Indeed, it astounds me when I think of how far we have come since I introduced the original joint resolution of Congress establishing the very first National Girls and Women in Sports Day back in 1986. Where dreams of athletic glory seemed like the domain of boys, today—thanks in large part to our Women’s National Soccer Team—girls now have aspirations of their own.

Watching this team has inspired a whole generation of girls to believe that they can go as high and as far as their talent—and their drive—will take them. Indeed, I have no doubt that girls across America will be running around the soccer fields this summer pretending to be Briana Scurry, Michelle Akers, Mia Hamm, or whoever their particular heroine may be. Certainly, on this team, there are plenty from which to choose.

The U.S. Women’s National Socce Team is one example of how, when it comes to athletics, women are “coming off the bench,” as it were, and taking their rightful place on the fields, on the courts, in the schoolyards and in our stadiums. They prove, once again, that women are just as sure-footed, clear as they are in heels or whatever other shoes they decide to fill.

In addition to commending the team for all they’ve done, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the organizers and sponsors of the entire event for the extraordinary job they did in making this tournament a success beyond anyone’s wildest dreams. I have no doubt these past few weeks will have an impact on sports in America that will resonate for years.

Again, let me just express my most sincere appreciation to each and every member of the U.S. Women’s World Cup Team for making us so proud.

Whereas the Americans inspired young women throughout the country to participate in soccer and other competitive sports that can enhance self-esteem and physical fitness;

Whereas the Team has helped to highlight the importance and positive results of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (20 U.S.C. 1681), a law enacted to eliminate sex discrimination in education in the United States and to expand sports participation by girls and women;

Whereas the Team became the first team representing a country hosting the Women’s World Cup tournament to win the tournament;

Whereas the popularity of the Team is evidenced by the facts that more fans watched the United States defeat Denmark in the World Cup opener held at Giants Stadium in New Jersey on June 19, 1999, than have ever watched a Giants or Jets National Football League game at that stadium, and over 90,000 people attended the final match in Pasadena, California, the largest attendance ever for a sporting event in which the only competitors were women;

Whereas the United States becomes the first women’s team to simultaneously reign as both Olympic and World Cup champions;

Whereas five Americans, forward Mia Hamm, midfielder Michelle Akers, goalkeeper Briana Scurry, and defenders Brandi Chastain and Carla Overbeck, were chosen for the elite 1999 Women’s World Cup All-Star team;

Whereas all the members of the 1999 U.S. women’s World Cup team—defenders Brandi Chastain, Christie Pearce, Lorrie Fair, Joy Fawcett, Carla Overbeck, and Kate Sobrero; forwards Danielle Fotopoulos, Mia Hamm, Shannon MacMillan, Cindy Parlow, Kristine Lilly, and Tiffeny Milbret; goalkeepers Tracy , and Sarah Joy. Webber; and midfielders Michelle Akers, Julie Foudy, Tiffany Roberts, Tisha Venturini, and Sara Whalen; and coach Tony DiCicco—both on the playing field and on the practice field, demonstrated their devotion to the team and played an important part in the team’s success;

Whereas the Americans will now set their sights in defending their Olympic title in Sydney 2000.

Resolved, That the Senate congratulates the U.S. Women’s World Cup Team on winning the 1999 Women’s World Cup Championship.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 5. Protecting Patients and Accelerating Their Treatment and Care.

(a) Findings—The Senate makes the following findings with respect to the expansion of medical malpractice liability lawsuits in Senate bill 6 (106th Congress):

(1) The expansion of liability in S. 6 (106th Congress) would not benefit patients and will not improve health care quality.

(2) Expanding the scope of medical malpractice liability lawsuits beyond the plans and employers will force higher costs on American families and their employers as a result of increased litigation, attorneys’ fees, administrative costs, the cost of defensive coverage determinations, liability insurance premium increases, and unlimited jury verdicts.

(3) Legal liability for health plans and employers is the largest expansion of medical malpractice in history and the most expensive provision of S. 6 (106th Congress), and would increase costs “on average, about 1.4 percent of the premiums of all employer-sponsored plans,” according to the Congressional Budget Office.

(b) Legislative Summary—The expansion of medical malpractice lawsuits would force employers to drop health coverage altogether, rather than take the risk of jeopardizing the solvency of their companies over lawsuits involving health claims.

(5) Seven out of 10 employers in the United States have less than 10 employees, and only 20 percent of these companies have health insurance. Such businesses already struggle to provide this coverage, and would be devastated by one lawsuit. And thus, would be forced to offer health insurance altogether.

(6) According to a Chamber of Commerce survey in July of 1998, 57 percent of small employers would be likely to drop coverage if exposed to increased lawsuits. Other studies have indicated that for every 1 percent real increase in premiums, small business health insurance would drop 2.6 percent.

Whereas the Americans blanked Germany in the second half of the quarter finals, before winning 3 to 2, shut out Brazil in the semifinals, 2 to 0, and then stymied China for 120 minutes Saturday, July 10, 1999; medicine and the delivery of unnecessary services that do not benefit patients, and results in decisions being based not on best practice protocols but on the latest jury verdicts and legal precedents.

(9) In order to minimize their liability risk and the liability risk for the actions of providers, health plans and employers would constitute whole new networks to manage hospitals and doctors. This result is the opposite of the very goal sought by S. 6 (106th Congress).

(10) The expansion of medical malpractice liability also would reduce consumer choice because it would drive from the marketplace many cost-effective and hybrid hospital delivery systems that are popular today with American families.

(11) The provisions of S. 6 (106th Congress) that greatly increase medical malpractice lawsuits against private health programs and employers are an ineffective means of compensating for injury or loss given that patients ultimately receive less than one-half of the total award and the rest goes to trial lawyers and court costs.

(12) Medical malpractice claims will not help patients get timely access to the care that they need because such claims take years to resolve and the payout is usually made over multiple years. Trial lawyers usually receive front and midnight when it can be between one-third and one-half of any total award.

(13) Expanding liability lawsuits is inconsistent with the recommendations of President Clinton’s Advisory Commission on Consumer Protection and Quality in the Health Care Industry, which specifically rejected expanded malpractice suits for medical malpractice lawyers because they believed it would have serious consequences on the entire health industry.

(14) At the State level, legislatures in 24 States have rejected the expansion of medical malpractice lawsuits against health plans and employers, and instead 26 States have adopted external grievance and appeals laws to protect patients.

(15) At a time when the tort system of the United States has been criticized as inefficient, expensive and of little benefit to the injured, S. 6 (106th Congress) would be bad medicine for American families, workers and employers, driving up premiums and rewarding medical malpractice lawyers.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the Sense of the Senate that—

(1) Americans families want and deserve quality health care;

(2) patients need health care before they are harmed rather than compensation provided long after an injury has occurred;

(3) the expansion of medical malpractice liability lawsuits would divert precious resources away from patient care and into the pocket of trial lawyers;

(4) health care reform should not result in higher costs for health insurance and fewer insured Americans; and

(5) wording a clear, fair, efficient, and independent grievances and appeals process will improve quality of care, patient access to care, and is the key to an efficient and innovative health care system in the 21st Century.

(c) NULLIFICATION OF PROVISION.—Section 302 of this Act shall be null and void and the amendments made by such section shall have no effect.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, this amendment goes to one of the critical issues in the Kennedy health care bill that has been debated for the last few days, which is the fact that the bill dramatically expands lawsuits in this country.

Our Nation is already far too litigious; 22 percent of our gross national product goes into lawsuits every year. That is literally hundreds of billions of dollars every year absorbed in our legal system—dollars that could be used much more productively.

In many areas we as a society—

The health care system today is very much underrepresented in the rural parts of this country, which allows attorneys to go out and sue in a variety of different areas which right now they do not have the opportunity to sue in—would increase the cost of premiums by 1.4 percent.

What does that mean? That means that approximately 600,000 Americans would be thrown off the insurance rolls. The practical effect of this expansion in lawsuits is that you would see a dramatic expansion in the cost of health care in this country and an equally dramatic increase in the number of uninsured in this country.

In addition, the cost of insurance for doctors would go up dramatically. Under a study done by the doctors’ insurance agents—not necessarily the HMO insurance agents or the health plan insurance agents but, rather, the doctors—it is estimated that the premiums on the errors and omissions policies of doctors would go up somewhere between 8 and 20 percent relative to the ERISA part of their insurance.

This means we would see a massive expansion of defensive medicine being practiced. We already know that defensive medicine is practiced excessively in this country, which means procedures undertaken not because the doctor believes they have to be undertaken but they are undertaken to protect a doctor from a lawyer. We would see a massive expansion of this defensive medicine by doctors.

What does that do? That drives up the cost of medicine, and it does very little to improve the quality of care.

Equally important, what would we see is a deterioration in the availability of doctors to practice specialties, which are unique and needed in rural areas—especially OB/GYN—which we have already seen driven out of many rural areas in this country because of the cost of the error and omissions policies. An 8 to 20 percent increase in the costs of these policies would have a devastating impact on an area of medicine which is already underrepresented in the rural parts of this country.

Six-hundred thousand fewer insured people, and what do we get for this explosion of opportunity for attorneys to bring lawsuits. They would be a whole new business enterprise created in this country, and it would be a massive enterprise, the purpose of which would be to bring lawsuits. Under the Kennedy bill, the practical implications of which are that the cost of health care in this country would go up dramatically.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that this bill, the Kennedy bill, because of the lawsuit language which allows attorneys to go out and sue in a variety of different areas—which right now they do not have the opportunity to sue in—would increase the cost of premiums by 1.4 percent.

What does that mean? That means that approximately 600,000 Americans would be thrown off the insurance rolls. The practical effect of this expansion in lawsuits is that you would see a dramatic expansion in the cost of health care in this country and an equally dramatic increase in the number of uninsured.
love this Kennedy bill. They are enthusiastic for this bill. If there is a basic beneficiary for the Kennedy bill, it is the trial lawyers in this country. That is what I call this bill. It is the "attorneys' annuity bill" rather than the Patients' Bill of Rights.

What do the consumers get when they get involved in these lawsuits? They will get very little. Will they get greater care? No. They will have to go to court to get care under this bill. A lawsuit has to be brought. Do they get better results? Absolutely not. The attorneys get 54 percent of the recovery. That leaves the litigants with a combined 46 percent after this, one-half being an economic loss and one-half being compensation for pain and suffering.

It makes very little sense when you realize that the only winners under the Kennedy bill are actually the attorneys in the expansion of lawsuits that will occur as a result of this bill. So where does that bring us? We have come up with a better idea in our bill. We say that rather than creating a brand new opportunity to create all sorts of new lawsuits and add a lot of new attorneys to the American culture, we can go after the problem directly, address the very little in the way of productivity—or better medicine, for that matter—let's get doctors to take a look at what doctors are deciding for patients.

Under our bill, a patient, rather than having to go to court to have their concerns addressed, gets to have their concerns addressed by, first, a doctor in the specialty dealing with the type of problem the patient has within the clinic or the group by which the person is being served. That doctor is independent. That doctor makes a decision: Did that patient have the right care or did that patient have the wrong care? Or should that patient get more care? If the patient isn't comfortable with that decision, the patient can get outside the clinic, outside the insurance group, and have another doctor, who is appointed after having been prequalified by a certified either State or Federal agency, and have another doctor review that patient's care.

If that doctor decides that the patient needs some other type of care—something that the clinic or the interests group did not decide that the patient should have—then that is binding. If the patient then cannot get outside the clinic, outside the insurance group. There is an independent review at two different points, one inside and one outside, done by doctors who have a binding decision on the patient. If the patient again is uncomfortable with that decision, then the patient can bring a suit but it is limited to the amount of damages, and it is limited to the cost of the event.

The practical approach they have put forward is to try to get the patient care, competent good care, efficient care quickly, and make sure they have gotten fair treatment and they have had a review by the appropriate doctors.

As a result, we reduce the cost of health care. As a result, we keep more people insured. As a result, we allow more people to participate in health insurance in this country. As a result, I admit that we do not create as many opportunities for attorneys to bring liability suits under this bill. We try to create the proper remedy. We do not create a bill that basically underwrites the legal profession in this country. That is absolutely right. We assist patients in getting care.

That is a big difference between these two bills. The original bill, the "Attorneys' Annuity Act," the "Kennedy Patients' Bill of Rights," is essentially a bill to promote attorneys. Our bill is a bill to promote health care.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the fact of the matter is, in the United States of America, if most of us live in, there are basically two groups of people who cannot be sued: foreign diplomats and HMOs. That is not the way it should be. We are saying HMOs should be treated like every other entity in the United States.

Today, even an HMO involved directly in dictating, denying, or delaying care for a patient can use a loophole in what we call ERISA to avoid any responsibility for the consequences of its actions. The American people simply do not support that. ERISA was designed to protect employees when they lose pension benefits to fraud, mismanagement, and employer bankruptcies, which occurred so often during the 1960s.

The law now has the effect of allowing an HMO to deny or delay care, with what they are trying to do is strike a provision from our bill which simply ensures HMOs can be held accountable for their actions. It would do for the HMO industry to consumers. They talk about this in vague abstract, as if this is some big cabal to change the law. All we want to do is make the law apply to HMOs.

Let's talk about a real person. Florence Corcoran is an example of the need to hold HMOs accountable. She lost a baby because the HMO refused the doctor's request for hospitalization in the last days of her pregnancy. The baby died from only 30 hours of at-home care. During the final months of pregnancy, when no one was on duty, her baby went into distress and died. Because Florence received health care coverage through an employer, they had to recognize the remedy for the death of this baby. The HMO was not responsible under the law for any cost because the Corcorans never incurred any medical expenses for the loss of their baby.

The case of appeals—the court that is highest except for the Supreme Court in this country—said, and I quote from a Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals:

The result ERISA compels us to reach means that the Corcorans have no remedy, State or Federal, for what may have been a serious mistake. This is troubling for several reasons. First, it eliminates an important check on the thousands of medical decisions routinely made in the burgeoning utilization review system. With liability rules generally liberalizing, the court's finding of substandard medical decisionmaking.

In another case, another Federal judge, Judge William Young, said:

ERISA has evolved into a shield of immunity that protects health insurers . . . from potential liability for the consequences of the wrongful denial of health benefits.

That is from the case of Andrews-Clarke v. Travelers Insurance Company, decided last year.

All we want to do is be able to hold the HMOs accountable.

What about the cost of this? We have an independent study by Coopers & Lybrand that found the cost to be as little as 3 cents per person per month.

We can handle that. That is fairness. The fact is, we are not going to create a flood of lawsuits. In fact, it will make people feel better about their health care and, in fact, make health care providers be more diligent in rendering adequate, complete care to their patients. It is not going to create massive lawsuits, as Coopers & Lybrand said.

The Republican provision leaves patients with no recourse if benefits are denied. That is wrong.

USA Today, in an editorial, says there "100 Million Reasons that the GOP's Health Plan Fails." That is the number of people not covered by our opponent's health plan. The majority of the American people with private insurance are not helped by their proposal.

Now, some of my colleagues say that doesn't matter because the States don't matter because the States do not provide for insurance are not helped by their proposal.

States don't guarantee access to specialists; 48 States don't hold plans accountable; 29 States don't provide for continuity of care; 39 States don't provide for ombudsmen; 27 States don't provide a balance between financial incentives to limit care. The fact is, the argument that the States do this is a specious argument.

Let me go back to a couple of cases I have described in the past to illustrate this point. I know some here in the Senate say this debate is not about individual cases, but I disagree. Ethan Bedrick was born in circumstances that were devastating, the umbilical cord wrapped around his neck causing partial asphyxiation. Consequently, he was born with cerebral palsy and was a spastic quadriplegic. He began to get therapy.

At age 14 months, the HMO stated: We are going to cut back on Ethan's therapy.

The doctor said: You shouldn't cut back on the therapy. Ethan has a chance to be able to walk by age 5.

The HMO says: A 50 percent chance of being able to walk by age 5 is minimal or insignificant. Therefore, we won't pay for it.

Now, is somebody going to protect Ethan? Does anything proposed by anyone on the other side of the aisle in the last 3 days solve this problem? The answer is no. In nothing they propose can they say they will have solved this problem—not just for Ethan but for all the other little Ethans in our country. They will deny him the rights that he ought to have.

What about Jimmy Adams? We had a big debate yesterday about emergency care. One of my colleagues stood up and said little Jimmy would be covered under their amendment. That is not the case. Jimmy Adams got sick at 104 degree fever in the middle of the night. His mother and father called the HMO. They were told to go to the Scottish Rite Hospital way across the city of Atlanta.

What is this? the mother asked.

I find a map, she was told.

So they got in the car at 2 in the morning and headed for Scottish Rite Hospital. They passed the first hospital, they passed the second and third hospitals—because they were not authorized to go to these emergency rooms by their HMO. An hour into the trip, they pulled into Scottish Rite Hospital, having passed three emergency rooms because the HMO wouldn't have paid for Jimmy's care there. That point, Jimmy Adam's heart had stopped. They were able to get his heart restarted. They intubated him. He was a very sick young man. He survived. However, gangrene from that episode caused Jimmy to lose both of his hands and his feet.

This is young Jimmy without hands or feet. He passed three emergency rooms because the HMO said: You have to be in a car an hour to go to the emergency room we will pay for.

Is there anything offered by anybody on the other side yesterday that would have solved this problem? The answer is no because Jimmy's family is enrolled in an HMO that would not be covered under our opponent's proposal. No emergency room provision offered by anybody on the other side, even though it was described in wonderful terms, would have done anything to help the Jimmy Adamses in a good many States in this country.

If you think that is wrong, I challenge anyone to tell me how you will receive this protection if you are among the 100 million not covered under the majority's bill and live in a State that does not have this coverage. That is the problem with the proposal by the majority party.

Let me give another example. This case deals with the issue of who determines what care is medically necessary and who pays for the care. This example was used by Dr. Greg Ganske, Republican Congressman from Iowa, who happens to be a reconstructive surgeon. This is a picture of a child with a very serious medical problem. Dr. Ganske contacted his colleagues in reconstructive surgery, and Mr. President, he found that 50 percent of them had cases such as this denied. In cases dealing with reconstructive surgery, 50 percent had cases denied because they were not medically necessary.

Think of that. Think of being the mother or father of this young child and being told reconstructive surgery is not medically necessary. Ask yourself whether you think that is reasonable. It is not. It is in this country and will happen again under the Republican bill because they do not allow a patient's doctor to determine what is medically necessary.

Let me show another picture of a child with the same cleft lip problem. Now let me show Members what happens when reconstructive surgery gives this young child a chance, an opportunity. Here is the same child. Take a look at what someone decides is "medically necessary" and what it will mean to this young child's life. This picture demonstrates what reconstructive surgery can do for this wonderful child.

As these real cases illustrate, this debate is not about theory. It is not about arguing the terminology in some half-baked plan that doesn't do much. It is about providing assurance and guarantees to people in this country.

Help this young child. Provide protection for Jacqueline Lee who fell off a cliff 40 feet, fractured her body in three places, and unconscious, is helicoptered to an emergency room. She is unconscious, out cold on a gurney. She survives and then is told by her HMO that she did not get prior approval for her emergency room visit and therefore they will not pay it.

Or Ray, the father who, with tears in his eyes, told about Matthew, his 12-year-old son, who lost his battle with cancer because they were forced to move from one hospital to another and the insurance company to provide for the treatment necessary to try to save him. Ray says, "We could not fight cancer and the insurance company at the same time, because they were forced to move from one hospital to another and the insurance company denied the right to hold them accountable." significantly limited—in fact, about the same way it is limited in our bill. I would point that out as a point of clarification.

The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire. I will delay my general remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GREGG. I yield the Senator from Alabama 10 minutes.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I will delay my overall remarks on this matter to deal precisely with some of the examples that have been cited.

There are a number of provisions in the law that allow the containment of lawsuits. Workman's comp—if a person is injured on the job, there are very limited matters for which they can sue. They do not have to prove negligence. They get compensation. They have a lot of advantages. They also are not able to sue their employer under those circumstances. Federal employees, including Senators, are not able to sue.

But let me say this, first and foremost, most people who are in the states have said, Right now we have this limitation on lawsuits—not a banning of lawsuits, but a limitation on lawsuits under Federal law. This legislation will increase significantly the power of individual patients to protect their rights against HMOs. It does change existing law. It does move the bar much lower for patients, in a way that makes sense, that keeps costs to a minimum, but improves their access. Now we talk about offering a 2- or 4-year lawsuit in exchange for the plan we have proposed that would allow immediate access to a panel of medical experts to review your claim.

Let me mention some of the special cases that were discussed previously. There is a public in which the HMO had denied therapy. Under our bill, you would have the existing rights we have today to go to court, but in addition to that, you would have an internal review process by the insurance provider. In addition to that, you would be able to have an independent external review of your claim that this therapy is needed. It would require, and provide for, a person with expertise in that medical specialty who is independent of the plan. It can stop a plan from doing something that is against the rights of patients. We do not need to foster a jackpot justice mentality when we can get prompt, professional care.

With regard to the Jimmy Evans situation, what will our bill do for that? Obviously, this matter has been discussed over and over again. It hurts me to see the emotional arguments made that ignore what this bill provides. This bill says you could use a "prudent layperson" standard on an emergency care. That means, if you believe your child needs to stop at the first hospital, you can stop there. A prudent layperson means the parent, using normal good judgment, is allowed to use that judgment about where to go in an emergency.

With regard to problem of cleft palate and medical necessity—we have, and have provided for, new requirements on HMOs. Ultimately, there would be an independent medical expert to review that claim. Surgery for cleft palate is not going to be denied. That is pure scare tactics, and it is offensive to me to suggest that. You can still go to court, at any rate, for the prompt, cost-free, independent medical reviews for benefits denied when they need it.

I have heard doctors express to me they do not like dealing with bureaucrats when they need to talk about what kind of treatment their patient needs. They are frustrated about that. So this bill says: That is not good enough. HMO; if you cannot respond promptly to a physician's request that the patient receive a certain type of treatment, you are going to have to provide an independent, external expert, with a specialty related to that patient's particular medical problem, who can make a decision that is binding on the HMOs but not on the patient. Let me emphasize, it is binding on the HMO, not to stop anything. If the expert says this treatment is needed, then it must be provided immediately.

I think these are the protections we want to provide.

This appeals process is a good plan. Basically, if a patient is denied a benefit, he or she can call the HMO for an internal review. If that is not satisfactory, he or she can demand an external review by an independent medical expert. Even after that, they still maintain the right to sue—a right which exists today.

I think this is a very good policy. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Massachusetts who was here in 1973 pointed out the obvious when he supported the establishment of HMOs. He said in his remarks on the Senate floor at that time these words:

Medical malpractice litigation has become an onerous and protracted means to resolve medical malpractice disputes. The costs are escalating with the premium dollar going to compensate the injured party. The delays in resolving such disputes average up to 4½ years from filing of a lawsuit. Litigation has failed to provide an efficient means to achieve a fair result for all concerned.

And I say amen to Senator Kennedy. He was correct about that. This is not working. It is not the way we can assure prompt care and responses to patients, doctors, and injured parties when they need help.

Senator Kennedy went on to say: Litigation of medical malpractice claims has not been an effective method to monitor quality health care standards.

I agree with that also. I believe the plan proposed by the Republican provides for a prompt, professional, low-cost, independent determination of disputes. Make no mistake about it, lawsuits are expensive. It takes 25 months—4 years, as Senator Kennedy says—to bring one to a conclusion. Lawyers charge $200 plus an hour. The plaintiffs' lawyers charge a 40% to 50% contingent fee. That means if the plaintiff receives $100,000, the lawyer gets $50,000. If the plaintiff gets $1 million, the lawyer gets $500,000. The lawyers have junior partner lawyers, paralegals, law clerks, and secretaries. They take deposition after deposition. Medical experts are called. Testimonies, reports, and legal research have to be prepared. Court appearances, pretrial hearings, discovery conferences have to be arranged and briefs have to be filed.

There is a burden on the courts when you have lawsuits. We pay the judges salaries. The more these cases are given to them to handle, the more judges we need to handle them. The judge has law clerks. Federal judges have at least two law clerks each, bailiffs, U.S. marshals, and court clerks to handle the cases—all of whom are paid for by the taxpayers. This does not include jurors and witnesses. Let's not even get into the cost of the courtroom. So to your courthouse and find out how much a courtroom costs to build. Figure it out on a weekly basis.

These cases go on for 1 year, 2 years, or even 4 years before they ever reach a conclusion.

That is not the way to help patients who need help. Some will win millions of dollars and some will win nothing. I will tell you what else will happen. It will be routine for plaintiffs' lawyers, to 90% to 50% of the time, to win nothing. They can do that, even if they can already make no mistake. Currently, if a physician treats you improperly or the hospital commits an act of negligence or a willful act of wrongdoing, you can sue them. Now we are discussing whether you can sue the insurance company for these kinds of problems.

We have made progress in allowing a good review, a tough new review process. The Kennedy plan is fatally flawed. We must not allow his plan to happen. President Clinton's own hand-picked 34-member Advisory Commission on Consumer Protection and Quality in the Health Care Industry refused to put liability reform or the Democratic liability plan in their bill when they did their report for the President. They did that for a reason. They considered the issue and decided it was not wise.

Meanwhile for some reason the President and Democratic Members have changed their minds. I suspect they have talked with their trial lawyer friends in the meantime and have been convinced they ought to go along with this new proposal.

It is not just the President’s own review of what has been the rejection of liability expansion and more lawsuits, but major newspapers in this country as well.

The Los Angeles Times:
Bad medicine for both employees and employers driving up premiums.
The New York Times:
Jury awards in State courts for malpractice are—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. SESSIONS. I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

Mr. GREGG. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. SESSIONS. The New York Times:
Jury awards in State courts for malpractice are notoriously capricious and do more harm than good to patients.

The Washington Post:
The threat of litigation is the wrong way to enforce rational decisionmaking.

This is a terrible idea. It is the wrong direction to go. It will add expense throughout the system and will not benefit patients by getting them care when they need it. This bill, as proposed, which I support, will do that. It will give patients immediate relief and expert evaluation of their claims.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the privilege of the floor be granted to the following individuals: Kathryn Vosburgh and Jennifer Barker who are interns with Senator Byron Dorgan of North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. On behalf of the minority, I extend 10 minutes to the Senator from Illinois, Mr. DURBIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. President, this is the heart of the debate. This is what the Patients’ Bill of Rights is all about. The insurance companies hate the idea of being sued in court as the devil hates holy water.

They do not want to be held accountable for their actions. They want to be protected so they can make the wrong decision when it comes to medical care for American families and never be held accountable.

The amendment being offered on the Republican side is an effort to take away from 123 million Americans the right to hold health insurance companies accountable. That is the bottom line: 123 million Americans will be denied an opportunity to go to court when a health insurance company makes a decision which costs them their health or their life.

Most people are stunned to know that you cannot take a health insurance company to court. Since 1974, a Federal law has protected health insurance companies from being sued. What happens when your doctor wants a certain procedure, a certain medicine, a certain specialist for your good or the good of your family, and that doctor is overruled by a health insurance company bureaucrat, the doctor is the only one who will be taken to court, not the health insurance company.

If we pass nothing else in this Patient’s Bill of Rights but this section which says health insurance companies be held accountable in court, it would be a major victory for America. I trust the judgment of 12 citizens of this country in a jury box to decide the fairness and legality of an issue. Obviously, the Republican side does not. They do not want the health insurance companies to go to court. They do not want them to face a jury. They do not want them to be held accountable.

This party, which parades and triumphs values and responsibility does not want to hold the health insurance companies responsible in the most basic form of adjudication in our country: a jury of your peers.

Oh, they make a lot of arguments about, oh, we are just gliding the lily and feathering the nests of all these trial lawyers. That is not what it is all about. You know it and all America knows it.

The health insurance companies, with the Republican majority, are determined to stop 123 million Americans from ever having a court. Ever. For the last 2 days, Senator Kennedy, Senator Reid, and all of my colleagues have brought stories to the floor—chilling, heartbreaking stories.

Here is one. Florence Corcoran. Let me quote Florence Corcoran:

They let a clerk thousands of miles away make a life threatening decision about my life and my baby’s life without even seeing me and overruled five of my doctors. They don’t get held accountable. And that’s what appalls me. I relive that all the time. Insurance companies don’t answer to nobody.

That is what Florence Corcoran says: “Nobody knows about ERISA,” this Federal law that protects health insurance companies from being sued.

If you are listening to the debate, you would think: Well, surely there must be a long roster of companies in America that receive the same kind of immunity from liability that cannot be brought to court. No. This is it. This is the only sector of the American economy—maybe the only sector in America—that is going to be allowed to be held above the law.

The Republican majority and the health insurance industry are determined to protect their immunity from a lawsuit so that Florence Corcoran, when her life and the life of her baby were threatened by the decision of a health insurance company, can’t even take that health insurance company to court.

The Senator from Alabama gets up and talks about: Oh, this legal system, it is so expensive. It takes so long. Let me tell you, when it is your life or the life of your baby, there is only one place to turn, this is where you will turn. Yes, you will go to a lawyer because you are not wealthy, who will charge a contingency fee, meaning if he wins he gets paid; if he loses, he does not. That is part of the American system.

How many times, day in and day out, do we hear about these cases—simple, ordinary Americans, living their life, doing what they are supposed to do, paying their taxes, going to work every day. They get caught up in a situation where someone’s negligence or wrongdoing hurts them. It could be an accident; it could be medical malpractice; it could be a decision by a company that was just plain wrong going on day after day. They get caught up in a situation where someone’s negligence or wrongdoing hurts them. It could be an accident; it could be medical malpractice; it could be a decision by a company that was just plain wrong.

Where do you turn? You write a letter to your Senator. That isn’t worth much, I will tell you. We will read it. We will write a reply. But if you want justice in America, then you have a chance to go to the court. But the Republican majority says, no, close the door to America’s families so that they cannot hold health insurance companies accountable in court.

For the last 2 days, we argued about all the outrages in these health insurance policies, that you can’t go to the nearest emergency room when someone in your family is hurt, that you can’t go to the specialist your doctor wants you to go to—the cases go on and on and we try, item by item, to make these health insurance plans more responsive to the reality of life and more responsive to the medical needs of Americans.

But let me tell you this. All of those amendments, all of those votes notwithstanding, this is the bottom line. This will change the mentality of these health insurance companies that say no, because they are driven by the ambition for greed and profit, say no over and over again, regardless.

The Cortez family from Elk Grove Village, IL, their tiny little baby, Rob, who is now 1 year old, has spinal muscular atrophy. For a year they tried to keep their family together with this little boy on a ventilator at home—on a ventilator at home. They have been fighting this disease, and every week they fight the insurance companies. Will they cover this care? Will they cover this drug? The battle goes on and on and on.

Mark my words—and I say this to my Republican colleagues—if that health insurance company knew their decisions would be judged by 12 of their peers, 12 American citizens, sitting in a jury box, I bet the Cortes family would get a lot better treatment. You know they would. They know they would be held accountable.

But the health insurance industry and the health insurance companies do not want the 123 million Americans to ever have a day in court when it comes to these health insurance decisions. Their arguments are as weak as they can be.

The State of Texas passed a patients' bill of rights that insurance coverage. This is a vote about whether 123 million Americans will be precluded from court by the Republican majority and the health insurance industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I simply note ERISA does not provide for a patient's bill of rights, so the Senator from Illinois is incorrect.

I yield to the Senator from Iowa 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this is a Democratic leadership war on health insurance coverage. This is their proposal to subject employer-sponsored health plans, and thus employers, to lawsuits. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I have worked for tort reform throughout my tenure in Washington. I believe our tort system is badly broken, it is injuring the nation's economy. Now, our Democratic colleagues propose to declare a "new gold rush" for the legal industry, this time in the area of health insurer liability. And the damage done by this plan will not be limited to our judiciary or our economy—it will harm our health. It's downright unhealthy for America.

Is that an overstatement, Mr. President? Well, people with health insurance are likely to have better health than those without it. If the Democrats are now saying that insurance coverage doesn't affect health status, then they'll have to explain why they keep coming up with all kinds of ideas on how to insure people. Five years ago, they thought it was important—so much so that they wanted the government to insure everyone. Of course, even with a Democratic President and Democratic control of both Houses of Congress, they didn't manage to do it. It's funny how we don't hear about that anymore, but it's certainly not because we solved the problem.

The President acknowledged the problem of the uninsured again when he proposed to allow people under age 65 to buy their way into the Medicare program. By the way, with a hefty subsidy from other Americans under age 65 who pay payroll taxes. Why does the President propose this unless he thinks insurance coverage will improve people's health status? Health insurance coverage is not an end unto itself, but a means to an end, and the end is better health. So when the Democrats propose things that will lessen health insurance coverage, and thus harm the health of the American people, we need to ask why.

Some argue that liability laws are a good way to guarantee quality of care. We're certainly not hearing much from the other side in this debate about quality, but objective people think that ensuring quality of care should be the point of patient protection. I care a great deal about health care quality, let me tell you about research that has been done in the context of medical malpractice. These studies, particularly the well-known Harvard study, tell us that the medical liability system is simply not an effective way to ensure quality. There is a tremendous mismatch between incidents of medical malpractice, on one hand, and the lawsuits that are brought, on the other. For many reasons, instances of substandard medical care often do not give rise to lawsuits, while many lawsuits that are brought are groundless. In the malpractice context, it is not feasible to have immediate appeals of physicians' decisions when they make them, so we're stuck with the tort system.

But when we talk about insurance coverage decisions, we do have an alternative to lawsuits: immediate, independent, external reviews of these decisions. We can do better than lawsuits after-the-fact. That's what our Republican Patients' Bill of Rights will do. It will get patients' claims decided when the patient needs the care. Isn't that the best thing for the patient? Yes—but it's not the best thing for the lawyers, and that's why we're here today.

Mr. President, the other day, I heard a Senator note that only a handful of medical malpractice cases have ever been tried to a jury in his state. His point, apparently, was the lawyers don't really bring lawsuits: just a myth. Well, I am certain that the former trial lawyers in this body understand that defendants in cases sometimes pay out settlement of a claim, whether the claim was well-founded or not. Where do my colleagues believe that the money comes from? It comes out of the pockets of the people who buy the good or service, obviously.

In medical malpractice cases, the cost of medical settlements, just like the cost of jury verdicts, is paid for by you and me. We pay in two ways: higher prices for medical services, and higher insurance premiums. When my friends on the other side say that creating a right to sue health plans somehow will not bring about more lawsuits, they should pay more attention to what their trial lawyer allies are up to. Who knows, maybe if they took a look at what trial lawyers are doing to our economy they'd have second thoughts about supporting them all the time.

Let's see what an objective source says. The Congressional Budget Office has noted that the lawsuit provision of the Democratic proposal is, by far, the most expensive item in their bill. More than anything else they are proposing, this liability piece is what will drive people out of their insurance coverage into the ranks of the uninsured. That's a high price to pay to keep the lawyers happy.

Employers are not required by law to offer health insurance coverage to their employees. There are tax advantages for employers to do so, but we're finding that those aren't enough. More and more employees are dropping coverage for their employees. That's not an opinion, that's a fact. My friends across the aisle have repeatedly noted that many liberal advocacy groups support the version of patient protection. Those groups have every right to get involved in this debate, and I'm glad that they are. But my point is that most Americans don't work for liberal advocacy groups. In fact, very few do. I'll also note that most Americans don't work for plaintiffs' law firms.

Even if you're anti-business, you have to admit that businesses provide health insurance coverage to most Americans, and businesses are in a position to discontinue that coverage. The businesses that most Americans do work for, both large and small, are telling us that the Democratic bill will force many of them to drop coverage for employees; hence adopt the Republican Patients' Bill of Rights instead.

Let's keep our eye on the ball. There are two goals that we should be trying to achieve. One is to ensure that people get the appropriate health care to which they are entitled under their insurance coverage. But the 2nd goal is to avoid taking that very insurance coverage away. There are many times in politics when it's impossible to achieve two goals at the same time, but we can this time. We have a Republican approach that achieves both goals. I call on my colleagues to support this approach, and to resist the temptation to join the other side's war of health insurance coverage.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Voinovich). The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, in the last few days, the Senate has revealed a lot about itself and where it stands.

Members of the Senate have had a chance to respond to the needs of Americans, who are entitled under their insurance coverage. And they failed. Members of the Senate have had a chance to protect traveling Americans across the country, allowing access to emergency rooms, and they declined. Americans have asked that doctors make final medical judgments. That issue was brought to the Senate. The Senate declined.

Senator Durbin now brings to the floor the Senate's last chance for the Senate to do something fair and decent for the American people in this plan to protect people in Health Maintenance Organizations—to give them the right afforded every other American with every other industry to bring their grievance to a court of law.

It is ultimately the choice between a Patients' Bill of Rights or an insurance protection plan. If we fail, make no mistake about it, this vote will be noted for the fact that the Senate balanced the interests of 120 million Americans against several dozen insurance companies and made the wrong choice.

In a nation in which we pride ourselves on access to the system of justice and equal rights for all people in this land, there are two privileged classes. By international treaty, foreign diplomats cannot be sued; and by ERISA, insurance companies in the health insurance industry cannot be sued. Here is a chance to reduce that list and make insurance companies and those responsible for our health accountable like everybody else.

Every small business in America is responsible for managing its relationship to a customer, every dry cleaner, every trucking company, every mom and pop store. This industry, and this industry alone, is treated differently.

Under the Republican proposal, that status will be different.

Under Mr. DURBIN's amendment, they will be held accountable. As other Members of the Senate, I have heard constituents come forward where an HMO has failed to diagnose cancer in a small child and months later, because they could not get access to an oncologist, a leg or an arm is lost. Tell that parent they cannot go to court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senate has expired.

Mr. TORRICELLI. This is a great opportunity to provide fairness and access. It is the last chance to do something decent in this debate for the American people.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 8 minutes.

The longer this debate goes on, the stranger I find those who are supporting the Republican proposal. Their basic proposal started out costing $1 billion. They will have the agreement later this morning, with the acceptance of the long-term care credit, that will end up costing $13.1 billion—$1 billion to establish the long-term deductibility, $2.9 billion; liberalized MSAs, $1.5 billion; flexible spending accounts, $2.3 billion. That adds to $7.7 billion. And the deductibility of long-term care is $5.4 billion, according to the Senator from Oklahoma. That is $13.1 billion, and not a cent of it is paid for.

Their proposal has gone from $1 billion to $13 billion. Our proposal, according to CBO, is approximately $7 billion. The CBO, a 51 percent figure from CBO. I certainly hope we won't hear any more about the cost of our proposal from our good friends. That was a hot button item. It didn't have anything to do with protecting patients, but it was a hot button item.

Secondly, I hope we won't hear any more about one-size-fits-all. We listened to that line for 3 days. We will probably hear it later in the course of events because we have one-size-fits-all. "We don't want a solution of one-size-fits-all." Our good friend, Senator Collins from Maine, used that 10 times in her presentation. We are having a one-size-fits-all with the Republican proposal because, effectively, it's the new proposal excluding the States from making their own determination as to what actions the state might take in holding people accountable. The Republican proposal can be labelled "one-size-fits-all" if they are successful on this measure.

They are saying to every State in the country: No, you cannot provide the remedies you would like for malpractice by those making health care decisions. We have one industry in this country that is going to be divided, one industry that will not be held responsible. You can continue to sue doctors, but we will not permit any State in this country to determine whether you cause your HMO.

That is an extraordinary position for our good friends, the Republicans, who are always talking about one-size-fits-all, who are always saying that Washington doesn't always know best. I hope we are not going to continue to hear, "Washington doesn't know best. The people in the hinterlands know what is going on. They can make up their minds in the States. The States are the great laboratories for innovative and creativity.

I can give those speeches, but they are wiping out that with this particular amendment. As the Senator from Illinois pointed out, this amendment is so basic and fundamental in protecting Americans.

Even my good friend from New Hampshire has addressed this issue—I am sure he expected to hear this, but he ought to hear it as one of the principals, and now as acting manager. I hear, when we are talking of liability of tobacco companies, this is what he said, and we will include the statement in the RECORD:

When you eliminate that right of redress issue.

Which is effectively what the Republican proposal would do—which this bill does, when you take away the ability of the consumer, of the person who has been damaged, of John and Mary J ones, of John and Mary J in Epping, NH, to get a recovery for an injury they have received, you have artificially preserved the marketplace, but, more importantly, you have given a unique history and totally inappropriate protection to an industry.

The Senate accepted that position overwhelmingly. I think there were 20 odd votes in opposition on that issue. But here we have the insurance industry. Even more, the effect of this insurance industry is more powerful than the tobacco industry. Apparently, the insurance industry has the votes to get their way on this issue.
Why is this issue important? This is an important issue for two very basic and fundamental reasons. First, by making the right to sue available, there is an additional incentive—a powerful incentive—to HMOs and others in the health delivery system. There is an incentive to make sure they do what is medically appropriate because they know they may be held liable if they do not.

You may say, ‘That is good in theory, but it is not so good in practice.’ Under the Medicaid system, a plan may be held liable, the health delivery system may be held accountable. Do we have people abusing the liability provisions? The answer is no. The answer is no.

As the Senator from Illinois pointed out, the State that allowed for liability most recently was Texas. Has there been a resulting proliferation of lawsuits, as the Senator from Alabama has suggested? Then there is one legal case that was brought and possibly one or two more pending.

City and State officials have the right to sue. You can take the example of CalPERS, one of the largest health delivery systems in the country, with 12 million members. They have had the right to sue for a number of years. You can look at CalPERS premiums over the last 5 years. The cost increase of the premium for CalPERS—whose members have the right to sue—has actually been below the national average for HMOs over the last 5 years. The Senator from Illinois has indicated, as well, the findings of the various studies which support this.

Most important, the answer we get from the other side is we don't need accountability because we have a good internal and external review system under the Republican proposal. That is a phony. The Republican proposal is a fixed system. There is no de novo review. There are many other problems in their appeals system which we have addressed. Yet their best answer is that the external review program is a substitute for the right to hold plans accountable in court.

What happens when the plan drags its feet through the review process until it is too late for the patient? What happens when the plan doesn't tell the patient an external review is even available and the patient doesn't find out about its availability until the damage is done? What happens when the plan makes the patient practice of waiting down—everyone—this is reality—who applies for an expensive procedure, knowing there will be an appeal in only a fraction of the cases? Knowing that the worst penalty they could face is to pay the cost of the procedure that should have been provided in the first place? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Fourteen minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. The patient never learns the procedure should have been provided until it is too late.

What happens when the plan refers the patient to an unqualified doctor for a procedure because it doesn't want to pay for a more qualified specialist outside the network? What happens when the patient trusted the plan to do the right thing? According to the opponents of this proposal, these kinds of abusive practices should carry no penalty at all because you can't sue your way to quality. I would like to hear them say that to a widow who lost a husband—the father of her children—to a plan's greed.

I would like to hear them say that to a young man disabled for life because his health plan insisted on the cheapest therapy instead of the best therapy.

I would like to hear them say that to the parents whose child has died because the health plan misled them about the availability of appropriate treatment.

I challenge the opponents of this proposal to tell the American people and across public employees that States should have the right to hold their health plan accountable, but the equally hard-working family just down the street employed in the local bank or grocery store shouldn't have the same right.

I challenge them to explain to the child or spouse of someone who has died or become permanently disabled due to HMO abuses, why they should have to live in poverty while a multi-billion-dollar corporation gets off scot-free.

I challenge those on the other side—who talked so much during the debate on welfare reform about the need for people to take responsibility for their actions—to explain why this standard should apply to poor, single mothers but not to HMOs.

I challenge them to explain why every other industry in America should be held responsible for its actions, but not HMOs. They should be immune from responsibility.

The time has come to say that this unique immunity should end.

The time has come to say that someone who dies or is injured because an insurance company accountant overrules the doctor is entitled to compensation.

The time has come to say that prof- its should no longer take priority over patients' care.

I withhold the remainder of my time. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). Who yields time?

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, nothing could more dramatically illustrate the differences in general attitudes and attitudes towards health care between the Senator from Massachusetts and the Members on this side than his statement that his bill would be preferable to ours because it would only "cost" the American people $7 billion, while ours would "cost" the American people $13 billion.

In fact, of course, overwhelmingly, the “costs” of his bill will be evidenced in higher taxes on the American people. His so-called “costs” of our bill reflect the reality on the American people so they can use their own money to take care of more of their own health care costs. But to the Senator from Massachusetts, it is the same thing—more taxes, not less taxes.

I do not think that is the same thing by any stretch of the imagination.

In addition, of course, he ignores entirely the costs imposed on the American people by paying higher health insurance premiums. Those presumably are irrelevant.

But the subject before us primarily is lawsuits.

There is widespread agreement in this body and in the States that the medical malpractice system is simply broken, that it comes too late, that it costs so much, that less than half of the dollars that it costs ever get to victims and the rest is consumed by lawyers and by the administration of this system itself.

The problem is, of course, we have never come up with a majority for a way in which to fix that medical malpractice system. But the proposition that it is broken is very widely held.

In fact, of course, overwhelmingly, the Senators on the other side of this debate say that the Democrats' plan pours another element of our health care system and says: Oh, the system may be broken, but the only solution is to make it worse, is to make it more widespread.

Pouring good wine into a broken bottle with what impact? Better health care? No. We know the medical malpractice system doesn't create more and better health care.

More lawsuits? Clearly, yes. One aspect of that broken system, of course, is the costs go not into providing better health care for the people of the country but into the system itself.

But the patients—ultimately, the people who buy insurance, the people who consume health care—pay the entire bill, including all of the bills for the lawyers. With what impact? Higher costs for everyone who is insured and therefore fewer insured.

But I think that is perhaps the least of the abuses of the Democratic proposal because it allows, under certain circumstances at least, the employer—the person who is providing health care to his or her or its employees—to be sued. As well, it will drive logical and thoughtful employers out of the business of providing insurance at all. And it will do that in a devastating degree.

I suspect that perhaps half of the employers, when they find they are going to be sued, will simply say: We are not insured and therefore no more lawsuits. Sure. We will give that to our employees more money for the cost of that health insurance in cash, and the employee can do what he or she wishes with it.
Some will ignore the cost of health care insurance and will become self-insured—some very much to their pain. Others will attempt to buy individual policies, which will inevitably cost more and give them less than any kind of group policy does. So we will have less insurance under this set of circumstances in order to have more lawsuits.

Let's go back to this whole idea of medical malpractice as a broken system.

What we should be searching for is a better system, and the better system is exactly the plan that the Republican proposal has. It says instead of lawsuits after the harm has been done with the reward, if any, coming 3, 4, or 5 years later, we will have the potential patient who thinks his health care system has not done right by him that he has a right to get an answer promptly before the damage is done.

This is the system we ought to expand to our health care systems. This is the system we are asked by the Supreme Court of the United States to apply to asbestos litigation—a unanimous Supreme Court of the United States.

But instead, if the Senator from Massachusetts has his way, we will simply take a broken system and apply it in more areas than it applies to right now.

That is a perverse answer to a very serious question. We will not treat the patients. They will treat the court system.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, we have heard the horror stories: An HMO delays a breast cancer patient's treatment until the cancer has spread throughout her body. Parents are forced to drive their critically ill child to a hospital 50 miles away from their home because their insurer refuses to let them take the boy to a hospital 5 miles closer to home. A patient explaining of chest pains is not allowed to see a cardiologist, and as a result suffers a fatal heart attack. Americans want their doctors—not managed care bureaucrats—to make their medical decisions. And when managed care wrongfully delays or denies care, Americans want the right to bring a lawsuit to hold managed care responsible for its misconduct.

And let me tell you directly—the Gregg amendment won't do a thing to help Americans who suffer from the abuse of HMOs. It will maintain the provision in ERISA that allows patients in employer self-funded plans to only recover damages in court from an HMO related to the cost of the treatment delayed or denied. It denies the right of Americans to receive punitive damages that send the message to insurance companies that when they do wrong, they'll be held accountable for the wrong they do.

The Gregg amendment sets up a weak appeals process where patients could first dispute the HMO's ruling with a doctor within the insurance plan (but not the one they saw for treatment) and if they are still not satisfied then they can talk to a second doctor that is outside of the insurance plan but regulated by either a state or federal agency. Whatever each of the doctor's role would then be binding. The Gregg amendment exacerbates a bureaucratic nightmare. It doesn't allow Americans to hold insurance companies accountable in court. It doesn't address the real impediment to accountability in health care: ERISA.

Today, even if an HMO has been directly involved in dictating, denying or delaying care for a patient, it can use a loophole in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) to avoid any responsibility for the consequences of its actions. ERISA was designed over 25 years ago, long before managed care companies became the powerful entity in controlling the health care of Americans that it is today. ERISA was originally designed to protect employees from losing pension benefits due to fraud, mismanagement and employer bankruptcies during the 1960's, but the law has had the affect of allowing an HMO to deny or delay care with no effective remedies.

JUDGE WILLIAM G. YOUNG, a Reagan appointed US District Judge, in his landmark opinion in one case, laid the problems out before us in clear language. He said, and I quote, "ERISA has evolved into a shield of immunity that protects health insurers, utilization review providers, and other managed care entities from potential liability for the consequences of their wrongful denial of health benefits. ERISA thwarts the legitimate claims of the very people it was designed to protect." JUDGE YOUNG was barred by law from awarding damages for wrongful death in an HMO case—his hands were tied by ERISA—but he laid out the point we're trying to make today.

We need to bring that ERISA nightmare that is hurting ordinary Americans.

We have built a system that puts paper work ahead of patients and ignores the real life and death decisions being made in our health care system. We must do better. Americans deserve better care, and deserve the right to hold insurers accountable if they do not receive that care.

Our opponents erroneously argue that increased lawsuits will drive up premium costs and result in loss coverage. They fail to acknowledge, however, that the timely appeals mechanisms in our amendment could prevent lawsuits before harm can occur. In fact, an independent study by Coopers and Lybrand found that the Democratic provision to hold health plans accountable would cost a mere 3 to 13 cents a month. Ironically, the industry's cry that liability will raise costs assumes that health plans are very negligent that patients do indeed suffer real harm.

History bears out our case: access to the court system for ordinary Americans—the right to seek redress—rescued America from Pintos that caught on fire, it gave us seatbelts, bumpers, airbags in cars, and every innovation in safety for consumers that we've witnessed over the last thirty years.

So why would we oppose access to the courts of ordinary Americans? They might want to take a look at the State of Texas, where, over Governor George Bush's objections, they gave Texans the right to sue their HMO. And what's been the result? In 2 years since an external review process was established, only 480 complaints have been filed with the Texas Independent Review Organization—about 30 times less than the 4,400 complaints that were predicted in the first year alone by the Texas Department of Insurance. Even more important, no medical malpractice lawsuit has been filed under this law. Mr. President, the Republicans have been asking America to look towards Texas for some answers—Mr. President, this is one issue on which I think we ought to follow Texas's example. It works.

Americans overwhelmingly favor holding managed care plans accountable. A Kaiser Family Foundation/Harvard School of Public Health survey released in January of this year found that 78 percent of voters believe that patients should be able to hold managed care legally accountable for malpractice. A poll released in September of 1998 by The Wall Street Journal and NBC News revealed that 71 percent of voters favor legislation that gives patients the right to hold managed care accountable for improper care, even if that might increase premiums—which studies show it would not.

Mr. President, it is clear that accountability is the key to confronting patients' rights. A right to emergency room care on a "prudent layperson" standard or a right to specialty care does little to protect patients if such care can routinely be delayed or denied. Only legal remedies provide adequate protection against managed care's biggest abuses. And it's time we embraced those legal remedies. That is something about which we should all agree.

I ask unanimous consent to have attached to the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 11, 1998]

HANDS TIED, JUDGES RUE LAW THAT LIMITS H.M.O. LIABILITY

(From Robert Pear)

WASHINGTON, July 10—Federal judges around the country, frustrated by cases in which patients denied medical benefits have no right to sue, are urging Congress to consider changes in a 1974 law that protects insurance companies and health maintenance organizations against legal attacks.

In the view of the judges, the law does not offer detailed solutions of the type being pushed in Congress by Democrats and some Republicans. But they say their hands are tied by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, which makes it difficult to remedy the courts, said Judge A. Arlen Bean.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, in Cincinnati, said that Federal law "gives us no choice," and the woman's husband, who had sued for damages, is "left without a remedy."

The law, known as Erisa, was adopted mainly because of Congressional concern that only powerful managed-care organizations were loot- ing or squandering the money entrusted to them. The law, which also governs health plans covering 125 million Americans, sets stringent standards of conduct for the people who run such plans, but severely limits the remedies available to workers.

In a lawsuit challenging the denial of benefits, a person in an employer-sponsored health plan may recover the benefits in question and can get an injunction clarifying the right to sue. But judges have repeatedly said that the law does not allow them to order companies to comply with a multitude of conflicting state laws and regulations.

For example, the court in an earlier case, Judge William G. Young of the Federal District Court in Boston said, "It is deeply troubling that, in the health insurance context, Erisa has evolved into a shield that thwarts the legitimate claims of the very people it was designed to protect."

Judge Young said he was distressed by "the failure of Congress to amend a statute that, due to the changing realities of the modern health care system, has gone conspicuously awry," leaving many consumers "without a legal remedy for the wrongful denial of health benefits.

Disputes over benefits have become common as managed-care companies provide coverage to workers through H.M.O.'s and other forms of managed care, which try to rein in costs by controlling the use of services. Here are some examples of the ways in which judges have expressed concern:

Judge John C. Portillo of the United States Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit, in Denver, said he had been seeking a review of a judgment in a case brought by a woman with leukemia who died after being denied approval for heart surgery recommended by his doctors. "Modification of Erisa in light of questionable modern insurance practices must be the job of Congress, not the courts," said Judge C. Arlen Bean.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, in Cincinnati, said that Federal law "disposed of the question" company that refused to approve psychiatric care for a man who later committed suicide. Because of Erisa, the court held, he or she could not sue for wrongful death. "It may be left without a meaningful remedy."

In another case, Judge Nathaniel M. Gordon, in Worcester, Mass., said that the husband of a woman who died of breast cancer was "left without any meaningful remedy" against an H.M.O. that had refused to authorize treatment.

Federal District Judge Marvin J. Garbis, in Baltimore, acknowledged that a Maryland man may be left "without an adequate remedy" for damages caused by his H.M.O.'s refusal to pay for eye surgery and other necessary treatments. But, Judge Garbis said, Erisa does not "allow him to sue in a reformed in light of modern health care an issue which must be addressed and resolved by the legislature rather than the courts."

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in San Francisco, ruled last month that an insurance company did not have to surrender the money it saved by denying care to Rhonda Bast, who later died of breast cancer. "This case presents a tragic set of facts," Judge David R. Thompson said. But "without action by the legislature, there is nothing one can do to help the Basts and others who may find themselves in this same unfortunate situation."

Democrats and some Republicans in Congress are pushing legislation that would make it easier for patients to sue H.M.O.'s and insurance wrong decision, he or she can be sued, said Representative Charles Norwood, Republican of Georgia, but "H.M.O.'s are shielded from liability for their decisions by Erisa."

Changes in Erisa will not come easily. The Supreme Court has described it as "an enormously complex and detailed statute" that the health industry and employer groups have been able to impose legal liability on health plans for denying treatment or other harm that a patient suffers as a result of the improper denial of care.

Among the most contentious issues before Congress, a "patients' bill of rights" proposal that is receiving the most attention, has been the ability, pain and suffering, emotional distress or other harm that a patient suffers as a result of the improper denial of care.

The Kaiser report gives the Democrats and their allies a proposal that would be a managed-care industry and employer groups that imposing legal liability on health plans for denying treatment or other harm that a patient suffers as a result of the improper denial of care.

The study found that the cost of litigation was between three and 13 cents a month per enrollee, or 0.03% to 0.11% of premiums.

"Coopers found that in these places where patients can sue, very few have and the costs have been rather small," said Kaiser Foundation President Drew Altman, who added that the report's high cost estimates are consistent with the Kaiser Family Foundation, is the first attempt by an independent group to look closely at the costs associated with litigation. It undercut assertions by the managed-care industry and employer groups that imposing legal liability on health plans for denying treatment or other harm that a patient suffers as a result of the improper denial of care.

After examining three big health plans for state and local government employees, who already have the right to sue, the study found that the cost of litigation was between three and 13 cents a month per enrollee, or 0.03% to 0.11% of premiums. Richard Smith, vice president for policy at the American Association of Health Plans, which represents more than 1,000 managed-care plans, said the study was deficient because it did not consider the cost of "discretionary medicine"—the provision of services solely to avoid lawsuits. Such practices, he said, would be the "single largest cost driver" that insurance plans have control over.

Larry Atkins, president of Health Policy Analysts, a Washington consulting group, said that it's impossible to assess the real cost of liability, but its passage would end managed care's success in curbing health costs.

SUITS IN FEDERAL COURT

Under the 1974 Employee Income Retirement Security Act, patients enrolled in employer-sponsored health plans can sue their plans for damages under state law if they're improperly denied treatment. They are permitted to bring actions in federal court, but if they win they receive only the value of the denied benefit.

But people don't have the ability to sue business entities directly. If someone dies of cancer because an insurance company doesn't pay for harm, pain, and suffering. Yet health plans that make decisions to deny or delay care will continue to be off the hook. Doctors and other health providers can be sued, and yet these HMOs continue to be left off the hook.

It was those who defended States rights who ended the fight for health care before it even began. We were told that the HMOs that Senator EiGhN of Oregon and as a member who holds a somewhat unique perspective in this Chamber—as a businessman, also as someone who has actually paid the health care bills.

Colleagues, as I have listened to Senator FRSt I have been impressed by his skill as a physician, his nuances and his understanding of these issues and they have been helpful to me. As I watched Senator Edwards of North Carolina use his great skill and ability as a trial lawyer to make the case for liability, I was also impressed.

However, there are not many people in this Chamber who have actually written the check to provide the health care coverage to their employees. My experience before coming to this Senate was as a food processor. I provided health insurance to hundreds of employees and their families. For nearly 20 years in which I managed that business, I saw health care costs rise three, four, five times the rate of inflation. My business was not to provide health care, it was to produce food. It was—beyond all others—a cost out of control.

These people who are writing the checks, trying to live up to the promise that we all want in this country for health care, are not the enemy. They are trying to do a good job, and to meet the needs of their employees. I cannot think of a single thing that would imperil health care more in this country than removing the protections provided to employers on the issue of liability.

We are shown all of the terrible situations by the charts shown in this Chamber. But I also have a heart, too. I would like to help. But I also know that when you deal with an inflationary cost such as medicine, sometimes you don't have the ability—particularly in agriculture—to pass those costs on in the price of your product. So when you add on top of that the potential cost of liability, I fear that employers will not be able to bear it and will turn that benefit into cash for their employees and simply use it to employ employees—you will have to buy it yourself.

But people don't have the ability to buy health care coverage as individuals as well as when they are pooled in employer groups. I support employer-provided health care. I think we are imperiling it if we remove the protections provided to employers by ERISA.

Now, employer-provided health care has an interesting origin in our country. It was very rare prior to World War II when we put in place price controls but did not limit the ability of businesses and labor to bargain for benefits. When the men went off to war, businesses reached out to many of the women. They could not offer them a higher wage, so they offered them the benefit of health care. Then businesses began to do this more and more, and it became the subject of collective bargaining under Taft-Hartley and other labor provisions. By the 1960s, nearly three quarters of the American people were covered by employer-provided health care plans.

Congress wanted to go further. In fact, it was a Democratic Congress in 1974 that produced the protection called ERISA. We further induced and incentivized businesses to expand in a multistate way to provide health insurance.

Folks, it has worked. Right now the frustrating thing to me is, as we try to legislate, we inevitably have to draw lines and make decisions.

We once were in the position in the State of Oregon of figuring out how best to allocate Medicaid resources. We don't like to have uninsured people in our State. We want them to be insured. Our current Governor's name is John Kitzhaber. He is a medical doctor; he is an emergency room physician. He is a Democrat. He came to the Federal Government, along with many on the Republican side, and said: Let's take this Cadillac plan for a few and essentially turn it into a Chevrolet plan for many.

So we got a waiver. Instead of rationing medicine through waiting lines and price, we did it upfront by saying: These are the health care procedures that are available.

The Vice President, Al Gore, and others referred to our Governor sometimes in very disparaging terms. He was even called "Doctor Death" by the media. But he had the courage, and many with him, to make decisions that were tough.

So when we see the pictures and the charts, I say to you that I have been there, I have seen and lived them before. My heart strings are pulled by those, too. But I also know that we don't help them by increasing health care costs—we uninsure them.

What we are debating, really, is where to draw the line, how to make health care more affordable to more people. The last thing in the world we want is to make health care more affordable to more people. The last thing in the world we want is to make health care more affordable to more people. The last thing in the world we want is to make health care more affordable to more people.

Ultimately, it is basic fairness to the individual who may be harmed. The reason the doctors are the strongest advocates of this position is because they are the one who has to live with the consequences of its actions. The reason the doctors are the strongest advocates of this position is because they are the one who has to live with the consequences of its actions. The reason the doctors are the strongest advocates of this position is because they are the one who has to live with the consequences of its actions.

Madam President, statements have been made that this court is the failure of Congress to amend a statute that, due to the changing realities of the modern health care system, has gone conspicuously away from its original sense. This court has no choice but to pluck the case out of State court and then, at the behest of the insurance company, slam the court's door in the face of the patient without any hope of appeal.

Most Americans would be shocked to know that HMOs enjoy immunity from suits. If a doctor fails to treat a patient with cancer correctly and if the patient dies, you can sue the doctor for malpractice. But if a managed care company decides to pinch pennies and overrule the doctor's recommendations on treating the patient and the patient dies, the insurance company is immune from responsibility. No other industry in America enjoys this immunity from the consequences of its actions. The HMOs do not deserve it.

On this life-and-death decision, immunity from responsibility is literally a license to kill.

Madam President, we ought to at least leave this matter up to the States, not preempt the States.

I want to say the strongest supporters of this provision are the doctors. The reason the doctors are the strongest advocates of this position is because they are the one who has to live with the consequences of its actions.

Ultimately, it is basic fairness to the individual who may be harmed. The reason the doctors are the strongest advocates of this position is because they are the one who has to live with the consequences of its actions.
There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION,

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: On behalf of the 300,000 physician and student members of the American Medical Association (AMA), we are pleased that the Senate has agreed to begin debate on patient protection legislation. Bipartisan enactment of comprehensive legislation on this issue is urgently needed.

This bill should remedy the inequity that results from health plans' ability to routinely make medical decisions while remaining unaccountable for the injuries they cause. Health plans duplicitously argue that they should make medical necessity decisions and control utilization review and appeals processes while stating that they want to be protected by ERISA preemption. By not removing that immunity, this bill would fail to hold those health plans accountable. Presently 125 million enrollees participate in ERISA-covered health plans, and despite state legislative initiatives to provide adequate protection for enrollees, those enrollees are all without effective legal recourse against their health plans. This is an issue of fundamental fairness. The AMA firmly believes that Americans covered by non-ERISA plans. We there-fore request that S. 326 be amended to remove ERISA preemption for health plans.

In conclusion, the AMA appreciates the Senate's efforts to adopt legislation that would promote fairness in managed care. We urge you to join us in advancing patients' rights by strengthening the "Patients' Bill of Rights Act," S. 326, to guarantee all patients these essential protections.

Respectfully,

E. RATCLIFFE ANDERSON, Jr., M.D.

Madam President, I hope this amendment will be defeated and that we let the States make the final judgment. They ought to be the ones who make the decision about protecting their own citizens. If we should not be the Federal Government or the Senate preempting and denying States the opportunity to protect their citizens.

How much time do I have remaining? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BOXER. Madam President, I thank Senator Kennedy for his incredible leadership on this issue.

Last night, I said the score was 8 to 0; it was 8 for the HMOs, patients nothing. I think this amendment is worth 2 points, so it will either be 10 to nothing or 8 to 2.

Let me tell you why I think this amendment is so important. If this amendment is agreed to and the HMOs cannot be held accountable for the injuries they cause, they may harm you, if they hurt you or your family or your children due to callous and uncaring bureaucrats, they cannot be held accountable. We set no new Federal cause of action. We simply say if the States believe it is right—such as Texas decided it was—then they can allow these lawsuits to proceed.

Let me tell you about an emergency room physician I met. He came before the Congress. He told a harrowing tale of a man who was brought into the emergency room with uncontrollable blood pressure. The doctor tried everything he could—a blood pressure medicine, administering drugs through an IV, he was able to control the pressure. He felt the man needed to stay in the hospital at least overnight. He called the HMO. The HMO said, "Absolutely not. Give the man his medication and send him home."

The doctor begged. The doctor said, "This HMO was unrelenting. He did not allow you to stay in the hospital at least overnight. He said, "Your HMO will not allow you to stay here, sir, but I strongly advise you to stay here.""

The patient said, "What will it cost?"

The doctor said, "About $5000." This gentleman started laughing. He said, I don't have $5000. I have a family to support. I have a job. I am sure my HMO would never do this to me, would never put me in danger. If they say I can have the drugs, give me the drugs, and I will go home.

The doctor could not prevail with the gentleman. The gentleman went home and had a stroke. He is now paralyzed on one side of his body.

I ask for an additional 30 seconds on the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mrs. BOXER. So now what happens? This man is paralyzed for life. Oh, he could sue the doctor, that good doctor who begged the HMO. Yes, he could sue the hospital. The hospital had nothing to do with it.

I am saying to my friends on the other side of the aisle, you are always talking about States' rights. We come here and get lectured every day. All this amendment, under the underlying bill, says is, if a State decides to allow their people the right to sue a callous, uncaring, and negligent HMO, as Texas decided to do and other States did, let them do it.

I hope this amendment will be defeated. Remember, it is worth 2 points.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I ask that the Senator from New Hampshire yield me 1 minute.

Mr. GREGG. I yield the Senator from Oklahoma 1 minute.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the letter from the Republic-Can Governors Association, signed by Governor Keating from Oklahoma, Ed Schafer, Governor of North Dakota, and Don Sundquist, Governor of Ten-nessee, all urging us to defeat the Ken- nedy bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

REPUBLICAN GOVERNORS ASSOCIATION,

Hon. DON NICKLES,
Assistant Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR NICKLES: As Congress be-gins debate on managed care reform legisla-tion, we would like to emphasize our con-fidence in states' achievements in managed care and ask that any legislation you con-sider preserve state authority and innova-tion. We applaud the Republican Leader-ship's efforts to complement the states' re-forms by expanding managed care protec-tions to self-insured plans without pre-empting state authority.

Historically, regulating private insurance has been the responsibility of the states. Many, if not all of the ideas under consideration now in Congress, have been considered by states. Because the saturation of man-aged care is different throughout the nation, each state has its own unique issues relative to its market place. We have concerns about the unintended consequences of imposing one-size-fits-all standards on states which could result in increasing the number of un-inured and increasing health care costs.

As Governors, we have taken the reports of abuses in managed care seriously and have addressed specific areas of importance to our citizens. As you know, some analysts esti-mate that private health insurance pre-miums could grow from the current 6 percent to double digit increases later this year. This does not include the cost of federal mandates. Health resources are limited.

We hope the Congress' well-intended ef-forts take into account the governors' successful and historical role in regulating health in-surance.

Sincerely,

FRANK KEATING,
Governor of Okla-homa, Chairman.

ED SCHAFER,
Governor of North Da-kota, Vice Chair-man.

DON SUNDQUIST,
Governor of Ten-nesse, Chairman, RGA Health Care Issue Team.

Mr. NICKLES. I want to be clear. The Governors do not want us micromanaging their health care. The Governors, frankly, do not want us driving up health care costs. The Governors do not want to have a bill that is not really fair for patients, rights, but rather for trial lawyers' rights. It would be great for lawsuits, but it would be terrible for health care. It basically would have people dropping health care all across the country because, not only do you sue HMOs, but you sue employers as well. Maybe many people have missed that part of the discussion.

The Kennedy bill says, let's sue em-ployers. If your health care is not good enough, sue your employers. The em-ployers say: We do not have to provide health care; we are going to drop it. Employees, I hope you take care of it on your own. If you want to increase the number of uninsured, pass the Ken-nedy bill. This amendment would strike the provision. I think it would be very positive for health care in America.

Mr. GREGG. I yield, off the bill, to the Senator from Pennsylvania, 3 minutes.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has 3 minutes off the bill.

Mr. SANTORUM. Madam President, I thank the Senator from New Hampshire. Many have said that you cannot sue your HMO, but there are three Federal Circuit Court cases and 12 Federal District Court cases that have said ERISA does not preempt State law when you want to sue your HMO for malpractice. I ask unanimous consent to have this list printed in the RECORD:

ERISA IS NOT A BARRIER TO HMO MALPRACTICE LIABILITY

The key argument made time and again by sponsors of the Kennedy unfunded mandates bill is that we need expanded liability because managed care companies are shielded from being held accountable for medical malpractice by the federal ERISA (Employee Retirement Income Security Act).

The fact is that in at least 15 cases since 1995, federal circuit and district courts have ruled that ERISA does not shield an HMO from being sued for medical malpractice. Federal circuit court

In Dukes (1995), the third circuit court held that ERISA did not preempt Pennsylvania state law on medical negligence action involving an HMO.

In PacifiCare (1995), the tenth circuit court held that ERISA did not preempt Oklahoma state law stating, just as ERISA does not preempt the malpractice claims against the doctor, it should not preempt the vicarious liability claim against the HMO.

In Rice (1995), the seventh circuit court held that ERISA did not preempt Illinois state law medical malpractice action. Federal district court

In Henderson (1997), the court rejected claims of ERISA preemption in a malpractice case against an HMO, its hospitals, and treating professionals and settlement for $5 million was reached shortly thereafter.

In Fritts (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt vicarious liability of an HMO.

In Kampmeier (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Pennsylvania state law claim for medical negligence.

In Quellette (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Ohio state law claim for medical negligence.

In Roessert (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt California state law for negligence.

In Fritts (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Michigan state law for medical negligence.

In Lancar (1997), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Virginia state law medical negligence claim.

In Blum (1997), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Texas malpractice claim against an HMO.

In Edel (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt District of Columbia law in malpractice action against an HMO.

In Prudential (1996), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Oklahoma malpractice law in HMO case.

In Rapaille (1997), the court held that ERISA did not preempt Texas malpractice law in HMO case.

State court decisions

In Pappas (1996), Pennsylvania Superior Court held that malpractice action against an HMO was not preempted by ERISA.

In Naseimento, Massachusetts Superior Court held that ERISA did not preempt liability of an HMO, and a jury awarded $484 million.

Mr. SANTORUM. So the issue is not whether you can sue your HMO. That is not why we are so adamantly against the provision in the Kennedy bill. It is not to be able to sue your HMO. I do not have any problem with your being able to sue your HMO. What I do have a problem with is what this bill does; it allows you to sue your employer. It allows you to sue the employer for a decision made by an HMO, by an insurance company. What will that mean?

You heard the Senator from Oregon, who is a small business owner, say—and, by the way, I have talked to dozens of employers who have said this: If you are going to open up the book of my corporation—I make widgets or I make steel or I make desks or I make pencils—you are going to open up my corporation. It is not just the decision to sue me for a decision my insurance company, that I hired, made. I cannot afford it. I am not in the business of health care. I am not managing these health care decisions. I hired someone to do that, but I do not want to have to go to their decisions. Sorry, as much as I would love to provide group health insurance to you, I cannot allow the corporation—our corporation, our effort—to be jeopardized by a decision made by someone outside of what I do.

I cannot let it happen. They will drop their insurance. I ask for 30 additional seconds.

Mr. SANTORUM. Who will be the first person, once these employers drop their insurance as a result of this bill, to run to the Senate floor and say: These nasty employers, look at them; they are dropping their insurance; we need the Government to take over the health care system?

Yes, the Senator from Massachusetts would be the first person on the Senate floor calling for a Government health care system. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that 23 cases emphasizing ERISA’s limitations, Federal cases from most every circuit plus various State courts around the country, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COURT CASES EMphasizing ERISA’s LIMITATIONS

A. FEDERAL APPELLATE DECISIONS

1. Bedrick v. Travelers Insurance Company (4th Cir. 1996) 93 F.3d 149

Ethan Bedrick was born with severe cerebrovascular and required speech therapy and physical therapy to prevent contraction of his muscles. In April of 1993, Travelers Insurance Company terminated the speech therapy and severely restricted physical therapy. Ethan was 14 months old. When Ethan’s father threatened to sue, the insurance company reviewed the decision.

The insurance company concluded, without updating Ethan’s file or consulting with his physicians, that intensive physical therapy would not result in what the insurance company described as “significant progress” for Ethan.

In its ruling in 1996, the Fourth Circuit held that Travelers’ decision was arbitrary and capricious because its medical experts were unfounded and tainted by conflict. The court observed that neither the insurance plan nor the company’s internal guidelines required “significant progress” as a precondition to providing medically necessary benefits. “It is as important not to get worse as to get better,” the court noted. The implication that walking by age five... would not be ‘significant progress’ for this unfortunate child is simply revolting.” (page 153)

ERISA left the Bedricks with no remedy to compensate Ethan for the developmental progress he lost during the three years and more that his parents had to litigate the benefit denial by Travelers. The Bedricks’ state law causes of action were eliminated by ERISA.

2. Corcoran v. United Healthcare, Inc. (5th Cir. 1992) 965 F.2d 1321

Mrs. Corcoran was in an employer-sponsored health plan using Blue Cross as administrator. Mrs. Corcoran was authorized utilization review. Mrs. Corcoran was pregnant and had a history of pregnancy-related problems. Although her own doctor recommended hospitalization, United Health Care denied that hospitalization was medically necessary and did not pre-certify a hospital stay. Instead, 10 hours of daily in-home nursing care were authorized. When the nurse was not on duty, the fetus developed problems and died. The Corcorans had no remedy for damages against United under ERISA. The Corcorans’ state damages were eliminated due to ERISA.

The court noted: “The result ERISA compels us to reach means that the Corcorans can have no remedy, state or federal, for what may have been a serious mistake. This is troubling for several reasons. First, it eliminates an important check on the thousands of health care decisions made in the burgeoning utilization review system.... Moreover, if the cost of non-deliberate medical mistakes (either in the cost of prevention or the cost of paying judgments) need not be factored into utilization review companies’ cost of doing business, bad medical judgments will end up being cost-free to the plans that rely on these companies to contain medical costs. ERISA plans, in turn will have one less incentive to seek out the companies than can deliver both high quality services and reasonable prices” (page 1338).

3. Cannon v. Group Health Services of Oklahoma, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 77 F.3d 1270

Ms. Cannon was diagnosed with acute myeloblastic leukemia. She received chemotherapy treatments, and her leukemia went into remission. Subsequently, her insurer amended her policy to state that preauthorization would be denied for an autologous bone marrow treatment if sought after the first remission. Ms. Cannon’s doctor recommended an autologous bone marrow treatment and requested preauthorization from the insurer. When the insurer denied the treatment as experimental, the doctors made a second request, which was also denied. In persistence by the doctors and Ms. Cannon, the insurer reversed its decision and authorized the treatment approximately seven weeks after the first request. Ms. Cannon was 21 years old. She died 18 days after the decision to authorize the treatment was made that Ms. Cannon...
Ms. Kuhl’s survivors’ state law causes of action were eliminated due to ERISA.

Mr. Kuhl died waiting for a transplant. Ms. Kuhl was on the transplant waiting list at Barnes. Mr. Kuhl managed to be placed on the list. Unfortunately, Mr. Kuhl’s heart had deteriorated so much that surgery could not be performed in Kansas City. That doctor arranged for the surgery to be performed in St. Louis. At his mental commitment proceeding, the court ruled that the Wurzbachers’ claims for state damages were eliminated due to ERISA. Neither Mr. Wurzbacher nor Ms. Wurzbacher had a defense strategy. In light of the aggressiveness of the policy, the alternative, which was castration, was approved by Prudential and he was castrated. When he returned home, he found a letter from Prudential notifying him that it had withdrawn its approval prior to the third part of the procedure. While Aetna ultimately changed its position and authorized the third part of the procedure, it was not authorized until it was too late to be effective. Mr. Spain died. There are no damage remedies against Aetna under ERISA. Mr. Spain’s survivors’ state law causes of action were eliminated due to ERISA.

Mr. Settles was in an employer-sponsored health plan. The employer paid a monthly premium to Golden Rule and the employer was required to give written notice to the insurer in advance of terminating Mr. Settles’ coverage. On October 24, the insurer notified Mr. Settles by a letter that it had terminated his insurance unilaterally. That same day Mr. Settles suffered a heart attack and he died five days later.

Richard Clarke’s health plan covered at least the first 30 days. When he returned home, he found a letter from Prudential notifying him that it had made a mistake and that the plan would pay the full $500 for the monthly leupron injection. The court held that the Wurzbachers’ claims for state damages were eliminated due to ERISA. Neither Mr. Wurzbacher nor his spouse have a defense strategy. In light of the aggressiveness of the policy, the alternative, which was castration, was approved by Prudential and he was castrated. When he returned home, he found a letter from Prudential notifying him that it had withdrawn its approval prior to the third part of the procedure. While Aetna ultimately changed its position and authorized the third part of the procedure, it was not authorized until it was too late to be effective. Mr. Spain died. There are no damage remedies against Aetna under ERISA. Mr. Spain’s survivors’ state law causes of action were eliminated due to ERISA.

Mr. Clarke’s widow and four minor children sued Travelers and its utilization review administrator for failure under state law. ERISA was held to preempt all of these and to provide no remedy. The Court noted that “the tragic events set forth in Diane Andrews-Clarke’s Complaint cry out for relief” (p. 232) and “Under traditional notions of justice, the harms alleged—true—should entitle Diane Andrews-Clarke to some legal remedy on behalf of herself and her children. A favorable decision in Diane’s case would have precluded ERISA from depriving her of any remedy” (p. 234).

In discussing the need for ERISA reform the Court was quite clear. “This case, thus, becomes yet another illustration of the glaring need for Congress to amend ERISA to account for the changing realities of the modern health care system” (pp. 231-234).

“IT is therefore deeply troubling that, in the health insurance context, ERISA has evolved into a shield of immunity which thwarts the legitimate claims of the very people it was designed to protect. What went wrong?” (p. 234).

“The shield of near absolute immunity now provided by ERISA simply cannot be justified” (p. 235).

Court, recognizing the “pervasive outcome generated by ERISA in this particular case,” called upon Congress for reform.

In May of 1995, Ms. Thomas-Wilson was diagnosed with Lyme disease. She began receiving intravenous antibiotic treatment on July 10, 1995, which continued throughout the remainder of the year. In August of that year, the HMO denied continuation of that treatment. Since she could not afford to pay for herself for the treatments, she stopped receiving the treatment and her condition worsened. She could not work or perform household duties. Her neck and back pain became so severe and persistent that she needed full-time care.

From September through December of 1995, the HMO required her to undergo extensive testing to determine whether she had Lyme disease. In December 1995, the HMO reinstated coverage for the intravenous antibiotic treatment.

Ms. Thomas-Wilson filed suit alleging that she became severely disabled and endured great pain, suffering, depression, and changes in personality as a result of the interference with her treatment.

The court found that Ms. Thomas-Wilson and her spouse’s state tort claims against ERISA... the HMO were preempted by ERISA. There was no damage remedy available under ERISA.

Mrs. Turner’s HMO refused to authorize cancer treatment. She died. Mr. Turner sued his spouse’s HMO for allegedly causing her death by denying authorization for treatment.

The court held that, even assuming there had been a wrongful refusal to provide the treatment to Mrs. Turner, her surviving spouse and executor were precluded from bringing a claim under ERISA. Mr. Turner has no remedy available under ERISA.

Mrs. Foster was diagnosed with breast cancer and Blue cross refused to approve the treatment prescribed of high dose chemotherapy with peripheral blood stem cell autologous bone marrow transplantation. Because of this denial, Shelly Foster did not receive the treatment and died. The court, noting that this was a “hard result,” held that the claims of her spouse for breach of contract, bad faith and infliction of emotional distress were not preempted by ERISA. Mr. Foster has no remedy available under ERISA.

Mr. Smith’s contract with Prudential through the PAA Trust required pre-authorization of treatment before insurance coverage would be provided. After Mr. Smith injured his leg in an automobile accident on January 18, 1995, he needed surgery to remove a bone. When no doctor was participating in the Prudential HMO was available, Mr. Smith found a qualified out-of-network doctor to perform the surgery. Prudential would not authorize the surgery since “surgical correction is no longer possible.” Mr. Smith filed a state action for breach of contract, negligence, and negligent performance of contract. The court ruled that plaintiff’s claims were preempted by ERISA. Mr. Smith has no remedy under ERISA.

Mrs. Udoni’s bone deterioration in her facial bones, caused by osteoporosis, prevented her from eating food. Her bone deterioration caused numerous other problems. Her doctors had to replace her facial bones with prosthetics. Ms. Udoni’s bone deterioration might have been prevented by treating the condition, but insurance coverage was not available. Although Ms. Udoni’s tumor from her peripheral neuroectodermal cancer was reduced by 70% from chemotherapy, only a bone marrow transplant could possibly cure her. Blue Cross initially denied the request and refused to pre-certify the procedure. Blue Cross reconsidered and agreed to pay for the bone marrow transplant after it heard from Ms. Udoni’s lawyer and the Pennsylvania Insurance Department. Ms. Udoni’s condition worsened sufficiently during the delay following the denial. Her doctors decided she was too weak to undergo the bone marrow transplant when it was offered in June 1993. In September of 1993, Ms. Udoni died.

The court held that ERISA preempted the survivor’s state negligence claims against the HMO. Her survivors have no damage remedy under ERISA.

Mr. Bailey-Gates was hospitalized in May of 1991 for physical and mental disorders. A managed care nurse for Aetna ordered him released on June 18, 1991. He was released on June 25 and less than two weeks later, on July 4, 1993, he committed suicide. After his benefit claim was denied, Mrs. Bailey-Gates sued Aetna for negligently releasing him while he was still in need of hospitalization for his disorders. The court ruled that ERISA preempted his survivors’ state claims. Mr. Bailey-Gates’ survivors have no damage remedy under ERISA.

Ms. Gardner’s bone disease worsened with no improvement from chemotherapy. Although a massive heart attack on May 18, 1992 and treatment to Mrs. Gardner that he could continue the care he was receiving for his pre-existing condition and be treated by the doctors he had been seeing. After Mr. Nealy enrolled in the HMO, he was not issued an identification card. On April 29, 1992, Mr. Nealy was examined by a primary care physician who refused to refer Mr. Nealy to his former cardiologist. The HMO explained its refusal in an April 29, 1992 letter saying it had its own participating cardiologists. On May 15, 1992, the primary care physician authorized Mr. Nealy to see a cardiologist on May 19, 1992. Mr. Nealy suffered a massive heart attack on May 18, 1992 and died.

The court held that Mr. Nealy’s surviving spouse’s state claims were preempted due to ERISA. Mrs. Nealy has no claim for damages under ERISA.

Ms. Dearmas was injured in an automobile accident and was transferred to four different hospitals in three days by her HMO based on the availability of providers participating in her plan at those facilities. As a result of those transfers, as well as other delays in her treatment, she alleged irreversible neurological damage.

The court held that ERISA preempted her state negligence claims against the HMO. Ms. Dearmas has no claim for damages under ERISA.

Mr. Pomeroy required surgery for dilopia (double vision). The HMO denied his claim five months later, in September of 1990, suffering from back pain and severe depression, the HMO again denied treatment. After these denials, he became addicted to a pain killer. When he sought treatment for the addiction, the HMO once again denied his claim.

Mr. Pomeroy pursued his benefit claim under the state Health Care Professional Review Board and the HMO removed the case to federal court.

The court dismissed with prejudice Mr. Pomeroy’s state claims for mental, physical and economic losses due to ERISA preemption. The court also dismissed without prejudice Mr. Pomeroy’s claim for damages under ERISA.

Mr. Kohn entered outpatient drug and alcohol rehabilitation in 1989. His HMO primary care physician admitted him in February of 1990 into an in-patient program. When the 15 days concluded, the therapist determined additional inpatient care was necessary. The HMO not only refused coverage for the additional inpatient care but refused to allow Mr. Kohn’s family to pay for the additional care. While attempting to cross the railroad tracks in a drunken stupor, he was struck, and killed by a train two weeks after leaving the rehabilitation center.

The court found that ERISA preempted his survivors’ claims based on denial of additional treatment. The court also held that a vicarious liability claim against the HMO based on ostensible agency would not be preempted if the HMO doctors committed malpractice. The survivors had no claim for damages under ERISA.

Mr. REID. I yield the final minutes we have on this amendment to the Senator from Illinois, the floor leader for the Democrats.

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator suspend?

Mr. REID. Will the Senator withdraw?

Mr. GREGG. I understand this is your last speaker. We have Senator DOMENICI, and then I will close. If Senator DOMENICI can go in between that.

Mr. REID. The Senator wants Senator DOMENICI to go now, if Senator DURBIN will withdraw.

Mr. GREGG. I yield 5 minutes off the bill to Senator DOMENICI.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Madam President, I want Senator Koy to know that we will get red in the face today. My wife is watching, and she tells me I do better when I do not yell.

Looking at America today, I ask this question: Is the best way to resolve the problem of somebody who is a patient and sick, and the kind of coverage and care to which they are entitled, to give it to the trial lawyers to resolve before juries in court cases? I cannot believe the best we can do to address this problem is to look at how the current system is handled and settle these disputes is to say: Let the trial court do it; let the juries do it. We already know, if you are looking for an egregiously inefficient way to resolve disputes, use the trial lawyers and use the courts of America. It just does not target the problem. It resolves issues in a very arbitrary way.

I say to everybody here, I am convinced that letting the trial lawyers solve a medical problem is borderless and unworkable. It will bankrupt the entire system of medicine because everybody will be frightened to death to try something before a jury, not because they are guilty but because jurors and the trial system are apt to award a gigantic verdict. Then every case is worth something.

Can we not figure out a better way than that? Whatever the arguments in this Chamber, the issue is: When people are covered by managed care or private health care, to what are they entitled?

It is not an issue of whether a doctor performs malpractice. That litigation is wide open. It is, if they are not getting what they are entitled to, how do you fix that? Frankly, I believe to fix it by throwing every one of those decisions into the lap of a trial lawyer who can file a lawsuit is, for this enlightened America, border line lunacy. For an intelligent, bright America, it is ludicrous to suggest that as a way to settle disputes about coverage and quality of care.

Think of this: You open this up to the trial lawyers, and whatever an HMO or a managed care or an employer's policy provides for people is going to be in question unless the patient turns out healthy, safe, and sound.

If it turns out that they get sick or sicker, what do you think the case is going to be? They should have provided a different kind of care; I am in court: I am going to get an expert to say it should have been different; I am going to get a contract lawyer, an expert, to read into this contract what they think I should have.

They are liable for wrongful death, they are liable for any kind of illness, because the patient did not get well.

Frankly, I believe that is a giant mistake, and everybody should understand we are adding billions of dollars to the cost of health care through this and maybe will not get the kind of relief people need.

Whatever the Republicans' final package is, I hope and pray that as part of the review process with short timeframes and mandatory performance when they make a decision as to what they are entitled to, I believe an enlightened America should opt for the latter. Do we want health care or do we want a jury verdict? Do we want health care as it should be or do we want a trial in the courts of this country? I choose the former, and you can do it without putting these issues into the courts of America, Federal or State. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the remaining time to the Senator from Illinois. THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Chair. Let me say at the outset that the Senator from Pennsylvania misstated this amendment. This amendment says an employer can be held liable only when that employer uses his discretionary authority to make a decision on a claim. If a decision is made by an insurance company hired by the employer, the employer cannot be held liable. That is what this language says clearly.

Is there a time when an employer could be held liable? We found two cases. You decide whether they should be brought to court.

The employer collected the premiums from the employee and did not turn them in to the insurance company. When the employee had a claim, the insurance company said: You are not on our books.

In the second situation, the employee was a full-time employee and had worked 9 months at this firm. He filed a claim with the health insurance company. The insurance company said: No; we see you as an employee. It is a dispute over part-time/full-time.

Those are two instances under law where employers are brought into court. Employers do not make these medical decisions. They would not be subject to this lawsuit.

Please bear with me for a minute. This is the most important amendment we will consider on this bill.

The Senator from New Hampshire corrected me. He is right. It does not keep 125 million Americans out of court. It keeps 120 million Americans out of court. I stand corrected. I say to the Senator. He is right. It is only 120 million Americans and their families who will be denied a day in court by the Republican amendment; an amendment which is a Federal prohibition against State lawsuits against health insurance companies.

Across the street at the Supreme Court building, you will find the phrase, Equal Justice Under Law. That is what this amendment says to that phrase: Denied; denied. Equal justice under law is denied for those families who want to take health insurance companies into court and hold them accountable for their wrong decisions.

The Senator from New Mexico said: What are we doing taking contract questions into courts? I do not know where that Senator went to law school, and I do not know whether he follows law and order in other programs, but that is what this amendment says. Courts decide questions like contract coverage. That is part of the law of the land for every business in America, except health insurance companies.

The Republicans have come forward with this amendment, an amendment which the insurance industry wants dearly so that they cannot be held accountable in court. What this means is that families across America, when decisions are made, will not have their day in court. The Republicans want to continue to prohibit American families from holding these health insurance companies accountable for their bad decisions.

ISA Today: The central question is, Should HMOs, which often make life or death decisions about a treatment, be legally accountable when their decisions are tragically wrong? Right now the answer is no.

If we pass the Democratic Patients' Bill of Rights, finally the courthouse doors will open to families across America. If the Republicans and the insurance industry prevail on this amendment, those doors are slammed shut. What will that mean? It will mean not just fewer verdicts, not just fewer settlements, but the continued attitude of this health insurance industry that they are held unaccountable, that they cannot be held accountable to anyone. They will make decisions—life and death decisions—for you and your family and never face the prospect of going to court.

This is an internal memorandum from an HMO. This memorandum says it as clearly as can be. What they conclude is: Stick with the current law that keeps us out of court. This gentleman, who is in charge of management, said: We identified 12 cases where our HMO had paid $7.4 million. If we had it under the ERISA provisions that the Republicans want to protect, we would have paid between zero and $500,000 to those 12 families.

This is what it is all about. Someone who is maimed, someone who loses their life, their family goes to court and asks for justice. Equal justice under the law, that is all we are asking for.

The Republican majority and the insurance industry do not want to give American families that opportunity.

Vote to make sure we have equal justice under the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GREGG. I yield myself 5 minutes off the bill. I will be the last speaker, so Members can understand there will be a vote in about 5 minutes—two votes. I stand corrected.

There have been a lot of representations in this argument in the last hour and a half or so. Let me make a couple points.

First off, once again, the Senator from Illinois cites the wrong number of people covered by this proposal. That does not really go to the core of the issue, but it should be clarified. The Senator from New Jersey said there are only two cases of life or death decisions by this type of situation, diplomats and insurance companies. Actually Senators and members of the Government are covered in the same way.
In fact, it was an OPM directive from the Clinton administration on April 5, 1996. I will simply quote from it. It says:

Legal actions to review actions by OPM involving such denials of health benefits must be brought...against the carrier or the carrier subcontractor.

It further states those actions can only be for certain limited amounts of recovery. So essentially we are tracking that proposal which is what Senators are presently considering.

Also, the Senator from Massachusetts said—and this point was made by the Senator from Washington—that, yes, our proposals cost $13 billion and, yes, your proposals cost billions of dollars.

But there is a little bit of difference. We cut taxes. We give people assets. We put money in their pockets. We say to your folks: You can go out and use that money to benefit your family. Your proposals increase the cost of premiums and drive people out of the health care system and create more uninsured people. There is a fairly significant difference between the two cost functions of these two bills.

One amendment goes to the fact that the proposal from the other side of the aisle essentially dramatically expands the number of lawsuits which will be brought in the United States, lawsuits which will be brought in all these different areas by aggregative and creative attorneys, lawsuits which today and under our bill would be settled under a procedure which is reasonable, which has independent doctors looking at the issue. Those decisions, by doctors who are independently chosen by independent authorities, are binding, binding on the health care provider group.

So we take out all these lawyers, all these attorneys. I think of this one procedure I cited before where you literally 133 doctors talking about 82 different ways to treat one different patient needs the care. That can be multiplied by thousands, if not millions, giving literally millions upon millions of opportunities for attorneys to bring lawsuits because one doctor shows treatment A and another doctor chose treatment A—not B or B—.

The fact is the decision should not be made by an attorney. That decision should be made by an outside doctor who has no relationship, who is chosen by an independent group, and who has binding authority.

The end product of this bill will be to create a lot of new attorneys in this country having a lot of new opportunities to bring a lot of new lawsuits. In fact, there has been an lot of hyperbole on this floor. I want to put it in perspective. It might be hyperbole, but it is still fairly accurate.

There is a show on Saturday morning that I enjoy listening to on National Public Radio. Some may be surprised that I enjoy listening to National Public Radio, but I do. The show is called “Car Talk.” In “Car Talk,” there is a law firm in Cambridge, MA. I know it is euphemistic, but they call them, so far: Dewey, Cheatum & Howe? They represent the folks on “Car Talk.” Their offices are somewhere in Cambridge in Car Talk Plaza, and they represent the Tappet Brothers. Today I think the attorneys: Dewey, Cheatum & Howe.

If this bill is passed, Dewey, Cheatum & Howe are going to have to build a new building in Cambridge, and they are going to have all these attorneys bringing suits. That is the only way they are going to be needed to support all the lawsuits that are going to be proposed under this bill as a result of its expansion.

What is the serious, ultimate outcome of this? It drives up costs. That is the serious ultimate outcome. It was almost treated as if that was an irrelevancy by one of the other speakers. Well, 1.4 percent of the premiums are going to go up. That does not mean anything? I say 1.4 percent translates into 600,000 people.

There have been a lot of pictures brought to the floor about people who have not gotten adequate health care, and I am sure their stories are compelling. But this floor would be filled if we put up the 600,000 pictures of people who will lose their health care insurance—filled right up to the ceiling by people who no longer have health care insurance as a result of all these lawsuits raising up all these costs for health care.

As the Senator from Pennsylvania pointed out, what will be the outcome of that? What will be the outcome of all these people being put out of their health care insurance because the cost has gone up so much? These are CBO’s estimates, not mine. It will be that somebody will come to the floor from the other side of the aisle saying: We have to nationalize the whole system in order to take care of all the uninsured. Is that what we are creating by creating all these lawsuits for all these attorneys to pursue. What a disingenuous approach to health care, in my opinion.

The Republican plan has a constructive way to approach this. It leaves the decision of care to the patient, to be reviewed by a doctor, who is independently chosen, who is in the specialty where the patient needs the care. That decision is binding, binding on the health care provider.

I hope Senators will join me in supporting my amendment which voids the language which expands the lawyers’ part of this bill.

I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Mr. NICKLES.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, for the information of all Senators, I think we are ready to vote on the Gregg amendment, which strikes the liability provision. I also notify Senators that immediately following that vote, there will be a vote on the first-degree amendment, the amendment offered by Senator Collins dealing with long-term care deductibility and also dealing with ER and OBJ/GYN and access. So that vote will be immediately after the Gregg amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1250. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. Mr. FITZGERALD. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 47, as follows:

The amendment (No. 1250) was agreed to.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, previously I indicated we would have two rollover calls vote back to back. Since we found out there is a Special Olympics that we have to go to, I ask unanimous consent that pending Collins amendment No. 1243 be temporarily laid aside and the vote occur on the amendment first in the next series of votes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WYDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.
Mr. KENNEDY. May we have order, Mr. President? Mr. President, the Senate is not in order. We have done very well during the course of the morning. We have had good attention, a good exchange, and good debate. This is an important amendment. If we could make sure that Senator could be heard and the Senators give their full attention, we would be very appreciative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Any Senators with conferences, please take them off the floor. Staff will take their conferences off the floor.

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 125 TO AMENDMENT NO. 122
(Purpose: To prohibit the imposition of gag rules, improper financial incentives, or inappropriate retaliation for health care providers; to prohibit discrimination against health care professionals; to provide for point of service coverage; and, to provide for the establishment and operation of health insurance ombudsman)

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. The amendment on the other side will be, Republicans will say: Why ban the actual gagging of a doctor. The real distinction between the amendment of the Senator from Oregon and the Republican amendment is that this amendment ensures the doctor will not risk his job if he advocates. He might be able to tell the patient they need a particular treatment, the doctor will be permitted to relay that information, but then he can be fired under the Republican proposal. Also, they will have the option of giving financial incentives for doctors not to provide the best medicine.

The amendment of the Senator from Oregon is the only amendment that does the job.

Mr. WYDEN. The Senator is absolutely right. What the Senator has proposed is that you gut the effort to protect patients from these gag clauses unless you ensure that the providers are in a position to do their job and not get retaliated against and not face this prospect of getting financial incentives when they do their job.

The Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely right. We are making sure that providers can be straight with their patients. We are actually giving them the chance to carry out that effort. We are actually saying sure they will not be retaliated against and by making sure they will not face the prospect of their compensation in some way being tied to doing their job.

I am very hopeful all of our colleagues can support this amendment. It tracks what the majority of the Senate is already on record in voting for, the effort that the Senator from Massachusetts and I led in the last Congress shortly after I came here. I was director of the Gray Panthers at home in Oregon for about 7 years before I came to Congress. I can see a lot of areas where Democrats and Republicans have differences of opinion on...
American health care. There are a lot of areas where reasonable people can differ. I don’t see how a reasonable interpretation of what is in the interest of patients and providers can allow for gag clauses and then give these plans the opportunity to utilize any form of gag clause, including gag clauses saying: If you try to be straight with your patients, we will retaliate against you; we will tie your compensation to your keeping these parties in the dark.

I hope my colleagues will support this amendment. It shouldn’t be partisan. It doesn’t constitute HMO bashing.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

I strongly support the effort my friend from Oregon is making to ensure that there is a provision in this bill that finally passed prohibiting these gag provisions. I think that is very important.

I want to speak about a different aspect of this larger amendment. This is a provision that Senator HARKIN has taken the lead on, that I am cosponsoring with him. It deals with the problem of discrimination against non-physician providers of health care services.

What am I talking about when I talk about “discrimination against non-physician providers of health care services”? I am talking about the people whom everyone, on occasion, wind up going to for high-quality professional health care. I am talking about nurse anesthetists, about speech and language pathologists, nurse practitioners, physical therapists, nurse midwives, occupational therapists, psychologists, optometrists, and opticians.

These are health professionals who are licensed to provide particular medical services.

All we are providing in Senator HARKIN’s amendment, which I cosponsor, is that a health maintenance organization cannot arbitrarily prevent a whole category of health care providers from providing their services to all of the State of Iowa. We are certifying that service.

This is an extremely important issue for a State such as New Mexico where we have a great many rural and underserved areas. That is where the impact is. And in those areas we have too few physicians in my State. The reality is that if a person is limited in obtaining their health care from a physician, in many cases in many parts of our State they either have a choice of driving a great distance or going outside their health plan and paying out of their pocket for something that ought to be covered by the premium they are already paying.

It is a serious issue that needs to be addressed. As far as I know, the estimate is that we are losing 30 physicians. I believe it was 30 physicians in 1 month, according to the estimate. So we have a shortage of physicians. We are losing many of the ones that we have. We need to be sure people have access to the nonphysician health care providers who are very qualified to provide some of these services.

Let me show a chart on one of the services I am talking about. This is on anesthesia providers.

As I indicated before, nurse anesthetists are covered as one of the groups of health care providers. In our State, if you want anesthesia services, as far as I know, if you are provided to you, your ability to get that strictly from a physician occurs in only one small area of our State. That is the area in blue. In all of the rest of our State, you are forced to rely upon someone other than a physician to provide that service.

All we are saying is, in the case of anesthesia services, a health maintenance organization should have to allow those services to be provided by another qualified person other than the physician, wherever the person is available. This is a simple matter of fairness to patients in rural areas. It is something that does not involve significant costs. In fact, the estimate of the Congressional Budget Office is less than half a percent change in cost over a 10-year period.

The reality is that many of these nonphysician health care providers provide these services at a much lower cost than the physician does. So, in fact, it is not a question of increasing the cost. In many cases, it is a question of decreasing the cost.

We offered this amendment in committee when this bill was considered in the Health and Education Committee. I offered this exact language. Senator HARKIN did. Several of our Republican colleagues at that time expressed their support—not with their votes but with their statements—for providing this type of guarantee. So it is nothing radical. This is a simple fairness issue, and it is one that makes all the sense in the world as far as the economics of health care is concerned.

If we are really concerned about getting adequate health care to the rural underserved areas of our country, such as Senator HARKIN represents in his State, it is essential we have this amendment as part of what we pass out of Senate.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BINGAMAN. President Clinton, as I understand, has insisted this be part of the Medicare Program. So it is in the Medicare Program. Could the Senator indicate to me how this is working in his own State? Is it working well? It would appear to me to be a precedent for this, unlike other public policy issues, and it appears we have a pretty good pilot program—perhaps a pilot program. Perhaps the Senator would share with us his experience.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the Senator for that question. It is an extremely good point. This is the nondiscrimination requirement that was put into the Balanced Budget Act in addition to Medicare. The President of the Senate has expired.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the Senator. In relation to Medicare managed care plans, and in relation to Medicaid, it has worked extremely well in those cases. I understand, has insisted this be part of the Medicare Program. Perhaps the Senator would share with us his experience.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the Senator for that question. It is an extremely good point. This is the nondiscrimination requirement that was put into the Balanced Budget Act in addition to Medicare. The President of the Senate has expired.

One other example. In my State, certified registered nurse anesthetists are the sole anesthesia providers for 65 percent of our rural hospitals. If our rural hospitals are going to continue to function, as they must, then we need to be sure the nonphysician providers who are able to provide services in these smaller communities are able to do so and be compensated through these health maintenance organizations. I think this is an important provision. I hope very much Senators support it and we can get this adopted as part of a bill we finally pass.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the minority yields 6 minutes to the junior Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I join my friend and colleague from New Mexico. Together, we are cosponsoring this very important, vital amendment. Again, I will repeat some of what the Senator said. The most important thing I heard him say was, in the State of New Mexico, only 65 percent of the State has nurses that provide anesthesia.

I have a map of my State of Iowa. There are a lot of different colors on it, and I will not go into all the explanation, but the reality is, the vast majority of the State of Iowa only has certified nurse anesthetists to provide services to all of the State of Iowa. We have a few counties, about nine or 10, that have doctors, MDs. The rest are registered nurses. That is all. So someone up here in northwest Iowa or southwest Iowa, someplace up in this area, would have to drive hundreds of miles just to access an MD who is an anesthetist.

Here is a letter from Preferred Community Choice PPO. I will not read the whole thing. It says:

At this time, participation is limited to MDs.

I ask unanimous consent the entire letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PREFERRED COMMUNITY CHOICE PPO, Mountainview, AR, November 1, 1995.

GREETINGS: Thank you for recent inquiry regarding participation in our network of
You might say, why would we do it here if 38 States already cover it? The problem is, the State laws do not apply to the 48 million Americans who are in self-funded ERISA plans. That is the problem. That is the loophole we are plugging.

This provision is critically important for those who live in rural areas; those who do not have access to an MD or a DO; those who rely upon others who have State licensure or State certification to provide the kind of medical services they require.

In our amendment, the amendment by the Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Bingaman, and me, we are basically saying we want to give people a little more power, to empower them a little more, and to provide freedom of choice for the American consumers. It is very simple. This provision says a managed care plan cannot arbitrarily exclude a health care professional on the basis of the license or the certification. It is a straightforward amendment. It has broad-based support. I have a list of all the different associations supporting it. I would point out the broad-based support that it indeed does have, by everything from the American Psychological Association, Psychologists, to chiropractors, to midwives, the American Chiropractic Association, American Nurses Association, Occupational Therapy Association of America, the American Optometric Association, the Physical Therapy Association, Speech, Language, and Hearing Association, and the Opticians Association of America.

A broad range of providers support this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bunning). The Senator's 6 minutes have expired.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I hope at least we can support this and provide our people freedom of choice.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this amendment.

There are many very important provisions, but I want to focus on one provision, and that is the creation at the State level of ombudsman programs or consumer assistance centers. I have been working on this provision, along with Senators Wyden and Wellstone. We introduced separate legislation, and today I introduced an amendment, we are considering this very valuable and important opportunity to empower consumers of health care services in this country.

One of the persistent themes we have heard throughout this debate is how do we give consumers more leverage in the system against these huge HMOs, against what appears to be illogical, indifferent decisions about the health of themselves and their families. We rejected some proposals which I believe should have been embraced. For example, we just defeated an opportunity to give people a chance, in extremis, to go to court if necessary.

This is something that has been promoted by many different organizations. The President's health care advisory commission in 1997 pointed out this is efficiency and every State, every region should have these types of centers.

We have similar centers with respect to aging and long-term care ombudsman programs working very well. Several States—Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, and Virginia—have adopted these programs because they give a voice and give some type of power to their consumers in health care. Florida and Massachusetts have programs they are trying to get up and running, and just a few weeks ago on this floor in response to profound concerns we have about the military managed care program, the TriCare program, we adopted legislation that would set in motion the creation of an ombudsman program for military personnel. It is not a controversial idea. This idea has overwhelming support.

This is something we can do. This is something we should do, and, frankly, if we rejected all the remedies we are proposing to give to consumers, we have to adopt at least one. We have to give an incentive to States for working through not-for-profit agencies to set up these consumer assistance programs. Frankly, this is something that is long overdue, non-controversial, and it is not a done.

I see the Senator from Oregon, who has been a stalwart on this issue, is standing. He might have a comment.
Mr. WYDEN. I appreciate my colleague yielding. I so appreciate his leadership because this is a chance, with the Reed proposal, to make sure the consumers in this country can get what they need without litigation. I hope the leadership of the Senate from Rhode Island, is essentially say: Let’s try to help the patients and the families early on in the process. Let’s not let problems fester and continue and eventually result in huge problems which can lead to litigation.

It seems to me—I want the Senator from Rhode Island to address this—what he is doing is essentially changing consumer protection so it ought to be at the front end when problems have not become so serious.

Mr. WYDEN. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island be given 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. WYDEN. I thank my colleague from Oregon. Let me reaffirm what my colleague said. This whole concept of ombudsman and consumer assistance centers is designed to allow the consumer in the first few hours, or even minutes, when they encounter problems in the health care system, to get advice and assistance. This is not a theoretical concept. It works already in several States.

California has a model program around the Sacramento area. People have come from this. This is what we want to see in every state in the country.

Again, if we cannot be sensitive enough to recognize the need for consumer assistance early in the process, then I believe we are failing the American public miserably. I hope we can embrace, support, and adopt this amendment, particularly this provision with respect to the ombudsman consumer assistance program.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this amendment. I particularly want to address the issue of financial incentives, which this amendment addresses, which essentially is HMOs and health insurance companies providing financial incentives for physicians to provide less than appropriate care to limit the treatment options for patients or, in the case I am about to talk about, not calling in other physicians or doctors when they may be needed under the circumstances.

This is the story of something that actually happened in North Carolina. A young mother was in labor. During the course of her labor, she was being overseen by an obstetrician/gynecologist who was responsible for her care. Unfortunately, this single OB/GYN was responsible for the care of a number of mothers in labor on this night.

During the course of the evening and the morning, the mother developed severe complications with her labor. There were clear signs the baby was in serious trouble and was having trouble getting oxygen and needed to be delivered. Something needed to be done immediately. The nurses taking care of this mother did exactly what good nurses would do under the circumstances: They paged the doctor. They called the doctor who was on call. They could not get him there. They had no indication why he was not responding to the call. They notified, by way of the call, that it was an emergency situation. Still no response.

More and more time was passing when the child within the mother’s womb was not receiving the oxygen it needed and continued to suffer injury and damage.

Finally, the doctor appeared and delivered the baby by cesarean section. Unfortunately, the child and the family, it was too late. The child suffered severe and serious permanent brain injury. The child has severe cerebral palsy and, essentially, will require extensive medical care for the course of its life.

Later we learned that what happened was the physician was in charge of this patient’s care had a financial incentive, because of his contract with the HMO, not to call in additional physicians. In other words, where on a consistent basis, he did not call in backup help—even though in this situation he was taking care of too many patients, too many mothers.

There was an emergency, and the bottom line is this: Because of a financial incentive, an insurance HMO credited it with its doctor, we have a young child who will have cerebral palsy for the rest of his life. This is the kind of thing that should not happen in America. This is what this amendment addresses. It specifically deals with the issue of financial incentives in a thoughtful, intelligent way, limiting the financial incentives that can be allowed and requiring their disclosure—both of which are absolutely needed and absolutely necessary.

I might add one final thought. This child, who for the rest of his life will be severely brain damaged, will require extensive medical care, very expensive medical care, running in the many millions of dollars. His family, who are responsible for this child’s care, who live with this problem 24 hours a day, day in and day out, year after year—this child’s medical care is being paid for by Medicaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS. If I may have 30 more seconds?

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from North Carolina, and the Senator from Oregon for their work on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I say to Senator WYDEN from Oregon that I did not get a chance to hear his remarks on the floor of the Senate, but I think this whole question of whether or not doctors and providers can advocate for their patients and speak up when they think their patient is being denied care unfairly is extremely important. It is a little shocking, I think, to find out that all we hear from doctors who tell us that they do not believe they can do that. They have no protection. They are worried about losing their jobs.

So I just say that if we are about being on the side of consumers, which I think is what we are about, Senator WYDEN’s amendment is extremely important.

I will speak to another provision in this amendment which we actually have not discussed on the floor of the Senate. Of course, my fear is that Republicans will come out with a second-degree amendment and try to essentially wipe this amendment out. I wish in fact, I would give up half of my 9 minutes if somebody from the other party would come down here; I would give up 4 and a half minutes just to get their other point of view, because the argument I am about to make goes as follows.

The American people talk about “points of service,” which actually is about consumer choice. What we are saying in this provision is that if you are paying extra or
The insurance industry won and American families lost because the right to emergency room treatment at the nearest hospital is not granted. The insurance industry has won and American families have lost because access to specialists is not guaranteed. The insurance industry has won and American families have lost because the right to appeal an unfair decision by the HMO is not guaranteed. The insurance industry has won and American families have lost because the right to sue, even the most egregious, outrageous behavior by an HMO, is not granted.

The insurance industry won and American families lost because the right of so many women, the desire of so many women to have an OB/GYN as their primary care physician is not there. And most of all, the insurance industry won and the American people lost, because instead of covering 161 million Americans, we are only covering 48 million Americans.

I think this is a very honest debate where we have two different definitions of what is good. I think we are talking about two different frameworks of self-interest and power. I think there is a reason that every single children's consumer and provider organization has supported our amendment and wants to see real patient protection. There is a very good reason why the insurance industry is the only interest that is supporting the Republican proposal.

It is because the Republican Party, the other side of the aisle in this debate, is marching lock, stock, and barrel with the insurance industry, and we are on the side of consumers and families. As Democrats, that is exactly where we should be. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment. It looks as if even this amendment will be defeated by the Republican Party. It is so minimal: the right to ombudsman, points of service, a gag rule so your physician can tell you the truth, financial incentives. It is hard to believe this amendment is going down, but it is, and so is every other reasonable provision.

So as we come to the close of this week's debate, it is worth looking at what has happened in the Senate. What has happened this week can be summed up in one sentence: The insurance industry won; American families lost.
people covered by our proposal; 48 million by theirs.

What about the other 113 million? They get no rights at all.

I am going to make a prediction. This will not be the last time we take up the Patients Bill of Rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 3 minutes have expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield a half minute.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator. I was just finishing my thought.

The mothers and fathers of America, who have been wrestling with the HMO bureaucracy, struggling with it, are not going to have their problems solved. They will come back to us, and we will be back to pass a better bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I think we have 2½ minutes. How much remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will withhold the remainder of my time to respond to some of the points made on the opposite side.

I believe the two most contentious elements of the managed care reform debate are addressed favorably for consumers in S. 326. The first is holding health plans accountable for medical versus coverage decisions; the second is insurance companies manipulating the definition of "medical necessity" to deny patient care.

S. 326 does not expand the liability of ERISA plans by exposure to state tort laws, which has been proposed as a way to hold HMOs accountable for medical decisions. Rather, S. 326 gets patients the medical treatment they need right away through a timely appeals process. Get the care; then worry about the problems. It doesn't require them to earn it through a lawsuit. I do understand the frustration expressed by physicians who are held liable for their medical decisions. It is for that very reason that the bill I support securely places the responsibility for medical decisions in the hands of independent medical experts. These decisions are binding on health plans, who run the risk of losing their accreditations, daily fines and, ultimately, their stake in the market.

Likewise, the external appeals processes in S. 326 prohibit plans from hiding behind an arbitrary definition of medical necessity to deny care. S. 326 expressly establishes a standard of review, including: the medical necessity and appropriateness, experimental or investigational nature of the coverage denial; and, any evidence-based decision making or clinical practice guidelines, including, but not limited to, those used by the health plan. This is in subtitile C, Sec. 503(e)(4). In other words, the independent external reviewer—required by the bill to have appropriate medical expertise—will have access to the patient's medical record, evidence offered by the treating physician and all other documents introduced during the review process. Additionally, the reviewer will consider expert consensus and peer-reviewed literature, thus incorporating standards of "medical necessity" clearly outside those prescribed by the plan. The bill also requires that, during the internal appeals process, the medical necessity determination is made by an independent physician with appropriate expertise—not by the plan.

Since its inception in 1974, this is the first proposal as "ERISA" as it pertains to the regulation of group health plans. The focus of the mission—regardless of politics—should be to protect patients. Protecting patients means not only improving the quality of care but expanding access to care and allowing consumers and purchasers the flexibility to acquire the care that best fits their needs. The contention has been how to do this in the context of our health delivery system. I believe S. 326 is a responsible approach to protecting consumers in the managed care market.

While bipartisanship was in short order during committee consideration of S. 326, it is my hope that through the balance of this process we will continue discussions among Members to advance needed patient protections without jeopardizing access to health care. While we have been unable to bridge some of the partisan barriers during floor consideration, I believe a better plan for health care consumers is being passed today.

I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time be charged on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise today pleased with the discussion and the debate which has taken place over the last 4 days, recognizing that we have a number of other amendments as we go forward and hopefully look for a vote later today for final passage.

I want to mention a couple of things I haven't had the opportunity to speak about yet, but continue to be asked about by my colleagues and by various people in the media and constituents continue to call about. One of them has to do with an issue we debated yesterday, which will be voted on at 3:30; that is, access to specialty care.

A number of issues have arisen. I think it is important that our colleagues all understand that the Republican bill ensures access to specialty care. Again, the easiest way for me to take care of that, without getting into the nitty-gritty, is with the wording in the underlying bills that is a little bit different. "Specialty" versus "specialty care" has all kinds of connotations that allow people to confuse the issue.

But in section 725 of our bill, it states that plans—and I begin my quotation by saying—"shall" ensure access to specialty care as covered under the plan.

What is important is that people understand that the ultimate decision of what is "medically necessary and appropriate"—those exact words that are used in the various bills and amendments that have come forward to ultimately decide what is "medically necessary and appropriate"—ends up being with a physician who is independent of the plan, who is a medical expert, who is a specialist, who is appointed not by the plan.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise today pleased with the discussion and debate which has taken place over the last 4 days, recognizing that we have a number of other amendments as we go forward and hopefully look for a vote later today for final passage.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if I may, I ask unanimous consent that Sofia Lidskog be granted the privilege of the floor during the duration of the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I might take for some additional views.

During the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee consideration of S. 326, I asserted strong positions on a number of key components of the managed care reform debate. These additional views are intended to reiterate my support for S. 326, provide the committee with a cohesive explanation of my position on specific policy, and express my appreciation to the committee for reporting to the full Senate a good bill for health consumers.

S. 326 serves a series of patient protections to consumers in Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) regulated health plans. Direct access to OBGYN and other specialty providers, a ban on gag clauses, a prudent layperson standard for emergency services, a point-of-service option, continuity of care and access to specialists will provide consumers in self-funded plans the same protections being offered to state-regulated plans participants. Additionally, all ERISA regulated plans will be required to disclose extensive comparative information about coverage, networks and cost-sharing. This requirement is implemented by the establishment of a new binding independent external appeals process, the lynchpin of any successful consumer protection effort. more we can do in terms of distancing this reviewer, this physician, this independent reviewer, who is appointed by an entity, which is regulated by the Government, and is another sort of separation from the plan. This entity can be appointed either by the Secretary of Health and Human Services or by the State or by the Federal Government. This entity appoints this third party reviewer who ultimately decides what is "medically necessary and appropriate." When we use those words "medically necessary and appropriate," again and again it has come back that at least we should consider putting it in Federal statute and defining in Washington, DC, what "medically necessary and appropriate" means.

I reject that, and I think we should reject that because it is impossible—I think it is impossible, but I will say it is impossible—to define what is "medically necessary and appropriate." But what is the point of doing it on the Senate floor? In fact, many think tanks and many Senators, Congressmen and women have tried to do it, and we haven't been able to define it in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. The President's Insurance Commission was unable to define what is "medically necessary and appropriate." Thus, we don't attempt to define it. We say it is important, but we say ultimately it has to be defined by an independent specialist, independent of the managed care company. Then we have a whole list of things that he or she has to take into consideration.

We continue to limit what that third party independent reviewer—he or she—actually considers the best practice of medicine, which is very different, I should say, from "generally accepted medical practices." "Generally accepted medical practices" have been defined very well. There is not a book of "generally accepted medical practices." I say that because if your sick heart is not beating very well, there are procedures that may not be "generally accepted" but they can be lifesaving. They may not be done very much in a community. Whether you do a transplant, or you put a wrap around the heart, or you take out a section of it, that may not be the overall best practice, but they are "generally accepted practice" or "generally accepted" but not the "best medical practice." I don't want to get into writing these definitions into Federal statute.

The distinction that has been made in several bills when we talk about "medical necessity" is also a very important issue because for the layperson, or the patient sitting out there, you would think that "medical necessity" would be easy to define. But saying what is going on out there in the health care arena, what is the range of treatment—we have seen charts on the floor that basically show that the range of treatment is huge in America, charts on how to treat urinary tract infections 80 different ways by 170 different physicians.

What that basically says is the range of treatment is huge—the variety. It doesn't say whether all of those are good, bad, or indifferent. That is what they mean. But the fact that it doesn't say that and the practice is so wide, we don't want to make that the gold standard. If we were going to write something into Federal statute, we shouldn't say "generally accepted medical practices." There is a cause in that the lowest common denominator it takes the common denominator and makes that the standard.

I think it is very dangerous to say "best practices" will be the standard. That is why I don't think "best practices" should be written into Federal statute as the definition.

Why is that? It is because "best practices" are evolving over time. Yes, you can have studies in the New England Journal of Medicine or the Journal of the American Medical Association of the greatest breakthrough, but you can't expect that greatest breakthrough which might be in truth the best practice 3 or 4 or 5 years later. It will be consumed tomorrow by hundreds of thousands of physicians the next day across the United States of America.

I am trying to spend a little bit of time with this because I think it is dangerous to define "medical necessity" in the Federal statute. We can still use the terms. You need "medical necessity" in there—what is "medically necessary and appropriate"—but I don't think we should. I think we are doing a disservice if we try to define it. I struggled. We tried in our committee and in our staff to come up with a good definition. It doesn't mean that health care plans aren't going to try to define what is "medically necessary and appropriate." The reason this bill is necessary is that some managed-care plans have terrible definitions. They say what is "medically necessary and appropriate." They might say that it is effective and that it has had proven efficacy in the past. But some will go so far as to say what is the most efficient or what is—they don't say it this way—but what is the least expensive, and then once they have it in the contract, the people will come back and point to that.

Those are bad definitions. But that same sort of risk of writing in the definition in Federal statute, again, can be very dangerous if we are looking for quality of care in an evolving health care marketplace. The beauty of our bill is that we fix the system. We go to where the problems are, and we remove the barrier to the coverage that I deserve, that I expect, and that is appropriate for the American people. That is delivered in a timely way. That is not helped by a very expensive lawsuit which is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. The average malpractice lawsuit is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. The average malpractice lawsuit is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS.

The American people want their managed care plan is not delivering coverage. I yield myself 3 more minutes, and then I will yield to the Senator from Texas, if I may. I will finish this one thought.

What the American people want is for us to get away from this fear that managed care is overriding what they or their physician, in consultation with each other, think and believe is appropriate and, in truth, provides good quality of care. The reason I believe we were stuck on this vote earlier is the American people are saying let's fix the system, but let's make sure that we remove the barrier to the coverage that I deserve, that I expect, and that is appropriate for the American people. That is delivered in a timely way. That is not helped by a very expensive lawsuit which is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. The average malpractice lawsuit is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. The average malpractice lawsuit is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS.

The American people want to fix the system. They want the reassurance that their managed care plan is not delaying coverage.

That is not helped by a very expensive lawsuit which is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. The average malpractice lawsuit is not going to be settled for about 5 years, at least in Medicare or in CHAMPUS. the Senator from Tennessee. We are fortunate to have a physician in our midst.

Our Nation has the highest quality health care anywhere in the world. There is no question about that. In my home city, in the whole city is the health care industry, the Texas Medical Center. It contains world-class hospitals, including the renowned University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center, which is the largest treatment center in the world. Baylor College of Medicine, too, is a world leader in the treatment of cardiovascular disease. Houston is the home of the fathers of modern heart surgery: Dr. Michael DeBakey and Dr. Denton Cooley.

In the city of Dallas, TX, the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School has four Nobel laureates. They are doing research that is changing the quality of health care for our future. They are doing it because we have a system that allows for the investment in research. It allows for the treatment that is the best for diseases.

We don't want to break something that isn't broken. We don't want to try to fix something that isn't broken. We want to make sure we are giving better quality health care, that we are going to continue to have research and be in the forefront of research and technology as we go into the next millennium, trying to make sure we are doing the right thing.

There are problems. We have too many uninsured. Too rapid growth of HMOs and other service providers has caused some to be left behind. We must address these problems. Are there problems with HMOs? Absolutely. Do we need to increase the number of insured Americans? Of course.

If the American people remember the health debate we had in 1993, this Nation faced an outright Federal takeover of health care. That bill went down once America realized that our hospital industry, everyone involved in the health care industry in this country would have to answer to a massive bureaucracy in Washington, DC.

Under global cost limits, total health care spending in this Nation would be capped by Washington. Any way you slice it, what the administration offered was Government rationing of health care.

Today, we are considering legislation that would impose 350 new Federal mandates and regulations on our Nation's health care system. There has been discussion about the cost of these mandates, whether they will cost as much as a Big Mac or a McDonald's franchise. Either way, there will be increased costs, and more Americans could lose their insurance.

Once a mandate becomes law, a Federal agency in Washington will issue regulations or interpretations of that mandate. We have only to look as far as the Health Care Financing Agency to see what a total disregard of Congressional intent can do in the health care industry. While Congress did mandate more efficiencies, they did not mandate the cuts that HCFA made in our hospital industry and to our health care providers in such areas as home health care service agencies. We can see what Federal control of a health care industry does by looking at what HCFA is doing to the health care providers in this country today.

I think we are very carefully into the area of more Federal regulations of our health care industry. We do need to do something more than we are doing right now. However, I think we need to be very aware that we could go too far and throw out the baby with the bathwater.

I believe Democrats and Republicans want to make sure patients have basic rights when they and their family members need health care. It is wrong for an HMO to deny coverage for medically necessary treatment. It is wrong to allow a patient to get lost in red tape and unnecessary delays.

Both of our bills seek to empower patients when they are dealing with their health care industry and their insurance companies. However, there are three major differences in the way in which Democrats and Republicans are approaching the issue of managed care. First, we believe that cost matters and that higher costs will translate into more Americans losing their coverage.

Second, Republicans recognize that the Federal Government and a Federal bureaucracy should not impose a one-size-fits-all approach to ensuring quality care.

Third, we believe good health care is better than a good lawsuit.

With regard to costs, the Congressional Budget Office has said that the Democrats' plan will cause health insurance to increase in price by 6 percent above the current rate of inflation. By some estimates, that could lead to an estimated 1.8 million Americans losing their health coverage.

Mr. President, 18 million people is a city the size of Houston relying on free clinics or charity coverage. That is what the Democrat bill will do.

The new mandates in the Democratic bill will also cost an estimated 190,000 American jobs and additional out-of-pocket costs by the average family of $207 a year. This is not acceptable. The average American family for employer-provided health premiums has already more than doubled over the last decade from $2,530 in 1988 to $5,349.

The provisions of the Republican bill will also cost money, but the total cost of one mandate by the Congressional Budget Office is less than 1 percent in increased health premiums. These increases are more than offset by the provisions in our Patients' Bill of Rights Plus that will make health care more accessible and affordable for all Americans.

For the self-employed, our approach will make 100 percent deductibility of health insurance available next year— not in 5 years, as currently envisioned. Next year, every small business owner, every stay-at-home parent with their own business, will get exactly the same tax treatment for health insurance that corporations presently enjoy. This is long overdue.

The bill will allow employees the so-called flex plans or cafeteria plans to roll over to the next year up to $500 in unused funds to help pay for premiums or other out-of-pocket health costs. Under the present use-it-or-lose-it flex plans, they are not able to keep the money they have not spent. We want to encourage them not to spend the money they do not need by allowing them to roll it over.

The second major difference between our two bills and our two approaches is that the Democratic plan assumes Washington knows better than individuals, States, plans. Every State in America has rights in their best interest. We heard so much this week about how some of the provisions of the Republican bill do not apply to all private health care industry. That is true. Health plans that are now regulated exclusively by the Federal Government, we ensure that patients have their rights, such as direct access to OB/GYNs, direct access to specialists, and access to emergency room care. But, for the vast majority of Americans with health care, it is the States that have jurisdiction over their plans. This has been the case for several decades, ever since there has been health insurance in our country. Since the advent of HMOs, more and more States have acted to regulate managed care plans to ensure that the residents of their States enjoy the same protections they and their family members need health care. It is wrong for Washington to do something because Texas likes it.

The Democratic bill is too federally controlled, too heavy-handed in other States as well. We have heard much discussion of medical necessity. The Democrats say they only want to allow physicians to do what is medically necessary. That sounds fine, but what do they mean by medically necessary? It goes to an agency that has 250 pages of regulations about what is a medical necessity. And there we have it again, one-size-fits-all.

By trying to duplicate Federal law, the Democratic plan empowers a Federal Government employee to make those decisions, not your doctor talking to you about your needs. Under our system, we let an external review board of professionals, who are not associated with the HMO, decide who is right in making the call for the care. If the HMO says they are not going to cover a certain procedure, and the patient and the doctor decide that is not the right decision for the patient, they can internally appeal within the HMO, within a short period of time, and then appeal again to an outside panel of experts not associated with the HMO. That is the system we have in Texas, and it is working well.

In 1997, Texas enacted an innovative and broad set of managed care reforms, including a host of patients’ rights that are included in our bill today. The Texas plan includes the right to both internal and external appeal if the HMO denies a claim. In fact, in Texas, before you can even think of suing your HMO in court, you must exhaust your administrative remedies, and because the State tried to apply its external review section to federally regulated HMOs as well as State regulated HMOs, a Federal court has struck down part of the State law. But it was working very well.

The State recently activated the external review process under the law. Now the system is voluntary. But, surprisingly, HMOs and other health plans are still willing to participate and be bound by the external review process in Texas. And it is working.

The Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus establishes a national, internal, and binding external appeals process using the Texas statute as a guide. It is a good system. I think it will work for the federally covered plans as it has worked in Texas. In fact, in Texas it has worked so well that, of more than 300 appeals heard under the external review system, only one lawsuit has emerged, and the appeals have gone about 50-50 in favor of both the health plans.

This brings me to the third major difference between the Democrat and Republican approach, and that is by how we define lawsuits. Lawsuits are the answer to better care. In fact, in some ways, I wonder if they do not cause more defensive medicine rather than better care. It makes you think about the automotive industry. Why has that industry not mandated new rules that will drive up the cost of health care, the American people would much better served with a carefully tailored approach that respects the ability of patients, professionals, and State regulators to make their own decisions about what is best practice in their States and within their communities.

The Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus does just that. It makes sure that HMOs are accountable, without scaring employers away from even offering insurance to their employees. It gives patients the right to appeal within their HMO and then be bound by the external review process under the law. It empowers health care providers to provide the care their patients need but without Washington having to look over everyone’s shoulder. It is the right answer, and it is the right time.

Mr. President, I thank the leadership, Senator Frist, and Senator Collins, and those who have worked closely on the task force to make sure we provide the rights to patients in an affordable way that will not drive up costs and drive people out of the system. That should be our goal.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Voinovich). The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we have 2 1/2 minutes left. I will use those minutes.

I want to point out for the benefit of the membership, we have almost concluded our 50 minutes of debate. The debate has ended. There are a number of different amendments. All are very important because they all relate to the doctor-patient relationship. That is the heart of our entire bill. The heart of our bill is to make sure that medical professionals are able to practice the best medicine and that the best recommendations and that the insurance companies will comply with those recommendations.

The heart of our bill is maintaining the relationship between the doctor and his or her patient. That is the heart of our bill. We still have not had any real criticism, observations, or comments on those issues.

We had some debate in the HELP Committee when these issues were raised. I note the proponents of those particular amendments—those who were on the committee and those who were not—were on the floor ready to respond to questions. Nonetheless, we have had a heated debate and a heated legislative debate. We still have not heard a response to what I think has been a powerful presentation in favor of these measures. Again, I will mention very quickly what this amendment is about. This amendment is critical to preserving the relationship between medical professionals and patients, as well as providing fair information to consumers. Today, medical professionals are too often gagged, harassed, and financially penalized if they advocate for their patients.

I am reminded in my own State of Massachusetts of Barry Adams who was fired for simply reporting quality problems on his hospital. This happened just 3 months after he received a glowing evaluation that said he was an excellent role model, conducted himself in a professional manner, was an advocate for patients, and had alleviated his concerns appropriately.

Yet after he spoke up about his concerns, the facility mounted a campaign to oust him. The month he was fired, a woman died from a morphine overdose given by an unsupervised nurse. This was the very type of incident Barry reported previously, the very type of incident that Barry reported in the complaint that led to his firing. The facility also retaliated against two of his colleagues who reported unsafe patient conditions.

Barry fought back, and more than a year after he was fired, a judge ruled that Barry’s termination was unlawful. The judge ordered the hospital to reinstate Barry, pay him $20,000, and expunge his record. He won. But the point is, he never should have been fired in the first place. This amendment prevents that from happening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if patients cannot count on their doctor, quality medical care is impossible. If doctors cannot do their best for their patients without fear of retaliation, quality medical practice is impossible, too.

This amendment protects the relationship between the doctors and their patients. The Republican bill protects the doctor/patient relationship. Part of the doctor/patient relationship is being able to go to the medical professional of your choice, not the HMO’s choice. This amendment establishes a point-of-service option that guarantees the medical professionals and patients, as well as providing fair information to consumers. Today, medical professionals are too often gagged, harassed, and financially penalized if they advocate for their patients.

many consumers will simply be unable to exercise the rights this bill proposes to grant. As our friend and colleague, Senator Reed, pointed out, giving consumers information so they will have their rights protected under their HMO is so important. The Democrat amendment provides basic, commonsense protections for health professionals and patients, and I know of no valid reason that it should be opposed.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I have sat here and listened to the arguments from the other side. There is a part of this amendment the Democrats didn’t even talk about. The problem is that the amendment will make things worse, and not just for doctors and nurses. It will put patients at risk by allowing providers to release the intimate details of a patient’s treatment without having to worry about accuracy or even truth.

Here is how. Under the Democrat amendment, any provider could disclose any information about a patient at any time for any reason. This fact is so important that I want to say it again: Under the Democrat amendment, any provider could disclose any information about a patient at any time for any reason. And as bad and unbelievable as that is, it’s not even the worst of it. This amendment allows a provider to do the worst of all things—not only to give out information about a patient, but even lie about it—and not be held accountable.

Can that be possible, you ask? Isn’t that against the law? Not if this amendment passes, it’s not. If this amendment passes, the possibilities are endless. You will see your health records will be held hostage by a provider who can make an unchecked decision to disclose them without asking your permission and who can’t be penalized for doing so.

But that is not all. There is no requirement in the Democrat amendment that when a provider exposes your confidential records, that the provider make disclosures only within his area of expertise. So if an anesthesiologist makes disclosures only within his area of expertise. So if an anesthesiologist makes disclosures only within his area of expertise, the provider doesn’t even have to witness the treatment or your case before revealing everything about it—in fact, he doesn’t even have to witness the treatment or ever have met you—and there’s nothing saying he will be held accountable if he doesn’t. With the amendment, the Democrat amendment doesn’t even say that the disclosure must have to relate to safety and health. All the amendment says is that the disclosure must be based on squishy terms that aren’t even defined. For example, the amendment says that the disclosure must be based on information, and I’m quoting here, that the provider “reasonably believes * * * that the disclosure must be based on information, and I’m quoting here, that the provider “reasonably believes * * * to be true” and is not even related to the patient’s own safety. Exposing patients to such a high degree of risk without verifying disclosures to patient safety, expertise or even accuracy is not only unacceptable, it’s just plain wrong.

What the Democrat amendment completely ignores is that procedures specifically related to the health care industry are in place for reporting problems with patient health right now. The amendment also completely ignores and steam rolls all the state law in this area. I find it fascinating that the other side has said over and over and over again in this debate that state law trumps ERISA. But the Democrat amendment makes a complete mockery of state law, and then they propose an amendment like this.

I want to talk about what this does to state law. I want to talk about the procedures that are in place now.

On the first day of this debate, I heard no less than four Senators on the other side of the aisle characterize our “states rights” argument as being “tired” and “old.” Well, while I might take issue with it being “tired,” I certainly agree that it is “old.” In fact, it’s as old as the Constitution. And if you are tired of hearing about it, think about this: How many times have you been to Wyoming? What do you know about this state? And I can tell you that it’s true they need access to good health care, and I can also tell you that folks there don’t want the Federal government to step in and trump what the Wyoming Legislature has done to protect them. They don’t want one standard that applies to everyone regardless of who they are, where they’re from, and how they live. And if those on the other side of the aisle think that the people I represent in Wyoming are exactly like New Yorkers or Californians, then I suggest you head back to Cheyenne with me this weekend and see if you change your mind.

One size fits all doesn’t fit when we are talking about giving providers ways to report patient safety problems and protecting them when they make disclosures. Over 25 states have their own language prohibiting employers from retaliating against providers who disclose information relating to patient safety. And many state laws contain a strikingly similar framework which says that over 25 states with different laws and different reporting procedures; 25 states that offer different rights and responsibilities. I cannot underscore the importance of this enough. To a Democrat caucus that has repeatedly said that their bill will not shift the decisionmaking from the state capitals to Washington bureaucrats, I challenge you to tell me how their amendment such as this one that fully wipes out state law. Not only that, I challenge you to tell me how this flawed amendment is better than the law that exists on the state books. More on this in just a minute.

Bottom line, this amendment allows providers to file complaints disclosing confidential patient information without permission. These complaints don’t need to relate to safety and health. The provider does not need to know anything about who or what they are disclosing—whether it be the specific patient treatment or the patient himself. And finally—and most ridiculously—the provider doesn’t need to be accurate because he can’t be penalized for inaccurate state law. Misleading information or even downright lies about the patient or other health care providers. How in heaven’s name could any state law anywhere be worse, or more destructive, than this? Indeed, any law whatsoever would be vastly better.

But you do not have to take my word for it. I just take a look at some of the State laws. In California, for example, the law doesn’t even contain the word “provider” which violates the confidentiality of the physician-patient privilege. An important provision. Is it anywhere to be found in the Democrat amendment? No. The amendment ignores it entirely. What about a Rhode Island law that eliminates any protection for providers who participate or cause the problem being reported, or who provide false information? That one is pretty important, too. Also nowhere to be found in the Democrat amendment.

The body of state law that it would destroy is incredibly vital whether we’re talking about ERISA plans or not, because the courts have definitively held that where quality of care is concerned, state law trumps ERISA. As the Supreme Court has held, “the historic powers of the State include the regulation of matters of health and safety.” Another seminal third circuit case has held in citing the Supreme Court that, while the quality control of health care cannot be displaced by Federal law, the States can affect the sorts of benefits an ERISA plan can afford, they have traditionally been left to the states, and there is no indication in ERISA that Congress chose to displace general health care regulation by the states. It’s clear: the courts have deferred to the states when it comes to quality of care. I think that the democrats should take a lesson from this.

I have heard it said, however, that we cannot change the state law that occurs under the Democrat approach to health care because their bill will merely set a “floor” upon which States can build. Such a statement is questionable given an amendment such as this that is so flawed that it actually protects those who publicize confidential patient information and lie about it without giving the patient or other accused provider an opportunity to object. As a former state legislator, I say respectfully, “thanks, but no thanks.” The only floor this sets for the States is the one they will stomp on when they take one look at this bill.

So how do we investigate claims of wrongdoing and retaliation? I have mentioned that lots of other procedures are in place that allow for reporting and are specific to the health care industry. One of the biggest and most far-reaching of these is the reporting mechanism in place at the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations. The Joint Commission covers over 80 percent of the approximately 6,200 hospitals in this country that receive Medicare payments. These charts I have next to me are blow-ups of information taken directly off of the Joint Commission’s website and show not only how reports and concerns about patient care can be disclosed, but also how these issues are more appropriately investigated.

Here is how the process works. If a provider wants to report an alleged problem, that provider has several choices under the Joint Commission. He can e-mail a complaint, fax a complaint, mail a complaint, call the Joint Commission directly using their toll free number. And there are a couple of points I want to make about why this process is so much better, more related to the health care industry, and has much stronger teeth than this amendment. First, using the Joint Commissions’ toll free number, reporting concerns can be immediate and confidential. Not only that, communications with the Joint Commission can be made in English or in Spanish. Second, the Jack-in-the-box complaints are really important, too—all complaints must relate to quality of care issues and patient safety unlike the democrat amendment which can relate to anything. Third—and perhaps most important of all—where serious concerns have been raised about patient safety, the Joint Commission will, and I emphasize “will” conduct an announced, on site investigation. And with the Joint Commission, there will never be an investigator who is an employee of the health care industry as the Joint Commission operates. The Joint Commission’s standards are recognized as representing a contemporary national consensus on quality patient care, and these standards are continuously reviewed to reflect changing health care practices. This is a real solution that combines a proactive reporting method to make sure that patient quality is not compromised, with an appropriate and strong follow up with mandatory, unannounced, on site inspections by an organization known first hand to the health care industry as well as anyone.

In addition to all the State laws setting up reporting procedures and protections for providers, and in addition to the practices in place such as the Joint Commission, there are other controls. Hospitals that receive Medicare payments and that are not accredited by the Joint Commission are certified by the states, and these hospitals are required to provide patients with a document that explains their rights including a phone number where they can call a state agency to make a complaint about quality of care issues. These rights are protected. Yet another control is that patients—and even providers—can anonymously complain to the Medicare Program’s Peer Review Organization on quality of care matters. Providers may also complain to HCFA’s regional offices, state survey agencies and professional licensing boards.

I have heard the stories about providers who have disclosed information and then were retaliated against. What I don’t know is why the state laws, the Joint Commission’s reporting process, state reporting processes, Medicare reporting processes, HCFA’s reporting processes, and the professional licensing board—among other protections—are not working. What I do know is that patients have several options and perhaps most important of all—do providers fear retaliation? Why are current law, current practices, and current procedures not working? Nothing. Wouldn’t you think that if the majority was able to spend its time writing 99 pages supporting its position, the minority might have been able to spend just a little more time adding even one paragraph to its nine pages on this? Not even one paragraph on an amendment that the democrats say is so vital. It just doesn’t make any sense.

I have heard time and again that Republicans are weeping “crocodile tears” about our bill. In fact, out of those mere nine pages in the minority committee report an entire sentence was wasted making this statement. But it seems to me that when you lay down amendments and don’t share information about why we should trump state law in support of an amendment that protects providers who disclose misleading and confidential patient information unrelated to the patient’s safety, then I think it is the democrats who are the ones crying crocodile tears. When people have to choose between spending a few dollars to lie about it without giving the patient their best possible advice, without fear of retaliation or financial penalties.” So far, so good.

“Out plan bans abusive insurance industry practices that undermine the integrity of the doctor-patient relationship. The current legislation does not.” So I kept reading. I scanned the page. What abusive industry insurance practices? I wanted to know. Why do providers fear retaliation? Why are current law, current practices, and current procedures not working? Nothing. Wouldn’t you think that if the majority was able to spend its time writing 99 pages supporting its position, the minority might have been able to spend just a little more time adding even one paragraph to its nine pages on this? Not even one paragraph on an amendment that the democrats say is so vital. It just doesn’t make any sense. recognize we are going to continue to improve this bill as we go through.

A second component is the clinical trial issue, an issue Senator MACK and I have worked very aggressively on over the last year with a number of our colleagues. This is the issue that had been addressed initially earlier in the week that, as we said before, we are going to come back to and lay out what we think is the most reasonable way to achieve a very important goal, and that is to increase access to clinical trials.

A third component a number of Senators, again Senator COLLINS and Senator GRASSLEY, will be speaking to is on provider nondiscrimination, and we will be looking at some protections that are similar to those in Medicare and Medicaid.

A fourth component of this amendment—again a very important one because it involves choice, and again we are working to improve this bill as we go through with the amendments—is on point of service where we expand choice, which again is a basic underlying principle of the Republican efforts in this bill.

The fifth component that will be addressed is continuity of care, again a very important issue, the whole issue of extending the transition period for patients.

We have a lot to cover over the next 100 minutes, and it is very clear that having participated so much on each of these issues, that upon passage of this amendment with its five components, we will do a great deal to improve the quality of care of individual patients. That is where our focus must be.

We are going to begin with the issue of clinical trials, again picking up on the discussion earlier in the week. I yield 12 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Larry Kerr, a health fellow for the Judiciary Committee, be granted the privilege of the floor for the remainder of the debate on the Patients' Bill of Rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MACK. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined by Senator FRIST, Senator EFFORDS, and Senator COLLINS, and others, as we offer this amendment to provide cancer patients with coverage of health insurance benefits when they participate in approved clinical trials.

Many health plans will not pay for the cost of routine patient care if patients want to participate in a clinical trial. As a result, beneficiaries with cancer are denied access to these trials of promising new therapies because these therapies have been deemed "experimental" by most health plans and, therefore, not qualified for coverage. This means many cancer patients have two choices when they have exhausted all traditional therapies: either pay the cost of participating in a clinical trial themselves or go without additional treatment.

For all but the most wealthy patients, it is cost prohibitive to take part in a clinical trial. This amendment will help ensure that a patient's decision about whether or not to participate in a clinical trial is based upon science and not cost.

Clinical trials are one of the most effective ways of determining which treatments are beneficial. Yet cancer researchers have told me they have had difficulty enrolling the required number of patients to participate in the clinical trials. By $2 billion per year, scientists have identified noncoverage by private insurers, as well as Medicare, as one of the primary reasons why patients do not participate in clinical trials.

For example, approximately 2 percent of cancer patients are participating in clinical trials. This amendment will help scientists recruit cancer patients who wish to participate in clinical trials by breaking down the financial barriers that may preclude most patients from participating.

Clinical trials are one of the most effective techniques for assessing the effectiveness of a scientific and medical intervention. Many of my Senate colleagues have joined with me in a bipartisan effort to double biomedical research funding through the National Institutes of Health. Last year, Congress appropriated $15.6 billion for NIH. This represents a 32 percent increase over the largest increase in NIH history. At a time when American researchers are making such tremendous progress in scientific areas such as cancer genetics and biology, it is essential that this knowledge be translated into new therapies through well-designed clinical trials. This amendment is a natural extension of the historic effort to double funding for medical research in our country.

When my brother, Michael, was diagnosed with cancer, there were only three basic forms of treatment—surgery, radiation, and chemotherapy. Today, scientists are revolutionizing the treatment of cancer by developing new ways to kill cancer, including gene therapy and immunotherapy.

On a personal note again, every time I get into these discussions, and every time I see the new efforts that are being pursued, and the successes that have been developed, I cannot help but think if Michael's melanoma had been discovered or if he had found the disease much later in his life, when these new and promising therapies—gene therapy and immunotherapy—were available—and if he had been able to participate in a clinical trial, which he attempted to do throughout his treatment many years ago, his life may have been saved.

This amendment will help scientists continue the unprecedented progress being made to find new methods of treatment.

Coverage of cancer clinical trials is a bipartisan issue. Earlier this year, for example, Senator ROCKEFELLER and I introduced legislation to provide for Medicare coverage of cancer clinical trials. I am pleased to say that 36 additional senators, from both sides of the aisle, have cosponsored this legislation. I look forward to working with my colleagues to pass this important legislation during the 106th Congress.

The reason Senator ROCKEFELLER and I targeted our legislation to cancer is that the reason we are doing this amendment to cancer today—there is a legitimate debate about what the true cost may be. Senator ROCKEFELLER and I believe the cost will be insignificant. And we have the studies to prove that. However, there are legitimate concerns with respect to cost which have been raised. Both the amendment we offer today and the Rockefeller-Mack legislation, call for a study and report to Congress in 2005 on the cost implications of covering cancer clinical trials.

I support comprehensive coverage of clinical trials. But, at this time, we need more information before we go further. This amendment will help provide the information we need to make a better informed decision.

During markup of S. 326, the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions considered an amendment offered by my friend and colleague, Senator DODD, to provide for clinical trial coverage.

Since then, my colleagues and I have gone more thoroughly this studied this amendment. We have examined what barriers exist that impede enrollment in clinical trials. We looked into the cost implications. We considered the best way to define the term "routine patient costs."

Let me first highlight the many similarities in our amendment and the amendment which Senator Dodd offered during committee consideration.

Our amendment requires plans to provide coverage of routine patient costs. I will get back to that term in a few minutes.

Our amendments ensures that health plans are not required to pay for costs of items and services that are reasonably expected to be paid for by the sponsors of a clinical trial. This includes tests or measurements conducted primarily for the purpose of a clinical trial.

Our amendment permits plans to require clinical trial participants to use in-network providers, if they are available. If coverage is provided by a non-participating provider, payment would be at the same rate the plan would pay for comparable services to a participating provider.

Our amendment is limited to those health plans over which Congress has sole and exclusive jurisdiction. Our amendment does not target only the highest-quality clinical trials. These include trials approved and funded by the National Institutes of Health, the Department of Veterans Affairs, and the Department of Defense. Only those trials which have undergone the rigors of peer-review will be considered.

Our legislation differs with Senator Dodd's proposal in three ways.

First, it is how to best define the term "routine patient cost." In researching this issue, we have found that there is not a generally accepted definition of the term, "routine patient cost" associated with participating in clinical trials. The Balanced Budget Act required the Institute of Medicine to conduct a study on the issue of cancer clinical trial coverage, including the definition of routine patient costs. This study is due in September, and it will likely help us to better define this highly technical term. There are other experts who have opinions on how to define the term "routine patient cost." We believe it is best to leave this task to patients, employers, health plans and those with true expertise in the field of clinical trials.

It is essential to remember that protocols for clinical trials vary widely, and routine patient costs for clinical trials also vary. Scientific researchers have found that developing one standard for determining routine patient costs will be a daunting task. I don't believe Congress is best qualified to make this important scientific determination.

The first, our amendment provides for a negotiated rulemaking process to establish a time-limited committee charged with developing standards relating to the coverage of routine patient costs for patients participating in clinical trials. This way, organizations representing cancer patients, health care practitioners, hospitals, employers, manufacturers of drugs and medical devices, medical economists and others will be involved in the process of defining routine patient costs with respect to clinical trials.

By May, this committee is required to develop standards for routine patient costs for individuals who are participating in those trials. If the committee is unable to reach a consensus, the Department of Defense. Only those trials which have undergone the rigors of peer-review will be considered.

By May, this committee is required to develop standards for routine patient costs for individuals who are participating in those trials. If the committee is unable to reach a consensus, then the Secretary must develop these standards and publish a rule by June 30, in the year 2000. In either case, coverage for these benefits would begin for plans beginning on, or after, January 1, 2001.

We believe that a negotiated rulemaking process is the best way for organizations representing all who are affected to collectively determine what costs should be considered in "routine patient costs." These decisions will have a major effect on the costs of covering clinical trials.

I will just underscore that again. These decisions will have a major effect on the cost of covering clinical trials.

Under the Democratic bill, these organizations can only submit a comment to the Secretary, who has broad authority to determine what constitutes routine patient costs. However, those comments could be rejected out-of-hand by the Secretary.

By contrast, the negotiated rulemaking process ensures that all who have an interest in the outcome have a seat at the negotiating table to make the decision. We believe it is essential that cancer patients have an opportunity to be involved in establishing standards for routine patient costs, and a negotiated rulemaking procedure affords them that opportunity.

Second, as I mentioned earlier, our amendment differs from the Dodd amendment in that it is limited to cancer clinical trials. There are more clinical trials involving cancer than perhaps any other disease. This targeted approach will not only provide a needed benefit to a large patient population, but it will also provide significant information for the study and report called for in this amendment.

Finally, our amendment includes a study on the costs to health plans and any impact on health insurance premiums. Senator Dodd's amendment did not include this study and report, which I believe is extremely important. Congress can then use this information to determine if they wish to expand coverage for patients with other diseases.

Like most of my colleagues, I am very concerned about the ever-increasing costs of health insurance. According to the Congressional Budget Office, our amendment will result in an increase in health insurance premiums of less than one-tenth of one percent. The Dodd proposal would cost five times that amount.

I have met with thousands of cancer patients throughout Florida and the rest of the United States, patients desperately wanting to participate in clinical trials when traditional therapies are no longer beneficial.

Let me make my comments here today by relating an experience which puts a human face on why this issue is so important.

As my colleagues may know, I frequently visit the National Institutes of Health to meet with scientific researchers so I may gain a better understanding of the many advances which are taking place to detect and treat cancer and other diseases.

Over the years, I have been fortunate to get to know Dr. Steven Rosenberg, a world-renowned oncologist who is an expert in the field of melanoma research and treatment. I first met Dr. Rosenberg after reading his book, "The Transformed Cell."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time expired.

Mr. MACK. I ask for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FRIST. I yield an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. FRIST. I yield an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. MACK. Last year, I was meeting with Dr. Rosenberg to learn about a clinical trial he is conducting on a state-of-the-art melanoma vaccine. During our conversation, Dr. Rosenberg mentioned that one of my constituents was at NCI participating in that clinical trial. I asked if I might meet him. Before we went to his hospital room at NCI, Dr. Rosenberg showed me photographs which had previously been taken. This patient had melanoma tumors on his left arm, and they were several inches in diameter. When I met this brave man, he showed me that these lesions of huge size on both his arm and his side were totally gone. That is why I think it is so important that we have this amendment included in the legislation, so that other cancer patients will have the same opportunity.

To conclude, what is this amendment really about? Most importantly, it is about giving patients fighting cancer the hope that an experimental therapy being tested in a well-designed clinical trial might save their lives. In addition to providing hope, it paves the way for new therapies that will, one day, not only provide hope, but a cure. It is about allowing cancer patients to make what may be the final major health care decision of their lives—whether to participate in a clinical trial.

Mr. President, I've met with many patients who were participating in clinical trials. To me, these patients are, in many ways, like America's astronauts. Later this month, we will celebrate the 20th anniversary of man's landing on the Moon. Like the astronauts of Apollo, clinical trial participants are pioneers. They are heroes, who are helping to push science and medicine into new frontiers. We must provide hope to these brave Americans.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I think the facts are that the Republican majority have offered a number of feel-good amendments. Everyone should understand that these amendments, even if they pass, will only cover 40-plus million Americans. Our amendment covers over 160 million Americans. Even though the provisions they have stuck in this amendment are weakened compared to the Democratic provisions dealing with external appeals, provider nondiscrimination, points of service, continuity of care, it is just the same as the amendment we offered for 50 minutes. Advocates of that amendment came from the minority side and presented their arguments to the Senate, to each other. The majority was not here. They did not offer a single word in opposition to the amendment that was offered by the minority.

This can best be summed up not by a Senator, not by some paid advertisement on television. I think the best way to sum this up is by a New York Times statement by Bob Herbert today entitled, “Money versus Reform.”

Donna Marie McIlwaine was 22 when she died on Feb. 8, 1997. She was buried in the Chili Rural Cemetery in upstate Scottsdale, N.Y.

The reform legislation that has been the focus of a furious debate in the Senate was essentially an effort to make it easier to save the lives of patients like Ms. McIlwaine.

The Republican Party, flooded with money from the managed-care industry, gives lip service to the idea of protecting patients, but the bottom line of the bidding of the companies that are the source of all that cash.

It’s a tremendous scandal. No one can seriously argue that lives are not being lost. Ms. McIlwaine went to the doctor several times in the week before she died, complaining of pains in her chest and shortness of breath. According to her family, she was diagnosed with an upper respiratory infection and “panic attacks.”

In fact, she was suffering from pneumonia and a blood clot in her left lung. Her mother, Mary Munnings, told me yesterday that her daughter had been screaming from excruciating pain before finally lapsing into unconsciousness and dying at home on a Saturday night.

There was no need for her to die. Ms. Munnings said that when she contacted the office of the primary-care physician the following Monday, she learned that Ms. McIlwaine had not been sent for the laboratory tests that would have properly diagnosed her condition. She said that when she asked why not, she was told that “they couldn’t justify” the tests to her health maintenance organization.

So we have Donna Marie McIlwaine dead at age 22.

Most of the country understands that an unconscionable obsession with the bottom line has resulted in widespread abuses in the managed-care industry. Simply stated, there is big money to be made by denying care. It is now widely known that there are faceless bureaucrats making critical diagnostic and treatment decisions, that some doctors are being retaliated against for dispensing honest advice, that women have had an especially difficult time, that some doctors are in the last stages of any illness, or if your child is in the last stages of illness, you should have to change doctors. We truly believe that when a little boy or girl is dying of leukemia and the family is facing the heartbeat of that, they should at least be able to keep the same doctor through the course of treatment.

If you are terminally ill, under the Republican school of thought you would lose your care— if you are pregnant— if you are terminally ill and your company changes providers. We think if you are dying of cancer, if you are in the last stages of any illness, or if your child is in the last stages of illness, you should have to change doctors. We truly believe that when a little boy or girl is dying of leukemia and the family is facing the heartbeat of that, they should at least be able to keep the same doctor through the course of treatment.

So if you are a diabetic or if you are engaged in a particular course of treatment, you get to keep your doctor.

We then have three provisions that make sure you keep your doctor when you are facing significant medical circumstances. What is a significant medical circumstance? It means, for instance, when you are pregnant. We think that when you are having your baby and you have an OB/GYN and a course of treatment, you should be able to keep that same doctor all the way through your pregnancy, and through your postpartum recovery.

Mr. President, that is what this debate is all about. It is a debate about protecting the insurance industry or protecting American patients. I am sad to report, money is going to win. Money is going to prevail over American patients who need help. It is as simple as that.

It is whether or not a doctor can make a decision for a patient or a bureaucrat is going to make a decision for a patient. It is a question of whether we are going to be driven by profits or patients. Let us hope some day patients will prevail.

I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the Democratic whip for yielding me this time.

Mr. President, I am troubled about the pending amendment because one of its components my colleagues might not be aware of is that it strips the Democratic provision to provide continuity of care.

This is pretty serious because what continuity of care means. What does it entail? It means, if you are engaged in a particular course of treatment, you should be able to keep your doctor when you are pregnant. We think that when you are having your baby and you have an OB/GYN and a course of treatment, you should be able to keep that same doctor all the way through your pregnancy, and through your postpartum recovery.

trials more available to the American people. We have a very important issue on provider discrimination and continuity of care. Senators Collins and Enzi will be responding later to the comments that were just made, which I thought made a lot of points both clearly and to the point. What is necessary and what the American people expect in terms of continuity of care.

We want to address the fifth issue at this juncture, and that is the point of service option. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners testified on our bill and has written the Senate, a letter in March of this year, in which they state unequivocally that:

It is our belief that States should and will continue efforts to develop creative, flexible market-sensitive protections for health consumers in fully-insured plans, and Congress should focus attention on those consumers who have no protections in self-funded ERISA plans. In States that have already adopted statutory and regulatory protections for consumers and fully-insured plans and have tailored those protections to meet their State's consumer health care marketplace.

Many States are supplementing their existing protections during the current legislation session imposed upon particular circumstances within their States. We do not want States to be preempted by congressional or administrative actions.

What we are primarily concerned with regarding this piece of legislation is that Federal ERISA plans cannot regulate. That is why we are here. We are going to leave the other plans to the States who are already regulating them.

I see my time has expired. I will again express my delight that we are able now to say that the individuals who come in will be able to receive point-of-service option.

Mr. Kennedy. Mr. President, I inquire on any time will yield the Senator 2 minutes. This change will of, course, only be for the self-funded program, and of course there are no changes in excluding any employer that has less than 50 employees. That hasn't been changed, has it?

Mr. Sessions. That is correct. But we know, for example, in Alabama, only 4 percent of the self-insured plans would fall under that group because most of the self-insured plans are for the larger businesses. We have also found that, in Alabama, for example, 75 to 80 percent of the state-regulated plans already offer point-of-service choice now. So it is not as critical as it might appear.

We don't want to see the trend go the other way. Physicians are afraid that HMOs will build up walls and block out physicians and choice in the future. So they want this protection. I think it is legitimate, and I think the Senator favors that.

Mr. Kennedy. If I could continue, I yield myself another minute. Is the Senator saying that of all the self-funded programs, only 4 percent have fewer than 50 employees?

Mr. Sessions. Actually, 4 percent less than 100.

Mr. Kennedy. Four percent less than a hundred. So, effectively, this won't apply. I imagine, to any of the mom-and-pop small businesses; they won't have those kinds of protections, will they, in Alabama?

Mr. Sessions. Only four percent under our bill will not be guaranteed. We think it makes sense for employers providing it. Furthermore, 75 to 80 percent of plans regulated by the state of Alabama plans do offer it.

Mr. Kennedy. What percentage of Alabama, just for my own information, works in plants with less than 100 employees?

Mr. Sessions. Most of those plans don't have self-insured, and they are already subject to State regulations.

Mr. Kennedy. So they wouldn't be affected by the Republican program in any event.

Mr. Sessions. In the State of Alabama, and in most States, I think, the smaller companies use traditional plans that are subject to State regulations. I think our primary focus in this wave has been to deal with those plans that are not regulated.

Mr. Kennedy. I thank the Senator. Mr. Sessions. I thank the Senator. Mr. Kennedy. I yield the Senator from New York 3 minutes.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from New York.

Mr. Schumer. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Senator for yielding.

We are coming to the close of this debate. The amendment the Senator from North Carolina and I offered on appeal has been replaced by a much weaker version. We allow an independent review process. We allow that, if your HMO should say to you, you can't have this medicine, you can't have this procedure, you can't see this specialist, you would get an independent review as to whether that was right or wrong.

Under the proposal that was passed by the other side, very simply, that review is not enough except by somebody appointed by the HMO itself—independent and not real. But, in general, in this debate, and what has happened again is what has happened this week, which is simple, the insurance companies won and American families lost. As a result of what we have done today, the vast majority of American families will not get access to emergency rooms, access to specialists, the right to appeal an unfair decision, the right to sue, and the right to have an OB/GYN physician be their primary care physician.

If we could sum up this debate, it is in two charts. It is in three little numbers. First, under the Democratic plan, 161 million people are covered under the Republican plan, 48 million people are affected—161 million or 48 million. What do the American people want? My guess is they want as many people covered as possible.

For cost, it is $2 a month more. As the Senator from Massachusetts has said repeatedly, that is not more than the cost of a Big Mac a month. We could cover all of these people, and we could have emergency room access, we could have access to a specialist, and a right to appeal an unfair decision.

I ask the American people to remember this day as a day when the Senate turned its back on them and their wishes. The interests, particularly the insurance companies, prevailed over common sense and wisdom; as a day when this Senate chose to have only 48 million people covered, not 161 million; and a day when this Senate said you can't get emergency coverage, you can't get access to a specialist, and you can't get the right to appeal an unfair decision by the HMO because it cost $2 more a month per worker.

It is a sad day for the American people. It is a day when this body chooses to follow the whims of the insurance industry rather than the desires of the American people.

Oh, yes. There are some placebos. In fact, the bill we are passing today is a placebo. But by definition a placebo is only effective when there is nothing wrong with the patient. If you are well and you are never going to get sick, you love the Republican plan. But if you have had to go through the agony and heartache and hassle of trying to get medical care for your medicines, doctors, and procedures that are desperately needed by you or a loved one, you will rue this day.

I say to my colleagues: Wake up. Our health care system is ill. A placebo won’t work. This bill will not work. It is not PHIL GRAMM.

I authored the first program of support for HMOs ever passed in the Senate. The Carter administration has made the promulgation of HMOs one of its major goals. Clearly HMOs have done their job in proving themselves a highly desirable mechanism for medical care delivery.

That is Senator TED KENNEDY. That is not PHIL GRAMM. Our Democratic colleagues are the fathers and the mothers of HMOs. Yet today they have decided to vilify an institution they created. Rather than fix it, they say they have to destroy it. Having decided, for political reasons, it would be basically a good idea to destroy HMOs.

Why are we concerned about destroying the private health care system? Why are we so concerned about cost? The reason we are so concerned about cost, the last time we had double-digit health care inflation, the Democrats and President Clinton sent a health care bill to Congress, the Clinton health care bill to Congress, the Clinton health care bill, that would have made the Government take over and run the health care system, a bill that would have required every American to buy health insurance. The comprehensive benefit package does not include any item or service that the National Health Board may determine is not medically necessary.

Today, our dear Democrat colleagues are all concerned about “medical necessity,” but when they wanted the Government to take over and run the health care system they defined medical necessity as whatever the National Health Board determined it to be, and the National Health Board was the Federal Government.

Today, our colleagues have gone on and on about medical access and point of service. When the inflation rate on health care was above double digit and they proposed having the Government take over the health care system, do you know what their point of service option was? If you didn’t join the Government plan, you got fined $5,000. The choice of a point-of-service option is if the doctor who had to work for the Federal Government provided care he felt you needed but their Government health board felt you didn’t need, he got fined $50,000 for doing that. If he provided a service that you didn’t want and you paid privately for it, the physician could go to prison for 15 years.

Now, the same people who proposed all these things and came within a hairbreadth of forcing Americans into this totalitarian system because they wanted to deal with inflation and access, today they are proposing legislation that would drive the inflation rate up by 6.1 percent and would, by Congressional Budget Office numbers, force 19 million people to lose their health insurance.

Why are we so concerned about starting runaway medical inflation again? Part of it is because we care about the people who lose insurance. Part of it is because we care about $72.5 billion in costs for people who get to keep care out. Part of it is because we care about the people who pay for it and we want their Government to provide all this instead.

I am sorry, but I have a very hard time listening to my Democratic colleagues talk about medical necessity when only a few years ago they proposed to let Government define what medical necessity is. Yet today they are proposing legislation that would drive the inflation rate up by 6.1 percent and would, by Congressional Budget Office numbers, force 19 million people to lose their health insurance.

In listening to our colleagues, it’s easy to forget their support of legislation that created HMOs. One forgets that they created HMOs so much that they tried in 1994 to force every American into an HMO run by the Government.

Today, our Democrat colleagues are all concerned about “medical necessity,” but when they wanted the Government to take over and run the health care system they defined medical necessity as whatever the National Health Board determined it to be, and the National Health Board was the Federal Government.
they were so concerned about patients rights they let the National Health Board determine what was medically necessary with no review whatever, and they put a doctor in prison for 15 years if he didn’t comply with their rules.

There is a certain disconnect between what they are saying today and what they have proposed in the past.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. I yield myself 8 minutes, and I ask to be notified at the conclusion of 8 minutes, and at the conclusion of my time, I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I respectfully suggest we have been back and forth and we have had Members waiting for well over an hour. It is not appropriate to yield to successive people. It should be our time.

Mr. ASHCROFT. How much time does the Senator desire?

Mr. REID. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Oregon, who has been here for about 3 hours.

Mr. ASHCROFT. I am very sorry. I didn’t have the privilege of him earlier that opportunity. When I came in, I failed to observe him in the Chamber. I am happy to have him go ahead.

Mr. REID. I know the Senator from Oregon has been here a long time, but the Senator from Connecticut left a hearing and came to speak on the clinical trials.

Would the Senator allow the Senator from Connecticut to speak next?

Mr. WYDEN. Yes.

Mr. REID. The Senator is yielded for 5 minutes.

Mr. DODD. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Oregon. I apologize for not being here during the presentation of the amendment, dealing with clinical trials by my friend and colleague from Florida, Senator Mack. He made numerous references to the amendment I offered yesterday, and I want to address those concerns.

While I have deep appreciation for the motivations behind the amendment offered by our colleague from Tennessee, Senator Frist—and I will speak specifically on the issue of the clinical trials—the amendment offered by Senator Mack, if you look at it in the totality, says no to 9 out of 10 people in this country. How does that work, 9 out of 10?

The clinical trials are limited to cancer therapies only; only for cancer. We all agree we ought to have clinical trials for cancer. No one disagrees with that. In a way, it is very cruel to say we can have experimental testing for cancer patients, but we cannot for people with AIDS, Parkinson’s disease, diabetes, and heart and lung disease. A long list of patients are excluded.

Today, if you are watching this debate and you have cancer, and this amendment is adopted, you are OK, but God help you if you fall outside the cancer area and you need the clinical trials, or you want to get involved in that because it could save your life, save your wife’s life, or your child’s life. You would like to get in the clinical trials. If you adopt this amendment, you cannot.

The argument is, we need to study the issue more. If we need to study clinical trials, why make an exception for cancer? If we don’t need to study the clinical trials for cancer, it seems to me we don’t need to study them for Lou Gehrig’s disease, for life-threatening, devastating diseases where the only option can be the clinical trial.

As I said to my colleagues yesterday, this is the only option we offer in our amendment. It has to be clinical trials approved by NIH or the Department of Defense or by the Veterans Administration. There must be no other alternative available, and it only picks up routine costs. The cost of drugs and medical devices is not included.

I don’t understand how we say to someone with mental illness, osteoporosis, cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis, stroke, blindness, arthritis, Lou Gehrig’s disease, and more areas where clinical trials make a difference for people. By adopting this amendment, we are excluding the option of people to utilize what may be the only avenue available to them to save their lives or the lives of their family.

Obviously, we acquire necessary information that allows a product or a device to become available to the public at large, saving future generations.

So I urge you to agree with all due respect, while it is hard to argue with this limited amendment, we will have a broader amendment that covers all of these areas which are so critically important to people.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. I will be happy to yield. Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator pointed out for those who might be watching that if they like this amendment, if agreed to, would at least assure them of coverage. Of course, two-thirds of those individuals will not be in the plans that would be covered by this proposal. So two-thirds of those who have cancer, on the face of it, would not be protected. Contrast this with the amendment the Senator from Connecticut offered, which would have applied to all private health plans and would have included all diseases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FITZGERALD). The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 1 additional minute.

Mr. DODD. I deeply appreciate the Senator from Massachusetts raising that point. He is absolutely correct. It does cover the cancer patient, provided you are part of that small minority that gets coverage. But if you are part of the 113 million and have cancer, you are out. It is an important point to make. If you are part of the 48 million, you are out there completely. You are just gone. I think this is a tragedy.

Every single cancer group in this country does not support this amendment. No cancer group at all endorses this amendment because they understand it is a great deprivation and liability to their efforts. They understand how important it is to cover these other illnesses as well. These groups, by the way, also have supported unanimously the amendment we offered, which would have covered clinical trials for all patients.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional minute of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DODD. I ask unanimous consent for half a minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. DODD. On this issue, on the clinical trials, to deny people across the board the ability to access clinical trials is one of the great shortcomings of the Republican proposal here. This will do a lot of damage to an awful lot of people, unnecessarily. The application of clinical trials is the only course available to people to save their lives and to save future lives. By excluding AIDS and the other diseases I have mentioned from the clinical trial approach, not to mention 113 million people who are excluded because they do not do our disservice, at the end of this century, to people who expect more of this body.

I urge the rejection of this amendment.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. REID. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, well over 2 hours ago I offered the first-degree amendment that deals with an issue that ought to be totally nonpartisan, and that is protecting the relationship between health care professionals and their patients. The distinguished Senator from Texas is on the floor. I think he illustrated what the debate has now become. He wanted to talk about the Clinton health care plan of 1994. What my colleagues and I are here to talk about is giving patients and their families a voice in 1999.

In over 2 hours of discussion on the floor of the Senate, there has not been one argument—not one argument—advanced against our provision involving gag clauses; not one argument advanced against our provision protecting the providers from retaliation; not one argument advanced as it relates to this matter of making sure there are not financial incentives to keep the patients in the dark.

In 2 hours on the floor of the Senate, not one single argument was made against those positions. I think it is because the Senate understands that the free flow of information between patients and health care providers is at the heart of what we want for our health care system. It is also what this country is all about. It is what the first amendment is all about.

I know this has been a very hard debate to follow. We have had discussions about HCFA. We have had discussions... about the Clinton health care plan of 1994. We have heard discussions about costs, about making sure that patients get all the information from their health care providers, and that providers are free from retaliation when they give information that is not going to cost a good health care plan a penny. Maybe if you are offering poor quality care it may end up costing you a little bit of money but giving people information, protecting their first amendment rights, is not going to cost you a penny.

I am very hopeful our colleagues, when we get back to it, will support the first-degree amendment that was before the Senate a little over 2 hours ago, and recognize that, in the space of that time, not one single argument—not one—has been advanced against the idea that there ought to be a free flow of information. We ought to protect the relationship between health professionals and their patients. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes. I ask to be informed at the conclusion of the 6 minutes.

By agreement, I believe Senator Collins was to have 6 minutes at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I thank the Republican Members for their effort on assembling a very good plan. It is a plan designed to protect the interests of individuals who receive their health care through HMOs. It is designed so that, if the HMO denies a particular kind of treatment as not being necessary, there is an appeals process, and the appeals process is first to the HMO, asking them to correct a faulty decision. But if the HMO does not respond constructively, there is an appeal to an independent appellate authority, an independent appeals officer.

I wanted to make sure the Republican bill's effort to have this appeals process, which gives people the chance to make sure they are treated fairly, has the right enforcement to it. The right enforcement, in my judgment, is to send people to trial, not to send people to trial. It would be possible to have a big legal arrangement where the person does not get treatment, they die, and the relatives then go to court. Instead of getting treatment, you get a trial and you may get a lot of money, but you have a dead relative. I think it is important to understand this is a health care effort we are talking about.

So I wanted to do some things to strengthen the enforcement provisions in the Republican proposal which relate to the external review. That is the final appeal, to a person outside the HMO, a qualified individual. This is what I think we must do.

First of all, we must make sure that the HMO acts promptly. While the Republican bill provides there should be certain designations within 5 days, there is a place where the HMO has to provide the reviewer, or the appeal authority, with the documents of the case. We put in a time limit on that. We put in a time limit for sure the time limit. It simply is saying we will not allow an HMO to drag its feet in order to avoid the review by an independent authority. So I wanted to make sure we had that.

Second, perhaps the most important is the person whose case is being reviewed has the right to present evidence to the appeal authority. I think this is implicit in the Republican bill, but I want it to be explicitly stated that when a person files a review petition, they have the right to say this is the reason you should set aside your judgment; this is the reason you should make a determination that the treatment is appropriate in my case—not only the person but the doctor who made the original determination. And that is important, as well, making sure they are involved.

Then I want to make sure the person conducting the review of a physician's work would be a qualified physician or would be a person who was qualified to do the job. The point of having a qualified physician is so we would not have some bureaucrat or some individual who was interested in or more well trained, perhaps, in business making judgments about things that were medical. That is provided for in this particular matter. So it makes it clear we want to have the physician doing the kind of assessment in the appellate process.

However, I wanted also to make sure we had HMOs willing to carry through on the decision of the appeals process. I thought to myself, what if the patient lost the appeal in the HMO, made the appeal to the external authority—and this can be done very rapidly because the timeframes are tight in this particular matter. So it makes it clear we want to have the physician doing the kind of assessment in the appellate process.

Then I wanted to make sure if the patient lost the appeal in the HMO, made the appeal to the external authority—and this can be done very rapidly because the timeframes are tight in this particular matter, and should be, and we always include even expedited timeframes for medical exigencies—what if the appeal goes to the external appeal authority and then the HMO refuses to provide the treatment in spite of the determination by the external authority? One option in that situation, I suppose, would be to say you go to court. But if you are sick and you call an ambulance, you expect the ambulance to take you to the hospital, not to the courtroom. What we need for people is not to be provided with a trial; we need people to be provided with treatment.

What we have done in this amendment is simply this: If you had this opportunity for an expedient appeal that has gone through the HMO and the external authority, the external appeal officer is to write in any appellate decision a date by which treatment is to be provided. If treatment is not commenced as of that date, the system converts to a fee-for-service system so the patient has the right to get whatever service is needed at the expense of the provider which failed to provide it in accordance with the directive of the appellate officer.

Furthermore, it provides a penalty, an immediate $10,000 payment to the patient—not to the Government, not to any administration of the prov"ing health care bureaucracy—to the patient for having been dislocated and for having arranged for other things.

The business of the HMO is to arrange for medical services, and this is a failure. Perhaps simply says we are going to deliver to people medical services. We are not going to deliver them somewhere else. We do not want you to end up with a good lawsuit; we want you to end up with good health care. And if the HMO does not provide the health care in accordance with the appeal, then it is time we turn loose the patient who paid the premium, and that patient has the right to access the care of his or her choice to get it done, and the responsibility of payment for that failure is on the not providing health care provider in the HMO. That makes sense. Instead of getting a good lawsuit because you did not get health treatment and you got sick, you get good treatment. It seems to me that should be the objective to have. That is basically what we have done.

We have made sure there are time lines. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used his 6 minutes.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, that is kind of you, and I yield myself an extra 30 seconds. We made sure there are enforceable time lines. We have made sure physicians will be the appeals officers on the work of physicians. We have made sure the responsibility to deliver the process to the appellate appeals officers, both internal and external, is expedited. And we have made sure, in the event of noncompliance, the patient gets treatment. We put in the system the fee for service, and you can access treatment on your own.

It is with that in mind that I am pleased to conclude my remarks and yield to the Senator from Florida 5 minutes for his remarks.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I am not sure I need 5 minutes. I could not help but listen very closely to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle with respect to the issue of clinical trials and the idea of targeting clinical trials to cancer.

One could draw the conclusion from what they had to say either they never heard of the idea of targeting clinical trials to cancer or there was some confusion. I remind my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who have supported a clinical trial expansion of the Medicare program that is limited to only cancer—let me say that again. The clinical trial legislation that Senators Rockefeller and I introduced earlier this year is limited to cancer only; just as this amendment is limited to cancer: Senators Feinstein, Senator Sarbanes, Senator Johnson, Senator
Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague. Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. DODD. If my colleague will yield at this time.

Mr. DODD. I yield and reserve my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Florida has 1 minute. Then I would be glad to yield another minute and a half to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. I yield 2 minutes to Senator from Florida.

Mr. MACK. If the Senator from Florida used. This is one of the problems. There is not good data on what are routine costs. I went through this the other night. I cannot be any clearer.

I have personally read the studies, as many as I could find. The two presentations you made in the data on how much money it saves is not peer review. It has not been published, to the best of my knowledge, and the presentations made on May 7, 1999, at the National Coalition for Cancer Research. The data probably is good, but I cannot go back and see what the methodology is. Let me say that is the problem, that there are only three prospective, randomized clinical trials I could find and we were able to find in the committee. There may be more trials out there. But three clinical trials, not the ones you are talking about, that, again, I think the Senator from Florida has been graciously given minutes to talk about. Myself 4 minutes. I know we have a number of other speakers on the floor. After our discussion two nights ago, I think the Senator from Florida has been graciously given minutes to talk about. I do not think there are other options. We do not exclude these other options which most are doing today. Most are, we limit, by the way, how the amendment is not designed to deal with cancer, but we do not exclude these other options which most are doing today. Most are, we do not exclude these other options which most are doing today.

well that there are those out there who make claims that the cost of the clinical trials would be substantially higher than that—from OMB, CBO, the administration.

So the point is that there is an absolute difference about the cost of clinical trials. I am saying I think, before we go to the full extent of comprehensive coverage, we ought to fully understand what we are getting ourselves involved in.

With that, I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Let me just say, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that 90 percent of HMOs provide broad-based clinical trials. They did the study on the 12-cent per month cost; and 90 percent do. Our amendment deals with a handful who are not.

Ironically, the adoption of this amendment may encourage some of these HMOs that are today providing clinical trials across the board to reduce actually the number they provide. That is No. 1.

No. 2, I say to my friend and colleague from the opposite side, these HMOs, the 90 percent that are providing broad-based clinical trials, have obviously done an economic study or they would not do it. They are not mandated under current law to do it. So the vast majority providing clinical trials beyond just cancer, anore, obviously, made the financial calculation that this is something they can afford to do. So in addition to Sloan-Kettering, M.D. Anderson, and the Congressional Budget Office—the costs are relatively low. They are providing the benefit.

What we were saying in the amendment that was defeated yesterday is you ought to be for those 10 percent or 12 percent that are not providing the clinical trials in these other areas. You ought to do so. That is the distinction, and there is ample data.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. FRIST. I ask Senator Kennedy, does he have somebody from his side?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I yield Senators HARKIN and BINGAMAN 1 minute each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, earlier today Senator BINGAMAN and I offered an amendment to provide nondiscrimination, so the plans could not discriminate against providers on the basis of their license or certification.

Now I see the Republicans have offered that amendment. I read through it. It is almost word for word the same as ours. Gee, here is an amendment I could vote for on the Republican side, until I read the fine print. What is the fine print? The fine print is this: Senator BINGAMAN and I, our amendment covers 161 million people; the Republicans' amendment covers only 48 million people.

It is sort of like this. A doctor prescribes an antibiotic for you to take every day for 7 days. The Republicans come in and say you can only take it for 2 days. It is probably better than nothing, but it is not going to cure the illness.

The Republican amendment on provider nondiscrimination is not going to cure the discrimination against chiropractors, against optometrists, against nurses and nurse practitioners, and physicians assistants. That is why I cannot support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 1 minute has expired.

The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank the manager of the bill. Let me add one other thing. We need to ask, who are the 48 million people who are covered under the Republican plan and under this amendment they have offered—nondiscrimination against providers? They are people who work for large employers primarily who are self-insured. The employers have their own insurance programs.

Unfortunately, in my State, there are very few of those large employers. You have to have over 100 employees, essentially, before it makes any sense to be self-insured.

In New Mexico, people work for small employers, by and large. Even those who work for larger employers generally are not working for large insurance companies. Essentially, the folks I am representing in the Senate are not going to be covered by the amendment as it is offered. I think this is a serious defect.

There is one other thing I want to say in relation to Senator Dodd's point. The American Cancer Society does not support an amendment or provision that does not apply to all insured individuals, that requires a commission to determine routine patient costs, and delays access to clinical trials until the year 2001. The American Cancer Society maintains that all patients with a serious and life-threatening illness should have assured access and reimbursement for clinical trials.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I say to my friend and colleague from New Mexico, does he have somebody from his side?

Ms. COLLINS. Thank you, Mr. President.

This amendment includes two provisions that are intended to strengthen the Patients' Bill of Rights that was reported by the Senate HELP Committee. We do not have much time, but I would like to take a moment to describe two of the provisions that are of particular concern and interest to me.

First, our amendment includes provider nondiscrimination language. During the HELP Committee markup, as the Senator from New Mexico will recall, I pledged I would attempt to come up with language on the floor because we shared many of the same concerns, reflecting, I think, the populations of our State. So we have done just that.

The exclusion of a class of providers solely on the basis of their license or certification unfairly restricts patients' access to qualified professionals who are licensed and certified by the various 50 States. This is a very important issue in rural areas because there may not be a sufficient supply of physical therapists to provide the care that the health plan has promised. In these areas, if, for example, a plan discriminates against optometrists, the result may be that patients have to travel long distances in order to get eye care or, conversely, they have to pay out of their own pockets for services that are supposed to be covered benefits.

Maine, for example, has optometrists in virtually every community in the State, but we have very few opthalmologists, and the majority of optometrists work in our larger cities.

In 1992, 17 years ago, to respond to this problem, Maine specifically passed legislation requiring that all managed health plans have nondiscrimination language with regard to optometrists. The Republican amendment tracks similar protections that are provided for Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997.

Our amendment would prohibit federally regulated group health plans from arbitrarily excluding providers, based on their license or certification, from providing services for benefits that are covered by the plan.

Let me be clear about what this amendment does not do. It does not require the plans to cover new services just because the State may license a health care professional in that area. For example, there are some States which license aromatherapists. Just because aromatherapists may be licensed by a State does not mean the health plan has to cover all kinds of services. Moreover, nothing in our amendment would require the health plan to reimburse physicians and non-physicians at the same rate.

The amendment also makes clear—and this is really critical—that this provision is a nondiscrimination provision. But it is not a willing provider requirement. It does not require health plans to take all comers. It simply says that, on their license or certification, from providing services for benefits that are covered by the plan.

The second provision, which is of particular concern to me, improves upon the continuity of care provisions in the HELP Committee bill. Our amendment would affect the legislation in two different ways.

First, it recognizes that it would be unconscionable to require a patient who is terminally ill to change health care providers in the final months of life just because the health plan either stopped contracting with that particular provider or the employer providing the health plan switched plans, thus causing change in the providers under contract. Our proposal would extend the transition period for patients who are terminally ill from 90 days until the end of life. This proposal is one that I know is of concern to Senator Mikulski, and it is something on which we have agreed with her.

Second, it would require a comprehensive study—I don’t believe this is part of the Democratic proposal—into the appropriate thresholds, costs, and quality implications of moving away from the current narrow definition in Medicare of who is considered terminally ill and toward a definition that better identifies those with serious and complex illnesses. This study was suggested by the group, Americans for Better Care of the Dying, Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER and I have worked with this group in proposing our end-of-life care legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute from the underlying bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield 1 additional minute from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. This study, as I said, was suggested by the group, Americans for Better Care of the Dying. It is intended to help us shift the paradigm in this country of how we view serious illness. Medicare currently defines terminally ill people as those having no more than 6 months to live. It is often very difficult to predict with any certainty exactly a seriously ill person is likely to live. This study will help us to provide better care for that broader category of patients who are terminally ill and have the need for more coordinated care but who may well live longer than a 6-month period.

I thank Senator Enzi and Senator GRASSLEY for their work and joining with me in improving the continuity of care provisions of the bill.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to address provisions included in this amendment on behalf of Senators ASHCROFT, KYL, and myself. These provisions concern external review of denials of coverage. In my view, they will improve the underlying Republican proposal in several important respects.

Mr. President, I believe the Republican proposal takes the steps necessary to ensure that every American has access to quality emergency care. In my view, the overriding goal of this legislation is to empower patients and their physicians. By putting medical considerations first, we will protect patients against arbitrary actions by health care bureaucrats. Republicans have put in place an external review procedure which will guarantee a patient’s right to appeal adverse decisions by providers and to receive the care he or she needs.

The purpose of an external review is to ensure that an unbiased, medical opinion can be offered when coverage has been denied on the basis of medical necessity and appropriateness or because a treatment is considered experimental. The changes contained in this amendment will guarantee an unbiased, timely and appropriate decision and I believe they will help ensure that the external review process works effectively. In particular, I would like to focus on three changes which resolve issues that were brought to my attention by the Michigan State Medical Society:

First, we clarify that appeals which are considered emergencies be made with the emergency necessary for the emergency, but in no case should the emergency decision take longer than 72 hours.

This clarifying language ensures that decisions are made in an expedient fashion especially in case of emergencies.

Second, the amendment language clarifies that the independent, external reviewer shall be a physician in the same specialty area dictated by the case at issue. This only makes sense, Mr. President, and I appreciate the sponsors’ willingness to clarify the language in this regard.

Third, in the Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus, the independent external reviewer must take into consideration several factors in making his or her final decision. Some of those factors include: Any evidence-based decision making or clinical practice guidelines used by the group health plan or health insurance issuer; information submitted by the plan, issuer, patient or patient’s physician; the patient’s medical record; and expert consensus and medical literature.

This amendment clarifies that expert consensus includes both generally accepted medical practice and recognized best practice.

Senators KYL and ASHCROFT have also included other provisions to tighten the external appeal process which I support. I note my full support for these provisions and my colleagues to support them as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the majority language has about 2 minutes remaining on the amendment. The minority has about 15 minutes—about 12 minutes, I am sorry. So with the permission of the manager of the bill, I yield 3 minutes—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 15 minutes.

Mr. REID. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. WELLSTONE; 3 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. BOB KERREY; and 3 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina, Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. KERREY. Would the Senator mind if the Senator from Nebraska went first?

Mr. REID. If the Senator will withdraw.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Does the Senator intend to go one after the other?

Mr. REID. Yes, since the majority has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I want to accommodate the Senator from Wyoming—we only have a couple of minutes left—if he could speak now.

Go ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Maine heading for the door. With great respect for her, I want her to hear this observation. She talked about continuity of care and said that she and Senator GRASSLEY and Senator ENZI had worked on language in this amendment that provided continuity of care for people with terminal illness. I call her attention to pages 49 and 50 of this bill. It does not do that. It says specifically, under terminal illness, it is subject to paragraph 1, which says the general rule is just for up to 90 days. The only exception under continuity of care with this bill is for pregnancy, which was in the original bill.

Ms. COLLINS. Will the Senator yield for a clarification on that?

Mr. KERREY. I only have 3 minutes. I am sorry.

I call the Senator’s attention to continuity of care. Look at the language of the bill because on page 49 it describes this transitional period.

This is something that is very important to me. I received health care in 1999 after I was injured in Vietnam. I have a very passionate concern for people who are in managed care.

I must say, the problem we are experiencing with managed care is not self-funded ERISA plans. That is what the Republican proposal is going to do. It is going to solve almost a nonexistent problem that may, in fact, as a consequence of setting the bar low, encourage people who are in HMOs and who are in the marketplace providing those plans to say: I see the bar is low; we are going down to that lower standard. That is a major concern I have with this proposal. It does not cover the plans that are the biggest problem.

I call your attention to pages 49 and 50. Under the continuity of care provisions, the only continuity of care that would be provided would be women who are pregnant. They could go beyond 90 days under this provision, but those who were terminal would not. Terminal illness is subject to paragraph 1, according to the language of the bill itself, which does not provide for an extension.

Our proposal would go beyond those three general categories, not just terminal illness, not just institutionalized people, not just women who are pregnant—all three reasonable—and certainly not just self-funded ERISA plans, which are hardly receiving any complaints at all.

That is the odd thing about this debate. We're talking about how to take care of a problem that doesn't exist under the guise of—I have heard people come down saying: We are going to address a problem with HMOs. Well, you would address the problem of HMOs if you changed your health plan other than a fully insured group plan. The reason this bill doesn't take care of HMOs. It takes care of self-funded ERISA plans. Go to your mailbox and see if you have any complaints about self-funded ERISA plans. You won't find any complaints about that. The complaints are about HMOs.

We have watched the market move more and more into business decisions when it comes to health care. And I am for the market. I like what the market can do. When we regulate the market, we snuff it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 3 minutes have expired.

Mr. KERREY. I will come back to this later. Mr. President. This bill does not provide continuity of care except for pregnancy. Those who have other health problems, who would be difficult to give primary care if you were in a plan where you are, would not be covered if you were in a plan where you had a doctor who has been providing care for them or for their children the care they need, unless this is some kind of an open-ended escape clause.

I am telling you, the more the people look at the fine print and the detail of what the bill is saying on the floor of the Senate, the more they will see a consistent pattern: Offer as little as possible, covering as few people as possible, with as little protection as possible, so you don't offend the insurance industry.

That is what it is all about. We should be representing the people in our States. We should be advocates for people in our States. We should be advocates for families, advocates for children. We don't need to be advocates for the insurance industry. They already have plenty of clout. I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I will yield our final 3 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, let me address the external appeals part of this amendment. Yesterday afternoon, we had a debate, at which time I brought to the attention of my colleagues on the other side the fact that, essentially, we had no enforcement mechanism for any of the provisions passed because there was no meaningful external review, the reason being insurance companies got to write the language on what is medically necessary, and the only thing that was appealable was what is medically necessary.

That being the case—that the insurance company totally controlled whether there could be an appeal at all—not having a meaningful appeal is similar to having a law without a police force or a court system. There is no way to enforce it. The law is meaningless. All of these provisions we pass are meaningless unless they are enforceable.

This amendment attempts—and I applaud my colleagues for making this effort. I think it is the result of a discussion we had yesterday. It attempts to address that problem, but it still has an enormous problem in it. There are two parts of an appeal process. The first is, do you get to appeal? The second is, if there is an appeal, what can be considered?

What they have offered by way of different language today, for the first time in the course of this week, is some change in what can be considered if there is an appeal. They don't change, in any way, what is appealable. Once again, the only thing appealable is medical necessity. You can't appeal whether you have access to a specialist. You can't appeal whether you have access to treatment in the hospital. You can't appeal whether you are going to the emergency room. All that long list of things which are contained in the various provisions that have been considered are not appealable. The only thing appealable is medical necessity.

It is this: Let's give people freedom of choice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the underlying amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

laws against the insurance companies, that is what we ought to be doing. It is simple and straightforward and it will work.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment. I want to particularly congratulate the Senator from Maine for her care and concern over the 2 years she has been involved in drafting this bill. I want to particularly express my pleasure at the improvement to the continuity of care provision she put into this bill. From our base bill, we further extend our continuity of care for terminally ill patients through the end of life.

While the language in our committee bill followed the recommendations of the President's Quality Commission and the National Committee on Quality Assurance, both of which recommended ninety days for transition for all chronically ill patients, we feel very strongly that terminally ill patients and their families deserve to remain in their physicians.

Extremely important is the other piece of the continuity of care provision. It would require the Agency for Health Care Policy Research, the Medicare Advisory Committee, and the Institute of Medicine to conduct a multi-pronged study into the appropriate thresholds, cost and quality implications of moving away from the current narrow definition of "terminally ill" towards identifying those with "serious and complex illness.

This study was designed to help shape those parameters and seek to improve the care for all patients with terminal illnesses.

Again, I commend the Senator from Maine's leadership on this important matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we are at the conclusion of another part of this debate. There is an amendment that includes a variety of different provisions trying to upgrade the Republican proposal and make it more acceptable and responsive to the points that have been raised during the course of this debate. Admittedly, important points have been raised by doctors, nurses, and patients all over this country. Still, they fall short.

These amendments are another testament to the priority the Republicans place on protecting profits instead of patients. Every time we point out the severe defects and loopholes in their plan, they say: Oh, no, we will improve it. The amendments come, and they are virtually meaningless. It is botched cosmetic surgery; all the wrinkles still show. You can put lipstick on a pig, but it is still a pig. And you can call something a patients' bill of rights but it is still a patients' bill of wrongs.

Every single one of these amendments leaves a profit-protection proposal, a sham proposal, a triumph of disinformation. We have voted on 10 of the amendments on that. The offered by the other side, and we will have this amendment—10 amendments. There isn't a single amendment that has the support of a patients' organization or a medical organization—not one. I think that is as telling as to what those amendments are really about.

On the contrary, each and every one of the positions we have taken have the strong support of the medical profession. Each amendment we have offered—each and every one of them—had the strong support of the medical profession. I think that speaks volumes about who is really interested in protecting the patients and not the profits of this plan.

Let's look at these proposals individually. The so-called independent appeals provision leaves every fundamental flaw in the original bill uncorrected. The HMO still chooses and pays for the review organization. The HMOs rectified. The HMOs own definition of "medical necessity," no matter how unfair, still controls the whole process. That has been pointed out by our colleague, the Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN. That particular loophole in the bill.

The clinical trials proposal applies only to cancer patients and only to those in self-funded plans. Two-thirds of Americans are left out. Two-thirds of cancer patients are left out.

All of the cancer organizations have rejected this proposal. We have printed their positions in the Record. They all reject this particular proposal.

If you or your loved one has heart disease or Alzheimer's, cystic fibrosis or multiple sclerosis, a spinal cord injury or diabetes or AIDS, you are out of luck under the Republican plan. And if you are a farmer or small business employee who belongs to an HMO and you develop cancer, you are out of luck.

The continuity of care provision has not changed a bit. If you have a terminal illness and are fortunate enough to live more than 3 months, they can cut you off; you have to change doctors. If you have a long, ongoing illness—even cancer or life-threatening heart disease—you have no transition at all. And if you are one of the 113 million people in a self-funded plan, you are not protected at all.

Let's go back to the basics. Again, after 4 days and 10 amendments, they have not presented a single proposal supported by any group of doctors, nurses, or patients—not one, zero. Their bill is supported by the insurance companies that profit from abuse. Our bill is supported by 200 groups; doctors, nurses, and patients who want to end these abuses.

The Senate should stand with the health professionals and the patients, not with the powerful special interests. We will have another opportunity in a few moments to stand again with the patients. Let's hope the Senate will.

I reserve the balance of the time.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Maine 2 minutes off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I recently discussed the continuity provisions which are included in the amendment before us. This is one of the rare areas of agreement on both sides of the aisle. Both agree that if someone is terminally ill, and if there is a change in health care providers, the terminally ill patient should be able to stay with that provider until the end of his or her life.

Our amendment clearly says that the care shall extend for the remainder of the individual's life for such care. There is, however, a technical mistake which could create some ambiguity in that provision.

I asked unanimous consent, since the yeas and nays have been ordered, that I send a modification to the desk to correct that technical amendment. I hope my colleagues will agree to that.

Mr. REID. Objection. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, since there has been an objection, which I think is very unfortunate, the technical correction will be included in the final Republican package that will be offered.

As I said, I think the intent is very clear. The majority of the language is very clear. But there is an ambiguity in one section which will be cleared up in the final language.

Also, at this time I request the yeas and nays on the underlying Collins amendment which was set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the Senator from California 1 minute off the bill.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, by popular demand, I have my scorecard back. It was 8 to nothing. And then I gave two points to the liability, one, because that is crucial. Unfortunately, we lost that—the patients did. The HMOs won. They still will be able to get away with hurting people and not paying any price whatsoever.

So we are going to try to do the 8 to nothing.

We are about to have two votes. The Collins amendment is opposed by the obstetricians and gynecologists who
I have sent out a letter saying it is nothing; it is a cruel nothing. I have their exact words at everybody's desk. I hope we will vote that down. It doesn't do anything about the specialists. It doesn't do anything about OB/GYN. It doesn't do anything about emergency rooms. Senator Gramm pointed that out. They are still going to be charged.

Again, we have a sham proposal. I hope it will be 10 to 2 after the next two votes. But I am afraid it is going to be 12 to zero. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. We yield back any time remaining on our amendment.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, shortly we will be voting on two amendments. The first vote will be an amendment which was carried over from this morning on long-term care, deductibility, access to emergency room services, access to specialists, and access to OB/GYN services, after which we will be voting on the amendment that we have been talking about over the last 100 minutes, which is an amendment we have introduced on external appeals with a Republican amendment that provides a specific timeframe for expedited external review, No. 1.

No. 2 on coverage of clinical trials, our amendment provides coverage of routine patient costs associated with participation in an approved trial in the field of cancer.

No. 3, provider nondiscrimination, where our amendment offered protections similar to those provided in Medicare and Medicaid, and the balanced budget amendment of 1997.

No. 4, a point-of-service aspect, where we extended the point-of-service option to beneficiaries beyond what was in the underlying bill.

No. 5, continuity of care, which has been discussed by Senator COLLINS.

I very much believe these amendments will strengthen the underlying bill.

I urge their approval because I think they go right to the heart of what the American people want, and that is to keep the focus on the patient, on the individual, to ensure quality and to ensure access.

I yield the remainder of our time.

POINT-OF-SERVICE OPTION AND ANTI-DISCRIMINATION AMENDMENT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to support this amendment with my colleagues, Senator COLLINS, Senator Sessions, and others. This amendment will offer freedom of choice to millions of Americans and will ensure they have access to a wide range of providers.

Our amendment would provide individuals in choosing their point-of-service plan when no such option exists. I support this because I want to give people choice and the ability to go out of network if they need to. They may have to pay more for this freedom, but they should at least have this protection if they want it.

I have been a long-standing supporter of the point-of-service option. This provision was part of my Medicare patients' bill of rights in 1997. I also supported a similar amendment offered by Senator HELMS on the Senate floor several years ago.

I believe people should have this option when they are willing to pay for it. Point-of-service provides people with the security of insurance coverage to see providers outside the plan if they need to. Many people are willing to pay for this extra security. But for people who don't want to pay for this, they won't have to. They can choose another plan that better suits their needs.

In addition, this amendment ensures that managed care plans do not discriminate against any class of providers, such as chiropractors or optometrists. This is important to patients because it ensures they have access to certain providers or services they prefer who may be left out of the network.

Classes of providers, who are not medical doctors, are sometimes excluded from participating in managed care plans to restrict patients' access to their services. Our amendment would ensure this does not happen by prohibiting plans from discriminating against any class of providers who are licensed to practice in their state.

This amendment is about choice, freedom, and security. It is about allowing patients to choose a plan or provider that best meets their health care needs. I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will vote in favor of these very important patient protections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS). The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1243, as amended. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 46, as follows: [Rollcall Vote No. 208 Leg.]

The amendment (No. 1252) was agreed to.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, for the information of our colleagues, we are coming to closure on this bill. I think the procedure is that now the Democrats, if we continue our alternation, have a second-degree amendment which will be offered to the underlying amendment, and we will consider that. We will vote on it. Then it is our expectation that we will have the passage of the substitute amendment, to be offered by Senator LOTT on behalf of us, which will be wrapping up some of the changes we made to S. 326 in the consideration of this bill.

We will offer that immediately following disposition of the Democrat amendment, and that will be the final vote of the evening. At least that is our expectation. For Members' information, we will be voting on the next amendment no later than 6:50, hopefully before 6:50. Then it is our intention to vote on final passage no later than 8:00 or 2 hours after that. That would be closer to 9.

It is our hope that we can shave off some time and have final passage much closer to 8 than 9. Members can plan accordingly. Please plan on two more votes, one on the Democrat amendment, which will be offered momentarily, and then basically the final passage or the Republican wraparound amendment—we might call it that—or a substitute. It would incorporate all the changes we have made on the floor to S. 326.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, may we have order. This is a very important amendment, and the Senators are entitled to be heard. We are enormously grateful for the attention that has been given to the debate generally, but this is in many respects one of the most important amendments. The Senators should have a chance to have the attention of the membership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Smith of Oregon). The Senate will be in order.

AMENDMENT NO. 1253 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1251

(Purpose: To provide for a transitional patient plan)

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, Senator MIKULSKI, and Senators SCHUMER, GRAHAM, KENNEDY, MURRAY, DASCHLE, DURBIN, ROCKEFELLER, and TORRICELLI, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is yielded 7 minutes.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask that we suspend temporarily for a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Nebraska will yield temporarily, as I understand, the Senator is going to make a motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote on the amendment just passed.

Mr. NICKLES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. KERREY], for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. KENNEDY, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and Mr. TORRICELLI, proposes an amendment numbered 1253 to amendment No. 1251.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's Record under "Amendments Submitted."

Mr. KENNEDY. Did we yield 7 minutes to the Senator?

Mr. KERREY. That is correct.

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. That is proposed change in the law would provide protection for every single American who has health insurance in this country—not just those that are in self-funded ERISA plans, as the Republican alternative would do. That is the most important distinction. I have been asked, well, if our amendment fails, will I vote for the Republican alternative? My answer is no. I believe that would be a step backward because it will say to the marketplace that you can fall to the lowest possible standard, which is what the Republican proposal does.

Every step of the way, we have seen a sort of grudging retreat from our challenge to change the law and intervene in the marketplace. There is cost to this, Mr. President; I acknowledge that cost. But as with all regulation, we have to measure the cost versus the benefit. That is what we intend to do with this amendment—talk about the cost to people who are able to get coverage and the cost to those who are not just if they are pregnant, which the Republicans included in their earlier alternative, but to take care of people with terminal illness, for example. I understand that it is a modification to the Republican bill on this point. But you have to be declared terminal.

What if you have cancer and you believe you are going to survive treatment? What if you have diabetes or some other complicated medical condition, and you established, over the years, a relationship with your physician who watched for changes in your physical condition, looked at your symptoms, and determined the kind of treatment and the medication needed to those symptoms, and suddenly you are told your doctor was either removed from the managed care group, which happens, or your doctor changes venue and moves to some other locality and you are told by your managed care organization that you have to pick a different doctor. Your relationship with this physician is over.

This amendment puts the law on the side of those individuals and says you can continue care with that doctor for 90 days for most conditions, and for three conditions this time can be extended. It is reasonable.

Is there cost? Yes. Measure the cost against the benefit of having the law on your side when it comes time that you are told that your doctor now is different and you have had a relationship with that doctor. The doctor has diagnosed your cancer and told you here is the treatment, or has been your doctor treating your diabetes or your cardiovascular disease; you, doctor has told you what the treatment is going to be, and suddenly you have a new doctor. You have to pick somebody new. That is what this amendment does. It puts the law on the side of every single American, not just those in self-funded ERISA plans, as the Republican version would do. This takes care of everyone.

Well, in 1989, when I came to the Senate, I was fortunate enough to be able to be a member of the Appropriations Committee, and we were marking up a bill—this law that died. It occurred to me we were appropriating money for military hospitals—including the one that I had gone to in 1969. Well, in 1989, I didn't understand the relationship between that law and me.

The hospital was not there because of Sears & Roebuck. I love the marketplace. I come from the business sector and I love what the market can do. But the market has limitations. My life was saved by a hospital that was and is this Congress. The appropriations were authorized by this Congress not because I made a financial contribution, not because I was able to come and influence anybody in this Congress—there wasn't a politician in America in 1969 I liked, let alone been willing to make a contribution to. Yet Congress passed, and the President signed, a law which saved my life—not the marketplace but a law.

Was there cost? You're darn right there was cost. What was the benefit to the rest of America? I hope the benefit was being able to say we live in a country where we want our Congress to pass laws to take care of our own. We want to take care of each other. It isn't just about me. I am healthy today, and the independence I have and the health I have come as a consequence of that law. That law gave me independence.

Roughly 10 days ago, we all celebrated the Fourth of July, Independence Day. This Nation has an over 200-year tradition of making independence meaningful by fighting against illiteracy, fighting against intolerance, and fighting against illness. If you are sick or disabled and you don't have health insurance and you are not likely to feel independent, it is likely to be meaningless to you.

So what this amendment does is say, if you have a doctor that you trust, a doctor, and the doctor is treating you, and the market determines that the doctor no longer can treat you, you will have a right, under the law, to... continue to have the care of that physician for 90 days. If it is one of the three exceptional conditions, this right can be extended.

As I say, there is cost. I don't disregard the cost at all. I have heard many a knock on the door, and about how this is going to increase the cost of our insurance. I am willing to pay it. Why? Because Americans were willing to pay the bills for me. That is why we are a great country. We don't just look out for ourselves; we look out for the care of each other. We recognize, as great as the marketplace is, as wonderful as free enterprise is in creating jobs and generating wealth, there are limits. If all we care about is the bottom line and generating profit for our businesses, we will forget the need to put the law on the side of human beings when, through no fault of their own, the bottom drops out of their lives.

So I hope and pray that the Republicans will consider this amendment. It is the last amendment we will consider before we shut this thing down permanently. At least for the rest of this week, we are not going to have to change the law and put it on the side of Americans out there who desperately need it.

I understand there are costs to it. If I talk to people in Nebraska and they ask why we do this, I will not only use myself as an example, I will use hundreds of others who had the law on their side. Medicare beneficiaries have had the law on their side, and they are better off as a consequence.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, we are in the closing hours of this debate now. I want to thank the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for his steadfast advocacy not only this week, but for the years he has been dedicated to making sure that people have access to health care, and to believing that in the United States of America there is an opportunity structure where we give help to those people who try to practice self-help—we have done that in education and in our legal framework—and also to be sure that if you have something happen to you in terms of your physical, emotional, or mental well-being, you should have access to health care in the greatest country in the world.

I thank Senator KERRY for offering this amendment. I think it is an outstanding amendment and I am pleased to be a cosponsor. I lend my voice to this amendment that the Senator has offered, and I hope that at least once this week we can pass an amendment 100-0, and that we put the profits of an insurance company aside, put the politics of party aside, and that we take a moment to think about what is in the best interest of the American people.

I hope that on this amendment we can come together. Senator KERRY's amendment is one that I offered in the committee. It was defeated along party lines. But I understand committees. That is the way it goes. But I don't understand how we are doing this on the floor of the Senate because, first of all, we are discussing continuity of care. What does that mean?

It means just because your boss changes insurance companies, you don't have to change your doctor. It also means if your physician is pushed out of a network, you are not pushed aside from your doctor.

Why is this important? It is important because doctors are not interchangeable. The hallmark of getting well and staying well is the relationship between a doctor and a patient.

We have known this throughout history. This is nothing new. This goes back to Hippocrates and the earliest basis of medicine. Your doctor knows you as a person—not as a chart or a lab test. Your doctor knows you, your history, your family. Your doctor knows what is best for you and how to act in the most prudent way in regard to what is medically necessary or medically appropriate or medically indicated.

Why is this important?

There are those who will say this will cost too much. I say, if we don't have it, it will be penny-wise and pound-foolish.

If you are dumped from seeing the doctor you currently have and you have to start all over again, that doctor is going to have to take a complete physical. The doctor is going to have to take complete tests and in many instances start all over with you. Diabetics are treatable and diabetes is manageable, but if you are a diabetic and go to a new doctor, that doctor has to know you and your history and your family history, and start again with complicated tests and complicated evaluations. That is penny-wise, pound-foolish. You should stick with your own doctor, or at least come up with a transition plan.

What about the terminally ill?

This amendment Senator KERRY has offered says if you are terminally ill, or your family member, or your child, is terminally ill, you get to keep your doctor. What happens if your child has a terminal illness? You are struggling with this illness. Imagine being a father wanting to be at the bedside of a child who is ill. Instead he is in the other room calling an insurance company finding out if his son's doctor is in his new plan's network because the company he works for has changed HMOs. So he is up there not talking to the doctor about his son, or not even talking to his son, but trying to figure this out.

I think that is cruel. I think it is cruel and unusual punishment.

What happens if you are recovering from a stroke and you are in a rehabilitation hospital?

Under the Kerrey-Mikulski amendment, you will get to keep your doctor during that rehabilitation, so you can return and not be having to try to find out who your physician is going to be.

What happens if you have been admitted to a mental hospital for an acute psychiatric episode and you have chronic schizophrenia, but you also have a physician who has been treating you, who knows you, and in those 90 days you have to change doctors just when you are trying to get your mental health back again?

This is what we are talking about—continuity of care. For those undergoing an active course of treatment and for all Americans who have insurance you would get at least 90 days to come up with a transition plan.

But in three categories—if you are terminally ill; also if you are within an institution or facility; or if you are pregnant—you get to keep your doctor for a longer period.

We think this is what should happen. This isn't just BARBARA MIKULSKI making this up.

I will submit a letter from the Consortium of Citizens with Disabilities. These are people who strongly support the Kerrey-Mikulski amendment.

This is what they say:

Protecting continuity of care is not some wonky technicality. It will have a real impact on the quality of care for many people with disabilities and anyone who is undergoing active treatment. Consider for a moment what could happen to a child with cerebral palsy if their parent’s employer changed health plans and there was no opportunity to adequately plan a transition to new plan and new providers. It can be assumed this child would be receiving ongoing physical therapy.

This could be potentially expensive and exhausting for the family. There may be a variety of other reasons for this.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

Re CCD strongly supports the Kerrey/Mikulski amendment on continuity of care.

Re CCD strongly supports the Kerrey/Mikulski amendment on continuity of care.

Dr. BARBARA MIKULSKI. We are writing as Co-Chairs of the Health Task Force of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities (CCD) to express our strong support for the amendment you introduced Senator Mikulski during the upcoming debate on the Patient’s Bill of Rights. Your amendment will ensure that continuity of care is protected when health plan contracts are terminated. This is a critical issue to people with disabilities. CCD is a Washington-based coalition of nearly 100 national organizations representing the more than 54 million children and adults living with disabilities and their families in the United States.

For people with disabilities, planning a transition from one health plan to another requires great care and much coordination. If an employer switches health plans or if enrollees experience a change in health plans and benefits, people with disabilities need adequate time to manage the transition to new plans and to arrange for continuity of care for people with disabilities. Within the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities (CCD), we have a patient’s Bill of Rights. Your amendment protects continuity of care for patients who have disabilities and anyone who is undergoing active treatment.

providers. For persons undergoing active treatment for serious conditions, patients should be permitted to continue being treated by their existing provider until the serious condition has been positively resolved or for at least ninety days.

Protecting continuity of care is not some wonky technicality. It will have a real impact on the quality of care for many people with disabilities and anyone who is undergoing active treatment. Consider for a moment what it is like to be a child with cerebral palsy if their parent’s employer changed health plans and there was no opportunity to adequately plan a transition to a new plan and new providers. It could be assumed this child would be receiving on-going physical therapy, they would potentially be taking extensive prescription medications, they would have an on-going need for various types of durable medical equipment such as a wheelchair or other devices that help them to function. They may also be receiving personal assistance services. If a transition to another plan is necessary, should the care of the child be abruptly terminated without any planning to manage the transition to a new plan and new providers?

What is most perverse about such a situation is that if care is interrupted, this child could suffer from an acute health problem that requires a hospitalization. Is this in the best interest of that child or the health plan?

This type of scenario is not limited to this example.

Anyone who is receiving on-going care needs an opportunity to plan and manage a transition to a new health plan, and if necessary a new provider. We are frustrated that such a straightforward issue is not adequately addressed in the Republican Leadership proposal.

There are many complex issues that will be raised as the Senate debates the enactment of the Health Care Financing Administration. Continuity of care is not one of them. Your amendment provides a straightforward solution to a simple problem. Under current law and the Republican Leadership proposal, health plan enrollees could be stranded and life-longing health care could be abruptly interrupted through no fault of their own.

The Children’s Defense Fund is grateful for your leadership on this critical issue and we look forward to working with you and your staff to ensure that this amendment is adopted.

Sincerely,

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, we have letters from parents. We have letters from advocacy groups that say in the United States of America when you get health care it shouldn’t have term limits on it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BOND. The Senator from New York is allocated 4 minutes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada for yielding.

It has been a long week. I know there will be many who will say that this week was not as productive as it might be. I agree with that completely.

But this is one good point that has emerged. We have debated, as we asked, the Patients’ Bill of Rights. It is now an issue that is before the American people. It is one that will be brought to the time when they don’t have to put up with HMOs that are dictating policy.

The American people know that in the doctor-patient relationship there does not have to be a third person in the room who is a lay person, an accountant with no medical experience. They know it is possible for this Senate and this Congress to pass a law that might say that if your doctor says you need a medication, and says you need a procedure, and says you need an operation, and your HMO denies it, you have the right—you could, if this Senate had the courage—to an independent appeal.

Unfortunately, amendment after amendment that would have protected our patients’ right to the care their doctors recommended was blocked. Unfortuantely, we are in a situation where the insurance industry has all too often dictated what has happened on this floor. Instead of stepping up to the plate and voting for the protections for which those of us who are literally clamoring, this Senate buckled to the insurance industry and passed a bunch of amendments that are aimed at looking good and doing nothing. The look-good, do-nothing amendments will prevail, because a week and a half later, an amendment that would say that if your doctor says you need a medication, and says you need a procedure, and says you need an operation, and your HMO denies it, you have the right—you could, if this Senate had the courage—to an independent appeal.

forward. My State has passed a Patients' Bill of Rights. Most States have. They are looking to see how it works. The States that make it work the best are going to be followed by others.

The Democratic bill, the Democratic approach, is based on the premise that States can't handle managed care regulation and that Federal bureaucrats are better equipped to do it. The Democratic bill will overturn a host of State laws and legislation with the interpretations of the Federal Government's mistakes. In other words, they had to provide insurance so if the Federal Government made a mistake, the surplus bond would be responsible. A home health care operator told me with tears in her eyes, 'Now I have to raise the money to buy a surety bond.'

Then they imposed cuts on the home health care agencies that have been putting them out of business left and right. Under the Balanced Budget Act, they were supposed to save $16 billion a year over 5 years. They cut back on the amount of reimbursement so much that they would wind up saving $48 billion a year. They were imposing a system of reimbursement that penalized the providers who were providing the most intensive care in the home. They were penalizing the providers in the most difficult areas—precisely the kind of service we want to keep.

The GAO has another finding that HCFA "lacks the appropriate experience or expertise to regulate private health insurance." These are the people to whom we want to turn over regulatory responsibility for the entire health care system? When they are incompetent or mess up, the whole country suffers.

One of the things I have done as chairman of the Small Business Committee is to try to ensure that Federal agencies live up to the requirements of the law passed in this body and the other body unanimously to reduce red tape, to make sure that Federal agencies take into account how their activities and their regulatory actions would impact small business. We found there were several agencies that weren't doing a very good job. The regulatory process was clogged up.

I initiated the "Plumber's Friend Award" to unclog the regulatory pipes in the budget. Needles to say, HCFA and the Department of Health and Human Services were one of the first. We give these awards to Federal agencies in these agencies. Needless to say, the GAO has another finding that HCFA has a bad track record. Ask anybody who has had to deal with HCFA, and they will say, whatever the problem is, HCFA is not the answer.

There are some who think that maybe our colleagues really want to get back to another health care proposal that came from the White House. Known as Clinton Care, the 1993 health care plan was going to be a Federal takeover of health insurance. The wisdom of the Federal Government was going to run health care. Senator Gramm has done a good job this week talking about some of the possible horror stories that could and would have happened if we passed the Clinton health care bill. Fortunately, we didn't do it. We are running around saying they personally helped kill the Clinton health care bill. That sucker wasn't killed by any Republican. It died of its own weight. The Democratic majority leader didn't even bring it up because once they looked at it, they said, this thing isn't going to work. It was dead on arrival.

Let me state some of the likely results had we adopted the President's proposal to socialize medicine. Expensive mandates on the Nation's employ-ees would have driven up insurance premiums that would likely skyrocket. It would create 50 new Federal bureaucracies, a new trillion-dollar Federal entitlement. These were the items we would have received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask for another 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is granted.

Mr. BOND. The bottom line is we would have had 1,200 pages of mandates, rules, requirements, and penalties. It died. But let me remind my colleagues what the President said just a couple of years ago, in September 1997. Talking about his failed effort to impose this failed health care bureaucracy on the American people, he said:

"If what I tried before won't work, maybe we can try it another way. That is what we tried to do, a step at a time until we have finished.

That is what I am afraid of. That is what we were trying to do, to get to the point where we had socialized health coverage in the United States.

Costs are clearly a problem. Costs are going to be a lot more than $2 million, or one Big Mac, $2 a month or one Big Mac a month, as some of my colleagues on the other side have said. If you have a $2,600-a-year family health insurance program and you have a 5-percent raise, it is a whole lot more than $2 a month. It is about $180 a year, something similar to that. It is a lot more. And when costs go up, people lose their health insurance.

We need to fix some of the problems. We need to do it without driving people out of the system. We already have 40 million uninsured people in America. I can tell you one thing that is clear: small businesses are very much concerned about ensuring that we get pricied out of the ability to compete by their health insurance costs.

There is an excellent article in the Wall Street Journal on Thursday, April 15. I ask unanimous consent it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAKING CARE: SMALL EMPLOYERS OFFER HEALTH BENEFITS TO LURE WORKERS IN KANSAS CITY

(By Lucette Lagnado)

KANSAS CITY, MO—When Stephanie Pierce took over as director of the Enrichment Center in December, she faced a hiring crunch.

The small, church-based day-care center was enrolling more children than ever, and Ms. Pierce needed to keep the staff she had and bring on more. It was no small challenge in Kansas City's strong economy, where newspapers are flush with help-wanted ads and workers can brush off day-care work, with its low pay and high pressure.

So, Ms. Pierce made a move: she offered health benefits. In addition, smaller businesses in many U.S. cities. But not in Kansas City.

Nationwide, the problem of people living without any health insurance is growing. It is estimated that they total more than 40 million, and their numbers are increasing as welfare recipients, who had Medicaid leave the rolls for jobs that don't offer health benefits. In addition, smaller businesses are offering medical benefits to workers, says a study by the Henry J. Kaiser Foundation. It puts the share at 54 percent last year, compared with 59 percent in 1996.

But Kansas City is moving in the opposite way. Workers only two and a half percent market—a 2.8 percent unemployment rate, vs. 4.2 percent nationally—but also to a Chamber of Commerce initiative and to competition for workers from an industry that does offer medical benefits: riverboat casinos.

As small employers such as the daycare center where she works for the first time, some interesting things are happening. The employees are facing the pain of rising health costs, just like their big brethren. But they see something different that large companies know: in some ways, offering health benefits saves money. As for workers, they are finding that coverage can be a path to getting through tough times.

The first change Ms. Pierce noticed at her day-care center went perfectly to the bottom line. February, overtime costs for her 14-member staff totaled $120, down from a monthly average $420 last year.

It was clear that before, sick workers who were uninsured would commonly stay home to try to nurse themselves back to health, or would get stuck for hours in a hospital emergency room or free clinic. Now, they can get timely medical attention from private physicians in their health plan and often return to work sooner.

The second change, Ms. Pierce no longer has to pay as many other workers to pull overtime, at higher pay. "It's better to pay an employee to be there at work than to be sick. It helps to cut expenses," she says. And paying a staff that has health benefits is "a whole new world," she says.

For the staff, the changes are greater still. Before Ms. Pierce, employee Towanna Smith says, being ill meant "terrible" waits at a hospital emergency room, not to mention other indignities she perceived. She and a friend "nailed" the treatment of her sore throat, "My friend had insurance and I didn't, and I noticed that the doctor treated her differently," she says. Ms. Smith, who is 26 years old.

Last month, Ms. Smith, now in a health plan, went to a doctor for a swollen arm that has nagged her since the accident. "I brought out my insurance card, and I got special treatment," she says, smiling. "I said, 'Thank you, Jesus.'"

She might also thank the riverboat casinos. About four years ago, out-of-town gambling companies arrived in an already-tight labor market here and began hiring thousands of workers, leaving in place company-wide policies that called for full-time workers to get medical coverage. "The boats put people in a tizzy," says Scott Samuels, an adviser to hotels and restaurants. "People,..." She adds that as after employees "become exposed to insurance, they begin to appreciate what the benefits are. They know that they can go to a single doctor and receive excellent care. They are being educated."

So is she—in costs. The first year, 1997, the HMO cut her monthly costs per employee. That rose to $120 in 1998, and then, for 1999, Kaiser Permanente jolted her with a boost to $157, a month per covered worker. Though Kaiser eventually agreed to shave the $5 in return, she says, for boosting workers' copayments, "a jump like this pretty much scares the jeepers out of me," Ms. Smith says, and makes her wonder "how long can we continue" to offer free medical coverage. One option she is considering is requiring employees to pay part of the premium.

Some employers find they can't offer health benefits even if they want to. Patti Glass ran the nonprofit Jewish Family and Children's Service in Kansas City. She was paying $6.50 an hour—..." She was paying $6.50 an hour—and..." She was paying $6.50 an hour—and..."

As a recruitment tool, the benefits do the trick for Ms. Cox. She has attracted people "..." She has attracted people "..."

Mr. Nicholson had worked at a fast-food outlet for 14 years without getting benefits, "..." He eventually got a deal on a health plan, "..."

Mr. Cox makes sure she gets her money's worth from Kaiser Permanente. If a sick worker has a problem getting a quick doctor's appointment, "..."

"Adding the cost of health benefits was a competitive decision we needed to make, and we think that long-term it will reap rewards for us," he says. "It has allowed us to retain employees."

People like Kathy Wilson. A nine-year-employee, Ms. Wilson arrives at 4 a.m. to get ready for the day, and soon becomes a whirlwind of activity, rushing from station to station: "I cook the eggs, I cook the sausages, I heat up the Cini-Minis," she says. Though her boss, Lewis Nicholson, says the customers arrive, and she really gets busy.

Finding medical coverage became a top priority for Ms. Wilson, who is 29, a few years ago after she had a baby. Paying for everything out of pocket was a huge strain. It wasn't long afterward that Mr. Lindstrom began offering insurance, and she jumped at it. Out of her pay of $8.75 an hour, Ms. Wilson contributes $25 every month for medical coverage, plus a discretionary $50 to cover her son.

Though her employer pays half, some fast-food operators have chosen no-frills health plans that require workers to pay 100% of the premiums, for very basic coverage. Several McDonald's and Qwik Cheks here have signed up with Star Human Resources Inc., a Phoenix company that sells plain-vanilla health plans known as Starbridge. One of them costs only $5.95 a week, usually paid by the workers themselves, and provides a narrow array of benefits with strict limits.

Mike Rogers, a Star salesman in Phoenix, explains that his company provides a limited plan for working population that "...most insurers don't want to mess with." He is quick to concede it isn't comprehensive: "If they have a catastrophe, our little plan won't be adequate." But Mrs. Dobski, defending it, says the plan offers workers "..."

The uninsured in Kansas City still total between 9% and 12% of the population. That is far below the nationwide average, 18%, or New York's 28%. The number of uninsured..." The uninsured in Kansas City still total between 9% and 12% of the population. But that is far below the nationwide average, 18%, or New York's 28%. The number of uninsured..."
First, the Republican bill does not prohibit discrimination by employers. If we only address health insurance, we could actually increase employment discrimination. Second, the Republican bill does not prohibit health insurers from sharing the information with their brokers, insurance companies, and other brokers. Finally, the Republican bill lacks teeth. The only penalty in the Republican bill for genetic discrimination is a fine of $100 a day. Do we really think that $100 a day will deter the health insurance industry from practicing genetic discrimination?

That is why Senator Daschle, Senator Harkin, Senator Dodd and I introduced legislation earlier this month to truly prevent genetic discrimination. Our bill prohibits disclosure of genetic information to employers, prohibits employment discrimination, and contains strong penalties.

The bottom line is that people are afraid, and that prohibiting health insurance companies from discriminating is not enough. We have letters from patient groups, women’s groups, medical groups, and labor groups, asking us to stop employment discrimination, place some limits on disclosure of predictive genetic information, and back up those prohibitions with strong penalties. I look forward to passing a meaningful genetic discrimination bill after this debate.

As to our debate this week on the Patients’ Bill of Rights, I think it is fair to ask health care providers whether they are providing good care to their patients. It is not asking a doctor to provide health care for their employer, as my friends on the other side wish to do, they are not going to provide it.

We need to make health care better, more affordable, more accessible. We do not need to drive people out of the health care system. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 9 minutes.

We are drawing to a close on this debate. While I am pleased that our colleagues have addressed an issue related to genetic discrimination in their bill, I am very concerned about the way in which this has been approached and I regret that we have not had sufficient time to focus on this issue. I was a co-sponsor of Senator Snowe’s original bill in the 108th Congress, which contained stronger penalties and disclosure prohibitions. However, neither of the Republican bills will stop genetic discrimination, because it lacks three key provisions.
country this week. Why do they all get it and no one gets it in here except Democrats and the two or three of our Republican friends who have supported the Patients' Bill of Rights? Why is the debate so different all across the country? Why is it, apparently, all across the Senate? Why is it that we have all the nurses supporting us? Why is it that we have all the doctors supporting us? Why is it that we have all the health professionals and all the patients groups supporting us? And why is it that the newspapers and editorials all over the nation, north, south, east, and west get it?

We wonder whether this is really an issue. We are asked: is this really an issue out there? I can tell you, just from the cases I have had in my own office, that this is an issue. I received a call this morning from Kathly Mills, a registered Republican who called my office from Tulsa, OK. She said her husband was literally killed by an HMO and she has been trying to find someone to listen to her story. She has given up her efforts to contact her own State Senators because they have not responded to her numerous calls.

On July 16 last year--1 year ago tomorrow--Mrs. Mills' husband, who had a history of severe congestive heart failure, was seen by an internist at their new HMO for severe chest pain. Without taking a thorough patient history or the results of a positive EKG test, the doctor sent Mr. Mills home. As Mrs. Mills was later told by doctors at the HMO, their policy is to refer patients to a cardiologist only after waiting 10 days, unless the patient is having a heart attack on the table. Mr. Mills was released to go back to his job, working outside in 100-degree weather. Mr. Mills died later that day of a massive heart attack.

The HMO doctors have been forthcoming about the need for extensive inquiry. Mrs. Mills feels certain it is HMO policy that is at fault for her husband's death. Unfortunately, her attorney has informed her she does not have the right to sue the HMO.

Mrs. Mills just this morning offered to fly to Washington with what little money she has left to tell her story to the Members of the Senate. Her conviction is that in the future injustices like the unnecessary death of her husband will be prevented, or at least that when they do occur, the Americans victimized will have some means to redress the wrong.

People ask whether this is still going on. This is yesterday. Here is a story about Jacob Jacob. Jacob is 4 years old and lives in a midwestern State. Jacob's mom has asked that we not use his last name or the name of the HMO because she is afraid of what the HMO will do. Jacob was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer in 1997. The recommended by Jacob's doctor was monoclonal antibody treatment, and it is only available at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Hospital in New York. Jacob could participate in a clinical trial at Memorial Sloan-Kettering that would involve complex surgery, transplant, radiation, and chemotherapy treatment.

When Jacob's parents inquired into the clinical trial, their physician told them it was not experimental. Their physician told them that monoclonal antibody treatment is the standard of care for Jacob's type of cancer, and has been standard treatment in use since 1987. Even though this is the standard course of action, the HMO denied him the needed therapy. After many months of fighting the HMO from both inside and outside the system, the company approved the first stage of Jacob's treatment.

However, the story does not end there. Jacob's only hope for a cure is to complete the entire course of treatment which comes in four stages. Jacob's family continues to live in fear of their HMO because he has not completed the treatment yet and, in the words of his HMO, "This determination of the treatment may be provided continuously at any time, even if the condition or treatment remains unchanged." Jacob and his family are currently receiving treatment, but they live in fear.

I can give you the story that I received last Friday, a very powerful case involving a small boy and how he was denied needed surgery by one of the major HMOs in this country. This is happening every day, every hour. People all across the country understand it. Certainly the parents of these children understand it. Mrs. Mills understands what is happening. I doubt there is a Senator's office that hasn't received similar calls in the last few days.

We have had a series of votes in the last 4 days, and each of these votes has been decided in the interest of the insurance industry. The prevailing interest is over patients' interests, but only by a narrow margin. That is only temporary.

Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the bill. We may have lost the battle for the minds of Republican Senators, but we are winning the battle in the minds of the public.

Once the debate is over and the votes are counted, the action will move to the House of Representatives. I believe we will do better in the House because of the groundwork we have laid in the Senate. We intend to keep the pressure on. There is still a good chance that a strong Patients' Bill of Rights can be enacted into law by this Congress this year. I think three votes would have given us victory after victory on each of these specific issues.

If there is an attempt to bury this issue in the Senate-House conference, the consent agreement makes clear that we can use it again and again in the Senate this year. Every day, every week, every month we delay, more patients suffer.

This is a Pyrrhic victory for the Republicans. If they keep taking marching orders from HMOs, they will keep losing public support. The American people will not be fooled by hollow Republican promises and cosmetic Republican alternatives. Patients deserve patients' rights, not just some patients, but all patients.

You should not have to gamble on your health. You should not have to play a game of Republican roulette to get the health care you need and deserve. This is an issue that is not going away. Too many people have had too many bad experiences with abuses by HMOs and managed care health plans. They know the horror stories firsthand. Everyone knows these abuses are wrong, and, frankly, we have only just begun to fight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico such time as he may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the chairman. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak for 2½ minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair.

The remarks of Mr. Domenici pertain to the introduction of S. 1379 are located in today's Record under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions."

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wish I had brought a prop with me. It would have been the front page of the New Mexico newspapers in 1997, because in 1997 across New Mexico there were front-page stories and headlines. Guess what they said: "New Mexico Passes Patients' Bill of Rights."

Six months later, in July of 1998, there could have been a comparable headline across New Mexico, my State, the State in which the Democrats want to cover every single person who has health insurance. There could have been another headline saying: "Patients' Bill of Rights Now Effective in New Mexico."

Maybe if I had brought that newspaper with me, some people from that side of the aisle would understand. They do not trust the States and even if the States already have protection through a bill of rights, they still want to take over nationally.

Forty-two States have protections for some or all of the very same things that are in the Democratic bill that the Republicans are trying to kill. At least to the extent identified by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, seem to be supporting. They do not even say in our State we already have the protection, except they imply it in Texas by saying: How can it get to be so expensive when we already have it?

I ask the question: If they already have it, why do we need to pass one? Our premise is that 42 States already... have many of the protections being suggested here. Some of them are moving in the direction of covering more than is being proposed here. Why do we insist that they would be better enforced in Washington, DC? I submit to anybody who understands the bureaucracy in Washington, do you really want every State's protection under a bill of rights to be dependent on HCFA? HCFA cannot handle in any diligent manner, with any reasonable conclusion, the work we have given them on Medicaid and the benefits and figuring out who can pay what. And now they want to give HCFA, from every State in the Union, huge numbers of the very people the other side of the aisle is crying for but who are already protected. I do not know if I will ever get anybody, outside of those who hear what I am saying, to write that and check it out. It does no good to say the Democrat plan covers 161 million Americans. The question is, Why do we cover 161 million? I wish we could say that 200 times. Maybe we ought to. Every time somebody stands up, we ought to say: We're covering those who are uncovered in America. Now let's go on to the rest of the debate, and then put up a sign and say: We're covering 48 million—put it up there—because they are the only ones who either do not have this protection or cannot have it. These people are not covered because the law says you cannot cover them, the States simply do not have the authority to provide these rights to these people, vis-a-vis, the health insurance they have.

Having said that, I believe that answers most of the questions that have arisen in this debate. But, then I understand there remains—I see this as only four issues—another very interesting issue. Because at this stage of the evolution in the United States of America of settling disputes one goes to court; attorneys and juries and courtrooms. The Democrats insist that we put that in here as the mechanism, the means, the way to settle disputes over scope of coverage, whether you have given somebody what they are entitled to. Some people in New Mexico are not covered, I wish I could tell you how many, but nobody knows how many. Some have insurance, and we cannot cover them with New Mexico's rights. So we are covering them here. So it is a bill of rights for those who are uncovered in America. I do not know how we will ever make the point, but let me just say, if you do not need coverage under a bill of rights because you already have it, then how does anyone get by with coming to the floor and saying: We're covering it anyway, and the other side of the aisle isn't covering it and they don't care? How do you get away with that?

Mr. DOMENICI. I think you just keep saying it, like they have been saying it. It can be nothing else. In fact, there are many States with broader bill of rights' protections today than the Democrat bill, if it were passed. So why do they need it?

Mrs. BOXER. Would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to finish. It is the first time I have had to speak. I looked over and you spoke at least 10 times, and you did beautifully.

Mrs. BOXER. Not quite.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would like to finish and then answer any questions when I finish.

Mrs. BOXER. Good.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE  July 15, 1999

S8586

Y ou may be surprised, but businesses did not have to provide health care. That is the law in America. It is voluntary on the part of most businesses. I am very pleased that most businesses are moving as rapidly as they can to buy more health care.

But I guarantee you, the other issue is, how much do we have to add to health care costs to get a reasonably good system for patient protection that is not now available in America? That is what we have been talking about here. It is not available because of the operation of law.

We could go into three or four more issues, but I choose to give my own summary and my own understanding of the real nature and philosophical difference between that side of the aisle, the Democrats, and this side of the aisle.

Frankly, everyone around here knows I am not a Senator who votes one way all the time. I have been known to argue and to say I have no idea what I am going for. I have done that.

We offer an amendment to the bill that the Democrats would have their way. It is a Republican bill.

To say we need a Patients' Bill of Rights is to say that we are wrong. I believe the issue is as I have painted it. Does it make any sense to say we need a national bill because the States are taking care of it and what the reality is, I end up thinking Tennessee did us a very special favor by sending him to us.

I close by saying, I hope after all this work, the proposal that the Democrats offer will get defeated and that the final Republican bill, which will be explained again in depth by others, will go to conference and see how it all turns out.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time do we have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Do you have any time?

Mr. REID. I yield 2 minutes on the bill to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I say to my friend, who is my chairman, how much I respect him and also how much I disagree with him.

I ask my friend a question. The Senator said—and I think he said it very clearly and straight from the heart—the Democrats are wrong, it is a philosophical difference, that we are wrong to say we need a national bill because the States are taking care of this problem.

Senator DORGAN has a chart. I want to ask the Senator if he will take a look at it. Thirty-eight States have no protection for their people when it comes to access to specialists. It goes down the list. Many States have virtually no protection on most of the issues we are debating in this Patients' Bill of Rights. The question is, How does the Senator respond to that?

He has said States are taking care of it when, just taking specialists, there are 17.5 or 17.8 specialists in 38 States, and there is a whole other list that I won't go into. I think that is an important question. I would like to hear the Senator's response to it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure.

Mrs. BOXER. The fact of the matter is, he says unequivocally, States are taking care of it when people in those States are writing to us and telling us: We need a Patients' Bill of Rights at the national level. We have no protection.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I tried as best I could to say 48 States have patients' bills of rights. I did not say 42 States have every single item that the Democrats want in the Patients' Bill of Rights, but they do have the authority to put in as much as they want. So if the sovereign States, their Governors and legislatures, think your litany of things ought to be there and they are that important, they have the authority to pass it.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, if I may take back my time, I ran for the Senate on a lot of issues. My friend has been on many more times than I have to the Senate. We stand up and we say what we believe.

For example, I know the Senator is very strong on mental health protection. I have been with him on that. For me to think that I am going to sit here and say some legislature in some other State knows more than what my people tell me, I think we are here to do the people's business. When we look at this list, when we see how many things people don't have, I think it is ducking reality to say we should walk away from it.

By the way, the Republican bill claims to give people specialists, so the Senator himself has argued in favor of it for 48 million people.

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I already have answered.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator give me 10 minutes?

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. We have 31 minutes; they have 32 minutes.

The minority yields 5 minutes to the Senator from Illinois, Mr. DURBIN.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. President, for those who have followed the debate this week, there have been some very clear-cut issues decided on the floor of the Senate. Sadly, I must report that the Republican majority and the insurance industry have prevailed on every single effort by Democrats to provide protections to families across America when it comes to their health insurance.

Take a look at the scoreboard. On the Democratic side, we offered protection to 113 million Americans who were left high and dry by the Republican side and the insurance industry. We lost.

We offered an amendment saying that every woman in America could choose her OB/GYN and have access to all of her primary care physician and could not be overruled by an insurance company. We lost.

We offered an amendment saying that emergency room care could be at the hospital closest to your home instead of that dictated by the health insurance policy. We lost.

We offered an amendment saying that doctors should make medical decisions and not the health insurance companies. We lost.

We offered an appeal process that gave families a fighting chance when the health insurance company turned them down for coverage. We lost.

We offered an amendment that gave patients control over deciding who pays their bills of rights.
We offered an amendment for access to specialists, when your doctor says that is in your best interest, in order to come out of a process healthy and well. We lost.

We offered the latest treatments, clinical trials, prescriptions that doctors recommend to save the life of someone in the most perilous of circumstances. We lost.

I have to give credit to the insurance lobby because, through their efforts on the floor this week, they have rejected every effort we have made to provide protection for America's families when it comes to health insurance. I used to think the gun and tobacco lobbies were the big ones on the floor of the Senate. My hat is off to the insurance lobby. They have really done a job. With the Republican majority, they have defeated us time and time again on different amendments, different efforts to protect American families.

The Republicans tell us tonight, when this is all over, in the boardrooms of the health insurance companies in America, but there won't be any dancing in the family rooms for those American families who realize that tomorrow they are just as vulnerable to a disease and a health insurance company clerk as they were yesterday. There won't be any dancing in the emergency rooms across America, as the nurses and doctors there respond to emergencies, never knowing whether or not the company will reimburse them for their heroic efforts to save lives. And there won't be any dancing in the doctors' offices, as they leave the room with the patient to go to a backroom and call an insurance company and beg them for the right to make the best medical decision for an individual.

I know the Republican side has criticized us for bringing pictures of real people to the floor of the Senate. I know the Republican side has gone so far as to say these pictures, pictures of kids such as Rob Cortes, a little 1-year-old, a little boy I met last Sunday. Every time I voted on an issue this week, I thought about this little boy and his family in the Chicago area. This little 1-year-old breathes with a ventilator, as my colleagues can see. He has spinal muscular atrophy. His mom and dad fight every day so he can live, and they fight the insurance company every day to make sure they have an opportunity and access to the drugs they need to give this little boy a chance.

The Republicans tell us this is unfair. Don't bring us pictures of real people. We want to talk about statistics. We don't bring us pictures of real people. Those pictures, those kids such as Rob Cortes, are pictures of real people.

Let me tell you, this issue is not cardiac arrest; it is alive and well, and we will continue to fight it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). Who yields time?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Texas 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, one of the frustrating things about this debate is that when facts are established, when our dear colleagues on the other side of the aisle continue to use information that has no foundation in fact and which, in fact, is at variance with the facts. So what I would like to do is go back to the facts, not as I would like to make them up, or as our colleagues may have made them up, but the facts in terms of the findings of the Congressional Budget Office, the nonpartisan arm of Government which does estimate on the basis of which we run Government.

First of all, the CBO estimate which I have here says that the ultimate effect of the Kennedy bill would be to increase premiums for employer-sponsored health insurance by an average of 61 percent. That is not my number, that is the number of the Congressional Budget Office. That converts into $2.7 billion of costs that will be borne by companies that pay insurance and employees that often match that expenditure.

Senator KENNEDY has made headlines by saying we are talking about a hypothetical situation. The reality is that the estimate of the Kennedy bill by Congressional Budget Office is enough money to buy every franchise of McDonald's in America. It is estimated that this cost will mean that 1.8 million Americans will lose their health insurance. That is 1.8 million people who won't have access to health care at least paid for by insurance of any kind.

Our colleagues on the Democrat side of the aisle don't seem concerned about 1.8 million people losing their health insurance. But we are very concerned. We looked at public opinion strategies nationwide poll of small businesses which asked what they would do if the Democrat bill were passed. And you know the answer. The majority of small businesses, the HMO, or the health care provider, but sue the company that bought the insurance policy. The responses indicated that 57 percent of small businesses in America say that they either would be unlikely to decrease coverage, that is 39 percent, or somewhat likely, 18 percent. That is 57 percent of the insurance for some 70 percent of the working people in America that would be jeopardized by this bill.

Yet, over and over and over again, we hear this talk as if there are no costs involved.

Now our colleagues go on and on as if repeating something would make it true, by saying that their bill covers 60 million people whereas ours covers 48 million people. The way Federal law and State law is structured, the federal government has jurisdiction over 48 million people in terms of health insurance under a Federal law called ERISA. My State has passed a comprehensive health care Bill of Rights. Maybe Senator BOXER would not support their Bill of Rights, but Senator BOXER would not be elected in Texas. I might not support the Bill of Rights in California, but I probably would not be elected in California, even if I were.

The point is, who elected Senator BOXER to write health care policy for the State of California? Nobody in Texas elected her. Nor did they elect me for that purpose. If I wanted to write State insurance policy in Texas, I would have run for the Texas senate and not the U.S. Senate.

So we have this absurdity that is stated over and over again that they are covering more people than we are. We are covering more people than we are. We are covering the people in America who are under Federal jurisdiction. They are preemption State law in every State in the Union, and Senators... who have never been to some States in the Union are dictating to them about the jurisdiction of their legislature. Yet, somehow it is suggested that I don't care about people in Oklahoma. I care about people in Oklahoma so much that I am going to write their own health care Bill of Rights—which they do in Oklahoma—I want them to write it. That is how much I care about them. But in that area where it is Federal jurisdiction, I want the people to have control of their health. In terms of continuity of care, if there has ever been any debate in history that could be referred to as somewhat contradictory of a previous position, it is this. I want to remind my colleagues who today aren't concerned about a 6.1-percent increase in the cost of health insurance, who aren't concerned about 1.8 million people losing their health insurance, who in 1994 were so concerned about double-digit health inflation—an inflation that we would match if their bill passed, they were so concerned that they wrote the Clinton health care bill. And they were so concerned about medical necessity that they wrote it, here is what their medical necessity was:

The comprehensive benefit package does not include an item or service that the national health board may determine is not medically necessary.

Today they are jumping up and down about medical necessity. They want a doctor to choose. They want us to write in our bill that we are going to let the Federal Government define it. But when they wrote their health care bill in 1994, they said that a national board would decide.

They talk about point-of-service option. But when they wrote their health care bill, if you didn't join their health care collective, you would be fined $50,000. And if they provided a health service that wasn't prescribed and you pay for it, your doctor could go to jail for 15 years.

Now, that is how much they cared about all these things when they were trying to put America under socialized medicine. They were trying to do it because people were losing health insurance, because costs were going up. Yet today they are trying to pass a bill that would drive costs up and that would deny people their health insurance.

Having spent all of this time answering all of this misinformation, let me spend the rest of my time saying a few things that I feel strongly about.

No, Jimmy Adams doesn't have the power of the Republican majority than I am today. I have never seen greater collective political courage than I have seen today.

It would be very easy with all of this demagoguery about insurance companies, HMOs, health, consumers, and charts showing scores of HMO's 12, consumers 0.

I remind you that our Democrat colleagues invented HMOs. Ted Kennedy in 1978 said:

He authored the first program of support for HMOs that passed the Senate. Clearly HMOs have done their job.

What is Ted Kennedy saying today? He loved them so much that he wanted to put the whole Nation under one run by the government. But, today, he is trying to kill HMOs.

We are not trying to kill HMOs. I am not ashamed of that. I want to do people a choice so that if they don't want to be in HMOs they can get out. We broaden their options. We give people the right to fire an HMO.

Senator Kennedy gives people the right to sue one. We guarantee people the right to see a doctor. He guarantees the people the right to see a lawyer.

I am proud, when it has been so easy to demagogue this issue, that we have stood up for the interests of this country.

We have written a very good bill. It cleans up the things in HMOs that needed to be cleaned up. But it doesn't kill off the only mechanism we have to control costs.

We provide tax deductibility for the self-employed. That will mean millions of people will get health insurance that do not have it today.

We let people have medical savings accounts—a new, innovative way to let people choose their own doctor and control costs at the same time.

I am proud of what we have done. It is easy to demagogue, but it is hard to lead. We have led, and America is going to benefit from our leading.

Finally, let me say we have come forward with a bill that works—a bill that works for people, a bill that holds down costs, a bill that promotes equality.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota, Senator Byron Dorgan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I guess my favorite Will Rogers quote is the old one that we all know. He said, ‘It ain't what he knows that bothers me. It is what he says he knows for sure that just ain't so.”

I heard a lot of discussion today about facts and about whose side is right. In fact, we just heard the two stages of denial on the central argument of the Republicans against our real Patients' Bill of Rights.

The first stage is that States provide all of this protection, so we shouldn't have to do it. And when informed the States don't do it, they say, well, that might be true, but the States could do all of it if they wanted. That is the second stage of denial, of course.

Let me talk again about some of the people involved in this debate, if I might. This is, after all, fundamentally about patient care. It is not a debate about theory.

I want to talk about Ethan Bedrick once again. This young boy pictured here was born under very difficult circumstances. During his delivery, the umbilical cord was wrapped around his neck and consequently, he was born with cerebral palsy and a condition called spastic quadriplegia. He can't get the rehabilitation services he needs to help him because his HMO says this: Denied.

The HMO called a 50-percent chance of being able to walk by age 5 a minimal benefit. His parents appealed and appealed. Guess who they appealed to—the same people who turned them down.

We know that in 31 States there is no right to an independent, external appeal. The Republican plan says that Ethan Bedrick and citizens in 31 States are not covered. It is a fact that is the fact. Dispute it if you can, but those are the facts and they are stubborn.

Or what about Jimmy Adams, Jimmy Adams doesn't have the feet today because his folks had to pass three hospital emergency rooms before they got to the fourth hospital where the HMO would pay for his emergency care. On the hour-long trip to the further hospital, his heart stopped beating. They were able to revive him, but too much damage had already been done by the lack of circulation to his limbs. This young child lost his hands and feet due to gangrene.

Our opponents say, young Jimmy Adams can stop at any emergency room under the Republican bill. Sorry; not true. The Republican bill doesn't cover over 100 million people, and there are 12 States that have no protections with respect to emergency care. With respect to Jimmy Adams, or a Jimmy Adams of the future, the Republican plan says this: Denied.

What about this young fellow born with severe deformities? Dr. Greg Ganske, our Republican colleague over in the House, does reconstructive surgery. He surveyed his colleagues, and 50 percent of them had HMOs deny reconstructive surgery for young patients with birth defects such as this.

Here is the picture Dr. Ganske used when he described the kind of circumstances these children live with.

What about an appeal for this young fellow? What about access to the specialist services needed? The Republican plan says “denied” to this young child—denied. Under the Republican plan—and in 38 States—there is no provision for access to specialists for reconstructive surgery. Those are the stubborn facts.

Let me show you the bright morning of hope for a young child who was born with a cleft lip who has had access to the appropriate reconstructive surgery. This is the same child I just showed you.

Here is the way this child looks with reconstructive surgery. What a world of difference this makes in a young child's life.

This is called patients' rights.

Some say it doesn't matter; we don't need it. We say these rights are critical to the health of the people in our country. This is about children, men, women, families.

Would anyone in here, if this were your son or daughter or your parent, really stand up and say let the states protect his or her. Would you really vote for these basic protections, such as access to specialists, if it were your child's health on the line? You know the answer to that. Of course, you wouldn't.

We just heard a fill-in-the-blank speech from about three people. You could fill in the blank. Over and over, in debate after debate, year after year, the subject changes, but the mantra remains the same: Let the States do it.

During the debate to create Medicare we hearing: We don't need Medicare; let the States do it.

On minimum wage—Let the States do it.

On protections for residents of nursing homes—Let the States do it.

On efforts to create a safer workplace or prevent child labor—Let the States do it.

That speech has been given in this chamber for 150 years, and it is so tired, rheumatoid, and calcified that I don't want to hear it anymore.

We have had to fight for every step, for progress on such issues as creation of the Medicare program, a safe workplace, a minimum wage. Tonight we are fighting for something called a Patients' Bill of Rights. All along the way, we see people digging in their heels saying for lots of reasons that they don't want to do it.

We need to do it for these children. No longer shall we deny them the rights they deserve in our health care system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina, J ohn Edwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EDWARDS. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, actually for almost 20 years before I came to the Senate, I had an opportunity to see firsthand what insurance companies do to people because of work I did.

What I saw was they take people's money. They deny them coverage when they need it, and when they need them the worst, they are never there.

What I have seen on the floor of the Senate this last week is what insurance companies do in Washington.

What they do is this: They make certain that the power in the health care industry in this country remains with them.

They have done that in a remarkably effective way. It has been extraordinary to watch what has happened over the course of the last week.

It boils down to—at least, to me as a first-time observer of this—a very simple fact. On the floor of the Senate this week, insurance companies have won and the American family has lost. The children, parents, and members of American families have lost and the insurance companies have won. This is what has happened.

No. 1, insurance companies cannot be held accountable. They absolutely cannot be held accountable. They have done everything they can to make sure that the way in which they control, the way in which they control the patient, the way in which they control the doctors and the nurses is write health care plans that make absolutely certain that the insurance company acts recklessly and the lawyer who is hired by these insurance companies are not going to write the plans in a way that protects the patient, they are living in never-never land. That is exactly what will happen.

As a result, in its simplest terms, the insurance company and their team of lawyers have won this battle. The patients have lost.

One last thing. We have heard lots of talk about cost from the other side. That is a false argument. It is a false argument for a simple reason. No. 1, what will happen under our real Patients' Bill of Rights is that we get patients to emergency rooms, to specialists, to the doctors who they really need to see as quickly as possible. That has an extraordinary cost effect, which is they get treated more quickly, their condition and disease is diagnosed more quickly, and as a result the long-term costs associated with that are reduced.

Second, when an HMO or health insurance company acts recklessly and irresponsibly and a child, for example, is severely injured and that child incurs millions and millions of health care costs over the course of his or her lifetime, the health insurance will not be held accountable. No way are they going to be held accountable. Those costs—the millions and millions of dollars—don't go away.

The question is, Who pays? The American people pay. The American taxpayers pay. They pay through Medicaid. That is the only way those costs will be paid. Instead of an HMO being responsible for paying, the American taxpayer pays. The people listening to this.

Mr. REID. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, we are in the final inning, so it is time to bring out the scoreboard.

HMOS, 12; patients, zero. It is a shutout. On every amendment, patients have lost and the HMOs have won. Mr. President, 12 and counting.

The Republican bill will pass. It is a bill supported by the insurance industry. It is a bill supported by the HMOs. This is what it leaves out: It leaves out any right to a specialist, the right to an emergency room, the right to a clinical trial for every fatal disease, the right for all Americans to be covered—70 percent of...
Let’s talk about the cost. I think that is a fallacy in the argument. This Congress is going to debate in the next week or two a tax bill that could plunge us into a deficit. Sure, we think we have a surplus, but it is a promis- sory note surplus; it is not a guaran- teed surplus. We are going to talk about cost, just wait until we start talking about that tax bill.

The other thing is, we did not hesi- tate to pass the national ballistic mis- sile system. I will tell you something. Most physicians are currently more at risk for their lives and safety from insurance gatekeepers preventing them from having access to the medical care they need than they are of some mis- sile striking us in Baltimore, Crisfield, Hagerstown, or all around the State, or this country.

So let’s not talk about cost. And let’s not invent phony arguments. Let’s go back to what we are debating, the Kerrey-Mikulski amendment that says let’s do it one State at a time. It is very straightforward. It would allow for a transition that, when a doctor is no longer included as a provider under a plan, or employers change plans, it would provide 90-day transitional care for a doctor through post-partum care that addresses not only delivery. That’s directly related to delivery. That’s what we are fighting for today, and I hope we pass this amendment. I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I just want to say something and get it off my chest. It is offensive to me, and almost demeaning to this Senate, for people who disagree with the work that has been done by people such as Dr. BILL FRIST, and Senator COLLINS from Maine, and Senator JEFFORDS from Maine, who worked hard on this bill, to suggest that they are bought and paid for by insurance companies and HMOs.

I haven’t talked to an HMO, but I have talked to some people who are concerned about expanding costs of health care. It is Alabama businesses. We had the Business Council of Ala- bama in my office just a few days ago, a group of them. It is the biggest group in the State. The first thing they said was: J eff, please don’t vote for some- thing that is going to skyrocket health care costs. We are afraid of that. We have already got an 8-percent inflation cost increase predicted for next year; 8 percent already. You vote on a bill, the Kennedy bill, with 6 percent more? Please don’t do that. We can’t afford to cover our employees. They are going to lose health care.

And the numbers back that up. This is what we are about.

It offends me to have it suggested that some insurance company is here— HMOs are not even here, that I have observed. They do not care what the rules are. You tell them what the cov- erage is, what the rules are, and they will write the policy and up the pre- mium to pay for it. And working Amer- icans are going to pay for it. That is what is really unfair to me.

For Senators to suggest that there is a scorecard and only truth and justice and decency and fairness occur when her amendment is voted on? We have amendments. This whole bill mandates and controls and directs HMOs on be- half of patients. Everything that is in it, that is what it does. Some just want to talk about what they think you do and is never enough. There is always another amendment to go further.

It is a sad day when we have a group of fine Americans who worked on this legislation for 2 years or more, to pass a bill that improves and protects the rights of people who are insured to a degree that has never happened before, and have them accused of being a tool for some special interest group. It is just not so. The people on this side know it, and they ought not to be saying it. It is wrong for them to do so.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sen- ator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sen- ator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I want to comment on the process. We have seen pictures of infants with various medical challenges that I need to clean up. It keeps coming back and back again. The example of cleft palate is being used over and over. I want to dem- onstrate, to help educate our col- leagues, because obviously it is not coming through what is in the bill, what will be in the final bill tonight.

No. I, let’s just say the baby is born with a cleft palate, which is a defect in the upper part of the mouth. The doc- tor recommends surgery, regardless of what is in the health plan. The HMO contract says “cosmetic” surgery is not covered.

So the medical claim is made. The doctor and the patient say: Yes, this thing is medically indicated. The plan has written down that cosmetic sur- gery is not indicated. So they say: We want to do something about it.

Today they have to throw up their hands and see what they can do. That is why we need a Patients’ Bill of Rights. What happens? We have an in- ternal review built into the plan. So if there is a disagreement, the doctor and the patient disagree with the plan, there is a process, for the first time for most of these plans, for internal review. They may have other physicians who are affiliated with the plan making that decision. Let's just say they came up with a decision. Basically, the second opinion inside the plan, the internal review, said: No; I am with the plan. We are still not going to cover it.

Well, is it eligible, or is it not, for external review? Remember the external review. The patient has the authority to choose an independent doctor, a medical specialist, if necessary, to do the review: Is it eligible or is it not?

The key world is, “Is there an element of medical judgment?” There clearly is, because you have a doctor saying, this patient needs to be repaired. So automatically—and that is the trigger—it goes to an independent external review.

We have heard a lot of people say it is not independent. It is pretty independent. If you have the managed care company, you have the entity that is government regulated; State, Federal, Department of Health and Human Services regulates this entity. This entity appoints an independent doctor, a medical specialist, if necessary, to do the review: Is it eligible or is it not?

The key worlds are, “Is there an element of medical judgment?” There clearly is, because you have a doctor saying, this patient needs to be repaired. So automatically—and that is the trigger—it goes to an independent external review.

We have heard a lot of people say it is not independent. It is pretty independent. If you have the managed care company, you have the entity that is government regulated here that is unbiased—the words are actually in the plan—appointing an independent reviewer, who is a doctor. Or, if it happens to be a chiropractor of concern—it can be a chiropractor, I might add, who is independent, a specialist in the field, who makes the final decision.

In the independent external review, the reviewer makes an independent medical determination made on a whole list of things that we have in there—not just what the plan considers, but best medical practice, generally accepted medical practice, the peer reviewed literature, the best practices out there, what his colleague is doing—and then a decision is made and whatever decision is made, it is binding. It is binding on the plan.

Let’s just say it is binding on the plan, so let’s have “repaired” here. Let’s say the plan says, “We are still not going to do it. I don’t care what the reviewer says.” You are going to see in the final bill that they have to do it. If they do not do it in a timely fashion—I want everybody to read the bill—they are going to be fined.

Mr. President, I ask for an additional 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. Frist. I thank the Chair.

So the decision has been made by the independent reviewer, and it is binding on the plan that you do the repair, that it is medically necessary and appropriate. The plan has to do it. We are still talking about that plan if it just doesn’t want to do it. Basically, what we have are penalties that are built in the bill. They have to do it, they have to do it in a timely fashion, and if they do not they are fined $10,000. Not only that, if they are fined $10,000 and still don’t do it, immediately you can go to somebody else and have it repaired. And who is going to pay for that? The initial plan.

To me that is the way the process works. You have an independent reviewer. You guarantee the patient gets that repair in a timely fashion, if in that independent review it is thought to be medically necessary and appropriate, regardless of what the HMO contends.

Internal appeals, external appeals, independent reviewer with penalties built in that is not carried out in a timely fashion, and the guarantee that the care can get done because you can go, even have a third party do it and charge it back to the initial plan—unbiased, independent, internal, external appeals, and that is the accountability provisions that are built into this bill. I am very proud of the fact it is there. We will not go wrong, it will work. It will change the way medicine is practiced by managed care.

I yield the floor.

Mr. Dorgan. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. Nickles. Mr. President, how much time do we have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes 35 seconds.

Mr. Kennedy. Just for a question, may I yield a minute to Senator Dorgan?

Mr. Nickles. Yes. Sure.

Mr. Dorgan. I just wanted to observe for one moment, I listened to the presentation. That presentation works with respect to the people who are covered. But there are 120 million who are not covered. If one says those who are not covered are covered by a State, we must point out that 38 States do not have provisions that guarantee access to specialists. I want to make the point.

Mr. Frist. Say again, covered by that?

Mr. Dorgan. There are 120 million people, roughly, not covered. And we have 38 States—if the proposition is “but if we don’t cover them in our bill, the States do,” there are 38 States that do not cover them either.

Many of these children will simply not have access to a specialist. Those are the facts.

Mr. Frist. May I respond on his time? This is a critical point because we have been debating scope. It is very important for the American people to understand and for our colleagues to understand that scope, and when it comes to accountability, the internal and external appeals, the independent reviewer does not just apply the 48 million people not covered by the States. It is covered by people who are both ERISA covered, federally regulated, as well as the States, and it is important for my colleagues to understand that because that is how the heart of our bill. In many ways, it is the heart of our bill for the appeals process, the accountability, what I just went through, both ERISA, federally regulated plans, and State plans. That is why it is so hard, in the last hours of this debate when it is so misunderstood what is in this plan. That is why I tried to go through it very clearly. It covers all 124 million people.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. Nickles. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes 21 seconds.

Mr. Nickles. Mr. President, I appreciate the clarification made by our colleague from Tennessee. My colleague from Tennessee said we have this appeal process which applies to all plans, State-regulated plans as well as federally regulated plans, and that is very important. For those who say this would not have an appeal process, it would not apply to them, they are absolutely wrong. And a plan in the country would, from the internal and external appeal under the bill which hopefully we will be passing shortly.

For the information of our colleagues, we are going to be voting in the next minute or two on the pending amendment, and then we will take final action on the substitute that will be offered by Senator Lott and myself and others. We expect to be voting on that, just for the information of our colleagues, by 8:15, hopefully no later than 8:30. We are going to be wrapping this up.

I have one final comment. I urge my colleagues to vote no on the pending amendment. The pending amendment deals with continuity of care, all of which we support, but it tells the States: We don’t care what you are doing. It is another one of these examples of what we know better, we can define continuity of care better from Washington, DC, than the States. That is a serious mistake.

In addition to overriding State laws, it also takes away an existing right under ERISA. It eliminates injunctive relief which would apply to everybody in the plan. It eliminates class action and injunctive relief on page 8 in the amendment. I do not know why they put it in. It is wrong. It is in the amendment. A person can go to court and say: I am entitled to the benefit under the plan, and the judge can agree, but he cannot agree for that one individual. It cannot agree for all the participants in that plan. That is a violation of current law which takes away rights in existing law. It is a serious mistake and should not be allowed. I urge my colleagues to vote no on the underlying amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1253. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sessions). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote? The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 52, as follows:

The amendment (No. 1253) was rejected.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. NICKLES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—AMENDMENT NO. 1251

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to vitiate the yeas and nays on the pending amendment No. 1251, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM. Reserving the right to object, could I add a further statement to that unanimous consent request?

Mr. LOTT. Fine.

Mr. GRAHAM. I ask unanimous consent to be able to offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. LOTT. We have to object to that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1251), as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1254 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1222

(Purpose: Providing legislation to improve the quality of health care, protect the doctor-patient relationship, augment patient protections, hold health care plans accountable, and expand access to health care insurance throughout the country)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], for himself and Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 1254 to amendment No. 1222.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed today's Record under "Amendments Submitted.")

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I have consulted with the Democratic leader, Senator DASCHLE, on this next unanimous consent request. I know Members will be interested in this.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote occur on passage of S. 1344, as amended, at 8:20 this evening, with the Lott substitute and amendment No. 1253 having been agreed to and having withstanding paragraph 4 of rule XII, and the consent agreement of J une 29, 1999.

I further ask that the time between now and 8:20 be equally divided between the two leaders, or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, that having been agreed to, the final vote will occur at 8:20, with the time equally divided between now and then. So Senators who want to participate should be prepared to be here to be involved in the debate. Those who want to get support at this point, now is the time to do it.

Having said that, I want to go ahead and make my statement on this substitute package at this time. Then I will yield to the assistant majority leader, Senator NICKLES, who will divide the balance of our time between members on our side of the aisle who wish to speak on the final package.

I think we have had a really good debate on this issue to make sure we were ready to go with an alternative, or to go with a solution to the problems we found in this area. They have done excellent work. Again, this task force was chaired by Senator Nickles. Other members were Senators ROTH, GRAMM, COLLINS, FRIST, GREGG, SANTORUM, SESSIONS, ENZI, and HAGEL.

There has been a lot of great work by those members of the task force and members of the body who spent a lot of time and participated in the debate that has gone forward. I have really learned to appreciate the statement I heard on the floor earlier, that with Dr. Frist, you really don't need a second opinion. He has done a great job. Sometimes it has been hard for those of us who have not been in the medical profession. I appreciate that.

I think it is time we moved forward. We have done good work. Let's report out this legislation and go to conference and let's get a result.

There are certain things patients do need in America. Consumers do need some guarantees. I could go through a list of areas where there are problems, and I am going to go over the solutions we have here. I think the worst thing we can do now is to not wrap this up with a concluding favorable vote.

Now, there are some who will say the President will veto this bill. When we passed the missile defense bill, the word was: I will veto it. But we worked it out and he signed it. It was the same thing on education flexibility. The word was, you have language in here on the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act and we thought we should meet our commitment there before we spent money on a lot of other programs. In the end, we worked out the disagreements and the President signed the bill.

Today, for the first time in history, enrolling, signing of a bill was done by Senator Thurmond and by the Speaker, and it was sent by Internet to the White House—the Y2K liability bill. It came out of compromise. He was a partisan vote, but some Democrats worked with all of the Republicans and we got a bill through the Senate. It took us three tries. We were told the President would ven that political grandstanding in Wash-
where they really exist, but they don’t want us to recognize the problems we did deal with. They want the Government to take over health care. They don’t want that. They want bureaucrats making the decisions, and they don’t want it being determined by a bunch of lawyers. They want some action to clarify and solve some of the problems we have.

Make no mistake about it, the version of this bill that we have offered is far from the Democratic bill, which I believe contains a lot of bad policy. It is dangerous in many respects: dangerous because, under the guise of humanitarian concerns, it would drive into the ranks of the uninsured some 1.8 million Americans; dangerous because, under its compassionate rhetoric, it would threaten the ability of most small businesses to provide health insurance to their employees; dangerous because it would place the scalps of litigation into the hands of the insurance lawyers and virtually invite them to carve up the nation’s health care system.

I don’t believe the American people want that. The system is not perfect. HMOs are not perfect, although the quality of their care, as every other consumer product, can vary tremendously from one group to another, from one region to another. In my own State of Mississippi, we only have about 5 percent of our health care that is provided by managed care organizations—5 percent.

So we have a very different view and set of concerns than do some of the other States where there is a lot more activity in this area.

If there is one thing we have learned from the downfall of the Clinton health care plan in 1994, it is this: The American people don’t want the Government to control health care. They do want solutions, though, to some of the real problems that exist, such as ability, which we did deal with. They want us to recognize the problems where they really exist, but they don’t want political grandstanding in Washington to imperil the highest quality health care in the world.

I heard it said yesterday on the floor, “Health care in America is in real trouble.” There are concerns about the evolution that is occurring. But health care in America is still the best that the minds of men have conceived.

My mother is alive today because of medical procedures. She is on her third pacemaker. She is doing fine. If her knees would still be out looking for a date.

And the pharmaceuticals and the medicines they make are miracle drugs.

We should not kill the goose that laid the golden egg.

Can we improve it? Can we work with all those involved in the system to make it better. We can do that. That is what we are doing today.

I hate to think where we would be if the Congress, 20 or 30 years ago, had attempted to micromanage health care the way this Democratic legislation atttempts to do now.

I wonder if, today, they would make it a non-invasive surgery, the miracle drugs, the sophisticated diagnostics that we all take for granted.

If the Government moved in and said we are going to start dictating this and say what you can do, what you can’t do, and when you can do it, we would have a loss of that entrepreneurial, dramatic innovation and spirit that we have had in health care in America today.

The Congress should not imperil the continuing transformation of American medicine. Will it be different in 10 years? You bet it will. So will life in America. It is happening so fast that it is breathtaking.

It is not our job to control or dictate what the managed care organization will do at that point, there is still the opportunity for lawsuits. And, at that point, there is still the opportunity for lawsuits. But if you do anything, there will be penalties for noncompliance.

All the consumer rights in the world don’t matter an aspirin if you aren’t able to become a consumer. That’s why our Republican bill creates new opportunities for uninsured Americans to buy into the health care system.

For starters, our bill makes all Americans eligible for medical savings accounts, not just the 50,000 currently allowed in a pilot program. We offer full deductibility for health care costs. That alone will make insurance more affordable for 16 million Americans.

That is the way to go. We should make it deductible—not just for the self-employed, although we ought to do that, but for all of them. That would solve the problem of a lot of these small business men and women who can’t afford to provide the coverage for their employees. They would deduct the cost when they choose what they want.

We provide full deductibility for self-employed persons, so these 3.3 million hard-working people, and their families will have the same tax break that big business has. At least 132,000 households will be able to afford health coverage with this provision for the first time.

At every point, our approach is to exand access to health care. That is our greatest contrast with the other packages that have been offered by Senator KENNEDY and Senator DASCHLE.

It is worth repeating.

If we went with their proposal, it would result in the loss of insurance for an estimated 2 million people.

That is far too heavy a price to pay for some of the things we have argued about this week.

This bill, the substitute amendment I am offering, is the main event of the debate on health care this week.

For the 48 million Americans whose health care plans are not protected by existing State regulations—that is a critical point—it will provide these things:

Guaranteed access to emergency room care;

Direct access to OB/GYN without prior authorization;

Direct access to pediatrician without prior authorization;

Better continuity of care if your doctor leaves a health plan;

Guaranteed access to specialists;

Improved access to medications;

Protection of decisionmaking by doctors and patients;

And, very importantly, our bill provides a way to get a review.

Dr. FRIST talked a lot about that. If the doctor makes a recommendation, and he and the patient disagrees with what the managed care organization says, they will have a chance to have a review internally, and then one externally with expedited procedures. And, at at that point, there is still the opportunity for lawsuits. If they don’t comply with the result, there will be penalties for noncompliance.

Again, instead of getting a lawsuit—which may be nice when it is finally concluded for your heirs—you will get action. You will get a decision through an appeals process.

That is the way to go.

I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers. I am not critical of lawsuits because I have a problem with lawyers.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Ð SENATE
I don't think it should be the first resort. It should be the last resort. See if you can work it out. See if you can design an appeals process that will get you to a conclusion and that will get results, rather than a lawsuit that may be great for the deceased person's beneficiaries.

We believe patients should have a timely and cost-free appeals procedure to contest any denial of coverage. We believe patients should not suffer discrimination based on genetic testing. Our bill forbids.

We believe government should facilitate breakthroughs in medicine and help providers gain access to them. Our bill does that, too.

What we do not do is put American health care in the hands and in the pockets of the trial lawyers. Senator Jeffords has said it best: "You can't sue your way to better health care."

In that regard, the Democratic bill that has been before us this week reminds me of the old days of medicine. Well, we will bleed the patients. And, believe me, I think that is what would happen if we went with what they have proposed. It would be bled with Federal bureaucrats. They would be bled in the courts.

That is not the answer. I think that is a bad idea. There is a better way—a way that protects the rights of patients without imperiling the Nation's health care system: a way that opens the door to medical care; that gets more people covered by the insurance of their choice; a way that educates consumers so that they, rather than the government bureaucrats, can make their own informed choices.

That is the sum and substance of our Patients' Bill of Rights Plus. It is "plus," because it is a bill of rights, but also it provides some tax opportunities through the medical savings accounts and deductible.

I thank many Senators who have worked on this issue on both sides of the aisle.

I think we all know a little more about this subject than we did, and maybe more than we ever wanted to know.

I have every expectation that it will win the Senate's approval and find favor in the House of Representatives.

I am optimistic, as I always am, that we can get a result. If we make up our minds to do that, we will.

This bill addresses the real problems many Americans face with the delivery of health care. It expands access to health insurance and makes it more affordable. It bans genetic discrimination in health care, expands research, and educates the consumers.

In short, it is the right thing to do, and this is the right time to do it.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. Graham. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. Chafee. Mr. President, I am a little bit confused over just what we accomplished in the past week. As I understand it, this bill is pretty much a Republican bill that will pass. However, the President has indicated that he is going to veto this bill. And there is no question that the veto will be sustained. Then where are we? What have we accomplished in a week?

It seems to me that we have let the American people down in a situation such as has been outlined. People can say the President shouldn't veto. He is indicating he is going to do that. That is his privilege, obviously. We have been through that before.

So, therefore, it seems to me that we have to ask ourselves: Could we have done a better job? It seems to me that we could have.

I greatly regret we are not able to present the legislation which a bipartisan group of us had the privilege of working on. We believe that legislation would have accomplished something that we were not able to accomplish, as I previously outlined.

I believe we ought to cover all Americans; that is, all privately insured Americans—164 million. The legislation we will pass will not do that.

I believe we ought to have an effective and timely external review process to resolve coverage disputes. I am not sure the legislation we have before us—and that we will shortly pass and having examined it—accomplishes that.

I think we ought to be able to give patients the right to sue in Federal court for economic damages—only in the Federal court, and not in the State courts. I certainly have supported legislation to prevent the suits in the State courts.

We have dropped from our bill the controversial provisions codifying the Federal law—the professional standard of medical necessity. Instead, we added language to our external review provisions to ensure that external reviewers have a meaningful standard of review.

It is with some regret that I announce that I recognize we are not going to have a chance to present our legislation, and I think it would have been much better had we avoided the problems we currently have before us and that our Nation and our citizens would be better off.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. Murray. Mr. President, as we prepare for final passage of the Republican HMO legislation, I come to the Senate floor to express my disappointment and my frustration with this end product. This bill is a failure and ultimately we will suffer the consequences of the majority's reluctance to protect patients.

I had high hopes at the beginning of the week that we could come together on some of the key areas of agreement and produce a good bipartisan bill to protect patients. I had hoped for a bill to put the health care decisions back into the hands of patients and consumers.

Our health care system is in a state of flux. It has moved from a system that served people only when they got sick and encouraged overutilization. Now we have a system where economic barriers are erected to prevent patients from accessing care. Now we have gone from a system of waste and over-utilization to a system where patients cannot get the care for which they paid. Decisionmaking—life and death decisionmaking—is now too often solely in the hands of insurance executives focused on profits and quarterly reports. Who is looking out for the patients?

We need to restore a balance with a system where insurance protects you when you become ill, but also helps prevent you from becoming sick in the first place. We need to be the ultimate decision rests in the hands of patients based on the medical advice of their physicians. We need a system where people are fighting illness, not fighting the insurance company. We need a system where people are not spending 45 minutes on the phone with an insurance company so a sick child can be admitted to a hospital. We need a system where parents are free to stop at the first, closest emergency room and drive to that hospital. We need commands if their child has been hit by a car.

I know such a system does and can exist. One of my greatest concerns is what the failure of Patients' Bill of Rights means to managed, coordinated care. Let me tell my colleagues, I support managed care. I support a coordinated care approach that is focused on prevention and early detection of disease.

HMOs and managed care were born in my state of Washington. The original HMO law, signed by a Republican President in the early 1970's was enacted because of the new, revolutionary form of health insurance still in its infancy in Washington state. I want to be clear, health maintenance organizations are not the enemy. One of my colleagues yesterday made a statement that the Democrats saw HMOs as the bad guys. He tried to make a point that somehow the Republicans were the good guys. He had gone and avoided the problems we currently have before us and that our Nation and our citizens would be better off.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. Murray. Mr. President, as we prepare for final passage of the Republican HMO legislation, I come to the Senate floor to express my disappointment and my frustration with this end product. This bill is a failure and ultimately we will suffer the consequences of the majority's reluctance to protect patients. I had high hopes at the beginning of the week that we could come together receive mammograms. I know that a good managed care structure has increased our average life expectancy and reduced our infant mortality. It has reduced the number of people who smoke and decreased the incidence of heart disease. We have a healthier population in Washington state, in part because we have the benefits of a coordinated care delivery system that focuses on prevention and reduces wasteful, unnecessary health care services. Unnecessary things are changing in Washington. Due to mergers and acquisitions, we now have health care plans being run by companies in California and other states. We now have for-profit insurance companies, using HMOs and more importantly, we have premiums from HMO participants going to enhance short term profits. Our once envied system has deteriorated. I am hearing more and more from patients, providers, and members of the public that if we fail to restore some kind of balance, managed care will become a thing of the past. People will demand changes and will dismantle managed care. We will then be back to a system where only the very wealthy have regular and consistent access to quality health care and where you only see your doctor when you are ill, not to prevent illness.

I had hoped that a uniform standard set of protections for patients would restore the trust in managed care. That is the only way we can ensure that the “outrage of the day” does not become the guiding force in state legislatures. If my colleagues think that by killing our balanced and fair Patients’ Bill of Rights and patient protections, we will dismantle managed care, then they are wrong.

Ultimately, these single “outrage of the day” bills will be the nail in the coffin for managed, coordinated care. We will see the end of a health care delivery system that encourages prevention and keeps people healthier, longer. We will see a return to a system where access is only provided to the ill.

Not only does this jeopardize health insurance, it jeopardizes biomedical research and scientific innovation. Why do we invest in research that prevents illness or prevents hospital stays or detects cancer sooner, when no one will have access to it? Why double NIH research dollars, to prevent illness and to find cures for deadly cancer? If patients are not encouraged to seek care to prevent illness or to seek regular, prevention and early detection care? Doesn’t it seem to be a contradiction to encourage biomedical research when we do not have a health care delivery system that invests in wellness?

Our Patients’ Bill of Rights will not result in pushing people off of insurance. Our bill is a reasonable, cost-effective proposal that does enhance managed care, not diminish it. It rewards those insurance companies that do offer a good package and a good product. They will no longer have to compete with companies that do not look at their beneficiaries as people, but rather premiums. There are good insurance companies out there. I know this to be true as there are several in Washington state. While I have heard of some companies that believe it is a combination of consumer misinformation and distrust. But, unfortunately these good companies have to compete in a very price sensitive market with policies that have premiums in place to limit and deny access to quality care.

I am also disappointed that most of my Republican colleagues refused to engage in an open and honest debate. This is a short sighted strategy as parents with sick children, cancer survivors, and patients with MS or Parkinson’s, and women denied access to ob/gyn care will ultimately be heard. Wait until they discover that for $2 more a month they could have gone to the ER or they could have participated in a new life saving clinical trial at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center. They could have gone to see their ob/gyn when they first found the lump on their breast or their child could have been a pediatric oncologist following a family. What do my colleagues think will happen when families realize that for the price of a Happy Meal each month they could have saved their child? There will be outrage and it will be heard all the way to Washington, DC.

I hope that this issue is not dead. I hope some how this is not the end of the debate and that like so many other issues we will be able to put aside partisan differences and work towards real patient protections.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we are coming to the close of a vital debate, and I do not use that word casually. The issues we are voting on in some cases have life and death consequences for the people we were elected to represent.

The individual rights spelled out in our Patients’ Bill of Rights are clear, and they are specific. They are strong, and they would work. They have been painstakingly drafted and redrafted and then further refined for more than a year.

They have the support of hundreds of medical and consumer organizations whose millions of members work directly in this field. They would achieve for patients the very rights that our constituents have repeatedly signaled that they want and need and deserve in the age of managed care.

We have offered the Patients’ Bill of Rights, point by point, reform by reform. In response, senators on the Republican side of the aisle have cobbled together weak, feeble, illusory copies of those reforms, offering paltry excuse of the real thing, and hoped that nobody outside this Chamber would notice the differences.

We have seen this happen with access to emergency care, with a woman’s access to an OB/GYN and with a patient’s access to specialists.

This flurry of amendments, mixing genuine rights for patients and the phantom versions from the other side, has obscured some of these issues in a cloud of political rhetoric. With the final votes of this debate, that cloud will be lifted. Senators will decide whether they will stand with patients and their doctors, or with the insurance companies.

Senators will decide whether 161 million Americans can enjoy the protections of the Patients’ Bill of Rights, or whether 113 million Americans will be left in the waiting room.

There are many key differences between the Patients’ Bill of Rights and the fall-back plan that Republican leaders have come up with. But the most important differences are that our bill would cover everyone, our bill lets doctors make the medical decisions, and our plan holds plans accountable to take away incentives to minimize critical health care decisions that can hurt or kill people.

Just this morning, we have heard the Republicans attempt to justify why it is more important to protect insurance companies than patients and their doctors, or with the insurance companies.

I have heard from many Vermonters on their experiences with managed care. Each of these moving stories makes you ask: What if it was me, or someone I knew?

When I was home in Vermont last week, I picked up the Burlington Free Press and, beside a guest column he had written, was met with the friendly face of an old friend, Dr. Charles Houston. He and I go way back to my days as a prosecutor in Burlington when he was a prominent physician doing remarkable things in the Vermont medical community. He has been a beacon of good advice to me throughout my time here in the Senate. He is an indispensible Vermont.

Dr. Houston’s commentary depicted the devastating and tragic experience he and his wife had with their managed care company that ultimately led to his wife's death.

My wife is a registered nurse, so I get a dose of the practical reality of these problems across the breakfast table, as well as from the accounts I get from Vermonters. It is these desperate accounts, like this one from Charlie, that bring home the need for a Patients' Bill of Rights.

Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent that Dr. Charles Houston's article to which I referred. Mr. President, the question today is: Will the Senate pass a bill that protects everyone—161 million Americans who get their health care through a managed care program—or just a fraction of those families, the 48 million who are in employer self-funded plans? Will we continue to hear and read stories from the people in our states who have no protections? Will we continue to hear accounts like the tragic one of Charlie Houston's wife? I hope not.

The President has indicated that he would veto a so-called Patients' Bill of Rights if all we send him is one containing the weak Republican provisions.

Maybe then we can rescue those millions of Americans the Senate today has stranded in the waiting room without a real patients' Bill of Rights.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article which I referred.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Burlington Free Press, July 2, 1999]

MANAGE CARE NEEDS IMMEDIATE OVERHAUL

By Dr. Charles H. Soutter

Can anything worthwhile be added to the billions of words written and spoken about health care? Why is our medical care today both better and worse than in the past? What happened?

Here's one story.

An 84-year-old nurse led an active life despite mild chronic lung disease, but after a long plane trip developed pneumonia. Finally admitted to the hospital, she was treated aggressively by an over-changing group of specialists and nurses and went home after two weeks—but with diarrhea either from antibiotics or a hospital infection.

She was weak and undernourished but her doctors could not visit her at home, insisting she remain in the hospital. When she refused, they tried to direct her care by phone. She drafted downhill and died two weeks later, a victim of efforts to reshape medicine by managed care in years.

First, traditional care was scrapped and most doctors forced to join systems and to abandon fee-for-service medicine. We are told this is more efficient, and at first glance it was getting too expensive; 2 too many people could not get care; and 3 technology had become so complex.

Managed care, we were told, would decrease the cost, eliminate waste, open the system to the needy, and provide highly technical care through specialists. In the capitation world, the plan would get run.

The goal became to provide the best possible care to everyone. Who could quarrel with this? Yet a moment's thought shows this was and will always be impossible: There aren't enough providers and other resources. But you don't need a Cadillac to go shopping. Instead our goal should be to make appropriate care easily available to all who need and seek it. The treatment should match the problem, the cost must be affordable.

So what has managed care done? 1. The costs of care have skyrocketed even faster; and 2. specialization has led to fragmentation and medical care by committee. What little fraud had existed was replaced by the waste-filled octopus to non-medical insurance administrators who can—and do—overrule care decisions. Doctors must climb walls of paperwork, distracting them from patients. It has become harder to reach or talk to your physician. Administrators and stockholders in the managed care organizations fatten on profits. Now many HMOs are failing or increasing rates prohibitively.

Two other dominating forces must be mentioned. Medical knowledge has expanded far more rapidly than has understanding of how to use it appropriately. More and more specialists do miracles. So, in part to protect the patient, in part for self-protection, physicians often feel compelled to consult experts, and some are reluctant to take care of an individual. Fragmentation became a worse danger than concentration of responsibility.

There's no virtue in crying wolf, and scrambling for a tourniquet without offering a way of escape. Having been a practitioner for many years, alone and in groups, and a teacher in our medical school, I have watched and studied the destruction of traditional care with dismay. I'm confident that many patients and doctors feel as I do. Self-protection, self-interest, and managed care as we know it must go. Though over-simplified, the following would be a strong start:

End or modify commercialization of health care. By regulation make hospitals, medical groups and insurers non-profit and monitor compliance.

Continue the lead role of a primary care provider as first call and facilitate appropriate consultation and resources.

Require insurers to open enrollment for all, allowing them a fair return on investment.

Since each state has different needs, develop statewide insurance plans to appropriate health insurance. Several years ago the Governor's Health Commission prepared such a plan but it failed. Why? Lobbyists? Economic fears? This plan deserves careful look.

Finally, a sad personal note. The patient described above was my wife of 58 years. She was truly a victim of the new medicine.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I strongly support the Patients' Bill of Rights, which Democrats have offered and fought for during these four days of consideration and which the Republican majority has weakened at every turn. I cannot support the inadequate substitute the Republicans have now put before us. The Republican bill is full of loopholes in the fundamental protections for patients which we seek to provide. In fact, the substitute Republican bill provides almost no protection for nearly two-thirds of Americans with health insurance.

The Democratic bill would guarantee access to needed specialists. The Republican bill fails to guarantee patients access to needed specialists. The Democratic bill would assure access to the closest emergency room. The Republican does not guarantee access without financial penalty and prior authorization. The Democratic bill gives women the right to choose their OB/GYN as their primary doctor, as many women wish to do and protects women from "drive-through mastectomies." The Republican version is not adequate. And unlike the Democratic bill, the Republicans fail to hold HMOs accountable when their decisions and practices lead to the death or injury of patients. And, the Republicans would continue to allow insurance company officials to override the medical decisions of a patient's own doctors.

Mr. President, in short, the Republican substitute for the Democratic bill is a mere shadow which does not deserve the title, "Patients' Bill of Rights."

The core of the Democratic effort has been to ensure that insurance administrators not override a health care provider's medical judgment, that HMOs can be held accountable for their actions which is a responsibility every other industry has to its consumers, and to ensure that all insured are protected.

The Republicans have developed a bill that leaves more than 113 million Americans with insurance unprotected because most of the provisions in their bill for the most part are narrowly applied to only one type of insurance. They allow HMOs to do anything they wish to do and protect women from "drive-through mastectomies." Additionally, our bill speaks to the issue of specialty care. Patients with special health conditions must have access to providers who have the expertise to treat their problems. Our amendment allows for enrollees to go out of the plan's network for specialty care, at no extra cost to the enrollee, if there is no appropriate provider available in the network. There are about 30 million American women who have had trouble seeing specialists with their HMO plans. This includes women and children with special needs who either had critical care delayed or, worse, had that care denied. On the issue of emergency services, the Democratic amendment says that individuals have access to emergency care, without prior authorization, in any situation that a "trained lay person" would regard as an emergency.
Survey after survey reveals that the American people support these protected provisions. And, there are over 200 patient groups and health care provider organizations, workers' unions, and employee groups, that stand behind the patients in their situations. That list includes the American Medical Association, American Heart Association, American Nurses Association, American Public Health Association, Center for Women Policy Studies and the Council of Social Welfare of America. We have a stark choice before us, a strong Patients' Bill of Rights that protects patients or a weak bill aimed at protecting insurance companies.

Earlier this week, Mr. Steve Geeter, husband and father of two young children of Grass Lake, Michigan, stopped by to visit with my office. Mr. Geeter has terminal brain cancer and will be participating in an experimental clinical trial at the National Institutes of Health over the next several months. Mr. Geeter and his wife spent a considerable amount of time with my staff discussing his options and limitations under his HMO plan and the need for reforms, including access to clinical trials. Mr. Geeter appreciated the time Mr. Geeter taking the time to share his HMO experiences with my office. They substantiate the need for the legislation before us. Several months ago, Mr. Geeter's HMO plan required that he be released from the hospital following 24 hours of intensive care following brain surgery. The plan's justification was that Mr. Geeter had passed the neurological exams and transfer to a room would cost too much. Mr. Geeter subsequently developed complications and had to be returned to the hospital emergency room. This may have been averted with just an additional 1-day hospital stay-over. The Democratic amendment would have protected patients, such as Mr. Geeter, from an insurer's decision that they be discharged from the hospital prematurely. Plans would no longer be able to deny promised benefits based on an interpretation of medical necessity defined by insurance companies as rather than the patient's health care provider. The Democratic amendment used a professional standard of medical necessity—based on case law and standards historically used by insurance companies.

Mr. Geeter also expressed strong support for the Democratic amendment on access to clinical trials of experimental treatments, which offer patients access to cutting-edge technology and are the primary means of testing new therapies for deadly diseases. Historically, insurance plans have paid the patient care costs for clinical trials, not the costs of the experimental therapy itself. However, research institutions, particularly cancer centers, increasingly find that the trial, which once were paid for by health insurance, must be curtailed because of lack of payment by managed care plans. Clinical trials may be the only treatment option available for patients who, like Mr. Geeter, have failed to respond to conventional therapies. Under the amendment, trials are limited to those approved and funded by the National Institutes of Health (NIH), a cooperative effort between the National Cancer Institute, National Cancer Institute's cooperative group, or the Veterans Administration. The Republican bill provides no hope for patients with no options other than a promising experimental treatment available. The amendment would allow for a patient with a life-threatening disease when there are no other treatment options and there is nowhere else to turn.

In addition to having the benefit of the input of Mr. Geeter, I've communicated with others in my state. Over the past several months, I have traveled around Michigan and met with constituents various communities to get their thoughts on our efforts here in the Senate. I have had discussions with physicians, hospital administrators, nurses, seniors, city and county government representatives and health care advocates.

Ms. Myrna Holland, a resident of Ferndale, Michigan and Director of Nursing Education at Providence Hospital expressed concern that patient choice is limited when HMOs engage in restrictive practices such as "doctor-only" policies. These professionals in critical situations, such as certified nurse anesthetists, nurse practitioners, physical therapists, optometrists, podiatrists and chiropractors. This is particularly important for patients living in rural areas. Many rural communities have a difficult time recruiting physicians, and often non-physician providers are the only source of health care in the local area. If a managed care plan covers a particular service, but there is no one in the community to provide it, rural patients are too often forced to bear the incurring expense, to get the care they need. The Democratic amendment would have prohibited HMOs from arbitrarily refusing to allow health care professionals to participate in their plans by virtue of their licensure or certification. The Republican bill would allow HMOs to continue restrictive practices, leaving consumers with an inadequate choice of health care providers or limited access to health care.

Robert Casalou, Acting Administrator of Providence Hospital in Michigan, raised concerns about continuity of care. The Democratic amendment assured continuity of care. When health plans terminate providers without cause or when employers switch health plans for their employees, quality of care for patients currently undergoing treatment can be severely threatened. For example, a patient with a staged tumor may undergo treatment without sequelae. The amendment would stop the doctors abruptly in the midst of treatment, and a woman who is pregnant should not have to change doctors before she gives birth. The Democratic amendment allowed for a transition to lessen those problems. When a doctor no longer is included as a provider under a plan, or an employee changes plans, our amendment provided for at least a 72-hour notice to the patient and any patients undergoing an active course of treatment with that doctor. The amendment also provided special protections for pregnancy, terminal illness, and institutionalization.

Additionally, Mr. Casalou, and others, expressed support for holding HMOs accountable for their actions. Today, 123 million Americans who receive insurance coverage through a private employer cannot seek redress for injuries caused by their insurer. All they can claim is the cost of the benefit denied or delayed. Even if an HMO has been directly involved in dictating, denying or delaying care for a patient, it can use a loophole in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) to avoid any responsibility for the consequences of its actions. ERISA was designed to protect employees from losing pension benefits due to fraud, mismanagement and employer bankruptcy. But it has had the effect of allowing an HMO to deny or delay care with no effective remedy for patients. The Democratic amendment would have closed this loophole, ensuring that HMOs can claim any patient redress for the consequences of their actions. It did not establish a right to sue. It simply says Federal law will no longer block what the States deem to be appropriate remedies for patients and families who are harmed. The only time an employer can be held responsible is when the employer is involved directly in a specific case and makes a decision that leads to injury or death.

Donald Anderson, who I spoke with in Detroit, is a quadriplegic who is in a wheelchair who changed jobs and also changed health care providers. Donald's new provider would not cover a rolling commode wheelchair for him after the wheel broke on the wheelchair he owned, even though his doctor classified the chair as a medical necessity. Our amendment would have allowed the physician, not the insurance company, to decide what prescriptions and equipment are medically necessary. The amendment provided that a plan may not arbitrarily interfere with the decision of the treating physician regarding the manner or particular services if the services are medically necessary. Under the Democratic amendment, Donald would have received a rolling commode.

In Grand Rapids, I spoke with another constituent of mine, Dr. Willard Stawski, a general surgeon. Dr. Stawski told me about a patient of his who did not seek care for her hernia because she was told by her HMO that it was an unnecessary operation. Dr. Stawski also told me that after his patient elected not to have the operation, she became very ill. Gangrene set in and she died several months later. the Democratic amendment, this tragedy might have been averted. What a doctor deems to be medically necessary, is the medical treatment that the patient receives. Thus, Dr. Stawski's patient would have had the surgery because Dr. Stawski said that the surgery was medically necessary. All we were asking for with this amendment is that patients be able to receive the care that a doctor or other medical professionals deems to be medically necessary. Doctors are frustrated. The Republican majority defeated our efforts to adopt these good amendments.

Mr. President, while I cannot support the Republican substitute bill, I hope we will have a later opportunity to pass a strong bill of rights. The public wants a strong one and they are right.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, for those Americans who have been harmed by the decisions of managed care plans, this public debate is long overdue. For those whose decisions about their health care made by their managed care plan, the end to the wait cannot come soon enough.

The Democrats' Patients' Bill of Rights will ensure those who depend on managed care plans for their health care will not be receiving a lesser standard of care than those who do not.

Last week while I was in Nevada, people voiced concerns about who really made the medical care decision. If they are in a managed care plan. They wanted to know what would happen, under the Democrats' Patients' Bill of Rights, when a patient is told by his or her physician they need a specific treatment, and the physician informs the patient that the plan must first approve or disapprove his decision.

Would their physician be able to decide what treatments would be appropriate for their medical condition? Or would that be the mercy of the managed care plan bureaucrat far removed from the situation who would decide “yes or no” on treatment determined necessary by their physician?

We can all empathize with the stress involved in this situation—your doctor has determined what your medical condition requires for appropriate care, but you must wait to see if what you need is approved by the plan. If the answer is “no,” then you must either forego the care you pay for it out-of-pocket—a not very good choice.

And what if you found yourself in the situation of a Nevada man, covered by an HMO plan, who came into an emergency room suffering from an upper gastrointestinal bleed. The emergency room physician called for a gastroenterologist to perform an emergency procedure to halt the bleeding. But the gastroenterologist would not treat this man without a prior authorization from the HMO plan. If the patient procedure without authorization, he would not be paid. The doctor tried to contact the HMO for an hour to get the necessary authorization. During this time, the emergency room had to give the patient four units of blood, which would not otherwise have been required if the procedure had been done in a timely manner. Finally, when it appeared the patient might not survive, the doctor contacted the HMO plan and said that the procedure was mandated for the patient. Before the authorization for the procedure, he would go to the media about this patient. The HMO then authorized the procedure.

The Democrats' medical necessity amendment would prohibit all managed care plans from arbitrarily interfering with a doctor's decision that the needed health care be provided in a particular setting, or is medically necessary and appropriate.

The amendment's definition uses a professional standard of "medical necessity." This is reasonable for both the patient and his or her treating physician, and the particular managed medical care plan. If a decision on whether or not to cover a particular treatment is made, it must be based on standards and case law interpretations historically used by insurance companies.

If a managed care plan can use its own definition of "medical necessity," any external review of a plan's treatment decisions would be resolved using that definition. This very likely would not work to the benefit of the patient. The Democrats' approach would also maintain the vital relationship between a doctor and the patient. It is a relationship that of necessity must be based on complete communication and trust between the two.

The Democrats' proposal will also ensure patients have a right to an external appeal from the decisions made by their managed care plans. One of the key provisions of this amendment is its requirement the appeal process be timely—for both internal and external appeals. It also requires "expedited" review if the patient is facing a medical emergency.

The Republican bill provides patients no guarantee of an expedited review for medical emergencies. Additionally, a managed care plan could simply delay sending the information needed for an appeal of one of its decisions. There is no deadline requirement for a plan to respond to a decision made by a reviewer. Without a timeliness requirement, patients are at the mercy of when, if ever, a plan wants to deal with an appealed case.

The Republican bill would drastically limit the application of its proposed patient protections to only one type of health care insurance—the self-funded employer plans. Those types of managed care plans provide the medical insurance for many Nevadans who work in the gaming industry. Those employees should have protections. But, why should 113 million Americans be left unprotected? Should we protect only 48 million, or 161 million? It is an easy decision.

Women should be able to designate their OB/GYN as their primary physician, and to have direct access to OB/GYN services without first having to obtain a specialist referral. Women also should make a decision with their physicians about the length of their hospital stay when they have a mastectomy. I have long supported these efforts to level the playing field of health care services for women. The Democrats' Patients' Bill of Rights will ensure these protections.

For individuals who are chronically ill, or have medical problems requiring specialty care, the Patients' Bill of Rights will require plans to provide access to specialists. If plans do not have an appropriate specialist within their plans, then the patient will be allowed to go outside the plan network, at no additional cost. The Democrats' Patients' Bill of Rights will ensure this access.

Every American should be assured the quality of their health care and the access to specialists they need. The Patients' Bill of Rights will ensure those protections. But that opportunity is going to be lost today. And that is a tragedy for everyone who depends on managed health care.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I have been proud to join with Senators CHAFEE, GRAHAM, and other colleagues to express our shared dissatisfaction with the Senate's progress in reaching agreement on a strong patients' bill of rights, and to prepare a balanced, thoughtfully-crafted alternative that we believe would protect the rights of health care consumers and could attract the support of a bipartisan majority of the Senate.

Listening to the deeply partisan discussions we have heard on the floor, this week, about the future of health care, the panel of the popular movie "As Good As It Gets," which has become a cultural touchstone of sorts for venting the popular hostility toward HMOs.
It is not any particular scene I am thinking of, but the title itself. I am moved to wonder if this debate, which seems to be operating on political autopilot and showing no signs of producing anything other than a President's signature, is as good as we get in the U.S. Senate, and if so just how it gets for the American people, who don't know a second degree amendment from a first degree amendment, but who do know that our managed care system badly needs a transfusion of basic fairness and protection.

We are here today to say that we can and should do better for America's families, that despite the apparent legislative logjam it is still possible to pass a constructive reform proposal, and that we are eager to offer a plan that Senators Chafee, Graham, and many of us have been fine-tuning over the last few days which fits that bill.

While Sherlock Holmes had the 7% solution, we are offering a 70% solution.

Our bipartisan alternative includes roughly 70 percent of the patient protections that most Members already agree on, and strikes some balanced compromises on the remaining issues that are currently dividing us.

The liability provisions in our bill are an example of our success in finding a sensible middle ground. This case, the managed care case, reminds me why we have tort law, why we have a system of civil justice. There has been this odd result that ERISA has given total immunity to managed care plans who are today making life and death decisions about our lives.

The question is, how do we respond to that, how do we reform it? I think, with all respect that the Democratic bill goes too far.

It opens up the system to the unlimited right to sue and creates the same proscriptive policies that have been going on elsewhere in the tort system. I am concerned that those ill's will be repeated here—some will get rich and others, many others, will not be adequately compensated for the injuries they suffer as the result of the managed care plan decisions.

And some small businesses and individual people will be priced out of health insurance by the costs that will be added as a result of runaway judgments.

I think the Republican plan, on the other hand, is not real reform because it essentially allows a patient, who is harmed by a negligent decision of a managed care plan, to be denied any significant compensation for their injury.

Under the Republican plan, patients have to traverse an elaborate series of procedural hurdles to be eligible for compensatory damages. First, the patient has to fight their way through the appeals process. Then the independent appeals body must grant a decision in favor of the patient. Finally, if the plan doesn't accept and deliver that treatment, then, under the Republican bill, the only right the aggrieved health care consumer has is to go to court for the value of that lost treatment, plus $100 a day.

The amendment on liability which Senator Jeffords and I introduced far beyond striking the liability provisions from the Democratic bill and would deny efforts to adequately compensate patients injured because of managed care plan decisions.

That's just not enough. I think we've struck a reasonable compromise in our bipartisan bill. You're entitled to sue for economic loss which includes not only the cost of your health care, but lost wages, replacement services, and the value of lost wages and replacement services for the rest of your life based on the injury you've suffered.

And it allows for pain and suffering up to $250,000 or three times economic loss whichever is greater, and suffering but with a limit on it.

Another good example of our success in finding a sensible middle ground comes in the form of our plan's consumer information section, on which I have worked. Both the Democratic and Republican bills provide beneficiaries with information about coverage, cost sharing, out-of-network care, formularies, grievance and appeals procedures. One area of sharp difference is health plan performance. The Republican bill does not require any requirement that the performance of the plan, its doctors, and hospitals in preventing illness and saving lives be reported.

Our bipartisan alternative requires provider performance report cards because we believe this is critical information for consumers to have in deciding which managed care plan to choose. We also reached back to an earlier bipartisan bill I sponsored with Senator JEFFORDS to include waivers and other language to ease the difficulty of administration for HMOs, PPOs, and providers.

The bottom line here is that patients' rights don't have to lead to political fights. There is a path to dependably consumer protections that does not require detours to bash HMOs or our colleagues. We have pled with our leadership to give us the opportunity to offer our alternative as an amendment today and prove our case.

If not, then the coalition is as well, to offer this proposal as an amendment to another legislative vehicle in the Senate this session. The American people deserve more from this critically important debate than the high-priced veto. We must show them that we take their concerns and our responsibilities seriously, and pass a law that will in fact improve the quality of health care for millions of American families.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this week the Senate will finish addressing an issue that is vitally important to the American people—managed health care reform.

The number of Americans who receive health care through managed care organizations continues to increase at a rapid rate. Today, approximately 75 percent of those with employer-provided health insurance are covered by managed care.

Although managed care was put forth as promoting both greater efficiency and higher quality health care, all too often the lure of greater profits has resulted in curtailing care to patients dependent on managed plans for their medical needs. Those Americans who are rightly demanding more patient protections, and it is clearly time for Congress to act to guarantee all Americans certain fundamental rights regarding their health care coverage.

The Democrats in both the House and Senate have worked hard to convince the Republican Majority of the need to establish safeguards for patients in managed care. For a long time the Majority chose to ignore the patients' concerns and refused to heed the need for any patient protections at all. Last Congress we proposed a comprehensive set of reforms designed to ensure that patients receive the care they have been promised and have paid for. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this Democratic bill again this Congress.

After seeing how the public responded to this Democratic initiative, the Republican Majority did draft a managed care reform bill. But, unfortunately their bill calls for only the most minimal reforms; in many respects it is a sham. In addition, until this week, they persisted in blocking the issue from being brought up on the floor.

However, the Democrats joined together in insisting that the needs of managed care patients be given careful consideration. After much hard work by the Minority leader and others, an agreement was reached under which the Senate rights legislation could be brought up on the Senate floor this week.

The debate which has taken place highlights the difference between the Democratic and the Republican approaches to this issue. The Democrats seek to provide comprehensive coverage and protections; the Republicans are minimalist in both respects. Let us look at some of the differences: the Democrats' bill would protect all Americans with private insurance; the Republican proposal ignores the over 113 million people who work for other than the large self-insured employers, or State or local governments, or who buy their own insurance.

Our bill would guarantee basic patient protections to all consumers of private health insurance. The Republican proposal would cover only the employees of businesses that assume the risk of self-insuring their employees. Thus, the Republican bill leaves out more than the consumers of private health insurance.

The Democrats' bill provides patients with access to specialists, whereas the
One of my constituents recently experienced this shocking treatment from an HMO. While hiking in the Shenandoah Mountains, she fell off a 40-foot cliff. She sustained fractures to her arms, pelvis, and skull but was quickly airlifted to a hospital in Virginia. Her HMO refused to pay the over $30,000 in medical bills because they failed to gain "pre-authorization" for her emergency room visit. For over a year, she challenged her HMO and would allow HMOs to continue terminating health care providers for having frank and candid doctor-patient communications and would allow HMOs to continue using incentives to bias a doctor's medical decision-making.

Managed care companies regularly refuse to pay for emergency room services without prior authorization. This unreasonably risky conduct has resulted in countless tragedies as people are forced to waste critical time finding an emergency room their HMO will pay for.

One of my constituents recently experienced this shocking treatment from an HMO. While hiking in the Shenandoah Mountains, she fell off a 40-foot cliff. She sustained fractures to her arms, pelvis, and skull but was quickly airlifted to a hospital in Virginia. Her HMO refused to pay the over $30,000 in medical bills because they failed to gain "pre-authorization" for her emergency room visit. For over a year, she challenged her HMO and was personally bankruptcy. Ultimately, her story revealed that workers around the state were losing insurance as business after business found themselves unable to pay for even basic health coverage.

But for both the state government and for those businesses that maintained health insurance, the spiraling increases crowded out funding for many other significant initiatives and investments. On the state level, paying increased Medicaid bills meant less for education, transportation and child care. Further, the Republicans' plan would continue to shield HMOs from accountability for conduct that results in injury or death to patients.

The American people need a meaningful Patients' Bill of Rights. That is why I strongly support the Democratic proposal put forward by Senator Daschle. Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, in a few short moments we will be proceeding to our final votes of our four day debate on the Republican and Democratic versions of the Patients' Bill of Rights. I am taking the floor this evening to express my strong support for this proposal and to express my support, again, for the bipartisan approach to managed care reform that I sponsored with my colleagues JOHN CHAFFEE, BOB GRAHAM, J OE LIEBERMAN, ARLEN SPECTER, MAX BAUCUS and CHUCK ROBS.

One of the most difficult obstacles to meaningful health care reform is that there is an inherent tension between our two most important objectives. The first objective is to ensure the high-quality health care that all Americans need REGARDLESS of our vantage point on the political spectrum, we can all agree that the United States offers the best quality health care in the world. Men, women and children flock here from every corner of the globe to gain access to our physicians and our hospitals. Maintaining this high standard of care must be at the forefront of any attempt to reform the means by which Americans pay for their health care.

Secondly, at odds with the objective of highest quality care is the need to make sure that health care is affordable. The ability to cure disease or heal the injured is rendered almost meaningless if only a fraction of the population can afford it. Spiraling health care costs have a negative impact upon society in a variety of ways—some obvious and some not so obvious. I well remember the days of the economic recession when businesses similarly began to turn to managed care. For the past ten years, those changes have helped to keep health care costs down, and have resulted in continuing insurance coverage without having to choose between offering health insurance or creating new jobs, or maintaining Medicaid or education funding.

In trying to redress this imbalance, there are a few lessons that we learned in Indiana that were useful principles for me to keep in mind as this debate progressed. First, and perhaps most importantly, any significant reform had to be market-based. Any attempt to have the government control the health care system would be doomed to failure.

The Chafee-Graham bi-partisan bill that I have supported since taking office is market based; it sets some basic ground rules but leaves that actual management of health care to the experts in the private sector—the patients, the doctors and the insurers.

Unfortunately, the Republican plan takes the concept of market-based reform to its illogical extreme. That plan falls far short of establishing even the most basic protections for people in managed care. Most egregiously, the Republican plan would only cover a fraction—less than 30%—of the people who have private insurance. We have all accepted the idea that there ought to be some minimum protections and guites offered to those in managed care to prevent the abuses that we have witnessed over the past few years. But if all sides have accepted that principle, it seems very unfair that the majority would choose to leave nearly 120 million people out of the protections we all believe are necessary.

I strongly support the elements of the Democratic approach that advance these principles—access to specialists, proper emergency care, access to obstetrician/gynecologists, independent reviews of care issues—but the Democratic Patients' Bill of Rights that I believe will drive health care costs up: expanded liability.

If health care costs do not remain under control, there are serious ramifications for both the national economy and for the American taxpayer.

The United States already pays more as a percentage of GDP—far more than any other industrialized nation. A rise in these costs will have an appreciable negative impact upon our economic strength in an increasingly competitive global environment. With pressure from a unified and resurgent Asia, the last thing this Congress ought to do is help spur a dramatic rise in health care costs for a liability provision that is unlikely to make any American healthier.

And the American taxpayer is at risk if health care costs spiral out of control because it is the taxpayer who will foot the bill if hundreds of thousands of people are suddenly forced into the Medicaid system if they lose their health benefits. We simply, as a nation, cannot afford a return to the days when health care costs increased by double digits every year.

The bipartisan bill does allow some tightly controlled access to the Federal courts for suits that seek restitution for economic loss. It seems to me that before we expose health care plans and providers—doctors, nurses, patients, and providers—is not going to enjoy enough votes on this floor to pass.

The bill that will pass is going to be vetoed by the President. I hope we can find a way to craft a bipartisan compromise. We succeeded in putting together legislation that I believe would have led us to a bill that could become a law. As Senator Claiborne Pell, our colleague from Rhode Island and Florida, has stated: The fact that across party lines we agree on about 70 percent of the issues and the concerns we have been talking about for this entire week, I commend my colleagues from Rhode Island and Florida for their efforts to try to get something done. There is no reason for the American people to have to face the health care costs that are needed in this Nation's health care program.

There has been a lot of partisan maneuvering. What we haven't had, what the American people haven't seen, is a sensible, moderate debate on this critical issue of health care.

Tonight, I am very proud to join my colleagues in trying to find the middle ground in this debate with the proposal that should be acceptable to the majority of the people, the Members of the Senate, and without a doubt is in the best interests of the American people.

The bill we propose is of great importance to the American public and they are waiting to see if Washington—and more importantly, if the Senate—will be able to do their job. And that is to present a plausible response to the reforms that are needed in this Nation's health care program.

I applaud my colleagues.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Florida. It has been a spirited debate. We must acknowledge there have been impressive displays of party unity on both sides, but to what end? The end of the sound and fury is we will produce a bill we know the President will veto, and therefore there will be nothing done to help the American people with the problems they have with health care.

But the fault didn't have to be that way. There was a third way. There was a third way that would have recognized and expressed something else the debate has concealed: The fact that across party lines we agree on about 70 percent of the topics we talked about. It was the aim of our bipartisan group to put that majority round of agreements on the bill. Unfortunately, we didn't have an opportunity to have it heard by our colleagues in this debate. We are back. We are going to submit our proposals and there will be another day.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I will consume such time as remains on our side.

There are a series of winners and losers as we conclude this debate. The first winner is the status quo. We all know the result of the effort of the last 4 days will be nothing. We will be in exactly the same position as we were before we started.

The losers are all those American families who have genuine concerns about the way in which they are being treated—the arbitrariness, the inadequacy of services under their current health maintenance organization plan.

The winner is cynicism. The American people will again question whether their political institutions are capable of responding to serious public issues.

The loser will be the opportunity to do something new. The American public and they are waiting to see if Washington—and more importantly, if the Senate—will be able to do their job. And that is to present a plausible response to the reforms that are needed in this Nation's health care program.
The Miami Herald editorialized yesterday that what the American people want is Senate action, not a showoff dictated by political consultants.

Unfortunately, that is what they have received.

We will continue the effort to fashion a reasonable bipartisan plan that will deal with the legitimate concerns, first of all, of the American people—not a small percentage of the American people. We will do so in a way that will be sensitive to the cost of health care but also sensitive of the fact that people should get what they contract for from their health maintenance organizations and will provide an enforcement mechanism that is meaningful.

This is not the last chapter in this debate. I anticipate that shortly we are going to have the rubble of a collapsed bill under the weight of a Presidential veto.

I urge my colleagues to use the time between now and ... whether that is the last record we want to write on this important national issue. I do not think it is what we want. We do not want an issue. We want a result that will help American families.

The day to achieve that result is, unfortunately, not today, but it will come. Hopefully, it will come soon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democrat leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield 8 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if the Chair would be good enough to let me know when 5 minutes remain.

Mr. President, little over 2 years ago, a number of Members were working with those involved in the health care field, those that have been injured because of actions taken by HMOs, and those doctors and nurses who believe that we could do better.

Today we are at a point in the development of a policy where we have seen a setback in terms of protecting patients. We have seen a setback in giving patients and their doctors the opportunity to make medical judgments, rather than having their medical judgments overridden by the economic judgments made by gatekeepers, accountants or insurance company officials. We have received a setback, but I, for one, am not discouraged. I believe that as a result of the last 4 days of debate not only do we have a better understanding about what is important, but I think the American people have a much better understanding.

I think the actions we can expect from the House of Representatives as we begin their debate and discussion starts at an entirely different level. I am very hopeful we will get a strong bill out of the House of Representatives.

I am absolutely convinced, as I stand here, that we will have the opportunity to resolve this issue in favor of the concept underlying the Democratic bill, a concept which as been supported by doctors, nurses, by children's advocates, women's advocates, and advocates for the disabled: that when doctors and patients make a medical judgment, patients will get the type of health care they have actually paid for and not be prevented from getting the best health care.

I am absolutely convinced that is a concept that will be accepted. It was not accepted during this debate. Others will have a different judgment on it. I believe that is inevitable. We have seen that other battles where we have seen the inevitability come to pass. I am convinced of it.

For one, this has been an enormously constructive and productive debate these last 4 days. Quite frankly, as one who has been fortunate enough to be involved in this debate, rarely have I seen—at least on our side—so much involvement by the Members, their participation, their knowledge, the passion and the wealth of experience that was brought to illuminate so many of these issues. I think that has to be to the benefit of the American people.

I am not discouraged. I regret that we were not successful, but we will continue this battle and we will be successful.

In conclusion, I thank the majority leader and thank the Senator from Oklahoma, for they have responsibilities as leaders of this institution. I thank them for the way in which this debate has been developed and the structure for the discussion that have been afforded in the past days.

I thank in particular our leader, the Democratic leader, Senator DASCHLE. I thank Senator DASCHLE on behalf of those of us who feel strongly about this issue—it is not just, I know, those of us on this side. I am sure those on the other side also feel strongly but have come to different conclusions than those we came to about this issue. We would not have had the debate this week if it had not been for Tom Daschle of South Dakota. There are no ifs, ands or buts. This has been, I think, an extraordinary service to this institution, and I think it has been an extraordinary service to the patients and the medical professionals in this country.

I thank my colleague and friend, Senator REID, who was so much a part of the leadership, and of such help and assistance during this time.

I thank the staff of our committee. I serve on a number of committees and have been proud to serve on all of them. But my heart is with the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee. All of our members were extremely active. Senator ANEDERMAN; Senator HARKIN; Senator MIKULSKI, who has been so involved in health care issues; Senator BINGAMAN; Senator WELSTONE; Senator MURRAY; Senator REED—every one of these Senators has been so engaged and involved in this issue.

I pay tribute to my chairman, Senator JEFFORDS, for his courtesies, and Dr. FRIST, for his strong dedication to trying to find ways—which we were unable to on this measure. But I have respect and affection for the members.

I also thank so many others who were not on the committee who were so important, particularly those on our side, although there were others on the other side.

I also wish to thank the many staff people who have worked on this issue this week and for the past years.

From my staff, David Naxon, my long time chief health advisor, Cybele Bjorklund, my deputy health advisor, who worked so ably on this legislation, Michael Myers, my staff director, for his leadership on this legislation, Will Keyser, Jim Manley, Connor Garner, Melody Barnes, Carrie Coberly, Matt Ferraguto, J. Jacqueline Gran, J on Press, Ellen Gadbois, Stacey Sachs, Theresa Wizemann, Webster Crowley, Andrew Ellin, Laura Perry, Ariam Fuller, Sharone Mor, Melvin Munoz, Malini Patel, and Kate Rooney.

From Senator DASCHLE's staff, Bill Corr, Laura Petrov, Ranit Schmelzer, Mark Patterson, Jane Loewenson, and my Health and Human Services, the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Labor; the staff of the Democratic Policy Committee; and the staffs of so many other Senators that have played a critical role during this debate. I thank, as always, their involvement and their support has been invaluable, permitting us to have a level of discussion which I think was worthy of this important debate.

Finally, I want to say on this issue, as all of us would understand in our responsibilities, that we will be back. We may have a setback tonight, but I, for one, do not believe this is a setback in this issue. We will be back to fight, and fight, and fight, and I believe ultimately to prevail.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will vote against the Republican alternative to the Patients' Bill of Rights. All week long, I have supported amendments that would have strengthened the Republican bill and would have provided all privately insured Americans with meaningful patient protections. At each step along the way, the Democratic amendments were rejected.

There are major deficiencies in the Republican bill. The bill that will be passed by the majority contains only 48 million Americans who can receive their coverage through self-funded plans. What about the 113 million that their bill leaves out? Don't those 113 million people deserve protections too? I believe that all 160 million Americans who have private insurance deserve basic protections.

Another important weakness in the Republican plan, Mr. President, is that it does not provide patients the opportunity to hold health plans responsible under state laws. If a health plan's decisions lead to the injury or death of a patient, the plan should not be shielded from accountability.
I regret that the Senate narrowly rejected the Robb amendment, which I cosponsored. This amendment would have provided women with important access to their obstetrician/gynecologist (ob/gyn). The Republican bill does not allow a woman to designate her ob/gyn as her primary care provider.

Another major distinction between the bills is who makes medical decisions. Will it be the doctor or the insurance company? Unfortunately, the Republicans put the definition of medical necessity into the hands of the insurance companies. Under our bill, plans could not deny benefits based on the insurance companies' definition of medical necessity instead of the doctors' definition of medical necessity.

The Democratic version of managed care reform includes access to clinical trials for patients with life-threatening or serious illnesses. The Republican bill provides access to clinical trials only for those suffering from cancer. In addition, the Republican plan applies solely to 48 million Americans. Their bill leaves too many seriously ill Americans without the hope that experimental therapies through clinical trials provide.

I regret that the Senate has squandered this opportunity to enact a true Patients' Bill of Rights and provide important protections to all privately insured Americans. I feel I must vote against this bill that puts health plans' profits ahead of patients' well-being. I hope that we can revisit this issue one day and pass legislation that provides strong patient protections.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, the assistant majority leader.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Massachusetts for his statement, as well as Senator Reid. It has been a pleasure to work with both. This has been a very productive and fruitful debate. As a result, we ended up with a very good bill.

I am going to call on several members of the task force who helped put this bill together and worked very hard, not just for a week, not just for this week but, frankly, for the last year and a half. We had countless meetings and a lot of people, a lot of staff, put in a lot of effort. This was an effort that we felt very strongly about because we wanted to improve the quality of health care without increasing costs and increase benefits. Earlier this year, the uninsured increased to 18 million Americans— including 30,000 Kentuckians. I am pleased to say that we have crafted a better proposal for protecting America's families which is embodied in the Patient's Bill of Rights Plus Act. The Patient's Bill of Rights Plus Act provides needed protections for Americans in a way which won't increase the number of uninsured Americans by 1 million.

The Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act guarantees access to emergency care. It requires plans to pay for emergency medical screening and stabilization under a "prudent layperson" standard. In addition, it will never again have to hear heart-wrenching stories about families with desperately ill children who bypass the nearest hospital in order to make it to a hospital which is in their plan's network. Under our plan, if you have what a normal person would consider an emergency, you can go to the nearest hospital, period.

The Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act would provide direct access to pediatricians and OB/GYNs. This commonsense provision would allow parents to take their children directly to one of the plan's pediatricians without having to get a referral from their family's primary care physician. Similarly, our legislation requires insurance companies to go directly to a participating OB/GYN, without having to get a referral from their primary care physician.

The Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act also bans gag clauses. Gag clauses are contractual agreements between a doctor and a managed care organization that restrict the doctor's ability to discuss freely with the patient information about the patient's diagnosis, medical care, and treatment options. We envision 1 million Americans to end to this practice. I believe a doctor should be able to discuss treatment alternatives with a patient and provide the patient with their best medical advice, regardless of whether or not those treatment options are covered by the health plan.

The Patient's Bill of Rights Plus Act also provides strong, independent external appeals procedures to ensure that patients receive the care they need. Under our bill, patients are concerned that their health plan can deny them care. If a plan denies a treatment on the basis that it is experimental or not medically necessary, a patient can appeal that decision. The reviewer must be an independent, medical expert with expertise in the diagnosis and treatment of the condition under review. In routine reviews, the independent reviewer must make a decision within 30 days, but in urgent cases, they must do so within 72 hours. The Kennedy plan which mandates a broad, one-size-fits-all definition of medical necessity, our plan allows those decisions to be made on a case by case basis.

The Patient's Bill of Rights Plus Act focuses instead on giving patients the care they need. After all, when you're sick, don't you really need an appointment with your doctor, not your lawyer?

The most troubling aspect of Senator Kennedy's legislation is that it will further swell the numbers of uninsured Americans.

The Kennedy plan drives up health care costs and makes health insurance unaffordable for more Americans. According to the very conservative estimates of the Congressional Budget Office, the Kennedy Patients Bill of Rights would increase insurance premiums 6.1 percent (Source: Congressional Budget Office, Report on S. 6, 105th Congress, 2nd Session). This means that 18 million Americans would likely lose their health insurance.

In Kentucky, 30,095 people would likely lose their health insurance.

In California, 271,927 people would likely lose their health insurance.

In New York, 118,001 people would likely lose their health insurance.

In Minnesota, 36,315 people would likely lose their health insurance.

Even if the Kennedy bill does not pass, it is expected that health insurance premiums will rise an average of 9 percent next year. As covered in the Towers Perrin's Health Care Cost Survey 1999). At a time when premiums are rising well above the rate of inflation, do we really want to pass legislation which raises premiums even more? The answer is clearly no.

Our Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act takes a better approach to the problem of the uninsured. While avoiding provisions which will drastically raise premiums, it includes important tax provisions to ensure that many uninsured individuals will be able to deduct 100% of the cost of their health insurance. This is particularly important to the 124,000 of Kentucky's farmers, ministrates, stay-at-home moms, and young entrepreneurs who are self-employed.

According to a study by the Employee Benefits Research Initiative, nearly ½ (43.6 percent) of all workers in the agriculture, forestry, and fishing sectors have no health insurance. By allowing the self-insured to fully deduct the costs of health insurance, we are taking an important step in reducing the numbers of uninsured.
There are certainly significant differences between our two bills. However, no single issue distinguishes the two more than the question of liability. I believe we can and should find bipartisan agreement on the important issues of providing emergency care, insuring direct access to pediatricians and OB/GYN’s, banning gag orders, deductibility of health insurance for the self-employed, and a whole myriad of issues except for one thing: The Kennedy bill insures on new powers to care. Leaping with abandon through the yellow pages under the word “attorney” is not what most Americans would call health care reform.

Simple truth: I believe that when you are sick, you need a doctor, not a lawyer. I am opposed to increasing litigation because it will drive up premiums, drive 1.8 million Americans out of the health insurance market, prevent millions more from spending money to be able to purchase insurance, and aggravate an already seriously flawed medical malpractice system.

If 1.8 million Americans lose their health care, 289,000 fewer women will have access to mammograms and 238,000 fewer women will have access to pelvic exams. I have a question for the supporters of Sen. Kennedy’s bill. What kind of reform makes preventative services less available? What kind of reform is that?

As if driving 1.8 million Americans out of the health insurance market wasn’t reason enough to oppose the Kennedy bill, I am also strongly opposed to expanding liability because it will exacerbate the problems in our already flawed medical malpractice system. Typically these lawsuits drag on for an average of 33 months. Even if at the end of this 33 months, only 43 cents of every dollar spent on medical malpractice actually reaches the victims of malpractice (Source: RAND Corporation, 1985). Most of the rest of the judgement goes to the lawyers. That’s right, over half of the injured person’s damages are taken away by the lawsuit. Why would anyone want to expand this flawed system which is so heavily skewed in favor of the trial lawyers?

The Washington Post said last March that “the threat of litigation is the wrong way to enforce the rational decision making that everyone claims to have as a goal” (Source: Washington Post 3/16/99). More recently the Post said that the Senate should enact an extension of a 6-year-old anti-peg malpractice process “before subjecting an even greater share of medical practice to the vagaries of litigation” (Source: Washington Post 7/13/99). The Los Angeles Times Editorial page called expanding liability to health plans “a danger to Medicare for both enrollees and employers” and stated that “the key to fixing ERISA is not in radical measures like more lawsuits.” (Source: Los Angeles Times 2/27/98)

Mr. President, I have already felt that this debate is about improving private health insurance in America. That the debate was about providing better care, for more Americans not less.

We can and should guarantee access to emergency services. We can and we should ensure direct access to pediatricians. We can and we should ban gag clauses. We can and we should provide an independent appeals process. We can and we should provide full deductibility for the self-employed.

By voting for the Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act, we will have taken all of these important steps and more. However, what we must not do is take action which will deprive 1.8 million Americans of health insurance. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote for this common-sense health care reform.

Mr. Frist. Mr. President, I rise to address a point of some contention on the floor over the past two days. Two days ago, I twice quoted from Dr. Robert Yelowitz, Chairman of the Primary Care Committee of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. The precise quotes were as follows: First, “The vast majority of OB/GYNs in this country have opted to remain as specialists rather than act as primary care physicians,” and second, “None of us could really qualify as primary care physicians under most of the plans, and most OB/GYN’s would have to go back to school for a year or more to do so.”

These quotes, which were taken from the New York Times, on June 13, 1999, were entirely accurate as reported by the Times. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the New York Times article.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

BEYONDD THE HORROR STORIES, GOOD NEWS ABOUT MANAGED CARE

By Larry Katzenstein

Most health plans these days are some form of managed care. And for most families, it is the mother who decide which one to use. When asked why their children, and in a family situation, they may be the ones who have primary responsibility for taking children to the doctor,” said Elizabeth McGlynn, the director of the Center for Research on Quality in Health Care at the Rand Corporation in Santa Monica, Calif.

Wendy Schoales, a homemaker in Everett, Wash., offered another reason: “We’re more picky.”

Mrs. Schoales’s husband works for the Boeing Company, which, like many large employers, offers several health-plan options. Several years ago, when she switched her family from traditional fee-for-service care to managed care to cut expenses, an important motivation was her being able to continue to use the obstetrician and gynecologist who had delivered her first child, Ashlyn. “When you find a doctor you like and you want to stick with him, especially when it comes to an ob-gyn,” she said.

Two years ago, Mrs. Schoales’s second child, Gavin, was born under managed care but with the same obstetrician and gynecologist. The care was just as good as it had been with Ashlyn, she said, and the cost was significantly lower. “They charged us just one copayment for the whole maternity experience,” she said.

For the same reasons, Katherine Davidge of Newton, Mass., also fared well under managed care during the births of her two children. Her experience in getting her managed-care plans to cover treatment, on the other hand, was an exercise in exasperation.

One of Davidge’s plan subcontracted mental health services to another company, a common practice in managed care. “I’d call this company and ask, ‘Is Dr. X covered?’” she said. “And they’d say, ‘You have to call Dr. Y and Dr. Z. So, then I asked for a list of practitioners I could see, and it was really bizarre because they just wouldn’t give us that. They said they typically don’t give it out.”

After several months of phone calls and letters, Mr. Davidge said, she received a list. She noted that it was so small that it was almost impossible for me to find somebody that I knew anything about,” she said. “So I gave up.”

Managed care would seem tailor-made for women. It provides a coordinated system of care that makes preventive services readily available—and women use preventive measures. Women think of their care and think of their maintenance organizations and other managed-care plans remind members to come in for check-ups. With a primary-care doctor to family practitioners, plans help route patients to the most appropriate specialist for their ailments—and all this for a more affordable premium and limited out-of-pocket expenses.

“One reason women’s preventive services have always been such a leading issue in managed care is that two of the tests it emphasizes, Pap smears and mammograms, provide the best evidence that preventive testing saves lives,” said Dr. Karen Scott Collier, assistant vice president of The Commonwealth Fund, a philanthropic foundation in New York City that supports research on health and social policy.

But the darker side of managed care that has received most of the attention in recent years—the follies and tragedies caused by restricted choice of physicians, barriers to needed care, delays in service, limitations on care and a zeal for cost-cutting.

Women, especially, could be excused for thinking their care personal and preventive health insurance. But some of the most highly publicized outrages attributed to health-manage ment organizations, or H.M.O.’s, and other managed-care plans involved women’s issues: drive-by mastectomies, drive-by deliveries, coverage denied for what were regarded as promising breast-cancer treatments and referrals to specialists and gynecologists be primary-care physicians.

The abuses attributed to managed care have caused a backlash in the form of legislation to make it more accountable, particularly to women. This includes the Newborns’ and Mothers’ Health Protection Act of 1996, which requires a minimum hospital stay of 48 hours after a normal vaginal birth and 96 hours after a Caesarean section, unless the woman and her physician think it safe. And for many large employers, offers several health-plan options. Several years ago, when she switched her family from traditional fee-for-service care to managed care to cut expenses, an important motivation was her being able to continue to use the obstetrician and gynecologist who had delivered her first child, Ashlyn. “When you find a doctor you like and you want to stick with him, especially when it comes to an ob-gyn,” she said.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 13, 1999]
Humphrey Taylor, the chairman of Louis Harris & Associates of New York City, which conducted the survey. “But the findings from this survey suggest that managed care is serving women at least as well as fee-for-service medicine, and certainly better than some of the managed-care horror stories would suggest.”

The survey, conducted by telephone, involved 1,140 women with managed care and 351 women with traditional fee-for-service care, all of them younger than 65. Among the key findings:

Women with managed care were more likely to identify a particular doctor as their regular source of care (87 percent of them did so versus 78 percent of those with traditional care).

Women with managed care were more likely to have received reminders for preventive care (27 percent versus 18 percent).

Women with managed care were more likely to have had a Pap smear in the last three years (74 percent versus 67 percent).

Among women 50 and older, those with managed care were more likely to have received screening (29 percent versus 20 percent) and to have talked with their doctor about hormone-replacement therapy (56 percent versus 50 percent).

One in five women under both types of coverage reported problems in gaining access to health care, like obtaining an expensive prescription or seeing a specialist.

But the survey has not made believers of many physicians who specialize in women’s health. “As a gynecologist, my biggest problem with the plans is that the decisions that have been placed on my ability to make independent decisions on how to treat disorders that might require surgery,” said Dr. Robert Yelverton of Tampa, Fla., who estimated that 80 percent of his patients have managed care.

Dr. Yelverton said that one managed-care company requires a woman who is bleeding to have surgery for such problems. “But when that fails, I ‘misused’ his quotes. At least one might conclude that managed care really hasn’t received credit for,” he said.

Look at the Stakes, to Talk to Friends

There are steps that women can take for choosing a high-quality managed-care plan:

1. Ask your employer's benefits department if its plans make their Health Plan Employer Data and Information Set (Hedis) scores public, and ask to see them. “You should prefer a plan that’s willing to show its Hedis numbers,” said Elizabeth McGlynn of the Rand Corporation in Santa Barbara, Calif.

2. Find out whether a plan is fully accredited by the National Committee for Quality Assurance. Accreditation provides assurance that a plan has a quality-improvement program. Accreditation information for the most plans is available on the committee’s Web site (www.ncqa.org) or by calling (888) 275-7958.

3. If the plan offers a specific program for women’s health, it has its medical director for women’s health, or it has a network of providers that includes a women’s health center. Then try to find out if they’re more than gimmicks.

4. “There are certainly some issues of women’s health that have been picked up by managed-care organizations, such as underwriting purposes, to attract women,” said Dr. Mark Chassin, chairman of the department of health policy at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City. “But it has been difficult for women to get customized and gender-based advice about important treatment issues such as heart disease, for example, where women have higher risk factors than men and need to be managed differently and to consult with specialists who understand those differences.”

5. Talk to people in the plan. “Word of mouth is probably underestimated as a good indicator of quality,” said Donald Berwick, who directs the Institute for Health Care Improvement in Boston.

6. Consider the doctors. “The most important aspect of quality in managed care is the provider you choose rather than the plan,” said David Blumenthal, director of the Institute for Health Policy at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. “It is very difficult for the patient to estimate, or even see, whether the quality of care is being delivered properly before joining a plan.”

For many people, the worst aspect of managed care is having to stop seeing a doctor who is not in the plan. “Before joining a plan, you are able to see some doctors, but not others.”

Health care experts consider the measures assessed in the Commonwealth Fund survey—having a regular doctor or getting regular health care visits and tests—to be good indicators of quality care. But the most crucial measures for evaluating any type of care are the results: diagnosing breast cancer at an early stage, for example. A study published last February in the Journal of the American Medical Association looked at this result for women 65 and older, and found that those with managed care had the edge over traditional care.

The study involved nearly 22,000 women over age 65 whose breast cancers were diagnosed between 1988 and 1993. Researchers found that women enrolled in Medicare H.M.O.’s were generally more likely than fee-for-service patients to have had their breast cancers detected at an earlier stage. And among women who underwent breast-conserving surgery, known as lumpectomy, the H.M.O. enrollees were significantly more likely to receive radiation, the medically recommended accompanying treatment.

So, where does that leave matters? “With three-quarters of all insured women now in some type of managed-care plan, the time has come to shift the focus from whether managed care is better or worse than fee-for-service to making sure that women are receiving quality health care in whatever type of managed-care plan they belong to,” said Dr. Collins, the Commonwealth Fund executive.

She and other health-care experts applaud a current voluntary program in which managed-care plans work with the Committee of Physicians and other patient-satisfaction data submitted by 447 commercial managed-care health plans that collectively cover 60 million Americans.

Some managed-care plans do not participate in the program. Others do but do not allow their scores to be publicly reported. But several large employers, including Xerox and General Motors, strongly encourage managed-care plans under contract with them to make their scores public. And some states, including New York, New Jersey and California, require managed-care plans to disclose this information. Working with the committee, the states issue annual managed-care report cards through pamphlets and on their Web sites. The committee’s Web site has information for New Yorkers.

Regarding mammography screening rates, for example, New York residents can learn the names of the seven health plans—CDHP, CHP/Kaiser, Finger Lakes, Health Care Plan, Healthsource HMO, HMO CNY and Preferred Care—that performed significantly better than the state average during 1996 and 1997, and the five health plans—CIGNA Health Care, MVP, Physicians Health Service, Prudential Health Care Plan and United HealthCare-NYC—that performed significantly worse.

Some physicians believe that these efforts are having a positive effect. One is Dr. Jefrey Hankoff, a family physician in Santa Barbara, Calif., who takes care of a large managed-care population and is the medical director of an independent practice association, or I.P.A., a group of about 30 physicians who collectively negotiate contracts with managed-care plans.

“One thing managed care has brought to the table is that quality is the major focus and not a token effort,” Dr. Hankoff said. “Every time a patient writes a letter of complaint, the group gets a copy of it and reviews it. We’re really attempting to make sure that people are getting the care they’re supposed to be getting. In a managed-care operation, that’s monitored all the time because the plans demand it and the Government demands it of the plans. It’s something that managed care really hasn’t received credit for.”

Mr. FRIST. Unfortunately, before introducing these statements, I apparently misspoke and said, “Let me share with Members what one person told me.” I should have said, “As Dr. Yelverton was quoted in the New York Times as stating,” So, I wish to clarify the RECORD.

Dr. Yelverton has taken offense at my use of his quotes. In fact, he contends that I “misused” his quotes. At this time, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed a letter from Dr. Ralph Hale, with an attached memo from Dr. Yelverton, into the RECORD, so that his views may be clear.

Mr. FRIST. The gist of Dr. Yelverton's reported quotes.

I personally supported then and I support now the amendment sponsored by ACOG to allow OB/GYNs to act as primary care physicians and to allow direct access for women's healthcare and did, in fact, spend a portion of this afternoon e-mailing my senators and the like. I sincerely believe that OB/GYNs as primary care physicians—"primary care physicians" and thus "primary care physicians" and he supports "direct access for women's healthcare." My position is that we should not be confusing the issue and that OB/GYNs are "primary care physicians" and thus have the implied responsibility of serving as overall gatekeepers for insurance plans.

Mr. FRIST. The gist of Dr. Yelverton's complaint is that he was informed that I used his quotes to oppose an amendment which sought to allow OB/GYNs to act as primary care physicians. Dr. Yelverton supports allowing OB/GYNs to serve as primary care physicians and he supports "direct access for women's healthcare." My position is that we should not be confusing the issue and that OB/GYNs as specialists are "primary care physicians" and thus have the implied responsibility of serving as overall gatekeepers for insurance plans.

I believe we should encourage that women have direct access to OB/GYNs for obstetrical and gynecological care without going through a gatekeeper. In that spirit, I used Dr. Yelverton's reported quotes.

I continue to believe that our task is to support that women can, without being unimpeded access to OB/GYNs.

We will do that, without saying that OB/GYNs must be designated as "primary care physicians" who are responsible for treating all aspects of the patient's health needs, including ear infections and the like. I sincerely believe that direct access to OB/GYNs is the issue, not whether we label OB/GYNs as "primary care physicians."

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. D'EWINE. Mr. President, as debated draws to a close on managed care reform, I want to talk about a few of the key provisions that I strongly support in the comprehensive legislation developed by the Republican Health Care Task Force and my colleagues on the Senate Health Committee. All throughout the process of developing responsible managed care reform legislation, I have shared a concern expressed by many of my colleagues: to reform the managed care system without reducing quality, without increasing cost and without adding to the ranks of Americans who cannot afford health insurance. These are important issues for individuals and families.

Just as important to them, and to me, is the impact of managed care on the quality of health care provided to children. That issue, perhaps more than any other, governed how I examined and worked on this very important legislation.

Working with my friend and colleague from Tennessee, Senator Bill Frist, I worked to ensure that the bill approved earlier this year by the Senate Health Committee protected the interests of families with children. The bill approved by the Committee and included in the Task Force bill provides for direct access to pediatricians. For any family, this is common sense. Pediatricians are general practitioners and there is no gatekeeping for children. Why should parents have to take their child to a primary care physician in order to be given permission to have the child see a pediatrician? This "gatekeeping" role is just unnecessary.

That's why Senator Frist and I worked to include language in the Committee-passed bill that lets parents bypass the gatekeeper. Under this bill, parents can take their child straight to the pediatrician. The Task Force bill also includes this language.

The larger debate concerns pediatric specialists. My view on this, based, I might add, on considerable personal experience, is that children are not simply a smaller version of adults. Fortunately, for the most part, children are proportionately healthier than adults. This means that for the small number of children who suffer from illnesses and conditions, they are the exception to the rule. To a parent who loves them, however, this is no consolation. Not only is their child suffering, but treatment can also be extremely expensive.

Children who suffer from cancer, to take one example, should be able to see a pediatric oncologist, not an oncologist who was trained to treat adults. That is why Senator Frist and I worked to include in the Committee-approved bill an amendment that would require the practitioner, facility or center to have, and I quote from our amendment, "adequate expertise (including age-appropriate expertise) through appropriate training and experience." By requiring age-appropriate expertise, we feel that a child will see a pediatric specialist and an elderly patient will see a geriatric specialist. We are ensuring that the most vulnerable people—the youngest and the oldest—within our population are referred to the specialists who are trained to treat their particular age group. We have also clarified this language to ensure “timely” access to such specialty care.

Mr. President, let’s not lose sight of our bottom line goal: to ensure quality health care without compromising access to care. We already have 43 million Americans who are without any health care coverage. Excessive mandates on the other hand will only drive up the cost of providing care, and could price health care out of the range of affordability. Our legislative efforts must not add to the uninsured. Mr. President, employer-provided health insurance is strictly voluntary—employers do not have to offer health insurance to their employees. So, we are walking a fine line between ensuring that our nation’s health care quality remains high, while still keeping such care affordable.

In my home state of Ohio alone, 1.3 million of 11 million Ohioans are uninsured—they have no health care coverage at all. Worse still, in Ohio we have 305,000 children who have no health insurance coverage. With health care costs expected to increase 7 percent due to inflation alone, it is clear that we should not add to this cost increase.

On this score, there is serious cause for concern. In Group plan coverage, a number of studies have found that for every one percent rise in premiums, 300,000 more people become uninsured. The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimated that the Daschle-Kennedy Patients’ Bill of Rights bill would increase health care premiums by 6.1 percent. That means an additional 18 million Americans would lose health insurance if that particular bill becomes law. Based on data provided by the CBO, that bill would add $355 each year to the average worker’s health care premium. If that is not acceptable, I do know that chest pain could at least be a symptom of indigestion, heart burn, or a heart attack. If this legislation is sent to the President, I will vote against it.

The Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act also addresses the situation of Americans who are covered by self-funded group health plans. The Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act contains a number of provisions that are key consumer protections. These provisions will greatly enhance the health plans of the 48 million Americans who are covered by self-funded group health plans governed exclusively by the Employee Retirement and Income Security Act ("ERISA") and will enhance the quality of health care.

First, the Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act has emergency care protection for consumers. Currently, some plans and managed care organizations require prior authorization for emergency department services and/or have denied payment for emergency room services if it turns out the patient’s situation does not meet the plan or organization’s definition of an emergency. As a result, a participant may be liable for the entire emergency room charges if the patient is denied coverage. This bill requires a plan to cover emergency room care, even if such a visit is reasonable. What a tragedy it would be for a person to die because that person refused to go to the emergency room out of fear that coverage would be denied later?

The Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act remedies this situation in a cost-effective manner by requiring self-funded ERISA plans that provide coverage for emergency services to pay for emergency medical screening exams using a “patient layperson standard.” The bill also requires these ERISA plans to provide coverage for any additional emergency care necessary to stabilize an emergency condition after a screening exam. Under the prudent layperson standard, an ERISA plan would be required to cover emergency medical screenings if a person with an average knowledge of health and medicine would expect that the absence of immediate medical attention would result in serious jeopard to the individual’s health. For example, if an individual is experiencing chest pain, though I am not a doctor (my father was), I do know that chest pain could at least be a symptom of indigestion, heart burn, or a heart attack. If this legislation is sent to the President, I will vote against it. Because of these chest pains, the prudent layperson standard would cover emergency screening, even if the heart pain turned out to be a case of indigestion.

Another problem that I continuously hear people complaining about is gatekeeping. Many plans require patients to visit their primary care physicians and obtain a referral before they can visit a specialty doctor. These gatekeeping provisions can, in certain circumstances, drive up the cost of healthcare, and also make it more difficult for patients to access appropriate medical care. Moreover, certain gatekeeping provisions fail to recognize that women need and have unique health care needs. The Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act also amends these provisions by requiring self-funded ERISA plans to provide direct access to routine obstetric and gynecological (“ob/gyn”) care and routine pediatric care without requiring prior authorization.

Third, in addition to improving access to emergency care services, ob/gyns, and pediatricians, the Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act also addresses access to covered specialty care by requiring ERISA plans to provide patients access to covered specialty care within network or, if necessary, through contractual arrangements with specialists outside the network. While this bill does not provide a person with a referral from a patient’s primary care physician in order to obtain some specialty services, the bill does require a plan to provide for an adequate number of visits to the specialist when the plan refuses to provide access.

Fourth, the Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act also addresses the situation of when a patient’s physician under a
The Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act creates appeals procedures for the 124 million Americans covered by both self-insured and fully-insured group health plans. These appeal provisions are essential protections for Americans who are covered by both self-insured and fully-insured group health plans. The appeal process must include the following:

1. External Review: An independent expert must review the denial of coverage. This expert must have appropriate expertise and credentials, must have expertise in the diagnosis or treatment under review, must be of the same specialty as the treating physician when the case or any of the parties involved. This expert's job is to render an independent decision based on valid, relevant, and pertinent evidence. This includes information from the treating physician, the patient's medical records, expert consensus, and peer-reviewed medical literature to assure that standards of care are reviewed in a manner that takes into account the unique needs of the patient.

2. Internal Review: A consumer who is denied coverage must complete an internal appeal within 30 working days from the request for an appeal. An internal review process must also be expedited, meaning the determination must be made within 72 hours, in accordance with the medical exigencies of the case, after a request is received by the plan or issuer. The consumer must be informed of the consumer's right to appeal the decision of the initial decision made under review, must be of the same specialty as the treating physician when the case or any of the parties involved. This expert's job is to render an independent decision based on valid, relevant, and pertinent evidence. This includes information from the treating physician, the patient's medical records, expert consensus, and peer-reviewed medical literature to assure that standards of care are reviewed in a manner that takes into account the unique needs of the patient.

Finally, the Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act expands access to health care by allowing self-employed employers to deduct health insurance expenses from their taxes. Combined, MSAs, FSAs, and the full deductibility of health care costs for the self-employed will increase Americans' flexibility in health care. This bill provides consumers with a number of protections against health plans and increases accessibility to the health care system. Therefore, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this important piece of legislation.

Mr. President, this is just a brief summary that highlights some of the major provisions of the Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act. As I am sure you see Mr. President, this bill is truly a Patients' Bill of Rights. This bill provides consumers with a number of protections against health plans and increases accessibility to the health care system. Therefore, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this important piece of legislation.

On the other hand, because I feel so strongly that we as a Congress must work toward increasing accessibility to the health care system, I feel compelled to speak out against the so-called "Patients' Bill of Rights." This bill, by prescribing more mandates, more regulations, more bureaucracy, and more lawsuits, will certainly raise the costs of health care and close the access door to many Americans.

Health care costs are already high in this country, and many Americans cannot afford health insurance. According to Dan Crippen, director of the Congressional Budget Office, there were approximately 43 million Americans under the age of 65 that lacked health insurance coverage in 1997. As health care costs continue to rise, who do you think is going to pay for the increased costs? Well, I am fairly certain it will not be the insurance companies or the health care providers. Rather, increased costs will be passed on to the consumers through higher premiums and reduced benefits. That means the consumer will have to bear the cost by paying higher premiums for their health plans and receiving less benefits. Higher premiums for consumers... mean even more Americans will be unable to afford health insurance coverage.

Mr. President, I believe the United States Congress should pass a Patients' Bill of Rights that provides consumer protections for all Americans and makes people losing access to the health care system. The "Patients' Bill of Rights" does not achieve these objectives.

The Congressional Budget Office has conducted a cost estimate of the "Patients' Bill of Rights." The original cost estimate of this bill was that it would increase premiums 6.1%. It is not difficult to understand that higher premiums are likely to result in some loss of health insurance coverage. If you increase costs, some people will not be able to afford health insurance. Americans should not have to choose between basic necessities of life like food and shelter and health insurance. Mr. President, given the number of uninsured Americans and the prospect that the health care market will increase premiums by 6.1%, is simply irresponsible.

Increasing the number of Americans that will be uninsured if the "Patients' Bill of Rights" becomes law is difficult. However, the numbers the experts keep telling me are that this bill will result in over 1 million Americans losing their health insurance coverage and an estimated 1 million Americans losing their health insurance. An economic consulting firm estimates that this bill will cause over 34,700 Virginians to lose their health insurance. Let me reiterate this point. The experts have been telling me that due to the 6.1% premium increase in the "Patients' Bill of Rights," over 1 million Americans and approximately 34,000 Virginians are likely to lose their health insurance.

This, Mr. President, I cannot accept.

Mr. President, legislation that will cause so many Americans and so many Virginians to lose their health insurance is not a true Patients' Bill of Rights; therefore, I am unable to support the appropriately titled, "Patients' Bill of Rights." On the other hand, the Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act is a true Patients' Bill of Rights. The Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act increases access to the health care system and provides key consumer protections. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation, and I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this true patient protection piece of legislation.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I commend the leadership, Senator LOTT and Senator NICKLES, and the minority leader, Senator DASCHLE, for coming to an agreement to bring this very important legislation, the Patients' Bill of Rights, to the Senate floor for debate. I know this is a politically charged issue, but I believe that through in context of both sides of the aisle there is a good, strong, bipartisan bill. At the end of the day, we can have legislation that will provide patients with the necessary protections they want, and deserve, without driving up the cost of insurance so high that we add to the number of uninsured.

Many of the provisions in the bills that have been introduced during this Congress are similar to provisions I put forth in my Medicare patient bill of rights bill or S. 701, which was adopted as part of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. The cornerstone of my Medicare legislation was an expedited appeals process with a strong independent external review procedure and user-friendly, comparative consumer information so Medicare enrollees could make informed choices about their health plan options. Although the Medicare program already had an external review process, there were problems with the timeliness of reviews, particularly in urgent situations where a patient's health was in jeopardy. My bill codified the appeals process to ensure that these situations are handled more quickly and subject to a new independent review procedure.

My legislation also addressed another problem: The program did not offer enrollees clear, concise, and detailed information about health plan choices and beneficiary rights in managed care. As more and more plans entered the Medicare market, it became increasingly necessary to provide clear and detailed information to beneficiaries and enrollees about their options and about the protections they have under the Medicare program. S. 701 included new requirements for the program to provide enrollees with comparative and user-friendly information that became the cornerstone for the National Medicare Beneficiary Education program that is in existence today.

In addition to the expedited appeals process and increased consumer information, S. 701 contained other items like prohibiting gag clauses in Medicare managed care contracts, offering a point-of-service option, and assuring access to specialists when medically necessary. Not all of these provisions were included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, but I am proud to say most were and, as a result, Medicare beneficiaries enjoy these rights today.

Senator JEFFORDS' bill reported out of committee last week included additional patient protections, S. 300, also share many of the patient protections I advanced for Medicare for individuals currently insured under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). While there have been some who have criticized the Republican bill for not covering all insured individuals, the reality is most individuals are covered under state consumer protections. However, for the 48 million people who are insured under ERISA, our bill would provide them similar protections to what most individuals enjoy today under their state laws. Furthermore, our bill would extend the two most fundamental and important protections to all employer-sponsored plans—an appeals process with a strong external review mechanism, and detailed, user-friendly consumer information so that individuals can make the health care choices that are right for their needs. Our bill would not duplicate state regulation, thus avoiding unnecessary costs and regulatory burdens for employers. These costs ultimately get passed on in the form of lower wages, reduced health benefits, and fewer jobs.

To argue that the cost of this additional regulatory burden, and it might add this unnecessary cost, is worth it because everyone should have the same federal protections is short-sighted and just plain wrong. Health insurance coverage is a benefit that Americans want and desperately need. It is a benefit that employers voluntarily provide. If we require that all plans, even those already regulated by the state, be subject to any new federal law, it will increase the cost of providing health insurance coverage. There is no dispute here. We have the figures from the Congressional Budget Office. In fact, the CBO provided us with a breakdown of the costs of each of the patient protections. And guess what? The costs go up as we mandate more government regulation. This is not rocket science, this is common sense.

We need to ask ourselves as members of the Senate if we were to jeopardize the health insurance coverage of hard-working Americans for our own political and personal gain. We have guaranteed health insurance, so we don't need to worry about losing our coverage. But what about the voters, the people we are supposedly trying to help with this bill?

Should we pass this bill without regard to the cost or the impact it will have on people's coverage? I believe we are telling our constituents who are content with their health plan that the cost doesn't matter because what matters most is helping people who were harmed by their managed care plan. Should our response be to folks back home that they should be willing to pay more for protections they already have under state law so that the federal government can step in to do what the states are already doing?

We need to ask ourselves as a nation this question: To argue that the cost of this additional regulatory burden is worth it because everyone should have the same federal protections is short-sighted and just plain wrong.
be adding another 5 to 6 percent on top of the 6 percent increase already projected. What good are patient protections when you don't have any health insurance? And the costs of higher insurance premiums are not only measured in dollars; they will have to make choices between a better education for their children; preparing for retirement; starting a business; or simply affording to each out on occasion just to pay their higher premiums to keep their health care coverage.

The survey goes on to cite reasons for these higher than expected premium increases. At the top of the list of reported reasons is new state and federal mandates. Do not be mistaken. The impact of increased regulation is real. And the cost is far greater than some monetary figure or percentage increase can possibly demonstrate. We are talking about peoples' health insurance coverage, and ultimately their health. Research has shown that there is a direct correlation between a person's health and whether that person has insurance.

The Republican bill attempts to target provisions where no state protections exist under ERISA. It provides two fundamental federal protections to all employer-sponsored plans. One of these provisions, which will offer patients the ability to solve disputes with managed care plans, is the appeals process. This provision, in my estimation, would solve many of the problems people experience with their managed care plans. This approach, unlike the Democratic approach, would provide assistance to the patient when they need it the most—at the time when care is needed. What good is it to know you can sue your health plan when your health has already been harmed or worse yet, you are dead? What good is it when most of the money ends up in the hands of trial lawyers?

Our bill would allow for any dispute regarding medical necessity decisions or a treatment determined to be experimental by the plan to be appealed to an external independent review board. This board would be made up of medical experts in the area of dispute. The appeals process would be timely, independent, and binding on the health plan. Patients would get health care when they need it, not a lawsuit after its too late.

The other new Federal protection that is fundamental to consumer choice is the availability of consumer information. The Republican bill would establish new disclosure and detailed plan information requirements for all employer-sponsored plans. This information would be available to people to ensure they understand what their plan covers, how it defines medical necessity, and what will be covered when a dispute arises, and much, much more. This provision will enable patients to make decisions about their health care and will create greater competition among health plans to provide quality care and service.

Throughout this debate we must remember what the purpose of this legislation is. We must not let rhetoric cloud our judgment about what will truly benefit patients and not special interest groups. We must remember this debate is about patients; not trial lawyers; not doctors; and not bureaucrats in Washington. We need to act responsibly to pass a bill that will provide meaningful patient protections to patients. President Bush has shown that coverage of millions of hard-working Americans. Again, I ask the fundamental question we must consider. What good is a patient bill of rights when you don't have insurance?

Republicans and Democrats agree on a number of issues that really matter to our constituents. We should be able to pass a bipartisan bill with those provisions we all support. Both sides may have to compromise. But that is part of what being a legislator is all about. I ask my colleagues to remember on whom this debate should focus. Let us not forget, it is the patients' bill of rights.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I rise to join my colleagues in the important debate on ensuring the health care rights of patients across America.

Our nation has the best health care in the world, yet there is a growing number of changes in how most Americans receive health care. Individuals once accustomed to choosing a doctor and paying for medical treatment are now thrown into managed care systems or HMOs. Too often for the patient, HMO rules, restrictions and concern for profit seem of more consequence than providing quality health care.

The Republican plan, called Patients' Bill of Rights Plus, is a direct response to patient concerns. Under the Republican bill guarantees affordable, quality health care and provides access to the best doctors and specialists available.

The Republican plan will protect the unprotected by establishing a Bill of Rights for patients whose plans are not already regulated by existing consumer protection laws. Under our bill, patients will have the right to talk openly and freely with their doctor about all treatment options; the right to coverage for emergency care; and the right to see the doctor of their choice.

It will make health insurance more affordable and accessible by accelerating full tax deductibility of health premiums for the self employed; and expanding the Medical Savings Account pilot program to all of America. It will empower patients by providing a timely and inexpensive appeals procedure for all patients who are denied coverage by an HMO.

Why not the Republican plan a better alternative?

The Democrat bill, called "The Patients Bill of Rights Act," may have a similar title to the Republican plan, but the two bills represent entirely different approaches to the role of government in health care:

The Democrat bill encourages litigation. Our plan insures patients will get the care they need, not a trial lawyer knocking at their door. It creates a fair and efficient process to resolve disputes with HMOs.

The Democrat plan, will enhance lawsuits, not the delivery of health care. President Bush cannot permit the Democrat plan to be added another 5 to 6 percent on top of the 6 percent increase already projected. What good is to sue when most of the money ends up in the hands of trial lawyers; not doctors; and not bureaucrats in Washington. Why? Because the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) improperly interpreted my language, thereby preventing our doctors from training in rural Alaska and other rural areas across the nation. Senator Collins had introduced legislation to stop HCFA from harming these rural programs. It’s this agency, HCFA, that Democrats now ask to run health care for most of America.

HCFA ignores Alaska’s Medicare access problem. Because access to health care is the over-riding problem for Alaska’s elderly. Fourteen of nineteen primary care physicians in a major hospital in Anchorage will no longer accept Medicare patients. Why? Because doctors in rural areas lose money on Medicare patients in rural areas.

I have stated my concern over and over to the Health Care Financing Administration, but was ignored. As a matter of fact, the Administrator of the agency testified before the Finance Committee on February 26, 1998 that her agency has found “no overall problem with access to care” anywhere in the nation.

Why is HCFA ignoring rural America? I have been working with her agency for the past year to educate them—and have even brought representatives up to Alaska. But the problem persists.

Once again I stress that HCFA is not the agency to run all of America’s health care. HCFA’s approach of a one-size-fits-all solution never seems to consider rural America.

And, lastly, health care access is denied to King Cove, Alaska. This debate is about “patients rights”—about the rights of American citizens to have certain guarantees when they need medical attention. But when I think of King Cove, Alaska, I can’t help but note a certain level of hypocrisy by the party on the other side of the aisle.

It was one of the last votes Congress cast last year. “The King Cove Health and Safety Act of 1996”—here’s the background.

King Cove is located in the westernmost part of Alaska and is accessible only by sea or air. Air traffic is often completely stopped due to a combination of prevailing northerly winds, heavy snows, strong crosswinds and turbulence.

Since 1981, there have been 11 air crash fatalities and countless other air crashes across the state from crossing the King Cove airport. One fatal accident involved a medivac flight headed for Anchorage.

The people of King Cove came to Congress to ask for access to health care—to ask the government to build a small gravel road to a nearby, 24-hour, “all-weather capability” airport in the town of Cold Bay. Permission from Congress was needed because the Department of Interior prevented the gravel road from crossing a mere seven miles of federal property.

I am not talking about the ability for a King Cove resident to get an M.R.I., or the ability to choose their own specialist. I am talking about the most basic of all health care rights—access to the ability simply to get to a hospital.

My bill to allow that access was vigorously opposed by the Democrats. And when I learned of the veto, Why? Because a big “one-size-fits-all” federal law prevented a 7-mile road. Once again those big “one size fits all” laws don’t seem to fit Alaska.

Sadly, the majority of Democrats last year voted to deny the most basic right of access—to Alaska residents. So the Democrats can “talk the talk” all they want about HMOs, and access to emergency rooms, but when it came time to “walk-the-talk” for the people of Alaska, they could not and would not do it.

I ask my colleagues, how can we be on the floor of the Senate debating what happens to a person after he gets to a doctor or hospital when many here were unwilling to provide Alaskans with access to that doctor or hospital? Mr. President, that is what Federal intrusion has done to health care in Alaska. Again I stress that a “one-size-fits-all” package does not work in rural America.

Public health is too important to be sacrificed to such a big-government vision.

I favor patients rights that will strike against government control of the health-care system; I favor a plan that makes coverage affordable and puts patients in control of their medical care; I favor the Republican bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. McCain. Mr. President, over the past four days, we have cast many difficult votes. Often, as you know, several issues are addressed in a single amendment or series of votes. Therefore, in order to ensure that my positions on these matters are fully understood by my constituents, I ask unanimous consent that an explanation of my votes on health care amendments be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Senator McCain’s Votes on Patients’ Bill of Rights

7/15/99: Kerrey Amendment #1253—JSM voted no because it was too broad in scope requiring an unlimited continuation of care from all plans with too many exceptions, including those causing excessive costs for patients. Failed 48-52.

7/15/99: Collins Amendment #1243—JSM voted yes because it made long term health care more affordable while also expanding direct access to obstetric and gynecologist care for women; providing timely access to specialists; and expanding patient access to emergency care. Passed 54-46.

7/15/99: Ashcroft Amendment #1252—JSM voted yes because the amendment tightens up the threshold exemption process, making it more independent of the influence of insurance companies, and because it moves toward requiring insurance companies to pay for the costs of individuals participating in clinical trials. Amendment was adopted 54-46.

7/15/99: Gregg Amendment #1250—JSM voted yes because the amendment eliminates the provisions in the Democrat bill that would allow excessive and unnecessary liti-gation in clinical trials and access to approved drugs and devices; text of amendment was eliminated by adoption of Snowe Amendment #1241. Amendment was defeated 48-52.

7/14/99: Santorum Amendment #1234—JSM voted yes because the amendment establishes requirements for extended coverage and overnight hospital care for mastectomies and related procedures. Amendment was adopted 55-45.

7/14/99: Dodd Amendment #1239—JSM voted no because the amendment would allow individuals to receive non-emergency care in emergency facilities if a non-life threatening medical condition was discovered during the course of treatment for a life-threatening condition. He supported the language in the amendment mandating that all patients have access to facilities, but felt that authorizing post-stabilization care in an emergency facility would open the door for people to receive a litany of unauthorized, costly procedures if they come into an emergency room under the pretense of a life-threatening condition. Conditions discovered during the course of an examination in an emergency facility, should be handled through the normal referral process using non-emergency doctors and facilities. Amendment failed 48-53.

7/13/99: Nickles Amendment #1236—JSM voted yes because the amendment waives the requirements of the underlying legislation if the implementation would result in a permanent increase in patient health care unaffordable for 100,000 Americans. Amendment was adopted 52-48.

7/13/99: Frist Amendment #1237—JSM voted no because the amendment would eliminate the threshold exemptions in the Nickles amendment #1236. He supported the provi-sions of the amendment that required coverage and established minimum hospital stays for patients undergoing mastectomies and related procedures. These provisions would be removed by the Frist Amendment #1237. Amendment was defeated 48-52.

7/13/99: Santorum Amendment #1234—JSM voted yes because the amendment provides for full deductibility of the costs of health care for self-employment and families; restates states’ rights to regulate health plans which are not exempt from state control. Amendment was adopted 53-47.

7/13/99: Graham Amendment #1235—JSM voted no because the amendment would allow individuals to receive non-emergency care in emergency facilities if a non-life threatening medical condition was discovered during the course of treatment for a life-threatening condition. Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, as a parent and grandparent, I know there is nothing as important as taking care of one’s family, especially if a family member is sick. If your daughter gets hurt, you want her healed. If your dad is ill, you want him to get better. It’s your human nature. Our compassion and desire to help our loved ones is limitless. Caring for your family is as natural as breathing. That’s why good medical care is so important to all Americans.

Health care is about security, it’s about comfort. It’s very personal. It’s about your doctor, your hospital, and your health care plan. It should not be about attorneys, paperwork, and the massive federal government.

America is blessed with the best medical care in the world, but the quality of our health care will be jeopardized if we fail to prepare for the challenges of this rapidly developing field.

As Congress takes a hard look at the health care system, we need to take a step back from the partisan bickering so often associated with the political system and instead do what’s best for our families.

As so this debate in Congress ensues, I will support proposals, from either party, that will make health care better.

These are the principles I advocate:
- Making sure that your medical decisions are made by a doctor;
- Access to healthcare that is affordable; and
- Creating opportunities for families that are now uninsured to buy health care coverage.

Washington families from Poulson to Pullman should have access to the best available care when they need it. Congress should implement common sense consumer protections for patients not covered under state laws.

Patients should be able to get to the nearest emergency room without worrying about whether that hospital is a part of his or her insurance plan’s network. They should simply get the care they or their families need.

Women should also have direct access to their own-gyn for their health care needs, and children need to be able to see pediatricians who specialize in children’s health care.

The patient-doctor relationship is unique and very personal. Patients should be able to choose their physician; under the Patients’ Bill of Rights Plus Act, which I support, they can.

Patients should also be confident they are receiving the highest quality health care. It is difficult to keep abreast of the new developments and treatments in the fast-changing world of modern medicine. We have learned more in the last five years about how to improve health care than we learned in the prior 25 years. We need to make sure that hard-working doctors have the tools and the best information they need to provide the best care.

Should patients have recourse if they think their plan has been negligent or unfairly denied them treatment? Absolutely. We need to look at models that work during this debate, and adopt health care reforms that move the standard of patient care forward, not back.

Some in Washington, DC want to complicate the health care equation. Instead of a quick resolution and access to care when patients need it, patients would have to spend years for the courts to resolve the issue. The problem with that philosophy is that lawsuits are after the fact—the damage is already done. We should focus on quality health care and on treating patients, not spending all time in court. After all, you can’t sue your way back to health.

Who benefits if we have more lawsuits? Clearly not the patients. One study shows he could access a timely and affordable health care plan. And the time to pay—if any—takes on average 33 months to be resolved; and medical malpractice claims only received the dollar.

Their plan would allow employers to be sued. But, for many small businesses one lawsuit would put them out of business. In fact 57% of small businesses said they would drop health care coverage for their employees rather than risk a lawsuit that could put them out of business. That is not good for families.

I believe there is a better way. Patients should be able to hold their health plans accountable. New internal and external appeal provisions give all patients in group health plans that ability. If a patient believes his plan wrongly denied coverage for a health care service he can access a timely internal review conducted by the plan. If he still disagrees with the plan’s determination, a patient can ask for an independent review conducted by a doctor who is a specialist in the area of disputed treatment. This external review is binding on the plan and the court is able to award monetary penalties if the plan does not comply.

There are those in Washington, DC that would extend the arm of the federal government into your families’ health insurance—requiring you to pay for benefits you may or may not need. The Congressional Budget Office concludes that the bill offered by the Democrats would cause premiums to rise by 6.1 percent over the $850 per family.

Ultimately, increased costs mean more American families can’t afford insurance. The Lewin Group estimates that for every 1 percent increase in premium, 6 percent of the uninsured population loses their insurance coverage. A 6.1 percent increase would put health care out of reach for 1.8 million more Americans. In Washington state it means as many as 50,000 more Washingtonians may be unable to afford health insurance. That’s unconscionable.

Instead, insurance coverage needs to be more accessible to American families. One way to do that is to allow full deductibility of health insurance costs for those who are self-employed—the same benefit many businesses receive. Employees who pay for their families’ insurance premiums should also be allowed that same tax deduction. Medical Savings Accounts should be made more broadly available—37 percent of the people currently enrolled in the MSA pilot program were previously uninsured.

Our mandate is clear: “first do no harm.” This time-tested creed of the medical profession applies to this debate. The challenge is to provide common sense improvements to the current system but also face the expense of increased costs, more uninsured families, fewer health care choices, and another layer of government bureaucracy between patients and their doctors.

Let me add, Mr. President, that I think the board reductions in the current system but at the expense of increased costs, more uninsured families, fewer health care choices, and another layer of government bureaucracy between patients and their doctors.

That result—no real progress—seems to me the exact result that political Washington, DC is hoping for. Where there was a gleam of bipartisan—example on amendments that would give patients access to clinical trials or end the practice of drive-thru mastectomies—politics reigned.

In the meantime, there is a growing crisis in our rural areas. There is a crisis in our rural areas. As the Administration’s answer to Medicare has been to do business in Eastern Washington. There is now only fee-for-service in Medicare. In Eastern Washington meaning seniors will end up paying more for fewer benefits.

Earlier this week, I attended a hearing at which rural hospital administrators testified about the impact of Medicare changes on access to care for seniors in rural areas. As the Administration develops payment systems, and issues its regulations and guidance for Medicare, I continually hear from the rural communities, particularly those in rural areas, that the payment reductions and increased paperwork burden are simply intolerable. If hospitals and doctors can no longer do business in rural areas it ultimately means that people, particularly seniors and other families living in our rural communities is in jeopardy.

We must work towards more choice, access and quality care for all Americans. For those who may lose health plans, the subject of this current debate, but also for seniors and those Americans living in rural communities.
Congress’ focus should be to create new opportunities for covering the uninsured by enacting provisions to make health insurance more affordable and accessible. We should pass common sense patient protections for those who are not covered by state laws and all patients should be able to hold their health plans accountable.

After all, health care is about security, it’s about peace of mind, it’s about your doctor, and your hospital; but most importantly, it’s about your family.

Mrs. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support of the Patients’ Bill of Rights. This bill will provide needed reform to our managed care system and ensure some basic patient protections for those with health insurance who do not fall under state jurisdiction.

This week the Senate debated an issue that goes to the heart of the personal security of every American...an issue that touches all our lives. Health care in this Nation affects all of us, touches all of our lives. And I am pleased that we are having this opportunity now to be able to ensure that health care delivery in the new century never loses sight of its most important component—the patient.

We need to have this discussion because, to paraphrase the recent car commercial, it’s not your father’s health care system. It isn’t even the system we knew ten or fifteen years ago. Not so long ago, health care was delivered on a fee-for-service basis. Today, an explosion of advances in medicine and technology along with the advent of managed care, HMO-based networks, have changed the face of health care in America. And it is time to take stock.

We need to ensure that medical decisions are dictated by patients and their doctors—not the fine print on an insurance policy. And we must do so in a way that doesn’t step on the toes of sound policies already put in place by individual states and doesn’t substitute endless courtroom litigation for immediate medical treatment.

As more and more people enter into managed care plans, we hear of more and more problems—in some instances, it seems that patients are barely off the operating room table, yet their doctors—even those they chose—refuse to treat them. Such problems arise whether the patients are ready or not. Or patients are denied access to a treatment or the specialist they need—something my state staff hears time and time again from constituents.

I happen to think that medical tests and medical doctors should be driving medical decisions, not actuaries or accountants. In all too many cases, it seems that though health care has become too much about crunching numbers and not enough about healing patients.

Indeed, the whole drive toward managed care has been prompted by an effort to contain and reduce health care costs in this nation—by itself, a worthy goal. And by-and-large, managed care has proven less costly than the traditional fee-for-service system—in fact, last year, the average premiums for traditional fee-for-service plans were almost 20 percent higher than HMO premiums and even higher than premiums for preferred provider organizations.

But the question is, at what price? There is a real feeling among many Americans that, in some far off place, somewhere, there are making decisions that will dictate the quality and level of care they will receive. There’s a real feeling that the average American has little say in what is probably the most deeply personal issue there is—and that the dollar sign is more compelling than any X-ray or MRI.

This bill addresses these concerns in a number of important and effective ways, all designed to put patients first. This recognizes that medical emergencies are just that—emergencies. If you are being rushed to the hospital with a heart attack, that’s hardly the time to have to phone ahead for prior approval—under this bill you’ll know you’re covered.

This bill protects a patient’s right to hear the full range of treatment options from their doctor. It is outrageous that patients are often denied the best possible information just when they need it most, and this legislation would make these so-called “gag clauses” a thing of the past.

This bill would allow parents to bring their children directly to pediatricians, instead of having to go through primary care physicians. How much sense does it make that some managed care plans consider pediatricians to be specialists? The last time I checked, being a child is not a sickness—children deserve the quick and direct access they need. This bill would make these so-called “gag clauses” a thing of the past.

This bill would protect one’s right to see a specialist. If a patient believes that seeing a specialist is the only way to get a sound diagnosis, they should not be denied that option.

And finally, this bill allows patients who are pregnant, terminally ill, or in the hospital to continue to see their current doctor, even if that doctor is no longer participating in the patient’s health care plan. It’s unconscionable that, after seeing a doctor who knows your condition better than anyone else, you could be asked to return to square one—and that would no longer happen under this legislation.

I realize that both parties have identified some of the more pressing problems with managed care, and both have laid out ideas on how to address these problems. And I truly believe that Senators on both sides of the aisle are concerned with the issues they’ve seen and heard from their constituents. The point that must be made here is that it is not so much our goals that differ, but rather the path we take in getting there.

And one of the most glaring differences is the way we approach existing state laws. Not surprisingly, many states have already beaten us to the punch by enacting patient protections, and this bill respects the work they have done by complementing, rather than undercutting, their efforts.

Maine, for example, banned so-called “gag clauses” back in 1995, provided direct access to obstetrians in 1996, instituted the prudent layperson standard for emergency care in 1998. Wouldn’t it make a lot more sense for the federal government to focus on fixing what’s broken, instead of the problems that states like Maine have already fixed? Yet, the Kennedy-Daschle bill asks us to overturn all the laws duly passed by 50 state legislatures and substitute then with a “father knows best” approach. It basically says, “thanks for all your efforts on this issue—now step aside and let the real experts take over.” We think a better idea is to complement, not displace, state decisions and this bill does just that by providing benchmark protections for patients who are not already covered by state regulations.

We also take a different approach when it comes to disputes over care, emphasizing swift access to providers over the slow grind of the legal system. Under this bill, if an individual has a problem with a decision about their health, they can appeal, under an expedited process, to an independent party who is an expert in the condition being reviewed.

Why? Because what patients need first and foremost is medical relief now, not legal relief later. If I were sick today and I didn’t believe I was getting the care or treatment I needed, I would rather see a doctor than a lawyer. The bottom line is getting well, not litigation. This bill would offer mediation ahead of litigation.

Finally, let me just say that I believe no patients bill of rights could be complete without a provision to protect against genetic discrimination.

Every day, scientists are finding links to a whole host of diseases. An estimated 15 million people are affected by over 4,000 currently known genetic disorders. Today, testing is available for about 450 disorders—but testing is unaffordable to many and they are afraid to take advantage of it for fear of insurance discrimination.

No wonder then a reported 8 out of 10 people who undergo genetic testing pay for it out of their own pockets. Others simply forgo testing altogether. And still others refuse to participate in important medical research.

This is a travesty that must be remedied, and it would be remedied by this bill, which includes a provision I authored that provides absolutely fundamental protections against genetic discrimination in health insurance. This language has a long history—I first introduced these protections in the 104th

As many as 30,000 Kentuckians could lose their insurance coverage because of the higher costs imposed by the Kennedy bill.

According to at least one estimate, all of the new regulations and mandates under the Kennedy bill will cost almost $60 billion. Somebody is going to pay those costs. Insurers are going to pass their costs along to the employers. And the employers will have to make a decision on whether to pass those costs along to their employees. And some of them may decide to drop the health care benefits they currently offer to their employees altogether.

So, that's the bottom line. The Kennedy bill of rights will mean that fewer people have health insurance—and those who still have it, will pay a lot more for it.

On the other hand, the GOP plan addresses health care quality without significantly raising costs. It would increase costs less than 1 percent.

That's a mighty big difference for the 14 million Americans who would be priced out of the market by the Kennedy bill, and for the millions of other Americans who would have to pay more out of their pockets for higher premiums.

A new bill of rights doesn't help you much if you lose your insurance coverage because you or your employer can't afford the premiums.

Our bill doesn't drive up costs, and it won't cause more Americans to lose their coverage because it doesn't have all of the new mandates and new regulations that the Kennedy bill does.

In fact, the Republican alternative actually includes provisions to help expand the availability of health insurance coverage and to help reduce the costs of insurance.

Our bill makes health insurance premiums 100 percent deductible immediately, making health insurance more affordable for 125,000 Kentuckians and millions more across the country who are self-employed.

The Republican bill also would lift the cap on the number of medical savings accounts that can be set up. Currently there is a national limit of 750,000. Our bill would allow every American who wants to set up a medical savings account the opportunity to do so.

MSAs might not be the right thing for everyone, but they make sense for a lot of families and they can really cut costs for many of them.

Our bill also improves on the existing "flex accounts" that many employees use to get health insurance coverage through cafeteria plans. Right now, many employees can use flex accounts to help cut medical costs and save money. Our bill would give employees even more flexibility to shift their coverage from one insurer to another and to make sure they can continue to see their own doctor.

Our bill contains these provisions to help reduce the costs of health care, and to expand health insurance coverage. The Kennedy bill includes none of them.

Over 40 million Americans have no health insurance coverage at all. The last thing we should do here in the Senate is pass legislation that is just going to make that number rise.

But that is what will happen if we pass the Kennedy bill. The supporters of this legislation claim that they want to give more choices to patients, that they want to protect Americans from the HMOs and the big insurance companies.

But, instead, their bill is an empty promise that would actually give Americans fewer rights. You can't have patient rights to fight your insurer if you can't even afford to buy insurance in the first place.

Imposing more regulations and more requirements on employers and insurers might have a gut appeal, but in the end it's not going to fix anything. It's only a placebo—a sugar pill—that turns out just to be an empty promise that won't cure this patient.

The next issue I want to address has to do with liability and lawsuits.

Everybody has heard the horror stories and a lot of Americans are becoming more and more worried that they are not going to be able to get the care they need because their insurance company refuses to pay for the treatment their doctor recommends.

When that happens, the question for patients becomes—what do you do if your insurer disagrees with your doctor?

The Kennedy bill's answer to this question is simple—it says sue your HMO or your employer. Sue your insurance company. Go to court and let the lawyers fight it out about your health care.

Under current law, patients can already sue their HMO in Federal court, and many of them are doing this. But, the Kennedy bill goes a step further and sets up a litigation lottery by lifting the federal preemption and making it easier for patients to sue in State courts too.

The bill's supporters make a big deal out of liability and say that lawsuits are the best way to hold HMOs and employers accountable for decisions. And at first, suing your HMO—the big bad insurance company—might sound like a good idea, a sort of rough justice.

But I don't think anyone really believes that getting lawyers involved and going to court is the best way to obtain better medical care.

If your insurance company denies you coverage for a specific problem or a specific treatment, and you need medical care, suing is not a very effective answer.

And I don't see how suing an employer about your health plan is going to help make things better. It's just going to make it more expensive, and give employers an incentive not to offer health care to their employees.

If you do sue under the Kennedy bill, there is no telling how long you are going to be in court, even if you can afford to pay a lawyer to take the case. And going to court to get a judge to rule on medical decisions isn't going to help a patient get help any more faster.

More lawsuits are only going to clog up the courts and increase legal bills, and in the end that is just going to drive up health care cost.

According to the General Accounting Office, it takes 33 months—almost three years—to resolve the average medical malpractice claim.

Some take much longer, and most patients can't wait that long for medical care.

Everyone knows that there are too many lawsuits in America. We hear it all the time. Most of the time in Congress, we are debating changes to the liability rules to cut down on litigation, to keep matters out of the courts.

The Senate bill contains a provision in the Y2K bill to give businesses and high tech firms more incentives to fix problems before they occur.

That's what we should do with health care. It just doesn't make sense to say we are going to improve care by filing more suits in our courts. Making it easier to sue insurance companies or employers is a knee-jerk, feel-good reaction that isn't going to help anybody get medical care any faster.

On the other hand, the Republican bill says that if you are a patient and you think you're not getting a fair shake from your insurer, you can immediately appeal for a speedy internal review of the case. No lawyers, no courtroom, no legal games.

And, after that review, if you think you still aren't being treated fairly, you can demand a quick and timely independent review by outside experts. The Kennedy bill says that if you are a patient and you think you're not getting a fair shake from your insurer, you can immediately appeal for a speedy internal review of the case. No lawyers, no courtroom, no legal games.

And, after that review, if you think you still aren't being treated fairly, you can demand a quick and timely independent review by outside experts. The Kennedy bill says that if you are a patient and you think you're not getting a fair shake from your insurer, you can immediately appeal for a speedy internal review of the case. No lawyers, no courtroom, no legal games.

But instead of encouraging quick resolutions of disputes, the Kennedy bill encourages more lawsuits in State courts. This will only shift scarce resources from the operating room to the courtroom, and that's the last thing we need.

You can't sue yourself healthy.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would like to tell my colleagues about what happened in Kentucky when our State adopted a health care bill that increased regulations, took away patients' freedoms and injected the government further into medical care. It's a living example of what could happen is we passed the Kennedy bill.

A couple years ago our general assembly passed a Clinton-lite health care bill. Back then we increased legal bills of the courts, we decreased the need for more regulations and more government involvement in health care.
The proponents argued that the government had to step in to protect patients from insurers and to hold the line on costs. Well guess what happened in Kentucky? We passed a big government health reform bill. It was focused on mandates on insurers. The legislation was designed to protect patients, and give them more rights by the power of government intervention.

What happened was predictable. The insurers moved out of Kentucky in droves. For a while there were only two insurers who would underwrite individual health plans in our State—Blue Cross/Blue Shield, and State Government. That’s it. Everyone else left us high and dry.

The number of uninsured Kentuckians rose. Costs increased. Medical care became more expensive and harder to get.

Since then, our State legislature has been backtracking and paring back those regulations and mandates. And guess what. Insurance is becoming more available again and prices have stabilized.

That’s the sort of situation we are looking at if the Kennedy plan passes. More government intervention in your personal life, higher costs, and worse health care. It happened in Kentucky, and it can happen in the rest of the country if we pass the Kennedy bill.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to oppose the Kennedy bill. It’s the wrong prescription for America. We know that more regulation and more government aren’t the answer, but we have to keep fighting this battle.

It wasn’t the answer in the Clinton health bill, it wasn’t the answer when we passed health care reform in Kentucky, and it’s not the answer today.

If you want higher medical costs, if you want more uninsured Americans, if you want less competition, fewer choices for individuals, then support the Kennedy bill.

But, Mr. President, that’s not what we really need. We need more affordable, more available, health insurance. We need a reliable, fast, and fair system of reviews to keep insurance companies honest but we don’t need a flood of lawsuits. That is what the Republican bill offers.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, our personal relationship and the health of our loved ones is the most valuable thing we possess. Unfortunately, we often take good health for granted until tragedy strikes and the health or well-being of a family member is jeopardized by disease, accident, or the ills often associated with aging. This is when we fully appreciate the value of good health, as well as the importance of access to quality health care.

When one of us or a loved one becomes ill, the obstacles of daily life become insurmountable in comparison to ensuring the best health care services are available to ensure a full and speedy recovery. Our priority instantly becomes seeking and receiving the best possible care from qualified medical professionals.

Unfortunately, too many Americans feel powerless when faced with a health care crisis in their personal life. Many feel as if important, life-altering decisions are being micro-managed by business people rather than medical professionals, and too many Americans believe they have no access to quality care or cannot receive the necessary medical treatment recommended by their personal physicians.

Many Americans work hard and live on strict budgets so they can afford health insurance coverage for their family. Then, the moment they need health care, they are confronted with obstacles limiting which services are available to them: confronted by frustrating bureaucratic hoops; and confronted by health plans that provide little, if any, opportunity for patients to redress grievances. This happens too often and can be attributed to several factors.

Our health care system is very complicated. It is comprised of thousands of acronyms and codes, and even has acronyms for acronyms. Our overly complex system intimidates and confuses many Americans.

Many of us fail to fully examine the coverage provided by our health plans until we become ill, and then it is difficult to understand the legalese of the documents. Another contributing factor is the depersonalization of health care, which has become focused more on profits than on proper patient care.

I am not embarrassed to admit that I find the complexity of the health system very disconcerting and am often overwhelmed by its intricacies. I can certainly relate to the majority of Americans who are overwhelmed by a system which does not meet their basic needs in a simple, efficient and affordable manner.

Let me stress that I am not here today to bash managed care. I am not here to condemn Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs) and the services they provide millions of Americans.

I applaud the success of managed care in reining in skyrocketing health care costs, eradicating excessive and costly health care expenditures, and significantly reducing unnecessary overuse of health care services. Managed care has played a direct role in reducing health care costs so that health care coverage is affordable for millions of hard-working American families.

However, while I appreciate the important contributions of managed care, we must protect the rights of patients in our Nation’s health care system.

Too many Americans feel trapped in a system which does not put their health care needs first. They believe that HMOs value a paper dollar more than they do a human life.

I know that my colleagues share my view, as do most managed care companies, that we cannot continue to ignore the rights of patients. For far too long, we have allowed the health care reform debate to be determined by special interest groups. Democrats are perceived as advocating certain principles and priorities for the trial lawyers, who are drooling over the prospect of unlimited and excessively costly litigation against insurers. Meanwhile, Republicans are perceived as working to protect the profit margin of the insurance companies and big business. As a result, this critical debate is overshadowed with partisan bickering, and millions of Americans are left with no representation and inadequate health care.

It is time for all of us to put aside partisanship and the influence of special interests to work together for what is needed and wanted by our constituents—safe, quality, affordable health care.

I believe several fundamental health care principles must guide our health care debate.

First, we must put Americans in charge of their own health care. There are too many people who feel overpowered and overwhelmed by the current medical structure. The current medical structure has created a caste system, and many patients believe they have become the serfs. Patients and their doctors should control their health care decisions, not HMO bureaucrats or political bureaucrats in Washington. Physicians utilizing the best medical data must make the medical decisions, not insurance companies or trial lawyers.

We need to put in place a balanced system that allows managed care companies to reduce costs but also reinvigorates the patient-doctor relationship which is essential for receiving optimal care.

On the other hand, patients need to recognize that they cannot rely solely on doctors to always provide the best options. We have a responsibility to learn how our medical plan operates, read about the options available to us and our family before we become sick, and most importantly, become better consumers of health care.

I don’t think many people would enter a salesroom or bank unprepared with the pertinent information for purchasing a new car or home, but too many of us blindly enter into major decisions affecting our health without any research. I know this is not easy, particularly with our very complex health care system and when so many of us barely find the time for sleep between work and family responsibilities.

We must become better advocates for ourselves in this complex medical system.

To that end, the government should help Americans become educated consumers by ensuring pertinent health care information is readily accessible. I have advocated creating a central web site or other service which simplifies research for Americans as they gather data on available health care options.
Second, we must improve access to affordable health care. It is simply disgraceful that 43 million Americans cannot afford health care coverage. This is the largest number of uninsured citizens in over a decade, despite our strong economic and past actions to provide greater access to managed care. We must continue building upon already enacted reforms by expanding medical savings accounts, offering flexible savings accounts, providing full tax deductibility for self-employed health care, and allowing tax deductibility for long-term care expenses.

We must stop wasting our limited resources on pork and wasteful spending projects, so that we have more money to assist Americans who are uninsured and can not afford to put money away in medical savings accounts or will not be able to benefit from a tax credit. We should provide more funding for our nation's community health centers which are already tremendously effective in helping millions of Americans gain access to health care who would otherwise go without. Community health centers have instituted a sliding fee schedule which allows people to contribute as much as they can afford to pay for health care, and receive health benefits. We should strengthen and expand these successful centers throughout our country.

In addition, our tax code impedes a competitive market by prohibiting many Americans from truly being health care consumers. Many people lack purchasing power and are dependent on their employers for health care coverage. Tax benefits should not be limited for health care purchased only on their employers for health care coverage. Tax benefits should be expanded to individuals and families.

Third, Americans must have a choice of doctors to meet their health care needs. Today, too many women cannot go directly to a specialist or oncologist for medical care. Instead, they are forced to waste valuable time seeking a perfunctory referral from a "gatekeeper" doctor before they can go directly to their OB/GYN. The same is true for children. Mothers and fathers should be allowed to take their children directly to a pediatrician. Instead, the current system forces them to go through a gatekeeper for referral. Women and children must be given the opportunity to seek care directly from the high-quality doctors best suited to address their unique health needs.

Additionally, Americans should be free to choose their doctors, including specialists, if they are willing to bear the additional costs which may accompany this freedom. People should be able to enroll in a point-of-service plan with access to a multitude of physicians, rather than be limited to an HMO which restricts freedom of choice in doctors.

Fourth, we must guarantee access to emergency care. If a man or woman in Phoenix, Arizona fears they are having a heart attack, they should not be required to seek approval from their managed care company prior to calling an ambulance and going to an emergency room. Any bill we pass must guarantee care in an emergency room without prior approval from an HMO if the person believes that it is an emergency situation.

Fifth, we must ensure continuity of care. Individuals who are pregnant, terminally ill, or institutionalized should be given special consideration so that their necessary care is not interrupted abruptly if their employer changes health plans.

Sixth, doctors must be able to communicate openly and fully with their patients. Today, some doctors are prevented by HMOs from openly discussing all medical treatments available to a patient. This is unconscionable. HMOs must not be allowed to stop doctors from openly discussing all possible care available, even if the procedures are not covered by the HMO. A doctor should be able to discuss a patient's cancer treatment plan and not an HMO's bottom line.

Seventh, a free and fair grievance process must be available in the event an HMO denies medical care. A mother should have the opportunity to know she is told her child's cancer treatment plan is not necessary and will not be covered by her insurance. We can not support a system that leaves that mother powerless against corporate health care. She must have access to both internal and external appeals processes which are fair and readily available and which use neutral experts who are not selected, paid, or otherwise beholden to the HMO. In life-threatening cases, there must be an expedited process.

Finally, once all options to receive necessary medical care have been exhausted, including an external appeals process, and that care has not been appropriately provided, every American should have the right to seek reasonable relief in the courts. I find it incredible that HMOs and their employees are able to avoid responsibility for negligent or harmful medical care. Americans covered by ERISA health plans should have the right of re-redress in the courts as those who are enrolled in non-ERISA plans if they are unable to receive a fair resolution through an unbiased appeals process. We must ensure that patients receive the benefits that are paid for, and rightly deserve. We must also ensure that unscrupulous health plans not go unpunished when they act negligently, resulting in harm to a patient.

I drafted a compromise on this issue which would be fair to patients and HMOs and would not cause excessive and costly lawsuits. The proposal, which is filed as amendment number 1246, would require patients to go through both the internal and external appeal processes if they were unsatisfied with care or decisions of their HMO. Once the appeal process reached a decision, they could accept the decision, or if they felt they still had not been treated fairly, they could go to the courts. In court, they could receive compensatory damages with a cap of $250,000 on non-economic damages.

I believe this is a fair and reasonable compromise which would allow patients to be compensated, but eliminates the potential for extravagant awards that could drive up the cost of health care. Unfortunately, I was precluded from calling up this amendment and another amendment which would have protected the rights of children born with birth defects (amendment number 1247) because of the stringent controls established by the Leadership for debate on this bill.

It is unfortunate that this health care reform debate has been controlled by special interest groups on both sides and mired in partisan political maneuvering. This has become a debate—not about providing affordable access to health care for all Americans—but a debate about preserving the positions of competing special interests. It has become a debate about the interests of trial lawyers versus the interests of insurance companies—not the interests of patients versus the interests of health care plans. This compromise has been offered on either side to resolve issues like liability, choice, access, and cost. Instead, we are voting on competing proposals at the extremes.

This is not a debate. It is a contest—a contest between parties and special interests. And it is a contest that no one—not Republicans, not Democrats, certainly not the American people—wins, except, of course, the special interests who are only concerned about their financial well-being, rather than the physical or financial well-being of every American. It is a shame that this body is so controlled by special interests that we cannot even put the health of the American people ahead of politics.

I cosponsored the original Republican Patients’ Bill of Rights, S. 326. And despite the concerted efforts of the trial lawyers and the insurance companies and those more interested in partisan politics than the health of the American people, we have succeeded in adopting some much-needed improvements to the original bill. For example, the external appeal process has been expanded to include more independent review of claims by neutral experts who are not beholden to the HMO. A small step has been taken toward requiring HMOs to pay for an individual's participation in a clinical trial; it requires expanded access to specialists and emergency medical care; and it mandates extended hospital care following mastectomies and related surgeries. These improvements are a step in the right direction—toward putting the needs of patients first.

In conclusion, I am reluctantly supporting final passage of this legislation. I am doing this because I believe it is important to move forward and enact legislation to implement...
The Patients' Bill of Rights was not crafted easily and it was not crafted hastily. This legislation is a result of over 2 years of work by the Senate HELP Committee. In March of 1997, I chaired the first of 17 hearings on the topic of improving health care quality. In April of 1998, I chaired a committee field hearing at Fletcher Allen Hospital, in Burlington, VT. Numerous leaders from the Vermont medical profession and Vermont insurance regulators pointed out the State of Vermont already has passed 22 patient protections. These direct coercions to OB/GYNs and a ban on gag rules and a continuity of health care provision. Vermont’s most pressing need, according to these State providers, was to enact protections for those individuals in self-funded plans that the States could not protect.

The Vermont health providers also stressed their strong concern that any Federal health care legislation not increase costs. The Congressional Budget Office estimated that the Kennedy proposal would have raised health insurance premiums by 6.1 percent. A study commissioned by the AFL-CIO concluded that such an increase would cause 1.8 million Americans to lose their health insurance. This would mean approximately 4,000 Vermonters would lose their health insurance. The Vermonter who could still afford health insurance would have to pay an additional $328 a year for family coverage.

During the debates over the last few weeks, we have heard a great deal of bickering, political rhetoric. But we cannot forget that the real issue is to give Americans the protections they want and need, that packaging they can afford, and that we can enact. We must pass this bill.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time remains for both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority, 11 minutes 20 seconds, and 13 minutes 1 second to the Democratic side.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania, also a very strong contributor to the membership of our task force.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I thank Senator NICKLES for his outstanding leadership on this task force. We would not be where we are today, passing this bill, if it had not been very useful and precise way to respond to a very complicated problem. Senator NICKLES shepherded this task force with great skill. He deserves a great amount of the credit for what is being accomplished today.

With respect to the comments that this bill is dead, it is not going anywhere, the President is going to veto it, I would say this: Of all the criticism I heard about the Republican bill, most of it is just does not go far enough. It is not that what we are doing is not right or it is not in the right direction; it just does not do enough.

I do not know about you, but I have watched Congress for a long time. I have seen a lot of things happen in this institution, where sometimes it is good just to do something in the right direction, that we all agree is in the right direction. I do not think anyone is saying what you are doing is absolutely antithetical to good health care, you say, internal/external—no. We need more of that, we need a tougher one, but not to say what we are doing is bad. It just is not enough. I am hopeful people will say doing something that is good should not be the enemy of what some people might like. It just is not enough.

So I am hopeful we can get together, the House has to act, they are going to pass a different bill, and then we can sit down with the President and our colleagues on the other side of the aisle and do something that is good. Let’s do something on which we can agree.

Let’s do something that can move the ball forward and work together so we can go out and say: We, in fact, did protect patients. We did improve the quality of health care. Maybe we didn’t do as much as we would suggest we could—I differ with that—but we did do something positive. We did improve access to health insurance. We did not blow a hole and increase costs dramatically to drive people out from health coverage. That is what we need to do, to move forward and do something good.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Ashcroft.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, we have a great opportunity, which we should, I believe, capitalize on this evening, by voting for this measure which has been the result of hard work by a team and task force of individuals dedicated to improving the health care of Americans and access to health care. I am for it. I totally reject the notion that this is a victory for the status quo. One person can make this a victory for the status quo. Bill Clinton can. He could veto this. I do not believe we should think that he will. I believe we should continue to work and present him with this great opportunity to lift the status of health care of Americans.

One area I was concerned was that people ought to get good treatment from HMOs and that, if they have a disagreement with an HMO, they ought to be able to settle that disagreement in a way that gets them treatment. So an appeals process was established for an internal appeal by the patient and an external appeal.

I sought to improve the bill. It did not include this provision, but I offered an amendment which said, if the external appeal agreed with the patient and said that the patient deserved the treatment and ordered the HMO to do it, and if the HMO would not provide the treatment—we have amended this bill now so the person is eligible to go and get the treatment elsewhere and charge the HMO, and the HMO that may only refused to do it to the patient has to give a $10,000 penalty payment to the patient.

This really gives the patient what the patient needs, health care. The Democratic proposal sends the patient to court. How do you think you would be, as a person, if you called for an ambulance and you found them taking you to the court instead of to the hospital?

We do not want to end up with a dead relative and a good law case. We want to end up with good treatment, and that is what this bill will do. It has a strong set of enforcement provisions to respect the rights of individuals, and if the HMO fails to comply with that enforcement, we send the people to the hospital, not to the courtroom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Who yields time? The Democratic leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I rise this evening with great regret, regret that we have not done what we should have done to protect the children of America who are in a managed care plan. The bill before us will vote upon is a litany of missed opportunities and missed statements with respect to the status of children in managed care. For example, pediatricians. They are classified as specialists, so they cannot be automatically the primary care provider to children. Frankly, most Americans believe that is exactly who they are.

Second, there is no guaranteed access to pediatric specialists. We have language in this Republican proposal that talks about age-appropriate specialists. That is language written by HMO lawyers to ensure that they can magically transform an adult specialist, who might have seen a child at 1 year or 2 years, into an age-appropriate specialist, just as they do today.

We have a situation in which we have not provided for expedited internal and external processes. The process used upon the development of children are different from adults. They have conditions for which an adult could wait months and months and months for adequate care, but in a child they become critical short-comings that will leave the children of America shortchanged.

We can and must do more. We could have done more, and we could have given all the individuals in managed care the right at least to go to consumer assistance centers, ombudsman programs, so they could have their questions resolved, and we pushed that aside.

Frankly, the greatest disappointment I have is that we heard a lot of discussion this evening and the last few days about the cost of this bill. We could give all these protections to children, every item in the Democratic proposal, and cost would be negligible, because one of the good news issues is that children are generally healthy. But for those chronically ill children, it would have made all the difference in the world.

Today is not the day we are helping the children of America in managed care, but I hope we will some day, and that day will come, and it must come.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader will now have the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, for the last 2 years, Democrats have worked tirelessly for this moment. We have been guided by a very simple goal. That goal is to protect the rights of 160 million Americans who have private health insurance. Democrats have tried to answer the question: What should motivate that system, money or medicine? What should be the crux of our health care system? Do we put a money screen on decisions, or do we put a medical one? The answer is simple. We concluded that when it comes to someone's life, someone's health, the answer to that question is very simple.

Democrats have outlined six basic principles. The first is that all 160 million Americans ought to be covered by patient protections. We offered an amendment to ensure that all 160 million Americans would be covered, and our Republican colleagues defeated it.

The second is to ensure we provide access to needed care regardless of circumstances: access to qualified specialists, real access to emergency rooms, access to lifesaving treatments and drugs, access to quality care that has been shown to be unique in America in some cases. We offered amendments to provide these protections, and our Republican colleagues defeated them.

The third principle is simply this: That doctors ought to make medical decisions. Not accountants, not bureaucrats, not people with green eyeshades who make monetary decisions instead of medical ones. Let doctors make those decisions. We offered an amendment, and our Republican colleagues defeated it.

The fourth principle is quite simple to understand, but extremely important to millions of Americans. Let us, above everything else, protect the doctor-patient relationship. Let us ensure that children have the chance to have all medical options with their patients when they are facing critical medical decisions. Let us ensure that we protect doctors from retaliation by managed care companies. And let us ensure that chronically ill patients get to keep their doctors.

Mr. President, that is not too much to ask. When we talk about rights, basic rights in this country, what could be more basic than that? We offered an amendment, and our Republican colleagues defeated it.

The fifth principle is one we also feel strongly about, and that is accountability. I have heard many of our Republican colleagues say: You should probably not have the right to go to court to get your health care; the important thing is getting the care you need.

We agree with that, and we provide a strong, independent appeals process. But all too often, HMOs make decisions that are wrong. And all too often, patients are left with absolutely no recourse. We simply believe that when this happens, when an HMO or an insurance company makes the wrong decision, you ought to have some recourse. That is reasonable. We wish to hold them accountable. You can with a doctor. You can with a hospital. Why not with an insurance company?

Finally, I have never been more proud of our women Senators, and I have never been more convinced that we need more women in the Senate than I am tonight, because they have enlightened us, Mr. President, in our caucus and on the floor. They have sensitized us to women's issues unlike anything we have ever heard before. There isn't a man in the Senate who can tell us what they told us, with the eloquence, with the passion, with the feeling. They told us there are special needs of women that just are not being addressed. If we are going to make this system work better for millions of Americans, we ought to understand that. So we offered an amendment to ensure that women's needs are protected, and our Republican colleagues defeated it.

Tonight, I agree with those who have said we missed a golden opportunity to pass a real Patients' Bill of Rights. We have offered clear choices. The majority leader has opposed us every step of the way. The majority leader said, let's work together, work with us. We have made every effort to work with our colleagues, but the only thing we have gotten back is what I believe the Republican bill truly stands for when it calls itself HMO reform. In my view, HMO stands for "half measures only." That is all we have gotten—half measures. To those who say, isn't this just a little bit better? my answer is no. In all sincerity, I believe we will actually lower the standard if we pass this bill tonight. We have not made progress; we have moved backward.

I am always amused, frankly, that our Republican colleagues turn to taxes anytime they want to fix a problem. Is this the highest standard when we do not pass a tax break for observing the speed limit. Tonight, there is another $13 billion bill that we will be voting on, most of which is a tax break. I support meaningful tax reform, targeted especially towards working families. But when we talk about a Patients' Bill of Rights, are we really talking about the need for a tax break, or a break from the kind of oppression that many people feel with their insurance and managed care companies?

I also regret the fact that we did not have an opportunity to debate the bipartisan bill. I wish we could have had a good debate on the Graham-Chafee bill. I wish we could have at least gotten forward with this legislation. I believe there would have been 45 Democratic votes for that bill tonight. The problem is, as I understand it, there are only three on the Republican side.

Even if we offered a bipartisan bill, cosponsored by two very prominent Members of our Senate tonight, we would only have the same 48 votes we had on almost every single amendment we offered.

Mr. President will veto this bill because he and we know we can do better than that, that we should not lower the standard. We should do far more to ensure that we cover all patients, all 160 million. Ultimately, I believe, as Senator Kennedy alluded to, we will pass a comprehensive Patients' Bill of Rights.

This afternoon I was reminded again of how critical this is to real people. Throughout this debate, what meant most to me is the experience I have had in talking to real people whose lives have been affected by managed care companies, whose lives have been directly, and in some cases, negatively affected by their decisions.
Justin Dart, a full-fledged lifelong Republican was out on the lawn this afternoon. He was there in his wheelchair, surrounded by medical equipment needed to function and maintain his health. He has experienced medical care. He has benefited from it, and, unfortunately, as he related again today, he has been disappointed by it.

In the most passionate and most eloquent way he could say it, with his lips quivering, speaking to all of us, as he urged the Senate to do the right thing tonight, he urged us to give my life back to me, back to the United States.
Ending the need to provide all Americans basic health care rights. Yet listen to the core principle laid out in the Snowe amendment I mentioned earlier. (Curiously, the Snowe amendment, which every Republican senator supported, excluded patients with non-life-threatening conditions to all privately insured women.)

In the Snowe amendment, the majority stated a “core principle” diametrically opposed to the core principle of the Nickles amendment: “In order to provide for uniform treatment of health care providers and beneficiaries among the States, it is necessary to cover health plans operating in 1 State as well as health plans operating among the several States.” That amendment passed Wednesday at 1:23 pm.

Two-and-a-half hours later, the Republican majority reversed itself once again. They voted against a Democratic amendment to expand coverage to all privately insured Americans, regarding exclusion of disease—just not women with breast cancer. The whole idea behind a comprehensive Patients’ Bill of Rights is that it will cover all people and all diseases, not simply those that get the most media coverage.

Some of my colleagues seem to have two contradictory sets of core principles on the same issue on the same day. And, at the end of the day, the result is that, for all but one disease, the majority has chosen to deny more than 100 million Americans any protections at all.

It’s a cynical, and destructive, philosophy. The American people are sure to reject it, for they understand this issue far better than some politicians seem to think. How could they not understand? Every American knows someone who has been denied timely, necessary treatment by an HMO that simply did not consider the fact that he is always there—always there.

I thank my assistant Democratic leader whose presence on the floor has just been phenomenal. I do not know how I could not forget the fact that he is always there—always there.

I thank my caucus. I do not know that I have ever been more proud of the caucuses than I am tonight for their participation for their leadership, for their willingness to roll up their sleeves to do their homework, to come to the floor and debate, as they did so aggressively all week. In one way or another, every member of our caucus has contributed to this debate and to the two-year effort to make it possible. More of them than I could name right now have contributed enormously, often selflessly. Our caucus has never been more unified. We believe in patients’ rights, and we are committed to fight for them.

So, I thank every Democratic senator. I say to each of you, it truly would not have been possible without you.

I thank, as well, the majority leader for allowing this debate, and the assistant Republican leader. This debate happened because they agreed to schedule it. It would not have happened were it not for that agreement, and I am grateful for that.

I thank Senator Frist for his involvement because of his unique experience in life. A special thanks goes to the more than 200 organizations representing doctors, nurses, and other health care providers as well as consumer groups, that have supported our bill. They pulled out all the stops they could, with whatever limited resources they had, to ensure that they were part of this American Democratic system. Again, I cannot name them all. But their shared commitment to a comprehensive, meaningful Patients’ Bill of Rights has been critical to this process. And I say to each of them, don’t be disheartened by today’s loss. As I said before, we will ultimately prevail, and patients will ultimately be protected.

I send a special message to Justin Dart and all the men, women, and children who have shared their stories—often painful stories—with us. This debate could not have been held were it not for the fact that they put their names and faces forward. All they could, with whatever limited resources they had, to ensure that they were part of this American Democratic system. Again, I cannot name them all. But their shared commitment to a comprehensive, meaningful Patients’ Bill of Rights has been critical to this process. And I say to each of them, don’t be disheartened by today’s loss. As I said before, we will ultimately prevail, and patients will ultimately be protected.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. First, I compliment my colleague and friend, Senator DASCHLE—this has been a good debate—as well as Senator Reid and Senator Kennedy. We have had a good debate, good discussion of the issue. We have never had a cross word. We have had some good debate, excited debate.

I want to call on an additional couple members of our task force—first Senator Collins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.
Ms. COLINS. Thank you, Mr. President.

I begin by expressing my appreciation to Senator NICKLES and my other colleagues on the health task force. We have labored hard during the past year and a half, and I am very proud of the legislation that has been achieved.

I also thank our staff, particularly Priscilla Hanley on my staff who has worked night and day during the debate.

We are on the verge of passing landmark legislation that will expand access to health care, that will hold HMOs accountable for providing the care that they have promised, and that will improve the quality of health care in this country.

I am particularly pleased that the final bill contains provisions I offered to provide a tax deduction for the purchase of long-term care insurance, to ensure that women have direct access to OBJGYNs without having to go through their employer, to guarantee that a terminally ill patient is able to keep his or her doctor even if that doctor has left the HMO network, and to expand patient access to a variety of health care providers.

At the heart of this bill is the internal and external appeals process that will provide coverage and protections to everyone in all employer-sponsored health plans. This appeals process will ensure that consumers receive the care they have been promised up front, before harm is done, and without having to hire an expensive lawyer and resort to a lawsuit in order to get the care they need.

That is the heart of this bill. We have worked hard to provide these kinds of protections which will ensure that people do get the treatment they need when they need it—not dammes years later in a courtroom.

I thank the assistant majority leader for this time. I am proud to be a supporter of this important legislation.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The assistant majority leader.

Mr. NICKLES. I thank the Senator from Maine for her outstanding leadership. I also thank the Senator from Missouri who mentioned a few of the changes he made in the appeals process that I hope my colleagues listened to.

He made this a much better bill. I thank my colleague.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute and 20 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I thank all of my colleagues and, frankly, the entire Senate for a very good debate.

I believe we came up with a very good bill. I think we passed a bill that improves health care quality. We passed a bill for anybody in America who has an employer-sponsored plan to have an appeal, an appeal that will be decided by doctors, despite some of the advertisements we have seen, appeals that are complicated, by doctors. That is binding and that is real. So I hope that maybe some of the rhetoric will tone down a bit and we will look at what is in it.

We also didn’t do damage. We didn’t say we are going to turn over health care plans to the Health Care Financing Administration. We are not going to duplicate State regulation. We will not confuse the States and say, no matter what you have done, Wash-ington knows better. We didn’t make those mistakes.

We didn’t astronomically increase health care costs. We didn’t pass a bill that would increase the number of uninsured by a couple million.

I hope the President decides not to play politics and say: We are going to veto that bill; it doesn’t do what I want it to do.

I hope he will work with us to pass a positive bill that will benefit and improve health care quality for all Americans. If he wants to play politics, that is his choice. If he wants to, then we don’t have to have a bill. It is up to him. If he wants to help us pass a good bill, I think we can do so, that would improve health care quality for all Americans.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of our time, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered. The yea and nay votes were ordered.

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 47, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Ð SENATE

Soderstrom and Keith Hennessy; Senator CRAIG, Michael Cannon; Senator ROTH, Kathy Means, Dede Spitznagel, and Bill Sweetnam; Senator SANTORUM, Peter Stein; Senator SESSIONS, Rick Deeborn, and Libby Rolfe. This is an ongoing debate because these staff members worked very hard.

In additional, I wish to recognize Senator ROTH helped us, as well as his staff. Senator GREGG, who led the fight, frankly, against having a propensity for lawsuits, did a fantastic job; Senator HUTCHINSON, and Senator SESSIONS.

This was not an easy effort. It was a challenge. I think it was a good effort, and I think we produced a good bill because we had a lot of Senators who were willing to spend a lot of time trying to improve the quality of health care in America.

I hope the President will not look at the rhetoric that was sometimes on the floor, but will look to the substance of this bill and the evidence we see everyday that it will become the law of the land.

My thanks to Senator JEFFORDS and others who worked so hard to make this happen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I truly believe that tonight is a win-win situation. We have made health coverage significantly better for those people who have such coverage today, but, almost more importantly, we made it more accessible for others, and more affordable for others in accomplishing the many patient protections—the improvement in quality, the appeals, internal and external review.

A lot of people have been involved over the course of the last year. I simply want to add my thanks to the two leaders in this effort, Senator JEFFORDS, chairman of the Health, Education, Labor and Pension Committee, for whose committee this bill passed and was debated. And, through much bipartisan discussion, the amendment process improved a bill that the task force, after about 6 to 8 months of very hard work, developed.

It was under Senator JEFFORDS' leadership that this bill took its final shape so that it finally arrived on the floor, and we were able to debate it.

Senator NICKLES for the last year and a half has chaired a task force, has been the quarterback, the manager of a broad range of people who participated in the study of the issues, true substantive study—not superficial policy reviews but a substantive study of the issues. Senator ROY has oversaw and managed a group of people on that committee who have already been mentioned, including Senators ENZI, GREGG, HAGEL, and Senator COLLINS who literally has been on the floor for the last 4 days almost without leaving, participating in the debate on issue after issue.

Thanks also to Senator SANTORUM, Senator GRAMM of Texas, Senator RINSELER, and our Majority Leader, Senator LOTT, who spoke so eloquently a bit ago summarizing what this bill has been about, what it will accomplish, the confidence that he placed in both the task force and the Health, Education, Labor and Pension Committee.

I especially want to thank several staff members: Stacy Hughes and Meg Hauck, who have shown leadership among all the staff members; Anne Phelps and Sue Ramthun, two people with whom I worked most closely with and who have gathered the information, digested the issues, and spent late nights here.

I had the opportunity to work with Sue Ramthun over the last several years on a health issue after health issue. This will be the last bill that she participates in, in the Senate—at least for a while. I say "for a while" because I am hopeful she will come back to our staff. I recognize her tremendous leadership and her knowledge of what has gone on in this body in the past. It has been immensely helpful to me, coming here just 5 years ago, to be able to work with an individual who understands the institution, understands the issues, and who has been involved in health issues long before I came to this body.

I want to mention Bill Baird, legislative counsel, who over the last 4 days—and also over the past years—has participated so directly in allowing Members to translate these ideas to specific language for the bill we were able to ultimately pass. It is a win-win.

As I said in my closing remarks tonight, the thing I will think about as I reflect on the last 4 days is we made real progress. We don't have all the answers. We don't pretend this bill has all the answers in establishing an appropriate balance between managed care, coordinated care, and that doctor-patient relationship. But we are getting it back into balance because it has been out of balance for a period of time. Our bill does take that into account.

In closing, it has been a wonderful opportunity for me to be able to work, again, on both sides of the aisle as we developed this bill which will significantly improve the quality and access of health care for Americans.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, this is a time of trial and I hope that he will recognize and reflect on the last 4 days we have been on this bill, and reflect on the experience.

Mr. President, I hope the President will not look at the rhetoric that was sometimes on the floor, but will look to the substance of this bill and the evidence we see everyday that it will become the law of the land.

Mr. President, I think it was a good effort, and I think we produced a good bill because we had a lot of Senators who were willing to spend a lot of time trying to improve the quality of health care in America. some changes—I am sure we can accommodate the other side and we can end up with a piece of legislation. Hopefully it will be done this year.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, which had just jurisdiction over this bill, I would like to take a moment to thank all those who have worked so hard to make this bill possible. This legislation has been developed over the course of more than two years, and a great number of people have positively contributed to the process.

This bill represents a tremendous effort by the members of the HELP Committee. I want to thank the members of the Nickles Task Force for their guidance, I wish to thank Senator Nickles himself, and also the majority leader for their dedication to see this legislation through to the end.

The staff to the members of the HELP Committee have contributed greatly to this bill. Rob Washinger with Senator Brownback, Prescilla Hanley with Senator Collins, Libby Rolfe with Senator Sessions, and Kate葫芦 with Senator Hutchinson.

The staff of the subcommittees carried a great deal of weight. This includes Helen Rhee with Senator DeWine, Chris Spear and Raisa Geray with Senator Enzi, Anne Phelps and Sue Ramthun with Senator Frist, and Alan Gilbert with Senator Gregg.

The markup of this legislation lasted over 11 hours and so I must acknowledge the tireless efforts of Denis O’Donovan, Steve Chapman, and Leah Cooper from the full Committee staff. I also thank Bill Baird of the Legislative Counsel Office. He has provided enormous help.

I am grateful for the efforts by the staff of the GOP Health Care Task Force. Michael Cannon with the RPC, Steve Irizarry with Senator Hagel, Mike Stack with Senator Graham, Peter Stein with Senator Santorum and Kathy Means, Bill Sweetnam, and Ded Spritznagel with Senator Roth.

Finally, I would like to thank the assistant majority leader’s staff for their leadership. Stacey Hughes, Meg Hauck, Hazen Marshall, Matt Kirk, Brooke Simmons, Gail Osterberg, and Eric Ueland were invaluable. As well as Sharon Soderstrom and Keith Hennessy from the majority leader’s Office.

On my own staff, I would like to thank Paul Harrington, Sean Donohue, Dirksen Lehman, Kim Monk, and Philo Hall and Marle Power my Staff Director. This certainly could not have happened without my health policy fellows, Rob Valuck, Kathy Micht, and Carol Vannier. I especially want to thank Karen Guice and Pat Stroup, who each provided two years of ground-work on this legislation.

The round-the-clock work, particularly over the past week, of all the staff involved is greatly appreciated.

Mr. President, I could not be more proud of all these people.

Around-the-clock work, particularly over the past week, of all the staff is greatly appreciated. I cannot be more proud of these people. I want to commend them and thank them profusely. I also thank, of course, the people who work in this great body to make sure that we end up doing the right things at the right time.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. EFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OSCE PA DELEGATION TRIP REPORT

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to provide a report to my colleagues on the successful congressional delegate trip last week to St. Petersburg, Russia, to participate in the Eighth Annual Parliamentary Assembly Session of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, known as the OSCE PA. As chairman of the Helsinki Commission, I headed the Senate delegation in coordination with the Commission Chairman, Congressman Chris Smith.

The Parliamentary Assembly

This year’s congressional delegation of 17 members was the largest representation by any country at the proceedings and was welcomed as a demonstration of continued U.S. commitment to security in Europe. Approximately 300 parliamentarians from 52 OSCE participating states took part in this year’s meeting of the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly.

My objectives in St. Petersburg were to advance American interests in a region of vital security and economic importance to the United States; to elevate the issues of crime and corruption among the OSCE countries; to develop new linkages for my home state of Colorado; and to identify concrete ways to help American businesses.

CRIME AND CORRUPTION

The three General Committees focused on a central theme: “Common Security and Democracy in the Twenty-First Century.” I served on the Economic Affairs, Science, Technology and the Environment Committee which took up the issue of corruption and its impact on business and the rule of law. I sponsored two amendments that highlighted the importance of combating corruption and organized crime, offering concrete proposals for the establishment of high-level inter-agency mechanisms to fight corruption in each of the OSCE participating states. My amendments also called for the convening of a ministerial meeting to promote cooperation among these states to combat corruption and organized crime.

My anti-corruption amendment was based on the premise that corruption has a negative impact on foreign investment, on human rights, on democracy building and on the rule of law. Any investor nation should have the right to expect anti-corruption practices in those countries in which they seek to invest.

Significant progress has been made with the ratification of the new OECD Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions. Under the OECD Convention, companies from the leading exporting nations will have to comply with certain ethical standards in their business dealings with foreign public officials. And, last July, the OSCE and the OECD held a joint conference to assess ways to combat corruption and organized crime within the OSCE region. I believe we must build on this initiative, and offered my amendment to urge the convening of a Ministerial meeting with the goal of making specific recommendations to the member states about steps which can be taken to eliminate this primary threat to economic stability and security and major obstacle to U.S. businesses seeking to invest and operate abroad.

My anti-crime amendment was intended to address the negative impact that crime has on our countries and our citizens. Violent crime, international crime, organized crime, and drug trafficking all undermine the rule of law, a healthy business climate and democracy building.

This amendment was based on my personal experiences as one of the only members of the United States Senate with a law enforcement background and on congressional testimony that we are witnessing an increase in the incidence of international crime, and we are seeing a type of crime which our countries have not dealt with before. During the opening Parliamentary Session on July 6, we heard from the Governor of St. Petersburg, Vladimir Yakolev, about how the use of drugs is on the rise in Russia and how more needs to be done to help our youth.

On July 7, I had the opportunity to visit the Russian Police Training Academy at St. Petersburg University and met with General Victor Salnikov, the Chief of the University. I was impressed with the accomplished students and how many senior Russian officials who are graduates of the university, including the Prime Minister, governors, and members of the Duma.

General Salnikov and I discussed the OSCE’s work on crime and drugs, and he urged us to act. The General stressed that this affects all of civilized society and all countries must do everything they can to reduce drug trafficking and crime.
