House of Representatives

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LA TOURTE).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

I hereby appoint the Honorable STEVEN C. LA TOURTE to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAKER

Rabbi Hillel Cohn, Congregation Emanu El, San Bernardino, California, offered the following prayer:

Thousands of years ago, in setting down the fundamental requirements for any community, the Torah charged: "Tsedek, tsedek tirdof": "Justice, justice shall you pursue."

Appreciating the importance of justice, the Founders of this Nation envisioned an America that would guarantee "liberty and justice for all."

O God, strengthen the resolve of those who serve here to make the decisions as well as the processes leading to those decisions genuinely just. Let America pursue justice in our enforcement of laws, in our forms of punishment, in our methods of choosing our leaders, in our allocation of precious resources, in our expectations of other leaders, in our methods of choosing our leaders, in our allocation of precious resources, in our expectations of other nations, and in our daily relations with one another.

Praised be the Eternal God, the Sovereign, who loves justice and expects us to pursue justice, uncompromising and true justice. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day’s proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker’s approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Speaker’s approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from California (Mr. Lewis) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Lewis of California led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOMING RABBI HILLEL COHN

(Mr. Lewis of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, over the last 6 months, we have seen some major changes in our economy. We lost 94,000 manufacturing jobs just in February. Overall economic growth slowed to just 1.1 percent in the fourth quarter of last year. In the quarter before that, the growth was 5.6 percent. I do not need to remind anyone how far down the stock market has gone. Clearly, we need to take action. Some in this body are claiming that even by talking about the slowdown in the economy, we are pushing the country into recession. But we need to have a sensible discussion about what needs to be done to breathe new life into the American economy. This is too important to make it political.

Yesterday’s cut in interest rates will help, but we need tax cuts as well. Only by getting more money into the hands of the people who spend can we get our economy moving again. Let us pass the President’s tax relief package. In fact, let us even make it bigger and retroactive. And let us do it now.

FUNDING NEEDED FOR NEW MARKET INITIATIVES

(Mr. DAVIS of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, last year we spent a great deal of time, energy and effort developing a new markets venture capital program with enthusiastic support from President Clinton and Speaker HASTERT. When I look at the President’s budget for 2002, it provides no money at all for these initiatives to spur economic growth and development in disadvantaged inner city and rural communities.

Today, we are going to hear a great deal about faith as a way of dealing with the needs, hopes and aspirations of the disadvantaged. I say that faith without money is shallow. Let us keep the faith and fund these new market initiatives for inner city and rural disadvantaged communities.

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI PRESIDENT EDWARD THADDEUS FOOTE, II

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to Edward Thaddeus Foote II, President of the University of Miami, who will soon retire after 20 years of remarkable service to the university and indeed to the entire South Florida community.

Tad arrived at UM in 1981 where he introduced corporate-style strategic planning and recruited approximately three-quarters of the current faculty during his tenure. Under his leadership, high-quality teaching became a top priority, and the university’s research productivity has expanded dramatically.

Tad enabled the founding of the University’s School of Architecture, School of Communication, School of International Studies, as well as the Dante B. Fascell North-South Center, making the University of Miami the largest and most comprehensive private research university in the Southeast. Tad is a visionary and a bold leader who never compromises his quest for quality.

Sadly, he has announced that he will be leaving the presidency on June 1 but will serve as chancellor of the University until 2003.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in celebrating the tremendous advancements realized under President Tad Foote’s extraordinary leadership and in wishing him Godspeed.

AMERICA IN DANGER

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, America is in danger. China just built their third missile base, and North Korea referred to Uncle Sam as an aggressor. Think about it. We are now looking down the fangs of a dragon.

China is going after Taiwan, North Korea is escalating tensions, and Janet Reno is doing Saturday Night Live. Beam me up here.

While President Reagan crippled communism, Bush’s actions have absolutely reinvented the greatest threat America has ever had and no one is looking.

I yield back all those Chinese missiles pointed at American cities.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, former President Clinton promised us we would be out of Bosnia by the end of 1996. We are still there and have spent billions of U.S. taxpayer dollars in the process. We have spent billions more in Haiti, Rwanda, Somalia, Kosovo and many other places. We have become the world’s policeman, even though our people do not want us to be.

There are armed conflicts going on in many places all around the world all the time. We seem to follow a CNN foreign policy, throwing huge money at whichever problem area is being emphasized on the national news. Macedonia is next. We are spending $4 million every day in Iraq 10 years after the Gulf War.

In Sunday’s Washington Times, syndicated columnist Steve Chapman wrote this:

Remember the war in Kosovo? The United States launched an 11-week aerial bombardment of Yugoslavia in 1999 to help the ethnic Albanians. Two years later, our soldiers are fighting the Albanians and welcoming help from the Serbs. In the Balkans, you see, a friend is merely someone who isn’t your enemy just yet.

CONGRATULATING JOHNSON C. SMITH UNIVERSITY ON ITS "MARCH MADNESS" DREAM STORY

(Mr. WATT of North Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in North Carolina at this time of year, March Madness is bursting out all over. Three of the five first-team All-American players are from North Carolina teams. Duke, the University of North Carolina, Wake Forest, the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, and the University of North Carolina at Charlotte from my congressional district were all in the field of 64, although only one survives.

But perhaps the most exciting March Madness story in North Carolina this year is at Johnson C. Smith University, the alma mater of my colleague EVA CLAYTON. Founded in 1867, JUS is one of four historically black colleges and universities located in my congressional district and has a student body of approximately 1,500 students. JUS finished this year’s basketball season with a 27–4 record, won the CIAA basketball tournament, won the South Atlantic Regional Division II championship, and tonight will be playing in the Division II Elite 8. Now, that is a real March Madness dream story.

I congratulate President Dorothy Yancey, Coach Steve Joyner and his basketball team and the University of Johnson C. Smith University family on producing this March Madness dream story and on continuing to educate our young people in this country.

PUTTING AMERICA’S FAMILIES FIRST

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, the Republican budget puts America’s families first by responsibly using the surplus to pay down the national debt, provide needed tax relief and bolster funding for priorities like education, Social Security, Medicare, prescription drug benefits and national defense.

Republicans refuse to squander the surplus and will work for a balanced budget. The Republican budget puts American families first by responsibly using the surplus for education priorities, strengthening Social Security, modernizing Medicare, providing prescription drug benefits and bolstering national defense, as I said earlier.

In addition, we need to show support for the next part of the tax relief package. Congress and the White House are working on, including eliminating the taxes on marriage and death, and doubling the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, eliminating the taxes on marriage and death are a top priority for this Congress and the White House. When I have town hall meetings, one of the top issues on the minds of my constituents is relief from these onerous and immoral taxes. No married couple ought to be taxed an extra $1,400 per year just for getting married, and no family farm or small business should be allowed to go under because of the death tax. These taxes are on the chopping block.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, and pursuant to Public Law 106-292 (36 U.S.C. 2301), the Chair announces the Speaker’s appointment of the following Members of the House to the United States Holocaust Memorial Council:

Mr. GILMAN of New York;
Mr. LATOURETTE of Ohio; and
Mr. CANNON of Utah.

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF MOTIONS TO SUSPEND THE RULES

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 92 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk reads the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 92
Resolved, That it shall be in order at any time on the legislative day of Wednesday, March 21, or Thursday, March 22, for the Speaker to entertain motions to suspend the rules relating to the measures previously outlined by the reading clerk.

The Members and their staffs have had time to review rules, and the Committee on Rules is not aware of any controversy or concern. While these items are non-controversial, they are indeed important pieces of legislation to many Members of this body and, more importantly, to the constituents we represent.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this rule, as well as the six bills it makes in order.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the Democratic Members of the House to object to this rule. We do, however, object to the continued use of the suspension calendar on days that are under the rules of the House supposed to be used for the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar. Obviously, little business has been reported to the House from its committees, other than matters from the Committee on Ways and Means. Thus, it seems the majority has come to rely on minor bills to fill the time in between the consideration of tax bills.

Mr. Speaker, there are any number of important issues facing the country today. Education, Social Security, Medicare, national defense, crime and energy are just a few of them; yet we have not seen any signs of any of these issues heading to the floor.

It is time for this Congress to buckle down and get to work; and, Mr. Speaker, we should do our work under regular order.

So, in order to give the House something to do today, Democrats will not object to this rule. But that being said, we cannot be counted on to continue to stand aside as the Republican majority continues to shirk its responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind my colleagues that these are non-controversial measures, and that they are important to many Members of this body. The resolution will simply allow this House to complete its work on these initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the resolution and the underlying legislative initiatives.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The previous question was ordered. The resolution was agreed to.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6, rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record vote on H.R. 1099, the Coast Guard Personnel and Maritime Safety Act of 2001, will be taken tomorrow.

Record votes on remaining motions to suspend the rules will be taken today.

PRINTING REVISED UPDATED VERSION OF “BLACK AMERICANS IN CONGRESS, 1870-1989”

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 43) authorizing the printing of a revised and updated version of the House document entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989”.

The Clerk reads as follows:

H. CON. RES. 43 Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)

SECTION 1. PRINTING REVISED UPDATED VERSION OF “BLACK AMERICANS IN CONGRESS, 1870-1989”

(a) IN GENERAL.—An updated version of House Document 101-117, entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989” (as revised by the Library of Congress), shall be printed as a House document by the Public Printer, with illustrations and suitable binding, under the direction of the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives.

(b) NUMBER OF COPIES.—In addition to the usual number, there shall be printed 30,700 copies of the document referred to in subsection (a), of which:

(1) 2,000 shall be for the use of the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives; and

(2) 5,700 shall be for the use of the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. Hoyer) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY).

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have just a few statements I want to make on this resolution. In the 101st Congress, House Document 101-117, entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989,” was printed and distributed to the House and the Senate. This document noted the distinguished service of six African Americans that the vote is not aware of any controversy or concern. PRINTING REVISED UPDATED VERSION OF “BLACK AMERICANS IN CONGRESS, 1870-1989”

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 43) authorizing the printing of a revised and updated version of the House document entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989”.

The Clerk reads as follows:

H. CON. RES. 43 Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)

SECTION 1. PRINTING REVISED UPDATED VERSION OF “BLACK AMERICANS IN CONGRESS, 1870-1989”

(a) IN GENERAL.—An updated version of House Document 101-117, entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989” (as revised by the Library of Congress), shall be printed as a House document by the Public Printer, with illustrations and suitable binding, under the direction of the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. Hoyer) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY).

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have just a few statements I want to make on this resolution. In the 101st Congress, House Document 101-117, entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989,” was printed and distributed to the House and the Senate. This document noted the distinguished service of six African Americans in Congress, 1870-1989.
that was in our office, and it is just a fascinating history and documentation of the 66 African Americans who had served in the Congress. It really makes for an interesting reading and I think pays tribute to those African Americans.

Since that document was printed, some 40 additional African Americans have served in the United States Congress. House Concurrent Resolution 43 will simply direct the Library of Congress to revise the biographies of Members of the 41st Congress, the first volume of which will be an update, and also provide for the inclusion of African American Members of the House and Senate who have been elected since the document was last published.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this measure. It has been good working with our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), the ranking member of the committee. I know that all the Members of the committee and the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS), the chairman of our committee, delighted to introduce this legislation.

It is been a pleasure to work with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) on this.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, obviously I rise in strong support of this resolution. I was delighted to introduce this legislation just over 3 weeks ago in conjunction with the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), who has been an example I think for all the Congress as to how to work in a bipartisan, productive, positive fashion; and I thank the gentleman for that. I see some of the majority staff on the floor as well. I want to thank them as well for the very cooperative way in which they have been working with our minority staff to make sure that we do our business in a very productive, positive way. I very much appreciate it.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution authorizes the printing, as the chairman has said, of a revised edition of the House document last printed in the 101st Congress, 11 years ago, entitled "Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989." I thank my distinguished colleague from Ohio for facilitating and cosponsoring this resolution. His support has been critical in bringing this resolution to the floor so quickly.

I also thank my 43 other distinguished cosponsors, including the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) and the Chair of the Congressional Black Caucus, who hopefully will be here in just a few minutes; the entire caucus membership; and the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS), chairman of the House Republican Conference himself, and a distinguished American, who have cosponsored this legislation.

The first edition of Black Americans in Congress, Mr. Speaker, was published in 1976 during our country's bicentennial. This was just over a century after the first African American to serve in Congress, Hiram Revels of Mississippi, was elected to the Senate. That election, of course, came after a great civil war to ensure that African Americans not only were considered to be full persons, but also would be considered among those included in the ringing phrase in the Declaration of Independence that we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, but I had not at that time, and women, are created equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, and among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We fought a great civil war to address the grievance of non-inclusion of those of African descent. It was not until the last century, in the 1920s, that women were given the full franchise in America.

It is appropriate that we recognize inclusion. We are going to have today the passage of this resolution, to recognize those of African American descent who have served in this Congress and made an historical contribution to the American family. It is to bring forward out of our committee another resolution which will recognize all of the women who have served in Congress to the present date.

The second edition of this document, which was published in 1990, contains brief biographies, photographs, and other historical information about Senator Revels and the 65 other distinguished African Americans who had served as of January 23, 1990. The volume is a treasured resource in libraries across America. It is through this document, Mr. Speaker, that not only can young African Americans, but young people of all races, colors and creeds be inspired by the credo that, however humble or insignificant or however unassuming or however ungathered they or their neighbors and constituents and serve in the Congress of the United States.

This book explores not only the lives and careers of Members, but also provides a window on the many obstacles that have confronted African Americans as they made their way to the halls of this Congress. For example, Mr. Speaker, the biography of Senator Revels reveals how, having been born to free parents in 1827, he pursued a career of religious work in several States, including my own State of Maryland.

Settling in Mississippi after the Civil War, Revels won election to the State senate, and was waged to enroll in the United States Senate, and was waged to enroll in Jefferson Davis’ term in the United States Senate, an irony that I am sure is not lost on any of the readers of this biography, some Senators bitterly opposed his seating, arguing, among other things, that he did not meet the age and citizenship requirement, having just secured full citizenship with the ratification of the 14th Amendment in 1868.

Think of that argument, Mr. Speaker. “We have prohibited you from being a citizen. You are now free and a full citizen because we have adopted a constitutional amendment, but you do not qualify for membership in this body because a result of our failing not according you full citizenship, you have not met the 9-year requirement.”

Fortunately, however, the Senate rejected those arguments and seated Mr. Revels on February 25, 1870, by a vote of 48 to 6.

The first African American Member of this House, Representative Joseph Rainey of South Carolina, was born the son of slave parents who managed to buy their family’s freedom. When the Civil War began, Rainey was drafted and compelled to serve on a Confederate blockade runner, but he escaped to Bermuda. Returning to South Carolina after the war, Rainey was elected to the State senate, and later to complete an unexpired term in this body, in December of 1870. Since Senator Revels and Representative Rainey took their oaths as Members of the 41st Congress, 104 additional African Americans have trod the path they so courageously blazed. A total of 40 additional distinguished African Americans have served since publication of the 1990 edition, 32 of whom are serving today.

Mr. Speaker, one need only look around the House to see a new generation of African American leaders serving the American people ably and proudly. It is important, Mr. Speaker, that we recognize their contribution and chronicle their service, not for them individually, not to aggrandize them or to expand their egos. It is to recognize the hallmark of America, diversity and inclusion. It is our strength, and it is our promise to all our people. Even more importantly, it is crucial that we continually seek to inspire young people, as I said earlier, all across America, that they can aspire to public service, whatever the color of their skin and however humble their circumstances might have been. Adopting this resolution is yet another way to do that.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) has noted that the 1990 edition was dedicated to Representative Mickey Leland of Texas, a colleague with whom I had the honor of serving.

He perished in a plane crash in August 1989 while on a humanitarian mission in Africa.

The gentlewoman has suggested that this next edition be dedicated to our late colleague Julian Dixon who died just last December, shocking and saddening us all after 22 years of service in this House. It was my privilege to serve with him for almost two decades. He was a wonderful human being and a great Member of this body. I cannot think of a more appropriate thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) joins me in that sentiment. Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to support the motion.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I obviously would concur, and I have no objection to the volume being dedicated to our late colleague from California, Julian Dixon, in honor of the tremendous 22 years of his life that he and his family give in distinguished service to this chamber and to citizens across the country.

I think we all recognize that his contribution was absolutely tremendous, well to inform and all may not have known Julian Dixon with us. I do agree with that.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman of West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO) control the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LaTROUBLE). Without objection, the time allocated to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) will be controlled by the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO).

There was no objection.

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the last version of this publication, the 1990 edition, contained biographical information on 66 African Americans who served in the House and Senate, from 1870 through 1990. The updating of this publication will allow Members, scholars and the public access to information on every African American to ever serve in Congress, including the 40 Members who have entered the House and Senate after the printing of the last edition of this book.

The first African-American Member of Congress, Hiram Rhodes Revels of Mississippi, served in the Senate during the 41st Congress. Since that time, more than 100 other distinguished African-American legislators have served in the Congress. It is appropriate that, as we start the first Congress of this new millennium, that we recognize the service of African-American Members, and I urge my colleagues to support the passage of H. Con. Res. 43.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to myself simply to introduce the next speaker.

I just wanted to say that we are passing this resolution today, and next week I expect the House will pass a resolution sponsored by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPITUR) and co-sponsored by every other woman Member of the House to recognize the contribution of women.

We have a distinguished African-American woman who now chairs the Congressional Black Caucus, an outstanding leader in the State Senate in Texas for many years, and an outstanding leader in this House. She is not only a Texas leader, she is a national leader as well.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON).

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Congressional Black Caucus, I am honored to introduce H. Con. Res. 43 which authorizes the revised printing of the House document entitled "Black Americans in Congress."

"I want to thank the gentleman from Maryland for his foresight and leadership on this issue; and also the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), the chairman of the Committee on House Administration. I know the gentleman from Ohio has many obligations which touch and concern the efficient management and operation of this institution. I thank the gentleman for including the important task of updating this book as a part of his mission.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that if this resolution is approved, that the revised version be dedicated to my friend and former colleague, Representative Julian Dixon, who passed away 3 months ago.

As we know since the original printing of this book, 40 new African-American Members of Congress have walked through these halls. Many are the African American Members who are here now were not here when the book was first printed, including myself.

Mr. Speaker, our being here is not an individual accomplishment, it is a testament to a people. African Americans in this country have gone from chains to Congress, from auction block to Wall Street, from segregation to Silicon Valley. African Americans have been a moving and integral force in the history and the legacy of our country, and we will continue to press forward. As members of the Congressional Black Caucus, our motto has always been "No permanent friends, no permanent enemies, just permanent issues."

This motto encompasses our goal of ensuring that every American can enjoy the blessings of peace and prosperity. It is not a utopian ideal or an insurmountable hurdle. It is the concrete realization of Dr. Martin Luther King’s message when he said that we are trying to make America true to its promise.

The individual stories in this book are a tribute to those who have worked toward fulfilling America’s promise. Their struggles serve as a road map to guide us forward in our struggle together as a people and as a Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for sponsoring this legislation once again, and say once again that it is important that young people of African American descent and even new immigrants must understand that they are role models and they can achieve, they can aspire. The opportunities are possible, and with a documentation of this sort I feel that it will be a major part of libraries throughout this country so that there will be a bright future planned for, worked for, thought about, and achieved. I think we feel perhaps now that the opportunity simply is not there. They need to know their history, and I thank my colleagues very much for supporting this resolution that will further document history and personality.

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, our next speaker is a member of the Committee on House Administration who has served with great distinction, a leader in one of the great cities of the world in which we articulated so compelling our belief that all men were created equal. We did not live up to the reality of that statement, as compelling and profound as it was, because I think we did not realize the full ramifications of what we said.

It took Martin Luther King and thousands of other courageous African Americans to call our attention to the shortcomings between our actions and our words.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FATTAH), who has been a great leader and a great supporter of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from Maryland, the ranking member, and let me quickly state that I support this resolution. I think it is important. I am a Member that has served in a number of capacities, on the Committee on House Administration, the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, both committees which really serve this institution; and I think all of us have a responsibility to serve the institution and not just serve our own districts and our own needs.

Part of that service is that this institution has to be respectful of its own history and it is important given the 13,000 or so individuals who have served in the House, and some number close to a hundred who have been African Americans, I think it is important that this book document the life and work of African Americans. It should be updated. It would be important for students across the globe who study the United States Congress to read the stories of people like my predecessor, the Congressman from the second district, William H. Gray, who rose to be the highest ranking African American at that time to serve in the Congress; to learn about the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS) and his leadership in the majority party; to understand the legacy of an Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. and legislation who passed into law more measures which have an impact on tens of millions of Americans than any one of us could talk about on a day on this floor.
Mr. Speaker, the distinguished representative from Texas who has the distinct honor of succeeding Barbara Jordan and Mickey Leland in representing their constituents is Ms. Jackson-Lee. Barbara Jordan was one of the most compelling and articulate voices on behalf of the Constitution of the United States and the principles that it set forth.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. Jackson-Lee).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Maryland and Mickey Leland in representing their constituents. Barbara Jordan was one of the most compelling and articulate voices on behalf of the Constitution of the United States and the principles that it set forth.

Mr. Speaker, I think that there are many things that the House can convene in many instances there is vigorous debate because that is what democracy is all about. I am very proud to be able to stand today to add support to the leadership of the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) on this legislation and many others, and proud to be an original co-sponsor of legislation that brings dignity to the service of so many Americans.

After the Emancipation Proclamation and reconstruction began, the best and brightest of the then-freed slaves rose up to be governors and Senators and Members of Congress. It was not an easy time for them and they were not given in many instances the appropriate recognition, but they served in this august body, a body that when you bring guests to walk through the halls, they are in awe at the history and respect of this institution.

Those African Americans who served during reconstruction were in many instances described in ugly terms, and yet they were lawyers and taught property owners in some instances. And they served at the very best. It was then in 1901 that George White, an African American, a freed slave, went to the floor of the House to be able to speak to his colleagues in a very dramatic but sad way. For at that time as Jim Crow raised his head, George White, the last African American, went to the floor of the House to say goodbye for his seat to no longer exist, but he indicated that the Negro, like the Phoenix, would rise again.

Mr. Speaker, it took some 30 years before Oscar De Priest came to this House, and it had to be done with collaboration between colleagues, to be sure that he could be seated.

I would simply say, and I thank the gentleman for the time, that that is a history that is rich and it is a history that is deep and should be told. And as we moved into the 1940s and 1950s, more African Americans came to the United States Congress with their respective histories. I believe it is appropriate as we have grown, not for any self-enhancement, but to be able to show the self not just America, that we are truly a democracy and this is the people's House.

Tragically in this century or at least in these last decades, we have had one Senator and previously a Senator that served in the 1960s and 1970s and I believe early eighties, Senator Brooks, and so we have not done as well in the United States Senate, but I am gratified for this rendition that will pay tribute again to the Honorable Barbara Jordan, who eloquently stated her beliefs in this House during the impeachment hearings of 1974; and of course eloquently acknowledged the deep love of this institution of Congressman Mickey Leland, who was the founder and organizer of the Select Committee on Hunger, and lost his life trying to serve those who were less fortunate than he.

We now come forward and, hopefully, Julian Dixon, who we have lost, who will be honored and many, many others already served with such distinction. This is an excellent contribution to the history of this great body. This brings us closer together.

Although we realize we differ on opinions on many issues, it is certainly a fine moment in this Congress, I say to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), when we can come together to celebrate or commemorate the very few African Americans that have served and expressed their love of this country representing not only African Americans and their respective districts but representing all of America.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. Jackson-Lee) for her very cogent comments, for her contribution to this body, and to enhancing the history of the contribution of African Americans to the House and to this country.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, let me thank the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. Capito) for her contributions, to be sure that she could be seated.

Last year, Mr. HOYER and former Chairman Thomas helped move a bill of mine through their committee and onto the floor which authorized the preservation of veterans' war memories through an interactive archive at the Library of Congress. I was pleased that my colleagues here in the House, as well as those in the Senate, approved the Veterans Obituary Project Unanimously. The bill was signed into law last October, a fitting tribute to the contributions and sacrifices of our war veterans.

We are now here to authorize a measure to acknowledge the special contributions of Members of our own body. Many of our African-American Representatives elected to this House over the decades have been pioneers in their own times, and updating the book that recognizes this unique group of elected leaders is a wise and worthy investment on our part.

History must accurately reflect the efforts of African-American leaders elected to national office, efforts which, at various times and locations in this country, were heroic in the face of both quiet and overt racism and bigotry. This bill will assist historians and students of history to understand the who and what of African-Americans running and winning national office, so that each American can reflect on the how and why.

Again, I applaud my good friend from Maryland for this effort at preserving this body's and this Nation's valuable history. And I look forward to the updated copy of this valuable book.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today to rise in support of H. Con. Res. 43, a bill authorizing the printing of a revised and updated version of the House document entitled "Black Americans in Congress, 1870-1989." I would also like to thank my colleagues and friend, Congressman STENY HOYER for introducing this very important and critical measure.

Mr. Speaker, with the convening of the 107th Congress, a total of 106 African-Americans have been elected to the Congress in the history of this nation; 4 in the Senate and 102 in the House. In addition to these 106, John W. Menard (R-IA) won a disputed election in 1868 but was not permitted to take his seat in Congress. Whereas, the number of African-Americans who have served in Congress over the past 130 years (1870-2001) has been small, our contribution has been enormous and invaluable to our society. It is important to continue to preserve our contributions and legacies to this institution because although we have remained few in numbers, our presence and work continues to be heard... throughout the halls of Congress. Individually and collectively, under the direction of the Congressional Black Caucus, our work has and continues to affect individuals throughout the nation and the world. Our dear and beloved colleague, Congressman Micky Leland was a great humanitarian, who championed the cause of the underprivileged. His life was tragically cut short in a plane crash in the mountains of Ethiopia. The late Congressman Julian Dixon who pursued his long-time involvement in ensuring the nation’s commitment to civil rights through his advocacy for the Equal Opportunities Commission, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, and the Community Relations Service. Former Representative Louis Stokes distinguished himself as the leader and founder of the Congressional Black Caucus Health Braintrust, whose purpose is to address and eliminate health disparities. Representative Conyers, who is the second longest serving Member of Congress and the longest serving African-American member of the Congress in U.S. History, continues to work on behalf of social justice and economic opportunity. These are just some of the historical contributions of African-Americans to the U.S. Congress.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that we continue to document the work and accomplishments of African-Americans in Congress by updating the document entitled “Black Americans in Congress, 1870–1989.” This document contains invaluable information for children across the nation, especially children of African-American descent. I encourage my colleagues to support this bipartisan measure.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to recognize the University of Akron’s Political Resources Page and the Congressional Research Service both of whom were very helpful in helping me acquire this information.

I. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

African-Americans in Congress

Of the more than 11,000 representatives in U.S. Congress since 1789, there have been 105 black Members of Congress, 101 elected to the House and four to the Senate.

Most of these members entered the institution in two distinct waves. The first wave started during Reconstruction. The first black Member of Congress was Hiram Rhodes Revels (R—MS) who served in the Senate during the 41st Congress (1869–1871). The first black Member of the House was Joseph H. Rainey (R—SC). He also served in the 41st Congress. A total of 22 blacks who were in Congress came from states with high black populations—the former slave states of the South. From 1870 to 1887 South Carolina elected eight blacks to the House. Mississippi and Louisiana each elected one black to the House. Between the Fifty-second and Fifty-sixth Congresses (1891–1901) there was only one black member per session.

Four former slave states—Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas, and West Virginia—never elected any black representative during the Reconstruction era despite very sizable black populations.

Second Wave of Blacks in Congress

The second wave began in 1928 with the election of Republican Oscar DePriest from an inner-city Chicago District. He was defeated in 1934 by Arthur Mitchell, the first black Democrat elected to Congress.

In 1944, Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. was elected Congressman in Harlem, New York. For the first time since 1891 there was more than one black representative in the House.

In 1950, there was another breakthrough for black representation when Representative William Dawson (R—IL) gained enough seniority to become the first black to chair a standing committee, the Government Operations Committee.

In 1960, Powell became Chairman of the more important Education and Labor Committee.

Another breakthrough came in 1966 when Edward W. Brooke was elected as a Republican Senator from Massachusetts, a state whose population was less than 3 percent African-American. Brooke served until his defeat in 1978.

African-American Women in Congress

In 1968, Shirley Chisomol (D—NY) became the first African-American woman to serve in the House. She served in the 91st through the 97th Congresses (1969–1983). Since that time, 20 other African-American women have been elected.

In 1972, Carol Moseley Braun (D—IL) became the first African-American woman and the first African-American Democrat to serve in the Senate.

Rep. Barbara Jordan (D—TX) became the first African-American woman from the South to serve in Congress.

Party Affiliation

The majority of African-American Members have been Democrats. There have been 78 African-American Democrats and 27 African-American Republicans. African-American members of Congress have served on all major committees. Sixteen have served as committee chairmen, 15 in the House and one in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the list of great African-American leaders could go on and on. And it is continually growing.

Take a look around this very body and you will see a new generation of African-American leaders who serve the American people. I emphasize this point because the African-American struggle for rights has benefited all Americans. Whether they be poor, women, minority or disabled, all Americans have benefited from our attempt to make our democracy accountable to all of its citizens. It is important that we recognize the contribution of African American Members of Congress and their service to the American people. It’s important that we capture the rich lessons of their lives which will inspire generations to come.

I have joined more than 40 of our colleagues in cosponsoring a concurrent, bipartisan resolution for the printing of a revised edition of the House document entitled, “Black Americans in Congress, 1870–1989.”

The latest edition of this work, published in 1990, contains brief biographies, photographs and other important historical information about the 66 distinguished African Americans who had served in either chamber of Congress as of January 23, 1990. Since that time, another 40 distinguished African Americans have served.

On the heels of this past February’s national celebration of Black History Month, I encourage my colleagues to support this important resolution, which directs the Library of Congress to revise and update this volume. It will be a tremendous resource for Members, scholars, students and others.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 43, legislation to authorize printing of a revised and updated version of the book “Black Americans in Congress, 1870–1989.” This volume is an important chronicle of the United States Congress, and the diversity that has made up this Congress for over one hundred years.

The printing of an updated version of “Black Americans in Congress” will provide educational and historical reference for all Americans. We must never forget that there were Black Members of this Congress in 1870, just five years after the end of slavery. We must not hesitate to teach our children that there were, at one time, Members of Congress who had barely secured their own right to vote. As we continue to work towards the promise of our democratic system, it becomes even more relevant to recognize those past Members of Congress who struggle, in sometimes hostile environments, to serve our country. Especially given to my good friend Steve Hoyer and the Members of the Administration Committee who have shown such leadership on this important issue. As a founding member and Dean of the Congressional Black Caucus, I encourage the House to pass this resolution.

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support and encourage my colleagues to support the authorization of a revised and updated printing of the House Document “Black Americans in Congress, 1870–1989”. The achievement of African-Americans here in Congress is truly remarkable and should be accurately documented for history.

In total, 103 African-Americans have taken their place in United States history as Congressional leaders. Their constituents know that they have and will continue to work to ensure that all citizens are represented equally and fairly. African-American Members of Congress continually strive to make sure that no one is left behind in this great nation.

The Congressional Black Caucus has an illustrious history, which includes efforts such as civil rights demonstrations and boycotts, a successful campaign to free the Martin Luther King, Jr., national holiday, sanctions against apartheid in South Africa, and support for democracy in Haiti. In particular, I want to thank the members of the Black Caucus who have repeatedly visited my district, namely MAXINE WATERS, SHEILA JACKSON-LEE, JOHN CONYERS, JUANITA MILLENDER-MCDONALD, former Rep. Alan Wheat, former Rep. Mervyn Dymally, former Rep. Ron Dellums, the late former Rep. Augustus Hawkins, and the late Alan Dixon. These members have helped encourage African-American political activism in the Inland Empire.

More importantly, African-American Congressmen and women are role models for young people who can better identify with people who look and think as they do. Representative Barbara Jordan embodies this. She represented Texas and demonstrated with her knowledge the needs of not only African-Americans but also other minority communities. Among her legislative achievements was an amendment to the Voting Rights Act, which provided for the printing of bilingual ballots.

Oscar DePriest was the first Black Congressman in the twentieth century. When he took his seat, he was the only Black member in the chamber. Adam Clayton Powell, a significant orator, was both a Congressman and a Pastor. He understood the needs of Blacks in his district because he spoke to them and more importantly, listened to them every week. He served 11 terms in Congress and was chair of the Commission on Education and Labor Committee. New York’s Shirley Chisolm was the first female elected to Congress and fought fervently for the Title I program that benefited disadvantaged children throughout the country. This is a very abbreviated list of accomplished public servants who gave their time and talent for the benefit of all Americans.

The working legacy of these remarkable 103 African-Americans must be preserved. We must recognize their service as well as the service of the current African-American Members of Congress. They continue the struggle for freedom, equality, and full-representation for all as guaranteed by our Constitution. We must honor their struggle. That is why I support, and ask my colleagues to support, the updating of this important house document.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GRUCII. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material on H.R. 1042, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRUCII. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, last year, the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995 went into effect, eliminating all reports to Congress contained in House Document 103-7. The law was intended to alleviate the amount of paperwork agencies are required to produce.

However, included in the hundreds of reports eliminated, the Committee on Science identified 29 contained in H.R. 1042 that are relevant to its oversight responsibilities. Included in these are the National Science Foundation’s Science Indicators; a biennial report from the President on activities of all agencies in the field of marine science; an annual report on the National Technology Information Service and its activities; updates to the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program; and an annual report on the application of new technologies to reduce aircraft noise levels.

These and other reports in H.R. 1042 will continue to provide constructive evaluation tools for the committee and the agencies producing them.

In the 106th Congress, the House passed H.R. 3904 under suspension and by voice vote. Unfortunately, the Senate ran out of time after the bill was cleared for passage and failed to be en acted into law. Less one report, H.R. 1042 is identical to H.R. 3904 passed last year. It is a noncontroversial legislation, and I urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.
Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the Committee on Science bill H.R. 1042, a bill to prevent the elimination of certain government reports.

Mr. Speaker, the task of the Committee on Science and obligation is to oversee the technological and scientific aspects of our government’s business. In order to do so, we are enhanced or helped by the important reports that we have been receiving over the years.

This legislation helps to correct an error that eliminated the reporting of providing such reports. I am representing the interests of the entire Congress as I speak, but especially the interests of the Committee on Science. This bill, should it pass both Houses and be signed into law, would stop the elimination of valuable reports that are produced by agencies at the direct request of Congress throughout the entire Federal Government.

Briefly, the situation is that H.R. 1042 was designed to address, began with the signing into law of the Federal Reports Elimination Sunset Act of 1995. This legislation was one of the actions taken in the first year after the Republicans took over that now appears to be excessive.

This bill eliminated every report listed in a document reports to be made to Congress in the 103rd Congress, which was virtually every statutorily required congressional report. Some reporting requirements were arguably obsolete, but these reports contained much of the information that the executive branch supplies to Congress, ranging from the annual budget documents to reports on the functioning of specific government programs.

These reports go to the heart of executive branch accountability and Congress oversight responsibilities. It is hard to fathom how Congress could do its job of reviewing executive branch activities and making intelligent and legislative decisions without current detailed information on many of these subjects.

H.R. 1042 prevents the elimination of 29 reports within the jurisdictional areas covered by the Committee on Science. These range from the National Energy Policy Plan, which obviously at this juncture in our history is enormously important, and I serve on the Subcommittee on Energy, and we will be interested in how we can enhance the utilization of our limited resources, create alternative resources for energy and, in general, help America continue to be successful in having the right energy resources, to the Annual Report on Aeronautics and Space Activities, to the Annual Report of the National Science Board. Other reports let Congress know how the administration is doing in such high-priority areas as women and minorities in science and technology, high performance computing, placement of minorities, women and handicapped individuals at the National Science Foundation, and global warming.

Other reports deal with satellites, with critical technologies, with earthquakes and with technology transfer.

Mr. Speaker, this information is too important not to be made public. We, therefore, support this legislation; and I would urge my colleagues to support the passage of H.R. 1042.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GRUCCI. Mr. Speaker, I include the following letter from the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HAMMESH), chairman of the Committee on Resources, for the RECORD:

H.R. 1042 would prevent the elimination of certain reports that are scheduled to be considered by the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have just reviewed the text of H.R. 1042, to prevent the elimination of certain reports, which is scheduled to be considered by the House of Representatives. One of the reports to Congress proposed to be restored is found in section 7(a) of the Marine Resources and Engineering Development Act of 1966.

This bill was referred exclusively to the Committee on Science. One of the reports is concerned with the suspension of the rules. This bill was referred exclusively to the Committee on Science. One of the reports to Congress proposed to be restored is found in section 7(a) of the Marine Resources and Engineering Development Act of 1966.

The Committee on Science has received sequential referrals of bills which reauthorize appropriations for the Sea Grant Program.

The Committee on Resources supports the restoration of this report to Congress and thanks Congressman Grucci for including it in his bill. We have no objection to the consideration of H.R. 1042 on the Floor this week but ask that this letter be included as part of the debate to register our jurisdictional interest.

Thank you for your leadership in ensuring that Congress has adequate information on the programs it supports and I look forward to working with you in the coming months on legislation of mutual interest.

Sincerely,

JAMES V. HANSEN.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO).

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Maritime Policy Improvement Act of 2001. The provisions in this bill were developed during the conference negotiations on the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2001 but were not enacted because of unrelated matters.

We are aware of no controversy surrounding this bill and hope that the Senate will send it to the President for his signature as soon as possible.

The bill contains provisions to authorize an expansion of the American Merchant Marine Memorial Wall of Honor, to establish a new method for recording and discharging certain maritime liens, and to provide limited relief to vessel owners.

Mr. Speaker, these men who braved enemy fire in all of our conflicts should be remembered for their actions to defend freedom and keep the supply lines open. Their sacrifices and battle should not be forgotten by a Nation that they served too well.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be a part of this effort, and I urge all Members to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Maritime Policy Improvement Act of 2001. Mr. Speaker, this is a noncontroversial bill that includes those maritime policy provisions that had been agreed to last year by the conference on the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 1997.

However, Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned, that bill was not reported from conference due to failure to agree to a Senate amendment concerning the types of damages that could be awarded for negligent deaths of passengers on board cruise ships. That provision is not included in this bill being considered today.

H.R. 1098 will allow for the recording of maritime liens on all U.S. flag vessels, not just those with preferred mortgages recorded with the Secretary.

It would clarify that the discharge of agricultural residues from cargo tanks in international waters is to be regulated under MARPOL Annex V.

It would provide for the construction of an American Merchant Marine Wall of Honor to honor those in the U.S. merchant marine who served the United States in every conflict beginning with the Revolutionary War.

It allows the Coast Guard to prescribe vessel safety operating standards for World War II victory ships that operate around San Francisco and Tampa.

Mr. Speaker, passage of this bill will clear the slate for the committee of last year’s issues related to Coast Guard and maritime policy. Then we can begin to look at the problems currently facing the Coast Guard and the U.S. maritime industry to help them in the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to strongly support the passage of H.R. 1098, the Maritime Policy Improvement Act of 2001.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN).

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1098, the Maritime Policy Improvement Act of 2001.

I am particularly pleased that section 4 of this legislation incorporates a bill that I introduced in the 106th Congress. This section authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to make grants to the American Merchant Marine Veterans Memorial Committee to construct an addition to the American Merchant Marine Memorial Wall of Honor in San Pedro, California. Since 1775, the maritime community has played a critical role in gaining and preserving American freedom. The merchant marine served as our first navy and defeated the British navy in our fight for independence. We owe much to the brave mariners past and present who have served in the merchant marine.

The American Merchant Marine Memorial Wall of Honor located in San Pedro, California, is a symbol of the debt we owe those who have served so bravely.

Many of my colleagues will remember how the merchant marine secured its place in American history during the Second World War. During that conflict, the 250,000 men and women in the U.S. merchant marine fleet made enormous contributions to the eventual winning of the war, keeping the lifeline of freedom open to our troops overseas and to our allies. This fleet was truly the fourth arm of defense, as it was called by President Franklin D. Roosevelt and other military leaders.

The members of the U.S. merchant marine faced danger from submarines, mines, armed raiders, destroyers, aircraft kamikazes and the elements. At least 6,800 mariners were killed at sea. More than 11,000 were wounded at sea. Of those injured, at least 1,100 later died from their wounds. More than 600 men and women were taken prisoner by our enemies. In fact, 1 in 32 mariners serving aboard merchant ships in the Second World War died in the line of duty, suffering a greater percentage of war-related deaths than all other U.S. services.

Since that time, the U.S. merchant marine has continued to serve our Nation, promoting freedom and meeting the high ideals of its past members. It is fitting to honor the past and present members of the United States merchant marine. That is why I introduced this legislation.

I am delighted at the chairman and his very fine number of people that sit on that subcommittee that he heads, and I am very grateful for his honoring this.

I thank Chairman YOUNG, Chairman LOBIONDO, and ranking member OBERSTAR.

The relatives of those who served their country as men and women merchant mariners will deeply be appreciated. So will I and all citizens and people generally.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1098.

The question was taken. The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The SPEAKER pro tempore pursuant to clause (8) of rule XX and the Chair’s prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE
March 21, 2001

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1098.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

“(2) The route and port or place of destination in the United States;

“(4) Any information requested by the Secretary to demonstrate compliance with applicable international agreements to which the United States is a party.

Section 2110(k) of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking “2001” and inserting “2003.”

SEC. 405. GREAT LAKES LIGHTHOUSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The Great Lakes are home to more than 400 lighthouses. 129 of these maritime landmarks are in the State of Michigan.

(2) Lighthouses are an important part of Great Lakes culture and stand as a testament to the importance of shipping in the region’s political, economic, and social history.

(3) Advances in navigation technology have made many Great Lakes lighthouses obsolete. In Michigan alone, approximately 70 lighthouses will be designated as excess properties of the Federal Government and will be transferred to the General Services Administration for disposal.

(4) Unfortunately, the Federal property disposal process is confusing, complicated, and not well-suited to disposal of historic lighthouses or to facilitate transfers to non-profit organizations. This is especially troubling because, in many cases, local nonprofit historical organizations have dedicated tremendous resources to preserving and maintaining Great Lakes lighthouses.

(b) Assistance for Great Lakes Lighthouse Preservation Efforts.—The Secretary of Transportation, acting through the Coast Guard, shall—

(1) continue to offer advice and technical assistance to organizations in the Great Lakes region that are dedicated to lighthouse stewardship; and

(2) promptly release information regarding the timing of designations of Coast Guard lighthouses on the Great Lakes as excess to the needs of the Coast Guard, to enable those organizations to mobilize and be prepared to take appropriate action with respect to the disposal of those properties.

SEC. 406. COAST GUARD REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF NTSB RECOMMENDATIONS.

The Commandant of the Coast Guard shall submit a written report to the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate within 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act on what actions the Coast Guard has taken to implement the recommendations of the National Transportation Safety Board in its Report No. MAR-99-01. The report—

(1) shall describe in detail, by geographic region—

(A) what steps the Coast Guard is taking to fill gaps in its communications coverage;

(B) what progress the Coast Guard has made in installing direction-finding systems; and

(C) what progress the Coast Guard has made toward completing its national distress and response system modernization project; and

(2) include an assessment of the safety benefits that might reasonably be expected to result from increased or accelerated funding for—

(A) measures described in paragraph (1)(A); and

(B) the national distress and response system modernization project.

SEC. 407. CONVEYANCE OF COAST GUARD PROPERTY.

(a) AUTHORITY TO CONVEY.

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation, or a designee of the Secretary, may convey to the Gulf of Maine Aquarium Development Corporation, its successors and assigns, without payment for consideration, any improvements thereon in any property of the Federal Government and will be transferred to the General Services Administration for disposal.

SEC. 411. BOATING SAFETY.

(a) FEDERAL FUNDING.—Section 4(b)(3) of the Act of August 10, 1990 (16 U.S.C. 777c(b)(3)) is amended by striking "$2,500,000" and inserting "$3,500,000".

(b) STATE FUNDING.—Section 5102(a)(3) of title 46, United States Code, is amended by striking "general State revenue" and inserting "State funds, including amounts ex-
Mr. Speaker, this is a very non-controversial bill. As with the prior bill, H.R. 1099, all of the provisions were worked out by the conference committee. H.R. 1099 will help provide additional resources to combat drug smuggling, improve safety on our waterways, extend the lives of six safety advisory committees, increase the penalties for negligent operation of vessels on our Nation’s waterways, improve the management for issuing documents to U.S. mariners, and allow for quicker promotions for Coast Guard officers of particular merit.

Mr. Speaker, the Coast Guard is currently drastically reducing their operations due to funding shortfalls. These reductions have been caused largely by the increased price of energy, unbudgeted personnel entitlements in the National Defense Authorization Act of 2000, and increased health care costs. As a result, the Coast Guard has reduced current operations by 10 percent and will reduce their operations by 30 percent on April 1. Clearly, additional reductions have been caused largely by the increased price of energy, unbudgeted personnel entitlements in the National Defense Authorization Act of 2000, and increased health care costs.

Mr. Speaker, the Coast Guard Personnel and Maritime Safety Act will improve the management of the Coast Guard, improve safety on our Nation’s waterways, and provide additional financial resources to help clean up oil spills. Therefore, I strongly urge my colleagues to support passage of H.R. 1099, the Coast Guard Personnel and Maritime Safety Act of 2001.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have a brief closing statement. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. McGovern) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Oberstar) for their help in these matters, especially the gentleman from Alaska (Chairman Young) for his advocacy of the Coast Guard. I would like to urge each Member of this body to understand the job that the Coast Guard is doing every day, to stop making excuses for why we are not giving them the resources that they need to protect our environment, our natural resources, for drug interdiction, and all the other things that they do.

I think this is the year when we can join together to shoulder to make sure that we recognize the fine men and women of the Coast Guard and the job that they do and give them the resources necessary to continue their mission as dictated by Congress.
(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall apply with respect to any rule, order, or other request related to such debarment. Petitions for reconsideration or petitions for waiver that is submitted to the Commission on or after the date of enactment of this Act shall be treated as if they were filed with the Commission on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6. TIME LIMITS FOR ACTION ON PETITIONS FOR RECONSIDERATION OR WAIVER.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 305 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 305) is amended by adding to the end the following:

"(2) EXPEDITED ACTION REQUIRED.—
"(A) TIMELINE.—Within 90 days after receiving a petition for reconsideration or waiver, the Commission shall either grant or deny the petition, or grant an order granting or denying such petition.
"(B).'.$
Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to insert extraneous material on H.R. 496. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection on the request of the gentleman from Michigan? There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, one final area that the commission should be decided within 60 days. Re-that I represent the most rural State in the country and, as such, Federal universal service support is absolutely critical. I would never do anything to compromise universal service.

In a letter written to me last month by the president of the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, or NARUC, and the Chair of the NARUC Telecom Committee made it clear that nothing in this bill, and I quote, "precludes States from access to information needed in State proceedings for requests or similar methods. We understand that this bill does not affect underlying accounting rules nor prohibitions against cross subsidies."

Let me be clear. This bill does nothing to take away any authority from the FCC in requesting necessary paperwork that it needs to do its job.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be brief, which I guess is already too late, so I will summarize the changes and improvements we have made to the bill. Last year, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKY) and I worked on several modifications to the bill, a majority of which were incorporated into it as it passed the House. This year we have continued our dialogue and have come together on even more changes and clarifications.

First, I want to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts for his concern for rural telecommunications customers. The changes that they pay. I am pleased that we have had the opportunity to work out language that will guarantee that under section 286 of the bill, which is the pricing flexibility section, that rural customers’ rates will not increase when competition forces prices to go down in one area only to be shifted to another area to make up the difference.

We have tightened the definition of what a 2 percent carrier is. There is now language in section 284 where we have installed a bulletproof fire wall to prevent against possible gaming of the system when companies elect to choose tariff flexibility.

Finally, we have reworked the merger section. And I want it to be clear that the merger review language only applies to those companies that remain 2 percent companies after the acquisition of another company.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot overstate the importance of this bill for rural America. I appreciate all of the help that I have had in getting it this far.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. KENNEDY), a supporter of the bill who represents a district that I know is fairly rural in lots of different ways.

Mr. KENNEDY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in support of H.R. 496, the Independent Telecommunications Enhancement Act of 2001.

I.R. 496 is good for southwest Minnesota because it helps our small and mid-sized telephone companies by reducing the regulatory burden that has been put upon them. One of the goals in Congress is to help our rural communities by improving their rural telecommunications infrastructure.

I believe that this bill, introduced by the gentleman from Wyoming, who says she is from the most rural State, while I profess to be from the most rural district in the country, that this will help us meet the goal by reducing government regulations on smaller phone companies and allowing them to focus their efforts instead on providing quality and competitive service to rural America instead of dealing with burdensome regulations.

By allowing companies to focus on improving our communities by deploying new services and investing in infrastructure instead of complying with burdensome regulations, more residents in southwest Minnesota and in Wyoming will have access to telecommunications services that their friends and families in bigger cities oftentimes already have.

I believe this is a step in the right direction towards closing the digital divide that we face here in America, and I also believe that by improving rural telecommunication services and infrastructure that we can make our rural areas more attractive to new and existing businesses.

I thank the chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Wyoming for putting this forward, and I look forward to voting for it.

Mr. BARRATT of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I know I asked unanimous consent that all Members be able to revise and extend their remarks, but I particularly want to note and request the addition for the RECORD of the statement by the vice chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS), who is chairing an important hearing on airline mergers now and was not able to come over and engage in the debate.

The other thing I would just like to point out is that my district in particular, although not as rural as the State of Wyoming, is very much what I consider a microcosm of the country. We have good pockets of urban and rural, farms, businesses large and small, and I know that, particularly as chairman of this new subcommittee, I believe the outstanding small telephone services, one in Bloomingdale, Michigan, in Van Buren County, and Climax Telephone Company in Kalamazoo County that will benefit from this legislation, as we will see through the rest of the country as well.

We do not need burdensome regulations imposed by anyone on small companies like these that provide really the only service, whether it be high-speed digital fiber to those communities, whether cable, all of those different things. These companies are there and they are the only ones there. In fact, their complexion will still grow because of this legislation.

I would note that last year we passed this legislation without dissent. I would think that again this year we will pass it without dissent as well. I ask all my colleagues to vote in support of this legislation.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, independent telephone companies have filled an important role in the development of our Nation’s telecommunications system. For decades the cooperatives and family-owned businesses made sure that all Americans would have access to quality telephone service.

Entrepreneurs are buying exchanges promising to deploy improved voice and data service in small communities while not jeopardizing the affordability of basic phone services.

Recent studies by NECA and NTIA show that small carriers like these are investing in broadband deployment. I support any legislation that would speed the deployment of advanced services, whether that’s in Brooklyn, in the localities in Basin, Wyoming, Digital Divide is a pressing issue in this country, not only in urban areas but rural ones as well. I do not look kindly on those who feel that the Digital Divide is not an issue in this country. Those of us who represent rural and urban areas know all too well the lack of access our constituents face. We have a responsibility to create digital opportunities for all Americans, not just those living in the big cities.

I want to voice my support for this legislation. I do have concerns that smaller carriers too much price flexibility could put consumers at a competitive disadvantage. I believe we should support small carriers as well as consumer interests.

I want to be on record as promoting broadband deployment in rural areas while not jeopardizing the affordability of basic phone services.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 496. Before I speak to the remaining issues of concern with the legislation that I believe must be rectified before it merits support, I want to thank Mr. GORDON, Mr. DINGELL, and Chairman TAUSCH, and Chairman UPTON for being responsive to many of the concerns that have been raised about H.R. 496 since it was first introduced.

The bill being offered today contains many helpful clarifications and changes embodied in it that were in response to concerns I have raised about the measure. I believe that in its current form it clarifies a number of key definitions that affect the scope of the bill. More importantly, the bill also contains changes that better capture the expressed intent of its advocates without some of the possible unintended consequences that I have warned about.

The legislation now better defines which companies qualify as “2 percent carriers” so that the Bell Operating Companies are not inadvertently included in the definition. The bill also preserves certain Commission authority necessary to protect consumers and contains adjustments in provisions dealing with the introduction of new telecommunications services, participation in subsidy pools, and the pricing flexibility section.

Again, I want to thank Mrs. CUBIN and my other colleagues who have agreed to these changes. I believe they are helpful clarifications and I believe they improve the bill. I would note, however, that I still believe that additional changes are warranted for this legislation and that I hope can be dealt with prior to sending this bill to the President.

This bill, also known as the "2 percent" bill, directly affects small and mid-sized telephone companies and has repercussions for millions of consumers across the country.

A chief concern is the "trigger" for key deregulation provisions in the bill, namely the pricing flexibility and pricing deregulation provisions. The bill on the House floor today will continue to allow pricing deregulation upon the arrival of "facilities-based" competition in a given service area. Facilities-based entry, however, is defined in the bill to include not only provision of local exchange switching or its equivalent, but also the "procurement" of such. Moreover, a facilities-based competitor is merely required to have at least one customer—I repeat, one sole customer.

Hopefully there will be more competition. The problem is that although competition may arrive, it may not be robust or effective in constraining prices. A single competitor serving a single customer is simply an insufficient trigger for deregulation. Such a low threshold will mean sweeping deregulation with only the illusion of truly competitive markets in many areas of the country. I hope we can subsequently adjust this competitive trigger so that it reflects the kind of significant competition that serves to constrain prices and drive innovation, rather than the "paper tiger" competition that the definition will permit for deregulation to occur.

In addition, I am concerned about combining a lessening of reporting requirements with the continuation, and indeed, increased flexibility, of participation in subsidy pools. At a time when policymakers are struggling to extract unnecessary subsidies from the system and make remaining subsidies more explicit, this legislation would appear to make it more difficult for policymakers and regulators to discern whether the subsidies generally, or particular subsidies, are still justified or need to be recalibrated. Mr. Speaker, the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners (NARUC) recently passed a resolution on this bill that stated in part—and I'll quote from it—that "appropriate reporting requirements that . . . verify proper distribution and use of universal service funding should continue to be available."

If these so-called 2 percent companies want to live in a truly competitive environment with less regulation then I'm all for that—I wish them well and I hope they make it in the free market. I'm concerned.

Yet this legislation still suffers from a "have-your-cake-and-eat-it-too" quality. I believe that even if we are unwilling today to lessen or cap the subsidy as we lessen 2 percent company regulations and move these companies from monopoly mindsets to greater competition, we must at least have accountability in the subsidy system so that it doesn't become even more bloated than it already is.

I believe that this Congress needs to have a broader discussion when we act to eliminate certain legacy regulations to ensure that we also act to eliminate or limit legacy subsidies.

In addition, I continued to believe that there is a potential in this bill for companies to "game" the regulatory system. We usually do not give regulated entities the opportunity to choose their form of regulation but this bill does just that. I want to commend the bill's sponsors for adjusting the bill somewhat in this area in response to my concerns so that a company now chooses rate-or-return regulation or price cap or some other form of regulation. But this election must be done for 1 year. However, clarifying that such election cannot be done on any given month but rather on an annual basis does not fully alleviate the problem. Flipping back and forth on a yearly basis still permits companies to game the regulatory system in my view.

Another issue I want to highlight is the merger review section. This section states that any review involving a so-called 2 percent carrier must be approved or denied by the Commission within 60 days. I understand that the companies do not want merger reviews to drag on for years, but I would suggest that 60 days is too short and unrealistic.

While I believe the Commission is itself is streamlining its process, if the majority is in fact approving these mergers as a "shot clock" I would suggest giving the Commission a greater period of time.

Finally, I want to comment broadly on the overall intent of the bill and what I believe will be the unfulfilled promise that the sponsors of the bill have made that the ultimate purpose of the bill as stated in its text, is to accelerate the deployment of advanced services in more rural areas of the country, there is no requirement that any of the savings a company garner through lessened regulatory obligations be spent or invested in deployment of new, or advanced services to rural areas. The legislation has no advanced services build-out requirement, no blueprint or timetable for deployment to rural areas for such services. It appears that the savings a company enjoys through this bill can go directly to profits and to shareholders.

As we proceed further on this bill I would encourage Members to further review suggestions made by NARUC and its membership and work again on these issues so that consumers and the public interest are fully protected.

Again, I want to thank Mrs. CUBIN for the adjustments in the bill that she has been willing to make thus far. I enjoy working with her and want to continue our discussions on this bill. I believe that working together, along with Chairman UPTON, Chairman TAUZIN, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. GORDON, Mr. BARRETT, Mr. PICKERING, Mr. LARGENT and other supporters of the bill, that we can ultimately reach a resolution with the Senate that works for everybody.

In addition I want to commend and thank Mrs. CUBIN's staff, Bryan Jacobs, and the Energy and Commerce Committee Republican staff, Howard Waltzman, for their efforts in fashioning compromises in many sections of the bill.

Mr. BEREUER, Mr. Speaker, today this Member received a letter from the chief executive officer of one of the many rural telephone companies in Nebraska. Great Plains Communications is based in Blair, Nebraska. Great Plains serves 33,600 lines across 13,600 square miles of rural Nebraska. The company's service area includes 76 communities and 63 exchanges. That amounts to about two and one-half customers per square mile. Fifty of those exchanges have 6 or fewer customers per square mile and 20 of the exchanges have 2 or fewer subscribers per square mile.

At a recent telecommunications conference at Creighton University in Omaha, Great Plains CEO Jack Jesken noted that most rural telephone companies are experiencing flat or negative growth rates. That flat growth makes investment difficult, that costs continue to rise, and that these rural telephone companies lack economies of scale and are serving many customers with limited income.

Across the United States more than 1,000 small, local telephone companies are facing similar problems as they work to provide good service to rural residents. These telephone companies have more limited financial resources and relatively higher expenses than large telephone companies. Yet, these small companies must function under FCC regulations intended for large carriers.

Mr. Speaker, the Independent Telecommunications Consumer Enhancement Act will help to end "one-size-fits-all" regulation of small and rural telecommunications carriers. It will provide these carriers and their customers from unfair and unnecessary regulatory burdens. And, in doing so, it will free resources that can be used to provide advanced telecommunications services to residents of rural areas.

Mr. UPTON, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 496, as amended.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 459

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 459.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. SIMPSON.) Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. JONES of North Carolina addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. HEFLEY addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

THE GOVERNMENT’S APPETITE FOR LAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I did a Special Order about a tax cut and how one can never satisfy government’s appetite or demand for money. I said then that if we gave every department and agency double what they got the year before, they might be happy for a short time, but they would soon be back crying about a shortfall in funding. Everyone supports education, for example, and I certainly do.

But you almost never hear the fact that education spending has gone up at a rate many times the rate of inflation over the last several years.

But I want to expand today on something else that I mentioned in that special order of a few days ago, and that is government’s appetite for land.

Just as you can never satisfy government’s appetite for money, you can never satisfy government’s desire for land. They always want more, and they have been getting it at what people should spell out as an alarming rate.

Today, over 30 percent of the land in the United States is owned by the Federal Government. Another almost 20 percent is owned by State and local governments or quasi-governmental agencies.

So today you have about half the land in some type of public or governmental ownership.

The most alarming thing is the speed with which this government greed for land has grown over the past 30 years or 40 years.

Another alarming aspect of this trend is the growing number of restrictions that government at all levels is putting on the land that does remain in private hands.

A few years ago, the National Home Builders Association told me if there were strict enforcement of the wetlands rules and regulations, over 60 percent of the developable land would be off limits for housing.

Now some who already have nice homes might think this would be good, to stop most development. But you cannot stop it, because the population keeps growing, and people have to have someplace to live.

So what happens? When government keeps buying and restricting more and more land, it does two things: It drives up the costs and causes more and more people to be jammed closer and closer together.

First, it drives up land and building costs so that many young or lower income families are priced out of the housing market, especially for new homes.

Second, it forces developers to build on smaller and smaller postage-stamp-size lots or build townhouses or apartments.

Do you ever wonder why subdivisions built in the 1950s or 1960s often have 75 yards and now new subdivisions do not, or why new homes that should cost $50 a square foot now cost $100 a square foot or more? It is in large part because government keeps buying or restricting so much land.

This trend is causing more and more people to be jammed into smaller and smaller areas, increasing traffic, pollution, crime, and just an overall feeling of being overcrowded.

It is sometimes referred to as the urban blight and environmental extremists are attacking it because they know it is unpopular, but they are the very people who have caused it.

Most of these environmental extremists come from very wealthy families, and they probably have nice homes already or even second homes in the country.

But it is not fair and it is not right, Mr. Speaker, for who already have what they want to demand policies that drive up the costs and put an important part of the American dream out of reach for millions of younger or lower income people.

Make no mistake about it, when government buys or restricts more and more land, it drives up the costs of the rest of the land. And this hurts poor and lower income and middle income people the most.

Even those forced to live in apartments are hurt, because apartment developers have to pass their exorbitant land and regulatory costs on to their tenants. When government takes land, they almost always take it from poor or lower income people or small farmers.

We have way too many industrial parks in this country today. States and local governments, which do almost nothing for older small businesses, will give almost anything to some big company to move from someplace else.

Is it right for governments to take property for very little paid to small farmers and then give it to big foreign or multinational companies or even to big companies to develop resort areas for the wealthy? I do not think so.

One of the most important things we need to do to insure future prosperity is to stop government at all levels from taking over more private property. Anyone who does not understand this should read a book called The Noblest Triumph, Property and Prosperity Through the Ages by Tom Bethell. The whole book is important, but a couple of brief excerpts: The Nobel Prize winning economist Milton Friedman has said, ‘You cannot have a free society without private property? Recent immigrants have been delighted to find you can buy property in the United States without paying bribes.

The call for secure property rights in Third World countries today is not an attempt to help the rich. It is not the property of those who have access to Swiss bank accounts that needs to be protected. It is the small and insecure possessions of the poor.

This key point was well understood by Pope Leo XIII who wrote that the fundamental principle of socialism, which would make all possessions public property, is to be utterly rejected because it injures the very ones whom it seeks to help.”

Over the years, when government has taken private property, it has most often taken it from lower and middle income people and small farmers. Today, federal, state and local governments, and quasi-governmental agencies make up about half the land in this Nation.

The most disturbing thing is the rapid rate at which this taking has increased in the last 40 years. Environmentalists who have supported most of this should realize that the worst polluters in the world have been the socialist nations, because their economies do not generate enough income to do good things for the environment, and that private property is almost always better cared for than public property and at a much lower cost.

ELECTION REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, last week, I introduced the announcement of a resolution calling on Congress to enact meaningful election reform legislation.

Today, I am proud to introduce another measure on election reform and to announce an important voting technology demonstration I am sponsoring tomorrow with my former secretary of state colleagues who are presently now in the House and the Senate.

I am pleased to introduce legislation today to improve the voting process for millions of elderly Americans and persons with disabilities.

In every election year, many of these people stay at home, stay away from the polls, not from apathy but from concern about their ability to cast a vote independently. The elderly and visually impaired may not be able to decipher small print or confusing ballots, persons in wheelchairs may have difficulty maneuvering in older voting booths.

Unfortunately, this problem is pervasive throughout the United States. With nearly one in five Americans having some level of disability and approximately 35 million Americans over the age of 65, we must act now to ensure that our voting system is accessible to all Americans.

To ensure that Americans are not discouraged from voting because of outdated voting equipment and inaccessible voting places, I am introducing the Voting Opportunity through Technology and Education, or VOTE, Act. This measure would require the Federal Election Commission to establish voluntary accessibility and ease-of-use standards for polling places in voting equipment.

In 1984, Congress passed the Voting Accessibility for the Elderly and Handicapped Act. This legislation required that all polling places in the United States be made accessible to the elderly and the disabled, but provided the FEC with little enforcement power. With the establishment of the new accessibility and ease-of-use standards in my VOTE Act, the FEC would be able to provide secretaries of state and election administrators with more information and support services to help them comply with accessible laws.

Additionally, the voting technology industry could use these standards to ensure that their products may be correctly used by all Americans at the polls. Finally, the VOTE Act would provide grants to States so that they may improve their voting systems and educate poll workers and voters about the availability and benefits of these new technologies.

Mr. Speaker, I know first-hand how modern voting systems can increase voter turnout and improve accuracy. As a secretary of state for the State of Rhode Island, I was the chief architect of a plan to upgrade the State’s voting system and equipment. The replacement of outdated lever machines with optical scan equipment and Braille and tactile ballots helped increase voter turnout and significantly reduced chances of error.

To highlight this equipment, as well as other voting technologies now available, I am joining former secretaries of state now in Congress, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), in hosting the voting technology demonstration, on Thursday, March 22. There will be a bill address another one half hour at the State level to improve voting accountability and accuracy and demonstrate the various forms of election equipment, including punchcard ballot, optical scan and direct recording electronic systems.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to attend this educational event, as it will help prepare us for a nationwide discussion on election reform. Additionally, I ask that my colleagues join me in supporting this VOTE Act to make voting one of the greatest expressions of civic participation available on an equal basis to all Americans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

REINTRODUCTION OF CHILD HANDGUN INJURY PREVENTION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. CARSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we continue to observe school shootings, and I am concerned that we have yet to pass strong gun safety legislation.

Despite recent polls by CBS and the New York Times which suggest that 70 percent of American people favor stricter handgun laws, Congress continues to ignore the public’s concerns.

January 10, in Ventura County, California, a 17-year-old student held a classmate at gunpoint during the school’s lunch break. The school’s lunchroom gunman was fatally wounded by police.

January 12, in my district, Indianapolis, Indiana, a 4-year-old boy shot himself with a pistol he found in his mother’s pocketbook.

February 7, 2001 in Dallas, Texas, a 14-year-old boy fired a gun in the direction of classmates while on school grounds.

March 6, in Santee, California, a 15-year-old boy took a 22-caliber long-barrel revolver from his father’s locked collection of weapons and killed two schoolmates, while injuring 13 others.

March 7, this year, Williamsburg, Pennsylvania, a 14-year-old girl shot a female classmate in the shoulder in the cafeteria of a parochial school.

March 7, Prince County Georges, Maryland, a 14-year-old boy shot and wounded another younger outside Largo Senior High School.

From 1987 to 1996, nearly 2,200 American children, 14 years of age and younger, died from unintentional shootings. What are we waiting for? We must not allow these tragedies to become an everyday part of American life. We must not be apathetic.

While firearm fatalities cost America more money than any of the other four leading causes of death, guns are the only consumer product in America, except tobacco, which are exempt from health care and safety regulations. Sadly, guns continue to be exempt from Federal oversight, and consumer protection laws continue to be tougher on toy guns than on real guns.

The history of consumer product regulation teaches us that significant numbers of death and illnesses can be preserved when health and safety regulations exist. The Poison Prevention Packaging Act requires child-resistant packaging. The Consumer Federation of America estimates that more than 700,000 children have avoided accidental poisonings. Also, the introduction of sleep wear and toy standards have saved children’s lives.

I ask my colleagues to join me in the bill that I introduced last week, the Child Handgun Injury Prevention Act, H.R. 1014. It requires manufacturers’ safety devices.

We introduced it in another bill that requires training to entitle you to have license. H.R. 1014 requires the Secretary of Treasury to mandate all newly manufactured handguns come equipped with child safety devices, and it would establish a Federal standard for the devices.

We can do nothing less than to ensure the future safety of our children and prevent them from unintentional handgun injury. We need to require safety devices that meet the rigid tests by the Department of State.

I encourage each Member of the House of Representatives to join me in this effort.
Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues join me in expressing sympathies and encouraging prayer for Bret’s widow, Robin, for his three daughters, for the stripping brothers that made up an active household years ago who mourn his loss, for his parents, for his fellow fire fighter and other kids on their soccer team in Phoenix and the surrounding area.

Mr. Speaker, we pause to remember Bret Tarver, his sacrifice, his legacy, and the shining example of true public service that he represented so well and so faithfully.

TIME TO MOVE TOWARDS ENERGY INDEPENDENCE IN OUR COUNTRY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) because, last year, the city of Houston lost two firefighters. It is appropriate that we remember the Tarver family and their sacrifice, because having experienced two fire fighters’ loss of life last year and again having fire fighters up here this week with us, I join the hon. member who I believe is slowing down the process of trying to find a comprehensive energy solution.

First, at this moment, insufficient supplies of natural gas are threatening to produce widespread shortages, not only in California and the West, but throughout our country this summer. This shortage can be traced to the oversupply of natural gas 2 years ago. Everyone likes to point the finger at energy producers when prices are high; but no one seems to care when a year or two ago, we could not even give natural gas away. Those extremely low prices 2 years ago stopped exploration activities and forced many natural gas producers to cap marginally-producing wells.

The laws of supply and demand work, and it did not stay out of balance for too long. We thought that cheap natural gas would last forever in the building and heating season. We were wrong, because it is safer and cleaner, new natural gas generators highlighted this belief that natural gas would be cheap. So today around our country, the demand for natural gas has far outstripped the supply, and we need to respond to this demand.

Staying in front of our energy needs is the key to avoiding high cost. Exploration and production of domestic energy sources are the keys to staying in front along with more efficient use of our resources.

While we are behind on natural gas production, I need to remind everyone we will soon also be behind on oil production as well. Last summer’s high gasoline prices are only a taste of what is to come. Already we have heard that OPEC plans to cut production in an attempt to maintain a stable world oil price. Demand in this country easily outstrips the supply, and we have no time to fall back on during times of a tight supply.

It is for these reasons that we must take steps to stay ahead of our oil curve and tap more domestic sources of production. Specifically, I have agreed to cosponsor H.R. 39, the Arctic Coast-Al Plain Domestic Energy Security Act of 2001. The coastal plain of the Arctic Natural Wildlife Refuge, known as ANWR, is said to contain between 5.7 and 16 billion barrels of recoverable oil. If the upper 16 billion barrels of recoverable reserve can be extracted, it represents 20 years of oil which we will not have to import from other parts of the world. I want to emphasize that these reserve numbers are also considered very conservative.

As a Member of Congress from Houston, Texas, I know firsthand that the drilling technologies have continued to improve. In fact, we have been and continue drilling and production in the Gulf of Mexico. Technology has allowed us to go deeper and also do it more efficiently and safely.

As equipment and techniques advance, the percentage of recoverable oil will also increase. Industry now has the capability to manage the amount of land impacted by new oil development.

North Slope drillers routinely drill directional wells that reach out 4 miles from the surface of the rig. That means that one production pad on the surface can produce from 44 square miles of subsurface oil fields. So you do not have the imprint of that facility.

The decision to support drilling in ANWR was not made just on the need to utilize energy resources alone. I met with the Alaskans that live on the land impacted by new oil development. Careful development of ANWR under strict regulatory guidelines can provide our Nation with a vital resource while minimizing the environmental impact on the coastal plain and its wildlife.

Our experiences on Alaska’s North Slope provide strong evidence that oil and gas development in nearby ANWR would pose little threat to the ecology of the coastal plain. The record is clear. Air quality is good. The drilling wastes have been well managed, and wildlife and their habitat have been minimally impacted.

This debate on this issue has been heated and will get even more heated. But many of the arguments being made in opposition to opening ANWR were... raised at the time Prudhoe Bay and the North Slope development was being considered. Today we are much better than we were those many years ago. Most experts have acknowledged that Prudhoe Bay has been, and continues to be, a success story. I keep going back to the same point, we can extract this vital resource while at the same time safeguarding the environment and other resources in that region. After careful consideration, the answer should be yes. Extracting oil from ANWR will have positive benefits for American consumers.

I do not dismiss the concerns in the environmental community, but many of the arguments again were made at the same time when we were doing it for North Slope. The environment has been safeguarded on North Slope. I believe with advances in drilling technology, we will be safer with ANWR.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring H.R. 39. It is time to move towards energy independence in our country.

NURSING SHORTAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. Carrs) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. Carrs. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the impending shortage of nurses. I am one of three nurses currently serving in Congress. Before I was elected, I served the people of Santa Barbara as a public health nurse for over 20 years.

My experience gives me a distinct perspective on nursing issues. I know firsthand the challenges facing the nursing profession and the consequences if we fail to meet them. Nurses are the first line of defense in our health care system, and the importance of this role cannot be overstated.

Today the nursing community is facing a dire situation. There is currently an ongoing crisis of nurses in the work force. In the past, this type of shortage has been resolved when pay and benefits have risen enough to attract new nurses into the field. But that is not the case this time. While some compensation levels have been rising, these improvements have not attracted enough nurses back into practice.

We are also facing a looming crisis in a profession that will strain the health care system. We need to protect the quality of care. We have an aging nursing work force and a dwindling supply of new nurses. Right now, the average age of employed registered nurses is 43 years. By 2010, 40 percent of the RN work force will be over 50 years.

Unfortunately, and in contrast, the number of young nurses is decreasing. Under 30 years of age, it has now declined by 41 percent. With this combination, we are facing an incredible shortage of well trained, experienced nurses in all fields.

To make matters worse, this will happen just as the 78 million members of the baby boom generation begin to retire and need an even greater amount of health care.

In my home State of California, the problem is even worse. Less than 10 percent of the RN work force back home is under the age of 30, and nearly a third are over the age of 50. California already ranks 50th among the States in RNs per capita.

Part of the problem is that the nursing work force is so homogeneous. The vast majority of nurses are white women. In 1970, a smart young woman had only a handful of career options available to her, including nursing. But as our society’s views on women’s equality have progressed, we have not escaped the perception that nursing is women’s work.

As young women have explored different careers, very few young men have entered the nursing work force to replace them. So right now less than 6 percent of the nursing work force is comprised of men.

Likewise, even though the percentage of minorities in our national work force has risen close to 25 percent, minorities still only represent 10 percent of RNs.

In order to deal with this looming shortage, we are going to need to address a number of issues and to be very creative in our solutions. We need to draw more people into the profession, particularly the young men and women at the high school level who are just choosing their career paths. We need to reach out to minorities and disadvantaged youth. We need to retain those nurses who are already in the work force. We need to make sure we have enough nursing school faculty, mentors and preceptors to properly education and train our work force.

I have been working with various working groups, with Senator John Kerry, and other Members of Congress to develop a set of measures that can help deal with both the immediate and the long-term problems that we face. Soon I will be introducing comprehensive legislation to address these shortages.

This legislation will include proposals to improve access to nursing education, to create partnerships between health care providers and educational institutions, to support nurses as they seek more training, and to improve the collection and analysis of data about the nursing work force.

But we will also need to look at creative new ideas to truly address this problem. In my home town, Santa Barbara, Cottage Hospital and Santa Barbara City College have joined with San Marcos High School to create a health academy. This is a perfect example of the kind of creative solution we need.

In their sophomore year, 60 students will be enrolled in special nursing courses taught by professionals from the hospital and college. When they graduate, they can be certified nursing assistants or continue their nursing education in SBC’s 2-year nursing education RN program. For its first class in this high school, there are already 128 applicants for those 60 spaces.

This program can serve to recruit young men and women into the nursing profession as well as change misperceptions among other students and teachers about the value of a nursing career. With support, this program could be replicated in other high-need areas, or other types of public-private partnerships could be developed.

The challenges we face in the nursing and public health communities are becoming more and more evident and the need for national action on them is equally evident.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me in this effort so we can achieve a bipartisan solution to these problems.

FOOD SAFETY IN THE UNITED STATES AS IT RELATES TO THE MEAT INDUSTRY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Simpson). Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Ganske) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. Ganske. Mr. Speaker, just as a courtesy to whoever may follow, I will probably take about 20 minutes on this special order.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot help but notice the myriad of cutting gloom and doom on the horizon for our Nation’s future. Whether it is foot- and-mouth disease threatening the world’s livestock, the downturn in the world’s economy, or the energy crisis that is jack-uping home heating costs to really high levels, many of my constituents wonder where to turn for answers.

Well today, Mr. Speaker, I would propose that America take a second look at its backbone, agriculture, as agriculture relates to some of these issues.

So the first topic I would like to discuss is food safety. The United States has one of the safest food supplies in the world. Prior to coming to Congress I was a physician and I am a father and I have a very keen interest in the issue of food safety. A few years ago, I was on an overseas surgical mission; and instead of just bringing back good memories, I brought back a case of encephalitis which I may have picked up from cows and overseas.

When I came to Congress, I cosponsored and helped pass the Food Quality Protection Act. It established new safety standards for the use of pesticides and required the EPA to use sound science in making its decisions. We all have a great stake in helping to ensure that our food supply is safe.

There have been concerns about the safety of food with the spread of two diseases in Europe related to the liveweight of ovine sheep: foot-and-mouth disease and mad cow disease. Both of these diseases, believe me, are being taken very seriously by the Number four, the USDA has placed additional inspectors and dog teams at airports and other ports of entry to check incoming passengers, luggage, and cargo. They have stationed USDA officials worldwide to monitor reports of the disease.

Number five, the USDA has conducted a widespread public education campaign to make the public more aware of this disease and the steps that we can all take to help keep our country free of this animal disease.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my remarks today are helpful in that public education effort. Now, in addition to foot-and-mouth disease, there have also been concerns about the cattle disease bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or what is called mad cow disease. It has been featured in many news stories. It is usually portrayed in very ominous and foreboding manner.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear, there has never been a case of mad cow disease in the United States. Not only has no human being ever been affected by it in the United States, but no cow has ever been infected by it in the United States. Therefore, there is no coincidence. The USDA and the cattle industry have taken extensive measures to keep our beef supply safe. Mad cow disease was first discovered in England in 1985. Scientists believe that the disease began when remains of sheep that had suffered from a neurologic disease called scrapie were used as cattle feed. Cows developed a neurologic disease called bovine spongiform encephalopathy after eating the contaminated feed. It is not otherwise contagious between animals. Scrapie is found in some sheep in the United States, but it has never caused any health problems in humans.

Mad cow disease in cattle causes a certain type of protein called prions, a normal part of human and animal brain, to become deformed. This leads to a degeneration of brain tissue and to eventual death. In Europe when they have seen these cases, it has occurred primarily in younger people. Although deformed prions are located in brain tissue, eye tissue and spinal cords of infected cattle, if humans eat beef products containing those tissues, it is possible for them to contract a form of the disease.

About 90 people in Europe have died from the human form of the disease which is called Creutzfeldt-Jacob variant disease. All of those fatalities occurred in Europe, mostly in Great Britain. I wanted to again point out, there have never been any cases in the United States of either humans or animals catching this disease. Why is that? Well, it is because we have been watching for it. The USDA has been doing its job.

The USDA began taking steps in 1989 to prevent the disease from reaching the United States beef industry. In 1989, they banned the importation of live ruminants such as cattle, sheep, goats and most ruminant products from countries where mad cow disease has been identified. In 1990, they began educational outreach efforts to veterinarians, cattle producers and laboratorian diagnosticians about the clinical signs and diagnosis of the disease. They also began an active surveillance effort to examine the brains of U.S. cattle for possible signs of disease.

In 1993, they expanded their surveillance to include what are called “downer cattle.” These are cows that fall down from a disease, frequently on the slaughterhouse floor, not just cows that were acting unusual.

In 1997, the USDA moved to prohibit the importation of live ruminants, i.e., cattle, and most ruminant products from all of Europe. The Environmental Protection Agency also passed regulations to prevent the feeding of most mammalian proteins to ruminants.

In 1999 and again in 2000, the USDA expanded their surveillance procedures. In December of last year, the USDA prohibited all imports of rendered animal products regardless of species from Europe. The restriction applied to products originating, rendered, processed or otherwise associated with European products.

Last month, the USDA suspended importation of processed beef and associated products from Brazil, not because there was evidence of disease in Brazil, but because they were unable to document that they were taking all steps to prevent the disease in Brazil.

The USDA has trained more than 250 State and Federal field veterinarians throughout the United States to recognize and diagnose animal diseases, including mad cow disease.

In all of that time with the thousands of cattle that have been tested, there has never been a single cow found to have the disease in the United States.

There has also been pathology work done on a systematic basis in the United States to investigate human deaths caused by neurological diseases. The Center for Disease Control and Prevention does this for a variety of public health reasons in the study of neurologic diseases. There have been no cases in the United States where the patient has died from a variant associated with mad cow disease. George Grant, a researcher at Harvard School of Public Health stated, “The chance of this becoming a serious health risk in the United States is very low.”

He also said, “We won’t have a United States’ style epidemic here. It just won’t happen.” An official of the World Health Organization agreed. He said that American officials are “taking the right measures to prevent the occurrence of the disease in their country.” He added that “the risk in the United States is low.”
Mr. Speaker, my home State of Iowa is always one of the leading States in the production of agricultural products. In a recent year it exported more than $3.5 billion in farm commodities alone. It is probable that we will export even more meat if our meat remains safe. But this may be short-lived once other countries reestablish their livestock and then say from their experience with hoof and mouth disease, “We’re not going to cut off those borders.”

The ramifications of a trade slowdown based on caution due to animal health concerns is not just a problem for agricultural products, either. If trade agreements are not reached, other sectors of the economy are going to be impacted. Iowa firms are very active, in fact, in the area of international finance. Having trade agreements to conclusion can impact their ability to market their products around the world. Right now, the two most contentious issues in our international trade agreements are agriculture and technical barriers. And so we have a balance going on.

It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, how an issue like hoof and mouth disease can impact another area before us, such as international trade on financial services. History proves that the free flow of goods around the world is beneficial to our economy. Now is not the time for protectionism. We must have adequate safeguards at our borders, but we also must be able to export our agricultural commodities.

And it is not just for our own financial benefit. The Midwest, where I come from, is the world’s breadbasket. We supply meat and grains to the world. These are at burgeoning populations around the world, it is very important to prevent famine that we be able to export our goods. All one has to do is look back in history. High tariffs and retaliatory trade practices turned an economic downturn in the 1930s into the Great Depression, pushing unemployment to over 30 percent. We must make sure that our animals stay healthy and that we continue to promote international trade. It is important for the economy.

Mr. Speaker, on a final note, the Bush administration has faced many important decisions in its first few months in office. I think one remaining decision will have long-lasting implications. It involves the oxygenate requirements of the Clean Air Act. The EPA is being asked to waive the requirement for the State of California. I think this would be very damaging if pursued by the administration. I believe the President understands the importance of maintaining the current requirement and that he will choose not to grant a waiver.

I was able to talk to President Bush directly on Air Force One when he flew back to Iowa recently. I talked to the President about the matter of promoting ethanol and banning a chemical called MTBE. This is the oxygenate that is used in gasoline around most of the country. It is an oxygen based oxygenate, an oil-based chemical. I think we have to phase that out.

The EPA has determined that this chemical, MTBE, is a ground water contaminant and possible carcinogen. If you take one teaspoon of that chemical and you put it into an Olympic-size swimming pool, it renders all the water in that swimming pool undrinkable. The stench is incredible, much less what it could be doing to your body once it gets inside.

New York, California and other States have taken action to phase out and ban the chemical. The same action has been taken by major cities like Chicago. That chemical has got to go. It is even getting into Iowa’s water supply as it comes out the exhaust tail pipes of cars as they drive across Iowa. The choice then becomes whether we can phase MTBE out or just eliminate the clean air standards altogether. The reasonable answer is to turn to ethanol.

Opponents argue that the ethanol industry cannot meet the demand. That is simply not accurate. The ethanol industry’s annual capacity now exceeds 2 billion gallons.

My colleague from New Jersey has arrived on the floor. They are even building ethanol plants in New Jersey these days. You do not need to use corn. You can use vegetable refuse. You can use any type of plant material. You can ferment it. You can create the ethanol. It helps that gasoline burn cleaner. It reduces carbon dioxide. We have had a great improvement in our Nation’s air supply, and the EPA will tell you that a large part of it has been due to those clean air standards.

We can supply the ethanol. The ethanol industry’s annual capacity now exceeds 2 billion gallons. It has added 226 million gallons of capacity in the last year. It will add another 320 million gallons of capacity this year. Over the next 2 years, ethanol production is scheduled to begin on an additional 1.1 billion gallons of additional capacity.

Ethanol has twice the oxygen content of MTBE, and so it will only take half the volume of ethanol to replace the MTBE. The Renewable Fuels Association believes that about 580 million gallons of ethanol will be needed to fill the need in California and that we can meet California’s target. Ethanol also provides a great benefit to the rural economy.

We are talking about an energy policy. We are talking about how dependent we are on foreign oil. This is a renewable fuel. The United States Department of Agriculture reported last year that replacing MTBE with ethanol would increase farm income more than $1 billion annually. It would reduce our balance of trade deficit by $12 billion over the next 10 years. It would create 13,000 new jobs in rural America. It would reduce farm program costs and lower energy payments by creating an important new value-added market to our grain. Moreover, the USDA concluded that ethanol can replace MTBE used in reformulated fuels nationwide without price increases or supply disruptions within the next 3 years.

And so I have a bill before Congress. It has a whole bunch of bipartisan supporters for this bill, from all parts of the country. I would encourage my colleagues to sign on to this environment-ally sound bill.

Ethanol production is the third largest use of corn in the United States, utilizing about 7 percent of the corn crop. Current levels of ethanol production add 30 cents to the value of a bushel of corn and adds about $4.5 billion to the U.S. farm economy annually. That will help us, Mr. Speaker, when we are looking at this budget. By creating an additional demand for corn, we can help ensure that the market price will provide a sufficient return on the cost of production to allow the farmer to break even, hopefully even turn a profit. That will lessen the need for Federal support subsidies that are currently needed by farmers on the farm. That is beneficial for the producer, it is beneficial for the rural economy, and it is beneficial to the environment. I have pursued this cause of ethanol along with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SUMMIT). We introduced the Clean Air and Water Preservation Act of 2001. We have been joined by more than 30 Members of Congress who have cosponsored this legislation. Our legislation would phase out MTBE over 3 years and require the EPA to set a standard for dealing with groundwater pollution already caused by MTBE. It keeps the oxygenate provisions of the Clean Air Act intact. And it promotes the use of ethanol.

At a time when energy is on the Nation’s agenda, let us not ignore the role of ethanol, the clean-burning, homegrown natural fuel source, or the role that agriculture plays in our Nation’s prosperity and security.

PRESIDENT BUSH’S ANTI-ENVIRONMENTAL BEHAVIOR

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to highlight some of the serious shortcomings in the Bush administration’s environmental agenda as it relates to national energy plans.

Last month, President Bush stood before Congress in these very Chambers and spoke to the American people, saying he would pursue alternative energy sources and environmentally sound policies to help solve our energy crisis. In fact, I want to quote the President because he told us, and I quote, “We can promote alternative energy sources and conservation, and we must.” He was so right. At the time, I thought the plan sounded too good to be true. Unfortunately, with the recent release of the administration’s budget blueprint, I realize that it was too good to be true.

Sadly, the Bush administration’s budget blueprint reneges on the commitments the President made to pursue renewable energy sources. Headlines in the Washington Post and other newspapers across the country have stated the administration’s intent to cut energy efficiency and renewable energy R&D and technology development programs by 35 percent. That is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

This is especially frustrating because in this Congress we have an impressive group of bipartisan support for renewables. As the lead Democrat on the Subcommittee on Energy of the Committee on Science, I am personally working with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT), the chairman, to promote environmentally sound priorities.

Mr. Speaker, if the 35 percent cut in the blueprint were to go through, it would seriously hamper efforts to develop clean-burning, homegrown energy; it would hamper wind power investment, bioenergy and geothermal energy technologies.

This is where our Federal priorities must be, not in increasing our dependence on fossil fuels, as the administration appears to want in its policies. It is said that actions speak louder than words, Mr. Speaker. That is why I am outraged. But I am not surprised. I am not surprised that the administration’s commitment to environmentally friendly sources of energy lasted only as long as the television cameras were rolling.

I say to our President, now is not the time to cut funding for national energy efficiency and renewable energy programs. Now is the time to increase the investment. Proposing to cut funding for vital energy conservation and renewable energy programs would be a step in the very wrong direction, and it would be a serious blow to the efforts that we hope to take to craft a sensible national energy policy.

In my district, as well as across California, consumers and businesses are facing electric and gas bills two or three times higher than those of last year. California is facing an electricity reliability crisis that threatens our State’s economy. What we need is responsible energy policy that includes a significant investment in clean energy sources to supplement electric supply, and we also must recognize the need to reduce demand for electricity by promoting and using more efficient energy technologies. These are programs that will protect our environment and leave a better future for our children.

Since passing the National Energy Policy Act in 1992, Congress has generally ignored energy issues; but the power outages in California, as well as the increased price of natural gas and oil throughout our entire Nation, have brought energy back to the top of our Nation’s agenda. The energy shortage we are experiencing in California is proof enough that Congress must raise the stakes in search of alternative energy sources. Obviously, what we are doing now is not good enough.

As Congress and this administration forges a long-term energy plan, it is imperative that we make a true commitment to the use of cleaner and safer sources, to energy efficiency, and to conservation to prevent future energy crises and to protect our environment. Measures of this kind can work. For example, in my district two of my counties are working to make sure we have more energy-efficient programs, programs that must be modeled for the rest of the country.

ADDRESSING IMPORTANT ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader. Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I woke up this morning and I read on the front page of USA Today that President Bush is doing a terrible job on highly significant environmental issues. I suppose that is no surprise to my colleagues here in the well or here in the House Chambers.

I also read in the paper this morning that the Bush administration is planning to restrict new mining limits in the next few days. Of course, we have not heard about that yet, but it sounds like just another indication that this administration is essentially anti-environment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask, what is the President going to do for the special interests tomorrow? I do not think there is any person, average person, or any group of concerned citizens, that asked the President to abandon these more stringent restrictions on the amount of arsenic allowed in tap water. Arsenic is a known carcinogen, I think many people know. The week before, President Bush broke a campaign promise to the American people that he would work to reduce carbon dioxide emissions; and carbon dioxide is, of course, a greenhouse gas that causes that and is a major factor in global warming.

I also read in the paper this morning that the Bush administration is planning to restrict new mining limits in the next few days. Of course, we have not heard about that yet, but it sounds like just another indication that this administration is essentially anti-environment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask, what is the President doing to solve the special interests tomorrow? I do not think there is any average American, average person, any group of concerned citizens, that asked the President to abandon these more stringent restrictions on the amount of arsenic in water. I doubt very much that there was a group of citizens who told him he should go back on his campaign promise and not regulate carbon dioxide emissions.

This is coming from the special interests. This is coming from the corporate special interests, oil interests, mining interests, coal interests, who contributed to the President’s campaign and who now are calling the shots with this administration at the White House on these very important environmental issues.

The reason that I am so concerned about it, Mr. Speaker, is because we are talking about the health and the safety of the average American, the air we breathe, the water that we drink. These are not environmental issues that we have any doubt about what the impact is going to be. We know that if these carbon dioxide emissions are not regulated in some way, that a lot more people will get sick from the air. We know that if the arsenic is reduced in drinking water, that a lot more people will get cancer from arsenic.

March 21, 2001 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE H1043

ENVIRONMENTAL BEHAVIOR

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.
So it is really almost mind-boggling to think that this administration, in such a short time, has come down so hard, if you would, on the side of those who would seek to deregulate or weaken, or certainly not improve, environmental regulations that need to be improved.

Let me talk initially, if I could, about the carbon dioxide change that the President had. He did not change his position on carbon dioxide until four letters sent a letter to him on March 6. Until that time, not only during the campaign, but even in the first few months we heard from the EPA administrator, Christine Whitman, the former Governor of New Jersey, my former governor, that a consensus had been essentially built in the White House, in this administration, to regulate CO₂. But after that letter was sent on March 6, the President broke his promise, because special-interest lobbyists pressured him to do so. We know that the President ordered Mr. Cheney essentially pulled the rug from under the EPA administrator and insisted in his capacity as the Chairman, I guess, of this new Energy Task Force that carbon dioxide not be regulated.

I think this is symptomatic of what we are going to see with this administration, broken promises on protections that we need for the environment and for the American people. I hope it does not continue, but every indication is that it will.

Let me briefly mention, Mr. Speaker, about the carbon dioxide emissions, because I want everyone to understand that the reduction in carbon dioxide that myself and other environmentalists support is not a crazy idea that is just supported by a bunch of eco-freaks. In fact, numerous large multinational corporations have adopted company-wide targets to cut global warming pollutants that include carbon dioxide.

One of President Bush’s most loyal supporters, the Enron Corporation, has urged the President to create a credit-trading system for carbon dioxide in a manner very similar to a bill I introduced in Congress and that I will be reintroducing shortly, where we use a trading system, which is essentially a market approach to try to reduce carbon dioxide and other emissions.

I have worked, frankly, with both utilities and environmental groups in creating what I consider a workable emission-reduction plan, and I know that there are solutions other than “business as usual,” in other words, the idea of simply throwing the environment aside in the name of economic development.

Utilities and environmentalists can work together to come up with a program that reduces carbon dioxide. It is not a situation where you have to choose between the environment and industry, or you have to choose between impacting people’s health in terms of the air they breathe versus the cost of producing energy.

Now, in making the statement that was made yesterday on the second issue, to roll back protective standards on the amount of acceptable arsenic in drinking water, I think the Bush administration crossed the line even further in terms of not caring about the health of the American people. The carbon dioxide emissions, because here we are talking directly about an issue that studies have shown will directly impact the number of people that have cancer.

Arsenic, I do not have to tell anyone, is an awful substance that can cause bladder, lung, skin and other kinds of cancer. The proposal to reduce the amount of arsenic from an acceptable level of 50 parts per billion, which is the status quo, to 10 parts per billion, is actually something that was endorsed by the European Union and is in place for the countries that are part of the European Union, and also adopted by the World Health Organization. So the United States now, instead of being in unison with Europe and most of the world, is now keeping with a standard that was adopted in the forties about arsenic that you can consume in your water.

According to the National Academy of Sciences, exposure to arsenic at the current standard, 50 parts per billion, “could easily result in a combined cancer risk on the order of 1 in 100.” This level of risk is much higher than the maximum risk typically allowed by the Safe Drinking Water Act standards. Most of the time when we are talking about what is acceptable, we are talking about a case where maybe 1 in 10,000 people would be impacted. When you talk about 1 in 100, that is an incredible risk and could impact millions of people, maybe tens of millions of people.

The interesting thing about the administration’s announcement yesterday also with the arsenic levels is that once again my former governor, now the EPA administrator, Christine Whitman, actually admitted that the 50 parts per billion was unacceptable and that the standard needed to be lowered significantly. She said it twice in the statement that she put out from the EPA. Yet at the same time, she said that the 10 parts per billion was not a standard that there was a lot of scientific agreement on.

I wonder, there, that I know that Mrs. Whitman is trying to be helpful and trying to suggest that the standard needs to be lowered even though the Bush administration does not want to do it, but I would point out again that we know that a level of risk, typically, is 1 in 100,000. We do not want our constituents, Americans, living in fear; and I think that we are just seeing more and more of these ill-advised choices by the Bush administration.

I know that some of my colleagues today are probably going to talk about the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as well. I would yield to the gentleman from Oregon, if he likes, at this point.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman’s courtesy and this opportunity to join in this discussion.

It is important to me. I commend the gentleman for focusing attention on the environment and how the pieces fit together, and the relationship between Congress, the new administration and the American people.

It is very much in keeping with why I came to Congress, determined to make sure that the Federal Government was a better partner in promoting community livability, making our families safe, healthy and economically secure. An important part of that partnership, frankly, is that the Federal Government needs to play a constructive role. It needs to lead by example, set the tone, and follow through.

I, frankly, was shocked in the area of environmental stewardship with last week’s announcement dealing with global warming and the broken promise of the Bush administration with how we were going to deal with CO₂ emissions. I just returned from 4 days in my state of Oregon; and, like your state of New Jersey, citizens there are keenly concerned about the environment and quality of life. I was, frankly, despite that environmental orientation of Oregonians, surprised at the intensity of the public reaction to the administration’s lack of commitment to the environment.

Now, setting apart the fuzzy image portrayed by the last campaign, it is clear at this point it is more characterized by a series of reversals. You have already referenced the reversal of the arsenic standard by EPA administrator Whitman. Earlier in the week we heard from Department of Energy Secretary Abraham that oil spills could be avoided by relaxing environmental regulations and drilling for oil in Alaska’s National Wildlife Refuge. Of course, last week, President Bush reversed an explicit campaign position to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

None of these actions demonstrates that commitment to the livability of our communities, ensuring the public safety, environmental protection, or long-term energy conservation. We certainly do not need to spend more time studying whether or not global warming is happening, or whether arsenic poses a health problem to our children and families. We know that it is. We need to devote our time and energy instead to deal with how we are going to fix it.

It is true that we do not harbor a false sense of security in numbers. The fact is that almost 2,000 scientists have reiterated their findings that global warming is occurring, and its linkage to carbon-based energy consumption is clear. This is a clear emerging scientific consensus.

The administration’s actions are also out of sync with where the American public is concerned. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) and I take that commitment to the livability of the citizens that we represent in New Jersey and Oregon, but it is clear that the American public feel deeply about the environment and environmental protection. It was just this week that a Gallup poll found that 52 percent of Americans believe that we should be protecting the environment over a much smaller number dealing with energy, and by almost 2 to 1 there was a majority of those polled who opposed drilling for oil in the Alaskan Wildlife Refuge.

On the campaign trail, then-Governor Bush promised to seek a reduction of carbon dioxide emissions, including those emissions on a long list of pollutants regulated at power plants. Last fall, the Bush campaign materials released a comprehensive national energy policy that spoke of the “need for a comprehensive energy policy,” I am quoting, “that would be forward-looking, encourage the development of renewable energy sources and increased conservation.”

Specifically, then-Governor Bush proposed that legislation be introduced that would require electric utilities to reduce emissions and significantly improve the health and “establish mandatory reduction targets for emissions of 4 main pollutants, sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, mercury and carbon dioxide.” He was going to phase them in, and so on and so forth, provide market-based incentives: the gentleman from New Jersey has heard the drill.

The point is that he was clear and unequivocal. In fact, then-candidate Bush derided Vice President Gore for being too soft on this. This came up in the political process, but what it means for us as a public to try and deal with problems of global warming, of acid rain, of trying to get on to the next generation of energy-efficient activities and so on, what this Congress needs to be doing.

I am more than willing, Mr. Speaker, to continue. I have some further thoughts, but I notice that we have been joined by another colleague, and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) perhaps at this point, before going on and talking about the Arctic Wildlife Refuge in a few minutes, maybe the gentleman has other parts of this discussion that he would like to enter into at this point.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman’s comments. What I wanted to do was just comment briefly on the arsenic and then yield to our colleague from Maine.

The gentleman from New Jersey has heard the drill, the gentleman from Oregon talked about, the special interests with regard to this arsenic level in drinking water; it is interesting, because yesterday, when the EPA administrator former Governor Whitman announced that they were, in fact, going to stick with the status quo and not lower the arsenic level standards, contrary to what had been proposed, it was the same day that there was an article in The Washington Post which was called, “All Decked Out, But Will Runoff Ruin the Well.” It was by the American Wood Preservers Institute which was worried that this new arsenic standard would have a negative effect on their ability to produce this pressure-treated wood product.

Basically, what they do is they produce the kind of wood product that, I guess, is coated with a material that preserves it, what we see on decks or outdoors, mostly northern pine, is treated with CCA at some 350 million pounds CCA annually and about 37 million pounds of that mixture is arsenic. They sell 5 billion board feet annually.

I was thinking to myself, because of what the gentleman said, about our own constituents. I live in a shore district, so it is true that a lot of the pollution problems we go on the boardwalk or on the docks we see, I assume, this kind of coated wood. Can we imagine for 1 minute that anybody who had a dock or was using a boardwalk would not sacrifice that if they knew that the alternative was that their drinking water was going to be contaminated and they had a 1 out of 100 chance of getting cancer from the arsenic. Our priorities, or the administration’s priorities, are unbelievable that this kind of an organization would come in and say we have to continue to manufacture this processed wood and we are going to not be able to sell as much, or it is going to cost us more. That is what we are dealing with here, that kind of industry. The average person is going to say, charge me more for the beer, but at least keep the water so that I can drink it. It is just incredible to me.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I appreciate the gentleman holding this Special Order to discuss one of the more disturbing incidents of the early weeks of the Bush administration. The President has broken his promise to the American people on the environment, in doing so, he has demonstrated a real disregard for our health and for the long term consequences of the policies that we adopt here in the Congress today.

I really think we need to look at this example. I have had legislation in each of the last two Congresses and will introduce legislation very soon to deal with these old coal-fired and oil-fired power plants that are the major source of man-made carbon dioxide emissions in this country. I think it is worth noting that these old power plants which were grandfathered under the Clean Air Act and the Clean Air Act amendments are not subject to the same standards that a new power plant would be in this country. Yet, they emit 33 to 40 percent of all man-made carbon dioxide emissions in this country.

The President tried to say that well, carbon dioxide is not a pollutant, and certainly it is not a pollutant like mercury or sulfur dioxide or nitrogen dioxide because those are pollutants in all cases and in all circumstances. But carbon dioxide because there is so much of it being emitted now, is transforming the globe in a way that we can no longer ignore.
During his campaign and even until last week, President Bush had committed to reducing carbon dioxide emissions from power plants. For example, in a speech last September in Michigan, President Bush said, we will require states to meet stronger air standards in order to reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, mercury, and carbon dioxide. That is the four-pollutant strategy that the EPA administrator, Christy Whitman, was discussing in the early weeks of her new job. Mr. Bush made this promise to protect people from the effects of climate change and when it was made, it was a serious and substantial part of the appeal that he was making to the American people to suggest that he was a moderate on the issues related to the environment. But that is not the case. He has broken his word to protect the American people and has instead given in to the oil and gas industries who, not surprisingly, are among the largest contributors to these emissions.

Now, Christy Whitman, the new administrator of the EPA, was traveling through Europe and saying in radio and television interviews that the President would work to protect people by cleaning up power plants and, overall, that he was really concerned about this issue of global climate change.

Now, over the last few years, we have had trouble with the climate in this country and around the world, as to whether this climate change phenomenon is real, is serious, and is it immediate. Well, every time the group of scientists working through the United Nations take another look at this, the evidence is clearer and clearer than it was before. Now, there is a consensus. There is a consensus in the scientific community that climate change is real, that the problem is serious, that it is driven by man-made emissions from automobiles, power plants and other sources, and that we need to do something about it.

The United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, the IPCC, is a group of scientists from around the world. They have agreed that climate change is a real issue and we need to act in response. This is not a small group. More than 2,500 of the world’s leading climate scientists, economists and risk analysis experts from 80 different countries have contributed to the panel’s third assessment report on climate change. These scientists are projecting that we will see temperatures rise from 2.7 to 11 degrees over the next 100 years. Particularly at the upper end of that scale, that could have a phenomenal impact on this country and on the globe. There would be a broad range of different impacts. Sea levels will rise, and on the coast of Maine, we care about that; we do not want to see our beaches disappear. Particularly in tropical areas of the world and in places like Bangladesh which are low-lying countries, the effects on the globe and the resulting movement of populations could be substantial.

Glaciers and polar ice packs are melting. Already the area covered by sea ice in the Arctic declined by about 4 percent from 1978 to 1995. Ice thickness has decreased 40 percent since the 1960s. Droughts and wildfires will occur more often, and as habitat changes or is destroyed, species will be pushed to extinction.

Despite the scientific consensus, what the President said in his announcement was not the case. He was really concerned about the problem at the upper end of that scale, 0.3 degrees over the next 100 years. Particular at the upper end of that scale, that was really concerned about this issue of global climate change.

Now, over the last few years, we have had trouble with the climate in this country and around the world. As I said, it is possible to do something about it. As I mentioned before, I have this legislation, the Clean Power Plant Act, which I will introduce again, and the interesting thing about this legislation is we are not talking about Kyoto here. What I am suggesting is this bill is that commitments in this country be set at the level authorized by the Rio Treaty in 1991, when the former President Bush was President, a treaty that he signed, a treaty that was ratified by the U.S. Senate. And the way my legislation works, it allows emissions trading in carbon dioxide among different plants, but overall, it sets a national limit consistent with the Rio Treaty, and then we work to set caps for individual plants and then make sure that we get down to the overall national goal.

As I said, it is possible to do emissions trading because carbon dioxide does not have an adverse local impact. It has an adverse global impact.

The last thing I want to say on this point, right now the President’s failure to act is extremely disturbing, because any action that we take today is not likely to have a significant effect on the upper atmosphere for 100 years, for 100 years, and that means that we have to act before we have anything of know what exactly what the impact of our actions will be.

We just know that we have to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in this country. Carbon dioxide is the principal greenhouse gas; 33 to 40 percent of it comes from these old coal-fired and off-fired power plants. And we can do it. It is possible to do that with the appropriate technology.

Environmental cleanup will never get easier than when you have 33 to 40 percent of all of the emissions in the country coming from about 500 plants. It cannot be easier than this. The President also said that he thought the costs of dealing with the climate change issues would be too much. He never said beside the costs of cleaning up that they are unable to grow in one part of the country and have to move to another part of the country. The costs of not acting are far greater than the costs of acting, and putting off for 4 years any effort to deal with the primary greenhouse gas is a fundamental mistake for the health of the planet.

It is a fundamental mistake in terms of our relations with the rest of the world, because other countries around the world are proceeding. We are the problem in this case. We are the problem.

Here we sit in the United States, 5 percent of the globe’s population and we emit 26 percent of the greenhouse gases in the country, and we are trying to suggest that China and India and other people need to act before we do.

It is time to put our own house in order. It is time for people in the Congress to get the President to reverse his position and to tell the oil and gas industries that this country, this planet cannot be held captive to their special interests for the next 4 years.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN), my colleague, and I know that everything the gentleman is saying is so true.

Just to give two examples, quickly, one is, I was with President Clinton last year at this time in India, and we had just outside the Taj Mahal, where we announced cooperation between India and the United States on a number of environmental issues that specifically related to clean air.

There is no question that India, being the sort of leader within the developing countries, is looking to see what the United States is going to do on CO2 and other emissions before they are going to act. Because they say, look, most of the problem is coming from the developed country. If you are not going to take the initiative, then why should we when we are economically underdeveloped?

India was more than willing to play that role, but they are not going to do it if the United States does not take the leadership on it, that is for sure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine.
going to be relying on coal, among other sources, because both of those countries have coal.

We are developing in this country clean coal technology, clean coal technology that if this is transferred to China and India, if we help them with the development of their electrical infrastructure will have far less impact on the environment than otherwise.

It is not just carbon dioxide. It is also sulfur, mercury is one of those pollutants that does not go away; and we are having substantial problems in the Northeast, as the gentleman knows, with mercury pollution.

Frankly, we have to figure out how to take some of this mercury out of the air, and the best way to do it is changing how we deal with these old coal-fired and oil-fired power plants.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman again for yielding.

Mr. PALLONE. The other thing the gentleman mentioned about coastal States. My district is a coastal district. In fact, there are certain parts of it that are no more than a few blocks wide from the ocean.

I will tell the gentleman that my constituents are very concerned about the impact that global climate changes are going to have on the rising sea level.

We have to put in place these beach replenishment projects every year that costs us millions of dollars, and that is not going to work any more if the sea level continues to rise. This is not pie in the sky. This is real.

ADDRESSING IMPORTANT ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS), Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) is recognized for the balance of the time allocated to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues, and I think we have some interesting context that has been established here.

I would just take a moment to reference what my other colleague from Portland, the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN), talked about, that it is going to be 100 years or more before the full impact of actions that we take today will be felt, that we have set in motion a pattern of environmental destruction that will take decades and perhaps centuries to correct.

There is no time to waste, and it is not appropriate for us to continue pretending to do something about it by just reiterating the studies that have already been done. Most Americans agree with the scientific evidence that global warming is real and that we must, in fact, do something about it.

It is in this context that I must confess to being skeptical of the administration's proposal to meet the current energy crisis with a proposal to drill for oil in the Arctic Wildlife Refuge.

This issue beyond question, let us just put for a moment aside from the notion that whether or not it is going to be destructive for the environment, whether the environmental costs, whether the problems that would deal with the native indigenous culture, treaty problems and environmental problems with our friends in Canada, put all of those aside for a moment, assume that it is either they could be moderated or it would be worth it.

There is a fundamental question whether or not it is actually worth it to go ahead and pursue this approach for the energy security of the United States.

I was pleased recently to read the latest newsletters from the Rocky Mountain Institute where Amory and Hunter Levins asked that fundamental question, can you, in fact, make a profit over the course of the next 20 years by invading the Arctic Wildlife Refuge?

It is interesting that the State of Alaska herself has done its recent price forecasting that suggests that what the State of Alaska envisions as being the long-term price of oil over the course of the next 10 years, that it would not generate enough revenue to be profitable.

If we use our time and our resources to recover this expensive oil in some of the most environmentally sensitive areas in the world, it would actually end up resulting in a waste of money, and we would be importing more oil sooner, as opposed to dealing with less expensive energy alternatives.

Many would argue that another fundamental issue, and it is one that I agree, is whether this country can continue to use the current energy patterns that we have using six times as much energy per capita as the rest of the world, twice as much as developed countries like Japan and Germany. The irony is that conservation and energy efficiency does in fact work. It works better than an effort to exploit the Arctic Wildlife Reserve. It is estimated that a mere 3 miles per gallon improvement in the performance of SUVs would offset the oil production from the Arctic.

If, for some reason, we cannot change those huge and inefficient vehicles, just one half mile per gallon efficiency overall for the fleet would more than equal the production of the arctic wilderness itself.

This is not beyond our power. Last year, the average fleet efficiency of 24 miles per gallon was tied for a 20-year low. We can and we should do better.

In the Pacific Northwest, we are sending energy that we really do not have to spare to the State of California. Yet we find that there could be a 30 percent energy savings for reducing air conditioning just by changing the color of the roofs in southern California to white reflective surface. It would be far more effective for us to make that investment in conservation. When I started in this business 25 years ago, we were in the midst of an energy crisis. Even though many of those initiatives were reversed by the Reagan administration, conservation has nonetheless saved a quantity of energy that is four times the entire domestic electricity industry.

In the West, this is our only immediate solution. Given droughts and limited generating capacity, the only way this year that we will be able to make a difference is by changing our pattern of consumption. When we conserve, there is no threat from terrorists. There is no risk of environmental damage. It keeps producing year after year.

I must point out, perhaps most significantly when I hear on the floor of this Chamber people talking about protecting our strategic oil reserves, that if we place all of our bets on the Arctic Wildlife Refuge, we are, in fact, dooming the United States to a very insecure posture. If we are going to place all our bets on the one-mile long facility, a pipeline through the Arctic that is increasingly unreliable, that is wearing out, that is impossible to defend from disruption, from terrorists or rogue states or deranged people, it is not a very smart way to make those investments. Far better to deal with how we use energy in a more cost effective and efficient manner.

I have more comments to make on this, but I want to yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) for yielding to me and for taking this special order; and I also want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Clearly, the President has disappointed the Nation when he did an about-face and broke his promise to eliminate CO2 emissions, especially among the older power plants, oil and gas burning power plants in this Nation.

The suggestion has been made by some that it was okay to break this campaign promise because it was only one sentence in a long speech, it came late in the speech. I do not remember when any of us were running that our supporters told us it would be okay to break our promises if it was not the first thing we said in the speech or if it was the fifth thing we said in the speech, that they would not take it that seriously.

As my colleagues have pointed out here, the President made this statement about these controls in CO2, because he wanted to appear to the country to be concerned about the Nation's environment, and he wanted to appear to be more concerned than the Vice President Al Gore. That is why he made this promise. But the public thought he meant it. Now he has broken it.

Tragically, he has broken it because he is buying in to a very old idea that somehow America cannot clean up its environment and meet its energy needs, a false dichotomy, a fact that does not exist, that we know time and again is proven in everyday business life in this country, that companies all over the United States are doing exactly that. They are said to be increasing their efficiency. They are reducing their greenhouse emissions, and the country and the world are better off for that.

But this President apparently has a very old energy policy. It begins by dragging these old, old power plants, these dinosaurs from a past age, dragging them into the future and saying this is America’s energy policy.

It begins by trying to convince the public that somehow we can have oil independence, which is far different than what we should be doing. We can develop energy efficiency, and we can sustain energy in this country, and we can meet this Nation’s need. But that policy is very different than oil independence.

The first policy of energy sustainability and sufficiency for the needs of this country is achievable and in the national interest. The other one is not.

If we are really seeking to strengthen America’s hand with respect to energy and our economy, we should do all that is possible to develop a national sustainable energy policy that would minimize our dependence on foreign oil.

Very similar to the cocaine trade, if we are serious, we would make every effort to diminish the demand in the American market. If we are very serious about being independent from foreign oil supplies, then we must make every effort to diminish the demand in the American market.

Rather than placing so much of our emphasis on supplies, we would build a national energy policy that is based on the strengths of our country rather than its weakness. These strengths are the marketplace, innovation, technology, and the allocation of capital.

If these economic forces were truly unleashed to provide a national energy policy, the role of coal and oil would be greatly diminished, still very important, but diminished.

America’s energy policy would evolve to one in which production, decision-making, capital allocations, research commitments, and environmental policy would coincide to make business more efficient and productive, development of new products and services would expand, and the environment would be easier and less expensive to clean up. Such a policy demands a synergy that, for the most part, national energy policy to date is treated as a stepchild.

To do so, the Congress must stop thinking of the energy policy as an extension of the trade war. Rather, the Congress and the President must set the tools of the future free to create this new energy vision and reality.

Technology, science and the Internet have the ability to almost immediately and dramatically change the demand and the cost of America’s energy futures needs.

New materials, demand-side energy reductions, conservation, management, dramatically improved renewable energy sources, inventory management, business-to-business networks, transportation shipping efficiencies, more development of oil and gas, conservation opportunities in the three areas of transportation, lighting and heating and cooling, all will allow for us to develop a national energy policy that in fact provides for an enhanced economic and national security.

This is far different than a policy that only concerns itself with the production of oil and continuing to believe in an economy that is as large and dynamic as America that we can simply produce our way to energy independence.

No longer would our citizens have to worry every time that another leader in OPEC gets into domestic problems and seeks to solve his problems on the back of the American consumers and the economy.

No longer would this generation of Americans pass its energy and environmental failures on to the next generation where they become more difficult and expensive to solve.

That would be our energy policy. But the President has turned his back on that policy when he began with breaking his campaign promises to regulate CO2 emissions from older coal plants. Mr. BLUMENAUSER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the leadership of the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) dating back to the last time we were in a major energy crisis.

We are privileged to have join us the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY). I thank him for his concern and interest in issues that relate to the environment and the leadership he has provided individually and on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY).

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oregon for yielding me this time. I thank him and the gentleman from New Jersey for organizing this bill, and we could address an issue that is perhaps the most important that faces the economy of our country and the welfare of the American people over the course of the next decade.

We are increasingly alarmed about the statements that have been coming from the administration with regard to American energy policy and the steps that need to be taken to develop a coherent, comprehensive, safe energy policy that is going to maintain the strength of our economy and the welfare of our people.

For example, on Monday, Bush said that he saw “no short-term fixes to the country’s energy problem.” He also said “it is clear from first analysis that the demand for energy in the United States is increasing more so than its production. With the result, we are finding in certain parts of the country that are short on energy security, and this administration is concerned about it.”

Well, the administration may be concerned, but the two predicate statements before that are both incorrect. The current situation has no correlation whatsoever to energy production and supply and arises instead from what we have seen recently, and that is not the case.

In other words, allowing his friends in our country who maintain control over the energy supply system and the generation system have been gouging consumers and withholding capacity from the marketplace in order to drive prices.

Instead of a responsible energy policy that addresses these artificial shortages, the only plan the administration has come up with is to open up Alaska’s Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and other federally protected lands to oil and natural gas drilling.

What we have here in effect is the very convenient conflict of interests. What the President wants to do, in all likelihood with his oil production friends, is to open up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. At the same time, he is using the alleged shortage of energy to try to develop public support and public opinion in that direction. While he is doing that, he is allowing his friends in the oil industry to gouge consumers by dramatically increasing prices and withholding energy capacity from the market.

It is a very shocking circumstance, indeed. Let me just talk for another minute about the need to reduce the demand for oil and how that is key. Any serious energy plan must focus our efforts on reducing our demand for oil rather than on increasing our supplies, and the present administration seems determined to do.

The centerpiece of the administration’s energy plan is to drill for oil in Alaska’s Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. This move would simply be a gift to the oil companies that would do little, if anything, to affect our energy prices or our security.

The U.S. Geological Survey has estimated recently that the amount of oil that could be recovered from the Arctic Refuge would amount to less than a 6-month supply for American consumers. It will take 7 to 10 years for any oil from the Arctic Refuge to make its way to the market, and it would not even help many parts of our country.

For example, none of it would be shipped east of the Rocky Mountains; and no Alaska oil would ever be refined for use in the United States is increasing much more so than the production. With the result, we are finding in certain parts of the country that are short of energy security, and this administration is concerned about it.”

The Arctic Refuge is one of our national treasures. It deserves to be protected as wilderness, of course, not to spoil for a few months' worth of oil. Oil, as we know, is a global commodity; and its price will always be driven by world markets that are for the most part beyond our control.

The United States has only 2 percent of the world's oil reserves but generates about 25 percent of world demand while Gulf state OPEC members control about two-thirds of proven reserves we import for over half of our oil supplies. By 2015, this dependence is expected to increase to more than 68 percent.

It is quite clear that we are not going to meet our energy needs by drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. What we need is a policy of energy conservation, of renewable energy based upon solar or wind or other renewable sources, and we need to conserve.

We can produce much more energy in our country through conservation than we can by opening up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge or any other portion of the country that is not currently exploited. That is where our efforts need to go, in conservation.

I thank the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) very much for giving us the opportunity to make these points.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's argument and continued leadership.

It is my privilege in our remaining 2 minutes to turn to two final leaders that we have here. First, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH), a gentleman who has been active in providing leadership on energy issues as a local official, as a mayor, as a legislator, and now as a Member of Congress.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his leadership and for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachus- setts (Mr. KUCINICH) for his leadership and for his comments.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) for his leadership and for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachu- setts (Mr. KUCINICH) for his leadership and for his comments.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) having this Special Order today.

Of course we have had a stunning set of decisions which have been made by this administration just in the past week highlighted by the decision not to impose new standards on CO2 emissions, that is, the emissions that go into the atmosphere that are causing the greenhouse effect.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, I was privileged to be one of the representatives to the talks, the conference of parties, discussions, concerning the effect of global climate change. The talks took place in Buenos Aires, and I was one of the few Members of Congress who was privileged to attend and present views consistent with the discussion that is occurring on this floor.

There is concern all over the world about changes taking place in the global climate with individuals from some of the islands in the South Pacific who talk about how the sea level is starting to rise and it is affecting the properties on those islands.

We know that there are 2,500 scientists who have done studies in connection with the United Nations which have demonstrated that global climate change is a reality. I mean, any citizen of this country is aware that, in the last few years, we have seen extreme changes in our climate.

We have seen 100-year floods occur every few decades, if not every few years. We have seen tremendous heat waves which buckle freeways with their great heat intensity. We have seen unusual storms take place in areas which have been unaccustomed, hurricanes with much more intensity; tornadoes the same.

I mean, sooner or later, we come to an understanding that it is human activity which is beginning to create an overall change in the Earth's environment; and sooner or later, we have to come to an understanding that our responsibility here is not only in the present. It is not simply to stop certain interest groups moving forward, but our responsibility is to many generations forward so that people have a place to work out their own destiny on this planet.

So the survival of the planet is at stake here and the survival of the democratic tradition, because we have an obligation as citizens of democracy to address this issue in a forthright way and to do it with others who are concerned from around the world.

We have a moral responsibility to reduce emissions. Now, as of late, we are seeing assertions that somehow carbon dioxide is not a problem. The truth is, since the Industrial Revolution, the concentration of carbon dioxide has risen about 30 percent and is now higher than it has been in the last 400,000 years.

Humans have created this level of carbon dioxide that the Earth can no longer naturally absorb. So we are driving the rate of global warming, and we must take steps to reduce CO2 pollution. The United States is the greatest polluter.

Now, in spite of strong consensus around the scientific evidence, it seems that special interests are more influential. The recent pattern of environmental decisions are an ironic backdoor to the debate occurring right now on campaign finance reform. Before the interest groups have made their lobbying effort to prevent carbon dioxide regulations, we could all see the science as justifying greater efforts to control carbon emissions.

We know that Secretary O'Neill 3 years ago spoke of global warming significance as second only to nuclear conflagration. He even criticized the Kyoto Protocol as being too weak. We know that Administrator Christine Todd Whitman has spoken out strongly about putting limits on carbon dioxide emissions as part of a multi-pollutant strategy to curb emissions. Unfortunately, we are seeing another direction taken.

I would like to conclude by also, not only by pointing out how we are going the wrong way on carbon dioxide emissions and dealing with that, but, also, yesterday, as I said, the administration pulled arsenic regulations out of concerns about drinking water.

Now, this industry that is driving this is an industry that is more influential than studies from the National Academy of Science. And before the EPA was even created, arsenic was regulated. So we need to be very concerned.

I urge my colleagues and this administration to pay heed to the scientific evidence. Whether the issue is carbon dioxide or arsenic, there is a consensus around the issue; and that consensus is that scientific proof ought to be careful and measured.
and treatment facilities; 60 million cubic yards of gravel mined.

The other side, you have no development which is what we are saying. First, let us look at SUVs. First, let us look at buildings. First, let us make ourselves. First, let us use technology to cut OPEC down to size. They know that we are addicted to these vehicles that get 12 to 14 miles a gallon. We should not go to the Arctic wilderness first, we should go where we consume the energy.

36-YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF THE MARCH ACROSS ELMOND PETTUS BRIDGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KENNEDY). Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I take this time today, and I want to share some of my personal reflections. I want to express to the Speaker, the co-chair, my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON). We co-chair an organization, a group called Faith and Politics. It is truly a group that is bipartisan in nature. For the past few years, we have been engaging in what I call the dialogue on race. We have been taking Members of Congress, Republicans and Democrats, back on a journey, a journey of reconciliation, back to places in Alabama: Birmingham, Montgomery, and Selma.

Just a couple of days ago, on March 2, 3 and 4, we had an opportunity as a group to travel again, a learning experience for many of us, so I thought it would be fitting to come to the House floor this afternoon and talk for a few moments about what we saw, what we felt and what we came away with from this trip to Birmingham, to Montgomery, to Selma.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting and appropriate for us to have this dialogue today, this discussion, for today, exactly 36 years ago today, March 21, 1965, 2 weeks after Bloody Sunday, 700 of us, men and women, young children, elected officials, ministers, priests, rabbis, nuns, American citizens from all over the country, walked across the Edmund Pettus Bridge on our way from Selma to Montgomery to dramatize to the Nation and to the world that people of color wanted to register to vote.

I just think, just a few short years ago in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, it was almost impossible for people of color to register to vote. You had to pass a so-called literacy test in the States of Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. On one occasion, a black man was asked if he could drive the number of nibbles in a bar of soap. If you failed to cross a “t” or dot an “i,” maybe you misspelled a word, you flunked the so-called literacy test.

We have known, because of the action of the Congress and the leadership of a President, 36 years ago, and the involvement of hundreds and millions of our citizens, we have come the distance. And so tonight we want to talk about what has happened and the progress.

Mr. Speaker, I want to yield to my friend and my colleague, the co-chair of the board of Faith and Politics, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Houghton). Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, it is always an honor to be with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) whether we are on the House floor or in Selma or any place. I had a wonderful experience with the gentleman from Georgia; Ambassador Sheila Siyisulu; and Douglas Tanner, who is the president of the Faith and Politics organization in my part of the country, upstate New York; and it was fascinating talking about the gentleman’s reminiscences and experiences in Alabama, and also comparing those to Ambassador Siyisulu’s experiences in South Africa. It was absolutely great.

I have a couple of comments I would like to make tonight. First, Mr. Speaker, of my friend, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis), I would like to ask a question at the end of this. Let me make a comment or two if I could.

We had an extraordinary experience in Alabama with the parents and grandchildren, and it was a family affair because I wanted them to have the same sense that I did the first time I was down there of the enormity of this. We celebrate Washington’s birthday and Lincoln’s birthday and Labor Day, but this is a day we should put a fine point on because it did something to break us over a tidewater in this country which many of us did not feel at the time because we were not there. I was down there with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis), and he is all dressed up as he is today and he is handsome and he has a nice suit on and he speaks well and he is a very dignified individual. And yet I think back to that time 36, 37 years ago when the gentleman was that young, we, having been beaten and bloodied and representing all of the aspirations that we have for fairness and decency in our society, and we were not there. We wanted to be there, but we were not there; but the gentleman from Georgia was there.

I am a member of the World War II generation, and we are dying pretty rapidly. And someone said at the end of 2008 we will all be gone, but not so of the people who fought those battles in Selma, Birmingham, and Montgomery. You cannot listen, as you have heard me say so many times to this lovely lady, Betty Fikes, singing without understanding something about our country that one does not sense unless you sing the Star Spangled Banner or America the Beautiful. This is an extraordinary experience, and this is the lady who was singing in the time of the marching and the beatings and death and the tragedy down there. These people are all alive. And so to be able to go down there and experience that, be with them, knowing that they are alive and still giving their message, their testament, is always an extraordinary experience.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question, if I could. Those of us who have been on the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) in action and were with Betty Fikes and with Bernard Lafayette and with so many others, look back and see something which was an enormous change in our whole philosophy. But as we know now, it was only one incident in any one incident and it did not cure our sense of discrimination in this country, it only opened it up. So the question I ask of the gentleman from Georgia, what do we do next? What are those things that we must continue to do not only to honor this legacy but to fulfill our pioneering spirit and try to make this a better place.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his kind words, and let me try to respond to his kind question.

I notice several of my colleagues are here, and I want to give them an opportunity to say something. But any time we see racism, bigotry, see people discriminated against because of color of their skin, because of their race or national origin, because of their sex or sexual orientation, for whatever reason people are kept down or kept out, we have an obligation, all of us as citizens of America, to speak out and say something, to get in the way, to not be quiet.

When I was growing up, my mother used to tell me do not get in trouble. But as a young person I got in trouble, and I saw many young people getting in trouble by sitting down. President Kennedy once said back in 1960, by sitting down on those lunch counter stools, we were really standing up. So by marching for the right to vote 36 years ago, we were helping America something better. So from time to time, we all have to get in the way.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I advise the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) that I will yield to somebody on the gentleman’s side, and then I know that the gentlewoman from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON) wants to say something.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, let me recognize the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN).

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, earlier this month I was privileged to be one of 140 people of all walks of life, all ages, from all over the country and all over the world who joined the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis), the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. HILLIARD) in the Faith and Politics Institute on the fourth annual pilgrimage to Alabama.

I blocked out that weekend early in the year because I wanted to go, but I did not anticipate the depth of feelings and emotion that pilgrimage would evoke. Revisiting the history of the life-changing and Nation-changing events which occurred more than 40 years ago, it is an experience even now that I will never forget. Yes, we went to the different institutes, museums, the historical sites, but it was also having several of our leaders and an opportunity to spend a tumultuous time with us to inform and guide us which made it come alive.

As we walked through Kelly Ingram Park, prayed at the 16th Street Baptist Church, now a memorial to the four little girls killed by a bomb made not in an industrial plant but by explosives that were thrown, this weekend. One thing that I learned was the importance of the interwoven relationship of the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), the gentlewoman from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON), Bob Zelner, all of you and others who have ministered to us that week, the different institutes, museums, the historical sites, but it was also having several of our leaders and an opportunity to spend a tumultuous time with us to inform and guide us which made it come alive.

There are two or three things that I think the bottom line is, and one which I hope every single person who got from this wonderful experience, was that through the reflection, through repentance, through all of that is the recognition, I think, that comes, and it is what we are all working for, and that is reconciliation. The gentleman from Georgia how extraordinary it felt to meet with many others provided me the inspiration to work toward that goal. I could never thank him enough for giving me that opportunity.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Let me thank the gentleman for those kind and wonderful words. She added so much to the trip. We will always be grateful for her involvement.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the Democratic leader who made the trip to Alabama.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for his life, really, and his leadership and what he means to all of us. I want to hold Mr. Lewis in my heart, told him personally the other day how much I appreciated the work that he and his staff does to help the Faith and Politics Institute put on this weekend. This is the first time that I have had the chance to be with him. I have wanted to come and could not make it happen but was able to come this year. I want to thank all the Members, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), the gentlewoman from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHood), the Members who are here from our side who participated in this event. It was, in a word, moving to all of us to be part of this event. It was, in my view, one of the most important things that I have been able to do in my entire life. Because until you go to Selma and meet with some of your colleagues and hear the history of what happened and how it happened and what it meant in their lives and to see them still alive today and still fighting for these issues was truly moving.

There is no substitute for it. There is no way to read about it. There is no
Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. I thank the leader for those kind and extraordinary words. Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to yield time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD), who has been very active in Faith and Politics and has made these trips to Alabama.

Mr. LAHOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to come to the floor during this Special Order time to also pay special tribute to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS). My wife and I have had the privilege of attending two trips; and even though we did not attend the one this year, we were there last year and the year before last and had the extraordinary opportunity to experience a sort of living history of what took place during that time.

I know it must have been a thrill to go back to Selma this year and to maybe hug or greet the new mayor of Selma. I know the gentleman has been going back there for many years, but for me it was really a tremendous experience, and to really imbue in all of us the importance of how precious the right to vote really is for all of us.

I thank the gentleman for this Special Order and the chance to say a few words.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD), my friend and brother, thank you for all your good work and for being a supportive of Faith and Politics and making those trips to Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield to the gentleman from California (Mrs. CAPPS).

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the honorable gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I brought my pilgrimage book with me. I was hoping there would be this opportunity to have a Special Order. In a way it is a little bit like our pilgrimage can continue and can come even to life here in this place where we do our business, because that is actually what it was. It was a pilgrimage down into that countryside, to Montgomery, to Birmingham and to Selma and then to cross that bridge, and to do so with the leadership of one who was there, an esteemed Member of Congress, a leader here now.

A few decades ago the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) was 20, 21 years old, just a young boy, when he took upon himself that historic role. I see the gentleman with a different light now.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. The gentlewoman is making me a little younger, but I did have all my hair then.

Mrs. CAPPS. The gentleman was very brave to do what he did then, and that kind of bravery is rare.

I do not go on pilgrimages every day, and I do not see that kind of bravery around me very often, but I do see it here. To have the leadership of our colleagues, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), the Faith and Politics
Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Deacon Nesbitt was the deacon who brought Martin Luther King, Jr. to the church in Montgomery.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. In 1956. This is fascinating. This is the history. We have the photos from that very day. We have the photos of the buses; we have the photos from the church. This is the history that is still alive with us and our government.

We are so fortunate that some of that history is still alive with us and our government. I believe the leadership is called to this. I believe the leadership is called to the voting issue. It is an honor to represent our constituents, our constituents from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS], from Florida [Mr. MILLER], to participate in this Special Order. I thank the gentleman for what he has done, lead that effort.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS), so much for going on the trip and participating as a wonderful person on that trip and participating in this Special Order.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, let me express my thanks and appreciation to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS] for making this trip possible. This was indeed a very moving experience for me personally, as it was for all of us who participated in that unique weekend. It was a chance to, as people talked about, walk through history.

I kept asking myself that weekend, what was I doing back in those days? I was an undergraduate at the University of Florida in those days, just as a young guy enjoying the fraternity life and not thinking about it. But you would read things in the paper about what was going on, and you could tolerate that, I just do not know what I could do under those circumstances. So I commend the gentleman, and really my admiration and respect is for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS] for what he has done, leading in the non-violence effort. That was important, the gentleman's phase of it. Hearing Bernard talk about that too, how you learned to be non-violent. When people approached you with violence, and you could tolerate that, I just do not know what I could do under those circumstances.

So I commend the gentleman, and really my admiration and respect is great for you, because now I learned more about it. I thank the gentleman for giving me that opportunity. I really sincerely appreciate it. I will work to get more of my colleagues 2 years from now to participate when we have an opportunity like this.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman so much for participating as part of this trip to Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, I yield time to the gentleman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, and I would like to say to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER], who made a symbolic gesture, which we appreciate, because the gentleman is right, this is not partisan, this is really a coming together, and I want to thank the gentleman for his remarks and for his remarks about the experience.

I am a repeater, three-timer, and I appreciate very much the idea and the vision that came from Faith and Politics, but from the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUTHONG), to be able to cause us Members of Congress who legislate to stop for a moment to reinvigorate ourselves and really take to heart the reality of what we do every day, and that is that we work with laws on behalf of the people of the United States, because they have the privilege of voting for us, and we have the privilege of being elected and the privilege of serving.

So this particular pilgrimage to Selma is so special and, in particular, this year, because more than any other time in 2000, I think some of us felt that we were literally brought to our knees at a time that for many of our constituents was very troubling during the election, and there were a multitude of responses: anguish, anger, disappointment, despair. I do not know if we could have found our way if we had not had the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) to remind us in his eloquence, even during that time, to be grounded, to be strengthened by those who were strong enough in 1965 to persist for the right to vote.

Mr. Speaker, I know the story has been told many times, and I know there are others here, so I just want to quickly say, we all know that the gentleman tried on more than one occasion to gather himself and others to walk across the bridge and that it was not a time of lack of fear; and that when he walked, it was not that, oh, we know we are going to make it, he and Hosea Williams and the other throngs of individuals. It was not a frivolous walk.

The gentleman from Georgia worked for a long time to develop a sense of nonviolence, but as well the commitment to nonviolence. I think people need to understand that, that it was not a walk of lightness and that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) had to study and to adopt and to commit to himself that he would be nonviolent, and he walked across that bridge, the Edmund Pettus Bridge that will remain deep in our hearts, and it was a sacred violence. It took courage to go, it took courage to stand, it took courage to pray, and as well, it took courage to be able to come back again.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Georgia, in the time that he has taken us there, along with the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUTHONG), we have not just walked across a bridge, we have discovered each other and we have discovered a fulfillment of the fundamental right to vote under our Constitution and what it truly means to overcome.

I think with that, I would almost challenge each one of us that we can do that in this very House. We can really come together around issues that help those who cannot speak for themselves. I hope that this recounting of the Selma story, where Members on different sides of the aisle and different backgrounds, actually sat down and spoke to each other, and most importantly, I say to the gentleman, we heard each other, with testimonies and song, and to be able to touch and feel. Berlin, Lafayette, our eloquent speaker, to be able to be in the churches where there was some of the good cooking that was there during that time, to be hosted by the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. HILLIARD) and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACIU); to be able to sing the songs, I have never felt a deeper feeling by singing those songs. There is a certain way to sing them, and certainly we had them sung the right way.

So I would simply close by saying to the gentleman that I have been a repeater three, I expect to be a repeater again, but I expect, hopefully, to, more importantly, as I see many of the youngsters who are here for their spring break, soaking up democracy and soaking up our process, I hope they have an opportunity to know that we do other things, commemorate and commend that march on Selma, that bloody Sunday that generated the Voter Rights Act of 1965. As we move toward electoral reform, let no one be ashamed of what happened as much as what does not happen. Let us fight the system, and make it right in tribute to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), our hero, along with so many others, that we reinforce the right to vote and the value of democracy in this Nation.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE). I thank her so much for participating, and not only on the march, the journey of reconciliation, the dialogue, but for participating in Special Order today. I thank the gentlewoman for her leadership.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield time to the gentlewoman from the State of California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished and courageous gentleman from Georgia for yielding and for organizing this Special Order, and for also leading one of the most memorable journeys of my lifetime.

Let me take a moment to convey my deepest gratitude to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) for his sacrifices, his leadership, and for his tolerance, which he has demonstrated throughout his life as he fought and as he continues to fight for freedom and for justice. I also want to thank the people of Alabama for their heroic and their noble struggles, for I know for a fact that because of their blood, sweat, and tears, I am here today serving as a Member of Congress.

Now, during our visit to Birmingham, Montgomery, and Selma, we talked about where we were during those tumultuous times. Some felt guilty, but everyone felt gratitude. But I would dare to say that all of us felt galvanized to redouble our efforts for equality and justice and realize just how important we are as Members of Congress, for we actually have a second time and a third time to make a difference in the lives of people in this millennium.

This pilgrimage was very personal for many of us. For example, the lady visited the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church where four young and beautiful African-American children died as a result of a ruthless bombing or touring the National Voting Rights Museum in Selma or marching across the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma. I was reminded of my childhood in Texas where I was forced to drink out of the colored-only water fountain or not allowed to go to movie houses or my dad, dressed in his military uniform, with his family, being told that he could not sit at the same table at all of these places. These beautiful memories surfaced, experiences which I seldom talk about. But for me, I say to the gentleman, this visit provided really some breakthroughs personally; and I thank him for that.

Now, as we toured Rosa Parks Museum and Library and during our visit to the Dexter Avenue King Memorial Baptist Church where Dr. King served as pastor, and during our moments at the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, while we were at Brown Chapel AME Church, I was reminded of the unfinished business of Dr. Martin Luther King and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) and all of those who shed their blood for the right to vote. Of course, I was reminded of thousands of African Americans and others who were disenfranchised in the recent elections. During our visit to Alabama, several people told me, now I understand why the Members of Congresional Black Caucus protested the ratification of the Electoral College vote and walked off the floor of Congress. Our pilgrimage to Alabama certainly provided additional inspiration to work on electoral reform so that never again will the lives and legacy of those known and unknown be denigrated by denying the people the right to vote.

Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize the importance of educating young people about the civil rights movement. Many young people of color, and many African Americans really do believe that integration always was, that the right to vote always was. The history of the civil and human rights movement has all but been ignored in American history books. Many young people believe that the ability to sit anywhere on the bus or to eat at a lunch counter just always was. Many young people believe that riding on any car on a train instead of the colored-only car just always was. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Faith and Politics mission to Alabama reminded us of times passed and that we owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), Dr. Martin Luther King, Rosa Parks, and all of those heroes who made it possible for people like me to pick up the baton and fight to end institutional racism, unequal education, universal health care, to fight for the right to vote, for a clean housing, for a clean environment, a livable wage, and to fight for people who have been left out of this economic prosperity.

In closing, let me just encourage each and every Member of Congress to participate in this magnificent pilgrimage. It is really a privilege and an honor to be able to meet with men and women and break bread with them, those men and women who were on the front lines, taking bold risks to make America a better place. It was because of them that democracy was actually forced to confront and address its contradictions.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia. I want to thank all of those with the Faith and Politics Institute for really putting this together. I hope that everyone in this body and all of our young people can benefit from the great work that the gentleman is doing. And certainly, I have benefited from the struggle which took place during that time.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Congresswoman BARBARA LEE, I want to thank you for going on the trip and for participating in this Special Order.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield time to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), our colleague and friend.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ETHERIDGE). Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I thank the gentleman from Georgia, or really my dear friend, Georgia. It was the honor of my life to be in his native home State and for the opportunity for me and my son, who is a school teacher, to go and visit. Let me tell the gentleman what came as the result of it.

My son taught third grade and is now working with children who really have deficiencies in reading and math, who are trying to get to grade level. As the gentleman knows, he took a lot of time and effort trying as the black folks had, but did not take it. They had just as little school back then, but they did not have to go through the footprints for their courage of nonviolence. After I was about to take. I do not know the answer to that.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON), my colleague and my friend.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by just acknowledging the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) and the gentleman’s place in history. Sometimes we are here working with you every day, and we do not appreciate how much you mean to all of us and to our country.

Mr. Speaker, I suppose today that there are a couple of people in this country who are living now who played a more significant role perhaps than the gentleman did in the civil rights movement, but only maybe one or two, maybe not that many.

It is just that small a group that made this huge difference for all of us, and it is important to acknowledge that and to thank the gentleman and to tell all the Members who serve with us every day that we serve with a very special Member, with a very special man who, not only in this country but around the world, who is known for the things the gentleman has done to make human rights real for people and to inspire others around the world to fight for human rights.

I thank the gentleman for being our colleague and our friend and for permitting us to be with the gentleman on this pilgrimage.

Let me say, when the gentleman was starting out, I was a little younger than the gentleman. I was probably about 11 years old back then, living in a place called Lake Providence, Louisiana, in the northeastern part of the State in the Mississippi Delta, though. I know that the gentleman knows how tough it was back then.

It was the things the gentleman recounts in his book, Walking With the Wind, are things that I went through as a young boy as well.

I remember when my mother and others in our family were trying hard to get the right to vote and to pass a literacy test. When my mother finally got this done in 1926, she was only one of five people in our parish to have the right to vote. I remember her trying to teach other people in our little living room how to recite the preamble to the Constitution, how to recite the Presidents in order from 1 to 20 or so, and how to compute their ages, the year, the month and the day.

They struggled with these things, as would the whites in that area. And back then, but they did not have to take it. They had just as little schooling as the black folks had, but did not have to take the test.

I remember when in 1966 the Federal courts came to take after the passage of the Voting Rights Act.

In 1966, there was a line formed around the little courthouse a lot like you might have seen in the pictures in South Africa, a long line of folks in our little town. And the stories told by my mother who was up there watching this line and had a fellow named Vaughn, Henry Vaughn, I remember his name, who came to that line and said to my mother and her friends and to Reverend Scott, who was then our local civil rights leader, Reverend Scott, why are all your folks lined up like this? There is not a one of them who is fit to hold an office. Who you all going to put in? Reverend Scott said, I do not know who we are going to put in, but there are some folks we want to take out.

There is a power in the vote that went to those folks that never had it before. Mr. Vaughn approached them because they would have the power to vote. It is a power that none of us ought to take for granted, that none of us ought to diminish in the way we treat it, that all of us ought to embrace at this point in our lives and remember those shoulders on which we stood back in those days.

There is a book, I say to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis), that says But For Birmingham, if they commit themselves. I am grateful to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) for it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) at the very end, we came back here from the gentleman’s trip to hear remarks that Senator BYRD had made and indirect comments that he had made on a television program, and all of us were in an uproar about it, but I saw it in a different paradigm, because of my trip with the gentleman, honest to goodness I thought about what the gentleman said when the gentleman talked about nonviolence being more than a tactic but a way of life, and the fact that the part of the movement was not just to win the struggle but to redeem those values, those among those who were the enemies of the right to vote, the enemies of freedom.

I felt that I should approach that in a different spirit, and it was all because of the gentleman’s teaching that everybody has the opportunity to love and the community, about the value of nonviolence and about how we ought to internalize how we dealt with other people. I called to him about what he had said in a way very different from the way I would have had I not gone with the gentleman. There is some strength, tremendous strength, in the nonviolence movement that comes, as the gentleman said, from the inside out.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for teaching me that, and I thank the gentleman for serving with me as a colleague. I thank the gentleman for allowing me to come on the trip. It is a life-changing experience, and I thank the gentleman for that.

Mr. McGovern. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Jefferson), my friend and my colleague, for that kind and extraordinary words. I think we all can come together and help build up a loving community and really help build the truly interracial democracy in America.

We are really one family. We are one house, the American house, the American family or the world house or the world family.

Mr. McGovern. Mr. Speaker, I want to just say a few words here.

Mr. Speaker, first, I want to say that I am grateful to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis), my colleague, and to the Faith and Politics Institute for giving me and my wife, Lisa, the opportunity to not only learn more about the great struggle for civil rights in this country but to be inspired to do more right now to make this country an even better country, to have this experience, to be there with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) and Reverend Fred Shuttlesworth, and Bernad Lafayette and Bob Zelner and Betty Fikes, all giants in the movement, was a real privilege.

I would add that I have never heard a voice sing more beautifully than Betty Fikes.

We have had the opportunity to walk through history and to retrace the steps of Martin Luther King, of Rosa Parks, of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis) and Reverend Fred Shuttlesworth, but we also had the opportunity to reflect on our current challenges in this country.

I think we all agree that we still have a long way to go before we achieve the dream that Martin Luther King spoke so passionately about. As Members of Congress, I think we need to realize that we need to act. We need to do more to fight racism and bigotry and prejudice in this country. We need to ensure voting rights in this country, and we need to do that through more than just rhetoric.

We need to pass legislation for real election reform here in this country. We need to fight to make sure that every child has the opportunity for a first-rate education. We need to make sure that everybody in this country gets health care. We need to make sure that there is funding existing in the Department of Justice to enforce our civil rights laws.

We have a long way to go, and I want to thank my colleague from Georgia for giving my wife, Lisa, and I the great privilege to not only travel with the gentleman but to learn and to be inspired. So I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, let me just thank the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. McGovern), my friend and colleague, my brother, and thank the gentleman and his wife for making the trip. It is my hope and my prayer that we will continue, all of us, to work together to make real the very essence of our democracy, the idea of one person, one vote, not only that people must have a right to vote but also have their vote counted.

THIRTY-SIX YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF MARCH ACROSS EDMUND EDWARD PETTUS BRIDGE

Ms. Carson of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The Speaker pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. Carson) is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

THIRTY-SIX YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF MARCH ACROSS EDMUND EDWARD PETTUS BRIDGE

The Speaker pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. McGovern) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McGovern. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Jefferson).

Mr. Jefferson. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Lewis). brought the name of Dr. Martin Luther King to the ears and eyes of America. While Rosa Parks just sat there, the whole world stood up.

Let me end, Mr. Speaker, by reminding us that, in order to have harmony in this world, there has to be harmony between the black and the white. That is why the creators of the piano made both black and white keys, one tune cannot be harmonious without the other.

As we move forward and we have resistance in this country and in this world now toward equal opportunity, toward affirmative action, toward Americans with disabilities, toward women who seek medical assistance despite their economic circumstances, lest we forget that this is supposed to be one Nation under God, with liberty and justice for all people, not just in the preamble, not just in some written script, but in the spirit of liberty for everybody.

I want to close, Mr. Speaker, by again giving my heart-felt gratitude to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), who is from what used to be the sovereign State of Alabama. I am from what used to be the sovereign State of Indiana, for all of the sacrifices that he made and those who were with him and those who followed after him that paved the way for many of us.

ADJOURNMENT
Ms. PELOSI, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable GEORGE ALLEN, a Senator from the State of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, You have told us that if we, as branches, are connected to You, the Vine of virtue, our lives will emulate Your character. We dedicate this day to live as branches for the flow of Your spirit. We admit that apart from You, we can accomplish nothing of lasting significance. We ask that the Senators and all of us who work with them may be distinguished for the fruit of Your spirit, a cluster of divinely inspired, imputed, and induced traits of Your nature reproduced in us.

Your love encourages us and gives us security; Your joy uplifts us and gives us exuberance; Your peace floods our hearts with serenity; Your patience calms our agitation over difficult people and pressured schedules; Your kind- ness enables us to deal with our own and other people's shortcomings; Your goodness challenges us to make a renewed commitment to absolute integ- rity; Your faithfulness produces trust-worthiness that makes us dependable; Your gentleness reveals the might of true meekness that humbly draws on Your power; Your Lordship gives us self-control because we have accepted Your control of our lives. You are the mighty God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Jesus Christ. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable GEORGE ALLEN led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

I thank my colleagues for their attention.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I am happy to yield. Mr. REID. Mr. President, through my friend from Vermont, I ask the Chair, if all time is used on the Torricelli amendment—he spoke for a short time last night—what time would the vote occur?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Approximately 12:20 p.m.

Mr. REID. I thank the Chair.

BIPARTISAN CAMPAIGN REFORM ACT OF 2001

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 27, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 27) to amend the Federal Election Act of 1971 to provide bipartisan campaign reform.

Pending:

Torricelli amendment No. 122, to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to require television broadcast stations, and providers of cable or satellite television service, to provide lowest unit rate to committees of political parties purchasing time on behalf of candidates.

AMENDMENT NO. 122

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of the Torricelli amendment No. 122.

The Senator from New Jersey, Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, the Senate now turns its attention to what is the other half of the campaign finance problem. It is, after all, not simply what is raised but why money is raised and where it is going.

This Senate, for 5 years, has had to overcome four filibusters to get us to this moment in considering campaign finance reform. We have voted on 113 occasions to reform the campaign finance laws. We have considered 300... pieces of legislation, heard 3,000 speeches, and filled 6,000 pages of the Congressional Record. But none of this will mean anything, this legislation will accomplish no more than leading to a less informed public with less political money. If we do not implement the reduction in fundraising with more availability of information by reducing the cost.

The McCain-Feingold legislation, as written, will not abate the expense of running for political office. It could, if not amended, simply lead to an American public, as Senator Mcconnell has said many times, that is less informed with less political speech. I know no one in the country who believes that is the kind of reform we genuinely seek.

The Alliance for Better Campaigns recently stated:

Reform must do more than limit the supply of political money. It must also restrain the demand.

There is a perception in the media and in the public that the entire problem of campaign financing is the amount of money. That is a problem, but it is not the only problem. Members of the House of Representatives are taken away from their legislative responsibilities, not meeting with ordinary citizens, to cater to the wealthy to gain access to this money.

On the chart on my left, I have taken a State at random, New Jersey, and given an indication of what it takes in time to run what all future Senate campaigns in New Jersey probably will cost—a minimum of $15 million. This would require, under current campaign finance laws, raising $20,833 everyday for 7 days a week for 2 years, or 150 fundraising events, each raising $100,000, or 1,500 events at $10,000 per event, 1,500 fundraisers at $10,000.

We can make it more difficult to raise the money. We can eliminate soft money. The question remains: Are we simply transferring the burden of how much time candidates must spend doing that? If we are eliminating categories of money, making it more difficult to get the $15 million, all we could be doing is adding to the time which candidates must spend finding it. That will not be an achievement. That is why today we are dealing with the other half of the equation—not what is raised but how much is spent. "The Today's political campaigns function as collection agencies for broadcasters. You simply transfer money from contributors to television stations.

During the 2000 elections, the broadcast newscasts were profitable. The placing of political advertisements on the networks is not a public service. They do not do this under duress. It is a major form of network profits. It is estimated to be at least $770 million and, indeed, figures could be as high as $1 billion that was spent by candidates on political advertisements—a 76-percent increase over 1996.

The chart on my left illustrates the rapid increase. President mid-term spending, in 1982, adjusted for inflation, was $200 million; in the year 2000, now reaching $800 million. It is an exponential increase that is unsustainable.

In Philadelphia and New York City, the two media networks which serve my State of New Jersey, the cost of some political ads increased almost 50 percent between Labor Day and election day. This is a television station—a captive market and they take full selling advertising. The law at the lowest unit rate. For 78 percent they were charging commercial rates to Federal candidates for public office. There are stations that are better. The chart illustrates that virtually in every market in the country, large and small, rural and urban, the responsibilities are not being met.

In Los Angeles, KABC—once again, an affiliate owned by the network itself—34 percent of all advertisements are being sold at commercial rates. In Columbus, OH, it is 90 percent. At KYW, one of the most popular stations in Philadelphia, it is 88 percent. At WXYZ in Detroit, it is 88 percent sold at commercial rates.

My colleagues, the law as you intended it, to require lowest unit rate sales of advertising, has collapsed. It is not happening. Broadcasters are auctioning advertising time to Federal candidates in competition with the industries of America. Any candidate is facing the prospect of a bidding war with General Motors or Ford or IBM to get the ads in the television network. The law is simply not functioning.

Similar patterns, as I have demonstrated, are all over the country. To quote the Alliance for Better Campaigns once again, "while this law remains on the books, its original intent is no longer served."

The other part of this equation is not simply that there is price gouging of candidates by taking advantage of a loophole in the lowest unit rate, but, almost incredibly and simultaneously, the broadcasters are violating another responsibility. One responsibility is the lowest unit rate to allow advertising, not to increase the cost of campaigns and increase fundraising responsibilities and burdens; the other is to provide news coverage. These, my colleagues, after all, are the public airwaves, licensed by the Federal Government for the interest of the American people to provide their diverse needs. The Federal airwaves are not to be used entirely for sitcoms and cartoons, or to sell soap or automobiles. There is a public responsibility.

I am going to show the difference between what is going on in advertising and news coverage. As you can see on this chart, those ads sold at the unit rate are flat. The red line shows that almost all advertising is going on to the non-unit rate or commercial rate of advertising.

We will move on to the news coverage. Now, remembering how the advertising was increasing at commercial costs, exponentially the chart was rising to the top. Consider this, remembering the top responsibilities to be selling at lowest unit rate and providing news coverage in the public interest.

In Philadelphia, during the New Jersey Senate primary—remembering there was no incumbent—we were choosing the U.S. Senator for New Jersey, during a Presidential election, the final 2 weeks of the campaign. In Philadelphia, this is the amount of news coverage in the final 14 days of the election: WPVI in Philadelphia, an average of 23 seconds per evening; WVAU, in the public interest, on a federally licensed station, dedicated an average of 1 second per night to informing their viewers on the Senate campaign in its closing days. In New York, the situation was not very much different. WNBC—once again, a network-owned-and-operated affiliate, not some arm's length operating station, but NBC's own station in New York, in the final 2 weeks of the campaign—gave 7 minutes to covering the primary. At WCBS in New York, an average of 10 seconds was given to covering this.

As Robert McChesney wrote in Rich Media, Poor Democracy:

"Broadcasters have little incentive to cover candidates, because it is in their interest to force them to publicize their campaigns."

Exactly. Why would anyone provide free coverage in the public interest in hard news when, alternatively, candidates must pay millions of dollars to the stations themselves to get their message across? There is a disincentive to provide news because people have to pay for it.

The Brennan Center reports that, indeed, in the 30 days preceding the November elections, the national broadcasters averaged about 1 minute per night—1 minute—in substantive campaign coverage.

Rather than a discussion of substantive issues, the broadcast networks covered the campaign 2000 primarily as a horse race. Only one in four network news stations aired stories that were, indeed, issue oriented.

The chart on my left makes this comparison: what is happening in advertising in which candidates are now paying nearly a billion dollars, and what is happening in news coverage as required by Federal licenses. These are the top four rated TV stations in Philadelphia.

Overall, a viewer in the State of New Jersey is 10 times more likely to see a paid political advertisement—10 times—than they are ever to see a news story, excepting that most of those news stories are about horse races, and are not news anyway.

Conceding they really are news, let's operate on the fiction they were putting news on the air. Nevertheless, one would be 10 times more likely to see a political advertisement.

Here are examples in Philadelphia: WPVI, 122 advertisements ran between May 24 and June 5. The number of news stories was 11. WNBC in New York, 99 advertisements, 15 news stories. The fact is, news coverage has reached an all-time low. Just as the networks are evading their responsibility for the lowest unit cost under the law, they are also avoiding their responsibility to provide hard news.

During recent summer political conventions for Democrats and Republicans, ABC, CBS, and NBC reduced by two-thirds the hours they devoted to convention coverage of 1988, the last time there was an open seat Presidential election.

Broadcasters are in many respects public trustees. They should not be putting the public airwaves out to bid when political candidates want to communicate with their constituents. They receive their licenses by meeting FCC requirements under the 1934 Communications Act in the public interest. The law makes clear that the airwaves are public property and that they must be used for the "public interest, convenience, and necessity."

Indeed, perhaps maybe this Congress deserves some of the blame. In 1997, the Congress gave broadcasters digital TV licenses which doubled the amount of spectrum. If sold at auction, it would have brought in $70 billion. William Safire wrote:

"A rip-off on a scale vaster than had long been dreamed... by the robber barons."

Bob Dole called it "a giant corporate welfare scheme."

What all this has meant is broadcasters taking advantage of this new technology without any new responsibility, and we have allowed this situation to deteriorate to the point of a billion-dollar campaigns putting enormous burdens of time and money on the political system. That is, in my judgment, unsustainable.

In response to this gift of public assets, President Clinton appointed an advisory panel to update the public interest obligation of broadcasters. The panel broadcasters, to voluntarily air 5 minutes a night in the 30 days before the election. During the 2000 elections, local affiliates of NBC and CBS agreed to the 5 minutes. Although these stations should be commended, they and other stations made similar decisions representing 70 percent of the 1,300 local stations. Shockingly, ABC, which was the second oldest and most beneficial of political advertisement last year, did not make any commitment at all. The refusal of ABC to join other broadcast networks was the broadest step toward further corporate irresponsibility.

In sum, what must all this mean is that contrary to law and the national interest, the broadcasters have now developed a dependency on political advertising. As the chart on my left illustrates, this is now the source of revenues of television stations and networks, gaining 25 percent of all of their revenue from the automobile companies, the largest industry in America; 15 percent from retailers across the country; and, unbelievably, 10 percent of all revenues of all local stations is now coming from political advertising.

If this, however, were a chart of Iowa or New Hampshire or early primary States, we would find during the Presidential elections that it is not third but first.

Even taking the network's greatest advantage of looking at this nationally, it is clear television stations have developed a dependency—indeed, an addiction—on political advertising. That is clearly not in the national interest.

What should, however, gain the attention of the American people is the almost unbelievable hypocrisy of the Congress on this. This American people have joined the fight for campaign finance reform by criticizing the current finance system, and we welcome their assistance. If there is to be genuine reform, we are glad the voices of the networks have been part of the drumbeat of criticism to bring this Congress to a change. They want change. They just do not want to be part of it, recognizing there is a reason this money is being raised, and they are the principal reason.

Outside this Chamber, today the National Association of Broadcasters will have its lobbyists attempting to convince Members they should not bear any responsibility and they should be able to evade the current law and charge commercial rates for their $1 billion in political advertising. Indeed, since 1996, the National Association of Broadcasters has spent $19 million. While the network broadcasters are convincing the American people to change the political system, their lobbyists are in the hall spending millions of dollars in lobbying time convincing people not to lower costs, do not raise money, but keep spending it on us.

From 1996 through 1998, the National Association of Broadcasters and five media outlets together spent $11 million to defeat 12 campaign finance bills that would have, if implemented, reduced the cost of broadcasting for candidates.

Time's up. You wanted campaign finance reform and you were right, the system should be changed, but you miscalculated because you are going to be part of that reform.

On a bipartisan basis, this Senate is going to vote today to implement a law which we intended a long time ago. These are public airwaves. There will not be price gouging for candidates for Federal office. This time will be sold at the lowest unit rate as was always our intention.

Under the Torricelli-Corzine-Durban-Dorgan amendment we are going to bring the letter of the law back in line with the spirit of the law.

Our intention is very simple: One, require broadcasters to charge candidates and political parties the lowest rate offered throughout the year. Therefore, the gouging that takes place because the networks know that we must advertise between Labor Day and election day will end. They will base these prices on the lowest rate throughout the year.

Second, ensure that candidate and party ads cannot be bumped, displaced, by other advertisers willing to pay more for the air time. Simply stated, to avoid the problem, as in the letter I indicated in television stations, where a candidate for public office attempting to communicate with their constituent is told that General Motors is willing to pay more for the same spot; therefore, either you pay what they will pay or your advertisement will run in the dead of the night.

Three, require the FCC to conduct random checks during the pre-election period to ensure compliance with the law. In 1990, Senator Danforth of Missouri requested a similar audit by the FCC and for the first time revealed the extent to which broadcasters were not charging candidates the lowest unit rate. Although the crackdown resulted in a temporary dip in rates as broadcasters followed the law more closely, recognizing the FCC controlled licenses, as soon as the study was finished, the monitoring was over, rates went up again, and the law was violated. This time we will monitor it, but we will monitor it permanently.

Savings that will result from this amendment are extraordinary, as is the ability to change the national political culture of the fundraiser, reducing costs, resulting in reduced fundraising. This is a great opportunity. I do not know how many of this Congress who wouldn’t rather spend their time legislating than raising funds. I don’t know a Member of this Congress who wouldn’t prefer to be at home on the weekends with their family or constituents, rather than traveling around the Nation raising funds. This isn’t something that anybody enjoys. There is an endless spiral of fundraising that is out of control, but it will not be stopped simply by eliminating soft money or making it more difficult to raise it. The law that we will find money within the law under some system unless we address the question of costs. In the modern political age, the cost of a campaign is easily defined. It is television. This is a network-driven process. And it can change.

My final chart illustrates the difference in running political campaigns in three jurisdictions. If the Torricelli-Corzine-Durban-Dorgan amendment is adopted, the cost of running advertising in Los Angeles, the second most expensive media market in the country, would be a 75-percent difference by applying the lowest unit rate; in Denver, 41 percent; in AL, an incredible 400-percent difference.

This goes to the heart of the problem. We are simply requiring what was asked a long time ago. We do not do this to an industry that is struggling. This broadcast industry is making record profits by using Federal licenses with new technology that has been given without cost. Now, my friends, it is time to ask them to meet their responsibilities.

A new campaign finance system in America will require responsibilities and sacrifices by many people—certainly by every Member of Congress. This amendment will welcome the broadcasters into a new responsibility in being part of the answer to the problem rather than the core of the problem itself.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fitzgerald). Who yields time?

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my esteemed colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey and a number of other colleagues in offering this amendment to reduce the exploding costs of political advertisements on the airwaves. As Senator Torricelli has articulated and effectively demonstrated, this amendment would guarantee that candidate advertisements are not preempted by more favored, high-spending advertisers and that candidates are given the lowest available rate for the reserved time.

Mr. President, campaigns do cost too much. God knows, I know. To communicate with voters, at least in large States like New Jersey with multiple and expensive media markets, candidates use television time. And television is very expensive. My campaign was charged as much as $55,000 for one 30-second spot alone in the weeks directly preceding the election. Others actually paid more.

When I began my run for the Senate, I was generally unknown to the community at-large. I had enjoyed a successful business career, which I thought would make a contribution to the Senate, the Nation, and my community. But virtually no one in New Jersey knew who I was or, more importantly, most certainly will guarantee failure, particularly for challengers and newcomers who might bring different issues, the only option is to purchase time from the high priced, out-of-State broadcasters in our case. The end result is the candidates, especially challengers, those who have not previously held public office, must grapple with hugely expensive media costs to stand a chance.

Let me be clear. Media exposure does not guarantee success. A bankrupt message will lose, despite a well-funded media campaign. I don’t buy the argument you can buy an election. There are many examples of candidates who have spent significant amounts of money, only to lose. People who argue you can buy elections, in my view, underestimate the ability and the judgment of the voters. Still, while adequate exposure can clearly is not sufficient to generate success, lack of exposure for many candidates almost certainly will guarantee failure, again, particularly for challengers and newcomers who might bring different issues, the only option is to purchase time from the high priced, out-of-State broadcasters in our case. The end result is the candidates, especially challengers, those who have not previously held public office, must grapple with hugely expensive media costs to stand a chance.

commercials and broadcast them at a later time—in the case in New Jersey and Philadelphia markets, maybe at 3 a.m., as opposed to prime time. To guarantee that an advertisement is shown at a particular time, candidates are forced to pay premium rates. These premiums increased the price of on-air time dramatically.

Not long ago, the Alliance for Better Campaigns issued a report entitled “Gouging Democracy.” I add to what I have presented that the executive summary of this report will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Local television stations across the country systematically gouged candidates in the closing months of the 2000 campaign, jacking up the prices of their ads to levels that were far above the lowest candidate rates listed on the stations’ own rate cards. They did so despite a 30-year-old federal law designed to protect candidates from such demand-driven price increases. The law’s apparent purpose: break the law; rather, they exploited loopholes in a law that has never worked as intended. In 2000, this so-called “lowest unit charge” rate pegged for candidates was overrun by the selling practices of stations, the buying demands of candidates, the sharp rise in issue advocacy advertising and the unprecedented flow of hard and soft money into political campaigns.

As a result, political advertisers spent five times more on broadcast television ads in 2000 than they did in 1992. That is up from $375 million to almost $1.8 billion, or more than double the inflation-adjusted figure.

An Explosion of Issue Advocacy Ads

The increased cost of television advertising was due to rising costs in the marketplace as well as to the flood of soft money into politics. Candidates who can pay were not able to obtain access to the airwaves. Some stations refused to sell air time to down-ballot state and local candidates. These candidates are entitled to lower ad rates than issue groups and parties, but, unlike candidates for federal office, they are not guaranteed access to paid ad time.

Political Ad Sales Were At Least $771 Million

In the final months of the campaign, the top 135 media markets took in at least $771 million from Jan. 1 to Nov. 7, 2000, from the sale of more than 1.2 million political ads, almost double their 1996 take of $381 million.

Where the Money Goes . . .

By David S. Broder

The Sunday television talk shows were focused on campaign finance reform, but the major political force that TV itself is at the heart of the problem. The same subject is conspicuous by its absence in the campaign finance debate now underway in Washington. Voters I’ve interviewed seem to think this money goes into the coffers of the political parties or into the pockets of the politicians. In fact, the parties and the candidates are the middlemen in this process, writing checks as fast as the contributions arrive.

Many of the checks go to broadcasters for the first second ads that were purchased in the last weeks of a campaign, fill the screen during the breaks in local news shows and popular prime-time series. A report earlier this month from the Alliance for Better Campaigns, a bipartisan public interest group critical of the broadcast industry, said that “stations in the top 75 media markets took in at least $771 million . . . from the sale of more than 1.2 million political ads’ last year. If the figures for stations in the 135 smaller markets were added, it’s estimated that the total take probably would be counted at $1 billion.

That reality is being ignored as senators debate campaign finance reform. It has a common feature—reducing the flow of contributions that pay the campaign television

To avoid having campaign ads preempted, candidates are forced to pay prices above the lowest unit cost. Some 78 percent of the political ads on WNBC, a New York network affiliate—one of the prime spots for placing your ads in the New York media market—were purchased for more than the lowest published candidate rate for those timeslots in the fall of 2000. You will see here: WNBC—78 percent.

So we compare it equally with Philadelphia, where you also have to run in New Jersey, and 91 percent of the ads were sold at or above those lowest unit costs.

It is critical to remember that the public owns the airwaves. They are licensed to broadcasters but they belong to all of us. They are a public trust, gifted to the broadcasters for commercial use.

The Television Bureau of Advertising, based on estimates supplied by CMR MediaWatch, estimates that ad revenues for the broadcast television stations in 1999 exceeded $36 billion. Seemingly, the public spectrum has proved profitable for the television broadcasters: $36 billion. Consequently, it is not unreasonable to ask the broadcasters to set aside some of the political ad revenues so candidates can communicate with the voters.

An article by David Broder appearing in yesterday’s Washington Post drives home the underlying motivation for this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, March 20, 2001]
bills. Common sense tells you that if the TV bill remains that exorbitant, politicians will continue the “money chase” under any rules that are in place.

But that fact is suppressed in Senate debate for the same reason it was ignored on the TV talk shows: fear of antagonizing the station owners, who control what gets on the air.

The influence that broadcasters exercise in their home markets is reflected in the power their lobbyists wield in Washington. That is the main reason the major proposals before the Senate—one sponsored by Sens. John McCain and Russ Feingold and the other crafted by Hagel—have provisions aimed at reducing the TV charges. In stead, they focus on the high-dollar “soft money” contributions to the political parties. McCain and Feingold would eliminate them; Hagel would limit their size.

The soft-money exemption from the contribution limits that apply to other gifts to candidates and parties was created in order to finance such grassroots activity as voter registration and Election Day turnout. But now most of the soft money is converted into TV issue ads, indistinguishable for all practical purposes from the candidates’ electioneering messages.

The National Association of Broadcasters denies the Alliance for Better Campaigns’ charge of price “gouging” in the last campaign. But there are no discounts for issue ads; the only price the market will bear. And the heavy volume of issue ads drove up the cost for all TV spots in the weeks leading up to Election Day, including those for TV party candidates, thus fueling the money chase.

Whether the McCain-Feingold bill, or the Hagel substitute, or some blend of the two is passed, campaign cash will continue to flow at the lowest unit rate. This simple but powerful reform potentially will bring sanity to the cost of 21st century campaigns.

I urge my colleagues, as Senator TORICELLI has before me and others will after, to support this amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am about to yield to my colleague and friend, Senator DODD, who has offered an amendment to the Feingold bill which is similar to the amendment I discussed last week. This amendment seeks to lower the cost of TV issue ads and to require the broadcasters to make time available on a non-preemptable basis at the lowest unit rate for that time period, and it requires the FCC to conduct periodic audits to ensure compliance.

This does nothing more than enforce the original intent of Congress when it first required broadcasters to make time available on a non-preemptable basis at the lowest unit rate for that time period.

I yield 15 minutes to Senator DORGAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I say to Senator DODD, and to any other colleague who have cosponsored this amendment, they have done a real service, in my judgment, in this debate. This is an amendment that can be changed and it was in the early 1970s. We had the reforms of 1974 that tried to establish campaign finance reform and tried to establish some reporting. In many ways it worked, in some areas, but in other ways it has not worked. Money and politics are like water finding a hill. They run downhill inevitably.

There is in this political system, rather than a competition of ideas, which is what democracy ought to be about, a mad rush for money in order to pay for the costs of television advertising, which has become the mother’s milk of politics. What has happened to their competition of ideas in this blizzard of television advertising? Ideas are almost gone, nearly obliterated. The orgy of 30-second advertisements in this country is a slash-and-burn and hit-and-run negative attack, often by nameless and faceless people, in many cases by organizations that are not part of the political system. It is that independent organizations collecting unlimited money from donors who are undisclosed.

Do we need campaign finance reform? Darned right, we do. This system is out of control.

In this morning’s Washington Post there is a columnist who really makes the case about what we need in politics more money, that we just need more money in this political system. I wonder, has this person been on some kind of space flight somewhere? Did the shuttle take him up, and have they gone for the last 10 years? Could they have instead become this machine gun-fire of 30-second advertisements.

Our political system doesn’t need more money. In fact, what has happened is that we have prompted this amendment—is that politicians have become collectors of money in order to transfer the money to television stations that become the large beneficiaries of this new system of ours.

My colleague, Senator Torricelli, has offered an amendment that says the television stations in this country have a responsibility to do what the law says they do—that is when the FCC says that they have a responsibility to sell political time for political advertisements to candidates at the lowest rate on the rate card. But that has not been happening. What has happened in the communications business—especially television and radio—is a galloping concentration and mergers. Since the 1996 Telecommunications Act, we have seen a rash of mergers and large companies becoming larger. In virtually every State there are fewer television stations owned locally, and more are owned by large national combines.

Guess what happened. The result is that we make decisions now about the ad prices and the rate cards they are going to use for politics. They are maximizing their revenue from the political income in this country.

My colleague described what is happening in New Jersey. I think that is important. He describes the substantial increase in costs of television advertising for political purposes in New Jersey.

Let me describe what happened in North Dakota. The advertisement that cost $120 or $130 in 1998 to clear an ad on four NBC stations in western North Dakota—remember that this is a sparsely populated area, and the rates are much different from in New Jersey and New York—but a $290 or $390 advertisement 2 years go sold at $753 last fall, nearly tripling the advertising rates of the television stations in a small State such as North Dakota.

I am told that the two Federal races paid almost exactly double for about the same time on the television stations in North Dakota in the year 2000. This isn’t just about big markets, it is about every market, and it is about television stations. I think it is going to profit as a result of being able to ignore, effectively, a provision that exists in law requiring the sale of television advertising at the lowest rate on the card for political advertising.

I happen to think that we need to do more in reform with respect to advertising. I know some think this would be too intrusive. But, as I indicated, I think political campaigns ought to be a competition about ideas. They ought to be about competing ideas of what we need to do in this country to make this a better place in which to live. They have instead become this machine gun-fire of 30-second advertisements.

My colleague says let us at least have a rush to that we require the lowest rate on the rate card to be offered to those who purchase a 1-minute ad, require the television industry to sell ads in 1-minute increments, and require the candidate to agree to appear on the air one-fourth of the time of the 1-minute ad. That would really require people to use television advertising to tell the American people what they are about. If they want to criticize their opponent, good for them. But they should have to do it in person on the air.

I think that would really change a lot of political advertising in this country, and I think America would be better served to have positive debate over the competition of ideas; and let people make a choice. But these days, that is not happening. In virtually every market most of these campaigns. And in many cases we are seeing expenditures and unlimited money coming from undisclosed donors. That doesn’t serve this political system at all.

My colleague says let us at least solve this problem by adding to the McCain-Feingold bill. As I indicated when I started, I support the McCain-Feingold legislation because I think it is a significant step in the right direction. But it will be incomplete if we do not add this amendment because this amendment will finally tell the television industry: You must do what the law requires. Here is exactly what Congress says the law has required for some long while that you have gotten away from doing. If we don’t do this, we will not see an abatement to this mad rush for money and the require—this is a huge fire that is going to burn as long as people are involved in politics collecting funds in order to transfer those funds to the television stations that are now charging double and triple for the advertising that is required in America politics.

I really believe this is a critically important amendment.

I must say my colleague from New Jersey, Senator Torricelli, made an outstanding presentation. He has done his homework, as I described, with one of my colleagues. He has made a very effective presentation of why this is necessary.

Let me make an additional point about this television industry. I think the television industry does some awfully good things in our country, and all of us take advantage of it almost every day. And we appreciate the good things they do. But, as we know, the television industry was provided a spectrum. They were given to broadcasters free on the condition they serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

According to a study by the Norman Lear Center at the University of Southern California, during the 2000 campaign the typical local television station in a major market aired just 45 seconds of the candidate’s second discourse per night during a month before November 7. Why? They know what sells on the news. True, in once, ambulances, they are not covering political campaigns.

There were stories about this in the last campaign. Too often television stations decided they weren’t going to run campaign news stories, they were going to put campaign ads in there, let people buy it, and at the same time on the commercial side of the station they were jacking up the price of their ads and preventing candidates from accessing the lowest unit cost.

We think on the issue of public interest, convenience, and necessity, we have a ways to go in the television industry dealing with the coverage of political campaigns.

Major broadcast networks performed only slightly better—airing just 64 seconds of a candidate’s discourse per network, according to an Annenberg Public Policy Center report.

The question is, How are the American people to gather information about the competition of ideas that ought to exist in the political race over the newscast? Hardly. The news industry, including the networks, is not covering most of these campaigns. And local stations have decided increasing that there is a menu for their nightly news, and they understand exactly what it is. It is often dealing with crime, even when crime goes down.

Incidentally, there are wonderful studies about this which show decreases in crime rates. We think on the issue of praised viewing of stories about violent crime on the nightly news because that is what sells.

It is time for us to ask for something better and something different from the television industry. In this circumstance, we are simply asking them to do what we believe the law has required them to do but what they have been refusing to do in recent years, and that is to sell 45 days before a primary and 60 days before a general election to commercial news at the lowest unit charge of the station for the same class and amount of time at the same period as for the commercials.
that are aired on those stations. That is what the requirement is.

It is what they have not been doing, and it is what Senator TORRICELLI and Senator CORZINE, Senator DURBIN, I, and others say it is time to be required to do.

So I am pleased today to support this amendment. I think it is a very important amendment, and I am especially pleased my colleague, Senator TORRICELLI, has taken the lead to offer it too.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, let me inquire, how much time remains on the proponents’ side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventeen minutes 45 seconds.

Mr. DODD. How much time remains on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety minutes.

Mr. DODD. May I inquire of my colleague from Kentucky—if I could interrupt for 1 second—we are down to about 17 minutes on the proponents’ side. Will my colleague from Kentucky be willing to yield us a little time if we need it?

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I would be happy to yield some time. I am unaware of speakers at the moment in opposition to the Torricelli amendment. There may be some. Actually, I know of one who wants to speak. He is not on the floor at the moment. So we will be casual about time, and I will make sure we can accommodate all speakers.

Mr. DODD. How much time does my colleague want?

Mr. TORRICELLI. Let me inquire. We have several colleagues who want to speak on behalf of the amendment. While I want to speak, I do not want to take all the time that remains. So I am under the Senator’s guidance.

Mr. DODD. Why not take the time the senator’s need, and I am confident my colleague from Kentucky will yield us some time if we need it.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to my colleague from New Jersey, I am not exactly swamped with speakers requesting time. I will be glad to work with the Senator to have adequate time.

Mr. TORRICELLI. I thank the Senator very much.

At any rate, I want to deal with several of the questions that have been put before the Senate. In the absence of anyone coming to the Senate floor to confront the overwhelming logic of our amendment, I want to deal with the stealth arguments being presented in Senators’ offices. Even though no one will rise in defense of this indefensible cause of the networks, nevertheless, there are silent arguments being waged. I will debate those even if there is not someone in person to do it.

As they were written, I noted, some of the most effective arguments were actually made yesterday in the Washington Post by David Broder, the columnist. Let me begin by quoting those arguments. I quote: as senators debate rival measures, all of which have a common feature—reducing the level of campaign spending and the law of competing for campaign television bills. Common sense tells you that if the TV bill remains that exorbitant, politicians will continue the “money chase” under any rules that are in place.

The reality is being ignored—

That is in dealing with McCain-Feingold—

Exactly. The reality is that any measure that becomes law without such a provision—

Parenthetically, that meaning the cost of television—is likely to be no more than a Band-Aid. As long as broadcasters can continue to treat politics as a profit center, not a public responsibility, the money will have to come from somewhere to pay those bills. The current debate focuses too much on the people who write the checks. It’s time to question, as well, where the money goes.

That is the heart of the argument for this amendment.

Where does the money go? Mr. McCain and Mr. Feingold deal with the demand for money. We are dealing with the advertisements. This is an equation that inevitably must be dealt with together in the bill.

It has been noted by my colleague, Senator CORZINE, of our experience in the New York metropolitan area, already. Though we are the most familiar with it, we are the most familiar with it. The arguments we are making about New York and Philadelphia could be made in any market in the country, although I want, parenthetically, to deal with how the networks are approaching political campaigns today, not as a responsibility to enhance communication but as an economic opportunity.

It should be noted that of the 10 stations that made the most money from political advertising in the year 2000, three are in New York: NBC, ABC, and CBS; two are in Philadelphia, WPVI and WCAU. They range from WNBC in New York, which placed $25 million of advertising, and in Philadelphia with $11 million for WCAU. It is best described by the sales director at the CBS affiliate in Philadelphia as “the best year we’ve had in forever.”

Why was it the best year and why all this excitement?

Let me quote from an article by Paul Taylor in the Washington Post political reporter. Quoting the CBS affiliate in Buffalo, WIVB-TV, Patrick Paolini, general sales manager, who said:

We’re salivating. No question it will be huge as far as ad revenue is concerned... It’s like Santa Claus came. It’s a beautiful thing.

He was not talking about the quality of the debate. “Santa Claus coming” was not about substantive arguments to help the people of New York. He was talking about the prospects of HILLARY Clinton running for the Senate and the potential revenues, recognizing the expenditures in a Clinton Senate campaign. “We’re salivating.”

It is not by chance that we come today making this argument. There has been a calculation by television networks to take advantage of this political system and this fundraising to maximize their profits.

There are arguments going on in Senators’ offices as we speak. Papers are being circulated, as I have suggested, in the absence of any Senators coming to the Senate floor to support this amendment. Stealth arguments are being made to Senators’ offices. Let me go through a few of these arguments for a moment.

The National Association of Broadcasters is arguing, first, that we are going down the slippery slope of free time.

My colleagues, there is no amendment before the Senate requiring free time. Indeed, there could be an argument for it. All of our European allies, every other industry in the world, broadcasters are required to provide free time to help the public debate. We are not doing that today. It would be warranted, but it is not being argued. We are simply requiring that the law read as many Senators believe it already exists—lowest unit cost. We are closing a loophole in the current law.

Second, the National Association of Broadcasters is arguing in Members’ offices that: Candidates already receive free time. Ninety percent of candidates have commercial ad rates. Oh, my colleagues, if only it were so. As I think we demonstrated earlier in my arguments, that is a fiction. Candidates are not getting 30 percent. Yes, that is the law. That is what should be happening. But as we have demonstrated—in Minneapolis, 95 percent of advertising is now being done at commercial rates, 4 percent is at lowest unit rate; in Detroit, 8 percent is at lowest unit rate; in Philadelphia, 8 percent; in San Francisco, 14 percent; in Las Vegas, 38 percent; in Seattle, 9 percent.

No, National Association of Broadcasters, you are not providing a 30-percent discount. That is the exception. The rule, is you are price gouging. You are charging commercial rates—contrary to current law.

Third, arguing that: This has a fundamental, constitutional problem. There is no constitutional problem. Finally, they have fewer than 30 years, the requirement that ads must be sold at the lowest unit rate. We are not doing anything new. We are closing a loophole in current law. If there is a constitutional argument now, then there has been a constitutional argument for decades; and it has never been raised before, although, frankly, even if it had been, it would have failed.

The fifth amendment’s taking challenge would fail in this provision. There is no right to a grant of a license or to broadcast in the use of that frequency. The networks have a public license to use the public frequencies for their network business. There is no constitutional right to it. You apply for a license, and you can get that license subject to conditions. Public responsibility is one of those conditions.

Selling air time for the public debate at a reasonable cost is another condition. That is the heart of the bill. What is the purpose of keeping down costs, for many of us it runs somewhere around 75 or 80 cents on the dollar that is spent on TV advertising. It varies from State to State, I am sure, but that is not an unrealistic figure in modern campaigns to spend that much of a campaign dollar on TV advertising, considering how much the public relies on television for its sources of information. If we are trying to put the brakes on the ever-spiraling cost of campaigns, as my colleague from Wisconsin has eloquently described, there is no natural law that I know of which says that the costs of campaigns ought to be something that broadcasters do not pay.

That has always been a condition. The United States interpreted this provision to mean that:

No person is to have anything in the nature of a property right as a result of granting a license.

There simply is no constitutional right impaired by asking these reduced rates.

Finally, the broadcasters are arguing, in correspondence to our offices, that broadcasters should not bear the burden of campaign reform. Why not? Isn’t that the purpose of the campaign finance problems of the country everybody’s responsibility? We are saying that candidates for public office should no longer avail themselves of soft money, should abide by certain rules. Why should broadcasters not bear some of the responsibilities? Do they not have public licenses? Do they not have responsibility to air the news fairly, cover campaigns, to inform the public? Should they be allowed to price gouge?

They make the argument: What about newspapers? Shouldn’t newspapers bear this responsibility? I don’t know a newspaper in America that deals with a Federal license, nor are newspapers the only ones whose rates are raised. Sometimes the circumspect of a market that will only permit so many newspapers. The spectrum has limited the number of television stations; hence, the PECG’s requirements and Federal law.

These National Association of Broadcasters arguments are an insult. They confirm the arrogance with which the networks are approaching Federal campaigns, the arrogance that is leading to avoidance of Federal responsibilities, the selling at lowest unit rate cost, or the raising of rates. They will not permit the use of soft money that would help destroy the entire system that actually was pretty free.

That is the sum and substance of the case they are making. To the credit of my colleagues, they are so meritless in their points of view. Hence, I challenge them alone.

We have other colleagues who have come to the floor to make their case. I yield the floor. Senator DURBIN will be available at the conclusion of this.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from New Jersey, once again, for raising the arguments that are being circulated around the offices of the Senate and pointing out the fallacy of those arguments.

The facts are inarguable, when you look at the rates that are being charged in major markets all across the country. It goes back to the heart of the bill, trying to keep down costs, for many of us it runs somewhere around 75 or 80 cents on the dollar that is spent on TV advertising. It varies from State to State, I am sure, but that is not an unrealistic figure in modern campaigns to spend that much of a campaign dollar on TV advertising, considering how much the public relies on television for its sources of information.

If we are trying to put the brakes on the ever-spiraling cost of campaigns, as my colleague from Wisconsin has eloquently described, there is no natural law that I know of which says that the costs of campaigns ought to be something that broadcasters do not pay.

Reducing the cost of television time will have the very beneficial effect of reducing the impact of the loss of soft money on the ability of candidates to legitimately get their message out. The parties will only have hard money to spend. For that reason, it is appropriate to allow them to use the lowest unit rate as well.

Some of the concerns about all the money that would flow to the outside groups are overblown. I don’t think all the money will flow. It is false that all the corporations will give their money in that way. The fact is, there will be these ads and people will still need to respond. The Torricelli amendment does make it possible to have that ability to respond through the legitimate, controlled, regulated, and disclosed hard money system.

Like the soft money ban in this bill, the amendment will take our election process back to its original intent. The soft money ban reinvigorates the century-old prohibition of corporate spending in connection with Federal elections. Lowest unit rate, on the other hand, was intended to give candidates a significant discount for advertising so they could get their message out. The practice of having preemptible and then, on the other hand, nonpreemptible classes of time was not contemplated by the lowest unit rate statute. What this amendment does is bring the LUR back to what the Congress intended it to be.

In my mind, it is very similar to what the soft money ban does. It takes us back to where we were supposed to be. We are talking about loopholes that have helped destroy an entire system that actually was pretty well thought out. But loopholes do occur, and this amendment helps us close them.

The Senator from New Jersey already did a fine job on this. I reiterate, this is not a slippery slope. This is not the next step to free time. I wish it was. There ought to be free time for candidates. There ought to be reduced television costs, but LUR is not free time. The original McCain-Feingold bill, when Senator MCCAIN and I first came together to work on a bipartisan basis, was about voluntary spending limits in return for reduced costs for television time. That is something we were unable to get a majority of the Senate to support. That is not what this amendment does. This amendment simply makes LUR effective and useful in practice for candidates.

I thank the Senator and appreciate his very serious involvement in this campaign finance debate and, in particular, for this amendment that, as I indicated, Senator MCCAIN and I tried...
S2612
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE
March 21, 2001

for 5 years to finally get this bill on the floor. We always said we have our ideas, but we believe that if this bill is brought to the floor of the Senate, the Members of the Senate will make it a better bill. Every one of us is an expert on this issue. If we come out and have an honest, open debate as we have been doing now, it will get better. The Torricelli amendment is proof of that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I yield myself whatever time I may use. I assure my colleagues from Connecticut and from Illinois it will be short.

I have been very pleased by the debate so far on this subject and, frankly, somewhat surprised. The comity in the Senate has been excellent. There has been a total absence of unsubstantiated charges of corruption, which we had on the floor the last time this debate came up. That is a step in the right direction.

On that subject, in today's Washington Post, there was an interesting article by George Will, a columnist. I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the Record.

The being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Drops in the Bucket
(By George F. Will)]

McCainism, the McCarthynism of today's "progressives," involves, as McCarthynism did, the reckless hurling of imprecise accusations. Then, the accusation was "communism!" Today it is "corruption!" Pandemic corruption of "everybody" by "the system" supposedly justifies campaign finance reforms. Those reforms would subject the rights of political speech and association to yet more limitations and supervision, by restricting the political contributions and expenditures that are indispensable for communication in modern society. The regulations they advocate for rich sources of influence, are mostly John McCain's megaphones. But consider how empirically unproved and theoretically dubious are his charges of corruption.

What McCain and kindred spirits call corruption, or the "appearance" thereof, does not involve personal enrichment. Rather, it means, according to, or seeming to respond to, contributors, who also often are constituents. However, those crying "corruption!" must show that legislative outcomes were changed by bribes—that is, that contributions, legislators voted differently from the way they otherwise would have done.

Abundant scholarship proves that this is difficult to demonstrate, and that almost all legislative behavior is explainable by the legislators' ideologies, party affiliations or constituents' desires. So reformers hurling charges of corruption often retreat to the charge that the "real" corruption is invisible—a speech not given, a priority not adopted, a bill not passed—because it is impossible to reduce by disproving a negative. Consider some corruption innuendos examined by Bradley Smith, a member of the Federal Election Commission, in his new book "The Folly of Campaign Finance Reform."

In April 1999, Common Cause, McCain's strongest collaborator, made much of the fact that from 1989 through 1998 the National Rifle Association had contributed $8.4 million to Congress. However, this was just two-tenths of one percent of total spending ($4 billion) by congressional candidates during that period. How plausible is it that the NRA, America's strongest collaborator, made much of the votes of 3 million NRA members—an influenced legislators?

Common Cause admits much of the fact that in the 10 years ending in November 1996, broadcasting interests gave $9 million in hard dollars to federal and state candidates and challengers during five election cycles. Changing issues and candidates. Rival interests within the industry (e.g., Time Warner vs. Turner). And broadcasters' contrary one-tenth of one percent of the $9 billion spent by parties and candidates during that period. Yet, as Smith says, Common Cause implies that this minuscule portion of political money caused legislative majorities to vote for bills they otherwise would have opposed, or to oppose bills they otherwise would have supported, each time opposing the same constituents that the legislators must face again.

As Smith says, to prove corruption one must prove that legislators are acting against their principles, or against their best judgment, or against their constituents' wishes. Furthermore, claims of corruption demand that legislators should act on some notion of the "public good" unrelated to the views of any particular group of voters.

Although reformers say there is "too much money in politics," if they really want to dispute the possible influence of particular interests (the NRA, broadcasters, whatever), they should focus on the size of the total pool of political money, so that any interest's portion of the pool will be small. And if reformers really want to see the appearance of corruption, they should examine what their reforms have done, have tried to do and have not tried to do.

Smith notes that incumbents' reelection rates began to rise soon after incumbents legislated the 1974 limits on contributions, which hurt challengers more than well-known incumbents with established financing networks. After 1974, incumbents' fund-raising advantages over challengers rose from approximately 1.5 to 1, to more than 4 to 1.

Early 1997 versions of the McCain-Feingold and Shays-Meehan reform bills would have set spending ceilings—surprise—just where challengers become menacing to incumbents. Shays-Meehan set $600,000 for House races. Forty percent of challengers who had spent more than that in the previous cycle won, only 3 percent of those who spent less won. In 1994, 1996 and 1998, all Senate challengers lost who spent less than the limits proposed in the 1995 and 1997 versions of McCain-Feingold.

There are interesting limits to McCain's enthusiasm for limits. His bill does not include something President Bush proposes—a ban on lobbyists making contributions to legislators while the legislature is in session. Such a limit would abridge the freedom of incumbents. Campaign finance reform is about abridging the freedom of everyone but incumbents—and their media megaphones.

Mr. MCCONNELL. It was on the whole subject of unsubstantiated charges of corruption.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, I have said in the past, and repeat again today, when people make those kinds of charges, they need to back them up. I am quite pleased there have been no such charges made during this debate. It produces an atmosphere that makes it more likely that we can better legislate.

The second amendment offered in the last 24 hours that I think addresses the real problem we have in today's campaign finance reform debate. The first problem that we addressed yesterday was the problem of the millionaire candidate. It passed 70-30. It was an excellent amendment by Senator Durbin and Senator Stevens, and Senator Durbin today's amendment addresses a real problem we have in today's campaigns.

Now we have another amendment that addresses a real problem. I commend the Senator from New Jersey for a thoughtful, well-researched, and, in my view, conclusive case, that the law that has been on the books for 20 years requiring the broadcasters to sell candidates time at the lowest unit rate ought to be compiled with. None of us like having to raise money. But it is my view that it is better than getting it out of the Treasury. I assume we will debate later whether or not the taxpayers ought to pick up the tab for our campaigns. If it is inconvenient for us, it ought to come through our efforts, not somebody else's.

As the Senator from New Jersey pointed out, and very persuasively, no matter how many hours there are in a day, with the declining value of the $1,000 contribution set in the 1970s, when a Mustang cost $2,700, and inflation in the television industry, far beyond the CPI—coupled with an apparent unwillingness that we have all experienced in our States of broadcast stations to cover campaigns in the news—we are, in effect, blacked out in terms of earned coverage.

The need for commercials is critical and essential. So what the Senator from New Jersey is saying is, let's apply the law, as originally written, correctly. Give candidates for public office an opportunity to get their message across. I think it is an amendment, the passage of which is necessary if we are going to address one of the real problems in the current campaign finance system.

This is something of a historic moment. I think Senator McCAIN, Senator FEINGOLD, and I are going to be on the same side of an amendment. Come to think of it, it is the second time.

I commend the Senator from Wisconsin, also, for his consistent opposition to amending the first amendment for the first time in 200 years. He and I have been on the same side of that issue over the years. This will be the second time we have been on the same side. I think it bodes well as we move forward in this debate.
New Jersey for a completely well-researched, documented case that addressed one of the real problems we have in American politics in the year 2001.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I don’t know if I need specific time yielded. I ask for 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the President’s statement has expired.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I yielded the Senator 20 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. If my friend will yield for a moment, I wonder if the Senator from Kentucky will give me 5 minutes at the conclusion of Senator Durbin’s time. I would appreciate it.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I will be happy to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for graciously allowing me to speak.

Back in the early 1960s, Newt Minow, of Chicago, was named Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission by President John Kennedy. He came up with a phrase to characterize television at that moment in our history, which has become legendary. Newt Minow called television in the early 1960s “the great wasteland.” He took a look at what was available on television and suggested that the American people deserved better. It triggered a national debate for reform and creative thinking about the role of television.

I say today, if you look at the role of television in this debate on political campaigns and public issues, television is not just a great wasteland, television has become a killing field because the people who run the television stations, the networks and local broadcasters, have forgotten the bottom line: their responsibility to the American people.

You see, they are selling a product. It is something they create; it is produced by the networks and local broadcasters, people who run the television stations, television used to be a tiny part of political campaigns, but it has grown almost out of control.

Take a look at these numbers—political advertising on broadcast television. Starting in 1970, network expenditures were $260,000. Come down to the year 2000, 30 years later, and it is $15 million-plus. Station TV used to be about $12 million in the 1970s. Now we are up to $650 million. The total expenditure for the year 2000 was estimated to be some $665 million. Well, the Alliance for Better Campaigns came out and said it was going to be between $771 million and $1 billion spent on television by political campaigns.

So what we have, in fact, are efforts by candidates of both political parties to raise money to give to television and radio stations in an effort to get your message out to the American people. When we created these stations and we acknowledged that the public overpaid in most markets when it came to political advertising, candidates would be treated differently than other advertisers—something called the lowest unit charge. We basically said that if there was a bargain at the TV station, the bargain should be given to the political candidate. That is in the interest of sharing information on public issues, but also in keeping the cost of political campaigns under control.

But, though the law required, as of 1971, that the lowest unit charge be charged to candidates in their campaigns, the fact is that candidates are paying more and more. Why? Because if you go to a television station in Chicago, or in Springfield, IL, and say you want to buy a 30-second ad right before the newscast the night before the election, they will say: Senator, great. We will be glad to sell you that ad. Incidentally, if we only charge you the lowest unit rate, the bargain basement, sadly, in another body comes and offers a dollar more for that ad, we knock you off the air.

Well, there isn’t a political candidate with any good sense that will agree to that. If you are going to be knocked off the air at the last point, you put you on right before the Pledge of Allegiance and the Star-Spangled Banner at the end of the night, you have lost everything. Your market doesn’t have the benefit of all the good things you have to offer.

What candidates are doing is not paying the lowest unit charge, they are paying the inflated charges. The television stations have become a killing field, because they have taken the law, which said we are going to favor candidates in public discourse of issues, and have turned it upside down so that candidates, frankly, end up paying dramatically more than the lowest unit rate. That is why the Torricelli amendment, of which I am a cosponsor, is so important. It addresses the demandside of political campaigns—not just the supply side, where the money comes from, but how the money is spent. Sadly, as we get closer to election day and the demand for their TV ads goes up, these stations raise their rates dramatically.

A gentleman by the name of Paul Taylor, who used to write for the Washington Post, created a group called Alliance for Better Campaigns. He enlisted the support of a lot of great people, such as former President Ford; former President Carter; Walter Cronkite, the legendary CBS news commentator; and a former Senator from Illinois, Paul Simon.

This public interest group said let’s take a look at television with regard to public information and whether it is doing its job. I was in one of their meetings in Chicago. They brought together the managers of TV stations and said: We noticed you are not covering campaigns, unless the candidates pay for it, on your stations. What Mr. Taylor did was to invite the radio and TV stations to take a 3-minute segment during the last week or two of the campaign and make it available for some public debate and public discourse about the issues.

Sadly, after we take a look at the public information, in it millions got involved in Mr. Taylor’s request.

Let me tell you some of the statistics they developed. The political coverage of these stations shows the result of an analysis of political ad costs in all top 75 media markets.

The alliance advocates scrapping the lowest unworkable lowest unit charge and requiring the industry to open the airwaves. When they were asked to do it voluntarily, the stations did not comply.

These stations steer candidates toward premium rates. They pay the highest amount. They are shut out of air time.

America is different in this regard. Many countries make this time available to their candidates, so they can have literally free access to television and radio, but in America you have to pay for it. We do not provide free air time. The cost, of course, is going through the roof. We give an illustration of how bad it is using one market in which I have to buy advertising, and the market is in St. Louis. St. Louis is one of the toughest markets in which to buy advertising. There are some radio stations there which will only sell you four or five ads a week. They limit you. You cannot buy any more.

Listen to what we found when we went into a network affiliate in St. Louis and compared some of the charges they made in the last election cycle with what they charged just a few weeks later.
The cost of nonpreemptible time—in other words, you get a set time which is guaranteed—was four times higher than preemptible time. Take the lowest unit charge which candidates are supposed to get, and then if you want to make sure you get the time you asked for, at this station you are going to pay up to four times as much for that nonpreemptible time.

On the early morning weekday news shows, the rate that this station charges the campaigns for nonpreemptible time was over 55 percent from the political campaign time. During noon weekday news, the rate went down 66 percent in the weeks after the election campaign.

The study found, Weekend evening news took 3.3 times the amount to buy a nonpreemptible ad, and then as soon as the campaign was over, they dropped the overall rate 38 percent. On week night news at 10 o'clock in St. Louis, they dropped it 45 percent. On the Sunday a.m. news talk shows, as soon as the campaign was over, advertising costs went down 66 percent; the Sunday p.m. local news, 25 percent.

The stations and the network affiliates are gaming the system. They understand that candidates are desperate for time. They understand that if they tell them it is preemptible, they will pay more, and then as soon as the campaign is over, they will drop the rate.

That is why it has become a killing field. They run up the rate cost for the candidates, and then as soon as the campaign is over, they refuse to sell the time. They have really forgotten their civic responsibility that the airwaves belong to the American people. As a consequence of that, we are seeing a phenomenon in American politics which we cannot ignore.

A lot of people are going to argue later about how much money we should be able to raise. But keep in mind that if we are raising money to pay for electronic media—television—the cost of that time is controlled to a market. When I contacted, goes up 15 to 20 percent every 2 years. So your campaign needs to raise 15 to 20 percent more funds to do exactly the same thing you did on television 2 years ago. If you are running in a 6-year period of time you can see a 60-percent increase in your television cost.

Let me give an example in St. Louis again. A moderate television buy in St. Louis runs about $186 a point. A point is the way they measure the audience. A 1,000-point buy for a week of spots—that is about 30 or 40 30-second ads a day—will cost you $186,000.

Under the current rules of raising money, I can ask a contributor to give me up to $1,000. So in order to run advertising in one area that serves the State of Illinois, I have to get 186 people to give me $1,000. Obviously, when you consider the entire State of Illinois, the campaign everyone is facing, one can see how the cost of these campaigns is going through the roof.

A $200,000 media buy buys a few 30-second slivers of time to get ideas and views out on the public airwaves. It takes time. It costs money, and if a person gets up to get a sandwich in the kitchen, they miss that 30-second ad. It requires asking 4,000 people to make a $50 campaign contribution.

Former Senator Bill Bradley said a few years ago:

Today’s political campaigns function as collection agencies for broadcasters. You simply transfer money from contributors to television stations.

It is interesting to me that as we spend more and more money on television in these campaigns, as we do our best to get our message out, our market—the voters of America—has responded by refusing to vote.

If you ran a station and said, “We are not selling enough of our product, let’s increase the marketing budget”; and after a quarter or two, you brought in in the marketing department and said, “How are you doing?” and they said, “We have increased the marketing budget”; you went to the sales department and asked, “How are you doing?” and they said, “Sales are down”—that is what is happening in political campaigns. The marketing budget is increasing, but we are not making the sales to the American people. They are not buying what we are selling.

Why? Because, frankly, the whole process has been tainted. It has been tainted by the expense, by the involvement of special interest groups, and by the fact that so many candidates, myself included, spend so many waking hours trying to raise money to launch an effective campaign such as in a State as large as the State of Illinois.

This amendment is an important step forward because here is what it does: This amendment says that we are going to eliminate class distinctions for air time for candidates under the current statute. We are going to make sure that there is no preemption. We are going to allow political parties the benefit of the lowest unit charge, and we are going to require random audits in designated market areas to check compliance.

We cannot say to the TV station how much it charges, but we can say they cannot run their ad rates up right before an election, as so many stations have done, and then drop them precipitously as soon as the election is over.

All of this money going to television stations from political campaigns is, frankly, good for their business, but it is not good for America. Let us remember our responsibility: to make sure the airwaves are used in a manner that serves all the people in this country, not just serving the needs to make a profit. Sadly, that is what has been done too many times in the past.

I hope we will see an increase in voter participation, but I hope we will also see an increase in public issues by the networks and by the local stations. It is not enough for them to say that a few times, in what might not even be prime time before an election, that they are going to make their stations available so there can be a debate among the candidates. It is not enough that they will give us the Sunday morning opportunities to talk on the shows. As good as that is, that just does not make it in terms of selling products—they know that—and in terms of convincing voters as to what we have at stake in these elections. I think it is time for these networks and television stations to be part of campaign finance reform. The one version of the Feingold bill included this reform, included efforts to address the television and radio costs which candidates face that was taken out of the bill for reasons I don’t know, but it should be brought forth.

If we are going to have real campaign finance reform, then we definitely have to make sure we are getting candidates an opportunity to purchase time at affordable rates. Otherwise, we are going to have the cost of campaigning continuing to skyrocket and the sources of money for candidates drying up as we cut off soft money, as we cut off other sources. I think this amendment is critically important.

When they asked these stations how much time they would give of their own time during the course of the campaign in a survey, it is interesting what they found. A national study released by the University of Southern California’s Norman Lear Center, on February 5, 2001, of 74 local stations, found that the typical local television station spent less than 1 minute of air time a night on candidate discourse in the final month of the 2000 campaign—less than a minute.

The study found all but one local station failed to meet a voluntary public industry standard that they air 5 minutes a night of candidate-centered discourse in the 30 nights before the election. Stations in the survey that indicated they would try to meet the standard, which was just 7 percent of the Nation’s 1,300 local stations, averaged 2 minutes and 17 seconds a night.

They are paying no attention whatever to elections and campaigns unless the candidates are paying them money in hand and are prepared to pay the outrageous charges that have been leveled against them in terms of these candidates.

National broadcast networks didn’t do much better. They averaged 61 seconds a night per network of candidate discourse in the final month of the 2000 campaign.
It is no surprise the broadcasting industry, which has profited so much from political campaign spending, also vigorously resists any campaign finance reform which touches them. The media industry, since 1996, has spent over $100 million lobbying Congress, part to stymie finance reform bills that included any kind of discounted or free candidate air time. The number of registered media-related lobbyists has increased from 234 in 1996 to 264 in 1999. The amount spent rose from slightly over $1 million, up 26.4 percent from the 1996 amount. This is big business. This is big profit. They have a lot at stake.

I hope at the end of this debate we will enact this amendment, an amendment I have cosponsored with Senator TORRICELLI, Senator CORZINE, and Senator DORGAN. If we do not address the real costs of campaigns, the demand side of the ledger, we are not going to serve the need of real campaign finance reform. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I ask unanimous consent that a vote on the pending amendment be taken at the expiration of the period of time beginning with 5 minutes of the remarks by the Senator from California, 5 minutes of remarks by the Senator from Nevada, and 7 minutes under the control of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Kentucky for yielding.

I strongly support the amendment being offered today by Senators TORRICELLI, CORZINE, DURBIN, and DORGAN.

I learn best when involved in the middle of a situation. Anyone who runs for office from my State of California knows it is all about television. In its wisdom, our founders said if you come from a State that has 500,000 people, you get 2 Senators; you come from a State that has 34 million people, like my State, you get 2 Senators. It is very difficult in a large State to personally meet but a very small percentage of the people. So we must rely on television to get the only way.

What has happened, and the chart shows this, in California, the broadcasters have taken tremendous advantage of this situation. To say the costs are unreasonable is an understatement. They are confiscatory. They are taking 80 percent or 90 percent of our budget after we pay our overhead. TV was so expensive in my last race I couldn’t even afford to have much radio. I didn’t even have any left over for radio. I raised $20 million and huge sums went to television. TV is the only way to get your message out to the people to derailing bill. This is one of those amendments. It strengthens the under-

The broadcasters were just visiting the States. They have a lot at stake. They are confiscatory. They are taking more than 80 percent or 90 percent of our budget after we pay our overhead. TV was so expensive in my last race I couldn’t even afford to have much radio. I didn’t even have any left over for radio. I raised $20 million and huge sums went to television.

The facts are, when we approached the TV stations, we thought we were entitled to get the lowest rate because that is, in fact, the law. However, it is a little bit similar to airline seats. If you see airline seats advertised, they say we have a special fare from Los Angeles to New York; it is really cheap. $100, Call up and they say: Sorry, those seats are filled. Therefore, you have to spend $1,000. It is a little bit similar.

When we went to the broadcasters and asked to buy time and asked for the lowest rate, which is required by law, they would say: Absolutely, we will give you that rate. But be warned, if someone else comes along and wants to pay more, you cannot retain that spot.

Again, everyone knows if you are running for the Senate you need to reach people when they are up and about. Otherwise, it doesn’t pay. If you say, fine, bump me to another spot, you could be having your commercial aired at 3 o’clock or 4 o’clock in the morning. Not that many people will see it. So they have you in a very difficult situation.

Los Angeles is the second most expensive media market. Senator TORRICELLI’s chart shows basically the average 30-second spot is almost $35,000 in a good time slot. The average 30-second spot in a State like Nevada is $5,000. Under the Torricelli amendment, it comes down 75 percent. That is a very big difference.

The fact is, this is a very good amendment. I am very much for the McCain-Feingold bill. I will be opposed to amendments that I think are not good amendments, are not meritorious amendments, and cannot be defended and might make this veto bait. It would be hard to imagine that George Bush could look at what the broadcasters are doing to candidates, some of whom are struggling very hard to get the money they need, and will take the side of the broadcasters who are laughing all the way to the bank, nodding their heads saying: We really got them this time.

I have good relationships with the communications industry in my State, good relations with the TV people, the radio people, but I have asked over and over again, how can they sleep at night knowing what the people who own airwaves in this country get so people can find out what candidates stand for. It is almost impossible unless you are independently wealthy or just raise huge sums of money.

So to close this statement, I say again how strongly I support the underlying bill and how much I respect Senators McCAIN and FEINGOLD. I will be voting against most amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s 5 minutes has expired.

Mrs. BOXER. I ask for 20 more seconds.

The PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. In closing, which I would have done if I had the opportunity, I believe there are certain amendments that strengthen this un-whom you want to direct it. So we are always forced to buy the most expensive slot in order for our message to be effective. In addition, at the end of a campaign cycle, the broadcasters' rates skyrocket.

The broadcasters used to dread campaigns because that was the time of year they made the least amount of money because of this lowest unit rate. Now it is one of their favorite times of the year because it is actually one of their highest profit margin times of year. This certainly was not the intent of the legislation that brought about the lowest unit rate.

So I applaud the Senators who are bringing this amendment to the floor. I add my support to this amendment.

Before I yield the floor I want to address one final issue. Broadcasters have the airwaves for free, and the justification for this is that they provide a very important public service to local communities by providing news and local politics.

I talked to the Nevada broadcasters about this last week. While I would say in this election their coverage improved—and more of the campaigns were covered during this time it was still lacking.

When you consider how much time is spent on a sensational television story, as compared to the time spent on a message or a story that actually affects the lives of the vast majority of people in our States, I think you will agree that many of these local broadcasters across the country spend a small percentage of their time actually delivering important public service to the communities.

So I think it is the responsibility of the broadcasters to not only accept what we are trying to do with the lowest unit rate, and the spirit of the law of the lowest unit rate, but also we need to call on the broadcasters to cover more of our politics, so that we get more people involved in the political system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ENSIGN. I ask unanimous consent for another 20 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENSIGN. To close on this, even though I believe the broadcasters have made progress in my State, we need to keep the pressure on them because we are seeing voter turnout. If we cannot get our message as candidates to the general public, we cannot get them inspired to come out and participate in elections.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am expecting a couple of Members who asked to come over and be heard.

Just to conclude, it is an encouraging sign to see northing but strong support for the amendment offered by our colleague from New Jersey. I think the argument is quite clear. The facts have been laid out about as clearly as possible. There is clearly a loophole, to put it mildly—maybe something more serious occurs—when the lowest unit rate is not being recognized in major media market after major market all across this country, thus raising the cost of campaigns.

Part of the idea was, of course, to have the lowest unit rate so people's voices could be heard during election season to hopefully enlighten and educate the public about the choices they could make. I want to say that is necessarily what occurs in every 30-second or 1-minute ad that the public is subjected to, but nevertheless the idea is the unit cost would be the lowest rate so the cost of campaigns would not get out of hand, which obviously what has occurred in the last few years.

The charts Senator CORZINE used, and Senator TORRICELLI, showed the exponential growth in the cost of campaigning. What is suggested is that has occurred, there is no reason any more clear than the rising cost of television advertising.

I note the arrival of my colleague and friend from New York who would like to make a few remarks on this issue as well. I commend her for her support of this as well and thank the authors of this amendment. This is really an important piece of this bill.

If we are going to try to keep down costs, keep down the rising costs of campaigns, we have to address this issue. The Senator from New Jersey has done that with this amendment.

I am happy to yield 3 or 4 minutes to my colleague from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I thank my good friend from Connecticut. I also thank Senators TORRICELLI and CORZINE for bringing this important issue to the forefront of this debate because clearly we are not going to be able to get the kind of campaign finance reform that many of us are hoping will come out of this process if we do not address the most expensive aspect of modern-day campaigns.

As we all know, that is the advertising that we have to do in order to communicate with voters about where we stand on issues. It is a particular challenge in large States. But it is a national one that all of my colleagues face.

The Torricelli amendment, which would amend the Communications Act of 1934, would require that the lowest unit rate be provided to committees of political parties or candidates purchasing time. I think that is in the best interest of our democracy. I certainly believe it is the kind of reform that goes to the real heart of what the money chase is all about.

I think a lot of us would like to be able to turn the clock back to the days that some of our colleagues can remember, but for most of us, we just read about it, where you could literally go out into a town square or out in the countryside, set up a little platform, visit with constituents, make a speech, keep on going, and reach most of the people who were going to vote for you or make a decision on an important issue. Those days are long gone. The television and broadcast networks know they are the means by which we must communicate.

I think this amendment is not only fair but long overdue. I commend the Senator from New Jersey for bringing it to the floor. I hope the television industry recognizes that there is an effort to not just have a level playing field but fulfill what many of us thought was the bargain; that when we use the public airwaves for communications—and those communications are basically controlled by the companies that have been given, in my opinion, the privilege of having those airwaves—that there has to be some way they give back to keep the first amendment alive, to keep democracy going. I am just so pleased that we are going to have a chance to vote on it.

I thank my good friend from Connecticut for yielding some time so that I could weigh in on the importance of this issue.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, there was one other Member who wanted to be heard. He is not here. I am going to yield back the time, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time expired.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. If the Senator from Connecticut has any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. Are we waiting for another speaker?

Mr. MCCONNELL. The Senate has been waiting for a minute. Why not ask unanimous consent to speak for a minute or two.

Mr. LEVIN. I appreciate the usual courtesy of my good friend from Kentucky.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I have 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New Jersey, and the managers of the bill who I understand are supporting the amendment. I think it takes an important step towards reducing the money chase and leveling the playing field.
First, the money chase will be reduced somewhat because so much of the money which has been raised goes into television. The more reasonable these ads are and the closer they come to the lowest rate, which is supposed to be provided for anyway under existing law, the less there will be for money in order to get a minimum message on television.

I think it does some real good in terms of reducing the case for huge amounts of money for campaigns. Second, it levels the playing field a bit because the less funded candidates will have a greater opportunity, as the television rates are less, to have at least a minimum message on television that they are able to fund.

I think leveling the playing field is also something we are trying to do in the legislation before us.

The existing law and spirit of the law provide that the lowest unit charge of the station is supposed to be provided in the 60 days preceding the date of the general election and 45 days preceding the primary.

This amendment just carries out what is clearly the spirit, purpose, and intent of the existing law, and again I commend the Senator from New Jersey for bringing this forward and for those who have indicated their support for it, including, I understand, both Senators McCaIN and FEINGOLD.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma wishes to take 2 minutes, Mr. President. He wishes to speak for a couple of minutes. We expect him to walk in the door momentarily. At the end of his 2 minutes, it is our intention at that point to go to a vote.

Mrs. Clinton. Mr. President, may I ask unanimous consent to supplement my earlier remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Thank you very much.

Mr. President, I didn’t realize it until after I spoke, but my good friend, Senator TORRICELLI from New Jersey, gave me one of the articles he read into the Record that I have yet a new title; that is, “Modern Day Santa Claus.” I was given an article that was written by Paul Taylor about broadcasters and their desire to have political advertising.

I was delighted to learn that I am a beautiful thing like Santa Claus because the campaign I ran brought, I guess, great beauty and good cheer to the broadcasters of my State.

I would like to add to my previous comments in support of this amendment that I think this is a good start to ensure that the spirit of the current law is enacted and implemented. But I think we should go further. And later in the debate I hope we will have a chance to talk about even going further, to make it mandatory that the Federal Communications Commission do something to help a charity. Maybe they want to be kind to a university and raise money, and there is a fundraising drive, such as the University of Kentucky. So they want to have a fundraising drive, and the station says, this is a low time of the year, so, yes, we will give you good rates. And maybe this is in April or maybe it is in January when time is pretty cheap because the demand is not very high.

What we are saying is, we want to have that rate for politicians in October and early November, when maybe the demand is very great. The rates might be four times as much, three times as much. You have the new shows on TV. I look at this, and maybe it sounds kind of nice. Someone says this is really enforcing what the existing language is. I say hogwash. This amendment is worth millions, and everybody should know it. This amendment is worth millions to candidates.

I question the wisdom of doing it, saying we should have lower rates than anybody else in the country. And, oh, incidentally, Mr. Broadcaster, we politicians want to check your rates for that entire year, and we get the lowest of anybody. Of anybody, anytime, we get the lowest. We are special. I question the wisdom of it. I am going to support this amendment because I think it is really a worthy amendment. If it were in my power, as the television rates are less, I am going to buy an ad in October, we might be four times as much, three times as much. You have the new shows on TV. I look at this, and maybe it sounds kind of nice. Somebody says this is really enforcing what the existing language is. I say hogwash. This amendment is worth millions, and everybody should know it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for just 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection?

Mrs. BOXER. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, people keep coming and getting more time. That is fine. But I think we need to reserve another matching minute because now the opponents are coming to the floor laying out their arguments. People are coming to the floor. So if Senator BURNS is speaking against this amendment, I ask unanimous consent that I have 30 seconds to respond to his comments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection?

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I object.

AMENDMENT NO. 123

Mr. WELLSTONE. I call up amendment numbered 123.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE], for himself and Ms. CANTWELL, proposes an amendment numbered 123.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment to be dispensed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the introduction of S. 584 are located under understanding is Senator CLINTON will ask unanimous consent the Senator from New York [Mr. W ELLSTONE], for himself and Ms. C ANTWELL, proposes an amendment numbered 123.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will reserve for myself just a little bit of time now because there will be other Senators who will want to speak on this subject. This is an amendment to the McCain-Feingold bill, a very important piece of legislation in and of itself, which I think is a very important step forward for all of us. I hope this amendment will have bipartisan support. I think it just adds to the McCain-Feingold bill.

Mr. WELLSTONE. My understanding is Senator CLINTON will be coming to the floor in a moment.

Mr. DODD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I ask my colleagues if we may extend that to 10 minutes.

Mr. DODD. I ask for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. CLINTON. I thank the Chair.

The remarks of Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. DODD, and Mr. WELLSTONE pertaining to the introduction of S. 584 are located in today’s RECORD under “Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.”

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, before we go to the Senator from Idaho, I ask unanimous consent in addition that was an effort to deal with part of the problem—become more capital intensive, more television expensive, as communication technology becomes the main weapon in every electoral conflict, the big money matters even more.

This amendment says: Look, if our States want to—we leave it up to them—set up a voluntary system of partial or public financing to apply to our races, they should be able to do so. That is what this debate in the Senate about big money and politics and the ways in which too often our elections have become auctions and the ways in which all too often Senators have to be concerned about cash constituencies couldn’t have come at a more perfect time.

Let me give a few examples. Several weeks ago we had an effort that took 10 hours to overturn 10 years of work. The National Academy of Sciences said repetitive stress injury is the most serious injury in the workplace. It endorsed taking action, did the research, did the study, endorsed a standard that was promulgated by OSHA, but big business said jump. So we jumped, and we turned our back on reasonable lending practices but very harsh for a whole lot of people who find themselves having to declare bankruptcy—not because they are trying to game any system but because of a major medical bill, because they have lost their job, because there has been a divorce in the family.

Then we have the news today that the arsenic standard that EPA had promulgated to make sure we had safe drinking water has been overturned by the Administrator of EPA, the Environmental Protection Agency.

Then we have a tax cut—I am not going to spend a lot of time on this. It will be in the budget debate in about 2 weeks. If I am proven wrong, I will be the proven wrong. My colleagues will find that ultimately a rigorous sort of measurement, if you will, of what the surplus really is—and then alongside of that what the tax cut really amounts to—will mean two or three things.

It will mean there won’t be a dime for any of the investments to which we say we are committed. There are going to be some harsh discretionary domestic spending cuts. What that means is anything from energy assistance, to housing to programs that try crimes against women who have been battered—you name it. In addition, you have tax cuts that represent a Robin-Hood-in-reverse philosophy so that over 40 percent of the benefits go to the top 1 percent.

What I said before I will say again. The President talks about leaving no child behind. One-third of all the children in the United States in families that will not receive one dime from this tax cut, and 50 percent of African Americans live in families who will not receive one dime, and 57 percent of Hispanic children live in families who will not receive one dime, but over 40 percent of the top 1 percent of the population.

So forget any commitment to making sure that every child in America has a good education. The vast majority of people believe in that goal. Forget any commitment to expanding health care coverage, or making sure there is a good education, expanding health care coverage, or who loses is quite often determined by the mix of money in politics. People believe that some people march on Washington every day, and they have the lobbyists, and they have the lobbying coalitions, but that when it comes to their concerns, they are not well represented. They say if you pay, you play, and if you don’t pay, you don’t play.

So people have lost faith in this system. I do not know what I think is worse: That so many citizens have this disregard for the process. It is a tragedy for the country. I hate it when people feel that is a tragedy for the country. I hate it when people feel that is a tragedy for the country. I hate it when people feel that is a tragedy for the country.

Frankly, I think it gets to the point of it. I think a lot of people in Minnesota and every day, and they have the lobbyists, and they have the lobbying coalitions, but that when it comes to their concerns, they are not well represented. They say if you pay, you play, and if you don’t play, you don’t play.

So people have lost faith in this system. I do not know what I think is worse: That so many citizens have this disregard for the process. It is a tragedy for the country. State of Arizona. They have passed legislation similar to the Clean Money, Clean Elections Act.

Senator KERRY and I have introduced this as national legislation. Eventually, I would like to get there. Basically, that is what they are saying in these States to the citizens. And the citizens said: Yes, let's do it.

I want to talk about these inspiring examples. They have said: Listen, if each citizen will contribute a small amount into a clean money, clean election account, maybe $5—and then candidates draw from that fund—candidates who have passed a threshold to show that they are viable candidates—then these candidates do not have to be involved in the money chase. They do not have to be dependent on these private dollars. You, the people of Maine, you, the people of Vermont, you, the people of Arizona, you, the people of Massachusetts, you own the elections. You own your own State government. You own your own process.

In Maine it is just incredible. There was broad participation in the Clean Elections program during this last election, with 116 out of 352 general election candidates—both Republicans and Democrats—getting public funding.

What these clean money, clean election States have done is dramatically reduced the influence of special interest money by providing a level playing field, by offering candidates a limited and equal amount of public funds.

I am saying to colleagues today, at the very minimum, we ought to allow our States to move forward with these voluntary systems if they want to do so. That is the only proposition you vote on. Will you or will you not at least be willing to allow your States to provide for a system of voluntary full or partial public financing for our races, understanding full well that everything else about Federal election law stays as is.

I want to offer some comments about Maine, giving some indication of what happened in Maine, because I think it inspires a lot of hope. These comments tell us something about what they have done and why it is so important to allow States to do so.

Here are some of the comments of people who ran.

Shiomet Aucielo, a Democrat challenger:
Without Clean Elections, I couldn't even think about running for office. I just couldn't afford it.

Chester Chapman, a Republican challenger:
The main reason I did it was that this is what people want.

Glenn Cummings, a Democrat challenger:
I spent a lot of kitchen table time explaining the system to people. Once they knew what it was they really liked it. They liked that it means no soft money and no PAC money, and be used only for the people of Maine and I don't want to be beholden to anyone else.

Gabrielle Carbonear:
It will definitely change some things. For one thing I will have about half the amount of money I raised last time but much more time to talk with people which is a good thing.

Just one more:
We have an obligation to put into practice the system that was approved by voters in 1996. Maine is in the lead in this area. It will only work if it is important for incumbents to embrace it. Also, the Clean Election Act is making it easier to recruit candidates to run for office.

That was said by Rick Benet, Republican incumbent, assistant senate minority leader, and candidate for reelection.

I simply say to my colleagues, I am all for McCain-Feingold, as long as it does not get too weakened. I think the amendment we just adopted—the Torricelli amendment—was a step in the right direction. But, honest to goodness, 80 percent of the money is hard money. You still have this huge problem of the system being so wired for incumbents. It is so hard for challengers to reach the money and for there to be a level playing field. I can remember what happened when I ran in 1990; I can remember in 1996. I am now in a reelection.

At a very minimum, there ought to be a vote on public financing in the Senate. But this amendment doesn't say we vote on public financing directly. We don't vote on this at the Federal level, and we don't really vote on it saying that Montana or Minnesota has had the experience of some of the States, such as Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Arizona, and other States that have moved forward, let us at least allow States, on a voluntary basis, to have a system of partial public financing that they could apply to Federal races.

If they want us to have the opportunity to volunteer to be involved in clean money and clean elections as opposed to all this big interested money that we continue to dominate the process, even with McCaine-Feingold passing—there is still so much of that money; we are still so awash in that money—at the very minimum we ought to allow States to light a candle and lead the way.

I know there are other Senators who are going to be coming to the floor. I can speak a much longer time about this and will, but if my colleague from Connecticut is going to speak, I will yield the floor for now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Nelson of Florida). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Minnesota. I commend him for this amendment.

This is a very creative amendment because it doesn't go to the heart of what many of us have felt for a long time, and that is that as we have done with Presidential elections—I don't think there is a Minnesota—one of us, with how vastly these campaigns have increased in cost.

I have often cited the statistic that when I first ran for Congress, some 24 years ago, Ella Grasso was running for Governor of the State of Connecticut, the first woman to be elected in her own right as a Governor in the United States. Ella Grasso spent about $500,000, an unprecedented amount of money, in the State of Connecticut to win a statewide race. I think she even bought New York television time, which always adds considerably to the cost of a campaign in Connecticut. And $500,000 was an outrageous sum of money 24 years ago.

My colleague from Connecticut, Senator Lieberman, and I—I can't recall the exact amount, but I will pretty much be in the ballpark to tell the Senate that a contested race in Connecticut is now somewhere between $4 million and $6 million. The promise you, if you went back 24 years, prior to 1974, you would have found an increase in the cost of campaigns but nothing like we have seen in the last 25 years, with no indication this trend line is going anywhere but up in the coming years.

The issue before us is whether or not we can come up with some mechanism which reduces the money chase, brings down the cost of these campaigns which is what the Torricelli amendment tries to do by insisting the lowest unit rate be charged for campaign costs for advertising, and now what our colleague from Minnesota has proposed—that is, the creative idea of saying to the States that if you decide you would like to have this kind of a mechanism for your candidates for Federal office, we should not necessarily stand in the way.

If this were a mandate, then I think it would run into immediate constitutional problems. There may be some with this anyway. I know States in the past have tried to pass legislation which would put limitations on us, such as term limits. In every one of those cases, the United States Supreme Court has said that it would limit the ability of people to serve here. We ourselves could put limitations in the Constitution on our service, but States don’t have the right, according to the Supreme Court or the Federal courts, to do that.

I do not think this amendment falls into that category. This is not some limitation on a Member’s right to run or to serve. It merely offers the option of a different mechanism for financing the campaign. While I am not a constitutional scholar, I am sure there will be those who make the case that this may suffer from a constitutional flaw. I am sure there will be others who will argue that this does not.

In my view, because this does go in a direction that contributes significantly to the underlying bill Senator MCCAIN and Senator FEINGOLD have submitted to us, it is worthy of support.

I called my colleague from Minnesota for offering this creative idea. We are constantly hearing from our colleagues how we need to give our States more flexibility. It is a call we have heard over and over and over again. I urge my colleagues to read this carefully, to raise questions to my colleague from Minnesota, if they have them, and then vote for this amendment. I think it deserves our support. I know others will come up to the floor to address this matter. I don’t know if my colleague cares to take a few more minutes or not. I am prepared to stay with him and engage in some debate. If not, we could suggest the absence of a quorum and urge Members to come to the floor to discuss the amendment.

Mr. WELSTONE. Mr. President, first of all, I thank my colleague from Connecticut. There are three or four Senators who want to speak, and I have more to say. Frankly, I don’t want to use up all of our time without hearing from the opposition. I will take a few more minutes. If nobody is here, I will suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that the time be charged to the opponents of this amendment. I would like to hear from them rather than burning off all my time.

Mr. DODD. Well, I suggest that the time be charged to both sides equally. That is normally how we proceed. Why not go ahead, and I am sure others will come to the floor.

Mr. WELSTONE. All right. Mr. President, there are 65 organizations that support this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that this list be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WELSTONE. Mr. President, these different organizations range from the national AFL-CIO to AFSCME and SEIU. Also, at the State level, there are a lot of different State organizations, including the ones for Clean Money Campaign, Arizona Clean Elections Institute, the Maine Citizen Leadership Fund, Maryland Campaign For Clean Elections, Massachusetts Voters Information Clean Elections, Massachusetts Voters For Clean Elections, the Catholic Social Justice Lobby, New Hampshire Citizen Alliance For Action, Florida Consumer Action Network, and on and on. There is a list of organizations I mention, which is the Fannie Lou Hamer Project. I mention that project because I think in a lot of ways—and I hope I say this the right way because I have such deep love and respect for the memory of Fannie Lou Hamer. For colleagues who don’t know about her, Fannie Lou Hamer was the daughter of a sharecropper in Mississippi. There were 14 children in her family, and she grew up poor. She was one of the great leaders of the civil rights movement.

The reason I mention the Fannie Lou Hamer Project is that Fannie Lou Hamer uttered the immortal words, “I am so sick and tired of being sick and tired.” She was talking about economic justice issues. I think the reason the Fannie Lou Hamer Project is one of the organizations that is most behind this amendment is that a whole lot of people in the country—and I think this whole issue of campaign finance reform—when you say it that way, it doesn’t have your children think about civil rights. I hear colleagues talking about freedom of speech and that more money is freedom of speech—the more money, the more speech, and then some people who have all of this money use a megaphone to drown everybody else out.

I am all for freedom of speech. I think the Supreme Court is right, although with the decision in Buckley v. Valeo. If there was a problem of corruption, that is the time for reform, they said. If you think the standard of a representative democracy is that each person should count as one. If you vote more, we have violated that standard.

I will put this in a civil rights context for a moment. A lot of people believe they don't have the freedom to be at the table, the freedom to participate in the political process, or the freedom to run for office; and they don't have the freedom to be people who can affect who runs for office because they don't have the big dollars.

Honest to goodness, I believe that ultimate standard is all about. I wish I had brought the brilliant speech that Bill Moyers gave called "The Soul of Democracy." This is about the soul of democracy. If my father Leon was alive today—the Jewish immigrant I mentioned earlier—he would say this is all a wonderful, beautiful experiment we have had in self-rule in the United States of America. We don't want to lose that. We don't want to have a minidemocracy or a psuedodemocracy, when only certain people get to office, when some people matter a whole lot more than other people, in terms of who can affect our tenure and who can't. This becomes a justice issue.

I say to my colleagues—and I will be very frank about it—the reason for this is absolutely constitutional. Not in one court case—and I mentioned the Minnesota court of appeals case—has any judge raised a constitutional question. We make it crystal clear that we are simply saying that—it is almost like consumer law, where we make it clear, hey, there is a Federal standard that no State can go below it. But if the State of Florida or Minnesota want to do better, they can do so.

Colleagues, we can do a lot better when it comes to financing campaigns. Justice Brandeis was right; the States are laboratories of reform, and I challenge Senators to come to the floor and vote for the proposition that if your State wants to move away from the money system, go to the coffee shops, we could be not chasing the big dollars but focusing on real constituencies and a lot more time with the people who are going to win this. And that is great.

I am looking to win this vote. I am looking for a vote for every reformer. Every Senator who says he or she is a reformer should vote for this amendment. I am looking for a vote from Democrats. I am looking for a vote from those Senators who voted against the so-called millionaire amendment because they did not think it was much of a reform to get to the point where you have a contest with someone who has a lot of resources versus someone who is dependent on the top 1 percent for their economic resources. I am looking for their vote for this. I am looking for support from Democrats and Republicans.

Some of my Republican colleagues come from States that have passed clean money, clean election legislation, a voluntary system at the State level. They are doing it, and they are doing it well. Can we not vote for the proposition that we ought to at least let the people in our States decide? That is all this amendment says.

If there are colleagues who want to speak, that is fine. I have been told other Senators are on their way. I will support the absence of a quorum and I ask unanimous consent that the time be charged equally to both sides. But I ask those opponents to come to the floor—we do not want to use up all of our time, unless the opponents want to throw in the towel right now and vote for this amendment. That would be OK, too.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum, with the time to be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Reid). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Florida be recognized to speak for 5 minutes as an incoming capitalist and that the time not be charged to the present amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Florida.

(The remarks of Mr. Nelson of Florida are located in today's Record under "Morning Business.")

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, on the subject of the Wellstone amendment, if my understanding is correct, I believe the Senator from Minnesota allows each State legislature to determine whether or not there could be a
March 21, 2001

All candidates running for Congress? It should public funding be provided for their tax dollars used to elect public officials. In a research project in September of 1999, the question was asked: Should public funding be provided for all candidates running for Congress? It was very simple. Put the public respondents yes, 25 percent; no, 50 percent; not sure, 18 percent.

The term “public funding” produces a better result for the proponents of taxpayer funding of elections because “public” is presumed to be sort of a benign thing producing a positive response. I am unaware of what the answer would have been had the words “taxpayer funding,” of elections been inserted, but we do know when Americans know it is their tax money, it is sort of a benign thing producing a positive response sometimes ranking right up there with anger.

We have an opportunity every April 15 to have the biggest poll on this subject ever taken in America. It is the check on our tax returns which doesn’t add anything to our tax bill. It simply diverts $3 of taxes we already owe to the Presidential election campaign funds. It doesn’t add to our tax bill. Last year, only about 12 percent of Americans put a check off indicating they wanted to divert $3 of their tax bill away from children’s nutrition or defense of the Nation or any other worthwhile cause. The Government funds into a fund to pay for buttons and balloons at the national conventions which get some of the tax money, and the Presidential campaigns, which get some of that tax money.

Interestingly enough, this has continued to drop over the years. It was originally $1 when it was set up back in the mid-1970s. The high water mark of taxpayer participation was 29 percent in 1980. It has gone consistently down since then. Ten years ago, in order to make up for the lack of interest, when the other party was in charge of both Houses and the White House, the $1 check was upped to $3 so that fewer and fewer people could designate more and more money to make up for the lack of public interest in having their dollars pay for political campaigns.

In the due respect for the Senator from Minnesota, who has been very straightforward about the fact he would like to have taxpayer funding of all elections in America, this is not an idea widely applauded by the American people. In fact, they hate it. Almost any way you ask the question, there is a negative response.

I hope this amendment will be defeated. It certainly takes us in exactly the wrong direction of the idea to produce a campaign finance reform bill out of the Senate which might subsequently at some point be signed by the President of the United States. I think it is further noteworthy that the Presidential system is collapsing anyway. President Bush was able to raise more money because of his broad support across America and chose not to accept the public’s subsidy and the speech restrictions on his campaigns that go along with that on a State-by-State basis.

Another candidate, Steve Forbes, obviously because of his own personal wealth, chose not to take public funding. I think you are going to see more and more candidates for President on both sides of the aisle deciding they do not want to use taxpayer funds for their elections because a number of bad things happen to on an individual basis.

We know that once you opt into the system, you are stuck with all the auditors and all the restrictions. We know one out of four of the dollars spent in Presidential elections has been spent on lawyers and accountants trying to help the candidates comply with all the rules that come along with it and of course also telling them how they can get around those rules.

So it is a thoroughly discredited system that I think most Members of the Senate are not going to want carried over to congressional races as well. It is bad enough the Presidential elections are stuck with it. And of course they are ignoring it.

Issue advocacy was huge in the Presidential election. One of the reasons both sides have gone to using issue ads is the scarcity of hard dollars, even when supplemented with tax dollars in the Presidential race. It is the scarcity of hard dollars, even when supplemented with tax dollars in the Presidential race. It is the scarcity of hard dollars, even when supplemented with tax dollars in the Presidential race. It is the scarcity of hard dollars, even when supplemented with tax dollars in the Presidential race.

This is a system that simply does not allow the candidates for President to get out their own message. To get State legislatures the opportunity to impose that on us without our will, without acting at the Federal level, seems to me a particularly bad idea. I hope this amendment will not only be defeated but also defeated.

I yield the floor and retain the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, there are two colleagues on the floor, and I will just take 1 quick minute to respond. How much time do we have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just under 24 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Just under 24 minutes. I say to all Senators—or staffs, because quite often staffs follow this debate as well—it all depends upon how you frame the question. Actually, when I do it is to prompt and say do you want to try to get some of the private money out and big dollars out and you want to have clean money, clean elections where they are your elections and your government, people are all for it. It depends on how you frame the question.

But all the arguments my colleague from Kentucky made do not apply to this amendment. Mr. President, 24 States including the State of Kentucky have a system of public financing or partial public financing. They must like it. But the point is, we give people in our States the right to decide. That is all this amendment says.

The amendment for clean money, clean elections. But that is beside the point. What we are saying is let the States be the laboratories of reform and let the people decide—which they did in Maine, or what they have done in Massachusetts, or what they have done in Arizona, or what they have done in Vermont, or, for that matter, what they have done in a lot of other States with partial public financing. Let them decide whether, on a voluntary basis, they want to apply that to congressional races. That is the point. We do not get to make that decision for them. You are just voting on the proposition of whether or not you want to let the people in your States make that decision.

Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield just for a unanimous consent request?

Ms. CANTWELL. Yes.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, after consultation with the assistant Democratic leader, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Wellstone amendment occur at 2:15.

Mr. KERRY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I would like to ascertain how much time remains and how much time might be available.

Mr. MCCONNELL. If I may finish, I say to my friend from Massachusetts, the thought we had was 20 minutes of the time between now and then would be for your side and 10 for our side.

Mr. REID. I think that is about all the time we have anyway, isn’t it, on Senator WELLSTONE’s time?

Mr. KERRY. How much time remains on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remain 21 minutes 52 seconds.

Mr. KERRY. Could I ask for 12 minutes?

Mr. REID. Senator CANTWELL, I think, indicated she would like 8 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I would like to reserve. There are others coming. Unfortunately, when we went into a quorum call all the time was equally divided because we didn’t have people down here. I would like to reserve the last 3 minutes for myself.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend from Minnesota, we have 21 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Let’s do 10 and 8.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I will be glad to accommodate your side. Senator WELLSTONE wants to speak again, Senator CANTWELL, Senator KERRY— are they there?

Mr. REID. Senator CORZINE wanted 5 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. You tell me how to do that.
Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, after the Senator from Washington, I be permitted to speak for 10 minutes and we have the vote at the conclusion of that amount of time, and allowing for the time for the use of the Senator from Kentucky for his side.

Mr. MCCONNELL. What I would like to do is set a time for the vote in consultation with the Senators on the floor, and we will divide the time after that.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, could I suggest perhaps we allow the Senator from Washington to begin speaking and arrange the time?

Mr. REID. How much time does the Senator need?

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, 12 minutes.

Mr. REID. CORZINE 5 minutes; WELLSTONE, 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCONNELL, CANTWELL?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, 10 minutes. Vote at 2:30.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent a vote occur on the Wellstone amendment—on or in relation to the Wellstone amendment at 2:30.

Mr. REID. And the time be allocated—

Mr. MCCONNELL. The time be allocated in the following manner: 12 minutes for Senator KERRY, 5 minutes for Senator CORZINE, 5 minutes for Senator WELLSTONE, at 2:30; 10 minutes for Senator CANTWELL—10 minutes for Senator CANTWELL. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCONNELL. And 2 minutes before the vote for the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the McCain-Feingold campaign finance reform legislation and the Wellstone amendment. I ran for the U.S. Senate because I believe it is time for us to reform our political system and bring it into the 21st century. At a time where citizens are more empowered than ever with information, where access to technology and communications tools makes it possible for citizens to track and understand on a daily basis our legislative process, where citizens understand exactly the tug and pull of the legislative process, that is, who is getting tugged and who is getting pulled. It is time to respond with a political system that is more inclusive in the decision process. That meets the best long term needs of our citizens, instead of a political system of financing campaigns that rewards short-term expedient decision-making.

But before I go on about the Wellstone amendment that I rise to support, I want to thank the authors of the bill, Senators JOHN MCCAIN and RUSSELL FEINGOLD, for the commitment, determination, courage and perseverance that they have demonstrated on this issue. Campaign finance reform has few friends. It has many enemies. It suffers from a public that simply believes that we can not reform ourselves or this system. JOHN MCCAIN and RUSSELL FEINGOLD, at great personal expense, have made this decision after many years and I am proud to join them in the heat of this battle.

I rise today in support of the Wellstone amendment that I am co-sponsoring with Senators CORZINE and KERRY because I believe it will truly start us down the road of progress. Progress in allowing clean money and clean money efforts to finance campaigns. There is almost a grassroots effort popping up in many States such as Maine, Vermont, Arizona, and Massachusetts, and hopefully with this amendment, in many more States across our country. The clean money effort allows us to put our principles where it belongs—back in the hands of the public, making it more accountable for the people we represent. This is the political reform that our country so badly needs.

The money we raise from special interests plays a role in politics. It plays a role in setting the terms of the debate. It plays a role in what issues get placed at the top of the legislative agenda. And, most importantly, it keeps the focus in the wrong place. Elizabeth Drew, wrote a book called “Whatever It Takes,” that chronicled some of the way business and the Congress operate. Paraphrasing her remarks, some of the interest groups oppose legislation because it is the camel’s nose under the tent. It is something they can stop, and so they do.

We need a political decision making process in Congress in an information age where people are brought together, and not just met with because we agree with them. Our failure to act to reduce the amount of money in politics is feeding the skepticism and cynicism about politics and government among our citizens, and particularly our youth. At a time when we are not far from Internet voting, we ought to have a system of financing campaigns that encourages our citizens to be more involved. Our citizens believe the current campaign finance system prevents us from acting in their interest.

We have been through a technology revolution in this country, and we have to have a governing system, and a campaign system that will keep pace with it.

I was reminded in this last cycle—going around the State of Washington, I met a lot of people who wanted to tell me about a piece of legislation. They turned around to their desktop and printed off the bill that was being considered, circled the sections of the bill they were most interested in, and said: Now tell me why we don’t get this passed by the U.S. Senate.

I didn’t have to answer this person. They knew very well why it was not getting addressed in the Senate. And that is why we need to change our system.

I welcome Senator WELLSTONE’s amendment and his recognition that States can be leaders in this area. I hope my colleagues embrace the spirit we all have to understand it for what it is—a great opportunity to watch, to see, and to learn from those experiments that are happening at the State level.

Senator WELLSTONE said, States are great laboratories. By letting States that are interested in doing so set up public funding systems for their Federal candidates, we will be providing ourselves with valuable research on how we can level the playing field and get the money out of politics.

Think about that: The time that Members spend raising money instead spent listening to the voters in their States.

I have already learned from the clean money election systems in Maine that candidates taking part in that voluntary system have had the following things say:

It was easier to recruit candidates to run for office.

It is what the people want.

I will only have about half the money I raised last time but much more time to talk to the people.

We have learned that voluntary limits can work. In his Senate race— in 1996, Senator JOHN KERRY and his opponent, then-Governor Bill Weld, agreed to a voluntary spending limit, and the result was a campaign waged largely on the issues. Senator KERRY proved there are incentives for both sides to improve the political discourse.

In Arizona, 16 candidates were elected under the clean money system, including an upset victory over the former speaker of the State senate. And the challenger spent only one quarter of the money that his opponent took.

In Maine, 49 percent of the State senate candidates won their seats while participating in the clean money program.

Overall, States implementing public financing have seen more candidates run, more contested primaries, more women running for office, and, most importantly, it is proving that good candidates can run winning campaigns and participate in a system that limits spending.

The only way we have to truly level the playing field, both between candidates and parties of opposing ideologies, and more importantly, between new candidates and incumbents, is to commit the resources to the process of getting people elected.

Not until we create a campaign system with a shorter and more intensive campaign period—something I think the public would truly applaud—funded with finite and equal resources available to all candidates, will we be able to really listen carefully to what the people want.
Not until then will we be able to free candidates from the time, and the energy drain that is needed for dialing for dollars. Not until then will we be able to improve the quality of political discourse, to play down the dominance of polls, to render tax-driven negative advertising, and to improve the appearance that political decisionmaking is not based on principle but on the dependence on funds.

We can’t in an information age and a technology age be smart enough to figure out prescription drugs and new therapies improve the quality of life and health care and yet not even have the debate to make prescription drugs more affordable.

Why is that? Because it, too, has gotten clogged in this debate and campaign finance reform. Senator Wellstone’s amendment removes the roadblock to exploring new options for getting people elected in a new information age. I support the right of States to experiment with new ideas to help level the playing field and to improve our election process and our campaign system.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, but I remind him that actually we worked together on this amendment. It is really our amendment—the Wellstone-Cantwell-Kerry amendment.

I thank the Senator for her help on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, let me begin my comments by making it as clear as I can that I am a strong supporter of the McCain-Feingold legislation. I have had the pleasure of working with both of them through the years on campaign finance reform. I want McCain-Feingold to pass the Senate and ultimately be signed into law.

But let me also make it equally as clear to my colleagues and all Americans who are focused on and care about this issue that what we might achieve, if we pass McCain-Feingold, is only a small step towards what we ought to be ultimately the dependency of people in Congress to have to go out and ask people for significant amounts of money in total—because of amounts of money that you can give Federally—hard money up to the $25,000, which may well be doubled in the course of campaign contributions through either corporate contributions or private contributions.

Nothing in McCain-Feingold is going to restrain the arms race of fundraising in the United States. Nothing in McCain-Feingold is going to restrain ultimately the dependency of people in Congress to have to go out and ask people for significant amounts of money in total—because of amounts of money that you can give Federally—hard money up to the $25,000, which may well be doubled in the course of campaign contributions through either corporate contributions or private contributions.

Senator John McCain, in the course of his Presidential campaign, elicited from his countrymen and women a great deal of support. Part of what propelled that campaign was people’s conviction they do not get to control what happens in the Senate and the House of Representatives, but the large money has more control over what happens here than their conglomerate votes they express on election day.

What the Wellstone-Kerry-Cantwell amendment seeks to do is give the people a choice to States. If you are a conservative and you believe in States rights, here is the ultimate States rights amendment because what we are saying is that a State has the right to do whatever it wishes to do. It may be the way of getting elected. And if the candidate for Federal office wants to take advantage of that, they may. It does not require you, there is no mandate, any person in the Senate who wants to go out and rely on their amounts of money they can raise can do so. But it gives to the State the right to put that as an offering to those who run.

Why is it that we should stand here and take ownership of the campaign away from the people who elect us, and through their candidate who they would like to see the races for the House and the Senate run by the same standard that we run our race for Governor and for our local legislature?

As I said earlier, nothing in McCain-Feingold will ultimately resolve the terrible problem of Senators having to raise extraordinary sums of money.

The reason for that is we are still going to have to go out and raise tens of millions of dollars, except it will be with the hard money; it will be so-called hard money.

Let me say to my colleagues, they will still—each of them—be completely subject to the same kinds of questions that exist today about the linkage of money and politics. The only way we will ultimately divorce ourselves from that perception which leads most Americans to believe that this whole thing is somehow out of their reach and out of their control, and that it is not their democracy to work is whether or not we are going to do the most we can, in a most responsible way, to separate ourselves from the fundraising that is so suspect and that taints the entire system.

I know the votes are not here today. I know too many of my colleagues are comfortable with the status quo. I know we cannot win that vote in the Senate today. But that does not mean we should not put it in the debate. And it does not mean we should not require a vote because the real test of whether or not people want our democracy to work is whether or not we are going to do the most we can, in a most reasonable way, to separate ourselves from the fundraising that is so suspect and that taints the entire system.

I respectfully suggest to my colleagues that a voluntary system—once again, purely voluntary; no challenge to the first amendment at all; no mandate whatsoever; no constitutional issue—simply a voluntary system that would allow a candidate to go for money that is more or less the same way that we do in the Presidential race, and have done for years—and, I might add, contrary to what the Senator from Kentucky said, with great success—even President George W. Bush in the general election took the public funding. He ran for President of the United States with public money. Bob Dole ran for President of the United States with public money. President George Bush ran with public money. President Ronald Reagan ran with public money. Why is it that if it is good enough to elect a President of the United States, it should not at least be voluntarily available to those who run for the Senate?

The reason is too many of my colleagues know that might put the opposition on an equal footing with them.
Too many of my colleagues are comfortable with the system where they can use the incumabcy to raise the large amounts of money and not allow for a fair playing field that enhances the democracy of this country.

That is why the Senate has more than 50-percent membership of millionaire among the people who want to run for office in this country cannot afford to run for the Senate. That is how our democracy in this country is, in fact, distorted. We do not have a true representation in the so-called upper body of America be-due to the fact that people cannot even begin to think about running for office in this country.

Last time I ran in the State of Massachusetts, the Governor of the State, a Republican, joined with me in putting a limit on how much we were allowed to spend. We voluntarily agreed to no independent expenditures. We voluntarily agreed to no soft money. We voluntarily agreed on a total limit of how much we would spend in our campaign on the ground and in the media.

The result of that was, we had nine 1-hour televised debates. And in the process of those nine 1-hour televised debates—in the course of all the free media—the people in the State were able to learn about Social Security, a debate about Medicare, a debate about health care, a debate about the economy; and they ultimately made a decision.

I say to my colleagues, I warrant that 95 percent or 100 percent of the dollars we spent on paid advertising—which were equal amounts—was a complete wash, a mishmash that ultimately did not affect the outcome.

We are locking the Congress of the United States to our fundraising efforts. We are unable to run paid advertisements that result, generally speaking, in a clouding of the issues, not a shedding of light to people about what these issues are really about.

The only way to stop having Americans and the American public to adopt the greatest division between us and the influence of the money. And that will come through some form of public financing.

It will be speaking more about this in the next few days. I will be offering an amendment to this bill that tries to go further than what we currently have on the table. I know the reason Senators McCain and Feingold have settled where they are is because this is the best chance we have for the votes we have today. But that does not mean the Senate should not be called on to debate and vote on an issue that ultimately will be the only way out of this morass in which we are in.

I think my time has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms.
Stabenow). The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the Chair and hope my colleagues will support this voluntary opportunity that the Senator from Minnesota offers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, do we have, all together, 10 minutes remain?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a total of 20 minutes preceding the vote. The Senator from Minnesota has 5 minutes remaining. The Senator from New Jersey has 5 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I say to my colleague from Massachusetts, if he would like, I will yield an additional 5 minutes to him. I will reserve the final 5 minutes. We are in complete agreement. We are making a very strong statement for clean money, clean elections.

Mr. REID. Madam President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator from New Jersey is on his way. He has 5 minutes remaining. The Senator from New Jersey begins 5 minutes. The rest is under the control of the Senator from Kentucky. That was the understanding we had.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am sorry, I was under the impression that the Senator from New Jersey would not be able to make it at all.

Mr. REID. He is on his way.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I will take my time now. This is a joint effort. There are a number of different Senators who are part of this: Senator Cantwell worked very hard on this, Senator Kerry; Senator Biden is an original co-sponsor; Senator Corzine is an original co-sponsor; Senator Clinton is an original cosponsor. There are other Senators as well.

My colleague from Kentucky has made the argument before—and in fact,
I remember debating him on MacNeil,
Lehrer that public financing, a clean money, clean election bill, which Senator Biden brought in, would have had an amount to “food stamps for politicians.” The problem with that argument is that it presupposes that the election belongs to the politicians. The election belongs to the people we represent.

I argue that McCain-Feingold is a step in the right direction, but if we want to have a system that gets out a lot of the big money, brings people back in, is not so wired for incumbents, and assures that we have a functioning representative democracy where we do live up to the goal of each person counting as one, and no more than one, frankly, clean money, clean elections is the direction in which to go, as has already been accomplished by a number of States. Maine, Vermont, Massaechusetts, and Arizona have led the way, but there are about 24 States in the country that have some system of public or partial financing.

This is not the time for clean money, clean elections. We are just voting on the following proposition:
Will we vote to allow our States, the people in our States and their elected representatives, the right to decide whether or not to adopt such a system?
And if we do not, some portion of full or partial public financing should be applied to U.S. House and Senate races. Why don’t we allow the people in our States the chance to make that decision?

This is a Brandeis amendment. States are the laboratories of reform. For Senators who say they want States to decide on the most fundamental core issue of all, which has to do with representative democracy, to do otherwise is to adopt the greatest division between us and the influence of the money.

The result of that was, we had nine 1-hour televised debates. And in the process of those nine 1-hour televised debates—in the course of all the free media—the people in the State were able to learn about Social Security, a debate about Medicare, a debate about health care, a debate about the economy; and they ultimately
made a decision.

plete wash, a mishmash that ulti-

The only way to stop having Americans and the American public to adopt the greatest division between us and the influence of the money. And that will come through some form of public financing.

It will be speaking more about this in the next few days. I will be offering an amendment to this bill that tries to go further than what we currently have on the table. I know the reason Senators was to get rid of special interest money—money that pollutes the system and drowns out the voices of ordinary persons. Special interest money has a tendency to influence anyone running for public office, or at a minimum, to create the impression that elected officials are beholden to someone other than the American people.

Public financing also helps to level the financial playing field for challengers taking on well established incumbents who virtually all of the fund-raising muscle.

But again, I encountered a lot of opposition, from colleagues on both sides of the aisle. A story I know I have told before: One senior Senator pulled me aside in the cloakroom, and told me that he had worked hard and earned his seniority, and he was not going to open the door for some challenger to be able to raise as much money as he could. He basically asked me—I expect when he would—it didn’t surprise me, he told me—to stop what I was doing.

In that same year, 1974, I wrote an article for the Northwestern University Law Review, outlining the three principal reasons why I was pursuing campaign finance reform. First, a political process that relied totally on private contributions allowed for, at the very least, the potential of wealthy individuals and special interest groups exercising a disproportionate influence over the system.

Second, such a process meant that wealthy candidates had an almost insurmountable advantage. And third, incumbents had an equally daunting advantage; the system virtually locked them into office.

We did make some progress in 1974, largely because of documented abuses in the 1972 presidential campaign, with the passage of Amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, known as the FECA. The 1974 amendments, which I supported, established the Federal Election Commission to help ensure proper enforcement of campaign laws, and also set the now familiar federal campaign contribution limits of $1,000 for individuals and $5,000 for political action committees.

The amendments further established campaign spending limits and expanded public financing for presidential campaigns.

Not unexpectedly, the constitutionality of the 1974 amendments was challenged almost immediately, and the Supreme Court decided the issue in its 1976 landmark ruling, Buckley v. VAEO.

The Court upheld the law’s contribution limits, but overturned the limits on expenditures as a too severe restriction on free speech. The Court could have chosen to limit the spending, but decided that such limits would put the Congress at odds with the First Amendment, and they would not impose them.

The Court upheld the election’s contribution limits, because it reasoned that these limits were necessary to prevent the spending of too much money in the elections, and that the limits would not “put a total limit on the amount of PAC money a candidate could accept.”

But the election’s contribution limits were a major step in the right direction, and we continued to work on the issue.

With my colleagues, Senator KERRY from Massachusetts and then-Senator Bradley from New Jersey, I offered public campaign financing bills in the 101st, the 102nd and the 103rd Congresses.

Others among our colleagues were equally persistent during this era, perhaps most notably, Senators Boren and Mitchell, Senator Danforth and Senator HOLLINGS, who has proposed a constitutional amendment to allow Congress to establish mandatory limits on contributions and expenditures for federal campaigns. I have supported that proposal in the past, as well as other reforms suggested by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and other colleagues.

We did manage to pass several significant pieces of legislation through the Senate, only to have the process stall in the conference process. And as I know many of my colleagues will remember, we even managed to get a pretty good bill out of conference and through both Houses, in 1992—a bill that included voluntary spending limits in congressional campaigns, in exchange for certain public funding benefits, as well as restrictions on PAC receipts and soft money.

But the legislation was vetoed by President George H.W. Bush, and our Senate override vote failed by 2 votes.

When we resubmitted the legislation the following year, with Senator Boren again as the lead sponsor and with President Clinton’s support and, indeed, some additional legislation proposed by the White House, the Congressional Campaign Spending Limit and Election Reform Act again got pretty far.

Just as I had done 20 years before, I testified before the Senate Rules Committee, arguing for public financing as the only road to true campaign finance reform. The bill, with one major compromise amendment, passed the Senate 60-38, but a compromise with the House proved more difficult, and our debate ended with a filibuster against appointing conferees.

The 104th Congress saw a few votes between President Clinton and the Speaker of the House, Mr. Gingrich, signaling their “agreement in principle” to pursue campaign finance reform. And the two major sweeping reform bills, which continue to dominate our debates today, were born McCain-Feingold in the Senate, and Smith-Meehan-Shays, now known as Shays-Meehan, in the House.

Then in 1997, I again partnered with Senator KERRY, as well as Senators WELSTONE, Glenn and LEAHY, to introduce the Clean Money, Clean Elections Act.

That proposal would have wiped private money out of the campaign system almost entirely, by greatly reducing the limit on individual contributions and imposing an additional limit for each state. Candidates would have received public funds and free media time, calculated by state size.

Unfortunately, as with so many other proposals directed toward public financing for congressional campaigns, we got no further than a referral to committee.

In recounting this history, I do not mean to sound downtrodden or discouraged.

We have made progress through congressional action with the FECA amendments and since 1979, the elimination of honoraria and the “grandfather clause” on the personal use of excess campaign funds, the National Voter Registration Act and the increase in the tax return checkoff for the Presidential Election Campaign Fund from $1 to $3.

The 106th Congress saw no fewer than 85 campaign finance reform bills introduced, 24 of them in the Senate, including the McCain-Feingold bill that we are debating today, as well as the Hagel-Kerrey bill on which hearings were held last spring.

While none of the sweeping reform proposals to pass it through the last Congress, we did take a small but important step, enacting a proposal initially offered by Senator LIEBERMAN... and later incorporated into an amendment he sponsored with Senators McCain and Feingold.

The legislation, which in virtually identical form to McCain-Feingold-Lieberman was signed into law by President Clinton last July, addressed the problem of so-called “stealth PACs,” operating under section 527 of the tax code.

Such organizations claimed tax exempt status, but at the same time also claimed from regulation under the Federal Election Campaign Act. That means those stealth PACs could try to influence political campaigns with undisclosed and unregulated contributions, all tax free.

The new law closes that loophole, requiring 527 organizations to adhere to appropriate regulatory and disclosure requirements. Again, an important step.

And I hope it is a step that gives us momentum to make further progress in the 107th Congress. My own legislative initiative about what I care most focused on public financing of federal campaigns, and I continue to believe that it is true course to reform.

But I have been in the past, and will be in our deliberations now, willing and eager to support other brands of reform that offer responsible regulation and close what can, at times, seem like an endless chain of newly exploited loopholes in existing law.

Our goal, whatever proposal is at issue, must be to uphold the public trust and to secure public confidence in the integrity of our election process. We are not entitled to that confidence; we have to earn it.

That is no small task, especially having just emerged from an election that was not only contentious but expensive—the total amount raised just by the two national parties was close to $1.2 billion, a $300 million increase from the 1996 election cycle.

And if that $1.2 billion was so-called “soft money,” raised and spent beyond the reach of federal regulation, although certainly with the intent of influencing some Federal elections. As the amounts and creative uses of soft money have grown, we must give the issue the serious consideration it merits, as, I might add, McCain-Feingold does, with its outright ban on soft money raising and spending in Federal races.

In the past, I have attempted to summarize today, we have made some progress, but time and time again, we have stopped short of how far we need to go on campaign finance reform.

The amendment offered by Senator WELSTONE today gives us at least a chance, for Senators in some States, to discard the influences of special interests.

Public financing allows candidates to compete on an equal footing where the merits of their ideas outweigh the size of their pocketbook. It frees members from the corroding dependence on personal or family fortune or the gifts of special interest backers. It ends the need for perpetual fundraising by elected officials.

But above all else, it helps restore the American people’s faith in our democracy.

The truth is that campaigns are financed by all the people—not just a small percentage—they will create much better government and will do the one thing that most needs to be done at this time, and that is to begin to restore integrity in the system. Either all of America decides who runs for office, or only a few people. It’s as simple as that.

And if we cannot pass this at the Federal level, let’s at least give the States the chance to do it, as Senator WELSTONE is proposing. The fact is, the States have been leading the way when it comes to public financing.

My home State is now considering such a proposal. If candidates can agree to spending limits, and choose public financing over unregulated contributions, all tax free.

Public financing is the true, comprehensive way to reform. While I would prefer to enact public financing at the federal level, I nevertheless support my colleague’s effort to restore faith in our electoral process by giving the States the go ahead.

Madam President, I don’t understand what my friend from Kentucky gets so worried about. I know he disagrees with guys like me and the Senator from Massachusetts about public financing of elections, which I think is the only way we ever clean this up.

This is a simple yet important amendment. All we are saying is, if your State decides it wants to put in a financing system and if both candidates running for office or three candidates running for that office agree to abide by it, then what is the big deal?

I find it so fascinating that by and large my Republican friends talk about clean money. However, states find themselves restrained in enacting a so-called public financing system allowing candidates a level playing field when seeking statewide office. But above all else, it helps restore the States the freedom to determine the need for perpetual fundraising by elected officials.

But above all else, it helps restore the States the freedom to determine the format of their own campaign finance systems? Or do we allow reform to end with McCain-Feingold, to end with the Congress?

New Jersey has an excellent public financing system for gubernatorial candidates. The State to extend this system to include Federal candidates holds a great deal of promise. In New Jersey, candidates seeking public financing agree to a funding cap that keeps pace with inflation. Then, for expenses raised by the candidate, the State matches him with two. When all is said and done, the candidate does have one-third of the fundraising. Imagine all the additional time you could spend engaging with voters about the issues that affect their lives as opposed to overburdened with fundraising responsibilities. Politicians can spend less time on the fundraising and more time on the campaign trail. The Democratic candidate for governor, Mayor James McGreevey, stopped fundraising for the June primary in January.

This amendment will allow States like New Jersey to pick up where McCain-Feingold leaves off. It allows State governments to create a truly level playing field in the States and serve as examples to the Nation of realistic and forward-looking approaches to campaign finance reform. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, about the only thing more unpopular than taxpayer funding of elections would be a congressional pay raise. The American people hate, detest, and despise the notion that their tax dollars would be used to fund political campaigns. We have the biggest survey in the history of America on this very issue. The high water mark of American participation in the Presidential checkoff was 28.7 percent.

At that time, the high water mark, 28.7 percent, of Americans were willing to divert $1 of the taxes they already owed. It has been consistently tracking down over the years to a point where about 10 years ago the Congress changed the dollar checkoff to $3, so fewer and fewer people could divert greater and greater amounts of money to try to make up for the shortfall that was occurring because of lack of participation, lack of interest, and opposition to the Presidential publicly funded elections.

In the 2000 campaign just completed, the 2000 Presidential primary candidates were only able to accept a percent of the matching funds they were due that year, even with three of the Republican candidates—Governor Bush, Steve Forbes, and Senator HATCH—not accepting taxpayer funds. So they have had a problem, even with the $3 checkoff, dealing with keeping this fund adequately up to snuff. Now the other thing worthy of notice is, even if a State were to set up taxpayer funding of the election system, they could not constitutionally deny this money to fringe and crackpot candidates.

It is worth noting that over the history of the taxpayer-funded system for Presidential elections that began a quarter century ago, taxpayers ponied up more than $1 billion overall, and $40 million of it has gone to candidates such as Lyndon LaRouche and Lenora Pulini. Larouche got taxpayer money even while he was in jail.

It is important for my colleagues to understand that even if a State, with concurrence of the candidates for Congress, decided to set up a taxpayer-funded scheme for the election for the Senate in that particular State, there would be no way, constitutionally, to restrict those funds to just the candidates of the Republican Party and the Democratic Party. So you would have an opportunity all across America to replicate the system we have had in the Presidential system, where fringe and crackpot candidates get money from the Treasury to pay for their campaigns for office.

I think this is really an issue that greatly separates many Senators philosophically, as to whether or not reaching into the Treasury—whether the Federal or State treasury—whether the Federal or State treasury should be used to pay for the campaigns for President of the United States and to buy buttons and balloons for the national conventions.

So we have this massive survey every April 15 in which Americans get to vote on this very issue. The high water mark of American participation in the Presidential checkoff was 28.7 percent. That was in 1980—about 20 years ago. At that time, the high water mark, 28.7 percent, of Americans were willing to divert $1 of the taxes they already owed. It has been consistently tracking down over the years to a point where about 10 years ago the Congress changed the dollar checkoff to $3.
The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The next amendment is offered by Senator Hatch, and I see the Senator from Utah is on the floor. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 134.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To strike section 304 and add a provision to require disclosure to and consent by shareholders and members regarding use of funds for political activities)

Beginning on page 33, strike line 8 and all that follows through page 37, line 14, and insert the following:

"(2) POLITICAL ACTIVITY.—The term ‘political activity’ means:

"(A) voter registration activity;

"(B) voter identification or get-out-the-vote activity;

"(C) public communication that refers to a clearly identified candidate for Federal office and that expressly advocates support for or opposition to a candidate for Federal office; and

"(D) disbursements for television or radio broadcast time, print advertising, or polling for political activities.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise today to say a few words on the task at hand, namely reforming our campaign finance laws and doing it within the contours of the First Amendment of our Constitution. I fully appreciate that the issue of campaign finance is one of growing concern to the American electorate and has already played an important role in the recent election.

And I commend my colleagues, Senators McCain and Feingold for their bold leadership in an effort to address the public perception that our political system may be corrupt. At this time, I will simply explain the limitations we face in this endeavor. Limitations imposed by the cherished First Amendment of our Constitution. During the course of this debate, I will more specifically address the underlying legislation, and where in my analysis of the law it fails short of meeting minimal constitutional requirements. There are some bright lines drawn by the Supreme Court on this issue and I will get to that.

The Founders of our country certainly understood the link between free elections and liberty. Representative governments were the only hope for the people registered in periodic elections—was—to these prescient leaders of the new nation—the primary protection of natural or fundamental rights. As Thomas Jefferson put it in the Declaration of Independence, to secure rights ‘Governments are instituted among Men’ and must derive ‘their just Powers from the Consent of the Governed.’

That freedom of speech and press was considered by Madison to be vital in assuring that the electorate receives accurate information about political candidates was demonstrated by his vehement arguments against the Alien and Sedition Acts in 1800. The Sedition Act, in effect, made it a crime to criticize government or government officials. Its passage was a black mark on our history.

Although the exact meaning or parameters of the First Amendment are not clear, a thorough reading of the Supreme Court jurisprudence provides constructive guides for us in Congress.

Political speech is necessarily intertwined with electoral speech, particularly the right of the people in election cycles to criticize or support their government. Indeed, the form of government established by the Constitution is uniquely intertwined with freedom of speech. The very structure of the Constitution itself establishes a representative democracy, which many observers, including myself, find to be a form of government that would be meaningless, less without freedom to discuss government and its policies.

To get to the heart of the matter being discussed today, I want to turn to the seminal Supreme Court case of Buckley v. Valeo.

In short, Buckley and its progeny stand for the following propositions: (1) money is speech; that is, electoral contributions and expenditures are entitled to First Amendment protection; (2) contributions are entitled to less protection than expenditures because they create the appearance of corruption or quid pro quo; (3) express advocacy is entitled to greater protection than issue advocacy; (4) corporate donations and corporate express advocacy expenditures may be restricted; (5) political party independent expenditures may not be restricted at least if not connected to a campaign; and (6) restrictions on soft money are probably unconstitutional because soft money does not create the same problem of corruption from quid pro quo that contributions bring. I will explain these further.

To understand why certain recent campaign finance reform measures, such as the well-intentioned McCain-Feingold bill, infringe on free speech and free elections, it is necessary to survey the Supreme Court’s decisions on campaign finance reform and the problems it brings to free speech. The granddaddy of these cases is Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976). Buckley established the free speech paradigm in which the Court weighed competing campaign reform proposals.

As my colleagues know well, two decades ago, in the wake of the Watergate scandal, Congress passed the Federal Election Campaign Act, or FECA. The Act imposed a comprehensive scheme of limitations on the amount of money that can be given and spent in political campaigns. FECA capped contributions made to candidates and their campaigns, as well as expenditures made to effect public issues, including those that arise in a campaign. The Act also required public disclosure of money raised and spent in federal elections.

The Supreme Court in Buckley upheld against a First Amendment challenge the limitations on contributions but not the limitations on expenditures. The Court reasoned that contributions implicated only limited free speech interests because contributions merely facilitated the speech of others, whereas expenditures, which the Court’s analysis was its belief that limiting contributions was a legitimate governmental interest in preventing “corruption” or the “appearance of corruption” because such limitations would prevent a single donor from gaining a disproportionate influence with the elected official—the so-called “quid pro quo” effect. A similar interest justified mandatory public disclosure of political contributions above minimal amounts.

But Buckley reasoned that expenditures of money by the candidate or others outside the campaign did not implicate the same governmental interests because expenditures relate directly to the candidate’s right to receive public access to elections and are less likely to thwart the candidate’s ability to exert a quid pro quo. Therefore, to the Court, limitations on expenditures could not be justified on any anti-corruption rationale. Nor could they be justified by a theory—popular in radical circles—that limitations on expenditures, particularly on the wealthy or powerful, equalize relative speaking power and ensure that the voices of the masses will be heard.

The Court viewed such governmental attention to free speech as an abomination to free speech and held that this justification for restraints on expenditures was “wholly foreign to the First Amendment.” It seems to me that such “balance” is, in reality, a form of suppression of certain viewpoints, a position that flies in the face of Justice Holmes’ notion that the First Amendment prohibits suppression of ideas because truth can only be determined in the “marketplace” of competing ideas. Significantly, the Supreme Court in Buckley held that any campaign finance limitations apply only to “communications that in express terms advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate for federal office.” As we have heard before, a footnote to the opinion elaborated on what has later been termed “express advocacy.” To the Court, communications that fall under FECA’s purview must contain “magic words” like “vote for” or “Smith for Congress” or “vote against” or “defeat” or “reject.” Communications without these electoral advocacy terms have subsequently almost always been classified by courts as issue advocacy entitlement to full First Amendment strict scrutiny protection.

One important underpinning of the Buckley Court’s view of the relationship between the freedom of speech and elections is that money equates with speech. The Court in a fit of pragmatism recognized that effective speech requires money in the market place to compete. But beyond looking at the purpose of campaign finance laws, it is clear that restrictions do restrict the communicative effectiveness of speech. Let me borrow Professor Sullivan’s example of a law restricting the retail price of a book to no more than twenty dollars. To Justice Stevens such a law is an impairment of speech and not about a particular book. But does not such a law limit the amount and effectiveness of speech because it creates a disincentive to write and publish such books. The Supreme Court has never decided the problem of corruption of elected representatives through creation of political debts and that the latter “presents no comparable problem” because it involved contributions and expenditures that would be used for issue advocacy rather than communication that expressly advocate the election or defeat of a candidate.

In Citizens Against Rent Control/Coalition for Fair Housing v. Berkeley, the Court once again gave full panoply of protection to expenditures linked to communication of ideas. In this case the Court invalidated a provision that limited to $250 contributions to committees formed solely to support or oppose ballot measures submitted to popular vote. The Court held that it is an impairment of freedom of expression to place limits on contributions which in turn directly limit expenditures used to communicate political ideas, without a showing of the “corruption” element laid out in Buckley.

In Federal Election Commission v. National Conservative Political Action Committee, the Court once again relied on Buckley’s distinction between expenditures and contributions, with the former receiving full first amendment protection. The Court invalidated a section of the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act which made it a criminal offense for an independent political committee to spend more than $1000 to further the election of a Presidential candidate who elects to receive public funding. The Court held that the PAC’s independent expenditures were constitutionally protected because they “produce speech at the core of the first amendment.”

One year later, in Federal Election Commission v. Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Inc., the Supreme Court clarified the distinction between issue and express advocacy, holding that an expenditure must constitute express advocacy in order to be subject to FECA’s prohibition against the use of corporate treasury funds to make an expenditure “in connection with” any Federal election. In this case, the Court held that a publication urging voters to vote for “pro-life” candidates, that the publication identified, fell into the category of express advocacy. But the Court refused to apply FECA’s prohibition in this case to MCFL—Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Inc.—because the organization was not a business organization. The Court noted that “[g]roups such as MCFL and their like—per se ‘interest’ groups, do not produce speech at all, but merely form political ideas, not to amass capital.”

Just 5 years ago, the Supreme Court, in Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Committee v. FEC addressed the issue of whether party “hard money” used to purchase an advertising campaign attacking the other party’s likely candidate, but uncoordinated with its own party’s nominee’s campaign, fell under FECA’s restrictions on party expenditures. A fractured Court agreed that applying FECA’s restrictions to the expenditures in question violated the first amendment.

A plurality of the Court—Justices Breyer, O’Connor, and Souter—based their holding on the theory that the expenditure at hand had to be treated as an independent expenditure entitled to first amendment protection, not as a “coordinated” expenditure or express advocacy. The plurality is significant to note that Justice Thomas, joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice Scalia, concurred in the judgment, but would abolish Buckley’s distinction between protected expenditures and unprotected contributions, believing that both implicated core expression central to the first amendment.

As a plurality of the Court noted, because any soft money used to fund a Federal election must comply with the contribution limits already in place, soft money does not result in the actuality or the appearance of quid pro quo “corruption” warranting intrusions on core free speech protected by the first amendment. In any event, it is my view that such soft money activities such as voter registration drives, voter identification, and get-out-the-vote drives, as well as communication with voters that do not fall within express advocacy, are protected by the first amendment and are shielded from regulation—the right to freely associate with a party, union, or association—as well as by free speech.

Finally, there is the very recent case of Nixon, just last year. I remember that when this case was decided, proponents of so-called campaign finance reform gloated that this case supported their positions. In my view, all the case did was to add restrictions on contributions to State campaign finance laws. The Court rejected a challenge to Missouri’s contribution restriction as too limited because it did not take into account inflation. The Court held that Buckley demonstrated the dangers of corruption stemming from contributions and that there was sufficient evidence in the record to support the conclusion that Missouri’s campaign contribution limit addressed the appearance of corruption. The case did not address the issues of independent expenditures, issue advocacy, or soft money expenditures.

As I noted at the outset, Buckley and its progeny stand for the following propositions: No. 1, money is speech; that is, electoral contributions and expenditures are entitled to first amendment protection; No. 2, contributions are entitled to less protection than expenditures because they create the appearance of corruption or quid pro quo corruption; and No. 3, corporate express advocacy expenditures may be restricted. It is entitled to less deference than issue advocacy; No. 4, corporate donations and corporate express advocacy expenditures may be restricted; No. 5, political party independent expenditures may be restricted if not connected to a campaign; and, No. 6, restrictions on soft money are probably unconstitutional because soft money does not create the same problem of corruption from quid pro quo that contributions bring.

I am concerned that the practical result of the limitation on contributions is that candidates must seek contributions from a larger set of donors. This means that candidates are spending a larger fraction of their money than would otherwise be the case. This is aggravated by the need for a lot of money in general to compete in American elections, given our large electoral districts, statewide elections, and weak political parties, which require candidates to fund direct communications to the electorate. The rising costs of elections are further aggravated by the rising importance of expensive television advertising and the use of premiums in the early days of the campaign. The premium on hard money than would otherwise be the case. The winner will be the public. They will audit the Republicans and the Republicans will audit the Democrats. And outside public interest groups and the media will police both. The winner with such ownership will be able to make their own assessments. As I have said before, one man’s greedy special interest is another man’s organization fighting for truth and justice.

Ironically, this is the major complaint of the reformers. Their initial FECA reforms have caused the problems they are now complaining about. First, PAC money, and now soft money, are the result of limitations on contributions. Let’s not kid ourselves. Like pressurized gas, money will always find a crevice of escape. In other words, money will buckley’s find a loophole. The solution is to rewrite FECA and use the system of direct democracy to change. But the Congress has accomplished is to encourage the substitution of contributions to candidates for contributions and expenditures made to and by organizations such as political parties or advocacy groups. These organizations are less accountable to the voter. The net result is the growth of yet another huge government bureaucracy to police an inherently unworkable scheme.

Ironically, as does the efficacy of Justice Holmes’ free speech model of a “marketplace of competing ideas,” it is impermissible to drown out or even ban corporate speech or the speech of the wealthy, as some advocate. If the remedy for “bad” speech is not censorship, but “more” speech, then the remedy for corporate speech is likewise not censorship, but more noncorporate speech.

It should be obvious that in the electoral sphere the wealthy and powerful have no monopoly over speech. This is not analogous to Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, where the Court in part upheld the congressional requirement that cable operators carry a certain percentage of noncommercial broadcasting of local programs on their lines because cable’s monopoly power choked the broadcast competitors. Unlike the open access rule in that case, limitations on contributions offer no assurance that the number of speech will be redistributed from the wealthy to the poor. Such spending limits will not stop wealthy candidates like Ross Perot from spending personal wealth or the rich from influencing public policy through campaign contributions or through the purchase of advertisement. Surely, no one would advocate that we attach an income test to the first amendment.

The wealthy will always have substitutes for electoral speech. Moreover, the success of the labor unions and volunteer associations as competitors in the marketplace of ideas demonstrate that limitations on contributions from the wealthy and on corporate speech are unnecessary.

In my view, a far better, though, admittedly not perfect, solution—one that I believe is both workable and is consistent with the dictates of the first amendment—is a campaign system that requires complete disclosure of funds contributed to candidates or used to finance express advocacy by independent associations, political parties, corporations, unions, or individual in connection with an election. The winner with such ownership would bring the disinfectant of sunshine to the system. The Democrats will audit the Republicans and the Republicans will scrutinize the Democrats. And outside public interest groups and the media will police both. The winner with such ownership will be able to make their own assessments. As I have said before, one man’s greedy special interest is another man’s organization fighting for truth and justice.

To the extent that our campaign finance laws require updating, we need to find a constitutionally sound manner of doing so. We need to proceed with care and caution when acting on legislation that would have the impact of regulating freedom or of placing government at the center of determining what is acceptable election speech and what is not. And, we need to pass legislation that, above all, keeps the power of elections where it rightfully belongs—in the hands of the voters themselves.

Let me again commend my friends, Senators McCaIN and FeINGOLD, for their leadership on this issue. Without their efforts and tenacity and pushing this issue, we probably would not be discussing this important matter. They deserve a lot of credit. Even though I disagree and have done so very publicly, I still have a lot of respect for my two colleagues.

It is important to publicly air these issues, especially given the unfortunate perception of the problems in Washington. We can achieve needed reform here. Such reform lies in expanded disclosures. With free and open disclosure of contributions, the public will be fully able to decide for itself what is legitimate. I look forward to helping my colleagues in achieving reforms that will be considered effective.

Today, I rise to introduce an amendment as a substitute to section 304 of the McCain/Feingold campaign finance reform bill of 2001. "Thomas Jefferson, in 1779, wrote that ‘to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical.’ That was true then, and it remains true today.

As I will discuss later, section 304 of the McCain/Feingold bill that purports to be a ‘Beck’ fix is wholly inadequate. Thus, I rise today to protect the rights of working men and women in this country to be able to decide for themselves which political causes they wish to support.

Some will choose to make this a complicated issue by arguing the intricacies of the Supreme Court Case, Communications Workers of America v. Beck, but it is really quite straightforward—it’s about fairness. In certain states, as a condition of employment, there are requirements to join or pay dues to a labor organization. Let me make clear at the outset that I am a strong supporter of collective bargaining—collective bargaining which employees voluntarily choose to be represented by a labor organization.

But I seriously doubt that even one of my colleagues would suggest that the Government should force any American to speak in favor of causes in which he or she does not believe. Yet, we as Members of the U.S. Senate, currently stand by and allow our friends and constituents to be forced into speech because of their compulsory financial involvements with a labor organization. I would like to know which of my colleagues would support any provision of law that would mandate an individual’s financial involvement in a practice that was fundamentally at variance with their own beliefs. I dare say that there would not be many Members from either side of the aisle who would advocate the arbitrary usurpation of fundamental freedoms like that of compelling individuals who are shareholders which political activity it contributes to. This amendment places corporations and labor organizations on equal ground and levels the playing field.

I feel that it is important to note that there is a fundamental difference between the compulsory nature of union dues and fees from members and non-members and the completely voluntary nature of shareholders which political activity it contributes to. This amendment places corporations and labor organizations on equal ground and levels the playing field.

It is simply imperative and pretty basic that union should obtain consent to use the funds they receive prior to any use other than for collective bargaining, contract administration, or grievance adjustment. After all, if consent is to mean anything, then it must be received before the money is spent. After the fact is simply too late and means no consent was given for the ‘activity.’ Let me state it again because this is a matter of vital importance: the public has a right to require a labor organization disclose to its membership how it has allocated and spent the portion of a member’s dues which political expenditure—members and non-members and fees and that went to political activity. I think there should be more fair to inform working men and women which causes they are supporting. It is just that simple.

Let me also point out to my colleagues that this amendment also covers individuals who are shareholders in a corporation. It requires that a corporation disclose to its shareholders how it has allocated and spent the portion of a member’s or non-members dues and fees that went to political activity. I think there should be more fair to inform working men and women which causes they are supporting. It is just that simple.

Signature Act must also be provided to individuals who enter in a contract over the Internet. We must allow America’s working men and women these very fundamental rights. American workers should have the right to have meaningful and informed consent over the expenditure of their dues, fees, or payment made to their union. Without these rights we are in essence creating different classes of society—those who are free to determine which political groups they will support and those who are not.

I hope that my colleagues will agree with me that the standards for meaningful and informed consent we extended to consumers under the Digital Signature Act must also be provided to workers and shareholders.

My amendment is a commonsense solution to an important problem pertinent to the lives of many Americans. The solution—consent before spending. I said that real consent is prior consent. Let me give you an example. The Electronic Communications Privacy and National Commerce Act of 1999—better known as the Digital Signature Act—legalized digital electronic contracts. The act allows an individual to enter into a binding contract without ever having to leave the comfort of his home through the use of a so-called digital signature.

When the Digital Signature Act was first introduced, many of my Democratic colleagues had serious reservations about it. They argued that the bill lacked basic, but extremely important, consumer protection provisions. Critics of the bill worried that an unsuspecting consumer might receive a solicited e-mail with the inclusion of an electronic signature therefore making the contract legally enforceable. To prevent this sort of unwanted solicitation of business, many of my Democratic colleagues advocated the Consumer’s Right to Revocation Act which would allow the consumer to receive the contract electronically.

My amendment seeks to extend similar rights to workers that the Digital Signature Act granted consumers. We should allow workers the same fundamental right to revoke their consent at any time. If he doesn’t, then it’s a crime. Wouldn’t it be odd to have a system in place that requires you to lend the car and then file a form for its return? Why should the unions be allowed to take from the people who pay dues without getting their consent first? By adopting this amendment, we can help all Americans. It is fairer and more equitable to obtain consent before the dues are spent. That is the right way of doing it.

Unions have the right, like any other organization, to spend the dues and fees it collects for purposes such as campaigns, issue ads, and a host of additional political and other activities. I support this. What we are concerned about is that employees are effectively forced to pay dues and fees may disagree with the purposes taken and not wish to support them.

Now some have suggested that section 304 takes care of the so-called Beck problems and codifies Beck.

Unfortunately, the proposed section 304 of the McCain-Feingold bill does not require prior consent. Nor does it codify Beck, as it purports to do. Section 304 is far narrower than the holding in Beck. The Supreme Court clearly held in Beck that any expenditures outside of collective bargaining, contract administration, or grievance must be returned to the non-union employee upon request of the objecting employee. However, section 304 only prohibits unions from using non-union employee dues for “political activities unrelated to collective bargaining”—an ambiguous phrase that is not defined in that section.

Because section 304 is so narrowly drafted, it would allow unions to use non-union dues for soft money non-collective bargaining expenditures, such as get-out-the-vote campaigns and other political activities, by simply avoiding the label “political.” By masquerading the activity as one for “educational purposes,” a union could use dry money for purely political activities such as informing union members on what pro-union political candidates take.

Again, I recognize the unions’ right to engage in any political activity that they find appropriate. The more political speech the better as far as I’m concerned. But, we need to protect the fundamental right of the workers to know about their money is being spent on the political activities their leadership have a legitimate interest in keeping secret what political causes and activities employees are being asked to support. If employees learn how their money is being spent in the political process, unions will enjoy an even greater confidence level in their decision making.

With the addition of this amendment to the McCain-Feingold bill we will ensure that every American is treated equally under the law and extended the rights and freedoms that are fundamental under the Constitution. I urge my colleagues to thoughtfully consider this amendment and vote for its passage.

I reserve the remainder of any time I may have remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRUZ): Mr. DODD. Mr. DODD. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Mr. EDWARDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my strong support for the McCain-Feingold bill, to add my encouragement and praise for all the hard work done by Senators McCain and Feingold, and to say how important this issue is to our democracy, to our Government, and to the American people.

I would not presume to suggest to my colleagues who serve with me in the Senate that I have any more knowledge about the way the political financing system in this country works than they do. They are all experts at it. What I say is that this debate is not about us. Instead, it is about the people we were sent here to represent.

I have heard, both in the media and in the course of the debate, lots of discussion about some strategic advantage that may flow to one party, or one Senator or another, as a result of this bill. What I say about that argument is that thirty years from now, the American people will not judge what we do in these 2 weeks based upon some transitory, strategic advantage that one party or another may gain as a result of the McCain-Feingold bill. Instead, they are going to judge us based on what we did for our Government, for our democracy, and what we did to allow voters, ordinary Americans, to once again believe they have some ownership in this democracy. That ultimately is what it is all about.

I say to colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans, that whatever in the long term is good for our democracy is good for either the Democratic or the Republican Party. I think that is the test we should use in making judgments about what ought to be done.

During the course of my time in the Senate, I have held many townhall meetings around the country. A lot of people and over and over I hear the same refrain—folks believe that they no longer have a voice in their own democracy and, as a result, they don’t feel any ownership in the Government. It is some faraway place, and they don’t think they do anything to help them. They think it is just some bureaucratic institution that has nothing to do with their day-to-day lives. More important, they feel impotent to do anything about it.

The folks I grew up with in smalltown North Carolina, oddly enough, think if somebody writes a $300,000 or $500,000 check to a political party or for a particular election, when they go to the polls and vote, their voices will not be equally heard. I think that is just good common sense, and there is a reason people think that way. This is an issue we need to do something about. A lot of it is perception but perception matters. It really matters when people believe this isn’t their Government. It is their democracy; it belongs to them, not to some special interest group, and not to the people who are up here representing them. In fact, it belongs to the American people.

A couple of examples. Mr. President: We are in the process right now of trying to pass an HMO reform bill. Senator MCCAIN, Senator KENNEDY, and I, and Congressmen NORWOOD, DINGELL, and GANSSKE on the House side have introduced the same bill. Our legislation, which provides basic patient protection rights for every single person who is covered by insurance or HMOs, is supported by every health insurance group that has been fighting for patient protection for the last 5 years. The only people we have been able to identify on the opposition side are the big HMOs and insurance companies.

Unfortunately, the big HMOs and insurance companies are very well represented in Washington, and their voice is heard loudly and clearly. It is really important for the public, the American people, to be heard on issues such as basic patient rights. Then I read in the newspaper today that at least it appears there is going to be some pulling back of the regulation of arsenic in drinking water. These are the kinds of things that, when folks around the country see them, cause them concern, and they particularly cause concern—even though they may not see a direct relationship—the particularly cause them to be worried when they know the way political campaigns are financed in this country, and they know that lots of huge, unregulated soft money contributions are being made to political campaigns in every election cycle.

So the question is, What do we do to return power in this democracy to where it started and made our country so great and where it belongs today?

We are trying to do two basic things in this bill. One is to ban soft money— we talked about it at length—these unregulated, totally uncontrolled contributions made by special interests, corporations, many different groups, and individuals.

The simple answer is, it ought to be banned, and it ought to be banned today. We will talk at length later about constitutional issues, but it is black and white to anyone who has read the law and specifically applies the analysis of that case to a soft money ban. There is absolutely no question that a ban on soft money is constitutional under Buckley v. Valeo. We will talk about that at length at a later time.

The second issue is these bogus sham issue ads. In addition to the fact folks see all this money flowing into the system, they feel cynical, they feel they do not own their Government anymore, and that they have no voice in democracy.

In addition to that, they turn on their televisions in the last 2 months before an election and see mostly hateful, negative, personal attack ads posing as legitimate election laws of this country.

We are trying to put an end to these so-called issue ads that are nothing but campaign ads. It is another issue that needs to be addressed. All this—these issue ads that are nothing but sham ads, really campaign ads, unregulated flow of soft money into campaigns—all this is about a very simple thing. It is not about us. It is not about the people in Washington. It is not about the people in this Congress. It is about the people we were sent to represent. We need to be able to say 20, 30 years from now when we were not around anymore—at least some of us will not be around anymore—we need to be able to say to our children and our families that we did the right thing; we did what was best for the country, and we did what was best for the democracy.

We will talk about this issue later, but it is also clear that Snowe-Jeffords, under the constitutional test established in Buckley v. Valeo, is constitutional. There are only two requirements that have to be met: One, that there be compelling State interest under Buckley. The Court has already held that what we are doing in these sham issue ads with soft money is a compelling State interest because of the need to avoid corruption or, more importantly, in this case, the appearance of corruption.

Second, the limitation has to be narrowly tailored. That has been interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court to mean it is not too broad, not substantially overbroad. Snowe-Jeffords does exactly that. It is very narrowly tailored. Two months before the general election, it identifies the uniqueness of the candidate or the name of the candidate to be used and only applies to broadcast ads.

The empirical evidence shows very clearly that something around 1 percent of the ads are not covered by that, actually issue ads that fall within that category. Ninety-nine percent of the ads in the last election cycle, in fact, were campaign ads.

What that empirical evidence supports is the notion that not only does it appear that Snowe-Jeffords is narrowly tailored, in fact, the overwhelming evidence is that it is narrowly tailored, which is exactly what the Buckley U.S. Supreme Court decision required. We will talk about this later as we discuss these various provisions.

The bottom line is, both the soft money ban and Snowe-Jeffords are constitutional and meet the constitutional requirements of Buckley v. Valeo.

In conclusion, I thank the Senators who have worked so hard on this issue for so long. I say to my colleagues, I hope that instead of focusing on some strategic advantage that a particular campaign may have, or a particular political party may have, that instead we will focus on what is best for democracy and what is best for the American people.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, how much time remains on the opponents’ side? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The opponents have 15 minutes.

Mr. DODD. I yield 3 minutes to my good friend from Arizona, the author of the underlying bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank Senator HATCH for a valiant attempt at trying to balance this problem about so-called paycheck protection and corporations. Unfortunately, he is not having any more success than we did when we attempted to try to strike that balance as well.

The bill, very briefly, strikes our codification of the Beck provision. It has no regulatory mechanism, and it has no methodology for who would enforce it and how. It says in his amendment that “expressly advocate support for opposition to a candidate.” What does that mean? What talks about as the reasons we are concerned, “use funds from its general treasury for the purpose of political activity.” What is the general treasury? The stock market value? The cash on hand? The money that is being drained off?

This, unfortunately, is an amendment which clearly cannot adequately define what a stockholder’s involvement is. Again, suppose a stockholder said his or her stock money could not be used and then, of course, the stock is split or the stock is sold or there is a reduction in the amount of the budget. Who gets what money? Who regulates it?

Very frankly, I am in sympathy with the Senator from Utah because we tried to address this issue. It is just well nigh impossible and certainly is not addressed in any kind of parity or specificity in this amendment.

Mr. President, I will be moving to table this amendment at the appropriate time. I would like to work with the Senator from Utah to see how we can obtain some kind of parity, although I point out, as I said before, the paycheck protection in this permission or nonpermission really is not what this campaign finance reform is all about because if you ban the soft money; you ban the corporate check; you ban the union check; you ban the union leader from giving a million-dollar check; you ban the corporate leader from giving the check. When you ban soft money, then all they can do is give a $1,000 check for themselves or $1,000 from their friends.

Later on, I am sure there will be some specific questions about the language in this bill. It is nonspecific. It is unenforceable, and it is in such an amorphous state, very frankly, it is meaningless. I believe my time has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague. I intend to speak about this amendment at some future point in the debate. In the meantime, I recognize my friend and colleague from Massachusetts. How much time does he need? Fifteen minutes?

Mr. KENNEDY. If I can start with 15 minutes.

Mr. DODD. I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to ask my friend and colleague from Utah some questions, if he will be good enough to answer some questions. I understand that for-profit corporations are privately held, how does this amendment apply to them?
Mr. HATCH. It applies to every corporation.

Mr. KENNEDY. It cannot because you refer to those that have stockholders, page 2. Since 99 percent of the corporations do not have them, then they are not covered.

Mr. HATCH. I do not know a corporation that does not have stockholders, whether they be private or public.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am telling you they do not, so effectively your amendment does includes all to the 99.7 percent under your definition.

We always get these amendments maybe a half an hour beforehand.

In our review, the Senator’s amendment excludes 99.7 percent of all corporations.

Another question I have—

Mr. HATCH. Can I answer the Senator, since he asked the question?

Mr. KENNEDY. These are of the businesses—

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield so I can answer his question?

Mr. KENNEDY. OK.

Mr. HATCH. My amendment covers every corporation. There are a lot of private corporations, but they are still corporations.

Let’s face it. The major thrust of my amendment is towards public corporations which has been complained of from time to time by Senators on both sides of the aisle. I am trying to cover both unions and corporations so we have an equal protection program.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator may be attempting, but that is not what the language says.

On page 2, it says under “Promotion.—Except with the separate, prior, written, voluntary authorization of a stockholder, in case of a corporation”—and once we have 99 percent of the businesses, according to Dun & Bradstreet, not covered by the stockholders, they are even, by mere definition, excluded.

Last week more than 6.7 billion shares were traded in the New York Stock Exchange. How were those covered? Would the Senator’s amendment apply to just the stockholders included last week?

Mr. HATCH. My amendment would cover the stockholders who existed on the day the request for the expenditures was made.

Mr. KENNEDY. In your amendment, you have to any two cycle; you don’t talk about day. A cycle is generally referred, under the Federal Election Commission, to be the whole 2-year-period. We are talking about these transitions in terms of stockholders just from 1 day. I am wondering how the permission for stockholders would be met in those circumstances.

Mr. HATCH. We are talking about violations of the Federal Election Campaign Act. The FEC would have the job of determining the regulations applicable to independent activities. The amendment is quite clear what we are trying to get after; that is, trying to give stockholders and union members a right to have some say in the way unions spend, in the case of unions, and corporations, in the way corporations spend on behalf of shareholders.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is the position of Senators McCaIN and FEINGOLD that is done under modification of the Beck decision in the first place. You talk about the parity between corporations and unions. Yet on page 3 you say “for any corporation described in this section to use funds from its general treasury.” So you are talking about the use of funds by corporations.

But on the other hand, if it is a labor organization, you are talking about collecting or assessing such employees’ dues or initiation fees or other payments. On the one hand, you require one criteria for corporations for expenditures, and on the other hand, for the unions, you have an entirely different definition.

Can you explain why you favor corporations in your language to the disadvantage of unions? Why do we have such a disparity in this when you tried to represent to the Senate that you are trying to be evenhanded?

Mr. HATCH. What are we talking about?

Mr. KENNEDY. Would you look at this language and tell me if I am wrong? I think it is very important. You are representing this is evenhanded. This is not evenhanded. We want to understand why it isn’t evenhanded or the Senator should admit it isn’t, if you are trying effectively to gut the representatives of working families.

Mr. HATCH. I don’t think the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is wrong in what he is saying. I don’t think you are wrong in your interpretation of the language, but the bill treats the union members and their dues in the separate context of shareholders and their value in a corporation.

The regulations will have to be set by the Federal Election Commission pursuant to this amendment. It is equal in treatment because what we are trying to do is give the shareholders in the case of corporations a right to have some say in how the assets of a corporation are used, in proportion to their shares in a corporation. Naturally, these situations are not analogous, and for the union member, how the dues of the union member are spent by the unions.

The Senator’s characterization of the McCaIN-Feingold language is inaccurate, and I think I more than indicated that in my opening remarks with regard to the Beck case. Actually, the McCaIN-Feingold language narrows the Beck case.

Mr. KENNEDY. If I could reclaim my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, what we are seeing very clearly is not what is being stated by the Senator from Utah but what is included in the language. That is what we are voting on. In the language of the amendment, it is very clear on page 2 that in the case of a corporation, to each of its shareholders, it is less than 2 percent of all businesses that have shareholders.

For shareholders, it is targeted for the velocity of the transitions of shareholders—we find there is a different criteria that is used for unions, different from corporations.

On the first page, it talks about any contribution or labor organization, trying the case of a labor organization, it must submit a written report for such cycle—that is 2 years; in the case of a labor organization, to each employee. Now, that is to each employee. There are 13 million members of the trade union movement. Those who are members, of course, bargain. Several million more are covered, generally, by political activity.

Listen to what they have to have for every individual. They will have to review the reports from the organization. On page 4, what will be included: “Internal and external communications relating to”—it will be interesting to hear the definition of what is related—specific candidates, political causes”—this is a new word.

What in the world is a “political cause”? Generally, a political cause is in the eye of the beholder. What do they mean by political cause?

They have to send to every employee for any corporation, what they mean by independent groups. It doesn’t apply to the National Rifle Association. They don’t have to conform with it. The Sierra Club doesn’t have to; Right to Life doesn’t have to. It is just to corporations. But only less than 2 percent of the corporations have to get this report. It is absolutely nonworkable.

In terms of every activity or potential activity and every expenditure for every member, not only at the national level, the State level and local level have to get the reports. Every member has to get the report. It is absolutely nonworkable.

Finally, what are these activities? On page 5, the term “political activity” means voter registration activity. Many of us have tried to encourage voter registration. In fact, labor unions are involved in that. Not many companies or corporations are. I wish they would be. Some of them have been, but they won’t be any longer if this passes. They are not going to, I don’t think. All of them, the local group, to the League of Women Voters or other groups involved in voter registration activity because if they do, they trigger all of these other kinds of participation.

The senator asked if I understand who does the voter registration. Who does it? It is labor unions. And they are included. Voter identification or get-out-the-vote activity, who does that? Maybe the Senator from Utah can list the number of corporations that are involved. We know who does it. We might as well state it is directed against union activity. They are the ones. I don’t mean companies or corporations. Even the ones that have shareholders—against labor? It is not labor unions. The Constitution has to be interpreted in such a way to protect dissenting workers but to protect dissenting workers. It is not about protecting the voices of the big. The big voices, the rich voices, the voices that I think we need to hear a lot more of, not less.

We have seen what has happened in recent times with arsenic standards being pulled back at the request of industry. We find out that the CO2 standards are being pulled back at the request of industry. We have other examples that are current on this score. We are finding out the influence of the HMOs on the administration is overpowering. It is not the voices of the workers or the families that are tripping up this country, it is the special interests, the large, powerful groups that are expending untold billions. By a ratio of virtually 10 to 1 and 12 to 1, corporations are involved in outspending unions of this country. Nonetheless, we are faced at this time with an attempt to try to emasculate that opportunity for their voices to be heard. They are the voices for education. They are the voices for health care. They are the voices for child care.

Those are the voices that I think we need to hear a lot more of, not less. To reiterate, I rise in opposition to this amendment, misleadingly called the Paycheck Protection Act. It is nothing of the sort. Instead, it is a blatant attempt to silence the voices of working families on the most important issues our Nation faces today. It is an effort to muzzle effective debate on critical legislation affecting the working families right now. It is not about protecting the union or about non-union workers. It is not about protecting the voices of the union or the voices of the workers. It is not about paying workers. It is about revenge for the extraordinarily successful efforts made by the unions to get out the vote in the last election. The amendment is wrong and unfair. It is undemocratic. It is most likely unconstitutional. I urge my colleagues to vote against it.

Make no mistake about it. A vote for this amendment is a vote against America’s workers.

Supporters of this amendment claim that they are concerned about union members’ rights to choose whether and how to participate in the political process. We know better. It is crystal clear that the real agenda of those who support the pending amendment is not to protect dissenting workers but to scuttle union participation in the political process.

My friends across the aisle know that unions and their members are among the most effective voices on issues of concern to workers, including raising the minimum wage; ensuring the availability of health insurance; protecting the balance between work and families; preserving Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid; improving education; and ensuring safety and health on the job. And unions help their members to become active in the political process. As a result of union activity, over two million union members registered to vote in just the last 4 years. In the last election there were 4.8 million more union household voters than in 1992. In fact, 26 percent of the voters in the last election came from union households. This should surely be a welcome development in a country that prides itself on fostering and promoting a healthy democracy.

But my friends across the aisle do not welcome this development. They want to do everything they can to keep workers from voting and from participating in the political process. That is because they fear that workers and those who represent workers’ interests will defeat their anti-labor agenda. Silencing the voices of working families will make it easier for Republicans and their big-business friends to achieve their anti-worker goals. Supporters of this amendment want to cut workers’ overtime pay and deny millions of workers an increase in the minimum wage they would earn work week and permit sham, company-dominated unions. They voted for this body’s shameful repeal of the Department of Labor’s ergonomics rule, leaving workers unprotected against the number one threat to health and safety in the workplace. They oppose the Family and Medical Leave Act. They support privatizing Social Security. They favor private school vouchers that take funds away from our efforts to improve the public schools. They are not trying to help working Americans. To the contrary, they want to gag workers so that they can implement an aggressive agenda that workers strongly oppose.

This is not paycheck protection. This is paycheck deception. And if we adopt it, we will achieve our opponents’ goals of disenfranchising working families. The amendment would disenfranchise working families by barring a union from collecting any dues or fees that are not related to collective bargaining unless the union obtained a written permission slip from each employee each year. It would require unions to create an unnecessary, burdensome and expensive bureaucratic process. Unions would have to create recordkeeping and filing systems for responses, solicit approval from each covered employee every year, and calculate the amounts they could spend on political activity—activity that frequently requires immediate action. The AFL-CIO has estimated that implementing a paycheck deception provision would cost unions and their members approximately $90 million in the first year and $277 million each year thereafter. That is money taken away from workers’ hard-earned benefits and their pension plans.

This will, of course, hamper unions’ ability to participate fully in political and legislative battles. That is the primary purpose of this bill. Handicapping unions in this way will also further skew the already existing imbalances in our political system. A report issued last fall by the non-partisan Center for Responsive Politics showed that special business interests spent more than $1.2 billion in political contributions in the last election cycle. The contributions swamped the contributions of working families through their unions, which amounted to a total of only $90.3 million. That means big business outspent labor unions by a ratio of 14 to 1. The same report found business outspent unions in “soft money” contributions by an even larger margin—17 to 1. The situation has gotten worse over time, moreover. In the 1998 election cycle, according to a previous report by the center, businesses outspent unions on politics by only 11 to 1. In 1996, the gap was 10 to 1. In 1992, it was 9 to 1.
These ever-widening disparities are not good news for our democracy. But this paycheck deception amendment would only tip the electoral and legislative playing field ever more decisively in favor of big corporations and the wealthy.

In only the last 2 weeks, the power of these special interests has become even more apparent. Just 2 weeks ago, the Congress voted—with less than 10 hours of debate in the Senate and a mere hour of discussion in the House—to revoke worker protections against economic injuries on which the Department of Labor had worked for 10 years. No employer is now required to do anything to prevent these painful and debilitating worker injuries.

Following up on their ergonomics victory, business and special interests scored another coup when this body passed the bankruptcy bill last week. This is a bill that caters to the credit card industry, at the expense of workers who will now face business-created hurdles to getting back on their feet financially after setbacks.

This amendment is also a “poison pill” for campaign finance reform. It is being pushed by those who believe that the inequities in the system are just fine—who would like to have no changes to address the corrupting influence that money has on our national elections. They know that no supporter of campaign finance reform—including my good friend Senator McCaIN—can vote for a bill that contains these outrageous provisions. They propose this amendment with the full knowledge that it could bring down these reforms and further the power of corporate and wealthy special interests. We should not allow ourselves to be made parties to this ploy.

For these reasons, paycheck deception bills have been rejected every time they have come before us. In 1998, a large, bipartisan majority of the House of Representatives voted down a national paycheck deception scheme by a vote of 246 to 166. Twice now—in 1997 and 1998—bipartisan majorities in the Senate have blocked paycheck deception bills. Thirty-five States have refused to enact paycheck deception bills since that time. And California voters in 1998 and Oregon voters just last year soundly defeated ballot initiatives that would have imposed paycheck deception.

The cynicism behind this amendment is made more obvious because the amendment is completely unnecessary. For almost 13 years, the law has offered ample protections for any workers who disagree with a union’s political activities. Under the landmark Beck decision, no worker, anywhere in the country, may be forced to support union political activities. In addition, in 21 States, workers cannot be required to support any union activities—even collective bargaining.

Since the Beck decision, every union, as the law requires, has created a procedure to ensure that dues-paying workers can opt out of a union’s political expenditures. These procedures universally involve notice to workers of the opt-out rights provided under Beck; establishment of a means for workers to notify the union of their decision; an act of accounting by the union of its spending so that it can calculate the appropriate fee reduction; and the right of access to an impartial decisionmaker if the worker who opts out disagrees with the union’s accounting of its receipts.

Moreover, the President has recently issued an Executive Order that goes to great lengths to ensure that all workers know their rights under Beck. This Executive Order, issued on February 17, requires every Government contractor to post a clear notice that alerts employees of their right to withhold their payments to unions for any purposes other than costs related to collective bargaining. Individuals may file complaints with the Secretary if they believe that a contractor has failed to meet this requirement. And the Secretary may investigate any contractor suspected of a violation, and may order a range of sanctions for non-compliance, including debarment of the contractor. I opposed this Executive Order because it does not inform workers of any of their other rights under our Nation’s labor laws. But in this context, it removes any doubt whatsoever that workers will be informed of their rights and provided remedies if they are not.

Remedies for violation of Beck rights are also available under the National Labor Relations Act. Under that act, non-union members who believe that they are being required to support a union’s political activities, or who believe that the union’s procedures do not afford an adequate opportunity for the individual to object, may file a complaint with the National Labor Relations Board or appeal to Federal court. In such cases, the board or the courts decide whether the particular union has developed procedures that are adequate to meet Beck requirements.

To erase any further doubts, the McCaIN-Feingold bill explicitly codifies the Beck requirements as a matter of law. Section 304 of McCaIN-Feingold requires all unions to establish objection procedures for real paycheck protection.

The bill requires unions to provide personal, annual notice to all affected employees informing them of their rights. It requires that union procedures lay out the steps for employees to make objections to paying dues that would go toward political activity. It requires unions to reduce the fees paid by any employee who has made an objection so that the employee will not be charged for expenditures unrelated to collective bargaining. It requires unions to provide explanations of their calculations.

Forty years ago, in a case called Machinists v. Street, the Supreme Court recognized that the majority of union voters have “an interest in stating [their] views without being silenced by the dissenters,” and that it was necessary to establish a rule that would protect both the majority and the maximum extent possible, without undue impingement of one on the other.” Beck was the Supreme Court’s formulation of this rule, and it represents a sound and reasonable way to achieve this balance in our democratic institution in our country, including the Congress itself—a minority would be able to thwart the will of the majority by fiat. Not by debate. Not by discussion. Not by a reasoned exchange of competing ideas. Just by silence.

I believe this paycheck deception amendment is also unconstitutional. The amendment would interfere with union members’ freedom to associate in their unions according to membership rules of their own choice. Under current law, unions may make payment of normal dues the precondition for membership and participation in the union. Unions may—and do—provide that only those individuals who have paid their full dues may vote on issues before the union or run for union elective office. It is entirely appropriate for those workers who do not wish to support the union’s political activities to resign from membership. They cannot be required to fund political activities, and their dues will be returned accordingly. Workers will receive the full benefits of union representation on issues related to the union’s bargaining obligations. But they will not be members of the union who can participate in making fundamental decisions about union business—including the election of officers, the use of organizational resources, or the union’s political positions.

But this amendment states that those who do not pay full dues still have a full voice in the affairs of the union. They would have the same rights and benefits as those who pay full dues. That is not only unconstitutional, it is just plain wrong.

Some of my colleagues claim that the egregious unfairness in this amendment can be cured if corporations are bound by “shareholder protection” requirements. But comparing unions and corporations and workers and shareholders is like comparing apples and oranges. They simply are not the same.
First, no corporation requires payments for political purposes as a condition of employment. Shareholders are not employees. It is laughable to think that bills that regulate payments that are "conditions of employment" create parity between unions and corporations.

Second, 99.7 percent of American profit corporations are privately held and have no shareholders to protect.

Third, shares in public corporations are typically held by institutions such as money or pension funds not by individuals. Any bill that purported to create parity between unions and corporations would have to reach individuals, and would have to apply to the political and legislative spending of intermediate entities, not simply to expenditures by the companies at the end of the ownership chain. None of my colleagues is rushing to do that.

Finally, were corporations to be required to meet the standards that would on unions and shareholders would have to account for political and legislative spending and budgets; disclose such spending and budgets to shareholders; constantly track new shareholders and recalculate ownership Shares of activities in the stock market; constantly solicit consent from this ever-changing group; and pay extra dividends or other financial benefits to shareholders who did not authorize political expenditures.

The amendment does not do this. No bill purporting to create parity has ever done this. No bill would ever do so. Such a bill would likely bring commerce to its knees, as corporations spent their time creating immense administrative bureaucracies to implement these requirements.

We would never hamstring corporations in this way and we should not do it to labor unions, either. We should not impose these unreasonable, unfair, and un-American institutional burdens on our country's unions, which represent the most effective voice for our working families.

Since its founding, our nation has respected and nurtured the fundamental principle that democracy thrives best when there is robust debate over issues of public concern. This amendment would subvert that bedrock proposition. I urge my colleagues to reject this attack on our working families, our unions, and our country's core values.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I can't stay here and let the Senator from Massachusetts get away with this. Here we go again. I acknowledge he represents a State that is highly unionized. I don't know if he ever worked for a union or belonged to a union, but I have. I spent 10 years in the building construction trade unions. I have a lot of respect for the union movement. I would fight for the right of collective bargaining.

But, unlike my colleague from Massachusetts, I do not believe I have to champion everything that one candidate wants over everybody else. I should not say everybody else, but over anybody who is not one of the most liberal special interest groups in our country.

I do not need a lecture from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts on how to write legislation. Nor do I need a lecture from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts on what the Beck decision means.

The Senator and any on the other side of the aisle will spend every ounce of their being to make sure that union members have no say with regard to how their moneys are spent in political activities.

By the way, with all due respect to my friend from Massachusetts—and everybody knows he is my friend; that is why I think my words may have a little more impact than some others—the idea to include corporations and labor organizations as I recall, came from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts himself. That was in the early 1990s when I offered amendments requiring disclosure of the money spent by trade unions, by labor organizations, and by corporations that had a stake in the outcome of an election. This was a bid to provide transparency in American politics.

As I recall, one of the principal arguments of my friend from Massachusetts was that corporations were not treated similarly—that big, massive, powerful corporations compared to these little, tiny, "difficult to maintain freedom for the union members' unions.

We all know what is going on here. There are people on that side who will fight to the death because, although 40 percent of all union members are Republicans, virtually 100 percent of all union political money is used to elect Democrats. I can recall many years when some of the most liberal Republican congressmen were known to me as liberal Republicans who always supported labor, and when a Democrat who supported labor ran against them, that Democrat got labor support. If I have to cite anybody, I will cite Jacob Javits of New York.

I know what is going on here. They will fight to the death to make sure that those 40 percent of Republicans who work in the unions, who believe in Republican principles, will never have any say on how the totality of the money is spent. This is the new generation, the McCain-Feingold world.

We all know what is going on here. We are fighting to the death to make sure that this money is used to elect bureaucrats who have no say in the outcomes of elections.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. HATCH. The Senator, he is a little picked-on people who basically have no say in their lives, unless they have the protection of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, among others.

I am sure the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is worried about the idea of giving him the power to write rules to regulate the airwaves.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. DOJ. Mr. HATCH. This is a little mistake. I have to write every detail of regulation into a statute that I know the FEC can do is almost an insult. It comes close. Mr. KENNEDY. Almost.

Mr. HATCH. But the Senator should tell me. I have to write every detail of regulation into a statute that I know the FEC can do almost an insult. It comes close. Mr. KENNEDY. Almost.

Mr. HATCH. I am fighting for his special interests, and I don't blame him. He gets 100 percent support from union activity and union money. It has kept him in office for years.

I have to say it is not just the liberal side of the union movement. My goodness, it is almost every liberal special interest group in this country. We all know when the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts speaks, he speaks for every liberal special interest group in this country. If you pay attention if you are on the Democratic side of the aisle, because if you don't, you are going to have a primary in the next election.

I respect that kind of power. And I leave my colleague as very few in this body do.

(Laughter.)

Mr. MCCAIN. I don't. Mr. HATCH. Senator McCaill said he doesn't. He is naturally being humorous, as he always is.

Let me just say this. I acknowledge that it is difficult to devise a manner in which this should be done, but I think we should work together and do what the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts said the 1990s ought to be done. We ought to get those big special interests in the corporate world to have to conform to certain disclosures.

This is an important matter for hardworking Americans. If my colleague thinks stockholders should be treated similarly, that is what I am trying to do in good faith. I think I am doing it pretty well.

Just as we get rid of this argument that every detail has to be written into legislation—heck, everybody around here knows that isn't the case ever. I myself think sometimes we ought to be a little more specific and not just let the bureaucracy run wild, but that is not the way things work in this Federal Government. Just think about it.

I think the argument of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is very insufficient in the details with regard to what legislation is all about. Let me give an illustration. The Federal Communications Act simply tells regulators to regulate the airwaves in the public trust.

I am sure the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts would love to have three or four thousand pages defining what that means—or maybe 150,000 pages defining what that means. But it works. It works as long as we have honest people in the bureaucracy.

Think of this one. There is a level of detail in all legislation that is left to administrators and regulators.

The McCain-Feingold bill that is so magnificent, triumphed by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, requires State parties to use hard money to pay the salary of a State party worker if they spend more than 25 percent of their time on Federal election activities.

That is pretty broad to me. Nowhere does McCain-Feingold state how State parties are to track these people's time. We will leave that to the regulators.

I could go down each paragraph in the McCain-Feingold bill and shred it alive, if the argument of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has any merit, which, of course, it does not. But that doesn’t stop bombastic argument, nor should it. I love them myself. I love to see the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts get up there, and everybody is almost positive he is going to blow a fuse before he is through. But the fact is, he has a right to do that. I admire him for doing it. I admire the way he supports his special interest, knowing of anybody who does it better. We don’t have anybody on our side who can do that as well.

(Applause in the gallery.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brownback). There will be order in the gallery.

Mr. HATCH. That brought tears to my eyes.

Mr. President, McCain-Feingold does not say if the contract workers are employees of the State party, or regular, full-time employees. Those details are left to regulators.

The amendment amends the FECA act so FPEC would find it easier to get this and all existing FPEC enforcement laws and regulations, as well as penalties that would apply.

I know what is going on. It is wonderful to argue for what helps your side. McCain-Feingold, to their credit, is trying to get a more honest system that is equal both ways. But if you read the provision on the Beck decision, it basically obliterates it. It basically narrows it so much that it has no meaning.

I have to say there are those on the other side of the floor who will never allow the Beck Supreme Court decision, the ultimate law of the land, to be enforced, or to be applied, because it would even things up, and it would allow 40 percent of the union membership in this country to have some say on how their dues are being spent in the political activity.

That is trying to do. I think it is a reasonable thing. I think it is the right thing. I think it is the intelligent thing. If we don’t do this, then are we really trying to have a bill that is going to correct some of the ills of our society?

I have no illusion. I suspect that many, if not all, on the other side will vote against this amendment because it does basically even things up. It does what the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts said we ought to do back in the early 1990s, but today is indicating, if we do it, that it has to be done in such specificity that it would be the most specified language in the history of legislative achievement.

AMENDMENT NO. 134, AS MODIFIED

Mr. President, I send a modification to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. It is a technical correction.

Mr. DODD. I would like to see the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, my modification is exactly what my amendment be so modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DODD. Reserving the right to object—Members should have the right to modify their amendments.

For the purposes of clarification, I wonder if my colleague from Utah might take a minute to explain the modification.

Mr. HATCH. It basically corrects language in the amendment. It basically allows proportionate share with regard to the unions, and also with regard to corporations. I think it applies both ways. But I think it is a good move.

Mr. DODD. I am sure the President understood that.

I have no objection.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 134), as modified, is as follows:

Beginning on page 35, strike line 8 and all that follows through page 37, line 14, and insert the following:

(1) voter registration activity;

(2) voter identification or get-out-the-vote activity;

(4) disbursements for television or radio broadcast time, print advertising, or polling for political activities.'
amendment. We got into quite a tussle the other night over that issue. I am pleased to see the comity that the Senate normally enjoys. It has been exercised on this occasion. I thank everyone for allowing Senator Hatch to mediate this issue.

Let me say that this amendment has been described as a poison pill by the New York Times and the Washington Post and Common Cause. I think it is important for Members to understand what a "poison pill" is by their definition. I think it is anything that might affect labor unions. Disclosure and consent are universally applauded in the campaign finance debate. Disclosure and consent are the two principles upon which there is wide agreement on a bipartisan basis throughout this Chamber—unless it applies to labor unions.

What Senator Hatch is trying to do is to apply those principles—disclosure and consent—to organized labor in this count. He wants to apply the so-called paycheck protection amendment in the past has only applied to unions. Many of our Members have complained about that.

The senior Senator from Arizona, as recently as January 22, complained about the fact that it did not apply to shareholders. The junior Senator from Wisconsin, on the same day, was complaining about the paycheck protection proposal because it only applied, as he put it, to one player, the labor unions. Senator Kerry of Massachusetts, in the last year or so, was complaining about paycheck protection because it only applied to labor unions. Senator Lieberman, in February of 1998—just a couple years ago—I suspect it is still his view that paycheck protection is a problem because it does not apply to corporations. That is one of the principal arguments against so-called paycheck protection.

The Senator from Utah has now applied it to corporations. He has applied it. There is parity between unions and corporations. The goal is to ensure that all political money is voluntary.

In a corporation without shareholders, if the owner uses his money on politics, obviously, it is voluntary because it is his money. With shareholders, we need this legislation so executives do not decide for the shareholders.

In unions, the consent provision ensures political money from dues are voluntarily used for political purposes. And, of course, there are no privately held unions.

Paycheck protection is clearly constitutional. In Michigan State AFL-CIO v. Miller, the U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a State statute requiring unions to get affirmative consent each year from union members. In fact, the court held that the affirmative consent requirement, similar to the Hatch amendment, is anything but not even subject to the highest degree of strict scrutiny. Rather, the court found the affirmative consent requirement so noncontroversial that it was subject only to intermediate scrutiny. And it survived intermediate scrutiny and survived review under this standard.

The court upheld the affirmative consent requirement explaining that by verifying that individuals intend to continue dedicating a portion of their earnings to a political cause, [the consent requirement] both reminds those persons that they are using money for political causes and counteracts the inertia that would tend to cause people to continue giving funds indefinitely even after their views might have support in the marketplace. The annual consent requirement ensures that political contributions are in accordance with the wishes of the contributors.

So there is a binding Federal court precedent upholding affirmative consent requirements on unions. This case makes clear that such provisions are not even subject to strict scrutiny. It is entirely possible that unions are the biggest spenders in our elections. But they do not disclose the major of their political activities. The numbers people use to say corporations outspend unions are suspect because they only include what unions disclose. But we can estimate what unions spend because there is no meaningful disclosure anywhere of what unions spend on political activities—such as phone banks, direct mail, voter identification, get-out-the-vote activity, candidate recruitment, political consulting, and other activities—in support of the Democratic Party. We must, admitted, simply estimate what they spend.

By contrast, we have a very good idea what corporate America spends because it is limited to operating PACs and making soft money donations to parties, which, unlike big labor's ground game, are fully disclosed activities.

In estimating what unions spend, we should note that in Beck cases—and remember, the Beck case was about a nonunion member—it is not unusual for nonunion members, seeking a refund of the pro rata share of their fees that the union uses for activities unrelated to collective bargaining, to get back in excess of 70 percent. In the Beck case itself, Mr. Beck got back 79 percent.

So let's be very conservative and say that the unions spend 10 percent of the money they take in each year to help Democrats.

Now, let's look at how much unions take in from dues from members, agency fees from nonmembers, and other sources, such as their affinity credit card program. According to figures from the Department of Labor for 1999, the Auto Workers Union took in $308,653,016. The Steelworkers Union took in $369,398,286. The Machinists Union took in $287,201,344. The Carpenter's Union took in $364,265,132. The Teamsters Union took in $321,580,129. The Airline Pilots Union took in $316,458,642. The Airline Pilots Union took in $277,508,365. The Teamsters brought in $303,498,520.

I could go on. I have not yet included some of the largest unions, such as the Communications Workers, the Service Employees Union, the Hotel Workers Union, the National Association, and the Electrical Workers, all of which are among the largest unions in America.

But if we just add up what the eight unions I mentioned raked in during 1999, it amounts to $2,790,645,297. If we double this figure, to reflect what these eight unions took in during the 1999-2000 election cycle, it amounts to $5,401,290,874.

If these eight unions spent just 10 percent of this amount to help the Democrats in the last election, these eight alone spent $540 million. So it is safe to say that unions easily spend at least $½ billion for Democrats in each election cycle.

Independent academic research from Professor Leo Troy of Rutgers arrives at similar numbers, as do estimates from former high-ranking union officials, such as Duke Zeller, formerly a Teamsters official, who has acknowledged that big labor spent about $400 million for the Democrats and Bill Clinton in 1996.

Contrast this with $244 million total for all corporate and business associations hard and soft money contributions to the Republican and Democratic Parties, including their congressional committees.

These figures regularly cited about business outspending labor 10 to 15 to 1 are based on questionable figures generated by the "reform industry" to reenforce its own mythology about how corrupt Congressmen are, in the pocket of big business. These estimates are not based on sound, unbiased FEC figures.

Moreover, the reformers' estimates only look at how much publicly disclosed hard and soft money businesses and labor give to parties and their candidates. They totally ignore the hundreds of millions big labor pours into its massive, undisclosed ground game operated on behalf of the Democratic Party.

The dirty little secret that big labor and its allies do not want anyone to know is that corporate America just makes contributions and may run up some issue ads once in a while to which we can assign a price tag, thanks to ad buy information. Big labor, on the other hand, makes some contributions, runs some issue ads, but that is just the tip of the iceberg. The vast majority of its political activity and money is dedicated to the ground game. These direct expenditures which completely dwarf what business spends on politics, even if they are only 5 to 10 percent of what big labor rakes in each year, aren't disclosed anywhere. Nowhere is there anything that big labor's allies will do everything they can to make sure these massive expenditures that form the brunt of big labor's political operation remain hidden away from the sunlight of disclosure.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has noted that no corporation does get-out-the-vote operations. Unions offer the appearance of a legiti-mate process but not one of the reality, and disregard the interests of working men and women instead of representing them.

In 1959, Congress enacted the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act to protect the rights and interests of union members against abuses by unions and their officials. The act gave union members various substantive rights that were considered so crucial to ensuring that unions were democratically governed and responsive to the will of their membership that they were labeled the Bill of Rights of Members of Labor Organizations. The LMRDA made rank-and-file union members the sole guardians of protections provided in the Bill of Rights of Members of Labor Organizations. Members of Labor Organizations by the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Ap-pee that any corporation, so we are doing it. But this amendment that they have to go through certain hoops and they have to jump across certain hurdles before they are allowed to do so.

We are told that there is parity here. Stockholders are also covered by this, we are told. Yet we haven’t heard, despite the many suggestions and questions asked about this, of any corporations that engage in any activity that would be required to obtain stockholder approval before using corporate funds to do so.

If this were a serious amendment aimed at parity, if this were truly a real world parity amendment, it would not be written in the way it is relative to corporations. Saying that you would have to get the approval of stockholders, for instance, without saying which class of stockholders—common stock, preferred stock, or any other—are we getting the approval of stockholders on, was it yesterday before a billion shares of stock were sold on the New York Stock Exchange, is it today, is another billion stock-

This amendment, it seems to me, should be seen for what it is—a way to attempt to reduce the political activity of labor unions. There was a case called Machinists v. Street in the Supreme Court back in 1961. The Supreme Court expressed concern with encroachment on the legitimate activities and necessary functions of unions. They emphasized that it is up to the members of the union to decide in what activities they would engage, and that dissent is not presumed, in the words of the Supreme Court.

This amendment reverses that right of association where members of an association are presumed to support, by the election of their officers and adoption of their bylaws, the program of that association. It reverses the Supreme Court’s assumption and presumes dissent, requiring affirmative approval of members of a free association.

This is what the Supreme Court said:

Any remedies, however, would properly be granted only to employees who have made knowable to officials that they do not desire their funds to be used for political causes to which they object. The safeguards in the law were added for the protection of dissenters’ interests, but dissent is not to be presumed.

This amendment, by requiring that unions go through very complicated, cumbersome procedures in order to obtain affirmative approval of members of that free association, is intended to put a damper on union political activity, and it is very clear what this purpose is.

Finally, let me just say this: This is not an amendment, it seems to me, which belongs in this bill or is really appropriate in this bill. This is an amendment that is aimed at labor unions, separate and apart from any bill that we have before us relative to money going into campaigns. This is not a rule that is aimed at the appearance of corruption, which we have been told, under Buckley, can be addressed by trying to put some limits on contributions to campaigns. That is what the Buckley case says we can do.

In order to avoid the appearance of corruption, the appearance of impropriety, we can put contribution limits on contributions, we can restrict contributions because of what can be implied, and is too often implied, by large contributions going into these campaigns. We have not been shown the corruption that this amendment intends to remedy.

What this amendment intends to do is to restrict the rights of association of members of a union—people who voluntarily decide they are going to either be in a union, remain in a union, or join a union; people who are not required to stay in a union by law; people who are not required to join a union by law because no law can require that in this country. Yet it is the restriction of that association, the right of members and women in a free country to associate freely and to decide on a regime of political activity that is being restricted by this amendment—with no showing of an appearance of corruption, restriction on the rights of association. That is what this amendment reflects.

That cannot just be disguised or covered up by saying, oh, look, it applies to corporations. In fact the corporations do not engage in the activity being discussed here. And, in fact, if this seriously were aimed at corporations, it would be so totally unworkable that it would fall of its own weight. No corporation I know of could possibly comply with these rules, even if it wanted to engage in get-out-the-vote activity or voter registration. There would be no practical way it could comply with this.

The effort to modify this amendment was a reflection of the total inability of a corporation to function under this kind of a rule. But it doesn’t cure the problem because, again, we are not told: When is this decision made? What day are the stockholders going to be counted? Do they have to be asked on a certain day as to whether or not they approve a get-out-the-vote campaign or a voter registration campaign? The next day you may have hundreds of thousands of thousands of dollars spent by corporations, of different stockholders. What classes of stock are covered? There is nothing about that—and for good reason. That is not the purpose of the amendment.

The purpose of this amendment, I am afraid, is a purpose in which we as a body should not participate. The purpose of this amendment is to restrict the political activities of a free association. We should not do that, whether we like the association or don’t like the association. We should not do that whether the association is supportive generally of our party or opposes generally our party. The principle here, the principle involved, is the right of association under the first amendment. It cannot be restricted by law. It should not be restricted by this body. We should not attempt to place these kinds of restrictions on the associative rights of American citizens.

Finally, under a NAACP case in 1963, I will close with this quote. The first amendment is what is being discussed in that case, and this is what the Supreme Court held:

Because first amendment freedoms need breathing room, government may regulate in the area only with narrow specificity.

I know we are going to have a debate over whether or not the bill before us meets the first amendment test. Those of us who very much support McCain-Feingold feel passionately that it does, that it is narrowly crafted to allow for regulation, to address the appearance of impropriety and corruption. But there is no way that the amendment before us, which has an effect only on the free speech of union members, can possibly meet this test with no showing of an appearance of corruption, no showing of an appearance of impropriety, and severe practical limits on the rights of association in trade unions. And I believe this language should not only be defeated by this body, but, hopefully, will be rejected on a bipartisan basis because it would cut into the rights that I believe all of us should very much hope to protect.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is correct, of course, that no wrong can be forced to join a union. They can, however, be forced to pay fees to unions, equal to union dues, as a condition of maintaining their employment. That is precisely the point of Senator Hatch’s amendment.

As for the concern of the Senator from Michigan about the fact that no corporation does ground wars as unions do, that is, of course, precisely the point. That is exactly why McCain-Feingold is biased in favor of Democrats.

Unions, as the Senator from Michigan has pointed out, do the ground war for the Democrats. I wish we had an ally like that on our side. I admire the McCain-Feingold corporation. They do the ground war for the Democrats.

For Republicans, it is the party that takes the primary role in the ground war. As we have discussed here, and as the Senator from Michigan has conceded, corporations don’t do that sort of thing. They never have and, in my view, they never will.

McCain-Feingold eliminates one-third of the resources that Republican Party organizations have to counter the union ground game from which Democrats benefit 100 percent.

According to Forbes magazine, the NEA’s local unisource directors act as the largest army of paid political organizers and lobbyists in the United States. According to NEA’s own stra-tegic plan and both these political operatives had a budget of $76 million for the 2000 cycle—$76 million for the 2000 cycle alone. None of that is touched by McCain-Feingold.

With regard to the unions, what do unions do to help Democrats? Again, I say I wish we had such an ally. This is what the unions do for the Democrats:

One, get out the vote;
Two, voter identification;
Three, voter registration;
Four, mass mailings;
Five, phone banks;
Six, TV advertisements;
Seven, radio advertisements;
Eight, magazine advertisements;
Nine, newspaper advertisements;
Ten, outdoor advertising and leafletting;
Eleven, polling;
And twelve, volunteer recruitment and training.

But what if we had such an ally as that? That would be wonderful. The only entity we have that engages in any of those activities on behalf of Republicans is our party organizations.
Their funds would be reduced by at least a third or, in the case of the Republican National Committee, 40 percent by McCain-Feingold. McCa ameral time remains on the opponents’ side?” The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven minutes 22 seconds.

MCCONNELL. How much time remains on the opponents’ side?” The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven minutes 22 seconds.

Mr. DODD. Maybe we will consume all of it, and if the Senator from Kentucky—Mr. MCCONNELL. I have reserved mine. Mr. DODD. How much time does my good friend from Minnesota need? Mr. WELSTON. Ten minutes, and I may not take a full 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WELSTON. Mr. President, I will tell you why I may not take the full 10 minutes. I had an opportunity to hear Senator LEVIN, and he said much of what I wanted to say except he said it better than I can.

I do want to be really clear that this “paycheck protection” amendment that all of us are expecting has taken an even more egregious and cynical form than I had contemplated in all my nightmares.

This is not about sham issue ads. It is important to go after soft money that goes into such ads by any kind of organization. This is not about parity between corporations and unions, for all of the reasons Senator LEVIN outlined. This is, however, going after political activity defined as “voter registration activity, voter identification, or get out the vote, public communication that refers to a clearly identified candidate for Federal office.”

I can understand why, given what we have been doing on the floor of the House over the last couple of weeks, such as, for example, in 10 hours overturning 10 years of work to have a rule to provide some protection for people against repetitive stress injury—I can understand why my colleagues would not want unions, or any kind of organization, to communicate with those workers. This is a gag rule amendment. That is what this is about. Basically, this is the issue: This amendment is all about going after a democratic, with a small “d,” institution—a democratic institution, with a small “d,” and denying that associational democratic institution the right to represent and serve its members.

What my colleagues are worried about, what this amendment is a reflection of, is the concern of some of my colleagues that this particular democratic organization, with a small “d”—a union, or it can be any organization—will be able to serve its members.

Frankly, we in the Senate ought to be for all democratic, with a small “d,” associational organizations, and we should be all about supporting their rights to serve their members, not trying to gag them, trying to block communication. My colleagues are so worried that these associations and these organizations of people who do not give their millions of dollars will be able to, God forbid, be involved in voter registration activity, get-out-the-vote efforts, internal communication, and grassroots politics.

This is the ultimate anti grassroots politics, anti association, anti group and organization, anti rank-and-file member, anti people communicating with one another, anti people without the big bucks through their association being able to have some power and say and some clout in American politics.

This amendment should be roundly defeated.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I rise today in strong opposition to the so-called paycheck protection amendment. This proposal, in my view, is little more than a thinly veiled attack on organized labor, and an attempt to undermine genuine campaign finance reform.

The effect of this amendment would be to bury unions in a morass of bureaucratic red tape, and severely impair their ability to represent their membership. It would push unions further to the periphery of the political process, and hurt the working men and women they represent. It also may well be unconstitutional.

Every day, associations and other organizations representing everything from chocolate manufacturers to retired people come to Capitol Hill to advocate for their members. These organizations use a variety of mechanisms to decide how they spend their money. Some give broad authority to their D.C. representatives. Others centralize authority with their president. Others operate through special boards or committees.

It is not Congress’s business to dictate to these organizations how they make their internal spending decisions. That is their business. And that is how it should be.

But this amendment says that it is our business as politicians to tell unions how to make their internal spending decisions. That is their business. And that is how it should be.

As a result of the 1988 Beck case, all workers can already opt out of paying union dues. They can choose not to be in the union and to pay a fee that only covers costs associated with contract management and collective bargaining. No worker is forced to join the union. Therefore, no worker is forced to cover costs associated with political activities. And, I would add, the underlying legislation includes a provision that makes this very clear.
In reality, this amendment is a deliberate attempt to undermine one of the key purposes of unions, advocating for their members not only with management, but with elected officials. The amendment goes well beyond what the Supreme Court required in the Beck decision. It would require union members to affirmatively agree to set aside a portion of their dues for political activities. And then it would require periodic reports spelling out details of those activities.

The requirements would impose significant costs on unions and limit their ability to participate in the political process.

It is important to remember that unions are democratic institutions. Decisions are made by majority vote or by duly elected representatives. Moreover, as I said earlier, nobody is forced to join a union. If you decide to join, as with other voluntary organizations, you accept the democratic decision-making process for the tote bag. Similarly, political activities are a fundamental feature of a union’s operations.

Unions were formed in the first place to reduce the historic imbalance between workers and management, between managers and powerful entrenched interests. By coming together, working families have an influential voice, and nowhere is the voice of labor unions more important than in the political arena. This amendment would, in effect, silence that voice, and in the process silence millions of working families.

If we believe in the constitution right to free association, we cannot support this amendment. If we believe in the right of working families to be heard, we cannot support this amendment. And if we believe in fundamental and equitable campaign finance reform, we cannot support this amendment.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, we have many Members desiring to be heard. I want to make sure I accommodate everyone who wants to be heard.

I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for up to 5 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I thank my colleague.

The impact of this amendment and the fundamental unfairness of it are so obvious and so patently clear. What this tries to achieve doesn’t generate a rising of voices or even an angry response, although I think there are plenty of Members who feel offended by what it seeks to do.

The purpose of this McCain-Feingold legislation is to try to create a fair playing field. “Fair” is not a word we hear a lot applied to the standards which our colleagues on the other side seem to seek in this. But “fair” means you try to achieve parity to the best degree possible between both sides’ potential supporters, those who give to us.

What is extraordinary to me is what is being done here is effectively the silencing of the capacity of organized labor to be able to participate with a fig leaf, a pretense about corporate responsibility and shareholder obligations. There is nothing in the terminology that I see how it is possible for corporations to make the kinds of divisions that are called upon in this legislation. It would require a constant tracking of new shareholders, a constant recalculation of their ownership stakes. Shares are traded daily on the stock market. Corporations would have to collect and process spending authorization from those daily changing shareholders. And, finally, the corporations would have to pay additional dividends or other financial benefits to shareholders who refuse to authorize corporate and political legislative spending.

It is completely unworkable on the corporate side, but it is not meant to be workable. It is clearly meant to be unworkable. It is a measure which places a burden on the capacity of a voluntary association under the Constitution to be able to participate in the electoral process in a way not denied to any number of other groups in our country.

I think our colleagues ought to join together because this is an amendment calculated to try to undo the McCain-Feingold concept, and particularly calculated to establish a playing field that is not level.

Mr. DODD. I yield 5 minutes to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, the President of the United States, President Bush, issued a statement with regard to campaign finance reform indicating he is committed to working with the Congress to ensure that fair and balanced campaign finance reform legislation is enacted. He specifically referred to a desire to have a balance between unions and corporations in the United States.

Apparently Senator HATCH’s amendment is an attempt to do that. But as has been effectively pointed out by Senator LEVIN, it doesn’t accomplish that. It isn’t balanced. It isn’t parity. The legislation from Massachusetts pointed out when it comes to the balance between unions and business in the country, this amendment doesn’t even apply to 99.7 percent of the businesses in the country.

It is an interesting technique to talk about balance between unions and corporations but not include many other kinds of organizations as well.

What is even more troubling is the point made by the Senators from Michigan and Massachusetts and the definition of “political activity” is by no means balanced between what corporations do and unions do. This needs to be reiterated. There are four kinds of... activity listed. Two of the activities are activities in which at least at this point only unions participate, and a third is defined in a circular way which means that it probably doesn’t apply to the kind of disbursements for television or radio that corporations do. The fourth activity is referred to as ‘press advocacy, which unions and corporations can only do through their PACs.’

The Senator from Michigan has it right. He said it is purely paper parity between unions and corporations. What he said is not only alliterative, it is dead right. This amendment is purely paper parity.

Even the President of the United States’ principles and desire that we create a balance between unions and corporations are not achieved by the Hatch amendment.

I compliment the Senator from Utah for attempting to do this. On its face, the amendment is not as one-sided as some have been offered in the past. For example, one previous amendment on this subject said that any union or corporation that has its members dues covered is exempted from the provision. But, of course, no corporation in America charges dues.

Nonetheless, let’s be serious. Is there anybody in this body who really believes that this provision will actually work? This amendment supposedly would require every corporation in America to get the permission of its shareholders before it spends money for political activities. That is ludicrous. Corporations have millions of shareholders. Their identity changes every day. The Senator from Massachusetts made this very clear—how could you possibly do this? Billions of shares of stock change hands each week—billions. Apparently, it would be necessary to get the permission of every shareholder.

What about people who own shares in corporations through mutual funds? How are their rights protected? Actually the amendment says that ‘with the separate, prior, written voluntary authorization of a stockholder, it shall be unlawful for any corporation described in this section to use funds from its general treasury for the purpose of political activity.’ So perhaps this provision only requires corporations to get the permission of one stockholder.

But if that is what it means, if it does not apply to billions of stockholders, which would be unworkable, and only requires the consent of one stockholder, it would be a sham like the earlier proposals.

It takes the Senator from Utah at his word, that he is trying to be even-handed, trying to cover unions and corporations equally. But if his proposal actually works, the Senator from Utah has singlehandedly rewritten the law of corporations. This amendment to the Hatch amendment would require every corporation in America to get the permission of its shareholders to do it. If this amendment actually works—and I am very skeptical that it does—then before this vote, corporate America should be standing on this body en masse with an hour or so.

Lots of representatives of corporate America oppose this bill now, but if this bill passes, every corporation in America will oppose it. This provision would be a requirement of corporations if it works in that way.

Aside from the problems with this amendment that the other speakers have very well pointed out, our Beck provision addresses the issue of the use of union dues for political purposes. The real problem with this amendment is that this is a poison pill to this bill. It fits the definition of a poison pill to a fee.

If this amendment passes, reform is dead. I am confident that we will defeat it despite the herculean efforts of the Senator from Utah to cover corporations and unions equally because a sugar-coated poison pill is still a poison pill. When you put it off, and it will wear off pretty quickly on this amendment, as we have seen, the poison underneath will kill this bill.

It is essential for the sake of this campaign finance reform effort that this amendment be tabled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, the arguments about the mechanics of the Hatch provision address the issue of the use of union dues for political purposes. The Securities and Exchange Commission has managed to figure out ways to determine who is a shareholder and when, so that shareholders can be sent annual statements and proxies. Regulators are quite capable of handling these issues.

There has been mentioned on the floor, the ‘appearance of corruption.’ Let me ask a question. Why does it create the appearance of corruption for a corporation to run an ad criticizing our voting records around election time, such that it justifies regulation under the Snowe-Jeffords language that is in the underlying McCain-Feingold bill, but it does not create the appearance of corruption of the process for that same soft money from advocacy groups and unions to be used for phone banks, leaflets, mailings, and other things designed to criticize candidates and influence elections?

This is absurd. Remember when you hear the words ‘poison pill,’ you know it is an amendment that may have some impact on organized labor.

It has been suggested by the sponsors and the proponents of this amendment, which of course applied to nonunion members working in union shops, was codified in the underlying McCain-Feingold bill.

I have a statement from the lawyer who represented Mr. Beck in that case, dated January 30 of this year. He said:

I have reviewed section 304. As one of the attorneys for the nonmembers in Beck, and objecting nonmembers in several cases following Beck, I can assure you that section 304 of McCain-Feingold-Cochran does not codify Beck. It would gut Beck.

Federal courts and the National Labor Relations Board (‘NLRB’) now both have jurisdiction over claims of misuse of compulsory dues for political and other nonbargaining purposes. The current law is not as one-sided as some that have been offered in the past. For example, one previous amendment to ‘not to establish any implement [an objection procedure]’ by which nonmembers compelled to pay dues as a condition of employment can obtain a reduction in their dues for ‘expenditures supporting political activities unrelated to collective bargaining.’

If this amendment to the NLRA becomes law, then the courts are likely to hold that Congress intended to oust the courts of jurisdiction to enforce the prohibition on such spending. That would leave individual workers with no effective means of enforcing their Beck rights, as history demonstrates . . . .

Further in the statement the lawyer points out:

Many Beck cases do not even make it to trial, because the NLRA’s General counsel does not prosecute them vigorously. According to the National Right to Work Legal Defense Foundation’s Staff Attorneys, who have represented the most employees who have filed Beck charges with the Board, the General Counsel has settled many Beck charges with no real relief for the charging employees. The Board’s Regional Directors have refused to issue complaints on and dismissed many other charges at the direction of the General Counsel. No appeal from a dismissal of a charge is possible, because the General Counsel has ‘unreviewable discretion to refuse to institute unfair labor practice proceedings.’ . . .

The Lawyer continues:

Thus, by vesting enforcement authority in the NLRB, the McCain-Feingold-Cochran amendment to the NLRA would leave no real remedy available to objecting employees who wish to bring Beck claims that a union now prohibits, or enforcing its Beck rights, as history demonstrates . . . .

Far from codifying Beck, this underlying bill basically neutralizes Beck.

Section 304 of the McCain-Feingold-Cochran purports to limit the use of compulsory dues and fees, in fact, work drafted to overrule the Supreme Court’s interpretation of the federal labor laws and sanction the use, now prohibited, of compulsory dues and fees, or its objection procedure, breaches the duty of fair representation.

Section 304 of the McCain-Feingold-Cochran, if it becomes law, would legislatively overrule almost 40 years of decisions of the United States Supreme Court concerning what union activities objecting nonmembers may be compelled to subsidize . . . .

The Lawyer concludes:

By singling out this amendment to the Hatch amendment, the Senator from Utah has singlehandedly rewritten the law of America to get the permission of its shareholders.
employees’ bargaining unit. Rather, section 304 prohibits the use of compulsory union dues only for “political activities unrelated to collective bargaining.” Section 304, if enacted, thus would prohibit the use of compulsory dues for union organizing, litigation not concerning the nonmembers’ bargaining unit, and the portions of union publications that discuss those subjects, uses now prohibited under Ellis and Beck.

Even worse, section 304 would repudiate the 1961 decision in Street that no political and ideological activities may be subsidized with compulsory dues and fees. Section 304 would not prohibit the use of compulsory funds for all political activities, but only “political activities unrelated to collective bargaining,” which it defines as only “expenditures in connection with a Federal, State, or local election or in connection with efforts to influence legislation unrelated to collective bargaining.” (Emphasis added.)

This definition would not prohibit the use of compulsory dues and fees for political party activities not in connection with an election, lobbying on judicial and executive branch appointments, campaigning for and against ballot propositions, and publications and public relations activities on political and ideological issues not directed to specific legislation. Moreover, because most legislation on which unions lobby could be said to be “political activities unrelated to collective bargaining,” the McCain-Feingold amendment would effectively prohibit the use of compulsory dues and fees for and against candidates for public office.

Mr. President, you get the drift. Beck is effectively repealed by the underlying McCain-Feingold legislation. I do not know how many more speakers we have.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eight minutes. The other side has 29 minutes.

Mr. MC CON NELL. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

How much time remains for the opponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The opponents have 29 minutes remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment of my friend Senator HATCH on so-called “paycheck protection.”

All of us know the purpose of this amendment. It is, quite simply, to kill McCain-Feingold, pure and simple.

The proponents of this amendment won’t vote in favor of McCain-Feingold. They just want to diminish the number of Democrats voting for McCain-Feingold and thereby have it fall.

In reality, the actual reason for this amendment is simply to end campaign finance reform as we know it today.

If the proponents of this amendment wanted to move the issue forward, they wouldn’t do it as part of campaign finance because this amendment has absolutely nothing to do with campaign finance.

This amendment is about the way unions and corporations govern themselves, a subject we should debate separately.

I ask those who are proponents of this amendment if their goal is not to kill the underlying bill, they should then withdraw the amendment and move it forward in the appropriate committee or conference and votes on corporate governance and governance of labor unions.

Let us be clear about the actual substance. It is, as many have already said on other occasions, a “paycheck deception” to claim that union dues are coerced when workers get railroaded into paying for speech with which they disagree.

In reality, all of us know people are not forced to join unions. Unions are voluntary associations that members are free to quit the second they disagree with the union’s political activities.

That is the essential freedom. If the freedom went any further, we would have no voluntary organizations in America, and we probably wouldn’t have a democracy.

To say that people are coerced by an organization that they can quit at any moment because they do not get the majority vote, there would be strong objection to any legislative body, including this one, as there would be to unions.

Even those who quit, of course, would be represented by the union by paying agency fees.

For that reason, the first amendment argument advanced by the proponents of this amendment is, quite frankly, a red herring.

There are people in this country and in this body who just do not like unions. So they argue with the structure of the union, and the very same structure of an organization that they like, they don’t argue with at all.

The first amendment rights of members are not transgressed when unions engage in behavior because they chose to associate themselves with the speech. It’s that simple.

Moreover, unions are democratic organizations.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle would have you believe that union bosses are making unilateral decisions in smoke-filled rooms that flout the will of their members and stifle their first amendment rights.

That very argument has been made by Communists and fascists about this body and about our democracy. They vote. They set their own dues. Not everybody gets his or her way because a majority vote prevails.

It makes no sense to castigate unions for engaging in the same majority rule upon which our country is founded. I argue that the reason we hear this argument is not because of any greater devotion to democracy but because of dislike and even hatred of unions.

How dare these union organizations force their members to contribute to campaigns when members have a constitutionally guaranteed right to campaign finance reform.

Let us be clear: This amendment is about the way unions and corporations govern themselves, a subject we should debate separately.

I ask those who are proponents of this amendment if their goal is not to kill the underlying bill, they should then withdraw the amendment and move it forward in the appropriate committee or conference and votes on corporate governance and governance of labor unions.

We all know union members elect their own leaders, and they set their own dues. Not every member of the union is satisfied with the election. In almost every vote we take here not every Member is satisfied with the outcome of the vote.

The union wants to change leaders and lower their dues to forestall political expression, they are, of course, free to do so.

That they have not done that on the whole is an indication that members’ first amendment rights not being violated in the wholesale way alleged by our friends on the other side.

Now, the sponsor of this amendment has commendably made the attempt—unlike some past versions of this—to include at least publicly held corporations.

For one thing, I do not hear the venom directed at publicly held corporations that make decisions and spend their money on ads when certain shareholders disagree with those decisions. Shareholders can go to the corporate meeting, voice their objections, and probably have even less chance as an individual union member of changing things.

If we don’t hear that kind of venom and even venom. But the argument for union democracy is probably greater than that of corporate democracy.

Shares in corporations are alienable and change hands in virtually instantaneous transactions millions of times each day.

To pretend that shareholders who buy and sell their shares so readily are analogous to members for the purpose of consenting to political speech is just not a serious argument.

That is why it just isn’t workable to try to include corporations, and why, my colleagues, this is just an antiunion measure from start to finish that should be debated in the Health, Education and Labor Committee and put to its proper death.

Incidentally, also, other associations similar to labor unions, such as the Chamber of Commerce, aren’t covered by this amendment.

In sum, I urge Members to vote against this amendment and see if for what it is—a poison pill that has nothing to do with union members’ rights but everything to do with defeating campaign finance reform.

I thank my colleagues and yield back the time I may have remaining.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I know my colleague from Oklahoma wishes to be heard. I want to take a couple of minutes. I will be glad to give him whatever time he needs. I would like to reserve 4 minutes at the end of the debate.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A little over 28 minutes.

Mr. DODD. I will take about 5 minutes. My colleague from Oklahoma wants 5 or so minutes, if he would like, and others may show up. I would like to reserve the last 4 minutes to share some of that time with my colleague from Kentucky, if he needs it, or anyone else who may come over.

Senator SCHUMER from New York made a very compelling and sound argument against your amendment.

First of all, I know it is something Members do with great frequency. If you read this amendment, it is terribly complicated. It almost seems to be a flawed amendment. I get the thrust of what the Senator from Utah wants to do, but I am not sure, even if it were adopted, it achieves the results that he desires with the language he has crafted. It is rather complicated. In fact, the modification that the Senator from Utah made may even complicate it further, as I read it.

Just on a first blush, if you look at this, the amendment itself probably should be recrafted in a way. So it ought to be rejected merely on technical grounds.

Even for those who may support what he wants to do, I do not believe this amendment does what the author claims. For those of us who disagree with the intent of the amendment, there are deeper reasons why this amendment should be rejected. First, there is no parity. That is what my colleague from New York was suggesting. Whether people like unions or not, they are democratic institutions. There are laws which govern how union officials are elected. They are not always perfect elections. There have been some highly flawed elections. Recently, we went through one nationally where there was great controversy of one particular international union. Members of that union protested loudly over how that election was conducted.

But, fundamentally, they are democratic institutions where the members get to decide a number of things. They decide who to form a union. They decide who their officials will be by secret ballot. They have rights to access of information about union finances and operations. Under the law, they are required to have that access. Union rules are applied on an equal basis. Now, there are problems that occur in the breach, but the law requires it.

If you change the word from “union” to “corporation,” the workers in a corporation have the right to unionize themselves per se. They do not elect their officials, the management team. Access to information of finances is not legally required to be made available to all the employees. The rules apply differently than from unions. Corporations are hierarchical structures. They could not function otherwise. I am not suggesting it ought to be, but to suggest that unions and corporations are sort of parallel organizations is to fly in the face of factually otherwise.

So there is a significant difference between how a union is organized, how it functions, and how a corporation functions. Despite, again, what my colleagues have said, there are 21 States in this country where people who are nonunion members still get the benefits of what unions are collectively able to bargain for. Nonunion members get a free ride on the coattails of collective bargaining agreements in 21 States in this country.

Further, there are laws in place to ensure that nonmembers in the 29 free-bargaining States can confine their payments to what is directly related to collective bargaining. That is in 29 States in this country.

There have been a bunch of different States that have tried to do what the Senator from Utah wants to do. Every one of these States rejected it. Only one has it—ironically, the State of Utah—and that State has not made a determination yet as to whether or not this paycheck deception, as I call it, is going to become the law of the land.

Legislative bodies have rejected this. The courts have rejected this as being unconstitutional as well. Unions are the only member organizations that have given their members the option of receiving all the economic benefits of membership whether they are actually members. So whether one likes unions or does not like them, there is a fundamental difference. To suggest somebody we are going to achieve parity that is not the case.

On the issue of shareholders, despite the fact there has been a tremendous and healthy explosion of involvement by average citizens purchasing stocks in America in the last 10 years—While I do not have the exact percentage today of Americans who own stock, own a piece of equity in American business, I would estimate it to be approximately around 70 percent. It is a wonderful, new statistic in terms of people who have control over millions in their own independence. But a substantial part of stock that has been purchased is purchased through mutual funds. There are individual buyers, but a lot of it is done through large investors or larger conglomerates, if you will.

However, when you start breaking this out and start to decide how a shareholder would vote on whether or not corporate funds ought to be used for purposes, I do not think I have to say much more—you are entering a morass of problems on how you divide the percentages of corporate equity based on a corporation’s political involvement. You are literally putting a sign around almost every corporation’s neck saying: Indict me. Because I do not know how you do it without getting yourself into trouble.

It seems to me, this bill is a step in the wrong direction. In a bill where we are trying to reduce the amount of money dollars, in politics, to try, all of a sudden, to engage in a debate that is unworkable, and as the amendment is currently drafted, it is unworkable—and even if it were well crafted—I think this is fundamentally a step in the wrong direction and does not further the overall goals of this bill.

My colleague from New York said it well. If corporate America thought this amendment was going to be adopted, it would be banging down the Senate doors. The idea that they should be treated exactly like unions is not something that corporate America would welcome.

So there is a mistake, again there appears to be a lot of animosity here, a lot of venom, a lot of anger over the fact that organized labor fights on behalf of their people. They fight for a Patients’ Bill of Rights. They fight for prescription drug benefits. They fight for a minimum wage increase. They fight to improve the quality of education. Make no mistake, there are people who disagree with them. And they wish the unions would just be quiet and go away and stop talking out on these issues and stop getting themselves involved in the political life of America. I appreciate their desire to have that occur, but that is not right. It is not how America functions.

I do not think what we ought to codify as new law.

Whatever else one thinks about McCain-Feingold—and despite the fact I agree with my colleague from Wisconsin, if this amendment were adopted, it would virtually act as a “poison pill” and kill this bill. To the extent people are interested in campaign finance reform, the adoption of this amendment would, for all practical purposes, destroy the fine effort that has been waged by the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Wisconsin to achieve campaign finance reform.

If this amendment were adopted, aside from that issue, it would be a major setback, in my view, to the millions and millions of working people in this country who want their voices heard, want the issues they care about to be on the table when politics is being discussed and candidates are being decided.

For those reasons, and others brought up today, I respectfully say to my friend from Utah that this amendment would be more properly withdrawn for the reasons I said at the very outset of this discussion. Notwithstanding all of the above, this amendment ought to be defeated. And I urge my colleagues to do so when the vote occurs.

With that, I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, it is with some regret I rise in opposition to this amendment. I tell my friend and colleague from Connecticut, I happen to agree with him on the portions of his debate alluding to the corporate side of this, trying to say that stockholders would give approval—for the information of the Parliamentarian, I am on the time of the Senator from Connecticut. I see the Parliamentarian is having a hard time deciphering that. I am not often on the side of my friend from Connecticut, but at this time I will use his 5 minutes.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I hope the world is listening at this moment. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the record, the Senator from Connecticut wants to be notified when there are 4 minutes remaining?

Mr. DODD. I think my colleague said he needs 5 minutes. I will give him 10 minutes. If he uses less, let me know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 12 minutes left.

Mr. DODD. Better make it 8.

Mr. NICKLES. I will do that.

Mr. President, I mention to my friend from Connecticut, I happen to agree with him. The corporate side of this would not work. I read the language before the second time today. I have read the language. The other time I read the language was in relation to the amendment dealing with broadcasting.

All of a sudden we are giving gifts to political parties if you are from a large State, such as New York, New Jersey, or California, the previous amendment gave a gift to politicians in the millions of dollars. And that was in the language. The language in this amendment, regrettably—I have the greatest respect for my colleague from Utah, but I do not think the corporate side is workable.

I heard people say: We want to have voluntary campaign contributions that should apply to the unions and businesses. But no one is compelled to be a stockholder.

My friend from Connecticut mentioned, you may happen to own a mutual fund. This is absolutely impossible to enforce. But I also say there is a big difference between stockholders and employees. And the reason we called the original one paycheck protection is because unions are actually taking money away from individuals on a monthly basis many times to the tune of $20 or $30 a month, and in 29 States, in many cases, taking away that money without their approval. Oh, they may not join the union, but they still have to pay agency dues, agency fees.

A lot of that money is used for political purposes. That part of the amendment I happen to agree with wholeheartedly. That is the amendment I wish we were voting on, not this one that confuses corporate, where you have to get shareholders’ approval, who volunteer their portfolio stock, because that is not workable.

It is workable to say, before you take money out of a worker’s paycheck to the tune of $25 a month, if that individual does not want their money to be used—not the $5, $10, $15 a month—for political purposes, they should have a veto. They should be able to say: No, don’t take my money.

No one should be compelled to contribute to a campaign in the year 2001 in the United States. Yet we have millions of Americans who are given no choice. Some people have said this is a killer amendment, that it is a poison pill to kill the bill. I disagree wholeheartedly, as the original sponsor of the original paycheck protection amendment. I still am. I believe very strongly no one should be compelled to contribute to a campaign against their will. Period. We want to encourage participation. We do not want to mandate it. We don’t want to take money away from an individual, use it in a way they don’t like, and then say: If you want to, you might file for a refund.

That is the Beck decision. I think we should strike the Beck provision. I agree entirely with the Senator from Kentucky. The Beck provision in the underlying bill is a fraud. It should not be in there. It doesn’t protect workers; it doesn’t codify Beck. It dilutes it, if it does not altogether eviscerate it. It needs to be deleted. We will wrestle with that amendment later. I don’t want to confuse the two.

Paycheck protection is important. It is important for those millions of workers who are compelled to join a union. If they object to the union and resign their membership in the union, they still have to pay agency fees. Agency fees can be in excess of $20 a month. Much of that money, the money that is used for political purposes against their will. Those hard earned dollars may be used for political purposes maybe they don’t agree with, money that goes to candidates campaigning against a tax cut, maybe campaigning to take away their right to own firearms, maybe very liberal positions with which they don’t agree.

You might ask: Where did Paycheck Protection come from? I began this general debate in Oklahoma. A union member came up to me and said his money was being used for political purposes that he was against it, totally, and he couldn’t do anything about it. I told him I would try to help him. I told him I will try to pass legislation to have voluntary campaign contributions for everybody in America. That shouldn’t be too much to ask for. That is the genesis of paycheck protection.

I hope maybe we will have a chance to vote on that. I hope we will find out, are people really for voluntary campaign contributions. Unfortunately, the amendment we have before us does much more than make a campaign contributions voluntary. So maybe at a later point in the debate—we still have a week and a half left—maybe we can vote on voluntary campaign contributions. That is this Senator’s purpose.

For someone to say this is a poison pill because organized labor doesn’t like it is nonsense. I would just give a special interest a blank check—do we let them veto anything that we present on the floor of the Senate? I don’t think so. Organized labor forcibly confiscates hundreds of millions of dollars for political purposes. Organized labor put in at least $300 to $500 million in the last campaign cycle. That is a lot of money. Let them participate, but just it should all be done with voluntary campaign contributions, that should all be done on a voluntary basis. Nobody should be compelled to contribute to a campaign in the year 2001.

I hope we will have a chance to vote on paycheck protection, voluntary campaign contributions for all Americans. I do believe that the language that deals with the corporate side of this is not workable and does not have anything to do with voluntary campaign contributions. I say that with great regret because I have the greatest respect for my colleague from Utah.

I also want to address one other issue very quickly. That is the issue with Beck. My friend from Kentucky mentioned that the underlying bill is a fraud. It should not be in there. It changes it, changes it dramatically. To me, that is not right. I don’t think it is right for us to say verbally it codifies Beck when it takes worker protections and actually guts the Beck decision. I hope that at a later point, not to confuse it with this amendment, but at a later point my colleagues will see that language removed from the underlying bill.

I thank my friend and colleague from Connecticut for the time and also my friend and colleague from Kentucky who I think has handled this bill quite well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 7 minutes 23 seconds remaining for the proponents, and 6 and a half minutes for the opponents.

The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McConnell. Before the Senator from Oklahoma leaves the floor, I want him to know he has our great admiration. He is the one who thought of paycheck protection. He outlined the history of it a few moments ago. I understand he will not have his voice in this offering because, as he knows, we were trying to meet the objections of some of those on the other side who have said for years: You ought to apply it to corporations as well as unions. We did that. It looks as though we are not going to get any of their votes anyway.

I do credit the Senator from Oklahoma. This is his piece of work originally. I hope at some point in the debate he will offer the amendment without the corporate provision, certainly you and I and many members would. It deals with a very real problem in the American political system.
Mr. DODD. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] proposes an amendment numbered 136.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. KENNEDY. Reserving the right to object—I don’t intend to object—does the Senator have copies of the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. I understand your side has copies.

Mr. DODD. I say to my colleague, there is a copy we can get.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have a copy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the dispensing of the reading of the amendment?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment as follows:

(Purpose: To add a provision to require disclosure to shareholders and members regarding use of funds for political activities.)

On page 37, between lines 14 and 15, and insert the following:

SEC. 305. DISCLOSURE OF DISBURSEMENTS OF UNION DUES, FEES, AND ASSESSMENTS OR CORPORATE FUNDS FOR POLITICAL ACTIVITIES.

(Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 304 the following:

SEC. 304A. DISCLOSURE OF DISBURSEMENTS OF UNION DUES, FEES, AND ASSESSMENTS OR CORPORATE FUNDS FOR POLITICAL ACTIVITIES.

(‘(A) In general.—Any corporation or labor organization (including a separate segregated fund established and maintained by such entity) that makes a disbursement for political activity or a contribution or expenditure during an election cycle shall submit a written report for such cycle;

(1) in the case of a corporation, to each of its shareholders; and

(2) in the case of a labor organization, to each employee with the labor organization’s bargaining unit or units;

(b) Disclosure of information. —

(1) IN GENERAL.—The report submitted under subsection (a) shall disclose information regarding the dues, fees, and assessments spent at each level of the labor organization or by each individual, national, State, and local component or council, and each affiliate of the labor organization and information on funds of a corporation spent by each subsidiary of such corporation showing the amount of dues, fees, and assessments or corporate funds disbursed in the following categories:

(A) Direct activities, such as cash contributions to candidates and committees of political parties;

(B) Internal and external communications relating to specific candidates, political causes, and committees of political parties;

(C) Internal disbursements by the labor organization or corporation to maintain, operate, and solicit contributions for a separate segregated fund.

(D) Voter registration drives, State and precinct organizing on behalf of candidates and committees of political parties, and get-out-the-vote campaigns.

(2) INCENTIVE CONTRIBUTIONS OR CAUSE.—For each of the categories of information described in a subparagraph of paragraph (1), the report shall identify the candidate for public office on whose behalf the disbursements were made or the political cause or purpose for which the disbursements were made.

(3) CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES.—The report under subsection (a) shall also list all contributions or expenditures made by separated segregated funds established and maintained by each labor organization or corporation.

(c) TIME TO MAKE REPORTS.—A report required under subsection (a) shall be submitted not later than January 30 of the year beginning after the end of the election cycle that is the subject of the report.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ELECTION CYCLE.—The term ‘election cycle’ means, with respect to an election, the period beginning on the day after the date of the previous general election for Federal office and ending on the date of the next general election for Federal office.

(2) POLITICAL ACTIVITY.—The term ‘political activity’ means—

(A) voter registration activity;

(B) voter identification or get-out-the-vote activity;

(C) a public communication that refers to a clearly identified candidate for Federal office and that expresses advocacy for or opposition to a candidate for Federal office; and

(D) disbursements for television or radio broadcast time, print advertising, or polling for political activities.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment is simple, and straightforward. It does not attempt to codify the Beck case that we debated year after year on the Senate floor. There is nothing complex or legalistic about it. Frankly, like the section 527 bill we passed last year, we simply require disclosure.

This is a modest measure of fundamental fairness. It is in the right-to-know amendment. The right of American workers and shareholders who pay dues and fees to unions and corporations that represent them, to know how their money is being spent for certain political purposes, causes, and activities. It does nothing more than require a report by labor organizations and corporations to be given to the shareholders and workers represented by unions. This shows how much of their money is being spent in the political process.

As we all know, part of the debate here has been the use of these types of money that never have to, because of the loophole in the Federal election laws, be seen on the reports or be reported by those who received benefits from union expenditures.

I have to say this amendment does not impose overly burdensome or onerous requirements on corporations or unions. This is basic information, and it should be freely provided.

I cannot believe that either union or corporate leadership has a legitimate interest in keeping secret what political causes and activities employee
Mr. DODD. Mr. President, does my colleague from Arizona wish to be heard on this?

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like 3 minutes. Mr. DODD. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank Senator HATCH for an effort to do what all of us agree is a fundamental of any campaign finance reform, and that is full and complete disclosure. I regret having to point out my opposition to this amendment. By any understanding this full disclosure of political activity of both business and labor is defined in the basic bill under section 2 (Political Activity), which says:

The term “political activity” means—(A) voter registration activity; (B) voter identification or get-out-the-vote activity; (C) a public communication that refers to a fairly identified candidate for federal office and that expressly advocates support for or opposition to a candidate for Federal office; and (finally) (D) disbursement for television or radio broadcasting or direct advertising or polling for political activities.

The way I read this is most of these activities are conducted by labor unions and only one by corporations.

There are many other things that are done by businesses and corporations that need to be disclosed as well, in my view. Very few corporate activities are involved in voter registration activities. Of course, unions are. The same thing holds for voter identification or get-out-the-vote activity. Express advocacy is clearly not something that is done a lot by businesses, nor is polling.

I assure Senator HATCH of the following: We are working with Senator SNOWE and with Senator COCHRAN and Senator COLLINS, and we are trying to come up with a fair disclosure amendment that will give greater disclosure than is presently in the bill but in a more fair and balanced way.

I will have an amendment on the grounds of its imbalance. The one thing we promised everybody when we proposed this legislation was we would resist any attempt to pass an amendment that would unbalance what we had put forward as a level playing field. This would imbalance that. I believe we can have all of those items fully disclosed, and more, so observers will say this full disclosure, this light, will shine on business and unions alike in an equal manner.

Having said that, I regret to have to oppose the amendment. I will make a motion to table at the appropriate time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. DODD. I am happy to yield my colleague 5 minutes. I thank my colleague from Arizona for his comments. We are going to meet in the morning for a half-hour debate before the final vote on this Hatch II amendment. I thank my colleague.

The Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, with all respect to my friend and colleague from Utah, this really is no improvement over the earlier amendment. In many respects, it just continues the situation by which different groups are being treated, not just the corporations and unions but other groups as well.

Again, I know my friend talked about the drafting. He doesn’t need any lecture from me. But I am confused because the amendment is very unclear. It says, for example, that “political activities” must be reported. If you look on page 5 it has “political activity” defined. If you go to the term “political activity,” it means, if you go to line 19, “political activity.”

So you have political activity being defined as political activity. It is really quite difficult to understand.

We all know at the present time that unions are subject to substantial reporting and disclosure requirements. I have in my hand the disclosure requirements. They are extensive. Unions have to disclose PAC funds, all payments for express advocacy, and detailed financial information. This goes far beyond what corporations today are required to report.

It is publicly available. For any of those who have a viewpoint that is the same as that of the Senator from Utah, they can just go down to the Labor Department where all these reports are on file. They are available to the public.

The case has not been made about the inadequacy of the information that is reported. We have language requiring additional disclosure in this amendment, but there has been no case that the current information is inadequate to reveal what political activities are being supported.

I think that doesn’t make a great deal of sense.

This bill is not only vague, it is burdensome. As we mentioned earlier, and as Senator HATCH said during our prior colloquy, corporations would have to send reports to anyone who was a shareholder at the time of the expenditures.

We have had the chance to do the numbers. Last week alone there were more than 6 billion stockholder transactions just on the New York Stock Exchange.

Does this mean that if any of the corporations that would be included in this bill made an expenditure last week that all holders of those shares would have to be notified? The amendment says they would have to be notified of all expenditures within a 2-year election cycle. That is unwieldy. It is unworkable. It is enormously bureaucratic. It makes no sense at all.

We had a good exchange in the last debate, and I am confused about what either my good friend, Senator HATCH, or others who support this amendment have against working families and the working families’ agenda.
Working families want an increase in the minimum wage, a Patients’ Bill of Rights, and additional funding in education. They want to make sure we have a sound and secure national security. They want Medicare and Medicaid to be enhanced. They want to improve workers’ rights. They want to invest in continuing education and workforce training programs. I daresay that kind of a program would be worthwhile at the present time. This is what their agenda is all about.

We have heard a form of economic crisis. And what we have from the administration is a tax bill which isn’t an economic program; it is a tax bill that was basically devised over a year ago when we had entirely different economic conditions.

I think the kinds of investment that working families have advocated in terms of ensuring that we are going to invest in training programs, invest in education, invest in small business, enhance treatment for drug addiction, are not to see further cuts in the National Science Foundation, or other cuts in the advanced technology program, makes a good deal of sense.

We hope this amendment is not accepted. If we debate and discussion, we went through these and other provisions in careful detail. The amendment does seem to be one-sided, unfairly targeted, and completely unnecessary.

I thank the sponsors, Senator FEINGOLD, and Senator MCCAIN, as well as Senator DODD and others, have eloquently pointed out the kind of balance and protections for the American voters that have been included in the McCain-Feingold legislation. That was carefully considered. It seems to me that we ought to stay with those proposals. I hope this amendment will not be accepted.

Mr. DODD, Mr. President, I thank my colleagues in Massachusetts for his comments. I think he hit it right on the head with this.

I made comments earlier on the previous amendment offered by my good friend from Utah. He made the point. He understood the intent of what the Senator was trying to achieve. As Senator NICKLES of Oklahoma, with whom I don’t normally agree on these matters, properly pointed out, you cannot carry out the intent of the amendment. Despite the desire to do otherwise, the language of the amendment, if followed to the letter of the proposal, or even the spirit, creates a tremendously bureaucratic nightmare for both corporations and for labor organization.

I do not agree that anyone would have an interest to discourage activity at all. We want to know what is going on. Under current Federal law, labor unions are required to make various records be available and open. The records cannot be shielded or hidden. That is in violation of existing Federal law.

To suddenly add even more bureaucratic requirements for every disburse-ment, receipt and expenditure in every level, including affiliates, and every minor tangible office, is not in the spirit of true disclosure. This is in the spirit of discouragement from anyone participating in the process. Everyone knows we have a hard time getting more people to participate in the process as it is.

In last year’s Presidential and congressional Federal elections, we had about 50 million who participated out of 101 million eligible voters in this country. It ought to be doing better and we can do better. We lecture the world all the time about how important it is to vote. We like to think of ourselves as an example for nations that are seeking to establish democratic institutions. It seems to me it is in our collective interest to promote that idea, and to do so by example with an environment of full disclosure, of fairness, and of equity.

But with all due respect to my friend from Utah, the adoption of this amendment is nothing more than to create unnecessary burdens on institutions that, frankly, we wish were more active in the political life of America. If they wish to be brought into the electoral and voter education efforts we might have greater voter participation.

This amendment, in my view, only adds additional unnecessary burdens to a process that already discourages too much campaigning in the electoral life of our Nation. For those reasons, I urge our colleagues when the vote occurs tomorrow to reject this amendment.

I think the provisions included in the bill drafted by the Senators from Arizona and Wisconsin very aptly deal with this very question of true disclosure and information. They have done so in the spirit of seeking to make people aware of what institutions are doing and allowing the institutions in the political life of our country.

But to add this amendment to the McCain-Feingold bill would have the opposite effect. It would not effectuate what we are trying to achieve. Our goals are to reduce the proliferation of the money in the political life of our country and to make it less costly for people to seek Federal office.

We ought to simultaneously try to reduce the amount of hurdles, burdens, and costs that such as corporations and labor unions have to presently meet. To add to them, to make their involvement even more difficult, I don’t think is in anyone’s interest, Democrats or Republicans, and certainly not in the interest of the American people.

For those reasons, I frankly urge that the amendment be withdrawn. But, if it is not going to be withdrawn, I urge my colleagues with the same expression that we saw with the previous Hatch amendment to vote with the same sense of collective voice on this particular proposal. For those reasons, I urge the rejection of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have listened to these comments about the imbalance. McCain-Feingold is balance. It brings balance. Let me give you an illustration.

McCain-Feingold regulates what unions care about least. Think about it. It regulates get out the vote. It regulates two things: It regulates television advertisement within 60 days. It regulates radio advertisement—party within 60 days of a general election, or 30 days of a primary. It does do that. That is technically unconstitutional on its face. But it does do that. Television advertisements and radio advertisements are all McCain-Feingold does with regard to what the unions are interested in. These are the two things they care about least.

What they really care about and what we ought to be concerned about, if we want fairness, and if we don’t want to have one side have an advantage over the other, McCain-Feingold ought to cover all get out the vote activities. That is probably one of the most important things in the political process today, if not the most important thing.

Voter identification, McCain-Feingold does not do anything about that. Voter registration, nothing. Mass mailings, nothing; magazine advertisements, newspaper advertisements, outdoor advertising, leafletting, polling, volunteer recruitment and training, union-salaried, full-time political operatives. And look, I do not have any problem with that in the sense that unions have a right to do whatever they want to do in advancing their issues in the political process. And I would fight for their right to do that, as I have in the past. But the only people whose rights are infringed upon by the McCain-Feingold bill happen to be the Republican Party and the unions do all of this for the Democratic Party.

Mr. DODD. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HATCH. If I could finish making my point, and then I will be happy to yield.

The unions are the principal get-out-the-vote force in the Democratic Party. Keep in mind, 40 percent of union members are Republicans, yet almost 100 percent of the money that unions raise helps get out the vote for Democratic candidates. That is why this bill happen to be the Republican Party and the unions do all of this for the Democratic Party.

No. 2, voter identification. The unions do that beautifully for Democrats. I do not know of one Republican that a union has worked for to help identify Republican voters. I am sure there is one or two, but the fact is the vast majority—almost 100 percent—of the money goes to help Democrats. That is their right. Why aren’t the Democrats scared about what the McCain-Feingold bill will do to the Democratic Party? Because the Democratic Party does not have to worry about all of this because the unions do it for them. Most of the employees of the unions are dues-paid political operatives. They are very good, the best I respect them. But it is not the case that the unions are not a powerful political force. They do have a group like the union movement does get out the vote, voter identification, voter registration, mass mailings, phone banks, magazine advertisements, newspaper advertisements, outdoor advertising and leafleting, polling, volunteer recruitment and training, and a whole raft of other things, including—

Mr. DODD. Will my colleague yield on that point? That is not our fault. That is not the fault of the people who are represented by the unions. Why don't you get somebody to organize the voter registration and GOTV?

Mr. HATCH. Wait. The last point I was making was, and union-salaried, full-time political operatives.

You can say that is our fault. Let's assume that is so. The fact is, we do not have anybody doing that. It is totally unregulated. That is the guts of the political process. If we are going to regulate, let's regulate everybody, not just the parties. And the parties themselves ought to be given greater leeway than this bill gives them.

The only thing that McCain-Feingold regulates in the thing that the unions care about the least; that is, TV advertisements.

Look, I give a lot of credit to the Democrats. I give a lot of credit to the unions. There is no question that is why they won the last election in the Senate and had more people elected than Republicans. Because they were getting out the vote like never before. They did voter identification like never before. They did voter registration. They did mass mailings. And they did phone banks. They did TV advertisements, magazine advertisements, newspaper advertisements, outdoor advertising and leafleting, polling, volunteer recruitment and training, and had union-salaried, full-time political operatives all over this country. That is their right.

Why do we take all those rights away from the Republican Party? You can’t just answer by saying that is the Republicans’ fault because they are not paying the same homage to the unions that the Democrats do, and I have to say we are not. In the sense of doing everything that they want done, because not everything they want done is right.

All my amendment does is require disclosure to the union members and corporate shareholders. I am not even asking for priority in this area. I am not asking for any equality with regard to all the things the unions do for Democrats that make them not care about the money issue being able to raise soft money. The unions do it all for them, and that is all soft money.

Now, I had some strong words with my colleague from Massachusetts earlier in this debate, and they were meant in good taste and in good humor as well. But I feel strongly on this issue.

This amendment will give ordinary workers the opportunity to have a meaningful voice in how their political contributions are used. I held a union card. I understand this.

Organized labor is not a monolithic entity, but too often the leadership of these unions act in a monolithic fashion when it comes to elections. This amendment tries to level the playing field for both unions and corporations. All it requires is disclosure.

Mr. DODD. Will my colleague yield on that point?

Mr. HATCH. Sure.

Mr. DODD. I want to point out, if I may, when you talk about the great advantage that labor has, because it does organize, it does work on voter registration, it does work on getting out the vote—

Mr. HATCH. It does all these things.

Mr. DODD. If I may finish. This is not a liability and it should be applauded. The fact that corporations do not do that sort of a thing does not mean that other organizations should be condemned because they do encourage people to participate.

To make one other point regarding parity, as of October 2000, according to the Center for Responsive Politics and the FEC, the ratio of ‘‘total’’ contributions from corporations versus unions was 15 to 1. As of October 2000, corporations had contributed more than $841 million dollars, while unions contributed just over $56 million. As of October 2000, the ratio of ‘‘hard money’’ contributions from corporations versus unions was 14 to 1. In 1998 and 1996, the ratio was 16 to 1. Between 1992 and 1996, corporate contributions increased nearly $220 million, while union contributions grew by $12.6 million. No party in these statistics.

These ratios and statistics are according to the Federal Election Commission. You talk about disparity—16 to 1—every year, I say to my friend from Utah. Corporations have massive amounts of money, hard and soft money, they are pouring into these Federal elections.

Mr. HATCH. If I may take back the floor.

Mr. DODD. Of course you may. It is your time, Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Nowhere did they count these dues-paid political operatives. I read a report a number of years back—I think it was the Congressional Research Service, if my recollection serves me correctly—where they estimated that the unions spend about a half billion dollars—that is with a ‘‘$’’—a half billion dollars every 2 years in local, State, and Federal politics. This money is spent on dues-paid political operative activities that never show up in these figures. I must tell you I am not against their right to do that. I think they should have a right to do that. I respect them. I will fight for their right to do that. The fact that it is all one-sided, even though 40 percent of union members are Republicans, I can live with that. But what I cannot live with is shutting down the party, the only way we can compete, where the unions do all these things for Democrats but nothing for Republicans.

The fact is, the Senate Democrats will continue to count on the unions to get out their vote. But why do we have McCain-Feingold shutting down the rights of Republicans to compete to get out their vote, to have registration, mass mailing, phone banks, TV advertisements, radio advertisements, magazine advertisements, newspaper advertisements, outdoor advertising and leafleting, polling, volunteer recruitment and training, and full-time political operatives?

The fact is, this is all done for Democrats. Their party does not have to do it. They can live with the hard money limitation that this bill would impose on us. But the Republican Party would have no soft money. All this is soft money on the unions’ part—all working for Democrats, all one sided. And the Republican Party does not have the same opportunities. Talk about imbalance.

Again, let’s go back to what my amendment does. My amendment does not say: Stop that. You members of the unions are not allowed to do that. It does not say: You members of the unions can’t get out the vote for Democrats, and does not say you can’t do voter identification for Democrats. It does not say you can’t do voter registration for Democrats. It does not say you can’t do mass mailings or phone banks or TV advertisements or radio advertisements—although for those two, with the 60-day requirement, McCain-Feingold does do something; but it is unconstitutional on its face does not say you can’t do magazine advertisements and newspaper advertisements and outdoor advertising and leafleting and polling, and volunteer recruitment and training. It does not say you can’t do these things. We have the best in the business, all over the country in every State in the Union that counts, in every large city that counts. They can do all of that.

I am not arguing against that. All my amendment says is that they need to disclose to their members something that in this computer age they can do without—
Mr. DODD. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HATCH. If I could just finish my comments, something that they can do in this computer age without an awful lot of difficulty, and something I believe the corporate world can do without an awful lot of difficulty is provide disclosure. To me, that is the only thing that will make our process more fair, more honest, more decent. Disclosure helps everyone equally to know how their money is spent. I believe that locals should be entitled to know what political speech they are supporting. Disclosure is what honesty and fairness in politics is all about. Why would anyone fight against disclosure?

Fairness is all I am asking for. I am not asking to stop any of this. It has been admitted basically that unions do the work for the Democratic Party.

Mr. DODD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. They basically help the Democratic Party, and they will continue to have the right to.

Mr. DODD. Should we have with all these independent 501(c)(4)s, the National Right to Life groups, the Christian Coalition, the National Rifle Association, and we have already been admitted basically that unions do not have to report only on expenditures from their own general treasuries and from their own local treasuries but which, under the rationale put forward by it, completely leaves out other membership groups, as the Senator from Connecticut so rightly points out.

The burdensome reporting requirements that are imposed under this amendment on unions in particular are really much more difficult to comply with than if they would be in a corporately based foundation. Disclosing union membership lists either, nor am I asking for the unions to disclose their membership in any way covered by the Supreme Court. Does my colleague support that?

Mr. HATCH. You can’t compare those to the unions.

Mr. DODD. Would you agree?

Mr. HATCH. I would like to answer. The National Rifle Association is made up primarily of blue-collar Democrats. In all honesty, that is why there hasn’t been a lot of shouting about gunslinging because Al Gore found in the last election that he had offended an awful lot of Democrats. I think that is why he lost West Virginia.

Mr. DODD. Should we have full disclosure?

Mr. HATCH. Not of members, but only of expenditures.

Mr. DODD. Why not of members?

Mr. HATCH. Because then you get into the NAACP, and we have already had the Supreme Court say that is unconstitutional.

Mr. DODD. Should we know who are making the contributions to these organizations that are out every day with such activities as get out the vote, voter registration drives, letter writing, and mailings? You talk about full disclosure, why not full disclosure on these organizations?

Mr. HATCH. The Supreme Court has ruled in cases that you cannot require disclosure of membership lists. I don’t personally have much problem with disclosure of moneys that have been put into the process, but not the names.

Mr. DODD. Are we going to keep that secret?

Mr. HATCH. The main case was the NAACP where one of the Southern States tried to get them to disclose their membership list and the Court said they didn’t have to do. They are a legitimate organization. I am not asking the unions to disclose their membership lists either, nor am I asking corporations to disclose their shareholder lists, although anybody who looks at a corporate filing can figure that out.

If disclosure requirements applied equally to the Sierra Club, to NARAL, and to other groups, disclosure might not be a bad thing for all of them. I would not be pushing for disclosure of the membership lists for those groups because the Supreme Court has already ruled on that. But now we are talking about real players in the political process, not peripheral organizations. The fact is, many members of the NRA are Democrats. They are just offended by some of the phony demagoging that has been done about guns through the years. They are tough on crime. That is another debate.

With regard to the right-to-life community, I do admit that they support both sides, but they support people who are pro-life, just as the pro-choice groups support the people who are pro-choice on both sides.

Mrs. CLINTON. Will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. HATCH. I am happy to.

Mrs. CLINTON. My good friend from Connecticut raised an issue that troubles me about this proposed amendment that the distinguished Senator from Colorado raised.

In addition to the issues that Senator KENNEDY and Senator Dodd have raised about the vagueness and definitional concerns raised in the amendment, this particular issue is the real heart of the parity problem that many of us have with this amendment.

It reminds me of the old Anatole France saying: The law is fair; neither the rich nor the poor can sleep under the bridge. What we have is an amendment whose practice not only would fall disproportionately on unions as compared to corporations but which, under the rationale put forward by it, completely leaves out other membership groups, as the Senator from Connecticut so rightly points out.

The burdensome reporting requirements that are imposed under this amendment on unions in particular are really much more difficult to comply with than if they would be in a corporate foundation. Corporations would be required to report only on expenditures from their own general treasuries and from the general treasuries of their subsidiaries. However, unions would be required to report on the expenditures from all of their affiliates, which would mean that a local union would be required to report on expenditures by a national union, and vice versa, even though neither of them had either access or control to the financial records of the other.

This point we heard about from Senator Dodd is particularly important. If the point we are trying to get at with this amendment is to understand who is doing what with what funds to engage in political activity during election cycles, then clearly a lot of the other membership groups that raise and spend tremendous amounts of money were two were mentioned, the NRA, the Sierra Club, the National Chambers of Commerce, National Right to Work Foundation, other groups across the political spectrum—

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator have a question because I think I have the right to the floor?

Mrs. CLINTON. My question would be: In response to the discussion between the Senators on this issue, how can we impose undue burdens on only unions as compared to corporations and completely leave out of the Senator’s concerns all of these membership groups that raise tremendous amounts of money, are on the front lines of our political campaigns, have a direct influence on how voters vote, and yet are not covered by the Senator’s amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Let me answer the question. The fact is, we are equal with regard to both corporations and unions. We don’t include any ideological groups because when you give to the Sierra Club, you know the causes they advocate. You have a right to give. You are not forced or compelled to contribute to these organizations. But when people join unions or are forced to join unions because that is a condition of employment, they are forced to pay fees to unions. Most of the union members probably don’t know what the union dues are used for, especially with regard to politics or things such as an effort in 1996 to legalize marijuana in California, for instance. The Teamsters contributed $195,000 to that effort in union dues to support that effort. How many working families want their hard-earned money to be used for marijuana legalization? I think that they have a right to know this kind of information.

Disclosing expenditures is constitutionally different from disclosing contributions to ideological groups which the Supreme Court has said we should do. Disclosure expenditures does not implicate free association. It is important to differentiate between expenditures and contributors. The difference is, union members are forced to pay dues.

Mr. DODD. If my colleague will yield, we disagree so fundamentally on that.

Mr. HATCH. Let me restate that.

Mr. DODD. That is not true.

Mr. HATCH. It is true in nonright-to-work States. People are forced to join the union and forced to pay dues. They don’t have to stay in the union, I agree. They can quit if they give up their jobs.

Mr. DODD. Nor are they required to contribute union dues. In 29 States, that is not the case with respect to the contribution of union dues.

Mr. HATCH. In right-to-work States, that is not the case.
Mr. DODD. They get the benefits of the collective bargaining agreements even though they are not members per se. They all get the same benefits.

Mr. HATCH. That is another argument for another day. The fact is, I don’t think anybody in their right mind is going to say that people are not compelled to pay union dues in nonright-to-work States, if they want the job and they want to work in a union business. It is that simple. Nobody does that. I don’t have a problem with that. That is the way the law is. But to say they can spend 100 percent of the money for only one party and not disclose it seems to me to be a bad process, especially when Democrats have suggested: Well, if you don’t make the corporations disclose, why should you make the unions? I am saying let’s make both of them disclose. Let’s be fair so there is no imbalance.

The imbalance is in the fact that the only two things the unions don’t care about are TV advertisements and radio advertisements. They don’t do all these other things: Get out the vote, voter identification, voter registration, mass mailings, phone banks, TV advertisements, newspaper advertisements, outdoor advertising, leafleting, polling, volunteer recruitment and training, and most of their employees are union salaried, full-time political operatives working for one party, and at the same time this McCain-Feingold bill limits the Republican Party, which has no outside organization doing this. It limits hard dollars to no more than $1,000 per contributor. Talk about imbalance. In other words, the two groups that you would hope would be fully in the political process—the two political parties—are the ones that are left out, while we ignore all this other stuff.

Talk about imbalance. The McCain-Feingold bill is imbalanced. What is even worse, in my eyes, is that the one thing they impose on unions and others is TV advertisements and radio advertisements within 30 to 60 days of the primary and general elections. Think about that. That says they don’t have the right to speak during that time which, under Buckley v. Valeo, shows that directly violative of the first amendment. Here we have the media and everybody else arguing for this.

My amendment does one thing. It doesn’t stop the unions from doing this. It doesn’t say you are bad people, you should not do this. It says you need to disclose what you are doing so that all members of the union know what political ideologies they are supporting with their dues. That includes 40 percent of them who are basically Republicans and whose money is all going to elect Democrats, people who are basically contrary to their philosophical viewpoints.

All I ask is that there be disclosure. But to even it up, since the Democrats have raised this time and again, I would require disclosure in the corporate world, too—disclose what the money is used for regarding politics.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RETIREMENT OF COLONEL WILSON A. “BUDD” SHATZER

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Colonel Wilson A. “Bud” Shatzer, who after thirty-one years of dedicated service to the nation and the military, will retire from the United States Army on April 1, 2001.

Colonel Shatzer’s career began following his graduation from Eastern Washington University in 1970 when he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Armor Branch. Over the past three decades, his assignments have included a variety of both command and staff positions, and throughout his military career, Colonel Shatzer consistently distinguished himself in all his assignments. Furthermore, whether a newlycommissioned Second Lieuten-ant or a seasoned Colonel, this officer always demonstrated one of the most important qualities an officer should possess, a deep-seated concern for his soldiers regardless of their rank. As a leader and teacher Colonel Shatzer proved himself to be a willing mentor of young officers and enlisted men, and in the process, he helped to shape the successful careers of soldiers throughout the Army.

Many of us came to know Colonel Shatzer during his five-year tour as Executive Officer, Army Legislative Liaison. His professionalism, mature judgment, and sound advice earned him the respect and confidence of members of the Army Secretariat and the Army Staff. While dealing with Members of Congress and Congressional staff, the Department of Defense, and the Joint Staff, Colonel Shatzer’s abilities as an officer, analyst and advisor were of benefit to the Army and to those with whom he worked in the Legislative Branch.

For the past thirty-one years, Colonel Shatzer has selflessly served the Army and our Nation professionally, capably and admirably. Through his personal style of leadership, he has had a positive impact on the lives of not only the soldiers who have served under him, but of the families of those who serve as well as the civilian employees of the Army who have worked with and under this officer. I am sure that all of those in the Senate who have worked with Colonel Shatzer join me today in wishing both he and his wife, Annie, health, happiness, and success in the years ahead.

BUDGET COMMITTEE Markup

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, it is a great privilege for me to be a new Member of the Senate, and it is a great privilege for me to be assigned to the Budget Committee. It is with a heavy heart that I have just learned that it is the intention of the chair- man, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, for whom I have the highest regard, not to have a markup in the Budget Committee and rather bring a committee’s mark under the lawful pro- cedures of the Budget Act straight to the floor.

I am compelled to rise to express my objection, for that is what a legislative body is all about in the warp and woof of events and crosscurrents of ideas for Members to hammer out legislation, particularly on something as important as adopting a budget.

We first started adopting budgets pursuant to the Budget Act passed in the 1970s because Congress had difficulty containing its voracious appetite to continue to spend. Thus, the Budget Act was adopted in which Congress would adopt a blueprint, an overall skeletal structure, for expenditures and for revenues that would be the framework upon which appropriations, both appropriating and authorizing committees, would then come in and flesh out the skeletal structure of the budget adopted.

How important this budgetary debate is this year for the questions in front of the Congress. Such things as: How large is the tax cut going to be, particularly measured against, juxtaposed against, how large the surplus is that we are expecting over the next 10 years. That, of course, is a very difficult question. We have seen, if history serves us well, that, in fact, we don’t know beyond a year, 2 years at the most, with any kind of degree of accu- racy, if we can forecast what the sur- pluses or the deficits are going to be in future years.

So the budget debate brings the central question of how large should the tax cut be counterbalanced against how much of the revenues and the surplus do we think will be there over the course of the next decade. That, then, leads us, once we know that, to be able to decide how much we will appropriate for other needed expenditures for the good of the United States.
Most everyone in this Chamber agrees there ought to be a modernization of Medicare with a prescription drug benefit. Most everyone in this Chamber agrees there should be additional investment in education, and there is a bipartisan bill that is beginning work through the legislative process on increased investment in education and accountability. Most everyone in this Chamber agrees we have to pay our young men and women in the Armed Forces of this country more of a comparable wage in competition with the private sector in order to have the kind of skill and talent we need in today's all-volunteer Armed Forces.

Most people in this body would agree we have to have certain expenditures with regard to health care, planning for the end game, encouraging additional long-term insurance, equalizing the tax subsidies for health insurance now from a large employer to a small employer, or to an individual employer, or to an individual.

There are a number of items on which there is consensus that is built on this side of the Capitol where we should go with regard to expenditures in the future while controlling our fiscal appetite.

That brings me back to the budget resolution, for it is the very essence of adopting a budget resolution that we should have as our watchwords: "fiscal discipline." It is what we need to have a full and fair discussion of all the issues in adopting a budget resolution. That is why we ought to mark it up and have that discussion first in the committee.

I wrap up by saying of all the debates that will take place this year, the debate on how we will allocate the resources with regard to the budget of the United States is one of the most important. It ought to have a full and fair and thorough discussion.

THE BIRTH OF WILLIAM BLUE HOLLIER

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I rise today to announce the birth of a fine young man, William Blue Hollier. William was born on Monday, March 5th, today to announce the birth of a fine young man, William Blue Hollier. William Blue will make certain of that. Our best wishes go out to the Hollier family on this most auspicious occasion.

CHILDREN AND HEALTHCARE WEEK

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, each day, many of our Nation's children face illnesses that require a doctor's office or hospital visit. This can be frightening for both the child and his or her family, and underscores the need to continue providing quality, caring pediatric health services. This week in Greenville, SC, The Children's Hospital of The Greenville Hospital System is celebrating Children and Healthcare Week with a number of valuable activities for health care professionals, parents and community partners. Among the events are continuing education classes for medical residents and support staff as well as an awards ceremony to honor local individuals who have dedicated their lives to pediatric care.

Children and Healthcare Week highlights educational programming to increase public, parental and professional knowledge of the improvements that can be made in pediatric health care. In particular, it stresses new ways to meet the emotional and developmental needs of children in health care settings. Lack of quality health care should never be an impediment to the long-term success of our nation's children and I commend Greenville's dedication to Children and Healthcare Week.

45th ANNIVERSARY OF TUNISIA'S INDEPENDENCE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I congratulate Tunisia on the occasion of its 45th year of independence.

Tunisia is a constitutional democracy striving to create a more open political society and attract foreign investment, and improve its diplomatic ties with both the European Union and United States. I am pleased to be a member of the Hamann Club USA whose mission is to improve the political and economic ties between the United States and Tunisia. I am hopeful that a mutually beneficial relationship between our two countries will continue to grow in the years ahead.

ELECTIONS IN UGANDA

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to express my serious concern about the recent presidential elections in Uganda. Uganda is a country of great promise; in the past year I and many of my colleagues have come to this floor to praise the Ugandan Government and the Ugandan people for their energetic and effective fight against the AIDS pandemic and recent elections that the world has enjoyed moderate economic growth. Most strikingly, even given the persistence of brutality like that embodied by the Lord's Resistance Army, there can be no mistaking that Uganda has made a long way from the dark days when Idi Amin and Milton Obote terrorized their citizens. This progress toward stability and an improvement in the quality of life enjoyed by Ugandans has been cause for celebration, and legitimately so.

But the latest trends from Uganda are alarming. In particular, the days leading up to the March 12 presidential elections revealed a disturbing willingness on the part of the ruling party to use violence and intimidation. According to observers, the opposition was threatened with violence and arrests from state security forces throughout the campaign. Reports indicate that, in some cases, opposition members also resorted to violence. While most observers agree that outcome of the vote would probably not have been different had the election not been marred in this manner, there can be no question that Uganda has been proven to be a fragile and less stable by these recent events, and the security of individual Ugandans wishing to exercise basic civil and political rights is not assured.

It is unquestionably true that many positive developments have unfolded in Uganda over the years that President Museveni has been in office. But Uganda's success is not about Mr. Museveni. Institutions, not individuals, are the backbone of lasting political stability and development. The current system currently in effect in Uganda, always dubious, increasingly looks like a single-party system by another name. Its defenders will point to last year's referendum on this so-called "no-party" system and claim that it is the will of the people. But the deck was clearly stacked against multipartyism in last year's referendum on the new movement system—state-sponsored political education courses were used to mobilize support for the Movement, and the opposition boycotted the vote.

Today, in the wake of the presidential election and after long months of Uganda's involvement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo—adventure that, while perhaps profitable for the few, is clearly unpopular with the Ugandan people—today, those of us who genuinely wish to see Uganda consolidate the successes of the past and make even more progress in the years ahead are profoundly troubled.
case, because that is not in the interests of the U.S. or the Ugandan people. I have recently had cause to reflect on the damage done by years of U.S. support for undemocratic and sometimes violently repressive regimes elsewhere on the continent. We do no one any favors to tell it like it is when we look away from blatantly undemocratic acts because we so desperately want to encourage countries that hold great promise. It is precisely because Uganda has made such precious mistakes that I am troubled, for these gains will surely be wasted if the staying power of the current regime becomes the utmost priority of the government.

SILVER RIBBON CAMPAIGN

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize and honor a campaign to raise disability awareness that originated in my State of Wyoming. I am very proud of the mission behind this effort that, in 3 short years, has gained steam nationally and internationally.

Known as the Silver Ribbon Campaign, this effort to honor disability awareness month, March, was begun by the Natrona County School District #1 Student Support Services and the Parent Resource Center. The campaign has generated significant activity among local officials and is responsible for a variety of training, educational and interactive activities related to raising disability awareness in the broader community. In addition to engaging local officials and the general public, the campaign has worked successfully with the business community and numerous media outlets to ensure a diverse yet unified front in heightening awareness about the reality of living with a disability.

I am particularly proud of the campaign’s special effort to include activities targeted towards raising awareness among children. Not only will the public library host a reading hour on disability awareness, with awareness bookmarks available for the public, but public school buses and other public transportation will display the campaign’s trademark silver ribbon during the month of March.

The campaign has issued the silver ribbon as a pin, and since its inception in 1997, 250,000 pins, along with thousands of balloons and displays, have been used to raise awareness around the State of Wyoming. As I mentioned before, similar activities are being duplicated nationwide.

I am honored but not surprised to once again have the opportunity to highlight a community-based effort invented in Wyoming that other communities are modeling. I hope hearing me today will encourage my colleagues to introduce their own States to the Silver Ribbon Campaign and further raise disability awareness in this country. This is a critical effort that every community should embrace.

EVERYBODY RECORDS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Everybody Records is an innovative literacy improvement program that pairs adults with children for one hour a week to share lunch, a good book and friendship. The U.S. Senate launched Everybody Wins! at the Brent Elementary School in 1996. Today, this program serves 4,500 children in the Washington area.

Last night, I had the honor of attending a reception to celebrate the Everybody Wins! program. I was joined by First Lady Laura Bush and by Mr. Jeffords, who I commend for his leadership in making the Everybody Wins! program a success in the U.S. Senate, and Art Tannenbaum, the visionary behind this wonderful program.

I was especially honored to join First Lady Laura Bush at last evening’s event. Mrs. Bush’s passion for reading and strong commitment to early literacy touched the lives of thousand of families in Texas, and it is clear from last night that she brings that same commitment to children all across the country.

I was deeply moved by her remarks last night and her real passion for children and their needs, and I believe my colleagues would appreciate her thoughtful statement as well. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print Mrs. Bush’s remarks from last evening into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIRST LADY LAURA BUSH’S REMARKS

EVERYBODY WINS EVENT, MARCH 20, 2001

Thank you very much, Dr. Billington. First I want to thank Lisa Vise. Lisa, you are a remarkable girl. You remind us that one person’s work can make a difference in a lot of other people’s lives.

Senator Jeffords, Senator Kennedy, Mr. Chambliss, Mr. Enzi, distinguished guests, I’m pleased to be with you tonight.

Everybody Wins is the largest children’s literacy and mentoring organization in the District because you understand the value of spending quality time reading to children.

I am fortunate because someone spent time reading to me as a child—my mother. Thanks to her I developed a lifelong passion for reading, and I grew up to become a teacher. As much as it is fun to read to children, it is even more fun to be read to as a child. I love reading to children even more.

The Everybody Wins volunteers will agree reading together has tremendous results. Children who are read to by an adult learn two things: First, that reading is worthwhile, and second, that they are worthwhile.

Reading is the foundation of all learning. Children must have good reading skills to succeed in every subject in school. Those who do not read well by the end of the third grade often have a difficult time catching up. Sadly, thousands of children can’t read well in America.

According to a 1998 study, 88 percent of fourth-graders in our nation’s lowest-income schools were unable to read at even a very basic level.

We may grow numb to statistics, but we cannot grow numb to our children. That is why I am troubled by the clear indication of a fundamental failure of adult responsibility for children’s lives and futures.

I know we can turn those numbers around. With caring Americans like you, we will turn those numbers around.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, today I wish to add my voice to the many voices that have come together to honor the brave men and women who served our nation so honorably in the Persian Gulf War. March 3, 2001 marked the tenth anniversary of the end of the Persian Gulf War. I pay special tribute to the families of those who gave their lives in this effort.

I would like to draw my colleagues’ attention to an important event that will be taking place this Sunday, March 25th, 2001, in Manchester, N.H. A group of dedicated Americans is gathering to observe the 10th anniversary of the Persian Gulf war, to honor those who served, and to evaluate the fulfillment of our promise to care for those who suffered as a result of their service.

A driving force behind this event is the New England Persian Gulf Veterans Inc., NEPGV, and its dynamic founders, David and Patricia Irish. Since the NEPGV’s inception in 1996, David and Trish have worked tirelessly to promote the issues and challenges of Gulf War Veterans in New England and beyond. I want to publicly thank them for their efforts and let them know that I will be with them in spirit on the 25th of March.

This is an appropriate time to remember the outstanding job our service men and women did in liberating Kuwait from occupation. Together with our allies, this action stated that in the post Cold War world, the unprovoked conquest of one’s neighbors would not be tolerated. The unprecedented coalition of twenty six nations rolled back a tyrannical dictator and a military ill prepared for the determination of the United States and its allies, nor the might and professionalism of its soldiers involved. COMMENORATING THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PERSIAN GULF WAR

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, today I rise today to introduce my colleagues to the 10th anniversary of the Persian Gulf War. March 25th, 2001, marked the tenth anniversary of the end of the Persian Gulf War. I pay special tribute to the families of those who gave their lives in this effort.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS, Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Tuesday, March 20, 2001, the Federal debt stood at $5,732,596,852,450.50, five trillion, seven hundred thirty-two billion, five hundred ninety-six million, eight hundred fifty-two thousand, eight hundred forty-five and fifteen cents, during the past 15 years.

While peace process in the Middle East is at a low ebb right now, it is also appropriate that we remember how the Gulf War, with US leadership and the success of the Gulf War, this would not be the case.

As a senior member of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, I take very seriously my obligation to address the needs of all our Veterans. Although it has been 10 years since this decisive victory in the Persian Gulf, servicemen and women continue to step forward with symptoms of illnesses and disease likely attributable to serving in South- west Asia during the war. This was brought home to me by the death of a friend of my son Leonard, John Clark, Jr. A Gulf War veteran, John was stricken with colon cancer at age 31, two months after his return from the Gulf. John's case is similar to other service members coming back from the Gulf War. John passed away in 1996. For John and his family, as for many veterans, the war continues well after they have taken off their uniforms and returned to life as civilians. I will continue to work to insure that Gulf War veterans obtain access to VA health benefits and that meaningful re- search continues to determine treat- ment for these troubling medical prob- lems. Our Gulf War veterans, having served in Active, Reserve and National Guard units, must know that we here in Washington will continue to fight for them as they fought for us.

Once again, I remember, commemo- rate and congratulate the members of our Armed Forces who served with distinc- tion in the Gulf War, and I grate- fully thank them for their service to our country on this, the tenth anniver- sary of this victory.
Military Distinction. He is the son of Everett and Sybil Christensen of Madelia, MN. Mr. President, I offer my congratulations to Captain Christensen and his family on this award.

RETIRED OF STEPHAN LEONOUADAKIS
• Mr. BOXER. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to take this opportunity to draw the Senate’s attention to the career of Stephen C. Leonoudakis.

Stephan was Director of the Golden Gate Bridge, Highway and Transportation District from 1962 until his retirement last January. Even by the standards set by some members of this chamber, this is a long time. He served continuously in the same position for 38 years. Over the course of this time, he became nearly as integral to the District as the famous span for which it was named. There are few who remember a time when he was not Director. The question is not whether he will be missed, but what will we do without him?

Stretching from San Francisco to Marin County across the opening to San Francisco Bay, the Golden Gate Bridge is one of the most identifiable landmarks in the world. People flock to the bridge from around the globe, often braving the chilly mid-summer fog to catch a breathtaking glimpse of the city to the east, the seemingly endless Pacific Ocean to the west, the Bay directly below and the graceful structure itself above and around. It is a truly enchanted place.

But, as the name implies, the Golden Gate Bridge, Highway and Transportation District is more than just a bridge with a million dollar view. It is a full-service transportation district complete with buses, ferries, bicycles, pedestrians, staff members and all the maintenance and other administrative challenges that come with them. This is what Stephan really shined. Over his tenure, he participated in transforming the Bridge District from an agency that essentially looked after a beautiful landmark into an organization which operates a world-class transit agency serving millions of commuters and visitors annually. This is a tremendous achievement that Stephan shares.

There were times, I imagine, when people thought that Stephan might just leave the bridge he loved and looked after all these years. But thanks to solid construction, regular maintenance and a vigorous seismic program he began, it looks like Stephan is going to beat the bridge into submission and not the other way around. It can all be grateful for that even as we bid a friend a fond, happy and healthy retirement. No one deserves it more.

THE LA SALLE ACADEMY FOOTBALL TEAM
• Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the achievement of La Salle Academy of Providence, RI whose football team became State Champions for the year 2000.

In 1871, the de La Salle Christian Brothers came to Rhode Island to teach at the “Brothers” school. In 1876, that school became an academy and was named La Salle, after the Christian Brothers founder, Saint John Baptist de La Salle. Since its opening 125 years ago, La Salle has offered its students a values-based education. The Brothers’ approach to comprehensive student development has been evident not only in their academic excellence, but in the successes of their clubs and athletic teams as well.

The athletic department at La Salle has a strong commitment to instilling leadership, sportsmanship, and a healthy approach to athletic competition. Since its founding in 1908, the La Salle Rams to 274 wins during his 44 years tenure from 1928 to 1972. In the 1940’s and 1950’s, La Salle played before some of the largest crowds ever to see a game in Rhode Island, including 25,000 in 1945, 40,000 in 1947, and 10,000 in 1955. In the 1970’s and 1980’s, the La Salle football team won ten Division A titles.

La Salle also participates in the oldest sports rivalry in the state. For seventy-one years, La Salle and East Providence High School have met traditionally on Thanksgiving Day. Up until this past year, the series had been tied, but with La Salle’s victory they now proudly lead that series 35–34, with two ties.

“Through the leadership of Tim Coen, first year Coach of the La Salle Rams, Captains Tony Barnhiser, Joe Ben, Howie Brown, David Regus, and Jon-Erik Schneiderhan, La Salle can boast its first Super Bowl Division Championship. After winning only four of nine league games in the previous two years, this regular season with an impressive 9-0 record, including a win over Thanksgiving rival and two-time defending state champions East Providence.”

The last time La Salle played in a championship game was nearly a decade ago in 1992, when they lost to Portsmouth High School. The year 2000 finally brought a re-match as this year’s Super Bowl game pitted the Portsmouth High School Trojans against the La Salle Rams. The Rams were victorious in a very close game, thanks to the exceptional effort put forth by the La Salle team supported by their fellow students and alumni.

As a former student and former member of the La Salle Academy football team, I know the skills, training, and strength of character that are necessary to achieve what this program has achieved. I would ask that my colleagues join me in applauding La Salle Academy for its remarkable accomplishments this year and throughout its long tradition of excellence.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. Graham (for himself, Mr. Chafee, Mr. McCain, Mrs. Feinstein, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Wellstone, Mrs. Murray, Mr. Kennedy, Ms. Collins, Mr. Specter, Mr. Schumer, and Mrs. Clinton):

S. 582. A bill to amend titles XIX and XXI of the Social Security Act (to provide States with the option to cover certain legal immigrants under the Medicaid and State children’s health insurance program; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Graham. Mr. President, I rise today on behalf of Senators Chafee, McCain, Feinstein, Jeffords, Wellstone, Murray, Kennedy, Collins, Specter, Schumer, Clinton, and myself to introduce the Immigrant Children’s Health Improvement Act of 2001.

This bill will give States the option to provide Medicaid and CHIP coverage to immigrant children and pregnant women who arrived legally in this country after August 22, 1996. That is the date Congress passed the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act—commonly known as welfare reform.

The goal of that legislation was to encourage self-sufficiency in adults. But it also affected, including immigrants, citizens, and those not yet born. The legislation cut off government-supported health care for all legal immigrants, regardless of their ages or circumstances.

Census data last week offered good news on the number of uninsured people in America. The data shows that the number of Americans without health insurance fell from 44.3 million to 42.6 million in 1999. This is the first decline since 1987. But the news is not good for everyone who works hard in this country, who plays by the rules, who tries to build a better life for themselves and their families.

What was not in the headlines is the fact that the proportion of immigrant children who are uninsured remains extremely high.

A new report by the Urban Institute shows that in the last year, nearly half of low-income immigrant children in America had no health-insurance coverage. In my State of Florida, that ratio is nearly three to one. This is just one of many reports that show that in our zeal to discourage dependency in adults, we unintentionally punished children.

A study by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities finds that the percentage of low-income immigrant children in publicly-funded coverage—which was low even before welfare reform—has fallen substantially. Florida is home to more than half a million uninsured children, many of whom are in this country legally or are citizens whose immigrant parents are ineligible for coverage and so think their children are similarly barred.

Under this bill, States have the option to amend titles XIX and XXI of the Social Security Act (to provide States with the option to cover certain legal immigrants under the Medicaid and State children’s health insurance program; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Kennedy. Mr. President, I rise today on behalf of Senators Chafee, McCain, Mrs. Feinstein, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Graham, Mr. Chafee, and Mrs. Clinton) to introduce the Immigrant Children’s Health Improvement Act of 2001.

Passage of the Immigrant Children’s Health Improvement Act is an important step in revisiting the welfare reform legislation.

What we now realize, years after passing that landmark law, is that legal immigrant children are, as much as citizen children, the next generation of Americans. Providing Medicaid and CHIP to legal immigrant children is critical in order to guarantee that generation can be healthy and productive members of their adopted country.

We call upon Congress and the President to act this year and pass this important bill.

By Mr. Kennedy (for himself, Mr. Specter, Mr. Leahy, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Graham, Mr. Chafee, and Mrs. Clinton):

S. 583. A bill to amend the Food Stamp Act of 1977 to improve nutrition assistance for working families and the elderly, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. Kennedy. Mr. President, today Senator Specter, Senator Leahy, Senator Jeffords, Senator Graham, Senator Chafee, and I introduce the bipartisan “Nutrition Assistance for Working Families and Seniors Act.” Our goal is to repair specific holes that time has worn in the nation’s core nutrition safety net—the Food Stamp Program.

Hunger is a silent crisis affecting families all across America. No corner of our land is immune from this tragedy.

The Nation can well afford to ensure that the average food stamp benefit of 79 cents per meal is available to everyone who truly needs it. In a time of economic prosperity, the moral imperative to feed the hungry may be clearer than ever. In a time of economic uncertainty, the need to feed the hungry should be equally obvious.

The bottom line is that too many working families and seniors in America have trouble putting enough food on the table. On February 26, 2001, the New York Times included a compelling account of the difficulties faced by the Payne family from Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Payne states that “it’s difficult to work at a grocery store all day, looking at all the food I can’t buy, so I imagine filling up my cart with one of those big orders and bringing home enough food for all my kids.” She and her husband, a factory worker, routinely go without dinner to be sure that their four children have enough to eat. The Payne family was among thousands of working families that have had to turn to emergency food pantries and soup kitchens in search of help. The Payne family did not know that they were eligible for food stamps.

Nationwide, participation in the Food Stamp Program has declined 34 percent since 1996, four times faster than the decline in the poverty rate. This means that over 2 million fewer people who live in poverty are accessing food stamps today. Over a quarter of the food stamp participation between 1994 and 1998 resulted from welfare reform and the elimination of food stamp eligibility for legal immigrants, both by directly rendering legal immigrants ineligible for food stamps, and by discouraging their U.S. citizen children from accessing food stamps.

The results are predictable. The U.S. Department of Agriculture determined that 4.9 million adults and 2.6 million children in households that experienced hunger during 1999. The Urban Institute finds that 33 percent of former welfare recipients who have turned to emergency food pantries and soup kitchens go without dinner to be sure that their children have enough to eat. In the search for help, the Payne family did not know that they were eligible for food stamps.

The most vulnerable people among us—recent immigrants, children, and the elderly—are the ones who face the greatest difficulty. Republicans and Democrats agree that we need to work together in good faith to deliver senior citizens from having to choose between heating and food from losing their food stamp benefits. The children who live at home hunger, they cannot learn. If we do not address this silent crisis, our considerable investments in education and early learning activities will not have the full positive impact that they deserve.

A strong Food Stamp Program is essential to ensure that all people in America can keep the promise to stay healthy. In seven common sense steps, this bill restores goals shared by Republicans and Democrats alike—promoting self-sufficiency, encouraging transitions from welfare to work, and eradicating hunger among children and seniors.

First, this bill restores eligibility for food stamps to all legal immigrants, a matter of fundamental fairness and basic need. The Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured reports that immigrant families on average pay $80,000 more in taxes than they receive in local, state, and federal benefits over a lifetime. For 30 years prior to welfare reform, food stamps were available to immigrants, and as today’s Urban Institute report confirms, legal immigrants are now among those most in need of nutritional assistance. Our laws recognize that legal immigrants need access to employment, health care, and education, yet all of these efforts are compromised when legal immigrants are denied access to basic nutrition.

The effort to prevent legal immigrants from accessing food stamps never made sense from a policy perspective, and I am pleased to see considerable bipartisan momentum building to restore eligibility. Our key allies in the effort to restore eligibility are the National Conference of State Legislatures, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National Association of Counties, the National Black Caucus of State Legislators, the Hispanic Caucus, leaders of all major religious denominations, and over 1,400 editorial boards urging restoration of food stamp eligibility to legal immigrants.

With such strong and broad public support, I am hopeful that immigrants will not have to wait another year to have their access to basic nutrition restored.

Second, this bill ends the child penalty under current food stamp law. Just like the marriage penalty in our tax code unfairly penalizes some couples, existing law unfairly limits nutritional assistance to some families with children. This bill fixes the problem by indexing the food stamp standard deduction to family size in a way that simply ensures that every family that is in deep poverty, with earnings under 10 percent of the poverty limit, will receive the maximum current food stamp benefit regardless of family size. Over half of the benefit from this provision will go to working families.

Third, this bill addresses a core nutritional concern of senior citizens and other low-income families on fixed incomes, many of whom qualify for the minimum food stamp benefit. The food stamp minimum benefit has remained at $10 since 1977. This bill increases the minimum benefit to $25 over the course of five years, and then indexes it to inflation.

Fourth, this bill ensures that food stamp law treats child support payments like income when calculating benefits, by disregarding 20 percent of these payments in the benefit determinations. This measure is consistent with last year’s overwhelming House approval of a plan to encourage states to pass more child support payments through the child support enforcement system. With such strong and broad public support, I am pleased to see considerable bipartisan momentum building to restore eligibility.

Finally, this bill gives states more options for helping families make the transition from welfare to work. Current food stamp law allows a 3-month state option for a transitional food stamp benefit. This bill mirrors Medicaid’s six-month Medicaid transitional benefit, simplifying state recordkeeping, increasing state flexibility, and helping TANF families transition to work.
Sixth, this bill improves access to food stamp information, helping to ensure that families like the Paynes are aware of the help that remains available to them. It helps rural families apply for food stamps using online and telephone systems, eliminating the need to travel to food stamp offices. It also supports stronger public-private partnerships that generate and distribute information about the nation’s nutrition assistance program.

Finally, this bill increases federal support for emergency food programs, 71 percent of which are operated by faith-based organizations. Sharp increases in requests for help from food pantries and soup kitchens have occurred over the past year despite steep declines in food stamp participation. Many food banks find themselves unable to meet the increased requests for help. Nationally, the U.S. Conference of Mayors and America’s Second Harvest have independently documented a 15 to 20 percent increase in needs over 1998. 79 percent of Massachusetts food pantries funded through Project Bread reported serving more working poor in 1998, and 72 percent reported helping more families with children. To ensure that emergency food needs are met without unnecessarily tapping Food Stamp resources, this bill increases funding for The Emergency Food Assistance Program by 10 percent.

The total cost of this bill amounts to about $2.75 billion over five years, which would increase the cost of the Food Stamp program by about 2 percent. This bill’s cost is also modest in relation to the current ten-year non-Social Security surplus—it uses but 0.2 percent of the projected federal surplus.

We’ve often heard that hunger has a cure. This is a call to action, not a truism, for the many people who have cooperated in developing this legislation. I’m proud to work with them for its prompt passage.

I seek unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 584. A bill to designate the United States courthouse located at 40 Centre Street in New York, New York, as the "Thurgood Marshall United States Courthouse"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, it is an honor to be here today in order to join my colleague Congressman ELIOT ENGEL of New York in introducing a bill that would designate the U.S. courthouse located at 40 Centre Street in New York City the Thurgood Marshall United States Courthouse.

be known and designated as the “Thurgood Marshall United States Courthouse”.

SEC. 2. REFERENCES.

Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the United States courthouse referred to in section 1 shall be deemed to be a reference to the Thurgood Marshall United States Courthouse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I commend my colleagues from New York and our colleagues in the House, Congressman Ensign, for their introduction of this bill. I am a friend fast from New York for her wonderful remarks about Thurgood Marshall, who has been an inspiration for a generation of us who grew up watching him change the law of this country, making a difference in the lives of millions and millions of people but also for generations to come, who will remember and reflect on his work as an inspiration in their time to redress the wrongs of their age.

It is appropriate, proper, and fitting that the building in New York that houses the Federal judiciary be named for such an inspiring figure of our times. I commend the Senator from New York for offering this, for her words today, and my compliments to Thurgood Marshall’s family. Thurgood Marshall, Jr. has been a great friend to many of us here and has been a wonderful public servant in his own right. He carries on the great tradition his father carried as a judge and Member of the U.S. Supreme Court. I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to be a cosponsor of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank Senator CLINTON for her words about Thurgood Marshall. I certainly also would like to be a cosponsor of this. I recommend on the floor of the Senate that, if it is appropriate, Juan Williams’ wonderful biography of Thurgood Marshall that I read about 6 months ago, which was a very inspiring biography because it was about such an inspiring civil rights leader and great judge.

I thank the Senator from New York for her remarks.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 587. A bill to authorize negotiation for the accession of Chile to the North American Free Trade Agreement, to provide for fast track consideration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce legislation I authored last year to enable the President to admit Chile into NAFTA. Nearly 6 years ago, a bipartisan majority of this body ratified the North American Free Trade Agreement. Since then the promises of new jobs, increased exports, lower tariffs and a clearer environment have all been realized. In other words, Mr. President, NAFTA has succeeded despite the predictions of some that America could not compete in today’s global economy.

As I said last year, with the success of NAFTA as a back drop, it is now high time to move forward and expand the economic ties to those countries in our hemisphere. To help accomplish that important goal, my legislation will authorize and enable the President to move forward with negotiations on a free trade agreement with Chile.

President Bush has stated time and again that he wants to increase ties with Latin America and more fully engage our neighbors to the South. Western Hemisphere trade ministers are planning to develop a draft proposal for a Free Trade Area of the Americas at their ministerial meeting in Buenos Aires in April. This draft will then be considered by Western Hemisphere leaders at the third Summit of the Americas in Quebec City at the end of that month. I hope that this summit bears fruit. It has been working toward a free trade agreement of the Americas for many years. We should quickly take the first step toward economic integration with our Southern neighbors by including Chile, who has asked to join negotiations to join NAFTA since early January, in our North American trade agreement.

Chile is surely worthy of membership in NAFTA. In fact, Chile has already signed a free trade agreement with Canada in addition, Chile has also put in place a free trade agreement with Mexico. After a brief slowdown last year, today the Chilean economy is growing at a healthy annual rate of more than 6 percent. Chile is noted for its concern for preserving the environment, and has put in place environmental protections that are laudable. Chile’s fiscal house is in order as evidenced by a balanced budget, strong currency, strong foreign reserves, and continued inflows of foreign capital, including significant direct investment.

In addition, Chile has already embraced the ideals of free trade. Since 1998, the Chilean tariff on goods from countries with which Chile does not yet have a free trade agreement has fallen from 11 percent to 8 percent. That tariff is scheduled to continue to fall by a point a year until it reaches 6 percent in 2003. While some goods are still assessed at a higher rate, the United States and Chile have signed an export business to send, approximately $3.6 billion in American goods to that South American nation. That represents 24 percent of Chile’s imports. That $3.6 billion in exports represents thousands of American jobs across the Nation.

Our firm belief in the importance of democracy continues to drive our foreign policy. After seventeen years of dictatorship, Chile returned to the family of democracies following the 1988 plebiscite. Today, the President and the legislature are both popularly elected and the Chilean armed forces effectively carry out their responsibilities as mandated in Chile’s Constitution. American investment and trade can play a critical role in building on Chile’s political and economic successes.

It is unrealistic to think that the President will have the ability to negotiate a free trade agreement without fast track authority. Nor should we ask Chilean authorities to conduct negotiations under such circumstances. Therefore, the bill I am introducing today will provide President Bush with a limited fast track authority which will apply only to this specific treaty. I believe that fast track authorities help this President to negotiate the most advantageous trade agreements, and should therefore be re-authorized. At this point, however, there are stumbling blocks we must surmount before generic fast track can be re-authorized. Those stumbling blocks should not be allowed to stand in the way of free trade with Chile.

Naysayers claim that free trade prompts American business to move overseas and costs American workers their jobs. They will tell you that America, the Nation with the largest and strongest economy, the best workers, and the greatest track record of innovation cannot compete with other nations.

The past 6½ years since we ratified NAFTA have proven them wrong. Today, tariffs are down and exports are up. The environment is cleaner. Most importantly, NAFTA has created 710,000 new American jobs all across the Nation.

The many successes of NAFTA are an indication of the potential broader free trade agreements hold for our economy. Furthermore, trade and economic relationships foster American influence and support our foreign policy. In other words, this bill represents new American jobs in every state in the nation, a stronger American economy and greater American influence in our own Hemisphere. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

S. 587. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act and title XVIII of the Social Security Act to sustain access to vital emergency medical services in rural areas to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Sustaining Access to Vital Emergency Medical Services Act of 2001. This bill would take important steps to strengthen the emergency medical service system in rural communities and across the Nation.

Across America, emergency medical care reduces human suffering and saves lives. According to recent statistics, the average U.S. citizen will require the services of an ambulance at least

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself,
Mr. BREAUX, Mr. Frist, Mrs.
Lincoln, Ms. Snowe, Mr. Chafee, and Mr. Carper):
S. 590. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow a refundable tax credit for health insurance costs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.
Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in introducing the Relief, Equity, Access, and Coverage for Health, REACH, Act, a bipartisan bill that will provide low and middle income Americans with refundable tax credits for the purchase of health insurance coverage.

New Census Bureau data indicate that there are now 43 million Americans with no health coverage. And, for straight policy premiums for employer-sponsored premums for employer-sponsored covrection have increased significantly, by as much as 10 to 13 percent. We know from past experience that premium increases cause people to lose their health insurance. By some estimates, as many as 3 million Americans will lose coverage for every 10 percent increase in premiums.

With premiums increasing and the economy uncertain, the problem could worsen. The impact of these numbers is very real for American families. The uninsured often go without needed health care or face unaffordable med-care bills. Access to health coverage for twice during his or her life. As my colleagues surely know, delays in receiving care can mean the difference between illness and permanent injury, between life and death. In rural communities, which often lack access to local health care providers, the need for reliable EMS is particularly critical.

Over the next few decades, the need for quality emergency medical care in rural areas is projected to increase as the demographic trend continues to rise. Unfortunately, while the need for effective EMS systems may increase, we have seen the number of individuals able to provide these services decline. Nationwide, the majority of emergency medical personnel are unpaid volunteers. As rural economies continue to suffer, and individuals have less and less time to devote to volunteering, it has become increasingly difficult for rural EMS squads to recruit and retain personnel. In my State of North Dakota, this phenomenon has resulted in a sharp reduction in EMS squad size. In 1980, on avverage there were 35 members per EMS squad; today, the average squad size has plummeted to 12 individuals per unit. I am concerned that continued reduction in EMS squad size could compromise rural residents’ access to needed medical services.

For this reason, the legislation I am introducing today includes measures to help helping rural EMS providers recruit, retain and train EMS providers. My bill would es-stablish a Rural Emergency Medical Services Training and Equipment Assistance program. This program would authorize $50 million in grant funding for fiscal years 2002-2007, which could be used in rural EMS squads to meet various personnel needs. For example, this funding could help cover the costs of training volunteers in emergency response, injury prevention, and safety awareness; volunteers could also access this training to meet the costs of obtaining State emergency medical certification. In addition, EMS squads would be offered the flexibility to use grant funding to acquire new equipment, such as cardiac defibrillators.
This is particularly important for rural EMS providers who have difficulty affording state-of-the-art equipment that is needed for stabilizing patients during long travel times between the rural accident site and the nearest medical facility. This training could also help provide community education training in CPR, first aid or other emergency medical needs.

In addition, this legislation takes steps to help ensure emergency med-cal providers are fairly reimbursed for ambulance services provided to Medicare, Medicare+Choice, and Medicaid managed care beneficiaries. As you may know, the Balanced Budget Act required that Medicare+Choice and Medicaid managed care plans provide payment for emergency services as “prudent layperson” would determine are medically needed. However, regulations implementing this requirement did not include ambulance services within the definition of “emergency services.” Because of this oversight, ambulance providers are sometimes left in the difficult position of providing services to individuals who, by any rational review, appear to need immediate medical care. Moreover, when it is later determined that the patient’s symptoms were the result of heartburn, for example, rather than a serious heart condition, the ambulance provider is denied payment for services. This is simply unfair.
While it is certainly important that EMS providers take care not to provide unnecessary services, it is unfair to deny ambulance providers payment when they provide immediate emergency services to individuals who ap-ppear in serious need of medical care.
In my State, EMS providers are operating on tight budgets and cannot afford to provide high levels of uncompenated care. To ensure EMS services remain available, particularly in underserved rural areas, we must ensure that EMS providers are appropriately reimbursed for the care they provide to our communities. For this reason, my legislation would revise the “prudent layperson” definition to include emergency services. This change will ensure that ambulance providers who provide care in situations where a responsible observer would deem this care medically necessary receive reimbursement under traditional Medicare, Medicare+Choice, and Medicaid managed care.

It is my hope that the Sustaining Access to Vital Emergency Medical Serv-vices Act will help ensure EMS providers can continue providing quality emergency medical care to our communities. I am happy to say that this legislation is supported by the National Association of State EMS Directors, the National Rural Health Association, and the National American Ambulance Association. I am too pleased that Senators THOMAS, DASCHLE, JOHNSON, and others are joining me in this effort. I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to introduce “The Sustaining Access to Vital Emergency Medical Services Act of 2001” with Senators CONRAD, DASCHLE, ROBERTS and JOHNSON. As with all rural health legislation I have worked on, I am proud of the bipartisan effort behind this bill.
“The Sustaining Access to Vital Emergency Medical Services Act of 2001” will provide assistance to rural providers to maintain access to important emergency medical services, EMS.
This legislation is necessary because rural EMS providers are primarily volunteers who have difficulty recruiting, retaining and educating EMS personnel. Rural EMS providers also have less capital to buy and upgrade essential, life-saving equipment.

The first section of this legislation is the authorization of an annual $50 million competitive grant program. Grantees can use these funds for recruiting volunteers, training emergency personnel, using new technologies to educate providers, acquiring EMS vehicles such as ambulances and acquiring emergency medical equipment. I think it is important to note that all of the majority concern of State EMS Directors in a recently conducted Rural EMS Survey with recruitment and retention ranking as number one.

The second part of this legislation applies the prudent layperson standard for emergency services currently used in hospital emergency rooms to ambulance services. This provision will assist ambulance providers in collecting payments for transporting patients to the hospital after answering a 911 call regardless of the final diagnosis. This is a common sense approach and ensures that all aspects of emergency care are operating under the same definition of emergency.
I believe this legislation is an important part of ensuring rural residents have access to emergency services. It is also flexible so communities can decide for themselves what is their most imminent EMS need. Our bill is supported by the National Rural Health Association, National Association of State
EMS Directors, the National Rural Health Association and the American Ambulance Association. I strongly urge all my colleagues interested in rural health to consider cosponsoring
“The Sustaining Access to Vital Emergency Medical Services Act of 2001.”

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator Jeffords and my colleagues today in a bipartisan effort to address the growing number of individuals and families without health insurance coverage in this country. The problem has been made clear. Despite last year's decline in America's uninsured population, there are still more than 43 million Americans—one-sixth of our Nation's population—who do not have health insurance. We know that the majority of the uninsured, 32 of the 44 million, have an income of under $50,000. We also know that the rising cost of health insurance is the single most important reason given for the lack of purchasing coverage. Many Americans simply cannot afford to buy health insurance.

The solutions are becoming clearer as well. A one-size-fits-all approach to expand health coverage and access to health care does not meet the various needs of the uninsured population. However, because our workforce is growing and evolving out of the older traditional models, we must look to common features of the uninsured population. Although more than 80 percent of the uninsured Americans come from families with at least one employed member, the majority of uninsured Americans do not have access to employer-sponsored health coverage. An additional seven million Americans have access to employer-provided health insurance but are, in many cases, unable to afford it. Therefore, my colleagues and I today are introducing the Relief, Equity, Access, and Coverage Health, REACH, Act to build upon the current system of employer-based coverage which continues to be the main source of coverage for most Americans.

Our goal is to fill the coverage gaps that exist in the current system while also complementing the current reach of the employment-based system. The central tenet of our proposal is a refundable tax credit for low-income Americans who are not offered a contribution for their insurance through their employer and do not receive coverage through Federal and state programs such as Medicaid or Medicare. For example, our proposal will help hard working Americans who cannot afford to buy coverage on their own, such as the part-time worker who is not offered employer-sponsored health insurance. We provide that worker with a $1,000 tax credit to purchase coverage. We help a young family with two children earning less than $50,000 a year by providing them with a $2,500 credit to purchase an employer-sponsored insurance policy for themselves and their children. In addition, the REACH Act also is designed to assist those Americans who do have access to employer-subsidized health insurance but, too often, decline it because they cannot afford the cost-sharing components. We provide these individuals and families with up to $400 annually for single coverage or $1,000 for themselves and their families. Overall it is estimated that these provisions would expand new health insurance to as many as 17 million previously uninsured Americans.

I appreciate the work my colleagues have done on this bill, and I look forward to seeing the REACH Act passed into law this year.

By Mr. SANTORUM (for himself, Mr. Lieberman, Mr. Hutchison, Mr. Duren, Mr. Brownback, Ms. Landrieu, Mr. Lott, Mr. Bayh, and Mr. DeWine):

S. 592. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to create Individual Development Accounts, and for other purposes; to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and for other purposes; to provide opportunities for individuals and families to build tangible assets and acquire stable wealth.

Our legislation is aimed at fixing our nation's growing gap in asset ownership between millions of low-income workers from achieving the American dream. Most public attention focuses on our growing income gap.
Though the booming American economy has delivered significant income gains to the nation’s upper-income earners, lower-income workers have been left on the sidelines. This suggests to some that closing this divide between the have-mors and the have-leasts must be a matter of raising wages. But the reality is that the income gap is a symptom of a larger, more complicated problem.

How do we do this? We believe that the IDA provide such opportunity. Non-profit groups around the country have launched innovative private programs that are achieving great success in transforming the “unbanked,” people who have never had a bank account, into unashamed capitalists. Through IDAs, banks and credit unions offer special savings accounts to low-income Americans and match their deposits dollar-for-dollar. In return, participants take an economic literacy course and commit to using their savings to buy a home, upgrade their education or to start a business.

Thousands of people are actively saving today through IDA programs in about 200 neighborhoods nationwide. In one demonstration project undertaken by the Corporation for Enterprise Development, CFED, a leading IDA promoter, 1,300 families have already saved $320,000, which has leveraged an additional $742,000.

While the growth of IDAs has been encouraging, access to IDA programs is still limited and scattered across the nation. The IDA provision of this legislation will expand IDA access nationwide by providing a significant tax credit to financial institutions and community groups that offer IDA accounts. This credit would reimburse banks for the first $500 of matching funds they contribute, thus significantly lowering the cost of offering IDAs. Other state and private funds can also be used to provide an additional match to savings. It also benefits our economy, the long-term stability of which is threatened by our pitiful national savings rate. In fact, according to some estimates, every $1 invested in an IDA returns $5 to the national economy.

IDAs are matched savings accounts for working Americans restricted to three uses: 1. buying a first home; 2. receiving training; or 3. starting or expanding a small business. Individual and matching deposits are not co-mingled; all matching dollars are kept in a separate, parallel account. When the account holder has accumulated enough savings and matching funds to purchase the asset, typically over two to four years, and has completed a financial education course, payments from the IDA will be made directly to the asset provider. Non-profit institutions, or their contractual affiliates, would be reimbursed for all matching funds provided plus a limited amount of the program and administrative costs incurred, whether directly or through collaborations with other entities. Specifically, the IDA Tax Credit would be the aggregate amount of all dollar-for-dollar matches provided, up to $500 per person per year, plus a one-time $100 per account credit for financial education, recruiting, marketing, administration, withdrawals, etc., plus an annual $30 per account credit for the administrative cost of maintaining the account. To be eligible for the match, adjusted gross income may not exceed $20,000 for a single, $25,000, head of household, or $40,000, married.

President Bush has expressed support for IDAs in his campaign and we are working with the Administration to coordinate efforts to the fullest extent possible. Supporting groups include the Credit Union National Association, the Financial Services Roundtable, the Corporation for Enterprise Development, the National Association of Community Development Credit, the National Community Resources Center for Neighborhood Enterprise, the National Federation of Community Development Credit Unions, the National Council for La Raza, and others.

Individual Development Accounts, combined with other community development and wealth creation opportunities, are a first step towards restoring faith in the longstanding American promise of equal opportunity. That faith has been shaken by stark divisiveness in our society. With the leadership of President Bush and Speaker Hastert, I am hopeful, along with our other cosponsors, that Congress will take this first step toward restoring the long-cherished American ideals of rewarding hard work, encouraging savings responsibility, and expanding savings opportunity this year.

The Non-Itemizer Charitable Deduction provision will initially allow non-itemizers to claim 10 percent of their charitable giving, after they exceed a cumulative total of $500 in annual donations. $1,000 for joint filers. The deduction will be phased into a 100 percent deduction over the course of 5 years in 10 percent increments. Under current law, non-itemizers receive no additional tax benefit for their charitable contributions.

More than 84 million Americans cannot deduct any of their charitable contributions on their tax returns. In contrast, there are 34 million Americans who itemize and receive this benefit. For example, in Pennsylvania, there are nearly 4 million taxpayers who do not itemize deductions while slightly more than 1.5 million taxpayers do itemize.

While Americans are already giving generously to charities making a significant positive impact in our communities, this provision provides an incentive for additional giving and allows non-itemizers to receive 10 percent toward lower middle incomes to also benefit from additional tax relief. In fact, non-itemizers earning less than $30,000 give the highest percentage of their household income to charity. It is estimated that restoring this tax relief provision to merely 50 percent which existed in the 1980’s would encourage more than $3 billion of additional charitable giving a year. The phased in increase to 100 percent will result in even more additional giving. The floor is included because the standard personal deduction encompasses initial contributions.

One important dimension of programs that exist is that closing this divide be beneficial to the company that does it and reinvigorate our communities, empower individuals and families, and enhance educational opportunities is encouraging charitable giving. This legislation is a great opportunity to lower the tax burden on the many Americans who have not received any tax relief for their charitable contributions since 1986.

The IRA Charitable Rollover allows individuals to roll assets from an IRA into a charity or a deferred charitable gift plan without incurring any income tax consequences. The donor would be made to charity directly without ever withdrawing it as income and paying taxes on it.

The rollover can be made as an outright gift, for a charitable remainder unitrust, charitable remainder annuity trust, charitable remainder unitrust or pooled income fund, or for the issuance of a charitable annuity. The donor would not receive a charitable deduction. This incentive should assist charitable giving in education, social service, and religious charitable efforts.

Food banks are finding it increasingly difficult to meet the demand for food assistance. In the past, food banks have benefitted from the inefficiencies of manufacturing, including the over-production of food creating the demand for the manufacturing of cosmetically-flawed products. However, technology has made businesses and manufacturers significantly more efficient. Although beneficial to the company’s bottom-line, donations have lessened as a result. The fact is still that the demand on our nation’s church pantries, soup kitchens and shelter continues to rise, despite our economy.

According to an August 2000 report on Hunger Security by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, 51 million Americans and 10 percent of our citizens, are living on the edge of hunger. Although this number has declined by 12 percent since 1995, everyone agrees that this figure remains too high.

Unfortunately, many food banks cannot meet this increased demand for food. A December 99 study by the U.S. Conference of Mayors found that requests for emergency food assistance increased by an average of 18 percent in American cities over the previous year and 21 percent of emergency food requests could not be met. Statistics by the United States Department of Agriculture show that up to 96 billion pounds of food goes to waste each year.
in the United States. If a small percentage of this wasted food could be redirected to food banks, we could make important strides in our fight against hunger. In many ways, current law is a hindrance to food donations.

The tax code provides corporations with a special deduction for donations to food banks, but it excludes farmers, ranchers and restaurant owners from donating food under the same tax incentive. For many of these businesses, it is actually more cost effective to throw away food than donate it to charity. The hunger relief community believes that these changes would markedly increase food donations—whether it is a farmer donating his crop, a restaurant owner contributing excess meals, or a food manufacturer producing specifically for charity.

This bipartisan legislation was introduced separately by Senators Lugar and Leahy with 13 additional cosponsors. It has been endorsed by a diverse set of organizations, including America’s Second Harvest Food Banks, the Salvation Army, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers Union, the National Restaurant Association, and the Grocery Manufacturers of America.

Under current law, when a corporation donates food to a food bank, it is eligible to receive a “special rule” tax deduction. Unfortunately, most companies have found that the “special rule” deduction does not allow them to recoup their actual production costs. Moreover, current law limits the “special rule” deduction only to corporations, thus prohibiting farmers, ranchers, small businesses and restaurant owners from receiving the same tax benefits afforded to corporations.

This provision would encourage additional food donations through three changes to our tax laws: This bill will extend the tax deduction for food donations now afforded only to corporations to all business taxpayers, including farmers and restaurant owners. This legislation will increase the tax deduction for donated food from basis plus a markup to the fair market value of the product, not to exceed twice the product’s basis. This bill will codify the Tax Court ruling in Lucky Stores, Inc. v. IRS, in which the Court found that taxpayers should base the determination of fair market value of donated product on recent sales.

I would like to thank my colleagues for joining in this important effort to increase savings opportunities for lower income working Americans, to encourage the charitable giving of all Americans, to provide additional resources for the charitable organizations which serve their communities, and to reduce the annual waste of food to alleviate hunger. I would also encourage my other colleagues to consider supporting this important initiative.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 61—EXPRESSION OF THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS SHOULD RECOGNIZE BOARD CERTIFICATIONS FROM THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PHYSICIAN SPECIALISTS, INC., FOR PURPOSES OF THE PAYMENT OF SPECIAL PAY BY THE VETERANS HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HUTCHINSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs:

S. Res. 61

Whereas the United States has, in the course of its history, fought in many wars and conflicts to defend freedom and protect the interests of the Nation;

Whereas millions of men and women have served the Nation in times of need as members of the Armed Forces;

Whereas the service of veterans has been of vital importance to the Nation and the sacrifices made by the families of those who served should not be forgotten with the passage of time;

Whereas the obligation of the Nation to provide the best health care benefits to veterans and their families takes precedence over all else;

Whereas veterans deserve comprehensive and high-quality care;

Whereas the Secretary of Veterans Affairs only recognizes board certifications of allopathic physicians from specialty boards that are members of both the American Board of Medical Specialties and board certifications of osteopathic physicians from specialty boards recognized by the Bureau of Osteopathic Specialists;

Whereas physicians not certified by the American Board of Medical Specialties or the Bureau of Osteopathic Specialists are not eligible for special pay for board certification;

Whereas there are other nationally recognized organizations that certify physicians for practice in specialty;

Whereas the failure of the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to recognize board certifications from other nationally recognized organizations may limit the ability of qualified physicians from which the Department of Veterans Affairs can hire;

Whereas not recognizing board certifications of other nationally recognized organizations, such as the American Association of Physician Specialists, Inc., may limit the ability of veterans to receive the highest quality health care; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of Veterans Affairs should, for the purposes of the payment of special pay by the Veterans Health Administration, recognize board certifications from the American Association of Physician Specialists, Inc., and all other nationally recognized organizations that certify physicians from which the Department of Veterans Affairs can hire;

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today to offer a resolution concerning our nation’s veterans’ population and the quality of health care that they receive.

As a member of this Senate Veterans’ Affairs Committee, the chairman of the Personnel Subcommittee on the Senate Armed Services Committee, as well as the former chairman of the Health and Hospitals Subcommittee on the House Veterans’ Affairs Committee, I am very concerned that today’s veterans’ community receive the best possible health care coverage that we can provide.

Recently, it was brought to my attention that the Department of Veterans Affairs only recognizes two organizations for physician certification credentials. However, there are other organizations that have pressed the VA to consider their certification and have been met with a closed door.

While it is my understanding that very recently the Department has re-scinded this decision due to the VA General Counsel ruling it to be illegal, the VA still does not recognize other board certifications in the matter of specialty pay.

Within the last few weeks, Congressman JOE SCARBOROUGH, my good friend and former colleague, has introduced legislation on behalf of one of these excluded organizations, the American Association of Physician Specialists. His resolution addresses the issue of board certification recognitions by the new Secretary of the VA to include this organization in the list of organizations that are recognized for certification and special pay.

Today, I am pleased to offer the Senate counter-part to Congressman SCARBOROUGH’s legislation in the hopes that this vehicle may rectify a policy and system that seems faulty.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 27—EXPRESSION OF THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT THE 2008 OLYMPIC GAMES SHOULD NOT BE HELD IN BEIJING UNLESS THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PEOPLE’S REPUBLIC OF CHINA RELEASES ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS, RATIFIES THE INTERNATIONAL COVENANT ON CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS, AND OBSERVES INTERNATIONALLY RECOGNIZED HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. HELMS (for himself, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. HUTCHINSON, and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire) submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. Con. Res. 27

Whereas the International Olympic Committee is in the process of determining the venue of the Olympic Games in the year 2008 and the city of Beijing has made a proposal to the International Olympic Committee for the status of the bid in the International Olympic Committee meeting scheduled for Moscow in July 2001;

Whereas the city of Beijing has made a proposal to the International Olympic Committee meeting scheduled for Moscow in July 2001;

Whereas the International Olympic Committee has decided that the summer Olympic Games in the year 2008 be held in Beijing;

Whereas the Olympic Charter states that Olympic and the Olympic Movement is to foster “respect for universal fundamental ethical principles”;

Whereas the United Nations General Assembly Resolution 48/11 (December 1993) recognized that the Olympic goal of the Olympic Movement is to build a peaceful and better world by educating the youth of the world through sport, practiced without discrimination of any kind and the Olympic spirit, which requires mutual understanding, promoted by friendship, solidarity, and fair play”.

Whereas United Nations General Assembly Resolution 50/33 (November 7, 1995) stressed “the importance of the principles of the Olympic Charter, according to which any form of discrimination with regard to a country or a person on grounds of race, religion, political opinion, sex, language, or other status is incompatible with the Olympic Movement”;

Whereas the Department of State’s Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 2000 report:

(1) “The [Chinese] government continued to commit widespread and well-documented human rights abuses, in violation of internationally accepted norms.”;

(2) “Abuses included instances of extra judicial killings, the use of torture, forced confessions, arbitrary arrest and detention, the mistreatment of prisoners, lengthy incommunicado detention, and denial of due process.”;

(3) “The Government infringed on citizens’ privacy rights.”;

(4) “The Government maintained tight restrictions on freedom of speech and of the press, and increased its efforts to control the Internet; self-censorship by journalists continued.”;

(5) “The Government severely restricted freedom of assembly and continued to restrict freedom of association.”;

(6) “The Government continued to restrict freedom of religion and intensified controls on some unregistered churches.”;

(7) “The Government continued to restrict freedom of movement.”;

(8) “The Government does not permit independent domestic nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) to monitor publicly human rights conditions.”;

(9) “[The Government has not stopped] violence against women (including coercive family planning practices—which sometimes include forced abortion and forced sterilization).”;

(10) “The Government continued to restrict freedom of association, and forced labor in prison facilities remains a serious problem. Child labor exists and appears to be a growing problem in rural areas as adult workers seek better opportunities in urban areas.”;

(11) “Some minority groups, particularly Tibetan Buddhists and Muslim Uighurs, came under harsher pressure as the Government clamped down on dissent and ‘separatist’ activities.”;

Whereas the egregious human rights abuses by the Government of the People’s Republic of China are inconsistent with the Olympic ideal;

Whereas 119 Chinese dissidents and relatives of political prisoners have been arrested in 22 provinces and cities, issued an open letter on January 16, 2001, signed at enormous political risk which expresses the “grief and indignation of China’s political prisoners and their families”, asks the Chinese Government to release all of China’s political prisoners, and asserts that the release of China’s political prisoners will improve “Beijing’s stature in its bid to host the 2008 Olympic Games”;

Whereas although the Government of the People’s Republic of China signed the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in 1998, but has failed to ratify the treaty, and has indicated that it will not fully implement the treaty’s provisions; and

Whereas the United States has signed the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) acknowledges and supports the January 16, 2001, open letter released by Chinese dissidents and the relatives of the imprisoned Chinese political prisoners stating that the release of China’s political prisoners would improve Beijing’s stature in its bid to host the 2008 Olympic Games;

(2) expresses the view that, consistent with its stated principles, the International Olympic Committee should not award the 2008 Olympic Games to the People’s Republic of China because it has failed to implement the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights without major reservations, fully implements the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and observes internationally recognized human rights;

(3) calls for the creation of an international Olympic Games Human Rights Campaign in the event that Beijing receives the Olympics to focus international pressure on the Government of the People’s Republic of China to guarantee the following:

(a) an end to arrest and detention of all political prisoners, including legal activists, human rights lawyers, and labor rights activists;

(b) an end to forced labor, torture, and ill-treatment of prisoners;

(c) respect for the rights of all prisoners to access to legal aid;

(d) respect for the rights of all prisoners to a fair and public trial without delay; and

(e) respect for the right to an effective remedy for past violations;

(4) recommends that the Congressional-Executive Commission on the People’s Republic of China to grant an emergency travel waiver to prominent human rights activists so that they may travel to Europe and North America to explain the human rights concerns associated with the Olympic Games in a personal and direct manner; and

(5) recommends that the Government of the People’s Republic of China to respect the principles of the Olympic Charter and the International Olympic Committee, and to allow the International Olympic Committee to take any action in violation of the provisions of this Act.”.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

INTRODUCTION OF NET CORPS ACT OF 2001

HON. MIKE HONDA
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, it was once conventional wisdom that if you merely put computers in classrooms, the quality of our children’s education would dramatically improve. No doubt, our schools are better because of the presence of computers, but we have learned that our teachers and administrators must be better trained and assisted if we are to maximize the use of computers and the Internet in schools.

Today, I will introduce legislation that expands the Corporation for National Service by creating a National Education Technology (NET) Corps that works with our schoolteachers and high-tech savvy administrators to integrate technology into classroom curriculum.

NET Corps will work to improve the quality of classroom education for our children by coupling the specific needs of our school systems with the energy and intellect of some of the brightest people in our academic institutions and high tech industry.

In addition to recruiting students from America’s universities, the federal government will encourage high tech businesses to lend their employees to the NET Corps program—on a part-time or full-time basis—by offering these corporations a tax credit.

Already, my proposal has drawn strong support from Silicon Valley executives, teachers and the non-profit community who recognizes that career opportunities for the next generation of Americans will increasingly come from our fast-paced, knowledge economy.

Over two-thirds of economic growth stems from technological innovation—our students must be empowered with high tech skills so they can navigate, adapt and succeed in the Internet economy.

As a Peace Corps volunteer in El Salvador in the 1960s, I believe that NET Corps is an excellent model. I understand the positive impact that direct service programs have in our communities and the lives of volunteers. The NET Corps programs will afford opportunities to our professional men and women to make contributions to our schools and our children.

As a former high school teacher and a Member of this body representing Silicon Valley, I’m proud to introduce legislation that will foster a cooperative working relationship between schoolteachers and high-tech savvy volunteers to improve the quality of our children’s education.

THE GENERATOR TARIFF REPEAL ACT

HON. MAC COLLINS OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to introduce legislation that would repeal the duty on the importation of replacement steam generators used in nuclear power plants.

Steam generators are necessary for the operation of nuclear power facilities. However, because they are no longer produced in the United States, domestic electric utilities must import replacement nuclear steam generators. Despite the fact that there is neither a current nor any reasonable likelihood of future domestic manufacturing capability, a tariff is imposed on these imports. Prior to the conclusion of last year’s Congress, a reduction in this tariff was included in the Miscellaneous Trade and Technical Corrections Act (H.R. 4868). Because a full repeal would have breached the limitation on revenue impact for the bipartisan miscellaneous trade bill, the original full repeal of the tariff was changed to a reduction to 4.9%.

This tariff should be removed. While providing no benefit to any domestic manufacturer, this expensive tax is borne directly by domestic consumers of electricity. The cost of the duty is passed on to the ratepayer through state public utility commissions in rate-making proceedings. In short, the consumer pays this unnecessary tax directly and entirely.

There is no domestic manufacturing industry to protect and the consumer derives no benefit from this tax. Except for raising a minor amount of revenue for the Treasury, this is a classic case of a tariff that serves no purpose other than to raise costs for consumers.

This tariff repeal legislation has enjoyed strong bipartisan support in both the House of Representatives and the other body. I ask my colleagues to join me in the effort to eliminate this unnecessary tariff by cosponsoring the Generator Tariff Repeal Act.

TRIBUTE TO PAUL SELDENRIGHT
CHAMPION OF HOPE TRIBUTE DINNER FOR THE NATIONAL KIDNEY FOUNDATION OF MICHIGAN

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the National Kidney Foundation of Michigan has honored several Michigan residents who are outstanding members of the community and have helped in the campaign for the treatment of kidney disease and increased awareness of organ and tissue donation. This evening, the Foundation will be hosting the fourth annual Champion of Hope Tribute Dinner, which will honor the 2001 Champions of Hope.

This year, the National Kidney Foundation of Michigan has chosen Paul Seldenright as a recipient of the award. When Paul retired from his 27-year career with the Michigan State AFL-CIO, he did not retire from public service. He has continued to demonstrate his dedication and commitment through service within his community and beyond. A member of the A. Philip Randolph Institute and lifetime member of the NAACP as well, his contribution to the fight for racial equality and economic justice has continued to serve as an example to communities across the country.

Without leaders like Paul Seldenright, the mission to improve the lives of people with kidney disease through education, services, research, and organ donation would be that much more difficult.

I applaud the National Kidney Foundation of Michigan and Paul Seldenright for their leadership, advocacy, and community service. I know that Paul is honored by the recognition and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting him as a 2001 recipient of the Champion of Hope Award.

RAISING AWARENESS OF VITILIGO

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring attention to a skin condition called Vitiligo. Vitiligo is a skin condition of white patches resulting from loss of pigment. This disease can strike anyone at anytime, and it is both genetic and environmental.

The typical Vitiligo macule is white in color, has convex margins, and appears as though the white areas were flowing into normally pigmented skin. The disease progresses by gradual enlargement of individual macules and the development of fewer white spots on various parts of the body.

Vitiligo affects between one and two percent of the population, regardless of sex, race, or age around the world. An estimated five million Americans are afflicted with Vitiligo. The more dark-skinned a person is, the more their Vitiligo stands out. Because of the contrast between affected and unaffected areas of skin, individuals will have the opportunity to live a healthy life.
In half of all Vitiligo cases, onset occurs between the ages of 10 and 30. There are, however, reported cases of Vitiligo present at birth.

Over 30% of affected individuals may report a positive family history. Both genetic and environmental factors contribute to Vitiligo. Many patients attribute the onset of their Vitiligo to physical trauma, illness or emotional distress, such as the death of a family member.

Treatment of this disease is essential. Vitiligo profoundly impacts the social and psychological well-being of its victims, especially children. Although, this disease is painless, the disfigurement of Vitiligo—accentuated among persons with dark or tan skin—can be devastating. Raising the public’s awareness of this disease and its known treatment will bring relief to those who suffer from Vitiligo.

April has been declared Vitiligo Awareness Month by Governor Jeb Bush of Florida. The American Vitiligo Research Foundation, located in my district in Clearwater, Florida, is holding a seminar in April to bring attention to this disease. This is an opportunity for researchers and doctors to discuss and share information about Vitiligo. The seminar will also afford children with the disease the opportunity to understand that they are not alone.

I would like to thank Stella Pavides of Clearwater, Florida, who brought this disease to my attention, and I commend her dedication to educating the public about Vitiligo. Although this disease does not physically harm a person, it can destroy one’s spirit. Increased public awareness is the only way to help reduce the discrimination experienced by patients living with this disease.

EXPRESSING SYMPATHY FOR VICTIMS OF DEVASTATING EARTHQUAKES IN EL SALVADOR

SPEECH OF HON. MIKE HONDA
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, March 20, 2001

Mr. HONDA. Madam Speaker, the massive earthquakes that have hit El Salvador, first on January 13 with a magnitude of 7.6 on the Richter Scale, and then on February 13 with a magnitude of 6.6, have brought untold hardships to a nation that has been working diligently to overcome previous natural disasters. Hundreds of lives have been lost, thousands injured and a million more have been displaced, leaving them without food, water or shelter.

As Americans, it is our duty to pull together to help our friends and allies during times of extreme crisis. I urge our government to expedite relief efforts, especially where entities such as the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, and the United States Agency for International Development are concerned.

This disaster also affected me on a deeply personal level—I spent two years in the Peace Corps and the people I met and worked with during my time in El Salvador’s rural villages welcomed me into their homes and into their hearts. My deepest sympathies go out to the people of El Salvador for the losses they have had to endure.

I have spoken with President Francisco Flores of El Salvador and he has informed me that a massive relief effort is underway to provide shelter, food and water. Many families are still taking refuge in public areas and soccer stadiums. He also expressed fears that disease may run rampant due to open sewage pipes and contaminated water. I assured President Flores that I would do what I could, to bring attention to this crisis. I also told him about the efforts going on in my home district of San Jose to help coordinate relief efforts.

While the situation needs much attention, the most important thing to remember is that there is hope. I have seen, with my own eyes, the ability of El Salvadorans to persevere—and with the efforts of the good people in the United States, we must and will help the people of El Salvador pull through this trying time. Again, I strongly urge that we expedite our efforts to bring relief to the people of El Salvador.

WOMEN’S HISTORY MONTH

HON. ADAM SCHIFF
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, March is Women’s History Month and I would like to take this opportunity to honor Stacey Murphy, an elected City Council-member of the City of Burbank, California, as 2001 Woman of the Year for California’s 27th Congressional District.

Ms. Murphy, who served a term as Mayor from 1999–2000 and Vice Mayor from 1998–1999, has an exemplary record of service to
Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I join today with my colleagues, Congressmen JERRY LEWIS, DUNCAN HUNTER and DAVID DREIER, to pay tribute to a most wonderful person, former Member of Congress, friend and great American—Victor “Vic” V. Veysey—who passed away last month.

Calvin Coolidge, America’s 31st President, once said, “No person was ever honored for what he received; honor has been the reward for what he gave.” and Vic Veysey gave much during his years of public service and teaching.

A member of the House of Representatives from 1971 to 1975, Vic Veysey made a great impact in a short amount of time upon the Imperial Valley, California and the nation. In fact, I attribute an internship in his Washington, D.C. office to piquing my own interest in politics. It was 1973, during Vic Veysey’s second term and the Senate Watergate hearings. It was an incredible time in American politics. More impressive, though, was how Vic ran his congressional office: he took time to understand his constituents, and their problems, and to do his homework, learning the issues and knowing how the issues would affect his constituents.

He is probably best known for his lifelong commitment to education, youth and democracy. Veysey graduated from Caltech in 1936 with a Bachelor of Arts in Civil Engineering and from the University of Harvard Business School in 1938 with a MBA in Industrial Management. The next natural course was to teach, which Vic did for 11 years at Caltech and Stanford. At Caltech, he worked on different rocket projects during World War II and aspects of the atomic bomb, Project Camel. Vic Veysey then returned to his roots and began his political career—running and winning a seat on the Brawley School Board, where he was instrumental and a founding trustee in establishing the Imperial Valley College. In 1962, Vic was elected to the California State Assembly, where he served four terms (1962–1971). My colleague, Mr. Lewis of California had the honor to work with Vic Veysey during his assembly days, before they were both elected to the U.S. House of Representatives.

After leaving Congress, Vic Veysey served as assistant secretary of the Army during the Ford Administration. His love of education remained, however, and he returned to California to assume the directorship of Caltech’s Industrial Relations Center, becoming a director emeritus for the Industrial Relations Department upon his retirement.

Vic is survived by his wife of 60 years, Janet, three sons, a daughter, nine grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Mr. Speaker, looking back at Vic’s life, we see a life dedicated to public service and education. An American whose gifts to the Imperial Valley and California led to the betterment of those who had the privilege to come in contact or work with Vic. Honoring his memory is the least that we can do today for all that he gave over his 85 years of life.
women, despite the threat to themselves and their children, stay in these abusive relationships. According to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, one of the major reasons women stay in them is a lack of resources or fear of independence—a sense that there is nowhere else for them to go, and there is nowhere else for them to get help. They believe that if they leave their partners, they will be forced into poverty and unable to provide for their children.

Strong women fought to break all women free from the shackles of being second-class citizens those many years ago. We vote, we work, and we succeed on our own. But too many still need help to enjoy this freedom completely. One of the most impressive programs that I have come across in my years in public service that addresses these concerns is New Choices/New Options. This program provides these new heads-of-household with the skills necessary to compete in today’s marketplace. It is a program focused on providing assistance for displaced homemakers. What is most notable about this program is that in addition to teaching career development skills, it helps to instill a new sense of self-confidence in the women who participate in this program. Many women who come from abusive relationships not only need job training, but perhaps more importantly, they need the tools to help rebuild their lives—they need us to help them become pioneers for their children’s futures.

Participants work one-on-one and in group settings to assess their needs and then design a plan to help meet these needs. They learn conflict resolution techniques and develop effective decision-making skills. This program helps participants build a safe and secure future for themselves and their families. It is so crucial that these women break this new ground like their sisters before them so they can break the cycle of domestic violence. Domestic violence is a societal ill that can occur at any time, to anyone. Let us confront this issue head on, so that during some future celebration of Women’s History Month, someone can take to this very floor and commemorate the end of domestic violence.

SCHOOL SHOOTINGS PLAGUING OUR SOCIETY

HON. DAVE CAMP
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss a tragic and horrible situation plaguing our society, the incidences of school shootings. I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the following article by Mr. John Tefler, which appeared in the Midland Daily News on Sunday, March 11, 2001. He offers great and truthful insight into the appalling social problem of school shootings. He correctly writes that the answer is not more unnecessary gun laws, but rather we must find a solution that addresses the moral breakdown in our society. He truly writes about “The Heart of the Matter.”

The Heart of the Matter

(By John Tefler)

President Bush, in the aftermath of the latest school shooting, did not make a new call for gun control when commenting on the tragedy. Instead, he focused on the heart of the matter. “All adults in society can teach children right from wrong, can explain that life is precious,” he said.

The media seemed almost disappointed. The last line of an Associated Press story read: President Clinton used a rash of school shootings to call for stricter gun control laws. Bush did not mention the issue.

Thank goodness. It is time for America to stop trying to use Band-Aid fixes to solve problems of the heart. Instead of seeking more gun control, we should be asking why some of our children think it is OK to kill people they dislike.

Let that sink in a moment. Some of our children think it is OK to shoot a person who has hurt them. That’s a gun control issue. We need to face the facts as a nation that these kids no longer believe the commandment “thou shall not kill” applies to themselves. They have come up with their own definition of reality and it has nothing to do with what most people would deem morally correct.

A radio commentator the other day said we shouldn’t be surprised by the violent actions of some young people. Every day they live in a world that encourages them to come up with their own definitions of right and wrong, from smoking to promiscuity to illegal drug, alcohol and tobacco use to underage viewing of violent R-rated movies and more.

We encourage young people to come up with theories of violence in the school and often telling them there is no wrong answer. We don’t want to place limits on their answers—that might stifle creativity. We expose them to images, concepts and viewpoints that require maturity to understand. We expect them to make good choices.

In giving them all this freedom to choose, some kids are having a hard time figuring out where the boundary line is between acceptable and unacceptable behavior. The fact is our children need boundaries. They need rules. They need to know there are many incorrect solutions to the problems they are encountering. They need to be taught what is right and what is wrong and they need it pounded in their heads over and over again until you are so sick of doing it you are ready to throw in the towel as a parent and say you don’t need it again.

It’s time for America to quit asking “why” these shootings keep happening. We know the answer. It sickens hearts. And they don’t know the morally correct way to deal with the problems they are facing.

Our kids need to be taught right from wrong. They need to have boundaries they cannot cross without facing consequences. They need to know some values and beliefs are not negotiable. And they need to know all of these things while being taught under a forgiving umbrella of love. Then, and only then, will America be attacking the heart of the problem.

TRIBUTE TO LIEUTENANT COLONEL RICHARD F. McFARLAND
UNITED STATES AIR FORCE ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

HON. JOHN E. PETERSON

He has served our nation and the Air Force well during his years of service, and we are indebted for his many contributions and sacrifices in the defense of the United States. I am sure that everyone who has worked with Rich joins me in wishing him and his wife, Anne, health, happiness, and success in the years to come.

THE CLEAR YOUR GOOD NAME ACT

HON. JERROLD NADLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, according to the Source of Criminal Justice Statistics, there were more than 10 million arrests in 1999 alone. Many of these arrests led to criminal convictions and helped make our streets and communities safer. The men and women of law enforcement play a critical role in enforcing our laws and creating a just society. We owe them all a debt of gratitude for their service.

However, as any police officer will tell you, sometimes someone is arrested who is not guilty of any crime. It could be a case of mistaken identity or of someone being in the wrong place at the wrong time. Perhaps someone falsely accused an innocent person in self-defense or simply lied to the police. When the mistake or false accusation is discovered, the innocent person is free to go, but the record of the arrest can haunt him or her for the rest of his or her life.

Today, we are announcing the introduction of the Clear Your Good Name Act, which would require the expungement of voided arrest records in order to clear the names of innocent people.

The bill defines a “voided arrest” as any arrest followed by the release of the person without the filing of formal charges, by dismissal of proceedings against the person arrested, or by a determination that the arrest was without probable cause. The bill would require expungement of voided Federal arrest records and would provide a financial incentive to States to provide for expungement of voided State records. Some States have enacted laws requiring the expungement of voided arrest records, and we want to encourage other States to follow their lead. This bill would make States with expungement statutes eligible to receive a 10-percent increase in crime control funding. Specifically, it would increase the Edward Byrne Memorial State and Local Law Enforcement Assistance programs. For 2001, Congress appropriated $569 million for these programs. If every State passed an expungement law, the cost would be $56 million. These funds are used to reduce drug demand and improve the effectiveness of law enforcement operations, and assist citizens in preventing crime.

When people are mistakenly arrested and then released after it is determined that they are innocent, they should not have to carry the burden of the mistaken arrest with them for the rest of their lives. We know that arrest records can prejudice opportunities for schooling, employment, professional licenses, and housing. But innocent individuals who have done nothing wrong should not be marked for life.

Lt. Manny Gomez is a perfect example of how an innocent person with a voided arrest record was unfairly denied access to a job. Before I tell his story I want to say a few words about Lt. Gomez. He came to my office several years ago to inform me of this problem, and has worked diligently with my staff and with other Members of the House and Senate to correct an injustice. He has been called “tenacious” by the NY Daily News, and has been profiled in the New York Times. He has worked with the NY City Council and with the NY State Assembly to pass expungement legislation. He is an example of a crusader who stays focused, works hard, and demands results. We are lucky to have him as a champion of this cause.

This is his story. In 1995, Lt. Gomez, two army duffel bags by his side, was approached by police officers in the train station because he happened to fit the description of someone they were looking for. He told them it was not the person, but he went voluntarily to the police station. Within five minutes another officer determined that indeed he was not the person they were looking for, and he was released after he gave the police his name and address. He was unaware that the encounter generated what is called a voided arrest record. Years later when he applied for a job at the police department, he told them—what he believed to be true—that he was never arrested. Unfortunately, the voided record had not been expunged, and the police found the record and accused him of not being truthful. The case of mistaken identity had come back to haunt him, and he was not allowed to become a police officer. He was never aware that he was arrested, so he then began searching for the reason for the record. After he investigated his case and discovered what had happened, he found that there was no law to provide for the expungement of voided arrest records, and the person imputed innocent of all charges. After a lengthy battle over several years he was finally able to explain the situation to the police department. The police department has since realized that it was in error and will allow him to become a police officer. Unfortunately, not everyone is as capable as Lt. Gomez, and many people are unfairly harmed by voided arrest records that are never expunged. Thus the need for this bill.

I am hopeful that with a strong coalition working together we can pass this legislation and enable innocent people to clear their good names and go about their lives free from the harmful effects of a mistaken arrest.

ENERGY AND GLOBAL WARMING

HON. NANCY PELOSI
OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my deep concern about the direction President Bush is taking on energy and global warming. The overwhelming majority of climate scientists agree that the earth’s atmosphere is warming, and that especially combustion of fossil fuels, are contributing to the warming trend.

Robert Watson, chairman of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, has said, “We see changes in climate, we believe humans are involved, and we’re projecting future climate changes much more significant over the next 100 years than over the last 100 years.” Coastal areas, such as my district of San Francisco, will face serious challenges from global warming. Sea levels are rising because ice sheets are melting and because the ocean is expanding as it absorbs heat from the atmosphere. The projections for the rise in sea level between 1990 and 2100 range from a low of 3.54 inches to a high of 34.64 inches—close to three feet.

President Bush says, “My Administration takes the issue of global climate change very seriously.” During his campaign, he pledged to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to phase out the old, inefficient carbon dioxide. Last week, responding to a concerted campaign from the electric utility and fossil fuel industries, he broke that promise.

The environment, and the human communities around the world that will be harmed by climate change, will suffer the consequences. Instead of encouraging the U.S. to reduce our dependence on the fossil fuels that cause global warming, by using energy more efficiently

The Administration has made drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge the centerpiece of their energy policy. They say we need oil from the Refuge to reduce our dependence on foreign oil. They even point to the electricity shortages in California as a reason to drill for oil in the Refuge. But oil is used to generate less than one percent of California’s electricity, truly a negligible amount.

Not only would oil from the Refuge do nothing to help California, but it would also do very little to increase America’s energy supply. Over the next half century, the production of 1 percent of the oil consumed in the U.S.

The Administration is using the energy crisis to score victories against the environment, both on climate change and drilling in the Arctic Refuge. If they can roll over environmental protection in these areas, none of our environmental laws and regulations will be safe from attack.

I call on President Bush to stand up for the American people and the environment. We must move quickly to counter global warming—our future depends upon it.

CELEBRATING GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

SPREE OF

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN
OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, March 20, 2001

Mr. GILMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the celebration of Greek independence, and I thank my colleagues, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Bilirakis) and the gentlelady from New York (Mrs. Maloney), for reminding us of the important role Greece has played in the past and plays now.

It is important that we join together to celebrate the 180th anniversary of Greek independence and to pay tribute to a nation which is considered the birthplace of democracy. Let us recognize that the world owes a great deal to the nation that first developed the concept of majority rule, a concept that is at the very heart of our own institutions.

In 1821, Greek patriots rose up against the Ottomans, who for nearly 400 years had curtailed their basic civil rights. The struggle of the Greek patriots won the support of many in Western Europe and in the United States. The French, the British, and the Russian governments, strongly identifying with the descend-
Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, during Women’s History Month, I would like to highlight one of the cruellest and most widespread forms of violence: violence against women. In 1999, there were over 59,000 domestic violence calls for assistance in Los Angeles County—755 in my district alone. And those are just the women who call.

I am taking this opportunity to mention two shelters located in my district, Rainbow Services, a shelter San Pedro, California, was the first shelter to establish an emergency response program in Los Angeles County for battered women and children. Rainbow Services provides resources and guidance that help battered women end abuse. Women at the shelter are given help obtaining a restraining order and there is a large network of almost 20 weekly peer support group. As important, all services are offered in Spanish, allowing access for more women to seek help. A second shelter, the 1736 Family Crisis Center in Venice Beach, also offers unique and important help. The Center aids women and children who need to use emergency services by allowing them to stay one month with confidential shelter. Second Step Shelters also provide transitional abuse counseling and offer independent living skills training, which allows women to become self-sufficient after their time at the shelter.

Mr. Speaker, violence against women is still an epidemic in this country. It is my hope this important issue continues to receive government attention. Shelters, like those in my district, are just the women who call.

CELEBRATING GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

SPREECH OF
HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, March 20, 2001

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, 180 years ago the Greek people rose against the Ottoman occupation and freed themselves from oppression to reestablish not only a free and independent state, but a country that would eventually regain her ancient status as a democracy. In congratulating the people of Greece on the anniversary of their revolution, I join in recognizing the distinction earned by Greece with Greece’s place of democracy and her special relationship with the United States in our fight together against Nazism, communism and other aggression in the last century alone. Yes, democrats around the world should recognize and celebrate this day together with Greece to reaffirm our common democratic heritage.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, while the ancient Greeks forged the notion of democracy, and many Greeks of the last century fought to regain democracy, careful analyses of the political and basic human freedoms climate in today’s Greece paint a sobering picture of how fundamental and precious freedoms are treated.

Taking a look at the issues which have been raised in the Commission for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) Human Dimension Review Meetings and will be considered over the next week at the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD), a few of the most critical concern centers about contemporary Greece affect the freedom of expression, the freedom of religious belief and practice, and protection from discrimination. Legal restrictions on free speech remain on the books, and those convicted have typically been allowed to pay a fine instead of going to jail. In recent years, though, Greek journalists and others have been imprisoned based on statements made in the press. This was noted in the most recent Country Report on Human Rights Practices prepared by the Department of State. The Helsinki Institute has also criticized the frequent criminal charges against journalists in cases of libel and defamation.

Religious freedom for everyone living in Greece is not guaranteed by the Greek Constitution, nor are the laws which are often used against adherents of minority or non-traditional faiths. Especially onerous are the provisions of Greek law which prohibit the freedom of religious denomination.

These statutes have a chilling impact on religious liberty in the Hellenic Republic and are inconsistent with numerous OSCE commitments which, among other things, commit Greece to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate religious discrimination against individuals or communities; allow religious organizations to prepare and distribute religious materials; ensure the right to freedom of expression and the right to change one’s religion or belief and freedom to manifest one’s religion or belief. Over the last ten years, the European Court of Human Rights has issued more than a dozen judgments against Greece for violating Article 9 (pertaining to Freedom of Thought, Conscience and Religion) of the European Convention on Human Rights.

One positive development was the decision made last summer to remove from the state-issued national identity cards the notation of one’s religious affiliation. In May 2000, Minister of Justice Professor Mihalis Statopoulos publicly recognized that this practice violated Greece’s own law on the Protection of Personal Data passed in 1997. The decision fol- lowed the Independent Authority which asked the state to remove religion as well as other personal data (fingerprints, citizenship, spouse’s name, and profession) from the identity cards. This has long been a pending human rights concern and an issue raised in a hearing on religious freedom held by the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe (which I Co-Chair) in September 1996.

I am pleased to note that Greece has acknowledged in its most recent report to the UN CERD that the problems faced by the Roma community (which has been a part of Greek society for more than 400 years), migrant workers and refugees are “at the core of the concern of the authorities.” The recognition that issues which need attention is always the first step necessary to addressing the problem. The Commission has received many reports regarding the Roma community in Greece, including disturbing accounts of pervasive discrimination in employment, housing, education, and services, including health care. With a very high illiteracy rate, this segment of Greek society is particularly vulnerable to abuse by local officials, including reports of Roma being denied registra- tion for voting or identity cards that in turn prevents them from gaining access to government-provided services. Particularly alarming are incidents such as the forced eviction of an estimated 100 families by order of the mayor of Ano Liosia and the bulldozing of their makeshift housing in July of 2000. Similar incidents have occurred in recent years in Agia Paraskevi, Krifi, Trikaia, Nea Koi, and Evosmos.

Our Founding Fathers relied heavily on the political and philosophical experience of the ancient Greeks, and Thomas Jefferson even called ancient Greece “the light which led ourselves out of Gothic darkness.” As an ally and a fellow participating State of the OSCE, we have the right and obligation to encourage implementation of the commitments our respective governments have made with full consensus. I have appreciated very much and applauded the willingness of the Government of Greece to maintain a dialogue on human dimension matters within the OSCE. We must continue our striving together to ensure that all citizens enjoy their fundamental human rights and freedoms without distinction.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT AND SURVIVORS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2001

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure in introducing the “Railroad Retirement and Survivors’ Improvement Act of 2001” today.

In the Third District of West Virginia, we have 8,300 citizens who will benefit from this bill, which ranks southern West Virginia seventh in the United States. The bill we are introducing today will double benefits for widows of railroad retirees, reduce the retirement age from 62 to 60 years of age with 30 years of service, and allow a person to be vested in the system after five years of service, rather than 10 years, as currently required.

No taxpayers’ dollars will be used to finance these railroad retirement benefits, which are paid by employer and employee taxes. This bill includes the exact provisions of H.R. 4844, which I helped to write last year, and which passed the House by an overwhelming vote of 391–25 on September 7, 2000. However, the Senate did not act on the bill.

The bill is a product of two years of negotiation between management of the railroad industry and railroad workers. As last year’s vote demonstrates, the bill has strong bi-partisan support. I will work to bring the bill to the House floor for a vote, and I expect to see the same strong support as last year.

Once this bill becomes law, it will enable railroad retirees and widows to enjoy a better quality of life, by receiving the increased benefits that they spent their working lives paying into their retirement and they deserve to reap decent benefits.

PREVENT CHILD ABUSE—N.J.
APRIL BLUE RIBBON CAMPAIGN

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my colleagues that the month of April is Child Abuse Prevention Month. Throughout the month, thousands and perhaps millions of individuals from around the country who are working to reduce child abuse will be wearing blue ribbons to draw attention to this monumental national concern.

Prevent Child Abuse—New Jersey is undertaking the blue ribbon campaign in my state with a kickoff event on March 28. This organization serves as a national model for how a statewide group can make a difference in combating a serious social problem.

By establishing local partnerships, PCA-NJ helps communities, strengthens families and supports parents through parenting programs, education and training, advocacy and public awareness programs.

Valuable PCA-NJ programs include the Parent Linking Project, which provides comprehensive services to teen parents and their children at school; Healthy Families, under which intensive, home visitation services are provided to overburdened parents of newborns; Every Person Influences Children, which sponsors parent education workshops for parents and training for teachers to incorporate life skills and character education into daily curricula, and the Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention Initiative, which undertakes case management and counseling programs for teens to build self esteem and help them make healthy choices.

In addition to the Blue Ribbon Campaign, PCA-NJ also sponsors many public education and community awareness efforts, including a speakers’ bureau, loaned materials under the New Jersey Parenting Education Resource Center (PERC); and a web site and 800 number for information and other resources.

Mr. Speaker, in New Jersey, each year, over 80,000 calls are made to the N.J. Division of Youth and Family Services by concerned citizens and professionals reporting suspected child abuse and neglect. This figure for just one state gives us an idea of the extent of this shameful problem in our country—

HONORING THE LATE DOCTOR JESSE W. AUSTIN

HON. CHARLES W. “CHIP” PICKERING OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the late doctor Jessie W. Austin, Sr., a constituent of mine who passed away on Monday, July 2, 2001, at his residence in Forest, Mississippi. Dr. Austin, affectionately known as “Doctor Bill,” was 84 years of age at the time of his death and had been a practicing physician in the City of Forrest and Scott County for more than 39 years. Doctor Bill was born in Oxford, Mississippi in 1916 but moved to Forest in 1924. He graduated from Forest High School in 1934, Mississippi State University in 1938, and Tulane Medical School in 1942. Shortly after graduating from Tulane, Doctor Bill entered the United States Army and served with the U.S. 3rd Army in Europe as a Battalion Surgeon. He participated in 5 major battles which began with the Normandy Invasion and ended in Yugoslavia on VE Day. Doctor Bill’s service decorations included the Silver Star, two Bronze Stars, and the Purple Heart. At the Battle of the Bulge, he was known as the “Battling Surgeon.”

Upon returning from Service in 1945, Doctor Bill began his medical practice with his father, Doctor R.B. Austin, II. At that time, most patient care was done either at the patient’s home or in the doctor’s office. It was not unusual for Doctor Bill to spend most of his day making house calls and treating patients. He had a bedside manner with his patients that truly reflected his love and concern for their well-being. Because of his caring attitude, Doctor Bill endeavored himself to all the residents of Forest and Scott County that lasted until his final day of life. During his medical career, Doctor Bill delivered more than 3500 babies, most of whom were born at home.

Doctor Bill served as the first president of the Mississippi Chapter of the Battle of the Bulge Veterans. It was he who stepped forward in 1994 to provide the leadership to form the state’s first Bulge Veterans group and helped organize the inaugural meeting of the group in Forest. He was a member of the Forest United Methodist Church and was an ardent Mississippi State University supporter. He was also a member and past president of the Central Medical Society. Doctor Bill was active in the affairs and he and his wife were honored as Forest’s “Citizens of the Year” and named grand marshals of the Christmas Parade in 1984.

Doctor David Lee, a medical colleague of Doctor Bill said that “he was one of the best general practitioners I’ve known. He was one of the most dedicated doctor I’ve been associated with.” Doctor Howard Clark, a physician from Morton, Mississippi said both Doctor Bill and his father were wonderful doctors stating, “They were doctors who people loved. Doing what they could to help people. They were doctors who people loved doing. Doing what they could to help people.” Sid Salter, editor of the Scott County Times said, “Doctor Bill died as he lived—a well loved and respected man. He did not talk patriotism, he lived it. He did not talk of healing. He used his head, heart and hands for the benefit of others.”

Doctor Bill is survived by his wife Opal, daughters Sue Thippen and Judy Webb, sons J. W. “Ace” Richard and Terry, their husband and wives, 14 grandchildren, 1 great-grandchild, and many nieces and nephews. Doctor Bill was a great man. He loved the Lord, his family, his friends, his country, his state, and the town of Forest and Scott County. He served others to the best of his ability. It is my honor to pay tribute and express my appreciation and that of the 3rd Congressional District of Mississippi for his life of service and contributions to the betterment of our nation and all mankind.

SUN CHRONICLE IS RIGHT ON THE MONEY REGARDING NURSING HOMES

HON. BARNEY FRANK OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, March 10, an editorial in the Sun Chronicle, published in Attleboro, Massachusetts, accurately analyzed one of the major causes for the difficulties we are facing in providing decent nursing home care to our elderly citizens. The editorial notes, “the main problem can be traced back the Balanced Budget Act of 1997.” As the Sun Chronicle editorial writers note, today, “patients sit neglected in nursing homes, . . . meanwhile the federal and state governments—both enjoying budget surpluses—pay the nursing homes less than it costs to take care of patients.”

It is disgraceful in this wealthy nation for us to allow this situation to continue. We allocate far too little of our great wealth to pay the hard working people who provide essential nursing home services, and the consequence is that we do not provide these services nearly as well as we should. I was delighted to read this forceful, thoughtful, persuasive editorial in the Sun Chronicle and I ask that it be shared here.

[From the Sun Chronicle, Mar. 10, 2001]

NURSING HOME NEGLECT IN AN AGE OF SURPLUSES

Patients sit neglected in nursing homes, wounds soaking through bandages, food growing cold before feeding help arrives, sheets smelling of urine. Administrators can’t fill aide positions and nurses leave for higher-paying jobs.

Meanwhile, the federal and state governments—both enjoying budget surpluses—pay the nursing homes less than it costs to take care of patients.

This 저격된 picture is all too real, as the Sun Chronicle’s Rick Thurmond reported in last Sunday’s edition.

The only thing that explains this unconscionable situation is politics—and only politics can fix it.

The main problem can be traced back to the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, enacted to counteract federal deficits and eventually bring the budget into balance.

Thanks to the surging economy, that day arrived for sooner than expected, and now such a big surplus is projected that a major tax cut is supported by both parties.

The Medicare cuts in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, enacted to counteract federal deficits and eventually bring the budget into balance.

The government pays for 80 percent of nursing home patients. In Massachusetts, Medicaid provides about $130 a day for patients, while the costs are about $150.

The low salaries that the homes have difficulty keeping aides and professionals alike, with a direct impact on patient care and comfort. But even keeping salaries low isn’t doing it for nursing homes. A number have closed, including Sheldonville Nursing Home in Wrentham and Van Dorn Nursing Home in Foxboro. One-fourth of the state’s nursing homes face bankruptcy.

Obviously, the answer is money, and the money is there. The question is whether it will be a priority.

Local congressman James McGovern and Barney Frank voted against the Balanced Budget Act and have fought to restore Medicare cuts. We hope the next federal budget, drawing on the burgeoning surplus, will do more for a vulnerable elderly population than have recent budgets.

At the state level, a small step has been taken in approval of two years of wage supplements for nursing home workers. Another state bill has been introduced to boost nursing home reimbursements, but the sponsor has expressed concern that the state income tax cut approved by voters last year will make funds hard to come by.

Obvious, the state tax cut and the coming federal tax cut will increase competition for nursing home workers. Another state bill has been introduced to boost nursing home reimbursements, but the sponsor has expressed concern that the state income tax cut approved by voters last year will make funds hard to come by.

Last September, R & D Magazine named three research teams based at Glenn winners of its prestigious R&D 100 Award, known within the industry as the “Nobel Prize of applied research.” The projects that attracted global attention involved the development of superstrong titanium aluminide, a fiber used in airplane panels, and an advancement in Polymerization of Monomer Reactants to give aircraft longer shelf life.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article published in the Continental March 2001 magazine that highlights the achievements of the NASA Glenn Research Center over the past few decades. NASA Glenn is key to the transformation of our nation’s aeronautics and aviation technologies.

NASA Glenn has been involved in numerous projects that have advanced the aerospace industry in Cleveland and Ohio. NASA Glenn is a leader in developing technologies that support the nation’s economic growth and national security.

Many of the transportable power grid, built and tested in cooperation with a handful of private aerospace companies, originated on drawings made at the Glenn laboratories. Prior to shuttle launches in October, November, and January, a specially designed radiator that removes waste heat from the station was tested in the Space Power Facility, the world’s largest space environment simulation chamber, at NASA Glenn’s Plum Brook Station in Sandusky. Before these recent shuttle missions delivered the power components, the space station crew had been confined to a service module, being dependent on solar arrays.

The projects that attracted global attention involved the development of superstrong titanium aluminide, a fiber used in airplane panels, and an advancement in Polymerization of Monomer Reactants to give aircraft longer shelf life.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues the achievements of the NASA Glenn Research Center. The center continues to make groundbreaking discoveries and advancements in space and aviation technologies.

power the life support system and science equipment. Scientists note that at full operating speed the flywheel rotor’s linear velocity is two-and-one-half times the speed of sound (1,875 miles per hour). If the flywheel itself were allowed to spin without meeting resistance, it would go on for more than 12 hours.

"The flywheel energy storage system represents a revolutionary step in energy storage technology," says Raymond Beach, NASA Glenn’s team leader for flywheel development. "It sees the flywheel as a potential long-term alternative for chemical batteries, which don’t last as long and which generate more heat. The process is very efficient," he points out. "More than 85 percent of the energy put into the wheel comes out."

NASA believes that in the coming decades similar applications will be developed. Existing devices could be used in remote locations on earth and on Mars. When the Mars Surveyor Lander mission reaches the Red Planet, two pilot Glenn projects—the Mars Array Technology Experiment (MATE) and the Dust Accumulation and Removal Technology (DART)—will explore the feasibility of producing oxygen propellant from the Martian air. Each will test power-generating solar cells that can function amid extreme cold and notorious Martian dust storms. "Because of the dust, the cold temperatures and the varying light spectrum, the best solar cell for our ‘gas station on Mars’ might be one that we wouldn’t consider using in our space solar arrays," says NASA Glenn Project Manager Cosmo Baraona, who is overseeing the experiments.

Solar cells designed at Glenn have already performed better than expected with the Pathfinder and Sojourner Rover, but David Scheiman, a researcher at the Ohio Aerospace Institute, located at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. It would have applications not only across the populated parts of the world where there is a niche to fill with telemedicine. The patient or, in the case of space travel, the astronauts would be able to walk across the Martian surface. But long before the first human mission is sent to the fourth planet from the sun, Ansari would like to see such mobile devices used in remote locales on earth where medicine is unavailable.

In the years ahead, the facility bearing Senator Glenn’s name promises to claim its prominent place on the journey of human discovery. "This year, as we celebrate the Glenn center’s 60th anniversary, all of us can look back in pride at our outstandng accomplishments that have helped propel NASA and U.S. industry to new horizons," adds Campbell. "And no matter where that next horizon is found, Glenn’s pioneers and their successors will have the opportunity to travel beyond it. Ultimately, we want the public to benefit from what we do."

BOROUGH OF DURYEA CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Borough of Duryea, Pennsylvania, which will celebrate its centennial on April 7 with a community parade and picnic held by the Duryea Centennial Committee.

Duryea was originally called Babylon because it was a veritable Babel of languages and cultures, held by the Duryea Centennial Committee. Duryea is the center of the Borough of Duryea, and I congratulate the people of Duryea on this happy event.

The community was also known as Marcy Township before assuming its present name. The township was formed from territory taken from Pittston, Ransom and Old Forge townships on January 19, 1880. It was named for a pioneer, the first British settler in the region, Zebulon Marcy, who emigrated from Connecticut in the spring of 1770. A census taken at the formation of Marcy Township found 1,159 inhabitants, which had increased to 2,904 by 1890. According to the 2000 census, the population of Duryea is 4,634.

The present name of the community commemorates Abram Duryea of New York, who bought coal lands in the area in 1845 and opened mines around which the town grew up. He was a colonel of the Fifth New York Infantry in May, 1861, and was brevetted major-general four years later for his gallant and meritorious services.

Prior to becoming a borough, Duryea was a post-office village within Marcy Township, situated two miles north of Pittston. Duryea was incorporated as a borough on April 6, 1901. The first set of ordinances was adopted by the council and approved by the borough, whose equivalent today is the mayor, on August 23, 1901.

In 1901, John A. Burlington was the borough engineer. His fascination with eyes started years ago. His personal interest is with the human eye, and innovators will make it possible for us to travel beyond it. Ultimately, we want the public to benefit from what we do."
term investment in the quality of their communities. For this reason, two decades ago, Mr. Geier set out to educate Broward residents of the importance of the “Homestead Exemption” rules which use the Florida tax code to encourage homeownership and community enhancement. Mr. Geier’s efforts brought the benefits of the rules to thousands of homeowners and helped build the strong and lasting communities which exist in Broward County today.

Mr. Geier’s experience as a young man convinced him that a good education is the key to a productive job and success in life. Motivated by this conviction, Mr. Geier has consistently supported the Broward Schools in their efforts to provide young residents with quality education and opportunities for success. Throughout his thirty years in South Florida, Mr. Geier has actively campaigned in support of school bond referendums as well as funding early-on for computers in classrooms. More recently, Mr. Geier initiated the Area Agency for the Aging’s Senior’s Dollar Drive. This fundraiser provides thousands in funding for the Area Agency’s senior citizen support programs and community events. In these and several other civic initiatives, Mr. Geier has demonstrated his devotion and care to improving the quality of life for all Broward residents. His efforts span over four decades and his tremendous impact spans across the lives of his entire community. Mr. Speaker, let me conclude by saying, “Thank you and happy birthday to Nat Geier,” one of Broward County’s most remarkable residents.

SOUND ECONOMIC POLICY

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, March 21, 2001

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues’ attention the following article, “Can the U.S. Live With a Sounder, Saner Stock Market?” The author correctly points out that despite all of the recent attention on interest rates, the condition of our capital markets and the health of the U.S. economy are strongly influenced by the decisions that are made on trade policy, regulatory relief, and tax cuts. If we get those growth policies right, we will do a great service for the increasing number of Americans who are investing to improve their everyday lives and saving for their retirement.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Mar. 20, 2001]

CAN THE U.S. LIVE WITH A SOUNDER, SANER STOCK MARKET?
(By George Melloan)

Alan Greenspan has demonstrated that he can curb “irrational exuberance” in the stock markets, or so the conventional wisdom goes. Today, he presumably will try to perform a more difficult feat, arresting the world-wide decline in equities that he has been widely accused of—or credited with—causing. The auguries for his success are not especially favorable. The markets weeks ago factored into prices of a Federal Reserve rate target reduction, but that didn’t prevent last week’s steep slide.

The concept of Mr. Greenspan as a deus ex machina who intervenes occasionally to change economic outcomes has been overrated. His “irrational exuberance” speech in December 1996 rattled investors. But that may only have been because he was remarking on something that was obvious to almost everyone: Some stocks were selling at prices far in excess of their underlying values.

It certainly didn’t stop the bull run, which continued another three years until its peak early last year. Probably, a series of rate-target increases in the late 1990s by the Fed acted as something of a brake on stock markets and an American economy heavily fueled by credit. But the overriding factor was that stock averages last year had reached a never-never land that even the most optimistic logic could not justify. Consumers, responding to the “wealth effect” of their paper gains, piled up debt. When stocks sank last year, household net worth declined for the first time since records have been kept. Quite likely, household balance sheets have deteriorated further this year.

Up until last week it appeared that the Dow had stabilized at around the 10500 level, despite a slowdown in economic growth and a series of warnings of lower-than-expected earnings from major corporations. But the Nasdaq, which had reflected some of the greatest price excesses, continued its downward spiral and the Dow ultimately followed, dropping below 10000. The evaporation of liquidity caused by falling prices in one or two markets ultimately affects all markets in this age of globalization, so Europe, Japan and Southeast Asia all took big losses as well. Europe, as measured by the FTSE index, was hardest hit, with a 9% decline, compared to 7.7% in the Dow.

Many investors in high-flying stocks are licking their wounds. Money runners on Wall Street have lost some of the brash self-confidence of a year ago. Brokers who for years have been assuring customers that no investment can beat equities over time have a bit less confidence in that assertion. There is a realization dawning that maybe stock values do have some link to earnings and that a stock price that might take the company 40 years to earn could be a tad high.

This new sobriety is a healthy thing. The economists who have been arguing that the U.S. was developing an asset bubble, like Japan in the 1980s, have been appeased. Their concept that there is such a thing as asset inflation, fueled by liberal credit policies, has been reinforced. Yet the oversold markets probably much have taken care of themselves, without tempting interventions by politicians, who sometimes in the past (in the 1930s, for example) have jumped in to make things worse. Investors now know that stocks go down as well as up, a useful lesson.

The newest lesson is that the course of markets is often a function of the one they had 10 or 15 years ago when they were mainly the province of the well-to-do. Today, some 60% of Americans have a beneficial ownership in stocks. Mutual funds have replaced savings accounts as the preferred investment of small savers. Private pension funds holding the retirement money of millions of Americans are heavily invested in stocks. The benefits of funding give stock markets a greater stability than before. But they also mean that stocks play a greater role in household balance sheets, and hence in the holder’s perception of whether he is getting richer or poorer.

It is for this reason that policy makers need to give attention to the macroeconomy that underlies corporate stocks. It suffered from great neglect during the latter stages of the Clinton administration, even as the signs of an economic slowdown mounted. The administration allowed the beginnings of a new round of trade opening negotiations in Seattle to be scuttled by organized labor, the Naderites and assorted zanies. Mr. Clinton made only a feeble and belated effort to get fast track legislation to speed new trade agreements. Thus years have been wasted in starting negotiations for new multilateral trade and investment pacts that invariably re-energize the global economy.

Regulatory burdens continued to pile up. The EPA was set on automatic to crank out new restrictions that impose costs and yield either no benefits, or negative consequences. The previous administration kow-towed to “environmentalist” claims of a coming “global warming” disaster, despite a large body of scientific proof that no such trend exists. More public lands, including sites rich in oil and gas, were locked up as “wilderness” areas.

The passage of federal tax cuts last year, when they would have come in time to stimulate a flagging economy, was blocked by President Clinton. Democrats this year are still resisting even the modest initial tax cut tranches proposed by George W. Bush, styling themselves as the new guardians of fiscal responsibility. In other words, the economy is not going to get any help soon from tax cuts. That vaunted federal surplus could vanish quite rapidly if the American economy goes into recession. America is rich in oil and gas, was locked up as “wilderness” areas.

Consumer confidence, as measured by a monthly University of Michigan survey, remains reasonably upbeat. Employment is high, despite prospects of some big corporate layoffs. All that has happened to the American economy so far has been a slowing of growth, not a recession. The Fed is trying to ensure adequate liquidity while at the same time tending to its fundamental job of trying to keep the dollar sound. And finally, stock markets are safer places for money than they were a year ago, which is no bad thing.
SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference.
