

I am honored and humbled to be a partner in this effort and in this enterprise.

So, Mr. Speaker, I salute the Breast Cancer Institute, the Breast Resource Center, Nancy Oster, Barbie Deutsch, and all the other breast cancer survivors who carry on. They have taken what can be seen as a tragic circumstance and turned it into something real and something powerful. This is a community operating at its best, and I implore women all around the country to look to Santa Barbara and these special women for inspiration. I also implore those of us who are Members of this body, this House of Representatives, to take the inspiration of these women as motivation, as a call to action, to provide the resources to find a cure, resources for early diagnosis, for effective treatment.

We are partners with you, Barbie and Nancy, and those of you in the Breast Resource Center. I salute you, and I thank you for leading the way.

COMMEMORATION OF THE 83rd ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PORTER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, today I come to the floor again to commemorate the anniversary of one of the darkest stains on the history of Western civilization, the genocide of the Armenian people by the Ottoman Turkish Empire. I greatly appreciate the strong support of so many of our colleagues in this effort, especially that of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) my fellow cochairman of the Armenian Issues Caucus.

I commend the gentleman for arranging this evening and for his continued dedication to these vitally important issues.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a single Member here who wishes that we did not have to have this special order. We would like to believe that such a tragedy could have never happened, because it is painful to accept that man is capable of perpetuating and tolerating such atrocities. Unfortunately, however, we have seen over and over the tragic results of hatred and ignorance; the Holocaust, ethnic cleansing in the former Yugoslavia, the Rwandan genocide. And too often, the so-called civilized nations of the world have turned a blind eye.

On April 24th, 1915, over 200 Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested in Istanbul and killed, marking the beginning of an 8-year campaign, which resulted in the destruction of the ethnic Armenian community, which had previously lived in Anatolia, in western Armenia. Between 1915 and 1923, approximately 1.5 million Armenians were killed, and more than 500,000 were exiled.

The U.S. Government was aware of what was happening during these tragic years. The U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, Henry Morgenthau, Sr., sent back graphic descriptions of death marches and mass killings. Other Western diplomats did the same.

Although the U.S. and others voiced concerns about the atrocities and sent humanitarian assistance, little was actually done to stop the massacres. The Armenian genocide was the first genocide of the modern age and has been recognized as a precursor of subsequent attempts to destroy a race through an official systematic effort.

We must call this what it was, genocide, and we must never forget that it happened. Congress has consistently demanded recognition of the historical fact of the Armenian genocide. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for our executive branch.

The modern German Government, although not itself responsible for the horrors of the Holocaust, has taken responsibility for it and apologized for it. Yet the modern Turkish Government continues to deny that the Armenian genocide ever happened. Moreover, they have chosen to attack the messengers with smear campaigns and misinformation, rather than facing historical facts. A number of Members of Congress have been called names and accused of lying and treachery by the Turkish media for simply speaking the truth.

Turkish refusal to acknowledge historical facts fits the pattern of denial that, unfortunately, we have come to expect; denial of torture, denial of repression of minorities, denial of political repression, denial of high-level corruption.

Recently, however, some Turkish officials have realized that the only way Turkey can cement her position in the community of democratic nations is to admit these problems and deal with them.

There is finally a national dialogue in Turkey about these human rights abuses. I have yet, however, to witness a change in rhetoric about the Armenian genocide. I hope that the fact that Turkey and Armenia may begin direct bilateral discussions to improve relations will signal real substantive change.

Armenia and the Armenians will remain vigilant to assure that this tragic history is not repeated. The United States should do all it can in this regard as well, including a clear message about the historical fact of the Armenian genocide.

I call on President Clinton to have the courage to speak plainly about what happened 83 years ago. We do Turkey no favors by facilitating her self-delusion, and we make ourselves hypocrites when we fail to sound the alarm on the human rights abuses occurring in Turkey, a close American ally today.

Armenia has made amazing progress in rebuilding a society and a Nation, a triumph of the human spirit in the face of dramatic obstacles. Armenia is committed to democracy, market economics, and the rule of law, as evidenced by the recent peaceful free and successful Presidential elections.

The time has come to recognize the history of the region, to admit the truth of the Armenian genocide, and to bring the nations and peoples together to live in peace and with a commitment that never again will an atrocity such as this be allowed to occur.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE BELLA ABZUG

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, along with the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER), I am due later to cosponsor a special order for Bella Abzug, who died last week. I will need to be in my district for an event, and wanted to offer these 5 minutes of commemoration at this time.

When I heard that Bella was dead, I immediately said something close to, "Well, she can't die. She doesn't die. Bella doesn't do things like that."

I think this was my spontaneous reaction, because Bella seemed to many of us incapable of dying. There was so much life there, we felt that by the time she was to die, there would simply be leftover life. In the permanence of the memory of her life and times there, of course, is leftover life.

Feminists will compete with the other great causes of Bella's time for entitlement to her energetic legacy, for Bella's feminism owed as much to her universal sense of justice as to her gender.

Bella has been called, "The bravest, smartest, brightest progressive of our generation," and I think that the vote in the House where she served would not be close on that one. Civil liberties and the antiwar movement, civil rights and the environment, economic justice and the labor movement, Bella did not simply taste the great social movements of her time; she drank deeply, more often than not after being among the first to pour the energy into them that started their growth in the first place.

Every new movement needs a Bella. Few get them. The second feminist revolution got Bella, and Bella is just what feminism needed then. Women had been patronized and placated for so long in this country, they needed a woman who could not be ignored.

Bella of the Bronx, in case you had not noticed; Bella, daughter of the live-and-let-live meat market; Bella, who learned to live by the opposite credo; Bella was a force that spread through this House and has made it never the same since.

Then there were 10; now we are 55. Today we celebrated three new women
