The subcommittee considered and adopted the following amendment to H.R. 444:

Subcommittee Chairman Howard P. “Buck” McKeon (R-CA) offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to: (1) make clear that the Back to Work accounts would be administered through the local one-stop delivery system under the direction of local workforce investment boards; (2) require local boards to submit a plan to the state, consistent with the state plan, in order to receive an allocation to administer the accounts; (3) require states and local areas, through their respective plans, to specify safeguards to ensure the quality and integrity of services and providers, consistent with the purpose of providing flexibility and choice to individuals; (4) require the individual accepting a Back to Work account to attest that he or she was given the option to develop a personal reemployment plan; and (5) allow states to make eligible individuals who have exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits within the previous 180 days, instead of the 90 day limit in the original bill. Legislative Action

On February 25, 2013, Higher Education and Workforce Training Subcommittee Chairwoman Virginia Foxx (R–NC) introduced H.R. 803, the Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills (SKILLS) Act. The bill streamlines federal workforce development programs, strengthens the employer-driven workforce development system, expands decision-making at the local level, improves accountability and transparency, simplifies reporting requirements, encourages more training to meet in-demand job opportunities, and improves adult education and vocational rehabilitation. The legislation is substantially the same as H.R. 4297 considered by the Committee on Education and the Workforce in the 112th Congress.

On March 6, 2013, the Committee on Education and the Workforce considered H.R. 803 in legislative session and reported it favorably, as amended, to the House of Representatives by a vote of 23–0.

The committee considered and adopted the following amendments to H.R. 803:

- Subcommittee Chairwoman Virginia Foxx (R–NC) offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to extend the hold-harmless provision for state and local areas’ formula funds from one year to three years; require the Office of Management and Budget—instead of the Department of Labor—to reduce federal staff working on repealed employment and training programs; amend language regarding the closing of chronically low performing Job Corps centers; and make technical and conforming changes to the introduced bill. The amendment was adopted by a voice vote.

The amendment also changes the law’s current operating and funding schedule to align it with the federal fiscal year. The en bloc amendment was adopted by a voice vote.

- Rep. Martha Roby (R–AL) offered an amendment, en bloc with the Walberg amendment, to prohibit the use of funds under the Act for lobbying and political activities. The en bloc amendment was adopted by a voice vote.

- Rep. Susan Brooks (R–IN) offered an amendment to allow states and local areas to designate high-performing training providers who would be able to contract with local boards for group training services. Additionally, the amendment would allow state and local workforce boards to implement pay-for-performance strategies. The en bloc amendment was adopted by a voice vote.

SUMMARY

The federal government currently administers over 50 separate employment and training programs across nine different federal agencies. All of the programs overlap with at least one other program with most of the programs targeting similar populations and providing similar services. Only five of the programs have been evaluated for their effectiveness on finding employment opportunities for unemployed and underemployed workers.

The Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills (SKILLS) Act (H.R. 803), introduced by Higher Education and Workforce Training Subcommittee Chairwoman Virginia Foxx (R–NC), streamlines and eliminates 35 ineffective and duplicative programs, including 26 identified in a 2011 report by the nonpartisan Government Accountability Office (GAO). The proposal creates a single Workforce Investment Fund to assist state and local workforce leaders in developing comprehensive employment and training systems to help get Americans back to work. The bill reforms the nation’s workforce investment system authorized under the Workforce Investment Act to ensure it is producing results for all job seekers and employers by:

- Streamlining the confusing maze of workforce development programs;
- Strengthening business engagement in state and local workforce decisions;
- Increasing state and local flexibility and reducing administrative overhead;
- Supporting education and training opportunities for all adults, dislocated workers, and youth;
- Improving services at One-Stop Career Centers and promoting innovation;
- Ensuring accountability for the use of taxpayer funds; and
- Enhancing adult education and vocational rehabilitation services.

Importantly, the new structure will maintain and improve workforce development and related services offered to all Americans, including unemployed and low-skilled adults and youth, currently receiving services under these programs.

Streamlining the confusing maze of workforce development programs

The SKILLS Act builds on the work of state and local leaders, including those in Florida, Texas, and Utah, to create seamless, unified workforce development systems. As President Obama recognized in his 2012 State of the Union address, the current design of the public workforce investment system is a maze of individual programs and funding streams with various mandates, many of which provide the same or similar services. The legislation ends this fragmented federal, state, and local system that diverts limited resources from direct employment and training services for unemployed and underemployed workers.

- One Program for All Workers: The bill creates a single Workforce Investment Fund that provides formula funds to state and local workforce investment boards (WIBs) to create universal employment and training programs for all adults, unemployed workers, and youth. The new fund ensures all major workforce development services are co-located and administered through the nation's workforce investment system and One-Stop Career Centers. This change eliminates duplicative and inefficient job training programs, streamlines program administration at the federal, state, and local levels, and allows for greater coordination and collaboration among federal, state, and local programs.

- New Universal Program Structure: The Workforce Investment Fund includes a new formula for state and local areas consistent with the program's universal service structure. The formula is based on four factors: the number of individuals ages 16 through 72 in the civilian labor force; the number of unemployed individuals; the number of individuals who are experiencing long term unemployment defined as 15 weeks or more; and the number of disadvantaged youth ages 16 to 24. The program's structure:

- Allows governors to reserve up to 15 percent to carry out statewide activities, 25 percent of which may be reserved for Rapid Response Activities that provide assistance to local areas experiencing mass layoffs or plant closings and 15 percent to target services to individuals with barriers to employment and training.

- Minimizes winners and losers by including a minimum and maximum change in states' and local areas' allotment percentages and a small state minimum allotment.

- Allows the Secretary of Labor to reserve one-half of 1 percent of the total appropriation to carry out evaluations and technical assistance, set aside 1 percent of the total funds to target employment and training services directly to Indian tribes, and reserve 3.5 percent to assist areas during natural disasters. These changes allocate an overwhelming majority of federal funds to state and local areas that are empowered to get Americans back to work, and away from bureaucrats at the Department of Labor.

- Limits the administrative activities of state WIBs to 5 percent and local WIBs to 10 percent, ensuring that most state and local funds are spent on workforce investment activities that directly benefit unemployed and underemployed workers.

- Authorizes level funding, based on the FY 2012 budget, for the Workforce Investment Fund for fiscal years 2014 to 2020.

- State and Local Focus on Special Populations: The bill requires state and local WIBs to detail how they will serve dislocated workers (including displaced homemakers), low-income individuals (including recipients of public assistance such as those enrolled in the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program), long-term unemployed individuals (including individuals who have exhausted entitlement to state and federal unemployment compensation), English learners, homeless individuals, individuals training for nontraditional employment, youth (including at-risk youth and out-of-school), older workers, ex-offenders, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, refugee and entrants, veterans (including disabled and homeless veterans), and Native Americans. This change ensures all states and local areas are working to improve workforce services to special populations, instead of relying on small, targeted national programs to accomplish this goal.

- Elimination and Streamlining of Ineffective and Duplicative Programs: The bill streamlines and eliminates 35 existing job training programs that support similar activities to aid individuals in finding and retaining employment. The programs include: (1) WIA Adult Program; (2) WIA Youth Activities; (3) WIA Dislocated Workers; (4) Employment Services (ES)/Wagner-Peyser Funded Activities; (5) Community-Based Job Training Grants; (6) Veterans Workforce Investment Program; (7) National Farmworker Jobs Program—U.S. Department of Labor; (8) Native American Employment and Training; (9) WIA National Emergency Grants; (10) Reintegration of Ex-Offenders; (11) Grants to States for Training for Incarcerated Individuals; (12) YouthBuild; (13) Conservation Activities by Youth Service Organizations (Youth Conservation Corps); (14) 21st Century Workforce Commission; (15) SNAP (aka Food Stamps) Employment and Training; (16) Senior Community Service Employment Program (SCSEP); (17) Brownfield Job Training Cooperative Agreements (Environmental Workforce Development and Job Training Grants); (18) Women in Apprenticeship and Nontraditional Occupations (WANTO); (19) Second Chance Act Prisoner Reentry Initiative; (20) Refugee and Entrant Assistance—Targeted Assistance Grants; (21) Refugee and Entrant Assistance—Social Services Program; (22) Refugee and Entrant Assistance—Targeted Assistance Discretionary; (23) Projects with Industry; (24) State-Supported Employment Services Program; (25) Migrant and Seasonal Farmworkers Program—U.S. Department of Education; (26) Disabled Veterans' Outreach Program; (27) Local Veterans Employment Representative Program; (28) WIA Pilot and Demonstration Projects; (29) Workforce Innovation Fund; (30) ES Statistical Programs; (31) Green Jobs Act; (32) National Institute for Literacy; (33) Youth Opportunity Job Grants; (34) Recreational Programs; and (35) In-Service Training of Rehabilitation Personnel. The bill further requires the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to reduce federal staff working on repealed employment and training programs.

Strengthening business engagement in state and local workforce decisions

The SKILLS Act maintains the long-standing position that the nation's workforce investment system can only be successful in building the skills of job seekers and helping them secure employment if it is closely linked with employers. The bill puts the business community—the job creators—in the driver's seat, and strengthens business-led workforce investment boards to ensure the system is focused on training individuals for in-demand jobs that are growing in the state and local area.

- Stronger Business-led Boards: The bill strengthens the presence and participation of the business community on state and local WIBs by requiring business leaders, including those representing in-demand industries, to make up a two-thirds majority on the boards. Business leaders currently have a simple majority on the boards. This change ensures strategic planning focuses on identifying the gaps in the workforce to train individuals to fill available jobs.

- Stronger Business Focus: The bill requires state WIBs to develop strategies across local areas that meet the needs of employers, and ensures local WIBs provide employment and training activities that meet the needs of employers and enhance communication, coordination, and collaboration between in-demand industries and small businesses with the workforce investment system.

- Relevant to Businesses: The bill requires state and local WIBs to detail how they will more fully engage businesses in workforce investment activities, meet the needs of businesses in the state and local area, and develop industry/sector partnerships that encourage industry growth and improve worker training. The bill also includes the attainment of industry-recognized credentials as a performance outcome.

Increasing state and local flexibility and reducing administrative overhead

The SKILLS Act recognizes state and local areas should have maximum flexibility to design programs and initiatives best suited to their workers, businesses, and workforce development partners. Though WIA pushes state and local areas to develop business-friendly, customer-centric initiatives, the current system imposes hundreds of heavy-handed mandates, including mandates on who can serve on state and local boards. As a result, the mandates have created paperwork and compliance burdens. The bill streamlines the law's governance system, reducing bureaucracy and maximizing resources for unemployed and underemployed workers.

- Smaller Local and State Boards: The bill restructures local WIBs by removing all federal requirements on board membership, except business representation. State WIBs retain business representation, chief elected officials, and economic development representatives. Chief elected officials and governors have the power to appoint the remaining one-third membership of each respective board, which may include members of the state legislature and representatives of youth organizations, community colleges, labor unions, community-based organizations, veterans service organizations, and One-Stop partners. This change dramatically reduces the size of the boards, making them more manageable and focused on strategic decisions.

- Review of Outdated State Policies: The bill requires state WIBs to review and develop statewide policies and programs that support comprehensive workforce development systems, including determining whether they should consolidate additional employment and training programs into the Workforce Investment Fund for the express purpose of providing greater administrative flexibility and reducing overly burdensome paperwork requirements.

- Simplified Program Administration: The bill authorizes states to develop and submit unified state plans to the Secretary of Labor and, if they choose, to consolidate additional federal job training and social services programs into the Workforce Investment Fund. This further reduces inefficiencies in the administration of employment and training programs at the state and local levels and creates a unified workforce and economic development system. States must continue to comply, however, with all program requirements of the consolidated program. The programs include: (1) programs authorized under Titles I and II of the Workforce Investment Act; (2) programs under the Trade Adjustment Act; (3) the National Apprenticeship Act; (4) Community Services Block Grants (CSBG); (5) Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF); (6) programs under state unemployment compensation laws; (7) work programs under the Food Stamp Act; (8) the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG); and (9) Economic Development programs. The bill requires the Secretary of Labor to navigate the federal bureaucracy of each federal department or agency approving state unified plans, placing this burden on the secretary rather than on the state.

- Promoting Local Flexibility: The bill eliminates the requirement in current law that local WIBs give priority to low-income individuals. This change gives local areas additional flexibility to determine how best to get all unemployed Americans back to work and is consistent with the bill's intent to create workforce development programs that benefit all job seekers.

- Modernizing and Creating Regional Approaches to Job Creation: The bill eliminates the grandfather provisions in current law that allow certain state and local entities similar to WIBs and One-Stop Career Centers that were in existence prior to 1998 to remain in place. It requires state WIBs, in consultation with local leaders, to designate local workforce investment areas, taking into consideration existing labor market areas and economic development regions. It removes barriers that are preventing states from implementing a regional approach to providing services by ending duplicative and overlapping service delivery areas.

Supporting education and training opportunities for all adults, dislocated workers, and youth

The SKILLS Act removes barriers in current law that prevent unemployed and underemployed workers from accessing important employment and training services. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, there are more than 3.6 million job openings across the country because many employers are unable to find skilled workers. The legislation supports states and local areas in developing workforce development services that are in-demand and tailoring services to individuals that meet the needs of each job seeker.

- Dedicated Funds for Training: The bill requires local WIBs to reserve a percentage of funds, as specified by the board, to carry out training activities for job seekers. This change addresses the concern that a significant portion of employment and training funds are currently spent on infrastructure and administrative costs. The reservation ensures job training is a priority for the workforce investment system.

- Direct Access to Training: The bill combines “core services” and “intensive services” into a new category of “work ready services,” which allows individuals to receive the services that best meet their needs quickly. This change eliminates the cumbersome “sequence of services” process that individuals must go through to access training under current law.

- Reducing Burdensome Requirements: The bill allows states to determine what standards will be required for eligible training providers, streamlining the bureaucratic requirements that have forced many community colleges and other training providers out of the system. It also permits local areas to contract directly with community colleges and other institutions of higher education to provide specialized group training programs designed for employers who are looking to hire several workers with a particular skill.

The legislation allows local WIBs to develop and implement industry and sector partnerships to aid in aligning resources and training efforts among multiple firms.

- Reforms the Job Corps Program: The bill restructures Job Corps to ensure career and technical education and training is geared toward in-demand occupations and disadvantaged youth receive a regular high school diploma and/or a recognized postsecondary credential that prepares them for employment in the global economy. It establishes a new performance accountability and management system; requires the Secretary of Labor to provide technical assistance to low-performing centers, and requires all grantees to re-compete for funding, ensuring grantees are high-quality and have expertise in serving disadvantaged youth. These changes ensure at-risk youth become more employable, responsible, and productive citizens.

Improving services at one-stop career centers and promoting innovation

The SKILLS Act responds to the changing U.S. economy. States and local workforce boards should have the tools to implement and continuously improve workforce programs, including those at the 3,000 One-Stop Career Centers, to keep pace with the dynamic real time evolution of local and regional economies. The legislation supports the innovative approaches taking place at the state and local levels by maintaining and strengthening the One-Stop Career system without authorizing new and duplicative programs that empower the Secretary of Labor to pick winners and losers.

- Strengthening One-Stop Career Centers: The legislation requires state WIBs to describe how they will encourage regional cooperation within the state and foster communication and partnerships with nonprofit organizations to enhance the quality of services available to workers. The bill requires each mandatory partner program to contribute a portion of their administrative funds toward infrastructure funding. This change ensures all organizations are paying a fair share for the physical structure and administrative costs to One-Stops, ensuring employment and training dollars are spent on direct services for individuals.

- In-Demand Occupations: The bill requires local WIBs to conduct and regularly update workforce research and regional labor market analysis. This analysis is used to determine the immediate and long-term skilled workforce needs of in-demand industries and small businesses, as well as the knowledge and skills of the workforce in the area to address critical skills gaps between employers and job seekers.

- Reducing Barriers to Employment: The bill requires states to set aside 15 percent of their reserve to provide job training services to individuals with barriers to employment. These competitive grants to local WIBs and/or non-profit or for-profit organizations provide additional assistance to local areas to help hard-to-serve individuals, including individuals with disabilities and at-risk youth, obtain the skills necessary to get a job. These changes use the expertise and knowledge of the statewide workforce investment system to serve individuals who have barriers to employment, instead of continuing to support national programs operating outside of the WIA system. The bill provides maximum flexibility to state and local areas to identify the targeted population they aim to assist and build workforce development programs that address their unique needs. It also requires eligible grantees to demonstrate their capacity to achieve the best results for individuals with employment barriers and reimburses programs on their ability to achieve specified performance outcomes and criteria established by the governor.

- Increased Use of Technology: The bill encourages state and local WIBs to use technology to facilitate access of workforce development services in remote areas. The legislation allows state and local WIBs to disseminate information not only in writing, but also electronically to ensure full transparency of their actions and intentions.

- Better Services for Individuals with Disabilities: The bill requires state and local WIBs to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of individuals with disabilities and stipulates that local WIBs are to work with the area's disability community to make available comprehensive, high-quality services to individuals with disabilities.

Ensuring accountability for the use of taxpayer funds

The SKILLS Act ensures taxpayer funds are spent effectively and efficiently, and workforce development programs are helping Americans get back to work. Federal job training programs have a myriad of performance measures, many of which do not address whether or not an unemployed or underemployed worker received the appropriate training and secured employment in a particular field. As such, there is little information available to federal, state, and local policymakers on whether federal programs are making a difference in local communities. The legislation responds to last year's GAO report on multiple employment and training programs and takes a number of important steps to provide a clear picture as to the true effectiveness of federal job training programs.

- Protecting Taxpayers: The bill requires state and local WIBs to give priority to placing participants in private-sector employment, instead of continuing to grow the size of government at all levels. It also requires local WIBs, in consultation with their chief elected officials, to designate or certify One-Stop Career Center operators through competitive processes. This change eliminates the authority for public, government-led consortiums of boards and One-Stop partners to automatically manage the centers. The legislation makes state and local WIBs responsible for the use and management of employment and training funds spent in their area. Finally, the bill prohibits the use of workforce investment funds for lobbying and political activities.

- Common Performance Measures: The bill rewrites the accountability system included in current law to create common performance measures for the Workforce Investment Fund, and the Adult Education and Vocational Rehabilitation programs, to decrease burdensome administrative reporting requirements. Common measurements include the number and percentage of participants entering and retaining unsubsidized employment in the field in which the individual received training and obtaining recognized postsecondary credentials, including industry-recognized credentials. The legislation also:

- Requires state and local WIBs to disaggregate performance data to identify how particular populations are served.

- Allows governors to add additional performance measures for use within their states.

- Eliminates the unreliable customer satisfaction measure as a required performance measurement, but allows state and local WIBs to continue to use it if they choose.

- Requires the Secretary of Labor to reduce funding for those states that fail to meet performance measures for two consecutive years.

- Requires local WIBs to develop a reorganization plan if they fail to meet performance measures for two consecutive years. Currently, the reorganization plan is allowed under the law, but it is not mandatory.

- Requires governors to reduce funding for those local WIBs that fail to meet performance measures for three consecutive years.

- Transparency in Results: The bill requires state and local WIBs to report additional information to improve federal, state, and local efforts to better measure program performance and validate worker outcomes. Included in this reporting are common measurements to compare the number of individuals who receive both work-ready and training services and who successfully complete such services. The bill also requires states to maintain a central repository of policies related to access, eligibility, and availability of services electronically.

- Program Evaluations: Consistent with the recent GAO finding, the bill requires the Secretary of Labor to conduct an independent evaluation of all workforce development programs and activities at least once every five years. The evaluations must be contracted out through grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements. The results of the evaluations must be publicly available.

- Training Providers: The bill requires state WIBs to set eligibility criteria for training providers that take into account the performance of providers and whether the training programs relate to occupations that are in demand. The bill also allows state and local WIBs to implement pay-for-performance strategies, as well as designate those training providers that demonstrate the highest level of success on performance indicators to be deemed priority providers.

Enhancing adult education and vocational rehabilitation services

The SKILLS Act reauthorizes the Adult Education program, which provides funds to states to assist adults without a high school diploma to become literate and obtain the knowledge and skills necessary for postsecondary education and/or employment. The bill makes the following changes to the program:

- Increases the focus of adult education programs on the delivery of basic skills such as reading, writing, speaking, and math, and encourages integrated education and workforce development programs.
- Ensures instructional practices are evidence-based to provide the highest return on federal investments.
- Enhances delivery of services through the use of technology, including distance education, to improve the professional development of teachers and the delivery of instruction to participants.
- Requires better coordination with the business community and the workforce investment system.
- Measures performance using the common performance measures outlined for all workforce investment programs to provide national, state, and local leaders with the data needed to make informed decisions.

The SKILLS Act reauthorizes the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which provides vocational rehabilitation (VR) services to assist individuals with disabilities prepare for, obtain, and retain employment. The bill makes the following changes to the program:

- Streamlines the federal bureaucracy by redesignating the commissioner of the Rehabilitation Services Agency as a director, removing the requirement for Senate confirmation, and encouraging better collaboration for individuals with disabilities.
- Requires coordination between VR and services provided under the Assistive Technology Act.
- Includes in the state plan an assessment of transition services provided through the VR system and how those services are coordinated with services under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA).
- Includes in the state plan strategies the state will use to address the needs identified in the assessment of transition services described above.
- Requires states to use one-half of 1 percent of their VR funding to award grants to businesses in partnership with other entities to create practical job and career readiness and training programs, and provide job placements and career advancement.
- Requires states to reserve 10 percent of their formula grant funds to provide transition services to students with disabilities served under IDEA as they prepare to move out of school to post-secondary education, employment, or independent living.

- Strengthens coordination and collaboration between parent training programs under IDEA and the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.
- Measures performance using the common performance measures outlined for all workforce investment programs to provide national, state, and local leaders with the data needed to make informed decisions.

Both the Adult Education and Vocational Rehabilitation programs are mandatory partners in the One-Stop Career system and will contribute a portion of their administrative funds to the delivery infrastructure based on the state's determination. The bill limits the portion of administrative funds that VR programs are required to contribute to the proportionate use of the One-Stops by the programs in the state.

COMMITTEE VIEWS

Introduction

In March 2013, the U.S. unemployment rate stood at a staggering 7.7 percent, continuing a devastating trend of unemployment hovering around 8 percent for the last four years. At a time when millions of Americans are desperate for jobs, our nation needs a dynamic, results-oriented job training system that meets the needs of workers and helps local communities respond to an ever-changing labor market.

In 1998, Congress passed the Workforce Investment Act (WIA) to give job seekers access to important employment services, including résumé assistance, career counseling, skills assessments, labor market information, and specialized training, to help them get back to work. In the decade since the last reauthorization of the law, our economy has changed dramatically. In 1998, the federal government was running a budget surplus, unemployment was less than 5 percent, there was virtually no inflation, and workers were experiencing solid growth of monthly and yearly income. Today, our country continues to run annual trillion dollar deficits, we have a historic $16 trillion national debt, the unemployment rate has been hovering around 8 percent for the last four years, there have been growing concerns about rising inflation, and many workers continue to see stagnant wages.

Instead of responding to the changing needs of American workers and employers in the global economy, the current workforce development system is broken and antiquated. Less than half of the individuals who access services through the current workforce system get a job after taking advantage of job search, communication and interviewing skills development, on-the-job training, and other employment services. Worse, only 20 percent of workers actually receive training services that provide the important skills necessary to succeed in the workplace. According to the U.S. Department of Labor, 3.6 million jobs remain unfilled despite nearly 12 million unemployed workers. Employers largely attribute this discrepancy to the lack of a skilled workforce—the so-called “skills gap”—and many workers admit they struggle to find essential training for available jobs. In spite of the best intentions to establish a unified workforce development system 15 years ago, employers and state and local leaders still grapple with a bureaucracy that squanders taxpayer resources, stifles innovation, and stands in the way of the support and training workers need to get back on their feet.

The problems in the system haven't gone unnoticed. In January 2011, the U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO) released a report that found the federal government administers roughly 47 separate and distinct job training programs across nine agencies, costing taxpayers $18 billion annually. The report found many of these programs overlap, and few have been evaluated for efficacy. In his 2012 State of the Union address, President Barack Obama called on Congress to "cut through the maze of confusing [job] training programs." A Wall Street Journal editorial on May 9, 2012, noted "a federal job training program that puts people back to work is hard to find."

Understanding the nation's economic situation is the number one issue facing our country, the House Committee on Education and the Workforce is working to create a workforce development system that will better serve all Americans. The Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills (SKILLS) Act, H.R. 803, provides a more dynamic, flexible, and effective network of job training and education services. It empowers employers to play a key role in ensuring the system meets the needs of in-demand industries, reins in federal and state bureaucracy, and develops a more transparent and accountable performance system that ensures a return on taxpayer investments.

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE WORKFORCE INVESTMENT ACT OF 1998

Workforce development programs

In January 2011, GAO released a report entitled, Multiple Employment and Training Programs: Providing Information on Colocating Services and Consolidating Administrative Structures Could Promote Efficiencies. For fiscal year 2009, the GAO identified 47 employment and training programs across nine different federal agencies spending approximately $18 billion on employment and training services. This represents an increase of three programs and $5 billion since fiscal year 2003. Forty-four of these programs were found to overlap with at least one other program and only five of the 47 programs had been evaluated to determine whether they improved employment outcomes. In addition, 23 of the programs did not claim to conduct any type of study that reviewed performance. Through continued oversight of the workforce development system, additional job training and employment programs have been identified. As a result, the committee determined the federal government administers more than 50 employment and training programs.

The committee supports a comprehensive statewide workforce investment system that will better serve all Americans, regardless of age or economic situation. Under the current system, separate funding streams have resulted in administrative inefficiencies at the federal, state, and local levels, creating confusion for workers struggling to access the services necessary to get a job. Several of the so-called national programs, created at the urging of specific populations outside of statewide workforce development systems, largely duplicate the employment and training services provided through the nation's 3,000 One-Stop career centers and are too small to have a significant national bearing. As a result, the nation's current job training system diverts direct services and limited resources away from unemployed and underemployed workers and towards unnecessary bureaucracy. The committee believes the federal government has a responsibility to eliminate waste, fraud, and abuse of taxpayer dollars and to make the tough choices necessary to streamline ineffective and duplicative federal programs. A failure to act when confronted with such compelling evidence of waste is indefensible.

At an October 4, 2011 Subcommittee on Higher Education and Workforce Training hearing entitled, "Modernizing the Workforce Investment Act: Developing an Effective Job Training System for Workers and Employers," Kristen Cox, executive director of the Utah Department of Workforce Services, outlined the problems inherent in the current workforce investment system:

"The current design of the public workforce investment system is a maze of individual programs and funding streams with various mandates attached to each program. It is then the expectation of the states to manage through these mandates and bureaucracy and provide individuals and businesses with the employment and job training services needed, thus contributing to the improvement of the national economy. Just meeting individual program requirements, providing fiscal stewardship over each individual funding stream, tracking outcomes and results for individual programs, and implementing a business-friendly, customer-centric model around targeted program mandates is extremely inefficient by diverting finite resources from actual employment and job training services."

Mr. Bert "Van" Royal, owner of Magnolia Point Realty in Green Cove Springs, Florida, echoed this sentiment from the local business perspective. In testimony at a May 11, 2011 subcommittee hearing entitled, "Removing Inefficiencies in the Nation's Job Training Programs," he stated:

"The GAO report referenced here today describes a plethora of federal job training and employment programs. While all of them were likely created with the best of intentions, it is virtually impossible for businesses, particularly small businesses, and job seekers to know about and navigate the services of that many programs. We need a system that is simple to understand and easy to use."

In order to ensure our nation's workforce investment system is producing results for all job seekers and employers, H.R. 803 eliminates and streamlines 35 ineffective and duplicative employment and training programs, 26 of which were identified by the GAO report, and creates a single Workforce Investment Fund (WIF). The new flexible WIF program assists states and local workforce investment boards in developing a comprehensive workforce development system administered through existing One-Stop career centers that will help get Americans back to work. The new WIF streamlines the confusing maze of job training programs, decreases administrative overhead, and improves program coordination. Importantly, the new structure will maintain and improve workforce development services offered to all Americans, including those who receive services under existing workforce development programs.

In a letter to Chairman John Kline (R-MN) and Ranking Member George Miller (D-CA) dated March 5, 2013, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce endorsed this important step. The organization stated:

“Reauthorization of the Workforce Investment Act (WIA) is long overdue and the Chamber believes H.R. 803 would allow for some much-needed updates and improvements to America’s workforce and training system”

Specifically, this legislation would repeal many ineffective and duplicative federal training and employment programs. The Chamber believes this consolidation, when combined with additional state and local flexibility for the delivery of these services, would allow more adults and dislocated workers to more efficiently receive the services they need to not only find a job, but also stay employed.

The programs and their justifications for elimination and consolidation into the WIF under H.R. 803 include the following:

(In alphabetical order)

- Brownfields Job Training Cooperative Agreements (Environmental Workforce Development and Job Training Program). This program awards grants to entities that provide unemployed and underemployed people living in areas affected by solid and hazardous waste with the skills needed to secure employment in environmental fields. It has provided little return on federal investments, funding 191 job training grants over the past 12 years totaling $42 million, yet placing a mere 7,000 individuals into environmentally-related jobs over the same period of time. In addition, the program reports graduates generally pursue three paths after training, with only the first focused on the program’s mission: (1) employment in the environmental field; (2) employment in other fields; or (3) further education. Finally, funds can be used for a variety of activities not focused on providing direct job training services to participants, such as training in First Aid or CPR, costs associated with health exams, and transportation.

- Community-Based Job Training Grants. This program, which supports workforce training for high-growth/high-demand industries through community and technical colleges, has not been funded since fiscal year 2010. Further, a 2011 Senate Appropriations Committee report stated other significant funding sources exist to support community colleges for similar endeavors.

- Conservation Activities by Youth Service Organizations (Youth Conservation Corps). This program, which provides summer employment for youth ages 15–18 and work experience on public lands, is duplicative of the current workforce investment system, including Job Corps and other targeted youth programs. As reported by GAO, this program has not conducted an impact study since at least 2004. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of youth, including out-of-school youth and at-risk youth.

- Disabled Veterans' Outreach Program (DVOP). This program, which provides funds to support dedicated specialist employment positions to primarily serve disabled veterans, is duplicative of the local veterans' employment representative program. Under a recent analysis, only 17 percent of eligible veterans were found to receive "intensive" services under the DVOP program. In fiscal year 2011, only half of those participating veterans with disabilities were employed after they exited the program. The program's performance targets for fiscal year 2012 are to help even fewer veterans, 42 percent, at a time when more servicemen and women are returning home. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will furnish employment, training, support, and placement services to veterans, including disabled veterans. The bill also maintains current law provisions providing a priority of service for veterans and eligible spouses in all qualified job training programs, including the new Workforce Investment Fund.

- Employment Service (ES)/Wagner-Peyser Funded Activities and ES Statistical Programs. The ES program, which is authorized under the Wagner-Peyser Act to help job seekers with job search assistance, reported placing a dismal 48 percent of participants into employment in 2010, 25 percent of whom did not retain employment. For the past three years, the program has set a low goal of assisting less than half of participants in finding employment, ensuring the program meets its performance measurements. This low goal is especially disconcerting given the state of the economy. In addition, the program is duplicative of the core and intensive services (renamed work ready services in the SKILLS Act) already offered through One-Stop career centers. The ES Statistical Programs, which reimburse states that provide data for national statistical programs, is duplicative of those statewide activities currently funded under WIA. The SKILLS Act continues to provide states with funding to carry out statewide employment and training activities, including the collection of accurate local, regional, and national workforce and labor market information.

- Grants to States for Workplace and Community Transition Training for Incarcerated Individuals. This program, which awards grants to state correctional education agencies to assist incarcerated individuals in acquiring postsecondary education, counseling, and vocational training, did not receive funding in fiscal year 2012, nor did the Department of Education request funding for this program in the president's fiscal year 2013 budget. According to the latest data, only 26 percent of participants in this program completed their postsecondary education and training requirements. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of ex-offenders.

- Green Jobs Act. This program, which was established as a pilot program in 2009 and funded under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) to develop training programs for jobs in a range of "green" industries, has not been funded since fiscal year 2010. In September 2011, the Department of Labor's Inspector General (IG) reported that out of $435.4 million allocated for green jobs training programs under ARRA, only $162.8 million had been expended by grantees. In addition, the IG found that grantees reported serving just 52,762 (42 percent) of the targeted 124,893 participants and only placed 8,035 participants out of the targeted 79,854 participants in jobs.

- Local Veterans' Employment Representative Program (LVER). This program, which provides dedicated staff employment positions primarily at One-Stop career centers to assist veterans, has demonstrated poor results. Under a fiscal year 2009 analysis, only 22 percent of eligible veterans received direct "intensive" services under the LVER program. In fiscal year 2011, only half of participating veterans were employed after they exited the program. The program's performance targets for fiscal year 2012 are lower, despite increasing numbers of servicemen and women returning home. State and local areas also lack sufficient data to determine whether LVER or regular One-Stop career center staff is responsible for delivering services to veterans. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act integrates the LVER program into the One-Stop career system, requiring local areas to hire and employ specialists to carry out employment, training, and placement services for our nation's veterans. These specialists will also conduct outreach to local employers to assist veterans in gaining employment.

- National Farmworker Job Program (U.S. Department of Labor). This program, which provides job training and employment development services to migrant and seasonal farmworkers, duplicates the efforts of the larger WIA programs that provide funds to state and local workforce investment areas to carry out workforce development activities. Under current law, migrant and seasonal farmworkers receive employment and training services through the nation's 3,000 One-Stop career centers. According to the Department of Labor's program year 2010 quarterly state data reports, more than half of individuals participating in the program did not receive training services and even fewer completed training. In 2003, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) found more than 60 percent of the program's participants received only supportive services like emergency cash assistance. GAO reports the program has not conducted an impact study since at least 2004. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of migrant and seasonal farmworkers.

- National Institute for Literacy (NIFL). The institute, which is an independent office charged with providing national leadership on literacy, has not received funding since fiscal year 2010. In 2010, the Obama Administration proposed eliminating the program, stating, "The Administration believes that NIFL's broad mission and the lack of clear management oversight have led to a diffuse and incoherent system of delivery as well as duplication of efforts with other Department of Education and Federal offices." In addition, nearly half of NIFL's $6.5 million 2009 appropriation was targeted to support expenses for personnel and overhead.

- Native American Employment and Training. This program, which supports employment and training activities for Indian, Alaska Native, and Native Hawaiian individuals, tracks only a few outcomes and does not measure whether former participants are experiencing wage gains after exiting the program. The Department of Labor has set the bar low by putting in place a goal of finding employment for just 57 percent of participants, despite high unemployment numbers facing this population. As reported by GAO, this program has not conducted an impact study since at least 2004. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires the Secretary of Labor to reserve up to one percent of the Workforce Investment Fund to provide employment and training services to Indian tribes. It also requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of Native Americans.

- Refugee Job Training Programs. There are three job training programs dedicated to providing employment and training services to refugees and new entrants, including the Refugee and Entrant Assistance Targeted Assistance Grants, the Refugee and Entrant Assistance Social Services Program, and the Refugee and Entrant Assistance Targeted Discretionary Program. These programs are duplicative of the main workforce investment system, which is a universal access system designed to help unemployed and underemployed individuals gain the skills required by in-demand industries. Instead of separate stand-alone programs, the SKILLS Act amends these provisions to better align with the current workforce investment system and requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of refugees and entrants.

- Reintegration of Ex-Offenders. This program, which provides grants to serve repeat adult offenders and youth involved or at-risk of being involved in crime or violence, placed roughly half of participants into employment. The Department of Labor's program goals for 2013 do not aim to raise the percentages substantially, targeting just 59 percent of participants to enter employment. In addition, the program costs more than $6,681 per person, significantly more money than programs with similar functions. In 2009, the program utilized only 80 percent of its total appropriation toward employment and training activities, even though training is integral to its stated goal of helping former inmates reenter the workforce. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of ex-offenders.

- Second Chance Act Prisoner Reentry Initiative. This program, which aims to help juvenile and adult inmates successfully reintegrate into society, utilized only 70 percent of its funds to focus on employment and training activities and has not conducted an impact study as reported by the GAO. In addition, under a 2010 analysis, the Department of Justice's IG found the Office of Justice Programs did not adequately define key terms essential for determining whether program goals were met, did not require grantees to identify baseline recidivism rates needed to calculate changes in recidivism, and failed to analyze performance measurement data. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act amends these provisions to better align with the current workforce investment system and requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of ex-offenders.

- Senior Community Service Employment Program (SCSEP). This program supports employment of older workers by providing part-time paid community service positions, as well as training for unemployed, low-income individuals age 55 and older. In program year 2012, it placed fewer than half of program participants into employment and, of those, only 65 percent retained employment. In addition, the six-month average earnings for program participants were $7,000, yet it cost more than $6,000 to serve each participant. In January 2012, the Department of Labor added a new performance metric to the program to require grantees to measure the number of participants who enter into volunteer service. Though this metric will likely produce dramatic improvements in the program's performance, it is contrary to the program's goal to get older Americans into paid positions. Finally, the president's fiscal year 2013 budget proposal requests to move SCSEP to the Department of Health and Human Services' (HHS) Administration on Aging, confirming the administration's new focus for SCSEP on community service, not job training services. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of dislocated and older workers.

- Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) Employment and Training. This program, which supports employment and training for SNAP (formerly Food Stamps) participants, includes job search, resume assistance, job training, and work experience, all of which are duplicative of the activities funded under the existing workforce investment system. Nearly 43 million individuals receive SNAP benefits, making a large share of low-income families eligible for employment and training services. In 2009, however, only 6.8 percent of eligible recipients participated in the SNAP Employment and Training program. Since 2008, federal law has required the Secretary of Agriculture to monitor the effectiveness of state SNAP Employment and Training programs. In 2012, the administration finally proposed establishing a standard set of measurements and requiring annual reporting. However, the rule will not be effective until fiscal year 2015, essentially permitting seven years without performance outcomes. Additionally, current regulations allow participants to be reimbursed under SNAP Employment and Training for costs relating to job retention, including driver education, testing fees, and union dues. This is an attempt by the administration to support its Big Labor agenda. There is no time limit on how long SNAP Employment and Training programs and benefits can be provided, essentially allowing individuals to "look" for a job on the government's dime for an indefinite period of time. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act amends these provisions to better align with the current workforce investment system and requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of low-income individuals, including recipients of public assistance.

- Veterans' Workforce Investment Program. This program, which provides services to assist with reintegrating eligible veterans into employment, duplicates the efforts of the larger WIA programs that provide funds to aid state and local areas in administering workforce development activities. Under current law, veterans receive priority service at local One-Stop career centers for employment and training services. In fiscal year 2011, the Secretary of Labor repurposed this program to provide services that lead to green jobs as outlined under the Green Jobs Act, which is currently under investigation by the IG for poor job placement results. In addition, the president's 2013 budget request proposes to eliminate the program, citing growing costs and limited participant placement. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will provide employment, training, and placement support services to veterans.

- WIA Adult Program. This program, which provides funds to state and local workforce investment boards to serve individuals ages 18–72 with employment and job training services, has had a poor record of training participants for in-demand jobs. According to the Department of Labor's WIASARD 2011 report, which is a more detailed annual analysis, only 134,000 individuals between April 1, 2011 and March 31, 2012, received training services, and only 58 percent of those individuals received a credential. In addition, 28 percent of individuals who received and completed services were also counted as being enrolled under the WIA Dislocated Workers program. The Department of Labor claims it "served" more than 6.6 million adults under this program between April 2011 and March 2012; yet according to the more detailed analysis that number is closer to 1.2 million. Out of the 1.2 million individuals who exited the program during the previous year, fewer than half entered employment after the first quarter and only 268,000 retained employment in the second and third quarters.

- WIA Dislocated Workers. This program, which provides funds to state and local workforce investment boards to serve individuals ages 18–72 whose jobs have been terminated or who have been laid off, has poor results and a poor track record of training individuals for employment. According to the Department of Labor's WIASARD 2011 report, which is a more detailed annual analysis, only 120,000 individuals between April 1, 2011 and March 31, 2012 received training services. In addition, 46 percent of individuals who received and completed services under this program were also counted as being enrolled under the WIA Adult Program. The Department of Labor claims it "served" more than 1.1 million dislocated workers under this program from April 1, 2011 to March 31, 2012. According to the more detailed analysis, the number is closer to 761,000. Out of the 639,000 individuals who exited this program during the previous year, only 343,000 entered employment after the first quarter and only 129,000 retained employment in the second and third quarters. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of unemployed workers, including displaced homemakers.

- WIA National Emergency Grants. This national program, which provides funding to state and local workforce investment boards to assist them in responding to significant dislocation events, is duplicative of the underlying activities funded under statewide employment and training activities. Under current law, states are required to reserve a portion of their funds to carry out

Rapid Response activities to help dislocated workers and employers respond to layoffs and other major events affecting state and local areas. The SKILLS Act allocates additional money to the state and local level, giving officials on the ground the ability to quickly respond to emergencies. The bill also requires the Secretary of Labor to reserve 3.5 percent of the Workforce Investment Fund to assist states and local areas in the case of a natural disaster.

- WIA Pilot and Demonstration Projects. This program, which funds national pilot, demonstration, and research projects, allows the Secretary of Labor to fund the administration's priorities. Past projects funded under this section of the law have included the Workforce Innovation Fund and the Green Jobs Act. Under current law, a "gold standard" evaluation was supposed to be conducted more than ten years ago to evaluate WIA programs. The Department of Labor now claims this study will not be completed for another four years. The Obama Administration's fiscal year 2013 budget proposes the elimination of the program.

- WIA Youth Activities. This program, which provides disadvantaged youth ages 16–21 with education attainment, job training, and employment services, has inflated performance data and a poor track record of helping at-risk youth obtain the occupational skills necessary for full-time employment. The Department of Labor claims it "served" more than 258,000 youth under this program between April 1, 2011 and March 31, 2012. According to the Department of Labor's WIASARD 2011 report, which is a more detailed analysis, the number is closer to 128,000. Of those who exited the program, only 35,000 participants were placed in employment and only 13,000 were placed in education. According to GAO, five federal programs provide employment and training services to disadvantaged youth at a cost of nearly $4.1 billion. Collectively, the federal government operates more than 50 major federal programs for youth. States, counties, cities, school districts, and nonprofits also operate programs focused on improving outcomes for disadvantaged youth. Because of the fragmentation of youth programs at the national, state, and local levels, federal youth programs lack any type of coordination with state or local programs, provide many of the same services, and share similar goals. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of youth, including out-of-school youth and at-risk youth.

- Women in Apprenticeship and Nontraditional Occupations (WANTO). This program, which promotes the recruitment, training, employment, and retention of women in apprenticeship and nontraditional occupations, was proposed for elimination under the president's fiscal year 2013 budget request. The administration found the WANTO program is too small to have a meaningful bearing on the number of women participating in registered apprenticeship programs, and grants are given to small community-based organizations that are unable to directly report performance results. In program years 2009 and 2010 combined, six grantees had a target of 300 placements into registered apprenticeships, yet only 60 placements were made. In addition, the program is duplicative of the larger Registered Apprenticeship program. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of individuals training for non-traditional employment.

- Workforce Innovation Fund. This program, which provides funds to state and local areas for “innovative” employment and training activities, duplicates the efforts of the larger WIA programs that provide funds to state and local workforce investment areas to carry out workforce development activities. As the program was created through the appropriations process and is still in its infancy, it has no proven results despite costing taxpayers close to $200 million. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act allows states to use employment and training funds to provide incentive grants to local areas for exemplary performance on local performance measures and grants states wide latitude to develop and administer workforce programs.

- YouthBuild. This program, which aims to help at-risk youth ages 16 to 24 obtain a general educational development (GED) or high school diploma as well as attain skills in the construction industry, has poor results. As of March 31, 2010, the Department of Labor reported fewer than half of the enrolled participants complete or “exit” the program (12,483 enrollees compared to 5,975 exiters). The program has also not met its performance goals for placement or retention. Slightly more than 40 percent of youth who exited the program were placed in jobs or other educational programs compared to the goal of 70 percent. Only 64 percent of those who attained placement retained employment or stayed in school compared to the goal of 75 percent. The cost per participant in the program has increased by more than 50 percent over the last two years. In 2010, the program served only 9,847 youth at a cost of $10,409 per participant. The department estimates the number of youth served by the program in 2012 will decline to 5,210, resulting in a cost of $15,300 per participant. In contrast, other youth programs are a fraction of the cost.

The Department of Labor’s IG estimates 20 percent of participants served by the program may be ineligible to participate, and $5.7 million of direct program costs were expended on these potentially ineligible participants. Also, the IG determined the department lacks effective grantee oversight; seven grantees could not demonstrate that they met the 25 percent matching funds requirement, 10 grantees enrolled ineligible youth, and 140 participants did not earn industry-recognized credentials due to two grantees not providing any type of certification to students after completing training. According to the GAO, five federal programs provide employment and training services to disadvantaged youth at a cost of nearly $4.1 billion. Collectively, the federal government operates more than 50 major federal programs for youth. States, counties, cities, school districts, and nonprofits also operate programs focused on improving outcomes for disadvantaged youth. Because of the fragmentation at the national, state, and local levels, federal youth programs lack any type of coordination with state or local programs, provide many of the same services, and share similar goals. Instead of a separate stand-alone program, the SKILLS Act requires state and local workforce investment boards to describe how they will serve the employment and training needs of youth, including out-of-school youth and at-risk youth.

- Youth Opportunity Grants. This program, which aims to increase the long-term employment of youth who live in high-poverty areas with education attainment, employment, and training assistance, has not been funded since 2003.

- 21st Century Workforce Commission. The Workforce Investment Act of 1998 established and directed the 21st Century Workforce Commission to issue recommendations to the president and Congress within six months on the skill needs of the information technology workforce. The commission first met on November 16, 1999 and issued its final report with recommendations by May 16, 2000. The SKILLS Act repeals the authorizing language for the commission since it has completed its mission.

Five additional programs are consolidated in the vocational rehabilitation program outlined under Title V of the Act.

State and local workforce investment board membership

The bill amends the membership requirements of state and local workforce investment boards to ensure the system is demand-driven and closely linked to employers.

Under current law, state and local workforce boards must adhere to a number of federal mandates, almost 40 in total, dictating everything from how many people must serve on the board to who nominates each of the representatives. As a result, many of the current workforce board representatives are government employees administering federally-funded programs. This federal interference in local decision-making has caused workforce boards to become bloated and unwieldy, making strategic planning difficult and limiting a board's ability to respond quickly to changing workforce and industry needs.

During the hearing on February 26, 2013, entitled, "Putting America Back to Work: Reforming the Nation's Workforce Investment System," Todd Gustafson, Executive Director of Michigan Works! Berrien-Cass-Van Buren, explained the need for a streamlined board and increased business leadership:

"For boards to have the greatest strategic impact and productivity they have to be business led and be a manageable size. Locally run and accountable boards governed by the end-user of the system, business, make the system more responsive, innovative, and less bureaucratic. Eliminating the 19 federal mandates on representation will further strengthen business engagement. Requiring two-thirds of board members to be employers will enhance the shift from a supply side designed system to a demand or market driven system. Mandating board representation stifles board member recruitment and often forces the creation of large unmanageable and unengaged boards. Eliminating mandates will also help attract higher caliber local business and community leaders who otherwise feel disempowered and ultimately uninterested among a large unfocused group. Smaller boards are a best practice in both the private for-profit and non-profit sectors and should be applied to the government's workforce system."

With a growing skills gap standing between workers and available job opportunities, the workforce investment system must reflect the expertise and needs of the nation's job creators. H.R. 803 strengthens the role of employers by requiring a two-thirds business majority on both state and local workforce investment boards and removing nearly all federal requirements on board membership. This dramatically reduces the size of the boards, making them more manageable and focused on strategic decisions.

Similar to current law, governors would retain the right to expand state board membership beyond business and economic development representation and chief elected officials. Chief elected officials would retain the authority to appoint local board membership beyond business representation. Such members could include members of the state legislature and representatives of youth organizations, community colleges, community-based organizations, veterans' service organizations, and One-Stop partners.

State workforce investment board functions and state plans

The SKILLS Act amends the required functions of state workforce investment boards. It requires states to review and develop statewide policies and programs that support a comprehensive statewide workforce development system, including determining whether the state should consolidate additional programs into its Workforce Investment Fund. State boards are also tasked with developing strategies across local areas that meet the needs of employers and support economic growth in the state, identifying and disseminating information on best practices for effective operation of One-Stop centers, and ensuring the appropriate use of funds for statewide employment and training activities.

H.R. 803 eliminates the grandfathering provisions that allow states to use entities in existence prior to the enactment of the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 in place of state workforce investment boards. The committee notes state boards are an important component of the reforms underlying WIA, and this change is intended to ensure state boards, with their enhanced functions, are established and business-driven. The bill also allows the state board to hire staff to assist in carrying out its functions.

The legislation also revises the WIA planning cycle to require state plans be submitted every three years instead of every five years. This is intended to ensure state plans are dynamic documents that are regularly updated to reflect changing economic situations and state and local priorities. The committee believes this change will not create an undue burden on states because the submission of a new plan simply requires reviewing and updating the previous plan if significant changes are not warranted.

While creating a more simple and universal structure, the committee believes the workforce development system must meet the needs of certain populations. Therefore, H.R. 803 requires states to develop targeted plans to serve special populations, including dislocated workers, low-income individuals, English learners, homeless individuals, individuals training for nontraditional employment, youth, older workers, ex-offenders, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, refugees and entrants, veterans, Native Americans, and long-term unemployed individuals, including those who have exhausted state and federal unemployment compensation.

The committee recognizes the obligation states have in providing services to individuals with disabilities in a manner consistent with the requirements of civil rights laws, such as the Americans with Disabilities Act and sections 504 and 508 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. These laws are crucial to protecting the rights of individuals with disabilities to participate fully in society. In H.R. 803, the committee reaffirms this obligation by including requirements for state plans to ensure the rights of individuals with disabilities are protected and reasonable accommodations are provided so these individuals can fully participate in the programs and services supported under this Act.

As a condition of receiving funds, state workforce investment boards are required to detail the strategies and services that will be used to help at-risk youth and out-of-school youth acquire the education, skills, credentials, and employment experience necessary to succeed in the workplace. These services include: training and internships in in-demand industries, dropout recovery activities designed to lead to the attainment of a regular high school diploma, and activities combining remediation of academic skills and work experience with linkages to postsecondary education.

The committee seeks to make the entire workforce investment system more demand-driven and responsive to the needs of employers. By doing so, the workforce system will train workers for in-demand jobs. H.R. 803 requires states to include in their plans a description of any programs and strategies they will utilize to meet the needs of all businesses, including small businesses. These include convening industry or sector partnerships to address the immediate and long-term skill needs of the workforce and the needs of small businesses. The committee notes that, while strategic planning and delivery of services most appropriately belongs with local areas, the One-Stop delivery system created under WIA would be improved with greater continuity of services within states. As a result, H.R. 803 includes new functions for the state board regarding statewide policies for the One-Stop career center system. These include the development of criteria for and issuance of certifications of One-Stop centers, allocation of One-Stop infrastructure funding, and approaches to facilitating equitable and efficient cost allocation in the One-Stop delivery system. The establishment of state-level criteria for One-Stop centers should lead to better, more consistent performance within states.

Local workforce investment board functions and local plans

The committee strongly supports the governance structure of local control embodied in the Workforce Investment Act. The committee believes important employment and training decisions are best developed and administered at the local level, closest to the business community and workers. H.R. 803 maintains this important concept by driving more authority and funding to local workforce investment boards. At the same time, the legislation recognizes the nation's workforce development system must change if it is to remain relevant and responsive to our economic challenges.

While states are permitted to engage in regional planning and cooperation among local areas that serve a single labor market area, economic development region, or other appropriate contiguous sub-area of a state, the law's grandfathering provision stifles such innovation. This clause allows local areas in existence prior to 1998 to remain in existence, which has prevented many states from developing a workforce investment system that best correlates with their regional economy. H.R. 803 repeals the grandfather clause and allows governors to designate local workforce investment areas based on a series of considerations that align these areas with economic development and regional labor markets.

As President and Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of Workforce Florida Inc., Chris Hart outlined in his testimony during the February 26, 2013 subcommittee hearing entitled, “Putting America Back to Work: Reforming the Nation’s Workforce Investment System”:

“The SKILLS Act proposes important changes that facilitate regional alignment of markets and resources rather than forcing the acceptance of the status quo. It also strengthens the authority of governors to designate the boundaries of workforce areas. We agree and support these provisions—The SKILLS Act will allow our state and others to accelerate innovative, market-responsive strategies for even higher performance and results aimed at improving our nation’s talent competitiveness.”

Under H.R. 803, local boards are required to conduct a workforce needs analysis of their region, which will aid in determining the industries that are hiring and growing, as well as the types of skills and training needed to meet that demand. The bill requires local boards to use this analysis to reserve a certain percentage of funds for training. This provides local areas with the flexibility and the authority to determine their own region’s priorities while quickly reacting to the workforce training needs of area residents. For far too long, our nation’s workforce investment system has not focused adequate resources on direct training services to unemployed and underemployed workers. Only 14 percent of WIA participants actually receive and complete training services that can provide the important skills necessary to succeed in the workplace. This provision ensures local boards are targeting funding to training individuals for in demand occupations and preparing workers for the jobs of today and tomorrow.

Similar to the state plan requirement, H.R. 803 requires local areas to include in their plans a description of the strategies and services that will be initiated in the local area to engage employers in workforce development activities to ensure local workforce investment activities remain demand-driven and responsive to changing employer needs. The bill requires local areas to engage small employers, as well. The bill requires local boards to develop industry-sector partnerships to better coordinate and align resources. The committee encourages local areas to initiate other employer-focused efforts such as career ladder programs, utilization of business intermediaries, and coordination with economic development activities. These strategies and many others could help local areas ensure the One-Stop system contributes to the economic growth of local areas.

Current law requires each local area to have a youth council to advise the local board on activities related to youth. The committee understands these councils have been ineffective in some areas and burdensome to create and operate. Maintaining participation by parents, youth, educators, and other groups has proven difficult.

The committee believes local areas should have the option to create such councils if they add value and benefit services to youth in the area.

Under WIA, states have the authority to use entities in existence prior to the enactment of WIA in place of local boards. This grandfathering provision is repealed under H.R. 803 to ensure the most effective local boards are in place. Further, the local workforce investment planning cycle is reduced from five years to three years to be consistent with the state planning cycle and to promote using the plan to address changing economic circumstances and priorities.

Just as states are required to describe in their plans how they will address the needs of individuals with disabilities consistent with civil rights laws, local areas also must provide services to individuals with disabilities in a manner consistent with the requirements of civil rights laws, such as the Americans with Disabilities Act and sections 504 and 508 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. To that end, the bill includes the same requirement for local plans as for state plans.

Similarly, local boards are required to address in their plans how they will serve at-risk and out-of-school youth in acquiring the education and skills, credentials, and employment experience necessary to succeed in the workforce. The committee encourages local areas to develop strategies that focus on high school dropout recovery efforts and attainment of regular secondary school diplomas. Local boards are also required to develop targeted plans to serve special populations, including dislocated workers, low-income individuals, English learners, homeless individuals, individuals training for nontraditional employment, youth, older workers, ex-offenders, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, refugees and entrants, veterans, Native Americans, and long-term unemployed individuals, including those who have exhausted state and federal unemployment compensation.

The committee recognizes our nation's economy is dynamic, and the types of growing industries are constantly changing. While a number of select industries, such as health care, are in-demand in most communities across the country, the decision on what industries are best suited for a particular state or local area and what professions workers should be encouraged to pursue should remain with state and local leaders.

One-stop delivery system

One of the hallmarks of the workforce development system is the approach that encourages the development of comprehensive efforts to improve services for employers and job seekers. This effort seeks to increase access to federal and state resources available to help individuals obtain the training of their choice at one centralized location.

Currently, 19 federal programs operate as mandatory partner programs within the One-Stop delivery system. In addition to the programs authorized under Title I of WIA, the programs include career education, veterans' employment and training programs, welfare-to-work, employment services, vocational rehabilitation, trade adjustment assistance, and adult education, to name a few. H.R. 803 adds the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program as a mandatory partner in the One-Stop Career Center system. All of these programs must make their services available through the One-Stop centers. In addition, optional partner programs may provide their services through the system if the local board and the chief elected official for the area permit the inclusion and the partner program agrees to such participation.

H.R. 803 removes from the mandatory One-Stop partner list those programs that are consolidated into the main Workforce Investment Fund. The bill includes additional optional partner programs, such as employment and training programs operated by the Small Business Administration, employment and training services provided by public libraries, and programs serving individuals with disabilities. The addition of these programs enhances opportunities to coordinate employment and training services, particularly for special populations.

Under H.R. 803, provisions regarding the establishment of One-Stop delivery systems are moved from Chapter 5 (Comprehensive Adult Employment and Training Activities) to what is now Subtitle B (Statewide and Local Workforce Investment Systems) so as to reinforce the creation of a One-Stop delivery system independent of WIA employment and training funds. Incorporating these provisions in the general workforce investment system subtitle is intended to clarify the requirements applicable to the One-Stop delivery system.

The One-Stop centers across states have not provided consistent services to consumers, whether job seekers or employers. Therefore, H.R. 803 requires all One-Stop operators to be designated through a competitive process, removing the provision that allows three or more One-Stop partners to form a consortium to operate a center, and infusing higher quality operators throughout the system. In addition, the bill calls on the state board to establish procedures and criteria for certifying One-Stop centers and issue certifications based on those procedures and criteria. The criteria include state-developed minimum standards relating to the scope and degree of service integration achieved by the centers involving the programs provided by the One-Stop partners. The effect of certification is to make One-Stop centers eligible for infrastructure grants. The intent of the certification process is to promote consistency and quality in the services provided by One-Stop centers in a state. No One-Stop is required to obtain certification, and local boards retain authority over the identification of One-Stop operators.

Under current law, One-Stop centers must provide access to the programs and activities carried out by partner programs. Each partner must make available to clients the core services applicable to their program. There must be at least one comprehensive One-Stop center in each local area, which can be supplemented through a network of affiliated sites if the mandatory partners do not fully co-locate. One-Stop partner programs are required to contribute a portion of their funds for the operation of the One-Stop delivery system. The appropriate portion is to be determined through the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) development process at the local level. However, this process has resulted in uncertainty of funding and contention among program operators and has forced WIA funding streams to pay for a large share of infrastructure costs, thus reducing funds available for training.

In order to provide a stable source of infrastructure funding on a statewide basis, H.R. 803 requires each of the One-Stop partner programs to provide a portion of program funds to the governor, who then will allocate such funds to the local areas for the certified One-Stop centers in the state. The portion of funds to be provided by each One-Stop partner will be determined by the governor in consultation with the state board. The committee believes the decision on the amount of such funding is best determined within each state depending on each state's needs and delivery systems, and arbitrary limits or floors should not be established at the federal level.

When determining the amount of contribution from each program, the governor must consider the proportionate use of the One-Stop centers by the programs and cost of administering the programs not related to One-Stop centers. The infrastructure funding must come from the programs' administrative funds and are subject to the programs' administrative cost limits. All mandatory partner programs, except vocational rehabilitation and unemployment insurance, have administrative caps that are either established in statute or negotiated as part of a grant. For instance, career and technical education currently has a 5 percent administrative cap, and veterans programs' administrative limits are negotiated as part of the grant. For federal mandatory spending programs, which include TANF and vocational rehabilitation services, the programs' contributions cannot be in excess of their proportionate use of the centers. The committee expects the portion of funds provided by mandatory partners for infrastructure costs will be a very small percentage of the programs' funds, proportionate to the programs' contribution to and use of the One-Stop system.

The governor is required to distribute the funds to certified One-Stop centers based on a formula the state board will develop. The formula shall include factors the state determines are appropriate, which may include the number of certified centers in a local area, the population served by such centers, and the centers' performance.

While the infrastructure funding provided through these grants will address the primary common costs of operating One-Stop centers, some common costs will remain. Thus, partner programs and local boards will continue to develop MOUs to specify how such costs would be paid. Remaining common costs include personnel and the cost of providing work ready services applicable to participants for each program. Since the basic infrastructure costs would already be addressed, these remaining cost items should be easier to resolve.

Providers of training services

WIA created an eligible training provider list to give customers flexibility in selecting a provider that meets their individual training needs. However, current eligible training provider provisions include requirements that have proven to be overly burdensome with respect to the specific information required and the scope of the reporting (i.e. reporting performance outcomes for all students in a training program and not just WIA-funded students). Rather than increasing consumer choice as intended, the current requirements have had the unintended effect of reducing customer choice as many qualified providers, including community colleges, choose not to participate in the system.

H.R. 803 gives states the authority to determine what provider information and data will be required to establish a list of eligible training providers. This allows for flexibility to design procedures that respond to the needs of each state. To ensure the quality of providers, states must establish criteria that include the performance of providers with respect to WIA's performance indicators. States may include other factors appropriate to ensure the quality of services and the accountability of providers, including whether providers of training allow participants to attain a certification or credential, or demonstrate mastery. In addition, states are required to ensure providers submit appropriate information to assist consumers in selecting training programs. Such state-developed criteria will be established with the input of local areas and training providers. The intent is to ensure the retention of key elements in promoting consumer choice and provider accountability while allowing states to simplify the process so more qualified training providers will participate.

During the markup, the committee adopted an amendment offered by Rep. Susan Brooks (R-IN) to require workforce investment boards to identify those providers that are demonstrating the highest levels of success on performance indicators and deem them priority providers. This gives participants and local boards a more accurate picture when choosing training providers. In addition, the amendment allows state and local boards to implement pay-for-performance strategies to reward those providers that are consistently outperforming their peers.

The committee encourages states to examine whether training providers offer the opportunity to obtain industry-recognized credentials. The committee recognizes such certifications or credentials may allow states to validate available training, and the attainment of a certification or credential may increase individuals' ability to find good jobs that utilize such training.

The committee remains determined to protect the confidentiality of all personally identifiable information about students, and believes such information must not be released without appropriate permission from students or their parents. Therefore, H.R. 803 specifies that the new training provider eligibility criteria must comply with the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA).

Certified apprenticeship programs are automatically qualified to serve as training providers. In addition, H.R. 803 retains language from current law allowing governors to create separate requirements for providers of on-the-job training or customized training, since these are tailored specifically to one employer or occupational field.

Employment and training activities

H.R. 803 amends Chapter 5 of WIA to establish a comprehensive program of employment and training activities for individuals age 16 and older. As discussed earlier in the report, the bill consolidates 35 employment and training programs, including the three separate WIA funding streams (WIA Adult, WIA Dislocated Worker, and WIA Youth) and the Employment Services funding stream under the Wagner-Peyser Act. These current programs have separate funding formulas, eligibility criteria, performance measures, reporting requirements, and other elements, though they largely serve the same populations. Under current law, Employment Services are to be co-located with One-Stop centers. However, contrary to the intent of WIA, some areas have retained separate Employment Services offices. Consequently, unnecessary duplication of services and confusion for customers (both job seekers and employers) has resulted. Consistent with the principles of program integration underlying WIA, the bill's consolidation proposal will simplify and enhance the delivery of services to adults and youth and allow states and local areas to tailor services to meet the needs of the local communities.

H.R. 803 changes the title of Chapter 5 from "Adult and Dislocated Worker Employment and Training Activities" to "Employment and Training Activities". Throughout the bill, references to the separate adult, dislocated worker, and youth funding, which are being consolidated, are eliminated to reflect the universal nature of the Workforce Investment Fund.

H.R. 803 authorizes the Secretary of Labor to reserve half of 1 percent of the amount appropriated for the WIF to carry out national activities, with 50 percent to be used for technical assistance and 50 percent to be used for evaluations. The bill also authorizes the secretary to reserve up to 1 percent of the amount appropriated to make grants to and enter into contracts or cooperative agreements with Indian tribes, tribal organizations, Alaska-Native entities, Indian controlled organizations serving Indians, or Native Hawaiian organizations to carry out employment and training activities. These important programs must adhere to the common performance measures.

The secretary may also reserve up to 25 percent of funds of the total amount appropriated to carry out the Job Corps program described later in this report and allows the secretary to reserve not more than 3.5 percent of the total amount appropriated to provide grants to states and local areas to address mass layoffs and natural disasters. The remaining amount would be allotted to states, with up to one-fourth of 1 percent reserved for the provision of services in outlying areas.

H.R. 803 creates a new formula to reflect the more relevant criteria from the funding streams consolidated into the Workforce Investment Fund. The formula is calculated by dividing equally the relative number of unemployed individuals in a state, the relative number of individuals in the civilian labor force in a state, the relative number of individuals who have experienced long-term unemployment of 15 weeks or more in a state, and the relative number of disadvantaged youth in a state.

The bill also contains a provision that holds states harmless for three years against what they would have received in fiscal year 2012 for the programs under Title I of WIA; Title V of the Older Americans Act of 1965; the Women in Apprenticeship and Non-traditional Occupations Act; Sections 4103A and 4104 of Title 38, United States Code; and Sections 1-14 of the Wagner-Peyser Act. For states that would receive an increase in 2014 under the new formula, their increase is capped at 130 percent of the allotment percentage of the state for fiscal year 2012. For fiscal year 2017 and each succeeding year, the formula ensures states receive a minimum percentage that is not less than 90 percent of the previous year's allotment and a maximum percentage of 130 percent of the previous year's allotment.

The committee notes these protections should create more stability in funding for states. Currently, the WIA Dislocated Worker funding stream has no stop-loss or stop-gain protections. While the formula in current law was designed to allow funds to flow to those states most in need, there have been significant shifts in funding from year to year. As a result, states have been unable to plan their programs effectively. The new provisions should reduce this instability.

The formula also includes a small state minimum allotment of one-fifth of 1 percent to ensure small states have sufficient resources to operate a viable program. Currently, both the WIA Adult and Wagner-Peyser formulas include small state minimums.

H.R. 803 further specifies within state allocation of funds. The bill authorizes governors to reserve up to 15 percent of the state's allotment for statewide activities. H.R. 803 has a much larger authorized level for appropriations due to the consolidation of programs and is comparable to the level of resources currently administered at the state level under WIA.

Under statewide activities, states must use funds to carry out rapid response activities to assist local areas that experience disasters, mass layoffs, or other events that precipitate substantial increases in the number of unemployed individuals. States are also required to support the provision of work ready services for job seekers in the One-Stop delivery system, implement strategies and services to assist at-risk and out-of-school youth, and conduct evaluations of all employment and training services. The bill also allows states to spend funds on implementing innovative programs to meet the needs of employers, including incumbent worker training and entrepreneurial training; developing strategies for integrating programs and services among One-Stop partners; facilitating access to remote areas through the use of technology; and incorporating pay-for-performance contracting strategies as an element in funding employment and training activities. The bill also retains the current law limitation on state administrative expenses, which are not to exceed 5 percent of the governor's set aside.

Further, governors must reserve 15 percent of their state set aside funds to award competitive grants to eligible entities assisting individuals with barriers to find and retain full-time, unsubsidized employment. This new reservation provides additional support to local areas to assist hard-to-serve individuals (ages 16 and older) in obtaining a regular secondary school diploma or its recognized equivalent, industry-recognized credentials, postsecondary training, and employment. The committee believes that, rather than creating separate national programs, priorities, and funding streams for particular individuals or groups, states should be given the flexibility and decision-making power to prioritize funds towards the individuals most in need in their communities. Unlike the current system in which only a handful of national programs targeted to special populations have been evaluated, H.R. 803 requires states to evaluate employment and training programs, making it easier for the public to learn whether programs are helping workers find a job.

The remaining overall state allotment is to be allocated to local areas within the state. Under the bill, the same formula used to distribute funds to states is used to distribute funds to local areas, including the stop-loss and stop-gain provisions described earlier to stabilize funding. H.R. 803 also retains the current administrative cost limit under which local areas may not expend more than 10 percent of the allocation for administrative costs. The legislation adds a new definition of "administrative costs" which includes expenditures incurred by state and local workforce investment boards, direct recipients, local grant recipients, local fiscal agents or local grant sub recipients, and One-Stop operators in the performance of administrative functions and in carrying out activities which are not related to the direct provision of workforce investment services (including services to participants and employers). The bill also requires states and local areas to report on the percentage and dollar amount spent on administrative costs annually.

Under current law, both WIA and the Wagner-Peyser Act provide funds for services to connect job seekers with available jobs, including job search and placement assistance. Regardless of income, all individuals are eligible to receive these services. Many One-Stop career centers offer such services through self-serve computer stations. Under WIA, these are called "core services" while under Wagner-Peyser they are called "labor exchange services." Although each law has a different term, the services are essentially the same. Through WIA, two other levels of services also are provided. "Intensive" services include comprehensive assessments, case management and one-on-one career counseling, short-term prevocational services, and more. "Training" services include occupational skills, on-the-job, entrepreneurial, customized, and other training. Under current law, an individual must utilize at least one service in each level before moving on to the next level of service. While there is no federally required minimum time period for participation in core and intensive services before one can access training assistance, some states have interpreted current law as requiring all participants to participate in core services for a specified period of time before becoming eligible for intensive services, and likewise requiring intensive services before training. This has sometimes resulted in denied or delayed services, and limited the flexibility of states and local areas to tailor services to meet individual needs.

To address these issues regarding the "sequencing of services," H.R. 803 combines core and intensive services into a new "work ready" set of services, effectively nullifying the eligibility requirements for proceeding onto the next level of services if an individual is determined to be in need of those services. The bill incorporates two functions specifically identified in the Wagner-Peyser Act to the list of allowable work ready services: appropriate recruitment services for employers and the administration of the work test for the unemployment compensation system. Additional new services are added to the list, including internships and work experience; literacy activities relating to basic work readiness, information and communication technology, and finances; and out-of-area job search and relocation assistance. The committee believes allowing literacy activities to be provided as a work ready service, not just a training service, will increase access to such services for those who need them. The committee also recognizes nearly all job seekers need to know how to find, use, manage, and evaluate information resources efficiently. The committee encourages One-Stop centers to offer opportunities to acquire skills in the area of communication technology literacy.

Among the types of entities local boards may contract with to provide work ready services are public non-profit service providers. The committee notes this language from current law should not be construed as limiting eligibility to non-profit entities that exist solely to provide these types of services. In particular, the committee notes a wide variety of non-profit entities that may have broader missions, but have the capacity to leverage funds received through local workforce boards, such as public libraries. The committee encourages local areas to consider creating relationships with entities such as libraries when they already are providing similar services.

The committee also recognizes private-sector employment agencies play an important role in providing employment opportunities to America's workforce. The committee encourages local boards and One-Stop operators to refer to and contract with such firms. This will enhance the ability of local boards and One-Stop operators to make job placements, especially to businesses that do not traditionally use One-Stop services to fill vacancies.

The committee aims to address the unique training needs of individuals who are English learners. H.R. 803 allows occupational skills training to be combined with English language acquisition. Integrated training programs that provide language instruction in the context of job training have demonstrated remarkable employment outcomes for job seekers and positive results for employers. These enhancements to training opportunities should increase employment for our country's immigrant populations.

Under current law, the adult funding stream serves all adults but prioritizes low-income individuals. H.R. 803 removes the priority of service in the rewrite of the Workforce Investment Fund. One of the hallmarks of the workforce investment system is that it is a universal access program in which any American in need of employment and training services can receive the education and skills he or she needs to get a job. Under the bill, states and local areas must detail how they will serve the needs of all individuals, including low-income individuals, dislocated workers, English learners, and veterans, among others. Instead of setting artificial limits on who should receive training, the bill aims to increase the amount of training for everyone and allows state and local leaders to determine who is most in need in their community.

Training is currently provided primarily through "individual training accounts," or ITAs. Individuals that receive an ITA voucher can choose training courses available through eligible training providers. The committee believes local areas should have the flexibility to combine funds available for training under WIA with other training resources. Therefore, H.R. 803 authorizes local areas to assist participants in enhancing these accounts so funds from other sources may be included and renames them "career enhancement accounts.” This is intended to facilitate the acquisition of training and maximize the number of individuals who obtain training.

H.R. 803 permits local boards to award contracts to institutions of higher education identified as priority eligible training providers to facilitate the training of multiple individuals in in-demand industries, provided such a contract does not limit customer choice. This provision allows community colleges and other institutions of higher education, including proprietary colleges, to provide specialized group training programs designed for employers who are looking to hire several workers with a particular skill.

H.R. 803 adds new activities to the current list of permissible activities local areas may carry out. Current activities include customized screening and referral services for employers and other customized employment-related services for employers on a fee-for-service basis. New allowable activities include providing customer supports, such as transportation and childcare services, for special participant populations that face multiple barriers to employment, including individuals with disabilities. These supports can often contribute to job retention and enhance employment. The committee has also learned such populations, especially individuals with disabilities, have not been as well served through the One-Stop system as Congress intended. The committee anticipates this additional assistance to such individuals will increase their utilization of the One-Stop delivery system and improve the quality of services they receive. In addition, employment and training assistance provided in coordination with child support enforcement activities of the state agency carrying out Title IV-D of the Social Security Act is also included as a permissible activity. This coordination is intended to facilitate the employment of unemployed or underemployed non-custodial parents, thus enabling them to pay child support.

In addition, local areas may engage in activities to improve services to businesses, including small employers in the local area, and increase linkages between the local workforce investment system and employers. Local areas may also facilitate remote access to services provided through the One-Stop delivery system, including facilitating access through the use of technology. This is critical to ensure rural areas are served adequately. Local areas may incorporate pay-for-performance contracting strategies as an element of funding employment and training activities to ensure the system is not continuing to pay for strategies that have not demonstrated a record of success.

An additional permissible activity for local areas is the development and implementation of incumbent worker training programs. Under current law, incumbent worker programs are only authorized at the state level. Under H.R. 803, local boards may provide incumbent worker training, as long as it is carried out in conjunction with the workers' employers for the purpose of helping the workers obtain the skills necessary to retain employment and avert layoffs. Employers participating in incumbent worker training programs are required to pay a portion of the costs of training for the incumbent workers, which is left up to local boards to establish. This provision is intended to provide some flexibility for the One-Stop system to respond to the needs in the local area and help prevent potential layoffs. The matching requirement is intended to ensure appropriate employer commitment to the training program.

Local areas are required to prioritize placing participants into private sector jobs. The committee believes enhancing private sector business growth and limiting the size and scope of the government are the best outcomes for American workers and improve our country's economic outlook.

Each One-Stop career center is also required to employ a veterans' employment specialist to help veterans, including those returning from Afghanistan and Iraq, find and retain employment. These specialists function similarly to the Local Veterans' Employment Representatives currently in many One-Stop centers across the country, and conduct outreach to employers as well as provide transition services to those military service men and women leaving the armed services. H.R. 803 also integrates the Disabled Veterans' Outreach Program into the Workforce Investment Fund; requires state and local areas to detail how they will furnish employment and training services to veterans, including disabled and homeless veterans; and requires states and the Secretary of Labor to measure and report on the outcomes achieved by participating veterans disaggregated by local communities.

Youth provisions

According to GAO, more than 50 major programs funded by the federal government help at-risk youth obtain the education and skills necessary to succeed in the workforce. These programs often lack coordination and have failed to adequately improve outcomes for our nation's young people. H.R. 803 includes several important provisions to address the needs of at-risk and out-of-school youth. First, state and local workforce investment boards are required to detail the strategies and services that will be used to assist at-risk youth and out-of-school youth in acquiring the education and skills, credentials, and employment experience to succeed in the workplace. Second, the Workforce Investment Fund, as well as the state set-aside for individuals with barriers to employment, has reduced age limitations from 18 to 16 years of age, ensuring youth are eligible for all employment and training activities.

Third, local workforce boards are required to conduct a workforce needs analysis and direct funds based on those identified as most in need, which include at-risk youth and out-of-school youth. This provides local leaders, who know best the needs of the community, with flexibility and authority to determine their own priorities. If local officials want to use a significant amount of federal funds for youth employment and training services, they can do so.

Finally, the secretary is required to reserve 25 percent of the total amount appropriated to fund a national Job Corps program for at-risk youth. H.R. 803 makes important reforms to the program, as outlined below, to ensure these young people are receiving high quality instruction and training to obtain employment and advance in careers.

Performance accountability system

According to GAO's report that examined the multiple federal job training programs, only five had undergone an impact evaluation to determine if the program was meeting the needs of individuals it was slated to serve. Without a true picture of the effectiveness of job training programs, how can federal, state, and local policy-makers accurately and quickly assist workers in finding a job, help employers hire skilled workers, and grow our regional economies?

As Larry Temple, executive director of the Texas Workforce Commission, said during a May 11, 2011 subcommittee hearing entitled, “Removing Inefficiencies in the Nation’s Job Training Programs”:

“. . . [W]e need to move to an outcome driven system rather than a process driven system. We need to look closely at what works and what does not. We understand accountability and we understand that while the process is important—from the customer’s perspective, what is achieved at the end of the day is what constitutes the measure of your work. Far too often these federal programs are measured by the process, not the outcome.”

Since passage of WIA, states and local areas have raised concerns about the 17 statutory performance measures applicable to formula programs. The current performance measures have been perceived as excessive and overly burdensome. In addition, questions have been raised about the utility of certain federally required measures (such as customer satisfaction).

To promote consistency in the measures applicable to federal employment and job training, H.R. 803 reduces the number of performance measures from 17 to six and applies them to all employment and training programs, including the Adult Education and Family Literacy Act provisions outlined under Title II of WIA and the Amendments to the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 under Title IV of WIA.

The core indicators of performance the committee believes all employment and training programs should measure include:

- The percent and number of program participants who are in unsubsidized employment for six months after exiting the program;
- The percent and number of program participants who are in unsubsidized employment for a full year after exiting the program;
- The median earnings of program participants six months after exiting the program compared to their earnings prior to receiving training;
- The percent and number of participants who obtain a recognized postsecondary credential, a registered apprenticeship, an industry-recognized credential, or a regular secondary school diploma or its recognized equivalent during participation in or within one year after exiting the program;
- The percent and number of participants who enroll in an education or training program that leads to a credential and are achieving measureable basic skill gains; and
- The percent and number of participants who obtain unsubsidized employment in a field related to the training services they received.

Additionally, all core indicators of performance, training services, and discretionary One-Stop delivery services are to be disaggregated by the targeted populations described in the local plan, and states are required to maintain a central repository of policies related to access, eligibility, availability of services, and other matters approved by the state and local boards. The committee supports enhanced accountability and policies that encourage the identification of individuals who are not receiving adequate assistance in the quest to find and retain employment.

The committee believes the customer satisfaction measure does not provide a uniform standard by which to evaluate employment and training programs on a national level. Therefore, the bill strikes references to the customer satisfaction measure. However, states are explicitly permitted to utilize customer satisfaction measures, and the committee urges states and local areas to utilize such measures to evaluate the effectiveness of their outreach programs and engage in continuous improvement.

Currently, outcomes data is only collected for those individuals who register for intensive training services. Individuals accessing only core services are not required to register for such services and little information is available regarding the employment status of such individuals and the benefit of One-Stop services. By requiring all employment and training programs to use a common set of performance indicators, federal, state, and local policymakers will have an accurate and clear picture of which programs are working.

Under current law, the levels of performance for each indicator are negotiated between the Secretary of Labor and each state. One concern is these negotiations do not sufficiently consider economic conditions and the characteristics of the population to be served, thus discouraging services to special populations. H.R. 803 replaces the current language with a requirement that levels must be adjusted based on those factors. The bill also identifies the kinds of economic characteristics (unemployment rates and job losses in particular industries) and participant characteristics (indicators of poor work history, lack of work experience, disability status, low levels of literacy or English proficiency, and welfare dependency) to be considered.

Amendments to the local performance measures parallel the amendments made to the state performance measures. The same performance indicators are applied to local areas and the levels of performance negotiated between governors and local areas are required to be adjusted based on economic conditions and the characteristics of the population served.

In an effort to gauge program efficiency, state and local areas will also report:

- The number of individuals who received work-ready and training services during the most recent program year, fiscal year, and the preceding five program years; as well as where the individuals received the training, disaggregated by the type of entity that provided the training.
- The number of individuals who successfully exited work-ready and training services during the most recent program year, fiscal year, and the preceding five program years; as well as where the individuals received the training, disaggregated by the type of entity that provided the training.
- The average cost per participant of those individuals who received work-ready and training services during the most recent program year, fiscal year, and the preceding five program years; as well as where the individuals received the training, disaggregated by the type of entity that provided the training.

State and local performance measures will be negotiated every two years.

Rebecca Metty-Burns, the executive director for the division of workforce and economic development at the College of Southern Nevada, summarized the importance of the bill's efforts to increase accountability in her testimony during an August 30, 2011 committee field hearing in Las Vegas, Nevada entitled, "Examining Local Solutions to Strengthen Federal Job Training Programs":

"Hold us accountable but have the accountability make sense to the needs of the community and have measurements and outcomes that reflect true progress based on the competencies needed by industry."

The committee believes that with the new flexibility in the use of federal funds envisioned under H.R. 803 comes tremendous responsibility. In no way does this legislation constitute a blank check. Unlike the current workforce system in which only a handful of programs have been evaluated, H.R. 803 establishes common performance measures that will make it easier for the public to learn whether programs are helping workers find a job, and includes new provisions to ensure programs that demonstrate a pattern of failure lose funding.

Under current law, the secretary may reduce state funds by 5 percent if the state fails to meet its performance targets for two consecutive years. H.R. 803 requires the secretary to reduce state funding and returns those funds to the U.S. Department of Treasury. Similarly, a governor must take corrective action if a local area fails to meet its performance targets for a second consecutive year. If an area fails to meet performance for a third year, a governor must reduce the amount of the grant based on the degree of failure to meet local levels of performance.

Finally, the bill requires the secretary to use the core indicators of performance to assess the effectiveness of mandatory partner programs carried out by the Department of Labor. This action must be consistent with the requirements of the applicable authorizing laws of those programs.

Authorization of appropriations

H.R. 803 authorizes appropriations for the Workforce Investment Fund for fiscal years 2014 through 2020. The committee authorizes $6,245,318,000 for fiscal year 2014 and each of the six succeeding fiscal years. This amount is equal to the appropriated amount for fiscal year 2012 for Title I of WIA; Title V of the Older Americans Act of 1965; Sections 1–14 of the Wagner-Peyser Act; the Women in Apprenticeship and Nontraditional Occupations Act; and Sections 4103A and 4104 of Title 38, United States Code;

Job Corps Program

The committee believes the Job Corps program is in dire need of reform. Created in 1965 to provide at-risk youth with academic instruction toward the achievement of a high school diploma or GED and career training, the program has failed to help disadvantaged youth find employment while spending billions in limited taxpayer dollars. Through a series of investigations conducted over the last four years, the Department of Labor's IG found the program's performance data is often inflated and unreliable, accused Job Corps centers and their operators of mismanaging federal funds and ignoring unhealthy and unsafe living conditions for youth, and discovered little federal funding was spent to support worker training. In addition, the Department of Labor has recently announced that the program incurred a $39 million budgetary shortfall in program year 2011 and is facing a $60 million shortfall in program year 2012. The Obama Administration agrees Job Corps is in need of restructuring. The Department of Labor's FY 2013 Budget Justification includes the following:

“The 2013 Budget launches a reform effort for Job Corps to improve its outcomes and strengthen accountability. Specifically, the Department will close in Program Year 2013 a small number of chronically low-performing Job Corps centers, selected using specific criteria that will be shared with the public in advance. While most centers meet program standards, some centers are chronically low-performing based on their educational and employment outcomes, and have remained in the bottom cohort of center performance rankings for many years. Given the resource intensiveness of the Job Corps model, it is not cost-effective to continue to invest in centers that have historically not served students well.”

At a time when the youth unemployment rate continues to rise, the committee supports efforts to revamp Job Corps to ensure at-risk youth become more employable, responsible, and productive citizens.

Over the last decade, Job Corps has undergone a number of evaluations to measure its effectiveness. Many reports found the program's benefits to society (e.g. reduced crime and drug use and increased attainment of GEDs) outweigh its program costs. However, these studies also showed program participation did not substantially increase earnings, and was ineffective in moving participants into full-time employment. H.R. 803 restructures the current program to ensure career and technical education and training is geared toward in-demand occupations and disadvantaged youth receive a regular secondary school diploma and/or a recognized postsecondary credential that prepares individuals for employment in the global economy.

According to the Department of Labor's 2011 Annual Performance Report, only 66 percent of Job Corps participants entered employment or enrolled in training or postsecondary education in 2009. In fact, the program's placement rate, along with actual student enrollment, has been on a steady decline since 2004. A recent IG audit also found Job Corps lacked reliable performance metrics. Among other things, the audit found the program inaccurately reported 42.3 percent of its job placements, claiming as a “success” those instances in which students were enrolled in postsecondary education or training rather than jobs, and in jobs that required little or no previous work-related skills, such as fast food cooks and dishwashers. H.R. 803 establishes a new performance accountability and management system under which each center must calculate and report on the number and percent of enrollees who graduate (defined based on the program's new goals) from the center; the percent and number of graduates who enter unsubsidized employment related to the training the participant received through the center; and the cost per successful performance outcome. Similar to current law, the bill requires the secretary to annually rank the performance of each center and to develop and carry out an improvement plan for low-performing centers.

As President Obama has stated, a number of Job Corps centers have consistently ranked in the bottom tier of Job Corps centers nationally. With the federal government running trillion dollar deficits and the Job Corps program running a $100 billion budget shortfall, the committee must ensure limited taxpayer dollars are dedicated to programs that work. H.R. 803 requires the secretary to evaluate the performance of Job Corps centers and rank them annually. If a center has consistently performed in the bottom 10 percent for four consecutive years, then the secretary must close those centers. Students in closed centers will have priority placement in a neighboring center, and resources will be reinvested in the program.

According to recent IG audits, there is widespread mismanagement of federal funds and safety and health concerns by Jobs Corps operators. H.R. 803 requires all current grantees to re-compete for funding to operate Job Corps centers. The bill creates a detailed application in which grantees must describe their record of effectiveness in placing at-risk youth into employment; describe the strong fiscal controls they have in place; and give an assurance they are licensed to operate in the state in which the center is located, among other commonsense measures. The secretary is authorized to enter into two-year agreements with operators and may extend the agreement for three one-year terms if the grantees meet or exceed all of their performance indicators. The secretary may not extend the terms if a center's performance ranks it in the bottom quintile of all centers unless the center has shown significant improvement over the last program year. The bill prevents the secretary from awarding grants to entities that have been found to have a material failure that involves the misuse of federal funds or a threat to the health, safety, or civil rights of youth or staff. This process removes poor-performing grantees and ensures high-quality grantees are adhering to new and stronger performance requirements.

As a national program, Job Corps spends a significant amount of taxpayer dollars on administration. The $1.5 billion operations budget allocates more than 80 percent ($1.2 billion) to center operations, leases, phone and data lines, and information technology equipment; 7 percent ($107 million) to student pay and home transportation; and only 3.6 percent ($57 million) to career services. H.R. 803 sets a 10 percent cap on administrative costs for the program, ensuring a greater portion of Job Corps funds go to youth employment services, including career skills training for in-demand occupations.

According to the department's budget documents, Job Corps cost $29,388 per participant in 2010. However, the IG, GAO, and the Office of Management and Budget note this calculation does not reflect job placement or training completion outcomes and includes students who have dropped out of the program. Based on these factors, the program actually costs $42,952 per participant, one of the highest participant costs for federal programs. H.R. 803 provides a competitive priority to Job Corps center operators who demonstrate they can reduce program costs, including during times of budgetary shortfalls, and requires operators to detail in their applications how they will reduce costs to save taxpayer dollars.

As a national program, the secretary and departmental employees establish all policies and requirements for Job Corps, resulting in a lack of coordination with state and local workforce initiatives. H.R. 803 provides the governor of the state in which a Job Corps center is located the authority to appoint representatives to the Workforce Council, a two-thirds majority of whom must be from the business community, and requires education and training services to be linked to employment opportunities in in-demand industries.

National activities

The committee believes state and local leaders—not Washington bureaucrats—should be driving policies and programs that best meet their region’s needs. To this end, H.R. 803 dramatically reduces the role of the federal government in the nation’s workforce investment decisions. The bill eliminates most national activities, choosing to send resources to state and local workforce investment board leaders who know best how to administer employment and training programs to unemployed and underemployed workers. As stated earlier, during his 2012 State of the Union address, President Obama recognized the need to consolidate job training programs and called on Congress to “cut through the maze of confusing [job] training programs” and create “one program” for workers to find the support they need. H.R. 803 moves our country in that direction and helps put Americans back to work. This bill will help ensure we spend less money on red tape and more on training, while also making the system more attuned to the needs of job seekers and employers and heeding the president’s call for consolidation.

H.R. 803 requires the Secretary of Labor to provide technical assistance to states that fail to meet performance measurements and establish a system through which states may share information regarding best practices in the operation of workforce investment activities. In addition, the secretary, through grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements, is required to conduct an independent evaluation of the programs and activities under this Act at least once every five years. The secretary must also conduct an impact analysis of the formula grant program by no later than 2015, and then not less than once every four years thereafter. All results of these evaluations must be made public and posted to the department’s website.

Administration

Under current law, the secretary must investigate each allegation of violations of the requirements of Title I of WIA. This provision is amended to authorize, but not require investigations of such allegations since it may not be necessary or appropriate to conduct an investigation of each one.

H.R. 803 prohibits funds from being used to pay the salary and bonuses of an individual at a rate in excess of Level II of the Federal Executive Pay Schedule. The bill includes general authority es-establishing the Employment and Training Administration (ETA) at the U.S. Department of Labor and requires the assistant secretary to be an individual with substantial experience in workforce development and workforce development management. During markup, the committee adopted an amendment offered by Rep. Martha Roby (R-AL) to prohibit the use of workforce investment funds for lobbying and political activities.

The legislation requires the secretary to submit states' quarterly reports to the House Committee on Education and the Workforce and the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions to ensure the committees have sufficient information to evaluate the program.

Current law prohibits use of WIA funds for employment generating activities, economic development activities, and similar activities that are not directly related to training for eligible Title I participants. The bill clarifies this restriction to encourage closer ties between workforce development and economic development activities. The new language will only prohibit such activities if they do not relate to the entry in employment, retention of employment, or increases in earnings.

H.R. 803 provides new waiver authority for the secretary. The Department of Labor will establish an expedited process for extending waivers approved for one state to additional states, provided they meet other requirements. In administering the waiver process it has been found that some waivers to address particular issues appear to be appropriate for all states, but under current authority each state must go through a detailed application process to receive the waiver. This provision will allow the secretary to expedite that process. In addition, the secretary is explicitly prohibited from requiring or imposing new or additional requirements in exchange for providing a waiver to a state.

In addition, H.R. 803 prohibits using funds provided under WIA to establish or operate stand-alone fee-for-service enterprises that compete with private sector employment agencies; this does not include One-Stop centers. Such efforts are contrary to the intent of WIA.

H.R. 803 also includes a provision directing the Office of Management and Budget to identify how many full-time equivalent federal employees worked on or administered the eliminated programs under this Act and, no later than one year after the bill's enactment, to reduce the federal government's workforce by that number.

State unified plan

WIA currently allows states to develop and submit to the appropriate secretaries unified plans for two or more programs that provide, in part, employment and training activities to individuals. H.R. 803 maintains current law and goes a step further in authorizing governors to consolidate those funds into the Workforce Investment Fund for the express purpose of providing greater administrative flexibility and reducing overly burdensome paperwork requirements. The bill requires states that wish to consolidate additional employment and training programs into the Workforce Investment Fund to meet the underlying purpose, intent, requirements, prohibitions, and limitations of any such program. This important, but voluntary, change further streamlines administrative costs at the state level in those areas, subjecting all state workforce and economic development programs to the same performance and reporting requirements, while still requiring states to meet the goals and requirements of the consolidated programs. During markup, the committee adopted an amendment offered by Rep. Tim Walberg (R-MI) that would allow states to submit unified plans solely to the Secretary of Labor, instead of multiple secretaries, placing the onus on the secretary to navigate the federal bureaucracy.

Mr. Chris Hart, President and CEO of Workforce Florida Inc., discussed the importance of state flexibility during the February 26, 2013 subcommittee hearing entitled, “Putting America Back to Work: Reforming the Nation’s Workforce Investment System”:

“The SKILLS Act calls for unified planning and common shared goals, it focuses on performance over process and continuous evaluation of systems and procedures in an effort to become more efficient and effective with each passing year. Florida agrees.”

The committee believes states should have the ability to consolidate additional programs not included under H.R. 803. This flexibility ensures taxpayer dollars are not spent maintaining an inefficient bureaucracy, but instead put toward supporting employers and job seekers.

TITLE II—ADULT EDUCATION

The need for an educated populace is critical to success in today’s global economy. Individuals without a high school diploma or its equivalent earn roughly half the salary of the average worker. Employers searching for qualified employees over the past decade have noticed an increasing trend in the number of employees lacking the basic skills needed in the workplace. In addition, the number of beginning college students who are required to take basic skills courses in reading and math before moving into the standard college program continues to increase, jeopardizing their success in postsecondary education.

In reauthorizing Title II, the Adult Education and Family Literacy Education Act, of WIA, H.R. 803 places additional emphasis on ensuring states and local providers offer basic skills instruction in reading, writing, English language acquisition, and math, and integrating those services with occupational skills training. Making sure these skills are solidly in place for all students is a priority, whether English learners, high school dropouts who have not mastered these vital skills, or high school graduates who have slipped through the cracks in the education system and need additional instruction in the basics.

Accountability

As discussed above, H.R. 803 requires all adult basic education and literacy programs to meet the same set of core performance measurements outlined for all employment and training activities authorized under this Act. The committee believes individuals receiving services aimed at improving their language and numeracy skills should be able to use these skills in obtaining a regular secondary school diploma or its recognized equivalent, obtaining full time employment, increasing their average earnings, earning industry-recognized credentials, or enrolling in postsecondary education and training programs.

The bill also provides funds for states to use in offering eligible providers of adult education technical assistance and professional development training on ways to develop, implement, and report measurable progress in achieving the objectives of this title. States are required to include in their plans how they will evaluate and measure annually such effectiveness on a grant-by-grant basis and how they will hold eligible providers accountable for improving the academic achievement of participants in adult education programs. The committee believes cooperation and coordination between state and local providers in offering research-based instruction in reading, writing, English language acquisition, and math will ensure participants reach their goals. States are authorized to use technical assistance, sanctions, and rewards (including allocation of grant funds based on performance and termination of grant funds based on nonperformance) to hold local adult education providers accountable.

Coordination and integration of services

The committee believes it is essential for adult educators to work closely with state workforce investment boards; state agencies of higher education; representatives of business and industry; and immigrant assistance organizations, including community-based and faith based organizations, in providing appropriate skill development programs for eligible adults. H.R. 803 encourages state and local leaders to provide adult education and literacy activities contextually and concurrently with workforce preparation activities and workforce training for a specific occupation or occupational cluster. The integration of literacy and occupational skills training are essential in assisting adults with the transition into postsecondary education and careers.

National leadership activities

The bill authorizes national activities to assist states and local providers in developing valid, measurable, and reliable performance data, and in using such performance information for the improvement of adult education and family literacy education programs. The committee supports the development of model basic and workplace skills education programs, and believes their effective integration with employment services are important components of improving the delivery of adult education programs. H.R. 803 also supports the development of a more efficient delivery system of technology-based, basic skills programs and materials for adult reading, writing, English language acquisition, math, and family literacy education.

The bill eliminates the National Institute of Literacy, described earlier in this report, due to its lack of results, duplication of services, and not receiving funding in the past two fiscal years.

Authorization of appropriations

H.R. 803 authorizes appropriations for Title II at $606,294,933 for fiscal year 2014 and each of the six succeeding fiscal years. This amount is equal to the appropriated amount for fiscal year 2012 for Title II of WIA.

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO THE WAGNER-PEYSER ACT

The Wagner-Peyser Act authorizes the current employment services system and the employment statistics system. Because employment services funding is being consolidated under the Workforce Investment Fund and the employment services functions are being integrated into the One-Stop delivery system, H.R. 803 repeals sections 1 through 14 of the Wagner-Peyser Act. These sections authorize the stand-alone employment services system and the separate Employment Services Statistical Program.

H.R. 803 amends the current employment statistics system authorized under the Wagner-Peyser Act and renames the system the Workforce and Labor Market Information System. The requirement for the secretary to prepare an annual plan for management of the nationwide employment statistics system is eliminated. This plan has not proven useful. In place of the plan requirement is an authorization for the secretary to assist in the development of national electronic tools that may be used to facilitate the delivery of work ready services and provide workforce information to individuals through the One-Stop and other appropriate delivery systems.

The bill eliminates the requirement for the governor to designate a state agency to oversee the labor market information system and gives the governor flexibility to operate the system as appropriate for the state's delivery system. Our rapidly changing economy and labor markets require a new, flexible, demand-driven workforce investment system that is fully aligned with states' economic development strategies. This system, in turn, requires a broader view of workforce, labor market, and economic data and information than the traditional labor market information system of the past. Governors need the flexibility to determine how this function is performed without being bound by outdated institutional arrangements. Through this change, the committee recognizes quality workforce information is more important than ever; it should be utilized as a tool to drive system investments, including types of training needed by individuals to compete in local labor markets, the development of targeted high growth strategies as part of economic development, and use by businesses eager to grow and compete both locally and globally.

Provisions in current law relating to consultations between the secretary and state employment statistics officials is simplified to provide that the secretary, working through the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) and ETA, must regularly consult with representatives from the designated state agencies on strategies for improving the workforce and labor market information system. At least twice each year, the secretary, working through BLS, would conduct formal consultations on BLS programs with representatives, elected by and from state directors affiliated with state entities, from each of the ten Department of Labor regions. This formal consultation and election process is similar to current law.

H.R. 803 eliminates the Employment Service Statistical Program, which reimburses states for providing data for national statistical programs, as it is duplicative of statewide activities currently funded under WIA. The bill also eliminates the 21st Century

Workforce Commission, which issued its final report on the skills needed for the information technology industry sector in the spring of 2000.

TITLE IV—REPEALS AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

H.R. 803 eliminates and streamlines 35 ineffective and duplicative programs and creates a new Workforce Investment Fund, a single workforce training program for unemployed and underemployed workers. The reasons for consolidation are outlined earlier in this report. The bill repeals the following programs: WIA Adult Program; WIA Youth Activities; WIA Dislocated Workers; Employment Services (ES)/Wagner-Peyser Funded Activities; Community-Based Job Training Grants; Veterans Workforce Investment Program; National Farmworker Jobs Program—U.S. Department of Labor; Native American Employment and Training; WIA National Emergency Grants; Reintegration of Ex-Offenders; Grants to States for Training for Incarcerated Individuals; YouthBuild; Conservation Activities by Youth Service Organizations (Youth Conservation Corps); 21st Century Workforce Commission; Senior Community Service Employment Program (SCSEP); Women in Apprenticeship and Nontraditional Occupations (WANTO); Projects with Industry; State-Supported Employment Services Program; Migrant and Seasonal Farmworkers Program—U.S. Department of Education; Disabled Veterans' Outreach Program; Local Veterans Employment Representative Program; WIA Pilot and Demonstration Projects; Workforce Innovation Fund; ES Statistical Programs; Green Jobs Act; National Institute for Literacy; Youth Opportunity Job Grants; Recreational Programs; and In-Service Training of Rehabilitation Personnel.

In addition to these programs, the bill amends the Brownfields Job Training Cooperative Agreements (Environmental Workforce Development and Job Training Program) to remove references to training to prohibit the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) from distributing grants for workforce training efforts that are duplicative of the workforce investment system. H.R. 803 also amends the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program's (SNAP) Employment and Training program, the Second Chance Act Prisoner Reentry Initiative, and three Refugee and Entrant Assistance programs to provide such services through the statewide workforce development system authorized under this Act. State and local boards are required to detail in their plans how they will serve the employment and training needs of SNAP recipients, refugees, and ex-offenders.

TITLE V—AMENDMENTS TO THE REHABILITATION ACT OF 1973

The Rehabilitation Act of 1973 is the nation's major program providing comprehensive vocational rehabilitation (VR) services to help persons with disabilities become employable and achieve full integration into society. The primary program within the Act is the state VR program under Title I, which provides formula grant funds to states for VR services to assist persons with significant disabilities to become employed in integrated work settings.

VR Programs

H.R. 803 makes several significant and important changes to the underlying law. In the committee's ongoing effort to address the duplication of federal workforce training programs, the bill eliminates five programs that are ineffective or duplicative of the much larger state grant program, most of which have been proposed for elimination by the Obama Administration.

The In-Service Training of Rehabilitation Personnel program supports state systems of professional development. The program is duplicative of the existing—and larger—training program authorized under Section 302 of the Act, and the requirement that states provide comprehensive professional development as part of their Title I state plans. The administration's fiscal year 2013 budget eliminates funding for this small program. The Department of Education's budget justifications advocated for this elimination "in order to reduce duplication of effort and administrative costs, streamline program administration at the federal and local level, and improve accountability."

The Migrant and Seasonal Farmworkers program provides funding to states to assist individuals with disabilities who are migrant and seasonal farmworkers. The program is duplicative of the main Title I state grant, which provides similar services and serves the same target population. It also contains numerous provisions to ensure that state agencies reach and serve all individuals with disabilities in the state, including minority, unserved, and underserved populations. The administration's fiscal year 2013 budget eliminates funding for this small program. As with the In-Service Training program, the Department of Education is seeking this program's elimination "in order to reduce duplication of effort and administrative costs, streamline program administration at the federal and local level, and improve accountability." The program is also producing poor results. During fiscal year 2009, the 13 states with projects served 189 individuals, placing 126 in employment ($17,460 program cost/per placement). In contrast, states that did not receive dedicated funding served 1,835 migratory workers and placed 1,082 in employment. In FY 2008, the 13 states with projects reported placing 55 percent of those served into employment while states without projects reported placing 58 percent into employment.

The Recreation program provides individuals with disabilities inclusive recreational activities and related experiences. The program did not receive funding in fiscal year 2012 and gave out only 16 new grants in fiscal year 2011. As the administration stated in its fiscal year 2012 budget proposal to eliminate this program, its activities would be more appropriately financed by state and local agencies and the private sector.

The Projects with Industry (PWI) program creates and expands job and career opportunities for individuals with disabilities in the competitive labor market. The program did not receive funding in fiscal year 2012. The committee believes, however, that direct engagement with industry is critical to improving employment opportunities for individuals with disabilities. To that end, H.R. 803 requires states to set aside at least one-half of 1 percent of their Title I state grant funds to award grants to businesses and partnerships between businesses and other entities to provide services similar to those provided to grantees under the PWI program. Integrating these efforts with the main state program will strengthen partnerships between industry and the statewide VR system.

The Supported Employment State Grant program provides supplemental funding to state VR agencies for providing supported employment services for individuals with the most significant disabilities. The program duplicates the much larger Title I state grant program by providing similar services to the same target population. The administration's fiscal year 2013 budget eliminates funding for this small program. In 2012, the Department of Education stated in its budget justifications, "[B]ecause supported employment is now an integral part of the VR State Grants program, the Administration believes that there is no longer a need for a separate funding stream to ensure the provision of such services." State agencies are spending a growing portion of their main VR program funds to provide supported employment services, demonstrating that the Supported Employment State Grant program has accomplished its goal.

Transition services

H.R. 803 makes significant changes to the underlying law to address the need for improved transition services for youth with disabilities. The Department of Labor's Office of Disability Employment Policy reports that the labor force participation rate for people with disabilities was only 21 percent in January 2013, more than three times lower than the rate for people without disabilities. The committee recognizes the significant need to improve the transition of youth with disabilities from school to postsecondary education and employment.

A 2003 GAO report found poor linkages between schools and youth service providers and a lack of community work experience impedes the successful transition of youth. Without the involvement of agencies that support youth with disabilities, the responsibility for transition is left to special education teachers who may not have the capacity, training, or access to necessary community resources. The involvement of the VR program in transition provides students with disabilities and special education teachers with assistance, training, and access to community resources that can be critical to success. However, many youth with disabilities who are eligible for VR services while in high school do not access them because they lack knowledge of the program or the program does not have the capacity to serve all those who are eligible.

The committee recognizes state vocational rehabilitation agencies currently have an affirmative obligation to provide transition services to students with disabilities as they prepare to leave secondary education. Despite this obligation, the state vocational rehabilitation agencies have not sufficiently addressed this important problem. In response to the 2003 GAO report, the committee developed a bipartisan proposal in the 109th and 110th Congresses to address the transition of students receiving services under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) to postsecondary education, employment, and independent living. H.R. 803 reflects this long-standing consensus.

To improve planning and coordination, the bill requires states to address the needs of students with disabilities as a part of the comprehensive statewide assessment of vocational rehabilitation needs and to describe the methods used to expand and improve services to students with disabilities, including the coordination of services designed to facilitate the transition of such students to postsecondary education or employment. The bill also requires states to set aside at least 10 percent of their formula grants to expand transition services. States will be required to use these targeted funds to carry out programs or activities to improve and expand services that facilitate student transition; improve the achievement of post-school goals; support training and technical assistance to personnel; support outreach activities; and provide vocational guidance, career exploration services, and job search skills to students with disabilities.

Administration

The bill seeks to better align the Department of Education's services to individuals with disabilities by eliminating bureaucratic hurdles to collaboration. The committee believes improved coordination of services will better address the challenges youth with disabilities face when transitioning out of secondary education and lead to better employment and postsecondary outcomes.

H.R. 803 changes the position that heads the Rehabilitation Services Administration (RSA) within the Department of Education from a commissioner appointed by the president and approved by the Senate to a director appointed by the secretary. The committee notes this is a simple and important change to the department's administrative functioning that will help make it operate more effectively and ensure a consistent policy view exists across the department's programs that address the needs of individuals with disabilities.

The Assistant Secretary of Special Education and Rehabilitation Services oversees the Director of the Office of Special Education Programs and the Director of the National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research. The bill places the Rehabilitation Services Administration (RSA) on equal footing with those two important offices, and reaffirms the importance of coordinating federal policy across these three vital offices through the Office of the Assistant Secretary.

Administration after administration has struggled with having two individuals appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate working within the same office. Providing this clarity will establish a clear sense of purpose to these offices, enabling the department to focus more on providing high-quality services to individuals with disabilities.

In the 112th Congress, Senators Chuck Schumer (D-NY) and Lamar Alexander (R-TN) introduced S. 679, the Presidential Appointment Efficiency and Streamlining Act of 2011. The bill eliminated the requirement of Senate approval of specified presidentially appointed positions in federal agencies and departments to reduce bureaucracy and improve efficiency. The bill as voted out of committee removed the requirement for Senate confirmation of the Commissioner of the RSA, reflecting bipartisan support for this provision. Unfortunately, the provision was removed from S. 679 prior to its approval by the Senate as a result of pressure from interest groups. But Democrats and Republicans agree that the reremoval of Senate confirmation for the commissioner is a common-sense way to provide better and more efficient services to individuals with disabilities.

Coordination with the Assistive Technology Act

When the Assistive Technology Act of 1998 was last reauthorized in 2004, Congress made a series of significant changes to improve the structure and operation of the program. H.R. 803 ensures state VR programs coordinate and cooperate with the lead agency responsible for assistive technology to guarantee individuals with disabilities have access to assistive technology to improve their educational, employment, or independent living opportunities. In addition, the bill provides state VR programs the option to coordinate their activities with programs authorized under the Assistive Technology Act, including device loan, device demonstration, device reutilization, and alternative financing programs.

Conclusion

The Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills (SKILLS) Act embodies bold reforms that will better serve unemployed and underemployed workers struggling to succeed in today's challenging economy. The bill eliminates and streamlines 35 ineffective and duplicative workforce development programs, and empowers state and local leaders to assist workers and job seekers through a single, flexible Workforce Investment Fund. The bill also provides governors the opportunity to submit a responsible plan to consolidate additional programs when such measures would better serve workers by creating a more seamless, comprehensive job training system.

Unlike the current system in which only a handful of programs have been evaluated, H.R. 803 establishes common performance measures that will make it easier for the public to learn whether programs are helping workers find a job, and ensures those programs that demonstrate a pattern of failure lose funding. To ensure states and local areas are serving all Americans, including special populations, the bill dedicates a portion of funding to serve those most vulnerable, such as disadvantaged youth and individuals with disabilities.

More money to pay for new workforce programs does not constitute reform; it merely doubles down on the failed policies of the past. H.R. 803 maintains our nation's current fiscal commitment to employment and training assistance—important services that will help close the skills gap—while taking steps to ensure taxpayer dollars are spent more efficiently and effectively, leading to more direct services for workers.

The committee strongly endorses the Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills (SKILLS) Act, which streamlines the confusing maze of job training programs—a step the president has asked Congress to take; strengthens the role of employers; expands state and local decision-making; ensures additional resources are spent on training; and takes action to help get more Americans back to work.

Dear Chairman Kline:

Thank you for the opportunity to review the relevant provisions of the text of H.R. 803, the Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills (SKILLS) Act. Dear Chairman Kline,

I am writing with respect to H.R. 803, the "the Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills Act," which the Committee on Education and the Workforce reported favorably on March 6, 2013. As a result of your having consulted with us on provisions in H.R. 803 that fall within the Rule X jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, and your agreement to support mutually-agreeable changes to the legislation, I agree to discharge our Committee from further consideration of this bill so that it may proceed expeditiously to the House floor for consideration.

Our Committee also reserves the right to seek appointment of an appropriate number of conferees to any House-Senate conference involving this or similar legislation, and asks that you support any such request.

I would appreciate a response to this letter confirming this understanding with respect to H.R. 803, and would ask that a copy of our exchange of letters on this matter be included in the Congressional Record during Floor consideration of H.R. 803.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I write concerning H.R. 803, the Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills Act. There are certain provisions in the legislation that fall within the Rule X jurisdiction of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

In order to expedite the House's consideration of H.R. 803, the Committee will forgo action on this bill. However, this is conditional on our mutual understanding that forgoing consideration of the bill does not prejudice the Committee with respect to the appointment of conferees or to any future jurisdictional claim over the subject matters contained in the bill or similar legislation that fall within the Committee's Rule X jurisdiction. I request you urge the Speaker to name members of the Committee to any conference committee named to consider such provisions.

I would appreciate your response to this letter, confirming this understanding, and would request that you insert our exchange of letters on this matter into the committee report on H.R. 803 and the Congressional Record during any consideration of this bill on the House floor.

Dear Chairman Kline:

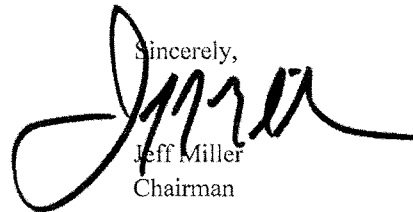

I write to confirm our mutual understanding regarding H.R. 803, as amended, the Supporting Knowledge and Lifelong Skills Act, as amended. This legislation contains subject matter within the jurisdiction of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, specifically, programs providing employment-related services and training for veterans contained in Chapter 41 of Title 38 United States Code.

The House Committee on Veterans' Affairs takes this action only with the understanding that the committee's jurisdictional interests over this and similar legislation are in no way diminished or altered.

The committee also reserves the right to seek appointment to any House-Senate conference on this legislation and requests your support is such a request is made.

Finally, I would appreciate a letter from you confirming our agreement and inclusion of this letter in the Congressional Record during consideration of H.R. 803, as amended, and any bill reflecting a conference bill containing the relevant provisions of H.R. 803 on the House Floor. STATEMENT OF GENERAL PERFORMANCE GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

In accordance with clause (3)(c) of House Rule XIII, the goal of H.R. 803 is to reform and improve the federal workforce development systems. The Committee expects the Department of Labor to comply with these provisions and implement the changes to the law in accordance with these stated goals.

H.R. 803 streamlines and eliminates 35 duplicative programs, including 26 identified in a 2011 report by the Government Accountability Office.

DISCLOSURE OF DIRECTED RULE MAKINGS

The committee estimates that enacting H.R. 803 does not specifically direct the completion of any specific rule makings within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 551.

STATEMENT OF OVERSIGHT FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

In compliance with clause 3(c)(1) of rule XIII and clause 2(b)(1) of rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee's oversight findings and recommendations are reflected in the body of this report.

With respect to the requirements of clause 3(c)(2) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives and section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and with respect to requirements of clause 3(c)(3) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives and section 402 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the Committee has received the following estimate for H.R. 803 from the Director of the Congressional Budget Office:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, March 8, 2013.

Hon. JOHN KLINE,
Chairman, Committee on Education and the Workforce, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 803, the Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills Act.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contacts are Christina Hawley Anthony and David Rafferty.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS W. ELMENDORF.

Enclosure.

H.R. 803—Supporting Knowledge and Investing in Lifelong Skills Act

Summary: H.R. 803 would consolidate job training programs under the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 (WIA) into a single funding stream. It also would amend the Wagner-Peyser Act, reauthorize adult-education programs, and reauthorize programs under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (RA). Those programs, which received discretionary funding of $7 billion and mandatory funding of $3 billion in 2013, provide job training, adult education, and employment service assistance.

Enacting the bill would affect direct spending, but those costs are already assumed to continue in CBO's baseline; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures do not apply. (Enacting the bill would not affect revenues.)

Implementing the bill would affect discretionary spending. Assuming appropriation of the authorized amounts, CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 803 would cost $26 billion over the 2014–2018 period.

H.R. 803 would not impose intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA).

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimated budgetary impact of H.R. 803 is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget function 500 (education, employment, training, and social services).

Note: Components may not sum to totals because of rounding.

^aPursuant to the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the cost of extending the grants to provide vocational rehabilitation services is assumed in CBO's current baseline projections and is therefore not included in the costs attributable to the bill. CBO estimates that the cost of extending the state grants through 2022 would result in outlays of about $32 billion.

Basis of estimate: This estimate assumes that H.R. 803 will be enacted near the start of fiscal year 2014, and that the specified authorization amounts will be appropriated for fiscal year 2014 and each subsequent fiscal year. The estimated outlays reflect historical spending patterns for the affected programs.

Direct spending

H.R. 803 would reauthorize mandatory grants to states to provide vocational rehabilitation services. Those grants are currently authorized through fiscal year 2013. H.R. 803 would extend the authorization for the state grants through 2020, which would subsequently be extended for one year each under the RA and the General Education Provisions Act. Pursuant to the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the cost of extending the grants to provide vocational rehabilitation services is assumed in CBO's current baseline projections and is therefore not included in the costs attributable to the bill. CBO estimates that the cost of extending the state grants through 2022 would result in outlays of about $32 billion.

H.R. 803 would authorize the appropriation of $3.1 billion per year for each of the next eight years, equal to the amount the Congress appropriated in fiscal year 2012. However, funding for the mandatory state grants is determined by a formula in the RA. Funding each year is equal to the previous year's funding level adjusted by the year-over-year change in the consumer price index (CPI) as of October 15 of the second preceding year. Because H.R. 803 would not affect that formula, CBO estimates that the CPI formula would continue to determine the funding level, rather than the stated authorization level. In fiscal year 2014, CBO estimates that state grants under the RA would be funded at $3.3 billion; by 2022, funding for state grants would rise to an estimated $3.9 billion.

Spending subject to appropriation

H.R. 803 would reauthorize and amend the WIA, the Adult Education and Family Literacy Act, provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, and the RA. Most of the authorizations for those programs have expired, but are extended through 2013 because the Congress provided funds for those programs for 2013. Under H.R. 803, the authorizations of appropriations for those programs would total about $7.2 billion in 2014.

For ease of comparison to the proposed authorization levels, CBO has shown the most recent level of funding provided by the Congress for each title. Estimated funding for 2013 is based on the amount the Congress provided in the most recent continuing resolution, which expires on March 27, 2013, and is extrapolated for the entire fiscal year. Those estimates do not include any of the effects from the across-the-board cuts mandated in the Budget Control Act of 2011 and specified in the sequestration report issued March 1, 2013, by the Office of Management and Budget.

Title I: Amendments to the Workforce Investment Act. Title I would revise and reauthorize the WIA by consolidating separate grants for adults, dislocated workers, veterans and youth (including Job Corps grants) and some employment service functions currently authorized under the Wagner-Peyser Act into a single funding stream. Those programs, which received approximately $6.3 billion in fiscal year 2013, would be authorized for fiscal years 2014 through 2020. Assuming the appropriation of the authorized amounts, CBO estimates that implementing title I would cost about $22.3 billion over the 2014–2018 period.

Title II: Adult Education and Family Literacy Education Act. Title II would revise and reauthorize the adult education programs in title II of the Workforce Investment Act. The bill would authorize the appropriation of about $600 million for state grants and national activities for each of fiscal years 2014 through 2021, similar to the amount the Congress provided in 2013. (The bill would repeal authorizing language for the National Institute for Literacy, which has not received an appropriation since fiscal year 2010.) CBO estimates that implementing title II would cost about $2.3 billion over the 2014–2018 period, assuming appropriation of the authorized amounts.

Title III: Amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act. Title III would reauthorize labor market information functions of the Wagner-Peyser Act and would authorize appropriations for those purposes at $63 million for each of fiscal years 2014 through 2020. (In 2013, an estimated $63 million was appropriated for similar purposes.) CBO estimates that implementing title III would cost $282 million over the 2014–2018 period, assuming appropriation of the authorized amounts.

Title V: Amendments to the Rehabilitation Act. Title V would revise and reauthorize existing discretionary grant programs under the RA. The authorizations for those programs have expired but are extended through 2013 because the Congress appropriated funds for them for 2013. The bill would reauthorize the programs through 2020.

Department of Education Programs. The Department of Education runs a variety of categorical grant and demonstration programs under the RA—primarily aimed at training, employment support for the disabled, independent living, research, and advocacy projects. The bill would authorize the appropriation of $317 million for those programs for each of fiscal years 2014 through 2020, about $30 million less than provided for those programs in fiscal year 2013. (The bill also would repeal the underlying authority for state grants for supported employment, and rehabilitation services for migrant and seasonal farmworkers, for which the Congress provided a total of $30 million in fiscal year 2013.) CBO estimates that implementing those provisions would cost nearly $1.3 billion over the 2014–2018 period, assuming appropriation of the authorized amounts.

National Council on Disability. The Council is responsible for reviewing federal laws and policies affecting individuals with disabilities. The bill would authorize the appropriation of $3 million for the Council for each of fiscal years 2014 through 2020, equal to the estimated amount appropriated for fiscal year 2013. CBO estimates that implementing this provision would cost $15 million over the 2014–2018 period.

Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board. The Board develops guidelines to ensure access to buildings, transportation vehicles, and telecommunications equipment for individuals with disabilities. The bill would authorize the appropriation of $7 million for the Board for each of fiscal years 2014 through 2020, equal to the estimated amount appropriated for fiscal year 2013. CBO estimates that implementing this provision would cost $35 million over the 2014–2018 period.

Pay-As-You-Go Considerations. None.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact. H.R. 803 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments. By consolidating and repealing grant programs, the bill would decrease the amount of assistance that state, local, and tribal governments receive for employment services, job training, and adult education and literacy services. Such changes to grant programs are not mandates as defined in UMRA.

Estimate prepared by: Federal costs: Workforce Investment Act and Wagner-Peyser—Christina Hawley Anthony; Adult Education and National Institute for Literacy—Justin Humphrey; Rehabilitation Act—David Rafferty; Impact on State, Local, and Tribal governments: Lisa Ramirez-Branum; Impact on the Private Sector: Vi Nguyen.

Estimate approved by: Holly Harvey, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

COMMITTEE COST ESTIMATE

Clause 3(d)(1) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives requires an estimate and a comparison of the costs that would be incurred in carrying out H.R. 803. However, clause 3(d)(2)(B) of that rule provides that this requirement does not apply when the Committee has included in its report a timely submitted cost estimate of the bill prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under section 402 of the Congressional Budget Act.

MINORITY VIEWS

INTRODUCTION

Reauthorization of the Workforce Investment Act (WIA) should be an opportunity to address some of the significant challenges of the 21st century economy, including how to educate and train America's diverse workforce with the skills required to compete in a global market. Regrettably, the Republican proposal, H.R. 803, abandons the federal commitment to job training and shifts responsibility to the states without meaningful accountability. H.R. 803 fails to ensure equitable access to training services for disadvantaged workers and fails to adequately respond to the economic challenges Americans face.

The Majority's process is broken. For almost 40 years, job training legislation had been bipartisan. But, in recent years, the Majority has walked away from bipartisanship. And as a result, job training program support has languished. Committee Democrats repeatedly sought to work with the Majority, during this and the prior Congress, but were rebuffed. During the Committee's sole hearing this Congress on WIA reauthorization, Higher Education and Workforce Training Subcommittee Senior Democrat Ruben Hinojosa and Reps. McCarthy and Tierney each asked for bipartisan discussions and were refused. Committee Senior Democrat George Miller and Representatives Hinojosa and Tierney wrote to Chairmen Kline and Foxx asking for member-to-member negotiations to attempt to reach a bipartisan bill and did not receive any response.

H.R. 803 is nearly identical to another bill reported by the Majority just nine months ago, during a markup in which amendment after amendment was rejected on party-line votes. That partisan bill went nowhere. The present bill has been placed on the same trajectory. After making repeated gestures to try something different, work together, and get something done for the American people, and having those requests rejected or ignored, Committee Democrats found it necessary to refuse to participate in the markup of H.R. 803. This partisan bill is a political exercise. It has been rushed through Committee on a timeline set by a political agenda. It is not an exercise in successful policymaking. That is unfortunate for American workers and businesses.

The Committee should have seized every opportunity to work together and draft bipartisan legislation that would both reduce unemployment and improve our country's global competitiveness. Unfortunately, H.R. 803 does not put us on a path to bipartisanship; it places ideological positions over practical solutions. The Republican approach to reauthorize WIA does not rise to meet the challenges our economy faces, and, for that reason, we strongly oppose H.R. 803.

21ST CENTURY SKILLS STRATEGY INTEGRAL TO ECONOMIC RECOVERY

When the bipartisan Workforce Investment Act was signed into law in 1998, the unemployment rate was 4.5 percent.¹ More than a decade later, the economy has changed, as has the composition of the workforce, including through greater participation by older workers, people of color, women with children, persons with disabilities, and other groups with relatively low historic labor force participation.² And while African American, Latinos and other minority groups continue to comprise a growing share of the U.S. labor force, aggregate numbers show that as a whole, these populations have exhibited poorer labor market outcomes when compared to other American workers.

By 2007, our nation's financial and housing markets suffered significant losses and the U.S. economy entered into an 18-month recession that officially ended in June 2009.³ During that time, more than 8 million jobs were lost.⁴

Aggressive stimulus measures were taken by the Obama Administration in 2009. Since then, the unemployment rate has dropped over 2 percentage points since it peaked at 10 percent, adding roughly 6.1 million jobs in the last 35 months.⁵ While the economy is recovering, more than 40 percent of the 12 million unemployed have been seeking employment for at least 6 months or longer.⁶ Communities of color and disadvantaged workers including youth, low-income adults, people with disabilities and disadvantaged workers generally have been disproportionately affected by this recession. The February 2013 unemployment rates for African Americans, Latinos, and young people were 13.8 percent, 9.6 percent, and 25.1 percent respectively compared to 6.8 percent among Whites.⁷ Among adults with less than a high school diploma, the unemployment rate is 11.2 percent compared to 3.8 percent for those with a bachelor's degree and higher.⁸ Unemployment remains at 12.3 percent for people with disabilities in contrast to those without a disability at 7.9 percent.⁹ More needs to be done to create additional jobs. Yet, a reported 3.6 million jobs remain unfilled.¹⁰ The majority of these available jobs are in growing industries such as health care, which has risen by 320,000 over the year.¹¹ The industry sectors experiencing growth demand different skills than the sectors that have been shedding jobs, creating a skills mismatch between the unemployed and available jobs. Even though the bulk of the evidence points to the rise in the unemployment rate since 2007 as more cyclical than structural, the structural component still represents millions of workers without jobs.¹² In other words, cyclical unemployment can evolve into structural unemployment. Not only must we do more to create good jobs, it is equally important to bring a wide range of people through a diversity of pathways into the skilled labor market.

A sustainable growth strategy should aim to create new jobs while increasing the supply of highly qualified workers who can meet emerging industry demands. The Republican plan accomplishes neither goal. Committee Democrats have repeatedly offered proposals to create good jobs now and have pressed for a reauthorization that extends opportunity to all Americans and aims to close the mismatch between employers' skills demand and workers' skills supply. But rather than working together on bipartisan solutions to support a stronger economic recovery, the Majority has failed to act on job creation measures and advanced H.R. 803, a bill that threatens to widen the American skills gap.

ONE-SIZED WORKFORCE FUND DOES NOT FIT ALL

Committee Republicans claim their approach builds on the work of some state workforce systems, including Utah, which among its policy recommendations for WIA reauthorization charges that “[n]ot all training is the same”.¹³ But H.R. 803 overlooks the demographic and economic factors such as age, English language proficiency, and participation in other assistance programs that may significantly impact how training should vary to help individuals successfully obtain employment and career advancement. Far too many of our nation's job seekers experience barriers to employment that make entering and advancing in the labor market challenging.

Under the guise of reducing duplication, H.R. 803 combines dozens of programs into a single Workforce Investment Fund (WIF). Under this approach, Committee Republicans effectively eliminate, consolidate and cede completely to Governors, individual programs designed to serve returning veterans, low-income adults, disadvantaged youth, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, those with fewer skills and education, people with disabilities, chronically unemployed and people of color who are disproportionately reflected in unemployment figures that are far higher than national averages. Contrary to the Republican approach, there is actually little evidence of potential benefits of consolidation. Eliminating the programs that are tailored toward targeted populations “could potentially undermine program efficacy that arises from the specialized knowledge and familiarity targeted programs have developed with the populations they serve,” says Anthony Carnevale, the director and research professor at the Georgetown University Center on Education and the Workforce.¹⁴

The bill also allows Governors to consolidate additional funds from other training-related programs covered in a unified plan, including Adult Education, Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), Trade Adjustment Assistance (TAA) and the Community Services Block Grant into the newly created Workforce Investment Fund. Specifically, H.R. 803 would allow governors to treat the “employment and training” funds for these programs as if the funds were allotted to the state under WIA. However, it must also “continue to meet the program requirements, limitations, and prohibitions of any Federal statute authorizing the activity or program consolidated into the Workforce Investment Fund. It is unclear whether, in practice, States will realize any actual cost-savings.

Committee Republicans are also misleading when they say that so few participants completed instruction and found jobs. Last year, more than 8 million jobseekers utilized WIA programs. And, 61 percent of WIA Dislocated Workers and 57 percent of WIA Adults, many of whom were low-income, found jobs. For those WIA Adult participants who received training services, 71.2% found jobs, and for WIA Dislocated Workers who received training, 80.6% found jobs. All of this occurred at a time when there were 3.3 jobseekers for every available job.

Further, H.R. 803 disregards the importance of local decision-making by allowing state boards to designate local areas. While State Workforce Investment Boards (WIB) must consult with the governor to determine economic boundaries, they do not have to check with their local boards. In his testimony, Republican witness Todd¹⁵ Gustafson writes, “[r]edesignation is potentially the most controversial concept. . . .” in H.R. 803. He goes on to say that increasing governors’ authority to redesignate workforce areas “. . . should not be at the expense of local input.” H.R. 803 fails to maintain the critical balance between states and local areas. Committee Democrats believe that it is imperative that there be a collaborative process between the states and local areas to designate workforce areas. A hallmark of the Workforce Investment Act is its emphasis on flexibility for states and local areas to innovate and be responsive to local economic conditions. The Republican bill ignores the differences between local and regional economies by rerouting workforce decisions to the state level without sufficient local area involvement.

The Majority noted a 2011 Government Accountability Office (GAO) report that found overlap amongst many federal education programs. Committee Democrats support better coordination of programs. However, the Majority's approach of merely reducing the total number of programs for the sake of reducing the number of programs will not improve program efficiency. Moreover, merely shifting management responsibilities and administrative costs from the federal government to each of the fifty states and thousands of local governments will unlikely increase effectiveness or reduce administrative and other costs. Essentially, the bill consolidates over two dozen programs and replaces them with fifty different state-level programs.

Simply combining funding streams does not guarantee that workers or businesses will be any better served if those investments are not guided by the effective practices developed by the workforce field over the past 15 years and measured to ensure accountability. Instead, the adoption of a broad consolidation under H.R. 803 puts employment opportunities and training services at risk for large, vulnerable segments of our workforce. Moreover, H.R. 803 does not go far enough to ensure states adopt documented, effective practices. Under current law, many states have already implemented effective strategies, including career pathways systems that bring a wide range of people into the skilled labor market through strategic partnerships. Rather than promote continuous innovation, the bill eliminates key policy provisions that support the development of career pathways and other innovative approaches. Without minimum standards and accountability, Governors will serve favored groups and those easiest to serve. The Republican bill erodes the ability of American families to remain in or move into the middle class and stifles our nation's economic competitiveness.

THE WORKFORCE INVESTMENT ACT OF 2013 (H.R. 798)—DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE

Committee Democrats have introduced an alternative bill, the Workforce Investment Act of 2013 (H.R. 798) that represents a reasoned best practices reauthorization of WIA. Led by Representatives Tierney and Hinojosa, the Democratic alternative updates the current workforce investment system by strengthening accountability measures, streamlining existing programs, and creating new initiatives for innovative practices. The Democratic alternative reflects a commitment to employment opportunities for all workers and a commitment to the career advancement of our nation's most vulnerable and disadvantaged jobseekers.

Among other provisions, the Democratic alternative would streamline and coordinate the operation of job training, adult education, and postsecondary education programs through unified planning. The bill would improve cross-program alignment through flexible implementation of career pathways strategies and initiatives that offer career advancement to all workers, as well as increase engagement with employers on a regional and sectoral basis where appropriate.

The alternative would ensure all Americans have access to high-quality services, including individuals with the most significant barriers to employment, by establishing a common One-Stop delivery identifier and co-locating Employment Services and the One-Stop Center offices. It would also improve accountability by establishing common reporting and performance measures across all job training, adult education, Wagner-Peyser, and Vocational Rehabilitation programs.

In addition, the Democratic alternative would promote the search for successful practices across programs, continuous innovation, and adoption of the most effective approaches. Under a new Workforce Innovation Fund, the bill would support the exploration of new or promising service models and rigorous evaluation to identify successful strategies.

The Democratic alternative also promotes partnerships like those that fully engage community colleges, so local areas can leverage resources, respond more effectively to economic challenges, and meet future industry needs. Of particular note, the substitute amendment would establish an authorization of the $8 billion Community College to Career Fund as proposed by President Obama to expand capacity to train workers in high-growth industries, such as health care, transportation, and advanced manufacturing.

In contrast to what is proposed in H.R. 803, Committee Democrats believe that a WIA reauthorization bill must expand opportunities for all workers, help businesses staff high-skilled and other open positions, and assure that tax-payer dollars are spent wisely, efficiently and effectively.

WIA SHOULD PROVIDE CAREER OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL AMERICANS

Beyond the programs H.R. 803 would eliminate through consolidation, Committee Republicans further risk reducing access to education and training services for our nation's most vulnerable workers by setting aside about 2 percent of the governor's state-set aside for services for individuals with barriers to employment, which include disadvantaged youth.

The provision under H.R. 803 to provide states an option to consolidate Adult Education, TANF, TAA and other federal programs that serve our most vulnerable into one generic funding stream could result in significantly fewer resources for adults with low-levels of literacy, women and their families, and workers dislocated from trade impacted industries.

The Republican bill also provides no priority of service for low-income adults or out-of-school youth under the Workforce Investment Fund and fails to ensure that each local area receives funding for youth activities. Committee Republicans argue that such a provision impedes employers' ability to find skilled workers quickly and that eliminating the priority of service requirement better serves all job-seekers. However, striking priority of services for low-income workers for training and intensive services when funds are limited in local areas will not boost the recruitment of skilled workers; it will instead, almost certainly reduce access to education and training services for our nation's most vulnerable populations. Without a priority of service provision as provided under current law, dislocated workers, youth, older workers, and those in areas of highest unemployment would continue to be at a disadvantage under the bill.

Unfortunately, H.R. 803 is especially detrimental to young people because it eliminates dedicated training funds for youth programs. Without a designated youth funding stream, youth will have to compete against adults for Workforce Investment Fund funding. Youth ages 16 to 24 have had unemployment rates hovering around 16 percent for 38 consecutive months and continue to be adversely affected as the economy continues to recover.¹⁶ Just 15 percent of teens had a job in May 2012.¹⁷

H.R. 803 WEAKENS ACCOUNTABILITY AND CONSUMER GOVERNANCE ROLE

H.R. 803 eliminates WIA's longstanding requirement that labor, community-based organizations, community colleges, or people who work with youth, veterans, or workers with disabilities have a seat at the table on state and local WIBs. The WIBs play a central role in analyzing local needs and allocating local resources for workforce development. Simply increasing the percentage of employers serving on WIBs will do little to increase the number of employers already involved in the planning or design of related training and employment strategies. At the same time, by decreasing the role of other community stakeholders' participation on the WIBs, H.R. 803 will reduce the valuable input of community organizations and other stakeholders with expertise and interest in serving vulnerable populations.

Essentially, the Republican bill restructures the workforce system in a way that locks out key stakeholders and leaves the system vulnerable to favoritism. These are key stakeholders who can recognize when a program is or isn't working. They provide a voice for workers who need training and jobs. H.R. 803 silences that voice.

Under current law, business makes up a majority of each WIB and chairs each board. H.R. 803, however, guarantees business $\frac{2}{3}$ of the seats on a board, and up to 100 percent of those seats. It gives these businesses nearly unchecked power to spend government funds. Moreover, this provision would discourage the workforce system from leveraging the expertise and resources of community organizations and those who represent the training of diverse communities.

H.R. 803 FREEZES WIA FUNDS OVER THE NEXT SIX YEARS

The federal government spends nearly $3 billion on Workforce Investment Act formula programs, not $18 billion as the Republicans claim. Republicans are using an outdated number that reflected peak of funding under the Recovery Act. Under H.R. 803, the authorized funding levels are capped over the next six years at current levels with no inflation increases. In other words, the bill limits the funding authorization irrespective of increases in the costs of providing services or the needs for those services that may result from future economic circumstances. This freeze will lead to real cuts at a time when the need for quality services is greatest. Last Congress, the Republican majority proposed cutting roughly $2.97 billion in WIA funds, dismantling the national commitment to the millions of Americans seeking job assistance, skills assessment, career counseling, and job training programs. H.R. 803 underfunds job training services leaving tens of thousands of the unemployed without the skills they need to find jobs.

CONSUMER GROUPS HAVE EXPRESSED CONCERNS AND OPPOSITION TO
H.R. 803

Over 40 groups, including labor organizations, civil rights groups, disability advocates, youth groups and workforce investment organizations wrote letters of opposition or concern regarding H.R. 803. Some of the groups in opposition include: the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Association of Farm Worker Opportunity Programs, National Youth Employment Coalition, Center for Law and Social Policy, Council of State Administrator of Vocational Rehabilitation, Easter Seals, the Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights, National Association of Counties, National League of Cities, National Council on La Raza, National Council of State Directors of Adult Education, National Skills Coalition, and the United Steel Workers. These organizations agree that the Republican bill does not move our workforce into the future.

Additionally, last year, Labor Secretary Hilda Solis and Education Secretary Arne Duncan wrote a letter in strong opposition to the Republican bill citing “it does not succeed in” addressing the Administration’s reform principles. The letter goes on to state, “[W]e are concerned that the bill’s approach fails to ensure that vulnerable populations, especially those with the most significant barriers to employment (including veterans, individuals with disabilities, low-income individuals and families, and low-skilled adults and youth), will receive the range of assistance they need.” While they “strongly oppose the current version of H.R. 4297,” the Departments of Labor and Education expressed their interest in working with the Committee to develop bipartisan legislation that is consistent with the Administration’s reform principles, which consist of providing “[a]ll Americans, including individuals with the most significant barriers to employment . . . have access to high-quality services One-Stop Career Centers that connect them with the full range of services available in their communities.”

REHABILITATION ACT

While the Great Recession has been widespread, affecting a wide variety of individuals, people with disabilities continue to face formidable hurdles in reconnecting to the labor market. The labor force participation rate of workers with disabilities is shockingly low. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) employment report for February 2013, there are nearly 30 million adults with disabilities in the United States between the ages of 16 and 64.¹⁸ Of this group, only about 20 percent of individuals with a disability are participating in the labor force compared to nearly 70 percent of people with no disability.¹⁹ The unemployment rate for persons with a disability is 12.3 percent, well above the 7.9 percent for those with no disability.²⁰

Committee Democrats believe revisions to the Rehabilitation Act must be made in concert with WIA reauthorization to ensure that individuals with disabilities continue to have access to the high quality job training and employment services and supports tailored to the unique and individualized needs of the disability community. Increasing opportunities for competitive integrated employment for all individuals with disabilities and improving youth transition advances opportunities for economic self-sufficiency, employment, and full inclusion in society.

Developing a job training and employment system that reflects the accessibility needs of America's diverse workforce and business community is central to this reauthorization. However, H.R. 803 fails to meet this need by failing to comprehensively reauthorize the Rehabilitation Act and update programs that currently serve about 1 million individuals with disabilities each year. Of this population, 92 percent have significant disabilities. H.R. 803 instead focuses on eliminating programs and services rather than ensuring high quality transition services and employment opportunities for people with disabilities. The bill strikes Title VI of the Rehabilitation Act, including the Supported Employment Program for individuals with the most significant disabilities. This program provides critical support to develop and establish successful supported employment programs for those individuals with the most significant disabilities who might not be traditionally considered appropriate for competitive employment.

H.R. 803 also eliminates the in-service training program for rehabilitation personnel. To ensure that consumers have access to qualified staff who are trained to address the unique vocational rehabilitation and counseling needs of individuals with the most significant disabilities, to assist business in attracting highly qualified employees with disabilities, and to ensure positive employment outcomes requires the recruitment and retention of qualified rehabilitation professionals and paraprofessionals. Without such investments, the long-term result will be declining numbers of rehabilitation professionals and a negative impact on the employment of people with disabilities.

Also problematic, H.R. 803 removes State Vocational Rehabilitation (VR) representation from WIBs. Under current law, State VR Directors are mandatory partners of the workforce system, representing the unique needs of individuals with the most significant disabilities. The Republican bill weakens a critical voice needed at the state and local levels to ensure the employment needs of the disability community are adequately represented.

In addition, H.R. 803 keeps the current funding authorization flat in each year and makes only modest changes to areas concerning transitioning youth. Without significant improvements to the bill on programmatic accessibility, many individuals with the most significant disabilities who require specialized services and supports to go to work will continue to face tremendous challenges in securing gainful employment.

Among the hundreds of stakeholder groups that weighed in on the bill, numerous organizations sent letters in opposition or expressing concern with specific issues to the Rehabilitation Act changes under H.R. 4297, the predecessor to H.R. 803 that was proposed by Republicans in the 112th Congress, including: Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities Employment and Training Task Force, Council of State Administrators of Vocational Rehabilitation, Easter Seals, The Arc, The Pacer Center, and National Disability Rights Network.

Committee Democrats remain committed to improving current law by fully reauthorizing one of the nation's most comprehensive and longest serving employment programs for people with disabilities. During Full Committee deliberation of H.R. 4297, the predecessor to H.R. 803 that was proposed by Republicans in the 112th Congress, Representatives Holt and Woolsey offered an amendment to strike Title V of H.R. 4297 and replace it with the Rehabilitation Act Reauthorization, Title IV of the Workforce Investment Act of 2012 (H.R. 4227). The amendment would increase transition services by requiring States to assess the needs of and serve transitioning youth with disabilities including through job exploration and mentoring. It would increase dissemination and applicability of disability research, including research to maximize full inclusion in society, competitive integrated employment and economic self-sufficiency. The Holt-Woolsey amendment would extend supported employment services to include services for youth with the most significant disabilities, increase focus on underserved populations under the Independent Living Centers Program, and improve employer outreach on employment opportunities for individuals with disabilities. This amendment failed by a party line vote of 15–23.

In 2011, state Vocational Rehabilitation agencies reported that as many as 78,000 individuals with disabilities were on waiting lists for services during the year. Unfortunately, H.R. 803 fails to provide a comprehensive reauthorization for the Rehabilitation Act, threatening services at a time when the needs of individuals with disabilities are great. Rather than join the disability community's call for a comprehensive reauthorization of the Rehabilitation Act, including calls from the National Centers for Independent Living, National Disability Rights Network, Collaboration to Promote Self-Determination: Association of Persons for Supported Employment, Autistic Self-Advocacy Network, Institute for Educational Leadership, Jay Nolan Community Services, National Disability Institute, National Down Syndrome Congress, National Down Syndrome Society, National Organization of Nurses with Disabilities, TASH, and the National Center for Learning Disabilities, the Republican bill largely overlooks this important law, rejecting the opportunity to continue key policies and programs that assist people with disabilities to find employment.

CONCLUSION

With increasing global competition and the deep impact of the Great Recession on our workforce, many individuals and their families have been hit hard with employment loss. There is bipartisan consensus that the nation's job training law needs updating to efficiently and effectively ensure job training and employment services reflect market demands and more importantly, help the people who need them. A modern workforce system requires investments in individuals for both short-term reemployment needs and for long-term skills attainment and credentialing. We can do this by supporting and fostering innovation in the system, engaging sector partners and leveraging community resources. Now more than ever, we need to put people onto career pathways through smart investments in our nation's workforce. H.R. 803 fails to achieve these goals.
