The House met at 10 a.m.
Chaplain Steven Colwell, Army Reserve Readiness Training Center, Fort McCoy, Wisconsin, offered the following prayer:

Our most gracious Heavenly Father, we thank You for giving us this day, another day of life for us to cherish Your goodness and Your majesty. May we use this day seeking Truth and in so doing return it as our gift to You. O Lord, bless these gathered here with Your wisdom. Guard them and guide them, O Father, and fill them with Your Presence. Bless their families and the staffs that labor by their side in government. May the laws enacted here conform to the Great Law that emanates from Your righteousness. I beseech You, Lord, to hear this prayer, prayed by a simple soldier, offered to You in the Name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker’s approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair’s approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. LAMPSON) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. LAMPSON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

CHAPLAIN STEVEN COLWELL

(Mr. KIND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Speaker for the opportunity to say a few words about our guest chaplain today. I am proud that the inspiring words heard this morning came from one of my constituents, Chaplain Steven Colwell. He serves as staff minister at the Army Reserve Readiness Training Center at Fort McCoy, Wisconsin.

At Fort McCoy, Chaplain Colwell is the primary instructor on ethics and Army values training. In addition, he provides spiritual guidance and counseling to the more than 100,000 soldiers who come to Fort McCoy to train every year. The support that Chaplain Colwell provides to the military personnel and their families is invaluable. Chaplain Colwell has received numerous military honors, including the Army Commendation Medal with two Oak Leaf Clusters, the Kuwait Liberation Medal, and the South West Asia Service Medal with three Bronze Stars.

Chaplain Colwell has provided tremendous service to his community as well as our country. I am fortunate to have him as a constituent and pleased that he could share his inspiring words with us today. I thank Chaplain Colwell for being here today and for his service and dedication to our country.

APPOINTMENT AS INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule II, the Speaker, majority leader, and minority leader jointly appoint Mr. Steven A. McNamara of Sterling, Virginia, to the position of Inspector General for the United States House of Representatives for the 107th Congress, effective January 3, 2001.

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY

(Mr. WELLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, let me ask a question of fairness and that is a pretty fundamental issue of fairness and that is, is it right, is it fair, that under our Tax Code that married working couples pay higher taxes just because they are married? Is it right, is it fair, that two working people, a husband and wife, both in the workforce, pay on average $1,400 more in higher taxes just because they are married, $1,400 more than an identical couple that lives together outside of marriage?

I think we all agree that it is wrong that 26 million married working couples pay on average pay $1,400 more just because they are married. It is called the marriage tax penalty.

I was proud that this House and the Senate last year sent to the President legislation with bipartisan support wiping out the marriage tax penalty for almost everyone who suffers it. Unfortunately, it fell victim to the President’s veto. Well, we have an opportunity this year to eliminate the marriage tax penalty, an opportunity to work together in a bipartisan way and send to our new President, President Bush, who indicates he will sign into
I especially congratulate Jane Torres, Teresa Moran-Menendez, and all of the members of the Florida Breast Cancer Coalition who lobbied and worked tirelessly to make this happen. On behalf of Florida's women, I thank Governor Jeb Bush.

INTERNATIONAL ABDUCTIONS

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today for the first time to address the 107th Congress. Representing southeast Texas has been an honor and a privilege, and I look forward to two more years of service.

My grandson Nicholas joined me at the swearing-in ceremony this year and that was great; but unfortunately, there are many other families with parents who have not been so lucky and do not have the opportunity to share their lives with their children and grandchildren.

During my first year in office, I founded the Congressional Missing and Exploited Children’s Caucus in response to the abduction and murder of a 12-year-old girl in Friendswood, Texas. The devastation felt by her family and the determination of the volunteers who searched for her inspired me to found this caucus, which includes 138 members and provides a loud and unified voice for missing children within Congress.

Mr. Speaker, as we begin the first session of the 107th Congress, I ask my colleagues who are not already members of the caucus to join me and to encourage those who are already members to continue fighting with me for our children and our communities. Let us work together as parents, grandparents, and Members of Congress to keep our children safe.

BREAST AND CERVICAL CANCER TREATMENT ACT

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, last Congress the passage of the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act was a huge victory for women across our Nation. This legislation gives every State the option of providing lifesaving treatment to low-income women who have been diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer through the early detection screening program.

I congratulate the governor of my home State, Florida, Jeb Bush, who recognized the great benefits of this program early on. Governor Bush included almost $13 million in his budget to provide cancer treatment to low- and moderate-income women. I hope that the governors and legislators in every State, including the example of our governor, Jeb Bush, and help give women a fighting chance at beating this treacherous disease.

WHITE HOUSE WAS NOT THE ONLY AMERICAN INSTITUTION THAT WAS TRASHED

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, graffiti on the walls, furniture destroyed, doors glued shut, garbage in refrigerators. Sounds like Animal House, but I am talking about the Clinton White House. Now if that is not enough to wax your windows, former President Clinton has said, and I quote, he wants “a complete and thorough investigation into this crime at the White House.” Bear with me. This is the same President that wanted no investigation into Chinese Communist cash being funneled to the Democrat National Committee, and we let him get away with it. Unbelievable.

Mr. Speaker, the White House was not the only American institution that was trashed. The Clinton administration not only trashed, they shredded our Constitution.

I yield back the garbage at the former Clinton White House.

ENVIRONMENTAL EXTREMISTS DRIVE UP COST OF UTILITIES

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, if people wonder why their utility bills have gone up so much lately, they need look no further than the environmental groups. Environmentalists protest and stop or delay and thus drive up the costs every time a company tries to produce more natural gas, coal, oil or lumber. As a recent column by Thomas Sowell pointed out, these groups have stopped California from building any new power plants for over a decade. Many lower-income and senior citizens are now having to choose between eating or paying their utility bills. Most of the quote, credit for this belongs to environmental extremists. If our leaders do not soon realize how left-wing most environmentalists have become, it will soon wreck our economy.

EVERY CHILD SHOULD HAVE A FIRST-CLASS EDUCATION

(Mr. FERGUSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, as a former teacher, I believe that our most pressing responsibility is to ensure that every child has a first-class education, that no child is left behind, and that all students can share in the pride and promise of educational opportunity. That is why I am so pleased that the bipartisan support education reform is receiving from my colleagues in the House and in the Senate.

It is important that we continue to put our children above politics. I believe that while we call for higher standards, we must also provide schools with both the funding and the flexibility that they need to succeed. Flexibility is a key to success. After all, the needs of schools in Green Brook and Warren, towns in my district in New Jersey, are different from the needs of schools in Green Bay and in Wichita. Targeting resources to local priorities will ensure that dollars reach the programs that need them the most, such as hiring new teachers to reduce class size, expanding charter schools and funding for new school construction.

I commend our President and my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for advocating common sense education reforms that, if enacted, will strengthen our public schools and make sure that no child is left behind. After all, our children are our country’s most precious resource.

PERMITTING USE OF ROTUNDA OF CAPITOL FOR CEREMONY AS PART OF COMMEMORATION OF DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE OF VICTIMS OF HOLOCAUST

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 14) permitting the use of the rotunda of the Capitol for a ceremony as part of the commemoration of the days of remembrance victims of the Holocaust.

H. CON. RES. 14

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the rotunda of the Capitol for a ceremony as part of the commemoration of the days of remembrance victims of the Holocaust. The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the following concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 18, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 18

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on the legislative day of Wednesday, January 31, 2001, it stand adjourned until 2 p.m. on Tuesday, February 6, 2001.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) each will control 20 minutes.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Public Law 96-388, signed October 7 of 1980, and the original bill was introduced by the late Representative Sydney Yates, created the United States Holocaust Memorial Council. The council was charged with providing for appropriate ways for the Nation to commemorate the Days of Remembrance as an annual national civic commemoration of the Holocaust. As a result of this legislation, the first ceremony of remembrance was held in the rotunda in 1979 and has been held there every year since, except periods when the rotunda has been closed for renovations.

House Concurrent Resolution 14 will provide for this year’s annual national ceremony to be held April 18 in the rotunda. That ceremony will be the centerpiece of similar remembrance ceremonies to be held throughout the Nation.

This is an important resolution, Mr. Speaker, in memory of, I think, one of the largest tragedies that the world has ever seen, and I urge that we support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am very pleased and proud to rise in support of this concurrent resolution that would grant the use of the Capitol rotunda for the 2001 Days of Remembrance Ceremony. I certainly want to thank the new chairman, and I want to congratulate him also, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), who has had a distinguished career in the State legislature, chaired the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate in Ohio and has come to the House and made an extraordinary contribution and has just been named as chairman of the House Administration Committee. I congratulate him and look forward to working with him. I want to congratulate the chairman for his hard work in getting this resolution to the floor today in a very timely fashion.

Mr. Speaker, this ceremony has occurred annually in the Capitol rotunda. It is the centerpiece of similar programs for great moments in our land. There is no doubt that the rotunda, the site of so many of our Nation’s historical events, is a fitting and appropriate place for such a program. It is a place of unity, where we gather together as a Nation to celebrate and, yes, sometimes mourn. On April 18, 2001, it will once again be at the forefront of the Nation’s attention as we gather to remember one of the most heinous times in our past, and to pledge anew that it will never, never again happen, and that we have, never again turn our backs on genocide.

The theme of this year’s program is “Remembering the Past for the Sake of the Future.” This should be more than just a theme for a few days; it should be a guiding principle in all of our actions.

Sixty years ago the Nazis began their campaign of genocide against European Jews and others, but not productive parts of the society. When the war finally ended, more than 11 million people, including 6 million Jews, died at the hands of the Nazis. In the years since, we have built memorials and museums so we can better remember, and this is certainly appropriate.

In remembering the past, however, we must always consider the future. This sentiment was perhaps best stated in the 1979 report of the President’s Commission on the Holocaust that said, “A memorial unresponsive to the future would violate the memory of the past.”

The Days of Remembrance program is a living remembrance of the past that should always help guide the future. It forces us to consider what we can do to prevent genocide from ever occurring again. It raises questions we often grapple with in the Congress. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, we grappled with Bosnia. In Sudan? Well, let us also use this opportunity to shine a light into the dark corners of our own Nation. In the past several years, we have seen a proliferation of hate crimes across our land. We must use the power that the people have granted us to pass laws to help ensure that these horrible acts will never go unpunished, or even perhaps more importantly, or as importantly, unrecognized.

As most of my colleagues know, the Days of Remembrance Commemoration was created in the enactment of a Senate amendment clause of the legislation that created the United States Holocaust Memorial Council. I would like to thank all of the members, Mr. Speaker, of the Council for their tremendous work that ensures that this Nation and our people will never forget and will never allow this tragic history to repeat itself.

I would also take a moment, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) has also mentioned him, to remember the late Representative Sid Yates from Illinois. Sid Yates kept the faith. Sid Yates made us all remember. Sid Yates was a giant in this institution, a giant in this country; and we miss him. Sid Yates made us all remember. Sid Yates was a giant in this country, a giant in this institution, and we miss him. This commemoration will certainly be another remembrance of him as well.

Through Sid, though he is no longer with us, his efforts to ensure that current and future generations never forget the Holocaust will reverberate for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), who is a strong
Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GIJY). As the leader of the Free World, the United States must use its power and influence to bring stability to the world and educate people around the globe about the horrors of the Holocaust to ensure that it must never happen again.

In my opinion, the growing number of community-based Holocaust museums around the country are a reflection of our increasing awareness of the lessons of the Holocaust. I am proud to be a founding trustee of the Virginia Holocaust Museum and applaud the efforts of those who join us nationwide in support of this noble cause. Only when every person understands the magnitude of the death, destruction, and utter horrors of the Holocaust can we feel we have done everything to prevent its recurrence.

Therefore, as we remember the horrors of this dark chapter in human history and remain dedicated to increasing awareness of the Holocaust, I am pleased to support House Concurrent Resolution 14, providing for a ceremony in commemoration of the Days of Remembrance for the victims of the Holocaust. Out of this horrific and tragic story of life and death and the loss of so many loved ones in a tragedy in our world history comes an acknowledgment that we should never, never forget.

As my colleagues have indicated, the story of the Holocaust is more than the reciting of the tragedy of six million lives, not faceless human beings, but families, mothers and fathers, children, and grandparents, all of whom lost their lives in the tragedy of extreme and brutal cruelty because they were different. So I believe what we are standing here today and supporting and continuing to remember is that we will be standing in support of what is right, what is open, and what is fair and what is loving, and never forget what has been done from one human race to another.

I would like to say that we should also raise up our prayers for peace in the Middle East and I offer my congratulations for this celebration.
morning that 100,000 people have died in India in an earthquake, and it is off the front page of the New York Times. We pass on to the next event and the next event, and people tend to forget.

Mr. Speaker, and what is important, not only this being the incredible thing, is Congress, but for the American people and the world, to not forget is what happens if people who care are not vigilant. People who know what is going on must speak out. When I think about what will go on over there, I always think of the statement made by Martin Noemuller, who said, "When they came for the Communist, I was not a Communist, so I did not speak up. And when they came for the trade unionists, I was not a trade unionist, and so I did not speak up. And when they came for the socialist, I was not a socialist, and I was not a Jew. And when they came for me, there was nobody to speak up."

I think that the decision by the House Representatives to take the time to make a day of remembrance in the Rotunda is a very small step towards helping us to remember.

We, all of us, know people whose families were affected by it, and when you listen to their stories, one of the things I do on the 4th of July is give a liberty award to the immigrant to our country who has done things for the people of Seattle. About 3 years ago, I gave an award to a woman who came, when all of her family was lost, she was the only one who came to the United States. She opened a successful business, but she spent all of her extra time and money educating people of Seattle about what this is about. And I think that the House is to be commended, the leadership is to be commended, to put this first on the agenda. Because if we ever forget what our democracy is really all about, we are in danger of losing it.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be rising in support.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN).

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have some pictures on the wall in my den, they were left to me by my mother, pictures of people that I never met. They are people in Europe, some of them in Poland, especially who my mother would refer to as her aunt so-and-so or her cousin so-and-so, people that she never saw again when she left Poland as a 6-year-old girl.

People who just disappeared and nobody knew what happened to them, but everybody knew, in reality, what happened to them. The world turned a blind eye. Oh, they had excuses. They did not know. They did not hear about it. When we think about it, Mr. Speaker, people disappearing in the middle of the night, half of towns just disappearing and others do happen, that they can happen, and that there are good people who must and need to speak up, then we could never prevent this from happening again.

Mr. Speaker, I commend all of our colleagues who have spoken here today and all who have expressed their support for this resolution, and I thank the sponsors of the resolution for bringing it before us today.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN) for his very poignant and powerful comments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. ISRAEL).

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, let me thank my colleagues for their support in sponsorship of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, before my election to the House, I served as the President of the Institute on the Holocaust and the Law, and we studied and analyzed how laws were used not to protect people, but as instruments of oppression; how over 400 anti-Jewish laws were promulgated and formulated to discriminate, to segregate, to impoverish and to annihilate; how judges used the most murderous interpretation of law to impose death sentences for petty crimes; how law professors formulated lethal theories to advance a political agenda that discriminated against so many people.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is very fitting that we, as law-makers, be reminded of the unique role of law and the profound difference between law and justice.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON).

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, we should look upon the day of remembrance in the very same way that we look upon Martin Luther King's birthday. We need to remember, because if we forget, we cannot be sure that sacrifices that were made will not have to be made again.

I went to school in segregated schools of the District of Columbia. It was not a happy experience to go away to college that I actually learned that 6 million Jews had been murdered in World War II. I knew all about World War II, why did I not know about this sacrifice? That is what segregation and isolation from one another did to you believe.

Mr. Speaker, I remember the day there in the dormitory when sitting in an integrated group that I first learned, and it stuck me like a bolt of lightning. I could not believe it, well, believe it. Believe that anti-Semitism is still alive. Believe that it exists in all communities and in all races and in this country, and that there are still incidences every year reported in the North and the South and the East and the West.

So as we go to the day of remembrance in this great building, let us understand that we are not only remembering. We remember so that we will not forget for a reason, because these things do not die forever, and they need, each generation, to verify what they can mean. So what we do on the day of remembrance and what we do here in this House is most appropriate, and if we think about our country and the world today, we will understand as well that it is most necessary.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my strong support for H. Con. Res. 14, to authorize the use of the Rotunda of the House of Representatives to take the time to make a day of remembrance in the Rotunda available for a commemoration of this terrified horrific event is something that we do with a great deal of sadness, but with the knowledge of knowing that if we did not take this kind of action to keep reminding the world that, indeed, it can happen, that they can happen, and that there are good people who must and need to speak up, then we could never prevent this from happening again.

Mr. Speaker, I commend all of our colleagues who have spoken here today and all who have expressed their support for this resolution, and I thank the sponsors of the resolution for bringing it before us today.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for yielding me the time.

reminder of the nightmare of the Holocaust and the massacre of 6 million innocent people by a brutal and barbaric regime. It also reminds us that hate persists in today's world, that hate crimes are prosecuted each and every day, and that we must do all in our power to prevent hate crimes from leading to future incidents.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of Concurrent Resolution 14, which would permit the use of the Capitol Rotunda for ceremonies commemorating the Days of Remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust. Holocaust Remembrance Days are specially designated periods of time during which victims of the Holocaust are cherished and remembered. Further, these days serve as reminders to all citizens that the evils of bigotry, hate, and indifference are very real, and continue to pose serious threats. Yet, it is in the remembrance of the Holocaust and the commemoration of those who perished that we overcome these evils and symbolize a voice that speaks for the very essence of humanity.

I can think of no better place than the Rotunda of the United States Capitol to capture the appropriate elements of reverence and dignity necessary for the remembrance of the victims of this tragedy. And it is with such remembrance that I now allow individuals to be educated about the Holocaust so that future generations will know the horrors of violent indifference. The United States Capitol has stood as a symbol for freedom and liberty, a symbol that brilliantly reflects the positive aspects of this country. The Capitol may once again serve as such a symbol, and at this time may reflect the inspiration that has allowed the survivors of the Holocaust to remember and continue to lead the battle against the greatest enemy to the remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust, silence.

Mr. Speaker, indifference is not neutral and is not unspoken. Indifference has a voice in the present and in the past. And as we move sixty years beyond the Holocaust, our obligation is to those who perished to look back and live on and be fulfilled by telling their grim but inspirational story from the hall of our government reserved for the highest tribute, the Capitol Rotunda.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Con. Res. 14, which will allow the use of the Capitol Rotunda for an April 18th ceremony to pay tribute and respect for the victims of the Holocaust. This day will be a demonstration of respect and remembrance for the Jews and their families whose property was stolen, hopes and dreams suffocated, and lives snuffed out in the Nazi death camps and throughout Nazi-ruled Europe.

We also come together to recognize that if we are ever to witness a universal respect for human rights, we must begin by acknowledging the truth: Even today, governments still continue to commit crimes against their own citizens while escaping the consequences of their actions, internally by means of repression and externally for reasons of political expediency.

The events that took place under Nazi rule were real. Real people—women, children, the old, and the infirm—were wiped out. The sheer scope of the slaughter was and still is shocking. And yet when so many react with sentiment or indifference to genocidal horrors occurring today, in Rwanda, Congo, and Bosnia, we effectively give our approval to genocidal abuses of power.

We must all recognize that silence cannot be acceptance when it comes to human rights abuses, but also against violations which are occurring in our world today. We must let the truth about these events be known and continue to speak out against all instances of inhumanity.

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have come to the floor H. Con. Res. 14, legislation that will permit the use of the Capitol rotunda for a ceremony as part of the commemoration of the Days of Remembrance of victims of the Holocaust.

I believe it is vital for the United States to continue to lead the way in the remembrance and prevention of crimes against humanity. And that is the exact purpose served by the legislation before us today, which will enable us to hold a solemn ceremony in the rotunda of the Capitol to remember the millions of victims of the Holocaust.

The important lesson learned by remembering the victims of the Holocaust is that man's in humanity to man, if unchecked, can quickly result in the slaughter of millions of innocent people. Whether we honor the victims of the Holocaust at the U.S. Capitol, or whether we study the tragic story of other genocides, the universal lesson is that America has a national interest in ensuring that the 21st century is not marred by genocide.

Mr. Speaker, over the past several months I have been honored to work with one of my constituents, Ms. Bonnie Glogover, of Edgewater, New Jersey in an effort to increase awareness about the Holocaust. Ms. Glogover, whose father is a survivor of Auschwitz, is working to see that Holocaust Remembrance Day is printed on calendars to educate the public about this important observance. Her unending dedication to this worthwhile cause is a tribute to our sworn duty to never forget, and I am proud to be associated with her in this endeavor.

This year, Holocaust Remembrance Day will be commemorated on April 19, 2001. I urge all my colleagues to inform their constituents of this and to join House and Senate leaders in the Capitol Rotunda this April to remember the innocent victims of the Holocaust.

I am honored to support H. Con. Res. 14 and I urge my colleagues to vote for this worthwhile legislation.

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the sponsors and supporters of this resolution, permitting the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol as part of the commemoration of the Days of Remembrance of Victims of the Holocaust.

Prior to being elected to this House, I served as president of the Institute on the Holocaust and the Law. The institute studies and serves as president of the Institute on the Holocaust and the Law. The Institute studies and analyzes how laws were used in the Holocaust as instruments of oppression, rather than protection. How over 400 anti-Jewish decrees were promulgated and formulated to discriminate, segregate, impoverish and annihilate. How judges used murderous interpretation of legal theory to impose death sentences for petty crimes. How law professors formulated lethal theories to advance a political agenda that affected millions, Jews and gentiles alike.

I believe it is fitting that we, as lawmakers, be reminded of the unique role of the law in the Holocaust; and the profound and vast difference between law and justice.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) expresses its deepest sympathies to the citizens of the state of Gujarat and to all of India for the tragic loss of life and devastating destruction caused by this earthquake and support all bilateral and multilateral efforts to ease the human suffering in India and provide assistance in the reconstruction effort.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues to support H. Con. Res. 15. I urge its adoption by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ACKERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 15.

Mr. Speaker, on the morning of January 26, the devastating earthquake measuring 7.9 on the Richter scale ripped through Gujarat State in northwestern India, leaving in its wake destruction and devastation. The full extent of the damage is as yet unknown, but the numbers of dead are at least in the tens of thousands, the number of injured in the hundreds of thousands, and the number of displaced is far over a half a million.

The estimate of property damage now tops $5 billion, but mere numbers cannot capture the extent of the devastation, nor the horror at the loss of life and loved ones.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my personal condolences to all of those in India for the tragic losses that they have suffered.

I also want to express my condolences to those Indian-Americans whose families or friends have been affected by the earthquake. I know that the Indian-American community has mobilized since the earthquake to provide donations to those organizations that are assisting the relief operations on the ground in India, and the community should be commended for and assisted in its efforts.

The U.S. Agency for International Development has responded with a pledge of $5 million in emergency assistance joining many other nations as the international community comes together to assist in the search and rescue effort.

I am sure that, in this hour of India's deepest need, the United States and the international community will continue to do all that they can to assist India in the rescue and reconstruction effort.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us today expresses the deepest sympathies of the Congress to the people of India and expresses our support as the people of India begin to rebuild their lives. I urge all of our colleagues to support the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE), one of the coauthors of this resolution.

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, first, I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the new chairman of the Committee on International Relations, especially for expediting this important resolution to make certain that it hit the floor today.

I worked on this resolution with the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT), my fellow cochairman of the Congressional Caucus on India; and it goes to the issue of the massive earthquake that with terrifying intensity hit the State of Gujarat in India on January 26. This is the most massive quake that India has faced in 50 years. It left in its wake tens of thousands of dead and injured. It devastated the infrastructure of the region.

The death toll has now been estimated anywhere between 20,000 and, incredibly, 100,000 human beings. These are staggering numbers, though the fatalities alone do not begin to convey the level of suffering that the people of India have endured and will endure for years to come as a result of this quake.

Indeed, the images of death and destruction we have seen on television are sobering. While the quake also impacted Pakistan and Nepal and Bangladesh, it is Gujarat that has been reduced to rubble. Thousands who have been left homeless must now deal with the loss of family members and the loss of their neighbors.

But in this tragedy, we were afforded a look at the strength of the human spirit. Alongside the devastation that occurred were the courage and determination shown by the people of India. Glimmers of that spirit came in the news that a mother and her baby were found among the survivors a full 4 days after the quake struck.

Offers of assistance have come from many countries. Surprisingly, members of the Indo-American community have been quick to deliver their time and aid. Many Indo-Americans have family in Gujarat, though it is India's economic powerhouse of India.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues to support H. Con. Res. 15. I urge its adoption by the House.

Mr. ACKERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 15.

Mr. Speaker, on the morning of January 26, the devastating earthquake measuring 7.9 on the Richter scale ripped through Gujarat State in northwestern India, leaving in its wake destruction and devastation. The estimate of property damage now tops $5 billion, but mere numbers cannot capture the extent of the devastation, nor the horror at the loss of life and loved ones.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my personal condolences to all of those in India for the tragic losses that they have suffered.

The rebuilding of the state of Gujarat is a daunting challenge. Economic damage may top $5 billion. While India enjoys a growing economy, U.S.-India commerce is growing, India is still, though, very much a developing country that can ill afford this damage, especially to Gujarat, which was an economic powerhouse.

But India has a strong partner in the United States. We can lend a hand. Indians and Americans share a strong friendship, one that is so promising because of our common security and economic interest as well as the bond of common values between the world’s oldest and largest democracies.

This quake, by the way, struck on India’s Republic Day. The Prime Minister visited the United States last year. It was truly an amazing year last year. Those ties have become tighter and tighter in large measure because of the strong Indian-American community who has made an amazing impact in our country.

It has been this community that has come together to truly lead the American people’s response to this natural disaster. I was in Seattle for the Republic Day celebration on Sunday, and they had already pledged a million dollars from Washingtong.

India is a trading partner, a strategic partner and certainly an ally in democracy. I truly hope that our token of support is received by India and the people of India with our deepest sympathies.

This resolution, I am sure, will be unanimous on all sides of the aisle. I am happy this House has acted so quickly.

I want to thank Speaker HASTERT and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT) for acting so quickly and especially to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) for waiving their objections so that we can vote on it today.

I would like to close by offering a Sanskrit benediction: “Sarva Mangalam Bha-vantu,” peace to everyone.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), the distinguished chairman emeritus of the Committee on International Relations. Mr. GILMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), our distinguished chairman, for yielding. And I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) for their sponsorship of this important resolution.

I am pleased to rise in strong support of H. Con. Res. 15, a sense of the Congress expressing our sympathy for the victims of the recent tragic earthquake in India and support for our ongoing aid efforts. Our hearts and prayers go out to our friends and families here and abroad who are anguishing and mourning over this enormous tragedy in India.

On January 26, a quake that hit India’s Gujarat state measured 7.9 on the Richter Scale. As of yesterday, there were 6,287 people confirmed dead and 15,481 injured, with estimates putting the total number of fatalities projected to be as high as 100,000. That earthquake left thousands of buildings in ruin, caused widespread fires and devastation and impacted the entire infrastructure of that region.

My office has been in direct contact with Ambassador Celeste, our representative to India; and based on his report, we are confident that our State Department is responding swiftly and appropriately in this crisis.

Two days ago, our Nation’s airlift, a 747 aircraft, loaded with supplies capable of assisting some 8,000 people, landed; and U.S. funds have already been contributed to India’s prime minister’s relief fund.

Secretary of State Colin Powell has been permanently engaged in ensuring that our government does all that it can to help in sending emergency equipment and personnel to help relieve this suffering and then assessing how and where our assets can best be utilized.

I strongly commend India’s defense minister, George Fernandes, for his swift and impressive response to this crisis. He is well known as being a man of the people and his dedicated work of his soldiers is doing God’s work.

It was reported yesterday that Prime Minister Vajpayee, while touring areas hardest hit by the powerful quake, pledged that no expense would be spared to rebuild the affected region as soon as possible. We in our Nation need to do all that we can to assist him in his efforts, and I look forward to hearing from the administration how we can be of further assistance.

I strongly support H. Con. Res. 15 and urge my colleagues to support the resolution.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), the founder of the India Caucus and the former chairman.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I come to the House floor this morning. Last Friday, as we know, one of the most destructive and devastating earthquakes hit India. And the area hit hardest by the quake was Gujarat, an area where a majority of Indian-Americans in my home district of New Jersey come from.

Many of these Indian-Americans today are still waiting to hear whether or not relatives and friends are still alive. I want the millions of Indian-Americans to know that my prayers remain with them. I urge them to find the victims and provide assistance to the wounded continues.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution that we have before us today says two very important things: first, that, as a country and as a Congress, we express our deepest sympathies to all Indians for the tragic losses suffered as a result of last week’s earthquake; and, second, the resolution voices this Congress’ belief that we must substantially increase the amount of disaster assistance being provided by USAID and other relief agencies. This is critical.

As of today, USAID has already sent $5 million in emergency supplies to the area most devastated. This is a good start, but we must do much, much more. That is why I have asked President Bush to immediately double the amount of money being sent to India through USAID. I believe that we will need to do more in the future, but this assistance will make a huge difference in the lives of those who are now suffering.

I just lastly want to thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr.
McDERMOTT) and the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE), the new chairman on the Congressional Caucus on India and Indian-Americans, for introducing this resolution in such a timely manner.

I ask that my colleagues support this resolution so that the nation of India and millions of Indian-Americans here in the United States know that they are not alone in helping the victims of this devastating event.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KOLLENBerg).

Mr. KOLLENBerg. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise this morning to join the bipartisan voices of support to the nation of India during this extremely difficult time.

As was noted last Friday, western India, Gujarat, was struck by a devastating earthquake resulting in the loss of tens of thousands of lives. It has been mentioned that 100,000 might be reached, death and devastation that defies description. Perhaps the injuries will be in the hundreds of thousands, economic damage of $5 billion or more, and perhaps even that is not measurable.

With the destruction of thousands of buildings and the devastation of the region’s infrastructure, India is in great need of support from the international community. And I am glad to hear that USAID has weighed in with an initial response on January 27th of $5 million. There is more to come.

Along with that, the international community, the European Union, the International Red Cross is on board. Things are happening, but it cannot happen fast enough.

So, Mr. Speaker, I offer my condolences to all the families and individuals in India and the United States, and particularly those in my own district in Michigan who lost their loved ones, as well as those who have lost homes and possessions. I urge all Members to join in expressing our deepest sympathy and continued support as the people of India face the enormous task of rebuilding their country.

I urge my colleagues to support the resolution and I commend the authors, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDermott), as cochairs, for bringing this resolution forward.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. Kilpatrick).

(Ms. KILPATRICK asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank our ranking member for bringing the time to come forward, and I thank also the two chairmen, as well as the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDermott) for bringing this to the floor quickly.

As a member of the House Committee on Appropriations, where I serve on the subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs, this small appropriation that we are giving India today hopefully will be a first step in assisting them with the tragedy that they suffered on January 26.

I want to express my sympathy to the victims of the devastating earthquake and let them know that this Congress, USAID, the World Bank and the Asian Bank are working in partnership to make sure that we do what we can to help to rebuild that fabulous country.

It is important that we show our appreciation and support because millions of Indian-Americans, as has already been stated, have lost families in their homeland; over 20,000 and up to 100,000 people losing their lives.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to also express sympathy for their suffering and I hope that as we work through the foreign operations budget we will find more financing and more support for the people of India.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. Morella).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Con. Res. 15. I want to thank the chairman, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for so expeditiously bringing this very important resolution before us. Obviously, I want to thank the Members of Congress who crafted it.

I urge my colleagues to support the resolution in strong support of H. Con. Res. 15. I want to thank the Members of Congress who crafted it, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDermott).

This is so important, and I certainly express my sorrow and my sympathy to the citizens of India and all of us, for the losses that they have experienced caused by the tragic earthquake in India which occurred on January 26.

This earthquake was the most powerful to strike India since August 15, 1950. The Indian Government estimates that as many as 100,000 people are dead, 20,000 are injured. The media has reported that more than 500,000 people are displaced. And although logistical constraints continue to hamper relief efforts, I am happy to see the Agency for International Development’s Disaster Assistance Response Team, Catholic Charities, and dozens of relief agencies have worked with the Indian Government in identifying several critical needs. Hundreds of relief volunteers have offered themselves and equipment to the relief efforts, including earth-moving equipment, concrete cutting and breaking supplies, medical equipment and supplies, mobile field surgical teams, water, sanitation facilities, food, and shelter.

Americans are traditionally very generous to those in need, be it an individual or an entire Nation. And this terrible incident is another example of how we have to come together to attempt to lessen the severe pain that the country of India is currently experiencing.

Although the search for survivors decreases by the day, we must remember the rebuilding period that will take decades. Literally hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children are homeless, widowed, orphaned, and helpless.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent a large number of Indian-Americans in my district and to serve on the Congressional Caucus on India and Indian-Americans. I want to encourage all of my colleagues to join me in recognizing the pain of an entire Nation and the courage of its people while offering long-term support.

Paraphrasing John Donne, who said, “No man or woman is an island; we are all connected to each other. The death of any man or woman diminishes me. The bell tolls for each of us.” Let us respond.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN), along with many Members of the Congressional Caucus on India and Indian-Americans.

Let me first of all acknowledge the great contributions that Indo-Americans have given to this Nation. Celebrating the 51st anniversary of their democracy this weekend in Houston with some 5,000, it was very much emphasized the drawing together of this community to lift up India and their loved ones.

We realize there may be as many as 160,000 dead. And as we have watched every morning on television, we have seen not only the sadness but we have seen the courage, we have seen the ability of those in India to survive. And they want to survive and they want to try to save their family members. I am hoping, and I believe this resolution is of great importance to acknowledge their courage, to acknowledge the devastation and to begin to talk as a country to increase the amount of aid.

Along with the Congressional Caucus on India and Indian-Americans for its request for additional aid, and I wish to acknowledge Condoleezza Rice and the Bush administration in responding to a call I made for an immediate small appropriation. Let us give the Indian people sympathy and love and let us give them support.

in India is sad and real. With at least 20,000 people killed, thousands missing or homeless, and the region’s infrastructure totally devastated, the state of Gujarat and the Indian nation has an overwhelming task of rebuilding.

The earthquake had enormous affect in India’s already damaged economy, and government officials said thousands are injured or missing. The tremble caused high-rise buildings to shake from New Delhi to Mumbai and Kolkata. I have learned that the death toll could go as high as 100,000. Whatever the actual loss, such tragedies are difficult to ever justify morally or in any logical fashion. It is a humanitarian disaster.

The United States can and should play a leading role in the international relief effort on behalf of India, given the growing ties with India and the burgeoning American-Indian Community in America. In fact, India and the United States have much in common as the world’s two largest democracies. Last year, I had an opportunity to accompany President Clinton on his historic visit to India to further strengthen our ties with the people of India. The warm and genuine friendliness of the people of India was unforgettable.

This past weekend I attended a moving event with Indian-Americans from the 18th Congressional District of Texas. The Honorable Rinzin Wangdi, Consul General of India was in town. I had the opportunity to speak with a number of Indian-Americans who spoke about their shock and sadness regarding the earthquake.

Accordingly, I wrote and spoke with the Bush Administration officials, over the weekend, to urge support of the Indian people. When meeting with American-Indians in my community, they urged me to seek assistance for the people of India. While I surely applaud the innovative efforts being taken within India to assist the victims during this traumatic time, urgent assistance is needed for the people of India. We have all learned by now that searchers in India used everything from sniffer dogs and sophisticated rock-cutting tools to screwdrivers and their bare hands to search for survivors. We must hope, of course, that any life that can be saved will be saved.

In bringing hope and expedient relief to the people of India, we must listen to the growing Indian-American population for their guidance and expertise in emerging from this crisis. Indian-Americans, who have organized themselves into large numbers of associations and organizations, are playing an important role in strengthening cooperation in India and the United States. This is a promising sign for relations between our nations because we can pull together in times of need.

As a result, I am thankful that coordinated efforts by agencies such as the American Red Cross and international organizations are beginning to determine the needs of the survivors and those left without basic necessities. Contributions by individuals to such relief agencies can make such a discernable difference in the life of the people of India that have suffered so severely.

Additionally, India will be seeking loans from the international community to rebuild the devastated areas. The Government of India is expected to seek loan from international institutions, such as the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank. The World Bank has thus far offered $300 million, and has pledged to put together a longer-term assistance plan in consultation with the Gujarat state government. We understand that India may seek $1.5 billion in multilateral loans.

Mr. Speaker, we must confront unilateral U.S. sanctions that are in place against India to bring some peace and stability to the affected areas. When unilateral sanctions regime on India that went into effect in 1998, the U.S. government was directed to oppose multilateral loans and credits to India. However, under legislation adopted by Congress, the President of the United States has the authority to waive certain sanctions, including the multilateral sanctions against India.

Accordingly, I wish to join my colleagues and urge the Administration to fully support India’s request for assistance through international financial institutions, and should work within the World Bank and other international organizations to expedite India’s requests. It is the right thing to do and we all know it.

Mr. Speaker, it would be an enormous tragedy in India, it would send a positive signal of American concern and support if the remaining U.S. unilateral sanctions against India were waived to allow for freundlier and more normalized relations between our nations, and to respond to the U.S. government’s request to waive certain sanctions, particularly those loans that would have a direct humanitarian benefit. Clearly, the present tragedy in India is an enormous humanitarian emergency.

Accordingly, I wish to join my colleagues and urge the Administration to fully support India’s request for assistance through international financial institutions, and should work within the World Bank and other international organizations to expedite India’s requests. It is the right thing to do and we all know it.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

(Mr. PAUL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time. I too want to express my deep sympathy and sorrow for those people in India who are suffering. It was truly a devastating natural disaster and certainly the concern of all Americans goes out to all these people.

I do have some concerns about how we respond so often to disasters like this because we believe that we can solve all our problems by just going to the taxpayers. I know that this does not seem like the appropriate time to raise the question, but there was a time in our history when we did not assume that it was a constitutional approach to tax poor people in America to help people in other parts of the world. We have always resorted to charities and volunteer approaches, and I still believe that is proper. I do not think there is evidence to show that aid to governments is necessarily the most efficient manner of helping other people.

There is also the moral question. We talk about what we are giving today, and it is substantial amounts, and we are substantially increasing it. It could be $10 million. It could be $100 million. But nobody talks about could it cost something. Well, there is a cost to it and it might hurt some innocent people in this country; the people we do not know about. Somebody might not be able to build a house or get medical care. There may be somebody who will lose a job. There may be an increase in inflation. But we will never see those victims, so they are not represented. I think that if we were more determined to have the rule (not the dollar), we might be more careful that only in a voluntary manner we would not always place a burden on some innocent people in this country.

It was ironic that today, although there was talk earlier about sending food and supplies to India and actually the ambassador today sadly said he was not interested in any surpluses; he just wanted the dollars to come over there. And there may be a good reason for this, for efficiency sake or whatever. But in a way, I think if we have some surplus in food or something, we should be able to provide that.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to express my sympathy for victims of the recent earthquake in the State of Gujarat, India. At the same time, my concern for American taxpayers who, once again, will see their constitution ignored and their pockets raided by their representatives in Washington—it is, of course, easy to express sympathy with other people’s money.

Accordingly, I wish to join my colleagues in the International Relations committee, this bill comes to the floor and, while laudably expressing deep sympathy for victims of this terrible natural disaster in India, regrettably expresses support for (a) the World Bank; (b) "substantial increasing the amount of U.S. taxpayer-funded, disaster assistance; and (c) future economic assistance to rebuild the state of Gujarat, India.

Setting aside for the moment that nowhere in Article I, Sec. 8 (the enumerated powers clause) of the Federal Constitution can authority be found to take money from U.S. taxpayers for this purpose, additional problems result from passage of this resolution as well as those actions certain to follow as a consequence of the bill’s passage.

The notion of taking the fruits of financially struggling Americans with no constitutional authority only to send it to foreign governments is reprehensible. One of the problems with such aid is that it ultimately ends up in the hands of foreign bureaucrats who merely use it to advance their own foreign government agendas thus making it less likely to get to those most deserving. One need only compare the success of private charities in this country with those government relief efforts to clearly see government’s profound and inherent ineffectiveness.

Secondly, forced “contributions” erode any satisfaction that comes from being a charitable individual. Without the personal choice of giving or not giving to charitable relief efforts, the decision to be charitable and the moral reward of so doing is completely eroded by the forceable government.

Lastly, as a result of such actions as these, participation dwindles worldwide for the most efficient means of dealing with such catastrophes, that is, private disaster insurance.

When disaster costs are socialized, greater catastrophic results are encouraged as more people ignore the costs of living in riskier areas. At the same time, these same actors ignore the cost savings and other benefits of living in safer areas. Governments acting to socialize these costs actually stimulates the eventual death and destruction of more people and their property. (This, of course, is a lesson that the United States should learn to apply domestically, as well.)

While I truly do extend my heartfelt sympathy to those victims of the recent natural disaster in India, my duty remains to protect the U.S. taxpayer and uphold the constitutional limits of our Federal Government. For this reason and each of those detailed above, I must oppose this resolution.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN).

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in support of House Concurrent Resolution 15 expressing sympathy for the victims of the devastating earthquake that struck India on January 26, 2001 and support for aid efforts.

Relative to our population size, the Virgin Islands proportionately has one of the largest Indian communities in the United States. In many communities of the Caribbean, people who trace their ancestry to India contribute an important part of the fabric of those societies. So on behalf of the Virgin Islands' community I wanted to join my colleagues in expressing our sympathy and concern, but more importantly in encouraging our country’s support.

One finds it difficult to imagine how a Nation will cope with a tragedy which estimates total deaths possibly as many as 100,000 people. They can only do so with our and the world’s help.

I want to commend President Bush for his quick response in offering assistance to the people of India. Likewise, I want to commend the Speaker; our minority leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT); and my other colleagues for doing the same with this resolution today, and I urge its support.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman.

As chairman of the subcommittee on science that oversees what we do on earthquakes in the United States, I would like to sort of make two comments. Number one, we are going to do whatever we can in this country to relieve some of the suffering and some of the damage that has been caused by earthquakes in India, so certainly I support this resolution. But I would like to call to all my colleagues' attention, to the attention of the American people, that this is not isolated to some other country; something that might happen someplace else.

We have had serious earthquakes in the United States and will continue to have very serious earthquakes. The Loma Prieta earthquake was an estimated $6 billion worth of property loss in addition to human life. And of course the Northridge in 1994 was an estimated $25 billion worth of property as well as a great deal of damage to our physical health and well-being in California. It is a challenge.

We have passed a bill this past year which is probably the most aggressive effort in giving us a better time frame to determine what we can do in that short time period to reduce the damage to human and physical property.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the vibrant Indo-American community in my district, many of whom have relatives in Gujarat, I rise in strong support of the resolution and thank the distinguished co-chairman of our Caucus on India, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) and the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE), who I was honored to travel with them and the President India last year.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this resolution, which expresses sympathy for the loss of lives and Congress’ commitment to help our ally, India, the world’s largest democracy.

I know that U.S. and other U.S. agencies are working hard to respond to this crisis. It is also important that we all work to get accurate information to our constituents so that they can know, in the earliest time possible, what has happened to their loved ones.

I certainly pledge to do my part and am happy once again to congratulate the authors of this resolution.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. OSE).

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the people of the Third Congressional District to express our deepest sympathies to our nation's friends and their property. (This, of course, is a lesson that we can know, in the earliest time possible, what has happened to their loved ones.

I certainly pledge to do my part and am happy once again to congratulate the authors of this resolution.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS) a member of the committee.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, it is with such sadness that I rise today on behalf of the people of the Third Congressional District to express our deepest sympathies to our nation's friends and their property.

I hope that the Committee on Financial Services will take an extensive look at helping India through the Asian Development Bank. The U.S. contribution to the Asian Development Bank can provide an effective way to help India rebuild its cities and keep its society going.

I applaud the Bush administration's active role and those of all international organizations in supporting the people of India at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this resolution.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS) a member of the committee.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, it is with such sadness that I rise today to speak of the enormous tragedy which has befallen the Indian people. The earthquake that struck Gujarat on January 26 has taken such a toll and the suffering continues.
I recently had the opportunity to travel to India and witnessed firsthand the grandeur of this great nation. I experienced the generosity and warmth of the Indian people and benefited from their friendship.

The Indian people have overcome many challenges to become a great leader in technology and commerce. As the world’s largest democracy, India is a great friend to the United States and an important ally. I trust we all are and I do all we can to help our friends in this, their time of need.

I commend the efforts in my district through a nonprofit agency, Direct Relief International, where shipments of medical supplies are on their way in a coordinated effort. I know that this aid we send cannot end their suffering, but we must reach out a helping hand and our prayers to our friends in India and to Indian Americans here at home.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATHAM). The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) has 2½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN) has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FERGUSON).

(Mr. FERGUSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues know, on January 26 of this year, a tragic and deadly earthquake that stole the lives of thousands. It is with my deepest and heartfelt sympathies that I offer my prayers for all those affected by the earthquakes in western India.

I have spoken with Indian Americans in my district in New Jersey who are experiencing tremendous grief. My thoughts are with them and their family and friends and all of those who have been affected by this unbelievably tragic event.

Now that several days have passed and the critical threshold for time for the rescue of survivors is dwindling, I can only point to the recovery of a 7-year-old child, who was found in the arms of her deceased mother, as a sign of hope that there are still survivors. It is faith that has kept these survivors alive. We must not lose ours.

In the aftermath of these earthquakes, the people of India have shown an enormous display of strength, courage, and determination. We must support the thousands of survivors who have been left in shock and who are in desperate need of medical care, food and shelter.

We must ensure that the United States and international aid is delivered to provide both economic and disaster assistance in order to alleviate the suffering of the people of India in a timely fashion.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ).

(Mr. MENENDEZ asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for the resolution before us, which expresses our deep sorrow and sympathy for the horrifying earthquake that devastated India, the world’s largest democracy, on January 26.

In spite of this enormous natural disaster, the people of India persevere as they try to recover and meet the latest challenge placed before them. Many of my constituents have family, friends and loved ones that live in Gujarat, the hardest-hit region, and my thoughts and prayers are with them.

Our shared democratic values and commitment to the rule of law and basic freedoms demonstrate why it is in America’s interest to assist India, a partner in its full recovery. While the Agency for International Development has already provided several millions of dollars in emergency humanitarian and disaster assistance, I hope President Bush will seek to enhance it.

Even though the earthquake will have a negative impact on India’s growing economy, India should continue with its bold economic liberalization and revitalization efforts. Through those efforts, the United States will remain its largest foreign trading partner and investor.

The Indian-American community, which has played a strong and productive role in strengthening ties between India and the United States, has responded strongly in the midst of their overwhelming grief. The effects of this unfolding tragedy will be felt over time, but it remains necessary to continue with these efforts, and we must begin to consider the long-term steps necessary to help India rebuild itself.

I hope our Government will continue to support the relief efforts of AID, private foundations, foreign aid and international financial institutions to supplement the vigorous efforts of the Indian government as it helps its citizens recover and rebuild. It gives us the sense of universality of our citizens, the citizens of the world. And in moments of need, this is the time which the United States has a tremendous opportunity to help.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from the State of Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), the original conceivers of this resolution before us today.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMLEY), the majority leader, and my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) for their sensitivity in expediting this important resolution to the floor.

I also take this opportunity to commend and thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) and the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE), the co-chairs of the Caucus on India, for their leadership in drafting this important resolution.

I rise today on behalf of the people of the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois to offer support, sympathy and condolences to the people of India in light of what has been called one of the most deadly and most devastating earthquakes ever to strike that country.

On Friday, January 26, India was struck by a devastating earthquake that measured 7.9 on the Richter scale. The earthquake has flattened the second most industrialized city in India, to the condition, to causing massive destruction to the infrastructure, their homes, all of the buildings in Western India. Thousands of India citizens remain traumatized by the continuous strong tremors and aftershocks—some ranging up to 5.6 magnitude on the Richter scale, that continue to hit India.

Hundreds of thousands of persons are plagued with the prospect of no food, no running water for bathing or cooking, no blankets to stay warm and no working telephones to make contact with family.

But even in the midst of this tragedy, there are heartwarming stories that must be told. For example, the enormous outpouring of aid from the world community and especially Pakistan. Other stories include children and babies being pulled out of the rubble after being buried for 3-4 days. The remarkable story of the human heart and how it is able to triumph over tragedy. In Chicago, and other cities relief efforts are underway. There are the remarkable doctors, nurses and other medical personnel volunteering against time to save as many victims as possible. Their dedication to save life regardless of the lack of medical supplies available to them, at times moving from victim to victim without time to sterilize their medical instruments. I praise the medical personnel who are doing everything possible to save their fellow citizens during this tragic time in their country.

It is estimated that the damages caused by the earthquake will be $5.5 billion. India is in need of mobile surgery units, simple medicaments, bandages, splints, and electronic equipment to help search for bodies buried in the rubble. India has already begun to receive aid in forms of search dogs, cranes, generators, and experienced rescuers. The United States...
I wish to express my deepest sympathy to the victims of the devastating earthquake that occurred on the morning of January 26 of this year in the Indian state of Gujarat in western India and the families of the victims both in India and the United States.

As a member of the Caucus on India and as a representative of a sizable population from Gujarat and other parts of India in my home district, I will do everything I can to help my constituents reach out to their families and friends who suffered tremendous losses as a result of this terrible event.

I will be meeting with leaders of the Indian community in my district this Thursday to talk about the relief efforts that are under way thus far.

I wish to commend the gentlemen from California, Illinois, New York, and Washington for their leadership in rapidly responding to the Gujarat earthquake over the last several days.

I also want to extend my thanks to the Bush administration, Secretary Powell, and USAID for their quick response to the situation in India and the release of emergency funding.

As my colleagues have done, I urge the Bush administration to increase the amount of technical and monetary support both for immediate disaster relief as well as for long-term reconstruction of the Gujarat state economy.

I wish to urge the Bush administration to support World Bank funding for earthquake relief.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just want to conclude by thanking the distinguished new chairman of the House Committee on International Relations on what appears to be his first successful handling of a bill in that committee on the floor. He shows a lot of promise.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply saddened by the news of the earthquake in India’s Gujarat state and would like to offer my sincerest condolences to the families of India. In this time of tragedy, the people of India can best be helped if we stand by them and continue to offer our support.

We will do all we can to aid those who are suffering and those who must begin the difficult process of rebuilding.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I stand before the House today with a heavy heart to express my strong support for the citizens of the victims of the Gujarat earthquake in India.

This terrible act of nature destroyed thousands of homes and businesses, crippled roads and bridges, and unleashed raging fires.

But, my colleagues, the most devastating toll of this disaster resulted in the loss of life in India.

Tens of thousands of Indian people were killed as a result of this earthquake, and a myriad of others were critically injured.

Mr. Speaker, I know from my personal involvement with the Indian-American community in my congressional district and from my service on the Caucus on India and Indian-Americans that the people of India and the United States have long enjoyed a hearty and prosperous friendship. I am also very aware of the special sense of community and social responsibility that Indian-Americans possess.

When a tragedy of this magnitude occurs, the Indian people both domestic and abroad, rally this spirit of community and fellowship to help the plight of those suffering from harm.

We too must answer this call to service and community, and reaffirm our support for the people of India in this time of dire need. That is why I became an original cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 15, which expresses Congress’ sympathy to the citizens of Gujarat, India, for the devastating losses suffered as a result of last week’s deadly earthquake. This resolution urges economic and disaster assistance to help the victims of this disaster rebuild their lives. As an original cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 15, and a longtime friend of India, I urge all my colleagues to join me in voting for this measure.

This tragedy has cost the lives of tens of thousands of India, injured more than 100,000, and displaced more than a half million men, women, and children. Fires still burn throughout the devastated region. The damage to the region is expected to exceed $5.5 billion. In the face of such a catastrophe, it is imperative that the global community actively respond. Already, nations around the globe, and countless non-governmental organizations, have offered assistance to India. We in the United States can do no less. I commend President Bush for quickly offering assistance to India, and urge my colleagues to do still more.

I offer my condolences to the people of India, and to the families of the Gujrat earthquake and their families. I thank my colleagues, Mr. McDermott and Mr. Royce, for offering this resolution, and urge all my colleagues to support it.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 15, which expresses the sympathy and support of the American people and the U.S. Congress to the victims of the devastating earthquake in western India. On Friday, January 26, the Indian State of Gujarat was struck by a massive quake which struck the subcontinent from Pakistan to Nepal and Bangladesh. For Gujrat, the calamity was overwhelming—thousands have lost their lives and countless others have been rendered homeless and desolate.

The Government of India has been coping heroically in the face of such widespread destruction. The Indian Armed Forces have been the backbone of this response, joined by thousands of ordinary people who have put aside their own personal loss to help save lives and provide assistance to the victims. The aftershocks of the quake can be felt around the world and in our own country as thousands of Indian-Americans face the loss of loved ones.

I want to commend the Bush administration and the U.S. Agency for International Development for immediately responding to the emergency by providing $5 million in humanitarian assistance and dispatching a plane load of supplies and relief experts to the region. I also want to commend the American people, men, women, and children. Fires still burn throughout the world around the United States should respond to those people in need through support of international efforts. We should make it the cornerstone of our foreign policy to help those who suffer from not only natural disasters, but also those who suffer under inhumane sanctions, disease, and war.

On behalf of the many Indian-Americans and constituents in my district, I join with my colleagues in expressing our deepest sympathies with the people who have lost family members and homes, and especially the victims of the disaster. As we have seen time and again, during the recent earthquake in El Salvador and other foreign disasters, the generosity and caring of the American people knows no boundaries.

The world community has also recognized the enormity of this disaster and aid has been flooding in from all corners. But I am afraid that even this generous response will be inadequate in the face of such overwhelming destruction.

This resolution pledges the support of the U.S. Congress to provide additional assistance to the Indian Government and the people of Gujarat as they try to rebuild their lives and their country.

In light of the very special relationship between the United States and India, I think it is important that we send this message of solidarity and hope to the people of India.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise in support of this resolution expressing sympathy for the victims of the January 26, 2001, earthquake in India. The earthquake and the subsequent aftershocks have killed tens of thousands of people.

On the heels of a large earthquake and mudslides in El Salvador, the earthquake in India has again challenged the international community to respond to people in need. And again we have responded with overwhelming support. Countries from the United States to Great Britain to Israel to countries around the world responded with humanitarian aid.

Most heartening is the aid provided by Pakistan. Despite the ongoing conflict over the disputed territory along the Indian-Pakistani border, Pakistan has reached out to its neighbor to help in a time of need, just as India has during natural disasters that have devastated Pakistan. It is my hope that through this tragedy these two enemies can put aside their differences to create a lasting peace.

I applaud the pledge of support by USAID, and hope that this Congress will provide further resources to help the people of India recover from this disaster. This resolution also commits the Congress to providing additional funding to disaster assistance. It is my hope that when it comes time to appropriate this money, this body will consider disaster assistance a higher priority than a tax cut or an aircraft carrier or a national missile defense system. Wherever and whenever there are people suffering around the world the United States should respond to those people in need through support of international efforts. We should make it the cornerstone of our foreign policy to help those who suffer from not only natural disasters, but also those who suffer under inhumane sanctions, disease, and war.

On behalf of the many Indian-Americans and constituents in my district, I join with my colleagues in expressing our deepest sympathies with the people who have lost family members and homes, and especially the victims of the disaster. I am confident that with the outpouring of international aid and support coupled with the enduring resilience of the Indian people, that they will be able to rebuild and continue to move forward. Also, we thank all those individuals, organizations, and countries who responded to disasters throughout the world.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, as the devastating results of the earthquake in Gujrat, India continue to unfold before the world’s eyes, I believe I speak for all citizens of the United States when I say sorrow fills every heart and soul.

When tragedy of this magnitude strikes, its impact is not isolated by physical boundaries. The pain is felt by the entire world. Let us, as individuals, remember that while we have all experienced loss in our own lives at one time or another, many Indian families lost everything they had in one devastating moment. Therefore, let us, as members of local communities, reach out to our Indian friends, neighbors, and do all that we can to ease their pain and suffering. Let us, as a country, use the resources we’ve been blessed with to help the Indian government cope with this widespread destruction and loss of life.

Personally, I send my deepest sympathy to those families affected by this cataclysmic disaster. I, along with my family and my staff, also extend our hearts and hands to the Indian people. I, along with my family and my staff, along with our friends and families, will pray for strength for the Indian people. I, along with my family and my staff, will pray for strength for the Indian government.

Mr. BERGNER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today in support of H. Con. Res. 15, which expresses sympathy for the victims of the devastating earthquake that struck India on January 26, 2001, and provides support for ongoing aid efforts.

This Member would like to thank the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE) for introducing this sense of the Congress resolution and for his efforts in bringing this measure to the House floor today.

As is well known, on the morning of January 26, 2001, a deadly earthquake shook the state of Gujarat in western India, which injured and killed untold thousands of people and has left the building infrastructure in ruin.

India has appealed to the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, and the international community for the economic assistance needed to meet the relief needs facing India. It is important to note that the Asian Development Bank promotes development in the Asia-Pacific region through project investment lending, policy reform lending and advice, and technical assistance.

As the chairman of the Financial Services Subcommittee on International Monetary Policy and Trade, which has jurisdiction over the World Bank and the regional development banks such as the Asian Development Bank, this Member wants to convey his strong support for these aid efforts for India.

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LATHAM). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 15. The question was taken. The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, on this important occasion, I rise to add my voice to the statement by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 15. The question was taken. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair’s prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

MAKING CALIFORNIA WHOLE AGAIN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about my City of San Diego in the State of California and the incredible energy crisis that we are going through. Yes, we are still experiencing it. We have not yet solved it. I have heard comments from Members of this body and the other body, comments from the White House, which seem to indicate an unwillingness to take action to work with California through this crisis.

I say to my colleagues in the Senate and I say to the administration, we are all in this together. If California fails, the rest of the Nation cannot be far behind.

We are the largest State in the union. We have experienced rolling blackouts, utilities on the verge of bankruptcy. If my colleagues do not think this has had an impact on our national economy, listen to Alan Greenspan, as he testified to the Senate just last week. He said that California’s crisis is not isolated. It is not an aberration, and it is a problem that the whole Nation must address and must address quickly.

We should pay heed to Mr. Greenspan. And I say to the President, I think the President is going in the wrong direction on this issue. A hands-off approach on the Federal Government, as the President has suggested, is not going to solve this problem.

Yes, we are increasing our generating capacity. Yes, we are rethinking and retooling our efforts to conserve, but an important piece of this problem has been the wholesale prices that have been charged to our utilities and our consumers. The obscene wholesale prices that have been charged.

And only the Federal Government, I say to the President, only the Federal Government, through our Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, has the authority to regulate this wholesale price.

For the President to say that California must solve its own problems ignores the fact that the generators and marketers of electricity, a seven-member monopoly, in fact, that is based in Sacramento alone, California alone cannot solve its own problems. The whole Nation must address and must address quickly.

I have a bill just introduced today, the California Electrical Consumers Relief Act of 2001, to take that responsibility head on. In a case like San Diego and California, where FERC has already found, through its investigation, our wholesale rates to be unjust and unreasonable, and, therefore, illegal, I say to the President, in that situation, my bill would establish what is called cost-based rates. That is the cornerstone of our legislation plus reasonable profit, for wholesale electricity, not just in California, but throughout the western States.

This is a regional problem. We must tackle it regionally. It sets those prices retroactively back to last June when this crisis started. This is not a cap. This is not an arbitrary figure.

This is a reasonable rate based on a market-based formula which allows the generators reasonable profit, but protects the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, FERC knows how to set those rates. They have the rationale. They have the procedure. They should do it, and we should order it.

For those rates, under my legislation, that were charged above the legal cost-based rates that we have in California and San Diego and have been paying since last June, my bill requires the refund of those obscene profits, the difference between what was charged us and the cost-based rates that FERC determines should be refunded, a billion dollars to the consumers of San Diego, Mr. Speaker. $12 billion to the State of California.

These windfall gains by a cartel of the large energy generators and marketers, and that money must be returned to the Californians who are suffering. And as we watch the news and as we listen to what is going on, please remember the Governor of California and the California legislature can do a lot about our State’s problems, but they cannot order refunds. They cannot set wholesale prices.

We are stuck in California with the economic disaster that that implies. A billion dollars worth of debt in San Diego, $12 billion sucked out of our State by these power generators. We cannot look to Sacramento to solve that; only we can do it. I ask President Bush to act, and act quickly. The President cannot take a hands-off approach.

WHY DOES THE MEDIA INSIST UPON REPORTING ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE CONGRESSIONAL REPUBLICAN MAJORITY AND GIVING THE CLINTON ADMINISTRATION CREDIT?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, late last year, a constituent asked me “why do newspapers and TV networks insist on giving credit to the accomplishments of the Congressional Republican majority, or if it is reported, the Clinton administration is given the credit?” I replied, some do accurately report the facts, but the national media, printed and electronic, with rare exceptions, tilts noticeably to the left.

Mr. Speaker, many Americans, if not most Americans, prefer fair, objective reporting. All too often, again, with rare exceptions, double standards are applied in the treatment of conservative Republicans.

An example of this double-standard mentality is the recently-revealed Jesse Jackson saga. Had a nationally known conservative Republican relativist fathered a child out of wedlock, a universal firestorm would have likely erupted and, in lieu of a three-day story, it would have endured for several weeks with front page disseminate-
Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, the unusually cold winter and the dramatic increase in heating costs are hurting everyone in my State of Mississippi and this is a disaster just the same. It is an economic disaster that threatens the very existence of farmers throughout our regions.

Yesterday, I introduced a bill that would provide both immediate and long-term assistance for poultry farmers. My bill, the Poultry Farmers’ Emergency Energy Assistance Act, would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to provide grants that would not have to be repaid to help local producers deal immediately with financial pressures caused by this crisis.

This bill would also make low-interest loans available to poultry farmers to help deal with the energy crisis for the months ahead.

In addition, at my insistence, loan-making officials at the USDA’s Farm Service Agency have clarified their regulations so that contract poultry farmers will be eligible for FSA emergency loans.

This important legislation needs to be enacted quickly. Our farmers need help, and they need it now. I am calling upon our leaders in Congress to move this energy assistance bill quickly to passage. I will not rest until the Poultry Farmers’ Emergency Energy Assistance Act becomes law.

William F. Dwyer II Dies of Cancer at 65

Mr. Speaker, I insert into the RECORD [From the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle about an article that appeared in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle on March 10, 1981.]

William F. Dwyer II is described as a dy- namite, a tireless force. He worked in politics from Monroe County to Washington, D.C., and was a Rochester broadcaster. He got his law degree in his late 40s, spoke on behalf of the tobacco industry, even ran a modular home company.

Dwyer was born in Rochester on March 10, 1916. His father was a prominent Rochester lawyer. Dwyer attended the University of Rochester and later went on to earn a law degree at the University of Michigan. He started a public relations firm in Beverly Hills, specializing in wrongful termination cases and immigration issues.

Through all the changes in his life, Mr. Dwyer remained upbeat and eager for new challenges. Drath said, “This was a man who knew the art of living in the moment,” she said. “He never looked back, never had any regrets.”

Along with his wife of Washington, Mr. Dwyer is survived by their two children Scott Dwyer and William Dwyer III of Wash- ington, Elizabeth Selvin of Beverly Hills, and Anne Colgan of East Rochester. Memorial contributions can be made to the National Colorectal Cancer Research Institu- te at Entertainment Industry Foundation, 11323 Ventura Blvd., Studio City, CA 91604.

TRIBUTE TO WILL DWYER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gent- leman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, this is kind of a sad occasion for me. Today I rise to pay tribute to Will Dwyer, who was my former communications director of the Committee on Government Reform and Oversight. He passed away earlier this month after a long battle with cancer.

Dwyer began his media career as a broadcast sports commentator in the 1950s, and then he moved to Wash- ington to start a career in public serv- ice. He was a native of Rochester, New York; and he began his congressional career in the 88th Congress by working for Frank Horton of New York. He served as his administrative assistant for some time.

Then after his stint in public service, he left Washington for the private sec- tor, where he held the post of Republican county chairman. During that time, he also founded a telecommunications privacy service.

Will knew that life was too valuable to let a day go by without enjoying every- thing that it had to offer. He was a man with an incredible thirst for new and different experiences, and he returned to school in mid-life and received his law degree while he was in his mid-40s.

Earlier this decade, Will was called back into public service by the gentle- man from California (Mr. RADANO- VICH). It was on his reputation on Radanovich’s staff that we hired him to be our communications director with the Committee on Government Reform.

Although I knew Will for only a short period of time, he was a very, very fine man, a man of impeccable integrity, really a very patriotic fellow. He lived his life knowing that every day was something to savor. It was his attitude that brings me to the floor today to pay tribute to this man whom we are all going to miss a great deal, my friend, Will Dwyer.

So God in heaven, I hope you are blessing Will because he was a man who should be blessed a great deal.

Mr. Speaker, I insert into the RECORD an article that appeared in the Roch- ester Democrat and Chronicle about the life of my good friend, Will Dwyer, as follows:

WILLIAM F. DWYER II DIES OF CANCER AT 65

William F. Dwyer II is described as a dy- namite, a tireless force. He worked in politics from Monroe County to Washington, D.C., and was a Rochester broadcaster. He got his law degree in his late 40s, spoke on behalf of the tobacco industry, even ran a modular home company in California.

But there was one constant theme in Mr. Dwyer’s life—he’s limitless interest in people.

“He was such an egalitarian,” said Mr. Dwyer’s wife, Constance Drath. “He talked to the grocery clerk, the mailman, the elect- ed officials. He loved learning about every- one.”

Mr. Dwyer died of cancer last week in Washington. He was 65.

Mr. Dwyer was born in Rochester on March 30, 1916, and grew up in the city. He graduated from a military academy in New Jer-sey as the class valedictorian, Drath said.

He returned to Rochester in the mid-1950s and began a career in broadcasting at WHAM-AM (1180). Family and friends say that Mr. Dwyer was a tall man with a curly head of brown hair—had a deep, resonant voice that was perfect for the airwaves.

In 1962, Mr. Dwyer moved to the political arena, working in Frank Horton, a Penfield Republican just elected to Congress. He became Horton’s administrative assist- ant, basically his right-hand man, and insti- tuted weekly radio feeds that would be picked up by Rochester radio stations.

Mr. Dwyer also used a radio communica- tion system that kept the Horton campaign in touch with him. “This wasn’t done back then,” said Horton, who called Mr. Dwyer not just a valued employee but a good friend. “You could tell him anything,” he said. “You can’t say that about everybody.”

He left Horton’s office in the late 1960s and started a public relations firm that often worked with political campaigns. He worked closely with the Republican Party and in 1970 was named Monroe County chairman of that party.

Richard Rosenbaum, himself a former county GOP chairman, said that Mr. Dwyer’s style was “benevolent aggressiveness.”

“Will was a great PR man, who could make lemonade out of the most awful lemons,” he said.

Mr. Dwyer left Rochester for Washington in 1972 and worked in the Nixon and Ford admin- istrations, mainly as a Labor Depart- ment spokesman for new workplace safety and health standards.

In 1975, he became a spokesman for the now-defunct Tobacco Institute, which spoke on behalf of cigarette manufacturers.

In 1980, Mr. Dwyer moved to California with Drath. In two years, he obtained his law degree from Southwestern University of Law in Los Angeles. He and Drath opened a law firm in Beverly Hills, specializing in wrong- ful employment termination cases and immi- gration issues.

During the 1980s, he dabbled in other ven- tures, including a modular home company.

In 1994, politics came calling again, and Mr. Dwyer served as a press secretary for Rep. George Radanovich, R-Calif., then as communications director for the House Gov- ernment Reform Committee.

Along with his wife of Washington, Mr. Dwyer is survived by their two children Scott Dwyer and William Dwyer III of Wash- ington, Elizabeth Selvin of Beverly Hills, and Anne Colgan of East Rochester. A memorial service will be held at George- town Presbyterian Church in Washington at noon Wednesday.

Memorial contributions can be made to the National Colorectal Cancer Research Institu- te at Entertainment Industry Foundation, 11323 Ventura Blvd., Studio City, CA 91604.

TAX DEDUCTION FAIRNESS ACT OF 2001

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentle- man from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation that will help reduce the tax fairness to millions of peo- ple in my State of Washington and throughout the country. Joining me in this effort today is the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT), my good friend and colleague, who has been instrumental in helping draft this legis- lation.

The problem we are referring today to, Mr. Speaker, is a basic unfairness in the current Tax Code. In my home State of Washington and in other States, such as Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, and Wyoming, a State sales tax takes the place of a State income tax as the primary revenue source.

H132

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

January 31, 2001

Every year in April, taxpayers send their tax returns to the IRS. It is a ritual to which all Americans have become accustomed. Although we do not always like it, we realize it is part of our duties to the country.

But it also brings added frustration for taxpayers in my State who feel cheated by what they pay into the Federal Treasury. A taxpayer of identical income and expense in almost any other State would be able to deduct the amount that they pay their State in income tax; but in Washington, we cannot do that.

Folks in my State have the same amount withheld from their paychecks; but when they itemize their taxes, they deduct significantly lesser amount. Because of the tax reforms of 1986 when lawmakers decided to remove the deduction for sales tax, Washingtonians were shortchanged. In fact, the Congressional Research Service estimates that Washington taxpayers were penalized to the tune of $450 million every year when compared to their neighbors.

Should residents of Washington and the other States with sales taxes pay hundreds of dollars more to the Federal Treasury than States which choose to tax residents through income taxes? Of course not.

Federal taxes should be levied on all of our Nation’s citizens in a fair and equitable manner that does not give preference to one State or another.

That is why, along with the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT), I am introducing today legislation to correct this inequity. Our bill, the Tax Deduction Fairness Act of 2001, would reinstate the sales tax deduction and direct the IRS to develop tables of average sales tax liabilities for taxpayers in every State. It would then give the taxpayer the option to deduct either their State sales tax or their State income tax when they file their Federal return.

The bill will not make the State or the Federal Income Tax Code more complicated. In fact, it will add one simple line to the about 60,000 lines to complete. I do not know about my colleagues, but taking 60 seconds to look on a simple chart in a way that would save me $100 to $500 a year is a pretty good investment in time. Adding that line will save hundreds of billions of dollars for American taxpayers every year, and it is all about fundamental fairness.

Let me give my colleagues a couple of very real human examples. Brian and Cathy Lux and their three kids, Carissa, Cameron, and Cables, live in Brush Prairie, just outside my home town of Vancouver, Washington. Brian is a finance manager for a local auto dealership, and his wife, Cathy, is a licensed home care provider.

All told, the Luxes make between $70,000 to $80,000 a year, not a huge amount for a family of five. Working with the IRS, my office estimates that the Luxes paid an average of about $1,700 in sales tax last year, but they were able to deduct none of it from their Federal return.

However, under our bill, they would get nearly $500 of their tax money back. For Brian, that would be nearly a month’s worth of groceries; or when their kids get a little older, it would be a semester of tuition at the local community college.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to fix this inequity in the Federal Tax Code for all Brian and Cathy Luxes and for all of the similar families throughout the country.

The new administration campaigned on fair and just tax relief, and I support that promise. But I cannot think of anything more fair than the bill that the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT) and I are introducing today. If we penalize people for being married, so too it must be unjust to penalize people for living in States that opt to tax their citizens through a sales tax. I welcome the bipartisan spirit of the new administration, and I urge members to support this legislation that is all about fairness and simplicity and will help working families throughout this country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT).

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) for yielding and congratulate him because I know that he has been a leader in the State of Washington on this issue, but has also been a leader across the country on this; and it is a pleasure to join forces with him because what we are trying to do is correct what we believe is a wrong.

This came back to us in the 1986 tax reform. Prior to 1986, we were able to deduct our State sales tax from our Federal income tax return. But in the 1986 tax reform, that was taken away from us. It was an oversight, and now we want to correct that oversight once and for all for those seven States that are left out. We should not be forced to move to a State income tax in Tennessee or Washington or the other States if we do not want to.

BANKRUPTCY ABUSE PREVENTION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2001

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the special order to which I am attached today is to announce the introduction of the new bankruptcy reform act that we hope will be enacted into law during this current session and swiftly to arrive at the President’s desk for signature. We are naming the new effort the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2001, and we have over 50 cosponsors already even at the early stages of this session to help us shepherd through much-needed bankruptcy reform.

Speaker, may I recall that in the waning days of the last session, the House by voice vote and the Senate by an overwhelming vote of 70 to 26 approved the bankruptcy bill of the last term only to have it vetoed by President Clinton in the last days of the congressional session in the year 2000. So we have to start all over again.

In starting all over again, Mr. Speaker, we are adopting as the starting vehicle about 99 and 44/100 percent of the bill that was approved in the last days of the last session by both the House and the Senate, which was of course veto-proof. In the previous House vote, there were 315 votes, well over the veto-proof level, and in the Senate it was 70 over something which also allowed for veto override, so a bill may not require a veto-proof majority in this current session because we believe that bankruptcy reform could be part and parcel of President Bush’s overall plan to meet the unstable economy head on to prevent some of the worst consequences of an economic downturn. It fits in perfectly.

Two main themes are part of the new bankruptcy reform effort to which I allude. These same two themes guided our actions from the very beginning. The first theme, and the most important one, is that it is tailored to make certain that anyone who is so overwhelmed by debt, so swamped by the inability to pay one’s obligations that that individual after a good close look at his circumstances would be entitled to a fresh start, to be discharged in bankruptcy, to be free of the debts that so overwhelmed him. That is a salient feature of this bankruptcy reform bill and the ones that we were able to get these favorable votes to accomplish in the last two sessions.

So we never lose sight of, nor will we ever lose sight of, the real purpose of bankruptcy reform or any bankruptcy legislation to allow an American citizen the right to gain a fresh start after finding himself incapable of meeting his obligations. But the other tandem theme that is also part of what we have been doing for the last 3 years, and which will be an important feature of the new bill, will be that certain provisions will be put into place which will for certain give people who have an ability to repay some of their debts will be compelled to do so, so that instead of a Chapter 7 filing which will give that automatic almost-fresh start, we will be able to shepherd some of the debtors into Chapter 13 and will for certain give people by which they could over a period of time repay some of the debt out of their then-current earnings.
This is a well-balanced concept which we are presenting to the American people and to the Congress so that we can help join in the fight to make sure that our economy remains stable throughout the ensuing several years and into the next decade.

Some of the contentious features that we found occurred on the floor of the House and in committee throughout the last 3 years have been so well settled now and are part and parcel of the new proposal that we believe that only additional new hearings will be needed either in the Senate or in the House for final resolution of the final wording that will go into the bankruptcy reform bill to which we refer. We had some 13 hearings within a year to determine what was out there in the business world and in the consumer world that was important enough for us to note and to provide language to accommodate.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking for cosponsors.

I am proud to introduce H.R. 333, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2001, today together with original cosponsors from both sides of the aisle.

This bill is identical to the conference report that passed the Senate by voice vote last October and passed the House with a veto-proof vote of 70 to 28 less than 2 months ago. The only revisions consist of a title change and the deletion of a provision that has already become law.

This bill is a further perfection of its predecessor, H.R. 833, the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999, which I introduced on February 24, 1999. With more than 100 cosponsors, H.R. 833 had overwhelming bipartisan support in the House as further evidenced by a vote of 313 to 108.

The bill I am introducing today consists of a comprehensive package of reforms pertaining to consumer and business bankruptcy law. It also includes provisions regarding the treatment of tax claims, enhanced data collection, and international insolvencies.

This bill responds to several developments affecting bankruptcy law and practice. Based on data released by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, bankruptcy filings have increased exponentially. Between 1994 and 1998, the number of filed bankruptcy cases grew by more than 72 percent. In 1998, bankruptcy filings, according to the Administrative Office, reached an “all-time high” of more than 1,740,000 cases. Paradoxically, however, this dramatic increase in bankruptcy filing rates occurred during a period when the economy continued to be robust, with relatively low unemployment and high consumer confidence.

Coupled with this development was the release of a study that estimated financial losses in 1997 due to fraudulent bankruptcy filings exceeded $44 billion, a loss equal to more than $400 per household. This study projected that even if the growth rate in personal bankruptcies slowed to only 15 percent over the next 3 years, the American economy would have to absorb a cumulative cost of more than $220 billion.

The Judiciary Committee began its consideration of comprehensive bankruptcy reform early in the 105th Congress. On April 16, 1997, the Subcommittee on Commercial and Administrative Law conducted a hearing on the operation of the bankruptcy system that was combined with a status report from the National Bankruptcy Review Commission. This was the first of 13 hearings that the Subcommittee held of bankruptcy reform over the ensuing 2 years. Eight of these hearings were devoted solely to consideration of H.R. 833 and its predecessor, H.R. 3150, the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1998.

Over the course of these hearings, more than 150 witnesses, representing nearly every major constituency in the bankruptcy community, testified. With regard to H.R. 833 alone, testimony was received from 69 witnesses, representing 23 organizations, with additional material submitted by other individuals and groups.

The heart of the bill’s consumer bankruptcy reforms is the implementation of a mechanism to ensure that consumer debtors repay their creditors the maximum that they can afford. The needs-based formula articulates objective criteria for debtors to self-evaluate their eligibility for relief under chapter 7 (a form of bankruptcy relief where the debtor generally receives a discharge of his or her personal liability for most unsecured debts). These reforms are not intended to affect consumer debtors lacking the ability to repay their debts and deserving of an expedient fresh start.

The bill’s debtor protections include significant new credit card disclosure specifications and the requirement that billing statements and other explanatory statements with regard to introductory interest rates and minimum payments. These additional disclosures will give debtors important information to enable them to better manage their financial affairs so that they can avoid fiscal disaster.

Important reforms intended to help debtors understand their rights and obligations with respect to reaffirmation agreements are also included in the legislation. To enforce these protections, the bill requires the Attorney General to designate a U.S. attorney for each judicial district and a FBI agent for each field office to have primary responsibility regarding abusive reaffirmation practices, among other responsibilities.

In addition, the legislation substantially expands a debtor’s ability to exempt certain tax-qualified retirement accounts and pensions. It also creates a new provision that allows a consumer debtor to exempt certain education IRA and state tuition plans for his or her child’s postsecondary education from the claims of creditors.

Most importantly, the legislation’s credit counseling provisions will give consumers in financial distress an opportunity to learn about the consequences of bankruptcy—which can be very devastating to their credit rating, among other matters—and about alternatives to bankruptcy, as well as how to manage their finances, so that they can avoid future financial difficulties.

Other debtor protections include heightened requirements for those professionals and others who assist consumer debtors in connection with their bankruptcy cases, expanded notice requirements for consumers with regard to alternatives to bankruptcy relief, and the institution of a pilot program to study the effectiveness of consumer financial education for debtors. The legislation also addresses a problem under the current law with respect to those individuals who are precluded from obtaining bankruptcy relief because they simply cannot afford to pay the requisite bankruptcy filing fees and related charges. Under the legislation, these fees and charges may be waived in appropriate cases.

With regard to business bankruptcy reform, the bill addresses the special problems that small business cases present by instituting a variety of performance criteria and enforcement mechanisms to identify and weed out those debtors who are unable to reorganize. It also requires more active supervision of these cases by United States Trustees and the bankruptcy courts. The bill includes provisions concerning the treatment of small business debtors, in general, and family farmer bankruptcies, in particular. It also clarifies the treatment of certain financial contracts under the banking laws as well as under the Bankruptcy Code. The bill responds to the special needs of family farmers by making chapter 12 of the Bankruptcy Code—a form of bankruptcy relief available only to eligible family farmers—permanent.

The small business and single asset real estate provisions of the bill are derived from consensus recommendations of the National Bankruptcy Review Commission. Many of these recommendations received broad support from those in the bankruptcy community, including various bankruptcy judges, creditors groups, and the Executive Office for United States Trustees.

The bill, in addition, contains several provisions having general impact with respect to bankruptcy law and practice. These include a provision permitting certain appeals from final bankruptcy court decisions to be heard directly by the court of appeals for the appropriate circuit. Another general provision of the bill requires the Executive Office for United States Trustees to compile various statistics regarding chapter 7, 11, and 13 cases, to make these data available to the public, and to report annually to Congress on the data collected.

It is also important to note that the legislation includes a plethora of provisions intended to protect the interests of women and children. For example, the legislation provides:

- Establishes a uniform and expanded definition of the term “domestic support obligation” to better protect the rights of women and children with support claims and to reduce litigation.

- Ensures that bankruptcy cannot be used by deadbeat parents to interfere with the enforcement efforts of federal, state and local authorities with respect to overdue child support obligations.

- Ensures that bankruptcy cannot be used by deadbeat parents to interfere with the enforcement efforts of federal, state and local authorities with respect to overdue child support obligations.
Does not allow deadbeat parents to discharge other obligations relating to divorce or separation agreements.

Requires those who are responsible for the administration of bankruptcy cases to provide important information and notices to their holders of spontaneous child support claims as well as to the child support agencies.

Many professionals and organizations responsible for federal child support enforcement programs such as the National District Attorneys Association, the National Association of Attorneys General, and the National Child Support Enforcement Association (which represents more than 60,000 child support professionals across America) have enthusiastically expressed their support for these important reforms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of a bill that the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) and myself have worked so hard on and are introducing today that would restore the sales tax deduction to the Federal Income Tax Code. We are talking about an oversight that occurred in 1986, where seven States cannot deduct their State sales tax from their Federal income tax return, which they could do prior to 1986. This is an issue of tax fairness that has been wrongly denied to the citizens of Tennessee and six other States for 15 years.

Mr. Speaker, due to the elimination of the State sales tax deduction from the Federal Tax Code in 1986, the people of Tennessee are paying significantly more in taxes to the Federal Government than a taxpayer with an identical profile in a State that does have a State income tax. In the last fiscal year alone, my colleagues, my friends, constituents in Tennessee, paid an average of $272 in State sales taxes but could not deduct $1 of it from their Federal income tax return. We are being forced to pay taxes on our taxes. This is unfair, it is unjust, and it must be corrected here in the 107th Congress.

The people of Tennessee and the other States deserve better from the Federal Government. Our bill is very simple. It would allow taxpayers to deduct their State sales taxes from their Federal income tax return. Those living in a State with an income tax would be completely unaffected, since they would still be able to take an income tax deduction as they do today. For example, with a combined income of $50,000 that lives in Tennessee, for example, who are blessed with beautiful twin daughters would save $350. That, Mr. Speaker, is a lot of diapers.

I am calling on my colleagues to take this opportunity to restore fairness and equity to the Tax Code in this Congress without making the Tax Code more complex and abandoning our fiscal discipline. In a year when all the talk now is about bipartisan tax cuts and bipartisan tax reform, I say we come together and pass tax fairness and ensure tax equity now. Let us take this opportunity to do something about our tax burdens and not just talk about them.

In this last Congress, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) and myself were able to offer it on the floor of the House, and 175 of our colleagues voted in favor of similar tax language. I would like to call on those Members of the House to cosponsor this legislation. It is a fair bill, it makes a lot of sense, and it will treat all States equal.

Is that not what it is all about, when we call ourselves the United States of America?

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to have a colloquy with my good friend and a real leader in the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD). Mr. BAIRD. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee, and I want to commend him for his efforts on this bill and for his fight for fairness for his citizens.

It really is this simple. What we propose is to have the IRS create simple tables. A person will not have to save their receipts in a shoe box or keep track of all their expenditures. They will simply look on a simple table. On the left column is their income, the top row is the family size. They will find where that intersects and that is the amount they put on their tax form. Literally, 30 seconds to a minute for fundamental fairness, for a bill that will save the average working family, who itemizes their deductions, between $300 to $500 every year.

The $500 million that Washington State taxpayers paid to the Federal treasury could have been spent on their families, their kids’ educations, and in a lot of other ways. I am sure it is true in Tennessee as well.

Mr. CLEMENT. The gentleman is absolutely right. And I have heard so many people in Tennessee say why not? We should not have been overlooked in 1986. I know neither one of us were in Congress when that happened, when they passed the 1986 tax reform, but the fact is someone did not fight for us.

Some dip not fight for those seven States.

I know some of those northeastern Congressman say, well, we wanted to make sure that if an individual lived in a State with a State income tax that they could deduct that from their Federal income tax returns. Well, treat us fairly as well, where we can deduct some taxes from our Federal income tax return, so we have fairness and equity for all in the United States.

FAITH-BASED INITIATIVES A PRIORITY WITH PRESIDENT BUSH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SOUDER. Earlier this week, President George W. Bush announced his faith-based initiatives office and different proposals that he will be sending down to Congress. Earlier today, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS), who has been a leader in this effort, and Senator RICK SANTORUM, along with the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHPUR) and myself, and Senators TIM HUTCHINSON and SAM BROWNBACK held a press conference with a number of leaders from Michigan, Florida, and other places around the United States to highlight some of these initiatives.

There are a number of questions that I wanted to address here as we prepare to analyze and hopefully report the President’s package and add different things we have considered here in the House and Senate to it as well.

First and foremost, this is not a new idea. Former Congressman and Senator Dan Coats, when he was in the House, had 173 of our colleagues.

In the Senate, the Agenda for American Renewal. Former Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp had a number of faith-based initiatives there because a lot of people would not reach out and care for those with AIDS. In the early stages of the AIDS crisis, as people were dying, there were all sorts of false rumors around and many people did not care for them. Without the faith-based communities, if the government had not reached out to the faith-based communities and involved them, there would have been many people dying of AIDS who would not have received any assistance whatsoever.

Nobody objected to the faith-based communities coming and working.

Similarly in homelessness, the Federal dollars, the State dollars, and the local dollars were not enough to address the homeless questions. So, under HUD, they expanded into the faith-based organizations back in the Bush administration. That was continued under Secretary Cisneros and continued under Secretary Cuomo. It is not fair to say that these things are suddenly new and that Bush is trying to insert religion into the national debate. It has been there. The difference is, instead of an afterthought, President Bush wants to make it a focus. He is saying that all these funding organizations that are developed in every neighborhood, particularly those that are hurting the most, there are people making a difference and we need to tap into that.

Now, a second question that comes up is, well, these examples that are reported in the press conferences or that are talked about by Gene Rivers in Boston or that are talked about by some taxes from our Federal income tax return. Well, treat us fairly and not just talk about them.
are just exceptions. They are not the rules. We could not possibly make this program work on a large scale because, while there are a few people here and there toiling away, this cannot possibly be part of an integrated strategy.

That is just one thing we can do. The largest city in my district is Fort Wayne, Indiana. I want to give an example of the breadth of what we are talking about here. Reverend Bill McGill was executive director of Stop the Madness. After one pastor’s son was shot in the center city of Fort Wayne while he was sitting at a YMCA and two guys got in a gun fight, he decided to form an organization called Stop the Madness. Bill McGill headed that organization. Now he is executive director of One Church, One Offender. We have churches throughout northeast Indiana and Fort Wayne in particular who are working to adopt people who have gotten in trouble with the law and who are now coming out. Who is going to help them get a job and work with them? This is a tremendous program.

The Ewell Wilson Center was started by Shirley Woods and her husband after her boy, who was a star athlete, was shot and killed by a community center. Now who works with kids. It is disconcerting that she has to fight for every little game unit, for every computer, for every little thing because she is not a high-powered organization. It is just a couple of people who said we care about the kids in our area. They do not have grant writers or the so-called beltway bandits. How can people making a difference at the grass roots level do it?

Reverend Jessey and Anthony Beasley came to me. They have an inner-city church and they are trying to figure out how to get a youth program started for the after-school kids because we have a huge crack problem in Fort Wayne and a high murder rate, and they do not know where to turn to do that.

George Middleton took some of his savings out to help build a youth center, and he is building this with his private money and getting volunteers in. But he can only do so much. And when someone does not get the help, they get tired too fast. They are working 18 hours a day. Here are the people who are really here; they have lots more interested, but they have not had access to it. I congratulate the President for making this a foremost priority rather than an afterthought.

HONORING THE LIFE OF OLIVE WEHRBRING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. Davis) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Olive Wehrbring. Communities are indeed fortunate to have political activists who are willing to fight to the cause of good government after they retire from a paid career. It is rare when that commitment to public issues becomes another 30-year career. Olive Wehrbring, who passed away recently in San Diego at the age of 95, was just such an exemplary citizen.

When I was a young mother and new board member of the San Diego League of Women Voters, I was delighted to meet Olive and to be introduced by her and to the intricacies of local government. She was a model for several generations of League of Women Voters leaders. Her enthusiasm was matched by tireless perseverance and sitting through long meetings, whether they be a county health committee, a regional planning meeting of the San Diego Association of Governments, or a city planning commission hearing. In fact, she attended a meeting of regional planners only 3 months before she died from complications of breast cancer.

Three years ago, I had the opportunity to speak at a State League of Women Voters convention in San Diego, and Olive, well over 90 years old, appeared at the meeting. She had volunteered all morning at the registration table, driven 10 miles home to check on her cat during lunch, drove back downtown, parked, and walked several blocks in time for the afternoon session.

Olive’s energy was legendary. Her spirit indomitable and her intellect unspiring. She served as President of the League of Women Voters of San Diego County in 1981, and for the city league she authored a guide to the city’s structure and operation. Mrs. Wehrbring was also active in the Church of the Good Samaritan, where she served as clerk of the vestry and as head of the Altar Guild.

Olive was born here in Washington, D.C., but grew up in New York. After graduating in 1927 from Smith College, where she was a competitive swimmer, she became a reference librarian. Managing the reference department for a library in White Plains, New York, she earned a Master’s Degree in library science in 1955 from Columbia University. In New York, Olive served as President of the United Nations Association of Westchester County and on the board of the Westchester Mental Health Association.

After moving in 1970 to the newly developed University City area of San Diego with her late husband Leon, she became a member of the University City Planning Board. As the University of California San Diego grew, the area expanded with diverse business, scientific research, and high-density residential buildings. Olive became a watchdog for good growth policies to tailor the growth of the community.

Olive Wehrbring will be missed by many community members, as well as her daughter Brenda Holman of San Diego, her sons John of San Diego and Kurt of Portland, Oregon, and her five grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren. She will always have a special place in my heart and the hearts of many women for whom she was a role model and mentor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Simpson). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. Jackson-Lee) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hearafter in the Extensions of Remarks.

EDUCATION PLAN OF PRESIDENT BUSH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Guam (Mr. Underwood) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support as well as concerns regarding President Bush’s education plan. The plan represents a comprehensive and broad-reaching initiative, which is expected to gain the support of both sides of the aisle and both Houses of Congress. And it deserves it. But I must raise the reality that the U.S. territories, like Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa and the Northern Marianas are never mentioned.

There is no mention in the President’s proposal regarding the treatment of territories. It is not unusual that territories are often overlooked and sometimes misrepresented in the crafting of national policy. But when national policies have ambitious titles and objectives, the territories should not be overlooked.

The goal of President Bush’s plan is that no child be left behind. I would like to restate that goal so that it rings clear to everyone. No child in America should be left behind. And that should include all American children no matter where they live.
As a former educator, I give President Bush high marks for introducing a comprehensive educational measure at the beginning of his administration. This demonstrates his solid commitment to improve education in public schools for all American children. I know that the members of the territorials will agree that this administration and this Congress should work in concert to move our Nation's educational agenda forward so that no child is left behind. Let me repeat that. Let me reiterate that. I have been interested in, and accepting of, the President's plan and any plan which has tenure to it. I want to see a professionalization of the teaching profession. I have been interested in education, and I believe in education, and I recognize the special obligation to certain needs of our children and the needs of our schools, like many other school districts in the country.

I am concerned about other ways to measure the failure to include high standards in the President's proposal. I am concerned about the President's proposal, and any proposal which has tenure to it.

I believe in standards and agree that the President Bush high marks for introducing a comprehensive educational measure at the beginning of his administration. This demonstrates his solid commitment to improve education in public schools for all American children. I know that the members of the territorials will agree that this administration and this Congress should work in concert to move our Nation's educational agenda forward so that no child is left behind.

I urge my fellow colleagues and President Bush to consider the special needs of U.S. territories as we work in crafting an educational plan that truly meets the needs of all Americans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. Mink) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.

WELL WISHES TO HON. BUD SHUSTER ON HIS DEPARTURE FROM HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, this is the last day for the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), one of the most dynamic experts on transportation in the entire country. There has been no individual that has had more of an impact on transportation in Pennsylvania, in the commonwealth in his district, in my district, in the entire country.

He was an expert in the field. Even when he was in the minority, he had a tremendous impact on transportation things. He convinced the Congress and the White House that the taxes we collect for transportation ought to go to transportation; and, even against tremendous odds, he was able to win that battle.

It will be a long time before we see another person with his ability. He was a Ph.D with a Phi Beta Kappa. He was an Army veteran. He was a person of great compassion, and sometimes it was overshadowed by things that he was interested in.

But I will say this, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) will be long remembered for all the things that he did in Pennsylvania and for his legacy, and there will be a better transportation system in this great country. And that is absolutely essential to our economic progress.

Mr. MASCARA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the finest sons of Pennsylvania: Chairman Bud SHUSTER.

Bud, your commitment and vision has reshaped our national landscape from the local level to the national level.

In 1985, following the oath of office and won a seat on the T&I Committee, you were beginning your 12th term as a Congressman and first year as Chairman of the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee. Little did I realize that under your leadership the Committee would become the most productive Congress has ever seen. A large measure of your success can be attributed to your fair treatment and respect for the minority members of the Committee.

As a nation and extremely lucky to have had you working to build the Transportation and Environmental infrastructure of our nation.

Because of your efforts, I do not believe the American people will ever again accept inadequate funding for our Waterways, Railways, Airways, and Highways.

Personally, I want to thank you for helping with many projects in my district. I am particularly grateful for your visit to my district to view the efforts being made to complete the Mon-Fayette and Southern Beltway Transportation Projects. Once completed, this project has the economic potential to revive the economy for the hard working men and women of southwestern Pennsylvania.

It has been an honor and pleasure to work with you on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee. Although I am certain you are looking forward to other pursuits, you will be sadly missed by me personally and your colleagues on the Committee.

As you plan for your future, let me assure you that you have a friend in FRANK MASCARA.

I wish you the best of everything.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of this Congress may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks about the retirement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

CONSUMER ONLINE PRIVACY AND DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the remarks of my colleague. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) has been very fair and worked on transportation not only, obviously, in Pennsylvania but all over the country. His presence will be missed.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, though, to talk about a bill I just introduced, the Consumer Online Privacy and Disclosure Act.

Unprecedented numbers of American consumers are flocking to the Internet to transact business and tap the nearly limitless informational databases that are available. The explosion in Internet usage, however, is not without its problems.

Unlike shopping in a mall or browsing through a library where individuals transact business through the merchandise racks and library stacks, the Internet is becoming less and less anonymous. Direct marketing firms that sell mailing lists and large companies that sell customer directories are exposing the personal data of Internet users to the risks of lax data security practices. Privacy advocates are aware of these dangers and are shining a spotlight on the inadequate privacy practices of many Internet sites.

Today, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of this Congress may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks about the Consumer Online Privacy and Disclosure Act.
are now trying to identify individuals as they surf the Web to isolate where they visit and what they are viewing.

This new data collection practice is most often described as Internet profiling. Internet profiling describes the practice of joining a consumer's personal information with that of his or her Internet viewing habits. To develop this detailed profile, a "persistent cookie" must be attached to the consumer's cookie as they move through a Web site.

A persistent cookie is a small text file copied for varying lengths of time to consumers' computers to track their movements while they are online. It is almost like somebody following you on the street, Mr. Speaker; and we have protections against that.

My legislation would prohibit Internet Service Providers (ISP) and Web site operators from allowing third parties to attach these persistent cookies to a consumer's computer without his or her consent. And that is the biggest purpose. If someone wants to give their consent, then that is their business.

For example, we have these grocery cards all over the country that gives us a discount that Safeway or Kroeger's or someone else is actually seeing what we buy at the grocery store. We agree to that in a way.

The legislation requires the Federal Trade Commission to promulgate rules specifying that all operators of a Web site or online service provide a clear and conspicuous notice of their privacy policy in clear, non-legalistic terms.

The bill also requires a Web site or online service to provide consumers with an option to prevent the use of their personal information for any activity other than the particular transaction. And finally, the privacy policy must include the information, collected information will be shared or transferred to an external company or third party.

While my legislation gives consumers more information and control over how they use the Internet, I have also included a provision that will hold e-commerce companies to their privacy policies.

With insolvency of many dot-com companies, oftentimes the only tangible right to satisfy creditors is a consumer's transaction and personal information.

The global use of the Internet is beneficial only so long as the information traveling through cyberspace remains private. Consumers will pull back from using the Internet if they believe their privacy is being invaded.

While I understand there are many differing approaches to the use of Internet privacy, I believe this legislation reflects the three R's of Internet privacy debate; and I look forward in working with this Congress, Mr. Speaker, also to make sure that our constituents have that privacy that they expect and also that they will think they have.

THE THREE R'S PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to come before the Chamber today to talk about what is the most important issue facing our country today and certainly in the future, education. How can we prepare our children to become adults with the skills and the knowledge that they need to succeed and compete in the world today.

It is a challenge that we are presently not meeting to the degree that we should, and it starts with K–12 education.

Right now we are losing too many students before they even make it through high school, too many students who are not developing the skills and the learning experiences that they need. How can we go about fixing that problem?

Well, for the most part, this is a local issue. This is something that States, school districts and local communities are going to be the primary drivers on in terms of fixing the problems, investing the money, and making the decisions. And I think we should keep that in mind, as the United States Congress, that we want to make sure that we empower the locals to do the job that they are in the best position to do.

But the Federal Government does have a role. There is a lot of people that say that the Federal Government does not have any business being involved in K–12 education because it is a State and local issue, period. I disagree.

On the single-most important issue facing our country, the quality of our child's education, I think all taxpayers would like to know that some of that money that they pay in taxes to the Federal Government is going to help improve our K–12 education system since it is such an important issue to all of us.

But the question that we are addressing here today is, what is the proper role for the Federal Government? How can they best use the money that they spend?

Right now the Federal Government is responsible for about 7 percent of the school districts' budget. Are we getting the most we can for those dollars? Are the resources and making the decisions that are sent out. That is a problem in many areas, and a couple of different areas. First of all, how many strings attached to those dollars are going to the communities that truly need them. Our bill adjusts those formulas to drive them out primarily based on need, based on those poverty-based communities that we are headed towards.

The other major problem of the Federal Government in education right now is that it is too bureaucratic and there are too many strings attached to those dollars that are sent out. That is a problem in a couple of different areas. First of all there is insufficient flexibility. The way that one school is we do not necessarily be the same as another. The needs in Seattle may not be the same as Chicago or Spokane or South Bend, Indiana; there may be differences in what they want, but the Federal Government is very prescriptive in how the dollars are going to be spent in a certain way. That reduces the flexibility of those local communities to best use those dollars. But the
I recently released a report conducted about class sizes in our congressional district. The gentleman was talking about it earlier. The study revealed that over 80 percent of young children in these grades were taught in classrooms that exceeded the national goal of 18 students per classroom. That is in my district. It is important that some of the funds from the Three R's Act or any education bill go to help reduce class sizes. Smaller class sizes have been proven to increase student achievement, reduce discipline problems and increase the amount of instructional time teachers are able to spend with students. Class size reduction has the strongest effects on children in kindergarten through third grade. A study conducted in Tennessee, for example, revealed that in the fourth grade, students from the smaller classes still outperformed the students from the larger classes in all academic subjects.

I want to have a comprehensive solution to ensuring that our children receive a quality education, we must invest in school construction and modernization, mental health professionals, and more guidance counselors in our schools. We need to improve the classrooms and smaller class sizes.

With smaller class sizes, a teacher can better identify the needs of the students, provide individual attention, and spend less time on disciplinary matters. I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues in Congress on an education bill that will strengthen our education system for the 21st century.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) who serves on the Committee on Education and the Workforce and has been a leader on education policy for the full decade he has been in Congress and is one of the powerful drivers behind legislation.

Mr. ROEMER. I appreciate the very kind words from my good friend and fellow New Democrat from the State of Washington (Mr. SMITH). I want to plaud him for his hard work on this bill over the past year and a half. I want to thank the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. SHOWS) for the eloquence in his statement. We will be joined by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) to talk about education as well from his vantage point on the Committee on Education and the Workforce where he has joined me working on these efforts for the past several years.

I also want to commend all the New Democrats that have worked so hard on education legislation over the past several years. We have a host of people that dedicate their careers in public service to trying to improve opportunities for young children, for people that are going back to school, whether they be 26 or 48 years old, to get a better education. And that is why I believe that every traditional student at 33 years old going to a community college. We are interested in working in areas to improve education for Americans across the country. The New Democratic Coalition has been a driving force to try to come up with these new ideas, to try to work with the Senate where, with this particular bill, the Three R’s, we have worked with Senator Bayh, the colleague from Indiana, and Senator Lieberman from Connecticut to craft this legislation. And where we look to work in a bipartisan way with our fellow Republicans across the aisle, with the new administration and with all those people, we continue to say that education is the single most important issue across America.

You can go into a small business or a large business and the first thing out of their mouth is education, to improve productivity. You can go into a labor union and talk to people about training opportunities and apprenticeship programs and the first word is improving education. You can talk about Democrats and Republicans, the administration, the former Clinton administration, the nexus is here, the rivers are all coming together for us to finally work in a bipartisan way to achieve some much-needed results in improving public education in this country.

Now, we are 2 years behind, ladies and gentlemen, 2 years behind in reauthorizing the most important education bill where there is a partnership between the Federal Government and our local schools, locally driven, I might add, for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. We have proposed a bill that the gentleman from Washington has just very, very quickly outlined, and done it very well. That I think is a very, very good starting point and a possible ending point, for good bipartisan legislation to reauthorize the ESEA proposal. Let me outline two or three major components of this bill and then maybe touch on a brief area of disagreement with the Bush administration, and then conclude with the importance of resources and investment for public education in this country.

First of all, what we do in this Three R’s education proposal which has been dropped today, I think the number will probably be H.R. 345, is we consolidate a number, 50 to 60 Federal programs, down to five competitive Federal grants into these five areas, including title I for the poorest children; teacher quality to improve on the number of people going into the teaching profession and coming out, maybe going in at mid career; we talk about public school choice and expanding choice to empower our parents. Those are the five critical areas to consolidate and make sure that these decisions are not driven by Washington, D.C. but are driven by the local community with help and assistance from the Federal Government.

Secondly, we demand more accountability and results from our schools, from every teacher, from every single child, to make sure that they can live up to the standards and the requirements of this new economy, so that they can meet the needs upon graduation from high school that are going to be needed by our businesses, by our unions, by our hospitals and our banks, so that they make certain requirements and certain meaningful coming out of high school, that diploma means they have met certain assessments and skill levels, but that we do not also overtest and put a Federal mandate on our local schools. There is to be a delicate balance in trying to reach in this bill between recognizing the needs to test our students and demand more from our students but also not give unfunded mandates to our local schools.

Thirdly, and I will talk about this a little bit more, we target new resources, new investments, new opportunities to some of the poorest children in inner city and rural areas in America that are not getting the same opportunities to a good education as some other students might be getting.

Now, the CBO today is releasing new figures that say over the next 10 years, the Federal surplus will swell to $3.6 trillion. Now, on a cautionary note, ladies and gentlemen, 1 month ago the preliminary figure was $6 trillion, but with the economy slowing down, they have readjusted that by $400 billion in the last month. If we have an energy crisis, if we have a recession, if we have a problem overseas, that could significantly go down from that $5.6 trillion initial guesstimate.

We do not know what it is going to be over the next 10 years. But certainly in this town where people are rushing to increase a tax cut, where they are rushing to throw money at defense, the very first thing that we are going to try to do in this session of Congress is work in a bipartisan way on investments in results of better public education. Certainly we can afford to invest some money into our education system, for quality teachers, for more public school choice, for professional development opportunities for our teachers, and smaller class sizes, things that are going to make a big difference in the quality of the student graduating from school.

Consolidation, accountability, new resources, and less bureaucracy here. I think this is a very good bill to work with the Bush administration and our fellow Republicans in a bipartisan way to finally get ESEA reauthorized.

There are a couple of areas of disagreement that I think our colleagues will probably talk more about. One of those is the falling school; if the school is not adequately preparing, if the school is not adequately requiring, if the school is not adequately making sure that that student is getting good results and learning, then we need to do something about that school.

The Bush administration proposal is to say we are going to give that student a $1,500 voucher to then go to a private school and take it somewhere else. Well, the first problem is, the $1,500 voucher could not really get someone in the door of a private school. They still have a $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 required payment to make for the tuition. Secondly, it starts to take vital money away from that public school that is failing.

The slogan is, “Leave no Child Behind.” Well, one is leaving a school, an entire school, behind with that philosophy. We say in our bill, for a failing school, we are going to demand more. We are going to require more. We are going to remediate that school. We are going to put teachers or principals on probation. We are going to do more to work with empowering parents with public school choice and charter schools and magnet schools and alternative schools, but keep that $1,500 in the public school system.

We also have differences in some other areas that I will not get into on the amount of testing, on the amount of resources that we devote, but we will probably talk more about these ideas as this bill makes its way through. I think there is a great foundation between our bills to begin working together, with 80 percent agreement and bipartisan reauthorization of ESEA.

I will conclude by again saying that I am very, very proud of the people that have worked so hard to put this new Democratic Coalition bill together and look forward to working in a bipartisan way to see that reauthorization of ESEA is a possible stepping stone to working in a bipartisan way on other issues.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I just want to, before calling on my next colleague, amplify the point that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) made about where the new Democrats are coming from on this issue. For years, there has been this sort of frozen public debate going on between Republicans and Democrats, with Democrats arguing that more money needs to be spent and Republicans arguing needs to be more accountability for results; and that as a consequence we have not done anything. We really have not moved forward significantly in either area.

What this bill represents and what the new Democratic Coalition has worked so hard to do is a way to find a middle ground to bridge the gap and recognize what we ought to do is both. We certainly ought to have a more accountable education system that measures results, that tells who is successful and who is not. We also need to invest resources; and that is going to be a major, major topic of conversation between us and the White House, is... how much money are they willing to put into this to help make sure we do not leave any child behind. If we are talking about ratcheting up the tax cut from a trillion to $1.6 trillion to $2 trillion to whatever it winds up as being, I think we need to be able to do with some of those dollars if they were invested in education if we actually made a difference on things like class size and school construction and investing in those poor communities that do not have the access.

I think we need to make sure that the White House shows us a commitment on the investment side as well as on the accountability side. We as New Democrats are trying to do both because we recognize that both need to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND), who is also a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, Congresswoman Evers has been going on these issues for a number of years.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH), for yielding me this time and allowing me this hour for a general discussion about education policy.

As my friend from Indiana pointed out, there is a convergence of energy and interests and anticipation really in doing something good in this session of Congress in regards to reforming the education system in this country.

I am a proud sponsor, as a member of the new Democratic Coalition, of the RRRs program that the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH) has just laid out for us. I think it is a realistic proposal. It is credible, and it is long overdue.

The consolidation aspect is much needed. It will increase flexibility to local school districts so that the decision-makers, those who are intimately involved in reforming the education system, will have an opportunity to implement the reforms that they know will work. Failing that local level, I also recognize importantly enough that we have to be committed to making a major investment if we are going to see the results that we are demanding now from our school districts and the administrators.

This is a very exciting proposal. It is a very good starting point. Many of the features that we have in this RRR proposal are very similar to what the new administration and President Bush just announced. In fact, last week, Thursday I had the opportunity to go to the White House and sit down and have a good conversation with the President, along with a few other members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, Congresswoman Evers has been on this area for a number of years. And there are a lot of good proposals that President Bush is bringing to the table on education reform, not least of which is his philosophy that there is a Federal role in the education system, in the education of our children.

It was a philosophy that in recent years, at least, we were fighting on the Committee on Education and the Workforce. Many of our colleagues in this Chamber were actually advocating shutting down the Department of Education, claiming that there was no Federal role at all to help with local school districts and the resources that they need. But improvements that we would like to see. President Bush is saying, no, that is wrong. There is a role. We have a responsibility, and there is a way for us to work together in a bipartisan fashion to assist those school districts in making these reforms.

There are also some points of contention, issues that we are going to seriously debate and get into as we get into the formulation of education policy, the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act that we have to get accomplished this year in committee; not least of which is the whole idea of accountability, and what people mean by that, because it has various definitions. It has various meanings.

I think what we have with the RRR proposal from the new Democratic Coalition is a requirement that we want to see student performance measured so that we can take corrective action, that we take remedial action for students who are detected as falling behind, so that they are not left behind as they progress through the education system.

I would hate for us in this Congress, this regime of sanctions and penalties, accountability which merely establishes a regime of sanctions and penalties, and I am afraid that with the private voucher proposal in the President's plan that we could very easily get to take that step where we would be draining precious and limited resources from the public education system that we want to support and put it into the private sphere, where there are, granted, a lot of good private schools doing wonderful things in the country. But let us face it, the private school system does not have the same type of system of accountability that the public school systems currently have. Nor would we necessarily want to attach strings and a lot of accountability with the funds that go into private and, especially parochial, education.

I am very concerned about the separation of church-and-state issues if accountability follows the Federal dollars. What I really have not been aired all that much when one gets into the private voucher plan, and one that we really need to be more careful about in our discussions as we go forward. There are some very attractive features in what the President is calling for, what we are calling for in our education plan, the emphasis on professional development programs so we have the quality teachers in the classroom, which is perhaps the second most important determinant of how well our students are going to perform, right after parental involvement.

I hope we do not lose sight of the necessity of investing in professional development of the school leaders, principals, superintendents, the administrators. Everyone who has been involved in the school system realizes how important it is to have quality people in those positions to quarter the education system and to provide guidance and implement the reforms that are necessary. The President, too, is emphasizing, as President Clinton before him, early childhood literacy programs which, again, received a lot of enthusiasm in this House over the last 4 years, the Reading Excellence Act. President Bush is now asking for a ramp up in early childhood literacy programs, and I applaud him for that, but there is one area that hopefully we can embrace and form bipartisan consensus around, and that is for this United States Congress to live up to the Federal responsibility and obligation to fully fund special education costs throughout the country.

The obligation is over 40 percent of the special education costs that school districts have to incur in order to educate these children. These children deserve to be educated. They deserve to get a good education, but it requires an investment of the precious and limited resources from every state. So let us face it, the private school system has to be reforming if we are going to help those children. We have the money to do that. These children deserve to be educated. They deserve to get a good education, but it requires an investment of the precious and limited resources from every state. So let us face it, the private school system has to be reforming if we are going to help those children. We have the money to do that.
Secondly, if we take the Social Security Trust Fund and the Medicare Trust Fund out of that equation, and hopefully we are going to have consensus on that this year, that $5.6 trillion is suddenly reduced to $2.6 trillion. If we are starting with a premise of a $2 trillion reduction, it is true that we have very little for all the other domestic policy items which will be receiving attention, increasing defense spending, farm relief again because the farmers are suffering, the education investment that many of us would like to see: but also I think we are hopeful and hedging our bets on whether or not the economy is going to continue to perform and produce these surpluses that these tax figures are being based upon right now. So we face some challenges. I think we have a lot of area of common ground and some good common agreement in which to start from.

There are going to be some contentious issues. I think the RRR proposal that is going to be discussed today is very comparable, in fact, to what a lot of moderate Republicans in Congress have been advocating for some time as well. I feel a political coalition can be formed quite easily, as long as we deal upfront with some of the more contentious issues and not allow that to bring down what could be a very good education year here in the United States Congress. I commend again my friend, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. Smith), for the work that he has put in over the last couple of years in being able to put an education proposal of this nature together. There have been a lot of people involved and hopefully good things will emanate from it.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate all of the help from the gentleman, and support and work on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, now I would like to recognize the Chairman from New York (Mrs. McCarthy), also a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I stand here very proudly as a co-sponsor of the new Democratic Coalition on supporting the RRRs. I sit on the Committee on Education and the Workforce and for the last 4 years we certainly have been trying to bring together new initiatives on how we are going to bring the best education to all of our children. One of our children’s needs is that the RRRs program is a program that can work for all of our children across this country.

Politicians are very good at telling us what they are going to do, and what they are going to do. I really hope this time around that we are going to have an educational policy that is going to be there for our children.

Each and every one of us comes from different districts. We all represent different parts of this country; but when it comes down to education, the American people want us to do something. The RRRs education program, as far as I am concerned, will answer all of the problems that we are having across this Nation.

I want to just say a little thing on the side. Thank goodness the majority of our schools in this country are doing something. Please look at the states that are talking about dealing with schools that need extra help. I have a school in my district, Roosevelt School District, and they were taken over by the Stare a couple of years ago and they are making strides. I think that is such a strong opponent of having a voucher system. If we start losing monies that go into the Roosevelt School system, what are we going to do with all the other kids?

We are going to leave so many children behind. Vouchers sound wonderful. They do sound wonderful. They are not the answers. Federal dollars have to go into our public schools.

A question that I certainly hope that someone will be able to answer for me. If it gets passed, and I am hoping that it does because it is such a strong opponent of having a voucher system. If we start losing money that goes into our public schools. We are going to leave so many children behind. Vouchers sound wonderful. They do sound wonderful. They are not the answers. Federal dollars have to go into our public schools.

The bottom line is, the American people want to have a good education. When we talk about 7 percent of our Federal dollars going into our schools, if we really think about that, it is not very much that goes back to our school systems. But the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. Kind) and I agree totally on IDEA. Those are the schools, unfortunately, that are getting hurt the most of this money. The money is going out to these children who learn differently. That is all it is. They learn differently. If the schools could be freed up for the monies that they have to spend to educate these children, then school districts would have more local control on educating those students that are considered “normal.”

Let me say something about that. We have such an opportunity in the next two months to do probably one of the best things that we can for this country and for the future of this country, and that is passing an educational program that is going to go to our neediest children, which our program does; it will go to the neediest children, which our program does.

So as we go forward in the months ahead, I think the RRRs educational proposal, which is something that has been out here for a couple of years; this is not new. We have been trying to push this for a couple of years. Hopefully, we will see our program go through, and then we will be doing the right thing for the American children, and we will be doing the right thing for our country.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman. It is now my pleasure to call on one of our new colleagues, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. Davis) who worked in her State on educational issues and now has the opportunity to bring that knowledge to the Federal level.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to be an original cosponsor of this bill, Improving Education Through the RRRs. Increasing the excellence of our children’s education must be our national priority.

This approach to funding and focusing on educational reform is a philosophical framework for how to keep our eyes on that goal.

First, it recognizes that a large increase in funding for education is not only critical and possible, but that money must be directed where it is most needed. Title I funds not only deserve the 50-percent increase called for, but also are protected from nonprogram uses. The bill requires accountability of the results of these programs.

Second, there is an emphasis on promoting the recruitment and retention of high-quality teachers and principals. This is fundamental to improving teaching, particularly in California where less than half of the needed new teachers are being trained in our universities. There are many successful programs to recruit new teachers and support them, and they deserve new funding.

In California, we have supported a very successful mentoring program for teachers in their first 2 years. Individuals who enter teaching as a second career also need extensive mentoring and training support when they enter the classroom. These are costly programs and need additional funding which is included in this bill.

Retaining the best teachers is also important. As a member of the California legislature, I sponsored substantial one-time awards for teachers who have achieved National Board for Professional Teaching Standards Certification, and, as a result, the number of candidates for this demanding program which demonstrates excellence in the classroom have doubled annually. This is one example of the type of program which would be eligible for funding under this bill. It inspires excellence and rewards the best professionals.

Public recognition of professionalism is another way to improve retention of our most valued teachers.

Targeting funding to recruitment of minority teachers also critical. The Next Troops to Teachers program can be a model for the much larger Transition to Teaching program called for in this legislation.
Third, as prudent stewards, we must insist on accountability of the programs we fund. California has initiated many of the types of accountability called for under this proposal. As a result, I am keenly aware of the care which must be taken in aligning these testing with State and locally developed curricula and of moving toward testing which evaluates many different types of student performance. I look forward to working on refining these programs so that they also are effective.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill establishes the appropriate framework for improving education, and I commend it to my colleagues.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, we are joined by another freshman Member, the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF), who has also worked on education issues on the State level and now is taking that expertise to the Federal level.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in urging support for the Public Education Reinvestment, Reinvention, and Responsibility Act. This bill invests more in education, $35 billion over 5 years, for title one programs and disadvantaged communities where many young people, through no fault of their own, are getting a poor education, and are failing to meet their full potential because of our failures. It provides more for charter schools, for magnet schools and innovative public school choice programs, and also to help children unlock the door of opportunity that is the English language.

How do we make this investment? Are we simply throwing good money after bad? Are we spending more without doing more? The answer is no. This bill does that.

The bill also provides local schools with greater flexibility to use local innovation to meet local needs. It does this by consolidating a myriad of Federal programs into five national goals. I introduced legislation not unlike this in the State legislature in California.

It is more constructive as it succeeds with that bill, consolidating 30 categorical education programs into one. Each of the special interests that had grown up around that particular categorical program came to oppose it. It became very apparent to me, as I think it has to many in this country, that some of the educational programs, although started for good reason and with the best of intentions, have come to exist and persist for themselves, not for the benefit of the children they were intended to benefit, but to manipulate the suppliers, the vendors, of those materials of that approach, and this has to end if we are going to change public education for the better.

This proposal consolidates those programs, develops a system based on accountability, not accountability simply that the money is spent for its intended purpose, but rather accountability that give you flexibility, you give us good results.

Under the current law, there is no accountability. That has to change if we are going to improve the quality of a public school system. We have to demand more of our legislators, more of our parents, ourselves, and this bill goes a long way to doing exactly that.

Why all the focus on education in the last few years? We have a proud heritage in this country of public education. It has always been the great equalizer providing opportunity to the poorest among us, tapping the human potential of every child, and giving them a chance to succeed, a chance to enjoy about the accountability we are losing that heritage to schools that underperform, with children who fail or drop out or perhaps, saddest of all, who graduate and cannot read, who get a diploma and cannot write. Jefferson once said that “America is a place to live both ignorant and free expects what never was and never will be.” Today’s bill does honor to the father of public education, and restores our commitment to public education and civic education.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the work of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH), the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), and others; and I urge the support of my colleagues.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want to pick up on one of the points that the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF) mentioned provisions and how they are currently in the Federal law and what we would like to do to change them to. Ironically, right now, there is no accountability in terms of the Federal money spent.

The current law mandates that a National Government does not periodically do audits of school districts, but when they go in, what they look at is, did you spend the money the way we told you to, and did you fill out the paperwork that proves that. The one thing that those Federal audits do not care about is whether or not the children are succeeding, whether or not the school is working. That is a ridiculous situation, putting process over results.

What we try to do here is we change that. We will give them the flexibility to spend the money to succeed, but we are also going to keep track of whether or not you are succeeding and if you are not, we are going to figure out a way to help you succeed. It is much better than the paperwork approach used right now.

Mr. Speaker. I yield to a new Member of Congress, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN).

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address one of the most pressing issues facing the Nation and my district, and that is education. Having just been elected to Congress in November, I have spent many months traveling across the second district of Washington State meeting with local school officials from Everett to Blaine, from Concrete to Coupeville and up in the San Juan Islands as well, and the message from them is clear: they want local control of education. Again and again I hear that people are greatly concerned about public education. They are concerned about the quality of education and preparing our kids today to compete in the job market of tomorrow. They want accountability. If taxpayers support education, they simply want their money to be spent more wisely.

Today, therefore, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the RRRs bill, the Reinvention, Reinvestment, and Responsibility Act of 2001. This bill is a new approach to Federal education policy, one that refocuses our resources and our resolve on raising academic achievement. The RRRs streamline the more than 50 Federal education programs into five performance-based grants. It increases the Federal investment in education, but better targets those funds. Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, it increases the accountability for results with Federal tax dollars, focusing these monies on our local school districts.

The approach of the RRRs plan that we introduced today is simple: invest in reform and insist on results. We want to give States and local school districts the resources that they need to help every student learn at a high level.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, does not promote vouchers, but the targeting of Federal dollars to the communities that need them the most. In fact, I believe that vouchers are the wrong answer to the right question: What are we going to do to improve our public schools? The RRRs bill, in my opinion, is a key step in improving our public schools.

In the new economy, it is a time to take an approach to education in a new way, so I join with my fellow Democrats and colleagues in supporting the RRRs legislation; and I look forward to working in a bipartisan fashion here on the floor of the House with Republicans and with the administration in passing the RRRs here in Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, that concludes our presentation. I am going to conclude with a few remarks of my own, but I want to thank my colleagues who joined me here today to introduce our proposal on Federal education policy, the RRRs proposal that was introduced today as a bill. I particularly want to thank the Speaker, the gentleman from Concrete to Coupeville, they have done to forge this middle ground on education, to stop the either/or partisan rhetoric that has been going on.
I am joined by the person who has done more work on this than anybody, the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), the gentleman and I actually introduced this bill last session of Congress. It did not go anywhere then, but it is moving forward now.

There is some change here and I think we have a real opportunity to move forward on that.

Mr. DOOLEY of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH) for yielding to me, and I am just delighted to be here in support of our three Rs proposal. As Democrats, we recognize that we have to make reforms in the way that the Federal Government is participating as a partner with our local school districts, and what we are doing with this proposal is understanding that it is incumbent upon us to invest more in our public schools and investing those dollars in a way which we are sure are going to benefit those students that are facing the greatest challenges.

I represent a district in the central valley of California. It is one of the lowest income districts in the State. There is a lot of farm worker families that are struggling to make ends meet.

Our school districts are struggling financially, and what this proposal will ensure is that those children of farm workers are not going to be left behind, that the Federal Government is going to be there in order to provide them with the resources those school districts need to ensure that they are going to have the opportunity to excel academically.

But basically as a covenant that we are creating here with our local school districts, by providing these additional dollars, we are going to be demanding more. We are going to be demanding that those schools be held accountable for improving the academic performance of those students that are going to require that we see improvement on an annual basis of these children and their performance in their classrooms.

We also are convinced that while we are providing these additional resources, we are providing for greater accountability that we have to have confidence in our local school districts, to do what they think is best in order to provide for this quality academic environment. Thus, we are giving those school districts flexibility.

We have consolidated over 45 programs down into five revenue streams, giving those school districts the ability to develop those programs that are going to meet some of their unique challenges. So that in return for that investment of additional dollars, in return for giving those school districts greater flexibility, we are going to demand the greater accountability, because we believe, as President Bush does, that we cannot leave any child behind.

We disagree with President Bush on a number of his proposals, but where there is a lot of in common, there are some significant differences is that with our proposal, when we have a school that is not meeting the academic performance that we believe is appropriate, is that we provide them with additional resources, both in personnel and funding to help see improvement there. But if they continue to fail, we then provide for the option of those school children to go into other public schools.

We provide for public school choice. We also allow that school district to convert that school to a charter school so they can try different and more innovative approaches to improving the academic environment there.

President Bush takes a little bit different approach, and basically he would abandon those schools after 3 years and give that child a $1,500 voucher that could be used at another public school or a private school. Many of us think that is a false promise, because a $1,500 voucher to a farm worker child in my district that does not have a private school option, or the private school option they have is much more expensive than that, it is really a false promise.

We are hoping as we move forward with this debate on education that we can narrow or find the common ground that is between President Bush's proposal and what we are offering today, because we think, we are not that far apart, with the exception of the utilization and implementation of vouchers by President Bush. Our 3 Rs proposal is one which I am convinced will provide the flexibility and resources that our local schools need, will ensure that our children will have a higher quality education, and will ensure that those children that are in some of the most struggling economic areas of our country will have the resources that they need to ensure that they will have the academic opportunities that are going to be so important in their future.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH), I really appreciate all the work the gentleman has done there and all the cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), who is the prime sponsor actually of the 3 Rs proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank all of my colleagues once again for their broad support. I think we have the opportunity in the next several months to make some very positive changes in Federal education policy, and I think this bill is an excellent place to start.
Mr. Speaker, I was there less than a week before Congolese President Laurent Kabila was assassinated. We met on January 8 in the presidential palace. From Kinshasa, I traveled by plane 1,000 miles to what is called the Great Lakes Region in eastern Congo and spent a day in the town of Goma and a day in the town of Bukavu. I met with the rebel leadership, women’s groups, clergy, average Congolese citizens and representatives of a number of non-governmental organizations. I also met with the American missionaries. And I might say, few of the people that we spoke with support the rebel leadership in this part of the Congo.

Life is not easy for the average Congolese. There are few schools or hospitals and little potable water. Children go hungry. Women live in fear. I heard horrific stories and tales of rape and abuse by different armed forces and soldiers who come into one village, take the food, rape the women, do different things. Three days later a different group comes in. So life for the average person, particularly women and children, is very grim.

Soldiers are everywhere; most are young boys or men carrying automatic weapons. I visited Rwanda to learn more about the reconciliation process the country is going through following a genocide of more than 800,000 ethnic Tutsis in 1994. My trip to Burundi followed for similar reasons.

From 1993 to the year 2000, violence between Hutu and Tutsi ethnic factions in Burundi has left more than 250,000 people dead and created hundreds of thousands refugees. In Rwanda, the first place we visited was Murambi Technical School, which is now a genocide site.

The world seems to forget, but over the course of 100 days, in the spring of 1994, more than 800,000 Tutsis and moderate Hutus were systematically murdered in Rwanda as part of ethnic genocide. Some 50,000 people were slaughtered in the villages near the Murambi Technical School that we visited.

Contorted skeletons now rest on wooden tables in 18 of the school’s classrooms. Some are missing limbs. Others have their heads cut off if trying to protect themselves from their killers.

One room was filled with just skulls, and they were hacked to death with machetes and most skulls are fragmented.

In Kigali, the capital of Rwanda, I met with President Paul Kagame, members of the Parliament and NGOs. Rwanda needs to pull its troops out of the Congo as do the other countries that have their troops there.

Having said that, I do understand the security concerns that the Rwandans have, particularly with what took place with regards to the genocide, but some now appear to have other motives.

They have fought, at least the Rwandans and the Ugandans, have fought at least three times over diamonds and other minerals near the town of Kisangani. And Kisangani is far from the border where they are threatened by EXFAR and Interahamwe.

I next visited Burundi primarily to speak at a prayer breakfast attended by Hutus and Tutsis. Like Rwanda, Burundi has experienced ethnic violence between the Hutus and Tutsis, and more than 250,000 people have been killed over the last decade. I also met with President Pierre Buyoya and members of the Parliament, who have troops in the country, was very impressed with the efforts of reconciliation taking place both in Rwanda and also in Burundi.

The last leg of my trip took us to Sudan, my fourth visit there in 11 years. Over the past two decades, a Civil War pitting the Khartoum government against the black Christians and others in the southern half of the country has cost more than 2 million lives in war and famine-related deaths, and millions more have been displaced. Over the last 17 years, over 2 million people, most black Christians and animists have died as a result of the Khartoum government in the North and with irreverence against those in the South. Regrettably, the situation in Sudan is no better today than in 1989, the first time I traveled to the war-torn region.

The Khartoum regime continues to persecute members of different religious minorities, Christians, Muslim and animist, under the auspices of what they call the Sharia law.

Since 1983, the government of Sudan has been waging a brutal war against factions in the South who are fighting for self determination and religious freedom. The Committee on Conscience of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum has issued a genocide warning for Sudan. It is important for the people in the West to know if the Holocaust Museum believes it is that significant, then those of us in Congress and in the administration should also take note of the genocide warning issued with regard to Sudan.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, today in the House, during the debate on the resolution on the day of remembrance for the victims of the Holocaust, we took time to speak out to remind the people of Europe that took place six decades ago. We need to remember. We need to speak out. Our voices should be raised today about the genocide taking place in Sudan.

Mr. Speaker, I visited the southern town of Yei where the Khartoum government last November committed one of the most heinous acts of violence in the war, bombing a busy marketplace in the middle of the afternoon. Nineteen people were killed, 42 were injured, 14 bombs were rolled out of the back of a Soviet-made Antonov bomber on November 20, the year 2000. No one was spared, women, children, young and old.

I also saw a video that was given to me by an NGO when we were there taken of the bombing. The marketplace was packed. People had nowhere to hide. Some of those killed had their limbs blown off. Women and children were screaming as they witnessed the carnage. The photograph here shows one of the victims, one of the 19 victims of the bombing.

Now, this is a civilian village. It is not a military target, and yet the Khartoum government of Sudan sends bombers over to bomb innocent women and children in the villages.

Now, if you look at the definition of genocide that is recognized, clearly what is taking place in the Holocaust Museum is accurate: genocide in Southern Sudan, and here is an example. Yei is hundreds of miles from the front lines, not a military target, but on a daily basis a high-altitude Antonov bomber passes over the town. People are terrified by the bombing runs. You can see it in their eyes. You can hear it in their voices. Ask anyone what concerns them most and the refrain is “the Antonov bomber.”

No one knows where the bombs are being dropped because the plane is sometimes beyond eyesight. Sometimes the planes fly overhead to play mind games with the residents of the town. Sometimes bombs randomly fall from the sky. They have hit churches, homes, hospitals, and sometimes the bomb sites are immediately cleared of debris and the buildings are damaged and the bodies are left in the war to kill women and children.

The Khartoum Government has doubled its spending on arms since it began exporting oil; and as I said, more people are going to die with the additional weapons that are being purchased.

From my observations on this trip, we have several recommendations for the new Bush administration move quickly to show an interest in Africa. A Presidential task force could be created to study Africa which could be made up of experts both in and out of government who have an expertise and interest and a sense of caring with regard to what is taking place in Africa, particularly with regard to women and children.

The panel should make a top-to-bottom review of what policy the United States should take toward Africa, particularly sub-Saharan Africa. It should be charged with offering practical and strategic insight into the promotion of democracy, the prevention and spread of AIDS. Everywhere we went, the issue of AIDS came up over and over; in dealing with other diseases and economic development and trade and education and human rights and religious freedom and other aspects of improving every life in Africa. The panel should submit a country-by-country analysis as well as a regional analysis about the problems and challenges on what the United States should be doing with regard to Africa. There are many people in our government in the State Department and other agencies who have deep personal knowledge of Africa, and if they could be joined by some in academia and others to do this on a fast-track basis so we now know what the policy should be, how we deal country by country and region by region and problem by problem.

Debt relief also must be addressed. Today I introduced the Responsible Debt Relief and Reform Act, legislation that will provide incentives to countries to institute democratic reforms and basic structures of civil society in order to receive debt relief. The problem is that it is the poorest countries in the world and the poorest countries who suffer as a result of the government debt. Now, this has to be done in a way that as we forgive debt, they, an individual country, does things like bring to the bank and the government and the people of Africa, freedom of the press, freedom of movement; and this has to be done in a way that does not line the pockets of the dictators and the corrupt.

Regarding the area of central Africa with the problems of Congo, President Kabila on January 16, the situation in Central Africa is more complicated than ever. Kabila’s son, Joseph, has been tapped the successor; but it is unclear how all of the Congo’s rivals will react. Nevertheless, the conviction is clear and the early signal that it cares about the fate of Congo because I think we may have ignored it too long. And when you listen to what the new president, Joseph Kabila, says, he appears to be open and here is the opportunity. I said earlier that 1.7 million people in the Congo have died. There are millions more who are in the bush in a third of the Congo that cannot even be dying on a daily basis and not food, and so there are many more that we cannot even get into the region to find out how bad life is for them.

I also recommend that foreign armies be publicly pressured to leave the Congo. In addition, something must be done to disarm and demobilize and resettle the former Rwandan Army and militia forces and the rebel factions warring in the Congo. When we ask the Rwandan Government to pull its soldiers out, we also have to have some mechanism whereby the Rwandans are comfortable that their border will be protected and those who did the mass murders and the atrocities cannot do those things again. There are ways of doing it with balance.

The United Nations should put together an assessment team to develop a strategy for withdrawal. The United States must forcefully speak out and act creatively on this issue. Our failure to speak out during the genocide in Rwanda in 1994 was wrong. The failure of the United States and the failure of the West not to speak out on the issue of genocide in 1994 was wrong and will go down as a dark day as historians look back on that period. We should now remain silent on the issue of foreign troops because nearly 2 million children have already perished in the Congo over the last few years and that number should not be allowed to continue to multiply.

Regarding Sudan, I believe there should be a major effort on the part of the United States, the United Nations and the European Union to bring an end to the war in Sudan and peace with justice. Peace with justice has to be a priority of the Bush administration. Sudan is a litmus test; and as history looks back for reasons about human rights, about civil rights, and about religious persecution and about hunger, it should be viewed in terms of this decade’s South Africa. The same amount of time and energy and resources should be put into ending the war in Sudan that was put into bringing democracy and freedom to South Africa.

I recommend that a full-time high-profile envoy be appointed by President Bush to help bring peace to Sudan. This must be a person of national stature such as former Secretary of State Jim Baker or former U.N. Ambassador Richard Holbrooke.

On January 13, the last morning I was in Yei, panic set in. Psychological mind games with the residents of the town. Government-sponsored militia torch houses and food supplies, and getting food and supplies through Southern Sudan are attacked, livestock is destroyed, farmers are chased. and if a plane comes down, we have an immediate discussion about the war in Sudan and peace with justice. Peace with justice has to be a priority of the Bush administration. Sudan is a litmus test; and as history looks back for reasons about human rights, about civil rights, and about religious persecution and about hunger, it should be viewed in terms of this decade’s South Africa. The same amount of time and energy and resources should be put into ending the war in Sudan that was put into bringing democracy and freedom to South Africa.

Peace with justice has to be a priority of the Bush administration. Sudan is a litmus test; and as history looks back for reasons about human rights, about civil rights, and about religious persecution and about hunger, it should be viewed in terms of this decade’s South Africa. The same amount of time and energy and resources should be put into ending the war in Sudan that was put into bringing democracy and freedom to South Africa.

I recommend that a full-time high-profile envoy be appointed by President Bush to help bring peace to Sudan. This must be a person of national stature such as former Secretary of State Jim Baker or former U.N. Ambassador Richard Holbrooke.

Regarding Sudan, I believe there should be a major effort on the part of the United States, the United Nations and the European Union to bring an end to the war in Sudan and peace with justice. Peace with justice has to be a priority of the Bush administration. Sudan is a litmus test; and as history looks back for reasons about human rights, about civil rights, and about religious persecution and about hunger, it should be viewed in terms of this decade’s South Africa. The same amount of time and energy and resources should be put into ending the war in Sudan that was put into bringing democracy and freedom to South Africa.

I recommend that a full-time high-profile envoy be appointed by President Bush to help bring peace to Sudan. This must be a person of national stature such as former Secretary of State Jim Baker or former U.N. Ambassador Richard Holbrooke.
When Tony Lake was working on the Ethiopian-Eritrean war, he was the special envoy, and when he needed something done, he was able to get President Clinton to do it. The envoy must be someone that the President and the Secretary of State have confidence in, so I support Secretary Powell in Sudan and in central Africa. The figures are hard to comprehend, but more than 4 million people, more than 4 million, a population larger than some of our largest cities, have died in Sudan and in the three million number is staggering and the number is increasing. With more weapons being purchased, it is increasing more. With more child soldiers running rampant through the Congo and Sudan it is increasing more.

We cannot, we in the Congress and those in the Bush administration, cannot allow the suffering to continue without trying, without making an effort. The Bush administration has a unique opportunity to make a difference in Africa.

Throughout my trip, the constant refrain I heard was that the United States just needed to show that it cared. No one, no one asked for American troops to be deployed. No one. Our nation needs, supports, believes that American soldiers have to be involved in any way. They just want America to use its efforts, and they want America to send a signal that it will begin to focus on the plight of Africa before another generation is lost. 2 million people killed, where there is slavery, where there is terrorism problems. Many terrorist groups who operate in the Middle East have training camps and operate around Khartoum.

Where the problem of hunger is growing, Egypt and other friendly countries like that who are friends of the United States should be urged to be engaged and be involved to help bring about the peace, as should our allies in Europe.

I also believe it is important for the United States to support systems of local governance and sustenance in southern Sudan. Operation Lifeline of Sudan, which has cost billions, is subject to the control of the government of Sudan and it is manipulated by the Khartoum government to suit its objectives. The government claims that its territory is violated by foreign NGOs in the south trying to help the people it claims as citizens. And until the fighting actually ends and there is peace, the United States should strongly support the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement.

In conclusion, from what I saw on the trip, I believe the Bush administration and the Congress, working together, have a unique opportunity to make a real difference in Africa and in Sudan, and now is the time to act.

I was also glad to learn that the African bureau was the first section area our new Secretary of State Colin Powell visited at the State Department.

That is a small step, but it was an extremely positive one. I am also pleased that Secretary Powell addressed Africa during his confirmation hearings. Africa and the world is watching. We can provide hope and opportunity to these people who have suffered so much, particularly in southern Sudan and in central Africa. I believe the Bush administration must be encouraged to become more engaged.

Egypt, Egypt, for example, has tremendous influence over the Khartoum regime. The United States Government, the American taxpayer, everyone must ask, why is there, should we know that we have given $45 billion in foreign aid to Egypt since the Camp David Accords were signed in 1978. Over $45 billion. We should use this leverage. Egypt should not be sitting by on the sidelines when this war is raging in Sudan. There are over 2 million people killed, where there is slavery, where there is terrorism problems.

Many terrorist groups who operate in the Middle East have training camps and operate around Khartoum.

Where the problem of hunger is growing, Egypt and other friendly countries like that who are friends of the United States should be urged to be engaged and be involved to help bring about the peace, as should our allies in Europe.

IN OPPOSITION TO CONFIRMATION OF SENATOR ASHCROFT FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it gives me, I want to say great pleasure; but I do not know if it is great pleasure that I have as I stand here this afternoon. I stand here and hope to be joined by a number of my colleagues in opposition to the confirmation of Senator John Ashcroft for Attorney General. This special order today will be dedicated to opposing that confirmation.

In the wake of the election calamity in Florida, we find ourselves forced into yet another battle to defend the tenets of our Constitution, equal protection and fairness for all. This unfortunate situation arises only a few weeks after the President-elect promised to be a uniter, not a divider; to be the President of all Americans, not just the minority who voted for him. Sadly, the nomination of John Ashcroft to be this Nation's Attorney General makes those words ring hollow.

If President Bush truly wishes to unite this country, his selection of John Ashcroft is a puzzling one. If, on the other hand, his goal is to appease a small minority of Americans who view the principles of equal protection and fairness for all Americans with disdain, he could find no better candidate for Attorney General than John Ashcroft.

The Ashcroft nomination does nothing to move this country towards much-needed healing. In fact, Senator Ashcroft has openly rejected those members of his own party who speak of conciliation and compromise and has fanatically urged the encroachment of conservatism. Senator Ashcroft's public behavior and exhibits hostility to the very laws and policies that protect the civil rights of all individuals in our society. More importantly, Senator Ashcroft has revealed a troubling lack of integrity in his attempts to use the Senate confirmation process to pressure voters to force his personal agenda into public policy and law by whatever means necessary, including personal attacks and distortions of truth.

Sadly, he has extended his proclivity for mischaracterization into his Senate confirmation hearings, where he blatantly distorted his own record and history in hopes of convincing this Senate that the partisan zealot we have come to know has become a rational, fair, public servant. We should not be fooled.

There are a number of reasons to oppose Senator Ashcroft, but his appalling record on civil rights alone makes him unqualified for this job. No one would entrust the home of a caretaker who has made repeated attempts to burn it to the ground. Similarly, it makes no sense to place our civil rights laws in the hands of a man who has shown an outright hostility to the very notion of civil rights for all.

For example, Senator Ashcroft voted against the Hate Crimes Prevention Act and opposes any form of affirmative action. He eagerly accepted an honorary degree from Bob Jones University, vigorously opposed school desegregation ordered by the Federal courts in Missouri. Senator Ashcroft also praised Southern Partisan Magazine, which has been called neosegregationist, and called Confederate soldiers 'patriots.'

Many of Senator Ashcroft's supporters, in an attempt to sweep this abysmal record under the rug, insist that he should be judged not on his recent actions, but solely on his character. However, even if we were to disregard this other extensive evidence of his unfitness and limit our decision to his character, he badly fails the test... as well. For example, in the Senate Committee on the Judiciary earlier this month, Mr. Ashcroft repeatedly and blatantly misrepresented or evaded the facts of his own record. He wants this job so badly that he is willing to misstate the truth in order to obtain it.

Senator Ashcroft’s willingness to jetison honesty and integrity to achieve his political ends is nothing new. As a member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary he was well known for viciously attacking candidates whose political views did not agree with his extremist ideas. He opposed the confirmation of two highly qualified attorneys, Marsha Berzon and Richard Paez to the Federal Courts of Appeals. The most recent offense was his dishonest and cynical campaign against a Federal judicial nomination of a highly qualified African-American Supreme Court Judge, Ronnie White. He demonstrated a disturbing lack of integrity by distorting and misrepresenting the press and his colleagues in the Senate in order to sabotage White’s nomination to a Federal District Court.

His history and past behavior of twisting facts and law to conform to his own political views, reveals his unfitness to serve as this country’s top law enforcement official. My legal experience as a judge and prosecutor taught me that the law is not often clearly defined and in such cases, interpretation by the person enforcing it. That is why I am so concerned about Senator Ashcroft’s nomination. He said over and over again, in the Senate confirmation hearings, that he would be willing to enforce the law when the law was clear and convincing. What I am worried about is what happens when the law is not clear and convincing.

As the Attorney General, Senator Ashcroft would be vested with significant discretion, having oversight of some 5,000 U.S. attorneys throughout these United States. And throughout these United States, they are required to follow the policy of the Attorney General. Let me just give an example. When Janet Reno served as Attorney General, one of the programs she had in place was Trigger Lock. The purpose of Trigger Lock was to enforce certain penalties against those who carried guns. This was a policy that passed throughout the United States.

What I worry about is, should Senator Ashcroft become the Attorney General, what policies he will put in place that will pass throughout the country. What policies will he put in place that might inhibit someone because of their sexual preference; that might inhibit someone because of their religion; that might inhibit someone because of their race; that might inhibit someone as a result of their choice to speak on a particular issue. Now, while the law is clear, it is clear that he will follow the law because he knows a billion people will be watching him. But all prosecutors, all attorneys general are permitted to make decisions that will never see the light of day, and those decisions are the ones we are concerned about, where he is vested with discretion, based on his past experience and his past service as not only a governor, as an Attorney General, but as a senator. That is why we are worried. Based on his extensive record, I have no confidence that Mr. Ashcroft is capable of interpreting our Nation’s laws in a way that furthers the best interests of the American people rather than his own ideology.

The Attorney General must have the trust of the American people. Clearly, he does not. Recently, an unprecedented nationwide campaign of coalitions, representing over 200 national organizations, launched the Stop Ashcroft Crusade. Not surprisingly, many of Mr. Ashcroft’s supporters have attempted to vilify this coalition by incorrectly labeling it an assembly of marginal left-leaning interest groups. However, this coalition represents a broad base of American citizens and wide-ranging mainstream issues, including civil and human rights, health, women’s rights and choice, gun control, workplace concerns and religious freedom, and cannot be dismissed so cavalierly.

The depth and breadth of opposition to Mr. Ashcroft is best exemplified by those who know him best, his own constituency in his home State of Missouri, who cutely and hypocritically voted for a deceased candidate rather than endure another 6 years with him as senator. The grim truth is that the record of Senator Ashcroft is not only anti-ethical to the necessary virtues of an effective U.S. Attorney General, it also demonstrates values and belief in direct conflict with the purported philosophy of President Bush.

Mr. Ashcroft is a divider, not a unifier, and by President Bush’s own definition, is unqualified to serve as this Nation’s Attorney General. For this reason, I pray that my colleagues in the Senate will show a commitment to true bipartisanship and show a commitment to the people of these United States and politely and firmly show Mr. Ashcroft the door.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). If the gentlewoman will suspend the rules and require all Members not to characterize or advise the other body on their decision, under the tradition of comity.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Would the Speaker repeat that for me, please.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would urge all Members not to advise the other body as to how they should vote under the rule seeking to establish comity and continued cooperation with the other body.

Mrs. JONES. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to my colleague the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON).

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me and I want to thank her for her leadership in bringing this special order to the floor on this special day when Mr. Ashcroft is indeed before the Senate and in the nomination that the President has made.

I want to speak to the standard that should be used in deciding whether a nominee for Attorney General should be approved. I think it is only fair to ask the job that should be filled. Mr. Ashcroft used, because I believe if we use that standard, then it would be necessary to follow him in voting against a presidential choice.

This is what Mr. Ashcroft himself said. I am quoting from the transcript of proceedings in the nomination of Bill Lan Lee for Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and here is what Mr. Ashcroft himself said: “He has, obviously, the incredibly strong capacities to be an advocate, but I think his pursuit of specific objectives that are important to him limit his capacity to have the balanced view of making the judgments that will be necessary for the person who runs that division.”

This is the standard, Mr. Speaker, if the standard set by Mr. Ashcroft is to be followed, incredibly strong capacities to be an advocate, this is the man with the strongest capacity to be an advocate on the issues he espouses, the issues that are at the United States Senate, then you need somebody, he says, with a more balanced view. Or again, reading from Mr. Ashcroft’s own words again in the Bill Lan Lee proceedings: “I don’t think that this is an issue that really is an issue about the appointments of the President. I think this is an issue about the job that should be filled.”

So Mr. Ashcroft wants us to look at the job that should be filled. So I want to look at the job that should be filled. The job that would be filled is Attorney General of the United States. To fill that job, one has, it seems to me, to meet not only substantive standards such as qualifications, but the appearance to be able to do fairness. After all, they are the chief prosecutor and they have got to have some way create the appearance that, in choosing who to prosecute, in choosing what to pursue, they have done so on a fair basis.

In other words, as we talk about Mr. Ashcroft’s qualifications as a lawyer I concede. Because being Attorney General of the United States is not only about whether they can do it, but whether they give the apparent appearance of fairness in doing it.

As Mr. Ashcroft said, this is an issue about the job that should be filled. The job to be filled here is not simply just the kind of job that my students at Georgetown University Law School, who they go to a law firm to fill. That is how they qualify to go to a job when they are among the best and brightest students, as they are, in the country. To be Attorney General of

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES) for her leadership in her efforts to inform the public with regards to the facts as to why so many of us are opposed to the appointment of John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States.

The Attorney General heads this Nation’s Department of Justice. Extremist views, which Mr. Ashcroft has demonstrated over and over again, will not serve the cause of justice.

It has been said that extremism in defense of liberties is no vice. Well, what about extremism which comes at the expense of liberty?

I believe that the appointment of Mr. Ashcroft really does threaten the liberty of women across this country to make fundamental decisions about their health and their reproductive lives. For at least three times, for example, he stood on the floor of the Senate to vote against a woman’s right to choose, even in the case of rape, incest, or even major injury to the woman.

This is, after all, a man who not only opposes abortion, he has supported legislation that would outlaw many forms of birth control.

We cannot go back to the days when government controlled such essential personal decisions.

We cannot have an Attorney General who so strongly opposes the law of the land which upholds a woman’s right to the privacy of her own body.

I believe that the appointment of Mr. Ashcroft threatens the liberty of minorities across this country.

In his quest for reelection, Mr. Ashcroft besmirched the reputation of a respected African American judge in order to win political points. He has pointed to the old confederacy for his heroes. We cannot go back to those days, either.

I believe that the appointment of Mr. Ashcroft endangers the rights of Americans who face discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. He opposed and sought to block the appointment of Ambassador Hormel, an openly gay and highly qualified nominee, while refusing to even meet with him. He has not only openly opposed gay rights in employment, he has reportedly trampled on the rights of others, such as Judge Ronnie White.

I believe that the appointment of Mr. Ashcroft undermines the rights of Americans who choose to live their lives as they see fit.

I believe that the appointment of Mr. Ashcroft undermines the rights of Americans who choose to live their lives as they see fit.

Evidently, former Senator Ashcroft has had a sudden epiphany, one which miraculously coincided with his confirmation hearing. He has apparently undergone a great conversion on a wide range of issues that he has consistently opposed in the past, issues such as civil rights, school desegregation, voting rights, reproductive choice, and equal protection for all Americans, including those of a different sexual orientation.

But the John Ashcroft that I served with when he was Missouri attorney general and governor was not at the confirmation hearing we witnessed.

I know what John Ashcroft’s real record as a public servant has been because I was there. His public record shows a pattern of extremism that has deprived many children of a quality education. He squandered millions of tax dollars and harmed our State by using racially divisive political tactics.

But for now, I will take Senator Ashcroft at his word as an Attorney General, he will enforce all Federal laws vigorously, regardless of his personal views and past record.

I hope that both President Bush and former Senator Ashcroft are sincere in their intent to use the law as a healing force in this country. And to demonstrate that sincerity, I challenge the President and Senator Ashcroft to put their words into action by renominating Justice Ronnie White to the Federal bench.

Americans are still divided following a bitter election, and this current nomination process has deepened the division across our country. Renominating Justice White would provide a powerful act of healing. It would show the American people that the new administration is serious about bringing our Nation together.

I urge the President to take advantage of this unique opportunity and demonstrate the compassion he so frequently refers to. And I hope that former Senator Ashcroft will encourage him to do so.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Lee).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). The gentlewoman will suspend.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Lee).

I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). The gentlewoman will suspend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). The gentlewoman will suspend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). The gentlewoman will suspend.
The Chair will remind the Member that although Members may air their views concerning nominees for Cabinet posts, it is not in order to urge action on the part of the Senate or to characterize Senate action, in order to preserve the two institutions as separate.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), the chair of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern today about the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft and want to express my appreciation to the leadership of the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. Jones) to give us this opportunity to simply express our concerns.

Let me say at the outset that, on paper, Mr. Ashcroft is the perfect candidate. He was a Member of the Senate, a governor, and an attorney general of the State of Missouri. I am told that he is amiable among his friends and has a good sense of humor. However, in determining the suitability of a nominee to serve as the highest law enforcement official of the country, we must take great care and look below the surface. To his record, I find the truth of his character from the actions he has taken at different times. I have examined that record and believe that Mr. Ashcroft is an unfortunate choice to head the Department of Justice.

I would not make such a statement lightly. As the New York Times said in an editorial which appeared on January 23: “Any reasonable reading of the extensive Judiciary Committee testimonies shows that Mr. Ashcroft’s zeal has overruled prudence in cases that bear directly on issues relevant to the Department of Justice. Mr. Ashcroft’s record on civil rights marks him as out of line with the mainstream of American ideals.”

Poll after poll has shown that the vast majority of Americans favor equal rights for all people. Most Americans take pride in the strength and courage this country has shown to come from the ugly days of segregation and Jim Crow to the America we now know. And while much remains to be done, few are willing to return to the bitter days of yesteryear. Yet it would seem that Mr. Ashcroft does not share these views. Ashcroft has opposed every major civil rights bill during his tenure in the Senate.

Not only has his opposition to civil rights involved attempting to thwart the passage of laws, but it has involved attempting to block confirmation of individuals that he thinks might carry out these laws. During the Clinton administration, he led the fight against the confirmation of Bill Lann Lee as Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights. Despite Mr. Lee’s unqualified and “credentials,” Mr. Ashcroft objected to Mr. Lee because Mr. Lee had opposed proposition 209, a California measure that eliminated affirmative action in California. Mr. Lee was never confirmed.

Even more troubling for someone who seeks to be Attorney General, Mr. Ashcroft’s opposition to civil rights apparently includes blocking lawfully issued orders of Federal courts. When Mr. Ashcroft was the attorney general for Missouri, he was the State’s top lawyer in the key stages of a court battle to end separate and unequal education. Twice after Brown v. the Board of Education, St. Louis schools still needed to come into compliance with the Supreme Court’s ruling in this landmark case. John Ashcroft blocked the parties in the suit from developing a plan for voluntary desegregation and actively obstructed implementation of court orders. He filed appeal after appeal. His efforts caused unusually harsh criticism from the courts.

After repeated delays and failure to comply by Mr. Ashcroft, the court threatened in March of 1981 to hold the State in contempt. In its order, the court order explicitly criticized the State’s continual delays and failure to comply with court orders. The court stated that “the court can only draw one conclusion, the State has as a matter of deliberate policy decided to defy the authority of the court.”

And again in 1981, Ashcroft even opposed a plan by the Reagan administration for voluntary desegregation. Even more troubling, in 1984, he based his gubernatorial primary campaign on his zealous opposition to the voluntary school desegregation plans for St. Louis schools. This is a troubling intersection of the use of the law for political gain.

Yet all of this could be forgiven if Mr. Ashcroft had demonstrated an ability to work with those who differed with him. In the role of Attorney General of the United States, one must meet with many people with divergent interests and complicated agendas. Yet those who seek to be top lawyer for our country require that the person be noble, that they be intelligent, that they understand the world in which they live, and that they understand that this is a very diverse economy and country that we live in. The person should also be sensitive to the needs of the poor, the disenfranchised, and those who need a little bit more help from their government.

This is said to be the greatest country in the world. We are certainly the richest country in the world and in a position to offer more to our citizens than we offer today. The Attorney General being selected either today or tomorrow is lacking in many of the qualities that I believe are necessary in an Attorney General and the main lawyer for our country.

Forty-six years ago, Brown v. Board of Education was first heard in court and passed, a desegregation case that said open up the schools, 46 years ago, so that children could work side by side from different nationalities and partake of a quality education. Brown v. Board of Education. Senator Ashcroft has not only tested the rightfulness of that decision of Brown v. Board of Education which allowed all of America’s children to receive quality education in integrated classrooms but has challenged its validity, and I think that is why we say that he will be the top lawyer for our country.

Roe v. Wade just celebrated over 25 years of sound judgment that this country has lived under for over 25 years. Senator Ashcroft has challenged and tested Roe v. Wade on more than one occasion. It is one thing to have strong beliefs, and we all live in a great society where we can do that and express it, but it is quite another on the one hand to disqualify Bill Lann Lee as our civil rights expert as he did on many occasions because of his views; and here we stand today, hours away of nominating a young man who fears different views that many Americans, and the same barometer is not being used. There is something tragically wrong with that.

It was mentioned earlier that Ambassador Hormel was going for his hearing, asking for a hearing before the Senate so that he could be confirmed. Ambassador Hormel is a homosexual, and everyone knows that and it is all right in our country. We support that. People are what they are. God has given them that right to be that. This country validates that and not one of us because of race, religion, ethnicity or our hetero or homosexual tendencies should keep us from serving our country. It has been documented that Senator Ashcroft would not even give Ambassador Hormel a hearing. That is wrong.

So if you talk about from affirmative action to hate crimes, to access to the process through hearings so that you can be heard, Senator Ashcroft does not meet the test. He should not be confirmed as our Attorney General.

Further, Senator Ashcroft received an honorary degree from Bob Jones University, which is again losing their tax status on more than one occasion because of the policies of that university. Now we have a Senator who received an honorary degree from the university, nominated and soon to be confirmed as our Attorney General. I think it is unfortunate that President Bush made such a volatile announcement and nomination of Senator Ashcroft at this time, at a time when we have just emerged from a turbulent election, when many Americans feel that they were not treated fairly, votes were not counted, not allowed to vote, very angry, even as we speak today, that we come here today as Members of this House of Representatives, standing strong, asking the Senate to take an action that the American people want them to take.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious time. It is not too late to withdraw that nomination. To put an American citizen who will enforce the laws and not try to change them, we hope that you will be sensitive to civil rights issues. Affirmative action has helped us, and we hope that you will allow people hearings who come before your body so that they can be rightfully heard in this just society that we live in. I hope you are listening, Senator Ashcroft. We are going to be watching you.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cooksey). The Chair would advise that although Members may air their views concerning nominees for Cabinet posts, it is not in order to urge action on the part of the Senate or to characterize Senate action. That is in acknowledgment of the independence of the Senate.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES) has 18 minutes.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Waters).

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, after 3 days of confirmation hearings and a Senate Committee on the Judiciary vote, I believe the American people are ready for an Attorney General. I think it is unfortunate that President Bush made such a volatile announcement and nomination of Senator Ashcroft at this time, at a time when we have just emerged from a turbulent election, when many Americans feel that they were not treated fairly, votes were not counted, not allowed to vote, very angry, even as we speak today, that we come here today as Members of this House of Representatives, standing strong, asking the Senate to take an action that the American people want them to take.

Mr. Ashcroft said in 1998 during the confirmation process that Senator Ashcroft has exhibited a zealous opposition to Roe v. Wade while a State and Federal official. In spite of his career-long attempt to overturn Roe, he has stated without credibility during the hearings that the Roe decision is the settled law of the land, which he will enforce. We cannot and should not expect John Ashcroft to retreat in his persistent campaign against a woman's right to reproductive options.

Mr. Ashcroft has said he is a man of principle. Let us take a look at a few more of his principles in action. As Missouri's attorney general and governor, Mr. Ashcroft vigorously opposed voluntary desegregation plans submitted by St. Louis city and county school districts. When those plans were subsequently approved and ordered by the Federal district court, Mr. Ashcroft continued in his opposition, arguing that the Court could not implement an intradistrict remedy, although voluntary, for an intradistrict violation.

In at least three appeals, the Supreme Court rejected Mr. Ashcroft's arguments and saw fit to make it, agreeing with the lower courts that the State was the primary constitutional violator. The appeals court also referred to Missouri's history of school segregation and reminded Mr. Ashcroft that in the past in order to ensure educational opportunities for a racially subjugated black student from St. Louis County into the city's black schools in order to maintain the dual system.
Ian W. Thuras

I, as sponsored and supported by the President of the United States, am proud to stand with those who would speak for the voiceless in America, for there are millions of Americans whose voices will not be heard when the vote is taken and there is such a confirmation.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

POINTS OF ORDER

Mrs. JONES of Ohio, Mr. Speaker, because of some misunderstanding, I would make a point of order and ask unanimous consent to have the time extended to allow the people who I have remaining to speak. Can I do that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentlewoman from Ohio may not be entertained.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. May I inquire of the Speaker why?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under clause 2 of rule XVII, a Member may not address the House for longer than 1 hour.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. This is a point of order. I hope I am not using up my time. Up until one speaker, before this speaker, the speaker was acting on the time; and it was my thought that new time operated; and so I wanted to be able to get some additional time to allow the rest of the people I have here to speak, especially on an issue as important as this confirmation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair regrets any misunderstanding, but here is the practice: A Member who is recognized to control time during special orders may yield to colleagues for such amounts of time as she may deem appropriate, but may not yield blocks of time to be enforced by the Chair. Members regulate the duration of their yielding by reclaiming the time when appropriate.

Mr. CONYERS, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes under Special Orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman may take 5 minutes after the pending hour has expired.

There was no objection.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleagues, the gentlewomen from the great State of Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE and Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas). Mr. Speaker, I thank very much the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES), and I thank her for her leadership on this issue.

I thank my colleagues for coming to the floor of this House at a time when it might be more comfortable for us to just drift off into the distant sunset, but I am always reminded that it is not the test of character where one stands in times of comfort and ease but where one stands in times of battle and challenge. Though there may be no other voices that raise up against the confirmation of the Attorney General of the United States, I am proud to stand with those who would speak for the voiceless in America, for there are millions of Americans whose voices will not be heard when the vote is taken and there is such a confirmation.

My colleagues have chronicled the record and philosophy of this nominee, but the real question becomes to answer the question for America and for this body. What is the value and the importance of the Attorney General and the Department of Justice? Is it not a question of whether we are recklessly opposing someone because they have fundamentally different beliefs than what I have, but the Department of Justice is what it symbolizes. It is the refuge of the voiceless and the disenfranchised.

In the 1960s, in the civil rights movement, as Martin Luther King, Jr., in the segregated South, it was the Justice Department that came riding in to preserve the sanctity of the Union, and for us to be able to express the opposition to a segregated and violent America.

It was the Justice Department and the President of the United States that utilized that leadership when it was necessary for the Little Rock 9 to enter into the high schools so that there could be integration and an implementation of Brown v. Topeka in the classroom before the Supreme Court. And so the Justice Department is the refuge and the Attorney General is the captain.

If this nominee is confirmed, that captain will steer the ship wrong. There will be no refuge for women who under the law have the right to utilize Roe v. Wade. There will be no refuge for those of us who pushed for desegregation of this Nation. There will be no refuge for millions of Americans who were disenfranchised during an election and question whether or not there is support for voting and enforcing the Voter Rights Act of 1965.

Then there will be the question of appointments, the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, the protection and understanding of the rights of immigrants, respect for secret evidence, a law that was passed, realizing that immigrants have rights and that we should not be in a position in this Nation to bash people because they are different. We can all join in believing that there should be law and order, but at the same time who will enforce the rights not only of the victim, which I support, in supporting their rights, but the innocent convicted defendant incarcerated, the wrong person, when we talk about using DNA?

What will be the position of this Attorney General when all of his legal background and his public service have been in opposition to this?

If I might just say this: I sat through the hearings and I testified with respect to my opposition to this nomination. I cannot suggest to the other body what they should do. I can only plead with them on behalf of those whose voices will not be heard that if there is one place in this country where those who are less than what many would want them to be, who are poor, who are downtrodden, who are incarcerated, who seek to have laws enforced, if there is anywhere that one can go and seek fairness, it has to be in the Department of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, I close with these two points of contention. In those hearings, Attorney General-to-be or nominee Ashcroft was asked if he followed the law as the Attorney General in Missouri, not whether or not he believed or had a philosophy different from any other, and, of course, he insisted that he did follow the law. But yet, during the bitter 10-year legal battle against voluntary desegregation, and I said voluntarily, where the community came together, he was cited by the Federal court and he was criticized, and the language is as follows: his continual delay and failure to comply with court orders, and concluded that the State has, as a matter of deliberate policy, failed to provide a sound education for blacks.

Mr. Ashcroft’s record on matters of race has been simply disappointing. According to the Washington Times, Ashcroft received a grade of ‘F’ on each of the last three NAACP report cards because of his anti-progressive voting record, having voted to approve only 3 of 15 legislative issues supported by the NAACP and other civil rights groups. This explains why such a broad number of groups are so strongly united against his confirmation as the next Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. Ashcroft opposed the approval of Judge Ronnie White to the Federal Bench. In 1997, President Clinton nominated Judge White of the Missouri Supreme Court to be a United States District Court judge. The hearings on Judge White’s nomination in May 1998, Judge White was introduced to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Republican Senator CHRISTOPHER BOND, who told the committee that Judge White “has the necessary qualifications and character traits which are required for this most important job.” See Confirmation Hearings on Federal Appointments: Hearings Before the Sen. Comm. On the Judiciary, 105th Cong., 2d Sess. 7–8 (1998).

We all know that John Ashcroft led a campaign to defeat the nomination of Missouri’s first African-American Supreme Court Justice, Judge Ronnie White, to the federal bench. Mr. Ashcroft seriously distorted White’s record, portraying it as pro criminal, and anti-death penalty, and even suggested, according to the London Guardian, that “the judge had shown an ‘intemperate bent toward criminal activity.’” Ironically, Judge White had voted to uphold the death sentence in 41 of the 59 cases that came before him, roughly the same proportion as Ashcroft’s court appointees when he was Governor.

In fact, of these 59 death penalty cases, Judge White was the sole dissenter in only three of them. As a matter of fact, three of the other Missouri Supreme Court judges, all of whom were appointed by Mr. Ashcroft as Governor, voted to reverse death penalty case sentences in greater percentage of cases than did Judge White. Ashcroft also failed to consider or mention that in at least fifteen death penalty cases Missouri Supreme Court Justices, Ronnie White, wrote the majority opinion for the court to uphold the death sentence. American and I have an obligation to emphasize the fact that Judge White and I admire his ability to move forward with his life. This is a judicial nominee for which Mr. Ashcroft had no substantial reason to oppose—and it is time that America knows the facts.

I took my responsibility in helping shed light on Judge White’s confirmation hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the 17th of January of this month with great seriousness. I felt compelled to have my voice heard on behalf of Judge White who had never been given the opportunity to answer serious attacks on his impeccable judicial record. More importantly, each Senator and Representative now knows that when Judge White’s nomination was brought to the Senate floor in October 1999, Senator Ashcroft spearheaded a successful party-line fight to defeat White’s confirmation, the first time in 12 years (since the vote on Robert Bork) that the full Senate had voted to reject a nominee to the Federal bench.

In contrast to that effort, as former Congressman William Clay introduced Judge Ronny White before the Senate Judiciary Committee he said the following: “I might cite one incident that attests to the kind of relationship that Judge White has with many, and that is with a member of this committee—Senator Ashcroft. When I recommended Judge White to the President for nomination and the President nominated him, one of the first people that I conferred with was Senator Ashcroft. At a later date, he told me that he had appointed six of the seven members to the Missouri Supreme Court. Ronnie was not one of those that he had appointed. He said he had canvassed the other six, the ones that he appointed, and they all spoke very highly of Ronny White and suggested that he would make an outstanding Federal Judge. So I think that the record of this Senate is such that we should not do so. It is my wish and I hope the rest of America has done so? Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for allowing me to join in with my colleagues. The real question is, will we close the doors of justice with the confirmation of an individual who has seemingly exemplified whatever his beliefs are, questionable vigorousness in the face of the law of the land? Be not afraid to stand up and to suggest that there should be another direction for this Nation. I have no fear, and I hope the rest of America has none as well.

Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to oppose the nomination of John Ashcroft for Attorney General of the United States. Today, I walked in solidarity with fellow women members of the Democratic Caucus to the Senate floor to oppose the Ashcroft confirmation. At least fifteen Members of the Democratic Women’s Caucus participated in this solemn protest concerning the confirmation battle. We came together and witnessed the debate in the Senate Chamber up close and personal.

I am here today to speak out not only as a Member of the Women’s Caucus but as a citizen of our diverse and vulnerable nation.

The Senate is moving perilously close to taking final action on Mr. Ashcroft’s confirmation. This causes me great anxiety in light of the fact that a growing number of Americans are demonstrating in every state of the Union against the Ashcroft confirmation.

Based on Mr. John Ashcroft’s voting record of aggressive opposition to women’s rights, civil rights, and the unfortunate handling of the nomination of Judge Ronnie White, the Senate Judiciary Committee’s colleagues and I voted down his nomination for the sake of uniting America. The Attorney General for the United States should support laws that protect all of America’s people. It is unfortunate that ratings by the Christian Coalition, the National Right to Life Committee, and the American Conservative Union show that throughout his 6 years in the U.S. Senate, John Ashcroft has been a consistent and reliable vote in opposing the certified law of the land. I am not questioning Mr. Ashcroft’s personal probity; I am vigorously questioning his suitability for the job for which he has been selected.

For much of its history, Missouri provided vastly inferior services to black students. After the Supreme Court's ruling in Brown v. Board of Education, the Missouri Attorney General's office, rather than ordering the dismantling of segregation, simply issued an opinion stating that local districts "may effect segregation by manipulating attendance boundaries, drawing discriminatory busing plans and building new schools in places to keep races apart.

The now well-known St. Louis case, which was debated in these proceedings before the Senate Judiciary Committee, was filed in 1972. In brief, St. Louis had adhered to an explicit system of racial segregation throughout the 1960s. White students were assigned to schools in their neighborhood; black students attended black schools in the core of the city. Black students who resided outside the city were bused into the black schools in the city. The city had launched no effort to integrate; it simply adopted neighborhood school assignment plans that maintained racial segregation. Senator Ashcroft, then the Attorney General, challenged the desegregation plan. He argued that there was no basis for holding the State liable and that the State had taken the "necessary and appropriate steps to remove the legal underpinnings of segregated schooling as well as affirmatively prohibiting such discrimination." The courts rejected his attempts; even the U.S. Supreme Court denied certiorari.

In 1983, the city school Board and the 22 suburban districts all agreed to a "unique and compressive" settlement, implementing a voluntary 5-year school desegregation plan for both the city and the county. Importantly, the plan was voluntary—it relied on voluntary transfers by students rather than so-called "forced busing." The district court approved this plan.

Attorney General Ashcroft, representing the State, was the only one that did not join the settlement in all aspects of the settlement. In fact, he sought to have it overturned by the Eighth Circuit. The Eighth Circuit upheld most of the provisions of the plan, and emphasized that three times over the prior three years, specifically held that the State was constitutionally violating the U.S. Constitution. In my mind this man be the next Attorney General of the United States of America.

We need a nominee that enforces the civil rights laws of the Nation, that brings strength and adherence to the top law enforcement post of our great country, and to affirm equal protection and fundamental fairness in the United States of America. We owe at least that much to the working people of America and all those who believe the United States remains an example of basic fairness and justice for all.

I strongly believe that some of the beliefs of Senator John Ashcroft are archaic and obsolete. This country has come so far in improving civil rights and fundamental fairness. The confirmation of John Ashcroft will set us years back after all the improvements that have been made. This would be a travesty.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE).

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time, and I commend her for calling this Special Order.

I too rise to express my opposition to the nomination of former Senator John Ashcroft, a man who has spoken repeatedly against gun control, against a woman's right to make a conscious decision about her own affirmative action, against integration of schools, against the Miranda rights of suspects. How can we have this person, as our President wants to nominate and has nominated, and who opposes a qualified person, who said that even though you are great and I hear what you say, I just do not believe you can do what you say: against Frederica Massiah-Jackson for Federal judgeship; against Dr. David Satcher, one of the top physicians in this country for Surgeon General; against Dr. Foster, another candidate for Surgeon General; against Ronnie White, who, in 71 percent of the cases, who, in his view, believes in equality, where Mr. Ashcroft voted for another person who only voted for the death penalty 55 percent, who happened not to be African American.

Finally, when a person said that receiving a degree from Bob Jones University, after he swore he was telling the truth, and when he looked into that camera, when he was asked about that university, Senator Ashcroft sat in that seat and said, in June of 1999, that I did not know what Bob Jones University stood for, when George Bush went there to campaign and McCain went there to campaign, and the whole question of when President Bush appointed the Catholic physicians in this country for Surgeon General, because he said that he should not have gone there because they are anti-Catholic, and never said a word about the antiblack. But that was our President that was doing bring all people in. I just cannot understand how Senator Ashcroft was speaking to the Catholic because he said that he should not have gone there because they are antiblack.

First, in terms of civil rights, I am troubled by the fact that notwithstanding Senator Ashcroft's general statements about support for civil rights and gun rights enforcement, he declined to state specific agreement with the Department's position in a host of civil rights cases, including its support of the University of Michigan's affirmative action program.

I am also dismayed that the Senator has taken public positions opposing voluntary school desegregation, and that he wrongly asserted that the State had done nothing wrong, and was quote, found guilty of no wrong, end quote, in the Missouri desegregation cases.

As we all know, there are two separate Federal Court of Appeals decisions and numerous district court decisions holding the State expressly responsible for the unconstitutional discrimination that occurred. I am also profoundly disappointed in the manner by which the Senator thwarted Judge Ronnie White's nomination to be Federal district court judge, the first African American justice ever to serve on the Missouri Supreme Court. Senator Ashcroft's unwillingness at his confirmation to acknowledge or to express a scintilla of regret for the disingenuous manner in which he distorted Judge White’s record can hardly be seen as a promising omen to those of us in the African American community who have worked so hard to integrate the Federal judiciary.

Second, given Senator Ashcroft’s past record and statements at the hearings, I do not find his acknowledgment of a woman’s constitutional right to an abortion as settled law under Roe and Casey as being at all credible. I say this because in 42 out of 43 Senate votes concerning reproductive rights, he cast 42 of those votes at overturning Roe versus Wade.

Third, with regard to Senator Ashcroft’s record of opposition to gun control legislation, I remain unconvinced that he is the appropriate person to uphold and enforce our Nation’s firearms law. To me, Senator Ashcroft’s past wholehearted embrace of an extreme view of the second amendment is active support for legislation in Missouri that would allow individuals to carry concealed weapons and his unwillingness to commit to relinquish his membership in the National Rifle Association, disqualify him as the person best charged with enforcing our gun laws. In sum, I have come to the conclusion that the Senator is the wrong man for the wrong job at the wrong time.

When our Nation urgently needs an Attorney General who can bring us all together, we have been offered a person known for extreme right-wing positions and divisiveness. I have spent my entire career fighting for the cause of civil rights, reproductive choice and common sense crime and gun safety laws. In my view, Senator Ashcroft’s record is simply too inconsistent with these goals to justify our support for him.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to and commend the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. Jones) for calling this Special Order and bringing us all together this evening.

Mrs. Jones of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would just state to the gentleman that I thank him for his leadership on the Committee on the Judiciary and trust that our work together will not allow this confirmation to proceed.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the nomination of John Ashcroft of Missouri to the crucial position of United States Attorney General. Mr. Ashcroft has a long and consistent conservative record, opposing civil rights as well as qualified Federal nominees, abortion rights, gay rights and environmental protection.

In his confirmation hearings last week, we saw a nominee on his best behavior, and yet, he could not acknowledge the possibility that he was wrong about the impeccable qualifications of federal judge nominee Ronnie White. We have a nominee who denies that sexual preference was an issue when he questioned James Hormel’s “life-style” before rejecting his nomination. We have a nominee who claims that a United States Attorney General of Missouri always upheld the law and did not try and impose his own personal beliefs while the record shows that just the opposite is true. In fact, there is nothing in the record to indicate that Mr. Ashcroft has ever exhibited any flexibility in his ideology.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you should we support giving him the keys to our nation’s laws with our eyes opened and our fingers crossed.

I cannot remain silent when the person who is nominated to be the chief law enforcement officer of this country and who will be responsible for defending the civil rights of all Americans has repeatedly demonstrated his personal animosity for those fundamental rights. I urge the Administration to live up to its promises to the American people and to reject this ill-conceived nominee from consideration. At the very least, I urge my friends in the other Chamber to do the right thing and reject this nominee.

THE WAR AGAINST DRUGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 15 minutes to give the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will not take the entire hour, but I did want to rise and summarize a trip that I took last week to Colombia and Ecuador to inform our colleagues and our constituents about the progress being made in the war against drugs.

To be honest, Mr. Speaker, last year I was concerned when the President and the administration requested $1.3 billion to be used in the war against drugs in Colombia and South America. I was concerned because I was not sure that it was the right approach for us to be taking; that perhaps it would send the wrong signals, and that perhaps this should not be an issue in which the American military is involved.

Mr. Speaker, I went to Ecuador and Colombia to see firsthand what is happening with those dollars, what is happening with our effort to interact with the leadership of Ecuador and Colombia to see what role we are playing and what role they are playing in solving this problem. I came back, Mr. Speaker, convinced that we made the right decision.

I come to the floor this afternoon to encourage our colleagues to get more information about what is happening in Latin America, to better understand the type of threat that exists there, to understand the importance of what we are doing in Latin America in the war against drugs, and to understand that there will be additional requests for dollars this year in the President’s budget and the requests coming to this Congress to continue this fight for at least a 5-year period.

Mr. Speaker, I started my trip in Ecuador in Quito, the capital, where I met with and had a briefing with our Ambassador to Ecuador, Gwen Clare, and with her in-country team, including the military. I had a full briefing on the impact in Ecuador of the activities involved with Plan Colombia. I heard from the Ecuadoran leadership that while Ecuador did receive some support from this program, approximately $20 million, there is simply a greater need, both in terms of supporting their military operations and the efforts to eradicate the drug cartels along the northern rim of Ecuador, in dealing with the overflow of the drug cartels in Colombia.

I also discussed with the Ecuadoran leaders, the issue of the Galapagos and the Environmental Damage being caused by the ship, that just a few days earlier, had crashed off of the coast of the Galapagos, and what we in America could do to assist Ecuador.

In fact, in coming away from that trip, I was convinced that Ecuador, being the key ally that it has been with America is, in fact, a country that we should renew our focus on. In meetings both before my trip and today, I met with the Ecuadoran Minister for the United States, and I can tell you that she appreciates the effort that America has put forward and is willing to work with us on additional initiatives to cause further integration with the efforts of Ecuador in fighting the drug problem and America in solving the drug problem.

In Colombia, Mr. Speaker, I met again where our in-country team, including our Ambassador, Ann Patterson, a very capable lady under very difficult circumstances. I met with our leadership, military leadership. I met with our CINC, our commanding officer for that region. I met with our military leaders from all the services.

I spent an hour meeting with the Defense Minister from Colombia, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the senior leaders of their military.

I also met with the general in charge of their police force that comes under the military, and then they flew me out to one of the base camps about an hour from Bogota near the FARC demilitarized zone, and half a day observing the training being provided by our troops to the Colombian military.

Let me give you some impressions, Mr. Speaker, for our colleagues. First of all, American troops are not being used in any combat mission whatsoever. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we imposed a limitation of 500 American troops in Latin America, in Colombia to be precise, and the specifics of carrying out this plan, not one of our military is involved in any type of hostile action.

They are not involved in any kind of overt action against Colombia. They are simply there providing training. They were doing training for the Colombian military in terms of going out and running exploratory patrols of how to take apart these precursor labs. They are running training in how to guard the helicopters and the planes that are spraying the coca fields.

I can tell my colleagues, I was overwhelmedly impressed with our military. They are doing, as they always do, an outstanding job. All of our special forces and our military personnel there speak fluent Spanish. And I can tell my colleagues the relationship they have established at the one base I visited in Larandia was absolutely exemplary and unprecedented.

The training that was going on was a reality training and the kinds of successes that the Colombian military is having. I think, is directly responsive to the efforts of the American military officers and enlisted personnel who are on the scene throughout Colombia.

We have a dangerous situation, Mr. Speaker, in that part of the world. Our focus in Washington from an national security standpoint has traditionally been on the former Soviet Union and the 15 republics of that nation, China, the Middle East, and the threats posed by countries like Iran, Iraq, Syria, Libya and North Korea. But, Mr. Speaker, I came away from my trip and my meetings convinced that one of the most serious threats that we faced right now in America is the huge amount of cocaine coming into our country, primarily from Colombia.

It is estimated that between 60 percent and 80 percent of all the cocaine used in America is produced in Colombia. On hundreds of thousands of acres of farmland that used to grow crops, used to grow coffee, used to grow the kinds of fruits and vegetables that Colombia and Latin America are famous for. When the FARC began its operations and the terrorists revolutionaries began their operations, they began to acquire a large area in Colombia, specifically, do grow initially marijuana, and then poppies, and now they are into coca, which is converted in local labs into cocaine, which is then sent back here to the States.

Mr. Speaker, it is now a multibillion dollar industry in Colombia. In fact, the estimates are the FARC is receiving anywhere as $6 billion a year, which has allowed the FARC, which has its own zone inside of Colombia that is absolutely isolated from the rest of the country. It has allowed the FARC to produce a military that has in excess of 20,000 armed troops. This military is well-trained. They have the latest in terms of communications systems, and they have an elaborate network in place to send that cocaine through whatever means possible to America, and they are doing that.

In fact, just a few weeks before I arrived in Colombia, we were able to confiscate, or the Colombians were able to confiscate a submarine that had been built with the assistance of Russian scientists that the FARC was going to use to move cocaine from Colombia to America.

Mr. Speaker, the FARC has become a major force that provides a threat to America’s homeland defense. Now, I have been in Congress on issues involving the security threats coming from Russia. I was a member of the Cox committee that investigated the transfer of technology to China.

I was on the speaker’s advisory group on North Korea. I have spent hours and hours focusing on the threats coming from those nations providing technology to unstable groups. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, I am now convinced that one of the greatest threats that we face in the 21st century is the threat to our society from the continued growth of the cocaine industry in America, especially with the FARC also supporting a major military establishment in Latin America, a destabilizing military establishment.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the FARC and the revolutionary groups are creating serious instability in the areas in Colombia where they, in fact, are secure. And they are now spilling over into north Ecuador, as well as having an impact in other Latin American countries.

The day before I arrived at the base camp at Larandia, there was intelligence that a FARC exploratory group was going to move into a small town, which is a typical operation for them. When they moved into that small town, they would hunt out the local police station, and they would hunt out the police officers and either intimidate them until they complied with the FARC or until they killed them.

Mr. Speaker, 3,000 individuals per year on average are kidnapped in Colombia. Many of them are police officers at the local level trying to provide protection for the people of the towns. The FARC and the revolutionaries have been going into small towns and villages wrecking havoc on the quality of life in those communities. They have been taking peaceful farmers and forcing them to stop growing legitimate crops and instead produce the coca that the FARC then takes to the labs to produce cocaine, which is then shipped to America. And if the local farmers do not cooperate, they, too, are harassed.

Their buildings are burned. Their vehicles are trashed and burned, and in the end, the people themselves are tortured. But the FARC is doing far worse than that. Mr. Speaker, and so is the result of the narcotrafficking trade in Colombia.

The day before I arrived at Larandia, there was a confrontation. The military units of the Colombian base where I lived, Larandia, were sent out, because they had intelligence that indicated the FARC was going to raid a local community and take over its police department.

The Colombian military met the FARC unit on a small road outside the village. A firefight ensued. The FARC was equipped with AK47s, the latest weapons available for a military anywhere in the world today, bought with billions of dollars of money, most of it coming from wealthy Americans wanting to have their coke. At the same time they are proclaiming that somehow they are concerned about the drug problem in America.

Mr. Speaker, the confrontation that ensued resulted in the death of 3 FARC uniform personnel. One of the uniform personnel, Mr. Speaker, was a 12-year-old girl. The second FARC soldier that was killed was 16 years old, and the third FARC military person that was killed was a 17-year-old boy. And the mode of operation was the same as it always is with the FARC.

When they get into a confrontation with the Colombian military, which may occur, 100 yards or 200 yards away so the soldiers cannot see who they are up against, the FARC pushes young kids in uniform out in the front so they are the first to die. They are the first to die.

Mr. Speaker, this has happened time and time again throughout Colombia. In fact, with all of our concerns about the crimes of Slobodan Milosevic, it is amazing to me that there is not an outcry in this country for a war crimes tribunal against the gross human atrocities being caused by the FARC and the revolutionary groups in Colombia and Latin America.

Because what is occurring there? The hundreds of deaths, the slaughtering of young children, the slaughtering of families, the forcing of farmers to grow these illegal crops and the devastation of local villages, is a gross kind of human rights abuse that I do not think we have ever seen the like since Saddam Hussein was in his prime back in Iraq before the invasion.

Mr. Speaker, we have no choice but to support the Colombians in this struggle and they are winning. They are making progress. The training is working.

Mr. Speaker, I insert for the RECORD a summary of counternarcotics operations in Putumayo, which is the hot bed of this activity in Colombia. This summary was prepared at my request by our Ambassador. I submit this for the RECORD for all of our colleagues to review and for all Americans to understand the success that is occurring in Colombia as we begin to eradicate hopefully 100 percent of the coca production in that country which has led to the huge proliferation of cocaine into America.

SUMMARY OF COUNTERNARCOTICS OPERATIONS IN PUTUMAYO, DECEMBER 19, 2000–JANUARY 28, 2001

(Prepared for Representative Curt Weldon)

1) INTRODUCTION

The first six weeks of counternarcotics operations in Putumayo Department in southern Colombia (the initial geographical focus under Plan Colombia) have seen many positive results. Two social pacts supported by the U.S. Agency for International Development, which provide for voluntary manual eradication and alternative crop development, have been signed by over 1,000 families in Puerto Asis municipality, and six more are expected to be signed before the end of March. Aerial coca eradication and ground interdiction activities have occurred in south-central and southwestern Putumayo.

As of January 28, 2001, over 24,000 hectares have been sprayed in Putumayo, the most densely cultivated area in the world. There has been an unprecedented level of cooperation between the Colombian Army Counterdrug Brigade and the Antinarcotics Directorate of the Colombian National Police. The operations have proceeded with relatively few incidents of armed clashes or ground fire from the aircraft.

II. AERIAL ERADICATION

Although estimates vary, coca cultivation in Putumayo could be as high as 90,000 hectares (about 225,000 acres). The most dense areas of coca cultivation are located in southwestern Putumayo. Aerial eradication in Putumayo began in that area on December 22, 2000. As of January 28, 2001, a total of 24,123 hectares has been sprayed—22,352 hectares in southwestern Putumayo (mostly in paramilitary-dominated zones) and 1,791 hectares in south-central Putumayo. Spraying is in progress in Putumayo. There have been eight spray planes and/or escort helicopters hit by hostile ground fire (in six incidents) since operations began. The Colombian military has been better able to deploy its troops during the Putumayo operation has been unprecedented, given the high presence of illegal armed groups operating in Putumayo. None resulted in any injury or serious damage to the aircraft.

III. COLOMBIAN MILITARY OPERATIONS

As of January 28, 2001 there are approximately 3,000 Colombian Army troops deployed in Putumayo, including troops from the First and Second Counterdrug Battalions of the Counterdrug Brigade. The ground troops support aerial eradication activities and conduct law enforcement operations. Since the start of operations in mid-December 2000, Colombian military forces have attacked 40 targets in Putumayo, including coca base labs, cocaine hydrochloride labs, and weapons storage facilities.

There have been five incidents of armed clashes between Colombian military forces and illegal groups since the start of Putumayo operations on December 22, 2000. Co-occurred during the Putumayo operation has been an unprecedented level of cooperation between the Colombian Army and the Antinarcotics Police to improve the spraying of drugs. The Deputy Commander of the Counterdrug Brigade now attends the daily briefings for the spray pilots and provides feedback on the spraying of the drug fields.

The level of cooperation between Colombian military forces and antinarcotics police during the Putumayo operation has been unprecedented. The relationship between the various armed forces and police is historically characterized by the various armed forces and police. The forces have shared USG-supplied helicopters to move troops and police in and out of the spray/interdiction areas. The Deputy Commander of the Counterdrug Brigade now attends the daily briefings for the spray pilots, hence is able to deploy his troops into the spray areas and to assist the pilots in locating other hostile elements.

IV. U.S.-SUPPORTED ALTERNATIVE PRODUCTION PROGRAMS

A key aspect of the multilateral Plan Colombia projects targeted for Putumayo (and, later, other parts of the country) is to encourage small coca growers to sign agreements to voluntarily eliminate their illicit crops in exchange for government assistance with alternative crop development. The U.S. Agency for International Development is working with the Government of Colombia’s National Plan for Alternative Development (PLANTE), to put such agreements into place. Two agreements have been signed to date by a total of 1,453 families in Puerto Asis municipality, providing for the voluntary elimination of nearly 3000 hectares of coca. Six more agreements are expected to be signed before the end of March 2001. The target is to enter agreements with a total of 5,000 families for the elimination of approximately 10,000 hectares of coca. The signing of even two elimination agreements has had a positive effect, in that many more families are interested in signing them now that they see their neighbors benefitting. The agreements appear to have lessened some local officials’ opposition to aerial eradication as well. While in the past they often complained that government officials pressured them on the “stick” of spraying but not the “carrot” of alternative development, at least one Putumayo mayor has stated that the government now appears to keep its word to combine the two efforts.

V. HUMAN RIGHTS

Since the first Counterdrug Battalion was formed in April 1999, we have had no human rights complaints against the Counterdrug Brigade, nor have we received any since joint operations were launched in December 2000. There has been minimal displacement, with some 20-30 people displaced since spray operations began in mid-December. In contrast, thousands of people were displaced in the area between September-December 2000 as a result of the FARC’s armed siege of Putumayo.

As required under the Leahy amendment, the Embassy of Colombia and police units which receive USG assistance by reviewing the unit’s human rights record and regular reports from the Colombian Ministry of Defense with respect to the number of units which are undergoing formal investigation for human rights violations. The 24th Brigade, a member of the Joint Task Force—South under General Montoya’s command, is currently the only element of the Joint Task Force-South which is not approved to receive USG assistance.

VI. CONCLUSION

While the government of Colombia has achieved significant success in the first phase of U.S.-supported counter narco activities in Putumayo, much more remains to be done. Embassy is encouraging the Colombian Army and the Colombian Government to continue its efforts at degrading the FARC and the terrorist groups throughout Colombia.

Mr. Speaker, in this two-page summary, our colleagues will find a detailed assessment of the successes that we are achieving, of the cooperation of the Colombian military, of the brave efforts by local mayors and police leaders and police leaders who every day are being intimidated and whose families are being threatened by the FARC and the terrorist groups throughout Colombia.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also assure my colleagues one of the major concerns we have in any country is that there not be human rights abuses by the military or the police of that country. In the training that I witnessed at the Laranjola operation, a major part of our training is helping local mayors and police leaders deal with human rights, showing the soldiers on the ground in Colombia that while they are there, to weed out the corrupt narcoterrorists activity.

They must adhere to strict human rights concerns that we have. They must comply with international norms. They must not abuse innocent people. And while there are still incidents as there are even from time to time, of concerns relative to human rights, I can assure our colleagues that the Colombian military, the Colombian police department have made overwhelming positive strides in stopping human rights abuses. We are assisting those who are enforcing the laws and from those who are going after the narcoterrorists.

Mr. Speaker, our military again is rising to the occasion and doing an outstanding job. The Colombian soldier on the ground understands the importance of maintaining human rights and dignity, even when they are dealing with thugs involved, with growing and selling off cocaine eventually for America’s soil.

This summary gives a glimpse of the kind of successes that we are having in each of these areas; the efforts at cleaning up the drug labs, the efforts at spraying the crops, the efforts at protecting the human rights, the efforts at helping to rebuild the economy of these areas that have been devastated by drug trafficking.

Mr. Speaker, I am not challenging the some bad apples, just as I would ac-

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

God, our help in ages past and our hope for years to come, we thank You for our Constitution and the stability and strength it has provided for our beloved Nation. Today, we gratefully remember the life and leadership of Gouverneur Morris, born on this day in 1752. We prayerfully recall that he was the writer of the final draft of the Constitution, the head of the Committee on Style, and the originator of the phrase, “We the people of the United States.”

Thank You for the impact of Mr. Morris, who at the age of thirty-five became a member of the Continental Congress and spoke 173 times during the Constitutional debates, more than any other delegate. We honor his memory, not just for the quantity of his words but for their quality. In particular, we are moved by his conviction about You. “There is one Comforter,” he said “who weighs our Minutes and Numbers our Days.” About the importance of a strong faith in You he said, “Religion is the only solid basis of good morals: therefore education should teach the precepts of religion, and the duties of man toward God.” May we never forget that “morality is truth in full bloom.” Father, keep America rooted in Your moral absolutes. You are our Judge and Redeemer. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable SAM BROWNBACK, a Senator from the State of Kansas, led the pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule 1, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable GEORGE ALLEN, a Senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ALLEN thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the assistant majority leader, the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. NICKLES.

SCHEDULE

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, today the Senate will be in a period of morning business until 10:30, with Senators BROWNBACK and DURBIN in control of the time. Following morning business, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of John Ashcroft to be the Attorney General of the United States. Debate on the nomination will be the business of the day, and the Senate will remain in session into the evening to allow all Members adequate time to discuss this nomination. It is hoped a vote on the confirmation of John Ashcroft will occur early in Thursday’s session. Senators will be notified as that vote is scheduled.

I thank my colleagues for their attention.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 220

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I understand there is a bill at the desk due for a second reading.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 220) to amend title 11 of the United States code, and for other purposes.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I object to further reading of this bill at this time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

DEBATE ON THE ASHCROFT NOMINATION

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I also wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the fact we had significant debate on this last night. Senator Sessions did an outstanding job in making his presentation. I encourage colleagues to review his statements and encourage all colleagues who wish to speak on this nomination to come to the floor early and make their statements so we can confirm John Ashcroft, or have a vote on his confirmation by tomorrow.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if I could ask my colleague to yield for a brief interruption.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield.

Mr. REID. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank my friend from Oklahoma. I know how much of a tragedy the State of Oklahoma and everyone in the country suffered.

But I did want to say before we left the floor that we agree with the Senator that the debate should go forward in full flow, and I say to the Democratic Senators within the sound of my voice, this could be a very late night. We have a lot of people on the Democratic side who want to speak on this nomination. They are going to have that opportunity.

We did not do as much talking as probably should have taken place last night. We completed our work at 7 o’clock. We expected to go to 9. I think tonight we will go at least until 9 or 10 o’clock.

I say to Democratic Senators, they should be prepared because there may not be a tomorrow. I know there are efforts around here to move this forward. We have completed 14 of the 15 nominations that had been sent to us by the President, which is a record-setting pace. We want to move forward on the Ashcroft nomination as quickly as we can. We hope it does not have to go into next week. We will need cooperation from the Republican side. We are going to do the best we can to have somebody in place just as quickly as we can.

I again apologize for interrupting my friend, but I appreciate his allowing me to do so.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate my colleague’s comments. I echo that. I encourage all Senators who wish to speak on the Ashcroft nomination to come to the floor earlier today, rather than later today. It was a little regrettable because I think both leaders had stated publicly we intended to be in session late last night for this nomination. But we could not get additional speakers so we adjourned earlier than planned. I thank my friend and colleague from Nevada.

I might also add when he said we moved forward expeditiously, I am pleased we have confirmed all but one nominee. But I might remind my colleagues, 8 years ago every Clinton nominee was confirmed by January 22, unanimously, by voice—every single one. The only one that was not was the Attorney General, and the reason for that was the Clinton administration was moving very expeditiously. The eventual nominee for Attorney General, Janet Reno, was confirmed 98–0 after very short debate. I just make those points to clarify the record. Eight years ago Congress moved very expeditiously to confirm all nominees. All were confirmed by January 21—by voice vote, I might add. The only recorded vote was Janet Reno and that was 98–0.

THE OKLAHOMA STATE UNIVERSITY PLANE CRASH

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, tragedy struck my State, as members of the Oklahoma State basketball team and news organizations were killed in a tragic plane crash just outside of Denver.

Of course any plane crash is not anticipated, but this was especially painful and tragic because it snuffed out the lives of 10 outstanding individuals, who were well known on campus and throughout the state. Two team members were killed. They were outstanding athletes.

Eight other individuals that were on the plane were a part of the team in various capacities and it is a real tragedy, a tragedy to our State and to our university.

Today there is a memorial service taking place at Oklahoma State University to memorialize these 10 exceptional individuals.

One of the individuals was Nate Fleming. His sister served as an intern in my office. He was a nephew of one of my favorite aviators. Nate Fleming was an outstanding athlete. Nate was a National Honor Society member and valedictorian of his class. He was only 20 years old.

Another team member, Daniel Lawson, 21, was a junior and played basketball for the Oklahoma State University Cowboys. He was known by everyone across the state and needless to say, he did an outstanding job.

Kendall Durfey, 38, was a producer and engineer for the OSU radio network. Denver Mills, the pilot, from Oklahoma, was well liked and was a great aviator.

Bjorn Falistrom was the copilot, originally from Sweden.

This is a real loss for their families, for Oklahoma State University, for Oklahoma and the nation. The contributions these individuals made to the State and to the University will always be remembered. We extend our condolences to Coach Sutton and to President James Hallogan and the extended family of Oklahoma State University. It is with deep sadness that we extend our prayers to their friends, and to their friends in mourning such a great loss. Certainly, they will be missed.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thanks the Senator from Oklahoma for his eloquent statement.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, Mr. Brownback.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I believe under a previous agreement I have 15 minutes allocated to me; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator was to have until 10:15. It is now 10:12.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for up to 15 minutes as in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, but I want to reserve 15 minutes in morning business after Senator Brownback.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I thank the Chair.

MOMENT OF SILENCE

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I note with sadness what took place at Oklahoma State. That was a terrible tragedy. I was reading about it in our papers in Kansas. That happened to Wichita State University about 30 years ago, and it has not really healed. Somehow when you take that young life and that vibrant seed with the team, it really grabs a hole out of you that takes a long time to fill.

My thoughts immediately turned to Wichita State when that happened to Oklahoma State. My thoughts and prayers are with the Senator and with Oklahoma.

Mr. President, I wonder if it would be appropriate to have a moment of silent prayer for Oklahoma, for the tragedy they have experienced.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will be a moment of silence observed in the Chamber in memory of those who died.

(Moment of silence.)

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

AMERICA NEEDS A TAX CUT

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on a different issue, one of great importance and one I think we are going to see take place, and that is overdue tax relief for the American people.

The Congressional Budget Office has just announced the 10-year budget surplus projection has increased to $5.6 trillion. When I came to the House of Representatives in 1994, it would have been hard to fathom numbers of this nature, but through fiscal restraint, a plan put in place to limit the amount of spending over a period of years, and a healthy, growing economy, we are now to the point where we are projecting and experiencing budget surpluses. It is wonderful that we have this opportunity.

I also point out to the American public, in case you are worried the Republicans in Congress are taking their eyes... off the ball of fiscal discipline and paying down the debt, we are paying down the debt, and we will continue to pay down the debt.

Over the past 3 years, we paid down over $360 billion of public debt—$360 billion over 3 years. We will continue at that pace, if not greater, of reducing the Federal debt. We are going to continue to do that. But it also is possible, and I suggest necessary, for us to do the needed tax cuts and tax relief the American people desire. America’s taxpayers are overpaying the Federal Government. More specifically, it is a tax on their success. It is, in fact, a tax on the robust economic growth we have experienced and which now seems to be slowing.

Of the $2.6 trillion, we have already committed to save $2.7 trillion for Social Security, and we should do that. That still leaves almost $3 trillion.

This is separate and distinct from the Social Security trust fund. We have put that in a lockbox. The Republican Congress is building a lockbox; we are going to put the Social Security surplus in it. That is the $2.7 trillion of Social Security income, leaving $3 trillion over the next 10 years for deficit reduction. We can do both. We must do both.

With the announcement by the Congressional Budget Office last week, along with Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan’s comments, there is no longer any credible excuse not to cut taxes for the American people.

There is more than enough money to cut taxes, protect Social Security, and continue on our path of debt reduction—the $360 billion paydown we have done over the past 3 years. Americans demand fiscal responsibility, and they deserve a tax cut.

I am hopeful we will be able to pass meaningful tax relief this session, sooner rather than later. I think that is important to the economy. I think it is important for the American people, and it is necessary. We have worked in a bipartisan fashion to balance the budget, to pay down the debt, and protect Social Security. Now we must work in the same fashion to give the American people a tax cut they deserve.

As virtually everyone in the free world knows, our economy is slowing. Some are even concerned we are teetering on the brink of a recession. Some recent reports indicate consumer confidence has now dipped to its lowest level since December of 1996, which could have the effect of fueling further fears of a slow downturn into a recession.

The last month and a half has shown the accuracy of President Bush’s remarks about the state of the economy as he was in the midst of handling his transition. We now await further action by Chairman Alan Greenspan. It is worthy of note that several of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have urged the Chairman not to increase interest rates. I think that was correct. However, now it is clear the Fed is changing its direction. In fact, according to many economists, the markets are already assuming a half basis point reduction to be announced at the conclusion of the meeting that began yesterday.

The Federal Reserve is doing its job to strengthen this economy and prevent it from going into a recession. It is now time for Congress to do its job, which is to cut taxes. In fact, I think as a body we need to worry less about the job being done down the street and more about the job we need to do on Capitol Hill.

Both monetary and fiscal policy needs to be used to keep this economy from going into recession but lift it up. Our part in doing this, as virtually all economists will note, is to cut taxes to help stimulate the economy. We need to pursue a fiscal policy that reflects the needs of Americans and of our economy.

Based on the surplus projections of the Congressional Budget Office, we have the resources available to not only realize our commitment to sound fiscal policy, protecting Social Security, and paying down the debt, but also to significantly—and I want to add the point, significantly—reduce the tax burden faced by Americans.

We must cut taxes now for America’s working families. In fact, we need to pursue a broader and deeper tax cuts because that is why the good work done by my colleagues from Texas and Georgia. It is a bipartisan tax cut bill that was put in last week by Senators Gramm and Miller.

We must cut taxes for two primary reasons. First, tax cuts are in effect an insurance policy for further economic growth because of the stimulating effect they would have on the economy. Second, tax cuts are good policy not only because they return hard-earned dollars to the American people who earned the dollars in the first place—but also because they help limit the growth of Government.

If we do not send the surplus back to the American people in the form of tax cuts, Washington’s big spenders will use the money to grow the size of Government. It is almost an iron rule of Government: if there is a dollar left on the table around here, it is going to get spent. It needs to go back to the American people because they have overpaid. And it will help stimulate our economy, which is one of the keys of how we have been able to balance the budget and pay down the debt and have a strong economy. If that economy weakens, we are not going to have the tax receipts to bestow to close down the debt or do the things that people would like to do as well. If the markets are any indication, we need to use our fiscal policy now to grow the economy, not to grow the Government.

Today we will hear more from hard-working Americans than we have at any point since the conclusion of World War II. Artificially high tax rates used to fund our bloated Federal Government is one reason we are collecting so much revenue from the American people; the growth in the stock market and an increase in entrepreneurial activity is the other.

The American people should not be taxed on success, but that is exactly what we are doing when we impose high rates of taxation, particularly on capital gains. We punish people for innovation, thrift, and hard work, and we penalize them for being successful. We need another reduction in capital gains tax rates to follow on the 1997 reductions.

I want to go to a particular point at this time, and that is the marriage penalty tax that has been in place now for a number of years. Twice in Congress we have passed a bill to repeal it. Now it is the time for us to repeal it and get it signed into law by a President who agrees that we should repeal the marriage penalty tax.

We have been taxing people for being married. It is a ridiculous policy. We have discussed it a number of times on the floor. An average American couple, in two-wage-earner pays about $1,500 extra in taxes just for the privilege of being married. It is ridiculous.

Recently, my colleague, Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison, and I introduced a bill to eliminate the marriage penalty. It is the bipartisan tax cut bill that was put in the floor. An average American couple, in two-wage-earner pays about $1,500 extra in taxes just for the privilege of being married. It is ridiculous.

Unfortunately, some of the proposals being considered to reduce taxes fail to adequately address the marriage penalty. We need real marriage penalty relief, not more gimmicks in the Tax Code.

We need to double the standard deduction immediately. In fact, I prefer to make it retroactive to January 1 of this year. We also need to double the amount it is for individuals. This accomplishes real marriage penalty relief.

As we move to consideration of a reconciliation bill later this year, I will be pushing for broad-based marriage penalty relief. I am hopeful this Congress, with an enormous on-budget surplus, will be able to accomplish real tax cuts for American families.

The proposal by my colleagues is a good way to start the debate on tax cuts, but I am hopeful we can do more than the $1.6 trillion tax cut. We have $3 trillion that is available, and $2.7 trillion of the Social Security surplus is set aside. We have $3 trillion to pay down debt and to be able to cut taxes. I think we can do better than the $1.6 trillion. I think it will be necessary for us to act with the speed to help to stimulate this economy.

Finally, I believe tax cuts work in part because they do stimulate economic growth and also because they help insure against an economic downturn. We need that insurance policy before the economic situation deteriorates even more.

I would add that there is a positive psychological effect that takes place; when the Federal Reserve reduces the rate by half a percentage point, there is a psychological point that, OK, the Fed is stepping in and taking action to make sure this economy does not go in recession. Therefore, more people say: Good, that is a positive sign. I am going to watch, and I am going to be maybe a little more positive.

If the Congress would do that similarly with tax cuts, the American people, as well, would say: OK, they are concerned about this economy, but they are taking action. I can see there is light at the end of the tunnel.

We should do that for its economic and stimulative effect on people’s positive thinking of what can take place for this economy.

I am hopeful that Congress will pass meaningful tax cuts earlier in this year rather than later. Americans deserve some tax relief. They have waited long enough.

Mr. President, thank you very much for your time. I yield the floor and yield back any time allotted to me.

Mr. DURBIN. Thank you, Mr. President.

TAX CUTS AND THE BUDGET SURPLUS

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, it is opportune I am here following my friend and colleague from Kansas, Senator Brownback, to talk about the same issue because I think we both agree on several things but we may have a little difference of opinion on several others.

Senator Brownback and I came to the House of Representatives at about the same time. We lived through the era of red ink—the terrible deficits and mounting national debt. Many times it appeared we would never get out from under that burden.

I can recall when I first came to the Senate, Senator Orrin Hatch was at this desk right over here and had stacked up next to the desk all of the budget books for the previous 20 or 30 years, which all showed a deficit. He said: It is time to amend the Constitution for a balanced budget amendment. It is the only way to get Congress to stop its profligate ways and to finally bring balance to our books.

I resisted that amendment. I thought it was overkill and unnecessary. It failed by one vote, and thank goodness it did because the ink had hardly dried in the Congressional Record than we started turning the corner. The economy started getting stronger, and we started leaving the deficit era, going into the surplus era. And what a change it has brought about with all the Americans who are currently working, though there clearly is some downturn in the economy now. Those working Americans, and their families, and their businesses have brought success to the nation also to the health of our Nation’s economy. It certainly is reflected in the fact that we now are talking about surpluses.

The obvious question the American people ask of us in the Senate is: If we have out of all the math you do in Washington, why do you keep it? Why don’t you do something good with it? And one of the good things you can do with it is to reduce the tax burden on families.

Senator Brownback suggested that, I agree with him. It is President Bush’s plan. It is a democratic plan. If I had to put my money on one thing that is likely to happen this year, there would be some form of a tax cut; and there should be. I think we are at a point in history where it is not only the right thing to do, because there is a surplus, it is the right thing to do for the economy.

Chairman Greenspan at the Federal Reserve appeared before the Senate Budget Committee just a few days ago and basically said he thinks we are at a point where there is no growth in our economy. If you have that situation, basic economics tells you that you try to put an economy to get it moving again. And that would be a lowering of interest rates, which helps everyone who has an adjustable mortgage rate or is paying off a car loan or some credit card loan that is reflective of those interest rates, or you find a fiscal approach; that is, a tax cut that also generates more strength, more activity in the economy.

But I think where there may be a difference is between Senator Brownback and myself is on the question of how much we have to spend on the tax cut. What can we afford to put into a tax cut? I am going to use the maximum amount that is reasonable, but let’s look at some of the figures that are being used.

This chart shows the projected budget surplus for the next 10 years: $5.7 trillion in a unified surplus. But when we take out the Social Security trust funds and the Medicare trust funds, both parties were very clear in saying: We are not going to raid Social Security to spend or for anybody’s tax cut—that takes away $2.7 trillion, so we have a net of $3 trillion in our surplus. Then we take away the Medicare trust fund, which I am sure all of us in this body would not want to raid for spending on other programs, to protect it, and we are now down to a net projected budget surplus for the next 10 years of $2.6 trillion.

Projecting a budget surplus means assuming certain things will happen. There are as many economists in Washington as there are opinions about what might happen to our economy, but most of these projections about a surplus assume certain growth in the economy. They say if we continue to grow, we will continue to generate surpluses. If they are wrong, if the economy takes a downturn, there will be less money available, less money for what are often purposes we might consider on the floor of the Senate or in the Federal Government.

Let’s take a look at President Bush’s proposed tax cut. His proposal is $1.6 trillion, which reflects a 10-year tax cut. When you look at the impact in the tax law known as the alternative minimum tax. All of us are concerned that the alternative minimum tax has been written in a way that is starting to penalize a lot of families and businesses we never intended to penalize in any way. So reform of the alternative minimum tax appears to be agreed by almost everyone as something we should do. That would cost us another $200 billion over a 10-year period of time.

In addition, if we take money and, instead of buying down the debt of the country, put it into something such as a tax cut, it increases the interest costs that have to be paid on that debt by $400 billion over the same period of time. The true net cost of the Bush tax plan, considering these two scenarios, is $2.2 trillion.

Recall earlier I said that our actual surplus by these estimates will be $2.6 trillion. To put it into some perspective, look at the tax cuts assuming a $2.6 trillion surplus. If we put $2.2 trillion into tax cuts, as President Bush has recommended, literally 85 percent of the surplus will be going exclusively to tax cuts. The remaining $400 billion, 15 percent, would be there and could be used. However, look at all of the things we would have to consider out of this $400 billion over 10 years: As to debt reduction—I will get back to that in a moment—we have a $5.7 trillion national debt. I will talk about what it costs us to maintain that debt. The prescription drug benefit under Medicare is going to cost us some money; some suggest $300 billion over 10 years. We are taking this slice of $400 billion and all the things in which we want to invest.

The President has called for more money for education. I like that idea. I think it is a good thing to do. Again, it is coming out of this slice, this 15 percent slice.

He has also asked for more money for defense; we anticipate a need for agriculture as we have in the past; Medicare reform, Social Security reform, and some have even suggested the creation of a rainy day fund to protect our economy and our budget in bad times.

The reason I like to reflect for a moment on the national debt is that we have to consider that as the mortgage that we are leaving our children. The best thing we can do for our children and grandchildren is to make that debt, that mortgage, as little as possible so they are not burdened with the responsibility and debt of the obligations of our generation.

What does a national debt of $5.7 trillion cost us? Literally, we collect $1 billion a day in Federal taxes from individuals and businesses to pay interest on old debt. That is $1 billion a day that isn’t being spent to put a computer in a classroom or to make America’s national defense any stronger. It is $1 billion a day which instead is being spent for interest on old debt. Moreover, if we truly are in a time of surplus, this is the moment we should seize to pay down that national debt, bring it down as low as we can conceivably bring it so that future generations and our kids and grandkids won’t be burdened with this debt and responsibility.

As you pay down the national debt, the competition for money in the marketplace is reduced. The Federal Government is not out there borrowing and servicing debt. Therefore, interest rates tend to come down. Now not only will we be taking the burden off of families who pay $1 billion a day for interest on the old debt, we will also be reducing the interest rates they pay on their mortgages, their cars and their credit cards. Families win both ways.

Ultimately, this is as good, if not better, in many respects, as a tax cut. It reduces the cost of living for real families facing real difficulties.

Let me speak for a moment about the tax cut itself. There are a variety of ways we can approach this tax cut. Some have suggested cutting marginal rates. That is a shorthand approach to a tax cut which would, in fact, benefit some of the wealthiest people in this country more than working families and middle-income families. That is where I have some difficulty.

I know what is going on in my home State of Illinois now. I know because my wife and I have paid a few weeks ago and said: I just got the first gas bill for the winter. You will never guess what happened. It is up to $400 a month in Springfield, IL. It is about a 40 percent increase in my hometown. I hear this story all over Illinois, all over the country—energy bills up 50 percent, natural gas bills up 70 percent. If we talk about tax cuts, we ought to be thinking about families who are literally struggling with these day-to-day bills. Whether it is the need to heat your home or to pay for a child’s college education or perhaps for tuition in a school, should we not focus tax cuts on working families to make sure they are the beneficiaries so that they have the funds they need to make their lives easier. That should be the bottom line in this debate.

I believe the good news about the surplus should be realistic news. We should understand that surpluses are not guaranteed. We ought to make certain that any tax cut we are talking about is not at the expense of Social Security and Medicare. We should focus the tax cuts on working families to make sure they are the beneficiaries so that they have the funds they need to make their lives easier. That should be the bottom line in this debate.

As I said at the outset, Democrats and Republicans alike believe these tax cuts are going to happen. I believe it is a good thing to do. Let us pay down this national debt. Let us provide a tax cut for the families who need it. Let’s make sure we protect Social Security and Medicaid in the process.

I yield back my time.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

THE ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF JOHN ASHCROFT TO BE ATTORNEY GENERAL

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. I order the previous, dear Mr. President. I am pleased that the Judiciary Committee yesterday evening favorably reported the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to be the next Attorney General of the United States. I look forward to a fair debate of Senator Ashcroft’s qualifications and am hopeful that we could move to a vote on his confirmation this week. It is important that we confirm Senator Ashcroft as soon as possible so that the President has his Cabinet in place and he can move ahead with the people’s agenda.

John Ashcroft is no stranger to most of us in this body. We have served with him during his 6 years of service as the Senator representing Missouri, some had worked with him when he was Governor and some others had worked with him when he was the Attorney General of Missouri.

As the Senate, he served on the Judiciary Committee with distinction over the past four years—working closely with members on both sides of the aisle. As a member of the committee, he proved himself a leader in many areas, including the fight against drugs and violence, the assessment of the proper role of the Justice Department, and the protection of victims’ rights.

But, having heard the relentless drumbeat of the accusations in recent weeks, I can fairly say, in my view, that there has been an unyielding effort to redefine this man of unlimited integrity. Some have termed the statements made by John Ashcroft, during the nearly four days of questioning in the committee, “confirmation conversion”—“a metamorphosis.”

On the contrary, the true metamorphosis of John Ashcroft is in the misleading picture painted of him by narrow left-wing interest groups. In fact, I welcomed them to the committee, and said: We haven’t seen you for 8 years. I think there is a lot to be garnered out of that statement.

As my colleagues are well aware, John Ashcroft has an impressive 30-year record of loyal public service as a state attorney general, a two-term Governor, and then—of course—as Senator for the State of Missouri. I should also mention that as Missouri’s attorney general, he was elected by his peers across the nation to head the National Association of Attorneys General, and again as Governor, he was elected by this nation’s governors to serve as the head of the National Governors’ Association.

That really defines John Ashcroft rather than some of the accusations that have been thrown against him in the Senate.

I have said this before and I will say it again, of the sixty-seven Attorneys General we have had, only a handful even come close to having some of the qualifications that John Ashcroft brings in assuming the position of chief law enforcement officer of this great nation.

The Department of Justice, of course, encompasses broad jurisdiction. It includes agencies ranging from the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the U.S. Marshal’s Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the United States Attorneys, to the Bureau of Prisons. It includes, among other things, enforcement of the law in areas including antitrust, terrorism, fraud, money laundering, organized crime, drugs, and immigration. To effectively prevent and manage crises in these important areas, one thing is certain: we need, at the helm, a no-nonsense person with the background and experience of John Ashcroft.

Those charged with enforcing the law of the nation must demonstrate both a proper understanding of that law and a determination to uphold its letter and spirit. This is the standard I have applied to nominees in the past, and this is the standard I am applying to John Ashcroft here today in my full-hearted support of his nomination to be the next Attorney General of the United States.

During John Ashcroft’s 30-year career in public service, he has worked to establish numerous things to keep Americans safe and free from criminal activity. He has: (1) fought for tougher sentencing laws for serious crimes; (2) authored legislation to keep drugs out of the hands of children; (3) improved our nation’s immigration laws; (4) protected citizens from fraud; (5) protected competition in business; (6) supported funding increases for law enforcement; (7) held the first hearings ever on racial profiling; (8) fought for victims’ rights in the courts of law and otherwise; (9) helped to enact the violence against women bill; (10) supported provisions making violence at abortion clinics fines non-dischargeable in bankruptcy; (11) authored anti-stalking laws; (12) fought to allow women accused of homicide to have the privilege of presenting spouse syndrome evidence in the courts of law. On that point, I should add that as governor, he commuted the sentences of two women who did not have that privilege; (13) signed Missouri’s hate crimes bill into law.

I could go on and on. His record is distinguished.

I am getting a little irritated that some even implied that he might be a racist, but all, including the judge for Ronnie White, said they do not believe he is a racist. In fact, he is not. His record proves he is not. I might add that his record proves that he is in the mainstream of our society.

Senator Ashcroft appeared before the Judiciary Committee for two days and answered all questions completely, honestly and with the utmost humility. Over the inaugural weekend, he received over 400 questions. He completely answered these follow-up questions. He ably answered both questions on the committee sent to him. He has testified and committed both orally and in writing that he will uphold the laws of the United States, regardless of his religious views on the policy which, within his constitutional duties as a Senator, he may have advocated changing. He understands his role as the chief law enforcement officer of this nation.

Virtually every Senator on the committee and every Senator in this Senate has to admit he has the utmost integrity, honor, dignity, and decency. If that is true, why not give him the benefit of the doubt rather than the other way?

We saw at the four days of hearings that even when he disagreed with the underlying policies, he has an undisputable record of enforcing the laws. This was the case with respect to abortion laws, gun laws, or laws relating to the separation of church and state.

Mr. President, a great number of people have said to me that they are tired of living in fear. They want to go to sleep at night without worrying about the safety of their children or about becoming victims of crime themselves.

As someone who both knows John Ashcroft as a person and who is familiar with his distinguished 30-year record of enforcing the law, I can tell you that I feel a great sense of comfort and a newfound security in the likely prospect of his confirmation to be our nation’s chief law enforcement officer.

Mr. President, as I told my committee colleagues last night, we have served with John Ashcroft, and we know that he is a man of integrity, committed to the rule of law and the Constitution. We know that he is a man of compassion, faith, and devotion to family. We know that he is a man of impeccable credentials and many accomplishments.

Some have charged that we are asking that the Senate apply a different standard to John Ashcroft than other nominees. These are the words of an extremist or a divisive ideologue. These are the words of a fine public servant who is a man of his word and of faith and who is willing to do the right thing, even when it means paying himself last.

Mr. President, John Ashcroft, like many of us, is a man of strongly held views. I have every confidence, based on his distinguished record, that as Attorney General, he will vigorously work to enforce the law—whether or not the law happens to be consistent with his personal views.

Mr. President, As I asked my colleagues in the Judiciary Committee, I ask you in keeping with our promise to work in a bipartisan fashion, we reject the politics of division. If we want to encourage the most qualified citizens to serve in government, we must do everything we can to stop what has been termed the politics of personal destruction. This is not to say that we should put an end to an open and candid debate on policy issues. Quite the contrary: our system of government is designed to provide for the expression of these differences and our Constitution protects that expression. But the fact is that all of us both Democrats and Republicans, know the difference between legitimate policy debate and unwarranted personal attacks promoted—and sometimes urged—by narrow interest groups.

Mr. President, let me cite just one example of what I mean by the narrow interest group campaign of personal destruction. Many, hopefully with disbelief and dismay, a New York Times report, the day following the release of the transcript of Senator Ashcroft’s speech at the Bob Jones University, which read, “the leader of a major liberal group opposing Mr. Ashcroft’s nomination expressed disappointment that the comments were not much different from those many politicians offer in religious settings. ’The piece concluded, quoting this statement, ’If this clearly, will not do it,’ this person said of hopes that the speech might help defeat the nomination.”
Let me note that some opponents have charged that Senator Ashcroft’s answers at the hearing and his written answers to the approximately 400 questions sent to him by Judiciary Committee members were evasive. Wrong. I do not believe that Senator Ashcroft has a reputation of being fair and honest. I personally resent those who try to say otherwise and to impugn that reputation.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore, The Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY.

Mr. LEAHY. I appreciate the comments of my friends from Utah and the distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He suggests a lot of questions were asked of Senator Ashcroft. I read today in the Wall Street Journal a newspaper that has strongly backed Senator Ashcroft, they believe we didn’t ask enough questions, especially concerning fundraising activities by Senator Ashcroft.

I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Wall Street Journal be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bunning). Without objection, it is so ordered. (See exhibit 1.)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, when we talk about the time involved in a nomination such as this, I recall the last controversial nomination for Attorney General we had when the Republicans controlled the Senate. That was for Edwin Meese. It took considerably longer, with far more witnesses and questions than we have in this debate. We sometimes forget the history of what goes on here.

This is a case where the White House actually nominated Senator Ashcroft’s nomination to the Senate on Monday—Monday of this week, 2 days ago. We are having the debate on the floor today. Prior to the President’s inauguration, the Democrats controlled the Senate. We moved forward even without the paperwork or anything else from the incoming transition team. We moved forward to speed up a hearing on Senator Ashcroft.

Today we begin the debate on the floor, after the Judiciary Committee debated the nomination yesterday and voted yesterday evening. As I said, I convened 3 days of hearings on this nomination over a 4-day period from January 16 to January 19. That was prior to having received all the paperwork on Senator Ashcroft. We did that to help the new administration. The Republican leadership announced weeks ago that all 50 Republican Senators would vote in favor of the nomination, irrespective of whatever came out of those hearings. I am glad that other Senators declined to prejudge the matter.

Actually, the Committee on the Judiciary has done the best we could to handle this nomination fairly and fully. We have had hearings, I think, that make all members of the committee and the Senate proud. I have served in this body for 26 years. I believe very much in the committee system. I believe very much in having real hearings. I think we have a record available for Senators.

In fact, we actually invited Senators who had served in the 106th Congress and were going to leave the committee, as well as some we anticipated would be coming in from both the Republican and Democratic side, to sit in on those hearings. I mention this because we did not actually set the membership of our committee in advance of this hearing. I do not think we could have done that ahead of time.

The committee heard from every single witness Senator Ashcroft or Senator HATCH wanted to call in his behalf. This is not a case where suddenly one senator or the other was something loaded up. I think there were an equal number of witnesses on both sides. We completed the oral questioning of Senator Ashcroft in less than a day and a half. We limited each senator to 2 rounds of questions, for a total of only 20 minutes. The nominee was not invited back by the Republicans following the testimony of the public witnesses. As a result, any unasked questions had to be asked on the floor. We have had that request pending since early January. That videotape was provided, incidentally, to news outlets but not to the committee.

I have also requested that the nominee provide a formal response to the allegations that white governor of Missouri he asked about a job applicant’s sexual preference in an interview, and we have not received any answer.

There have been references on the floor already today as though there were some kind of left-wing conspiracy to defeat John Ashcroft. I am not aware of that. I have asked my questions as the Senator from Vermont, and I responded to the interests of my constituents, both for and against Senator Ashcroft, from Vermont.

But if there is any question of whether there is influence of anybody on this nomination, I will refer to the New York Times of Sunday, January 7, and that the Washington Post of Tuesday, January 2, in which they quote a number of people from the far right of the Republican Party who openly bragged about the fact that they told the new President he could not appoint Governor Racicot of Montana—whom he wanted to appoint—but that he must appoint John Ashcroft.
I mention that because, if anybody thinks this nomination has been influenced by liberal groups, the only ones who have actually determined this nomination and have openly gone to the press and bragged about influencing Republican sentiment were the members of the Republican Party. They have openly bragged about the fact that they told the incoming administration and President Bush that he could not have his first choice, the Governor of Montana—who is a conservative Republican and now former Governor—but that he must appoint Senator Ashcroft. That remains a fact. That is why we are here.

Notwithstanding all this, and notwithstanding the fact that the questions have not all been answered, the requested material has not all been sent, we Democrats granted consent to advance the markup date in order to proceed yesterday afternoon and last evening. As the distinguished chairman knows, we would have had our debate before the committee today. I said, following his request, that we would not object to moving it up 24 hours. I was told the Republicans have a meeting of their caucus scheduled for later this week. It would allow them to debate both the new administration and the Republicans in the Senate if we moved that up. I agreed to that. As I said, the Senate works better if Senators can work together. Accommodation, however, does not mean changing one’s views.

We had a good debate in the committee. I think Republicans and Democrats would agree it was a good, solid debate. We reported the nomination to the Senate by a margin of 10-8, a narrow margin. Actually, in most of that debate we had between six and nine Democratic Members present. We usually had three to four Republican Members.

I brought with me the hearing record. Here it is, right here. This is a good, solid record. It is part of the history of the Senate. I wish all Senators would review that record. Many have. Unfortunately, we are not going to have a committee report on this controversial nomination. I think we would have been helped by doing that. There was a time when we did seek to inform the Senate with committee reports on nominations, nominations such as that of Brad Reynolds or William Bennett. A number of important and controversial judicial nominations. We prepared such reports when Senator Thurmond required that as chairman.

In lieu of a committee report, each Senator is left with the task of reviewing the record and searching his or her conscience and deciding how to vote.

I did put into the RECORD a large and I hoped complete brief prepared by me and the lawyers on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Jerry Fodor, Julie Katzman, Tim Lynch and others—which I think would be very helpful to the Senate.

We may want to consider and contrast the behavior that has been engaged in on the other side. We have talked about the time this may have taken. We had the hearing, we expedited the debate, and we came to the floor. The consideration of the nomination has taken 13 months when the Republicans controlled the Senate—with a Republican Senate, one would assume that would move very quickly—that took 13, not days, not weeks: 13 months. And then we had several other Republican-controlled Senate before final Senate action.

There was reference to how we handled the nomination of Attorney General Reno. That was noncontroversial, and that still took a month from nomination to confirmation. She was not confirmed by the Senate until mid-March in the first year of President Clinton’s term. Attorney General Meese was not confirmed by the Senate until he began serving in January 1985, at the beginning of President Reagan’s second term. Here we are in January. This nomination was sent to the Senate on Monday, 48 hours ago.

I hope those who advise the President will ponder these facts so he is not under the impression this nomination has been delayed from Senate consideration. The Democrats, when we controlled the Senate for a few weeks, expedited this. Republicans, when they controlled the Senate at the time of President Reagan, took 13 months to get his nomination of Edwin Meese through.

I have reviewed the hearing record and the nominee’s responses to the written followup questions from the Judiciary Committee. I did that before I announced I would oppose John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States.

I have talked to the Senate already about this and to the committee, about my reasons for opposing the nomination. I expect we will go back to this during the debate.

Let’s not lose sight of the historical context in which we consider this nomination. This is an especially sensitive time in our Nation’s history. Many seeds of disunity have been carried aloft by winds that come in gusts—especially, unexpectedly, from the State of Florida. The Presidential election, the margin of the election in which the vote counting was halted by five members of the U.S. Supreme Court—these remain sources of public concern and even alienation. Deep divisions within our country have infected the body politic. We experienced the closest Presidential election in the last 130 years, probably the closest in our history. For the first time, a candidate who received more votes than were cast for the victor in the last three elections for President, who received half a million more votes than the person who eventually was inaugurated as President—received half a million more votes. I should say, than the man who became President—saw the man who became President declared the victor of the Presidential election by one electoral vote.

I do not question the fact that President Bush is legitimately our President. Of course, he is. I was at the inauguration. We all were inaugurated. Yet, I would hope Senators will realize the concerns in this country: One person gets half a million more votes, the other person becomes President; the one who becomes President has all the obligations, all the duties of the Presidency, and all the legitimacy of the Presidency. I have no question about that. But I think he has an obligation to try to unite the country, not to divide the country. In fact, 11 days ago, President Bush acknowledged the difficulties of these times and the special needs of a divided Nation.

While many of our citizens prosper, others doubt the promise, even the justice, of our own country.

He pledged to ‘work to build a single nation of justice and opportunity.’

I was one of those who had lunch with the new President less than an hour after his inauguration. I spoke to him and told him how much his speech meant to me. I told him he will be the sixth President with whom I have served. I told him how impressed I was with his inaugural speech. I had a sense of history and a sense of country, and I applauded him for it. I do think the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General does not meet the standard that the President himself has set. For those who doubt the promise of American justice—and, unfortunately, there are many in this country who doubt it—this nomination does not inspire confidence in the U.S. Department of Justice.

My Republican colleagues have urged us to rely on John Ashcroft’s promise to enforce the law, as if that is the only requirement to be an Attorney General.

If Senator Ashcroft would have come before the committee and said he would not enforce the law, we would not be debating this issue today. I cannot imagine any nominee—and I have sat in on hundreds of nomination hearings—would say they would not enforce the law. That is not the end of the story. The Senate’s constitutional duty to advise and consent is not limited to extracting a promise from a nominee that he will abide by his oath of office.

Let me quote what my good friend, Senator HatCy, said on the floor on November 4, 1997, about the nomination of Bill Clinton to be the Nation’s attorney general for Civil Rights:

His talents and good intentions have taken him far. But his good intentions should not be sufficient to earn the consent of this body. Those charged with enforcing the Nation’s law must demonstrate a proper understanding of that law, and a determination to uphold its letter and its spirit... At his hearing before the Judiciary Committee, Mr. Lee suggested he would enforce the law without regard to his personal opinions. But that cannot be the test of our inquiry. The Senate’s responsibility is then to determine what the nominee’s view of the law is.

Like Senator Ashcroft, Bill Lann Lee promised to enforce the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court. He repeated, with the same emphasis, that he would enforce the law. The Republican-controlled Senate would not allow a vote up or down on the floor on his nomination.

I believe John Ashcroft’s assurances that he would enforce the law is not the end of our inquiry. Far more than the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, a job to which Bill Lann Lee was nominated, the Attorney General has vast authority to interpret the law and to participate in the law’s development.

Unlike one of his assistants, he has to be held to a higher standard because he sets the policy. The assistant carries out the policy, but he is not responsible for it. The Attorney General is responsible for it.

The Attorney General’s job is not merely to decide whether common crimes, such as bank robbery, should be prosecuted. Of course, they should. Does anybody believe that whoever is Attorney General faces with something as hardcore as the Oklahoma City bombing is going to say, “I am not going to prosecute”? Does anybody believe an Attorney General faced with a skyjacking or assassination is going to say, “I am not going to prosecute”? Of course, they are going to prosecute.

But there are many other less spectacular matters, matters that are not in the news every day, where the Attorney General has to decide how the law is to be enforced. The Attorney General decides which of our thousands of statutes require defending or interpreting. He allocates enforcement resources. The Attorney General decides which cases we are going to settle. He makes hiring and firing decisions. He sets a tone for the Nation’s law enforcement officials.

I think it is reasonable to go back and look at how John Ashcroft acted as attorney general before, and I go back to Missouri. Again, he was sworn to enforce the laws and all the laws. So how did he focus the resources of his office? This is how he did it.

He focused the resources of his office on blocking nurses from dispensing birth control pills and IUDs. He sued political dissenters, and he fought voluntary desegregation. I am sure with murder cases or anything else such as that he would enforce the law, but it is how he chose to decide which of those discretionary areas to act in that troubles me.

He has used language here describing the judiciary that is disturbing to many. He has shown what Senator Biden calls “bad judgment” in associating with Bob Jones University and Southern Partisan magazine, and he unfairly besmirched the reputations of Presidential nominees, including Judge Ronnie White and Ambassador James Hormel.

I am particularly concerned that he has not fully accepted what he now calls the settled law regarding a woman’s right to choose. His confirmation hearing reportedly, the way the conference committee checked that during his hearing?

His assurances are totally undercut by the recent remarks of President Bush and Vice President Cheney. Just 1 day after Senator Ashcroft assured the committee that Roe and Casey do not stand as a constitutional mandate, he called the Supreme Court “ruffians in robes.”

I have disagreed with the Supreme Court on some cases, but I have never called them ruffians. His assurances are totally undercut by the recent remarks of President Bush and Vice President Cheney. Just 1 day after Senator Ashcroft assured the committee that Roe and Casey do not stand as a constitutional mandate, he called the Supreme Court “ruffians in robes.”

A promise to enforce the law is only a minimum qualification for the job of Attorney General. It is not a sufficient one. It is simply not enough just to say you will enforce the law.

The Senator Ashcroft’s record does matter in making a judgment about whether he is the right person for this job. Throughout the committee hearings, my Republican colleagues said we should give Senator Ashcroft credit for his public service. I agree with that, just as I give him strong credit and admire him for his devotion to his family and his religion.

At the same time, my Republican friends insist that his record and the positions he has taken in public service do not matter because he will take now a different position as U.S. Attorney General.

President Bush asked us to look into Senator Ashcroft’s heart, but we are being urged not to look into his record. I do not doubt the goodness of his heart. I do doubt the consistency of his record.

Some of my Republican colleagues went so far as to argue we should not hear from any witnesses other than the nominee, that we need not review the nominee’s required financial disclosures and his files and his speeches before passing on this nomination. That is not the way we go about our responsibility of advise and consent. Remember, the Constitution does say advise and consent, not advise and rubber stamp.

That is why, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, during the weeks I held that post, I refused to railroad this nomination through. Instead, I had full, fair, informative hearings to review the nominee’s record and positions.

The American people are entitled to an Attorney General who is more than just an amiable friend to many of us here in the Senate and promises more than just a bare minimum that he will enforce the law. They are entitled to a Someone who will uphold the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court, respect the courts, abide by decisions he disagrees with, and enforce the law for everybody regardless of politics. The way to determine that is to look at the nominee’s record, not to engage in metaphysical speculation about his heart.

John Ashcroft’s stubborn insistence on re-litigating a voluntary desegregation decree consented to by all the other parties over and over again, at great expense to the State of Missouri and with sometimes damaging disruption to the education of Missouri’s children, is relevant. It is relevant because someone who has used his power as a State Attorney General to delay and obstruct efforts to remedy past racial discrimination by the State, and who has then publicly excoriated the judges who ruled against him and made a major political issue of his disagreements with the courts, may use his greater power as the U.S. Attorney General for similarly divisive political purposes.

His actions as Governor of Missouri and as a U.S. Senator are also relevant. In those offices, he took the same oath of office to uphold the Constitution that he would take as U.S. Attorney General. Yet, in both of those offices, he sponsored legislation that was patently unconstitutional—by means of an antitrust suit is relevant, because it reflects on how he might respond to political dissent as U.S. Attorney General.

I cannot judge John Ashcroft’s heart. But we can all judge his record. Running through that record are troubling, recurrent themes: disrespect for Supreme Court precedent with which he disagrees; grossly intemperate criticism of judges with whom he disagrees; insensitivity and bad judgment on racial issues; and the use of distortions, secret holds and ambushes to destroy the public careers of those whom he opposes.

I cannot give my consent to this nomination.

Mr. President, I will say more, but I see several Senators from both sides of the aisle on the floor. I am going to withhold judgment on that, too, but just think for a moment, we are a nation of 280 million Americans. What a fantastic nation we are. We range across the political spectrum, across the economic spectrum, all races and religions.

I think of, in my own case, my mother’s family coming to this country not speaking a word of English. My grandfather was a stonecutter in Vermont. I look at the diversity of ethnic backgrounds, my wife growing up speaking a language other than English. We have great diversity in this country and, over it all, everybody knowing, whether they are an immigrant stonecutter or whether they are a wealthy Member of the Senate, the laws will always treat them the same; everybody knowing, whether they are black or white, they can rely on the law to treat them the same.

But the Attorney General of the United States represents all of us. The Attorney General is not the lawyer for the President; the President has a White House counsel. In fact, to show the separation, the White House counsel does not require Senate confirmation; he or she is appointed by the President, and that is the choice of the President alone. But the Attorney General requires confirmation because the Attorney General represents all of us.

We hold this country together because we assume the law treats us all the same. When I look at the public opinion polls in this country and see a nation deeply divided over this choice for Attorney General, it shows me that American people do not have confidence in this nomination. I hope, if John Ashcroft is confirmed, he will take steps to heal those divisions, take steps to show the separation, the White House counsel, the President alone. But the Attorney General requires confirmation because the Attorney General represents all of us.

Criticizes say Mr. Ashcroft has repeatedly pushed at the edges of campaign-finance regulations by using taxpayer-financed office staff to wage election campaigns, and by joining other candidates in both parties in finding loopholes that have allowed him to pursue larger donations than the $1,000-a-person contributions permitted to a candidate’s campaign committee. Those critics say, in the Bush administration from nominating him for the federal judgeship in the mid-1990s, Mr. Ashcroft formed a joint committee with his American Values PAC: Virginia-based PAC that accepts individual donations, $5,000 per political action committee.

Mr. Bartlett also says Mr. Ashcroft negotiated an appeal under the state attorney general’s letterhead, and that personally sought a donation from a barge-company owner who did business with Inland. Mr. Ashcroft has countersued, charging that Mr. Ashcroft’s actions were motivated by his desire to win election as governor. In a deposition, Mr. Ashcroft’s administrative assistant said he worked on Mr. Ashcroft’s election campaign at a time when an overhaul bill may soon be considered.

Mr. Tucker says Scott Harshbarger, Common Cause president.

In one case, Missouri Democrats allege, Mr. Ashcroft went over in “hard” money during 1999—2000, split evenly between Ashcroft 2000 and National Republican Senatorial Committee. The National Republican Senatorial Committee PAC collected $3.6 million in hard money since 1997, largely to finance Ashcroft’s exploratory of a presidential bid. Inland Oil countersued, charging that Mr. Ashcroft’s actions were motivated by his desire to win election as governor. In a deposition, Mr. Ashcroft’s administrative assistant said he worked on Mr. Ashcroft’s election campaign while a state employee and contacted potential campaign contributors from his government office.

The lawsuit also noted that Mr. Ashcroft had solicited an executive of Inland Oil for a donation to the state GOP in a fund-raising appeal under the state attorney general’s letterhead, and that personally sought a donation from a barge-company owner who did business with Inland. Mr. Tucker rejects that interpretation of events, saying Mr. Ashcroft negotiated an appropriate settlement in the Inland Oil matter. He says he called Mr. Ashcroft to inform him that he has reservations about his nomination. Mr. Tucker also says Mr. Ashcroft never used public employees to perform campaign work except in their off-hours.

We began when I referred to Senator Leahy as Mr. Chairman, and now we are nearing the conclusion of this during the time that Senator Hatch will be referred to as Mr. Chairman. I agree, it is time to bring the confirmation proceedings for Senator Ashcroft to a close.

I hope my colleagues will consider the long-range implications of their votes with respect to Senator Ashcroft. I have, I think, never regretted voting for a candidate in an office, but I have regretted some of the votes I have cast against nominees. I hope my colleagues judge how their votes will be considered a year from now, 4 years from now, and how they will vote if they have the chance to vote for a nominee for office, but I have regretted some of the votes I have cast against nominees. I hope my colleagues judge how their votes will be considered a year from now, 4 years from now, perhaps 20 years from now, in thinking about how they will cast their votes.

Most of the points Senator Leahy made have been made before and have been fairly thoroughly rehashed during the committee process and in other forums. I would really like to only respond to three points Senator Leahy just made.

First, he made this comment in the Judiciary Committee meeting yesterday, as well. Senator Leahy said it is not liberal or left-wing groups that have weighed in on this nomination but, rather, groups on the far right. And it is possible, of course, for anybody to bring up about what they may or may not have done. President Bush is fully capable of deciding whom he is going to nominate for Attorney General. I was one of the people who recommended John Ashcroft to him. So I do not think we can ascribe John Ashcroft’s nomination to the fact that some people who are very conservative brag about the fact that they stopped somebody else and recommended his nomination. He was recommended by other people as well, including myself.

In any event, I think it is rather odd to suggest that liberal groups have not been actively involved in this debate. Immediately after it began, I received a copy of a special report from the People for the American Way—clearly a liberal, left leaning group—making the case against the confirmation of John Ashcroft as Attorney General. And page after page after page of it, in effect, is opposition research opposing the nomination. It is very clear why it is especially perplexing to me to note the vehemence with which some have expressed opposition to Senator Ashcroft on the grounds that they know he won’t enforce the law. That is perplexing to me.

A final point on this—it has been made over and over, but I think it bears a little bit of discussion right now—Bill Lann Lee was a nominee of Bill Clinton for a very important job in the Justice Department, head of the Civil Rights Division. There were many who opposed his nomination, including myself. Senator Leahy and others have been very critical of our opposition. In effect, they have said we should not have opposed him because we applied too tough a standard; we should have believed him when he said he would enforce the law.

Not getting into all of the reasons why we didn’t think he would enforce the law and why, as it turned out, we were correct. Nonetheless, people such as Senator Leahy have been very critical of us for the stance we took. Yet they are now saying they are going to apply the same test they say we applied in the case of John Ashcroft. Either we were wrong in that case and that test should not be applied or we were right and it is a test that can be applied. And they then apply it and perhaps reach a different conclusion than we.

We should discuss this honestly. I don’t think you can say on the one hand that test was wrong for Republicans to apply in the case of Bill Lann Lee but it is right for Democrats to apply in the case of John Ashcroft. Which is it? If it is wrong for us to say we just didn’t believe that Bill Lann Lee could do what he said he would do, then the Democrats have a very tough argument to make that they should be able to say precisely that with respect to John Ashcroft.

The bottom line is, it doesn’t matter what John Ashcroft says to some Senators. They have reached a conclusion—I will suggest in good faith; I will never question the motives of my colleagues even if they were to disagree with me—that he is not suitable to be the Attorney General of the United States, that is their right.

I don’t think John Ashcroft can ever satisfy them. He can say: I promise you I will uphold the law, as he does in the case of Bill Lann Lee, and over and over and again in the hearing. We know he is a man of integrity and no one has questioned that. Yet they still apply this test which, in their minds, requires them to vote against his confirmation. So I believe Bill Lann Lee and over and over and again in the hearing. We know he is a man of integrity and no one has questioned that. Yet they still apply this test which, in their minds, requires them to vote against his confirmation. So I believe Bill Lann Lee and over and over and again in the hearing. We know he is a man of integrity and no one has questioned that. Yet they still apply this test which, in their minds, requires them to vote against his confirmation. was fair for Republicans to do it in the case of Bill Lann Lee. We simply reached different conclusions. If it was unfair in the case of Bill Lann Lee, then it certainly can be argued to be unfair in the case of John Ashcroft.

Peering about this notion of "law" point would be much more credible if over the course of the last 8 years they would have been more outspoken about the repeated problems of the immediate past administration with respect to the rule of law. They were defending their administration. They were defending their Attorney General and their President. They didn't speak out about these matters.

The rule of law is really at the bottom the most important thing that those of us on the Judiciary Committee can focus on and that we do need to consider when the President has nominees pending on the floor. That is why I am happy to conclude these brief remarks. And with my view that there is no one whom I believe is more qualified in more respects to fulfill the responsibility to support the rule of law than John Ashcroft, a man of great integrity, a man of unquestioned intelligence and experience—in fact, the most experienced for the position of Attorney General—a man who repeatedly was elected by his constituents in Missouri, who had every opportunity to view him as an extremist, if in fact he had the opportunity to know the things that have been said about him in connection with his confirmation.

I urge my colleagues to consider whether in 4 or 5 or 6 years they will be happy with and glad to defend a negative vote on this confirmation. I urge them to consider that carefully.

I am very proud to express my strong support for the nomination of John Ashcroft. He will, in the words of Daniel Patrick Moynihan, make a superb U.S. Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, first, I express my appreciation to our chairman and the members of the Judiciary Committee for the hearings that were held on Senator Ashcroft to be the Attorney General, at that time chaired by our long-time friend and colleague, Senator LEAHY, and also, in terms of the markup, by Senator HATCH. Those who had the opportunity to watch the course of the hearings would understand the sense of fairness and fair play all of us who are members of the committee believe they conducted the hearings with. I am grateful to both of them.

I hope at the start of this debate that we can put aside the cliches and the sanctimonious attitudes we sometimes hear on the floor of the Senate that those of us who have very serious and deeply felt concerns about this nominee somehow are responding to various constituency groups, or somehow these views are not deeply held or deeply valued. I have been around here long enough to know that in many situations, it is very easy for any of us to say those who agree with our position are great statesmen and women, and those who differ with us are just nothing but ordinary politicians who are not in sync with the American people. Those are policies or at least slogans which are sometimes used here.

This issue is too important not to have respect for those views that support the nominee as well, hopefully, as those that have serious reservations about it.

Listening to my friend from Arizona talk about the difference between Bill Lann Lee and this nominee, the differences couldn't have been greater. Bill Lann Lee was committed to upholding the law and had a long-time commitment to upholding the law. His statements to the committee confirmed a commitment to uphold the law just like Dr. Satcher and Dr. Foster.

Many of us have serious concerns about this nominee's commitment to the fundamental constitutional rights that involve millions of our fellow citizens in the areas of civil rights, women's rights, the Second Amendment, and the treatment of nominees over a long period of time. I think the record will reflect that I find very, very powerful and convincing evidence that the nominee fails to give the assurance to the American people, should he gain the approval, that he will protect those particular rights and liberties of our citizens.

I intend to outline my principal concerns in the time that I have this morning.

Mr. President, two weeks ago the Judiciary Committee heard four days of testimony on Senator Ashcroft's nomination to serve as Attorney General of the United States. We heard Senator Bill Lann Lee was committed to enforcing the laws fairly. We must innew segregation laws in the decade before the Brown decision, going as far as amending its state constitution to require segregation.

In his testimony before the Judiciary Committee, Senator Ashcroft denied that the city maintained a segregated school system into the 1970s. He testified that the schools remained segregated only because whites fled the city. He emphasized that this segregation was not a consequence of any state activity. Again, this statement is setting in light of the facts and the court rulings.

The record shows that the response by St. Louis to the Brown decision was what the school board called a “neighborhood school plan.” The plan was designed to maintain the pre-Brown state of segregation in the St. Louis schools, and that is exactly what it did.

Reviewing the board’s 1964–56 neighborhood school plan, the 8th circuit found:

The boundary lines for the high schools, however, were drawn so as to assign the students living in the predominately black neighborhoods to the two pre-Brown black high schools. The implementing school board plan, both of these schools opened with 100 percent black enrollments. The elementary school boundaries were also drawn so that the school remained highly segregated.

The 8th Circuit Court of Appeals went on to make clear that there was no justification, other than perpetuating segregation, for the boundaries chosen:

The board could have, without sacrificing the neighborhood concept, drawn the boundaries so as to include significant numbers of white students in the formerly all-black schools. A reading of the record also makes clear, however, that strong community opposition has prevented the board from integrating the white children of South St. Louis with the black children of North St. Louis.

The board’s own documents show that making the status quo of segregation the intent of the plan, and that the new attendance zones were drawn to reassign the fewest number of students possible. Leaving no stone unturned, the board also made sure that the staffs of the schools remained segregated as well.

The court went on to make clear findings of fact that contrary to Senator Ashcroft’s testimony, the board’s active segregation of the schools did not end in 1966. In fact, the board actively used a student transfer program, forced busing, school site selection and faculty assignments throughout the 1960s, 1970s and into the 1980s to maintain the segregated status quo. In 1962, the other pre-Brown black schools were all or virtually all black, and 26 still had faculties that were 100 percent black. At the same time, the pre-Brown white schools that had switched racial identities has switched their faculties from white to black also.

Choosing sites for new schools could have helped, but instead was also used to make the segregation even worse. In 1964, ten new schools were opened and were placed so their “neighborhoods” would ensure segregated enrollment—all ten opened with between 98.5 percent and 100 percent black students. From 1962 to 1975, there were 36 schools opened—all 100 percent segregated, only 1 was integrated.

Forced busing was also designed to continue segregation. As late as 1973, 3,700 students were being bused to separate schools to reduce overcrowding. The vast majority of the black students were bused to other predominantly black schools, while virtually all of the white students were sent to other white schools.

Ashcroft filed a special ruling for the order to submit a plan and appealing them all the way to the Supreme Court—and the court did not consider the responses to be a good-faith effort. In 1981, after several more orders and deadlines were missed he was finally threatened with contempt of court for his repeated delays.

Attorney General Ashcroft was not threatened with contempt because he objected to the cost of a particular desegregation plan or because he was aggrieved by the plans that were litigated. He was threatened with contempt for his failure to comply with the court’s order to submit a plan for integrating the schools. He refused, in effect, to participate in desegregation at all. Later, instead of being chastened by his brush with contempt for defying the court, he cited it as a badge of honor during his 1984 campaign for governor, as proof of his adamantine opposition to desegregation. He publicly bragged that it showed “he had done everything in [his] power legally” to fight the desegregation plan.

In fact, as the court had stated in its 1981 order:

The foregoing public record reveals extraordinary machinations by the State defendants in resisting Judge Meredith’s orders. In these circumstances, the court can draw only one conclusion. The State has, as a matter of deliberate policy, decided to defy the authority of the court.

In yet another attempt to claim that his opposition to the desegregation plan did not mean he was opposed to integration, Senator Ashcroft testified he opposed the plan because the State was not a party to the lawsuit and did not have a fair chance to defend itself. As he stated:

Well, you know, if the State hadn’t been made a party to the litigation and the State is being asked to do things to remedy the situation, I think it’s important to ask the opportunity for the State to have a kind of, due process and the protection of the law that an individual would expect.

This claim borders on the bizarre. The State became a party to the case in 1977, the very year that Senator Ashcroft took office as attorney general, and three years before the first Circuit ruling. Throughout his entire eight year ten term, Attorney General Ashcroft litigated this case up and down the federal system on behalf of the State of Missouri. To claim that the State was not a party to the litigation and is a disingenuous and transparent attempt to evade responsibility for his actions.

In some of his court challenges, Attorney General Ashcroft did claim that the St. Louis City Board and the 8th Circuit and the Supreme Court refused to hear it.

In his testimony, Senator Ashcroft directly, clearly, and repeatedly said that he opposed State liability for desegregation because the State had never been found guilty of the segregation. He even opposed State liability for desegregation because he said the State had never been found guilty of the segregation. In his response to questioning from Senator LEAHY, he testified: I opposed a mandate by the Federal Government that the State, which had done nothing wrong, found guilty of no wrong, that they should be asked to pay this very substantial sum of money over a long course of years, something I opposed.

This was no slip of the tongue. He repeated the denial of responsibility moments later, saying: Here the court sought to make the State responsible and liable for the payment of the State had not been found really guilty of anything.

These two statements, made under oath in testimony before the Committee, are flatly wrong and grossly misleading. The St. Louis cases were certainly long and convoluted, but one point is abundantly clear: the courts held that the State of Missouri was responsible for the discrimination. The 8th Circuit left no doubt about the State's responsibility and liability for segregating the schools. As the court said in 1984:

We, again noted that the State and City Board—already judged violators of the Constitution—could be required to fund measures designed to eradicate the remaining vestiges of segregation in the city schools, including measures which involved the voluntary participation of the suburban schools.

This statement by the court highlights a very important point. The court said: We again noted that the State and City Board—already adjudged violators of the Constitution—were responsible for desegregating the schools. This 1984 decision came four years after the original 8th Circuit decision held that the state was in fact responsible for the discrimination.

Senator Ashcroft was attorney general of Missouri for all of those years and was campaigning for governor when the decision was issued. No one knew better than he that the state had been found guilty of discrimination, and had been found guilty repeatedly. Yet he was still denying responsibility before the court in 1984 and it is deeply troubling that he was denying it before this committee in 2001.

I am the first to be troubled by Senator Ashcroft's exploitation of the racial tensions over desegregation to promote his campaign for governor in 1984. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported at the time that Senator Ashcroft and his Republican primary opponent were "trying to build up his most outspoken enemy of school integration in St. Louis," and were "exploiting and encouraging the worst racist sentiments that exist in the state."

The Economist, a conservative magazine, reported that both candidates ran openly bigoted ads and that Ashcroft called his opponent a "closet supporter of racial integration." Even the Daily Dunklin Democrat, a newspaper that supported Ashcroft's appeals of the desegregation orders, took him to task for exploiting race in his campaign, criticizing the 1984 primary campaign as "reminiscent of an Alabama primary in the 1950s."

Ashcroft claimed in the Judiciary Committee that in opposing the desegregation plan he was merely opposing the cost of the desegregation that was being imposed on the state. But according to press reports of that campaign, Ashcroft repeatedly attacked the courts and the desegregation plan for reasons other than cost, even by going as far as calling the desegregation plan an "outrage against human decency" and an "outrage against the children of this state." I believe, instead, that it is the repeated, legally unsupportable, vigorous opposition to desegregation, that is an outrage against human decency and an outrage against the children of Missouri.

For these reasons, I have great concern about Senator Ashcroft's testimony that his opposition to the courts was in the interest of integration and desegregation, that it is the repeated, legally unsupportable, vigorous opposition to desegregation, that is an outrage against human decency and an outrage against the children of Missouri.

For these reasons, I have great concern about Senator Ashcroft's testimony that his opposition to the courts was in the interest of integration and desegregation, that it is the repeated, legally unsupportable, vigorous opposition to desegregation, that is an outrage against human decency and an outrage against the children of Missouri.

The questions for Senator Ashcroft, and for senators on both sides of the aisle, is how can it mean anything for Senator Ashcroft to say that he will enforce the law against discrimination, when this record shows beyond any reasonable doubt that he will go to extraordinary lengths to deny the facts of discrimination?

Senator Ashcroft's record and testimony on voter registration legislation are equally troubling. In response to a question about his decision as Governor of Missouri to veto two bills to increase voter registration in the city of St. Louis, which is heavily African American, Senator Ashcroft testified: I am not concerned that Americans have the opportunity to vote. I am committed to the integrity of the ballot. . . . I vetoed a number of bills as governor, and frankly, I don't say that I can remember all the details of all of them. Accordingly, I reviewed my veto message and recalled that I was urged to veto these bills by responsible local election officials. I also appeared to anticipate the Supreme Court's recent decision, as I expressed a concern that voting procedures be uniform throughout Missouri.

A review of the facts surrounding Governor Ashcroft's decision to veto the voter registration bills raises serious questions about whether he truly is "concerned that all Americans have the opportunity to vote."

Even the election officials who recently stated by the U.S. Supreme Court in the Florida election case cannot be reconciled with Ashcroft's actions.

As Governor of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft appointed the local election boards in both St. Louis County and St. Louis City. The county, which surrounds much of the city, is relatively affluent. It is 84 percent white, and votes heavily Republican. The city itself is less affluent, 47 percent black, and votes heavily Democratic.

Like other election boards across the State, the St. Louis County Election Board had a policy of training volunteers from nonpartisan groups—such as the League of Women Voters—to assist in voter registration. During Senator Ashcroft's service as Governor, the county trained as many as 1,500 such volunteers. But the number of trained volunteers in the city was zero—because the city election board appointed by Governor Ashcroft refused to follow the policy on volunteers used by his appointed board in the county and the rest of the State.

Concerned about this obvious disparity, the State legislature passed bills in 1988 and 1989 to require the city election board to implement the same training policy for volunteers used by the county election board and the rest of the State. Despite broad support for these bills, on both occasions, Governor Ashcroft vetoed them, leaving in place a system that clearly made it more difficult for St. Louis City residents to register to vote.

Among the justifications offered by Ashcroft for the vetoes was a concern for fraud, even though the Republican director of elections in St. Louis County was quoted in press reports as saying: It's worked well here . . . I don't know why it wouldn't also work well [in the City]."

Issues of fraud and voter registration had also been addressed by the United States Senate several years earlier, which concluded that "fraud more often occurred by voting officials on election day, rather than in the registration process."

In fact, in Missouri in 1989—five months after Governor Ashcroft's second veto—a clerk on the city of St. Louis Election Board was indicted for voter fraud by Secretary of State Roy Blunt.

Ultimately, the repeated refusal by the St. Louis City Election Board to train volunteer registrars had a serious negative impact on voter registration rates in the city. During Senator Ashcroft’s eight years as Governor, the voter registration rate in St. Louis City fell from a high of nearly 75 percent to 59 percent—a rate lower than the statewide average, and 15 percent lower than St. Louis County rate.

The types of barriers to voter registration approved by Governor Ashcroft and his appointed election boards, were explicitly critiqued in the early 1980s by both Democrats and Republicans in the United States Congress. In October 1984, the Subcommittee on Civil Rights and Constitutional Rights of the House Judiciary Committee issued a report with the following finding:

There is no room in our free society for inconvenient and artificial registration barriers designed to impede participation in the electoral process. (W)e do not quarrel with increasing registration outreach and expanding the system of deputation [i.e., training volunteers registrars].

So on every veto, one where we had a limited bill that was just targeted for the city of St. Louis where they were going to, in effect, have training registrars like they had in the county, Ashcroft vetoed that bill and said it was special legislation, and, therefore, he couldn’t agree to it because it was just special to a city in Missouri. So he vetoed it.

A year later, the Missouri legislature passed an overall plan for the whole state that included the appointment of training registrars, so it would have application to the city of St. Louis. And he vetoed that again. He vetoed it because he said it was too broad and unnecessary.

So the result of both of his vetoes was this dramatic adverse impact on black voter participation in the city of St. Louis. At the same time that there were 1,500 voting registrars just outside the core city, there were zero voting registrars in the city of St. Louis as a result of Senator Ashcroft’s actions in the inner city. As a result, there was a significant expansion of voter registration in Republican areas, in the white community, and there was the beginning of the collapse of voter registration in the black communities. That is a direct result.

I will, in just a few moments, show this on a chart which vividly reflects this in a compelling way.

The question at issue in the recent Florida election case was whether the different county-by-county standards in Florida for determining what constituted a valid vote were inconsistent with the equal protection clause to which all Members of the Supreme Court, relying upon existing precedent, concluded that the equal protection clause required the application of a uniform statewide standard for determining what was a valid vote.

I think all Americans can understand, but it was not good enough for Senator Ashcroft. As a result of that failure, we saw a dramatic reduction in voter participation and registration in that community. At a time when the issues of the accuracy of the counting and the secured right to vote are part of our whole national dialog and debate about how we are going to remedy the extraordinary injustices that occurred in the last election and in other elections as well, it would seem to me that all of us demand, we demand, that somewhere is going to be Attorney General; that they are going to protect their right to vote.

If you were one of those Americans who was disenfranchised in the last national election and knew this particular record of Mr. Ashcroft—would you be wondering whether you could ever get a fair deal?

We ought to have an Attorney General in whom all Americans can have confidence and whose votes will be counted and counted fairly.

In 1988, when Governor Ashcroft vetoed the first voter registration bill, he cited two reasons. He said it was unfair to pass a law requiring the city of St. Louis—but, Governor, that mission—to train volunteers to help register voters. And he said he was urged to veto the bill by his appointed St. Louis Board of Elections. (Governor’s Veto Message, June 6, 1988.) Yet every other jurisdiction in Missouri—other than St. Louis City—actively trained outside volunteers.

In 1989, the Missouri legislature, in an effort to respond to Governor Ashcroft’s concerns about unfairness, passed a second bill. This time the legislature adopted a uniform registrar training requirement for election boards throughout the State of Missouri. But Governor Ashcroft vetoed the legislation again claiming that “[e]lection authorities are free to participate with private organizations now to conduct voter registration.”

Democrats and Republicans alike in the legislature said if the Governor is going to veto it because it is targeted, we will pass one with general application. That is what they did, claiming that election authorities are free to participate with private organizations.

As I mentioned, what is troubling is there was a second veto by the Governor of his own line-item veto effectively assuring that there would not be a “unified statewide” procedure—a result that directly conflicts with the equal protection principles announced in the Florida election case and cited by Senator Ashcroft in his testimony to our committee.

The facts are clear. For 8 years as Governor, Senator Ashcroft had the opportunity to ensure that citizens of St. Louis city—nearly half of whom are African-Americans—afforded the same opportunity to register to vote as citizens in the rest of Missouri. Instead, of working to expand the right to vote, Governor Ashcroft and his appointed election board in the city of St. Louis chose to maintain inconvenient and artificial registration barriers that had the purpose and effect of depressing participation in the electoral process, particularly by African-Americans.

Senator Ashcroft’s actions on desegregation and voter registration are relevant to his recent visit to Bob Jones University and his interview with Southern Partisan magazine. The policies of both Bob Jones University and Southern Partisan magazine represent intolerance, bigotry, and a willingness to twist facts to create a society in that image. And those are policies that all Americans should reject.

Displaying an extraordinary lack of sensitivity, Senator Ashcroft claims that he went to Bob Jones University and was interviewed by Southern Partisan magazine without knowing the policies and beliefs of either. Even if those claims are true, Senator Ashcroft’s comments during the hearing were—at best—disturbing. Senator Ashcroft condemned slavery and discrimination, but his response displayed the same fundamental intolerance of how certain institutions in our society perpetuate discrimination.

Senator Ashcroft was unwilling to say that he would not return to Bob Jones University. He believes his presence there may have the potential to unite Americans. But to millions of Americans, such a visit by Senator Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States would be a painful and divisive gesture.

Similarly, on Southern Partisan magazine, Senator Ashcroft would only say that he would “condemn those things which are condemnable.” Surely the man who wants to sit at the head of the Department of Justice should say more and do more where bigotry is the issue. On the issue of women’s rights, Senator Ashcroft’s record is equally troubling. The Supreme Court’s decision in Roe v. Wade in the late 1970s, a quarter century ago held that women have a fundamental constitutional right to decide whether to have an abortion. The Court went on to say that States may regulate the procedure after the first trimester of pregnancy in ways necessary to protect a woman’s health. After fetal viability, a State may prohibit abortions in cases where the procedure is not necessary to protect a woman’s life or health.

In the years since Roe v. Wade, opponents have relentlessly sought to overturn the decision and restrict a woman’s constitutional right to choose. Senator Ashcroft has been one of the chief architects of that strategy. As attorney general of Missouri, he told the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1981:

I have devoted considerable time and significant resources to defending the right of the People in Missouri to limit the effects of Roe, a case in which a handful of men on the Supreme Court arbitrarily amended the Constitution and overturned the laws of 50 states regarding abortion.

Senator Ashcroft’s position is clear. He believes that, except when medically necessary to save a woman’s life, abortion should never be available, even in cases involving a victim of rape or incest. He has said, “Throughout my life, my personal conviction and public record is that the unborn child has a fundamental individual right to life which cannot be infringed and should be protected fully by the 14th Amendment.” While I respect Senator Ashcroft’s personal convictions, they cannot and should not be used as an excuse to deprive women of their constitutional right to choose.

Nevertheless, Senator Ashcroft has been unremitting in his efforts to overturn Roe v. Wade. While serving as attorney general and as Governor, Senator Ashcroft constantly sought the passage of State antichoice legislation and was a principal architect of a continuing nationwide litigation strategy to persuade the Supreme Court to restrict or overturn Roe v. Wade. In 1991, as Governor, he even boasted that no State had more abortion-related cases that reached the Supreme Court.

As attorney general, Senator Ashcroft was so intent on restricting a woman’s right to choose that he personally argued Planned Parenthood of Western Missouri v. Ashcroft in the United States Supreme Court. In that case, decided in 1983, the Supreme Court specifically and clearly rejected, by a 6 to 3 margin, the attempt by the State of Missouri to require all second trimester abortions to be performed in a hospital. The Court did permit, however, three requirements—that a second physician be present during a post-viability abortion; that a minor obtain either parental consent or a judicial waiver to have an abortion; and that a pathology report be prepared for each abortion.

In 1986, Governor Ashcroft signed into law a bill that attempted to overturn Roe v. Wade by declaring that life begins at conception. The bill also imposed restrictions on women’s constitutional right to choose. After signing the bill into law, Governor Ashcroft said, “the bill makes an important statement of moral principle and provides a framework to deter abortion wherever possible.”

In 1989, the bill was challenged all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services. The State of Missouri not only asked the Supreme Court to uphold the statute specifically; it asked the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade. The Court refused to overturn Roe. But by a vote of 5-4, the Court upheld some provisions of the statute, including the prohibitions on the use of public facilities or personnel to perform abortions.

In addition to his attempts to restrict a woman’s right to choose, Senator Ashcroft as attorney general also took direct and improper action that prevented poor women from obtaining gynecological and birth control services. As Attorney General, he issued an opinion stating that nurses in Missouri did “not have the authority to engage in primary health care that includes diagnosis and treatment of human illness, injury or infirmity and administration of medications under general rather than direct physician guidance and supervision.” Following this opinion, the Missouri Board of Registration for the Healing Arts threatened the criminal prosecution of two nurses and five doctors employed by the East Missouri Action Agency who provided family planning services to low-income women, family planning services.

The nurses provided family planning, obstetrics and gynecology services to the public—including information on oral contraceptives, condoms and IUDs; initiatives on breast and pelvic examinations; and testing for sexually-transmitted diseases—through funding for programs directed to low-income populations. The nurses were licensed professionals under Missouri law, and the doctors issued standing orders for the nurses. All services performed by the nurses and doctors were bound to those orders or well-established protocols for nurses and other paramedical personnel. The board, however, threatened to find the nurses guilty of the unauthorized practice of medicine, and to find the doctors guilty of aiding and abetting them.

In 1983, more than 3 years after Attorney General Ashcroft issued his opinion, the Supreme Court of Missouri rejected the opinion, finding that nothing in the Constitution permits the State to limit or restrict the nurses’ and doctors’ practices, and that the nurses actions “clearly” fell within the legislative standard governing the practice of nursing. Although the decision ensured that nurses in Missouri could continue to provide family planning services, during the almost 3 years that the case was pending, Attorney General Ashcroft’s legally untenable opinion placed nurses providing gynecological services in jeopardy, and family planning, in considerable legal peril.

Senator Ashcroft’s aggressive and vocal opposition to Roe v. Wade continued during his service as a Member of the Senate. He voted in favor of overturning Roe v. Wade and sponsored both a human life amendment to the Constitution and parallel legislation. The human life amendment would prohibit all abortions except that required to save the life of the women and the fetus. The proposed constitutional amendment contains no exception for rape or incest, and no protections for a woman’s health. Because the amendment and the proposed statute define life as beginning at fertilization, its language could also be used to ban any type of contraception which prevents a fertilized egg from being implanted in the uterus, including birth control pills and IUDs.

Two years ago, however, Senator Ashcroft appeared to experience a confirmation conversion. He asked us to disregard his past record and unyielding position against reproductive rights and accept his new position—he now views “Roe v. Wade and Planned Parenthood v. Casey as the settled law of the land.” He will not longer work to dismantle Roe, but to enforce it, he says.

Despite his efforts to overturn Roe v. Wade, Senator Ashcroft told the Committee that he “did things to define the law by virtue of lawsuits . . . did things to refine the law when I was a Missouri prosecutor.” His example of his view of “defining” and “refining” the law, during his 1981 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee as attorney general of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft testified that the human life bill—which would prohibit all abortions could be constitutional within the framework of Roe v. Wade. It is clear that as Attorney General of the United States, Senator Ashcroft could easily feel free to define and refine Roe v. Wade out of existence.

Senator Ashcroft also wants the committee to believe that he won’t ask the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade. The current Court has made it clear that it will not overturn Roe. In that sense, Roe is settled law. But once the current composition of the Court changes, however, President Bush and Senator Ashcroft will feel free to take steps to overturn Roe. In an interview on January 20, 2001, President Bush said:

‘‘Roe v. Wade is not going to be overturned by a Constitutional amendment because there’s not the votes in the House or the Senate. I—secondly—I am going to put judges on the Court who strictly interpret the Constitution, and that will be the litmus test . . . I’ve always said that Roe v. Wade was—a judicial reach.

If Senator Ashcroft becomes Attorney General, he will be well-positioned to undermine and eliminate this most basic right of privacy for all American women. President Bush and Senator Ashcroft will select judges and justices who are prepared to turn back the clock to a time when women did not have the right to choose.

We know Senator Ashcroft is willing to go to the courts time and time again to challenge settled law. State of Missouri v. The National Organization for Women is a case in point. In that case, the organization had called for a boycott of Missouri because of the failure by the State to ratify the equal rights amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Senator Ashcroft told the Judiciary Committee that the litigation brought in Missouri by his office against the National Organization for Women was well within the law. He said:

‘‘We filed the lawsuit, to the best of my recollection, because the boycott was hurting the people of Missouri, and we believed it to be in violation of the antitrust laws. The lawsuit had nothing to do with the ERA . . . or the political differences that I might have had now . . .

He went on to say:

Now, I litigated that matter thoroughly, and frankly, other states attempted it . . . I
Mr. President, Senator Ashcroft used state resources to litigate a weak case that rested on an argument rejected by the Supreme Court years ago. But, as with the litigation surrounding the voluntary school desegregation plan, he pushed the issue further on appeal in a losing and illegitimate battle, rather than surrender to justice and protect the rights of women.

Mr. President, just for the information of Members, I have probably 4 or 5 more minutes, I know other wish to speak, Than I will put the rest of the statement in the RECORD.

Mr. President, Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to gun control, his interpretation of the second amendment, and his advocacy of extremist gun lobby proposals are also very disturbing. Over 30,000 Americans lose their lives to gun violence every year, including over 3,000 children and teenagers. Our Nation’s level of gun violence is unparalleled in the rest of the world. In response to the devastation caused by gun violence, the majority of Americans support stricter gun control laws and vigorous enforcement of the laws now on the books.

Contrary to the majority of the American public, Senator Ashcroft vigorously opposes stricter gun control laws. He addressed this issue during the hearing, where he seemed to change his long held beliefs and emphasized his commitment to enforce the gun laws and defend their constitutionality. He testified that “there are constitutional inhibitions on the rights of citizens to bear certain kinds of arms.” Saying he supported some controls, Senator Ashcroft referred to his attempt against Attorney General Ashcroft, both the federal district court and the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals relied upon the Supreme Court’s decision in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc.—a case decided 17 years before Senator Ashcroft brought suit against NOW. The Attorney General said in that case: [The Sherman Act] . . . is a code that condemns trade restraints, not political activity, and, a publicity campaign to influence governmental action falls clearly into the category of political activity.

Still, Attorney General Ashcroft was not deterred, even though the district court and the court of appeals had ruled against Senator Ashcroft in the clear U.S. Supreme Court precedent. Senator Ashcroft persisted and asked the Supreme Court to review the NOW case. The Court refused even to hear the case.

It is deeply troubling that as attorney general, Senator Ashcroft used state resources to litigate a weak case that rested on an argument rejected by the Supreme Court years ago. But, as with the litigation surrounding the voluntary school desegregation plan, he pushed the issue further on appeal in a losing and illegitimate battle, rather than surrender to justice and protect the rights of women.

the measure say Senator Ashcroft voluntarily helped to support the referendum, even recording a radio ad endorsing the proposal. Senator Ashcroft stated in response to written questions that “Although [he did] not recall the specifics of [his] recollection today, it is my understanding that supporters of the referendum approached [him] and asked [him] to record the radio spot.” The fact remains that Senator Ashcroft did support the referendum and did record the radio ad. Few can doubt that as a seasoned politician, Senator Ashcroft made himself fully aware of the contents of the referendum before lending his name to it. And if he did not, there is even greater reason to question his judgment and suitability for such a high and important position in our federal government.

Senator Ashcroft championed the NRA’s concealed weapon proposition in 1998. But in 1992, while governor of Missouri, he had voiced his concerns about such a proposition. Governor Ashcroft said he had “grave concerns” about concealed carry laws. He stated, “Overall, I don’t know that I would be one to want to promote a whole lot of people carrying concealed weapons in this society.” Further stated, “Obviously, if it’s something to authorize everyone to carry concealed weapons, I’d be concerned about it.” When asked about his change of view in deciding to support the 1998 initiative, Senator Ashcroft said he had “misinterpreted” the question. “Research plus real-world experiences.” However, Senator Ashcroft’s research was so flawed that he responded to written questions that “[t]o the extent there were loopholes in Missouri law” that would permit convicted child molesters and stalkers to carry concealed weapons, he was “unaware of those provisions at the time.” Later, it was reported that the gun lobby spent $400,000 in support of Senator Ashcroft’s Senate reelection campaign. He had campaigned as a supporter of concealed carry, as a spokesman . . . for the National Rifle Association’s recent attempts to arm citizens with concealed weapons in Missouri,” according to a column by Laura Scott in the Kansas City Star.

The Citizens’ Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms gave Senator Ashcroft the “Gun Rights Defender of the Month” Award for leading the opposition to David Satcher’s nomination to be Surgeon General. The group objected to Dr. Satcher because he advocated treating gun violence as a public health problem. Based on his close ties to the gun lobby and his strong support for their agenda, it is difficult to have confidence that Senator Ashcroft will fulfill and fairly enforce the nation’s gun control laws and not seek to weaken them.

Senator Ashcroft has shown time and time again that he supports the gun lobby and opposes needed gun safety measures. Given the important litigation in the federal courts, it is imperative to have an Attorney General who will strongly enforce current gun control laws such as the Brady Law, the assault weapons ban, and other statutes. It is also important to have an Attorney General with a responsible view of proposed legislation when the Department of Justice is asked to comment on it.

Senator Ashcroft’s handling of judicial and executive branch nominations also raises deep concerns. In four of the most divisive nomination battles in the Senate in the 6 years he served with us, Senator Ashcroft was consistently involved in harsh and vigorous opposition to the confirmation of distinguished and well-qualified African Americans, an Asian American and a gay American.

When President Clinton nominated Judge Ronnie White of the Missouri Supreme Court to be a federal district court judge, Senator Ashcroft flagrantly distorted the record of the nominee and attacked him in the strongest terms. He accused Judge White of having a “slant toward criminals.” He accused him of being a judge with “a serious bias against a willingness to impose the death penalty.” He accused him of seeking “at every turn” to provide opportunity to escape punishment.” He accused him of voting “to reverse the death sentence in more cases than any other [Missouri] Supreme Court judge.”

When questioned about Judge White’s record, Senator Ashcroft did not retreat from his characterization of Judge White’s record, although a review clearly demonstrates that Senator Ashcroft’s charges were baseless.

Judge White is not an ardent opponent of the death penalty. He voted to uphold death penalty convictions in 41 cases, and voted to reverse them in only 17 cases. His votes in death penalty cases were not significantly different from the votes of the other members of the Missouri Supreme Court—judges whom Senator Ashcroft appointed when he was Governor. In more than half of the 17 cases in which Judge White voted to overturn a death sentence, he was voting with the majority—with Ashcroft appointees.

Seven of these cases were unanimous decisions. There were only three death penalty reversals in which Judge White was the only judge who voted to overturn a death sentence. In fact, four of the five other judges whom Senator Ashcroft named to the court have voted to overturn more death penalty convictions than Judge White. That record is not the record of “an activist with a slant toward criminals.”

In fact, Judge White’s record in death penalty cases shows him to be in the Missouri mainstream. Four of his colleagues who were appointed to the bench by Governor Ashcroft have voted to overturn between 22 percent and 25 percent of the death penalty convictions they considered. Judge White voted to reverse the convictions in 29 percent of the death penalty cases he heard. By contrast, his predecessor Judge Thomas, also an Ashcroft appointee, voted to reverse 47 percent of the death sentences he reviewed. There is no significant difference between Judge White’s record on the death penalty and the records of his colleagues on the court.

Some law enforcement officials in Missouri did oppose the White nomination. But many Missouri police officials supported Judge White. He had the support of the State Fraternal Order of Police. The head of the FOP said, “The record of Justice White is one of a jurist whose record on the death penalty has been far more supportive of the rights of victims than the rights of criminals.” Judge White was also endorsed by the chief of police of the St. Louis Metropolitan Police Department. The president of the Missouri Police Chiefs Association described Judge White as “an upright, fine individual.”

The reason why Ashcroft’s statements on the Senate floor on the nomination, he focused on a small number of Judge White’s opinions. A review of Judge White’s entire record suggests that those cases were taken very much out of context. In two of the three cases with serious questions about the competency of the defendant’s trial counsel, in the third, there was evidence of racial bias by the trial judge. Those cases were not disagreements about the death penalty. The majority of the other cases make this point in the clearest terms:

This is a very hard case. If Mr. Johnson was in control of his faculties when he went on this murderous rampage, then he assuredly deserves the death sentence he was given. . . . I am not convinced that the performance of his counsel did not rob Mr. Johnson of any opportunity he might have had to convince the jury that he was not responsible for his actions. This is an excellent example of why hard cases make bad law. While I share the majority’s horror at this carnage, I cannot uphold this as an acceptable standard of representation for a defendant accused of capital murder.

Senator Ashcroft’s statements on the White nomination strongly suggest that Senator Ashcroft has a misguided view of the role of judges in our constitutional system. To label a judge “procriminal,” based on isolated opinions, is an unjustifiable attack on the career of a judge. When the court reach a contrary position, it is wrong. Judges are obliged to decide individual cases according to the requirements of law, including the Constitution. Judge White has frequently voted to affirm criminal convictions, including 41 capital cases. The fact that he reached a contrary position in a few cases should not disqualify him to be a federal judge.

What is most noteworthy about Senator Ashcroft’s attacks on Judge White is the extraordinary degree to which Senator Ashcroft distorted the record in order to portray Judge White’s confirmation as a referendum on the death penalty. This is a judge who had voted to uphold more than 70 percent of the death penalty convictions he had reviewed. Yet Senator Ashcroft never questioned Judge White about these issues at the committee hearing on Judge White’s nomination, and he never in Judge White’s nomination gave Mr. Ashcroft an opportunity to explain his reasons for dissenting in the three cases before unfairly attacking his record.

It appears that Senator Ashcroft had decided to use the death penalty as an issue in his re-election campaign for the Senate, and to make his point, he cruelly distorted the honorable record of a distinguished African American judge and denied him the position he deserved as a federal district court judge. As I said at the hearing, what Senator Ashcroft did to Judge White is the ugliest thing that has happened to a nominee in all my years in the Senate.

Senator Ashcroft was also asked about his nomination of Ann B. Burd, a woman who had served in the Army to serve as Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights. Dr. David Satcher to serve as Surgeon General of the United States, and James Hormel to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Luxembourg.

Senator Ashcroft told the committee that he could not support Mr. Lee because he had “serious concerns about his willingness to enforce the Adarand decision” on affirmative action. In truth, however, Mr. Lee’s position on affirmative action was well within the mainstream of the law, and he explicitly stated in 1988 that he would follow the Supreme Court’s ruling in the Adarand case. As Senator LEAHY said during the Ashcroft confirmation hearings,

Mr. Lee testified on a number of occasions—in fact, testified under oath, including, incidentally, directly in answer to your questions, that he would enforce the law as declared by the courts. And he also said, in direct answer to questions of this committee, he considered the Adarand decision of the Supreme Court as the controlling legal authority. That he would support it, he would support it fully. . .

Similarly, Senator Ashcroft said he did not support Dr. Satcher to be Surgeon General because he:

Supported a number of activities that I thought were inconsistent with the ethical obligations of a medical doctor and a physician, particularly the surgeon general. . . . for example he supported an AIDS study on pregnant women in Africa where some patients were given placebos, even though a treatment existed to limit transmission of AIDS from the mother to the child. . . . Secondly, believed his willingness to send AIDS-infected babies home with their mothers without telling their mothers about the infection of the children was another ethical problem that was very serious.

In fact, at the time of the debate on the Satcher nomination in 1997, approximately 1,000 babies were born with HIV every day. Most of the births were in developing countries, where the U.S.-accepted regimen of AZT treatment was not available because of safety and cost concerns. In 1994, the World Health Organization had called a meeting of international experts to review the use of AZT to prevent the spread of HIV in pregnancy. That meeting resulted in the recommendation that studies be conducted in developing countries to test the effectiveness and safety of short-term AZT therapy that could be used in developing countries and that those studies be placebo-controlled to ensure safety in areas with various immune challenges. Approval was obtained by ethics committees in this country and the host countries and by the UNAIDS program. The National Institutes of Health and the Centers for Disease Control agreed to support the studies in order to save lives in developing countries.

Many leaders in the medical field supported the studies. Dr. Nancy Dickey, AMA president-elect at the time, said that the studies in Africa and Asia were “scientifically well-founded” and conducted with “informed consent.” Those doctors did not support the studies still supported Dr. Satcher’s nomination. Dr. Sidney Wolfe, Director of Public Citizen’s Health Research Group, said that while he had no exposure of AZT to-infant HIV transmission, and a discovery of a child-bearing women. In 1995, forty-five states, including Missouri, signed to provide information about the time, because it was the only unbiased way to provide a valid estimate of the spreading of AIDS from the mother to the child. . . .

The HIV epidemic. These surveys were designed to provide information about the level of HIV in a given community without individual information. The Survey of Child-Bearing Women was one of the HIV surveys conducted under the program. The CDC and conducted by the states.

Forty-five states, including Missouri while Senator Ashcroft was Governor, participated in the survey and requested and received federal funds from the CDC. The request for these funds was important to public health officials at the time, because it was the only unbiased way to provide a valid estimate of the number of women with HIV and their demographic distribution. Dr. Wolfe said that the survey was justified, and it was not a valid reason for Senator Ashcroft to deny him confirmation as Surgeon General.

The case of James Hormel is also especially troubling. When Mr. Hormel was nominated by President Clinton to serve as Ambassador to Luxembourg, Senator Ashcroft and Senator HELMS were the only two members of the Foreign Relations Committee to oppose the nomination. Although Senator Ashcroft voted against Mr. Hormel, Senator Ashcroft did not attend the confirmation hearings, did not submit written questions, and refused Mr. Hormel’s repeated requests to meet or speak by phone to discuss the nomination.

In 1998, when asked about his opposition to Mr. Hormel’s nomination, Senator Ashcroft stated that homosexuality is a sin and that a person’s sexual conduct “is within what could be considered and what is eligible for consideration.” Senator Ashcroft also publicly stated in 1988 that: “[Mr. Hormel’s] conduct and the way in which he would represent the United States is probably not up to the standard that I would expect.”

Senator LEAHY asked Senator Ashcroft at the Judiciary Committee hearings whether he opposed Hormel’s nomination because of Hormel’s sexual orientation. Senator Ashcroft responded “I did not.” Instead, Senator Ashcroft claimed that he had “known Mr. Hormel for a long time”—Mr. Hormel had been a dean of students at the University of Chicago law school when Senator Ashcroft was a student there in the 1960s. Senator Ashcroft repeatedly testified that he based his opposition to Mr. Hormel on the “totality of the record. Mr. Hormel was so troubled by Senator Ashcroft’s testimony that he wrote to the committee and said the following:

I want to state unequivocally and for the record that there is no personal or professional relationship between me and Mr. Ashcroft which could possibly support such a statement. The letter continued, I have had no contact with him [Ashcroft] of any type since I left my position as Dean of Students . . . nearly thirty-four years ago, in 1967 . . . For Mr. Ashcroft to state that he was able to assess my qualifications . . . based upon his personal long-time relationship with me is misleading, erroneous, and disingenuous . . . I find it personally offensive that Mr. Ashcroft, under oath and in response to your direct questions, would choose to misstate the nature of our relationship, insinuate objective grounds for voting against me, and deny that his personal viewpoint about my sexual orientation played any role in his actions.

We should all be deeply concerned about Senator Ashcroft’s willingness to mislead the Judiciary Committee about his reasons for opposing the Hormel nomination. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch noted on January 22, 2001. “[T]he most disturbing part of Mr. Ashcroft’s testimony was the way in which he misrepresented important parts of his record.”

In conclusion, the Attorney General of the United States leads the 85,000 men and women who enforce the nation’s laws in every community in the country. The Attorney General is the nation’s chief law enforcement officer and a symbol of the nation’s commitment to justice. Americans from every walk of life deserve to have trust in him to be fair and just in his words and in his actions. He has vast power to set priorities for law enforcement in ways that are fair or unfair—just or unjust.

When a President nominates a person to serve in his Cabinet, the presumption is rightly in favor of the nominee. But Senator Ashcroft has a long and detailed record of relentless opposition on fundamental issues of civil rights and other basic rights of vital importance to all the people of America, and the people of this country deserve better than that. Americans are entitled to an Attorney General who will vigorously fight to uphold the law and protect our constitutional rights. Based on a detailed review of his long record in public service, Senator Ashcroft is not the person to have the Senate vote no on this nomination.

Mr. President, since I see a number of my colleagues, I will take the opportunity, when there is a pause in the Senate, to complete my statement. At this time the floor

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I would like to begin on an honor and privilege to stand here today, in support of the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States. Contrary to some of the rhetoric we have been hearing from the other side, everybody in this institution knows he is one of the finest people who ever served here. He is a man of great religious faith, a moral man. Yet as we listen to this debate, if it wasn’t for the fact that it was so personally destructive and so vindictive, it would be1 be beautiful.

We have a man who served 6 years in the Senate, served two terms as Governor, two terms as attorney general of the State of Missouri. Yet to hear the debate, he is anti-child, anti-woman, anti-black, anti-gay, anti-Catholic. What else can possibly be said?

One thing we can certainly be assured of—the left knows how to play politics. They do it well, and I commend them for it. Unfortunately, too often in politics they misrepresent unfairly the reputations of people who don’t deserve it. That is what offends me the most. I will not use the term “anger,” but it does offend me that this kind of personal destruction has to be used.

I recall the comments earlier in the debate today of Senator LEAHY when he said there are 280 million Americans with different ethnic backgrounds and political views. Out of that 280 million Americans, according to the left, if there were any 280 million Americans who are conservative and happen to be pro-life or pro-gun, they can’t be Attorney General. If they are pro-choice or if they are anti-gun, then they can be.

I again remind my colleagues that the vote on Janet Reno was 98-0. Most of us on this side of the aisle would agree that her views and ours were quite different. But I supported her nomination because the President of the United States has a right to pick his or her Cabinet. That is a fact.

I will respond directly to this anti-Catholic charge. It is so outrageous, I don’t know how people can look in the mirror, to be candid about it, and do this kind of personal destruction.

Let me read from a copy of a letter I just received from Senator KENNEDY’s own cardinal, Cardinal Law. I will read it into the record.

DEAR SENATOR ASHCROFT:

Let me begin by expressing my deep dismay at the unfounded and scurrilous charge that you could possibly harbor anti-Catholic feelings. I was astounded to hear that anyone was making such a ridiculous accusation.

From any time as Bishop of Springfield/Cape Girardeau until today, I have always found you to be a man of honor, integrity and deep faith. I recall with great fondness and with great thankfulness the many opportunities we had to work together on many issues affecting the lives of the good people of Missouri. In a particular way, I recall how kind and thoughtful you were to invite me to address The Governor’s Annual Prayer Breakfast on January 9, 1992 when you were serving as the Governor of Missouri. On that same day you also honored me with an invitation to address The Governor’s Leadership Forum on Faith and Values. College students, then and now, are beneficiaries of your generous love and concern for them and their futures. I do not recall that you made any distinctions between black and white, Protestant, Catholic or Jew in your desire to instill in them a love for their faith, their families and one another as brothers and sisters in the human family.

Let me assure you, John, of my prayers. Asking God to bless you, Janet, the children and all you hold dear and with warm personal regards. I am

Sincerely yours in Christ,

BERNARD F. LAW,
Archbishop of Boston.

Mr. President, there are a long line of people on the basis of their position on life who couldn’t be Attorney General. We could start with Jesus Christ himself. We could also add to that list the Pope, Mother Teresa, all the cardinals in the United States. We are going to have to eliminate a whole lot of people. It is so outrageous and, frankly, just, it really exposes the left for what they are.

It exposes the left for what they are. Let me read part of a comment made by Bill Bennett:

What you are seeing is the true face of the Democratic Party. What you are seeing is them saying to a man “you are perfectly decent, everything is in the law, you haven’t harbored any illegal aliens, you have never left the scene of a crime, you led an exemplary life, but we don’t approve of your views.” You dare to say you are pro-life, you dare to say you are opposed to reverse discrimination and for that you will pay. For that we will make this experience something you never forget.” I hope the American people watch them. If you want to see the haters, you’ll see them in these press conferences behind the attempt to kill the Ashcroft nomination.

You can’t say it any better than that. People should be ashamed of themselves. Who did our side oppose on a Cabinet appointment in the Clinton administration? There are all sorts of positions in which the exception of Janet Reno. That was 98-0.

The activist Democrats shooting at John Ashcroft in his bid to become America’s next Attorney General have revealed the ugliness about themselves, not about John Ashcroft. John Ashcroft sat on that committee on a panel and took those questions and took that abuse. He was decent, repectable, honorable, gracious, and took it all.

He is above them all. He showed it on national television. He is above them all. His critics couldn’t tie his shoe laces or even shine his boots.

Betsy Hart also said:

Apparrently these folks are so comfortable with using cabinet offices to create law instead of to enforce existing laws and so content to see judges write new law instead of interpreting existing law, they can’tathom a responsible officeholder who will honor the rule of law.

You cannot say it any better than that, if you are prepared for 10 years. That sums it up in a nutshell. They are so used to using these positions to create law, they can’t believe a person such as John Ashcroft, who will say to you: I worked as hard as I could as a Member of the Senate to create laws for what I believe in. So does everybody else on the left, and you have every right to do that. But there is a difference between that John Ashcroft and the John Ashcroft, however reluctant he may be, who will step up to the plate as the Attorney General of the United States and say—yes, even the laws he doesn’t like. His record proves he did it over and over and over and over again. There is not one shred of evidence to indicate that he didn’t do it.

I am sick and tired of the hypocrisy in this place. Much was made about another issue; when you start getting into the racial charges, that hits right below the belt. I am going to answer it. It deserves to be answered. Is there anybody in here whose spouse taught for several years at a predominantly black school? Is that racist? In the news today is speculation that his No. 2 person may, in fact, be black. So what. The most qualified person should be who he picks. Then the issue of segregation in the St. Louis matter be—what. The most qualified person should be who he picks. Then the issue of desegregation in the St. Louis matter be—what. The most qualified person should be who he picks. Then the issue of desegregation in the St. Louis matter be—what. The most qualified person should be who he picks.
Anyone who implies that is flat out wrong. If John Ashcroft is guilty of segregation because he defended the State, then why is Jay Nixon, who is the attorney general, himself, not guilty of the same thing? Why is it that a prominent Member of this body—I will introduce this into the RECORD—Senator KENNEDY and Senator HARKIN—invite you to a breakfast “to meet and support Missouri Senate candidate, Attorney General Jay Nixon, Tuesday, March 31, 1998, at The Monocle for a contribution of $5,000 or finish your max-out”? He did the same thing as Ashcroft did. And it is hypocrisy to stand here and say this to destroy the reputation of one of the finest people who ever served there.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this announcement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: On behalf of the National Sheriffs’ Association (NSA), I am writing to offer our strong support for the nomination of Attorney General Designate John Ashcroft. As the voice of elected law enforcement, we are proud to lend our support to his nomination and look forward to his confirmation.

As you know, NSA is a non-profit professional association located in Alexandria, Virginia. NSA represents nearly 3,100 elected sheriffs across the Nation and has more than 20,000 members including deputy sheriffs, other law enforcement professionals, students and others.

NSA has been a long time supporter of Attorney General Ashcroft and in 1996, he received our NSA Law Enforcement Service Award. After review of Senator Ashcroft’s record of service, as it relates to law enforcement, we have determined that he will make an outstanding Attorney General and he is eminently qualified to lead the Department of Justice. NSA feels that Senator Ashcroft will be an outstanding Attorney General for law enforcement and the U.S. Senate should confirm him.

I look forward with you to ensure that the U.S. Senate confirms Attorney General Designate Ashcroft.

Sincerely,

JERRY ‘PEANUTS’ GAINS, President.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. The National Sheriffs’ Association wrote a letter on behalf of John Ashcroft for Attorney General.

On this business about Ronnie White, the truth of the matter is the individual accused of that crime, Mr. Johnson, went on a 24-hour crime spree, killed three sheriffs, killing the wife of one, going to lead the Department of Justice, someone who has had an extreme ideological agenda on civil rights, on a woman’s right to choose, on gun control, his positions are far outside the mainstream. Often, his rhetoric has been harsh and wounded.

As attorney general and Governor of Missouri; he pushed systematically and regularly for the disempowerment of people of color and the disempowerment of women to have access to health services related to their own reproduction.

Can anyone be surprised that this nomination is divisive? This is not a time in our history for further division.
My wonderful colleague from New Hampshire left the floor. I want to say something. I don’t have a litmus test on nominations. I don’t have a single issue by which I judge any and of all the nominees. He raised the issue, and appropriate to be a man of your integrity, if you believe, can you be confirmed in the Senate, or can you get Democratic votes? The answer is yes, and right here.

I will give you an example. Governor Thompson has now been appointed our Secretary of HHS. I am pro-choice. Governor Thompson is not. I did not hesitate to vote for Governor Thompson because I looked at the pattern of the way he governed. He is a champion of welfare rights and truly a compassionate conservative—one of the first to have a State version of a woman’s health agenda, a real commitment to dealing with the tragedy of long-term care and extra support to care givers. This is a Cabinet member I want to work with in constructive dialog.

I had no litmus test. I don’t believe my colleagues do. I believe among our own own people there are some about which it is not whether you are pro-choice or pro-life, it is, are you committed to some of the central values of our society?

Do you believe America is a mosaic, that all people come with different heritages and different beliefs and have a right to equal opportunity and justice under the law? Do you believe the social glue is access to courts that you believe are fundamentally fair. Do you believe that the Attorney General at the State or Federal level will embrace the fundamental principles of our U.S. Government? That is our criteria.

When I looked at the nomination of John Ashcroft, I had to say, Is he competent? Yes. You can’t dispute that. His whole education and record—yes, he is competent. On integrity? Until the confirmation hearing, I believed him to be a man of great integrity. I had no doubt. But all of a sudden, there were two John Ashcrofts. The prehearing John Ashcroft who was Attorney General, as Governor of Missouri, here on the Senate floor had one set of beliefs. I respect those beliefs. People are entitled to their beliefs. But all of a sudden in the confirmation hearing, his beliefs no longer mattered to him. If you fundamentally opposed, as he did, issues of civil rights, the access of women to reproductive services, how is it you could have such passionate beliefs one day and then say they didn’t matter, you would put them on the shelf?

When I looked at John Ashcroft and his record as attorney general and as Governor, I was deeply troubled. What I was troubled about was how he enforced issues, his record on civil rights, on a woman’s right to choose, on enforcing the laws.

On civil rights, the Attorney General of the United States decides how vigorously we enforce existing civil rights laws. The Civil Rights Division monitors and ensures that school districts comply with desegregation. Yet as attorney general, John Ashcroft strenuously opposed a voluntary court-ordered desegregation plan agreed to by all parties. He even tried to block this after a Federal court found that the State was acting unconstitutionally and then went on to vilify the court for their position.

One of the fundamental civil rights is the right to vote. Didn’t we just go through that in the most closely contested election? Every vote does count, and everybody should be registered. Yet as Governor, he vetoed the Voter Registration Reform Act which would have significantly increased minority voter registration and was endorsed by such groups as the League of Women Voters. Here has been a persistent pattern of opposing opportunity in the areas of civil rights.

On the protection of rights of individuals, the right to choose, the Attorney General has great power to undermine existing constitutional protections and a woman’s right to choose. As attorney general, John Ashcroft used his office to limit women’s access to health care, particularly reproductive health care, filing an amicus brief in a case that sought to prevent nurses from providing routine GYN services and also giving out on a voluntary basis usual and customary methods of contraceptives, saying they were practicing medicine. What they were doing was practicing public health.

Based on his record and other statements, I can only conclude that John Ashcroft would use his position to undermine existing laws, including the constitutional protection of a woman’s right to choose and access to reproductive health services, after these services have already been affirmed by law and the Supreme Court.

Sexual orientation. The Attorney General is charged with enforcing antidiscrimination laws, which include protections for homosexuals. Yet John Ashcroft opposed the nomination of James Hormel to be Ambassador to Luxembourg simply because he is gay.

Now, hello, what does that mean would happen in his own department? Will this be an issue with his own hiring at the Department of Justice?

The Justice Department advises the President on proposed legislation; for example, hate crimes prevention, another part of the social glue of America. John Ashcroft voted against this legislation. How does he feel about hate crimes now? Will he enforce existing hate crime laws? Will he recommend that the President expand them?

The Justice Department is called upon to enforce other laws. One of the big flashing yellow lights is racial profiling. By the way, Governor of New Jersey was called into question about the way she enforced racial profiling, but I voted for her to be EPA Administrator because that is not the issue in being an EPA Administrator. Again, not listening to the so-called left-wing groups they talk about. Please let’s end this demeaning of groups.

The NAACP, People for the American Way, the ACLU, these are part of America. Senator Ashcroft could have acted in racial profiling, but he held it up in committee. He was quite passive. Is he going to be passive when it comes to this as Attorney General? I wonder.

probably voted for him. But I cannot vote for him to be Attorney General because I do believe that beliefs matter and the beliefs that you show over a record of a lifetime show the true way you will conduct your office. Beliefs are not in a lockbox. I cannot consent to the nomination of John Ashcroft. I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing this nomination. I also urge my colleagues, let us not have demeaning rhetoric on the floor or try to demonize either a group or a nominee.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I am prepared to speak at this moment. If there is a Republican Senator on the floor, I will be happy to yield time so we can take turns.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will wait, I understand Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison is coming over. Here she is now. I appreciate that courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for having this nomination go forward and for giving us the opportunity to talk. I think the debate is very important. I think it is important that we talk about the John Ashcroft we know because when I hear some of the other people talking about John Ashcroft, it is not the same person with whom I served for 6 years. I would like to set the record straight on a couple of points.

I have known John and Janet Ashcroft since long before they came to the Senate because he was a leader for his State and our country for many years before he represented his State in the Senate. He has been a Governor. He has been elected chairman of the National Governors’ Association. He has been the attorney general for the State of Missouri. And he served as chairman of the National General Association of the United States. So he has been in a position of leadership for our country many times.

I think he is the most qualified person to have been nominated for Attorney General in many years. He has served in the capacity of attorney general as well as Governor and in the U.S. Senate.

The people of America saw the true heart of John Ashcroft when his opponent, Mel Carnahan, died near the end of their race for the Senate. I was there for John Ashcroft after that tragic accident. I think John Ashcroft did not know what to do, just like everyone else. He had no intention of campaigning against a man who had just died, a man who had also served the State of Missouri so well. He had no intention of campaigning against his widow when she made the decision that she would take the appointment of the Governor if Mr. Carnahan won the election.

John Ashcroft kept his word. He kept his word and has never uttered a word about Mrs. Carnahan. So I think when he was ultimately defeated, his magnanimity in defeat also showed that he is a person of character first—character above public servant, character above partisan, character above everything else. He showed it at a time when he had thought he probably would not be in public office again. But he did what was right from his heart. That is why I am supporting him for Attorney General of the United States.

He also has an impressive academic background to this office. He is a graduate of the University of Chicago School of Law. He attended Yale University. I also want to mention, because I think she is very much a part of this team, his wife Janet and their joint commitment to education in our country. When she moved up here with Senator Ashcroft, she decided she wanted to teach. She chose to teach at Howard University, a historically black colleges. Howard University is where she has taught for 5 years. I think she has shown her commitment to education by going the extra mile to share her experiences and her knowledge with the students at Howard University. Janet, by the way, is also a lawyer.

I am very proud to support both Janet and John Ashcroft.

We have had a lot of John Ashcroft’s record, things which he said which have also been refuted. In my experience with John Ashcroft, he was the cosponsor of my legislation to eliminate the marriage tax penalty, which has the effect of taxing so many couples just because they get married—not because they make higher salaries individually but because they get married—and throwing them into a higher bracket. John did not just cosponsor the bill and walk away; he fought with me on the floor, day after day, week after week. We passed marriage penalty relief. It was because John Ashcroft worked as hard as I did to make that happen. It was vetoed by the President. But eventually we are going to pass marriage penalty relief in this country, and the President is going to sign it, and people will not have to pay the average $1,400 a year just because of their married status.

John did this because he believes in family. Family, he believes, makes marriage one of the ways people can live a good life. Statistics show that married people are the least likely to be on welfare or to get into any kind of criminal trouble. I think we should be encouraging marriage, not discouraging it. John Ashcroft agrees with that.

He worked with me on reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act. We introduced legislation to amend current stalking laws to make it a crime to stalk someone at State lines. And the more stalking has become a more common crime in recent years, as the use of the Internet has increased. Young people are lured into a situation in which criminal conduct becomes part of an association. That happens when you have Internet chatrooms. Internet chatrooms often cause people to start thinking they want to meet, and that has facilitated criminal acts when it has not been monitored correctly. So I am very proud to support the appointment of John Ashcroft. I also want to mention, because I think he is the most qualified person with whom I served for 6 years.

Internet chatrooms often cause people to start thinking they want to meet, and that has facilitated criminal acts when it has not been monitored correctly. So I am very proud to support the appointment of John Ashcroft. I also want to mention, because I think he is the most qualified person with whom I served for 6 years.

We have not heard a lot of John Ashcroft we know because when I hear some of the other people talking about John Ashcroft, it is not the same person with whom I served for 6 years.
On January 23, Ms. James replied to my letter. This is basically what she said:

On Thursday, I testified that “several members of the Senate have questioned whether or not a man of strong personal faith and conviction can set aside his personal beliefs and serve as the Attorney General for all citizens.” You ask me to identify these several senators. As I told you after the hearing, this summary came directly from Senator Ashcroft’s testimony on January 18th.

And then she relates the transcript of the session which reads as follows:

Senator LEAHY asked of Senator Ashcroft:

Have you heard any senator, Republican or Democrat, suggest that there should be a religious test on your confirmation?

John Ashcroft:

No Senator has said “I will test you.” But a number of senators have said, “Will your religion keep you from being able to perform your duties in office?”

Senator LEAHY went on to say:

All right, well, I’m amazed at that. And that was in the transcript. Ms. James goes on to say:

As we further discussed, I think when you put it into the context of substituting another qualifier for “religion” that the openness of the statement is apparent. I think this as troubling as asking whether being a “woman” or being an “African-American” would prevent someone from doing a job.

I believe that is a fair characterization of what he did not know the name of any Senator who raised either personally or privately to Senator Ashcroft or certainly publicly any question about his fitness for office based on his religious belief. I do not know the religions of any of the nominees to President Bush’s Cabinet, nor do I think it is important to the job of Attorney General.

During the course of the hearings, the Republicans brought forward a lady by the name of Kay Coles James who works for the Heritage Foundation. After her testimony, I had a conversation with her on two different occasions. At the end of the second conversation, you and I talked on a lot more than we disagree when it comes to religion in public life. I liked her.

She said something in her testimony on this same issue that caused me great concern. One point she made John Ashcroft was a victim of “religious profiling.” That was her term. It is not in her written statement, but it is what she said before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In her written statement and repeated at the hearing, she said:

Unfortunately that faith Senator Ashcroft’s faith—has been dragged into the public debate and has been used to call into question his fitness for public service. Senator Ashcroft’s opponents have veered perilously close to implying that a person of strong religious beliefs cannot be trusted with the office of Attorney General.

As a result of that statement in the hearing, I called Ms. James over afterwards and said: I am going to ask you very specifically tomorrow to name the Senators who have crossed this line and raised questions about John Ashcroft’s religious belief. I did not have time the second day when the panel returned. I sent a letter to her in writing.

I say to those who raise the question about whether the Judiciary Committee or any committee is being fair to President Bush by having a thorough investigation of John Ashcroft or any other nominee, I think the agenda of the senators questioning these nominees is not the creation of any Senator, nor certainly of the Democratic side in the Senate. It is the creation of the Founding Fathers in article II, section 2, of the Constitution where they gave to the Senate the power of advice and consent to the President’s nominees.

The criticisms of this process ignore our sworn responsibility to defend the Constitution. Alexander Hamilton, writing in Federalist Paper No. 76 on “The Appointment Power of the Executive” wrote this of the advice and consent provision which brings us to the floor today:

It is not easy to conceive a plan better calculated than this to promote a judicious choice of men for filling the offices of the Union.

Please forgive Alexander Hamilton for just referring to men, but that was the style of the day. I would certainly be inclined to take his sentiment to include women, but otherwise I agree wholeheartedly. There was and is enormous wisdom in the constitutional provision to provide to the legislative branch, in this case the Senate, the ability to exercise oversight of the nominations made by the President.

The Founding Fathers believed, and I think they were right, that the power to appoint people to high office in the United States should not be vested in the hands of a single individual.

The President deserves clear and broad latitude in making the appointments of his choice, but just as clearly, the Senate has a responsibility to ensure that these appointments will serve expertly, broadly, and fairly in a manner that will benefit all Americans, and the Senate has the power to, if necessary, reject the nomination.

My colleague, Senator PENGOLD, in his statement yesterday before the committee, noted that this is a rare situation when the Senate rejects a nomination, but I will tell you, during the course of our Nation’s history, there have been literally hundreds of names withdrawn when it was clear they would not pass with approval before the Senate.

Alexander Hamilton thought such rejections would occur rarely and only when there were strong reasons for the refusal.” I believe we have before us one of those rare instances that Hamilton foresaw. There exists today just such “special and strong reasons” to reject the nomination of John Ashcroft for the position of Attorney General. I would like to outline my reasons that necessitated my vote against his nomination.

During his testimony, Senator Ashcroft did a masterful job painting a portrait of his vision of the job of Attorney General. He described himself as a man who would even-handedly enforce and defend the laws of the land no matter how strong his personal disagreement with those laws, but his public career paints a much different picture.

When I look at the public record of John Ashcroft and compare it, point by point, to his public testimony, I am looking at two completely different portrayals, two completely different people. During the hearings, Senator Ashcroft promised fairness in setting the agenda for the Department of Justice and vowed to protect vulnerable people. He has not abandoned, if ever, championed in his public life.

Which picture tells the story? If John Ashcroft were to become Attorney General, would it be John Ashcroft, the defender of a woman’s constitutional right to choose, or John Ashcroft, passionate opponent of Roe v. Wade? John Ashcroft, the defender of sensible gun safety laws, or John Ashcroft, who opposed every significant gun safety measure that came before the Senate during his tenure. John Ashcroft as defender of civil rights, or John Ashcroft, who, as Governor of Missouri, opposed a voluntary—I repeat, voluntary—school desegregation plan and efforts to register minorities to vote.

We all heard Senator Ashcroft’s testimony, but his public record speaks clarity and consistency.

Let us consider the question of dicrimination against a person because of their sexual orientation. Consider whether those with a different sexual orientation were victims of a hate crime could expect the protection of John Ashcroft’s Department of Justice.
I cannot speak for all of America—maybe only a small part of it—but I think, regardless of your view towards sexual orientation, the vast majority of Americans oppose discrimination against anyone because of their sexual orientation. The vast majority of Americans think it is fundamentally unfair to treat people with a different sexual persuasion

Recently at Georgetown University,
Professor Paul Offner stated that in a
1985 job interview, then-Governor
Ashcroft asked him pointblank about his sexual orientation. Mr. Offner related that the Governor asked him:
“Do you have the same sexual preference as most men?” Senator Ashcroft, through his spokespeople, has denied this. In fact, they brought witnesses to say that it did not happen.
Perhaps the story was noticed no more than the typical Washington version of “yes, you did; and, no, I didn’t;” were it not for the matter of Senator Ashcroft’s troubling record on the issue of tolerance for people of diff erent sexual orientations.

Senator Ashcroft opposed the nomination of James Hormel as Ambassador to Luxembourg because Mr. Hormel, in Senator Ashcroft’s words, “... has been a leader in promoting a lifestyle
... A person who has exhibited himself is likely to be offensive to ... individuals in the setting to which he will be assigned.”

For the record, Mr. Hormel’s lifestyle is that he is an openly gay man.

I know the appointment of any Ambassador is important. Certainly, the appointment to a nation such as Luxembourg, which has been a friend of the United States for a long time, is important. But to single out James Hormel because he is an openly gay man, and to oppose his nomination because of that, I think, is not fair.

Senator Ashcroft said he opposed Mr.
Hormel’s nomination based on the “to-facility of the record.” When he was asked by Senator Leahy if he opposed
Mr. Hormel because he was gay, Senator Ashcroft denied that. He said: “I did not.”

Senator Ashcroft had very little contact with Mr. Hormel before his nomination. He refused to meet with Mr.
Hormel after he was nominated despite
Mr. Hormel’s request.

At a recent press conference, Mr.
Hormel had this to say. I will quote him:

I can only conclude that Mr. Ashcroft chose to vote against me solely because I am a gay man.

He had concluded that his sexual orientation was the cause of Senator Ashcroft’s opposition “not only from his refusal to raise any specific objection to my nomination, but also from Mr. Ashcroft’s public comments at the time of my nomination and his own long record of resistance to acknowledging the rights of all citizens, regardless of their sexual orientation.”

I have before me a letter dated December 3, 1997, from James Hormel, of San Francisco, CA, to Senator Ashcroft at the Hart Senate Office Building. He wrote:

I am aware that you voted against my nomination, when it was considered by the Foreign Relations Committee, and understand that you may have concerns about my qualifications. I want you to know that I am available to meet with you at your convenicence in either Washington or Missouri, to address and—I trust—allay your concerns.

Senator Ashcroft never agreed to a meeting.

Could we expect Attorney General
Ashcroft to defend tomorrow’s Matthew Shepard if he can’t show tolerance for today’s James Hormel?

The second issue is of importance to me relates to an outstanding individual who came before the Senate Judiciary Committee when I served on that committee 2 years ago. His name was Bill Lann Lee. He was being considered as an Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights. Senator Ashcroft joined in an effort to block his nomination.

I remember this because I remember what Bill Lann Lee told about his life’s story. Maybe I am particularly vulnerable when I hear these stories, but they mean so much to me, when a person such as Bill Lann Lee comes and tells us about the fact that his mother and father were immigrants from China to the United States. They came to New York City and started a small laundry, and raised several children, including Bill Lann Lee.

His mother is with him. His father passed away. He said his mother used to sit in the window of the laundry every day at her sewing machine. His father had a busy job—buying and preparing the laundry. Bill Lann
Lee said that they worked every day—hard-working people—raising a family.
When World War II broke out, Bill Lann Lee’s father was old enough to escape or avoid the draft, but he voluntook on this cause because he was proud of this country and he was willing to serve.

Bill Lann Lee also told us that his father refused to ever teach him how to run the laundry. He told him, from the beginning: This is not your life. You will have a different life. We will work hard here. You are going to do something different. And, boy, was he right, because Bill Lann Lee applied for a scholarship to one of the Ivy League schools. He received a scholarship and attended and graduated from law school.

He then went to work for the NAACP. He really dedicated his professional life not to making money as a lawyer but to fighting for tolerance against discrimination.

He was a quiet man, a humble man;
but when it came to the cause of civil rights, he clearly believed in it. For that reason, he faced withering criticism from the Senate Judiciary Committee. In fact, Senator Ashcroft openly opposed his nomination.

When Bill Lann Lee was asked about a specific Supreme Court case, and whether he would enforce it, Bill Lann
Lee, under oath, said: Yes, I will enforce it. Senator Ashcroft rejected that sworn statement. He said, in opposing Bill Lann Lee, that Bill Lann Lee was an “advocate” and was “willing to pursue an objective . . . with the kind of intensity that belongs to advocacy, but not with the kind of tolerance that belongs to administration.”

Obviously, Senator Ashcroft felt that advocacy and effective administration do not mix. “He has obviously incredibly strong capacities to be an advocate,” Ashcroft said of Bill Lann Lee.

“But I think his pursuit of specific objectives that are important to him limit his capacity to have a balanced view of making judgments that will be necessary for the person who runs that department.”

I was saddened by the treatment of Bill Lann Lee by the Senate Judiciary Committee and Senator Ashcroft. This good man—this great American story—was subjected to what I considered an unfair standard. The man who now wants to be our Attorney General, who now wants to be entrusted with enforcement of civil rights laws.

But this was not the only nominee that Senator Ashcroft zeroed in on; another was Judge Margaret Morrow of California. He asked by Senator Ashcroft for the lengthy period of time with a little Senate device known as a “secret hold,” where you hold up a nominee and you never disclose that you are the person holding it. Eventually, he admitted he was the person holding Margaret Morrow back from her appointment to the Federal bench.

Was Margaret Morrow qualified to be a Federal district court judge? Witness after witness said she had extraordinary qualifications. She was the first woman to be president of the California State Bar Association. But she didn’t meet Mr. Ashcroft’s test. Because of that, she waited 12 years before this Senate before she had a chance to serve in the State of California.

The reason why Senator Ashcroft opposed her? She was an advocate in his mind. Should I accept that John Ashcroft, himself, an impassioned advocate for his entire political life, will surrender his advocacy in the role of Attorney General? He certainly didn’t accept those arguments from Bill Lann Lee and Margaret Morrow when they raised their hand to give the same oath he did.

If we apply the Ashcroft standard to his own nomination, would he have a chance of being confirmed in the Senate? Fairness requires more than a simple test as to whether a nominee has advocated views with which we disagree. Fairness requires that we judge on balance whether that nominee can credibly set aside those views and be evenhanded.

At a key moment in our Nation’s history, our need for that type of leadership is compelling. We are a politically divided Nation with one of the closest elections in modern memory. Landmark civil rights and human rights laws hang in the balance. We need an Attorney General who will be fair and impartial in administering justice.

No issue in the United States is more divisive than civil rights or more in need of enlightened leadership. Yet throughout his career, Senator Ashcroft repeatedly turned down opportunities to reach out across the racial divide. There was, of course, a lot of attention given to the fact that Senator Ashcroft appeared at Bob Jones University, received an honorary degree, and delivered the commencement address. It did deserve attention. It be-court. There are some fine men and women who have been nominated and confirmed. Let me tell you a little bit about Judge Ronnie White.

He was the first African American city counselor in the city of St. Louis. That in itself is a matter of pride. But within the shadow of the arch is a building which is historically so important to that city, State, and to our Nation. It is the St. Louis courthouse. It is a white, stone building, very close to the Missouri River. This building is so historically significant that it was in this courthouse that the Dred Scott case was argued and tried twice. It was on the steps of this courthouse before the Civil War that African Americans were sold as slaves.

When Ronnie White was appointed to the Missouri Supreme Court, he chose that old courthouse in St. Louis to take his oath of office. The St. Louis Post Dispatch, in commenting on that settlement, said as the first African American to the Missouri Supreme Court, said:

It is one of those moments when justice has come to pass.

It certainly was. And as you listen to Judge White’s testimony, you understand that this wasn’t a matter of pride for his family in being nominated to the Federal district court. It wasn’t just a matter of pride for his colleagues on the Missouri Supreme Court. It had to be a source of great pride for thousands of African Americans to see this man overcome such great odds to finally get a chance to serve on the Federal district court.

He never had that chance. The reason he didn’t have that chance was that after 2 years of having his nomination pending before this Senate, after being approved twice by the Senate Judiciary Committee, after finally finding his name on the calendar of the Senate to be voted on to become a Federal district court judge, John Ashcroft decided to kill his nomination.

And he did it. He did it. He came to the floor, after speaking to his colleagues on the Republican side, and said that Judge Ronnie White was procriminal. He cited several decisions made by the judge and said that they were ample evidence that this man did not have appropriate sensitivity to begin. He did note, however, that Judge White had a lifetime appointment when it came to enforcing our laws. Judge Ronnie White’s name was then called for a vote.

It was defeated on a partisan vote. Every Republican voted against it. This is rare in the history of the Senate. It is a matter of pride. Our review said it hadn’t happened for 40 years, that a nominee was brought to the floor, subjected to that kind of public criticism, and defeated.

Frankly, it wasn’t necessary. If John Ashcroft had decided that he wanted to stop Ronnie White, there were a variety of ways for him to do it, quietly and bloodlessly. But he didn’t choose those options. He chose instead to attack this man and to attack him on the floor of the Senate.

When we were interrogating John Ashcroft about his criticisms, he said, the law enforcement groups are the ones who really told me that Ronnie White was not a good choice.

It certainly was. It is nothing more than a local sheriff, whose family had been involved in a murder in a case where Judge Ronnie White had handed down a dissenting opinion, who sent a letter to John Ashcroft saying they objected to him. That’s true, but it also true that the largest law enforcement community in the State of Missouri, the Fraternal Order of Police, endorsed Ronnie White, and that the vast majority of law enforcement officials in that State endorsed Ronnie White for this Federal district courtship.

Sadly, he was defeated and, in the process, I am afraid, faced the kind of humiliation which no one should ever have to face—certainly not on the floor of the Senate. I am troubled by John Ashcroft’s willingness to distort a good judge’s record beyond all recognition, to attack his character and integrity and to deliver this unjust condemnation on the floor of the Senate without ever giving Judge White an opportunity to respond and defend his name.

When Judge White appeared before the Judiciary Committee, it was clear to many of us that he deserved an apology for what the Attorney General had done. Why is this important in choosing a man to be Attorney General of the United States? When given the power as a Senator, I don’t believe that John Ashcroft used it appropriately. The victim was a very good man.

There have been a lot of questions asked about the issue of reproductive rights of women and what the new Attorney General, John Ashcroft, would do with that authority. I know John Ashcroft’s position. I respect him for the intensity of his belief in opposing Roe v. Wade for his entire public career. There are people in my State of Illinois and his State of Missouri who feel just as passionately on one side or the other side of the issue. It worries some that he would be entrusted with the authority and responsibility to protect a woman’s right to choose and what he would do with it. He tried to get the settled law of the land, what will he do in enforcing it?

One of the things that troubles me—and Senator Mikulski of Maryland raised this earlier—was the decision John Ashcroft made in his opening statement by saying he accepts Roe v. Wade and Casey v. Planned Parenthood, two Supreme Court cases, in Ashcroft’s words, as the “settled law of the land.” That, of course, raises questions. If it is the settled law of the land, what will he do in enforcing it?

Senator SCHUMER of New York and I asked Senator Ashcroft as Attorney General, if the Santorum partial-birth abortion ban comes to him by either the President asking whether he should veto it or Senator Ashcroft as Attorney General is trying to decide whether he would veto it, or the Senate is trying to decide whether he would veto it, or whether he would defend it, it does not include the protection of a woman’s health, what will he do. The answer to me seems fairly obvious. If the Casey decision is the settled law of the land, he would defend it, and it does not include the Attorney General trying to decide whether an abortion ban comes to him by either the Senate or the judiciary, according to Senator Ashcroft’s public record and his testimony before the Judiciary Committee leave that in doubt.

Senator Ashcroft has made troubling, at times shocking statements regarding the role of our American system of justice, the judicial branch of government. He is fond of the phrase “judicial despotism” and even used this as the title of a speech he gave before the Heritage Foundation. In it he vows to “fight the judicial despotism that stands like a behemoth...” over our great land. He tells us that “people’s lives and fortunes” have been “relinquished to renegade judges,” judges the labels “a robed, contemptuous intellectual elite.” He speaks of America’s courts as “out of control” and the “home to a ‘let-them-eat-cake elite’ who hold the people in the deepest disdain.”

Senator Ashcroft went on to say: “Five ruffians in robes” on the Supreme Court “stole the right of self-determination from the people” and have even directly “challenged God...” So grievous are the actions of the Federal Judiciary, according to Senator Ashcroft, “the precious jewel of liberty has been lost.”

These statements come from a speech Senator Ashcroft gave on judicial despotism. I suggest to my colleagues who have not read it that they do. Is this a person who has a deep mistrust of the character of justice in our great land that we should entrust him with the office of Attorney General?

Many years ago, during the Roosevelt administration, Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy served as Attorney General and created the Civil Liberties Union to prosecute local officials who abused and even murdered blacks and union organizers. He summed up his constitutional philosophy in one sentence: “Only by zealously guarding the rights of the most humble, the most unorthodox and the most despised among us, can freedom flourish and endure in our land.” Could Senator Ashcroft rise to this awesome and often unpopular standard as our Attorney General?

We recently celebrated again the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. It was a huge gathering in the city of Chicago for the Dr. King’s annual breakfast. I attended another breakfast sponsored by Rev. Jesse Jackson. Literally thousands of people came out to pay tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. I am old enough to remember when Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was alive, and I remember that after Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s visit to the city of Chicago was not welcome. He announced he was coming to Chicago to march in the streets of Cicero and other neighborhoods to protest racial segregation. Many people—Democrats, Republicans, and independents alike—were saying: Why is he doing this? Why is he stirring things up? It is easy today to forget how unpopular Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was in America during his life. It was only after his assassination and our reflection on the contribution he made to America that the vast majority of Americans now understand that although he was unpopular, he was right. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s life, fighting for civil rights, tells an important story. When you are fighting for the rights of those discriminated against because of sexual orientation, when you are fighting for the rights of women, poor women in particular, when you are fighting for the rights of African Americans and Hispanics, it is often unpopular. But it is the right thing to do.

The Attorney General, more than any other Cabinet officer, is entrusted with protecting the civil rights of Americans. We know from our history, defending those rights can be controversial. I find no evidence in the personal career of the voting record of Ashcroft that he has ever risked any political capital to defend the rights of those who suffer in our society from prejudice and discrimination. As I said in the committee yesterday, it is a difficult duty to sit in judgment of a former colleague, but our Nation and our Constitution ask no less of each Member of the Senate. That is why I will vote no on the nomination of John Ashcroft to serve as Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. If the Senator from Michigan will yield, I think we were going to go back and forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Alabama has concluded, I be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. I was looking for Senator WARNER. In the absence of Senator WARNER, I will mention a couple of things. How long will the Senator from Michigan speak?

Mr. LEVIN. Perhaps 15 minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. If I might, the agreement distinguished Senator from Utah and I had—obviously an informal agreement—was that having the normal procedure in such a debate, we would be going from side to side. The distinguished Senator from Illinois has just spoken; the distinguished Senator from Alabama was going to speak. The normal rotation would go back to this side and it would be the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan. That is without time agreements for any Senator.

Mr. REID. If the Senator from Alabama will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. As I said this morning, we want to try to wrap up this debate in the near future. I know how fervently the Senator from Alabama feels about this issue, but I do say every time someone says something, we are not going to finish this debate. The Senator from Alabama has already spoken very eloquently—which was referred to this morning by my colleague NICKLES, about what a great statement he made, and I heard part of his statement, and it was extremely good.

My point is, if the people on the other side of the aisle want us to finish this debate sometime tomorrow, we are going to have to cut a little bit of slack and be able to proceed with our statements. Otherwise, we are going to go over until next week.

Mr. SESSIONS. I understand that is the position of the other side, that they would like this side to hush and have their full say all day. I see the Senator from Virginia is here. I yield to the Senator from Virginia such time as he desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. If I could enter into a unanimous consent request sequencing the next two Senators: The Senator from Arizona such time as he desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I am happy to accommodate the leadership and the floor managers. Would the Senator care to modify it now and take the time?

Mr. LEVIN. We were alternating.

Mr. WARNER. Does the Senator want to modify a unanimous consent request?

Mr. LEVIN. We just did.

Mr. WARNER. Could the Senator from Virginia give us a time indication?

Mr. WARNER. I will take not more than 10 minutes if that is agreeable to my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I join the many Members today to support the nomination of our former colleague—our friend, indeed—John Ashcroft, to serve as the Attorney General of the United States.

Article II, section 2, of the Constitution provides that the President shall name the judges of the Supreme Court and all other officers of the United States. Thus, the Constitution provides a role for both the President and the Senate in this process. The President has the power to nominate; the Senate has the power to render advice and consent on the nomination.

In fulfilling the constitutional role of the Senate, throughout my career—some 23 years I have been privileged to represent the Commonwealth of Virginia—I have always tried to give fair and objective consideration to both Republican and Democratic Presidential Cabinet-level appointees; as a matter of fact, all appointees of both parties.

Traditionally, a President, especially after taking office following a national election, should be entitled to select individuals who he believes can best serve this Nation and his goals as President. It has always been my policy to treat nominees to ensure that the nominee has the basic qualifications and the basic experience to ensure that the job to which he has been nominated, to ensure that the nominee also will enshrine the laws of the land that are key—and that is instrumental—in the consideration now being given to this important post of the Attorney General of the United States, and to ensure that the nominee possesses a level of integrity and character that the American people deserve and expect from public officeholders.

Therein, perhaps, rests the widest margin of discretion that should be exercised by the Senate. All 100 members have been in this Chamber and in other areas in which we daily work to serve the Senate, experience that has enabled us to win the public office as Senator. That experience has fine-tuned every Member of this Chamber in one way or another, such that he or she can judge facts, nominees, and the entirety of the situation to determine, does that individual have the integrity or do they not have that integrity?

That is a very important function we perform. I say to my colleagues, and to my constituents, and to those who are interested in my views, that John Ashcroft has the qualifications and the experience and the integrity to understand this important office.

Former Senator John Ashcroft from Missouri recently lost his election bid to the Senate under most unusual circumstances, not unlike the circumstances that enabled my Senate at a certain time, when we lost one of our most valued public servants, a public servant who was contending for the office of the U.S. Senate, who had beaten me fairly and squarely in basically a convention or modified primary type situation. I was in strong support of that individual. Then his light plane one night crashed.

I have had that experience. I shared it with the President. He shared it because he was so deeply shaken by this tragedy. There is not a one of us who couldn’t say, "Well, it could have been me," the way we have to travel across our States, across our land, in these days of the abuse of our modes of conveyance at all hours of the day and night.

John Ashcroft approached that tragic situation in a very balanced and fair manner. To some extent, he counseled with several of us. But it was a very difficult decision as to how he should conduct himself for the balance of that campaign. I think he did it admirably. He did it with great courage and respect for the tragedy that had befallen his State.

If I ever had any doubts about John Ashcroft, the manner in which he handled that tragic situation will forever place in my mind that this man has the integrity, not only to be Attorney General, but to take on any public office of this land.

Our colleague served in the Senate from 1984 to 2000, serving as a leader in the passage of welfare reform legislation and fighting for lower taxes, strong national defense, greater local control of education, and enhanced law enforcement.

Prior to his service in the Senate, John Ashcroft served as Governor of Missouri from 1985 to 1993 and attorney general of Missouri from 1976 to 1985. He dedicated over 28 years of his life to public service—over a quarter of a century. If he had flaws in his integrity, they would have been carefully documented, I am sure, in that period of time.

I would like to add this, again based on having the privilege of serving in this Chamber for many years and having gone through many hearings for Cabinet nominees and other nominees, this was a very thorough hearing. Legitimate questions can be asked as to how fair it might have been in some instances, but it was unquestionably thorough. It was prolonged—there is a question of the necessity of the length of it—but anyway, it was thorough.

In my opinion—and I say this with the deepest respect to the members of this Chamber and most especially to this nominee, John Ashcroft, and I say to my good friend, the ranking member, whom I have admired these many years in the Senate—John Ashcroft emerges as a better, a stronger, a more deeply experienced person. This is a consequence of this process. I feel that ever so strongly. Each of us who has gone through these stressful situations that we confront from time to time in our public office—those of us who go through those situations—and withstand the rigors of such an examination, in all likelihood emerge a stronger person.

I see my friend standing. Does he wish to comment?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if I could, and I do not wish to interfere in any way in the Senator's time.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I think that is an important point, certainly to this Senator. I value the views of my friend.

Mr. LEAHY. I respect the views of the distinguished Senator from Virginia, who has been my friend from day one. He has been a man to whom I have gone for counsel on a number of issues. I refer to him as my Senator away from home because I spend the week in Virginia when we are in session.

He and I, of course, disagree on this nomination. I understand he has his views on it. I have stated mine. I promised two things to both the then President-elect and Senator Ashcroft. I promised them two things when they called me to tell me they were going to nominate him: No. 1, that there would be questions, tough questions, but I would conduct a fair and thorough investigation, as I did. The nomination actually came to the Senate Monday of this week, the official papers. We are moving to go forward with this. Everybody in the Senate knows approximately how the vote will come out.

I tell the Senator from Virginia of a conversation I had. As he can imagine, prior to my announcing my opposition to Senator Ashcroft, I called Senator Ashcroft to tell him what I was going to say and notified the White House what I was going to say. But I suggested one thing. I don’t think I divulge any confidence with Senator Ashcroft who spoke about what he has gone through. It might have been the only time during the Senator from Virginia said. I suggested what he do after he is sworn in is that he meet quietly and privately with a number of Senators and House Members of both parties—those who have an interest in law enforcement issues, interests that affect the Justice Department—meet on a private, off-the-record basis, hear their suggestions or their criticisms, and vice versa. He assured me that he would.

He asked me also if I would be willing to help bring Members who had voted against him or spoken against him to those meetings. I assured him I would do that, too. The Senator from Virginia makes a good point.

I think the debate is good. I hope Senators on both sides of the aisle will listen to the debate.

Again, I use this opportunity to mention one more time how much I have enjoyed the friendship and the wise counsel of my friend from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague. If I may say with deep respect to him as a friend first, and as a Senator second, I think he agrees with my basic proposition that he emerges from this process a stronger and a more deeply committed public servant.

Mr. LEAHY. I do, yes.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly from that standpoint, what one would give everyone a basis on which to cast a vote in favor of this nomination.

For those who are concerned about Senator Ashcroft’s nomination, it is important to remember that once John Ashcroft is confirmed as our next Attorney General, he will serve at the pleasure of the President.

This time honored phrase, “At the pleasure of the President,” has been used by Presidents throughout American history to show the American people that the President is the final arbiter of accountability for his Cabinet members.

And, also, I’d like to remind my colleagues in the Senate, and more broadly the public, of the promise John Ashcroft has made and the oath that he will take. John Ashcroft has promised to every American that he will uphold the law of the land, and when he takes that oath of office that he will uphold the law of the land.

Like the rest of my colleagues, I know Senator Ashcroft in his role as Senator from, and as advocate for, the State of Missouri. I consider him a friend. But today we are not called upon to judge Senator Ashcroft as a friend or colleague, as a Senator representing his home State, or as a nominee for any other post but Attorney General of the United States—at this time in our history and keeping in mind the goal of building a “single nation of justice.”

The Attorney General does not mechanically enforce the law. His job is not a matter of simply applying a specified law to a specified set of facts. Great discretion resides with the Attorney General. Functioning of the Department of Justice requires that the public—all the public—feels that discretion will be exercised with balanced and deliberative judgment.

There are many times when a prosecutor has within his grasp the power to prosecute or take a pass, and in that decision lies the lives of the people involved and their families. A commitment to enforce the law of the land is the beginning point, not the ending point. The discretion exercised by the Attorney General is not critical in the easy or obvious matters that do not require the Attorney General’s most considered judgment, but in the complex and unclear ones where a commitment to simplicity does not resolve the complexities, and where balanced deliberation is essential.

If America is to build a “single nation of justice,” then the Department of Justice should have as its head someone whose record demonstrates evenhandedness and whose rhetoric seeks to assure the American people of fair and balanced consideration, rather than division and distrust. More than 25 years ago, at his swearing-in ceremony, Attorney General Edward Levi, under President Ford, reflected this sentiment by stating if we are going to achieve “our common goals: among them domestic tranquility, the blessings of liberty and the establishment of justice,” through the enforcement and administration of law, then it takes “dedicated men and women to accomplish this through their zeal and determination, and also their concern for fairness and impartiality.”

While Senator Ashcroft’s rhetoric over the years reveals his zeal and determination, it has not reflected the same concern for impartiality and fairness. I have concluded that his record and his rhetoric are so divisive and polarizing that his nomination will not provide the necessary confidence all Americans are entitled to have in the fairness and impartiality required of the Department of Justice. Here are four examples:

First is his position and his effort with respect to the nomination of Judge Ronnie White as a Federal District Judge for the Eastern District of Missouri. It was unfair and inappropriate to maintain Judge White, a distinguished jurist on the Missouri Supreme Court, had “a slant toward criminals” and was “against . . . the culture in terms of maintaining order,” as Senator Ashcroft did in his speech to the Senate on October 4, 1999. It was unjust to say Judge White practices “procriminal jurisprudence” and will use his “lifetime appointment to push law in a procriminal direction.” It was an unfounded and unfair characterization of Judge White. It was a sign that Judge White “has been very willing to say: We should seek, at every turn, in some of these cases to provide an additional opportunity for an individual to escape punishment.” It was a sign of the importance of the Judiciary Committee’s responsibility to consider the record for Senator Ashcroft to say in the same speech to the Senate that Judge White’s “opinions, and particularly his dissent, reflect a serious bias against a willingness to impose the death penalty.”

Moreover, it was unfair that Senator Ashcroft did not make any reference to the death penalty or any of his concerns about Judge White’s record before or at Judge White’s confirmation hearing. Judge White was not given the chance to respond to these allegations during the consideration in the Senate. Rather, these personal attacks came well after Judge White had appeared before the Judiciary Committee. When asked at his own confirmation hearing whether he treated Judge White fairly, Senator Ashcroft said:

I believe that I acted properly in carrying out my duties as a member of the committee and as a part of the Senate in relation to Judge White.

In responding in that fashion, he neither defended his characterizations, qualified them or withdrew them. Senator Ashcroft’s response therefore left standing as his current view his claims and statements with respect to Judge White.

Second is Senator Ashcroft’s interview with Southern Partisan magazine, a publication which has been described as a “neo-confederate.” Senator Ashcroft not only gave an interview to Southern Partisan magazine, he commended the magazine for helping to “set the record straight.” He said:

We’ve all got to stand up and speak in this respect, or else we’ll be taught that these people were giving their lives, subscribing their sacred fortunes and their honor to some perverted agenda.
While in that interview Senator Ashcroft expressed support for Southern Partisan’s message, he later said that he did not know much about Southern Partisan and did not know what it promoted. Fair enough.

But Senator Ashcroft’s ideas fashioned with Southern Partisan, much has been said about the magazine in the media and at Senator Ashcroft’s own confirmation hearing. Southern Partisan was described as a “publication that defies slavery, white separatism, apartheid and David Duke” by a media watch group.

In 1995, Southern Partisan offered its subscribers T-shirts celebrating the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. In the same year, an author of an article in that publication alleged “there is no indication that slavery is contrary to Christian ethics.” In 1990, another article praised former Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard David Duke as “a Populist spokesperson for a recapturing of the American ideal.”

In 1996, an article in the magazine alleged “slave owners . . . did not have a practice of breaking up slave families. If anything, they encouraged strong slave families to further the slaves’ peace and happiness.” In 1991, another writer printed in the publication wrote, “Newly arrived in New York City, I puzzled, ‘Where are the Americans?’ for I met only Italians, Jews, and Puerto Ricans.”

I take Senator Ashcroft at his word that he did not know much about Southern Partisan magazine when he praised them for helping to “set the record straight,” in his words. I take him at his word. But where was the immediate disgust and repudiation when he learned what he had inadvertently praised? And, after the inquiries of others, why not make a prompt inquiry to satisfy himself that he had not inadvertently made the purpose of a racist publication? Even in his written responses to the Judiciary Committee, he said he only rejects the publication “if the allegations about [the] magazine are true.”

More than 2 years after the original interview he gave to that magazine, it appears he never took it upon himself to inquire about the magazine’s purpose, to see for himself if the allegations were true, and, if so, to correct the record.

A person being considered for the office of Attorney General—the single most important person charged with enforcing our Nation’s civil rights laws in a fair and just manner—should accept the obligation to make that inquiry if the American people are to have faith that their Attorney General will “build a single nation of justice.”

As a third example, I am troubled by Senator Ashcroft’s previous speeches on drug treatment. In 1997, Senator Ashcroft told the Claremont Institute:

A government which takes the resources that we should devote toward the interdiction of drugs and converts them to treatment and modulates drug users with treatment . . . .

Again, it is not just Senator Ashcroft’s views on drug treatment that are troublesome—although they are—It is his choice of words, his rhetoric, that is so divisive and so polarizing. To suggest, as Senator Ashcroft does, that those who are crippled by addiction to drugs and who seek treatment are somehow the “lowest and least” violates President Bush’s own inaugural promise that “no insignificant person was ever born” and that we will “build a single nation of justice.”

When I asked Senator Ashcroft in a written question what he meant by “lowest and least,” to give him an opportunity to explain or to confirm the clear impression that those words create, his response was a nonresponse.

A fourth example is Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to James Hormel’s nomination for Ambassador to Luxembourg. Senator Ashcroft stated in press accounts that he opposed Mr. Hormel’s nomination because Mr. Hormel “actively supported the gay lifestyle.” Senator Ashcroft also said a person’s sexual orientation “is within the private sector, and what is eligible for consideration” with respect to the qualifications to serve as an Ambassador.

To suggest that a person could not represent America’s interests or should be judged professionally because of sexual orientation is inappropriate and divisive.

When pressed on this issue by the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator Ashcroft further responded in writing:

I did not believe [Hormel] would effectively represent the United States in Luxembourg, the most Roman Catholic country in all of Europe.

To suggest that Luxembourg would not welcome Mr. Hormel’s nomination is not true. Luxembourg has outlawed discrimination based on sexual orientation, and its Government specifically said they would welcome James Hormel as Ambassador. And, most importantly, to reject such contentious statements about a person because of his sexual orientation adds further doubt that all our will have confidence that this nominee will strive to build that single nation of justice for which the President has called.

In summary, I am deeply troubled by Senator Ashcroft’s record of repeatedly divisive rhetoric and sometimes simply unfair personal attacks, such as what he has said and done about Judge White, his passive acceptance of the message of Southern Partisan, his statements about drug treatment as accommodating the “lowest and least,” and his statements about Mr. Hormel’s qualifications to serve his country because of his sexual orientation.

Senator Ashcroft has frequently engaged in “us versus them” rhetoric. He frequently rejects moderation and has even criticized some members of his own party for engaging in what he characterized as “deceptions” when they “preach pragmatism, champion conciliation [and] counsel compromise.”

Senator Ashcroft, in his confirmation hearings, in his written answers to questions posed by a number of Senators, including myself, either reaffirmed some of his divisive statements or simply did not explain the extreme language. His refusal to comment on some of the most troubling past statements leaves them standing as his current views.

His language and his approach to issues in terms of “us versus them” would not prevent me from voting for his confirmation for most positions in the Cabinet. But more than any other Cabinet member, the Attorney General as the chief law officer of the United States, is charged with the responsibility of assuring that the Department of Justice’s goal is equal justice under the law for all Americans. And although I consider John Ashcroft a friend, I will vote no on the nomination of John Ashcroft for Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of John Ashcroft. I have had the opportunity, for the last several weeks, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, to listen to the testimony and to listen to what has turned out to be fairly extensive hearings.

The John Ashcroft I have known for 6 years, and whom most of us have known for 6 years—some have known a lot longer—does not really bear much resemblance to the individual who has been described by those who attacked him during this process. I must say, he does not bear much resemblance to the individual whom some of my colleagues have pictured, both in debate on the Senate floor and in the Judiciary Committee.

The truth is that the John Ashcroft on whom we are going to vote, whose nomination we are taking up, whose nomination we will vote on tomorrow, is the same John Ashcroft we have known for 6 years.

He is a man of integrity, a man of honesty, and a man of courage. He is also a man who has taken controversial positions, a man who has cast in his lifetime thousands of votes. I don’t think it should come as a shock to us that someone who has been in public office for a quarter of a century would have taken controversial positions. We wouldn’t worry if he hasn’t.

This is a man who served as assistant attorney general of the State of Missouri, who served for 8 years as their
Mr. SCHUMER. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for their statements. This is what the Senate is supposed to do on very important issues of the day—deliberate as carefully as possible. We are doing that, and we are doing that very carefully in the Senate.

Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States. I do this with no glee or exultation. I do this without any feeling of joy. In fact, I believe this is a sad day in so many ways. In a certain sense, it is a sad day for John Ashcroft and his family. They have been through a lot in these past weeks. It is sad because while so many of us have disagreed with John Ashcroft’s views and at times we thought his methods were unwise, he has devoted himself to public service, which I believe is a noble calling. In the heat of battle, it is not easy for those who speak against him and, certainly, for Senator Ashcroft and his family, to hear people speaking against him.

It is a sad day for me because it is never easy opposing a nominee and a former colleague. I believe that one gives the President the benefit of the doubt in terms of appointments. It is the President’s choice, but won the election. Yes, it was close. But I said then and believe every bit as much today that the closeness of the election should do nothing to undermine the legitimacy of the Presidency. I explained that I wanted to give the President his choice. And to have to oppose someone, no less a colleague, is not easy and requires some thought and fortitude. So it is a sad day for me as a Senator. It is a sad day for the Senate because we are so divided on this nomination.

One of the things I have greatly appreciated since moving from the other body is the comity that still reigns here to a significantly greater extent than it does in the House. Perhaps more than that it does in the body politic. We are friends across the aisle. We fight hard. But when we can agree, we are much happier than when we disagree. That is the whole tone of the body. The Senator from West Virginia, more than probably any other person here, has made it clear to all of us that is what we aspire to be.

It is a sad day when the Senate is so staunchly and strongly divided when we could all come together. I am sorry to be so negative. I don’t believe division is coming from this side of the aisle. If we were truly bipartisan, we all would have supported Senator Ashcroft. No. I believe that when the President nominated Senator Ashcroft, he was well aware that someone of Senator Ashcroft’s hard-right views would stir opposition, or should stir opposition. I don’t accept in any way what some have said—that if this body were truly bipartisan, Senator Ashcroft would be confirmed 100-0.

You could argue that if the President were truly bipartisan, he might not have nominated Senator Ashcroft. For that reason, I think it is a sad day for the President. He has, in my judgment, had a good beginning to his term. He is reaching out. The message he sent during the campaign that he wished to work with people from both sides of the aisle in large part has been met, at least in those very early days of his administration.

One of my roommates was GEORGE MILLER, one of the stronger Democrats in the House. And he spent some time with the President and is utterly amazed and pleased with the President’s attitude. But this is particularly a sad day for the Presidency because this is the one place, more than any other, in the early morning of his administration when he has sent a nomination that is not in my judgment, one that reaches out to the middle of the country, one that says I do want to be bipartisan.

At his inauguration the President said, “While many of our citizens prosper, others doubt the promise, even the justice, of our own country.” Unfortunately, this choice for Attorney General has given many in our country even more reason to doubt this promise of justice.

It is a sad day for my country. The elections we went through created a lot of pain for a lot of people. There is a good portion of America that feels disenchanted and even disenfranchised. This nomination, in my judgment, is the one position in the Cabinet where unity and ability to reach out to every part of the American people is called for and, more than any other, this nomination, sadly, threw salt on the wounds of those who feel disenfranchised.

It is a sad day—a sad day for Senator Ashcroft, a sad day for those of us who feel an honor-bound duty to oppose him. It is a sad day for the Senate. It is a sad day for the new President. It is a sad day for our democracy.

With that said, it is important that we all recognize what the opposition to this nomination is not based on. It is not based on Senator Ashcroft’s religion. It makes no difference whether he be Christian, or Jew, or Muslim, or Zoroastrian. His faith is a gift. As a person of faith myself, and a different faith than his, but deep and abiding faith, I respect his faith. I think it is a wonderful faith. I think one simply supports him. I respect for his faith does not mean I would like to see a nominee for any other position of faith. But his faith, while it is a wonderful thing, and wonderful for him, is a gift. As a person of faith myself, and a different faith than his, but deep and abiding faith, I respect his faith. I think it is a wonderful gift.

I think all things being equal, I would like to see a nominee for any high position in this land hold such a position of faith. But his faith, while it is a wonderful thing, and wonderful for many, respect for his faith does not mean I would do that for anybody because of their own personal belief. I think it is unfair for some to say that because of one’s faith, one should adopt an issue.

As many of my colleagues have said, this is a significant and important nomination. I think I should give my view of this. It is time to set the record straight that those of us who are taking issue with Senator Ashcroft’s years of activist opposition to causes and ideals in which we believe so deeply, are basking that on his record as Governor, as State attorney general, and as Senator, and, emphatically, not on his religious faith.

About 3 days ago, when the process of this nomination first got underway, there was a lot of anger and even fury in our country. It didn’t come from the leaders of a few groups; it came from citizens of different walks of life, of different races, of different genders, and of different sexual orientation, who, once they became familiar with Senator Ashcroft’s record, said, How is this man going to be as Attorney General? Given the view I stated earlier, I like to give the President the benefit of the doubt and am willing to support Cabinet members with whom I disagree ideologically if nominated by the President.

I decided to jot down on a piece of paper what I thought the hearings and ultimately the vote on the Ashcroft nomination should really be about. Frankly, I was concerned that with the torrent of opposition charges, countercharges, and a whirlwind of politics, the real issues on which we should focus would be obscured or be submerged by other forces. I sat down at my kitchen table in Brooklyn on a Saturday morning and tried to formulate what this nomination debate should boil down to, at least in the opinion of one Senator. This is what I wrote:

We should carefully analyze the functions of the Attorney General and then closely scrutinize Senator Ashcroft’s record to determine whether, impartially, and adequately perform all of those functions. But merely asking if he can do the job is unhelpful. The hearings must probe into the nature of the nominee’s history or the many different areas of law that the Attorney General must enforce. These range from anti-trust and environmental laws to drug and gun laws, voting rights, and clinic protection laws.

After 3 weeks of statements, questions, answers, hearings, and now votes, I still think this statement cuts to the heart of the matter and has guided me ever since this process began.

What are the functions of the Attorney General? And what is the Ashcroft record? These are the two essential questions.

The duties of the Attorney General primarily involve: (1) enforcement of all Federal laws, both civil and criminal; (2) litigating the constitutionality of all Federal laws and regulations, including before the Supreme Court; (3) advising the President, the agencies, and even Congress on the constitutionality of laws and various federal actions; (4) judicial vetting and selection; (5) representing all of the federal agencies in litigation; and (6) supervising the United States Attorneys.

This job is the most sensitive and one of the most powerful positions in the Cabinet.

Importantly, all of these complicated duties require the Attorney General to exercise enormous judgment and enormous discretion. Much of the power of the Attorney General adheres in this discretion, which is not constrained by law. Following law, to me at least, isn’t enough—although it is an important threshold question.

I think it is fair and reasonable to examine Senator Ashcroft’s public positions over the years, as well as how he has exercised the judgment and discretion and power vested in him. When we look at that record—and we did very closely in the hearings—we see a very stark picture of a man on a mission, a man who with passion and with zeal sought to advocate and enact the agenda of the far right wing of the Republican Party.

On civil rights, as Governor he fought voluntary desegregation—that is, voluntary desegregation—and vetoed bills designed to boost voter registration in the inner city of St. Louis. More recently, as Senator, he opposed the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, which would have strengthened the Federal response to hate crimes motivated by race, color, region, or national origin, and would have extended the law to cover crimes targeting gender, sexual orientation, and disability.

We all know about the Bob Jones speech and the Southern Partisan Review and the Ronnie White debacle. I do not believe John Ashcroft is a racist. I don’t just say that. He has appointed people of color to judicial and executive positions. His wife teaches at Howard University. But I think when you put all these pieces together, what you see is a pattern of insensitivity to that long and tragic history our country has had with race.

When several of my colleagues on the committee asked him for some feeling of remorse, given this record, we didn’t seem any. There wasn’t any new sensitivity or the Ashcroft showed itself.

The Attorney General of our country should not be insensitive. He should be just the opposite. The Attorney General, more than any other Cabinet minister, should be acutely aware and sensitive on the issue of race, which de Tocqueville, over 150 years ago, said would be the one thing that would stop America from greatness.

I do not believe this nomination for Attorney General meets that criteria. On choice, Senator Ashcroft has been at the helm for decades leading the drive to overturn Roe v. Wade and eviscerate a woman’s right to choose. His beliefs are heartfelt; they are sincere. However, in my judgment, they are wrong. He has led the charge to enact new abortion hurdles and restrictions. I am not saying that Senator Ashcroft should be rejected for being pro-life. I was happy to vote for Tommy Thompson to be the Secretary of HHS despite the fact that I disagree with his views on choice. And I believe that a pro-life position is not at all a disqualification for Attorney General, as much as I would prefer to see someone pro-choice.

Let me say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, if someone was nominated for Attorney General who was vehemently pro-choice, who simply did not just espouse a pro-choice position, but in his or her career spent decades trying to find ways of expanding the law so that, say, abortion on demand, for 9 months, would be perfectly legal, wouldn’t Members be more upset and raise a louder voice than against a nominee who was simply pro-choice? Of course. Thus we who believe in the pro-choice side say it is not because Senator Ashcroft is pro-life that we oppose him but because of the vehemence and extreme position of his views. He hasn’t been just anti-choice. He has been one of the most anti-choice crusaders in the country. It is not his belief that abortion is murder that makes me oppose him. It is his past willingness to bend and torture the law to serve his desire to eliminate, totally eliminate, even in rape and incest, a woman’s right to choose that makes me oppose him.

This is not simply what he said but what he did when he had executive power, when he became the attorney general of Missouri. He didn’t relinquish his role as a passionate advocate against choice, as he says he will now do. He joined in a suit against nurses who dispensed contraceptives. He sued the National Organization of Women under the antitrust laws to muzzle their attempt to pass the ERA. He tried to pass statutes that end abortion. He tried to pass constitutional amendments to do the same.

For John Ashcroft, at least when he was Senator, abortion by any means necessary was the end all and be all of his political career.

There was some discussion in the hearings that some of the groups opposed this nomination were doing it for fear that Roe v. Wade, fear that back-alley abortions will again be the norm, fear that equal rights for women will become a figment of the past. Some may feel these fears are unfounded, but the motivation is not mercenary or crass, it is as deep and as heartfelt as the speeches I have heard from some of my colleagues supporting Senator Ashcroft.

Senator Ashcroft also, Mr. President, has been a leader in the charge against gun control. He has fought to kill legislation that would have made it easier to catch illegal gunrunners dealing with the issue of enforcement. He has vociferously opposed even the child safety locks and the assault weapons ban. These were some of the main issues with John Ashcroft’s record that were examined at the Judiciary Committee hearings. To be fair, Senator Ashcroft took us on. He directly confronted many of those issues and unequivocally asserted that as Attorney General, he would uphold and enforce all of the laws of the land.

At the start of the hearings, I asked Senator Ashcroft the following question: When you have been such a zealous and vociferous advocate for so long, how can you just turn it off?

His answer was: I’ll be driving a different car. There’s nothing to turn off.

And our hearings in the committee revolved around this question: Given his past, what kind of future as Attorney General would he have? As I said at the committee vote yesterday, after all these hearings, all the witnesses, all the studying of the record, and Senator Ashcroft’s testimony, the conclusion for me is not that the Attorney General Ashcroft can stop being Senator Ashcroft. I am not convinced that he can now step outside the ideological fray he has been knee-deep in, set his advocacy to one side and become the balanced decisionmaker with an unclouded vision of the law that this country deserves as its Attorney General.

Ironically, I don’t think Senator Ashcroft disagrees we need a balanced Attorney General. That is why he went to great lengths during the hearing to portray himself as now being different than the Senator Ashcroft we all knew. He was not saying that someone of such vehemence and strong opposition, he was not saying that somebody so far to the right should be Attorney General, but he was saying he was a different person or would be a different person as Attorney General than he was as Senator. Every Senator will have to judge for himself or herself whether he can do that, even if he should want to. I do not think he can.

In my opinion, John Ashcroft’s unique past will indelibly mark his future, making his nomination a source of anger and fear to so many in the country.

I have one other point in this area. John Ashcroft, at least to so many in this country, has had the appearance of not being concerned about these issues, even if you do not agree with the reality. Many would dispute that. They would say the reality is there, too. I would myself. John Ashcroft has the appearance of not being concerned about issues of deep concern to these groups, to African Americans, to Latinos, to women, to gay and lesbian people. Just the appearance of such unfairness would make it much harder for him to be Attorney General. That “appearance” argument to me is not dispositive, but it works into the mix.

Let’s assume for a minute, let’s just accept on its face the argument that Senator Ashcroft can devote himself solely to the administration of existing law. Let’s assume he will not challenge Roe—which he did say at the hearing. He said he would not roll back civil rights enforcement; he would not do away with the assault weapons ban. This is an appealing way to look at the nomination. Our better angels want to believe this will be the future of the Justice Department.

But in reality when you really explore it and don’t avoid it, this is a naive perspective on the powers of the Attorney General. Just saying that one person will take the executive and respect existing law ignores the reality that the Attorney General has vast power and discretion to shape legal policy in the Federal judiciary, unhindered by any devotions to existing law.

My good friend from Wisconsin, Senator Feingold, has argued that simply enforcing the law is enough, and he will give Senator Ashcroft the benefit of the doubt that he will enforce the law.

I would argue, no, that while you certainly give the President the benefit of the doubt in terms of an appointment, ideology has to enter into it because the Attorney General does so many things that are not simply enforcing the law but are rendering opinions in choosing judges, areas of discretion. I do not think even if one ascribed to Senator Feingold’s argument—and I say it with due respect; he is a man of deep principle and I respect his decisions on the Committee yesterday, and I know he thought long and hard about it. But even if you assume someone would enforce the law fully, you could never rule out ideological disposition. If Bull Connor had been nominated for Attorney General, my guess is we would all say, even if we were certain he would enforce existing law, we would be certain he should not be Attorney General based on his ideology.

Senator Ashcroft is not Bull Connor; he was a bigot. Senator Ashcroft is not. But we all have to draw the line at some point. And we all do.

It is easy to say but history will never enter into our decision, voting for a nomination. In reality, that principle is virtually impossible to maintain when given nominees of ideologies to the far side, one way or the other—far left or far right. It is logical because the job of Attorney General is not just enforcing the law, as important as that is. As I mentioned before, it contains vast discretion. For example, the Attorney General will decide what cases are pursued in the Supreme Court. That is not just following the law.

He will help draft new legislation and give influential commentary on proposals circulating in Congress. That is not just following the law.

Regarding the Supreme Court, most of us believe the President, with advice from the Attorney General, will make each decision. But at least if the past is prologue, for court of appeal judges, in the vetting process, the bringing of them forward, the Attorney General has enormous say and weight.

It is an enormous power. Every one of these is an enormous power. And none of them will be hindered at all by Senator Ashcroft’s newfound devotion to existing law.

The argument that concerns me the most is the selection of Federal judges, or the one of these arguments, because these Federal judges will serve for decades. They often have the last word on some of the most significant issues our society faces. It is safe to expect that the principles that have guided Senator Ashcroft’s views on judicial nominations in the Senate will be the exact same principles that will guide him as Attorney General. This is not “follow the law.”

Assuming, arguendo, that we believe Senator Ashcroft will follow existing law in his law enforcement capacity, there is no reason to believe in this capacity what he did in the Senate will be any different than what he does as Attorney General. And, as Attorney General, of course, he will have significantly more power and the same largely unbounded discretion in influencing who becomes a Federal judge—much more than he did as a Senator. As a Federal judge, he will be able to fully flex his ideological muscle and use power over nominations in a disturbing and divisive way.

In my 2 years in the Senate, the Ronnie White vote, led by Senator Ashcroft’s decision to use the Republican caucus to kill the nomination, was the bleakest, most divisive and destructive moment I have experienced in my short stay in the Senate. It was a moment utterly lacking in civility, courage, compassion, and character.

But the Ronnie White nomination was not the most visible attempt by Senator Ashcroft to kill a nomination. The list goes on and on: Fletcher, Lamm, Lee, Morrow, Sotomayor, Paez, Dyk, Lynch, Hormel—and there are others.

In just one term in the Senate, Senator Ashcroft devoted himself to opposing—and when possible, scuttling and derailing—any nominee, no matter how well qualified and respected, who was in some way objectionable to his world view. In “Judicial Despotism” that Senator Ashcroft wrote a few short years ago. This was not something written 25 years ago when he was a young man forming his views. In “Judicial Despotism,” he vows to stop any judicial nominee who would uphold Roe v. Wade. Nothing could be more results oriented. In the hearings, Senator Ashcroft said he would be law oriented, but nothing could be more results oriented, not results oriented, but this is as results oriented as it gets.

If he is confirmed, I pray that more modest a view in the selection of judges. But as it now stands, this nomination poses an enormous threat to the future of the Federal judiciary.

As I said when I started, this is a sad day—not a day for exultation, for happiness, for parades. It is sad when the Nation is divided. It is sad when a man who has served so long in the focal point of such intense opposition. It is sad when those of us who want to support a new President cannot. It is sad when, as a nation, a nation trying to bind itself together, we find salt thrown in those wounds.

I just hope, and I believe, that we will have better days to look forward to.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

NOMINATION OF JOHN ASHCROFT TO BE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I daresay that each of us has received an enormous amount of correspondence and a plethora of phone calls about the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States.

The favorable correspondence tends to emphasize support for the Senator’s policy priorities and appreciation of his reputation for honesty and integrity.

The unfavorable correspondence tends to emphasize concern about the Senator’s policy priorities and disapproval of the standards that he applied as a United States Senator and in previous offices that he held, but particularly to the standards he applied with regard to the disposition of Presidential nominations.

Mr. President, I speak today for myself as one who has sworn an oath 16 times to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic.

I have heard arguments pro and con with respect to this nomination. I am not here to argue the case at all. I am here merely to express my support for the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States. I will not fall out with anyone else who differs from my views. As I say, I am not here to debate my views. I know what my views are. I am going to state them, and they will be on the record. I do not fault anyone else on either side of the aisle or on either side of the question. This is for each Senator to resolve in his or her own heart and in accordance with his or her own conscience.

With respect to that provision in the U.S. Constitution, investing in the U.S. Senate the prerogative, the right, and the duty of advising and consenting to nominations, I find no mandate as to what a standard may be. I am not told in the Constitution that I cannot apply a standard that is ideological in nature. I have no particular guidance set forth in that Constitution except exactly what it says. And I am confident, without any semblance of doubt, that Senator Ashcroft must have been concerned to conduct the office of Attorney General, there can be no question about Senator John Ashcroft’s ability to conduct that office.

He has held many offices. He has been Governor of the State of Missouri. He has been a United States Senator. He has been an attorney general of the State of Missouri and, as I understand it, he has been the chairman—I may not have the title exactly right—of the National Association of Attorneys General of the United States. These are very important offices. They are high offices. They are offices that reflect honor upon the holder thereof.

To have been selected for these high offices, John Ashcroft must have enjoyed the respect and the confidence of the people of Missouri and of his colleagues, other Attorneys General throughout the United States.

I, myself, do consider ideology when I consider a nominee, for this office, Attorney General, and in particular for the offices of Federal district judgeships or appellate judgeships, and U.S. Supreme Court Judgeships; yes, I do. I apply my own standards of ideology, and lay them down beside the record, if there be such, of a nominee. And I may reach a judgment based on ideology.

I have no problem with others who want to apply the criterion of ideology. I have no problem with those who say it should not be applied. This is for each Senator to determine.

It is our understanding, based on Senator Ashcroft’s record, certainly based on news reports, and other sources from which we might reach a judgment, that Senator Ashcroft is a person who generally have no problem with that. I consider myself a conservative in many ways; in some ways a liberal.
This nomination has been heatedly debated. There have been great and strong passions exhibited. That is all right. I do not have any problem with that. I am glad that Members of the Senate take a matter such as this so seriously. One can feel strongly about these things.

I happen to be a Senator who believes that when it comes to judges, they ought to be conservative. I think that if there is going to be a department of our Government that wishes to be liberal, then that is up to the people, if they wish to elect persons with liberal outlooks, liberal philosophies, to the U.S. Senate or to the House of Representatives—the legislative branch. It is up to the people.

The Chief Executive may be a liberal; he may be a conservative; or he may be both liberal in one instance, conservative in another. Who knows what liberal is and what conservative is? The beauty of this country is that there is a liberal in many instances, certainly. But in my own eye, looking at ROBERT BYRD—

"There is a poem—"Just stand aside and see yourself go by." I try to look at myself every now and then, especially as I pass the mirror.

When you get all you want in your struggle for self
And the world makes you "Kings" for a day
Then go to a mirror and look at yourself
And say whatever he wants to. I only
For it is not your father, or mother, or wife
Whose judgment upon you must pass
The fellow whose verdict counts most in your life
Is the [man looking] back from the glass.

But as I see myself, I consider myself to be a liberal on economic matters, generally; and a conservative on social matters. Newspapers indicate that the vehemenence of the opposition to this nomination is, in a measure, for the vehemenence of the opposition to this nominee's religion. I have heard none. But there have been a few little insinuations in some newspapers, in the columns, to the extent that part of the opposition may be based on the basis of his being a Christian, his adhering to the Christian religion.

Mr. President, I salute the nominee for being someone who has a religion. I think more public officials should have a strong religious bent, and should be willing to enunciate their faith, whether it be Methodist, Jewish, Catholic, Muslim, Baptist, whatever. That is fine.

I am glad that there are people who bring to the realms of government a religious faith. We need more of that. One does not need to be driven into the closet because he has religious faith. One should not allow himself to be driven in the closet. I do not attempt to foist my faith on others, but I can listen to any of them when it comes to their prayers. I can listen—listen—with respect, and I can hear what they say.

I have a son-in-law who is from Iran. He grew up in a family of devout Muslims. Sometimes a day did my son-in-law's father look toward Mecca and pray. I could have no better son-in-law, none better. I am proud of him. It does not matter to me what a man's religion is. It matters more that he has a religion. It is like the rules of the Senate. It does not matter so much what a rule of the Senate is. What matters most is that there be a rule to go by.

In this regard, I remember the beginning of the Continental Congress in 1774. The First Continental Congress met on September 5, 1774. The next day, one of the members—it may have been Cushing or Clark, Cushing of Massachusetts or Clark of New Jersey—stood to his feet and moved that there be prayer at the beginning of each session. John Jay, who was an orthodox Congregationalist, objected, as did, I believe, John Rutledge of South Carolina, objected on the basis that this might cause some dissension, some argumentation, so on.

Whereupon Samuel Adams—the real firebrand of the Revolution, along with Patrick Henry—stood to his feet and said: I am no bigot. I can hear a prayer by any of them.

He, too, was a Congregationalist. I could not agree to any of them. Adams said, "I move that Mr. Duche, an Episcopal clergyman, desired to read prayers to the Congress tomorrow morning."

I feel the same as did Samuel Adams. I can listen to any of them. We all stand before one God, and he will be our judge. Whether I am a Methodist or Baptist or Episcopalian or Catholic or Jew won't put me at the head of the line. It is my belief in that Creator, the use of my talents as he gave them to me, and my own conscience that will count.

I am for Mr. Ashcroft. I praise him, if he has a religion that he is willing to stand up for. I am not suggesting that he is going to use that in one way or the other as he has to deal with problems that will come before him as Attorney General, but I would much rather believe a man who puts his hand on the Bible and swears an oath that he will defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic. I would feel safer believing that that individual will adhere to his oath than I will have faith in an individual who has no manifestation of religion whatsoever or who has no religion.

Here is a man who puts his hand on the Bible, the book our fathers and mothers read, and swears an oath before God that he will uphold, support, and defend the Constitution, that he will enforce the law as he found it. I shall believe him.

I wonder if Hugo Black would be confirmed by the Senate in today's political environment. He was confirmed by the United States Senate prior to the revelation that he had been a member of the Ku Klux Klan. He had already been confirmed before that revelation appeared in the Hearst papers in 1937. That is the year in which I married my wife, Erma, 1937. He had already been confirmed.

But there was an effort to have the Supreme Court reject him after that information came to light, but the Supreme Court denied that petition. I am sure that in light of his past, it had been known when the Senate confirmed him. Hugo Black may never have had the opportunity to be the great jurist that he became. So we cannot always look at a person's past and make an accurate judgment. And who am I to look at anybody's past? Look at my own. Someone has said that no man's past will bear looking into. I think it is probably true.

We are talking here in regard to Mr. Ashcroft's past positions on various issues. But when he took those positions, he took them not as Attorney General of the United States, not as one who enforces the laws of the United States.

As a legislator now for 54 years, on going 55, I have taken many controversial positions on issues. I think I would be constitutionally capable of putting aside my opinions, as I have expressed them in the past—and many of mine have been very strongly expressed—I would be capable, I would like to think, of putting those aside and enforcing the laws of the land without fear or favor, hewing to the line, if called upon to be the Attorney General of the United States. It was never a job I would want. I think Mr. Ashcroft can do that.

The Constitution merely states that the President shall appoint public ministers with the advice and consent of the Senate.

As I say, this is not a specific standard, nor even a mandate to review particular features of the nominee’s background or capabilities. Rather, we are enjoined to employ our judgment, a faculty which—however much we may lament it—focuses on different factors in considering nominees for different public offices and varies its approach in response to the needs of the times. Thus relates to our duty to provide advice and consent on Cabinet nominations, we are plainly in an area where reasonable minds can differ, not only about the criteria, but even about the proper result given particular criteria. I am of the opinion that whether he is a deeply religious man, and no slickly packaged talking points—can alter this fundamental fact.

I do not subscribe to the view that, barring the taint of criminality or dishonesty, Senator Ashcroft places his left hand on the Bible and swears to uphold the laws of the United States, he will be required to enforce even those laws about which he harbors serious reservations. Not only that, but given the fact that John Ashcroft is as I said, is reputed to be a deeply religious man.

I know not whether he is or isn’t. I have never been one who has been close to Mr. Ashcroft. I never served on any committee together with him. My conversations with him have been very, very few.

He and I have not voted alike on many occasions. So I don’t come here today supporting Mr. Ashcroft because I know him well, or because we have been bosom friends, or because we served on the Presidents’s—entitled team because he is a U.S. Senator. But I believe that solemn vow will be taken seriously by him.

I am attempting to discharge my duty under the Constitution. That is the whole reason I am here.

Let me quote Senator Ashcroft’s own words on that subject: “As a man of faith, I take my word and my integrity seriously,” he said. “So, when I swear to uphold the law, I will keep my oath, so help me God.”

What more can I ask? Shall I go behind these words and dig up what he might have written on this subject or some time that he might have felt differently may do so? But in this case, all things being considered, I have reason to believe that when he says he is a man of strong religious faith, he means what he says when he takes the oath. I believe him.

During his confirmation hearings, he stated that he understands this obligation and fully intends to honor it. For example, he indicated that he “will vigorously enforce and defend the constitutionality” of the law barring harassment of patients entering abortion clinics, despite any misgivings he might have about that law.

I take him at his word. Although, I do not agree with all of Senator Ashcroft’s views, as I have already indicated, I do not doubt Senator Ashcroft’s word or his sincerity regarding his fealty to an oath he will swear before God and man.

As far as I am personally concerned, it would be an act of supreme arrogance on my part to doubt his intention to honor such an oath. I will not prejudge him in such a manner.

Given Senator Ashcroft’s background, the position to which he has been nominated, and his assurances to the Senate that he will faithfully uphold the laws of the United States, I believe he should be confirmed.

I yield the floor, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

MR. LEAHY. Mr. President, thank you.

Mr. President, we have heard a lot said by my Republican friends and others that Senator Ashcroft’s nomination is opposed by “hard left” or “extremists” or people who are not the “mainstream” of American politics. I see a pretty broad group here in these extreme or out of the mainstream groups. I will read for the RECORD the names of those who oppose this nomination.

I ask unanimous consent that this more complete list of the organizations and individuals opposing this nomination be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

January 31, 2001 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE S871
January 31, 2001

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, when the roll is called on the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States, I will vote "no."

The position of Attorney General is not comparable to other Cabinet positions. As head of the Department of Justice, the Attorney General has enormous independent responsibility and authority, neither of which is subject directly to direction by the President.

The Attorney General also has enormous discretion in choosing where to use the power to prosecute and when to go to court to assert the rights of the People. Historically, the Attorney General is the officer who has enforced the Voting Rights Act and the other civil rights laws which have transformed our nation for the better in the last half century.

Given the great power which has been lodged in this office, it is important that the American people have confidence in the fairness and impartiality of the occupant of that office. It is clear to me that the three senators in our country lack that confidence in John Ashcroft. His past actions and statements raise legitimate concerns about how he would carry out the duties of Attorney General. It is those legitimate concerns that lead me to oppose his nomination.

What are those concerns?

Other Senators have cited actions and statements which they find objectionable. I will mention three.

First, the decision to oppose Judge Ronnie White’s nomination to the U.S. District Court for Missouri. In my view, the decision to oppose Judge Ronnie White was both unfortunate and unfair. Judge White’s record and views, I believe, were in the debate on the Senate floor. Perhaps even more disturbing was the way in which Senator Ashcroft determined to oppose Judge White’s nomination. Each of us here in the Senate knows that we have ample opportunity to voice objections about judicial nominees from our own state long before a nomination ever reaches the Senate floor. In the case of Judge White, Senator Ashcroft chose to delay serious objection to Judge White until the question came before the full Senate for debate. During that debate, Judge White, the highest ranking African-American jurist in Missouri, was publicly humiliated. This treatment was anything but fair. It was a sad day in the United States Senate.

A second reason for my opposition to Senator Ashcroft’s nomination is his implacable opposition to the appointment of Bill Lann Lee to head up the Civil Rights Division at the Justice Department in the previous administration. Senator Ashcroft’s opposition was clearly based on Mr. Lee’s support for upholding the nation’s laws as they pertain to affirmative action. Mr. Lee testified that he would enforce the Supreme Court’s rulings on affirmative action, including those that restricted affirmative action. Senator Ashcroft opposed Mr. Lee’s nomination, presumably because he feared that Mr. Lee would uphold the law of the land in that regard.

The third reason for my vote will be Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to James Hormel as President Clinton’s choice to be Ambassador to Luxembourg.

I have never met Mr. Hormel. I was not involved in the committee deliberations on that nomination, but as far as I can determine, Mr. Hormel was opposed because of his admission that he is gay. No other credible explanation for opposing Mr. Hormel has been offered of which I am aware.

It is my view that the person entrusted with responsibility to fairly and even-handedly administer the law should not be suspected of discriminating against any nominee on that basis.

Other actions and statements could be cited, but I will stop with those three. They are, in my view, legitimate concerns. In addition, those concerns require a vote against Mr. Ashcroft to be our next Attorney General.

The position of Attorney General is far too important to our Nation. Our Nation is one that needs to be united rather than further divided at this point in our history. I do not believe he is the right person for this job.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY, a Democrat of Vermont, asks unanimous consent that the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I have printed in the RECORD a number of editorials regarding his nomination from the New York Times, USA Today, the Akron Beacon Journal, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT ASHCROFT DID (By Andy Lewis)

BOSTON—Even some conservatives are embarrassed now by the way Senator John Ashcroft killed the nomination of Ronnie White to be a federal judge. He told his Republican colleagues that Judge White, of the Missouri Supreme Court, had shown “a tremendous bent toward criminal activity.” It was a baseless smear. But it was not just dirty politics. It was dangerous, in a way that casts doubt on Senator Ashcroft’s fitness to be attorney general.

Judge White was attacked by Senator Ashcroft because, in 59 capital cases before the Missouri court, he had voted 18 times to reverse the death sentence. In 10 of those 18 the court was unanimously for reversal, Senator Ashcroft hit at cases in which Judge White dissented.

For appraisal of Judge White’s record in those cases I rely on Stuart Taylor Jr. of The National Journal, a conservative who is widely respected as a legal analyst.

One of the dissents was in a horrifying murder case—the murder, among others, of a shrimp boat captain.

Mr. Ashcroft’s “conclusion was plausible, debatable, hardly unpopular (especially among police) and (for that reason) courageous.” For John Ashcroft to call it “pro-criminal” was an enormous independent responsibility.

The position of Attorney General is a very important one. The two dissents most directly as-the cabinet, Senator Ashcroft’s extreme-right politics make him a dubious choice for attorney general. But what makes him, finally, unfit for the job is that, in Stuart Taylor Jr.’s words, “character assassins should not be attorney general.”

ASHCROFT RIGHTS RECORD BEARS CAREFUL WATCHING

OUR VIEW: HIS TESTIMONY SAID ONE THING; HIS RECORD ANOTHER

When Senate Democrats forced postponement of a vote Wednesday on a confirmation of John Ashcroft, the Missouri senator, as attorney general, he was exerting pressure against a voluntary St. Louis busing plan that grew out of a lengthy court case. Assertions at last week’s counsel he favors integration were un- dermined by Ashcroft’s early tests of his commitment to fairness. Congress will decide whether the U.S. government pursues allegations of voter discrimination in Florida in the wake of the presidential election. But the question is whether Ashcroft can forge a consensus to meet the needs of the Constitution and the people he was elected to serve. Ashcroft’s actions as Missouri’s attorney general, including his opposition to civil rights laws, may hold tight rein on what he can do as attorney general. Moreover, many observers think Ashcroft is likely to oppose the death penalty in 41 of 59 cases before the Missouri high court. He sided with the majority in 53 of those cases. Ashcroft defended his opposition last week, arguing that he considered the “totality” of the judge’s record. If anything, that record, as White quietly and pow- erfully made obvious, has reflected sound reasoning and a dedication to the law (as many police groups acknowledge).

Sen. Arlen Specter, a Pennsylvania Repub- lican who holds the duty to vote for the way he had been treated. The judge framed the issue of Ashcroft’s nomination: “The question for the Senate is whether Ashcroft’s misrepresentations are consistent with the fair play and justice that you all would require of the U.S. attorney general.”

The White nomination doesn’t tell the en- tire story of John Ashcroft, his former state attorney general, governor and sen- ator, he is highly qualified to lead the De- partment of Justice. He has governed from the center and with integrity, enforcing the law whether he has agreed with its direction or not. His zealosity has been from front and center. He has yet to explain clearly his opposition to James Hormel as ambassador to Lux- embourg, except to suggest that he was off- ended because the nominee was gay. He per- sisted in playing racial politics with a lengthy school desegregation case in St. Louis.

The Ashcroft record raises the question: Why didn’t George W. Bush nominate some- one else to be attorney general, someone who better reflected the themes of his inaugural address, conservative, yes, but far less polar- izing and tempted by expediency? Fair play? John Ashcroft is the president’s man.

[From the Akron Beacon Journal, Jan. 24, 2001]
The President’s Man—The Ugly Story of the Ronnie White Nomination Reveals What a Disappointing Choice George W. Bush Has Made

Trent Lott has declared that John Ashcroft will receive the Senate Judiciary Committee’s recommendation to be attorney general. The Senate Judiciary Com- mittee is expected to vote today. That has been postponed. Still, the forecast of the possibility of Ashcroft’s confirmation is reason to be concerned about the Oval Office.

Those who’ve described the confirmation hearings on the Ashcroft nomination as among the roughest ever probably don’t know. There have been dis- missed as business as usual until Ronnie White, the first black man to sit on the Mis- souri Supreme Court, testified at the con- firmation hearing. Bill Clinton appointed White to a position on the federal district court. In 1999, Sen. Ashcroft, a fellow Mis- sourian, almost single-handedly defeated the White nomination, and the way he did so raises questions about his judgment. Ashcroft misled his colleagues. He rallied law enforcement organizations to oppose the White nominations, all the while leaving the impression they had come forward on their own. He grossly distorted the White record, describing the judge as “fanatical” and “with a tremendous bent toward criminal ac- tivity.” He painted the portrait of a judge determined to reverse death sentences. In the end, White missed as business as usual until Ronnie White, the first black man to sit on the Mis-vice?" Can he guard judicial independence when he has repeatedly denied jugeships for political reasons? Can he enforce the civil rights laws when he has doggedly fought school segregation and affirmative action, and as a gay rights? Can he protect women seeking abortions when he considers abortion murder?

Mr. Ashcroft is indisputably a man of principle. The problem is those principles put him at odds with the Constitution, with contemporary notions of equality and with the mainstream of American public.

JUDICIAL INDEPENDENCE

Judicial independence is the rock that anchors our judiciary. But Mr. Ashcroft has undermined independence with his attacks on judicial nominees.

Mr. Ashcroft’s hostility to judicial independence is an important lesson of the much-told story about his opposition to Ronnie White as a federal judge. Mr. Ashcroft may have been motivated by a feud with Mr. White over abortion policy. But by basing his attack on Judge White’s death penalty decisions, Mr. Ashcroft sent a chill through the ranks of state judges hoping to be promoted to the federal bench. Mr. Ashcroft said Mr. White was “pro-criminal” because he had handed down death sentences. In fact, Mr. White had upheld 35 of the 55 death sentences.

Mr. Ashcroft focused on Judge White’s lone dissent to the conviction of James R. Johnson in the gruesome murder of a sheriff, two sheriff’s deputies and a sheriff’s wife. Judge White wrote of Judge’s “horror at this carnage” and said Johnson deserved to die; if he was not insane. But he concluded that Johnson’s lawyer was so incompetent that he had received ineffective counsel.

A lone dissent in the case that arouses such public passion is the essence of judicial independence. Charles Blackmagic, a retired Supreme Court Justice, called Mr. Ashcroft’s attack “tampering with the judiciary.”

Mr. White is not a perfect man, nor is he the nation’s keenest jurist. But he upheld the highest values of a judge in his dissent. Will Mr. Ashcroft reject for the federal bench those judges with the temerity to overturn a death sentence?

Mr. Ashcroft’s record in Missouri raises similar questions. Judicial nominees say that Mr. Ashcroft asked them their views about abortion before deciding whether to support their nomination.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. Bush says that Mr. Ashcroft “has a strong civil rights record.” As evidence he cites Mr. Ashcroft’s appointment of eight African-Americans to Missouri judgeships, a past commendation from the Mound City Bar Association, an endorsement by the Limelight newspaper, his support of Limelight University and his signing of bills honoring Martin Luther King and establishing Scott Jolinp’s home as a historic site.

As we observed before, the question is not whether Mr. Ashcroft can put aside his history of being an extreme critic of the federal courts and of some of the statutes and court decisions he will have to enforce. The question is why the Senate should force Mr. Ashcroft to perform the intellectual contortions that transformation would require.

Mr. Ashcroft, as U.S. attorney general, assured senators he would enforce laws he didn’t agree with. He even made a specific commitment not to seek a reversal of Supreme Court decisions legalizing abortion, which he called “settled law.”

Almost four years ago, in a lecture to the Heritage Foundation, Mr. Ashcroft had a different description of the high court’s abortion rulings. Referring to a 1992 decision reaffirming Roe vs. Wade, he complained that in that ruling “the Supreme Court challenged God’s ability to mark when life begins and ends.” In the same lecture he echoed a familiar conservative critique of what he called “appalling judicial activism.”

We observed before, the question is not whether Mr. Ashcroft can put aside his history of being an extreme critic of the federal courts and of some of the statutes and court decisions he will have to enforce. The question is why the Senate should force Mr. Ashcroft to perform the intellectual contortions that transformation would require.

Religious Freedom

Organized prayer in the public schools is unconstitutional. The First Amendment says the government can’t tell us when or how to worship. Yet Mr. Ashcroft has long supported organized school prayer. He also supports school vouchers, as does Mr. Bush, that could get students to parochial church schools. As attorney general, Mr. Ashcroft would have the lead role in developing the administration’s legal arguments in school vouchers cases and for decades of Supreme Court decisions raises questions as to whether he believes in the boundary between church and state.

The Senate Judiciary Committee could vote as early as today on the nomination of former Missouri Sen. John Ashcroft to be U.S. attorney general. Before last week’s hearings by the committee, the Post-Gazette suggested that Mr. Ashcroft was the wrong man for the job. Nothing that transpired in the hearings changed our view.

It is true that Mr. Ashcroft, who was nominated by President Bush as a gesture to religious conservatives, assured senators he would enforce laws he didn’t agree with. He even made a specific commitment not to seek a reversal of Supreme Court decisions legalizing abortion, which he called “settled law.”

Mr. Bush says he does not think the nation is “ready” to overturn Roe and says he will focus on bills such as one outlawing partial birth abortion. Mr. Ashcroft have also said they will uphold the law protecting women’s access to abortion clinics. But Mr. Ashcroft was an assistant attorney general to the Reagan administration. He called Roe vs. Wade an “insidious invasion of private life” and ends. He was a political troublemaker for George W. Bush, who received significant support from the religious right in his election campaign, to make what one of his aides called a “message appointment” that would please that constituency. Senators who see the world differently—like Pennsylvania’s Arlen Specter—are under no obligation to follow suit by confirming Mr. Ashcroft.

Yet Mr. Specter went on record early saying he would support Mr. Ashcroft “unless something extraordinary” developed in the Ashcroft confirmation hearings. Such “smoking gun” materialized. Moreover, the witness Ashcroft opponents had most counted on, Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie Woods, eloquently says he was disappointed. Judge White, an African American, declined an opportunity to impute racism to then-Sen. Ashcroft’s disgraceful derailing of his nomination to the federal bench.

But the issue wasn’t whether Mr. Ashcroft is a racist. It was that he unfairly distorted Judge White’s record by branding him as “pro-criminal.” That charge is more understandable in the context of Mr. Ashcroft’s general audit of judges, but also as part of a body of law that, in many respects, is unconvincing to John Ashcroft but vital to women, minorities and other Americans who find his demonization of the courts bizarre.

It was symbolism that led President Bush to nominate Mr. Ashcroft; senators who are uncomfortable with that symbolism—Arlen Specter among them, we hope—should reject the nomination.

Mr. Hatch. Mr. President, since we have a lull, I will take a few moments to make some points that I think need to be made in light of some of the statements that have been made. We have been placing matters in the RECORD all day, and hopefully people will read the RECORD and realize some of the arguments that have been made are not only inconsequential but really not right.

Let me rise today to address some of the most common criticisms directed against Senator Ashcroft.

Certain allegations have surfaced again and again, and they misrepresent Senator Ashcroft’s record and personal character. I will address some of the most invidious of these charges.

The primary criticism cited by my colleagues in opposition to Senator Ashcroft is his involvement with school desegregation and his actions taken against the nominations of Ronnie White and Bill Lann Lee.

First, let me address the criticisms made against Senator Ashcroft’s role in the school desegregation cases in St. Louis and Kansas City. There has been a significant distortion of his role in these cases and there are some things that I would like to make clear.

First, John Ashcroft supports integration. He is not against desegregation and said so repeatedly during the four days of hearings and in response to numerous written questions on the subject. Senator Ashcroft testified, “I have always opposed segregation. I have always supported integration.” I believe that segregation is inconsistent with the 14th amendment’s guarantee of equal protection. I supported integrating the schools.” Senator Ashcroft is deeply committed to civil rights and has stated that he intends to make this one of his top priorities if confirmed as Attorney General.

Second, all of Senator Ashcroft’s actions with regard to desegregation occurred in his role as attorney general, as the legal representative of the State of Missouri. As the State attorney general he was required to defend the interest of the State, his client. The State opposed voluntary desegregation because it would lead to incredible costs for the State—estimates put the total cost of desegregation at an incredible $1.8 billion to the State. To put this in perspective, Missouri’s fiscal year 2001 budget is $17 billion. At that time it was much less. In other words, virtually everybody in government, a judicial raid on the state treasury, something that all of us ought to be concerned about.

Indeed, combined costs of the St. Louis and Kansas City desegregation plans have been higher than the costs of desegregation in all the other states combined, with the exception of California. Moreover, the way the plan was structured most of the money was funneled to the white suburbs. In 1996, when the total cost of the program was $1.3 billion, only between $100 and $200 million went to the St. Louis schools. That doesn’t sound like desegregation to me. Yet that is what these liberals have been calling for.

The results of these court-ordered remedies have been truly unimpressive. For instance, test scores actually went down from 1990 to 1995. Scores on the Stanford Achievement Test went from 36.5 to 30.5. Yet when the national average was 50. It doesn’t sound like very good desegregation to me. The graduation rate has remained around an abysmal 30 percent. And as Yet our liberal friends, both in this body and in the outside groups, would have you believe Senator Ashcroft is doing a terrible thing against desegregation and against integration. And they just plain don’t accept his very honest statements that he has always been for desegregation and for integration. He has never spoken against them.

It has been suggested that then-Attorney General Ashcroft’s lack of enthusiasm for this plan demonstrates insensitivity toward the needs of the students in St. Louis.

It has been suggested that then-Attorney General Ashcroft’s lack of enthusiasm for this plan demonstrates insensitivity toward the needs of the students in St. Louis. But given these extraordinary and extraordinary costs, I think it seems perfectly understandable that many State officials from both political parties have consistently had doubts about this plan. Indeed, Senator Ashcroft’s democratic successor as attorney general took the same position on behalf of the State of Missouri.

Third, some of my colleagues have charged that Senator Ashcroft misrepresented his involvement with the desegregation cases. This is also a significant distortion. As senator, Senator Ashcroft’s responses to a flurry of questions. The Missouri school desegregation cases are extremely complex and involve a variety of different factual and constitutional issues. Perhaps Senator Ashcroft made some preliminary statements that were incomplete, but when questioned further, he clarified his answers. Moreover, in an extended response to a written question, he discussed in detail Missouri’s liability and involvement with the case.

Senator Ashcroft has acknowledged that the State was found liable for desegregation. However, the State was responsible only for an intra-district violation, that is a violation in the one district of St. Louis. The State was never at any time adjudged liable for an intra-district violation involving the St. Louis suburbs—this is the bottom line of a long and somewhat murky legal record.

The fact that Missouri was never found to have committed an interdistrict violation is easily proved. Consider that throughout 1981 and 1982 the parties and the court were preparing for trial on the issue of interdistrict liability. It goes without saying that a trial on the point would have been unnecessary if liability had already been determined.

In fact there was a trial on the interdistrict liability. This trial was averted because the suburban school districts were necessary to prompt the city and county to reach a settlement agreement, an agreement to which the State was not a party. The consent decree entered by the district court did not contain the necessary finding of liability for an interdistrict violation. Thus, a settlement was reached in which the State was required to pay for an inter-district remedy between the city and county although it had never been found liable of an inter-district violation.

Missouri’s arguments on appeal against the district court’s order had a strong legal basis. The Supreme Court had previously held in Milliken that a district court must find an interdistrict violation before it can order an interdistrict remedy. Indeed, such a finding must also be based on substantial evidence to fit only the particular constitutional violation. There was no finding of liability here, much less a determination by the court that the settlement met constitutional requirements.

Moreover, the State did not willfully refuse to comply with the district court’s orders. What the district court ordered was for the parties to the litigation to enter into a voluntary plan for interdistrict transfers of students to suburban schools. But such a plan for interdistrict transfers of students to suburban schools was necessary parties who were not before the court. No satisfactory plan was likely to be produced under those circumstances. Indeed, no successful plan was produced until the suburban schools were joined and threatened by the district court directly with being placed by the court into the same school district as the city schools.

The district court did criticize the State, but it did not hold the State in contempt. Probably because the court realized that it had essentially ordered the State and other defendants to perform an impossible task.

Finally, Senator Ashcroft has been criticized for being overly litigious in the desegregation cases. But an electronic search reveals that Senator Ashcroft was actually the least litigious of the attorneys general who represented the State during any significant portion of this litigation. During the 8 years that John Ashcroft was attorney general, there are 18 entries relating to this case.

By comparison, during the 8 years William Webster was attorney general, there are 34 entries. And during the 7 years that Jay Nixon, a democrat, was attorney general, there are 22 entries.

Then-Attorney General Ashcroft did bring cases to the district court. But this is understandable given that the courts never found the State liable for an inter-district violation. A very key point, by the way. Senator Ashcroft's position on behalf of the State was eventually vindicated in the Kansas City school desegregation litigation. That line of cases culminated in Missouri versus Jenkins—in which the Supreme Court held that an interdistrict violation is required before a Federal court can impose interdistrict remedies.

In sum, Senator Ashcroft was a faithful advocate for the State of Missouri. He defended the interests of all state taxpayers through a series of legally justified appeals. The legal theories he advanced on behalf of the State were eventually vindicated by the Supreme Court. As Missouri attorney general he supported improved educational opportunities for children, not the failed and extremely expensive court-ordered remedies developed by the district court. Senator Ashcroft's actions contesting the details of a complicated court-ordered busing scheme do not mean that he opposed segregation.

Quite to the contrary, Senator Ashcroft's horst of actions supports integration, and he represented his client the State in good faith.

Some remarks have been made about some of the judge's cruxy remarks. For those of us who have been in litigation before the Federal courts, we are kind of used to those cruxy remarks from time to time. Frankly, because one single Federal judge of the approximately 800 district and Federal judges in this country makes a cruxy remark, that should not be interpreted as condemnation on behalf of the State. John Ashcroft had no illegitimate interest in any other litigant before the court, nor was there any indication of any kind of censure by the court or contempt proceedings. As a matter of fact, it did not happen. Yet there have been allusions here on the floor that there should have been contempt proceedings. Come on, the law is pretty clear. This has been distorted. It is really offensive to leave it [opposition to] in a way that flies in the face of true civil rights, a man who basically has stood up for civil rights throughout his lifetime.

Another topic that has been brought up again and again is Senator Ashcroft's opposition to Judge Ronnie White. Mr. President, I am concerned that some of my colleagues continue to denigrate Senator Ashcroft for his involvement in the nomination of Judge Ronnie White. It has been said that Senator Ashcroft distorted Judge White's record and wrongly painted him as pro-criminal and antilaw enforcement.

But there were many reasons to vote against confirmation for Judge White. In fact, every Republican did so. I have reviewed Senator Ashcroft's record and several of his dissenting opinions in death penalty cases, and I can understand Senator Ashcroft's opposition to Judge White's nomination to the Federal bench.

For instance in the Johnson case, the defendant was convicted on four counts of first-degree murder for killing three officers and the wife of the sheriff. Johnson was sentenced to death on all counts. On appeal, the Missouri Supreme Court reversed the convictions, but Judge White dissented arguing for a new trial based on ineffective assistance of counsel. Judge White thought that Johnson deserved further opportunity to present a defense based on post-traumatic stress disorder. But the majority showed that there was no credible evidence that Johnson suffered from this disorder. Rather, it was clear that defense counsel had fabricated a story that was quickly disproved at trial. Defense counsel stated that Johnson had placed a perimeter of cans and strings and had deflated the tires of his car. At trial, testimony revealed that police officers had taken these actions, not the defendant.

Further, Congressman KENNETH HULSHOF, the prosecutor in the Johnson case testified at Senator Ashcroft's hearings that it was almost impossible to make out an argument for ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant had counsel of his own choosing. He picked from our area in mid-Missouri what . . . I referred to as a dream team."

Judge White has every right to pen a dissent in Johnson and other cases involving the death penalty. Similarly, every Senator has the duty to evaluate these opinions as part of Judge White's judicial record. And that's just what Senator Ashcroft did. At no time did Senator Ashcroft derogate Judge White's background. I consider Judge White to be a decent man with an impressive personal background. He has accomplished a great deal and came up from humble beginnings. But his record of dissenting in death penalty cases was sufficiently troubling to cause Senator Ashcroft and others to oppose the nomination.

Some of our colleagues have improperly attributed Senator Ashcroft's opposition to voting against Judge White. But Judge White's nomination was strongly opposed by many of Senator Ashcroft's constituents and also by major law enforcement groups, including the National Sheriffs' Association, the Missouri Federation of Police Chiefs.

Sheriff Kenny Jones, whose wife and colleagues were killed by Johnson testified:

I opposed Judge White's nomination to the federal bench, and I asked Senator Ashcroft to join me because of Judge White's opinion on a death penalty case. In his opinion, Judge White urged that Johnson be given a second chance at freedom. I cannot understand his reasoning. I know that the four people killed were not given a second chance.

Finally, some of my colleagues have alleged that Senator Ashcroft's opposition to Judge White was underhanded and done with stealth. Well, Senator Ashcroft voted against Judge White's nomination in committee. He expressed his disapproval at that time. If he had held up the nomination in committee without allowing it to proceed to the floor he would have been criticized for delay.

Indeed, Senator BOXER pleaded during a debate about several judges including Judge Ronnie White:

'"I beg of you, in the name of fairness and justice and all things that are good in our country, give people a chance. If you do not think they are good, if you have a problem with something they said or did, bring it down to the floor. We can debate it. But please do not hold up these nominees. It is wrong. You would not do it to a friend."

Thus, Senator Ashcroft was between a rock and a hard place as how to raise his legitimate concerns about Judge White.

Senator Ashcroft is a man of tremenderous integrity; one of the most qualified nominees for Attorney General that we have ever seen. His opposition to Judge White was principled and in keeping with the proper exercise of the constitutional advice and consent duty of a Senator. I regret that we have needed to revisit this issue at such great length.

Now, Mr. President, let me address one final issue that continues to come up. Some critics of Senator Ashcroft have stated that he held up Lann Lee's record when he was nominated to head the Civil Rights Division. But this is simply not the case. Mr. Lee had a noted record of promoting and preserving race-conscious policies of questions of constitutionalality. Opposition to Mr. Lee was limited to Senator Ashcroft—nine Republicans on the Judiciary Committee opposed this nominee, including myself.

Let me say that I have the highest possible regard for Mr. Lee and the difficult circumstances in which his family came to this country, worked hard, and realized the American dream.
Despite this high personal regard, I was deeply concerned about Mr. Lee’s nomination because much of his career was devoted to preserving constitutionally suspect race-conscious public policies that ultimately sort and divide citizens by race. At the time of his hearing, Senator Lee had us continue down the road of racial spoils, a road on which Americans are seen principally through the looking glass of race.

Senator Ashcroft’s principled opposition to Mr. Lee was firmly based in the record. The signs that Mr. Lee would pursue an activist agenda were clear at his hearings. At that time he narrowly defined the rule in Adarand and could not distinguish cases that he would bring as Assistant Attorney General from those he brought in the NAACP Legal Defense Fund.

Some have alleged that Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to Mr. Lee was based on mischaracterizations. But Senator Lee did not distort Mr. Lee’s testimony. When Mr. Lee stated the test of Adarand versus Pena he said that the Supreme Court considered racial preference programs permissible if “conducted in a limited and measured manner” and that this would be correct in a narrow sense, it purposefully misses the main point of the Court’s fundamental holding that such race-conscious programs are presumptively unconstitutional. Mr. Lee might have stated strict scrutiny was the standard articulated in Adarand; however, when he described the content of this standard it was far looser than what the Supreme Court delineated. A “limited and measured manner” is a standard far more lenient than the strict scrutiny standard of “narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest.” Mr. Lee’s misleading description can properly be assailed as a fundamental mischaracterization of the spirit of the law.

Senator Ashcroft has stated that he opposed Mr. Lee because of his record of advocacy and his distortion of precedent. These failures to properly interpret the law would have serious effects on Mr. Lee’s ability to serve as Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights. Senator Ashcroft’s reasons for opposing Mr. Lee were amply supported by the record.

By contrast to Mr. Lee, Senator Ashcroft has repeatedly distinguished his role as a legislator and advocate from that of the Attorney General. He understands that his political advocacy gets checked at the door of the Department of Justice. Senator Ashcroft has repeatedly stated that he would enforce the law as it exists to protect the civil liberties of all Americans. He is committed to defending the constitutional rights of all individuals and has testified that he will make the enforcement of civil rights one of his topmost priorities. As Senator Ashcroft stated, Mr. Lee did not believe “the Department of Justice lives up to its heritage of enforcing the rule of law, and in particular, guaranteeing legal rights for the advancement of all Americans. . . . One of my highest priorities at the Department will be to target the unconstitutional practice of racial profiling.”

Senator Ashcroft’s critics also allege that because Senator Ashcroft opposed the nomination of Bill Lann Lee to be Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, Senator Ashcroft will himself be unable to defend civil liberties. But this is an incredible and illogical leap. To oppose the race-conscious policies favored by Mr. Lee is to value the true principles of the civil rights movement—equality of opportunity for all Americans.

At the hearings and in supplemental questions, my colleagues have raised issues concerning Senator Ashcroft’s plans for the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice should he be confirmed as Attorney General. Let me say that I am confident that Senator Ashcroft will fight for the civil rights and liberties of all Americans. He believed in equal opportunity to succeed and that those at the bottom of our society may need a helping hand.

Senator Ashcroft strongly supports “affirmative access programs. As he testified:

“we can expand the invitation for people to participate aggressively so that no one is denied the capacity to participate simply because they didn’t go about the opportunities. We can work on education, which is the best way for people to have access to achievement.”

Senator Ashcroft wants to encourage achievement and access to achievement. He wants to avoid what President Bush called the “soft bigotry of low expectations” that fuels many race-conscious programs.

It is true that Senator Ashcroft is skeptical about government programs that categorize people by race. Some of these programs might be unconstitutional under the Supreme Court’s decision in Adarand versus Pena. That decision stated that all governmental racial classifications should be subject to strict scrutiny, that is such classifications must be narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest. The Supreme Court made clear that there was no such things as a “benign” racial classification, and that the government may treat people differently because of their race for only the most compelling reason. This view of governmental racial classifications comports with the development of constitutional protections for civil liberties. Senator Ashcroft is solidly with the Supreme Court on this issue.

We have no reason to doubt that Senator Ashcroft will work long and hard to defend the civil liberties of all Americans.

These are the points that are repeatedly used to denigrate Senator Ashcroft’s character and motivation. But when the facts are examined, these charges simply do not stick. Senator Ashcroft is a man of tremendous integrity and probity and I hope that we move quickly to confirm him.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware was going to speak, but if I might, just before he does, and on this issue, the desegregation efforts in Missouri in 1992, when Jay Nixon first ran for attorney general in Missouri, he did recognize the need to settle the desegregation issues. He stated the State, the cities, and parents needed resolution and certainty after years of non-stop litigation. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorial summed up the differences under Jay Nixon between the desegregation efforts in the State of Missouri and Kansas City.

Their differences in how the State should respond to the Federal court orders of desegregation for St. Louis and Kansas City schools is instructive. The Republican wants to keep fighting although the State lost the case long ago. The Democrat wants to have a settlement.

Mr. Nixon then followed through in this agreement. He was the first Missouri official to sign a resolution on behalf of the State, and he was a supporter of the law that provided the State funding to settle the St. Louis case. In both the settlement agreement and the law to implement it, then Governor Carnahan, provided the leadership that Governor Ashcroft did not provide.

Senator Ashcroft ran for Governor in 1984 as a strong opponent of the settlement, the settlement finally had in Missouri. He was 8 years as attorney general and 8 years as Governor. In those years he denied liability, opposed a fair settlement, and litigated the questions over and over again.

I will put in the RECORD in a moment a letter from Arthur Benson who, since 1982, has been lead counsel for the schoolchildren in the Kansas City desegregation litigation.

What he said in it is:

While the case proved difficult to settle with the State, it did eventually settle because Jay Nixon and other Missouri officials wanted to settle rather than litigate, and because he wanted to refocus the time and effort of state officials on improving education.

To this Senator’s mind, this is a marked difference from what Senator Ashcroft had done. In any event, Senators have to make up their own minds.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARTHUR BENSON & ASSOCIATES,

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
U.S. Senator, Dirksen Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: Since 1979 I have been the lead counsel for theבעיתuates in the Kansas City desegregation litigation, now styled as Jenkins et al. v. Kansas City Missouri School District, case number Case No. 77–0290–CV–W–1, United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri.

After January 1993 there was a marked change in the manner in which the then Governor of the State of Missouri represented in this litigation. After January 1993 Attorney General Jay Nixon continued to defend the legal positions of the State of Missouri defendants vigorously and well. At the same time, however, he never denied the State’s responsibility for eliminating the vestiges of its prior de jure segregation. He also expressed interest in settlement, supported legislative initiatives in the Missouri legislature that would provide necessary underpinnings, and presented others with alternatives to the courts in response to remedial proposals of the plaintiffs, all of which were changes from the litigation tactics of the state defendants in this case before 1993.

While the case proved difficult to settle with the State, it did eventually settle because of Attorney General Ashcroft's desire to settle rather than litigate, and because he wanted to refocus the time and efforts of state officials on improving education.

Yours very truly,

ARTHUR BENSON.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, just a few moments ago, I had a phone conversation with Senator Ashcroft—it was not an easy call for me, and I suspect it was not an easy call for him, in which he told me that he was not going to vote for his confirmation to be Attorney General for our country.

Unlike many of my colleagues in this body, I never served with Senator Ashcroft. We heard a lot about him today and we know him better than I ever will. While some are full of praise and others are more critical, a number of characteristics about the man emerge. I want to reiterate some of those.

Even his critics will acknowledge that John Ashcroft is a person of intellect, someone with great energy, someone with a wealth of experience within his own State and here at the Federal level, a person of deep faith, someone who is consistent, that he will be a man of his word. And what is so important about being a man of his word is perhaps the most qualified candidates this body has ever had the privilege to cast its advice and consent on for the office of U.S. Attorney General. He was twice elected Governor of Missouri, served two terms there as the attorney general, and was for 1 year our colleague—all of that public service is remarkable for a person who will go on to be Attorney General.

He has the academic background and the legal background to also be a good Attorney General.

From the 6 years I had the privilege of working with John Ashcroft in the Senate, I can unequivocally say he is a man of his word. And what is so important about being a man of his word is that the case made against John Ashcroft is that in the Senate he pursued a course that he believed in, he fought against groups to smear his good name, I am thankful Senator Ashcroft will survive this reckless campaign that has snowballed into an avalanche of innuendo, rumor, and spin.

From the moment President Bush announced his choice for U.S. Attorney General, some predictable opponents immediately got on the bandwagon and launched an all-out war on our former colleague and his nomination to be Attorney General.

In their zeal to pick a fight with the new administration, the debate in the Senate has melted down into a feeding frenzy for the left wing which sought in the process to lay down markers for their agenda.

Ironically, the President’s nominee for the Nation’s top law enforcement office in the country is arguably one of the most qualified candidates this body has ever had the privilege to cast its advice and consent on for the office of U.S. Attorney General. He has the academic background and the legal background to also be a good Attorney General.

From the 6 years I had the privilege of working with John Ashcroft in the Senate, I can unequivocally say he is a man of his word. And what is so important about being a man of his word is that the case made against John Ashcroft is that in the Senate he pursued a course that he believed in, he fought against groups to smear his good name, I am thankful Senator Ashcroft will survive this reckless campaign that has snowballed into an avalanche of innuendo, rumor, and spin.

From the moment President Bush announced his choice for U.S. Attorney General, some predictable opponents immediately got on the bandwagon and launched an all-out war on our former colleague and his nomination to be Attorney General.

In their zeal to pick a fight with the new administration, the debate in the Senate has melted down into a feeding frenzy for the left wing which sought in the process to lay down markers for their agenda.

Ironically, the President’s nominee for the Nation’s top law enforcement office in the country is arguably one of the most qualified candidates this body has ever had the privilege to cast its advice and consent on for the office of U.S. Attorney General. He was twice elected Governor of Missouri, served two terms there as the attorney general, and was for 1 year our colleague—all of that public service is remarkable for a person who will go on to be Attorney General.

He has the academic background and the legal background to also be a good Attorney General.
to uphold the law. He is going to enforce that law, even law with which he does not agree.

He could even be in the position of enforcing some piece of legislation against which he voted on the floor of the Senate, and he is a man of his word. And with all the criticism people have had of John Ashcroft, where they disagreed with him as a Senator, and then they criticize him as not being qualified or the right person to be Attorney General, they forget that because of his word, they have nothing to worry about.

In fact, he is such a man of his word that if he were to tell a fib, you would know it right away. He is that straight laced, that straightforward, that transparent of an individual, that he would tell you the truth because he could not lie. He couldn’t get away with lying. And he knows he couldn’t get away with lying. That is the sort of a person to have as Attorney General of the United States.

We are going to have a person who is going to be the chief law enforcement officer of the United States. You will never see him being the chief defense counsel for the President of the United States. We have seen over the last 4 or 5 years in the previous administration. John Ashcroft, put in that position would resign from being Attorney General of the United States.

So the people who are making a case against John Ashcroft put in the position of Attorney General, because of votes and speeches and positions he has taken on the floor of the Senate, are comparing apples and oranges; and they are forgetting that a man of his word is going to do what he says, and he takes an oath to uphold the law and enforce that law; and it is going to get done. So I say, once again, he is unequivocally a man of his word.

He testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee that he will enforce the laws he supports if he is going to do so for all Americans. He said that, and he is going to do it. And his saying that makes me fully confident that he will do so.

He has a sharp command of the law, having filled both shoes of Senator, Governor and state Attorney General. He understands the difference between advancing legislation as a Senator and enforcing the laws on the books as a state Attorney General. And along this line, he has been recognized by the leaders of other States in this area, because he was elected by the National Association of Attorneys General, and elected in another position by the National Governors’ Association, to represent and lead their organizations while he was in those two positions for the State of Missouri.

As fellow midwesterners, John and I come from States where agricultural issues are key components of our economy, our culture, and our heritage. We have discussed at length how to address the challenges confronting family farmers in this new century. He shares my concern that we must foster competitive markets and that the family farmer is entitled to a level playing field—the same for independent producers—and he would say, beyond agriculture, fair competition is important for the small business people of America.

He would also say that for passengers in my State who pay extraordinarily high airline tickets to fly from Des Moines, IA, to Chicago, there has to be competition in the airline industry, particularly for the farm communities.

Based on my experience with Senator Ashcroft’s work here in the Senate, I know he is committed to doing what is right for middle America as he enforces these laws they are already on the books. He knows, of course, that I will keep my lines of communication wide open between my office and his when it comes to fighting for the interests of rural America.

In addition to his exemplary professional credentials, there is another issue upon which his supporters and detractors alike agree, and that is, our former colleague, Senator John Ashcroft, is a man of principle. He is a man of his word. He knows he is unequivocally a man of his word. And with all the criticism people have been unable to make their case, that for all Americans. He said that, and I think when this vote is taken, we will find out that they did not make their case.

Despite his critics’ best efforts, accusations of racism and bias have not stuck. In fact, throughout his career, Senator Ashcroft has tried to protect the rights of minorities. He signed the Missouri hate crimes bill into law, and in the Senate he held the first-ever hearing on racial profiling. As Governor, he appointed a number of minority judges of African American descent. He appointed the first two women appellate court as Governor of Missouri, and the first Black Bar Association to represent and lead their organizations while he was in those two positions for the State of Missouri.

It is sad that the aggressive publicity generated by the special interest groups to derail this nomination has not caused us to re-examine John Ashcroft in the minds of too many Americans. For example, contrary to the controversy surrounding the nomination to the Federal bench of Ronnie White, John Ashcroft does not have a racist bone in his body. If his opponents are keeping track of his support for middle America, he is a clean-cut, honest American, great for the small business people of America, fair competition is important for the State of Missouri.

He voted for legislation that prohibits any person convicted of even misdemeanor acts of domestic violence from possessing a firearm.

As Governor, Senator Ashcroft appointed women to the State’s appellate courts, including the first two women to the Missouri Court of Appeals and the first woman to the Missouri Supreme Court.

In regard to the tactics used against him, deploying disinformation to advance their own agenda, groups inside the beltway, who probably have felt very secure for the last years because they had somebody in the White House who would advance their agenda, now feel a little shut out. They have banded together to engineer a controversy about John Ashcroft where none exists. They rushed to cast judgment, and in the process his opponents sought to paint John Ashcroft as a racist, as somebody tainted by his principles and unfit to lead the Department of Justice.

Obviously, in my view, these critics have been unable to make their case, and when this vote is taken, we will find out that they did not make their case.

the American people, the end does not always justify the means. In fact, seldom is that true. But in the case of this opposition to John Ashcroft, any means is justified for the end they want—to let their grassroots members back the political philosophy of which they don’t have the President of the United States always carrying their agenda, as they did the last 8 years, they are going to be a force in this town. And they are a force in this town.

They are also telling Members of Congress, particularly left-of-center Members of Congress: You are on a short leash. We have to be reckoned with. Don’t toy around with playing with the Republicans too much or a Republican President. It is also going to help them tremendously with their fund-raising. That is what is at stake here.

The majority of Americans do not operate that way. Not even a majority of their own rank-and-file members at the grassroots operate that way. I was a member of a labor union from 1961 to 1971. If there is one thing I learned as a member of the labor union—and I was during that time a member of the labor union because in my State, we have the right-to-work law, you don’t have to join—I found out that the political agenda of the labor union leadership of Detroit or Washington, DC, did not represent the philosophies of the rank-and-file members on the assembly line at the Waterloo Register Company in Cedar Falls, IA. They may have represented our economic interests of collective bargaining, but they did not represent the political interests of the commonsense, conservative blue-collar workers. It is the very same way with a lot of these organizations. When we go back to the grassroots of our States and interact with the rank-and-file members of a lot of these organizations, they do not treat us as we treat them in our State the way these leaders might treat us out here, as evidenced by the fact of how they treat John Ashcroft. Misrepresentations and bald-faced lies that are used by this group are not the way my friend and neighbor, John Ashcroft, has built up an impeccable record of honest public service. His rock-solid integrity, legal background, and proven ability to uphold and enforce the law will restore the mission of the Justice Department.

It is clear to me that despite his per-sontal beliefs, Senator Ashcroft has proven his ability to uphold the law without the influence of personal bias.
For example, as Missouri attorney general, John Ashcroft protected the confidentiality of abortion records maintained by the Missouri Department of Health, even when they were requested by pro-life groups. He has voiced his opposition to violence and his belief that, regardless of his personal views on abortion, he should be able to enter abortion clinics safely. That is the law of the land. Senator Ashcroft’s views on abortion are known. But as Attorney General, those laws would not be something that he could change, as one could as a legislator. As a Senator, as a policymaker, he could change some things he might not agree with and I may not agree with. It is still the law of the land, and we live by it.

Senator Ashcroft believes that people who commit acts of violence and intimidation should be punished to the fullest extent of the law. He knows that, if a Democrat President were to be in the Oval Office, as our next Attorney General, he could serve as their guiding compass. Whether it is based upon conservatism, liberalism, or something else, or some-ting in between, each of us in this Senate, and our state leaders have a responsibility to cast votes of conscience.

When the President Officer calls the eyes and nays on this nomination, I hope that the avalanche of unproven criticism will be put to rest as a result of that vote.

I want us to confirm John Ashcroft as our next Attorney General. I have listened to the opponents of John Ashcroft speak here. I have not heard a single one of the speeches, but I had an opportunity to talk to Attorney General
O. BAYH, a person of outstanding ethics, honesty, and moral values. His dad served in this Senate, was an outstanding leader and a person of moral and high ethical values as well.

I would vote for Senator O. BAYH to be Attorney General of the United States, if a Democrat President nominated him, because he is just the sort of person who, when you look at him, you can just know this guy is not going to do something that is wrong. You know he goes to enforce the law.

I hope all of the people who are upright and of strong conviction on the other side, people who have high moral and ethical values—and I know my colleagues on the other side to be in that category—I hope they vote for John Ashcroft to be Attorney General. I could cast a vote for them as well for Attorney General, not because they are my colleagues, but because of what I have seen in their lives. I hope they truly have seen what is in John Ashcroft’s life. And I hope those that are against him will have a little guilty feeling about voting against him, unless I see them differently from the way they are and I have been mistaken about John Ashcroft. But I certainly have never been mistaken about my colleagues from the other side as well. I just hope there is a lot of I soul searching in the next few hours before we vote because I think this Senator is entitled to an overwhelming vote of support to become the next Attorney General of the United States.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is adjourned.
care nurses in the State of Missouri for providing basic gynecological and contraceptive services. In addition, his very vocal opposition to Roe vs. Wade and the basic reproductive rights of women is an issue that not only continues to worry many millions of women across our country.

For me personally, one of the most troubling aspects of his record, was Senator Ashcroft’s unfair treatment of Judge Ronald White when he spearheaded the U.S. Senate’s rejection of his nomination to the Federal bench. This action was highly unusual and extremely unfortunate for Judge White and for the U.S. Senate.

One of the most basic requirements of any nominee to the U.S. Attorney General is an ability to exhibit a strong track record of fighting for the constitutional rights of all Americans—black, brown, or white, male or female, young or old, rich or poor. In my opinion, Senator Ashcroft’s record clearly fails to satisfy that most basic qualification. To the contrary, he has established a 25-year track record of opposing equal opportunities and fair play for too many Americans.

The remains that the U.S. Attorney General is the people’s lawyer, not the President’s lawyer. He is the guardian of the constitutional rights of every American citizen. And I cannot in good conscience support a nominee who has spent much of the past 25 years opposing the constitutional rights of far too many of our citizens.

Thank you. Yielding the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, if I could engage my friend from Utah, the manager of this nomination, I know our friend from Kansas is here, and the Senator from Michigan spoke for quite a long period of time. The Senator from Michigan spoke for just a few minutes. I think it would be appropriate to have the Senator from California speak. She will probably speak for about 35 or 40 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I believe Senator BROWNBACK was next.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, if I could, I have about 10 minutes to speak. If I could, I would like to go in a back and forth order.

Mr. REID. We just didn’t want another 2- or 3-minute speech that took 40 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I rightfully understand that, the Senator will speak for 10 minutes or less, we would appreciate it.

Mrs. BOXER. If we could have a unanimous consent agreement that following Senator BROWNBACK, Senator REID would be recognized, and then Senator FEINGOLD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Thank you, very much. I am grateful for the opportunity to be here to speak in favor of our colleague, Senator Ashcroft, to be Attorney General of the United States.

I serve on our Judiciary Committee along with the esteemed President of the Senate. I wonder sometimes who people are talking about when I hear people saying he is too far this way or that way to be Attorney General. I wonder if he did win statewide elections in a swing State such as Missouri for so many different elections. How was he elected president of the National Association of Attorney Generals? How was he elected head of the National Governors’ Association—bipartisan groups? If this guy is so far out there on these issues, how on Earth did he get elected to all of these positions? It just baffles me other than to say he is not extreme.

In most of his policy issues he has put forward, he cares strongly with passion. But there is a solid core of Americans, and in most cases a majority of Americans, who strongly believe in and agree with him on issues such as partial-birth abortion and other items. To the contrary, he has put forward, he cares strongly with passion. But there is a solid core of Americans, and in most cases a majority of Americans, who strongly believe in and agree with him on issues such as partial-birth abortion and other items.

Mr. President, I grew up in a town only about 20 miles from the State of Missouri in a small town called Parker, KS. I have had the opportunity to follow John’s career for a long time. Our States share a common border. In the Senate, I served on the Senate Commerce and Foreign Relations Committee. Our offices were even down the hall from each other. John and I were neighbors here in Washington, and he even put me up in his house when my apartment building burned. I submit that he would do that for anyone who needed a roof over their head. But more important than geography or committee assignments, John Ashcroft is my friend. A friend who shared with me his honesty and integrity, his devotion to his country, his principled character, and his steadfast belief that each of us is put here on Earth, to help our fellow humans.

Conary to the assertions of those who make a living, exacerbating the tensions that divide us as a nation, I know John Ashcroft is committed to our Nation’s promise of equal justice for all.

President Bush made an outstanding choice for his Attorney General. John Ashcroft is one of the most qualified nominees for the office of Attorney General in history. I encourage my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to follow the spirit of Lincoln, and help renew the ties that bind us together, and to resist the temptation to use this process for political gain, and further divide us as a nation.

I think once John Ashcroft is approved as Attorney General of the United States, he will be an outstanding and extraordinary Attorney General for all American people.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank Senator HATCH and Senator REID for reserving this time for me.

As most people know, there were several Members who came out early with a position on John Ashcroft. Most came out for him before the hearings, and I came out against his confirmation. The people who came out for John Ashcroft before the hearings said they knew enough to know they were for him. I said, after looking at the record and being very familiar with the record, I could not support him. I actually asked then-President-elect Bush to reconsider his choice because I believed him when he said he wanted to unite the nation and divide the nation. I felt this nomination would be very divisive, would raise the very same issues that were raised during one of the most difficult campaigns that I certainly ever remember for President.

I think what I said was borne out. This Presidential election was a mandate. Many people think if all the votes had been counted, it might have come out a different way. That is not the point. The point is, because it was so divisive, whoever won, whether it was for him or against him, when he said he wanted to unite the nation, he divided the nation. Many people think if all the votes had been counted, it might have come out a different way. That is not the point. The point is, because it was so divisive, whoever won, whether it was for him or against him, when he said he wanted to unite the nation, he divided the nation.

I yield the floor.

Judge Ronnie White: Was John Ashcroft’s treatment of Judge Ronnie White fair? Did he have a good heart when it came to dealing with Judge Ronnie White? The American Bar Association gave Judge White a unanimous qualified rating. Judge White was introduced at his nomination hearing for judgeship in front of the Judiciary Committee with glowing recommendations. With no warning, John Ashcroft championed the defeat of Judge White’s nomination on the Senate floor.

I have been in elective life for 25 years; certain things you do not remember and a lot of things you do. I will never forget the day this Senate voted down Judge Ronnie White on a straight partisan vote—the first time in 50 long years that a Judge nominee had been passed favorably through the Judiciary Committee was so treated.

Why would I remember it so clearly? I thought a few people might vote no just as we have on many judge nominations. But I bet that John Ashcroft would have rounded up and made it a big political issue that all the Republicans would stick with him on this vote. We all know, because we are not children in this body, there are other ways to treat someone who suddenly doesn’t look like he will be confirmed. You bring it back to the committee, you have another vote. You don’t do what they did to Ronnie White.

I remember that Congresswoman MAXINE WATERS, one of my good friends, came over from the House that day. She was here because she wanted to celebrate the fact that Ronnie White was going to get this judgeship. She and I looked at each other as the nomination went down. It was a humiliating defeat. It was a sad, sad day.

I compliment those Senators on the Judiciary Committee who apologized to Ronnie White; everyone should have been treated that way. It was unnecessary to do that to any human being.

So, yes, I have looked into John Ashcroft’s heart. And I say how could someone with a good heart do that to another good person? I do not understand it.

I hope Senator FEINGOLD will be listening; too, when he says to President Bush: Why don’t you renominate Ronnie White in the spirit of reconciliation?

During his floor remarks, John Ashcroft pointed to Judge White’s dissent in a murder case. It was a horrific case. John Ashcroft did not ask any questions of Judge White during the confirmation hearing or even afterwards in written follow-up questions about that case. I think a fundamental guarantee of our system of justice, particularly from someone who wants to be an Attorney General, is the right to give someone you are criticizing the right to be heard.

Judge Ronnie White did not have that right until the Democrats called him up during this hearing. I appreciate the fact that he had that hearing in front of the Republicans and Democrats of that committee. That nomination was sabotaged on the floor of the Senate. It was wrong; it was cruel; it was humiliating; and it was not necessary.

I think that speaks volumes about John Ashcroft’s commitment to fairness. On the Senate floor, John Ashcroft said that Judge White was “pro-criminal, with a tremendous bent toward criminal activity.” In the Judiciary Committee hearings last week, Judge White noted that after a long career in public service, including elective office, he had never, ever heard himself described that way.

Judge White got the chance to set the record straight. He told the Judiciary Committee that he voted to affirm the death penalty 41 times out of 59. And in 10 of the remaining 18, he joined a unanimous court in reversing. All together, Judge White voted with the majority of the court in 53 out of 59 cases. In only 6 cases did he dissent in a death penalty case, and in only 3 of these did the choice remain the sole dissenter. When you add this all up, it turns out that Judge White voted the same way as Ashcroft appointed judges—95 percent of the time.

How did Judge White feel about John Ashcroft’s pro-criminal label? This is what he said. He told the Judiciary Committee, “Senator John Ashcroft seriously distorted my record.” And he very graciously left it up to the Senate to decide whether that kind of treatment is consistent with fair play and justice that an Attorney General is expected to have.

Conservative columnist Stuart Taylor of the National Journal has written that John Ashcroft’s treatment of Judge White is enough to disqualify him for the position of Attorney General.

Of Mr. Ashcroft’s actions in the Ronnie White matter, Mr. Taylor wrote that Ashcroft:

... abused the power of his office by descending to demagoguery, dishonesty, and character assassination.

Those are not my words. Those are the words of Stuart Taylor, a conservative journalist for the National Journal.

Let’s just say you think everybody is entitled to one mistake, to one mistreatment of another individual. Let’s just say that. Unfortunately, in this case, I am going to point to a number of other examples.

Take the case of James Hormel, Ambassador Hormel was nominated in 1997 to be the U.S. Ambassador to Luxembourg. He was approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by a vote of 18-1. One of the Senate votes was cast by Senator Ashcroft. Why did Senator Ashcroft oppose Ambassador Hormel, a very well-known businessman, a beautiful family—why?
Let’s check the record. In 1998, when asked about the nomination of James Hormel, Senator Ashcroft said:

“His conduct and the way in which he would represent the United States is probably not up to the standard that I would expect.”

“...and the kind of leadership he’s exhibited there is likely to be offensive to... individuals in the setting to which he will be assigned.”

This is the comment of John Ashcroft on the nomination of James Hormel. Clearly, by this statement—

Senator Ashcroft has been a leader in promoting a life-style. . .and the kind of leadership he has exhibited there is likely to be offensive to... individuals in the setting to which he will be assigned.

To me, you don’t have to have a degree in psychology to understand what John Ashcroft is saying. He is saying he is a leader in promoting a gay life-style. That is what he is saying.

This issue came up at the Judiciary Committee. When Senator Leahy asked John Ashcroft if he opposed James Hormel because he was gay, Senator Ashcroft replied:

“I did not.”

He said:

“I made a judgment that it would be ill-advised to make him an ambassador based on the totality of the record.”

Ambassador Hormel responds:

There is simply no truth in Mr. Ashcroft’s statement that he had any objective basis or personal knowledge upon which to vote against my nomination.

He went on to say:

“...I had known Mr. Hormel for a long time.”

Ambassador Hormel said:

There is no truth in Mr. Ashcroft’s statement that he had any objective basis or personal knowledge upon which to vote against my nomination.

He went on to say:

“...I was a leader in promoting a gay life-style. That is what he is saying.”

Is this fair? I already talked about Ronni White. Senator Ashcroft never had the courtesy to ask Ronni White any questions about the case that he said would disqualify Ronni White for a judgeship. And he led a fight here on the floor such that we have not seen in 50 long years to defeat Ronni White. And he refused to meet at that time with Ambassador Hormel.

Ambassador Hormel said: I want to meet with you, Senator Ashcroft.

No. He refused. And Mr. Hormel stated he cannot remember having a single conversation with the Senator.

There were answers to a written follow-up question after the Judiciary Committee hearings last week. John Ashcroft changes his story. Ashcroft stated that:

[Based on the totality of Mr. Hormel’s advocacy he didn’t believe he would effectively represent the United States in Luxembourg, the most Roman Catholic country in all of Europe.

So we have different answers. First, it was the totality of his knowledge of Mr. Hormel that he knew so well. Then Mr. Hormel says: He didn’t even want to meet with me. And then he changes his answer again.

He hurt James Hormel deeply by not allowing that Ambassadorship to come up for a vote. I think that kind of hurt says to me that when I look at his heart, I don’t see the kindness and the caring about other people.

So, you leave him, OK, that was two. That was Ronnie White and James Hormel. Do we stop there? Unfortunately, we don’t. We go to Margaret Morrow. Was John Ashcroft fair to Margaret Morrow, the first woman to head the Los Angeles Bar Association and the California Bar Association, nominated to the Federal district court in May of 1996, and not until 2 whole years later were we able to finally get a vote? And I must thank Chairman Hatch for that—for February 11, 1998.

Why did it take so long? Simple: John Ashcroft placed a secret hold on Ms. Morrow’s nomination. The hold kept Morrow from having a vote on the Senate floor; it kept her from having a fair up-or-down vote.

I do not think that is fair. That was hurtful. He said she was an “activist judge.” In fact, Ms. Morrow had overwhelming Republican support, to the contrary.

Robert Bonner, a U.S. attorney appointed by Ronald Reagan, supported her. Many Senators from the Judiciary Committee, including Senator Hatch, supported her. James Rogan supported her. And yet he put this hold on her. Finally, we were able to get him to back off. But that court ran without Margaret Morrow on it, and now she serves proudly after getting a vote of 67-38.

He was so out of line on that. A strong majority supported Margaret Morrow.

You have heard the stories: Ronnie White, James Hormel, Margaret Morrow, human beings with faces and hearts and pulses who were hurt by John Ashcroft, hurt deeply by John Ashcroft, hurt in a life-style that he is an incredible example of the American dream. He worked his way up from the bottom of the economic ladder. His heart was treated in the greatest nation in the world. It was hurtful. It was very hurtful to Bill Lann Lee. It was very hurtful to the people in this country who were looking to Bill Lann Lee as a role model.

This is what John Ashcroft said about Bill Lann Lee:

“We don’t need an individual who is trying to go against the Constitution, as recently interpreted by the Supreme Court. We need someone who is going to say I’m here to provide the administration.”

Bill Lann Lee said under oath that he would uphold the Constitution, just as John Ashcroft is saying he will. Yet he did not give Bill Lann Lee a chance. He hurt this man deeply.

That is a story of looking into the heart of someone. I think you have to be judged by not only your words but your deeds in totality, so I have not given one example; I have given four. I could give more. I will not.

I want to talk about the Western Partisan. I want to talk about the fact that John Ashcroft as a Senator in 1998 gave an interview to the Western Partisan magazine. Put in a most straightforward way, this magazine promotes racism.

This is a picture of a T-shirt that is advertised in this magazine. This is a portrait of Abraham Lincoln, and they sell this on a T-shirt. This is Latin. It says: “Thus be it always to tyrants.” Those are the words that were uttered by the assassin of Abraham Lincoln. Abraham Lincoln was quoted by Senator Brownback, and he made a beautiful speech. This is sold by this magazine. The words of John Wilkes Booth are underneath: “Thus be it always to tyrants.”

In his interview, John Ashcroft praised the magazine and its mission:

Your magazine also helped set the record straight. You’ve got a heritage of doing that, of defending northern patriots. Traditionalists should do more. I’ve really got to do more. We’ve all got to stand up and speak in this respect or else we will be taught that these people were giving their lives, sacrificing their sacred fortunes and their honor to some perverted agenda.

Now he says he did not know about the magazine. Let’s look at that.

First of all, there was an amazing exchange in the committee between Senator Biden and John Ashcroft. Senator Biden gave John Ashcroft the opportunity to denounce this magazine. He said: What do you think of it now that you know what they do, what they stand for, the T-shirt, and the rest? John Ashcroft basically did not answer him. Senator Biden was taken aback because he had the opportunity to say: This is a racist magazine; I’ll never talk to them. He did not say it. He said: I deplore what I have heard. That was his response to Senator Biden.

He had a chance. He said:

On the magazine, frankly, I can’t say that I knew very much at all. . . . I’ve given magazine interviews to lots of people. . . . and I regret that speaking to them is being used to imply that I agree with their views.

If you go back to what he said when he spoke to them, he said:

Your magazine also helped set the record straight. You’ve got a heritage of doing that, of defending southern patriots. . . .
So how does he say he never heard of the magazine when you look at his quote and he knows of the magazine, because he says:

Your magazine also helped set the record straight, You've got a heritage of doing that, of defending southern patriots... So how can he say he never heard of the magazine when he says he is going to uphold settled law, I am sure he said that when he was the attorney general of Missouri.

And it goes on. It does not ring true. He had a chance in simple language to say: I will never talk to them again. He did not do it.

We could look at Bob Jones University. I will not go into the details of that, but we have to believe that he knew about the racist policies when he accepted their degree because those policies were the subject of a huge Supreme Court case that was decided when he was attorney general of Missouri.

The case was Bob Jones v. the United States. It was on the front page of the major newspapers when it was decided. In that case, the Supreme Court reversed the university's tax exempt status because of the racist policy that John Ashcroft said he did not know about. But he was an attorney general at the time that decision came down.

Again, I think he could have said more things to distance himself from the university's policies.

These are the things that say to me, out of the 280 million Americans in our country, there has to be someone who is better suited for this job.

We do not have a woman's right to choose. Regardless of your feelings on it—I happen to be of a mind that the Government has no business telling a woman about her reproductive health care in the beginning of a pregnancy, which is Roe v. Wade; that is the law of the land—I would hope we could come together when it comes to preventing unwanted pregnancies by contraception. That seems to be an area of common ground where both sides could come together. Because if you do not get pregnant, if you do not want a child, you do not have to have an abortion. It works. It will lower the number of abortions.

But when John Ashcroft was attorney general, he sued nurses who were giving contraception to women. Let me repeat that. He went against settled law in Missouri when he was attorney general. He tried to stop nurses, through the courts, from handing out contraception. It was settled law that those nurses did do it, but John Ashcroft argued that Missouri law did not allow for it.

The Missouri Supreme Court ruled against John Ashcroft. It strongly pointed out his interpretation was out of step with settled law. This is what the Missouri Supreme Court had to say:

We believe the acts of the nurses [providing contraceptives, breast and pelvic exams] are precisely the types of acts the legislature contemplated.

The Court believes that it is significant that while at least forty states have modernized their nursing practice laws during the past fifteen years, neither counsel nor the Court have discovered any case challenging nurses' authority to act as the nurses herein acted.

In other words, in 40 States, not one other attorney general ever sued nurses and tried to stop them from providing these services to women. On this charge, John Ashcroft was alone.

So when John Ashcroft says he is going to uphold settled law, I am sure he said that when he was the attorney general of Missouri.

Then, if we look at other issues concerning women, we need the National Organization for Women. When he was an attorney general in the 1980s, he sued NOW to stop their campaign to win ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment. Now, maybe he does not agree with the Equal Rights Amendment, he does not want women to be equal through the Equal Rights Amendment. Maybe he does not believe it is necessary, for whatever reason. But to sue a woman's organization for 3 years—losing at every step but never giving up— Then the U.S. Supreme Court after the Circuit Court of Appeals, and they all rejected his arguments—it seems to me, that was also settled law in a case from 1961, we have to question: What does he mean when he says he will accept settled law?

Voluntary desegregation: Others have spoken about this. How do you fight a voluntary desegregation plan that everyone came together and said was a good way to help our kids? Well, he figured out how to do it. And I will tell you, his rhetoric was very strong. He called the voluntary plan an "outrage against human decency" and an "outrage against the children of this State."

The conservative Economist magazine described Ashcroft this way—and it turned out he and his opponent were both arguing:

The campaign quickly degenerated into a context over the supposed to the plan for voluntary racial desegregation.

The court roundly criticized then-Attorney General Ashcroft. They said:

The court can only draw one conclusion . . . the state has, as a matter of deliberate policy, decided to defy the authority of this court.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1982, Ashcroft was "making himself a familiar advocate before the Supreme Court, most often as the antagonist of civil rights interests."

So here you have a nominee, who is supposed to firmly uphold the civil rights laws, being called an antagonist of civil rights interests in an article in 1982.

This was an election where many African American voters believed they were disenfranchised. They are looking at this Senate and thinking they can't do it. And they see you walk past your neighbor, if your neighbor is lying on the street, they know something is not right.

When I talk to people and see people such as Ronnie White—a beautiful family man, qualified, the American dream personified—humiliated on the Senate floor, I cannot look away from that. When I see Margaret Morrow hanging on her, I have to look at that. When I see James Hormel, a distinguished man, humiliated, hurt, turned down for an Ambassadorship, because he happened to be a gay man, I cannot look away from that. And when I see Bill Lann Lee, whose father and mother sweated in a laundry so that he could get the American dream—when I see him hurt and humiliated—I cannot look away from that.

Maybe my colleagues can, and they see other things that I do not see. I respect them so much. And I respect their right to feel strongly, just as I do on the other side of this issue. But I have taken this time because I feel so deeply about this.

The Attorney General is the Nation's guardian of civil rights, of human rights, of women's rights, of the environment, of sensible laws. He or she must be moderate to bring the country together. What did John Ashcroft say about moderates? He said: "There are two things you find in the middle of the road: A toad and a dead skunk, and I don't want to be either."

Mr. President, I have looked into the heart of John Ashcroft. I do not think he is the right person for this job.
I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, another topic that keeps being brought up again and again is Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to Judge Ronnie White. I am concerned that some of my colleagues want to denigrate Senator Ashcroft for his involvement in the nomination of Judge Ronnie White. It has been said that Senator Ashcroft distorted Judge White’s record and wrongly painted him as pro-criminal and anti-law enforcement.

But there were many reasons to vote against confirmation for Judge White. In fact, every Republican in the Senate did so. I have reviewed Judge White’s record and several of his dissenting opinions in death penalty cases, and I can understand Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to Judge White’s nomination to the federal bench.

For instance in the Johnson case, the defendant was convicted on four counts of first-degree murder for killing three sheriff’s officers and the wife of the sheriff. Johnson was sentenced to death on all counts. On appeal, the Missouri Supreme Court upheld the decision, but Judge White dissented arguing for a new trial based on ineffective assistance of counsel. Judge White thought that Johnson deserved further opportunity to present a defense based on post-traumatic stress disorder. But the majority showed that there was no credible evidence that Johnson suffered from this disorder. Rather, it was clear that defense counsel had fabricated a story that was quickly disproved at trial. For instance, defense counsel stated that Johnson had placed a perimeter of cans and strings and had flattened the tires of his car. At trial, testimony revealed that police officers had taken these actions, not the defendant.

Further, Congressman KENNETH HOLSTHOF, the prosecutor in the Johnson case, had called Senator Ashcroft as a witness to hear his side of the story. Johnson was between a rock and a hard place as to how to deal and come up from humble beginnings. He has accomplished a great deal and come up from humble beginnings. He has succeeded in many ways.

I consider Judge White to be a decent man with an impressive personal background. He has accomplished a great deal and come up from humble beginnings. But his record of dissenting in capital punishment cases was sufficiently troubling to cause Senator Ashcroft and others to oppose the nomination.

Many of my colleagues have impugned Senator Ashcroft’s motives for voting against Judge White. But Judge White’s nomination was strongly opposed by many of Senator Ashcroft’s constituents and also by major law enforcement groups, including the National Sheriffs’ Association and the Missouri Federation of Police Chiefs.

Sheriff Kenny Jones, whose wife and colleagues were killed by Johnson, testified, “I opposed Judge White’s nomination to the federal bench, as I asked Senator Ashcroft to join me because of Judge White’s opinion on a death penalty case... in my opinion, Judge White’s position on the death penalty case has given a second chance at freedom. I cannot understand his reasoning. I know that the four people killed were not given a second chance.”

Finally, many of my colleagues have alleged that Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to Judge White was underhanded and done with stealth. Well, Senator Ashcroft voted against Judge White’s nomination in committee. He expressed his disapproval at that time. If he had disapproval, he had had an opportunity in committee without allowing it to proceed to the floor he would have been criticized for delay.

Indeed, Senator BOXER pled guilty during a debate on several other judges including Ronnie White, I beg of you, in the name of fairness and justice and all those that are good in our country, give people a chance. If you do not think they are good, you have a problem with something they said or did, bring it down to the floor. We can debate it. But please do not hold up these nominees. It is wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong. You are wrong.

Thus, Senator Ashcroft was between a rock and a hard place as to how to raise his legitimate concerns about Judge White.

Senator Ashcroft is a man of tremendous integrity, one of the most qualified nominees for Attorney General that we have ever seen. His opposition to Judge White was principled and in keeping with the proper exercise of the advice and consent of the Senate. I regret that we have needed to revisit this issue at such great length.

Mr. KYL addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALARD). The Senator from Arizona. Mr. KYL. I ask unanimous consent to have an op-ed piece, which responds to one of the points that Senator BOXER was raising, be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOHN ASHCROFT, AMERICAN PARTISAN
(By Thomas G. West)

Frustrated by the absence of any real dirt on Senator John Ashcroft, his ideological enemies have launched into dishonesty and distortion. He is being attacked as a racist and a defender of slavery. A quotation from his 1986 interview with “Southern Partisan” magazine has been denounced with particular venom.

Those circulating that quotation suggest Ashcroft was praising the confederate cause, including slavery. But in context he was praising the anti-slavery principles of America’s Founding Fathers.

I should know, because I have read those principles. Here is how the full quotation reads in the original: “Ashcroft: Revisionism is a threat to the respect that Americans have for their freedoms and the liberty that was at the core of those who founded this country, and when we see George Washington, the founder of our country, called a man a total revisionist, a diatribe against the values of America. Have you read Thomas Jefferson’s ‘Declaration of Independence?’”

Interviewer: I’ve met Professor West, and I read one of his earlier books, but not that one.

Ashcroft: I wish I had another copy; I’d send it to you. I gave it away to a newspaper editor. West virtually disassembles all of those opinions as part of Judge White’s nomination to the floor he would have been criticized for delay.

“In the story of Southern Partisan, Ashcroft alludes to the ideology of proslavery, which he is utterly re-

‘Southern Partisan’ has been described, correctly, as a magazine that defends the Confederacy. The magazine has been denounced with particular venom. The Senator from Arizona.

Because Clinton and other liberals misunderstood his meaning that “all men are created equal.” My “Vindicating the Founders” shows that this dedication led directly to the abolition of slavery in the northern states, and to the 1862 Emancipation Proclamation, which freed slaves north of the Ohio River. These states became the American heartland that later, following Lincoln’s lead, stood up for the founding principles, won the Civil War, and abolished slavery throughout the country.

Contrary to opponents of his nomination, tan as a whole thing that Ashcroft is an admirer of the “liberty that was at the core” of the American founding. He is therefore likely to be especially respectful toward the original meaning of the Constitution, which was designed to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

The deeper point that Ashcroft was pointing to is this: Liberals today generally agree with Bill Clinton, who said in a 1997 speech that Thomas Jefferson meant that “you had to be white, you had to be male, and... you had to own property.” Because Clinton and other liberals misunder-
In the incoming Bush administration, with Ashcroft as Attorney General, perhaps America has a chance to go back to the genuine principles of the Founders, without trying to go 'up with new and higher definitions' of them, as has been the habit of the past eight years.

Ashcroft has also been unjustly vilified for a speech at Bob Jones University in his words, "We have no king but Jesus," have been denounced as narrow and bigoted—as if the Constitution had some sort of religious test that excludes serious Christians from public office. Yet in that speech, as in the "Southern Partisan" interview, Ashcroft singled out for his highest praise the Founders' ideal rights for all, the most compelling reason. This view of governmental racial classifications comport with the development of constitutional protections for civil liberties. Senator Ashcroft is solidly with the Supreme Court on this issue.

Some of my colleagues and certain special interest groups have especially questioned Senator Ashcroft's ability to support and defend civil liberties because he opposed the nomination of Bill Lann Lee to be Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights. Well, all but one Republican in the Judiciary Committee opposed this nominee. Let me say that I have the highest personal regard for Mr. Lee and the difficult circumstance in which he has come to this country, worked hard, and realized the American dream.

Despite this high personal regard, I was deeply concerned about Mr. Lee's nomination because much of his career has been spent constitutionally suspect race-conscious public policies that ultimately sort and divide citizens by race. At the time of his hearings, it was clear that he would have us continue down the road of racial stereotyping that all Americans have seen principally through the looking glass of race. As the Supreme Court has held, that would be unconstitutional.

Indeed, it is now clear that we were right to oppose the nomination of Mr. Lee. Over the Senate's objections, President Clinton made a recess appointment of Mr. Lee to head the Civil Rights Division. His record has been one of pursuing constitutionally suspect race-conscious policies at great cost to civil liberties.

Under Mr. Lee's leadership, the Civil Rights Division has waged a war against testing standards in public sector employment based on what he considered to be the "adverse impact" of such testing. He has repeatedly sought to replace objective hiring processes with devices designed to boost minorities.

In 1998, a federal judge, a Carter appointee, assessed an unprecedented $1.8 million attorney fee award against the Civil Rights Division for a lawsuit against the city of Torrance, California. The Judge found the suit "frivolous, unreasonable and without foundation." Despite this embarrassment, the Division continues to argue that using test results and hiring those who score best on the test is, in the words of one civil rights division deputy, "the worst possible way to select applicants.

It is true that Senator Ashcroft is skeptical about government programs that categorize people by race. Many of these programs would be unconstitutional. Our record is shown in the Court of admissibility in Adarand v. Pena. That decision stated that all governmental racial classifications should be subject to strict scrutiny, that is such classifications must be narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest. The Supreme Court made clear that there was no such thing as a "beign" racial classification, and that the government may treat people differently for only the most compelling reason. This view of governmental racial classifications comports with the development of constitutional protections for civil liberties. Senator Ashcroft is solidly with the Supreme Court on this issue.

At the time of Mr. Lee's nomination I made a lengthy speech on this floor. I regret that Mr. Lee's tenure has shown that my concerns were not unfounded. Mr. Lee's actions show that he was unable to distinguish the substantive role of being a law enforcement for all citizens from being a private activist litigant charged with pushing the limits of the law.

Senator Ashcroft's principled opposition to Mr. Lee has been vindicated over time. Not only was Mr. Lee an activist, but he continued to pursue his activist agenda once in a position of trust for all Americans. The signs that he would do this were clear at his hearing. In his speech, in which he made the rule in Adarand and could not distinguish cases that he would bring as Assistant Attorney General from those he brought in the NAACP Legal Defense Fund.

By contrast, Senator Ashcroft has repeatedly distinguished his role as a legislator from that of the Attorney General. He understands that his political advocacy gets checked at the door of the Department of Justice. Senator Ashcroft has repeatedly stated that he would enforce the law as it exists to protect the civil liberties of all Americans. He is committed to defending the constitutional rights of all individuals and has testified that he will make the enforcement of civil rights one of his topmost priorities. As Senator Ashcroft stated, "My highest priority is to see that the Department of Justice lives up to its heritage of enforcing the rule of law, and in particular, guarding rights for the unenfranchised of all Americans.

One of my highest priorities at the Department will be to target the unconstitutional practice of racial profiling.

Senator Ashcroft will be a faithful guardian of our civil liberties, and it is for this reason and many others that I wholeheartedly support his nomination to be Attorney General.

Mr. President, some claim that Senator Ashcroft will not uphold the law with regard to abortion. Mr. Lee's actions show that he was unable to distinguish the substantive role of being a law enforcement for all citizens from being a private activist litigant charged with pushing the limits of the law.

While Senator Ashcroft's critics have spared nothing in their attempts to distort his record and create fear, Senator Ashcroft's record over 25 years as a public servant, and his testimony before the Judiciary Committee during his confirmation hearing, demonstrate his lifelong commitment to the rule of law and his respect for the uniquely different roles of a legislator and a law enforcer. Senator Ashcroft has proven that he can objectively interpret and enforce the law—even where the law may diverge from his personal views on policy. His record and character demonstrate that he can be, as he has pledged, “law oriented and not results oriented.”

Contrary to the fear-mongering of his critics, Senator Ashcroft will enforce the law protecting a woman’s right to an abortion. He was very straightforward in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee when he stated that, in his view, Roe versus Wade is settled law and that the Supreme Court’s decisions upholding Roe “have been multiple, they have been recent and they have been emphatic.” He said he would enforce the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court.

When asked whether he would seek to change the Supreme Court’s interpretation of the law, Senator Ashcroft stated that “it is not the agenda of the President-elect to seek an opportunity to overturn Roe. And as his Attorney General, I don’t think it could be my agenda to seek an opportunity to overturn Roe.” He also stated that as Attorney General, it wouldn’t be his job to “try and alter the position of the administration.”

Senator Ashcroft clearly recognized the importance of not devaluing “the currency” of the Solicitor General’s Office by taking his testimony to the Supreme Court on a basis the Court has already stated it does not want to entertain. He noted that in this way, “accepting Roe and Casey as settled law is important, not just to this arena, but important in terms of the credibility of the Department.”

He said he would give advice based upon sound legal analysis, not ideology or personal beliefs. He made a commitment “if the law provides something contrary to my personal view of the legal belief, I would provide them with that same best judgment of the law.”

From Senator Ashcroft, those are not just words. Throughout his career, he has demonstrated that he can do just that.

For example, as Missouri Attorney General, Senator Ashcroft did not let his personal opinion on abortion cloud his legal analysis. He protected the confidentiality of abortion records maintained by the Missouri Department of Health—even when they were requested by pro-life groups.

Likewise, when asked to determine whether a death certificate was required for all abortions, regardless of the age of the fetus, Attorney General Ashcroft defended his position that life begins at conception—issued an opinion that Missouri law did not require any type of certificate if the fetus was 20 weeks old or less. His legal analysis was fair and objective and unaffected by what his policy views may have been.

There has also been, what I consider, unfounded skepticism over whether Senator Ashcroft would vigorously enforce clinic access and antiviolence statutes. Being pro-life is not inconsistent with opposing violence at clinics. The primary focus of the opposition has been the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act of “FACE”. Senator Ashcroft supports the FACE law, and always has.

Senator Ashcroft testified specifically on how he would enforce FACE and other clinic access and antiviolence laws. He stated clearly that he was “vigorously”, that he would investigate allegations “thoroughly” and that he would devote resources to these cases on a “priority basis.”

He further stated that he would maintain the appropriate task forces which have been created to facilitate enforcement of clinic access and antiviolence statutes.

These statements are totally consistent with Senator Ashcroft’s long-standing support of the sanctioning of abortions committed on personal grounds and his belief that the first amendment does not give anyone the right to “violate the person, safety, and security” of another.

Senator Ashcroft has always spoken out against clinic violence and other forms of domestic terrorism. He has written to constituents about his strong opposition to violence and his belief that, regardless of his personal views on abortion, people should be free to enter abortion clinics safely. He voted for Senator SCHUMER’s amendment to the bankruptcy bill that made debts incurred as a result of abortion clinic violence non-dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Senator Ashcroft has always condemned criminal violence at abortion clinics—or anywhere for that matter—and believes people who commit these acts of violence and intimidation should be punished to the fullest extent of the law. As Attorney General he’ll do just that.

Access to contraceptives is another area that I think Senator Ashcroft has been unfairly criticized. His critics make dire predictions about the future that are totally unsupported by Senator Ashcroft’s testimony. Senator Ashcroft could not have testified any more clearly on the issue of contraception. He stated that: “I think individuals who want to use contraceptives should have [and] I think that right is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.”

He also testified that he would defend current laws should they be attacked. What more can he say? Is there anything a pro-life nominee could say to please the pro-abortion interest groups?

Senator Ashcroft’s opponents take great pains to say that they do not oppose him on ideological grounds. Well you could have fooled me. Their argument is that someone who has been active in advocating a particular policy position cannot set that aside and enforce the law fairly. I don’t believe they can be serious. Does this mean that a person of character and integrity who had been active in the pro-choice movement could never be Attorney General? And what about the death penalty? Could we have no future Attorney General, regardless of how honorable and well-qualified they are? Could we have no future death penalty? Of course not. In fact, Republicans voted to confirm Janet Reno, despite her personal opposition to the death penalty, because she said she could still enforce the law even though she disagreed with it.

If this is not about ideology, then we should get to the business of confirming Senator Ashcroft. He has given strong and specific assurances to the Senate on abortion and other questions. These assurances are backed up by his proven record as Missouri attorney general and Governor. Most importantly, they are backed up by Senator Ashcroft’s personal integrity and decency—characteristics he holds as is known personally by almost every Member of this body.

Members know John Ashcroft is a man of his word—it’s time that they act on it and confirm him as Attorney General.

Mr. President, some have criticized Senator Ashcroft’s handling of voter registration in Missouri. Some of my colleagues have charged that as Governor, John Ashcroft essentially blocked two bills in the 1995 legislative session to give the city of St. Louis Board of Election Commissioners to deputize private voter registration volunteers. These bills were opposed by both Democrats and Republicans in St. Louis. Opposition included the bipartisan St. Louis County Board of Election Commissioners, the St. Louis Board of Aldermen President Tom Villa, and St. Louis circuit attorney George Peach. Tom Villa was a noted Democratic leader, and St. Louis circuit attorney George Peach was a Democrat who was the prosecutor in the St. Louis area. All of these people opposed the legislative plan. The recommendations of these officials was one of the reasons that John Ashcroft vetoed the bills.

It was insinuated during the hearings that these actions were taken out of some kind of partisan or racial motivation, because the city of St. Louis is predominantly black and Democratic.

But his implication is seriously discredited by the history of voter registration in St. Louis and earlier Federal court cases.

The city board has a long history of refusing to deputize private voter registration deputies, long before John Ashcroft appointed anyone to that board. Indeed, in 1981 a lawsuit was filed against the members of the St. Louis board concerning the failure to deputize voter registration deputies. The Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri explicitly rejected charges of racial animus. The court found that the board properly refused to deputize volunteers to prevent fraud and ensure impartiality and administrative efficiency. Moreover, these conclusions were sustained by the eighth circuit, in an opinion by Judge McMillan, a prominent African-American jurist.

Some have also claimed that then-Governor Ashcroft refused to appoint a diverse group of commissioners to the election board. This is simply untrue. Mr. Jerry Hunter, the former labor secretary of Missouri, testified that Senator Ashcroft worked hard to increase black representation on the St. Louis City Election Board, but his efforts were stalled by State senators.

Mr. Hunter testified that, “Governor Ashcroft’s first black nominee to the St. Louis City Election Board was rejected by the black State senator, because that person did not come out of his organization.” When then-Governor Ashcroft came up with a second black attorney, he was also rejected by two black State senators. As Mr. Hunter stated, “[f]rom the beginning, any efforts to make changes in the St. Louis City Election Board were forestalled because the state senators wanted to maintain their own organization.” Apparently for these State senators the political spoils system was more important than the voters of St. Louis.

Finally, my colleagues imply that these voter registration issues will make Senator Ashcroft less able to deal with allegations of voting improprieties resulting from the Florida vote in the Presidential election. Yet Senator Ashcroft has repeatedly testified, “I will investigate any alleged voting rights violation that has credible evidence...I have no reason not to go forward, and would not refuse to go forward for any reason other than a conclusion that there wasn’t credible evidence to pursue the case.”

Mr. President, a number of my colleagues have continued to express concerns about Senator Ashcroft’s actions with regard to conducting a telephone interview with the magazine called Southern Partisan. Their concern is what message that interview might have sent to the country. It is clear, however, that Senator Ashcroft has forthrightly and forcefully condemned racism and discrimination, and he has left no doubt about the fact that he does not know very much about it. He confessed that he should have done more research about it before talking to them. And he said that he did not intend his telephone interview—or any other interview he has participated in—and he denied his participation in any unsavory endorsement of the editorial positions of those publications. John Ashcroft went even further than that. He said, “I condemn those things which are condemnable” about Southern Partisan magazine. This was a strong statement against any unacceptable ideas discussed in that publication. And it was the strongest statement possible from someone who did not personally know the facts.

Despite Senator Ashcroft’s contriteness and strong words, some Senators and interest groups have demanded that Senator Ashcroft go out on a limb and add his derision based upon an acceptance at face value of all the negative allegations in the magazine. In my opinion, Mr. President, this led to one of the most profound moments of the confirmation hearings. A member of the committee pushed Senator Ashcroft to label the Southern Partisan magazine “artistic racism”—even after Senator Ashcroft explained that he did not know whether that was true. The profound part was John Ashcroft’s response. He said, “I know they’ve been accused of being racist. I have to say this, Senator: I would rather be falsely accused of being racist than not falsely accuse someone else of being a racist.” This exchange tells volumes about Senator Ashcroft’s moral character, deep sense of fairness, and his fitness for the office of Attorney General. It would have been a lot easier for him just to say, “Yes, I agree with anyone who uses that term about someone else.” Doing so would have saved him from further bashing by the committee and the press. It would have been politically expedient.

Discrimination is wrong. Slavery was something as plain as I can make it. My views on that matter. I reject racism and discrimination, and he has forthrightly and forcefully condemned them. He has sent to the country. It is clear, however, that Senator Ashcroft has not been satisfied with John Ashcroft’s answers what they really want. What do his accusers think justice is? I surely hope that no one in this body would heap disdain onto something he didn’t subscribe to. And I reject them.” These are straightforward words from an honest man. I look forward to having such a man running our Department of Justice.

Mr. President, I heard one of my colleagues today criticize Senator Ashcroft’s view of the second amendment. While I disagree with these vague criticisms, I do believe that one of the biggest challenges that Senator Ashcroft will face as Attorney General is to face the nation’s epidemic of gun crimes. And this is where there is little consensus in Congress regarding new gun control legislation, there is widespread consensus that current gun laws can and should be prosecuted more vigorously.

While the Clinton administration has increased the regulation of licensed gun dealers, it has not increased the prosecution of Federal gun crimes in a like manner. For example:

- Between 1992 and 1998, prosecutions of defendants who use a firearm in the commission of a felony dropped nearly 50 percent, from 7,045 to approximately 3,800.

- It is a Federal crime to possess a firearm on school grounds, but the Clinton Justice Department prosecuted only eight cases under this law in 1998, even though more than 6,000 students brought guns to school.

- The Clinton Justice Department prosecuted only five cases in 1997.

- It is a Federal crime to transfer a firearm to a juvenile, but the Clinton Justice Department prosecuted only six cases under this law in 1998 and only five in 1997.

- It is a Federal crime to transfer or possess a semiautomatic assault weapon, but the Clinton Justice Department prosecuted only four cases under this law in 1998 and only four in 1997.

Mr. President, I heard one of my colleagues today criticize Senator Ashcroft’s view on the second amendment. While I disagree with these vague criticisms, I do believe that one of the biggest challenges that Senator Ashcroft will face as Attorney General is to face the nation’s epidemic of gun crimes. And this is where there is little consensus in Congress regarding new gun control legislation, there is widespread consensus that current gun laws can and should be prosecuted more vigorously.

As his testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee made clear, Senator Ashcroft will reverse this trend and make gun prosecutions a priority. In the Senate, John Ashcroft was one of the leaders in fighting gun crimes. For example, in response to the decline in gun prosecutions by the Justice Department, Senator Ashcroft sponsored legislation to authorize $50 million to hire additional Federal prosecutors and agents to increase the Federal prosecution of criminals who use guns.

In addition, Senator Ashcroft authored legislation to prohibit juveniles from possessing assault weapons and has repeatedly said that. The Senate overwhelmingly passed the Ashcroft juvenile assault weapons ban in May of 1999.
Senator Ashcroft voted for legislation that prohibits any person convicted of even misdemeanor acts of domestic violence from possessing a firearm, and he voted for legislation to extend the Brady Act to prohibit persons who commit violent crimes as juveniles from possessing firearms.

In order to close the so-called “gun show loophole,” Senator Ashcroft voted for legislation, which I authored, to require mandatory instant background checks for all firearm purchases at gun shows.

Senator Ashcroft sponsored legislation to require a 5-year mandatory minimum prison sentence for Federal gun crimes and for legislation to encourage schools to expel students who bring guns to school.

Senator Ashcroft voted for the Gun-Free Schools Zone Act that prohibits the possession of a firearm in a school zone, and he voted for legislation to require gun dealers to offer child safety locks and other gun safety devices for sale.

As a former state attorney general and president of the National Association of Attorneys General, Senator Ashcroft knows that criminal laws are useless if not enforced. Given his proven commitment to fighting gun violence, there can be little doubt that Attorney General Ashcroft will make gun prosecutions a priority for the Justice Department.

Mr. President, I would like to address one more issue concerning Senator Ashcroft’s position on gun enforcement. Some special-interest groups have made the ridiculous assertion that an Ashcroft Justice Department would not defend the constitutionality of certain gun laws. As Senator Ashcroft noted at his hearing, there is a longstanding policy for the Solicitor General’s office to defend Federal statutes in court if there is a reasonable basis for doing so. In other words, the Justice Department will defend Federal statutes even if that particular administration does not agree with the statute as a matter of policy. This longstanding policy applies to all Federal statutes, except those which infringe on the prerogatives of the President. This longstanding policy promotes the integrity and the consistent administration of Federal law.

At his confirmation hearing, in response to Senator Kennedy, Senator Ashcroft pledged to “vigorously defend” the constitutionality of the ban on possession of firearms by persons convicted of domestic violence. In fact, Senator Ashcroft voted for the legislation that prohibited persons convicted of domestic violence from possessing firearms. And in response both to Senators Feinstein and Kennedy, Senator Ashcroft pledged to maintain the Justice Department’s position of defending the constitutionality of the assault weapons ban. Short of that, Senator Ashcroft made clear that the Justice Department would defend and enforce Federal gun laws whether or not he agreed with such laws as a matter of policy.

Senator Ashcroft’s record as Missouri attorney general supports his pledge to defend and enforce gun laws regardless of his personal beliefs. For example, as Attorney General of Missouri, John Ashcroft issued an opinion which interpreted state law to prohibit prosecuting attorneys from carrying concealed weapons, even though some prosecuting attorneys conducted their own investigations and faced dangerous situations. A classic example of John Ashcroft upholding the law even when he did not agree with it.

In short, John Ashcroft is a man of integrity and great ability. With John Ashcroft as Attorney General, I am confident that the Justice Department will enforce Federal gun laws with unprecedented zeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I rise today, as many of my colleagues have, in support of my friend and our friend, Senator John Ashcroft, to be Attorney General of the United States.

It is always interesting, as the distinguished Senator from California has indicated, to consider colleagues’ views in a situation such as this. And I must say that while I respect the Senator’s views and her comments, I guess what I will describe as allegations, I do have a different view. This does not add up to the John Ashcroft I know as a neighbor.

We have heard the debate. It has been considerable. We have heard the charge that Senator Ashcroft is somehow not fit to serve as Attorney General. But that really does not square with the John Ashcroft I know.

We in Kansas have watched our neighbor and observed his record for a great number of years. We think we know this man. Again, I don’t think the Senator is aware of the views that I have. I also think that Senator Ashcroft is aware of the views that I have.

As Missouri attorney general, John Ashcroft strictly enforced laws that differed from his own beliefs. I repeat that. That seems to be the crucial issue here. He strictly enforced laws that actually differed from his own beliefs, including firearms—we have heard a lot of talk about firearms—whether prosecuting lawyers could actually carry concealed weapons; here is one on abortion and that dealt with the confidentiality of hospital records on numbers of abortions that were performed; whether a death certificate was legally required for fetuses under 20 weeks; church and state; the availability of funds for private and religious schools, and the distribution of religious materials in public schools; quite a few environmental regulations; and also in regard to affirmative action.

If Senator Ashcroft could not honestly enforce the law, wouldn’t somebody have documented such an instance by now in relation to these laws he did enforce that involved strong beliefs with which he did not agree? I don’t think they have, despite the rhetoric.

I will talk a little bit about experience. John Ashcroft, regardless of your views on the issues or his ideology or racial questions, is the most experienced Attorney General nominee in American history. Boy, that is a strong statement, but consider the facts. Of the 67 persons who have served in that office since the founding of the Republic, only one, John Ashcroft, has served as State attorney general—that is two terms—and Governor of his State—two terms—and as a U.S. Senator with service on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

As Missouri AG, John Ashcroft was elected the president of the National Association of Attorneys General. As Missouri Governor, he was elected chairman of the National Governors’ Association. If John Ashcroft’s execution of these earlier public trusts was as far “out of the mainstream” as his critics now claim, wouldn’t his fellow State attorneys general or Governors, including Democrats, have noticed and said something?

Has he not universally admired his devotion to his faith. Mr. BYRD, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, spoke to that earlier today and made some excellent comments. Does that not imply he is then a man of conscience, that he will do what he says he will do?

He will enforce the law.

Perhaps the most serious of the charges against the Senator, our former colleague, is that he is somehow—and I don’t like to use this term, but it has been used—a racist, because of his opposition to Justice Ronnie White. I do not think, in knowing the man and in looking at the record very carefully, there is any evidence of racial bias in Senator Ashcroft’s record.

Among other initiatives—and this has been said before on the floor, and it deserves repeating—this is a man who signed Missouri’s first hate crimes statute into law. He signed into law, during his tenure on the White confirmation and that every Republican Senator then voted no. Justice White, during his tenure on the Missouri Supreme Court, was notable for his anti-death-penalty position, and this has not been lost on the Missouri NAACP, which led to strong bipartisan opposition from the law enforcement community to the white Supreme Court. In my personal view, there were good reasons that Senator Ashcroft opposed the White confirmation and that every Republican Senator then voted no. Justice White, during his tenure on the Missouri Supreme Court, was notable for his anti-death-penalty position, and this has not been lost on the Missouri NAACP, which led to strong bipartisan opposition from the law enforcement community to his lifetime appointment to the Federal bench.
Let me point this out. More than 70 percent of all elected officials in Missouri, including sheriffs, are Democrats; and 77 of the 114 Missouri sheriffs, including many Democrats, were on record in unprecedented opposition to Justice White’s confirmation. The Missouri Federation of Police Chiefs and the National Sheriffs Association were also against that confirmation. I voted no. I did not know at the time when I cast that vote of Justice White’s African American status. I didn’t know that. As a matter of fact, in talking with fellow Republicans, many of us did not know that. John Ashcroft never mentioned that. That wasn’t the reason we opposed him.

Senator Ashcroft’s opponents accuse him of being out of the mainstream and in support of private ownership of firearms. They say his support of firearms as a guard against government tyranny is “talk of a madman.” I think we ought to look at the record.

As Attorney General and Governor, John Ashcroft conscientiously enforced both State and Federal gun laws, even those with which he disagreed. That again is the crucial issue. His record does contrast sharply with the Clinton Justice Department’s failure to enforce existing Federal gun laws, even while calling for new ones.

The second amendment to the U.S. Constitution was adopted to preserve a traditional right of the people as a guard against government encroachment on the freedom of the individual. If John Ashcroft is “a madman” or “out of the mainstream,” so were James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson, Noah Webster, Abraham Lincoln, Hubert Humphrey, and other notable Americans who held that same view.

Despite the harsh words being hurled in Washington about this nomination, many in our Nation’s heartland, in Kansas and Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, and, have seen him face to face and up close and personal as neighbors. We know he is an outstanding public servant and will make an outstanding Attorney General.

Listen to what the Atlanta Journal and Constitution has to say about this nomination:

Ashcroft is certainly conservative, and he is certainly religious. But 88 percent of his fellow citizens report that religion is important in their lives. It is a fact that religion has barely varied over the past 20 years. Seventy percent or more believe the American mainstream which was invoked so frequently at his hearings will be well served and satisfied with the job that he will do.

I certainty believe that the American mainstream will be well served with Senator Ashcroft’s confirmation by the Senate. I intend to vote for him. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

One other thing: John Ashcroft and I spent a little time together—3 days—up in the wilds of Alaska. We were up there at the invitation of Senator Ted Stevens. There is a fishing contest up there. The Presiding Officer is very skilled, by the way, in taking part in that whole fishing contest. The proceeds are used to improve the habitat on the Kenai River.

We had a great deal to say to each other, both Senator Ashcroft and myself, when we were fishing in that kind of circumstance. We didn’t talk about anything that involved racism, or Bob Jones University, or selected quotes, or whatever; we talked as individuals and as friends. I did not hear a bitter or prejudicial word. We talked about what things mean in life basically. We talked of family, of the Lord that whole fishing contest. The proceeds are used to improve the habitat on the Kenai River.

I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I gather that the order is that Senator Dodd will speak and then Senator Cochran.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no order at this point.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order be as follows: That following Senator Dodd, Senator Cochran speak, and that I be permitted to speak following Senator Cochran.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, first of all, at the outset I commend my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee, the chairmanship of the committee, Senator Hatch, and Senator Leahy, the ranking Democrat, and the respective members of the committee for the manner in which they conducted the confirmation hearing for the position of Attorney General of the United States and for the manner in which they treated John Ashcroft, President Bush’s nominee for this position.

It is a difficult job, particularly when the nomination is controversial. I reached the members of the Judiciary Committee, both Republicans and Democrats, conducted themselves with great dignity, and I commend them for it.

Mr. President, I am going to vote to confirm John Ashcroft as U.S. Attorney General. I would like to take a few minutes of the Senate’s time to explain my reasons.

Let me say at the outset that I hope Mr. Ashcroft will listen to what I have to say here this afternoon. My comments are delivered primarily for the benefit of my colleagues and my constituents. But they are also directed to John Ashcroft.

It is important that John Ashcroft understand that my support of his nomination is not unqualified. It is given, rather, only upon extensive reflection and despite concerns about what kind of Attorney General he will make.

I have listened attentively to the comments of my colleagues both in support of and in opposition to this nomination. I respect immensely their views. I have considered the practices and precedents of the Senate in referring to presidential cabinet appointments. And I have reflected upon my own practices over the past two decades in the Senate in considering such appointments. During that time, I have supported an overwhelming number of Cabinet nominees. But I have, on the rarest occasions, opposed Cabinet nominees supported by the majority of members of the Senate and by a majority of my own party. It also bears mentioning that I have supported nominees opposed by most members of my party and, in one instance, also opposed by a majority of the Senate.

My concerns about this particular nominee can be reduced to three in particular:

First, whether he will uphold and vigorously enforce our laws—especially those with which he personally disagrees.

Second, whether he will treat other people in public life as he wishes to be treated—particularly those with whom he may disagree.

And third, whether he will seek to unify rather than divide our nation on critical issues facing our nation, especially the issue of racial justice.

Let me address these concerns in order.

First, as to John Ashcroft’s disposition to enforce the law. The Attorney General, as we all know, is our nation’s primary law enforcement officer. This is an office of unique importance.

Except perhaps for the president himself, no other individual can or should do more to protect the public’s safety, and to promote the ideal of equal justice that is the North Star in our constellation of laws.

Like many others in public life, John Ashcroft is a man of strong convictions. He should be commended, not faulted, for that fact. But the question that deserves attention to his nomination for this particular office is whether those convictions—on matters such as a woman’s right to choose and gun safety—might well preclude him from enforcing laws on those and similar issues with which he may disagree.

This is a threshold question. If the nation’s top law enforcement officer cannot enforce the law, how can anyone say he should nevertheless assume the office? If the public cannot know with reasonable assurance that their Attorney General will uphold those laws vigorously and free of personal bias, then how can we be confident that respect for the law will not be weakened?

If minority Americans, women, and others cannot rely on the Attorney General to safeguard their liberties, how can others—indeed, all—Americans not worry that their rights might one day be placed at risk, as well?

John Ashcroft has minned no words about his positions on issues like a woman’s right to choose and gun safety. He has advocated positions contrary to current law. That is his record. It is also, I might add, his right—just as any of us has the right to advocate legal change.

But that is far from saying that he cannot faithfully enforce the law. There is more to his record that deserves consideration. This is a man who was elected not once, but five times by a majority of the people of his state, who was elected to the Senate, and who has served as attorney general, governor, and Senator. He has devoted nearly three decades of his life to public service. He has, as far as anyone knows, upheld the public’s trust throughout that time.

If his nomination were to be decided on the basis of experience alone, he would have been among the first, rather than the last, of the President’s Cabinet nominees to be considered by the Senate.

As Attorney General and Governor, the record suggests that he did, in fact, uphold and advocate laws with which he disagreed. He endorsed Democratic proposals to fund new roads and schools. He signed legislation to increase the penalties for crimes motivated by bigotry. He supported additional resources for legal services for the indigent.

During his confirmation hearing, he swore under oath that he would uphold the law “so help me God.” He did so repeatedly and fervently. He swore that he would respect Roe v. Wade and Planned Parenthood v. Casey as the law of the land. He swore to uphold the federal law that prevents violence and intimidation at family planning clinics. He testified that the Brady law and the assault weapons ban are constitutional.

He also testified that mandatory trigger locks, gun licensing and gun registration are all constitutional. And he vowed to hire without regard to sexual preference (although he did not, I should add, pledge to continue Attorney General Reno’s policy of excluding sexual preference from security clearance decisions).

I do not expect that John Ashcroft will change his views as Attorney General. But I do, have every right to expect, based upon his commitment to God Almighty, before the Judiciary Committee that he will keep his word to uphold the laws of the land, even those with which he profoundly disagrees.

Mr. President, I would love to have the complete and total assurance he would lead us to conclude that he would not. Thus, it compels me to give him the benefit of the doubt because he has taken that oath fervently, before God Almighty, and members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

A second concern I have about Senator Ashcroft’s nomination is how he has treated other people. I refer very specifically to his conduct toward Judge Ronnie White, Ambassador James Hormel, and Bill Lann Lee, former head of the Justice Department Civil Rights Division.

Other colleagues have spoken and will speak about these cases in greater detail. Suffice it to say his treatment of their nominations went beyond the bounds of good manners and common decency. Too often, John Ashcroft refused to meet with these people; he failed to give them an opportunity to respond to the allegations, and he distorted, in my view, their records.

In the case of Mr. Hormel, he deemed the wholly private matter of sexual orientation to be a factor “eligible for consideration” in whether he ought to be nominated.

In the case of Judge White, he actively worked for his defeat—without first giving him a chance to respond to misleading statements made against him on the Senate floor.

His treatment of these men was callous and calculated at worst. It is particularly troubling because my own limited experience with Senator Ashcroft was of a quite different nature.

We worked together on only one issue that I recall—ending the embargo on food and medicine to Cuba. In that effort, he took a position that engendered considerable opposition in his own caucus. At all times, I found him reasonable and trustworthy.

But there is nevertheless a record here of going after people in a harsh and unfair manner. I have always been suspicious of people who try to build a political career in part on the bones of their personal adversaries. Attacking motives, using people as political scapegoats, acting with reckless disregard to the reputations of others—these are the kinds of actions that I find contemptible, and that unfortunately have become all too common in public life today.

I hope John Ashcroft will change and turn away from such behavior in the future. I believe that he can. As the saying goes, “There is no sinner without a future, and no saint without a past.” I believe John Ashcroft is a decent human being, and I take him at his word.

If his flaws loom large, it is at least in part because they have been aired and examined in the magnifying light of public life.

And while I will not excuse these flaws—particularly in his treatment of others as a public official—I will not engage in the same form of pay-back politics that seems to have a growing currency in our time. That is not to suggest that those who oppose him will have engaged in such tactics. On the contrary, I can well understand the principled basis of the opposition. That said, I will not do to John Ashcroft what has been done to too many people in recent years—including people like Ronnie White, James Hormel, and Bill Lann Lee. These individuals do not deserve the treatment they received. No one does. Not even John Ashcroft.

My third and final concern is closely related to the first: whether his views on critical domestic issues of our day would preclude him from using his office not just to uphold the law, but to uphold the spirit of freedom and equal justice that permeates every one of our laws.

I find it not a little ironic that our new President, who calls himself a “uniter, not a divider”, nominated for Attorney General a man who through- out his career has plunged so divisively into the most divisive issues of our time: civil rights, equal rights, guns and safety.

On a different level, I am not in the least surprised. The President chose a nominee who reflects his own views on many of these same issues. I did not expect him to nominate a Democrat.

Like nearly all of our colleagues, I have time and again supported Cabinet and other nominees with whom I disagreed on critical issues.

Take them, they have a high degree of tolerance for differences of opinions when such nominations come before us—including on such issues as choice and guns. Indeed, I supported the nomination of Governor Thompson as Secretary of Agriculture and General Services, despite our strong differences on issues related to a woman’s right to choose.

There are certain differences that, I would argue, none of us should tolerate. And in that respect, the issue in John Ashcroft’s public record that concerns me the most is the issue of race.

If I thought John Ashcroft was a racist, I would oppose him as strongly as I possibly could on any other issue I have ever faced in my 25 years of public service. I urge each of our colleagues to do the same. We must not tolerate intolerance. But I do not believe that such a potent word applies to John Ashcroft. And it is lamentable, to say such a potent word applies to John Ashcroft. And it is lamentable, to say such a potent word applies to John Ashcroft. And it is lamentable, to say such a potent word applies to John Ashcroft.

We of all people here in the Senate appreciate that words have meaning. So when someone uses a word such as “racist” to describe actions that, however are not racist, then they reduce the impact of that word at those moments when it is most applicable.

While by no means a path-breaker, as a governor, John Ashcroft appointed more African-American jurists to the bench than any of his predecessors. He appointed a number of women, as well. His wife has taught at Howard University, a predominantly black institution. People of color testified in support of his nomination. Even Judge Ronnie White—about whom I will say more in a moment—said that he does not believe Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to his nomination was racist in nature.

In the Senate, he held a hearing on and condemned the practice of racial profiling. He supported twenty-six judicial nominees of African-American descent.

And it should not go unmentioned that at least one member of his Senate staff—a devout Jew—has written that he found Senator Ashcroft not only tolerant, but supportive of his religious beliefs and the practical demands that those beliefs placed upon his time.

Nevertheless, I am deeply troubled by many of his actions in this area. Most notably, he vehemently and persistently opposed efforts to integrate the St. Louis public schools. In fact, his actions were so vexatious that he was nearly cited for contempt of court. He refused to comply with court orders to submit a plan to desegregate the schools of that fine city. He walked up to the line of disobeying the law—even appearing to boast of that fact when he ran for Governor for the first time. Those actions trouble me deeply.

The record suggests that in times past John Ashcroft has submitted to the temptation to divide Americans along racial lines.

The same record also suggests that he is someone without personal bias on matters of race, who has tried to heal rather than deepen our nation’s ancient racial wounds. I hope that it is that John Ashcroft who, if confirmed, will lead the Department of Justice. Our nation was traveled too far—and we have too far still to go—to relent for even a moment in the struggle for equal justice.

I realize that my vote for John Ashcroft himself had an opportunity to address this, but I hope that it will be informative—in informative of all to John Ashcroft. Listen well, John Ashcroft. There are those of us here today who could easily vote against your confirmation, but have decided to give you a second chance—an opportunity that you denied to Ronnie White, Bill Lann Lee, James Hormel, and others.

I hope this vote will not be in vain. I hope that John Ashcroft will uphold his pledge to enforce the laws of our land. I fervently hope that he will work to unite rather than divide our nation. And I hope, for the sake of our nation and this institution, that this vote will in some small measure help bring greater understanding and respect for the American people, and for the American Constitution.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the Senate confirmation of John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States. He is well qualified for the job, having served as attorney general of Missouri, as Governor, and as United States Senator.

I first met John Ashcroft in 1992 at the Missouri Republican Convention in Springfield, MO, when I was a surrogate for the campaign of President George Bush.

Two years later, John invited me and our colleague from New Mexico, Pete Domenici, to come to Missouri and campaign with him when he was a candidate for the Senate.

I was very pleased with John Ashcroft on both occasions. He was an articulate and intelligent advocate for commonsense solutions to our country’s problems. He impressed me as a serious-minded, dedicated, and energetic force in shaping public opinion on issues that should be addressed by our Government.

I enjoyed very much being a part of his campaign effort and I was delighted when he was elected to the Senate.

In the Senate, he has been very active in the legislative process. He has initiated reforms in trade sanctions policy and juvenile justice which I have been pleased to support and cosponsor. He is one of the most sincerely respected members of our Republican Conference, and I consider him to be one of my best friends in the Senate.

I take issue with the critics who have questioned his candor and his character. There is no basis whatsoever for making judgments about people that should be addressed by our Government.

I am confident he will prove by his exemplary service as Attorney General that he is fair minded, thoughtful, and true to his word, and his oath, as he carries out his important duties.

The President has selected a good man to be Attorney General. He has withstood the slings and arrows of his opponents, and he is still standing.

When I was elected to Congress, I was given by my mother a poem by Josiah Gilbert Holland, which I have kept close to my desk for the past 28 years. It says in part:

God give us men! A time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
whom the lust of office does not kill;
whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
who possess opinions and a will;
who have honor;
who can stand before a demagogue and damn his treacherous flatteries without winking; Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the foam in public duty and private thinking.

This poem describes my friend and fellow Senator, John Ashcroft. I am proud of his service in the Senate, and I am confident he will make me just as proud as he serves our Nation as Attorney General of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sessions). Under the previous order, the Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, contrary to what some people may believe, thinking about how people make their choice and giving some of the arguments that have surfaced in the course of this nomination, I suppose some people might think this is sort of automatic for some folks on different sides of the aisle. I want to make clear that I do not feel that I think there are many different crosscurrents with respect to anybody’s nomination, and I certainly do not disagree with the comments of my good friend and colleague, Senator Dodd, who spoke a few minutes ago about what has happened to the nomination process, or to the review over the course of the last years here in this city.

While I certainly raised questions early on with respect to this nominee, I tried, in the course of this process, to refrain from making any final judgments until the hearings were held, until questions were asked, until Senator Ashcroft himself had an opportunity to lay out the record, so to speak.

I listened very carefully to what Senator Dodd said a moment ago about not making choices on ideology. I agree with that. My opposition, which I announced yesterday, to Senator Ashcroft’s nomination, is not based on ideology. I might say, however, that our friends on the other side of the aisle in the Republican Party have certainly made ideology a significant component of their opposition to many people in the last years. Even Senator Ashcroft himself has engaged in a process of making judgments about people’s fitness to be judges, people’s fitness to be in the Attorney General’s office—Bill Lann Lee—on a matter of ideology.

In fact, I am told by some members of their party that they have themselves been the victims of ideological decision making with respect to positions they might or might not be able to fill within the party itself. Perhaps there is the deepest irony at all, that people such as Tom Ridge, Governor of Pennsylvania, or Governor Kemp, who themselves were the subject of bitter dissonance within the Republican Party over whether or not they might be fit to serve as Vice President of the United States, or hold some other office of importance, on the basis of ideology.

So we need to be careful and thoughtful about who comes to that part of this debate with clean hands. But I am confident that all of us would agree with Senator DODD, that we would like to see an end to that kind of division.

There is another reason why this is difficult. It is because Senator Ashcroft comes to this question with all the advantages of a colleague. We know him. Many of us know him well enough to consider him a friend in the context of the Senate and like him personally. We certainly respect his conviction and his dedication to public service.

As colleagues have noted, he was elected by the citizens of his State as attorney general, as Governor, and as Senator.

But the truth is, in the final analysis this is not a vote or a decision about those relationships. This is not a vote about personality. And it is certainly not a vote that calls on us to somehow ratify the traditional expectations of the Senate, which are under- stood by everyone in the Senate and often are found very confusing to many people who may misunderstand what we do by a different standard.

The office of Attorney General is obviously not a political reward, left simply to the victors of national elections or to the crosscurrents of ideology within a party or party of one. It is one of the most sensitive positions of public trust. It is an office in which all Americans must have a deep and abiding trust that its occupant will enforce the laws with equal justice, with fairness, and impartiality.

In other words, the person who comes to that office must come to it with all the advantages of a colleague. We know him. Many of us know him well enough to consider him a friend in the context of the Senate and like him personally. We certainly respect his conviction and his dedication to public service.

In other words, the person who comes to that office must come to it with a level of acceptance by the public at large about their moral and legal bona fides that they bring to the office in a way it is beyond dispute.

It is very clear that there were others whom a uniting, not a dividing, President might have chosen for this job. I think everyone in the Senate would agree that if our colleague, former Senator John Danforth, had been chosen, you would have had a person who espoused all the ideology, the full measure of conservative views—he is an Episcopalian minister; he is pro-life—but he would have brought absolutely no controversy to this job at this time party. It is one of the sensitive positions of public trust. It is an office in which all Americans must have a deep and abiding trust that its occupant will enforce the laws with equal justice, with fairness, and impartiality.

In effect, we are being asked to accept the nomination of an individual who, by definition, will have to wake up every single morning and curb his instincts that characterized this good person. He has come with this nominee, which raises doubts—I am not saying certainties but doubts—in the minds of many people about this nominee’s either willingness or capacity to apply the law in the way he has suggested he would in the course of these hearings.

In fact, after closely examining the record set forth in those hearings, and the record as attorney general of the State of Missouri, I conclude that record makes him the wrong person for this job at this time party.

This is without any question—I think everybody in the Senate would agree—a special time in our history.

We have a President of the United States who was elected not with the popular vote of the country but for the third time in history by the electoral college. We have a President who was elected effectively by one vote, some would argue by the one vote in the District of Columbia. There are many cases where others in the country who would argue it was the one vote in the Supreme Court of the United States. There are many in the country, whether legiti- mately or not, who have a deep sense of alienation and outrage over what happened in the application of law in the course of the last months in our Na- tion.

Because this election was so divisive, because the President himself has come to office saying that he acknowled- ges the deep need for him to be a uni- fier and not a divider, I believe, there- fore, this nomination is particularly troubling.

Senator Ashcroft’s record reveals a series of actions—not beliefs; I want to distinguish this. I heard colleagues de- fending Senator Ashcroft again and again saying he should not be held ac- countable for his deep-rooted beliefs that reflect those who elected him. I am not holding him accountable, per- se, for those beliefs. I believe, however, there are a series of actions that ignore the kind of need we face at this point in time to have an Attorney General come to office not needing to prove that he would be an aberration or a mistaken im- pression but, rather, who brings the full force of their history of commit- ment to civil rights, a commitment to those key issues where the Attorney General is so critical, whether it is civil rights in many areas, Senator Ashcroft again and again in his polit- ics with respect to Roe v. Wade, women’s choice, or the law of the land with respect to civil rights in many areas. Senator Ashcroft again and again in his polit- ical life has been on the other side of those particular issues.

There is a very simple question to ask yourself: Is that really what you want in an Attorney General of the United States?

In my judgment, reviewing the record of the hearings and reviewing the record of Senator Ashcroft’s steward- ship as Attorney General, there are occasions where the Senator took ac- tions that do not call to question today his ideology but call to question his judgment in pursuit of that ideology.

Yes, Senator Ashcroft testified that he would enforce the laws with which he disagrees. But take, for instance, the voluntary school desegregation case in St. Louis, or the nomination of Judge Ronnie White, or the nomination of James Hormel to be Ambassador to Luxembourg, or the nomination of David Satcher for Surgeon General. Each of these, in my estimation, re- veals a response by Senator Ashcroft that exhibited an exercise of judgment that I believe calls into question his ability to provide for the kind of moral and legal force necessary in the job of Attorney General.

I am not convinced that you can simply dismiss each and every one of the occasions where that led to the consequence of that judgment in each of those cases. Let me be very specific about each and every one of those.

When he was Missouri attorney gener- al, as we know—and I talked about it—Senator Ashcroft opposed the court-appointed voluntary desegrega- tion plan for St. Louis. We know school desegregation is a controversial public policy, and there are many people who appropriately at various times in the country, in one place or the other, found fault with certain approaches to various voluntary desegregation plans. That is not the measure of my concern.

What is deeply troubling to me is that despite the problems with the ex- isting law and despite the problems that were found with the proposed vol- untary remedy, Senator Ashcroft, in a position of leadership on this issue, duty bound to bring people together and try to lead the country through this difficult time, failed to come up with an alternative that would have ameliorated the divisions of the community and, most impor- tantly, would have addressed the seg- regated conditions. When children are trapped in schools that do not work, when cities are divided by racial lines, there is a choice that can be made: You can be a voice for reconciliation or you can be a voice for divisiveness.

When Senator Ashcroft chose to po- liticize the issue beyond all proportion, which is what many people in the community have testified, he chose the latter, and that is a matter of judgment, not belief.

Perhaps the most disturbing element in his record was the treatment of Judge Ronnie White. Many people have brought those facts to the floor, and I obviously am not going to go through all of them again. I remember that de- bate well. I remember the language which characterized this good person. He was called procriminal. It was said that he had a tremendous bent towards criminal activity—a judge had a tremen- dous bent towards criminal activity. It was claimed that he was the most liberal judge on the bench in all of them again. I remember that de- bate well. I remember the language which characterized this good person. He was called procriminal. It was said that he had a tremendous bent towards criminal activity—a judge had a tremen- dous bent towards criminal activity. It was claimed that he was the court’s most liberal judge on the death penalty and did not care “how clear the evidence of guilt.” Those words are simply not true. Of course he cared about guilt, and if you read his deci- sion, his decision said nothing about whether or not he was guilty or whether or not he should not, if guilty, be subjected to the death penalty. He did not think this man had a fair trial. I do not believe an Attorney General of the United States should interpret... some judge’s opposition to the lack of a fair trial to become on the floor of the Senate a rationale for a party-line vote, fully divided by virtue of his leadership on his protestations and characterizations of this judge.

As a former prosecutor, Judge White had a strong record of supporting capital punishment and often voted with Mr. Ashcroft’s own appointees on the Missouri Supreme Court. Indeed, he had a tougher record on the death penalty than some of Senator Ashcroft’s own nominees. Judge White voted for the death penalty in 41 of 59 cases that came before him, and he voted with the majority 53 times, including cases in which he favored reversal.

So that is not an issue of ideology. That is not a matter of belief on which I choose to cast my vote. It is because I believe that Judge White was inappropriately characterized on the floor of the Senate. I believe that was a reflection of a judgment about another human being, and our politics, our public life in our country. I do not believe, as some have claimed, that Senator Ashcroft is racist. I do not think there is any evidence of that. I do not believe that he or I think that is inappropriate to this debate. But I do think that it was an unfair distortion of Judge White’s record branding him as procriminal. And the handling of that nomination in itself raises serious questions about judgment, about fair-mindedness, and about fair play.

Judge White, quite eloquently, made that very point during his testimony before the Judiciary Committee when he said: I believe that the question for the Senate is whether these misrepresentations are consistent with fair play and justice that you would require of the U.S. Attorney General. That is not a matter of ideology; that is a matter of judgment.

I am also troubled that when David Satcher’s nomination for Surgeon General came before the Senate with great bipartisan support, again, Senator Ashcroft filibustered and described him as a “promoter of partial-birth abortion.”

David Satcher had led the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta with distinction. He had been a leader at a medical college in Tennessee. He had the full backing of Senator FEINSTEIN and Senator BIBBY, both of whose are people of enormous integrity. They told us that David Satcher would not promote abortion. They told us that you could not question his character or his integrity. But John Ashcroft said that this individual would “promote a heinous abortion, partial-birth abortion.” Why? Simply because David Satcher believed that a ban on the procedure—which he was in favor of—ought to include an exception for the life and health of the mother.

The kind of distortion we saw for David Satcher raises a question, not about ideology but about judgment and fairness and fair play.

I am also troubled by Senator Ashcroft’s judgment about the so-called alleged “totality of the record” with respect to a good man named James Hormel. I regret to say it, but I can only interpret the “totality of the record” as a code word for opposition to James Hormel being gay.

Why do I draw that conclusion? Because in the course of debate, and in the course of comments publicly, Senator Ashcroft, at the Foreign Relations Committee, never doubted that Mr. Hormel was a competent businessperson, never doubted or questioned his record of philanthropy or commitment to his community, never doubted or questioned his effectiveness as a dean, or the job he had done prior to entering the business at the University of Chicago. Senator Ashcroft was only one of two people on the Foreign Relations Committee to vote against him.

During the confirmation hearings a couple of weeks ago, he again reiterated it was the “totality of the record” but, once again, without any explanation.

As we know, Mr. Hormel was finally appointed by a recess appointment. But in my judgment, Mr. Hormel was opposed by the Senate. Senator Ashcroft did raise questions about the propensity or likelihood Mr. Hormel might have about “promoting a certain kind of lifestyle.” I think every single one of us understands that is a code word in and of itself for his sexuality. I would add that the people of Luxembourg, far from raising this question themselves, did not share that concern. And so it was that Senator Ashcroft sought to deny Luxembourg an Ambassador that they were asking to have appointed.

I do not believe the American people should have an Attorney General who leaves even doubts—even doubts—about whether or not being gay is a status offense.

I am also troubled by the lack of sensitivity that was displayed, even in the aftermath of the interview that took place with Southern Partisan magazine in 1998. Another colleague has gone into that at great depth on the floor, and I will not spend a lot of time on it.

It is one thing to have done the interview and, I suppose, to have suggested later that you did not know what the magazine did or who they spoke to or what they said. It is another thing when you are a nominee for Attorney General not to acknowledge that there are, indeed, questions that would arise in an interview of this nature with that kind of magazine.

This is a magazine that praises John Wilkes Booth for assassinating Abraham Lincoln. It has editorials against interracial dating. When you read the interview itself, and you recognize the folks the Senator was trying to talk to, and what he was appealing to, it seems to me we are asking questions, again, about judgment, about the judgment of what the message is to a large part of America who sees that magazine and those who adhere to its philosophy as those who have never gotten over the fact that slavery was ended in the South.

I would have liked—I think many of us would have liked—to at least have heard a disavowal of those views or an expression, recognition that some of the views are, in fact, inappropriate and appeal to some people’s worst instincts rather than best instincts.

I think those are the judgments, the expressions that ought to come from somebody who is going to try to represent the healing of the divisions that have occurred over the course of the last years. I might add, they are not just the healings from the difficulties of the election. They are the healings from the problems of racial profiling. They are the healings from the problems of discrimination in housing. They are the healings from the problems of so many things might be creatured in order to try to address people’s sense of grievance in the country; certainly, obviously, the power of the Solicitor General; the power of choosing who will sit on what courts; the power of deciding who you will appoint to Supreme Court of the United States; and, most importantly, what you will investigate and how. All of these are issues of judgment, too.

I believe the issues I have raised put before the Senate serious questions about the exercise in that judgment. I believe that in the end, notwithstanding what I have said, there is always a feeling by each of us with respect to a colleague that these votes are difficult. I don’t pretend that it is not in this regard. That is true for all of us on our side. We have to make a choice. It is our responsibility and it is our oath to the Constitution to make these judicial choices that are put in front of us.

I believe the important thing at this moment in time in this particular position, above all, is to have a nominee who is free from this kind of controversy, who comes to this job not with the questions that have been raised in the Senate and this revisitation of the kind of divisiveness that so many of us are tired of. That is not something we asked for. That is something we were given by virtue of the President’s choice to send us this nominee.

With this nominee comes these questions. His ability to step into a job that requires such a special sensitivity, such a special sense of the need to bring the country together and to be able to apply the law equally and fairly to all. It may well be that every concern I have expressed is wiped away when John Ashcroft takes this job on, as we know he will. There is no question about whether he is going to be confirmed. But there is a question about whether or not we will ever, in the next few years, again have to revisit some of the questions that have been raised in the course of these hearings and in the course of this debate.

My prayer is that we won’t, and nothing, obviously, would please me more than to John Ashcroft: I am glad I sounded my warning bells, but I am equally glad that you proved us wrong and were the kind of Attorney General that the country needed at this moment.

It is my belief that all of our colleagues are absolutely correct in predicting that is what we will have. If it is, so much the better for the Nation and so much the better for John Ashcroft. It is important for us to place as much of the record as he assumes this job, the concerns that we have on behalf of so many people in this country who need to see the law applied more fairly and need to have a better sense of due process and of equal justice under the law. I hope, in the end, this administration and this Attorney General will produce that.

Mr. HATCH. Finally, Mr. President, I wish to speak about John Ashcroft’s ability, if and when he becomes Attorney General, to enforce laws that he spoke against, or even voted against as a legislator.

As you know, Mr. President, opponents of Senator Ashcroft are accusing him of being unable to set aside his opinions on certain laws sufficiently in order to enforce those laws.

And I have to give those opponents credit for their creativity. They have developed a brand new test for cabinet appointees. Eight years ago, when the Senate confirmed Tom Harkin as Attorney General, whose personal views opposed the death penalty and the imposition of mandatory minimum sentences for convicted criminals, none of the anti-Ashcroft crusaders accused Janet Reno of being unable to set aside her personal convictions.

But while I admire the creativity of this new approach, I am deeply troubled by the substance beneath it. What’s being proposed is to disqualify from high office anyone who has previously taken a side on a legislative proposal.

It is simply not true that a legislator is so tainted by efforts to change laws that thereafter he or she cannot perform the duties of attorney general. Outside this Chamber, and outside of the Washington Beltway, Americans understand that people can take on different roles and responsibilities when they are given different positions. Americans understand that they can become judges, welders can become foremen, engineers can become managers, and school teachers can become school board leaders. And Americans know that a Senator, whose job is to propose and vote on bills, will become an Attorney General, whose job is to enforce those laws that are duly passed.

There aren’t many people who know as much about the different roles in government as John Ashcroft. He has been in the executive branch—as an Attorney General for 8 years. He has been chief executive as Governor for 8 years. And he has been in the legislative branch as a United States Senator for 6 years. Each of these positions have required him to take on differing roles assumed by the three branches of government.

It is in this context that John Ashcroft told the Senate what he will do as Attorney General. He said he will enforce and uphold the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court. This is a concise yet profound statement about the proper role of the Attorney General. And it is more than just a statement, because it is backed up by the unquestioned integrity of John Ashcroft, a man who will do what he says. He will enforce the law as it is written, even in those instances where he would have written it differently.

Still, some members of this body are unconvinced. They apparently think that John Ashcroft will not do what he said. Of course they would not call him a liar—at least not explicitly, anyway. They are saying that, try as he might, he cannot enforce the law because he wants so badly for the law to say something other than what it actually says.

Some who have adopted this view are accusing John Ashcroft of changing his views. They accuse him of having a “confirmation conversion.” By this they mean that people who take off their legislator’s cap, and put on an attorney general’s hat, cannot adapt from the role of law writer to law enforcer. This is a ludicrous proposition. John Ashcroft has not undergone a confirmation conversion; he has been the victim of an interest group illusion.

Members of this body know something that the public may not: There is an unspoken rule that a nominee does not answer questions in public between their nomination and their confirmation hearing. This is done out of respect for the Senate—whose job it is, after all, to listen to the nominee rather than the media. But savvy special interest groups take advantage of the time in between to wage a war of words against nominees they dislike. Many of those words are exaggerated or unsubstantiated attacks. The result can be the fabrication of a false public record.

Mr. President, I am asking my fellow Senators to resist the temptation to label it a “conversion” when a nominee simply corrects the rather hurtful statements created by special interest groups. I am asking my colleagues to look at John Ashcroft’s real record, and at own words—in his confirmation hearings, and in his answers to the voluminous written questions on the press releases of issue advocates.

If you only listen to interest groups, you might conclude that John Ashcroft would bend or ignore the law in order to put more guns in people’s hands. But you would be wrong. As Missouri’s Attorney General in 1977, John Ashcroft wrote Attorney General Opinion No. 50, in which he interpreted state law to prohibit prosecuting attorneys from concealing concealed weapons even while engaged in the discharge of official duties. This is hardly the kind of decision that someone bent on eliminating gun laws would want to reach.

The special interest groups also want us to believe that John Ashcroft cannot enforce abortion laws because of his personal view that life begins at conception. But 20 years ago, as Missouri Attorney General, John Ashcroft had—and did not take—the opportunity to bend the law to favor his view. His 1981 Attorney General Opinion No. 5 barred the Missouri Division of Health from releasing statistics revealing the number of abortions performed by particular hospitals—even though such statistics would help the pro-life movement make its case. Similarly, in Attorney General Opinion No. 127, dated September 23, 1980, Attorney General Ashcroft determined that a death certificate was not required for all abortions, despite his personal view that abortion terminations end life. Are these the kind of decisions that you would expect from an unrestrained zealot?

But the special interest groups do not stop there. They have also attacked John Ashcroft for his religious views, inferring that he would use his position to blur the lines between church and state. The fact is, however, that John Ashcroft has turned down several opportunities to do just that. In 1981, Attorney General Opinion No. 102, Ashcroft forbade public school districts from using federal education funds to benefit nonprofit including parochial school children. He did so even though the federal grant in question specifically allowed private and parochial school children to benefit. In similar decisions, Attorney General Ashcroft prevented the State of Missouri from providing transportation for nonpublic school students [Attorney General Opinion No. 148], and determined that the Missouri Education Board lacked legal authority to allow the distribution of religious material on school property [Attorney General Opinion illusions. The artists behind the lobbying groups aligned against him have made his true record disappear in a cloud of smoke. And they are attempting to convince the public that his distinguished record of advocacy as a legislator for recycling was all there was to him. But let me tell you what I see in the crystal ball. John Ashcroft is going to be an excellent attorney general. He is going to enforce the laws of this land fairly and forcefully, and he will do so even when he might have written the law differently as a legislator.

Mr. President, the issues that have been raised in objection to Senator Ashcroft’s nomination are largely policy issues. There is no objection on his qualifications, his credentials, or his integrity. The attempt to paint him as extremist on policy grounds is countered effectively by his five elections to statewide office in Missouri, and his experience as a member of the Missouri Supreme Court and as an advocate of Governors and the National Association of Attorneys General.

Mr. President, John Ashcroft is qualified, not extreme on policy, but his policy positions are largely irrelevant because he has declared that he understands his role as law enforcer, as distinguished from that of a policy advocate.

I hope we will give him the benefit of the doubt if any doubt exists. I believe he will enforce the laws even-handedly and be a fine Attorney General.

Mr. President, I would also like to respond to the issue of whether there have been religious attacks on Senator Ashcroft.

Article VI of our Constitution, while requiring that Officers of the government swear to support the Constitution, assures us that “no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification, nor a public Trust under the United States.” I fear that with regard to the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States, we are coming very close to violating the spirit, if not the letter of that assurance.

Mr. President, John Ashcroft has been attacked as a dangerous zealot by many of his opponents, who suggest that his faith will require him to violate the law, or as a liar who cannot be trusted when he says he will uphold the law, even when he disagrees with it, as he has in similar circumstances in the past.

I think the corrosive attacks on a qualified nominee because of his religious beliefs not only weaken our constitutional government, but also undermine the ability of citizens in our democracy to engage in a meaningful dialogue. When such attacks are made on the ground that a man’s faithful conviction will prevent him from discharging the duties of his office, whole segments of our democracy are disenfranchised, and the American heritage of religious tolerance is betrayed.

Let me point to just a few instances of these amazing attacks on Senator Ashcroft, made on largely religious grounds, since he was nominated.

Let me begin with the testimony of Professor James M. Dunn, who testified at our Senate hearings as an expert on religion issues. I begin here because Professor Dunn is the most explicit in his religious attack on Senator Ashcroft.

Professor Dunn says explicitly what others have cooly and carefully implied. He says, and I quote what is essentially the thesis of his testimony before the Judiciary Committee: “the long history of Senator Ashcroft’s identification with and approval of . . . religious, right-wing extremism in this country convinces me that he is utterly disqualified and must be assumed to be unreliable for such a trust.”

That is about as baldly as the matter can be put. John Ashcroft is utterly disqualified and must be assumed to be unreliable for such a trust.

Another area of falsification concerns John Ashcroft’s record on the enforcement of environmental laws. The public is under the impression that he has been a champion of environmental protection. But a careful reading of his record shows the opposite. In Attorney General Opinion No. 123, Ashcroft wrote in 1977. In Attorney General Opinion No. 189, Ashcroft decided that Missouri Department of Natural Resources. He also opined that operators of surface mines must be required to award a 15 percent state grant to the Metropolitan St. Louis Sewer District. I am particularly disappointed. I would hope that the United States Senate would never countenance such attacks in the consideration of this, or any other, nominee. I hope no weight will be given to such intemperate vitriol, nor more guarded attacks made in the same spirit. And I hope that none of my colleagues would join in such attacks, whether explicitly stated or couched in more careful language.

Mr. President, John Ashcroft is being attacked in part on his religious beliefs. Dunn is not alone, either. For example, Barry Lynn, of Americans United for Separation of Church and State, in attacking Senator Ashcroft’s nomination also cites charitable choice—again, a law adopted by two branches of government controlled by two different parties—as an instance of Ashcroft’s “extreme views.” And to underscore the broader point, Lynn points to the apparently decisive fact that “Religious Right leaders find Ashcroft’s fundamentalist Christian world view and his far-right political outlook appealing.” Let us be clear: this is guilt by association with religious people.

As a number of my colleagues have suggested that the nominee might want to apologize for some of his associations or take the opportunity to dissociate himself from them, I would invite my colleagues to show a similar indignation for these attacks on people of faith, and dissociate themselves from these intolerant statements, unless they too would like their silence to be considered approval of such intolerance. Perhaps there needs to be greater sensitivity shown here.

In addition to such explicit attacks, others attack Senator Ashcroft because his religious beliefs can be viewed as diverging from the legal results favored by far left liberal interest groups.

For example, in the area of abortion, Ms. Gloria Feldt, the president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America criticized Senator Ashcroft for “his belief that personhood begins at fertilization,” saying that his view is “one of the most extreme positions among those who oppose a woman’s right to take her own reproductive choices. John Ashcroft actually believes that personhood begins... at the moment that sperm meets egg, the moment of fertilization.” Well, call it extreme if you will—that word is a hobby horse of the far left liberal groups who oppose this nominee—but I understand that is the position of a number of churches, including the Catholic Church. What is striking and chilling about this attack is the implication that anyone who holds this belief is guilty of a sin.

In the area of abortion, John Ashcroft actually is a person who believes that personhood begins... at the moment that sperm meets egg, the moment of fertilization. Well, call it extreme if you will—that word is a hobby horse of the far left liberal groups who oppose this nominee—but I understand that is the position of a number of churches, including the Catholic Church. What is striking and chilling about this attack is the implication that anyone who holds this belief is guilty of a sin.

We know John Ashcroft is the sort of person whose word is his bond. And if his religion is relevant, it speaks for him as a person who will discharge the office of Attorney General with honor and dignity, with impartiality, according to the law.

I think if we examine our hearts, we will find nothing that disqualifies John Ashcroft to be Attorney General. And we cannot, in good conscience, say that all those Americans who believe as he does are outside the mainstream of American opinion. No, they are solidly within the history of American pluralism and freedom, including religious freedom. We know John Ashcroft will faithfully discharge his duties and honor his oath of office no matter what the liberal pressure groups assert. I hope we will similarly honor our oaths, rejecting what has become in essence a religious test for this nominee, and vote to confirm this honorable man to the post of Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. President, I rise in support of John Ashcroft in his nomination as our Nation’s Attorney General.

This nomination debate and the consideration of John Ashcroft’s nomination is much different for me than my consideration of all the other nominees to President Bush’s Cabinet. It is different for the reason that in the case of most other nominees, I do not know those individuals personally. Of course, I did know Senator Abraham who has served well in his role. But we have known John Ashcroft, most of the nominees come to me just from what I have heard, what I have seen in the public arena, and what I have written about those people. I do not have the personal experience that I have had in the case of John Ashcroft.

I knew John Ashcroft before I joined the Senate over 2 years ago. I got to know him a little bit during the time I was running for Senator from Illinois.

My State of Illinois is right next door to the State of Missouri, so perhaps I have had the privilege of getting to know John Ashcroft and working with him more closely than many of the other Members of the Senate or the Cabinet. It is different for me than my consideration of all the other nominees to President Bush’s Cabinet. It is different for the reason that in the case of most other nominees, I do not know those individuals personally. Of course, I did know Senator Abraham who has served well in his role. But we have known John Ashcroft, most of the nominees come to me just from what I have heard, what I have seen in the public arena, and what I have written about those people. I do not have the personal experience that I have had in the case of John Ashcroft.

We, of course, have many issues that Illinois and Missouri share in common. We have a similar agricultural economy where corn and beans are the prevailing crop. We also have the Missouri River to which many of the other Members of the Senate or the Cabinet are more closely related.

In addition, I had the opportunity to work closely with John insofar as he was a supporter of a bill that I sponsored last year to improve the standards on child safety seats in this country. The bill went through the Senate Commerce Committee. In fact, I believe John was chairman of the subcommittee in which that issue was first taken up.

I also worked very closely with Senator Ashcroft on the issue of sanction reform. Both John and I and many others, representing particularly midwestern States, were very concerned that some of the sanctions our Government put on other countries, banning the sale of products from our country to other countries around the world that may have bad records in one regard or another, were hurting people that they were not intended to hurt and were not affecting the governments. At the same time, they were shaving our own farmers in the foot.
on a number of nations around the world.

There are many other issues. In fact, my staff gave me two pages of issues that I worked very closely on with John Ashcroft. I am not going to go through one by one, but I think the little points that have been made. In fact, I think many people have already done a good job rebutting some of the disinformation that has been put out. I think Senator Ashcroft did an outstanding job defending his own record before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Of the people I have known over the course of my public life, I would have to tell my colleagues that John Ashcroft has few equals in terms of character and integrity. John Ashcroft is a man of utmost character and integrity—as much, if not more so, than anyone else I have ever met in public life.

When I heard that President Bush had nominated John Ashcroft to be Attorney General, I knew that I had disagreed with John Ashcroft on many issues during the course of the last 2 years. I had voted differently than he on any number of issues, maybe some of which have been used as an argument against John Ashcroft. But I thought: Thank God that President Bush has had the wisdom to put someone who is absolutely impeachable, irreplaceable, and an absolute straight arrow in that office of Attorney General.

I believe character and integrity are, hands down, the most important qualifications for that job and, indeed, just about any job in public life. Many people have raised the question, Will John Ashcroft enforce the laws? Clearly, there are many laws on the books that John Ashcroft, if he will enforce the laws. He is so stalwart and most articulate public servants and I think about how important is his character and integrity. John Ashcroft has few equals in terms of character and integrity. John Ashcroft simply don’t compute with the John Ashcroft from my neighboring State whom I knew and served with day in and day out for 2 years.

I don’t think even the people of Missouri would recognize the characterizations of this man whom they elected to be their attorney general, their Governor, and their Senator and who has had such a distinguished career. And even before he was an elected officer, he was the State auditor of the State of Missouri. He is one of the most qualified people ever to be nominated for the office of Attorney General. I urge my colleagues, some of them who may disagree with votes John Ashcroft may have taken in his many years in the Senate, to reconsider and think about how important is his character and integrity. The fact that we can all sleep well at night knowing we have an absolute straight arrow in the highest law enforcement position in this country.

Thank you very much. Mr. President, Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that beginning at 9 a.m. on Thursday, the Senate resume the Ashcroft nomination in executive session and the time be allocated in the following fashion: 9 a.m. to 9:15 under the control of the majority party; from 9:15 to 9:30 under the control of Senator HARKIN; from 9:30 to 9:45 under the control of Senator JOHNSON; from 9:45 to 10 a.m. under the control of the majority party; from 10 a.m. until 10:15 under the control of Senator SARBANES; from 10:15 to 10:30 under the control of Senator LIERMAN; from 10:30 to 10:45 under the control of Senator SIEBEL; from 10:45 to 11 a.m. under the control of the majority party; from 11 a.m. until 11:15 under the control of Senator GRAMM of Texas; from 11:15 to 11:45 a.m. under the control of Senator WELLSTONE; Senator HATCH, who may disagree with votes John Ashcroft may have taken in his many years in the Senate, to reconsider and think about how important is his character and integrity. The fact that we can all sleep well at night knowing we have an absolute straight arrow in the highest law enforcement position in this country.

Thank you very much.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that beginning at 9 a.m. on Thursday, the Senate resume the Ashcroft nomination in executive session and the time be allocated in the following fashion: 9 a.m. to 9:15 under the control of the majority party; from 9:15 to 9:30 under the control of Senator HARKIN; from 9:30 to 9:45 under the control of Senator JOHNSON; from 9:45 to 10 a.m. under the control of the majority party; from 10 a.m. until 10:15 under the control of Senator SARBANES; from 10:15 to 10:30 under the control of Senator LIERMAN; from 10:30 to 10:45 under the control of Senator SIEBEL; from 10:45 to 11 a.m. under the control of the majority party; from 11 a.m. until 11:15 under the control of Senator GRAMM of Texas; from 11:15 to 11:45 a.m. under the control of Senator WELLSTONE; Senator HATCH, who may disagree with votes John Ashcroft may have taken in his many years in the Senate, to reconsider and think about how important is his character and integrity. The fact that we can all sleep well at night knowing we have an absolute straight arrow in the highest law enforcement position in this country.

I thank Senator LEAHY, and especially Senator REID, for working this agreement out, and to all Senators who have been willing to accomplish it so we can complete this debate and get a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. In light of this agreement, the next vote will occur on the confirmation of our former colleague, Senator John Ashcroft, not later than 1:45 p.m. tomorrow, and earlier if the time has been yielded back and we are ready to proceed to a final vote.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield? Mr. LOTT. I yield the floor. Mr. REID. After Senator KENNEDY, I will make a statement, and Senator GRAHAM from Florida will make a statement. I say to all the Senators, either with the majority or the Democratic side, if they feel they still want to talk, they can come and talk tonight.

Mr. LOTT. I believe we have some Senators committed to speak after that, at least two more within the next hour, interspersed with other speakers.

Mr. REID. The point I make, no one should complain they don’t have the ability to talk.

Mr. LOTT. It is not that late by Senate time. I believe we have one speaker who will speak at 7:50 or so, and if other Senators who haven’t spoken would like to get in the queue, we would like them to do that, or Senators who were thinking they want to wait until tomorrow, I think it would be well received if they could go ahead and speak tonight.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for speakers be reversed and that Senator KENNEDY precede the Senator from Nevada.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank the leaders. I will just take a few moments to respond to some points that were made earlier in the day by my friend and colleague, the Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH.

Earlier this morning I took the time to review the history of the challenges that were there for St. Louis in terms of desegregation of the schools and the actions that were taken or failed to be taken by the nominee, Mr. Ashcroft. I took a considerable amount of time to review the whole history and review the cases there. I drew the conclusion that there was a gross failure of, I think, judgment in terms of taking the necessary steps to protect the interests of the children. Those cases were later challenged during the course of the after-litigation, and I think it is important to respond very briefly and then to conclude with the remainder of my remarks that I had this morning, which, because others were here on the floor, I did not have the time to do.

My good friend from Utah talked earlier about the St. Louis desegregation case. Unfortunately, he continued the pattern on the other side of expressing outrage about the fact that desegregation can be expensive, without being outraged by the injustice being done to the African American children in St. Louis.

The simple fact is that Senator Ashcroft spent his career as attorney general denying the facts of discrimination and segregation. He continued to deny them at his confirmation hearing, and many of our colleagues are attempting to deny them on the floor of the Senate.

The facts are clear. The state of Missouri was found guilty by the courts of segregating the schools and keeping them segregated all the way through the 1970s. The court’s findings in 1980 made very clear that the state was aggressively maintaining segregation. Even black families who had moved out to the suburbs saw their children bused back into the inner-city to black schools. As the court ruled in 1982:

We held . . . that the state had substantively contributed to the segregation of the public schools of the City of St. Louis, the state defendants are primary constitutional wrongdoers and, therefore, can be required to take those actions which will further the integration of the city schools, even if the actions required will occur outside the boundaries of the city school district.

Yet Senator Ashcroft continued to insist that the state was “found guilty of no wrong.”

Some of our colleagues claimed that Senator Ashcroft’s position was vindicated by the Supreme Court in Missouri v. Jenkins. But the Jenkins case was from Kansas City. It had nothing to do with St. Louis.

The Supreme Court rejected every one of Ashcroft’s three appeals in the St. Louis case. He also complained that some of the money went to the suburban schools. It went for the students who transferred to the suburban schools; that is Public School Choice. He said that the test scores went down in St. Louis. What is clear, is that the students who transferred had consistently twice to three times the graduation rate, and in some districts, 90 percent of the graduates went on to college.

Defendants for Ashcroft also claimed that desegregation in Missouri was more expensive than anywhere except California. We all know what it made it expensive—the unrelenting 18 year fight against doing anything to fix the problem by Senator Ashcroft when he was Attorney General and Governor of the State.

If Senator Ashcroft was simply protecting the state’s treasury he could easily have had a cheaper alternative to the court. If he was concerned that the courts was ordering desegregation, he could easily have supported a state law to correct the problem.

In fact, the state is not paying for the plan anymore, and that’s because Senator Ashcroft successors, Attorney General Jay Nixon and Governor Mel Carnahan, provided the leadership needed to settle the cases and start improving education for all the children in St. Louis.

 Earlier, I spoke at length about Senator Ashcroft’s record on civil rights—especially, school desegregation and voting rights and gun control. At this time, I intend to discuss Senator Ashcroft’s treatment of judicial and executive branch nominees.

I know others have referenced some of them, but I wanted a chance to underscore my own reaction and response to the handling of these nominations by Senator Ashcroft.

Senator Ashcroft’s handling of judicial and executive branch nominations raises deep concerns. In four of the most divisive nomination battles in the Senate in the six years he served with us, Senator Ashcroft was consistently involved in harsh and vigorous opposition to the confirmation of distinguished and well-qualified African Americans, an Asian American, and a gay American.

When President Clinton nominated Judge Robert White of the Missouri Supreme Court as a federal district court judge, Senator Ashcroft flugantly distorted the record of the nominee and attacked him in the strongest terms. He accused Judge White of being “an activist jurist and one who has engaged in what I believe is a policy of using the judicial branch of government to carpet-bomb the States.”

Mr. Lee testified on a number of occasions—in fact, testified under oath, including, incidentally, directly in answer to your questions, that he would enforce the law as declared in Adarand. And he also said, in direct answer to questions of this committee, he believed the Supreme Court’s ruling in the Adarand case. As Senator LEAHY said during the Ashcroft confirmation hearings, Mr. Lee testified on a number of occasions—in fact, testified under oath, including, incidentally, directly in answer to your questions, that he would enforce the law as declared in Adarand. And he also said, in direct answer to questions of this committee, he believed the Supreme Court’s ruling in the Adarand case.

Similarly, Senator Ashcroft said he did not support Dr. Satcher to be Surgeon General because he * * * supported a number of activities that I thought were inconsistent with the ethical obligations of a medical doctor and a physician, particularly the surgical general, for he supported the extraor-dinarily well-qualified, committed, and dedicated public servant.

When questioned about Judge White’s nomination, Senator Ashcroft did not retreat from his characterization of Judge White’s record, although a review clearly demonstrates that Senator Ashcroft’s charges were baseless. It is clear that Senator Ashcroft distorted the record in order to portray Judge White’s confirmation as a referendum on the death penalty.

Senator Ashcroft had decided to use the death penalty as an issue in his campaign for re-election to the Senate, and to make his point, he cruelly distorted the honorable record of a distinguished African American judge and denied him the position he deserved as a federal district court judge. As I said at the hearing, what Senator Ashcroft did to Judge White is the ugliest thing that has happened to a nominee in all my years in the Senate.

Senator Ashcroft was also asked about the nominations of Bill Lann Lee to serve as Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, Dr. David Satcher to serve as Surgeon General of the United States, and James Hormel to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Luxembourg.

Senator Ashcroft told the committee that he could not support Mr. Lee because he had “serious concerns about his willingness to enforce the Adarand decision” on affirmative action. In truth, however, Mr. Lee’s position on affirmative action was well within the mainstream of the law, and he repeatedly told the committee that he would follow the Supreme Court’s ruling in the Adarand case.

and cost concerns. In 1994, the World Health Organization had called a meeting of international experts to review the use of AZT to prevent the spread of HIV in pregnancy. That meeting resulted in the recommendation that studies be conducted in developing countries to test the effectiveness and safety of short-term AZT therapy that could be used in developing countries and that those studies be placebo-controlled to ensure safety in areas with various immune challenges. Approvals were obtained by ethics committees in this country and the host countries and by the UNAIDS program.

The studies were supported by many leaders in the medical field, and the facts undermine Senator Ashcroft's criticism of Dr. Satcher.

Senator Ashcroft also mischaracterized Dr. Satcher's role in the survey of HIV child-bearing women. In 1995, seven years after the survey began during the Reagan Administration, Dr. Satcher, as acting CDC director, and Dr. Phil Lee, former Assistant Secretary for Health, halted the HIV survey. They did so because of a conflicting treatment option for children with HIV, the discovery of a therapeutic regimen to reduce mother-to-infant HIV transmission, and a greater ability to monitor HIV trends in women of child-bearing age in other ways.

Dr. Satcher's participation in the survey was justified, and it was not a valid reason for Senator Ashcroft to deny him confirmation as Surgeon General.

It was a gross distortion of his record in this situation. To criticize him for taking actions which were inconsistent with ethical considerations in that case was a complete distortion of the record.

The case of James Hormel is especially troubling. When Mr. Hormel was nominated by President Clinton to serve as Ambassador to Luxembourg, Senator Ashcroft, and Senator Breaux, were the only two members of the Foreign Relations Committee to oppose the nomination. Although Senator Ashcroft voted against Mr. Hormel, Senator Ashcroft did not attend the confirmation hearings, did not submit written questions, and refused Mr. Hormel's repeated requests to meet or speak by phone to discuss the nomination.

Generally, as a matter of courtesy, if a nominee asks individual members to meet with them to explain their positions or attend their confirmation hearings, the senators should do so. In 1998, when asked about his opposition to Mr. Hormel's nomination, Senator Ashcroft stated that homosexuality is a sin and that a person's sexual conduct is within what could be considered and what is eligible for consideration.

Senator Ashcroft also publicly stated in 1998 that:

"[Mr. Hormel's] conduct and the way in which he would represent the United States is probably not up to the standard that I would expect.""
On January 31, 2001, Congress held a debate in the Senate regarding the nomination of John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States. Senator Edward W. Kennedy (D-Mass) expressed his concerns about Ashcroft's views on gun control and segregation, particularly in light of Ashcroft's voting record and his opposition to the assault weapons ban and other gun control laws.

Kennedy pointed out that Ashcroft had voted against legislation that would have prohibited the sale of assault weapons, and he questioned Ashcroft's commitment to enforcing gun control laws. Kennedy also criticized Ashcroft for his opposition to the Voting Rights Act, which he felt was necessary to protect the civil rights of all Americans.

Kennedy concluded by stating that Ashcroft had failed to meet the standards necessary for the position of Attorney General, and he urged his colleagues to reject Ashcroft's nomination.
objections to the nomination of former Senator Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States. I do not wish to recapitulate their arguments, but I share many of their concerns regarding his nomination. I believe former Senator John Ashcroft has been a dedicated public servant who has acted in what he felt was the public’s best interest. But his record has stirred controversy on a wide-range of issues. The position of attorney general is one of great importance to the people of the United States. Attorney General must unite the citizens. Unfortunately, Senator Ashcroft’s record has tended to be divisive rather than unifying.

Most importantly, many Floridians are afraid that Senator Ashcroft will turn back the clock on civil rights after all the progress that has been made over the years. Based on his record and his testimony before the Judiciary Committee, I share their concern.

An Attorney General, of all the Cabinet officers, must be perceived to be the most vigilant enforcer of the law, an attorney who will represent all the people’s interests. I am afraid this nomination does not meet that test. Thus, I am opposing the confirmation.

Mr. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I truly believe that a President is entitled to his, or her, cabinet. I am aware that virtually all of President Clinton’s cabinet was approved by voice vote, with the exception of the Attorney General, who had roll call vote, and that nominee was overwhelmingly approved.

However, the background record of this nominee is not mainstream on the key issues. I know he is strong and tough on law and order issues. However, his views on certain issues—civil rights and desegregation, a woman’s right to choose and guns—make him an enormously divisive and polarizing figure.

This record can best be characterized as ultra-right wing. That is not where most of the people in this nation are.

Senator Ashcroft’s commitment to enforce the law in view of the extremeness of his record, as well as, on occasion, the harshness of his rhetoric, makes it difficult to believe that he can, in fact, fairly and aggressively enforce laws he deeply believes are wrong.

When Senator John Ashcroft opposed Bill C-2271, Lee’s nomination to head the Civil Rights Division at the Department of Justice, he argued that Lee was “an advocate who is willing to pursue an objective and to carry it with the kind of intensity that belongs to advocacy, but not with the kind of balance that belongs to administration...his pursuit of specific objectives that are important to him limit his capacity to have the balanced view of making the judgments that will be necessary for the person who runs [the Civil Rights Division].” If the Senate’s own standard is applied to this nomination, he would not be confirmed.

Last week, this committee held four days of hearings into the nomination of Senator Ashcroft. During that time, we witnessed a man who had undergone a major transformation on many key issues of importance to the people of my State and the nation. The question that we must answer is whether that transformation is plausible after more than 25 years of advocating the other side.

On a woman’s right to choose, for example, the new John Ashcroft would have accepted Roe v. Wade as the law of the land, and he will do nothing to try to overturn it. He would fully fund task forces to protect women as they enter abortion clinics, and stated firmly that “no woman should fear being threatened or coerced in seeking constitutionally protected health services.”

Contrast that with the John Ashcroft of the past 25 years, who has long argued that there is no constitutional right to abortion. In 1998 John Ashcroft supported a constitutional amendment to ban virtually all abortions, even in the cases of rape and incest—an amendment that would also likely ban some of the most common forms of birth control, including those used by women of reproductive age.

The John Ashcroft of 25 years once stated, “Battles (for the unborn) are being waged in courthouses and state legislatures all over the country. We need every arm, every shoulder, and every hand we can find. I urge you to enlist yourself in that fight.” The new John Ashcroft claims to have laid down his arms entirely.

On gun control, the new John Ashcroft says he supports background checks, says that he voted to deny the right to bear arms to domestic violence offenders, and says he would support re-authorizing the assault weapons ban when it expires in 2004, although he has called it “wrong-headed.”

The old John Ashcroft, on the other hand, voted against mandatory background checks at gun shows, trigger locks on guns sold, and a ban on large capacity ammunition magazines. He supported a concealed weapon law that would allow the people of Missouri to carry a concealed firearm into a grocery store, a church, or on school grounds or on a school bus, superceding the Federal Gun Free Schools Act. He was, and still may be, an active member of the National Rifle Association.

On civil rights, the old John Ashcroft strenuously fought a desegregation plan in Missouri. In fact, the judge in the case stated that Attorney General Ashcroft, “as a matter of deliberate policy, subscribed to the theory that he is entitled to defy the authority of the courts.”

The old John Ashcroft spoke at Bob Jones University, that to this day remains highly questionable for its religious and racial bias; at the hearing he demurred when Senator BIDEN urged him to return the honorary degree and did not rule out returning to the college in the future.

And the old John Ashcroft, in stating his support for voting against James Hormel as Ambassador for Luxembourg, stated that Hormel had “actively supported the gay lifestyle,” and that a person’s sexual conduct is “within what could be considered and what is eligible for consideration” for ambassadorial nominees.

Yet the new John Ashcroft promises never to discriminate against gays or lesbians for employment and said the reason for voting against Ambassador Hormel was because he knew him personally. Mr. Hormel called to tell me that he not only does not know Mr. Ashcroft, but that the Senator had refused to meet with him prior to his confirmation.

Over a quarter-century of public life, John Ashcroft has established a record of right-wing conservatism, and of views far to the right of the average American, and even of many in his own party. Senator Ashcroft has spent a career fighting against the civil rights of women, and women who bear witness against violence.

Senator Ashcroft said just two short years ago that “There are voices in the Republican Party today who preach pragmatism, who champion conciliation, who counsel compromise. I stand here today to reject those deceptions. If ever there was a time to unfurl the banner of unabashed conservatism, it is now.”

In 1997, Senator Ashcroft remarked that “People’s lives and fortunes [have] been relinquished to renegade judges—a robed, contemptuous intellectual elite.” He continued that “Judicial activism is a despotism...stands like a behemoth against the intellectual elite that has turned the courts of our country into ‘nurseries of vice and the bane of liberty’.”

And in the case of Missouri Supreme Court Justice Ronnie White’s nomination to the federal bench, Senator Ashcroft was responsible for a dark day in the Senate. When a home-state Senator objects to a nominee, it is very unlikely that the nomination will go forward. But instead of quietly objecting early on and allowing White to stand his ground, if he so wished, John Ashcroft waited until the nominee reached the floor of the Senate—after waiting for two full years—to derail the nomination and humiliate the nominee by stating, “We do not need judges with a tremendous bent toward criminal activity.”

Whatever Senator Ashcroft’s problem with Ronnie White, there was no need to destroy White’s reputation on the floor of the Senate, with no warning and no chance for Judge White to either defend himself or withdraw. This one act has become a stumbling block to my support, which I have not been able to get around. It says to me that it was planned for political purposes.

Taken as a whole, Senator Ashcroft’s positions and statements, in my view, do not unite, but rather divide. They send strong signals to the dispossessed, the racial minorities of our country, and particularly to all women who have fought long and hard for reproductive freedom that this Attorney General will not be supportive of laws for which they fought, no matter what he has said in the past weeks.

How can they feel that this man will stand up for them when their civil rights are violated? How can the left out, the rape victim who needs an abortion have faith that this man would enforce their rights?

In effect, this Senator must live with his or her own vote, and for this Senator, that vote will be “no.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, as a Senator, I do not serve on the Judiciary Committee, but I have watched nearly every hour of their hearing on the confirmation of John Ashcroft to be our next Attorney General of the United States.

I have watched while men and women of good will, while attempting to speak in soft and mellow tones, have been intimidated and bludgeoned by the far left to such a point that we now hear them come to the floor of the Senate and attempt to vote against a man of good faith and a man of good will.

I am not an attorney, nor have I ever claimed to be, but as a human being who has served in public life for a good number of years and associated with a great many people, I believe I am a reasonable judge of character.

This afternoon, I heard a speech from one of my colleagues about seeing into the heart of John Ashcroft. That particular speech was made after they had viewed the heart of John Ashcroft, she could not support him.

I suggest to that Senator that I have not seen into the heart of John Ashcroft, but I know it because I have lived near it and around it for the last 6 years. I know of its sincerity and its compassion. I know of its love of people and love of this institution. I know of its great patriotic pride for its country. I know of a heart that has served as a State attorney general, a Governor, a Senator, and who will soon serve as the U.S. Attorney General.

No, I have not seen the heart. I know the heart, and I know it to be a heart of compassion, but I also know it to be a heart of truth, one who, when he looks into the eyes of his colleagues and says, “I will enforce the laws of this Nation,” he and he alone is telling the truth.

Why could we assume he would tell the truth when others in past years have failed that test? Because he is a moral and ethical Christian.

That is a very valuable and important definition and because, if you meet that definition, you must enforce the law; it is within your character and your being that you do such. Lawmakers and law enforcers are different types of people, but within the character of our country ought to be, does he not enforce it? No. He turns to the lawmaking body, us, and says: You ought to change the law. It does not fit the character or the essence of the American way of life. But while it is here, I will enforce it as your Attorney General. You see, I must; it is my responsibility. I have taken the oath of office, and in taking that oath, I must uphold the law.

Yes, John Ashcroft is a Christian. He is a man of faith. My wife Suzanne and I know John and Janet Ashcroft well and personally. We have traveled around the country and around the world with them. He is a close, personal friend. In all of those times that we have traveled together, I have never heard him once speak ill of another human being. Not once have I ever heard him impugn the character of another human being.

Oh, John Ashcroft is a passionate man. He believes strongly in certain “isms.” But most importantly, he believes in Jesus Christ. He is a Christian. That is a character valuable to the culture of our country.

What I have seen or what I have felt over the last several weeks is the ultimate test coming down on John Ashcroft. While it has not been spoken, I sincerely believe implied that if you are a Christian, if you are a person of faith, you cannot serve in public life and in public office in this country because it, in some way, “taints” the way you think, the way you act.

I offer that challenge up to all of my colleagues because if that is what is being implied by the far left today, then shame on them, for it is outside the character of this country and it is outside the Constitution of this country.

Let me read from article VI. The last full paragraph of that article says:

The Senators, and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

That is the Constitution of the United States. That is the hallowed voice of our Founding Fathers. Yet by implication and innuendo, the far left of this country has implied, time and time again over the last several weeks, that a Christian person of faith, cannot be trusted to serve and render the just and appropriate interpretation of the laws of this country. That is not only wrong for our country; that is wrong under our Constitution. That test cannot be applied, whether on the right or on the left or down the center. It is a test of character that we have prohibited in this country for all time. And because we have prohibited it, our country is a sanctuary for all the world to seek.

Mr. President, I am confident, because I know John Ashcroft—I know his heart, that he is a man of unquestionable character who will do as he has said he will do before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate—that he will enforce the laws of this land, so help him God.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the confirmation of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States.

I spent 15 years of my professional career as a prosecutor, as a U.S. Attorney, in the Department of Justice. It is an institution for which I have the highest respect that I can express. The goal of equal justice under law is one of the highest and most valuable ideals any nation can have. I am convinced that this Nation’s strength is because of our legal system, our pursuit of truth and accuracy and fairness in giving everybody the day in court.

We need to give nominees here their day in court. And if we do, John Ashcroft will be found to be a sterling nominee. The complaints that are made against him collapse in the face of the facts. And I believe that is plain and accurate. I think that is an accurate statement. It disappoints me to hear people persist in pursuing objections and complaints that, if fairly looked at and considered objectively, are meritless.

Before I make my general remarks—and I will just respond to a few things that have been said—I would like to
I want to share a few matters that are important to correct. They have been repeated so often; I believe they are so incorrect that they ought to be responded to. First, in this town, people know who are honest and truthful—people who tell the truth, people who would not trust on almost any matter whatsoever. John Ashcroft, though, is that kind of person. You have heard people say that people are straight shooters and in days past. They know him. They respect him. He is a man of integrity, a man of religious faith, yes, a leader in his denomination, a man who is broadly respected all over America for the very qualities that are so much in need today.

If anybody reads my mail and listens to the comments I am receiving from people with a longing and a deep concern about their country, that a man of this quality is being defamed and dismembered, in effect, while at the same time we have the same Members of this body who have been steadfastly and tenaciously defending the kind of spin that has gone on in this town, that led to impeachment and other matters, they are having a difficult time comprehending that.

Anyway, we are here. People have had their day. They have been able to appear at the hearing and present their charges and, as Senators, are supposed to have their say. But we are not run here by special interest groups. Handgun Control does not control in this body. We take an oath to obey the law and do justice here, not to kowtow to every group who builds up a campaign to pressure Members of this body to vote the way they want, threaten them that they won't support them in primary elections in the future, and other lives miserable in every way they possibly can to get them to vote a certain way. They have a right to write and threaten and say they are not going to vote for somebody. It is a free country. But we, as Senators, have a right, a duty and a responsibility to do the right thing.

I know there are some conservative groups who tried to pressure Chairman HATCH on some issues. He said: We are going to listen to you and take your input, but I am a Senator. I happen to chair this committee. As long as I chair the committee, we are going to do this fairly and above board and no interest group is going to have an undue influence in how I do my job.

That is a fact. People know that here. We need to remember that as we go forward with this process.

One of the charges that has been made is somewhat complicated, but at bottom is the simple charge that John Ashcroft opposed integration. That is a bad thing to say. I came before the committee and looked us all in the eye and said: I support integration; I do not oppose integration. He said what he opposed was a Federal court plan that was extreme, in my view and in the view of a lot of legal scholars, to create a massive Federal intervention in the educational systems of Kansas City and St. Louis, Missouri. In fact, the Federal court plans ordered an additional $3 billion in funding to be spent to carry out these plans. A lot of it was for busing; a lot of it was for other activities.

The Attorney General. His predecessor opposed that court activity. His successor opposed it. His second successor opposed it. His second successor as attorney general was Jay Nixon, with whom I served when I was Attorney General of Alabama. Jay Nixon opposed this. He is a Democrat and was supported by two Members of this body in his effort to run for the U.S. Senate while he was resisting this litigation in the State. Why would we want to oppose that?

The wording the complainers have used is that he opposed voluntary court desegregation or voluntary desegregation in Missouri.

Let me tell my colleagues how this happened. The Attorney General of Alabama. I have been through this. It is a common thing in America, as we try to deal with the vestiges of segregation. Some of it was legal. Some of it has been just the nature of the residential segregation that occurred, and various efforts have been made to deal with this.

It has been said: How did he oppose voluntary desegregation?

This is what happened. Plaintiffs sued St. Louis and Kansas City. They sued the suburbs, and they got to court and claimed the school system is segregated by design, in effect. They objected to it. They want it to end. The school systems resist, and the litigation is before a judge in this case. I don't think he essentially suggested or indicated that he just might render an order that would eliminate all the suburban cities and merge them—at least their school systems—merge them with the St. Louis school system. We would just have one big school system. That is just what he might do, he said.

So threatened with their very educational system at stake, they voluntarily, under those kinds of threats, agreed to a plan to spend a massive amount of money to buss students around in an effort to achieve racial balance, which the judge was pushing to make happen. They said: By the way, state of Missouri, pay for it. We run our school system here, the city of St. Louis runs theirs, but we want you to pay the cost of this.

The Attorney General of the State of Missouri was the one person who had a responsibility and a duty, the lawyer for all the people of Missouri, to question whether or not citizens all over the State ought to pay for this kind of massive plan.

He objected to that. He resisted as did two of his successors who resisted it. In fact, one of the most infamous of all court plans was because a Federal judge ordered one of the school districts to raise taxes to pay for his idea of school integration.

That is what we are talking about—a consent decree. I have seen them. They will sue the prison system. The prison system will put up a little defense, or the school system, or the school system will, and they will go in and say: Judge, I guess you are right. Order the State of Alabama to give more money to run the prison. Order the State of Alabama to give more money to run the school system because these are the people who would like to have more money because it is their system they are running, and they don't have an objective position. The attorney general is the one who has to represent the entire State and to question what is happening.

Let me tell you why an attorney general has a particular duty to resist. He has a particular duty because this elected, unelected, lifetime-appointed Federal judge who is saying he is going to abolish the school district and consolidate them into one, who is taking an action that violates the Constitution of the State of Missouri—violates the statutory laws of the State of Missouri; violates the duly elected school boards and districts, and the school boards' authority given to them by the people of the State of Missouri and people in that district. And he is going to rip all of that apart and impose his will on how education ought to be conducted in the targeted community in that state.

Do you see how important this is for a principal attorney general. He should resist and defend unless it is absolutely clear that there is no other way that a constitutional deprivation can be ended. He should resist the compromise of the Constitution and laws of his State. He should do so as did his two successors. To say those acts of principal resistance to a Federal evisceration of the local educational scheme demonstrates lack of concern for children or somebody who wants to maintain segregation is just plain wrong. We ought not to twist those kinds of things today into that sort of mentality. I don't like that.

There is one more thing I will mention—Bill Lann Lee nomination, although I do not dwell on almost every allegation that is before us.

Bill Lann Lee was opposed not just by John Ashcroft. He failed to come out of the Judiciary Committee on a vote that I voted against, and John Lann Lee even spoke about it. Perhaps he did, but I do not know what he said. I do remember that I spoke against the Lee nomination. I remember Chairman Hatch of the Judiciary Committee made an eloquent argument against Mr. Lee.

I would like to mention a couple of things about that. Oh, Mr. Lee, is so terribly pitiful, that he has just been put upon and he has been abused, is what they would say.

But let me tell you. We had a full hearing on the Adarand case. We had a hearing on that. Mrs. Adarand even spoke about it. The background, the case that sets out the law for quotas in America. They said you can't have racial set-asides and quotas. Mr. Lee refused to acknowledge the real meaning of Adarand.

So threatened with his Adarand case, and when questioned in detail, he defined it in such a way that it was clear that the chief of the Civil Rights Division would not support the principle of voluntary court-ordered plans. That is why the chairman of the Judiciary Committee opposed it. He made something like a 15-page speech on this floor and delineated in high style and with great legal precision why this was important and why he reluctantly opposed this nominee. He did not attempt to mislead any of us at any time attack—the character of Bill Lann Lee. We simply told him we believed he did not understand the meaning of that case and would not follow the law of the United States and, as such, that he should not be confirmed.

That is what happened. To suggest that John Ashcroft went out of his way to block this nominee is just one more statement that is inaccurate and unfair to the good and decent man whom I believe will soon be Attorney General and whom I am confident will be one of the greatest Attorneys General in the history of this nation. People are going to appreciate him. He will restore dignity. He will restore integrity. He will bring personal probity and decency to that office and will, I believe, be greatly respected when he concludes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Chair. I commend the articulate, knowledgeable, and eloquent Senator from Alabama for his remarks on a variety of issues.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I have received a statement from the editor of the Southern Partisan magazine that has been attacked here to some degree. I have never read the magazine. But it is a refutation of many of the statements made above. It certainly is proof that the magazine is in a much better light than it has been reported to be here on the floor.

I note that Senator Ashcroft, when he was interviewed by it, simply did a text interview with the magazine. There was no evidence he ever read it, or saw it, or knew much about it.

I think it would be healthy for the statement of Chris Sullivan, editor of the Southern Partisan, to be made part of the Record in which he flatly denies that he favored, or the magazine favored, segregation or other kinds of racially—discriminatory activities.
I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FROM: Chris Sullivan, Editor

RE: Reformation of false reports now being circulated about Southern Partisan magazine and its efforts to defend against such racism. Indeed, one of our central purposes is to defend the South against such racism. We have no ties whatsoever with that website. After that, reporters and editorial writers for mainstream outlets covering the presidential primary reported the errors as if they were true.

For those who may be interested in the facts, I have assembled the following item-by-item refutation of errors and distortions extracted from any sense of fair or accurate context, some of which were clearly malicious. People for the American Way subsequently loaded all of those comments into their database. After that, reporters and editorial writers for mainstream outlets covering the presidential primary reported the errors as if they were true.

A number of false reports are circulating in the national press, alleging that Southern Partisan is a "white-supremacist" or "white-supremacist" magazine. This is part of an orchestrated effort to embarrass Senator John Ashcroft for having once been interviewed by our magazine. In subsequent years, he was re-interviewed by us.

Most of the distortions can be traced to an article by Benjamin Soskis in the New Republic which contained a series of factual errors and distortions extracted from any sense of fair or accurate context, some of which were clearly malicious. People for the American Way subsequently loaded all of those comments into their database. After that, reporters and editorial writers for mainstream outlets covering the presidential primary reported the errors as if they were true.

The allegation that our magazine engages in ethnic slurs. The quote most often offered to prove this allegation was taken from a column by Buckley. William F.'s brother, wrote for us 17 years ago. Here is what the New Republic reported that Mr. Buckley had written: "In 1967 the magazine offered a vision of South African history straight from the apartheid-era textbooks: 'God led [Africans] in faith and God taught them to make their prayerful covenant when they were besieged by bloodthirsty savages on all sides.'"

Here is the actual text from which the quote was dishonestly extracted: "Then when demon has provoked their hate, post-apartheid South Africa, it transpires upon reading a little South African history, God Almighty. In their view. [Emphasis in the original] God led them into the Transvaal, it was with God that the defend slavery, which was a terrible national tragedy. The point the reviewer hoped to make was that slavery was bad enough without being justified."

6. The allegation that our magazine sells racist, white-supremacist magazine, or so I've been told. Others have labeled us "neoconservative" and "racist."

Those charges are absolutely false. In 20 years of publication, our journal has never advocated any form of racism. Indeed one of our central purposes is to defend the South against such racism. We have no ties whatsoever with that website. After that, reporters and editorial writers for mainstream outlets covering the presidential primary reported the errors as if they were true.

The views on Mandela expressed a decade ago were conventional for conservative writers from the regions of the country. In subsequent years, Mandela (who is now a respected elder statesman) has changed his mind about violence in the manner of Sadat and Begin.

The allegation that our magazine called Lincoln "a consummate liar". The quote was taken from a speech given by the late Murray Rothbard, a respected Jewish intellectual. He was president emeritus of the Ludwig von Mises Institute, speaking at a seminar on the cost of war.

The introductory phrase left out of Dr. Rothbard's remarks (which completely alters the meaning) was this: "Of course, Abraham Lincoln was a political opportunist. He was a consummate liar, manipulator etc.

The quote was followed by laughter from those in attendance. In other words, it was a gross insult against politicians intended to be humorous.

The ten stanzas listed above are the major offensive material that has been seen in the media for the past six months. There may be others. If so, please let us know so we will have an opportunity to defend ourselves. Our concern is not only with the reputation of our magazine but also with all the people who have written for us or been interviewed by us over the years. They are innocent bystanders in this scurrilous campaign led by our magazine's critics, and Senator John Ashcroft. Their reputations are very important to them and to their families.
To our dismay, these slanders have metastasized like an aggressive cancer throughout the national news media. In fact, months ago, we sent all of the above corrections to the President's website to request that they correct their website. They never did. It truly is shocking that there are groups so radically committed to their policy agenda that they are willing to destroy reputations falsely in an effort to prevent the appointment to a person they disagree with.

Please feel free to contact me if you have any additional questions (803-254-3660).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise as a new Member of the Senate, having listened to the arguments back and forth for several weeks on the matter of John Ashcroft's nomination as Attorney General of the United States.

As a new Member, some of the arguments made, various votes and so forth are of interest, and there is some hyperbole to it.

But let me tell you that coming out of the real world and going through a campaign and listening to people in Virginia and elsewhere, I think if there is one message that the American people sent to their country's leaders last November, it was this:

The politics of personal destruction in our country must end. Sadly, there are some leaders of organized interest groups who have already turned a deaf ear to this message, even as we in the Senate are working so hard to move America forward in a bi-partisan manner.

Of course, I understand that some of my colleagues may disagree with the philosophy of our new President and his choice for Attorney General. However, when the Chief Executive picks his management team, unless there is an extraordinary reason that would dictate otherwise, this body should not stand in the way. Political opportunism is not an appropriate rationale for withholding consent for a nominee.

When I served as Governor of Virginia, I was fortunate to have a capable cabinet who assisted me in managing the day-to-day operation of state government and advancing the agenda I established. While both the House and Senate in Virginia are required to approve of the Governor's selections, they have always, without exception, afforded the Governor the ability to name the qualified individuals he recruits to lead the team. No matter how distasteful the views of the nominee might be to some on the other side of the aisle, except for a very few legislators, Republicans and Democrats alike have continuously respectfully rallied to put the best interests of Virginia ahead of political chicanery and that has effectively enabled Virginia's Governors to do the job they were elected to do.

The federal government should be no different and John Ashcroft deserves the support of the United States Senate for Attorney General. He has proven himself a caring and capable leader during his many years of public service. Elected by the people of Missouri five times, his is a long record of achievement for all of the people he has represented. It is incumbent on all of us to examine the totality of his record and not be drawn to a single contorted, concocted blemish on a sterling 30-year record. As we proceed toward a vote on his nomination, we must understand what is in this man's heart, not what is displayed on the television screen in a 15-second distorted charge from heavily funded special interests.

Mr. President, the people of the United States expect principled civil debate here and in elections. In numerous elections all across the U.S. last year, voters rejected the politics of division. Virginians, like so many other Americans, want our country to heal itself and to move beyond scare tactics and personal attacks.

We, here in the United States Senate, have the unique ability to prove to Americans that this noble goal is achievable. Let's move forward! I respectfully urge my colleagues to join together to rise to a higher plane and vote to confirm the honorable John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for the nomination of our distinguished former colleague, John Ashcroft, to serve as Attorney General.

The debate we have been engaged in is not about Mr. Ashcroft's qualifications because they are not in question. He has a wealth of experience and a record of exemplary public service that spans three decades. Twenty years ago, I recommended him for Attorney General under President Reagan, and I would like to place that letter into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. The intervening time has only made it more clear that he should serve in this position. Before I had the pleasure of working with him in the Senate and on the Judiciary Committee, he served two terms as Missouri's Attorney General and Governor. Senator Ashcroft is one of the most qualified people nominated for this position in all my years of public service.

I recognize that some Senators disagree with some of the positions that he has taken during his almost thirty years in public life. As I said during his confirmation hearing, I hope the question will not be whether we agree with him on every issue. That is a standard he cannot meet for all of us. The President is entitled to some deference from the Senate in selecting those who will carry out his vision. As the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America wrote to the Senate, "this view has been the subtext for some of the criticism of Mr. Ashcroft. We are confident that you will reject it, as you would any other form of prejudice."

Senator Ashcroft has not only represented strong support from well-known Christian organizations, such as the Christian Coalition, he has been endorsed by organizations of various religious faiths, such as the major Orthodox Jewish Organization, Agudath Israel of America. This is a testament to what kind of person John Ashcroft is.

In fact, he should be praised for his deep religious convictions. It helps explain many of his fine traits. He is a man of honesty and integrity, and a person of strong moral character.

I am confident that he will serve with dedication and distinction as the...
Congressional Record — Senate
January 31, 2001

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I rise to lend my voice to those of my colleagues in support of the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to the post of Attorney General.

I am submitting a packet of informational materials on John. I hope that you will review them carefully and that you will conclude, as I have, that John deserves to be at the top of your list of nominees for the post of Attorney General.

If I can provide other, additional materials of assistance to you in this regard, please let me know.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes,

Sincerely,

STROM Thurmond

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I rise today to lend my voice to those of my colleagues in support of the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to the position of Attorney General.

I have known John Ashcroft for more than a decade. I first met him when I was mayor of Cleveland and he was Governor of Missouri, but I really got to know him through our service together in the National Governors’ Association.

John was the chairman of the National Governors’ Association, and I had just joined the organization after being elected governor. My wife, Janet, and I were able to get to know John and his wife Janet on a personal basis.

I could see almost immediately that John was a man who was dedicated to making a difference, and he wanted me to help in setting the NGA’s education agenda.

John appointed me to chair the NGA Bipartisan Taskforce on School Readiness. I will always be grateful for that appointment, because I quickly realized that the task force could serve as a forum in which to “air out” new ideas on how best to help our kids learn. From that task force, we were able to develop a Whole School Initiative.

I admired the leadership role John took at NGA, and our work together helped me to get to know John Ashcroft.

Of course, nothing will help you get to know someone better than going fishing with them, and John and I have spent hours together fishing. I have spent enough time with him to get to know what is in his heart, and I can honestly say that he is one of the most honorable men I have ever met. He is, in every sense of the word, a gentleman.

I believe the Senate have been given a remarkable obligation by our Founding Fathers to provide the President of the United States our “advice and consent” on certain Presidential nominees for Cabinet offices and other positions of governmental importance.

It is a duty that all of us in this Chamber take seriously.

Historically, members of the United States Senate have given the President—Republican or Democrat—the benefit of the doubt when it comes to the confirmation of a Cabinet official.

On the rare occasion when a nominee fails, it is because the nominee’s qualifications are lacking, or because a flaw in his or her character exempts them from successfully carrying out the duties of the office in which they would serve.

However, in the case of President Bush’s Attorney General nominee, John Ashcroft, there has been a steady stream of detractors who are trying to cast doubt on the character of John Ashcroft or misconstrue his record of accomplishments. I would like to say that those of us in this body who have worked with John Ashcroft, know the type of man he truly is.

In my personal relationship with John, and in my evaluation of his ability to serve as Attorney General, I have seen only an individual with impecable qualifications and unquestionable character.

There is no doubt in my mind that John Ashcroft possesses the integrity and the experience necessary to carry out the duties of Attorney General. We all know his biography by now—elected for two terms to serve as the Attorney General for the state of Missouri and then elected to serve as United States Senator from Missouri.

It is this record of public service that has made John Ashcroft the most qualified individual ever to be nominated to be Attorney General. Just look at some of our recent Attorneys General—Janet Reno, a prosecutor;
Dick Thornburgh, a governor; Ed Meese, a district attorney.

Of the 67 persons who have served in the office of Attorney General in the history of our nation, only one—John Ashcroft—has served as state attorney general of his state, and U.S. Senator—and only a handful have held two of these three offices.

I might add that in each of the responsible positions he has held, he has served the people of Missouri with distinction.

What is interesting, though, is how the special interest groups have “taken the gloves off” in their opposition to John. They are working overtime to demonize Senator Ashcroft, trying to paint him as unfit to hold public office.

But, we seem to have lost sight of the fact that the citizens of Missouri elected John Ashcroft 5 times to statewide office.

The John Ashcroft that the interest groups are characterizing is not the John Ashcroft we all know, and in my view, he has been the victim of a vicious character assassination, the likes of which we have seen in years.

This is just wrong.

This visceral opposition is being orchestrated by groups that I have to believe are making tons of money in their fundraising efforts by using John Ashcroft as a lightning rod.

For example, some have raised the accusation that he is a racist because of his opposition to Ronnie White’s nomination.

John Ashcroft did speak against Ronnie White in a convincing way. John did have some influence over my decision to vote against Ronnie White, but I had no idea he was an African American. That was never even an issue in our discussions over the nomination of Ronnie White, and I want everyone to understand that.

Anyone who knows my record knows that I do not tolerate racism or insensitivity to others, and I have no patience for individuals who espouse such views.

In fact, in the more than ten years I have known John Ashcroft, I have never heard a word uttered from him that indicated any insensitivity to any minority groups. To the contrary, his accomplishments reflect a real level of support for the African American community.

John Ashcroft signed Missouri’s first hate crimes statute into law. He signed into law establishing the nation’s highest holiday in Missouri. He appointed the first African-American woman to the Missouri Court of Appeals.

He led the fight to save Lincoln University, founded by African-American Civil War veterans—something that he and I have in common, given my work to save Central State University, a historically black university in Ohio. John also established an award in the name of renowned scientist, George Washington Carver.

He also has been a leader in the opposition to racial profiling, convening the only Senate hearing on the subject to date. He voted to confirm 26 of 27 African American judicial appointees nominated by President Clinton that came to the Senate floor.

John Ashcroft has worked with African American appointed African Americans when he was Governor. He has worked on issues of importance to African Americans. That’s why I cannot understand all this talk that John Ashcroft is somehow a racist.

Does the Senate honestly think that the good people of Missouri would elect a racist? Do we honestly think John Ashcroft could have possibly fooled the people of the “Show-Me State” 5 separate times?

John Ashcroft looks at his fellow human beings as in the image and likeness of God. Yes, he is a Christian, and he believes in the Two Great Commandments—love of God, and love of fellow man—and he follows the Golden Rule, but those traits are not—and should never be—disqualifying traits.

I have no question about what is in this man’s heart, and I know that he will be impecceably impartial in carrying out his responsibilities. In fact, John Ashcroft will be scrupulous in carrying out the responsibilities of his office.

Even with John’s integrity, character and good sense, probably the loudest complaints about him seem to be from those individuals who believe that he will ignore or even seek to overturn laws he personally does not like. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Throughout his many years of public service, John Ashcroft has been a sworn defender of the laws of the people—all of the people—and his record shows that he has not allowed his personal views to interfere in the pursuit of his duties.

As Missouri Attorney General, John Ashcroft strictly enforced laws that differed from his own views, including such items as: firearms—he determined, under Missouri law, that prosecuting attorneys could not carry concealed weapons; abortion—he determined, under the law, that hospital records on the number of abortions performed must remain confidential, and; he determined, under the law, that a death certificate was not legally required for fetuses under 20 weeks; and the church and state—he determined, under Missouri law, that public funds were not available for private and religious schools even though federal grants permitted it, and he determined, under the law, that religious materials could not be distributed in public schools.

I believe we all have faced laws or responsibilities that we must carry out that we may not necessarily agree with. I did so when I was Governor because I took an oath to uphold the law. So did John Ashcroft.

For those who are not inclined to support the nomination of John Ashcroft, I need only refer to his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Senator Ashcroft gave his assurance—his word—that as Attorney General he will uphold the law, including laws he may personally disagree with.

The fact that he has his faith is one of the reasons why John Ashcroft has upheld the law and why he will uphold the law—because he has character, because he has principles, because he has a foundation, because he has roots and because he has grounding.

I think in our assessment of John, all we need to do is look at our colleague, Senator JOSEPH LIEBERMAN. Part of the reason why Senator Lieberman is in the Senate is due to his profound faith. He abides by his faith and it impacts on decisions he makes in the Senate and in his life.

There are many other members of this chamber who I believe are exactly bringing my home to the base of who they are, whether they are Jewish, Protestant, Catholic or whatever their religion.

It is that faith that builds the character and builds the individual. It is what has made John Ashcroft.

And I urge all of my colleagues to read an article written by one of Senator Ashcroft’s former staff members, Tevi Troy, for the New Republic online. Mr. Troy, who is an Orthodox Jew, explains how faith has influenced John Ashcroft’s deep respect for other religions, and how faith has shaped John Ashcroft to be the man he is today.

In my family—and I would imagine in most families as we’re getting to know someone, we subconsciously subject them to what I call the “kitchen test.” Basically, the kitchen test is: is this person someone I would feel comfortable enough to bring my husband, to sit at the base of who they are, whether they are Jewish, Protestant, Catholic or whatever their religion.

John Ashcroft is someone I would be honored to have in my home, at my dinner table, with my family.

John Ashcroft is fit in every way to be the Attorney General. He is a man of integrity, and I am completely confident that not only will he be fair and impartial in the administration of justice, but that he will insist that every employee at the Department of Justice do the same. He sets high standards for people.

John Ashcroft’s experience is more than enough to qualify him for the role of top cop, but the added bonus to his achievements is the fact that he is a man of character, and a man who believes that the law is the law, and not something with which to manipulate policy.

Although some of my colleagues may not agree with his personal views, I urge them to look beyond their personal prejudices and look at John’s record, his character, his integrity and his experience and give President Bush the man he wants to have as Attorney General of the United States.

I will vote in favor of the nomination of John Ashcroft to be United States Attorney General.
Attorney General, and I sincerely urge my colleagues to give him their full support as well.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss my thoughts on the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to be the United States Attorney General.

One of the first issues I faced as a new Senator in 1989 was the controversy over the nomination of President Bush to be Secretary of Defense. As then a fresh senator, I was faced with the Senate’s constitutional “advice and consent” role, it was incumbent upon me to learn more about this important role through study and through conversations with my fellow Senators. It was also important to devise a standard to evaluate presidential nominations so as to treat nominees of both Republican and Democratic Presidents with consistency and fairness.

I came to the conclusion that my general policy should be to support nominations made by a President, provided that the individual is appropriately qualified and capable of performing the duties of the position. A President is entitled to a Cabinet of his or her choosing unless a nominee is proven unethical or unqualified. I would not oppose a nominee just because I disagree with them on a policy matter.

For judicial branch nominations, however, I apply a different standard. I have made this distinction between executive and judicial nominees throughout my Senate career. For example, during the consideration of Clarence Thomas’ nomination to the Supreme Court in 1991, I argued that:

By no means does a president, even one of my own party, have the right to pick virtually anyone he wants who meets minimal qualifications with respect to character, legal ability and judicial temperament. This is not a pass-fail test. In my mind, such a process is entirely proper for appointees to the executive branch of government. The president has far more latitude in selecting his Cabinet secretaries and key agency personnel. But under the Constitution, such deference is inappropriate in the confirmation of Supreme Court justices.

I used this policy in evaluating presidential nominations throughout the Bush Presidency and the subsequent Clinton Presidency, and will continue to use this standard to evaluate the nominations put forth by our current President. In order to determine a nominee’s qualifications and capabilities, I review the statements of nominees, follow the hearings conducted on a nominee, and listen to the opinions expressed by my colleagues. I have done all of these in the case of this nomination and I am here today to express my support for the confirmation of John Ashcroft to be the next United States Attorney General.

A review of Senator Ashcroft’s record shows that he is qualified to serve in the position of United States Attorney General. He has a long and distinguished tenure in public service, serving as Missouri’s Attorney General, Governor and Senator. During his terms as Governor, John Ashcroft served as Chairman of the Republican Governors’ Association and as Chairman of the National Governors’ Association. In addition, during his tenure as U.S. Attorney he was associated with the Senate Judiciary Committee and chaired the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution.

Senator Ashcroft is also capable of performing the duties of United States Attorney General as he is a fair and judicious individual. Some have raised questions concerning his ability to enforce laws he has opposed in the past, but during a meeting I had with him he assured me that as Attorney General he would work to uphold the laws of this nation, including those with which he disagrees. I believe that these qualities prove Senator Ashcroft to be capable of performing the duties of Attorney General and will serve him well in this role.

As anyone can tell from our records, Senator Ashcroft and I have very different opinions on many important issues, including abortion, civil and gay rights, and environmental protection. I will continue in my role as a Senator from Vermont to support legislation upholding the Roe v. Wade decision legalizing abortion, protecting access to clinics that perform abortion services, combating employment discrimination based on sexual orientation, and protecting our environment. I will also closely follow the decisions Senator Ashcroft makes as Attorney General and speak out when I feel those decisions are wrong. However, while we may have different opinions on many issues, in my mind that alone is not enough to disqualify a nominee.

THE LOCKERBIE VERDICT

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today’s unanimous verdict by a Scottish court convicting a Libyan intelligence agent of murder in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie concludes an exhaustive terrorism trial that clearly exposed Libyan state sponsorship of the mass murder of 270 individuals, including 189 Americans. A second Libyan charged with the same offense was acquitted. Although no verifiable evidence linking Libyan officials to the Lockerbie disaster was presented in the trial, the single sentence handed down to Libyan intelligence agent Abdel Basset Ali al-Megrahi represents a first step for the families, the prosecution, and the Western nations that supported bringing the Libyans to justice.

Nonetheless, the trial’s conclusion must not obscure the task ahead: holding Libya accountable for full compliance with the U.N. Security Council resolutions governing the sanctions regime against Libya. These resolutions mandate that, before sanctions can be lifted, Libya must (1) Cease all forms of terrorism; (2) Disclose all information about the Lockerbie bombing; (3) Accept responsibility for the actions of Libyan officials; (4) Pay appropriate compensation to the victims’ families; and (5) Cooperate with the French investigation into the 1989 bombing of UTA Flight 772 over Niger. The Libyan government must also ensure that the U.N. resolutions must be the standard for terminating the sanctions, which are believed by many experts to be responsible for the significant decline in Libya’s sponsorship of terrorism over the last decade.

Of perhaps more immediate importance to the United States is the question of the separate U.S. sanctions currently in place against Libya, primarily as a consequence of its sponsorship of state terrorism. True, Libya did hand over the Lockerbie defendants in 1999 and expel the Abu Nidal terrorist organization from its territory in 1998. The Libyan government has also seemingly reduced its contacts with radical Palestinian organizations espousing violence against Israel. In 1999, after the conviction in absentia of six Libyans by a French court for the UTA 772 bombing, Libya compensated the families of the 171 victims. However, it has not turned over the convicted individuals for trial or acknowledged responsibility.

In addition to the issue of terrorism, the United States must consider Libya’s covert and sometimes armed interventions in African nations, including Chad, Sudan, and Sierra Leone, as well as Libya’s continuing development of weapons of mass destruction. Libya used chemical weapons acquired from Iran against Chad in 1986 and has constructed chemical weapons facilities at Rabta and Tarhunah. According to the Congressional Research Service, Libya tried to buy nuclear weapons or components from China in 1975, India in 1978, Pakistan in 1986, the Soviet Union in 1981, Argentina in 1983, Egypt and Iran in 1985, and Belgium in 1985. The United Kingdom accused Libya of smuggling Chinese Scud missiles through Gatwick Airport in 2000. The Pentagon believes China has provided missile technology training to Libyan workers.

While I applaud the Lockerbie verdict, I believe any consequent American policy changes toward Libya must take into account its possession of chemical and potentially nuclear weapons, its compliance with existing U.N. Security Council mandates on the Lockerbie and UTA bombings, and any residual support for state terrorism. If Libya truly wishes to enter the ranks of law-abiding nations, with the economic and diplomatic benefits such status affords, it must satisfy the international community’s concerns on these issues.

TRIBUTE TO WARREN RUDMAN

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to honor former United States Senator Warren Rudman. of New Hampshire, whose dedication to public service has earned him the respect and admiration of a grateful nation. On January 8th of this year, Senator Rudman was awarded the Presidential Citizens Medal which recognizes exemplary service by a citizen of the United States. Senator Rudman served in the United States Army as a combat platoon leader and company commander during the Korean conflict. After graduating from Boston College Law school, he returned to New Hampshire to practice law and was later appointed Attorney General of the State.

Senator Rudman serves as Chairman of the President’s Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board and was also appointed to serve as Vice Chairman of the Commission on Roles and Capabilities of the United States Intelligence Community.

During his distinguished twelve years in the Senate, Senator Rudman established a record of Independence. While a member of the Senate, he served on the Ethics Committee and the Senate Appropriations Committee, where he was active on the Subcommittees on Defense and Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary.

Warren Rudman is an exemplary citizen who has dedicated himself to serving the people of New Hampshire and our country for over three decades. He continues to selflessly give of his time within the community and serves on the Board of Trustees of Boston College, Valley Forge Military Academy, the Brookings Institution and the Aspen Institute.

The people of our state and country look to Senator Rudman with tremendous gratitude and admiration for all that he has done. It has been a pleasure and privilege of mine to have worked with a leader as extraordinary as Warren Rudman. Warren, it is an honor to represent you in the United States Senate.

SAFEGUARDING CHILDREN

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on New Year’s Day, the Governor of Michigan signed into law a bill to take discretion away from local gun boards in issuing concealed gun licenses. The new law, scheduled to take effect on July 1st of this year, would increase the number of concealed handgun licenses in our state by 200,000 to 300,000—a ten-fold increase.

The concealed weapons law is being challenged by a coalition of law enforcement and community groups across the state called the People Who Care About Kids. This coalition is working to obtain 151,000 signatures needed to suspend the implementation of the law and put the issue before voters in 2002.

Other groups in our state are also working along side the coalition to keep our streets and our communities safe. One such group is the Detroit-based Save Our Sons And Daughters, SOSAD. I ask unanimous consent to print an article in the RECORD from the Detroit Free Press that shows what they are doing to fight the concealed weapons bill and to keep our children safe from gun violence.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Detroit News, Jan. 30, 2001]

NEW STATE GUN LAW ALARMS SOSAD GROUP

RIDDOUBLES EFFORTS TO SAFEGUARD CHILDREN

By Rhonda Bates-Rudd

DETROIT—After 14 years of helping hundreds of grieving families, who’ve lost a loved one, as a result of homicide, suicide, disease and natural death, Clementine Barfield, founder and president of the nonprofit, Detroit-based Save Our Sons and Daughters, says the organization is facing a new challenge.

Michigan’s latest concealed gun legislation, which limits the power of county gun boards to issues permits, has moved the group to turn up the heat in their efforts to promote peace.

Homicide is among the leading causes of death for African-American youths, recent data compiled by the Michigan Department of Community Health said.

“Homicide is real and the effects on children in our community is immeasurable,” Barfield said. “People should not believe that they are immune to this type of tragedy. Many children also have confidence in weapons, as evidenced by reports of their use of guns and violence in the news. If ever there was a right time to promote peace in our community, the time is now.”

In March, the group’s mothers will reveal their new image, a white kercfief and arm band, which is both a symbol of their grief and desire for peace.

The nonprofit group, which also honors other groups that help the grieving after deadly tragedies, is seeking corporate and community sponsors for programs and activities for youth that will promote nonviolence. The organization also is in need of volunteers willing to make a long-term service commitment to perform an array of administrative tasks, as well as spread the message of peace to youth who, often, enlist the use of violence and handguns to settle disputes.

USHIR IN MORE DEATH

Save Our Sons and Daughters member Cheryl Ross, her husband and their four children moved to the suburbs after her son, Donovan Carter, 15, was killed in 1977 at a Coney Island Restaurant on Chicago near Evergreen, just a few steps from the front door of their former home.

“I believe this new law will make it easier for more people to get their hands on guns and keep them concealed, which will make it easier for more youth to get their hands on weapons,” Ross said. “I think this new law is just a platform to usher in more death.”

Ross, who lives in Redford Township, has a better look than most at the toll homicide takes. She is a SOSAD liaison assigned to the Detroit Police Department Homicide Unit, along with Linda Barfield and Vera Rucker.

Working in the homicide division, contacting victim’s families and helping them has been therapeutic, Ross said.

Liaisons almost daily receive a list of homicides they use to create a file that includes basic information about the family, such as phone number, address and the number of family members. Serving as go-betweens, they contact the families and offer the group’s counseling and support group services. They also provide families with information about the case and how the process works.

“If they are grieving and just need someone to talk to, we are here for that, too, because as many of the SOSAD staffers are mothers who’ve lost children, we understand what they are going through,” Ross said.

Victim liaison Rucker, who has been with SOSAD since its inception, said “No one can understand what you’re going through—the grief, anger, anguish and frustration—unless they’ve lost a child to homicide.”

Homicide victim, Molenice “Melody” Rucker, 14, was shot and killed on Detroit’s west side by random gunfire at a back-to-school party for Benedictine High School students in 1986. Police Inspector William Rice, commanding officer for the Detroit police homicide unit, has been a law enforcer for 31 years. He said, without a doubt, the group’s mothers-—the victim liaison officers—have been the first precinct has been a new tool to help in the aftermath of homicide.

“After a homicide, the family is usually confronted by a lot of personal and financial issues, such as how and why the crime was committed, and then they almost immediately have to deal with funeral planning and burial expenses. SOSAD members avail themselves to assist families with whatever it is they need.”

S31PT1
The volunteers can bring the compassion element that police officers cannot offer because their (the police) job is to solve the crime by asking a lot of questions that may make the victims uncomfortable and, many times, the clues to solving a crime may lead us back to the family.” Rice said.

Barfield, a former City of Detroit accounting department employee, said the job of meeting the stewardship responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior. But she should understand that she will find us to be severe critics if the representations she made to us during the confirmation hearings turn out to be not in keeping with the way she conducts herself as Interior Secretary.

I will be particularly interested in working with Ms. Norton on several issues important to North Dakota and the Nation. For example, I will work to ensure that Ms. Norton provides protection for our National Parks, public lands and environmentally-sensitive areas.

Native Americans are particularly important to me. During the hearing, Ms. Norton said she respects tribal sovereignty. She should adopt a cooperative approach to include the relevant tribal stakeholders in policy and regulatory decision making. She also committed to make progress in meeting the critical funding needs for tribal schools and colleges.

I will count on Ms. Norton to adopt a sound scientific basis for her policy decisions on actions pertaining to endangered species, the global climate, energy issues and more.

Again, I wish her well and pledge my cooperation as she begins her duties in her new position. Ms. Norton will perform very well as Interior Secretary if she pursues a balanced set of policies that conform to the positions she took when she appeared before our Committee.

TRIBUTE TO TERRY BRAGG

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a brave and hard-working Ohioan by the name of Terry Bragg. Terry has been a life-long resident of McConnelsville, where he has spent the last 39 years as a member of the Malta-McConnelsville Fire Department. During nearly 40 years of tireless dedication to his community, Terry has served as a firefighter, Assistant Fire Chief and Fire Chief, as the department’s Fire Chief.

I recognize Terry today for his commitment to protecting his community from devastating fires. People like Terry Bragg, who risk their lives daily on our behalf, command great respect and deserve our deep and sincere thanks.

I cannot overstate just how important Terry’s job of fire fighting and prevention education is to our families and communities. Overall, fire is responsible for killing more Americans than all natural disasters combined. Everyone 13 seconds, a fire department responds to a fire somewhere in the United States. In 1998, there were 4,035 civilian fire deaths—that’s one death every 130 minutes. And sadly, many of those who die each year in fires are children.

To help support Terry and every firefighter in Ohio and across America as they work to protect our families and children, I sponsored the Firefighter Investment Act, which provides a vital federal investment to the courageous men and women who make up our local fire departments. I am pleased to report that we successfully included my bill as a provision in the recently-passed Fiscal Year 2001 Department of Defense Appropriations bill. The funding that will be made available as a result will help every firefighter and firefighters, just like Terry Bragg and the Malta-McConnelsville Fire Department, to continue carrying out their life-saving missions.

Over the years, Terry Bragg has received many, many awards and special recognitions. He has received three medals for bravery, and in 1997, the Ohio Department of the Veterans of Foreign Wars named him “Ohio Firefighter of the Year.” He received the Bob and Delores Hope “Good Samaritan Award,” the “M&M Firefighter of the Year Award,” and the Ohio Masonic Grand Master’s “Community Service Award.”

Not only is Terry a dedicated Fire Chief, he is a strong community leader, volunteer, businessman, and loving husband, father, and grandfather. Indeed, Terry Bragg is a role model for us all.

Thank you for your past, present, and future service to his community, to Ohio, and to our nation.

TRIBUTE TO THE LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES AND COMMUNITIES INVOLVED IN THE APPREHENSION OF THE TEXAS SEVEN

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, today I want to take a few minutes to recognize the efforts of everyone involved in the capture of the Texas fugitives that ended one of the largest manhunts this national has ever seen. As you know, the last two of the seven Texas inmates that escaped from a maximum security prison near Kenedy, November 13th surrendered on January 24th in Colorado Springs, Colorado. This can be attributed to the exemplary work done by the local and federal law enforcement agencies involved as well as the communities of Woodland Park and Colorado Springs. This was a cooperative effort that saw the pooling of all the resources available and resulted in a peaceful conclusion.

There cannot be enough said about the work that was carried out by the law enforcement agencies involved. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, The Colorado Springs office of the Bureau of Alcohol and Firearms, the U.S. Marshals...
The effort and support of the residents of Woodland Park and Colorado Springs can’t be overlooked. We need to commend people like Wade Holder and Eric Singer. Mr. Holder resides in Woodland Park and is the owner of the RV park where the fugitives were hiding out. He called in a tip to the local authorities after seeing pictures of the fugitives on the America’s Most Wanted Web site. KKTV news anchor Eric Singer helped negotiators by conducting a telephone interview with the last two fugitives in order to assure a peaceful surrender. These are just a couple of examples of how communities contributed to the successful manhunt.

In all of this we should not forget that two law enforcement agents lost their lives in this investigation. Irving, Texas Officer Aubrey Hawkins and Colorado State Trooper Jason Manspeaker were killed when they responded to a robbery of a sporting goods store in Irving, Texas on December 24th. Hawkins was brutally shot 11 times and died in the line of duty. Officer Hawkins was brutally shot 11 times and killed by one of the fugitives while responding to a robbery of a sporting goods store in Irving, Texas on December 24th. Colorado State Trooper Jason Manspeaker was killed when he crashed his Jeep Cherokee Squad car into a heavy equipment trailer on U.S. Highway 6 in Colorado. The crash occurred while chasing a vehicle suspected of harboring the last two fugitives on January 23rd. Both Officer Hawkins and State Trooper Manspeaker paid the ultimate price for our freedom. My wife Joan and I offer all of our compassion, our sympathy and our prayers to the families of both victims.

LORETTA SYMMS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I come to the Senate floor today to express my regret that Loretta Symms will soon retire as Deputy Sergeant at Arms. I would also like to congratulate her on a long and distinguished career.

During her 22 years of service on Capitol Hill, Loretta gained the respect of Senators and Congressmen from both sides of the aisle. Her creativity and dedication to improving the inner workings of the Senate have made her an invaluable asset to the institution and she will be dearly missed by all.

Loretta started her career on Capitol Hill in 1978 working for then-Congressman Steve Symms as executive assistant and office manager. In 1981, after Congressman Symms was elected to the Senate, Loretta became his executive secretary and office manager. In 1987, Senator Dale appointed Loretta as the Republican representative to the Sergeant at Arms.

As Director of the Capitol Facilities Department, she reinvented the Facilities Department providing career ladders, formal position descriptions, instituted reading programs, basic computer classes for employees, and training programs. Working closely with the Secretary of the Senate’s office, Loretta has been actively involved in the creation and launch of the Senate Page Program. For example, Loretta participated in the renovation and opening of Webster Hall, the Senate Page dormitory, and the Senate Page School.

During her tenure as Deputy Sergeant at Arms, Loretta worked closely with the Assistant Secretary of the Senate to create the Joint Office of Education and Training which provides a wide variety of professional seminars and training for the staff of Senate Offices and Committees. As every Senator can attest, this office has become an invaluable resource. In 1996, Senator Lott named Loretta Deputy Sergeant at Arms, the post in which she still serves. As Sherman D. Loretta has managed the day to day operations of more than 770 employees.

Loretta is married to former Senator Steve Symms. They have 7 children and 10 grandchildren. Her retirement will allow her to fulfill her dreams of traveling and spending more time with her grandchildren. Loretta’s impact on the institution of the Senate is greatly appreciated and will be remembered for a long time to come. But most importantly to this Senator is the many acts of kindness in the most professional manner that Loretta was extended to me. For her many acts I will always be grateful.

TRIBUTE TO BEN AUGELLO

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to honor Ben Augello of Weare, New Hampshire, an elementary school principal whose devotion to education served as an inspiration for his colleagues and students alike. Recently named Elementary Principal of the Year by the New Hampshire Association of School Principals, Ben is known for his incomparable listening skills.

Ben’s lifelong dream since childhood to become a teacher began in New York where he taught science to middle school students. He had a special talent for making every student feel valued and special.

Ben has been the principal of the Center Woods Elementary School in Weare, New Hampshire, since 1991. He oversaw the construction of the school and has also spearheaded development of the school’s inclusionary model. Mr. Augello is an enthusiastic administrator who exudes a warmth and openness that permeates the school.

Married for thirty-seven years, Ben and his wife Bunny have two children: Christine, a resident of Nashua, and Peter, who resides in Florida. Ben’s hobbies include cooking and traveling throughout the United States and Europe.

Ben Augello is a tribute to his community and profession. It is an honor and a privilege to represent him in the United States Senate.

TRIBUTE TO DEBBIE JANES

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, when I first came back to Washington, DC as a Senator-elect in December of 1996 for freshman orientation, one of the first people I met was a young lady who I was told I had to get to know if I was to have a chance to get around the august halls of the Senate. She was then the Director of the Congressional Special Services Office that provided assistance to Capitol visitors and staff with disabilities. What I did not know at the time, but soon learned, was that she had been working for years to help move both Houses of Congress toward compliance with the landmark Americans with Disabilities Act. What I also didn’t know at first, but learned almost immediately was that this young lady, Deborah Kerrigan Jans—known to all as Debbie—once worked for that great Senator Hubert Humphrey and that in addition to Minnesota ties she shared with Senator Humphrey a great fondness for the spoken word! In spite of that, or perhaps because of it, I soon found that Debbie had made herself indispensable to the conduct of my activities as a United States Senator and I quickly signed her on to my staff to coordinate my scheduling and advance work in the Senate. Part of her role was described very effectively in an August 1999 article in Esquire magazine:

He (Cleland) has one staffer, Deborah Jans, who advances his schedule to make sure he can get there. She is a dervish, racing in and out of men’s rooms to make sure the doors on the stalls open out and not in, looking everywhere for ramps and elevators, measuring doorways for the chair. . . . So she goes, and she measures, and she mucks—a whirlwind advancing a kind of rolling thunder.

Today, Debbie is retiring after 25 years of service to the Senate and to Congress. Prior to her excellent work for me, Debbie served as Director of the Congressional Special Services Office, Manager of the Senate Special Services Office, and Tour Guide with the U.S. Capitol Guide Service. These positions allowed her to share her love of the Capitol with visitors, providing a political, historical and architectural orientation to our magnificent institution. As I previously mentioned, in the latter part of this service, her role was extended to providing support and services to Capitol visitors and staff with disabilities. The innovative programs that she managed, such as the special tours for individuals with disabilities, sign language interpreting, wheelchair loans, development of Braille materials, as well as classes and seminars for Congressional staff on disability issues raised.

Debbie and her husband Ron, who is a wonderful fellow himself and has had the opportunity to develop tremendous listening skills during his years with Debbie, preparing to return to the Land of 10,000 Lakes. Washington’s loss is Minnesota’s gain. We shall miss Debbie here on Capitol Hill. The place will never be the same.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Ms. Snowe:

S. 222. A bill to provide tax incentives for the construction of seagoing cruise ships in United States shipyards, and to facilitate the development of a United States-flag, United States-built cruise industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. Domenici:

S. 223. A bill to terminate the effectiveness of certain drinking water regulations; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. McCain:

S. 224. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to set aside up to $2 per person from park entrance fees or assess up to $2 per person for the planning, management, and development of the Grand Canyon or other national park to secure bonds for capital improvements to those parks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. Warner:

S. 225. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide incentives to public elementary and secondary school teachers by providing a tax credit for teaching expenses, professional development expenses, and student education loans; to the Committee on Finance.

By Ms. Snowe (for herself, Mr. Jeffords, and Mr. Voinovich):

S. 226. A bill to establish a Northern Border States-Canada Trade Council, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. Torricelli (for himself, Mr. Johnson, and Mr. Feingold):

S. 227. A bill to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act with respect to municipal depositories; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. Akaka:

S. 228. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to make permanent the Native American veterans education program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs.
Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce legislation designed to promote growth in the domestic cruise ship industry and at the same time enable U.S. shipyards to compete for cruise ship orders. The legislation would amend the provisions of the United States-Flag, United States-Built Act of 1988 to allow for a five-year period rather than the current 10-year depreciation period. The bill would also repeal the $2,500 business tax deduction limit for a conversion on a cruise ship to provide a tax deduction limit equal to that provided to conventional cruise ships. The measure would authorize a 20 percent tax credit for fuel operating costs associated with environmentally clean gas turbine engines manufactured in the U.S., and also allows use of investment in Capital Construction Funds to include not only the non-contiguous trades, but also the domestic point-to-point trades and "cruises to nowhere."

Mr. President, I truly believe that this legislation would help jumpstart the domestic cruise trade, benefit U.S. workers and companies, and promote economic growth in our ports. I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in a strong show of support for this effort.

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 223. A bill to terminate the effectiveness of certain drinking water regulations; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, "Just as houses are made of stones, so is science made of facts; but a pile of stones is not a house and a collection of facts is not necessarily science."

For the past 8 years I have questioned numerous collections of facts put out by the Environmental Protection Agency in the name of science.

I have found sound science has been left out of the regulation equation too often. A prime example is the new arsenic standards in drinking water proposed last week. This new standard dramatically reduces the arsenic level allowing in drinking water from 50 parts per billion (ppb) to 10 ppb, a reduction of 80 percent.

I believe it is essential to protect and ensure the safety of our nation’s water supply and to uphold the principles and goals set forth in the Safe Drinking Water Act, but these standards were not based on sound science and there is no proof that they will increase health benefits. They were put into effect because it was the politically expedient thing to do.

That is why at this time I am introducing this bill which would terminate the effectiveness of these new drinking water standards.

The amendments to the Safe Drinking Water Act required the standards for arsenic in drinking water be changed by January 1st of this year.

Because the proposed rule was issued late, I cosponsored an amendment to the VA HUD appropriations bill giving EPA a 6-month extension. This amendment was later signed into law, but was ignored by the agency.

There was much controversy and debate surrounding the appropriate level for the new standard. The EPA’s Science Advisory Board expressed unanimous support for reducing the current standard, but varied considerably on the appropriate level. Both the EPA and the National Academy of Sciences National Research Council acknowledged more health studies were needed to evaluate what potential health benefits, if any, would likely result from this lower standard.

Arsenic is naturally occurring in my home state. In fact, New Mexico has some of the highest levels of arsenic in the nation, yet has a lower than average incidence of the diseases associated with arsenic. I have not seen any reason to increase the standard, but rather reduce it. EPA does not have the data to support the current standard.

Under these new standards states such as New Mexico, are going to be required to revise water treatment facilities at a significant cost to the general public. Such costs should not be incurred unless sufficient scientific information exists in support of the new standard.

The New Mexico Environment Department estimates this new standard will affect approximately 25 percent of New Mexico’s water systems, with the price for compliance between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000 in initial.
capital expenditures. Annual operating costs will easily fall anywhere between $16,000,000 and $21,000,000. Additionally, large water system users will see an average water bill increase between $38 and $42 and small system users will see an average water bill increase of $91.

The cost of complying with this new standard could well put small rural systems out of business, which is the exact opposite of what we should be trying to accomplish—providing a safe and reliable supply of drinking water to rural America.

By Mr. MCCAIN:

S. 224. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to set aside up to $2 per person from park entrance fees to enter into agreements with the Secretary of the Interior to set aside up to $2 per person from park entrance fees or assess up to $2 per person visiting the Grand Canyon or other national parks to secure bonds for capital improvement projects. The bonds would be secured by an entrance fee surcharge of up to $2 per visitor at participating parks, or a set-aside of up to $2 per visitor from current entrance fees.

The goal of complying with this new standard could well put small rural systems out of business, which is the exact opposite of what we should be trying to accomplish—providing a safe and reliable supply of drinking water to rural America.

Again, I believe that science is made of facts and I don’t believe we have enough facts here to determine if there will be increased health benefits from the change in these standards. I see unintended consequences resulting from well intentioned motives. We should study this issue here in the United States and then take our best data and formulate standards that are scientifically sound.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 224

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. DRINKING WATER REGULATIONS.

On and after the date of enactment of this Act—

(1) the amendments to parts 9, 141, and 142 of title 40, Code of Federal Regulations, made by the final rule promulgated by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency entitled “Arsenic and Clarifications to Compliance and New Source Contaminants Monitoring” (66 Fed. Reg. 6976 (January 22, 2001)) are void; and

(2) those parts shall be in effect as if those amendments had not been made.

By Mr. MCCAIN:

S. 224. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to set aside up to $2 per person from park entrance fees or assess up to $2 per person visiting the Grand Canyon or other national parks to secure bonds for capital improvement projects to those parks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I am renewing my efforts to provide innovative solutions to address urgently needed repairs and enhancements at our nation’s parks. The legislation I am introducing today is identical to the bill I sponsored in prior congresses, which received substantial support from many of the organizations supporting the National Parks system. I thank my colleagues Representative Kolbe, for introducing companion legislation in the House of Representatives.

The National Parks Capital Improvements Act of 2001 would help secure taxable revenue bonding authority for National Parks. This legislation would allow private fundraising organizations to enter into agreements with the Secretary of Interior to issue taxable capital development bonds. Bond revenues would then be used to finance park improvement projects. The bonds would be secured by an entrance fee surcharge of up to $2 per visitor at participating parks, or a set-aside of up to $2 per visitor from current entrance fees.

For example, based on current visitation rates at the Grand Canyon, a $2 surcharge would enable us to raise $100 million from a bond issue amortized over 20 years. A significant amount of money which we could use to accomplish many critical park projects.

Let me emphasize, however, the Grand Canyon National Park would not be the only park eligible to benefit from this legislation. Any park unit with capital needs in excess of $5 million is eligible to participate. Among eligible parks, the Secretary of Interior will determine which may take part in the program. I also want to stress that only projects approved as part of a park’s general management plan can be funded through bond revenue. This proviso eliminates any concern that the revenue could be used for projects of questionable value to the park.

In addition, only organizations under agreement with the Secretary of Interior will be authorized to administer the bonding, so the Secretary can establish any rules or policies determined necessary and appropriate.

Under no circumstances, however, would investors be able to attach liens against Federal property in the very unlikely event of default. The bonds will be secured only by the surcharge revenues.

Finally, the bill specifies that all professional standards apply and that the issues are subject to the laws, rules, and regulatory enforcement procedures as any other bond issue.

The most obvious question raised by this legislation is: Will the bond markets support park improvement issues, guaranteed by an entrance surcharge? The answer is an emphatic yes. Bonding is a well-tested tool for the private sector. Additionally, Americans are eager to invest in our Nation’s natural heritage, and with park visitation growing stronger, the risks appear minimal.

Are park visitors willing to pay a little more at the entrance gate if the money is used for park improvements? Again, I believe the answer is yes. Time and time again, visitors have expressed their support for increased fees provided that the revenue is used where collected and not diverted for some other purpose or by Congress. In recent surveys by the National Park Service, nearly 83 percent of participating respondents were comfortable in paying such fees for park purposes and other respondents thought the fees too low.

The recreational fee program currently being implemented at parks around the Nation, an additional $2 surcharge may not be necessary or appropriate at certain parks. Under the bill, those parks could choose to dedicate $2 per park visitor from current entrance fees toward a bond issue. This legislation can easily compliment the recreational fee program to increase benefits to support our parks and increase the quality of America’s park experience well into the future.

I look forward to working with my colleagues and National Parks supporters to ensure passage of this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. WARNER:

S. 225. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide incentives to public elementary and secondary school teachers by providing a tax credit for teaching expenses, professional development expenses, and student education loans; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, ’’The Teacher Tax Credit Act.’’

All of us know that individuals do not pursue a career in the teaching profession for the money. People go into teaching not for the sordid reasons—to make a lasting influence—simply put, to teach is to touch a life forever.

How true that is. I venture to say that every one of us can remember at least one teacher and the special influence he or she had on our lives.

Despite the fact that teachers play such an important role, elementary and secondary school teachers are underpaid, overworked, and, unfortunately, all too often, under-appreciated.

I was astounded to learn that teachers expend significant amounts of their own pocket to better the education of our children. Most typically, our teachers are spending money out of their own pocket on three types of expenses:

(1) education expenses brought into the classroom—such as books, supplies, pens, paper, and computer equipment;

(2) professional development expenses—such as workshops, seminars, and supplies associated with courses that help our teachers become even better instructors; and

(3) interest paid by the teacher for previously incurred higher education loans.

This is the essence of volunteerism in the United States—teachers spending their own money to better our children’s education. Why do they do this? Simply because school budgets are not adequate to meet the costs of education.

These out-of-pocket costs placed on the backs of our teachers are but one reason our teachers are leaving the profession.

Numerous reports exist detailing the teacher shortage. According to the National Education Association, ‘’Amer-
(3) With respect to qualified education loans, under the current tax law, the interest on these loans is deductible, but that deduction is limited to the first sixty months after graduation. With the current standard ten-year repayment loans which have been teaching for more than five years receives no benefit; and

(4) Under the current tax code, the student loan interest deduction is phased out based on income level. Thus, some teachers, although not rich by any means, could be phased out of the deduction for their education expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year, or incurred by the taxpayer during the tax-year ending after the item relating to section 25A the following new section: 25B. Teaching expenses, professional development expenses, and interest on higher education loans of public elementary and secondary school teachers.

(a) In general.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25A the following new section:

(2) Interest paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year on any qualified education loan, which such teacher provides instruction, directly relates to the curriculum and academic subjects in which an eligible teacher provides instruction.

(iv) is tied to strategies and programs that demonstrate effectiveness in increasing student academic achievement and student performance, or substantially increasing the knowledge and teaching skills of the eligible teacher.

(5) Qualified education loan.—The term "qualified education loan" has the meaning given such term by section 221(e)(1), but only with respect to qualified higher education expenses of the taxpayer.

(d) Denial of double benefit.—(1) In general.—No deduction or other credit shall be allowed under this chapter for an amount taken into account for which credit is allowed under this section.

(2) Coordination with exclusions.—A credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) for qualified professional development expenses only to the extent the amount of such expenses exceeds the amount deductible under section 152, 153(c)(1), or 530(d)(2) for the taxable year.

(c) Election to have credit not apply.—A taxpayer may elect to have this section not apply for any taxable year.

(b) Regulations.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(3) Effective date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

Senator John Warner, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Warner: On behalf of the National Education Association's (NEA) 2.6 million members, we would like to express our support for the Elementary and Secondary School Teachers' Tax Credit Act.

We believe that you, teacher quality is the single most critical factor in maximizing student achievement. Ongoing professional development is essential to ensure that teachers stay current on the skills and knowledge necessary to prepare students for the challenges of the 21st century. The TEACHER Act tax credit for professional development expenses will make a critical difference in helping teachers access quality training. In addition, the TEACHER Act will help encourage talented students to pursue a career in teaching by providing a tax credit for interest paid on higher education loans. Such a tax credit is particularly critical given the need to recruit two million qualified teachers nationwide over the next decade.

Finally, we are pleased that your legislation would provide a tax credit for teachers who reach into their own pockets to pay for necessary classroom materials, including books, pencils, paper, and art supplies. A 1996 NEA study found that the average K-12 teacher spent over $400 a year out of personal funds for classroom supplies. For teachers earning $25,000 a year, the purchase of classroom supplies represents a considerable expense for which they often must sacrifice other personal needs.

We thank you for your leadership in introducing this important legislation and look forward to working with you to support our nation’s teachers.

Sincerely,

MARY ELIZABETH TEASLEY,
Director of Government Relations.

VIRGINIA EDUCATION ASSOCIATION,
Richmond, VA, January 24, 2001.
Hon. JOHN W. WARNER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: On behalf of all 56,000 members of VEA we congratulate you on your appointment to the Education Committee, and we look forward to working with you.

Christopher Yianilos reviewed “The Educator and Classroom Help Education Resources (TEACHER) Tax Credit Act” with Rob Jones and me on January 19th. We appreciated this opportunity to evaluate the bill and to receive a thorough briefing from Mr. Yianilos.

We both appreciate and support your efforts to provide a tax credit for teaching expenses, professional development expenses, and student education loans. Please call on VEA if we can be of assistance in gaining passage of this worthy bill.

In addition, please call on us if we can ever be of assistance to you in your new position as a member of the Education Committee.

Sincerely,

JEAN H. BANKOS,
President.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. JEFFFORDS, and Mr. VINOVIICH):
S. 226. A bill to establish a Northern Border States-Canada Trade Council, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. SNOWE, Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation that would establish a Northern Border States Council on United States-Canada trade.

The purpose of this Council is to oversee cross-border trade with our Nation’s largest trading partner—an action that I believe needs to be undertaken and should be considered. The Council will serve as an early warning system to alert State and Federal trade officials to problems in cross-border traffic and trade from the very people who are dealing with trade problems. The Council will enable the United States to more effectively administer the trade policy with Canada by applying the wealth of insight, knowledge and expertise of people who reside not only in my State of Maine, but also in the other northern border States, on this critical policy issue.

Within the U.S. Government we already have the Department of Commerce and a representative, both Federal entities, responsible for our larger, national U.S. trade interests. But the fact is that too often such entities fail to give full consideration to the interests of States that share a border with Canada, the longest demilitarized border between two nations anywhere in the world. The Northern Border States Council will provide State trade officials with a mechanism to share information about cross-border traffic and trade. The Council will also advise the Congress, the President, the U.S. Trade Representative, the Secretary of Commerce, and other Federal and State trade agencies about Canada’s trade policies, practices, and problems. Canada is our largest and most important trading partner. It is by far the top purchaser of U.S. export goods and services, as it is the largest source of U.S. imports. Two-way merchandise commerce was $365 billion—that’s $1 billion a day. With an economy one-tenth the size of our own, Canada’s economic health depends on maintaining close trade ties with the United States. The United States accounts for about one-fifth of U.S. exports and imports, the United States is the source of two-thirds of Canada’s imports and provides the market with fully three-quarters of all of Canada’s exports.

The United States and Canada have the largest bilateral trade relationship in the world, a relationship that is remarkable not only for its strength and size, but for the intensity of the trade and border problems that do frequently develop—as we have seen in recent years with actual farmer border blockades in some border states because of the unfairness of agricultural trade policies.

Over the last decade, Canada and the United States have signed two major trade agreements—the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement in 1989, and the North American Free Trade Agreement, or NAFTA, in 1993. They also negotiated the 1996 U.S.-Canada Softwood Lumber Agreement, which will expire two months from now, on March 31. Even though some of us in Congress urged the last Administration on more than one occasion to negotiate a process with Canadian officials to work for a fairer alternative, nothing was attempted on a government to government basis.

Notwithstanding these trade accords, numerous disagreements have caused trade negotiators to shuttle back and forth between Washington and Ottawa for solutions to problems for grain trade, wheat imports, animal trade, and joint cooperation in biotechnology.

Most of the more well-known trade disputes with Canada have involved agricultural commodities such as durum wheat, peanut butter, dairy products, and poultry products, and these disputes, of course, have impacted more than just the northern border States. Each and every day, an enormous quantity of trade and traffic crosses the United States-Canada border. There are literally thousands of businesses, large and small, that rely on this cross-border traffic and trade for their livelihood.

My own State of Maine has had a long-running dispute with Canada over the Province’s unilateral support of its potato industry. Specifically, Canada protects its domestic potato growers from United States competition through a system of nontariff trade barriers, such as setting container size limitations and a prohibition on bulk shipments from the United States. I might add that there has still not been any movement towards solutions for these problems, even though I have been given promises every year that trade problems with Canada would be a top priority for discussion.

This bulk import prohibition effectively blocks United States potato imports into Canada and was one topic of discussion during a 1997 International Trade Commission investigations hearing, where I testified on behalf of the Maine potato growers. The ITC followed up with a report stating that Canadian regulations did restrict imports of bulk shipments of fresh potatoes for processing or repacking, and that the U.S. maintains no such restrictions. These bulk shipment restrictions continue, and, at the same time, Canada also artificially enhances the competitiveness of its product through domestic subsidies for its potato growers.

Another trade dispute with Canada, especially with the Province of New Brunswick, originally served as the inspiration for this legislation. In July 1993, Canadian federal customs officials began stopping Canadians returning from Maine and collecting from them the 12 percent New Brunswick provincial sales tax (PST) on goods purchased in Maine. Canadian Customs Officers had already been collecting the Canadian federal sales tax all across the United States-Canada border. The collection of the New Brunswick PST was specifically targeted against goods purchased in Maine—not on goods purchased in any of the other provinces bordering New Brunswick.

After months of imploring the U.S. Trade Representative to do something about the imposition of the unfairly administered tax, then Ambassador Kantor agreed that the New Brunswick PST was a violation of NAFTA, and that the United States would include the PST issue in the NAFTA dispute settlement process. But despite this ex-Press assurance, however, in fact, brought before NAFTA’s dispute settlement process, prompting Congress in 1996, to include an amendment
I offered to immigration reform legislation calling for the U.S. Trade Representative to take this action without further delay. But, it took three years for a resolution, and even then, the resolution was not crafted by the USTR.

The early months of the PST dispute, we in the state of Maine had enormous difficulty convincing our Federal trade officials that the PST was in fact an international trade dispute that warranted their attention and a seach for no way of knowing whether problems similar to the PST dispute existed elsewhere along the United States-Canada border, or whether it was a more localized problem. If a body like the Northern Border States Council had existed when the collection of the PST began, it could have immediately started investigating the issue to determine its impact and would have made recommendations as to how to deal with it.

The long-standing pattern of unsuccessful negotiations is alarming. In short, the Northern Border States Council will serve as the eyes and ears of our States that share a border with Canada, and who are most vulnerable to fluctuations in cross-border trade and traffic. The Council will be a tool for Federal and State trade officials to use in monitoring cross-border trade. It will help ensure that national trade policy regarding America’s largest trading partner will be developer and implemented with an eye towards the unique opportunities and burdens present to the northern border states.

The Northern Border States Council will be an advisory body, not a regulatory one. Its fundamental purpose will be to determine the nature and cause of cross-border trade issues or disputes, and to recommend how to resolve them.

The duties and responsibilities of the Council will include, but not be limited to, providing advice and policy recommendations on such matters as taxation and the regulation of cross-border wholesale and retail trade in goods and services; taxation, regulation and subsidization of food, agricultural, energy, and forest-products commodities; and the potential for Federal and State/provincial laws and regulations, including customs and immigration regulations, to act as nontariff barriers to trade.

As an advisory body, the Council will review and comment on all Federal and/or State reports, studies, and practices concerning United States-Canada trade, with particular emphasis on all reports from the dispute settlement panels established under NAFTA. These Council reviews will be conducted upon the request of the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of Commerce, a Member of Congress from any Council State, or the Governor of a Council State.

If the Council determines that the origin of a cross-border trade dispute resides with Canada, the Council would determine, to the best of its ability, if the source of the dispute is the Canadian Federal Government or a Canadian Provincial government. The goal of this legislation is not to create another Federal trade bureaucracy. The Council would not have the authority to select individuals nominated by the Governors and approved by the Secretary of Commerce. Each northern border State will have two members on the Council. The Council members will not be paid, and serve a 2-year term.

The Northern Border States Council on United States-Canada Trade will not solve all of our trade problems with Canada. But it will ensure that the voices and views of our northern border States are heard in Washington by our Federal trade officials. For too long their voices have been ignored, and the northern border States have had to suffer severe economic consequences at various times because of it. This legislation will bring our States into their rightful position as full partners for issues that affect cross-border trade and traffic with our country’s largest trading partner. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

S921

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

S. 228. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to make permanent the Native American veterans housing loan program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill which permanently authorizes the Native American Veteran Housing Loan Program.

In 1992, the Congress enacted a bill that established a pilot program to assist Native American veterans who reside on trust lands. This pilot program, administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs, VA, provides direct loans to Native American veterans to build or purchase homes on trust lands.

Previously, Native American veterans who resided on trust lands were unable to qualify for VA home loan benefits.

This disgraceful treatment of Native American veterans was finally corrected when Congress established the Native American Direct Home Loan Program.

Despite the challenges of creating a program that addresses the needs of hundreds of different tribal entities, VA has successfully entered into agreements to provide direct VA loans to members of 59 tribes and Pacific Island groups, and negotiations continue with other tribes. Since the program’s inception, 223 Native American veterans have been able to achieve home ownership, and none of the loans approved by the VA have been foreclosed.

Unfortunately, the authority to issue new loans under this successful program expired on December 31, 2001.

This would be devastating to a number of Native American veterans who would like to participate in this program.

Native American veterans who reside on trust lands should be afforded the same benefits available to other veterans.

Without this program, it would be incredibly difficult for Native Americans living on trust lands to obtain home loan financing.

Permanent authorization of this program will ensure that Native American veterans are provided equal access to services and benefits available to other veterans.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 231. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to ensure that seniors are given an opportunity to serve as mentors, tutors, and volunteers for certain programs; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, the future of our nation rests on the small shoulders of America’s school children. To help them face that challenge, we must call on all of our resources and find new and innovative ways to support our schools, right now.

That is why today, I am introducing the “Seniors As Volunteers in Our Schools Act,” a bill that will be an important step in ensuring that our schools provide a safe and caring place for our children to learn and grow. This bill is based on legislation which I introduced in the 106th Congress, S. 1851. I am pleased to have my colleagues Senators GRASSLEY, AKAKA and INOUYE as original co-sponsors.

Over the past week, under the leadership of President Bush, our nation and this body have committed to improving the nature of our schools. This bill presents one common-sense approach to enhancing the safety in our schools by utilizing one of our greatest resources—our senior citizens.

The bill I introduce today would encourage school administrators and teachers to use qualified seniors as volunteers in federally funded programs and activities authorized by the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. ESEA. The legislation specifically would encourage the use of seniors as volunteers in the safe and drug free schools programs, Indian education programs, the 21st Century Community Learning before- and after-school programs and gifted and talented programs.

The Seniors as Volunteers in Our Schools Act creates no new programs; rather it suggests another allowable use of funds already allocated. The discretion whether to take advantage of this new resource continues to remain solely with the school systems.

In my home state of Colorado, a School Safety Summit recommended connecting each child to a caring adult as a way to reduce youth violence. Studies show that consistent guidance by a mentor or caring adult can help reduce teenage pregnancy, substance abuse and youth violence. Evidence also shows that the presence of adults on playgrounds, and in hallways and study halls, stabilizes the learning environment.

I know firsthand the importance of mentoring based on my own experiences. A mentor can have a profound and positive impact on a child's life. What better way to make our schools safer for our children than to have more caring adults visibly involved?

I am pleased to note that the Colorado Association of School Boards supports the goal of this legislation. Jane Urschel, the Association's Associate Executive Director states, "As many Colorado school districts have already discovered, having seniors on our campuses helps to build inter-generational relationships and trust. It leads to a richer life for all." I am pleased that a number of seniors in Colorado already are helping in schools throughout my state. Many of my colleagues and current staffers and their relatives care deeply about this issue and are very involved in volunteer and mentoring activities.

I do not expect this legislation to solve all the problems confronting our schools today. But, I see it as a practical way to help make our schools safer, more caring places for our children.

Mr. President, the Seniors as Volunteers in Our Schools Act of 2001 is one simple way to address the school safety issue in Colorado and nationwide. I believe that as we work to find the resources our schools require we must not overlook one of the more plentiful and accessible resources at our disposal—willing and capable adult role models. This bill provides an opportunity to immediately improve the lives of younger and older Americans alike by bringing them together in schools. I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. CLELAND (for himself, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. CORZINE, and Ms. LANDRIEU):
S. 232. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude United States savings bond income from gross income if it is used to pay long-term care expenses; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I am very pleased to begin this session with re-introduction of a measure to help Americans to better afford health care. Last Congress, I introduced S. 2066, which would have created a Savings Bond Income Tax-exemption for long-term care services. On July 17, 2000, this measure was adopted by the Senate as an amendment to S. 2389, the Marriage Penalty Reconciliation bill, but unfortunately was not retained in the final version of the legislation. As we all know, Congress did not pass any significant tax relief for health care coverage last year. Today, I am joined by Senators DURBIN, HAGEL, CORZINE and LANDRIEU in re-submitting this legislation.

Many have expressed their continuing interest in enacting our proposal which would result in a revenue loss of less than $22 million over ten years as estimated by the Joint Committee on Taxation while offering significant help in the financing of long-term health care needs. It is currently forecasted that in the next 30 years, half of all women and a third of all men in the United States will spend a portion of their life in a nursing home at a cost of $40,000 to $90,000 per year per person. I believe the proposed legislation would provide an excellent opportunity to assist millions of Americans facing the financial burdens of long-term care.

The bill we are re-introducing today would exclude United States savings bond income from gross income if used to pay for long-term health care expenses. It will assist individuals struggling to accommodate costs associated with many chronic medical conditions and the aging process. Families that claim dependents-in-laws as dependents on their tax returns would qualify for this tax credit if savings bond income is used to pay for long-term care services. "Sandwich generation" families paying for both college education for their children and long-term care services for their parents could use the tax credit for either program or a combined credit up to the allowable amount.

The last Congress took an important step toward our growing long-term care needs by enacting H.R. 4040, the Long-Term Care Security Act, H.R. 4040, which was signed into law on September 19, 2000, created the largest employer-based long-term care insurance program in American history. Additional steps are needed and our proposal will make long-term care more obtainable by more Americans. I urge you to support this needed tax relief for Americans struggling with the high cost of assistive and nursing home care.

I ask that this proposal to provide tax relief for long-term care services be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. FEINGOLD (for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. WELLSTONE, and Mr. CORZINE): S. 233. A bill to place a moratorium on executions by the Federal Government and urge the States to do the same, while a National Commission on the Death Penalty reviews the fairness of the imposition of the death penalty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, one year ago today, Governor George Ryan took the bold step of placing a moratorium on executions in Illinois. He refused to sign off on a single execution in Illinois. Why? Because he saw that the system by which people were sentenced to death in Illinois was terribly flawed. In fact, by the time Governor Ryan made his decision, Illinois had seen more exonerations of innocent people than executions. There had been 13 exonerations and 12 executions. Of the 13 people found innocent, some were wrongfully convicted based on police or prosecutorial misconduct. DNA testing proved yet another 5 exonerations. And in some cases, it was students from Northwestern University—people very much outside the criminal justice system—who played a key role in finding and presenting the evidence for the release of wrongfully condemned men.

What did Governor Ryan do in the face of this risk of executing innocent people? Governor Ryan recognized the moral stakes that faced him and took the courageous step of suspending executions. He said, "until I can be sure with moral certainty that no innocent man or woman is facing a lethal injection, no one will meet that fate." Is that too much to ask that innocent men and women not be put to death? I believe the vast majority of Americans would say it is not too much to ask.

Governor Ryan has been an ardent death penalty supporter, having argued vehemently for its use while a member of the Illinois legislature. But now, as Governor, he was faced with the awesome responsibility of carrying out the final stage of this punishment. Following his decision to place a moratorium on executions, he promptly appointed a panel of distinguished prosecutors and defense lawyers, as well as civic and political leaders. That panel is charged with thoroughly reviewing the flaws in the administration of the death penalty in Illinois.

But these problems—and particularly the risk of executing an innocent person—exist throughout our Nation. That is why today I rise to re-introduce the National Death Penalty Moratorium Act. This bill seeks to apply the wisdom of Governor Ryan and the people of Illinois to the federal government and all states that authorize the use of capital punishment. I am pleased that my distinguished colleagues, Senators LEVIN, WELLSTONE and CORZINE, have joined me in cosponsoring this bill.

Governor Ryan’s decision was a watershed event. During the last year, his action was a significant factor in unleashing a renewed, national debate on the death penalty. For the first time in many years, people are beginning to understand that our system is fallible and can be made. Mistakes have been made. But mistakes should not be made, particularly when mistakes can mean the difference between life and death. In fact, overall support for the death penalty has dropped to an almost 20-year low. According to an NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll, 63 percent of Americans support a suspension of executions while questions of fairness are addressed.

The time to prevent the execution of the innocent is now. The time to restore fairness and justice is now. The time to act is now. The time for a moratorium is now.

Governor Ryan was greatly troubled by the number of innocent people sent to death row in Illinois—13 people, and still counting. Since the 1970s, 93 people have been exonerated nationwide. At the same time, we have executed close to 700 people. That means for every six people who have been exonerated, we have found one person sitting on death row who should not have been there. And it's not just Illinois that has sent innocent people to death row. Twenty-two of the 38 states that authorize capital punishment have had exonerations. In fact, Florida actually exceeds Illinois in total number of people exonerated: Florida has had 20. Oklahoma has exonerated 7, Texas has exonerated 7 people, Georgia has exonerated 6 people, and on and on. Mr. President, while we explore ways to reduce and eliminate the risk of executing the innocent, not a single person should be executed. The time to act is now. The time for a moratorium is now.

My distinguished colleague from Vermont, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator LEAHY, has championed the need for access to modern DNA testing and certain minimum standards of competency for defense counsel in capital cases. I have joined him and many of our distinguished colleagues, including Senators GORDON SMITH, COLLINS, JEFFORDS, and LEVIN, to support the Innocence Protection Act. This bill would bring greater fairness to the administration of the death penalty. I commend Senator LEAHY for his leadership on this bill, particularly for highlighting the need for access to modern DNA testing.

During the result of his leadership, the American people are beginning to understand the value and necessity of modern DNA testing in our criminal justice system. But while we work to pass these needed reforms, a time-out is the only way to ensure the integrity and fairness of our criminal justice system. The time for a moratorium is now.

According to a study led by Columbia University Law Professor Jim Liebman and released last June, the overall rate of error in America’s death penalty system is 68 percent. Reviewing over 4,500 appeals between 1973 and 1995, the report found that courts detected serious, reversible error in nearly 7 of every 10 of the death penalty cases that were fully reviewed. It is appalling that the system is producing so many mistakes. And, of course, the question remains: Are we in fact catching all the mistakes?

The Columbia study is further evidence that Illinois’s problems are not unique. The overall error rate in Illinois was 66 percent, just below the national average, which means that some states are well above Illinois. I can’t be more clear: The serious, reversible error that results in reversals is a phenomenon nationally, not just in Illinois.

In the words of the study’s authors, our system is “collapsing under the weight of its own mistakes.” Mr. President, if our death penalty system was a business enterprise that had an error rate in producing widgets of 68 percent, that business would undertake a thorough, top to bottom review. Let’s conduct a similar review of our nation’s death penalty system.

The Columbia study found that the most common errors are (1) egregiously incompetent defense counsel who failed to look for important evidence that the defendant was innocent or did not deserve to die; and (2) police or prosecutors who discovered that kind of evidence but suppressed it, again keeping it from the jury. On retrial where results are known, 62 percent of the reversals resulted in sentences less than death, while another 7 percent were found to be innocent of the crime that sent them to death row. When the system sends an innocent person to death row, there is a double loss: the innocent person is robbed of freedom and the real killer is set free, free to potentially do more harm.

Senator LEAHY’s Innocence Protection Act is a first step in the fight to ensure that defendants facing capital charges receive competent legal representation. We have heard stories of sleeping lawyers, drunk lawyers, lawyers who are paid less than a living wage, all of whom are lawyers who have represented people subsequently convicted and sentenced to death. But, as the Columbia study shows, access to modern DNA testing and efforts to ensure competent counsel in capital cases are only two of the many menacing problems plaguing the administration of the death penalty.

The second common error, according to the Columbia study, is the role of police or prosecutorial misconduct in suppressing evidence that could mean the difference between innocence, or life and death. The risk of police or prosecutorial misconduct is increased in capital cases. Why? Because capital cases are usually high profile, high stakes cases, particularly for the police or prosecutor’s personal, professional advancement. One problem involves the use of jailhouse informant testimony. Police or prosecutors use jailhouse informants who claim to have heard the defendant confess to a crime. These informants’ testimony, however, is often unverifiable and may have a strong incentive to lie: their testimony to convict another person can mean reduced charges or a lighter sentence in their own case.

Similarly, prosecutors may rely on the testimony of co-defendants who also may have strong incentives to lie to avoid tougher charges or harsher sentences. Yet another area of police misconduct involves false confessions. Take the case of Gary Gauger. Gauger's conviction was based on false confessions from his parents on the basis of a false confession obtained by police. In 1993, he was convicted and sent to Illinois’ death row. The main piece of evidence against him was a so-called “confession” that the police claimed they obtained after holding Gauger for 21 hours without food or access to an attorney. The police wrote out a version of the murder and tried to convince Gauger that he had killed his parents. It was a cold bungling, the need for access to modern DNA testing and efforts to ensure competent counsel in capital cases. The time to act is now. The time for a moratorium is now.

Fortunately for Gauger, Northwestern University Law Professor Larry Marshall took over his case and Gauger’s conviction was reversed. In the meantime, the real killers were discovered when FBI agents listened to wiretapped conversations during an FBI investigation of a motorcycle gang, heard the killers describe murdering Gauger’s parents.

Gauger finally got his freedom, but only after being unfairly and unjustly dragged through our criminal justice system. Our law enforcement officers do a great job, but we must act to understand the role of misconduct by police and prosecutors and its contribution to creating a high rate of error in capital cases. The time to act is now. The time for a moratorium is now.

Another problem with our nation’s administration of the death penalty is... the glaring racial disparity in decisions about who shall be executed. One of the most disturbing statistics suggests that white victims are valued more highly by the system than non-whites. Since reinstatement of the modern death penalty, 89 percent of capital cases have white victims, though murder victims are African American or white in roughly equal numbers. Nationwide, more than half the death row inmates are African Americans or Hispanic Americans. Racial disparities are particularly pronounced at the federal level. According to a report released by the Justice Department in September 2000, whether a defendant lives or dies in the federal system appears to relate to the color of the defendant’s skin or the federal district in which the prosecution takes place. The report also found that 80 percent of the cases submitted for death penalty prosecution authorization involved minority defendants. Furthermore, according to the Department of Justice, white defendants are more likely than black defendants to negotiate plea bargains saving them from the death penalty in Federal cases. In fact, currently, 16 of the 20, or 80 percent, death row inmates are racial or ethnic minorities.

The federal death penalty system also shows a troubling geographic disparity. The Department of Justice report shows that United States Attorneys in only 5 of 94 Federal districts—1 each in Virginia, Maryland, Puerto Rico, and 2 in New York—submit 40 percent of all cases in which the death penalty is considered. In fact, U.S. attorneys who have frequently recommended seeking the death penalty are often from States with a high number of executions under State law, including Texas, Virginia, and Missouri.

The National Institute of Justice is already setting into motion a comprehensive study of these racial and geographic disparities. Federal executions should not proceed until these disparities are fully studied and discussed, and until the federal death penalty process is subjected to necessary remedial action. In addition to racial and geographic disparities in the administration of the federal death penalty, other serious questions exist about the fairness and reliability of federal death penalty prosecutions.

Confessions are frequently obtained under serious scrutiny, specifically raising questions of racial and geographic disparities. Federal prosecutors rely heavily on confessions, thus making subsequent scrutiny of the legality and reliability of such interrogations more difficult. Federal prosecutors rely heavily on predictions of “future dangerousness”—predictions deemed unreliable and misleading by the American Psychiatric Association and the American Psychological Association—to secure death sentences.

I was pleased when, in December 2000, President Clinton stayed Juan Raul Garza’s execution and ordered the Justice Department to conduct further reviews of the racial and regional disparities in the federal death penalty system. Before the federal government takes this step, resuming executions for the first time in almost 40 years, we should be sure that our system of administering the ultimate punishment is fair and just.

I urge my colleagues to join me in co-sponsoring the National Death Penalty Moratorium Act. This bill would place a moratorium on federal executions until the Justice Department takes this step, resuming executions for the first time in almost 40 years, we should be sure that our system of administering the ultimate punishment is fair and just. The need for a moratorium could not be more critical than it is today. The time to act is now. The time for a moratorium is now.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 233
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE
This Act may be cited as the “National Death Penalty Moratorium Act of 2001”.

TITLE I—MORATORIUM ON THE DEATH PENALTY
SEC. 101. FINDINGS.
Congress makes the following findings:

(A) The fair administration of the Federal death penalty has recently come under serious scrutiny, specifically raising questions of racial and geographic disparities:

(1) Eighty percent of Federal death row inmates are members of minority groups.

(2) A report released by the Department of Justice on September 12, 2000, found that 80 percent of defendants who were charged with death-eligible offenses under Federal law and whose cases were submitted by the United States attorneys under the Department’s death penalty decision-making procedures were African American, Hispanic American, or members of other minority groups.

(3) The Department of Justice report shows that United States attorneys who have frequently recommended seeking the death penalty in the administration of the federal death penalty are often from States with a high number of executions under State law, including Texas, Virginia, and Missouri.

(B) The Department of Justice report shows that white defendants are more likely than black defendants to negotiate plea bargains saving them from the death penalty in Federal cases.

(C) A study conducted by the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights in 1994 concluded that 89 percent of defendants selected for capital prosecution under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 were either African American or Hispanic American.

(D) The National Institute of Justice has already set into motion a comprehensive study of these racial and geographic disparities.

(E) Federal executions should not proceed until these disparities are fully studied, discussed, and until the federal death penalty process is subjected to necessary remedial action.

(F) In addition to racial and geographic disparities in the administration of the federal death penalty, other serious questions exist about the fairness and reliability of federal death penalty prosecutions:

(i) Federal prosecutors are not required to provide discovery sufficiently ahead of trial to permit the defense to be prepared to use this information effectively in defending their clients.

(ii) The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), in increasing isolation from the rest of the Nation’s law enforcement agencies, refuses to make electronic recordings of interrogations that produce confessions, thus making subsequent scrutiny of the legality and reliability of such interrogations more difficult. Federal prosecutors rely heavily on confessions, thus making subsequent scrutiny of the legality and reliability of such interrogations more difficult.

(G) Federal prosecutors are not required to provide discovery sufficiently ahead of trial to permit the defense to be prepared to use this information effectively in defending their clients.

(H) The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), in increasing isolation from the rest of the Nation’s law enforcement agencies, refuses to make electronic recordings of interrogations that produce confessions, thus making subsequent scrutiny of the legality and reliability of such interrogations more difficult. Federal prosecutors rely heavily on confessions, thus making subsequent scrutiny of the legality and reliability of such interrogations more difficult.

criminal trials, is necessary to meet constitutional requirements. There is significant evidence that States are not providing this heightened level of due process. For example:

(i) In the most comprehensive review of modern death sentencing, Professor James Liebman and researchers at Columbia University, found that, during the period 1973 to 1996, 68 percent of all death penalty cases reviewed were overturned due to serious constitutional errors. In the wake of the Liebman reviews, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court set out standards for determining competency in the case of Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984). States were required to have access to competent counsel throughout death penalty stages. For example:

(ii) Forty percent of the cases overturned were reversed in Federal court after having been upheld by the States.

(B) The high rate of error throughout all death penalty jurisdictions suggests that there is a grave risk that innocent persons may be hung, or will likely be, wrongly executed. The Supreme Court has never conclusively addressed the issue of whether executing an innocent person would in and of itself violate the Constitution, in Hernandez v. Texas. Nevertheless, a majority of the court expressed the view that a persuasive demonstration of actual innocence would violate substantive due process without regard to any constitutional. In any event, the wrongful conviction and sentencing of a person to death is a serious concern for many Americans. For example:

(i) After 13 innocent people were released from Illinois death row in the same period that 13 were executed, Governor George Ryan of Illinois imposed a moratorium on executions until he could be “sure with moral certainty” that no innocent man or woman is facing a lethal injection, no one will meet that fate.

(ii) Since 1973, 93 persons have been freed and exonerated from death row across the country, most after serving lengthy sentences.

(C) Wrongful convictions create a serious public safety problem because the true killer is still at large while the innocent person languishes in prison.

(D) There are many systemic problems within the death penalty that people have been convicted as such mistaken identification, reliance on jailhouse informants, reliance on faulty forensic testing and no access to reliable DNA testing. For example:

(i) A study of cases of innocent people who were later exonerated, conducted by attorneys Barry Scheck and Peter Neufeld with “The Innocence Project” at Cardozo Law School, showed that mistaken identifications of eyewitnesses or victims contributed to 84 percent of the wrongful convictions.

(ii) In death row cases, 232 cases were convicted prior to 1994 and did not receive the benefit of modern DNA testing. At least 10 individuals sentenced to death have been exonerated through post-conviction DNA testing, some within days of execution. Yet in spite of the current widespread prevalence and availability of DNA testing, many States have procedural barriers blocking the introduction of post-conviction DNA testing. More than 30 States have laws that require a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence to be filed within 6 months or less.

(iii) The widespread use of jailhouse snitches who earn reduced charges or sentences for admissions” by fellow inmates to unsolved crimes can lead to wrongful convictions.

(iv) The misuse of forensic evidence can lead to wrongful convictions. A recently released report from the Texas Defender Service entitled “A State of Denial: Texas and the Harrowing Case of Official Forensic Misconduct” including 121 cases where expert psychiatrists testified “with absolute certainty that the defendant would be a dangerous criminal without even interviewing the defendant.”

(E) The sixth amendment to the Constitution guarantees all accused persons access to competent counsel. The Supreme Court set out standards for determining competency in the case of Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984). States were required to have access to competent counsel throughout death penalty stages. For example:

(i) Ninety percent of capital defendants cannot hire their own attorney.

(ii) Fewer than one-quarter of the 38 death penalty States have set any standards for competency of counsel and in those few States, these standards were set only recently. In most States, any person who passes a bar examination, even if that attorney has never represented a client in any type of case, may represent a client in a death penalty case.

(iii) Thirty-seven percent of capital cases were reversed because of ineffective assistance of counsel, according to the Columbia study.

(iv) The recent Texas report noted problems with Texas death penalty who were found to be innocent by DNA evidence, suffered discipline for ethical lapses or for being under the influence of drugs or alcohol while representing an indigent capital defendant at trial.

(v) Poor lawyering was also cited by Governor Ryan in Illinois as a basis for a moratorium. Death penalty defendants were represented by lawyers who were later disciplined or disbarred for unethical conduct.

(F) The Supreme Court has held that it is a violation of the eighth amendment to impose the death penalty in a manner that is arbitrary, capricious, or discriminatory. McKelvey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279 (1987). Studies consistently indicate racial disparity in the application of the death penalty both for the defendants and the victims. The death penalty rates of black defendants were 1.3 times higher than those of their white counterparts. The disparity is most pronounced in cases involving blacks as victims. Of the defendants who were convicted of killing their white victim, 50 percent of the defendants were black, 7 percent were Latino and 2 percent Native American. Of the victims in the underlying murder, 76 percent were white, 18 percent were black, 2 percent were Latino, 2 percent were Native American. Of the victims in the underlying murder, 76 percent were white, 18 percent were black, 2 percent were Latino, 2 percent were Native American. Of the victims in the underlying murder, 76 percent were white, 18 percent were black, 2 percent were Latino, 2 percent were Native American. These figures show a continuing trend since reinstatement of the modern death penalty of a predominance of white victims’ cases. Death penalty States may consider race and ethnicity, which implies that white victims are considered more valuable in the criminal justice system.

(G) Executions are conducted predominately in the South. Nineteen percent of all executions in 2000 were conducted in the South. Only 3 States outside the south, Arizona, California, and Missouri, conducted an execution, 2 of which were executed for almost as many executions as all the remaining States combined.

By Mr. SHELBY:
S. J. Res. 3. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which requires (except during time of war and subject to suspension by the Congress) that the total amount of money expended by the United States during any fiscal year not to exceed the amount of certain revenue received by the United States during such fiscal year and not exceed 20 per centum of the gross national product of the United States during the previous calendar year: to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Budget Amendment

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. This is the same amendment which I have introduced in every Congress since the 97th Congress. Throughout my entire tenure in Congress, during the good economic times and the bad, I have devoted much time and attention to this idea. I would believe that the most significant thing that the Federal Government can do to enhance the lives of all Americans and future generation is to ensure that we have a balanced Federal budget. Our Founding Fathers, wise men indeed, had great concerns regarding the capability of those in government to operate within budgetary constraints. Alexander Hamilton once wrote that "* * * there is a general propensity in those who govern, founded in the constitution of man, to shift the burden from the present to a future day." Thomas Jefferson commented on the moral significance of this "shifting of the burden from the present to the future. He said: "* "The question of whether one generation has the right to bind posterity with our debts and morally bound to pay them ourselves."

I completely agree with these sentiments. History has shown that Hamilton was correct. Those who govern have in fact saddled future generations with the responsibility of paying for their debts. For a large part of the past 30 years, annual deficits became routine and the federal government built up massive debt. Furthermore, I believe that Jefferson's assessment of the significance of this is also correct: Intergenerational debt shifting is morally wrong.

Some may find it strange that I am talking about the problems of budget deficits and the need for a balanced budget amendment at a time when the budget is actually in balance. However, I raise this issue now, as I have time and again in the past, because of the seminal importance involved in establishing a permanent mechanism to ensure that our annual federal budget is always balanced. Without such an amendment there is a no guarantee that the budget will remain balanced. A permanently balanced budget would have a considerable impact on the everyday lives of the American people. A balanced budget would dramatically lower interest rates thereby saving money for anyone with a home mortgage, a student loan, a car loan, credit card debt, or any other interest rate sensitive payment responsibility. Simply by balancing its books, the Federal Government would put real money into the hands of hard working people. In all practical sense, the effect of such fiscal responsibility on the part of the Federal Government would be translated into a significant tax cut for the American people. Moreover, if the government demand for capital is reduced, more money would be available for private sector use, which in turn, would generate substantial economic growth and create thousands of new jobs. More money in the pockets of Americans, more job creation by the economy, a simple step could make this reality-a balanced budget amendment. Furthermore, a balanced budget amendment would also provide the discipline to keep us on the course towards reducing our massive national debt.

Currently, the Federal Government pays hundreds of billions of dollars in interest payments on the debt each year. This means we spend billions of dollars each year on exactly, nothing. At the end of the year we have nothing of substance to show for these expenditures. These expenditures do not provide better educations for our children, they do not make our Nation safer, they do not further important medical research, they do not build new roads. They do nothing but pay the obligation created by the fiscal irresponsibility of those who came earlier. In the end, we need to ensure that we continue on the road to a balanced budget so that we can end the wasteful practice of making interest payments on the deficit. However, opponents of a balanced budget amendment act like it is something extraordinary. In reality, a balanced budget amendment will only require the government to do what every American already has to do: balance their checkbook. It will simply mean that the promise to the American people, and more importantly, to future generations of Americans, that the government will act responsibly.

Thankfully the budget is currently balanced. However, there are no guarantees that it will stay as such. We could see dramatic changes in economic conditions. The drain on the government caused by the retirement of the Baby Boomers may exceed expectations. Future leaders may fail to the responsibility of ensuring that the Federal Government would be able to make that promise. Alexander Hamilton wrote about so long ago. We need to establish guarantees for future generations. The balanced budget amendment is the best such mechanism available.

(1) designates August 16, 2001, as “National Airborne Day”;
(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling on Federal, State, and local administrators and the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. Thurmond. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to introduce a Senate resolution which designates August 16, 2001 as “National Airborne Day.”

On June 25, 1940, the War Department authorized the Parachute Test Platoon to experiment with the potential use of airborne troops. The Parachute Test Platoon, which was composed of 48 volunteers, performed the first official army parachute jump on August 16, 1940. The success of the Platoon led to the formation of a large and successful airborne contingent that has served from World War Two, the regiments of the 82nd served in Italy at Anzio, in France at Normandy (where I landed with them), and at the Battle of the Bulge.

The 11th, 13th, 17th, and 101st Airborne Divisions and numerous other regimental and battalion-sized airborne units were also organized following the success of the Parachute Test Platoon. In the last sixty years, these airborne forces have performed in important military and peace-keeping operations worldwide, and it is only fitting that we honor them.

Through passage of “National Airborne Day”, the Senate will reaffirm our support for the members of the airborne community and also show our gratitude for their tireless commitment to our Nation’s defense and ideals.

NOMINATION OF JOHN ASHCROFT

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the position of United States Attorney General is the most sensitive in the executive branch.

I have made a practice of setting a different standard for approval of persons nominated to serve in the President’s cabinet and those the President has chosen for federal judgeships.

In the former instance, there is a very strong presumption that the President should have the right to choose whomever he feels would effectively carry out his administration’s policies.

With a federal judge nominee, that presumption is lessened. Federal judges serve not at the pleasure of the President, but rather for a lifetime and represent the third, equal branch of government.

I place the appointment of an attorney general in between these two standards because of the office’s unique role.

The attorney general has far more autonomy than does any other cabinet head. The attorney general decides when and how to take legal action and use government resources supplied by taxpayer dollars.

Attorneys general do not just enforce the law. They have broad discretion to interpret the law, then enforce it based on that interpretation. Traditionally, the attorney general does not attend partisan politics to preserve the appearance of neutrality.

Rarely does the President interfere in the realm of the attorney general—a notable exception being when Attorney General Elliot Richardson resigned to avoid complying with President Nixon’s order to fire the special prosecutor investigating the Watergate burglary.

More often, the President consults the attorney general for legal counsel and follows that advice. The attorney general’s interpretations then become government policy.

Interpretation of a law by a United States attorney general has been responsible for some of this country’s proudest moments, and some of its most shameful. It was a United States attorney general, in the cabinet of President Martin Van Buren, who argued that the men and women who had rebelled against their slave masters on the Spanish ship Amistad, were properly and should be returned to captivity.

It was also the interpretation of civil rights statutes that led Attorney General Robert Kennedy to use federal troops to desegregate schools. Kennedy also chose to use the government’s resources to ensure the right of African-Americans to vote—filing more than 50 law suits in four states that were resisting change.

In large part because of this legacy, the attorney general has come to be seen as the primary defender of individuals’ basic civil rights.

Because of this protective role, and because of the discretionary nature of the job, the attorney general must be a person who commands the respect of all people in the country. That doesn’t mean that everyone has to agree with everything the attorney general has done in the past.

But the attorney general must be able to carry out the covenant that led America to come to be seen as the primary defender of individuals’ basic civil rights.

Because of this protective role, and because of the discretionary nature of the job, the attorney general must be a person who commands the respect of all people in the country. That doesn’t mean that everyone has to agree with everything the attorney general has done in the past.

But the attorney general must be able to carry out the covenant that led America to come to be seen as the primary defender of individuals’ basic civil rights.

Specifically, I am concerned about the investigation by the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division into allegations of discrimination in the November 7, 2000 election in Florida. These are serious allegations. These are not about chads, or butterflies or any of the other arcane voting terms that have made their way into the wider American lexicon. These are about Americans and their fundamental rights. These must be investigated by someone who has the trust and confidence of the public.

Investigations are now being conducted by the Department of Justice’s Civil Rights division and the United States Commission on Civil Rights.

The President has the obligation to ensure that the Civil Rights Division, and the United States Commission on Civil Rights, conduct investigations into allegations of election fraud.

The focus of these investigations is to determine whether individual acts, which denied citizens the right to vote, were just that—individual acts of incompetence and inefficiency—or whether they represented a conscious pattern intended to deny thousands of Floridians the right to vote.

I do not believe that we should delay the process of determining the fate of these few of the allegations. Donna DeSouza, a Miami attorney, wanted to teach her 5-year-old son about democracy by letting him punch her ballot. Instead she was told her name was not on the proper list, and was sent home without having cast a vote.

Ernest Duval is a Haitian American who lives in Palm Beach County. He, like many others, found the ballot layout confusing. He punched the wrong hole, recognized his mistake, and asked for a new ballot. His request was denied. He was left with no choice but to repunch the original. His ballot became an official “overvote” and was discarded. He told the NAACP “I left Haiti for the freedom to live in a free land. We have the right to choose the right person.”

Radio host Stacey Powers visited polling sites to encourage African-American voters and saw police officers harassing an elderly African-American man for doing nothing more than being in the neighborhood. After she reported it on the air, a police car followed her for five and a half miles.

These were not just the complaints of a few disenfranchised or intimidated voters. In an operation of this scale, responsible people recognize that unfortunate mistakes will happen. But on Election Day, complaints came from every corner of the state.

Voters in the City of Plantation were never notified that their polling place, Plantation Elementary School, had been demolished two weeks before Election Day. Reports were made of police officers’ blocking roads in close proximity to polling places and of minority voters being forced to show identification that white voters didn’t need to have. Phones in a number of minority precincts were not working, leaving precinct workers unable to call central election offices for help with broken machines and other problems.

Just as troubling was the information that came out after the election. Statistical analyses by civil rights groups and news organizations suggest that outdated or dilapidated voting equipment was most likely to be found in areas with a high concentration of minority voters. And so it followed that the minorities were far more likely to have their votes thrown out than were white Florida voters.

The question that remains is whether these were isolated, though widespread incidences, or if there is a broad, systematic pattern of discouraging or preventing minority votes.

If these allegations are swept under the rug, if they go without a thorough review—and prosecutions if necessary—there will be a permanent scar on the face of our democracy. These allegations are germane to these proceedings because the attorney general, by congressional statute, has almost total discretion to enforce federal voting rights laws.

The attorney general will decide how the investigation into these allegations proceeds—if it does at all—and what will come of the findings.

I asked Senator Ashcroft several questions to further understand his commitment to this investigation: Whether he could assure us that such an investigation could be completed in a timely matter. What was his plan of action for remedies if violations of the Voting Rights Act are identified? Would he consider appropriate decertification of all punch-card voting methods and other unreliable methods, or discontinue purges of the voter registration rolls until procedures are put in place to ensure that such purges are done in a uniform and non-discriminatory fashion? If the United States Commission on Civil Rights does discover instances of voter disenfranchisement, will the Department of Justice expand its investigation and aggressively prosecute violations of the Voting Rights Act? How will the Department of Justice use information from this election to make sure discrimination is not given free reign in the future?

In answering my questions, Senator Ashcroft said the right thing, but did so in a perfunctory manner. The answers were long on platitudes, short on specificity. He did not present a course of action in pursuit of the truth, nor offer potential solutions.

Had these answers been the only information available about Senator Ashcroft’s commitment to civil rights, I may have accepted them on their face and approved this nomination.

But Senator Ashcroft has a long record of public service that suggests enforcement of civil rights is not his highest priority. My colleagues on the Judiciary Committee raised questions about several of these incidents. I share their concern. I also believe, as his supporters have said, that Senator Ashcroft has a good heart and that he is a man of integrity.

I hope that my apprehensions about Senator Ashcroft turn out to have been unwarranted and that if confirmed, as I assume he will be, he will prove me wrong by carrying on a full, fair hearing of the allegations raised by thousands of Floridians.

I look forward to the opportunity to acknowledge my mistake. But I am not confident that action will follow words. Therefore, I will vote “no” on the confirmation of John Ashcroft for United States Attorney General.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Under the previous order, the Senate stands adjourned until the hour of 9 a.m. on Thursday, February 1, 2001. Thereupon, the Senate, at 8:08 p.m., adjourned in executive session until Thursday, February 1, 2001, at 9 a.m.

Andrew Goodman and James Chaney, were brutally murdered for trying to register African-Americans to vote.

More recently, Americans have been lulled into complacency about voting rights. We seem to believe that if there are no obvious deterrents to voting, like poll taxes, then there are no voting-rights violations.

The events of the past election should wake us up. The right to vote can be violated by armed men lurking menacingly at the door of the polling place.

The right to vote can also be stolen by antiquated voting equipment and careless or discriminatory purging of the voter rolls. Coupled with his record, Senator Ashcroft’s answers to my inquiries do not convince me of a genuine commitment to a forceful investigation and follow-up action of voting-rights violations in Florida.

I am not confident that action will follow words. Therefore, I will vote “no” on the confirmation of John Ashcroft for United States Attorney General.

RECOGNIZING MR. ROBERT SAKATA OF BRIGHTON, COLORADO

HON. BOB SCHAFFER
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize one of my constituents, Mr. Robert Sakata of Brighton, Colorado. This month, Mr. Sakata was awarded The Order of the Sacred Treasure, Gold Rays with Rosette, by the emperor of Japan for Sakata’s commitment to better relations between the United States and Japan.

Mr. Sakata has played a major role as an American ambassador of goodwill. He has visited Japan to talk to corporate executives about American businesses, and to Japanese farmers about U.S. farming. He has hosted the emperor and empress of Japan at his Colorado farm. He has served on various agriculture boards, as well as the Japan America Society of Colorado.

Such patriotism is especially remarkable given the obstacles posed to Mr. Sakata early in life. The son of a truck driver, Mr. Sakata was born in California to Japanese-American parents. During World War II, he was set to an internment camp in Topaz, Utah, suffering one of America’s greatest injustices. During that time, Mr. Sakata was sponsored by a Colorado resident who put him to work on a farm near Brighton. From that point on, farming became Mr. Sakata’s life.

After the war, Mr. Sakata began to farm for himself, with only 40 acres purchased on borrowed money. Today, Sakata Farms spans 3,000 acres of sweet corn, cabbage, onions and broccoli. His story is that of yet another American dream that came true because of hard work and perseverance.

I am extremely proud of Mr. Sakata. He is an extraordinary Coloradan and an outstanding American. His dedication to American-Japanese relations has made an enduring difference, especially within our agricultural community. I ask the House to join me in extending congratulations to Mr. Sakata of Colorado.

INTRODUCTION OF THE TEACHER TAX CUT ACT

HON. RON PAUL
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the Teacher Tax Cut Act. This bill provides every teacher in America with a $1,000 tax credit, thus raising every teacher’s take-home pay without increasing federal spending. Passage of this bill is a major first step toward treating those who have dedicated their lives to educating America’s children with the respect they deserve. Compared to other professionals teachers are underappreciated and underpaid. This must change if America is to have the finest education system in the world. Quality education is impossible without quality teaching. If we want to ensure that the most dedicated professionals attract the very best people possible we must make sure that teachers receive the compensation they deserve. For too long now, we have seen partisan battles and displays of heightened rhetoric about who wants to provide the most assistance to educators distract us from our important work of removing government-imposed barriers to educational excellence.

Since America’s teachers are underpaid because they are overtaxed, the best way to raise teacher take-home pay is to reduce their taxes. Simply by raising teacher’s take-home pay via a $1,000 tax credit we can accomplish a number of important things. First, we show a true commitment to education. We also let America’s teachers know that the American people and the Congress respect their work. Finally, and perhaps most importantly, by raising teacher take-home pay, the Teacher Tax Cut Act encourages highly-qualified professionals to enter, and remain in, the teaching profession.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I once again ask my colleagues to put aside partisan bickering and unite around the idea of helping educators by supporting the Teacher Tax Cut Act.

TRIBUTE TO JIM NICHOLSON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this moment to recognize an outstanding citizen and a remarkable leader, my friend Jim Nicholson, the now former head of the Republican National Committee. During his tenure, Jim took the GOP to new heights. On his watch, the Republican Party took control of both the House and Senate. Jim is being honored on January 26, 2001 in Denver, Colorado for his accomplished service as Chairman of the Republican National Committee. During his tenure, Jim took the GOP to new heights. and the United States Senate. For his service to the party and the American people, I would now like to pay tribute to a great American and friend.

When Chairman Nicholson began as RNC chairman, the committee was $10 million in debt. But under Chairman Nicholson’s able leadership, that debt was abolished. When Jim left the RNC, it was $15 million in the black. Along with balancing the RNC’s book, Chairman Nicholson also boldly led the RNC into the Internet age, incorporating technological advances in the day-to-day affairs of the organization. The RNC collected 975,000 e-mail addresses from Republican activists during Jim’s tenure, up from just 17,000 at the start of 2000.

Much of the electoral success that the GOP experienced under Jim’s tutelage was due to the massive get out the vote effort created at Jim’s initiative. He triggered the largest communications action in RNC history during the 2000 election cycle, in which the Party mailed over 100 million pieces of direct mail and made 60 million phone calls. This coordinated effort to get out the GOP’s message was a major, if leading, cause of the Party’s success in November 2000.

More importantly, the RNC also made meaningful strides under Jim’s supervision in reaching out to minority communities. Due in large measure to Jim’s efforts in this critical area, President Bush earned the highest percentage of Hispanic votes of any Republican Presidential candidate in history. Jim’s success in this regard leaves a solid foundation for the Party to build on in the coming weeks, months and years. This is a legacy that Jim can, and should, take great pride in!

As has been well documented, Jim’s yeoman’s work as Chairman of the Republican Party was the continuation of a life-long commitment to serving his country. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Jim fought bravely and with great distinction during the Vietnam War, earning numerous awards and commendations.

Throughout his life, Jim has devoted himself to the cause of his country. In doing so, he has distinguished himself mightily. As Jim leaves the GOP Chairmanship and moves on to new pursuits, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank him for his remarkable work. In my opinion, Jim will long be remembered as one of the most skilled, most effective and most accomplished leaders in the storied history of the GOP. For this service, we are all grateful.

REPEAL THE NATIONAL VOTER REGISTRATION ACT

HON. BOB STUMP
OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, on the First day of the 107th Congress, I introduced legislation, H.R. 189, to repeal the National Voter Registration Act of 1993, the “motor voter” bill.

The motor voter law, which was championed by the Clinton Administration, took effect in most states on January 1, 1995. It requires states to allow citizens to register to vote by mail, when applying for a driver’s license and at certain public assistance agencies. Although motor voter’s supporters touted the measure as a way to increase voter turn-out by simplifying voter registration, the law has done very little to invigorate election interest. To the contrary, it has devalued voter registration and given citizens good reason to question the integrity of their vote.

It is interesting to note that in 1992, President Bush and Vice President Quayle, in an attempt stat- ing it amounted to an “open invitation to fraud and corruption.” His words could not have been more prophetic. Since the law’s implementation, numerous incidents of illegal voting have surfaced. In fact, motor voter could be responsible for inviting millions of non-citizens and illegal aliens to register to vote.

Motor voter has also created numerous ad- ministrative headaches for local election officials and has made the process of purging in-active voters far more cumbersome. It inhibits their ability to remove “dead wood” from their rolls by requiring them to keep registrants who fail to vote or who are unresponsive to voter registration correspondence to be maintained on the voter rolls for years. Motor voter is also responsible for numerous election-related glitches. In many jurisdictions, voters who thought they registered to vote when applying for a driver’s license, found they were not regis- tered when they went to the polls to cast their ballots. As noteworthy, in Durham county, North Carolina, a law created an odd statistical disparity. In 1999, $137 million in registration correspondence to be maintained on the voter rolls for years. Motor voter is also responsible for numerous election-related glitches. In many jurisdictions, voters who thought they registered to vote when applying for a driver’s license, found they were not regis- tered when they went to the polls to cast their ballots. As noteworthy, in Durham county, North Carolina, a law created an odd statistical disparity. In 1999, the number of registered voters in the county surpassed the number of residents old enough to vote.

Mr. Speaker, motor voter is unreasonable and overzealous. There is no need for this unnecessary federal law. The states carry the responsibility for ad- ministering all elections and should be able to do so unburdened by unnecessary and burden- some federal intervention.

Mr. Speaker, previous efforts to repeal motor voter has been unsuccessful, largely because of President Clinton’s position. Under the Bush Administration, I believe we have an opportunity to move forward with this impor- tant reform and reinstate confidence and integrity in our electoral system. I respectfully urge my colleagues to join me in re-establishing the right of the states and local juris- dictrions to administer voting programs that work best for them by cosponsoring H.R. 189.

THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES CHILD CARE ACT, H.R. 251

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Federal Employees Child Care Act, H.R. 251 which will improve the quality of federal child care facilities throughout the country.

I was first introduced to the horrors of inad- equate day care by former constituents, Mark and Julie Fiedelholtz of Pembroke Pines, Flor- ida. Mr. Fiedelholtz asked for my help after the tragic death of his 3 month old son, Jeremy. Left at a day care center for merely two hours, little Jeremy died as a result of deplorable conditions, unqualified personnel and the bla- tant lack of respect for the laws intended to protect our children. Although this horrifying story did not take place at a federal center, the need for clean, safe and quality conditions for our children has to be ensured in every child care center throughout our Nation.

Because many of these child care facilities are housed in federal buildings, state and local authorities have little or no jurisdiction regard- ing health, fire and safety codes. This Act re- quires all federal centers to be responsible for maintaining these basic regulations. With over thousand federal owned or operated child care centers in the United States capable of accommodating 200,000 children, this legisla- tion is essential.

After conferring with representatives from various federal agencies, I learned that many federal centers, such as the facilities operated by GSA, follow their own standards which in most instances are higher than most states. I want to stress that it is not the intention of this bill to lower any federal agency standards, should they be greater than the state or local regulations. Instead, we are looking to raise the standards of those federal centers across the country whose standards fall below state and local codes and hold them accountable for failure to do so. This bill does not allow state or local law enforcement officials to enter federal facilities to perform checks of any kind unless GSA agrees to this. This option is left en- tirely up to the discretion of GSA and is not mandated by this bill.

This legislation includes language which will help GSA in its quest to provide a more com- prehensive day care plan, by allowing GSA to expand its child care services to more children allowing its centers to join into a consortium of private businesses and health care providers. This provision will enable agencies to partner with external organizations, to conduct pilot programs and to search for new methods of providing child care assistance to federal em- ployees.

Our children are so important and the care they receive during their first 5 years of devel- opment are essential to raising intelligent and productive members of society. This legislation can be a great first step in ensuring the posi- tive development and growth of our children. Accordingly, I look forward to working with my colleagues on additional child care measures.

IN MEMORY OF CLARENCE “SONNY” KENNER

HON. KAREN MccARTHY
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish today to pay tribute to an American Jazz legend, Mr. Clarence “Sonny” Kenner. Regret- tally, Mr. Kenner died earlier this month, but his inspiring music will live on for generations to come.

His standing room only celebration in Kan- sas City January 29 began with a two hour “Jam Session” where local musicians who had played with Sonny over the past 50 years sat on stage and said, “Sonny Side of the Street.” His fellow musicians said Sonny was all about sharing when he played. It was love he was sharing—his love through music. An example of Sonny’s love for music was his appearance earlier this year at The Levee where he “jammed” with fellow artists while battling the health problems.

In his eulogy, Reverend Sam Mann of Saint Mark’s Church spoke from the Book of Num- bers in the Bible, Chapter 6, verses 24 to 26.
John is an extraordinary model of the ideal citizen. John has not only had an exceptional career at the federal protection service, but he’s also been highly active in his community. John started his career at FPS in 1972 in Cheyenne, Wyoming. He was transferred around the country until he landed in Denver in 1972. After arriving in Denver, he held an array of positions from Line officer to his present position Director. During his career, he was a model of self-less service, focusing his energies and time on the betterment of his community.

As a member of the Telephone Pioneers, he also assisted in providing various activities throughout Colorado for the hearing and vision impaired. He worked on events such as the Easter Egg Hunt for the visually impaired and wiring of seats at the Barnum and Bailey Circus for the visually impaired. He also took part in the Law Enforcement Torch Run for the Special Olympics, both as a runner during the torch run or as a volunteer at the events. Moreover, he also sponsored numerous sports from baseball to football and bowling for underprivileged children. John has also worked on Wilderness on Wheels providing a boardwalk up Kenoshapass for wheelchair access and allowing for all to enjoy the wonders of wilderness. For all these reasons, and many more, John deserves the commendation of this community.

It is with this, Mr. Speaker, that I say thank you to Mr. John for his dedication and service to his community over the years and congratulate him on an outstanding career. He has worked hard for our community and for our great state.

IN MEMORY OF JAMES L. SMITH
HON. IKE SKELTON
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I inform the House of the death of James L. Smith of Marshall, Missouri.

James Smith was born on March 28, 1917, in Marshall, Missouri, a son of George and Louise Ross Smith. He attended Missouri Valley College and was an Air Force veteran of World War II.

I had the opportunity to serve in the Missouri General Assembly with Jim, who served as a State Representative from 1974 to 1984. In addition, Jim and his wife, Mildred, owned and operated the Valley Drive-In in Marshall for 22 years. He was also a sales representative for the Heynen Monument Company for 30 years.

Jim was a member of the First Christian Church, where he served on the church board and as a deacon.

Mr. Speaker, Jim was a valuable leader of his church and a long time friend of mine. He was a role model for younger people interested in public service. I know the Members of the House will join me in extending heartfelt condolences to his family: his wife, Mildred; his two children, Jamie and Clyde; and his three grandchildren.

HONORING CHARLES HENNINGER
HON. BOB SCHAFFER
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, today I honor an outstanding volunteer who is using his life to improve the lives of others. Charles Henninger is a big man with an even bigger heart. After retiring from his job as a director of a Civic Center in Greenwich, Connecticut, Mr. Henninger didn’t look to slow down, he went looking to serve.

For the past seven years since his retirement, Mr. Henninger has served as a volunteer at the Catholic Charities Northern’s homeless shelter in Fort Collins, Colorado. He sees his work at the shelter as a way to directly assist people and serve their specific needs and as he says, “you get to see immediate results.”

Mr. Speaker, it is important for all Americans to follow the lead of those special individuals who give to the needs of the less fortunate. Charlie Henninger challenges us all to look around us and find ways to serve others and lend a helping hand. Mr. Henninger can recount many stories of the people he’s met and helped. I’m certain he would tell us that each memory is a treasure of his life.

At the Catholic Charities Northern homeless shelter, Mr. Henninger and the other volunteers aid those that government never could. If a traveling family’s car breaks down, the state police bring them into the shelter and they are fed and the volunteers get them bus tickets to their destination. This year for Christmas, Mr. Henninger and his wife Joan, who also works at the shelter, organized volunteers to deliver hot meals to over 300 homebound residents in the Fort Collins area.

Mr. Speaker in offering this tribute to Mr. Henninger, I am certainly recognizing a great man, and powerful Christian example.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FAMILY EDUCATION FREEDOM ACT
HON. RON PAUL
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Family Education Freedom Act, a bill to empower millions of working and middle-class Americans to choose a non-public education for their children, as well as making it easier for parents to actively participate in improving public schools. The Family Education Freedom Act accomplishes its goals by allowing American parents a tax credit of up to $3,000 for the expenses incurred in sending their child to private, public, parochial, other religious school, or for home schooling their children.

The Family Education Freedom Act returns the fundamental principal of a truly free economy to America’s education system: what the great economist Ludwig von Mises called “consumer sovereignty.” Consumer sovereignty simply means consumers decide who succeeds or fails in the market. Businesses that best satisfy consumer demand will be the most successful. Consumer sovereignty is the

TRIBUTE TO JOHN B. HUMPHRIES
HON. SCOTT McINNIS
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to congratulate a remarkable gentleman, John B. Humphries, for his outstanding 30-year career with the Federal Protective Service. John is completing his career as assistant director for the Federal Protective Service where he was responsible for directing all FPS activities within the Rocky Mountain Region. John’s contributions to the citizens of Colorado are great in number and deserve the recognition of Congress.
means by which the free market maximizes human happiness. Currently, consumers are less than sovereign in the education “market.” Funding decisions are increasingly controlled by the federal government. Because “he who pays the piper calls the tune,” public, and even private schools, are paying closer attention to the dictates of federal “educrats” while ignoring the wishes of the parents to an ever-greater degree. As such, the lack of consumer sovereignty in education is destroying parental control of education and replacing it with state control.

Loss of control is a key reason why so many of America’s parents express dissatisfaction with the educational system. According to a study by The Polling Company, over 70% of all Americans support education tax credits! This is just one of numerous studies and public opinion polls showing that Americans want Congress to get the federal bureaucracy out of the schoolroom and give parents more control over their children’s education.

Today, Congress can fulfill the wishes of the American people for greater control over their children’s education by simply allowing parents to keep more of their hard-earned money to spend on education rather than force them to send it to Washington to support education programs that are often responsible only of the values and priorities of Congress and the federal bureaucracy.

The $3,000 tax credit will make a better education affordable for millions of parents. Mr. Speaker, many parents who would choose to send their children to private, religious, or parochial schools are unable to afford the tuition, in large part because of the enormous tax burden imposed on the American family by Washington.

The Family Education Freedom Act also benefits parents who choose to send their children to public schools. Parents of children in public schools may use this credit to help improve their local schools by helping finance the purchase of educational tools such as computers or to ensure their local schools can offer more extracurricular activities such as music programs. Parents of public school students may also wish to use the credit to pay for special services, such as tutoring, for their children.

Increasing parental control of education is superior to funneling more federal tax dollars, followed by greater federal control, into the schools. According a recent Manhattan Institute study of the effects of state policies promoting parental control over education, a minimal increase in parental control boosts students’ average SAT verbal score by 21 points and student SAT math score by 22 points! The Manhattan Institute study also found that increasing parental control of education is the best way to improve student performance on the National Assessment of Education Progress (NAEP) tests.

Clearly, enactment of the Family Education Freedom Act is the best thing this Congress could do to improve public education. Furthermore, a greater reliance on parental expenditures rather than government tax dollars will help make the public schools into true community schools that reflect the wishes of parents and the interests of the students.

The Family Education Freedom Act will also aid those parents who choose to educate their children at home. Home schooling has become an increasingly popular, and successful, method of educating children. Home schooled children out-perform their public school peers by 30 to 37 percentile points across all subjects on nationally standardized achievement exams. Home schooling parents spend thousand of dollars to the wages forgone by the spouse who forgoes outside employment, in order to educate their children in the loving environment of the home.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, this bill is about freedom. Parental control of child rearing, especially education, is one of the bulwarks of liberty. No nation can remain free when the state has greater influence over the knowledge and values transmitted to children than the family.

By moving to restore the primacy of parents to education, the Family Education Freedom Act will not only improve America’s education, it will restore a parent’s right to choose how best to educate one’s own child, a fundamental freedom that has been eroded by the increase in federal education expenditures and the corresponding decrease in the ability of parents to provide for their children’s education out of their own pockets. I call on all my colleagues to join me in allowing parents to devote more of their resources to their children’s education and less to feed the wasteful Washington bureaucracy by supporting the Family Education Freedom Act.

REMEMBERING MR. TOM STUBBS
HON. SCOTT MCNINNIS
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. McNINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sadness that I now honor the life of a great man and friend of Colorado, Tom Stubbs. Tragically, Tom passed away earlier this month. As family and friends remember Tom, I would like to take this brief moment to pay tribute to a man whose life touched many. Clearly, he is deserving of the recognition, praise and remembrance of this body.

Anyone who had the privilege of knowing Tom can attest to the irrepressible zeal for life that he constantly exuded. As a recent story in the Grand Junction Daily Sentinel described it, “Tom displayed a passion and relentless dedication for life’s adventures.” An apt description for a man who lived his life to the fullest each and every day.

An avid outdoor enthusiast, Tom was an accomplished artist who made his living selling paintings of natural landscapes, predominantly from southwestern Colorado and Arizona. If you appreciate artistic scenes from the American West, Tom’s works are truly a site to behold. One such work was selected as a finalist in the “Arts for the Parks” exhibition. The piece was on display all around the country in 1992. In addition to selling his own works, Tom taught Figure Drawing and Advanced and Pastel Drawing on and off at Mesa State College for about a decade.

A Flint, Michigan native who lived in Grand Junction for the better part of 30 years, Tom expressed his love for the outdoors in many ways other than painting. According to the Daily Sentinel, Tom was a “local legend in mountain running circles,” who was also a world class climber. He was also a talented bicycle racer, skier, swimmer, and surfer. Socially, Tom was part of a close-knit group of friends who spent a great deal of their personal time experiencing the natural marvels of Colorado and beyond. Tom had unique insight into what a wonderful place the American West is.

Although Tom’s life came to an end too suddenly, his memory will long endure. Survived by his parents, Nancy and Bill, his brothers, Mike, Tim and Matthew, his sisters, Kathy and Susan Stubbins and his countless friends, including my friend Christopher Tomlinson, Tom’s life will not soon be forgotten by those fortunate enough to have known him. And what a memorable life it was.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Grand Junction community has lost a wonderful friend. Though he’s gone, Tom Stubbs will always hold a special place in all of our hearts.

TERMINATION OF THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS CAMPAIGN FUND
HON. BOB STUMP
OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, on January 3, 2001, I introduced H.R. 191, legislation to terminate the Presidential Election Campaign Fund.

Campaign finance reform will surely be part of the agenda for 107th Congress. I believe that one of the most important campaign reforms we can advance is to end taxpayer funded presidential elections. As many in this body know, the current system offers partial public financing to eligible candidates running in presidential primaries and completely subsidizes the campaigns of major party nominees in the general election. The fund also supports political party conventions. The program essentially combines public refunding with limitations on contributions and expenditures. To receive funds, candidates must meet fundraising requirements and agree to limit campaign spending. The funds are derived from a voluntary tax checkoff.

A post-Watergate reform, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, was intended to respond to the cynical effects of money on the political process and restore public confidence in our elections. More specifically, supporters of public financing believed it would correct perceived problems in the presidential election process, such as the disproportionate influence of wealthy contributors and the demands of fundraising that can keep candidates from conveying their views to the public.

Beyond my basic philosophical objections to publicly-financed elections, which forces taxpayers to finance candidates whom they oppose, I believe the fund has not achieved its goal. Clearly, public funding has not stemmed the decline in confidence in the political system. Moreover, the public has overwhelmingly rejected the campaign funds as is illustrated by declining participation rates. The most recent figures available show that rates have gone from a high of 28.7% on 1980 tax returns to 12.5% on 1997 returns. In fact, public participation has decreased so dramatically... that in 1993, Congress trebled the checkout amount from $1 to $3 to counter a shortfall in the system.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is also important to note that modern-day campaigns and financing tend to render the checkout-funding system somewhat ineffective. As it was conceived, the fund’s creators believed that the program’s spending limits would be an asset to campaigns. However, the statute does not limit independent spending, which can supplement a candidate’s campaign treasury. As a result, the program is essentially restricting the speed of some components of our society. In addition, the fund was created to alleviate the fundraising burden for primary candidates. While well intentioned, this component has had the opposite effect because primary candidates must try to raise funds in matchable $250 increments and may not accept more than $1,000 from an individual contributor. Consequently, fundraising requires more time and more resources.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in six elections—1976 through 1996—$887 million was distributed under the fund. Some of the recipients of these precious tax dollars clearly lacked electoral credibility and appeal. For example, Lyndon LaRouch, who served a prison term for fraud and tax law violations, received more than $2.5 million. Given the public’s overwhelming rejection of the system and the fact that tax dollars should be directed to more worthy government programs, I encourage my colleagues to join me in this effort to terminate the presidential Election Campaign Fund by cosponsoring H.R. 191.

IN RECOGNITION OF REVEREND GERARD A. PISANI, HONOREE OF THE RUTKOWSKI ASSOCIATION
HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Reverend Gerard A. Pisani, who will be honored by the Richard Rutkowski Association for his exceptional contributions to the community of Bayonne, NJ on January 20, 2001.

In America, the wealth and prosperity of our communities is not based solely on economic indicators. In fact, the most important indicator for the social well being of our neighborhoods and communities is the important contribution of community leaders; and today, I rise to recognize a truly remarkable community leader.

Pastor Pisani attended Wheaton College and Taylor University, and completed his theological training at Nyack Missionary College. He was ordained to the ministry in the Baptist church in 1962. Pastor Pisani finished his requirements to become an ordained Priest in the Episcopal Church on October 15, 1966, and was appointed the first Vicar of St. Gabriel’s Church, where he served until he became the Rector of Christ Church in Pompton Lakes. In 1974, he came to Trinity Parish in Bergen Point, where he is currently the pastor.

In addition, Pastor Pisani is the president of Windmill Alliance, Inc., an organization that consists of volunteers from several local churches and temples and works in cooperation with leaders from area businesses and industry to provide for the needs of the community. The following groups are involved: The Windmill Center, a daily work activity center for disabled adults; Supportive Living, a residence program for disabled adults; Highways, a program providing support for the needy; the Umbrella Project, a proposed program to provide housing for women and children in need; and Supportive Employment, which provides career development, job training, and employment for adults with special needs.

Pastor Pisani has served on the Board of the Bayonne Medical Center, and is presently serving on the Bioethics Committee of the Bayonne Hospital as co-chair of the education committee. He is also chaplain of the Bayonne Kiwanis Club, the Bayonne Fire Department, and secretary/treasurer of the Bayonne Interfaith Clergy Association. He has received numerous awards from these and other organizations.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Reverend Gerard A. Pisani. Through his compassion and dedication, he has made great contributions to the community of Bayonne. His leadership and hard work are a great asset and an example for us all.

TRIBUTE TO BETTY FITZPATRICK
HON. SCOTT McINNIS
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to congratulate a remarkable woman, Betty Fitzpatrick, for her remarkable devotion to her community.

Betty is being honored on January 31, 2001, by the National Association of School Nurses as the Nurse Administrator of the Year. Over the last eleven years, Betty has served as the Director of Health Services for Jefferson County Schools in Golden, Colorado. Betty oversees 136 schools in the Jefferson County area, where she has spent her life as an advocate for Colorado’s youth. The depth of Betty’s contributions go much deeper than nursing. Her portfolio is witness to the difference she has made in the life of others: she has been the president and treasurer of her state nursing association, a prolific author, an advocate for legislation, grant writer, and a national presenter. Betty’s contributions to the citizens of Colorado are great in number of deserve the recognition of this body.

Betty is an extraordinary citizen. While her skills as a nurse have been tested daily throughout her accomplished career, on one day our country will never forget—April 20, 1999—she was put to the test and taken to the limits. On April 20, 1999, an incomprehensible tragedy took place on the grounds of one of Betty’s schools—Columbine High School. She was notified of the tragedy within minutes of its occurrence, and with hesitation she enacted an emergency plan and led the charge to assist the war-torn school.

Betty is a tribute to nurses everywhere. Colleagues describe Betty as a nurse who handles herself with grace. Her enthusiasm to her work and her compassion is deserving of far more than this Congressional tribute. Ultimately, the highest compliment that she can ever receive is the trust and love of her patients and the community. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what she has earned.

Betty is an inspiration for us all and for all these reasons she is deserving of this honor. It is with this, Mr. Speaker, that I say thank you to Betty for her dedication and service to her community over the years. She has worked hard for her community and state, giving mightily of herself to her neighbors.

For that, Betty, we are all profoundly grateful.

SAFER AMERICA FOR EVERYONE’S CHILDREN ACT (SAFE CHILDREN ACT), H.R. 255
HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing H.R. 255, the Safer America for Everyone’s Children Act, or Safe Children Act. The Everyone work together to provide a safer America for communities throughout our Nation. The Safe Children Act will not be found in the Halls of Congress, yea.

It is imperative that we all dedicate ourselves to making our communities safer and to ensure that our children and our nation's children are being protected. The Safe Children Act is an important first step, and it is up to the state legislatures to pass similar legislation in order to protect our children from gun violence.

Furthermore, the Safe Children Act creates a school counseling demonstration program to support organizations and municipalities which promote safe schools and gun safety. The program will be designed to create safe and drug-free schools, and offer after-school programs, which focus on the social, physical, emotional, moral, and cognitive well-being of students.

The Safe Children Act will also provide grants to schools to establish or expand school psychological counseling programs, offering individual schools the opportunity and funding necessary to have on-site or on-contract child psychologists to assist troubled students. Additionally, the measure promotes the safety of law enforcement personnel by prohibiting the importation of large capacity ammunition feeding devices and exempts qualifying state or local police departments from state laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed firearms.

I have been meeting with parents, teachers, students, and law enforcement officials, to discuss the root of the problems in our Nation's schools to find a solution. The Safe Children Act is an important first step, because it promotes and supports community initiatives.

It is obvious that no one solution exists for solving the increase in school shootings, but it is imperative that we all dedicate ourselves to working together within our families and communities to stop the violence among our youth.

The real solution to combating school violence will not be found in the Halls of Congress, rather in our schools, homes, and communities throughout our Nation. The Safe Children Act will reward those communities which work together to provide a safer America for everyone's children.

THE CONSUMER ONLINE PRIVACY AND DISCLOSURE ACT

HON. GENE GREEN
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, unprecedented number of American consumers are flocking to the Internet to transact business and tap the nearly limitless informational data-bases. The explosion in Internet usage, however, is not without problems. Unlike shopping in a mall or browsing through a library where individuals travel anonymously through the merchandise racks and library stacks, the Internet is becoming less and less anonymous. Direct marketing firms are now trying to identify individuals as they surf the web to isolate where they visit and what they are viewing.

This new data collection practice is most often described as Internet profiling. Internet profiling describes the practice of joining a consumer's personal information with his or her Internet viewing habits. To develop this detailed profile a "persistent cookie" must be attached to a consumer's computer as they move through a web site. A persistent cookie is a small text file copied for varying lengths of time to consumers' computers to track their movements while online.

While my legislation gives consumers more information and control over how they use the Internet, I have also included a provision that will hold e-commerce companies to their privacy policies. With the insolvency of many dot-com companies, often the only tangible asset left to satisfy creditors is a consumers transaction and personal information.

The global reach of the Internet is beneficial only so long as the information traveling through cyberspace remains private. Consumers today are being denied the privacy of transactions and personal information.

INTRODUCTION OF THE EDUCATION IMPROVEMENT TAX CUT ACT

HON. RON PAUL OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce the Education Improvement Tax Cut Act. This act, a companion to my Family Education Freedom Act, takes a further step toward returning control over education resources to private citizens by providing a $3,000 tax credit for donations to scholarship funds to enable low-income children to attend private schools. It also encourages private citizens to devote more of their resources to helping public schools, by providing a $3,000 tax credit for cash or in-kind donations to public schools to support academic or extra curricular programs. I need not remind my colleagues that education is one of, if not the, top priority of the American people. Every member of Congress have proposed education reforms and a great deal of time is spent debating these proposals. However, most of these proposals either expand federal control over education or engage in the pseudo-federalism of block grants. Many proposals that claim to increase local control over education actually extend federal power by holding schools “accountable” to federal bureaucrats and politicians. Of course, schools should be held accountable for their results, but under the United States Constitution, they should be held accountable to parents and school boards not to federal officials. Therefore, I propose we move in a different direction and embrace true federalism by returning control over the education dollar to the American people.

One of the major problems with centralized control over education funding is that spending priorities set by Washington-basedRepresentatives, staffers, and bureaucrats do not necessarily match the needs of individual communities. In fact, it would be a miracle if spending priorities determined by the wishes of certain politicians powerful Representatives or the theories of Education Department functionaries match the priorities of every community in a country as large and diverse as America. Block grants do not solve this problem as they simply allow states and localities to choose the means to reach federally-determined ends.

Returning control over the education dollar for tax credits for parents and for other concerns citizens returns control over both the means and ends of education policy to local communities. Parents and children may use this credit to purchase computers, while children in another community may, at least, have access to a quality music program because of community leaders who took advantage of the tax credit contained in this bill.

Children in some communities may benefit most from the opportunity to attend private, parochial, or other religious schools. One of the most encouraging trends in education has been the establishment of private scholarship programs. These scholarship funds use voluntary contributions to open the doors of quality private schools to low-income children. By providing a tax credit for donations to these programs, Congress can widen the educational opportunities and increase the quality of education for all children. Furthermore, privately-funded scholarships raise none of the concerns of state entanglement raised by publicly-funded vouchers.

There is no doubt that Americans will always spend generously on education, the question is, “who should control the education dollar—politicians and bureaucrats or the American people?” Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in placing control of education back in the hands of citizens and local communities by sponsoring the Education Improvement Tax Cut Act.

TRIBUTE TO TEXACO QUIZ KIDS

HON. KAREN McCARTHY OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish today to recognize three outstanding young women from my community, and the ongoing efforts of the Lyric Opera of Kansas City to heighten the awareness of the importance of art and culture by sponsoring dozens of programs for young people. Katherine Lorenz, Rebecca Mozley, and Amber Woodward were three of the regional finalists chosen to participate in the 2000–2001 Texaco Quiz Kids Program at Kansas City, Missouri's historic Lyric Opera.

The Texaco Quiz Kids Program is a distinguished nationwide competition that brings together talented young performing arts scholars from across the region of North America. Students take part in a rigorous quiz show format in which they are tested on their knowledge and understanding of selected operas that they have studied in depth. At the regional round their expertise was called upon to interpret "Aida," "Carmen," and "The Magic Flute."

All three of the young women chosen to represent the Greater Kansas City Area have demonstrated exceptional musical scholarship and dedication to the appreciation of the performing arts. During the regional finals, each of these young scholars demonstrated a comprehensive understanding and knowledge of legendary operas from the 19th Century. Each of their loves for the performing arts radiated from their impressive answers. They are representatives of the best our community has to offer.

Katherine is a senior at Lawrence High School who is involved in a number of organizations. She is Co-Vice President of the FYI Club, Treasurer of the Key Club, and an active member of the French Club, National Honor Society, and the cultural heritage panel. She is a teacher's aide for AP European history this year and sings with the Concert Choir. She played basketball through her sophomore year, and is an avid basketball fan. Katherine has studied piano for nine years with Eric Sakamura, and is currently a lesson assistant at Lawrence Piano Studio. Katherine is a National Merit Semifinalist who will begin college this fall, who hopes to major in History, French, and Music.

Rebecca Mozley is a senior at Raytown South High School. Rebecca loves to sing. She has been a member of Raytown South's Cardinal Choral her junior and senior years and has also sung in the Kansas City All District Choir both years. She is a 2-year member of the National Honor Society, Students Against Destructive Decisions (SADD), and Future Teachers of America. This year she is President of SADD and is the cadet teacher for the Concert Choir Class. She is maintaining a 3.8+ GPA and plays the flute and French horn in band. Rebecca is also involved in church activities. She plays a handbell in the choir and sings in the teen choir. She also works in the nursery. Through her church, Rebecca has had the opportunity to go on mission trips to different parts of the country to paint and repair homes in low-income neighborhoods for the past four summers. At present, her plans are to attend Central Missouri State University next fall and major in either music education or elementary education.

Amber Woodward is a dedicated student who is maintaining a 4.3 GPA while taking all honors courses in her freshman year at Blue Valley North High School in Overland Park, Kansas. Throughout her academic career she has won numerous good citizen and student awards. Through her participation in musical theater she has contributed time and effort to many charities. Amber has a love for the performing arts. She studies voice, dance, acting, and plays the clarinet and piano. Amber's devotion to the performing arts has led her to a detailed plan of study. Amber is a coloratura soprano and hopes someday to pursue a career in Opera.

It is an honor for me to recognize Katherine, Rebecca, and Amber on this notable accomplishment. I wish all three of these young women continued success in all of their personal and academic endeavors. Each of the two semi-finalists received $500 scholarships from Texaco. During Round II in Kansas City, Katherine Lorenz was selected to represent our region in the final round in Toronto at Canadian Broadcasting Center next month.

Mr. Speaker please join me in congratulating Kansas City's 2000–2001 Texaco Quiz Kids, Katherine Lorenz, Rebecca Mozley, and Amber Woodward. Also Mr. Speaker, please join me in saluting the Lyric Opera of Kansas City, the organization that has demonstrated exceptional musical scholarship and an active role in the state's culture to support the arts. I offer to our dedicated teachers: Cathy Crispino, Mary Bodney, and Judy Bowser for investing in our youth to help instill the heritage and value which the performing arts have played in shaping our society.

THE CHILDREN'S ACCESS TO TECHNOLOGY ACT

HON. GENE GREEN OF TEXAS IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Children's Access to Technology Act to provide the disadvantaged children of this country with the technology they need to succeed in life. My legislation is intended to provide Title I schools with additional financial resources to modernize their Internet delivery systems. Specifically, this legislation will utilize up to $100 million in unspent e-rate funding to provide Title I schools with a maximum $25,000 award to modernize their Internet labs.

Mr. Speaker, the e-rate program has been very effective in bringing the Internet to libraries and classrooms across America. As a strong supporter of that program, I was disturbed to learn that crucial e-rate funding was going unspent because recipients were not following through with their paperwork confirming receipt of service. According to a recent General Accounting Office (GAO) report, almost $1.3 billion has gone unspent during the first two e-rate program years. The Universal Service Administrative Company (USAC) has not yet been able to explain this discrepancy between funds authorized and funds allocated.

Because any unspent e-rate funding is lost at the end of each program year, my legislation will create a new funding mechanism, up to $100 million using any unspent monies, that will allow Title I schools to update their computer hardware. Specifically, the legislation directs the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to establish a lottery system for Title I schools to enter and be eligible to receive up to $25,000 to modernize their computer hardware.

TRIBUTE TO STATE TROOPER JASON MANSPEAKER

HON. SCOTT MCLINNIS OF COLORADO IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. MCLINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I now honor an extraordinary human being and great American, State Trooper Jason Manspeaker. Mr. Manspeaker was described as a "teddy bear" of a man, who demonstrated both remarkable valor and compassion everyday. Sadly, Jason died last week while in the line of duty. As family, friends, and colleagues mourn this profound loss, I would like to honor this truly great American.

Mr. Manspeaker was an individual that served his county, state and nation well. For most of his life, Jason aspired to be a Colorado State Patrolman, a goal he would ultimately realize. As a State Trooper, countless individuals have been affected by Jason's selfless actions, each of whom are better off because of his service. Tragically, Jason's life was cut short while engaged in that service.

On January 23, 2001, Jason was in pursuit of a van that was believed to contain two of the Texas Seven fugitives the day after the other five were captured in nearby Colorado Springs. After passing eastbound through the Eisenhower Tunnel on relatively dry pavement, his Jeep Cherokee squad car hit the steep and icy off-ramp and failed to negotiate the turn, skidding into a snow covered trailer in a dirt pull out. Manspeaker's friend and colleague, Trooper Jeff Matthews, witnessed the crash in his rear view mirror and worked relentlessly, but ultimately unsuccessfully, to revive Manspeaker. "This is somebody who made the ultimate sacrifice to protect the public," said his supervisor, Captain Doyle Eicher, in a recent Denver Post story. "He was just that kind of guy." "It is really tough for us, I knew him personally, knew him as an outstanding trooper, liked by everyone," said close friend Sgt. Brett Mattson in the Post's story.
Jason grew up in Montrose, Colorado where he was well-known and widely admired. “He would go out of his way to help people, we are all very proud of him for being a highway patrolman, that is what he wanted to do,” said Betty Hokit, secretary at Montrose High School where Jason attended. Jason began his service to the community at an early age. As a teenager, he volunteered with the Explorer Scout Program for the Montrose Police Department. Even while attending Mesa State College—where he played football—he could often be found riding along with State Troopers based in Grand Junction. “He just absolutely loved the work,” said Captain Eicher in the story. “He was just so enthusiastic about the job. He made my job a joy because it is easy to supervise and work with people like that.”

Jason was a highly skilled member of his profession. So much so that he was named the officer in charge of ensuring that other officers fulfilled their firearms qualifications. This is just one of the many examples of Jason’s skill as a law enforcement officer, skills which Jason used to serve the State of Colorado every day.

Mr. Speaker and fellow colleagues, as you can see, this extraordinary human being truly deserves our timeless gratitude for his service and supreme sacrifice while in the line of duty. Jason Manskeer may be gone, but his legacy will long endure in the minds of those who knew, loved, and supreme sacrifice while in the line of duty. Jason Manskeer may be gone, but his legacy will long endure in the minds of those who knew, loved, and revered Jason.

Her leadership and hard work are a great asset and an example for us all.

In Recognition of Agnes Mangelli, Honoree of the Richard Rutkowski Association

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize Agnes Gallagher Mangelli, who will be honored by the Richard Rutkowski Association for her exceptional contributions to the community of Bayonne, New Jersey on January 20, 2001.

In America, the wealth and prosperity of our communities is not based solely on economic indicators. In fact, the most important indicator for the social well being of our neighborhoods and communities is the important contribution of community leaders; and today, I recognize a truly great leader.

Agnes Mangelli was born and raised in Bayonne. She is married to Nicholas Mangelli Sr., and is the mother of four children: Mary Beth Ward, Anne Marie Taté, Patricia Mangelli, and Nicholas Mangelli.

Ms. Mangelli is the chairwoman of the Board of Trustees of the Bayonne Community Mental Health Center, an organization she has served since 1974. She has also served on the Board of Directors and as vice president; fundraising chairman; recording secretary; and corresponding secretary. She has been the chairwoman since 1993.

In addition, Ms. Mangelli is the co-chair of the United Cerebral Palsy of Hudson County, and serves on the Bayonne Hospital Parent Board and the Bayonne Hospital Compliance Committee. She served as chairman of various committees at St. Peter’s Prep Mother’s Club. She is also past president and member of the Robinson School of PTC, the Vroom School Parents Association, and the Holy Family Academy Alumni Association.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Agnes Mangelli. Through her compassion and dedication, Agnes Mangelli has made great contributions to the community of Bayonne. Her leadership and hard work are a great asset and an example for us all.

HON. CHARLES F. BASS OF NEW HAMPSHIRE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, I was regrettably absent on Tuesday, January 30, due to circumstances beyond my control, and I consequently missed a recorded vote on H.R. 93. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea” on rollcall vote No. 5.

Introduction of the Public School Construction Partnership Act

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, today, along with my colleagues Congressmen Paul and Petri, I am introducing the Public School Construction Partnership Act, to help our public schools meet the need for school modernization, new classrooms and the repair of old and aging facilities.

I represent three of the fifteen largest school districts in the country—the Miami-Dade County Public School District is the nation’s fourth largest school district, the Broward County School District is the nation’s fifth largest, and the Palm Beach County School District is the fifteenth largest. Public school children attend classes in 296 elementary, middle and senior high schools in Miami-Dade County, 178 in Broward County, and 137 in Palm Beach County. Many classes are held in temporary classrooms, many of the buildings are in need of repairs, and the student population in the state of Florida is expected to grow 25 percent faster than the overall population. This makes the need for new school construction and renovation of old ones critical.

Public schools need new ways to raise revenue to meet the problems caused by growth and overcrowding. The financing needs faced by an urban school district may not be of the same nature or scope as those of a rural district. At the same time we need to reduce construction costs and increase school construction efficiencies to ensure that dollars are spent wisely and effectively. This bill is a meaningful step in those directions. Four different approaches to financing new public school construction and repairing older schools are provided for in this legislation.

First, in order to encourage private-sector participation and avoid debt capacity problems for states and localities, the bill would allow school districts to make use of public-private partnerships to issue bonds for the construction or improvement of public educational facilities. Private activity bonds can now be issued to finance 12 types of activities such as airports, docks and wharves, qualified residential rental projects, and qualified hazardous waste facilities. It makes sense to be able to issue them for the construction and rehabilitation of public schools.

In order to qualify for the bonds, public-private partnerships would build school facilities and lease them to the school district. At the end of the lease term the facilities would revert back to the school district of no additional consideration. Alternatively, a school district could sell their old facilities to a partnership, which would then refurbish them, and lease the refurbished facilities back to the school district. The proceeds from the sale could then be used by the district to build new classrooms. This allows the school district to leverage investment in school facilities without having to borrow by issuing tax-exempt bonds.

The bonds would be exempt from the annual state volume caps on private activity bonds, but would be subject to their own annual per-state caps equal to the greater of $10 per capita or $5 million. This bill leaves to the states the manner in which the per-state amount is to be allocated.

Second, the bill provides for a 4-year safe harbor for exemption from the arbitrage rules. To prevent state and local governments from issuing tax-exempt bonds and using the proceeds to invest in higher yielding investments to earn investment income (thereby earning arbitrage profits), arbitrage restrictions are placed on the use of tax exempt bonds. In the case of tax-exempt bonds used to finance school construction and renovation, the bond proceeds must be spent at certain rates on construction within 24 months of being issued. The bill would extend the 24-month period to 4 years for school bonds as long as the proceeds were spent at certain rates within this period. It is difficult for school districts to comply with the present 24-month period when funding different projects from a single issuance of bonds. The increase in the time period would give school districts greater flexibility in planning construction projects and more money with which to build and repair schools.

Tax exempt bonds issued by small governments are not subject to the arbitrage restrictions as long as no more than $10 million of bonds are issued in any year. In order to provide relief to small and rural school districts undertaking school construction and rehabilitation activities, the third approach contemplated by the bill is to raise the exemption to $15 million as long as at least $10 million of the bonds were used for public school construction.

Fourth, the bill would permit banks to invest in up to $25 million in tax-exempt bonds issued by school districts for public school construction without disallowance of a deduction for interest expense. Currently, banks are allowed to purchase only $10 million without... being subject to disallowance of interest expense. Banks traditionally have been an important purchaser of last resort of tax exempt bonds. Increasing the amount of bonds that can be purchased by banks without penalty will allow school districts to sell their bonds to banks, thereby avoiding having to incur the expense of accessing the capital markets. This legislation offers an innovative approach to help finance the building and rehabilitation of our public schools, which is so vital to improving our education system. The creation of the public/private partnerships would speed up the construction of new public schools that are urgently needed. The bill gives our school districts the flexibility they need to tailor their financing needs to their individual situations.

This legislation can help our public schools to construct and repair needed facilities to educate our children, and I urge my colleagues to join me in seeking its enactment.

THE TAX RELIEF FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN ACT, H.R. 253
HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Tax Relief for Families With Children Act, H.R. 253. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this worthwhile legislation.

We are long overdue for a major cut in taxes. With our strong economy and growing surplus, there is no excuse why some tax relief cannot be passed this year. Since the last major tax bill was passed, the Federal budget has been balanced, the estimates for the surplus over the next 10 years have continued to grow and Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has stated that some tax relief is necessary in order to keep the economy growing. Giving this environment, I believe that the passage of additional tax relief is appropriate.

This bill will help all American families by increasing tax credits for children and child care expenses. Parents will be able to choose one of three options for each dependent, either the dependent care tax credit, the child tax credit, or the dependent care assistance plan.

Currently, parents who use child care services can use the dependent care tax credit which is capped at $2,400 for one child and $4,800 for two or more children. My bill will increase this credit to $3,600 and $6,000 respectively. Additionally, this credit will be expanded to include more families. The current gross income cap of $50,000 will be increased to $110,000 so that more middle income families who need to use child care can afford to use safe and accredited centers in this country.

Another option for working families who need child care is the dependent care assistance plan (DCAP). DCAP is a savings plan that allows a parent to set aside a portion of their salary each month, prior to being taxed, that they can then use for child care expenses. My bill would increase the contribution to $7,000 and would allow an employee's spouse, parent or grandparent who provides child care services to be defined as a qualifying individual. This would allow a close family member to be paid for providing child care services for a child or grandchild.

The last of the three options is the child tax credit that the 105th Congress enacted in 1997. This credit is phased in so that it is zero for any child up until the age of 17 and will be increased from $500 to $900 per child.

These three tax credits for families will help the average American family deal with the debate about child care. Some families need to use outside providers, while others choose to have one parent stay at home. Whatever their personal decision is, the provisions in this bill will benefit them all.

In addition to helping families with children, this legislation will help businesses which provide child care services for their employees. By providing a 3-year tax credit for employer provided child care, businesses will be encouraged to become involved in child care. Employers would welcome the implementation of onsite child care so that the guilt that is often associated with day care can be lessened because parents are not that far removed from their children. With less apprehension, employees will be more productive which is good news for any business.

The second provision for businesses is the expansion of opportunities for charitable contributions. Businesses will be permitted to claim a charitable contribution for the donation of tangible personal property to public or private child care centers, public schools or child care support organizations. Businesses will also be allowed to claim a charitable contribution for 50% of the fair market value of donated transportation services, staff volunteer time and company facilities and equipment.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this worthwhile legislation which will provide much needed tax relief for working families.

TRIBUTE TO REVEREND YVONNE MCCOY, OUTSTANDING COLORADO WOMAN
HON. SCOTT McINNIS
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to congratulate a remarkable woman, Yvonne McCoy, for her outstanding courage and devotion to helping her fellow man. Yvonne is a newly ordained minister with the Colorado Community Church. Rev. McCoy's selfless service has helped countless inner-city children turn their lives around. Her continued devotion to the underprivileged children of Colorado has earned her the high honor of being named Outstanding Colorado Woman. Yvonne's contributions to the citizens of Colorado are great in number and deserve the recognition of this body.

Yvonne is a wonderful model for women of all ages. Yvonne has been pivotal in getting troubled youth off the streets by directing a music program that brought many kids out of harm's way. In addition to helping youth get on the right track, she has tirelessly worked to help women who are looking to improve their own lot in life. Yvonne goes directly to areas of need and counsels women on how they can best improve their course in life. Based on her own life experiences, Yvonne knows first hand the struggles of those women. Because of these experiences, Yvonne can ably guide others toward a better and brighter future. That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what she has done for so many.

Yvonne not only serves the needs of those less fortunate in America, but she has also lent her compassion to the impoverished in foreign places. Yvonne recently returned from a mission to the Dominican Republic, where she worked with an orphanage. She has plans to continue her service there in the future.

Yvonne is an inspiration for us all and for all these reasons she is deserving of the honor of Outstanding Colorado Woman. What's more, she clearly deserves the commendation and praise of this body.

It is with this, Mr. Speaker, that I say thank you to Yvonne for her dedication and service to our community over the years and congratulate her on this high honor.

Yvonne, your friends, family, state and nation are proud of you and grateful for your gracious service.
TRIBUTE TO THE LATE RICHARD CHARLES “RC” ROBINSON, SR.

HON. KAREN MCCARTHY
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to salute a fallen hero. Richard Charles “RC” Robinson, Senior. RC passed away on Saturday, January 27, 2001. The irony is that he gave so much of his heart to others, and it was his heart that failed him in the end.

RC was many things: the first African American appointed to the Missouri State Barber Board, early civil rights activist, and mentor, husband, father, and friend to many, including myself. Whenever duty called RC was never one to turn his back on the task at hand. During the turbulent times of the 60’s, RC led a sit-in at a restaurant that refused him coffee. This grassroots effort led to the end of similar discriminatory practices by businesses of the day.

Everyone who knew RC always succumbed to his charisma. The words of Rudyard Kipling’s poem “If” depict RC well, for he could never be replaced, just as his many kind deeds will never be forgotten.

When I visited R.C.’s Barber Shop he would always welcome me with open arms. The talk of the day would turn not only to the current events, but also the historic struggles and the resulting progress which led the way to greater equity for African Americans in our community.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in saluting Richard Charles “RC” Robinson, Senior, a dedicated public servant and a soldier for justice and equality. Also, Mr. Speaker please join in sending condolences to his wife, Dottie and his daughter, Terri. This great human being will be missed, but his memory will live on in all those whose lives he touched. We are a better community for his having lived.

Its contributions to improving the community’s well-being have truly been outstanding.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to congratulate Kaweah Delta Health Care District for winning the Foster G. McGaw Prize. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing the Kaweah Delta Health Care District many more years of continued success.

NEW YORK TIMES: INDIA CLEARLY RESPONSIBLE FOR CHITTI SINGHPORA MASSACRE

HON. EDOPHUS TOWNS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, on December 31, the New York Times Magazine ran a good article on the massacre of 35 Sikhs that took place in Chitti Singhpora in March while President Clinton was visiting India. The article makes it clear that “Everyone knows who did it” and that the responsibility rests squarely on the Indian government. The Times writer, Barry Bearak, the newspaper’s bureau chief in New Delhi, wrote that “Among the careful preparations for the historic occasion were a painstaking cleanup around the Taj Mahal, a reenactment for wild tigers he might glimpse on a V.I.P. safari and the murder of 35 Sikhs villagers in a place called ChittiSinghpora.”

I will not place the entire article into the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, because it is very long, but I recommend it to my colleagues. Bearak interviewed several people who were witnesses to the massacre or who lost family members. It is very clear from his interviews that the Indian government is responsible. This confirms the findings of two independent investigations, one by the International Human Rights Organization, which is based in Ludhiana, and another jointly conducted by the Movement Against State Repression and the Punjab Human Rights Organization.

This is typical of the Indian government. The Indian newspaper Hitavada reported in November 1994 that the Indian government paid the late Governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, $1.5 billion to organize terrorist activities in Punjab and Kashmir. The book “Soft Target,” written by two Canadian journalists, proved that the Indian government shot down its own airliners in 1985, killing 299 innocent people, to create an image of Sikhs as terrorists.

The article noted that the killers were dressed in the regulation uniform of the Indian Army. Some had their faces painted in celebration of the Hindu holiday of Holi. They rounded up 37 Sikhs, one of whom escaped and one of whom survived. The other 35 were murdered in cold blood. They called out the Hindu phrase “Jai mata di,” a Hindu phrase in praise of a Hindu goddess.

Clearly the Indian government was trying to create a bad image of the Kashmiri freedom fighters for the President’s visit. It looks like President Clinton was right when he called the region “the most dangerous place in the world.”

Bearak came to Chitti Singhpora in the company of a businessman, who is an associate of a fellow reporter. “So you want to know the truth?” the businessman said to Bearak. “Don’t you know the truth can get these people killed?” The Indian government had killed five Muslims, claiming they were Pakistanis responsible for the massacre, but at least one village resident said that he recognized the remains of one of his relatives. One of the men killed was a man of 60. The Indian government has subsequently admitted that the so-called “militants” they killed were in fact innocent. Now they have made another arrest in the case. This is also equally dubious. The 18-year-old that they arrested was “intensively interrogated,” according to the article, which usually means torture.

At the close of the article, Bearak writes that “Everyone knows about this crime. The Indian Army did it.” The evidence makes it clear that this is true. Why should such a country receive any support from the U.S. government? Let us stop our aid to this terrorist regime and let us openly support self-determination for Punjab, Khalistan, for Kashmir, and for all the nations of South Asia.

THE RETIREMENT OF MR. ED O’CONNOR

HON. DAVE WELDON
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I honor a great American who has played a major role in our nation’s space program. Ed O’Connor was selected in 1990 to lead the newly established Spaceport Florida Authority, and he retired late last year. It was his leadership, vision, and tireless energy that enabled Florida to preserve and secure its place in the world as “the place for space.”

Spaceport Florida Authority is a recognized leader among state spaceports, and it also plays a critical role in recruiting new space-related industries to Florida. Through Ed O’Connor’s leadership, the Authority gained international recognition as the first state agency to conduct space launches from its facilities, and it has enabled historic partnerships between the State of Florida, NASA, the Air Force, and the commercial and academic space communities.

His service to the space program, however, started long before then. He has a long and distinguished record of service to our nation in the United States Space Force, including directing the Search, Recovery, and Reconstruction Team supporting the Presidential Commission investigating the Challenger accident. Upon retiring from the Air Force in 1987, Colonel Ed O’Connor joined Martin Marietta as manager of the Commercial Titan Launch Program.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to represent Florida’s Space Coast in the United States Congress, and I am honored to represent distinguished citizens such as Ed O’Connor who have given so much to our nation. While he will be retired, anyone who knows Ed doesn’t expect him to slow down one bit. I’m certain he will continue to be a great source of knowledge and ideas for the nation’s space goals.

TRIBUTE TO MERYL GORDON

HON. KAREN McCARTHY
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish today to honor a special American who will be honored this Saturday, February 3 in New York City. Every generation has its rites of passage, and for those of us born in the years when Harry Truman brought honor and integrity to the White House, the occasion with which we boomers have become most familiar is the celebration of one’s 50th birthday. It is in that spirit that I mark the arrival of my dear friend, Meryl Gordon, at that half-century mark today, January 31, 2001.

Our fellowship began in Japan back in the days when there was another President Bush in the White House and, over the past decade, we have shared both literal typhoons (19 including Fukuoka, Japan, 1991) and the successes and occasional storms of everyday life.

Some of those who still fit the chronological criterion of “mid-fifties” might not understand that a 50th birthday is a particularly joyous occasion. This milestone serves as an apt moment to take stock of one’s life, for it is a time when you have the health, the energy and the idealism to still achieve your fondest dreams. For someone like Meryl—a highly respected magazine writer who is a Contributing Editor of “New York” magazine and lives in that legendary Upper West Side, your 80th birthday is a wondrous vantage point from which to realize that she has been blessed with professional renown. Her essays and articles touch the heart, the funny bone, and the conscience of our nation. She is also fortunate to have a joyful marriage to esteemed writer, pundit, and comic writer Dave Shaplin, loving parents, Adelle and David Gordon of Rochester, N.Y. and a large and nurturing circle of friends who have come from far and wide to salute her tonight.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in congratulating Meryl Gordon on this milestone and wish her continued success and happiness in her next half century.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize H. Mickey McCabe, one of three honorees at the annual dinner-dance hosted by Ireland’s 32 on January 19, 2001. Mr. McCabe’s career and for his accomplishments and for his continued dedication to the improvement of the quality of life for the resident of Bayonne, New Jersey.

Mr. McCabe is married to Judith P. McCabe, and is the father of two children: Alli and Walter Shapiro; doting parents, Adelle and David Gordon of Rochester, N.Y. and a large and nurturing circle of friends who have come from far and wide to salute her tonight.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in congratulating Meryl Gordon on this milestone and wish her continued success and happiness in her next half century.

FAREWELL CELEBRATION
HONORING DR. NAFIS SADIK
HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY
OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to recognize the world’s champion for international family planning and women’s empowerment and one of the world’s most powerful women, Dr. Nafs Sadik. I am continually amazed by Dr. Sadik’s accomplishments. She began her career at the United Nations as the head of UNFPA’s Program Branch under the leadership of Rafael Salas. Dr. Salas used to regularly send Nafs to attend high level United Nations meetings where she was the only woman in the room.

Not only that, but she was a woman representing the Population Fund, not high on the U.N.’s most favored agency list, and even worse, she was advocating for women. And, as you would guess, she was usually ignored. However, these were the women they were dealing with. Dr. Sadik was undaunted by her male colleagues and regularly spoke with a clear voice and a courageous voice until she was heard.

Now, she is in her 13th year as the head of UNFPA. The first woman to ever be appointed to head a United Nations agency.

Dr. Sadik’s passion and commitment to international family planning doesn’t come from reciting a UNFPA manual, but learning first hand what access to family planning means for women and families around the world.

As the director of the women’s and children’s wards of Pakistani hospitals, she helped shape the country’s family planning programs. She saw and heard first hand what access to family planning means for women and families around the world.

It’s this experience that resonates in Dr. Sadik’s words and commands our attention. I owe a great deal to Dr. Sadik. It was her words and leadership that helped my colleagues and I restore the U.S. contribution to UNFPA in 1999.

I met Dr. Sadik at the Hague International Forum Conference on population and women’s reproductive health. We were just beginning our fight in Congress to restore UNFPA funding.

We had a daunting task before us—restore $25 million for UNFPA during a tough budget in Congress that equates family planning with abortion. But using Dr. Sadik’s words that, “population is not someone else’s problem; it’s a global issue that needs to engage every country in the world,” we won the fight and restored the U.S. contribution to UNFPA.

This past year we achieved another success in Congress, when UNFPA was included in the budget at $25 million. But, we still have a long way to go. My colleagues and I are still working to restore all U.S. funding for international family planning programs back to its 1995 levels. It’s far below where we were in the 1980’s, but it will be a 20% increase over last year.

This past year, we had more than 120 Members that understand the link between family planning and women’s health. With Dr. Sadik at the helm of UNFPA, Congress got the message that family planning is vital to the fight to save women’s lives.

Be assured that we will continue Dr. Sadik’s fight for women around the world and will work with Thoraya Obaid to keep her legacy moving forward.

Dr. Sadik, thank you for your courage, your leadership, and your commitment to the women of this world. You are an inspiration to us all and we will miss your dearly.

IN MEMORY OF THE OKLAHOMA STATE UNIVERSITY TRAGEDY

HON. WES WATKINS OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, my heart is heavy and in pain from the tragedy that struck my alma mater—Oklahoma State University, located in my hometown of Stillwater, Oklahoma—on January 27th, 2001.

A plane carrying members of OSU’s basketball team, athletic department, and sports broadcast unit crashed shortly after take-off following the OSU men’s basketball game at the University of Colorado in Boulder. Ten members of the OSU family lost their lives in the accident.

Understandably, in times such as these, one could not be blamed for believing that the loved schools of so many had just had a part of itself. We know these 10 men’s families have lost their loved ones, and now have an aching in their heart that will be long in mending. One could not be blamed for believing that life on God’s earth is often too barren, and lonely; that the weight of this burden is more than we could possibly endure.

We are only in the beginning of our grief. But deep within our heart, we know that God has a plan for us. We know that God has a better plan than a lasting hurt. May God provide a lasting and loving memory of the young men who lost their lives.

Daniel Lawson, student athlete; Nate Fleming, student athlete; Jared Weber, student manager; Pat Noyes, direct of basketball operations; Brian Lunsford, athletic trainer; Will Hancock, coordinator of media relations; Kendall Durley, engineer for the OSU radio network; Bill Teegins, KWTV sports director and the voice of OSU football and basketball; and two pilots, Denver Mills and Bjorn Falistrom.

Every one of these individuals was an important part of the OSU family. We shall miss them dearly, but their memories will live on in our hearts. May the spirit from our wonderful memories of them grant us the grace, peace and strength to fulfill their dreams.

I have a heavy heart—an aching heart—for the loved ones of those who lost their lives. My prayers and love go out to the families, Coach Eddie Sutton and his staff, and the entire OSU family.

Yes, may God’s love, mercy and grace sustain and strengthen them. Mr. Speaker, I ask that each member of the House join me in prayers and thoughts and prayers out to the young men’s families, their friends, and to the extended Oklahoma State University family who lost ten loved ones.
IN HONOR OF LARRY BERG

HON. PHIL ENGLISH OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, every community has a voice. It’s that one person whose voice resonates through the neighborhoods, asking questions and expressing aloud the thoughts of all.

I rise today to pay tribute to one such voice in Butler County, Mr. Larry Berg. He has left an indelible mark on this area of western Pennsylvania, not only as a radio host, but as an active and vital member of the community. Upon his retirement, he deserves to be honored for his outstanding contributions.

As a 16-year-old freshman at New York University, Larry chose his radio broadcasting major simply because it sounded interesting. But during the span of the next 53 years, he simply lived up to his name.

The University of Missouri had heard of him. The San Diego Police Department had heard of him. The Butler Rotary Club, the Butler County Chamber of Commerce, and, of course, Butler County had heard of him.

Tired of the gypsy’s life, he and his wife decided in 1964 to buy a radio station in Butler, Pa.—a town neither of them had heard of before.

And for 36 years, he ably served this community. On air, he satisfied his listeners by asking probing questions, whether he interviewed the star of the high school musical, a member of Congress, The Beatles’ Paul McCartney or even the King himself, Elvis Presley.

Larry became a local icon through his daily radio talk show. He brought the world to our cars and living rooms with his unique gift. His hard work and dedication to the people of Butler County went well beyond what could be heard over the airwaves.

Off the air, he served as president of many fine organizations such as the Butler Rotary Club, the Butler County Chamber of Commerce and Tourism, and the B’Nai Abraham Synagogue.

Determined to give back to the community that welcomed him with open arms, he also served as a board member of Butler Memorial Hospital, Visiting Nurses Association of Western PA, Boy Scouts, Salvation Army, Lifesteps, Cancer Society, Butler County Music and Art Festival, and Butler County Jaycees.

And his efforts have not gone unnoticed. He’s been honored by various groups including receiving awards such as Junior Man of the Year, Pennsylvania’s Most Outstanding Radio Program About Cancer and the City of Butler Temple Order of Merit Award.

Larry is a genuine individual whose openness, honesty and friendliness on and off the air paints a clear picture of his love for the human species. Those who know him describe him not only as an exceptional human being but a wonderful friend, husband to his wife, Judy, father to his three children and grandfather of 10. Now as he retires, I wish to thank Larry for his years of extraordinary service to our community.

Knowing Larry, I am positive that he is entering retirement in name only. He will continue to be a positive influence in Butler County and beyond; I wish him the best in the coming years.

This may mark the end of his radio program, but it is simply life moving on to a different frequency.

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the accomplishments of the 2000 Ludlow High School boys soccer team. This past season the Ludlow boys team compiled a record of 19–0–3 en route to earnings the Smith Division League Championship, the Western Massachusetts Division I Championship, and the Massachusetts Division I State Championship. Their efforts enabled them to earn a top five ranking nationally.

Not only did the boys team finish the season undefeated, but their 2000 campaign marked the first time in Massachusetts history that a boys soccer team won four consecutive Western Massachusetts Division I titles. Also, the Lions have won back to back State titles, the first time this has been done in Massachusetts in 35 years. Ludlow High School has a fine and proud tradition in boys soccer play.

The school has earned 18 State titles and 26 Western Massachusetts championships.

At the Lions’ coaching helm was Tony Goncalves. He and his staff have fine tuned their team’s athletic skill and have instilled pride, discipline, and sportsmanship in their players. Coach Goncalves and his staff have certainly earned their reputation as one of the finest coaching staffs in all of New England.

I would also like to note that included in this year’s team are seven players that were named to the All-Western Massachusetts squad, three players named to the All-State team, and two players receiving All-New England honors.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to recognize here the players, coaches, and managers of the 2000 Ludlow High School boys soccer team: The players are: Helmer Pires, David Ciminelli, Mike Pio, Joey Jorge, Ray Cheris, Brian Cochenour, Tim Romansky, Paulo Dias, Dennis Carvalho, Paulo Martins, Steve Jorge,

OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT INTERNATIONAL WINS PRESTIGIOUS AWARD

HON. THOMAS G. TANCREDO
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, today I proudly share with my colleagues a recent accomplishment by Operations Management International, Inc (OMI), which is based in my district in Colorado. OMI was founded in 1980 by the Colorado-based, employee-owned CH2M HILL Companies, Ltd., OMI offers complete infrastructure development, financing, design, and operations and maintenance services. The company manages 160 water and wastewater facilities in the Americas, the Middle East and Asia.

On November 21, 2000, OMI made history by being the first company in the water and wastewater industry, as well as the first Colorado-based company to receive the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award. This is the nation’s premier award for quality achievement. OMI is the only company in the service category to win this year. In fact, only four companies nationwide will receive the Baldrige Award in all categories this year.

Named after a former Secretary of Commerce, the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award is an annual honor that recognizes U.S. organizations for performance excellence, and is the highest-level quality award given in the United States. Given the growth of Colorado’s economy, and the quality of its workforce, I expect to see this award return often to our state.

The Baldrige Award evaluates organizations on seven performance excellence criteria: leadership; strategic planning; customer and market focus; information and analysis; human resource focus; process management; and performance and business results. OMI uses these important criteria as a cornerstone for its Obsessed With Quality management process, which focuses on empowering associates to develop new approaches to enhance how they perform their jobs. The company’s mission is summarized in its “E3” motto: Exceed customers’ expectations, empower people and enhance the environment—three main goals that illustrate how OMI conducts its business and developed its stellar reputation.

Winning the Baldrige Award rewards the deserving employees at OMI for two decades of work that has positively affected millions of lives worldwide, through the daily provision of superior utility management services. To win such a prestigious award, OMI has proven that its emphasis on quality is evident in their work product.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating Don Evans, the president of OMI and his staff of over 1,400 on their outstanding achievement.

THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 2001

HON. LANE EVANS OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, as the Ranking Democrat on the House Veterans’ Affairs Committee, I am today introducing H.R. 320, the Montgomery GI Bill Improvements Act of 2001, with my good friend Congressman John Dingell, the principal cosponsor of this important legislation. Our legislation will provide important and needed improvements in education benefits for veterans under the Montgomery GI Bill (MGIB) program, a key recruiting tool for the armed services and a key re-adjustment benefit for the men and women who honorably serve our Nation in uniform.

An essential MGIB enhancement that is long overdue is the 106th Congress passed an important, but modest increase in MGIB benefits late last year. While I supported and was pleased by the MGIB amendments approved last year, those changes were clearly only an initial step in trying to stabilize one of America’s most successful and effective programs. It is widely known and agreed that the true purchasing power of veterans’ education benefits remains inadequate. MGIB benefits today still do not provide our servicemen and women the resources they need to pay for the ever-increasing costs of higher education.

The GI bill is rightly regarded by many as the greatest social program ever enacted by Congress. Its impact on post World War II America was profound. Millions of America’s veterans who might not have been able to afford a college education received college degrees from some of our country’s greatest institutions of higher learning. The GI bill helped spark our Nation’s post war economic boom and contributed to the development of our cultural heritage. Although not considered an investment at that time, the World War II GI bill was a great investment in both individual veterans and in our Nation as a whole. Overlooked too often is the fact that the cost of this investment has been repaid many times over. It was an investment in our Nation that we can and should take again.

The time is right to make the same commitment again to America’s men and women in uniform. We now face a crisis in recruiting high ability young Americans to serve in our Armed Forces. With a booming economy and an over-worked system, we need a well-trained, well-educated military force, young men and women are not choosing military service too few of those who have joined are not re-enlisting. This trend cannot continue if we are to maintain a viable fighting force.

Pakistan’s leadership has expressed his strong support for revitalizing our Nation’s military forces. The surest way to achieve this goal is to recruit and enlist our most able young men and women. Operation Desert Storm is a stunning example of the importance of attracting the most able of our young men and women to serve in the military. Ten years ago, Iraq has the fourth largest standing army in the world and the highly touted and elite Republican Guard. Iraq’s despotic leadership had used these overwhelming forces to invade neighboring Kuwait. America had determined this bald aggression would not stand.

Precipitated by Iraq’s hostile actions, the war to free Kuwait was to be the mother of all wars. In truth, Iraq’s massive Army and elite Republican Guard units were routed in 48 hours. Clearly, America and her allies had technological superiority, but technological superiority did not win the war. The war was won because American forces had high ability young men and women who could make effective use of the war-fighting technology available to them. The troops won the war. Operation Desert Storm is a strong and clear demonstration of the fundamental importance of recruiting and enlisting the most capable young men and women to serve in the Armed Forces.

Our military relies on education benefits to recruit quality soldiers, sailors—airmen and marines. To be an effective recruitment tool, the educational readjustment benefits provided to our veterans must provide the range and quality of education benefits that will attract and retain quality young people in a growing economy. That was also the conclusion of our newly confirmed Secretary of Veterans Affairs, Anthony Principi, when he chaired the Commission on Servicemembers and Veterans Transition Assistance in 1999. Mr. Principi, in the Commission’s final report, recommended an education benefit meets GI—bill—with full payment for tuition and books for those enlisting for 4 years or more and a substantial increase in educational assistance for those who enlist for a shorter time period.

The Principi Commission was right. Like its recommendation, this legislation would provide benefits for two tiers of service members; those who enlist or reenlist for a minimum of 4 years (Tier I) and those who enlist for less than 4 years (Tier II). In addition, this bill would increase the stipend level under Tier I and increase the basic benefit under Tier II to reflect increases in the costs of education since enactment of the MGIB program. For servicemembers who enlist or reenlist for a minimum of 4 years, the bill would:

- Pay the full costs of tuition, fees, books, and supplies.
- Provide a subsistence allowance of $800 per month (indexed for inflation) for 36 months.
- Eliminate the $1,200 basic pay reduction required under current legislation.
- Permit payment for approved specialized courses offered by entities other than educational institutions.

For those who enlist for less than 4 years:

- The MGIB basic benefit would be increased from the currently authorized level of $650 per month to $900 per month. This benefit level would be close to the amount that would be paid if the basic benefit had kept up with increases in the cost of education.
- The $1,200 basic pay reduction would be eliminated.

Trainees would be eligible for accelerated lump-sum benefits and would receive payment for approved specialized courses offered by entities other than educational institutions.
Some may say the cost of this measure is too much. The first year cost, for example, is approximately $800 million in fiscal year 2002. The cosponsors of this bill understand that this is an investment—in a strong military and a stronger America. It will attract more high ability young people to the Armed Forces while providing the economy with highly skilled, college educated veterans. More importantly, the brave men and women who serve in America’s Armed Forces deserve, and have indeed earned, far better than the inadequate educational assistance program now available to them. I strongly urge my fellow colleagues to support this bill and the policy it represents of demonstrating a continued national commitment to our veterans.

For the first time in 40 years, America is enjoying a significant on-budget surplus. This week the Senate Budget Committee estimated the surplus could reach $5.7 trillion over the next ten years. In comparison ten-year cost of H.R. 320 is likely to be $5.7 billion—or one-tenth of one percent of the current budget surplus projection. It is clear that we can indeed make this investment now. If our goals are to have a strong military and a strong economy, America cannot afford to fail to make this investment.

The MGIB served veterans of the second half of the 20th century very well. However, the MGIB must now be re-examined in the context of a January 1999 report by the Department of Defense, which predicted eight of the ten fastest growing occupations of Commerce, Labor, and Education. The Small Business Administration, and the National Institute for Literacy. This report, entitled “21st Century Skills for 21st Century Jobs,” has important implications for veterans entering the civilian workforce following their military service. Emphasizing the importance to the nation of investing in education and training, the report concluded changes in the economy and workplace are requiring greater levels of skill and education than ever before. It predicted eight of the ten fastest growing jobs in the next decade will require college education or moderate to long-term training, and jobs requiring a bachelor’s degree will increase by 25 percent.

The report also noted workers with more education enjoy greater benefits, experience less unemployment and, if displaced, re-enter the labor force far more quickly than individuals with less education. It also reports that, on average, college graduates earn 77 percent more than individuals with only a high school diploma. If America’s veterans are to successfully compete in the challenging 21st century workforce, they simply have to have the ability to obtain the education and training critical to their success. As noted by the Transition Commission, “... education will be the key to employment in the information age.” Although the current GI bill provides some degree of assistance, it is a key that opens very few doors, and it is my belief that all the doors of educational opportunity must be open to our veterans.

According to the 1997 DOD report entitled “Population Representation in the Military Services,” 20 percent of the new enlisted recruits for that year were African-American, 10 percent were Hispanic, 6 percent were other minorities, including Native-Americans, Asians, and Pacific Islanders, and 18 percent were women. The report further notes that, although members of the military come from backgrounds somewhat lower in socioeconomic status than the U.S. average, these young men and women have higher levels of education, measured aptitudes, and reading skills than their civilian counterparts. These young people, most of whom do not enter military service with financial or socioeconomic advantages, have enormous potential, and it is in the best interests of the nation they be given every opportunity to achieve their highest potential. Access to education is the key to achieving that potential. It is also important to remember that, through the sacrifices required of them through their military service, this group of young Americans—more than any other—earns the benefits provided for them by a grateful nation.

Of equal concern to me as a member of the Armed Services Committee is the MGIB’s failure to fulfill its purpose as a recruitment incentive for the Armed Forces. Findings of recent Youth Attitude Tracking (YATS) Studies confirm recruiters are faced with serious challenges, and these challenges are likely to continue. These surveys of young men and women, conducted annually by the Department of Defense, provide information on the propensity, attitudes and motivations, of young people toward military service. Recent YATS show the propensity to enlist among young males has fallen from 34 percent in 1991 to 26 percent in 1998 in spite of a generally favorable view of the military. In addition to a thriving civilian economy, which inevitably results in recruiting challenges, the percentage of American youth going to college is increasing and the young people most likely to go to college express little interest in joining our Armed Forces. Interestingly, these same youth note that if they were to serve in the military, their primary reason for enlisting would be to earn educational assistance benefits.

The study concluded the propensity to enlist is substantially below pre-drawdown levels and, as a result, the services will probably not succeed in recruiting the number of young, high-ability men and women they require. High-ability young men and women are defined as those who have a high school diploma and who have at least average scores on tests measuring mathematical and verbal skills. The Department of Defense tells us about 80 percent of the recruits will complete their first three years of active duty while only about 50 percent of recruits with a GED will complete their enlistment. GAO notes that it costs at least $35,000 to replace a recruit who leaves the service prematurely. The report states these findings underscore the need for education benefits that will attract college-bound youth who need money for school, a segment of American young people we conclude are now opting to take advantage of the many other sources of federal education assistance. The current structure and benefit level of the MGIB must be significantly enhanced if these high quality young men and women are to be attracted to service in our Armed Forces.

Many factors have come together to create what could soon develop into a recruiting emergency. First, our thriving national economy is generating employment opportunities for our young people. Additionally, young Americans increasingly see a college education as the key to success and prosperity. In 1980, 74 percent of high school graduates went to college but, by 1992, that percentage had risen to 81 percent and has been steadily increasing. As a result, the military must compete head-to-head with colleges for high-quality youth. As I have mentioned already, the percentage of young Americans who are interested in serving in the Armed Forces is also shrinking. Make no mistake about it—the strength of our Armed Forces begins and ends with the men and women who serve our nation. Just as education is the key to a society’s success or failure, it is also key to the quality and effectiveness of our military—and the MGIB increases provided by this legislation are a big step in the right direction toward providing that key. Some will say there is no recruitment problem and recruitment goals are being met by the various services. With notable exceptions, in most cases recruitment goals have been met in recent years. I urge my colleagues, however, to look behind the numbers. It is clear to me that standards have been reduced in order for recruitment goals to be met. Clearly this is not the course to take to revitalize the nation’s military.

I strongly encourage my colleagues from both sides of the aisle to support America’s veterans and the military by supporting this vital legislation.
