SEC. 3. FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

- (1) The United States and CARICOM countries have enjoyed long-standing friendly relations.
- (2) As an important regional partner for trade and democratic values, the Caribbean region constitutes a “Third Border” of the United States.
- (3) The decrease in tourism revenue in the aftermath of the tragic terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, had an adverse affect on the Caribbean region.
- (4) According to a 2005 World Bank Report on the Caribbean region, high rates of unemployment, particularly youth unemployment, have had severe implications on poverty and income distributions, as well as drug trafficking and addiction.
- (5) The 2005 World Bank Report also concludes that better synchronization is needed between curricula in CARICOM countries and the skills needed in evolving national and regional job markets and economies.

(6) Caribbean leaders have highlighted the need for increased educational opportunities for Caribbean students in fields that will contribute to and support an increasingly competitive regional economy.

(7) Enhancing United States cultural and educational exchange programs in CARICOM countries will expand human resources, provide opportunities that promote economic growth, and improve regional security.

(8) Many Caribbean leaders studied at the undergraduate or graduate level in the United States before returning to their respective countries to contribute toward the strengthening of democracy, the economy, or the provision of social services.

(9) From 2003 through 2005, 217 Caribbean leaders participated in exchange programs with the United States that focused on good governance, combating drug trafficking, anti-corruption, and other regional issues of concern.

(10) The Department of State currently administers public outreach programs that include cultural, academic, and citizen-exchange initiatives in CARICOM countries through the Embassy Public Affairs Sections with support from the Office of Public Diplomacy in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs.

(11) The Caribbean Center for Excellence in Teacher Training (C-CETT), a Presidential Initiative funded by the United States Agency for International Development and implemented by the University of the West Indies, works to improve the quality of reading instruction by training classroom and student teachers in seven countries of the English-speaking Caribbean. Belize, Jamaica, Grenada, St. Lucia, Guyana, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago have participated in the C-CETT as a means to reducing illiteracy in the most disadvantaged urban and remote rural areas.

(12) In Anguilla, Antigua and Barbuda, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, the Cayman Islands, the Dominican Republic, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Montserrat, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, and Trinidad and Tobago, the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the Department of State sponsors educational advisors to promote study in the United States.

(13) In the 2004–2005 academic year, approximately 14,000 Caribbean students were enrolled in United States colleges and universities.

(14) Shirley Anita Chisholm, who served as a member of the United States House of Representatives from 1968 to 1983, had family roots in the Caribbean nation of Barbados, was a staunch advocate for educational opportunity and access, and increased support for historically Black colleges and universities and other minority-serving institutions in the United States.

(b) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to establish—

(1) an educational exchange program between the United States and CARICOM countries, to be known as the “Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Program”, pursuant to section 4 of this Act to assist in educating promising students and scholars from CARICOM countries who will invest the knowledge and experiences they gain in the United States back into the community of CARICOM countries; and

SUMMARY

H.R. 176, the “Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Act of 2007” (the “Act”) establishes an educational exchange program between the United States and the nations of the Caribbean Community and Common Market, also known as CARICOM, and provides educational-related development assistance for CARICOM countries.

The Shirley A. Chisholm Educational Exchange Program will enable high school, undergraduate and graduate students, and scholars from CARICOM countries to attend public and private schools, colleges and universities in the United States. The program will emphasize activities designed to promote a greater understanding of the values and culture of the United States and will give students the option to live with a United States host family and experience life in a community. The scholarships will be offered to students who evidence merit, achievement and potential, and 40 percent of scholarships will be based on need. Participating students must agree to return to a CARICOM country within 6 months of completion of academic studies or agree to obtain employment that directly benefits the growth, progress, and development of a CARICOM country.

In addition, the Act seeks to improve primary and secondary education in CARICOM nations and to increase access to quality education for children in CARICOM countries. The Act authorizes the Secretary of State, acting through the Administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), to extend and expand upon existing educational development programs to provide teacher training, curriculum development and improvements in school administration in primary and secondary schools in CARICOM countries. The Act would allow USAID to use public-private partnerships to implement the program and it encourages the participation of Historically Black Colleges and Universities and Hispanic Serving Institutions in this effort to improve education in these nations.

BACKGROUND AND PURPOSE FOR THE LEGISLATION

The U.S. continues a long tradition of close and friendly relations with the member nations of CARICOM. Currently, the CARICOM member states are Antigua and Barbuda, The Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Montserrat, St. Lucia, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname and Trinidad and Tobago. Geographic proximity has ensured strong economic relations between the U.S. and the CARICOM nations, and the U.S. continues to be a major trading partner for CARICOM nations and a significant source of foreign investment in the region. In addition, migration from CARICOM nations to the United States has been significant over the last few decades, creating sizable Caribbean populations in states such as New York and Florida. Many Americans of Caribbean heritage make significant contributions to our economy and culture throughout the United States.

The Committee expects that the visit of CARICOM leaders to the United States in June of 2007 will serve as a key step forward in enhancing the depth and range of cooperation between the United States and the nations of the CARICOM region. This Act, and the educational exchange and development programs it creates, will play a significant role in expanding U.S. relations with CARICOM countries by investing in the people of these nations. In addition, the education initiatives in this bill will assist long-term U.S. efforts to address three key policy priorities for the region: promoting democracy, advancing free trade, and advancing poverty alleviation and social justice.

Caribbean citizens have come to the United States to pursue higher education for decades. Close to 14,000 students from the Caribbean have studied in the U.S. annually over the last few years. Student exchange programs help increase mutual cultural understanding and assist in strengthening our ties with other nations. In particular, the Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Program will ensure closer ties between Americans and our Caribbean neighbors, and will help develop leaders in the Caribbean who will have enhanced knowledge of American systems of democracy and our free market economic system.

Opportunities to study abroad have played a key role in the development of leadership throughout the CARICOM countries, impacting government, the economy and civil society in these nations. Many leaders in English-speaking countries have studied at the University of the West Indies, but many have also left the region to study in England, Canada and the United States. As an example, the current Prime Minister of Antigua and Barbuda, W. Baldwin Spencer, studied in England, Canada and Norway; the Prime Minister of Belize, Said Musa, studied in England; and the President of Haiti, Rene Préal, studied in Belgium. These leaders, and many others, chose to reinvest their education back into their nations and their home communities.

Many of the Caribbean's best and brightest have come to study in the U.S. and later obtained jobs here. They have made significant contributions to American communities and to our nation as a whole. But with their immigration to the U.S., our gain has come at a great price for the Caribbean nations they left. Over the decades, there has been a significant brain drain of talent from the Caribbean to the United States and Europe particularly. This bill seeks to address that problem by targeting young scholars who are committed to returning home, and those who are determined to contribute the knowledge and skills they gain through education in the U.S. for the betterment of their nations. By becoming leaders in business, politics, education and teaching, religion and civil society, the beneficiaries of this program can enhance job creation and opportunity in their home country, or another CARICOM nation.

CARICOM nations face significant political and social challenges and the United States shares an interest in working with these neighbors to address these issues of common concern. We continue to work with CARICOM nations on the problems of illegal drug trafficking and addiction, HIV/AIDS, severe forms of poverty and underdevelopment, income distribution distortions, and high rates of unemployment. In addition, these nations have continued to be good partners with the U.S. on regional security concerns and beneficial trade relationships. Section 2 of this Act makes explicit that assistance provided under the Act may not be provided to a country the government of which the Secretary of State has determined, for purposes of section 6(j) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (as continued in effect pursuant to the International Emergency Economic Powers Act), section 40 of the Arms Export Control Act, section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, or any other provision of law, is a government that has repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism.

The World Bank concluded that educational systems and curricula in CARICOM nations need to be adjusted to meet the needs of increasingly competitive national and regional job markets. Caribbean leaders have invited increased investment by the United States in their educational systems, and have highlighted the need for increased educational opportunities in fields that will contribute to further development of their economies in regional and international contexts.

Educational systems in the Caribbean are generally marked with high levels of participation in primary school, with steady decreases in enrollment in secondary school. Grade repetition, attrition, and space or access limitations are significant challenges in many countries. In addition, the quality of education is below international goals in many countries, though most nations show successful levels of achievement at schools primarily accessed by the nation's social elites. In fact, private sector education is a key feature of educational systems in the Caribbean: in most Caribbean countries, private schools account for more than 80% of total enrollment. While gender parity exists in most primary school systems, it skews notably to favor girls in secondary systems in many countries (with the exception of Haiti where far more boys than girls receive secondary education). Caribbean school systems are also marked by outdated curricula, under-trained teachers and teachers with low qualifications. In some nations, a substantial percentage of teachers never finished secondary school themselves. These problems are reflected in the persistent low literacy rates throughout the Caribbean where 70% of adults, 55% of them women, are unable to read and write with understanding.

Like much of the Western Hemisphere, school enrollment rates in the Caribbean are relatively high compared to many other countries in the developing world. However, primary school enrollment rates in the Caribbean lag behind those in Latin America. In 2004, Caribbean nations showed a net enrollment ratio in primary school of only 83% compared to 95% for Latin America. Large numbers of children remain outside of the primary educational systems and many enter school late, or over-age, and unprepared to learn. Over half of children not enrolled in school are girls.

Although participation in secondary school is generally expanding across the region, attrition continues to be a substantial problem in many countries. In the Bahamas, for example, the secondary school gross enrollment ratio (expressing enrollment as a percentage of the population in the corresponding age group) declined 30% between 1999 and 2004. Thus school completion is a significant challenge in some countries, with boys tending to leave school or fail to complete at a greater rate than girls. Some school systems have had success with improvement in enrollment. This ratio increased in eleven Caribbean nations, including CARICOM members Barbados, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, and St. Kitts and Nevis. Nonetheless, national and international learning assessments continue to reveal poor literacy and numerical skills, especially for students from poor or culturally excluded families in the Caribbean.

The Caribbean has particularly narrow access to tertiary education for students in the relevant age group. While the gross enrollment ratio is 29% in Latin America, it is only 6% in the Caribbean. The University of the West Indies plays an important role in providing quality university and graduate education to citizens of the Caribbean. By providing access to tertiary education in the United States, the Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Program can expand the number of university graduates in the CARICOM countries, while ensuring that these nations benefit from the educational achievements of their citizens.

In a large number of countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, fewer than 80% of teachers have received pedagogical training. Six of the eleven countries in the world with more than 50% of their secondary teachers lacking training are in the Caribbean, and are all CARICOM members: Belize, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts and Nevis, and St. Vincent and the Grenadines. The Bahamas showed a remarkable increase in teacher training in recent years (more than 60%), but the total number of teachers declined, leading to notably high student to teacher ratios and resulting overcrowded classrooms. Barbados and Montserrat showed declines in the percentage of trained teachers. In addition, requirements for teacher qualifications are sometimes low. In recent years only secondary education was required to teach in Antigua and Barbuda, St. Kitts and Nevis, and St. Vincent and the Grenadines. In numerous countries, qualification requirements are not met. In Antigua and Barbuda, for example, fewer than 50% of primary school teachers finished secondary school.

Many of these educational issues are noted in specific reports and assessments on national school systems. A 2004 national report on education produced by the Jamaican Government noted that "a number of Jamaicans are under-educated and cannot take advantage of educational and economic opportunities that may arise. . . . There is concern that output from the system does not possess the attitude and the skills required to function effectively in today's society." That report also notes the formidable challenge of access to secondary education due to inadequate space and financial restraints on families.

A 2007 World Bank project appraisal for an education program in Haiti notes that half a million children between the ages of 6 and 11 do not attend school at all in Haiti, and only half of all 6-year-olds enroll in first grade. That report indicates that a small fraction of the needed teachers are certified each year and that "teacher trainers emphasize out-dated teaching methods and trainees lack the materials they need to develop both theoretical and practical pedagogical competencies." The report notes that many children are not ready to learn; they arrive at school hungry and without energy. Furthermore, "Quality of instruction and learning is extremely poor. Curricula are outdated and in many cases inappropriate for over-age students who make up the bulk of the primary education population. Teaching practices are almost exclusively 'chalk and talk,' requiring students to recite words and phrases they frequently cannot understand."

Though Haiti faces extreme development challenges, these two reports reflect challenges faced by numerous educational systems throughout the Caribbean and throughout CARICOM nations. The United Nations has determined that external assistance will be required to achieve international "Education for All" goals in this region, especially in the least developed countries with the lowest education indicators. The "Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Act of 2007" will contribute toward assisting the CARICOM countries in developing their capacity to meet the educational challenges and goals necessary for their people to become vibrant contributors in growing national, regional and international economies.

Ranking Member

H.R. 176—Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Act of 2007

H.R. 176 would authorize a comprehensive program to improve primary and secondary education in nations in the Caribbean region and an educational exchange program with those same countries, and would authorize the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary over the 2008–2012 period for both programs.

The bill would authorize the Administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to expand existing initiatives for teacher training and community involvement in school activities. Based on information from USAID, CBO estimates that implementing this provision would require funding of $15 million a year, and would cost $2 million in 2008 and $48 million over the 2008–2012 period, assuming appropriation of the estimated amounts.

H.R. 176 also would authorize the Secretary of State to establish an exchange program for secondary and post-secondary students from the region to study in the United States, and to collaborate with Caribbean countries to establish similar opportunities for U.S. students. According to the State Department, H.R. 176 would duplicate existing efforts to facilitate exchange programs with Caribbean countries; thus, CBO estimates that implementing this provision would have no significant effect on spending subject to appropriation. Enacting the bill would not affect direct spending or receipts.

H.R. 176 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

The CBO staff contact for this estimate is Sunita D'Monte, who can be reached at 226-2840. This estimate was approved by Peter H. Fontaine, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

PERFORMANCE GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS AND DISCUSSION

Section 1. Short Title and Table of Contents.

This section provides that the short title of the Act is the “Shirley A. Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Act of 2007.”

Section 2. Definitions.

This section provides for definitions for use in the Act.

Section 3. Findings and Statement of Purpose.

This section establishes the fact that the U.S. and CARICOM have had long-standing friendly relations and that they are an important regional partner for trade and democratic values. This combination provides for characterization of the Caribbean region as a “Third Border” of the United States. This section also recognizes the adverse affect that 9/11 had on tourism revenue, which then lead to high rates of unemployment, poverty, drug trafficking and drug addiction.

It further establishes the need for better synchronization between curricula in CARICOM counties and the skills needed in the national and regional markets. This section says that enhancing the U.S. cultural and educational exchange programs in CARICOM countries will expand human resources, provide opportunities that promote economic growth, and improve regional security. Education will also strengthen democracy, the economy and provision of social services. It states that the State Department currently administers public outreach programs which focus on these areas, and others of regional concern. This section establishes the purpose of the exchange program, which is to assist in educating promising students and scholars from CARICOM counties who will then invest the knowledge and experiences back into their home communities.

Section 4. Shirley Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Program.

This section establishes the Shirley Chisholm United States-Caribbean Educational Exchange Program, named after the former Representative from New York who was a strong advocate for the Caribbean and the first American woman to run for the office of President of the United States. This section authorizes an exchange program under which secondary, undergraduate and graduate students attend a public or private school, participate in activities designed to promote a greater understanding of the values and culture of the U.S., and have the option of living with a host family or on-campus housing.

This section further establishes the elements of the program. It requires that the program offer scholarships based on merit and need, and will seek to achieve gender equality. This section limits the program to 2 years for secondary, 4 years for undergraduate, thirty months for graduate, and 1 year for post-graduate students and scholars. It further establishes that the participant agree to return to live in a CARICOM country and maintain residence in such country within 6 months, and that the residence be equal, but not exceeding 2 years, to the period of time spent in the program. This section also requires that the participant obtain employment that directly benefits the growth, progress and development of one or more CARICOM counties. The Secretary of State is given discretion to waive, shorten or alter the requirements in limited circumstances.

The Secretary is also required to consult with cooperating agencies and to make grants to those agencies. This section further requires the Secretary to establish a monitoring and evaluation program to review financial information, budget plans, adjustments to plans, graduation rates, progress of student achievements, and impacts on gender, country of origin, financial need of students and other relevant factors on the data collected. This section includes a sense of Congress that the Secretary of State should work with CARICOM countries to establish an educational exchange program that will enable American high school, undergraduate, graduate and post-graduate students and scholars to study at schools or universities in the CARICOM nations.

Section 5. Program to Provide Educational Development Assistance for CARICOM Countries.

This section authorizes the Secretary, through USAID, to establish a program to provide educational development assistance for CARICOM countries. This program shall extend and expand on existing programs to provide teacher-training, classroom and school management, modernization of curriculum, increased community involvement, and policy planning. This section requires consultation with the Secretary of Education and U.S. cooperating agencies, and the establishment of a monitoring and evaluation of the program. This section notes the sense of Congress that the Secretary of State should work with CARICOM governments to establish an educational development program that will improve and increase access to quality education for children in these nations.

Section 6. Administrative Provisions.

This section instructs the Secretary and the USAID administrator to use funds from private sources where possible, to implement the programs. It further requires that the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Education to ensure that the programs authorized are not duplicative of other U.S. educational programs for the CARICOM countries, and that the cooperating agencies and partner institutions in the CARICOM countries are accredited appropriately. This section instructs the Secretary to provide support to the cooperating agencies in fulfilling the requirements for student data reporting under the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System.

Section 7. Reporting Requirements.

Plans to implement this program are to be reported no later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. The report must include the following: a plan for selecting participants, timeline for selecting U.S. cooperating agencies, financial plan, outreach plan, and a plan for implementation which identifies the initial countries and projects a timeline for implementation.

This section also instructs the Secretary to submit updates of the report for each fiscal year. The updates are to include information on cooperating agencies, analysis of the positive and negative impacts the program is or will have on "brain drain" from the participating CARICOM countries, a description of the efforts made by the Secretary to implement the program, a description of the programs implemented in the CARICOM countries, and an evaluation of additional educational development goals.

Section 8. Authorization of Appropriations.

This section authorizes to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2008 through 2012.
