

side of the aisle that I interpreted also as overstatements. We do get carried away sometimes in debate.

This Senator, both in the Budget Committee and on the floor of the Senate, has tried to make a case as I saw it in a responsible, honest manner.

I just want to say, once again, that I spoke a few moments ago about one of the greatest overstatements that I keep hearing on the floor of the Senate on this matter, despite the fact that the Democrats have not offered an amendment and as far as I know will not during this debate that violates the very principles that the Senator from New Mexico emphasized was part and parcel of the budget, to protect the kids of the future, to eliminate the ever skyrocketing deficit and grossly increasing national debt.

But, once again, I feel, when somebody on this side of the aisle or somebody on that side of the aisle gets up and says something about overstatements by someone on the other side, they better be careful that they are not throwing rocks at their own glass houses.

My friend from New Mexico went right after one of the very basic tenets of the remarks that I made, I think in a reasonable fashion, just before we went into the closing procedures, and that was that I have heard the statement, certainly an overstatement, once again, from the chairman of the Budget Committee that the Democrats want to take this money and spend it. Well, I think that is a good buzzword and I think the Republicans have researched that well in their extensive polling.

I want it clearly understood that this deficit hawk, this conservative Democrat, is not for spending in the context that the Republicans continue to use during this debate, accusing the Democrats of spending when we are not spending. We are reducing the hits. We are reducing the significant reductions in hits in a whole series of programs that even the Republicans concede are very heavy and very difficult.

I simply say, Madam President, once again, I hope that we can continue a legitimate debate on Monday, to debate the legitimate issues in proper form and with proper respect for all Members of the Senate that I have great respect for, but I recognize that all of us, from time to time, make some overstatements.

I just hope, because every time I hear the Republicans talking about spending, I wish that they would better define that word. We are not spending money. We are trying to alleviate what we think are more onerous cuts in budgets of the most needy of our citizens, especially our senior citizens, and especially our young people who were relying on Government loans to get their education. We will continue the debate on Monday next.

I yield the floor.
