CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Recognizing the important contributions of African-American doctors on the event of the apology of the American Medical Association to the National Medical Association, an association of African-American doctors, for over a century of racial prejudices and wrongdoings, and for other purposes.

Whereas the American Medical Association (AMA) recently apologized to the National Medical Association (NMA), an association of African-American doctors, for its past history of racial inequality toward African-American physicians;

Whereas the AMA used the occasion to share its current efforts to increase the ranks of minority physicians and their participation in their organization;

Whereas the NMA, described as “the largest and oldest national organization representing African-American physicians and their patients in the United States”, was founded in 1895;

Whereas the NMA is headquartered in the District of Columbia and represents more than 25,000 African-American doctors;

Whereas the AMA, the largest association of physicians and medical students in the United States, was founded in 1847 and incorporated in 1897;

Whereas the AMA did not allow African-American doctors to join their organization for over a century because of their race;

Whereas in 1968, the AMA became integrated by amending its constitution and bylaws to punish racial discrimination by permitting the expulsion of constituent societies;

Whereas the AMA created the Minority Affairs Consortium in 1992, which is charged with increasing the number of underrepresented minority medical students and physicians;

Whereas the AMA established the Commission to End Healthcare Disparities in 1994, whose mission is to “collaborate proactively to increase awareness among physicians and health professionals; use evidence-based and other strategies; and advocate for action, including governmental, to eliminate disparities in health care and strengthen the health care system”;

Whereas Dr. Lonnie Bristow was named the first African-American president of AMA in 1994;

Whereas there is still work to be done, as in 1910, African-American doctors made up 2.5 percent of total doctors in United States, and in 2008, Black doctors make up only 2.2 percent of total doctors in the United States;

Whereas James Derham, born into slavery in 1757, was the first African-American to formally practice medicine, and did not attend medical school;

Whereas James McCune Smith was the first university-trained African-American doctor, graduating with a medical degree earned in Scotland in 1837;

Whereas David J. Peck was first African-American to graduate from an American medical school in 1847, and went on practice medicine in the United States;

Whereas there were 14 African-American medical schools opened after the Civil War;

Whereas Shaw University’s Leonard Medical School, located in Raleigh, North Carolina, is one of the South’s oldest historically Black colleges and universities;

Whereas Leonard Medical School was the first Black medical school in the Deep South, and the only Black medical school in North Carolina;

Whereas Leonard Medical School and its more than 400 graduates went on to play important societal roles by leading hospitals, opening libraries, and starting businesses in the healthcare field;

Whereas Leonard Medical School graduate Aaron Moore became the first African-American physician in Durham, North Carolina;

Whereas after graduating in Leonard Medical School's first graduating class, Lawson Andrew Scruggs started a tuberculosis sanatorium in Southern Pines, North Carolina, and was largely responsible for decreasing the death rate in Raleigh, North Carolina's African-American community; and

Whereas Leonard Medical School trained African-American doctors who made a positive impact on their communities and paved the way for other African-Americans to enter medicine in the future: Now, therefore, be it
