MOST FAVORED NATION TRADE STATUS FOR PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I apologize for delaying the Chair, and I thank the Chair for its patience.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take to the floor this afternoon to continue our discussion on most favored nation trade status with the People's Republic of China.

As I have said before, the problem that we are faced with, the challenges and the choices that confront us here, are support for our basic cherished values; the right to practice one's religion; the right to assemble and organize and collectively bargain for a decent wage and benefits and health care, and all the things that many of our citizens enjoy; the right to form political organizations so that ideas, such as good wages, decent working conditions, health care, good educational opportunities, can flow from political participation. All of these rights are kind of central to this debate on China, because in China today they do not enjoy what we enjoy here, and that is the ability to do these things.

China is a brutal, authoritarian police state. If the government is disagreed with, if one tries to form a political organization, if an individual tries to form a religious organization, if someone tries to form a trade union, they will end up in jail. And that is where, my colleagues, literally tens of thousands of Chinese dissidents, freedom fighters, people who care about democracy are languishing today in prison, because they dared to try to speak out to better their human condition in these areas.

Why is it so important for us to stand with them and not with the government of China and their partners in this trade deal, the multinational corporations, most of whom are American? Why is it important to stand with these heroes? It is important to stand with them because those values that we cherish, those first principles of our government, the right to be able to express ourselves in the God that we believe in, in the political organization that we want to affiliate with, in the worker organization that we want to band with in order to improve our economic lives, these are central tenets of what democracy is all about.

The State Department's Country Report on Human Rights, in their last report, said that China's poor human rights record deteriorated markedly throughout the year as the government intensified efforts to suppress dissent, particularly organized dissent; the government continued to commit widespread and well-documented human rights abuses in violation of internationally accepted norms.

Permanent Favored Nation Trading Status supporters can claim that the Internet and technology will help unshackle the Chinese people, but the evidence shows the opposite is happening. According to the State Department, and I quote, Authorities have blocked, at various times, politically sensitive Web sites, including those of dissident groups and some major foreign news organizations, such as Voice of America, The Washington Post, The New York Times, and the British Broadcasting system.

Just yesterday, outside these chambers on the lawn of the Capitol, we had approximately 100 dissidents from China who are now in exile, many of whom have spent 3, 4, 5, 10, 13 years in jail. They were here with us, and we formed a line with a linked chain threading us as we marched around the Capitol grounds. And then we had them come and speak to people who were interested in hearing what they had to say, and they all spoke about the need not to reward China with this Most Favored Nation status by taking away an annual attempt to review their human rights record, their dismal record on human rights.

They asked us not to do it, because every time that we continue to have this debate, every time that we raise these issues, the Chinese are placed in a very hard, difficult position, a position they cannot defend, and we make progress each time we have this debate.

Wei Jingsheng, the great dissident and leader at Tiananmen Square and other activities in China, who is here now in exile in the United States, who spent years and years and years in prison, said do not grant permanent trade status to China right now. He said to continue to trade, continue to engage, continue to dialogue, but do not give them most favored trade status permanently; have the annual review. Because he knows how important it is for those who are still in the gulags, still in the prisons, still fighting for justice and freedom and liberty in China today.

So I would say to my colleagues, the news is always not good for workers in China. The government continued to tightly restrict workers' rights, and forced labor in prison facilities remains a very serious problem, according to the State Department, and they give us some examples in the State Department report.

For instance, there is the case of Guo Yunqiao. He led a protest march of 10,000 workers to local government offices following the 1989 massacre. He is currently serving a life term in prison for doing that on charges of hooliganism. Imagine that: Protesting on behalf of 10,000 workers of local government offices following the massacre at Tiananmen Square, and this man is facing a life in prison.

In the case of Guo Qiqing, who was detained in Shayang County on charges of disrupting public order, he has organized a sit-in to demand money owed to the workforce.

Or the case of Hu Shigen, an activist with the Federation Labor Union of China, in prison in Beijing No. 2 prison, and has 12 years remaining on his sentence. He is seriously ill. He has been charged with counterrevolutionary activities.

And the cases go on and on and on.

Despite the considerable leverage that we have, with 40 percent of China's exports coming to the United States, our negotiators did not lift a finger to help on human rights or labor rights or religious freedoms. We can do much better than what we have done.

I would say on the religious front, there is widespread religious persecution in China today against Buddhists, against Christians, against Muslims, against people who want to practice their faith.

If you do, if they indeed do, you cannot belong to the military, you cannot belong as a worker in the government, you cannot belong to the ruling party if you practice your religion in China; and to practice it in an organized way will often get you a long jail prison sentence.

Recently two Catholic bishops and archbishops have spent over 30 years in prison because of their leadership in our church.

Mr. Speaker, the list goes on and on and on and the repression goes on and on and on.

The distinguished gentleman from Northern Virginia (Mr. WOLF), a friend and colleague of ours, was successful, very successful, in getting a commission established. It is called the U.S. Commission on Religious Freedoms. And it was established in order to look specifically at the issue of whether people can practice their faith in China.

Seven of the nine people who were appointed to that commission were appointed by people who share the view that we should have unfettered free trade, most favored nation trade status with the Chinese. So the people on the Commission, for the most part, came
