

benefits or protecting the Point Reyes seashore, he was unmatched in knowing how to make the inter- and intra-party contacts that led to success.

His return to the state Legislature in 1988 was welcomed by Democrats and Republicans alike, because all recognized that here was a consummate politician who knew how to make policy happen and who spoke with a candor and frankness unmatched in Sacramento or in Washington. Mark Shields, one of our most respected political observers, recently wrote a wonderful column about John Burton's election as Senate President that every member of the House deserves to read. Those who knew John here will immediately recognize him; those who did not have that pleasure will instantly know him.

A CALIFORNIA COMEBACK
(By Mark Shields)

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.—You may already have heard the joyless laughter that follows the line: George Washington was the president who could never tell a lie; Richard Nixon was the president who could never tell the truth; and Bill Clinton is the president who cannot tell the difference.

Well here in California's capital city, the second most powerful position in state government—that of president pro tempore of the State Senate—has just been won in a 32 to 0 vote by a blunt, profane, quick-tempered and unreconstructed liberal Democrat from San Francisco who was elected to the State Assembly in 1964, to the U.S. House in 1974 and who, in 1982, left Congress to seek treatment for cocaine and alcohol addiction.

What makes John Burton so appealing in today's politics of slippery hedging and too-clever evasiveness is the man's barefaced candor. U.S. Rep. James Rogan, R-Calif., who served with and voted against Burton in the California Assembly, confesses: "John Burton is just a man of incredible integrity. . . . I love him because he is the most honest liberal I've ever know. He really feels, he really bleeds, for the underprivileged."

Rogan remembered the night in the Assembly when Burton single-handedly stopped a Republican-backed bill to criminalize the use of cocaine by pregnant women. Burton spoke in stark terms of his own addiction, of the advantages he had as a professional and a member of Congress for treatment at Bethesda and Walter Reed.

He told of the daily battle the recovering addict must wage against the demons and of how much more lonely and terrifying it is for the poor addict: "You don't kick it until you die. You have two choices. Either you die clean or you die dirty."

As John Jacobs wrote in "A Rage for Justice," his truly masterful biography of John Burton's late brother, Phil, who was arguably the most influential member of Congress ever from California, "Somewhere in his (John's) mind, he seized on the image of his teenage daughter, Kim, and the thought of her gave him the strength to begin his long, painful recovery. Kim gave him back his life. He gave Kim back her father."

John Burton, who has been both clean and sober for 15 years now, won back his State Assembly seat in 1988 with the strong backing of his friend of 40 years, now San Francisco Mayor Willie Brown. He was elected to the Senate in 1996. Happily, he has not mellowed. His language could still make a long-shoreman blush. His ability to employ forms of a single four letter word as verb, noun, adjective, gerund, participle, prefix, suffix and even infix is truly remarkable. He does not delete expletives.

Pleased, almost humbled, by the confidence of his colleagues, Burton questions what all the praise about his integrity and the keeping of his word says about the state of politics today. "When I grew up, all you had was your word. It was a given that you never went back on your word. It should be that way."

In an era of carefully crafted non-responses released by elected officeholders who echo the findings of focus groups and then deploy spin doctors, Burton is refreshing. Another old adversary and good friend, former GOP State Senate Leader Bill Campbell, explains that appeal: "Johnny Burton has great credibility because you and everyone else knows where he stands."

Where Burton stands politically is where he has always stood. His politics is personal, liberal and decidedly untrendy. He continually embraces the poor, workers, the stranger, the despised—all of those living on the outskirts of hope. Burton fights to prevent the rich from getting too greedy, and to make sure that the poor and middle class enjoy more economic security and receive their share of this society's wealth.

"I don't get this 'New Democrat' b— s—," rails Burton. "There are only so many ways you can feed hungry people, or get jobs for people who don't have them, and get kids a good education."

When he took the oath of office as Senate President Pro Tempore, John Burton thanked his daughter and quoted the words of American composer Jerome Kern:

Nothing's impossible I have found,
for when you find yourself on the ground
you pick yourself up, dust yourself off, and start all over again."

Whoever said there are no second acts in American life never met John Burton.

TRIBUTE TO SERGEANT JOHN
FRANCIS KRUG

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 1, 1998

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, Congress is assisted in its duties by many men and women without whom we could not do our work effectively. From time to time, an opportunity arises for us to pay tribute to one of those people, and today presents such an opportunity.

After twenty-five and one-half years of faithful service to the United States Congress and more than 30 years dedicated to law enforcement, Sergeant John Francis Krug is retiring on April 3rd. He began his law enforcement career as a fingerprint technician for the Federal Bureau of Investigation in 1967 and became a member of the United States Capitol Police on October 16, 1972.

During his tenure with the Capitol Police, John Krug has served in many capacities. His initial assignments included patrolling the House office buildings and the Capitol. In 1984, to better utilize his experience, he was reassigned to Protective Services where he provided personal protection for individual Members of Congress. In 1987, John was promoted to the rank of sergeant and, once again, served as an integral member of the Capitol Division, ensuring the safety of Congress, staff, and the millions of tourists who visit the Capitol each year.

Most recently, he supervised the Department's Special Events Unit. In this position, he became the central information point for numerous events such as demonstrations, inaugurations, joint meetings of Congress, displays, ceremonies and concerts that took place within the perimeters of the Capitol complex. He assisted in coordinating security for visiting U.S. Government Officials and foreign dignitaries, from the President of the United States to King Hussein of Jordan. Most Capitol Police officers and congressional offices have sought out the Special Events Unit, and Sergeant Krug in particular, for his assistance or advice regarding a congressional event.

I am sure that I speak for all our colleagues when I wish Sergeant Krug our best in the years ahead, and thank him for his many years of dedicated service to the United States Congress.

REFLECTIONS ON EASTER AND SPRING

HON. JENNIFER DUNN

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 1, 1998

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Honorable Peter Tali Coleman, a great American who passed from us on April 28, 1997. A four-term chief executive of American Samoa, Peter Coleman is the only person in American history whose service as governor, from the 1950s to the 1990s, has spanned five decades.

After World War II service as an army officer in the Pacific, for which he later was honored by selection to the army infantry hall of fame at Ft. Benning, Georgia, Governor Coleman's civilian career as a public servant began in 1946 on the staff of The Honorable George Bender, a member of this body from Ohio. He later also served as a member of our Capitol Police Force, all while raising a family and completing both an undergraduate and a law degree in just five years from Georgetown University.

Mr. Speaker, upon his return to American Samoa as the first Samoan ever to gain a law degree, he quickly rose from public defender to attorney general until his appointment in 1956 by President Eisenhower as the first native-born governor of American Samoa. He went on to be chief executive of the Marshall Islands and Northern Mariana Islands, and deputy high commissioner of the old Trust Territory of the Pacific before returning home in 1977 to become America Samoa's first elected governor, a post to which he would be elected twice more before retiring in 1993.

Governor Coleman, a true trailblazer in the Pacific Islands and a man of many firsts during more than half a century of service to his nation and his own people, has been paid tribute by the current governor, Tauese P. Sunia, who has launched a drive to establish a permanent lectureship on Pacific Public Policy at Georgetown in Governor Coleman's name.

However, of all his honors and achievements, Mr. Speaker, Governor Coleman was proudest of his family, which at his death included his lovely wife Nora, 12 of their 13 children, 22 grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren. As he departed the hospital last year to return home for what he knew would be his final battle, he penned a touching farewell letter to his people which he called "Reflections on Easter and Spring."
