

Gorsuch as “one of the most thoughtful and brilliant judges to have served our nation over the last century.” Over the last century. That is President Obama’s Supreme Court lawyer.

The left-leaning Denver Post recently highlighted Judge Gorsuch’s reputation as a “brilliant legal mind” who applies the law “fairly and consistently.”

I am happy to report that we have even been assured by liberal talk show host Rachel Maddow that Gorsuch is “a relatively mainstream choice.” Rachel Maddow.

Turns out, in the years since Judge Gorsuch’s unopposed Senate confirmation, he has shown himself to be the very kind of judge everyone hoped he would be, one who demonstrates a “sense of fairness and impartiality” that Democratic then-Senator Salazar lauded him for in 2006, which Salazar called a “keystone for being a judge.” That was the Democratic Senator from Colorado when he was confirmed in 2006.

That was Judge Neil Gorsuch’s reputation back then, and it is his richly deserved reputation still, as those in both parties who have known and worked with him continue to tell us. As one Democrat and Denver attorney put it, Judge Gorsuch is “smart [and] he’s independent.” The things we have heard from so many about Judge Gorsuch—smart and independent, fair and impartial, thoughtful and brilliant—are just the qualities we should expect in our next Supreme Court Justice. They are the same qualities I am confident Judge Gorsuch will bring to the Court.

CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW ACT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, this Republican-led Congress is committed to fulfilling our promises to the American people. That work continues now as we consider legislation to push back against the harmful regulations from the Obama administration. On its way out the door, the Obama administration forced nearly 40—40—major and very costly regulations on the American people. Fortunately, we now have the opportunity to work with a new President to begin bringing relief from those burdensome regulations.

Last night, the House sent us two resolutions under the Congressional Review Act—one of the best tools at our disposal to undo these heavy-handed regulations.

This afternoon, the Senate will have the opportunity to pass the first of these resolutions, a measure to overturn the stream buffer rule. The resolution before us now is identical to the one I introduced earlier this week, and it aims to put a stop to the former administration’s blatant attack on coal miners. In my home State of Kentucky and others across the Nation, the stream buffer rule will cause major damage to communities and threaten coal jobs. One study actually estimated that this regulation would put as many as one-third of coal-related jobs at risk. That is why the Kentucky Coal Association called it “a regulation in search of a problem.” They joined with the United Mine Workers of America and the attorneys general of 14 States on both sides of the aisle urging Congress to act. We should heed their call now and begin bringing relief to coal country. Today’s vote on this resolution represents a good step in that direction.

Once our work is complete on this legislation, we will turn to another House-passed resolution that will protect American companies from being at a disadvantage when doing business overseas. Although the Securities and Exchange Commission may have had good intentions, the resource extraction rule costs American public companies up to nearly $600 million annually and gives foreign-owned businesses in Russia and China an advantage over American workers. We all want to increase transparency, but we should not raise costs on American businesses, only to benefit their international competition. Let’s send the SEC back to the drawing board to promote transparency without the high costs or negative impacts on American businesses.

These CRA resolutions keep the interests of American families and workers in mind. Today, we will continue to chip away at the regulation legacy of the Obama years, with more CRA resolutions in the coming days as well.

Let’s pass these two resolutions without delay so we can send them to the President’s desk and continue giving the power back to the people.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF NEIL GORSUCH

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I spoke at length about the Supreme Court nomination yesterday, but I just want to underscore a few points. We in the Senate have a constitutional duty to examine the record of Judge Gorsuch robustly, exhaustively, and comprehensively, and then advise and consent, as we see fit. We have a responsibility to reject if we do not.

We Democrats will insist on a rigorous but fair process. Part of that process entails 60 votes for confirmation. Any one Democrat can require it. Many already have. It was a bar met by each of Obama’s nominations; each received 60 votes. Most importantly, it is the right thing to do. And I would note that a 60-vote threshold was reached by each of them either in cloture or in the actual vote.

On a subject as important as a Supreme Court nomination, bipartisan support is essential and should be a prerequisite. That is what a 60-vote threshold does; 60 votes produces a mainstream candidate. And the need for a mainstream consensus candidate is greater now than ever before because we are in major new territory in two ways.

First, because the Supreme Court, under Chief Justice Roberts, has shown increasing drift to become a more and more pro-business Court—siding more and more with corporations, employers, and special interests over working and average Americans—we need a mainstream nominee to help reverse that trend, not accelerate it. I will remind my colleagues, that is how President Trump campaigned, but his nominee seems not to be in that direction at all—not for the average working person but, rather, for special business interests.

Second, given that this administration—at least at its outset—seems to have less respect for the rule of law than any in recent memory and is testing the very fabric of our Constitution within the first 20 days, there is a special burden on this nominee to be an independent jurist, someone who approaches the Court without ideological blinders, who has a history of operating outside and above politics, and who has the strength of will to stand up to a President who has already shown a willingness to bend the Constitution.

Requiring 60 votes has always been the right thing to do on Supreme Court nominations, especially in these polarized times. But now in this new era of the Court, in this new administration, there is an even heavier weight on this tradition. And if the nominee cannot gain the 60 votes, cannot garner bipartisan support of some significance, then the answer is not to change the rules; the answer is to change the nominee and find someone who can gain those 60 votes.

Changing the rules for something as important as the Supreme Court gets rid of the tradition, eliminates the tradition of mainstream nominees who have bipartisan support. It would be so, so wrong to do. I know many of my colleagues on the other side are hesitant to do it, and I hope they will remain strong in that regard.

NOMINATIONS OF BETSY DEVOS AND ANDREW PUZDER

Mr. SCHUMER. Now, on another matter, the pending nominations of the President’s Cabinet, again, we are in unchartered waters with this administration. They have not proposed a normal Cabinet. This is not even close to a normal Cabinet.

I have never seen a Cabinet this full of bankers and billionaires, folks with massive conflicts of interest and such little experience or expertise in the areas they will oversee. Many of the nominees have philosophies that cut against the very nature of the Department to which they were nominated.

Let me give you two examples this morning: Betsy DeVos, the nominee for the Department of Education, and Andrew Puzder, nominee for the Labor Department.

First, Betsy DeVos. When you judge her in three areas—conflicts of interest, basic competence, and ideology, views on education policy—it is clear that Betsy DeVos is unfit for the job of Education Secretary.

In all three areas, ideology, competence, and conflicts of interest, she rates among the lowest of any Cabinet nominee I have ever seen. At her hearing, she didn't seem to know basic facts about Federal education law that guarantee education to students with disabilities. She didn't seem to know the basic facts of a long simmering debate in education policy measuring growth proficiency. And in her ethics agreement, which was delivered to the committee after her first hearing, it was revealed that she would keep interests in several companies that benefit from millions of dollars in contracts from the Department of Education, which she would oversee.

There was a rush to push her through—one round of questions, 5 minutes each. Why? Why did someone generally as fair as the chairman of that committee do that? My guess, an educated guess: He knew how incompetent this nominee was, how poorly she fared under normal questions, and the idea was to rush her through.

Well, that is not what we should be doing on something as important as this. And if the nominee can't withstand a certain amount of scrutiny, they shouldn't be the nominee.

The glaring concerns have led two of my Republican colleagues, the Senators from Maine and Alaska, to pledge a vote against her confirmation, leaving her nomination deadlocked at 50 to 50. I believe both of them cited the fact that in their State, charter schools are not the big issue; it is public schools. How are we going to treat public schools? Particularly in rural areas, as I am sure my friend the Presiding Officer knows, there is not a choice of schools outside the major metropolitan areas, the major cities. If you don't have a good public school, you have nothing. So particularly people from the rural States should be worried, in my judgment, about our nominee's commitment to public education.

For the first time ever, we have the chance that the Vice President and a pending Cabinet nominee, the nominee for Attorney General, Senator SES-SIONS, are casting the deciding votes on a controversial Cabinet position for Betsy DeVos. Mr. President, this has never happened before.

The White House will, in effect, get two deciding votes in the Senate on a nominee to the President's Cabinet: the Vice President and the nominee for Attorney General, our friend Senator SESSIONS.

It highlights the stunning depth of concern this nominee has engendered in Republicans and Democrats alike. It is clear now that Senators of both parties agree she is not qualified to be Secretary of Education. And I would hope that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle—this is such an important position; the nominee is so laddered on issue after issue after issue that we could get someone better. I don't think it will be that hard. It will be President Trump's nominee. It will not be us deciding, but it will be someone who has basic competence, fewer conflicts of interest, and, above all, a commitment to public education.

So I urge my Republican colleagues, friends, to stand up and reject Betsy DeVos, as the Cleveland Plain Dealer urged in an editorial this morning.

This is not a normal nominee, once again. In my view, when I dipped into her record and how she performed in her brief hearing, she has not earned and should not receive the Senate's approval.

Second, the nominee for the Department of Labor, Andrew Puzder. The hearing for his nomination has now been delayed four times because he still hasn't submitted key paperwork laying out his disclosures and detailing a plan for divesting, if necessary, to avoid conflicts of interest. But that might be the least of the Senate's concerns.

This is a nominee who is being sued by dozens of former employees due to workplace violations. This is a nominee who has repeatedly attacked the minimum wage, opposed the overtime rule, and advocated for more automation and fewer jobs. He talked about—I think in very positive terms—robots and how they may run the fast food industry. This is a nominee for Secretary of Labor who not only wants workers to earn less, he wants fewer workers.

For several of these Cabinet positions, it seems the President has searched for candidates whose philosophies are diametrically opposed to the very purposes of their Departments. For Education, pick someone with no experience in public schools and has spent her career advocating against them. For Labor, pick someone who has spent his career trying to keep the wages of his employees low and advocated against policies that benefit workers.

Again, I repeat: This is not your typical Cabinet. This is highly, highly unusual.

So when my Republican colleagues come to the floor every day to complain about delays and holdups, I would remind them that this is very serious. These Cabinet officials will have immense power in our government and wield enormous influence over the lives of average Americans: their wages and the education of their children, for instance.

To spend a few more days on the process is well worth it. And if they prove unfit for the austere and powerful roles they are about to take up, then it is our responsibility, as Senators who advise and consent, to reject their nomination.

UKRAINE

Mr. SCHUMER. One final point: I want to take a moment to mention Ukraine.

Yesterday Rex Tillerson was sworn in as Secretary of State. In addition to dealing with the fallout from the President's first engagements with Australia and Mexico, I want to call the Secretary's attention to the situation in Ukraine.

Since President Trump's call with Mr. Putin last weekend, there has been a significant increase in violence. I hope Secretary Tillerson will ensure that there is a strong statement from the Trump administration condemning these escalatory actions by the Russians.

I also hope my Republican counterparts will start doing what they did last year every time this happened: Come to the floor and demand that the Senate act on tough sanctions against Russia. As I have said before, Russia remains a strategic threat to our Nation, and countering them needs to remain a deeply bipartisan effort.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

DISAPPROVING A RULE SUBMITTED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of H.J. Res. 38, which the clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 38) disapproving the rule submitted by the Department of the Interior known as the Stream Protection Rule.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be 6 hours of debate, equally divided in the usual form.

The Democratic whip.

NOMINATION OF NEIL GORSUCH

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I listened carefully this morning to the statement made by the Republican majority leader, and I was a little bit curious as to what he was trying to say because he talked about a judicial nominee who rated unanimously "well qualified" by the American Bar Association, who received kudos from Republicans and Democrats alike, including Members of the Senate, who went
