

I think of other people in this Chamber, how I regard other Members of Congress, how they stack up. And several times in the last few months people have said to me, is there anyone in Congress that you regard as truly great? My answer has always been the same: RON DELLUMS. RON DELLUMS is a truly great man. This Chamber will miss him.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Education and the Workforce:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to present to you the 1996 annual report of the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), the Federal agency charged with fostering scholarship and enriching the ideas and wisdom born of the humanities. The agency supports an impressive range of projects encompassing the worlds of history, literature, philosophy, and culture. Through these projects, Americans of all walks of life are able to explore and share in the uniqueness of our Nation's democratic experience.

The activities of the NEH touch tens of millions of our citizens—from the youngest students to the most veteran professors, to men and women who simply strive for a greater appreciation of our Nation's past, present, and future. The NEH has supported projects as diverse as the widely viewed documentary, The West, and research as specialized as that conducted on the Lakota Tribe. Small historical societies have received support, as have some of the Nation's largest cultural institutions.

Throughout our history, the humanities have provided Americans with the knowledge, insights, and perspectives needed to move ourselves and our civilization forward. Today, the NEH remains vitally important to promoting our Nation's culture. Not only does its work continue to add immeasurably to our civic life, it strengthens the democratic spirit so essential to our country and our world on the eve of a new century.

PROPOSED TOBACCO SETTLEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, let me state at the outset that I do not smoke, nor do I encourage others to smoke. Children should not smoke, nor should they be enticed to smoke. I applaud the President Clinton's efforts to curb and ultimately reduce the incidence of youth smoking in the United States in the near future.

Tobacco, the mere word, engenders many strong feelings and opinions in most Americans and especially in those of us who serve in Congress. With regard to the pending tobacco settlement, no matter how you feel about tobacco, one must view it for what it is, a legal commodity grown by many American farmers.

North Carolina grows quite a lot of tobacco, both burley and flue-cured. Over 65 percent of the total U.S. production is grown in North Carolina of flue-cured. In fact, my constituency, the First Congressional District, produces more flue-cured tobacco than any other in the Nation. These eastern North Carolina farmers produced over 225 million pounds in 1995.

These North Carolina farmers, our tobacco farmers, want the same things as other Americans, a good quality of life overall for them and their families, for their children to have a good education, for them to have sufficient resources with which to provide their families with food, shelter and other amenities of life, savings for their retirement, a secure environment in which to live and work, and most importantly, hope for the future.

These farmers, our tobacco farmers, care about their children as well as other children in their community, instilling in them the values of honesty and hard work. Many of them are third and fourth generation tobacco farmers, even though some of them must seek additional employment off the farms as teachers, business persons, factory workers and other occupations. Many of them serve as leaders in their communities, in their schools, in their churches, in their synagogues and in other local and civic organizations.

Like other American farmers, like those in many of your home States, these North Carolinians prepared their land, tilled it carefully, planted their crops, tended their fields, harvested their yields and marketed their product, much like any other commodity such as corn and wheat. These farmers are often small family farms. The average size in North Carolina is 172 acres, as compared to 491 acres nationally.

Tobacco is one of the main reasons that small farmers are able to stay in business because no other crop yields as much income per acre. Most of these farmers are unable to find an alternate crop that provides a comparable income. It would take almost 8 times as much cotton, 15 times as much acreage of corn, 20 times more acreage of soybeans and 30 times more acreage of wheat to equal the income of a single acre of tobacco. Farmers would have to acquire the land, secure the needed equipment, purchase the required seed, fertilizer and pesticides and hire the labor, undue and perhaps impossible financial burdens of acquiring extra loans and debt, all too often not available to those socially disadvantaged farmers or to minority farmers.

The total income impact for North Carolina was more than $7.7 billion last year, income that came from a combination of the production, the manufacture and the marketing. North Carolina entrepreneurs and employees, all of those benefit from those resources. The money earned by farmers and those employed in tobacco-related business flow into their communities, spreading those profits around. It has been estimated that the agriculture dollar turns over about 10 times, so 7.7 billion multiplied means there is a possibility of $77 billion available to rural
