1 SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

2 Congress finds the following:

3 (1) From the 17th to the mid-19th centuries,
4 the Governments of Spain and Mexico made grants
5 of land to individuals, groups, and communities
6 throughout the Southwest United States to promote 7 settlement in frontier lands.

8 (2) The key land ownership feature for a land
9 grants-merced was common lands, meaning lands
10 that were not individually owned but were considered
11 “commons” for use by all local residents to provide 12 the necessary resources to sustain the entire commu-
13 nity.

14 (3) On February 2, 1848, the United States
15 and Mexico ended the Mexican-American war by 16 signing the Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and 17 Settlement (commonly known as the Treaty of Gua-18 dalupe Hidalgo), in which Mexico formally relin-
19 quished to the United States claims to over 790,000
20 square miles of land now constituting all or part of

1 Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico,
2 Texas, Utah, and Wyoming.

3 (4) The Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo included
4 provisions under article VIII for the protection of es-
5 tablished property rights, including community land
6 grants located in the new territories, and the United 7 States and Mexico further affirmed these protections
8 in the Protocol of Queretaro.

9 (5) Although the Senate struck article X of the 10 Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo as negotiated, the 11 United States clarified in the subsequent Protocol of 12 Queretaro that “these grants . . . preserve the legal 13 value which they may possess” and the grantees in 14 the new territories retained their property rights.

15 (6) As noted by the Government Accountability
16 Office in the 2001 report GAO–01–951, “The Pro-
17 tocol specified the United States’ position that land 18 grant titles would be protected under the treaty and 19 that grantees could have their ownership of land ac-
20 knowledged before American tribunals.”.

21 (7) In the second half of the 19th century, the 22 United States enacted various laws establishing 23 processes to review property claims in the new terri-
24 tories, such as the Act of July 22, 1854 (10 Stat.
25 308; ch. 103), that created the office of Surveyor

1 General of New Mexico and the Act of March 3,
2 1891 (26 Stat. 854; ch. 539), that created the Court
3 of Private Land Claims.

4 (8) The established processes differed from 5 State to State, and a history of problematic surveys
6 and corruption may explain why there was so much
7 acreage lost by community land grants and why so
8 few survived into modern times as self-governing en-
9 tities administering intact common lands.

10 (9) Studies have concluded that for land grant 11 communities and community members to survive in 12 the non-cash economies prior to the mid-20th cen-
13 tury, it was essential that they have access to the 14 common land resources of their own private
15 inholdings, which provided a complete resource base
16 for successful small-scale family farming and stock-
17 raising activities, upon which the local economy was 18 based.

19 (10) New Mexico's community land grants, now
20 known as land grant-mercedes, are an important
21 part of the State's culture and history and have been 22 recognized under the Kearny Code of 1846 and sub-
23 sequent territorial laws of New Mexico and New 24 Mexico State law.

1           (11) Article 2, section 5 of the constitution of 2           New Mexico states, “The rights, privileges and im-
3           munities, civil, political and religious guaranteed to 4           the people of New Mexico by the Treaty of Guada-
5           lupe Hidalgo shall be preserved inviolate”, providing 6           powerful constitutional protection for the rights of 7           the State’s land grant communities.

8           (12) Water delivery systems known as acequias,
9           or community ditches, are a centuries-old system
10          used for water distribution, introduced to New Mex-
11          ico by the Spanish in the 16th century, to allow for 12          farming to sustain the needs of the community, cre-
13          ating a cultural landscape and way of life centered
14          around local agriculture.

15          (13) In New Mexico, acequias are governed by 16          a centuries-old form of water governance, known as 17          acequias, that are political subdivisions of the State
18          and are composed of a board of private land owners
19          that are responsible for the upkeep and maintenance
20          of the acequias and for monitoring and admin-
21          istering surface water rights along the acequia.

22          (14) In New Mexico, acequias have created a
23          cultural landscape and way of life centered around 24          local agriculture, water governance, and a custom of 25          sharing scarce water.
