CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Expressing support for temporary protected status for Haitian nationals currently residing in the United States, and for other purposes.

Whereas in August and September 2008, two tropical storms and two hurricanes devastated Haiti and affected nearly 1,000,000 people, killing 800 people, internally displacing over 150,000 people, and damaging over 100,000 homes;

Whereas the World Bank assessed the storm damage at nearly $1,000,000,000, or about 15 percent of the gross domestic product of Haiti;

Whereas this has been the worst disaster in Haiti in 100 years;

Whereas the Government of Haiti, lead by President René Préval, faces immense political and institutional challenges, including a sharp increase in crime, especially kidnapping, and the rebuilding of the police and judicial institutions to address political and criminal violence in Haiti;

Whereas the Department of State warns United States citizens that current conditions make it unsafe to travel to Haiti;

Whereas these conditions make it dangerous and inappropriate to forcibly repatriate Haitians at this time;

Whereas the Secretary of Homeland Security may grant temporary protective status (TPS) in accordance with section 244 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1254a) to nationals of a country in which environmental or political events have occurred that make it temporarily unsafe to deport them;

Whereas the Secretary of Homeland Security has granted TPS to nationals of other countries under similar conditions, including Nicaragua and Honduras in 1999 following Hurricane Mitch, and El Salvador in 2001 following severe earthquakes;

Whereas granting Haitian nationals TPS would preserve the $1,000,000,000 in remittances sent each year to Haiti from Haitians in the United States, which currently outweigh the amount of foreign assistance given by the United States to Haiti and are crucial to the recovery of Haiti;

Whereas, on October 3, 2008, Haitian President René Prével renewed his request for TPS for Haitian nationals in the United States; and

Whereas the recent political turmoil, civil crises, and environmental disasters easily qualify Haiti for the TPS designation: Now, therefore, be it

9        turmoil; and

10           (3) acknowledges that it is in the best economic
11        and security interests of the United States for Haiti
12        to be a safe, stable, and productive country.
