNEDY.

Of course, we also honor the senior Senator from Hawaii who likewise voted for the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and each of its reauthorizations. His leadership in these matters is greatly appreciated by this Senator and, I believe, by the Senate.

I also thank the Democratic leader for his help. Senator REID stayed focused on making sure this essential legislation was enacted. He worked with us and the Republican leader throughout. He is a lead sponsor of the legislation and was a key participant at our bicameral announcement on the steps of the Capitol on May 2. Look forward to that process of developing the bill, developing the legislative record and considering the bill, he has never failed to go the extra mile to ensure the success of this effort.

I thank our Chairman and lead Senator RENNIE, who urged, cajoled and urged action he heard me out. Together with the other active members of the Judiciary Committee, we worked to assemble the necessary record and consider it so that our bill is on a solid factual, legal and constitutional foundation.

I thank each of our cosponsors and, in particular, those who joined us early on, those on the Judiciary Committee, and the Republican leader.

There are too many others who deserve our appreciation. I am grateful to Senator SALAZAR for his contributions through out and for his thoughtful initiative to broaden those for whom this bill is named by including Cesar Chavez. I look forward to working with him to make that a reality. To all who have supported this effort I say thank you and know that your real thanks will be in the fulfillment of the promise of equality for all Americans in the years ahead.

I wholeheartedly thank the members of the civil rights community.

Led by Wade Henderson and Nancy Zirkin at the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and by Bruce Gordon and Hilary Shelton of the NAACP and by lawyers like Ted Shaw and Leslie Proil and all the voting rights attorneys who have made the cause of equal justice their lives’ work, they have been indispensable to this effort and relentless in their commitment to what is best about America.

I thank my own staff, led by Bruce Cohen, backed by a wonderful staff of Kristine Lucius, Jeremy Paris, Kathryn Neal, Leila George-Wheeler, Margaret Edmonds, and our legal clerks Robynn Sturm, Arline Duffy and Peter Jewett.

I express my appreciation and admiration for all they do to make Congress and America measure up to the promise of our Constitution and the vision that Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King and Cesar Chavez had for America.

As I said earlier today, all 100 Senators have no excuse for voting against this bill. They can walk into a voting booth in their home State, and nobody is going to say no. We have to make sure that everybody else is treated the same as we 100 Senators are. This is for us, this is for our children, and on a personal level, this is also for our grandchildren.

I yield the floor.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, Section 5 of the bill, which deals with Georgia v. Ashcroft and the Bossier II case, is extremely important. As ranking member of the Judiciary Committee’s Subcommittee on the Constitution, Civil Rights, and Property Rights, I concur with the discussion of this provision by the Senate from Vermont.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six-and-a-half minutes.

Mr. REID. Does the Senate from Massachusetts need time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Just 2 minutes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank our leader, Senator REID, for his constancy in support of this legislative effort and for his encouragement to all of us on the Judiciary Committee. I thank my friend from Vermont for his kind words.

Earlier today, there have been comments by my friend—and he is my friend—in the Judiciary Committee, Senator CORNYN, and also with regard to particular provisions in section 5, and later there were comments from Senator CORNYN and Senator Kyl about an amendment offered by Congressman NORWOOD over in the House of Representatives. I think it is important that the RECORD reflect the results of the extensive hearings that we had on these different issues because it is extensive, exhaustive, and it is presented by the floor managers, Senators SPECTER and LEAHY.

Senator CORNYN suggested in his remarks that he wishes we had taken more time to debate fully some of the issues raised by the reauthorization. In particular, he said he wished more time had been taken to consider the trigger for section 5. As an initial matter, the Senate began its consideration of renewing the Voting Rights Act with the very substantial record that had been assembled by the House, which contained over 10,000 pages that were the result of over 8 months of House Judiciary Committee hearings.

From our very first Senate hearing, Chairman SPECTER stressed the need to build a strong record in anticipation of challenges to the act’s constitutionality. That’s exactly what we did. We heard from legal scholars and voting rights practitioners. We held 9 hearings, heard from 41 witnesses, and received well over a thousand pages of documentary evidence. That evidence showed, unequivocally that discrimination, including intentional discrimination, persists in the covered jurisdictions, and that the trigger is effective in identifying jurisdictions for section 5. Senator CORNYN joined a unanimous committee in voting for the committee bill, which retains the act’s trigger formula.

Senator CORNYN also held up a map of the United States depicting jurisdictions that would be covered if the amendment offered last week in the House by Representative NORWOOD had been adopted, which would base coverage on voter registration and turnout during the last three Presidential elections. Representative NORWOOD’s bill was a full airing of his proposal and many rose in opposition, including Chairman SENSENIBRENNER. The opponents of the amendment overwhelmingly carried the day.

Senator CORNYN said that the Norwood trigger would not appear to get past section 5. However, under the Norwood formula, the State of Louisiana essentially wouldn’t be covered. Yet, there is substantial evidence in our record of ongoing and new language designed to overturn the Voting Rights Act reauthorization section 5. The state of Louisiana itself could create a district that would benefit minorities, but purposefully chooses not to do so because it will be able to do so that a government official will have violated this bill.

First, the bill overturns Bossier Parish II by prohibiting voting changes enacted with “any discriminatory purpose.” This language bans a government official from discriminating against minority voters. As a consequence, this language prohibits legislators from acting purposely, with the intention of harming minority voters, to “unpack” majority-minority districts and to disperse those minority voters to other districts.

Although this is an important requirement, I have heard concerns that the Justice Department may abuse the new language designed to overturn Bossier Parish II and require States to maximize the number of majority-minority districts—or to create so-called coalition or influence districts. In cases such as Miller v. Johnson, 515 U.S. 900, 921, 1995; Bush v. Vera, 517 U.S. 952, 1996; and Hunt v. Cromartie, 526 U.S. 541, 1999, however, the Supreme Court has held that the Justice Department’s one time policy of requiring States to maximize majority-minority districts and to expunge districts containing a majority of minority voters is unconstitutional behavior. It does not author a government official from discriminating against minority voters. If a government official could create a district that would benefit minorities, but purposefully chooses not to do so because it will be able to do so that a government official will have violated this bill.

Second, the bill overturns Georgia v. Ashcroft by protecting the ability of minorities to “elect their preferred candidate of choice.” Some commentators have read Georgia v. Ashcroft as allowing States to break up naturally occurring majority-minority districts to create other districts where minorities have less voting power but still exercise important influence in elections. The bill’s new language protects districts in which minority citizens select their “predicted candidate of choice” with their own voting power. In short, it provides additional protection for naturally occurring majority-minority districts. The bill does not demand that such districts be disbanded to create influence districts.

I hope this language is now clear. I also thank my colleagues—Senators MCCONNELL, HATCH, KYL, and CORNYN—for their lucid explanations earlier.

Mr. REID. There is a definitive set of books written about this period by Taylor Branch. When I read the first volume, I went over to the office of Congressman JOHN LEWIS because his name was mentioned in that book so often that a number of years ago when the book was published, I talked to JOHN LEWIS about his valiant efforts to allow us to be in the place we are today. I mention that because after having read the third volume of Taylor Branch’s book, “At Canaan’s Edge,” which I completed a week ago, I was stunned by many references to Senator T ED KENNEDY.

One full page talks about a time that Senator KENNEDY made his first trip to Mississippi. His brother had been assassinated. He went with Dr. King to Mississippi for the first time. There were 150 pounds of nails, an inch and three-quarters long, dumped in the pathway, three police cars with nails in their tires and were unable to continue. There were threats made on Senator KENNEDY’s life. I was so stunned by reading that I called Senator KENNEDY and read that to him and asked if this brought back memories of his first trip to Mississippi.

I mention JOHN LEWIS and Senator KENNEDY because they are only two of the many who made significant sacrifices to get us to the point where we are today. On March 15, 1965, Lyndon Johnson came to the Capitol to address a joint session of Congress. He spoke to a House, a Senate, and a nation that had been rocked by recent violence, especially in Selma, AL. President Johnson’s purpose that day was to spur Congress to finally move forward on the Voting Rights Act, the legislation whose authorization we are going to vote on today. That Congress, in 1965, like this Congress in 2006, was slow to protect voting rights. That day, Presi- dent Johnson came to the Hill to re- mind everybody what was at stake. Here is what he said:

This time, on this issue, there must be no delay, no hesitation, and no compromise with our purpose. We cannot and we must not refuse to protect the right of every American to vote in every election that he may desire to participate in. And we ought not to wait another 8 months before we get a bill. We have already waited a hundred years or more, and the time for waiting is gone.

Mr. President, once again, in our country, at this time, the time for waiting is gone. The Senate cannot and we must not go another day without sending the Voting Rights Act to the President, we have already waited too long. I, like many others, expected this legislation to be passed months ago. I remember months ago standing on the Capitol steps with Senator Frist, House leaders, chairsmen and ranking members of the Judiciary Committees from both civil rights and civil rights leaders, to announce the bipartisan-bicameral introduction of this bill. It seemed that this act would move forward in swift bipartisan fashion. But it has not.

How long must we wait? How wrong that perception proved to be. In the House, consideration was delayed for weeks and weeks. It was only recently passed over the objections of conservative opponents. In the Senate, we saw similar delay. In fact, as recently as last week, the majority leader was not sure he would even bring this bill to the floor before the August recess.

In the House, consideration was delayed for weeks. It recently passed over the objections of conservative opponents. Thankfully, he listened to Democrats. Thankfully, everyone listened to what we had to say, including our distinguished majority leader. Obviously, from today to today, he had a change of heart and brought this bill before the Senate.

The Voting Rights Act is too important to fail by the wayside like so many other issues that have fallen by the wayside. I say to you today in this Republican Senate. Remember, the Voting Rights Act isn't just another bill. It is paramount to the preservation of our democracy, literally. As we have seen in recent elections, we remain a nation far from perfect. The fact is, we still have a lot of work to do, but in the last 40 years, thanks to the Voting Rights Act, we have come a long way.

Before this Voting Rights Act became law, African-Americans who tried to register to vote were subject to beatings, literacy tests, poll taxes, and death.

Before the Voting Rights Act, over 90 percent of eligible African-American voters in Mississippi didn't and couldn't register to vote, not because they didn't want to, they simply were unable to, they were not permitted to.

Before the Voting Rights Act, it would have been unheard of to have 43 African-American Members of Congress as we have today.

In the Senate, we cast a lot of votes, but not all of them are for causes for which Americans just a few decades ago were willing to risk their lives. It is a sad fact of American history that blood was shed and violence erupted before the Nation opened its eyes to justice and the need to guarantee in law everyone's right to vote.

It is important that all of us remember the sacrifice of those Americans, and to make sure we do, after this bill becomes law, I will seek to add the name of John Lewis to this bill. I already talked about his being one of my personal heroes. I understand Senators LEAHY and SALAZAR are doing something similar with Cesar Chavez. I support that. Heroic actions of men such as JOHN LEWIS and Cesar Chavez are shining examples of the heroic actions of so many during the fight for equal rights.

Congressman LEWIS is a civil rights icon. He has given his entire life to the causes of justice and liberty. As I have said, he was a key organizer of so many things, not the least of which was the 1963 march on Washington. I was there. I saw it. He was in Selma when the billy clubs, police dogs, and fire hoses were used on that bloody Sunday, and he had his body beaten on many occasions. But he hasn't given up the fight, even to this day.

Similarly, during his life, Cesar Chavez was a champion of the American principles of justice, equality, and freedom. He fearlessly fought to right the wrongs literally of those injustices inflicted on American farm workers and brought national attention to the causes of labor and injustice.

America is a better place because of JOHN LEWIS and Cesar Chavez. By placing their names on this landmark legislation, we can see sure Americans will always remember the sacrifices made in the name of equality.

I began by quoting Lyndon Johnson's speech in 1965. There is another excerpt from that speech which I will read, and it is as follows:

"In our time we have come to live with moments of great crisis. Our lives have been marked with debate about great issues; issues of war and peace, issues of prosperity and depression. But rarely in any time does an issue lay bare the secret heart of America itself. Rarely are we met with a challenge, not to our growth or abundance, our welfare or our security, but rather to the values and the purposes and the meaning of our beloved Nation.

This same challenge—a challenge to the values and the purposes and the meaning of this nation—now before the Senate. In just a few minutes, we are going to pass overwhelmingly the Voting Rights Act of 2006. It is a challenge which this body has met. We have done it purposefully and rightfully, and history books will indicate that we have made a significant step forward. There is more to do, but this is a big step forward.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CHAFEE). They have not.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the majority leader should be here momentarily. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if the Senator will withdraw.

Mr. REID, I withdraw, of course.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to make sure—I was not trying to force it to a vote. I know the distinguished Republican leader will speak next, but many of us spent a lot of time on this, and we want to make sure it will be as one of the managers of the bill—we will make absolutely sure there will be a rollcall vote.

If nobody is seeking recognition, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clock will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, 41 years—that is how long it has been since the Voting Rights Act was first enacted in 1965, and we have come a long way in those 41 years. That much was made clear to me on a recent visit to the National Civil Rights Museum in Memphis, TN, just about 3 weeks ago with President Bush and Dr. Ben Hooks, a renowned civil rights leader, a former executive director of 14 or 15 years a personal friend of myself and my distinguished colleague from Tennessee who is with me on the floor, LAMAR ALEXANDER.

Together we visited the site of the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., at the Lorraine Motel, which over the past several decades has developed into a wonderful, inspiring civil rights museum. As we walked through that museum with Dr. Hooks, in his voice we could one capture that sensitivity, that inspiration, some sadness as we walked through, and he recounted the events surrounding that time, but history came alive.

It was an ugly moment in our collective history and certainly not America's finest hour, but the museum reinforced the impressions I had. It strikes your conscience. It reminds you of the lessons learned. Lessons I saw once again on a pilgrimage I took with Congressman John Lewis and about 10 of our colleagues a little over 2 years ago when we visited the civil rights sites in Tennessee and Alabama, and together we crossed Selma's Edmund Pettus Bridge where, over four decades ago now, Congressman Lewis led those peaceful marchers in the name of voting rights for all.

What struck me most during that pilgrimage a couple of years ago and then 3 weeks ago during that museum visit with Dr. Hooks is how we as a nation pushed through that time, as we persevered to correct injustice, just as we have at other points in American history. It reminded me of our ability to change; that when our laws became destructive to our unalienable rights, such as liberty and pursuit of happiness, that we are able to alter or abolish them. And it reminded me of the importance, the absolute necessity of ensuring the permanence of the changes we made, the permanence of correction to injustice.

So I am very pleased that in just a few minutes, we will act as a body to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act. We owe it to the memories of those who fought before us—and we owe it to our future, a future when equality is a reality in our hearts and minds and not just the law—to reauthorize the Voting Rights Act.

I hope my colleagues will join me in voting for this critical legislation because in the 41 years since it became law, we have seen tremendous progress, and now it is time to ensure that the progress continues, that we protect the civil liberties of each and every American.

Mr. President, I yield back all our time.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, is there still time available on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. LEAHY. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 9) was ordered to a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. McCONNELL. The following Senators were necessarily absent: the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO) and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. ENZI).

Further, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CRAPO) would have voted "yes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORNYN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FRIST. For the information of our colleagues, the Democratic leader and I have been in discussion. Let me briefly outline what the plans for tonight will be and tomorrow. Most importantly for my colleagues, there will be no more rollcall votes tonight or tomorrow. We will probably see a lot of Members leave the room.

We will turn within a couple of minutes to the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act, a very important bill that we will spend approximately 2 hours on tonight. Following that, we will have debate on two circuit judges and two district judges. We will be voting on the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act tonight by voice vote and all four of those judges by voice tonight.

We will be in tomorrow. We will have no rollcall votes tomorrow. I will have an announcement later tonight or possibly tomorrow on what the schedule will be on Monday in terms of votes on Monday, if we will have a vote or not. Debate tomorrow will be, in all likelihood, on the Child Custody Protection Act, plus we will have a period of morning business for other matters.

With that, we will be able to turn to the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act which we will be passing in about 2 hours.

CHILDREN’S SAFETY AND VIOLENT CRIME REDUCTION ACT OF 2006

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 4472, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4472) to protect children, to secure the safety of judges, prosecutors, law enforcement officers, and their family members, to reduce and prevent gang violence, and for other purposes.

(Sponsor: Senator from Utah)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORNYN). Under the previous order, the Hatch amendment at the desk is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4685) was agreed to, as follows:

The amendment (No. 4686) was agreed to, as follows:

(Sponsor: Senator from Utah)
Laws regarding registration for sex offenders have not been consistent from State to State now all States will lock arms and present a unified front in the battle to protect children. Web sites that have been weak in the past, due to weak laws and haphazard updating and record keeping, will now be accurate, updated and useful for finding sex offenders.

There are more than a half-million registered sex offenders in the United States. Those are the ones we know. Undoubtedly there are more. The number is going to go up. Over 100,000 of those sex offenders are registered but missing. That number is going to go down. We are going to get tough on these people. Some estimate it as high as 150,000 sex offenders who are not complying. That is killing our children.

Another important part of this bill will help prevent the sexual exploitation of children through the production and subsequent distribution of pornographic and explicit material. Every day we hear new stories about how pornographers and predators take advantage of new technology to exploit children in new ways. It is very difficult for legislatures even to keep up, and with new legislation, it is often stymied in the courts.

Federal law requires producers of some sexually explicit material to keep records regarding the identity and age of performers and to make those records available for inspection. The current statute, however, was enacted before the Internet existed and covers only some sexually explicit material. The provisions in the act before us brings key definitions in the law up to date, extends the record keeping requirement to more sexually explicit material, and makes refusal to permit inspection of these records a crime.

I want to thank John Walsh, host of America’s Most Wanted, and his wife,rimpato in 1994. We enacted the Amber Alert system in 2003.

But every time we have done something significant, the bad guys have figured out a way to take advantage of it, to find a loophole, to find an opening. And that is what this is about—and I wish he had floor privileges because he could speak to it better than any of us—but this is about, to paraphrase John Walsh, with whom I dined the other night—this is about closing the door. This is about uniting 50 States in common purpose and in league with one another to prevent these lowlifes from slipping through the cracks. So we recognize that what we have done in the past did not do all we wanted to do.

I might add one more thing. Joe Biden and Orrin Hatch come from different sides of the political spectrum on a lot of things. But I can assure you, not only is this tough, but the civil liberties that Americans are not in jeopardy of—the President, I wish to talk a few minutes about the actual act. Congress has done a good deal over the last 25 years—and I might add, starting with, God love him, our old and deceased friend, Senator Thurmond from South Carolina—to protect kids. We created the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in 1984. We enacted the Child Support Promotion and Establishment Act, which I might add, one of only seven guys who jumped out front in 1994 to get that done was also Orrin Hatch.

So, Senator Hatch, I thank you. We have been in the minority, the majority, the minority; we have switched places back and forth, but it has never changed our relationship, never changed how we have worked with each other, and never changed the good work we think we and many others can say we are proud to have participated in.

to good guys. So I think it is a proud piece of work.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, as Senator HATCH has indicated, estimates there are over 550,000 sex offenders nationwide, and more than half of them are unaccounted for. I would argue that there are a whole lot more than 550,000, who never get caught up in the criminal web for a thousand different reasons that I do not have time to explain. But at a minimum, this means there are as many as 3,123 of these dangerous sex offenders out there, individuals who have already committed crimes and may, unless we do something, continue to jeopardize the most vulnerable among us.

The Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act takes direct aim at this problem. Plain and simple, this legislation, I can say with certainty, will save children’s lives.

Sexual predators must be tracked, and our cops and our parents have a right to know when these criminals are in their neighborhoods. That is what we do here.

First—an important point—let’s start at the beginning. This legislation requires sex offenders to register prior to their release from prison, to make sure we give them absolutely no opportunity to do what happens now: fall through the cracks between the moment the prison door opens and before they set up a residence. We also make sure we are keeping tabs on everyone who poses a threat to our kids. Advances in technology are a great thing, but many times there is a dark side. The Internet, for example, puts the knowledge of the world at a child’s fingertips, but it can also be and is abused by sexual predators causing kids harm. To steal a phrase from my son who is a Federal prosecutor, he told me: Dad, it used to be you could lock your door or hold your child’s hand at the mall and keep them out of harm’s way.

But today, in my son’s words, with a click of a mouse, a predator can enter your child’s bedroom in a locked home and begin the pernicious road to violation that child. That is why this legislation adds the “use of the Internet to facilitate or commit a crime against a minor” as an offense that could trigger registration.

And when someone is on a sex offender registry, we make sure they can’t go back into hiding in the shadows. Under this bill, child predators would be required to periodically and in person check in with the authorities.

They also would be required to update their photographs so law enforcement and parents will know where these folks are and what they look like now and not solely what they looked like years ago that is unrecognizable now.

And if a registered offender fails to comply with any of these requirements, he or she faces a felony of up to 10 years in prison. If an unregistered sex offender commits a crime of violence, the offender will face a 5-year mandatory prison sentence in addition to any other sentence imposed.

A noncompliant sex offender will also face a $10,000 fine. It has been brought in under this bill to lend their expertise and manpower to help track down these dangerous individuals.

One of the biggest problems in our current sex offender registry system happens when registered sex offenders travel from one State to another.

Delaware has worked hard to keep track of the 3,123 sex offenders registered to my State. But there are other States that are not so advanced and whose systems are not so sophisticated.

This bill fully integrates and expands the State systems so that communities nationwide will be warned when high-risk offenders come to live among them. And we target resources under this bill at the worst of the worst and provide Federal dollars to make sure States aren’t left holding the bag.

We also require the U.S. Department of Justice to create software to share with States in order to allow for information to be shared instantly and seamlessly among them. When a sex offender moves from New Jersey to Delaware, for example, we have to be absolutely sure that Delaware authorities know about the move.

This bill also mandates a national sex offender Web site so that parents can find out who is living in their neighborhoods. Parents will now be able to go online and find out where sex offenders by geographic radius and ZIP Code.

Do we have a silver bullet, a foolproof system here? I have been around too long to know the answer to that question. No. What we do have is a slew of commonsense ways for fixing our current problem.

As I mentioned earlier, it has taken us months and years to get to the point where this bill is going to become law. Again, I give credit where credit is due, as has already been mentioned, to Senator John and John and Rev Ralph. I know we are not supposed to—and I will not—violate Senate rules by pointing out who is here. But the fact is, if I were sitting next to Senator Ralph, I suspect if I put my hand on his arm, I would feel the tension in his arm.

This has to be a very bittersweet moment for Senator Walsh. For what are we doing here today? We are naming a bill that will save the lives of hundreds of other young people after a beautiful young boy who was victimized and killed.

The thing I find most amazing about Senator John and Rev Ralph is, I don’t know how anybody who has lost a child can have the courage to do what they have done. I know from my own experience, which I will not speak to, there are certain circumstances I cannot walk into because it reminds me of one of my children I lost.

I could never do what Senator John and Rev Ralph did. I could not never do what they did. And we could have never done today what we are doing without them. That is not hyperbole; that is the God’s truth. We could never have gotten this done without Senator John and Rev Walsh.

It has to be one god-awful bitter moment for the 27th of this month, if I am not mistaken, will be the 25th anniversary.

A lot of people on this floor, including one of my colleagues I am sitting with, have lost children. It doesn’t matter whether it is 2 years past, 10 years, 25 years, or 50 years past. That part never passes. I thank Senator John and Rev Ralph for their courage, courage way beyond anything I could possess. I think we have known John and Rev for many years. We go way back to 1984, working together to create the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children along with Senator Hatch. He has been at it by year after year, pushing the Congress to do more.

John, you have been an inspiration. You continue to be. Don’t underestimate it. You have been doing it so long, don’t underestimate how many thousands of people take solace from what you do and what you have done.

It has not been my style in 33 years to take the floor to speak in such personal terms, but this is ultimately personal. It is the ultimate, ultimate personal thing, your child.

Earlier this week I had a chance to sit down with Ed Smart whose daughter Elizabeth—what a magnificently beautiful, poised, gracious young woman—then 14 years, was abducted at gunpoint from her family in Salt Lake City while her parents and four brothers slept. She was found 9 months later. The strength of that family’s character, its resilience is remarkable.

I have taken too much of the Senate’s time. Let me again thank my colleague from Utah. I also thank our committee chairman and all the members of our committee. They also deserve a great deal of credit.

The other Senators, including my colleagues on the floor, have been relentless, absolutely relentless, Senator Dorgan; he added a major, important piece to this legislation. I thank him for that. Senator Bill Nelson, Chuck Grassley, all contributed important important input to this bill to make their tragedies that happened in their States and used them as a call to action.

Senators Frist and Reid—our majority and minority leaders—also deserve all our thanks by ensuring that this important bill was treated with the priority it deserved.

Congressman Foley has worked tirelessly on this bill in the House for years, and Congressman Pomeroy was by his side. And Chairman Sensenbrenner guided this bill through the House of Representatives.

I don’t think there is one of us on this floor who wouldn’t trade away this bill for being able to bring back to life all the lives that were lost that allowed us, in a bizarre way, to produce this legislation.

We cannot redeem the dead, but we can, in fact, protect the living. I think this bill with the many parts I didn’t mention, including DNA testing and a whole range of other things, is fair, decent, and honorable. Most important, there is not a single thing we can do that is more worthy of our effort than protecting our children. That is what all of us on this floor—and many who are not—today are playing a part in doing.

Again, I close by thanking John Walsh. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DORGAN. Is there an order of speaking this evening, if I might inquire of the manager.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we go back and forth so long as we have people on both sides. So the distinguished Senator from North Dakota will be allowed to speak next and then the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I will pick up where the Senator from Delaware left off and the Senator from Utah, also thanking John Walsh and his wife Reve for their tremendous contribution to our society but in particular for this piece of legislation. We all have to deal in life with tragedies, struggles. It is the measure of a person that is more worthy of our effort than protecting our children. That is what all of us on this floor—and many who are not—today are playing a part in doing.

by his side. And Chairman S Ensen- dous good. As Senator B IDEN says, who incident and turned it into a tremen-

I rise to talk about two pieces of this bill I have been working on and of which I am the author. One is called Project Safe Childhood. The second is described as a three-year effort to produce this legislation.

The Justice Department, in reviewing and seeing the incredible proliferation of child exploitation crimes, basically being proliferated through the Internet, took on a new program with- in the Department. This new program was in response to what we see of sexual predators and other types of sexual trafficking, again, as a result of the Internet and other places. They developed a program which is a very good program. It has five main purposes.

First, it allows the Justice Department to integrate Federal, State, and local efforts and investigate and prosecute child exploitation cases.

Second, the project allows major case coordination between the Department of Justice and other appropriate Fed- eral agencies.

Third, it increases Federal involve- ment in child exploitation cases by providing additional investigative tools and additional penalties that are available under Federal law that State and local governments may not have.

Fourth, the project provides increased training for Federal, State, and local law enforcement regarding the investiga- tion and prosecution of computer- facilitated crimes against children.

Fifth, it increases Federal and community and educational programs to raise national awareness about the threat of online sexual predators and to provide information to families on how to report violations.

As the father of six children, I can tell you that what Senator B IDEN said about what parents used to feel they could do to protect children—locking doors and being with them—has gotten a lot more complex, with that fiber they almost always have in their house that allows the entire world to come crashing into your home and allows sick people to be able to prey on mem- bers of your family. We need to do more to educate parents. This is like pointing a loaded gun at your child, in many cases, and asking them to get on and play. This is a dangerous tool.

Yes, there are wonderful things on the Internet. There is a tremendous world of knowledge and adventure on the Internet. But as we know, too often the major traffic on the Internet is not those wonderful and informative sites. They are sites that prey on our failings and weaknesses, preying on the unsuspecting, on the innocent, in many cases. We as parents have to be better armed to deal with these people who want to reach into our homes and cor- rupt members of our families, corrupt everything that we are trying to teach them not to do and, worse yet, poten- tially could exploit behavior that they could risk, ultimately, their lives.

So this program is very important that the Justice Department is en- gaged in. I contacted the Department and the Attorney General to develop an authorization bill so we could provide a stable stream of funding for Project Safe Childhood and expand the program in a way that the Department on its own could not do.

For example, increasing penalties for registered sex offenders, child sex traffi- cking and sexual abuse, and other child exploitation crimes, which this does. It creates a children’s safety online awareness campaign and authorizes grants for child safety programs. So the Department program does, we add those provisions to help with better coordi- nation between State, local, and Fed- eral prosecutors and investigators.

I had a meeting in the western dis- trict of Pennsylvania with the U.S. at- torney, Mary Beth Buchanan, and State and local officials. They were talking about—it just the practical difficulties of assigning police and inves- tigators and detectives and prosecutors on a local level and the support they need and the overlapping jurisdictional issues. So this will help them to create seamless teams of people to go after these child abusers, as well as to project into the community information that is important to prevent these crimes from happening.

So I am grateful that Senators S PEC- TER, HATCH, and LEAHY have worked to include that provision in the bill. I think it will take us a step forward in protecting our children. Give these predators and from exploitation.

The second piece of legislation is called the Schools SAFE Act. We spend a lot of time on the Senate floor talk- ing about how we can improve the quality of education. But it almost goes without saying that when you drop your child off at school, at a bare minimum, you expect that the people who interact with them at school will not harm them. You would think that on a local level and the support they need and the overlapping jurisdictional issues.

Unfortunately, in our country today we actu- ally have a very poor system of checking as to whether people who are hired in schools are, in fact, safe for the chil- dren with whom they interact.

Obviously, the vast majority of teachers and people who work in schools are good and decent people and are there because they want to help children, not because they want to harm children. But like anything else, if you are someone who is a sexual predator and you want to harm children, what better place to go than a place where there are children every single day you could possibly exploit.
So it is important that we have sufficient checks in place to make sure that these predators are not in educational settings where they can harm and corrupt our children.

The current state of play is basically a mishmash of different State laws and different participation in a system created to help schools access information about criminal background checks. Some States require, for example, only a State background check, while other States require an FBI background check. With these disparities, individuals continue to find opportunities to evade safeguards that have been put into place.

In Pennsylvania, an FBI background check is only required for individuals applying to schools for work and have lived in the Commonwealth for less than 2 years. So if you lived in the Commonwealth for several years and your records were concealed and you moved on, Pennsylvania would not have the ability to check that out.

Beginning in 2007, Pennsylvania will require applicants who have lived in the Commonwealth for more than 2 years to also undergo FBI background checks.

So we are addressing that issue in Pennsylvania.

I think it just goes to show you that there is no good system out there. What we need to do is allow States to access a database that was established by Congress in 1998 in the National Crime Prevention and Privacy Compact. This compact allows States to share background information on individuals seeking employment in a school district. This is an important thing to have all the States participating in. I will not go through all of the problems, but there are all sorts of memos and letters and those things. This is a problem.

You could have a man from Pennsylvania who committed sex crimes in Pennsylvania and moved to Nevada. Nevada is a compact State. Nevada could do the compact based check of whether this person has committed crimes against children and find nothing, because Pennsylvania does not participate in the compact. Even States that have joined the compact don't always get access to the information. This is a problem.

You could have a man from Pennsylvania who committed sex crimes in Pennsylvania and moved to Nevada. Nevada is a compact State. Nevada could do the compact based check of whether this person has committed crimes against children and find nothing, because Pennsylvania does not participate in the compact. So they could be hired in Nevada schools without knowledge of the individual's problems in Pennsylvania.

This is obviously a great threat to our children. So what this bill does is give schools across our Nation an essential resource when making hiring decisions. This will be able to help schools across this database and conduct fingerprint-based background checks on individuals who are seeking work with or around children in schools. So this is another important step in protecting our children, in addition to all of the other provisions in this bill—protecting our children in this case in our schools.

I thank, again, the chairman and ranking member for their tremendous assistance to me in getting this legislation in the final package. Again, I congratulate all who have been involved in this very important legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that 3 minutes be yielded to the Senator from Georgia, and then we go back to the Senator from North Dakota, and then to Senator ALLEN, and that would be it for now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senators for their courtesy. I thank Senator HATCH from Utah and his committee for incorporating in this very important bill provisions known as Masha's Law. It is privileged to join, as an original cosponsor, with Senator KERRY on Masha's law.

Masha is a young lady who, at an early age in Russia, was adopted by an American citizen who became her custodian. When the United States and, systematically and over a protracted period of time, abused her and put her photographs over the Internet in enormous numbers. Masha, fortunately, after a sustained period of time, was able to escape his custody. A few years later she was indicted and convicted and today is incarcerated in Massachusetts.

Masha is, fortunately, now living in a loving home in Georgia and has a wonderful mother who is truly an angel of adoption in every way.

In researching this case, we found that young Masha, and many others like her who have been abused in their lives, could not even recover under the law as it existed. What Masha's law does, and what is incorporated in here, is it changes "any minor" to "any person," so that if a minor is depicted in photographs pornographically that are distributed over the Internet, but by the time the abuser is caught, the minor is an adult, they can still recover. They cannot now, and that is ridiculous. It makes sure that recovery on the part of a minor can take place when they become an adult, whether or not the guilty person is incarcerated.

There is a trial underway for someone who was involved with this case, but that case is like so many cases, it seems to me. It is the case of Adam Walsh, it is the case of 9-year-old Jessica Lunsford, it is the case of a 12-year-old girl named Polly Klaas. It is the case of Sarah Michelle Lunde, age 13.

Pull back the curtain and then ask the question: Who is it abducting these children? Who are the sexual predators killing these children? This is not some mystery. We know the answer to this. The answer is, in most cases, that these murderers and these abductions are done by those who have been in our criminal justice system and who have abducted and murdered before.

I held a meeting in Fargo, ND, following the abduction of Dru Sjodin and the introduction of legislation I call Dru's law. What brings me to the floor of the Senate today is the components of Dru's law have been included in this legislation. So, finally, it will become law.

The Senate has passed Dru's law twice on its own. We have not gotten it through the U.S. House. Now it will be through the U.S. House and Senate as a part of this Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act, and it will become law.

A meeting I held in Fargo, ND, to discuss whether this law is a meeting at which I showed this poster. This meeting was just over a year and a quarter ago now. I held the meeting at the city hall in Fargo, ND.

Prior to the meeting, I searched the computer registry of sex offenders to find out who was living within 1 mile of where we were meeting at city hall in Fargo, ND, who had previously been convicted as a sexual predator—who were they? I would share the names with the folks who came to that meeting to say: Here is a registry in North Dakota of sexual predators. There is no national registry; this is North Dakota’s registry.

This is a poster that I showed the folks who came to Fargo that day as an example of a man who lived within 1 mile of where we were having the meeting. His name is Joseph Duncan, first-degree rape. He raped a 14-year-old boy at gunpoint, burned the victim with a cigarette, made the victim believe he was going to be killed by firing the gun twice on empty chambers; terminated from treatment; served a lengthy prison sentence; paroled, then absconded; had a long history of sexual aggression as a youth.

That is his sheet from the registry in North Dakota.

What I didn’t know that day was that 1 month before the meeting I was having in Fargo, this same man had been charged with molesting a 6-year-old boy at a playground in Detroit Lakes, MN, just across the border. Someone in Minnesota checking the registry of sexual predators would not have found his name. He was just miles away living in Fargo, ND, but, in fact, he went over to Detroit Lakes, and was charged with molesting a 6-year-old boy.

That is why we need a national registry. Strangely enough, in April of last year, he appeared on those charges, and a county judge set the bail at $15,000, and he was released after posting cash, promising to stay in touch, and he absconded and that is it.

The judge said he didn’t know he had this record.

Then 2 months later, this man we knew from intense media coverage was arrested in Idaho for kidnapping 8-year-old Shasta Groene and her brother, 9-year-old Dylan. The children had been missing for well over a month—2 months actually—when the bound and bludgeoned bodies of their mother, their older brother and their mother’s boyfriend were found at their rural home. This man is now charged with three additional murders and the kidnapping of two children that he held and sexually abused for a number of months.

Dylan’s remains were later located, and Shasta Groene, the young girl, was spotted in a Denny’s restaurant by a sharp-eyed waitress who called the police, and she was saved.

This case is an example of why there must be a national registry.

Dru’s law, which I introduced, has three components. One is the creation of a national registry. The underlying legislation improves on that by not only requiring the national registry but also standardizing the information that will be in the national registry.

Second, Dru’s law requires that when a violent, high-risk sex offender is about to be released from incarceration, the local authorities must be notified, the local State’s attorney must be notified. There is such a high risk to the population of this high-risk offender being released that perhaps there is cause to seek additional civil incarceration, civil commitment, but they can’t do that if they don’t know about the impending release.

In fact, when a high-risk offender is released from prison, we don’t can’t just say: So long, good luck. That is exactly what happens in too many cases.

Martha Stewart is thrown in jail. They put Martha in jail for 6 months, and when she gets out of Federal prison, she is allowed to wear an ankle bracelet, an electronic bracelet that allows law enforcement to track her whereabouts.

I can give you an example of a very violent sex offender let out of prison with no monitoring, no electronic bracelet, just: So long, see you later; you served your time.

Yes, we will see them again when they create another violent crime, another rape, another murder, another abduction. That is why I support passing this kind of legislation.

This legislation is going to save lives. Again I ask the question, and it is so fundamental: If we send Martha Stewart home with an electronic bracelet monitoring her, do we need an electronic bracelet, just: So long, see you later; you served your time. We know that from statistics. Do we have an obligation to protect children? The answer is, yes, you bet we do, and it is long past the time. That is why this legislation is so important.

Nearly three-quarters of the violent sex offenders are going to repeat that offense when released from prison. We know that from statistics. Do we have an obligation to protect children? The answer is, yes, you bet we do, and it is long past the time. That is why this legislation is so important.

As I said when I started, there is so much here that is partisan in this Chamber and the other Chamber, and there is so much that swells around all of us in politics that we don’t like very much about today. But there are times when we do things that will make a difference, and we do things working together, Republicans and Democrats. This is one of those moments of which we can be proud.

Senator Hatch and Senator BIDEN did a wonderful job. They mentioned their staffs, and that is important. It is always the case that politicians take the bows, but it is important to understand that staff plays a very significant role in helping us write legislation, do the research to get it correct and get it passed.

I thank my colleagues, and I especially say to the parents of Dru Sjodin: I hope when you read in the newspaper we have, in this legislation, done something significant. Section 120 is the Dru Sjodin national sex offender public Web site. We create the three elements in Dru’s law in this legislation, and I believe, in her memory, we will save our lives.

There are many parents out there today who have lost children, some to the horror of abduction by sexual predators. If this legislation will—and I believe it will—prevent others from experiencing that horror, and if this legislation will—and I believe it will—save children, then we will have done significant work here tonight. It is perhaps little noticed by some. We don’t have on legislation of this type perhaps that draws the kind of substantial attention to it, but while it is perhaps little known publicly, what transpires here in the Senate tonight will have a significant influence on the future of children in this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAFEE). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Virginia speak after me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise this evening in strong support of the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006. I commend Senator HATCH for his steadfast leadership, his wisdom, and his perseverance in finally getting this measure to the floor for a vote. It is long overdue.

I have always believed that one of the very top, most important responsibilities of government at the Federal, State, or, for that matter, the local level is the safety and security of our people, particularly the most vulnerable people in our society—our children.

When I was Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, I made the protection of the people of Virginia, including our children, our top priority. We worked with the legislature to abolish the lenient, dishonest parole system in Virginia that was releasing criminals after serving as little as one-fifth of their sentence. We instituted truth in sentencing in Virginia, and by doing that, when you read in the newspaper or see in the news that a felon has gotten a 20-year sentence, he is serving 20 years, not 4 or 5 years to come back out and prey upon innocent law-abiding citizens again.

Clearly, the abolition of parole, truth in sentencing, and longer sentences for
The crime rates are down, and there are tens of thousands of people who will not be victims of crime.

I am going to talk about Adam Walsh, but there are a lot of other victims of crime. I remember when we were trying to get the legislation to keep people behind the abolition of parole and truth in sentencing, listening to the stories of loved ones, of parents who would tell their stories, of people released early and where they have preyed upon, killed, or raped again.

I will always remember a lady talking about being raped, and then right after her, another woman was talking about being raped again, a second time, by that same person. That rapist was released early.

I remember talking about a police officer with young children. The police officer was killed on Father's Day in Richmond by someone released early.

The story of a young person working in the bakery in Richmond who was killed by someone released early. The story of a mother talking about a violent assault and then the smothering with a pillow of her daughter, and then having to go back to the parole board to re-count her loss, knowing that murderer, should not be released once again.

Before I became Governor in Virginia, pedophiles were serving an average of 9½ years in prison. Now, with the truth in sentencing, their sentences are 26 years and then right after her, another woman was talking about being raped again, a second time, by that same person. That rapist was released early.

I recently introduced a bill called the Internet Tax Nondiscrimination Act. This bill makes permanent the Internet tax moratorium, which is scheduled to expire next year. This measure ensures that ISPs and Internet service providers need to limit access to material that would be harmful to minors. This feature will create a powerful, and does create a powerful, financial incentive for ISPs to provide the filtering technology that parents need. Once parents are empowered with this technology, I guarantee you they will use it to protect their young sons and daughters.

In our bill, we impose a responsibility on Internet service providers to look at the new technology. The ISPs, or Internet service providers, need to limit access to material that would be harmful to minors. This feature will create a powerful, and does create a powerful, financial incentive for ISPs to provide the filtering technology that parents need. Once parents are empowered with this technology, I guarantee you they will use it to protect their young sons and daughters.

I am pleased the Senate Commerce Committee has taken up the Internet Safety Act, sets out several provisions on Internet predators, by giving law enforcement officials the tools they need to catch Internet predators and convict them. This is a key reason I have signed on as a cosponsor of the Adam Walsh Act. This legislation is vitally needed. As I said, it should have been enacted long ago. This legislation honors the memory of a 6-year-old boy named Adam Walsh who was kidnapped and murdered nearly 25 years ago. This bill also recognizes the tireless efforts of his parents, John and Revere Walsh, who have been outstanding advocates for children all across America, in making sure we have some common sense when we are combating violent criminals.

The Adam Walsh Act—and I want to focus on one title—this bill in title 7 includes what is called the Internet Safety Act, sets out several provisions that will dramatically increase Internet safety, including tough new penalties for child exploitation enterprises and repeat sex offenders. This title also creates a new crime—and this is important—a new crime for embedding words or digital images on to the source code of a Web site with the intent to deceive a person into viewing this obscenity. That is why I tell you, it is important for families and children. This section is going to help stop pornographers from tricking children into visiting their sites with words that are designed to attract innocent young people.

The Internet safety provisions in this measure also fund Federal prosecution resources, including 200 new Assistant U.S. Attorney positions to help prosecute persons for offenses related to sexual exploitation of children, and 45 more computer forensic examiners. These are the experts who will be helpful within the regional computer forensic laboratories in the Department of Justice. They include 10 more Internet safety units.

These are also important. There is some good work being done in Bedford County, Virginia, in between Lynchburg and Roanoke. The sheriff, Mike Brown, in Bedford County has instituted Operation Blue Ridge Thunder which works on this, but the State and local folks can certainly use the assistance and help of the forensic experts and U.S. attorneys. After all, a lot of this is across State lines. All of these resources are absolutely necessary for the investigation and the prosecution of child sex offenses.

The Internet safety provisions in this bill also expand the civil remedy available to children who have been sexually abused and exploited.

This is vitally important, commonsense legislation that is going to protect and, indeed, it is going to save lives. It is perfect that we pass a bill named after Adam Walsh, a child who lost his life at age 6 to a child predator. It can be Adam Walsh, but to all the parents who are out there who lost a young child to a sexual predator, it can be their name put in here as well. The parents of Adam Walsh have dedicated their lives to making sure there are no other parents grieving with the loss of their son or their daughter. Adam’s spirit lives on and the inspiration for action is in this measure, action that will save lives. More children will be able to grow up with the innocence they deserve, and the children who lose their innocence in crimes that are designed to attract them, we will be able to stop them with this bill. So they deserve, thanks to the efforts of Adam Walsh’s parents and also the wisdom, on a bipartisan basis, of the Senate not to dawdle, but to act. I commend the Senate for acting, particularly those in the leadership of the Senate Commerce Committee who was co-sponsored by both Republicans and Democrats. I look forward to the passage of this act, the signing by the President, and the protection of children all across America.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CORKINS. Mr. President, I too rise to support the Adam Walsh Child...
Protection and Safety Act of 2006. This act represents landmark, bipartisan legislation to protect the most vulnerable among us: our children. Over the last several months, the House and the Senate met, negotiated, and finally reached agreement on this important measure.

I want to note and, in doing so, commend the tremendous leadership Chairman SPECTER and Senator HATCH, our immediate past chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and their respective staffs, as well as the House Judiciary Committee chairman, JIM SENSENBRENNER and his staff, for all their tireless dedication to this legislation. Many people have devoted time and effort to see this bill through, ensuring that we do everything within our power to protect our children.

The crimes of child abuse and child exploitation are astounding but, unfortunately, all too prevalent. The recent wave of child abductions in this country demonstrates the need for this type of response from the Congress. There is only one way to deal with those who prey on children: They must be caught sooner, punished longer, and watched closely today.

Before I came to the Senate, I was honored to serve as the chief law enforcement officer of the State of Texas as Texas attorney general. There, I instituted a new specialized unit known as the Bexar County Hotline, which was designed to coordinate and direct efforts to fight Internet crimes such as fraud, child pornography, and address privacy concerns, among others. As others here have noted, the Internet is a remarkable tool which has revolutionized the way we live, the way we operate businesses, and the way government functions.

The crimes of child exploitation enterprises, and would implement these important programs, including making the failure to register as a sex offender a deportable offense for aliens and preventing sex offenders from taking advantage of our immigration laws.

This is one of those times in the U.S. Congress where we have come together on a bipartisan basis to do something that rises above partisanship and is enormously significant in terms of improving our quality of life and protecting the most vulnerable among us. This Congress continues to act on measures that benefit our Nation and protect our children. It has long been said that societies are ultimately judged on how they treat their elderly and their young. This bill is an important step toward improving the safety of those who are our youngest and most vulnerable.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to specifically express my gratitude to the staff of my Judiciary Committee, and to the many dedicated staff who worked tirelessly on this bill for some time, including Matthew Johnson and Lynden Melmed from my own staff. Additionally, I would like to thank the following staff:

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise to speak about the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act. I thank the Senator from Utah for his leadership on this important work over the last several years, and I thank his staff for their hard work and perseverance in pushing this legislation to the Senate floor tonight.

Last June, the entire Nation was horrified by the kidnappings and murders of the Groene family and the tragic crimes upon little Shasta Groene.

Joseph Duncan was a convicted sex offender who beat Brenda Groene; her 13-year-old son, Slade; and her boyfriend, Mark McKenzie to death. Their bodies were found in a shed in Idaho on May 16, 2005. The killings captured the national headlines and prompted a massive search for the two Groene children, 8-year-old Shasta and her 8-year-old brother, Dylan.

Six weeks later, on July 2, restaurant workers in Idaho recognized Shasta and called the police. Dylan’s remains were found later in western Montana.

This did not have to happen.

In 1980, Duncan was convicted of rape in Nebraska and sentenced to 20 years in prison and began his sentence in a treatment program. After he was terminated from the program, he served his sentence in prison until he was released on parole in 1994.

In 2000, he moved to Fargo, where he registered with the North Dakota Sex Offender Registry, but before long he had moved again and both the North Dakota and Washington State registries lost track of him.

In April of 2005, a Minnesota judge released Duncan on bail after he had been charged with child molestation. Duncan promptly skipped town.

Minnesota issued a warrant for his arrest that May because he had not registered as a sex offender in that State, but by that time it was too late.

On May 16, the Groene family was found dead and it wasn’t until July 2 that Shasta was recovered.

Joseph Duncan was essentially lost by three States. He moved from State to State to avoid capture.

No one knew where he was nor even how to look for him.

I say again, this did not have to happen.

There is no worse crime than a crime against a child, and one crime against a child is too many. That is why I have cosponsored the Child Protection Safety Act, because we need better information. We need a better system to keep that information accurate, and we need better standards to keep that system from breaking down when we need it most. The Senate must pass this bipartisan legislation to improve the national sex offender database, to link State tracking systems, and to prevent sex offenders from escaping and moving to other States.

Today there is far too much disparity among State registration requirements and notification obligations for sex offenders. Yes, there is already a National Registry, but it is based on often outdated listings from all 50 States. Worse, there are currently no incentives for offenders to provide accurate information, which helps to undermine the system.

Child sex offenders have exploited this stunning lack of uniformity, and the consequences have been tragic.

Twenty percent of the Nation’s 560,000 sex offenders are “lost” because State offender registry programs are not coordinated well enough.

We take these numbers very seriously in Washington State. In Washington State we have over 19,000 registered sex offenders and kidnapping offenders. More than 2,900 Washingtonians are currently incarcerated for these sex crimes. But we must be tough on these criminals because the national statistics are staggering.

One in five girls is estimated to be a victim of sexual assault. One in ten girls is estimated to be a victim of physical abuse. One in ten women is a victim of domestic violence. One in ten women is a victim of rape.

In the United States today, almost 200,000 children go missing every year. A recent study indicates that about 50,000 children are reported missing daily. In 2000, 1,052 children were murdered. Nearly a third of these children were murdered by family members.

We must establish a minimum sentence for certain sex crimes and tougher registration rules. Back in 1990 we were the first State to enact a sexual predator involuntary commitment law that ensures predators who are about to be released after serving their time in prison be removed from the community if mental health officials believe that they will endanger the community.

This law has become a national model for other States to follow. Today, there are 30,000 sexual predators housed on McNeil Island where they cannot hurt our children.

Here is what I know. Local law enforcement needs the tools and information that this legislation will give them to defend our children. It will help us close the gap between Federal and State sex offender registration and notification programs. Every State needs to update one another and the national registry in real time, and we need to recognize that tough punishment tomorrow will prevent terrible costs tomorrow.

We must keep our communities safe, and I know that is why the Senate is going to act on this legislation tonight.

The Adam Walsh Protection and Safety Act creates a national sex offender Web site registry, the new Dru Sjodin National Sex Offender Web site, so that every American can stay informed.

Now the public will be able to search for sex offender information by geographic radius and zip code, and the new registry will expand the scope and duration of sex offender registration and notification requirements. It will keep track of all sex offender addresses, employment, vehicle, and other related information. And, as my colleague from North Dakota talked about, with his hard work, it also has a national sex offender Web site registry, the new Dru Sjodin National Sex Offender Web site, so that every American can stay informed.

I am very proud of the Congress for the way they have handled this and moved this through the process.

I also wish to say another word. There is a program around the country called Code Adam. Actually, an Arkansan company started this Code Adam—several years ago, where they have a little blue sticker on the door of every Wal-Mart. They do a Code Adam procedure in the store if a child is reported missing in the store. I cannot tell you how many children have been saved in Wal-Marts but also in other retail stores that use Code Adam. Wal-Mart has given this idea to anybody who wants to do it. It has worked and it has probably saved dozens, if not hundreds, of children.

It is named after Adam Walsh because he was abducted and murdered several years ago.

Lastly, my friend, Colleen Nick, whom I met through my time in the attorney general’s office in Arkansas—she lost her daughter Morgan Nick when she was abducted from a ballfield in Alma, AR, several years ago when Morgan was about 5 years old. Colleen has devoted her life to missing children issues. So I am proud that this passed tonight for Morgan and Colleen and the Nick family because I have talked to them and spent a lot of time with the Nicks. I know the void it creates in a parent’s life and in a family’s life when one of their children is missing and never found.

Mr. President, I am very proud to support this legislation. I believe it makes America better, stronger, and it puts some teeth in the law that we need. It is something of which we can all be proud.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill and am even prouder that we have been able to work across party lines and in both Houses to come up with a bill that we all can support and that will genuinely help protect our children from sexual predators.
My commendations and heartfelt sympathy go out to John and Révé Walsh, Mark Lunsford, and all the other parents and loved ones of children who were taken so violently from those who loved them so dearly. Without a doubt, the most difficult lesson to learn in this bill might not be on the floor here today, as we near the 25-year mark of the disappearance and murder of Adam Walsh.

The urgency of passing this legislation to protect children is evident. No single parent, no single friend, no single colleague or neighbor could have been immunized against the trauma of this young boy's disappearance. Before he was even born, the passing of his parents had flowerted with hope for a better tomorrow. Adam's parents, John and Ann Walsh, could have watched him grow up, go to college, and lead a normal, productive life. They were forced to bury him in a casket. Likewise, Mark and Susan Lunsford could have protected their daughter Sara, just 8 years old, from thegereat trauma she went through, of hearing about her best friend's murder, having to go to court to see the murderer, and learning the details of his crimes. Instead, they had to bury her.

We are told that the first 3 years following their release for an armed robbery, child molesters are rearrested within 3 times more likely to be rearrested for a sex crime. Even more troubling, according to several federally funded studies, child molesters have an even higher rate of rearrest than rapists. The PROTECT Act, a bill I worked on with my colleagues to provide the judiciary with the necessary tools to ensure that our children and grandchildren grow up in a safe community, free from child predators, will begin the process we started with the PROTECT Act, and adds much needed additional protections for children and for our communities.

The bill before us today includes parts of the Jetseta Gage Prevention and Deterrence of Crimes Against Children Act, a bill that I introduced last year to strengthen penalties for criminals who commit sex offenses against children. It ensures that those who commit heinous crimes against our children pursuant to this bill, criminals will think twice about the repercussions. The bill increases penalties for sexual offenses against children, including sexual abuse, incest, sexual trafficking, and various activities relating to the production and dissemination of child pornography.

This bill goes far beyond these penalty increases, however. It establishes offender registries and notification requirements, essential to aid parents in monitoring their children's environments. It strengthens child pornography prevention laws and sets up grants, studies, and other programs for the safety of children and communities. It delves into Internet crimes, an area that is becoming increasingly important in light of the dangers posed to children and the lack of knowledge on the part of parents, which hampers their ability to protect their children. My good friend from Arizona, Mr. KYL, introduced the bill this section is based on and which I cosponsored.

As the elected representatives of the American people, our foremost duty is to protect those who cannot protect themselves. Child rapes and murders are now being reported on our news programs on a regular basis. We have the power to prevent so many of these crimes by creating stronger deterrents and offender registries and notification systems. We have the power to make sex offenders lurk after they are released. When crimes are committed, the least we can do is ensure that the rapists and murderers won't get the opportunity to hurt another child.

It is a tragedy that it took so many years following their release for another sex crime. Also, compared to non-sex offenders released from State prisons, released sex offenders were four times more likely to be rearrested for a sex crime. Even more troubling, according to several federally funded studies, child molesters have an even higher rate of rearrest than rapists.

The bill before us this week seeks to provide the judiciary with the necessary tools to ensure that our children and grandchildren grow up in a safe community, free from child predators.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today the Senate passed the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, which will help prevent the child exploitation by, among other things, creating a national system for the registration of sex offenders. Included in this legislation is a very important provision that I authored with Senator Isakson called Masha's Law. Masha's Law is named after a very brave 13-year-old girl—a Russian orphan who was adopted by a Pennsylvania man at the age of 5 and sexually exploited from the moment she was placed in his care. Masha suffered unspeakable atrocities in the hands of her abusive father, a man with a history of child explo- rative. He continues to use her photos, of this abuse, taken by her father and posted on the Internet, are downloaded every day. Yet Masha does not cower in fear. She is taking a stand. She is using her experiences to demonstrate why the law must change. And it is because of her that we are now closing unacceptable loopholes in our child exploitation laws.

Masha's photographs are among the most commonly downloaded images of child pornography. Law enforcement estimates that 80 percent of child pornography collections contain at least one of her photographs. In fact, it was the high volume of images being distributed by this one individual that raised suspicions and led law enforcement officials to the home of Masha's adopted father. While he is currently in jail accused of sexual abuse and facing Federal charges, the damage to Masha continues every day as her pictures are seen and stored by predators. Masha has sought compensation through a little used provision in the Child Abuse Victims' Rights Act of 1986 that provides statutory damages for the victims of sexual exploitation. Nothing will ever compensate her for the horrific experiences she has had, but the penalties provided in current law are embarrassingly low—they are one-third of the penalty for downloading music illegally.

According to the Center for Missing and Exploited Children, child pornography has become a multimillion dollar Internet business. With the increasingly sophisticated technology of digital media, child pornography has become more popular to produce, transfer, and purchase. We are not doing enough to deter those who post and download child pornography.

Masha's Law would do two things: first it would increase the civil statute of limitations from 5 years to 18 for a victim of child exploitation; and second, it would ensure that victims of child pornography whose images remain in circulation after they have turned 18 can still recover when those images are downloaded. The injuries do not cease to exist simply because the victim has turned 18. They continue and so should the penalties.

These changes are long overdue. I am proud that the Senate has passed this important legislation, and I am grateful to Masha for having the courage to stand up and make her voice heard.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I am proud to be a cosponsor of the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, which provides law enforcement with several important tools to protect our children. In the past three decades, we have all seen and heard about the many tragic cases of children being assaulted and killed by sex offenders. These are absolutely horrifying events, and as legislators, we have an obligation to do all we can to prevent such crimes in the future. We need to improve and enhance sex offender registration and tracking laws and increase penalties for those who violate them, which this act will accomplish.

There are several prongs to this act, which is what will make it successful. The core of this bill establishes a national sex offender registry. Although each State has a registry, there are no uniform standards. There is no easy way to access information from different jurisdictions. This act creates a uniform Federal standard which divides offenders into tiers, depending on their background, the crime they were convicted of, and whether they were convicted in a Federal court. It establishes registration guidelines for each tier, including how long a person would need to be registered and how often he or she must come in for a personal verification of the registration information. The act also creates community notification requirements and will make it a felony for sex offenders to fail to register and update their information on a regular basis.

The Sex Offender Public Web site will allow the public to search for information on sex offenders by ZIP Code and geographic radius.

All of these changes will help make our tracking laws more effective and will allow parents and members of the local community to be vigilant about the potential dangers of sex offenders in their neighborhoods.

But before we can put a predator can appear on the registry, he needs to be caught and prosecuted. The Adam Walsh Act includes urgently needed resources to assist law enforcement in these endeavors. This act establishes 10 new task forces dealing with Internet crimes against children and computer forensic examiners to deal exclusively with child sexual exploitation, and 200 new Federal prosecutors—all designated to combat child sexual exploitation.

This act also tries to protect children from being victimized in the first place. It provides grant money for educating parents and children about those who use the Internet to prey upon children. It funds Big Brothers and Big Sisters and includes my bill for the reauthorization of the Police Athletic Leagues. These two programs provide kids with supervision and role models and mentors who can help protect them from predators. In addition, it mandates that potential foster and adoptive parents go through a thorough criminal background check before a child can be placed with them.

Also incorporated in this bill are aspects of the Internet Safety Act which I proudly cosponsored. These include establishing new criminal penalties to keep up with the constantly increasing level of depravity among pedophiles—for example, the child exploitation enterprises provision to prosecute the "molestation on demand" child pornography industry that has sprung up in recent years. Sexual predators of children are among the worst kind of offenders, and it is only right that there are sentencing enhancements for registered sex offenders who prey on children.

This is a good piece of legislation. I am pleased so many of my colleagues support it, and I look forward to its pending passage.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in May, the Senate passed the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act to standardize and strengthen registration and monitoring of sex offenders nationwide. Since its passage, the House and Senate have worked closely to resolve their differences and to improve the legislation. The bill before us today contains difficult compromises, but it has achieved that goal.
This legislation is critically important to safeguard victims of sexual abuse from harm. It will help protect innocent people from violent offenses. It recognizes the victims and all the suffering both they and their families have endured.

With this legislation, we are recognizing the loss of Molly Bish from Warren, MA. At 16, Molly was abducted from her position as a lifeguard, and her family endured terrible uncertainty until her remains were found 3 years later. Molly was a typical teenager who took great joy from life. Her nickname was Tigger, because she was always on the move. She is survived by her parents, John and Magi Bish; her sister, Heather; and her brother, John, Jr., who work every day to keep children safe, honoring her life and her legacy.

With this bill, we also remember with sadness another Massachusetts resident, Alexandra Zapp. Ally was 30 years old when she was attacked and murdered in a public restroom by a repeat sex offender in Bridgewater, MA, in 2002. Ally’s story describes her as a strong woman, and independent woman. She had worked at the USA Sailing Association of Portsmouth, NH, where she was a keelboat training coordinator. Ally is survived by her mother and sister, Andrea and Caroline, and her father and stepmother, Ray and Linda. This legislation is dedicated to her memory, along with the memories of Molly Bish and the many other victims of terrible crimes.

Several changes have been made to this legislation as a result of our work with the House. It is important to make sure that information on offenders who pose a potential threat is available to the public at large, and this bill provides for Internet listing and community notification about such individuals.

At the same time, in order for the registry to be effective, it should be targeted toward those who present the highest risk to our communities. The current version takes a more sweeping approach toward juvenile offenders by expanding their registration requirements. The Senate bill allowed each State to determine whether a juvenile should be included on the registry. This compromise allows some offenders over 14 to be included on registries, but only if they have been convicted of very serious offenses. For juveniles, the public notification provision in this bill is harsh given their low rate of recidivism, which is less than 8 percent according to the most recent studies. For this reason, it is especially important that the bill includes funding for treatment of juvenile offenders. These provisions recognize that juvenile offenders, who have much lower rates of recidivism and have been shown to be much more amenable to treatment than their adult counterparts, shouldn’t be lumped together with adult offenders.

The bill also provides increased funding for programs to prevent these offenses before they occur. It also authorizes funding for sex offender treatment and management within the Federal prison system. These provisions will be helpful in reducing the future risks to society by convicted sex offenders. If Congress is serious about addressing this issue, it must commit itself to fully funding the legislation.

All States currently have registration requirements for sex offenders, but this bill will create a system of national tracking and accountability that preserves the ability of individual States to provide additional procedures to assure the accuracy and usefulness of the registries.

Massachusetts has a system that works. We are already doing most of what this bill requires, but our system goes beyond these basic requirements by providing individualized risk assessments of each sex offender who goes on the registry. These individual assessments, combined with hearings allowing offenders to challenge their classification, help ensure that States like Massachusetts can provide the highest quality of information on potential threats to the community while respecting the tremendous impact that knowing a sex offender can have on offenders’ lives. I am pleased that this legislation respects the right of individual States to innovate in this area and does not penalize States who go the extra mile to improve their registries.

For this reason, section 125 of the compromise is very important. Each State will face challenges in the implementation of these new Federal requirements, and States should not be penalized if exact compliance with the act’s requirements would place the State in violation of its constitution or an interpretation of the State’s constitution by its highest court.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has ruled that offenders are entitled to procedural due process before being classified at a particular risk level and before personal information about them is disseminated to the public. Massachusetts has been vigilant in implementing a comprehensive and effective sex offender registry, and it should not lose much needed Federal funding where there is a demonstrated inability to comply with certain provisions of this new Federal law.

No State should be penalized and lose critical Federal funding for law enforcement programs as long as reasonable efforts are under way to implement procedures consistent with the purposes of the act. It is essential that the Federal Government continue to collaborate and to provide support for State and local governments, including the prevention, intervention, and enforcement of antigang and antidrug activities as a result of this bill.

At the same time, the new mandatory minimum sentences in the act aren’t justified by any empirical data or sound policy. Mandatory minimums prevent prosecutors and judges from doing what they do best—making individual determinations on sentencing, based on the circumstances of individual cases. With more than 2 million Americans in prison or jail—including 12 percent of all African-American men between the ages of 20 and 34—no one should be cut out of the process of reducing the epidemic of leniency in Federal sentencing. This latest batch of mandatory minimums undermines more than two decades of legislative work devoted to striking a sensible balance between consistent sentencing and the need to provide judges with the discretion to make sure each sentence fits the crime.

Although it is important to have strong penalties for crimes against children, I have major reservations about the broad expansion of the death penalty in this compromised legislation. It is clear that continued imposition of the death penalty will inevitably lead to the wrongful execution of more and more people. Justice Marshall, in particular, wrote powerfully on this issue. He believed that if our country has any commitment to the death penalty, “its disproportionate imposition on racial minorities and the poor, its utter failure to deter crime, and the continuing likelihood of executing the innocent,” it would be rejected as morally reprehensible.

Last year, the Supreme Court struck down the death penalty for juveniles—persons 17 years old or younger. The Court’s ruling was significant. It was past time to erase that stain from our human rights record. The basic injustice of the death penalty is obvious. Experience shows that imposition of the death penalty inevitably leads to wrongful executions. Many of us are concerned about the racial disparities in the imposition of capital punishment and the wide disparities in the State in its application. The unequal and arbitrary nature of the death penalty is completely contrary to our Nation’s commitment to fairness and equal justice for all, and we need to do all we can to correct this fundamental flaw.

Finally, the national registry of substantiated cases of child abuse in this bill should not be implemented until Congress has a full understanding of its scope and effectiveness. The proposed registry raises serious implementation challenges and could create an additional and unnecessary burden for States. Not all States maintain the same registry information, and most States maintain different rules on disclosure. Tribal entities, which are included in this proposed registry, currently maintain no registries at all.

I am concerned that this registry raises serious privacy concerns by including information on cases without the opportunity for review. For this reason, it is important that the study on establishing data collection standards be completed before such a

July 20, 2006
I believe government must do all it can to support groups such as the NCMEC and others and our law enforcement agencies in their efforts to find missing children, return them to their families, and shield them from perpetrators. The work these groups do is vital to protecting families, and I applaud their dedication and compassion.

Passage of this bill will further the mission of comforting parents everywhere and protecting their children. The National Sex Offender Registry will contain up-to-date data on all sex offenders nationwide, and there are harsh penalties for any offender who does not register.

The bill imposes tougher penalties for sex offenses and violent crimes against children. It also allows for civil commitment procedures for any sex offenders who demonstrate while incarcerated that they cannot be trusted to be released on parole.

The bill addresses child exploitation over the Internet with stringent Internet safety provisions. It also contains several worthy programs, grants, and studies to address child and community safety.

I would especially like to note that the bill strengthens the pornography recordkeeping and labeling requirements passed by Congress in 1988 to protect children from exploitation by pornographers. These provisions were originally part of S. 2140, the Protecting Children from Sexual Exploitation Act of 2003, sponsored by my good friend from Utah, Senator HATCH.

I was pleased to join him as a cosponsor of that bill and am doubly pleased now to see these provisions included in this bill, which I feel confident in saying will soon reach the President’s desk and receive his signature.

Finally, the portion of this legislation that parents may find the most comforting is the creation of the Dru Sjodin National Sex Offender Public Web site. Parents will now have the power to search for offenders in their own community. The good that can come from this power to arm parents with the right information cannot be measured.

I ask my colleagues to join me in commending John Walsh for his commitment to this important issue. His drive to see that the tragedy that befell his own family does not fall on another has not diminished in the 25 years we have known him. I am glad that we can honor John by naming this important legislation after his beloved son.

Those who would prey on the weakest of us—on those they might find too few to feel the full weight of the law brought down on them. It is hard to imagine a crime that does more to destroy families or dreams of a bright future. This legislation will ensure that kids, parents, and law enforcement agencies have the tools they need to prevent child predators and sexual criminals. For that reason, I am proud to support its passage.

I met yesterday with Mr. James Tolbert, President of the West Virginia NAACP, and other members of the West Virginia NAACP delegation. They were here in Washington D.C. as part of a national effort to spearhead the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act. I met with them to assure them of both my cosponsorship of the measure and my support for the reauthorization.

The various reauthorizations of the Voting Rights Act have forged the pathway to the polls for all Americans, the ability to vote is but half of the process. Despite the best efforts of the people are vigilant in protecting their rights, and engage in the electoral process. Our democracy is strongest when there is free and open access to the polls for everyone, and when the people embrace the vote as both a right and a responsibility.

Indeed, the decades that have followed the initial passage of the Voting Rights Act have witnessed the progress of our Nation. To continue in our efforts, I had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Walsh, who has chosen to make a commitment to this important issue. His commitment to this important issue. His drive to see that the tragedy that befell his own family does not fall on another has not diminished in the 25 years we have known him. I am glad that we can honor John by naming this important legislation after his beloved son.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I rise today to comment on the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act. This legislation will create a national sex offender registry that will make it possible for law enforcement and concerned citizens to track sexual predators. The bill also includes tough penalties that will ensure that these individuals will actually register. There currently are over 100,000 sex offenders in this country who are required to register. The bill also imposes a mandatory 5 years in prison for an offender who has neglected his obligation to register and commits a crime of violence.

I would like to focus my remarks on legislation that I have introduced that has been included in this final bill. I am particularly pleased to see that the bill maintains the ChildHelp National Registry of Cases of Child Abuse and Neglect. Section 603 of the bill instructs the Department of Health and Human Services to create a national registry of persons who have been found to have abused or neglected a child. The information will be gathered from State databases of child abuse or neglect. It will be made available to law-enforcement agencies “for purposes of carrying out their responsibilities under the law to protect children from abuse and neglect.” The national database will allow States to track the past history of parents and guardians who are suspected of abusing their children. When child-abusing parents come to the attention of authorities—when teachers begin to ask about bruises, for example—these parents often will move to a different jurisdiction. A national database will allow the states to which these parents move to know the parents’ history. It will let a child-protective-services worker know, for example, whether he should prioritize investigation of a particular case because the parent has been found to have committed substantiated cases of abuse in the past in other States. Such a database also would allow a State that is evaluating a prospective foster parent or adoptive parent to learn about past incidents of child abuse that the person has committed in other States.

I am also proud to see that the Internet SAFETY Act, which I introduced with several colleagues earlier this year, has been incorporated as title VII of this bill. This title includes the following important provisions:

Section 701 makes it a criminal offense to operate a child exploitation enterprise, which is defined as four or more persons who act in concert to commit abusive sexual contact or sexual abuse laws against multiple child victims. This offense is punished by imprisonment for 20 years up to life.

Section 702 provides that if an individual who is required to register as a sex offender under Federal or State law commits specified Federal offenses involving child pornography, sex trafficking, or related activities against a minor victim, the offender shall be imprisoned for 10 years in addition to any penalty imposed for the current offense.

Section 703 makes it a criminal offense to embed words or digital images into the source code of a Web site in order to deceive people into viewing obscenity on the Internet. Offenses targeting adults are subject to up to 10 years imprisonment; offenses targeted at child victims are subject to up to 20 years imprisonment.

Section 704 authorizes appropriations for the U.S. Attorney General to hire 200 additional Assistant United States Attorneys across the country to prosecute child pornography, child sex trafficking, and sexual abuse offenses targeted at children.

Section 705 authorizes appropriations for the hiring of 30 additional computer forensic examiners within the Justice Department’s Regional Computer Forensic Laboratories, and 15 additional computer forensic examiners within the Department of Homeland Security’s Cyber Crimes Center. The additional computer forensic examiners under this title will be dedicated to investigating crimes involving the sexual exploitation of children and related offenses.

Section 706 authorizes the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to create 10 additional Internet Crimes Against Children, ICAC, Task Forces.

Finally, section 707 of the Internet SAFETY title expands the civil remedies for sexual offenses by allowing the parents of a minor victim to seek damages against allowing a minor victim to seek damages as an adult.

Title II of today’s bill also includes a number of penalty increases and other improvements to Federal criminal sexual offenses. Many of these provisions appeared in the Internet SAFETY Act, as well as in the Jetseta Gage Act, which was introduced by Senator GRASSLEY in 2005 and of which I was an original cosponsor. Section 211 suspends the statute of limitations for all Federal offenses involving sex trafficking, child pornography, or related activities. Other provisions of title II increase penalties for coercion and enticement by sex offenders, conduct relating to child prostitution, aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse, abusive sexual contact, sexual abuse of children resulting in death, and sex trafficking of children. Title II also makes sexual abuse offenses resulting in death eligible for the capital punishment, and expands the predicate offenses justifying mandatory minimum penalties for offenses involving child pornography and depictions of the sexual exploitation of children. Finally, title II adds sex trafficking of children to the set of repeat offenses that are subject to mandatory life imprisonment.

Another provision that I have pursued during this Congress and that is included in this final bill is section 212, which extends the protections of the 2004 Crime Victims’ Rights Act to Federal habeas corpus review of State criminal convictions. Because such cases involve Federal courts but State prosecutors, this extension is limited to those DNA samples of DNA that are enforced by a court—Congress cannot compel State prosecutors to enforce a Federal statute. The victims’ rights extended by section 212 to Federal habeas proceedings are the right to be present at proceedings, the right to be heard at proceedings involving release, plea, sentencing, or parole, the right to proceedings free from unreasonable delay, and the right to be treated with fairness and with respect for the victim’s dignity and privacy.

The bill also makes some technical improvements to the DNA Fingerprint Act, which Senator CORNYN and I introduced last year and which was enacted into law as an amendment to the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act at the beginning of this year. Section 155 of today’s bill modifies the authority granted to the Federal Government by the DNA Fingerprint Act to collect DNA samples from Federal arrestees. Under current law, the Federal Government may collect a DNA sample from any person arrested for a Federal offense, but the authority to collect DNA from persons convicted of a Federal offense is limited to felonies and certain misdemeanors. Section 155 corrects this anomaly by including convictions in the Federal law enforcement data collection regulatory authority, thus allowing the Federal Government to collect DNA from all persons convicted of a Federal crime. The 2006 act authorized the Department of Justice to collect DNA samples from Federal arrestees. Under current law, the authority granted to the Federal Government by the DNA Fingerprint Act to collect DNA samples from Federal arrestees is limited to those DNA samples of DNA that are enforced by a court—Congress cannot compel State prosecutors to enforce a Federal statute. The victims’ rights extended by section 212 to Federal habeas proceedings are the right to be present at proceedings, the right to be heard at proceedings involving release, plea, sentencing, or parole, the right to proceedings free from unreasonable delay, and the right to be treated with fairness and with respect for the victim’s dignity and privacy.

Finally, I would like to take a moment to recognize all of the staff who worked so hard to see this bill through to completion. Please allow me to...
Thank Ken Valentine and Tom Jipping of Senator Hatch's staff, Dave Turk of Senator Biden's staff, Julie Katzman and Noah Bookbinder of Senator Leahy's staff, Nicole Gustafson of Senator Grassley's staff, as well as Chad Groover's staff. John and Reve Groover, who has since left Senator Grassley's office but who played a critical role in developing many of the penalty enhancements included in title II. Christine Leonard of Senator Kennedy's staff, Lara Flint of Senator Feinsteins staff, Nate Jones of Senator Kohl's staff, Sharon Beth Kristal of Senator DeWine's staff, Reed O'Connor of Senator Cornyn's staff, Jane Treat of Senator Coburn's staff, Greg Smith of Senator Feinsteins's staff, Marianne Upton of Senator Durbin's staff, Bradley Hayes of Senator Sessions's staff, Bradley Schreiber of Mr. Foley's staff, and last but not least in this group, Brooke Bacak of my Republican Policy Committee staff.

It would especially like to thank Allen Hicks and Brandi White of Senator Frist's staff, who were very helpful in securing the inclusion of the Child-Abuse Registry in this bill, Matt Miner of Senator Specter's staff, who played a critical role in negotiating the final text, and Mike Volkov, Sean McLaughlin, and Phil Kilko of Mr. Sensenbrenner's staff. The bill that we have today would not exist were it not for the professionalism, expertise, and dedication of the Sensenbrenner staff. Often, as Congress simply did not pass any bill dealing with a subject so that we can say that we have addressed the problem. That is not such a bill. This is a strong, tough bill that will make a difference in the safety and security of our Nation's children. It is a bill of which we can all be proud, and Mr. Sensenbrenner's staff deserves recognition for their contribution to that result.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, back in May 2005, with the leadership of Senator Specter, Senator Biden, Senator Kennedy, and others, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved an important child safety bill, S. 1086. The committee worked tirelessly to craft a prudent, bipartisan bill that would assist States in their ongoing efforts to protect children through tighter monitoring of known sex offenders. It was a good bill, and it passed the full Senate in May of this year by unanimous consent.

Now, extensive bipartisan discussions with the House have produced a revised version of the bill, which the Senate is voting on today. The new bill is better in a few ways than the Senate-passed bill that we produced and also, regrettably, it makes a few steps backward. While this new bill is not the bill I would have written, I intend to support it and expect that it will pass.

As a former prosecutor, and as a father and grandfather, I know that there is so high priority to protect our society's children, to take every step possible to prevent them from coming to harm, and to punish those who attempt to or succeed in harming them. We have never debated whether children should be protected. Of course they should. The only debate is about how they should be protected, and how best to deploy and utilize limited resources to punish those who would prey on them.

Over the last 30 years, I have worked closely with others to write and enact legislation aimed specifically at protecting children and assisting victims. In the last Congress, Senator Hatch and I joined to introduce the PROTECT Act, which provided prosecutors and law enforcement with tools necessary to combat child pornography and human trafficking. The final legislation passed by Congress included a number of provisions that I had either authored or supported, such as the National AMBER Alert Network Act; the Protecting Our Children First Act, which reauthorized funding for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children; and legislation to amend the Violence Against Women Act to provide transitional housing assistance grants for child victims of domestic violence.

In addition, I am pleased that the Senate has acted on other legislation for children and crime victims that I have sponsored. These include the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act, which among other things included important grant funds for the Boys and Girls Clubs of America, and established the Violence Against Women Office in the Justice Department. In 2004, the President signed into law the Justice for All Act, a package of criminal justice reforms that, among other things, authorized funds to reduce rape kit backlogs and enumerated crime victims' rights.

I am glad that this new consensus legislation to protect children honors the efforts of John and Reve Walsh, who have worked so hard to ensure that other families would not experience the tragedy that befell their family. It has been my privilege to work for many years with the Walshes and with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, in which they have played such an instrumental role, to take many important steps to keep children and families safe. I commend and thank John Walsh once again for his ongoing advocacy on behalf of the Nation's children over many, many years.

I am also glad that members of both parties in both bodies ultimately agreed with me and with the distinguished Senator Reed, Senator Feinstein, and others in both parties in both bodies that we should prioritize finishing and passing legislation to protect children from sexual predators, without tying this crucial legislation to other more difficult issues. The Senate has passed court security legislation and has an effective sex offender registry, as part of S. 2766, and we have been working to settle differences between our legislation and the other body's court security proposals. Court security legislation should pass this year, but it would not have been right to endanger either the court security bills or this crucial child protection legislation by tying them together.

Gang legislation is on a separate track entirely. It is just getting started in the Senate. Passing legislation to protect children from sexual predators has been my first priority. Seeking simultaneously to resolve extensive differences over provisions in the gang bill and other crime legislation could have caused us to miss this chance. It is commendable that, in the end, both bodies chose to focus on passing sex offender legislation and not to jeopardize this by tying this bill to more controversial measures.

The gang bill is just now before the Judiciary Committee, which is the appropriate place to start work on a complex and important piece of criminal and justice legislation. It is a difficult and different version of this bill. It will be important to hold a hearing on this bill to listen to the Federal, State, and local law enforcement officers who are combating gang violence on a regular basis, and from the organizations that are working to keep our communities safe. Gang violence is a disturbing and difficult menace in our communities, and as we craft solutions to help address these issues we should strive to get it right. We have done the right thing by focusing on this important protection legislation first, before turning to that and other difficult tasks.

When S. 1086 was first introduced in May 2005, serious concerns were raised by members of the Judiciary Committee, State attorneys general, the Department of Justice, and others. Through an impressive, bipartisan effort these concerns were largely addressed. I appreciate that Senators, and now House Members, of both parties are working hard to pass this valuable legislation. The result is that and other difficult tasks. I am glad that this new consensus legislation that will help keep our children safer.

I am glad that this bill addresses my concerns and that of many others of both parties in the Senate in giving significant discretion to the States in the handling of juvenile offenders. Juvenile justice has always been a province of the States, and State legislatures, prosecutors, and judges have developed significant expertise in distinguishing juvenile offenders. The legislation is a comprehensive approach to the handling of juvenile offenders, which recognizes the special nature of the juvenile justice system. It is an effective and appropriate response to the most dangerous sex offenders, while not overwhelming the States with requirements that could hinder their own efforts. I believe that this new bill takes a few unfortunate steps back from the well thought out Senate version, but it still achieves many of the crucial goals we identified. The resulting bill ensures that each State has an effective sex offender registry and that all States will share registry information—all of which will help keep our children safer.

than we do here in Washington and they know more about these issues—in many cases, to use their expertise themselves around and become contributors to the expertise of the States spoke out and we extended the main thrust of the sexual activities. These industries are leaders in protecting children employed in their industries and far removed from the problem that the legislation purportedly sought to address. Subjecting them to the burdens of a recordkeeping and labeling statute intended for the pornography industry would create substantial burdens of compliance without any added benefit in the wholly legitimate and vital cause of actually safeguarding the security and welfare of children.

Because the focus of these requirements is adult pornography and the protection of children, not mainstream visual depictions and activities that do not threaten children, the new bill includes provisions intended to limit the reach of these requirements to those who are actually exploiting children. Most notably, section 2257A amends the sex offender registries, which create and commercially distribute materials that are not, and do not appear to be, child pornography, to certify to the Attorney General that, pursuant to existing laws, labor agreements, or industry standards, they regularly and in the normal course of business certify to the Attorney General that, pursuant to labor agreements, or industry standards, they regularly and in the normal course of business collect the name, date of birth, and address of performers employed by them. This recognizes that such legitimate, law-abiding industries in fact routinely collect the information necessary to demonstrate their compliance with the child protection laws and that for this reason they were never intended to be the focus of this more extensive recordkeeping and labeling statute. Those who certify and thus exhibit their good faith can avoid some of the more onerous requirements, and associated criminal liability, rightfully placed on others who have not been proven to be especially egregious juvenile offenders, who do represent a threat to others, on their sex offender registries.

This bill takes a good if small first step toward what should be one of our most important priorities in keeping our children safe from sex offenders: treatment. While the most dangerous sex offenders may be predisposed to offend, they can be treated accordingly, many studies have shown that people who commit less serious sex offenses often, with appropriate treatment, do not present a significant risk of recidivism and can become responsible members of society. One of the best ways to protect our children is to help as many low-risk offenders as possible turn their lives around, so that our scant law enforcement resources can be focused on those dangerous offenders who are a demonstrable threat to our children. In addition to the Bureau of Prisons Program included in S. 1086, the current bill includes a new program directed specifically to the treatment of juvenile sex offenders, who have been proven to be especially egregious juvenile offenders, who do represent a threat to others, on their sex offender registries.

The House bill proposed an expansion of section 2257 beyond what was held unconstitutional before the 1990 amendments, and beyond the pornography industry and those who exploit children. The proposed expansion of section 2257 gave rise to legitimate concerns, expressed by groups as far-ranging as the Chamber of Commerce, the Motion Picture Association of America, the American Hotel and Lodging Association, the American Library Association, and the American Conservative Union, that its recordkeeping and labeling requirements, and its far-fetched expansion of the scope of section 2257 might now affect an array of mainstream, legitimate, and first-amendment-protected activities and industries. These industries are leaders in protecting children employed in their industries and far removed from the problem that the legislation purportedly sought to address. Subjecting them to the burdens of a recordkeeping and labeling statute intended for the pornography industry would create substantial burdens of compliance without any added benefit in the wholly legitimate and vital cause of actually safeguarding the security and welfare of children.

Because the focus of these requirements is adult pornography and the protection of children, not mainstream visual depictions and activities that do not threaten children, the new bill includes provisions intended to limit the reach of these requirements to those who are actually exploiting children. Most notably, section 2257A amends the sex offender registries, which create and commercially distribute materials that are not, and do not appear to be, child pornography, to certify to the Attorney General that, pursuant to existing laws, labor agreements, or industry standards, they regularly and in the normal course of business certify to the Attorney General that, pursuant to labor agreements, or industry standards, they regularly and in the normal course of business collect the name, date of birth, and address of performers employed by them. Those who certify and thus exhibit their good faith can avoid some of the more onerous requirements, and associated criminal liability, rightfully placed on others who have not been proven to be especially egregious juvenile offenders, who do represent a threat to others, on their sex offender registries.

The focus of the underlying statute should remain on helping apprehend child predators and not on legitimate businesses that have no role in harming children. Under section 2257A(h), motion picture companies that certify to the Department of Justice that they collected the name, date of birth, and address of all the performers employed by them, for purposes of compliance with existing laws, such as filling out an I-9 form or W-4s for tax purposes, or pursuant to labor agreements or their normal business practices, will not be subject to the more burdensome requirements of this statute. Establishing this regime will have the additional benefit of allowing the Department of Justice to focus their limited resources in areas where they should be focused—pursuing those who harm children. This provision has been in effect for 18 years and yet has not been used. It is my hope that the Department of Justice, having obtained the amendments through this bill, will be able to realize the law and focus on those who harm children, and not on those legitimate businesses that do not.

Other exemptions in the bill exclude from the recordkeeping requirements and annual certification regime providers of Internet access, telecommunications, and online search tools, as well as online hosting, storage, and transmission services, so long as the provider does not acquire or alter the content. It is ironic that the broadest exemptions are granted to the providers of various types of Internet and telecommunications services, even though the advent of the Internet is cited in the original version of this bill as greatly increasing the ease of transporting, distributing, receiving, and advertising child pornography in interstate commerce. Notwithstanding these exemptions, no one can or should be construed to impair the enforcement of any other Federal criminal statute or to limit or expand any law pertaining to intellectual property against these entities.

Regrettably, the core, bipartisan bill to strengthen State sex offender registration programs was joined in both the House and the Senate to unrelated provisions aimed at creating additional mandatory minimum sentences. I agree with the U.S. District Court in the Motion Picture Association and the vast majority of Federal judges and practitioners that harsh, inflexible mandatory sentencing laws are a recipe for injustice. In its letter dated March 7, 2006, regarding the House bill, the Judicial Conference of the Chief Justice John Roberts, wrote that mandatory minimum sentences undermine the sentencing guideline regime Congress established under the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 by preventing the sentencing commission from developing guidelines that reduce unwarranted disparity and provide proportionality and fairness in punishment.
Mandatory sentences also tie prosecutors’ hands in these cases where it is most important that they have the discretion to plea bargain, especially considering how difficult it can be to prepare children emotionally and psychologically to testify against their abusers.

When addressing this issue in committee last year, Senators from both sides of the aisle agreed to limit the imposition of new mandatory minimum sentences to the most serious and violent crimes against children, rather than to myriad lesser crimes as was originally proposed. The new bill backslides from this agreement to an unfortunate extent. If we are going to establish mandatory minimum sentences, we should at least proceed in a thoughtful and coherent way, with some understanding of the range of offense conduct that may be covered and the sorts of sentences that are being imposed under current law. Instead, we simply pluck ever-higher numbers out of thin air. Congress greatly increased the penalties for most sex offenses just 3 years ago, in the PROTECT Act. Nothing has changed since then to warrant this new round of arbitrary sentences for child abuse.

Another controversial measure included in the House-passed bill was a proposal to strip Federal courts of jurisdiction to review constitutional errors in sentencing that a State court has deemed harmless. The Senate Judiciary Committee last year, Senators from both sides of the aisle agreed to limit the imposition of new mandatory minimum sentences to the most serious and violent crimes against children, rather than to myriad lesser crimes as was originally proposed. The new bill backslides from this agreement to an unfortunate extent. If we are going to establish mandatory minimum sentences, we should at least proceed in a thoughtful and coherent way, with some understanding of the range of offense conduct that may be covered and the sorts of sentences that are being imposed under current law. Instead, we simply pluck ever-higher numbers out of thin air. Congress greatly increased the penalties for most sex offenses just 3 years ago, in the PROTECT Act. Nothing has changed since then to warrant this new round of arbitrary sentences for child abuse.

Another area of concern is a provision in the bill that would limit the broad reach of this provision to cases where a citizen or legal resident genuinely poses a threat to the individual seeking entry. This provision casts a wide net, as it was originally proposed. The new bill backslides from this agreement to an unfortunate extent. If we are going to establish mandatory minimum sentences, we should at least proceed in a thoughtful and coherent way, with some understanding of the range of offense conduct that may be covered and the sorts of sentences that are being imposed under current law. Instead, we simply pluck ever-higher numbers out of thin air. Congress greatly increased the penalties for most sex offenses just 3 years ago, in the PROTECT Act. Nothing has changed since then to warrant this new round of arbitrary sentences for child abuse.

The bill gives the Secretary of DHS discretion to test these applications on a case-by-case basis and waive the denial, and I hope this will turn out to be more than just an empty gesture. Given that this bill greatly expands the RAINN, in helping a million crime victims, has not only made their lives better, but has also contributed greatly to the decrease in sexual violence in this country. I am honored that RAINN's founder and president, Scott Berkowitz, is in the room tonight in support of this special milestone.

Finally, I want to thank the Vermont Attorney General's Office and other concerned Vermont officials for providing me with constructive comments on multiple drafts of this legislation. Vermonters have worked hard to produce and improve our State’s sex offender registry program in ongoing efforts to make it useful to law enforcement agencies and the general public in providing information regarding individuals who have proved a demonstrable threat to the public. In light of the mobility inherent in American society, cooperation and coordination among the various States improves the effectiveness of each State’s registry, and the Federal assistance this bill provides will enhance that cooperation and coordination.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I will seek recognition in a moment, but for the time being, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the pending legislation to pass the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006. This legislation is named for Adam Walsh, a child who was abducted and murdered. Adam’s father, Frank Walsh, has diligently pursued efforts to save other children from the fate which befell Adam by working to enact Federal legislation which will establish a national registry for sex offenders.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children estimates that there are at least 100,000 sex offenders who are not accounted for by law enforcement. John Walsh estimates the figure to be higher, approximating 150,000.

Statistics show that sex offenders prey most often on juveniles; that two-thirds of the sex offenders currently in State prisons are there because they have victimized a child. Compared with other criminals, sex offenders are four times more likely to be rearrested for a sex crime. It is estimated that some 500,000 children are sexually abused each year. According to Department of Justice statistics, child molesters have been known to re-offend as late as 20 years after their first release from prison.

There are currently State laws which require registration of sex offenders, but unfortunately they have proved to be relatively ineffective, which requires the Federal Government to act on the national level.

I first met John Walsh after the disappearance of his son, Adam, some 25 years ago, when I was chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. At that time, in conjunction with Senator Paula Hawkins of Florida, we took the lead in establishing the Missing Children’s Act of 1982, which has been very successful in locating children, where possible, in a variety of ways—on billboards, on milk cartons, on posters—missing children were identified and publicized. Many missing children were recovered.

In the intervening 25 years, John Walsh has undertaken a national crusade. He has been instrumental in advocating and persuading both the House and the Senate to move ahead with this legislation. He has had very strong support from the leadership of Senator HATCH, the former chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Senator HATCH has promoted this legislation in a congress meeting with John Walsh in the last several days in the Office of the majority leader to look at ways to get this bill enacted so that it will be ready for signing by the President on July 27th, which is the anniversary of the abduction of Adam Walsh.

It has been a prodigious job to get this bill cleared on both sides, not having anything added on to it, and many efforts were made so that it would be enacted in time to mark the anniversary of the abduction of Adam Walsh. For that timetable, Senator HATCH deserves a great deal of credit.

As is well known, Senator HATCH chaired the Senate Judiciary Committee for many years. His leadership is still a very key factor, especially on this legislation.

I compliment Senator Santorum, RICK SANTORUM, as well as Senator KYL, Senator DEWINE, Senator TALENT, and others, for their support in producing this bill, which will protect children with the assistance of some 200 new Federal prosecutors, 45 new computer forensic experts to prevent child pornography, 20 new Internet Crimes Against Children Task Forces, and the Department of Justice's Project Safe Childhood Program and new FBI Office, which are both dedicated to protecting children from sex offenders.

A special note of commendation is due to Senator Santorum for his work on two important components of the bill: First, on Project Safe Childhood, and second, on the Safe Schools Act. These provisions and others will help stop sex offenders such as Brian McCutchen, who was sentenced last year to 35 to 70 years in a Pennsylvania prison for attempting to murder and sexually assault a 9-year-old girl in a public restroom. He was a repeat offender. He had been convicted of assaulting a 9-year-old girl in a similar public restroom attack in Manayunk, PA, in 2001. Had the provisions of the law been in place 2 years ago, the second crime might not have happened because the community would have been on notice of McCutchen’s first attack on a little girl.

I know from my work as district attorney of Philadelphia the impact of sex crimes on children. To be a victim of a crime is a horrible experience for anyone, but to be a child and the victim of a sex crime leaves an indelible imprint—hard to shake, hard to forget, traumatic, and of gigantic importance in the balance of that child’s life.

We are taking a very important step forward. I thank and commend John Walsh for his leadership and again thank and commend Senator HATCH for his leadership in the Senate on this important issue. I thank Chairman SEN. SANTORUM, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, for his cooperation and coordination, and also to the staffs.

I will single out especially Michael O’Neill, who is chief counsel and staff director for the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as far as I know, other than the few remarks I will make right now, Senator FRIST is the only speaker remaining on our sex offender bill.

I would feel bad if I did not mention a number of the staff people who have helped us on this bill. My own staff, Kelly Valentine, who is the trial counsel agent, has been serving as a detailed member in my office and has really carried the mail on this like few members of the Senate staff I have ever known.

Tom Jipping, on my staff; Dave Turk, on Senator BIDEN’s staff, had a great deal to do with this, as well. Bradley Schreiber, with Mr. FOLEY’s staff; Mike O’Neill, of Senator SPECTER’s staff; Mike Miners, Senator SPECTER’s chief counsel; Joe Matal, Senator SPECTER’s chief counsel; Gabriel Adler, Senator SPECTER; Matt McPhillips, with Senator SPECTER; Julie Katzman, with Senator LEAHY; Bruce Cohen, Senator LEAHY’s chief of staff on the Judiciary Committee; Noah Bookbinder, with Senator LEAHY; Christine Leonard, with Senator KENNEDY. Senator KENNEDY has played a significant role here. He was willing to withdraw the hate crimes bill so that this bill would pass readily through both bodies. I am very grateful to him.

Reed O’Connor of Senator CORNYN’s staff; Nicole Gustafson of Senator GRASSLEY’s staff; Sharon Beth Kristal, Senator DEWINE’s staff; Gabriel Adler, of Senator DORGAN’s staff; Joe Matal, from Senator KYL’s staff; Avey Mann, from America’s Most Wanted, who played a significant role here; Bradley Hayes, from Senator SESSIONS’ staff; Lara Fitzgerald, from Senator FEINGOLD’s staff; Mandy Hartsuch, Senator SESSIONS’ staff; Allen Hicks, of course, from Senator Frist’s staff; and Brandi White, from Senator Frist’s staff.
Of course, I would like to mention Michelle Laxalt, who took a great personal interest in this bill and from the outside helped us a great deal. We want to thank the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, especially Ernie Allen, Jim Libonati, Robbie Callaway, and Carolyn Atwell-Davis, who has carried so many balls for us here, and Manus Cooney, who used to be chief of staff under me on the Judiciary Committee.

And then I would like to pay respect to just some of the victims who really helped with this bill: Elizabeth and Ed and Lois Smart; Linda Walker, the mother of Dru Sjodin; Mark Lunsford; Erin Runnion; Marc Klass; Polly Franks, Patty Wetterling; and last but not least—really, really, we can never thank them enough, John and Reve Walsh.

So with that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senate is about to take an important step to improve the safety of our Nation’s children. Very shortly, we will pass the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act, also known as the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this significant legislation.

The Senate passed an earlier version of this bill by unanimous consent on May 4, nearly 2 months ago. Since then, Senators SPECTER and LEAHY have had bipartisan negotiations with the House, which had passed a different version.

Today, I am pleased to say that negotiations have resulted in a strong bill that will soon pass both Chambers and become law. I appreciate the willingness of all Members to put aside unrelated controversial issues so that we could focus on the core purpose of this bill—protecting children.

Next Thursday, the 27th of July, is the 25th anniversary of the abduction and murder of 6-year-old Adam Walsh. Since then, the work of Adam’s father, John Walsh, demonstrates that a single person can make a difference in our country and our world.

Following the tragic event involving their son, John and Reve Walsh founded the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. John Walsh’s TV program, “America’s Most Wanted,” has led to the apprehension of thousands of criminals. And now John Walsh has been the driving force behind this bill.

The legislation establishes a national sex offender registry which will make it easier for local law enforcement to track sex offenders and prevent repeat offenses. It also authorizes much needed grants to help local law enforcement agencies establish and integrate sex offender registry systems.

My home State of Nevada has been a leader in this movement. Our State recently made changes to improve the accuracy and reliability of the Nevada registry requirements. This Federal bill will strengthen those efforts.

Donna Coleman, past president of the Children’s Advocacy Alliance based in Henderson, NV, was instrumental in getting our State laws changed. She is another example of how one person can make a difference, and I applaud her work.

Not all States have been as vigilant as Nevada, and that is a problem when sex offenders cross State lines. The bill before us will establish uniform rules for the information sex offenders are required to report and when they are required to report it. It will also give law enforcement agencies the tools they need to enforce these requirements.

A number of Senators have been leaders in this legislative effort. In addition to Chairman SPECTER and Ranking Member LEAHY, I appreciate the hard work of Senators BIDEN, DORGAN, HATCH, KENNEDY, and others. I thank the majority leader for making this bill a priority. I hope the House will follow suit and send this bill to the President for his signature without delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, 25 years ago this month, Reve Walsh took her 6-year-old son Adam shopping with her. They were looking for lamps at a local department store—a short mile from their home—when Adam was abducted. Sixteen years later, Adam’s body was positively identified. To date, no one has been indicted for this horrific crime.

As parents, John and Reve Walsh’s worst nightmare had become a reality. As a father of three sons, I cannot imagine what pain this caused the Walsh family.

Through their tears and grief, John and Reve Walsh transformed the tragedy of Adam’s death into a lifelong commitment—a commitment to protect children from abduction, abuse, and exploitation.

John and Reve have been on the forefront of most major child protection legislation passed by this Congress over the last 25 years: the Missing Children’s Act of 1982; the Missing Children’s Assistance Act of 1984, which founded the fantastic National Center for Missing and Exploited Children; the Protect Act of 2003, which established a nationwide Amber Alert network to coordinate rapid emergency responses to missing child alerts—and, most recently, the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006, which is before us today.

This important legislation establishes a national sex offender registry, publicly available and searchable by ZIP Code; creates a national abuse registry; toughens penalties for crimes against children; and cracks down on the growing crisis of Internet predators and child pornography.

John’s and Reve’s tireless dedication is an inspiration to parents of child victims and millions of American families. I am proud to have worked with John and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children on this legislation. I am confident that the legislation will save the lives of thousands of children.

Thank John Walsh, Ernie Allen, president of the National Center, and Carolyn Atwell-Davis, along with the rest of the dedicated staff at the National Center, for the truly amazing work they do, on a daily basis, to protect our Nation’s children.

In March, John came by my office to talk about the importance of a national sex offender registry. He told me that this was the most important piece of legislation he had seen in over two decades of advocating for children’s issues.

I promised John then that I would make passing this critical piece of legislation a priority. And I am proud to tell John—to tell our Nation’s children, parents, and law enforcement—that the U.S. Senate has not only heard your concerns, but we are acting tonight to address them.

The Adam Walsh bill—so named to honor the upcoming 25th anniversary of his death and the memory of other child victims and their families—has many components designed to protect our Nation’s children.

First, the bill establishes a national sex offender registry. Currently, there are more than 550,000 registered sex offenders in the United States, and at least 100,000 of them are missing.

Loopholes in the current system allow some sexual predators to evade law enforcement, placing our children at risk. While many States, including my own home State of Tennessee, have registries, this information is not always shared with other States. By creating a national registry, we are closing the loopholes that allow offenders to slip through the cracks. And we are ensuring law enforcement at all levels—local, State, and Federal—to collaborate and to share information.

The registry will make it easier for law enforcement to act on a tip, to identify and intercept offenders before they can strike again, before they can repeat their crimes and victimize more children.

The national registry will be publicly accessible via the Internet and searchable by ZIP Code. This helps parents. It gives them the tools they need to learn whether a neighbor down the street has a history of sexual violence so they can protect their children from harm.

Further, the bill increases the penalty for failure to register from a misdemeanor to a felony. It enhances registration requirements, by mandating that offenders register more often and in person, rather than by mail.

By strengthening these requirements, we are sending a message loudly and clearly to sex offenders: If you don’t register, we will find you, and we will go to jail.

The bill also toughens penalties for violent crimes against children, including sex trafficking of children, coercion or enticement of child prostitution, and sexual abuse.

Another aspect of this bill is the creation of a child abuse registry. I want to thank Senators KYL and ENZI for their hard work in helping to get this provision included in the bill.

This legislation was recommended by Childhelp, a children’s advocacy organization with whom my wife Karyn and many of our Senate spouses are proud to be associated.

Every day, four children die as a result of child abuse, and every day Childhelp is on the frontlines working to prevent child abuse and treat victims of such abuse. They explained to me that while many States have child abuse registries, this information is not shared with other States.

This is especially problematic with child abusers. They often relocate when questions are raised by a teacher, a neighbor, or a doctor about whether a child is being abused.

By creating a national child abuse registry, we will tear down the information barrier and enable Child Protective Services professionals in different States to share information critically important to child abuse investigations.

The Bill

The bill has the following provisions:

1. It provides additional resources to combat this growing problem by adding 45 new forensics examiners, 500 additional officers, and a $20 billion a year industry.

2. It has become the anonymous gateway for child predators to make contact with children, to win their confidence, and to victimize them.

Current data show that of the 24 million Internet users—1 in 5 has received unwanted sexual solicitations online—and the increasing crisis of child pornography, an estimated $20 billion a year industry.

The Internet has become the anonymous gateway for child predators to make contact with children, to win their confidence, and to victimize them.

The bill provides additional resources to combat this growing problem by adding 200 new Federal prosecutors to prosecute crimes involving the sexual exploitation of minors; by creating 10 new Internet Crimes Against Children Task Forces, which bring local, State, and Federal law enforcement together to collaborate in solving these crimes; and by adding 45 new forensics examiners to accelerate processing of online evidence and child exploitation; and by providing grants for programs to educate children and parents on Internet safety.

We must continue to do more to protect our children. American families should not have to live in fear of child predators lurking in the shadows of our neighborhoods or enticing our children online.

I want to thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for their efforts, for giving life to this critical piece of legislation. This is clearly a bipartisan, bicameral bill that has overwhelming support. I am pleased we were able to unite, Democrats and Republicans, in this body and, indeed, House with Senate.

In the Senate, I especially want to recognize my colleague, Senator HATCH, for his tireless efforts on this bill—the champion, the leader, the one with the bold vision, without whom simply this would not have happened.

I want to thank Chairman SPEKTOR and Senators SANTORUM, KYL, and DEWINE, for all their hard work on bringing this legislation to fruition.

I also want to thank Speaker HASTERT and Majority Leader BOEHNER and Chairman SENSENBRENNER and Congressman FOLEY for their commitment to this issue.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this Adam Walsh bill, and look forward to a future that is safer for our children.

Mr. President, I do not believe there are any further speakers on the bill; therefore, I yield back all time and ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to third reading and a vote on H.R. 4472, with all of the provisions of the agreement remaining in place. I ask unanimous consent, after passage, that the title amendment be read and agree to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H.R. 4472), as amended, was passed.

Mr. HATCH. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FRIST. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read the amendment to the title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title to read as follows: “To protect children from sexual exploitation and violent crime, to prevent child abuse and child pornography, to promote Internet safety, and to honor the memory of Adam Walsh and other child crime victims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the title is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 467) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHILD CUSTODY PROTECTION ACT

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I rise to speak today about the Child Custody Protection Act. A bill the Senate will debate shortly. I believe, as a father of three children, including one daughter, it is a very important piece of legislation.

Good people can disagree on issues even the most profound to come together and find some common ground. The Child Custody Protection Act simply states that if an adult willfully takes a minor child across State lines to get an abortion, for the purpose of avoiding a State’s parental consent or notification law that would be a Federal crime for that adult.

Judicial bypass is an integral part of all effective parental consent laws. So for those concerned about the cases of parental rape or incest and what a child does in that case?—to conduct a judicial review, a judicial bypass available.

The Child Custody Protection Act would only apply in those States parental consent or notification laws in place.

This is an important piece of legislation, especially for parents as many of these cases involve a 20-something-year-old male who has impregnated a young teenager, often a 13, 14, 15-year-old girl, which has ended in a secret abortion.

Now because your little girl had become pregnant and this 20-something-year-old realized that is a crime of statutory rape, they want to dispose of the evidence. So they decide to talk your little girl into going across State lines for an abortion because your State law requires parental notification or parental consent for such a procedure. They go to the State next door, take care of the abortion, and you, the parents, know nothing about it. How would you feel as a parent in a situation such as that?

Even further, abortion is a surgical procedure. Our kids are not even allowed to get an aspirin in school without parental consent. They are not allowed to take a field trip without parental consent. They are not allowed to take sex education classes without parental consent. Yet, remarkably, it is not against the law to evade parental consent, which has ended in a secret abortion.

It is time for legislation such as the Child Custody Protection Act. I realize that emotions run high on both sides of the abortion issue. They run deeply and have divided our country for some time. We need to look for a place of common ground. A place where reasonable people should be able to come together and agree to at least have this one restriction on abortion, agree that parents should be involved in the decisions, especially the medical decisions, involving their children. The Child Custody Protection Act does just that.
This is legislation where we preserve parent rights, we preserve State rights, and we do something that approximately 80 percent of the American people support.

As we debate this bill over the next several days, I hope people will take an honest look at the intent of this legislation. I hope people will not automatically, because the word “abortion” is contained in this legislation, say: I can’t vote for such a measure because it contains abortion language. I hope people will also say: let’s look for things that are reasonable and come together on an issue that should be agreed on to protect our children, our daughters. I yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF NEIL M. GORSUCH TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

NOMINATION OF BOBBY E. SHEPHERD TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

NOMINATION OF DANIEL PORTER JORDAN III TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

NOMINATION OF GUSTAVO ANTONIO GELPI TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF PUERTO RICO

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nominations of Neil M. Gorsuch, of Colorado, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Tenth Circuit; Bobby E. Shepherd, of Arkansas, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit; Daniel Porter Jordan III, of Mississippi, to be United States District Judge for the Southern District of Mississippi; and Gustavo Antonio Gelpi, of Puerto Rico, to be United States District Judge for the District of Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. In my capacity as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I seek recognition to speak briefly on four judicial nominees currently before the Senate.

I begin with the nomination of Neil M. Gorsuch to be a judge for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. Mr. Gorsuch, an excellent academic background with a bachelor’s with honors from Columbia University, 1988, a law degree with honors from Harvard Law School in 1991, a Doctorate of Philosophy from Oxford University in 2004. He clerked for Judge David Sentelle of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. He was a law clerk for Supreme Court Justice Byron White and Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy.

He was a partner in the distinguished law firm of Kellogg, Huber, Hansen, and principal deputy to the Associate Attorney General for the Department of Justice from 2005 to the present.

I also support the nomination of Bobby Ed Shepherd to be a judge for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

He is a candidate with an excellent academic record. He earned his bachelor’s degree, magna cum laude, in 1973 from Ouachita Baptist University, and law degree with high honors from the University of Arkansas in 1976. He had a varied legal practice as a solo practitioner and as a partner with various law firms, most recently Landers & Shepherd. In 1991, Judge Shepherd was elected a circuit-chancery judge for the 13th judicial district for the State of Arkansas. Since 1993 he has served as a United States Magistrate Judge for the United States District Court for the Western District of Arkansas.

Judge Shepherd, like Mr. Gorsuch, has come to this position with unanimous approval. We expect their confirmation on a voice vote later today.

I also support the nomination of Daniel Porter Jordan III to be a judge for the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi.

He received a bachelor’s degree from the University of Mississippi in 1987 and a law degree from the University of Virginia Law School in 1993. He was a legislative assistant to Senator Trent Lott. He was an associate of the law firm of Butler, Snow from 1993 to 1999 and has been an equity member, equivalent to a partner, since 2000.

Again, Mr. Jordan has, I believe, unanimous support. We expect him to be confirmed later this evening on a voice vote.

I also support the nomination of Gustavo Antonio Gelpi to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Puerto Rico. Mr. Gelpi has a bachelor’s degree from Brandeis University and a law degree from Suffolk University Law School. He was a law clerk to Federal Judge Juan Perez-Gimenez and later served in the Office of the Federal Public Defender, before joining the Puerto Rican Department of Justice. At that Department he served as an assistant to the Attorney General of Puerto Rico before becoming Deputy Attorney General for the Puerto Rican Office of Legal Counsel.

I ask unanimous consent the complete resumes of these distinguished nominees be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEIL M. GORSUCH

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

Birth: Aug. 29, 1967, Denver, Colorado

Legal Residence: Virginia

Neil M. Gorsuch was nominated by President Bush to be a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit on May 10, 2006. A hearing was held on his nomination on June 21, 2006. He was reported out of the Committee by a vote of 8–0.

Mr. Gorsuch received his B.A. from Columbia University in 1988, where he graduated with high honors. In 1993, he received his J.D. from Harvard Law School, again graduating with honors. In 2004, he received a doctorate in legal philosophy from Oxford University.

Mr. Gorsuch has had a brilliant career as a lawyer and scholar. Following law school he served as a law clerk to Judge David B. Sentelle of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

He then had the rare distinction of clerking for two Supreme Court justices. Between 1998 and 1999, he served as a law clerk to Justices Byron White and Anthony Kennedy. Mr. Gorsuch’s work with Justice White occurred just after the justice retired from the Supreme Court, so he served the former justice with his work on the Tenth Circuit, where he sat by designation.

In 1995, Mr. Gorsuch joined the law firm of Kellogg, Huber, Hansen, Todd, Evans & Figel, PLLC, where he served as an associate until 1997 and as partner from 1998 to 2005. At Kellogg, he handled a wide range of commercial matters, including contracts, antitrust, RICO, and securities fraud.

Since June 2005, Mr. Gorsuch has served as Principal Deputy to the Associate Attorney General, Robert McCallum. The Associate Attorney General, of course, is the third ranking officer in the Department of Justice. As Principal Deputy, Mr. Gorsuch assists in managing the Department’s civil litigation components which include the Antitrust, Civil, Civil Rights, Environment, and Tax Divisions.

Mr. Gorsuch has received a unanimous “Well Qualified” rating from the American Bar Association.

BOBBY ED SHEPHERD

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT

Birth: November 18, 1961, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

Legal Residence: Arkansas.

Education: B.A., magna cum laude, 1973, Ouachita Baptist University; J.D., with high honors, 1975, University of Arkansas School of Law.

Selected Activities: Director, Boys and Girls Club of El Dorado, 1985–present; Member, Arkansas Bar Association; Member, Congressional Record — Senate July 20, 2006
Mr. Jordan has been very involved with the Mississippi Bar Association, including serving as a member of the Board of Directors and both Secretary and Treasurer of the Litigation Section.

Mr. Jordan has been active in pro bono activities and was awarded the Hinds County Bar Association Pro Bono Award in 2005.

Mr. Jordan was “Well Qualified” by the American Bar Association.

GUSTAVO ANTONIO GELPI
U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF PUERTO RICO

2001-2001, present, United States District Court, District of Puerto Rico, United States Magistrate Judge.

Judge Gelpi was nominated by President Bush to be a Judge on the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico on April 24, 2006. He received a hearing on June 15. He was reported by Committee on July 13, 2006 by a voice vote.

Judge Gelpi graduated from Brandeis University in 1987, and received his J.D. from the Suffolk University in 1991.

In 1991, Judge Shepherd was elected as a Circuit Court Judge in Arkansas’ 13th Judicial District. In that capacity he presided in over 30 major felony jury trials including capital murder cases.

Since 2000, Mr. Jordan has been a distinguished legal career and will bring significant legal experience to the Federal bench. Prior to attending law school, Mr. Jordan was a Legislative assistant for Senator Trent Lott. Following law school he has joined Butler, Snow, O’Mara, Stevens & Cannada as an Associate. Since 2000, Mr. Jordan has been an Equity Member of the firm, focusing on products liability and commercial cases. Most recently, he has gained significant experience mediating cases.

Since 1993, Judge Shepherd has served as a Circuit Court judge and former Arkansas State circuit-chancery judge. In 1991, Judge Shepherd was elected as a judge of the Circuit Court on May 18, 2006. He received a hearing on Judge Bobby E. Shepherd to be a Judge on the U.S. District Court for the District of Puerto Rico. The American Bar Association has unanimously recommended Judge Shepherd to be a Judge on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, and Gustavo A. Gelpi, who has been nominated to be a Judge on the U.S. District Court for the District of Puerto Rico. I have heard plaudits from around the country for Judge Gelpi.

When they are confirmed, Judge Shepherd and Mr. Gelpi will be the fifth and sixth circuit court nominees confirmed this year. Along with Judge Gelpi and Mr. Jordan, we will have confirmed a total of 17 judges this year and we have already surpassed the total number of judges confirmed in the 1996 congressional session, when Republicans controlled the Senate and stalled the nominations of President Clinton in an election year. In the 1996 session, Republicans would have blocked a single Circuit Court judge, compared to six already this year. All 17 confirmations in 1996 were district court nominees. That is the only session I can remember in which the Senate refused to consider a single appellate court nomination. That was part of their pocket filibuster strategy to stall and maintain vacancies in an election year with the hope that a Republican President could pack the courts and tilt them decidedly to the right. In the important DC Circuit, the confirmation of Brett Kavanaugh was the culmination of the Republicans’ decade-long attempt to pack the DC Circuit that began with the stalling of Merrick Garland’s nomination in 1997.

President Clinton’s other well-qualified nominees, Elena Kagan and Allen Snyd́er.

The 28 judicial nominations confirmed this year by the Republican-controlled Senate surpasses the number of judges confirmed last year. 22. During the 17 months I was chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the Senate was under Democratic control, we confirmed 100 of President Bush’s nominees. After the last 2 years under Republican control, the Senate will have confirmed 50. So the fact that the Senate has now confirmed more nominees in the past 5½ years, 255, than in the last 5½ years of the Clinton administration is due in no small part to the much faster pace of confirmations of this President’s nominees when Democrats controlled the Senate. I am pleased that the Republican leadership has scheduled the confirmation and consideration of these nominations and am glad that the Republican leadership is taking notice of the fact that we can cooperate on swift consideration and confirmation of nominations. Working together, we can confirm four judges today. I commend the Republican Senate leadership for passing over the controversial nominations of William G. Myers III, Terrence W. Boyle, and Norman Randy Smith. The Republican leadership is right to focus on judicial nominations rather than focus on filling vacancies. Judicial vacancies have now grown to well over 40 from the lowest vacancy rate in decades. More than half these vacancies are without a nominee. The Congressional Research Service has recently released a study showing that this President has been the slowest in decades to nominate and the Republican Senate among the slowest to act. If they would concentrate on the needs of the courts, our Federal justice system, and the needs of the American people, we would be much further along.

I congratulate the nominees on their confirmations today and hope that they will prove to be the kind of jurists that the American people understand the central role of the courts as a check and balance to protect the rights of all Americans.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to rise in support of Neil M. Gorsuch. Mr. Bush’s nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. Mr. Gorsuch is an extraordinarily well qualified nominee. I begin by thanking Chairman SPECTER for swiftly and unanimously reporting this nominee out of committee. I also thank Majority Leader Frist for bringing this nomination to the floor for timely consideration.

As a fifth-generation Coloradan, I am pleased that President Bush chose a nominee who speaks Colorado’s own Byron White. Following his prestigious clerkships, Mr. Gorsuch entered private practice. While in private practice, Mr. Gorsuch litigated matters for clients large and small, ranging from individuals to nonprofits to corporations. Moreover, he litigated complex contract disputes to complex antitrust and securities fraud matters. He left private practice in 2005 to return to public service, this time at the U.S. Department of Justice where he currently serves as Principal Deputy to the Associate Attorney General.

Looking collectively at his career, the picture of an appellate judge in training emerges. Mr. Gorsuch has served in all three branches of Government, including the highest levels of the judicial and executive branches. He has represented both plaintiffs and defendants. He has represented both individuals and corporations. He has litigated civil cases and criminal cases. He has argued before Federal and State courts. In sum, the breadth and depth of Mr. Gorsuch’s experience makes him ideally suited to serve on the Federal appellate bench.

While Mr. Gorsuch is highly qualified, I would support judicial nominees who would rule on the law and the facts before them, not judges who would legislate from the bench. My support for Mr. Gorsuch today is consistent with that promise. From my conversations with Mr. Gorsuch, I am certain he recognizes the proper role of the judiciary. The role of the judiciary is to interpret the law, not make the law. I believe Mr. Gorsuch is temperamentally and intellectually inclined to stick to the facts and the law in cases that would come before him and that he would refrain from legislating from the bench.

Moreover, Mr. Gorsuch’s personal views would not determine the course of cases before him. Mr. Gorsuch himself says:

Personal politics or policy preferences have no useful role in judging; regular and healthy doses of self-skepticism and humility about one’s only abilities and conclusions always do.

I believe this statement also speaks to Mr. Gorsuch as a person. He is humble, unassuming, polite, and respectful. This sentiment is reflected in numerous letters pouring into my office from people who have worked with him over the years. Mr. Gorsuch possesses the temperament befitting an appellate judge.

In conclusion, Mr. Gorsuch is a top-flight nominee whom I am proud to introduce to my colleagues today. I urge my colleagues to support his confirmation.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, I am pleased to speak today in support of the nomination of Neil Gorsuch to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals.

At a time when too many judicial nominations are bogged down by partisan and ideological rancor, it is heartening to see a nominee on whom Senators from both parties can agree.

While Mr. Gorsuch has spent the majority of his professional life in Washington D.C., his roots in the state of Colorado are strong—going back four generations. Once confirmed, he will return to Colorado where I hope that he will live up to the standard set by a long line of distinguished jurists from our State, including the late Justice Byron White.

At the young age of 38, Mr. Gorsuch has already had an impressive legal career. After earning degrees from Columbia University, Harvard Law School, and Oxford University, he went on to clerk on the DC Circuit and U.S. Supreme Courts.

Following his clerkships, he spent nearly 10 years in private practice before becoming Principal Deputy to the Associate Attorney General of the United States—where he helps manage the Department’s civil litigation.

I have had the chance to visit with Mr. Gorsuch and learn about both his personal background and his professional experience. I found him to be intelligent, thoughtful, and receptive of the great honor it is to be nominated to the Federal bench. It is no surprise, then, that the ABA rated him unanimously well qualified.

Of course, it takes more than a great resume to be a great judge. In addition to professional excellence as a lawyer, a judicial nominee should have a demonstrated dedication to fairness, impartiality, precedent, and the avoidance of judicial activism—from both the left and the right.

I believe that Mr. Gorsuch meets this very high test—and I believe he will make a fine addition to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise in support of a very fine person whom President Bush has nominated to be on the Eighth Circuit in the State of Arkansas. His name is Bobby Shepherd. He will replace a very outstanding circuit court judge named Morris Arnold who is taking senior status. Judge Arnold has become a legal institution in the State of Arkansas and on the Eighth Circuit and in the Federal court system. He has absolutely done a fantastic job during his legal career serving his country. He has decided to take senior status. President Bush has selected Bobby Shepherd to replace him on the Eighth Circuit. Judge Shepherd has been a U.S. magistrate in the District Court for the Western District of Arkansas for almost 13 years. One cannot say what Judge Shepherd is, even though I practiced law in Arkansas for almost 13 years. One cannot say what Judge Shepherd is, even though I practiced law in Arkansas for almost 13 years.
great quality for a trial court judge and a Federal magistrate to try to unblock the court system by finding a resolution before you have to go to the expense and the time and the judicial resources of going to trial.

Prior to becoming a magistrate, he was an elected circuit court judge which is a trial court judge in Arkansas. He served there admirably. He practiced law in private practice for 14 years. He is a University of Arkansas School of Law graduate, and received high honors at the university. He went to college at Ouachita Baptist University, and served our Nation in the U.S. Army Reserve. He is a director of the Boys and Girls Club of El Dorado, AR, and has volunteered through the boys clubs and other organizations for over 20 years in that community. He also happens to be a deacon and trustee of the First Baptist Church in his hometown of El Dorado.

I thank my colleagues, especially Senator SPECTER and LEAHY, for their decision to move this nomination swiftly, and also Senator HATCH who chaired the confirmation hearing and did an outstanding job through that process. Senator LINCOLN and I were able to place Mr. Shepherd here to introduce him.

President Bush made a rare find in nominating Judge Shepherd. He has totally avoided controversy. But one thing about him is, when Judge Arnold announced he was going to take senior status, very quickly a consensus grew around this Federal magistrate down in El Dorado, AR. Democrats and Republicans support him; Independents and Libertarians support him. People in his community, people outside his community, lawyers of all stripes, whether they are plaintiffs lawyers, defense lawyers, criminal defense lawyers, prosecutors, unanimously people think he is the right person to be on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Judge Shepherd is well regarded as a fair and studious judge. Around the State I have heard nothing but praise from my colleagues in the legal community of this decision by President Bush. In fact, the American Bar Association rated him unanimously well qualified.

When I look at judges, whether they are from Arkansas or other places, I have three criteria: First, are they qualified; second, do they have the proper temperament; and third, do they have the ability to be fair and impartial.

He passes all three tests with flying colors. He is eminently qualified. He has proven beyond any doubt that he has the right temperament, and he has proven to all who have ever seen him in action or been before him that he is fair and impartial. I am confident that Judge Shepherd will bring these qualities and many more to the Eighth Circuit. I am wholeheartedly endorsing this nomination and am proud to be part of this nomination process, and I am certainly proud to give him my vote.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Judge Bobby Shepherd to become the next member of the United States 8th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Based on my review of the record, my visit to the community of Daniel Jordan, and feedback I have received from members of the Arkansas legal community who know Judge Shepherd well, I believe he is qualified to serve in this position, and I support his nomination.

Judge Bobby Shepherd was born in Arkadelphia, AR. After high school, Bobby graduated magna cum laude from Ouachita Baptist University in 1973. He then continued his education by earning a law degree from the University of Arkansas, graduating with high honors.

After law school, Judge Shepherd began his professional career as an attorney in private practice at Spencer & Spencer law firm in El Dorado. From 1984 to 1987, he worked as a solo practitioner. In 1987, he joined the faculty at the University of Arkansas, where he was appointed as a Circuit-Chancery judge for the 13th District of Arkansas until his appointment as a Magistrate Judge for the Western District of Arkansas in 1993.

Throughout Judge Shepherd's nomination process numerous Arkansans from all walks of life have contacted me urging me to support Judge Shepherd. Some of these people had been advocates in Judge Shepherd's courtroom and others simply consider him a friend and a person who has helped themselves and others. To a person, they all found Judge Shepherd to be a man of honor, respected by his peers and in his community.

In closing, I thank Chairman SPECTER and Senator LEAHY for supporting Judge Shepherd and me in moving his nomination forward. I appreciate their consideration of this nominee and urge every Member of the Senate to support his confirmation.

Mr. President, I am pleased to recommend to the Senate the confirmation of David P. Jordan as U.S. district judge for the Southern District of Mississippi.

His education, experience, and good moral character equip him with the qualifications to serve with distinction on the Federal bench. I have known Dan Jordan's parents since we were classmates at the University of Mississippi, and I have had the opportunity to see his development and achievements over the years. He had remarkable success as a student and was a gifted athlete at his high school in Richmond, VA, where his father was a professor of history and chief executive of the foundation that maintains Thomas Jefferson's famous house and serves as a center for research as well as programs relating to early American history and public service.

Dan Jordan has earned a reputation for integrity and excellence as a lawyer in my State. He is widely respected for his sense of fair play and his keen intelligence. He is highly regarded by the lawyers in our State and was elected chairman of the Young Lawyers' Section of the Mississippi State Bar. He is a partner in one of the largest and most prestigious law firms in Mississippi.

I am confident he will serve with distinction and reflect great credit on the Federal judiciary. I urge the Senate to confirm him.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to speak in support of the nomination of Daniel Jordan. I am glad that the President agreed with my high opinion of Dan and nominated him to the U.S. District Court for Southern Mississippi. In Mississippi, Dan's nomination has received broad bipartisan support and praise. He is a well-respected litigator, and even those who have sometimes opposed him in the courtroom feel he is an excellent choice to serve in the Federal judiciary.

Dan comes from a wonderful family that I have known for a long time. I know that they must be extremely proud of him and all that he has accomplished. I, too, have enjoyed watching him develop into an outstanding father, lawyer, and a respected Mississippi lawyer.

Dan is a cum laude graduate in economics from University of Mississippi, where he was inducted into the University's Hall of Fame. In 1993, he received his J.D. from the University of Virginia. Dan served as a law clerk with the editorial board of the Journal of Law and Politics. He is currently engaged in the general practice of law as a partner with Butler, Snow, O'Mara, Stevens & Cannada—the largest law firm based in Mississippi.

In his private practice, Dan has gained broad experience and demonstrated the knowledge, professionalism, fairness, temperament, and skill that make him ideally suited for the Federal bench. I am proud of him and all that he has accomplished. I, too, have enjoyed watching him develop into an outstanding father, lawyer, and a respected Mississippi jurist serving as a Circuit Court judge for the Board of Bar Admissions. He serves on the Executive Committee of the Mississippi Bar’s General Litigation practice group. Dan is a past-president of the Jackson Young Lawyers Association. He served on the Hinds County Bar Association Board of Directors, the Mississippi Young Lawyers Board of Directors, as liaison to the Bench and Bar Relations Committee of the Hinds County Bar Association and as a special prosecutor for the Board of Bar Examiners.

With Federal judicial nominations, it is important that we recognize the honorable service of those who choose to leave private practice to serve. However, Dan's service is not surprising. He has a history of public service. Before attending law school, Dan gained experience while working for the U.S. Department of Interior and later as a legislative aide on my Senate staff.

I am pleased to report that I am a proud son of Mississippi and entering private practice, he has continued to find time to serve his community and profession in many ways. He has served as the coordinator for the Jackson, MS-based Stewpot Legal Clinic—an organization providing legal assistance to the homeless. He has worked with Habitat for Humanity and served as a committee chairman for the Metropolitan Crime Commission. His tireless work has prompted leaders in the Jackson, MS, philanthropic community to laud his efforts and impact.

He has been named one of Mississippi’s Top 40 under 40 by the Mississippi Business Journal and honored as Jackson’s Finest by the Mississippi M-S (Multiple Sclerosis) Foundation. He is an active member of Christ United Methodist Church in Jackson, MS, and is a loving husband and father of two.

The President’s nomination of Dan Jordan comes as no surprise, given his education, experience, reputation, and temperament. I believe that when confirmed, Dan will excel as a fair, honest, measured, and capable judge. I am proud to have the opportunity to voice my full support for Dan’s nomination, and I look forward to his confirmation.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I yield back all time on the judge nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nominations, en bloc?

The nominations were confirmed, en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President shall be immediately notified of the Senate’s action.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the adjournment of the Senate without objection, it is so ordered.

AMERICANS IN LEBANON

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, earlier this week I spoke about the fact that there would be tremendous hardship on people who are currently in Lebanon without proper citizenship leaving in the midst of a war zone. The stated policy, earlier this week, was to require people to pay a fee to leave, and I am appreciative of the fact that, after speaking out and after introducing a bill that, in fact, would allow them to waive the fee. In fact, the Secretary of State has done that.

I appreciate the fact that they are proceeding with that and the fact that people are now beginning to move from the region. I urge that that continue to happen as quickly as possible. We have many innocent people in harm’s way. We need to remember that and do everything we possibly can to protect them.

MIDDLE EAST CRISIS

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to speak briefly about the situation with Hamas attacking Israel from the south, the Hezbollah attacking Israel from the north, and the actions of Israel in defending herself in accordance with international law under article 51 of the United Nations charter.

The action against Israel from the south was provoked by Hamas and the Palestinian Authority with the kidnapping of an Israeli soldier and the firing of rockets into southern Israel. The action against Israel from the north was provoked by Hezbollah firing rockets into northern Israel. Regrettably, the conflict has escalated but the parties responsible for the conflict are Hamas to the south and Hezbollah to the north.

The action of Hezbollah comes as a surrogate for Syria and from Iran. An Israeli ship was struck by an Iranian missile in conjunction with other circumstantial evidence of Iran having so-called advisers in Lebanon. There is strong reason to believe that the rocket was fired by Iran—not conclusive, but strong reason to believe. If so, it is an act of war.

The United Nations ought to call Iran and Syria on the carpet to explain their conduct in backing Hezbollah, in providing personnel to do more than train Hezbollah, more than advisers being integral parts of the military offensive of Hezbollah.

The Israelis living in northern Israel have come to accept Hezbollah having a knife at their throat. With so many rockets poised on the southern Lebanese border and with a provocation of Hezbollah, it certainly warrants the action which has been taken by Israel on the premises.

It is regrettable that there have been civilian casualties, but I do believe that Israel has made every reasonable and realistic effort to minimize such casualties. There is inevitably collateral damage. Not infrequently, we hear of casualties when the international community ought to call Iran and Syria to task for their provocative acts for using Hezbollah as a surrogate.

In the context of what has happened, I think President Bush was entirely correct in his statements that Israel had a right to defend itself against Hezbollah in the north and a right to defend against Hamas in the south.

Mr. President, I speak today about the recent unprovoked and coordinated attacks launched on Israeli citizens by Hezbollah in Lebanon and Hamas in Gaza. These provocative attacks are further highlighting the role both Iran and Syria play in supporting Hezbollah. Israel is now forced to fight a defensive war on two fronts as Hezbollah terrorists and Palestinian militants are committing countless acts of aggression towards Israel.

I think President Bush was entirely correct in his statements that Israel had a right to defend itself against Hezbollah in the north and a right to defend against Hamas in the south.

These provocative attacks are further highlighting the role both Iran and Syria play in supporting Hezbollah. that country. Additionally, Egypt and Jordan urged Syria to use its influence with Hamas to win Shalit’s release. With no soldier and no prospect of his release, Israel continued its offensive, arresting 60 Palestinian officials and launching missiles at Gaza, seeking to prevent movement of Shalit, on weapon storage sites, and on Gaza’s central power station. Hamas continued to launch Kassam missiles into Israel targeting civilian population centers; and Palestinian militants sought to impede Israel’s actions in Gaza, but they thought these sacrifices were necessary for a lasting peace. The Israelis demonstrated remarkable restraint in the face of these attacks from Hamas, seeking to prevent the kidnapping of Corporal Shalit. But, when it became clear that Hamas did not share Israel’s desire for peace, they had no choice to respond with force.

Then on July 12th, Hezbollah killed eight Israelis and captured two more from within Israel, near the border with Lebanon. Hezbollah leader Sheikh Hassan Nasrallah said that this was not in response to Israel’s recent air strikes in Gaza, but was something they had wanted to do for “over a year”. Hezbollah’s killing of eight Israeli soldiers and the kidnapping of two others represents an unprovoked act of war against Israel. Israel fully withdrew from southern Lebanon in May 2000. This peaceful step by Israel was certified by the U.N. Security Council as having met the requirements of U.N. Security Council Resolution 425, which called for an Israeli withdrawal and for Lebanon to assert control over parties that border Israel. By withdrawing, Israel rightly opposes any prisoner exchange with Hamas or Hezbollah. Israel cannot send the message that it will release hundreds of prisoners each time Hamas and Hezbollah capture an Israeli, soldier or civilian. That would only encourage more kidnappings, and increase the power of Hamas and Hezbollah resulting in greater instability to the region and undermining the peace process.

Following Hezbollah’s kidnapping, its firing of Katyusha rockets into northern Israel and demand for a prisoner swap, Israel responded with military force directed at Hezbollah’s infrastructure in Lebanon, accurately calling Hezbollah’s actions an act of war. Israel struck Beirut’s airport to prevent the removal of the Israeli soldiers and to disrupt military supplies, struck Hezbollah’s television station, and struck numerous roads, bridges and Hezbollah quarters to disrupt communications. Responding to increased and deeper rocket attacks, which for the first time reached far enough into Israel to strike Haifa, 20 miles over the border. These far reaching missiles appear to be built by the Iranians and pose an extreme threat that Israel has not previously faced with Hezbollah. In 2004, the United Nations passed a resolution calling for Hezbollah to be disarmed. Not only has no serious effort been undertaken to disarm them, but rouge regimes continue to supply them with new weapons, training, and other support. The world should unite in its outrage at this act of aggression, seek to discourage its allies and unite behind Israel and the forces of peace to bring a swift end to this conflict and to press for the safe return of Israel’s soldiers and the enforcement of the UN resolution.

It is worth noting that while Israel has responded with strong force in its attempts to rescue its soldiers and root out the terrorist networks on its borders, it has made great efforts to minimize civilian casualties. Israel regularly drops pamphlets to warn civilians of upcoming actions and attempts to secure meaningful intelligence so that its strikes are targeted on the people and places involved in terrorist activities. These are courtesies that the Hamas and Hezbollah do not extend.

As we all now know, these actions of Hezbollah and Hamas can be seen as an extension of aggression from Iran and Syria. Iranian president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad has publicly stated his desire to “wipe Israel off the face of the map.” The Iranians have helped Hezbollah launch hundreds of missiles into Israel and have provided Hezbollah $100 million annually. Syria provides the home, safe haven and command center to Hamas leader, Khaled Mashal, and it continues to sponsor acts of terrorism. The timing of these attacks served to destabilize negotiations between the Hamas and Fatah Palestinian parties, derailing progress in the peace process. The events also distract the international community from Iran’s nuclear ambitions at a time of heightened pressure on the Iranian government to curtail its program.

I support the President’s statement that calls for an unconditional release of the captured soldiers, and holds Syria and Iran accountable for Hezbollah’s actions but I encourage him to do more. There is opportunity for hope in this crisis. Many Palestinians and Lebanese citizens do not support the aggressive actions taken by Hezbollah or Hamas’ military wing. The international community must support the Lebanese government and the Palestinian Authority in representing these moderate citizens who seek peace and security for their children and families. Now is the time for the forces of peace and moderation in Lebanon to not only aspire for peace but take action to stop Hamas and Hezbollah from pulling their people into deeper conflict. If terrorists attack Israel, Israel and capture Israeli soldiers, Israel is left with no other choice but to defend its people and its borders.

regarding our Nation’s aging infrastructure and for allowing this body to discuss the merits of Corps of Engineers reform.

As you know, I supported allowing this bill to come to the Senate floor for consideration. Now that the Senate has been given a water resources authorization bill since 2000, and particularly in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, this debate is long overdue. While many attempted to derail consideration of this debate, I did not believe that we must have this discussion in the open.

That being said, I have deep concerns regarding the legislation that is before us today. Specifically, I am concerned that we are missing a historic opportunity to incorporate the many lessons learned since the last WRDA bill passed in 2000. Consider the following developments that highlight the critical need for reform of the Corps of Engineers:

The Government Accountability Office (GAO) reported in March 2006 that “the cost benefit analyses performed by the Corps to support decisions on Civil Works projects, were generally inadequate to provide a reasonable basis for deciding whether to proceed with the project.” GAO–06–529T—Corps of Engineers: Observations on Planning and Project Management Processes for the Civil Works Program (March 15, 2006).

In remarking on the fact that the Corps re-programmed over $2.1 billion through 7,000 reprogramming actions in fiscal years 2003 and 2004, the GAO noted that the Corps’ practice was often “not necessary” and is “reflect[ive] of poor planning and an absence of Corps management of its construction priorities.” GAO–06–529T—Corps of Engineers: Observations on Planning and Project Management Processes for the Civil Works Program (March 15, 2006).

In a report to Congress in 2003 regarding the Sacramento flood protection project, the GAO found that the Corps used “an inappropriate methodology to calculate the value of protected properties” and failed to properly report expected cost increases. Consider the projected costs for the three primary Sacramento levees to be $38 billion. In 2002, the GAO noted that the Corps’ practice was often “not necessary” and is “reflect[ive] of poor planning and an absence of Corps management of its construction priorities.” GAO–06–529T—Corps of Engineers: Observations on Planning and Project Management Processes for the Civil Works Program (March 15, 2006).

Thanks to a Corps whistleblower and a subsequent investigation by the Army inspector general, we know that the Corps “manipulated the economic analyses of the feasibility study being conducted on the Upper Missouri Breaks expansion project in order to steer the study to a specific outcome.” Furthermore, the investigation revealed that a Corps official knowingly directed that “mathematically flawed” data be used to justify the project. High-ranking Corps officials also were criticized for giving “preferential treatment to the barge industry.”

Second, in our efforts to improve this important process, Congress must consider ways to bring greater oversight to the Corps. The many instances of wrongdoing and project justification process make clear that we must do better. With billions of dollars at stake and often thousands of lives hanging in the balance, we simply cannot allow for manipulation and undue influence in the justification study process.

I am pleased to see the efforts of Senators McCaIN and Feingold in addressing this void. The Corps has proven itself incapable of mending these problems on its own, and nowhere is this more apparent than in the project justification process. It is imperative that outside experts, with no vested interest in the outcomes of the Corps’ proposals, be allowed to review these types of Corps studies. While I may have designed the amendment in a slightly different manner, I look forward to supporting the McCaIN–Feingold amendment. For a truly independent and time-sensitive review by a panel of experts. At the end of the day, Congress still makes the final decision on which projects to fund, and in no way will this amendment impact our constitutional obligations or slow project construction. We can still fund wasteful and inefficient spending if we so desire. If we pass this amendment, at least we will ensure that the studies we cite are accurate.

I am grateful to my colleagues for the countless hours they have spent in putting this bill together. I know the road that led to this debate today was not an easy one, and it has been a long and difficult journey. As we embark on this debate and in our legitimate desire to pass this legislation, however, we must not overlook the critical need for Corps reform. The many lessons we have learned since WRDA 2000 are as numerous as they are pressing. The Corps is challenging to oversee, and many dedicated and hard-working Americans, many of whom are in my State. The agency itself, however, is ailing and demands our attention. If the Corps is to continue to meet the mandate it has been given and serve the needs of the American taxpayer, we must not move forward without the incorporation of new oversight and transparency.

America’s waterways and flood control projects have a vital role in protecting our communities and in spurring agricultural and industrial commerce. Unless we can reform the Corps, though, their impact will increasingly diminish. As it stands today, the Corps is not accountable to Congress, and ultimately, it is not accountable to the American taxpayer. We have a historic opportunity to change this environment, and we must seize it.
and put it inside New Orleans and Jefferson Parish.”

In the same year that Betsy inundated the city, Congress authorized a hurricane protection project to protect the city. That project was supposed to take 15 years, $785 million, and, according to the Army Corps, would protect greater New Orleans from the equivalent of a fast-moving category 3 hurricane.

In the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee’s investigation into the preparation for and response to Hurricane Katrina, our committee learned that that project was still a decade or more away from completion—close to 50 years after this body authorized its construction—and the total cost of the project had ballooned to more than $750 million. In addition, the project did not provide the level of protection for New Orleans and the region that it was expected to provide.

There were many reasons for the delay, including natural ones such as the subsidence of the land in southeastern Louisiana. Building levees in this part of the country required the Army Corps to return time and time again to local levee boards to revise the levees, known as lifts, to accommodate for the sinking soils.

But there were also manmade reasons for the delay, such as the absence of Federal funding. In recent years, local Army Corps officials have had to scramble to move these Louisiana hurricane protection projects forward. Local Army Corps officials had to urge local levee boards to contact their congressional delegation to ask for financial help to restore levees to their original design height, and on two recent occasions, the Army Corps had to rely on the local levee districts, which share in the cost of these projects, to advance them money so they could continue construction of segments of the hurricane protection system.

As the Corps of Engineers’ own Interagency Performance Evaluation Taskforce, or IPET, investigators observed, if one part of the levee system comes up short, it can compromise the entire protection system. Yet this levee system, which was supposed to be protecting one of America’s most vulnerable cities, was never finished, and as a result, when Katrina hit last August, dire consequences ensued.

We learned from Katrina that there is a need to focus limited Federal resources on finishing flood control projects that are critical to our Nation’s health, safety, and welfare. The Army Corps’ current process to do this is inadequate. As the GAO testified before the House in March, “The Corps’ planning and project management processes cannot ensure that national priorities are appropriately established across the hundreds of civil works projects that are competing for scarce federal resources.”

The McCain-Fedngold amendment on prioritization, which I am proud to co-sponsor, will address this problem by requiring the Water Resources Planning Coordinating Committee, which the underlying WRDA Bill already establishes for other purposes to evaluate the importance of Corps projects in three different categories—storm damage reduction, navigation projects, and environmental restoration projects. The amendment also requires the committee to rank projects in each category so that Congress, and the Corps itself, can determine what projects should be pursued and most worthy of funding. The Coordinating Committee will then submit its report to Congress and make the report available to the public.

With that information, Congress can make better decisions about how to spend scarce Federal resources on critical infrastructure projects across the country. We have to learn from Katrina and we should never again allow a project that is so critical to the very livelihood of so many to languish because we did not give it the priority it deserved.

I know many of my colleagues are concerned that this amendment will remove authority from individual Members of Congress to direct the Army Corps on how to spend dollars. I understand that concern, but the reality is that the Corps has more work to do than funding to do it. This WRDA bill will add another $10 to $12 billion in Army Corps projects on top of the estimated $58 billion in backlogged Army Corps projects that are authorized but not yet funded. Without some system of prioritizing projects, as this amendment would require, we run the risk of another Katrina-like situation where critical projects are not given the priority they deserve. On the other hand, by requiring the Corps to prioritize projects in each category—flood control, navigation, and environmental restoration—we can ensure that there is a balance among the types of projects funded and that the most important and cost-effective projects in each category get the attention they deserve.

Water resources projects are important to each and every State, but we need to heed the lessons of Katrina and make sure that we spend our tax dollars where they are most needed.

I urge my colleagues to support this critical amendment.

GLOBAL WARMING POLLUTION REDUCTION ACT OF 2006

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to my good friend and colleague Senator JONDROFS, for his hard work and leadership in developing comprehensive legislation that will assist in decreasing U.S. greenhouse gas emissions. I am proud to join him, along with my other colleagues Senators BINGAMAN, BOXER, FLORES-HARRIS, and REED in introducing the Global Warming Pollution Reduction Act of 2006, GWPARA. This bill sets the United States on a path to reducing emissions to 1990 levels by 2020 through a 2 percent annual reduction from 2010 through 2020, as well as achieving by 2050 emissions that are 80 percent below 1990 levels.

The global warming debate began in Hawaii over 30 years ago when the Mauna Loa Climate Observatory first documented evidence of increased carbon dioxide levels in the Earth’s atmosphere. The international scientific community now acknowledges human activities as altering the climate system. The U.S., which is the world’s largest emitter of greenhouse gases, must be accountable as a leader in reducing emissions and combating the threats resulting from global warming.

My home State of Hawaii is disproportionately susceptible to increases in sea level rise and ocean temperature, which jeopardize public safety, economic development, cultural resources, and the health of our unique biological systems and wildlife. It is clear that coastal States will also face similar challenges caused by sea level rise resulting in flooding of low-lying property, loss of coastal wetlands, beach erosion, saltwater contamination, drinking water supplies, and coastal roads and bridges. Climate models forecasting intense storms and severe weather further threaten Hawaii’s capacity to respond to natural disasters and acquire immediate relief from neighboring states. Remote and rural areas are likely to be confronted with similar issues of self-sufficiency and limited access to assistance.

I am very concerned about the impact of fossil fuel emissions on the health of our planet and believe that we must actively seek solutions to curb the buildup of greenhouse gases. This bill sets energy efficiency targets to assist both the industry and energy consumers in meeting these standards. This legislation establishes ambitious goals to minimize U.S. emissions and assist in the stabilization of global atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations.

We must invest in technology research to control greenhouse gas emissions. Encouraging renewable energy technologies will play a crucial role in successfully meeting the objectives of this legislation. Under the guidance provided by this bill, I firmly believe the State of Hawaii, and the rest of the United States, will be poised to substantially reduce greenhouse gas emissions. But Federal support is vital to accomplishing our goals to combat global warming.

I appreciate the technical assistance provided by the Hawaii Natural Energy Institute and the Hawaii Department of Business, Economic Development and Tourism. I remain committed to working with them, other stakeholders in Hawaii, and my colleagues, under the leadership of Senator JONDROFS, to enact this legislation that will improve the health of our planet and the quality of life for all Americans. Senator...
JEFFORDS is a dedicated advocate for environmental protection. With the GWPCA, he leaves a legacy to guide and inspire future generations to actively address the issue of global warming. I encourage my colleagues to join Senator JEFFORDS in supporting this worthy initiative.

THIRTY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE TURKISH INVASION OF CYPRUS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, today, on behalf of the Greek Cypriot population of Rhode Island, and Greek Cypriots around the world, I recognize the 32nd anniversary of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

Shortly before dawn 32 years ago today, heavily armed Turkish troops landed on the northern coast of Cyprus launching the invasion and subsequent occupation of Northern Cyprus. Over the next 2 months, over 200,000 Greek Cypriots, an overwhelming 82 percent of the island’s population, were forced to seek refuge in the southern Greek controlled portions of Cyprus. Turkey even declared a ceasefire after seizing 37 percent of the island. To this day Turkey is the only country that recognizes the self-declared “Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus.”

Over the last 30 years, the United Nations Security Council and General Assembly have striven to resolve this ongoing territorial dispute through multiple failed peace talks and resolutions. While many years and much thought has gone into determining an equally agreeable solution, talks between the Greek Cypriot south and the Turkish Cypriot north constantly end in a stalemate.

However, hope was renewed this month when the United Nations began drafting arrangements on reviving stalled peace talks between this war-divided island’s Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities. Furthermore, Cyprus President Tassos Papadopoulos and Turkish Cypriot leader Mehmet Ali Talat were hailed by the Cyprus Parliament Speaker Demetris Christofias as taking positive steps toward restarting the Cypriot peace talks.

We must applaud the continued efforts of the United Nations and the renewed focus of the Cypriot leaders to reunify Cyprus and committed to ushering the settlement process forward. Cypriot, Mediterranean, and U.S. interests will benefit from a settlement that addresses all legitimate concerns of both sides and promotes the stability of a hostile region.

Much like the Greek proverb, “learn to walk before you run,” Cypriot leaders must take small steady steps forward and continue forward even when the road looks unpaved. There is a path that leads to the reunification and peace between these two communities. Traversing this path, however, will take patience and tolerance.

DM&E RAILROAD LOAN FROM THE FEDERAL RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I have arisen previously to talk about a proposal of the DM&E Railroad to construct its rail line across southern Minnesota in order to run up to 3 unit coal trains, rail cars containing grain and other agricultural products, and possibly shipments of hazardous materials. The DM&E is presently seeking a $2.5 billion low-interest loan from the Federal Railroad Administration for this project. Money initially said would be financed to the private capital markets.

Evidently unable to attract that necessary financing, DM&E has now turned to the American taxpayer to assume the enormous financial risk that such a project entails. If the project were to be successful, the financial benefits would go to DM&E’s executives and investors. If the project were to fail, the losses would be paid by American taxpayers. It is for that reason that I have urged the Administrator of the Federal Railroad Administration and the U.S. Secretary of Transportation, who have the ultimate decision-making power, to exercise all necessary due diligence before their decisions about this enormous financing.

Previously, I have also expressed the strongest possible concern about DM&E’s intention to run this rail line through downtown Rochester, MN, and immediately adjacent to the world-renowned Mayo Clinic. Mayo Clinic and Rochester City officials vehemently oppose DM&E’s intended route and maintain that it would be catastrophic to their clinic and their city. I agree.

The Mayo Clinic is known and respected nationally and worldwide for its medical excellence. Last year, the Mayo Clinic saw over 1,700,000 patients who came from throughout Minnesota, our country, and the world to seek the best possible medical care. The Mayo Clinic is the largest private employer in Minnesota, employing over 28,000 people, including 2,400 physicians.

In addition to the serious financial questions surrounding this project and major environmental concerns across its intended route, new information has just come to light that demonstrates even more conclusively how unacceptable its proposed route through downtown Rochester, MN, and adjacent to the Mayo Clinic would be. According to a report released today by the Mayo Clinic, but using public, factual information, DM&E has one of the very worst safety records in the entire U.S. railroad industry. In fact, last summer, Mr. Kevin Sheiffer, President and CEO of DM&E’s parent company, told DM&E employees, in their newsletter, “We have a very poor safety record.

The report discloses that from 2000 through 2005, the DM&E reported train accidents at a rate 7.5 times higher than the national average; during 2005, the DM&E’s rate of accidents at crossings was 2.3 times higher than the national average; the DM&E had the highest rate of employee fatalities among regional freight railroads in 2004, and was a close second in 2003 and 2006; during the past 10 years, DM&E had 107 accidents involving trains carrying hazardous materials, including a record 16 in 2005; and since 2003, when the Federal Railroad Administration loaned DM&E $233 million, DM&E’s train accident rate has soared to eight times the national rate—a 175 percent increase over its pre-loan rate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the the overview of this report, “The Sum of All Fears: Unsafe Railroad Plus Unsafe Plan Equals Disaster,” and the forwarding letter from the Mayo Clinic to The Honorable Joseph H. Boardman, Administrator of the Federal Railroad Administration, be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, follows:

HON. JOSEPH H. BOARDMAN, Administrator, Federal Railroad Administration, Washington, DC.

DEAR ADMINISTRATOR BOARDMAN: On May 8, 2006, the County of Olmsted, the City of Rochester, Mayo Clinic Rochester Area Chamber of Commerce submitted an independent study by a prestigious accounting firm setting forth detailed reasons why the $2.5 billion loan to the Dakota, Minnesota and Eastern Railroad (DM&E) posed a substantial risk to the American taxpayers that the loan would fail. We believe that documented risk to the taxpayers is reason enough for the loan to be denied.

In addition to the substantial risk of default, the public safety impact of any loan to the DM&E must be considered, especially given the DM&E’s abysmal safety record as outlined in the enclosed analysis. In light of the DM&E’s record as the most unsafe regional railroad in America, granting a $2.5 billion loan to the DM&E would clearly and dramatically increase the public safety risk to the residents of Rochester and the patients and physicians at Mayo Clinic. It would violate the key admonition that the Secretary of Transportation shall give priority to projects that “enhance the public safety,” and undermine the Federal Railroad Administration’s (FRA) statutory obligation to “carry out all railroad safety laws.”

The proposed loan would not enhance the public safety. To the contrary, the proposed loan would fund a project that could have terrible consequences for the residents of Rochester, Minnesota, and the doctors and scientists at Mayo Clinic. Transporting hazardous materials, at high speeds, on one of the country’s most dangerous railroads, is an “accident waiting to happen.” If that accident were to occur in the City of Rochester near Mayo Clinic, then the consequences could be catastrophic.

The project proposed by DM&E are well documented by the FRA itself. Last October, the FRA cited the DM&E for “numerous problems with management and implementation of [its] safety program.” The FRA should carefully consider the safety consequences because granting the proposed loan would simply reinforce the DM&E’s attitude that safety does not matter. We believe that denying the loan would make it clear that safety comes first.
For these reasons (and the reasons set forth in our May 8, 2006 submission), we respectfully submit that the DM&E’s loan request should be denied. We also reiterate our previous request for an opportunity to meet with you to discuss the merits of our submissions.

Sincerely,

Mayor Ardell Brede

THE SUM OF ALL FEARS: UNSAFE RAILROAD PLUS UNSAFE PLAN EQUALS DISASTER
OVERVIEW

The Dakota, Minnesota and Eastern Railroad (DM&E), a regional freight railroad, is seeking a $233 million loan from the United States government, backed by the American taxpayers, for a major expansion that would allow trains to carry coal and other freight, including hazardous materials, through the heart of downtown Rochester—a few hundred feet from Mayo Clinic—at speeds up to 50 miles per hour. The DM&E refuses to limit the number of trains through Rochester and refuses to restrict the type of cargo it carries. The Secretary of Transportation must consider the effects of such a loan on the public safety and a loan should not be granted to the DM&E because it would expose Rochester and Mayo Clinic to the safety risks inherent in the transportation of hazardous materials by a railroad with long-standing safety problems.

The DM&E has one of the worst safety records of all U.S. railroads:
1. From 2000 through 2005, the DM&E reported train accidents at a rate 7.5 times higher than the national average.
2. During 2005, the DM&E’s rate of accidents at crossings was 2.3 times higher than the national average.
3. The DM&E has the second-highest rate of employee casualties among regional freight railroads in 2004 and 2005.
4. During the past 10 years, the DM&E had 107 accidents involving trains carrying hazardous materials, including a record 18 in 2005; and
5. Since 2003, when the Federal Railroad Administration (FRA) loaned DM&E $233 million, the DM&E’s main track accident rate has soared to eight times the national rate—a 75 percent increase over its pre-loan rate.

The U.S. government has repeatedly identified safety problems at the DM&E. In 2002, the DM&E signed an Expedited Consent Agreement with the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) agreeing to pay a civil penalty and correct violations of federal regulations. The FRA placed the DM&E under a Safety Compliance Agreement in October 2005.

The DM&E has claimed that its abysmal safety record is the result of old track, but the FRA has rejected that excuse—most recently in its October 2005 Safety Compliance Agreement. During the past six years, track defects caused only about one-half of the DM&E’s train accidents and track defects had nothing to do with the company’s high rate of accidents at highway-rail crossings or its high rate of employee casualties. New track will not change the company’s cavalier attitude toward safety.

In 2005, the FRA entered into a $233 million loan agreement with the DM&E. Since that time the DM&E’s poor safety record has gotten materially worse. There is simply no reason to believe that lending the DM&E another $2.5 billion would change the result or the company’s approach to safety. Rochester, Minnesota, is home to 40 percent of all the people who live along the DM&E’s proposed expansion route. Rochester is also home to Mayo Clinic, one of the world’s leading medical centers. Many of Mayo’s patient-care facilities are within hundreds of feet of the DM&E’s tracks—at ground level. An accident involving the spill of hazardous materials near Mayo Clinic, with its vulnerable patient population, would be disastrous. The safety risks posed by an unsafe railroad transporting hazardous materials at high speeds near a world-renowned medical center should not be subsidized by the U.S. government. It is wrong for a safety organization like the FRA to reward a company for disregarding the safety of the public and its own employees. The American people would be shocked to learn that the U.S. government is considering giving an unsafe railroad a $2.5 billion loan to a private company in the history of the United States of America.

GLENDALE HIGH SCHOOL REACHING JUNIOR G8 SUMMIT

Mrs. Feinstein. Mr. President, I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate the students of Glendale High School on becoming the U.S. representative at the Junior G8 Summit.

For the first time in 30 years, the annual G8 Summit will include an official exchange between children aged 13 to 17 and G8 leaders. Glendale High School beat out 14 other schools for this once-in-a-lifetime chance to represent the United States at the Summit.

The Junior 8 Youth Forum will provide the participants from all over the world a platform from which they can express their opinions on issues such as infectious diseases, violence, corruption, education, energy, and security. The U.S. team and their international counterparts will meet in order to draft a communiqué which eight of them will present to the G8 leaders.

These students could not have achieved this remarkable accomplishment without tremendous support from their dedicated teachers and parents.

I would also recognize team members Sherise Shimabuku, Keoni Mawae, Gillian Platt, Tiare Pimental, Shersie Shimabuku, Zeyuna Tabernero, Jenna Takushi, Kamia Klasik and Lavacacia ‘Aneila’ Winn.

I am proud not only of the impressive achievements but also of the humility and sportsmanship that the team displayed. The team represented the State of Hawaii very well.

I recognize the sacrifices many family members and friends made to support the team. These young men and women would not have been able to enjoy the athletic competitions if it were not for the moral and financial support of their families and community. I applaud these efforts and wish all the players and their families the best in their future endeavors. Finally, I recognize the hard work and dedication of the participants and coaches.

I ask to have printed in the Record the team’s roster as reported by The Maui News.

The material follows.

Glendale High School Junior G8 team should be commended for their efforts and stand as an inspiration to us all.

Once again, I would like to honor the entire Glendale High School Junior G8 Team on a well-deserved victory. Each of these students holds wonderful promises and I applaud their many achievements. Their futures are bright, and their performance will continue to serve as a model for those who follow in their footsteps.

CONGRATULATING BALDWIN HIGH SCHOOL CHEERLEADERS

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Baldwin High School cheerleading team, from Wailuku, Maui, HI, who on March 25, 2006, won a national title at the National Cheerleaders Association U.S. Championship.

The Baldwin cheerleaders placed first in the small varsity coed division against teams from the Western United States Radford High School, also from the State of Hawaii, was the second place team to Baldwin High School. The Baldwin cheerleaders were then named grand champions for placing highest in the most divisions, beating out 141 other participating teams.

Tribute to Kathy A. Ruffing

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I take a moment to recognize someone who has provided invaluable assistance to the Budget Committee for many years.

After 25 years of service at the Congressional Budget Office, or CBO, as we call it, Kathy A. Ruffing will be retiring at the end of this month.

During her tenure at CBO, Ms. Ruffing earned a well-deserved reputation for providing high-quality analyses on a wide range of topics including interest costs and the Federal debt, Federal pay, immigration, and Social Security. In particular, Members and their staffs came to de- pend on Kathy’s thorough knowledge of the Social Security Program as they developed proposals for addressing the program’s financial status and benefit structure. She also made major con- tributions to CBO’s reports on the economic and budget outlook and the re- estimates of the President’s budget. Her analyses always displayed those characteristics of CBO’s reports that we in the Congress most value—impar- tiality, clarity, and comprehensiveness. In fact, Kathy was a principal ar- chitect of the formats of many tables on which the Budget Committee has come to rely so heavily.

The Congress will feel the loss of a dedicated public servant who selflessly worked extraordinary hours in helping us advance the legislative process. We will miss Kathy’s expertise and coun- sel.

I know that I speak for all of the Members who have served on the Budget Committees of the House and Senate, during the past 25 years and all of our staff when I express our gratitude to Kathy for all of her contributions to the legislative process.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memo- rials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-393. A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Florida relative to urging Congress to support a National Catastrophe Insurance Program; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

House Memorials No. 541

Whereas, during the 2004 and 2005 hurricane seasons, the State of Florida was devastated by eight of the four tropical storms, causing approximately $35 billion in estimated gross probable insurance losses; and

Whereas, the hurricanes from the 2004 and 2005 season have produced high winds, coastal storm surges, torrential rainfalls, and flooding resulting in significant damage to Florida and the Gulf Coast states, especially in displacing residents of policymakers from their dwellings, loss of personal belongings and contents, closing of businesses and financial institutions, and temporary unemployment that has created numerous health and safety issues within our local communities, and

Whereas, in 1992, Hurricane Andrew resulted in approximately $20.4 billion in insured losses and was previously the costliest catastrophe in the United States, but Hurricane Katrina alone left the Gulf Coast states with an estimated loss of approximately $35 billion, and

Whereas, natural disasters continually threaten communities across the United States, but other conditions that pose an immediate danger to the lives, property, and security of the residents of those communities, and

Whereas, the insurance industry, state officials, and consumer groups have been striving to develop solutions to ensure mega-catastrophic risks, because hurricanes, earthquakes, tornadoes, floods, wildfires, ice storms, and other natural catastrophes continue to affect policymakers across the United States, and

Whereas, on November 16 and 17, 2005, insurance commissioners from Florida, California, Illinois, and New York convened a summit to devise a national catastrophe insurance plan which would more effectively spread insurance risks and help mitigate the tremendous financial damage survivors contend with following such catastrophes; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States enact a National Catastrophe Insurance Program. Policymakers require a rational insurance mechanism for responding to the economic losses resulting from natural disasters. The risk of catastrophic losses must be addressed through a public-private partnership involving individuals, private industry, local and state governments, and the Federal Government. A national catastrophe insurance program is necessary to promote personal responsibility among policymakers; support strong building codes, development plans, and other mitigation tools; maximize the risk-bearing capacity of the private markets; and provide quantifiable risk management through the Federal Government. The program should encompass:

(1) Providing consumers with a private market residential insurance program that provides all-perils protection.

(2) Promoting personal responsibility through mitigation; promoting the retrofitting of existing housing stock; and providing individuals with the ability to manage their own disaster savings accounts that, similar to health savings accounts, accumulate on a tax-advantaged basis for the purpose of paying for mitigation enhancements and catastrophic losses.

(3) Creating tax-deferred insurance company catastrophe reserves to benefit policymakers with mandated reserves and build up over time and only be eligible to be used to pay for future catastrophic losses.

(4) Enhancing local and state government’s role in establishing and maintaining effective building codes, mitigation education, and land use management; promoting state emergency response mechanisms; and allowing for aggregate risk pooling of policymakers from their dwellings; loss of personal belongings and contents, closing of businesses and financial institutions, and temporary unemployment that has created numerous health and safety issues with

Whereas, this same report found that 51 percent of Massachusetts’ bridges are structurally deficient or functionally obsolete; and

Whereas, oil companies have reported record quarterly profits for the first quarter of 2008; Now therefore be it

Resolved, that the Massachusetts Senate memorializes the Congress and the President of the United States to immediately institute a windfall profits tax on energy companies which have benefited from the current circumstances, the proceeds of which shall be distributed to the States for the purpose of providing relief to motorists, homeowners and businesses through programs that provide direct subsidy to low and moderate income consumers and small businesses, and some of the proceeds may also be used for heat relief and bridge programs which promote the development and use of alternative energy and fuels; and be it further

Resolved, that copies of this memorial be dispatched to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to each member of the Florida delegation to the United States Congress.

POM-394. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide relief from growing energy costs; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Resolved, high fuel prices have a negative impact on the standard of living of consumers and have a negative impact on the productivity of businesses; and

Whereas, according to the United States Department of Energy, Massachusetts citizens pay some of the highest energy prices in the Nation, behind only Hawaii and Washington, DC. as a percentage of their household income; and

Whereas, as of May 12, 2006, AAA reports the current average price of a gallon of gasoline in Massachusetts to be $2.93, up from $2.18 only a year ago; and

Whereas, as of May 2, 2006, the Massachusetts Division of Energy Resources reported the average price of a gallon of heating oil in Massachusetts to be $2.58, up from $1.91 and $1.49 at this time of the year in 2005 and 2004 respectively; and

Whereas, home heating and electricity expenditures for Massachusetts residents are expected to be up over one third this year (October 2005–October 2006), this being an average increase of $700 per family or 0.6 percent of personal income; and

Whereas, high fuel prices impose an especially high burden on low-income families; and the United States Department of Energy found that the average American spends 3.5 percent of their income on energy bills, but low-income households average 14 percent of their income; and

Whereas, the President’s 2006 budget included cuts of some $9.7 million over the next 4 years to the low-income home energy assistance program which benefits many Massachusetts seniors; and

Whereas, according to a 2005 National Consumer Law Center report, as a result of 3 of the past 4 years having unprecedented heating oil and natural gas prices, Massachusetts’ residential consumers have higher averages than they have ever faced and community action agencies are reporting more aggressive collection activities from some utilities as well as encountering greater difficulty negotiating payment plans for low-income customers; and

Whereas, poor road conditions exacerbate the impact of high fuel costs by reducing fuel economy; and

Whereas, according to a 2005 United States Department of Transportation report of road conditions reported in 2004, only 1,659 miles of Massachusetts’ roads were classified as good to very good compared with 3,748 miles of roads classified as mediocre to poor; and

Whereas, in 2004, the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration found that ‘‘95 percent of the United States is comprised of hurricane-prone areas;’’ and

Whereas, the Society of Civil Engineers found that ‘‘71 percent of Massachusetts’ major roads are in poor or mediocre condition and driving on roads in need of repair costs Massachusetts’ motorists $2,300,000,000, or $501 per motorist, annually in extra vehicle repairs and operating costs; and

Whereas, this same report found that 51 percent of Massachusetts’ bridges are structurally deficient or functionally obsolete; and

Whereas, oil companies have reported record quarterly profits for the first quarter of 2008; Now therefore be it

Resolved, that the Massachusetts Senate memorializes the Congress and the President of the United States to immediately institute a windfall profits tax on energy companies which have benefited from the current circumstances, the proceeds of which shall be distributed to the States for the purpose of providing relief to motorists, homeowners and businesses through programs that provide direct subsidy to low and moderate income consumers and small businesses, and some of the proceeds may also be used for heat relief and bridge programs which promote the development and use of alternative energy and fuels; and be it further

Resolved, that copies of these resolutions shall be transmitted forthwith by the Clerk of the Senate to the President of the United States, President Members of each House of the Congress of the United States, and the Members thereof from the Commonwealth.

POM-395. A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to appropriating sufficient funds for the recovery of the shrimp industry and voting against the repeal of the ‘‘Byrd Amendment’’; to the Committee on Finance.

House Resolution No. 117

Whereas, Louisiana is the nation’s largest producer of wild-caught shrimp and has the nation’s only warm water shrimp canneries; and

Whereas, before Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, Louisiana generated an estimated one hundred twenty million pounds of wild-caught shrimp and sold approximately nine thousand commercial shrimp gear licenses; and

Whereas, Louisiana shrimpers constitute the largest community of shrimpers in the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico regions; and

Whereas, due to Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, the shrimp industry suffered devastating economic and infrastructure losses; and

Whereas, due to the hurricanes, assessments estimate that for the shrimp industry the total potential production lost at the retail level is approximately nine hundred nineteen million dollars; and

Whereas, the influx of foreign shrimp sold at below market prices has caused domestic prices to drop to levels at which domestic producers are unable to survive in the industry; and

Whereas, the United States House Committee on Ways and Means recommended a repeal of the provision of the Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act commonly known as the ‘‘Byrd Amendment’’; and

Whereas, the ‘‘Byrd Amendment’’ required duties to be collected under antidumping and countervailing duty orders and required payment by injurious domestic producers who initiated the petition which resulted in the imposition of the duties; and
Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Louisiana memorializes the Congress of the United States to approving the Byrd Amendment and for the recovery of the shrimp industry. Be it further Resolved, That the House of Representa-

ment”. Be it further shall be transmitted to the secretary of the United States Senate and the clerk of the United States House of Representatives and

POM-397. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah relative to promoting Utah’s Legislators Back
School Program; to the Committee on

Whereas, Louisiana was one of the original states to initiate a petition against foreign shrimp producers; and Whereas, taking into consideration the potential removal of the “Byrd Amendment” and the effects of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, the shrimp industry and the state of Louisiana stand to suffer severe financial losses;
Thereupon
Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah encourages each state entity to uti-lify existing state infrastructure, where appropriate, to support EITC outreach and statewide utilization of EITC programs, which may include utilizing Department of Workforce Services Employment Centers and other appropriate VITA sites, staffed by trained VITA volunteers, between January and April, encouraging local school districts to integrate EITC outreach and VITA services in high schools, development and community school efforts, and utilizing economic development tools and negotiations to encourage and support EITC outreach and employment VITA sites where approriate. Be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to each department of Utah State Government.

POM-397. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Utah relative to promoting Utah’s Legislators Back
School Program; to the Committee on

Whereas, the EITC lifts millions of individuals out of poverty each year in the United States by supporting work and self-sufficiency while reducing the need for public assistance;
Whereas, each year, the EITC helps approximately 130,000 households in Utah and brings more than $200,000,000 into Utah’s
economy;
Whereas, increasing Utah’s utilization of the EITC to the national average would help approximately 40,000 eligible households and bring an additional $80,000,000 into Utah’s
economy;
Whereas, an increase of $80,000,000 each year in EITC benefits would generate over $300,000,000 per year in state and local economic activity.

Whereas, 21 INFO BANK, a community services and referral system, provides callers with tax credit help, including eligibility rules, and directs workers to nearby VITA sites for needed tax forms and assistance;
and
Whereas, increasing EITC utilization represents a highly cost-effective economic development strategy; Now, therefore, be it
Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Utah encourages departments of Utah State Government to identify and utilize existing communications mechanisms to inform citizens about the availability of the Federal Earned Income Tax Credit and Volunteer Income Tax Assistance programs. Be it further
Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah encourages each state entity to work in partnership with private outreach campaigns to identify and utilize existing communications mechanisms to inform Utahns about the availability of the EITC and VITA programs, which may include state publications, printed materials, caseworker and client interactions, and web-based application materials for state assistance and state licenses. Be it further Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Utah encourages the development of state-wide EITC outreach programs and encourages the State Tax Commission, resource materials, communications, corre-respondence and forms from the State Tax Commission, targed printed materials, caseworker and client interactions, and web-based application materials for state assistance and state licenses. Be it further sent to the State Board of Education and the executive director of the Utah State Concentration of State Legislatures.

smokers and 60% of youth who were heavy users of alcohol report having used drugs in the month prior to being surveyed; Whereas, these harmful substances negatively affect every aspect of a youth’s life as well as the lives of those around them;
Whereas, once youth have started using tobaacco, alcohol, or illicit drugs it is very dif-
cult for them to stop;
Whereas, these substances cut short the lives and future of many youth by causing death and disease;
Whereas, tremendous strides have been made in reducing tobacco, alcohol, and illicit drug use among youth;
Whereas, there is still more that needs to be done to address this ongoing challenge;
Whereas, for every dollar spent on prevention programs, America saves seven dollars in the cost of public aid, special education, and treatment services.

Whereas, youth are a resource and a catalyst for change in the lives of youth and have taken a critical first line of defense in building resiliency among their peers;
Whereas, the Weber-Morgan Governing Youth Council and other youth groups are working hard to promote positive lifestyles and combat the negative effects of tobacco, alcohol, and illicit drugs on the lives of youth in Utah;
and
Whereas, the fight against the use of tobaacco, alcohol, and illicit drugs must continue and become even more successful, if effects of these harmful substances. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah, the Governor concuring therein, strongly urge educators in Utah’s public edu-

Whereas, the ancestors of today’s native peoples have inhabited the land of the present day United States since time immemorial and for thousands of years before the arrival of peoples of European origin; and
Whereas, the native peoples have for millennia honored, protected and preserved this land and its resources are preserved.

Whereas, the United States government has violated many of the treaties ratified by Congress and made agreements with native American tribes; and
Whereas, despite continuing maltreatment of native peoples by the United States, the nation has signed and committed to the protection of this great land, as evidenced by the fact that, on a per capita basis, more native people have served in the United States Armed Forces and placed themselves in harm’s way in defense of the United States in every major military conflict than any other ethnic group; and
Whereas, people are enshrined by their creator with certain unalienable rights, and that among those are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Massachusetts Senate hereby urges the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to pass, pending Senate Joint Resolution 15, apologizing to all native American peoples on behalf of the United States for many of the wrongs and injustices it has inflicted upon them, and by vote of the Senate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, A.D. 1638, doing justice to all native American peoples and the native peoples who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States; and be it further

Whereas, President Bush recently remarked, After more than two centuries of American jurisprudence, and millennia of human experience, a few judges and local authorities are presuming to be the most fundamental institution of civilization; and

Whereas, the efforts of nineteen states to protect traditional marriage, which is a constitutional amendment defining marriage as the union between one man and one woman are a clear sign to the rest of the country and to the United States Congress that the citizens of these states are in support of the traditional definition of marriage; and

Whereas, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is the most democratic manner by which to curb the power of judges whose agenda affronts the beliefs of the majority of the people and the will of the American people; and

Whereas, the United States Senate is scheduled to vote on the Marriage Protection Amendment to the Constitution of the United States during the week of June 5, 2006; and

Whereas, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is the most democratic manner by which to curb the power of judges whose agenda affronts the beliefs of the majority of the people and the will of the American people; and

Whereas, the United States Senate is scheduled to vote on the Marriage Protection Amendment to the Constitution of the United States during the week of June 5, 2006; and

Whereas, the Marriage Protection Amendment defines marriage in the United States as the union between one man and one woman, Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana memorializes the Congress of the United States to approve an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that would define marriage as the union between one man and one woman; and be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana proposes that the legislatures of each of the several states comprising the United States apply to the United States Congress request that an act of Congress be presented for consideration of the United States Congress, and the President of the United States Congress request that a joint resolution of the United States Congress be transmitted to the President of the United States, the secretary of the United States Senate, the clerk of the United States House of Representatives, the member of the Louisiana delegation to the United States Congress, and the presiding officer of each house of each state legislature in the United States.

Whereas, 9 months ago Hurricane Katrina unleashed its fury on New Orleans and the Gulf Coast and was one of the cruellest disasters in history; and

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened, That the general court or New Hampshire encourages the Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States stating that real property can only be taken by eminent domain for public use such as the construction of forts, government buildings, and roadways; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent by the House clerk to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the New Hampshire congressional delegation.
Whereas, Hurricane Katrina dispersed and displaced people to over 40 states across the country; and

Whereas, many people are still living in states other than their home states, which will prevent them from being able to participate in elections in their home states; and

Whereas, it is imperative to protect the voting rights of these citizens; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That We, your Memorialists, respectfully urge and request that the President, the Congress of the United States and the United States Department of Justice establish satellite voting places in cities and states where Hurricane Katrina survivors now reside, and further,

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution, duly authenticated by the Secretary of State, be transmitted to the Honorable George W. Bush, President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the United States Department of Justice and each member of the Maine Congressional Delegation.

STATMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. Inhofe:

S. 3967. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to establish Medicare Health Savings Accounts; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Inhofe. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to establish medicare health savings accounts, HSAs. This bill will make HSAs available under Medicare in lieu of Medicare medical savings accounts, MSAs. I have long been dedicated to quality health care and believe that seniors should have the ability to make their own decisions regarding their health care, so they can receive the health care they need and desire. As a senior myself, I appreciate how imperative it is that we seniors be provided with a wide array of choices.

My desire to see my fellow Oklahomans and all Americans receive the best possible health care is evidenced by my involvement in various health-related issues. I have always been a champion of rural health care providers. In 1997, I was one of the few Republicans to vote against the Balanced Budget Act because of its lack of support for rural hospitals. At that time, I made a commitment to not allow our rural hospitals to be closed and am pleased we finally addressed that important issue in the Medicare Modernization Act of 2003 by providing great benefits for rural health care providers as well as a voluntary prescription drug benefit to seniors. In 2003, I also co-sponsored the Health Care Access and Rural Equity Act, to protect and preserve access of Medicare beneficiaries to health care in rural regions.

In order to assist my State and other States suffering from large reduction in their Federal medical assistance percentage, FMAP, for Medicaid, I introduced S.1754, a bill to apply a State's FMAP from fiscal year 2005 to fiscal years 2006 through 2014 on September 22, 2005. The purpose of this legislation is to prevent drastic reductions in FMAP while revision of the formula itself is considered.
I am a strong advocate of medical liability reform and am an original co-sponsor of S. 22, the Medical Care Access Protection Act, and S. 23, the Healthy Mothers and Healthy Babies Access to Care Act. These bills protect patients' rights to quality and affordable health care by reducing the effects of excessive liability costs. I am committed to this vital reform that would alleviate the burden placed on physicians and patients by excessive medical malpractice lawsuits.

I have worked with officials from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, CMS, to expand access to life-saving implantable cardiac defibrillators and many other numerous regulations that would affect my rural State such as the 250-yard rule for critical access hospitals.

As a supporter of safety and medical research, I have cosponsored legislation to increase the supply of pancreatic islet cells for research and a bill to prohibit price controls on the market in the United States. I also introduced S. 96, the Flu Vaccine Incentive Act, to help prevent any future shortages in flu vaccines in both the 106th and 109th Congresses. My bill removed price controls from government purchasing of the flu vaccine while encouraging more companies to enter the market. Also, my bill frees American companies to enter the flu vaccine industry by giving them an incentive to develop and construct to the market in the United States.

As a result of my sister’s death from cancer and treatment we learned about not accessible in the United States that might have saved her life, Senator Sam Brownback and I introduced S. 1956, the Access, Compassion, Care and Ethics for Seriously-Ill Patients Act—ACCESS—on November 3, 2005. This bill would offer a three-tiered approval system demonstrating efficacy during clinical trials, for use by the seriously ill patient population. Seriously ill patients, who have exhausted all alternatives and are seeking new treatment options, would be offered access to these treatments with the consent of their physician.

On April 4, 2006, my resolution to designate April 8, 2006, as “National Cushing’s Syndrome Awareness Day” passed by unanimous consent. The intent of this resolution is to raise awareness of Cushing’s syndrome, a debilitating disorder that affects an estimated 10 to 15 million people per million. It is an endocrine or hormonal disorder caused by prolonged exposure of the body’s tissue to high levels of the hormone cortisol. Additionally, I have cosponsored yearly resolutions designating a day in October as “National Mammography Day” and a week in August as “National Health Center Week” to raise awareness regarding both these issues and have supported passage and enactment of numerous health-care-related bills, such as the Rural Health Care Capital Access Act of 2006, which extends the exemption respecting required patient days for critical access hospitals under the Federal hospital mortgage insurance program.

As the Federal Government invests in innovative health care and health care initiatives I have fought hard to ensure that Oklahoma gets its fair share. Specifically, over the past 3 years, I have helped to secure $5.2 million in funding for the Oklahoma Medical Research Foundation, the Oklahoma State Department of Health, and the Morton Health Center. Medicare MSAs have existed since January 1, 1997, revised in December of 2003, but they have not worked. No insurer whatsoever has yet offered a Medicare MSA under the current law.

To fix this problem, my legislation creates a new HSA program under Medicare that incorporates an deductible health plan and an HSA account to dissolve the existing Medicare MSA. In tandem with my efforts, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, CMS, are launching an HSA demonstration project that would test allowing health insurance companies to offer Medicare beneficiaries products similar to HSAs. This activity points to the administration’s support of HSAs and desire to see all seniors receive the best possible coverage.

As the July 13, 2006 edition of The Hill explains, “no legislation is pending that would integrate HSAs into the Medicare program . . .” Thus, my legislation is necessary because real Medicare HSA reform is needed in order for seniors to have true flexibility and freedom of choice in their health care.

Under my bill, beneficiaries who choose the HSA option will receive an annual amount that is equal to 95 percent of the average Medicare Advantage capitation rate with respect to the individual’s MA payment area. These funds provided through the Medicare HSA program can only be used by the beneficiary for the following purposes: as a contribution into an HSA or for payment of high deductible health plan premiums. However, the individual also has the opportunity to deposit personal funds into the Medicare HSA.

My bill also guarantees that seniors be notified of the amount they will receive 90 days before receipt to ensure they have time to determine the best and most appropriate HSA to accommodate needs. The bill also allows the Secretary of Health and Human Services to deal with fraud appropriately and requires providers to accept payment by individuals enrolled in a Medicare HSA just as they would with an individual enrolled in traditional Medicare.

Please join me in supporting this important legislation to give our seniors more choices regarding their health care.

By Mr. Jeffords (for himself, Mrs. Boxer, Mr. Lautenberg, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Leahy, Mr. Reed, Mr. Akaka, Mr. Dodd, Mr. Sarbanes, and Mr. Menendez). S. 3628. A bill to mend the Clean Air Act to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. Jeffords. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Global Warming Pollution Reduction Act of 2006.

One of the most important issues facing mankind is the problem of global warming. Global warming is real and it is already happening. Its effects are being felt across the world. The longer we delay, the more severe these effects will be. The broad consensus within the scientific community is that global warming has begun, is largely the result of human activity, and is accelerating. Atmospheric greenhouse gas concentrations have risen to 378 parts per million, nearly one-third above preindustrial levels and higher than at any time during the past 400,000 years. Projections indicate that stabilizing concentrations at 450 parts per million would still mean a temperature increase of 2 to 4 degrees Fahrenheit. Such warming will result in more extreme weather, increased flooding and drought, disruption of agricultural and water systems, threats to human health and loss of sensitive species and ecosystems.

In order to prevent and minimize these effects, we must take global actions to address this issue as soon as possible. We owe that to ourselves and to future generations.

The overwhelming majority of Americans support taking some form of action on climate change. I am today introducing the Global Warming Pollution Reduction Act, which I believe responds to that call. I believe this is the most far-reaching and forward-thinking climate change bill ever introduced. It sets a goal of an 80 percent reduction in global warming pollutants by 2050. It provides a roadmap for actions that we will need to take over the next few decades to combat global warming. I believe that if this bill were passed, it would put us on the path to potentially solving the global warming problem. If it were passed, we would re-shape our economy to become more energy efficient and more economically competitive. If it were passed, we would have a chance of avoiding some of the worst and most dangerous effects of global warming. If it were passed, we would be in a position to negotiate with other countries as part of the global solution.

Some will say that this bill imposes requirements that ask too much of industry. Senator, will say that this bill contains requirements that we cannot easily meet. I say first of all that the costs of inaction vastly outweigh the costs of action and that we have a responsibility to future generations not to leave the Earth far worse off than when we found it—with a fundamentally altered climate system. Temperature changes, sea level rise, hurricanes, floods, and droughts can affect food production, national security, the spread of disease, and the survival of endangered species. These are not things to trifle with on the basis of industry cost estimates, which have frequently been overstated.

But perhaps more importantly, we can act to reduce global warming. We can reduce emissions to 1990 levels between now and 2020 through a reduction of just 2 percent per year. Energy efficiency alone could play a major part in reaching reductions, and new technologies can help as well. Moreover, additional deployment of existing renewable energy sources, including biofuels, can also help substantially. If we were to take the actions suggested in this bill, we would find that we would enhance our energy independence, and we would become a world leader in clean energy technologies. American innovation can position us as the world leader in clean technologies.

In my final year in the Senate, I have often asked myself, What lasting actions can I take to make the world a better place? I hope that by proposing real action on climate change, and passing the torch to a new generation of those committed to protecting the environment, that I can help make a difference for us all. Global warming is upon us. The question is: Will we take action now, before it is too late?

We know what we need to do, we know how much we must reduce, and we have the technology to do so. The question for this body is, Do we have the political will? Can we overcome our fears and insecurity and act decisively to combat global warming? That is the opportunity and challenge of the coming years, which my bill on global warming seeks to address. I urge my colleagues to join me in the quest for a better, safer world that is free of the enormous threat posed by dangerous global warming. I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3898

"SEC. 701. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) global warming poses a significant threat to the national security and economy of the United States, public health and welfare, and the global environment;

(2) due largely to an increased use of energy from fossil fuels, human activities are primarily responsible for the release of carbon dioxide and other heat-trapping global warming pollutants that are accumulating in the atmosphere and causing surface air and subsurface ocean temperatures to rise;

(3) as of the date of enactment of this title, atmospheric concentrations of carbon dioxide are 35 percent higher than those concentrations were 150 years ago, at 378 parts per million compared to 280 parts per million;

(4) the United States emits more global warming pollutants than any other country, and those worldwide emissions have increased by an average of 1.3 percent annually since 1990;

(5)(A) during the past 100 years, global temperatures have risen by 1.44 degrees Fahrenheit; and

(B) from 1700 to the present, those temperatures have risen by almost 1 degree Fahrenheit;

(6) 8 of the past 10 years (1996 to 2005) are among the 10 warmest years on record;

(7) average temperatures in the Arctic have increased by more than 7 degrees Fahrenheit during the past 50 years;

(8) global warming has caused—

(A) ocean temperatures to increase, resulting in rising sea levels, extensive bleaching of coral reefs worldwide, and an increase in the intensity of tropical storms;

(B) the retreat of Arctic sea ice by an average of 9 percent per decade since 1978;

(C) the widespread thawing of permafrost in polar, subpolar, and mountainous regions;

(D) the redistribution and loss of species; and

(E) the rapid shrinking of glaciers;

(9) the United States must adopt a comprehensive and effective national program of mandatory reductions in the nation’s per capita global warming pollution emissions into the atmosphere; and

(10) at the current rate of emission, global warming pollution concentrations in the atmosphere could reach more than 600 parts per million in carbon dioxide equivalent, and global average mean temperature could rise an additional 2.7 to 11 degrees Fahrenheit, by the end of the century;

(11) although an understanding of all details of the Earth system is not yet complete, present knowledge indicates that potential future temperature increases could result in—

(A) the further or complete melting of the Antarctic and Greenland ice sheets;

(B) the disruption of the North-Atlantic Thermohaline Circulation (commonly known as the Gulf Stream);

(C) the extinction of species; and

(D) large-scale disruptions of the natural systems that support life.

(12) there exists an array of technological options for use in reducing global warming pollution emissions, and significant reductions can be attained using a portfolio of options that will not adversely impact the economy;

(13) the ingenuity of the people of the United States will allow the Nation to become a leader in solving global warming; and

(14) it should be a goal of the United States to achieve a reduction in global warming pollution emissions in the United States—

(A) to ensure that the average global temperature does not increase by more than 3.6 degrees Fahrenheit (2 degrees Celsius) above the preindustrial average; and

(B) to facilitate the achievement of an average global atmospheric concentration of global warming pollutants that does not exceed 450 parts per million in carbon dioxide equivalent.
“(10) to promote, through leadership by the United States, accelerated reductions in global warming pollution from other countries with significant global warming pollution emissions with those rules of the United States."

recognized Christopher’s public service as a fallen public safety officer and provided the appropriate death benefits to his family.

Yet while those closest to the tragedy have recognized Christopher as a fallen firefighter, the Federal Government has not. The Department of Justice determined that Christopher Kangas was not eligible for benefits based on a twofold interpretation of the law. First, because he was deemed as not acting within a narrow range of duties at the time of his death that he was not even the measured criteria to be considered a “firefighter,” and therefore, was not a “public safety officer” for purposes of the Public Safety Officer Benefits Act. Second, that his death was deemed as not sustained in the “line of duty” because as a junior firefighter he was prohibited from operating a hose on a ladder or entering a burning building. As a result of this determination, Christopher’s family cannot receive a Federal line-of-duty benefit. In addition, Christopher is barred from taking his rightful place on the National Fallen Firefighters Memorial in Emmitsburg, MD. For a young man who dreamed of being a firefighter and gave his life rushing to a fire, keeping him off of the memorial is a grave injustice.

Any firefighter will tell you that there are many important roles to play in fighting a fire beyond operating the hoses and ladders. Firefighting is a team effort, and everyone in the Brooklyn Federal Department praised young Christopher as a full member of their team. As such, I support amending the Public Safety Officer Benefits Act to ensure that the Federal Government will recognize Christopher Kangas and others like him as firefighters. However, considering the significant opposition to that solution, I am offering this private bill in honor of Christopher Kangas to provide his family with the $250,000 as ordered by the Federal Court and to allow his name to be included on the National Fallen Firefighter’s Memorial. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I have come to the floor today to join my colleagues at this time to discuss the Catastrophic Health Coverage Promotion Act that Senator SMITH and I are introducing today.

Mr. President, first, I want to say how much I appreciate Senator GORDON SMITH. At a time when our citizens all across the land and in our home State of Oregon believe there needs to be more bipartisanism, Senator SMITH doesn't just talk about it, he is consistently driven more than halfway on critical issues, and he does that with other colleagues in the Senate.

As we begin our time discussing this legislation, I want to let him know how much I appreciate Senator GORDON SMITH and I believe it is a moral blot on our Nation for a country as good and rich as ours to send millions of its citizens to bed at night fearing they will be wiped out if a serious medical illness hits them. That is the reality. It is the reality for families who have no coverage at all, and it is the reality for families who have some measure of coverage, say, through an employer, but it doesn't stretch far enough.

Senator SMITH and I want, in a bipartisan way, to tackle both of these kinds of concerns. That is why we have put forward the legislation we introduced today. I think now is an ideal time for bipartisan action on the catastrophic health coverage issue.

If you look back over the last few years, Senator KERRY, in the 2004 Presidential campaign, had an excellent proposal with respect to catastrophic coverage for those folks who were currently in the cupboard and the catastrophic coverage proposal I have advanced during this Congress. For example, Senator SMITH and I have sought to do on that second track that involves getting catastrophic health care dollars. I was pleased when Senator SMITH suggested in our legislation that we are going to have a chance to tackle it in a way that I think is going to give us the opportunity to get the job done.

We are also very concerned about people who have no coverage at all. So what happens if you have no coverage at all is folks walk into a hospital in Oregon or in South Carolina, usually they show up in the emergency room, and the hospital has to absorb those costs. What we would do is give that person who now has no coverage at all the possibility of actually buying some catastrophic coverage at the workplace with a bit of a subsidy in order to be able to have coverage that would pick up at least a portion of those bills that the hospital is now absorbing.

At the end of the day, those are the two principal kinds of instances we are facing—folks who have some coverage through a private employer, but it doesn't stretch far enough, and folks who don't have any coverage at all. Under that approach, we would like to make it possible for them to get into the private insurance market, protect them from catastrophic illness. We think we can do it with a modest subsidy coming from government.

My sense is that we are now looking at health care for the heart of our country. The first track is a track that suggests we can take steps right now in areas like catastrophic coverage to protect our citizens. There are other ideas I have advanced during this Congress. For example, Senator SNOWE and I have now gotten a majority of Senators to agree with our proposal to lift the restriction so Medicare can bargain and hold down the costs. That, like the question of catastrophic coverage, is a step you take when you want to protect our citizens from the catastrophic illness and let's hold down the costs of medicine. Those are practical, bipartisan approaches that can be taken today. We ought to pursue them and get them done.

I also think there is another track to health care. I noticed that Senator HATCH was on the Senate floor. He and I were the authors of the legislation creating the Citizens' Health Care Working Group that is going to look at those critical issues. We want to make sure that all Americans have decent, affordable coverage. We have only been on that issue for more than 60 years—going back to the 81st Congress, in 1945, and Harry Truman. I have said let's also work on that second track that involves getting all Americans under the tent for essential and affordable health care coverage.

Mr. President, that obviously isn't going to get done in the next 15 minutes. But if the Senate, on a bipartisan basis, as Senator SMITH and I have sought to do on the catastrophic issue, and as Senator GORDON SMITH and I have on a broader approach to look at health care that works for all Americans—if we team up and look at health care on those two tracks, I think we can make a great contribution for our country.

There are no costs spiraling in the United States like medical bills. We spent $1.7 trillion last year on health care. There are 290 million Americans—I guess we are approaching 300 million. When you divide $1.7 trillion by 290 million, you come up with something like $25,000 that could be sent to every family of four in America with the amount of money now being spent on health care.

So while we are spending enough money, my sense is that we are not spending it in the right places. Once again, Senator SMITH has given us an opportunity to think creatively about better ways to approach the use of the health care dollars. I was pleased when Senator SMITH suggested in our legislation that we also make it possible to include a focus on health care prevention. We are not doing enough with health care prevention in this country. Truman passed Medicare and that pretty well. Medicare Part A, for example, will pay huge checks for senior citizens' hospital bills, but Medicare Part B pays virtually nothing for prevention to keep people well. That makes no sense. It needs to be a sharper focus on health care prevention, and one of the things that I think is attractive about Senator SMITH’s leadership on this issue is that he has said even in the context of looking at catastrophic health care, let’s put a sharper focus on prevention. We are going to make it possible in this legislation to do that.

I note we have other colleagues on the floor, I have secured time to focus on the Voting Rights Act legislation later in the afternoon, but I am very pleased to have the opportunity to talk for a few minutes about the Catastrophic Health Coverage Promotion Act Senator SMITH and I are introducing today. We have focused on a number of issues in a bipartisan fashion over our years in the Senate, but this has the potential to be the biggest as it relates to the needs of our citizens at home.

We want to make sure when folks go to bed at night, they don’t have to fear they are going to be wiped out financially by a serious medical illness. This legislation moves us one step closer toward the goal. We hope many colleagues on both sides of the aisle will want to support the legislation.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, Senator SNOWE and I today are introducing the Medicare Prescription Drug Lifeline Act. This legislation provides a solution for those seniors falling into the coverage gap, also known as the doughnut hole of the Medicare prescription drug benefit. The doughnut hole occurs when the spending for a senior’s drug expenses reaches a total of $5,100, where the benefit picks up again. The Kaiser Family Foundation estimated that nearly 7 million seniors will fall into the coverage gap this year.

Seniors who enter this “no man’s land” of spending face the same problems seniors faced before the drug benefit even began: they skip doses, they don’t take all their medicine to make it stretch, and they are forced to choose between their food and fuel costs and their prescription drug costs.

This legislation would take three steps to deal with this problem: First, the cost of the Part D drug benefit would be required to let seniors know they are approaching the coverage gap. Second, it would allow seniors, when they are notified that they are reaching the coverage gap, to switch plans to avoid the gap. Finally, the legislation requires the Government Accountability Office to examine ways in which the benefit could be redesigned to eliminate the gap without increasing Federal spending. Together, these provisions will give seniors a lifeline to coverage.

Senator SNOWE and I both voted for the legislation that created the Medicare prescription drug benefit. When we did so, we pledged that we would continue to work to improve the benefit. Senator SNOWE and I have teamed up together on many occasions to try to reduce the cost of the prescription drug program by giving the Secretary of Health and Human Services the same power other Government officials have to bargain for better prices. Our legislation has won a majority of votes cast, and we intend to continue to press for that power.

The latest effort is aimed at another shortcoming in the law: finding a way to help seniors avoid falling into the coverage gap. Senator SNOWE and I believe that our legislation will help seniors a straightforward way to avoid the gap.

Congress needs to address these issues and we will continue our strong commitment to seniors by working to improve the drug benefit.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Ms. SNOWE):

S. 3702. A bill to provide for the safety of migrant and seasonal agricultural workers: to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation with Senator SNOWE that will provide our Nation’s migrant agricultural and forest workers with a safe ride to work. The Farm and Forestry Worker Transportation Safety Act would require a designated seat and seatbelt for each person riding in a vehicle used to transport these workers.

Today, many migrant workers travel to their jobs in dangerous and unsafe conditions. It is not uncommon for these workers to ride in overcrowded vans and trucks while sitting on benches and buckets with no access to seatbelts.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, 78 agricultural workers lost their lives and 440 were injured in transportation accidents in 2004.

I would like to take a moment to share with you some tragic accidents that have resulted from the lack of adequate safety regulations for these workers:

In December of 2005, two Guatemalan forest workers were killed when their vehicle crashed driving off icy roads in Washington. Five Guatemalan forest workers were killed in the same manner the previous year.

In June of 2004, 2 migrant workers were killed in Port St. Lucie, FL, when their overcrowded van carrying 11 people rolled off Interstate 55. Two months later, 9 citrus workers were killed in Fort Pierce when their 15-passenger van rolled over and ejected all 19 passengers.

In September 2002, 14 forestry workers were killed when their van transporting them to work toppled off a bridge in Maine.

In August 1999, 13 tomato field workers were killed when their van slammed into a tractor-trailer in Fresno County, CA. Most of the victims were riding on three benches in the back of the van.

As you can see, this issue does not affect my home State of California. It is a problem that requires national attention. Congress needs to take action to ensure these workers can travel to and from their jobs. My bill would seek to provide these workers with a designated seat and operating seatbelt.

This legislation would also address the issue of converted vehicles. The bill would direct the Department of Transportation to develop interim seat and seatbelt safety standards for vehicles that have been converted for the purpose of transporting migrant workers. Owners and operators of these vehicles would have 7 years to make the necessary improvements so that their vehicles would meet the same safety standards as new vehicles.

I hope my colleagues will join me in standing up for the safety of our Nation’s migrant agricultural workers. Mr. President, I request that the text of this legislation appear immediately following this statement in the Congressional Record.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3702.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 2. SEATS AND SEAT BELTS FOR MIGRANT AND SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL WORKERS.

(a) SEATS.—Except as provided in subsection (b), in a vehicle subject to such standards is provided with a seat that is a designated seating position (as such term is defined for purposes of the Federal motor vehicle safety standards issued under chapter 301 of title 49, United States Code).

(b) SEAT BELTS.—Each seating position required under subsection (a) shall be equipped with an operational seat belt, except that this subsection shall not apply with respect to seating positions in buses that would otherwise not be required to have seat belts under the Federal motor vehicle safety standards.

(c) PERFORMANCE REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with the Secretary of Labor, shall issue interim performance standards for the strength of seats and the attachment of seats and seat belts in vehicles that are converted, after being sold for purposes other than resale, for the purpose of transporting migrant or seasonal agricultural workers. The requirements shall provide a level of safety that is as close as practicable to the level of safety provided by that vehicle if it is manufactured or altered for the purpose of transporting such workers before being sold for purposes other than resale.

(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter or modify the regulations contained in section 500.103, or the provision pertaining to transportation of migrant or seasonal agricultural workers, the Federal motor vehicle safety standards, or the definition of "migrant or seasonal agricultural worker" in section 301(a)(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(e) COMPLIANCE DATE.—Not later than 1 year after such date of enactment, and except as provided in subsection (c)(2), all vehicles subject to this Act shall be in compliance with the requirements of this Act.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself and Mr. WYDEN):

S. 3703. A bill to provide for a temporary process for individuals entering the Medicare coverage gap to switch to a plan that provides coverage in the gap; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I am pleased to be here today with my colleague and friend, Senator WYDEN, with whom I have worked for many years to achieve affordable prescription drug coverage for our seniors. We have certainly come a long way from back where we were nearly 10 years ago.

Yet much remains to be done. As we have seen, the implementation of the Medicare Part D benefit has been difficult. And no doubt we are still on the road to a sustainable benefit which our seniors can easily navigate. The complexity of the benefit is certainly posing a hazard to many of our seniors.

Today we face a crisis as millions of seniors are entering a gap in their prescription drug coverage—the so-called doughnut hole. In fact, when a senior’s drug costs exceed $2,250 this year, they will no longer receive benefits until their spending reaches $5,100. That leaves seniors with a full $2,850 of drug costs to absorb before they receive a single cent of coverage. And they must continue to pay premiums. The Kaiser Foundation has reported that an estimated 7 million seniors will be affected by this gap.

How will they continue to receive essential medications?

Earlier this year, I offered legislation which would have addressed this issue by allowing every beneficiary to change plans once this year so that those beneficiaries who realized they require a more comprehensive plan could choose to change to an appropriate plan. We know that selecting drug coverage was a challenging process for seniors, all the more so as the deadline loomed and they struggled to get assistance.

Many may have made a good decision, but their circumstances may have since changed significantly. How many of us know of a senior who has had a major illness or hospitalization just since January? Most seniors in that situation will have changes in their medications as a result and often will use more prescription drugs and likely more expensive ones as well.

Finally, with coverage available, there is little doubt that physicians were encouraged to prescribe medications that at last their patients could afford—drugs which could prevent serious illness, such as heart disease. Yet now, just as seniors see the possibility of a future with better health, the cost of that critical treatment may be unsustainable. So millions are facing the dilemma we have seen before—cutting drugs or even discontinuing medications. This must not occur again.

As many medical experts will tell you, to stop taking essential medications or to begin rationing their use will pose serious safety risks to many of our beneficiaries. That undermines the benefits we sought to see from Part D—improved health and decreased health expenditures.

So Senator Wyden and I are here to offer a solution—one which, I might add, both the CMS Secretary Michael Leavitt and Dr. Mark McClellan, the Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, have previously suggested they would pursue.

That solution is a simple one—to allow those facing a coverage gap to change to a plan which would offer continuous coverage. That solution has simply not been employed and that compels us to act today, to protect our seniors.

The bill I have introduced today—the Medicare Prescription Drug Lifeline Act—truly gives a second chance to those who most need this coverage.

Under this legislation we require that CMS notify those who are approaching the coverage gap and give them an option of taking plan change in order to obtain essential drug coverage. Under our legislation, beneficiaries could change to any plan which would provide continuous coverage. That includes drug plans which provide generic or brand-name drugs as well as Medicare Advantage plans offering comprehensive drug coverage.

In a few States, there is simply not an option which allows a beneficiary to obtain continuous brand-name drug coverage. The Medicare pharmacy plan in the State of Maine, as well as in New Hampshire and Alaska, such coverage simply cannot be obtained. So this legislation directs the Secretary to provide an option for beneficiary enrollment in a plan outside their region. That is simply fair, and it is essential to ensure that we don’t see the doughnut hole threaten the health of our seniors.

We know that this coverage gap is an issue we simply must address. Seniors need to be able to plan and budget and count on a predictable monthly cost for their essentials of life. When the Congress adopted Part D 3 years ago, we said we never wanted to make seniors again choose between buying food and buying essential medicines. Yet without addressing the doughnut hole now, we will put seniors in that exact position again.

So this legislation also asks the GAO to undertake a study of options for filling the gap—looking at ways to level the benefit structure—including how we might do so without increasing federal expenditures. I note that one might be able to accomplish this, without changing the beneficiary’s copayment rates appreciably. Obviously, if we saw some improvement in the pricing of drugs, that certainly would help get us there.

Today our most critical need is to avoid the harm this coverage gap poses. I urge my colleagues to join us in this effort—to preserve drug access for our seniors so both they, ad our Medicare system, realize the benefits of modern medicine.

By Mr. MENENDEZ (for himself and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 3704. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to require staff working with developmentally disabled individuals to call emergency services in the event of a life-threatening situation; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I rise today with my good friend Senator LAUTENBERG to introduce Danielle’s Act, an important piece of legislation that I know will save countless lives. I also recognize Representative RUSH HOLT, who has championed the bill in the House and has been a tireless advocate for individuals with disabilities. This bill is named in memory of a young woman from New Jersey, Danielle Gruskowski, whose life was cut tragically short by a failure to call 9-1-1. The great State of New Jersey already passed Danielle’s Law, and it is time for Congress to act as well.

In order to understand the importance of this legislation, I would like to share Danielle’s story. She was born December 6, 1969, to Diane and Doug Gruskowski and raised in Carteret, N.J. Danielle was developmentally disabled and diagnosed with Rett Syndrome, a neurological disorder that causes a delay or regression in development, including speech, hand skills, and coordination. While Danielle needed help with daily activities, she managed to lead a full and active life. As a young adult, Danielle moved to a group home to experience the positive benefits of independent living. Tragically, on November 5, 2002, Danielle passed away at the age of 32 because of sudden onset of cardiac arrest at the group home called 9-1-1 when she was clearly in need of emergency medical attention.

So that no other mother would lose her child in such a tragic circumstance, Danielle’s mother and her aunt, Robin Turner, developed a strong coalition of supporters and worked with their State representatives to develop and pass what we know as Danielle’s Law. Like the New Jersey law, my bill will require staff working with individuals who have a developmental disability or traumatic brain injury to call emergency services in the event of a life-threatening situation. The legislation would raise the level of care of caregivers, staff training and ensuring that individuals with developmental disabilities get emergency care when they need it.

All Americans deserve an advocate, and today I am speaking for those who often cannot speak for themselves. I am proud to be an advocate for individuals with disabilities, and I am proud to be an advocate for the families in New Jersey who are counting on safe, secure, and healthy independent living environments for their loved ones with disabilities. I also would like to recognize the hard-working caregivers and staff who help provide for the needs of those with disabilities. They show their compassion every day when they show up for work, performing one of the most difficult but rewarding jobs in our society—caring for someone’s mother, father, son, or daughter. These caregivers play such a critical role in our society and their contributions are to be commended. By raising awareness of Danielle’s Law, my hope is that more caregivers will realize how important it is to call 9-1-1 for all life-threatening situations and... that better training and support will be provided to staff across the country.

I am introducing this legislation to remember Danielle and to make sure no other family or community experiences the pain and suffering of losing a loved one to an avoidable death. I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this important bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled;

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Danielle’s Act”.

SEC. 2. REQUIREMENT OF STAFF WORKING WITH DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABILIZED INDIVIDUALS TO CALL EMERGENCY SERVICES FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE NATION, IN A LIFE-THREATENING SITUATION.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Section 1902(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (69), by striking “and” at the end;

(2) in paragraph (70), by striking the period at the end and inserting “,” and “; and”; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (70) the following new paragraph:

“(71) provide, in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, that direct care staff providing health-related services to an individual with a developmental disability or traumatic brain injury are required to call the telephone number of the local emergency service or equivalent emergency management service for assistance in the event of a life-threatening emergency to such individual and to report such call to the appropriate State agency or department.”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) take effect on January 1, 2007.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HARKIN Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. CLINTON, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. REED, Mr. DODD, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. DAYTON, Ms. STABENOW, and Mr. SCHUMER):

S. 3705. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to improve requirements under the Medicaid program for items and services furnished in or through an educational program or setting to children, including children with disabilities.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is a privilege to join my Senate and House colleagues in introducing the Protecting Children’s Health in Schools Act of 2006. This bill will ensure that the Nation’s 7 million school children with disabilities will have continued access to health care in school.

In 1975, the Nation made a commitment to guarantee children with disabilities equal access to education. For these children to learn and thrive in schools, the integration of education with health care is of paramount importance. Coordination with Medicaid makes an immense difference to schools in meeting the needs of these children.

This year, however, the Bush administration has declared its intent to end Medicaid reimbursements to schools for the support services they need in order to provide medical and health-related services to their students. The administration is saying “NO” to any further financial help to Medicaid-covered disabled children who need specialized transportation to obtain their health services at school. It is saying “NO” to reimbursement to the school for costs incurred for administrative duties related to Medicaid services.

It’s bad enough that Congress and the administration have not kept the commitment to “glide-path” funding of IDEA needs in 2004. Now the administration proposes to deny funding to schools under the federal program that supports the health needs of disabled children. It makes no sense to make it so difficult for children to achieve in school—both under IDEA and the No Child Left Behind.

At stake is an estimated $3.6 billion in Medicaid funds over the next 5 years. Such funding is essential to help identify disabled children and connect them to services that can meet their special health and learning needs during the school day.

This decision by the administration follows years of resisting Medicaid reimbursements to schools that provide these services, without clear guidance on how schools should appropriately seek reimbursement. The “Protecting Children’s Health in Schools Act” recognizes the importance of schools as a site of delivery of health care. It ensures that children with disabilities can continue to obtain health services during the school day. The bill also provides for clear and consistent guidelines to be established, so that schools can be held accountable and seek appropriate reimbursement.

The legislation has the support of over 60 groups, including parents, teachers, principals, school boards, and health care providers—people who work with children with disabilities every day and know what is needed to facilitate their growth, development, and long-term success.

I urge all of our colleagues to join us in supporting these children across the Nation, by providing the realistic support their schools need in order to meet these basic health care requirements of their students.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask unanimous consent that the attached bill be printed into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled;

By Mr. Martínez (for himself, Mrs. Feinstein, Mr. Nelson of Florida, Mrs. Hutchison, Mr. Sessions, Mr. Bingaman, and Mr. Corny):

S. 3706. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to treat spaceports like airports under the exempt facility bond rules; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Martínez. Mr. President, today I rise with my colleagues, Senators Feinstein, Nelson of Florida, Sessions, and Bingaman, on the 37th anniversary of the lunar landing when American astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin set foot on the Moon, to introduce the Spaceport Equity Act of 2006—a bill to help bring additional investment to the space transportation industry.

On June 18th, the Washington Post reported on the launching of Kazakhstan’s first satellite and their catapult into the space transportation industry. Home to the world’s largest space center, the Baikonur Cosmodrome, this ex-Soviet state is joining the list of rivals to the U.S. space industry. America’s competitive edge is declining and will continue to do so unless we act now. My colleagues and I recognize this, and this is why we are introducing this most important legislation.

U.S. satellite manufacturers face increasing pressure to consider the use of foreign launch vehicles and launch sites, due to the lack of a sufficient domestic launch capacity. The United States once dominated the commercial satellite-manufacturing field with an average market share of 83 percent;
Commercial space transportation is a growing part of the U.S. economy. In 2005, the commercial launch market was a $56.5 billion industry, more than half of this economic activity exceeds $1.5 to $3.0 billion to the U.S. economy. A commercial investment in the space industry is estimated to create nearly $98.1 billion dollars in economic activity, over $25 billion in earnings, and over 550,000 jobs; and $56.5 billion, more than half of this economic activity, was from satellite services. The overwhelming public support for space exploration. Roughly 80 percent of Americans agree that “America’s space program helps give America the scientific and technological edge it needs to compete in the international marketplace.” And 76 percent agree that our space program “benefits the nation’s economy” and inspires “students to pursue careers in technical fields.” The space industry has led to a number of “spin-off” technologies—those influenced by space technology research and development. Home roof insulation and air filtration, antilock brakes, athletic shoes, vehicle protections, and surgery all owe thanks to NASA and space-based research. The list of space “spin-off” technologies is estimated to exceed 40,000. These related technologies have helped employ tens of millions. Encouraging commercial investment in the space industry and increasing U.S. marketshare in this industry will certainly lead to additional innovation and technology that will impact other fields.

As you can see, this once government-dominated industry is now becoming a diverse mix of government and commercial entities—also leading way into future avenues of commercial space transportation, such as space tourism.

The increase in recent commercial launches includes the debut of the first commercial crewed suborbital launches on Spaceport America, the way to the future of public space travel. “Space tourism,” as public space travel is now referred, has the potential to become a major growth industry. Recent market studies have shown space tourism has the potential to become a $655 billion-dollar industry within 20 years. Even though the average American may not be able to participate in public space travel, its potential impact on our economy and international competitiveness is something to be appreciated. Space tourism industry players expect there to be a market demand of at least 15,000 Americans per year to travel into suborbit and orbital flights. The Spaceport Equity Act would require at least 665 launches per year by 2010. If the United States continues as is, we will only be able to capture 10 percent market share, at best, of this emerging industry. If needed infrastructure is added, however, the United States is expected to pick up 60 to 70 percent of space flight demand by 2010. Every launch that we do not provide for in the United States means a loss to our economy and a gain for our international competitors. The Federal Aviation Administration’s Commercial Space Transportation Division expects a $3 billion dollar loss to our economy if we do not meet the rising demand for space tourism.

Currently, U.S. launch facilities are few and most are owned and operated by the Federal Government, putting commercial users in direct competition with the U.S. military, NASA, and other Government entities, which get priority over commercial projects. If the United States is to remain competitive in the commercial space industry, added and improved infrastructure will be needed to support this growing industry.

On a more local note, my own State of Florida could stand to gain much by way of economic development from increased investment in spaceport infrastructure. According to recent studies by the Florida Space Authority, increased spaceport infrastructure and activity in Florida could mean as much as $29.7 million in additional economic activity by the year 2015—this does not include the economic activity generated from impacted tourism, secondary contracts, and spinoff technologies. Other modes of transportation—highways, airports, and seaports—currently enjoy a tax incentive for meeting their infrastructure needs, so why not spaceports?

This Spaceport Equity Act of 2006 would provide spaceports with the same treatment provided for airports, seaports, rail, and other transit projects under the exempt facility bond program. With interest rates on the rise, our Nation’s spaceports are a vital component of the infrastructure needed to expand and enhance the U.S. role in the international space arena. The Spaceport Equity Act is an important step to increasing our competitiveness in this field because it will stimulate investment in expanding and modernizing our space launch facilities and lower the costs of financing spaceport projects.

Since 1968, tax-exempt bonds have played a crucial role in meeting airport investment needs, with 50 percent or more of major airport projects being financed through municipal tax-exempt bonds. By extending this favorable tax treatment to spaceports, this bill will help meet spaceport needs and increase our Nation’s ability to compete with expanded international interests in space exploration and technology. Similar legislation has been considered since 1997, but we cannot afford to wait any longer to address the needs of this important sector.

This proposal does not provide direct Federal spending for our commercial space transportation industry but, rather, imposes conditions necessary to stimulate private capital investment in industry infrastructure. By issuing tax-free bonds to finance spaceport infrastructure, space authorities could provide site-specific and vehicle-specific tailoring to promote the competition and innovation necessary to maintain the U.S. competitive edge in the space transportation industry.

This is an efficient means for achieving our space transportation needs, and I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join us in this most important effort by cosponsoring this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S. 3710. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to improve retention of public elementary and secondary school teachers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Teacher Center Act of 2006, to help establish and fund teacher centers across the Nation. Its purpose is to help teachers incorporate new research into their daily routines, and support our teachers. Today, about half of all teachers who enter the profession leave the classroom within five years. That’s an unacceptable loss—the 5-year mark is just the time when teachers have mastered their work and are consistently able to improve the education of their students.

Too often, teachers lack the training and support needed to do well in the classroom. Eliminating this deficit can make all the difference in their decision to remain in the profession. Teacher centers can help see that teachers have the professional development and mentoring they need in order to succeed. Developing and expanding these centers is an important part of helping students succeed in the classroom.

The teacher centers model grew out of an innovative approach to supporting the professional development of teachers in England. That model enables teachers to become leaders and decision-makers in their own professional growth and in the environments in which they work. It enables them to be part of the collaborative staff development and reform that can be shared with their colleagues, as a means for reflection and improvement in their teaching practice.

Since the initial creation of teacher centers in the United States in the late 1970s, we have seen how effective they can be in supporting teachers that they can respond more effectively to student needs and help them reach the high standards now required by the No Child Left Behind Act.

Teacher centers offer valuable programs for educators who are aligned with State standards and school district curriculums. The centers support new teachers during their first years in the profession, and their peer-to-peer networks facilitate communication and collaboration among teachers to improve instruction. The centers also support the way teachers incorporate research into their daily routines, and support the use of technology and proven strategies to keep students engaged and help them do well in school.

Most important, teacher centers are essential to the development of teacher capability and leadership. The training provided is aimed at building the capability of teachers to create all of their students through differentiated instruction—a goal central to the promise of leaving no child behind. And by... taking advantage of the support provided by teacher centers, educators can have a more active role in their own professional growth and eventually hold leadership positions in their schools and communities. As we know, teachers are on the front lines in the Nation’s schools and in our efforts to improve public education. We cannot expect the quality of our classrooms to improve without in- vesting in the quality of our teachers. Teacher centers ensure that the nation’s educators have the time, resources, and support they need to work and learn with one another.

I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this bill and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 370

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

This Act may be called as the “Teacher Center Act of 2006.”

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds as follows:

(1) There are not enough qualified teachers in the Nation’s classrooms, and an unprecedented number of teachers will retire over the next 5 years. Over the next decade, the Nation will need to bring 2,000,000 new teachers into public schools.

(2) Too many teachers do not receive adequate preparation in their jobs.

(3) More than one-third of children in grades 7 through 12 are taught by a teacher who is not adequately prepared and certified in the subject being taught. Rates of “out-of-field teaching” are especially high in high-poverty schools.

(4) Teacher turnover is a serious problem, particularly in urban and rural areas. Over one-third of new teachers leave the profession within their first 3 years of teaching, and 16 teachers leave in another school or dropped out of teaching altogether.

(5) African-American, Latino, and low-income students are much less likely than other students to have highly-qualified teachers.

(6) Research shows that individual teachers have a great impact on how well their students learn. Effective teachers have been shown to be able to boost their pupils’ learning by a full grade level relative to students taught by less effective teachers.

(7) Only 16 States finance new teacher induction programs, and fewer still require inductees to be matched with mentors who teach the same subject.

(8) Large-scale studies of effective professional development have documented that student achievement and teacher learning increases when professional development is teacher-led, ongoing, and collaborative.

(9) Research shows that the characteristics of successful professional development include a focus on concrete classroom applications, professional development that involves opportunities for field teacher observation, critique, reflection, group support, and collaboration.

(10) Data on school reform shows that teachers are attracted to and continue to teach in academically challenged schools when appropriate supports are in place to help them. Such supports include high-quality induction programs, job-embedded professional development, and small classes which allow teachers to tailor instruction to meet the needs of individual students.

SEC. 3. IMPROVING RETENTION OF AND PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT FOR ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

Whereas Chief Judge Wilkins served as the elected Solicitor in South Carolina and earned the reputation as a fearless prosecuting attorney;

Whereas, in 1981, newly-elected President Ronald Reagan appointed Chief Judge Wilkins as his first appointment as President to the position of United States District Judge for the District of South Carolina;

Whereas, in 1985, President Reagan appointed Chief Judge Wilkins to be the first Chair of the United States Sentencing Commission;

Whereas, under the determined leadership of Chief Judge Wilkins, the Sentencing Commission achieved major positive changes in the Federal criminal justice system; and

Whereas, in 1986, President Reagan appointed Chief Judge Wilkins to the position of Circuit Judge for the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit;

Whereas, in 1989, Chief Judge Wilkins was elevated to the position of Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit;

Whereas Chief Judge Wilkins has served as the Chair of the Criminal Law Committee of the Judicial Conference of the United States and, as of the date of approval of this resolution, serves as a member of this Conference; and

Whereas Chief Judge Wilkins is a nationally recognized jurist and is known for his scholarship, sharp wit, and unyielding allegiance to supporting and adhering to the rule of law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) commends the National Sexual Assault Hotline for counseling and supporting more than 1,000,000 callers.

Mr. BIDEN, Mr. President. I speak today to submit a resolution with my good friend and Chair of this Judiciary Committee, Senator SPECTER. Our resolution recognizes and commends the National Sexual Assault Hotline for counseling and helping more than 1 million callers. One of the most telling statistics since passage of the Violence Against Women Act in 1994 is the number of individuals reporting rape to the authorities. Almost half—42 percent of rape victims are now stepping forward and reporting these heinous crimes to the authorities. While prior to 2002, only 31 percent reported their attacks. Each number represents a brave victim who steps forward and says out loud that she has been raped. For years, rape was a crime of shame. Our society blamed the victim. Police, lawyers, and judges focused on her conduct—what did she wear? where was she walking? was she drinking alcohol? Slowly but surely, we are working to change societal attitudes about rape and improve our criminal justice system to encourage reporting and rights of victims. RAINN, the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network, created this toll-free telephone hotline—1-800-656-4HOPE—in 1994 and manages it with 1,100 local affiliates in 50 States, and the District of Columbia. Victims from across the country can telephone the Hotline and receive confidential, trained expertise from experienced professionals with the assistance of over 10,000 volunteers. In June 2006, the Hotline received its millionth call since it first began in 1995. In 2005 alone, the Hotline helped 137,039 individuals, an average of 11,420 people a month.

The National Sexual Assault Hotline is truly a national treasure. It helps individuals and families recover from a horrible violation. It provides a safe haven for victims to talk about the crime, and offers referrals on local psychological and physical help. A call to the National Sexual Assault Hotline is often the first step towards justice for a victim. Research shows that victims who receive counseling are significantly more likely to report the assault, and more likely to fully participate in the prosecution. Every 2.5 minutes, another American is sexually assaulted. We are fortunate to have the hotline there to answer victims' calls for help and healing. The hotline's volunteers are doing God's work, and deserve our gratitude. I am proud to rise with my good friend from Pennsylvania to introduce a resolution marking the half century since passage of the Violence Against Women Act in 1994. It is my hope that by supporting and adhering to the rule of law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(2) commends the National Sexual Assault Hotline for counseling and supporting more than 1,000,000 callers.

TITLE IV—IMMIGRATION LAW REFORMS TO PREVENT SEX OFFENDERS FROM ABUSING CHILDREN

Section 2257(a)(A) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(2)(A)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating clause (v) as clause (vi); and

(2) by inserting after clause (iv) the following new clause:

images of child pornography has greatly increased the ease of possessing child pornography. Taken together, these technological advances have had the unfortunate result of greatly increasing the interstate market in child pornography.

(D) Intrafstate incidents of production, transportation, distribution, receipt, advertising, and possession of pornography as well as the transfer of custody of children for the production of child pornography, have a substantial and direct effect upon interstate commerce.

(i) Some persons engaged in the production, transportation, distribution, receipt, advertising, and possession of pornography conduct such activities entirely within the boundaries of one state. These persons are unlikely to be content with the amount of child pornography products, that is imported, distributed, receive, advertise, or possess. These persons are therefore likely to enter the interstate market in child pornography in search of additional child pornography, thereby stimulating demand in the interstate market in child pornography.

(ii) When the persons described in subparagraph (A)(vii) enter the interstate market in search of additional child pornography, they are likely to distribute the child pornography they already produce, transport, distribute, receive, advertise, or possess to persons who will distribute additional child pornography to them, thereby stimulating supply in the interstate market in child pornography.

(iii) Much of the child pornography that supplies the interstate market in child pornography is produced entirely within the boundaries of one state, is not traceable, and enters the interstate market surreptitiously. This child pornography supports demand in the interstate market in child pornography and is essential to its existence.

(F) Federal control of the intrastate incidents of production, transportation, distribution, receipt, advertising, and possession of child pornography, as well as the intrastate transfer of custody of children for the production of child pornography, will cause some persons engaged in such intrastate activities to cease all such activities, thereby reducing both supply and demand in the interstate market for child pornography.

(G) Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The effect of the intrastate production, transportation, distribution, receipt, advertising, and possession of child pornography on the interstate market in child pornography.

(A) The illegal production, transportation, distribution, receipt, advertising and possession of child pornography, as defined in section 2256(8) of title 18, United States Code, as well as the transfer of custody of children for the production of child pornography, is harmful to the physical, emotional and mental health of the children depicted in child pornography and has a substantial and detrimental effect on society as a whole.

(B) A substantial interstate market in child pornography exists, including not only a multimillion dollar industry, but also a nationwide network of individuals openly advertising and seeking to exploit children in child pornography.

(C) The interstate market in child pornography is carried on to a substantial extent through the mails and other instrumentalities of interstate commerce, such as the Internet.

(D) In every instance of viewing images of child pornography a renewed violation of the privacy of the victims and a repetition of the victimization by the defendant.

(E) Child pornography constitutes prima facie contraband, and as such should not be distributed to, or copied by, child pornography defendants or their attorneys.

(F) It is imperative to prohibit the reproduction of child pornography in criminal cases so as to avoid repeated violation and abuse of victims, so long as the government makes reasonable accommodations for the inspection, viewing, and examination of such materials for the purposes of mounting a criminal defense.

(f) FINDINGS.—Congress finds as follows:

(1) More than 200,000 Americans each year are victims of sexual assault, according to the Department of Justice.

(2) In 2004, 1 American was sexually assaulted every 2.5 minutes.

(3) One of every 133 people, in America has been the victim of a completed or attempted rape, according to the Department of Justice.

(4) The Federal Bureau of Investigation ranks rape second in the hierarchy of violent crimes for its Uniform Crime Reports, trailing only murder.

(5) The Federal Government, through the Victims of Crime Act, Violence Against Women Act, and other laws, has long played a role in providing services to sexual assault victims and in seeking policies to increase the number of rapists brought to justice.

(6) Research suggests that sexual assault victims who receive support are more likely to report their attack to the police and to participate in the prosecution of the offender.

(7) Due in part to the combined efforts of law enforcement officials at the local, State, and Federal level, as well as the efforts of the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN) and affiliated rape crisis centers across the United States, sexual violence in America has fallen by more than half since 1994.

(8) RAINN, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit corporation headquartered in the District of Columbia, has since 1994 provided help to victims of sexual assault and educated the public about sexual assault prevention, prosecution, and recovery.

(9) RAINN established and continues to operate the National Sexual Assault Hotline, a free, confidential telephone hotline that provides help, 24 hours a day, to victims nationally.

(10) More than 1,100 local rape crisis centers in the 50 States and the District of Columbia partner with RAINN and are members of the National Sexual Assault Hotline Network (which serves more than 970,000 people since its inception in 1994).

(11) To better serve victims of sexual assault, 80 percent of whom are under age 30 and 44 percent of whom are under age 18, RAINN will soon launch the National Sexual Assault Online Hotline, the web’s first secure hotline service offering live help 24 hours a day.

(12) Congress and the Department of Justice have given RAINN funding to conduct its crucial work.

(13) RAINN is a national model of public/private partnership, raising private sector funds to match congressional appropriations and receiving extensive private in-kind support, including advanced technology provided by the communications and technology industries to launch the National Sexual Assault Hotline and the National Sexual Assault Online Hotline.

(14) Worth magazine selected RAINN as one of “America’s 100 Best Charities”, in recognition of the organization’s “efficiency and effectiveness.”

(15) In fiscal year 2005, RAINN spent more than 91 cents of every dollar received directly on programs services.

(16) The demand for RAINN’s services is growing dramatically, as evidenced by the fact that, in 2005, the National Sexual Assault Hotline helped 137,069 people, an all-time record.

(17) The programs sponsored by RAINN and its local affiliates have contributed to the increase in the percentage of women who report their rape to law enforcement.

(18) According to a recent poll, 92 percent of American women said that fighting sexual and domestic violence should be a top public policy priority (a higher percentage than chose health care, child care, or any other issue).

(19) Authorizing Federal funds for RAINN’s national programs would promote continued progress with this interstate problem and would make a significant difference in the prosecution of rapists and the overall incidence of sexual violence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, today has been a busy and productive day in the Senate—quite a historic day in many ways. We passed the Voting Rights Act, significant legislation on which we had very good debate and discussion over the course of the day. It is a bill that has been passed by the House of Representatives last week and was passed through our Judiciary Committee yesterday, came to the floor today, and passed a few moments ago.

We confirmed four of the President’s judicial nominations and about an hour ago we passed the Adam Walsh bill, a bill that establishes a national sex offender registry that toughens penalties for crimes against children that directly, and in a tough fashion, combats Internet predators and child pornography and child exploitation, that prevents abuse. I mentioned in my remarks a few moments ago, four children die as a result of child abuse every day, and although a lot of States do have registries, this information is not shared with other States.

I am delighted we were able to create this national child abuse registry which, indeed, will make such a difference in people’s lives.

As I mentioned earlier, also, we will not have any votes during tomorrow’s session. We are working on some further agreements for tomorrow’s session, and on Friday I will have an update as to the schedule for Monday and Tuesday.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 3711

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I understand there is a bill at the desk. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please report the title of the bill for the first time.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3711) to enhance the energy independence and security of the United States by providing for exploration, development and production activities for mineral resources in the Gulf of Mexico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRIST. I now ask for a second reading and in order to place the bill on the calendar under the provisions of rule XIV, I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.
Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, that particular bill is a bill that I hope we can address in the near future, a bill that will make available, once we address and pass it, a billion barrels of oil and over five trillion cubic feet of natural gas that this country does not see. It is a very important bill we will be addressing in the very near future.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW
Mr. FRIST. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask the Senate to stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 8 p.m. adjourned until Friday, July 21, 2006, at 9:30 a.m.

TRIBUTE TO THE PAST AND CURRENT MEMBERS OF THE COMMUNITY THAT HAVE MADE THE SUGAR PLANT IN FORT MORGAN, CO. A SUCCESS

HON. MARYLIN N. MUSGRAVE OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 20, 2006

Mrs. MUSGRAVE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the past and current members of the community that have made the Sugar Plant in Fort Morgan, CO, a success. They are now observing the plant’s Centennial Celebration. For 100 years the sugar plant has significantly impacted the economy of north-eastern Colorado.

Sugar beets became a major crop in the Fort Morgan area in 1905. People in the community realized the potential impact of the sugar industry and began to drive to get a sugar factory constructed. A contract for construction was made with the provision that area farmers would agree to raise 1,500 acres of beets the first year, increasing to 3,500 acres the following years.

On August 31, 1905, the last day to contract the required beet acres, the committee was short 1,250 acres. Fort Morgan Mayor Farnsworth issued a proclamation for all business places to close from 2–2:30 p.m. so the entire community could focus their efforts to ensure a successful campaign. The first beets were sliced on December 26, 1906. The campaign lasted 55 days and 17,000 tons of beets were sliced. Lack of adequate water was a handicap in the early days, but in 1912 a well system and pumping plant was provided at the South Platte River to end the trouble.

The establishment of the sugar plant had several economic advantages for the area. The value of the land was increased, irrigated acreage jumped from $40/acre to $200–250/acre. Cattle feeding started in the area that used beet tops and beet pulp, giving year round employment to hired hands who had previously been out of work during the winter months. The first beet crop brought $1,000,000 in cash into the county and the population of the county grew during that year by nearly 2,500.

The Tate & Lyle company acquired 6 operating plants from the Great Western Sugar Company in 1985 and 1986, including the Fort Morgan Plant. In the late 1990s Tate & Lyle decided to sell their sugar holdings in the United States. The growers in the four state area decided that if they were going to keep the sugar beet industry they would have to become owners themselves. The Western Sugar Cooperative was formed when over 1,000 individuals stepped forward and invested their trust and dollars into the purchase of the Western Sugar Company. After a number of false starts and many frustrating months, the purchase was closed on April 30, 2002.

The 2006 campaign saw 745,169 tons of beets sliced in 139 days, producing a net

1,660,132 hundredweight of refined sugar. The payroll for fiscal year 2005 in Fort Morgan was $5,325,349 for 90 year-round workers and approximately 98 seasonal workers.

Throughout the years there have been 21 other sugar factories under various companies in Colorado. The Tate & Lyle company had the Fort Morgan plant. Many changes have taken place during the past 100 years, however, the sugar factory remains an integral part of the agricultural and business communities.

I am proud to honor the Great Western Sugar Company and the Fort Morgan Sugar Plant for 100 years of successful sugar production and the positive impact it has had on families and communities in northeast Colorado.

CONGRATULATING ISRAEL’S MAGEN DAVID ADOM SOCIETY

SPRECH OF

HON. RAHM EMANUEL
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 18, 2006

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Con. Res. 435, congratulating the Magen David Adom Society on its admission as a full member into the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement.

The Magen David Adom Society has a long and distinguished history of providing humanitarian assistance. Founded in 1930, this remarkable organization has provided first aid and disaster assistance to all of those in need, and has functioned as Israel’s National Red Cross Society for over half a century.

Primarily a volunteer organization, the MDA provides aid to nearly 600,000 Israeli citizens each year and supplies 98% of Israel’s domestic blood services. The MDA has also been deeply involved in providing assistance to international crises including the recent flooding in Romania and the aftermath of the Southeast Asian Tsunami.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the ICRC’s decision to include the Magen David Adom Society on its membership and commend the MDA on its continuing contributions to the welfare of so many.

CONDEMNING THE RECENT ATTACKS AGAINST THE STATE OF ISRAEL

SPRECH OF

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 19, 2006

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Speaker, as a Jew, as someone who loves Israel, and as a member of Congress, I stand in solidarity with the people of Israel.

I remain committed to a peace process for Israel’s security and for the future of the Middle East. Unfortunately, that peace process and the relative calm that has been the reality in the region in recent months were violently attacked at dawn on June 25th when a Hamas terrorist infiltrated Israel through a tunnel, murdered two Israeli soldiers, and kidnapped 19 year old Corporal Gilad Shalit. The operation was praised by the Hamas government.

This came after Israel had fully withdrawn from Gaza in September 2005, a move that offered the Palestinian people the opportunity to begin the development of their future independent state.

Then on July 12th, the Iran and Syria-supported Hezbollah terrorist organization crossed the internationally recognized border between Lebanon and Israel under a barrage of rocket and missile salvos, initially killing two Israeli soldiers and kidnapping two more. From positions in Lebanon, Hezbollah launched dozens of rockets laden with ball bearings indiscriminately at civilian communities in Israel. Israel fired flares from Lebanon in late May of the year 2000. Last week’s attack was so egregious that it prompted the leaders of Arab states, such as Saudi Arabia, Egypt, and Jordan to condemn Hezbollah’s act of vicious terrorism.

Fort Morgan, as well as the rest of the premeditated, coordinated, and unprovoked terrorist attacks on Israel, from territory that Israel voluntarily conceded in an effort to promote peace and regional security, are absolutely indefensible. Hamas and Hezbollah bear direct responsibility for this current conflict.

Hezbollah receives military, financial and political support from Iran and Syria, with Iran providing the terrorist group with an estimated $100 million annually. Regular weapons shipments including Katyusha rockets, new long-range ballistic missiles, Chinese-made anti-ship missiles, mortars, anti-tank missiles, mines, explosives and small arms are sent to Hezbollah from Tehran through Damascus.

Iran and Syria have provided Hezbollah with more than 10,000 rockets, including shorter-range Katyushas and more sophisticated longer-range weapons, which the terrorist group is now firing at major Israeli population centers across northern Israel and beyond. In fact, on July 14th, Hezbollah used a Silkworm cruise missile to attack an Israeli ship, killing four sailors and yesterday, rockets slammed into a Christian-Arab neighborhood of Nazareth, a city respected by people of all faiths around the world.

Both Syrian President Bashar Assad and Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad have met with Hezbollah Secretary General Hassan Nasrallah in the last year to reaffirm their ties to the terrorist group. Ahmadinejad promised to continue to support Hezbollah’s struggle against the “enemies of Islam.”

Israel and American officials believe Hezbollah would not have attacked Israel without a green light from its patrons in Damascus and Tehran, and the leaders of both countries... have subsequently expressed strong support for the attacks on Israel.

The United States Congress has already enacted several laws, including the Syria Accountability and Lebanese Sovereignty Restoration Act, and the Iran and Libya Sanctions Act, all of which call for the imposition of sanctions on Syria and Iran for, among other things, their support for terrorism and terrorist organizations. We must insist that President Bush use all the tools of political, diplomatic, and economic sanctions available to the Government of the United States against the Governments of Syria and Iran.

Sadly and frighteningly, Hezbollah remains off the European Union’s (EU) terrorist list. This means that European nationals continue to provide Hezbollah with material support to this day. President Bush and Secretary of State Rice must make an immediate push with our European allies to have Hezbollah added to the EU terrorist list.

Israel has the responsibility to defend its citizens and cannot be expected to tolerate the violent provocations Hamas and Hezbollah committed this month. And while I am convinced that Israel is using every possible effort to avoid civilian casualties, it has become clear that the terrorists in Hamas and Hezbollah stage their actions from within civilian communities, thereby intentionally putting civilians at risk. Israel must do what is necessary to defend itself while continuing to make every effort to avoid civilian casualties.

As the New York Times stated: “Kidnapping Israeli soldiers to use as bargaining chips for the release of Arab prisoners is horrible behavior for groups that claim international recognition and political legitimacy, as Hamas and Hezbollah do. The same applies to lobbing rockets over Israel’s borders in the hope that they might kill unsuspecting civilians.”

It is long past due for the international community to implement fully UN Security Council Resolution 1559, adopted in September 2004, which calls for the Lebanese army to secure southern Lebanon’s border and for Hezbollah to be disarmed and disbanded. Lebanon cannot be free and democratic so long as Hezbollah continues to operate as a state within a state, complete with its own army.

Regarding the Palestinians, the peace process will continue to be under attack until Hamas denounces its violent charter, rejects terrorism, and recognizes Israel’s right to exist and decide is it more important to build a Palestinian state than destroy the Jewish State. I encourage Israeli leaders to maintain a dialogue with moderates within the Palestinian Authority in order to keep hope of a two-state solution in the near future alive.

But in the meantime, the United States must stand by its friend and ally, Israel, and the Bush Administration must actively engage itself in seeking a resolution to this situation. As a first step to restoring calm, the kidnapped Israeli soldier in Lebanon must be returned unconditionally and unharmed, and the indiscriminate rocket attacks on Israeli civilians by Hamas and Hezbollah must end immediately.

I strongly encourage all of my colleagues to support H. Res. 921.

CONDEMN THE RECENT ATTACKS AGAINST THE STATE OF ISRAEL

SPEECH OF
HON. BETTY MCCOLLUM OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, July 19, 2006
Ms. MCCOLLUM of Minnesota. Madam Speaker, today the world watches with sadness and grave concern as the Middle East is at war, civilians are being killed and maimed, and the possibility of a region-wide conflict grows by the day. People around the world watch this violence and ask what are the world’s leaders doing to stop the killing, to end the bloodshed? We hear tough words, satellite television diplomacy, accusations and excuses, but no action or urgency to end the violence. With this type of global response we can all be tragically assured that our television will continue to show the horror, destruction and the suffering faces of innocents in Israel and Lebanon for some time to come. I extend my prayers and heartfelt sympathy to the citizens of Israel and Lebanon who are suffering and grieving. Allow me to also extend my sympathies to Canada which also had citizens tragically killed in this conflict. In light of Israel’s efforts to maintain that destruction of infrastructure, it would be my hope and desire that the international community, led by the United States, would immediately start the difficult work of brokering a cessation to the killing and the start of a process to resolve this conflict through diplomacy rather than destruction of infrastructure. This is essential to allow the thousands of U.S. citizens to be safely evacuated out of Lebanon, as well as to prevent a much larger regional conflict from starting.

The entire world knows that Hezbollah, a terrorist organization, has provoked this conflict by illegally entering the sovereignty territory of Israel on the border with Lebanon, abducting two Israeli soldiers and killing eight more. Today, this House rightly condemns this act and Hezbollah’s on-going acts of terror with the passage of H. Res. 921.

The United States has a profound national interest in the security of Israel. The right of Israel and all sovereign nations to be secure and defend themselves from acts of violence and terror is clearly defined in international law. The action of Hezbollah to enter Israel on July 12, 2006 and commit acts of kidnapping and terror demands a focused military response that sends a clear message that terrorism will not be tolerated. The firing of rockets into Israel and other acts of terror demands a response that is proportional and proportional response against Hezbollah.

Yet, today, after a week of open war, there is the on-going destruction of civilian infrastructure in both Hafia and Beirut and more than 300 dead in Lebanon and at least 25 dead in Israel, overwhelmingly innocent civilians on both sides. In the near term, there is no prospect of security for Israel or Lebanese civilians, only more death, destruction, fear and suffering on both sides. It is time for the international community to change this hopeless dynamic and start to work to end this war using diplomatic power before it escalates and spreads throughout the entire Middle East. On the day of Hezbollah’s incursion into Israel, Prime Minister Ehud Olmert said, “I want to make clear that the event this morning is not a terror act, but an act of a sovereign state that attacked Israel without reason.” This statement explicitly attributes to the Lebanese Republic the responsibility for this aggression against the State of Israel. This is of concern since there has been no evidence put forth that the nascent government of Lebanese Prime Minister Faud Siniora has any knowledge of or sanctioned Hezbollah’s terrorist act.

Lebanon is being bombed, ripped apart, in response to Hezbollah’s terrorism. This strategic response may offer short-term security for Israel, but it also has the very real potential of transforming Lebanon into a radicalized, failed state. How will Lebanon recover politically and economically when this war ends? It is inconceivable that when the bombing stops there will suddenly be an international outpouring of generous donors willing to spend billions of dollars to rebuild Lebanon’s destroyed infrastructure, re-invest in its evaporated economy, and salvage its threatened democracy. It is much more likely that a new generation will be radicalized by the loss of hope in the future. At this moment, the prospect of a land bridge—a terrorist highway—of failed states and rogue nations stretching from the Mediterranean Sea to the Persian Gulf is not just a military, but a political and poses a major threat to global security.

I am disturbed at the diplomatic impotence of the Bush administration as it plays the role of a spectator watching this war escalate and the death-toll mount. United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan is correct and I commend for moving forward quickly to marshal international support to negotiate an immediate cease fire. I believe President Bush should join him in working to make a cease fire a reality. Furthermore, I strongly agree with Mr. Annan’s call for a significant multinational force in Lebanon to secure the border with Israel, eliminate Hezbollah’s military capacity, and help to establish the presence of whatever Lebanese army remains to enforce UN Security Council Resolution 1559.

I urge there be no course here in the United States that oppose diplomacy and are comfortably dismissive of the death, destruction, and long-term consequences of this war. Today, an editorial in the Washington Post dismisses diplomacy by saying, “If Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice makes the mistake of visiting Damascus, Mr. Assad will roll out the red carpet; then he will offer to stop the rocket and missile fire against Israel by Hezbollah and Hamas, on Syria’s terms. The result will be to restore Damascus’s influence over Hezbollah and its dependent, pro-Hezbollah government in Beirut—which has far more to fear from such a deal than from Israel’s cratering of its airport runways and bridges.” This “let them fight” sycophancy from the comfort of a safe office in the U.S. rather than a bombed out apartment or office building in Beirut ignores the obvious: Lebanon’s democracy is being destroyed and it is a country on a path to becoming a failed state, as well as a haven for terrorists for years to come, unless the international community intervenes to change the current equation and stabilizes a guarantee of security for civilians.

It is important to remember that on April 18, 2006, President Bush appeared at a White House event where he talked to hundreds of American Jews. In response to those Israelis who view the United States as a ‘fatherland,’ President Bush said, ‘I am your father. I am the one who is responsible for you. I am the one who is giving you the forces you need to defend your own government.’ To me he is our only father, to our children he is the fatherland. Out of the events of the past few days, we are losing that radical dedication to our democratic credo, our faith in the international system and its ability to create a good world.”
House with Lebanon’s Prime Minister Siniora and said, “There’s no question in my mind that Lebanon can serve as a great example of what is possible in the broader Middle East; that out of tough times the country has been through will rise a state that shows that it’s possible to bridge religious differences and live side-by-side in peace; to show that it’s possible for people to put aside past histories to live together in a way that the people want, which is, therefore, to be peace and hope and opportunity.”

Three months later Prime Minister Siniora’s nation is a war zone, Israel is under attack daily from Hezbollah rockets, and the United States is content with waiting for the outcome of a conflict which threatens our vital security interests. It is shocking, sad and disturbing turn of events.

Today we pass H. Res. 921 and recommit our support for Israel as it is under attack from a terrorist organization. Our prayers are with the families in Israel that want security, peace and hope. At the same time, my prayers are with the people of Lebanon who reject terror and have rebuilt their country over the past decade after years of civil war. Israeli cities and towns are being terrorized by Hezbollah rockets that should be targeted and destroyed, but I do not believe the massive attacks launched against civilian targets in Lebanon are justified.

The U.S. has an obligation to stand with our ally as well as advance our vital interests in the region—security for Israel and the survival of Lebanon. Defending these interests is complicated and extraordinarily difficult because Israel is not secure and Lebanon may not survive. Unfortunately, the Bush administration has chosen the path of apathy, not diplomatic action. It is absolutely essential that the U.S. engage the rgion, hold terrorists accountable, and mobilize the Arab world, along with our European allies, to end the terrorist attacks on Israel while providing Lebanon with the support and resources needed to survive and extinguish Hezbollah. To do anything less in the upcoming days allows the possibility for an escalation into a global security and economic nightmare that will bring this Middle East war home to America.

CONDEMNING THE RECENT ATTACKS AGAINST THE STATE OF ISRAEL

SPEECH OF
HON. RAHM EMANUEL
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. EMANUEL Madam Speaker, during these troubled times it is more important than ever for the United States to express its firm commitment to the State of Israel.

Since the very beginning of its existence, the State of Israel has been a vital ally of the United States, enjoying a strategic partnership based on shared democratic values, friendship, and respect.

The State of Israel was established as a sovereign and independent nation 58 years ago, and it continues to be a strong friend of the United States and a beacon of democracy in the Middle East. Our democracy must stand by democratic governments such as Israel as their existence is threatened by the forces of totalitarianism and extremism.

The people of Israel have worked tirelessly to live in peace with their neighbors in the Middle East, and I commend them for their efforts. Unfortunately, that fragile peace has been shattered by the acts of terrorists bent on death and destruction, and Israel must be allowed to defend itself against these attacks.

Today a multitude of my fellow Chicagoans will join in a rally at the Federal Plaza to express their solidarity with the State of Israel. I commend these citizens and the organizers of the rally, including the Jewish Federation of Chicago. I also commend the Jewish United Fund for its financial contributions to help move children and refugees out of the northern region until this conflict is resolved.

I wish peace and prosperity to return to the region for all of its people. But a just and lasting peace can only be achieved with an end to terrorism. We stand with the State of Israel in that fight.

STEM CELL RESEARCH ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2005—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 109-127)

SPEECH OF
HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I stand today in strong support of a veto override for H.R. 810, the Stem Cell Research Enhancement Act. It is clear that a majority of Americans and a bipartisan majority in Congress strongly support embryonic stem cell research because it could prove to be critical for some 128 million Americans who suffer from juvenile diabetes, Parkinson’s, Alzheimer’s, cancer, heart disease, spinal cord injury, cerebral palsy, and other diseases.

Stem cell research is essential for the future of medicine in America; one that should be allowed to transcend political lines so that critical gains can be made to save millions of human lives. One such life is that of my constituent, 24-year-old Bishop Abo-Salif. In his letter to me, Bishop described his daily struggle with cerebral palsy. Born in Canada, the United Kingdom, Hungary, Poland and the Ukraine looking for alternative therapies for his disease. Nothing has worked. Even though he has accomplished academic goals, he still feels he is on the sidelines. As he writes to me, “I wish to be always in the way.” However, he said that, “stem cell treatment is the only hope to overcome his condition.”

Most scientists agree that embryonic stem cell research offers the greatest hope to people like Bishop. America has always been on the cutting edge of new innovation and now we stand on the brink of groundbreaking medical advancements that would dramatically alter the lives of people such as Bishop. We must not prohibit this promising research.

But the opponents of this measure have put forward disingenuous arguments that fly in the face of widely accepted scientific research and proven potential. They wrongly portray the decision on funding for additional stem cell research as a choice between one life or another. In fact, we are choosing between disposing of embryonic stem cells or using those cells to save countless lives and advance lifesaving science in previously unrealized ways. It is incomprehensible that anyone would allow politics and personal preference to trump hard facts and science. And, like the overwhelming majority of Americans, I am deeply disappointed and dismayed over President Bush’s decision to issue his first veto on this bill, dashing the hopes so many families who are battling critical illnesses have pinned on the promising potential of stem cell research. President Bush acted to snuff out the hopes of millions of Americans only to please a small right-wing constituency which has politicized this medical issue. Once again, the Bush administration has put politics before science sadly taking hope and health away from countless Americans. We should not delay or deny the potentially lifesaving research offered by stem cell technology. Bishop and millions of other Americans are counting on us. As Bishop stated in his letter, “our hopes and dissatisfied. I urge my colleagues to vote “yes” on the veto override to H.R. 810.

PARK RIDGE, IL, July 17, 2006.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN SCHAKOWSKY: My name is Bishop Abo-Saif. I am 24 years old. Currently, I am studying for my Master’s degree in Social Work, at Dominican University, in River Forest, Illinois. However, I feel that I live in two completely different worlds. These two worlds could not be further apart. Since birth I have had severe physical limitations caused by a condition called Cerebral Palsy. I am one of the lucky few who is not affected cognitively by this devastating condition.

I am writing to you today to implore you to support H.R. 810, for this piece of legislation is vital to millions of people who are afflicted with my condition and other neurological dis/orfections. Ever since I was a child, I could not experience activities which should be experienced. Ever since I was a child, I could not experience activities which should be experienced. Ever since I was a child, I could not experience activities which should be experienced. Ever since I was a child, I could not experience activities which should be experienced.

In our efforts to beat the odds, we kept looking for alternative treatments outside the U.S. We went to Canada, the United Kingdom, Hungary, Poland and Ukraine. The success of these treatments was very limited. Our quality of life did not change much. Our insurance and the trips were arduous.

To this end, H.R. 810 holds the key to unlocking the chains that trap me and others in my condition from experiencing life as it should be experienced. Ever since I was a child, I could not experience activities which other children take for granted. I never knew how it feels like to run or jump, or hit a ball. Even now despite the fact that I have accomplished academic goals, I still feel that I am on the sidelines, so to speak. The wheelchair is always in the way.

Stem Cell treatment is the only hope to overcome this condition. Doctors have made great strides with animal experiments in the lab. It has been proven that Stem Cells have the ability to regenerate the damaged cells in the brain.

Stem Cell treatment is the catalyst for great progress in the field of medicine. It is the answer for many unsolved medical conditions. This Congress has the opportunity to make history by voting for H.R. 810, which will make a real tangible difference in the lives of millions of people like me.

Thank you.

Yours truly,

BISHOP ABO-SAIF.
This $2.5 billion loan to DM&E should not be allowed take place and taxpayers in Minnesota and across the United States should be outraged at this pork barrel corporate welfare giveaway.

LETTER OF PRESENTATION—May 8, 2006

This purpose of this report is to inform Members of Congress, the Department of Transportation, the Federal Railroad Administration ("FRA"), and others of issues surrounding the $2.5 billion loan application of the Dakota Minnesota & Eastern Railroad Corporation ("DM&E") under the Railroad Rehabilitation and Improvement Financing ("RRIF") program.

The broader purpose of the RRIF program is the improvement and expansion of the nation's railroad system. Nevertheless, the program is organized as government loans, not government grants. Therefore, borrowers must exhibit the ability to repay the loan.

In its RRIF loan review capacity, the FRA is charged with responsibility for assessing applications. Each loan application must be approved on its merits, taking into consideration (among other things) the creditworthiness of the borrower.

DM&E has filed an application for a $2,500,000,000 FRA loan. Based upon our review, we have serious concerns about the ability of DM&E to repay such a loan. We believe that the applicant may not meet the minimum requirements for the approval of such a loan.

Based on the limited available data, DM&E appears to be an undercapitalized and financially precarious company. However, because DM&E is a private company with limited financial information, we are limited in our ability to fully assess the company's financial strength or weakness. As a result, no concerned citizen has adequate information to fully assess DM&E's loan application.

The nondisclosure of the DM&E financial information contained therein, on the belief that disclosure of even rudimentary financial information would compromise the company's ability to compete in the railroad industry. However, many railroad companies are publicly held, fully disclosing detailed financial information without compromising their competitiveness.

We believe that the primary risk to DM&E of disclosure of its financial status may not be the loss of any competitive advantages, rather the disclosure of its financial weaknesses and unsuitability for the RRIF loan.

Given the available public information concerning DM&E's plans, supported with the expertise of consultants in the railroad industry, we have endeavored to construct a reasonable facsimile of what we believe DM&E's financial condition likely to be in the future. Nevertheless, the concern is the potential for the loan to be an undercapitalized and financially precarious company. However, because DM&E is a private company with limited financial information, we are limited in our ability to fully assess the company's financial strength or weakness. As a result, no concerned citizen has adequate information to fully assess DM&E's loan application.

We believe that the primary risk to DM&E is disclosure of its financial status may not be the loss of any competitive advantages, rather the disclosure of its financial weaknesses and unsuitability for the RRIF loan.

The nondisclosure of the DM&E financial information contained therein, on the belief that disclosure of even rudimentary financial information would compromise the company's ability to compete in the railroad industry. However, many railroad companies are publicly held, fully disclosing detailed financial information without compromising their competitiveness.

I urge you to show your support for protecting the right of all Americans to vote. Vote in favor of this historic reauthorization and vote against all the amendments presented today. The only true aim of these amendments is to weaken this bill and weaken our country’s democratic values.

CONDEMNING THE RECENT ATTACKS AGAINST THE STATE OF ISRAEL

SPREAD OF
HON. RUSH D. HOLT
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 19, 2006

Mr. HOLT. Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res. 921, which condemns the recent attacks against the State of Israel and supports her right to defend herself. The United States has no closer ally in the Middle East and, at this difficult and troubling time, it is essential that the United States maintain its steadfast commitment to Israel and all her people.

Today, my thoughts and prayers are with Israel, her brave citizens, the captured soldiers, and all the innocent people on both sides of the border with Lebanon and the Gaza Strip. It is important that America supports Israel as she defends herself against the deadly and destructive acts of terrorists. Those who committed these heinous attacks must know that they will not succeed in destroying the State of Israel, nor will they diminish the spirit of the Israeli people.

Each day brings more rocket attacks from Hezbollah that target innocent civilians in northern Israel. These attacks must be stopped, and to do so Israel has the right to go after the Hezbollah terrorists who launch them from southern Lebanon with the assistance of Syria and Iran.

Despite the commitment and good faith efforts made by Israel to build a lasting peace in the Middle East, the terrorist organizations Hamas and Hezbollah engaged in uncompromising attacks on Israel and kidnapped three of her soldiers. Israel withdrew from the Gaza Strip, but Hamas responded with violence. Israel withdrew from southern Lebanon, but Hezbollah responded with terrorism. These terrorist organizations are killing innocent Israelis despite every attempt to demonstrate their genuine commitment to peace.

I hope that this crisis ends soon. In fact, I think it would be beneficial if the United States helped to arrange a cease fire, but Israel will and should maintain control of her own security. The experience of the last weeks reaffirms the right of nations to defend themselves against acts of terrorism, especially by organizations that are part of sovereign governments. But there are other lessons for those who do not live in the Middle East.

First, when there are opportunities to support moderate governments, we must do so. Part of the reason Hezbollah is still in south Lebanon is because it is backed by Iran and Syria, while the government of Lebanon was left without similar strong backing from the international community, including the United States.

Second, we must also remember the fact that extremism incubates in societies ravaged by poverty, hopelessness and humiliation. We cannot eliminate terrorism simply by suppressing terrorists. We must also lift up the societies and groups upon which terrorists rely for their recruitment.

And third, when confronting terrorists, every effort must be made to help the civilians around them and prevent destruction to civilian communities. We cannot win the battle of ideas and prevail in the fight against extremism if the people we are trying to lift up are reduced to living in rubble.

Madam Speaker, the bible recounts many miracles performed by God. And miracles seemingly have helped Israel flourish since its independence. As the first Prime Minister David Ben Gurion once said, “in Israel, in order to be a realist you must believe in miracles.” I still strongly believe in the dream that has become the wonderful reality of Israel.

I urge my colleagues to support Israel and to support this important resolution.

CONDEMNING THE RECENT ATTACKS AGAINST THE STATE OF ISRAEL

SPREAD OF
HON. SCOTT GARRETT
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 19, 2006

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I rise today with full and strong support of H. Res. 920, which I believe is to be his first veto. It was in 1983 that Hezbollah killed 257 Americans when they bombed the U.S. Embassy and U.S. Marine barracks in Beirut.

Perhaps the most troubling scenario in all of this is who is actually pulling the strings in these attacks. Since its inception, Hezbollah has received active support from Iran and Syria, which provide the terrorist group with an estimated $100 million annually. Iran has also actively helped fund Hamas which has also claimed some responsibility for the kidnappings that precipitated this turmoil. Iran’s leaders have declared that “Israel should be wiped off the map.”

I urge the nations of the Middle East to join with the State of Israel in condemning the horrific actions of these evil terrorists and in promoting real peace and stability for all people of the region.

I wish the Israeli people safety and security and pray for a quick resolution in these troubling times.

SPREAD OF
HON. CAROLYN C. KILPATRICK OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 19, 2006

Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support the veto override of H.R. 810, the Stem Cell Research Enhancement Act. This bipartisan legislation would expand Federal funding for embryonic stem cell research.

The House approved this bill last year and it won U.S. Senate approval yesterday. However, despite the measure passing both Chambers of Congress, the President has vetoed the legislation, the first of his presidency. I am disappointed the President chose this bill to be his first veto.

The American Medical Association and 92 other organizations, including scientists and researchers support H.R. 810. Federal funding would enable further research to examine many new lines of stem cells—increasing the potential for cures. Each year 8,000 to 10,000 embryos created for in-vitro fertilization are destroyed. H.R. 810 would allow federally funded research of stem cells, which scientists believe can yield cures for diseases and injuries, to be harvested from surplus frozen embryos that are stored at fertility clinics and slated for destruction.

Human embryonic stem cells are prized because they can replicate themselves and become almost any type of human tissue. We all know someone who can benefit from the research. Science should prevail over politics.

President Bush’s veto is standing in the way of hope and progress in curing many diseases such as diabetes, Parkinson’s disease, Alzheimer’s disease, Lou Gehrig’s disease, some cancers, and spinal cord injuries. This veto has ignored our country’s healthcare needs and has slowed the potential to eradicate life threatening and chronic diseases.

The President did not make the right choice. This critical life-saving bill is greatly needed. I urge my colleagues to support the veto override and reaffirm Congress’ support of life-saving medical research.
PLEDGE PROTECTION ACT OF 2005

SPEECH OF

HON. RON KIND OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 19, 2006

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2389) to amend title 28, United States Code, with respect to the jurisdiction of Federal courts over certain cases and controversies involving the Pledge of Allegiance:

Mr. KIND. Mr. Chairman, I am a strong supporter of the Pledge of Allegiance. I believe “under God” should be in the Pledge of Allegiance. But what I cannot support today is legislation that basically tells the third branch of our government, go home, no thanks, we don’t need you anymore.

Judicial review has been a part of our democracy in this constitutional government for over 200 years. And now with the fancy language embodied in this legislation and other pieces of legislation that have been pending, they are trying to disrupt that delicate balance of power, the checks and balances that exist. They are trying to disrupt that delicate balance of power, the checks and balances that exist.

As an objective and conscientious journalist, Mr. Lenear developed strong ties with local, county, State and Federal government officials. Mr. Lenear’s sense of compassion for those in need reflected in his numerous volunteer efforts and leadership, which included providing tangible assistance through neighborhood programs designed to help pave a way for individuals to rise above the cycle of poverty and despair.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, please join me in honor and remembrance of Mr. John Henry Lenear, whose life and legacy served to bring critical issues into the rational light of day and whose deep sense of humanity will continue on in raising our own individual and collective humanity. I offer my deepest condolences to his entire family and to his many friends. John Henry Lenear lived his life with energy and joy, and the memories of his affable nature and kind heart will forever light the hearts of all who knew and loved him well, and will forever shine throughout Cleveland, OH and far beyond.

CONDEMNING THE RECENT ATTACKS AGAINST THE STATE OF ISRAEL

SPEECH OF

HON. HENRY BONILLA
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 20, 2006

Mr. BONILLA. Madam Speaker, I rise today to express my solidarity with the State of Israel in its ongoing struggle against terrorist organizations such as Hezbollah. Despite U.N. Resolution 1559 which demands the disarming of Hezbollah, the organization still operates as an armed force in Lebanon threatening the stability of the region and freedom throughout the world. In fact, prior to September 11, 2001, Hezbollah was responsible for more American deaths due to terrorism than any other organization. This organization continuously fires rockets into Israel, and on July 12 conducted an unprovoked attack into Israel, killing at least three soldiers and kidnapping two.

It is without question that Israel is exercising its inherent right of self-defense by taking action against Hezbollah. Israel’s military actions appear appropriate to prevent the further removal of the two kidnapped soldiers into Syria or Iran. It is clear that Hezbollah is supported by direct financial, military, and political aid from Syria and Iran, and Hezbollah also receives important support from sources within Lebanon. In fact, Iranian Revolutionary Guards continue to operate in southern Lebanon, providing support to Hezbollah and reportedly controlling its operational activities.

Congress has already enacted several laws, including the Syria Accountability and Lebanese Sovereignty Restoration Act of 2003, and the Iran and Libya Sanctions Act of 1996 which call for the imposition of sanctions on Syria and Iran for, among other things, their support for terrorism and terrorist organizations.

Israel is and will continue to be one of our greatest allies. Some examples of their cooperation include Israeli produced Unmanned Aerial Vehicles, UAV, that have been used by the United States military to identify targets, survey damage caused by bombs, and provide air support for United States soldiers. The United States military is also currently using Bradley Reactive Armor Tiles, BRAT, originally designed by the Israeli military. One hundred United States Bradley vehicles, which were installed with BRAT, overcame direct anti-armor fire and repelled each attack successfully in Iraq. Most importantly, however, Israel is among our strongest allies in the global war on terror. No free nation can allow this scourge to continue to grow and spread unchecked. The brave and proud people of Israel are standing up to terror and we must stand with them.
