

Mr. President, I am a little curious, though, when I hear him and others talk about the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau as if it is this awful, out-of-control Federal agency. What bothers my colleagues about the CFPB is that it is the only agency in government that is willing to stand up against the Wall Street interests. We see the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and we know how close he is to Wall Street—the Comptroller. We see the FDIC and we see the Federal Reserve and we see these nominees who come out of a White House that looks like it is a retreat for Wall Street executives, and they are on one side protecting Wall Street and doing Wall Street's bidding.

We have one agency, just one agency, which my conservative, pro-Wall Street, pro-corporate colleagues complain about every day, every week, every month—an agency that has saved 29 million American consumers $12 million. How do you think—and they want to rein in that agency, saying the agency just has too much power over people's lives. It is actually protecting—my friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, who is also in the hall, talks about their being a cop on the beat. They are protecting consumers while Wall Street is doing whatever Wall Street does to them. I will just leave it at that.

A FREE PRESS

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, a free, independent press is vital to our democracy. It is enshrined in our Constitution. We need tenacious, dedicated journalists, who will afflict the comfortable and comfort the afflicted, to ask tough questions, to challenge special interests, to connect Americans with their communities. That is why I joined my colleagues this week on a resolution condemning this administration's awful, vicious, demagogic attacks on reporters—including the decision last week to bar a reporter from attending a White House event just because the White House didn't like the questions she asked—with the repeated labeling of the free press as "enemies of the people."

Watch the video from last night. Watch the video in Florida from last night where the President egged on, egged on, and egged on his supporters to start screaming at newspaper reporters and other reporters—people who are doing their jobs.

In spite of this President using Stalinist language—I am just reading a book right now written by a Stalinist translator, and this book talks about a lot of the language Stalin used. He called people "enemies of the people." That is Communist talk. That is Stalinist talk. Yet this President calls reporters who get up every day and do their jobs—most of them not paid very well, frankly—the enemy of the people. They do vital work not just in Washington but throughout the country.

I would like to take a moment to highlight one of them. I am going to come to this floor every so often in the weeks and months ahead, and I am going to talk about a local reporter—a reporter who gets up every day, who probably doesn't make more than $20,000 or $30,000 a year. In many cases it is a little more than that, but reporters are generally not particularly well-paid people. I want to talk about the important work that local Ohio journalists do. Some of them I have met; others I haven't met but I have observed, because I know how important they are to their communities. I will start doing this on a regular basis because in this town today, with this administration, with this President of the United States—I still can't believe a President of the United States engages in talk like Stalin—the Soviet Stalin—calling American citizens who get up every day and do their job and do their job to the best of their ability "enemies of the people," and he tries to get the crowds he speaks to, the people he addresses, to chime in and call them "enemies of the people" and start calling those reporters names.

I want this floor message that I am going to do from time to time to be a constant reminder of how reporters contribute to their communities.

Last week, the Daily Jeffersonian in eastern Ohio ran a story on the upcoming Firemen's Festival in Caldwell, OH, a town in Appalachia, reported by a local reporter named Austin Erickson. It is the local fire department's biggest fundraiser of the year. They rely on the proceeds in part because of the corruption in State government where State government doesn't fund local communities like they used to for a whole bunch of reasons, but this fire department relies on the proceeds of the Fireman's Festival to fund daily maintenance, testing, and safety gear of their firefighters.

Mr. Erickson talked to the festival's chairman, who pointed to the fire department and told the reporter: "If it's in those four walls, it's from that festival." In other words, if it weren't for this festival, we wouldn't have the fire equipment we need.

Through its work, the Daily Jeffersonian and local reporters like Mr. Erickson are informing their communities about ways to support local firefighters and responders who keep them safe. If people like Mr. Erickson of the Daily Jeffersonian in Cambridge, OH, were not writing these stories, were not reporting on the Fireman's Festival, not as many people would go or understand it. They spend their hard-earned money there. It helps their local communities. It helps their fire department.

Enemies of the People? If the President would listen and see what these reporters do every day, maybe he would stop the demagoguery. Maybe he would stop calling people names. Maybe he would stop calling his own Attorney General names. Maybe he would stand up to Putin who clearly—that is a whole other story. I won't get into that.

Let's go back to these local reporters and what journalists do every day and what Mr. Erickson does. It is what newspapers all over Ohio—from my hometown paper, the Mansfield News Journal, the paper where my wife used to work, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, the Columbus Dispatch, the Cincinnati Enquirer, a smaller paper, the News-Herald, the Lorain Journal—I could go on and on and on, paper after paper after paper.

Journalists wake up every day and do their jobs. They serve their communities, and they serve their country. They are not enemies of the people. I just pray to God that the President of the United States will stop that kind of talk.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION BILL

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, today we came together to pass important bipartisan legislation to strengthen our national security and invest in American jobs.

Many of my colleagues of both parties have helped get the National Defense Authorization Act over the finish line. I particularly want to thank my colleague Senator PORTMAN from my State, who worked with our office to secure important Ohio priorities, and Senator INHOFE and my friend JACK REED, who served so well on the Banking Committee in addition to the work he has done on unemployment insurance and on military issues, and Senator CRAPO, my colleague from Idaho, as we worked on securing and fortifying our national interests when it comes to foreign investments. All of these colleagues of mine worked with the conference committee to get our agencies new tools to screen Chinese and other foreign investments for national security threats.

This bill would not have been possible without the leadership of one Senator in particular; that is, the senior Senator from Arizona. Senator MCCAIN's leadership on this legislation and throughout his career is why this Congress honored him through the naming of this bill—the John McCain National Defense Authorization Act. That is a rare honor. Congress rarely honors its own. We all know we all have feet of clay and don't put our friends here up on a pedestal, but for a few lions in the Senate, including Sam Nunn, John Warner, Ike Skelton, Carl Levin, and now JOHN MCCAIN, we have done that.

It honors his commitment to our national security through the John S. McCain Strategic Defense Fellows Program—fitting tributes to the service and sacrifice of a man like JOHN MCCAIN. We know his story—how a young Navy pilot was captured behind enemy lines, yet he never wavered in his commitment to his fellow POWs in Vietnam.
