

bipartisan support. I am proud that two of my own bills were included in that package. The Protecting Moms and Infant Act safeguards of the addiction crisis from its heartbreaking consequences, and the CAREER Act addresses the major role that stable employment plays in long-term recovery. It encourages treatment facilities to form partnerships with local businesses and short-term housing facilities to “hand up” to those who need it.

We are proud of what we accomplished a year ago, and I am proud that my Kentucky colleague, Representative ANDY BARR, is leading the push for the CAREER Act’s companion legislation over in the House.

But we know all too well that, unfortunately, this work is far, far from finished. That is why, this very week, the Senate is moving forward $25 million more for the CAREER Act’s transitional housing pilot program in the domestic appropriations we are advancing here on the floor.

The work will not stop there. This fight has been one of my top priorities since I became majority leader. We have put cutting-edge tools into the hands of healthcare professionals and first responders who face this crisis every single day.

In my State alone, I helped secure an unprecedented $200 million to address the urgent crisis facing Kentuckians—a funding increase of more than 400 percent on this issue for Kentucky since I became majority leader.

We have committed to a comprehensive strategy of prevention, treatment, and enforcement efforts. At my invitation, the White House drug czar, Jim Carroll, saw some of Kentucky’s innovative leadership firsthand when he visited this past April. We have pushed the boundaries of research to find new ways to treat addiction and help families escape its painful consequences.

Earlier this month I joined Secretary Azar, NIH Director Collins, and an all-star research team at the University of Kentucky to celebrate the largest Federal grant in the University of Kentucky’s history. These new resources will fuel UK’s bold commitment to cutting overdose deaths by 40 percent in 16 counties over the coming 3 years. I was proud to help secure those funds.

Kentucky is proud that we are leading the national response, but I know my colleagues each have their own inspiring stories of how States are fighting back.

As I said, the work is far from over, but today we take a moment to celebrate the progress of the past year. To help mark this anniversary, the First Lady of the United States joined us here in the Senate yesterday.

I am proud to stand with her and the Trump administration and my colleagues in this body as we recommit ourselves to this effort.

SENATE LEGISLATIVE AGENDA

Mr. McCONNELL. Madam President, this anniversary also reminds us of how many urgent issues are crying out for substantive, bipartisan, bicameral cooperation for the good of the American people.

I am talking about funding our Armed Forces and the Department of Defense, just as both sides agreed to do back in the summer when we signed on to a bipartisan, bicameral budget agreement that Democrats have lately sort of wandered away from—just wandered right away from it.

I am talking about passing the USMCA, the most consequential update to North American trade policy in a generation, which Speaker PELOSI has put on ice in order to move Democrats’ impeachment obsession to the front burner, despite the fact that there are 176,000 new American jobs on the line if we pass the USMCA.

The needs of the American people have not been put on pause just because Washington Democrats have decided it doesn’t suit them to get along with the White House.

My friends in Democratic leadership insist over and over that their focus on undoing the 2016 election will not keep them from the substantive legislation that American families need. Well, our Armed Forces are still waiting for their funding; our workers and small businesses are still waiting on their new trade agreement.

Our Senate Democratic colleagues have enough time to push partisan resolutions, such as their effort yesterday to enact a new tax cut—listen to this—their effort yesterday to enact a new tax cut for wealthy people in blue States, like New York and New Jersey, at the expense of working families everywhere else.

But so far we have seen little—little—indication that they are really ready to put our differences aside and come to the table on significant bipartisan subjects that can actually become law.

I worry that something like the landmark opioid package that we are celebrating today would not have moved through the Congress today, just one year later. I worry it would have been another victim of Democrats’ decision to avoid working with Republicans and the White House on basically anything, to keep all of their focus trained on impeachment.

I hope I am mistaken. I hope we make real progress soon. The American people are waiting on us.

TRUMP ADMINISTRATION

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, over the past few weeks, the House of Representatives has continued to hear testimony as part of its impeachment inquiry, which stems from allegations that President Trump pressured a foreign leader to investigate a domestic political rival. These allegations were deemed “credible” and an “urgent concern” by the inspector general of the intelligence community, who is a Trump appointee. That is how this all started, not with some Democrat stirring the pot but with a Trump appointee, a very well-respected man, saying that these allegations were credible and urgent.

The public record—the public record—shows that the White House delayed more than $391 million in crucial security assistance to Ukraine to help the country stave off Russian aggression. In a memorandum of the President’s phone call with Ukrainian President Zelensky, released by the White House itself, the President requested Ukraine undertake investigations that would benefit him politically.

Only a few days ago, as we all know, the Chief of Staff to the President, Mick Mulvaney, admitted publicly that the administration held up security assistance for the same political reasons. Mr. Mulvaney, of course, later attempted to retract his comments, but his original statements were quite clear, and I would say that anyone who is not biased believed the original.

The White House continues to claim that fighting corruption in Ukraine was its only intent, but that is belied by the fact that it has proposed massive cuts to the State Department’s budget to fight corruption around the world. On the one hand they say we
