The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable LUTHER STRANGE, a Senator from the State of Alabama.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come, throughout life’s seasons moments of decision arrive. As our lawmakers prepare to make critical decisions, give them the wisdom to choose the more challenging right that brings the greatest glory to Your Name. Supply their needs according to Your riches in glory. Purify their thoughts as they strive to do Your will. Remind them that those who are faithful with little will be faithful with much. May they seek simply to be faithful in whatever You assign their hands to do, striving to please You with their work.

We pray in Your great Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Presiding Officer led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. HATCH).

U.S. SENATE, PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, April 6, 2017.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable LUTHER STRANGE, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair.

O ORRIN G. HATCH, President pro tempore.

Mr. STRANGE thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, the Senate has considered the nomination of Judge Neil Gorsuch for many weeks now. We have seen his impressive credentials. We have reviewed his incredible record. We have heard glowing praise on a nearly daily basis from colleagues and students, from judges and newspaper editors, from Democrats and from Republicans.

Judge Gorsuch is independent, and he is fair. He is beyond qualified, and he will make a stellar addition to the Supreme Court.

Hardly anyone in the legal community seems to argue otherwise, and yet, our Democratic colleagues appear poised to block this incredible nominee with the first successful partisan filibuster in American history. It would be a radical move, something completely unprecedented in the history of our Senate and out of all proportion to the eminently qualified judge who is actually before us. But then again, this isn’t really about the nominee anyway. The opposition to this particular nominee is more about the man who nominated him and the party he represents than the nominee himself. It is part of a much larger story, another extreme escalation in the left’s never-ending drive to politicize the courts and the confirmation process.

It is a fight they have waged for decades with a singular aim: securing raw power, no matter the cost to country or institution. It underlies why this threatening filibuster cannot be allowed to succeed or continue—for the sake of the Senate, for the sake of the Court, and for the sake of our country.

I think a look back through history will help every colleague understand why. I always had a particular interest in the history of judicial nominations. It is an interest that predates my service here as a Senator. I remember serving on the staff of a Senator on the Judiciary Committee during a time when two different judicial nominees were being considered. One, Harrold Carswell, was voted down on the Senate floor—correctly, in my view. Another, Clement Haynesworth, also failed to receive the necessary support for confirmation—but in error, I thought.

It piqued my interest on what advice and consent should mean in the Senate, and what it actually meant in practice. I would learn later that I was witnessing the nascent stirrings of what would soon become the so-called judicial wars—the left’s efforts to transform confirmations from constructive debates over qualifications into raw ideological struggles with no rules or limits.

It is a struggle that escalated in earnest when Democrats and leftwing special interests decided to wage war on President Reagan’s nominee in 1987, Robert Bork. Polite comity went out the window as Democrats launched one vicious personal attack after another—not because Bork lacked qualifications or suffered some ethical failing, but because his views were not theirs. The Washington Post described it at the time: “It’s not just that there has been an intellectual vulgarization and personal savagery to elements of the attack, profoundly distorting the record and the nature of the man.”

As NPR would later observe, the left’s campaign to defeat the nomination...legitimized scorch-earth ideological wars over nominations at the Supreme Court.”

I was there. I saw it all. I remember the viciousness of it. I also remember feeling how hard it was to stop this. At a turning point where a judicial nomination would no longer be evaluated on their credentials but on their ideology. That observation, unfortunately, has proven correct, with Democrats raising the stakes and moving the goalposts each step of the way.

They certainly did so under the next Republican President, George H.W. Bush. We all know what happened to Clarence Thomas. If the gloves were off for Bork, the brass knuckles came out for Thomas. As the New York Times noted that the left-wing liberal columnist Juan Williams described the situation: “To listen or read some news reports on Thomas over the past month is to discover a monster of a man, totally unlike the human being full of sincerity, confusion, and struggles whom I saw as a reporter who watched him for some 10 years.”

That is Juan Williams speaking on Clarence Thomas. Williams said:

He has been conveniently transformed into a monster, but it is fair to say anything, to whom it is fair to do anything.

By the time Bill Clinton won the Presidency, “Bork” had become a verb and “high-tech lynching” was on the lips of the Nation. Wounds were fresh and deep when this Democratic President had the chance to name two Justices of his own to the Court.

Republicans could have responded in kind to these nominees, but that is not what happened. When President Clinton nominated Ruth Bader Ginsburg, the Senate confirmed her 96 to 3. When President Clinton nominated Stephen Breyer, the Senate confirmed him 87 to 9. I, like the vast majority of Republicans, voted for both of them. We did so in full knowledge of the considerable ideological differences between these nominees and ourselves. Ginsburg, in particular, had expressed notably extreme views—even advocating for the abolition of Mother’s Day. A nominee for the Supreme Court who advocated the abolition of Mother's Day was confirmed 96 to 3.

Could we have Borked these nominees? Could we have tried to filibuster them? Sure, but we didn’t.

We resisted the calls for retribution and did our level best to halt the Senate’s slide after the Bork and Thomas episodes. We respected the Senate’s tradition against filibustering Supreme Court nominees.

Now, this tradition not to filibuster extended beyond just the Supreme Court. When President Clinton named two highly controversial nominees from California to the Ninth Circuit, some on my side wanted to defeat their nominations with a filibuster. The Republican leadership said: Let’s not do that. To their great credit, Majority Leader Lott and Judiciary Chairman Hatch implored our confidence not to do this to Senate. Lott filed these nominations to stop the nomination. He, Senator Hatch, and I and a vast majority of the Republican Conference voted for cloture to give them an up-or-down vote. We didn’t do this because we supported the nominees. In fact, most of us doubted their actual confirmation, but we thought they deserved an up-or-down vote. That, after all, was the tradition of the Senate.

Given that we were in the majority and these nominations were highly controversial, our determination not to filibuster but instead advance them to an up-or-down vote was not, as you might imagine, popular with our base. But we resisted the political pressure.

Again, I respected the Senate’s tradition against filibustering judicial nominees.

But it would matter little to our Democratic friends. Less than a year later, President Bush 41 submitted a single judicial nominee, our Democratic colleagues held a retreat in Farmington, PA. There, according to participants, they determined to change the ground rules for how they would handle judicial nominees.

As the New York Times reported, Democrats apparently decided “there was no obligation to confirm someone just because they are scholarly.” Our friend the Democratic leader said at the time that he and his colleagues were “trying to do was set the stage” for yet another escalation in the left’s judicial wars.

Senate Democrats soon became the majority in the Senate, due to then-Senator Jeffords’ party switch. To help implement the imperative from their colleagues, the current Democratic leader used his position on the Judiciary Committee to hold a hearing on whether ideology should matter in the confirmation process.

Now, it won’t surprise you that the conclusion he and his colleagues reached was that it should. So they killed the high thumbs-up or down vote, qualified judicial nominees who did not fit their preferred ideology. I know, because I was on the committee then. Eighteen months later, our Democratic colleagues lost control of the Senate, and, therefore, control of the Judiciary Committee. Our colleague, the current Democratic leader, again took center stage.

The New York Times noted that “over the two years, Mr. Schumer has used almost every maneuver available to a Senate Judiciary Committee member to block the appointment” of the Bush administration judicial nominee. Then, in 2003, according to the New York Times, he “recommended using an extreme tactic, the filibuster,” to block them.

“Mr. Schumer,” it said, “urged Democratic colleagues in the Senate to make some last-ditch, loosely reluctant to pursue, and that has roiled the Senate: a filibuster on the floor of the chamber to block votes on nominees that he and other Democrats had decided to oppose.”

It is hard to express how radical a move that was at that time because it completely changed the way the Senate had handled these nominations for our entire history. Even filing cloture on a judicial nominee had been rare before then, and actually defeating any judicial nominee by filibuster, other than the bipartisan opposition to the nomination of Abe Fortas back in 1968, in a Presidential election year was simply unheard of.

Democrats blocked cloture 21 times on 10 different circuit court nominees, including on outstanding lawyers like Miguel Estrada, whose nomination was filibustered an incredible 7 times.

These are not inflated statistics like the supposed 78 filibusters our Democratic colleagues are now alleging occurred during the Obama administration, which includes numerous instances in which the prior Democratic leader unnecessarily filed cloture petitions. No, what I am talking about are real and repeated filibusters used by Democrats to defeat nominations.

The face of the Senate was an unprecedented change in the norms and traditions of the Senate, as Republicans contemplated using the nuclear option. We decided against it. Fourteen colleagues—three of whom still serve in this body—reached an accord whereby filibusters would be overcome for 5 of the 10 nominees in question. Regrettably, Miguel Estrada was not one of them. He had withdrawn his nomination after being put through an unprecedented ordeal.

Yet, the ink was barely dry on the accord I mentioned when Senate Democrats, led, in part, by our friend the Democratic leader, again did something exceedingly rare in the nominations process: They tried to filibuster Samuel Alito’s nomination to the Supreme Court. No member of the Republican Conference, by the way, has ever voted to filibuster a Supreme Court nominee. On this side of the aisle has ever done that.

Again, it would have been easy for Republicans to have retaliated when President Obama took office, but just like under Clinton, that is not what happened. How would you treat Obama’s lower court nominees?

At the time, our Democratic colleagues decided to “fill up the DC Circuit one way or the other,” as the Democratic leader put it. Senate Republicans had defeated the Taylor bill for nominees of two of President Obama’s judicial nominees. At the time that they decided to employ the nuclear option and Obama's own legal counsel admitted it was inevitable that our next President would be someone who, no matter the party, could select a nominee. It was a standard I held to even when it was clear Democrats would have followed the bipartisan majority of the Senate when it came to confirmations, but it was also something else. It was a tacit admission by our Democratic colleagues that the Senate tradition of up-or-down votes on judicial nominees was not something they should have respected. Unfortunately, it took them 10 years to realize this lesson, and only after they captured the White House and then lost it.

What did they do? They changed the rules. It was a power play, but it was also something else. It was a tacit admission by our Democratic colleagues that the Senate tradition of bipartisan confirmation for judicial nominees was a tradition they should have respected. Unfortunately, it took them 10 years to realize this lesson, and only after they captured the White House and then lost it.

And how did we treat President Obama's Supreme Court nominees? Did we try to filibuster them like our Democratic colleagues tried with Justice Alito? Of course not. When President Obama nominated Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan, we treated both nominees fairly, as they would later say themselves, and we secured an up-or-down vote for both. Most Republicans had significant misgivings about these nominees. Many of us voted no on the confirmations, but we did not think it would be right to deny them up-or-down votes.

I and the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee at the time, Jeff Sessions, even protested when then-Democratic Leader Reid tried to file cloture on the Kagan nomination because we were determined to prevent even the hint of a filibuster. Again, we respected the Senate's tradition against filibustering Supreme Court nominees.

I know our friends on the Democratic side will be quick to interject with a predictable protest about last year, though they seem to forget their own position on the issue. When Justice Scalia passed away, the Senate chose to follow a standard that was first set forth by then-Senator Biden, when he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and then was expanded upon by the current Democratic leader, himself. The Senate exercised its constitutional advice and consent role by withholding its consent until after the election so that the next President, regardless of party, could select a nominee. It is a standard I held to even when it seemed inevitable that our next President would be Hillary Clinton. It is also a standard that President Obama's own legal counsel admitted that Democrats would have followed themselves had the shoe been on the other foot.

The majority of the Senate expressed itself then by withholding consent. The majority of the Senate wishes now to express itself by providing consent to Judge Gorsuch.

The bipartisan majority that supports him cannot do so if a partisan minority filibusters. They are prepared to do so for the first time in American history, and the Democratic leader has muscled openly about holding this seat vacant for an entire Presidential term.

We will not allow their latest unprecedented act on judicial nominations to take hold. This will be the first and last partisan filibuster of a Supreme Court nomination.

All of this history matters. I know the Democratic leader would rather not revisit the circumstances that brought us to this moment. I know the Democratic leader would rather not talk about it. Of course, he doesn't want to talk about it. He and his party decided to change the ground rules for handling judicial nominations.

He and his party pioneered the practice of filibustering lower court judicial nominees. He and his party launched the bipartisan filibuster of a Supreme Court nominee. He and his party deployed the nuclear option in 2013. Now they are threatening to do something else that has never been done in the history of the Senate: successfully filibuster a Supreme Court nominee on a purely partisan basis.

For what reason—because he is not qualified or because he is not fit for the job? No, it is because he was nominated by a Republican President.

This is the latest escalation in the left's never-ending judicial war—the most audacious yet. It cannot and it will not stand.

There cannot be two sets of standards—one for the nominees of Democratic Presidents and another for the nominee of a Republican President. The Democratic leader, essentially, claimed yesterday that Democratic Presidents nominate Justices who are near the mainstream but that Republican Presidents nominate Justices who are far outside the mainstream.

In what universe are we talking about here?

I would say to my friend from New York that few outside of Manhattan or San Francisco believe that Ruth Bader Ginsburg is in the mainstream but that Neil Gorsuch is not.

To quote a long-time Democrat and member of the left-leaning American Constitution Society, there is simply no principled reason—none—to vote no on Judge Gorsuch's nomination, even less of one to block that vote from occurring at all.

Let me say this to my Democratic colleagues: If you truly cannot support the nomination of this eminently qualified nominee, then at least allow the bipartisan majority of the Senate who supports Gorsuch to take an up-or-down vote. You already deployed the nuclear option in 2013. Do not trigger it again in 2017.

The Acting President pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

The Acting President pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until the cloture vote on the Gorsuch nomination will be equally divided between Senators Grassley and Feinstein or their designees.

Mr. Grassley. Mr. President, I was going to ask unanimous consent to that extent. I guess you have already announced that it is in place; is that right? I am going to add something to what the Acting President pro tempore just said, so let me start over again.

I ask unanimous consent that the time until 10:45 a.m. be equally divided between Senator Feinstein or her designee and myself or my designee and that the time from 10:45 a.m. to 11 o'clock be reserved for Senator Schumer's leader remarks.

The Acting President pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. Durbin. Mr. President, I ask for a clarification. Is the remaining 17 or 18 minutes equally divided?

The Acting President pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. Grassley. Mr. President, that is what my unanimous consent request said.

Mr. Durbin. Mr. President, I just wanted to get more specific. I am not questioning what the Senator asked for.

Do we have 9 minutes each or 8 minutes each?

Mr. Grassley. I will probably need more than 9 minutes, but I will put the rest of my statement in the RECORD.

Mr. Durbin. So will I.

Mr. President, I defer to the chairman of the committee if he would like to speak first.

Mr. Grassley. Mr. President, within the next hour or so, we will learn whether the minority will come to their senses or whether they will engage in the very first partisan filibuster of a Supreme Court nominee.

All indications are that they are committed to their course. That is unfortunate. It truly is.

The question one has to ask is this: What, exactly, is so objectionable about this nominee that should be subjected to the first partisan filibuster in U.S. history? Is he, really, not well qualified?

He attended Columbia for his bachelor's, Harvard for law school. Oxford for his doctorate. He clerked for not one—but two—Supreme Court Justices. He has spent over 10 years on the circuit court and has heard 2,700 cases. It is clear, then, that he is extremely well qualified.

So what is it? What makes this nominee so objectionable? The truth is, throughout this process, the minority, led by their leader, has... been desperately searching for a justification for their preplanned filibuster. Over the course of the last couple of months, they have trotted out one excuse after another, but nothing will stick.

They said he isn’t mainstream, but that is not true. Everyone from Obama’s Solicitor General to Rachel Maddow has said he is mainstream. They said he isn’t independent, but everyone knows he is an independent judge in his own man, and he understands the role of a judge.

Then they roll out this ridiculous argument that he is for the big guy and against the little guy. Even liberal law professor like Noah Feldman made fun of that attack. He called it “a truly terrible idea.” Then they said we should hold him responsible for the legal positions he took on behalf of the U.S. Government. The only problem there is, we have had a lot of nominees who endorsed the U.S. Government. They worked for it; the government was their client. The other side certainly didn’t want to hold Justice Kagan responsible for taking the truly extremist position. Solicitor General for the U.S. Government. Constitutionally permitted to ban pamphlets. So that argument fell flat as well.

Then, of course, after they ran out of substantive arguments against the judge and his record, they resorted to attacks on his supporters or the President who nominated him or the selection process, anything—anything—to distract from the judge and the stellar record he has.

They trotted out this absurd claim that we should reject the judge not because of some opinion he has written but because those who support his nomination have the gall to actually speak out and make their voices heard, except they forgot to check with their own supporters first to make sure none of them are spending so-called dark money. Of course, they are spending money on issue advocacy, just like the law permits and the Constitution protects under the First Amendment.

As we all know, issue advocacy during Supreme Court nominations is absolutely nothing new. Those who are complaining about issue advocacy today don’t seem to remember the TV ads the far left ran attacking Judge Bork in 1987. I remember those ads. I remember the ads the left ran against Justice Thomas as well. Of course, outside groups on the left have attacked every Republican nominee since.

So expressing selective outrage over issue advocacy doesn’t advance their cause either, but they still keep it up. Finally, the talk point we have heard repeated most often over the last 24 hours is that Candidate Trump “outsourced” his selection process to conservative groups. I must say, I find that argument the oddest of all. It is the kind of thing Justice Scalia would call “pure applesauce.”

The President didn’t outsource the selection process to conservative groups. He made his list public for the entire country to review during the campaign—the first President to do that. If anything, he outsourced the selection process to whom? The voters—the American people.

So what? You are out of substantive arguments from the other side. Even shots fired at the judge’s supporters somehow boomerang back and hit your own advocacy groups. We have seen all of this before. I have been through a few of these debates over the years. When President Obama nominated the Oval Office, the nominees may change, but the attacks remain the same.

You will hear today the same polle test phrases we have all heard time and again. You will hear words and phrases like “outside the mainstream,” “far right,” and “extreme.” Invariably, these are words the left tries to pin on every nominee of a Republican President and the people he submits to the Senate. With each new nominee on the left, they claim the same. When the President’s nomination has the gall to actually speak out and make their voices heard, don’t you, even though you know in your heart of hearts he deserves to be confirmed. That is why this is an especially sad state of affairs, and I hope my colleagues will change their minds.

At the end of the day, we are left with an exceptional nominee, with impeccable credentials and broad bipartisan support. In short, when you see a nominee fill the entire 220-year history of the United States. Of course, this result was preordained because as the minority leader said weeks before the President was even sworn into office, “it’s hard for me to imagine a nominee that Donald Trump would choose that would get Republican support that we [Democrats] could support.”

You have already committed to the far left that you will launch the first partisan filibuster in the 220-year history of the United States. So you are stuck. You have to press forward, don’t you, even though you know the effort is doomed to fail. You know he will be confirmed, and you know in your heart of hearts he deserves to be confirmed. That is why this is an especially sad state of affairs, and I hope my colleagues will change their minds.

The end of the day, we are left with an exceptional nominee, with impeccable credentials and broad bipartisan support. In short, when you see a nominee fill the entire history of the United States, it is exactly why we are here today. We are celebrating the 1-year anniversary of Merrick Garland on the Supreme Court, it is because they kept that position vacant so it could be filled by a Republican President. That is exactly why we are here today.

When we look at the history that has led us to this moment, the Senator from Kentucky, the Republican leader, has to accept what is clear. In the history of the United States of America, until Senator McConnell’s days under President Obama, exactly 68 nominees had been filibusted. Under Senator McConnell and the Republicans, 79 nominees of President Obama’s were filibusted. It was an abuse of the filibuster never seen before in the history of our Nation, and it was that abuse of the filibuster and statements made that they would leave vacancies on critical courts, like the DC Court of Appeals, there forever and ever amen, that led to the decision 4 years ago to say that we would institute a change in the rules so we could finally fill these court positions—finally break the filibuster death grip—which Senator McConnell brought to this Chamber in a way never before seen in history.

So the Senator from Kentucky has made history. He comes to the floor every day and tells us history. He made history in the number of filibusters he used on this floor. He made history in denying a Presidential nominee the opportunity for a hearing and a vote, which had never—never—happened before in the history of the United States. Talk about partisanship.

When it comes to Judge Gorsuch, I read his cases. I sat through the hearings. I was in the Senate Judiciary Committee. We took a measure of the man. He was careful to avoid any question when it came to his position on cases and issues and values, and that is not unusual. Supreme Court nominees do that.

So we tried to look at his cases. What do the cases that he decided reveal about the man? Two of those cases came right to the front. The first involved the sad story of a frozen truck driver on Interstate 88 outside of Chicago in January a few years back. It was very dangerous for him. He was stuck for hours. He pulled to the side of the road, called his dispatcher who said: Stay with the truck. We are sending somebody. Hours passed. He was going through hypo- thermia. He called the dispatcher and said: I have to do something. He said: You either drive this disabled truck out on the interstate and take your best chances or you stick with the truck. He decided to unhitch the trailer and drive to a gas station, gas up and warm up, and come back. For that he was fired.

Seven judges looked at that case to decide whether it was fair to fire Alphonse Maddin. Six of the judges said: No. But the one dissenting judge said: I rule for the trucking company that fired him—Neil Gorsuch, the nominee for the Supreme Court.

In the Hobby Lobby case, the decision was about who should decide the healthcare of thousands of workers. Well, the Green family who owns Hobby Lobby said: Our religious beliefs should dominate. We should decide family planning and birth control for our employees and their health insurance. Judge Gorsuch said: That is right because they own a corporation, and a corporation is a person, and as a corporation, they can have sincere religious beliefs. It was a choice between a corporate ownership of a family and 13,000 employees and their own personal religious rights, and Judge Gorsuch ruled for the corporation.

Kansas State University. A Kansas State University professor, Grace Hwang, who has been living there for many years, was diagnosed with cancer and had to go through a bone marrow transplant. She took 6 months off. Then, when she was called back to work, she called the university and said: I understand you have an influenza outbreak on campus, and I am afraid, after having just had a bone marrow transplant, to be exposed to influenza at this point. They said: You either come back and teach or you are fired. She said: You cannot. They fired her. It was Judge Gorsuch who said their employer was right; Kansas State University was right.

Those are insights into the values of a man who wants a lifetime appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court, the highest Court in the land. The questions we have raised about his judgment and his values go to the heart of who we are and what we want to be. Do we want the Court to continue to be a voice for the corporations, the corporate elite, and employees? Do we want to exclude the opportunities of common people like that truck driver, Al Maddin, to have his day in court fairly? That is what it comes down to. It is a fundamental question of fairness and justice.

I am sorry, because I love the Senate and I have spent a good part of my life here, that we have reached this moment. But it is this effort to fill the courts of this Nation with Republican appointments, even at the expense of violating Senate traditions that are over 100 years old, that has brought us to this moment.

As someone said, the nuclear option was used by Senator McCONNELL when he stopped Merrick Garland. What are we facing today is the fallout.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, this past week, the American people have been exposed to a contentious debate over the nomination of Judge Gorsuch to the Supreme Court.

The American people have heard many arguments about the judge's merits and his shortcomings. They have also heard Senators litigate four decades of fierce partisan wrangling over the composition and direction of the Federal judiciary. That debate, that long debate, has informed the current one about Judge Gorsuch. Newer Members may not remember all the details. Friends of mine, like Senator HATCH, probably remember too many of them.

Still, the vote on Judge Gorsuch and the decision by the majority leader to move to change the rules has rapped in all of that history.

Now, how did we get here? The truth is, over the long history of partisan combat over judicial nominations, there is blame on both sides. We believe that the blame should not be placed solely between Republicans and Democrats. We believe the Republican Party has been the far more aggressive party in the escalation of tactics and in the selection of extreme judicial candidates, while Democrats have tended to select judges closer to the middle.

Keep this in mind: The last time a Republican-controlled Senate confirmed the Supreme Court nomination of a Democratic President was 1865. Nonetheless, each side has been today in full confidence that their side is in the right. It was once said that "antagonism is never worse than when it involves two men each of whom is convinced that he speaks for the goodness and rectitude." So it is today.

My Republican friends feel that they have cause to change the rules because the Democrats changed the rules on the lower court nominees in 2013. We have had to change the rules in 2013 because the Republicans ramped up the use of the filibuster to historic proportions, forcing more cloture votes under President Obama than during all other Presidents combined—more cloture votes under President Obama than under George Washington all the way through to George Bush.

My Republican friends think they have cause to change the rules because we are about to deny cloture on the nomination of Judge Gorsuch. We believe what Republicans did to Merrick Garland was worse than a filibuster, declaring mere hours after Justice Scalia's death that they would deny the constitutional prerogative of a President with 11 months left in his term to replace my home state of Illinois noted, we did not hear two words in the long speech of Senator McCONNELL: Merrick Garland.

We could relitigate these debates for the next hour, mentioning everything the Republican leader has said in his remarks. In fact, I am pretty sure we could argue endlessly about where, and with whom, this all started. Was it the Bork nomination or the obstruction of judges under President Clinton? Was it when Democrats blocked judges under President Bush or when Republicans blocked them under President Obama? Was it Judge Garland or Judge Gorsuch? Wherever we place the starting point of this long twilight battle over the judiciary, we are now at its end point.

These past few weeks, we Democrats have given Judge Gorsuch a fair process, something Merrick Garland was denied. My colleagues came into this debate with an open mind. I think many of them wanted to vote for Judge Gorsuch at the outset. So we met with the nominee. We consented to and participated in his hearing. But over the course of the hearing, during which Judge Gorsuch employed practiced evasions and judicial platitudes, the mood of our caucus shifted. Without so much as a hint about his judicial philosophy, without a substantive explanation of how he views crucial legal questions, and without our knowing how he views the crucial legal questions, we are about to deny cloture on Judge Gorsuch's nomination.

Judge Gorsuch has shown in his rulings and in his writings to side almost instinctively with corporate interests over average Americans. He hasn't shown independence from the President, who so routinely challenges the legitimacy of the judiciary. While he has made a studious effort to portray himself as thoughtful and moderate, he has also shown the kind of mainstream candidate for the Supreme Court that could earn 60 votes, he may very well turn out to be one of the most conservative Justices on the bench. An analysis of his record in the New York Times showed he would be the second most conservative Justice on the bench, and one in the Washington Post showed he would be the most conservative Justice, even to the right of Justice Thomas.

For these principled reasons, Judge Gorsuch was unable to earn enough Democratic support for confirmation. Because the majority is about to change the Standing Rules of the Senate to allow all Supreme Court nominees to pass on a majority vote.

It doesn't have to be this way. When a nominee doesn't get enough votes for confirmation, the answer is not to change the rules; it is to change the nominee. Presidents of both parties have done so in similar situations. On several occasions, Supreme Court nominees were withdrawn because they didn't get enough support; one was even withdrawn after a failed cloture vote.

So this week we have endeavored to give the majority leader and my friends on the other side of the aisle a way a way to do just that. We offered them the option to sit down with us Democrats and the President and discuss a nominee who would earn enough bipartisan support to pass the Senate, not one vetted only by far-right special interest groups.

I came here to the floor each day and made an offer to meet anywhere, anytime to discuss a new nominee. I hoped, perhaps naively, that we could discuss a way toward an answer that both our sides could live with. Unfortunately, there were no counteroffers or discussion offered by the other side. But our offer was meant sincerely.

Democrats and Republicans are caught in such a bunker mentality on this issue that we are just talking past each other. I know that many of my Republican friends are squemish and uncomfortable with the path we are on, as we Democrats are as well. We have reached that point in the history of the Senate—seems so high on this issue, we can't even sit down and talk.

My Republican friends dismiss out of hand the notion that Democrats will ever vote to confirm a Republican-nominated judge, despite the fact that there were Democratic votes for both Justices Roberts and Alito to get them over 60 and despite our plangent atcemons. Members of both parties have had other considerations. As a result, America's faith in the Supreme Court to be confirmed with less trust is so high on this issue, we can't

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. Fischer). The Democratic leader.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, is it correct that over half the nominations on which cloture motions were filed in the Senate, over the course of our entire history as a country, were filed between the beginning of President Obama’s administration and November 21, 2013?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary of the Senate’s office confirms that 79 of the 147 cloture motions filed on nominations were filed between 2009 and November 21, 2013.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader will state the parliamentary inquiry.

The motion was redirected.

Mr. McCONNELL. Madam President, under the rules and precedents of the Senate, is the Senate prohibited from considering and voting on a nominee to the Supreme Court in the fourth year of the President’s term?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware of any such prohibition in its rules or precedents.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, additional parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, under the rules and precedents of the Senate, is the Senate prohibited from considering and voting on a nominee to the Supreme Court in the fourth year of the President’s term?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware of any such prohibition in its rules or precedents.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, did the Senate precedent established on November 21, 2013, did not apply to nominations to the Supreme Court?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The preceding of November 21, 2013, did not apply to nominations to the Supreme Court. Those nominations are considered under plain language of rule XXII.

The point of order is not sustained.

Mr. McCONNELL. Madam President, our Democratic colleagues have done something today that is unprecedented in the history of the Senate. Unfortunately, it has brought us to this point. We need to restore the norms and traditions of the Senate and get past this unprecedented partisan filibuster.

Therefore, I raise a point of order that the vote on cloture, under the precedent set on November 21, 2013, is a majority vote for all nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The preceding of November 21, 2013, did not apply to nominations to the Supreme Court. Those nominations are considered under plain language of rule XXII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this vote, the yeas are 55, the nays are 45.

Upon reconsideration, the motion is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER (Mrs. FISCHER). The majority whip.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, the Senate has just restored itself to an almost unbroken tradition of never filling the judicial judges.

We have actually restored the status quo before the administration of President George W. Bush. It was during that administration when some of our friends across the aisle, along with some of their liberal law professor allies, dreamed up a way of blocking President George W. Bush’s judicial nominees, and that was by suggesting that 60 votes was really the threshold for confirming judges, rather than the constitutional requirement of a majority vote.

It has been a long journey back to the normal functioning of the United States Senate, and it is amazing that it has taken a nominee like Judge Gorsuch to bring us back to where we were back around 2001. We have been debating and discussing this nominee for a long time now, and the opponents of Judge Gorsuch have tried to derail him to the point where 12 years ago when he was confirmed to a position on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. They claimed he wasn’t mainstream enough. They said this was really a rubber stamp for Merrick Garland. They have even accused him of plagiarism. All of these arguments have no merit whatsoever and really represent desperate attempts to try to block this outstanding nominee. Their claims were simply baseless, and that much became even clearer as folks from across the political spectrum and newspapers from across the country urged our Democratic colleagues to drop their pointless filibuster and allow an up-or-down vote.

What also came to light is the type of man Judge Gorsuch is—a man of integrity, a man of strong independence; in other words, exactly the kind of person you would want to serve on the Supreme Court.

They even claimed that Judge Gorsuch went out of his way to side with the big guy against the little guy, ignoring the fact that during his 10 years on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, where these judges sit on multi-judge panels, he was part of the majority decision 99 percent of the time, and 97 percent of those cases were unanimous in multi-judge panel decisions on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals—hardly radical. It actually is a remarkable record of a consensus-builder, someone who uses his great intellect, his education, and his training to build consensus on a multi-judge court—exactly the kinds of skills that are going to be needed for him to serve on the Supreme Court of the United States.

As I said, ultimately today was the culmination of years of obstruction by our Democratic colleagues when it came to judicial nominees.

When I came to the Senate in 2003, the Democratic strategy was well under way to obstruct lower court judicial nominees from the George W. Bush administration.

Later, in 2013, when there was a Democrat in the White House and it suited them to do so, they decided to do away with the same tool they used and went nuclear, lowering the threshold from 60 to 51 majority vote for circuit court nominees and district court nominees. It took a Gang of 14—7 Democrats and 7 Republicans—to try to work through the differences back around the 2006 timeframe, which resulted in half of President George W. Bush’s nominees to the circuit court getting confirmed and half not being confirmed. The standard was adopted by the so-called Gang of 14 that only under extraordinary circumstances would the filibuster be used, but that agreement expired in 2013.

Well, the minority leader and his colleagues like to say that back then it was necessary to restore a majority rule to the Senate. He said that a majority rule would ensure that we have a Coloradan nominated to the Nation’s highest Court and that he would be the second Coloradan to serve on the Supreme Court, the other one being Justice Byron White. Justice Byrnes—White also lost in a rush for a seat on the Court, one year, and while Gorsuch will never live up to that part of the Supreme Court legacy for Coloradans, we know that Judge Gorsuch is an avid outdoorsman, a fly-fisher, expert-level skier, and somebody who understands public lands. I think having that kind of expertise and experience on our Nation’s highest Court will serve this country well.

I think it is important to understand that his roots represent the roots that he and the West. He is a generation Coloradan, somebody who hails from a State that is independent, that takes great pride in its libertarian streak, its love of the outdoors, recreational opportunities, understanding the importance of the energy that that really does have it all. From the Eastern Plains to the Western Slope, there is great beauty in our State.

Neil Gorsuch understands that. He served on a court, the Tenth Circuit Court, in Denver, and represents 20 percent of the landmass of our State. Judge Gorsuch’s family, as I mentioned, really does show the grit and determination of those who built the West. His grandfather was someone who worked in Union Station, someone who grew up driving trolley cars back in the time when Denver was a trolley town. His other grandfather, of course, was a physician, and both were experts in their fields. One grandfather had found a law firm. Gorsuch Kirgis, a very prestigious firm in Denver.

But it is Judge Gorsuch’s experience, his high qualifications of academics that he brings to the Court, having received his degrees from Columbia, Oxford, Harvard, as I mentioned previously—the most important academic experience being the University of Colorado, where I think he spent at least some time in the summer attending, teaching community college as a professor at my alma mater, the University of Colorado School of Law. This has all helped him build what he is today; that is, a very mainstream jurist, an incredibly exceptional legal mind, one of the brightest jurists this country has to offer, someone who is known as a feeder judge, providing clerks to the Supreme Court, and who has the respect of the Colorado legal community.

I want to talk about some of these things because I have come to the floor multiple times, and I have talked about his qualifications. I have talked about the people who know him best, not the people in Washington, DC, but the people who have practiced in front of his court in Denver, the people who know him personally out in Colorado.

Here is what those individuals have said. They believe that Judge Gorsuch deserves an up-or-down vote. Bill Ritter, former Democratic Governor for the State of Colorado, believes that Judge Gorsuch deserves an up-or-down vote. Now we will have it. We have invoked cloture. We will have a final debate tomorrow night and a final vote on whether or not he should be confirmed.

People like Steve Farber, the cochair of the Democratic National Convention in 2008 in Colorado, have talked about the need to confirm Judge Gorsuch.

So the debate that we enter now is not one of whether he will have an up-or-down vote. He is going to have an up-or-down vote. But it is whether we should tweet him, actually give him the “yes” vote.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote in favor of Judge Gorsuch’s confirmation. Some of the arguments I have heard over the past several weeks on the floor, listening to some of the arguments on the floor—it is quite interesting to me that some of the arguments we hear seem to be at odds with each other.

President Obama, on the Senate yesterday, I heard people talk about how they don’t think Neil Gorsuch will stand up to the President. They are concerned that he will not express the kind of independence the judiciary commands, that he will not stand up to President Obama to stand up to the President of the United States.

They often cite some of the comments or tweets that the President has made and then fail to mention the fact, though, that at the very time one of those tweets was mentioned, questioning the judiciary, Judge Gorsuch, in a meeting with one of our Democratic colleagues, actually had objections. He said he objected to the statements the President had made, expressing a concern about how he heard in those tweets, or tweets that the President of the United States, that he will not express the kind of independence the judiciary commands.

But the second argument you often hear, for those who have decided to oppose this mainstream jurist, is that they are afraid he won’t show enough independence from the President, and then they say they are concerned about his language as it relates to the Chevron doctrine.

I find those two arguments kind of interesting because, on one hand, you have an argument saying we are afraid he is not going to stand up to the President of the United States, and then, on the other hand, you have an argument that we are afraid he is not going to stand up to the administrative state of the President of the United States—because that is what the Chevron doctrine does; it gives great deference to the regulatory body, to the administrative state.

Here is another irony. The Administrator of the EPA in 1981 was Neil Gorsuch’s mother, Anne Burford—the Administrator of the EPA. She was the first woman to serve as EPA Administrator who was the subject of the Chevron doctrine.

Not only is he willing to stand up to the President and the administrative state of the President, but he is willing to overturn a case that was a subject that his own mother was a subject to. I have heard comments from colleagues on the aisle that Judge Gorsuch is not a mainstream jurist. This argument, I think, can be dealt with in a couple of ways because there are some pretty good statistics to refute these arguments.

Ninety-seven. Ninety-seven percent is the number of times in the 2,700 opinions that he was a part of—97 percent represents the times that the decisions were unanimous. Judge Gorsuch did not serve only with conservative appointed judges, he served with only Republican nominees. Judge Gorsuch served with Republican and Democrat nominees, appointments approved by the Senate. In 97 percent of the cases, Judge Gorsuch ruled—decided—in unanimous decisions.

The other statistic that I think is even more revealing, of course, as to whether Judge Gorsuch is a mainstream jurist is 99 percent. Ninety-nine percent is the amount of times that Judge Gorsuch ruled with the majority of the court; he made decisions—opinions—with the majority of the court.

I heard a comment yesterday from a colleague who said that Judge Gorsuch was never intended to be a mainstream nominee. If Judge Gorsuch was never intended to be a mainstream nominee, do you think we would see a judge before us that has support from the 2008 Democratic National Convention Chairman? If Judge Gorsuch was never intended to be a mainstream nominee, do you think we would have decisions by the Democratic Governor of Colorado, former Democratic Governor of Colorado, to demand or ask for an up-or-down vote? If Judge Gorsuch was never intended to be a mainstream nominee, do you think that the President would have nominated somebody who agreed 99 percent of the time with his colleagues on the bench, colleagues who came from appointments given by Republican Presidents and Democrat Presidents?

The arguments over whether Judge Gorsuch is going to be with the little guy or he spends too much time defending the big guy—well, let me again go back to the people who know Judge Gorsuch the best, who have practiced in front of his court. Here is a statement from a Denver attorney and Democrat on representing underdogs before Judge Gorsuch. This is from the Denver Post: “He issued a decision that most certainly focused on the little guy.”

Yet the story from the opposition here, out of 2,700 cases, is: Oh, my gosh, this is a person who has never defended the little guy. Well, here is somebody who has practiced in front of his court who absolutely believes he focused on the little guy.

So we have a judge who agrees with the majority of the court most of the time—99 percent of the time; 97 percent of the time it is a unanimous decision, and lawyers practicing in front of him believe that he represents the little guy. We have heard from leading Democrats in Congress who support him. The ABA gave him its highest qualification, rankings, ratings. They believe it.

Then the question becomes, What are we looking for in a Justice? Maybe that is the biggest argument here. Maybe the argument should be about what are we looking for in terms of philosophy, ideology?

Well, we have seen his ideology and how he was appointed. He has testified before the Judiciary Committee. He has stated in the past through writings. He is someone who is going to follow the law. He is someone who is going to take a decision where the law was leading him, not attending to take an opinion or decision where his personal beliefs or politics take him. That is the kind of judge we want on the highest Court. That is the kind of Justice we want—someone who is not going to decide a policy preference from the bench of the Supreme Court, not somebody who is going to take a look at a public opinion poll or someone who is going to take a look at a focus group and make a decision but someone who will rule by the law.

I have heard colleagues come to the floor and talk about their experiences where they were given decisions to read without being given the law. They don’t feel that was the right policy. They don’t feel that was the right policy.

It is not the job of a Justice to put their thumb on the scale of policy; it is the job of a Justice to be a guardian of the Constitution, to defend the Constitution, to follow the law and to decide cases based on the law not on feelings, politics, polls, public opinion.

We have a judge, nominated for Justice who has said this is a guy who agrees with every opinion that they have issued is probably a bad judge. He is paraphrasing other judges and Justices throughout our history. It is because he knows it is not his job to issue decisions in Congress to decide a case based on being a Republican or Democrat. It is not his job to decide a case based on whether he was nominated by President Trump or President Obama or President Bush. It is his job to decide on the law, to leave policy decisions to the legislative branch. That is what we have to do. That is what Judge Gorsuch has said he will do.
So these arguments just don’t hold water. It doesn’t hold water that he is not looking out for the interests of our citizens, because here clearly he is. Democrats who have practiced before him in court have said as much. The argument that he will not stand up to the Trump administration—we know it; he said in front of our Democratic colleagues that he would stand up to the President.

He has said that he rejected attacks on the Court. We all know that when it comes to the Chevron doctrine, which seems to be sacred ground now, that there are these ironic arguments taking place, because you want someone who will stand up to the administration, but then you are concerned that he is interested in or concerned that we have taken the Chevron deference—the doctrine of Chevron deference too far.

Now which is it? Do you want a judge who is going to stand up to the administration or do you want a judge who is not going to stand up to the administration? It sounds as though the arguments are trying to have it both ways.

The bottom line is that we know Judge Gorsuch to be a person who is eminently qualified, a mainstream jurist who has the respect and admiration of judges around the country, who has the admiration and respect of fellow jurists and legal professionals throughout Colorado, and we know that he will make this country proud. He is going to make colorado proud as he receives his confirmation to the Nation’s highest court.

I hope, as we spend these hours debating, that we can realize this Senate should operate in a bipartisan fashion, that we should confirm judges who are clearly mainstream.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, today is a day when many Senators are speaking about Judge Gorsuch and about the Supreme Court. As I think many know, in the last week, in the Judiciary Committee hearings and in other settings, I have announced that I will vote against Judge Gorsuch on the final vote tomorrow. I believe I have made my reasons for my opposition clear. I have thoroughly reviewed and considered Judge Gorsuch’s record and where he fits within American jurisprudence, and I have no second thoughts about my decision.

As I look around at what has just happened on this Senate floor, I am sick with regret. So I rise now to speak in defense of the Senate.

The Senate has been hailed by many, including our nominee to the Supreme Court, Judge Gorsuch, as the world’s greatest deliberative body. Yet today I think one more blow has been struck at that title and reality.

The Senate has been celebrated by Senator Robert Byrd, who served in this Chamber for 51 years, would famously remind new Senators that “in war and in peace, [the Senate] has been the sure refuge and protector of the rights of the states and of a political minority.”

Of course, although Senator Byrd was the longest serving Senator, as a Delawarean, I grew up in the tradition of Senator Joe Biden, a 36-year veteran of this body who left its ranks only to ascend to the Vice Presidency and spend 8 more years as its Presiding Officer.

Since I have had the honor of assuming Senator Biden’s former seat, I have committed to following his example of working across the aisle, through Republican and Democratic administrations, with whoever is willing to roll up their sleeves and get to work for the American people. I know my colleagues share in this foundational commitment to serve our constituents and country. As I look around at what just happened on this floor, with too little discussion of its lasting consequences and too little vigil over our even situation, I must ask the question: Where are we headed?

You can’t see it, but around this Chamber are white marble statues, busts of former Presiding Officers of the Senate, Vice President of the United States. They are in the halls outside this Chamber. They are at the upper level of this Chamber, in the Galleries. All the former Vice Presidents are memorialized in white marble busts. Former Vice President Adlai Stevenson, the grandfather of the Illinois Governor who ran for President in the middle of the 20th century—former Vice President Adlai Stevenson, when he delivered his farewell address to the Senate on his last day in office as the Presiding Officer of the Senate in 1897, said:

It must not be forgotten that the rules governing this body are founded deep in human experience. The result of centuries of tireless effort . . . to conserve, to render stable and secure, the rights and liberties which have been achieved by conflict.

By its rules, the Senate wisely fixes the limits to its own power. Of those who clamor against the Senate and its mode of procedure, it may be truly said, “They know not what they do.”

In this Chamber alone are preserved, without restraint, two essentials of wise legislation and of good government—the right of amendment and of debate.

It was exactly that right, those rules that were assaulted today, but they have been under assault for a long time.

In recent days, I have reached out to my Republican and Democratic colleagues, trying to see if there was some way we could reach a reliable consensus agreement to safeguard these institutional values and avoid the events of today and tomorrow.

I told my colleagues that I was not ready to end debate on Judge Gorsuch’s nomination until we could chart a course for the Senate to move forward on a bipartisan President’s court vacancy, considering future Supreme Court nominations.

I think for us to get to any constructive conversation about moving this Senate forward requires owning the role that all of us—each of us has played over our time here, whether a few years or decades, in bringing us to this point.

I, for one, will say I have come over time to regret joining my Democratic colleagues in changing the rules for lower court nominations and confirmations in 2013. Of course, I could give an entire speech on the obstruction that led us to that point. I could document the Republican and Democratic misdeeds of the last Congress and the Congress before that and the decade before that.

As my more seasoned and senior colleagues demonstrated in the Judiciary Committee deliberations, those who have served here longest know best the record of grievance of Congresses in decades past.

I anticipate that many of my colleagues who support Judge Gorsuch to regret the decisions and actions taken today in this Congress and in Congresses ahead. Instead of focusing on that shared regret, I want to work together not to continue to tear down the traditions and rules of the Senate but to find ways to strengthen and fortify and sustain them.

I worked to try to find a solution to get past this moment on the brink. I wanted to ensure our next Supreme Court nominee would be the product of bipartisan consultation and consensus, as was safeguarded for years by the potential of the 60-vote margin. I wanted certainty that the voice of the minorities would still be heard when the next vacancies arise. Among many, this effort to forge consensus was met with hopelessness or even hostility.

Back home, thousands of constituents called my office, urging a vote against Judge Gorsuch and urging I support the filibuster. Some even urged me to stop talking about any sort of deal. In fact, back home in Delaware, some national groups ran ads against me when there was even a rumor of a hint that there might be conversations about avoiding this outcome.

There were even Senators on both sides of the aisle who told me that an agreement was impossible. They said any agreement is based on trust, and we simply do not trust each other anymore.

Given the events of the last years, the disrespect and mistreatment of Merrick Garland, the course of the confirmation of Neil Gorsuch, I understand how there is a raw wound right now in this Chamber, where each side feels the other has mistreated a good and honorable and capable nominee for the Supreme Court.

I say my last point again. Senators on both sides told me we could not find a durable compromise because we do not trust each other anymore. If we cannot trust each other anymore, then are there any big problems facing the country which we can address and solve?

This morning, I gave an address at the Brookings Institution about the for it, but at the end of the day, here we are: 100 men and women sent to represent 50 States of this Republic and have all let them down today.

I can tell you what I am going to do tomorrow. I commit to working with anyone who wants to join me to try to strengthen the rules and traditions of this body and its effectiveness as an absolutely essential part of the constitutional order for which so many have fought and died. It is what all of our predecessors would have waged.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I will be brief. I also want to make sure I don't take advantage of the personal privilege I have as a United States Senator, but I am going to anyway.
I want Senator COONS from Delaware to pause for just a second.
I want to thank every Member of the Senate, Bipartisan Senator, and the staff of the Senate for the many kindnesses they have extended to me in the last 4 months during my injury and my recovery. I am on the way back to home, in large measure, because of the support of the Members of the United States Senate. I am very grateful for that and the staff who have allowed that to take place. I say thank you very much.
Notwithstanding what your politics anything else, this is a great institu-

To that end, my friend Senator COONS from Delaware made an excel-nent speech, which I am going to adopt as my speech, since I don't have the strength to stand as long as I would like to, to talk about an issue so important. We do need to open all our minds and our hearts in the days ahead to make sure that whatever direction we are going as Members of the Senate, regardless of our party and notwithstanding our partisanship.
Neil Gorsuch, from everywhere I have seen—and I probably have seen more than anybody because I have been watching it on TV while I have been recovering. You guys have had to do it in debate. I have seen the real thing.
His record, his testimony, the way he presented himself, the way Senator GRASSLEY and Senator FEINSTEIN allowed that hearing to go forth, I know we have a good man as a nominee to be a Supreme Court Justice of the United States, but the issues and the divide on the cloture, on a simple majority, and the rule change of 2013, and what has happened in the past, now has us in a position where we slowly but surely are moving to be a body that is another House of Representatives, not the United States Senate.
The majority rule is a great philosophy. The majority winning is always a great philosophy, but I used to have a teacher who taught me. She said: If each equals the majority, three equals zero, but you always need to listen to the other three because sometimes they may be right. I think that is a good lesson for us today, and that was a grammar school teacher.
If there are seven voting members, four does equal the majority, but three doesn't equal zero because the rest still count.

As we move forward in the days ahead and judge other issues, whether they be partisan issues in terms of regular debate and general legislation, whether it be issues over the confirmation of judges or Secretaries or whatever it may be, let's be thoughtful, so that, not as a criticism of the House, but as a compliment to our Founding Fathers, we don't become a second House and later a unicameral body, majority rule and mob rule, and eventually waive rules, where passions overrule common sense and all of a sudden you find yourself digging your way out of a hole that you have created, rather than building the dreams you have always wanted to do.

I commend the leadership of both parties for exercising their political and partisan desires. I commend each Member for being here to take part in this debate today and being a part of
it. That is what America is all about.

Somehow down the line, there is going to be something that is going to happen that is going to cause a res-surrection of the debate that we have and partisan desires. I commend each Member for being here to take part in this debate today and being a part of
it. That is what America is all about.

To all of us, our job is not finished. I look forward to being here and being a part of it.
I yield the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.
Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding to me.
I wish to say how nice it is to see the Senator from Georgia back here with us. It means a lot to all of us to have Senator ISAKSON back on the Senate floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.
Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I don't wish to turn this into a bouquet-toss-ring process, but I think it is very clear that Senators on both sides of the aisle are very, very pleased to see our friend from Georgia back today. We are wishing him health and Godspeed. We look forward to his full and complete recovery. We are so glad to have him here.

I am also pleased that Senator Coons is on the floor, because I think it would be fair to say that Members on both sides of the aisle who have watched how Senator Coons has conducted himself throughout this extraordinarily contentious debate would say that Senator Coons makes all of us very, very proud.

It is no secret that he has tried repeatedly to bring both sides together, and he and I have talked often about this. I think there are going to be opportunities for finding common ground on important legislation, breaking out of this gridlock that we all understand is not what the Senate is all about and forging toward more mainstream topics. When we get there, to a great extent, it will be because of the thoughtful comments of my friend from Delaware.

Mr. President, the Senate is going to act on one of its most sacred and important constitutional duties, the advice and consent on the nomination of the next Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

The long tails of these Supreme Court debates stretch through generations and shape our government deep into the future. The choice the Senate makes in this extraordinary debate will have long impact, from the broadest governing statutes down to the most specific particulars of the law that affect our daily lives.

There are several issues that are particularly relevant to this nominee that have gotten short shrift. I am talking about secret law, and warrantless wiretapping, death with dignity. I intend to discuss these issues shortly.

I would like to begin, however, by stating that whether one supports or opposes Judge Gorsuch, our job would have been easier had the judge been more forthcoming in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee. He chose, however, not to do so. So what the Senate has to go by instead is the judge’s lengthy record of adhering to a rigid and far-right philosophy that is composed by politicians, is fraught with originalism. That is the viewpoint that Judge Gorsuch not only has a long record of adhering to but that viewpoint is plainly incorrect. In practice, originalism becomes a cover for protecting the fortunate over the poor, corporations over individuals, and the powerful over virtually every other American. It is a political agenda that masquerades as philosophy, an agenda whose sole intent is reserving power for those in power and limiting the recognition of the rights reserved to the people.

Far from fostering such a creed, our Constitution is actually a document of constraints, constraints that bind the government, not the people. The full scope of our fundamental rights as a people, as Justice M. Harlan once wrote, “cannot be found in or limited by the precise terms of the specific guarantees elsewhere provided in the Constitution.” The exact concept is written into the Bill of Rights itself. The Ninth Amendment says: “The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.”

James Madison, the founder so significant that he said to live in a “Madisonian Democracy,” was outspoken about the dangers of future readers or interpreters thinking that the fundamental rights contemplated by the Framers were limited to the Constitution or Bill of Rights.

So our founding document and its Framers made clear that rights were not enumerated by the Constitution; they were retained by the people. Individual liberties, from personal privacy to a woman’s right to vote, the choice to have an abortion, inter-racial marriage, same-sex marriage, equal protection of the law—these liberties and, let me emphasize, many, many, many more have always existed.

In fact, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were both an outgrowth of what Americans consider fundamental to a free people. That silence left the door open for the courts, as we shed the prejudices of a darker age, to recognize the true meaning of the words “all men are created equal” and “inalienable rights.” The process has been painfully slow. The Constitution, like any document composed by politicians, is fraught with original sin. For example, the three-fifths compromise was a shameful device of political accommodation. Through long stretches of our history, political agendas have left many individual rights unrecognized or unprotected by the courts. They ruled in favor of the powerful and against the disadvantaged and the disenfranchised, often with the justification that their rulings adhered to the text of the Constitution.

Nowhere did the Constitution expressly deny women the right to vote, but the Supreme Court ruled against Virginia Minor in 1875. The Federal Government was not expressly granted the right to intern residents of Japanese descent, but the Supreme Court allowed the internment of Japanese Americans to be predicated on voting, organized by voting, and dependent on voting for any right by political parties and their dependents, but it did not create a new right. It was a long overdue fix made necessary by an originalist court. If there is a national evolution that extends protection of rights and liberties to disenfranchised and oppressed people, it is because with time, our wonderful country tends to correct its wrongs. It did so with a Civil War and amendments that did so with women’s suffrage and the Brown decision. It did so more recently with the Obergfell v. Hodges decision. Historically, our country has gradually recognized fundamental rights and liberties.

“Recognition”—I use that word intentionally. It is recognition because there are no new rights, per se. They are inalienable, and those rights are not limited to those spelled out in the Constitution. A jurist governed by that philosophy would respect individual rights, but that simply isn’t the viewpoint taken by many so-called originalists on the far right today. The rightwing originalism looks, in my view, a lot more like the judicial philosophy that trampled on the rights of Americans in days past—a philosophy that throughout our history has left many Americans marginalized, disenfranchised, and oppressed by the Supreme Court.

Unfortunately, after listening very carefully to Judge Gorsuch present his views and after reviewing his writings, including some I will mention that specifically talk about my home State, I have no faith that Judge Gorsuch would be any different from this philosophy that I mentioned that has left so many Americans marginalized in our country.

Judge Gorsuch not only has a long record of conservative activism in the courtroom, but he has demonstrated an out-and-out hostility toward the right of individuals to make decisions about their own lives and their own families without interference from the State. In one troubling instance, he went so far as to author a book attacking death with dignity. This of course has been a matter that historically has been left to the States, and the people of my State twice approved death-with-dignity ballot measures and our death-with-dignity law is in place for nearly 20 years. The Supreme Court upheld it more than a decade ago in a case known as Gonzalez v. Oregon. But Judge Gorsuch’s record and his own words put the will of millions of Oregonians in question.

Nothing in the Constitution gives the Federal Government the power to deny suffering Oregonians the right to make basic decisions about the end of their lives. There is nothing in the Constitution that gives the Federal Government a power to deny people in my State the right to make those emotional, difficult, wrenching decisions about end of life. It is a private matter between a patient and doctor. When politicians attempt to force regulations through the back door by going after doctors and their ability to prescribe, in my view that is an obvious over-the-line Federal infringement. But my guess is there are probably going to be some folks on the far right that are going to try that route again.

Nothing Judge Gorsuch said in his confirmation hearing gave me any indication that he respects the death-with-dignity issue. He has made it clear, in many instances, that he favors corporations at the expense of individuals and doctors, and that he would rule against Federal abuse of power to intrude on a private choice. The bottom line is that Judge Gorsuch is locked into an extreme rightwing viewpoint on this issue.

As I have listened to this debate and, particularly, the number of comments that some of those who have espoused the views that concern me so much come back to, part of this is that they are always talking about States’ rights. States’ rights that will be the altar that we really build our views and philosophies around. I will state, however, that when we listen to some of what they are having to say about States’ rights, what they are really saying is that they are for the State if they think the State is right. That is not, in my view, what fundamental rights—particularly, ones that have been afforded to States—ought to be all about.

As I understand his views with respect to death with dignity really do involve a Federal abuse of power in its intruding on private choices, but there are other issues that concern me as well.

He has made it clear, in many instances, that he favors corporations at the expense of the working people. He has sided with insurance companies to deny disability benefits to people with disabilities, with large companies to deny employees basic job protections, and has even written that class action lawsuits are just tools for plaintiffs to get “free rides to fast riches.”

No example better illustrates this tendency—and my colleagues have talked about it—than the case of the truck driver in TransAm Trucking v. Department of Labor. In this case that leaves one practically speechless, Judge Gorsuch sided against a truckdriver who was fired for leaving his freezing cold truck when his life was in danger.

I have another significant concern about Judge Gorsuch that came up in the context of his confirmation hearing. It is something that, I think, a lot of Americans and even those in government are trying to get their arms around. I have been on the Intelligence Committee since the days before 9/11, and one of the things we have come to feel strongly about is the danger of what I call “secret law.” I want to make sure people know exactly what I am talking about when I describe “secret law.”

In the intelligence world and in the national security sphere, operations and methods—the tactics used by our courageous men and women who are protecting us and who go into harm’s way to protect our people—always have to be secret. They are classified. They have to be because, if they were to get out, we could have Americans die—the people who do all of that wonderful work and, possibly, millions more. Sources and methods have to be secret, fundamental rights are being infringed ought to always be transparent.

The American people need to know about them because that is how we make informed decisions in our won-derful democracy. Voters are given enough information to make the choices. Sources and methods and operations have to be secret, but the law and political philosophies have to be public.

Judge Gorsuch, as a senior attorney in the Department of Justice, was a practitioner of secret law. As I indicated, the public is not going to know about secret operations; we protect them. But trust in government and in our legal system suffered when Americans understand that the law says one thing and then the government or a secret court says that it means another. Secret law prevents the people from knowing whether their liberties are for the people or a secret court says that it means another. Secret law prevents the people from knowing what they are really saying is that a decision had been made by their elected officials to limit the power of government. Yet Judge Gorsuch, then an employee of the Bush administration’s, had a solution.

In December of 2005, he wrote to the author of the Justice Department’s report on torture, Mr. Bradbury, the President’s Office of Legal Counsel, in my view that is an obvious codifying existing interrogation policies. In other words, according to Judge Gorsuch, JOHN MCCAIN’s law—the one that passed 90 to 9 in the U.S. Senate—endorsed torture when it did just the opposite.

The issue came up in his nomination hearing. Judge Gorsuch’s explanation was that he was making the recommendation as a lawyer who was helping his client, which was the administration. I have to say, if there is one thing we have learned, this “just following orders” defense has gone on for far too long in this city. It is a small and feeble excuse and is unbe-coming of a judge who has been nomi-nated to the highest Court in the land. A judge who justifies government violations in the law and the Constitution just so his boss can say “I was following the advice of counsel” is making a choice to do wrong.

The McCain amendment—what we passed here in the Congress—did not green-light torture. It did not codify torture, period. Anyone who has ever heard JOHN MCCAIN talk about this issue and describe his personal, horrifying experiences with torture knows that it, certainly, could not have been his intent when writing the bill. Any lawyer, especially one secretly advising the government, first has an obligation to the law and the Constitution. Judge Gorsuch’s failure to recognize that principle and his choice to do wrong, in my view, disqualifies him from having a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court.

Torture is not the only illegal program on which Judge Gorsuch has left his fingerprints. After news broke of the illegal, warrantless wiretapping program, Judge Gorsuch helped prepare... testimony for the Attorney General, which asserted that those authorities are vested in the President and are inherent in the office.

It added: ‘They cannot be diminished or legislated away by other co-equal branches of government.’

If that were the case, then no action taken in this area by the elected representatives of the people would have any weight. The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, which has existed since the 1970s, would just be some kind of advisory statement. Section 702 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, which we are going to debate this year, would be little more than wasted paper. Then the USA FREEDOM Act, which ended the bulk collection of law-abiding Americans’ phone records, might as well have never been signed into law.

Voting for those bills and voting to confirm Judge Gorsuch call into question any Member’s commitment to those bills that we passed.

In response to a question during his nomination hearing, Judge Gorsuch said that he did not believe the Attorney General’s testimony and that, again, he was only acting as a scribe, as a speechwriter. As such, he absolved himself of responsibility for his actions. Again, I think that it is just wrong to use this as an excuse. Like the endorsement of torture, assertions of Presidential authority to override Congress or rubber-stamp the excesses of our executive branch, are the words of President Obama’s Solicitor General, Neal Katyal:

Judge Gorsuch is a mainstream nominee. As a Justice on the highest Court in the nation over the last century. As a judge, he has defended the Bill of Rights, the Second Amendment.

It is my view that it is our job as Senators to ensure that the Supreme Court does not repeat the errors of yesterday—enshrining disenfranchisement and discrimination and denying equal protection of the law based on prejudice and political agendas. I believe that the only way to prevent this abuse is to ensure that the judiciary is a bulwark against any attempt to infringe on our unalienable rights.

The bottom line for me, colleagues, is whether Judge Gorsuch recognizes that rights are reserved for the people.

There is no respect for individual rights and liberty to be found in a viewpoint that allows for secret law to justify the taking of the powerless, or that tramples on the rights of Americans to determine the courses of their own lives. Unfortunately, we have learned over the last few weeks that this is Judge Gorsuch’s record.

I oppose his nomination. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERDUE). The Senator from Montana.

Mr. DAINES. Mr. President, one of the most consequential votes that I will ever cast is a vote to confirm a U.S. Supreme Court nominee. It is a lifetime appointment to our Nation’s highest Court. In fact, tomorrow, when I cast that vote for Justice Gorsuch, it will be the first chance I have had as a Senator to confirm a Supreme Court nominee.

As it stands today, the U.S. Senate is on the precipice of confirming Neil Gorsuch to be our next U.S. Supreme Court Justice. A few short hours ago, my colleagues on the other side caved to the pressures of the far left and unleashed an unprecedented, partisan filibuster for the first time in 238 years of this institution.

I was honored to be at the White House’s East Wing on January 31, with President Trump, when he made the announcement that Judge Neil Gorsuch would be the nominee to replace Antonin Scalia.

Judge Gorsuch’s academic accomplishments are nothing short of being absolutely stellar. His decision to serve as a Justice on the highest Court in the land is a true testament to his character, his intelligence, his understanding of the law, and his commitment to the Constitution.

Judge Gorsuch was appointed by President George W. Bush to the Tenth Circuit in 2006 and was unanimously confirmed by the U.S. Senate. In fact, of those Democrats who did not oppose Judge Gorsuch then included his Harvard Law classmate Barack Obama, Vice President Joe Biden, and Minority Leader Chuck Schumer.

Of utmost importance in a Justice is the ability to apply the law as it is intended, not to legislate from the bench. So I can say that I was very thrilled to here Judge Gorsuch say this: “A judge who likes every outcome he reaches is very likely a bad judge, stretching for results he prefers rather than those the law demands.”

On February 9, I met Judge Gorsuch in my office. Let me tell my colleagues, he is impressive. We discussed the Constitution. We discussed the Second Amendment. I represent the State of Montana. I can tell my colleagues that as we look at our Constitution and our Bill of Rights, the Second Amendment is very important to the people of Montana. He will defend the Second Amendment. We also talked about the separation of powers, the role of government and federalism, and the Fourth Amendment.

Through 4 full days of hearings, Judge Gorsuch eloquently answered Judiciary Committee members’ questions, and certainly, before the entire viewing audience of the American people, he showcased his brilliant legal mind.

At his hearing, the committee hearing, Judge Gorsuch sat for three rounds of questioning totaling nearly 20 hours. In fact, when Judge Gorsuch appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate, it was the longest hearing of any nominee in this century. He answered nearly 1,200 questions during that hearing. By the way, that is nearly twice as many questions as Justices Sotomayor, Kagan, or Ginsburg.

Today’s vote was nothing more than a partisan fundraising effort for Senate Democrats. In fact, the Democratic Members who have pledged to support him already have threats from liberals of voting them out of office. It is a sad day that this body has become so partisan that, for the first time in this body’s history, we had a partisan filibuster to a more than qualified nominee.

Judge John Kane, a judge appointed by Democrat Jimmy Carter, said in an op-ed for an online publication:

As the saying goes, we could do worse. I’m not sure we could expect better, or that better presently exists.

Take the remarks of Obama’s Solicitor General, Neal Katyal:

Judge Gorsuch is one of the most thoughtful and brilliant judges to have served our nation over the last century. As a judge, he has always put aside his personal views to serve the rule of law. To boot, as those of us who have worked with him can attest, he is a wonderfully decent and humane person.

I strongly support his nomination to the Supreme Court.

I remind my colleagues that those are the words of President Obama’s Solicitor General.

A nominee of this caliber who has undergone, as I just mentioned, rigorous vetting deserves the respect of the Members of this Chamber. Yet Senate Democrats walked down the road that their former leader did in 2013 by changing the precedent of this body and allowing the Senate to become even more partisan.

The American people want Judge Gorsuch. The polls show that. In fact, they demanded nine Justices on the Court. Today, we are one step closer to confirming him.

Judge Gorsuch is the right replacement to honor the legacy of Justice Antonin Scalia. He has widespread support from both sides of the aisle, including our agriculture groups, the NRA, and leaders from across our State. Four Indian Tribes in Montana have endorsed Judge Gorsuch.

The American people deserve a Supreme Court Justice who will uphold the rule of law and follow the Constitution. The American people deserve a Supreme Court Justice who doesn’t legislate from the bench. The American people deserve Judge Gorsuch to serve them on the U.S. Supreme Court.

As the American people watched Judge Gorsuch before the Judiciary Committee, they saw an exceptionally qualified nominee for the highest Court in the land. They saw someone who is bright—Columbia undergraduate, Harvard Law School, Oxford Ph.D. I would submit that Judge Gorsuch’s intellectual capacities are only exceeded by the size of his heart. This is a kind man. This is a brilliant man. This is an independent jurist.

I very much look forward to casting my vote tomorrow to confirm Judge Gorsuch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, today we are one step closer to a vote to confirm Judge Gorsuch to the Supreme Court. I look forward to the vote tomorrow. We will be confirming a Justice to the Supreme Court who is supremely qualified, who is a mainstream judge, who respects the rule of law and the Constitution, and who will rule impartially from the bench—someone who will call balls and strikes. That is what I believe the American people look for when they look for a Supreme Court Justice. When they say that the Democrats would oppose any Supreme Court candidate the President nominated, I had hoped that partisanship would be at least somewhat limited. I had hoped the Democrats would want to preserve the Senate’s nearly 230-year tradition in confirming Supreme Court Justices by a simple-majority vote. And I had hoped that more than a handful of Democrats would join us to confirm one of the most, as I said, superbly qualified judges in my memory. That is not what happened. Despite Judge Gorsuch’s qualifications, despite the support for his nomination from both liberals and conservatives, the vast majority of Senate Democrats were determined to block this confirmation.

Of course, it wasn’t really ever about Judge Gorsuch. It is not that Democrats were determined to block his confirmation; it is that they were determined to block any confirmation.

Democrats tried to offer reasons to oppose Judge Gorsuch, but they struggled to come up with anything plausible. The Senate minority leader actually came to the floor and tried to argue that he was worried that Judge Gorsuch would not be “a mainstream justice.”

Over the course of 2,700 cases on the Tenth Circuit, Judge Gorsuch has been in the majority of the time, 99 percent. In 97 percent of those 2,700 cases, the opinions were unanimous. So I would love to hear an explanation for how exactly a judge who has been in the majority of the time, is out of the judicial mainstream. Was the minority leader attempting to argue that all of the judges on the Tenth Circuit, including those appointed by Democratic Presidents, are out of the mainstream?

The fact is that Democratic opposition to Judge Gorsuch had nothing to do with his qualifications. I doubt that any of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle really think that Judge Gorsuch is not qualified or that he lacks the qualifications of a Supreme Court Justice, but they opposed him anyway.

If they opposed a judge with a distinguished reputation as a brilliant jurist; if they opposed a judge who is known for his fairness and impartiality; if they opposed a judge whose nomination has been repeatedly supported by liberals, as well as conservatives; if they opposed a judge who, in 99 percent of the cases, the opinions were unanimous. So 215 were confirmed out of the 217 under President Obama up to that point.

And now here we are today. Democrats are again mad that they lost an election, that they can’t control the nomination process, and they once again turned it “no-holds-barred” partisan process. They have said it is clear that no Republican nominee would ever make it to the Supreme Court; thus, we had to act to ensure that Supreme Court nominees can receive an up-or-down vote going forward.

In the Senate’s nearly 230 years, the filibuster has been used to block a Supreme Court nominee exactly once—one time. Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas’s nomination to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was blocked by a bipartisan coalition, in part over ethical concerns. That is how strong the Senate’s bipartisan tradition of an up-or-down vote on Supreme Court nominees has been—230 years, one time, and it was bipartisan. I am deeply sorry that the Democrats were determined to end that tradition.

Judge Gorsuch should never have faced the threat of a filibuster. There was no reason—no reason other than their flagrant partisanship—to block this supremely qualified nominee from the Supreme Court.

As I said, I look forward to tomorrow and to this final vote where we will have an opportunity to confirm to the Supreme Court, this well-qualified, mainstream nominee who fundamentally respects the rule of law and the Constitution of the United States and will act impartially as a Justice for the American people.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I wish to address the Senate for a few minutes about the nomination of Judge Neil Gorsuch, which is the topic of the day and has been the topic for weeks. It probably has been said, but I am going to go through some of it again.

Judge Gorsuch is a native of Denver, CO, where he currently resides with his 10 Bush nominees to appellate courts. That was a massive reversal in Senate history. Suddenly the normally smooth process of confirming a President’s judicial nominee had been turned into an exercise in partisanship.

To recall the later Democrats struck again when they employed the nuclear option to ensure that they could pack the DC Circuit—despite the fact that at the time, when the current minority leader announced that Democrats would “fill up the DC Circuit or the other.” Republicans had blocked just two of President Obama’s circuit nominees and had confirmed 99 percent of his judges. So 215 were confirmed out of 217 under President Obama up to that point.

And now here we are today. Democrats are again mad that they lost an election, that they can’t control the nomination process, and they once again turned it “no-holds-barred” partisan process. They have said it is clear that no Republican nominee would ever make it to the Supreme Court; thus, we had to act to ensure that Supreme Court nominees can receive an up-or-down vote going forward.

wife Louise and their two daughters. He is currently 49 years old.

I want to talk about some of his credentials. Judge Gorsuch received his bachelor of arts degree from Columbia University in 1988, his juris doctor from Harvard Law School in 1991, and a doctorate of legal philosophy from Oxford University in the UK in 2004.

At Columbia, he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, a Truman scholar at Harvard Law School, and a Marshall scholar at Oxford.

Following law school, Judge Gorsuch served as a law clerk to Federal appellate judge David Sentelle and then to Justice Byron White of the U.S. Supreme Court and Associate Justice Anthony M. Kennedy of the Supreme Court.

In 1995, Judge Gorsuch entered private practice as an associate of Kellogg, Huber, Hansen, Todd, Evans & Flgel, and he was elected partner in that law firm in 1998. His practice focused on general litigation in both trial and appellate matters.

Judge Gorsuch left private practice in 2005 to serve as the Principal Deputy to the Associate Attorney General at the Justice Department in Washington. President George W. Bush nominated Judge Gorsuch to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, located in Denver, on May 10, 2006. He was confirmed in the Senate by a voice vote on July 20, 2006.

We talk about qualifications for judges. I have some of them. Judge Gorsuch has served over a decade on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. He has an outstanding judicial record that speaks for itself. He has participated in over 2,700 appeals on the Tenth Circuit, and 97 percent of them have been unanimously decided. In those cases, he was in the majority 99 percent of the time.

Of the approximately 800 opinions he authored on the Tenth Circuit, 98 percent of his opinions were unanimous, even on a circuit where 7 out of the 12 active judges were appointed by Democratic Presidents. His opinions on the Tenth Circuit have the lowest rate of dissenting judges at 1.5 percent. That is unheard of. Out of the eight cases he has decided that were reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court, seven were affirmed and one was vacated.

Judge Gorsuch’s nomination to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals in 2006 was largely uncontroversial, even on a side of the aisle where 7 out of the 12 active judges were appointed by Democratic Presidents. His opinions on the Tenth Circuit have the lowest rate of dissenting judges at 1.5 percent. That is unheard of. Out of the eight cases he has decided that were reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court, seven were affirmed and one was vacated.

Notably, Senators serving during this time include a lot of my former colleagues: then-Senator Barack Obama, Senator Joe Biden, Senator Hillary Clinton, Senator John Kerry, Senator Harry Reid, and 12 other current sitting Democratic Senators in this body, including the minority leader, Chuck Schumer.

In March, the American Bar Association, ABA, unanimously gave Judge Gorsuch an “unqualified” rating, their highest possible mark. Minority Leader Schumer and Senator Leahy have both previously referred to the ABA as the “gold standard by which judicial candidates are judged.”

In the area of jurisprudence, Judge Gorsuch has a mainstream judicial philosophy, which he clearly articulated during the Senate Judiciary’s confirmation hearing.

I believe his record is unequivocal in that he believes judicial decisions should be based on the law and the Constitution and not personal policy preferences. He has a deep commitment to the Constitution and its protections of rights as well as the rule of law. Including the separation of powers, federalism, and the Bill of Rights. Judge Gorsuch’s decisions demonstrate that he consistently applies the law as it is written, fairly and equally to all individuals.

Additional information about Judge Gorsuch: The American people deserve to have their voices heard in selecting Justice Scalia’s replacement. This is what we are doing.

Some of my colleagues intend to oppose Judge Gorsuch based solely on the fact that they disagree with the outcome of the Presidential election.

During President Trump’s campaign last year, he clearly defined the type of Justice he wished to nominate to the current vacancy. He even published, as you will recall, a list of 21 judges who possessed what he believed were the necessary qualifications to serve on the U.S. Supreme Court.

Following Judge Gorsuch’s nomination, he sat for over 20 hours of questioning in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee in the Senate—the longest hearing of any 21st-century nominee. Additionally, he was given 299 questions for the record by my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. This also is the most in recent Supreme Court confirmation history.

Simply put, I believe this is the most open and transparent process in choosing a Supreme Court nominee ever conducted by an administration. By filling this nomination, some of my colleagues are breaking a nearly 230-year tradition of approving Supreme Court nominees by a simple-majority vote.

I believe the American people spoke clearly when they elected President Trump. I believe this is the American people’s seat, and I believe Judge Gorsuch is an exceptional choice for the Supreme Court. He deserves an up-or-down vote, and that is why I believe we are getting ready in the next few hours to confirm him.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the confirmation be resumed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, as we finished the vote just hours ago, I could not help but notice a number of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle high-fiving each other. That image stays with me as I stand here now. It saddens me. There is no cause for celebration in what happened in the Senate just hours ago. No one should celebrate in the Senate tonight. No one should understate the magnitude of what happened here. Damage was done to our democracy, in fact, to the institutions that are the pillars of our democracy—the United States Supreme Court and the Senate.

Today is, indeed, one of my saddest days in the Senate. Sadder than anything is the damage that has been caused to the Supreme Court by eroding and undermining trust and respect for an institution that has power only because of its credibility with the American people. It has no armies or police force; all it really has is the confidence and respect of the American people.

For myself, I would state unequivocally that I hope we will work together on issues where we have common ground, where we can reach common sense, such as tax reform, on immigration issues.

No one should make light of the potential fallout, as there is in any nuclear explosion, from this action today.

The Senate has broken with decades of bipartisan practice when it comes to the U.S. Supreme Court. The practice and the tradition was that Presidents of either party would consult with Members of both parties in this body before making a nomination so as to ensure a mainstream nominee that nominee would be in the mainstream even before his or her selection so that there was some modicum of comity and so that respect for this body, as well as the courts, would be preserved.

My concern is that the contagion of partisanship will infect the court system as a whole. All of the nominations to lower courts, as well as the appellate courts, will be affected.

My hope is that we can avoid that truly cataclysmic outcome, a nuclear explosion, in some ways even more deafening and damaging than the one used today would be because our courts are the bulwark of our democracy. An attack on our courts is an attack on the only check we have against tyranny and autocratic erosion of those rights. That is why the nonpartisanship of our courts is so important.

The Supreme Court, of all our courts, should be above politics. In fact, that is why the 60-vote rule for the Supreme Court was so important. The Supreme Court is different: nine Justices appointed for life to the highest Court in the land. In some ways, it is an anachronism in our democracy—uncountable, unelected, sitting for life with the power to strike down actions of elected representatives and an elected Executive by issuing words on paper without the direct means to enforce them, depending on respect and credibility from the American people. To approve nominees by a razor-thin majority is a disservice to the Court and to our democracy.

Supreme Court Justices do more than just follow the law; they have to resolve conflicts in the law and differences among the lower courts where they disagreed and, in fact, ambiguities in the statute, where there is lack of clarity, where this body is unable to reach consensus and, in effect, agree to, to the extent it can, and leave some question to administrative agencies, which rightly are entitled to respect, as they implement the law.

Confidence and trust are essential, and we have damaged it today. Our Republican colleagues have gravely damaged it by the actions taken today. I have urged my colleagues to reject Neil Gorsuch because I believe he is out of the mainstream, because he failed to answer some questions about whether he agreed with established core precedents essential to rights of privacy and equality under the law, because he has a judicial philosophy that would involve substituting judgments of courts for administrative agencies substituting judgments of courts, because he wrote the history of our times, I believe that we were working to try to be above partisan politics and uphold the rule of law and do the right thing to follow the law. The way the Court does more than follow; it leads. Today's vote is a significant challenge to that principle and perhaps the most difficult that we have seen in recent history. It threatens to exact profound damage on the confidence and trust that the American people have in the Supreme Court and perhaps in the courts overall, and that is a danger for all of us.

In my view, when the history of this time is written, there will be two heros: the free press that has uncovered abuses and wrongdoing despite opposition from many powerful forces, and our independent judiciary that has upheld their right to do it and, also, the rights of countless Americans in many areas of law.

Today's action threatens those two institutions in our society. It undermines our rules. It would not have happened without a choice made by the Republican leadership that they were willing to break the rules to achieve this result.

I am determined to try to move forward in a positive way, in legislation as well as in protecting and enhancing our courts, giving them the resources they need to do their job—and law enforcement, the resources needed to uphold the rule of law.

We cannot hold the Supreme Court hostage to any ideology, and that is a lesson from today and from the past year that we should all heed.

I am going to tell you what has motivated me since I have been in the Senate: an understanding that the job of a Senator, when it comes to advice and consent, is not to replace my judgment for that of the President, not to nullify the election, but to be a check and balance to make sure that the President of either party nominated someone who is qualified for the job and is capable of providing a character point of view of being a judge for all of us, having the intellect, background, judgment, experience to carry out the duties of a Supreme Court Justice.

When President Obama won the White House, I suspected that he would pick judges who I would not have chosen, based on our different philosophies of liberal-conservative jurisprudence. This is what Greg Craig, the former White House Counsel in the Obama administration, said about Elena Kagan, who is now on the Court: "Kagan is . . . a progressive in the mold of Obama himself." This is what Vice President Biden's Chief of Staff Ronald Klain said about Elena Kagan: "Elena Kagan is clearly a legal progressive . . . [and] comes from the progressive side of the spectrum." This is what Greg Craig, the former White House Counsel in the Obama administration, said about Elena Kagan, who is now on the Court: "Kagan is a progressive in the mold of Obama himself." This is what Greg Craig, the former White House Counsel in the Obama administration, said about Elena Kagan, who is now on the Court: "Kagan is . . . a progressive in the mold of Obama himself."
it is pretty clear that the Founding Fathers did not have in their minds that one party would nullify the election when the President of another party was chosen by the people when it came to Supreme Court confirmations because everybody they did not agree with philosophically.

I voted for Elena Kagan and Sonia Sotomayor, knowing they come from the progressive judicial pool. Neil Gorsuch is one of the finest conservatives that any Republican President could have chosen, and he is every bit as qualified as they were. His record is incredible—10 1/2 years on the bench, 2,700 cases, and 1 reversal. He received the highest rating of the American Bar Association, "well qualified," just like Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan.

To merit the committee's rating of "well qualified," a Supreme Court nominee must be a preeminent member of the legal profession, have outstanding legal ability and exceptional breadth of experience, meet the very high standards of integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament. The rating of "well qualified" is reserved for those found to merit the committee's strongest affirmative endorsement. By unanimous vote on March 9, the standing committee awarded Judge Gorsuch this highest rating of "well qualified," just like they did for Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan. He has 2,700 cases decisions and praise from all areas of the law—left, right and middle. The ABA report of 900 cases describes a very thoughtful man, an incredible judge, and a good person. So I don't think anybody could come to the floor and say—even though they may disagree with the outcome—that Judge Gorsuch is not qualified, using any reasonable standard, to be chosen by President Trump. He is every bit as qualified as the two Obama appointments, and I don't think qualifications no longer matter like they used to.

Antonin Scalia—whom Judge Gorsuch, hopefully, will soon replace as Justice Gorsuch—was confirmed by the Senate 98 to 0. Ruth Bader Ginsburg was confirmed 96 to 3. I would argue that you could not find two more polar opposite people when it comes to philosophy than Justice Ginsburg and Justice Scalia. They became very dear friends, but nobody in their right mind would say that there was not a difference in their judicial philosophy.

Strom Thurmond, my predecessor, was a very conservative man himself, voted for Ms. Ginsburg. Clearly a conservative would not have chosen her because she was general counsel of the ACLU. I can tell you that Ted Kennedy and other people on the progressive side of the aisle would not have voted for Antonin Scalia based on philosophy than Justice Ginsburg and Justice Scalia. They became very dear friends, but nobody in their right mind would say that there was not a difference in their judicial philosophy.

President Trump put a list of names out that he would choose from if he became President, which was historic. Part of the contest 2008 was about the Supreme Court. I have no problem at all in saying that, once the campaign season is afoot, we will let the next President pick. That is no slam on Judge Garland. I have zero doubt that if the shoe had been on a different foot, there would not have been a different outcome. Remember the maga...
and that decision by Harvard could not be taken to the extreme of saying that she is not fit to serve on the Court. So I was able to look beyond the charges leveled at these two ladies on our side to understand who they really were. When people do have to weigh these judges the best, they can tell you the most accurate information. In the case of Kagan and Sotomayor, there were a lot of people, left and right, who said they were well-qualified, fine ladies. But if you look at what was said about Judge Gorsuch in the ABA report, it is just an incredible life, well lived.

So here we are. We are about to change the rules. Up until 1948, it was a simple majority requirement for the Supreme Court. As a matter of fact, as for most Supreme Court nominations in the history of the country, a large percentage were done based on a voice vote. When you look at what was said about Judge Gorsuch in the ABA report, it is just an incredible life, well lived.

There is some blame to go around on both sides, but I can say that while I have not always agreed with what we have tried to do, the best that I know how to be. I voted for everybody I thought was qualified. I said, as for Judge Garland, the next President decide. At the time I said that in March 2016, I had no doubt in my mind that Donald Trump would lose and that Hillary Clinton would probably pick somebody more liberal than Garland. But it made sense to me in that stage of the process to let the next President pick the next Supreme Court Justice. I believe this is why we are filibustering in order to make it impossible for us to vote on this crucial nominee without modifying the rules for legislation. When you look back and try to figure out what we did and how we got here, I can say that we took one of the most accurate information. In the case of Kagan and Sotomayor, there were a lot of people, left and right, who said they were well-qualified, fine ladies. But if you look at what was said about Judge Gorsuch in the ABA report, it is just an incredible life, well lived.

The reason I am voting to change the rules is that I do not know what I would do at home and tell people as to how Sotomayor and Kagan got on the Court and Gorsuch could not. U.S. Supreme Court. We are not looking for somebody with a certain policy preference. We are not looking for people with ideas of how the law can be improved because the role of a judge is not to make law, it is to interpret the law as made by the legislative body as best the judge can understand it. That is why we need someone like Neil Gorsuch, in my estimation, who has good judgment.

I sit on the Judiciary Committee. I have spent 20 to 40 hours with Neil Gorsuch or with people who know him well, in hearing their testimony. I have read his opinions. As far as I am concerned, he is as good as it gets. I cannot imagine that President Trump could have picked better.

He is a thoroughbred. He is a legal rock star. If you read his opinions, you will see that he is painstaking in his application of the law to the facts before him. He writes beautifully. His communication skills are absolutely amazing. His arguments and analytical rigor are clear and concise. His decisions are wise and disciplined, and he is faithful to the law. He is an intellectual, not an ideologue. He is a judge, not a politician. He is whip-smart, has a strict constitutionalist, likes snow skiing, fly fishing, and is a fourth-generation Coloradan. I think he will serve every person in our country well as a member of the Supreme Court. That is why I am supporting him.

Let me say one final thing. I do not think there is any vote that will be more important than the vote we will take tomorrow on a President’s nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court, so I want to choose my words carefully. Not a single, solitary vote is more important than that vote we will take tomorrow. That is not to say that there are not other important issues before this body. That is why I think it was so important for the American people to decide to vote up or down on Judge Gorsuch so that we can move on to those other important issues—jobs, jobs, jobs; designing a healthcare delivery system that looks like somebody designed it on purpose, which our Acting President has worked so hard on; infrastructure; elementary and secondary education; a skilled workforce. I could go on.

There is an enormous amount of pain in America today. There are too many Americans who are not participating in the great wealth America—not economically, not socially, not culturally, and not spiritually. We have been elected in the Congress to do something about that.

I talk to people in my State every day, and I know the President got the Presiding Officer. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, when we lost the Honorable Justice Antonin Scalia, we were all saddened, as he was such a legend on the Court, and I am very proud that President Trump nominated a successor who is worthy of fulfilling his shoes.

Judge Gorsuch has garnered respect and approval from people across the legal community, and he has unrivaled bipartisan support. It is unfortunate that the Democrats have tried to block his nomination. It is not going to work, but they have tried.

Recently, I had the honor of meeting Judge Gorsuch. It is kind of interesting because I was not on his list to visit. In fact, I had even said: Don’t waste your time on me, as I know your credentials and I am going to support you anyway, and I am sure you will get the appropriate committees that would pass judgment. Yet he did call, and we met. I will tell you that you have to meet and talk to the guy in person to know what kind of an individual he really is.

Of course, being from Oklahoma, I am sensitive to the fact that he is the son of the West. In fact, none of our Justices up there, with the exception of California, are from what we would call the Western United States—the area where people need to be properly represented.

As a judge on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, he has heard from Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, and my State of Oklahoma. He knows the issues of the Western States and what we are facing, and he has expertise to deal with them. He has handled with a lot of care and fairness the issues that have come before him. Of course, we know this because Oklahoma is in the Tenth Circuit.

His reputation is such that, regardless of party affiliation, countless groups, organizations, and individuals have come out in support of Judge Gorsuch, including Neal Katyal, who was the Acting Solicitor General in President Obama’s Cabinet, so he was a Cabinet member of President Obama’s. He testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee and wrote an op-ed piece in the New York Times. Keep in mind, when you listen to this—this is a quote from an op-ed piece in the New York Times, and one of the individuals from the administration of President Obama said this: “His years on the bench reveal a commitment to judicial independence—a record that should give the American people confidence that he will not compromise principle to favor the President who appointed him.”

That comes from an Obama appointee.

Not only is he well liked, but he also has an impressive resume, serving as law clerk to two different Supreme Court Justices. He attended Columbia, Harvard, Oxford, and it doesn’t get any better than that. It is clear he has the qualifications, and as recently as the last administration, that was really all you needed to be confirmed to be on the U.S. Supreme Court.

What the Democrats have done to block his nomination has never been done before. This is significant. People don’t realize—people maybe critical of some of the procedures that were taking place, they forget the fact that there has never been, in the history of America, a successful partisan filibuster of a Supreme Court nomination—there has never been. This will be the first time this happened.

I support the majority leader in changing the rules in the face of this unprecedented action by a minority party. There is really no reason for their filibuster of this highly qualified individual, other than partisanism and catering to their liberal base. Changing the rules for Supreme Court nominations had to be done, and if the situation were reversed, the Democrats would have done the same thing in a heartbeat, as we saw in 2013 when they did the same thing.

Judge Gorsuch deserves to be on the Supreme Court. He does not deserve to be blocked because people are upset that we observed the Biden rule; that is, not providing for any action on a nominee for a Supreme Court vacancy once the election season is underway—and they lost the election.

Now, that is Joe Biden, not Jim Inhofe.
In addition to his impeccable job and experience and educational background, he is perhaps best known for his defense of religious liberty, including a role in the dispute during the Obama administration that required employers to offer abortion-inducing drugs to their employees as part of their health insurance. One of these employers was Hobby Lobby.

Everyone knows who Hobby Lobby is, but not everyone knew them back when they knew them. I knew them back in the 1970s, when the Green family, who started Hobby Lobby, were actually operating out of their garage, making picture frames, and look at them today. I have known them for a long time. They started out their whole business with a $600 loan. Now they have over 700 stores across the United States and are the largest privately owned arts and crafts store in the world.

Judge Gorsuch and the Supreme Court agreed with Hobby Lobby and upheld their religious liberty rights. I am going to read to my colleagues his concurring opinion. It is very profound. Judge Gorsuch wrote, after they made the determination that Hobby Lobby did not have to give these drugs to their employees:

'It is not for secular courts to rewrite the religious complaint of a faithful adherent, or to decide whether a religious teaching about complicity imposes “too much” moral disapproval on those only “indirectly” assisting wrongful conduct. Whether an act of complicity is or isn’t “too attenuated” from the underlying wrongdoing is sometimes itself a matter of faith we must respect the faith.'

Now, that is what he wrote in Hobby Lobby.

In a very similar situation around the same timeframe, there was a case that is known now to be the Little Sisters of the Poor. He joined in an opinion defending the rights of nuns not to be forced to pay for abortion-inducing drugs in their healthcare plans. This is another statement he made. He said: “When a law demands that a person do something the person considers sinful, and the penalty for refusal is a large financial penalty, then the law imposes a substantial burden on that person’s free exercise of religion.”

It is not just petitioners of the Christian faith whom Judge Gorsuch has sided with. He upheld the religious beliefs of a Native American prisoner and of a tax shelter who found their ability to practice their faith restricted in one manner or another.

He comes to his decision not because he is seeking some predetermined outcome; he comes to his decisions because that is where the facts of the law and the Constitution lead him.

For example, in the Lynch case—another Oklahoma case—Gorsuch referred to Chevron deference as “a judge-made doctrine for the abdication of the judicial duty.”

Chevron deference is the judicial rule that requires judges to defer to an agency’s interpretation—we are talking about a bureaucracy—an agency’s interpretation of the law if the law is considered ambiguous or unclear and if the agency’s interpretation is reasonable. This defense to the agency gives them a lot of authority, a lot of power. Moreover, it can produce a lot of uncertainty to the regulated community.

As Judge Gorsuch wrote, Chevron deference allows agencies to “reverse its current view 180 degrees any time based merely on the shift of political winds and still prevail [in court].” I know a little bit about this. I spent a lot of years being the chairman of a committee called the Environment and Public Works Committee. During the Obama years, we had a bureaucracy that was trying to change the law instead of following the law. It was exactly what Judge Gorsuch was talking about in this case when he talked about the Chevron deference, giving deference to a bureaucracy. You can imagine being in business, especially a heavily regulated one, that has to worry that the rules might change then and how do you plan to make your plans?

I think Gorsuch’s opinion on Chevron deference is an important debate to have. Do we, as a coequal branch of government, continue to give up our powers to the administrative state or do we take our power back and write laws as they should be implemented? Furthermore, does the judicial branch, as a coequal branch of government, continue to give up their power of interpretation to the administrative state?

These are important, fundamental questions that should be addressed, and I am glad the Gorsuch nomination has brought these cases to light.

Although Judge Gorsuch was nominated by a Republican President, this doesn’t mean my colleagues on the other side of the aisle should have any concern about Judge Gorsuch’s decision-making ability. This is important to point out because a judge is not about making decisions that are in the best interests of any political party but really about making decisions based on facts and the law and the Constitution without bias.

During his confirmation, Judge Gorsuch stated his judicial philosophy, saying:

‘I decide cases . . . I listen to the arguments made. I read the briefs that are put to me. I listen to my colleagues carefully and I listen to the lawyers in the well . . . keeping an open mind through the entire process as best I humanly can and I leave all the other stuff at home. And I make a decision based on the facts and law. Who can argue with that? He has proven over a period of time that he will do that.

Through the whole debate, it has become evident that the Democrats were asking him to rule in favor of causes and not to the law, which is what a judge does and should do. Regarding the roles and balance of our government, Gorsuch is what a judge should be. He believes Congress should write the laws, the executive branch is to carry them out, and the judicial branch is to interpret the laws. The confirmation of Judge Gorsuch will shape our Nation for generations and all of us will be able to benefit from his wise decisions. I am looking forward to confirming Judge Neil Gorsuch. It is going to happen tomorrow, and then all of this will be over. I am proud to give him my vote. Justice will be well served as such. With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have already cast my “no” vote with regard to the judge and will so again whenever we get to final passage, but I want to take this opportunity to talk about the chaos that is going on in Venezuela.

As if there weren’t already enough chaos, last week Venezuela’s supreme court stripped its legislative branch of its powers—just stripped them of powers. Only because the court had gotten such significant criticism did it reverse its decision. Apparently even the very shaky President of Venezuela, Maduro, weighed in to get them to reverse their decision. Now, isn’t that something?

This is the nonsense that is going on in Venezuela. Of course, what went on last week further undermines Venezuela’s so-called democracy, and it is one of the latest gifts President Maduro’s creeping dictatorship. That is what it is.

He has repeatedly and violently suppressed protesters and jailed his political opponents in violation of any understanding of human rights. He has used that same Supreme Court to block members of the National Assembly from taking office, and he has used that Supreme Court as a rubberstamp to overturn the laws that the National Assembly does that he doesn’t like. Isn’t it a sad state that Venezuela has reached?

The President has also thwarted opposition efforts to recall him, President Maduro, in a national referendum. In so doing, he was able to appoint a Vice President with ties to Hezbollah, and now a Vice President it appears that he has sanctioned for drug trafficking.

Meanwhile, the poor Venezuelan people suffer the consequences of the political, humanitarian, and economic
One of those fixes could be a kind of "smoothing fund," that as the insurance companies vie for this business on the State exchanges, they would be able to have this fund as a resource for them to get over some of the humps—also, certainly for some of the insureds. Last year, because you are at 400 percent of poverty and you are no longer eligible for some of the subsidies to enable you to buy health insurance—and, by the way, for a single individual, that is only about $47,000 a year of income—the person who makes $47,000, $50,000 a year would have to spend $8,000, $10,000, $11,000 on a health insurance policy.

We need to adjust that—in other words, fix that as well. There needs to be an additional fix of a subsidy for the people who are just over 400 percent of poverty. To translate that another way, for a family of four, that is only about $95,000 a year. On a tight budget like that, they simply can’t afford health insurance. They need some help. Well, let’s slap that right onto the existing law—the Affordable Care Act—we could get this thing tuned up and, indeed, continue to provide what we need in order for people to have healthcare.

One other fix: There are about 4 million people in the country who, if their State legislatures and their Governor would expand Medicaid—and some of those Governors are now expressing interest in doing this—under the Federal law up to 138 percent of poverty, 4 million more people would be covered with healthcare. In my State of Florida alone, there are 900,000 people who otherwise would be getting healthcare who do not because the government in the State of Florida has refused to expand Medicaid coverage up to 138 percent of poverty.

How much is that? For a single individual, that is someone making about $16,000 a year. A person like that can’t afford health insurance. A person like that can’t afford any kind of paying for any healthcare.

What happens to them? When they get sick, they wait and wait to try to cure themselves because they can’t pay a doctor. When the sickness turns into an emergency, they end up in the emergency room and then, of course, it is uncompensated care and the hospital eats it. The hospital, of course, passes on the cost of uncompensated care and the hospital eats it. The hospital, of course, passes on the cost of uncompensated care and the hospital eats it. The hospital, of course, passes on the cost of uncompensated care and the hospital eats it. The hospital, of course, passes on the cost of uncompensated care and the hospital eats it. The hospital, of course, passes on the cost of uncompensated care and the hospital eats it. The hospital, of course, passes on the cost of uncompensated care and the hospital eats it.

It makes sense to do this. With a few fixes, we would be able to tune up the existing law to provide the healthcare that most of us want to provide. It seems to me that it is common sense, and it is common sense that can be done in a bipartisan way. It is my hope and my prayer that the Senate and the House will come together and ultimately do this.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senate has decided on a purely partisan basis to resolve the impasse of Judge Gorsuch’s nomination by invoking the so-called “nuclear option.” For the first time in our history, nominees to the Supreme Court of the United States may advance from nomination to confirmation with a simple majority vote in this body.

I have heard many of my colleagues ascribe blame equally to both sides, and I have heard analysts and experts say the same. One can question that diagnosis, as some observers like scholars like Norm Ornstein of the American Enterprise Institute and Thomas Mann of the Brookings Institute have demonstrated that our political polarization over the last several years, and hence our current impasse, has been driven predominantly by the ever more conservative ideology of the Republican Party. Regardless, here we are.

The Gorsuch nomination lacks the level of support required for a Supreme Court seat, and the majority leader has chosen a step that Democrats clearly and emphatically rejected when we needed to confirm nominees with broad support but were blocked because they were submitted by President Obama.

I had hoped it was not too late for cooler heads to prevail. Unfortunately, adherence to the principle of 60 votes for consideration of a Justice of the Supreme Court and indeed the existing rule in the Senate was ignored, and we are at this impasse.

Since many have drawn a false equivalence between the last so-called “nuclear option” vote 20 years ago and what occurred today, let me take a moment to explain, for my part, why I very reluctantly supported a change to the Senate precedent for nominees other than the Supreme Court in 2013.

During President Obama’s tenure, Republicans necessitated more cloture votes than were taken under every previous President combined. Let me repeat that. During President Obama’s tenures, Republicans necessitated more cloture votes than were taken under every previous President combined, from George Washington to George W. Bush. In numerical terms, Republicans demanded a cloture vote 79 times over just 5 years. In contrast—among the Founding Fathers all the way through George W. Bush—the Senate only faced that situation 68 times. Republicans obstructed Obama nominees more in 5 years than the United States Senate obstructed all nominees combined in the course of more than two centuries.

The bitter irony, of course, was that after a nominee would break through, Republicans often would vote overwhelmingly to confirm the nominee they so adamantly delayed. It was clear their sole guiding principle was obstruction and delay.

Judges nominated by President Obama faced some of the lowest median and average wait times under the five most recent Presidents, and President Obama tied with President Clinton for the fewest number of circuit court nominees confirmed during that same period. All that time, judicial vacancies stacked up. Justice was delayed and denied. Critical public service roles went unfilled, and the American public came to regard Congress as a place where nothing of substance can occur.

It was under those dire and unprecedented circumstances that I reluctantly joined my colleagues to change the filibuster rules for executive nominations and judicial nominations, other than the Supreme Court, very consciously excluding the Supreme Court, which at that time was recognized as appropriate by all my Republican colleagues. But there really is no equivalence between that decision and what the majority did today.

Even in 2013, at the height of Republicans’ partisan attacks on President Obama, Senate Democrats believed the Supreme Court was too important to subject to a simple majority vote. The Supreme Court coordinates the branches of our government, and its lifetime appointees have final authority to interpret the Constitution. We understood then—as we do now—that the traditional 60-vote threshold to conclude debate in the Senate was too important to the consensus-driven character of this body to sacrifice.

I think we also have to acknowledge that a President already has nominated a choice for the Court, the broad stroke of which has been a judicial philosophy that we feel sufficiently the “lifeline” test for an adequate learning environment. The Tenth Circuit, Judge Gorsuch’s decision reversed all these factfinders to hold in favor of the school district. In other words, the decision was to force Luke back into an inadequate learning environment and leave his parents with yet another unexpected financial hardship. At the same time, Judge Gorsuch’s new legal standard threatened to degrade the quality of education for children with disabilities all across the country.

The good news for Luke’s family—and for so many others—is that the Supreme Court of the United States intervened in a rare unanimous opinion, reversing Judge Gorsuch’s position—ironically during his confirmation hearings. The Nation has been spared the potential harm that could have resulted from lowering expectations for school noncompliance and leaving families like Luke’s without sufficient recourse.

Yet as my colleagues and I have pointed out at every turn of this confirmation process, this is far from the only decision by Judge Gorsuch that is widely outside the mainstream of modern jurisprudence. He is not—and was never intended to be—a consensus nominee to fill the vacancy on the Supreme Court. It should not come as a surprise that a majority of the Court, now divided over his nomination to the high court in the land, and Judge Gorsuch could not earn enough support under the 60-vote threshold.

The filibuster was intended to be an institutional safeguard that protects the minority by requiring broad consensus for major decisions by this body. It should be equally apparent in this circumstance that the filibuster did its job. A large minority of this body viewed Judge Gorsuch as too extreme for the Supreme Court, and that minority blocked cloture on his nomination. There was no national emergency, no danger, no serious consequence whatsoever that prevented the majority from reversing course and working with Democrats and the President to find a consensus nominee. In one day, the majority has lessened the distinction between our Chamber and our colleagues across the Capitol, all the way down to furthering in the eyes of the Nation and opening the door to an even more polarized judiciary.

I regret that this is the case, and I hope this body can turn back from the course we find ourselves on today. I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we are now well on our way to confirming Judge Gorsuch as the next Justice of the Supreme Court. I have a few things to say about the way we have gotten here.

Earlier today, the other side—meaning the Democrats—made a very unprecedented break with Senate history and with Senate tradition. They launched the first partisan filibuster of a Supreme Court nominee in our Nation’s history. For our part, we Republicans insisted that we follow the practice of the Senate. We don’t engage in partisan filibusters of Supreme Court nominees.

Yesterday, I came to the floor to speak about the path that brought us to this point. As I discussed, way back in 2001, the current minority leader and some of his allies on the far left hatched a plan to, in their words, “change the ground rules” with regard to lower court nominees. I noted a New York Times article describing the Democratic senatorial caucus retreat, where the new approach to nominees was discussed; in other words, where they discussed the strategy for changing the ground rules of how judges are considered by the United States Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the May 1, 2001, New York Times article entitled “Washington talk; Democrats Ready for Judicial Fight,” and the April 5, 2017, story from the Washington Examiner entitled “The Gorsuch Plagiarism Story is Bogus.”

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

WASHINGTON TALK; DEMOCRATS READY FOR JUDICIAL FIGHT
(By Neil A. Lewis)

President Bush has yet to make his first nominee to a federal court and no one knows whether anyone will sit on the Supreme Court this summer, an event that would lead to a high-stakes confirmation battle.
Nonetheless, the Senate’s Democrats and Republicans are already engaged in close-quarter combat over how to deal with the eventual nominees from the Bush White House. Democrats in particular are trying to show some muscle as they insist that they will not simply stand aside and confirm any nominees they deem right-wing ideologues.

When it comes to judicial nominees, we have to make sure and make sure that both the White House and the Senate Republicans know that we expect to have significant input in the process.” Senator Charles E. Schumer, New York’s senior Democrat, said in an interview. “We’re simply not going to roll over.”

For Republican’s 52 Delegation attended a private retreat this weekend in Farmington, Pa., where a principal topic was forging a unified strategy to combat the White House’s judicial nominees.

The senators listened to a panel composed of Prof. Laurence H. Tribe of Harvard Law School, Prof. Cass M. Sunstein of the University of Chicago Law School and Marcia R. Greenberger, the co-director of the National Women’s Law Center, on the need to scrutinize judicial nominees more closely than ever, in the absence of some who were present, that the nation’s courts were at a historic juncture because, they said, a band of conservative lawyers around Mr. Bush had the power to pack the courts with staunch conservatives.

“They said it was important for the Senate to change the ground rules and there was no obligation to confirm someone just because they are scholarly or erudite,” a person who attended said.

Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, the Democratic leader, then exhorted his colleagues behind closed doors on Saturday morning to refrain from providing snap endorsements of any Bush nominee. One senior Democratic aide who spoke on condition of anonymity said that was because some people still remembered with an difficult for Judge Gorsuch to have used differences. His writings borrow from other legal writing. The similar passages in his 2006 book, “The Future of Assisted Suicide and Euthanasia,” is weak, at best.

Mr. Bush is expected to announce his first batch of judicial nominees in the next several days, and it is likely to include several Republican stalwarts, some women and members of minorities, administration officials have said. Among those

Mr. Bush may put forward to important judicial openings, which are favored by conservatives as Jeffrey S. Sutton, Peter D. Keisler, Representative Christopher Cox of California and Miguel Estrada.

The first group of nominees, which may number more than two dozen, is part of an effort to fill the 94 vacancies on the federal bench while the Republicans still control the Senate.

But it remains unclear if there will be a Supreme Court vacancy at the end of the court term in June for the Senate to consider. The possibility, which some conservative policy experts have signaled that she wants it known that she will not retire after this term.

THAT GORSUCH PLAGIARISM STORY IS BOGUS

(By T. Becket Adams)

Supreme Court nominee Neil Gorsuch is not a plagiarist, the woman from whom he has been accused of lifting materials.

“I have reviewed both passages and do not see an issue here; even though the language is similar. These passages are factual, not analytical in nature,” Abigail Lawlis Kuzma, who serves as chief counsel to the Consumer Protection Division of the Indiana Attorney General’s office, said in a statement made available to the Washington Examiner.

Her remarks came soon after two reports alleged Tuesday evening that President Trump’s Supreme Court candidate had “copied” passages in his 2006 book, “The Future of Assisted Suicide and Euthanasia.” The reports alleged he also lifted material for an academic article published in 2000.

The charge, which involves using同一个 passage both describe the basic facts of the situation, which he produced much of the work in question, said the hints and allegations against this nominee are nonsense. “[In my opinion, none of the allegations has any substance or justification],” Oxford University’s John Finnis said in a statement Wednesday.

George W. Bush’s circuit court nominee was entirely without foundation. The book is meticulous in its citation of primary sources. The charge, which involves using the same words, I follow with the direct citation. The Bluebook, which is the legal style guide, is for law reviews and some appellate and trial courts, and has more specific rules.

“I don’t want to ruin a perfectly good five-minute hate, but this isn’t even close to plagiarism.”

Mr. GRASSLEY. After a brief time in the majority, Senate Democrats were back in the minority in 2003—so approximately 2 years after this strategy was established, it was at that time the Senate Democrats began an unprecedented and systemic filibuster of President George W. Bush’s circuit court nominees.

Then the tables turned. President Obama was elected, and Republicans held the Senate minority. At that time, even though many of us did not like the idea of using the filibuster on judicial nominees, we also recognized that we could not have two sets of rules—one for Republican Presidents and one for Democratic Presidents.

Our party defeated two nominees for the lower courts by filibuster and denied cloture to three of President Obama’s nominees to the DC Circuit Court of Appeals. But the other side did not appreciate being subject to the rules that they first established and started using in 2003 to filibuster judges. So at that point, in 2013, they decided to change the rules of the Senate.

By the way, they changed the rules by breaking the rules. I say that because the rules of the Senate say it takes a two-thirds vote to change the rules of the Senate, but they changed it by a majority vote. Now at that time, as we all know, Majority Leader Reid changed the rules for all Cabinet nominations and lower court nominees. To say that my colleagues and I were disappointed is a gross understatement.

The majority claimed that they left intact the filibuster for Supreme Court nominees. But my view back in 2013, when they did that, was that the distinction Majority Leader Reid drew between nominees to the Supreme Court and lower courts in the U.S. history. That is why, on the day that of a doubt, that they would filibuster nominee as well-qualified as Judge Gorsuch in the first partisan filibuster in this very day that the minority was needed to if we had a Republican filistances where this issue might conceivably arise: either you have a Democrat in the White House and a Democrat-controlled Senate or you have a Republican in the White House and a Republican-led Senate.

In the first, there was a Democrat in the White House and the party led by Leader Reid and Leader-in-Waiting SCHUMER was in the majority. If for some reason Senate Republicans chose to filibuster the nominee, there is no question that a Majority Leader Reid or a Majority Leader SCHUMER would change the rules.

Now, I do not believe that this particular circumstance would ever arise, because our side does not believe in filibustering Supreme Court nominees. I have never voted to filibuster a Supreme Court nominee, not once. I think I have a pretty good sense of the rest of our caucus. Our side just does not believe in it. It is not much more complicated than that simple commonsense statement I just made.

Of course, even if for some extraordinary reason our side did choose to filibuster a Supreme Court nominee, we do not have to speculate as to whether the other side would have changed the precedent with respect to the Supreme Court. Last year, when everyone thought that Secretary Clinton was going to win the election, their own Vice-Presidential candidate said that they would change the rules if they needed to if we had a Republican filibuster.

Then, of course the other circumstance where this issue would arise is what we have seen this very day—a Republican in the White House and a Republican-controlled Senate. We saw this very day that the minority was willing to take that last step and engage in the first partisan filibuster in U.S. history.

As I have repeatedly discussed, because they were willing to do it with a nominee as well-qualified as Judge Gorsuch, it proved, without a shadow of a doubt, that they would filibuster any nominee submitted by this Republican President. That is why, on the day that Majority Leader Reid took that unprecedented action in 2013 to break the Senate rules to change the Senate rules, I spoke on the floor. I concluded my remarks this way. So I want to quote myself:

So the majority has chosen to take us down this path. The silver lining is that there will come a day when the rolls are reversed. When that happens, our side will likely nominate and confirm lower court and Supreme Court nominees with 51 votes, regardless of whether the Democrats actually buy into this fanciful notion that they can demolish the filibuster on the lower court nominations and still preserve it for the Supreme Court.

That is what I said when Reid took that extraordinary step. So though I am extremely pleased that we will confirm such an exceptional nominee to the Supreme Court in the next day or so. I am, of course, disappointed with what we were forced to do to get it done. Sadly, I cannot say I am surprised. I think my surprise, or the fact that I can’t be surprised—you can tell it from what I said back there, what I just quoted from the 2013 speech that I gave.

I knew when Majority Leader Reid did it in 2013 that this is where we were headed. That is where we ended earlier this afternoon. But the bottom line is that you cannot have two sets of rules. You cannot clothe yourself in the tradition of a filibuster while simultaneously conducting the very first partisan filibuster of a Supreme Court nominee in history. You cannot demand a rules change only when it suits the Democrats of this body. You just can’t have it both ways. You can’t use the Senate rules as both a shield and a sword. But I must say, the one thing that does not disappoint me is this. The nominee to take Justice Scalia’s seat is eminently qualified. He will apply the law faithfully without respect to persons. He is a judge’s judge. Come some time tomorrow, we will all start calling him Justice Gorsuch.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLUNT). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, I rise to express my strong support for Judge Neil Gorsuch, to say that I will proudly vote in favor of his confirmation to mortomorrow, and to express my confidence that history will judge this nominee to be an outstanding Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. I hope he serves a long and distinguished career and believe he will. I think Justice Neil Gorsuch will turn out to be a credit to the Supreme Court, to the President who nominated him, and to the Senate that will confirm him.

It is unfortunate that we have had quite a bit of discussion about procedure and the process that has gotten us to this vote, which will take place to-morrow afternoon.

I had a conversation with one of my Democratic colleagues yesterday afternoon as we were leaving the Capitol Building. This is a person with whom I have worked on issues from I think we have great regard. I asked him how he was doing, and he said: Well, OK. I am just getting ready for the United States Senate to be forever changed.

I paused for a moment, and I said: How can it be that two reasonably intelligent Senators of good will can look at the same factual situation and see it so differently? I think my colleague did agree that, indeed, the situation we have is what has led us to our procedings today.

I do believe my colleagues on the other side of the procedural issues today are people of good will who are trying to do the right thing by their country on this issue, just as I have been.

Let’s look first of all at the candidate himself, and then I might take a moment or two to talk about what we have already done. That decision has been made. Let’s talk about Neil Gorsuch, about this outstanding future Supreme Court Justice. I believe he will be sworn in tomorrow or the next day.

Is Neil Gorsuch qualified? Really, can anyone contest that he is highly qualified? He is perhaps one of the most qualified people ever to have been nominated by a President for the High Court. He has degrees from Columbia, Harvard Law, and Oxford University. He has received the American Bar Association’s highest rating, the gold standard that we look at when it comes to judging nominees for the Federal bench up to and including the High Court. He served for 10 years with distinction on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. Clearly, he has got the qualifications, and clearly that group of qualified individuals that the President promised to look at back during the campaign and promised to send that type of individual over to the Supreme Court. I really don’t think there is much that can be said to contrdict the fact that Neil Gorsuch is qualified and highly qualified.

So now let’s ask if Neil Gorsuch is somehow out of the broad judicial mainstream. Again, I think it is clear that, based on his history, based on his testimony, and based on his rulings up until now, he is part of the broad judicial mainstream that will put him in good company on the Supreme Court and makes him a worthy successor to Justice Scalia.

First of all, he has earned the praise of both conservatives and liberals. He has even won the endorsement of President Obama’s former Acting Solicitor General, who wrote in the New York Times, if the Senate confirms Judge Gorsuch who sits in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in Denver should be at the top of the list. So thank you to the former Acting Solicitor General for going beyond ideology and political philosophy and saying a true statement that Judge Gorsuch is outstanding and should be at the top of the list.

Editorial boards across the country have touted Judge Gorsuch’s credentials and temperament. The Denver Post, his hometown newspaper, wrote an editorial praising his ability to apply the law fairly and consistently. Of course, there has been newspaper after newspaper in the right and left across this country who come down on this side of the issue saying that Judge Gorsuch should be confirmed.

Let’s look also—and this has been pointed out so often that you wonder if you should say it again, but Judge Gorsuch on the Tenth Circuit has participated in 2,700 cases, he has written over 800 opinions, and has been overruled by the Supreme Court one time. Is this a judicial radical? I think not. I think someone who demonstrated to be in the judicial mainstream—one reversal by the Supreme Court out of 800 written decisions and 2,700 votes cast on panels with the Tenth Circuit. He has almost always been in the majority over the 14 years he has been on the panels he served on, he was in the majority of those opinions, and 97 percent of those decisions were unanimous. This is hardly some radical pick as some might have suggested.

Has the process been unfair? We have heard a lot about this. A lot of my dear friends on the other side of the aisle feel aggrieved for sure. They feel that Judge Garland, the nominee of President Obama in 2016, was treated unfairly. I do not think someone who was on the other foot, and we acted the same. I think it is a bit like over the coming years, you get to decide whether Judge Gorsuch should be confirmed.

This is a vacancy that came up during a heated, hotly contested presidential year. There is really no doubt that, under normal circumstances, the roles were reversed and had a Republican tried to nominate a judge in the last year of his 8-year term, that a Democrat majority in the Senate would have done exactly as we did.

I am not guessing when I say this because the Democratic leaders of previous years have said as much. No less than Joe Biden—who was a former chairman of the Judiciary Committee and later on became Vice President for 8 years—Joe Biden said exactly the same. It almost became the Biden rule. Republican Presidential nominees taken up during the final year of a term will not be considered by a Democratic Senate. So the shoe was on the other foot, and we acted the same.

So we will leave it to the American people to decide whether Judge Garland was treated unfairly. I do not believe he was. As a matter of fact, I felt very comfortable during 2016 saying that who fills a Supreme Court seat is so important, such a significant and long-lasting decision, that the American people deserve to be heard on this issue. I felt comfortable making the Presidential election largely about what the Supreme Court would look like over the coming years.

There is no question about it, the American people got to decide in November what kind of a judge in the mold of Justice Scalia whose seat we were trying to fill or would they like a judge in the mold of Judge Garland who President Obama was seeking to put in place. So I make no apology for saying to the American people, this is the most fundamental year what sort of Supreme Court you want. The American people made that decision, and I am comfortable with that.

I was asked today by several members of the press about the change in the rules that I voted for today. It is not a situation that makes me overly joyed. It is not my idea of a good time to overrule a precedent and to substitute another one in its place. You would think that if you are a U.S. Senator; but the fact is that it puts us back into a place that we were for 200 years in this Republic.

From the beginning of this Senate, 1789 through 1889, through 1889, up to 1910, there were no filibusters at all on Supreme Court Justices. There was no partisan filibuster at all in Supreme Court Justices, and no judge had ever been denied his position because of a partisan filibuster at any level—be it the judge, circuit level, or Supreme Court.

That changed in 2003, and with the Miguel Estrada nomination, our Democratic friends stopped a qualified judge from going on the Federal appeals court. That was the beginning of an unfortunate 14-year experiment in judicial filibusters. It is not a filibuster that I think—it is not a precedent or experiment that I think this Senate can be very proud of, but it took place over a relatively short period of time over 14 years, and it ends it today.

As of today, the U.S. Senate is back where it was for over 200 years in the history of this Senate and the history of our Republic without the ability to stop a judge on a partisan filibuster. In fact, this fact cannot be contradicted. There has never been in the history of our country, even in this past decade and a half of having the possibilities of a Supreme Court filibuster, there has never been a Supreme Court nominee in the history of our Republic stopped by a partisan filibuster.

Today that 225-year or so precedent would have ended had we not acted to change the rules back to where we are back to fundamental principles, I was not willing to see Judge Neil Gorsuch be that first nominee stopped by a partisan filibuster in the history of our country. I was simply not willing to do that.

We must proceed to the rest of our business. We will confirm Judge Gorsuch tomorrow. I think he will serve then. Then we have work to do. We have other nominees to consider, and then we’ve got an agenda that we need to tend to for our people.

I am encouraged by the exchange of the first early steps of goodwill after this divisive process. Indeed, there was an article in one of our publications today that talked about a healthy new in both caucuses. If we have got to put this procedural episode behind us, this crisis behind us and legislate.

I am glad to hear that sort of bipartisan talk coming from the other side of the aisle. Another of my friends across the aisle said, “We’re not looking for dilatory procedures,” he said. “When there are things where we can work together, we’re looking for that.”

I am encouraged—even encouraged that my friend who I was talking to yesterday afternoon will conclude that we have not forever changed the Senate in a negative way, that we are, in fact, back to where we were before 2003 and getting things done.

This is not just an individual who is qualified. It is about a vacancy that needs to be filled. For one am highly comfortable that the President, in Neil Gorsuch, has put forth an outstanding, eminently qualified judge and a mainstream candidate. This is a mainstream judge. He is someone who is qualified. It is about a vacancy that needs to be filled. I am highly comfortable that the President, in Neil Gorsuch, has put forth an outstanding candidate. This is a mainstream candidate. This is a mainstream judge.

I am encouraged by the exchange of opposing him. There are a lot of different opinions on the floor that claim he would not commit to certain decisions that people would like to see him make on the Court. That would be true of virtually everyone who has been notified by the Court over the last quarter century.

There is no doubt that he is someone who has certain beliefs and views about the Constitution that are reflective of the President’s party, but that is what elections are about. Obviously, the great people whom President Obama appointed reflected his thinking. That is our system.

A lot of the attention, though, in this debate has been about the process that brought us here. There has been tremendous consternation about the change that no longer would there be a requirement of 60 votes in order to end debate. I think a lot of people have a fundamental misunderstanding of what has happened. Yes, we have gotten here and, I thought it was important for the people of Florida and others who may be interested to know how I approached it, because it was something that I am not excited about gleefully agreeing to. I would say that is probably the sentiment of most of the people here in the Senate. Yet it happened anyway.

I saw a cartoon by one of these editorial cartoonists—most of us are not quite sure who it was. It had this picture of both sides basically saying: This is terrible, but we are going to do it anyway.

I think it is important to understand, first of all, what happened about the Senate, the unique. There is no other legislative body like it in the world. Unlike most legislative institutions, it does not function by majority rule. It actually requires a supermajority to move forward. That was by design; it was not an accident.

The people—the Founders, the Framers—created a system of government in which they wanted one branch of the legislature to be very vibrant, active, representative of the people. They represent districts, and they have 2-year terms. Then they created another Chamber which was different in nature. At the time, the U.S. Senate was designed, first of all, to represent the States. Where the House was the people’s House, the Senate was the place the States were represented.

The other thing they wanted to design was a place that was at some level possible to show the passion of the moment. They wanted a place where things would slow down for a moment, where we would take a deep breath and make sure we were doing the right thing. It was a wise course.

Our Republic is not perfect, but it has survived for over two centuries. In the process, it has given us the most dynamic, most vibrant, and, I believe, the most exceptional Nation in all of human history. While not perfect, the Senate has been a big part of that endeavor.

By the way, at the time, Senators were elected by the legislature; they were not even elected by people. Of course, that changed. I am not saying we should go back, but that is the way it was.

That Senate was also unique because it had this tradition of unlimited debate. We ran up against the problem, they got to debate as long as they wanted, and no one could stop them. Then, at some point, that began to get a little bit abused, so they created a rule that required a supermajority, and that supermajority was further watered down. Then we arrive here, over the last 4 years, to see what has happened.

Basically, what happens now is that there are two ways to stop debate, which is as a result of a procedure that was undertaken on the floor first by Senator Reid when he was the majority leader and now by the majority leader today on what is called the Executive Calendar, where there are nominations for the cabinet, ambassadors, the sub-cabinet, courts, and now the Supreme Court. No. 1 is by unanimous consent, when everybody agrees to it, or, No. 2, through 51 votes, a majority vote.

I think that is problematic in the long term because that is Neil Gorsuch, for I believe that in any other era and at any other time, he would not have just gotten 60 votes or even unanimous consent to stop debate; I think he would have gotten 60-plus votes, maybe 70 votes, to be on the Court. I think it is problematic because we do not know who is going to be the President in 15 years or what will be the state of our country. Yet, by a simple majority, without talking to a single person or getting a single vote from the other party or the other point of view, they are going to be able to nominate and confirm and place someone on the bench of the Supreme Court—to a lifetime appointment to a coequal branch of government—with the other party in the other side. I think, long term, that is problematic—in the case of Neil Gorsuch, not so much, but for the future of our country, I think it could be problematic.

The argument has been made that this has never been used before, so all of the stuff brings us back to where we once were. I think technically that is accurate, but this is not exactly where we once were. Where we once were was that there were people who understood who the power to do this. They got it. They understood that if they had wanted to, they could have forced the 60 votes. They understood they had the power to do it, but they chose not to exercise it. They chose to be judicious because they understood that with the power, there comes not just the power to act but sometimes the power not to act, to be responsible, to reserve certain powers for extraordinary moments when it truly is required. And over the years, it has been abused.

This is not going to be a speech where I stand up here and say that this is all on the Democrats, although I most certainly have had quarrels over some of the decisions that have been made by the other side of the aisle. I think it is a moment to be honest and say that we all have brought us here to this point, both sides, and it has required us to do that.

The reason I was ultimately able to vote for the change today is that I am convinced that no matter who would have won the Presidential election and no matter which party would have controlled this Chamber, that was going to happen. Both sides were going to do this because we have reached a point in our politics in America where what used to be done is no longer possible, and that has ultimately found its way onto the floor of the U.S. Senate.

Rules are rules, and ultimately the Republic will survive the change we have seen here today. I think the more troubling aspects are the things that have brought us to this point.

A couple of days ago, while at a lunch with my colleagues, I said that one of the things, I think, we are going to have to accept is that, quite frankly, the men and women who served in this Chamber before us—20, 30 years ago—were just better. They were human beings who, quite frankly, had deeply held beliefs. I do not know of any Member of this Chamber who was more conservative than Barry Goldwater or Jesse Helms. I do not know of any Member of this Chamber who was more progressive or liberal than Hubert Humphrey or Ted Kennedy or others. Yet somehow, despite their deeply held principles, these individuals were able to work together to prevent what happened here today.

The fact is, for both sides, that is not possible anymore. Today, our politics require us to use every measure possible, even if it is for symbolic purposes. That is just the way it is. That is not a reflection of a healthy, a normal, or even a bit of an exaggeration, but I think it is a moment to be honest and say that we all have brought us here to this point, both sides, and it has required us to do that.

Before people start writing or blogging: Well, look at all of these other times when the Senator from Florida—when I did some of these things—I admit it. I do not think there is a single person here with clean hands on any of this. I admit that I have been involved in efforts that, looking back on some of these things, perhaps, if we knew then what we know now, we would have done differently. I think it is important in life to recognize and learn from these experiences and to adapt them to the moment before us.

I think, moving forward, the biggest challenge we will face in the country is that our issues are not going to solve themselves. There will be different points of view from very different States, very different backgrounds, and very different points of view to be able to come together and solve some pretty big deals. It is ultimately not about silencing people or having them compromise their principles but about acknowledging that in our system of government, we have no choice but to do so.

We have no choice.

I think it also requires us to take a step back and understand that the people who are on the Supreme Court are not who we actually believe they are. They hold it deep, and they represent people who believe what they are saying. I say this as someone who will admit that, in my time of public service, I have not always complied as much as I wish I had. I try to. You certainly live and learn when you get to travel the country and meet as many people as I did over the last couple of years. I certainly think that impacts people profoundly.

I have a deeply held belief in limited government and free enterprise and a strong national defense and the core principles that define someone as a conservative. But I have also grown to appreciate and understand the people who share a different point of view—perhaps not as much as I hope to one day be able to understand and respect it, but certainly more than I once did, simply because the more people you meet, the more you learn about them, and the more you learn and understand where they are coming from.

Are we capable as a society to once again return to a moment where people who have different ideas can somehow try to figure out how to make things better, even if the solutions are not perfect? I hope so, because the fate of the most important country in human history is at stake. Are we capable of once again having debates, not that aren’t that frustrating but that time people may say things or even do things that they may regret, but certainly ones that at the end of the day are constructed for the purpose of solving a problem, not winning an election. I hope so, because if we don’t, we will have to explain to our children why we inherited the greatest country in human history and they inherited one that is in decline.

I don’t mean to exaggerate, because ultimately this is a rule change. We don’t vote on the Supreme Court every day, every week, every month. Sometimes we don’t vote on it for long periods of time. But I think it exposes a more fundamental challenge that we face today in American politics, and that we better confront sooner rather than later, and that we should all confront with the understanding and the knowledge that none of us come to it with clean hands.

We were reminded again this week by the images that emerged from Syria of what a dangerous world we live in, and we are reminded that the threats remain.

I ask people tonight—no matter who you write for, who you blog for, what political party you are a member of, or whom you vote for in November—to ask yourself a question and to be honest about the answer. If, God forbid—and I mean this, God forbid—there were another 9/11-style attack on the United States, how would we honestly react? Because September 11 was a scary day, and on that day I remember there weren’t Democrats or Republicans. Everyone was equally frightened, and everyone was angered. There was a sense of unity and purpose that we had not seen in a long time and have not seen since.

I honestly believe, sadly, that if today there were another 9/11-style attack on America, one of the first things we would see people doing is blaming each other, saying whose fault it was. You will have some people saying: Well, this terrorist attack happened because President Obama didn’t do enough to defeat the terrorists. And others would say: It happened because the Republicans and the new President, President Trump, has not done enough, or has done things to provoke them. I honestly believe that, I think that is what the debate would look like. I hope I am wrong.

Just think about how far we have come in almost 20 years, 15 years. That is the kind of debate I believe we would have. Think about how destructive that is.

I also think we would see a plethora of crazy, fake stories about what was behind it. And here is the craziest part: Some very smart and educated people would believe those stories because we have reached the point now where conspiracies are more interesting than facts.

I know that people may see this and say: Oh, I think you are exaggerating. Maybe, I hope so. But I honestly think the reason that this is actually making us—not us the Senate, but us, Americans—incapable of confronting problems.

I will just say this. What I really hope will happen soon is that we are going to get tired of fighting with other Americans all the time, that we will finally get fatigued with all of this constant fighting against other Americans. Americans are not your enemies. Quite frankly, I hope we have no enemies anywhere in the world, other than those who have to be, and I hope to be a part of seeing them taken out of power at some point for the horrible things they do. I hope we will reach a point where people are saying, I am just tired of constantly fighting with other Americans. We will have differences and we will debate them. Thank God that we have been given a republic where we have elections every 2 years and where we can have these debates. But, in the interim, whether we like it or not, none of us is going anywhere.

The vast and overwhelming majority of Americans will live in this country. This is their home and this is their country. We are going to have to figure out how to share and work together in this unique piece of land that we have been blessed with the opportunity to call home. If we don’t figure out a way to do that soon enough, then many of these issues that confront America will go unsolved, and not only will our people pay a price and our children pay a price, but the world will pay a price.

So I know that it is a lot to say about a topic as simple as a rule change and ultimately a vote for the Supreme Court, but I really think it exposed something deeper about American politics. We had been obliged rather than later, or we will all have to regret what it leads to, and that is the decline of the single greatest Nation in all of human history.

With that, I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, on a more upbeat note, the lady Gamecocks are national champions.

On April 2, this past Sunday, the University of South Carolina women’s basketball team beat Mississippi State 67 to 55 to end a magical season and become the national champions.

This is a magical year for the State of South Carolina. We have the Clemson Tigers, who are national football champs. Coastal Carolina University is the College World Series title holder for baseball. Now we have the lady Gamecocks as the national champs and in women’s basketball. Dustin Johnson is the No. 1 golfer in America, who hurt his back today and had to withdraw from the Masters. So that was bad.

This was a great year. I went to the University of South Carolina. I still have 4 years of eligibility for sports for a reason: I was no good. My colleague who is here actually played college football, and we are both Gamecocks fans.

Coach Dawn Staley came to South Carolina in 2008. She has been on three gold medal national championship teams as a player. She is now in the Hall of Fame for basketball and is one of two African-American female head coaches to win the national title in women’s basketball. She is the real deal. She is a wonderful lady.

A’ja Wilson, our dominating junior forward, was the MVP for the Final Four...
Four and SEC player of the year, and first team All American. All the girls played really, really hard.

The men’s basketball team made it to the Final Four and lost in a very tough contest. I could not be more proud of the University of South Carolina men’s basketball team.

Frank Martin, the men’s basketball coach, is the National Coach of the Year.

This is a special time in South Carolina. Gamecocks fans, you have been long suffering for a while, and our ship finally came in.

So congratulations to the lady Gamecocks. I can’t wait until next year. We always say that with a sense of dread, but I can’t wait until next year for South Carolina, Clemson, and every other sports team in South Carolina.

I yield to my colleague, who actually played college football, and I don’t think he has any eligibility left because he was good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, just in the vestiges of the questions that are left after we finish chatting about our great State and the great season our school had, there are two things I want to note. No. 1, Coach Frank Martin: coach of the year, a fantastic person, a great communicator, a strong, disciplined coach. It is very hard to misunderstand what he is saying.

Coach Staley: Absolutely, positively, unequivocally the best women’s basketball coach, in my opinion, ever, against UCONN—ever. Dawn Staley, 20 years ago, came within a single point of winning a national championship as a player. Can you just imagine being a single point short? And this must feel like redemption for our coach.

We are so proud of the fact that both of our coaches are producing student athletes, learning academically, striving on courts but prepared for life, for living. So we are excited about that.

I want to note as well that there have only been 10 times in NCAA history—10 times—that both the women’s and the men’s basketball teams from the same school were in the Final Four at the same time.

It is a good time to be a South Carolinian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. RUBIO. Mr. President, I have a question for the Senator from South Carolina. It is very important.

Is the Senator aware that Frank Martin, an incredible coach for the men’s basketball team is from Miami, FL?

Mr. SCOTT. I am aware of that. And that is relevant to you how?

Mr. RUBIO. I just wanted you to know.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUBIO. I will.

Mr. SCOTT. What State are you from, sir?

Mr. RUBIO. Florida.

Mr. SCOTT. In what part of Florida were you born and raised?

Mr. RUBIO. South Florida.

Mr. SCOTT. Have you been in any relationship with the coach before, Senator?

Mr. RUBIO. I have. Coach Martin is a good friend, and I think a testament to how much Florida has to contribute to South Carolina.

Mr. SCOTT. Having been there when you were in South Florida, I would say we made a big contribution to you too.

Mr. RUBIO. I would say to the Senator from South Carolina, South Carolina has gotten better results for Frank Martin than it did for me. But we are very proud of Coach Martin. I would just add that, given the litany of athletic success this year by the State of South Carolina, I find that to be highly suspicious. And I just speak about conspiracy theories, but statistically, it is very unlikely that a State would have that many championships. I am not calling for a congressional inquiry, but I think it is an interesting topic of conversation.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I would note that Senator Graham did have clarity in his purpose of identifying the fact that the State has only 4.7 million people in a country of 330 million people, and we have had two No. 1 football teams, that is true; the No. 1 baseball team, that is true; and the No. 1 football team in all of the Nation, Clemson University, that is true; and now the women’s basketball champions, and that is true as well. However, I would point out that we were able to show you a wonderful experience as well in the State of South Carolina, and I hope that one day when you retire from politics, you and your lovely wife will join us and enjoy the No. 1 golf, that is true; the No. 1 baseball team, that is true; and the No. 1 football team in all of the Nation, Clemson University, that is true; and now the women’s basketball champions, and that is true as well. However, I would point out that we were able to show you a wonderful experience as well in the State of South Carolina, and I hope that one day when you retire from politics, you and your lovely wife will join us and enjoy the No. 1 golf, that is true; the No. 1 baseball team, that is true; and the No. 1 football team in all of the Nation, Clemson University, that is true; and now the women’s basketball champions, and that is true as well.

Mr. RUBIO. I was going to say, I am not going to invoke that rule.

Mr. SCOTT. Rule XIX.

Mr. RUBIO. I think it is a good opportunity to say nothing—but congratulations, and we will be back.

Mr. SCOTT. In a decade. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. President, I have listened over the last several weeks to accusations and a type of character destruction much like the campaign, quite frankly, of a good judge and a good man: Neil Gorsuch.

It is remarkable to me to see that the debate has become more about character destruction than it has been about policy differences. I understand there are policy differences, but why does it have to come to this?

In the past few weeks, I have heard on this floor that Neil Gorsuch shouldn’t be a Justice on the Supreme Court because he isn’t an extraordinary person. Much more, Senator Scott and I both had a chance to interact with him on a number of occasions. I don’t mean to single them out among all of the other suspicious athletic accomplishments in South Carolina that are certainly true; nothing but I would say, with Frank, one of the things that really impresses me is not what he does with these young men on the court but the kind of influence he is in their lives off the court and the impact he has had. We won a basketball championship in Miami and won State championships there. He comes from a hard-working family of Cuban exiles who made their home in South Florida. So we are very, very proud of what he has achieved. But what I am most proud of is the way Coach Martin has been able to influence those young men.

He did defeat the Florida Gators to make it to the final four, and I was not happy about that. But I would say this—and I have said it to others—if the Florida Gators had to lose, I would want it to be to Frank Martin because of the extraordinary work he does. So I can’t wait to see which Florida university hires him away.

Thank you.

Mr. SCOTT. Before Senator Rubio walks off the floor, having had the opportunity to listen to him over a number of years, he is eloquent. He is inspiring. Sometimes he is just dead wrong. Coach Martin will be staying at the University of South Carolina, without any question at all.

Let me put the suspicions to rest. The reality is that good teams are made up of good people. The fact that we have great recruiters in the State of South Carolina is indicative of the fact that we have a lot of titles in our State.

So I will be praying for the Senator’s State to succeed during the hurricane season, without any question, and to be consistently behind the State of South Carolina in every athletic event in which we have a competition, wherever there is a competition. And I want Senator Graham to say nothing. I want it to be to Frank Martin because that is true.

Mr. RUBIO. Florida.

Mr. RUBIO. Florida.
All of these reasons have been given for a historic change in Senate tradition not to give a Supreme Court Justice an up-or-down vote. Block him on a procedural motion; for the first time ever, block a Supreme Court Justice on a procedural motion with a partisan vote.

Let me take these one at a time as I walk through this.

No. 1, I heard constantly that he is not independent from President Trump. As far as I know, he has never even met President Trump before. This didn't seem to be a standard, to be independent from the current sitting President.

Let me give an example: Justice Elena Kagan, who is clearly qualified as a legal mind, but I would say Republicans have serious policy differences with her. Justice Kagan was allowed to have had no standard that they had to be independent from the President. If they had a standard like that, Justice Kagan would have never been on the bench. Why do I say that?

On April 6, 2017, President Obama nominated Elena Kagan to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. From 1997 to 1999, she served as Deputy Assistant to the President for Domestic Policy and was Deputy Director of the Domestic Policy Council for President Clinton. In 2009, she was confirmed Solicitor General of the United States for President Obama. She worked for President Obama in the Obama White House as his Solicitor General and then was taken directly out of the White House and put on the Supreme Court.

I would say that is not independent from the President. So this mythology, this narrative, this Court Justice nominee needs to be independent from the President clearly was not there when Elena Kagan was being heard.

It is interesting to me that one of the most talked about decisions from Judge Gorsuch was a Chevron decision that he put out. The whole crux of that decision was the independence of the executive branch, the legislative branch, and the judicial branch. Let me just read a few paragraphs from the decision he wrote. He wrote this:

For whatever the agency may be doing under Chevron, the problem remains that courts are not fulfilling their duty to interpret the law and declare invalid agency actions inconsistent with those interpretations in the cases and controversies that come before them. A duty expressly assigned to them by the APA [Administrative Procedures Act] and one often likely compelled by the Constitution itself. That’s a problem for the judiciary. And it is a problem for the people whose liberties may now be impaired not by an independent decisionmaker seeking to declare the law’s meaning as fairly as possible—rather promised to them by law—but by an avowedly politicized administrative agent seeking to pursue whatever policy whim may rule the day. Those problems remain uncured by this line of reply.

In other words, the judiciary needs to have oversight of the executive agency in what they put out as far as agency rulings, not allowing the White House or any agency to just make any decision they like. He continued writing:

Maybe as troubling, this line of reply invites a nest of questions even taken on its own terms. Chevron says that we should infer from any statutory ambiguity Congress’s “intent” to “delegate” its “legislative authority” to the executive to make “reasonable” policy choices. But where exactly has Congress expressed this intent? Trying to infer the intentions of an institutional composed of 535 members is a notoriously difficult task. In all the accusations that he is not independent of the President, in one of his most famous opinions, he declares that we absolutely need to have independence from the White House—and have a clear separation of powers between judiciary, legislative, and executive. That actually does not stand up to simple muster. So the first thing falls: no independence from the President.

The second principle which came up often was that he was handpicked by far-right groups. There were all these groups that handpicked him, so somehow that made it horrible that these different groups would actually try to support him.

I go back to Justice Kagan. Again, that wasn’t the standard at that time, and I could use numerous judges through that process. Elena Kagan was supported by the AFL-CIO, by the Human Rights Campaign, by numerous environmental organizations like WildEarth Guardians, Sierra Club, and the National Organization for Women. She had a lot of different liberal or progressive groups that were very outspoken in support of and helping to push her nomination.

There is nothing wrong with that. She was a nominee who was actively engaged in White House politics; she was actively engaged in Democratic campaigns; and a foot soldier for the Dukakis campaign, she was a Democratic activist, and it was well known. That did not preclude her from getting an up-or-down vote for the Supreme Court because she is sitting on the Supreme Court today. There was no cloture vote, mandate on requirement for a 60-vote threshold as there was pushed by this minority.

This issue that somehow you can’t be handpicked or that having some groups that would support you from the outside somehow precludes you from being a serious consideration is not legitimate, and everyone knows it.

I have also heard individuals out there saying that he is for torture, he is against privacy, he hates truckers, he will step on the little guy, he is only for big corporations, and he is not mainstream.

Here is the problem: When you actually look at the history, it is very different from that. Of the 2,700 cases that Judge Gorsuch has been involved in, in the 10½ years he has been on the Tenth Circuit, he has been overturned in his opinions once—once in 2,700 cases; 97 percent of the time his cases were set- tled unanimously, and 99 percent of the time he voted with the majority.

Lest you don’t know the Tenth Circuit as we know the Tenth Circuit in Oklahoma, because it is the circuit for our State, the majority of the judges on the Tenth Circuit are judges selected by President Carter, President Clinton, and President Obama. They hold the majority in the Tenth Circuit. So to say that he voted with them in the majority 99 percent of the time would be to say that President Clinton, and Obama appointees also apparently had these radical ideas. It is just not consistent with the facts.

Then I have heard of late that the President should have engaged with Senate leadership on both sides of the aisle to be asked for their approval of the nominee before that nominee was ever brought. Well, I don’t know if that has ever been a requirement. There have been times that Presidents in the past have had complete cooperation on both sides of the aisle. Fine, but it is certainly not a requirement of the Constitution, and it certainly doesn’t preclude a nomination.

It is interesting to me that Judge Gorsuch offered to meet with 100 Senators one-on-one, face-to-face. Only 80 of them accepted his offer; 20 of them refused to even meet with him face-to-face. He did 4 days of hearings in the Judiciary Committee, 4 solid, long days, where he answered every possible question he could answer.

He has had extensive background checks. Everyone has gone through every piece of everything they could find that has ever been written. In fact, the latest new accusation is they found a couple of places where what he wrote seemed to look strangely like something else someone else wrote—which, when I saw it and read the side-by-side on it, I thought: He forgot to do an annotation. There were all these annotations he has written. In the tens of thousands of annotations that he did, he didn’t do a couple of them. Somehow that doesn’t seem to rise to the level that he shouldn’t be on the Supreme Court—that in the tens of thousands of annotations he put there, he might have missed a couple.

I would challenge anyone serving in this body, to say: You can serve only if you have never missed a single footnote on any paper you ever wrote. I would say: Those whose glass houses probably shouldn’t throw stones because we have all had times like that.

He is a solid jurist. I believe he will do a good job. I mean, when I sat down in his office, we looked at each other face-to-face, and I went through multitudes of hard questions with him, trying to determine his judicial philosophy, seeking one simple thing: Will you interpret the law as the law—not with personal opinion but try to put the law on the bench?
good policy. Across the street at the Supreme Court, it is about one thing: What does the law say and what did it mean when it was written?

The Constitution and law were not living documents. They do live in the sense that if you want to make changes in the Constitution, you amend the Constitution and you make changes to it. You can’t suddenly say it meant one thing one day but culture has changed and now it means something new.

If you need new law, this body passes new law on the street, they read the law and ask: What does it mean? It is that straightforward.

I look forward to having a jurist on the Supreme Court as an Associate Justice who says: I may not even like all my opinions and you may not like all my opinions, but I am going to follow the law, and what the law says is what we are going to do.

I think that is the best we can ask from a Supreme Court Justice, and I think it would be unfair to be able to get him an up-or-down vote. I have to tell you, I am profoundly disappointed that the Senate, to get a simple up-or-down vote, had to go through all of this just to be able to do what we have always done. History does not need or want this kind of differences or policy or politics, this body has always said the President, for his nomination, should get an up-or-down vote when they go through the process.

We are going to do that tomorrow. We will call Judge Gorsuch on the bench, and we are ready for him to go to work.

Mr. President, I yield back.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PERDUE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PERDUE. Mr. President, it is humbling to be on the floor of the U.S. Senate with colleagues like Senator LANKFORD from Oklahoma. It is an honor to listen to his words, to his heart, on an issue like today because this is, I believe, a historic day.

On January 31 of this year, I had the great honor of being invited to the White House when President Donald Trump announced his nominee for Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, Judge Neil Gorsuch. It was a professional rollout of this nomination, but it spoke more to the man, the individual, Judge Gorsuch, than it did to the circumstance surrounding it.

Today, I want to again discuss Judge Gorsuch’s nomination and the 200-plus years of historical precedent put on the line today. As an outsider of this political process, it is clear to me what is going on here. It really has nothing to do with Judge Gorsuch.

The minority party today abandoned 230 years of tradition because of politics, in my opinion. Never before in the U.S. history has a purely partisan filibuster killed a Supreme Court nomination. Never before, in the history of our country, has a partisan filibuster killed a district judge nomination. Never before, and until 2003, has a partisan filibuster killed a circuit judge nomination.

Today, I think it is clear to me what is going on here. As an outsider of this political process, it is clear to me what is going on here. Never before in the 230 years of tradition because of politics, it is clear to me what is going on here. Never before in the 230 years of tradition because of politics, it is clear to me what is going on here.
minds from both sides of the aisle agree.

Harvard Law School Professor Noah Feldman, himself no conservative, called it a "truly terrible idea" to try to force Judge Gorsuch, or any judge for that matter, to base their decisions on the principles involved. Beyond a shadow of a doubt, I know that Judge Gorsuch fully understands that the job of a judge is to interpret, not make, the law.

As he himself said, "A judge who likes every result he reaches is very likely a bad judge, reaching for results he prefers rather than those the law compels."

This commitment to impartiality, regardless of those involved in individual cases, is further evidence his nomination should be confirmed rather than filibustered to death like we have seen today.

Judge Gorsuch’s record is evidence enough that he is an impartial judge committed to the Constitution. The opposition has said he is outside the mainstream. That also doesn’t hold up.

In 97 percent of his 2,700 cases, judges who also heard the cases unanimously ruled with Judge Gorsuch. In 99 percent of his cases, he was not a dissenting vote. The other side is consistent in saying he is not mainstream. Seriously? How much more mainstream does he have to be?

To that point, Judge Gorsuch has drawn both liberals and conservatives alike. Former President Obama’s Acting Solicitor General called Judge Gorsuch “an extraordinary judge and man.”

He is not alone in that assessment of Judge Gorsuch. Mainstream media outlets across the country have praised this nominee to the Supreme Court.

Recently, the USA Today Editorial Board wrote: “Gorsuch’s credentials are impeccable... he might well show the high potential that the nation needs at this moment in its history.”

The Washington Post’s Editorial Board wrote:

We are likely to disagree with Mr. Gorsuch on a variety of major legal questions. That is different from saying that he is unfit to serve.

The Wall Street Journal Editorial Board wrote: “No one can replace Antonin Scalia on the Supreme Court, but President Trump has made an excellent attempt by nominating appellate Judge Neil Gorsuch as the ninth justice.”

As I have noted, the minority party’s move to filibuster Judge Gorsuch is not rooted in any actual precedent in the U.S. Senate. It also clearly has nothing to do with Judge Gorsuch himself. By any and all objective measure, he is a mainstream, well-qualified nominee to the U.S. Supreme Court.

That is a point agreed upon by liberals and conservatives alike. Yet here we are today throwing out almost 230 years of tradition, purely because of politics. This body must rise above the self-manufactured gridlock.

Our last President, according to constitutional law professor Jonathan Turley, created a constitutional crisis. It was caused by shutting down the Senate and creating the fourth arm of government, the regulators, and threatening the very balance of our three-branch system. It allowed the President, through regulatory mandates and Executive orders, to basically fundamentally change the direction of the country without Congress.

Given this threat to the Constitution, at this point in our history, we absolutely need a jurist on the Supreme Court who will bring a balanced view and impartial commitment to the rule of law. It is imperative we confirm Judge Neil Gorsuch tomorrow—a principled, thoughtful jurist—to the U.S. Supreme Court.

If we can’t confirm this individual, who is absolutely in the middle of the profile agreed to by past Democrats and Republicans alike, who in the world will we ever be able to confirm?

Seriously, if we can’t get together on this individual, who is in the mainstream in the middle of the profile? How in the world are we ever going to get through all the other critical issues that are before this body? Bipartisan compromise is what this body was built on. I call on my colleagues to put self-interest and even party interest aside for the nation’s interests.

I count it an honor to be in this body. It is a sobering responsibility, but I am very optimistic when men or women of the character of a Neil Gorsuch are willing to go through this grueling exercise that we put them through in order to serve. Because of that, I am proud tonight to be a part of a majority that stood up and precluded this happening.

I am so excited that tomorrow we will confirm Neil Gorsuch as the next Associate Justice to the United States Supreme Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. YOUNG). The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support again for Judge Neil Gorsuch. I spoke on the floor the other day about Judge Gorsuch. I just heard my colleague from Georgia talk about him, and he did a terrific job.

This guy, Neil Gorsuch, is the right person for the job. He is qualified. He is smart and he is fair, and a bipartisan majority of the Senate will vote for this worthy candidate tomorrow. Let me underscore that. A bipartisan majority of the Senate will vote for this worthy candidate tomorrow. He will end up getting on the Court.

I must tell you that I regret that some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle refused to provide him that an up-or-down vote, which is what we had gone through the process we had to go through today. As someone who has gone through two Senate confirmations myself, I know they are not always easy. But I will tell you, it is a whole lot better for this institution and our country when we figure out ways to work together—in this case, to continue a Senate tradition of allowing up-or-down votes.

I like to work across the aisle. I have done that throughout my career. I can point to 50 bills I authored or co-authored that have become law in the last 6 years. They were bipartisan, by my definition, because they got through this body and were signed into law by President Obama. I have voted for President Obama’s nominees before President Trump. When President Obama had a well-qualified judge here on the floor, I voted for that judge. I voted for Loretta Lynch. That was not an easy vote. I took heat for it back home because I thought she was well-qualified. I think that is what we ought to do in this body.

I am disappointed in the situation we are in. I think we could have followed more than 200 years of Senate tradition and not allowed for a partisan filibuster to try to block this nomination. We chose not to do that in this body. Never in the history of this body has there been a successful partisan filibuster of a Supreme Court judge—never. Some of my colleagues said: How about Abe Fortas? That was several decades ago, and that was bipartisan. Abe Fortas was a Supreme Court Justice who had some ethics issues, and he actually dropped out of trying to get the nomination because of it. But never have we stood up as Republicans—or stood up as Democrats—and blocked a nominee by using the filibuster. It has just not been the tradition.

Instead, it has been to allow an up-or-down vote—a majority vote. There are two Justices on the Supreme Court right now who got confirmed with less than 60 votes. One is Sonia Sotomayor, who was also rejected by a number of Republicans. She was given an up-or-down vote. I voted for her. She got confirmed by 58 votes only 10 years ago. So these nominees were not filibustered.

By the way, President Obama’s nominees, Elena Kagan and Justice Alito, were not filibustered by Republicans. They were given an up-or-down vote. In the history of the Senate, 12 nominations have been defeated on the floor, but, again, never a successful partisan filibuster. Even Judge Robert Bork—some of you remember that nomination. It was very controversial. His nomination was defeated in 1987. He was a Reagan appointee. But he wasn’t filibustered. They had an up-or-down vote, and he was voted down.

I have these objections to Judge Gorsuch that would rise to that level where we want to say that over 200 years of Senate tradition ought to be shunted aside and we ought to stop this man? What are those objections? I must say that I have listened to the floor debate and talked to some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. I made my case. They made their case. I just don’t think this man is not qualified. He was a law clerk for a decade and a successful lawyer in the private sector. Of course, he has been a Federal judge for a decade. So we can look at his record.

My colleague from Georgia just talked about that record. It is why the American Bar Association—a group not known to be a conservative body—declared that he was “well qualified.” They unanimously declared him to get their highest rating of “well qualified.” This is what they said about him. They said:

Based on the writings, interviews, and analyses we were able to reach our rating, we discerned that Judge Gorsuch believes strongly in the independence of the judicial branch of government, and we predict that he will be a strong but respectful voice in protecting it.

That is why the American Bar Association gave him their highest rating. Not qualified? By the way, nobody objected—nobody—for any reason, to his nomination to serve as a Federal judge, to be a circuit court judge, a level just below the Supreme Court, back in 2006. Not a single Senator objected. By the way, those Senators included Senator Hillary Clinton. Senator Barack Obama, Senator Joe Biden, and a number of Senators, of course, who are still here today with us, who chose to filibuster this nomination. So I don’t know.

I heard some of my colleagues talk about some of his decisions. They have picked a few of his decisions as judge over the past 10 years and said they didn’t like the outcome, and that is why he is not qualified to sit on the Supreme Court. I have a couple of concerns with that argument. One, Judge Gorsuch has decided over 2,700 cases. I am sure we can all find one or two of these we didn’t like. That is true for any judge. As I said, I voted for a number of President Obama’s nominees, and I voted against others based on the merits and based on their qualifications. It didn’t mean I agreed with them—trust me—or disagreed with them on everything. The odds are very good that you agree with Judge Gorsuch’s decisions a lot more than you disagree with them. You know why? Because the odds are really good that you agreed with them. Let’s try 97 percent, because 97 percent is the number of his decisions that were unanimous with the other judges on a three-judge panel. So 97 percent of the time, his decisions were unanimous.

What about his three-judge panel decisions? Well, it is usually bipartisan in the sense that it is nominees who have been nominated by different Presidents of different parties. In the case of his circuit court, there is Judge Paul Kelly, who was appointed by President George H.W. Bush. There have also been several of his colleagues who were appointed by President Bill Clinton. Judge Gorsuch himself, in his testimony that he was on judge panels. He presided with Judge William Holloway, who was appointed by President Lyndon B. Johnson. So these three-judge panels tend to have judges that are appointed under Republicans and Democrats alike—97 percent of the time unanimous. And 98 percent of the time, his decisions were in the majority.

So again, I think the odds are pretty good that we are going to agree with Judge Gorsuch a lot more than we disagree when we look at his cases. He is a consensus builder. He is a guy who figures out how to come to a decision people agree with on different sides of the aisle, and from different points of view. That is what his record is. Actually, that doesn’t surprise me at all, because he clerked in the Supreme Court for two Justices. One was Byron White, who was under Justice Anthony Kennedy. Those are two Justices who get a lot of heat. Byron White did, and Anthony Kennedy does—from both sides. Why? Because they tend to be in the middle. They write a lot of decisions and some decisions. They tend to be that fifth vote on a 5-to-4 decision. That is whom he clerked for.

To note that somehow this guy shouldn’t be confirmed for the Supreme Court because of one or two decisions just doesn’t seem to be legitimate to me. This is a guy who had thousands of decisions, and the vast majority were 98 percent or 97 percent unanimous. He had one decision that was appealed to the Supreme Court because the litigants must have thought he was wrong. They took it to the Supreme Court to correct him. What happened? The Supreme Court affirmed it. They agreed with Judge Gorsuch.

I don’t know whom you could find out there among judges who has a stronger record. In every case, somebody wins and somebody loses. I get that. Think about this: Out of Judge Gorsuch’s 180 written opinions, only one has ever been appealed to the Supreme Court—wow. And they agreed with his ruling.

He made it clear he makes decisions not based on the outcome he likes, but what the law says or the Constitution says. He has said that his job is not to rewrite the law. He goes on to say:

"Sometimes the answers follow us home and reach aren’t ones we would personally prefer. I think President Lincoln was right. “The people will have ceased to be their own rulers.” I think that is the deeper issue here."

I think President Lincoln was right. When judges become legislators, the people do have less of a voice. Judge Gorsuch himself summed it up. He said: "If judges were just secret legislators, declaring not what the law is but what they would like it to be, the very idea of government by the people and for the people would be at risk." I think that is the deeper issue here.

I think that is the kind of judge we should want. Judge Gorsuch and I had the chance to sit down and talk about this philosophy. We talked about his background and his qualifications. I asked him some very tough questions, and he didn’t ask different questions, and he didn’t ask different questions. His hearings were something that all Americans had the opportunity to watch. He did a great job, in my view, because he did focus on how he believes that his job is not to allow his personal beliefs to guide him but, rather, upholding the law as written and the Constitution.

Interesting perspective. He is saying: Hey, if you like all your decisions, you probably not a very good judge because your personal beliefs aren’t always going to be consistent with what the law says or the Constitution says. He goes on to say:

"I’ve ruled for disabled students, for prisoners, for the accusing, for the accused, against civil rights violations, and for undocumented immigrants. Sometimes, too, I’ve ruled against such persons. My decisions have never reflected a judgment about the people before me, only a judgment of the law and the facts as at issue in each particular case."

Again, it seems to me that is the kind of person you want on the court. President Lincoln was right. It is not about ruling in favor or against somebody because you like them or don’t like them. It is about applying what the law says. As he said in his testimony recently, his philosophy is to try 97 percent, because 97 percent is the number of his decisions that were unanimous.
I think that approach is a big reason he has earned the respect of lawyers and judges from across the spectrum, by the way. If you look at the people who say this guy is a great judge, it goes all the way across the political spectrum.

Professor Laurence Tribe of Harvard Law School, an advisor to former President Obama, said Judge Gorsuch is “a brilliant, terrific guy who would do the Court’s work with distinction.” Those of you who know Laurence Tribe are well-regarded, considered to be a liberal thinker on many issues. But he has looked at the guy, and he has looked at his record. He knows him. He says he is brilliant, terrific, and will do the Court’s work with distinction.

Neal Katyal—you have heard about him. He was the Acting Solicitor General for President Obama, a guy who knows a thing or two about arguing before the Supreme Court. He said Judge Gorsuch should give the American people confidence that he will not compromise principle to favor the President who appointed him. . . . He’s a fair and decent man.”

This goes to what the ABA said about him: Independent. He will protect the independence of the judiciary.

Look, he is smart, no question about it. You saw him answer those questions. You have seen his record. He is qualified, as we talked about. He is certainly a mainstream judge, when you look at his opinions—98 percent of the time in the majority, 97 percent of the time unanimous. Three-judge panels. He has the support—the bipartisan support—of a majority of the Senate.

By the way, the American people, as they have plugged into this, also think he ought to be confirmed. There is a recent poll by the Huffington Post, which is not considered a conservative newspaper or entity. They said the people want us to confirm Neil Gorsuch by a 17-point margin. Why? Because they watched him. They looked at the guy. They saw the hearings. They looked at his record. People believe he is the right person to represent them on the Supreme Court.

So, again, while I am disappointed this process has become so polarized and divisive here in this body, I am glad to see this good man take a seat in our Nation’s highest Court. I believe he deserves our support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate be in a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO FREY TODD

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, today it is my privilege to celebrate the retirement of Frey Todd, the “Mayor for Life” of Eubank, KY.

In the last census, Eubank was home to fewer than 400 Kentuckians, but despite their small number, the Eubank community is proud of their town and their mayor.

Since the 1960s, Todd has served his community on the town board. He spent 10 years as the chair of the board, and when Kentucky reorganized municipal governments in 1982 and the position of mayor became available, he proudly was elected its first mayor.

And every 4 years since, Todd has been elected by his constituents to be their mayor.

Over his 35-year tenure as mayor, Todd has overseen major projects like the construction of the senior citizens center and the Eubank Water System.

In a small town like Eubank, the people and their government are almost as close as family. Throughout his entire career, Mayor Todd has shown his passion for his constituents, and they have returned the affection.

At the age of 82, Todd announced his retirement from public service. I would like to join with all the people of Eubank to thank him for his years of dedication and congratulate him on an impressive career.

ARMS SALES NOTIFICATION

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive prior notice of certain proposed arms sales as defined by that statute. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with the committee’s intention to see that relevant information is available to the full Senate, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the notifications which may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with the committee’s intention to see that relevant information is available to the full Senate, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the notifications which may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY

COOPERATION AGENCY,

Arlington, VA.

Hon. BOB CORKER,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act, as amended, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 16-48, concerning the Army Corps of Engineers’ proposed Letter(s) of Offer and Acceptance for the sale for airbase construction and services estimated to cost $319 million. After this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to issue a news release to notify the public of this proposed sale.

Sincerely,

J.W. RIXEY,
Vice Admiral, USN, Director.

TRANSMITTAL NO. 16-48
Notice of Proposed Letter of Offer Pursuant to Section 36(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act, as amended

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Government of Kuwait.

(ii) Total Estimated Value: $319 million.

(iii) Description and Quantity or Quanti-ty of Articles or Services under Consideration for Purchase:
Non-MDE: Design, construction, and procurement of key airfield operations, command and control, readiness, sustainment, and life support facilities for the Al Mubarak Airbase in Kuwait. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) will provide project management, engineering services, technical support, facility and infrastructure assessments, surveys, planning, programming, design, acquisition, contract administration, construction management, and other technical services for the construction of facilities and infrastructure for the airbase. The overall project includes, among other features, a main operations center, hangars, training facilities, warehouses, support facilities, and other infrastructure required for a fully functioning airbase.

(iv) Military Department: U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) (HEB).

(v) Prior Related Cases, if any: N.A.

(vi) Sales Commission. Fee, etc., Paid. Off- fered or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vii) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Article or Defense Service Pursued to be Sold: None.

Government of Kuwait—Facilities and Infrastructure Construction Support Service

The Government of Kuwait has requested permission for the possible sale for the design, construction, and procurement of key airfield operations, command and control, readiness, sustainment, and life support facilities for the Al Mubarak Airbase. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) will provide project management, engineering services, technical support, facility and infrastructure assessments, surveys, planning, programming, design, acquisition, contract administration, construction management, and other technical services for the construction of facilities and infrastructure for the airbase. The overall project includes, among other features, a main operations center, hangars, training facilities, warehouses, support facilities, and other infrastructure required for a fully functioning airbase. The estimated total cost is $319 million.

The proposed sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security of the United States by supporting the infrastructure needs of a friendly country which has been, and continues to be, an important force for political stability and economic progress in the Middle East.

The facilities being constructed are similar to other facilities built in the past by USACE in other Middle Eastern countries. These facilities replace existing facilities and will provide additional accommodations to the Kuwait Air Force. The new airbase will ensure the continued readiness of the Kuwait Air Force and allow for the continued education of current and future Kuwait Air Force personnel. The construction of this airbase will enable Kuwait to enhance the operational effectiveness of its military and promote security and stability throughout Kuwait. Kuwait will have no difficulty absorbing this additional capability into its armed forces.

The proposed sale of this infrastructure and support will not alter the basic military balance in the region. USACE is the principal organization that will direct and manage this program. USACE will provide services through both in-house personnel and contract services. The estimated cost to the Government and contractor representatives to be assigned to Kuwait to implement the provisions of this proposed sale will be determined as a result of program definition.

There are no known offset agreements proposed in connection with this potential sale.
There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this proposed sale. All defense articles and services listed in this transmittal are authorized for release

H.J. RES. 66 AND H.J. RES. 67
Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, the easiest way for workers to save the addition-als needed for retirement is through work-based retirement plans. When workers have access to work-based plans, the vast majority of them choose to participate, but many Americans do not work for an employer that offers such a plan. According to AARP, 55 million private-sector workers ages 18 to 64 had no ability to save for retirement through an employer-sponsored plan in 2013. Of those workers, 2.2 million lived in Pennsylvania.

In response, numerous States and multiple cities have considered programs that would give residents better access to retirement savings through private employee-sponsored retirement savings accounts.

One of the most important elements of economic security for the middle class is retirement security. Millions of Americans ask, "Will I have enough money saved to retire and retire comfortably?" The answer to that question for too many Pennsylvanians is no.
Looking at these facts, Philadelphia took action and began exploring ways to expand access to saving for our workers. Through these resolutions, Republicans will severely undermine the efforts of States to ex-

The programs States and cities are pursuing are simple, low-cost, and voltary. Most would simply require that employers that do not currently offer a plan facilitate voluntary employee contributions to an Individual Retirement Account. Our State and local governments are our idea incubators.
Many of our States and cities, including Philadelphia, want to make it easier for workers to save for retirement. In repealing this guidance, Re-

COMBATING GLOBAL CORRUPTION ACT

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, this week, I introduced, along with Senators BLUMENTHAL, COLLINS, MERKLEY, BOOK-ER, and LEAHY, the Combating Global Corruption Act of 2017. Global corruption is a fundamental obstacle to peace, prosperity, and human rights. It fuels transnational criminal networks and violent extremism, and combats it should be elevated and prioritized across our foreign policy efforts.

importance of addressing corruption because it undermines public confidence in government institutions and fosters resentment and instability.

There is growing recognition across the United States and around the world that corruption poses a major threat to international security and stability.
The countries and names might be different, but the characteristics and the impact on innocent people are the same.

The bribery scandal surrounding the huge Brazilian construction firm Odebrecht has tarnished politicians and governments from Peru to Columbia to Mexico. Rampant corruption in oil-rich Angola is depriving children of a quality education and contributing to the highest child mortality rate in the world. While progress is now being made, extensive corruption in Afghanistan resulted in billions of dollars of assistance winding up in the pockets of crookled elites.

The connections are clear: Where there are high levels of corruption, we find fragile states, political instability, and people suffering from hunger and violence.

Corruption is a global problem, but its consequences take the harshest toll at the local level, and it is very tough to fight. The problem of corruption, and the disruption and suffering it causes, involves many corrupt actors, from government officials to businessmen, from law enforcement and military personnel to street gangs. Corruption is a system that operates via extensive, entrenched networks in both the public and private sectors.

Two months ago, the US reported that corruption is the life-

the revolution of the Arab Spring and Ukraine began, in part, as deter-rations, in Moscow, St. Petersburg, and across the country in recent weeks reflected the ongoing resistance of the Russian people to government corruption.
Hundreds were arrested. Prominent anticorruption activist Ildar Dadin, who has already spent over a year in prison for earlier protests, was among those arrested.

Corruption feeds the destructive fire of criminal networks and transnational crime. Citizens lose faith in the social compact between governments and the people. In Venezuela, we have seen how rampant corruption has collapsed the country's economy, sparked a humanitarian crisis, and produced chains of money laundering that span several continents. The ongoing crisis there now threatens to collapse the last few remnants of the rule of law.

Corruption also fuels violence by security forces. South Sudan's kleptocrats have either failed to pay or delayed salary payments to their soldiers who have in turn taken out their grievances, murdering and burning their homes, looting and burning their homes, and engaging in other violent crime.

We should take heart that in just the past 2 years, popular protests against corruption have broken out in Iraq, Azerbaijan, Brazil, Guatemala, Honduras, Lebanon, Malaysia, Moldova, and Venezuela. In Romania, efforts to weaken anticorruption laws there prompted an estimated 500,000 protesters to take to the streets last month, even after the government pealed its decree, showing the degree to which citizens are fed up with graft and determined to push back. These were the largest demonstrations since the fall of communism.

We know that corruption also is fueling violent extremism, and combatting it should be elevated and prioritized within our foreign policy efforts.

We know that corruption is the life-

revolutions have degenerated into some of the chief security challenges we confront now—Russian aggression in Ukraine, 6 years of slaughter in Syria, the implosion of Libya, a brutal war in Yemen, the fraying of Iraq, and an expansive insurgency in Egypt.

Of course, corruption fuels radical extremism and terrorism, too; it gives credibility to militant religious extremists and helps them gain recruits and increasing footholds in Afghanistan and Iraq to Pakistan, Central Asia, Africa, and Latin America. It may seem like a spurious example, but it can be persuasive to a young Nigerian man whose sister was molested by a teacher as the cost for attending school.

Let’s be clear eye. Any fight against corruption will be long-term and difficult. It is a fight against powerful people, powerful companies, and powerful interests. It is about changing a mindset and a culture as much as it is about changing and enforcing laws.

As my colleagues and constituents know, my attention has long been focused on fighting corruption. I introduced the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act to target human rights abusers and corrupt individuals around the globe who threaten the rule of law and deny fundamental freedoms, but the problem is so big—we simply have to do more.

This is why this week I introduced bipartisan support the Combating Global Corruption Act of 2017 in the United States.

We must meet the scale of entrenched corruption with greater resolve and commitment. To do that, I believe we must focus on three things which I will lay out in my legislation.

First, we must institutionalize the fight against corruption as a national security priority. In my bill, the State Department, including the Trafficking in Persons Report, which takes a close look at each country’s efforts to combat corruption. That model, which has effectively advanced the effort to combat modern day slavery, will similarly embed the issue of corruption in our collective work, so that we hold governments to account.

The bill establishes minimum standards for combating corruption—standards that should be every government’s duty to its citizens. These include whether a country has laws that recognize corrupt acts for the crimes they are—violations of the people’s trust—and that come with serious penalties for breaking that trust; whether an independent judiciary decides corruption cases, free from influence and abuse; whether there is support for civil society organizations that are the watchdogs of integrity against would-be thieves of the state. This bill aims to build anticorruption DNA into the fabric of our government.

Second, the bill would improve the way we look at our own foreign and security assistance, and promote more transparency—let in some daylight. For countries that fall short on their corruption efforts, the bill calls for an assessment of the risk of corruption for our foreign assistance and steps to combat corruption, including the ability to claw back any funds diverted from the intended purpose, or terminate compromised programs. American taxpayers should know how our foreign assistance is spent, and they should feel confident that we are doing the kind of risk assessments, analysis, and oversight that ensure our assistance to other countries is having the effect we want it to have.

Third, the bill consolidates information about anticorruption efforts abroad and pushes it online, where citizens can see the numbers and the programs. That kind of transparency is essential to open government, but in my experience, it also has the effect of making us better at self-policing our work. We can use the data to capture emerging trends, and improve our decisionmaking.

I urge my colleagues to join me and the bipartisan cosponsors of this legislation in this effort. The success of our diplomacy, and the ultimate impact of our international security efforts depend on it.

Thank you.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON CONGRESS ON THE LIBRARY

RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, on April 6, 2017, the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library organized, elected a chairman, a vice chairman, and adopted committee rules for the 115th Congress. Members of the Joint Committee on the Library elected Congressman THOMAS PETE HUNTER of California as chairman and Senator RICHARD SHELBY as vice chairman. Pursuant to rule XXVI, paragraph 2, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the committee rules be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON CONGRESS ON THE LIBRARY—115TH CONGRESS

TITLE I—MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. Regular meetings may be called by the chairman, with the concurrence of the Vice-Chairman, as may be deemed necessary or desirable. (A) when the provisions of paragraph 3 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate shall constitute a quorum.

2. Meetings of the committee, including meetings to conduct hearings, shall be open to the public, except that a meeting or series of meetings by the committee on the same subject for a period of no more than 14 calendar days may be closed to the public on a motion made and seconded to go into closed session to discuss only whether the matters to be discussed or the testimony to be taken at such meeting or meetings—(A) will disclose matters necessary to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or the confidential conduct of the foreign relations of the United States; (B) will relate solely to the personnel of the committee staff or internal staff management or procedures; (C) will tend to charge an individual with a crime or misconduct, to disgrace or injure the professional standing of an individual, or otherwise to expose an individual to public contempt or obloquy; or (D) will disclose the identity of any person for a specific Government financial or other benefit, and is required to be kept secret in order to prevent undue injury to the public interest of effective law enforcement.

3. A copy of the committee’s intended agenda enumerating separate items of committee business will normally be sent to all members of the committee or to the appropriate staff assistants in their offices.

4. A copy of the committee’s intended agenda enumerating separate items of committee business will normally be sent to all members of the committee or to the appropriate staff assistants in their offices.

5. Written notices of committee meetings will normally be sent to the committee’s staff director to all members at least 3 days in advance. In addition, the committee staff will email or telephone reminders of committee meetings to all members of the committee or to the appropriate staff assistants in their offices.

6. If a third of the members present so demand, a recorded vote will be taken on any question by roll call.
RULE 2.—REGULAR COMMITTEE MEETINGS
(a) The regular meeting date of the Committee shall be the second Wednesday of every month when the House and Senate are in session. A regularly scheduled meeting date shall not be changed except by unanimous consent of the committee. (Paragraph 7(b) and (c) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules.)

4. Proxy voting shall be allowed on all measures subject to the committee's approval. However, the vote of the committee to report a measure or matters shall require the concurrence of a majority of the members of the committee who are physically present at the time of the vote. Proxies will be allowed in such cases solely for the purpose of recording a member's position on the question and then only in those instances when the absentee committee member has been informed of the question and has affirmatively requested that he be recorded. (Paragraph 7(a)(c) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules.)

TITLE IV—DELEGATION AND AUTHORITY TO THE CHAIRMAN AND VICE CHAIRMAN

1. The Chairman and Vice Chairman are authorized to sign all necessary vouchers and routine papers for which the committee's approval is required and to decide in the committee's behalf on all routine business.

2. The Chairman is authorized to engage commercial reporters for the preparation of transcripts of committee meetings and hearings.

3. The Chairman is authorized to issue, on behalf of the committee, regulations formally promulgated by the committee at the beginning of each session.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, on April 6, 2017, the Joint Committee on Printing organized, elected a chairman, a vice chairman, and adopted committee rules for the 115th Congress. Members of the Joint Committee on Printing elected Senator RICHARD SHELBY as chairman and Congressman RODNEY DAVIS as vice chairman. Pursuant to rule XXVI, paragraph 2, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the committee rules be printed in the RECORD.

Being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING—115TH CONGRESS

RULE 1.—COMMITTEE RULES

(a) The rules of the Senate and House insofar as they are applicable, shall govern the Committee.

(b) The Committee's rules shall be published in the Congressional Record as soon as possible after a quorum has been present and determined by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. No such vote shall be required to close a meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(c) No person other than members of the Committee, and such congressional staff and other representatives as they may authorize, shall be present in any business session that has been closed to the public.

RULE 2.—OPEN AND CLOSED MEETINGS

(a) Each meeting for the transaction of business of the Committee shall be open to the public except when, the Committee, in open session and a quorum present, determines by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. No such vote shall be required to close a meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(b) No person other than members of the Committee, and such congressional staff and other representatives as they may authorize, shall be present in any business session that has been closed to the public.

RULE 3.—WITNESSES FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

(a) Selection of witnesses for Committee hearings shall be made by the Committee staff under the direction of the Chairman. A list of proposed witnesses shall be submitted to all members of the Committee in sufficient time for the review of the hearings and permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(b) The Chairman, after the Committee, shall make a determination of whether to permit questioning of witnesses by members, including minority Members and the rule of germaneness shall be enforced in all hearings notified.

(c) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman before the completion of such hearings, to call witnesses selected by the minority to testify with respect to the measure or matter during at least one day of such hearings.

RULE 4.—CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

FURNISHED TO THE COMMITTEE

The information contained in any books, papers or documents furnished to the Committee, any request to the Chairman for information furnished to the Committee, or any oral testimony of any member of any corporation or other legal entity shall, upon the request of the individual, partnership, corporation or entity furnishing the same, be maintained in strict confidence by the members and staff of the Committee, except that any such information may be released outside of executive session of the Committee if necessary in the judgment of the Chairman in a manner which will not reveal the identity of such individual, partnership, corporation or entity at least one week before the commencement of that hearing unless the Committee determines that there is good cause to begin such hearing at an earlier date. In the latter case, the Chairman shall promptly notify the Daily Digest of the Committee of such public announcement at the earliest possible date. The staff director of the Committee shall file any written statement of proposed testimony at least 48 hours in advance of their appearance and their oral testimony shall be limited to brief summaries. Limited copies of proposed testimony or additional material will be received for the record, subject to the approval of the Chairman.

(a) An accurate stenographic record shall be kept of all Committee proceedings and actions. Brief supplemental materials when required to clarify the transcript may be inserted in the record subject to the approval of the Chairman.

(b) Each member of the Committee shall be provided with a copy of the hearing transcript for the purpose of correcting errors of transcription and answering questions or remarks. If any other person is authorized by a Committee Member to make his corrections, the staff director shall be so notified.

(c) Members who have received unanimous consent to submit written questions to witnesses shall be allowed two days within which to submit their questions to the staff director for transmission to the witnesses. The record may be held open for a period not to exceed two weeks awaiting the responses by witnesses.

(d) A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the Committee, testimony received in closed hearings shall not be released or included in any report without the approval of the Committee.

(e) The Chairman, after a confidential hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(f) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(g) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(h) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(i) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(j) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(k) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the Committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the Committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman, to receive sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the Committee members to receive appropriate consideration.
in connection with any pending hearing or as a part of a duly authorized report of the Committee if such release is deemed essential to the performance of the functions of the Committee and in the public interest.

RULE 12.—BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

The rule for broadcasting of Committee hearings shall be the same as Rule XI, clause 4, of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE 13.—COMMITTEE REPORTS

(a) No Committee report shall be made public or transmitted to the Congress without the approval of a majority of the Committee except when Congress has adjourned: provided that any member of the Committee may make a report supplementary to or dissenting from the majority report. Such supplementary or dissenting reports should be as brief as possible.

(b) Factual reports by the Committee staff may be printed for distribution to Committee members and the public only upon authorization of the Chairman with the approval of a majority of the Committee or with the consent of the Ranking Minority Member.

RULE 14.—CONFIDENTIALITY OF COMMITTEE REPORTS

No summary of a Committee report, prediction of its contents, or statement of conclusions concerning any investigation shall be made by a member of the Committee or by any staff member of the Committee prior to the issuance of a report of the Committee.

RULE 15.—COMMITTEE STAFF

(a) The Committee shall have a staff director, selected by the Chairman. The staff director may be an employee of the House of Representatives or of the Senate.

(b) The Ranking Minority Member may designate an employee of the House of Representatives or of the Senate as the minority staff director.

(c) The staff director, under the general supervision of the Chairman, is authorized to deal directly with agencies of the Government and with non-Government groups and individuals on behalf of the Committee.

(d) The Chairman or staff director shall timely notify the Ranking Minority Member or the minority staff director of decisions made on behalf of the Committee.

RULE 16.—COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

The Chairman of the Committee may establish such procedures and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing rules or to facilitate the effective operation of the Committee. Specifically, the Chairman is authorized, during the interim periods between meetings of the Committee, to act on all requests submitted by any executive department, independent agency, temporary or permanent commissions and committees of the Federal Government, the Government Publishing Office and any other Federal entity, pursuant to the requirements of applicable Federal law and regulations.

REMEMBERING EDWARD "NICK" MCMANUS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I wish to pay tribute to fellow Iowan Judge Edward "Nick" McManus. Judge McManus died earlier this month at the age of 97.

He was a long and deep history in Iowa politics and judicial activities. When I first entered the State legislature, Judge McManus was known as Lieutenant Governor McManus. He also served in the Iowa Senate.

In 1962, President John F. Kennedy appointed him chief judge of the Northern District of Iowa where he served for 23 years when he took senior status. His ascension to this position made him the first president to be appointed to the Federal Northern District Court of Iowa. He remained on the bench for a total of 55 years and was still taking cases at the time of his death.

He was proud of his service on the court and the modernization of the court he started in 1962.

Upon Judge McManus's death, current acting U.S. Attorney Sean Berry told the Cedar Rapids Gazette, "The changes implemented by Judge McManus left an indelible and positive impact on the efficient administration of justice for all litigants in the federal court."

He took great pride that the only time he had a backlog of cases was the first 100 that were there when he took the job. He took very seriously the Bill of Rights Sixth Amendment where it says "the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial."

His longevity, says Deb Frank, may have said it best, "I know he loved to work. He loved what he was doing. I think it’s just the whole idea of coming to the office every day and doing what needed to be done."

Barbara and I send our sincerest condolences to Judge McManus’s five sons, two step-sons, other family members, and friends.

He served our State and our country with great distinction and will be missed.

102ND ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE WYOMING STATE SOCIETY, Daughters of the American Revolution

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I appreciate having this opportunity to recognize the 102nd annual conference of the Wyoming State Society, Daughters of the American Revolution. This year’s conference is being held in Casper and once again promises to be an interesting, informative, and inspirational event.

In the years since the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution was founded on October 11, 1890, the organization has kept its focus on the preservation and promotion of the ideals, principles, and values that are reflected in our Charters of Freedom—the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. They know what a great gift we have been given with our citizenship in the United States of America and they wanted to show their great pride in those who had fought for our freedom as a nation and won it.

With such a strong base on which to build, it is not surprising that the DAR continues to grow in size and influence. Year after year, more and more people are drawn to join the DAR and help to promote the principles and values of our Nation. That is why it is really no wonder that the DAR can now boast of over 185,000 members all over the world. In Wyoming, that enthusiasm shows itself as each chapter continues to encourage its members to be more involved with the day-to-day workings of our government on the local, State, and national levels.

There is only one qualification for membership in the DAR. You must be able to trace your lineage back to the original 13 colonies or British America. Then a young nation took up arms to sever the ties between the United States and Great Britain. Some member of your family must have been a part of our American Revolution for you to be accepted into the DAR as a member. It is then up to you to continue the work that a member of your family began.

That legacy has been handed down to the members of the DAR and to all of us as American citizens. It is also the legacy we will hand down to our children and grandchildren.

We recognize the members of the DAR and the difference all of you are making as individuals and as members of an organization that has been keeping the “Spirit of 76” alive for generations. The principles and values that are embodied in our Charters of Freedom have helped you to make a difference and that has helped to make our nation a better place for us all to live.

Thank you for the good work you do.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO RANDY J. HOLLAND

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today, on behalf of Delaware's congressional delegation—Senator Tom Carper, Congresswoman Lisa Blunt Rochester, and myself—to honor the exemplary service of Delaware Supreme Court Justice Randy J. Holland. His talent and expertise is admired by both Republicans and Democrats alike. Justice Holland was the youngest person to serve on the Delaware Supreme Court when he was appointed and confirmed by Delaware Governor Mike Castle in 1986. I had the honor of reappointing him to a second 12-year term when I was Governor of Delaware in 1999.

Then, in March 2011, I was re-appointed again by Governor Markell and unanimously confirmed by the Senate for an unprecedented third 12-year term. His length on the Delaware Supreme Court—30 years and the longest in history—is a result of his broad knowledge of the law and of our State and the respect and professionalism he upholds on and off the bench.

Delaware’s supreme court has a reputation for handling complex disputes in a thoughtful and expeditious way. It is no doubt that Justice Holland was an integral part of making Delaware’s highest court one of the... most respected in the Nation and highly regarded internationally. Over the course of three decades, Justice Holland has written more than 700 opinions and several thousand orders and gained the reputation as an expert in Delaware constitutional law. He has done this all with a unique sense of humility and respect for others, something that fellow judges and attorneys have and will continue to emulate. He is the embodiment of the “Golden Rule,” always treating others the way he would like to be treated.

It is perhaps his homegrown knowledge of Delaware and his experience as a general practitioner of the law that allowed Justice Holland to make his mark in the Supreme Court. He grew up in Milford, DE, and went on to graduate from Swarthmore College, University of Pennsylvania Law School, and the University of Virginia Law School. Before joining the bench at age 39, Justice Holland was a partner at Morris, Nichols, and Dennell in Wilmington, DE, where he was known for his ability to draw clients from all over the State on issues ranging from corporate and contract law to zoning and real estate transactions. During this time, he took the opportunity to appear before almost every judge in every court of the State. It was this wide breadth of knowledge that made him an excellent choice for Delaware’s supreme court, even though he had no judicial experience at all.

Justice Holland’s colleagues describe him as a mentor and a role model and have relied on him throughout the years for his institutional knowledge of Delaware and the court. This especially came into practice during an unprecedented turnover in the Delaware Supreme Court. That turnover allowed Governor Jack Markell to appoint four justices, including the chief justice, to the five-officer court. Justice Holland’s help and guidance to his colleagues throughout this transitional time proved vital as they became acclimated to their new roles.

When Justice Holland was not in his role as an officer of the court, he was writing. regarded internationally as an author and historian, Justice Holland has written, coauthored, or edited nine books including “Delaware Supreme Court Gold Anniversary,” “Delaware Constitution of 1897,” “The First Hundred Years,” “Massa Carta: Muse & Mentor,” “Delaware’s Destiny Determined By Lewes,” and “Delaware Corporation Law, Selected Cases.” He has also published several law review articles, primarily dealing with judicial ethics and legal history.

Over his three decades on the Delaware Supreme Court, Justice Holland has received numerous awards, including the 2014 American Inns of Court Powell Award for Professionalism and Ethics, 2012 First State Distinguished Service Award, and the 2011 Dwight D. Opperman Award. In 2004, he was elected to be an Honorable Master of the Bench by Lincoln’s Inn in London. He was also recognized by members of our Nation’s highest court—Chief Justices William Rehnquist and John Roberts—when they appointed him as the State judge member of the Federal Judicial Conference Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules.

On behalf of Senator Coons and Congresswoman Blunt Rochester, let me express our heartfelt thanks to Justice Holland for his service to our State and judicial system. It is a honor to be able to offer him our sincere congratulations on a job well done. It will be quite a change not to see him sitting on the second chair in from the left, but we look forward to him continuing to share his deep knowledge about the history and legacy of Delaware law. From our hearts, we wish him and his wife, Ilona, along with their son Ethan and daughter-in-law Jennifer and grandchildren Aurora and Chase, happy, healthy, and successful years to come.

REMEMBERING DR. THOMAS E. STARZL

Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to Dr. Thomas E. Starzl, the pioneer in the field of organ transplantation who impacted the lives of thousands directly and indirectly. Dr. Starzl died on March 4, 2017, 1 week shy of his 91st birthday.

To say Dr. Starzl was a remarkable surgeon, researcher, or physician does not begin to describe this man or the contributions he made. He was a visionary who then transformed an entire field of medicine. He performed the first liver transplant in 1963, the first heart-liver transplant in 1984, and led a team conducting a five-organ transplant in 1987. In 2007, at the age of 80, Dr. Starzl visited with me to seek research funding for the hand transplant program at the University of Pittsburgh. He never stopped envisioning what more could be done or striving to achieve it.

The late Senator Robert F. Kennedy once said, “only those who dare to fall greatly can ever achieve greatly.” Dr. Starzl was not afraid to fail, and through his determination and the innovation and advances he brought forth, organ transplantation preserved human life, and the University of Pittsburgh became the busiest transplant center in the world. Knowing that the actual surgery is only one part of his 91st birthday.

Among the many accolades Dr. Starzl received was being ranked 213th in the book “1,000 Years, 1,000 People: Ranking the Men and Women Who Shaped the Millennium.” Published in 1998, this book named the people who had the greatest impact on the world over the previous 1,000 years. Dr. Starzl’s inclusion speaks to the enormous impact he had on so many lives.

Dr. Starzl’s passing leaves a void, but we know the foundation he built for organ transplantation will endure. His scientific and medical legacy and the lives of his students, the surgeons he trained, and the high standards he set for quality of care. In the statement released by his family, it was noted that he “was a force of nature that swept all before him into his orbit, challenging those that surrounded him to strive to match his superhuman feats of focus, will, and compassion.” His “superhuman feats” will remain an inspiration for those in the medical profession and beyond.

RECOGNIZING THE PEOPLE OF LIBBY, MONTANA

Mr. DAINES Mr. President, this week I would like to recognize the people of Libby, MT, for their resiliency and strength in confronting economic, environmental, and public health challenges. This week is National Asbestos Awareness Week, and the people of Libby are perhaps the most acutely aware community in our Nation when it comes to understanding asbestos related menaces. As the seat of Lincoln County, Libby has persevered through a long and painful process of cleanup and removing threats to public health and has emerged ready to share the treasures of northwestern Montana.

A few miles outside of Libby, nearly a century ago, a vermiculite ore mine began operations. At one point, this mine accounted for a large portion of global vermiculite production. Unknown to the people of Libby, the local vermiculite also contained a toxic form of asbestos, Libby asbestos. The Libby mine was eventually closed in 1990, and Libby was designated as a Superfund site by the Environmental Protection Agency in 2002. The asbestos identification and cleanup process has been extensive and long. The last two decades have marked the successful conclusion for submitting new requests to the EPA for identification and cleanup of impacted sites. As the environmental cleanup process draws to a close, we must not lose sight of the continued health challenges for Libby residents and the truly unique challenges they face in improving their quality of life.
Eight years ago, former U.S. Senator Max Baucus led the charge to ensure that three essential functions were established to help the people of Libby. These functions included screening for asbestos related diseases, healthcare for conditions caused by asbestos exposure, and support for asbestos victims with unique services due to asbestos exposure. These vital programs, specifically designed to help those most in need, are essential and must be preserved. With these tools available, over 4,000 individuals have been screened and over 2,000 individuals have been diagnosed with asbestos related diseases.

On March 6, I sent a letter to Speaker of the House PAUL RYAN and Senate Majority Leader MITCH MCCONNELL to preserve these tools for the people of Libby. The latency period for diseases related to asbestos exposure can be decades into the future. Long after the environmental and economic impacts have been overcome, the human impact in Libby will continue. As the debate over healthcare ebbs and flows, the essential protections for the people of Libby must remain intact.

The Center for Asbestos Related Disease, known locally as the CARD clinic, is a vital resource located in Libby that helps with identification, treatment, and research for those with asbestos exposure. The tools championed by Senator Baucus are vital to the success of a community resource like the CARD clinic. As the Senator who now serves the people of Montana, it is my duty to continue to fight for the people of Libby.

To understand the impact these programs have on the daily lives of people in the area, it makes sense to listen to their personal experiences. Lynn Sather-Diller said the CARD clinic has helped “me to stay as healthy as possible, even though I have an asbestos related disease. I wouldn’t be able to do it without them.”

The basic activity of breathing, something many of us simply take for granted, is a daily concern and immense priority for those with asbestos related diseases. Angie Hill added, “Asbestos related disease is life changing. Hard to say in only a few words, our exposure started in our childhood & is so scary when you struggle to breathe. We are thankful for the exceptional medical care & educational information the CARD center, Dr. Brad Black & his staff provide to it’s patients.” Echoing those sentiments was Judy Lundstrom: “You helped with exams and I am on night oxygen and feel much better so can continue my job. I am able to stay in my own home because Dr. Black and Tanis helped.”

These examples show the strength of the people of Libby. This region will continue to find ways to reach its potential. Like the rest of Montana, Libby is blessed with awe-inspiring beauty and immense natural resources. The Cabinet Mountain Range south of Libby has the majesty of a divine painting, and this masterpiece will always draw travelers to the region. The soon to open Montanore Mine will be a major producer of copper and silver. The Kootenai National Forest contains significant timber resources. The Libby Dam is a source of reliable energy, helping to empower the United States through energy dominance. The Kootenai River flows through that dam and is an engine of recreational activity, inviting outdoor enthusiasts from across the globe to explore the natural splendor of Lincoln County and gaze in wonder at the Kootenai Falls. As the people of Libby overcome the past and chart a course for the years ahead, I admire their resilient attitude and steadfast determination. While the hardy character and independent spirit of this small community in far Northwest Montana, we must not abandon our commitment to giving them a hand up and the tools necessary to succeed.

RECOGNIZING FLATHEAD VALLEY COMMUNITY COLLEGE

- Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, today I wish to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Flathead Valley Community College in Kalispell, MT, and to honor the many contributions that FVCC has made in northwest Montana.

In 1967, Dr. Larry Blake was hired as the first president of FVCC. Just months later, he opened the doors to 611 students who made up the very first class.

Fifty years later, over 3,500 students are enrolled in FVCC and studying more than 100 degree and certificate programs.

The campus today is unrecognizable to those who studied at its original downtown location, and in recent years, I have seen the new campus boom with the addition of additional education facilities, laboratories, and campus housing.

In 2001, Jane Karas was hired as the 11th president of FVCC, and she has been instrumental in the growth of the region’s largest higher education institution.

Under Jane Karas’s leadership, FVCC has expanded the nursing school and developed a renowned culinary school that has helped meet the growing demand for jobs in the communities that lay in the shadow of Glacier National Park.

In addition to serving thousands of students in Kalispell, FVCC operates a satellite campus an hour away in Libby, MT.

Over the past 50 years, FVCC has made a profound impact in Montana, and I join all of the Montanans who can’t wait to see what they have in store for the next 50 years.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Ridgway, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

In executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate reports from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The messages received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGE

REPORT ON THE CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY
ORIGINALLY DECLARED IN EXECUTIVE ORDER 13336 ON APRIL 12, 2010 WITH RESPECT TO SOMALIA—PM 6

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report, which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, within 90 days prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register for publication the enclosed notice stating that the national emergency declared in Executive Order 13336 of April 12, 2010, with respect to Somalia is to continue in effect beyond April 12, 2017.

The United States is strongly committed to Somalia’s stabilization, and it is important to maintain sanctions against persons undermining its stability. For this reason, I have determined that it is necessary to continue the national emergency with respect to Somalia and to maintain in force the sanctions to respond to this threat.

DONALD J. TRUMP,
THE WHITE HOUSE, April 6, 2017.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 10:02 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mrs. Cole, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, without amendment:

S. 544. An act to amend the Veterans Access, Choice, and Accountability Act of 2014 to modify the termination date for the Veterans Choice Program, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:
H.R. 1304. An act to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, the Public Health Service Act, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from the definition of medical stop-loss insurance obtained by certain plan sponsors of group health plans.

H.R. 1219. An act to amend the Investment Company Act of 1940 to expand the investor limitation for qualifyng venture capital funds under an exemption from the definition of investment company; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DAINES (for himself and Mrs. MCCASKILL):

S. 886. A bill to amend the Homeland Security Act of 2002 to establish an Acquisition Review Board in the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

Mr. DAINES. Mr. President, the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, is tasked with keeping Americans safe in the homeland. To carry out this mission, DHS spends over $7 billion on acquisition programs annually. DHS and its agencies are held to a high standard for keeping our Nation safe. We also must hold it to a high standard of fiscal responsibility. DHS must be good stewards of taxpayer resources.

DHS’s acquisition process has long faced problems resulting in waste, delays, and under delivery of performance objectives. Since the inception of DHS, the Government Accountability Office, GAO, has highlighted challenges and offered recommendations to improve the acquisition process. There has been progress; however, there continues to be room for improvement. According to a GAO report released today, DHS’s acquisition process remains a high-risk issue, susceptible to cost overruns and schedule delays. These issues reduce buying power and force security employees to wait for new capabilities. This is not fair to those on the front lines tasked with keeping us safe and it is not fair to the American taxpayers.

I spent 28 years in the private sector. I know when tough business decisions need to be made, you convene a board that brings with it a breadth of experience and a deep understanding of strategic objectives and goals.

That is why I am introducing the OHS Acquisition Review Board Act of 2017. This legislation will create a review board within the Department to strengthen accountability and uniformity across all agencies and the entire acquisition process, ensure long term strategic objectives are met, and ensure the use of industry-proven best practices.

I thank Senator MCCASKILL for being an original cosponsor of this bill and Representatives THOMAS GARRETT and MICHAEL McCaul for leading introduction of companion legislation in the House of Representatives. I ask my Senate colleagues to join us in support of this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 886

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This Act may be cited as the “DHS Acquisition Review Board Act of 2017.”

SEC. 2. ACQUISITION REVIEW BOARD.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle D of title VIII of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (6 U.S.C. 391 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

SEC. 886. ACQUISITION REVIEW BOARD.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ACQUISITION.—The term “acquisition” has the meaning given the term in section 131 of title 41, United States Code.

(2) ACQUISITION DECISION AUTHORITY.—The term “acquisition decision authority” means the authority, held by the Secretary acting through the Deputy Secretary or Under Secretary for Management to—

(A) ensure compliance with Federal law, the Federal Acquisition Regulation, and Department acquisition management directives; (B) review (including approving, pausing, modifying, or cancelling) an acquisition program through the life cycle of the program; (C) ensure that acquisition program managers have the resources necessary to successfully execute an approved acquisition program; (D) ensure good acquisition program management of cost, schedule, risk, and system performance of the acquisition program at issue, including assessing acquisition program baseline breaches and directing any corrective action for such breaches; and (E) ensure that acquisition program managers, on an ongoing basis, monitor cost, schedule, and risk against established baselines and use tools to assess risks to an acquisition program at all phases of the life cycle of such program to avoid and mitigate acquisition program baseline breaches.

(3) ACQUISITION DECISION EVENT.—The term “acquisition decision event”, with respect to an acquisition program, means a predetermined point within each of the acquisition phases at which the acquisition decision authority determines whether the acquisition program shall proceed to the next acquisition phase.

(4) ACQUISITION DECISION MEMORANDUM.—The term “acquisition decision memorandum”, with respect to an acquisition program, means the official acquisition decision event record that includes a documented record of decisions, exit criteria, and assigned actions for the acquisition, as determined by the person exercising acquisition decision authority for the acquisition.

(5) ACQUISITION PROGRAM.—The term “acquisition program”, with respect to an acquisition program, means the process by which the Department acquires, with any appropriated amounts, by contract for purchase or lease, property or services (including construction) to support the missions and goals of the Department.

(6) ACQUISITION PROGRAM BASELINE.—The term “acquisition program baseline”, with respect to an acquisition program, means a summary of the cost, schedule, and performance parameters, expressed in standard, measurable, quantifiable terms, that must be met in order to accomplish the goals of such program.

(c) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The responsibilities of the Board are as follows:

1. Determine whether a proposed acquisition has met the requirements of key phases of the life cycle framework and is able to proceed to the next phase and eventual full production and deployment.
functions are provided with the appropriate acquisition, budget, and cost estimating at a minimum, the following practices:

(5) Review the acquisition documents of each major acquisition program, including the program baseline and documentation reflecting consideration of trade-offs among cost, schedule, and performance objectives, to ensure the reliability of underlying data.

(6) Ensure that practices are adopted and implemented to require consideration of trade-offs among cost, schedule, and performance objectives as part of the process for developing requirements for major acquisition programs prior to the initiation of the second acquisition decision event, including, at a minimum, the following practices:

(A) Department officials responsible for acquisition, budget, and cost estimating functions are provided with the appropriate opportunity to develop estimates and analyze cost and schedule matters before performance objectives are established for capabilities when feasible.

(B) Full consideration is given to possible trade-offs among cost, schedule, and performance objectives for each alternative.

(1) Acquisition Program Baseline Requirement.—If the person exercising acquisition decision authority over a major acquisition program approves the major acquisition program to proceed into the planning phase before the major acquisition program has a Department-approved acquisition program baseline.

(1) the Under Secretary for Management shall create and approve an acquisition program baseline report regarding such approval; and

(2) the Secretary shall—

(A) not later than 7 days after the date on which the acquisition decision memorandum is signed, notify in writing the Committee on Homeland Security of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs of the Senate of the decision; and

(B) not later than 60 days after the date on which the acquisition decision memorandum is signed, submit to the Committee on Homeland Security of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs of the Senate a report stating the rationale for the decision and a plan of action to require an acquisition program baseline for such program.

(g) Report.—Not later than 1 year after the date of this section, and every year thereafter through fiscal year 2022, the Under Secretary for Management shall provide information to the Committee on Homeland Security of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs of the Senate on the activities of the Board for the prior fiscal year that includes information relating to the following:

(1) For each meeting of the Board, any acquisition decision memorandum.

(2) Results of the systematic reviews conducted under subsection (e)(4).

(3) Results of acquisition document reviews required under subsection (e)(5).

(4) Activities to ensure that practices are adopted and implemented throughout the Department under subsection (e)(6)."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents in section 1(b) of the Homeland Security Act of 2002 (6 U.S.C. 101 et seq.) is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 835 the following:

"Sec. 836. Acquisition Review Board."

By Mr. DAINES (for himself and Mrs. McCASKILL):

S. 887 was approved by the Homeland Security Act of 2002 to require a multi-year acquisition strategy for the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. DAINES. Mr. President, the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, is tasked with keeping Americans safe in the homeland. To carry out our mission, DHS spends over $7 billion on acquisition programs annually. DHS and its agencies are held to a high standard for keeping our Nation safe. We also must hold it to a high standard of fiscal responsibility. DHS must be good stewards of taxpayers.

DHS’s acquisition process has long faced problems resulting in waste, delays, and under delivery of performance objectives. Since the inception of DHS, the Government Accountability Office, GAO, has highlighted challenges and offered recommendations to improve the acquisition process. There has been progress; however, there continues to be room for improvement. According to a GAO report released today, DHS’s acquisition process remains a high-risk issue, susceptible to cost overruns and schedules delays. These issues reduce buying power and force security employees to wait for new capabilities. This is not fair to those on the frontlines keeping us safe, and it is not fair to the American taxpayers.

That is why I am introducing the DHS Multiyear Acquisition Strategy Act of 2017. This legislation will require DHS to develop a multi-year acquisition plan to guide the overall direction of the Department’s acquisitions, across all agencies, and include it annually in the Department’s budget request to Congress. It will create a Departmentwide prioritized list of investment, to ensure limited resources are being directed to the highest valued use.

This legislation will increase communication intended to DHS, as well as with industry and with academia, to help identify current capability gaps and future technological needs. It also includes private sector principles, such as developing incentives for program management, set cost, schedule, and capabilities goals. I have seen these principles work during my 28-year private sector career, and it is long past due that we apply them to government. We must move away from the “spend it or lose it” mentality of government budgeting.

I thank Senator CHARLES McCAIN and Representative CLAIRE McCASKILL for being an original cosponsor of this bill and Representatives BRIAN FITZPATRICK and Michael McCaul for leading introduction of companion legislation in the House of Representatives. I ask my Senate colleagues to join us in support of this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(B) publish the strategy required under paragraph (1) in an unclassified format that is publicly available.

(4) CONSULTATION.—In developing the strategy required under subsection (b), the Secretary shall, as the Secretary determines appropriate, consult with—

(A) representatives of the Department and other appropriate federal agencies;

(B) representatives of industry and the academic community;

(C) the Comptroller General of the United States; and

(D) representatives of the security and economic benefit derived by acquiring the security and economic benefit derived from—

(i) acquisitions system-level upgrades.

(5) CONTENTS OF STRATEGY.—The strategy required under subsection (b) shall include the following:

(1) PRIORITIZED LIST.—A systematic and integrated prioritized list developed by the Under Secretary for Management in coordination with all of the Component Acquisition Executives of major acquisition programs that Departmental program or system that is the subject of acquisition and an analysis of how the security and economic benefit derived from the program or system will be measured.

(2) INVENTORY.—A plan to develop a reliable Department-wide inventory of investments and real property assets to help the Department—

(A) plan, budget, schedule, and acquire upgrades of the systems and equipment of the Department; and

(B) plan for acquisition and management of future systems and equipment.

(3) FUNDING GAPS.—A plan to address funding gaps between funding requirements for major acquisition programs and known available resources, including, to the maximum extent practicable, ways of leveraging best practices to identify and eliminate overpayment for items—

(A) prevent wasteful purchasing; and

(B) achieve the greatest level of efficiency and cost savings by rationalizing purchases.

(4) FUNDING GAPS.—A plan to address funding gaps between funding requirements for major acquisition programs and known available resources, including, to the maximum extent practicable, ways of leveraging best practices to identify and eliminate overpayment for items—

(A) prevent wasteful purchasing; and

(B) achieve the greatest level of efficiency and cost savings by rationalizing purchases.

(5) IDENTIFICATION OF CAPABILITIES.—An identification of test, evaluation, modeling, and simulation capabilities that will be required to—

(A) support the acquisition of technologies to meet the needs of the strategy;

(B) leverage to the greatest extent possible emerging technological trends and research and development trends within the public and private sectors; and

(C) identify ways to ensure that appropriate technology is acquired and integrated into the operating doctrine of the Department.

(6) FOCUS ON INCENTIVES TO SAVE TAX PAYER DOLLARS.—An assessment of ways the Department can develop incentives for program managers and senior acquisition officials of the Department to—

(A) prevent cost overruns;

(B) avoid schedule delays; and

(C) achieve cost savings in major acquisition programs.

(7) FOCUS ON ADDRESSING DELAYS AND BID PROTESTS.—An assessment of ways the Department can improve the acquisition process to mitigate cost overruns—

(A) requirements development;

(B) procurement announcements;

(C) requests for proposals;

(D) evaluations of proposals;

(E) protests of decisions and awards; and

(F) the use of best practices.

(8) FOCUS ON IMPROVING OUTREACH.—An identity of strategies to increase opportunities for communication and collaboration with industry, small and disadvantaged businesses, intra-government entities, universities, organizations of excellence, accredited certification and standards development organizations, and national laboratories to ensure that the Department understands the market for technologies, products, and innovation that is available to meet the mission needs of the Department and to inform the requirements-setting process of the Department before engaging in an acquisition, including—

(A) methods designed especially to engage small and disadvantaged businesses, a cost-benefit analysis of the tradeoffs that small and disadvantaged businesses provide, information relating to barriers to entry for small and disadvantaged businesses, and information relating to unique requirements for small and disadvantaged businesses; and

(B) within the Department Vendor Communication Plan and Market Research Guide, instructions for interaction by acquisition program managers with those entities to—

(i) prevent misinterpretation of acquisition regulations; and

(ii) permit, within legal and ethical boundaries, interacting with those entities with transparent means of communicating;

(9) COMPETITION.—A plan regarding competition under subsection (e).

(10) ACQUISITION WORKFORCE.—A plan regarding the Department acquisition workforce under subsection (f).

(11) COMPETITION PLAN.—The strategy required under subsection (b) shall include a plan to address competition, or the option of competition, for major acquisition programs, which may include assessments of the following measures in appropriate cases if the measures are cost effective:

(i) Competitive prototyping.

(ii) Dual-sourcing.

(iii) Unbundling of contracts.

(iv) Funding of next generation prototype systems or subsystems.

(v) Use of modular, open architectures to enable competition for upgrades.

(vi) Acquisition of complete technical data packages.

(vii) Periodic competitions for subsystem upgrades.

(viii) Licensing of additional suppliers, including small businesses.

(ix) Performance program reviews to address long-term competitive effects of program decisions.
(2) the term “Department” means the Department of Homeland Security.

(b) Review.—Not later than 180 days after the date on which the Secretary of Homeland Security submits the first multiyear acquisition strategy required under section 336 of the Homeland Security Act of 2002, as added by section 2 of this Act, after the date of enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a review of the strategy and analyze the viability of the effectiveness of the strategy in—

(1) complying with the requirements of such section 336;

(2) establishing clear connections between Department objectives and acquisition priorities;

(3) demonstrating that Department acquisition policy reflects program management best practices and standards;

(4) ensuring competition or the option of competition for major acquisition programs;

(5) considering potential cost savings through using existing technologies when developing acquisition program requirements;

(6) preventing duplication within Department acquisition workforce training requirements through leveraging already-existing training within the Federal Government, academic community, or private industry; and

(7) providing incentives for acquisition program managers to reduce acquisition and procurement costs through the use of best practices and disciplined program management.

(c) Report.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Homeland Security and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives a report on the review conducted under subsection (b), which shall be submitted in unclassified form but may include a classified annex.

SENIOR RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 119—REQUIRING AUTHORIZING COMMITTEES TO HOLD ANNUAL HEARINGS ON GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTABILITY OFFICE INVESTIGATIVE REPORTS ON THE IDENTIFICATION, CONSOLIDATION, AND ELIMINATION OF DUPLICATIVE GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. GARDNER (for himself and Mr. PETRAS) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs:

Resolved, SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This resolution may be cited as the “Congressional Oversight to Start Taxpayer Savings Resolution” or the “COST Savings Resolution”.

SEC. 2. REQUIRING COMMITTEE HEARINGS ON GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTABILITY OFFICE REPORTS.

(a) Duplication Reports.—Not later than 90 days after the date on which the Comptroller General of the United States transmits each annual report to Congress identifying programs, agencies, offices, and initiatives with duplicative goals and activities within the Government under section 21 of the Joint Resolution entitled “Joint Resolution increasing the statutory limit on the public debt” (Public Law 111–139; 31 U.S.C. 712 note), each standing committee of the Senate (except the Committee on Appropriations) with jurisdiction over any such program, agency, office, or initiative covered by that report shall conduct hearings on the recommendations for consolidation and elimination of such program, agency, office, or initiative.

(b) High Risk List.—Not later than 90 days after the date on which the Comptroller General of the United States publishes a High Risk List, or any successor thereto, each standing committee of the Senate (except the Committee on Appropriations) with jurisdiction over any program area on the High Risk List shall conduct hearings on the vulnerabilities to fraud, waste, abuse, and mismanagement, or need for transformation of the program, agency or program area.

(c) Joint Hearings.—For any program, agency, office, initiative, or program area designated in the Comptroller General’s report on the review conducted under subsection (a) or (b).

SENATE RESOLUTION 120—DESIGNATING APRIL 20, 2017, AS “NATIONAL ALTERNATIVE FUEL VEHICLE DAY”

Mr. MANCHIN (for himself and Mrs. CAPITO) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Senate—

(a) to increase the personal and commercial use of cleaner and energy-efficient alternative fuel vehicles and advanced technology vehicles;

(b) to promote public sector adoption of cleaner and energy-efficient alternative fuel vehicles and advanced technology vehicles; and

(c) to encourage the adoption of Federal policies to reduce the dependence of the United States on foreign energy through the advancement and adoption of alternative, advanced, and emerging vehicle and fuel technologies.

Mr. MURPHY (for himself and Mr. BLUMENTHAL) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Senate—

(a) to increase the personal and commercial use of cleaner and energy-efficient alternative fuel vehicles and advanced technology vehicles;

(b) to promote public sector adoption of cleaner and energy-efficient alternative fuel vehicles and advanced technology vehicles; and

(c) to encourage the adoption of Federal policies to reduce the dependence of the United States on foreign energy through the advancement and adoption of alternative, advanced, and emerging vehicle and fuel technologies.

Whereas, for 117 years, the broad strategic and tactical advantages created by the submarine force of the Navy (referred to in this preamble as the “Submarine Force”) have enhanced the national security of the United States through undersea missions;

Whereas, over the course of the last 11 decades, the submarines of the Navy have advanced through 4 generations;

Whereas the first generation submarines of the Navy rapidly evolved from small, limited-capability subsmeribles to a dominant force in naval warfare;

Whereas the second generation submarines of the Navy, defined by the heroes of World War II, made a decisive difference in a war in which control of the sea was crucial;

Whereas, 117 years after the first commissioned submarine, the USS Holland (SS–1), on April 11, 1900;

Whereas the modern, fourth generation submarines of the Navy use long-range sensors and weapons to stay ahead of global threats and preserve freedom of navigation in the global maritime environment;

Whereas, in 2017, the Submarine Force consists of 52 attack, 14 ballistic missile, and 4 guided missile submarines that enable the Navy to win wars, prevent conflicts, and defeat threats posed by terrorists;

Whereas, through the history of the Submarine Force, the 1 constant has been the tremendous character, courage, and dedication of the men and women who maintain, equip, and train and fight in the submarines of the Navy; and

Whereas April 11, 2017, marks the 117th birthday of the Submarine Force and is an appropriate date to designate as the “National Birthday of the U.S. Navy Submarine Force”: Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the Senate—

(1) designates April 11, 2017, as the “National Birthday of the U.S. Navy Submarine Force”; and

(2) acknowledges the critical role that the men and women of the submarine force of the Navy fulfill in defending the United States.

Prior to the consideration of this nomination, Senate took the following action:

Senate agreed to the motion to proceed to Legislative Session.

By 55 yeas to 44 nays (Vote No. 104), Senate agreed to the motion to proceed to executive session to consider the nomination.

During consideration of this nomination today, Senate also took the following action:

By 55 yeas to 45 nays (Vote No. 105), three-fifths of those Senators duly chosen and sworn, not having voted in the affirmative, Senate rejected the motion to close further debate on the nomination.

By 55 yeas to 45 nays (Vote No. 106), Senate agreed to the motion to reconsider the vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the nomination.

By 48 yeas to 52 nays (Vote No. 107), Senate rejected the motion to postpone the vote on the motion to invoke cloture, upon reconsideration, on the nomination until 3 p.m., on Monday, April 24, 2017.
