

TRIBUTE TO ENOLIA P. McMILLAN

• Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to the life and legacy of Enolia P. McMillan. She was a revered and beloved civil rights leader, community leader, and educator.

Mrs. McMillan was an amazing woman with a fantastic story. She had both grace and grit, as well as a personality that would not accept the word "no" for an answer.

When they said: "You can't," she said: "I can!"

When they said: "You won't," she said: "I will!"

When they said: "Wait," she said: "Now!"

Enolia P. McMillan was born to a loving family of modest means. She fought hard for her education, while attending schools that were separate and far from equal.

She wanted to be a doctor—a pediatrician. Although she would never attend medical school, she was certainly a healer. In fact, her thesis was entitled: "The Factors Affecting Secondary Education for Negroes in Maryland Counties," which laid the groundwork for changes in education and the Supreme Court.

She cared not only about her own education but the education of others. That is why Mrs. McMillan was so at home at the NAACP. The NAACP is about empowerment and it is about equality. Mrs. McMillan understood this and focused on the grassroots, which turned the Baltimore branch into a powerhouse.

As national president, she strengthened the NAACP and brought it here to Baltimore. She didn't throw bricks—she sold bricks—to build the NAACP headquarters in Baltimore, and she always supported young leaders, like Kweisi Mfume. Always, she fought for equality and fairness, whether it was for equal pay for teachers in Maryland or for the freedom of the South African people living under apartheid.

On a personal note, I met Mrs. McMillan when I was on the Baltimore City Council. She was the president of the Baltimore Branch of the NAACP and attended every critical meeting and hearing. She also came to my office on occasion. We didn't know each other well, having come from different sides of Baltimore, but I so admired her. She took a keen interest in this spunky, chunky, feisty Baltimorean.

Her greatest passions were schools. We were ending segregation in our schools—not only tearing down old ways but building new ones. To her, the word "public" meant a lot: public schools, public libraries, and the public interest.

Mrs. McMillan was always so supportive and encouraging toward me. I would win some and I would lose some; but she always said: Keep speaking up—keep speaking out. If you were doing well, she told you. If she thought you could do better, she told you; and we did.

She had a passion for young people and spotting new leaders. She thought all young people had value and always believed in the freedom to achieve—to follow the American dream.

She would say: Barbara, fight for more books and less bombs. Fight for more libraries and fewer jails. Make sure people have drugs to fight cancer, while at the same time fighting the cancer of drugs. Fight for more jobs and make sure people turn the corner. Don't leave them standing at the corner. Most of all, she would say, Barbara, fight for the freedom to achieve.

I marvel at how mysteriously God works. I marvel that he should call Enolia McMillan in the same year as he has called four other great mothers of the civil rights movement: Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King, Victorine Adams, and Roberta March. I so admired Mrs. McMillan's passion and her activism. I am so grateful for her friendship. I will miss her leadership, her vision, and her political savvy.

The best of her lives on in all of us, as we seek to live up to her courage, conviction, and tenacity. •

25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE HERREID LIVESTOCK MARKET

• Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, today I honor the owners and operators of the Herreid Livestock Market on its 25th anniversary. Each year, hundreds of thousands of animals are moved through the sale barn to be purchased by farmers or by packers, and eventually find their way to supermarket shelves. The Herreid Livestock Market is one of the largest sale barns in the region, and has proven to be a pillar of the local community both by facilitating business and through advocacy and philanthropy.

The Herreid Livestock Market began operating in 1981. A previous sale barn in Herreid had burned down in 1978. Herman Schumacher, the late Gordie Ulmer, and the late Andy Heisler were primarily responsible for the building of the current structure. Joe Vetter quickly joined in the enterprise as an auctioneer and soon purchased a third of the business. Since then, Schumacher and Vetter have remained partners, along with various other individuals, most recently J.R. Scott. Finally, though, last summer the business was sold to Joe Varner. Scott still manages the sale barn, however, and Schumacher and Vetter remain involved as well.

In addition to operating a premier sale barn, Schumacher, Vetter, and Scott have been active in a variety of issues of vital importance to their industry. They have been active in pushing for country-of-origin labeling, helping to close the Canadian border for food safety reasons, and perhaps most notably, Schumacher was a founder of the Ranchers-Cattlemen Action Legal Fund, R-CALF. R-CALF has advocated for producers by opposing market manipulation on the part of meatpackers, working to restrict the importation of foreign cattle into the U.S., and food safety, among other areas of concern. R-CALF has now merged with the United Stockgrowers of America and has over 18,000 members. The owners of the Herreid Livestock Market have also supported access to local health care by giving large donations to the Linton Hospital Foundation and the Campbell County Clinics.

While drought conditions have caused a spike in short-term sales, the sale barn may be facing some challenging years as producers work to build their herds back up. However, I am confident that the same work ethic that has caused the Herreid Livestock Market to flourish for 25 years will allow the business to continue prospering.

On October 6, 2006, the community celebrated the Herreid Livestock Market with a free BBQ Beef Lunch before the 25th anniversary sale. I wish to congratulate the current and past owners and employees of the Herreid Livestock Market on reaching this milestone for their business, and for their years of service to the community. Once again, I commend the individuals involved in this enterprise and am pleased to see them publicly honored. •
