PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable Michael D. Crapo led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, this is the day You have made, we will seek to serve You in it; this is Your Chamber, we want to honor You in it; this is Your Senate, we desire to maintain the unity of Your Spirit and the bond of peace through it. Give us an acute sense of the power of the words we speak. Grant the Senators the ability to disagree without being disagreeable, to declare truth without depreciation of each other's character, to state convictions without demeaning disdain, to refrain from egregiousness in an effort to explain, and to judge merits without being judgmental.

Dear Father, this is a crucial day for the Senate. Remind the Senators on both sides of the aisle that what goes around does come around. Bless this Senate. Keep the Senators close to You and to each other so that when the vote this afternoon is over, we will not have lost the respect that galvanizes and the reconciliation that heals. We simply want to live this day knowing You will be the judge of what is said and how it is said. We commit ourselves to civility and care as men and women who are accountable to You. You are our Judge and Redeemer. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. Thurmond).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. Senate,
President pro Tempore,

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable Michael D. Crapo, a Senator from the State of Idaho, to perform the duties of the Chair.

Strom Thurmond,
President pro tempore.

Mr. CRAPO thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 9:15 shall be under the control of the majority party.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the time until 9:30 shall be under the control of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, after reviewing his testimony before the Judiciary Committee and studying his long public record, I cannot support the nomination of John Ashcroft to be United States Attorney General.

This is not an easy decision for any of us. We have all served in this body with former Senator Ashcroft. I cannot say that I was a personal friend of his. We never associated socially or anything like that, but I did have dealings with Senator Ashcroft, as we all do around here, on matters of legislative importance.

Quite frankly, in my dealings with him, I always found him to be courteous to me and my staff. I found that we could work together even though we did not have the same views, perhaps, on certain pieces of legislation. I found... that we worked together in the spirit of compromise here on the Senate floor.

When John Ashcroft’s name was first announced as the nominee for Attorney General, I, of course, thought to myself, ‘Is this the man who had not been on my first choice list? Then again George Bush was not my first choice for President. But I recognized that Presidents should have fairly large leeway to have the people around them they want.

But I also have an obligation, a constitutional obligation, in the advise and consent clause in the U.S. Constitution to look over those individuals, to give careful scrutiny to those individuals, to make sure that we, as a body collectively—at least by majority vote—are able to believe that nominated officials will have the honesty, the character, and wherewithal to carry out their duties and to serve all of the American people well.

After long and difficult deliberation, I have come to the conclusion that there are significant questions raised on John Ashcroft’s fitness to be our Nation’s chief law enforcement officer.

First and foremost, I have serious concerns about the misleading statements Mr. Ashcroft made during the confirmation hearings.

As we all know, Senator Ashcroft strongly opposed the nomination of Mr. Jim Hormel as Ambassador to Luxembourg. Jim Hormel, a distinguished lawyer, successful businessman, educator, philanthropist, a scion of our famous midwestern families. We all have heard of Hormel Meats. We probably had Hormel bacon in the morning, things such as that. They are a fine family who came from Iowa and Minnesota. Mr. Hormel, of course, has family who came from Iowa and Minnesota. Mr. Hormel, of course, has had Hormel bacon in the morning, things such as that. They are a fine family who came from Iowa and Minnesota.

In 1998, Mr. Ashcroft said he opposed Mr. Hormel as Ambassador to Luxembourg. He called that Governor Ashcroft said that Missouri did not recruit Mr. Ashcroft for law school. As dean of students, of course—and there are a lot of students there—Mr. Hormel was honest; he said: I can’t remember. Maybe when he was a student, I might have had to talk to him. I might have said something to a group of students. He may have come into my office for something. But I have no recollection of that.

Furthermore, Mr. Hormel emphatically stated he did not “recruit” John Ashcroft for Chicago Law School. When he was nominated in 1997, Mr. Hormel repeatedly tried to meet with John Ashcroft to talk to him. Even if I oppose someone, I at least give them the courtesy to come in and make their case. I have always made that policy, because maybe there is something I haven’t heard or something I would look at differently. John Ashcroft would not even meet with Jim Hormel. Mr. Ashcroft made a recess appointment from President Clinton, served well, and was distinguished in his post in Luxembourg. I asked people at the State Department in charge of that area how he performed, and they said he was honest; he said: I can’t remember. But after I looked into the conclusion that there are significant questions raised on John Ashcroft’s fitness to be our Nation’s chief law enforcement officer.

I have heard of Hormel Meats. We probably had Hormel bacon in the morning, things such as that. They are a fine family who came from Iowa and Minnesota. Mr. Hormel, of course, has family who came from Iowa and Minnesota. Mr. Hormel, of course, has family who came from Iowa and Minnesota. throughout the state. The State legislature saw this anomaly and passed two bills in 1988 and 1989 to require the city to do the same as the county and the state. Governor Ashcroft vetoed both of those bills.

I am also troubled by parts of John Ashcroft’s record which reflects poorly on his commitment to seeking justice for all Americans. Despite his statements to the contrary, I am simply not convinced that John Ashcroft will diligently and thoroughly uphold all of our laws.

I am particularly concerned about John Ashcroft’s statements and actions regarding reproductive rights. Throughout his career, he has been a staunch opponent of the right of women to make their own reproductive decisions. He even wrote legislation to criminalize abortion, even in the cases of rape and incest. Yet during his recent testimony, John Ashcroft told committee members he believes that Roe v. Wade was a bad decision and he would not try to overturn it. He even stated, “No woman should fear being threatened or coerced in seeking constitutionally protected health services.” How are America’s women supposed to believe John Ashcroft in his recent testimony on a woman’s right to choose when he had repeatedly stated during his political career that there is no constitutional right to choose and that Roe v. Wade was wrongly decided? I’m not sure he can.

If anyone can switch off decades of hostility to reproductive rights, intolerance towards homosexuals, and other views, and then fairly and aggressively enforce the laws—he deeply believes are wrong.

As I expect, John Ashcroft will be confirmed despite my vote. I hope they will prove me wrong.

I thank the President.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a number of editorial cartoons regarding the nomination be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASHCROFT IS THE WRONG MAN FOR JUSTICE

John Ashcroft, the man who would be attorney general, is quite a deft backpedaler. Just a few weeks ago, he was a right-wing ideologue dedicated to banning abortion and fighting the civil-rights tide. Now he says he’s opposed to the laws he would enforce if he is Ashcroft. Are we getting—last year’s true believer or a Bush-era compromise?

It’s impossible to tell, and maybe it doesn’t matter. As long as Ashcroft is an extremist in centrist garb or some sort of changeling, Americans have reason to worry. They needn’t fear because of Ashcroft’s conservative leanings; anyone President Bush sends to Justice is bound to lean that way. They should worry instead about Ashcroft’s integrity. As last week’s hearings evinced, he has less of it than his backers like to think.

For starters, there’s the small matter of the truth. Ashcroft isn’t telling it. His declarative statements can simply be his record. Some of his equivocation is penny-ante—such as his claim that he’d never have spoken so fondly of proslavery confederate leaders to Southern Partisan magazine back in 1998 if he’d known the rag favored slave-holding itself.

But other Ashcroft remarks are bold-faced revisionism: His claim that he’d been “found guilty of no wrong” and faithfully heeded all court orders in a St. Louis desegregation case. Ashcroft had habitually flouted court orders. His insistence that he derailing a federal judgeship for Missouri Supreme Court Justice Ronnie White spoke to the prudence of the process is generally regarded as a ceremonial gauntlet to be run, not a serious text of honor. Dissembling is almost part of the game, and it’s up to the Senate to separate the clever wheat from the lying chaff.

Perhaps Ashcroft falls into the second category. Perhaps what he’s saying isn’t what he plans to do once he’s got the Justice Department under his thumb. The prospect is haunting, and is reason enough to reject Ashcroft’s nomination.

But what if Ashcroft is telling the truth—or at least thinks he is? It could very well be, as the man himself said, that Ashcroft believes in the laws he enforced. A dubbler with a statute here and there isn’t enough to disqualify a seeker of the office. But a nominee who has raged all his life against the guiding lights of American law—against the promises of the Constitution—is not a fit flame-keeper.

JOHN ASHCROFT SHOULD BE REJECTED AS ATTORNEY GENERAL

It was not in the United States’ best interests for George W. Bush, the incoming president, to vouch for the country after a bruising and narrowly decided election, to nominate for attorney general a man of such extreme beliefs as John Ashcroft of Missouri. While that bell cannot be unring, the Senate should decide whether he be party or he be party to it. It is not a fit choice for the country.

In this unique case, senators—among them Washington state’s Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell—should forego their customary deference to a president’s Cabinet choice and reject Ashcroft.

Not because of his beliefs. Because of his record. As a two-term state attorney general, the public office he has held that most closely resembles the nation’s chief attorney, he would lead the Justice Department, a mammoth government agency that has been described as being at the front line of battles over emotional social issues like civil rights, abortion, crime and the selection of federal judges.

Personally, and as a senator and member of Congress, Ashcroft had every right to vociferously oppose abortion, even in the case of rape and incest; seek to limit government funding for family planning; and work to defeat modest gun control regulations.

In advance of Ashcroft’s hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee, we posed a question to the panelists by the question, asked to confirm the nomination: Could they be persuaded that Ashcroft would enforce the laws as they are, not as he would like them to be?

It is clear from the resulting testimony and Ashcroft’s long public record in Missouri that the answer is likely to be no. As Missouri attorney general, Ashcroft was not regularly even-handed or moderate on at least a couple of thorny social issues that remain front and center in the country’s psyche—women’s reproductive rights and civil rights. He attempted on several occasions to severely restrict a woman’s legal right to an abortion by making cases in which that was not the main issue and forcing them upward through various layers of appeals to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The end goal was to force Justice. Wade. His official record invites serious questions whether he would (1) do so on the federal stage and (2) vigorously enforce existing laws restricting violence at demonstrations at abortion clinics by anti-abortion opponents.

Aside from Ashcroft’s major misstatement during the hearing about a legal anomaly of the state as a long-running school desegregation case, the record paints a picture of an attorney general who obstructed the cause of education revisionism: His claim that he had been the most resistant individual he encountered in more than 30 federal court cases on the issue.

The record demonstrates Ashcroft is not a uniter, but a divider—something Bush and the country cannot afford in these early stages of healing.

Within the ranks of the National Association of Attorneys General are 17 people who share Bush’s political affiliation, including moderates such as Mike Fisher of Pennsylvania and Carla Stovall of Kansas. We submit either would be a more suitable U.S. attorney general than John Ashcroft.

AFTER THE BALL IS OVER

(By Frank Rich)

Presidents come and go, but a Washington chronicler never. Today we’ll be lectured repeatedly on the poignancy of a president’s exit (not that he’s actually going anywhere), the promise of a new president’s arrival, and the fairy tale of our country’s rebirth. We’ll be reminded that there are no tanks in the streets when America changes leaders—only cheesy floats and aerial assault weapons in the guise of traditional parades.

All true, and yet at this inaugural more than any other in any American’s lifetime there is a cognitive dissonance between the patriotic sentiment and the reality. More Americans voted for the candidate who lost the election than the one who won. The Washington Post poll found not only 41 percent believe the winner “has a mandate to carry out the agenda” of his campaign. Even before the Florida fracas, the commitment of black population rejected the republican candidate (who assiduously tried to attract black voters) by a larger margin than any since Barry Goldwater (who had won there that the Civil Rights Act). And not come calamities ignored in a campaign that differed about prescription drugs, tax cuts and school choice; an energy melt-down in the na- tion’s biggest state, and a possible economic downturn.

George W. Bush seems like an earnest man. When he’s home to Texas, he’s known to say things like “the change the tone” and “unite, not divide.” I don’t doubt his sincerity. But so far his ac- tions are those of another entitled boomer who is utterly blind to his own faults. He narcissistically believes things to be so (and his intentions pure) because he says they are.

Change the tone? As Clinton-Gore raised $33 million largely from their corporate mas- ters for their first inaugural, so Bush-Cheney have solicited $35 million from, among oth- ers, those that have lent their hands on your privatized Social Secu- rity retirement accounts and the pharma- ceutical companies that want to protect the price of their products. And as foreign- eign money is making its entrance—in the form of a legal but unsavory $100,000 con- tribution from the deputy prime minister of Lebanon through his son.

Now comes the news—reported by the col- umnist Robert Novak—that John Huang, the campaign treasurer for the two-times-as-Mr.-Ashcroft, very nicely took the Fifth Amendment in November when questioned in court about his alleged financial ties to Republicans, including Senator Mitch McConnell, the No. 1 opponent of the man, philanthropist and former law school reluctant to the Senate to carry out the agenda judges his personal beliefs would not interfere with the job he will be sworn to do. “I understand that being attorney general means enforcing the laws as they are writ- ten, not enforcing my own personal prefer- ences,” he told the senators. “I pledge to you that strict enforcement of the rule of law will be the hallmark of justice under Ashcroft.”

Ashcroft is a fierce opponent of the U.S. government interference with abortion rights. He has sought to challenge Roe v. Wade, the landmark case that established a woman’s right to choose. Ashcroft believes that federal laws should prohibit abortions even in cases of rape or incest and would allow them only if the mother’s life were in danger. In the hearings, he said he would not seek to challenge Roe v. Wade and viewed the abortion decisions as “the settled law of the land.” He emphasized he knows

S936 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE
February 1, 2001

Mr. Ashcroft then sat. He kept repeating the phrase “the totality of the record.”

Another subject of an Ashcroft character assas- sination, Judge Ronnie White, was not in- vited to testify at the hearings. I located Mr. Ashcroft by phone in Washington, where he had traveled for final meetings at the State Department after concluding his service in Luxembourg. He strongly disputed Mr. Ashcroft’s view of Judge White’s character. “I don’t recall ever recruiting anybody for the University of Chicago,” Mr. Hormel said in our conversation Wednesday night. As an assistant dean involved with admissions, he says, he might have met Mr. Ashcroft in passing while touring campuses to give talks to prospective law school applicants, or in later office visits about grades or cur- riculum. But, Mr. Hormel quickly adds, he doesn’t recall “a single conversation with John Ashcroft.” Nor has Mr. Hormel seen a recorded interview with Mr. Ashcroft. He didn’t have the courtesy to respond to re- peated requests for a meeting during Mr. Hormel’s own confirmation process and didn’t bother to attend Judge White’s hearing before opposing him.

“I think he made insinuations which would lead people to have a complete misunder- standing of my very limited relationship with him,” Mr. Hormel says. “I fear that there was an inference he created that he knew me and based on that knowledge he came to the conclusion I wasn’t fit to be- come an ambassador. I find that very dis- turbing. He kept repeating the phrase ‘the totality of the record.’” I did not have much impression in record he’s talking about. I don’t know of anything I’ve ever done that’s been called unethical.” The record that Mr. Ashcroft so casually smeared includes an appointment to the U.N. in 1996 that was confirmed by the Foreign Relations Committee on which Mr. Ashcroft then sat.

Since Mr. Ashcroft could easily have avoided the divisiveness of the Ashcroft choice by picking an equally conservative attorney general with less baggage, some of his oppo- nents suggested this was not his “true” goal. That seems unfair. Mr. Bush’s real problem is arrogance—he thinks we are stupid. He thinks that if he vouches incessantly for the “rightness of the case,” he settles it. It. Hasn’t. Polls showed an even split on the nomination well before the hearings. He thinks that if he fills the stage with black faces at a white convention and poses incess- santly with black schoolkids and talks about being the “inclusive” president of “every- body,” he can escape the scrutiny that authority voters he’s compassionate. He hasn’t.

George W. Bush likes to boast that he doesn’t watch TV. He didn’t even tune in as the Senate Judiciary Committee debated his fate, leaving his princely retainers to bring him bulletins. Maybe it’s time for him to start listening; he might even learn why so many people are angry at him. And if John Ashcroft’s “heart.” I don’t doubt that our new president will give a poetic Inaugural Address today, but if he remains out of touch with the country, he will not be able to gov- ern tomorrow.

(From the Austin American Statesman, Jan.

Mr. Ashcroft’s Pledge to Enforce the Law

President-elect George W. Bush missed a chance to select a uniter to heal divisions brought by the bruising presidential election when he chose John Ashcroft to be his nomi-inee for attorney general.

The Senate Judiciary Committee’s hear- ings this week on Capitol Hill have exposed the deep reservations many senators and witnesses have about Ashcroft’s fitness for the role of guardian of our country’s laws and all Americans’ constitutional rights be- cause of his staunch conservative record. At the same time, the hearings have galva- nized Ashcroft’s supporters, who praise him as a man of character, principle and honesty, a lawyer who would bring ample leadership experience to the job.

Early indications are that Ashcroft will win Senate confirmation. He was, after all, a member of the Senate and a Republican for two terms and senator for one. Ironically, the man from the Show Me State is being grilled to tell us how he will perform as U.S. Attorney General. It could be seen as—for better or worse—reflecting troubling stands on desegregation, gun control and abortion rights—his words to the committee offer reassurance that can only be tested with time.

The attorney general serves as the coun- try’s chief law enforcement officer, vets fed- eral judge nominees, decides which laws to challenge, enforces civil-rights laws and safeguards liberties, including women’s repro- ductive rights.

One of the most important pledges he took the committee’s personal beliefs would not interfere with the job he will be sworn to do. “I understand that being attorney general means enforcing the laws as they are written, not enforcing my own personal preferences,” he told the senators. “I pledge to you that strict enforcement of the rule of law will be the hallmark of justice under his leadership.”

Ashcroft is a fierce opponent of the U.S. Supreme Court’s landmark Roe v. Wade deci- sion legalizing abortion. He supports a con- stitutional amendment that would prohibit abortions even in cases of rape or incest and would allow them only if the mother’s life were in danger. In the hearings, he said he would not seek to challenge Roe v. Wade and viewed the abortion decisions as “the settled law of the land.” He emphasized he knows he favored the practice. He created the structural for retrying cases.

during both Republican and Democratic administrations.

If his nomination is affirmed, as it appears it will be, in time Ashcroft will be tested on his words to senators that no part of the Justice Department is more important than the Civil Rights Division and on his pronouncement, "My primary personal belief is that the law is supreme." Americans will be counting on him to show us by his actions that his words weren’t convenient window-dressing for a record that reflects effective public service but falls short of inspiring national level as anticipated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 9:45 a.m. is under the control of the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, while I have cast votes in favor of all 15 of President Bush’s nominees to come thus far before the Senate, I rise today to say, sadly, that I cannot vote in favor of Senator John Ashcroft for the office of Attorney General of the United States.

My position on Cabinet level nominees during both Republican and Democratic Presidencies has remained the same: a presumption in favor of a President’s nomination rests with the nominee, and they should be rejected by the Senate only under extraordinary circumstances. Thus far during the 107th Congress, I have voted in favor of: Paul O’Neill for Treasury Secretary; Spencer Abraham for Energy Secretary; Donald Rumsfeld for Defense Secretary; Ann Veneman for Agriculture Secretary; Roderick Paige for Education Secretary; Colin Powell for Secretary of State; Melquindas Martinez as Housing and Urban Development Secretary; Anthony Principi as Secretary of Veterans Affairs; Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr. to be Director of the Office of Management and Budget; Tommy Thompson for Secretary of Health and Human Services; Norman Mineta as Transportation Secretary; Elaine Chao as Secretary of Labor; Gale Norton as Interior Secretary; and Christine Todd Whitman as Environmental Protection Director.

Even though numerous of these people have used positions that are contrary to my own, I have respected the President’s nominations, and have cast my votes on all 15 of these instances in favor of the President’s nominees.

The U.S. Constitution, however, requires the Senate to consider consent or rejection of Cabinet nominees, and the Senate was not intended by the founders of our Nation to be simply a rubber stamp for the White House. While I am particularly troubled by this nomination for Attorney General, knowing that office does not serve as “the President’s personal lawyer”—the President has White House counsel for that purpose—and General Ashcroft serves as the peoples’ lawyer; he is an advocate for all Americans in our courts of law.

I have applauded President Bush’s expressions of support for our nation’s Government of political moderation that will bring Americans together rather than tear them apart. In turn, I have helped organize a “centrist caucus” of Republicans and Democrats in the Senate, and a “New Democratic” organization consisting of moderate Democrats committed to working with moderate Republicans. I believe this is the kind of Government the American people want, and that they are weary of political extremism and harsh ideologies of either the left or right.

I must conclude, based on testimony in Senate hearings, and from a review of Senator Ashcroft’s years in elective office, that this man is the wrong man at the wrong time for the high office of Attorney General. If ever there was a nominee who has committed his years of public service to rejecting bipartisanship and moderation, it is Senator Ashcroft. This nominee has stated repeatedly that he will never be a party to moderation between the parties. He has consistently mocked the very notion of bipartisanship during his years in the Senate. He is famous for his observation when he says that only two things will be found in the middle of the road—dead skunks and moderates, and I would be neither.

How now, can Senator Ashcroft gain the confidence of all the American people that he will be their defender and their advocate? Senator Ashcroft refuses to distance himself from Bob Jones University where he received an honorary degree, despite that institution’s harsh criticism of the Pope as “anti-Christ” and the Roman Catholic and Mormon religions as “cults.” He declines to disavow the Southern Partisan Quarterly Review, a magazine which, incredibly, has defended slavery. He has sponsored as many as seven constitutional amendments to the Constitution, including one which would outlaw most forms of contraception, and take away a woman’s constitutional right to determine for herself whether to have an early abortion, even where rape, incest, or severe physical injury would be involved.

Senator Ashcroft’s record indicates that he has not always distinguished between his strident advocacy and his willingness to enforce the law of the land. As the Missouri Attorney General, he did all in his power to undermine a voluntary school desegregation plan in St. Louis, denouncing voluntary desegregation as “an outrage against human decency.” The St. Louis Post Dispatch described his campaign for the Senate as, “We are not going to allow the worst racist sentiments that exist in the state.”

Perhaps most of all, I am troubled by Senator Ashcroft’s handling of the Judge White nomination. After the Justice Department had convinced Governor Mel Carnahan, Senator Ashcroft’s opponent, to not execute a certain Missouri prisoner, Ashcroft saw an opportunity to vilify Carnahan as “soft on crime.” One of his strategies was to depict a distinguished and highly regarded African American judge as “anti-death penalty” and use the blocking of his nomination to Federal district court as a high profile means of claiming he would be tougher on crime than Governor Carnahan. This despite the fact that Judge White had been endorsed by Republicans and Democrats as well as the Missouri Bar Association and had upheld death sentences at about the same rate as all other members of the Missouri Supreme Court.

The very conservative columnist Stu Taylor, wrote that the Judge White incident alone renders Senator Ashcroft to be “unfit to be Attorney General.” Taylor stated, “The reason is that during an important debate on a sensitive manner, then-Senator Ashcroft abused the power of his office by descending to demagoguery, dishonesty and character assassination.” I do not contend that Mr. Ashcroft is a racist, but I do believe his handling of this matter was characterized by naked political opportunism, dishonesty, and an utter disregard for justice.

I have no illusions about the end result of the vote on the Senate Floor: Senator Ashcroft will be confirmed. I have stated my opposition to any filibuster effort on this matter. A filibuster would have resulted in the need for Senator Ashcroft to secure 60 votes rather than 51. While tactically, this might have improved the likelihood of defeating his nomination, it is a process which has never been used on Cabinet confirmations before, although Senator Ashcroft, himself, has used it against sub-Cabinet appointments and has frequently voted against cabinet nominees. I believe President Bush is entitled to a fair, up-and-down vote on his nominee. Although the confirmation is this, virtually certain, I want to make it clear that I will have nothing to do with supporting this particular one of the 16 Presidential nominations to come before the Senate so far.

Senator Ashcroft, I believe, is the wrong man to help heal America’s divisions, the wrong man to lead the U.S. Department of Justice, and the wrong man to serve as the guardian of the constitutional rights of all the diverse people of our nation. I take my oath to the U.S. Constitution seriously, and I also take my South Dakota values of fairness, and integrity very seriously—for that reason I will vote no on this nomination.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank my friend from South Dakota. He is one of the most thoughtful Members of this body. I know he has spent a great deal of time researching this. I know on and off, so this is—I believe it was time to make his decision, there were only two elements that totally influenced him—his conscience and his oath of office. I know my friend from South Dakota upheld them both.

Mr. President, I do not see anybody on the Republican side at the moment. The order gives them control of this body. We know everybody who is an Attorney General, a district attorney, is faced with a number of issues where you can apply the law at any one area of severity. We all know you can decide the intent of society might be not to apply the law, to not seek an indictment. We also know that any prosecutor has broad discretionary powers in what to investigate and what not to investigate; when to initiate a case, when to push it; when to drop a matter or to settle a case. What do you do, for example, in antitrust? Do you bring the suit? Do you drop the suit? What do you do in seeking a civil rights remedy? Do you wouldn’t; is not? What happens if you think there has been voter fraud that may affect your party and not the other party? Do you still look at it as strictly, or not?

The Attorney General is not the President’s attorney. In fact, it should be pointed out that the President is allowed to appoint a White House counsel—anybody he wants—and there is no Senate confirmation. The reason for that is very simple: We have all believed that everyone should have counsel, a lawyer, representing him and his interests in the White House with whom nobody else can interfere. Every President has done that. It makes sense the President will pick the people to help him.

We can’t say, you shouldn’t have picked this person; you shouldn’t have picked that person. That is the President’s own attorney.

The Attorney General is different. The Attorney General is different from anybody else in the Cabinet because the Attorney General is not a political officer and a political arm of the White House. The Attorney General represents all of us, whether rich, poor, black, white, Democrat, Republican, old, young, conservative, liberal, moderate. We are all represented by the Attorney General. That is why the Attorney General is given such enormous discretion—because, in the Attorney General, the President can always fire the Attorney General, but the Attorney General has that discretionary power.

When Senator Ashcroft says he will exercise that discretion in a manner that respects settled law, a number of areas in which he aggressively and vigorously opposed throughout his career, then it is understandable that many Members may be troubled and skeptical.

My friend from Arizona says many Members have criticized the Republicans for applying too tough a standard to the nomination of Bill Lann Lee to head the Civil Rights Division, yet we seem to be applying the same standard to Senator Ashcroft. When Bill Lann Lee swore under oath and reiterated time and time again that he would enforce the law, the same day that our friends on the Republican side of the Senate, this wasn’t good enough, we couldn’t accept that—basically using the same words Senator Ashcroft used.

The difference is we were prepared to vote against; they were not. I have a vote. If they didn’t believe him, they should have voted against him; if they were for him, they could have voted for him.

It is different here. Here we are debating Senator Ashcroft to be Attorney General. We actually received the nomination in the Senate earlier this week. After the then-President-elect said he was going to nominate him, we moved forward to have a hearing and complete the hearing prior to the President’s inauguration. That is a major difference. We are going to vote on him.

Bill Lann Lee—we should point out, if people are going to raise that as a standard, Bill Lann Lee, a fine, dedicated person, who swore to uphold the law, was never even given the courtesy of a vote by the Senate.

Senator Ashcroft can be asked how he interprets the oath of office. It is the same oath of office he will take as U.S. Attorney General. It is the one he took as Missouri’s Governor and Attorney General. That is why we have raised so many of the points in the hearing. They demonstrate an interpretation of his oath of office in the past, his interpretation of law that he now claims during 2 days of hearings, an entirely different interpretation from what he has shown for 25 years prior to those 2 days of hearings.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call for the quorum be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, first I want to say to the former chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee—Mr. Ashcroft, from Arizona, yesterday, January 20—the very able and distinguished Senator from Vermont, I commend him for the hearings he held on the nomination of John Ashcroft to be the Attorney General of the United States. I had the opportunity to watch some of the press conference I followed the press. I think the able Senator from Vermont conducted a very comprehensive, very careful hearing with respect to former Senator Ashcroft. I think he is much to be commended for doing an outstanding job. He obviously took very seriously the responsibilities of the Senate with respect to its constitutional advise and consent role.

I thought the major effort was obviously made to hear from all sides on this important question. It meant going late into the evening on more than 1 day. But I thought it was a model of how hearings ought to be conducted.

It was not pro forma. It really probed deeply into some very basic and fundamental questions, and I, for one, want to express my very deep appreciation to the Senator from Vermont for the way he planned and conducted those hearings. The Senate is in his debt.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I appreciate that very much coming from one of the intellectual giants of the Senate, my good friend from Maryland. I appreciate what he said. He and I are two who believe strongly in the Senate’s role and to do all we can to carry it out. I appreciate his kind words.

Mr. SANTORIUS. Mr. President, I rise in objection to the nomination of John Ashcroft to be the Attorney General of the United States. I do not do this lightly. I recognize, of course, the argument that is made that Presidents ought to be able to have their Cabinet picks. I have generally in the past, although not always, deferred to that. I believe strongly in the Senate’s constitutional advise and consent role.

On the other hand, I think it is very important when we consider Cabinet appointments, and particularly an office such as the Attorney General, to be very careful in judging how the very important responsibilities of that office will be carried out.

I thought the Senator from Vermont made a very important contribution to this debate in his statement when he outlined the importance of the position of the Attorney General. I am not sure enough focus has been placed on that dimension.

The Senator pointed out that it is a position of extraordinary importance; that the judgment and priorities of the person who is the Attorney General affect the lives of all Americans; that the Attorney General is the lawyer for all the people and the chief law enforcement officer in the country.

The Attorney General controls a very large budget, over $20 billion. He directs the activities of almost 125,000 attorneys, investigators, Border Patrol agents, deputy marshals, correctional officers, and other employees in over 2,700 Department of Justice facilities throughout the country and in 120 foreign cities. He supervises the selection and actions of the 93 U.S. attorneys and their assistants; the U.S. marshals; supervises the Federal Bureau of Investigation; the Immigration and Naturalization Service; the Drug Enforcement Agency; the Bureau of Prisons; and many other Federal law enforcement components.

Furthermore, the Attorney General evaluates judicial candidates, recommends judicial nominees to the President, advises the executive branch on the constitutionality of bills and laws, determines when the Federal Government will go into court, what statutes to defend in court, what arguments to make, and other court decisions.

In other words, as the Senator from Vermont pointed out, the Attorney General exercises a very broad discretion in terms of the judgments he makes and the actions he takes. Therefore, it simply does not dispose of the issue of how someone will perform in the office to assert that he will carry out the laws of the United States.

I would hope so. It is not much of a threshold for nominees to assert that, if confirmed, he will carry out the laws of the United States.

That is the minimum threshold. In the instance of the Attorney General, there is a broad range of activities that are subject to his judgment and discretion, subject to the Attorney General’s sense of priorities, and that, of course, is what raises some very difficult questions with respect to this nomination.

Senator Ashcroft has never hidden the fact that he planted himself at the extreme of the political spectrum. In fact, he has taken pride in that fact and asserted it in the course of his political career. Moderation is not a word which enters into his political thinking. In fact, on more than one occasion, he has belittled moderation, he would have no difficulty living with Mr. Bush’s more nuanced views, but if his lifelong crusade against abortion has stemmed from deep conviction—which we have no reason to doubt—it is hard to understand how that could be so easily switched off. The same is true of his intolerance of homosexuality.

Mr. Ashcroft’s views and record put him on the far right edge of Republican politics. It is difficult to think of any of his positions, on issues ranging from gun control to campaign finance reform; it is that Mr. Ashcroft seems in a different place from that which Governor Bush seemed for his administration during his campaign and again yesterday in his inaugural address. The Missouri politician’s support for a constitutional amendment even in cases of rape is one example. Last week he indicated in committee testimony that he would have no problem living with Mr. Bush’s more nuanced views, but if his lifelong crusade against abortion has stemmed from deep conviction—which we have no reason to doubt—it is hard to understand how that could be so easily switched off. The same is true of his intolerance of homosexuality.

In trouble, more often than his views have been Mr. Ashcroft’s inflammatory political tactics. On a range of issues—as a governing party, in fact—Mr. Ashcroft has conducted pro forma, bilaterally moderated hearings; he would now assume a job that demands a sense of balance, of respect for opposing views. He helped the Senator, the well-qualified nominees whose views he found noxious; we think in particular of James Hormel, whom Mr. Ashcroft deeming unfit to serve as ambassador to Luxembourg because of his advocacy of gay rights, and Bill Lann Lee, whom Mr. Ashcroft opposed for a Justice Department position on civil rights.

Most troubling of all is Mr. Ashcroft’s record of insensitivity toward those rights, a record that raises doubts about whether the Justice Department can maintain its role in the office to assert that he will carry out the laws of the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print the editorial in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WRONG FOR JUSTICE

The Constitution assigns to the Senate the duty to provide a president advice and consent on his nominations. Had George W. Bush sought senators’ advice before designating John Ashcroft as his choice for attorney general, it is quite likely that the Senate would have been less enthusiastic about his nomination after the Senate floor.

Mr. Ashcroft portrayed the respected judge as a man with a “tremendous bent toward criminal activity.” In one case, Mr. White had favored a new trial for an American convicted before a judge who had made racially inflammatory statements; Mr. Ashcroft claimed on the Senate floor, falsely, that Judge White had been convicted of a felony.

The Missouri politician, who upset the convention of the party by winning a Republican primary campaign for the U.S. Senate last year, then went on the offensive to attack his opponent.

Ashcroft also declined during his confirmation hearing to repudiate his association with and praise for Bob Jones (“I thank God for this institution”), which maintained a ban on interracial dating at the time of his visit.

If the answer, in our view, would have been easy. Former senator Ashcroft is opposed for a Justice Department position on civil rights.

Furthermore, the Attorney General is the lawyer for all the people and the chief law enforcement officer in the country.

The Missouri politician, who upset the convention of the party by winning a Republican primary campaign for the U.S. Senate last year, then went on the offensive to attack his opponent.

Ashcroft also declined during his confirmation hearing to repudiate his association with and praise for Bob Jones (“I thank God for this institution”), which maintained a ban on interracial dating at the time of his visit.

If the answer, in our view, would have been easy. Former senator Ashcroft is opposed for a Justice Department position on civil rights.
Mr. Ashcroft argues that in each of these instances he was stressing legitimate policy positions, such as opposition to busing, support for state's rights and resistance to a soft-on-crime judiciary. But deliberately or not, he was also playing racial politics.

Senators traditionally have voted to confirm nominees whose ideologies they reject, and to reject them in the hope of blocking their appointment. With this appointment, it seems to us, Mr. Bush has taken on a burden he did not need. We hope, for his sake and the country's, that as attorney general Mr. Ashcroft will behave as the measured and reasonable man he portrayed at last week's hearings, and not with the opportunism that has marred his career.

(Mr. ALLEN assumed the Chair.)

Mr. of other SENES. I now quote from that editorial:

"More troubling than his views have been Mr. Ashcroft's inflammatory political tactics. On a range of issues—as a governing philosopher, as an attorney general, Mr. Ashcroft has explicitly belittled moderation; he would now assume a job that demands a sense of balance, of respect for opposing views. . . . Those of us who have interacted with him in the Senate have spoken about the intensity and the zeal of his positions as an advocate, and I recognize that. In fact, he has asserted it as one of his great political strengths and something in which he takes a great deal of pride.

He has taken a number of positions which are well outside the mainstream of thinking—most Americans, I think, are in the middle of the road. Senator Ashcroft has been quoted as saying that there are only two things you find in the middle of the road—a moderate and a dead skunk.

I think one will find most of the American people are in the middle of the road.

There are extreme ideological positions that are on which of course, raise important questions. In fact, when Senator Ashcroft held up the nomination of Bill Lann Lee to be the head of the Civil Rights Division—a man of extraordinary qualification and dedication, a life story that ought to command the respect and admiration of all Americans—he argued that Lee is "an advocate who is willing to pursue an objective and to carry it with the kind of intensity that belongs to advocacy, but not with the kind of balance that belongs to Mr. Ashcroft."

It is the pursuit of specific objectives that are important to him limit his capacity to have the balanced view of making the judgment that will be necessary for the person who runs the (Civil Rights) Division."

That is the mental framework, the perspective that he brought to this very important nomination as the head of the Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice. I do not want to simply turn that standard and apply it to him but I do think it is indicative of an attitude and of a mindset that gives me great pause when I come to consider someone who is going to exercise his kind of philosophy in the breadth and range of judgments that are placed in the hands of the Attorney General of the United States under the statutes of our country.

Another instance I want to point to which has given me great concern is what John Ashcroft did to Judge Ronnie White. As others have spoken at length on that, I will not go into it in any great detail. But Judge White was ambushed on the floor of the Senate. That, simply put, is what it amounted to. And that ambush was, in effect, staged by John Ashcroft.

Judge White is a man who worked his way up, the classic American opportunity story, to become a judge on the highest court of the State of Missouri, an African American who broke a barrier when he went on that court. He was then nominated to be a Federal district judge. His nomination was brought out of the Judiciary Committee. The arguments used on the floor to ambush him were not raised in the Committee. On the floor the Senate was told that he "has a tremendous bent toward criminal activity." Imagine saying that about a sitting judge of the State's highest court, a statement which upon examination cannot be sustained.

Furthermore, Senator Ashcroft argued about White that, if confirmed he "will use his lifetime appointment to push law in a pro-criminal direction consistent with his own personal political agenda.

No wonder that legal columnist Stuart Taylor, wrote in an article that John Ashcroft's treatment of Judge White alone makes him unfit to be Attorney General.

The repeated threat during an important debate on a sensitive matter, then-Senator Ashcroft abused the power of his office by descending to demagoguery, dishonesty and character assassination.

The Baltimore Sun, in an editorial of yesterday—I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASHCROFT IS NOT FIT FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL

Few people had ever heard of racial profiling a few years ago. But now it's a household phrase, because former Attorney General Janet Reno's law- enforcers proved many police departments were treating skin color as if it were a highway crime, pulling over minority drivers for one reason—their race.

It was an important reminder that discrimination is still very much alive in America.

During Ms. Reno's tenure, Justice Department lawyers delved into problems in employment, fair housing and lending, education and voting. They investigated Americans With Disability Act violations, enforced federal laws protecting access to absentee ballots.

The point: Ms. Reno didn't merely acknowledge or respect the existence of civil rights and other laws designed to protect Americans. She embraced them doggedly, because discrimination still robs entire classes of Americans of their most basic liberties.

That brings us to the troubling nomination of former Missouri Sen. John Ashcroft to head the Justice Department.

His record suggest no such embrace of civil rights laws or the premise of equal protection under law. Many things he has said and done betray a vicious hostility toward them.

But now it is difficult to call for derailing a Cabinet nominee. Generally, we believe presidents should be given wide latitude in making their appointments. But that alone would be insufficient for us to call for derailing a Cabinet nominee. Generally, we believe presidents should be given wide latitude in making their appointments.

There is another, a more important reason to oppose Mr. Ashcroft—his character.

When Mr. Ashcroft tanked the federal judicial nomination of Ronnie White, he demonstrated recklessness with truth and integrity that the nation can't countenance in an attorney general.

He lied about Mr. White's stance on death penalty cases, painting him as an anti-death penalty maverick when, in fact, Mr. White had affirmed death sentences 71 percent of the time as a Missouri Supreme Court judge.

And to this date, Mr. Ashcroft has not owned up to what he did. During his own confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Mr. Ashcroft defended what he did to Mr. White—and denied that it represented a distortion of the truth.

Whatever the reasons for Mr. Ashcroft's actions, they speak to a willingness to pursue his own agenda by any means necessary, without regard to the truth or to the trust that our citizens, including his colleagues in the Justice Department, must place in him.

That makes it difficult—or near impossible—to imagine Mr. Ashcroft setting a credible legal agenda from the seat of the nation's highest law enforcement officer.

It also makes it hard to believe any of what Mr. Ashcroft said during his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, which was旦丁 offered the opportunity to abide by and enforce laws that don't necessarily coincide with his personal beliefs.
The Senate Judiciary Committee voted yesterday to confirm Mr. Ashcroft. The full Senate could vote by Thursday. A “no” vote in the full chamber—however unlikely that may be—would be the only course that will save the Justice Department from the taint of Mr. Ashcroft’s impurity.

Mr. SARBANES. In commenting on John Ashcroft’s distortion of Judge White’s record, said:

Whatever the reasons for Mr. Ashcroft’s actions, they speak to a willingness to pursue his own agenda by any means necessary, without regard to veracity or fairness.

This from an editorial in the Baltimore Sun entitled “Ashcroft isn’t right for attorney general.” I just want to add one other instance or example of the kind of approach and attitude in John Ashcroft’s record that concerns me.

When he was attorney general of the State of Missouri, charged with carrying out the laws, he repeatedly, in school segregation cases, was rebuked and overruled by the courts, both State and Federal courts, on very sensitive and important school segregation cases.

In my view, he has had a consistent record of being at the extreme, of taking positions well outside the mainstream. And we are now faced with the question of whether he should be placed in a position where he will have broad discretion and will be making very sensitive judgments. It is a position that the whole country looks to sustain its civil rights and its civil liberties.

The Nation needs to have confidence that the person serving as Attorney General will personify fairness and justice to all our people all across our country.

Mr. SARBANES. I ask unanimous consent to speak for another 30 seconds.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Chair.

Mr. SARBANES. The New York Times ran an editorial opposing this nomination, made reference to President Bush’s inaugural visions of “a single nation of justice and opportunity.” In my view John Ashcroft does not carry out that vision. I oppose his nomination. And I am not amused when I hear people talking about John Ashcroft in a way that is not the John Ashcroft I know.

I know John Ashcroft. I have spent hours and hours and hours with John Ashcroft on a multitude of issues. I have absolute, total, and complete confidence that he is going to be one outstanding Attorney General of the United States.

I am qualified as anybody that has ever been an Attorney General. If you look at his qualifications, he was attorney general for the State of Missouri for 8 years. He was named head of the National Association of Attorneys General which means the other attorneys general across the country elected him to be their leader.

I have heard some of my colleagues say he is extreme. That is not the type of person a bipartisan group of Attorneys General would pick. He would not have been picked as the head of the National Association of Attorneys General.

He served for 8 years as Governor of the State of Missouri. He was elected head of the National Association of Governors. Again, that is not an extremist. That is not somebody outside the mainstream. He was elected by his peers, by the bipartisan group of Governors, to be head of the National Governors’ Association.

He then was elected to the Senate which is how I really got to know him. Of course, I had known him by reputation as being an outstanding attorney general and outstanding Governor.
He was an outstanding Senator. He served 6 years in this institution. I served with him in countless meetings, and I could not have come away knowing a person of greater intellect and integrity—a person of conviction, a person who can get things done, a person who will listen to all people on all sides, a person who is fair. Again, I have come to the conclusion that he will be an outstanding Attorney General.

I am bothered by the opposition. I wonder where it comes from because maybe they are talking about a different person.

On the issue of fairness, I have heard people say that we have done a good job since we have confirmed all of President Bush’s nominees except one, and it has only taken a couple weeks.

I go back 8 years ago, after President Clinton was elected, when every one of President Clinton’s nominees were confirmed by voice vote, unanimously, by January. He had three. One was for a Senate position, that was for Attorney General. And that delay was not because Republicans were fighting the Attorney General nomination. It was because President Clinton ended up sending three names to the Senate because he had three problems with the first two before he submitted his final nominee. The delay was not because of Senate opposition. It was because he had some problems with the first couple of nominees he submitted.

When we eventually got to Janet Reno, after he submitted her to the Senate, she was confirmed in very short order without all this rancor, without all this partisan nonsense. She was confirmed 98-0. She was every bit as liberal as John Ashcroft is conservative—every bit.

In addition, Ms. Reno said she was going to uphold the law. I have heard the intensity of this debate since John Ashcroft’s nomination. Will he enforce the law and access to abortion clinics? John Ashcroft said he would. He took an oath. He said: I will uphold the law of the land.

In comparison, it is interesting to note that the Beck decision is the law of the land. Attorney General Reno and the Clinton Administration did not enforce that decision. Also, the law of the land on campaign finance says it is unlawful to spend federal funds on Federal property. She did not enforce that statute in spite of the fact that her own people in the Justice Department said: You need to appoint a special counsel. She did not do it. Although it was the law of the land, she did not enforce it.

Some of us are troubled by that. Maybe I wish I had my vote back.

If people want to vote against John Ashcroft, they can vote against him, but to make these character assassinations is totally unfair. It certainly is not what happened 8 years ago.

Let me touch on a couple other things. I have heard he should not be confirmed because he was opposed to Judge White. Well, I voted against Judge White, and I would vote against him again. Why? I have been in the Senate for 20 years almost as long as Senator Leahy, the ranking minority member on the committee, I don’t remember a single time a national law enforcement organization contacted Senators to say please vote no on a Federal judge.

I remember getting a letter from the National Sheriffs’ Association saying: Vote no on Judge White, I said: Why? There were three deputy sheriffs were murdered and a sheriff’s wife was murdered and the defendant confessed. That case is the reason they wrote the letter. Of seven Missouri Supreme Court judges, Judge White was the sole dissenter who said: Let’s review this case. There may be extenuating circumstances and the defendant deserves another trial.

The sheriffs didn’t feel that way. The prosecutors didn’t feel that way. Other professionals did not. The chiefs of police in Missouri, said: Don’t confirm Judge White. I can’t remember, again, another nomination where you had the chiefs of police all across the State who know the particular judge say: Don’t confirm him. What was something I needed to know.

I am also troubled when some people say: You didn’t confirm Judge White because of his race. Most of us didn’t know what race he was. We knew law enforcement again, and we voted no. I make no apologies for that vote.

To imply that someone is a racist because they oppose a nominee is wrong. Most of us opposed Judge White because he was opposed by law enforcement groups.

I heard somebody say: John Ashcroft, back when he was Governor, opposed a court decision on desegregation. Then we find out that Senator Danforth, who is pretty much everybody’s opposite as anybody, also opposed that decision, and Congressman Gephardt opposed that decision. At that time, I think Mel Carnahan, who was also an elected official in the State of Missouri, opposed that decision. Yet some people are trying to make that a reason to oppose Judge White.

John Ashcroft has had about three decades of public life. His record has been scrutinized to the nth degree. The whole thing seems to be missing the point. I have never doubted Ashcroft’s decency, never questioned his legal abilities, never worried that, in a particular case, he would be unfair.

But the attorney general is not just the nation’s chief cop. He is also the nation’s chief law enforcement officer. It is from that office that decisions are made on which laws to enforce, and how vigorously; what discretion ought to be exercised, and in which direction; how law-enforcement resources should be deployed, and with what emphasis. Blind reassurances that Ashcroft would “enforce the law fairly” aren’t much help.

To take a simple example, what does it mean to enforce America’s drug laws “fairly”? Does it mean locking up anybody caught with illegal drugs, as the law permits? Does it mean focusing resources on major traffickers, as the law also permits? Or does it mean requiring law enforcement to treat—of the other way around? Does it mean confiscating more and more assets of people found in violation of the drug laws? The law allows all these things—allows as well the disparate sentencing for powdered and “crack” cocaine and the well-documented racial disparity that results from it.

To promise to enforce the law without talking about which policies would be emphasized or changed is to say nothing at all. And when a president wants to change things on the matter, law-enforcement policy is largely left to attorneys general to decide. Some have gone against discrimination, some against organized crime, and some have gone against monopolies and trusts. Some have followed public sentiment, and some have gone their own way. Most of the time, it hasn’t mattered much. So why do so many non- conservatives believe it will matter so much this time?

The answer is in Ashcroft’s record of advocacy. With extraordinary skill, he can carve for positions that are well outside the American mainstream—on gun control, on abortion, on juvenile justice, on the death penalty, on the environment. Yet he has managed to make his position on all these issues might be shared by a significant minority. I say only that his views are unusually conservative. He is, I think it fair to say, an isolate. And when you take someone who has been advocating views that are well away from the political center and put him in charge of law-enforcement policy, it’s not enough to say he’ll “enforce the law.”

Ashcroft signaled his own understanding of this point when he was asked whether he would try to undermine the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision on abortion. He said that for the solicitor general (who ranks under the attorney general) to petition the Supreme Court to have another look at Roe would undermine the Justice Department’s standing before the court.

He failed to read his response, saying he could make the attempt, though it might be impolitic to do so at this time.

Is it unfair to oppose Ashcroft, an experienced professional who, knowledgeable of our history and religious views would influence his role as attorney general?

As Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) reminded us the other day, Ashcroft himself has answered. When Bill Lann Lee was named by President Clinton to head the Justice Department’s civil rights division, Ashcroft said at the Senate confirmation hearing: “Mr. Lee, I’m not unequivocally in favor of affirmative action.”

He had no doubt concerning the nominee’s professional ability, Ashcroft said at the time, but Lee’s beliefs (on affirmative action) didn’t matter because, he contended, in order to have another look at Roe would undermine the bid of an aspirant to the chairmanship of the ACLU, not top gun for George W. Bush’s legal team.

Opening day theatrics went like clockwork. Sen. Jean Carnahan (D-Mo.), the widow of Ashcroft’s opponent, Gov. Mel Carnahan, brought her poignant dignity to a miscarriage of judgment by the judicial nominee. Her words were notably chilly. She urged her colleagues to be fair, but it made a nice picture.

Obviously, it’s a case of mistaken identity.

That man sitting before the Senate Judiciary Committee is no kooky right-winger. Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). Sen. Pat Leahy, Democrat of Vermont, was temporary chairman but turns into a pummeling oaf when the cat’s away.

There were moments of discord and disbelief, but these were treated like caterer’s mistakes at a splashy wedding. Sen. Edward Kennedy asked Ashcroft’s record on school desegregation and voter registration. In Missouri, Ashcroft had resisted a voluntary desegregation plan and vetoed a registration expansion scheme.

On Day Two, a little celebrity caucus was brought on just before the lunch break. Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) gushed about Ashcroft. So did former senator John Danforth (R-Mo.), the patron of Clarence Thomas, Bushey’s land mine Supreme Court appointments. Like father, like son: Thomas was supposed to flatten all objections because he is black for Bush II, Ashcroft’s club membership is in the resistance.

There were moments of discord and disbelief, but these were treated like caterer’s mistakes at a splashy wedding. Sen. Edward Kennedy asked Ashcroft’s record on school desegregation and voter registration. In Missouri, Ashcroft had resisted a voluntary desegregation plan and vetoed a registration expansion scheme. To answer Kennedy, Ashcroft read his veto messages.

If the hearings resume next week, Ashcroft can expect a kinder, gentler hand on the gavel in the person of Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). Sen. Pat Leahy, Democrat of Vermont, was temporary chairman but turns into a pummeling oaf when the cat’s away.

There’s only one thing wrong with the Ashcroft picture, the figure of Judge Ronnie White, the Missouri Supreme Court judge who was deprived of a seat on the federal bench by the persecution of Ashcroft, who got every Republican in the Senate to vote against his nomination. Ashcroft found White insufficiently enthusiastic about the death penalty.

By all accounts, Ronnie White is a distinguished man of some accomplishment as, in fact, he was the country’s support or even tacit approval of the “soft bigotry” that would not do something like that. Malice is a singularly unspectacular trait in an attorney general.

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 18, 2001] THE ASHCROFT DOUBLE STANDARD (By Richard Cohen)

A review of the record, a reading of the relevant transcripts and some telephone interviews with people in the know lead me to conclude that if John Ashcroft, a rabidly right-wing Democ- rat, would oppose his own nomination as attorney general. For once, he would be right.

The Ashcroft of the Senate Judiciary Committee meetings is a package of hypocrisy. His message is that his ideology, hard right and intolerant, ought to be beside the point. With his determination to uphold the law, even the laws he believes are in contradiction to what God himself intends. This is why Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) calls the “Ashcroft standard.” It is utter nonsense.

Take, for instance, the way Ashcroft handled the nomination of James C. Hormel as ambassador to Luxembourg. Hormel was a man of some accomplishment as, in fact, Ashcroft had firsthand reason to know. Back in 1964 Hormel was a student at the University of Chicago Law School when Ashcroft was a student there. Nonetheless, Hormel was gay and not particularly shy about it, either. For the reason—and that reason only—Ashcroft opposed the nomination.

This episode tells you quite a bit about Ashcroft. By any measure, Hormel was certainly qualified to be ambassador to this dot of a European country. As mentioned, he had been the dean of a prestigious law school, had become a well-known San Francisco civil rights lawyer and philosopher. He had been endorsed by, among others, the Episcopal bishop of California, the Right Rev. William Swing, and the former everything (secretary of state, etc.), George Shultz.

Ashcroft was unmoved. Along with Trent Lott, he considered homosexuality a sin and, as with racists, polygamists, misogynists and you-name-its, he could cite this or that passage of the Bible to support his intolerance. Whatever the reason, he would not even meet with Hormel. He would not take his phone calls.

Ashcroft explained his vote against Hormel in committee as one based on the fear that Hormel was “promoting a lifestyle and values that I don’t think you and I would embrace.” This might mean to embattle Luxembourg. And then he said this: “People who are nominated to represent this country have to be evaluated for whether they represent the country well and fairly.”

There you have it: The Perry Mason Moment in which Ashcroft blurs out the reason he is not suited to be attorney general. His qualifications, as with Hormel’s, are beside the point. It’s what he advocates that matters—whether, as he would put it, he represents the country well and fairly.

It’s Ashcroft’s extreme views on abortion—not late-term or mid-term, but what you might call pre-term or even so-called morning-after pills. It’s his approach to gun control, his reactionary approach to civil rights legislation, his opposition to life-saving needles exchanged. His insistence that drug treatment programs are a sheer waste of money since junkies can’t—quote an old Nat King Cole tune—”only exercise their right.” Only experience teaches otherwise.

It might be one thing if George W. Bush had won a mandate for such policies. But he didn’t. The bidding was not so cut and dry. Why did the country register its support or even tacit approval of the “soft bigotry” that Ashcroft represents. It does not matter that he says he will administer laws he doesn’t particularly like; it matters only that he is unsuited by rhetoric, ideology and political conduct to lead our national justice system.

If confirmed, Ashcroft would be instrumental in picking the next generation of federal judges. Bush has already declared himself a very substantial number in law enforcement, and said they were distressed that he somehow he might be pro-criminal. Ronnie White. One of the leading law professors, including those appointed by Ashcroft, had been recused himself in a trial that began the Jefferson County was biased and should have been asked after Judge White was defeated?

Mr. LEAHY. Of course.

Mr. LEAHY. Of course. Mr. NICKLES. Wasn’t that letter sent after Judge White was defeated?

Mr. LEAHY. Indeed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print additional editorials and material regarding the nomination in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Newsday]

ASHCROFT’S RIGHTS DON’T INCLUDE BEING AG

By Clarence Page

Now that George W. Bush has nominated Sen. John Ashcroft (R-Mo.) to be attorney general, it would not be inappropriate for Ashcroft’s fellow senators to treat him as fairly as he treated Judge Ronnie White.

In other words, will they tar him as an extremist? Will they roast him, not for his personal qualifications, what is confirmatory evidence that the hearings are supposed for, but for his personal beliefs? Will they paint him as an extremist and distort his record without giving him an opportunity to respond? Would how Ashcroft viewed Bill Clinton’s nomination of Judge Ronnie White to the federal bench in 1999. Civil rights groups are particularly angry that Ashcroft had the successful party-line fight to defeat White.

Ashcroft painted White’s opinions as “the most anti-death-penalty judge on the Missouri Supreme Court” and said that his record was “outside the court’s mainstream.” Actually, whether you agree with him or not, White may be called “pro-criminal” or “outside the mainstream.” Court records show that White voted to uphold death sentences in 41 out of 59 capital cases that came before him on the state supreme court. In most of the other cases, he voted with the majority of his fellow justices, including those appointed by Ashcroft when he was Missouri governor.

In fact, three Ashcroft appointees voted to reverse the death penalty a greater number of times than White did.

On the Senate floor, Ashcroft singled out two of the only three death-penalty cases in which White was the sole dissenter. In one of them, White questioned whether the defendant’s right to effective representation was violated. Whether you agree or not, you don’t have to be “pro-criminal” to value the rights of the accused, especially in a death-penalty case. In the other, White questioned whether the lower court judge, Earl L. Blackwell of Jefferson County was biased and should have recused himself in a trial that began the evening after Blackwell issued a controversial campaign statement.

Blackwell, explaining in a press release why he had switched to the Republican Party, said, “The truth is that I switched to the Republican Party, said, ‘The truth is that I have noticed in recent years that the Democratic Party places far too much emphasis on representing minorities such as homosexuals, people who don’t want to work and people with a skin that’s any color but white.’ Again, the judge has the right to express his views, but you don’t have to be an extremist to understand why White, the first African American to sit on the Missouri Supreme Court, might question that judge’s even-handedness.

When Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) asked White if he opposed the death penalty, White absolutely not, did not get a chance to rebut Ashcroft’s charges because Ashcroft did not raise them until months after White’s confirmation hearings. This tactic was characterized as “delay and ambush” by Elliot Minnig, vice president and legal director of People for the American Way, a liberal group that oppose Ashcroft’s confirmation.

To charge that Ashcroft is a bigot, as some have done, is not even true. He has a right to express strong views without being called names. He has a right to oppose affirmative action and gay rights, as he has done in the past despite opposition. He has a right to favor a “right to life” until someone has been sentenced to death.

But he does not have a right to be attorney general. Therefore, it is not surprising that the four pillars of the liberal establishment—civil rights, abortion rights, organized labor and environmental protection—have begun to rally their opposition to his confirmation.

Why, they ask, should this country have an attorney general who opposes so many sensitive laws that he is supposed to enforce? Ashcroft will have a chance to answer that question in his confirmation hearings. The Senate will let him offer his side of the story. That’s more than Ashcroft gave Ronnie White.

[From the Des Moines Register, Jan. 3, 2001]

Will he enforce the laws even-handedly—even those he disagrees with?

The record of Senator John Ashcroft inspires no confidence that he’ll enforce the laws of the land fairly as attorney general of the United States.

The Missourian, who lost his re-election bid to the Senate this fall, vigorously opposes portions of Right to Life, even though White had voted to uphold the death penalty in 41 of 59 cases—said to be about the same share as that of the judges whom Ashcroft appointed when he was governor. Consider that along with Ashcroft’s failed flight to keep David Satcher, a respected black physician, from being surgeon general because Satcher is against a ban on late-term abortions. And in 1999, Ashcroft accepted an honorary degree from Bob Jones University, school that the allegedly upright Mr. Ashcroft revealed himself as a shameless and deliberately destructive liar in 1999 when, as the junior senator from Missouri, he launched a malicious attack against a genuinely honorable man, Ronnie White, who had been nominated by the president to a federal district court seat.

Justice White was a distinguished jurist and the first black member of the Missouri Supreme Court. Mr. Ashcroft, a right-wing zealot with a fondness for the old Confederacy, could not tolerate White’s appointment to the federal bench. But there were no legitimate reasons to oppose Justice White’s confirmation by the Senate. So Mr. Ashcroft reached in the bag of tricks to toss handfuls of calumny to throw at the nominee.

He declared that Justice White was soft on crime. Worse, he was “pro-criminal.” The judge’s record, according to Mr. Ashcroft, showed “a tremendous bent toward criminal activity.” As for the death penalty, that all-important criminal justice barometer—well, Mr. Ashcroft, obviously, was beyond the pale. He said that Ronnie White was the most anti-death-penalty judge on the State Supreme Court.

Listen closely: None of this was true. But by the time Mr. Ashcroft finished painting his false portrait of Justice White, his republican colleagues had fallen into line and were distributing a memo that described the nominee as “notorious among law enforcement officers in his home state of Missouri for his decisions favoring murderers, rapists, drug dealers and other ungodly criminals.”

This was a sick episode. Justice White was no friend of criminals. And a look at the record would have shown that even when it came to the death penalty, White voted to uphold capital sentences in 70 percent of the cases that came before him. There were times when he voted (mostly with the majority) to reverse capital sentences because of procedural errors. But as my colleague Anthony Lewis pointed out last week, judges are human beings—there is no need to reverse capital sentences.

But the damage was done. Mr. Ashcroft’s unscrupulous, mean-spirited attack succeeded in derailing the nomination of a fine judge. The confirmation of Justice White was defeated by a 52-to-48 party-line vote. The Alliance for Justice, which monitors judicial selections, noted that it was the first time in almost half a century that the full Senate had voted down a district court nominee.

The Times, in an editorial, said the Republican had reached “a new low” in the judicial confirmation controversy. A editorialist wrote, “It is a Sad Judicial Mugging.”

So much for the fair-minded Mr. Ashcroft.

A Republican senator, who asked not to be identified, said: “What he could do is not to shout down Mr. Ashcroft’s treatment of Ronnie White, but that it would be wrong to suggest that the attack on his nomination was racially motivated.

That may or may not be. It would be easier to believe if Mr. Ashcroft did not have some of the most conservative Republicans poised to race. As Missouri’s attorney general he was opposed to even a voluntary plan to desegregate schools in metropolitan St. Louis. Just a year ago he moved in the State Supreme Court to outlaw the plan.

This is the man George W. Bush has carefully chosen to be the highest law enforcement officer in the nation. That silence that you hear is the sound of black Americans not celebrating.

[From Time Magazine, Jan. 2, 2001]

THE WRONG CHOICE FOR JUSTICE

(By Jack E. White)

What was president-elect George W. Bush thinking when he selected John Ashcroft as his nominee for Attorney General? That same question was being asked by a number of high-qualified African Americans for high-level positions—Secretaries of State Colin Powell, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice and Secretary of Education Rod Paige—blacks who would somehow overlook Ashcroft’s horrendous record on race? Or that it was compassionately conservative for Bush to hand Ashcroft nomination to Secretary of State Colin Powell? It was more than the pale. He said that Ronnie White was the most anti-death-penalty judge on the State Supreme Court.

Listen closely: None of this was true. But by the time Mr. Ashcroft finished painting his false portrait of Justice White, his republican colleagues had fallen into line and were distributing a memo that described the nominee as “notorious among law enforcement officers in his home state of Missouri for his decisions favoring murderers, rapists, drug dealers and other heinous criminals.”

This was a sick episode. Justice White was no friend of criminals. And a look at the record would have shown that even when it came to the death penalty, White voted to uphold capital sentences in 70 percent of the cases that came before him. There were times when he voted (mostly with the majority) to reverse capital sentences because of procedural errors. But as my colleague Anthony Lewis pointed out last week, judges are human beings—there is no need to reverse capital sentences.

But the damage was done. Mr. Ashcroft’s unscrupulous, mean-spirited attack succeeded in derailing the nomination of a fine judge. The confirmation of Justice White was defeated by a 52-to-48 party-line vote. The Alliance for Justice, which monitors judicial selections, noted that it was the first time in almost half a century that the full Senate had voted down a district court nominee.

The Times, in an editorial, said the Republican had reached “a new low” in the judicial confirmation controversy. A editorialist wrote, “It is a Sad Judicial Mugging.”

So much for the fair-minded Mr. Ashcroft.

A Republican senator, who asked not to be identified, said: “What he could do is not to shout down Mr. Ashcroft’s treatment of Ronnie White, but that it would be wrong to suggest that the attack on his nomination was racially motivated.

That may or may not be. It would be easier to believe if Mr. Ashcroft did not have some of the most conservative Republicans poised to race. As Missouri’s attorney general he was opposed to even a voluntary plan to desegregate schools in metropolitan St. Louis. Just a year ago he moved in the State Supreme Court to outlaw the plan.

This is the man George W. Bush has carefully chosen to be the highest law enforcement officer in the nation. That silence that you hear is the sound of black Americans not celebrating.
raise questions about the sincerity of Bush’s attempts to reach out to blacks. As the St. Louis Post-Dispatch noted in an editorial in December, Ashcroft “has built a career out of opposing school desegregation in St. Louis and opposing African Americans for public office.”

When he served as Missouri’s attorney general and director of public safety, the Reagan Administration opposed school desegregation plans in St. Louis, then used the issue to win the governorship in 1984. Since his election to the Senate in 1994, Ashcroft has consistently appealed to the right wing of his party, even when his approach risked appearing racist. He fought unsuccessfully against the re-election of David Satcher, a distinguished black physician, as surgeon general, because Satcher promotes a ban on late-term abortions. In 1998 Ashcroft told the neo-segregationist magazine Southern Partisan that Confederate war heroes were “patriots.” In 1999 he accepted an honorary degree from South Carolina’s Bob Jones University, which hadn’t yet dropped its ridiculous ban on interracial dating.

Most disturbing of all, as Ashcroft was gearing up a short-lived campaign for the White House last year, he verbally attacked Mr. LEAHY. The point is, the Fraternal Order of Police indicated that the expression of alleged voting-rights abuses in Florida, which many blacks believe disenfranchised them and delivered the presidency unfairly to Bush, is unique was that during my 20 years in the Congress, this is the only case and other cases who said vote no, and to review this dissent. We let’s try to have a little different flavor, I don’t like the word “ambush” applied to Judge White. To clarify again a couple of things that happened on the reasoning why this Senator voted against him—and I would guess the reason why the majority of Republicans voted against him—was because we received a letter from the National Sheriffs’ Association that said: Vote against Judge White. They had good reasons expressed in that letter. In this principal case that we are talking about, three deputy sheriffs were murdered, and the wife of a sheriff was murdered, and Judge White was an individual who came from very humble beginnings, worked his way through law school, was considered a highly respectable member of the bar in Missouri, became a justice of the Supreme Court of Missouri, and then, sort of at the peak of his legal career, was nominated to the United States Senate. He went through the hearings in the Judiciary Committee, was voted out by the Judiciary Committee by a lopsided vote. Why did we have the vote at that time? Our colleagues on the Democrat side were clamoring for a vote. Why did people vote for Judge White in committee and then vote against him on the floor? The letters of law enforcement did not come up until after he was approved by the Judiciary Committee. I will grant my colleague from Vermont that there were other letters from law enforcement.

The letter from the National Sheriffs’ Association was not before the Judiciary Committee. I wish they would have written it before the Judiciary Committee had voted on it afterwards when it was the pending nomination before the floor of the Senate.

One other clarification I wish to repeat is that I am just very troubled by the allegation that he was opposed because of his race because most people did not know what his race was. I sat through a meeting where these letters by law enforcement were discussed, and Judge White’s race was never mentioned—not that we knew that. I was in that meeting. That wasn’t an issue. It didn’t come up.

What came up was law enforcement opposition and at that time the only law enforcement letters we saw were in opposition. If we had known from the FOP saying confirm him, maybe that would have made a difference, and probably would have. Maybe if the sheriffs’ organizations would have gotten their letter out before the Judiciary Committee, it might have made a big difference in the Judiciary Committee. Timing is important. But it is important to remember that the reason why we had the vote on the floor at that time, I believe, was because our colleagues on the Democrat side were clamoring for a vote.

I don’t like the word “ambush.” Maybe that vote should have been delayed so we could have had a little more discussion of why these law enforcement groups were against him. Maybe someone might have been for him given more time to enter into that debate. But that didn’t happen, and I wasn’t involved in scheduling the vote. But my point is I didn’t feel as though he was ambushed. I do say what happened to law enforcement letters we saw were in opposition. If we had known from the FOP saying confirm him, maybe that would have made a difference, and probably would have. Maybe if the sheriffs’ organizations would have gotten their letter out before the Judiciary Committee, it might have made a big difference in the Judiciary Committee. Timing is important. But it is important to remember that the reason why we had the vote on the floor at that time, I believe, was because our colleagues on the Democrat side were clamoring for a vote.

Again, I think John Ashcroft is one outstanding individual who is more than qualified to be Attorney General of the United States. And I am absolutely confident that when he is confirmed, we will look back and say he is an outstanding Attorney General for the United States of America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.
Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, just so the RECORD is straight on law enforcement officers, it is interesting that there was no contact of anybody on this side. Senator Ashcroft said the reason he stopped Judge White was because of that urging of law enforcement groups. But then subsequently, press reports and then the reports by the law enforcement officials themselves and Senator Ashcroft's own testimony at his hearing contradicted that; that he had instigated and on-chest and lobbying opposed to Ronnie White. I am not suggesting Ronnie White was defeated because he was an African American, but it would be hard for anybody not to know he was as far as that was mentioned at great length in the debate the day before and the debate just before the vote by those who were on the floor debating it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the time until 10:45 a.m. shall be under the control of the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN. He is so recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I have known John Ashcroft for almost 40 years, as a college classmate, a fellow State attorney general and a colleague in the Senate. Throughout that time, our views on important issues very often have diverged, but I have never had reason to doubt his personal integrity. It strikes me in this regard that the often-noted and sometimes derided notion that Senators judge their colleagues more leniently than outsiders misses an important point. It is not that we as human beings find it tremendously difficult to pass judgment on those we have worked with and know well. And it is because I have known Senator Ashcroft and his record so well that I find the conclusion I have reached—which is to oppose his nomination—so awkward and uncomfortable. But that is where my review of the record regarding this nomination and my understanding of the Senate's responsibility under the advice and consent clause lead me.

Throughout my tenure in the Senate, I have voted on hundreds of presidential nominees. In each case, I have adhered to a broadly deferential standard of review. I explained in my first speech on the Senate floor—in which I offered my reasons for opposing the nomination of John Tower to serve as Defense Secretary—the history of the debates at the Constitution Convention make clear that the President is entitled to the benefit of the doubt in his appointments. The question, I concluded, I should ask myself in considering nominees is not whether I would have chosen the nominee, but rather whether the President's choice is acceptable for the job in question.

That does not mean that the Senate should serve merely as a rubber stamp. Were that the case, the Framers would have given the Senate no role in the appointments process. Instead, the Senate's constitutional advice and consent mandate obliges it to serve as a check on the President's appointment power. As I put it in my statement on Senator Ashcroft's nomination, I believe this requires Senators to consider several things: First, the knowledge, experience, and qualifications of the nominee for the position; second, the nominee's judgment, as evidenced by his attitudes and decisions, as well as his personal behavior; and third, the nominee's ethics, including current or prior conflicts of interest. In unusual circumstances, Senators can also consider fundamental and potentially irrevocable policy differences between the nominees and the mission of the agency he or she is to serve.

On a few occasions during my 12 years in the Senate, I have determined that the views of certain nominees—on both ends of the spectrum—fell sufficiently outside the mainstream to compel me to oppose their nominations. In each case, I had serious doubts about whether they could credibly carry out the duties of the office to which they were nominated. In 1993, for example, I voted against President Clinton's nominee to head the National Endowment for the Humanities because I believed that his active support of so-called college speech codes cast doubt on his ability to administer the NEH.

That same year, I expressed opposition to another of President Clinton's nominees—his choice to head the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division—because I feared that her writings and speeches demonstrated an ideological vision of what the voting rights laws should be that was so far from what they had been that I was reluctant to put her in charge of enforcing those laws, regardless of whether or not she had pledged to abide by them.

In 1999, just last year, I concluded that a nominee to the Federal Election Commission held views on the nation's campaign finance laws that were so inconsistent with the FEC's mission that I could not in good conscience vote to place him in a position of authority over that agency. And just this week I reached a similar conclusion with respect to President Bush's nominee to lead the Interior Department.

In both instances I explained that the Constitution casts the Senate's advice role as a limited one and counsels Senators to be cautious in withholding their consent. I nevertheless have opposed nominees where their policy positions, statements, or actions made me question whether they would be able to administer the agency they had been nominated to head in a credible and adequate manner. Regrettably, I conclude that such a determination is again warranted on this critically important nomination. The cumulative weight of the record of the nominee and because of the position for which he has been nominated.

The Justice Department occupies a unique role in the structure of the Federal Government. As its mission statement declares, the Justice Department exists "to ensure fair and impartial administration of justice for all Americans. To that end, the department shall ensure the fair and consistent application of the law every hour, every day, and in every case." It becomes hard to imagine how and on whom to bring to bear the force of the criminal and civil law, making countless decisions not only on whom to prosecute or sue, but also on how harshly to investigate and prosecute those who—in the name of the people of the United States—should face death as punishment for their actions. No other agency has such a broad and sweeping authority to take away our citizens' life, liberty or property—an authority we as Americans accept because no other agency has more consistently sought to exemplify the rule of law and the abiding American aspiration of equal justice for all. No other official of the United States government bears a greater responsibility for ensuring that the vision of the Attorney General for protecting and enforcing the rights of the vulnerable and disenfranchised in our society. If we are to sustain popular trust in the law, which is so important for "domestic tranquility," it is critical that the Department which is charged with enforcing the law not only be administered according to law, but also that the great majority of Americans have confidence in the fairness and integrity of its leadership.

Unfortunately, Senator Ashcroft's past statements and actions have given understandable suspicions to many citizens—particularly some of those whose rights are most at risk—that he will not lead the Department in a manner that will protect them. Others have detailed his record so extensively that I need not do so again. Suffice it to say that on issues ranging from civil rights to privacy rights, Senator Ashcroft has clearly taken positions considerably outside of the mainstream of American thinking.

When given the opportunity to consider laws as Missouri's Governor and enforce them as Missouri's attorney general, he took actions that today raise serious questions among many in this country about his commitment to equal justice and opportunity. In speeches and articles, he has spoken and written words that have particular force in the minds of many in the American community to question his sensitivity to their rights and concerns. And, when acting on nominees in the Senate—including Judge Ronnie White and Ambassador James Hormel—he has made statements that have raised serious questions in the minds of many about whether he will make fair and appropriate decisions regarding groups of Americans that have frequently been victimized by discrimination.

The cumulative weight of these words and deeds leaves me with sufficient doubt about Senator Ashcroft's ability to appropriately carry out—and be perceived as appropriately carrying out—the manifold duties of Attorney General, so that I have decided not to support his nomination.

Before yielding the floor, I would like to comment on one more issue that has come up during the consideration of this nomination: Senator Ashcroft’s religious beliefs and his public profession of his faith. During the time since the President nominated Senator Ashcroft, many have argued—too often privately—that Senator Ashcroft’s fierce held beliefs to his religious practices somehow cast suspicion on his ability to serve as Attorney General. I emphatically reject—and am confident my colleagues will reject—any suggestion that Senator Ashcroft’s religious beliefs bear in any manner at all on the consideration of his nomination.

All across this nation, tens of millions of Americans of a multitude of faiths daily and weekly make professions of their faith, and publicly demonstrate that elevate, order and give purpose to their lives. To suggest that all of us who believe with a steadfast faith in a Supreme Being as the Universe’s ultimate Sovereign have an obligation to mute one of our faith’s central elements to serve in public office is not to advance the separation of church and state, but instead to erect a barrier to public service by Americans of faith which is totally unacceptable. To consider the private religious convictions of a nominee for public office which are different from most—whether Pentecostal Christian, Orthodox Jewish, Shia Muslim, or any other faith—as a limitation on that person’s capacity to hold that office is profoundly unfair. It is wrong.

Nowhere in the first amendment or anywhere else in the Constitution or in the jurisprudence surrounding them is there any suggestion that of all the values systems that those in public life are permitted to draw upon to form their views and their actions, religion stands alone as being off limits. Let us remember that the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were drafted by people of faith whose belief in the Creator was the direct source of the rights with which they endowed us and which we enjoy to this day. To suggest that one may justify his or her views on abortion, environmental protection, or any other issue with reference to a system of secular norms, but not by drawing upon a tradition of religious beliefs, seems to me to be at odds not only with the freedom of religion and expression enshrined in the first amendment, but also with the daily experience of the vast majority of our fellow citizens. The first amendment tells us that we may not impose our religion on others. It most decidedly does not say that we may not ourselves use our religion to inform our public and private statements and positions.

It is Senator Ashcroft’s record, not his religion, that we should judge. I admire Senator Ashcroft for his private and public adherence to his faith, but for the reasons stated above, based on his record, I will vote against his confirmation.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that I be able to continue for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, while the distinguished Senator from Connecticut is on the floor, I appreciate the last part of his remarks. I will speak more about it later today.

I am concerned that there somehow has been this strawman put up as though there is a religious test. As I and others stated at the beginning of these hearings and as I stated on the floor, one of the things I admire most about Senator Ashcroft is his commitment to his family, his commitment to his religion. As practically everybody has pointed out, whether we are for or against him as Attorney General, these two things we have admired the American people; his family and his commitment to his religion. There should be no doubt about that in the public’s mind.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, thank you for your courtesy.

Over the past 8 years, I believe our Justice Department has floundered dangerously, challenging our most basic understanding of the rule of law and starkly reminding us in America of the awesome power of the Federal Government and the dangers that the exercise of that power can present to a free society such as ours. I believe public confidence in our system of justice has been seriously damaged in the past 8 years and that our country has suffered as a consequence.

I believe it is time to restore the public trust, and I do not believe there is a better qualified or more honorable man to do that job than Senator John Ashcroft, our former colleague. Indeed, he is one of the most, if not the most, experienced nominees for Attorney General we have ever had in our history. He is one of the best educated, most experienced nominees for Attorney General I have seen in my 23 years in Washington.

What is most outstanding about Senator Ashcroft is not his resume, although we could go on and on and on about that. It is not his strong record of leadership as the attorney general of his State of Missouri and his leadership as the Attorney General of the United States of America. No, it is not his impressive legislative accomplishments in the Senate.

I submit what is most outstanding about John Ashcroft is his character. It is the strength of that character that makes him so well suited to be Attorney General of the United States. His principles and his integrity underscore the kind of leadership the Justice Department so desperately needs and the American people so rightly deserve in an Attorney General.

John Ashcroft’s conscience and his conviction ensure rather than question his commitment to enforce the laws of our land fairly and impartially. I do not believe even for a moment that Senator Ashcroft, most fierce opponents truly believe he will not endeavor to enforce our laws faithfully. While his conservatism threatens them, their real fear, I believe, is that he will enforce the law without prejudice, that he will be uniform in his application. This is because their greatest ideal, I believe, is to use the Justice Department as a tool to advance the political and social agenda of America by selectively enforcing laws with which they agree and ignoring those with which they disagree.

John Ashcroft, I submit to you, is not going to do that. As a man who respects the rule of law and the importance of the public trust in our justice system I have no doubt he will enforce the laws of the land rather than creatively interpret them, twist or contort them to match his personal beliefs.

I am pleased to support the nomination of John Ashcroft to be the Attorney General of the United States. I sincerely believe he will honor the office of Attorney General and he will restore integrity to the Justice Department. I look forward to his confirmation later today by the Senate and his future service to the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska, Mr. MUKOSKOWSKI.

Mr. MUKOSKOWSKI. Mr. President, I too wish to give my debate time today toward a successful vote here in the not too distant future.

I rise today to emphatically support the nomination of John Ashcroft to become the next Attorney General of the United States. He has served our Nation with distinction and with honor. I do not take lightly my senatorial duties to review the qualifications of any nominee for this office. The Attorney General is the Nation’s highest law enforcement officer. It is the strong and faithful execution of the laws we pass, representative democracy shall fail. Our laws become mere words. It is with this understanding, and a high personal regard for the office, that I support John Ashcroft’s nomination.

It has become clear to me and others, after following the unusually personal debate on this nomination, that no one can question John’s qualifications to perform the duties of this job. In fact, I believe one could hard-pressed to find a more qualified, experienced nominee. John has served with distinction, as has been noted and stated, as attorney general, as Governor, and as...
U. S. Senator in this body. Not once during his long and successful tenure as a public servant has he ever failed to uphold an oath of office.

Think about that. We have had some experience in debating the merits of the oath of office and, just what it means. I think to all of us it is a very sacred oath, a very meaningful oath, and one that should be reflected on.

John has never failed to uphold his oath of office in any capacity. I know John Ashcroft does not plan on starting now.

Unfortunately, this nomination process has done a grave disservice to a very decent and honorable man. We as legislators often disagree on policy. I am sure I have disagreed with John on some issues. But our actions as legislators are guided by our own personal convictions. We must vote our conscience and represent the people who grace us with their votes.

But we are not here to elect a legislator. Rather, we deal with the office of the Attorney General of the United States. This is not John Ashcroft the Senator but, rather, John Ashcroft the Attorney General. Like all of us who have served in different roles throughout our lives, I know John fully understands his position in government.

John will faithfully enforce our Nation’s laws without a hint of personal bias or a hidden agenda. He will uphold the rule of law for all Americans, enforcing laws as they are enacted by the Congress. At the end of the day and at the end of this debate, my vote will be cast for the nomination for the simple reason: John Ashcroft is a man of his word. I have yet to hear anyone demonstrate in this debate that he is not.

John has clearly stated numerous times that he will not allow his personal beliefs to interfere with his ability to enforce the law. I believe him. Throughout his long and successful career, he has never, never given anyone a reason to doubt his word. I thank John for his willingness to further serve our Nation and his willingness to withstand the numerous unjustified personal attacks that have been made on him. My thanks will be expressed in my vote in favor of the nomination. I encourage my fellow Senators to do the same.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the time until 11:10 a.m. has been claimed by the control of the Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Edwards. The Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Edwards, is recognized.

Mr. EDWARDS. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, the Nation is emerging from an extraordinarily close election that has left much of the country feeling divided. It is a time when all of us have an enormous responsibility to unite our country. In order to unite this country, we have to turn to leaders with wisdom and courage and bring us together. In my judgment, with the nomination of Senator Ashcroft, President Bush has fallen short of that goal.

Why has he fallen short? Because in a time when our country desperately needs a unifier, the President has nominated a man to be the chief law enforcement officer of the country—the people’s lawyer, the lawyer for all the people—who has a long record of divisive and inflammatory rhetoric which results in him being viewed as a polarizing figure.

There are some folks who argue that his positions are just the result of very deeply held beliefs. Some people believe that these words were not intended to mean what they say. In the end, the one thing that is certain is that he is, in the view of many Americans, a polarizing and divisive figure.

Senator Ashcroft opposed the nomination of Ronnie White, a very well-respected African American justice on the Missouri Supreme Court, for what at least appeared to be simply political reasons. In opposing the nomination of Justice White, Senator Ashcroft used words and language that not only were inflammatory but also fundamentally disrespectful for a man who had lifted himself out of poverty, worked his entire life to become a justice on the Missouri Supreme Court, and committed his professional life to the fair administration of justice.

It is not unfair for some Americans to question whether Senator Ashcroft can adequately represent their public interests given his history.

Some argue that Senator Ashcroft, in fact, has given words that he will follow and enforce the law. The problem is that the realities of the Justice Department are that there are daily choices the Attorney General will be required to make. He will be required to decide which laws will be vigorously enforced and which laws will be defended from attack.

Senator Ashcroft has spoken very eloquently about the reasons he pursued certain cases while he was attorney general and why he challenged certain laws and legislation. Whether you agree or disagree with what Senator Ashcroft did as attorney general of Missouri, you can count on the fact that those same situations can and will arise, in fact, during the term of the next Attorney General of the United States.

The Attorney General will be required to make daily decisions, discretionary decisions, that are critical to the lives of very many Americans. Again, it is not unfair for some Americans to question whether Senator Ashcroft, even keeping his word, which he has given us, will make decisions that will adequately represent and protect them given his prior statements and actions. The question is whether he will, in fact, be all the people’s lawyer, as he has a responsibility to be.

The post of the Attorney General is critical to providing leadership and governance in this country. When our U.S. Senator in this body, Mr. ALARD. There will be order in the galleries. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington, Mr. Gramm.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I have to say that as I listen to this organized campaign against John Ashcroft, I sometimes wonder if there is not an effort to make the love of traditional values a hate crime in America.

Fifty years ago, a person who set out to engage in public service might unfairly be criticized for not being a member of a church or not professing religion, but who would have thought 50 years later that a man would be mocked for holding a deeply held faith? Who would have thought 50 years later that calling on the Almighty to help you fulfill your duty was given to you by your State and your Nation would be held up to ridicule?

The plain truth is, we may have “In God We Trust” on our coins, but we do not have it in our heart.

As I look at this caricature that has been created, that his opponents claim is John Ashcroft, this is not the man I know. This is not the man with whom I have worked for 6 years. This is not the man whose son attended college with my son. This is not the man who, in public or private in 6 years, I never heard say a mean word against anyone. This is not the man who, remarkably, in my opinion, can express himself without ever using profanity.

I have him criticized for opposing judges with no good reason, and yet in the case of Judge White he was opposed by 77 sheriffs in the State. He was opposed by both Senators, and he was opposed and rejected by the Senate on an up-or-down vote.

In short, when I look at all of these criticisms, and when I weigh them against the bottom line facts, there is no basis for them at all.

I thank Jon Kyl and I thank Jeff Sessions for the excellent job they have done in putting out the facts.

A person who fits the ugly caricature that has been presented here in the Senate and around the country could not be the John Ashcroft I know.

A person who fit that ugly caricature could not have been elected Attorney General twice in the State of Missouri. A person fitting that caricature would not have been chosen by his fellow attorneys general to be the president of the National Association of Attorneys General. A person who fit the ugly caricature presented here could not have been elected Governor of Missouri twice, and would not and could not have been chosen by his 49 fellow Governors to head the National Governors’ Association.

I know George Bush. I have a pretty good idea what is in his mind and in his heart. And a person who met this ugly caricature that we hear could not and would not have been nominated by George Bush. The plain truth is that John Ashcroft is probably the most qualified person ever to be appointed Attorney General.

I want to conclude with this thought. I am beginning to wonder if this was all an effort to smear and defeat John Ashcroft or whether this was an effort to cow John Ashcroft; whether this is an effort by those who lost the election, who hold views that are alien to public policy questions that face our country.

It is very rare that a Cabinet nominee is defeated by the Senate. It does not happen very often. There is a presumption that the President should be allowed to choose his or her people to serve in the Cabinet. In addition, I do not honestly believe John Ashcroft is the right person to be Attorney General for our country.

But my baptism to politics was the life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. I was speaking at a gathering. I didn’t expect the reaction. I remember a book Dr. King wrote called “Where Do We Go From Here: Chaos or Community?” finding its way on my philosophy changes just a little bit.

I have heard nothing but those who have reservations about John Ashcroft enforcing the law. It would seem to me, after two terms as attorney general of the State of Missouri, two terms as Governor, and 6 years in the U.S. Senate, it would surface somewhere that he would not.

I thank Senator Kyl and Senator Sessions for the research they have done. I have talked to some of the law enforcement people in Missouri and have done some research in my own home State of Montana. What I have found is that we could not have chosen a better man to represent this country in the halls of the Attorney General. I shall support him—and support him wholeheartedly—because we have a man of substance and of fiber.

I thank my good friend from Texas for yielding some of his time. I also thank my good friend, Senator WELSTON from Minnesota, for yielding some of his time he has reserved and allowing me to go at this time.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the time until 11:45 shall be under the control of the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. WELSTON.

The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. WELSTON. Mr. President, I have voted for any number of the President’s nominees to serve in our Cabinet, even though I am 100-percent sure I am going to be in disagreement with them on some of the really major public policy questions that face our country.

It is very rare that a Cabinet nominee is defeated by the Senate. It does not happen very often. There is a presumption that the President should be allowed to choose his or her people to serve in the Cabinet. In addition, I do not honestly believe John Ashcroft is the right person to be Attorney General for our country.

But my baptism to politics was the civil rights movement. I learned from men and women of color—many of them young, and many of them old, and hardly any of them famous, though they should be famous—about the importance of civil rights and human rights. This is the framework I bring to the Senate. This is why I am going to vote no.
I don’t agree with some of the positions Senator Ashcroft took as a Senator, but that is not the basis of my vote. Some of his views on abortion, to make abortion a crime even in the case of rape and incest, are extreme and harsh. I once said in a TV debate that John Ashcroft gives me cognitive dissonance because I like him as a person and I don’t understand how a person whom I like can hold, sometimes, such extreme and harsh views. I don’t agree with his position on abortion. I don’t agree with some of his other positions.

It is not his voting record. Without trying to be self-righteous on the floor of the Senate or melodramatic, I have spent hardly any time with groups or organizations except at the beginning when people came by and I said: Please give me everything to read and let me think this through myself.

I am troubled by the statements made by Senator Ashcroft and his role in blatantly distorting the record of Judge White. I am going to say “blatantly distorting the record” because I think that is what happened. The evidence is compelling. We heard from Judge White about that as well. To call him a judge on the basis of the decisions he had rendered—I don’t want to say it was “extraordinary”—crossed a line. I have a right as a Senator to say, if John Ashcroft, as Attorney General, with the key position he won by playing in terms of the decisions and the Federal judiciary, is going to use the same standard and the same methodology he used to oppose Justice White, then a lot of justices, a lot of men and women who could serve our country in the Federal judiciary, will never make it. That is one of the reasons I oppose this nomination.

The question was put to John Ashcroft in the committee about his opposition to Jim Hormel: Did he oppose him because he was gay or did he oppose him because he was a civic leader? Senator Ashcroft stated that “the totality of circumstances suggested that Mr. Hormel would not make a good ambassador.” What made up that totality? Senator Ashcroft didn’t attend Mr. Hormel’s hearings. He refused to meet with Mr. Hormel. He never returned any of Mr. Hormel’s calls. And in the hearing, John Ashcroft suggested or stated that Mr. Hormel “recruited” him to the University of Chicago School of Law. Mr. Hormel denied that he didn’t ever recall recruiting anybody for the University of Chicago. And he can’t remember a single conversation with John Ashcroft over the past 30-some years.

John Ashcroft also told us, in the battle over the nomination, that Mr. Hormel, by simply being an openly gay man who is also a civic leader, has “been a leader in promoting a lifestyle, and the kind of leadership he has exhibited there is likely to be expensive to individuals in the setting in which he is assigned,” suggesting that Luxembourg, as a Catholic nation, would find it difficult to receive him.

The evidence is that Luxembourg openly embraced him. He was a great Ambassador. It is also a questionable assumption, because it is a Catholic country, that Catholics would not embrace a person, would not judge a person by the content of his character.

I think this through myself. I give me everything to read and let me think this through myself.

It is not my voting record. Without trying to be self-righteous on the floor of the Senate or melodramatic, I have spent hardly any time with groups or organizations except at the beginning when people came by and I said: Please give me everything to read and let me think this through myself.

United States of America if he is Attorney General. He will head up the Justice Department. This is the Voting Rights Act. This is the Violence Against Women Act. This is all about whether or not you can have a man or a woman to participate in our man—who will head the Justice Department and will lead our country down the path of racial reconciliation. We have a huge divide in the United States of America on the central question of race. We have a question before us as to whether or not we have a man who can lead the Justice Department for justice for all people and who will be a leader when it comes to basic human rights questions. He is not the right choice.

I thank the Judiciary Committee, Democrats and Republicans alike, for the way in which they conducted the hearings.

I say to John Ashcroft, whom I am sure viewing this debate and listening to all of us, that if confirmed, again, I wish him the very best. He will be the Attorney General for all of us in our country. But I also would like to say, to me, this is, in my 10 1/2 years in our country. But I also would like to be the Attorney General for all of us in our country. But I also would like to be a leader when it comes to basic human rights vote, a basic human rights vote, and I cannot support John Ashcroft to be Attorney General and to head the Justice Department; not on the basis of every- thing I fought about civil rights and human rights; not on the basis of the younger years of my life; not on the basis of being a United States Senator from the State of Minnesota who had Senator Hubert Humphrey, who gave one of the greatest civil rights speeches ever at the 1948 Democratic Party Convention. I am in a State which is a civil rights State. I am from a State which is a human rights State which passed an ordinance that said there shall be no discrimination against people, not only by race but sexual orientation, for housing, employment—across the board. Therefore, I vote the tradition of my State; I vote my own life's work "no" to this nomination. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator LEAHY's 15 minutes be given to Senator KENNEDY, the Senator from Massachusetts; 7 1/2 minutes to the Senator from Nevada, Mr. BAYH; and 7 1/2 minutes to the Senator from New York, Mr. SCHUMER; and that Senator DASCHLE's time from 12:45 until 1:15 be given to Senator LEAHY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask that the following editorials and materials regarding the nomination of John Ashcroft be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE JOKER IN THE DECK

We know that George W. Bush would have to appease the Republican Party's ultra-right-wing. By nominating John Ashcroft for attorney general, Bush has delivered, big-time. The booby prize goes to the civil rights and human rights communities. Though Ashcroft is a Missouri Republican—he was attorney general, governor and most recently U.S. Senator—he's a good ol' boy in the old South tradition.

"With the possible exception of Sen. Jesse Holmes, I do not believe anyone in the United States Senate has a more abysmal record on civil rights and civil liberties," said Ralph Neas, president of People for the American Way.

Why, Ashcroft was given an honorary degree by the notorious Bob Jones University, the South Carolina school that until recently banned interracial dating.

Meanwhile, graycoats still fighting the Civil War (see Tony Horowitz's book, Confederates in the Attic) must have been glad to read the interview in which Ashcroft delivered a strong defense of Southern "patriotes" like Robert E. Lee, Jefferson Davis and Stonewall Jackson.

Does he defend slavery, too?

It's scary that this sort of rhetoric fell so recently from the lips of one who, as attorney general, was simply the head of the U.S. Civil Rights Division, which deals with discrimination against people, not only on the basis of race. We have a question before the Senator from Massachusetts; 7 1/2 minutes to the Senator from Indiana, Mr. Bayh, as close as I can remember coming to a basic civil rights vote, a basic human rights vote, and I cannot support John Ashcroft to be Attorney General and to head the Justice Department; not on the basis of every-thing I fought about civil rights and human rights; not on the basis of the younger years of my life; not on the basis of being a United States Senator from the State of Minnesota who had Senator Hubert Humphrey, who gave one of the greatest civil rights speeches ever at the 1948 Democratic Party Convention. I am in a State which is a civil rights State. Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask that the following editorials and materials regarding the nomination of John Ashcroft be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dec. 24, 2000]

MR. ASHCROFT AND EQUALITY

There is a case to be made that the Senate should confirm John Ashcroft as attorney general. He has a distinguished record of honest and effective public service. He is a smart lawyer who was a strong state attorney general. And the Senate should give some deference to a new president's Cabinet choices.

In addition, Mr. Ashcroft has the institutional tradition of senatorial courtesy on his side. He served in the club and fellow senators will be reluctant to break the cloudy day.

Nevertheless, the Senate should set aside its sensibilities and scrutinize Mr. Ashcroft's record as it relates to the job of attorney general. In particular, I want to investigate Mr. Ashcroft's opposition to civil rights, women's rights, abortion rights and to judicial nominees with whom he disagrees.

The Ashcroft choice is at odds with President-elect George W. Bush's image as a uniter. When Mr. Ashcroft was running for president in 1998, he said: "There are voices in the Republican Party today who preach pragmatism, who champion conciliation, who counsel compromise. I stand here today to reject those deceptions." So much for compassionate conservatism and bipartisanship.

It would be an exaggeration to say Mr. Ashcroft is a racist. It would be an exaggeration to say Mr. Ashcroft is a racist. He recalls that his father, a noted evangelist, urged him as a boy to read Richard Wright's account of the trials of a black youth in "Black Boy." Africans, whom his father had met on church travels, stayed at the family home in segregated Springfield, Mo.

Mr. Ashcroft has been a leader out of opposing school desegregation in St. Louis and opposing African-Americans for public office. As attorney general in the 1980s he left the White House for Meese III to help persuade the Reagan Justice Department to switch sides and oppose a broad school desegregation plan in St. Louis. He eventually succeeded.

In the early stages of negotiating the voluntary city-county school desegregation plan in St. Louis, Mr. Ashcroft's office had actually taken a positive role. But Mr. Ashcroft ended up opposing the plan because the state had to pay for it and because he considered some provisions of judicial excellence. He told the U.S. Supreme Court that he had “little doubt” that “a minority” would be treated better in court than the state.

As an inexcusable act was riding his opposition to the St. Louis desegregation plan into the governor's mansion. In the absence of “McFlip” TV ad, accusing Sen. McCain of Nafta, an added insult, Mr. Ashcroft also accepted an honorary degree last year from Bob Jones University in 1999. (It's a wonder that Mr. Bush would want to remind anyone of his other disastrous trip there.)

Mr. Ashcroft's unsuccessful campaign against Mr. White is especially troubling. He opposed Mr. White for having voted as a Missouri Supreme Court judge to overturn death sentences. Judge McNary of St. Louis, in pointing out that some of his own appointees had voted to overturn as many capital sentences. Retired Missouri Supreme Court Judge Charles Blacklock, who was Mr. Ashcroft's appointee, criticized Mr. Ashcroft at the time, saying: “The senator seems to take the attitude that any deviation is suspect, liberal, activist, and I call this taunting with the judiciary because of the effect it might have in other states. Where judges, who might hope to be federal judges, feel a pressure to conform and to vote to sustain the death penalty.”

Mr. Bush said Friday that he was not worried about the White case because of Mr. Ashcroft's record of appointing African-Americans. In truth, Mr. Ashcroft had an abysmal record and never appointed a black Supreme Court judge.

Mr. Ashcroft favors the most extreme form of a position that his own administration has turned to all abortions. As state attorney general he filed an unsuccessful antitrust suit against the National Organization of Women because of its economic boycott against states that opposed the Equal Rights Amendment. More recently, he has opposed a strong federal antitrust suit against the company, criticizing Mr. Ashcroft's hard-line ideology in actions on issues like abortion and civil rights require a searching examination at his confirmation hearing. He should not be given an automatic pass. It is bound to determine whether he will be able to surmount his cramped social agenda to act as the guardian of the nation's constitutional values.

The attorney general has great discretion in deciding how much energy to devote to protecting civil rights, broadening civil liberties, combating crime, enforcing the antitrust laws and making sure that the president and his cabinet members are held to the same high standards—an area in which Mr. Ashcroft has not shone. Janet Reno, has been deficient. More than any other cabinet officer, the attorney general sets the moral tone of an administration. The position should clearly be filled with someone with a reputation for balance, fairness and independence. Mr. Ashcroft is by all accounts honest and hard-working. Yet he is also, judging by the public record, a man of cramped vision, unyielding attitudes and a cramped vision, unyielding attitudes and limited tolerance for those who disagree with him. That racial matters alone are enough to give one pause. As Missouri's attorney general, he opposed even a voluntary school desegregation plan in metropolitan St. Louis. He also conducted a mean-spirited and dishonest campaign against Ronnie White, Missouri's first black State Supreme Court justice, when Justice White was nominated for a federal judgeship. Mr. Ashcroft may well have given the edge to the man who was then picked to be the other voice on the court.

Mr. Ashcroft has been one of the Senate's most strident members when it comes to abortion. During his political career in Missouri, he sought to criminalize abortion, and he has consistently supported an extreme constitutional amendment that would ban abortion even in the case of rape or incest. Mr. Ashcroft has a poor record on church-state issues and on gay rights, and a closed mind on those matters alone are enough to give one pause. As Missouri's attorney general, he opposed even a voluntary school desegregation plan in metropolitan St. Louis. He also conducted a mean-spirited and dishonest campaign against Ronnie White, Missouri's first black State Supreme Court justice, when Justice White was nominated for a federal judgeship. Mr. Ashcroft may well have given the edge to the man who was then picked to be the other voice on the court. Mr. Whitman is a well-known advocate for the environment, and it is widely expected that she will be given a key position in the administration. It is important that the Senate consider her qualifications carefully and ensure that she is not rewarded for her past actions.

On the minus side, she slashed the budget for environmental law enforcement and opposed the Clinton administration's efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Her administration has strongly called for the development of clean energy technologies and for the protection of natural resources. She has been a vocal critic of the Bush Administration's policies on environmental issues, and she has advocated for the protection of species and ecosystems. It is important that the Senate consider her qualifications carefully and ensure that she is not rewarded for her past actions.

Whitman is also expected to be confirmed as EPA administrator. If confirmed, her only role in nearly two decades in government has been as a businesswoman and investor. She has been a vocal critic of the Bush Administration's policies on environmental issues, and she has advocated for the protection of species and ecosystems. It is important that the Senate consider her qualifications carefully and ensure that she is not rewarded for her past actions.

Whitman's nomination to lead the Environmental Protection Agency is likely to face a tough confirmation hearing. The Senate is duty-bound to determine whether she will be able to surmount her cramped social agenda to act as the guardian of the nation's constitutional values. The attorney general has great discretion in deciding how much energy to devote to protecting civil rights, broadening civil liberties, combating crime, enforcing the antitrust laws and making sure that the president and his cabinet members are held to the same high standards—an area in which Mr. Ashcroft has not shone. Janet Reno, has been deficient. More than any other cabinet officer, the attorney general sets the moral tone of an administration. The position should clearly be filled with someone with a reputation for balance, fairness and independence. Mr. Ashcroft is by all accounts honest and hard-working. Yet he is also, judging by the public record, a man of cramped vision, unyielding attitudes and limited tolerance for those who disagree with him. That racial matters alone are enough to give one pause. As Missouri's attorney general, he opposed even a voluntary school desegregation plan in metropolitan St. Louis. He also conducted a mean-spirited and dishonest campaign against Ronnie White, Missouri's first black State Supreme Court justice, when Justice White was nominated for a federal judgeship. Mr. Ashcroft may well have given the edge to the man who was then picked to be the other voice on the court.
But in St. Louis City, which has the State’s largest African American population, he and his appointed election board refused to allow volunteers to be trained to register voters.

In fact, he even went so far as Governor to veto 2 bills to use volunteer registrars in the City.

As a result there were 1,500 volunteers involved in voter registration in St. Louis County and zero in St. Louis City.

After Governor Ashcroft vetoed the two voter registration bills, the voter registration rate in St. Louis dropped by almost 20 percent.

With this record, how can anyone believe that Senator Ashcroft will be a champion of voting rights for all Americans, particularly African Americans? Senator Ashcroft testified that Roe v. Wade is the settled law of the land, and that he would not try to overturn it.

But his record of three decades of non-stop attacks on a woman’s right to choose tells a different story.

As Attorney General of Missouri, he defended a state rule that prevented poor women from obtaining abortions that were medically necessary to protect their health. He even tried to prevent Missouri nurses from providing basic family planning services.

As Governor of Missouri, he continued his intense assault on a woman’s right to choose. He made clear that his mission was to have the Supreme Court overturn Roe v. Wade.

He boasted about Missouri’s record of having more anti-choice cases in the Supreme Court than any state in the Nation.

He even proposed legislation to prohibit many common forms of contraception.

As a Senator, he has strongly supported a Constitutional Amendment to ban abortions—even in cases of rape or incest.

The power of the Attorney General is vast. The person who holds that position must have a genuine commitment to enforce the law fairly for all citizens.

But Senator Ashcroft has a deeply disturbing record on issue after issue of enormous importance to millions of Americans.

Throughout his long career, he has been a relentless opponent of many fundamental rights. He’s wrong on civil rights—wrong on a woman’s right to choose—wrong on needed steps to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and children. He’s wrong on so many other fundamental issues, and he’s the wrong choice to be Attorney General of the United States. It is wrong to send him to be the Attorney General of the United States. I intend to vote no.

I withhold the remainder of my time and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, just six weeks ago, President Bush nominated Senator John Ashcroft to serve as Attorney General of the United States.

But that’s not true. In fact, the courts specifically found that the State was responsible for the segregation.

Senator Ashcroft testified that he complied with all court orders in the desegregation case.

But that’s not true. In fact, the court ruled that he had a deliberate policy of defying the court’s authority.

Senator Ashcroft testified that he never opposed integration.

But that’s not true. In fact, he referred to the St. Louis voluntary desegregation plan as “an outrage against human decency.” And he fanned the flames of racial division by campaigning against the desegregation plan in his race for Governor in 1984.

On the issue of voter registration, Senator Ashcroft’s record as Governor is truly troubling.

In heavily white St. Louis County, he endorsed a policy of training volunteers to register voters.

He even proposed legislation to prohibit many common forms of contraception.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I spoke at length yesterday about the deep sense of pain and sadness and fear engendered by this nomination. It has never been an easy task for those who have been involved. Whatever the result today, scars remain. There are some scars, of course, on Senator Ashcroft, but he is a strong and God-fearing man and I know he will recover from those and I hope and pray that he does.

There are scars on the Senate in terms of our bipartisanship and ability to work together. Again, I think the desire for bipartisanship is strong in this body, and I don’t think those scars will be permanent. There are some scars from the initial days of the Presidency of George Bush, who had campaigned for inclusiveness, bringing people together. This nomination clearly did not do that, whatever else it has done.

Again, most of the other President’s nominees, this nomination notwithstanding, have been bipartisan nominees, and hopefully while this is clearly a setback in bringing people together in that bipartisanship, it is not going to be a problem.

I have made my views known on the floor and in committee as to why John Ashcroft does not deserve to be our Attorney General, despite his career in public service, despite his deep faith, and despite the fact that he is seen as an honorable man by most in this body.

But I hope one thing. Out of the scar tissue and the divisiveness and the argument we have had, I hope something good comes about, and that is this: I hope the President has seen the sadness and the pain and the fear engendered by this nomination. I hope when he nominates people to the U.S. Supreme Court we will not have a repeat of what has happened today. I hope he nominates somebody of intelligence and compassion and with a deep devotion to fairness. But I hope he nominates somebody who unites the American people, who brings us together, who is not identified with one extreme faction—either on the far right or the far left.

I do not expect George Bush to nominate a liberal to the Supreme Court, but I hope and pray this nomination has taught us that rather than a nominee of somebody from the Supreme Court, when it deals with the judicial issues, the legal issues that affect us, it is much better off for either a Democrat or Republican President to nominate a moderate—a thoughtful jurist but a moderate.

I think what has happened with the Ashcroft nomination in terms of divisiveness would look small compared to the divisiveness that would occur if someone of Senator Ashcroft’s beliefs were nominated to the U.S. Supreme Court.

At the end of the day we will all vote what we think is best. We will each vote our conscience. But I think every one of us can take a lesson from what has happened here in the last few weeks. That lesson is a simple one. When it comes to enforcing the law, as the Attorney General does, when it comes to sitting on the highest court of this land, moderation is, indeed, a virtue.

I hope and pray all of us, including our President, will take from this battle the view that his nominations for the Supreme Court will better serve the Nation if they come from the middle, from the broad moderate section of our political spectrum.

Mr. President, I will vote against Senator Ashcroft. I do that with the conviction that it is the right thing to do in terms of my beliefs, in terms of what is good for the people of New York, in terms of what is good for the people of America. I hope we will not have to go through a similar battle when Supreme Court nominees come before the Senate.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York for his words. Could the Chair please advise the Senator from Vermont what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time that was allocated to the Senator from Vermont was reallocated, by unanimous consent, to Senators Kennedy, Bayh, and Schumer.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair. My understanding is the distinguished Senator from Indiana, Mr. Bayh, will be here presently. To use his time, I will continue under the time reserved to this side. I would like to commend a number of Senators for their contributions to this matter during the day and a half we have been debating it. I believe Senator Kennedy—we just heard him—made extraordinarily persuasive, fact-based presentations on some troubling aspects of the nominee's background. I hope all Senators listened to the remarks of Senator Mikulski, who spoke to the heart of the question and put to rest the false charge the Democrats are applying a narrow ideological litmus test. I appreciate the eloquent words of her colleague from Maryland, Senator Sarbanes, this morning. In the fashion to which we have become accustomed from Senator Sarbanes, he discussed the history of the nomination, including the hearing. I continue to marvel at the expertise of the senior Senator from Illinois, Mr. Durbin, for his comprehensive remarks distilled so wisely and lucidly from the hearing record. Senator Durbin spent an extraordinary amount of time on this during the hearings. I think the whole Senate benefitted from the knowledge he gained from those hearings. Senator Levin presented his characteristically thoughtful remarks and careful reasoning. I thank him for that.

As I said, we heard just now from the senior Senator from New York, Mr. Schumer. Not only did he speak so well on the floor, but all the Senate was helped by his thorough work during the hearings and with the kind of committee service that distinguished him on the Judiciary Committee both here and in the kind of service he had in the other body before.

We heard the fine remarks of my friend from New Mexico, Senator Bingaman; the distinguished Senator from Florida, Mr. Graham, who brought to the Senate the important circumstances of his State and his concerns—unique among all of us here.

Of course, my friend, the assistant attorney general, Senator Reid of Nevada, has given the kind of help he always does in debates. It is something the public does not see, but he is the glue that holds everything together. Then, added to that was his own strong statement on the floor.

I think of Senator Byrd, almost my seatmate in the Senate, with whom I served for over a quarter of a century and thank him for sharing his views.

I thank my Republican colleagues for their views, those Senators who supported this nomination, as Senator Byrd did.

I think about what Senator Harkin said when he spoke again eloquently today, Senator Gramm, and spoke not only about his relationship with Senator Ashcroft but of his own concerns about the issues of morality and of one’s upbringing, and Senator Edwards, a person who went from the humblest beginnings to the Senate and represents the best of both places.

I also commend Senator Hatch, of course, for his management of the debate.

I yield to the senior Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank our leader on this issue on this side of the aisle, the senior Senator from Vermont, for the fine, outstanding job of leadership and fairness that he has shown throughout these hearings. Every witness who was called on to testify. We had plenty of time to question. All the questions were asked, even though carefully and thoughtfully. But not in any kind of mean-spirited way. When things began to drift a little bit out of hand, the Senator would wield his big gavel that he had at the beginning of the hearing and his own personal gavel that he wielded throughout. He did a wonderful job. And of course his speeches on the floor and in committee have been among the most thoughtful, erudite, and well researched of all of them. I think I speak for all of us on the Judiciary Committee as a whole.

We really thank the senior Senator for his great job he has done during these trying weeks.

I yield to the senior Senator from New York.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Senator from New York. I have often said how much I enjoyed being on the Senate Judiciary Committee. One of the reasons is that the Senator from New York serves there.

It is a committee where we often have spirited debates. We usually debate the most interesting issues before the Senate, but I rely more and more on the Senator from New York to boil down the essence of the arguments and to lead that debate.

I am sorry the Senator from Utah is not on the floor at the moment, but the Senator from Utah, Mr. Hatch, and I worked very hard to put together a hearing where both sides could be heard. I believe we did that. In fact, unlike the usual practice here, both sides had the same number of witnesses. If I recall, in this case, the minority side, the Republican side, actually had one more witness. But we tried to make sure that anybody who could add anything to the debate and should be heard was heard.

Even during the hearings, we actually had people who were added at the last minute at the request of Senator Hatch. He showed unfailing courtesy throughout all that, and I thank him for that.

I see the Senator from Indiana in the Chamber. I ask unanimous consent that the following editorials and materials with regard to the Ashcroft nomination be printed in the Record:

A column by Steve Neal from the Chicago Sun-Times of January 31, 2001;

An editorial from the Christian Science Monitor of today, February 1, 2001;

An editorial from the Rutland Daily Herald of January 24, 2001;

A column by Stuart Taylor from National Journal of January 13, 2001;

An editorial by Stuart Taylor from National Journal of October 10, 1999; and

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Ashcroft’s Tough Tasks

President Bush asked the Senate to look into the hearts of each of his cabinet nominees through careful and compassionate hearings for his nominee for attorney general, John Ashcroft, the Senate tried to do just that.

In those hearings, Americans got a first, strong taste of the rancor that can occur when the Senate, and the country, is split right down the middle on social issues. The controversy over Mr. Ashcroft’s nomination broke along clearly partisan lines.

Ashcroft may now be confirmed by the Senate, but the Democrats have fired a broad shot over the Bush ship of state. Their message: Expect more battles over conservative legal appointments—to the Supreme Court or elsewhere.

Ashcroft’s deeply conservative views on abortion, civil rights, and guns were subjected to extraordinarily close scrutiny by Democrats and liberal groups. Still, his critics were left unsatisfied.

Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the Judiciary Committee’s ranking Democrat, summarized the concern over Ashcroft’s candor when he spoke on the Senate floor this week: “Most of us in this body have known the old John Ashcroft. During the hearings, we met a new John Ashcroft. Were the demurrals of his testimony real, or were they delicate bubbles that could burst and evaporate a year or a month or a day from now under the reassertion of his long-held beliefs?”

The core issue is whether, as attorney general, Ashcroft will put his own ideology above the law. Senate Judiciary Committee ranking Democrat, Sen. Patrick Leahy, vowed not to re-fight these issues. He will help shape policy on juvenile delinquency, and Vermonters will be watching.

That’s because Senate Republicans are lined up unanimously on the side of their party and their president. That includes Sen. James Jeffords, who is a member of a vocal coalition of moderate Republicans who oppose Ashcroft, and who plans to endorse his appointment.

This is not one of those moments when the Senate will moderate Republicans inclined to stray from the party line. On other issues—campaign finance, tax cuts, missile defense—the Republican leadership will not be able to rely so surely on unanimity within the party.

Ashcroft’s nomination has also won the support of a few Democrats, which assures him of victory in the Senate. For most Democrats, a no vote on the Ashcroft nomination sends an important signal: that bipartisan progress is not achieved by pushing the most extreme brand of Republican ideology.

Under questioning by the Senate Judiciary Committee, Ashcroft felt compelled to repudiate an ideology opposed to civil and women’s rights. One wonders why Bush appointed him if he meant he would have to shed the views that have shaped his career. The likely reason is that Bush wanted to appease the religious right.

Everyone was quick to praise Ashcroft’s integrity. Even if Ashcroft will work especially hard to surmount both his critics and some elements of his own record, and to prove to the country that he will be, as Senator Leahy put it, a man is unfit to be the people’s attorney general will involve far more than the high-profile issues on which the interest groups always focus.

He will help shape anti-trust policy and the government’s position in the Alcoa-Ashcroft case. He will help shape policy on juvenile justice, which has been slipping back toward the dark ages, and on sentencing policy, which has become more absurd because of mandatory sentences. He will apportion resources within the Department of Justice, deciding how much emphasis to put on civil rights enforcement.

It is hard to imagine Ashcroft opposing a Democratic president. If voting no on Ashcroft, he will be affirming the values of the people he represents, and may even be leading the party line for the sake of campaign finance reform, health care, and other initiatives that the Republican leadership has long opposed.

The Senate Judiciary Committee was able to win concessions from Ashcroft on civil rights and women’s rights, but his work as attorney general will involve far more than the high-profile issues on which the interest groups always focus.

The debate was over President Clinton’s nomination of Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White to become a federal district judge. Although too liberal to be picked by a President who believes in self-restraint, Judge White presented himself to be an honest, skilled, and sometimes eloquent jurist, well within the moderate mainstream. But Ashcroft, leaning hard on constituents (and himself to confirm, engineered a 54–45 party-line vote on Oct. 5, 1999, to reject White’s nomination. Worse, Ashcroft claimed on the Senate floor that Judge White had “a serious bias against . . . the death penalty”; that he was “pro-criminal and as push law to a pro-criminal direction”; and that he had “a tremendous bent toward criminal activity.” The first statement was a wild exaggeration. The second was a malicious smear.

Ashcroft is not the man to head the Justice Department. The job is vested with such vast authority over the lives of people great and small, and such symbolic importance, that the minimum qualifications should include honesty, fair-mindedness, and judicial competence in exercising it. Every new President is entitled to Senate deference in choosing his Cabinet, even when the nominee’s policy views draw bitter liberal or conservative opposition. (Dole and Jevetz might have become a distinguished Labor Secretary but for her sad mistake of falling to tell Bush vetters up front what they feared about her illegal immigrant issue.) But no President is entitled to put a character assassin in charge of law enforcement.

All this would be true even if Judge White were white, if Ashcroft had not expressed such fondness for the Confederacy, if race were not a factor in the nomination. Uncle Sam now in tune with the Bush pledge to be a uniter, not a divider. But White is black. The racial context makes Ashcroft’s orchestration of a floor vote against a judicial nominee, the first since 1987 (when Robert H. Bork’s Supreme Court nomination went down), all the more deplorable. And Ashcroft’s confrontational advocacy of absolutist views makes him a divider, not a uniter.

This is not to endorse the unfounded and tiresomely irresponsible suggestions by some liberal critics that Ashcroft serves the death sentence he was given. But the jury’s consideration of the insanity defense had been skewed by an egregious blunder. Johnson’s court-appointed attorney had begun his straddling-elephant-in-a-pin-cushion “perimeter” around Johnson’s garage was evidence that he had been under a delusion that he was back in Vietnam, at war. This was a gift to the prosecution, which blew the back-in-Vietnam strategy to bits by showing that the police had set up the perimeter.

If Johnson “was in control of his faculties when he went on this murderous rampage,” Judge White wrote, “then he assuredly deserves the death sentence.” But the jury’s consideration of the insanity defense had been skewed by an egregious blunder. Johnson’s court-appointed attorney had begun his straddling-elephant-in-a-pin-cushion “perimeter” around Johnson’s garage was evidence that he had been under a delusion that he was back in Vietnam, at war. This was a gift to the prosecution, which blew the back-in-Vietnam strategy to bits by showing that the police had set up the perimeter.

In the second case, one Brian Kinder was sentenced to die for a heinous rape-murder. Judge White’s “only basis” for voting to give Kinder a new trial, Ashcroft claimed, was that the trial judge had said he was “opposed to affirmative action.” False. In fact, Judge White endorsed affirmative action only on whether there was a “reasonable probability” that the jury might otherwise have found Johnson insane. The majority said no. Judge White’s explanation was plausible, debatable, highly unpopular (especially among police), and (for that reason) courageous. For Ashcroft to call it “pro-criminal” was obscene.

The Democratic spin is that the Republican Senate’s Oct. 5 party-line vote, 54–45, to reject Ronnie L. White’s nomination for a U.S. District Court seat in Missouri was tinged with racism. At the very least, as President Clinton put it, the vote adds “credence to the perceptions that they treat minority and women judicial nominees unfairly and unequally.”

The Republican spin is, not surprisingly, quite different. In the words of White’s main Republican Senate sponsors, “the votes are a gift to the prosecution, which blew the back-in-Vietnam strategy to bits by showing that the police had set up the perimeter.”

In the second case, one Brian Kinder was sentenced to die for a heinous rape-murder. Judge White’s “only basis” for voting to give Kinder a new trial, Ashcroft claimed, was that the trial judge had said he was “opposed to affirmative action.” False. The smearing of Judge White makes the many testimonials to Ashcroft’s integrity ring a bit hollow. But quite apart from that episode, it was most untrue for President Clinton’s Justice Department to have appointed White as Missouri’s Attorney General. The reason is that Ashcroft is an uncompromising absolutist with a bellicose approach to issues ranging from gay rights to abortion. The Justice Department should be a place where a lawyer who thought it was a crime, if Ashcroft had his way, even in cases of rape and incest. He is also dead wrong (in my view) on major issues, includi
Brian Kinder was sentenced to die. Judge White’s “only basis” for voting to give Kinder a new trial, Ashcroft told his colleagues, was that Earl R. Blackwell, the trial judge in the case, had been “opposed to affirmative action.”

This was a cynical distortion. In fact, White’s dissent stated that Judge Blackwell’s “affirmative action” opinion in the case had come in a campaign press release explaining his decision to leave the Democratic Party—was “irrelevant to the issue of bias.” What was “irrelevant to bias,” he continued, was the following assertion in Blackwell’s press release:

“[W]hite minorities need to be represented or [sic] course. I believe the time has come for us to place much more emphasis and concern on the hard-working taxpayers in this country.”

As White wrote, this “pernicious racial stereotype is not ambiguous or complex (nor, unfortunately, original).” It means “that minorities are not hard-working taxpayers.”

And for Judge Blackwell to issue such a statement—six days before he was to begin the trial that a black man facing the death penalty—created a reasonable suspicion that he could not preside over the case impartially.

Judge White was right. And his eloquent dissent was both more candid and more consistent with his court’s own precedents than was the majority opinion.

Ashcroft also assailed White’s dissent from a 1998 decision upholding the murder convictions and death sentence of one James Johnson. In an appalling succession of shootings growing out of a domestic dispute at Johnson’s home, the previously law-abiding Vietnam veteran had stalked and killed a sheriff, two deputies, and the wife of another sheriff. His own debris was a horrific carnage.

“If Mr. Johnson was in control of his faculties when he went on this murderous rampage, then he assuredly deserves the death sentence he was given,” Judge White wrote. But a blunder by Johnson’s defense lawyer, White added, had so “utterly destroyed the credibility” of his insanity defense as to deny him a fair trial.

In his opening statement, the defense lawyer had focused on a story that Johnson—who could not make his own decisions—must have had done—had strung a “perimeter” of rope and cans around his garage under the delusion that he was “back in Vietnam,” in combat. The same conclusion is reached at all later points in the prosecution’s case. The prosecution revealed with a flourish that the “perimeter” had been the work of police staking out Johnson’s home after the killings.

The majority and Judge White alike faulted both the defense lawyer (for inadequate investigation) and the state (for leaving him “in the lurch.” Yet a series of domestic disputes at Johnson’s house, in a neighborhood where much of the crime has occurred, definitely increased the likelihood that the perimeter was a reasonable violation of his privacy. And that permissibly would have put the jurors on notice that his right to privacy had been invaded.

The majority and Judge White alike failed to give Johnson the “credibility” of his insanity defense. It is not as if he were the defendant in a trial of a state pol, or a police chief, or a sheriff. It could be a trial of a man who killed his family and his neighbors.

But a blunder by Johnson’s defense lawyer had focused on a story that Johnson—those are his own words—made of his insanity defense as to deny him a fair trial. Indeed, it would be fiscally irresponsible to have a tax dollars employed black man—asked Blackwell to recuse himself. The judge refused, saying he did not discriminate whether individuals “are yellow, white, black or purple.”

Ronnie White was affirmatively opposed to trashing a nominee—non-Racism, non-ideology, was what President Clinton had said in a letter to the Missouri Police Chiefs Association, telling the majority that he could not preside over the case impartially.

A golden opportunity for President Clinton to complain of the politics of the White nomination was missed.“It means that he’s getting off free and clear,” Judge White wrote. “It means that he could not preside over the case impartially.”

And in another such case, in 1996, it was Judge White who wrote the court’s decision upholding a brutal killer’s death sentence—and it was an Ashcroft appointee, then Chief Judge John C. Holstein, who dissented. The cornerstone of any civilized system of justice.” Holstein wrote then, “is that the rules are applied evenly to everyone, no matter how despicable the crime.”

That does not seem to be the view of many Senate Republicans now. Their treatment of Ronnie White suggests that they prefer judges to rubber-stamp the decisions of trial judges, prosecutors, and police.

Sen. Ashcroft also stressed criticism of White’s record, noting that Ronnie White was a judge whose impartiality is beyond reasonable doubt. And after White was confirmed by the Senate, Ashcroft issued a press release saying that he was opposed to affirmative action.

"The politics of the statement were not the problem. The problem was its all-but-overt racism: ‘The truth is that I have noticed in recent years that the places that I really have a hard time seeing that [White’s] against law enforcement, I’ve always known him to be unimpeachable’"

In short, the record shows that Judge White takes seriously his duty both to enforce the death penalty and to ensure that defendants get fair trials. It suggests neither that he has a pernicious racial interest in trashing a nominee—nor that he is a liberal activist. What it does suggest is courage.

And while White may be more sensitive to civil liberties than his Ashcroft appointed colleagues are, his opinions also exude a spirit of moderation, care, and candor. Ronnie White was affirmed against Ronnie White—most of them in deference to Ashcroft and Bond—have treated an otherwise identical candidate better."

"I doubt it. But by giving such transparently bogus reasons for trashing a nominee who happens to be black—at a time when statistics have already raised troubling questions about the Senate’s handling of minority nominees—Republican leaders have added a second characteristic that he’s ‘procriminal’ or that he’s a liberal activist. What it does suggest is courage."

In an era of politicalized law, as I wrote recently, the best antidote for partisan gridlock over judicial nominees is for Presidents to shun ideological crusaders and choose moderate centrist. That’s what President Clinton did here. And that’s why—race aside—the Senate’s vote and the smearing of Judge White were shameful acts of partisanship and partisanship.

JUDGE WHITE’S JUDGES

(By Benjamin Wittes)

Anyone who believes that race played no role in the selection of Judges White’s judges has not been paying attention. No honest reading of [White’s statement] can show that it says anything other than what it says: that minorities are not hard-working taxpayers, that any reasonable person would think that a judge who makes provocative comments in a campaign press release . . . would cause a reasonable person to question the impartiality of the court.

White, in an opinion characterized by admirable restraint, stated: “No honest reading of [White’s statement] can show that it says anything other than what it says: that minorities are not hard-working taxpayers, that any reasonable person would think that a judge who makes provocative comments in a campaign press release . . . would cause a reasonable person to question the impartiality of the court.”

White’s nomination was confirmed by the Senate. Kinder—an unemployed black man—asked Blackwell to recuse himself. The judge refused, saying he didn’t discriminate whether individuals “are yellow, white, black or purple.”

Ronnie White was affirmatively opposed to trashing a nominee—non-Racism, non-ideology, was what President Clinton had said in a letter to the Missouri Police Chiefs Association, telling the majority that he could not preside over the case impartially.

A golden opportunity for President Clinton to complain of the politics of the White nomination was missed. "It means that he’s getting off free and clear," Judge White wrote. "It means that he could not preside over the case impartially."
nominees who get bogged down in the Senate would also have problems. And race, to be sure, was not the predominant factor in White’s rejection, either. The politics of the death penalty and the 2000 Missouri Senate race have that dishonor.

But if White was not rejected because he’s black, it is also impossible to read racial politics into his rejection. His statements would have happened had White and Kinder both been Jewish and had Kinder been tried before a judge who had issued a press release denouncing the political parties’ support for Israel that included analogous language: “While Jews need to be represented, of course, I believe the time has come for us to place the consideration of moral people who are not obsessed with money.”

No senator would dare argue that an appeals court judge who insisted that such overt hostility to Jews compelled a new trial—even for a guilty defendant—should be kept off the federal bench for having done so. To argue that the Kinder case is reason to keep Ronnie White off the bench is no less outrageous—just a little more socially acceptable.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYH. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I convey my thanks and gratitude to my colleagues from Vermont for his extraordinary leadership on this matter of utmost public importance. He has written another honorable chapter in the history of this body, and I am privileged to serve with him, as I know my father privileged to serve before me.

I rise today as someone who was invited to Austin, TX, several weeks before the new year to discuss with our new President the cause of bipartisanship—his case, I believe, for improving the quality of our public schools.

I rise as someone who was in the White House several nights ago to discuss with the President bipartisanship when it comes to improving the quality of health care.

I rise as someone who wants to work with this President to enact a fiscally responsible tax cut.

I rise as someone who shares his conviction that faith-based organizations have much to contribute to the welfare and well-being of our country.

I rise as someone who deplores the gridlock in recent years and politics of personal destruction and years in return to bipartisanship and principled compromise for the sake of the United States of America.

Because of all these things and all we can accomplish together, I also rise to express my opposition to the President’s nomination of John Ashcroft to be the next Attorney General of the United States of America.

Let me say at the beginning I do not believe in pointing fingers or calling names. Some of the things that have been said about Mr. Ashcroft, such as he is a racist, are, frankly, not true, and worse, his colleagues have grave concerns about how he conducts himself in the very important position of Attorney General of the United States of America.

Some of the things that have been said about Mr. Ashcroft, such as he is a racist, are, frankly, not true, and worse, his colleagues have grave concerns about how he conducts himself in the very important position of Attorney General of the United States of America.

I have been troubled by some of his more strident views to bear on that office in ways that will cause great conflict and controversy for this President and the people of our country.

I think that what troubles me. It has nothing to do with his religious views, just as those of John Kennedy, Joe LIEBERMAN, and others had absolutely nothing to do with their fitness for public service.

I have no doubt whatsoever that he will bring some of his more strident views to bear on that office in ways that will cause great conflict and controversy for this President and the people of our country.

I have been troubled by some of his behavior, and it has been outlined in the hearings Senator LEAHY and my colleague, CHUCK SCHUMER, who just left, so ably outlined in the Judiciary Committee. He can delve into that if he wants to, but I want to particularly mention the issue of Ronnie White.

I disagree with those who say Mr. Ashcroft’s opposition to Judge White was racially based. I do not believe that to be true. I believe it was based upon prior political disagreements when Judge White served in the State legislature—but, frankly, when it comes to the Attorney General of the United States engaging in political payback, it is very troubling—and it was based also upon Mr. Ashcroft’s desire to stay in the Senate, and the fact that he was willing to misinterpret the record of Judge White for his own political personal gain should concern us all. Not that political payback by no means interpreting or misinterpreting one’s record is unique even to this Chamber and other political candidates across the country—it happens all the time—but it should not happen in the Justice Department of the United States of America.

I was watching these proceedings last evening, and I will not name names, but I heard a speech of one of our colleagues who expressed his belief that behind opposition to Mr. Ashcroft was, in fact, an opposition to those who are devoutly Christian in their beliefs serving in positions of high public office. I say as one Senator, nothing could be further from the truth. On the contrary, I have a deep respect for Mr. Ashcroft’s religious convictions. I think he should wear them as a badge of honor. His devout faith is something that we can all look to as a source of pride on his part.

It is his secular views and what implementation of those views would mean for the American people with more polarization, more divisiveness, more payback, more political payback, more divisiveness, more divisiveness, more payback, it is very troubling. It has nothing to do with his religious views, just as those of John Kennedy, Joe LIEBERMAN, and others had absolutely nothing to do with their fitness for public service.

creed: Liberty and justice for all Americans—all, regardless of ideology, race, creed, or orientation.

I hope it is that America to which Mr. Ashcroft will dedicate himself as the next Attorney General of the United States. America and prove that the concern that has been expressed on the floor of this body were, in fact, misplaced.

Mr. President, I appreciate the honor of addressing my colleagues once again. I yield the floor to my colleague from Vermont.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is somebody controlling time on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am going to vote for John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States. Let me first say, if you read what he has done in his life, he is eminently qualified. For those who are wondering whether the President of the United States has picked a person who can, in fact, be a real Attorney General for the United States, there can be no doubt about it. He graduated from the University of Chicago Law School, which is a very reputable university. In fact, it is one you do not get into unless you already know you are very bright. That means, if you look at that, he was trained to be a good lawyer.

Frankly, we have had a lot of Attorneys General of the United States who were not good lawyers. There is no question he is trained and has proven that he is not simply good but very good at matters that pertain to law.

Secondly, as a Senator from one of the sovereign States, I feel very concerned about the way this man is being treated and why the votes are being garnered against him because if I were from the State of Missouri instead of the State of New Mexico—and maybe I will transplant myself there just for the next 3 or 4 minutes—I would ask, what kind of people live in Missouri? I think I would conclude that, as you look across America, they are very good people, very diverse. They earn a living in very different ways, from agriculture to manufacturing. And guess what. They elected this man who has been under fire day after day, they elected him to be attorney general of their State two times. They elected him to be Governor twice. Then they elected him to be a Senator.

Frankly, does anybody really believe Mr. Ashcroft would elect a person who would discriminate against people in the State of the population that has been discussed here? Do they think the citizens of the State of Missouri would elect more than once a man to be attorney general of their entire State, for all of their people, and that they have all been beguiled and fooled because he really was not a good attorney general; that he was prejudiced; that he was discriminatory against minorities? Did he not follow the law? That is pure bunk because he followed the law; he enforced the law. They elected him Governor twice.

For this Senate to spend this much time trying to find little things about this man who is almost the kind of things you would not even ask anybody about—I looked at some of the questions Senators asked this man, and they are not only petty in some respects, but they deserve an answer, a simple answer: I don’t remember. I can’t understand. It’s too long ago.

They asked him questions about conversations 15 years ago with reference to one of the subject matters: Did you talk to so-and-so? Well, I do not remember.

I am a reasonably good Senator, and I can tell you right now, I really remember things when I was 9, and 10, and 12, but I don’t remember too many things that happened 2 years ago. And I bet you that 5 of Senators like that. I will bet you there are a lot of great attorneys general in the United States like that.

In fact, John Ashcroft enforced laws in this State as attorney general that were inconsistent with his beliefs. And you know what. Attorneys general across America are doing that all the time. They are elected by the people. The people know they differ in many respects. They go in, and what do they do? They follow the law. He is going to follow the law.

The one difference versus many other Attorneys General, is that he is a real lawyer. He will be a real Attorney General. He will run that place because he has the intellectual capacity, the organizational ability, and the desire to be a great Attorney General.

My friend and former colleague, Senator John Ashcroft, is fully qualified to serve as the next Attorney General of the United States, and I will vote to confirm his nomination.

I served in this body with Senator Ashcroft for 6 years, and I know him as a man of great honesty and integrity. Unfortunately, honesty and integrity are not always worthy of only secondary praise in today’s society. Nevertheless, it is vitally important that the public has confidence that our Attorney General, who enforces our laws, is possessed of these traits.

Of honesty, George Washington once remarked, “I hope I shall always possess firmness of virtue enough to maintain what I consider the most enviable of all titles, the character of an Honest Man.” It is my belief that Senator Ashcroft possesses such character and is worthy of the title.

Senator Ashcroft graduated from Yale University and the University of Chicago Law School. He practiced law in his State of Missouri, and then served as Missouri’s attorney general from 1976–1985. He was twice Missouri’s Governor. He was later elected to the U.S. Senate, where he served with distinction on the Judiciary Committee.

Throughout his career, he has had an impressive record on crime. During his tenure as Governor, he increased funding for local law enforcement, which resulted in a significant increase in full-time law enforcement, which led to the fight against illegal drugs. He helped enact tougher standards and sentencing for gun crimes, and led the fight against illegal drugs. His tough stance on drugs is important to me because we are seeking to eradicate a growing heroin problem in northern New Mexico.

While Governor, total State and Federal spending for antidrug efforts in Missouri increased nearly 400 percent. If Mr. Ashcroft is pro-life, he is committed to the Comprehensive Methamphetamine Control Act of 1996.

Despite his impressive credentials and proven record, Senator Ashcroft’s opponents suggest that his religious and ideological beliefs will prevent him from enforcing our Nation’s laws. It is true that he is a religious man with strong convictions. It is untrue that this will prevent him from carrying out his duties.

Time and time again throughout his distinguished career, this nominee has enforced laws that run counter to his personal views. While serving as Missouri’s attorney general, a Christian group that Senator Ashcroft favored was distributing Bibles on school grounds. After careful review, he issued an opinion stating that such activity violated the State constitution.

On another matter, even though Senator Ashcroft is pro-life, he has unequivocally stated that he will investigate and prosecute any conduct by pro-life supporters at abortion clinics that violates the law. His prior actions support this assertion.

He once asked pro-life marchers to sign a nonviolence pledge and to observe ordinary rules of courtesy with both “friend and foe.” It was concern about potential violence at clinics that led to his vote for Senator SCHUMER’s amendment to the bankruptcy bill that made debts incurred as a result of abortion clinic violence non-dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Critics contend that this nominee is insensitive to minorities. His record on the whole indicates otherwise.

This is a charge I take very seriously because my State of New Mexico has a large population of Native Americans and Hispanics. I am deeply concerned about the interests of these and other minority groups throughout the nation, and I have always worked to ensure that minority rights are protected. In fact, I have supported affirmation action programs at every federal agency. I will hold this nominee’s feet to the fire on minority issues.
As Governor, Senator Ashcroft enacted Missouri’s first hate crimes bill. He was also one of the nation’s first governors to sign into law the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday. In addition, he appointed numerous African Americans to high state positions, including the first African American ever selected associate circuit judge in St. Louis County.

After this appointment, the Mound City Bar Association of St. Louis—one of the oldest African-American Bar Associations in the United States—said of then-Governor Ashcroft:

Your appointment of attorney Hemphill demonstrated your sensitivity, not only to professional qualifications, but also to the genuine need to have a bench that is as diverse as the population it serves. The appointment you have just made and your track record of appointing women and minorities are certainly positive indicators of your progressive sense of fairness and equity. We commend you.

This is not the description of a man who is insensitive to the needs of minorities.

Senator Ashcroft’s concern for minorities did not stop when he came to the U.S. Senate. As a matter of fact, while in the United States Senate, he and Senator FENNO urged the Senate hearing on racial profiling, a practice Senator Ashcroft described as unconstitutional. He testified during his recent confirmation hearings that if confirmed he would make the elimination of racial profiling a priority.

Senator Ashcroft supported 26 of 27 African-American judges who were nominated to the federal judiciary. However, he did not support Missouri Supreme Court Judge Ronnie White. Nor did a majority of the U.S. Senate, 77 Missouri sheriffs, the National Sheriffs’ Association, and other law enforcement groups. Senator Ashcroft’s opposition to Judge White was based on a review of Judge White’s dissenting and minority opinions.

In my view, a person with honesty and integrity who has a strong law enforcement record and a demonstrated willingness to follow the law regardless of personal beliefs is exactly the type of individual that should lead the Justice Department. That’s the Senator Ashcroft I know, and he will serve with distinction as Attorney General. He has my full support. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I am very pleased, and I congratulate the leadership here on our side and on their side for finally deciding we would vote today, not too long from now. I am hoping John Ashcroft will be confirmed. I do not know what this magical number of whether the Democrats can get 40 or 41 is all about, but I surely would not like to be a Senator on the other side who is told: We need your vote so we can get 41 votes against this man. What does that mean? Is that some reason to vote yes for a candidate? Two things. I were on that side and somebody told me: We only have 39 against him; we need you to make 40, and then told somebody else 41, I would say: Don’t you think I ought to decide whether I want to vote for him? What does this 49, 40, or 41 mean? I don’t understand it, except some think it means that is strength.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am finished. I will yield the floor.

It is strength, meaning you can defeat this man. If Senator President Bush sends up to be a Supreme Court judge. What is that about? Nobody knows who he is going send, what his philosophy is going to be. Pure speculation. Pure speculation. And they are asking Senators to vote so they can have that kind of message to those who are worried about candidates who are conservative like this man? I don’t really think it matters too much if it is 39, 38, 40, or 41; he is going to be Attorney General.

I tell you, I really predict he will be a good one, a very good one.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I realize we are on the time of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. If I might take 30 seconds to respond to what my friend from New Mexico said.

Mr. HATCH. Of course.

Mr. LEAHY. One, I commend both sides for the way they have managed this. But I tell my friend from New Mexico, this Senator has not asked, urged, or cajoled any Senator to vote one way or the other. I have not lobbied one single Senator in this body or told them how I expect them to vote.

The only time I have heard—I tell the Senator from New Mexico, if I could have his attention—

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure.

Mr. LEAHY. The only time I have heard numbers expressed was from the Republican leadership, when they stated before the hearings began—from 1 minute of hearings was held—that all 50 Republican Senators were expected to vote 'no.'

As we pored the nomination papers arrived Monday, we heard numbers expressed was from the Republican leadership, when they stated before the hearings began—from 1 minute of hearings was held—that all 50 Republican Senators were expected to vote ‘no.’

Mr. LEAHY. That is not the case. The Republicans are a very different group of people. But I do have to say, and I do appreciate him saying that to some of the arguments that have been made have been pretty bad. They have distorted his record. Mischaracterizations have been throughout this matter. It has been really hard for me to sit here and listen to all the arguments that have been made.

Article VI of our Constitution, while requiring that Officers of the government swear to support the Constitution, assures us that “no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.” I fear that with regard to the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General of the United States, we are coming very close to violating the spirit, if not the letter of that assurance.

In response to a question I posed to Senator Ashcroft about the wide disparity of treatment accorded him as a person of faith around and after his confirmation hearings, Senator LIEBERMAN said when he was running for Vice-President, and whether anything in his religious beliefs would interfere with his ability to apply the law as critics charged, Senator Ashcroft said:

In examining my understanding and my commitment and my faith heritage, I’ve had to say that my faith heritage compels me to enforce the law and abide by the law rather than to violate the law. I believe some of the arguments that have been made have been pretty bad. They have distorted his record. Mischaracterizations have been throughout this matter. It has been really hard for me to sit here and listen to all the arguments that have been made.

It has been really hard for me to sit here and listen to all the arguments that have been made.

If anyone is looking for reassurances about whether Senator Ashcroft will enforce the law as written, I do not think anyone would have to look further than this brief paragraph Senator Ashcroft’s critics and supporters uniformly agree that Senator Ashcroft is a man who takes his faith seriously. And if he says his faith compels him to abide by the law rather than violate it, I think his promise carries some weight. As he said in his opening statement, he takes his oath of office seriously, it being an oath taken enlisting the help and witness of God in so doing.

Nevertheless, he has been attacked as a dangerous zealot by many of his opponents, who suggest that his faith will require him to violate the law, or as a liar who cannot be trusted when he says he will uphold the law, even when he disagrees with it, as he has in similar circumstances in the past. His critics cannot have it both ways. They seek to impose either a caricature of strong faith—a faith defined by them—followed with zealous determination in violation of law, or of one who flouts his faith convictions by lying about his motives to get candidates to abandon the accorpower-grabs or the distinction between being an advocate for change in the law and being an impartial magistrate applying the law. This is not surprising, given the proclivity of many of his critics for a largely lawless, results-oriented, political approach to law, whether at the Justice Department, in the Courts, or elsewhere.

I think the corrosive attacks on a qualified nominee because of his religious beliefs not only weakens our constitutional government, but also undermines the ability of citizens in our democracy to engage in a meaningful dialogue with each other. Such attacks are made on the ground that a man’s faithful conviction will prevent him from discharging the duties of his office, whose segments of our democracy are disenfranchised, and the American heritage of religious tolerance is betrayed.

Strangely, though many have commented on these issues, some claim the inability to see any such religious attack on Senator Ashcroft and the large number of Americans who believe much of what he does. Following my question to Senator Ashcroft, Senator Leahy, the ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, engaged in the following exchange with Senator Ashcroft:

Mr. Leahy: I just would not want to leave one of the questions from my friend from Utah and the people here and just, sort of, make it very clear. Have you heard any senator, Republican or Democrat, suggest that there should be a religious test? Because this man has roots in the European Enlightenment’s conviction that Christianity was a kind of residual entity that would soon be made obsolete by the progress of science and democracy. The U.S. was founded at a time when the Enlightenment was beginning to win American converts. Thomas Jefferson expressed the Enlightenment commitment in a letter when, in a letter to his nephew, Peter Carr (Aug. 10, 1878), he encouraged him to read the Bible. If such reading, Jefferson wrote to Carr, “ends in a belief that there is no God, you will find incitements to virtue in the comfort and pleasantness you feel in its exercise, and the love of others which it will procure you. To continue to believe there is a God, a consciousness that you are acting under his eye, and that he approves you, will be a vast additional incitement.”

From this point of view, religion is judged by its pragmatic usefulness—its power to inspire public virtue. Whether God exists, whether faith can be felt to be personally true, does not matter. The problem with Mr. Ashcroft, in the eyes of those who have been influenced more by the Enlightenment than by Christianity, is that he cannot demonstrate to himself and, in a moral sense, to the republic, that is, he takes religion too seriously for a modern man. He does not treat it as either a ulterior motive or a political affair. Of course, if Mr. Ashcroft’s political convictions on, say, abortion were the same as those now fault him, his critics would applaud his belief as an incitement to virtue. But he holds views contrary to their own. How to explain his unwillingness to join their moral majority? Disparage his religion or religion as something outside of the mainstream that belongs to a darker, or less “enlightened,” age.

And the best way to do this is to suggest, implausibly, that Mr. Ashcroft is blinded by his faith, that it is so illiberal that it renders him unable to honor his obligations as a public official, to revere the Constitution, to obey the law. But the question is not whether he is good or bad, but whether the law allows him to enforce the law as written for all Americans, regardless of race, color or creed. Hardly striking an orthodox conservative pose, Mr. Ashcroft spoke of his commitment to a color-blind society, but rather to diversity and integration. He elaborated on his record of supporting minority appointments and nominees throughout his career, and he spoke of his opposition to racial profiling. On the incendiary issue of abortion, Mr. Ashcroft declared that, consistent with previous Republican attorneys general, he believed Roe vs. Wade to have been wrongly decided, but affirmed his unwavering acceptance of the landmark cases upholding abortion rights.

So what’s the liberals’ problem? Does anyone still take seriously the charges of racism—even after, say, the brother of slain civil rights activist Medgar Evers came out against him? Mr. Ashcroft himself—one even a Senate Democrat—genuinely worry that Mr. Ashcroft would not enforce abortion laws even after learning, for example, that he has supported his job on violence against abortion clinics? Mr. Ashcroft has made it clear that, as attorney general, he would uphold the Constitution and the laws of the nation.

After eight years of being rudely degraded Justice Department, that would—may we say it?—the department’s salvation.
GRAND RAPIDS, MI.—Some of the objections to the John Ashcroft nomination for attorney general hint that the problem with his conservative politics is that it is rooted in his Christian faith.

It is true that Mr. Ashcroft has made it clear that he is Christian and that his religious commitment guides his judgment of the world. But why shouldn’t someone who holds this particular belief be qualified to lead the Justice Department?

We must consider our country’s progressive tradition of religious tolerance. In our nation’s history, certain states subjected public officeholders to certain religious tests. In 1893, the Supreme Court struck down a Maryland law that required public officials to swear to a belief in the existence of God. Progressives fought valiantly against these religious tests, and it would be a grave error to promote a new religious test that would in effect block committed Christians from public service.

And yet some understandable questions remain. From the time of ancient Israel and the early church, believers have held that there is a law higher than those issued and enforced by man. Its source is transcendent and binds people’s souls in a way in which statutory law cannot. Indeed, the idea of a natural law that transcends the political process is a powerful argument against tyranny.

Every serious believer and every conscientious person in public office must balance respect for law with the dictates of conscience. Many have disagreed profoundly with certain policies and wondered whether their religious commitments permitted them to cooperate in enforcing those policies.

Surely, as attorney general, Mr. Ashcroft would also have to struggle with this conundrum—particulary when it comes to abortion, which he opposes. But it is perfectly within Christian belief that one can participate in an essentially just system that sometimes produces unwise laws that must be enforced, as Mr. Ashcroft would do. That is at least as principled a position as that of those Catholic politicians who personally oppose abortion but support Roe v. Wade.

George W. Bush’s response to the attacks on Mr. Ashcroft hints at the distinction between administering the law and advocating legislation as attorney general. Mr. Ashcroft will enforce, not interpret, the law, until such time as Congress changes it. Presumably that also includes the nation’s laws on abortion.

The Bible, in Chapter 13 of Romans, tells Christians that “the powers that be are held of God.” That passage has never been held to mean that the government has a duty to accommodate religious conscience according to God’s will. But the phrase does imply that Christians face no moral obligation to flee from public life merely because a nation’s laws are not always perfectly conform to the highest moral standards.

We are a nation that holds firm to the conviction that a person’s religious commitments need not be held farther from public life. The Ashcroft nomination provides an opportunity to reaffirm the best of this old liberal virtue of tolerance.

DISQUALIFIED BY HIS RELIGION?

By Charles Krauthammer

A senator is nominated for high office. He’s been reelected many times statewide. He has served admirably as his state attorney general. He is devout, speaking openly and proudly about his religious faith. He emphasizes the critical role of religion in underpinning both morality and constitutional self-government. He speaks passionately about how his politics are shaped by his deeply held religious beliefs.

Now: If his name is Lieberman and he is Jewish, his nomination evokes celebration. If his name is Ashcroft and he is Christian, my colleagues in the Senate may worry about “divisiveness” and mobilizes a wall-to-wall liberal coalition to defeat him.

Just as we have arrived at a gathering of the Jewish Theological Seminary arguing that the Lieberman candidacy—the almost universal applause his nomination received—was inappropriate and when he spoke of his religious faith—had created a new consensus in America. Liberals have long vilified the “religious right” for mixing faith and politics and political involvement has a legitimate place in the public square. No longer. The nomination of Lieberman to the second highest office in the country by the country’s liberal political party would once and for all abolish the last remaining significant religious prejudice in the country—the notion that highly religious people are unfit for high political office. Ashcroft’s theology with politics and recognize no boundary between church and state. After Lieberman, liberals would simply be too embarrassed to return to the wall.

How wrong I was. The nomination of a passionate and devout Christian for attorney general set off the old liberal anti-religious right and thus is a great day when Joe Lieberman was nominated, and it was even greater that he publicly rooted his most deeply held political beliefs in his faith. It is rather ironic that we now need to go through that same process for Ashcroft’s constituency of co-believers. When the Senate confirms him, we will have overcome yet another obstacle in America’s steady march to religious toleration.

MR. HATCH: Mr. President, let me point to just a few instances of these amazing attacks on Senator Ashcroft, made on largely religious grounds, since he was nominated. In fairness to my colleagues in the Senate, they have tried to draw a distinction between the pressure that was put on Senator Ashcroft’s religious views and my colleagues’ questioning into his “values” or “beliefs.” But their wholesale adoption of the rest of the liberal interest group critique of John Ashcroft does suggest a confusion between the objections, despite a generally more guarded rhetoric. However, I was disappointed that just this morning one of our colleagues was quoted in The New York Times as saying, ‘He believed Mr. Ashcroft’s “fundamental beliefs and values” would conflict with the attorney general’s responsibility to enforce the law.’ NY Times, Feb. 1, 2001.

Let me turn to the testimony of Professor James M. Dunn, who testified at our Senate hearings as an expert on religion issues. I begin here because Professor Dunn is the most explicit in his religious attack on Senator Ashcroft.

Most attacks have been based on the divergence of his religious beliefs and a particular law, such as abortion rights, or a suggestion that the strength of his deeply-held convictions will make it impossible for him to analyze the law dispassionately and apply it even-handedly. Professor Dunn doesn’t make such an attack explicitly on religious grounds. On a personal note, I am deeply disappointed that a Divinity Professor, who has worked on important religious liberty legislation with me and other people of conscience and people of faith, would use such harsh and imprecise language to attack a person of good faith, apparently over a policy difference.

Professor Dunn says explicitly what others have coyly and carefully implied. He says, and I quote what is essentially the thesis statement of his testimony before the Judiciary Committee: ‘The long history of Senator

February 1, 2001 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE S963
Ashcroft’s identification with and approval of the political agenda of religious, right-wing extremism in this country convinces me that he is utterly unqualified and must be assumed to be unreliable for such a trust.

Let me quote that point again: “The long history of Senator Ashcroft’s identification with and approval of religious, right-wing extremism in this country convinces [Professor Dunn] that he is utterly unqualified and must be assumed unreliable for such a trust.” That is about as baldly as the matter can be put. John Ashcroft is “utterly unqualified” and “unreliable” because of his “religious, right-wing extremism.”

As if the name-calling were not enough, to make this an even more stunning assertion, the case Professor Dunn offers to prove this perceived “extravagance” is that John Ashcroft would join in attacks by religious right-wing extremists on candidates adopted by two branches of government controlled by different political parties outside the mainstream, simply ludicrous, and suggests that the outside mainstream is not Senator Ashcroft, but rather his critics. This is a point that could be made on a number of policy fronts.

This critique is particularly odd when both major-party presidential candidates have been talking up the concept of charitable choice very recently in their campaigns.

I am disappointed when policy disagreements deteriorate into name-calling, but considering the source I am particularly disappointed. I would hope that the Senate would never countenance such attacks in the consideration of this, or any other, nominee. I hope no weight will be given consideration of this, or any other, nominee. I hope no weight will be given to mere legislative history, including believing members of the Catholic church, including a million of believing Catholics, are unfit for office of Attorney General because of their “extreme positions.” Surely, the Senate cannot take the position that faithful Americans who adhere to the religious code of their churches, or even those who are pro-life on secular grounds, are unfit for office because of this view.

Where all of this leads is down one of two roads. Either the political views of about half of the country—including a duly elected pro-life President—make one unfit for office, which clearly cannot be right in a democracy. Or religious people who actually believe their religious beliefs and practice their religion will be unfit for office, which clearly cannot be right in a tolerant and pluralistic society founded in part on religious freedom.

There is a third path. That path is the one John Ashcroft’s opponents have advocated to counter his assurances that he will follow the law, even where he disagrees with it. That path is to try to brand as a liar a person who, while disagreeing on policy, promises to honor the law as the policy-maker who will make decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning represent no mere commentary on policy decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning represent no mere commentary on policy decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning.

Well, call it extreme if you will—that word is a hobby horse of the far left liberal groups who oppose this nominee but I understand that is the position of a number of churches, including the Catholic church. What is striking and chilling about this attack is the implication that anyone who holds this belief, including believing members of the Catholic church, is unfit for office of Attorney General because of their “extreme positions.” Surely, the Senate cannot take the position that faithful Americans who adhere to the religious code of their churches, or even those who are pro-life on secular grounds, are unfit for office because of this view.

Or there is a third path. That path is the one John Ashcroft’s opponents have advocated to counter his assurances that he will follow the law, even where he disagrees with it. That path is to try to brand as a liar a person who, while disagreeing on policy, promises to honor the law as the policy-maker who will make decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning represent no mere commentary on policy decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning.

Well, call it extreme if you will—that word is a hobby horse of the far left liberal groups who oppose this nominee but I understand that is the position of a number of churches, including the Catholic church. What is striking and chilling about this attack is the implication that anyone who holds this belief, including believing members of the Catholic church, is unfit for office of Attorney General because of their “extreme positions.” Surely, the Senate cannot take the position that faithful Americans who adhere to the religious code of their churches, or even those who are pro-life on secular grounds, are unfit for office because of this view.

Where all of this leads is down one of two roads. Either the political views of about half of the country—including a duly elected pro-life President—make one unfit for office, which clearly cannot be right in a democracy. Or religious people who actually believe their religious beliefs and practice their religion will be unfit for office, which clearly cannot be right in a tolerant and pluralistic society founded in part on religious freedom.

Or there is a third path. That path is the one John Ashcroft’s opponents have advocated to counter his assurances that he will follow the law, even where he disagrees with it. That path is to try to brand as a liar a person who, while disagreeing on policy, promises to honor the law as the policy-maker who will make decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning represent no mere commentary on policy decisions of the day, but rather illustrate deeply held beliefs that put him odds with regard to choice and family planning.
the nominee’s contradiction of our assumptions.

Mr. President, I think we would all do well to remember what we know about John Ashcroft, and not be influenced by a caricature painted by those extreme groups whose distortions of this honorable man are driven largely by their own narrow political interests. We know him to be a man of integrity, a man of his word. A man who reveres American constitutionalism, democracy, and equality before the law. We know John Ashcroft is the sort of person whose word is his bond. And if his religion is relevant, it speaks for him as a person who will discharge the office of Attorney General with honor and dignity, with impartiality, according to the law established by the constitutional process he reveres.

I think if we examine our hearts, we will find nothing that disqualifies him to be Attorney General. And we cannot, in good conscience, say that all those who believe as he does are outside the mainstream of American opinion. No, they are solidly within the history of American pluralism and freedom, including religious freedom. We know John Ashcroft will faithfully discharge his duties and honor his oath of office, sworn as he points out “so help [him] God.” And we know this no matter what the liberal pressure groups assert. I hope we will similarly honor our oaths, rejecting what in essence a religious test for this nominee, and vote to confirm this honorable man to the post of Attorney General.

My colleague Senator KENNEDY suggests that to oppose court-ordered busing makes a person against integration. But nothing could be farther from the truth. I think most people highly abhor racial segregation. However, the remedy for such segregation is extremely controversial. Mr. Bob Woodson testified that significant majorities of African-Americans oppose busing for integration. And it is no wonder, given that many of these programs have been a dismal failure. They may have moved some children out of city schools, but they have done little to improve inner-city schools.

I would like to address several allegations that continue to be made relating to Senator Ashcroft’s involvement with school desegregation cases in Missouri. First, let me say that I do not in the least condone segregation in St. Louis or Kansas City or anywhere else. It is a shameful legacy that must be dealt with appropriately.

Second, while the costs of the desegregation program were exorbitant, this is not the only criticism to be made of the plan. The primary argument repeatedly made by Senator Ashcroft is that the State was never found liable for an inter-district violation.

Senator KENNEDY has referred to an 8th Circuit decision that he argues found the State of Missouri guilty of an inter-district violation. But a circuit court cannot make such a factual finding. Rather, this is a finding that must be made only by a trial court. The fact that the State was never found liable for an inter-district violation is shown by the fact that throughout 1981 and 1982, the parties were preparing and arguing the very question of inter-district liability.

So again, I emphasize that it is true and correct to say that the State was never found liable for an inter-district violation.

Although the State was not found liable for an inter-district violation, it was required by the district court to pay for a settlement reached by the suburbs and the City of St. Louis. This order by the district court was likely unconstitutional under the Supreme Court’s decision in Milliken.

Opposing these court orders for a plan that was constitutionally suspect, expensive, and ineffective, does not make Senator Ashcroft an opponent of desegregation.

Indeed, the plan as implemented has been a dismal failure. Test scores actually declined from 1990 to 1995. Scores on the standard achievement test went from 36.5 to 31.1 at a time when the national mean was 50. And the graduation rate has remained at a dismal 30 percent.

To question Senator Ashcroft’s integrity over such a complicated and controversial issue is to seriously distort his record and disbelieve his sworn testimony.

Senator Ashcroft acted with great probity as a representative of the State of Missouri. He supports integration and deprecates racism.

As one who feels very strongly about drug issues, I am pleased to say I have been working with Senator LEAHY on legislation dealing with drug treatment and prevention, and we are going to get that done this year.

I feel compelled to respond to some of the criticism launched at Senator Ashcroft yesterday regarding his stance on drug treatment. Some have questioned Senator Ashcroft’s dedication to investing in drug prevention and treatment programs in the battle against drug abuse and addiction.

Indeed, yesterday when giving a statement in opposition to Senator Ashcroft, one Senator suggested that Senator Ashcroft opposed investing in drug treatment. That simply is not true. Senator Ashcroft, of course, is an MPEG, a study on the development of medication for the treatment of addiction to methamphetamine and amphetamine addiction; (3) authorized $15 million in grants to States for treatment of methamphetamine and methamphetamine addiction; (4) required HHS to conduct a study on the development of medications for the treatment of addiction to methamphetamine and methamphetamine addiction.

Another important treatment provision, included in S. 486, offered an innovative approach to how drug addicts could seek and obtain treatment by creating a decentralized system of treating heroin addicts with a new generation of antiaddiction medications. This provision, which was added to S. 486 and was fully supported by Senator Ashcroft, was taken from a bill introduced by Senator Jesse HELMS and Senator PIN LEVIN would agree that Senator Ashcroft’s sponsorship and support for this very provision, not to mention the countless other provisions included in the bill, demonstrate this commitment to investing in drug prevention and treatment programs in the fight against illicit drug abuse and addiction. Senator Ashcroft’s record... proves he believes in prevention and treatment programs and his views on one particular, and I must say controversial, form of a treatment program.

There are so many things I could bring up, but I have been read more falsehoods stated on this floor and in our committee about Senator Ashcroft—especially by outside groups. The sheer volume is mind-boggling to me.

I recall the Golden Rule of "do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

I wonder how many people would like to be treated like Senator Ashcroft has been treated by some of our colleagues here and some of these outside groups, distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad—distorting his record, trying to make him look bad. How many of us would like to be treated like this? Here is a man who similar. Do unto others as you would have been treated by some of our colleagues

The sheer volume is mind-boggling to me.

I wonder how many people would like to be treated like this of somebody who has spent a lifetime living his beliefs and doing what is right.

Of the 69 Attorneys General of the United States, John Ashcroft has more qualifications than all but a handful; some say more qualifications than any one who has been Attorneys General. I will not go that far. But there is only a handful that have at least some of the qualifications that John Ashcroft has. Think of what Senator Ashcroft's critics are doing to the State of Missouri in the arguments that have been made here. Why, you would all have to imply that the people of Missouri just have no brains to elect somebody as vicious, as violent, and as awful as John Ashcroft, when it is completely the other way. The people of Missouri for having the brains to have somebody of that quality serve them as attorney general, Governor, and Senator.

Look at the way he handled his defeat—with decency; much more than has been shown to him—consideration, and kindness. And we are happy to welcome our new colleague from Missouri because of John Ashcroft's gracious concession and because she is a great person to boot. But Senator Ashcroft could have contested the election. The loss of a Senate race has to be personal. There are other legal aspects as well, it could be argued. But he didn't. He did not do what others are doing to him.

When I see these outside groups, I welcome them because it is the first time we have seen them in 8 years. Isn't that interesting? They seem to be a lot of them. I respect their right to come in and state that point of view.

But I resent the way they have picked on John Ashcroft. I resent the unfair tactics. I resent the distortions of his record. Boy, it has been distorted. I think we all resent it.

Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.

Isn't it amazing that only during Republican Presidencies do we have all these groups coming out of the woodwork? I guess they can say it is because Republicans don't agree with them.

That is what makes this country great. We do disagree.

Let me put it bluntly. Is it getting to the point where only pro-choice people can serve in as Attorney General of the United States? Do we have a litmus test that says that we have to reject highly qualified individuals who believe otherwise, but who will enforce the law as it exists? Is that where we are going in this country? Or are we going to continue to distort his record on guns? John Ashcroft has a sterling record on gun control, more than who use guns. That is the way to end the misuse of guns in this society—get tough on those who misuse them. There would be a lot less crime. But, if we don't agree with certain anti-gun groups and we just ignore the history of the second amendment completely, we are not worthy of being Attorney General.

To have his record distorted when he has been a forthright, strong proponent of tough anticrime laws against those who misuse guns, it is a disgrace. Desegregation: Sometimes in the law we can differ and have a good case and we might lose. But that doesn't mean the case wasn't good. If you look at the record of court-ordered desegregation in St. Louis and Kansas City, it didn't work. The people hurt the worst were the people in the inner cities of St. Louis and Kansas City, a $1 billion, which John thought was a raid on the State treasury. The State was never found liable for interdistrict segregation. Those are important points.

I want Members to think about it. Why would anybody in this body say some of the things that have been said about John Ashcroft? Is it because they want to make John Ashcroft the new Newt Gingrich so they can raise funds for reelection? I certainly hope not. But there are some who believe that. I am not sure it is not true. Is it because they are sending a message that no conservative who believes in the right to life should ever be Attorney General—ever?

This is a fellow who would do what he thinks is right, and by and large will be right. Everybody in this body admits he would be a great law enforcement Attorney General.

The fact is, he knows he is tough on crime. After all, that is one of the things we are all worried about. People are scared to death in this land today because we have allowed drugs to pervade the land. We have allowed crimminality to pervade the land. We haven't been as tough as we should be. We have illicit use of guns in this land because we are not enforcing the laws. Instead of going after those who misuse the guns, they have been turning about guns themselves. I would rather attack the problem in a responsible and intelligent way. Let he who has not sinned cast the first stone. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

I hope we don't have another nominee that goes through this, a person of decency and honor. I hope whether he or she is a Democrat or Republican, that we will have seen all the things we have displayed in this matter. I hope my colleagues on the other side will vote for John Ashcroft because it is the right thing to do. We should never get into these name-calling contests and distort people especially some of the quality of John Ashcroft, and a colleague at that.

Mr. President, I rise today to speak in strong support of President Bush's nominee for Attorney General, our former colleague, John Ashcroft. Senator Ashcroft will be one of the most qualified Attorney Generals in our history. Unfortunately, he has also been the target of one of the most vicious and unrelenting smear campaigns in our history, and it is with that in mind that I feel compelled to set the record straight and describe at length, the real facts and the real qualifications of someone I think this country will be very fortunate to have serve as our Attorney General.

Mr. President, much of the debate over the nomination of John Ashcroft has focused on issues tangential to the core duties of the Attorney General. The Senate would be well-served to consider the Ashcroft nomination in light of the duties of the Attorney General. When this debate is placed in the proper perspective, it becomes even more obvious how qualified Senator Ashcroft is to be the next Attorney General of the United States.

The Department of Justice was established by Congress in 1870. It is the largest law firm in the United States, with 122,000 employees and an annual budget of approximately $21 billion. Through its thousands of lawyers, agents, and investigators, the Justice Department plays a vital role in fighting violent crime and drug trafficking, ensuring business competition in the marketplace, enforcing immigration and naturalization laws, and protecting our environment. Consider the following major components of the Justice Department in light of the qualifications of Senator Ashcroft:

The Division was established in 1957 to secure the effective enforcement of civil rights for all Americans. Attorneys in the Civil Rights Division enforce federal statutes that prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, gender, disability, religion, and national origin. In order to enforce these landmark laws, the Civil Rights Division engages in a variety of litigation to fight discrimination in employment, housing, and immigration. In particular, litigation brought by the Civil Rights Division under the Voting Rights Act has had a profound influence on the electoral landscape in the last three decades. As Senator Ashcroft emphatically stated at his confirmation hearing: “No part of the Department of Justice is more important than the Civil Rights Division.”

Senator Ashcroft’s record proves that he believes in the mission of the Civil Rights Division. He vigorously enforced laws as the Missouri Attorney General and Governor of Missouri. He signed Missouri’s first hate crimes statute. Not content to wait for the legislature to act, John Ashcroft made Missouri one of the first States to recognize Martin Luther King Day by creating a holiday in his honor. Missouri one of the first States to recognize the importance of voting rights, Senator Ashcroft made Missouri one of the first States to recognize Martin Luther King Day by creating a holiday in his honor. He won enactment of a bill that extends higher education financial assistance to spouses and dependents of law enforcement. He won enactment of a law that increases benefits to the family of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty. Along with Senator Biden, Senator Ashcroft co-sponsored legislation to reauthorize the COPS program.

In the Senate, Senator Ashcroft steadfastly supported state and local law enforcement. He won enactment of a bill that extends higher education financial assistance to spouses and dependents of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty. He was the principal supporter of the “Gun-Free Schools Zone Act,” which prohibits the possession of a firearm in a school zone, and he voted for legislation to require gun dealers to offer child safety locks and other gun safety devices for sale. I have no doubt that with John Ashcroft as Attorney General, the Department of Justice will target and prosecute gun crimes with unprecedented zeal.

To his credit, Senator Ashcroft understands that the vast majority of criminal law enforcement takes place at the state and local level. Given his tenure as Missouri Attorney General and Governor, Senator Ashcroft appreciates the important role that the federal government can play in supporting state and local authorities by providing resources and training. He also understands that the Justice Department should provide such support without intruding into traditional areas of state sovereignty.

In the Senate, Senator Ashcroft steadfastly supported state and local law enforcement. He won enactment of a bill that extends higher education financial assistance to spouses and dependents of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty. He was the principal supporter of the “Gun-Free Schools Zone Act,” a measure that increases benefits to the families of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty. Along with Senator Biden, Senator Ashcroft co-sponsored legislation to reauthorize the COPS program.
In addition, Senator Ashcroft cosponsored the “Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 1995.” This act allocated $1 billion to state and local law enforcement to update and computerize criminal records, automated fingerprint databases, and DNA identification and tracking operations. John Ashcroft also cosponsored the “21st Century Justice Act” which included Violent Offender Incarceration and Truth-in-Sentencing Initiative Grants. These grants have provided federal incentives to states to build prisons to incarcerate violent and repeat offenders. Given his record, it is no surprise that law enforcement groups such as the Fraternal Order of Police, the National Sheriff’s Association, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National District Attorneys Association, and the National Association of Police Organizations are united in their support for Senator Ashcroft’s nomination.

The Civil Division represents the United States government, including executive departments and agencies, in civil litigation. First and foremost, the Civil Division defends the constitutionality of federal statutes, regulations, and executive orders. The Civil Division also litigates complex commercial cases. This litigation is especially important for property rights because the Civil Division represents the federal government against claims that private property was taken for public use without just compensation. In addition, the Civil Division represents the federal government in consumer litigation under various consumer protection and public health statutes.

Senator Ashcroft’s experience as the Attorney General of Missouri prepared him well to oversee the Civil Division. John Ashcroft established the Consumer Affairs Division in the Missouri Attorney General’s office. He brought many consumer protection actions, including those involving illegal and financial pyramid schemes. In Illinois v. Abbott & Associates, Inc., Attorney General Ashcroft filed a brief in the United States Supreme Court supporting the right of state attorneys general to conduct antitrust investigations. In the Senate, John Ashcroft helped enact legislation to combat telemarketing scams against senior citizens.

As Missouri Attorney General, Senator Ashcroft also defended the constitutionality of state laws. In 1993, he personally argued a case before the United States Supreme Court in defense of the constitutionality of a Missouri statute. Few nominees for Attorney General have been so qualified to oversee the Civil Division.

Created in 1909, the Environment and Natural Resources Division is the Nation’s chief environmental lawyer. It is responsible for litigating cases ranging from the protection of endangered species to the clean-up of hazardous waste sites. In addition to prosecuting environmental crimes, the Environment and Natural Resources Division ensures that federal environmental laws are implemented in a fair and consistent manner.

As Missouri Attorney General, John Ashcroft aggressively enforced that state’s environmental protection laws. For example, Attorney General Ashcroft brought suit to prevent an electric company from causing oxygen levels in downstream waters to harm fish. He also sought to recover damages from the electric company.

In Attorney General Opinion No. 84, Attorney General Ashcroft issued an opinion that “all solid waste be disposed of at approved solid waste recovery facilities, rather than be buried in landfills.” In rendering his opinion, Attorney General Ashcroft gave credence to the arguments that “recycling of solid wastes results in fewer environmental and pollution problems than does disposal of the same types of wastes in landfills” and that “public welfare is better served by burning solid wastes for generation of electricity, thus conserving scarce natural resources.”

To those who have irresponsibly charged that Senator Ashcroft will not enforce our environmental laws, I say this: Look at his record. Mr. President, there are other offices in the Justice Department that are also very important. In the interest of time, however, I have focused on a select few. My point today is a simple one—when this nomination is considered in light of the mission of the Department of Justice, it becomes apparent how well-qualified John Ashcroft is to be Attorney General.

In addition to placing in the record Senator Ashcroft’s eminent qualifications, I would also like to correct the record surrounding a number of issues that have been raised by his critics. As Senator Sissons has said, Senator Ashcroft has been called “divisive”, but that has been a result of a caricature created by extremist lobbying groups who have spared nothing to demonize him. Webster includes in its definition of “caricature”, “a likeness or imitation that is so distorted or inferior as to seem ludicrous.” The portrait of John Ashcroft that has been painted by the People For the American Way and other related people and organizations is ludicrous. They describe a man that I do not recognize as John Ashcroft. Unlike their demonization, the real John Ashcroft has the character and the intelligence to be a great Attorney General.

Before addressing some of the unfair attacks leveled against Senator Ashcroft, I should say a word or two on standards. We have heard much discussion about the appropriate standard of treatment and consent that should apply to the President’s Cabinet nominees. Unfortunately, many people, knowing that opposing Senator Ashcroft on ideological grounds would be unprecedented, appear to be manipulating this standard so as to mask their motive for opposing his policies. As Senator Sissons has said, those on the other side appear to oppose Senator Ashcroft simply because he is a conservative.

The standard we should use is that which was applied to Attorney General
Janet Reno in 1993, and that standard has three parts. First, by longstanding tradition in the Senate, we must afford the President a significant degree of deference to shape his Cabinet as he sees fit. The election is over, President Bush won, and nothing will change that fact. Some say this has suggested to them because the election was close and divisive, we should be less deferential with respect to Cabinet nominees. Yet, I do not recall hearing that suggestion in 1988 after President Reagan won an extremely close and hard-fought election, an election in which he failed to garner a majority of the popular vote. Despite that close election, every Republican in this body deferred to President Clinton and voted for Attorney General Reno.

The second prong of our standard focuses on the experience and qualifications of the nominee. No one can seriously contend that Senator Ashcroft lacks the experience and qualifications to serve as Attorney General. Indeed, few in our nation’s history have come to the post of Attorney General with the qualifications and experience that Senator Ashcroft brings. In almost thirty years of public service, he has served as an attorney general, state governor, and United States Senator. While Missouri Attorney General, he was elected by the other state attorneys general to head the National Association of Attorneys General, while Governor, he demonstrated his commitment to equality under the law throughout his career. For example, as Governor, he signed Missouri’s first hate crimes statute into law. He signed Missouri’s Martin Luther King Holiday into law and also signed the law establishing Scott Joplin’s house as Missouri’s first and only historic site honoring an African-American. John Ashcroft led the fight to save an independent Lincoln University, founded by African-American soldiers. He also established an award emphasizing academic excellence in the name of George Washington Carver, a wonderful intellectual role model for all Missouri students. As Governor, John Ashcroft was presented with 19 panels for judicial appointment that contained minority candidates. In 8 of the 9 instances, Ashcroft appointed a minority candidate to fill the post, and he appointed both of the minority candidates on the 9th panel to judicial positions at a later date. He appointed 11 percent of Missouri’s federal and state courts, including David Mason, Jimmy Edwards, Charles Shaw and Michael Calvin, in St. Louis. He also appointed over the entire history of the Senate, this body has voted to reject only 9 nominations to the President’s Cabinet, and only 3 in the 20th Century. In 1993, Republicans applied that traditional standard when we unanimously voted to confirm an attorney general nominee, Senator Ashcroft, with pen- alty, the Second Amendment, and abortion stood in stark contrast to our own. Unless those on the other side wish to engage in rank hypocrisy, this is the standard we should apply to Senator Ashcroft.

Opponents of Senator Ashcroft have accused him of being unable to set aside his opinions on certain laws sufficiently in order to enforce those laws. What’s being proposed is to disqualify from high office anyone who has previously taken a side on a legislative proposal. It is simply not true that a legislator is so tainted by efforts to change laws that thereafter he or she cannot perform the duties of attorney general. Outside this Chamber, and outside of the offices of the left-wing liberal group’s offices, Americans understand that people can take on different roles and responsibilities when they are given different positions. Americans know that lawyers can become judges, welders can become foremen, engineers can become managers, and school teachers can become school board leaders. And Americans know that a Senator whose job is to propose and vote on new laws, can become an Attorney General, whose job is to enforce those laws that are duly passed.

There aren’t many people who know as much about the different roles in government as John Ashcroft. He has been in the executive branch as Missouri Attorney General for 8 years. He has been chief executive as Missouri’s Governor for 8 years. And he has been in the legislative branch as a United States Senator for 8 years. Each of these positions has required an understanding of the differing roles assumed by the three branches of government. It is in this context that John Ashcroft told us what he will do as Attorney General. He said he will enforce the laws as written, and uphold the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court. This is a concise yet profound statement about the proper role of the Attorney General. And it is more than just a statement, because it is backed up by the unquestioned integrity of John Ashcroft, a man who will do what he says. He will enforce the law as it is written, even in those instances where he would have written it differently.

Still, some members of this body are unconvinced. They apparently think that John Ashcroft will not do what he said. Of course they would not call him a liar at least not explicitly, anyway. They are saying that, try as he might, he simply cannot enforce the law because he wants so badly for the law to say something other than what it actually says. Some who have adopted this view are accusing John Ashcroft of changing his views. They accuse him of having a “confirmation conversion.” By this they mean that people who take off their legislator’s cap, and put on an attorney general’s, are not the same person. They mean he is now willing to change the role of law writer to law enforcer without being insincere. This is a ludicrous proposition. John Ashcroft has not undergone a confirmation conversion; he has been the victim of an smear campaign directed by special interest groups.

Members of this body know something that the public may not: There is an unspoken rule that a nominee does not answer questions in public between their nomination and their confirmation hearing. This is done out of respect for the Senate—whose job it is, after all, to listen to the nominee rather than the media. But savvy special interest groups take advantage of this interim time to wage a war of words against nominees they dislike. Many of those words are exaggerated or unsubstantiated attacks. The result can be the fabrication of a false public record. Mr. President, I am asking my fellow Senators to resist the temptation to label a “confirmation conversion” simply corrects the misperceptions created by special interest groups. I am asking my colleagues to look at John Ashcroft’s real record, and at his own words in his confirmation hearings, and in his answers to the voluminous written questions—rather than relying on the press releases of issue advocates.

John Ashcroft has been committed to enforcing the civil rights of all Americans. He has stated that the Civil Rights Division is the most important division of the Justice Department and that he will make enforcement of civil rights a priority during his tenure as Attorney General. Contrary to the attacks of his critics, John Ashcroft has demonstrated his commitment to equality under the law throughout his career. For example, as Governor, he signed Missouri’s first hate crimes statute into law. He signed Missouri’s Martin Luther King Holiday into law and also signed the law establishing Scott Joplin’s house as Missouri’s first and only historic site honoring an African-American. John Ashcroft led the fight to save an independent Lincoln University, founded by African-American soldiers. He also established an award emphasizing academic excellence in the name of George Washington Carver, a wonderful intellectual role model for all Missouri students. As Governor, John Ashcroft was presented with 19 panels for judicial appointment that contained minority candidates. In 8 of the 9 instances, Ashcroft appointed a minority candidate to fill the post, and he appointed both of the minority candidates on the 9th panel to judicial positions at a later date. He appointed 11 percent of Missouri’s federal and state courts, including David Mason, Jimmy Edwards, Charles Shaw and Michael Calvin, in St. Louis. He also appointed the first African-American judge on the Western Missouri Court of Appeals in Kansas City, Missouri's second highest court. This jurist, Ferdinand Gaitan, now serves on the U.S. District Court for Western Missouri.

He has been a leader in the Senate where he convened the only Senate hearing on Racial Profiling (March 30, 2000) with Senator FEINGOLD. During that hearing, Senator Ashcroft spoke out strongly on the issue stating that "[U]sing race broadly as profile in lieu of individualized suspicion is, I believe, an unconstitutional practice." He has supported efforts to study the issue and during his hearing testified that as Attorney General, he would continue the studies already underway to examine racial and geographical disparities in death penalty cases. In short, John Ashcroft's record demonstrates his ability to lead a Justice Department of which we can all be proud.

John Ashcroft will be committed to enforcing the civil rights laws protecting every American's right to vote and participate in the political process. He has done so throughout his career. Some who oppose Senator Ashcroft have charged that he is a "law-and-order" politician as Governor of Missouri. Yet Senator Ashcroft essentially blocked two bills that would have required the City of St. Louis Board of Election Commissioners to deputize private voter registration volunteers. These bills were opposed by both democrats and Republicans in St. Louis. It was opposed by the bipartisan St. Louis County Board of Election Commissioners, the St. Louis Board of Aldermen President Tom Villa, and St. Louis circuit attorney George Peach. Tom Villa was a noted Democratic leader, and St. Louis circuit attorney George Peach was a Democrat who was the prosecutor in the St. Louis area. All of these people opposed the legislation. The recommendation of these officials was one of the reasons that John Ashcroft vetoed the bills.

It was insinuated during the hearings that these actions were taken out of some kind of partisan or racial motivation, because the City of St. Louis is predominantly black and democratic. But this implication is seriously discredited by the history of voter registration in St. Louis and earlier federal court cases.

The record shows Ashcroft has a long history of refusing to deputize private voter registration deputies, long before John Ashcroft appointed anyone to that board. Indeed, in 1981 a lawsuit was filed against the members of the St. Louis board concerning the failure to deputize voter registration deputies. The Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri explicitly rejected charges of racial animus. The court found that the board properly refused to deputize volunteers to prevent fraud and, in the strictest sense, to improve administative efficiency. Moreover, these conclusions were sustained by the 8th Circuit, in an opinion by Judge McMillan, a prominent African-American jurist.

Some have also claimed that then-Governor Ashcroft refused to appoint a diverse group of commissioners to the Election Board. This is simply untrue. Mr. Jerry Hunter, the former labor secretary of Missouri, testified that Senator Ashcroft worked hard to increase black representation on the St. Louis City Election Board, but his efforts were staled by other members.

Mr. Hunter testified that, “Governor Ashcroft’s first black nominee for the St. Louis City Election Board was rejected by the black state senator, because that person did not come out of his organization.” When then-Governor Ashcroft came up with a second black attorney, this candidate was also rejected by two black state senators. As Mr. Hunter stated, "[F]rom the beginning, any efforts to make changes in the St. Louis City Election Board were forestalled because the state senators wanted people from their own organization.” Apparently for these state senators the political spoils system was more important than the voters of St. Louis.

Finally, some have implied that these voter registration issues will make Senator Ashcroft less able to deal with allegations of voting improprieties resulting from the Florida vote in the presidential election. Yet Senator Ashcroft has repeatedly testified, “I will investigate any alleged voting rights violation that has credible evidence. . . . I have no reason not to go forward and move forward for any reason other than a conclusion that there wasn’t credible evidence to pursue the case.” Objective people should have no doubt that Senator Ashcroft will be vigorous in his enforcement of the Voting Rights Act and related statutes.

Critics of Senator Ashcroft have also unfairly criticized his testimony about his involvement with the desegregation cases in St. Louis and Kansas City. Senator Ashcroft gave complete and responsive answers to questions about these cases. Any assertions to the contrary distort Senator Ashcroft’s responses to a flurry of questions about difficult and complicated cases in which he was involved over a decade ago.

The Missouri school desegregation cases are extremely complex and involve a variety of different factual and institutional claims. Senator Ashcroft made some preliminary statements that were incomplete, or not fully clear, but when questioned further, he clarified his answers in an accurate and fair manner. Moreover, in the extended testimony to which I had access, he fully detailed Missouri’s liability and involvement with the case. Far from being misleading, Senator Ashcroft’s answers get to the heart of the distinctions in the case between inter- and intra-district liability for segregation.

Some complain that Senator Ashcroft denied that the state was a party to the lawsuit, however, the initial suit was filed in 1972 and did not make the State a party. Eventually the State was made party to the lawsuit in 1977 and Senator Ashcroft acknowledged this repeatedly in his answers.

Senator Ashcroft’s critics argue that Senator Ashcroft denied the State’s liability. The State was found liable for school segregation in St. Louis, but only for intra-district segregation within the City of St. Louis. The remedy that the district court ordered was inter-district, between St. Louis and its suburbs. The State was never found liable for the inter-district segregation that would justify such a far-ranging remedy involving the suburbs. Then-Attorney General Ashcroft was battling against this inter-district remedy, and it is fully accurate to say that the State was never found liable for inter-district segregation.

Third, opponents of Senator Ashcroft urge that he failed to charge that the Missouri Governor misleadingly stated that he followed all court orders in the desegregation cases. Of course, these opponents cannot say that John Ashcroft did not follow the orders, and must admit that John Ashcroft complied with the terms of the orders. The Governor criticized “his vigorous and repeated appeals.” These appeals were undertaken in his role as attorney general—as the legal representative of the State. John Ashcroft had to consider the State’s interests and was raising all reasonable legal appeals, which he did. To make a legal appeal is not to disobey a court order. In fact many court orders were complied with while the appeals were pending.

Fourth, the criticisms of Senator Ashcroft’s actions strongly and unfairly imply that he was indifferent to the problems of segregation. Nothing could be further from the truth. Senator Ashcroft testified that “I have always opposed segregated education; I never opposed integration. I believe that segregation is inconsistent with the 14th Amendment’s guaranteeing of equal protection. I supported integrating the schools.” What Senator Ashcroft opposed was court-ordered remedies that we now know to have been wildly expensive and ineffective. Test results have declined, graduation rates have remained at a dismal 30 percent, and the percentage of black students has increased about the same as the white students in the Missouri schools. All of this for the price-tag of $1.7 billion. It is hard to see how a person who opposed this plan can be considered against educational equality. The result of court-ordered desegregation in St. Louis is just one example of why, as Bob Workman testified, a significant majority of African-Americans are against forced busing for integration.

John Ashcroft will stand behind the commitments he made during his confirmation and be a staunch defender of the civil rights of all Americans. Senator Ashcroft has demonstrated his commitment to equality through his...

record as Attorney General, Governor and Senator. Contrary to his critics who have distorted his record on hiring, John Ashcroft has been deeply committed to promoting equal access to government positions during his tenure. Sen. John Ashcroft followed a policy of affirmative access and inclusiveness during his service to the state of Missouri as attorney general, his two terms as governor, and his one term in the United States Senate. During the eight years that Senator Ashcroft was attorney general for the state of Missouri, he recruited and hired minority lawyers. During his tenure as governor, he appointed blacks to numerous boards and commissions . . . [But] I would have preferred a person . . . Senator Ashcroft went out of his way to find African-Americans to consider for appointments.”

Mr. Hunter further elaborated that, “When Governor Ashcroft’s term ended in January of 1993, he had appointed more African-Americans to state court judgeships than any previous governor in the history of the state of Missouri. Governor Ashcroft was also bipartisan in his appointment of state court judges—Republicans, Democrats and independents. One of Governor Ashcroft’s black appointees in St. Louis was appointed, notwithstanding the fact that he was not a Republican and that he was on a panel with a well-known white Republican. Of the nine panels of nominees for state court judgeships, which included at least one African-American, Governor Ashcroft appointed eight black judges from those panels.”

Judge David Mason, who worked with Ashcroft in the Missouri Attorney General’s office stated, “[A]s time went on, I begin to get a real feel for this man and where his heart is. When the subject of Martin Luther King Day came up, I was there. And I recall that he issued the executive order to establish the first King Day, rather than wait for the legislature to do it. Because, as you may recall, some of you, when the Congress passed the holiday, they passed it at a time when the Missouri legislature may not have been able to have the first holiday contemporaneously with it. So he passed a King holiday by executive order. He said, in doing so, he wanted his children to grow up in a state that observed someone like Martin Luther King.”

Bob Woodson of the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise uses faith-based organizations to help troubled young people turn their lives around. Mr. Woodson said, “Senator John Ashcroft is the only person who from the time he came into this body, reached out to us. He’s on the board of Teen Challenge. He’s raised money for them. He sponsored a charitable choice legislation that will stop the government from trying to close them down because they don’t have trained professionals as drug counselors. We have an 80 percent success rate of these faith-based organizations with a $60-a-day cost, versus the conventional, therapeutically secular program cost $600 a day with a 6 to 10 percent success rate. Senator Ashcroft has gone with us. He has fought with us. And this legislation would help us.” Mr. Woodson further stated, “I think someone could have come yesterday, 150 black and Hispanic transformed drug addicts got on buses from all over this nation and came here to support him. Fifty of them came from Victory Temple throughout the state of Texas, spent two days on a Greyhound bus at their own expense to come here to voice strong support for Senator Ashcroft.”

Congressman J.C. Watts also testified: “I’ve worked with [John Ashcroft] on legislation concerning poor communities, under-served communities. I have always found John Ashcroft to have nothing but the utmost respect and dignity for one’s skin color. I heard John say yesterday in some of his testimony that his faith requires minimalities, under-served communities. I have always found John Ashcroft to have nothing but the utmost respect and dignity for one’s skin color. And I think that’s the way it should be. [In my dealings with John, I have had nothing but the utmost respect for him when it comes to his dealings with people of different skin color.]”

These testimonial and Senator Ashcroft’s record of hiring and appointments as Missouri Attorney General and Governor demonstrate beyond any reasonable doubt that he will be committed to equal opportunity as Attorney General of the United States. Many have expressed concerns about Senator Ashcroft’s actions with regard to conducting a telephone interview with a magazine called Southern Partisan Magazine. In my opinion, Mr. President, this is an issue demonstrates that he will be a strong word. Some Senators and interest groups have demanded that Senator Ashcroft go out on a limb and add his derision based upon an acceptance at face value of all the negative allegations concerning that magazine. In my opinion, Mr. President, this led to one of the most profound moments of the confirmation hearings. A number of Senators, led by Sen. John BIDEN asked him whether the Southern Partisan Magazine as “racist”—even after Senator Ashcroft explained that he did not know whether that was true. The profound was John Ashcroft’s response: “I think that I have been accused of being a racist. I have to say this, Senator: I would rather be falsely accused of being a racist than to falsely accuse someone else of being a racist.” This exchange tells volumes about John Ashcroft’s sense of good judgment and his fitness for the office of Attorney General. It would have been a lot easier for him just to say Yes, I agree with anyone who uses that term about someone else. Doing so would have saved him from further bashing by the Committee and the press. It would have been politically expedient. But John Ashcroft choose to take the high road, not to heap disdain onto something he didn’t know about just because it would have suited his interest to do so. This example of good judgment and good character.

This is not to say that John Ashcroft defended anything about the magazine. Clearly he did not. In fact, when Sen. BIDEN asked him whether the magazine was condemnable because it sells T-shirts that imply that Lincoln’s assassin did a good thing, he answered: “If they do that, I condemn it.” And he clarified that “Abraham Lincoln is my favorite political figure in the history of this country.” What Senator John Ashcroft did was state his absolute intolerance of this country. He was not satisfied with John Ashcroft’s statement even though it was based on his beliefs in freedom and liberty that these are God-given rights.” And in his responses to written questions, he said, “I reject racism in all its forms. I find racial discrimination abhorrent, and against everything that I believe in.” It is clear to me that John Ashcroft believes in equal treatment under the law for everyone. He believes in it, and he has committed to fight to make it a reality for all Americans.

Now, as to the magazine itself, Senator Ashcroft contritely admitted that he does not know very much about it. He confessed that he should have done more research about it before talking to them. And he said that he did not intend his telephone interview—or any other interview he has participated in during his career—as an automatic endorsement of the editorial positions of those publications. John Ashcroft went even further than that. He said, in his closing arguments, that Senator Ashcroft strongly condemnations of things they do not know anything about, so the condemnation is politically expedient.

John Ashcroft’s testimony on this issue demonstrates that he will be a fair and principled Attorney General. As he told the Judiciary Committee, “I believe racism is wrong. I repudiate it. I repudiate racist organizations. I’m not a member of any of them. I don’t subscribe to them. And I reject them. These are straightforward words from an honest man I look forward to hav- ing such a man running our Department of Justice.

The anti-Ashcroft groups also took advantage of a controversy concerning Bob Jones University. In 1999, a “guilt by association” attack on John Ashcroft. John Ashcroft’s visit to the school was not controversial when it occurred in May 1999. In fact, politi- cians of both parties had spoken there prior to Senator Ashcroft. Early in 2000, however, approximately eight months after John Ashcroft’s visit, Bob Jones University became a flash point during the primary election because opponents of then-Governor George W. Bush accused Bush of associating with an anti-Catholic statement that ap- peared on the University’s Internet site.

Following the flap over Bush’s visit, John Ashcroft said, “I didn’t really know they had these positions,” and “[Frankly] I reject the anti-Catholic position of Bob Jones University cat- egorically.” Despite having repudiated the offending statement, John Ashcroft faced a new round of criticism for his appearance after he was nominated to be Attorney General. The special inter- est groups aligned against him at- tempting to associate John Ashcroft with every form of bigotry and intoler- ance they could.

Any controversy over John Ashcroft’s speech at Bob Jones Univer- sity should have been put to rest by John Ashcroft’s testimony at his con- firmation hearings. That’s when we fi- nally got the chance to ask Senator Ashcroft what he thought. And Senator Ashcroft made it clear that he “reject[s] any racial intolerance or re- ligious intolerance that has been asso- ciated with[,] or is associated with[,]” Bob Jones University. He couldn’t have been more firm.

Senator Ashcroft went on to explain that “[he] want[s] to make it very clear that [he] reject[s] racial and reli- gious intolerance.” He said he does not endorse any bigoted views by virtue of “having made an appearance in any faith’s sanctuary.” He further ex- plained that he has visited churches which do not “allow women in certain roles,” and that he does not endorse that view, either.

Apparently, Ashcroft’s answer elimi- nated any doubt about his personal views. As Senator LEAHY told Senator Ashcroft during the hearing, “I made my position very clear on how I feel about you on any questions of racial or religious bias. I stated that neither I nor anybody on this com- mittee have that claim about you.” Even Catholic groups were satis- fied. A spokesperson for the Catholic League said, “In short, the controversy over Ashcroft is much ado about noth- ing as far as the Catholic League is concerned.”

Some outside groups had questioned the meaning of the speech that Senator Ashcroft gave during his visit to Bob Jones University ex- plained during the confirmation hear- ing that the phrase “We have no king but Jesus,” was a representation of what colonists were saying at the time of the American Revolution. He said that “the idea that the ultimate authority of the American system of government is not governmentally derived.” I don’t think anyone in the Senate would take issue with that. It is an understate- ment to say that this idea is well-docu- mented in the Founders’ writings.

Lacking any basis to criticize John Ashcroft’s May 1999 appearance, mem- bers of the Judiciary Committee went in search of controversy by asking Sen- ator Ashcroft if he would go to Bob Jones University again if invited as At- torney General. He said he would “speak at places where [he] believe[s] [he] can unite people and move them in the right direction.” In saying that, he contritely explained that his confirma- tion hearings — “those hearings” — “I was sensitive at a higher level now than [he] was before, that the attorney gen- eral in particular needs to be careful about what he or she does.” Senator Ashcroft was contrite. He said it would be “sensitive to accepting invita- tions so as to not allow a presump- tion to be made that I was endorsing things that would divide people instead of unite them.” This answer apparently did not satisfy some on the Committee who have since argued that he should have pledged never to return to the University.

But as Senator Ashcroft explained at his hearing, it is shortsighted to make a plea about what he or anyone else must do because you disagree with them. John Ashcroft pointed out that Bob Jones University has “abandoned the policy on interracial dating which was offensive” after that policy became a focus of attention last year. I think John Ashcroft was contrite about what he learned and correct not to rule out vis- iting places where he thinks his pres- ence could be a force for positive change.

There has been much talk during the nominations process and in the press about the “Ashcroft Standard.” This is a catchphrase invented by opponents of Senator Ashcroft who wish to create the impression that there is something unseemly about a senator vigorously exercising his constitutional duty to advise and give consent to executive branch nominees. But the Ashcroft Standard is strawman — created only so that policy preferences of the President. Indeed, this is a def- erence to the prerogatives of the President. This is not a sinister standard, but rather a mostly ordinary one. The advice and consent role of the Senate must be exercised with an eye to the moral character of the nominee and his suitability for the office to which he is nominated. But it is a role that must be exercised in a nat- ural deference to the prerogatives of the President. Indeed, this is a def- erence that has not been shown to Patient Bush during Senator Ashcroft’s four days of hearings fol- lowed by more than 350 written ques- tions.

The crux of the Senate’s confermation role is to test and to quibble with the policy preferences of the President’s nominees, but rather that the character and moral fitness of the nominee. Indeed, I ask myself when presented with a nominee whether this person will faithfully execute the office to which they have been appointed, up- holding the laws in the states in the given position. I believe that Senator Ashcroft has applied similar criterion when evaluating nominees. This is not a sinister standard, but rather a mostly ordinary one.
again that he was willing to uphold law with which he disagreed. John Ashcroft testified, “I understand that being attorney general means enforcing the laws as they are written, not enforcing my own personal preference; it means advancing the national interest, not advancing individual interest.”

For instance, in 1979 John Ashcroft issued an attorney general’s opinion stating that under the state constitution and the law of Missouri, a local school board of education had no legal authority to permit religious literature distribution to the student body on school grounds. In another situation, against the demands of pro-life advocates, then-attorney general Ashcroft directed the State of Missouri to maintain the confidentiality of abortion records because a fair reading of the law required it.

Senator Ashcroft has not only testified that he will follow laws with which he disagrees, he has repeatedly shown that he has exhibited probity in office as attorney general, governor and senator. It is hard to imagine that he will not execute the office of United States Attorney General with equal integrity and commitment to the law. I am certain that Senator Ashcroft passes the much maligned Ashcroft Standard.

So what is the Ashcroft Standard anyway? I admit that I am not quite sure. Is it a careful review of the nominee’s written record? A judgment about how the nominee will enforce the law? A healthy dose of deference to the executive prerogative? An appreciation for diversity? These are the standards that I saw applied by Senator Ashcroft. The opponents of Senator Ashcroft have placed considerable emphasis on several specific nominations which I will discuss in turn.

John Ashcroft’s opponents have mischaracterized his actions with respect to sexual orientation. In one situation of first-degree murder for killing three officers and the wife of the sheriff, Johnson was sentenced to death on all counts. On appeal, the Missouri Supreme Court upheld the decision, but Judge White dissented arguing for a new trial based on ineffective assistance of counsel. Judge White thought that Johnson deserved further opportunity to present a defense based on post-traumatic stress disorder. But the majority showed that there was no credible evidence that Johnson suffered from this disorder. Rather, it was clear that defense counsel had fabricated a story that was quickly disproved at trial. For instance, defense counsel stated that Johnson had placed a perimeter of cans and strings and had deflated the tires of his car. At trial, testimony revealed that police officers had taken these actions, not the defendant.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

S793

John Ashcroft did not block a Senate vote on Mr. Hormel’s nomination. In fact, Senator Ashcroft did not do anything to keep James Hormel’s nomination from progressing. It was Senator Hutchinson who put a hold on the vote. In a letter dated January 24, 2001, Senator Hutchinson told Ashcroft that “I feel it is important to set the record straight that you were in no way involved in the effort to delay Mr. Hormel’s consideration by the full Senate.”

So let’s look beyond the smokescreen of unsupported innuendo to examine what really happened. John Ashcroft. During the confirmation hearings, Senator Leahy asked John Ashcroft directly about his motives with respect to the James Hormel nomination. Senator Leahy asked, “Did you block his nomination from coming to a vote before you and Senator Ashcroft said, “I did not.” He could not have been more clear. And when a man of John Ashcroft’s integrity makes such a clear statement, we can take him at his word.

Of course, opponents of John Ashcroft do not want to take him as his word. Some outside special interest groups are trying to use his Hormel nomination vote to paint a false portrait of a man who acts in a biased way against homosexuals. But there is absolutely no evidence in the record to support that accusation. Senator Ashcroft made it very clear, both during his hearing and in his responses to numerous written questions, that “sexuality is not a factor to be taken into account in any of the jobs, in any of the offices I’ve held.”

In an effort to cloud this crystal-clear statement, the forces opposing Ashcroft presented to the media—not to the Judiciary Committee—a man named Paul Offner, who claimed that John Ashcroft asked him about sexual orientation 16 years ago in an interview. Mr. Offner’s accusations have not been corroborated by any witnesses present during that interview, both of whom have said that John Ashcroft never asked Mr. Offner—or any of the many other people he interviewed for jobs—about sexual preference. Carl Koupal, who sat in on numerous interviews with John Ashcroft as head of Ashcroft’s gubernatorial transition team, said, “I can say John Ashcroft did not ask that question of him or any other candidate we spoke to.” Another Ashcroft aide, Duncan McInnes, said, “It’s inconceivable to me, and I’m certain I would remember if it had been asked. I’ve never heard him ask about that, and I’ve sat through dozens and dozens of interviews with him.” This evidence should lay to rest any questions about John Ashcroft’s past record of fairness with respect to sexual orientation.

In addition to that past record, we also have Senator Ashcroft’s clear pledge for the future. He told the Judiciary Committee in no uncertain terms that he “will enforce the law equally without regard to sexual orientation if appointed and confirmed as attorney general.” He also promised that sexual preference “will not be a consideration in hiring at the Department of Justice” if he is confirmed. And this statement reflects more than his promise to uphold current policy; it reflects John Ashcroft’s own judgment. He said, “Even if the executive order [barring the consideration of sexual orientation as relevant to hiring] would be repealed, I would still not consider sexual orientation in hiring at the Department of Justice because I don’t believe in discrimination.”

Now, that is a very strong statement, Mr. President. Especially because it comes from a person of unquestioned integrity.

These facts described above convince me completely that John Ashcroft will always act fairly in his law enforcement decisions and hiring decisions to people regardless of sexual orientation.

While reasonable minds can differ about how to vote on the matter, there were many legitimate reasons to vote against confirmation for Judge White. In fact, every Republican thought it was appropriate to do so. Several of my colleagues have argued that Senator Ashcroft distorted Judge White’s record and wrongly painted him as pro-criminal and anti-law enforcement, but many of us have reviewed Judge White’s record and were greatly troubled by his dissenting opinions in several death penalty cases. Judge White displayed a real inclination to overturn death sentences, even when they were called for by law.

For instance in the Johnson case, the defendant was convicted on four counts of first-degree murder for killing three officers and the wife of the sheriff. Johnson was sentenced to death on all counts. On appeal, the Missouri Supreme Court upheld the decision, but Judge White dissented arguing for a new trial based on ineffective assistance of counsel. Judge White thought that Johnson deserved further opportunity to present a defense based on post-traumatic stress disorder. But the majority showed that there was no credible evidence that Johnson suffered from this disorder. Rather, it was clear that defense counsel had fabricated a story that was quickly disproved at trial. For instance, defense counsel stated that Johnson had placed a perimeter of cans and strings and had deflated the tires of his car. At trial, testimony revealed that police officers had taken these actions, not the defendant.
Further, Congressman KENNETH HUHLHOF, the prosecutor in the Johnson case testified at Senator Ashcroft’s hearings that it was almost impossible to make out an argument for ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant hired counsel of his own choosing. He referred to our area in mid-Missouri what . . . I referred to as choosing. He picked from our area in

The defendant in Missouri v. Johnson, the defendant in Missouri v. Johns murdered several people and confessed to the killings. There was no doubt about the guilt in ei-other case, yet Judge White dissented and would have granted a new trial to both defendants.

Indeed, Senator BOXER pleaded during a debate about several judges including Ronnie White, “I beg of you, in the name of fairness and justice and all things that are good in our country, give people a chance. If you do not think they are good, if you have a probit with something they said or did, bring it down to the floor. We can debate it. But please do not hold up these nominees. It is wrong. You would not do it to a friend.” (Cong. Rec. S. 11871, Oct. 4, 1999). Other Senators have repeatedly suggested that the Senate has “subtle” means of holding up nominees. But at the same time senators are rebuked for placing holds on nominees. Thus, Senator Ashcroft was betwe a rock and a hard place as to how to raise his legitimate concerns about Judge White. Senator Ashcroft is a man of tremendous integrity, one of the most qualified nominees for Attorney General that we have ever seen. His opposition to Judge White was principled and in the main point of the Court’s fundamental holding that such race-conscious policies of questionable constitutionality. Opposition to Mr. Lee was not limited to Senator Ashcroft—nine Republicans on the Judiciary Committee opposed this nominee, including myself.

Mr. Lee’s misleading description can properly be assailed as a fundamental mischaracterization of the law. Senator Ashcroft has stated that he opposed Mr. Lee because of his record of advocacy and his mischaracterization of Supreme Court precedent. The failure to recognize the established legal standard established by the Su-

Another area in which Senator Ashcroft has been unfairly attacked is his ability to enforce the law in areas related to abortion. Many of those opposing Senator Ashcroft have taken great pains to state that they do not oppose him because of his ideology, but that they do so to say they cannot support him because of his positions on abortion issues. Isn’t that ideology?

Make no mistake about it, Senator Ashcroft has a consistent pro-life record. Contrary to what his opponents would have you believe, that is not extremist or “out of the mainstream.” Millions of Americans share the same view. In the end, what is important is Senator Ashcroft’s commitment to enforce the law as its been interpreted by the Supreme Court—and not the policy positions he advocated as a legislator.

While Senator Ashcroft’s critics have spared nothing in their attempts to distort his record and create fear. Senator Ashcroft’s record over 25 years as a public servant, and his testimony before the Judiciary Committee during his confirmation hearing, demonstrate his lifelong commitment to the rule of law and his respect for the uniquely different role of a lawyer and a law enforcer. Senator Ashcroft has proven that he can objectively interpret and enforce the law even where the law may diverge from his personal views on policy. His record and character demonstrate that he can be, as he has pledged, “law oriented and not results oriented.”

Contrary to the fear-mongering of his critics, Senator Ashcroft will enforce the law protecting a woman’s right to an abortion. He was very straightforward in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee when he stated that, in his view, Roe v. Wade is settled law. As Attorney General, he stated that Roe “have been multiple, they have been recent and they have been emphatic.” He said he would enforce the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court. When asked whether he would seek to change the Supreme Court’s interpretation of the Constitution, Senator Ashcroft stated that “it is not the agenda of the President-elect to seek an opportunity to overturn Roe. And as his Attorney General, I don’t think it could be my agenda to seek an opportunity to overturn Roe.” He also stated that as Attorney General, he wouldn’t be his job to “try and alter the position of the administration.”

Senator Ashcroft clearly recognized the importance of not devaluing “the currency” of the Solicitor General’s Office by taking matters to the Supreme Court on a basis the Court has already decided. He has pledged, “law oriented and not results oriented.”

I was quite surprised to hear Senator Ashcroft’s opponents criticize his work on behalf of faith-based organizations that everyone recognizes as remarkable good works in every community across this nation. Senator Ashcroft has participated in and encouraged these programs at both a personal and policy level. I think we should be proud of Senator Ashcroft’s efforts to assist the disadvantaged. Senator Ashcroft was the author of the charitable choice provision in the landmark Welfare Reform Act of 1996. That provision encourages faith-based organizations to participate in the welfare reform effort on the same basis as secular organizations. As a result, faith-based groups can now, for example, conduct drug-treatment and job placement programs for the poor. These programs and similar faith-based programs have proved remarkably successful. As the noted civil rights activist Robert Woodson testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator Ashcroft’s charitable choice legislation gives faith-based organizations the opportunity to help blacks solve the real problems in their own communities than anything else government has done.”

Some critics claim that Senator Ashcroft’s charitable choice provision violates the separation of church and state embodied in the First Amendment. These criticisms, however, are misplaced. The charitable choice law states that no federal funds “shall be expended for sectarian instruction, or proselytization.” Moreover, the charitable choice law relies on Supreme Court precedents to clarify what is constitutionally permissible when state and local governments cooperate with religious and charitable organizations. The charitable choice law also allows beneficiaries who object to the religious character of the organization to receive assistance from an alternative provider.

During last year’s Presidential campaign of 2000, both President George W. Bush and Vice President Al Gore supported the charitable choice law as a means to empower faith-based charities. As President Bush recently said: "A compassionate society is one which recognizes the great power of faith. We in government must not fear faith-based programs, we must welcome faith into the public sphere."

Thanks in large part to Senator Ashcroft’s leadership, President Bush will be able to expand the role of faith-based charities in fighting poverty, addiction and other social ills. Based on the model of the faith-based choice law, President Bush created an Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives in the White House last week. This office will be led by the prominent University of Pennsylvania professor John DiIulio. In short, the Department of Justice is perhaps the most important position in the President’s cabinet. The Department of Justice has a long and storied history. It represents all Americans in the pursuit of justice. As Attorney General, the Department of Justice demands an Attorney General with great ability, integrity, and judgment. John Ashcroft has all these qualities.

Senator Ashcroft’s abilities are demonstrated by the fact he was elected to statewide office five times in Missouri, a classic swing state in America’s political landscape. As Attorney General and Governor of Missouri, John Ashcroft served with distinction and fortitude to enforce the principles and devotion to the rule of law. He continued that proud service representing Missouri in the United States Senate. His leadership and integrity has been recognized by political parties throughout his career. He was elected President of the National Association of Attorneys General by his fellow state attorneys general. As Governor of Missouri, John Ashcroft was elected Chairman of the National Governors Association by his fellow governors. Each time John Ashcroft was elected to these prestigious positions, the majority of state attorneys general and governors were Democrats. The fact that he was chosen to lead these important organizations while in the minority party is a testament to his integrity and ability. Mr. President, John Ashcroft is the most qualified nominee for Attorney General in history. We are fortunate to have him as a nominee. I look forward to his stewardship of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, much of the debate over the nomination of John Ashcroft has focused only on one important issue, and that is not only important issues central to the core mission of the Department of Justice. I believe the Senate would be well-served to consider the Ashcroft nomination in light of all of the important duties of the Attorney General. When this debate is placed in the proper perspective, it becomes even more obvious how qualified Senator Ashcroft is to be the next Attorney General of the United States.

The Department of Justice was established by Congress in 1870. It is the largest law firm in the United States with 123,000 employees and an annual budget of approximately $2 billion. The Office of the Attorney General is the chief law enforcement officer, and managing the Criminal Division is the most important aspect of the Attorney General’s duties. The Criminal Division oversees thousands of federal agents and is responsible for investigating and prosecuting drug dealers, illegal gun traffickers, bank robbers, child pornographers, computer hackers, and terrorists. The Criminal Division has a visible and tangible effect on the lives of all Americans.

I have no doubt that, given his vast experience as a public servant, Senator Ashcroft understands and appreciates the mission of the Criminal Division. Throughout his long tenure as Missouri Attorney General, Missouri Governor, and United States Senator, Senator Ashcroft has been a strong advocate of tough and effective criminal law enforcement.

But the greatest threat facing our nation today is the scourge of illegal drugs. For years, Senator Ashcroft has been a leader in the fight against illegal drugs. In 1996, Senator Ashcroft helped me enact the Comprehensive Methamphetamine Control Act, which increased penalties for the manufacture and trafficking of methamphetamine. Senator Ashcroft also helped enact federal laws that increased mandatory minimum sentences for methamphetamine offenses and authorized courts to order persons convicted of methamphetamine offenses to pay for the costs of laboratory cleanup. Last year, Senator Ashcroft authored legislation to make it a federal crime for those convicted of methamphetamine offenses to possess a firearm. In addition, as Missouri Attorney General, Senator Ashcroft increased funding for anti-drug programs by nearly 50%, the vast majority of which was for education, prevention and treatment. During his confirmation hearing, Senator Ashcroft also testified that prosecuting gun crimes will be a top priority of the Ashcroft Justice Department. Unfortunately, gun prosecutions have not always been a priority for the Department of Justice. For example, in 1992 and 1998, prosecutions of defendants who use a firearm in the commission of a felony dropped nearly 50 percent, from 7,045 to approximately 3,800. In the Senate, John Ashcroft was one of the leaders in fighting gun crimes. To reverse the decline in gun prosecutions by the Justice Department, Senator Ashcroft sponsored legislation to authorize $50 million to hire additional federal prosecutors and agents to increase the federal prosecution of criminals who use guns.

In addition, Senator Ashcroft authored legislation to prohibit juveniles from possessing assault weapons and high-capacity ammunition clips. The Senate overwhelmingly passed the Ashcroft juvenile assault weapons ban in May of 1999.

Senator Ashcroft voted for legislation that prohibits any person convicted of even misdemeanor acts of domestic violence from possessing a firearm, and he voted for legislation to extend the Brady Act to prohibit persons who commit violent crimes as juveniles from possessing firearms. In order to close the so-called “gun show loophole,” Senator Ashcroft voted in 1998 to reverse the Ashcroft decision, which I authored, to require mandatory instant background checks for all firearm purchases at gun shows.

In order to maintain tough federal penalties, Senator Ashcroft sponsored legislation to require a five-year mandatory minimum prison sentence for federal gun crimes and for legislation to encourage schools to expel students who bring guns to school. Senator Ashcroft voted for the “Gun-Free Schools Zone Act” that prohibits the possession of firearms in a school zone, and he voted for legislation to require gun dealers to offer child safety locks and other gun safety devices for sale. I have no doubt that with John Ashcroft as Attorney General, the Justice Department will target and prosecute gun crimes with unprecedented zeal.

To his credit, Senator Ashcroft undertook the vigorous pursuit of criminal law enforcement takes place at the state and local level. Given his tenure as Missouri Attorney General and Governor, Senator Ashcroft appreciates the important role that the federal government can play in supporting local and state enforcement efforts by providing resources and training. He also understands that the Justice Department should provide such support without intruding into traditional areas of state sovereignty.

In the Senate, Senator Ashcroft steadfastly supported state and local law enforcement. He won enactment of a bill that extends higher education financial assistance to spouses and dependent children of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty. Along with Senator Inhofe, Senator Ashcroft cosponsored legislation to reauthorize the COPS program.

In addition, Senator Ashcroft cosponsored the “Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 1998.” This act allocated federal funds for local law enforcement to update and computerize criminal records, automated fingerprint systems, and DNA identification operations. John Ashcroft also cosponsored the “21st Century Justice Act,” which included Violent Offender Incarceration and Truth-in-Sentencing Incentive Grants. These grants have provided federal resources to States to build prisons to incarcerate violent and repeat offenders. Given his record, it is no surprise that law enforcement groups such as the Fraternal Order of Police, the National Sheriff’s Association, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National District Attorneys Association, and the National Association of Police Organizations are united in their support for Senator Ashcroft’s nomination.

The Civil Division represents the United States government, including executive departments and agencies, in civil cases. In the past, the Civil Division has defended the constitutionality of federal statutes, regulations, and executive orders. The Civil Division also litigates complex commercial cases. This litigation is especially important for property rights because the Civil Division represents the federal government against claims that private property was taken for public use without just compensation. In addition, the Civil Division represents the federal government in consumer litigation under various consumer protection and public health statutes.

Senator Ashcroft’s experience as the Attorney General of Missouri prepared him well to oversee the Civil Division. John Ashcroft established the Consumer Affairs Division in the Missouri Attorney General’s office. He brought many consumer protection actions, including odometer tampering cases and environmental pyramid schemes. In Illinois, I was pleased to see Attorney General Ashcroft file a brief in the United States Supreme Court supporting the right of state attorneys general to conduct antitrust investigations. In the Senate, John Ashcroft helped enact legislation to combat telemarketing scams against senior citizens.

Created in 1969, the Environment and Natural Resources Division is the Nation’s chief environmental lawyer. It is responsible for litigating cases ranging from the protection of endangered species to the cleanup of hazardous waste sites. In addition to prosecuting environmental crimes, the Environment and Natural Resources Division enforces the environmental laws implemented in a fair and consistent manner.

As Missouri Attorney General, John Ashcroft aggressively enforced state’s environmental protection laws. He also brought a few federal, anti-environmental laws. For example, in the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Development Commission, Attorney General Ashcroft filed a brief supporting a California law that conditioned the construction of nuclear power plants on findings that adequate storage and disposal facilities are available.

As Missouri Attorney General, John Ashcroft issued numerous legal opinions that furthered the enforcement of environmental laws. I would like todevelop several of those informal opinions. In Attorney General Opinion No. 123–81, Attorney General Ashcroft issued an opinion that underground injection... wells constitute pollution of the waters of the state and are subject to regulation by the Missouri Department of Natural Resources under the state’s Clean Water Act. Attorney General Ashcroft also opined that it would be unfair to allow a mine to operate if the state had the authority to require that the mine was un-reclaimed. In reaching this opinion, Attorney General Ashcroft determined that the operator of the mine must have a permit continuously from the time mining operations begin until reclamation of the site is complete. Attorney General Ashcroft concluded that the continuous permit requirement facilitated Missouri’s intention “to protect and promote the health, safety and general welfare of the people of this state, and to prevent unreasonable or undue interference with the natural resources of the state environmental harm.”

In Attorney General Opinion No. 189, Attorney General Ashcroft issued an opinion that operators of surface mines must obtain a permit for each drill well unless a permit had been obtained from the Clean Water Commission. In Attorney General Opinion No. 67, Attorney General Ashcroft issued an opinion that operators of surface mines must obtain a permit for each drill well unless a permit had been obtained from the Clean Water Commission. Attorney General Ashcroft issued an opinion that operators of surface mines must obtain a permit for each drill well unless a permit had been obtained from the Clean Water Commission. Attorney General Ashcroft concluded that the continuous permit requirement facilitated Missouri’s intention “to protect and promote the health, safety and general welfare of the people of this state, and to prevent unreasonable or undue interference with the natural resources of the state environmental harm.”

In Attorney General Opinion No. 189, Attorney General Ashcroft gave credence to the arguments that “recycling of solid wastes results in fewer health hazards and pollution problems than does disposal of the same types of wastes in landfills” and that “public welfare is better served by burning solid wastes for generation of electricity, thus conserving scarce natural resources.” To those who have irresponsibly charged that Senator Ashcroft will not enforce our environmental laws, I say this: Look at his record.

In conclusion, there are other offices in the Department of Justice that are also very important. In the interest of time, however, I have focused on a select few. My point today is a simple one when this nomination is considered in light of the mission of the Department of Justice, it becomes apparent how well-qualified John Ashcroft is to be Attorney General. I look forward to his stewardship of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, I rise to respond to mischaracterizations about John Ashcroft’s role in the James Hormel nomination, and about John Ashcroft’s public record of fairness with respect to employment of people.

Let me say at the outset that I supported James Hormel’s nomination as Ambassador to Luxembourg. I thought he was qualified for that post. At the same time, however, I respected the fact that others in this body, including Senator Ashcroft, did not share my opinion. I cannot conclude that some people were against Senator Ashcroft because Senator Ashcroft and I disagreed, that Senator Ashcroft’s views, which were based on the totality of the record, were not valid. I have been in public service long enough to understand that thoughtful people can have honest differences of opinion on such matters without holding unsupported or fundamentally biased points of view.

Now, there has been a great deal of confusion about Senator John Ashcroft’s role in the Hormel nomination. Outside special interest groups—which are trying to derail Senator Ashcroft’s nomination—have accused him of singled手法 blocking mine of stopping James Hormel’s nomination simply because of Hormel’s sexual orientation. These charges are false. Although, as John Ashcroft told the Judiciary Committee, he voted against the nomination when it came to a vote in the Foreign Relations Committee, he did nothing to stop that nomination. John Ashcroft did not block a Senate vote on Mr. Hormel’s nomination, and he did not vote against that nomination on the floor because it never came to a roll call vote.

So let’s look beyond the smokescreen of unsupported innuendo to examine what we really know about John Ashcroft. During the confirmation hearings, Senator LEAHY and John Ashcroft expressed his motives with respect to the James Hormel nomination. Senator LEAHY asked, “Did you block his nomination from coming to a vote because he is gay?” And Senator Ashcroft said, “I did not.” He expressed his belief that Mr. Hormel could not have been more clear. And when a man of John Ashcroft’s integrity makes such a clear statement, we should take him at his word. Still, however, several Senators have repeated the unsupported allegation that Ashcroft’s sole reason for voting against Hormel is that Hormel is gay. Some opponents of John Ashcroft are taking the position of using his Hormel nomination vote to paint a false portrait of a man who acts in a biased way towards homosexuals. But there is absolutely no evidence in the record to support that accusation. Senator Ashcroft made it very clear, both during his hearing and in his responses to numerous written questions, that “sexual orientation has never been something that I’ve used in hiring in any of the jobs, in any of the offices I’ve held.”

In an effort to cloud this crystal-clear statement, the forces opposing John Ashcroft’s nomination tried to paint a false portrait of sexual orientation as relevant to hiring decisions. And there is absolutely no evidence in the record to support that accusation. Senator Ashcroft asked him about sexual orientation 16 years ago in an interview. Mr. Offner’s accusations have been entirely rebutted not only by Senator Ashcroft but also by two eye-witnesses present during that interview, both of whom have said that John Ashcroft never asked Mr. Offner—or any of the many other people he interviewed for jobs—about sexual preference. Carl Koupal, who sat in on numerous interviews with John Ashcroft as head of Ashcroft’s gubernatorial transition team, said, “I can say John Ashcroft did not ask that question of him or any other candidate we spoke to.” Another Ashcroft aide, Duncan Kincheloe, said, “It’s inconceivable to me, and I’m certain I would remember if it had been asked. I’ve never heard him ask about that, and I’ve sat through a thousand interviews with him.” This evidence should lay to rest questions related to the uncorroborated charges of Mr. Offner.

At least one Senator, however, continues to ignore the facts and draw out the innuendo. That Senator is Mr. Offner. Ashcroft’s allegations—even if untrue—would not have had any resonance if it were not for a history of unfairness. But that Senator has presented absolutely not evidence of any such history. Not a single person has come forward with a credible story of unfairness in John Ashcroft’s 30-year public life, during which he conducted hundreds if not thousands of interviews and meetings, and made many hiring and firing decisions. Given all the publicity surrounding the list of the league of special interest powerful lobbyists who are working hard to find just one witness against John Ashcroft, the absence of such a witness speaks loudly and clearly.

In addition to his 30-year record of fairness, we also have Senator Ashcroft’s clear pledge for the future. He told the Judiciary Committee in no uncertain terms that he “will enforce the law equally without regard to sexual orientation if appointed and confirmed as attorney general.” He also promised that sexual preference “will not be a consideration in hiring at the Department of Justice” if he is confirmed. And this statement reflects more than his promise to uphold current policy: it reflects John Ashcroft’s own judgment. He said, “even if the executive order [barring the consideration of sexual orientation as relevant to hiring] would be repealed, I would consider sexual orientation in hiring at the Department of Justice because I don’t believe it relevant to the responsibilities.” Now, that is a very strong statement, Mr. President. Especially because it comes from a person of unquestioned integrity.

The facts that I have just described convince me completely that John Ashcroft, once confirmed, will always act fairly in his law enforcement decisions and hiring decisions to people regardles of their sexual orientation. Senator Ashcroft never asked Mr. Offner—or any of the many other people he interviewed for jobs—about sexual preference.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print an op-ed from the Wall Street Journal from today.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 1, 2001]

THE HORMEL DEMOCRATS

With Bill Clinton having split for Chappaqua with the Spielberg china, Demo- crats have a chance to present a new image to the public. Yet by opposing John Ashcroft for Attorney General, Senate Democrats seem intent on reminding Middle America why it voted against A.

Some of our readers may already have seen the nearby map of America breaking down the vote in the last election. Mr. Gore won the two left coasts, the latte towns and tonier suburbs, and remnants of the progres- sive upper Midwest. President Bush won every- thing that reflects a country divid- ed by culture, with the traditionalist mid- dle rejecting the anything-goes mores of the Clinton years.

Well, we're not going to argue again, with the same cul- turally liberal interests groups who ordered around Mr. Gore now making the Ashcroft vote for the Senate Democrats. NARAL, NOW, People for the American Way and the rest know they can't defeat him. But they're twisting arms behind the scenes to get their point across, as possible, as a way to show their muscle and to warn Mr. Bush not to name any conservatives to the Supreme Court.

The problem for many Democrats, how- ever, is that voters may notice the company they're keeping. Barbara Boxer, the super- liberal from California, was the first Senate Democrat to declare against Mr. Ashcroft. Ted Kennedy followed close behind, this week joined by Pat Leahy from the Swedish Republic of Vermont and the noted moderate from the great state of New York, Hillary Rodham Clinton. This may all be thrilling news in Hollywood and Manhattan. But we wonder if the Democrats will wise up, after being shown the folly of Democratic dog- ishness going to look in, say, Georgia, Montana or South Dakota.

Especially because this time the liberal Borking strategy has been a bust. First the interest groups played the race card, but not even rejected judicial nominee Ronnie White would say that Mr. Ashcroft was racially motivated. The debate over Judge White had been about crime, specifically the death penal- ty, and Democrats sure didn't want to be soft on that opposition to the death penalty or abortion card, but Mr. Ashcroft defused that one by pledging to enforce even laws he dislikes.

The latest attack line has been to suggest that Mr. Ashcroft is a relentless gay basher. Democrats went to the unusual lengths of calling in the recently returned U.S. ambas- sador to Luxembourg, James Hormel, to al- leged that in opposing his nomination to be ambassador Mr. Ashcroft had shown himself to be intolerant. In fact, fellow Republican Tim Hutchinson admitted that he (and not Mr. Ashcroft) was the Senator who had placed a hold on Mr. Hormel, who also helped to found the Human Rights Campaign, the gay lobby that has tried to stigmatize traditional religion.

The news is that so many Senators are nonetheless lining up to be Hormel Demo- crats. It's no accident that both North Da- kota Democrats, the usually hyper-partisan Byron Dorgan and Kent Conrad, came out early for Mr. Ashcroft. George Bush won their state by two-to-one. But all of the po- tential Democratic presidential candidates seem to have come around. Hillary Rod- ham of course, and even Indiana's Evan Bayh. Joe Lieberman is still pondering from Mt. Olympus. Mr. Lieberman might reflect that fol- lowing the liberal line didn't help him or his running mate last year. Democrats lost the election. And they lost it, as much because Middle America didn't share their cultural values. Lining up against John Ashcroft won't help win them back.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I want to respond to an unfair and untrue state- ment made on the floor of the Senate about John Ashcroft's work to combat the practice of racial profiling.

Senator Ashcroft has a good record on the issue of racial profiling. It was Senator Ashcroft's decision to hold the first-ever congressional hearing on the topic, a decision that Senator FEINGOLD, who is an expert on the issue in his own right, appropriately acknowl- edged during the confirmation hear- ings. Senator FEINGOLD reported that Senator Ashcroft made clear that he did not want to make it very easy for hate groups to downgrade the importance of that hearing have failed to understand that Senator Ashcroft's motives are genuine. Senator Ashcroft opposes injustice of all kinds. As he ex- plained in his opening statement to the Judiciary Committee, "[f]rom racial profiling to news of unwarranted strip searches, the list of injustice in America today is still long. Injustice in America against any individual must not stand; this is the special charge of the U.S. Department of Justice."

Ashcroft made clear that his efforts to combat racial profiling will continue if he is confirmed as Attorney General. In response to Senator FEINGOLD's direct question "will you make racial profiling a priority of yours?", John Ashcroft pledged, "I will make racial profiling a priority of mine." He could not have been more clear. And he was equally lucid when describing the basis for his views. He said, "I think racial profiling is wrong. I think it's unconstitutional and I think it violates the 14th Amendment." These are powerful words when spoken by a man such as John Ashcroft who is com- mitted to enforcing the rule of law. Senator Ashcroft's views on racial profiling are part of his larger concep- tion of the role of the Department of Justice on racial issues. Senator Ashcroft has pledged that, if con- firmed, "I would do my best never to allow a person to suffer solely on the basis of a person's race." He went on to say that he would ask the fed- eral government be leading when it comes to respecting the rights of indi- viduals and the Constitution. I will do everything I can to make sure that we lead properly in that respect. These are firm assurances from a man of integ- rity.

As you can see, Mr. President, it is not only unfair but also inaccurate to portray Senator Ashcroft as antithetical to the cause of racial profiling. I hope my comments help to set the record straight.

Mr. President, I would like to correct some misstatements that were made on the floor of the Senate concerning John Ashcroft's speech at Bob Jones University. There has been a real at- tempt here to wage a "guilt by associa- tion" attack on Senator Ashcroft, and I want to set the record straight.

John Ashcroft's visit to the school was not controversial when it occurred in May 1999. But even in 2000—approxi- mately eight months after John Ashcroft's visit—Bob Jones University became a flash point during the pri- mary election because opponents of the governor George W. Bush accused Governor Bush of associating with an anti-Catholic statement that appeared on the University's Internet site.

Following the flap over Bush's visit, John Ashcroft said, "I didn't really know they had these positions," and "[frankly, I reject the anti-Catholic position of Bob Jones University categorically]."

Despite having repudiated the offend- ing statement, John Ashcroft faced a number of criticisms for his appear- ance after he was nominated to be At- torney General. The special interest groups aligned against him attempted to associate John Ashcroft with every form of bigotry and intolerance they could. But any controversy over John Ashcroft's speech at Bob Jones Univer- sity should have been put to rest by John Ashcroft's testimony at this con- firmation hearings. That's when we fi- nally got the chance to ask Senator Ashcroft what he thought. And Senator Ashcroft made it clear that he "reject[s] any racial intolerance or re- ligious intolerance that has been asso- ciated with[,] or is associated with[,]" Bob Jones University.

Senator Ashcroft went on to explain that "[he] want[s] to make it very clear that [he] reject[s] racial and reli- gious intolerance." He said he does not endorse any bigoted views by virtue of the fact that he has visited churches which do not "allow women in certain roles," and that he does not endorse that view either.

Accordingly, Ashcroft's answer elimi- nated any doubt about his personal views. As Senator LEAHY told Senator Ashcroft during the hearing, "I made my position very clear yesterday on how I feel about you on any questions of racial or religious bias. I stated that not having the appearance on this com- mittee would make that claim about you." Even Catholic groups were satis- fied. A spokesperson for the Catholic League said, “In short, the controversy over Ashcroft is much ado about nothing as far as the Catholic League is concerned.”

Some outside groups had questioned the meaning of the speech that Senator Ashcroft made during his visit to Bob Jones University. Senator Ashcroft explained during the confirmation hearing that “the phrase, ‘We have no king but Jesus,’ was a representation of what colonists were saying at the time of the American Revolution.” He said that the point of his speech was “the idea that the ultimate authority of the ultimate idea of freedom in America is not governmentally derived.” I don’t think anyone in the Senate would take issue with that. It is an understatement to say that this idea is well-documented in the Founders’ writings.

Some went in search of controversy by asking Senator Ashcroft if he would go to Bob Jones University again if invited as Attorney General. He said he wouldn’t go to places where [he] believes[s] [he] can unite people and move them in the right direction.” In saying that, he contritely explained that his confirmation hearings—and the prelude to those hearings—taught him to be “sensitive at a higher level now than [he] was before, that the attorney general in particular needs to be careful about what he or she does.” Senator Ashcroft said that, if confirmed, “he would be sensitive to accepting cases so as not to allow a presumption to be made that I was endorsing things that would divide people instead of unite them.” This answer apparently did not satisfy some of the committee who have since argued that he should have pledged never to return to the University.

But as Senator Ashcroft explained at his hearing, it is shortsighted to make a pledge not to go somewhere just because you disagree with them. John Ashcroft pointed out that the Bob Jones University has “abandoned the policy on interracial dating which was offensive” after that policy became a focus of attention last year. I think John Ashcroft was contrite about what had been in conflict, the law recognizes the existence of contraindications to the use of contraceptives. The trial court, alleging that the boycott vio- lated the antitrust laws. As Senator Ashcroft testified during his confirmation hearing, it was his duty to act on behalf of Missouri and its citizens.

While some have charged this was an unanswered question in the law and economic one. The boycott hurt Missouri and, in his view, was illegal, and it was his duty to act on behalf of Missouri and its citizens.

The nurses were concerned about the Nursing Practice Act of 1975, and whether the term “professional nursing” expanded the scope of authorized nursing practices. The Board of Healing Arts threatened to order the nurses to stop cause why they should not be found guilty of the unauthorized practice of medicine, and physicians guilty of “aiding and abetting.” The Board of Healing won this argument at trial. The Missouri Supreme Court reversed the trial court and determined that the services complained of by the Board of Registration for the Healing Arts did indeed fall within the legislative standard of “professional nursing” and there were permissible.

The nurses in question were performing services including breast and pelvic examinations, laboratory testing of PAP smears, gonorrhea cultures, and blood serology and providing information about contraceptives. The trial court, in ruling in favor of the Board, found, among other things, that the Board had directed examinations which the nurses performed to attempt to diagnose the existence or nonexistence of contraindications to the use of contraceptives “require an individual to draw upon education, judgment and skill based upon knowledge and application of principles in addition to and beyond biological, physical, social, and nursing sciences.”

Sernoff v. S.W. Ind. at 886.

It was not unreasonable for the Board to argue that services that were generally performed by physicians and required the “education, judgment and skill” beyond “nursing sciences.” In fact, a prominent physician testiﬁed as such. The Supreme Court, however, ruled in favor of the plaintiffs, based upon the legislative standard that was set at the time. The court relied on the nurses’ professional status to know what their limits were. The Board, in bringing the case originally, simply didn’t feel comfortable relying on the knowledge of an individual nurse as to what his or her limits were.

Any characterization of Senator Ashcroft’s actions as Missouri Attorney General as an effort to deny health services to rural or low income patients, is at war with the facts. He was the Attorney General, and he had an obligation to defend the constitutionality of the statute. That is what he did, and it was perfectly appropriate.

Finally, I would like to respond to some criticism leveled at Senator Ashcroft in the report of pro-life legislation while Governor of Missouri. Even ardent supporters of Roe v. Wade must admit that the decision is not the model of clarity. Moreover, it did not, contrary to what many special interest groups claim, authorize abortion on demand. The decision, while establishing the constitutional right to abortion, set up a scheme that, in the words of Justice White, left the Supreme Court to serve as the country’s “ex officio medical board with powers to approve or disapprove and operate medical practices and standards throughout the United States.” Planned Parenthood of Central Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 99 (1976). Thus, even after the Roe decision, there remained many unanswered questions about the contours of this new constitutional right. These questions included, for example, issues about parental consent for minors, minimal standards for abortion clinics, and whether public facilities or employers can be used to perform abortions. Many state legislatures—not just Missouri’s—sought to answer these questions left unanswered by Roe.

The statute passed by the Missouri legislature and signed by then-Governor Ashcroft in 1986 was one of these attempts to deﬁne the parameters of the right to an abortion. Many abortions-rights extremists forget that the Supreme Court, in its abortion cases, has consistently held that states have an interest in protecting the health and safety of citizens and in reducing the incidence of abortions. The 1986 Missouri statute sought to do just that, with 20 provisions covering various issues left unresolved by the Roe decision. The Supreme Court, in its Webster decision, agreed that many of these provisions did not infringe on a woman’s constitutional right to an abortion. See Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, et al., 492 U.S. 490, 522 (1989). Throughout this legislative and judicial process, the State of Missouri—not simply Governor John Ashcroft—followed established legal rules and procedures in their good faith effort to balance the right to an abortion with the state’s interest in protecting the health and safety of its citizens. While it may have asserted its rights to appeal, the State of Missouri and the Governor did respect the opinions and orders of the court and the rules governing litigation. The good faith use of the courts to decide legal issues is no basis on which to criticize Senator Ashcroft.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, is Senator LEAHY going to speak? Mr. LEAHY. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—ZOELLICK NOMINATION

Mr. LOTT. We have a couple of agreements we have worked out we want to get in place.

Mr. President, I ask consent that immediately following the reconvening of the Senate on Tuesday at 2:15 p.m. the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of Robert Zoellick to be the U.S. Trade Representative, and if not reported at that time, the nomination be discharged and the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration, and that there be up to 2 hours of debate, equally divided, between the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Finance Committee.

I further ask consent that at 4:15 on Tuesday the Senate proceed to vote on the confirmation, and following the confirmation, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified, and the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact there is no objection. I believe this nominee will be confirmed overwhelmingly, probably even unanimously. There is a feeling by Senators on both sides of the aisle that this trade issue is very important. This is an important position. A number of Senators did want to be able to have an opportunity to speak about our trade relations and our trade agreements around the world. That is why it was put into the motion as a compromise. I believe it will be done in regular order on Tuesday.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 235

Mr. LOTT. I understand S. 235 is at the desk, and I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 235) to provide for enhanced safety, public awareness and environmental protection in pipeline transportation, and for other purposes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I now ask for its second reading, and I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The bill will be read the second time on the next legislative day.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I should note that the purpose in taking this action now is to get this legislation ready for consideration next week. Senator Daschle and I are trying to get in a position to have the Zoellick nomination on Tuesday, the U.N. dues issue on Wednesday, and the pipeline safety legislation next week. These are all issues we are all very familiar with that have broad support. I believe we can do the three of them next week without any problem.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, FEBRURY 5, 2001, AND TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2001

Mr. LOTT. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 10 a.m. on Monday, February 5, for a pro forma session only. No business will be transacted during Monday’s session. The Senate would immediately adjourn until 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, February 6. I further ask consent that on Tuesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then proceed to a period of morning business until 12:30, to be divided in the following fashion: Senator Daschle or his designee controlling the time between 9:30 and 11 a.m.; Senator Hutchison of Texas or her designee controlling the time between 11 a.m. and 12:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. If I could ask for a modiﬁcation, that Senator Dorgan control the time from 10:30 to 11 o’clock a.m. on that date.

Mr. LOTT. I have no objection to that addition to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. I further ask consent that the Senate stand in recess between the hours of 12:30 and 2:15 to provide time for the weekly caucuses to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. LOTT. On Tuesday, following the weekly recess, at 2:15 we will proceed to the nomination of Robert Zoellick... to be USTR for up to 2 hours. Therefore, a rollcall vote will occur at 4:15 on Tuesday on that nomination, by a previous consent. On Wednesday, the Senate is expected to consider the U.N. dues bill. Therefore a vote or votes could conclude by Thursday, on Wednesday of next week relative to that legislation, and on Thursday with relation to the pipeline safety bill. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, while my friend from Mississippi is still here, I ask unanimous consent, it is only a matter of a few minutes, that I still have the full half hour that had been reserved under the previous order.

Mr. LOTT. Are you making a request or observation?

Mr. LEAHY. I make it as a request because the time that the distinguished leader took went into that time.

Mr. LOTT. I certainly would not object to the Senator making a request, but I wish to speak briefly myself. I believe I would be in control of the time after that.

Mr. LEAHY. In fact, I will add to that: In doing so, that it not impinge on the time reserved for the distinguished leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, as we get to the end of the debate today, I have to ask myself is it wise if we look at some of the facts of the debate and not just the rhetoric.

We debated this matter virtually nonstop from 10:30 yesterday morning until 8:10 yesterday evening. We did it without intervening business. I do not think we had as much as 5 minutes expended in quorum calls. For our side, this was certainly not a dilatory debate but a substantive one. It was not the politics of personal destruction, but the Senate exercising its constitutional responsibility to examine one of the most important nominations that this President or any President could send to the Senate.

Let’s go over the facts. The Senate received the President’s nomination on Monday afternoon of this week. The Judiciary Committee debated this nomination on Tuesday afternoon the following day, and voted on it that evening. We began the Senate debate yesterday morning, less than 48 hours after that. I do wish to speak briefly myself. I believe I would be in control of the time after that.

We are concluding it in less than 14 and one half hours of Senate debate. We are voting up or down on this nomination this afternoon. I mention this because I have heard those who point to the nomination of the last Attorney General, Janet Reno, as some sort of model of speedily confirmation. She was nominated after an earlier nomination had hearings and was withdrawn. Her nomination was not voted upon for a month after she was nominated. With that comparison, we are voting on John Ashcroft when his nomination has been before us for only less than three days. That was not a controversial nomination. Republicans, as well as Democrats, came to the floor to praise her record, but she was still not sworn in until mid-March.

A better comparison would be to find the last controversial nomination; that was of William Meese. He was first nominated in January 1984 by President Reagan. He was finally considered by the Republican-controlled Senate in February 1985, 13 months after being nominated. Five weeks before his confirmation, he had his nomination and his initial hearing.

The nomination underwent 7 days of hearings, involved nearly 50 witnesses, under a Republican-controlled Senate, when he was Republican nominee by a popular Republican President. He was reported by the Judiciary Committee, a Republican-controlled Judiciary Committee, by a 12-6 vote, not the lesser margin of 10-8 by which the Ashcroft nomination was reported.

Thus the Senate, the Republican majority leader, allowed 2 weeks between the committee vote and Senate consideration—2 weeks, not the 17 hours we had on the Ashcroft nomination. The Senate debated the Meese nomination over 4 days, on February 19, 20, 21, and 22. They did not have the time devoted to the Ashcroft nomination. Then, the Republican-controlled Senate voted 63-31 to confirm Attorney General Meese.

I believe those 31 negative votes were the most ever against an Attorney General. Even the very popular President Reagan was preparing to begin his second term, the nomination of his Attorney General resulted in 7 days of Senate hearings, 4 days of Senate debate, and 31 votes in opposition. I mention this because there was some suggestion that maybe some on this side held this up. This nomination was handled a lot more rapidly done than at the time of Attorney General Meese.

The Senate is soon going to vote on the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General. I think it is wise to say that all of us in this body would like to be able to vote in favor of the next Attorney General. Those of us who are going to vote no on this nomination take no pleasure in doing so. Frankly, I have heard many say—and I feel this myself—we wish the President had sent a different nomination for this critical job. We wish, if he wished to have our colleague, Senator Ashcroft, where he had in the past, he had nominated him for a different position. We wish the President had adhered to the standard he set forth in his own inaugural address and that he had sent us a nominee who would unite the country and have the utmost credibility with the disaffected, dispossessed, and disenfranchised.

We knew the nomination of Senator Ashcroft had become a “done deal” weeks ago. The Republican leadership reported that all 50 Republican Senators of this Chamber voted in favor of this nomination, and, of course, with the Vice President they would be able to win.

This decision was made before any hearing, before the nominee answered any question, written or oral, before any background check or review of his record was ever begun, let alone completed. That is why some members of the Senate in this Chamber, on the other side went so far as to argue that the Senate need not hear testimony from the public at all, and need not review the nominee’s required financial disclosures, papers required of every nominee.

Most Democratic Senators, I am happy to say, declined to prejudge the matter. As chairman during the 17 days of the Judiciary Committee hearing, I expedited a balanced hearing to review the nominee’s record and to hear people from Missouri and others, pro and con, on this important nomination. We had virtually an equal number for Senator Ashcroft as against him—I think wisely. I do wish to say that all Senators can be proud that our hearings focused on issues, not on the nominee’s personal life. We can also be proud of the tone set during this debate on the Senate floor.

There is one big exception. I take strong exception—in fact, the strongest terms I can think of in my 26 years in the Senate—to the characterization we have heard about the issue of religion and this nomination. The Senate was told that opponents of this nomination have implied that Christians have no place in public life.

If that charge was not on its face so absolutely preposterous in this body, it would have invited a balanced and honest discussion to set the record straight. It is such an untrue and inflammatory assertion.

Needless to say, if that was the debate, it would be fair to speculate that many, probably more, of President Bush’s nominees are Christians and confirmed by this body. All of his nominees are confirmed. I know of none planned, or who have been announced by the distinguished leader as requiring votes, who are going to be confirmed. If their religion has been mentioned at all, it has been mentioned to their credit.

Is it really necessary to point out that men and women of Christian faiths are plentiful in both parties in these very Halls of Congress? More to the point, there are good people, who are Christians, on both sides of the Ashcroft nomination, just as there are good people, who are not, on both sides of the Ashcroft nomination. In fact, the reason religion has come up during these confirmation proceedings is not because of John Ashcroft’s religious beliefs, but because of concern about the level of tolerance he may show towards those with different religious beliefs. That is why his visit to and acceptance of an honorary degree from, and comments made during the hearings about Bob Jones University, have been a legitimate concern to many.

is not about his own religious beliefs. It is about what it says about Senator Ashcroft's sensitivity and tolerance towards those whom that institution regards in such negative ways, and treats so differently. The policies of that institution have been to bar African Americans, to bar interracial dating, and to derogate Mormons and Catholics as belonging to cults.

That John Ashcroft does not seem to fully understand the concern that this causes to many Americans is itself troubling to me. We have heard from some the term they have seemed to coin: 'religious profiling.' I will say it once again as clearly as I can. No Senator on either side of the aisle during these proceedings has sought to apply any religious test to John Ashcroft. No Senator has sought to tar the nominee as a racist. Senator Ashcroft’s religious beliefs have not been a source of inquiry or concern for any member of the Judiciary Committee.

Notwithstanding, ironically enough, what Bob Jones University has said about Catholics and Mormons—with the two leaders of this committee being one a Catholic and the other a Mormon with Senator Harkin and I have said we have never once heard Senator Ashcroft take the position that Bob Jones University has towards us or anybody of our religions.

This confirmation debate has not been about religious profiling. If nothing, this is a nomination struggle about issue profiling, and those issues include the nominee's record on civil rights and women's rights, the rights of gay Americans, and voter registration. Those supporting this nomination argue that he should be confirmed because his religious devotion represents a special, unimpeachable level of integrity, and that his religion makes him more likely to abide by his oath of office. Yet, his religion is not a qualification nor disqualification for public office. I hold deep religious beliefs. But as I told someone as I left church this Sunday, this past Sunday: I would not expect anybody to vote either for or against me because of my religious beliefs.

I would expect them to vote for or against me because of my political beliefs. Indeed, article VI of the Constitution prohibits any religious test qualification for public office. I hope Senator Ashcroft’s supporters are not urging any form of such unconstitutional test.

The issue is his public record, not his religious faith. I and several others have said how much we admire his commitment to his family and his religion. I consider those two of the most admirable qualities in our former colleague. The issue, though, is how he has fulfilled his public duties.

Senator Byrd posed the question yesterday whether any man’s past can withstand scrutiny. Confirmation hearings should not be held to dissect a nominee’s personal life—and this one did not—but they are to examine his past record and actions, to hear from the nominee about how he views his prior positions and actions within the perspective and wisdom that time should bring.

What I observed of this nominee at his hearings can be summed up in two words: No regrets.

He had no regrets about the aggressive manner in which he litigated in opposition to desegregation in St. Louis, or about the missed opportunity to resolve that divisive matter, about his use or his involvement for political gain, or about the misleading testimony he initially gave the committee about whether the State of Missouri was a party to the litigation and had been found liable.

He had no regrets about vetoing two bills designed to ensure equal voting rights for African American voters in St. Louis. He had no regrets about appearing at Bob Jones University, and he even testified that he might return there after being confirmed as Attorney General of the United States.

He certainly passed up the opportunity, as I have suggested, now that he knows so much about Bob Jones University, to take the honorary degree, put it in an envelope, and send it back. He had no regrets about granting an interview to the Southern Partisan magazine and appearing to embrace its point of view.

One of the things that bothered me greatly is that he had no regrets about his treatment of Judge Ronnie White, Ambassador James Hormel, Bill Lann Lee, Judge Margaret Morrow, or any of the other Presidential nominees he opposed.

Each of us has a duty to determine how we exercise our constitutional duties. For me, I said at the outset of this debate, strangely enough—or perhaps not so strangely—the Constitution is silent on the standard we should use in deciding how to fulfill our advise and consent duty.

I have thought about this over the years, and I have come to the conclusion that it is testament to the wisdom of the framers because, in the end, those who elect us have the final say in whether they approve of how we conducted this and, if they approve, of how we exercised our constitutional responsibilities.

Some have argued that the issues that have arisen during this confirmation process have been generated out of thin air by advocacy groups or by Senators who oppose this nomination. In fact, these are the same issues upon which the voters of Missouri based their verdict on election day last November, an election Senator Ashcroft lost.

John Ashcroft’s actions toward Judge Ronnie White and his association with Southern Partisan magazine and Bob Jones University were hotly debated in Missouri. They were issues in his unsuccessful reelection campaign.

The Kansas City Star noted in November 1999:

A lot of Missourians are still struggling to understand why Sen. John Ashcroft took out Ronnie White.

Rallies for Judge White were held in downtown St. Louis. Local groups circulated petitions calling for Senator Ashcroft to “publicly retract” his comments in Southern Partisan. At least one Missouri municipality passed a resolution asking Senator Ashcroft to “publicly retract” his comments in Southern Partisan, and they criticized his actions with respect to Judge White.

Another Missouri city council passed a resolution asking Senator Ashcroft to apologize to Missouri residents for his comments in Southern Partisan.

Yesterday, an old friend, a Republican, contacted me to share a quote from Reinhold Niebuhr:

Man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible; but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary.

In this regard, I note that we heard often about John Ashcroft’s past election victories in Missouri. What has gone unmentioned is the fact that the voters of Missouri registered a negative judgment on the politics, policies, and practices of John Ashcroft just last November. Not surprisingly, they are the same issues that have arisen during his confirmation debate. We heard during our hearings how African American voters of Missouri had voted overwhelmingly against him.

John Ashcroft’s stubborn defense of his past record and the fact he has no regrets over incidents that concern many of his Missouri constituents and that now concern many Americans does not instill confidence. On the contrary, to many it is a troubling signal. He lacks the sensitivities and balance we need in the Attorney General. We need an Attorney General who has the trust and confidence of the American people and who is dedicated to protecting the rights of all of us.

Remember, the Attorney General is not the President’s lawyer. He has a White House counsel. The White House counsel is not required to come to the Senate for confirmation. The Attorney General is there for all of us—black, white, rich, poor, Democrat, Republican, no matter who we are.

The American people are entitled to an Attorney General who is more than just a friend to many of us in the Senate, as John Ashcroft is a friend to and who promises more than just the bare minimum, that he will enforce the law. All Americans, whether they are part of the 100 Members of a Senate club, no matter what they may be, all Americans who have served on 290 million other American who do not serve needed to someone who will uphold the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court, who will respect the Congress. and the courts, who will abide by decisions with which he disagrees, and enforce the law for all people regardless of politics. They are entitled to someone whose past record demonstrates that he or she knows how to exercise good judgment in wielding the enormous discretionary power of the Attorney General.

I said before that we cannot judge John Ashcroft's heart, nor should we be able to, but we can examine his record. And running through that record are disturbing, recurrent themes: disrespect for Supreme Court precedents with which he disagrees; grossly insensitive criticism of judges with whom he disagrees—the "ruffians in robes" comment—insensitivity and bad judgment on racial issues; and the use of distortions, secret holds, and ambushes to harm the careers of those whom he opposes or for political gain.

I engaged in a colloquy yesterday with the senior Senator from Virginia during the consideration process. Senator WARNER is a dear and valued friend. We have been friends for decades. He observed that he thought the hearings and consideration by the Senate will result in John Ashcroft being a strong, forceful, deeply committed public servant.

It is my fervent hope that John Ashcroft has come to understand the reasons that many of us are troubled by his record and troubled by the manner in which he responded to our concerns at the nomination hearing.

I hope Senator Ashcroft better appreciates the concerns of the significant number of Americans who oppose this nomination. Public opinion polls show there are as many people opposed to the nomination as support it. For those who doubt the promise of American justice—and, unfortunately, there are those in this country who do, for whatever reason—this nomination has not inspired confidence in the man nominated to head the U.S. Department of Justice.

If John Ashcroft is to be confirmed, then he is going to have a lot of work to do to prove that the President's choice was a wise one, and that he will be the people's lawyer and defender of their rights—all the people.

The country is sharply divided about this nomination, but so is the Senate. I wish the President had sent the Senate a nominee who would unite us and not one that did not happen. I hope the President knows—after this debate, and after this divisive election—the task of bringing the Nation together still lies ahead of us. I hope all of us will be able to help in that unifying.

I think nothing I will ever do in my life will mean as much to me as serving in the Senate. I have served with 280 or so Senators, who have all been people I have admired and respected. I hope that after this nomination, and after this battle—however the vote comes out—I expect I know how it will come out—then the Senate will work together, on both sides of the aisle, with the new President, and with all members of his Cabinet, and with the new Attorney General, to start healing these wounds, to not just talk about bringing us together, but to actually do it.

There are deep, deep concerns in the country about this nomination. I would suggest that every one of us—Republican and Democrat—have a long road ahead of us to bring those sides together, but on that long road we also have the responsibility to take that trip.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some materials that I believe will inform you of the consideration of this nomination: a letter from the National Sheriffs' Association; a letter from the Missouri Sheriffs' Association; a written statement of Sheriff Kenny Jones before the Committee on the Judiciary; and testimony of U.S. Representative KENNY HULSHOF before the U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL SHERIFFS' ASSOCIATION,
Hon. JOHN ASHCROFT,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ASHCROFT: I am writing to ask you to join the National Sheriffs' Association (NSA) in opposing the nomination of Mr. Ronnie White to the Federal Judiciary. NSA strongly urges the United States Senate to defeat this appointment.

As you know, Judge White is a controversial judge in Missouri while serving in the Missouri Supreme Court. He issued many opinions that are offensive to law enforcement. NSA strongly urges the United States Senate to defeat this nomination.

Additionally, Judge White wrote an outrageous dissenting opinion in a death penalty case. In 1991 Pam Jones, the wife of Moniteau County Sheriff Kenny Jones, was convicted and sentenced to death for Mrs. Jones' murder. During the appeals process, the case came before the Missouri Supreme Court where six of the seven judges affirmed the conviction and the sentence. Judge White, in his dissenting opinion, wrote that Judge White was the court's lone dissenting justice saying the assaulter had a tough childhood and was therefore not accountable for the heinous crime he committed. This opinion alone disqualifies Judge White from service in the Federal courts. He is irresponsible in his thinking, and his views against law enforcement are dangerous.

We urge you in the strongest possible terms to actively oppose the nomination of Judge White. He is clearly an opponent of law enforcement and does not deserve an appointment to the Federal Judiciary. His views and opinions are highly insulting to law enforcement, and we look forward to working with you to defeat this nomination.

Respectfully,

PATRICK J. SULLIVAN, JR.,
Executive Director.

MISSOURI SHERIFFS' ASSOCIATION,

Senator Orrin Hatch, Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, Dirksen Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

Also, please find attached a copy of a petition signed by 92 law enforcement officers in Missouri, including 77 Missouri sheriffs. In December 1991, James Johnson murdered Pam Jones, wife of Moniteau County Sheriff Kenny Jones. He shot Pam by ambush, firing through the window of her home during a church function to host Judge White. Johnson also killed Sheriff Charles Smith of Cooper County, Deputy Les Roark of Moniteau County and Deputy Sandra Wilson of Miller County. He was convicted and sentenced to death. When the case was appealed and reached the Missouri Supreme Court, Judge White voted to overturn the death sentence of this man I've asked Mrs. Jones and three good law officers.

As per attached, the Missouri sheriffs strongly encourage you to consider this dissenting opinion in the nomination of Judge Ronnie White to be a U.S. District Court judge.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. VEMERESCH

Written Statement of Sheriff Kenny Jones Before the Committee on the Judiciary, Confirmation Hearings of John Ashcroft, U.S. Attorney General Designate, January 2001

Senator Leahy, Senator Hatch, Members of the Judiciary Committee, I am honored and a little overwhelmed to be here today to testify on behalf of my colleague Attorney General Kentucky, Mr. Chairman, my name is Kenny Jones and I am the elected Sheriff of Moniteau County, Missouri, an office I have been privileged to hold for the last sixteen years. For those who may not know, Moniteau County is a very small unusually quiet county in mid-Missouri with a population of approximately 13,000. We are a strong tight knit community in the heartland of America. We believe in traditional values and we have a deep faith. We are small town America at its best.

As you know, much has been said about John Ashcroft and his fitness for the office he seeks. I for one support his nomination and urge this Committee to support him as well. Last year, Senator Ashcroft was unjustly labeled for his opposition to the nomination of Judge Ronnie White to federal district court. This one event has wrongly called into question his honor and integrity. Be assured that Senator Ashcroft had no other reason that I know about, to oppose Judge White except that he asked me too. I opposed Judge White's nomination to the federal bench and I opposed Senator Ashcroft to him too because of Judge White's opinion on a death penalty case.

In December 1991, James Johnson changed the lives of many following an attempt at a rural community. He held an elderly woman hostage, killed four people, and seriously wounded another. Johnson murdered in cold blood, the sheriff from a neighboring county, two deputy sheriffs, and my wife, Pam Jones. For this, he was tried by a jury, convicted of four counts of first degree murder, and sentenced to death.

To understand just how horrific this event is and to comprehend the devastating impact this crime has on my county, you need to understand the facts of that December night. It is easy to talk about dissenting opinions and legal maneuvering in this case and lose the human tragedy out of it. But, that is a mistake. This case is entirely about human tragedy and justice. Not a day goes by that I don’t believe that James Johnson took my family from me.

On December 9th, Deputy Leslie Roark, was dispatched to the residence of James Johnson on a domestic disturbance call. After arguing on the scene and speaking with Johnson, his wife and his stepdaughter, Deputy Roark apparently ascertained they were all fine. He could not have been more wrong. As Deputy Roark turned to leave, Johnson pulled a gun and shot him in the back. My deputy fell face down, rolled over, and struggled to defend himself as he lay at point-blank range. After shooting Leslie Roark, Johnson armed himself with more weapons and drove to my house in rural Cooper County looking for me. I was not home. I had taken my two sons to their 4-H Club meeting. My wife, Pam, and our two daughter were home, however. They were hosting a Christmas party for a group of local churchwomen and their children. Upon arriving at my house, Johnson opened fire on completely innocent people. He fired several shots through a bay window, hitting my wife, who was sitting with my daughter on a bench in front of the window. After the assault on my home, Johnson went to the home of Deputy Russell Borts and shot him, also through a window, as he was talking on the telephone. Russ lives today with several wounds from this attack.

During the attack on my family and Deputy Borts, a call for help went out and many officers from surrounding counties responded to my office. Sheriff Charles Smith, from Cooper County, immediately responded to the call for help. What he did not know was that Johnson had moved down the block from the Borts residence and was laying-in-wait at my office. Borts' car was getting ready to leave. Before I knew it, Johnson turned on my home and opened fire, killing three friends and colleagues and seriously wounded a fourth. Offering him a second chance at freedom, I cannot understand his reasoning. I know that the four people Johnson killed were not given a second chance.

When I learned that Judge White was picked by President Clinton to sit on the federal bench, I was outraged. Because of Judge White’s dissent in the Johnson case, I felt he was unsuitable to be appointed to such an important and powerful position. During the Missouri Sheriffs’ Association Annual Conference in 1999, I started a petition drive among the sheriffs to oppose the nomination. The petition simply requested that consideration be given to Judge White’s dissenting opinion in the Johnson case as a factor in his appointment to the federal bench. Seventy-seven Missouri sheriffs, both Democrat and Republican, signed the petition and it was available to anyone who asked. I have the petition with me and respectfully ask that it be made a part of the record of this hearing. It was forwarded to both Senator Bond and Senator Ashcroft. I also asked that the National Sheriffs’ Association support us in opposing Judge White’s nomination. They refused to do so and I am grateful that they joined us and wrote a strong letter opposing Judge White’s nomination.

While some would have you believe otherwise, this is the only reason sheriffs opposed the nomination of Judge White. We contacted Senator Bond and urged him to oppose this nomination as well. He agreed with our position, but unfortunately, his view on Judge White’s nomination was misrepresented to other members of the Senate. People alleged all sorts of reasons for the eventual defeat of Judge White’s nomination. I can only speak for myself and can only testify to what I know to be true. I opposed Judge White’s elevation to the federal bench solely because of his opinion in the Johnson case. I am outraged at the actions of the National Sheriffs’ Association. They refused to support us in opposing Judge White.

I wish I could tell you that the carnage and suffering caused by James Johnson had ended. I wish I could tell you that he was incarcerated. I wish I could tell you that the carnage never once confronted his victims face to face. I wish I could tell you that he was taken into custody.

Before Johnson was apprehended, he held an elevation until for an unknown reason, he released her. She escaped and told the authorities where Johnson was hiding. A team of negotiators finally convinced him to surrender and he was taken into custody.

After dropping off my boys at 4-H, I found out that Lee Roark had been shot. I went to the hospital without waiting for the Life Flight helicopter. While there, I received the call that would change my life forever. I was told of an emergency at my own house. I raced out to the driveway and saw an ambulance and police officers around the Wasmy secretary, Helen Gross, told me that Pam had been shot and our daughters had been saved and were taken to the hospital. My wife was flown by helicopter to the University of Missouri Hospital. I gathered my four children and we drove to the hospital. There I saw an ambulance in the driveway and was told of an emergency at my own house. I rushed to the hospital and asked that they see me immediately. I was informed that my wife had been taken into custody.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to clarify a few of the points raised during yesterday’s hearing regarding the quality of James Johnson’s representation at trial. Mr. Johnson hired counsel of his own choosing. He chose a team of three experienced defense attorneys who possessed substantial experience in litigation and criminal law. The three litigants had tried a previous capital case together. The vote overwhelmingly establishes that counsel launched a wide-ranging investigation in an effort to locate veterans who had served in Vietnam and hired and presented three nationally-renowned mental health experts on the relevant issue of posttraumatic stress disorder. The result, however, was disastrous. Based on the strength of a detailed confession by the accused to law enforcement officers, incriminating statements to lay witnesses, and eyewitness accounts of the murders and circumstantial evidence, including firearms identification, James Johnson was convicted by a jury of four counts of murder in the first degree. The jury later unanimously recommended a sentence of death on each of the four counts.

After a lengthy post-conviction hearing on the adequacy of counsel, Circuit Court Judge James A. Franklin, Jr. found that Johnson’s attorneys devoted a significant period of time and expense to his case, including a substantial attempt to develop and present a mental defense. The court found as a matter of law that James Johnson received skilled representation throughout his trial. He was then automatically appealed to the Missouri Supreme Court, where the convictions and sentences were upheld 4-1. Judge White’s lone dissent focused on inadequate assistance of counsel at trial. As I have stated and the record indicates, this is clearly not the case.

I have been deeply troubled during these confirmation proceedings by statements imputing, overly or otherwise, that John Ashcroft was a racist. More to the point, there have been allegations made that John Ashcroft’s rejection of Judge Ronnie White’s nomination to the federal district court was racially motivated. As a Missourian, I am of the fact that removals have been extremely rare. General judgeships are there for life, removed will instead of judgement, the consequence of law that James Johnson received skilled counsel launched a wide-ranging investigation into the facts of his case, including firearms identification, eyewitness accounts to one of the accusations. The evidence of guilt, however, was unassailable.

It is my belief that members of this distinguished panel and members of the entire Senate take the constitutional role of “advice and consent” very seriously. It is an integral part of our system of checks and balances.

It is my humble opinion that no individual took that responsibility more seriously than your former colleague, John Ashcroft. As evidenced by the vote in the House and the Senate during his term.

Former Senator Ashcroft then elaborated on the dissenting opinions by Judge White in a series of criminal cases, including State of Missouri v. James Johnson. He acknowledged the issues raised against Judge White’s nomination by respectable law enforcement groups. His ultimate rejection of Judge White’s nomination was based on a review of his experience and public service and made him very qualified to be the next Attorney General of the United States. You have his assurance that he will handle his responsibilities in a way consistent with the will of Congress, in accordance with the rules of our judicial system and in a manner that protects the liberties of all Americans.

Again, I would like to thank Chairman Leahy, Ranking Member Hatch and this distinguished panel for allowing me to testify.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, 28 years ago, I had the responsibility to appoint a State attorney for Missouri. Based upon what I saw to be the promise in John Ashcroft—his character, intelligence, and commitment to public service—I selected him.

For the past 28 years, I have had the honor to work with him as he handled his duties in the best and highest tradition of Missouri and of this country. Many of my colleagues have also seen him during the last 6 years, when he served with distinction in the House.

I know this man. Most of you in this body know this man. He is a good man, whose service reflects well on his friends, his family, our State of Missouri, and on this great body.

Everything about John Ashcroft’s record of public service and his personal integrity and character tells us that he will be faithful to the law. Everything about John’s career also tells us that he understands one thing above all else: The promise contained in this Nation of Law can only be realized when all the laws are properly enforced.

Two weeks ago, I went before the Judiciary Committee to ask that they judge John Ashcroft’s nomination to be Attorney General on the content of his character, and reject the slime campaign then underway against him.

Today I must say I stand here profoundly disappointed so many failed to push away those whose only goal is to tear down and destroy. What we heard was a campaign designed to create a caricature, and to fan the grotesque charges of racism, bigotry, and so-called political opportunism—a campaign so out of control that 2 days of questions were not sufficient to examine the record.

I cannot begin to express my profound disappointment in how some of my colleagues handled their few days in the majority—mishandled their days to rise above the rancor. In the Ashcroft hearing, there was an opportunity to set an example for us to follow for the rest of this session. Instead of rising to the occasion, too many sank to the level of the interest groups, where only the shrillest survived.

What we heard was a campaign designed to create a caricature, and to fan the grotesque charges of racism, bigotry, and so-called political opportunism—a campaign so out of control that 2 days of questions were not enough. An extra day of attack witnesses, and hundreds of additional questions—often asking the same questions over and over again—were then submitted for the record. They even went so far as to ask for a “complete discussion” of all conversations that were heard this week. Senator Russ Feingold was courageous in casting the lone Democratic vote in favor of the nominee in committee. My friends, Senator Byrd, Senator DODD, and others, have announced their decision to stand with the accused in Vietnam. Counsel presented three nationally-representative law enforcement groups. His ultimate rejection of Judge White’s nomination was based on a review of his experience and public service and made him very qualified to be the next Attorney General of the United States. You have his assurance that he will handle his responsibilities in a way consistent with the will of Congress, in accordance with the rules of our judicial system and in a manner that protects the liberties of all Americans.

Again, I would like to thank Chairman Leahy, Ranking Member Hatch and this distinguished panel for allowing me to testify.

I note that others of my colleagues appear to have given the nomination full consideration and concluded, for their own substantive reasons, not to support this nomination. While I disagree with their final decision, I certainly cannot condemn their actions. I have expressed displeasure at the tone and the treatment to which they appear to have given the nomination.

Over the past month, we have seen self-described spokesmen of various activist groups that preach tolerance, diversity and religious freedom—systematically display their intolerance, narrowness, and dogmatic views, as they try to smear the record of the man who has been nominated to be the Attorney General of the United States.

In fact, I think the words on this chart tell us all we need to know—this is from the special interest groups of what they are doing—"by any means necessary." "We’re going to spend whatever it takes." These are the words of the extreme liberal groups that are out to sabotage John Ashcroft and, incidentally, his nomination. The pure—search and destroy.

Like millions of Americans, I watched the Senate confirmation hearing to see both how my friend would do in answering questions defending his record but also to see how potential opponents would handle their responsibilities.

I, too, hoped for full and fair hearings.

Two weeks ago, the American people did not see a confirmation hearing. They did not see the Senate Judiciary Committee acquit itself in the best and highest traditions of this fine body. They did not see full and fair hearings. What they saw—pure and simple—was an exercise in political theater of the worst kind.

I cannot begin to express my profound disappointment in how some of my colleagues handled their few days in the majority—mishandled their days to rise above the rancor. In the Ashcroft hearing, there was an opportunity to set an example for us to follow for the rest of this session. Instead of rising to the occasion, too many sank to the level of the interest groups, where only the shrillest survived.
That is an impossible task. Nobody can recall those. The reaction was that the answers were incomplete, when they did not report all those conversations. Who of us could have done that unless we had carried a tape recorder in our pockets for years? The special interest groups who invented the term “Borking.” I had little expectation they could or would understand or embrace the terms of civil respect. So I expected that people could or would understand they could or would understand the whole record of the day.

In September of 1981, in response to the controversial Eighth Circuit decision, the current Minority Leader of the House of Representatives, Richard Gephardt, introduced a constitutional amendment to ban court-ordered busing to achieve racial integration. Congressman Gephardt was also a sponsor of legislation to bar federal courts from mandating busing as a remedy for segregated schools. In explaining his legislation, the esteemed minority leader called busing for desegregation “a total failure” and called the court-ordered busing program in the St. Louis schools an obscenity and a crime against the youth of St. Louis. About the same time, again while Senator Ashcroft was Missouri Attorney General, Missouri Senator Tom Eagleton, my predecessor, stated publicly that he “personally opposes court-ordered busing and did not approve the St. Louis busing plan.” While in the Senate he fought the Department of Health, Education and Welfare practice of denying funding to school districts that do not have a school desegregation plan. Beyond that, both Missouri State Treasurers who served while John Ashcroft was Attorney General, both of whom were Democrats, opposed the court-ordered desegregation. In fact, the second of those Treasurers, the late Mel Carnahan, was highly critical of both Attorney General Ashcroft and me for the handling for the desegregation case. He was not critical of anyone opposing the plan, rather he felt the Attorney General was not being aggressive enough in the fight. In 1983, as he was gearing up to run for Governor, Treasurer Carnahan even took the unusual action of requesting a state appropriation so that the Treasurer’s office could join the case, initiating new litigation against the federal court order desegregating the St. Louis schools. He even filed suit on the eve of the beginning of the school year to bar student participation in a St. Louis city-county transfer program. As Governor, I refused to support the appropriation because it was the job of the Attorney General to handle legal matters that impact the state. But that statement by the state Treasurer, a Democrat and future Governor, shows that John Ashcroft was clearly in the mainstream and representing the people of the state in a complicated and controversial legal matter. Unless of course Mel Carnahan was an extremist too. The strong democratic opposition then not only in the eighties but continued right on through the ‘98 election cycle. In fact, the current Missouri Attorney General, Democrat Jay Nixon, made opposition to state involvement in school desegregation a platform of his first campaign for Attorney General, calling busing “a failed social experiment” that must end in the State of Missouri. And he criticized Ashcroft and Webster, the two previous Attorneys Generals by stating “The Republican team hasn’t been fighting the school desegregation cases in the State of Missouri for the last twenty years; they’ve been losing it.” “We need new and better lawyers to win the case.”

Upon taking office, Nixon filed suit to end state involvement in the St. Louis desegregation cases. He filed suit to overturn a court decision in Kansas City. Shortly after that he appealed and fought the Kansas City plan all the way to the United States Supreme Court. In St. Louis, he criticized the appointment of St. Louis County judge, St. Louis appointed to negotiate a settlement. He even filed suit on the eve of the beginning of the school year to bar student participation in a St. Louis city-county transfer program. Former Congressman Bill Clay, in a recent letter to President Clinton, sharply criticized the Democratic Attorney General as “waging unremitting warfare against the court orders which ‘provided educational opportunity for many, thousands of students in St. Louis’.” Nixon was also repeatedly criticized by the St. Louis chapter of the NAACP for his efforts. In 1995, the group said those efforts “will wipe out the gains made by desegregation and deprive city parents of opportunities they now have to better their children’s education”. The Kansas City Star said this Attorney General “climbed over the backs of African Americans” to advance his career. Yet when this most respected Attorney General in recent memory wanted to advance his political career, was the Senator from Massachusetts condemning his actions? Quite to the contrary, the Senator from Massachusetts was actively promoting his political career, even headlining a fund raiser for him here in Washington. Nor can I imagine the Senator labeling the positions of Congressman Gephardt, former Senator Eagleton, and the late Governor Carnahan, whose campaign the Senator from Massachusetts supported as extreme. The hypocrisy could not be clearer. And leads us back to those guiding principles of this entire effort against John Ashcroft—by any means necessary, and spend whatever it takes.

The third charge centers around his handling of the nomination of Judge Ronnie White. Much has been said about this, but let me simply say that the emotional pain and passion for Johnson case remains as strong today as it was 10 years ago when the brutal murders tore apart the lives of 4 families and their communities.

For all my colleagues who agreed with Judge White’s reasoning that would have tossed out the conviction and granted a new trial to the triple cop-killer who also killed the sheriff’s wife right in front of her 8 year old daughter; for those who agreed with his lone dissent that Johnson’s lawyers didn’t do a good enough job so he deserves a new trial—I would hope they would channel their strong views and weigh in with Missouri’s Governor in seeking a commutation of his death sentence. Johnson’s appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court has been denied and he now sits on death row. I can certainly provide any of you the correct address of the Governor in Jefferson City.

Finally the latest attempt to smear—so weak that it is more of a smear—was to focus on a political activist who claimed that 16 years ago John Ashcroft asked a legal but inappropriate question during a job interview. Quickly refuted by others present in the interview this attempted smear fades from view, but again takes time and energy to respond to. And when all one’s energy is spent knocking down false charges it is hard to find the time to talk about what you believe can be accomplished at the Justice Department—which of course is what the people of America are really interested in. How will you do the job? What are your plans to improve the lives and opportunities for all Americans?

So where does all this leave us? Back where we started.

A conservative, pro-life, Christian simply isn’t fit to serve according to the litmus test of a bunch of left-wing groups. And rather than admit it, the smokescreen of false charges must be used to justify their own intolerance. It is a sad day that we have come to this. But through it all John Ashcroft has stayed firm. Firm in his belief that in America our sense of fairness will outweigh short term political gain. Firm in the belief that his attackers have been shameless and unrelenting, that he should not, and will not respond in kind.

I am so proud of John Ashcroft. I am proud of his service to Missouri and the nation over the last 26 years. At each level of responsibility, he not only acquitted himself as a gentleman and good American, but he did great work on behalf of so many citizens. That is true of his terms as Missouri Attorney General, as Missouri’s Governor, and as United States Senator. He is a fine man. He is a gentleman. A good man of deep conviction who will do great service on behalf of all Americans as our next Attorney General. So I am also very proud that a fellow Missourian will become the next Attorney General of the United States of America. But perhaps most of all, I am proud to be able to call John Ashcroft my friend.

I yield Mr. Nelson.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, today I will vote to confirm former Senator John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States. The President of the United States has the constitutional authority to nominate those individuals he thinks will most ably advise him; therefore, I give President Bush latitude in choosing the members of his Cabinet. My role in this process is to assure the constitution is to give my advice and consent to the President on his nominees for Cabinet positions. In keeping with that duty, I want to present a clear explanation as to why I will vote to confirm the President’s choice for Attorney General.

I have known John Ashcroft for well over 10 years. We both have had the honor to serve as the Chief Executive for our respective States. We were even colleagues in the Senate, and I had the opportunity to work as Governor overlapped. I am familiar with his philosophy and his viewpoints and though we do not see eye-to-eye on every issue I respect him as a person and consider him a friend.

But before my statement is dismissed as a rubber stamp approval, let me be clear: My vote to confirm Senator Ashcroft is not without some concerns. I am disappointed with his decision to accept Attorney General as Governor overlapped. I am familiar with his philosophy and his viewpoints and though we do not see eye-to-eye on every issue I respect him as a person and consider him a friend.

I take Senator Ashcroft at his word when he says, and I quote, “I understand that standing as Attorney General means enforcing the laws as they are written, not enforcing my own personal preferences.” He has a mandate from the voters of Florida to enforce the laws as written and that is what he plans to do. I look forward to working with him to ensure justice for all.

For me, this affirmative vote is not about politics; it is about potential and opportunity. If Senator Ashcroft is a man of integrity—which he says he is and which I believe him to be—then he will uphold his constitutional duty, made meaningful by his oath to protect and defend the Constitution, to do his best to ensure justice for all. Indeed, the stakes are high, but that is exactly where Senator Ashcroft has put them. I look forward to working with him and to helping him keep his vocal promise to the American people.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, Senator Ashcroft has received broad bipartisan support from a number of organizations. I ask unanimous consent that a list of 332 organizations supporting Senator Ashcroft be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the Material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

332 ORGANIZATIONS ENDORsing JOHN ASHCROFT FOR U.S. ATTORNEY GENERAL

(Compiled by the Free Congress Foundation)

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the nomination of John Ashcroft to be Attorney General. I have given a great deal of thought to this nomination and have considered it very seriously. As a new Senator, I did not interview with Ashcroft, so I do not know him personally. However, I personally attended the nomination hearings and listened carefully to the testimony. I also reviewed many of the statements prepared by supporters and opponents of Mr. Ashcroft, and heard from a large number of my constituents in New Jersey.

After considering all the facts, I concluded that Senator Ashcroft, while in many ways a very fine and distinguished public servant, simply is not the right person for the job. Let me take a few moments to explain my thinking.

In general, I believe that a President’s choice for a Cabinet position deserves special scrutiny. As head of the Justice Department, the Attorney General deserves special scrutiny. As head of the Justice Department, the Attorney General has the unique responsibility to interpret the law on behalf of the executive branch, to investigate and prosecute suspected criminals, to uphold our civil rights laws, to represent the government before the Supreme Court through the Office of the Solicitor General, and to manage immigration, drug enforcement and other politically important responsibilities. In addition, the Attorney General, while serving the President, also must maintain a degree of independence from politics, so that he or she can pursue wrongdoing within the government. The Attorney General is the people’s lawyer. For all these reasons, it is imperative that the Attorney General be an individual not only of unquestioned personal integrity, but someone who will be broadly perceived as administering justice and enforcing the law fairly and impartially for all people.

Unfortunately, after examining Senator Ashcroft’s record, I have serious concerns about whether as Attorney General he would be able to set aside his long-standing and strongly held views and perform his duties in a fully objective, fair and impartial manner.

I base this conclusion on several prior writings by Senator Ashcroft indicating that his opinion of the law and the facts seem to have been heavily biased and colored by his ideology. Perhaps most importantly, in 1997, he led the opposition to Judge White of the Missouri Supreme Court by making a series of accusations that were inaccurate. For example, he claimed that Judge White opposed the death penalty and believed that it apparently is unimportant . . . how clear the evidence of guilt.

This was very unfair, as Judge White voted to affirm death sentences in the vast majority of cases that had come before him, and had unequivocally assured the Judiciary Committee that he was prepared to impose the death penalty. In fact, in the case that Senator Ashcroft used to challenge Judge White, the Judge’s decision was based not on opposition to the death penalty, but on a reasoned analysis of serious constitutional problems that he believed had prevented the defendant from receiving a fair trial.

Senator Ashcroft’s ideology coloring his interpretation of the facts.

Senator Ashcroft’s strong ideological approach also seemed to skew his views in the case of Bill Lann Lee, a nominee to head the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. Senator Ashcroft said he voted against Lee because of “serious concerns about his willingness to enforce” a Supreme Court decision limiting preferences for minorities in awarding government contracts, and the Senator adopted a highly restrictive interpretation of that decision, challenging Mr. Lee’s interpretations of the Court’s instructions and guidance. However, this challenge was overruled in Hecht v. James, a decision on Senator Ashcroft’s own ideological opposition to affirmative action, not the law or the Court’s direction.

In another case, when he served as attorney general of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft sought to invalidate a state law that authorized nurses in various practices, including the dispensing of contraceptives. Senator Ashcroft, a strong opponent of abortion, argued that this was unconstitutional.

In Tad Kennedy’s America—The New McCarthyism?

Is anybody prepared to say that the senator who made Bork a verb is looking for ways to derail John Ashcroft’s confirmation as attorney general? And Ted Kennedy knows just how difficult it would be for John Ashcroft to overturn a Supreme Court decision limiting preferences for minorities in awarding government contracts, and the Senator adopted a highly restrictive interpretation of that decision, challenging Mr. Lee’s interpretations of the Court’s instructions and guidance. However, this challenge was overruled in Hecht v. James, a decision on Senator Ashcroft’s own ideological opposition to affirmative action, not the law or the Court’s direction.

In another case, when he served as attorney general of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft sought to invalidate a state law that authorized nurses in various practices, including the dispensing of contraceptives. Senator Ashcroft, a strong opponent of abortion, argued that this was unconstitutional.

In Tad Kennedy’s America, you can’t address Robert Bork, but Ronnie White. He voted for John Ashcroft because he opposed the conservative jurist’s philosophy, which he had every right to do.

But in Tad Kennedy’s America, race is a philosphy. His is a country where Colin Powell is tarred as an Uncle Tom, and Bill Clinton is hailed as a historic compromise. “As the politics of personal destruction, it was a clash of philosophy, not a racial preference.”

During last week’s hearing, Senator Kennedy accused John Ashcroft of fighting desegregation and voter registration. Even for the U.S. Senate, the message wasn’t subtle. John Ashcroft’s America would be one of segregated lunch counters. This is the same John Ashcroft who appointed more African American judges than any other governor in Missouri. The same John Ashcroft who appointed the Martin Luther King holiday into law. The same John Ashcroft who appointed the first black judge to the state’s court of appeals. And the same John Ashcroft who appointed the first Missouri hate crimes law as governor, and then voted for 26 out of 28 African American judicial nominees as a U.S. Senator.

John Ashcroft seems to have failed at being a racist as completely as Ted Kennedy has at being a civil leader of the opposition. To quote a former Democratic senator, Bob Kerry: “I think John Ashcroft is colorblind. That’s one of the good things that comes from his religious belief.” But being colorblind is the worst things you can be in Tad Kennedy’s America. If you dare embrace Reverend King’s dream—that one day all Americans will be judged not by the color of their skin but by the content of their character—you’re a racist.

There are times when the iron is so thick in Washington, it becomes farce. Please note that Ted Kennedy voted against Clarence Thomas, a conservative who still managed to become justice of Supreme Court of the United States. Nobody voted for Senator Kennedy based his vote on Clarence Thomas’s race, which happens to be African American. He voted against Thomas because he opposed the conservative jurist’s philosophy, which he had every right to do. But he wasn’t addressing Robert Bork, or Ronnie White.

For all the talk of the New Civility in Washington, we’re back to the old incivilities. The politics of personal destruction! We have sunk even lower—to the politics of national division. It wouldn’t be the first time: Joe McCarthy, like Ted Kennedy, was an eminent demagogue who drank a lot.

What was disturbing was not the man but the -ism. It allowed Joe McCarthy to be seen as the representative of the American way, rather than a freakish but junior senator for Wisconsin was a political accident who never had the sense of purpose to be really dangerous. In the end, the clowns outshined the Right wing. He made anti-communism, not communism, suspect.

Today the McCarthyites of the Left were poised to do the same dubious service for their political persuasion. The more hysterical they sound, and the more outlandish their accusations about the merits of a legal position. If history is any guide, his enforcement of the law will be seriously biased by his ideological views. This, in my view, disqualifies him for a position as Attorney General, for which fairness, objectivity and balance are perhaps the most important qualities. In a period in our nation’s history in which we need to come together after a divisive election, I believe it would be a mistake to select an Attorney General whose tendency to view the law ideologically could aggravate our nation’s divisions.

For all these reasons, I oppose this nomination.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following editorial that appeared last week in the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette regarding the nomination of Senator John Ashcroft to be the next Attorney General appear in the Congressional Record.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

S991

The party of Abraham Lincoln was to be re-cast as the party of George Wallace and Orval Faubus (who happened to be Democrats, but never mind). And Ted Kennedy now emerges as Joe McCarthy, sniffing out any opportunity to paint a political opponent as a racist. His victims, like John Ashcroft, are left to prove that they aren’t. Where are the Great Seal of the Democratic Party? The kind of people who will put country above party, and distance themselves from the demagogues? Don’t look for any before 2002.

The Democrats are on the verge of taking back Congress and Joe McCarthy would understand.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, encircling the Great Seal of the State of Missouri are the words “United We Stand; Divided We Fall.” It is a motto that has guided our people well over the last 180 years.

In that same spirit, President Bush, at the onset of this new century, has declared that he wants to be “uniter not a divider.”

I am deeply encouraged, for I want to join with him and the Congress to reach across the chasm of our political differences to do some hard work for the American people.

With the Senate, we have already reached out in a spirit of bi-partisanship in structuring our committees. So far I have had the opportunity to vote in favor of all the President’s Cabinet nominees.

This was the beginning of a conciliatory course—a fragile alliance—but, nonetheless, one that I believe must mark any real progress in the 107th Congress.

But I do not believe that the nomination of John Ashcroft furthers the conciliatory tone that President Bush has set.

Senator Ashcroft has a long record of public service—a record that I brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee when I introduced him. But in the end, I must determine if that record makes him suitable to be the United States Attorney General.

Having been nominated for any other Cabinet post, I could have easily supported him. His credentials or faith are not in dispute here, nor should they ever be. Rather, it is the conflict that his words and deeds have generated throughout his public career.

Given the sweeping discretionary power of this position, I do not believe that the office of Attorney General of the United States is the right job for Senator Ashcroft.

When asked by my colleagues about this nomination, I urged them to ignore their personal relationships and political considerations. Instead, I called on them to vote their conscience, I must do the same.

Regrettably, I am unable to provide my consent for this nomination.

I am compelled by principles and beliefs I shared with my husband for over forty years in public life, including the belief that we should do all in our power to bring people together rather than drive them apart.

The call of conscience must supersede all others. It is the only reliable anchor in the tempestuous sea of public life.

In casting this vote, I do so knowing that John Ashcroft will likely be confirmed. I hope he will take these votes of dissent as they are intended: not as acts of spite or recrimination, but as pleas for healing and harmony.

While I must withhold my vote on his confirmation, I support on all matters that he and the President pursue in the interest of a more just and peaceful nation.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the confirmation of my friend and former colleague, Senator John Ashcroft, to be Attorney General of the United States. As a man of the highest integrity, experience, and ability, Senator Ashcroft is uniquely qualified to serve as our nation’s premier law enforcer and the administrator of one of the federal government’s largest agencies.

Senator Ashcroft’s qualifications for the position of Attorney General have been well documented on the floor and in passing: his past as a law professor, State auditor, two-term Attorney General, two-term Governor, and United States Senator from the State of Missouri. Such a record of public service spanning such a period of years demonstrates the deep trust and admiration of the people of Missouri who have placed in Senator Ashcroft over nearly 30 years.

What has impressed me about Senator John Ashcroft’s record is not only the length of public service, but the breadth of this experience as well. There is no doubt that the ideal candidate for the position of attorney general is someone who has a good grasp of the law and a true dedication to enforcing that law. However, the job entails a great deal more than that. In fact, the attorney general needs to be a good manager to oversee the 125,000 employees of the Department of Justice in departments as diverse as the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

Senator Ashcroft’s sixteen years as an executive in Missouri, first as State attorney general and then as Governor, have made him uniquely qualified to manage one of the largest federal agencies.

Moreover, his service with us in the United States Senate and his involvement on the Senate Judiciary Committee have prepared him to work closely with Congress in enforcement and development of Federal law.

In addition to Senator Ashcroft’s remarkable credentials to serve as United States Attorney General for all Americans, I would like to remark on his particular interest and experience in the crime issues facing rural communities. As many of my colleagues know, in the past several years rural America has witnessed an explosion in illegal methamphetamine use, especially among our nation’s youth. Nationally, meth use increased 60% between 1992 and 1999 among America’s high school seniors. Unfortunately, the story is much bleaker in our rural communities. In my own State of Wyoming, methamphetamine abuse increased 300% between 1992 and 1998. Like all illegal drug abuse, meth abuse tears at the very fabric of society by destroying families, increasing violent crime, and dashed the dreams and aspirations of all too many of our nation’s youth.

While the battle against meth use and trafficking is primarily a State responsibility, there is a role for the federal government by supplying resources for law enforcement training, meth lab cleanup, and education and prevention programs to help parents and teachers teach children the dangers of meth. Senator Ashcroft was a true leader in recognizing and furthering a limited, focused role for the Federal Government in the battle against methamphetamine use and trafficking. In 1999, Senator Ashcroft introduced legislation to combat this problem. While I knew that Missouri “would probably be hit hard with methamphetamine problems,” I was truly impressed with Senator Ashcroft’s understanding of the meth problem and willingness to listen to the problems facing law enforcement in other states. Before introducing his legislation, Senator Ashcroft and his staff made a particular effort to understand the problems facing law enforcement personnel in Wyoming and incorporated our suggestions in Senator Ashcroft’s legislation to help address these problems.

I have to say that Senator Ashcroft’s deep understanding of the greatest crime issue facing our State of Wyoming and his experience as a problem solver both as Governor of Missouri and United States Senator give me great encouragement. His work with the Congress to address the needs of all states, not just those with large urban areas.

I must say that Senator Ashcroft’s understanding and appreciation for the issues involved in the area of rural crime stands in stark contrast with my experience with the previous Administration. Law enforcement officials in my State have all too often been given the run around by the Department of Justice and the Office of National Drug Control Policy when they have attempted to pursue additional funding programs or when they have attempted to include additional Wyoming counties to the list of High Intensity Drug Trafficking Areas. In fact, in one conversation, an employee at the ONDCP told a top law enforcement officer in Wyoming that they didn’t have anyone at the department that could approve new HIDTAs! I found that somewhat astonishing given that is one of the purposes of the office of the Drug Czar. Given his track record in the State of Missouri and in the United States Senate, I have every confidence...
That is why they included a specific test to the holding of public office. We have heard a great deal of acrimony from some of the far-left interest groups over the nomination of Senator Ashcroft. Evidently these groups are intent on destroying Senator Ashcroft’s reputation even if they are unsuccessful in derailing his confirmation. The attacks by these organizations are entirely unfounded and seem more designed to raise funds for the particular interest groups than to find the truth about our former colleague.

I must say that one of the charges that has been most disturbing to me is the insinuation that Senator Ashcroft will not faithfully enforce the laws of the Union because he is a devout Christian. Not only are such charges entirely unfounded, but they smack of a religious bigotry of the most dangerous kind. Such bigotry is nothing new, but is should be condemned in any age in which it raises its ugly head. One no less than George Washington warned against the efforts in his own day to banish religion from the public square. In his farewell address of September 29, 1796, President Washington remarked:

Of the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, Religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of Patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firm props of the duties of Men and citizens.

We should pay heed to the words of our first president and disavow any effort to banish Senator Ashcroft, or any other member from public office, because of his or her religious beliefs.

The founders were well aware of the dangers inherent in applying religious tests to the holding of public office. That is why they included a specific prohibition to any such practice in Article VI of the Constitution where they said “no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States”. Rather than ask that Senators apply an explicit test such as that prohibited in Article VI, the far-left special interest groups that oppose Senator Ashcroft’s nomination have turned instead to rumor and innuendo to imply that anyone who has strong religious beliefs such as those held by Senator Ashcroft is incapable of enforcing federal laws with which he might not be in total agreement.

Nor surprisingly, these groups have not brought forth any specific examples where Senator Ashcroft failed to enforce the laws when he served as attorney general of the State of Missouri. Instead, all the evidence seems to point to the contrary. Not only did the people of Missouri continue to elect John Ashcroft to positions of public trust, but his fellow State attorneys general and his fellow governors elected him in turn president of their respective organizations. Keep in mind that these organizations are bipartisan and members from a wide spectrum of political and philosophical views. The fact that the State attorneys general and the State governors would choose John Ashcroft to head their organizations is evidence of the trust and respect that his colleagues had for his integrity, his ability, and his willingness to fairly and faithfully enforce the laws as he found them. This record stands in stark contrast to the revisionist history that has been spread in the media by groups opposed to Senator Ashcroft’s nomination.

I have known Senator Ashcroft both as a colleague and a friend. He is a thoughtful and honorable public servant who has served the people of Missouri and the United States with distinction for nearly thirty years. He is dedicated to consistently and fairly upholding and enforcing the Constitution and laws of the United States. I have every confidence that Senator Ashcroft will bring dignity and integrity to the office of the Attorney General as he has to the numerous positions of public trust he has filled in the past. I urge my colleagues to join my voting to confirm Senator Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, if there is one thing I have learned about working in Washington is that we must learn to respect and recognize our differences. I certainly expect a new President to select Cabinet nominees who share his basic beliefs and ideology. I have thus far voted to confirm every nominee that President Bush has submitted to the Senate since he took office—even those who hold positions on important issues that are different from my own. In fact, it is fair to say that I have been generally pleased with the talented and dedicated public servants President Bush has chosen to lead this Administration.

While the President retains the Constitutional authority to appoint his Cabinet, I also take very seriously my Constitutional responsibility as a Senator to provide advice and consent on his appointments. Our role in the confirmation process is not to rubber stamp on presumptive nominees, especially for a position as important as this. Unlike other Cabinet posts, Mr. President, the Attorney General is responsible for representing and defending the rights and constitutional freedoms of every American. I believe this position requires someone who understands and appreciates that not every American is born with equal access to the opportunities and blessings that make our nation great.

In my opinion, to fulfill the duties with which the Attorney General is entrusted, the nominee must be pro-active in his pursuit against discrimination and injustice as the law demands. Successfully defending the rights of every citizen ultimately depends upon the wide discretion an Attorney General exercises to initiate investigations, establish Task Forces and prosecute wrongdoers.

After reading Senator Ashcroft’s response to the questions I submitted together with his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, I am reasonably confident he is prepared to respect and enforce the law when it occurs. I am not convinced, however, that he is prepared to do any more when called upon to enforce a law with which he passionately disagrees. His convictions are deeply held and he has fought stubbornly for them in the past. I truly doubt that he can set them aside so easily now.

I must tell you that I am deeply moved by the constitutional role I am called upon to perform today. Passing judgement on a former colleague is excruciating and not a part of our normal responsibilities. I respect Senator Ashcroft as a former colleague and someone I know to be deeply committed to his religious teachings and the causes he champions. Also, I would like to add that I would gladly support his confirmation to any other Cabinet post.

In the end, though, I have concluded it is his deeply held beliefs over issues that fall directly under the jurisdiction of the Justice Department that will impede his ability to do this job—to enforce the law without bias or favor toward anyone; to vigorously fight discrimination and its painful legacy and to defend the constitutional rights he has fought so zealously to overturn in the past. Ironically, his passionate advocacy that inspires respect in me and others is what, in my opinion, makes Senator Ashcroft the wrong man for this job. Modern society and the benefit of my constituents who hold passionate views on both sides of this issue and for my colleagues listening today, I would like to take a few moments to highlight some of the factors I considered when making my decision.

I must confess, Mr. President, when I reviewed the history of Senator Ashcroft’s involvement in an effort to desegregate public schools in St. Louis, I was surprised and troubled by what I read and heard. In fact, I was surprised and troubled by what I read and heard at his confirmation hearing. Senator Ashcroft, in his capacity as Attorney General of Missouri, engaged in an extraordinary legal campaign that spanned several years to block implementation of a voluntary school integration plan in St. Louis. During the course of this litigation, Senator Ashcroft initiated numerous challenges and appeals that were firmly and repeatedly rejected by the courts. Instead of accepting the decisions rendered by the jurisdiction that drew judicial criticism and, in one instance, a threat of contempt for failure to comply with a court order.
I believe it is one thing to vigorously assert your legal rights in a court of law. Its something else, however, for a state’s top law enforcement official to display such a cavalier attitude toward the judicial branch of government. I know the issue of racial integration in public education can be emotionally charged, but I guess I was young enough not to have been acutely aware of such emotions. I was a young elementary school student when Helena public schools in Arkansas were integrated. This was not an easy transition at the time, but I believe Senator Ashcroft has received the same kind of deference and fair treatment that I wish he had shown Judge White.

I was taught at an early age that public service is a high calling and a noble profession. In accordance with that belief, it is essential that we in the Senate discharge our responsibility to consider nominations in a manner that encourages the most talented and qualified individuals to seek employment in the public sector. I am confident that the Senate fell short of that standard in this case.

Taken together—the battle waged over desegregation in St. Louis, the attempt to stop nurses from providing care to undeserved patients and the decision to defeat the nomination of a qualified nominee who deserved better—these instances and other facts in the record lead me to conclude that Senator Ashcroft will further divide our country on these sensitive issues.

I encourage the President to consider another nominee who will help him heal these wounds, not open them anew. In the alternative, I hope our President will work to heal the wounds inflicted by this nomination on the Senate, the Presidency and our nation so that we can move forward to address the problems of all Americans in a bipartisan way.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the nomination of John Ashcroft to be the U.S. Attorney General.

Senator Ashcroft has superb legal qualifications. He was educated at Yale and the prestigious University of Chicago law school. While in the U.S. Senate, he served on the Judiciary Committee and chaired its Subcommittee on the Constitution.

Senator Ashcroft is also the most experienced nominee for U.S. Attorney General in American history. He served as Missouri’s attorney general, its governor, and, of course, one of its U.S. Senators. Since the founding of the nation, none of the previous 66 Attorneys General had his level of experience.

I have a number of reasons for their opposition. I would like to take this opportunity to respond.

First, what should the standard for confirmation be? The general rule for confirmation of Justice Department nominees was well-stated by Senator LEAHY in connection with President Clinton’s nomination of Walter Dellinger to be head of the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice.

The Senate has a responsibility to advise and consent on Department of Justice and other executive branch nominations. And we must always take our advice and consent responsibilities seriously because they are among the most sacred. But I think most Senators will agree that the standard we apply in the case of appointments is not as stringent as that for judicial nominees. The President should get to pick his own team. Unless the nominee is indicted or some other investigative problem arises in the course of our reviewing our duties, then the President gets the benefit of the doubt. There is no doubt about this nominee’s qualifications or integrity. This is not a lifetime appointment to the judicial branch of government. President Clinton should be given latitude in nominating executive branch people to whom he will turn for advice. I should also note that his nomination went through the Judiciary Committee—by no means a rubberstamp unanimously.

The recent debate over Walter Dellinger is another instance of people putting politics over substance. Yes, he has advised and spoken out about high-profile constitutional issues of the day. I would hope that an accomplished legal scholar would not shrink away from public positions on controversial issues. It appears he is more likely to prefer. One can question Professor Dellinger’s positions and beliefs, but not his competence and legal abilities.

This is the standard that is traditionally applied and it is the proper standard. While acknowledging that presidents are ordinarily entitled to deference in the selections for their cabinet, in the nomination of John Ashcroft critics argue that they are justified in applying a tougher standard for confirmation because of the standard that Senator Ashcroft allegedly used in evaluating Bill Lann Lee to head the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. In considering Bill Lann Lee, Senator Ashcroft had said that Lee was “an advocate who is willing to pursue an objective and to carry it with the kind of intensity that belongs to advocacy, but not with the kind of balance that belongs to administering the law.”

Some Democrats say that because John Ashcroft applied this “standard” to Bill Lann Lee, they are justified in applying the same standard to John Ashcroft. First, this is not a standard, but a conclusion about Lee based upon his record and testimony. Second, what Senator Ashcroft did on the Lee nomination was justified. Senator Ashcroft’s concerns with Bill Lann Lee were based on Lee’s long record of activism as a public interest lawyer. Republicans on the Judiciary Committee opposed Lee’s nomination because they were justly concerned about his willingness to enforce the law as stated in Justice O’Connor’s opinion for the Supreme Court in Adarand. In Adarand, the Supreme Court held that all governmental racial classifications were to be subjected to strict scrutiny. They must be narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest. Mr. Lee repeatedly stated the standard for racial preferences in less strict terms. He also found that only one of the 150 current federal programs involving racial classifications would be invalid under Adarand.

Senator Ashcroft explained why he opposes Lee's nomination: "...I am concerned that Mr. Lee would not enforce the law. Senator Ashcroft testified: "I joined with eight other Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee in opposing Bill Lee's nomination, and I believe that Missouri Attorney General, he would not do so as Missouri Attorney General, and he would not do so as U.S. Attorney General. In fact, John Ashcroft has repeatedly explained that his stand on abortion law—yet this reassurance has failed to satisfy his critics. It's a Catch-22. He has, like every nominee, said he will uphold the law; and no one has ever questioned his integrity. But when he was Attorney General, he told the legislature, the law, a Carter-appointee, assessed an undeclared state law recognizing battered woman syndrome. The judge issued an opinion allowing police to arrest a woman's abuser to protect her. Ashcroft wrote that, regardless of his personal opinion on abortion, he would issue an opinion based on the law.

Finally, it is important to note that Senator Ashcroft has a strong record on women's issues, contrary to what some have charged. As Attorney General, John Ashcroft wrote that, regardless of his personal opinion on abortion, he would issue an opinion based on the law.
Ashcroft was one of the leaders in the Senate in directing the Justice Department to increase the prosecution of gun crimes. He sponsored legislation to authorize $50 million to hire additional federal prosecutors and law enforcement officials to increase the prosecution of criminals who use guns. Additionally, Senator Ashcroft sponsored legislation to require a five-year mandatory minimum prison sentence for federal gun crimes and for legislation to prohibit juveniles from possessing assault weapons and high-capacity ammunition clips. The Senate overwhelmingly passed the Ashcroft legislation in May 1999.

Senator Ashcroft voted for legislation that prohibits any person convicted of even misdemeanor acts of domestic violence from possessing a firearm, for legislation to extend the Brady Act to prohibit persons who committed domestic violence crimes as a basis for removing them from possessing firearms, for the “Gun-Free Schools Zone Act” that prohibits the possession of a firearm in a school zone, and for legislation to require gun dealers to offer child safety locks and other gun safety devices for sale. Senator Ashcroft also voted for legislation to close the so-called “gun show loophole.” This bill required mandatory instant background checks for all firearm purchases at gun shows.

Senator Ashcroft will uphold the nation’s laws on firearms.

Fourth, critics question Senator Ashcroft’s record or civil rights. They often begin by raising the issue of desegregation litigation in Missouri. The controversy over the Bob Jones University speech has been put to rest. At his confirmation hearings, Senator Ashcroft made it clear that he “reject[s] any racial intolerance or religious intolerance that has and will color [his] official actions.”

In the matter of the role faith plays in our public life, there appears to be a double standard. Senator Lieberman made numerous speeches connecting God to American government when he was running for Vice President last year. In fact, during a campaign speech in a church in Detroit, he said he hoped his candidacy “will enable all people . . . to talk about their faith and about their religion, and that it will reinforce a belief that I feel as strongly as anything else—that there must be a place for faith in American public life.” [Newsweek 9/11/00] I share in that hope. Sadly, critics of John Ashcroft, who already have an exaggerated view of his religious intolerance, apply a different standard on this issue to John Ashcroft.

During his career, Senator Ashcroft has compiled an outstanding record of protection for people. As Governor, Fortune named him one of the top 10 education governors in the nation. John Ashcroft was an inclusive governor, signing into law Missouri’s first hate-crimes statute and state holiday that recognizes Dr. Martin Luther King’s birthday. He nominated the first woman to the Missouri Supreme Court.

When the subject of Martin Luther King Day came up, I was there. And I recall that he issued an executive order. He said, in doing so, he wanted to have the first holiday contemporaneously with the holiday. He wanted to have the first holiday contemporaneously with it. So he passed a King holiday by executive order. He said, in doing so, he wanted to have it as soon as possible.

In the U.S. Senate, John Ashcroft convened the first and only Senate hearing on racial profiling. He secured more funding to combat violence against women, voted to prohibit those who have been convicted of domestic violence from owning a gun, and supported the crime victims’ rights amendment and Violence Against Women Act.

John Ashcroft has been deeply committed to promoting equal access to government positions during his tenure as both Attorney General and Governor of Missouri. Witnesses testifying at the hearing made this commitment clear.

Mr. Hunter further elaborated that, “Like President-elect George W. Bush, Senator Ashcroft followed a policy of affirmative access and inclusiveness during his service to the state of Missouri.”

When Governor Ashcroft’s term ended in January of 1993, he had appointed more African-Americans to state court judgeships than any previous governor of the state of Missouri. Governor Ashcroft was also bipartisan in his appointment of state court judges. He appointed Republicans, Democrats and independents. One of Governor Ashcroft’s black appointees in St. Louis was appointed, notwithstanding the fact that he was not a Republican and that he was on a panel with a white Republican. Of the nine panelists of nominees for state court judgeships, which included at least one African-American, Governor Ashcroft appointed eight black judges from those panels.

Congressman J.C. WATTS testified: “I’ve worked with [John Ashcroft] on legislation concerning poor communities, underserved communities. I have always found John Ashcroft to have nothing but the utmost respect and dignity for one’s skin color. I heard John say yesterday in one of his terms that his faith requires him to respect one’s skin color. And I think that’s the way it should be . . . [I’m] very pleased with my dealings with John. I have had nothing but the utmost respect for how he conducted himself and his dealings with people of different skin color.”

Judge David Mason, who worked with Ashcroft in the Missouri Attorney General’s office stated, “I’ve known him for probably seven or eight years now, and I think he’s done an excellent job in the justice department.”

As time went on, I begin to get a real feel for this man and where his heart is. When the subject of Martin Luther King Day came up, I was there. And I recall that he issued the executive order to establish the first King Day, rather than the legislature to do it. Because, as you may recall, some of you, when Congress passed the holiday, they passed it at a time when the Missouri legislature may have been able to have the first holiday contemporaneously with it. So he passed a King holiday by executive order. He said, in doing so, he wanted to have it as soon as possible. I have known him long enough to know that he has a record of standing up for things that he believes in that he feels are important, and I think that is something that’s important to know.”

Fifth, opponents claim that Senator Ashcroft has a poor record on the nominations of President Clinton’s nominations to the federal bench. This somehow justifies voting against Ashcroft under a standard of “what’s good for the goose is good for the gan-

As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, Senator John Ashcroft is a man who knows the law. He was educated at Yale and the prestigious University of Chicago law school. While in the U.S.
Senate, he served on the Senate Judiciary Committee and chaired its Sub-committee on the Constitution. Furthermore, Senator Ashcroft is the most experienced candidate for U.S. Attorney General in American history. He served as Missouri’s attorney general, its governor, and one of its U.S. senators.

During his career, Senator Ashcroft has compiled an outstanding record of protecting the rights of all people. He will continue to do so as the United States Attorney General. I strongly support his nomination and encourage all my colleagues to do so as well.

Mr. TORRICEULLI. Mr. President, I have always believed that Presidents are entitled to a degree of deference in their cabinet nominees. And so, while this made it difficult I have nonetheless informed the administration that I cannot support Senator John Ashcroft’s nomination to be attorney general.

Senator Ashcroft has been a dedicated public servant and I say that even though we have not found common ground on the issues. The range of issues we have disagreed on has been broad and they have centered on some of the most difficult laws of our time. No person should be forced to choose between their fundamental beliefs and values and enforcing our Nation’s laws. For those who cherish civil rights laws, the freedom of choice and handgun control, the stakes are simply too high to expect a cabinet secretary to choose between passionately held beliefs and enforcing not only the letter but the spirit of the law.

I also have specific concerns about New Jersey. It is not enough just to be opposed to racial profiling. The scars this issue has left on my state are too deep and require the strongest possible commitment if we are ever to heal. Further, it will take a concerted effort to enforce a range of civil rights laws which it has to the case involving Missouri. The characteristics of the electorate in Missouri, who have elected him five times to major offices, I think, speaks well of Senator Ashcroft in rejecting the notion that he is an extremist. He sat a couple of seats down from me on the Judiciary Committee. Although we did not agree on many items, I always felt he was exercising his honest judgement.

He was a candidate for President, and it may be that in the course of that candidacy, expressed some views, as candidates often do, that try to appeal to a constituency. But from what I have seen, on this committee and in the Senate, he is not an extremist.

He and I had a very sharp disagreement on a judicial nominee, Philadelphiia Common Please Judge Massiah-Jackson. And she was, in effect, rejected by the committee, and withdrew her nomination. She was challenged as being soft on crime because of her decision to hold in contempt of court a very long, difficult and contentious proceeding, including a hearing before the Judiciary Committee, as I say, she did withdraw. But at the end of the process, it was my view that John Ashcroft had expressed his own judgement about it which differed from mine. I bring in the Judge Massiah-Jackson case because of some similarities which it has to the case involving Missouri Supreme Court Justice White.

I thought that we did not accord Judge White the kind of consideration that should have been accorded, because our practices are to rely principally on staff, the ABA recommendation, the FBI investigation, without individual Senators paying as much attention to the district court nominees as we might. I intend on proposing a rule change that in the event someone is going to speak adversely about a nominee, that there be an opportunity for the nominee to respond, and the nominee should focus specifically on any charges which are brought.

But I do think that, at the conclusion, Senator Ashcroft expressed his own honest views. I think it is important to note that when Judge White appeared before the committee, he did not ask that Senator Ashcroft be rejected, he raised the question as to whether Senator Ashcroft had the qualities to be an attorney general and left it up to the committee to decide.

Senator Ashcroft made a number of important commitments to the committee. We questioned him at great length on the difference between a legislator and a member of the executive branch who enforces the law. He said categorically that he would not choose to change Roe v. Wade but would be bound to enforce the law as it stood. He spoke emphatically about his commitment to an end to abortion clinics. And it was worth noting that, while in the Senate, on a vote on whether someone who had a judgment against them for damaging an abortion clinic and there was one case where there was an enormous excess of $100 million that the individuals’ debt ought not to be dischargeable in bankruptcy, which I think is an indication as to his sentiments on that important subject.

Senator Ashcroft also made very firm commitments on recognizing the distinction between church and state and committed that, to the extent he was involved, there would be no litmus test on the selection of Supreme Court nominees.

There were challenges made as to whether as state attorney general of Missouri Senator Ashcroft used the litigation process inappropriately. Former Senator Danforth appeared during the nomination hearing and strongly supported John Ashcroft being a vigorous advocate.

I do support former Senator Ashcroft for attorney general. And I do so, in substantial measure, because of the record he has compiled as an elected official in Missouri and because of my personal knowledge of him. He was twice elected attorney general of Missouri, he was twice elected governor of Missouri. And Missouri is a moderate state, I think very much like my own state, its great cities, its lot of farmland. Thank you,

SOUTHERN PARTISAN GENERAL STORE.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, America is indeed fortunate to have a distinguished public servant of the caliber of John Ashcroft, who is willing to serve his country again, this time as Attorney General of the United States. John is certainly the most qualified Attorney General nominee of this century and perhaps in the Republic’s history. John has impressive academic credentials, executive, and legislative experience. I am confident that his qualifications, combined with his keen sense of duty and unshakeable integrity, will enable Senator Ashcroft to be one of the finest Attorneys General in the memory of this country and to restore luster to a tarnished office.

John is an honors graduate of Yale University. He received his law degree from the University of Chicago, one of the country’s outstanding law schools. After graduating from law school, John returned home to Missouri where he practiced law and joined the faculty of what is now Southwest Missouri State University, teaching business law for five years. But that, our colleague, then-Missouri Governor KRIT BOND, appointed John to serve the citizens of Missouri as State Auditor.

John continued his legal career as an assistant Attorney General on the staff of our former colleague, then-Missouri Attorney General John Danforth. In this capacity, John Ashcroft gained invaluable first-hand knowledge of the day-to-day operation of an Attorney General’s Department. This knowledge would serve him well when he became Missouri’s Attorney General in 1976. John, in fact, served two terms as Missouri’s highest law enforcement officer, and as a result of his eight year tenure in that office, obtained the managerial and executive experience needed to effectively run an Attorney General’s Office. Under John’s leadership, the Missouri Attorney General’s Office earned a reputation for strictly enforcing the law, including laws with which Attorney General Ashcroft disagreed. John Ashcroft lives by the motto of Missouri’s Attorney General; he was acutely aware that Missourians twice elected him to enforce the laws, and as his confirmation hearing before the Judiciary Committee clearly showed, John assiduously did so.

Because of his success as Attorney General, Missourians elected John their Governor in 1984 and again in 1988. To illustrate the utter ridiculousness of one of the most scurrilous charges leveled at John—that of being “racially insensitive,” as some are euphemistically saying—it must be noted that as Governor he repeatedly reached out to black Americans. For example, he appointed the first black woman to the Western Missouri Court of Appeals; he established the state’s first and only historic site honoring a black Amr. For composer Scott Joplin; he led the fight to save Lincoln College, founded by black soldiers; and last month Missourians celebrated the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. because John Ashcroft supported it.

John also helped enact Missouri’s first hate crimes legislation. In short, if John Ashcroft is “racially insensitive,” he certainly has a strange way of showing it.

After completing his second term as Governor, John began a career of national public service as Missouri’s junior Senator in the United States Senate. As a member of this body, John broadened his legal experience by serving on the Judiciary Committee and by chairing its Subcommittee on the Constitution. He also continued to fight for the rights of all Americans, and was dedicated to the principle of equal treatment under the law. For example, John sponsored legislation providing equal protection for victims of crime, and he convened the first hearing on racial profiling, in which he stated for the record that racial profiling is unconstitutional. And long before John became Attorney General, John voted to restore luster to the federal bench.

As impressive as John’s qualifications are, what is most impressive about him is his honor and integrity. I had the opportunity to witness first-hand a test of his character in my capacity as Chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee and Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, which would have had jurisdiction over an election contest. As we all know, John lost a breathtakingly close reelection bid last fall in a bitter unorthodox, and some would say, unlawful circumstance. After the election, my office was flooded with phone calls and petitions urging John to challenge the election, and lawyers lined-up to offer their services. Some argued that John’s decision not to bring a constitutional challenge on the ground that it was patently unconstitutional to elect a deceased person to the United States Senate. Others wanted him to bring an election contest because of improper conduct in the voting itself, such as the fact that heavily-Democrat precincts remained open after hours.

Either of these challenges may very well have proved successful, and John might still be a member of this body. But at a minimum, a challenge would have put Missourians—and the entire Senate—through a divisive ordeal, and it most certainly would have cost the people of Missouri without full representation in the United States Senate. Always the public servant, this is something that John Ashcroft would not do. As particularly painful as this loss was, John never once challenged the election; he would not put his fellow Missourians through what the nation had to endure in Florida for thirty-five days. Moreover, he made it abundantly clear, both in public and in private, that he did not want others to do so either. Rather than cling to power in the hope of an eventual victory, John graciously conceded the election and wished our new colleague well.

This selfless action was that of a statesman, and it reminds me of the famous words of another statesman, Henry Clay, who said: “I had rather be right than be President.” John Ashcroft’s response to this truly unique and difficult loss in November essentially: “I would rather be right than be Senator.” And it is because of principled actions such as this that John is one of the most respected former members of this body. And because Democratic members know of the character they speak with confidence about the outstanding job he would do as Attorney General. For example, our former colleague, Senator Moynihan, stated that John “will be a superb Attorney General.” And our current colleague, Senator TORICELLI, who knew of John’s skill and character from their service together on the Judiciary Committee, stated that “While I have obvious philosophical differences with John, his ability and integrity simply can’t be questioned.”

Now despite John’s experience and dedication to duty, I have heard a lot of people say that he is unfit to be Attorney General because of: (1) his strong and abiding faith in God; (2) his firm belief in law and order; and (3) his commitment to the Constitution, even when that commitment is at odds with those unbiased “legal scholars” on the editorial board of the New York Times. Far from disqualifying him from public service, however, these qualities only reinforce my belief that he will ably serve as the nation’s chief law enforcement officer. The Senate would serve the nation by confirming him as Attorney General, and I urge it to do so.

Mr. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to support the confirmation of President Bush’s nominee for Attorney General of the United States, former Senator John Ashcroft.

After serving in this body with John Ashcroft for the last six years, I know him as a man of integrity and compassion. That is not to say we always agree—we have sparred passionately on issues—not the least of which was abortion rights. Clearly, though, John is a well-qualified nominee, as evidenced by the fact that of the 67 persons who have served as United States Attorney General in our history, only John Ashcroft has served as both attorney general and U.S. Senator serving on the Judiciary Committee.

In fact, John Ashcroft was State Attorney General and Governor for two terms each. He was the head of the National Association of Attorneys General and head of the National Governors’ Association. In these roles, John has a solid record of working with and protecting the rights of all people.

That John and I hold differing views is certainly not unusual in this body of one hundred individuals—all with strongly held beliefs, all with disparate backgrounds, and all representing different constituencies with distinct concerns and varying priorities. I respect his right to hold his beliefs, just as he has always respected my right to the beliefs that I have often expressed in this very chamber. That is the nature of our representative democracy, and certainly the nature of the body that was the embodiment of the union of states.

Likewise, President Bush, as the duly-elected Chief Executive of the United States, is accorded the privilege of nominating those men and women he determines would best administer the policies and duties with which he has been entrusted by the people of this Nation.

I did not agree with all of the personal viewpoints of President Clinton’s various nominees—far from it. Instead, I attempted to judge the fitness of each nominee based on their individual record, experience, testimony, and integrity. Recognizing that President Clinton’s nominees would not surprisingly hold different beliefs than my own in some instances, I asked myself whether or not those beliefs would, in and of themselves, preclude the nominee from executing his or her duties to the extent that they would be unfit to serve.

That is the same question I ask myself concerning the nomination of Senator Ashcroft, keeping in mind that I do not believe that a nominee’s ideological philosophy should be a determining factor in the ability to administer the policies and duties of which he has been entrusted by the people of this Nation.

I commend him for his record of working with and protecting the rights of all people. During a private meeting in my office, John echoed that pledge and personally assured me that he would carry out this and other laws on behalf of every American. That includes Roe v. Wade. That includes ensuring access to abortion clinics. And I take John Ashcroft at his word.

He also stated during the hearings that, “The attorney general must recognize this: The language of justice is inclusive. Americans . . . No American should have the door to employment or educational opportunity slammed shut because of gender or race. No American should fear being threatened or coerced in seeking constitutionally protected health services.” I commend him for this sentiment and, again, I take John Ashcroft at his word.

Importantly, John has carried himself with distinction in carrying out the laws in other elected positions, notably during his terms as governor and Attorney General of Missouri. As he told the Judiciary Committee, “I take pride in my record of having vigorously enforced the civil rights laws as attorney general and governor.” And I take John Ashcroft at his word.

Moreover, not only John’s words but his deeds support his strong commitment to civil rights. As Governor, John signed Missouri’s first hate crimes legislation into law, and legislation creating the Martin Luther King Holiday. He established Missouri’s first and only historic site honoring an African-American, and led the fight to save an independent Lincoln University, founded by African-Americans 150 years ago.

As Attorney General, John Ashcroft enforced laws that differed from his own beliefs in a number of areas, including abortion and, more specifically, the confidentiality of hospital records on the number of abortions performed; and church and state issues, such as the availability of funds for private and religious schools and the distribution of religious materials in public schools.

As Governor, John was presented on numerous occasions with three-candidate panels for judicial appointments that contained one or more minority candidates. As he told the Committee in his confirmation hearing, “I took special care to expand racial and gender diversity in Missouri’s courts,” and the facts bear that out.

In every instance, he either appointed a minority to the post or appointed the minority candidates on the panel to judicial positions at a later date. He appointed more African-American judges to the bench than any governor in Missouri history.

He appointed the first African-American on the Western District Court of Appeals. He appointed the first African-American woman to the St. Louis County Circuit Court.

He appointed the first two women to the Missouri Courts of Appeals. And he appointed the first woman to the Missouri Supreme Court—the only woman ever to have been appointed to that court.

Similarly, in the Senate, John supported every single African American judicial nominee confirmed by the Senate—26 separate nominations in all. In my opinion, this long record of supporting minority judicial candidates, he has been attacked for opposing the nomination of one African American Judge, Ronnie White—a nominee who was opposed by 51 members of the Senate, including me.

Judge White’s nomination was rejected by the Senate not because of his race, but because of his opinions in some death penalty cases. It bears noting that not only was Judge White vigorously opposed by the National Sheriffs Association, the Missouri Federation of Police Chiefs, and numerous other Missouri and national law enforcement groups, but he also stood as the lone dissenter in a death penalty case involving the brutal slaying of three law enforcement officers in Missouri and the wife of a sheriff who was killed after she was shot five times, in the family’s own home, as she was holding a church function.

If we note that in 1998, using similar criteria, I opposed the nomination of Judge Ann Aiken to the federal bench because of her decision to issue a restraining order against a man who raped a five-year-old child.

And what has Judge White said about John Ashcroft’s motivations? He has said, and I quote, ‘‘... let me say, I don’t think Senator Ashcroft is a racist, and I wouldn’t attempt to comment on what’s in his mind or what’s in his heart.”

Finally, I want to emphasize that there were a number of critical policy areas on which Senator Ashcroft and I did agree during our tenure together in the Senate. They deserve mention considering the criticism that has been leveled against this nominee, and the relevance of the issues to the post of Attorney General.

John co-sponsored the benchmark Violence Against Women Act, and helped author the provisions to prevent Internet stalking included in the legislation. He supported minimum hospital stays for women who give birth, and a measure to permit breast and cervical cancer coverage by Medicaid for low-income women.

He supported a provision urging that the “Attorney General should fully enforce the laws of the United States on behalf of President Bush and the American people. I am confident he will enforce the laws to protect all Americans equally, regardless of his personal views, and I will vote to confirm John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, as my colleagues know, I shall vote to confirm John Ashcroft to the federal bench because of her decision to issue a restraining order against a man who raped a five-year-old child.

And what has Judge White said about John Ashcroft’s motivations? He has said, and I quote, ‘‘... let me say, I don’t think Senator Ashcroft is a racist, and I wouldn’t attempt to comment on what’s in his mind or what’s in his heart.”

He supported a provision urging that the “Attorney General should fully enforce the laws of the United States on behalf of President Bush and the American people. I am confident he will enforce the laws to protect all Americans equally, regardless of his personal views, and I will vote to confirm John Ashcroft as Attorney General of the United States. For many of my colleagues, friends, supporters, and constituents, this is not easy to understand. And some see it as terribly wrong. After all, my voting record and that of John Ashcroft could hardly be more different. The opposition that he faces is profound, and that the opposition has raised significant and serious concerns about the appropriateness of this nomination.

Let me begin by noting a few positive aspects of former Senator John Ashcroft’s positions and responses to questions at his hearing before the Judiciary Committee. On racial profiling, as I stated at the outset of the hearing on Senator Ashcroft’s nomination, during the last Congress I found him to be less concerned about the issue than virtually anyone on the Republican side of the aisle. He and his staff not only permitted but assisted in a significant and powerful study of racial profiling in the Constitution Subcommittee. Although he did not ultimately conoppose our traffic stop statistics bill, he made constructive suggestions about the bill, and his interest in addressing this terrible problem I believe was sincere.

And that sincerity was underlined in recent testimony before this Committee. He stated that he believes racial profiling is an unconstitutional practice and that he will make it a priority of the civil rights division of the Department of Justice. I believe him and I look forward to working with him on this if he is confirmed.

I have also expressed great concern that whoever assumes the role of Attorney General of the United States needs to understand and appreciate a need for fairness in the administration of the severest punishment our Federal government can mete out, the death penalty. I understand that both President Bush and Senator Ashcroft support the death penalty. I was relatively pleased with Senator Ashcroft’s responses to my questions, both at the hearing and in written form, concerning the federal death penalty system. I was particularly pleased to hear his commitment to continuing the Justice Department’s review of racial and regional disparities in the federal system, a review that was ordered by President Clinton and is only in its initial stages. I plan to hold him to his pledge and urge him carefully to consider the results of this review and address any problems before proceeding with any federal executions.

Having noted at least those areas where I am hopeful about working together with John Ashcroft, nevertheless, brought forth extremely serious information that could lead any reasonable person to conclude that this nomination should not go forward.

The interview with Southern Partisan and his acceptance of an honorary degree at Bob Jones University raise significant questions about his sensitivity to the concerns of the African American community in this country. Even worse, his failure to fully disavow those actions is not consistent even if as if he was playing it safe, trying not to antagonize certain conservative constituencies rather than admitting his mistakes and recognizing the need to take concrete steps to disavow the racist attitudes that both of those institutions represent to many Americans. He will need to do much more if he is confirmed to reassure African Americans that he will faithfully enforce and apply the civil rights laws of this country.

On another issue, Senator Ashcroft and the Republicans’ treatment of Judge Ronnie White was just plain unfair, and that is why I joined Senator Durbin in apologizing to him when he appeared before the Judiciary Committee and to Judge White, misleading our colleagues as to his record and attacking him in harsh and unfair language without giving him an opportunity to respond. There was no excuse for this behavior, and it represents for me an extremely sorry chapter in Senator Ashcroft’s public record. I am happy to share this committee and in the Senate share the responsibility for what happened. This could not have happened without their colleagues and allow this to become a partisan issue on the floor of the Senate.

I agree with David Broder, who in a column which I have no authority to quote for reasons for supporting John Ashcroft for Attorney General said that in the end, the Ronnie White episode could alone justify voting against confirming him. If so, he deserves more than an apology, he deserves an apology to the Senate floor, I agree and I do not just that Senator Ashcroft and President Bush will give this idea serious consideration.

And they need to go further. The White community as a whole on the Senate floor in an unprecedented and almost tragic manner. The President and his advisors need to take immediate steps to right that wrong, and they can start by urging the Senate to quickly approve the nomination of Judge Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit. I believe that Judge Gregory has received the endorsement of his home state Senators, Senators Warner and Allen, both of whom come from the President’s party.

Another troubling area is Senator Ashcroft’s handling of a St. Louis desegregation case during his time as Attorney General of Missouri. I was impressed with the strong testimony of respected civil rights attorney Bill Taylor. Mr. Taylor’s testimony is the entire record that has been made it clear that at best Senator Ashcroft did not “get” the role of the courts in the case and the urgency of resolving the issue in the best interests of the children. At worst, he exploited the case for political purposes, which is very troubling indeed.

Then there is the case of James Hormel, our current ambassador to Luxembourg, whom Senator Ashcroft strongly opposed when his nomination was under consideration by the Senate. This was an extreme example of a pattern of unopposed opposition to nominees pursuant by Senator Ashcroft. I am frankly mystified by the notion that in the 21st century a nomination of a well-qualified African American could be blocked because of his sexual orientation. This is another sorry chapter in Senator Ashcroft’s record, and frankly, his responses to written questions from members of this Committee about his position on this nomination were unsatisfactory and raise even more questions about his testimony than they answer. Ambassador Hormel is right to be outraged by these answers and the insinuations they contain.

On a related topic, we have the accusations by former Wisconsin state Senator Paul Offner that Senator Ashcroft questioned him about his sexual orientation in a job interview in 1985. I have seen neither of these people, and based on information I’ve seen, I find it hard to disbelieve either one. But the Offner account does bother me and while I will vote for Senator Ashcroft in committee today, I reserve the right to review any further information in this area that may come forward prior to the final confirmation vote. I urge Senator Ashcroft to do the same.

Senator Ashcroft in sworn testimony told me that he had never used such an approach in his career. In the end, however, this record has to be put in the context of the standard that I believe should be used when voting on the nomination of a cabinet position. By the way, I do find somewhat persuasive the argument that the position of Attorney General...

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

is particularly significant, although it does not rise to the level of a high lifetime judicial appointment.

As a matter of practice, the Senate has, for the most part, rejected the President's Cabinet nominations because of their ideology alone. The Senate may examine, and has examined, whether the extremity of nominees' positions prevent them from carrying out the duties of the office they seek to occupy. But the Senate has nearly uniformly sought to avoid disapproving nominees who represent the President's philosophy alone. I believe that we should not begin to do so now.

As my colleagues know, in the practices and precedents of the Senate, the Senate considers and approves the overwhelming majority of nominations as a matter of routine. Only a small fraction of the Senate has considered and approved literally millions of nominations.

The Senate's voting to reject a nominee has been an exceedingly rare event. Of the 1.7 million nominees received by the Senate in the last 30 years, the Senate has voted to reject just 4, or one in every 425,000. Of course, President Tyler alone withdrew without a vote the nominations of those who likely face defeat.

The Senate's voting to reject a nominee to the Cabinet has been an exceedingly rare event. Over the entire history of the Senate, the Senate has voted to reject only 9 nominations to the President's Cabinet. The Senate rejected six in the 19th Century, and three in the 20th Century.

Four of the nine Cabinet nominees rejected were during the Presidency of President Tyler alone. Several other rejections may be said to have flowed from larger battles between the Senate and the President, as when the Senate rejected President Tyler's nominee to be Secretary of the Treasury in the wake of the dispute over the Bank of the United States. Similarly, bad feelings after the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson led to the Senate's rejection of President Johnson's nominations of his counsel in the impeachment trial to be Attorney General.

In the 20th Century, the Senate rejected half as many Cabinet nominees as it did in the 19th Century. In the wake of the Teapot Dome scandal, the Senate voted down President Harding's nomination of Charles War- ren because of his ties to trusts. Most recently in 1989, the Senate rejected the nomination of Senator John Tower, an event which this Committee will recall from our own memory.

This examination of the history demonstrates that it has been a nearly continuous custom of the Senate to confirm a President's nominees to the Cabinet in all but the very rarest of circumstances. These practices and precedents thus support the principle that the Senate has the right to substantial deference in the selection of the Cabinet.

I should also note, as some members of the committee have done that all of President Clinton's cabinet appointments were confirmed overwhelmingly, and usually unanimously, despite the fact that many Republicans strongly disagreed with their views.

This included the view of Attorney General Janet Reno in opposition to the death penalty, a view I strongly share with her but which has enlisted the support of few of my colleagues.

Now, a number of opponents of this nomination have said that they have sought to go beyond the traditional standards for cabinet nominations. I think the most interesting approach that the opponents have taken is in their serious problems with Senator Ashcroft's record that I have already identified, is the question of whether Senator Ashcroft will actually enforce the law. I think my colleague Senator Schumer set up the question well when he said words to this effect: "Given his record of passionate advocacy for very conservative causes: Can he switch it off?" I think this is a useful standard but it must be applied with care since it would require many talented people taking very different roles in their careers, sometimes having to oppose either people or groups for whom they used to advocate.

Now in my own career, I've certainly been called unreasonable, unyielding and too per- sonal in my pursuit of being a defense attorney for large corporations at a law firm and then subsequently when I went to the Wisconsin State Senate, voting against the very time I went. I opened the book into the State Senate representing a largely rural district and I remember constantly speaking of the need for rural property tax relief and not letting the City of Milwaukee run off with the entire budget. Yet, when I became a United States Senator, I understood my role to have changed and that I simply was being a defense attorney for large corporations at a law firm and then subsequently when I went to the Wisconsin State Senate, voting against the very thing I had supported.

But I do take some umbrage at the notion of Senator Ashcroft's strident record in this area it is completely understandable to me that critics would regard this as a "confirmation conversion" and that some would even see this as cynical with carefully chosen words with regard to Roe v. Wade, leaving the door open for a very different reality in the new Attorney General's office. I, for one, will not stand by and allow a departure from the clear implication that Senator Ashcroft told the Senate that he is an opponent of abortion and that he would closely scrutinize his choices for top level positions in the Department of Justice. He will have direct responsibility for carrying out the policy he made to this Committee and the country.

But I do take some umbrage at the notion that giving John Ashcroft's sworn testimony the benefit of the doubt is somehow because of Senate collegiality. No, it is because it is sworn testimony.

But I do understand the very strong skepticism on this point in light of the incidents I've already reviewed especially as they relate to the blocking of nominations, a process in which I was not only partly off partici- pated. I cannot question anyone for opposing this nomination, anyone for coming to an opposite conclusion of this record. It simply depends on one's view of the cabinet nomination process. It is a judgement call. I feel ob- ligated under the traditional understanding of how cabinet appointments are handled to not put the worst possible interpretation on these facts. And I specifically cannot justify construing the worst case scenario solely because Senator Ashcroft seemed to do the same as the President's nominees. It is certainly tempting to do so, but I am afraid it looks too much like political "pay- back," a lesson that would not be lost in further judicial appointments. I firmly believe that we should be the Attorney General of all the people, regardless of race, religion, gender or sexual part of taking the United States Senate and this country further down the road that John Ashcroft and others in his party paved during the Clinton years.

When I said that I want to hasten to add that I am not at all sure that this kind of def- erence be given anymore on lifetime federal judicial appointments given what appears to be the intention of the U.S. Senate on the federal judiciary. As I said in my opening statement at the con- firmation hearing, if we are being asked to follow the political golden rule on this nomination, I certainly agree that the line must be drawn at some point between judicial appointments and politi- cal appointments. My judgment is that this is not the place—not this nomination or this office, as terribly important as it is.

I firmly believe that as a progressive, this is about our future credibility and ability to move our agenda in a future ad- ministration that better reflects on voting records and beliefs, which in most cases are just the opposite of a John Ashcroft's. I know that some see this as futila or naive in light of the unending "other side." They think it is a moral mistake. But I firmly believe that we American people desperately want us to conduct ourselves, where possible, in a bipartisan man- ner. And if we are not to do so, I feel it is important that we do not act as if those terms have real meaning and are not just empty rhetoric.

So when I vote for John Ashcroft in com- mittee, I am not reaching down to the Admin- istration and to my Republican colleagues and especially those on the opposite side of this committee, I believe we share mutual respect. So I am extending to you at the be- ginning of this new Republican Administra- tion an olive branch, but it is not a white flag I assure you. This is about the Depart- ment of Justice, and it is about my desire to see the wrong done to Judge Ronnie White. And it is justice I want to see done in the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals where the largest African American population lives and has never had an African American judge until the recession appointment of Roger Gregory. It is justice I want for numerous other circuit court nominees who languished in this com- mittee for years and never even received a hearing. And it is justice I want for the fu- ture James Hormels and Bill Lann Lees who we clearly are not prepared to do the right thing for. And it is justice I want for the victims of racial profiling in America. And I will press this Administration, the Attorney General, and this Committee to prevent it from happening to others in the future.

So I am genuinely appealing to you to show in concrete ways in the near future that you are concerned about the obviously heartfelt and legitimate feelings of many Americans that the Senate's role in the nominations process has been narrowed and overtly politicized. There are real fault lines emerging in our culture and in our political system and repairs must be made. And some people have been harmed and must be made whole.

In fact, one of the most eloquent state- ments to this effect came just this month in President George W. Bush's Inaugural Ad- dress: "Sometimes our differences run so deep it seems we share a continent, but not a country." I think he's right and I think the Senate is the place to begin to re- pair the breach. That means for me the very difficult decision to vote to confirm John Ashcroft, but it also means immediate con- crete efforts by the President and his party to mend the wounds that led to such fierce opposition to the Ashcroft nomination. It, of course, also means that the new Attorney General must vigorously enforce the law and not let the City of Milwaukee run off with the entire budget. Yet, when I became a United States Senator, I understood my role to have changed and that I simply was being a defense attorney for large corporations at a law firm and then subsequently when I went to the Wisconsin State Senate, voting against the very thing I had supported.

I firmly believe that we should be the Attorney General of all the people, regardless of race, religion, gender or sexual orientation. If he does that, he will earn the support of the American people. If he does not, I will be the first to call him on it and demand that he be held accountable.

That was my statement in the Judiciary Committee. I rise today to speak more generally on the Senate's role of advice and consent in the President's nomination of individuals to the Cabinet. I rise also to speak a bit about the appointment process, quite apart from the discussion of any particular nomination. This analysis governs my consideration of both Senator Ashcroft's and Ms. Norton's nominations.

John Adams wrote that we seek "[a] government of laws, and not of men." He and other Founders sought a government based on principles, not on personalities. If we, as Senators, wish to serve that end in the nomination process, we must measure Cabinet nominations according to principle, with a look at the past and a view to the future.

The first principle that I think should govern Cabinet nominations is what one might call the political Golden Rule. We, as Democrats, should, if at all possible, follow the Republicans as we would have the Republicans do unto us. A Democratic President ought to be able to appoint to the Cabinet principled people of strong progressive ideology. And a Republican President ought to be able to appoint to the Cabinet principled people of strong conservative ideology.

Now, some of our Republican colleagues have certainly failed too often in recent years to follow that Golden Rule, and I understand the desire to repay them in kind. To some degree, I share that desire. But I am determined to resist it for the good of the country, the health of the nomination process, and ultimately, to advance the prospects of future nominees who share the unabashedly progressive convictions that I hold dear.

This principle means that, except in the rarest of cases, voting records and conservative ideology alone should not be a sufficient basis to reject at least a Cabinet nominee. I say this as a progressive Democrat from Wisconsin who hopes that future Presidents may appoint the William O. Douglases and Ramsey Clarks of their times, and that future Senators will not reject them for Cabinet positions on the basis of their ideology alone.

It should not be a requirement for a Cabinet position that the nominee travel solely in the middle of the road. There will come great leaders on the left and on the right.

If we seek the great minds of our times, they may on occasion blow hot or cold. We should not require all the leaders of our country to run a tepid lukewarm.

Now, whether nominating a staunch conservative is good politics or, more importantly, whether it is wise, in light of a promise to unify the nation after a very close election, is an important issue for a sustained national debate. But that question is not at the core of our responsibility in this body to advise and consent on Cabinet nominations.

Alexander Hamilton wrote of the dangers of partisanship in the nomination process in Federalist number 76. He cited the partisanship of legislatures as one of the reasons why the Constitution did well to vest the power to nominate in the President, rather than in the Senate. Considering what would happen if the Constitution had given the Congress the power to nominate, Hamilton wrote:

The choice which may at any time happen to be made under such circumstances, will of course be the result either of a victory gained by one party over the other, or of a compromise between the parties. In either case, the candidate will be too often out of sight. In the first, the qualifications best adapted to uniting the suffrages of the party, will be more considered than those which are most likely to be the object of party victories or of party negotiations.

So Hamilton wrote in Federalist 76. Thus we honor Hamilton's cautionary warning, and we advance the public service, by avoiding partisanship in the confirmation process.

As a matter of practice, the Senate has, for the most part, limited its consideration of the President's Cabinet nominees to an inquiry into the nominees' fitness for office. The Senate must examine, and has examined, the qualifications of nominees. William Blackstone wrote in his Commentaries on the Laws of England, a work well known among the Founders, that "[a]ll offices . . . carry in the eye of the law an honor with their offices, because they imply a superiority of . . . abilities, being supposed to be always filled with those that are most able to execute them." The Senate has thus nearly uniformly sought to test the ability of nominees to execute the office that they seek to occupy.

But as a matter of practice, the Senate has, for the most part, avoided rejecting the President's Cabinet nominations because of their ideology alone. The Senate, and this Committee, has examined, whether the extremity of nominees' views might prevent them from carrying out the duties of the office they seek to occupy. But the Senate has nearly uniformly sought to avoid disapproving nominations because of their ideology alone. I believe that we should not begin to do so now.

Mr. President, the second principle that I think should govern nominations is that the Senate owes the President substantial deference in the selection of the Cabinet. The Constitution vests the appointment power primarily in the President. This choice of the Founders, in turn, flows from the Constitution's imposing on the President the duty faithfully to execute the laws of our Nation.

Article 2, section 1 of the Constitution begins: "The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." That section ends by requiring the President-elect to take the oath "that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States." And article 2, section 3 provides that the President "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed. . . . To carry out that duty, the President needs policy-makers in the executive branch, particularly in the Cabinet and subcabinet, who will support the President's program, as well as carry out the law. The Supreme Court in Myers v. United States explained:

Our conclusion is that Article II grants to the President the executive power of the Government, i.e., the general administrative control of those executing the laws, including the power of appointment and removal of executive officers—a conclusion confirmed by his obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. . . . To that end otherwise would make it impossible for the President, in case of political or other differences with the Senate or Congress, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

Thus article 2, section 2 of the Constitution confers the appointment power in the following language:

The President . . . shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senators, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law: but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Let me begin my discussion of this language with an analysis of its history.

With this language, the Constitutional Convention made a change from the Articles of Confederation. Article 9 of the Articles of Confederation vested appointment powers in the Congress or a committee of Congress. That article provides, in relevant part:

The United States in Congress assembled, shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of . . . appointing courts for the trial of piracies and felonies committed on the high seas . . .

The United States in Congress assembled shall also have the sole and exclusive right and power of . . . appointing all officers of the land forces, excepting regimental officers—appointing all the officers of the naval forces, and commissioning all the officers whatever in the service of the United States.

The United States in Congress assembled shall have authority . . . to appoint such other civil officers as may be necessary for managing the general affairs of the United States under their direction. . . .

And finally:
The United States in Congress assembled shall never... appoint a commander in chief of the army or navy, unless nine States... to the same...

Recall that one of the prime reasons for the Constitutional Convention that wrote our current Constitution was that the Articles of Confederation provided a government that proved less than workable. The Founders thus sought consciously to depart from this legislative precedent in favor of a stronger executive.

When the Constitutional Convention began to debate the Constitution, its working draft initially provided for the Congress as the national legislature. Many of the Framers found fault with this proposal. Pennsylvania’s James Wilson argued that appointment by a group with numerous members would necessarily lead to “[i]nterest, partiality, and concealment.” He argued: “A principal reason for unity in the Executive was that officers might be appointed by a single, responsible person.”

Virginia’s James Madison agreed, saying: “Besides the danger of intrigue and partiality, many of the members were not judges of the requisite qualifications. The Legislative talents... were very different from those of a Judge...”

Massachusetts’s Nathaniel Gorham, who in the Convention was an early proponent of the structure finally adopted in the Constitution, also emphasized the value of focusing responsibility on the President. Madison’s notes report him saying:

The Executive would certainly be more answerable for a good appointment, as the whole blame of a bad one would fall on him alone. Not that he would be answerable under any other penalty than that of public censure, which with honorable minds was a sufficient one.

Pennsylvania’s Gouverneur Morris argued that the President would need to deal with every part of the United States, and would thus be best informed about the character of potential nominees. Madison’s notes report:

Mr. Gouverneur Morris argued against the appointment of officers by the Senate. He considered the body as too numerous for the purpose; as subject to cabal; and as devoid of responsibility. —If Judges are to be tried by a group with numerous members, he would be sure to fail, and to be convicted of partiality. The Senate would be in no better situation when appointing the President. If Judges are to be tried by a second or by any subsequent appointment, they could not even be certain, that a future nomination would present a candidate in any degree more acceptable to them: and as their dissent might cast a kind of stigma upon the individual rejected, and might have the appearance of a reflection upon the judgment of the chief magistrate, it is likely that they would often be refused, where there were not special and strong reasons for the refusal.

Hamilton concluded:

To what purpose then require the co-operation of the Senate? I answer, that the necessity of their concurrence would render the appointment power a powerful, though, in general, a silent operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President, and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity.

The first Congress included among its Members several of the Founders, had occasion to discuss the appointment power. Georgia’s Abrahan Baldwin, for one, had been a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, and then became a Congressman. In arguing against extending the Senate’s advice and consent power to removals from office, he said:

I am well authorized to say that the ministrations of the President and Senate was strongly opposed in the Convention which had the honor to submit to the consideration of the United States and the different States, the proposition for the government of the Union. Some gentlemen opposed it to the last, and finally it was the principal ground on which they refused to give it their signature and assent. One gentleman called it a monstrous and unnatural connection and did not hesitate to affirm it would bring on convulsions in the government. The obnoxious clause to the walls of the Convention; it has been subject of newspaper declamation and perhaps justly so. Ought we not, therefore, to be careful not extend this unchaste connection any further?

Similarly, James Madison became a Congressman in the first Congress, where he said:

Perhaps there was no argument urged with more success or more plausibly grounded against the Constitution under which we are now deliberating than that founded on the mingling of the executive and legislative branches of the Government in one body. It has been observed that the Senate have too much of the executive power even, by having control over the President in the appointment of officers. Notwithstanding this connection between the legislative and executive departments which will strengthen the Senate’s role in the nomination process, Hamilton wrote that he expected the Senate to reject nominees rather infrequently, but that the potential of such rejections would provide a useful check. Hamilton wrote:

The history of the clause by which the Senate was given a check upon the President’s power of appointment makes it clear that it was not prompted by any desire to limit the President’s uncontrolled power of appointment... Instead, the Senate was to concur, there would have been no indication that the President would be so much the less liable to be misled by the advice of the Senate. Hamilton also wrote of responsibility in the nomination process:

The sole and undivided responsibility of one man will naturally beget a livelier sense of the danger of a bad nomination. It is easy to show, that every advantage that the Executive departments which will strengthen the objection and diminish the responsibility we have in the head of the Executive? The Supreme Court in Myers v. United States concluded from this history that it should read narrowly the Senate’s power of advice and consent, saying, “Our conclusion . . . is . . . that the provision of the second section of Article II, which blend action by the legislative branch, or by part of it, in the work of the executive, are limitations to be strictly construed and not to be extended by implication . . . .” Let us now briefly to the history of the process of advice and consent in the Senate. Many of my colleagues will have read the excellent discussion of that history in volume 2, chapter 2, of Senator Byrd’s history of the Senate. For those who have not, I recommend it.

As my colleagues know, in the practices and precedents of the Senate, the Senate considers and approves the overwhelming majority of nominations as a matter of routine. Over the history of the Senate, the Senate has considered and approved literally millions of nominations.

The Senate Executive Journal began totaling the number of nominations received beginning in 1929. From that time until now, the Senate has received more than 2.9 million nominations and confirmed more than 2.8 million. Over that period, the Senate has confirmed 97.9 percent of the nominations that it received. Among those not confirmed, many simply remained unconfirmed at the end of a Congress.

The Senate’s voting to reject a nominee has been an exceedingly rare event. Of the 1.7 million nominees received by the Senate in the last 30 years, the Senate has voted to reject just 4, or one in every 425,000. Of course, Presidents often withdraw without a vote the nominations of those who likely face defeat.

The Senate’s voting to reject a nominee to the Cabinet has been of even more exceedingly rare event. Over the entire history of the Senate, the Senate has voted to reject only 9 nominations to the President’s Cabinet. The Senate rejected 6 in the 19th Century, and 3 in the 20th Century.

Four of the 9 Cabinet nominees rejected were during the Presidency of President Tyler alone. Several other rejections may be said to have flowed from between the vice-President and the President, as when the Senate rejected President Jackson’s nominee to be Secretary of the Treasury in the wake of the dispute over the Bank of the United States. Similarly, bad feelings after the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson led to the Senate’s rejection of President Johnson’s nomination of his counsel in the impeachment trial to be Attorney General.

In the 20th Century, the Senate rejected half as many Cabinet nominees as it did in the 19th Century. In the wake of the Teapot Dome scandal, the Senate voted down President Coolidge’s nomination of Charles Warren because of his ties to trusts. The Senate voted down President Eisenhower’s nomination of Lewis Strauss, some say because of Admiral Strauss’s lack of tact. Most recently, in 1989, the Senate rejected the nomination of Senator John Stennis to the Cabinet. The memory of the Senate will recall from their own memory.

This examination of the history demonstrates that it has been a nearly continuous custom of the Senate to confirm a President’s nominees to the Cabinet in all but the very rarest of circumstances. These practices and precedents thus support the principle that the Senate owes the President substantial deference in the selection of the Cabinet.

Bearing in mind this history and Hamilton’s admonition that the Senate’s “dissent might cast a kind of stigma upon the individual rejected, and might have the appearance of a reflection upon the judgment of the chief magistrate,” what then should be, in Hamilton’s words, the “special and strong reasons for the refusal” that should prompt the Senate to reject a nominee to the Cabinet?

It is in the nature of the Constitution’s grant of powers to the Senate that each Senator must make his or her own decision how to vote on nominees whom the Senate considers. It thus follows that each decision must to some extent be subjective. But we do our duty to the reputation of the Senate when we cannot articulate our reasons for rejecting a nominee as the expression of rules that could have universal application.

It is the nature of justice that different persons of similar circumstances should receive similar treatment. Let us do justice when the Senate exercises its role of advice and consent.

Let us examine nominees to see that they, in Blackstone’s words, “superiority of . . . abilities”; let us see that they are “most able to execute” the offices for which they are nominated.

Let us thoroughly investigate nominees’ competence and experience. Let us question whether they have taken actions that would lead us to doubt their ability fully and fairly to execute their offices.

Let us explore nominees’ integrity and the proper ethical bearing to administer the high trusts to which they are nominated.

And yes, let us guard against approving the nomination of an individual who stands so far at variance with the core values of this Nation—values of freedom, honesty, and equality—that we cannot realistically imagine the nominee’s being able to carry out the duties of an office in our American government. That will necessarily be a subjective judgment, but plainly a legitimate one.

But let us conduct our investigation in matters such as these that involve the lives and reputations of other people—people almost uniformly highly regarded in the community—with civility. Let us take pains to avoid casting the kind of personal “stigma” that Hamilton feared. And let us, when we hold the honor and careers of people in our hands, do what we can to diffuse the bitterness and vitriol that is being seized so much of official Washington.

I propose that we govern ourselves by principle, as a Democrat at the outset of a new Republican Presidency, in the hope that we may rise above that which has come to be expected of us help but express my objection to the attitude and approach that the Republican majority in the Senate took toward the nominees of the Democratic President since the Republicans took control of the majority in 1994.

In some respects, the Republican majority seemed not even to accept the legitimacy of President Clinton’s electoral victories in 1992 and 1996. Elections must have consequences. Senate rejections of nominees that they unfairly blocked very legitimate, qualified appointees such as Bill Lann Lee, Ronnie White, and James Hormel. I think this was wrong. But I propose that we Democrats not return the favor by cultivating a kindling hardening of our discourse. Rather, I propose that we treat this new Republican President the way that we would want a Republican majority to treat a Democratic President in the future.

It is not easy for me to tell those who fought so hard for President Clinton and then for Vice-President Gore that we should follow the Golden Rule, and that we should treat President Bush better than the Republican majority treated President Clinton. And should the new President abuse the Senate’s deference, there may come a point when we have to draw a line and say, “No more,” given the Republican majority’s refusal to accord a Democratic President the very deference that Republicans now seek.

I want to make clear the manner in which I have evaluated both of the controversial nominees before this body, the nominee we consider today, former Senator Ashcroft, and the nominee who was confirmed Tuesday, Ms. Norton. I am no more comfortable with these votes and appointments than anyone else of my personal ideological viewpoint.

I fully understand and have heard the pain expressed by my constituents who have strongly criticized these nominations and who devote their time and thought to building broader public support for an end to all forms of discrimination or for reproductive rights or for an environmentally sound energy policy or for wildlands protection. I must work hard every day on issues affecting the public interest and public welfare, and, in order to move a progressive agenda forward I must sit and listen and speak with those who deeply and profoundly disagree with me. These nominees and I do not agree on a number of issues. But the question that this body faces, and that I face as a member of it, is broader than whether or not we are having a referendum on the ideological views expressed by these nominees.

I have reflected and given thought to the deep historical and philosophical roots of the process of the Senate giving “advice and consent” to Cabinet nominees. In this history of the Senate’s treatment of Cabinet nominations, deference is an important principle. Lack of that deference on nominees and confirmation process that is undignified for the country, unlikely to produce outstanding public servants, and unable to advance the debate on matters of public policy.

I am attempting by these votes to assist in restoring the Senate’s credibility and trust, and I will use the powers of my office to make certain these nominees live up to the views they have expressed to this body under oath.

And let me underscore that I have risen to the occasion of these nominations to the Cabinet, who will serve for a term of years, and whom we should consider under a far looser standard than that we should apply to judges and certainly justices, who will serve for life.

But I fear that in the process of giving its advice and consent with regard to nominations to the President’s Cabinet, the Senate is positioning itself to head down a road to a dangerous place. Let us decide not to go down that road.

Let us not go down the road to where those who seek public office must all their life avoid any forceful public utterance. Let us not go down the road to where express is squelched and thoughts are stifled.

Let us not go down the road to where public discourse is barren because no public leaders dare write articles declaring their views.

Let us not go down the road to where Senators fear to take a position, make a statement, or cosponsor a bill on a controversial issue, like the death penalty—one way or the other—just to avoid a confirmation fight.

Let us not go down the road to that frozen place where the Senate’s nomination process imposes a deep chill over political discourse among all who would someday hold office.

And let us not go down a road to where in order to serve our Country, one must become like milk toast, like Pabulum.

But let us work together in this government, working with vigorous minds who may sometimes have vigorous opinions.

The American People expect this Senate and this government, divided as it is, to govern. We owe them no less than to try to do so.

Now is not too soon to start. I extend to President Bush the hand of cooperation as he begins his administration. I will cast my votes on nominations he proposes according to these principles, and hope that the President and the majority will return the favor, and work together with us in a truly bipartisan manner.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. President, the United States Constitution expressly grants to the Senate the prerogative, responsibility, and duty to determine its “advice and consent” to the nominations of all Presidents. This is an important, even awesome mandate for a few who others’ one’s religion might be a consideration in this or any other decision I make. I unequivocally reject that type of thinking and believe my own long record proves otherwise.

John Ashcroft has been honest in his convictions and his principles, and he has fashioned his public life working to advance his firmly held beliefs. He is a man of strong, unbending ideology—so unbending, in fact, that this is what the Attorney General is to reflect the broad spectrum of America’s philosophical and cultural backgrounds.

Of course, without exception, they appear to represent the views of the President who nominated them. Beyond their fundamental ability to do the job, their views and ideologies have been of little consequence to my decisions. Instead, an important additional characteristic I have looked for, particularly at a time in our nation’s history, is a proven ability to bring people together. I seek nominees who will welcome diverse points of view and who will lead in building consensus. In that vein, I have given my full support to 18 of the cabinet nominations sent to the Senate by President Bush this year.

The nominee before us today, however, is not one I can support.

The United States Attorney General has a particularly compelling and important role, as evidenced by this vigorous debate. The Attorney General is known as the President’s legal advisor and the people’s lawyer. He or she is charged with leading our nation in interpreting, enforcing, and upholding our laws. He must be a person who embodies balance and evenhandedness, so that all of our citizens feel fully and fairly represented by his actions. He must be able to contribute in a meaningful way to the great challenge of uniting our nation. That is my test for this nomination.

Former Senator John Ashcroft is a man that I have come to know here in the United States Senate. I have served with him on the Senate Commerce Committee and spent many hours observing and participating with him in debate. Throughout his service here, and earlier as Governor and Attorney General in the State of Missouri, he has shown a strong moral compass and passionately held views about what he wants for our country and its citizens.

As Senate colleagues, we have sometimes agreed, and more often disagreed on policy and legislation. In many cases, his legislative agenda was not one that I thought helped or protected West Virginia’s working families, seniors and children. But, again, my test for Attorney General is not whether I share John Ashcroft’s views on any particular issue or controversy.

I have great respect for John Ashcroft as a person of deeply held religious beliefs, and his particular faith is of no consequence for me in this decision. In fact, I have been personally opposed to the idea that some one’s religion might be a consideration in this or any other decision I make.

The problem is not John Ashcroft’s ideology, it is the fact that he never seems able to look beyond that ideology to respect and encompass others’ equally strong beliefs and convictions.

There is nothing in his long history of public service to suggest he can rise to the challenge of being a uniter, someone who can compromise when necessary to bring us all together.

Furthermore, I have heard John Ashcroft’s promise to uphold and enforce our laws, and I take him at his word. But the question of his nomination and the role of Attorney General are not that simple. If they were, then every person nominated to a position charged with upholding the law would be approved—every judge, every U.S. Attorney, every Cabinet Secretary. Reasonable people have honest disagreements about what the law says and how to apply it in different situations. The law is not always precise, and the path to justice is not always clearly marked.

The Attorney General instead has a great deal of discretion, and he must bring to that discretion his own standards, experiences and beliefs. Deciding which cases to defend and which to prosecute, which judges and proposed changes in the law to support and which to oppose, where to dedicate limited resources and where to cut back all are tasks that call for objectivity, balance, and leadership.

Mr. President, after carefully reviewing all the circumstances, and after lengthy personal reflection, I am not convinced that John Ashcroft can do the job of Attorney General without returning to his life-long rejection of moderation and conciliation.

John Ashcroft proudly judges issues and people on the basis of his own strong ideology. Time and again I have seen John Ashcroft show hostility and insensitivity toward those who disagree with him or who hold ideals and values that differ from his. He has never hesitated to use his views as a test to judge others. This uncompromising approach is not what I think our country wants and expects from its leaders.

I do not stand in judgment of my former Senate colleague, but I must reject his nomination for Attorney General.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I had every intention to once again, as I have done in the past, support the President's choice of Cabinet members. The President was elected, he selected his team, and his choices should be respected. In the case of former Senator John Ashcroft's nomination as the U.S. Attorney General, the President's choice will be respected by a majority vote of the Senate. However, if I supported the nomination of Senator Ashcroft, my vote may be misunderstood by my supporters and constituents, but by many others.

It should also be noted that the Constitution reserves to the Senate the power of advice and consent as to the President's nominations. I hope that my colleagues and I have the opportunity to focus on the consistent and approach of several of my colleagues, will advise the President of our concerns as to his nomination of Senator Ashcroft.

As a person, my experience in serving with Senator Ashcroft has been a positive one. We have had many occasions casting my vote in disagreement with Senator Ashcroft. For example, he is for the death penalty; I am against the death penalty. He supports doing away with abortion; I am for freedom of choice. I have also examined Senator Ashcroft's record away from Capitol Hill, and I have found that his actions have been consistent with the views he held when we were colleagues on the floor of the Senate.

Senator Ashcroft's actions (_and the area of civil rights raise questions as to his commitment to preserving the civil rights of all Americans. As the Governor of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft vetoed bills designed to ensure the equal treatment of African American voters. As the Attorney General of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft actively obstructed the voluntary desegregation plan for the City of St. Louis._ Similarly, Senator Ashcroft's record on reproductive rights causes me some concern. Throughout his political life, Senator Ashcroft has believed that there is no constitutional right to abortion, and has worked to overturn Roe v. Wade by State and Federal legislation and by constitutional amendment. Senator Ashcroft's persistent efforts to limit reproductive rights as Missouri's attorney general and Governor, and as a U.S. Senator suggest the policies he might endorse as the U.S. Attorney General.

I realize that I may be in the minority in my opposition to the death penalty, but I have been against execution as a criminal punishment since the start of my political career. For example, I coauthored the measure in the Territorial Legislature of Hawaii that abolished capital punishment, and from that time forward, no convicted criminal in Hawaii has been put to death. Senator Ashcroft does not share my view. As Governor of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft took the position that the death penalty was appropriate for teenagers, and denied that there is any racial disparity in the application of the death penalty.

In addition, Senator Ashcroft took the position that the death penalty points to opposition to the voluntary desegregation plan for the City of St. Louis.

As the Attorney General of Missouri, Senator Ashcroft has worked to overturn abortion, and has worked to overturn abortion rights. He has defended the constitutionality of the laws prohibiting abortion clinics, despite any misgivings he might have about that law. I take him at his word. Although, I do not agree with all of Senator Ashcroft's views, I have no cause to doubt Senator Ashcroft's word or his sincerity regarding his fealty to an oath he will swear before God Almighty. It would be an act of supreme arrogance on my part to doubt his intention to honor such an oath. I will not prejudge him in such a manner.

Given Senator Ashcroft's background, the position to which he has been nominated, and his assurances to the Senate that he will faithfully uphold the laws of the United States, I believe he should be confirmed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as we prepare to close debate on the nomination of our former colleague, Senator John Ashcroft to be the Attorney General for the United States, I want to thank a few people. First, let me thank Senator LEAHY, the Ranking Member of the Judiciary Committee. He faced a difficult task in organizing the hearing for this nomination and working for a fair process. I want to express my gratitude to him and commend his staff, including the Minority Chief Counsel, Bruce Cohen, Senator LEAHY's General Counsel, Beryl Howell, Mary DeOreo, Natalie Carter, and others.

I would also like to thank the other members of the committee for their cooperation, particularly let me thank Senator KYL, who has been a tremendous advocate in the effort supporting this nomination, and let me also mention Senator SESSIONS for his hard work in behalf of the nomination.

I also want to commend those Senators on the other side of the aisle, who despite intense pressure from and relentless lobbying by a number of left-wing groups have stood up for what they believed was right and announced their support for this nominee. I especially want to express my gratitude to the Judiciary Committee, Senator FEINGOLD, how much my respect for him has grown watching him speak in support of and cast his vote for John Ashcroft. I know that he has been targeted by petitions and email campaigns orchestrated by People for the American Way and others to pressure him. And let me also thank my Committee staff who worked tirelessly, but let me especially recognize the Committee’s Chief Counsel, Sharon Prost, the Committee’s Staff Director, Makan Delrahim, our fine and able counselors, Shawn Bentley, Stephen Higgins, Ed Haden, Rhett DeHart, Gary Malphrus, Rita Larr, Lee Chrin, Nomi Rao, Rene Augustine, Pat O’Brien, Larry Block, Alex Dahl, Jeff Taylor, Leah Belaire, and John Kennedy, and our valued staff members, Amy Haywood, Kent Cook, Jessica Caseman, Swen Prior, and Jared Garner, and of course our most able press staff, who kept us informed of the smear campaigns, Jeanne Lopatto and Margarita Tapia. They all worked together as a team with numerous others, including Senator Gramm’s staff, Senator Bond’s staff, as well as the able staff of the Senate Leadership, particularly Dave Hoppe and Robert Wilkie of Senator Lott’s staff and Stewart Verdery of Senator Nickles’ staff.

Now let me turn to the nomination itself. Mr. President, I believe we are about to confirm one of the most qualified candidates for the office of Attorney General that we have ever had. John Ashcroft has superb credentials, and he is well-prepared to be Attorney General. In addition to graduating from one of our finest law schools, here is a man who has almost 30 years of public service to this country—eight years as Attorney General of his home state of Missouri, during which time he was elected by his peers, the 50 state attorneys general, Democrats and Republicans, to become the president of the National Association of Attorneys General. Then he was twice elected governor of Missouri, and again elected by his peers, the 50 state governors, to head the National Governors Association. And then he was elected by Missourians to serve with us here in the United States Senate, where we all came to respect him for his work ethic and his integrity.

As a matter of fact, I don’t know of one Senator in the whole United States Senate who would disagree with the statement that this is an honorable man of integrity. When he says he’ll do something, he’ll do it. I don’t know anybody, who, knowing his record and his life, who would conclude that John Ashcroft has said anything but the truth about the finest people they’ve ever met.

But during this process, I think that we have seen some attempts here to undermine a truly good man. Some things have been done throughout this process that were outside the bounds of policy debate, beyond what is decent and right. In the zeal to take a political stand against this nominee for whatever reason, I believe there have been numerous distortions and, I think, distortions that were neither fair nor accurate. I have tried to help rebut these charges, but they ought not to have been made.

Despite these attacks, I do not believe this good man, this man of deep faith and conviction, will take offense or hold grudges. I believe he will do what he has promised to do. He will be inclusive, forthright, and he will follow the law. He will be an Attorney General for all the people and be an Attorney General of whom we can all be proud. I know he will because I know John Ashcroft, as most of us do. I know he is well-prepared. And I know when he promises to discharge his duties with fidelity, to law and Constitution, enlisting the help and witness of God to do so, he means it, and he will do it.

I look forward to working with him to help make our nation safer, more just, and more in line with our founding principles, embodied in our Constitution. His job is largely about making our nation more safe and free. I am glad we will have an Attorney General who will work toward that goal.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not been ordered.

Mr. LOTT. I ask for the yeas and nays on this vote after my closing remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FitzGerald). Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, one other inquiry: Has all time been used except for the time reserved for the majority leader?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I want to begin by assuring all of my colleagues that I will not use the entire 15 minutes, so we can begin the vote hopefully 5 or 10 minutes early. Senators need to be aware of that so they can come and begin the vote within the next 10 minutes.

Mr. President, this nomination has not been an easy one for the Senate Judiciary Committee or the Senate to deal with without some difficulty. You can argue about why that is. But we have come to it, and now we are ready to vote.

Only nine times in our history has the Senate defeated one of the President’s nominees for his Cabinet and only once since 1950. As a new Senator in 1988, I observed what I thought was a terrible miscarriage of justice against former Senator John Tower. John Tower should have been Secretary of Defense. I was really disappointed in how he was savaged and how some of his colleagues in this body treated him.

Only one time in 40 years have we not confirmed the President’s nomination for a Cabinet position, and that, I am convinced, was a terrible mistake.

Today we will confirm former Senator John Ashcroft to be Attorney General. That is as it should be.

I have been disappointed by this nomination’s process through the Judiciary Committee, and to a degree here, although less so on the floor of the Senate. I thought the rhetoric got too hot. It did get into the range of being unfair. But I don’t think we should let that permanently alter the atmosphere we have tried to set in this Senate.

I have tried to highlight to those of you some items that would allow us to move forward in a positive vein.

I think congratulations also would be in order, and certainly a word of appreciation for the leadership on the Democratic side of the aisle. Senator Daschle has tried to help get us through this nomination. He made it clear that he would not participate in a filibuster. I do not recall in the 30-something years I have been watching the Senate very closely a Cabinet nomination being filibustered. It would be a terrible precedent. He spoke out, saying he wouldn’t do it, that he wouldn’t support it. To those who said we shouldn’t have a filibuster, I say thank you for that.

There will be those who will speak out about what this vote means, if it is not 60 votes, or if it is 69 over 61, or whatever it may be. I think that will be a futile waste of time. I don’t think we should read anything into it. This nominee is going to be confirmed, and he should be. The President of the United States, George W. Bush, is entitled to have his selection to be Attorney General.

I want to say also that I know John Ashcroft. I know him as a man. I knew him as a Senator. I knew him as a close personal friend, and I knew him as a member of the Singing Senators as we sang all across this country together. I have been in his home. I know his wife. I know his children. I know his constituents. I have been all over Missouri. He has been in my home. He knows my friends, and we have been together in many instances. I don’t know this person, who has been described in the course of the debate, the allegations about things he did, or didn’t do, or whether or not he is a man of his word. I do not know that person.
know John Ashcroft. I know the man who served in this Chamber. I know his abilities, his education, and his qualifications. I don’t think there has ever been a more qualified person by background, education, and experience to be Attorney General than John Ashcroft.

I remind you that 8 years ago, when I voted to confirm the previous Attorney General, thinking that this nominee was not qualified, and I think she proved it. But I voted for her because I thought President Clinton was entitled to his nominee at that point.

So we have a man who is qualified. But it is more than that. John Ashcroft is a good man of high veracity and who will keep his word.

Senator BYRD said yesterday, I believe, in his speech that he has made a commitment he is going to uphold the law. What more should we want: A pound of flesh?

I realize this is all about other things. That is OK. But it is unfair to this man.

Maybe the ravens will be heard never more. But forevermore you can quote me on this and remind me on this. John Ashcroft will go on to be one of the best Attorneys General we have ever had. He will be conscientious, he will show capability. He will be sensitive. He will be honest. He will enforce the laws—some laws that have been ignored the last 8 years—and maybe there are some people who are a little nervous about that. But, as we say in all kinds of different circles in America, I am here to vouch for their man. I vouch for John Ashcroft. I will stand by him. And you mark my words, he will go on to be a great and valuable Attorney General.

So let’s move on. Let’s work together, as I know we can do.

I accept the olive branch extended by Senator RUSS FEINGOLD. That is what he said. I extend the olive branch to show willingness to work together and reach across the aisle and across all the other things that could divide us. He showed courage. I will not forget it. In fact, I think I may have forgotten it in advance because we have already worked out an agreement on how we are going to bring up a bill about which he cares a lot.

But that was an important statement on his part. I accept it. We accept it. That is the way we should proceed.

The new President has changed the tone in this city. Absolutely, people are astounded by his willingness to reach out and to listen and to be heard. He is meeting with everybody. He has even seen motion pictures with them. So he is doing his part. Let us make sure the Senate does its part.

Vote for John Ashcroft. You won’t regret it. Then let’s move on to important legislation. Let’s argue about ideas. Let’s argue about how to make education better. Let’s argue about how to make the tax relief—“return to sender,” as the Senator from Georgia said. That is what the people want us to talk about. They want to get this vicious and partisan stuff behind us and deal with real issues. I don’t think insurmountable damage has been done. I believe we can build on the other things we have done in the last month.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Does the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of John Ashcroft of Missouri to be Attorney General of the United States? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 42, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of Illinois, I now ask consent that the Senate be in a period for morning business.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS RULES—107TH CONGRESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senate Appropriations Committee has adopted rules governing its procedures for the 107th Congress. Pursuant to Rule XXVI, paragraph 2, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, on behalf of myself and Senator BYRD I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Committee rules be printed in the RECORD. The objection being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE RULES 107TH CONGRESS

I. Meetings

The Committee will meet at the call of the Chairman.

II. Quorums

1. Reporting a bill. A majority of the Members must be present for the reporting of a bill.

2. Other business. For the purpose of transacting business other than reporting a bill or taking testimony, one-third of the Members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum.

3. Taking testimony. For the purpose of taking testimony, other than sworn testimony, by the Committee or any subcommittee, one member of the Committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum.

4. Purpose of taking sworn testimony by the Committee, three members shall constitute a quorum, and for the taking of sworn testimony by any subcommittee, one member shall constitute a quorum.

III. Proxies

Except for the reporting of a bill, votes may be cast by proxy when any member so requests.

IV. Attendance of staff members at closed sessions

Attendance of Staff Members at closed sessions of the Committee shall be limited to those members of the Committee Staff that have a responsibility associated with the matter being considered at such meeting. This rule may be waived by unanimous consent.

V. Broadcasting and photographing of Committee hearing

The Committee or any of its subcommittees may permit the photographing and broadcasting of open hearings by television and/or radio. However, if any member of a subcommittee objects to the photographing or broadcasting of an open hearing, the question shall be referred to the Full Committee for its decision.

VI. Availability of subcommittee reports

To the extent possible, when the bill and report of any subcommittee are available, they shall be furnished to each member of the Committee thirty-six hours prior to the Committee’s consideration of said bill and report.

VII. Amendments and report language

To the extent possible, amendments and report language intended to be proposed by Senators at Full Committee markups shall be provided in writing to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member and the appropriate Subcommittee Chairman and Ranking Minority Member twenty-four hours prior to such markups.

VIII. Points of order

Any member of the Committee who is floor manager of an appropriation bill, is hereby authorized to make points of order against any amendment offered in violation of the Senate Rules on the floor of the Senate to such appropriation bill.

FALSE CLAIMS ACT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I want to speak about an important issue for the taxpayers of this country. The government’s strongest and most effective tool against fraud is called the False Claims Act. In recent years, the False Claims Act has been under attack from industries targeted by the government’s anti-fraud efforts. Since Congress, amendments that I sponsored to toughen the law than $4 billion has been recovered through the False Claims Act. Hundreds of billions more in fraud have been saved through the deterrent effect that this law has upon those who would betray the public’s interest.

In addition to the recovery of money and the deterrent effect of this law, the False Claims Act is important for another, perhaps, more important reason. The fact is that the False Claims Act is being used, day after day, by prosecutors to maintain the integrity of countless federal programs funded by American taxpayers. For example, the False Claims Act is being used in the health care industry to ensure that nursing home residents receive quality care.

Included in the anti-fraud arsenal of the False Claims Act is a provision called qui tam. Qui tam is a concept that goes back to feudal times, where private citizens who know of fraud against the taxpayers to bring a lawsuit against the perpetrators. In other words, the citizen acts as a partner with the government. As an incentive, the citizen shares in any monetary recovery to the U.S. Treasury. Over the decades, the False Claims Act, and especially the qui tam provisions, proved to be effective, both in catching and deterring fraud.

In considering the nomination of my former colleague, Senator John Ashcroft, for the position of Attorney General of the United States, I asked about his support for False Claims Act and the qui tam provisions. Senator Ashcroft’s January 31, 2001 letter assures me that he will not support efforts to weaken the Act, and will support efforts to strengthen it. This pledge of support will ensure that the Department of Justice plays the critical and necessary role of targeting government waste and abuse. Senator Ashcroft assures that he will support “vigorous enforcement of the law” and “will defend the constitutionality of the Act.” I appreciate Senator Ashcroft’s support for the False Claims Act, which is dedicated to enforcing the laws of this country and understands the importance of the False Claims Act.

All in all the history of the assault on the False Claims Act sends us on a long and winding road. The False Claims Act is, and will remain, a target of those industries and accept billions and billions of taxpayer dollars annually and balk at strict accountability. I ask only that, as legislators, remember the historical and current assaults on the False Claims Act. I ask further that we agree to be strong despite the strength of an industry, simply because it is the “right” thing to do. Taxpayers deserve no less—and as legislators, we should deliver no less.

I ask unanimous consent that the January 31, 2001 letter I received from Senator Ashcroft be considered as read and printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. CHARLES GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senate
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRASSLEY: Thank you for your letter of January 30, 2001, concerning the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act. I believe that the False Claims Act and the qui tam provision in particular are vital tools in combating government fraud and abuse. I fully support vigorous enforcement of the law.

Tackling government fraud and abuse through the False Claims Act will be an important priority for the Justice Department. Indeed, I expect that the sustained efforts of the Justice Department will in some respects lessen the need for (but not the importance of) private attorneys general acting pursuant to the qui tam provisions of the Act. I can assure you that I will defend the constitutionality of the Act, and indeed, will support efforts to strengthen the Act and ensure that the Justice Department plays a critical role in targeting government waste and abuse.

I look forward to working with you on these issues. Sincerely,

JOHN ASHCROFT.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RETIREMENT OF HERSCHEL CUTLER

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise today to acknowledge the retirement of Dr. Herschel Cutler from the Institute of Scrap Recycling Industries, ISRI. Dr. Cutler, ISRI’s former Executive Director, spent the last 33 years of his life teaching the Nation, including the Congress, about the environmental and economic benefits of recycling. In the course of his tenure, ISRI has become a highly respected trade association known for its dedication to both environmental protection and private sector entrepreneurialism. He had a wonderful knack for hiring extraordinary staff. And, by example, Herschel taught them to do their homework, acquire a deep understanding of their issues, keep their standards high, develop reasonable solutions to problems and, with regard to public policy, to never overreach.

Herschel Cutler is not an Arkansan. But, shortly after my first election to serve as a member of the other body, I met him over dinner through fellow Arkansans whose family recycling business was a member company. During that dinner Herschel gave me a succinct but thorough description of a serious dilemma facing the scrap recycling industry and its possible resolution. After listening to him discuss the concerns facing the many families in the recycling industry, including many Arkansas families, it was easy for me, a farmer’s daughter, to identify with a key concern facing them. That is, certain government policies were inadvertently, having the effect of causing many recycling families to wonder whether they should remain with their businesses.

That dinner was the beginning of a long and fruitful relationship between me, Dr. Cutler, and the entire scrap recycling industry. Herschel Cutler’s earnest integrity convinced me that the recyclers’ cause was worth fighting for. I began that fight in 1993. It ended in 1999, after I teamed up with Senators DASCHLE AND LOTT, BAUCUS, and CHafee to amend the Superfund law to correct a mistake directed at recyclers that nobody had intended.

Dr. Herschel Cutler and I have been fast friends ever since. As he retires on January 31, 2001, I cannot thank him enough for his guidance and his counsel to me over the years since we first met. He is truly a modest man of great wisdom, integrity and intellect. Upon his retirement the Washington association community is much the poorer. And with his counsel absent from the daily give and take of public policy discussions in the Congress, so are all of his many friends in both houses.

Herschel, I wish you the best fishing, reading, writing, and enjoying your retirement. I’m sure your legions of friends would agree, your friendship has been a blessing to us all.

TRIBUTE TO MAJOR GENERAL TIMOTHY P. MALISHENKO, USAF

Mr. DeWINE. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to General Timothy P. Malishenko, USAF, upon his retirement from the United States Air Force after more than 32 years of distinguished and dedicated service to our Nation.

A son of Ohio, Tim Malishenko grew up not far from my Greene County neighborhood, where his mom and dad were customers of my family’s seed, grain, and lumber business. After graduating from Fairborn High School, he went on to The Ohio State University, where he earned a degree in business and honors as a distinguished ROTC graduate. This marked the beginning of what developed into an extraordinary Air Force career, in which Tim rose to the pinnacle of the complex and demanding world of Defense acquisition.

As a young officer, Tim Malishenko served in a variety of contracting and contract-administration assignments related to major programs, including the Polaris and Poseidon missiles and the F-15 Radar. His organizational and crisis-management skills came to the forefront during the 1974 oil embargo, when, as a charter member of the Air Force Energy Management Division, he worked tirelessly to mitigate the effects of the supply disruption and safeguard America’s military readiness.

From there, Tim went on to work in classified space and satellite programs. He graduated from the Armed Forces Staff College in 1981, then headed for Brunssum, The Netherlands, where he was chief of contracting and acquisition for the NATO Airborne Early Warning and Control Programme Management Agency. In the NATO assignment, Tim demonstrated the ability to listen, tact, and diplomacy in reconciling the diverse views and priorities of 13 countries.

Returning stateside in 1982, Tim again served in a variety of contracting and contract-administration positions, including high-level management assignments at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and at Air Force headquarters in Washington, DC. Of particular note during this period was his extensive involvement in the research and development contracts for the advanced tactical fighter, integrated avionics, and high-speed integrated circuitry—programs that set the stage for the information technologies and advanced avionics we know today.

Four years ago, General Malishenko was named commander of the Defense Contract Management Command, an organization of more than 14,000 people responsible for the management of 375,000 contracts with a value of $100 billion. As commander, he was the standard bearer for a revolution in business affairs that led to the conversion of more than 300 business sectors to ISO 9000, to dramatic advances in paperless contracting, and to the design and introduction of the DoD standard procurement system.

The capstone of Tim’s military career came on March 27, 2000, when he became the first director of the Defense Contract Management Agency (DCMA), the position he holds at the time of his retirement. In successfully spearheading the establishment of DCMA, Major General Malishenko brought to fruition a recommendation put forth in 1983 by Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara’s Project 60, which called for the eventual creation of a separate Defense agency responsible for contract management.

Under the general’s direction, DCMA has engineered as a Combat Support Agency—one that has markedly trans-}

IN RECOGNITION OF DEBRA L. FERLAND
• MR. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Ms. Debra Ferland, who is being installed as the president of the Women’s Council of the National Association of Home Builders on February 11, 2001 in Atlanta, Georgia. I would like to thank her for her twenty-three years of work, and honor her for her achievements within the housing industry.

After graduating from the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth, Debra began her long and admirable career by working for several prominent national property management firms, including the Caruso Management, Inc. She has been a Construction Manager at HUD approved rehabs, consulted for rent supplement and Section 8 programs, and is currently Director of Special Projects at the Ferland Corporation.

Debra has taken an active role in the industry on both a state and national level by assuming numerous leadership roles, including local Council President, Membership Chair, and National Convention Chairman. She has been appointed as a member of both the Labor Shortage Task Force and the National Association of Home Builders Capital Club, and is the Women’s Council Life Director.

In addition to her tremendous career achievements, Debra has devoted herself to family, including her husband A. Austin Ferland, her daughter Nicole, and her extended family of Fred, Debrah, and four year old grandson, Ben. She is a chef and an avid golfer, and has displayed her commitment to her local community through Habitat for Humanity, the Lincoln School for Girls, and the Tomorrow Fund.

The citizens of Rhode Island are indeed fortunate to have such a diverse and dedicated professional as Commissioner of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. As the first Commissioner to serve in two different centuries, Mr. Martinez assumed control over the nation’s second largest wholesale water supplier and hydroelectric power producer, where he was appointed by the President in 1995. A native of Cordova in Rio Arriba County, New Mexico, Commissioner Martinez was the first member of his family to receive a college degree. He holds an undergraduate degree in civil engineering from New Mexico State University and is a licensed Professional Engineer and Land Surveyor.

During his tenure Commissioner Martinez has been recognized by many Reclamation stakeholders for his even-handed approach in addressing western water and power issues. He received the Statesman of the Year award by the National Water Resources Association in November, 2000, for his diligence in helping solve the chronic water shortages in the western United States. He has been responsible for implementing the Bureau of Reclamation transition to a water resources agency with responsibilities for delivering projects to states while balancing the conflicting demands of Reclamation’s constituencies.

Commissioner Martinez’ professionalism and expertise in his field has gained him the respect of all members of Congress who have worked with him.

Commissioner Martinez has been a leader in privatizing Reclamation projects wherever possible, returning projects to the users who paid for them. He has been an important factor in implementing legislatively mandated environmental requirements, and trying to stretch a finite supply of water to an ever thirsty West. Commissioner Martinez has endeavored to create a more diverse workforce to ensure benefits while balancing the conflicting demands of Reclamation’s constituencies.

Before entering Federal service, Eluid Martinez retired as the State Engineer for New Mexico. He has served as Secretary of the New Mexico Interstate Stream Commission, as the New Mexico Commissioner to six Interstate Compact Commissions, and as a member of the New Mexico State Reclamation Commissioner. He has held executive positions in 12 regional and national water associations, but, as the parent of three children, took the time to run for and serve as President of the City of Santa Fe School Board.

Filling many positions over a 27 year career in the State Engineer’s office, Eluid Martinez developed many skills that served him well as Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation. His service to New Mexico started when the State Highway Department in 1968 and subsequently in the State Engineer’s Office included positions as Chief of the Hydrographic Survey Section, Acting
TRIBUTE TO THOMAS C. RYAN

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to a man of true courage, a man of boundless compassion, and a man of great character. Today, I rise to pay tribute to fellow Rutland, Vermont resident and friend to many, Tom Ryan. Tom was born October 14, 1930, the son of Charles F. and Mary Ryan. He graduated from Mt. St. Joseph Academy in 1948, from Georgetown University, Magna Cum Laude, in 1952 and the Wharton School of Business MBA program in 1955.

Bound by a sense of duty and service to country, Tom courageously served as a captain in the U.S. Air Force during the Korean War, and later continued his service in the Reserves.

Tom was a model citizen and a businessman, yet he was always more focused on people than on profit. In his eloquent eulogy, Stephen K. Ryan called his father, Tom a ‘leader,’ and I can’t think of a more dedicated community leader than Tom. He served on numerous boards, including: the Vermont Achievement Center; Vermont Children’s Aid Society; Small Business Investment Corp.; Economic Development Council for Southwestern Vermont; Vermont Development Credit Corp.; Vermont Bankers Association; Rotary Club; Rutland Down Town Development Corp.; Rutland County Solid Waste; United Way; Paramount Theatre; Residential Redevelopment Housing; and College of St. Joseph. I worked together with Tom in the effort to restore the Paramount Theatre to its original grandeur, and I’m so glad he was able to witness the fruits of his labor and the historic revitalization of our historic downtown.

Stephen mentioned that Tom was ‘proudest of the twelve years he served on the board of Rutland Hospital; bringing a better standard of care to the families of Rutland.’ As Chairman of the Senate Health Committee, I know that health care is one of the most important issues facing our country today, and I have enormous respect for those individuals working hard on the local level to improve the lives of patients and their families.

Stephen stated that Tom ‘was involved in politics, but he was not political.’ He ran for lieutenant governor in 1982, served in the Reserves and was appointed to the state transportation board in 1991. In every political endeavor, Tom was passionate but respectful, tough but civil.

My wife, Liz, new Tom’s lovely wife, Mary, through their mutual interest in quilting. Liz used to tell me how Tom was an avid gardener, constantly improving the landscape surrounding their house and tending to his gardens. He loved his gardens so much, in fact, that family and friends were known to give him rocks for his birthday!

But Liz and I both know that his greatest love was for Mary and their wonderful children, Stephen of Reston, Virginia, Kate Ryan Whittum of Interlaken, New Hampshire, and Maura C. Ryan of Portland, Maine. He had his priorities in line and was always there for his loved ones.

The editorial in the Rutland Daily Herald on October 18th, stated, ‘If any single word were appropriate for Tom Ryan, it would be ‘kindness.’’ For me, it would be hard to describe Tom in one word, for he exemplified so many qualities for so many people. You will be greatly missed, Tom, but your legacy will live on in our hearts, our minds and your work that we will strive to continue.

A TRIBUTE TO BERNARD R. DICK

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I stand before you today to pay tribute to Bernard R. Dick, a distinguished citizen of my hometown, Rutland, Vermont and a man who I have deeply respected and admired my entire life. I think highly of Bernie’s talent as a lawyer, respected immensely his service to his country, and admired his devotion to family and community.

I ask that the Rutland Daily Herald editorial from January 8, 2001, be included in the record as part of this tribute:

The death of Bernard R. Dick this past weekend marks the end of another distinguished and longtime Rutland legal career. Only recently came the deaths of two other local attorneys of note—Barry J. Costello and Thomas Ryan.

Bernie Dick, born in 1909 to a Rutland family, was a whiz at baseball at Rutland High School, where he made his mark as varsity catcher. It was a role he remembered long after he reached adulthood, and for years he could be seen in the audience when the RHS baseball team played ball games.

His education was quite varied. After graduating from Rutland High he went to the University of Alabama. After college graduation in 1933 he studied law at New York University. He was admitted to the bar in Vermont in 1937.

As with many young men of his time, Bernie Dick was swept up in the swirl of World War II. Eventually, after Pearl Harbor, he enlisted in the Army as a private in November 1942. Because of his law degree he was stationed in Hawaii, where by 1946 he had reached the rank of captain.

In Hawaii he became chief of the claims division of the central Pacific area, and for his work received the Army Commendation Ribbon. The citation said, in part: ‘He reviewed and made recommendations for the payment, disallowance or collection of almost 1,000 claims. So expert were his decisions that no claim reviewed by him and subsequently appealed has been reversed. He demonstrated a high degree of professional skill and efficiency.’

After his honorable discharge in 1946, Dick returned to Rutland and resumed his practice in the law firm of Bove, Billado and Dick. It was an active law firm in many fields, including politics. The senior partner, Peter A. Bove, was an active supporter of Gov. Ernest W. Gibson and U.S. Sen. George D. Aiken. Francis Billado ultimately went to the Legislature and was elected Vermont assistant governor, a post he held until his death.

In legal practice Dick was the one who kept to the daily grind, but the three partners shared ownership with some Castleton people to run a popular summer dance hall at Bomoseen and the Cricket Bowl facility on Lake Bomoseen, among several enterprised.

In 1947 Dick was named judge of the Rutland Municipal Court, in line with the policy of Governor Gibson, himself a veteran, to name veterans to public posts. The municipal court system preceded the present system of district courts throughout Vermont, legal political guessing as to who would be named by the governor. His Army experience served him well, and Dick served four years.

After the departure of Bove and Billado to other jobs, Bernie Dick ran his own practice for a while, and in 1949 formed a new legal association with Donald A. Haskell and Richard A. Hull. It was the latest step in a long and varied Rutland legal career.

Bernie, you will be sorely missed by all those who knew you, and by an entire community who benefitted from your knowledge, hard work and many talents.

A TRIBUTE TO BARTLEY J. COSTELLO

Mr. JEFFORDS. I rise today to pay tribute to a great Vermont and national leader from my hometown of Rutland, Bartley J. Costello.

Bart will be remembered by all who knew him for his commitment to... church and family, dedication to community and country, and generosity to his fellow man. A lifelong resident of Rutland, he gave much of himself to our great city, through charities, community organizations and Christ the King Church.

Bart was educated at Holy Innocents Primary School, Mount St. Joseph Academy, the University of Vermont and Albany Law School. His first job was as a teacher at the Muddy Brook School in Williston. He returned to Rutland to work at Howe Scale Co, and served as the assistant Rutland City Treasurer before joining the U.S. Army Air Corps and serving his country in World War II. He reached the rank of Captain before being discharged at the end of the war and returning home to Rutland.

A lawyer in Rutland for forty years with the firm of Webber and Costello, later Webber, Costello and Chapman, Bart was a distinguished member of the Bar, deeply respected and admired by my father, Chief Justice of the Vermont Supreme Court.

Bart was an excellent trial lawyer and a match for the best. And he had a wonderful sense of humor. Bart loved to tell the story of a jury selection and a match for the best. And he had a way of telling the story of a jury selection when an aunt of his on the panel remained silent when the opposing attorney asked if any of the jurors knew Mr. Costello. Later, after excusing his aunt for obvious reasons, Bart asked her why she had kept quiet. “Well,” she said, “I felt you would need all the help you could get.”

I also knew him as an avid golfer and consummate sportsman. He and his lovely wife, Catherine, who survives him, were the perfect golfing couple, courteous and competitive, fun-loving and intense.

Bart, as well as Catherine, were blessed with four outstanding sons, Bartley III and Thomas, who are trial lawyers in Brattleboro, Brian, an award winning school teacher in Rutland, and Barry, a Rear Admiral in the U.S. Navy, currently with the Pentagon staff.

He served his community on many boards and organizations. He was a past Grand Knight at the Knights of Columbus, President of Vermont State Holy Name Society, Rutland Chamber of Commerce, Rutland Country Club and Rutland Regional Medical Center. He was elected to and served on the board of directors of Marble Savings Bank and the Rutland City School Board.

The Rutland Daily Herald had high praise for Bart, stating that he, “... left lasting marks for good on [his] native city.” He was a man who loved life and was loved by all who knew him. We won’t forget you, Bart.

telephone excise tax—the Help Eliminate the Levy on Locution Act known as the HELLO Act. The telephone excise tax is a tax that is outdated, unfair, and complex for both consumers to understand and for the phone companies to administer. It cannot be justifiable on any tax policy grounds.

Mr. President, the federal government has had the American consumer on "hold" for too long when it comes to the telephone excise tax. The telephone excise tax has been around for over 102 years. In fact, it was first imposed in 1898—just 22 years after the telephone itself was invented. So quickly was it imposed that it almost seems that Uncle Sam was there to tax it before Alexander Graham Bell could put down the receiver from the first call. In fact, the tax is so old that Bell himself would have paid it!

This tax on talking—it is known—currently applies at 3 percent. Today, about 94 percent of all American families have telephone service. This means that virtually every family in the United States must tack an additional 3 percent on to their monthly phone bill. The federal tax applies to local phone service; it applies to long distance service; and it even applies in some cases to the extra amounts paid for state and local taxes. It is estimated that this tax costs the American public more than $5 billion per year. The telephone excise tax is a classic story of a tax that has been severed from its original justifications, but lives on solely to collect money.

In recent years, the federal phone tax has had more legislative lives than a cat. When the tax was originally imposed, Teddy Roosevelt was leading the Rough Riders up San Juan Hill. At that time, it was billed as a luxury tax, as only a small portion of the American public even public even had telephones. The tax was repealed in the early 20th century, but then was reinstated at the beginning of World War I. It was repealed and reinstated a few more times until 1941, when it was permanently imposed to raise money for World War II. In the mid-40s, Congress scheduled the elimination of the phone tax, which had reached levels of 10 and 25 percent. But once again, the demands of war intruded, as the elimination of the tax was delayed to help pay for Vietnam. In 1973, the phone tax began to phase out, but one year before it was about to be eliminated, it rose up yet again—this time justified by the rationale of deficit reduction and has remained with us ever since.

This tax is a perfect example of why we must stop needlessly collecting the taxpayer's money—it does not pass any of the criteria for evaluating tax policy. First, this phone tax is outdated. Once upon a time, it could have been argued that telephone service was a luxury item and that only the rich would be affected. As we all know, there is nothing further from the truth today.

Second, the federal phone tax is unfair. Because this tax is a flat 3 percent, it applies disproportionately to low and middle income people. For example, studies show that an American family making less than $50,000 per year spends at least 2 percent of its income on telephone service. A family earning less than $10,000 per year spends over 9 percent of its income on telephone service. Imposing a tax on those families for a service that is a necessity in a modern society is simply not fair.

Third, the federal phone tax is complex. Once upon a time, phone service was simple—there was one company who provided it. It was an easy tax to administer. Now, however, phone service is intertwined with data services and Internet access, and it brings about a whole new set of complexities. For instance, a common way to provide high speed Internet access is through a digital subscriber line. This line allows a user to have simultaneous access to the Internet and to telephone communications. We cannot tax both. If the phone tax is imposed, should the whole line be tax free? And what will we do when cable, wireless, and satellite companies provide voice and data communications over the same system? The burdensome complexity of today will only become more difficult tomorrow.

As these questions are answered, we run the risk of distorting the market by favoring certain technologies. There are already a number of exceptions and carve-outs to the phone tax. For instance, private communications services are exempt from the tax. That allows large, sophisticated companies to establish communications networks and avoid paying any federal phone tax. It goes without saying that American families do not have that same option.

Speaking of complexity, let me ask if anyone has taken a look at their most recent phone bill. It is laden with taxes and fees piled one on top of another. We may not be able to figure out what all the fees are for; but we do know that they add a big chunk to our phone bill. According to a recent study, the mean tax rate across the country on telecommunications is slightly over 18 percent. That is about a 6 percent rise in the last 10 years. I can’t control the state and local taxes that have been imposed, but I can do my part with respect to the federal taxes. I seek to remove this burden from the citizens of my state—and all Americans across the country.

As members of Congress, we need to make sure that our tax policies do not stifle that economic expansion. We should not adhere to policies that are a relic from a different time. In today’s economy, the arguments for repeal are even stronger.

Mr. President, it is time to end the federal phone tax. For too long while “America the Beautiful” was a dial tone, Washington has been hearing a dollar tone. This tax is outdated. Why are we taxing a poor family’s phone with a tax that was originally meant for luxury items. Mr. President, it is time we hung up the phone tax once and for all. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting its repeal, and help all Americans to say “Hello.”

Mr. President, it is time for commonsense that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself and Mr. SMITH of Oregon): S. 238. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to conduct feasibility studies on water optimization in the Burns River basin. Malheur River basin, Owyhee River basin, and Powder River Basin, Oregon; and for all. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting its repeal, and help all Americans to say “Hello.”

Mr. President, it is time we hung up the phone tax once and for all. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting its repeal, and help all Americans to say “Hello.”

Mr. President, it is time us members of Congress considered ways to improve water management in the Malheur, Owyhee, Powder and Burns River basins in northeastern Oregon. An earlier study by the Bureau identified a number of problems on these four Snake River tributaries, including high water temperatures and degraded habitat.

These types of problems are not unique to these rivers; in fact, many rivers in the Pacific Northwest are in a similar condition. However, Oregon has a unique approach to solving these problems through the work of Watershed Councils. In these Councils, local farmers, ranchers and other stakeholders work together with the resource agencies to develop action plans to solve local problems.

The Council members have the local knowledge of the land and waters, but they don’t have technical expertise. The Bureau of Reclamation has the expertise to collect the kinds of water flow and water quality data that are needed to understand how the watershed works and how effective different solutions might be.

One class of possible solutions includes small-scale construction projects, such as upgrading of irrigation systems and creation of wetlands to act as pollutant filters. This legislation would allow the Bureau of Reclamation to partner with the Watershed Councils in determining how such small-scale construction projects might benefit both the environment and the local economy. This bill authorizes a study; it does not authorize actual construction. It simply enables the Bureau to help find the most logical solution to resource management issues.

Last Congress, the Senate passed the same bill I am introducing today. However, the other body did not act on the legislation before the last Congress adjourned.

I look forward to prompt action to enact this bill in the current Congress. I welcome my colleague, Mr. SMITH, as an original cosponsor of this bill. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

SEC. 418. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO EXPORT PROMOTION AND CREDIT PROGRAMS FOR CUBA.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Cuba Food and Medicine Access Act of 2001”.

SEC. 2. STUDY.

The Secretary of the Interior may conduct feasibility studies on water optimization in the Burnt River basin, Malheur River basin, Owyhee River basin, and Powder River basin, Oregon.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out this Act.

By Mr. HAGEL (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. DORGAN, and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 239. A bill to improve access to the Cuban market for American agricultural producers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry; and to the Senate Report containing—

“(1) the results of the study carried out under subsection (a); and

“(2) proposed legislation, if any, to improve the ability of the Secretary to utilize United States agricultural export promotion programs and credit programs with respect to the consumption of United States agricultural commodities in Cuba.”
As I noted last week with my friend from North Dakota, however, Title Nine prohibits basic facilitators to trade—financing and export promotion. The Trade Sanctions Reform & Export Enhancement Act effectively thwarts U.S. agricultural trade with Cuba, which makes it difficult for us to keep our farmers competitive.

There has been talk about the importance of American tourist travel to Cuba—this is true and I have stated it repeatedly. The Trade Sanctions Reform & Export Enhancement Act’s tourist travel ban stifles the most powerful influence on Cuban society: American culture and perspective, both economic and political.

Consistent with the Dorgan-Roberts bill introduced last week, the codification of tourist travel restrictions is repealed under the Cuba Food & Medicine Access Act of 2001 as are restrictions on the sale of medicine and medical products. Further, the trade of both food and medicine is enhanced by nullifying a provision of the Cuban Democracy Act which prohibits ships entering ports in Cuba from visiting U.S. ports for at least 180 days without a special license.

Today, however, I want to place more emphasis on the agricultural trade issue. The Dorgan-Roberts bill introduced last week does allow us to rule out any market for our agricultural commodities. Now more than ever, as new markets develop and our competitors seize those opportunities, it makes no sense to preclude the use of export promotion programs or outlaw private U.S. financing. It is nonsense to isolate our farmers in this fashion.

Section 908 of the fiscal year 2001 agriculture appropriations bill reads “no United States Government assistance, including U.S. foreign assistance, United States export assistance, and any United States credit or guarantees shall be available for exports to Cuba.” Section 908 goes on to state, incredibly, that “no United States person may provide payment or financing terms for sales of agricultural commodities or products to Cuba or any person in Cuba.”

It’s quite clear, Mr. President, the intent of this provision is to keep the Cuban market cut off from America’s farmers. This bill is inhumane. If it’s not to keep the Cuban market cut off, then what is the policy? What are our farmers supposed to do when faced with this kind of contradictory and politically charged language? You will permit to sell to Cuba but don’t bother trying? We are either going to encourage and facilitate global agricultural trade or we are going to discourage and complicate global agricultural trade. You can’t have it both ways.

Why is it that Title Nine is so significant in regards to Cuba? Let us sample some recent statistics provided by the U.S.-Cuba Trade & Economic Council, based in New York City: Wheat exports from Canada to Cuba in 1999 and 2000—730,000 tons; corn exports from China to Cuba in 2000—261,001 tons; and rice exports from China to Cuba in 2000—225,510 tons.

No, Cuba is not the largest market, Mr. President, but the point is, our farmers should be able to compete for that business. It’s our obligation to at least permit such an opportunity.
public interest in environmental protection have combined to create an atmosphere of conflicting policy interests;
(4) large-scale water conflicts continue to emerge in communities, States, and stakeholder interests in the southeastern region of the United States; and
(5) Federal support is needed to assess the utility and effectiveness of current Federal policies and programs as they relate to resolving State and local water supply needs.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.
In this Act:
(1) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary” means the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers.
(2) STATE.—The term “State” means the State of Tennessee.

SEC. 4. STUDIES ON EMERGING WATER SUPPLY NEEDS.
(a) DESIGNATION.—The Secretary shall offer to provide assistance to the State to conduct studies under this section.
(b) STUDIES.—As a condition of receiving assistance under this section, not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, in consultation with the Secretary, the State shall—
(1) select a geographic area within the State having consistent, emerging, water supply needs; and
(2) conduct a study on the emerging water supply needs of the geographic area.
(c) STUDY CONDUCTED UNDER THIS SECTION.—A study conducted under this section shall—
(1) identify Federal and State resources, assistance programs, regulations and sources of funding for water supply development and management that are applicable to the geographic areas selected under subsection (b); and
(2) identify potential weaknesses, redundancies, and contradictions in those resources, assistance programs, regulations, policies, and sources of funding;
(d) CONDUCT A WATER RESOURCE INVENTORY.—Conduct a water resource inventory in the geographic study area to determine, with respect to the water supply needs of the area—
(A) projected demand;
(B) existing supplies and infrastructure;
(C) water resources that cannot be developed due to regulatory or technical barriers, including—
(i) special aquatic sites (as defined in section 303.2 of title 33, Code of Federal Regulations (a regulation)); and
(ii) bodies of water protected under any other Federal or State law;
(D) water resources that can be developed for water supplies, such as sites that have few, if any, technical or regulatory barriers to development;
(E) any water resources for which further research or investigation, such as testing of groundwater aquifers, is required to determine the potential for water supply development for the site;
(F) description of the social, political, institutional, and economic dynamics and characteristics of the geographic study area that may affect the resolution of water supply needs;
(G) incentives for cooperation between water districts, local governments, and State governments, including methods that maximize or ensure participation in the water supply development; and
(H) new water resource development technologies that merit further analysis and testing.
(d) LEAD AGENCY.—For each study under this section, the Corps of Engineers—
(1) shall be the lead Federal agency; and
(2) shall be the State’s chief advisor in the development of the study.
(e) PARTICIPANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The United States Geological Survey and the Tennessee Valley Authority shall participate in the study.

(2) ENTITIES SELECTED BY THE STATE.—In consultation with the Secretary, the State shall select additional entities to participate in the study.
(3) UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE.—The University of Tennessee may elect to participate in the study.

(4) FUNDING.—The Federal share of each study under this section shall be 100 percent.
(g) REPORT.
(1) SECRETARY.—Not later than 45 days after the completion of a study under this section, the State shall submit a report describing the findings of the study to—
(A) the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives; and
(B) the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate.
(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $1,000,000 for fiscal year 2002.

By Mr. REID:
S. 241. A bill to direct the Federal Election Commission to set uniform national standards for federal election procedures, change the Federal election day, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the National Election Standards Act of 2001.

The entire nation was disgusted by the presidential election of 2000. That election revealed the flaws in our election procedures to the entire world. America is the largest democracy, and the oldest democracy—in the world, and we can do better.

The most fundamental premise of democracy is that every vote is counted. But the reality is that votes cast in wealthier parts of the country frequently count more than votes cast in poorer areas, because wealthier districts have better, more accurate, more modern and less error-prone counting machines than poorer precincts and disadvantaged counties in this nation are using voting machines and vote-counting machines that are 50, 60, 70 years old, and that have error rates of 3 or more percent. In the wealthiest nation in the world, that is simply unacceptable.

Today, I am introducing a bill that will give the Federal Election Commission the authority to issue uniform federal regulations governing registration, access to polling places, voting machines, and uniform vote-counting procedures in federal elections across the country. Unlike some other proposals introduced this Congress, these regulations will be binding on states and localities. The Commission will also be authorized to set deadlines for states and localities to comply, and to provide the necessary federal funding to enable them to comply.

My bill will also require states to allow voters to register on the same day that they vote, and will move federal elections from the current Tuesday, to the preceding Saturday and Sunday. By simplifying registration, by allowing voters to vote on weekends, and extending election day to two days instead of one, more voters will be able to participate in federal elections more easily. I believe these changes will go a long way toward improving our atrocious voter turnout rates, and help restore some of the confidence in our election process that many Americans lost during the last election.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. CRAPO):
S. 242. A bill to authorize funding for University Nuclear Science and Engineering Programs at the Department of Energy for fiscal years 2002 through 2006; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill authorizing the Secretary of Energy to provide for the Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology to reverse a serious decline in our nation’s educational capability to produce future nuclear scientists and engineers. This bi-partisan bill which is referred to as the “Department of Energy Nuclear Science and Engineering Act” is co-sponsored by my colleagues Mr. DOMENICI and Mr. CRAPO. Let me outline how serious this decline is, after doing so I will outline its impact on our nation and then discuss how this bill attempts to remedy this situation.

As of this year, the supply of four-year trained nuclear scientists and engineers is at a 35-year low. The number of four-year programs across our nation to train future nuclear scientists has declined to approximately 25—a 50 percent reduction since about 1970. Two-thirds of the nuclear science and engineering faculty are over age 45 with little if any ability to draw new and young talent to replace them. Universities across the United States cannot afford to maintain their small research reactors forcing their closure at an alarming rate. This year there are only 28 operating research and training reactors, over a 50 percent decline since 1980. Most if not all of these reactors were built in the late 1950’s and early 60’s and were licensed initially for 30 to 40 years. As a result, within the next five years the majority of these 28 reactors will have to be relicensed. Re-licensing is a lengthy process in which most universities cannot and will not afford. Interestingly, the employment demand for nuclear scientists and engineers exceeds our nation’s ability to supply them. This year, the demand exceeded supply by 350, by 2003 it will be over 400. Our current projections are that in five years 76 percent of the nation’s nuclear workforce can retire, the university pipeline of new scientists and engineers is moving in the wrong direction to meet this need.

These human resource and educational infrastructure problems are serious. The decline in a competently trained nuclear workforce affects a broad range of national issues.

We need nuclear engineers and health physicists to help design, safely dispose and monitor nuclear waste, both civilian and military.

We need nuclear physicists and scientists in the field of nuclear medicine to develop radio isotopes for the thousands of medical procedures performed everyday across our nation—to help save lives.

We must continue to operate and safely maintain our existing supply of fission reactors and respond to any future nuclear crisis worldwide—it takes nuclear scientists, engineers and health physicists to do that.

Our national security and treaty commitments rely on nuclear scientists to help stem the proliferation of nuclear weapons whether in our national laboratories or as part of worldwide inspection teams in such places as Iraq. Scientists are needed to convert existing reactors worldwide from highly enriched to low enriched fuels.

Nuclear engineers and health physicists are needed to design, operate and monitor future Naval Reactors. The Navy has shown that training skills for their four year degrees—they only provide advance postgraduate training on their reactor’s operation.

Basically, we are looking at the potential loss of a 50 year investment in a field which our nation started and leads the world in. What is worse, this loss is a downward self-feeding spiral. Poor departments cannot attract bright students and bright students will not carry on the needed cutting edge research that leads to promising young faculty members. Our system of nuclear education and training, in which we used to lead the world, is literally imploding upon itself.

I’ve laid out in this bill some proposals that I hope will seed a national debate in the upcoming 107th Congress on what we as a nation need to do to help solve this very serious problem. It is not a perfect bill, but I think it should start the ball rolling. I welcome all forms of bipartisan input on it. I hope that my colleagues in the House Science Committee looks favorably at this worthy effort and I would suggest joint hearings so that we as a Congressional body can hear together the testimony on this decline that we now face. My staff has worked from consensus reports from the scientific community developed by the Nuclear Energy Advisory Committee to the Department of Energy’s Office of Nuclear Science and Technology, in particular its subcommittee on Education and Training. The report is available on the Office’s website. I encourage everyone to read and look at these startling statistics.

Here is an outline of what is in the bill.

First and foremost, we need to concentrate on attracting good undergraduate students to the nuclear sciences. I have proposed enhancing the current program which provides fellowships to graduate students and extends that to undergraduate students.

Second, we need to attract new and young faculty. I’ve proposed a Junior Faculty Research Grant Program which is similar to the NSF programs targeted only towards supporting new faculty during the first 5 years of their career at a university. These first five years are critical years that either make or break new faculty.

Third, I proposed strengthening the Office’s Nuclear Engineering Education and Research Program. This program is critical to university faculty and graduate students by supporting only the most fundamental research in nuclear science and engineering. These fundamental programs ultimately will strengthen our industrial base and over all economic competitiveness.

Fourth, I’ve strengthened the Office’s applied nuclear science program by ensuring that universities play an important role in collaboration with the national labs and industry. This collaboration is the most basic form of tech transfer, it is face-to-face contact and networking between faculty, students and industry. This program will ensure a transition between the student and their future employer.

Finally, I’ve strengthened what I consider the most crucial element of this worthy effort and that is that future generations of students and professors have well maintained research reactors.

I’ve proposed to increase the funding levels for refueling and upgrading academic reactor instrumentation.

I propose to start a new program whereby faculty can apply for reactor research and training awards to provide for reactor improvements.

I have proposed a novel program whereby the student’s undergraduate and graduate thesis project, they help work on the re-licensing of their own research reactors. This program must be in collaboration with industry which already has ample experience in relicensing. Such a program will once again provide face-to-face networking and training between student, teacher and ultimately their employer.

I have proposed a fellowship program whereby faculty can take their sabbatical year at a DOE laboratory. Under this program DOE laboratory staff can co-teach university courses and give extended seminars. This program also provides for part time employment of students at the DOE labs—we are talking about bringing in new and young talent.

For the research funds allocated, I have permitted portions be used to operate the reactor during the investigation. I make this allocation provided the investigator’s host institution makes a cost sharing commitment in its operation. My intent is clearly not to make the program simply fund the operations and maintenance of university reactors; it must be tied to the bill’s research. The cost sharing insures that the host institution does not simply reallocate the funds already committed to operating the reactor.

In making all of these proposals, let me emphasize that each one of these programs I have described is intended to be peer reviewed and to have awards made strictly on merit of the proposals submitted. This program is not a hand out of money. The program requires that faculty innovate and compete for these funds. Those institutions that do not win such competitions will have the choice of funding the research reactor activities themselves or consider shutting them down.

I have outlined a very serious problem that if not corrected now will cost far more to correct later on. If the program I have outlined is implemented, then it will strengthen our reputation as world leader in the nuclear sciences, strengthen our national security and our ability to compete in the world market place.

Mr. President, I ask for unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) U.S. university nuclear science and engineering programs are in a state of serious decline. The supply of new national nuclear science and engineering personnel in the United States is at a 35-year low. The number of four year degree nuclear engineering programs has declined by 25 percent to approximately 25 programs nationwide. Over two-thirds of the faculty in these programs are 45 years or older.

(2) Universities cannot afford to support their research and training reactors. Since 1980, the number of small training reactors in the United States have declined by over 50 percent to 28 reactors. Most of these reactors were built in the late 1950s and 1960s with 30- to 40-year operating licenses, and will require re-licensing in the next several years.

(3) The neglect in human investment and the supply of new nuclear science and engineering personnel in the United States is at a 35-year low. The number of four year degree nuclear engineering programs has declined by 50 percent to approximately 25 programs nationwide. Over two-thirds of the faculty in these programs are 45 years or older.

(4) Further neglect in the nation’s investment in human resources for the nuclear sciences will lead to national shrink, faculties age, and training reactors.
close, the appeal of nuclear science will be lost to future generations of students.

(5) Current projections are that 76% of the nation’s professional nuclear workforce can retire within the next ten years. If we do not immediately develop a supply of trained scientists and engineers, the nuclear profession will suffer a severe shortage of qualified personnel. The Department of Energy’s Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology is well positioned to meet this challenge by supporting the development of new talent in the nuclear sciences and engineering. The Office funds programs to train future nuclear scientists and engineers, and helps to support the educational and research programs at universities and labs through the Nuclear Engineering and Education Research Program which funds basic nuclear science and engineering. The Office funds the Nuclear Energy and Research Initiative which funds programs to train new faculty in the nuclear sciences and talented students.

SEC. 3. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Energy, through the Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology, shall support a program to maintain the nation’s human resource and infrastructure in the nuclear sciences. Through its support of research and development pursuant to the Department of Energy’s statutory authorities, the Office of Nuclear Energy, Science and Technology is the principal federal agent for civilian research in the nuclear sciences for the United States. The Office maintains the Nuclear Engineering and Education Research Program which funds basic nuclear science and engineering. The Office funds the Nuclear Energy and Research Initiative which funds programs to train new faculty in the nuclear sciences, engineering and health physics.

(b) DUTIES OF THE OFFICE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY.—In carrying out the program under this Act, the Director of the Office of Nuclear Science and Technology shall—

(1) develop a robust graduate and undergraduate fellowship program to attract new and talented students;

(2) assist universities in recruiting and retaining new faculty in the nuclear sciences and engineering through a Junior Faculty Research Initiation Grant Program;

(3) maintain a robust investment in the fundamental nuclear sciences and engineering through the Nuclear Engineering Education Research Program;

(4) encourage collaborative nuclear research between industry, national laboratories and universities through the Nuclear Energy Research Initiative Program; and

(5) support communication and outreach related to nuclear science and engineering.

(c) MAINTAINING UNIVERSITY RESEARCH AND TRAINING REACTORS AND ASSOCIATED INFRASTRUCTURE.—Within the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act, the amounts specified under subsection (b) shall, subject to appropriations, be available for the following research and training reactor infrastructure maintenance and research:

(1) Refueling of research reactors with low enriched fuels, upgrade of operational instrumentation, and sharing of reactors among universities.

(2) In collaboration with the U.S. nuclear industry, assistance, where necessary, in relicensing and upgrading training reactors as part of a student training program.

(3) A reactor research and training award program for that progress that represents a focused effort that emphasizes research, training, and education.

(d) UNIVERSITY—DOE LABORATORY INTERACTIONS.—The Department of Energy, through the Office of Nuclear Science and Technology, shall develop—

(1) a sabbatical fellowship program for university professors to spend extended periods of time at Department of Energy laboratories in the areas of nuclear science and technology;

(2) a visiting scientist program in which laboratory staff can spend time in academic nuclear science and engineering departments;

(3) OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE.—For the research programs described, portions of the funds for reactor research and training awarded from the Department of Energy laboratories in the area of nuclear science under the mentorship of laboratory staff.

(3) COMMUNICATION AND OUTREACH RELATED TO NUCLEAR SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING.—Of the funds under subsection (a), the following sums are authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 3(b)(3):

(1) $9,000,000 for fiscal year 2003.

(2) $7,000,000 for fiscal year 2004.

(3) $4,200,000 for fiscal year 2005.

(4) $2,200,000 for fiscal year 2006.

(5) $2,200,000 for fiscal year 2007.

(6) $1,000,000 for fiscal year 2008.

(b) JUNIOR FACULTY RESEARCH INITIATION GRANT PROGRAM.—Of the funds under subsection (a), the following sums are authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 3(b)(2):

(1) $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2002.

(2) $2,500,000 for fiscal year 2003.

(3) $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2004.

(4) $1,500,000 for fiscal year 2005.

(5) $1,000,000 for fiscal year 2006.

(c) COMMUNICATION AND OUTREACH RELATED TO NUCLEAR SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING.—Of the funds under subsection (b), the following sums are authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 3(b)(2):

(1) $1,500,000 for fiscal year 2002.

(19) $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2006.
existing tribal education funds for bonds in the municipal finance market which currently serves local governments across the Nation. Instead of funding construction projects directly, these existing funds will be leveraged through bonds to fund substantially more tribal school construction, maintenance and repair projects.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs estimates the tribal school construction and repair backlog at over $1 billion. Confounding this backlog, Indian communities are strong historical and moral reasons for continued support of tribal schools. In keeping with our special trust responsibility to sovereign Indian nations, we need to promote the self-determination and self-sufficiency of Indian communities. Education is absolutely vital to this effort. Allowing the continued deterioration and decay of tribal schools through lack of funding would violate the Government’s commitment and response to the needs of Indian nations and only slow the progress of self-sufficiency. I urge my colleagues to closely examine the Indian School Construction Act and join me in working to make this innovative funding mechanism a reality. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. INDIAN SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION.

(a) DEFINITIONS. — In this section:

(1) ‘‘Bureau’’ means the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior.

(2) ‘‘Indian’’ means any Indian tribe, with sensitivity to Native cultural and academic needs and styles of Indian students, with a condition of each bond issuance that the tribe in an amount, which together with interest and other provision of law, any qualified tribal school modernization bond issued by a tribe under this subsection shall be awarded a tax credit under section 1400K of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(3) ‘‘Secretary’’ means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) TRIBAL SCHOOL.—The term ‘‘tribal school’’ means an elementary school, secondary school, or dormitory that is operated by a tribal organization or the Bureau for primary and secondary educational purposes for not less than the period such bond remains outstanding.

(c) TRIBAL EDUCATION FUNDING.—In determining whether a tribe is capable of participating in the program under this subsection, the Secretary shall give priority to tribes that, as demonstrated by the relevant plans of construction, will fund projects:

(1) described in the Education Facilities Replacement Construction Priorities List as of the close of the 2000 fiscal year of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (65 Fed. Reg. 4623-4624);

(2) described in any subsequent priorities list published in the Federal Register; or

(3) which meet the criteria for ranking schools as described in Instructions and Application for Replacement School Construction, Revision 6, dated February 6, 1999.

(d) ADVANCE PLANNING AND DESIGN FUNDING.—(1) A tribe may propose in its plan of construction to receive advance planning and design funding from the tribal school modernization bond fund required by subsection (6)(B). Before advance planning and design funds are allocated from the escrow account, the tribe shall agree to issue qualified tribal school modernization bonds after the receipt of such funds and agree as a condition of each bond issuance that the tribe will deposit into such account or a fund, moneys sufficient to timely pay in full the entire principal amount of such bond on the stated maturity date therefor; and

(2) invest the funds received pursuant to clause (1) as provided by such clause; and

(3) hold and invest the funds in a segregated fund or account under the agreement, which fund or account shall be applied solely to the payment of the costs of items described in paragraph (3).

(e) REQUIREMENTS FOR MAKING DIRECT PAYMENTS.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the tribe shall make any payment referred to in subparagraph (C)(v) in accordance with requirements that the tribe shall be made in accordance with the terms of the bond.

(2) PAYMENTS OF PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.—(A) PRINCIPAL.—No principal payments on any qualified tribal school modernization bond shall be required until the final, stated maturity of such bond, which stated maturity shall be within 15 years from the date of issuance. Upon the expiration of such period, the entire outstanding principal under the bond shall become due and payable.

(B) INTEREST.—In lieu of interest on a qualified tribal school modernization bond shall be awarded a tax credit under section 1400K of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(3) BOND GUARANTEES.—(A) IN GENERAL.—Payment of the principal portion of a qualified tribal school modernization bond issued under this subsection... shall be guaranteed solely by amounts deposited with each respective bond trustee as described in paragraph (4)(C)(iii).

(b) Establishment of account.—

(1) In general.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, beginning in fiscal year 2003, from amounts made available for school replacement under the construction account of the Bureau, the Secretary is authorized to deposit not more than $300,000,000 each fiscal year into a tribal school modernization escrow account.

(ii) (I) The Secretary shall use any amounts deposited in the escrow account under clauses (i) and (iii) to make payments described in paragraph (4)(D) and (E).

(iii) Transfers of excess proceeds.—Excess proceeds held under any trust agreement described in paragraph (4)(C) shall be transferred, from time to time, by the trustee for deposit into the tribal school modernization escrow account.

(b) (1) Obligation to repay.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the principal amount on any qualified tribal school modernization bond issued under this subsection, in addition to any amount deposited in the escrow account described in paragraph (4)(C) shall be transferred, from time to time, by the trustee for deposit into the tribal school modernization escrow account.

(c) Expansion of Incentives for Tribal Schools.—Chapter I of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter XI—Tribal School Modernization Provisions

—Sec. 1400K. Credit to holders of qualified tribal school modernization bonds.

SEC. 1400K. CREDIT TO HOLDERS OF QUALIFIED TRIBAL SCHOOL MODERNIZATION BONDS.

(a) ALLORVATION OF CREDIT.—In the case of a taxpayer who holds a qualified tribal school modernization bond on a credit allowance date of such bond which occurs during the taxable year, there shall be allowed as a credit to such person an amount equal to the tax imposed on the taxable income of such person with respect to such credit allowance date.

(b) CREDIT TO TRIBES.—In the case of any amounts deposited in the escrow account described in paragraph (4)(C) and (D), the amount so included shall be allowed as a credit allowable under such paragraph to the Secretary of the Interior, as the Secretary of the Treasury may by regulation apportioned among tribal school modernization projects recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) CREDITS MAY BE STRIPPED.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, credits may be stripped.

(d) Treatment for estimated tax purposes.—So long as the credit is not treated as a credit under this section, the credit allowed to a taxpayer under this section shall be treated as a credit allowable under part IV of subchapter A of this chapter.

(iii) Designation subject to limitation amount.—The maximum aggregate face amount of bonds issued during any calendar year which may be designated under subparagraph (B) of this paragraph shall not exceed the limitation amount allocated to such government under clause (ii) for such calendar year.

(e) Carryover of unused limitation.—If any qualified tribal school modernization bonds issued during any calendar year under this section, the limitation amount under this subparagraph for the following calendar year shall be increased by the amount of such excess. The preceding sentence shall not apply if such following calendar year is after 2010.

(f) Credit allowance date.—The term ‘credit allowance date’ means—

(1) the limitation amount under this subparagraph, exceeds

(2) the amount of qualified tribal school modernization bonds issued during such year,

(iii) Designation subject to limitation amount.—The maximum aggregate

—The term ‘credit allowance date’ means—

The United States must press Libya to publicly accept its role in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, issue an apology, and compensate the victims’ families. Consequently, today we are introducing legislation to make Libya responsible for the Pan Am 103 Act of 2001. This legislation is cosponsored by Senators Helms, Brownback, Leahy, Reid of Nevada, Nelson of Nebraska, Clinton, Dodd, Baucus, Boxer, Byrd, and Carper.

The legislation states that it shall be the policy of the United States to oppose lifting U.N. and U.S. sanctions against Libya until all cases of American victims of Libyan terrorism have been resolved; the Government of Libya has accepted responsibility, has issued an apology, has paid compensation to the victims’ families of Pan Am 103; and has taken real and concrete steps to end support of international terrorism; and the legislation would prohibit assistance to the Government of Libya until the President determines and certifies that Libya has fulfilled the above requirements.

In addition, the legislation expresses the sense of the Senate that the Government of Libya should be condemned for its support of international terrorism and the bombing of Pan Am 103.

Second, the Government of Libya should accept responsibility for the bombing, issue a public apology, and provide due compensation.

Finally, the President, the Secretary of State, and U.S. officials should encourage other countries and the United Nations to maintain sanctions against Libya until it fulfills the above requirements. Until Libya accepts responsibility for its actions, apologizes, and ends its support for international terrorism, the United States should leave and will leave no stone unturned in the quest for justice.

We owe the victims of Pan Am 103 no less.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 7—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT THE UNITED STATES SHOULD ESTABLISH AN INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION POLICY TO ENHANCE NATIONAL SECURITY AND SIGNIFICANTLY FURTHER UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY AND GLOBAL COMPETITIVENESS

Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. REID, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. WELLSTONE) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

S. CON. RES. 7

Whereas educating international students is an important way to spread United States values and influence and to create goodwill for the United States throughout the world;

Whereas international exchange programs, that in the past have done much to extend United States influence in the world by educating the world’s leaders, are suffering from decline;

Whereas international education is important to meet future challenges facing the United States including challenges involving national security and the management of global conflict and competitiveness in a global economy;

Whereas international education entitles the imparting of effective global literacy to United States students and other citizens as an integral part of their education;

Whereas over 500,000 international students and their dependents contributed an estimated $12.3 billion in 2000 to the United States economy in the academic year 1999-2000;

Whereas other countries, especially the United Kingdom, are mounting vigorous recruitment campaigns to compete for international students;

Whereas United States competitiveness in the international student market is declining, the United States share of internationally mobile students having declined from 40 percent to 30 percent since 1982;

Whereas less than 10 percent of United States students graduating from college have studied abroad; and

Whereas research indicates that the United States is falling to graduate enough students with expertise in foreign languages and cultures that we need to maintain our leadership in the world.

It is the sense of Congress that the United States should establish an international education policy to enhance national security and significantly further United States foreign policy and global competitiveness. UNITED STATES should establish an international education policy to enhance national security and significantly further United States foreign policy and global competitiveness. "It is the sense of Congress that the United States should establish an international education policy to enhance national security and significantly further United States foreign policy and global competitiveness.

SEC. 2. OBJECTIVES OF AN INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION POLICY FOR THE UNITED STATES.

An international education policy for the United States should strive to achieve the following:

(1) Invigorate citizen and professional international exchange programs and to promote the interchange of scholars,

(2) Streamline visa, taxation, and employment regulations applicable to international students,

(3) Significantly increase participation in study abroad by United States students,

(4) Promote greater diversity of locations, languages, and subjects involved in study abroad to ensure that the United States maintains an adequate international knowledge base,

(5) Ensure that a college graduate has knowledge of a second language and of a foreign area.

(6) Enhance the educational infrastructure through which the United States produces international expertise,

(7) Capture 40 percent of the international student market for the United States

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today I am honored to be joined by Senators LUGAR, LEVIN, REID, WELLSTONE, and GRAHAM in introducing a resolution focused on the important issue of international education. My colleagues and I strongly believe that the United States should continue to build a vigorous international education policy. Formed in the wake of September 11, 2001, Richard Riley has noted that nations across the world are keen on fostering greater faculty and student exchanges and suggested a series of new steps to re-energize the cause of international education in the United States. The conference report of the FY01 Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations bill included language recognizing that international education is a foreign policy priority. On November 11—17, 2000, campuses and schools across the country celebrated the first International Education Week, recognized by Presidential Proclamation. I hope that this resolution will build on these efforts to preserve and extend a proud tradition of support for U.S. international education programs that dates back almost a half century.

Providing an excellent education to America’s children has always been vital in preserving U.S. leadership abroad. During the cold war, we demonstrated our strength by winning the space race, by possessing superior scientific knowledge, and by understanding the languages, cultures and history of regions where the defense of liberty and freedom was paramount. In 1958, in response to the launch of Sputnik by the Soviet Union, the Congress enacted the National Defense Education Act as a major tool of cold war policy. The NDEA focused on improving the teaching of science and math education, history, geography and all levels of education. The National Defense Education Act provided capital funds to colleges and universities so that they could make low-interest loans to students.

Today more than ever, in an environment of intense global economic, scientific and technological competition, a national education policy is crucial to America’s leadership in the world. I strongly believe that we need a national defense education policy that focuses on foreign languages and the history and cultures in other parts of the world, because we can not lead in a world we do not understand. Unfortunately, we are once again falling behind when it comes to providing our children the tools they need to compete on the global stage.

Less than one-tenth of graduating American college students have studied abroad. The reality of the global economy dictates that we cannot allow this rate to stand. In order for graduates to be effective in the increasingly international business community, they must better understand the world. Secretary Richard Riley put it last year when he argued that “college students [should] expect their education to give them a diverse global perspective that enriches their learning. More and more, international education will become the norm. Our international students and students will routinely study abroad and know multiple languages.”

Of course, international education works both ways. The resolution we are introducing today also recognizes the intrinsic value of bringing international students to study in this country. Today, the percentage of science and engineering doctoral recipients from abroad is declining. We must reverse this trend, because international students working in our universities make a valuable contribution to the research and study of their American counterparts and an invaluable contribution to global peace and stability when they return to their home nations imbued with all the possibilities democracy has to offer.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a resolution expressing the need for establishing an international education policy for the United States. I am pleased to join Senator Kerry and other colleagues from both sides of the aisle in this endeavor.

Ask any American Ambassador in any U.S. Embassy what their most valuable programs are and many will respond by citing those programs which promote international cooperation and understanding. Educational and cultural exchanges typically rank high on their list because they are integral to our foreign policy and national security interests and build enormous good will abroad.

Our resolution reflects the same priority to international education. It expresses the need for an international education policy that enhances our national security, advances our foreign policy and strengthens our global competitiveness.

of a second language and another geographic area of the world; 2. That we should enhance and streamline our educational infrastructure to strengthen international expertise—this should include our employment practices, our tax laws, visa and immigration procedures, providing advising and counseling areas for improving international education programs; 3. That we should increase U.S. student participation in study abroad programs. For now, only about one percent of our college population studies abroad. 4. That we should increase the diversity of countries, languages, and subjects in our study abroad and exchange programs; and 5. We should promote and expand the number, diversity and educational levels of citizen and international professional exchange programs.

We are introducing this resolution because we believe that improved international education and global literacy are important elements of a sound foreign policy. They help build a foundation of trust and knowledge on which the conduct of international affairs must take place; narrow the distance with other cultures and societies with whom we increasingly interact and whose cooperation is required; improve business abroad; develop skills to manage our political relations with other countries as we address diverse challenges to stability, national security and economic growth; and in sharing our values (e.g., democracy and freedom) and know-how with others and to acquire values and know-how from others.

We know that international cultural and educational programs played a key role in our study abroad to end the cold war and build the post-Cold War era through interpersonal contacts, grass-roots exchanges and other forms of international engagement.

Success in promoting international education programs today and in the future will help promote democratic values and international cooperation. They can serve to reduce poverty and injustice and promote new leaders and new leadership skills in the U.S. and abroad that are essential to a better world.

Forty-six years ago, I traveled to study at Oxford University, England, where I had the unique opportunity to meet and study with student leaders and scholars from Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and other parts of the world. Those two years made a difference in my life and I have been indebted ever since to the experiences and the idealism I learned at the time. I hope my colleagues will share our enthusiasm for international education and will join us in urging the development of a sound, cohesive and constructive international education policy for the United States.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE RUBY BUTLER DEMESME

HON. BOB ETHERIDGE OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the accomplishments and career of one of North Carolina's daughters, Mrs. Ruby Butler DeMesme. Mrs. DeMesme, a public servant of the highest order, recently retired from her post as Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Manpower, Reserve Affairs, Installations and Environment after 32 years of service.

Mrs. DeMesme earned her bachelor of arts degree in English from Saint Augustine's College in Raleigh in 1969. Ten years later she earned a master's degree in social work from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Before beginning her civil service career, Mrs. DeMesme was a highly recognized and respected expert on child and spousal abuse and adolescent programs for the Cumberland County Department of Social Services in Fayetteville.

Mrs. DeMesme's career in the federal work force began in 1980 as an Army adjutant and diversion chief in Mainz, West Germany, where she led the effort to improve family support and quality of life programs. In 1989, she left the Department of the Army and served as a senior aide to former Senator John Glenn. After leaving Capitol Hill, Mrs. DeMesme returned to the Army for a brief time until her move to the Department of the Air Force in 1991, where she would work until her retirement. She was appointed and confirmed to her current post on August 13, 1998.

Over her ten years with the Air Force, Mrs. DeMesme was responsible for increasing housing and station funding policies, establishing the military Transition Assistance Program, and working to ensure that the Air Force had the highest quality child development programs. She was also the catalyst behind the effort to revitalize communities affected by base closures and realignments, overhauled the military commissary and base housing and station funding policies, established policies regarding harassment and discrimination, and led the Department of Defense in military family housing privatization.

Mrs. DeMesme has touched the lives of thousands of people during her distinguished career and it is fitting that we honor her today. Ruby Butler DeMesme is a true patriot who has helped maintain the best military force in the world. Today, I thank her for her years of dedicated service to our brave men and women in uniform and wish the very best for her and her family in the years to come.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN COLOMBIA

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following article printed on the front page of the January 28, 2001 Washington Post. The article demonstrates a fundamental aspect of the growing human rights emergency in Colombia. It also details the role of paramilitary organizations in human rights violations taking place in Colombia and the complicity of the Colombian military and government in allowing human rights abuse, such as the Chengué massacre, to continue.

Despite the thousands of civilian deaths and millions of displaced people in Colombia, the United States has moved forward with a misguided policy of massive military aid and close involvement in Colombia's conflict. I strongly believe that our current policy under Plan Colombia is the wrong approach for our nation in dealing with Colombia and is certainly the most ineffective and insincere way to deal with our domestic drug problem.

CHRONICLE OF A MASSACRE FORETOLD
(By Scott Wilson)

CHENGUE, COLOMBIA.—In the cool hours before sunrise on Jan. 17, 50 members of the United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia marched into this village of avocado farmers. Only the barking of dogs, unaccustomed to the blackness brought by a rare power outage, disturbed the mountain silence.

For an hour, under the direction of a woman known as Comandante Beatriz, the paramilitary troops pulled men from their homes, starting with 37-year-old Jaime Merino and his three field workers. They assembled them into two groups above the main square and across from the rudimentary health center. Then, one by one, they killed the men by crushing their heads with heavy stones. When it was over, 24 men lay dead in pools of blood.

Two more were found later in shallow graves. As the troops left, they set fire to the village.

The group from the paramilitary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), known by the initials AUC in Spanish, patrols the rolling pastures of this northern coastal mountain range, strategic for its proximity to major transportation routes, all of Colombia's armed actors are present. Two fronts of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), the country's oldest and largest leftist guerrilla insurgency with about 17,000 armed members, control the lush hills they use to hide stolen cattle and victims of kidnappings-for-profit.

The government established United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia, known by the initials AUC in Spanish, patrols the rolling pastures and menaces the villages that provide the FARC with supplies. Paramilitary groups across Colombia have grown in political popularity and military strength in recent years as a counterweight to the guerrillas, and obtain much of their funding from relations with drug traffickers. Here in Sucre province, ranchers who are the targets of the kidnappings and cattle theft allegedly finance the paramilitary operations. AUC commander Carlos Castano, who has condemned the massacre here and plans his own investigation, lives a few hours away in neighboring Cordoba province.

The armed forces, who are outnumbered by the leftist guerrillas in a security zone that covers 9,000 square miles and includes more than 200 villages, are responsible for confronting both armed groups. Col. Alejandro Parra, head of the navy's 1st Brigade, with responsibility for much of Colombia's northeastern coast, said the military was prepared at least 1,000 more troops to effectively control the zones.

The military has prepared its own account of the events surrounding the massacre at Chengue, which emptied this village of all but 100 of its 1,200 residents. Parra confirmed elements of survivor accounts, but denied that military aircraft were in the area before or immediately after the killings. But the troops’ quick response may have averted a broader massacre involving neighboring villages.

“They must have been confused about the time,” the first helicopters arrived, Parra said. “If there were any helicopters there that soon after the massacre, they weren’t ours.”

STRATEGIC LOCATION

Three families have flourished in Chengue for generations, tending small orchards of avocado, mandarin, banana and coffee in a remote mountainous area. The only residents not related to the Oviedo, Lopez or Merino families are the farm workers who travel the lone dirt road that dips through town. The longest trip most inhabitants ever make is the two-hour drive by jeep to Ovejas, the local government seat.

But in recent years the village, set in the Montes de Maria range, has become a target on battle maps because of its strategic perch between the Venezuelan Carrao and San and the Magdalena River. Whoever controls the mountains also threatens the most important transportation routes in the north.

Villagers and human rights groups fear this will continue to happen as paramilitary forces pass through the area, looking for supplies. Any support, many villagers say, is given mostly out of fear. As one 34-year-old farmer who survived the massacre said: “We worked in the field until the dogs started barking.”

In the blackness, the paramilitary column arrived with helicopters, dressed in Colombian army uniforms. By dawn, paramilitaries apparently identified Chengue as a guerrilla stronghold—a town to be emptied. The AUC’s local commander, Beattiz, was one of the FARC’s 35th Front, which operates in the zone, military officials said. Ten months ago she quarreled with the FARC leadership for allegedly mishandling the group’s finances and defected to the AUC for protection and perhaps a measure of revenge.

In all, community leaders in Chengue and 20 other villages sent President Andres Pastrana and the regional military command a letter outlining the threat. “We have nothing to do with this conflict,” they wrote in asking the government for protection.

The letter was sent two months after the massacre of 36 civilians in El Salado, a village about 30 miles southeast of here in Bolivar province that is patrolled by the same military presence while it was going on.

Cases of mistaken identity involving the FARC, paramilitaries and the military have multiplied. According to several witnesses, one militiaman was mistaken for a guerrilla and killed my brothers, my sister and my niece,” said Cesar Merino, whose 67-year-old sister was killed by the bloodshed. Graffiti declaring “Get Out Marxist Communist Guerrillas,” “AUC” and “Beatriz” were scrawled across the walls of vacant houses. “The bodies were burned. I went to the cemetery and knew all of them,” said a 56-year-old Chengue resident whose brother and brother-in-law were human rights officials said the described events resemble those surrounding the massacre last year in El Salado. Gen. Rodrigo Quinones was the officer in charge of the security zone for Chengue and El Salado at that time, and remained in that post in the months leading up to the Chengue massacre.

He left the navy’s 1st Brigade last month to run a special investigation at the Atlantic Command in Cartagena, from where military flights in the zone are directed.

The Washington Office on Latin America, Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch and the Washington Office on Latin America called Pastrana’s letter “perplexing.” According to the human rights report, a civilian judge who reviewed the case was “perplexed” by the verdict, saying he found no evidence of Quinones’s guilt “irrefutable.”

El Salado survivors said a military plane and helicopter flew over the village the day after the massacre, and that an wounded militiaman was transported from the site by military helicopter. Soldiers under Quinones’s command sealed the village for days, barring even Red Cross workers from entering.

among the dead. “Now there is a terror here.”

Officials at the 1st Brigade said they were alerted at 8:45 a.m. when the National Police chief reported a possible paramilitary “incursion” in Chengue. According to a military log, Parra dispatched two helicopters to the village at 9:30 a.m. and the Dragon and infantry soldiers arrived in nearby Pijiguay five minutes later. Villagers said the troops did not arrive for at least another two hours.

When they did arrive, according to logs and soldiers present that day, a gun battle erupted with guerrillas from the FARC’s 35th Front. Parra said he sealed the roads into Chengue because of the darkness, these say, though they didn’t see faces that morning because of the darkness, these “old names” are scapegoats and not the men who killed their families.

A steady flow of traffic now moves toward Ovejas, jeeps stuffed with everything from refrigerators to pool cues to family pictures. The marines have set up two base camps in Ovejas—one under a large shade tree behind the village, the other in the vacant school. The remaining residents do not mix with the soldiers. “We have taken back this town,” said Maj. Alvaro Jimenez, standing in the square two days after the massacre. “We are telling people we are here, that it is time to reclaim their village.”

No one plans to. Marlena Lopez, 52, lost three brothers, a nephew, a brother-in-law and her pink house. Her brother, Cesar Lopez, was the town telephone operator. He fled, she said, “with nothing but his pants.”

In the ashes of her home, she weeps about the pain she can’t manage. “We are humble people,” she said. “Why in the world are we paying for this?”

RECOGNIZING THE MASSACHUSETTS DIVISION I STATE CHAMPIONS LUDLOW HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS SOCCER TEAM

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the achievements of the 2000 Ludlow High School girls soccer team. This past season the Ludlow girls team compiled a record of 21-0-0 en route to earning the Coombs Division League Championship, the Western Massachusetts Division I Championship, and the Massachusetts Division I State Championship. Their efforts enabled them to earn a ranking of 3rd in the country.

Each year the Commonwealth of Massachusetts selects the best high school student athletes. Every season the Ludlow community looks forward to cheering on their hometown heroes. This year the Lions certainly did not disappoint. Finishing a season undefeated and untied, as the Ludlow girls did, is a feat well deserving of high praise. The Ludlow girls soccer team rose to the challenge each and every game. They are winners in every sense of the word and are examples of athletic prowess, class, and true sportsmanship.

For leading the team to such accomplishments, Head Coach Jim Calheno has been named the Massachusetts Division I Girls’ Coach of the Year. Under his leadership, the Lions have remained a perennial powerhouse. His assistants are tireless and deserve praise as well. In addition I would like to note that senior midfielder Liz Dyjak has earned All-American honors while senior forward Stephanie Santos has been named to the All-New England team.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to recognize here the players, coaches, and managers of the 2000 Ludlow High School girls soccer team. The seniors are: Jessica Vital, Lindsay Robillard, Sarah Davis, Lindsay Haluch, Nikky Gebo, Liz Dyjak, Kara Williamson, Stephanie Santos, and Ana Pereira. Kristine Goncalves is a Junior on the squad. The Sophomores are: Darcie Rickson, Beth Cochonnet, Natalie Gebo, and Lauren Pereira. Freshmen members include Jessica Luszcz, and Stefany Knight. The Head Coach is Jim Calheno. Assistant Coaches are Saul Chelo, James Annear, Nuno Pereira, and Tony Vital. The team manager is Katie Romansky.

Mr. Speaker, once again, allow me to send my congratulations to the Ludlow High School girls soccer team on their outstanding season. I wish them the best of luck in the 2001 season.

H.R. 93, THE FIREFIGHTERS RETIREMENT AGE CORRECTION ACT

HON. FORNEY PETE STARK OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I was a cosponsor of H.R. 460, the Federal Firefighters Retirement Age Correction Act in the 106th Congress and would have voted to support H.R. 93 yesterday. Unfortunately, due to an unforeseen failure, I was absent and not able to vote in support of H.R. 93, the Federal Firefighters Retirement Age, Correction Act. I would like the Record to reflect my support for H.R. 93.

RECOGNIZING BETTY FITZPATRICK

HON. THOMAS G. TANCREDO OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to recognize Ms. Betty Fitzpatrick from Evergreen, Colorado, who was selected by the National Association of School Nurses (NASN) as the School Nurse Administrator of the year for 2000. Recently, NASN hosted an event for the Nurse Administrator of the year on Capitol Hill to honor her, and to applaud her for her excellent work on behalf of the public school children in my district.

As a former public school teacher, I had first-hand experience in seeing the hard work of our Nation’s school nurses. All teachers know that being a good student require a degree of good health, and I appreciate the work of Ms. Fitzpatrick in organizing health efforts for the children in my district and wish to extend my personal congratulations.

It is important to note that the work of many school nurses, like Ms. Fitzpatrick, goes beyond the assistance they provide directly to students. They serve as mentors to their colleagues, and serve an array of needs ranging from medical ailments to counseling for a student who needs a listening ear. Betty Fitzpatrick, especially, has participated in training for and as a consultant to school nurses, to assist them in developing crisis plans, and in dealing with tragic situations.

Ms. Fitzpatrick has spent her personal and professional life advocating children’s physical and mental health while supporting school nursing. For the past 11 years she has served as the Director of Health Services for all 136 Jefferson County Schools in Golden, Colorado. She has been the president and treasurer of her state organization, a prolific author, an advocate for legislation, a grant writer and a national presenter.

The NASN newsletter reported that aside from the day to day challenges of being a school nurse administrator, Ms. Fitzpatrick had the great misfortune of dealing with an incomprehensible tragedy, which took place at one of her high schools—Columbine. Within minutes, she was contacted, and her emergency plan was activated. She and her nurses didn’t wait for instructions, they knew what needed to be done, and they got to work. As the newsletter stated, the Columbine tragedy wounded a nation, but Betty continues to meet the unique needs of this school community and the others she serves.

Again, I am delighted by this honor that Ms. Fitzpatrick has brought to the State of Colorado, and I offer my sincere congratulations.

HONORING GAYE L EBARON

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Gaye LeBaron. For 43 years Gaye LeBaron’s columns in the Santa Rosa Press Democrat have recorded and enlivened Sonoma County and the Redwood Empire. By personalizing the community’s history and sensibilities, she has shaped the place with her stories and humor. Ms. LeBaron captured the respect and the hearts of her readers.

In her 8,000 columns LeBaron demonstrated that quality journalism can be witty, insightful, and compassionate. She worked as an observer and story teller, yet did not hesitate to take a stand—on issues as great as racial discrimination or as mundanely important as street lights—when it was needed. Whether focusing on the quiriness of every day happenings or wrapping the reader in the sweep of North Coast history, Gaye LeBaron’s color-filled columns made life what it is—interesting and personal.

LeBaron has also devoted her time and expertise to community causes through teaching, speaking, fundraising, and serving as a resource where needed. Her work interviewing local elders for a video history project with the Sonoma County Museum will stand with her columns as a testament to this special region and the spirit of its people.

I can say personally that being included in a Gaye LeBaron column is a coveted experience. We will miss Gaye on a daily basis but will look forward to her continuing contributions.

DAVID A. HARRIS GIVES THOUGHTFUL INSIGHT ON ISRAEL’S DIFFICULT POLITICAL AND SECURITY CHOICES

HON. TOM LANTOS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, finding a peaceable solution to the problems in the Middle East has long been an important concern of the United States. Attempts to reach a resolution of these difficulties, unfortunately have thus far failed.

While workable solutions have been found in short supply, a number of extremely helpful insights have been put forward. In this regard, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to a particularly insightful article by David A. Harris, Executive Director of the American Jewish Committee. Although it was written before the inauguration of the new American President and prior to the latest of peace negotiations ending in a stalemate, the insights that Mr. Harris provides are still timely and important.

Mr. Speaker, I commend David Harris’ thoughts to my colleagues and urge them to give his article careful attention.

AS ISRAEL MAKES FATEFUL POLITICAL AND SECURITY CHOICES

ISRAEL AND THE RESPONSIBLE CHOICES

The purpose of this article is to examine the roots of the conflict in the Middle East and the options for negotiating a solution.

As Israel makes fateful political and security choices, it is important to understand the factors that have led to the current situation and the potential consequences of different approaches.

Israel is faced with a number of difficult decisions, including whether to continue negotiations with the Palestinian Authority or pursue a unilateral declaration of independence. The choice is not only a matter of strategy, but also a reflection of the historical and cultural context of the region.

The article by David A. Harris highlights the importance of understanding the perspectives of all parties involved in the conflict, including the Palestinians, Israelis, and the international community.

The article argues that a negotiated solution is the best approach, and that the United States should continue to support efforts toward a two-state solution.

Overall, the article presents a thoughtful analysis of the complex issues involved in the Middle East conflict and the need for a comprehensive approach to finding a lasting solution.

David A. Harris, Executive Director of the American Jewish Committee, provides valuable insights into the situation and offers a constructive perspective on how to move forward.

In conclusion, the article by David A. Harris serves as a reminder of the importance of understanding the nuances of the conflict and the need for continued efforts to find a peaceful resolution.

The article is a valuable resource for those interested in understanding the complexities of the Middle East conflict and the need for a comprehensive approach to finding a lasting solution.
fractionated Knesset, which further clouds the outlook for stable governance. This is precisely what Benjamin Netanyahu is counting on. Although polls showed him leading over Shimon Peres, he chose not to run this time around unless the Knesset dissolved itself and also stood for new elections. It was a statesmanlike position, praised by those who normally count themselves among Netanyahu’s most fervent admirers; it was also a position calculated to elevate his standing in the eyes of those who see in him the true centrist, would almost surely step into the political fray.

OVERCOMING POLITICAL AND STRATEGIC FACTORS

In the meantime, as Israeli politics seeks to sort itself against the backdrop of the deep and seemingly irreconcilable fissures in Israeli society, certain things seem clear and best not be forgotten.

First, many of the claims of the Israeli right, especially since the signing of the Oslo Accords, have proven to be inaccurate. For example, incitement to hatred among Palestinian children has continued unabated and with devastating consequences. Moreover, the accumulation of the facts of the building of the Palestinian police and militia, in direct contravention of the Oslo Accords, has created a deadly adversary for Israel. And the wily and nod to Palestinian extremists—many arrested with great fanfare only to be released as soon as no one was paying attention—has undermined the chances for a peace with Israel.

Second, many of the claims of the Israeli left have also proved strikingly accurate, despite attempts by those on the right to dismiss them. Palestinians who do not apparently remain under Israeli occupation forever. Nor could Israel expect occupation to continue without some corrosive effects on its democratic values, nor could it absorb the Palestinians in the territories without undoing the Jewish character of the state. And perhaps the only Jewish settler extremists on remote outposts in Gaza, for example, would become flashpoints for violence between Israelis and Palestinians.

Towards a consensus, no one school of thought has a monopoly of wisdom on what is best for Israel. Ideologues, whether of the left or the right, are parties to the same phenomenon, envelopes of those who cannot see the facts to their doctrinal thinking rather than the other way around.

Fourth, whatever happens in the short run respecting Israeli-Palestinian issues, the sad reality is that Israel will continue to face severe challenges in the region, requiring a powerful military, eternal vigilance, and close coordination with the United States.

Fifth, we should be under little illusion about such notions as a “demilitarized Palestinian state” or “an end to the conflict.” A Palestinian state without a vibrant economy, with a prosperous middle class, or with a capable leadership is best for Israel. Ideologues, whether of the right or another, and the debate about whether it is good or bad for Israel seems largely irrelevant. It will happen, and Israel no doubt will do its utmost to establish harmonious ties, but it must also recognize, as a recent CIA report looking ahead to the year 2015 predicted, that “chilly” relations are likely to prevail and surveillance and monitoring will be required.

That Palestinian state will not be demilitarized, I believe, regardless of agreements signed, which could pose a threat both to Israel and Jordan. And there will remain those Palestinians who will seek to continue the struggle with Israel, whether they see Israel proper as their home, the way others do, or because they see the Zionists as “infidels” and “modern-day Crusaders” who have no right to be there, or both.

Sixth, we need to take very seriously anti-Semitism emanating from the Arab world. Not only is it pernicious and contrary to the American interest in fighting anti-Semitism emanating from the Arab world, but it also fuels anti-Semitic attacks against Jews and Jewish targets throughout the world, as we have tragically seen in recent months.

And finally, we need to remind ourselves of the importance of our own role in making a difference on Israel’s behalf. Both in our public education efforts in the United States, in which we stress the mutual benefits of close U.S.-Israel ties as well as America’s vital national interest in Israel’s security in a stable Middle East, and in our diplomatic, exchange and public affairs programs around the world, the American Jewish Committee is making a unique contribution to Israel’s quest for peace and security. The political and security challenges that lie ahead for Israel will doubtless only heighten the importance of that work.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

HON. STEPHEN HORN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001
Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, they say the third time is the charm. This year the House will pass—for the third time—the Shays-Meehan or McCain-Feingold bill. By either name, this is genuine, necessary and effective reform that will return power to the people and curb the endless money chase in our political campaigns.

This legislation ends the raising and spending of “soft” money. The parties have become addicted to huge checks from corporations, unions, and wealthy individuals. This bill puts both parties into immediate rehab.

This legislation also ends the sham “issue” ads that savage candidates of both parties in every election. It forces into the sunlight big money interests behind the ad.

The House has made it clear. It wants this reform to become law. This year, all of us hope that the Senate and our new President will look at this issue very carefully, offer constructive suggestions, and then join us in passing real campaign finance reform.

U.S. MIDDLE EAST POLICY

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001
Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues an article written by Douglas Bloomfield for the Chicago Jewish Star. The article provides an accurate summary of President Clinton’s efforts to facilitate peace and dialogue in the Middle East during his service to this country. I agree with Mr. Bloomfield that “No other (U.S.) President has been so closely identified with Israel’s search for peace.”

Mr. Bloomfield’s article discusses the popularity of President Clinton in Israel and among the Jewish Community in the United States due, in large part, to the commitment he made to do everything within his means to bring peace to the Middle East. I share that appreciation for the priority President Clinton made of these important issues. I have often looked to Mr. Bloomfield’s work for an accurate portrayal of events and issues in the Middle East as well as a constructive evaluation of U.S. Middle East policy. Clearly the Bush Administration has a tough act to follow in ensuring that Americans and Israeli’s feel comfortable in America’s commitment to the security of Israel and her prosperity in the future. I urge all of my colleagues to take the time to read the following article.

[From the Chicago Jewish Star]
WASHINGTON WATCH—SHALOM, BILL
(By Douglas M. Bloomfield)
“If Bill Clinton is looking for a job, he can come over here and run for prime minister. He’d win easily,” wrote Michael Schiess, who has covered Israel the other morning. “He’s still the most popular politician in the country.”

And he remains popular at home as well, particularly in the Jewish community, despite the controversies that plagued his administration. The peace proposal he unveiled recently in a farewell speech to peace activists included proposals that made even left even some dovish followers uncomfortable, but no reasonable person could challenge the sincerity of his desire to help Israel find peace.

Nor can anything overcome the mysterious as the Clinton haters and those extremists who see any concessions to the Palestinians as selling out.

No other president has been so closely identified with Israel’s search for peace. He ish voters was his high comfort level with the Israelis and the vast majority of Jewish voters, particularly on issues such as church-state separation, civil liberties, reproductive rights, the environment, education and social welfare. Jewish voters rewarded him and his vice president with nearly 80% of their votes in three national elections.

He wrongly relied on Ehud Barak’s faulty political instincts and novice politician’s enthusiasm. The President ignored the advice of his own advisors, the Palestinians and some Israelis when he bowed to Barak’s desire to convene last summer’s abortive Camp David summit.

More recently, he has been trying to salvage what he can from a minute agreement before leaving office—failing or refusing to hear the window of opportunity slam shut.

Clinton consistently overestimated his ability to affect Arafat’s behavior, and he may have badly miscalculated the level of the Palestinian leader’s commitment to a genuine peace.

Clinton has succeeded on so many fronts by dint of charm and personality, and he thought he could do it with Arafat as well. No other foreign leader has been to the White House so often, and Clinton’s misfortune to demand Arafat pay more for his blindness to Arafat’s faults and deception may have encouraged the semi-recognition of the administration as the result of his efforts.

Credit is shared with an unlikely partner, former Sen. Alfonse D’Amato (R-N.Y.). Although as chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, D’Amato was leading an investigation of the Clintons’ Whitewater investments, he put aside their political differences to cooperate fully in the Swiss investigations, realizing success beyond any one’s expectations.

Both the Administration and the Congress worked closely with the World Jewish Restitution Organization, representing both Israel and the diaspora, to bring about historic results.

I will leave it to others to chronicle Clinton’s many shortcomings. I expect history will judge this flawed president more kindly than his assailants. He also robbed his presidency of greatness as he demonstrated that in Washington most of the slings and arrows politicians suffer are self-inflicted.

The Jewish community should be very grateful for his stewardship, for his dedication and responsible discussions. At the same time, President Chen has made a number of conciliatory gestures towards the mainland. Taiwan does not seek confrontation, but a friendly dialogue with mainland China leading to future talks on all issues, including eventual reunification.

In terms of solidifying friendship and ties with ROC’s allies, President Chen and Minister Tien have traveled far and wide. Last year they completed a grueling 2-week journey of friendship to ROC’s allies in Central America and Africa. Minister Tien also traveled to Europe to strengthen Taiwan’s ties with friendly nations.

It is our understanding that to seek greater international recognition, Taiwan will continue to look to the ROC. Under ROC Law 109 and other international organizations. It is our view that a worthy nation like Taiwan must be given its proper recognition in the community of nations.
Experts believe that bovine spongiform encephalopathy is caused by a twisted protein. The disease destroys brain cells, eventually leaving the brain riddled with spongy holes.

The disease is spread when cattle consume feed that includes protein rendered from slaughtered cattle. Since 1997 it has been illegal under USDA and Drug Administration regulations to feed mammal proteins to cattle.

It is still legal, however, to feed mammal proteins to pigs and poultry. The FDA announced earlier this month that some feed producers frequently fail to use proper warning labels and that some producers have not systemically avoided using protein from rendered cattle with other products. In other words, the system is flawed.

A total ban against using rendered cattle for animal feed admittedly would hurt the rendering industry and perhaps contribute to a rise in the price of feed.

But those negative effects should be measured against the need to protect consumers from the human variant to mad cow disease and the economic devastation that would quickly follow discovery of the disease in the United States.

In Nebraska, the cattle industry contributes more than $1 billion a year to the state’s economy.

With mad cow disease continuing to spread in Europe, aggressive measures should be used to keep the disease outside U.S. borders. Legislative has been introduced in North Dakota and South Dakota to prevent the importation and use of feed containing animal parts. Nebraska should consider the same approach. Even better would be a ban that is nationwide.

HONORING THE RETIREMENT OF MR. PAUL FARMER FROM THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor an individual who has served his country during a time of war and within the Department of Veterans Affairs during a time of peace. After entering the military at the age of 17, Mr. Paul G. Farmer of Spray, North Carolina served the majority of his military career in Europe before serving in Viet Nam in 1967 and 1968. He retired after 21 years of service to be with his wife shortly after she was diagnosed with a terminal illness. Yet, Mr. Farmer did not let his retirement from the military end his service to his country.

Paul Farmer began a long and successful career with the Department of Veterans’ Affairs on December 5, 1989, but it was not until 1995 that Paul arrived in my district of El Paso, Texas with a new and inventive assignment. The Department of Veterans’ Affairs that was designed to evaluate medical disabilities for active duty personnel prior to their discharge or retirement from service, a program that became very successful. Anyone who had the pleasure to work with Paul knew that he maintained his office to all area veterans. Paul initiated several community outreach programs and worked to achieve compensation and medical benefits for numerous veterans in the El Paso and Southern New Mexico area.

Mr. Speaker, Paul Farmer has dedicated his career to the safety and security of his country and has further dedicated his professional life to ensure that United States Armed Service veterans are given the foremost respect and service that our nation should by honor. I ask that we recognize this individual, thank him for his years of dedicated service, and wish him Godspeed in his retirement.

IN TRIBUTE TO UNDERSECRETARY OF THE AIR FORCE, CAROL DIBATTISTE

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this body the fact, in January, a distinguished leader of the Air Force left office to begin a new chapter in her life. Carol DiBattiste, Under Secretary of the Air Force, has recently resigned from her position, and I want to join her many friends and colleagues in commending her for a job well done.

During her tenure, Under Secretary DiBattiste served with honor and distinction, providing exceptional leadership to reinforce a promising future for the Department of Defense, the Air Force, and for American aerospace power. Coupled with her unprecedented energy, commitment, and enthusiasm, Under Secretary DiBattiste’s initiatives became catalysts for success, and helped lead the Air Force through a critical period of modernization and consolidation. She was the Air Force’s key leader in the fight to solve and reverse Air Force retention shortages and recruiting shortfalls. Her successes in these endeavors are both impressive and lasting.

Most notably, Under Secretary DiBattiste did a remarkable job on behalf of Air Force members and their families. Her leadership of a special Department of Defense task force to formulate anti-harassment policy resulted in outstanding guidance on this emotionally charged subject. This emphasis on equal opportunity and her tireless pursuit of higher standards for Air Force quality of life are examples of the many ways she found to invigorate morale and retention during a period of critical shortfalls, personnel reductions, and increased operations tempo. Her visionary and aggressive campaign against recruiting shortfalls, including creation of the Air Force Recruiting and Retention Task Force, the Air Force Marketing and Advertising Office, and the Strategic Communications Outreach Program, made all the difference for the Air Force in their ability to make recruiting goals and erase shortfalls. Under Secretary DiBattiste led by example, delivering almost 100 speeches in a 12 month period, and traveling to over 85 bases and locations throughout the world during her tenure.

I join my colleagues on behalf of a grateful nation in thanking Carol DiBattiste. The innumerable opportunities and improvements she affected across the Department of Defense and the Air Force have poised both for a brilliant future.

HONORING WAYNE GYENIZS ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO
OF CONNECTICUT
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. DeLAURO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I pay tribute today to a man whose tireless efforts have left an indelible mark on the State of Connecticut. Today, after nearly 40 years of dedicated service to the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 478, Wayne Gyenizs will celebrate his retirement.

Over the course of his career with IUOE Local 478, Wayne’s innumerable contributions have strengthened the voice of tradesmen across the State of Connecticut. One of his most impressive achievements has been the establishment and continued expansion of Local 478’s Joint Apprentice Training and Skill Improvement School. Each year, the Joint Apprentice Program provides training, skill enhancement, and refresher courses to over 600 apprentices and journeymen. This program gives individuals the ability to acquire a skilled trade and lifetime opportunity—giving working families the sense of contentment that comes with economic independence. As the present of the Local 478 for the past decade, Wayne has provided a unique combination of leadership and commitment that has promoted stability among his membership and in the union’s relations with its local employers.

In addition to his work with the Local 478, Wayne has been an active voice in local and national labor activities. As a member of the AFL–CIO Executive Board and the State Building and Construction Trades Council, Wayne has fought for better wages, more comprehensive health benefits for workers and their families, steady and substantive employment, and safer working environments. He has been a true leader for our working families, giving them a voice during the hardest of economic times.

Wayne’s generosity and commitment extends beyond his professional contributions. Serving in the U.S. Air Force for 12 years, Wayne dedicated over a decade of his life to protecting the fundamental freedoms we so often take for granted. As a member of the Eastern Labor Board of Directors, Wayne has given his time and energy to improving the lives of some of our most vulnerable citizens. Throughout his life, Wayne has demonstrated a unique commitment to public service and to improving our community.

I would like to extend my deepest thanks and sincere appreciation to Wayne for his many years of service of working families throughout Connecticut. I am proud to stand today and join his wife, Judy; Sons, Glenn, Garry, and Gregg; family friends; and colleagues in saluting my dear friend, Wayne Gynizs as he celebrates his retirement. My best wishes for many more years of health and happiness.

IN HONOR OF THE LATE RICK PACurar
HON. NANCY PELOSI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise with pride and deep sadness to pay my respects to a San Francisco leader, Michael “Rick” Pacurar, who tragically passed away last month from AIDS-related complications. Rick was a tireless advocate for the cause he believed in, and his work touched the lives of many people. He will be long remembered with great affection and respect.

Rick Pacurar graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Stanford University with a degree in psychology. He began attending Harvard Business School but soon moved to San Francisco after deciding his studies there were not taking him in the direction he wished to go.

He found the satisfaction from his work which had been missing in business school as an activist in San Francisco. Early on in the AIDS crisis, Rick helped to publish a pamphlet, “Can We Talk,” and founded the Harvey Milk AIDS Education Fund to raise awareness about the disease. For these and other efforts, he was asked to serve on the San Francisco Joint Task Force on HIV. Rick was also an advocate for San Francisco artists and served as the director of a live-work complex for artists named Project Artaud.

Rick’s activism extended into his work for candidates and elected officials. He worked on campaigns for Senator BARBARA BOXER, former San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos, and San Francisco Supervisor Tom Ammiano. He also served as an aide to former Supervisor Harry Britt and to then-Assemblyman John Burton.

Rick’s passing is a great loss for San Francisco. Despite his illness, he was always ready and willing to fight for what he believed in. His activity and commitment were inspirational, and he put his heart into everything that he did. Rick was a true friend to the community, and he was loved for it. We will miss him greatly.

My thoughts and prayers are with his partner, Mike Housh; his parents, Victor and Doris; his sister, Vicki Lekas; and all of his family and friends.

THE EXCELLENCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY IN EDUCATION ACT
HON. GEORGE MILLER
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague Mr. KILDEE and other Democratic members of the House in introducing the Excellence and Accountability in Education Act, a comprehensive K–12 education reform bill.

Along with proposals last week from President Bush and from Senator JOE LIEBERMAN and Representative TIM ROEMER and CAL DOOLEY, this is the third education proposal unveiled so far this year to improve America’s public schools. All three proposals share a great deal in common.

Our schools are in a crisis. The school system, in too many instances, is failing to properly educate all of our kids. Frankly, it is nothing short of a crime that we have tolerated failing schools for so many years.

But I believe strongly that this year is going to be different. For many years, we have debated whether we have the will or the wallet to really fix our schools. I believe we are now at a time in history when we have both the will and the wallet to improve public school education. We have a President who has clearly indicated he has the will to impose real accountability and fix failing schools. But we must also provide real resources to get the job done.

There is no point in misleading parents and schools by telling them we will help but without providing the investments that are necessary. This must be an honest process with respect to the policies and the resources that must go with them. In exchange for the resources we are going to demand accountability. That will be a winning formula if we give it a chance. That is what we do in this bill today.

In the last Congress, Mr. KILDEE and I, and other Members of Congress, worked to enact many of other policies included in our bill. I am energized and encouraged that there now appears to be a great deal of across party lines and political sectors on what is needed to improve public school education for all children.

There is widespread agreement that if we provide adequate resources to schools and in return hold them accountable to high standards, that all children, no matter their background, can have the opportunity to succeed in school. Such widespread agreement did not exist even one year ago. Here is what our bill would do.

Our bill would hold schools accountable to high standards. It places particular emphasis on closing the “achievement gap” between different groups of kids—rich and poor, minority and non-minority. This is something President Bush and I both believe in strongly.

Our bill would provide the greatest amount of resources of any proposal yet to help schools meet their standards. And our bill will continue to target resources on the most vulnerable children in the most difficult schools.

Our bill provides real money in return for real reform. For example, we would double funding for the Title I program, boost funds to the lowest performing schools, and provide funds to improve assessment and accountability systems to make them fairer and more accurate.

Let me clear about the differences between our bill and the approach taken by President Bush.

Our bill would not divert public funds from public schools to private and religious schools, through vouchers or through any other means. Neither would the Lieberman/Roemer/Dooley bill.

The issue vouchers, in my opinion, is a non-starter.

Nor would our bill dilute or eviscerate key local education programs, such as the After-School and Safe-And Drug-Free Schools programs, school renovation, and the e-rate program.

Our bill balances funds school and library Internet connections.

I am open to discussing with my Republican and Democratic colleagues what we can do to streamline federal education programs at the state and local level. But he history of reduced funding and weakened accountability that comes with block grants suggests that we should approach this issue very cautiously.

I want to add that our bill places greater emphasis in certain areas where the President places less and where we hope to work together to find agreement, specifically, in the areas of: raising teacher standards; creating financial incentives such as loan forgiveness and pay bonuses to attract teachers to high-need schools; improving state and local assessment and accountability; and investing more resources.

I think the Miller/Kildee bill is the best approach in terms of committing new resources to schools, targeting effective programs, and holding schools accountable to high standards without abandoning them.

I am encouraged by the beginning of this Congress and this new Administration. I take the President’s commitment to education and to working with Congress very seriously and I look forward to making a difference this year for all children.

PUBLIC EDUCATION REINVESTMENT AND RESPONSIBILITY ACT

HON. ELLEN O. TAUSCHER
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in highlighting some important aspects of the Public Education Reinvestment and Responsibility Act.

This legislation, often referred to as the Three R’s, would refocus our national education policy by giving school districts the money and local control they need to improve. And, it demands that they get results.

This bill is the way to help American public schools to equal opportunity for all students by closing the achievement gap; improving teacher quality; helping immigrant students master English; promoting public health insurance to their employees. Among self-employed families, approximately 5 million Americans and their children or other dependents are uninsured. These families represent small businesses operating as sole proprietors, S corporations, limited liability companies, and partnerships—including the majority of farmers and ranchers. Congress should make health insurance more accessible and affordable to these working families by accelerating their health insurance deduction to 100 percent immediately.

We have the opportunity this year to provide tax fairness and parity on the deductibility of health insurance for all employers. Larger businesses can deduct 100 percent of their health insurance costs. Under current law, the long-standing disparity between the self-employed and large employers does not end until the year 2003. Three more years is a long time to ask small-business families with no health insurance to wait for simple tax fairness. For most of us, the prospect of having no health insurance coverage for ourselves and our children for even a few months is daunting—imagine three years.

As critical as this bill is to eliminating the tax disparity between small businesses and the 44 million uninsured Americans, the bill would also provide small businesses greater access to affordable health care; expand the ability of small employers to provide health insurance to their employees, and simply taxes for small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Committee on Small Business, I am proud to offer this bipartisan bill together with our ranking Democrat NYDIA M. VELAZQUEZ of New York, and Representatives PHIL ENGLISH of Pennsylvania and KAREN L. THURMAN of Florida of the Committee on Ways and Means. We urge its prompt passage in this Congress.

TRIBUTE TO DOUG JACOBS

HON. KEN CALVERT
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a heavy heart to pay tribute to a fallen detective from Riverside, CA. Detective Doug Jacobs died Saturday, January 13, in the line of duty for his Riverside community. We send our condolences and prayers to his family, neighbors, and the community.

Doug Jacobs was 30 years of age and employed with the Riverside Police Department since 1995. He leaves behind his young wife, Tamara, daughter Rachel, and stepson Nicho-and other flowers from around the world, and delivered more than 1,500 centerpieces, podium pieces and stage arrangements.

Mr. Speaker, I'd specifically like to commend the efforts of my constituents John and Ida Muller. For the last thirty years, John and Ida have owned and operated Daylight Nursery in Half Moon Bay, California. Their efforts during the Inauguration are consistent with their spirit of giving, which is unlimited. They are constantly giving to their community, often hosting disabled children at their nursery. John Muller serves on the San Francisco Bay Regional Water Control Board and was recently named Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, John and Eda Muller are two of the finest human beings that I've ever had the privilege of knowing and it is a great privilege to represent them. We owe all the volunteers from the Society of American Florists our deepest gratitude for their selfless efforts during the Inauguration. Because of them, the words 'America the Beautiful' have ever more meaning for us all!

INTRODUCTION OF INTERNATIONAL PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICING PARITY RESOLUTION

HON. JOHN ELIAS BALDACCI
OF MAINE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, our nation is facing a growing crisis—the high cost of prescription drugs. The threat is greatest to our elderly who rely most heavily on prescription medications to maintain their health.

The scientific wonders of newly-developed life-saving drugs mean nothing if the people who need these medications cannot afford them.

Within our country, citizens pay widely varying prices for the same drugs. We know, for example, that seniors who rely on Medicare actually pay the highest prices for prescription drugs. We can and should work to provide a voluntary, universally-available prescription drug benefit under Medicare.

However, what I find most unconscionable is the difference in price between identical drugs sold in the United States and in our neighboring countries. Studies show that U.S. drug manufacturers often charge Americans more for their products than they do citizens of other countries. The average price differential is about 33 percent, though for certain drugs it can be much greater. Apparently, American pharmaceutical companies are happy to utilize taxpayer funded research to develop new drugs and then turn around and sell the resulting medicines to Americans at premium prices, while selling them abroad at reduced rates. Talk about fleecing of America.

Citizens of my state and many other border states have resorted to boarding busses to visit doctors and pharmacies in Canada in order to save money on their prescriptions. America is the greatest nation in the world, yet Maine people are forced to travel to Canada to obtain life-saving medicines at a price they can afford. This is simply wrong.

And yet, currently they have no alternative. Congress must seize this opportunity to make a real difference in the health and welfare of all Americans by ensuring that our citizens have affordable access to prescription drugs. We must ensure that Americans can purchase medications at prices comparable to those that citizens of other countries pay.

The need for this action is clear. Today I am reintroducing, along with Representative J.C. EMERSON, a resolution that makes clear Congress' understanding of the high priority this issue must hold. It affirms our opposition to cross-border prescription drug price disparities and our commitment to address this issue in a meaningful way. I hope that my colleagues will join us in recognizing the seriousness of this issue, and taking action to help those most in need of affordable medications.

COMMENDING THE PREVENTION OF A TRAGEDY AT DE ANZA COLLEGE

HON. MIKE HONDA

TRIBUTE TO FRANK GREGORIN
HON. ASA HUTCHINSON
OF ARKANSAS
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to rise to commend the valiant service of a fellow Arkansan, Mr. Frank Gregorin of Sommers, AR. A recounting of his World War II heroics was recently published in the 65th Signal Battalion’s July 2000 Newsletter which follows below. I want to again thank this service to our country during those difficult times and wish him all the best in his future endeavors.

[From the 65th Signal Battalion, July 2000 Newsletter]

“March 29, 1945 began as an ordinary World War II day in Europe, but on this day I was scheduled to become a cinder. It was my turn to die unless some friend would help me. The help I would need was nearly impossible to obtain. The friend would have to put his life on the line, place himself in worse danger than I who was about to die. And this was not enough. He would have to have certain skills and be able to summon super-human strength. He would have to disregard all these dangers and concentrate on a tough and complicated task. I had such a friend and didn’t know it.

The day was the one where we departed France and moved back toward the Rhine. The convoy of 65th Signal Battalion vehicles moved into Worms, Germany, a large city on the West side of the Rhine River. The city appeared intact, but soon we noticed that those tall buildings had no insides. All roofs had fallen into basements. It was a city of shell buildings.

We arrived at the river and began a drive across it on a two track bridge, one track for each wheel, supported by flimsy pontoons. I was in the middle of which was parked the shop of a radio-repair truck. Slight waves in the river made the pontoons roll back and forth. Movement caused a mad rush. It was worse. There was concern that trucks would tip over and sink into the river, but all made it across. The convoy began moving deeper into Germany. First roads wound through the Hartz Mountains. Danger seemed past so I made myself comfortable. A repair bench on the away from the cliff became a bed on which I slept. It was beautiful. What a pleasant way to fight a war.

Suddenly, the convoy stopped. Looking out the window, forward, men were running away from me. To the rear, men were running away from me. Obviously, I was in some kind of a problem. The rear window told the story. There was no view, only fire, and no ordinary fire. Yow! Those were violent gasoline flames hitting the window. The entire supply of gasoline on board the trailer of the radio-repair truck was about to explode! The only exit was through the one door, through the flames, to the outside world. As I hesitated, something which could not be removed. A small, six-inch diameter opening in the front of the shop was to small to pass me. I wasted precious time wondering if I could fit through the little hole. No, I must dive through the fire. I opened the door, slightly. A bunzen-burner flame blew into the truck from the top of that tiny opening to bottom. I dared open it no further.

At this point, a voice came to me from outside the door and said, ‘Stay in the truck, Oneby!’ Technical Sergeant Frank Gregorin was beneath those wild flames unhitching the trailer. This was no comfort. I stared at the six-inch diameter hole in the front of the repair shop. It was still too small for me to squeeze through. Suddenly, success! The flames departed from the rear window Sergeant Gregorin had removed the hitch and was walking the trailer over to the cliff. Single-handedly of the wheel, I had hit a pebble or the trailer became unbalanced in any way, he wouldn’t have been able to handle it. I opened the door and prepared to join him in this four-man job. What I saw was frightening. Flames were flowing off the trailer in a vertical sheet. The sheet was inches away behind him. He didn’t know of this danger and was looking at me. He yelled, ‘Stay away from here, Oneby. That’s an order!’ He was so worried about me, he didn’t realize the slight change in the direction of the wind, and he’d been burned alive. No one could ever continue carrying a heavy trailer with a bunzen-burner flame hitting him.

I closed the door, so he wouldn’t look at me, gave him time to look away then opened it again. Sergeant Gregorin had already thrown the trailer off the cliff and hit the dirt, flat as a pancake. His timing was perfect. The trailer blew up as it left his hand. The fire and smoke cloud rose up into the sky. I’d never seen one before. Pieces of metal were flying everywhere. I hadn’t had time to be scared until then. The realization of the closeness of a nasty way of dying sunk in right there.

Everyone, including me, converged on Greg to see what was left of him. He arrose and moved his arms sideways to himself and the rest of us that he was completely whole, not a scratch. Unbelievable.

Sergeant Damrow couldn’t believe he was unhurt. He asked, ‘Is it true, you sure, you’re not hurt?’ Then, ‘You were a damn fool, Greg!’ I thought, ‘Thank God for a damn fool.’ Something holy and miraculous had occurred. My wonderful sergeant had become a miracle man.

Sergeant Hess, who had been driving behind Sergeant Gregorin, called us to see damage to his vehicle. Snipers had put bullets into his windshield and wipers. Snipers had started the gasoline fire. Snipers had hit a gas-cylinder ahead of Sergeant Gregorin’s vehicle. When Greg began the rescue, the snipers ceased their firing. I like to believe they were in awe of a brave man. Did they watch the scene from the forest above the road?

Greg returned to his vehicle behind the radio truck. I returned to the bench but didn’t lie down and sleep for a whole day. Later, I asked Greg, ‘Would you like me to report this event, so you receive a medal?’ He gave a negative reply. It was war time, and there was little opportunity for writing, immediately.

The war ended, and one day there was a big battalion meeting. Medals were issued with not one given of Gregorin’s. Gregorin a more heroic deed, yet he got nothing. I asked him again, and he stood firm on his previous commitment. Soon he learned the folly of his way. With the medals came points to get the men home, sooner. He laments secretly to me, “Maybe I should have let you report that event.”

A sad day arrived. Greg got kicked up the ladder, transferred to higher headquarters and made into a master sergeant. His heroism and great capabilities seemed to be remembered slightly. He disappeared from my life for a few months, then returned one day for a visit.

The 65th Signal Battalion was stationed at a mountain near a body of water. He visited during October 1945. Upon his arrival, his replacement, Sergeant Valentine, called to me, saying, “A friend of yours is here.” I was pleasantly surprised to see him in great health and with the smile I always like to see. Sergeant Valentine took our picture together. It was the last I would see of him for many years. We both returned home to busily take up where we left off. We eventually began exchanging letters and again got to visit together. Although not near neighbors, we lived within 80 miles of each other. I count him as my best friend. No one could ever beat him at that.

HONORING NEW MEXICO’S CATHOLIC SCHOOLS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Catholic School Week. I want to take this opportunity to highlight, praise and congratulate our Catholic schools in my home state of New Mexico.

A whole host of events and presentations are planned for this annual observance of the significant role that Catholic elementary and secondary schools play in educating our young people. This is also an occasion to observe the high standard of excellence and the quality of education available in these institutions.

Mr. Speaker, whatever our religious affiliations, we can all admit that for many generations our parochial schools have achieved outstanding results in providing an excellent education. Even non-Catholic parents have turned to the parochial schools to educate their children.

I especially wish to acknowledge Archbishop Michael J. Sheehan of the Archdiocese of Santa Fe. His strong leadership is an example to us all. On Sunday, April 25, 1999, an editorial by Archbishop Sheehan appeared in the Albuquerque Journal. As he eloquently stated, “Learning takes place in the home and in the classroom. To improve academic performance, we have to have students who are willing and ready to learn, competent teachers who care about children and who have high expectations of students, and parents and extended families who also care and have high expectations of their children.” Indeed, Archbishop Sheehan has captured the essence of education.

I urge all my colleagues to join with me and salute the fine people that make the Catholic schools in New Mexico a reality. It is in the spirit of this wonderful celebration that I wish to recommend and pay tribute to Catholic Schools Week.

RESPONSIBLE DEBT RELIEF AND DEMOCRACY REFORM ACT

HON. FRANK R. WOLF
OF VIRGINIA

Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the Responsible Debt Relief and Democracy Reform Act. This legislation, which I first introduced in the 106th Congress, is intended to provide debt relief to poor countries that have an insurmountable debt burden and to encourage these same countries to implement reforms for sound democracy and the maintenance of a civil society.

Having just returned from a trip to Central Africa where I visited the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Burundi, and Sudan, I am convinced that responsibly provided debt relief to the poorest countries of the world is one of the best ways to help the poor and the suffering.

The countries I recently visited are among the poorest of the world. Life in those countries and throughout Africa is not easy. Death, famine, disease and pain are a constant as millions struggle to survive another day. A recent report by the United Nations says that 180 million people in sub-Saharan Africa are undernourished. Some children go days without a meal. Some suffer from immune systems and horrible diseases take hold.

The AIDS virus is reaching epidemic proportions. Seventy percent of the world’s AIDS cases are in Africa where more than 16,000 people a day are infected. More than 2 million Africans died of AIDS in 2000. There are 16 African countries where more than 10 percent of the adult population is infected with AIDS. Hunger and disease lead the list as the major crises facing the poorest countries of the world. But there are other similar characteristics: most of these countries struggle with democracy or with bad governance; they also are caught in a downward spiral of debt, causing difficult and uncertain futures.

Many of these countries must spend an exorbitant amount of their budgets simply to make their debt payments. The rock singer, Bono, a vocal advocate for providing debt relief to heavily indebted poor countries, says, “A country like Niger, with a life expectancy of 47 years, spends more paying off their debts than on health and education combined.”

Indeed, a country like Niger is not alone. Debt payments can consume as much as 30–40 percent of a poor country’s revenue. The chances of these countries ever paying back their loans is slim to none. Realistically, none of their debt is ever going to be repaid.

The poor countries of the world have an alarmingly low life expectancy rate, with reports indicating that the average person in Sierra Leone only lives for 27 years. Cancelling or reducing the debt of the poorest countries of the world is an opportunity for the U.S. to alleviate the suffering that these people face.

Unfortunately, many of these poor countries facing insurmountable debt and needing democratic reform are in Africa.

The current Bush Administration has a unique opportunity to make a difference in Africa. Throughout my trip, the constant refrain I heard was that the United States just needed to show it cared. No one asked for American troops to be deployed. They just want America to send a signal that it will begin to focus on the plight of Africa before another generation of young people is lost to civil war, famine, disease and AIDS.

The U.S. can help provide hope and opportunity for those who may be hopeless. Providing debt relief to the poorest governments of the world, if done the right way, can free these governments to better address the needs of their own people.

But simply canceling a country’s debt doesn’t necessarily pave the way to good government. The governments of poor countries are often part of the problem. For a variety of reasons, people and governments frequently stand in the way of alleviating poverty or sickness or of providing hope and opportunity to the poorest of the poor.

That is why the legislation I propose today will provide incentives to countries to reform their governments. To institute needed democratic reforms and basic structures of a civil society such as, respect for human rights, promoting religious freedom, freedom of the press, and freedom of association.

The legislation says that debt by the U.S. will be provided to countries that meet the following requirements, as determined by the President of the U.S.: Freedom of the press. Freedom of association. An independent and non-discriminatory judiciary. Reduction or elimination of corruption relating to public officials, including the promulgation of laws prohibiting bribery of public officials and disclosure of assets by such officials; the establishment of an independent anti-corruption commission; the establishment of an independent agency to audit financial activities of public officials.

Free and fair elections. Practice of internationally recognized human rights.

Opposition to international terrorism as determined by the Secretary of State.

The President may暂停 more of these requirements for emergency humanitarian relief purposes, if the President determines and certifies to Congress that it is in the national security interests of the U.S., or if the President determines that a recipient country is making demonstrable progress in the aforementioned areas.

The President is to notify Congress of the justification for the determination of the countries that will receive a cancellation or reduction of debt according to the conditions in this legislation.

Finally, this legislation conveys the sense of Congress that the President should instruct the U.S. director at each international financial institution to which the U.S. is a member to ensure the voice, vote and influence of the U.S. to urge the cancellation or reduction of debt owed to the institution by a country only if the country meets the same requirements applicable in this legislation.

We need to help the poorest countries overcome their debt burden, but it must be done responsibly. We must ensure that a dictator’s pockets are not lined as a result of debt relief. That is why this legislation sets up a framework to help the poorest nations of the world in their struggle toward democracy, rather than simply writing off their debt. This legislation says progress in democratic reforms, honoring human rights, and opposition to terrorism are important for developing our poor countries. It says that one of the ways to help the poor is to give them opportunities created by empowering democracy, transparency, and much needed relief from their country’s overwhelming debt burden. Lastly it says that if those goals are met, the U.S. will help those countries struggling to help their citizens to a better, more prosperous future.

Mr. Speaker, while this legislation may not be the perfect answer, I am hopeful it will provide the foundation for discussion on how to help the poor and give them opportunities so that the 107th Congress and the Bush Administration can deal with this important issue.

I urge my colleagues to join me in co-sponsoring this bill.

H.R.—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.
This Act may be cited as the “Responsible Debt Relief and Democracy Reform Act”.

SEC. 2. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR CANCELLATION OR REDUCTION OF DEBT OWED TO THE UNITED STATES.

The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2511 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“PART VI—ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR CANCELLATION OR REDUCTION OF DEBT OWED TO THE UNITED STATES
“SEC. 901 CANCELLATION OR REDUCTION OF DEBT.
“Beginning on and after the date of the enactment of this part, the President may cancel or reduce amounts owed to the United States (or any agency of the United States) by foreign countries as a result of concessional or nonconcessional loans made, guarantees issued, or credits extended under any other provision of law only if, in addition to the requirements contained under the applicable provisions of law providing authority for the debt cancellation or reduction, the requirements contained in section 902 are satisfied.

SEC. 902 ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS.

“(a) In General.—A foreign country shall be eligible for cancellation or reduction of debt under any other provision of law only if the government of the country—

“(2) ensures freedom of association;

“(3) has established an independent and non-discriminatory judiciary;

“(4) provides for the reduction or elimination of corruption relating to public officials, including—

“(A) the promulgation of laws to prohibit bribery of and by public officials, including disclosure of assets by such officials upon taking office, periodically while in office, and upon leaving office;

“(B) the establishment of an independent anti-corruption commission—

“(i) to receive and verify the disclosure of assets by public officials in accordance with subparagraph (A); and

“(ii) to make all findings available to the appropriate administrative or judicial entries; and

“(C) the establishment of an independent agency—

“(i) to audit the financial activities of public officials and agencies; and

“(ii) to make all adults under clause (i) available to the appropriate administrative or judicial entities;

“(5) is elected through free and fair elections;

“(6) does not engage in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights; and

“(7) does not repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism, as determined by the Secretary of State under section 4(j)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(j)(1)) or section 620A(a) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371(a)).

“(b) EXCEPTIONS.—The President may waive the application of 1 or more of the requirements of subsection (a) with respect to the cancellation or reduction of debt owed to the United States by a foreign country—

“(1) for emergency humanitarian relief purposes;

“(2) if the President determines that it is in the national security interests of the United States to do so;

“(3) if the President determines that the foreign country is making demonstrable progress in meeting the requirements of paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (a) by adopting appropriate legal and other related reforms.

“(c) CONGRESSIONAL NOTIFICATION.—Not later than 7 days prior to the cancellation or reduction of debt in accordance with section 901, the President shall transmit to the Congress a report that contains a justification for the determination by the President that—

“(1) the requirements contained in each of paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (a) have been satisfied with respect to the foreign country involved; or

“(2) the requirement of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (b) has been satisfied with respect to the foreign country involved.”

SEC. 3. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS RELATING TO CANCELLATION OR REDUCTION OF MULTILATERAL DEBT.

It is the sense of the Congress of the President should instruct the United States Executive Director at each international financial institution to which the United States is a member to use the voice, vote, and influence of the United States to urge that the cancellation or reduction of debt owed to the institution by a country may be provided only if the country meets the same requirements applicable to the cancellation or reduction of amounts owed to the United States under paragraphs (1) through (7) of section 902(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (as added by section 2).

COMMITTEE JURISDICTION RELATING TO H. CON. RES. 15

HON. HENRY J. HYDE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, January 31, 2001

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I insert into the RECORD, a letter from Chairman Oxley, concerning his committee's jurisdiction over H. Con. Res. 15 and his willingness to waive that committees referral of the bill, to permit us to proceed to its consideration.

HON. HENRY J. HYDE, Chairman, Committee on International Relations, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR HENRY: I understand that you intend to bring H. Con. Res. 15, a resolution expressing sympathy for the victims of the Indian earthquake, to the floor today for consideration under the suspension calendar. As you know, the Committee on Financial Services was granted an additional referral upon the resolution's introduction pursuant to the Committee's jurisdiction over international financial and monetary organizations under Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

Because of the importance of this matter, I recognize your desire to bring this legislation before the House in an expeditious manner and will waive consideration of the resolution by the Financial Services Committee. By agreeing to waive its consideration of the resolution, the Financial Services Committee does not waive its jurisdiction over H. Con. Res. 15. In addition, the Committee on Financial Services reserves its authority to seek conferees on any provisions of the resolution that are within the Financial Services Committee's jurisdiction during any House-Senate conference that may be convened on this legislation. I ask your commitment to support any request by the Committee on Financial Services for conferees on H. Con. Res. 15 or related legislation.

I request that you include this letter and your response as part of the Record during the consideration of the legislation on the House floor.

Thank you for your attention to these matters.

Sincerely, MICHAEL G. OXLEY, Chairman.
