AN ILLINOIS HERO AND ILLINOIS LEADER, JUDGE ABRAHAM LINCOLN MAROVITZ CELEBRATES HIS 90TH BIRTHDAY

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, a real Illinois hero, a real Illinois leader, Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz, celebrates his 90th birthday on August 10th of this year. Unfortunately, my Senate duties prevent me from being in Illinois with Judge Marovitz tomorrow, so I want to take this opportunity to tell him how much I think of him, how much he has helped me, and how much he means to the people of Illinois.

I am very proud that Judge Marovitz took the time to act as my mentor. He always had time for me. He always made time for me. I feel very fortunate to have had the benefit of his counsel and advice throughout my career.

I first met Judge Marovitz as a young Assistant U.S. attorney. Even though he was a Federal District Judge, he went out of his way to help me become a good trial lawyer. He virtually walked me through my first trial, and the special attention he gave me helped convince me that I had made the right choice in becoming a lawyer.

What is really so remarkable about Judge Marovitz, however, was that the special attention he gave me was an everyday thing for him. He treated everyone as special. He made a major difference in my life, and in my career—I probably would not be in the United States Senate today if not for his help all through my career—I am but one of the many, many people he has helped.

He has always found the time to encourage the good in people. He is never too busy to care, or to give real attention to personal need.

At the outset of my remarks, I stated that Judge Marovitz was a real hero. He was a World War II marine veteran, but his heroism was not limited to his years in military service; it encompasses his entire life. His is a heroism based on commitment to principle, on always living and acting on those principles, and perhaps most of all, on his untiring efforts to make this a better America for every American.

As Steve Neal said in his column entitled "Marovitz: A Legacy of Citizenship" in today's Chicago Sun-Times, "Marovitz is a believer in the American Dream because he has lived it." To that, I would only add, that Judge Marovitz has made it his life's work to try to see that every American can live that dream.

He has had a distinguished career as a jurist. And I have to say that Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz is very well named; he has always dispensed justice, as President Lincoln said in his second inaugural address "with malice towards none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right * * *."

Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz has been a leader all his life, and has been the best kind of leader, one whose leadership is based on his own life of excellence, of principle, and of commitment to others. He has served as a judge for most of his professional life, and he is still building on the superb record he has created.

I wish him the happiest of birthdays, and I want him to know that, whether the Senate is in session or not, I intend to be at the party celebrating his 100th birthday.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Steve Neal column on Judge Marovitz be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAROVITZ: A LEGACY OF CITIZENSHIP

(By Steve Neal)

The federal courtroom was packed. Senior Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz asked the multiethnic group of men and women, young and old, to stand and take the oath of U.S. citizenship.

Standing behind the bench in the courtroom that bears his name, Marovitz asks the new citizens to renounce in unison their allegiances or loyalty "to any foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty," and to defend the Constitution of the United States.

He is a man for all people. Marovitz performs this ceremony twice a month, as he has for more than 30 years. For Marovitz, who celebrates his 90th birthday Thursday, the induction ceremony has a special significance. He is a believer in the American dream because he has lived it. His father, a Lithuanian immigrant, took the same oath of citizenship in 1894.

"Every time I perform the induction ceremony I think of my father," says Marovitz, who is wearing cuff links with portraits of his parents. He talks with love and pride of the legacy of Joseph and Rachel Marovitz. The U.S. Immigration Department has given Marovitz an award for administering the citizenship oath to more naturalized Americans than any other member of the federal bench.

Nearly everywhere Marovitz goes, he is approached by a man or woman who took the citizenship oath in his courtroom. His door is always open to the people whose lives he has touched.

Marovitz talks with nostalgia about the immigrant world in which he grew up. He is a West Sider from the old Maxwell Street neighborhood. His father had a tailor shop, and his mother ran a candy store in front of the family's three-room apartment. "It was a large Jewish community and we learned the importance of hard work, loyalty and fairness," said Marovitz.

His path to prominence wasn't easy. Marovitz still remembers the hurt, anger and humiliation he felt as a teenager when he was fired from his job in a Michigan Avenue clothing store after his employer learned that he was Jewish. "My father told me that anti-Semitism is an old story, but that one day I would do something about it," Marovitz recalled. The elder Marovitz lived to see his son become the youngest assistant state's attorney in Cook County history, and the first Jewish Illinois state senator.

A Marine veteran of World War II, Marovitz has served on the bench for half of his life. In the mid-1950's, he nearly became the Democratic nominee for governor of Illinois. But Marovitz recalled Tuesday that his mother told him not to quit the court because no office is more important than judge. Marovitz took her advice. He has no regrets.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE ARTHUR MAGILL, AUGUST 9, 1995

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, one of the unique aspects of the American business community is the concept of the "corporate neighbor". The belief that business leaders and heads of companies need to be involved in their communities and give something back to the cities, States, and Nation which have allowed their enterprises to prosper. Some of the leading philanthropic and charitable organizations in the Nation were started by the men who made their fortunes in business. Ford, Carnegie, and Rockefeller—among many others—are familiar names gracing endowments and foundations that support the arts and other noble causes. I rise today to pay tribute to a man, who in my home State of South Carolina, was a person who excelled in business and gave generously back to the city and State that he loved—Mr. Arthur Magill.

Born in Philadelphia, Arthur Magill moved to South Carolina in 1954 after inheriting the textile business his father started, Her Majesty Industries. Three of the company's mills were located in South Carolina and Arthur chose to settle in the upstate city of Greenville, a historic community that was at the heart of much of the South's textile manufacturing. In the 41 years between Arthur's arrival in South Carolina and his death earlier this week, he became known as a gifted businessman, a civically concerned individual, and a supporter and pioneer of culture in South Carolina.

Many organizations benefitted from the generosity of Arthur Magill and the foundation he and his wife started, including the Greenville County Library, the Greenville Little Theater, the Greenville Symphony, and the South Carolina State Museum. Perhaps Arthur's most well known contribution to the arts community was his purchase of a large collection of Andrew
