Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise to make a few comments and observations about the September 11 attacks and about some of the aviation security issues facing the Senate in the pending legislation.

To put these issues in perspective, I’d like to recall the extraordinary actions of the passengers on United Flight 93 on September 11. The ill-fated flight that crashed in Pennsylvania. In the ultimate act of self-sacrifice and heroism, a group of passengers rushed the cockpit and thwarted the terrorists aboard that flight from inflicting additional damage and loss on this great Nation.

Without doubt, those fathers, mothers, husbands, and wives, patriots one and all, saved the lives of hundreds of Americans wherever that aircraft was targeted. They understood what was happening, that they would probably never again see their loved ones, but they acted heroically and, in sacrificing their own lives and dreams, probably saved the lives of hundreds of their fellow citizens.

This Nation, and perhaps this Congress on an even more personal level, owes them a debt of honor and gratitude that is hard to articulate.

They deserve our recognition and our commitment that we will meet, address, and repel the threat that forced them to pay so great a price.

They were among the many Americans in New York, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and around the Nation who acted courageously during and in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on September 11. They brought honor to all who love this country and what it represents, they are what America is all about.

These were not warriors or law enforcement officials. You might say that they were neighbors, members of parishes, or people we might meet in our grocery stores. They were just “average” Americans. And the world should wonder and our enemies should tremble at their mettle.

As devastating as the heinous act of September 11 was, and as incalculable as the pain, disruption, and loss inflicted upon the victims at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and on board the four hijacked United and American flights was, America and our very way of life we cherish will endure.

No one can make right the loss that the families, the coworkers, the friends and loved ones of the victims suffered because of these despicable acts. I know that all of us here in the Senate and across this great Nation continue to reflect and pray every day for the aggrieved and the fallen.

We must take every step to assure the Nation that this tragedy cannot be repeated. That is a tall order. I commend to your attention the comments made by the pilot of United Flight 564 on Saturday, September 15 to the passengers aboard that flight after the door closed and as they prepared to depart from Denver International Airport. He is reported to have said:

I want to thank you brave folks for coming out today. We don’t have any new instructions from the Federal government, so from now on we’re on our own.

He continued:

Sometimes a potential hijacker will announce that he has a bomb. There are no bombs on this aircraft and if someone were to get up and make that claim, don’t believe him.

If someone were to stand up, brandish something such as a plastic knife and say “This is a hijacking” or words to that effect, here is what you should do: Every one of you should stand up and immediately throw things at that person, pillows, books, magazines, eyeglasses, shoes, anything that will throw him off balance and distract his attention.

If he has a confederate or two, do the same with them. Most important: get a blanket over him, then wrestle him to the floor and keep him there. We’ll land the plane at the nearest airport and the authorities will take it from there.

Remember, there will be one of him and maybe a few confederates, but there are 200 of you. You can overwhelm them.

The Declaration of Independence says, “We, the people . . .” and that’s just what it is when we’re up in the air: we, the people, vs. would-be terrorists. I don’t think we are going to have any such problem today or tomorrow or for a while, but some time down the road, it is going to happen again and I want you to know what to do.

Now, since we’re a family for the next few hours, I’ll ask you to turn to the person next to you, introduce yourself, tell them a little about yourself and ask them to do the same.

That pilot’s guidance is serious—but these are serious times. Americans are a people who empower themselves to do great things. Clearly, the actions of the passengers and the crew on the American Airlines flight earlier this week illustrate that the flying public, the pilots and the crews are willing and committed to maintaining the safety and security of our airways.

We should not delude ourselves into thinking that simple pronouncements from the FAA, with all due respect, or tweaking the Federal Aviation Regulations, will allow us to sleep comfortably on transcontinental flights.

It is all of our responsibility to ensure the safety of our airways. The passengers aboard United Flight 93 knew that instinctively, the pilot on the United flight out of Denver merely reminds us of it.

Accordingly, as we review and reform our safety and security procedures, we must ask a simple question: would the actions and initiatives we propose to undertake have prevented the recent terrorist attacks and will they prevent future acts. Unfortunately, I’m concerned that the bill as currently drafted may fall short of meeting that standard.

Our actions must be meaningful, effective, and they must restore the confidence of the American public in the integrity and safety of our transportation systems.

If there ever were a time for bold and aggressive steps to improve the safety... of our transportation systems, now is that time. I believe, no, I know, that this Congress and the American people will accept and embrace meaningful steps toward that end.

We only need look at the full measure of our responsibility by the passengers aboard United Flight 93 to know the depths of our responsibility and I am heartened by the fact that I know that same spirit is abode every plane in the sky.

I believe that it all starts with our intelligence capability, we have to have the best possible intelligence about potential or imminent threats in order to constantly focus and modify security procedures and efforts. Intelligence is the first line of defense in our war against terrorism.

The principle that should guide us is that through human scrutiny and technological screening, we should put passengers through sufficient security procedures to identify potential threats;

First, that might mean answering computer generated and tailored questions at the ticket counter which might be followed by interviews with security personnel; passage through a metal detector which might be followed by thorough physical search for any bag that requires further scrutiny, there should also be random physical searches for all bags to improve proficiency and to raise the security penetration.

In addition, we should accelerate our research into emerging technologies to improve our ability to detect weapons carried by people or explosives secreted away. We also may need to consider stronger limitations on both hand carried and checked bags.

For the aircraft, that should mean armed air marshals on flights and increasingly sophisticated explosive detection systems followed by thorough physical search for any bag that requires further scrutiny, there should also be random physical searches for all bags to improve proficiency and to raise the security penetration.

For the airport, it entails a more substantial law enforcement presence at the Department of Transportation, or a new Deputy Administrator at the FAA.

And so, we come full circle back to intelligence, without a robust and aggressive intelligence effort that is constantly questioning where, how, and who we can plan the next attack, our security measure will not evolve to meet the challenge. Fortunately, if that is the case, we’re merely waiting for the next attack.

Clearly, we must approach airline, airport, and aircraft security issues in complementary and overlapping ways to establish a security “net” around our aviation system. What do I mean by a “net”? If we are suspicious about a bag or a passenger, that information is relayed and additional, more extensive security measure like I’ve described would be employed.

The increased tempo and breadth of security operations pose dramatic cost increases for airlines and airports and for me it is not out of the question that the legislation before the Senate contains an authorization to reimburse airports for the direct costs of increased law enforcement requirements mandated by the FAA.

I think the ultimate and reasonable approach is the Federal Government should not place unfunded federal mandates on our airports or any other unit of local government.

Clearly, the FAA mandated security directive can also act to increase the law enforcement presence is necessary. I intend to work with my colleagues on the appropriations committee to provide funding to help defray these costs and I commend the authorizing committee for providing that authorization in this bill.

However, notwithstanding that there are some useful provisions in this bill, I’m concerned that this legislation and this debate has gotten bogged down in the “federalize” versus “de-federalize” the aviation screening functions. I doubt that “federalizing” is the panacea that some would have you believe.

For some, it is an instinctive response to turn to the Federal Government in the wake of a crisis without ever questioning if it is the responsible action to take or if the federal bureaucracy will be any better. So, “federalization” may be a bad idea whose time has come.

We’re making the point if we misinterpret the mandate from the American people to improve aviation security with a public desire that the people searching our bags or manning the security checkpoint must be receive a paycheck from the U.S. Treasury.

I believe, no, I know, that the terrorists carried on the aircraft were legal to carry on the aircraft. What failed was intelligence, our response time, and the lack of security on board the aircraft. Let’s fix those things. "Util September 11th, it was legal to take a 4-inch knife on board an aircraft, and metal knives were commonplace in first class meal service.

The price tag for full Federal assumption of airport security is not small, in excess of $2 billion annually and that cost will only rise. And that’s forever.

We must weight that commitment of taxpayer dollars into whether it will result in either improved security, or the perception of improved security. There are a lot of things that the Federal Government does well, I would argue that this is not one of them.

Let’s not mislead the public into interpreting “federalization” to mean that baggage screening is going to be conducted by law enforcement officers.

Not even the supporters of full federalization are contemplating having Federal law enforcement officers search passengers or carry-on baggage.

In a federalized world, the metal detectors and bag searches would be conducted by Federal bureaucrats. I don’t think that over time, the American public is going to trust a bag or carry-on bag screener and say, “I feel safer because a Federal employee is checking my bags.”

Remember, the money we spend on replacing private sector employees federalize and bureaucratize.

Unfortunately, I believe this debate has gotten bogged down with government bureaucrats means we will have that much less money for other security improvements, and we’re talking about hiring as many as 30,000 new Federal employees. That’s three Army divisions.

I am concerned about the concept of a two-tier airport security construct. Some have advocated that we “federalize” at the largest airports while not “federalizing” at smaller airports. That logic is inconsistent with its proponents’ other flawed reasoning that security will somehow be magically improved and tightened by virtue of “federalization.”

The simple fact is we must improve aviation security at all airports. We cannot have weaker points and stronger points in the system. Instead, we must tailor our security architecture to stop terrorists no matter where they attempt to get into the system.

Further, I fail to see how creating a new Deputy Administrator at the FAA or a new Deputy or Assistant Secretary at the Department of Transportation moves the aviation security ball down the field.

Since both the past administration and the current administration have had such difficulty in filling the Deputy Administrator of the FAA position, I’m concerned that we’re unnecessarily confusing and complicating the Federal bureaucracy.

I can remember a case where an additional layer of bureaucracy led to the swift, decisive leadership I believe is necessary, especially in regards to safety and security. I’m also not certain that either the DOT or the FAA are the only, or the best place, for any new security function to reside.

I would hope that the relevant committee of jurisdiction would explore whether these responsibilities wouldn’t be better executed at the Department of Justice, the Department of the Treasury, or in the new Office of Homeland Security.

Personally, I believe that the President got it right in his proposal. The Federal Government would assume management oversight of the security function. It is imperative that we have standards for personnel, background checks, and training, as the President proposed, to improve the security net.

This is the appropriate role of the Federal Government. I’m disappointed that the bill before us today seems to be taking this issue in a different direction.

When we addressed the imminent financial crisis facing the airline industry 2 weeks ago, we acted expeditiously to restore the confidence of the financial markets that Congress and the administration had confidence in the future of air travel in America.

Congress and the administration must move expeditiously, but deliberately, to augment the interim security procedures already instituted by the Administration. This is not a one-time infusion of capital or liquidity as was supposed to be the case by the Airline Stabilization legislation.

Make no mistake, we must get this done and get it right before the end of this Congress. Taking a few more weeks as this bill moves through conference appears to make the confidence of the American public.

The American people will live with our decisions on aviation security for a long time. It is critical that we address the problems in the system without rushing to judgment. If we act precipitously we run the risk of failing to address security in a thoughtful and comprehensive fashion, and, we may well lose the opportunity to make the meaningful improvements that are essential to provide a system worthy of the American public’s confidence.

In the extreme, we run the risk of perpetrating a fraud on the American public by misleading them into a false sense of comfort that we have met the security challenge in this bill.

Congress has time to get this right. This is a complicated and crucial issue and we should take the time to get it right. The administration has taken the interim steps to restore public confidence in our security efforts; our actions should augment and complement those steps, not squabble over organization charts and who mans the security checkpoints.

Clearly, the airlines, the airports, and pilots, such as the United Airline captain I quoted earlier, are taking responsible and meaningful steps to improve safety and security. We should follow their example.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate will consider the Aviation Security Act. This bill will help restore our Nation’s confidence in commercial aviation by boosting the security in our skies and our airports.

The strengthening of cockpit doors and the deployment of sky marshals, among other security measures in this bill, are meaningful and worthwhile steps in making air travel safer.

This bill also includes a security provision to address a new problem. However, the idea is from a couple of Wiconsinites. When I held one of my listening sessions following the vicious attacks on September 11, Fire Chief James Reseburg and Deputy Police Chief Chuck Stothard suggested an idea that they thought would help make our skies safer. Part of their idea was to create a registration system through which law enforcement officials, firefighters, and emergency medical technicians could register voluntarily to serve in the event of an emergency on a commercial airplane.

For example, if an official was going on vacation on an airplane, he would simply register with the airline before-hand to notify them that he would have the skills and training to handle that flight. Like the sky marshals, only authorized airline personnel would know when one of these volunteers was on the plane. In many cases, these public servants already notify the crew when they board that they are trained for emergencies and are willing to help out in the event they are needed. They are trained to respond calmly during emergencies and can be of great assistance to an airline crew.

As many of my colleagues have stated, if the airline industry is to recover fully from the events of September 11, 2001, we must make the flying public feel safe once again in our skies. The Aviation Security Act will help us do just that.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Aviation Security Act.

On September 11, five civilian airliners from three of our nation’s airports were saved and spared the fate of war. As we were debating this legislation, our military is taking action against those who are responsible. One way to support our troops is to improve safety for all Americans. That is the goal of this legislation. This bill enables us to take three concrete actions to improve safety in our skies.

First, it federalizes airport security operations. Security is a high skill job, yet airport screeners in this country are poorly trained, and inexperienced. Many of our airport screeners make $6.00 to $7.00 an hour. That is a lower wage than many of our fast food workers receive. Our airport screeners receive minimal training. The FAA currently requires 12 hours of classroom training for our airport screeners, while France requires at least 60 hours of training. Turnover rates are also abysmal. From May 1998 through April 1999, turnover rates for workers at our nation’s nineteen largest airports averaged 126 percent, and in some instances as high as 416 percent in some instances. When morale and incentive are low, poor performance follows. FAA inspection reports reveal significant weaknesses in the performance of our airport screeners. Security inspections showed that B.W.I. ranked fifth among major airports in the number of bombs, grenades or other weapons that went undetected in federal inspections. This is not acceptable.

The GAO reports that in 1987 airport screeners missed 20 percent of the potentially dangerous used in tests, and it’s been getting worse over the past decade. That is why this legislation is so important. We have Federal officials protecting our borders and protecting our President. We also need federal officials protecting our flying public. Federal workers can be fully trained and monitored. Their primary goal would be safety, not the economic bottom line.

The Hollings bill does this by federalizing airport security operations, requiring extensive training and deploying law enforcement personnel at airport security screening locations.

The second item this bill addresses is the safety of our pilots. We all know that the safety of our pilots is critical to ensuring the safety of our passengers. The tragedies of September 11 have shown that we need to have cockpit doors and locks to prevent entry by non-flight deck crew members. This bill prohibits access to the flight deck cockpit by anyone other than a flight deck crew member and requires strengthening of cockpit doors and locks to prevent entry by non-flight deck crew members.

The third critical item this bill addresses is the expansion of the Federal Air Marshal program. On September 11, some heroic Americans on United Airlines flight 93 lost their lives as they confronted the terrorists. They prevented the plane from possibly flying into the Capitol or the White House. These brave citizens lost their lives, but perhaps they saved the lives of those of us in this chamber. We can’t ask American citizens to risk or lose their lives on airplanes. We need federal air marshals on our airplanes to protect our flying public. The Sky Marshal Program dates back to the Kennedy Administration when the concern of highjackings to Cuba was prevalent. In 1970 the program was greatly expanded to include U.S. Customs and military personnel. That program, however, was phased out. Then, in 1985 a 727 flight from Athens was diverted to Beirut, where terrorists murdered Robert Dean Stetham of Maryland. The highjackings of 1985 prompted Congress to reinstate the Federal Air Marshal program, but it’s still small and spartan. This bill would allow a federal air marshal on every domestic flight and every international flight originating in the United States.

The events of September 11 were an attack on America and an attack against humanity. We are a nation that is grief stricken, but we are not paralyzed in our determination to rid the world of terrorism. In the mean time we must act to make transportation safer in the United States. We must exhibit a sense of urgency and pass this legislation immediately.

Airline security is a crucial part of transparency, but we can't stop there. We must also improve the safety of our railroads and our ports.
We must ensure the safety of all components of our rail system, including:
tunnel security, terminal safety, bridge security and protection of our track switchboards. Over 22 million people a year ride our railroads and forty percent of all freight is transported on our rails. A terrorist attack on our rails could result in catastrophic loss of life and paralyze our economy. Amtrak iseady and willing to improve passenger rail services. A terrorist attack on our rails would enable people who have lost their jobs during this economic downturn. These workers need our help. We need to act quickly on an economic stimulus package that targets the American worker. Airline and aviation employees have been especially hard hit. 140,000 thousand of these workers have been laid off since the terrorist attacks. Unemployment is steadily rising in the industry. Last week, 528,000 people filed for unemployment.

I am confident that the airline industry and the U.S. economy will recover, but help is needed today. Senator Carnahan's amendment would provide financial assistance, training and health care coverage to employees of the airline industry who lose their jobs as a result of the attacks on September 11. The Carnahan amendment would provide income support by extending the number of weeks eligible individuals can receive unemployment insurance, from 26 weeks to 78 weeks. These cash payments would not create a strain on state budgets, because they would be funded entirely by the Federal Government. Workers who don't meet their states' requirements for unemployment insurance would not be left out. They would receive 26 weeks of federally financed unemployment insurance.

This amendment also addresses job training. Workers who may not return to their jobs within the airline industry would be eligible for retraining benefits. Other workers would be eligible for training to upgrade their skills.
This amendment would enable laid off workers to keep their health care by expanding the COBRA program. This would enable people who have lost their jobs to retain their health insurance. Madame President, I strongly support the Carnahan amendment. It is a thoughtful and comprehensive airline workers relief package. It's also a good starting point to address the needs of the resolution of the attacks on America, and provides a great model for a broader economic stimulus package.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would ask in modification that both Senators from Ohio would like to speak immediately following the vote on final passage. I am wondering: Everyone will be here. If consent is granted, we are going to have, immediately following that, two more votes on judges. It would be inappropriate for the Senator from Ohio has to be here anyway. Perhaps we could have him give his speech then.

have my first unanimous consent request approved; that is, we are going to take care of the resolution dealing with

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

that we now order the yeas and nays on both of these nominations with one show of seconds. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I alert all Members, Senator DASCHLE has the right, under the order previously entered, to call up the antiterrorism legislation. It is my understanding, having spoken to the leader not too long ago, that is his intention. Following all this, we would take up tonight the antiterrorism legislation, so everyone should be aware of that. We have four amendments in order. We have some time for general debate. It could be a long evening.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee for his leadership and effort on this very important legislation, and all the staff who have been involved. I also thank Senator ROCKEFELLER, particularly Senator HATCH, the ranking member, for her incredible efforts on this legislation.

This is an appropriate day for this legislation and the antiterrorism legislation, given that it has been 1 month since the terrorist attack. We in the Senate are taking a major step in ensuring that this kind of thing can never happen again. All of us in this body can be pleased at the effort that has been put forth on this legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank our distinguished ranking member, Senator McCAIN, for his total cooperation and leadership on this measure, along with Senator HUTCHISON of Texas and Senator ROCKEFELLER of West Virginia who lead our Aviation Subcommittee. It is not only an important safety measure but, in a sense, an airport and airline stimulus because if the House can take this up in judicious fashion, we can move forward and everyone can be assured immediately of security in air travel.

For example, the American people will know once and forever that a domestic airliner is never going to be used as a weapon of mass destruction because we will have that cockpit secured, never to be opened in flight, so that we can economize on our requirements for the military patrolling over flights, ready to shoot down a domestic airline because it cannot be hijacked in the sense of taken over and directed anywhere, beyond a particular jurisdiction or distant territory. Once that occurs, the pilots will be informed, they will land, law enforcement will be there, and that will end hijacking in America, as it exists in Israel.

It is a very important measure with which we move forward promptly. I am delighted and pleased, particularly with the cooperation I mentioned, the staffs on both sides. But the whip, Democratic whip, HARRY REID, Lord knows—I have been here 35 years; I am still 20 years younger than Strom; he was here a minute ago—he is the best whip I have seen.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me thank, once again, the distinguished Senator, Mrs. HUTCHISON of Texas. It is bipartisan, mainly because of her leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DASCHLE. I, too, compliment the distinguished chair, the ranking member, the subcommittee chair, and the ranking member for their outstanding work in getting us to this point.

A few days ago people would have been very skeptical about any prediction that this bill would be passed 100-0, but it has been passed in large measure because of their leadership, and we are grateful.

The next vote, as I think our colleagues are aware, is the resolution on the day of remembrance.

I notify Senators there are three additional votes. There will be a vote on the National Day of Remembrance. There will be two additional rollcall votes on two judges.

I ask unanimous consent that the third and fourth vote in this next sequence be limited to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, it is my hope and expectation we will take up the counterterrorism legislation tonight following these votes. It is my hope we could finish the work tonight. If we cannot, of course, we will finish the work tomorrow morning. If there is the possibility we could finish it tonight, it would be my desire not to have any votes tomorrow. So we will leave that to Senators who wish to speak and wish to debate the bill, but we will go to counterterrorism immediately following the votes to which we have just referred.

We have a lot of work yet to do tonight, and I urge Senators to stay close to the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, with regard to the schedule, I support what Senator DASCHLE is trying to do. I think we have done the right thing by moving the aviation security bill. We will have an opportunity to work on it further in conference, for those who do have concerns, but we have to say to the American people: In fact, we have to be assured we can tell the American people we have addressed this aviation security question as soon as possible.

Next week hopefully we will be able to get into conference and produce a bill. It is my hope that as soon as possible we move this counterterrorism legislation. Good work has been done in the Senate. We have pointed the way in this effort, and so I hope our colleagues will complete the bill as soon as possible. I hope all of the general debate time will not necessarily be used, although it is up to 4 hours. We also have as many as four amendments in order under the agreement that was reached. I hope we can get through that at a reasonable hour and complete the work tonight, but if it becomes evident it is going to take 4 or 5 hours to do this, then we will have to have the votes in the morning.

Even time that would begin at a relatively early hour, 9 or 9:30 a.m. Certainly Senator DASCHLE will announce that. Whether there are two or three votes, whatever it would be, we will be completed after that.

Having said that at the end of this week, if we complete action on these two bills, I think we will have done a great deal to move toward restoring the confidence of the American people. I am proud of the progress I am seeing.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I understand it is the intention, then, of the leadership to complete the counterterrorism bill this evening; is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. That is correct. We would not have votes tomorrow. We would have completed our work. I assume we could be in for morning business to accommodate Senators who may wish to speak, but it is my intention not to have any rollcall votes tomorrow.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I say to the distinguished majority leader. We must show the American people that we can pass these bills. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the country, we owe it to the President of the United States to get them.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JORDAN. Madam President, as Americans, to honor the memory of all those who died at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and the Department of the Interior.
in that lonely field in western Pennsylvania.

We have come together to tell their families they are not alone. They are part of our American family and we are with them—now in their hour of grief, and in the days and years to come.

And we have come together to say, in the strongest possible terms, that we stand with President Bush in his determination to find those who committed these hideous attacks and hold them accountable, and to destroy their global network of hate and terror.

I had the opportunity to join many of my Senate colleagues in the days after the attack to visit Ground Zero in New York City. There, in a mountain of rubble and wreckage that is beyond my ability to describe, I saw a sign on the UR solicited to issue each year a proclamation

This resolution designates September 11 is National Day of Remembrance in honor of those who lost their lives on September 11th.

We will never forget the heartbeat of those they left behind, or the stunning bravery of those who tried to save them.

And we will never forget our responsibility to find those who committed these evil acts and stop them.

That is our promise.

In the aftermath of the attacks, America has searched for words to describe the enormity of what happened. Every description has fallen short—and so we simply refer to the day: September 11th.

And we will never forget what happened on September 11th. As the days pass, and wounds heal, that we may honor the courage of those who lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001;

The resolution (S.J. Res. 25) was agreed to, as follows:

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE. This Act may be cited as the “National Day of Remembrance Act of 2001”.

SEC. 2. NATIONAL DAY OF REMEMBRANCE.

(a) DESIGNATION.—September 11 is National Day of Remembrance.

(b) PROCLAMATION.—The President is requested to issue each year a proclamation—

(1) remembering those who tragically lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001, and honoring the police, firefighters, and emergency personnel who responded with such valor on September 11, 2001;

(2) calling upon the State and local Government officials to display the flag of the United States at half mast on National Day of Remembrance in honor of those who lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001;

(3) inviting State and local governments and the people of the United States to observe National Day of Remembrance with appropriate ceremonies; and

(4) urging all people of the United States to observe a moment of silence on National Day of Remembrance in honor of those who lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks.

The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll. The result was announced—yeas 100, nays 0, as follows:

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote of the Senate in the negative.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The result was announced—yeas 100, nays 0, as follows:

In the entire first year of the first Bush administration, 1989, without all the disruptions, distractions and shifts in Senate majority that we have experienced this year through July and without the terrorist attacks of September 11, the first Court of Appeals judge was not confirmed until September 30, the third was not confirmed until November 6, and, as I have noted, the Senate never confirmed a fourth Court of Appeals judge.

In the first year of the Clinton administration, 1993, without all the disruptions, distractions and shifts in Senate majority that we have experienced this year through July and without the terrorist attacks of September 11, the first Court of Appeals judge was not confirmed until September 30, the third was not confirmed until November 6, and, as I have noted, the Senate never confirmed a fourth Court of Appeals judge.
year. Thus, in spite of everything we are more than one month ahead of the pace in 1989.

During the more than 6 years in which the Republicans most recently controlled the Senate schedule, there were no nominations in the first 3 months with only one hearing and only 12 times in almost 6½ years did the Judiciary Committee hold as many as two hearings involving judicial nominations during a month. I held two hearings in July involving judicial nominations and two unprecedented hearings in August, during the traditional recess. I held a fifth hearing in September, the sixth last week, and have scheduled a seventh hearing and second for October for next week. Thus, during the 4 months that I have been chairman with a reconstituted Judiciary Committee we will have held seven hearings involving judicial nominees and held two hearings in three of those 4 months.

A fair assessment of the circumstances of this year—in this shortened time frame of only a few months in session, with the obstruction in reorganization, the Republican objection that required all judicial nominations to be returned to the White House over the August recess, the President's unprecedented change in the process that shunted ABA peer review to the back end after the nomination, and now with the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks—the President and the Senate should be commended, not criticized, for our efforts to out pace the confirmations in the first years of the Clinton administration and the first year of the first Bush administration. Although we have redirected much of the committee work and attention to hearings and a legislative response following the terrible terrorist attacks on September 11, I have continued to hold confirmation hearings involving nominations at a pace far in excess of that maintained by my Republican predecessor.

In spite of unfair and unfounded criticism, I have continued to proceed with additional hearings and press onward as best I can to have the committee work to fulfill its role in the confirmation process. With cooperation from the White House and all Senators, both Republican and Democratic, I have no doubt that we can match and likely better the performance of the Eisenhower administration in 1989 and the Clinton administration in August recess served to complicate and delay consideration of nominations. The bumps in the road created by the events of September 11 are understandable. Similarly, President Bush's decision to delay the American Bar Association's evaluation of a judicial nominee's qualifications until the nomination is made public, has forced delays in the rest of the process as well.

As a result of this administration's breach with the 50-year-old precedent established under President Eisenhower, the confirmation process of even the least controversial and most qualified candidates is necessarily delayed by several weeks after nominations are received by the Senate. There were no District Court nominees who had been evaluated in time for the confirmation hearing I convened on July 24.

With the return to the President of the District Court nominations the President sent to the Senate in early August and delay in August recess that results from the White House's decision to change the process that had worked for more than 50 years for Republican and Democratic Presidents alike, we have continued to have a limited pool of District Court nominees available for consideration at hearings.

Likewise, this administration's failures early on to consult with Senators from both parties and to seek nominees who would enjoy broad bipartisan support remains a source of concern. We have nominees pending whom the home State Senators do not know, and with whom they are not familiar and have never met.

In spite of these difficulties, we continue to move forward and exceed the pace set by both the Bush administration in 1989 and the Clinton administration in 1993. Under Democratic leadership, the Judiciary Committee is making important strides toward reenplishing our Federal judiciary. I have adhered, and will continue to adhere, to a rigorous schedule, despite the terrorist attacks of September 11, and despite the limited opportunities provided by my not assuming the chairmanship until mid-session.

The Federal courts remain a symbol of equality and fairness for people from in peace and democracy throughout the world, and therefore, I will work diligently to keep the judicial nominations process on track.

Judge Parker will be a good addition to the bench. He has been unani-ously by the Judiciary Committee, received the highest possible review from the ABA, and comes from a distinguished family of jurists.

Justice Mills is strongly supported by his home State Senators. He literally went the extra mile and drove from Mississippi to his confirmation hearing on September 13 when the air travel system in the country was still recovering from the terrorist hijackings of September 11. I was gratified to hear Justice Mills testify that he will follow the time-honored principles of stare decisis and respect the settled law given his dissent in McMillan v.
City of Jackson. In his dissent he concluded that a protester convicted of trespassing at a family planning clinic should have been permitted to present a defense of necessity—in other words to justify his unlawful conduct by arguing that the protester had a reasonable belief that such action was necessary to prevent a significant evil.

Having received his nomination on October 11, I am proud of our record.
We have managed to work through almost half of the 54 nominations for United States Attorney in a short period. Of course, the President has yet to nominate as many as 40 United States Attorneys. I am sure he will try to work with the administration to make progress on these nominations.

I remain disturbed that the administration has yet to nominate a single United States Marshal for the 95 Districts. The United States Marshals Service is older than the Department of Justice itself and has long been an essential component in Federal law enforcement. Yet here we are in mid-
October without a single nominee. It was created by the first Congress in the Judiciary Act of 1789.

When we are calling upon the Marshal Offices and their deputies to help with security at airports, to contribute to the sky marshaling program, to provide security at Federal buildings and for the Federal courts and to protect us in so many ways, we need to take these matters seriously and move forward.

I know that Deputy Marshals from Vermont, for example, are helping with operations in Vermont and in other parts of New England to ensure airport security and to protect government oparations and all Americans. Senators can be helpful to the administration in the selection of United States Marshals and trust that the administration will begin to speed up so that we can move forward to fill these vital positions.

Today the Senate does have before it the nomination of Benigno Reyna to head the United States Marshals Servcice as its new Director. He will direct a crucial component of our Federal law enforcement family, the United States Marshals Service. In this difficult time for America in the wake of the attacks on September 11, I am pleased that we have been able to expedite his consideration by the Senate.

Having received his nomination on September 12, we proceeded to include him in a confirmation hearing on September. Even though we did not receive his nomination until September 12, we were able to move him quickly to a hearing within a week and he is being considered by the Senate less than one month after his nomination.

I thank the Acting Director of the United States Marshals Service, Louie
T. McKinney, and all of the acting
United States Marshals and Deputy Marshals from around the country for their service in the past days and weeks and for their continuing dedication and sacrifice.

I wish Director Reyna, as well as the 14 new United States Attorneys around the country success in their new challenge.

I am proud of the hard work the Judiciary Committee has been doing to confirm these and others of the President’s nominees to the Department of Justice itself and has long been an essential component in Federal law enforcement. Yet here we are in mid-
October without a single nominee. It was created by the first Congress in the Judiciary Act of 1789.

shal Offices and their deputies to help

Having received his nomination on

who will have gone through, three of whom are Democrats, whom I support. I think we have to do a better job because the Federal judiciary is one-third of the separated powers of this country. We now have 110 vacancies. With these 2, it will be 118. We have 5 judges, nominees, sitting here, not getting hearings.

I happen to appreciate the work the distinguished Senator from Vermont has done with the ones who have gone through, but we have not done nearly what we should do before the end of this particular session of Congress. I hope we can do a better job in the last week or so of this Congress to get more judges confirmed.

It isn’t a matter of politics; it is a matter of doing what is right for a third of the separated powers of our Government. I have to say, I do get a little tired of hearing that we put through as many as the first year of the Clinton administration and the last year of the Bush administration, both of which were controlled by Democrats.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Thank you, Mr. President. First, let me say to Senator LEAHY from Vermont, for those who have been confirmed. I do hope they are going to be reported out, I say thank you very much. We do appreciate that sincerely. I am convinced that Senator LEAHY, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee, working with the Senate leadership, will be having more hearings and will be reporting out additional judges. I certainly hope that is the case.

Our concern, though, is some of the statistics that I think are not disputable. For instance, since the August recess, I believe we have only confirmed two judges—one circuit, one district. I understand there have been two more reported, and we will be voting on those during this week.

I understand there has been a hearing, and maybe five more may be reported out this week, and then that they would be voted on, I assume, next week. But it is a fact that there are 110 vacancies, and there are 49 nominees pending before the committee. I believe that is right.

Mr. HATCH. Fifty-three.

Mr. LOTT. Well, I keep hearing different facts. I think in fact, there is a large number pending. But here is what really does concern me. Of the judges whose names were submitted as far back as May and June, of that group of circuit judges, which included 19 of them, and including Judge Gregory, who is a Democrat in the District of Columbia, only 3 have been confirmed. One more has been reported. And there has been 1 hearing, leaving 14 of the 19 circuit judges’ names submitted in May or early June. I understand the ABA reports on them. They have had no hearing and have not been reported.

On the circuit judges, of those who were reported in May and June, three have been confirmed. None is on the calendar. Two hearings have been completed. And there are two on which there has been no action.

So there are 16 judges—circuit and district—who have been there since May 8, 2001, the Senate’s Authorization Bill.

Having said that, I know the chairmanship changed in July, and it took time to get organized in July, and we were out in August, and we had an incident on September 11 that affected our schedule. But from Vermont and the committee have been involved in the counterterrorism.

But that is as it is.

What I have asked Senator DASCHLE and Senator LEAHY is to give me some indication of how the hearings will proceed. How the reports will proceed throughout the rest of October and into November.

You know, it is so funny. One final point.

Mr. LEAHY. Would the Senator like an answer?

Mr. LOTT. I would. One final point: It is amazing how history repeats itself. What you were saying last year are we saying this year. I guess before that, we were saying it or you were saying it.

So I would like to submit for the RECORD—and I ask unanimous consent to have this printed in the RECORD—quotes that were being offered just 1 year ago on this same subject. There were complaints from me that the Intelligence authorization bill was being held up, appropriations bills were being delayed, not enough judges were being moved.

So this is not new. But I just ask that we continue to work together to try to move the judicial nominations forward.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A YEAR AGO, IT WAS DEMOCRATS PUSHING FOR JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS

‘‘I was just a number of years in my present position and . . . I worked very hard in moving legislation, and we did not hold up legislation based on judges. We did . . . We did hold up legislation based upon judges . . . we had a right to do so, but I felt, and Senator Daschle felt as minority leader that we had an obligation to move legislation. Senator Harry Reid, Congressional Record, 10/10/2001, S10405

Compare the Majority Whip’s remarks yesterday, that the Democrats he and the then Minority Leader made a year ago when they were in the minority and their party’s president was in the White House.

EXHIBIT No. 1: On July 21, 2000, while objecting to Majority Leader Lott’s attempt to proceed to S. 2507, the Intelligence Authorization Bill, Minority Leader Daschle stated: ‘‘I hope we can accommodate this unanimous consent request for the intelligence authorization. As [does] Senator Lott, I recognize that it is important, and I hope we can address it, I also address the additional appropriations bills. There is no reason we can’t. We can find a compromise if there is a will, and I am sure there is. But we also want to make sure that we expect will probably be the final list of judicial nominees to be considered for hearings in the Judicial Committee this year. I am anxious to talk with him and work with him on that issue. All of this is interrelated, as he said, and because of that, we take it slowly.’’ [Congressional Record, S7489]

EXHIBIT No. 2: On July 24, 2000, while objecting to Senator Lott’s repeated attempts to proceed to H.R. 5442, the Authorization Bill, Minority Whip Reid stated: ‘‘I think it is unfortunate that we have been unable today to deal with [Judiciary Committee] Hearings. Let this evening or tomorrow we can sit down and talk. For example, I believe the judge’s name is White . . . who has been before the committee has not . . . In short, we hope in the meeting with Senator Hatch, either tonight or tomorrow, we will be in a position where we can expedite the rest of the work this week and move on to other things.’’ [Congressional Record, S7469]

EXHIBIT No. 3: On July 25, 2000, while discussing with Senator Domenici the delays in proceeding to the Energy and Water Appropriations Bill, Senator Reid stated: ‘‘We believe there should be certain rights protected. Also under [the] Constitution, we have a situation that was developed by our Founding Fathers in which Senators would give the executive branch—the President—recommendations for those who would serve in the judiciary. Once these recommendations were given, the President would send the names back to the Senate and we would confirm or approve those nominees. It is obvious we are having here it is very difficult to get people approved, confirmed. This has nothing to do with the energy and water bill. It does, however, have something to do with the other bills. We could have moved forward on the energy and water bill on Friday until this glitch came up.’’ [Congressional Record, S7466]

EXHIBIT No. 4: On July 25, 2000, while discussing with Senator Wellstone the need to move the Senate’s business-current status of bills under the Republican-lead Senate, Senator Reid stated: ‘‘We have a very simple situation here. We in the minority believe we have had the right to have a few judges approved by the Senate. . . . We also believe we have some appropriation bills that need to move forward, and there are some items on that, that we want to work, but there are some things that we think, in fairness, we deserve. As a result of that, things have slowed down, which is too bad.’’ [Congressional Record, S7469]

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I understand that a judge whose name was submitted in June, and had his ABA rating of ‘‘excellent’’ in July, has not had a hearing. But, as a matter of fact, he is going to have one next week. So the process is moving. I hope we will continue to get that done. But we have a lot of them who have been here since May and June on whom we do need action. I hope we can get a commitment to get that action soon.

With that, I yield for a question or comment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. The distinguished Republican leader and I have been friends for over 20 years. He is a year younger, so I think of him as still a good friend. I must admit that he is ahead of me in one area, especially: He has two grandchildren now, and will be happy to show any Senators pictures. I only have one.

But he asked where we are going to go. I will tell him there is a couple
Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, in light of the conversations just ensued, I say to the Senator from Vermont that he has done an absolutely superb job over the last month since September 11 in being able to put together the antiterrorism bill we will be considering later this evening. I, for one, think this should have been clearly the first and only priority of the committee over that period of time.

We have had this long discussion. Certainly for the period since September 11, the accomplishments of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and his colleagues on that committee in shaping that legislation and getting it before us tonight were splendid. I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Judge Barrington Parker to be United States Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit. It is a distinct pleasure for me to recommend Judge Parker to the Senate. I would like to point out that this is not the first time that the Senate has been called upon to confirm Judge Parker. On September 14, 1994, he was confirmed by the Senate to serve as judge for the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Judge Parker is a distinguished jurist. He has proven that the Senate’s confidence in his ability was well placed. He has accumulated a superb record as a Federal jurist. His career on the bench has been marked by the same character of excellence and the same principled work ethic that marked his career as a lawyer first at the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, Parker Auspitz Neesemann & Delehanty and finally at the firm of Morrison & Foerster.

I suppose we shouldn’t be surprised that Judge Parker has made such great contributions to the dignity in New York and to the Federal bench. After all, he was educated at an extraordinary college and law school in the great state of Connecticut. The time he spent at Yale equipped him to distinguish. And incidentally, his choice of residence in the State of Connecticut further demonstrates, at least to me, that he possesses excellence judgement.

Members of law enforcement sometimes refer to themselves as the “thin black line.” In a similar way, members of the judicial branch can consider the “thin black line.” Judges stand as the critical bulwarks in our society against forces that can break down a society, against injustice, against prejudice and against the neglect of individual rights. They take the high and lofty principles upon which our republic is founded and hand them down to all, the rich and the poor, the high and the low.

It has been said that the Constitution and the laws that are enacted under the Constitution comprise living, breathing documents. That is, of course, true. But it’s also true that it is the labor of people who live, professionally speaking, in the law, the students, the practitioners, and especially the adjudicators of the law, that constantly breath new life into what would otherwise be fine but ineffectual words on a page.

The rights and freedoms that we each enjoy as Americans are an inheritance, not an entitlement. They exist for us only to the degree that we are willing to struggle to retain them and to constantly define what they mean for our times.

Judges are indispensable actors in this struggle. In Judge Parker I believe we have a jurist whose experience and temperament will prove a valuable asset to the Second Circuit and the great and enduring cause of equal justice under law. Especially now, when that cause has come under unprecedented attack from acts of terror, our nation needs the commitment and service of people like Barrington Parker. Based on everything I know about Judge Parker, he meets the highest standards of judicial professionalism.

I hope and trust that the Senate will reach the same conclusion that I have reached and Judge Parker will confirm him as United States Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to respond to three points that I raised earlier this evening concerning judicial nominations. The first is the assertion that the Judiciary Committee has acted on as many nominations this year as it did during President Clinton's first year in office. That assertion is not only incorrect, but also ignores several important facts.

President Clinton nominated 32 judges before October 31, 1993, his first year in office. Twenty-eight were confirmed by a President G.H.W. Bush's presidency—89 percent—and compares to President Reagan's 100 percent rate of confirmation for nominees sent to the Senate before October 31, 1981.

Compare these rates to where we are under President Bush and Chairman LEAHY. President Bush has nominated 59 judicial nominees. Only eight have been confirmed—13 percent, including the two the Senate confirmed tonight. That's a rate of 13.5 percent. If the Senate completes this session without raising this rate to the range of 88 to 100 percent, it will be a dramatic break with precedent and a great embarrassment to this entire body. This is especially true because today we have 108 vacancies in the federal judiciary. That means that 12.6 percent of federal judgeships are unfilled. These empty seats should especially concern us in light of the enormous effort that we are making to understand the recent terrorist attacks and to prevent any future terrorist events.

Today's 12.6 percent vacancy is atypical. Compare it to the rates at the conclusion of the three Congresses when Bill Clinton was President and I was Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. At the end of the 104th Congress, the vacancy rate was 7.7 percent. At the end of the 105th, it was 5.9 percent. And last year at the end of the 106th Congress, it was 7.9 percent. Ironically, some of the same people who constantly bemoaned the judicial vacancies when Bill Clinton was President are silent today despite the much larger number of vacancies.

Mr. President, the second point to which I want to respond is the implication that the lack of a Senate organizational resolution in June of this year precluded the Judiciary Committee from holding confirmation hearings on judicial nominees during the three weeks that elapsed between June 5, the date our Democratic colleagues assumed control of the Senate, and June 29, the date the Senate reached an agreement on reorganization. That implication arises from the statement that the Committee scheduled a hearing within minutes of the Senate reorganization. I am puzzled by these remarks, because I see no reason why the Committee could not have held confirmation hearings under Democratic control prior to reorganization.

The lack of an organizational resolution did not stop other committees from holding confirmation hearings. In fact, by my count, after the change in Senate control, nine different Senate Committee Chairmen held 16 different nomination hearings for 44 different nominees before reorganization. One of these committees—Veterans' Affairs—held a mark-up on a pending nomination. But in the same period of time, the Judiciary Committee did not hold a single confirmation hearing for any of the then 39 judicial and executive branch nominees pending before us—despite the fact that some of those nominees had been waiting nearly two months.

What's more, an organizational resolution did not prevent the Judiciary Committee from holding five hearings in three weeks on a variety of other issues besides pending nominations. Between June 5 and June 27, the Committee held hearings on the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the faith-based initiative, and death penalty cases. There were also subcommittee hearings on capital punishment and on injecting political ideology into the Committee's process of reviewing judicial nominations.

Although several members were not technically on the Committee until the Senate reorganization was completed, there was no reason why Senators who were slated to become official members of the Committee upon reorganization could not have been permitted to participate in any nomination hearings. This was successfully accomplished in the case of the hearing of Attorney General John Ashcroft, which was held when the Senate was similarly situated in January of this year. So, while I appreciate the Chairman's efforts, I am compelled to clarify that neither the lack of an organizational resolution nor any other factor prevented this Committee from holding confirmation hearings in June. Consequently, there is simply no significance to the fact that the scheduling of a hearing occurred in proximity to the adoption of the different Senate reorganization resolution.

Mr. President, the third point to which I want to respond is the use of a statistic: the number of confirmations. I urge the Democrats to get to work.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the nomination of Barrington D. Parker, Jr.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Barrington D. Parker, Jr., of Connecticut, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Second District.

FEDERALIZATION OF AVIATION SECURITY

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, let me first thank Senator HOLLINGS and Senator DODD for their hard work and diligence in getting the aviation security bill passed this evening. I congratulate them for this accomplishment.

Let me also thank and commend my colleagues from Montana, Senator BURNS, for his contribution to this bill. I cosponsored and I spoke earlier today in support of his amendment to put certain aspects of aviation security in the hands of the Justice Department.

I support this effort because the Justice Department is in the law enforcement and security business. The Department has a law enforcement mindset, a security mindset, and that is the mindset, a way of thinking, that is essential to making sure our airports and aircraft are safe and our people are secure.

Having said that, the bill we passed today, though it has some very good and important provisions, also has, in my opinion, a very significant problem. That problem is the bill as currently written mandates all security functions at the Nation's major airports be handled exclusively by Federal employees. I believe this is a problem because this provision does not allow for the hiring flexibility necessary to protect the traveling public.

How can this Congress say with absolute certainty that a 100-percent federalized security force will in every case do the best job in carrying out security measures? I do not think we really can say that.

The reality is we do not know right now. Yes, we do know we need the Federal Government to be in charge at our airports, and this bill, thank Heavens, does that. I also believe strongly that flexibility is key to determining the best makeup of the security workforce. Flexibility in hiring between Federal workers and private contractors is absolutely essential.

At the same time, we need the Government to establish and enforce higher, more stringent security standards. That is clear. The Government must set the security standards. The Government must be in charge. The Government must assess the risks, set the standards, and then test compliance with those standards. The standards, yes, must be strict and they must be comprehensive.

The public demands we do this, and the public is right. That does not necessarily mean a 100-percent federalized security workforce at our airports is in every case going to be the best security; that somehow a Federal takeover and full Government presence at our airports will restore the public's confidence in air travel. Rather, higher standards and more of those standards by our Government will give the public back its trust in the system.

There are certainly gaps in our current airport security system. The way security works now is the airlines that have the biggest operations at a given airport usually are the ones responsible for hiring contract security employees. Not surprisingly, the jobs normally go to the lowest bidders. It should come as no shock that current security is not what it should be. Screeners of baggage are low-skilled, low-paid employees. Turnover is subsequently often as high as 100 percent in a given year, with the average employee today staying no longer than 6 months in that job. The fact is, unless accountability, unless there is a way to ensure the security personnel are doing their jobs, we cannot protect the traveling public. If private sector personnel are not doing the job, we will and can cancel their contract. Simple.

They have a very real and very practical incentive to do a good job.

Further, it is difficult for the Government to be in the business of "regulating security" and carrying out its actual operation. How around the world don't do it that way. Israel, with one of the best security records and one of the most dangerous terrorist-ridden parts of the world, does not do it that way. They do not do what this bill mandates.

Most nations in Europe had total federalization, and now they have changed to a mixed system. Most of the countries in Europe, as the chart indicates, contract out well over a majority of their security operation. But around the world don't do it that way. Israel, with one of the best security records and one of the most dangerous terrorist-ridden parts of the world, does not do it that way. They do not do what this bill mandates.

Israel, with one of the best security records and one of the most dangerous terrorist-ridden parts of the world, does not do it that way. They do not do what this bill mandates.

Several nations in Europe were twice as likely as their American counterparts to spot dangerous items in scanned baggage. Additionally, in European airports they have a 2.5 times greater personnel outage than in the United States. They pay more. The cost is 2½ times for security in Europe versus the United States. We see the results.

The fact is, privately contracted security personnel in Europe are seen as... professionals. They take their jobs very seriously and the public respects that. It is no secret that there is a perception problem at home at our airports about the image of the current airport screening workforce. I understand that. But the way to repair that image is by setting better standards, repair that by raising the bar.

Like the U.S. Marshals I spoke about earlier today, the men and women tasked with protecting our Federal buildings and our courtrooms, we expect them to do a fine job. The Marshal Service is able to do this great job largely because it sets high standards and then contracts out many of the functions of its security in the protection of our courthouses and courtrooms. For example, the Federal Marshall Service hires and manages about 3,300 contracted court security officers, CSOs. They are mostly, as we would expect, former law enforcement personnel who assist with the court security. That is their job and they do it very well. That blend works very well. The Marshal Service stays in charge, they are the professionals, but they contract out a portion of what they do.

There is no question we need to pay people who need to train them better, and we need to make this a professionalized workforce, one that gets respect and reflects the importance of the work they do. We need to think about things differently. The first step in doing so involves improving and enhancing security measures at our airports. That means we need better standards; we need better enforcement. I hope by the time this bill reaches the President, we will have given the executive branch more flexibility. What we really need to do is to say to the President, we will have given the executive branch more flexibility. The vast majority of these workers are Ohioans today are unemployed. There is no question the aviation sector has suffered particularly hard from this economic downturn. This hard hit right in the eye with the terrorist attack on September 11. However, as my colleagues well know, there are tens of thousands around the country who have lost their jobs in the past few months. There are tens of thousands more who are facing tough times, particularly in manufacturing States such as Ohio. There are thousands of Ohioans who lost their jobs in the steel mills, in the polymer industry, and in the auto plants. According to the most recent statistics from the Ohio Department of Jobs and Family Services, 250,000 Ohioans today are unemployed.

This figure is before September 11. Now, undoubtedly that number is larger. The vast majority of these workers would not benefit from the provisions of the Carnahan amendment. It is very important that whatever assistance Congress renders to the workers of this Nation, it is not just restricted to a set of workers. I would have offered an amendment to the airport security bill, but I felt it would delay the bill and I also felt it would be more properly a part of the economic stimulus package. I intend to offer an amendment to that package when it comes before the Senate. I hope that happens quite soon.

ALTED FISCAL PRIORITIES

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, discussions of the budget that once dominated the news headlines have been eclipsed since the world was forever changed by the horrendous events of September 11, and no one knows more about those events than the President.

Perhaps one of the most significant changes resulting from the terrorist attacks is how significantly our fiscal priorities have been altered. Almost instantly the debate shifted from how to protect the Social Security surplus to how we should spend it to pay for counterterrorism and homeland defense efforts and stimulate the economy.

By necessity, this dramatic change in our fiscal situation calls for Congress to sort out our top priorities between those that existed before September 11 and those that continue to demand our attention and our new priorities, defending our homeland, fighting terrorism, and boosting the economy. We will commit the resources that are needed to succeed in this challenge and we will obtain those resources in whatever way is necessary.

Some of my colleagues will remember that prior to the events of September 11 I was working closely with the administration and several of my colleagues on a bill to protect the Social Security surplus, control spending, and ensure debt reduction. That legislation had two exceptions: recession and war. If it had been in place, both of these exceptions would apply.

Having said that, I emphatically say to my colleagues that the need for fiscal discipline is greater now than ever before. It must not be a casualty of September 11. We must need to prioritize our spending and we still need to make hard choices. As I said, the events of September 11 changed everything, and they have also changed our fiscal outlook for years to come.

Over the past few fiscal years, sustained by peace, prosperity, and assuredness, our Nation has had record budget surpluses. Unfortunately, the existence of surpluses has had an undesirable effect. Congress has expanded the Government, created new programs, and dramatically increased spending in others. The speed at which the fiscal fortunes of the Federal Government have shifted is astounding. Almost 8 months ago, CBO projected we would run an on-budget fiscal year 2001 of $125 billion, as well as a $156 billion Social Security surplus—a total of $281 billion that was supposed to be used for debt reduction. However, on September 26, the CBO released its monthly budget review and revealed a much different story. According to the CBO, when all is said and done the total unified budget surplus in fiscal year 2001 will be $121 billion, $160 billion from the January estimate. This means Congress used $40 billion of the Social Security surplus to fund the general Government activities.

The news for fiscal year 2002 is equally sobering. Last week the Senate Budget Committee, working in a bipartisan manner, released new figures on the budget outlook for fiscal year 2002 through fiscal year 2011. The committee predicts that we are on track to spend the entire Social Security surplus in the 2002 fiscal year, and most or part of the Social Security surplus in the following year.

CARNAHAN AMENDMENT NO. 1855

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about fiscal responsibility. But I must begin, I take this moment to discuss the Carnahan amendment to the aviation security bill. First, I congratulate Senator MCCAIN and Senator HOLLINGS for the passage of the airport security bill. The passage of that bill is long overdue. It is needed to secure our airports and aviation and to build confidence in the American public.

One of the things that has gone unmentioned is most economists agree one of the best things we can do to get the economy off the ground is to get our airlines into the air.

My constituents in Ohio have a significant stake in this bill because Ohio has a significant aviation presence. In fact, with no disrespect to my good friends from North Carolina, Ohio is the birth place of aviation since the Wright brothers hailed from Dayton and honed their skills in Ohio. They just happened to test out the “flyer” at Kitty Hawk.

Today, a number of airlines have hubs in Ohio: Continental in Cleveland, Delta in Cincinnati, America West has a big presence in Columbus. In this economy, our airlines, and women working in the airline industry are hurting. I greatly appreciate the effort of my colleague from Missouri to aid them.

There is no question the aviation sector has suffered particularly hard from this economic downturn. This hard hit right in the eye with the terrorist attack on September 11. However, as my colleagues well know, there are tens of thousands around the country who have lost their jobs in the past few months. There are tens of thousands more who are facing tough times, particularly in manufacturing States such as Ohio. The news for fiscal year 2002 is equally sobering. Last week the Senate Budget Committee, working in a bipartisan manner, released new figures on the budget outlook for fiscal year 2002 through fiscal year 2011. The committee predicts that we are on track to spend the entire Social Security surplus in the 2002 fiscal year, and most or part of the Social Security surplus in the following year.
We see that on this chart. We show a $52 billion surplus, but the fact is, we are truly in deficit because we will be using $122 billion of Social Security in 2002, $125 billion in 2003, and so forth. So we are going to be using the Social Security surplus according to this chart, out to the year 2006. I remind my colleagues the projected $52 billion unified surplus is a gross exaggeration of the possible surplus this year because we have pledged we are going to use $66 to $75 billion of inflationate the economy, which means we are going to wipe out this $52 billion surplus in 2002. In fact, we are going to have to borrow the money from the public to pay for the things we want to do.

I would like to remind my colleagues the bleak budget outlook I described goes way out into future years. The Senate Budget Committee projected we will spend significant portions of Social Security surpluses, as I mentioned, in 2002 and 2003.

I further remind my colleagues that these figures on this chart, as bad as they are, do not tell the whole story. These we are showing are based on a cost-increase in spending based on inflation. Remember Congress spent 14.5 percent more in fiscal 2001 on nondefense discretionary spending than they did in fiscal year 2000. We should spend 14.5 percent more in fiscal 2001 on nondefense discretionary spending than they did in fiscal year 2000. We should have no illusions that Congress is going to spend at the rate of inflation. I don’t know if we face the time that Congress has spent money at the rate of inflation. As to these numbers on this chart, you might as well forget them. They are gone because the projections are based on inflationary increases and we know that is not going to be the case.

Our current crisis should not be used as an excuse to run up the tab for programs and projects not related to the war on terrorism or stimulating our economy. Now that we are facing an even bigger challenge, we have to prioritize our funding and make tough choices. Do our spending choices put the safety of American lives at home and abroad front and center? Will they truly boost the economy? These are the questions that should be applied to every dollar Congress spends. Our current fiscal position does not allow for any unnecessary spending. Domestic needs must be reprioritized. Those of us who have been exercising fiscal responsibility have to recommit ourselves to fiscal discipline. We have to make the tough choices to keep in check the urge to spend, keeping in mind we are spending the Nation’s Social Security money with every additional dollar that goes out the door. Once it has gone out the door, we are then going to have to borrow that money from the public.

I am concerned that some proposals being considered in this Senate are inappropriate, given the long-term budget situation. No one is hearing from me and hopefully many others about some of those proposals. If the stimulus package we put in place results in chronic budget deficits, it is going to drive up interest rates. And make no mistake about it, the financial markets are closely watching what we do. If they see Congress taking actions that will steer the Federal Government towards persistent deficits, they will drive interest rates higher. Higher interest rates will have exactly the opposite effect on the economy from what we want. They would put a brake on the economy by raising consumers’ interest payments and discouraging economic activity.

Remember, low interest rates are important to the economy. In fact, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has been quite clear about this as he has highlighted this to many of us. I think this is very important. This is not merely an academic exercise. The recent rise in long-term interest rates is attributed to the deteriorating budget condition of the Federal Government in recent weeks. As my colleagues know, Congress will consider a true stimulus package in the near future. Helping America’s workers, all workers, should be and will be a part of that package and should be our No. 1 priority.

The stimulus package can only be so big. So it is critical that we touch as many Americans as possible. All of them should participate in that economic stimulus package. That same message applies to the money we allocate to fight terrorism at home and abroad. We need to prioritize and we need to get the biggest bang for our buck, literally and figuratively.

We in this body must now lose sight that the day of reckoning with the baby boomer retirement has not been put off by our current crisis. Like it or not, the baby boomers will begin to retire in about 10 years, and if we fail to act, we will put an unacceptable burden on the young and our children. We face an important challenge in preparing for that day. Our goal should be to fund our war on terrorism at home and abroad, respond to the needs of the victims of the terrorist attack in New York and Washington, get our economy going, and as soon as possible end deficit spending. We owe it to our children and grandchildren.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the quorum call be rescinded. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation under the unanimous consent request?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, there is nothing pending before the Senate.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield to the Democratic leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator yielding.

On behalf of Senator Daschle, I now ask that the Senate consider S. 1510.

UNITING AND STRENGTHENING AMERICA ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk reads as follows:

A bill (S. 1510) to denounce and condemn terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the time agreement that we are now operating under?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 4 hours equally divided. In addition, there are 40 minutes on each of the four amendments to be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Feingold.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

I cannot help but wonder in looking at our distinguished Presiding Officer, the senior Senator from New York, how much his State has suffered. Both he and his distinguished colleague, Senator Clinton, have spoken so eloquently, both on the floor and elsewhere, about that. I know in my own private conversations with the distinguished Presiding Officer I felt the depth of his grief and emotion for a city that he obviously and unashamedly loves. His references to New York City over the years are almost similar to the kind of comments I make about Vermont. But I do note the accent is somewhat different. I assume it is because of the Vermont accent.

But I think the Senators from New York, and the Senators from New Jersey and Connecticut, have especially spoken of the effect on families and loved ones in the New York area. People who work there who are from New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, I know how sad they feel.

I think of the people who died in Pennsylvania in an airplane that was flying over the buildings we are in—this symbol of democracy. Only with a great loss of life did it not happen. But there would be an enormous disruption in our Government. The next day, the view that most people around the world have—our symbol of democracy—would be gone.

I think of the brave men and women who died, as the President and others have said, doing their duty at the Pentagon, and the hundreds—even thousands—of children who went to school happily in the morning and came home to find that they were orphans.

It was a terrible, terrible day.

I think back to what happened in Oklahoma City in 1995 and the actions we took then. We are moving, of course, much faster now than we did at that time, and I hope perhaps with more care on legislation.

We have before us the USA Act of 2001. I worked with Chairman Sensenbrenner and Congressman Conyers.
October 11, 2001

The distinguished senior Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH, and I have been working together in constant communication on this bill.

Last Thursday, October 4, I was pleased to introduce, along with the majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, and the Republican leader, Senator LOTT, also the chairmen of the Banking and Intelligence Committees, Senator BANES, Senator GRAHAM of Florida, Senator HATCH, and Senator SHELEY, the USA Act.

I must say this bill is not the bill I would have written if I were the only one writing it. I do say it is not the bill the distinguished Presiding Officer, one of the brightest and most accomplished people I know, would have written, if he were writing it. It is not the bill the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee would have written if he were writing it. It is not the bill the distinguished ranking member, Mr. HATCH, would have written when he was chairman, if he was solely writing the bill. It is really not the bill that any one of the other Members would have written. We can’t pass 100 bills.

We have tried to put together the best possible bill. Of course, Republican and Democratic colleagues must come together, and that is what we did. I should point out that this is not the bill the administration, through the Attorney General, delivered to us and asked for immediate passage. We actually did the administration a favor because rather than take the bill they dropped on us and said pass immediately, we did something that apparently they had not done. We read it and were able to refine and supplement their proposal in a number of ways. We were able to remove a number of unconstitutional parts. The administration accepted almost all of the steps that I proposed to improve our security on the Northern Border to assist our State, Federal, and local law enforcement officers and provide compensation to the victims of terrorist acts and to the public safety officers that gave their lives to protect us.

It also provides proposed checks on Government powers—checks that were not contained in the Attorney General’s initial proposal.

In negotiations with the administration, I have done my best to strike a reasonable balance between the need to address the threat of terrorism, which we all keenly feel at this time, and the need to protect our constitutional freedoms. Despite my misgivings, I have acquiesced in some of the administration’s proposals because it is important to preserve national unity in this time of national crisis and to move the legislative process forward.

We still have room for improvement. Even after the Senate passes judgment on this bill—I believe it will tonight—the debate is not going to be finished because we have to consider those important things done in the other body. What I have done throughout this time is to remember the words of Benjamin Franklin—when he literally had his neck on the line because if the Revolution had failed, he and the others would have been hanged—when he said: A people who would trade their liberty for security deserve neither.

We protected our security, but I am not going to give up our liberties that Americans have spent 220 years to obtain.

Moreover, our ability to make rapid progress was impeded because the negotiations with the Administration did not move smoothly.

On several key issues that are of particular concern to me, we had reached an agreement with the Administration on Sunday, September 30. Unfortunately, within two days, the Administration announced that it was reneging on the deal. I appreciate the complex task of considering the concerns and missions of multiple federal agencies, and that sometimes agreements must be modified as their implications are scrutinized by affected agencies. When agreements, however, are reached with the Administration, those agreements must be withdrawn and negotiations on resolved issues reopened, those in the Administration who blame the Congress for delay with what the New York Times described last week as “scorched earth remarks,” do not help the process move forward.

Hearings. We have expedited the legislative process in the Judiciary Committee to consider the Administration’s proposals. In daily news conferences, I have referred to the need for such prompt consideration. I commend him for making the time to appear before the Judiciary Committee at a hearing September 25 to respond to questions that Members from both parties have about the Administration’s initial proposals. I also thank the Attorney General for extending the hour and a half he was able to make in his schedule for the hearing for another fifteen minutes so that Senator FEINSTEIN and Senator SPECTER could question the witnesses before his departure. I regret that the Attorney General did not have the time to respond to questions from all the Members of the committee either on September 25 or last week, but again thank him for the attention he promised to give to written questions Members submitted about the legislation. We have not received answers to those written questions, but I do hope that they will be sent.

The Chairman of the Constitution Subcommittee, Senator FEINGOLD, also held an important hearing on October 3 on the civil liberties and the due process implications of the expanded surveillance powers requested by the Administration. I thank him for his assistance in illuminating these critical issues for the Senate.

Rule 14. To accede to the Administration’s request for prompt consideration of this legislation, the Leaders decided to hold the USA Act at the desk rather than refer the bill to the Committee for mark-up, as is regular practice. Sena, we passed specification to see that this occur and I support this decision. Indeed, when the Senate considered the anti-terrorism act in 1995 after the Oklahoma City bombing, we bypassed Committee in order to deal with the legislation more promptly. I fear that the urgent and pressing nature of the USA Act means it would take too long to receive a report from a Committee.

Given the expedited process that we have used to move this bill, I will take more time than usual to detail its provisions.

Victims. The heart of every American aches for those who died or have been injured because of the tragic terrorist attacks in New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania on September 11th. Even now, we cannot assess the full impact of this assault on human lives, but we know that the number of casualties is extraordinarily high.

Congress acted swiftly to help the victims of September 11th. Within 10 days, we passed legislation to establish a Victims Compensation Program, which will provide fair compensation to those most affected by this national tragedy. I am proud of our work on that legislation, which will expedite payments to thousands of Americans whose lives were so suddenly shattered.

But now more than ever, we should remember the tens of thousands of Americans whose needs are not being met—the victims of crimes that have not made the national headlines. Just one day before the events that have so transformed our nation, I came before this body to express my concern that we were not doing more for crime victims. I noted that the victims’ legislation has slowed, and that many opportunities for progress had been squandered. I suggested that this year, we had a golden opportunity to make significant progress in this area by passing S. 783, the Comey Crime Victims Assistance Act of 2001.

I am pleased, therefore, that the antiterrorism package now before the Senate contains substantial portions of S. 783 aimed at refining the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (VCOA), and improving the manner in which the Crime Victims Fund is managed and preserved. Most significantly, section 621... of the USA Act will eliminate the cap on VOCA spending, which has prevented more than $700 million in Fund deposits from reaching victims and supporting essential services.

Congress has capped spending from the Fund for the last two fiscal years, and President Bush has proposed a third cap for fiscal year 2002. These limits on VOCA spending have created a growing sense of confusion and unease by many of those concerned about the future of the Fund.

We should not be imposing artificial caps on VOCA spending while substantial unmet needs continue to exist. Section 621 of the USA Act replaces the cap with a self-regulating system that will ensure stability and protection of Fund assets, while allowing more money to be distributed to the States for victim compensation and assistance.

Other provisions included from S. 783 will also make an immediate difference in the lives of victims, including victims of terrorism. Shortly after the Oklahoma City bombing, I proposed and the Congress adopted the Victims of Terrorism Act of 1995. This legislation authorized the Office for Victims of Crime to set aside an emergency reserve of up to $50 million as part of the Crime Victims Fund. The emergency reserve was intended to serve as a “rainy day” fund to supplement compensation and assistance grants to provide emergency relief in the wake of an act of terrorism or mass violence that might otherwise overwhelm the resources of a State’s crime victim compensation program and crime victim assistance services. Last month’s disaster created vast needs that have all but depleted the reserve. Section 621 of the USA Act authorizes OVC to replenish the reserve with up to $50 million, and streamlines the mechanism for replenishing the Fund.

Another critical provision of the USA Act will enable OVC to provide more immediate and effective assistance to victims of terrorism and mass violence occurring within the United States. I proposed this measure last year as an amendment to the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act, but was compelled to drop it to achieve bipartisan consensus. I am pleased that we are finally getting it done this year.

The delay of VOCA reforms in the USA Act are long overdue. Yet, I regret that we are not doing more. In my view, we should pass the Crime Victims Assistance Act in its entirety. In addition to the provisions that are included in today’s antiterrorism package, this legislation provides for comprehensive reform of Federal law to establish enhanced rights and protections for victims of Federal crime. It also proposes several programs to help States provide better assistance for victims of State crimes.

I also regret that we have not done more for other victims of recent terrorist attacks. While all Americans are numbed by the heinous acts of September 11th, we should not forget the victims of the 1998 embassy bombings in East Africa. Eleven Americans and many Kenyan and Tanzanian nationals employed by the United States lost their lives in that tragic incident. It is my understanding that compensation to the families of these victims has in many instances fallen short. It is my hope that OVC will use a portion of the newly replenished reserve fund to remedy any inappropriately delayed cases.

Hate crimes. We cannot speak of the victims of the September 11th without also noting that Arab-Americans and Muslims in this country have become the targets of hate crimes, harassment, and intimidation. I applaud the President for speaking out against and condemning such acts, and visiting a mosque to demonstrate by action that all Americans are embraced in this country. I also commend the FBI Director for his periodic reports on the number of hate crime incidents against Arab-American and Muslims that the FBI is aggressively investigating and making clear that this is a very serious crime and will be punished.

The USA Act contains, in section 102, a sense of the Congress that crimes and discrimination against Arab and Muslims in America are condemned. Many of us would like to do more, and finally enact effective hate crimes legislation, but the Administration has asked that we postpone the debate on that legislation. One of my greatest regrets regarding the negotiations in this bill was the objections that prevented the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, S. 625, from being included in the USA Act.

State and local law enforcement. The Administration’s initial proposal was entirely focused on Federal law enforcement. Yet, we must remember that state and local law enforcement officers have critical roles to play in the immediate and effective assistance to victims of terrorism and mass violence. As a former State prosecutor, I know that our nation’s first responders are often the first line of defense in protecting our communities and our Nation. That is why I fought for the inclusion of S. 625 in the USA Act.

The Public Safety Officers’ Benefits Program provides benefits for each of the families of law enforcement officers, firefighters, and emergency response crew members who are killed or disabled in the line of duty. Current regulations, however, require the families of public safety officers who have fallen in the line of duty to go through a cumbersome and time-consuming application process. In the face of our national fight against terrorism, it is important that we provide a quick process to support families of brave Americans who selflessly give their lives so that others might live before, during and after a terrorist attack.

This provision builds on the new law championed by Senator Clinton, Senator Schumer and Congressman Nader to speed the benefit payment process for families of public safety officers killed in the line of duty in New York City, Virginia, and Western Pennsylvania, on September 11th. We have raised the total amount of Public Safety Officers’ Benefits Program payments from approximately $150,000 to $250,000. This provision retroactively goes into effect to provide much-needed relief for the families of the brave men and women who sacrificed their own lives for their fellow Americans during the year. Although this increase in benefits can never replace a family’s tragic loss, it is the right thing to do for the families of those fallen heroes. Thank you, Senator Biden and Senator Hatch for their bipartisan leadership on this provision.

Third, we expand the Department of Justice Regional Information Sharing Systems Program to promote information sharing among Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies to investigate and prosecute terrorist conspiracies and activities and authorize a doubling of funding for this year and next year. The RISS program is a nationwide law enforcement network that already allows secure communications among the more than 5,700 Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies. Effective communication is key to effective law enforcement efforts and will be essential in our national fight against terrorism.

The RISS program enables its member agencies to send secure, encrypted communications—whether within just one agency or from one to another. Federal agencies, such as the FBI, do not have this capability, but recognize the need for it. Indeed, on September 11, 2001, immediately after the terrorist attacks, FBI Headquarters called RISS officials to request ‘Smartgate’ cards and readers to secure their communications systems. The FBI agency in Philadelphia called soon after to request more ‘Smartgate’ cards and readers as well.

The Regional Information Sharing Systems Program is a proven success that we need to expand to improve secure information sharing among Federal, State and local law enforcement.
waive the FTE cap on INS personnel in order to address the national security needs of the United States on the northern border. Now more than ever, we must patrol our border vigilantly and prevent those who wish America harm from entering our country. At the same time, we must work with the Canadians to allow speedy crossing to legitimate visitors and foster the continued growth of trade which is beneficial to both countries.

In order to provide for more personnel, this bill also includes, in section 402(4), my proposal to provide $100 million in funding for both the INS and the Customs Service to improve the technology used to monitor the Northern Border and to purchase additional equipment. The bill also includes, in section 403(c), an important provision from Senator CANTWELL directing the Attorney General, in consultation with the INS, to established a National Crime Information Center database, as the Administration and I have both proposed. The Attorney General is directed to report back to the Congress in two years on progress in implementing this requirement. We have also adopted the Administration’s language, in section 413, to make it easier for the State Department to share information with foreign governments to aid in terrorism investigations.

Criminal justice improvements. The USA Act contains a number of provisions intended to improve and update the federal criminal code to address terrorism-related matters. This includes provisions to assist the FBI in translating foreign language information collected, and ensure that federal prosecutors are not hindered by conflicting local rules of procedure that prevent them from effectively pursuing their investigations.

The USA Act includes my proposals to provide the substantial and long overdue assistance for our law enforcement and border control efforts along the Northern Border. My home state of Vermont has seen huge increases in customs and INS activity since the signing of NAFTA. The number of people coming through our borders has risen steeply over the years, but our staff and our resources have not.

Proposed—and this legislation authorizes in section 402—tripling the number of Border Patrol, INS Inspectors, and customs Service employees in each of the States along the 4,000-mile Northern Border. I was gratified when 22 Senators—Democrats and Republicans—wrote to the President supporting such an increase, and I am pleased that the Administration agreed that this critical law enforcement improvement should be included in the bill. Senators CANTWELL and SCHUMER in the Committee and Senators MURRAY and DORGAN have been especially strong advocates of these provisions and I thank them for their leadership.

In addition, the USA Act, in section 401, authorizes the Attorney General to Finally, we have more carefully defined the new crime of harboring terrorists in section 804, so that it applies only to those harboring people who have committed, or are about to commit, the most serious of federal terror-related crimes, such as the possession of weapons of mass destruction. Moreover, it is not enough that the defendant had “reasonable grounds to suspect” that the person he was harboring had committed, or was about to commit, a crime: the government must prove that the defendant knew or had “reasonable grounds to believe” that this was so.

McDade fix. The massive investigation underway into who was responsible for and assisted in carrying out the September 11 attacks stretches across state and national boundaries. While the scope of the tragedy is unsurpassed, the disregard for state and national borders of this criminal conspiracy is not unusual. Federal investigations and prosecutions caused by this ill-conceived terrorism-related crimes, such as the use of weapons of mass destruction. However, it is not enough that the defendant had “reasonable grounds to suspect” that the person he was harboring had committed, or was about to commit, a crime: the government must prove that the defendant knew or had “reasonable grounds to believe” that this was so.

Another part of section 501 specifically addresses the situation in Oregon, where a state court ruling has seriously impeded the ability of Federal agents to engage in undercover operations and other covert activities. See In re Gatti, 330 Or. 517 (2000). Such activities are legitimate and essential crime-fighting tools. The Professional Standards for Government Attorneys Act ensures that these tools will be available to combat terrorism.

Finally, section 501 addresses the most pressing contemporary question of government attorney ethics—namely, the question of whether a lawyer should govern government attorneys’ communications with represented persons. It asks the Judicial Conference of the United States to submit to the Supreme Court a proposed uniform national rule to govern the area or, if the conference concludes that the need for additional national rules to govern other areas in which the proffer of local rules may interfere with effective federal law enforcement. The Rules Enabling Act process is the appropriate one for developing such rules, both because the Federal judiciary traditionally is responsible for overseeing the conduct of lawyers in Federal court proceedings, and because this process would best provide the Supreme Court an opportunity fully to consider and objectively to weigh all relevant considerations.

The problems posed to Federal law enforcement investigations and prosecutions by the McDade law are real and serious. The Professional Standards for Government Attorneys Act provides a reasonable and measured alternative: It preserves the traditional role of the State courts in regulating the conduct of attorneys licensed to practice people who have committed, or are about to commit, certain crimes, including terrorism-related crimes, such as terrorism-related crimes. See section 501 of the USA Act. Section 801 will fill this gap.

Cybercrime. The Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1030, is the federal criminal statute prohibiting computer frauds and hacking. I worked with Senator Hatch in the last Congress to make improvements to this law in the Internet Security Act, which passed the Senate as part of another bill. Our work is included in section 815 of the USA Act. That section would amend the statute to clarify the appropriate scope of federal jurisdiction. First, the bill adds a definition of “loss” to cover any reasonable cost to the victim in responding to a computer hacker. Calculation of loss is important both in determining whether the $5,000 jurisdictional hurdle in the statute is met, and, at sentencing, in calculating the appropriate guideline range and restitution amount.

Second, the bill amends the definitions of “protected computer” to include qualified computers where they are physically located outside of the United States. This clarification will preserve the ability of the United States to assist in internal hacking cases.

Biological weapons. Borrowing from a bill introduced in the last Congress by Senator BIDEN, the USA Act contains a provision in section 802 to strengthen our federal laws relating to the threat of biological weapons. Current law prohibits the possession, development, or acquisition of biological agents or toxins “for use as a weapon.” This section amends the definition of “for use as a weapon” to include all situations in which it can be proven that the defendant had any purpose other than a peaceful purpose. This will enhance the government’s ability to prosecute suspected terrorists in possession of biological agents or toxins, and conform the scope of the criminal offense in 18 U.S.C. § 175 more closely to the related forfeiture provision in 18 U.S.C. § 176. This section also contains a new statute, 18 U.S.C. § 175b, which generally makes it an offense for certain restricted persons, including non-resident aliens from countries that support international terrorism, to possess a biological agent or toxin.

Of greater consequence, section 802 defines another additional offense, punishable by up to 10 years in prison, of possessing a biological agent, toxin, or delivery system “of a type or in a..."
quantity that, under the circumstances,” is not reasonably justified by a peaceful purpose. As originally proposed by the Administration, this provision specifically stated that knowledge of whether the type or quantity of the target was established is not an element of the offense. Thus, although the burden of proof is always on the government, every person who possesses a biological agent, a chemical, or a delivery system was at some level of risk. I am pleased that the Administration agreed to drop this portion of the provision.

Nevertheless, I remain troubled by the subjectivity of the substantive standard for violation of this new criminal prohibition, and question whether it provides sufficient notice under the Constitution. I also share the concerns of the American Society for Microbiology and the Association of American Universities that this provision will have a chilling effect upon legitimate inquiry that does not have any benefit in protecting against terrorism. While we have tried to prevent against this by creating an explicit exclusion for “bona fide research,” this provision may yet prove unworkable, unconstitutional, or both. I urge the Justice Department and the research community to work together on substitute language that would provide prosecutors with a more workable tool.

Secret Service jurisdiction. Two sections of the USA Act were added at the request of the United States Secret Service, with the support of the Administration. I was pleased to accommodate the Secret Service by including these provisions in the bill to expand Electronic Crimes Task Force and to clarify the authority of the Secret Service to investigator computer crimes.

The Secret Service is committed to the development of new tools to combat the new areas of financial crime, computer fraud, and cyber-terrorism. Recognizing a need for law enforcement, private industry and academia to pool their resources, skills and revision to combat criminal elements in cyberspace, the Secret Service created the New York Electronic Crimes Task Force (NYECTF). This highly successful model is comprised of over 250 individuals, including 50 different Federal, State and local enforcement agencies, 100 private companies, and 9 universities. Since its inception in 1995, the NYECTF has successfully investigated a range of financial and electronic crimes, including credit card fraud, identify theft, bank fraud, computer systems intrusions, and e-mail threats against protectees of the Secret Service. Section 105 of the USA Act authorizes the Secret Service to develop similar task forces in cities and regions across the country where critical infrastructure may be vulnerable to the tactics from terrorists or other cyber-criminals.

Section 507 of the USA Act gives the Secret Service concurrent jurisdiction to investigate offenses under 18 U.S.C. §1030, relating to fraud and related activity in connection with computers. Prior to the 1996 amendments to the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, the Secret Service was authorized to investigate computer fraud and related activities, pursuant to an agreement between the Secretary of Treasury and the Attorney General. The 1996 amendments, however, concentrated Secret Service jurisdiction on certain specified financial fraud under section 1030. The current amendment would return full jurisdiction to the Secret Service and would allow the Justice and Treasury Departments to decide on the appropriate work-sharing balance between the two. This would enable the Secret Service to investigate a wide range of potential White House network intrusions, as well as intrusions into remote sites (outside of the White House) that could impact the safety and security of employees. It provides protection to the nation’s critical infrastructure and financial payment systems.

Counter-terrorism Fund. The USA Act also authorizes, for the first time, a counter-terrorism fund in the Treasury of the United States to reimburse Justice Department for any costs incurred in connection with the fight against terrorism. Specifically, this counter-terrorism fund will: (1) reestablish an office or facility that has been damaged as the result of any domestic or international terrorism incident; (2) provide support to counter, investigate, or prosecute domestic or international terrorism, including paying rewards in connection with these activities; (3) conduct terrorism threat assessments of Federal agencies; and (4) for costs incurred in connection with detaining individuals who are accused of acts of terrorism in violation of United States law.

I first authored this counter-terrorism fund in the S. 1319, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act, which Senator HATCH and I introduced in August. Enhanced surveillance procedures. The USA Act provides enhanced surveillance procedures for the investigation of terrorism and other crimes. The challenge before us has been to strike a reasonable balance to protect both security and the liberties of our people. In some respects, the changes made are appropriate and important ones to update our surveillance and investigative procedures in light of new technology and experience with current law. Yet, in other respects, I have deep concerns that we may be increasing surveillance powers and the sharing of criminal justice information without adequate checks on how information may be handled and without adequate accountability in the form of judicial review.

The bill contains a number of sensible proposals that should not be controversial. Wiretap predicates. For example, sections 201 and 202 of the USA Act would add to the list of crimes that may be used as predicates for wiretaps certain offenses which are specifically tailored to the terrorist threat. In addition to crimes that relate directly to terrorism, the list would include crimes of computer fraud and abuse, which are committed by terrorists to support and advance their illegal objectives.

FISA roving wiretaps. While the amendment, in section 206, would authorize the use of roving wiretaps in the course of a foreign intelligence investigation and brings FISA into line with criminal procedures that allow surveillance to follow a person, rather than requiring a separate court order identifying each telephone company or other communication common carrier whose assistance is needed. This is a matter on which the Attorney General and I reached early agreement. This is the kind of change that has a compelling justification, because it recognizes the case in which targets of investigations can evade surveillance by changing phones. In fact, the original roving wiretap authority for use in criminal investigations was enacted as part of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA) in 1986. I was proud to be the primary Senate sponsor of that earlier law.

Paralleling the statutory rules applicable to criminal investigations, the formulation I originally proposed made clear that this new authority must be requested in the application before the FISA court was authorized to order such roving surveillance authority. Indeed, the Administration agrees that the FISA court may not grant such authority sua sponte. Nevertheless, we have accepted the Administration’s formulation of the new roving wiretap authority, which requires the FISA court to make a finding that the actions of the person whose communications are to be intercepted may be expected to be in connection with the identification of a specified facility or place. While no amendment is made to the statutory directions for what must be included in the application for a FISA electronic surveillance order, these applications should include the necessary information to support the FISA court’s finding that roving wiretap authority is warranted.

Search warrants. The USA Act, in section 219, authorizes nationwide serv- ership of judicial checks on how warrant in investigations. This will allow the judge who is most familiar with the developments in a fast-breaking and complex terrorism investigation to make determinations of probable cause, no matter where the property to be searched is located. This will not only save time by avoiding having to bring up-to-speed another judge in another jurisdiction where the property is located, but also serves privacy and Fourth Amendment interests in ensuring that the most knowledgeable judge makes the determination of probable cause. The bill, in section 209, also authorizes voice mail messages to be seized on the authority of a probable cause search warrant rather than through the more burdensome and time-consuming process of a wiretap.

Electronic records. The bill updates the laws pertaining to electronic records. Specifically, in section 210, the bill authorizes the nationwide service of subpoenas for subscriber information and expands the list of items subject to subpoenas to include the means and source of payment for the service.

Second, in section 211, the bill equalizes the standard for law enforcement access to cable subscriber records on the same basis as other electronic records. The Cable Communications Policy Act, passed in 1984 to regulate various aspects of the cable television industry, did not take into account the changes in technology that have occurred over the last fifteen years. Cable television companies now often provide Internet access and telephone services in addition to television programming. This amendment clarifies that a cable company may disclose the contents of a customer's communications in search of disclosure, however, in no way creates response to legal process. In those cases where the risk of death or injury is imminent, the law should not require providers to sit idly by. This voluntary disclosure, however, in no way creates an affirmative obligation to review customer communications in search of such imminent dangers.

Also, under existing law, a provider (even one providing services to the public) may disclose the contents of a customer's communications—e.g., law enforcement, or anyone else—in order to protect its rights or property. See 18 U.S.C. §2703(c)(1)(B). However, the current statute does not expressly permit a provider voluntarily to disclose non-content records (such as a subscriber's login records) to law enforcement for purposes of self-protection. See 18 U.S.C. §2703(c)(1)(B). Yet the right to disclose the content of communications does not provide a corresponding intrusive ability to disclose non-content records. Cf. United States v. Aufer, 539 F.2d 642, 646 n.9 (7th Cir. 1976) (phone company's authority to monitor and disclose conversations to protect against fraud necessarily implies right to commit lesser invasion of using, and disclosing fruits of, pen register device) (citing United States v. Freeman, 524 F.2d 337, 341 (7th Cir. 1975)). Moreover, as a practical matter providers must have the right to disclose the facts surrounding attacks on their systems. When a telephone carrier is defrauded by a subscriber, or when an ISP's authorized user launches a network intrusion against his own ISP, the provider must have the legal ability to record the events or the course of the crime to law enforcement. The bill clarifies that service providers have the statutory authority to make such disclosures.

Pen registers. There is consensus that the existing legal procedures for pen register and trap-and-trace authority are antiquated and need to be updated. I have been proposing ways to update the pen register and trap and trace statute for several years, but not necessarily in the same ways as the Administration initially proposed. In fact, in 1998, I introduced with then-Senator Ashcroft, the E-PRIVACY Act, S. 2067, which proposed changes in the pen register laws. In 1999, I introduced the E-RIGHTS Act, S. 934, also with proposals to update the pen register laws.

Again, in the last Congress, I introduced the Internet Security Act, S. 2430, on April 13, 2000, that proposed (1) changes at the cellular carrier. If these carriers do not agree to this provision, they necessarily implies the less intrusive orders in multiple federal jurisdictions; (2) clarifying that such devices can be used for computer transmissions to obtain electronic addressess, not just on telephone lines; and (3) as a guard against abuse, providing for meaningful judicial review of government attorney applications for pen registers and trap and trace devices.

As the outline of my earlier legislation suggests, I have long supported modernizing the pen register and trap and trace device laws by modifying the statutory language to cover the use of these orders on computer transmissions; to remove the jurisdictional limits on service of these orders; and to update the judicial review procedure, which, unlike any other area in criminal procedure, bars the exercise of judicial de-these electronic communications while they were in progress. In order to evade arrest, however, Mitnick moved around the country and used cloned cellular phones and other evasive techniques. His hacking attacks would often pass through one or two cellular carriers, a local PSTN, sometimes fractional parts of an PSTN, and two Internet service providers. In this situation, where investigators and service providers had to act quickly to trace Mitnick in the act of hacking, only many repeated attempts—accompanied by an ever increasing service provider—finally produced success. Fortunately, Mitnick was such a persistent hacker that he gave law enforcement many chances to complete the trace.

This duplicative process of obtaining a separate order for each link in the communications chain can be quite time-consuming, and it serves no useful purpose since the original court has already authorized the trace. Moreover, a second or third order addressed to a different carrier that carried part of a prior communication may prove useless during the next attack: in computer intrusion cases, for example, the target may use an entirely different path (i.e., utilize a different set of intermediary service providers) for his or her subsequent activity.

The bill would modify the pen register and trap and trace statutes to allow for nationwide service of a single order for installation of these devices, without the necessity of returning to court for each new carrier. I support this change.

Second, the language of the existing statute is hopelessly out of date and speaks of a pen register or trap and trace “device” being “attached” to a telephone “line.” However, the rapid computerization of the telephone system has changed the tracing process. No longer are such functions normally accomplished by physical hardware components attached to telephone lines. Instead, these functions are typically performed by computerized collection and retention of call routing information passing through a communications system.

The statute’s definition of a “pen register” as a “device” that is “attached” to a particular “telephone line” is particularly obsolete when applied to the wireless portion of a cellular phone call, which has no line to which it can be attached. While courts have authorized pen register orders for wireless phones based on the notion of obtaining access to a “virtual line,” updating the law to keep pace with current technology is a better course.

Moreover, the statute is ill-equipped to facilitate the tracing of communications that take place over the Internet. For example, the pen register definition refers to telephone “numbers” rather than the broader concept of a user’s communications account. Although pen register and trap orders have been obtained for activity on computer networks, Internet service providers have challenged the application of the statute to electronic communications, frustrating legitimate investigations. I have long supported updating the statute by removing words such as “numbers . . . dialed” that do not apply to electronic devices. These devices are used and to clarify the statute’s proper application to tracing communications in an electronic environment, but in a manner that is technologically neutral and does not capture the content of communications. That being said, I have been concerned about the FBI and Justice Department’s insistence over the past few years that the pen/trap devices statutes be updated with a broad, undefined terms that continue to flame concerns that these laws will be used to intercept private communications content.

The Administration’s initial pen/trap device proposal added the terms “routing,” and “addressing” to the definitions described above. Information that was authorized for interception on the low relevance standard under these laws. The Administration and the Department of Justice flatly rejected my suggestion that these terms be defined to respond to concerns that the new terms might encompass content, which may be captured only upon a showing of probable cause, not the mere relevancy of the pen/trap statute. Instead, the Administration agreed that the definition should explicitly exclude the use of pen/trap devices to intercept “content,” which is broadly defined in 18 U.S.C. 2510(8).

While this is an improvement, the FBI and Justice Department are short-sighted in their refusal to define these terms. We should be clear about the consequence of not providing definitions for these new terms in the pen/trap device statutes. These terms will be defined, if not by the Congress, then by the courts in the context of criminal cases where these devices have been used and challenged by defendants. If a court determines that a pen register has captured “content,” which the FBI admits such devices do, in violation of the Fourth Amendment, suppression may be ordered, not only of the pen register evidence but any other evidence derived from it. We are leaving the courts with little or no guidance of what is covered by “addressing” or “routing.”

The bill also requires the government to use reasonably available technology that limits the intercepts under the pen/trap device laws “so as not to include the contents of any wire or electronic communications.” This limitation on the technology used by the government to execute pen/trap orders is important since, as the FBI advised me June, 2000, pen register devices “do capture all electronic impulses transmitted by the facility on which they are attached, including impulses transmitted after a phone call is connected to the called party.” The impulses made after the call is connected could reflect the electronic banking transactions a caller makes, or the electronic ordering from a catalogue that a customer makes over the telephone, or the electronic ordering of a prescription drug.

This transactional data intercepted after a phone call is transmitted is “content.” As the Justice Department explained in May, 1998 in a letter to House Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde, “the retrieval of the electronic impulses that a caller necessarily generates in attempting to directly the phone call” does not constitute a “search” requiring probable cause since “no part of the substantive information transmitted after the caller had reached the called party” is obtained. But the Justice Department made clear that “all of the information transmitted after a phone call is connected to the called party . . . is substantive in nature. These electronic impulses are the ‘contents’ of the call: They are not used to direct or process the call, but instead convey certain messages to the recipient.”

When I added the direction on use of reasonably available technology (codified as 18 U.S.C. 3121(e)) to the pen register statute as part of the Community Assistance to Law Enforcement Act (CALEA) in 1994, I recognized that these devices collected content and that such collection was unconstitutional on the mere relevance standard. Nevertheless, the FBI advised me in June, 2000 that these devices for telephone services “continue to operate as they have for decades” and that there had been no change . . . that would better restrict the recording or decoding of electronic or other impulses to the dialing and signaling information utilized in call processing. Perhaps, if there were meaningful judicial review and accountability, the FBI would take the statutory direction more seriously and actually implement it.

Judicial review. Due in significant part to the fact that pen/trap devices in use today collect “content,” I have sought in legislation introduced over the past few years to update and modify the judicial review procedure for pen register and trap and trace devices. Existing law requires an attorney for the government to certify that the information likely to be obtained by the installation of a pen register or trap device will not be used as part of an ongoing criminal investigation. The court is required to issue an order upon seeing the prosecutor’s certification. The court is not authorized to look behind the certification to evaluate the judgment of the prosecutor, as we have urged that government attorneys be required to include facts about their investigations in their applications for pen/trap orders and allow courts to grant such orders only where the facts support the relevancy of the information likely to be obtained by the orders. This is not a change in the applicable standard, which would remain the very low relevancy standard.
Instead, this change would simply allow the court to evaluate the facts presented by a prosecutor, and, if it finds that the facts support the government's assertion that the information to be collected will be relevant, issue the order. Under this change, it would place an additional burden on law enforcement, it will allow the courts a greater ability to assure that government attorneys are using such orders properly.

Some have called this change a "roll-back" in the statute, as if the concept of allowing meaningful judicial review was an extreme position. To the contrary, this is a change that the Clinton Administration supported in legislation transmitted to the Congress last year. This is a change that the House Judiciary Committee also supported last year. In the Electronic Communications Privacy Act, H.R. 5018, that Committee proposed that before a pen/trap order be ordered by the court, the government must first demonstrate to an independent judge that 'specific and articulable facts reasonably indicate that a crime has been, is being, or will be committed, and information likely to be obtained by such surveillance and use ... is relevant to an investigation of that crime.' (Report 106-932, 106th Cong, 2d Sess., Oct. 4, 2000, p. 13).

Unfortunately, the Bush Administration has taken a contrary position and has rejected this change in the judicial review process.

Computer trespasser. Currently, an owner or operator of a computer that is accessed by a hacker as a means for the hacker to reach a third computer, cannot simply consent to law enforcement monitoring of the computer. Instead, because the owner or operator is not technically a party to the communications, law enforcement needs wiretap authorization under Title III to conduct such monitoring. I have long been interested in closing this loophole. For example, in June, 2000, when I asked about this problem, the FBI explained to me that the FBI explained to me in June, 2000, that:

'This anomaly in the law creates an untenable situation whereby providers are sometimes forced to sit idly by as they witness hackers enter and, in some situations, destroy or damage their systems and networks while law enforcement begins the detailed process of seeking court authorization to assist them. In the real world, the situation is akin to a homeowner being forced to helplessly watch a burglar or vandal while police are forced to sit idly by as they witness the theft. In the real world, the situation is an impossible one whereby providers are sometimes forced to sit idly by as they witness hackers enter and, in some situations, destroy or damage their systems and networks while law enforcement begins the detailed process of seeking court authorization to assist them. In the real world, the situation is akin to a homeowner being forced to helplessly watch a burglar or vandal while police are forced to sit idly by as they witness the theft.'

I therefore introduced as part of the Internet Security Act, S. 2430, in 2000, an exception to the wiretap statute that would explicitly permit such monitoring without a wiretap if prior consent is obtained from the person whose computer is being hacked through and used to send 'harmful interference to a lawfully operating computer system.'

The Administration initially proposed a different formulation of the exception that would have allowed an owner/operator of any computer connected to the Internet to consent to FBI wiretapping of any user who violated a workplace computer use policy or online service term of service and was thereby an "unauthorized" user. The Administration's proposal was not limited to computer hacking offenses under 18 U.S.C. 1030 or to conduct that endangers a computer system. The Administration rejected these refinements to their proposed wiretap exception, but did agree, in section 217 of the USA Act, to limit the authority for wiretapping with the consent of the owner/operator to communications of unauthorized users without an existing subscriber or other contractual relationship with the owner/operator.

Sharing criminal justice information. The USA Act will make significant changes in the sharing of confidential criminal justice information with various Federal agencies. For those of us who have been concerned about the leaks from the FBI that can irrevocably damage reputations of innocent people investigating possible violations of law by alerting suspects to flee or destroy material evidence, the Administration's insistence on the broadest authority to disseminate such information, without any judicial check, is disturbing. Nonetheless, I believe we have improved the Administration's initial proposal in responsible ways. Only time will tell whether the improvements we were able to reach agreement on are sufficient.

At the outset, we should be clear that current law allows the sharing of confidential criminal justice information, but with close court supervision. Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e) provides that matters occurring before a grand jury may be disclosed only to an attorney for the government, such other government personnel as are necessary to assist the attorney and another grand jury. Further disclosure is also allowed as specifically authorized by a court.

Similarly, section 2517 of title 18, United States Code provides that wiretap evidence may be disclosed in testimony during official proceedings and to investigative or law enforcement officers as are necessary to assist the attorney and another grand jury. Further disclosure is also allowed as specifically authorized by a court.

Disclosure of wiretap information. The Administration initially proposed adding a sweeping provision to the wiretap statute that broadened the definition of an "investigative or law enforcement officer" who may receive disclosures of information obtained through wiretaps to include federal law enforcement, intelligence, national security, national defense, immigration and President and Vice President.

This proposal troubled me because information intercepted by a wiretap has enormous potential to infringe upon the privacy of innocent people who are not even suspected of a crime and merely happen to speak on the telephone with the targets of an investigation. For this reason, the authority to disclose information obtained through a wiretap has always been carefully circumscribed in law.

While I recognize that appropriate officials in the executive branch of government should have access to wiretap information that is important to combating terrorism or protecting national security, I proposed allowing such disclosures where specifically authorized by a court order. Further, with respect to information relating to terrorism, I proposed allowing the disclosure without a court order as long as the judge who authorized the wiretap was notified as soon as practicable after the fact. This would have provided a check against abuses of the disclosure authority by providing for immediate judicial review.

For this reason, and others, the Justice Department at the time opposed an amendment proposed by Senators Kyl and Feinstein to S. 2507, the "Intelligence Authorization Act for FY 2001" that would have allowed the sharing of foreign intelligence and counter-intelligence information collected from wiretaps with the intelligence community. I deferred to the Justice Department on this issue and sought changes in the proposed amendment to address the Department's concern that this provision was not only unnecessary but also "could have significant implications for prosecutions and the discovery process in litigation", "raises significant issues regarding the sharing with intelligence agencies of information collected about United States persons" and jeopardized the "need to protect equities relating to ongoing criminal investigations." In the end, the amendment was revised to address the Justice Department's concerns and passed the Senate as a free-standing bill. S. 3205, the Counterterrorism Act of 2000. The House took no action on this legislation.

On Sunday, September 30, the Administration agreed to my proposal, but within two days, it backed away from its agreement. I remain concerned that the resulting provision will allow the unprecedented, widespread disclosure of this highly sensitive information without any notification to the Attorney General and supervises the wiretap. This is clearly an area where our Committee will have to exercise close oversight to make sure that the newly-minted disclosure authority is not being abused. The Administration offered three reasons for reneging on the original deal. First, they claimed that the involvement of the court would inhibit Federal investigators and attorneys from disclosing information needed by intelligence and national security officials. Second, they said the courts might not have adequate security and therefore should not be told that information gathered for intelligence or national security purposes. And third, they said the President’s constitutional powers under Article II give him authority to get whatever foreign intelligence he needs to exercise his national security responsibilities. I believe these concerns are unfounded. Federal investigators and attorneys will recognize the need to disclose information relevant to terrorism investigations. Courts can be trusted to keep secrets and recognize the needs of the third branch of government.

Current law requires that such information be used only for law enforcement purpose. This provides an assurance that highly intrusive invasions of privacy are confined to the purpose for which they have been approved by a court, based on probable cause, as required by the Fourth Amendment. Current law calls for minimization procedures to ensure that the surveillance does not gather information about private and personal conduct and conversations that are not relevant to the criminal investigation.

When the Administration reneged on the agreement regarding court supervision, we turned to other safeguards and were more successful in changing other questionable features of the Administration’s bill. The Administration accepted my proposal to strike the term “national security” from the description of wiretap information that may be disclosed throughout the intelligence and foreign intelligence information to officials in the executive branch beyond those already authorized to receive such disclosures. Once again, the Administration agreed to my proposal on Sunday, September 30, but reneged within two days. As a result, the bill does not provide for any judicial supervision of the new authorization for dissemination of grand jury information. The Administration has not been able to provide a fully satisfactory explanation of its scope.

If there are specific laws that the Administration believes impede the necessary sharing of information on terrorism and foreign intelligence within the executive branch, we should address those problems through legislation that is narrowly targeted to those statutes. Tacking on a blunderbuss provision whose scope we do not fully understand can only lead to consequences that we cannot foresee. Further, I am concerned that such legislation, broadly authorizing the secret sharing of intelligence information throughout the executive branch, will fuel the unwarranted fears and dark theories that some do not trust their government. This was another provision of which the Administration reneged on its agreement with me; it agreed to drop it on September 30, but resurrected it within two days, insisting that it remain in the bill. I have been able to mitigate its potential for abuse somewhat by adding the same safeguards that apply to disclosure of law enforcement wiretap and grand jury information.

Another issue that has caused me serious concern relates to the Administration’s proposal for so-called “sneak and peek” search warrants. The House Judiciary Committee dropped this proposal entirely from its version of the legislation. Normally, when law enforcement officers execute a search warrant, they must leave a copy of the warrant and a receipt for all property seized at the premises searched. Thus, even if the owner of the premises is not present, the owner will receive notice that the search occurred. For example, burglars.

Two circuit courts of appeal, the Second and the Ninth Circuits, have recognized a limited exception to this requirement. When specifically authorized by the issuing judge or magistrate, the officers may delay providing notice of the search to avoid compromising an ongoing investigation or for some other good reason. However, this authority has been carefully circumscribed.

First, the Second and Ninth Circuit cases have dealt only with situations where the officers search a premises without seizing any tangible property. As the Second Circuit explained, such searches are “less intrusive than a conventional search with physical seizure because the latter deprives the owner immediately of possession and use of his property.” United States v. Villegas, 899 F.2d 1324, 1324 (9th Cir. 1990).
Second, the cases have required that the officers seeking the warrant must show good reason for the delay. Finally, while the courts have allowed notice of the search may be delayed, it must be provided within a reasonable period thereafter, which should generally be no more than seven days. The reasons for these careful limitations were spelled out succinctly by Judge Sneed of the Ninth Circuit: “The mere thought of strangers walking through and perusing the contents of our privacy interest, our home, arouses our passion for freedom as does nothing else. That passion, the true source of the Fourth Amendment, demands that surreptitious entries be closely circumscribed.” United States v. Freitas, 800 F.2d 1451, 1456 (9th Cir. 1986).

The Administration’s original proposal would have ignored some of the key limitations created by the caselaw on sneaky and peek warrants. First, it would have broadly authorized officers not only to conduct surreptitious searches, but also to secretly seize any type of property without any additional showing of necessity. This type of warrant, which has never been addressed by a published decision of a federal appellate court, has been referred to in a law review article written by an FBI agent as a “sneak and steal” warrant. See K. Correia, Sneaky But Lawful: The Use of Sneak and Peek Search Warrants,” 43 U. Kan. L. Rev. 1103, 1113 (1995). Second, the proposal would simply have adopted the procedural requirements of 18 U.S. C. §2705 for providing delayed notice of a warrant. Among other things, this would have extended the permissible period of delay to a maximum of 90 days, instead of the presumptive seven-day period provided by the caselaw on days, instead of the presumptive seven-day period provided by the caselaw.

I was able to make significant improvements in the Administration’s original proposal that will help to ensure that the government’s authority to obtain a sneak and peek warrant is not abused. First, the proposal that is now in section 213 of the bill prohibits the government from seizing any tangible property or any wire or electronic communication or stored electronic information unless it makes a showing of reasonable necessity for the seizure. Thus, in contrast to the Administration’s original proposal, the presumption is that the warrant will authorize only a search unless the government can show reasonable necessity for a search. Second, the provision now requires that notice be given within a reasonable time of the execution of the warrant rather than giving a blanket authorization for up to a year. What constitutes a reasonable time, of course, will depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. But I would expect courts to be guided by the teachings of the Second and the Ninth Circuits that, in the ordinary case, a reasonable time is no more than seven days.

FISA. Several changes in the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) are designed to clarify technical aspects of the statutory framework and take account of experience in practical implementation. These changes are not controversial, and they will facilitate the collection of intelligence for counterintelligence and counterterrorism purposes. Other changes are more significant and required careful evaluation and revision of the Administration’s proposals.

Duration of surveillance. The USA Act, in section 267, changes the duration of electronic surveillance under FISA in cases of an agent of a foreign power, other than a United States persons, who acts in the United States as an officer or employee of a foreign power or as a member of an international terrorist group. Current law limits court orders in these cases to 90 days, the same duration as for United States persons. Experience indicates, however, that after the initial period has confirmed probable cause that the foreign power is involved in terrorism or other national security law violations, the government has a legitimate need for additional time to gather information and evidence. Therefore, the bill changes the initial period of the surveillance 90 days to 120 days and changes the period for extensions from 90 days to one year. The initial 120-day period provides for a review of the results of the surveillance or search directed at an individual before one-year extensions are requested. These changes do not affect surveillance of a United States person.

The bill also changes the period for execution of a warrant for physical search under FISA from 45 to 90 days. This change applies to United States persons as well as foreign nationals. Experience since physical search authority was added to FISA in 1994 indicates that 45 days is frequently not long enough to plan and carry out a covert physical search. There is no change in the restrictions which provide that United States persons may not be the targets of search or surveillance unless the government finds probable cause to believe that they are agents of foreign powers who engage in international terrorism, sabotages, or clandestine intelligence activities that may involve a violation of the criminal statutes of the United States. FISA judges. The bill in section 206 seeks to ensure that the special court established under FISA has sufficient judges to handle the workload. While changing the duration of orders and extensions will reduce the number of cases in some categories, the bill retains the court’s role in pen register and trap and trace cases and expands the court’s responsibility for issuing orders for records and other tangible items needed for counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations. Upon reviewing the court’s requirements, the Administration requested an increase in the number of federal district judges designated for the court from seven to 11 of whom no less than 3 shall reside within 20 miles of the District of Columbia. The latter provision ensures that more than one judge is available to handle cases on short notice and reduces the need to invoke the alternative of Attorney General approval under the emergency authorities in FISA.

Agent of a foreign power standard. Other changes in FISA are related national security laws are more controversial. In several areas, the bill reflects a serious effort to accommodate the requests for expanded surveillance and investigative techniques and the apprehension of intelligence about the lawful political or commercial activities of Americans. One of the most difficult issues was whether to eliminate the existing statutory “foreign power” standards for surveillance and investigative techniques that raise important privacy concerns, but not at the level that the Supreme Court has held to require a court order and a probable cause finding under the Fourth Amendment. These include pen register and trap and trace devices, access to business records and other tangible items held by third parties, and access to records that have statutory privilege. The bill makes the gathering of intelligence about the lawful political or commercial activities of Americans. The agent of a foreign power standard in existing law was designed to ensure that the FBI and other intelligence agencies do not use these surveillance and investigative methods to gather information about the activities of Americans in the name of an undefined authority to collect foreign intelligence or counterintelligence information, but do not gather information about the reasonable suspicion, less than probable cause, to believe that a United States person is an “agent of a foreign power” engaged in international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.

However, the “agent of a foreign power” standard is more stringent than the standard under comparable criminal law enforcement procedures which require only a showing of reasonable suspicion. The FBI’s experience under existing laws since they were enacted at various time over the past 15 years has been that, in practice, the requirement to show reasonable suspicion that a person is an “agent of a foreign power” has been almost as burdensome as the requirement to show probable cause required by the Fourth Amendment for more intrusive techniques. The FBI has made a clear case that a reliance on “reasonable suspicion” is appropriate for counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations, as well as for criminal investigations.
The challenge, then, was to define those investigations. The alternative proposed by the Administration was to cover any investigation to obtain foreign intelligence information. This was extremely broad, because the definition was based only on the information with respect to a foreign power that relates to, and if concerning a United States person is necessary to, the national defense or the security of the United States or the conduct of the foreign affairs of the United States. This goes beyond FBI counterintelligence and counterterrorism requirements. Instead, the bill requires that use of the surveillance technique or access to the records concerning a United States person be relevant to an investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.

In addition, an investigation of a United States person may not be based solely on activities protected by the First Amendment. This framework applies to both pen registers and trap and trace under section 215, access to records and other items under section 215, and the national security authorities for access to telephone, bank, and credit records under section 506. Laws that protect Americans against the government may not be the basis for FBI counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations under these provisions.

A separate issue for pen registers and trap and trace under FISA is whether the court should have the discretion to make the decision on relevance. The Administration has insisted on a certification process. I discussed this issue as it comes up in the criminal procedures for pen registers and trap and trace under title 18, and my concerns apply to the FISA procedures as well.

The purpose of FISA. The most controversial change in FISA requested by the Administration was the proposal to allow the Attorney General and his successors to detain aliens suspected of terrorist activity while deportation proceedings were ongoing. In response to a question by Senator SPECTER, the Attorney General said: “Our intention is to be able to detain individuals who are the subject of deportation proceedings on other grounds, to detain them as if they were the subject of deportation proceedings on terrorism.” The Justice Department, however, continued to insist on broader authority, including some of the provisions of the law that were found not to be deportable.

I remain concerned about the proviso, in section 412, but I believe that it has been improved from the original proposal offered by the Administration. The Justice Department must now charge an alien with an immigration or criminal violation within seven days of taking custody, and the Attorney General’s certification of an alien under this section is subject to judicial review. Second, if an alien is found not to be deportable, then the Attorney General must release the alien from custody. Third, the Attorney General can only delegate the power to certify an alien to the Deputy Attorney General, ensuring greater accountability and preventing the certification decision from being made by low-level officials. Despite these improvements, I would have preferred that this provision not be included, and I would urge the Attorney General and his successors to exercise great discretion in using this new power.

In addition, the Administration initially proposed a sweeping definition of terrorist activity and new powers for the Secretary of State to designate an organization as a terrorist organization for purposes of immigration law. We were able to work with the Administration to refine this definition to limit its application to individuals who had innocent contacts with non-designated organizations. We also limited the retroactive effect of these new definitions. If an alien solicited funds or membership, or provided material support for an organization that was not designated at the time by the Secretary of State, then the opportunity to show that he did not know and should have known that his acts would further the organization’s terrorist activity. This is substantially better than the administration’s proposal, which, in my opinion, would have expanded the INS to target someone who raised money for the African National Congress in the 1980s.

Throughout our negotiations on these issues, Senator KENNEDY provided steadfast leadership. Although neither of us are pleased with the final product, it is far better than it would have been without his active involvement.

Trade Sanctions. I was disappointed that the Administration’s initial proposal authorizing the President to impose unilateral food and medical sanctions would have undermined a law we passed last year with overwhelming bipartisan support. As a result, the law, the President already has full authority to impose unilateral food and medicine sanctions during this crisis because of two exceptions built into the law that apply to our current situation. Nevertheless, the Administration sought to undo this law and obtain virtually unlimited authority in the future to impose food and medicine embargoes, without making any effort for a multi-lateral approach in cooperation with other nations. Absent such a multi-lateral approach, other nations will be forced to step in immediately and take over business from American firms and farmers that they are unilaterally barred from pursuing.

Over 30 farm and export groups, including the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Grocery Manufacturers of America, the National Farmers Union, and the U.S. Dairy Export Council, wrote to me and explained that the Administration proposal would “not achieve its intended policy goal.” I worked with Senator ENZI, and other Senators, on substitute language to give the Administration the tools it needs in this crisis. This substitute has been carefully crafted to avoid needlessly hurting American farmers in the future, yet it will assure that the U.S. can engage in effective multilateral sanctions.

This bipartisan agreement limits the authority in the bill to existing laws and executive orders, which give the President full authority regarding this conflict, and grants authority for the President to restrict exports of agricultural products, medicine or medical devices. I continue to agree with then-Senator Ashcroft who argued in 1999 that unilateral U.S. food and medicine sanctions simply do not work when he introduced the “Food and Medicine for the World Act.”

As recently as October 2000, then-Senator Ashcroft pointed out how broad, unilateral embargoes of food or medicine are often counterproductive. Many Republican and Democratic Senators just last year that the U.S. should work with other countries on food and medical sanctions so that the sanctions will be effective in hurting our enemies, instead of just hurting the U.S. I am glad that with Senator Enzi, we were able to make changes in the trade sanctions provision to both protect our farmers and help the President during this crisis.

Money Laundering. Title III of the USA Act consists of a bipartisan bill that was reported out of the Banking Committee on October 4, 2001. I commend the Chairman and Ranking Member of that Committee, Senators Sarbanes and Gramm, for working together to produce a balanced and effective package of measures to combat international money laundering and the financing of terrorism.

I am pleased that the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Banking Committee agreed to our inclusion in the managers’ amendment of a small change to a provision of title III, section 319, relating to forfeiture of funds in United States interbank accounts. As reported by the Banking Committee, this provision included language suggesting that in a criminal case, the government may have authority to seek a pretrial restraining order in substitute assets. In fact, as all but one of the circuit courts to consider the issue have held, the government has no such authority. The managers’ amendment strikes the offending language from section 319.

Another provision added as part of the Banking Committee title—section 351—is far more troubling. Section 351 creates a new Bank Secrecy Act offense involving the bulk smuggling of more than $10,000 in currency in any conveyance, article of luggage or merchandise or container, either into or out of the United States. The obvious purpose of this provision is to circumvent the Supreme Court’s decision in United States v. Bajakajian, 118 S. Ct. 2029 (1998), which held that a “punitive" forfeiture violates the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of the offense it is designed to punish.

In fact, the crime created in section 351—willfully evading a currency reporting requirement by concealing and transporting more than $10,000 across a U.S. border—is no different than the crime at issue in Bajakajian—willfully evading a currency reporting requirement involving more than $10,000 across a U.S. border. A forfeiture that is “grossly disproportional” with respect to the latter will inevitably be found “grossly disproportional” with respect to the former. The new element of “concealment” does little or nothing to bolster the government’s claim to forfeiture of the unreported currency, since this element is already implicit in the current crime of evasion: It is hardly likely that a person who has in the process of willfully evading the currency reporting requirement will be waiving his currency around for all the world to see.

Conclusion. I have done my best not to sound as if I am thanking especially Senator Kennedy for his leadership on the Immigration parts of the bill. My efforts have not been completely successful and there are a number of provisions on which the Administration has insisted with which I disagree. Frankly, the agreement of September 30, 2001 would have led to a better balanced bill. I could not stop the Administration from reneging on the agreement any more than I could stop the process to reconstitute this bill in the aftermath of those breaches. In these times we need to work together to face the challenges of international terrorism. I have sought to do so in good faith.

Mr. President, the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who stands up?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I enjoyed the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Vermont. I compliment him for the work he has done on this bill and for the hard work, over the last 3 weeks, that he and his staff have put into this bill, as well as other members of the Judiciary Committee as a whole, and, of course, people on my side as well.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take very long, but our colleagues are tired, and I know they would like to go home. I also know that we have a distinguished colleague in the Chamber who has some amendments on which we may have to vote.

Four weeks ago we were in a relatively tranquil nation, but on September 11, in what amounted to a dastardly attack, an unprovoked attack of war, the World Trade Center was destroyed, along with almost 6,000 people, or maybe more. Our Pentagon was struck by a volitionary act of terrorism.

As a result of the acts of heroes, one of the planes was downed in Pennsylvan-via, killing all aboard, including those heroes who made sure that that plane did not strike either the Capitol or the White House. I want to pay special tribute to those people who were so heroic as to give up their own lives to protect the lives of so many others.

There have been so many acts of heroism and self-sacrifice—the firefighters who gave their lives, the firefighters who worked day and night, the volunteers who have gone in there, the people in New York City, the Governor, and so many others who deserve mention.

This bill, hopefully, will help to at least rectify and redeem some of the problems, problems that have existed ever since September 11.

We did not seek this war; it was thrust upon us. It was an unprovoked attack by people who claim that they represent a religious point of view. In fact, what they represent is a complete distortion of the religion of Islam.

Islamic people do not believe in murder, murdering innocent civilians. The Koran does not teach that. They do not believe in suicide. The Koran does not teach that.

This is not a war against Islam; this is a war against terrorism and people who have so little regard for human life, that they would do something against innocent civilians that was unthinkable before September 11.

Therefore, we live in a dangerous and difficult world today. It is a different world. And we are going to have to wake up, and do the things we have to do to protect our citizenry and, of course, to protect the rest of the world to the extent this great Nation can, with the help of other nations, a number of which have become supportive of war efforts. We are very grateful to them.

But a lot of people do not realize we have terror cells in this country—that has been in the media even—and there are groups in this country that are dedicated to the overthrow of America. There are people who are dedicated to terrorism right here within our Nation. And some of these people who have participated in this matter may very well be people who were rightfully in our Nation—or at least we thought were rightfully in our Nation.

The responsibility of redeeming and rectifying this situation is the responsibility of the Congress, the Justice Department, the FBI, and the Border Patrol. It is our job to provide the tools, and for them to first identify and then eradicate terrorist activity within our borders. And our President has taken the extraordinary step of saying we are going to go after terrorists worldwide and those who harbor them.

I agree with the President. I think it is time to do it. It is time to hit them where it hurts. It is time to let them know we are not going to put up with this type of activity.

A few weeks ago, the Justice Department sent up its legislative proposal. It was a good legislative proposal. They had a lot of ideas in there that literally we have been trying to get through for years. When we passed the 1996 antiterrorism, effective death penalty act, a number of us tried to get some of these tools at that time, but we were unsuccessful for a variety of reasons, some very sincere.

The fact is, a lot of the provisions we have in the bill are not brand new; a lot of them have been requested for years and have been in play, but we might have been able to interdict these terrorists and have stopped what happened and have stopped the loss of civil liberties for approximately 6,000 or more people.

In the past several weeks, after the Justice Department sent up its bill, Senator LEAHY and I, Justice Department officials, White House officials, staff members from both of our staffs, and staff members from other members of the Senate have worked day and night to come up with this particular bill.

I congratulate my partner and my colleague, Senator LEAHY, for his hard work and his staffs for the work they have done on this bill, and, of course, my own staffers, and, of course, those others I have named.

This has been a very difficult bill to put forward because there are all kinds of cross-pressures, all kinds of ideas, all kinds of different philosophies. We believe, with all kinds of deliberation and work, we have been able to put together a bill that really makes a difference, that will give the Justice Department the tools it needs to be able to work and stamp out terrorist activity within our country. At least we want to give them the very best tools we possibly can.

We have tried to accommodate the concerns of Senators on both sides of the aisle. We have worked very hard to do so. We cannot accommodate everybody’s concerns. As Senator LEAHY and I might mention that this bill enforces the laws that are currently on the books which govern our society, at least to the extent that we can, from these types of terrorist activities.

Of course, little things, such as pen registers, trap-and-trace authority—we have been able to resolve these problems after years of problems.

I would like to make a few comments regarding the process for this legislation. Although we have considered this legislation in a more expedited manner than other legislation, my colleagues can be assured that this bill has received thorough consideration. First, the fact is that the bulk of these proposals have been requested by the Department of Justice for years, and have languished in Congress for years because we have been unable to muster the collective political will to enact them into law.

No one can say whether these tools could have prevented the attacks of September 11. But, as the Attorney General has said, it is certain that without these tools, we did not stop the vicious acts of last month. I say to my colleagues, Mr. President, that if these tools could help us now to track down the perpetrators and help us in our continued pursuit of terrorist activities within our national borders then we should not hesitate any further to put these reforms into law. As long as these reforms are consistent with our Constitution and in the interest of our national security, it is difficult to see why anyone would oppose their passage.

Furthermore, I would like to clearly dispel the myth that the reforms in this legislation somehow abridge the Constitutional freedoms enjoyed by law-abiding American citizens. Some press reports have portrayed this issue as a choice between individual liberties on the one hand, and, on the other hand, enhanced powers for our law enforcement agencies. It is a false dichotomy. We should all take comfort that the reforms in this bill are primarily directed at allowing law enforcement agents to work smarter and more efficiently—in no case do they put new, hybrid criminals in play—by the FBI, after obtaining a court order further studies.

In this new war, terrorists are a hybrid between domestic criminals and international agents. We must lower the barriers that discourage our law enforcement and intelligence agencies from working together to stop these terrorist activities.

We need to pursue all solid investigative leads that exist right now that our law enforcement agencies would be unable to pursue because they must continue to work within these outdated laws. It is high time that we update our laws so that our law enforcement agencies can deal with the world as it is, rather than the world as it existed 20 years ago.

Second, this bill updates the laws relating to electronic surveillance. Electronic surveillance, conducted under the supervision of a federal judge, is one of the most powerful tools at the disposal of our laws enforcement community. It is simply a disgrace that we have not acted to modernize the laws currently on the books which govern such surveillance, laws that were enacted before the fax machine came into common usage. By doing so, we can prevent acts of terrorism against our citizens.

In this new war, terrorists are a hybrid between domestic criminals and international agents. We must lower the barriers that discourage our law enforcement and intelligence agencies from working together to stop these terrorist activities.

Two principal tools used by the terrorists to conduct their activities are e-mail and instant messaging. The Department of Justice has asked us for years to update our laws to reflect the new technologies, but there has always been a call to go slow, to seek more information, to order further studies.

This is no hypothetical problem. We now know that e-mail, cellular telephones, and the Internet have been principal tools used by the terrorists to conduct their activities.

We need to pursue all solid investigatory leads that exist right now that our law enforcement agencies would be unable to pursue because they must continue to work within these outdated laws. It is high time that we update our laws so that our law enforcement agencies can deal with the world as it is, rather than the world as it existed 20 years ago.

A good example of why we have to modernize our laws in order to keep up with current law enforcement agencies relates to devices called “pen registers.” Pen registers may be employed by the FBI, after obtaining a court order, to determine what telephone numbers are being dialed from a particular telephone. These devices are essential in investigating illegal activities, which allow law enforcement agents to determine who is speaking to whom, within a criminal conspiracy.

on your call is connected, the numbers you dial into your telephone are not private. Because you have no reasonable expectation that such numbers will be kept private, they are not protected under the Constitution. The Smith holding was cited with approval by the Supreme Court just earlier this year.

The legislation under consideration today would make clear what the Federal courts have already ruled—that Federal judges may grant pen register authorization to cover, not just telephones, but other more modern modes of communication such as e-mail or instant messaging. Let me make clear that the bill does not allow law enforcement to receive the content of the communication, but they can receive the addressing information to identify the computer or computers a suspect is using to further his criminal activity.

Importantly, reform of the pen register order does not allow—as has sometimes been misreported in the press—for law enforcement agents to view the content of any e-mail messages—not even the subject line of e-mails. In addition, this legislation we are considering makes it explicit that content cannot be collected through such pen register orders.

This legislation also allows judges to enter pen register orders with nationwide scope. Nationwide jurisdiction for pen register orders makes common sense. It helps law enforcement agents efficiently identify communications facilities throughout the country, which greatly enhances the ability of law enforcement to identify quickly other members of a criminal organization, such as a terrorist cell.

Moreover, this legislation provides our intelligence community with the same authority to use pen register devices, under the auspices of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, that the government has to wiretap a terrorist activity or persuade others to support terrorist activity, or those who provide material support to terrorist organizations. If we are to fight terrorism, we cannot allow those who support terrorism to remain in our country. Also, I should note that we have worked hard to provide the State Department and the INS the tools they need to ensure that no applicant for admission who is a terrorist is able to secure entry into the United States through legal channels.

Finally, the bill gives law enforcement agencies powerful tools to attack the financial infrastructure of terrorism giving our Government the ability to choke off the financing that these dangerous terrorist organizations need to survive. It criminalizes the practice of harboring terrorists, and puts teeth in the laws against providing material support to terrorists and terrorist organizations. It gives the President expanded authority to freeze the assets of terrorists and terrorist organizations, and provides for the eventual seizure of such assets. These tools are vital to our ability to effectively wage the war against terrorism, and ultimately to win it.

There have been few, if any, times in our nation’s great history where an event has brought home to so many of our citizens, so quickly, and in such a graphic fashion, a sense of our vulnerability to unexpected attack. I believe we all took some comfort when President Bush promised us that our law enforcement institutions would have the tools necessary to protect us from the danger that we are only just beginning to perceive.

The Attorney General has told us what tools he needs. We have taken the time to review the problems with our current laws, and to reflect on their solutions. The time to act is now. Let us please move forward expeditiously, and give those who are in the business of protecting us the tools that they need to do the job.

Mr. President, I think most people understand this is an important bill. All of us understand it needs to be done. All of us understand that these are tools our law enforcement people deserve and need to have. And, frankly, it makes sense to provide the tools whereby we might be able—and in most cases should be able—to resolve even those types of problems.

So with that, I am happy to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Durbin). Who yields time?

The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise in very strong support of S. 1510, the Uniting and Strengthening America Act of 2001, and in particular, Title III of S. 1510, the International Money Laundering Abatement and Anti-Terrorist Financing Act of 2001.

Title III was reported out of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, which I am privileged to chair, a week ago today by a unanimous vote of 21 to 0.

President Bush said on September 24: “We have launched a strike on the financial foundation of the global terror network.”

Title III of our comprehensive anti-terrorism package supplies the armament for that strike. Osama bin Laden may have boasted that “al-Qaeda [includes] modern, educated youth who are aware of the cracks inside the western financial system, aware of the lines in their hands.” With Title III, we are sealing up those cracks.

Title III contains, among other things, authority to take targeted action against countries, institutions, transactions, or types of accounts the Secretary of the Treasury finds to be of “primary money-laundering concern.” It also contains requirements for due diligence standards directed at corresponding accounts opened at U.S. correspondent banks and foreign banks and banks in jurisdictions that have been found to fall significantly below international anti-money laundering standards.

It contains a bar on the maintenance of U.S. correspondent accounts for offshore shell banks—those banks that have no physical presence or employees anywhere, and that are not part of a regulated and recognized banking company. There is also a requirement that financial institutions establish anti-money laundering programs.

Title III also contains several provisions that should enhance the ability of the Government to share more specific information with banks, and the ability of banks to share information with one another relating to potential terrorist or money-laundering activities, and a large number of important technical improvements in anti-money laundering laws as well as amendments to the Department of the Treasury to act or formulate recommendations to improve our anti-money laundering programs.

The problem of money laundering is not a new one. There have been significant efforts for some time in Congress to cut the financial lifelines on which criminal operations depend. Senator John Kerry’s exhaustive investigation nearly a decade ago into the collapse of a shady institution called BCCI, which he found was established with “the specific purpose of evading regulation or control by governments,” led him to introduce anti-money laundering legislation. A bill similar to his was approved last year by the Banking Committee of the House of Representatives on a 31 to 1 vote.

Recent investigations by Senator Carl Levin’s Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations produced two bills which zero in on the ways criminals use financial institutions to launder funds and how we can counter these activities. Senator Levin’s report demonstrates dramatically how correspondent banking facilities and private banking services impede financial transparency and hide foreign client identity and activity, thereby contributing to international money laundering.

Senator Charles Grassley has also advocated for stronger money laundering legislation, and sponsored the Money Laundering and Financial Crimes Strategy Act of 1998, which mandates the development of an annual national money laundering strategy.

Two weeks ago we held our own hearings in the Banking Committee. We heard from a number of expert witnesses and from Under Secretary of the Treasury Gurule; Assistant Attorney General Chertoff; and Ambassador Stuart Eizenstat, the former Deputy Secretary of the Treasury.

On October 4, the Banking Committee marked-up and reported out our own bill. The committee print was built on the framework given to us by Senators Kerry, Levin, Grassley, and by others in this institution.

Before describing the provisions of Title III in greater detail, I want to thank all members of the Banking Committee for their contributions to this legislation. As I indicated, it came out of the committee on a vote of 21 to 0. The Ranking Member, Senator Gramm, provided crucial support. He raised certain issues which were addressed in the provisions involving, among other things, important due process protections. Senators Stabenow and Johnson were instrumental in producing a compromise to resolve a dispute over one of the package’s most important provisions. Senator Enzi contributed his experience as an accountant in refining another critical provision.

Senator Survivor, who has been involved in past efforts to address money laundering activities, played an important role, as did Senators Allard, Bayh, Corzine, and Carnahan, who offered amendments and contributed important improvements to various parts of the subtitle.

I am deeply grateful to all of the members of the committee for their strong, positive, and constructive contributions and for their willingness to work day and night. It is my understanding that the committee staff went three consecutive nights without any sleep in order to prepare this legislation. This is carefully considered legislation because it reflects and builds upon efforts which have been made over a long period of time.

Earlier today, our colleagues on the Financial Services Committee in the House of Representatives marked-up a bill, many of the provisions of which are identical or virtually identical to those contained in Title III of the package now before us.

Public support across the country for anti-money laundering legislation is extremely strong. Jim Hoagland put it plainly in the Washington Post:

‘‘This crisis is an opportunity to force American and international banks to clean up concealment and laundering practices they now tolerate or encourage and which terrorism can exploit.’’

Terrorist attacks require major investments of time, planning, training, practice, and financial resources to pay the bills. Money laundering is the transmission belt that gives terrorists the resources to carry out their campaigns of commerce. We intend, with Title III, to end that transmission belt and its ability to bring resources to the networks that enable terrorists to carry out their campaigns of violence.

Title III addresses all aspects of our defenses against money laundering. Those defenses generally fall into three parts. The first is the Bank Secrecy Act, ‘‘BSA,’’ passed in 1970. It requires financial institutions to keep standardized transaction records and report suspicious activities and suspicious transactions and mandates reporting of the movement of more than $10,000 in currency into or out of the country. The statute is called the ‘‘bank secrecy act’’ because it bars bank secrecy in America, by preventing financial institutions from maintaining opaque records, or discarding their records altogether. Secrecy is the hiding place for crime, and Congress has barred our institutions from allowing those hiding places. The second part of the BSA, which include banks, broker-dealers, casinos, and non-bank transmitters of funds, currency exchangers, and check cashers—all financial services businesses through which our citizens—and criminals hiding as legitimate citizens—can move funds into and through our economy. Unfortunately, reporting regulations covering some of these institutions have not yet been promulgated.

The second part of our money laundering defenses are the criminal statutes first enacted in 1986 that make it a crime to launder money and allow criminal and civil fines for money laundering offenses.

The third part is the statutory framework that allows information to be communicated to and between law enforcement officials. Our goal must be to assure—to the greatest extent consistent with reasonable privacy protections—that the necessary information can be used by the right persons in ‘‘real time’’ to cut off terrorism and crime.

block all transactions, but in which we will want to do more than simply advisory financial institutions about under-regulated foreign financial institutions or holes in foreign counter-money laundering efforts. Former Deputy Secretary Eizenstat testified before the Congress that adding this tool to the Sectary's arsenal was essential.

Section 312 focuses on another aspect of the fight against money laundering, the financial institutions that are on the front lines making the initial deci-

in a response to a request for an employment reference by a bank, about the possible involvement of a former institution-affiliated party in potentially unlawful activity, and creates a safe harbor from civil liability for the bank that includes such information in response to an employment reference request, except in the case of malicious intent. Given its different focus, it is not my intention to similarly limit a bank’s safe harbor from civil liability for the filing of suspicious activity reports under the Bank Secrecy Act.

Section 340 contains amendments to various provisions of the Bank Secrecy Act, the Right to Financial Privacy Act, and the Fair Credit Reporting Act, to permit information subject to those statutes to be used in the conduct of United States intelligence or counterintelligence activities to protect against international terrorism.

The modernization of our money laundering laws represented by Subtitle I is long overdue. It is not the work of one week or one weekend, but represents a successful bipartisan effort to produce a piece of prudent legislation. The case taken in producing the legislation extends to several provisions calling for reporting on the legislation’s effect and a provision for a three-year review of the legislation’s effectiveness.

Subtitle A—International Counter-Money Laundering and Related Measures

Sec. 311. Gives the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with other senior government officials (in the Secretary’s discretion) to impose one or more of five new “special measures” against foreign jurisdictions, entities, transactions and accounts, as a matter of policy, in consultation with other senior federal officials, determine to pose a “primary money laundering concern” to the United States. The special measures include: (1) requiring the identification, record keeping or reporting for particular transactions, (2) requiring the identification of the foreign beneficial owners of certain accounts at a financial institution, (3) requiring the identification of customers of a foreign bank who use an interbank correspondent account opened by that foreign bank at a U.S. bank, and (5) after consultation with the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, restrict or prohibit or maintain the maintenance of certain interbank correspondent or payable-through accounts. Measures 1-4 may not be imposed, other than by regulation, for a period of two years unless only by regulation. Also requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the appropriate Federal banking agencies, the Council of Economic Advisers, within 180 days of the date of enactment, recommendations for the most effective way to require foreign nationals opening a U.S. bank account to provide identification comparable to that required when U.S. citizens open a bank account.

Sec. 312. Requires a U.S. financial institution that maintains a correspondent account or private banking account for a foreign bank to enter into correspondent banking relationships with banks that operate under offshore banking licenses or under banking licenses issued by countries that are considered non-cooperative with international counter money laundering principles, or (b) have been the subject of special measures authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain anti-money laundering due diligence standards for maintenance of private banking accounts by U.S. financial institutions.

Sec. 313. Bars depository institutions and broker-dealers operating in the United States from establishing, maintaining, administering, or managing correspondent or payable-through accounts with banks that operate under offshore banking licenses or under banking licenses issued by countries that are considered non-cooperative with international counter money laundering principles, or (b) have been the subject of special measures authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain anti-money laundering due diligence standards for maintenance of private banking accounts by U.S. financial institutions.

Sec. 314. Requires the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations to encourage cooperation among financial institutions, financial regulators and law enforcement officials to combat money laundering and related terrorist offenses.

Sec. 315. Expands the list of specified unlawful activities under 18 U.S.C. 1956 and 1957 to include the financing of terrorism offenses, certain United States export control violations, and misuse of funds of the IMF.

Sec. 316. Establishes procedures to protect the rights of persons whose property may be subject to confiscation in the exercise of the government’s anti-terrorism authority.

Sec. 317. Gives the Attorney General authority, in the interest of justice and consistent with the United States’ national interest, to suspend a forfeiture proceeding based on that presumption. Requires U.S. financial institutions to reply to a request for information from a U.S. regulator relating to anti-money laundering principles.

Sec. 318. Treats amounts deposited by foreign banks in interbank accounts with U.S. banks as having been deposited in the United States for purposes of the forfeiture rules, but grants the Attorney General authority, in the interest of justice and consistent with the United States’ national interest, to suspend a forfeiture proceeding based on that presumption.

Sec. 320. Permits the United States to institute forfeiture proceedings against the proceeds of foreign criminal offenses found in the United States.

Sec. 322. Extends the prohibition against the maintenance of a forfeiture proceedings on behalf of a fugitive to include a proceeding by a corporation whose majority shareholder is a fugitive and a proceeding in which the corporation’s claims is instituted by a fugitive.

Sec. 323. Permits the government to seek a restraining order to preserve the availability of property subject to a foreign forfeiture or confiscation judgment.

Sec. 324. Increases from $100,000 to $1,000,000 the maximum civil and criminal penalties for a violation of provisions added to Title I of the Bank Secrecy Act by sections 311 and 312 of the Act.

Sec. 325. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Attorney General, the Federal banking agencies, the SEC, the CFTC and other appropriate agencies to evaluate operation of the provisions of Subtitle A of Title II of the Act and recommends to Congress legislative action, within 30 months of the date of enactment.

Sec. 326. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report annually to the Senate Banking Committee and House Financial Services Committee on measures taken pursuant to Subtitle A of Title II of the Act.

Sec. 327. Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations concerning the maintenance of concentration accounts by U.S. depository institutions to prevent an institution’s customers from anonymously directing funds into or through such accounts. Sec. 330. SUBTITLE B. CURRENCY TRANSACTION REPORTING AMENDMENTS AND RELATED IMPROVEMENTS

Sec. 331. Clarifies the terms of the safe harbor from civil liability for the bank to an employment reference request, except in the case of malicious intent.

Sec. 332. Requires financial institutions to establish anti-money laundering programs and grants the Secretary of the Treasury authority to set minimum standards for such programs.

Sec. 333. Clarifies that penalties for violation of the Bank Secrecy Act and its implementing regulations also apply to violation of Geographic Targeting Orders issued under 31 U.S.C. 5326, and to certain recordkeeping requirements relating to funds transfers. Otherwise clarifies and updates certain provisions of 31 U.S.C. 5326 relating to Geographic Targeting Orders.

Sec. 334. Adds “money laundering related to terrorist funding” to the list of subjects to be dealt with in the annual National Money Laundering Strategy prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to the “Money Laundering and Financial Crimes Strategy Act of 1998.

Sec. 337. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal bank regulatory agencies to submit reports to Congress, one year after the date of enactment, containing recommendations on possible legislation to conform the penalties imposed on depository institutions for violations of the Bank Secrecy Act with penalties imposed on such institutions under Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Sec. 338. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury, after consultation with the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Reserve Board, to promulgate regulations, within 270 days of the date of enactment, requiring broker-dealers to file suspicious activity reports pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 5318(g).

Sec. 339. Clarifies that the Bank Secrecy Act treats certain underground banking systems as financial institutions, and that the underlying transacting parties applicable to licensed money transmitters also apply to such underground systems. Sec. 340. Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct the United States Executive Director of each of the international financial institutions (for example, the IMF and the World Bank) to use such Director’s “voice and vote” to support loans and other use of resources to benefit nations that the President determines to be contributing to United States efforts to combat international terrorism, and to require the auditing of each international financial institution to ensure that funds are not paid to persons engaged in terrorism.

SUBTITLE C. CURRENCY CRIMES

SUBTITLE E. MISCELLANEOUS

Sec. 371. Expands the SEC’s emergency order authority.

Sec. 372. Creates uniform protection standards for Federal Reserve facilities.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, the senior Senator from Maryland, Mr. SARBANES. He did unbelievable work in this committee to get the anti-money laundering bill—a very complex and difficult subject. He did it unambiguously. I believe, in a committee that probably has as diverse a membership—that is an understatement—as one might find. I compliment him and thank him for his kind words.

I reserve the remainder of my time. I see the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee here, who wishes to give his opening statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I conferred with Senator DASCHLE a few minutes ago. It is his desire—so there is no misunderstanding of the Members—that a number of opening statements be given: The Senator from Florida, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, and we understand Senator STABENOW wishes to speak, and there may be a couple of other opening statements.

As soon as that is done, we are going to turn to Senator FEINGOLD to offer the first of his amendments. After that, there will be a vote on the first Feingold amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the senior Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I wish to commend Senators DASCHLE and LOTT for their leadership in bringing this critical piece of legislation to the Senate just 1 month after the horrific events of September 11. Senators LEAHY and HATCH also deserve credit for moving quickly to shape the judiciary components of this bill and choreograph other provisions, including those affecting the intelligence agencies.

My remarks will focus on title IX of this legislation, which is entitled “Improved Intelligence,” as well as the other provisions in the bill that directly affect the mission of the agencies of the intelligence community.

Title IX is derived from S. 1448, legislation which was developed within the intelligence community, entitled “Intelligence to Prevent Terrorism Act of 2001.”

Since long before September 11, I have been working with members of the committee, particularly Senators FEINSTEIN and KYL, on comprehensive counterterrorism legislation. Most of the provisions of our bill, with some changes requested by the administration, have now become title IX of S. 1510.

The provisions in title IX, as well as other provisions in the bill, are designed to accomplish a daunting but not impossible task. That task is to change the cultures within the Federal law enforcement and intelligence agencies—primarily the FBI and the CIA—so they work seamlessly together for the good of the American people.

Both the FBI and the CIA are very good. They are the standards of the world in their own missions. But those missions are very different. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is goal oriented. A criminal case has a beginning, a middle, and an end. In a case that has developed the guilty party, the end is a conviction for the crime committed. The information collected during a criminal case is held closely because its purpose is to result in the successful prosecution of an event that occurred in the past—not to inform thinking about what may happen now or in the future.

The Central Intelligence Agency, on the other hand, as well as its other companions in the intelligence community, has a global approach, literally... and figuratively. The CIA is restricted to activities outside the United States of America. The CIA collects information on a worldwide basis, and it processes that information, analyzes that information, and it places it in the hands of policymakers. Its customers are other Federal agencies and senior policymakers, including the President of the United States. The purpose of that information is to allow those senior policymakers to make more informed decisions.

Given the threats we now face, the cultures growing out of these different missions must be melded. We cannot fight terrorism by putting yellow tape around a bomb site, calling it a crime scene, collecting evidence, and proceeding to trial frequently years later. We must put the evidence collected after such an event to work for us in real time so we can predict and prevent the next attack. If there is a single goal that the intelligence components of this antiterrorism bill, it is to change the focus from responding to acts that have already occurred to preventing the acts which threaten the lives of American citizens in this country and abroad.

It is critical that all information lawfully available to the Federal Government be used efficiently and effectively to fight terrorism. We cannot continue to use critical information only in a criminal trial. Any information collected must be available to intelligence officials to inform their operational initiatives so as to prevent the next attack.

Also, in line with these provisions of S. 1510 are designed to change the way information is handled within the Federal Government. For example, section 203 permits law enforcement to share information collected in grand jury proceedings and from title III criminal wiretaps with intelligence agencies. Current law, as it has been interpreted, prevents that sharing, except in very limited circumstances.

Section 905 further complements section 203 in that it requires law enforcement officers, FBI agents, and the Justice Department prosecutors to provide foreign intelligence derived in the course of a criminal investigation, including grand jury, criminal wiretaps, FBI interviews, and the like, to the Central Intelligence Agency and to other intelligence agencies.

A “permissive” approach is not good enough under current circumstances. Too many lives have been lost. Too many lives are at risk. Law enforcement sharing of information with the intelligence agencies must be mandatory.

Section 906 further complements this legislation by providing the training of law enforcement officers at the Federal, State, and local agencies so they will be better equipped to recognize foreign intelligence information when they see it, and to get it to the right place on a timely basis.

Let me give a couple of hypothetical but eerily-close-to-reality examples. It is likely that there are, tonight, grand juries meeting at various places in the United States to deal with issues related to the events of September 11. Witnesses may be providing information—information about training camps in Afghanistan, ground warfare techniques in Somalia and the Taliban, the types and quantity of weapons available. This type of information will be critical for the military—critical for the military now, not 2 years from now when these cases might go to trial.

Another example is in the area of wiretaps. Let me just take two wiretaps. One has been issued under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act because there was a finding by a Federal judge that there was credible evidence that the telephone was being used by an agent of a foreign power.

In the course of listening to the wiretap, this conversation comes across: I am planning to fly from a specifically designated city in Nicaragua to a city in Texas. I am going to take my flight a week from Monday. My intention is, once I arrive over that city, to distribute chemical or biological materials that will terrorize the people of that city and to cause the illimes that will be provoked.

But how are you going to pay for this? You don’t have the money to buy a plane, chemicals, or get the expertise necessary to do that. I am going to rob a bank next Monday in order to get the money that I need to pay for this operation. The bank is going to be located at the corner of First and Main, and I am going to do it 3 hours after the bank closes next Monday.

The person listening to that conversation with a foreign intelligence wiretap is under a legal obligation to make known to the appropriate law enforcement officials about the fact that this is going to be a bank robbery at a specific location on a specific date and time in a certain Texas city.

Conversely, if that exact conversation had taken place under a criminal wiretap under title 3, the person listening to that conversation would be prohibited from telling the foreign intelligence agencies that there was about to be a terrorist attack on a date certain against a specific Texas city originating at a specific site in Central America.

Try to convince the American people that makes sense. It clearly does not in today’s reality. This legislation is going to make the same requirement of mandatory sharing when the information is gathered under a criminal wiretap to involve foreign intelligence information, as is the case today when information gathered under a Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act wiretap must be made available to appropriate law enforcement officials.

Another provision of title 9 addresses the role of the Director of Central Intelligence in the process of collecting foreign intelligence under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. It recognizes the need to target limited resources, including personnel and translators against the highest priority targets.

I ask if I can have an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I have about 11 minutes left that has not been committed which I thought I might use to answer some questions. I give the Senator 2 of my 11 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. I appreciate the Senator’s limitations.

Mr. LEAHY. We just had one Senator ask me for 30 minutes. I am looking at my 11. How can I give him 30? But I will give you 2 of the 11.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont.

We have a provision that the Director of Central Intelligence, the DCI, will set the overall strategic goals for the collection of foreign intelligence so that we can use our limited resources as effectively as possible.

In order to complement that, we also have a provision that will establish a national virtual translation center as a means of increasing our woefully limited linguistic capabilities to translate the material which we are gathering.

We will also provide for additional capability with human intelligence. We have become, in some quarters, a technology—eavesdropping, satellite imagery, to the exclusion of the use of human beings. If we want to gain information about the bin Ladens of the world, we cannot just take a picture of bin Laden.

Today it is increasingly difficult to eavesdrop on bin Laden. What we need to do is get a human being who is able to get close enough to bin Laden to learn his intentions and capabilities. This gets to the difficult issue of what kind of assets, human beings, we hire to work for us to gather such information?

We would all like to employ the purist of people, all choir boys to do this type of work. Unfortunately, they are not the type of people who are likely to be able to get close to the bin Ladens of the world. Thus, we have a provision in this legislation in the nature of a sense of Congress which we hope will send a strong message to the intelligence community that we are encouraging them to overcome some previous messages from Congress and to proceed to recruit the persons who they find to be necessary to gain access to terrorists so that we can have the best opportunity of protecting the American people. We are taking a substantial step in that direction.

To reiterate, another provision of title 9 addresses the role of the Director of Central Intelligence in the process of collecting foreign intelligence under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. It recognizes the need to target limited resources—e.g. translators—against the highest priority targets.

In order to ensure that scarce resources are effectively used, the DCI—in his role as head of the Intelligence Community, not as CIA Director—will set overall strategic goals for FISA collection.

He will work with the Attorney General to ensure that FISA information is distributed to the intelligence operators and analysts who need it government-wide.

Of course, the operational targeting and collection using wiretaps will be conducted by the FBI, as it has in the past; the DCI will perform no role in those decisions.

One of the scarce resources that has plagued the Intelligence Community, as well as law enforcement, is translation capability.

Section 907 of this bill requires the FBI and CIA to work together to create a “National Virtual Translation Center.”

Such a center would seek to remedy the chronic problem of developing critical language abilities, and matching those resources to intelligence collected by the wide range of techniques available.

It is not enough to be able to listen to the conversations of terrorists and their supporters. Those conversations must be translated, often from difficult languages such as Urdu, and analyzed, all in a timely fashion.

Our intelligence services collect vast amounts of data every day. It is possible that we may find that a critical clue to the September 11 attacks may have been available, but untranslated, days, weeks, or even months before the hijackings.

We must address this problem before another specific threat is overlooked.

Finally, I would like to mention a problem that has received a great deal of attention in recent weeks. There has been criticism of the intelligence agencies for placing too great a reliance on technical intelligence collection—laws dropping, satellite photograph—in recent years at the expense of human sources, or spies.

A corollary of this criticism is that CIA officers are to risk-averse and that they do not aggressively recruit sources that may have access to terrorist groups because the sources may have engaged in human rights violations or violent crimes.

As to the first problem, the Intelligence Authorization bill for fiscal year 2002, which may come to the floor next week, provides greater resources for human source recruitment—and it is part of a 5-year plan to beef up this method of collection.

With respect to the second problem, we in the Congress must simply accept some of the responsibility for creating a risk-averse reaction at CIA, if needed there is one.

The internal CIA regulations addressing the so-called “dirty asset” problem grew out of the criticisms by Congress in the mid-1990s about the recruitment of sources in Guatemala with sordid pasts.

We address this issue in S. 1510, section 903, by sending a strong message to CIA Headquarters and CIA officers overseas that recruitment of any person who has access to terrorists or terrorist groups should be of the highest priority.

There is no place in times like these for timidity in seeking every method available to learn the capabilities, plans, and intentions of terrorists.

Congress needs to send a strong message that we value such efforts to recruit sources on terrorism, even those with pasts we would not applaud. Section 903 sends that message.

I urge passage of S. 1510.

I again commend the Members of the Senate who have played such an effective role.

I also thank the staff: Al Cumming, Bob Filippone, Vicki Divoll, Steven Cash, Bill Duhnke, Paula DeSutter, Jim Hensler, and Jim Barnett.

They have been working for the past many months to bring us to the point of this legislation being available for adoption by the Senate tonight and for the safety of the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask the distinguished Senator from Utah—I see the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania is here—perhaps after the senior Senator from Utah, and then after the senior Senator from Pennsylvania speaks, whether it might be possible to go to the Senator from Wisconsin for the purpose of bringing up his amendments, and we can then debate and vote on them. Will that be agreeable to everybody?

Mr. HATCH. It is agreeable.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, we go to the Senator from Wisconsin for the purpose of bringing up his amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in my opening remarks, I was remiss in not mentioning the tremendous work of the distinguished chairman and vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee. They have done a tremendous amount of work on the intelligence aspect of this bill. As a member of the Intelligence Committee, I express my high regard for the both of them and the work they have done.

I also express my regard for my friend from Maryland, Senator Sar-

I yield myself 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition and asked for this reservation of time to express my concerns about the record which the Senate is creating so that whatever legislation we pass will pass constitutional muster.

The Supreme Court of the United States has handed down a series of decisions in the past decade which question the constitutionality and, in fact, invalidate acts of Congress because there has been an insufficient record compiled. So I make these statements and review the record so far with a view to urging my colleagues to create a record in this Chamber, in conference, or wherever that opportunity may present itself.

In 1989, in the case of Sable v. FCC, the Supreme Court of the United States struck down an act of Congress saying, “no Congressman or Senator purported to present a considered judgment.” I thought it was a remarkable statement by the Supreme Court since Congressman Tom Billey in the House of Representatives had established a very comprehensive record.

The Supreme Court in 1997, in a case captioned Reno v. ACLU, again invalidated an act of Congress noting, “the lack of legislative attention to the statute at issue in Sable suggests another parallel with this case.”

It was surprising to me that the Supreme Court of the United States would invalidate an act of Congress on the ground that no Senator or Congressman had purported to present a considered judgment, when that is the view of the Supreme Court which is contrary to Congress.

Under our doctrine of separation of powers, it seemed to me an act of Congress should stand unless there is some specific provision in the Constitution which warrants invalidating it or for paramount under the due process clause of the fifth amendment.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in January of last year, did it again in a case captioned Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, a case which involved the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. There the Court said, ‘our examination of the act’s legislative record confirms that Congress’ 1974 extension of the Act to the States was an unwarranted response to a perhaps inconsequential problem." Again, a remarkable holding that the Congress had an unwarranted response and that it was an inconsequential problem, totally contradicting the judgment of the Congress of the United States.

Then the Court went on in the Kimel case to say, "Congress had no reason to believe that broad prophylactic legislation was necessary in this field."

The point is a few of the cases where the Supreme Court of the United States has invalidated acts of Congress. There is no doubt there is a need for legislation to expand the powers of law enforcement to enable us to act against terrorists. My own experience in 8 years on the Intelligence Committee, 2 years of which was as chairman, and my work as chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Terrorism have convinced me without a doubt of the scourge of terrorism which we have seen many times but never with the intensity which we observed on September 11 of this year.

The act of Congress in expanding law enforcement has to be very carefully calibrated to protect civil liberties and be in accord with the Constitution of the United States. Attorney General Ashcroft met with a number of us on Wednesday, September 19, just 8 days after the incident of September 11, and asked that we enact legislation by the end of the week. My response at that time was I thought it could not be done in that time frame, but I thought we could hold hearings in the remainder of that week, perhaps on Thursday the 20th, or Friday the 21st, or Saturday the 22nd, to move ahead, understanding the import of the administration's bill, and legislate to give them what they needed, consistent with civil rights.

The Judiciary Committee then held a hearing on September 25 where the Attorney General of the Department of Justice what he needed, consistent with civil rights. The Attorney General of the Department of Justice what he needed, consistent with civil rights. The Attorney General Ashcroft appeared before the Judiciary Committee on September 25, he said the only detention he wanted on aliens who were subject to deportation proceedings. I then pointed out, as the record will show, that the legislation submitted by the Attorney General was much broader and did not limit detention simply or exclusively to those who were subject to deportation proceedings. So my comment was that it was necessary to analyze the bill very carefully, not do it hurriedly, and give the Attorney General of the Department of Justice what he needed, consistent with constitutional rights.

The other issue which I had an opportunity to raise in the very brief period of time I had—some 5 minutes—involving modifications to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, where the issue was to change the law from "the purpose," being the gathering of intelligence, to "a purpose." Ultimately the legislation has been modified to read "a significant purpose."

At that hearing, the Attorney General said he did not look to obtain content from electronic surveillance unless probable cause was established. But in the draft bill, which the Department of Justice had submitted at that time, that was not what the bill provided. So that on this point of the record, I think the Congress has some work to do, tonight in conference or perhaps by other means, to see to it we have a record which will withstand constitutional scrutiny.

On our Judiciary Committee, we have many Members who have expertise in this field. This bill, as the RECORD will show, was negotiated by the chairman and ranking member with the Department of Justice, with the participation of the committee only to the extent of the hearing of the full committee on September 25 and the subcommittee on October 3.

We have on our Judiciary Committee a number of Members who have had experience as prosecuting attorneys. We have a number of Members who are learned in law. We have other Members who have extensive experience on the Judiciary Committee and a great deal of common sense which may top some of us who have prosecutorial experience or extended experience with probable cause and search warrants or surveillance of some sort or another.

I express these concerns so whatever can be done by the Congress will be done to meet the constitutional standards.

How much of the 15 minutes have I used?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes 37 seconds remaining.

Mr. SPECTER. I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield the floor.

U.S. SENATE,
Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR PAT: I write to urge that our Judiciary Committee proceed promptly with the Attorney General’s terrorism package with the view to mark up the bill early next week so the full Senate can consider it and hopefully act upon it by the end of next week.

I am concerned that some further act of terrorism may occur which could be attributed to our failure to act promptly.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: I am very much concerned about the delays in acting on the anti-terrorism legislation and also about the absence of hearings to establish a record for the legislative package.

In recent decisions, the Supreme Court of the United States has declared acts of Congress unconstitutional when there has been an insufficient record or deliberative process to justify the legislation.

Thus the anti-terrorism legislation, perhaps more than any other, the Court engages in balancing the needs of law enforcement with the civil rights issues so that it is necessary to have the specification of the problems to warrant broadening police power.

In my judgment, there is no substitute for the hearings, perhaps in closed session, to deal with these complex issues.

As you know, I have been pressing for hearings. I am now informed that Senator Hatch has convened a meeting of all Republican senators to, in effect, tell us what is in a proposed bill where Judiciary Committee members have had no input.

We could still have meaningful hearings this week and get this bill ready for prompt floor action.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.
Mr. LEAHY. I understand the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin is willing to have the distinguished Senator from Michigan recognize him for a few minutes. I ask unanimous consent she be allowed to proceed preceding the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. STABENOW. I thank our distinguished chairman and my friend from Wisconsin for allowing me to proceed before he presents his amendments.

I rise this evening to congratulate all involved in this effort. As has been said on so many occasions, it is not perfect but we have come together with a very positive, important step forward that allows us to control this money on a bipartisan basis.

As the Senator from Michigan, along with my colleague, Senator LEVIN, we certainly celebrate the efforts along the northern border and the important authorizations for dollars that allow us to continue to protect and strengthen the efforts at the border. I thank my chairman of the Banking Committee, Senator SARBANES, for his efforts to put into this important bill language dealing with the critical issue of money laundering which essentially allows us to follow the money.

My colleague, Senator LEVIN, has been extremely involved in helping to lead efforts to lay the case for this. Senator KERRY and Senator GRASSLEY have been in important work. I thank them.

The antiterrorism bill before the Senate takes a significant step forward in cutting the flow of terrorist money. As the President has repeatedly said, stopping the flow of money is key to stopping terrorism. That is what we are doing this evening. In particular, we are establishing important new responsibilities, both for our Government and for financial institutions. The bill authorizes the Treasury Secretary to take special measures to stop suspected money-laundering activities. This anti-money-laundering language is significant because it requires financial institutions to set up their own due diligence to combat money laundering, particularly for private and corresponding banking situations. This is a key provision of which I was proud to be a part. I am pleased we were able to come up with language that allows that.

Another important provision I was pleased to offer in the Banking Committee, which is now part of the bill, was clear authority for the Treasury Secretary to issue regulations to crack down on abuses related to concentration accounts. These accounts are administrative accounts used by financial institutions to combine funds from multiple customers, various transactions and moves many identities or accountability of who is involved or how much money we are talking about.

The amendment I advocated urges the Treasury Secretary to issue regulations to crack down on abuses related to concentration accounts. These accounts are administrative accounts used by financial institutions to combine funds from multiple customers, various transactions and moves many identities or accountability of who is involved or how much money we are talking about.

terrorism. On the day after the attacks he said:

We must make sure that as we learn the facts, we do not allow these attacks to succeed in tempting us in any way to diminish what makes us a great nation. And what makes us a great nation is that this is a country that understands that people have God-given rights and liberties. And we cannot--we must be prepared to bring justice--diminish those liberties.

I agree with Senator Allen. I believe that one of the most important duties of this Congress is in responding to the terrible events of September 11, in order to protect our civil liberties, which, of course, derive from our Constitution. That is why I am pleased that we did not take the Attorney General's advice to enact an anti-terrorism bill immediately without any deliberation. I commend Senator Leahy for all his efforts to improve this bill. It is certainly a better and more comprehensive bill than the one the administration originally proposed. I think even the administration recognizes that.

But I still believe we needed a more deliberative process on this bill, and more careful consideration of the civil liberties implication of it. I held a hearing in the Constitution Subcommittee, which many serious and substantive concerns about the bill were raised by commentators and experts from both sides of the political spectrum.

As the chairman of the subcommittee, I took many of those concerns very seriously. That is why I would not consent on Tuesday night to bringing up this bill and passing it without any amendments being considered. I am pleased that we were able to reach agreement on a process that will allow some of my concerns with this bill to be debated and voted on through the amendment process.

That is not to say that no measures to strengthen enforcement should be enacted. They should be. We need to do it. We need to do some very serious updating of a number of these laws. This bill does many things to assist the Department of Justice in its mission to catch those who helped the terrorists and prevent future attacks. We can and we will give the FBI new and better tools. But we must also make sure that the new tools don't become instruments of abuse.

There is no doubt that if we lived in a police state, it would be easier to catch terrorists. If we lived in a country where the police were allowed to search your home at any time for any reason; if we lived in a country where the government was entitled to open your mail, eavesdrop on your phone conversations, or intercept your email communications; if we lived in a country where people could be held in jail indefinitely based on what they write or think, or based on mere suspicion that they were up to no good, the government would probably discover and arrest more terrorists, or would be terrorists, just as it would find more lawbreakers generally. But that would not be a country in which we would want to live, and it would not be a country for which we could, in good conscience, ask our young people to fight and die. In short, that country would not be America.

I think it is important to remember that the Constitution was written in 1789 by men who had recently won the Revolutionary War. They did not live in comfortable and easy times of hypothetical enemies. They wrote the Constitution and the Bill of Rights to protect individual liberties in times of war as well as in times of peace.

There have been periods in our nation's history when civil liberties have taken a back seat to what appeared at the time to be the legitimate exigencies of war. Our national consciousness still bears the stain and the scars of those events: The Alien and Sedition Acts, the suspension of habeas corpus during the Civil War, the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II and the injustices perpetrated against German-Americans and Italian-Americans, the blacklisting of supposed communist sympathizers during the McCarthy era, and the surveillance and harassment of antiwar protesters, including Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., during the Vietnam war. We must not allow this piece of our past to become prologue.

Preserving our freedom is the reason we are now engaged in this new war on terrorism. We will lose that war without a shot being fired if we sacrifice the liberties of the American people in the belief that by doing so we will stop the terrorists.

That is why this exercise of considering the administration's proposed legislation and fine tuning it to minimize the infringement of civil liberties is so necessary and so important. And this is a job that only the Congress can do. We cannot and we must not leave the Supreme Court to protect us from laws that sacrifice our freedoms. We took an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. In these difficult times that oath becomes even more significant.

There are quite a number of things in this bill that I am concerned about, but my amendments focus on a small discrete number of items.

At this point, I would like to turn to one of the amendments.

Amendment No. 1899

Mr. FEINGOLD. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] proposes an amendment numbered 1899.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To make amendments to the provisions relating to interception of computer trespasser communications.

On page 42, line 25, insert "or other" after "contractual"

On page 43, line 2, strike "for" and insert "permitting"

On page 43, line 8, insert "transmitted to, through, or from the protected computer" after "computer trespasser"

On page 43, line 38, strike "does not last for more than 96 hours" and after "such interception"

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask this time now to be charged to the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. Stabenow). The time will be charged.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, this amendment simply clarifies the provision in the bill dealing with computer trespass, section 217, so that it more accurately reflects the intent of the provision, as it is frequently expressed by the administration. Section 217 is designed, we have been told, to permit law enforcement to assist computer owners who are subject to denial of service attacks or other episodes of computer hacking. As currently written, however, this provision could allow universities, libraries, and employers to permit government surveillance of people who are permitted to use the computer facilities of those entities. Such surveillance would take place without a judicial order or probable cause to believe that a crime is being committed. Under the bill, anyone accessing a computer "without authorization" is deemed to have no privacy rights whatsoever, with no time limit, for as long as they are accessing the computer at issue. Basically, the way I read this, this provision completely eliminates fourth amendment protection for a potentially very large set of electronic communications.

The danger that this amendment tries to address is that "accessing a computer without authorization" could be interpreted to mean a minor transgression of an office or library computer use policy. Let's take an example. A working mom uses an office computer to purchase Christmas presents on the Internet. Company policy prohibits personal use of office computers. Her employer could give permission to law enforcement to review all of the e-mails that she sends or receives at work, monitor all the instant messages she sends, and record every website she visits: No warrant, no probable cause, no fourth amendment rights at all. My amendment makes clear that a computer trespasser is not someone who is permitted to use a computer by the owner or operator of that computer.

This amendment also limits the length of unreviewed surveillance to 96 hours, which is a longer time frame than that placed on other emergency wiretap authorities. Again, if this provision is aimed solely at responding to cyber-attacks, there is no need to continue such surveillance beyond 96 hours—which is the time we put in our amendment—because that time is sufficient to allow the government to obtain a warrant to continue the surveillance. Under this amendment, if the government does not have probable cause to believe a suspect has engaged in computer trespass, it cannot continue it, they simply have to get a warrant after 4 days. Warrants based on probable cause are still the constitutionally preferred method for conducting surveillance in America. The need for immediate and emergency assistance during a denial of service attack or hacking episode, which I certainly think is a legitimate concern, cannot justify continued surveillance without judicial supervision.

Finally, this amendment prevents law enforcement from abusing this authority in investigations unrelated to the actual computer trespass. The current provision potentially allows law enforcement to intercept wire and electronic communications in many investigations where they may not want, or be able, to secure a court order. If the government suspects a person of committing a crime but does not have probable cause to justify monitoring of the suspect’s work computer, it could pressure the owner or operator of the computer to find some transgression in the suspect’s computer use, allowing the government carte blanche access to email and internet activity of the suspect. I suspect that few small business owners will be anxious to stand up to federal law enforcement requests for this information.

Now the administration was apparently willing to add language to deal with employees using office computers, but it refused to recognize that in our society many people use computers that they do not own, with permission, but without a contractual relationship. People own their own homes, but computers use computers at libraries. Students use computers at school in computer labs or student centers. Without my amendment, these innocent users could become subject to intrusive government surveillance merely because they disobeyed a rule of the owner of the computer concerning its use. I have been told that this is not the administration’s intent, but they would not fix this provision. So I think it is fair to ask why. Why does the administration insist on immediate and emergency surveillance without probable cause? Is there a hidden agenda here? I sincerely hope not, but I was very disappointed in the administration’s unwillingness to address this concern. I remain willing to negotiate on this amendment, but if there is no further movement on it, I hope my colleagues will recognize that this amendment will leave the publicly expressed concern that the immediate and emergency wiretap provision untouched and fix a potentially disastrous case of overbreadth.

I reserve the remainder of my time. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays are agreed to, Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, how much time do I have remaining on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighteen and one-half minutes on this amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I rise to support my colleague, Senator FEINGOLD, and his amendment to section 217. I think the Senator has done a tremendous job in outlining the issues related to this bill and the fact that haste can sometimes make waste. Haste in some instances on very well crafted language to uphold our rights under the Constitution can be infringed upon.

Section 217 is intended to allow computer system owners and operators to fully engage Federal law enforcement where someone hacks or intrudes into their system. As Senator FEINGOLD mentioned, that could be a business owner, or it could be a library system, or it could be a university system. Unfortunately, as drafted, there are few limits on what communications the Government could intercept without showing probable cause that a crime has been committed and without having the opportunity for judicial review of those intercepts.

The provisions do not even limit the scope of the surveillance. Once authorized, the Government could intercept all communications of a person who is allegedly a trespasser. Again, let me be clear: We are not debating the fourth amendment requirement to show probable cause.

Further, there is no time limit on the surveillance under the provision of this legislation. For those who may be reviewing this legislation for the first time, and understanding that as they go to their workplace, or as they go to their educational institution, or as they go to their library to enhance their education, they could be under surveillance for a very long and indefinite period of time without their knowledge.

Thus, once authorized by a computer system operator, the Government could intercept all communications of a person, forever, without a proper search warrant. Even a court order wiretap expires after 30 days.

This amendment would remedy some of the defects in this bill. It would do that by requiring that the surveillance be only of communications associated with the trespass and that the length of the surveillance be limited to 96 hours, which, by the way, is twice as long as the time limit placed on emergency wiretap authority. If the problem continues, investigators could easily obtain additional warrant time for the surveillance to continue.

This is a very important time in our country’s history. It is a time in which the President and Congress are united to see in use and support the administration. It is a time in which we want to act to give law enforcement the tools they need to apprehend those who have been responsible and may be responsible for future acts of terrorism. But we also must preserve the rights of citizens of this country when it comes to the fourth amendment.

I encourage my colleagues to support the Feingold amendment. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, first, I want to say how important it is to have on the committee the Senator with expertise in this area as well as Senator Wellstone, who I think speaks within a framework of expertise that she brings to this particular amendment. I think from the framework of a layperson who has been trying to understand this bill’s pluses and minuses.

I say to Senator FEINGOLD and all colleagues, since I think there is kind of a rush to table all of the Feingold amendments, that this amendment is eminently reasonable. The Senator from Wisconsin is saying: Let’s put a time limit on this. That is good. Let’s have some judicial oversight. That is good as well.

There are international terrorists who have killed many Americans and want to kill more Americans. There are a lot of provisions in this bill which I think are right on the money, including northern border protection which is relevant to the Chair, relevant to the Senator from Washington, and certainly relevant to the people I represent. But I also think there is no reason, in this rush to pass the bill, that we can’t make some changes. These are minor changes the Senator wants to make. This just gives this piece of legislation more balance.

I will say this: There is a lot that is good in this bill and a lot that is attractive to me as a Senator. When you add some of the additional security provisions that help all the people we are asked to represent in addition to the financial help to all of the rescue workers and all of the innocent people’s families, people have been murdered—there is much in this
Mr. HATCH. Madam President, let me talk a little bit about the provision that focuses on the provisionally trying to kill people whom the terrorists are basically trying to kill—Americans. What is not as good as when the reach of the bill goes too far beyond that and is too broad.

The sunset provision that passed in the House is so important, so that we can continue to monitor this legislation as we move forward.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for his help, especially for making this point: All this amendment does is make sure that we face the problem with the terrorism that is threatening our country and our freedoms. That is all we are trying to do—make sure it doesn't go broadly into people’s rights, and into their privacy, and into their own lives.

At this point, I am simply going to reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, let me talk a little bit about the provision of today’s legislation that has been referred to as the “computer trespasser” exception.

This provision is a perfect example of how our laws dealing with electronic surveillance have become outdated, and nonsensical as applied to modern technology.

Imagine the following scenario. A terrorist decides to wreak havoc in a major city by shutting down this electrical power grid. He uses a computer to hack into the mainframe computer of a regional utility company, which he plans to use to bring down the power grid. Before the terrorist can accomplish his goal, the utility company recognizes that an intruder is attempting to access their computer. The company quickly calls the FBI for assistance in repelling the intruder.

Guess what? Under current law, even with the permission from the utility company, the FBI is not permitted to monitor the terrorist’s activity on the utility company’s computer, because current law perversely grants the terrorist privacy rights with respect to his communications on the computer he has invaded.

It is as if police could not investigate a burglary, even when invited into the house by the victim of the burglary, because the burglar had established privacy rights inside the home he has invaded.

It is anomalies such as this, in our current laws regarding electronic surveillance, that today’s legislation is designed to fix.

As it stands, the computer trespasser provision is defined in such a way that the owner or operator of a computer network cannot arbitrarily declare the computer trespasser, and then invite law enforcement in to monitor that user’s communications.

The provision, as written, provides that a person is not considered a computer trespasser if the person has an “existing contractual relationship” with the owner or operator of a computer network. What is meant by “other” relationship? Any hacker could make the argument that they have a relationship with a computer operator. Indeed, were I a defense counsel several years ago, I would have argued that the hacker has accessed the computer has created some form of relationship. Clearly, the proposed amendment would broadly and unwisely give immunity from our cyber-crime laws. The amendment argues it will apply to students, to employees of universities. It is a step to give this piece of legislation, as we move forward.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for his kind words.

Madam President, in response to the points he made, first, let me respond that I accept the premise of this basic provision in terms of updating the ability to get at computer hackers. That is an update. We did not know what this provision contained. We do not know what risks it posed. Nobody opposes that very important part of this bill.

But what the Senator claims is that the phrase “contractual relationship” somehow makes sure that people are not subject to normal law enforcement back in the same position they currently are—that is, powerless to investigate hacking incidents where the owner of the computer network wants the assistance of law enforcement.

Madam President, we should not tie the hands of our law enforcement to assist the owners of our computer networks. We should not help hackers and cyberterrorists to get away. If you are a victim of a burglary, shouldn’t you have the right to ask the police to investigate your house, to come to your house and investigate?

Why should the owners of the computer not have the right to ask the police to investigate a commuter-hacking incident, especially where it appears it is terrorist oriented?

This act applies, as written, only to people without authorization to be on the computer. Why should the law protect people who have invaded a computer they have no right to be on?

Let me say one last comment about this. The proponents of this amendment argue it will apply to students using a university computer. That is, if you have a contractual relationship to protect them in this situation.

And finally, as the Senator conceded here, in his last example, that certain students, students at all our universities across the country, are not protected by that language. And that is all we want to do, to make it clear that this amendment is related to the problem of computer hackers, not students who might be buying Christmas presents on a computer at work, even though they are not supposed to, or students who maybe are gambling on a university computer. Of course they should not do that, but should that stop a student from being able to hackers to claim that he is protected. The notion that a hacker would be considered as somebody who has a relationship with the company under this amendment is an absurd interpretation of the amendment, and none of the Senator from Wisconsin is protecting is not what this amendment would do.

And finally, let me get back to the students, the example the Senator from Wisconsin is using, the FBI is not permitted to access their computer. The company under this amendment is so important, so that we can continue to monitor this legislation as we move forward. They do not have a contractual relationship to protect them in this situation.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes.

Mr. DURBIN. I have followed this debate closely. I commend the Senator for his stand on the constitutional rights part of this debate. But I want to make sure I understand exactly what his amendment sets out to do.

Is my understanding correct that under the Feingold amendment there could be surveillance of a computer for 96 hours before there is any court approval, so that in the example given by the Senator from Utah, the law enforcement authorities could, in fact, monitor the communications of someone who may otherwise have permission to use the computer for 96 hours before ever going to a court and asking for a warrant for that search?

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is correct. And that even troubles me for the length of time that it is allowed—but it is far better the wiretap position. Law Enforcement should be required to seek a warrant as soon as possible, within reason, given the fact that what the amendment tries to get at is emergency situations involving hackers. As soon as possible, they should have to meet the standards that are normally met.

But, yes, the amendment does permit that, in my view, rather extraordinary period of time before the requirement would have to be made.

Mr. DURBIN. And that period of time, I ask the Senator from Wisconsin, is roughly twice the amount currently given under emergency wiretap authority; is that correct?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Correct.

Mr. DURBIN. One last question. I want to try to understand. I ask the Senator do you not say, in your amendment, that a trespasser does not include someone who is permitted to use a computer by the owner or operator of the computer?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Correct.

Mr. DURBIN. And the difference, of course, is whether it is a contractual relationship or just a permission to use; you are including permission to use as well as contractual relationship?

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. The examples you have given are of people going to a library, who may not have a contractual relationship with the library but use the computer, who would be subjected to this warrantless search of their computer communications for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is right, exactly. This is exactly the problem. All we asked of the committee and the administration yesterday was to make it clear that they did not want to reach these people. That is what we have been told. The purpose of this is to get at the threat of computer hackers.

The Senator from Illinois has just illustrated, with those examples—and he is, of course, correct—that this could be interpreted and could be understood to include situations that not only have the potential to do with the problem but represent a very serious departure from the individual rights people should have in our country.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Illinois and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I have been concerned about the scope of the amendment carving an exception for the wiretap statute for so-called "computer trespassers." This covers anyone who accesses a computer "without authorization" and could allow government eavesdropping, without a court order or other safeguards in place, for example, for employees who violate workplace computer use rules or online service rules.

I was unable to reach agreement with the administration on limiting the scope of this amendment, and the Feingold amendment makes further refinements. It is unfortunate that the administration did not accept this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has 4 minutes 47 seconds; the managers have 9 minutes 14 seconds.

Mr. HATCH. I am prepared to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I ask the chairman of the committee, after listening to the presentation by the Senator from Wisconsin, what is the chairman’s view of the incursion on law enforcement by the limitation of 96 hours?

Mr. LEAHY. The incursion of law enforcement by the 96 hours?

Mr. SPECTER. The principal thrust of what the Senator from Wisconsin seeks to do is to broaden the definition of a contractual relationship to someone who may otherwise have permission. What I am trying to do is to understand the administration’s position, the law enforcement position as to how law enforcement is adversely impacted by what the Senator from Wisconsin seeks to do.

My concern, as expressed earlier, is that, especially in the face of the challenge by the amendment, this is a complicated bill.

The reality is, it is hard to know all of it without the normal hearing process. Now we have a specific challenge. What I would like to know is, how does it inhibit law enforcement? What about these law enforcement problems to law enforcement? And then, what is the difficulty in having 96 hours, which is 4 days, to see what is going on to find some basis for seeking a warrant with probable cause?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Frankly, I don’t have a problem with the Feingold amendment as it is written. I do have a problem, however, with keeping a bill together. The initial administration request had no limitations whatsoever. It was so wide open we were concerned that someone who might be using a computer at work to add up their accounts for the month would be trapped by this because the company said you couldn’t use the computer to add up your checkbook account, for example, to use a far-fetched example, because they would be accessing the computer without authorization and the Government could just step in and go forward.

The administration moved partly our way and actually ended up with a compromise on this. I suspect what they would say to the Senator from Pennsylvania is that these attacks last more than 96 hours and that they would be unable to go after them if they were limited to 96 hours.

We saw this recently 2 or 3 weeks ago where we had a continuous roving attack on a number of Government computers. As I recall—I didn’t pay that much attention at the time—they were attacking them one week and when we came back the following week, they were still attacking them. So you had more than 96 hours.

Frankly, it is a case where we have reached a compromise. The distinction, Mr. Hatch, in the example on behalf of the administration, said this is not acceptable to them. Had this been part of the original package, I wouldn’t have found it acceptable.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I yield.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask the chairman of the committee, after listening to the presentation by the Senator from Wisconsin, what is the chairman’s view of the incursion on law enforcement by the limitation of 96 hours?

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I ask the chairman of the committee, after listening to the presentation by the Senator from Wisconsin, what is the chairman’s view of the incursion on law enforcement by the limitation of 96 hours?

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask the chairman of the committee, after listening to the presentation by the Senator from Wisconsin, what is the chairman’s view of the incursion on law enforcement by the limitation of 96 hours?
anything in a modern digital age to stop terrorists from stopping power grids and damaging dams and a whole raft of other things.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, if the Senator from Utah will yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Sure.

Mr. SPECTER. The Senator from Wisconsin makes the point that people may have standing to use a computer even without a contractual relationship, uses the example of a student. Does the Senator from Utah believe or does the administration represent that there are no relationships other than contractual which give a person the legitimate standing to use the computer?

Mr. HATCH. Under this provision, you do not have a right to hack into another private computer, whether you are a university student or anybody else. It only applies, the law we have written, to unauthorized access. It does not apply to authorized access. But unauthorized access, yes, it applies to that. If we don’t put it in there, we will be leaving a glaring error that currently exists in our laws that prohibit us from solving some of these problems. It would be a terrible thing to not resolve at this particular time, knowing what we know about how these terrorists are operating right now.

Mr. SPECTER. So is the Senator from Utah saying that if you have permission, that is a form of a contractual relationship?

Mr. HATCH. I am saying that if you have permission, you are not covered by this provision as written. In other words, you would not be considered a hacker?

Mr. SPECTER. On its face you would seem to, unless there is a contractual relationship?

Mr. HATCH. It comes down to authorized or unauthorized access. If it is not covered by this provision, you are not covered under the computer trespasser provision.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, did the Senator yield back his remaining time?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, we are prepared to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. We are prepared if the Senator from Wisconsin is.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Well, I have got to clarify a couple points, then I will be prepared to yield the remaining time.

These were helpful exchanges on a couple of points. First of all, it became very clear from Senator SPECTER’s excellent questioning that, of course, there is no guarantee, under the way this language is set up, under the words “contractual relationship,” that the provision would not apply to students or to people who would use a computer at a library. I can’t understand why, if that is the case, we would not take some of the additional considerations, the intent of the legislation, why they don’t just agree to language that would say so. That is all we asked for yesterday. It could have resolved the problem. For some reason, they won’t agree to it.

Second, is this notion that a hacker could somehow get in under our language. There is no way that a hacker has a relationship with the computer owner, in the case of the computer. The hacker is, obviously, the antithesis, the opposite of an individual with a relationship that permits use of the computer.

Finally, I am amazed at this notion that this amendment, even under our version of it, would allow only 96 hours for surveillance when under the example of the Senator from Utah, an ongoing hacker attack is occurring.

Is it the Senator’s contention that at the end of 96 hours, the FBI would not have probable cause to get a warrant, when all it has been dealing with for 4 days is this hacking of the computer? Of course, it would. It would be the easiest thing in the world.

Section 505(2) is the automatic exception to the usual rule as derived under our system, and expressed in the fourth amendment. Normally, you have to come up with probable cause and a warrant. There are exceptions because we have put them in sometimes. But 96 hours? At the end of that time, with clear evidence of a hacking attempt, a warrant could easily be obtained. Obviously, our amendment takes care of the need for emergency authorization. In fact, I think it is too generous. I am trying to put some kind of a time limit on this so we can have some semblance of the normal rules that protect our citizens.

If the other side yields their time, I will yield my remaining time as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I have listened to this debate with great interest, and I appreciate very much the work that is being done. The Senate from Wisconsin. As the Senator from Vermont and, I believe, from Pennsylvania, have noted, there are circumstances where I can easily see that we could be sympathetic to his amendment. He makes an argument.

My difficulty tonight is not substantive as much as it is procedural. There is no question, all 100 of us could go through this bill with a fine-tooth comb and pinpoint those things which we can improve. There is no doubt about that. I have looked at this bill, and there are a lot of things, were I to write it alone, upon which I could improve. I know the chairman of the committee believes that too.

I think we also have to recognize that this is the product of a lot of work in concert with our Republican colleagues, in concert with the administration, in concert with civil liberties groups, and in concert with law enforcement. We have come up with what I think is a collaborative but, yes, successful compromise.

Now, if we had opened the bill to amendment, I have no doubt there are many colleagues who would offer amendments with which I would vehemently disagree—in fact, so much so that I might want to filibuster the bill. I would probably lose. I think there is a realistic expectation that on a lot of these issues, my side would lose. I am not afraid of the case for the other side. So, we made the best judgment we could, taking into account the very delicate balance between civil liberties and law enforcement that we had to achieve in bringing this bill of this complexity to the floor.

I have to say, I think our chair and ranking member and all of those involved did a terrific job under the most difficult of circumstances. What we did was to say: Let’s take this product and work with it; let’s review it; if we have to make some changes, let’s consider them; but let’s recognize that if we were to take this bill open-ended, there would be no end to the amendments— the result that would most likely occur in such a circumstance.

While I may be sympathetic to some amendments offered tonight, had it been an open debate, there would have been a lot of amendments for which I would not have been sympathetic.

Given those circumstances, my argument is not substantive, it is procedural. We have a job to do. The clock is ticking. The work needs to get done. We have to make our best judgment as we can, and we have to proceed.

I hope my colleagues will join me tonight in tabling this amendment and tabling every other amendment that is offered, should he choose to offer them tonight. Let’s move on and finish this bill. Let’s work with the House and come up with the best product between the Houses. Then, let’s let law enforcement do its job, and let’s use our power of oversight to ensure that civil liberties are protected.

I make a motion to table.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator withhold that motion to table for a moment?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I have served with over 250 Senators here, and I have been proud to serve with all of them. I know of no Senator who has a stronger commitment to our individual rights and personal liberties than our senior Senator from South Dakota, our majority leader. But I also know that were it not for his commitment and efforts, we would not be here with a far better bill than the one originally proposed by the administration, if it has been because of his willingness to back us up as we try to improve that bill, to remove unconstitutional aspects of it, because of his willingness, we were able to get here.

As the Senator from South Dakota, the dearest friend I have in this body, I think we could do differently, yes, but he knows there are parts I would do differently—even on this one. I have high regard for the Senator from Wisconsin, and I would have to love to have had his amendment. Actually, I would have done it probably differently than that. But we had a whole lot of places where we won and some where we lost.

I can tell you right now, if we start unraveling this bill, we are going to lose all the parts we won and we will be back to a proposal that was blantly unconstitutional in many parts. So I join, with no reluctance whatsoever, in the leader’s motion.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I move to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, on this bill there was not a single moment of markup or vote in the Judiciary Committee. I accepted that because of the crisis our Nation faces. This is the first substantive amendment in the Senate on this entire issue, one of the most important civil liberties bills of our time, and the majority leader has asked Senators to not vote on the merits of the issue. I understand the difficult task he has, but I must object to the idea that not one single amendment on this issue will be voted on the merits on the floor of the Senate.

What have we come to when we don’t have either committee or Senate deliberation on amendments on an issue of this importance?

I yield the floor, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I move to table the amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT) are necessary absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote “yea” or “nay” as the case may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

[Rollcall Vote No. 219 Leg.]

YEAS—83

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DASCHLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, so we understand where we are, there is still a fair amount of time on the bill that the Senator from Utah and I have and we have committed to Senators on both sides of aisle who need time.

The remaining time is for the Senator from Wisconsin who has three more amendments with the same time as he had in the last amendment.

The Senator from Massachusetts has asked for 5 minutes. I understand we have three more amendments that would take probably an hour or so per amendment with the vote if the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to use all his time, and he has a right to do that.

Once those are disposed of, the Senator from Utah and I are probably prepared to yield back our time.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Madam President, it was depending entirely on what the Senator from Wisconsin was doing. I reserve that now and see where we are heading.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield the floor.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, it is my intention to offer two more amendments, not the third amendment. I believe the time for each of these amendments could be less than the full time allotted.

We have a fair amount of interest, but I didn’t expect as much debate. I think the last two could be expedited, and I am prepared to proceed, if that is what my colleagues desire.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 21, line 14, insert “except that, in such circumstances, the order shall direct that the surveillance shall be conducted only where the target’s presence at the place where, or use of the facility at which, the electronic surveillance is to be directed has been ascertained by the person implementing the order and that the electronic surveillance must be directed only at the communication of the target,” after “such other persons”.

Mr. KERRY. For the purpose of planning, could the Senator give us a sense of both amendments and how long he thinks he will talk.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I have about 12 minutes on this amendment subject to any response to that and approximately the same on the second amendment.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, this amendment has to do with what is called roving wiretap, or multipoint surveillance authority. This is one of the first things Attorney General Ashcroft asked for in the first days after the September 11 attack and gave the example of a terrorist using throwaway cell phones and the need for continuing roaming wiretap authority to allow the FBI to keep up with the ready availability of this new technology.

First, let me say I have a lot of sympathy for the idea of updating this area of the law. Obviously, it is needed in light of changes in technology. It is vitally important for Members of the Senate to understand that roving wiretap authority is already available for criminal investigations under Title III.

This is in title 18, section 2518(11) and (12). The Attorney General doesn’t need nor has he asked for any new roving wiretap authority for criminal investigations, he already has it.

That the bill does. Section 206 is provide similar authority in investigations under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, known as FISA. I am not opposed to expanding existing roving wiretap authority to include FISA investigations, but I am very concerned that Section 206 does not include a key safeguard that was part of the roving wiretap authority when it was added to Title III in 1986. That protection minimizes the possible misuse of this authority, whether intentional or unintentional, to eavesdrop on the conversations of individuals who are not the subject of the investigation.

Let me read from the Senate Judiciary Committee’s report on the legislation that granted roving wiretap authority:

Proposed subsection 2518(12) of title 18 provides, with respect to both “wire” and “oral” communications, that if a government has been successful in obtaining a relaxed specificity order, it cannot begin the interception until the facilities or place from which the communications are being intercepted is ascertained by the person implementing the interception order.
In other words, the actual interception could not begin until the suspect begins or evidences an intention to begin a conversation.

It further reads:

It would be improper to use this expanded specific evidence under FISA to tap a series of telephones and only use wiretaps after they are called. It would be improper to use this expanded specific evidence under FISA to tap all telephones in a neighborhood just because a suspected terrorist or on all calls from that phone, but only those taking place when the target is in that person’s home. Likewise, if the government believes that the target uses computers in a library, it can only monitor the one that the terrorist is actually using, not every computer in that facility even when the terrorist is not there.

I don’t believe this amendment should affect the Government’s authorization to monitor a new cell phone obtained in the possession of the target or is registered to the target, then the person implementing the surveillance has ascertained that the facility is being used by the target. They could do it, and I support that.

Now, it has been pointed out to me that in 1999 this safeguard was removed from Title III with respect to wiretaps but left in place with respect to bugs. The change was made in the conference report on authorization of the Intelligence Reform Act of 2001 and I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. No. Let’s say somebody goes to their neighbor’s house to use a neighbor’s or relative’s phone. Under my amendment, the Government would not be able to listen in on all calls from that phone, but only those taking place when the target is in that person’s home. Likewise, if the government believes that the target uses computers in a library, it can only monitor the one that the terrorist is actually using, not every computer in that facility even when the terrorist is not there.

I don’t believe this amendment should affect the Government’s authorization to monitor a new cell phone obtained in the possession of the target or is registered to the target, then the person implementing the surveillance has ascertained that the facility is being used by the target. They could do it, and I support that.

Now, it has been pointed out to me that in 1999 this safeguard was removed from Title III with respect to wiretaps but left in place with respect to bugs. The change was made in the conference report on authorization of the Intelligence Reform Act of 2001 and I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes. Madam President, I yield 2 minutes. Mr. WELLSTONE. My colleague is responding to a question I asked about an amendment that Congress granted federal law enforcement in criminal investigations in 1986. It contains a standard that as far as we know served law enforcement adequately in conducting effective surveillance on very sophisticated criminal organizations, including the mafia and drug importation, distribution and law enforcement.

I submit that if this standard is not sufficient, we would have seen an open effort to change it, but we didn’t. Even after the change made in 1999 without discussion or debate, the standard remains in effect for bugs placed in homes or businesses. Without this protection, Section 206 threatens the rights of innocent people.

If law enforcement has been significantly impaired in conducting effective surveillance in criminal investigations under the roving wiretap provision in current law, we should be shown specific evidence of its shortcomings. But if it has not been impaired, then there is no reason not to include a similar safeguard in the roving wiretap authority under FISA.

I urge my colleagues to take a close look at this amendment. It is reasonable, it appropriately reflects current law, but it also allows for updating to face the reality of new technology and all the technologies that are implicated here. And it protects the constitutional rights of people who are not the subjects of an investigation.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Again, I am not a lawyer. I do not think I understood exactly all the argument you were making.

Are you saying there has to be some standard of proof? That before conducting surveillance, law enforcement has to make sure? In other words, before you actually wiretap a phone or bug a house or a home, the target of the surveillance has to be in that home you are bugging? Mr. FEINGOLD. No. Let’s say somebody goes to their neighbor’s house to use their phones. They don’t use your phone two or three times, it might be. Our amendment makes sure this new provision doesn’t open up that house and everybody in it and every phone call they have in the house to unlimited Government surveillance. It requires what has been legally required under the law, that the law enforcement people ascertain that the person is in the house at the time so it is credible that they would be using that phone again.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Another example, other people who are in the house who have nothing to do with the target of surveillance, their conversations could be—

Mr. FEINGOLD. Their conversations could and undoubtedly would be, without this safeguard.

Mr. WELLSTONE. And the same thing for the bugging?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Exactly.

Mr. WELLSTONE. So you are trying to minimize the misuse of authority. It might be unintentional?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Absolutely. There are standards, as I indicated in my statement. There have been rules about how law enforcement has to ascertain, whether it be at a phone bank or in somebody else’s home, that there is a reasonable belief that the individual is actually there. Without that kind of rule, what we are doing is not just extending this authority to the reality that people have cell phones and move around and use different phones of their own, but it takes us into an area that, frankly, prior to September 11 we would never have dreamed of allowing.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, if I could take 2 minutes—I ask the Yeas and Nays on the amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be. The yeas and nays were ordered.
any damage whatsoever to much of what is in this bill, which is so important.

So, again, I hope Senators will support this amendment on the merits. I think it is a very important amendment. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Minnesota very much for his help, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, under current law, law enforcement has so-called-roving or multi-point surveillance authority for criminal investigations under title III, but FISA does not have comparable provisions for agents investigating foreign intelligence. Roving interceptions are tied to a named person rather than to any particular communications facility or place. Today’s bill adds this vital authority to FISA.

This authority is critical for tracking suspected spies and terrorists who are experts in counter-surveillance methods such as frequently changing locations and communications devices such as phones and computer accounts.

It simply makes no sense that our wire-tapping statute recognizes this problem, and provides roving wiretap authority for surveillance of common criminals, but makes no provision for roving authority to monitor terrorists under the FISA statute.

The proposed amendment would not succeed in its stated goal of harmonizing the standard between title III wiretaps and FISA wiretaps. The proposed amendment would put a requirement on the interception of wire or electronic communications under a FISA warrant that does not exist in the title III context—a requirement that the law enforcement officer implementing the wiretapping order personally ascertain that the target of the order is using a telephone or computer, before the monitoring could begin.

This requirement is operationally unworkable. The way that roving orders are implemented, requires that law enforcement officers have the ability to spot check several different telephones in order to determine which one is being used by the target of the order. The language proposed in this amendment does not give law enforcement officers the ability to do so. In fact, they would be worse off under this proposal than they are under current law.

The goal of the roving wiretap provision is to give counter-terrorism investigators as much authority to conduct wiretaps as their counterparts have in conducting criminal investigations. This amendment defeats that goal by putting new, significant obstacles in the path of investigators attempting to investigate and prevent terrorist activities.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, Senator FEINGOLD provided invaluable assistance to the committee during our consideration of this legislation. He also held a hearing in his Constitution Subcommittee last week on the critical civil liberties issues raised by the Administration’s anti-terrorism bill. I fully appreciate the depth of his concern and his desire to improve this bill.

The Attorney General and I agreed at principal that the roving, or multipoint, wiretap authority for criminal cases should be available under FISA for foreign intelligence cases. The need for such authority is especially acute to conduct surveillance of foreign spies trained in the art of avoiding surveillance and detection.

Senator FEINGOLD’s amendment simply assures that when roving surveillance is conducted, the Government makes efforts to ascertain that the target is actually at the place or using the phone, being tapped. This is required in the criminal context. It is unfortunate that the Administration did not accept this amendment.

I hope all time could be yielded back on both sides.

Mr. FEINGOLD. It is my understanding the opponents have yielded all time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. If the Senator is going to yield his.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I will just use a minute of my leader time to respond.

I have already made my argument on the first amendment. I, in the interest of time, am not going to repeat it. As I said before, I am sympathetic to many of these ideas, but I am much more sympathetic to arriving at a product that will bring us to a point where we can pass something into law. The record reflects the compromises that have been put in place, that the very delicate balance that we have achieved. It is too late to open up the amendment process in a way that might destroy that delicate balance. For that reason, I move to table this amendment.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote “yea.”

The result was announced—yeas 90, nays 7, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a Statement of Administration Policy on the USA Act.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY
(This statement has been coordinated by OMB with the concerned agencies)

S. 1510—UNITING AND STRENGTHENING AMERICA AGAINST TERRORISM ACT OF 2001 (USA ACT)

The Administration commends the Senate leadership and the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Senate Judiciary Committee on reaching agreement on S. 1510. This bill contains, in some form, virtually all of the proposals made by the Administration in the wake of the terrorist attacks perpetrated against the United States on September 11th. The Administration strongly supports passage of this bill.

The Administration’s initial proposals, on which S. 1510 is based, were designed to provide Federal law enforcement and national security officials with the tools and resources necessary to disrupt, weaken, and counter the infrastructure of terrorist organizations, to prevent terrorist attacks, and to punish and defeat terrorists and those who harbor them. S. 1510 includes the provisions proposed by the Administration in three main areas: (1) information gathering and sharing; (2) substantive criminal law and criminal procedure; and (3) immigration procedures. The Administration strongly supports passage of these provisions. The Administration also supports valuable provisions, introduced by the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, aimed at improving the Nation’s border protection.

Information Gathering and Sharing

Existing laws fail to provide national security authorities and law enforcement authorities with critical tools they need to fight and win the war against terrorism. For example, technology has dramatically outpaced the Nation’s statutes. Many important intelligence gathering laws were enacted decades ago, in and for an era of rotary telephones. Meanwhile, the Nation’s enemies use e-mail, the Internet, mobile communications and voice mail.

S. 1510 contains numerous provisions that address this problem by helping to make the intelligence and surveillance statutes more “technology-neutral.” Specifically, the bill updates the pen-register, trap-and-trace, and Title III-wiretap statutes to cover computer and mobile communications more effectively, while ensuring that the scope of the authority remains the same.

The bill also provides for nationwide scope of orders and search warrants, and other practical changes that will enable law enforcement to work more efficiently and effectively.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Madam President, I have 5 minutes, but I will not use it. I want to make two very quick points.

One, as a former prosecutor, I am sympathetic to the comments of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think all of us ought to be respectful of what the majority leader has said about the delicacy and the balance. Even within that delicacy, there are some very legitimate concerns.

It is my hope that when this goes to conference, some of the positions of the Senate will be thought about carefully and respected and that the Senate may even be able to improve what we have by taking those into account.

The second point is that there is within this legislation for the first time a very significant effort on money laundering. I will say to my colleagues that of all the weapons in this war and for all of our might militarily, the most significant efforts to ferret out and stop terrorism are going to come from the combination of information, intelligence that we gather and process, and from our ability to take unconventional steps, particularly those such as the money-laundering measures.

Senator LEVIN has done an outstanding job of helping to frame that, as has Senator SARBANES. The truth is, there are banking interests that even to this moment still resist living up to the standards of the Basel convention and the international standards about knowing your customer and being part of the law enforcement effort rather than a blockade to it.

We are told there may be some effort through the House to try to strip this out. It is my hope that the Senate will stand firm and hold to the full measure of what President Bush has asked us to do.

This will be a long effort, a painstaking effort. If we are serious about it, we have to have the law enforcement tools to make this happen.

One of the most critical ones is empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to do a reasonable, ratcheted, sort of geared process of addressing the concerns of ferreting out money laundering and taking the money away from these illicit interests around the globe. They are not just in terrorism. They are linked to money laundering, to the illegal drug trade, and all have been included in the same network which also funds the terrorists themselves.

We recognize that three-quarters of the heroin that reaches the United States comes from Afghanistan. The Taliban have been both trafficking in that heroin. These networks and the interconnectedness of them to the banking institutions, the financial marketplace, are absolutely essential for us as we fight a war on terrorism.

I hope this money-laundering component will be part of the final terrorism bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I thank Chairman LEAHY, Chairman SARBANES, and members of their committees, for including our very strong anti-money-laundering provisions in the antiterrorism bill. The antiterrorism bill is simply incomplete unless it has anti-money-laundering provisions. Our provisions are strong provisions. They will help prevent terrorists and other criminals from using our banking system to fund their activities which are terrorizing this country.

There apparently is going to be a continuing effort in the House of Representatives to strip the anti-money-laundering provisions, which we have worked so hard on, from the antiterrorism bill. It is my understanding the White House will support keeping those provisions in the bill. Our committees have worked very hard to keep independent provisions in the antiterrorism bill. Unless these provisions are in there, we are providing the executive branch with only half a tool box in the fight against terrorism.

Three years ago, the minority staff of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations which I now chair, began its investigation into money laundering using U.S. banks. Three years, three sets of hearings, two reports and a five-volume record on correspondent banking and money laundering was the result.

We found, not surprisingly, that U.S. banks have accounts for foreign banks and that the customers of those foreign banks can then use the U.S. banks to move their money. But if foreign banks do a poor job in screening their customers, criminals and terrorists can end up using U.S. banks for their criminal purposes.

We found that U.S. banks do a poor job in screening the foreign banks they accept as correspondent customers. Banks told us “a bank is a bank is a bank” but that’s not true. There are good banks and bad banks. We found numerous banks where the bank was engaged in criminal activity or had such poor banking practices any criminal could be a customer. If a bad bank has a correspondent account with a U.S. bank, customers of that bad bank have access to U.S. financial system. Then criminals, including drug traffickers and terrorists, are able to use our financial systems to carry out their crimes.

In response to what we learned, we developed a bill—S. 1371, the Money Laundering Abatement Act introduced in early August.

It’s a bipartisan bill, and I would like to recognize my cosponsors—in particular, Senator CHUCK GRASSLEY who has helped to lead the fight for including this money laundering legislation on this anti-terrorism bill. The cosponsors in addition to Senator GRASSLEY are: Senators SARBANES, Kyl, DeWine, Bill Nelson, Durbin, Kerry and Stabenow. The provisions of this bill have been included in the legislation we are now considering.

We now know that the September 11 terrorists used our financial institutions and systems to help accomplish their goals. They used credit cards, and wire transfers involving U.S. banks in Florida, New York, Pennsylvania. We’ve seen the photos of two of the terrorists using an ATM machine. Osama bin Laden has bragged about it. There are reports of large, unpaid credit card bills.

We know that current law is not tough enough in area of correspondent banking—the mechanism used to transfer money around the globe. There are too many holes that let in bad banks and bad actors, and we need to close them.

Look at what we’ve learned just in the last few days about bin Laden and al-Qaeda. Several U.S. banks have had correspondent accounts for a Sudanese bank called the al Shamal Islamic Bank. A 1996 State Department fact sheet states that bin Laden helped finance the bank in the amount of $50 million. A respected international newsletter on intelligence matters, Indigo Publications in March 16, 2000, said bin Laden remains a leading shareholder, although the al Shamal Bank apparently denies that. Theimony in the February 2001 criminal trial of the 1998 terrorist bombings of U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, revealed that a bin Laden associate who handled financial transactions for al-Qaeda testified al-Qaeda had a known correspondent account at a Sudanese bank, the Shamal Islamic Bank. The trial of the 1998 terrorist bombings of U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, revealed that a bin Laden associate who handled financial transactions for al-Qaeda testified al-Qaeda had a known correspondent account at a Sudanese bank, the Shamal Islamic Bank.

Shamal Bank to his account in a U.S. bank in Arlington, Texas, to purchase a plane in the United States for bin Laden. He said he personally delivered the plane to bin Laden.

Why did this bank have a correspondent account with a U.S. bank? Why should we allow that to happen?

Even today, when you look at the al Shamal bank website, the bank is still active and advertises an extensive correspondent network. Three U.S. banks have correspondent accounts with al Shamal. One of those banks has closed its account, but the two other banks continue to have accounts, although the accounts are frozen. Those accounts are now inactive because Sudan, home country of al Shamal, is on the list of terrorist countries and any business with the government of those countries has to be approved. But the accounts were operational at one point in time. Moreover, al Shamal bank has correspondent accounts with other foreign banks which have accounts with U.S. banks.

That means al Shamal bank can still be using the U.S. financial system through an account with a foreign bank that has a correspondent account with a U.S. bank. We call this nesting, a serious problem. It means the U.S. financial system; require U.S. financial institutions to exercise due diligence; add foreign corruption offenses to the predicate crimes that U.S. investigators, to money laundering prosecution; and close a major forfeiture loophole involving foreign banks.

First is the shell bank ban in Section 313 of S. 1510. This provision is a very important one, because it attempts to eliminate from the U.S. financial system one category of foreign banks that carry the highest money laundering risks in the banking world today. Those are foreign offshore shell banks, which are banks that have no physical presence anywhere and no affiliation with any bank that has a physical presence. Our Subcommittee investigation found that these shell banks carry the highest money laundering risks in the banking world, because they are inherently unavailable for effective oversight. There is no office where a bank regulator or law enforcement official can go to observe bank operations, review documents, talk to bank officials, or freeze funds. Some are utilized by a few countries now issuing licenses for unaffiliated shell banks; they include Nauru, Vanuatu, and Montenegro. Nauru alone is believed to maintain licenses for somewhere between 400 and 3,000 offshore shell banks, none of which are being actively supervised, and some of which are suspected of laundering funds for Russian organized crime. A staff report that we issued in February of this year includes four detailed case histories of offshore shell banks used to open correspondent accounts at U.S. banks and used them to move funds related to drug trafficking, bribe money and financial fraud money. The possibility that terrorists are also using shell banks to conduct their operations is remote and cannot be ignored. That is why this provision seeks to exclude shell banks from the U.S. financial system.

The provision flat-out prohibits U.S. financial institutions from opening an account in a shell bank. It also requires U.S. financial institutions to take reasonable steps to make sure that other foreign banks are not allowing shell banks to use their U.S. accounts to gain entry to the U.S. financial system. The point is to prevent shell banks from getting direct or indirect access to U.S. financial accounts. The shell bank ban applies to both banks and securities firms operating in the United States, so that it is as broad and as effective as possible.

The provision directs the Treasury Secretary to provide regulatory guidance to U.S. financial institutions on the reasonable steps they have to take to guard against shell banks using accounts opened for other foreign banks. One possible approach would be for U.S. financial institutions to include a new section in the standard language they use to open accounts for foreign banks asking the foreign bank to certify that it will not allow any shell bank to use its U.S. accounts. The U.S. financial institution could then rely on the ground that the request for countered evidence to the contrary indicating that a shell bank was actually using the account, in which case the financial institution would have to take reasonable steps to protect the evidence and determine whether a shell bank was, in fact, using the U.S. account.

The provision contains one exception to the shell bank ban, which should be narrowed concern to prevent a U.S. financial system to the greatest extent possible. This exception allows U.S. financial institutions to open an account for a shell bank that is both affiliated with another bank that maintains a physical presence and subject to supervision by the banking regulatory of that affiliated bank. This exception is intended to allow U.S. financial institutions to do business with shell branches of large, established banks on the ground that the established bank can and does oversee all of that bank’s branches, including any shell branch.

This exception could, of course, be abused. It is possible that any established bank in a jurisdiction with weak anti-money laundering controls could open a shell branch in another country with equally weak controls and try to use that shell branch to launder funds in ways that are unlikely to be detected or stopped by the bank regulator in its home jurisdiction. In that case, while the shell bank exception would not flat-out bar U.S. financial institutions from opening an account in a shell branch, another provision would come into play and require the U.S. financial institution to exercise enhanced due diligence before opening an account for this shell bank. I would hope that U.S. financial institutions would not open such an account—that they would exercise common sense and restraint and refrain from doing business with a shell operation that is affiliated with a poorly regulated bank and inherently resistant to effective oversight.

Many U.S. financial institutions already have a policy against doing business with shell banks, but at least one major U.S. bank, Citibank, has a history of taking on shell banks as clients. In order to keep those clients, Citibank tried very hard to expand the exception in this section to also allow U.S. accounts for shell banks affiliated with foreign banks, but not with banks, such as securities firms or financial holding companies. The broad exception was firmly and explicitly rejected by both the Senate Banking Committee and the House Financial Services Committee, because it would have opened a gaping loophole in the shell bank ban and rendered the ban largely ineffective. All a shell bank would have had to do to evade the ban was establish an affiliated shell corporation and call it a financial services company in order to be eligible to open a U.S. bank account. The Citibank approach would, for example, have allowed a shell bank established by bin Laden’s financial holding company, Taba Investments, to open accounts at U.S. securities firms that would perpetuate the very problem that the Senate investigation identified in two of its shell bank case histories involving M.A. Bank and Federal Bank, each of which opened Citibank accounts in Texas and used them to deposit millions of dollars in suspect funds. The bottom line is that U.S. banks need to do a much better job in screening the foreign banks and wealthy foreign individuals they allow to open accounts in the United States.

The due diligence provision would address that problem. It would impose an ongoing, industry-wide legal obligation on all types of financial institutions operating in the United States to exercise greater care when opening correspondent and private banking accounts for foreign banks and wealthy foreign individuals. Its due diligence requirements are intended to function as preventative measures to stop dubious banks and as well as terrorists or other criminals from using foreign banks’ accounts to gain access to the U.S. financial system.

The general obligation to exercise due diligence with respect to all correspondent and private banking accounts is contained in paragraph (1). Paragraphs (2) and (3) then provide minimum standards for the enhanced due diligence that U.S. banks must exercise with respect to certain correspondent and private banking accounts. Paragraph (4)(B) gives the Treasury Secretary discretion to issue regulatory guidance to further clarify the due diligence policies, procedures and controls required by paragraph (1).

The regulatory authority granted in this section is intended to help financial institutions understand what is expected of them. The Secretary may want to issue regulations that help different types of financial institutions to understand their obligations under the due diligence provision. However, one caveat needs to be made with respect to the Secretary’s exercise of this regulatory authority, and that involves how it is to be coordinated with Section 5318(a) of title 31. That broad coverage is exactly what is contemplated by this statute. The bottom line, then, is that the Secretary is intended to apply the due diligence requirements broadly to all U.S. financial institutions to protect the United States from the money laundering threat posed by shell banks. That means that the Secretary should refrain from granting any exemption to the shell bank ban without a very compelling justification.

This same reasoning also applies to the shell bank ban. There will be some that will feel our legislation or an exemption from the ban, asking the Treasury Secretary to use the authority available under Section 5318(a)(6). Again, the intent of the Committee and this Senate is to enact as comprehensive a shell bank ban as possible to protect the United States from the money laundering threat posed by shell banks.

The third provision I want to discuss is the provision in Section 315 adding new foreign corruption offenses to the list of crimes that can trigger a U.S. money laundering prosecution. This is another important advance in U.S. anti-money laundering law. Right now, because foreign corruption offenses are not currently on the list of crimes that can trigger a U.S. money laundering prosecution, corrupt foreign leaders may be using U.S. financial institutions as a safe place for their funds. This provision will make it clear to those who loot their countries, or accept bribes, or steal from their people, that their illicit money is not welcome here. Our banks do not want that money, and if it is deposited in U.S. banks, it is subject to seizure and the depositor may become subject to a money laundering prosecution.

The fourth provision would close a major forfeiture loophole in U.S. law that allows foreign banks to advertise foreign bank accounts. This provision is in Section 319(a) of S. 1510. It would make a depositor’s funds in a foreign bank’s U.S. correspondent account subject to the same civil forfeiture rules that apply to depositors funds in other U.S. bank accounts. Right now, due to a quirk in the law, U.S. law enforcement faces a significant and unusual legal barrier to seizing funds from a correspondent account. Unlike a regular U.S. bank account, it is not possible to freeze funds in a correspondent account to show that criminal proceeds were deposited into the correspondent account; instead, because funds in a correspondent account are considered to be the funds of the foreign bank itself, the government must also show that the foreign bank was somehow part of the wrongdoing.

That’s not only a tough job, that can be an impossible job. In many cases, the foreign bank will not have been part of the wrongdoing, but that’s a strange reason for letting the foreign depositor who was engaged in a wrongdoing escape forfeiture. And in those cases where the foreign bank may have been involved, no prosecutor will be able to allege it in a complaint without first getting the resources needed to chase the foreign bank abroad.

Take, for example, the case of Barclays Bank, which has frozen an account held in its Cayman Islands offices and is expressing concern that it may be associated with terrorism. If that account had been a correspondent account in the United States opened for Barclays Bank, U.S. law enforcement could have been unable to freeze the particular deposits suspected of being associated with terrorism, because the funds were in the Barclays correspondent account and Barclays itself was apparently unaware of any wrongdoing. That doesn’t make sense. U.S. law enforcement should be able to freeze the funds.

Section 319(a) would eliminate that quirk by placing civil forfeitures of funds in correspondent accounts on the same footing as forfeitures of funds in all other U.S. accounts. There is just no reason banks should be shielded from forfeitures when U.S. banks would not be.

Section 319 has many other important provisions as well, including provisions dealing with Federal Receivers, legal service on foreign banks and more.

I want to again thank Senator S. BANES and Senator LEAHY and their staffs for their hard work and cooperative spirit in bringing this bill to the floor and including the provisions of our bill in it.

I need to add that the hard work in passing this bill will be for naught if some of the banks have their way in the House and in Conference Committee. I’m very concerned with reports that there is an effort in the House to separate the money laundering and anti-terrorism bills, so money laundering will be considered separately. The banks should be working with us to find out even more ways in which the money flow of terrorists can be shut down.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to print letters of support for this legislation and testimony from the FBI in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the Rec...
Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1901, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLS). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] proposes an amendment numbered 1901.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I seek unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To modify the provisions relating to access to business records under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978)

Strike section 215 and insert the following:

SEC. 215. ACCESS TO BUSINESS RECORD UNDER FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SURVEILLANCE ACT OF 1978.

(A) In general.—Section 502 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1862) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking “authorizing a common carrier” and all that follows through “records” and inserting “requiring a business to produce any tangible things (including books, records, papers, documents, and other items)”;

(2) in subsection (b), by striking “of the common carrier, public accommodation facility, physical storage facility, or vehicle rental facility” each place it appears and inserting “business”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The text of section 501 of that Act (50 U.S.C. 1801) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 501. In this title, the terms ‘agent of a foreign power’, ‘foreign intelligence information’, ‘foreign intelligence purpose’, and ‘Attorney General’ have the meanings given such terms in section 101.”

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, this amendment has to do with section 215 in the bill. It allows the Government, under FISA, to compel businesses to turn over records to assist in an investigation of terrorism or espionage. The provision makes two significant changes from current law. Under current law, the FBI can seek records from a limited set of businesses—public accommodations, such as hotels and motels, car rental companies, storage facilities, and travel records, such as those from airlines. Current law also requires the FBI to demonstrate to the court that the records pertain to an agent of a foreign power. The FBI cannot go on a fishing expedition of records of citizens of this country who might have had incidental contact with a target of an investigation. But under section 215 of this bill, all businesses can be compelled to produce, including those containing sensitive personal information such as medical records

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I tell the distinguished Senator from Michigan and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who made such strong and valid points on money laundering, we just received from the administration their statement of policy saying: This includes money laundering, other financial infrastructure provisions arising from bank secrecy legislation proposals. These provisions were added to this bill after unanimous approval to have these provisions in the Senate Banking Committee. The administration supports the effort to strengthen this.

And so on. They are extremely important and I can assure both Senators that I will strongly support retention of this in conference.

from hospitals or doctors, or educational records, or records of what books someone has taken out of the library.

This is an enormous expansion of authority, compounded by the elimination of content. My amendment simply maintains protections for medical records. It provides that medical records can only be obtained with an investigative subpoena signed by a judge, and that subpoena may be issued only when it appears upon the affidavit of the prosecutor that an interest requires it to be issued. In order to establish a compelling State interest, the prosecutor must state facts and circumstances sufficient to support probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed, and that the information relative to the commission of that offense is in the possession of the person or institution to whom the subpoena is directed.

My State of Wisconsin, along with many other States, has very strong library confidentiality laws which require a court order for disclosure of public library system records. Texas, for example, permits disclosure of library records "to a law enforcement agency or prosecutor under a court order or subpoena obtained after a showing to a court that: (A) disclosure of the record is necessary to protect the public safety; (B) the record is evidence of an offense or constitutes evidence that a particular person committed an offense."

Missouri and Nevada library records confidentiality laws both require that a court find "that the disclosure of such record is necessary to protect the public safety or to prosecute a crime."

South Carolina’s library records confidentiality law permits disclosure "in accordance with a proper judicial order upon finding that disclosure of the records is necessary to protect public safety; to a police officer, or upon showing of good cause before a presiding judge in a civil matter."

In short, our States have made policy judgments about the protection to which certain kinds of records are justifiable. We have Federal laws that express similar judgments—Federal Educational Records Privacy Act. Indeed, as I will mention, this bill provides new standards for the production of educational records in connection with terrorism investigations. So any fear that what section 215 does is to effectually trump any and all of these State and Federal privacy protections. I think that is a result that most legislators and the public will not support. My amendment simply provides that this new authority to compel the production of business records through an order of a FISA court does not apply if another State or Federal law governs the law enforcement or intelligence access to those records.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I say, again, to colleagues that this amendment to the Senator from Wisconsin introduced makes sure that our amendment does not and cannot make it possible for any FISA court to obtain the educational records of virtually any student without a court order. I and many other Senators had serious problems with that provision, and it was significantly changed before S. 1510 was introduced. Section 508 now does require a court order and does provide a specific showing that the Attorney General must make to obtain the order to get at these educational records. But if section 215 is enacted without my amendment a university could be forced to turn over such records as "sensible things" on a much lower showing.

The administration asserts that it is too great a burden for the Government to abide by existing privacy protections and seek court orders to obtain certain sensitive information specifically identified by Congress and State legislators. I remind my colleagues that the protections I seek to preserve were carefully drafted and debated and enacted at a time when legislators could thoughtfully consider the full weight of granting such protections. We are now asked to set these protections aside with scant discussion of either the merits or the consequences of such a proposal, during a time of incredible strain on our democratic principles, and for an indeterminate length of time.

If my amendment is adopted, law enforcement will still have access to all of the information it seeks. But my amendment simply maintains the integrity of protections enacted by Congress and State legislatures for certain kinds of sensitive information to ensure that access to this information is given only where it is necessary. It makes sure that this provision does not become the platform or an excuse for a fishing expedition for damaging information on American citizens who are not the subjects of FISA surveillance.

I reserve the remainder of my time.
The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin goes to the heart of the concerns that a lot of the people we represent have. I imagine that the vote may be overwhelmingly in opposition to this amendment. That has been the pattern so far.

Again, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for raising these questions. This is what we should be doing. I conclude this way: I really think, in part, because of the kind of questions the Senator from Wisconsin has raised—again, I am not a lawyer—in looking at this bill, Mr. President, I say to Senator LEAHY, it seems to me he and others have done a great job and are doing everything possible to make this more balanced. There are so many good provisions in this bill that we need, I believe that.

I hope we can keep the sunset provision, which is so essential to oversight, because I think what is good is the provisions of this legislation that focus on civil liberties and what is not quite so good is the parts of this bill that reach way beyond that.

Yes, there is a lot of good. I will support it. I will reserve final judgment of that and it. I thank my colleagues, Senator HATCH included, for their work. Sometimes people can honestly disagree. I know this is important. I know where we are as a nation, but the Senator from Wisconsin has raised important concerns tonight, and as well as we hope we do better in conference.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota. He said it exactly right. Each of us who spoke on these amendments tonight cares just as much as everybody in this room about the fight against terrorism and what we just want to make sure we do not go beyond that goal with unnecessary language that intrudes on our civil liberties. That is it. That is all we are trying to do.

I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for the time and his energies this evening. We are 12 hours behind and that and that there are many things we must accomplish in our acts to fight terrorism. This is probably one of the most significant pieces of legislation that affects our home-front activities in fighting that battle.

There are many good things in this bill. I am very proud of the authorizing language to triple the resources for our northern borders. I am very proud of the language in the bill that basically will set a new technology standard for our visa program so we can better identify people coming into this country. I am very proud of the many tools in the bill for law enforcement. I ask unanimous consent that the column in the Washington Post be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 10, 2001—

When Care Beats Haste: The complex amendments to legislation that the administration sent Congress less than a month ago could reach the floors of both houses this week. The original proposal has been amended many times. It is a hasty submission, but civil liberties groups continue to warn with cause that some of the detention and surveillance provisions would give the government far more power than is either necessary or healthy.

Some of the members of both parties who helped construct the current compromises are likewise uneasy about their own handiwork, but reluctant to see as holding up a bill the administration insists it needs right away. The reluctance will be the great er now that the country is engaged in military action in Afghanistan; there is fear—we have no doubt well-grounded—of retaliation. But dangerous moments are precisely the ones when it is most important that civil liberties be protected.

The House Judiciary Committee has dealt with the conflicting pressures in part by putting a kind of asterisk after the surveillance sections of the bill. It has “sunset” them, meaning the powers they confer will expire after two years unless a subsequent Congress, having seen how the work out, votes to extend them. The administration opposes the sunset provision and succeeded in keeping it out of the Senate version. But it’s a reasonable compromise. A bill such as this is a balancing of risks—the risk of further attack versus the risk to civil liberties in seeking to forestall the attack. If the bill is as benign as the administration insists, it has nothing to fear from a sunset provision, which ought to be retained.

Parts of the administration proposal were sensible and are not in dispute: allowing the government in an age of cell phones to seek court approval for placing a wiretap on a particular phone, for example. Others were drawn too loosely, and some still need work. The administration had sought authority to detain indefinitely non-citizens who are reasonable general thought even might be engaged in terrorism or other activities that endangered national security. That power has been greatly circumscribed. A person not charged with a crime after seven days can be held only if the government is moving to deport him. The question, which the bills don’t clearly answer, is how is judicial determination, can it hold him then?

Wiretap authority now is easier to get for foreign intelligence than for law enforcement purposes. The legislation would make it easier still. The question then becomes how to make sure that the new authority isn’t abused—in fact used for law enforcement purposes or fishing expeditions in such a way as to make such surveillance far more commonplace than now. Related issues have to do with the sharing of law enforcement information among government officials. There are ways to provide the broader authority the government says it needs while hedging against its abuse, in our view, not all of those have been fully explored.

So too with the power the bill would give law enforcement officials to obtain records—such as a phone bill—of an individual, including addresses of e-mail sent and received. Phone records are now available to law enforce ment agencies more or less on request—when were calls were made from phone A to phone B? what should be the Internet analogue?

The administration was said yesterday to bepressing for quick passage by both houses of the Senate measure; the more careful work of the House Judiciary Committee would be set aside. That’s wrong, and an acquiescent step that in the long run Congress likely would regret.

Ms. CANTWELL. This article said it best with the headline: “When Care Beats Haste”:

That seems pretty simple. We have not worked on these issues. We should not work on them in haste.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE

S10585
This is a very complex time. It is no ordinary time for our country. This process has to remember those fourth amendment rights that we have so diligently fought for in the past. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am grateful for the remarks of the Senator from Washington. I am afraid we are going to read them in a few years and wish maybe we listened more closely to what we are doing on this particular provision.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah wanted to say something for the record.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues.

I oppose Senator FEINGOLD’s amendment to Section 215 of the bill. Section 215 allows federal law enforcement to apply for a court order to obtain records and other evidence in the course of an investigation to protect against international terrorism, clandestine intelligence activities. This provision has many safeguards built in to prevent its misuse.

For instance, the application must be made by the Director of the FBI or his designee, whose rank cannot be lower than an Assistant Special Agent in Charge, and specify that the records concerned are sought for an authorized investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities. Additionally, the investigation must be conducted pursuant to approved Attorney General guidelines and may not be conducted on a United States person solely upon the basis of activities protected by the first amendment to the Constitution.

As this amendment balances the investigatory needs of the FBI with privacy concerns and provides adequate protection, while not allowing a host of state-law provisions to stand in the way of national security needs. Senator FEINGOLD’s amendment would condition the issuance of the court order on a myriad of federal and state-law provisions. Such conditioning will have the effect of making investigations to protect against international terrorism more difficult than investigations of certain domestic criminal violations.

Senator FEINGOLD’s amendment purports to preserve privacy protections in place for certain records. The amendment’s effect, however, will be to place foreign international and intelligence investigations at a disadvantage to criminal investigations. For example, this amendment would make it more difficult for the government to obtain business records in a foreign-intelligence or foreign counter-intelligence investigation through a court order than it is to obtain the same records in a criminal health-care fraud or child pornography investigation through a grand jury subpoena or administrative subpoena. (see 18 U.S.C. 3486).

Federal law enforcement officers investigating the activities of a terrorist organization or foreign intelligence target should not face a greater burden than that imposed on investigators of health-care fraud or child pornography.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, the administration originally wanted administrative subpoena authority in foreign intelligence cases for government access to any business record. I was able to reach agreement with the administration to subject this authority to judicial review and to bar investigations based on the basis of activities protected by the First Amendment.

The Feingold amendment would ensure that current laws providing safeguards for certain types of records, such as medical and educational records, be maintained. Again, it is unfortunate that the administration did not accept this compromise.

Mr. President, we are prepared to yield back the remainder of our time if the Senator from Wisconsin is prepared to yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. If the majority leader is going to speak, I would like to respond. If not, I will simply yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield back the remainder of our time.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote ‘aye.’

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 8, as follows:

NORTHERN BORDER SECURITY

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the members of the Judiciary Committee, especially Chairman LEAHY and Senator HATCH for their hard work on this legislation. This bill will give the administration an increased ability to fight terrorism on many fronts. One section of the bill that is extremely important to my state addresses Northern Border Security. This bill will triple the number of Border Patrol, Customs Service, and INS inspectors along America’s northern borders. Alaska and Alaskans are in a unique position. One section of our northern border stretches from Maine through, my good friend’s home state of Vermont all the way to Washington State. A second section is that of my home State. As you know we are the largest State in the Nation with an enormous border with Canada that runs over 1,538 miles. We have one of the busiest international cargo airports in the world, which has lost a number of carriers since the September 11 attacks due to grossly inadequate staffing at our secure, sterile customs facility. We also have several major international ports scattered throughout Alaska including the Port of Anchorage, which handles the most container traffic in Alaska; Dutch Harbor, which is America’s busiest commercial fishing port; and Valdez, where millions of barrels of North Slope crude oil are sent by pipeline to the “South 48.”

Section 1101 of the bill that addresses the Northern Border Security do not mention Alaska specifically. I intended to offer an amendment to insure that we are part of the definition. But as my good friend the Senator from Vermont pointed out to me, other northern border States are not mentioned specifically either. I understand that it is the intent of this legislation that Alaska and all other states that border Canada... are “Northern Border” States and that INS, Border Patrol, U.S. Customs service and others should look at all of these states when addressing security issues. Would the manager of this bill if my understanding is correct?

Mr. President, I have heard Senator from Alaska is correct. Alaska is definitely part of America’s Northern Border and it was the intent of the committee and the Senate that it be part of that definition.

The unfolding facts about how the terrorists who committed the September 11 attack were able to enter this country without difficulty are chilling. Since the attacks many have pointed to our northern border as vulnerable to the entry of future terrorists. This is not surprising when a simple review of the numbers shows that the northern border has been routinely short-changed in personnel. While the number of border patrol agents along the southern border has increased over the last few years to over 8,000, the number at the northern border has remained the same as a decade ago at 300. This remains true despite the fact that Adm Adm Rassam, the Algerian who planned to blow up the Los Angeles International Airport in 1999, and who has been linked to those involved in the September 11 attacks, chose to enter the United States at our northern border. It will remain an inviting target until we dramatically improve our security.

The USA Act includes my proposals to provide the substantial and long overdue assistance for our law enforcement and border control efforts along the Northern Border. My home State of Vermont has seen huge increases in Customs and INS activity since the signing of NAFTA. The number of people coming through our borders has risen steeply over the years, but our staff and our resources have not.

I’m this legislation authorizes in section 402—tripling the number of Border Patrol, INS inspectors, and Customs Service employees in each of the States along the Northern Border. Alaska is certainly one of those States. I was gratified when 22 Senators—Democrats and Republicans—wrote to the President supporting such an increase, and I am pleased that the administration agreed that this critical law enforcement improvement should be included in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont. With this clear statement of of the legislation I will not offer an amendment to specifically name Alaska as a Northern Border State.

ALIEN TERRORIST REMOVAL COURT

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, it had been my intention to offer an amendment which would strengthen provisions in the bill to deal with known terrorist aliens. As Senator LOTT well remembers, we worked in 1996, created the Alien Terrorist Removal Court, to hear cases against aliens who were known terrorist and to allow the Justice Department to deport these aliens without divulging classified information to the terrorist organization.

Mr. LOTT. I know the Senator from New Hampshire has been working on a long time on this issue. In fact, when he sponsored this legislation back in 1995, I was a cosponsor of his bill. He has been a leader on this issue, he passed his legislation, and the Court was created.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. That is correct. As the leader knows, there are some changes that are needed to improve the law, which is what my amendment was going to be about.

Mr. LOTT. I understand, and I agree that the law needs to be strengthened.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I would say to my colleagues, all the tools we are giving to law enforcement in this bill are irrelevant if we cannot deport these terrorist who are living in our country preparing to terrorize American citizens. Page 162 of the bill says the Attorney General shall place an alien in deportation proceedings in 7 days of catching him, or charge him with a criminal act, or else the bill says “the Attorney General shall release the alien.”

Mr. President, the problem is that most of these terrorist have not committed criminal acts until they are ready to attack. Therefore, in most of these cases, the only option is to deport them.

Mr. LOTT. It is my opinion, that if we cannot deport known terrorist, we should do it. We cannot let the Justice Department be barred because the evidence was too sensitive to use in Court.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. That is exactly the problem. Under current law, the Attorney General would have to give a declassified summary of all the secret evidence used in the deportation proceedings to the terrorist.

Now, why would we compromise our intelligence sources and methods by revealing sensitive intelligence to a known terrorist? The intelligence community would never allow it, and with good reason. But as a result, the Justice Department has never once used the alien terrorist removal court to deport anyone.

Mr. LOTT. That is my understanding, and it is a serious problem. I am in complete agreement with the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I have been speaking with the Attorney General, as well as our colleagues in the Administration to address this issue. As I said, it had been my intention to offer an amendment to resolve this problem by eliminating the requirement for the Attorney General to give this sensitive information to the alien terrorist before deportation. I have also discussed this with the Attorney General, who indicated to me that he supports this provision, and after discussions with the Leader, I have decided in the interest of moving the legislation to withhold my amendment. At this time, with the assurance of the Leader and the Administration that we will work to solve this problem in conference,

Mr. LOTT. Let me say to the Senator that he can count me as a cosponsor of this amendment. It is an excellent amendment, it is needed, and I commit to the Senator that I will do my best to see that it is added in conference. I have also talked about this issue with the Attorney General, and he indicated to me that the Administration supports your amendment and that he will also work to support it in conference. So I appreciate his withholding at this time so we can get this bill to conference where we can work to get the Smith amendment added to greatly improve this bill.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I thank the Leader for his strong support, and I am pleased that the administration is also supportive. I know how many long hours the Attorney General is putting into this issue, and how committed he is to winning this war on terrorism. I look forward to passing this important provision which will be an invaluable tool for the Attorney General and the President in this war.

DETERRING MONEY LAUNDERING

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I would like to clarify with Chairman SARBAVES my understanding of the provision in Title III, the anti-money laundering provisions. In the antiterrorism package, entitled “Section 314. Cooperative Efforts to Deter Money Laundering”. As the Chairman is well aware, Section 314(b) is intended to address concerns about regulatory barriers that stand in the way of developing efficient mechanisms and services that financial institutions can use to fulfill their regulatory compliance obligations. The regulations to be issued by the Secretaries, and potentially by bank and thrift regulators as well, could further this purpose by reconciling rules that could be interpreted in a way that places conflicting burdens on financial institutions.

Does that comport with the Chairman’s understanding of the intent of the provision and how that intent could best be carried out by the regulators?

Mr. SARBAVES. I thank the Senator for his question. Yes, that is also my understanding of Section 314.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I am going to support this legislation, and I want to commend all the Senator DASCHLE and LOTT—and Senators LEAHY and HATCH, for their efforts in developing the bill. Clearly, there is no higher priority than combating terrorism and protecting our national security, but we do have real concerns about the process by which this legislation has come to the floor, and about the implications of some provisions for fundamental civil liberties.

There are several provisions in this legislation that make a real, positive contribution to the fight against terrorism. Other senators have discussed some of the highlights in more depth, so let me just focus on a few.

First, this bill includes legislation approved by the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, on which I sit, that will help authorities combat money laundering. This is essential if we are to deprive terrorists of resources. The bill will require additional reporting of suspicious transactions, require identification of the foreign owners of certain U.S. accounts, and impose other requirements on financial institutions to give authorities a greater ability to identify and prosecute money launderers. I also note that the bill includes a provision I authored that calls for a study into the possibility of expanding the legislation to include hedge funds and other investment services that also can be used by terrorists to launder money.

Beyond the money laundering provisions, I also am pleased that this bill provides additional funding for the Victims of Crime Trust Fund. Coming from New Jersey, where thousands of our residents have been victimized by the tragedy at the World Trade Center, this is especially important to me. In my view, we as a nation have a responsibility to ensure that terrorism victims and their families are not left alone and uncompensated. That is why I am pleased that the bill would replenish the antiterrorism emergency reserve, replace the annual cap on the Crime Victims Trust Fund, authorize private contributions to the fund, and strengthen services for victims in other ways. While this is not all that we should be doing for victims and their families, I appreciate the work of the leaders in focusing on their needs.

I also pleased that the bill would triple the number of Border Patrol, Customs Service and immigration inspectors at our northern border. This would significantly enhance security over an area that has been understaffed. The bill also authorizes $100 million to improve INS and Customs technology and additional equipment for monitoring the U.S.-Canada border.

In addition, I want to highlight language in this bill that would establish two new crimes related to bioterrorism, including provisions to prohibit certain people from possessing a listed biological agent or toxin. There are many areas, we need to prepare for the threat of a biological or chemical attack, and I have introduced related legislation, S. 1508, that would require states to develop coordinated plans, and that would provide additional resources for hospitals and other health care providers. The threat of bioterrorism is real, and I would hope that our leaders will bring related legislation to the Senate floor as soon as possible.

While I support the provisions in this bill on money laundering, victim services, border enforcement, and bioterrorism, I do have serious concerns about the way this bill was put together, and about other provisions that raise serious questions about the protection of civil liberties.

It is deeply troubling to me that we would be taking up a bill that deals with such sensitive civil liberties matters without comprehensive hearings, and without even consideration by the relevant committee. We are talking about a 243-page bill that was developed behind closed doors by a handful of people operating under enormous time pressures. This raises fundamental questions that go to the very essence of our democracy, and our freedoms. It’s not something that should be done in haste, with so little opportunity for input from outside experts, the public, and all senators.

Perhaps because the legislation was developed so quickly, and in an environment so dominated by great public anxiety about security, there is a real risk that we will make serious mistakes. I am especially concerned about the provisions in this bill that require the detention of immigrants who are not terrorists, who are not criminals, but are merely suspected of future wrongdoing. In fact, these provisions go further, providing that certain residents who are charged with being deportable on terrorism grounds could be held indefinitely even if an immigration judge determines that the terrorism charges are false.

I yield the floor to Ms. Cantwell.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I support this bill, but I do so only with some reservations.

We are giving broad new powers to our law enforcement and intelligence communities—without the traditional safeguards of judicial review and congressional oversight.

I believe that many provisions of the bill, particularly those sections dealing with electronic eavesdropping and other terrorist assets—without the traditional safeguards of judicial review and congressional oversight.

I strongly believe that we should have included in this bill a sunset provision that would give Congress the opportunity to reassess whether these new tools are yielding the intended results in the war on terror, and I am hopeful that the final bill will emerge with this and other improvements.

If this bill is not improved through a conference process or other negotiation, I reserve the right to vote against a conference report.

However, I also believe this bill contains many provisions that will significantly advance our battle against terrorism. I thank the Chairman for his hard work on these provisions and appreciate his efforts particularly to strengthen security on our northern border.

Among the most important provisions in this bill is the authorization to triple staffing across our northern border. These increases in manpower are desperately needed. The northern border is patrolled by only 300 border patrol agents in contrast to the 9,000 on the southern border. More critically, at points of entry where suspect persons have repeatedly tried to enter or have entered, we currently lack sufficient staffing to adequately train INS agents and other law enforcement officials and INS agents to do their job well. We place a tremendous responsibility on the individuals charged with deciding whom to admit and whom to turn away.

One additional new tool this bill provides is the establishment of a visa technology standard to help secure our border. I personally worked to get language included in this bill that requires the State Department and the Department of Justice to develop a shared technology standard—so that we can be certain each individual who seeks entry into our country on a visa—is the person he or she claims to be.

American citizenship comes with deeply valued privileges and rights. One of the most basic of those rights is privacy. To require a fingerprint or a digital photograph of an alien seeking to enter our country is a reasonable and effective way to improve our ability to protect our country while still welcoming a vibrant flow of legal immigrants.

Unfortunately, aspects of this bill that impose unreasonable and unwarranted requirements on legal immigrants create a reasonable and effective way to improve our ability to protect our country while still welcoming a vibrant flow of legal immigrants.

I would like to believe that the expansion of the ability of the government to place wiretaps on the lines of American citizens—done in secret with insignificant reporting or opportunity for oversight by the Congress—will not be abused.

I would like to believe that technologies like that technologies like Carnivore will not be used to derive content from email communications.

But I am skeptical.

Several other aspects of this bill, when taken together, also have the potential to interfere with Americans’ enjoyment of their right to privacy without providing value in the fight against terrorists.

Those of us who feel strongly about how law enforcement might chip away at traditional privacy rights will closely watch how law enforcement uses these tools.

The events of September 11 have changed us as a country forever. We have been attacked on our own soil. Thousands have died, thousands more have been injured. Very simply, we must do all that we can to stop terrorism by finding and disrupting terrorist activities here and abroad. The challenge we face is to do this without compromising the value that make Americans unique and have allowed us to become great: respect for personal autonomy and the rights of the individual; and tolerance of all regardless of race or religion.

While I will vote for this bill, I also promise to engage in vigilant oversight of these new powers, and I urge those in the law enforcement and intelligence communities to use these powers wisely and with great deliberation.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1510, the Uniting and Strengthening America Act.

In the aftermath of September 11, we face two difficult and delicate tasks: to strengthen our security in order to prevent future terrorist attacks, and at the same time, to safeguard the individual liberties that make America a beacon of freedom to all the world.

I believe that when the President signs this anti-terrorism legislation into law, we will have achieved those two goals as best we now can.

The bill I will mention just a few key aspects of that bill.

First, the legislation brings our surveillance laws into the 21st century. Here are two of many examples. Under current law, the FBI can use a basic search warrant to access answering machine messages, but the FBI needs a different kind of warrant to get to voice mail. This law says the FBI can use a traditional warrant for both.

Another example: Under current law, a Federal court can authorize many electronic surveillance warrants only within the court’s limited jurisdiction. If the target of the investigation is in the judge’s jurisdiction, but the subject of the warrant is an Internet service provider located elsewhere, the warrant is no good as to that ISP. This bill allows the court overseeing an investigation to issue valid warrants nationwide.

Second, the act gives law enforcement officers and the foreign intelligence community the ability to share intelligence information with each other in defined contexts. For example, if they always obtain similar conditions, the FBI may share wiretap and grand jury information related to foreign and counter-intelligence. I appreciate concerns that this information-sharing authority could be abused. Like Chairman LEAHY, I would have preferred to see greater judicial oversight of these data exchanges. But I also believe we simply cannot prevail in the battle against terrorism if the right hand of our government has no idea what the left is doing.

Third, the act enhances intelligence authorities under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA). When I met with FBI agents in North Carolina shortly after September 11, they told me their number one priority was to streamline the FISA process. We’ve done that. We’ve said, for example, that the renewal periods of certain key FISA orders may be longer than the initial periods. This makes sure the FBI can carry out operations, not duplicative court applications.

Fourth, the bill would impose some new legal standards on judges as to what they can do and what they cannot do. But I am skeptical.

A more controversial change concerns the purpose of FISA surveillance. Under current law, a FISA wiretap order may only enter if the primary purpose of the surveillance is foreign intelligence gathering. The administration initially proposed changing the “primary purpose” requirement to a standard of “a purpose,” of foreign intelligence gathering. At a recent Intelligence Committee hearing, I was one of several Senators to raise constitutional questions about the Administration’s initial proposal. The last thing we want is to have investigations lost, and convictions overturned, because the surveillance is not constitutional. S. 1510 says that FISA surveillance requires not just “a purpose,” but “a significant purpose,” of foreign intelligence gathering. That new language is a substantial improvement to previous legislation.

The bill I will mention just a few key aspects of that bill.

First, the legislation brings our surveillance laws into the 21st century. Here are two of many examples. Under current law, the FBI can use a basic search warrant to access answering machine messages, but the FBI needs a different kind of warrant to get to voice mail. This law says the FBI can use a traditional warrant for both.

Another example: Under current law, a Federal court can authorize many electronic surveillance warrants only within the court’s limited jurisdiction. If the target of the investigation is in the judge’s jurisdiction, but the subject of the warrant is an Internet service provider located elsewhere, the warrant is no good as to that ISP. This bill allows the court overseeing an investigation to issue valid warrants nationwide.

Second, the act gives law enforcement officers and the foreign intelligence community the ability to share intelligence information with each other in defined contexts. For example, if they always obtain similar conditions, the FBI may share wiretap and grand jury information related to foreign and counter-intelligence. I appreciate concerns that this information-sharing authority could be abused. Like Chairman LEAHY, I would have preferred to see greater judicial oversight of these data exchanges. But I also believe we simply cannot prevail in the battle against terrorism if the right hand of our government has no idea what the left is doing.

Third, the act enhances intelligence authorities under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA). When I met with FBI agents in North Carolina shortly after September 11, they told me their number one priority was to streamline the FISA process. We’ve done that. We’ve said, for example, that the renewal periods of certain key FISA orders may be longer than the initial periods. This makes sure the FBI can carry out operations, not duplicative court applications.

Fifth, the bill expedites the hiring of translators by the FBI. It is unthink-able that our law enforcement agents could have critical raw intelligence that they simply cannot understand because they do not know the relevant language. This statute will help to change that state of affairs.

Finally, the bill makes the criminal law tougher on terrorists. We make it a crime to possess a biological agent or toxin in an amount with no reasonable, peaceful purpose, a crime to harbor a terrorist, a crime to provide material support to terrorism. And we say that when you commit a crime of terrorism, you can be prosecuted for that crime during—after—your limitations period. Statutes of limitations guarantee what lawyers call “repose.” Terrorists deserve no repose.

As Chairman LEAHY and Senator HATCH have both said, this legislation is not perfect, and the House-Senate Conference may yet make improvements. For example, the Conference might clarify that, as to aliens detained as national security threats, the law will secure the due process protections and judicial review required by the Constitution. The Supreme Court’s recent decisions in Zadvydas v. Davis and INS v. St. Cyr. The Conference might also sensibly include a sunrise of the new surveillance authorities, ensuring that Congress will reconsider this bill’s provisions, which touch such cherished liberties, in light of further experience and reflection.

The bill is not perfect, but it is a good bill, it is important to the Nation, and it is time to support it.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the antiterrorism bill, S. 1510. The bill would provide our nation’s law enforcement with important tools to more effectively investigate and prevent further attacks against the people of the United States.

At the outset, in response to concerns that some have raised, I want to make clear that we are not rushing to pass ill-conceived legislation.

During the past two Congresses, when I chaired the Judiciary Committee’s Subcommittee on Technology and Terrorism, the Subcommittee held 19 hearings on terrorism. I want to repeat that: 19. The witnesses who appeared before the Subcommittee included the then-Director of the FBI Louis Freeh and representatives of all three of the congressionally-mandated commissions on terrorism that have issued reports over the last two years. Additional hearings on terrorism were held by the full Judiciary Committee and by other committees.

Many of the provisions contained in the Attorney General’s proposed legislation are the result of the recommendations of one or more of the major terrorism commissions and have already been examined by the committee of jurisdiction. In fact, some of these provisions have already been voted on and passed by the Senate.

Indeed, as I will discuss more fully in a minute, the language sent forward by the Attorney General to establish national wire and trace authority was included in the Hatch-Feinstein-Kyl Amendment to the recently passed Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations bill. Much of the remaining language in that amendment was included in the Counterterrorism Act of 2000, which the Senate passed last fall, after a terrorist attack on the U.S.S. Cole killed 17 American sailors and injured another 39. That bill was based on recommendations of the bipartisan, congressionally-mandated National Commission on Terrorism, known as the Bremmer Commission, which was established in 1998 in response to the embassy bombings in Tanzania and Kenya.

One particularly important provision, which was included in the both the CJS bill and the current bill, updates the law to keep pace with technology. The provision on pen register and trap and trace devices 1. Would allow judges to enter pen/trap orders with nationwide scope and 2. Would codify current caselaw that holds that pen register orders apply to modem communication technologies such as e-mail and the Internet, in addition to traditional phone lines.

Nationwide jurisdiction for a court order will help law enforcement to quickly identify other members of a criminal organization such as a terrorist cell. Indeed, last year Director Freeh testified before the Terrorism Subcommittee that one of the problems law enforcement faces is the jurisdictional limitation of pen registers and trap-and-trace orders issued by federal courts.” [Source: Hearing before the Subcommittee on Technology, Terrorism, and Government Information of the Judiciary Committee, 106th Cong, 2nd Sess. (March 28, 2000), at 31.]

He continued: “Today’s electronic crimes, which occur at the speed of light, cannot be effectively investigated with procedural devices forged in the last millennium during the infancy of the information technology age.” [Source: Id. at 32.]

Currently, to track a communication that is purposely routed through Inter¬ net Service Providers located in different states, law enforcement must obtain multiple court orders. This is because, under current law, a Federal court can order only those communications carriers within its district to provide tracing information to law enforcement.

According to Director Freeh’s testimony before the Terrorism Subcommittee, “As a result of the fact that investigators typically have to apply to different carriers in different states, law enforcement must obtain multiple court orders. This is because, under current law, a Federal court can order only those communications carriers within its district to provide tracing information to law enforcement.” [Source: Id. at 31.]

Section 216 of the Senate bill solves this problem. I would also like to address another important provision.

Section 802 is intended more clearly to criminalize the possession of biological and toxin agents by those who should not possess them. This section amends the implementing legislation for the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, and Stockpiling of Bacteriological, Biological, and Toxic Weapons and on Their Destruction”, BWC, Article I of which states that countries must define as non-prohibited purposes uses of biological, chemical, or toxins which involve these substances, where such substances are used in a manner not prohibited by the Convention, for example for peaceful purposes. This section would make such uses illegal.

We cannot afford to lose this race against terror, and we cannot afford to give the enemy in this war a full lap head-start. I support this bill. I commend President Bush and General Ashcroft for submitting a sound proposal to the Senate, and for their tremendous efforts during the past month.

Mr. President, in addition to the all of the other provisions in this antiterrorism legislation that will provide our law enforcement communities with the tools to weed out and stop terrorism, I want to express my support for the immigration provisions upon which the administration, Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, LEAHY and I have reached agreement, and which are included in this bill.

Even with the passage of these provisions, however, the United States will continue to face overwhelming infrastructure and personnel needs at our consular offices abroad, along both the southern and northern border, and in our immigration offices throughout the United States. In conjunction with increasing personnel and infrastructure, the Administration must develop the ability to present altered international documents, and improve the dissemination of information about suspected confiscation, securing, and/or destruction of possible illegal biological substances.

Finally, let me address briefly the concern voiced by some that we are in danger of trampling civil liberties.” I reiterate that what we are doing, that what we have done, that what we will do, will have had thorough, deliberate hearings, and that many of the proposals have already been passed by the Senate. Nothing in the current bill impinges on civil liberties. The bill will give Federal agencies fighting terrorism the same tools that have been given those fighting illicit drugs, or even postal fraud. Many of the tools in the bill are modernizations of the criminal laws, necessitated by the advent of the Internet.

While some of these tools are extremely helpful in terrorism investigations, it makes no sense to refuse to apply these common sense changes to other crimes that are committed, like kidnapping, drug dealing, and child pornography. I consider this bill the same tools we have given those fighting illicit drugs, or even postal fraud. Many of the tools in the bill are modernizations of the criminal laws, necessitated by the advent of the Internet.

While some of these tools are extremely helpful in terrorism investigations, it makes no sense to refuse to apply these common sense changes to other crimes that are committed, like kidnapping, drug dealing, and child pornography. I consider this bill the terrorists to all appropriate agencies. Senator FEINSTEIN and I, in a hearing of the Terrorism Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee this Friday, will continue to assess these needs by hearing from Justice and State Department officials.

So, our actions on immigration reform as it is related to terrorism must go beyond the scope of this anti-terrorism package. With that said, this bill will certainly provide a better legal framework for keeping former terrorists out of the United States, and detaining them should they enter.

First, this antiterrorism bill clarifies that the Federal Bureau of Investigation is authorized to share data from its “most wanted list,” and any other information contained in its national crime-information system, with the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the State Department. This will help the INS and State Department identify suspected terrorists before they come to the United States, and should they gain entry, will help track them down on our soil. It also allows the State Department, during a U.S. criminal investigation, to give foreign governments information on a case-by-case basis about the issuance or refusal to issue a U.S. visa.

The bill will also clarify U.S. law prohibiting the entry of, and requiring the removal of, individual alien terrorists. It will provide the Secretary of State with the means to stop terrorists from entering this country. It is a great deal to know that, under current law, a terrorist alien is not considered either inadmissible to, or deportable from, the United States even if he or she has “endorsed or espoused terrorist activity that undermines the efforts of the United States to fight terrorism,” or has provided “material support to a terrorist organization.” Nor is an individual deportable for being a “representative of a terrorist organization.” The anti-terrorism package now makes it clear to U.S. officials considering whether to allow someone to come to the country, that a person meeting any one of these criteria is not welcome here.

In addition, the anti-terrorism package that we are debating today further defines what is considered by the United States to be a terrorist organization. Under current law, a terrorist organization must be designated by the Secretary of State under Section 219 of the U.S. Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. This process can take several months, and has been criticized by some experts as potentially politically corruptible. Under this Senate anti-terrorism package, Section 219 remains in effect. A separate designation process is added, whereby an organization can be designated by the Secretary of State or the Attorney General, in consultation with each other, with seven days’ notice to the leadership of the House and Senate, and the congressional committees of jurisdiction. Additionally, an organization, whether or not it is formally designated by the Secretary of State or the Attorney General, can be considered to be terrorist if it is made up of two or more individuals who commit or plan to commit terrorist activities.

The Senate’s antiterrorism package also has provisions regarding temporary detention of aliens who the Attorney General certifies that he has “reasonable grounds to believe is inadmissible or deportable under the terrorism grounds.” This compromise represents the scenario that the Attorney General of the United States needs the flexibility to detain suspected terrorists. Under the compromise that Members have reached, the Attorney General must charge an alien with a deportable violation or he must release the alien. The underlying certification, and all collateral matters, can be reviewed by the U.S. District Court of the District of Columbia, and the Attorney General is required to report to Congress every six months on the use of this detention provision.

Finally, the Senate package, as a result of amendments added by Senator BYRD, will determine whether “conclusory shopping”—i.e., someone has a suspicion, or is from his or her home country, but goes to another country for adjudication—is a problem. If so, the Secretary of State must recommend ways to remedy it. Another provision authorizes $36.8 million for quick implementation of the INS foreign student tracking system, a program that I have repeatedly urged be implemented. As former chairman and now ranking Republican of the Judiciary Committee’s Terrorism Subcommittee, I have long suggested, and strongly supported, many of the anti-terrorism and immigration initiatives now being advocated by Republicans and Democrats alike. In my sadness about the overwhelming and tragic events that took the lives of precious lives, I am resolved to push forward on all fronts to fight against terrorism. That means delivering justice to those who are responsible for the lives lost on September 11, and reorganizing the institutions of government so that the law-abiding can continue to live their lives in freedom.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the consensus terror bill now on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

The people of the United States awoke on September 12 to a whole new world, one in which we can no longer feel safe within our borders. We awoke to a world in which our very way of life is under attack, and we have since resolved to fight back with every tool at our disposal.

This is an unprecedented state of affairs, and it demands unprecedented action. We must seek out and defeat individuals and groups who would undermine our nation’s security.

This legislation will now allow the surveillance to follow the person, wherever or however that person is communicating. So, no longer will duplicative wiretap orders be necessary simply to listen to the same, single target of an investigation. This is a powerful change to the law that does not put innocent conversations in danger, but stops the evasion of surveillance now possible under the law.

Third, this legislation allows nationwide service of so-called “pen register” and “trap and trace” orders. Those orders allow law enforcement to track incoming and outgoing phone calls, and now make it much easier to do so, so that authorities can make connections between various criminals or terrorists.

The problem with current law is that it has not kept up with technology. Modern communications travel through many jurisdictions before reaching their final destinations, and current law requires court orders from every jurisdiction through which the communication travels.

Under current law, only one court order will be necessary, eliminating the time-consuming and burdensome requirements now placed on law enforcement simply because technology has changed the way communications travel from one place to the other. Law enforcement resources should be spent in the field, not filing unnecessarily burdensome motions in courtroom after courtroom.

I should also mention one important point about this provision. The standard necessary to get a court-ordered pen register or trap and trace is lower than the standard necessary to get a wiretap, so it was very important to make sure that this legislation makes it clear that these orders do not allow law enforcement to eavesdrop on or read the content of communication. Only the origin and destination of the messages will be intercepted.

This legislation also authorizes the seizure of voice-mail messages pursuant to a probable cause warrant, which is an easier standard for law enforcement to meet than the standard required for a wiretap.

Current law treats a voice-mail like an ongoing oral communication, and requires law enforcement to obtain a wiretap order to seize and listen to those saved messages. E-mails, however, receive no similar protection. In my opinion, if law enforcement can access e-mail communications with probable cause, the same should be the case with voice-mails. And so it will be once this legislation passes.

This legislation will also now allow for limited sharing of grand jury and other criminal investigation information with the intelligence community, to assist in the prevention of terrorist acts and the apprehension of the terrorists themselves.

Under current law, law enforcement officials involved in a grand jury investigation cannot share information gathered in the grand jury with the intelligence community, even if that information would prevent a future terrorist act.

Under this legislation, grand jury and other criminal investigative information can be shared if one, the information can be foreign intelligence and counterintelligence information, as defined by statute; two, the information is given to an official with a need to know in the performance of his or her official duties, and the limitations on public or other unauthorized disclosure would remain in force.

This balance makes sense, I believe strongly that grand jury information should not be leaked to the public or disclosed haphazardly to anyone. But at the same time, it makes perfect sense to allow our own law enforcement officials to talk to each other about ongoing investigations, and to coordinate their efforts to capture terrorists wherever they may be.

This legislation also contains a heavily negotiated provision regarding the detention of aliens suspected of links to terrorism without charging them. Agreement was reached to one, limit to 7 days the period an alien may be held before being charged with criminal or immigration violations, two, allow the Attorney General to delegate the certification power only to the INS Commissioner, and three, specify that the merits of the certification is sub judice.

This legislation also contains several key provisions from a bill I introduced last month with the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senator Grahaim. For instance, the bill clarifies the role of the CIA director as the coordinator of strategies and priorities for how the government uses its limited surveillance resources; requires that law enforcement officers who discover foreign intelligence information in the course of a criminal investigation share that information with the intelligence community; includes “international terrorist activities” in the definition of “foreign intelligence” to clarify the authorities of the CIA; includes the provision that the CIA should make efforts to recruit informants in the fight against terrorism, even if some of those informants may, as is likely the case, not be ideal citizens; requires a report from the CIA on the feasibility of establishing a virtual translation center for use by the intelligence community, so that translators around the country can assist in investigations taking place far, far away. For instance, this center could be used to help linguists living in Los Angeles to assist law enforcement in New York without even leaving California; and finally, agreement was reached to require the Attorney General, in consultation with the CIA Director, to provide training to federal, state and local government officials to identify foreign intelligence information obtained in the course of their duties.

In addition, this bill also: Triples the number of Border Patrol, Customs Service, and INS inspectors at the northern border; authorizes $50 million to improve INS and Customs technology for monitoring the northern border and to add equipment on the border; lifts the statute of limitations on terrorist acts as defined by law where those crimes resulted in, or created a risk of, death or serious bodily injury. These crimes include bio-terrorism, attacks against airports or airports, arson or bombings of U.S. facilities, and other terrorist acts; adds this same list of terrorist crimes certain as predicates for RICO and money laundering; creates two new bio-terrorism crimes, the first prohibits certain restricted persons; non-resident aliens from countries that support terrorism, from possessing a listed biological agent or toxin; and the second prohibits any person from possessing a biological agent, toxin, or delivery system of a type or in a quantity that, under the circumstances, is not reasonably justified by a peaceful purpose.

The Attorney General and the President of the United States have asked this Congress to enact legislation that will assist in the war against terrorism, and I am one who believes very strongly that we should do so, and we should do so quickly.

This bill is a product of intense negotiations, and I believe that a good balance has been struck here. Compromises have been reached on the most controversial provisions, roving wiretap authority; trap and trace of computer routing information; sharing of grand jury information; and mandatory detention of aliens suspected of terrorism.

Although I no longer believe it to be necessary now that these compromises have been reached, I would support a five-year sunset on the provisions I just mentioned as a valuable check on the potential abuse of the new powers granted in the bill.

But a two-year sunset, such as the one contained in the House bill, is simply not long enough to allow law enforcement to accomplish what it needs to do to rout terrorists from this country.

The legislation before us contains provisions that could actually help in the current investigation into Osama bin Laden and his network in the United States and abroad.

I urge this Senate to pass this legislation and get it to the President for his signature. We are in a sustained war against terror, and we have waited long enough.

FISA AND PEN REGISTER/TRAP AND TRACE

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I would like to raise several concerns regarding the provisions of this legislation, the USA Act of 2001, that expand wiretapping authority under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978, and amend Federal pen register and trap and trace authorities.

Both of these changes purport to improve communication between law enforcement and intelligence operatives. There is a difference, however, between facilitating the sharing of information between the law enforcement and intelligence communities, and blurring the line between the missions of the two communities. Where information is sought for the purpose of law enforcement, we must ensure that fourth amendment protections apply. Much of the fear about the legislation is based on legal advice that information gathered ostensibly for intelligence and defense purposes could be used for law enforcement purposes. The intelligence community does not prosecute, but also in a criminal prosecution, the USA Act would make it easier for the FBI to use a FISA wiretap to obtain information where the Government’s most important motivation for the wiretap is for use in a criminal prosecution. This is a disturbing and dangerous change in the law. The Justice Department concedes that “the few courts that have addressed the issue have followed a primary purpose test”, October 1, 2001 Letter from Daniel J. Bryant, Assistant Attorney General, p. 13.

I appreciate the administration’s agreement to move off its original position of changing the law to only require the FISA surveillance to “a” purpose of securing it at risk intelligence information. Indeed, the Justice Department’s own constitutional analysis provided to the Committee at the request of our Members does not even attempt to justify the original proposal, but instead attempts to explain why a change to “a significant” purpose would be constitutional.

I remain disappointed with the administration’s insistence on forcing any change on this important statutory requirement. FISA was enacted for the express purpose of clarifying that different legal standards apply to those gathering foreign intelligence than to those seeking criminal evidence. This new provision will blur that distinction, and it is indeed very problematic in my mind.

Federal courts have upheld FISA on the basis that what is reasonable under the fourth amendment may vary when intelligence gathering is at risk. Thus, a FISA wiretap does not have to be based on probable cause to believe a crime has been or is about to be committed, and no notice is given unless the person is questionable, while judges review warrants on the merits when targets are U.S. persons, the primary purpose for the wiretap must be the protection of our national security. Upon satisfaction of that critical condition, the statute authorized the use of evidence obtained under a FISA wiretap for criminal prosecution.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, although much effort has gone into narrowing this provision to fit within the bounds of the Constitution, it would seem to me that this legislation may not stand up to this test, and thus may fail judicial scrutiny. Regardless, we cannot await court review. I believe Congress must keep watch over the use of new authorities under this provision. Chairman LEAHY, do you agree that, under these circumstances, it is incumbent upon the committee, which has jurisdiction over the Department of Justice, to maintain vigilant oversight of the Department and any new authorities after enactment of this legislation?

Mr. LEAHY. I agree with you completely, and you can rest assured that the Judiciary Committee under my chairmanship will conduct meaningful oversight, as we already have begun to do over the summer.

Although FISA requires oversight reporting to the Intelligence Committees, the law makes clear that other committees may also have oversight jurisdiction. Section 108 of FISA, 50 U.S.C. 1808, states, “Nothing in this title shall be deemed to limit the authority and responsibility of the appropriate committees of Congress to obtain such information as they may need to carry out their respective functions and duties.” Section 306 of FISA, 50 U.S.C. 1826, provides for semiannual reports from the Attorney General to the Intelligence and Judiciary Committees on the number of applications for physical search orders made, granted, modified, or denied, and the number of physical searches which involved the property of United States persons. The Judiciary Committee’s recent request for semiannual reports from the FBI’s “Carnivore” to access information that is protected by the fourth amendment.

The failure to properly define the term “address” in the e-mail context to exclude information protected by the Fourth Amendment will haunt us for a long time. And I regret this. Although it certainly can be said that new technologies are emerging and the definition may need be flexible, the term “address” presently is undefined and in the context of our Federal criminal statutes. Because of this ambiguity, we may see law enforcement authorities take inconsistent approaches to filtering information pursuant to this new law. There is risk that some will obtain information, such as “subject line” information or URL codes, that may otherwise be protected by the fourth amendment. There is certain to be judicial scrutiny of this provision.

Chairman LEAHY. I agree with Senator CANTWELL and thank her for bringing these concerns to the attention of this body. I share these concerns.

Ms. CANTWELL. I would like to suggest to the chairman, and I would be happy to work closely with the Chairman on this, that the General Accounting Office provide to the Senate Judiciary Committee every six months a report on the use of the FISA wiretap authorities, and the expanded pen register and trap and trace authorities, by the Federal Bureau of Investigation or other agencies within the Department of Justice. I would certainly not suggest compromising the security of our nation with such a report, so I would be content with closed-session hearings on the findings of such reports. But only with such oversight can we reasonably assure our constituents that the use of these new authorities is not impinging on our civil liberties.

Mr. LEAHY. I agree with Senator CANTWELL and I appreciate her efforts to suggest restraint at the Department of Justice to avoid misusing the new authorities we are contemplating using to address terrorism. I share her view that the GAO should undertake this effort to address terrorism. I share her view that the GAO should undertake this important assignment and will work with her and other Senators to see it accomplished. We all need to make certain that these new authorities are not abused.

Ms. CANTWELL. I thank the chairman for his diligence in working to preserve our fundamental rights.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I am proud to be a co-sponsor of S. 1510, the “Uniting and Strengthening America Act” or “USA Act.” This bill reflects a bipartisan effort to aid law enforcement, immigration, and the intelligence community in investigating, detaining, and apprehending suspected terrorists. This legislation follows lengthy committee inquiries and a revision of the Attorney General’s initial proposal a few weeks ago and which sparked national debate over whether civil rights would be violated.

During the past few weeks, Senate leaders have been working tirelessly with Attorney General Ashcroft in order to create a bill that strengthens our existing laws with respect to apprehending terrorists, but still protects the civil rights of our citizens. This is an important mission for Congress. Everyone in America understands the need for enforcement, immigration and the intelligence community to have the tools necessary to find terrorists, cut-off their financial support, and bring them to justice.

While I am committed to routing out terrorists here and abroad, I am equally committed to making sure the rights of innocent U.S. citizens are not violated. This includes the privacy and property rights our constitution affords and that make this country so great. I believe this bipartisan bill does both. This legislation strikes a balance between protecting our civil rights and assisting Attorney General Ashcroft and other agents of their job. The Senate and House may later debate some of the provisions in this legislation, but be assured that every member of Congress is united in this mission. We are totally committed to passing anti-terrorism legislation and apprehending the Header in this world.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, this is one of the most important pieces of legislation we will consider during this Congress. The horrific loss of life and destruction that occurred on September 11, the crime against humanity, changed us as a country. The Uniting and Strengthening America Act is an opportunity to help ensure that such terrorist attacks do not occur again. We need to improve all aspects of our domestic security, including by enhancing our intelligence capacities so that we can identify possible future attacks in their planning stage before they get to happen. We must be vigilant and willing to invest the resources and time required to gather the information that we need to protect ourselves and our way of life.

I appreciate the enormous amount of time and energy that my colleague from Vermont and others have put into this legislation. They have done their best to balance the risk of further terrorist attacks with possible risks to civil liberties. The bill updates and improves a number of existing laws, it creates important new security statutes, and it authorizes new money for programs that will bring much needed relief to victims of terrorist attacks. I have reservations about certain provisions of the bill as they might affect civil liberties. I wish that it were more tightly targeted to address only actions directly related to terrorism or suspected terrorism. And I hope that by the time I vote for a conference report, it will contain a sunset provision. But I support the bill today as a step toward conference, and as an important and needed strengthening of our security from horrific attacks such as that of October 10.

The bill expands the Regional Information Sharing Systems Program to promote information sharing among Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies in their anti-terrorism efforts. State and local law enforcement have a critical role to play in preventing and investigating terrorism, and this bill provides them benefits appropriate to such duty. The bill streamlines and expedites the Public Safety Officers’ Benefits application process for families of firefighters, police officers and other emergency personnel who are killed or suffer a disabling injury in connection with a future terrorist attack. And it raises the total amount of the Public Safety Officers’ Benefit Program payments from approximately $150,000 to $250,000.

This bill will also make an immediate difference in the lives of victims of terrorism and their families. It reauthorizes and by statute targets the USA Act and this bill provides prosecutors better tools to go after those involved in money-laundering schemes that are linked to terrorism, and it adds certain terrorism-related crimes as predicates for RICO and money-laundering. It creates a new federal statute targeting acts of terrorism on mass transportation systems, and it strengthens our Federal laws relating to the threat of biological weapons. The bill will enhance the Government’s ability to prosecute suspected terrorists in possession of biological agents of a type or quantity that is not reasonably justified by a peaceful purpose.

The bill also broadens the authority of the President to impose sanctions on the Taliban regime. Regarding criminal penalties for those convicted of terrorism-related offenses, it provides a definition of what constitutes “terrorism” and ensures that penalties more closely reflect the offenses committed by terrorists. Again, I’d like to thank my colleague from Vermont and others who have worked on these provisions. The administration’s initial proposal was too broad in this area, and the current bill provides a fair alternative. I strongly support these needed provisions. Still, I do have concerns about the possible effect on civil liberties of the bill’s measures to enhance electronic surveillance and information sharing of criminal justice information, while at the same time reducing judicial review of those actions. I also have concerns that the bill does not expand the Government’s ability to conduct secret searches, as well as searches under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, will not be abused.

I believe we will need to monitor the use of new authorities provided to law enforcement agents to conduct surveillance of internet communications. The same is true of the bill’s changes to laws allowing the sharing of confidential criminal justice information with various Federal, State and local agencies. I prefer the requirement of judicial review before disclosure, which is contained in the House version of this bill. Likewise, I believe the House of Representatives’ decision not to include this bill’s expansion of the Government’s ability to conduct secret, or so-called “Sneak-Peek,” searches, was correct. I hope the safeguards against abuse we have aided in our bill—such as the prohibition against the Government seizing any tangible property or stored electronic information without a showing of reasonable necessity, as well as the requirement that notice be given within a reasonable time of the execution of a sneak-peak warrant—will prove sufficient.

The bill broadens the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, FISA, by extending FISA surveillance authority to criminal investigations, even when the primary purpose is not intelligence gathering. The bill limits this ability by authorizing surveillance only if a significant purpose of it is to gather intelligence information. I hope this new FISA authority will be used for the purpose of investigating and preventing terrorism, not for other domestic purposes.

Mr. President, we have done our best in this bill to maximize our security while minimizing the impact some of these changes may have on our civil liberties. Nearly all of us have probably said since September 11 that if that day's terror is allowed to undermine our democratic principles and practices, then the terrorists will have won a victory. This measure is designed to give law enforcement the tools they need in an increasingly complex world. It is their responsibility to enhance electronic and other forms of information sharing by mandating access to the FBI's National Crime Information Center, or NCIC, by the State Department and INS.

To more effectively fight terrorism and those who perpetrate it, we need to improve law enforcement's intelligence gathering capability and enhance their ability to investigate and prosecute suspected terrorists. This measure does both. But let's also be realistic about the act. It will not solve all of law enforcement's problems in combating terrorism nor will it severely compromise our civil liberties. The truth lies somewhere in between.

The strongest proponents of the legislation argue that the bill primarily consists of long overdue updates of current laws, updates necessary because technology has advanced and criminals and terrorists to stay a step, or two, ahead of law enforcement. Updates are necessary because the inability of Federal authorities to share information on suspected terrorists hampers criminal investigations. Updates are necessary because the penalties and limitations periods governing many terrorist crimes have been woefully inadequate. All of this is true. And for these reasons, I support the bill.

But my purpose is not to indulge into thinking that this measure will solve our problems. Indeed, I asked the Attorney General whether the new powers granted in this bill could have prevented the events of September 11. He answered me honestly, saying that he could not make that guarantee. Yet, he added that these new tools would make it less likely that terrorism could strike in the same way again.

Toughness is an important part of our strategy to combat terrorism. That plan must also include more and better agents dedicated to gathering intelligence, an aggressive approach to preventing attacks, and patience from all Americans. Patience is the key. It will be up to us to understand that we might have to temper our freedoms slightly in an effort to guarantee them.

Critics of this legislation caution us to be wary of compromising our liberties in an effort to make our Nation safer. They comment that sacrificing freedom gives the terrorists a victory. Those warnings do have merit.

Some of this bill's provisions do risk our civil liberties and ask Americans to have faith that this power will not be abused. Most of us would rather not have our civil liberties depend on someone else's discretion.

That's why I believe many of this bill's provisions should lapse in two years and then be reconsidered by Congress. The House version of this bill recognized the need for tough law enforcement with the concern for our civil liberties by sunsetting some of the most objectionable portions of the bill in two years. That is a good idea. Two years from now, we can take stock of where we are, how this bill has affected us, and whether the trust we show in law enforcement is warranted. I hope that the final version of this bill will adopt such a sensible approach.

I have never doubted that our country's will is the foundation of the world. They are dedicated, creative, committed, and decent. From local beat officers to the Director of the FBI, every one of them has a vital role to play in combating terrorism. We believe this bill will help them prevent terrorism when possible. It will help them catch wrongdoers. It will cut wrongdoers off from their support networks. It will guarantee stiff punishment for their criminal acts. It will deter others from following in the terrorists' footsteps. It is our responsibility to give law enforcement the tools they need in an increasingly complex world. It is their responsibility to use them wisely.

Mrs. SNYDER. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the antiterrorism legislation we have before us.

First, let me say I am pleased to have also worked in conjunction with Senator Bond and Senator Conrad in supporting their legislation entitled "The Visa Integrity and Security Act." This bill addresses many of the concerns I have, such as the importance of information sharing among Government law enforcement and intelligence agencies with the State Department and tightening tracking controls on those entering the United States on student visas, including those attending flight schools. These are critical issues, and I commend both Senators for their efforts.

Today, our men and women in uniform are on the frontlines in the war against terrorism. We salute their willingness to put themselves in harm's way in defense of freedom, and we pray for their safety and well-being. Here at home, we are working to secure our nation, and that is why I am pleased that we will pass this legislation in the Senate that will take strong measures to help prevent further terrorist attacks on American soil.

With this legislation, we will take reasonable, constitutional steps to enhance electronic and other forms of surveillance, without trampling on the rights of Americans. We will also institutionalize important antiterrorism measures.

In our war against terrorism, Americans stand as one behind our President. It is equally critical that, in the all-out effort to protect our homeland, Federal agencies be united in securing American soil.

In this light, President Bush made exactly the right decision when he created the Office of Homeland Security, a national imperative in the wake of the horrific tragedies of September 11, and I commend him for appointing my former colleague, Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge, as its Director.

With a seat at the Cabinet table, Governor Ridge will literally be at the President's side, giving him the standing that will be required to remove jurisdictional hurdles among the 40-plus agencies he will be responsible for coordinating. Now, we will assist in that coordination by allowing INS and the State Department access to the information they need to make informed decisions about who we will grant entrance into this country.

I saw firsthand the consequences of serious inadequacies in coordination and communication during my 12 years as ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Now we have an opportunity to increase information sharing by mandating access to the FBI's National Crime Information Center, or NCIC, by the State Department and INS.

In conducting oversight of Embassy security as well as visa and consular operations, I became extensively involved with the issue of terrorism, co-drafting antiterrorism legislation with former Representative Dan Mica in the wake of 1983 and 1984 terrorist attacks against the U.S. Embassy and Marine barracks in Lebanon—travelling to Belgrade, Warsaw, and East Berlin to press government officials into helping stem the flow of money to the terrorist Abu Nidal and his organization—and investigating entry into the United States by radical Egyptian cleric Sheikh Omar Abdel Rahman, mastermind of the 1993 World Trade Center bombing.

As far back as our hearings on the 1965 Inman Report, commissioned by then-Secretary of State George Shultz in response to the attacks in Lebanon, it was abundantly clear that improved coordination and consolidation of information from agencies such as the FBI, CIA, DEA, Customs, INS and the State Department would be an essential step toward removing a vulnerability in our national security. That point was tragically underscored by our discovery that, astoundingly, in the period since 1987 when Sheikh Rahman was placed on the State Department lookout list, the Sheikh entered and exited the United States five times totally unimpeded.

But worse, however. Even after the State Department formally issued a certification of visa revocation, he was granted permanent residence status by the INS. When he was finally caught on July 31, 1991, reentering the United States, he was immediately released back into U.S. society to allow him to pursue a multi-year appeal process.

As unbelievable as that may sound, just as unfathomable is the fact that, even after the 1993 attack on the World Trade Center, membership in a terrorist organization was still sufficient grounds for visa denial. Rather, the Immigration Act of 1990 required the Government to prove that an individual either was personally involved in a terrorist act, or planning one.

This absurd threshold made it almost impossible to block individuals, such as Sheikh Rahman, from entering the country. As for legislation I introduced would require the establishment of a fingerprint-based check system to be used by State and INS to verify that the person who received the visa is the same person who was issued the visa. In other words, the INS official has to rely solely on the identification documents the person was issued the visa with. This system, however, this is voluntary. That is why I in-the United States. This is a common sense approach that would take us one step closer to minimizing the threat and maximizing our national security.

The fact of the matter is, fingerprint technology—one part of the larger category of biometrics—factors that can be used for identification known as biometrics—is not new. In fact, the U.S. Government has already employed biometrics to verify identities at military and secret facilities, at ports-of-entry, and for airport security, among many others.

The INS has already announced it was beginning to implement the new biometric Mexican border crossing cards as required by 1996 Illegal Immigrations Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act. These cards have the individual’s fingerprint encoded on them and are matched to the fingerprint of the person possessing the card at a U.S. port-of-entry.

This surely does not sound all that much different than what is in the legislation I have proposed. I am pleased the bill before us at least starts us down the road toward implementing biometric technologies by requiring a review of the feasibility of instituting such technologies where they can be achieved as soon as possible.

Despite areas where I might have wished to strengthen this bill even further, this legislation is vital to our national security, and I will be proud to support it. The war on terrorism is a war on myriad fronts. Some of the battles will be great in scale, many will be notable by what is not seen and by what doesn’t happen—namely, that individuals who pose a serious threat to this Nation never see these shores and never set foot on our soil.

Many of our greatest victories will be measured by the attacks that never happen—in battles we win before they ever have a name—in conflicts we prevent. The dream of a more secure American life, I hope will pass and enact legislation that will help make that possible. I thank the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, a month ago today, America was attacked by vicious terrorists bent on doing all they can to undermine our Nation, our freedoms, and our way of life. But they have failed. Our country has never been more united behind the ideals that make us strong, or more committed to protecting our security.

In the months since we have sought international cooperation and received it. We have asked our men and women in uniform to protect and defend our Nation, and they are doing it superbly. We are equally committed to preserving our freedoms and our democracy.

The goal of this antiterrorism legislation is to achieve greater coordination between the law enforcement and intelligence communities, while protecting the civil liberties of American citizens. We must give the Secretary of State and the Attorney General the tools to stop terrorists from entering our country, while guaranteeing America’s proud tradition of welcoming immigrants from around the world.

The terrorist attacks of September 11 make it an urgent priority to act as soon as possible. The INS and the State Department, concerned with law enforcement and intelligence information they need to make quick and accurate decisions on whether to admit anyone to the United States

We must also take urgent steps to improve security at our borders with Canada and Mexico, to keep terrorists from entering the country illegally.

These improvements in the immigration laws can make a huge and immediate difference. Immigration security is an indispensable part of our national security.

As we protect our country, we must also protect the founding principles that have made our nation great. We must respond to the current crisis in ways that protect the basic rights and liberties of our citizens and others residing legally in the United States.

Currently, the INS has broad authority to act against any foreign national who supports terrorism. With respect to visitors, foreign students, and other non-immigrants already in this country, the Federal Government has a broad range of enforcement tools. The INS may detain certain non-citizens if they pose a threat to national security or are a flight risk, and they may do so on the basis of secret evidence. The INS may also deport any alien who has engaged in terrorist activity, or supported terrorist activity in any way. If the INS has the resources to use its existing authority fully and fairly, we will be far closer to ensuring our national security.

Nonetheless, loopholes may exist in our current laws, and we should close them. In recent weeks, many of us in Congress have worked closely with the administration to strengthen the law without creating serious civil liberties concerns. Although we have made progress, more remains to be done. I continue to be concerned that the Attorney General has the authority to detain even permanent residents without adequate cause, and with very few due process protections.

We must be cautious that new measures are not enacted in haste, undermining the basic rights and constitutionally troubling respects. We must avoid enacting legislation with vague and overly broad definitions or legislation that punishes individuals exercising constitutionally protected rights.

Consistent with these basic principles, it is essential for Congress to strengthen the criminal code in response to the September 11 attacks. We must increase penalties for terrorists and those who support terrorist activity. We must punish those who possess biological weapons and commit acts of violence against mass transportation systems. We must also ensure that victim assistance and victim compensation programs are able to help all the victims of the September 11 attacks. In fact, the current bill makes several important reforms to the Victim of Crimes Act to achieve that goal.

America, and make America proud of its ideals as well.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak for a few minutes about the Uniting and Strengthening America, USA, Act, before the Senate today. This legislation reflects the hard work of the Senate Banking Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee, and I want to thank them for their commitment to ensuring that Congress address this legislation as quickly as possible and before the passing of the House. I applaud the great attention to the civil rights and liberties of the American people.

Right now our Nation is strongly united. We are bound together by, among other things, a desire to see justice brought to those who planned the terrorist attacks and those who aided and abetted the terrorists. And Americans are united by our desire to prevent future terrorist attacks. At this time, more than at any time in the past, the American people are standing firmly behind the Federal Government and they trust government to do the right thing. The American people support the idea that we must provide the FBI and the Department of Justice with the tools necessary to punish the perpetrators of the terrorist attacks and to prevent future attacks.

But as much as the American people seek a just resolution to the acts of terror, they also demand that their rights and liberties be protected. We have heard it time and again since September 11: our Nation must be secure, but must not become so at the expense of our freedoms, our rights, and our liberties. We must not let the American people down.

I want to thank Senator LEAHY for his leadership on this legislation and his concern with important Constitutional principles, such as due process and unreasonable search and seizure. At Senator LEAHY’s urging, the administration’s anti-terrorism proposal was carefully and closely analyzed and Senator LEAHY did not yield to the political pressures that threatened to push this legislation through the Congress without its careful consideration. I believe that the bill before the Senate is vastly improved from the proposal that the administration sent up, and I appreciate that important changes were made.

Though I am grateful that important changes have been made to the Senate bill, I am still troubled by certain provisions in the legislation which fail to strike the proper balance between the need for security and the need for civil liberties. Moving an anti-terrorism bill through the Congress in a timely fashion is critically important, particularly in light of the ongoing air strikes in Afghanistan. We all know that a real threat exists for future terrorist attacks and that is before the Senate.

I support the process, I support moving this legislation forward, and I will vote for it. But I also believe that the bill that passed the House better balances our civil liberties and the Federal Government’s need for greater surveillance powers, and I am hopeful that the bill that emerges from the conference committee will incorporate these provisions. I am disturbed by comments made yesterday by the administration in which swift consideration by both houses of Congress of the Senate bill was urged. This legislation deserves consideration and help should not be hastily dispensed with when the threat to our most cherished civil liberties is so great.

The wide-ranging legislation before us would enhance domestic surveillance powers, stiffen penalties for terrorism, increase the penalties for money-laundering, and make it easier for law enforcement and intelligence agencies to share information. There was broad agreement on some elements of the administration’s anti-terrorism package, such as the need to update our anti-terrorism laws to take account of new technologies—such as cell phones—and to ensure that counter-terrorism investigators wield the same powers to track drug trafficking and organized crime. But agreement was more difficult to reach on other issues, like detaining foreign nationals, and I am pleased that we are in a position to move forward on the legislation.

I am also pleased that this package includes a bill, which I sponsored, that will provide the tools the U.S. needs to crack down on international money laundering havens and protect the integrity of the U.S. financial system from the influx of tainted money from abroad. This legislation was part of a package of anti-money laundering provisions that unanimously passed the Senate Banking Committee last week. Today, the volume of laundered money is estimated to be 2 to 5 percent of global Gross Domestic Product, between $600 billion and $1.5 trillion. The effects of money laundering extend far beyond the parameters of law enforcement, creating international political issues and generating domestic political crises.

It is becoming more and more apparent that Osama bin Laden’s terrorist network, known as al Qaeda, provided assistance to hijackers who attacked the World Trade Center and the Pentagon with funding that was transported from the Middle East to the United States through the global financial system. Al-Qaeda has, for years, developed a worldwide terrorist network by taking advantage of an open international financial system.

The United States has declared a war on terrorism. This new war is going to be unlike anything that we have ever experienced before. If we are to lead the world in the fight against terror, we must insure that our own laws are worthy of the difficult task ahead.

The International Counter-Money Laundering and Foreign Anti-corruption Act of 2001, which I sponsored and which has been included in this legislation, will stop the flow of assets through the international financial system that have been used by bin Laden, the al Qaeda terrorist network and other terrorist groups.

The United States has the largest and most accessible economic marketplace in the world. Foreign financial institutions and jurisdictions must have unfettered access to markets to effectively work the international economic system. The goal of this legislation is to give the Treasury Secretary, in conjunction with our allies in the European Union and the Financial Action Task Force, the authority to leverage the power of our markets to force countries or financial institutions with lax money laundering laws or standards to reform them. If they refuse, the Secretary will have the authority to deny foreign financial institutions or jurisdictions the right to access the United States marketplace. This will help stop international criminals from laundering the proceeds of their crimes into the United States financial system or using the proceeds to commit terrorist acts.

Specifically, the bill will give the Secretary of the Treasury—acting in consultation with other senior government officials—the authority to designate a specific foreign jurisdiction, foreign financial institution, or class of international transactions as being of “primary money laundering concern.” Then, on a case-by-case basis, the Secretary will have the option to use a series of new tools to combat the specific type of foreign money laundering threat we face. In some cases, the Secretary will have the option to require banks to pierce the veil of secrecy behind which foreign criminals hide. In other cases, the Secretary will have the option to require the identification of those using a foreign bank’s correspondent or payable-through accounts. If these transparency provisions were deemed to be inadequate to address the specific problem identified, the Secretary will have the option to restrict or prohibit U.S. banks from continuing correspondent or payable-through banking relationships with money laundering havens and rogue foreign banks. Through these steps, the Secretary will help prevent laundered money from slipping undetected into the U.S. financial system and, as a result, increase the pressure on foreign criminal proceeds to bring their laws and practices into line with international anti-money laundering standards.

The bill provides for actions that will be graduated, discretionary, and targeted, in order to focus actions on international transactions involving criminal proceeds, while allowing legitimate international commerce to continue to flow unimpeded.
It provides a clear warning to those who have assisted or unwittingly assisted those involved in the al Qaeda network or other terrorist organizations in laundering money. The United States will take whatever actions are necessary, including denying financial banks and other financial institutions access to the United States economy, in order to stop terrorists and international criminal networks from continuing to launder money through the international financial system.

Passage of this legislation will make it much more difficult for new terrorist organizations to develop. During the 1980s, as Chairman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, I began an investigation of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI), and uncovered a complex money laundering scheme involving billions of dollars. Fortunately, BCCI was forced to close and we were able to bring many of those involved to justice. However, as we have learned since the closing of BCCI, Osama bin Laden had a number of accounts at BCCI and we had dealt him a very serious economic blow. So as we consider this bill as a response to recent attacks, I am concerned that we lose sight of the potentially this legislation will have to stop the development of terrorist organizations in the future.

With the support of the United States and the European Union, the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development has begun a crackdown on tax havens by targeting 36 jurisdictions which it said participate in unfair tax competition and undermine the United States economy, in order to deny foreign banks and jurisdictions access to the international financial system.

Mr. President, earlier this evening my colleague Senator Feingold offered an amendment to the section of the USA Patriot Act with the intention of computer trespass communications. This amendment, at its core, was intended to prevent law enforcement from abusing their authority to monitor computer activity. The Senator from Wisconsin’s amendment would have limited the amount of time that law enforcement could monitor suspicious activity without a court order to 96 hours, after which time investigators would have to obtain a warrant for continued surveillance. I support the intent of the amendment, and I felt compelled to vote to table the amendment. I voted to table the amendment for two reasons: First, I was concerned that the amendment was overly restrictive because it prevented law enforcement from investigating unrelated to the computer trespass. My concern is that law enforcement authorities would, for example, be able to monitor activity which permitted a law enforcement agency to establish a “dead drop” zone for terrorists to post messages, but would not be able to monitor the content of those messages.

I also voted to table Senator Feingold’s amendment because I strongly believe that we must move forward with this anti-terrorism legislation. Just today the FBI issued a statement warning of terrorist attacks and put law enforcement on the highest alert. I believe these serious threats to our security justify our legislation swiftly. But I sincerely hope that an acceptable compromise can be reached—on this and on other issues—in the final legislation.

This legislation is a crucial step toward limiting the scourge of money laundering and to stop the development of international criminal organizations. It is my hope that the Congress will be able to develop anti-terrorism legislation that will provide the needed protections of our citizens without eliminating any of our cherished individual liberties.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, in the war against terrorism, Americans stand as one behind our President. Now, in the all-out effort to protect our homeland, Federal agencies must be united in securing American soil.

In that light, President Bush made the right decision when he created the Office of Homeland Security—a national imperative in the wake of the horrific tragedies of September 11—and I commend him for appointing my former colleague, Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge, as its director. With a seat at the national table, Governor Ridge will literally be at the President’s side, giving him the standing that will be required to remove jurisdictional hurdles among the forty-plus agencies he will be responsible for coordinating.

I saw firsthand the consequences of serious inadequacies in coordination and communication during my twelve years as ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs International Operations Subcommittee and Chair of the subcommittee’s Senate counterpart. In conducting oversight of embassy security as well as visa and consular operations, I became extensively involved with the issue of terrorism, co-drafting anti-terrorism legislation with former Representative Dan Mica, Florida, in the wake of 1983 and 1984 terrorist attacks against the U.S. embassy and Marine barracks in Lebanon; traveling to Belgrade, Warsaw, and East Berlin to press government officials into helping, and investigating the terrorist Abu Nidal and his organization; and investigating entry into the United States by radical Egyptian cleric Sheikh Omar Abdel Rahman, mastermind of the World Trade Center bombing in 1993.

As far back as our hearings on the 1985 Inman Report, commissioned in response to the attacks in Lebanon, it was repeatedly confirmed that coordination and consolidation of information from agencies such as the FBI, CIA, DEA, Customs, INS and the State Department would be an essential step toward removing a vulnerability in our national security. That point was tragically underscored by our discovery that, astonishingly, in the period since 1987 when Sheikh Rahman was placed on the State Department lookout list, the Sheikh entered and exited the U.S. five times totally unimpeded. Even after the State Department formally issued a certification of visa revocation, he was granted permanent residence status by the INS. When he was finally caught on July 31, 1991, reentering the United States, he was immediately released back into U.S. society to allow him to pursue a multi-year appeal process. Just as unbelievable is the fact that, even after the 1993 attack on the World Trade Center, membership in a terrorist organization was overlooked—sexual with the exception of the PLO—was not sufficient grounds for visa denial. Rather, the Immigration Act of 1990 required the Government to prove that an individual either was personally involved in a terrorist act, or planning one. This absurd threshold made it almost impossible to block individuals, such as Sheikh Rahman, from entering the country legally. Legislation I introduced in 1993 removed that bureaucratic and legal obstacle—yet it took nearly 3 more years to enact it as part of the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996.

Further, to respond to the trail of errors we uncovered, provisions from my bills were enacted in 1994 requiring modernization in the State Department’s antiquated microfiche “lookout” system to keep dangerous aliens from entering the United States. This system required manual searches, was difficult to use, and was subject to error. The language I crafted required State to replace the old systems with one of two forms of state-of-the-art computerized systems. Visa fees were even increased for non-immigrants to pay for the upgrade.

Recognizing the need to make these new technologies with the need for the most comprehensive, current and reliable information, we also attempted to address the issue of access. This was all the more pressing because, in 1999, the Justice Department had ruled that because the State Department was not a “law enforcement agency”, it no longer had free access to the FBI’s National Crime Information Center. This system, which maintains arrest and criminal record data of federal, state, and local sources as well as from Canada, is used by the State Department to deny visas. Tellingly, after it lost access to the NCIC, the visa denial rate for past criminal activities plunged a remarkable 45 percent—stark evidence that we can’t afford to tie the hands of America’s overseas line of defense against terrorism.

Indeed, the intelligence we frequently exchanged, no law requires agencies like the FBI and CIA to share information on dangerous aliens with the State Department. To address this, my 1993 bill also designated the State Department as the lead law enforcement agency for purposes of accessing the NCIC as well as other FBI criminal records when processing any visa application, whether immigrant or non-immigrant.

Unfortunately, a revised provision also enacted in 1994 only provided the State Department with free access to these FBI resources for purposes of processing immigrant visas—dropping my requirement for non-immigrant visas eventually used by at least 16 of the 19 suspected hijackers. Even that limited privilege was restored to us in 1996 despite my legislation enacted in 1996 repealing the requirement that visa applicants be informed of the reason for a denial—a provision that law enforcement agencies legitimately believed could impede ongoing investigations, reveal sources and methods. Thus, today, information sharing remains optional and ad hoc.

To further fortify our front-line defenses against terrorism, I also propose to address the vulnerabilities that allowed terrorists at their point of origin by establishing Terrorist Lookout Committees, comprised of the head of the political section of each embassy and senior representatives of all U.S. law enforcement and intelligence agencies. The committees would be required to meet on a monthly basis to review and submit names to the State Department for inclusion in the visa lookout system.

Clearly, the catastrophic events of September 11 have catalyzed us into a different era, and everything is forever changed. We must move heaven and earth to remove the impediments that keep us from maximizing our defense against terrorism, and that is why we need a singular, Cabinet-level authority that can change the prevailing system and culture. Ironically, the most compelling reason for an Office of Homeland Security is also its greatest challenge: the need to focus on the “three Cs” of communication, cooperation and coordination so that all our resources are brought to bear in securing our nation. The bottom line is, if knowledge is power, we are only as strong as the weakest link in our information network therefore, we must ensure that the only “turf war” will be the one to protect American turf. In our fight against terrorism, we can do no less.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in the aftermath of the terror attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, the attention of the American people has turned to the security of our national border system and how these attackers were able to exploit that system to plot these dastardly acts.

The September 11 attacks have highlighted numerous loopholes in our immigration laws that have allowed terrorists to enter the United States posing as students, foreign nationals—whom terrorists have identified as a soft target—in some cases, by simply walking across an unpatrolled border. In reviewing our counter-terrorism efforts within our intelligence community, it is also appropriate that we look at the numerous immigration loopholes these terrorists were able to exploit.

There are currently between 7 million and 13 million illegal aliens living in the United States. Six out of 10 of these aliens crossed a U.S. border illegally, and therefore were not subject to background checks by the INS or the State Department to determine if they had a terrorist or criminal history. In fact, exit/entry records are so incomplete that the Immigration and Naturalization Service, INS, has no record of 6 of the 19 September 11 hijackers entering the United States.

Of the roughly 10,000 INS agents guarding our borders, only 3 percent are stationed on our northern border with Canada. That’s 334 agents protecting the border for one agent for every 12 miles. According to media reports, a number of the September 11 terrorists crossed this border to enter the United States.

Of those foreign nationals who have legally entered the United States, more than a half-a-million of them are registered as international students at 15,000 universities, colleges, and vocational schools across the United States. These are nuclear engineering scholars, biochemistry students, and even pilot trainees who have access to dangerous technology, training, and information.

The Congress passed legislation in 1996 requiring the INS to create a database for international students. The purpose was to more efficiently monitor the immigration/visa status and whereabouts of students from abroad. After 5 years, there is still no system in place to monitor these 500,000 students. The current pilot program operating at 21 schools is not expected to be fully operational for five more years, and even that date could slip.

Without a monitoring system in place to audit schools that sponsor these students, there is nothing to prevent an alien from entering the United States on a student visa and then just disappearing. Consequently, one of the September 11 hijackers was able to enter the United States on a student visa, dropped out, and remained illegally thereafter.

Abuses of the visa system can also be found in the application process overseas at our U.S. consulates. Foreign nationals must apply for a visa at a U.S. consulate abroad and go through a series of security checks before they can enter the United States. Some media reports have raised the issue of consular shopping, that is, foreign nationals choosing to apply at a U.S. consulate that they believe is most likely to grant them a visa. The “New York Times” reported in September that Chinese nationals applying for visas at a U.S. consulate in Beijing compare the experiences of filling out forms and even post tips on how to act and what to say, to boost their chances of receiving a visa.

Such an article raises the question of whether a terrorist could travel from country to country in hopes of finding a U.S. consulate which would be less familiar with his background and more likely to award him a visa. One terrorist who was involved in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing was described as a visa applicant in Egypt, only to be awarded a visa by the U.S. consulate in Sudan.

And these are loopholes that exist only for those terrorists who would risk a background check by seeking a visa at a U.S. consulate. The United States allows 29 countries to participate in a visa-waiver program, which effectively allows the citizens of many European countries to bypass the initial screening process by crossing our continent abroad by waiving the visa requirement. The Inspectors General for both the State and Justice Departments have raised the possibility that a foreign national could steal and counterfeit a visa-free passport to bypass the visa background check altogether.

The October 8 Wall Street Journal reported that some 1,067 visa-free passports have been stolen in recent years. These are passports that are to be used in entry into the United States. In fact, one of the terrorists who plotted the bombing of the 1993 World Trade Center bombing was caught trying to slip through this loophole in 1995 when he tried to enter the United States using a visa-free Swedish passport.

These are just some of the loopholes that terrorists are trying to exploit. To its credit, the Senate Judiciary Committee recognizes the importance of a worthwhile investment, and one that should be made. However, the security of our borders depends on more than just INS agents. The first line of defense against terrorists are our U.S. consulates abroad.

We must address the loopholes in the visa waiver program that would allow a potential terrorist to enter the United States on a stolen passport. We must prevent consulate shopping. And, we must fully implement a system that can monitor foreign students.

The State and Justice Departments confirm that these are real security threats that must be addressed if we are to protect our borders from terrorists.

I have offered three amendments to address these concerns, which were accepted by the Judiciary Committee chairman and ranking member into the manager’s package.
My first amendment would authorize the necessary funding so that the Justice Department could immediately put into place a tracking system that would require every university, college, and vocational school to submit a name, an address, an enrollment status, and biographical data on each of the international students that these educational institutions sponsor. Such a database would be invaluable to law enforcement officials who may need to identify and locate a potential terrorist.

My second amendment would tighten the visa-waiver program by requiring that any country that participates in that program issue to its citizens within 2 years machine-readable passports that U.S. officials could scan into a "look out" system. This moves forward the original statutory deadline Congress agreed to last year by 4 years.

This amendment would also require the State Department to regularly audit the passports of these visa-free countries to ensure that countries that participate in this program have implemented sufficient safety precautions to prevent the counterfeiting and the theft of their passports.

My third amendment would require the State Department to review how it issues visas to determine if consular shipping is a problem, and then require the Secretary of State to take the necessary steps to correct the problem. The Department of State has the legislative authority it needs to fix this problem. It is now imperative that it use that authority.

My amendments are important steps toward closing down the loopholes in our immigration laws, and I look forward to working with my colleagues so that we may continue to tighten the security of national borders.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, three weeks ago, the President of the United States addressed our country—addressed Congress and this country—announced a war on terrorism. In that address, he asked Congress to provide our law enforcement community with the tools that they need to wage that war effectively.

After several weeks of negotiations with the Chairman and the Administration, I am pleased we have come to the point where we can pass a bipartisan, measured bill that does just that.

Mr. President, each of us has, in different ways, had our lives touched by the awful events of September 11th. Each of us has, in the days since the attack, been shocked and appalled by the terrible images of destruction that have flashed across our television, our newspaper—and in many cases by our own eyes—from the sites of the attacks in Pennsylvania, at the World Trade Center, and at the Pentagon.

Paradoxically, each of us has also been uplifted by the stories of heroism and self-sacrifice that have emerged from around the country in the wake of these terrible events. As the President made clear in his address to the nation, we did not seek this war. This war was thrust upon us—thrust upon us by an unprovoked attack upon our civilian population in the very midst of our greatest cities.

For one month that we could not have conceived that day, October 11th, 2001, we would be at war. It is true that, for years, some of us in this Congress, and around the country, have warned that there were powerful, well-financed individuals located throughout this country who were dedicated to the destruction of our way of life. But, few of us could predict the horrific methods that these men would employ in an effort to destroy us and our democratic institutions.

On September 11th, all that changed. In the last few weeks, we have all come to acknowledge that we live in a different and more dangerous world than the world we thought we knew when we woke up on the morning of September 11th.

... A different world—not only because thousands of our countrymen are dead as a result of the September 11th attacks...

... A different world—because our neighbors now hesitate to get on an airplane, or ride in an elevator, or engage in any one of a number of activities that we took for granted before the attacks...

... A different world—because there remains an ongoing and serious threat to our way of life and, in fact, to our health and well-being as a society.

As has been reported in the national media, the investigation into the September 11th attacks has revealed there are terrorist cells that continue to operate actively among us. It is a chilling thought, but it is true.

The war to which we have collectively committed is a war unlike any war our country has ever faced. It is different because a substantial part of this war must be fought on our own soil. This is not a circumstance of our choosing. The enemy has brought the war to us.

But we must not flinch from acknowledging the fact that, because this is a different kind of war, it is a war that will require different kinds of weapons, and different kinds of tactics.

The Department of Justice, and its investigative components including the FBI, the INS, and the Border Patrol, will continue to have the principal responsibility for identifying and eradicating terrorist activity within our national borders. Our intelligence community must have access to critical information available to our law enforcement community.

Over the last several weeks, the Attorney General has made clear to us, in no uncertain terms, that he does not currently have adequate weapons to fight this war. Weeks ago, the Administration sent to Congress a legislative proposal that would give the Department of Justice and others in law enforcement the tools they need to be effective in tracking down and eliminating terrorist activity in this country.

Over the last several weeks, Senator LEAHY, other members of the Judiciary Committee, and I have undertaken a painstaking review of the anti-terrorism proposal submitted by the Administration. There have been several hearings on this legislation in the Senate, and many briefings by experts and advocates.

A legislation that we are about to vote upon is a product of intense bipartisan negotiations. It is a proposal I am proud to cosponsor with my other colleagues in the Senate and particularly the distinguished Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator LEAHY.

I would like to congratulate Senator LEAHY, in particular, for his thoroughness in reviewing this legislation and his many thoughtful comments and suggestions in our joint effort to ensure that the proposals adequately protect the constitutional liberties of all Americans.

Now, after weeks of fine-tuning, we have reached a final product that accommodates the concerns of each of the senators who cosponsored this bill. The bipartisan bill that we vote on today respects the constitutional liberties of the American people and, at the same time, does what people around America have been calling upon us to do: give our law enforcement community the tools they need to keep us safe in our homes, in our travels, and in our places of business.

I would like to make a few comments regarding the process for this legislation. Although we have considered this in a more expedited manner than other legislation, my colleagues can be assured that this bill has received thorough consideration. First, the fact is that almost all of these proposals have been requested by the Department of Justice for years, and have languished in Congress for years because we have been unable to muster the collective political will to enact them into law.

No one can say whether these tools could have prevented the attacks of September 11th. But, as the Attorney General has said, it is certain that without these tools, we did not stop the vicious acts of last month. I say to my colleagues, Mr. President, if these tools could help us now to track down the perpetrators—if they will help us in our continued pursuit of terrorist activities within our national borders—then we should not hesitate any further to pass these reforms into law. As long as these reforms are consistent with our Constitution—and they are—it is difficult to see why anyone would oppose their passage.

Furthermore, I would like to clearly dispel the myth that the reforms in this legislation somehow abridge the Constitutional freedoms enjoyed by law-abiding American citizens. Some press reports have portrayed this issue as a choice between individual liberties on the one hand, and on the other hand, enhanced powers for our law enforcement institutions. This is a false dichotomy. We should all take comfort that the reforms in this bill are primarily directed at allowing law enforcement agencies to work more efficiently—in no case do they curtail the precious civil liberties protected by our Constitution. I want to assure my colleagues that we worked very hard over the past several weeks to ensure the legislation upholds all of the constitutional freedoms our citizens cherish. It does.

I would like to take a minute to explain briefly a few of the most important provisions of this critical legislation.

First, the legislation encourages information-sharing between various arms of the federal government. I believe most of our citizens would be shocked to learn that, even if certain government officials had prior knowledge of the September 11th attacks, under many circumstances they would have been prohibited by law from sharing that information with the appropriate intelligence or national security authorities.

This legislation makes sure that, in the future, such information flows freely within the Federal government, so that it will be received by those responsible for protecting against terrorist attacks.

By making these reforms, we are rejecting the outdated Cold War paradigm that has prevented cooperation between our intelligence community and our law enforcement agencies. Current law does not adequately allow for such cooperation, artificially handicapping our government’s ability to identify and prevent acts of terrorism against our citizens.

In this new war, Mr. President, terrorists are a hybrid between domestic criminals and international agents. We must lower the barriers that discourage our law enforcement and intelligence agencies from working together to stop these terrorists. These hybrid criminals call for new, hybrid tools.

Second, this bill updates the laws relating to electronic surveillance. Electronic surveillance, conducted under the supervision of a federal judge, is one of the most powerful tools at the disposal of law enforcement community. It is simply a disgrace that we have not acted to modernize the laws currently on the books which govern such surveillance, laws that were enacted before the fax machine came into common usage, and well before the advent of cellular telephones, e-mail, and instant messaging. The Department of Justice has asked us for years to update these laws to reflect the new technologies, but there has always been a call to go slow, to seek more information, to offer further studies.

This is no hypothetical problem. We now know that e-mail, cellular telephones, and the Internet have been principal tools used by the terrorists to coordinate their atrocious activities. We need to pursue all solid investigative leads that exist right now that our law enforcement agents would be unable to pursue because they must continue to work within these outdated laws so that our law enforcement agencies can deal with the world as it is, rather than as the world as it existed 20 years ago.

A good example of the way we are handicapping our law enforcement agencies relates to devices called “pen registers.” Pen registers may be employed by the FBI, after obtaining a court order, to determine what telephone numbers are being dialed from a particular telephone. These devices are essential investigatory tools, which allow law enforcement agents to determine who is speaking to whom, within a criminal conspiracy.

The Supreme Court has held, in Smith v. Maryland, that the information obtained by pen register devices is not information that is subject to ANY constitutional protection. Unlike the content of your telephone conversation, which is private, once your call is connected, the numbers you dial into your telephone are not private. Because you have no reasonable expectation that such numbers will be kept private, they are not protected under the Constitution. The Smith holding was cited with approval by the Supreme Court just earlier this year.

The legislation under consideration today would make clear what the federal courts have already ruled—that federal judges may grant pen register authority to the FBI to cover, not just telephones, but other more modern modes of communication such as e-mail or instant messaging. Let me make clear that the bill does not allow law enforcement to receive the content of the call, but only the numbers the call goes through and the addressing information to identify the computer or computers a suspect is using to further his criminal activity.

Importantly, reform of the pen register law does not allow—as has sometimes been misreported in the press—for law enforcement agents to view the content of any e-mail messages—not even the subject line of e-mails. In addition, this legislation we are about to vote upon makes it explicit that content can not be collected through such pen register orders.

This legislation also allows judges to enter pen register orders with nationwide scope. Nationwide jurisdiction for pen register orders makes common sense. It helps law enforcement agents efficiently identify communications facilities throughout the country, which greatly enhances the ability of law enforcement to identify quickly other members of a criminal organization, such as a terrorist cell that we update our intelligence community with the same authority to use pen register devices, under the auspices of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, that our law enforcement agencies have when investigating criminal offenses. It simply makes sense to provide law enforcement with the same tools to catch terrorists that they already possess in connection with other criminal investigations, such as drug crimes or illegal gambling.

In addition to the pen register statute, this legislation updates other aspects of our wiretapping statutes. It is amazing that law enforcement agents do not currently have authority to seek wiretapping authority from a federal judge when investigating a terrorist offense. This legislation fixes that problem.

Moving on, I note that much has been made of the complex immigration provisions of this bill. I know Senators KENNEDY, KOHL and KENNEDY had questions about earlier provisions, particularly the detention provision for suspected alien terrorists.

I want to assure my colleagues that we have worked hard to address your concerns and the concerns of the public. As with the other immigration provisions of this bill, we have made painstaking efforts to achieve this workable compromise.

Let me address some of the specific concerns. In response to the concern that the INS might detain a suspected terrorist indefinitely, Senator KENNEDY, Senator KYL, and I worked out a compromise that limits the provision. It provides that a person cannot be charged with an immigration or criminal violation within seven days after the commencement of detention or be released. In addition, contrary to what has been alleged, the certification itself is subject to judicial review. The Attorney General's power to detain a suspected terrorist under this bill is, then, not unfettered.

Moreover, Senator LEAHY and I have also worked diligently to craft necessary language that facilitates the deportation of those aliens who are representatives of organizations that endorse terrorist activity, those who use a position of prominence to endorse terrorist activity or persuade others to support terrorist activity, or those who provide material support to terrorist organizations. If we are to fight terrorism, we cannot allow those who support terrorists to remain in our country. Also, I should note that we have worked hard to provide the State Department and the INS the tools they need to ensure that no applicant for admission who is a terrorist is able to secure entry into the United States through legal channels.

Finally, the bill gives law enforcement agencies powerful tools to attack the financial infrastructure of terrorism—giving our government the ability to choke off the financing that these dangerous terrorist organizations need to survive. It reinforces the practice of harboring terrorists, and puts teeth in the laws against providing material support to terrorists.
and terrorist organizations. It gives the President expanded authority to freeze the assets of terrorists and terrorist organizations, and provides for the eventual seizure of such assets. These tools are vital to our ability to effectively wage the war against terrorism, and ultimately win it.

Mr. President, before this debate comes to an end, I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the hard work put in by my staff, the staff of Senator Lieberman, Jeff Taylor, Bert Nash and Leah Balaire, who have brought invaluable expertise to this process. My immigration counsel, Dustin Pead and my legislative assistant Brigham Cannon have provided invaluable assistance.

I would like to thank my Chief Counsel, Makim Delrahim, who has been instrumental in putting this bill together. I also would like to thank my criminal counsel, Jeff Taylor, Stuart Nash and Leah Balaire, who have brought invaluable expertise to this process. My immigration counsel, Dustin Pead and my legislative assistant Brigham Cannon have provided invaluable assistance.

I would like to thank the staff of Senator Leahy—his chief counsel Bruce Cohen, and other members of his staff—Beryl Howell, Julie Katzman, Ed Pagano, David James, and John Eliff.

The Department of Justice has been of great assistance to us in putting this bill together. I would like to thank Attorney General Ashcroft and his Deputy Attorney General for their wise counsel, and for their quick response to our many questions and concerns. Michael Chertoff, the Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division was a frequent participant in our meetings, as well as Assistant Attorneys General Dan Bryant and Viet Dinh. Jennifer Newstead, John Yew, John Elwood and Pat O’Brien were all important participants in this process.

Finally, the White House staff provided essential contributions at all stages of this process. Judge Al Gonzales, the White House counsel provided key guidance, with the help of his wonderful staff, including Tim Flanagan, Courtney Elwood, and Porad Berenson.

In addition, members of the White House Congressional Liaison Office kept this process moving forward. I would like to thank Heather Wingate, Candy Hilty and Nancy Dorn for all the assistance they have given us.

There have been few, if any, times in our nation’s great history where an event has brought home to so many of our citizens, so quickly, and in such a graphic sense of our vulnerability to unexpected attack. I believe we all took some comfort when President Bush promised us that our law enforcement institutions would have the tools necessary to protect us from the danger that we are only just beginning to perceive.

The Attorney General has told us what tools he needs. We have taken the time to review the problems with our current laws, and to reflect on their solutions. The time to act is now. Let us please move forward expeditiously, and give those who are in the business of protecting us the tools that they need to do the job.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues’ support for this important legislation and yield the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, 4 days ago, our nation began strikes against terrorist training camps and the Taliban’s military installations in Afghanistan. They are intended to disrupt the network of terror that spreads across Afghanistan.

But these strikes are only part of a much larger battle. The network that we seek to disrupt and ultimately destroy often operates without borders or boundaries. Its tools are not simply the weapons it chooses to employ. And its trails are more often electronic than physical.

This is a new kind of battle. Winning it will require a new set of tools... And winning is the only acceptable outcome.

Just as we are committed to giving our men and women in uniform the tools and training they need to do what is asked of them, we must now make that same commitment to our justice and law enforcement officials.

After all, we are now asking them to do nothing less than protect the American people by finding, tracking, monitoring—and ultimately stopping—any terrorist elements that threaten our nation or our citizens.

I believe that by passing this measure today, we are taking a swift and significant step toward doing just that. We are also demonstrating, once again, that the Senate can work both quickly and effectively when we work cooperatively.

I want to thank Senator Lott, Chairman Leahy, Graham and Sarbanes, as well as Senators Hatch, Shelby, and Gramm for their leadership on this bill.

I especially want to thank Chairman Leahy’s management and handling of this important and delicate process.

I also want to thank the many other Democratic and Republican Senators whose insights and suggestions improved this legislation.

For example, Senator Kennedy’s input on provisions regarding immigration addressed concerns a number of us had about the detention of legal permanent residents with only few due process protections.

And Senators Enzi, Leahy and Dorgan were able to improve a provision regarding unilateral food and medical sanctions in a way that avoids needlessly hurting American farmers.

I’ll be honest: this bill is not perfect, and I hope that we will be able to work with our House colleagues in the days ahead in order to improve it.

Whenever we weigh civil liberties against national security, we need to do so with the utmost care.

Among other things, I am concerned about the provisions within this bill that allow the sharing of information gathered in grand juries and through wiretaps without judicial check. And, as we give the administration new legitimate powers to wiretap under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, we should do more to protect the rights of Americans who are not suspects or targets of investigations.

These flaws are not insubstantial, but ultimately the need for this bill outweighs them. When it comes to an issue as central to our democracy as the protection of our people, we must act.

This bill does several important things:

First, it will enhance the ability of law enforcement and intelligence agencies to conduct electronic surveillance and execute searches in order to gather critical information to fight terrorism.

Second, it will permit broader information sharing between traditional law enforcement and foreign intelligence officers.

Third, it will increase the Attorney General’s ability to deport and detain individuals who support terrorist activity. I should note, though, that the Senate bill requires the Attorney General either to bring criminal or immigration charges within seven days after taking custody of an alien or relinquish custody.

Fourth, this bill also takes significant steps to increase law enforcement personnel on our northern border. For example, it would triple the number of Border Patrol, Customs Service, and INS inspectors at the northern border, who would work in concert with their Canadian counterparts in order to enhance security in this previously understaffed area.

Fifth, thanks in large part to Senator Leahy’s hard work, this bill makes major revisions to the Victims of Crime Act—by strengthening the Crime Victim Fund and expediting assistance to victims of domestic terrorism.

Sixth and finally, the Banking Committee was able to agree on, and add to this bill, several significant counter money laundering measures. If we are to truly fight terrorism on all fronts, we must fight it on the financial front as well.

As you can see, this is a complex piece of legislation. But its aim is simple: to give law enforcement the tools it needs to fight terrorism.

It was a month ago on this day that we suffered the worst terrorist attack in our Nation’s history. In the days since, we have honored the memories of the more than 6,000 innocent men and women who lost their lives on that terrible day.

Hours ago, for example, we passed a resolution that designates September 11 as a national day of remembrance.

But I believe that to truly honor those whose lives were lost, we must match our words with action, and do all that we can in order to prevent future attacks.
This bill is a significant step towards keeping that commitment, and keeping Americans safe.

Mr. DASCHLE. It is my understanding that the managers intend now to yield back the remainder of the time on the bill and we will go straight to final passage.

First, I thank all Senators for their cooperation tonight. This was a very good day. We got a lot of work done, and I appreciate the work of all Members. There will not be rollcall votes tomorrow. In fact, we will not be in session. We will come in on Monday, midafternoon. There will be a vote on the motion to proceed to the foreign operations bill and a vote on the conference report on Interior appropriations bill at approximately 5:30 Monday afternoon. I thank all Senators.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we are about to go to final passage. We thought there would be a managers' package. We signed off on this side, and apparently the other side has not, which is their right.

Mr. HATCH. We have a managers' package. It is done. It is just being assembled and put together and will be here.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. I am glad there will be a managers' package. We cannot vote on final passage until the managers' package is here. I thank the majority leader for his help. As I said before, I don't think the bill could have gotten as far as it did without that help. I wish the administration had kept to the agreement they made September 30. We would have a more balanced bill. I still am not sure why the administration backed away from their agreement. I am the old style Vermonter: When you make an agreement, you stick with it. But they decided not to, and it slowed us up a bit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let's have order in the Senate Chamber so the Senator can be heard.

Mr. LEAHY isyielding the floor.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the passage of the amendment, the managers' amendment be considered subject to approval by both managers and both leaders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. What is the request?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will repeat the request. There is a technical amendment having to do with some of the issues that have been worked out, that have no substantive consequence. I ask unanimous consent that this managers' amendment be approved, notwithstanding the passage of the bill subject to approval by the two managers and the two leaders.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the quorum call to be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield all time. I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill for the third time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, what is the status?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is ready for third reading.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask the Chair if the managers' amendment has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been none submitted.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Section 201. Short Title.

This title may be cited as the “International Money Laundering Abatement and Anti-Terrorist Financing Act of 2001.”

Section 202. Findings and Purposes.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) money laundering, estimated by the International Monetary Fund to amount to between 2 and 5 percent of global gross domestic product, with the least $600,000,000,000 annually, provides the financial fuel that permits transnational criminal enterprises to conduct and expand their operations to the detriment of the safety and security of American citizens;

(2) money laundering, and the defects in financial transparency on which money launderers rely, are critical to the financing of global terrorism and the provision of funds for terrorist attacks;

(3) money launderers subvert legitimate financial mechanisms and financing relationships by using them as protective covering for the movement of criminal proceeds and the financing of crime and terrorism, and, by disguising ownership and movement of criminal funds, derived from, or used to commit, offenses ranging from narcotics trafficking, terrorism, arms smuggling, and trafficking in human beings, to financial frauds that prey on law-abiding citizens;

(4) transactions involving offshore jurisdictions make it difficult for law enforcement officials and regulators to follow the trail of money earned by criminals, organized international criminal enterprises, and global terrorist organizations;

(5) correspondent banking facilities are one of the banking mechanisms susceptible in some circumstances to manipulation by foreign money launderers, for example corrupt foreign government officials, particularly if those services include the creation of offshore accounts and facilities for large personal funds transfers to channel funds into accounts around the globe;

(6) United States anti-money laundering efforts, including by outmoded and inadequate statutory provisions that make investigations, prosecutions, and forfeitures more difficult, particularly in cases in which money launderers combine foreign persons, foreign banks, or foreign countries;

(7) the ability to mount effective counter-measures to money laundering requires national, as well as bilateral and multilateral, action, using tools specially designed for that effort; and

(b) Purposes.—The purposes of this title are—

(1) to increase the strength of United States measures to prevent, detect, and prosecute international money laundering and the financing of terrorism;

(2) to ensure that—

(A) banking transactions and financial relationships and the transactions and relationships, do not contravene the purposes of subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 31, United States Code, section 21 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, chapter 2 of title I of Public Law 91–508 (84 Stat. 1116), or facilitate the evasion of any such provision; and the purposes of such provisions of law continue to be fulfilled, and that such provisions of law are effectively and efficiently administered;

(b) to strengthen the provisions put into place by the Money Laundering Control Act of 1986 (18 U.S.C. 961 note), especially with respect to crimes by non-United States nationals and foreign financial institutions;

(4) to provide a clear national mandate for subjecting to special scrutiny those foreign jurisdictions, financial institutions operating outside of the United States, and classes of international transactions that pose particular, identifiable opportunities for criminal abuse;

(5) to provide the Secretary of the Treasury (in this title referred to as the “Secretary") with broad discretion, subject to the safeguards provided by the Administrative Procedure Act under title 5, United States Code, to take measures tailored to the particular money laundering problems presented by specific foreign jurisdictions, financial institutions operating outside of the United States, and classes of international transactions;

(6) to ensure that the employment of such measures by the Secretary permits appropriate opportunity for comment by affected financial institutions;

(7) to provide guidance to domestic financial institutions on particular foreign jurisdictions, financial institutions operating outside of the United States, and classes of international transactions that are of primary money laundering concern to the United States Government;

(8) to ensure that the forfeiture of any assets in connection with the anti-terrorism efforts of the United States permits for adequate challenge consistent with providing due process rights;

(9) to clarify the terms of the safe harbor from civil liability for filing suspicious activity reports;

(10) to strengthen the authority of the Secretary to issue and administer geographic targeting orders, and to clarify the violations of such orders or any other requirement imposed under the authority contained in chapter 2 of title I of Public Law 91–508 and subchapters II and III of chapter 53 of title 31, United States Code, may result in criminal and civil penalties;

(11) to ensure that all appropriate elements of the financial services industry are subject to appropriate requirements to report potential money laundering transactions to proper authorities, and that jurisdictional disputes do not hinder examination of financial institutions with relevant reporting requirements;

(12) to fix responsibility for high level coordination of the anti-money laundering efforts of the Department of the Treasury;

(13) to strengthen the ability of financial institutions to maintain the integrity of their employee population and to alert the respective assets to the citizens of countries to whom such assets belong.

(14) to strengthen measures to prevent the use of the United States financial system for personal gain by corrupt foreign officials and to promote the repatriation of assets to the citizens of countries to whom such assets belong.
SEC. 303. 4-YEAR CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW-EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION.

(a) In General.—Effective on and after the first day of October, 2005, the provisions of this title and the amendments made by this title shall terminate if the Congress enacts a joint resolution, the text after the resolving clause of which follows: “...The provisions of the International Money Laundering Abatement and Anti-Terrorist Financing Act of 2001, and the amendments made thereby, shall no longer have the force of law.”

THE PENTAGON MEMORIAL SERVICE

Mr. MCcAIN. Mr. President, on this solemn day, one month since the horrific terrorist attacks on American citizens, our institutions, and our way of life, memorial services were held in New York City and Arlington, VA. President Bush, whom I commend for his leadership and strong efforts to unify our Nation at this difficult time in our history, spoke today at the Pentagon, and I am privileged to do so.

I have also included the remarks of the Secretary of Defense, the Honorable Donald H. Rumsfeld, and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Richard B. Myers, USAF.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the remarks of the President of the United States, the Secretary of Defense, and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff be printed in the RECORD, following my remarks.

President Pays Tribute at Pentagon Memorial (Remarks by the President at the Department of Defense Service of Remembrance)

The President. Please be seated. President and Senator Clinton, thank you all for being here. We began here to pay our respects to 125 men and women who died in the service of America. We also remember 64 passengers on a hijacked plane; those men and women, boys and girls who fell into the hands of evildoers, and also died here exactly one month ago.

On September 11th, great sorrow came to our country. That sorrow has become a great resolve. Today, we are a nation awakened to the evil of terrorism, and determined to destroy it. That work began the moment we were attacked, and it will continue until justice is delivered.

Americans are returning, as we must, to the normal pursuits of life. Americans are returning, to the normal pursuits of life. But we know that if you lost a son or daughter here, or a husband, or a wife, or a mom or dad, life will never again be as it was. The loss was sudden, and hard, and permanent. So difficult to explain. So difficult to accept.

Three schoolchildren traveling with their teacher: An Army general. A budget analyst who reported to work here for 30 years. A lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve who left behind a wife, a four-year son, and another child on the way.

One life touches so many others. One death can leave sorrow that seems almost unbearable. But to all of you who lost someone here, I want to say: You are not alone. The American people will never forget the cruelty that was done here and in New York, and in Pennsylvania.

We will never forget all the innocent people killed by the hatred of a few. We know the loneliness you feel in your loss. The entire nation shares in your sadness, the entire nation shares in your loneliness, and religion. The terrorists have no true home in any country, or culture, or faith. They dwell in dark corners of the earth. And there, they planned and plotted.

This week, I have called, this week, I have called the Armed Forces into action. One by one, we are eliminating power centers of a regime that harbors al Qaeda terrorists. We gave that regime a choice: Turn over the terrorists, or face your ruin. They chose unwisely.

The Taliban regimen has brought nothing but fear and misery to the people of Afghanistan. These rulers call themselves holy men, yet more and more money from heroin trafficking. They consider themselves pious and devout, while subjecting women to fierce brutality.

The Taliban has allied itself with murderers and gave them shelter. But today, for al Qaeda and the Taliban, there is no shelter. An Americans did 60 years ago, we have entered a struggle of uncertain duration. But now, as then, we can be certain of the outcome, because we have a number of decisive assets.

We have a unified country. We have the patience to fight and win on many fronts: Blocking terrorist plans, seizing their funds, arresting their networks, disrupting their support, and targeting their sponsors.

And we have one more great asset in this case: The brave men and women of the United States military.

From my desk in this office, I have felt and seen the strong spirit of the Armed Forces. I saw it Fort Stewart, Georgia, when I first visited troops as Commander-in-Chief, and looked into the faces of proud and determined soldiers. I saw it in Annapolis on a graduation day, at Camp Pendleton in California, Camp Bondsteel in Kosovo. And I have seen this spirit at the Pentagon, before and after the attack on this building.

You’ve responded to a great emergency with calm and courage. And for that, your country honors you. A Commander-in-Chief must know, must know that he can count on the skill and readiness of servicemen and women. You have given me that of command. You have given me that confidence.

And I give you these commitments. The wound to this building will not be forgotten. Not as long as I am Commander-in-Chief, we will quickly rebuild the Pentagon. In the missions ahead for the military, you will have everything you need, every resource, every weapon, every means to assure full victory for the United States and the cause of freedom.

And I pledge to you that America will not be intimidated by this terror. There will be times of swift, dramatic action. There will be times of steady, quiet progress. Over time, with patience, and persistent American determination. They will be isolated, surrounded, cornered, until there is no place to run, or hide, or rest.

As military and civilian personnel in the Pentagon, you are an important part of the struggle we have entered. You know the risks of your calling, and you have willingly accepted them. You believe in our country, and our country believes in you.

Within sight of this building is Arlington Cemetery, the final resting place of many of those who on Sept. 11th lived the heroic ideal for which this nation stands and heart, firm of purpose. Inspired by all the others who have come before us, we will meet our moment and we will prevail.

May God bless you all, and may God bless America.

MEMORIAL SERVICE IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE THOSE LOST ON SEPTEMBER 11

(Remarks Prepared for Delivery by Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld, The Pentagon, Arlington, VA, Thursday, October 11, 2001)

We are gathered here because of what happened here on September 11th. Events that bring to mind tragedy—but also our gratitude to those who came to assist that day and afterwards, those who have said that the Pentagon site everyday—the guards, police, fire and rescue workers, the Defense Protective service, hospitals, Red Cross, family center professionals and volunteers and many others.

And yet our reason for being here today is something else.

We gathered here to remember, to console and to pray.

To remember comrades and colleagues, friends and family members, those lost to us on Sept. 11th.

We remember them as heroes. And we are right to do so. They died because, in words of President John F. Kennedy offered him when he said they were Americans. They died, then, because of how they lived—as free men and women, proud of their freedom, proud of their country.

And they died for another reason—the simple fact they worked here in this building—the Pentagon.

It is seen as a place of power, the locus of command for what has been called the greatest accumulation of military might in history. And yet it is far different than the long course of history has usually known.

In the last century, this building existed to oppose two totalitarian regimes that sought to oppress and to rule other nations. And it is an exaggeration of historical judgment to say that managed to overturn these two totalitarian regimes in their day.

And yet our reason for being here today is something else.

We gathered here to remember, to console and to pray.

To remember the brave men and women of the United States military.

The PRESIDENT. Please be seated. President and Senator Clinton, thank you all for being here. We began here to pay our respects here.

The Guards, police, fire and rescue workers, the Defense Protective service, hospitals, Red Cross, family center professionals and volunteers and many others.

And yet our reason for being here today is something else.

We gathered here to remember, to console and to pray.

To remember comrades and colleagues, friends and family members, those lost to us on Sept. 11th.

We remember them as heroes. And we are right to do so. They died because, in words of President John F. Kennedy offered him when he said they were Americans. They died, then, because of how they lived—as free men and women, proud of their freedom, proud of their country.

And they died for another reason—the simple fact they worked here in this building—the Pentagon.

It is seen as a place of power, the locus of command for what has been called the greatest accumulation of military might in history. And yet it is far different than the long course of history has usually known.

for which this building exists—the ideal of service to country and to others. Beyond all this, their deaths remind us of a new kind of evil, the evil of a threat and menace that our nation and the world has now fully awakened, because of them. In causing this awakening, then, the terrorists have assured their own destruction. And today, have, in the event of their death, assured their own triumph over hate and fear. For out of this act of terror—and the awakening it brings—here and around the globe—will come victory over terrorism. A victory that one day may save millions from the harm of weapons of mass destruction. And this victory—their victory—is part of that larger awe and wonder that we feel this morning for those who lost their lives, for those who loved them, and the ironies that is those whom we have come to console have given us the best of all solutions, by reminding us not only of the meaning of the deaths, but of the lives of their loved ones.

"He was a hero long before the eleventh of September," said a friend of one of those who have lost—"a hero every single day, a hero to his family, to his friends and to his professional peers." A veteran of the Gulf War—hardworking, who served most recently in Afghanistan—said:

And those who knew, those who have lost loved ones: Know that the heart of America—and a great heart it is—can muster.

Watching and listening today, Americans everywhere are saying: I wish I could be there to tell them how sorry we are, how much we grieve for them. And to tell them too, how thankful we are for those they loved, and that trial we will remember them, and recall always the meaning of their deaths and their lives.

A Marine chaplain, in trying to explain why the human explainable and understandable on a tragedy such as this, said once: "You would think it would break the heart of God." We stand today in the midst of tragedy—the mystery of tragedy. Yet a mystery that is part of that larger awe and wonder that causes us to bow our heads in faith and say of those who mourn, those who have lost, the words we cannot now let—our heroes go in peace. Thy word has been fulfilled.

To the families and friends of our fallen colleagues and comrades we extend today our deepest sympathy and condolences—and those of the American people.

We pray that God will give some share of the peace that now belongs to those we lost, to those who knew and loved them in this life.

But as we grieve together we are also thankful—for their lives, thankful for the time we had with them. And proud too—as proud as they were—that they lived their lives as Americans.

We are mindful too—and resolute that their deaths, like their lives, shall have meaning. And that the birthright of human freedom that the uniformed military members—made the commitment to fight for, and if necessary, to die for our country from the beginnings of their careers. Our civilian DOD employees who have chosen to serve in a different way but are now bound to their former comrades in the same sacrifice. Other victims, employees of contractors and the passengers and crew of the airliner, were innocents—casualties of a war not of their choosing.

But if by some miracle, we were able to ask all of them today whether a Nation and government such as ours is worth their sacrifices; if we were able to ask them today whether that light and glory is worth future sacrifices; the answer, surely, would be a resounding "yes." But to perpetrate this violence should know that there are millions more American patriots who echo that resounding yes.

Those who defend this Nation say to those who threaten us—here we stand—resolute in our allegiance to the Constitution; united in our service to the American people and the preservation of our way of life, undaunted in our devotion to duty and honor. We remember the dead. We call them heroes, not because they died, but because they lived in service to the greater good. We know that's small comfort to those who have lost family members and dear friends. To you, their loved ones, it is too, how thankful we are for those they loved dearly, but one of whom he gave very little to the passengers and crew of Flight 77. We also grieve for those who lost their lives in the world for those killed in New York City and Pennsylvania. We gather to comfort each other and to honor the dead.

Our DOD continues working in the Pentagon that day would insist that they were only doing their jobs. But we know better. We know, and they knew, that they were serving their country. And suddenly, on 11 September they were called to make the ultimate sacrifice. For that, we call them heroes.

We honor the heroism of defending our Nation. We honor the heroism and taking an oath to support the Constitution. We honor the heroism of standing ready to serve the greater good of our Nation. That same heroism was on display at the Pentagon in the aftermath of the attack. Co-workers, firefighters, police officers, medics—even private citizens driving past on the highway—all rushed to help and put themselves in grave danger to rescue survivors and treat the injured.

One of them, who I had a chance to meet recently, was Army Sergeant Adis Goodwill, a young emergency medical technician. She drove the first ambulance from Walter Reed Army Hospital to arrive at the scene. Sergeant Goodwill spent long hours treating the wounded—simply doing her duty—all the while not knowing, or worrying about, the fate of her sister, Lia, who worked in the World Trade Center. She would eventually learn that Lia was OK.

Prior to 11 September, Sergeant Goodwill hadn't decided whether to reenlist in the Army or not. After the tragic events of that day, her course was clear. And three weeks ago, I had the privilege of reenlisting her. With tears of pride in their eyes, her family, including her sister Lia, watched her take the oath of office. Sergeant Goodwill is with us today.

The heroes kept coming in the days following the 11th—individual volunteers, both civilian and military; firefighters; police officers; emergency medical technicians; rescue units working on the site. Other Americans helped too, as General Van Alstyne said, with donations of equipment supplies, and food; letters and cards; and a prayer for their loved ones, and American flags everywhere.

Today, we mourn our losses, but we should also celebrate the spirit of the heroes of 11 September, both living and dead, and the heroic spirit that remains at the core of our great Nation. This is what our enemies do not understand. They can knock us off stride, but they cannot defeat us, for a people who will gather ourselves with an unmatched unity of purpose and will rise to defend the ideals that make this country a beacon of hope around the world. We stand today in the midst of tragedy. Let us not understand, just as链接。
Many of us have anecdotes and stories about Mike Mansfield. I, too, have some, but I would prefer to keep them as part of my warm and happy personal memories of my acquaintance with my Leader. Like all who have known him, I will miss him. I know I am a better American for knowing Mike Mansfield. It is difficult to say goodbye to a good friend, but in saying goodbye, I wish to assure him that his lessons will never be forgotten.

I ask unanimous consent that an editorial piece that appeared in the Honolulu Advertiser on October 6, 2001, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MIKE MANSFIELD MADE HIS MARK HERE, IN JAPAN

It's a tossup whether the passing of Mike Mansfield, who died yesterday at 98, will be noted more prominently in Japan or the United States. He was widely respected and admired in both countries.

The Montana Democrat was both the longest-serving Senate majority leader and the longest-serving U.S. ambassador to Japan.

Named ambassador in 1977 by President Carter, Mansfield was reappointed by President Reagan in 1981.

When he returned home after 11 years in Tokyo, the Washington Post reported, Japan's ambassador to the United States said Mansfield "could have run for prime minister and won."

Expressing condolences yesterday, Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi called Mansfield a great contributor to friendship between the nations.

Mansfield's service as Senate majority leader, from 1961 to 1976, gave him a central role in debates on civil rights, the Vietnam War, which he strongly opposed, and the Watergate crisis.

Mansfield exercised that role with a leadership style that drew bipartisan praise.

"It's no coincidence that the Mansfield years were among the most civil, and the most productive, in the Senate's history," Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle said yesterday.

Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, said, "We have had few like him, but then with the good Lord's help, it takes only a few."

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, with the passing of Mike Mansfield, this Chamber lost a man who embodied the true meaning of public service. And while he will no longer be with us, his spirit and his commitment to serving our Nation survives him and guides us. I rise today to pay my respects for his service and to honor the legacy that we honor his life by following his example.

Mike Mansfield's patriotism and commitment to public service resided in the very core of who he was. At the ripe old age of 14, when most boys are signing up for freshman football, Mike Mansfield was signing up for his first tour with the Navy. After the Navy discharged him due to his age, Mike Mansfield would reenlist and serve in the Army and Marine Corps. For a young man from Montana, those experiences developed an interest and passion for defining America's role in this world. Back in 1921, when the word "globalization" was not exactly in vogue, Mike Mansfield was taking his first trip to Asia. His commitment to United States-Asia relations was unprecedented, while his leadership in this area was unparalleled. It is with awe that in an age of hyper-partisanship, we look back at a life of service that put principles above partisanship. One can only look back with awe and respect at a man who not only served as the longest serving Senate majority leader but also the longest serving U.S. Ambassador to Japan. While this Nation said goodbye this weekend to our modern day ironman, Cal Ripken, it's only appropriate that the nation recognizes the Senate's own ironman. Mike Mansfield's legacy will be found not only in the accomplishments of his service, but equally in the vision he left for his colleagues and the manner in which he demonstrated his leadership.

Senator Mansfield once said that "by exploring the cultural, religious, and economic values that provide a foundation for a nation, we can begin to better understand each other and contribute to the knowledge and understanding that will strengthen our ties of friendship and lead to a better world." As we lead this Nation into the new inter-dependent future, it will serve us well to keep Mike Mansfield's words, and his legacy, close to us.

TRIBUTE TO STANLEY BLAKE HARRIS, CHIEF COUNSEL AND DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute and wish a fond farewell to a longtime staff member, Stanley Blake Harris, who is departing my personal office staff and returning to the State of Mississippi after more than fifteen years of exemplary service here in Washington. Throughout his career, Stan has served with distinction. It is my privilege to acknowledge his accomplishments and commend him for the superb service he has provided to me and to our home state.

A native of Hattiesburg, MS, Stan graduated from William Carey College in 1982, ranked first academically in his class. During his tenure at William Carey, Stan earned the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science summa cum laude, with a triple major in English, History, and Social Science as well as a minor in Business Administration and Political Science. In addition, Stan's classmates bestowed upon him the honor and privilege of serving as Student Government Association President while at William Carey.

Upon his graduation, Stan enrolled in the University of Mississippi School of Law, from which he received a Juris Doctorate in 1985. His endeavors and accomplishments on behalf of the law school and his classmates were recognized when he was awarded the Dean's Outstanding Service Award, the Edward R. Finch Award, and the Stephen Gorove Award.

Immediately following his graduation from law school, Stan continued his educational pursuits at Mississippi State University, where he enrolled in the Public Policy and Administration Program. However, before he could complete the program, he was employed by the White House. At the beginning of 1986, Stan came to work for me in Washington as a Whip Assistant in the House of Representatives Republican Whip Office. From there, Stan went on to serve as Counsel in my personal office while I was a member of the House of Representatives.

Upon my election to the United States Senate in 1989, Stan was named Counsel and Director of Projects in my office, and was charged with responsibility for establishing my Projects Department. In this role, Stan has directed efforts in my office to pursue public projects for the State of Mississippi. Along these lines, he has handled cases and projects involving virtually every Federal department and agency, including the Department of Agriculture, NASA, the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Appalachian Regional Commission and the White House. Stan has worked closely with officials in virtually every city, county, and state agency in Mississippi, while looking after Mississippi's needs. Further, Mississippi has benefited from the close working relationship developed with Congressional staff members in both the House and Senate.

Although Stan has worked diligently for the nation throughout his tenure on Capitol Hill, he has always put Mississippi first. The thing I will always remember the most about Stan is his unflinching ability to "out-bureaucrat the bureaucrats." His tenacity and refusal to yield on matters of importance to Mississippi have produced great respect for our state. For instance, Stan has been instrumental in my efforts to secure a new Federal courthouse for Harrison County, Mississippi. He has worked tirelessly for me for the past decade to ensure that a new bridge over the Pascagoula River is built for the people of Jackson County. And just last year on my behalf, he opened doors in Washington for officials from his hometown of Hattiesburg, who are endeavoring to construct a new inter-state center for the State of Hattiesburg. He also has worked closely with Mississippi's universities to improve educational opportunities in our State and to make these facilities the finest in the Nation.

But Stan's work on Capitol Hill has not been limited to Mississippi projects alone. Over the past fifteen years, he also has maintained a special focus on Federal ethics. During this time, Stan has served as my counsel through such prominent cases as the Durenberger hearings, as well as other notable ethics inquiries. In fact, because of his work, Stan was selected to serve on the Senate Ethics Reform Task Force. As an outgrowth of his Federal ethics work, Stan has also developed a special commitment to law enforcement organizations nationwide. Because of his work on behalf of law enforcement groups everywhere and our nation’s parks, Stan has been named an honorary member of the U.S. Park Police.

Several years ago, as if his plate wasn’t already full enough, Stan fulfilled a dream of joining the Mississippi Army National Guard. For a number of years now, he has regularly commuted between Washington, D.C. and Jackson, Mississippi to fulfill his duty requirements. During that time, he has risen to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Judge Advocate General Corps where he now serves as Deputy Staff Judge Advocate for Headquarters, 66th Troop Command.

On Wednesday, October 17, 2001, Stan will have served over fifteen years of faithful and loyal service in my office. And while it is difficult to lose a staff member with such dedication and institutional knowledge, I know that he and his family are excited about returning home to Washington, D.C. and spending time with his wife, Lauren, can begin raising their four children with an appropriate southern accent.

In the weeks ahead, Stan will begin a new journey in his professional and legal career as the Chief Deputy Assistant United States Attorney in the U.S. Attorney’s Southern District office in Mississippi. I have no doubt that Stan will serve the Department of Justice, the State of Mississippi, and the people of our Nation, in this role with distinction and integrity. On behalf of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I wish to thank Stan all of the best in his new career. Stan, may this new chapter in your life and career be rewarding, fulfilling, and bring you all that you need to be happy in your new role.

Thank you, again, for your service and dedication. Stan, may this new chapter in your life and career be rewarding, and bring you all that you in your life and career be rewarding, new career. Stan, may this new chapter in your life and career be rewarding.

HONORING MASTER SERGEANT EVANDER EARL ANDREWS

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I rise today in sadness over the first announced American casualty in Operation Enduring Freedom. Master Sergeant Evander Earl Andrews, who was stationed in my home State of Idaho at the Mountain Home Air Force Base, was killed in action to his country in the Arabian Peninsula. He was part of the 366th Civil Engineer Squadron stationed there. Although Master Sergeant Andrews was originally from a small town in Maine, Idaho feels this loss as a part of the Nation.

Master Sergeant Andrews went to the Middle East to fight for our freedom with valor and courage in this time of national crisis and made the ultimate sacrifice in defense of his country. There are no words for such an incredible loss, but we are a great Nation because of brave men and women like Master Sgt. Andrews.

flags are flying all over our country now, a visible display of the support our military troops and our President have over Operation Enduring Freedom. With the news of the first American casualty, it becomes even more evident that American lives will be lost in this fight against terrorism. Our hearts and prayers are not only with the family of Master Sergeant Andrews in Idaho and Maine, but also with the families of all our military troops, who are serving their country so far away.

This nation from which that will be won over a period of months or years through several strategic actions; there is no one operation that will rid the world of the evils of terrorism. But one thing is certain: freedom will prevail and we will not forget Master Sergeant Andrews and others like him to whom we owe our liberties.

VISION 2020 WORLD SIGHT DAY 2001

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, Vision 2020 World Sight Day 2001 is observed today, Thursday October 11, 2001, in cooperation with the World Health Organization, WHO, the 2000 Foundation of Tulsa, Oklahoma, Christian Blind Mission International, CBMI, and a partnership of 26 international organizations concerned with world blindness working together to eliminate avoidable blindness by the year 2020.

Forty-five million people living in our world are totally blind. Eighty percent of this blindness could be prevented or cured with simple cost-effective nutrition, medicines and medical care. A child in our world goes blind every minute, most often due to a simple lack of Vitamin A. More than half of these precious children will die within 2 years of losing their sight.

The primary causes of blindness, malnutrition, disease, lack of medicines and medical care, are always linked to the grinding poverty so characteristic of developing nations around the globe. Millions of men, women and children needlessly live in a prison of darkness 24 hours a day. They desperately need the help of privileged nations to be set free.

The Vision 2020 program plans to eliminate most of the world’s blindness by the year 2020. But with no intervention, the number of blind in this world will reach an estimated 100 million by the year 2020.

World Sight Day 2001 raises awareness that most blindness, associated misery, and several billion dollars in related costs can be prevented if we as a nation and a world intervene in time. I commend the 2000 Foundation, Christian Blind Mission International and the other members of the 2020 Task Force for helping bring the gift of sight to the less fortunate around the world.

SIX SIMPLE STEPS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, an organization called Common Sense about Kids and Guns has developed a list of six gun safety tips that have been endorsed by a wide range of organizations from the National SAFE KIDS Campaign to the National Shooting Sport Foundation. Regardless of our differences of opinion on how to regulate firearms, I think we can all agree that these simple steps make a lot of sense.

All gun owners should unload and lock up their guns, lock and store ammunition separately and keep keys where kids are unable to find them. In addition, parents should ask if guns are stored at places where their kids visit or play, regularly talk with their kids about guns, and teach young children both not to touch guns and tell an adult if they find one.

The Centers for Disease Control’s National Center for Health Statistics reports that firearm deaths of children and teens is dropping. However, ignoring firearms related child homicides, there were still 1,300 kids killed in gun-related accidents and suicides in 1999.

That number remains far too high. Requiring the simple steps proposed by Common Sense about Kids and Guns can help cut that number even more.

PREPARING FOR BIOTERRORISM IN SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senator JOHN EDWARDS, and Senator CHUCK HAGEL, in supporting legislation to help South Dakotans prepare for possible bioterrorist attacks. The recent example of anthrax being reported in Florida has highlighted the importance of being prepared to combat bioterrorism in our communities.

Now this doesn’t mean that everyone should run out and buy a gas mask. Successful attacks using germs and chemicals are relatively rare and difficult to accomplish and rarely attempted.

However, the nature of such an attack makes just one successful act of bioterrorism unique and incredibly damaging. For example, most of the chemicals involved in bioterrorism, anthrax and smallpox to name a few, are so rare that many medical professionals haven’t treated them before. Symptoms may not be visible for days or weeks, and these diseases can be spread easily among people.

In addition to threatening people, bioterrorism can also cripple our State’s agriculture economy. We all saw this summer how the threat of foot-and-mouth disease in the United States can directly impact South Dakota’s ag business.

The risk of an agriculture terrorist attack poses a serious threat to our economy as well as our abundant food supply. An agricultural terrorist could introduce a pathogen to a certain crop and decimate that crop’s yield. A deadly spreading animal disease intentionally introduced could cause economic ruin to States that depend on revenues from the livestock industry.
Earlier this week, the nonpartisan General Accounting Office, GAO, reported that coordination is fragmented between 40 Federal departments and agencies responsible for responding to a bioterrorist attack. The GAO also noted insufficient State and local planning for response to terrorist attacks. In addition, while spending on domestic preparedness for terrorist attacks has risen 310 percent since 1998, only a portion of these funds were used to conduct research on and prepare for the public health and medical consequences of a bioterrorist attack.

To better address the needs of State and local communities in dealing with the threat of bioterrorism, I recently joined Senators Edwards and Hagel, on legislation called the Biological and Chemical Weapons Preparedness Act.

Our legislation provides $1.6 billion in new resources for Federal, State, and local efforts, including $450 million specifically for agricultural counter-terrorism and food safety measures. Too often, bioterrorism funding has been tied up in the bureaucracy of Washington, and I’m pleased that our legislation sends over one-third of these $1.6 billion dollars directly to States and local governments through new block grants. Our legislation gives States and local communities the resources to study the problems unique to them and implement appropriate solutions.

Our legislation would accomplish six goals. First, we would provide training and equipment to State and local “first responders,” such as emergency medical personnel, law enforcement officials, fire fighters, physicians, and nurses, to recognize and respond to biological and chemical attacks.

Second, our bill strengthens the local public health network through increased training, coordination, and additional equipment.

Third, we protect food safety and the agricultural economy by providing assistance to States to better coordinate with law enforcement and public health officials, increase training and awareness among farmers and other agricultural stakeholders. Our measure would also give States the resources they need to establish emergency diagnostic facilities to work in conjunction with the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s facility to quickly diagnose animal and plant diseases. Along with this assistance to States, the measure would provide additional funds for the USDA’s counterterrorism efforts.

Fourth, the legislation assists local hospital emergency rooms with response training and biocleanup and decontamination capabilities.

Fifth, we address the need to develop and stockpile vaccines and antibiotics.

Finally, our Biological and Chemical Weapons Preparedness Act enhances disease surveillance between the Centers for Disease Control, CDC, and State and local public health services to provide electronic nationwide access to critical data, treatment guidelines, and alerts.

Our legislation has been referred to the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, and there have already been a handful of hearings held so far, anticipate a number of proposals, since it is being discussed and a compromise ultimately being sent to the President this year.

I will continue to work to ensure that the provisions in our legislation dealing with rural communities and agriculture are included in any legislation that is signed into law by the President.

ONE-MONTH ANNIVERSARY OF TERRORIST ATTACKS

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, grief has changed the face of America. We are a tear-stained Nation. But today, one month after the September 11 attacks, we are one America, united as seldom before.

Patriotism prevails throughout the country. The pins on our jackets, the flags taped to cars and hanging from windows, the millions of dollars in donations to the victims, this is the American response to tragedy.

We are all and all support of our troops flying dangerous missions over Afghanistan. This is the first step in a prolonged campaign against the terrorists. It is a necessary step and it is directed at the right targets, the Taliban government, and those strongholds, our bombers are flying over Taliban strongholds, our C-17s are dropping food to the refugees.

Today, our thoughts are with those who lost their lives one month ago, and with the families who said goodbye to their loved ones for the last time.

But in the past month, we have seen the great spirit of Americans. The hatred and utter disregard for human life shown by the terrorists stands in stark contrast to the outpouring of sympathy and compassion by millions of Americans, in acts great and small. We gave what we could: Money, water, shelter, blood, and sometimes just a shoulder to lean on. Entertainers came together for an unprecedented benefit, athletes donated their salaries, and children even donated their piggy banks.

Among the most inspiring stories of September 11 were the rescue workers. Sadly, many of the heroes of September 11 are now among the victims. Their valor has inspired the Nation. Their sacrifice will not go unnoted or their deeds unsung. If those rescue workers could muster the strength to do what was needed then, surely our Nation can find the strength to do what is needed now. Stalin once said, "We must prepare our military, strengthen our intelligence operations, and tighten our security. And we must rally behind our President.

Let those who practice terrorism or harbor terrorists have no doubt about America’s intent. We will find you. We will strike you militarily, economically, and politically. And you will pay a heavy price for your acts against mankind.

We have overcome the enemies of freedom before. We conquered the evil of fascism in Europe and Asia, rescued democracy, and built a better world. We defied communism for decades powered by the certainty that freedom was ultimately triumphing. You will not take these gains from us.

Though we mourn the loss of our fellow Americans, our eyes are undimmed by tears. Our dreams are undiminished by fear. From the ashes of terrorism, we will build a new tower to freedom that will cast its light around the world.

And, with God’s help, we will prove again what the poet Carl Sandburg once said:

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, statistics show that a woman is raped every five minutes in the United States and that one in every three adult women experiences at least one physical assault by a partner during adulthood. In fact, more women are injured by domestic violence each year than by automobile accidents and cancer deaths combined.

October, as Domestic Violence Awareness Month, is a good time to take a serious look at the progress we’ve made in addressing the problem of abuse against women in our communities. In 1983, I introduced legislation in the South Dakota State Legislature to use marriage license fees to help fund domestic abuse shelters. At that time, thousands of South Dakota women and children were in need of shelters and programs to help them. However, few people wanted to acknowledge that domestic abuse occurred in their communities, or even in their homes.

During the last 7 years, I have led efforts in the United States Congress to authorize the original Violence Against Women Act, VAWA, and, most recently, expand and improve the program to assist rural communities. South Dakota has received over $8 million in VAWA funds for women’s shelters and family violence prevention services. In addition the law has doubled tracing time for repeat sex offenders, established mandatory restitution to victims of violence against women, and strengthened interstate enforcement of violent crimes against women. South Dakotans can also call a nationwide toll free line for immediate crisis intervention help and free referrals to local services. The number for women to call for help is 1-800-799-SAFE.
In South Dakota last year, over 5,500 women were provided assistance in domestic violence shelters and outreach centers thanks, in part, to VAWA funds. While I am pleased that we have made significant progress in getting resources to thousands of South Dakota women who need it, I also recognize that the problem is multiplied on the reservations where Native American women are abused at two and a half times the national rate and are more than twice as likely to be rape victims as any other race of women.

The words of a domestic abuse survivor may best illustrate the need to remain vigilant in Congress and in our communities on preventing domestic abuse. A woman from my State wrote me about what she was abused as a child, raped as a teenager, and emotionally abused as a wife. Her grandchildren were also abused. In her letter, she pleaded: “Don’t let another woman go through what I went through, and please don’t let another child go through what my grandchildren have gone through. You can make a difference.” We all can make a difference by protecting women from violence and abuse.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of this year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptible in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred July 6, 2001 in Monmouth County, NJ. Seven people were sentenced on multiple counts, including aggravated assault and harassment by bias intimidation under the state law, for assaulting a 22-year-old learning disabled man with hearing and speech impediments. The victim was lured to a party, bound, and physically and verbally assaulted for three hours. Later, he was taken to a wooded area where the torture continued until he was able to escape.

I believe that government’s first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation, we can change hearts and minds as well.

NOBEL PRIZE WINNERS FOR PHYSICS

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to recognize the accomplishments of two Boulder, Colorado scientists. On October 10, 2001 Carl E. Wieman, a professor of physics at the University of Colorado at Boulder and Eric A. Cornell, the senior scientist at the National Institute of Standards and Technology, (NIST), received the Nobel Prize in Physics. They two shared the award with Wolfgang Ketterle of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

All three received this award for their work that created the world’s first Bose-Einstein Condensate, which occurs when a group of atoms overlap and their individual wavelengths behave in identical fashion creating a “superatom”. The condensate allows scientists to study the extremely small world of quantum physics as if they are looking through a giant magnifying glass. Its creation established a new branch of atomic physics that has provided a number of scientific discoveries.

The research was funded by the National Science Foundation, NIST, the Office of Naval Research and the University of Colorado at Boulder. Weiman and Cornell are both fellows of JILA which is formerly known as the Joint Institute for Laboratory Astrophysics where much of the research was done. It is a joint institute of the University of Colorado at Boulder and NIST and it exists for research and graduate education in the physical sciences.

Both Wieman and Cornell have won several prestigous awards in the past including the Benjamin Franklin Medal in Physics from the Franklin Institute in 2000, the Lorentz Medal from the Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1996, the King Faisal International Prize in Science in 1997 and the Fritz London Award for low-temperature physics in 1996.

Carl Wieman and Eric Cornell became the second and third Nobel Prize winners at the University of Colorado at Boulder, and Cornell is the second for NIST. Thomas Cech, a CU-Boulder professor of Chemistry and biochemistry, was a co-winner of the 1989 Nobel Prize in Chemistry with Sydney Altman of Yale University for research on RNA. William Phillips, a NIST fellow, shared the 1997 Nobel Prize in physics.

I want to personally congratulate Carl Wieman and Eric Cornell for this truly prestigious award of excellence in scientific research.

REWARDS FOR JUSTICE FUND

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, since the brutal assaults on our Nation almost 3 weeks ago, Americans of all walks of life have asked the question: How can I help in the fight against terrorism? One option is the Rewards for Justice Fund, a nonprofit organization that was created in the days following the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. The fund was announced on the Today Show on October 1, 2001. Since 1984, the Rewards for Justice Program has quietly but effectively thwarted terrorism by using reward payments to obtain information on terrorists’ locations and plans. The Rewards for Justice Program enables individual citizens to unite and make flips. The Rewards for Justice Program is the first and only anti-terrorism program in the United States. The first broad based fund of individual citizen contributions to be accepted by the Department of State to enhance the anti-terrorism program.

Assistant Secretary of State for Diplomatic Security David Carpenter, says: “It’s clear to us that the Rewards for Justice Program saves lives, in that those who have perpetrated crimes against us in the past often intend to perpetrate additional crimes. The information we receive by offering rewards has saved countless lives and we are confident it will save additional lives in the future.”

In the aftermath of the terrorist attacks, Americans have shown tremendous resolve in raising money to help the victims and their families. Now, the same involvement and spirit that is the trademark of our great country will be focused on the very important task of tracking and apprehending terrorists, both at home and abroad.

Information on the Rewards for Justice Fund can be found on the Internet at www.rewardsfund.com. For more information on the State Department’s Rewards for Justice Program see their website at www.dsrewards.net/index.htm.

ENERGY LEGISLATION

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise to make a short comment regarding energy legislation. I have heard a few of my colleagues question how Majority Leader DASCHLE is handling the Senate schedule. I want to take exception to those complaints.

I believe the Majority Leader has done an outstanding job moving legislation this Congress. We started the year with a new Administration and then the Senate changed hands, that is difficult enough. And since September 11 we are in truly extraordinary times. Yet, under his leadership, and with the leadership of President Bush and Minority Leader LOTT, we have moved quickly and decisively to approve the use of force, to appropriate emergency funding and assist the airline industry. That progress stalled this week with objections over the airline security proposal, but that is hardly the fault of the Majority Leader. It’s ironic that members came to the floor to protest the bill for the September 11th victims fund bill and Gillespie and Tarkanian propose the resolution for the Majority Leader.
As for the Majority Leader’s decision to move an energy bill directly to the floor, that’s his prerogative as our majority leader. It’s been done before and it will very likely be done again. Chairman BINGAMAN has asked that we support the Majority Leader’s decision and I do. The Majority Leader’s decision recognizes the reality that energy policy reaches beyond the Energy Committee in an important way. It impacts issues in the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, Commerce Committee, the Environment and Public Works Committee, among others.

As for his managing the Senate schedule for the remainder of this session, I trust that he will use his best judgement, and will, as he always has, confer with the minority, to decide the order of legislation. We have spent more than a week on airline security, a priority issue I believe. We then must address the terrorism prevention bill. We have several appropriation bills to take down as well. We may consider an economic stimulus package. We may consider a Farm Bill. And we really don’t know what else will be necessary of us in the coming weeks. The past month has demonstrated the unpredictability of work. So, I urge the Majority Leader to listen to all Senators’ concerns but to be wary of demands from members that we consider legislation in their preferred order. We have a lot of work to do, little time to do it, and don’t know what the coming weeks may hold.

Very briefly, I’d like to comment on two statements made regarding energy security on the floor yesterday. First, one of my colleagues noted that America imports more than 50 percent of our oil, and then implied that should we find ourselves in a military conflict those imports, half the oil we consume, might be lost. I want to say, to assure my colleagues and the public, that that might be lost. I want to say, to assure my colleagues and the public, that that won’t happen. America depends less on the Middle Eastern oil than we did during the oil embargo of the 1970s. We import almost 30 percent of our oil from Mexico, Canada, Great Britain, Colombia, Norway and Venezuela. It’s wrong to suggest that these nations would abandon the United States during a military conflict.

Secondly, I have heard statements referring to the energy needs of the U.S. as if this is a new issue. We may consider it an economic stimulus package. We may consider a Farm Bill. And we really don’t know what the coming weeks may hold.

HONORING THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MINNESOTA TAXPAYERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the Minnesota Taxpayers Association, for its long and proud history of working to disseminate accurate, nonpartisan fiscal information to the citizens of Minnesota. The Minnesota Taxpayers Association celebrates its 75th anniversary this year, as one of the Nation’s most acclimated taxpayer organizations.

Its membership has been comprised of thousands of Minnesota business leaders, government officials and concerned citizens. Its stellar leadership, on both its Board and its staff, has consistently been populated by Minnesota’s most able and intelligent citizens.

The Minnesota Taxpayers Association, MTA, was founded in 1926 when America was in the middle of a strong recovery from World War I. In 1926, we were on a return to normalcy path in both foreign relations and domestic policies.

The Association started as part of a larger government research movement aimed at bringing more professionalism to government, particularly local government. The first steps toward launching the Minnesota Taxpayers Association were taken at a meeting in Minneapolis on February 25, 1926. It was planned that the Association’s core would consist of representatives of 15 local taxpayers groups. The first objective of the new nonpartisan association was to reduce taxes. Three other objectives were to eliminate extravagance, reduce public debt, and stop waste of public funds.

On November 22, 1926, the Association became a permanent organization at a meeting at the Nicollet Hotel in Minneapolis. In short order, representatives of 29 counties formed the South Dakota, Southeast, and Southwest Minnesota Taxpayers Associations at meetings in Mankato, Rochester, and Worthington, MN, respectively. They were so successful that by April of 1927 there were 45 county taxpayer groups across the State. By World War II, the MTA had grown to be an association of 81 county taxpayer groups.

In August of 1956, the MTA merged with the Minnesota Institute of Governmental Research, MIGR, another nonpartisan government research organization. The Institute’s research bulletins covered such topics as property tax issues; the merits of a sales tax; more than 30 years before the State’s first sales tax in 1967; and an answer to the problem of levying sales tax on gambling in the State. By World War II, the MTA had grown to be an association of 81 county taxpayer groups.

Because government itself did little research in those days, MIGR had a tremendous impact on Minnesota State government. MIGR’s work inspired the creation of the 1939 Reorganization Act under Governor Harold Stassen. This act received national attention as it produced major improvements in the administration of State government, saving millions of dollars in the first 10 years after enactment.

It was through the Reorganization Act and the work of MIGR that the Department of Taxation and Administration were created and the spoils system was replaced with civil service. As a follow-up to the Reorganization Act, MIGR staff worked with the “Little Hoover” Commission of the early 1950s to study areas for further reform in State government.

Within two years of the merger, in August of 1958, MTA became incorporated. At that time, it moved away from being an umbrella organization for county-level taxpayer groups to being an organization with its own
TRIBUTE TO FRAN FLANIGAN

Mr. SARBAZES, Mr. President. I rise today to recognize and honor an extraordinary Marylander and steward of the Chesapeake Bay, Fran Flanigan. Fran is stepping down from a long and distinguished career as executive director of the Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay and I want to express my personal congratulations and thanks for her outstanding and dedicated service.

When the history of the Chesapeake Bay restoration effort is finally written, there are many people who will be recognized for the role they played in helping to “Save the Bay.” But Fran’s hard work and creativity over the last three decades will distinguish her as one of the true leaders in this important endeavor. Fran has been a determined advocate for the Chesapeake Bay from virtually the inception of the Bay program. In December 1983, she organized a 3-day conference which brought together the Governors of Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania, the EPA Administrator, members of the State legislatures and many other individuals and organizations. That conference set the signposts of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement which formally bound the Federal and State governments to work together to restore the Bay and effectively initiated the cooperative Chesapeake Bay Program.

I became acquainted with Fran during that historic summit and have had the opportunity to work closely with her and her non-profit organization, the Citizens Program for the Chesapeake Bay, later the Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay, for many years. I can personally attest to the tremendous energy and creativity which she consistently brought to her work. Fran did not ask people to put things together and has been called upon time and time again to convene stakeholder roundtables on key issues and expand public involvement. Whether the subject was agriculture, toxic pollution or land use, Fran would try to find common ground and a way to ensure that different States and interest groups moved forward together for the betterment of the Chesapeake Bay.

Fran Flanigan and Alliance have been instrumental in bringing to so many people the协 works of the Bay cleanup program upstream into the rivers that flow into the Chesapeake. She reoriented the Alliance to work at a more local level and promote local restoration activities. She forged closer ties with the public with the resources they were working to protect and restore. She knew that public participation in the efforts to clean up the Bay were essential and the key to keeping the Bay cleanup effort on course and worked hard to keep the public informed about key Chesapeake issues through the Alliance’s outstanding white papers, fact sheets, newsletters and the Bay Journal. She also helped organize everything from small watershed groups to huge public outreach efforts such as those needed before the signing of the 1987 and 2000 Bay Agreements.

Fran has been there on the front line from the very start of the Bay program and, even in retirement, I know will continue to be involved in the Bay efforts. Her dedication and efforts over the years have earned her the respect and admiration of everyone with whom she has worked. She has been instrumental in bringing to so many people an enjoyment and sense of ownership of the Chesapeake Bay. I join with her many colleagues and friends in extending my best wishes and thanks for her leadership and commitment.

RECOGNITION OF PETER HENRY’S SERVICE TO SOUTH DAKOTA VETERANS

Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. President. I rise today to recognize and honor the extraordinary work done by Peter Henry as Director of the VA Black Hills Health Care System in Fort Meade, SD. Three years later, Peter came to South Dakota in 1993 as the Director of the Medical Center at Fort Meade, SD. Three years later, Peter became Director of the VA Black Hills Health Care System. Peter is a third generation VA employee and currently serves as president of the VA Chapter of the Senior Executives Association and on the National Board of the organization.

Peter’s commitment to expanding VA services into rural regions of South Dakota includes the use of outreach clinics which have allowed veterans in rural areas to receive needed care closer to their homes. Peter’s service to veterans and their families is a dramatic story that we need to tell to future generations.

We need to remind younger generations of the sacrifice of the quiet heroes who have served our Nation in the military service. We need to remind them that freedom isn’t really free. Throughout our Nation’s proud history, people have made profound sacrifices to preserve liberty and democracy.

I am pleased that with the help of dedicated people like Peter Henry, we have finally begun to honor additional commitments made to veterans nationwide. Peter is a living and heroic example for the VA Black Hills Health Care System. I know that veterans health care is this Nation’s priority and not just an afterthought. I look forward to working... with Peter, in his new role with VISN 13, to continue to improve veterans health care services.

Mr. Hollings. Mr. President, one month ago today, the United States was attacked by terrorists who hijacked airplanes and used them as weapons against the World Trade Center, Pentagon and another unknown target which was crashed into a field in Pennsylvania. After the Federal Aviation Administration grounded the airlines following the terrorist attacks, travelers flocked to Amtrak. Whether people had to travel for business, or just to get home, Amtrak kept our American citizens moving during a time of national emergency.

The situation not only proved that Amtrak works, but that Amtrak is a critical part of our transportation infrastructure during a national emergency. Now that airlines have reduced their flights on the East Coast and throughout the country, more of the passenger burden has fallen on Amtrak, which carries 35,000 passengers along the Northeast Corridor everyday. Even the U.S. Postal Office carried 237 extra carloads of mail in the days following the terrorist attacks.

Today I am introducing the Railroad Advancement and Infrastructure Law of the 21st Century, or RAIL–21. In the short run, this bill will provide emergency security assistance to Amtrak, a key part of our national transportation infrastructure. In the long run, this bill will spark the building of important high-speed rail infrastructure in high-volume corridors across the United States, reducing our dependence on our air and highway transportation systems.

In light of the events of September 11, it is important to look at the entire transportation system. Transportation security requires a balanced and competitive system of transportation alternatives. Three weeks ago we found out that our dependence on the aviation system almost crippled us. We cannot be overly reliant on any single mode of transportation; we need to ensure that we have a balanced system.

Today we are trying to pass the airline security bill to make airline passengers feel safe so they will fly again. We need to make passengers feel just as safe when they travel by train. And we need to make sure we have transportation alternatives.

To address Amtrak’s immediate concerns, the bill would authorize $3.2 billion in emergency spending for Amtrak’s security and capacity needs. The money will pay for more police, surveillance, fencing and lighting at the train stations and train yards; life safety improvements and more firefighting capacity for tunnels in New York, Baltimore and Washington, D.C.;

RAIL-21 would reauthorize Amtrak for one year with $1.2 billion for capital and operating expenses. The bill would allow Amtrak to continue its GSA vehicle lease agreements and would suspend Amtrak’s redemption requirements for common stock until the end of FY2004.

Additionally, the bill would remove the operational self-sufficiency requirement passed three years ago. Let me talk about that for a moment. There is no truly national passenger train service in the world that makes a profit. Requiring Amtrak to do so has forced the railroad to short-change critical infrastructure investments in order to meet a questionable economic model. We must free Amtrak from this requirement so they can go back to running a passenger railroad with modern and safe equipment, not juggling bond payments and taking on gargantuan debt to keep Amtrak’s bottom line just to meet an impossible self-sufficiency deadline.

Nations invest in passenger rail service because it increases the opportunities to travel and thus a Nation’s quality of life and also reduces our congestion and pollution. And we saw last month that, during a national emergency, having a viable, operating national train system can be a strategic asset.

Kenneth Mead, the Inspector General for the Department of Transportation, has said the drive for self-sufficiency has forced Amtrak to spend money on quick projects that improve the short-term bottom line while cutting back on maintenance and investments.

Those who want Amtrak to operate without Federal assistance, ultimately forcing the railroad’s passengers onto cars, buses and airplanes, always cry that we should not “subsidize” Amtrak, that railroads should be in the business of making money. But instead, it is the01. acquisition, improvement or rehabilitation of intermodal or rail equipment of facilities (including tracks, components of tracks, bridges, yards, buildings, and shops), 2. the refinancing of outstanding debt incurred for these purposes; 3. development or establishment of new intermodal or railroad facilities, 4. and security purposes.

RAIL-21 eliminates much of the bureaucratic red tape that has delayed any Title V loan or loan guarantees from being issued.

Under RAIL-21, Class I railroads, regional railroads, short lines, and passenger projects would be eligible for loans and loan guarantees. The bill would set aside $7 billion of the loans and loan guarantees for short lines.

RAIL-21 also establishes a $350 million grant program for rehabilitation, preserving or improving railroad tracks for regional and short line railroads. Short line railroads have saved tons of thousands of environmental offsets of light density rail line from abandonment. In 1980, there were 220 short line railroads in the U.S. Today there are over 500 short line railroads, due in part to the mergers and streamlining of Class I operations which encouraged the larger companies to sell off their little-used or abandoned branch lines. Short line and regional railroads are an important part of America’s railroad industry. Today they operate and maintain 29 percent of the American railroad industry’s route mileage and account for 9 percent of the rail industry’s freight revenue and 11 percent of railroad employment. These line railroads employ approximately 25,000 workers, serve thousands of local and rural shippers, and are often the only connection these shippers have to the national rail network.

To survive, this infrastructure needs to be upgraded in order to move the heavier cars that are currently being moved by the Class I railroads. The revenues of the smaller railroads are not sufficient to meet the heavier traffic demands.

Since 1982, the short lines and regional railroads have maintained the track in rural areas where rail service would have been abandoned by the Class I railroads. Because of their relatively low traffic levels, Class I railroads could not afford to invest in this infrastructure and, as a result, allowed these lines to slowly deteriorate. With a lower cost structure and more flexible service, short line companies that bought the tracks have been able to keep them going. However, the revenue is still not high enough to make up for past years of neglect.

Today, two factors have combined to bring this situation to a head. First, the advent of the heavier 286,000-pound cars that are becoming the standard of the Class I industry require substantially higher investment in the track. Second, as the Class I industry puts a greater premium on speed and precisely scheduled operations, the short line railroads must meet these higher standards or be cut off from the national system.

This legislation does not create a long-term program to fix this problem, but instead it creates a one-time fix for this problem. While these small railroads have enough traffic to operate profitably on an ongoing basis, they do not earn enough to make the large capital investment required by the advent of the 286,000-pound cars or the need to significantly increase speed. This legislation would authorize a program that could provide grants to the nation’s smaller railroads to help them make the required improvements and stay in business and continue to serve small shippers.

RAIL-21 also would authorize $50 million in matching grants annually through FY2002. $5 million would be available for security and technology research and development; $25 million would be available for corridor planning and acquisition of rolling stock, with preference given to designated corridors.

RAIL-21 identifies existing high-speed corridors for priority consideration. Many of these corridors are in... the South, Midwest and California where people are now driving cars or taking airplanes on trips of 200 miles or less. In these areas, like the East Coast, travelers could take a high-speed train instead, and arrive about the same time.

But right now they don't have that option. Therefore, we have a problem here: They can't use it if we don't build it.

We built high speed rail on the East Coast, and the people have used it. If we build rail corridors around Chicago and the Midwestern cities, they will use it. If we build rail lines in the South from Washington, D.C. through the Carolinas to Atlanta and Florida, they will ride it. If we build a corridor in California from San Diego to Sacramento, they will ride it.

This bill does not only support Amtrak. It is intended for commuter rail, freight railroads, and short line operators. That's what many Senators, governors and constituents have asked for.

In the long term, travel in the United States will outpace the ability of airports and highways to handle the volume. With the tighter security checks at these facilities, it will be faster to make trips of 200–500 miles by train than by air. More train travel will reduce congestion at our most crowded airports and our most gridlocked Interstate highways.

I am pleased my colleagues have joined with me to introduce this bill, which we hope to move quickly. Modernizing Amtrak now will create jobs and the infrastructure, high-speed rail corridors will play a key role in our transportation system. do not have that option. Therefore, we have a problem here: They can't use it if we don't build it.

"Sec.

§ 22301. Capital grants for railroad track

(a) Establishment of Program.—

(1) Establishment.—The Secretary of Transportation shall establish a program of capital grants to rehabilitate, preservation, or improve railroad track (including roadbed, bridges, and related track structures) of class II and class III railroads. Such grants shall be for rehabilitation, preserving, or improving track used primarily for freight transportation to a standard ensuring that the track can be operated safely and efficiently, including grants for rehabilitating, preserving, or improving track to handle 286,000 pound rail cars. Grants may be provided under this chapter—

(A) directly to the class II or class III railroad; or

(B) with the concurrence of the class II or class III railroad, to a State or local government.

(2) Class II and class III railroad applicants for a grant under this chapter are encouraged to utilize the expertise and assistance of State transportation agencies in applying for and administering such grants. State transportation agencies are encouraged to provide such expertise and assistance to State railroads.

(3) Interim Regulations.—Not later than December 31, 2001, the Secretary shall issue temporary regulations to implement the program under this section. Subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5 does not apply to a temporary regulation issued under this paragraph or to an amendment to such a temporary regulation.

(4) Final Regulations.—Not later than October 1, 2002, the Secretary shall issue final regulations to implement the program under this section.

(b) Maximum Federal Share.—The maximum Federal share for carrying out a project under this section shall be 80 percent of the project cost. The non-Federal share may be provided by any non-Federal source in cash, equipment, or supplies. Other in-kind assistance may be approved by the Secretary on a case by case basis consistent with this chapter.

(c) Project Eligibility.—For a project to be eligible for assistance under this section the track must have been operated or owned by a class II or class III railroad as of the date of the enactment of the Railroad Advancement and Infrastructure Law for the 21st Century.

(d) Use of Funds.—Grants provided under this section shall be used to implement track capital projects as possible, but an event shall grant funds be contractually obligated for a project later than the end of the third Federal fiscal year following the year in which the grants are awarded. Any funds not so obligated by the end of such fiscal year shall be returned to the Secretary for reallocation.

(e) Additional Purpose.—In addition to making grants for projects as provided in subsection (a), the Secretary may also make grants to supplement direct loans or loan guarantees made under title V of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 (45 U.S.C. 822(d)), for projects described in the last sentence of section 502(d) of such title. Grants made under this subsection may be used, in whole or in part, for paying credit risk premiums, lowering rates of interest, or providing for a holiday on principal payments.

(f) Employee Protection.—The Secretary shall require, as a condition of any grant made under this section that the recipient railroad provide a fair arrangement at least as protective of the interests of employees who are affected by the project to be funded with the grant as the terms imposed under section 1126(a), as in effect on the date of the enactment of the Railroad Advancement and Infrastructure Law for the 21st Century.

(g) Labor Standards.—

(1) Prevailing Wages.—The Secretary shall ensure that laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors in construction work financed by a grant made under this section will be paid wages not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality, as determined by the Secretary of Labor under the Act of March 3, 1931 (known as the Davis-Bacon Act; 40 U.S.C. 276a et seq.).

B Mr. ALLEN (for himself, Mr. WARNER, Mr. LOTT, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. GREGG, Mr. BOND, Mr. ENZI, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. ROY, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. SANTORUM, and Mr. ALLARD):

S. 1532. A bill to provide for the payment of emergency extended unemployment compensation; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN, Mr. President, I rise to introduce the President's Emergency Extended Unemployment Compensation Act.

The Senator from California was talking about her concerns, help on the way, I think we all share those concerns. When the actions of Americans have shown that we are trying to get open for business again, we are obviously united in our resolve that a long flight awaits us because of these vile terrorist acts of September 11, 2001.

This flag is from the Pentagon. The President just gave a wonderful speech, as did Secretary Rumsfeld. Everyone was united in tears and in love for those fallen ones and, also, a resolve that freedom and justice will prevail.

Indeed, we are working to rebuild and recover. The President talked about rebuilding the Pentagon. Others have talked about rebuilding in New York. The rescue, recovery, cleanup, and rebuilding efforts will be enormous.

Congress has responded with $40 billion in aid. The airline industry, which is responsible for 10 percent of the Nation's service product, as well as being a key element of our reserve military airlift fleet, needs to remain solvent. We recognize that.

We understood that the FAA closed our skies after the terrorist attacks. We have responded with $5 billion in cash for lost revenue, due to the skies being closed, to help get our airlines back in the sky as quickly as possible.

The perception of safety while flying has been shaken to the core. I have participated in hearings in the Commerce Committee working to help craft legislation aimed at improving aviation safety both on the ground at airports, and on our aircraft as well. Senators HOLLINGS, MCCAIN, ROCKEFELLER, and HUTCHISON have worked hard in bringing this bill to the floor to do just that. We will pass this legislation to ensure that no commercial airliner can ever again is commandeered and used as a weapon.

Ronald Reagan National Airport, which is a symbol of the Nation's Capital and our transportation system, remained closed for nearly 3 weeks due to Federal order. After nearly 3 weeks of consideration of ideas for safety and special precautions for Reagan National Airport, last week President Bush very wisely announced a plan for a phased re-opening so that flights at Ronald Reagan National Airport could start. I was fortunate to be on the first flight out of Reagan since that fateful day last Thursday.

For the first 3 weeks of the reopening of Reagan National Airport, it is restricted to operating at 24-percent capacity. After that, in phase 2, it will be at 57-percent capacity for as long as 7 weeks. We still have a lot of work to do. While our general aviation pilots are fortunately back in the skies, there are still limitations on airspace all around the country.

Airline carriers and manufacturers have laid off over 100,000 employees. Airports closed for nearly 3 weeks for businesses located in and around airport facilities are losing jobs by the thousands. Reagan National Airport is again open for business, but many of its 10,200 employees are out of work since they are restricted to operating at one-quarter capacity. Vendors, business owners, and concessionaires at the airport have lost revenues and jobs because of this direct Federal action.

The shock waves are being felt throughout our economy—our retail establishments to high-tech businesses.

Now that we have addressed some of the recovery and rebuilding efforts, we are finally able to turn our attention to the hard-working Americans who unfortunately have lost their jobs through no fault of their own. Today, on behalf of the President, I am introducing legislation to provide that necessary assistance for the backbone of our economy—the free people of the greatest and strongest nation on Earth.

The President’s plan will provide health coverage, unemployment benefits, and job training assistance to hard-working Americans who have lost their jobs as a result of the economic downturn since the September 11 attacks.

Specifically, it will extend unemployment benefits for up to 13 weeks beyond the maximum allowed by States law. It will provide COBRA health insurance premiums, which are substantially covered by the Federal Government, for up to 10 months.

It will also more easily allow affected workers to avail themselves of more than $6 billion in Federal programs that provide job search, training, placement, and other services.
It makes $11 billion available to States to help low-income workers and families who have lost their jobs to maintain health insurance through either the S-CHIP or Medicaid Programs. It will also provide $3 billion to States for the funding of disaster grants that Governors can fashion to best address the needs of their States to help workers maintain health care coverage, supplement their income, and receive job training. Also, the Governors can use it to compensate employers who have lost their jobs due to this direct Federal intervention.

In addition, the White House, my office, and the Republican Senate leadership offices, have been working through the night addressing some of the specific concerns I have for Reagan National Airport. That is why I will add an amendment to the President’s package to address those specific concerns, because although actions such as the Reagan National shutdown are sometimes necessary for national security reasons, those actions that will directly impact the ability of hard-working Americans and business owners to make a living. We should respond in rationalization that limited Federal benefits are lost to those thrown out of work due to a Federal action.

That is why my supplemental amendment will also allow the Governors of the States where major disasters have been declared to use their national emergency grants to supplement the incomes of those unemployed or underemployed because of direct Federal action, or for the lost revenues of those businesses that were similarly affected. These are not mandated, direct Federal grants but allowable uses under the national emergency grant programs at the discretion of Governors.

Again, it makes sense. If the Federal Government has an action that harms someone, whether it is their property or their livelihood, the Federal Government ought to help them. It is indeed the same logic we used in helping the States where major disasters have been declared.

The White House, of course, has seen the need to act. They understand that direct Federal action is necessary. Unfortunately, it was necessary to keep Reagan National closed for a while. The leadership at the White House and the Senate Republicans have been very helpful in analyzing this supplemental amendment, and I believe we can make it work out in the end.

Most of all, I know all Americans have significant concerns about jobs—jobs for people in all of our States. These job losses are not unique to New York, or New Jersey, or Virginia, where those terrorist attacks have the greatest impact; the job losses are felt in every corner of our country. We see smaller airports worrying about whether or not they are going to have service.

Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today an amendment for this needed aid to help our hard-working citizens all over America recover from the extended effects of this horrific disaster. In times like this, I believe the entire Nation has a role to play in keeping American businesses and entrepreneurs running, and especially in keeping Americans at work.

Once again, I believe America will triumph over tyrants and we will stand strong with our people; unwavering in the face of terrorism. We will show that not only is America open for business but also that America means business.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 1534. A bill to establish the Department of National Homeland Security; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, today, Senator SPECTER and I are introducing legislation to create a Department of National Homeland Security. One month ago, America suffered devastating attacks at the hands of terrorists with whom we are now at war. Our Nation has struggled to adjust to the realization that our citizens are now on the front line of terrorism, on the part of adversaries whose methods are as fanatical as their goals. The legislation we are introducing is intended to provide Americans with the assurance they need to return to their daily routines without fear of further attack, and so confound the terrorists, whose aim was to disrupt our lives and break our spirit.

Shortly after the attacks, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee held a hearing to explore how government could better organize itself to defend against such threats. Former Senators Gary Hart and Warren Rudman, co-chairs of the U.S. Commission on National Security, offered compelling testimony in favor of creating a homeland security agency.

The legislation we are introducing today is based largely on the Commission’s recommendation. It will create a new Cabinet-level Department of National Homeland Security. This Department would bring the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Customs Service, the Border Patrol, the Coast Guard, and certain offices responsible for critical infrastructure protection under a single administrative umbrella.

The Department will be headed by a Secretary, who will be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and who will be a statutory member of the National Security Council. The Secretary will be accountable to the Congress and the American people. Like other cabinet members, the Secretary of Homeland Security would enjoy executive control over personnel and programs, and have all-important budget authority over his department’s spending priorities. The Secretary for Homeland Security would have the rank and power to ensure that the protection of our homeland remains high on our national agenda, and that all necessary resources are made available toward that end.

The new Department would be organized into three functional directorates that would be responsible for “3 Ps”: prevention, protection, and preparation for response.

The Coast Guard, Customs Service, and Border Patrol would fall into the “prevention” directorate, responsible for securing our borders and making sure that potentially harmful persons or materials never make it onto American soil. Each of these organizations is now on the front line of our nation’s efforts to prevent future acts of terrorism; however, they are not working together as well as they should, a problem exacerbated by the fact that homeland security is not among their parent agencies’ primary missions. They require additional resources, but they also need to be under a single Secretary, who can direct their efforts jointly to fulfill a shared homeland defense mission.

The Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office and the Information Infrastructure Protection Institute, both of the Commerce Department, and the National Infrastructure Protection Center, now located in the FBI, would serve as the nucleus of the ‘protection’ directorate, with the difficult task of working to help safeguard our transportation networks, power grids, water supply, cybersystems and other essential systems from attacks or other threats. These offices share essentially the same mission, and it makes sense that they are placed under a single Department and Secretary, so that they operate in unison.

Finally, FEMA and the FBI’s National Domestic Preparedness Office would form the core of the “preparation” directorate, which would conduct the planning and mitigation measures necessary to prepare for disasters as well as to operate the crisis and recovery response machinery when emergencies do occur. Important developments by building this directorate around FEMA, we will ensure that much of the Homeland Defense Department’s organizational infrastructure will be focused towards working effectively with State and local governments, which are clearly key players in homeland defense.

In short, this legislation is meant to structure homeland defense in a way that makes sense operationally, but also in terms of streamlining funding priorities, interagency cooperation, and bureaucratic clout.

In proposing this legislation, we know well that there are other ideas and proposals under consideration, and we look forward to working with our House and Senate colleagues, as well as the President, to arrive at what is best for the American people. The President has appointed Governor Tom Ridge to head a new Office of Homeland Security in the White House, to coordinate the 40-plus government agencies that now have important roles to play in the fight against terrorism. This is clearly a critical function. I absolutely agree that there must be better coordination across the agencies, including intelligence and law-enforcement functions, which are central to preventing acts of terror at home. My fear is that it is not enough to improve coordination and cooperation across the existing array of federal agencies and programs.

I am convinced that protecting our homeland requires nothing less than the establishment of a robust, cabinet-level Department, and led by a Secretary who has executive control over key agencies, full authority over his organization’s budget, the ability to deploy personnel and resources, and the capacity to make and implement decisions immediately.

I am proud to have Senator SPECTER as a principal cosponsor of this legislation. I am pleased to note that similar legislation has been offered in the House by Rep. MAC THORNBERRY, Rep. ELLEN TAUSCHER, and others, who deserve our thanks for drafting this legislation well before the events of September 11, 2001. We look forward to working with them and other interested Members of Congress, as well as the Administration, to ensure that our government effectively organizes to defend the American people at home.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself and Mr. FITZGERALD):

S. 1355. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research on, and services for individuals with, postpartum depression and psychosis; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Melanie Stokes Postpartum Depression Research and Care Act with my colleague from Illinois, Senator FITZGERALD. This legislation seeks to rectify this situation.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to organize a series of national meetings, with the goal of developing a research and treatment plan for postpartum depression and psychosis. Further, this legislation encourages the Secretary to implement the research and treatment plan in a timely fashion. This bill also creates a new grants program, administered by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Administration, to provide... women and their families with treatment and services.

In Illinois alone there are at least 175,000 births a year. Even using the conservative estimate that 10 percent of mothers will suffer from postpartum depression, this suggests that over 17,000 women in the State of Illinois alone, and 400,000 women nationwide will experience the devastating symptoms of this disorder each year. Developing new treatments for this disorder should be a top priority.

I am pleased that the Senator FITZGERALD has joined me in cosponsoring this bill. In the House of Representatives, Representative RUSH has already introduced the Melanie Stokes Postpartum Depression Research and Care Act.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. INHOFE): S. 1558. A bill to introduce the Melanie Stokes Postpartum Depression Research and Care Act.

In remembrance of Melanie Stokes and all the women who have suffered from postpartum depression and psychosis, as well as their families and friends who have stood by their side, I am introducing the Melanie Stokes Postpartum Depression Research and Care Act.

The legislation would also require the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a hydrogeologic mapping, modeling and monitoring program for the High Plains Aquifer and to establish the High Plains Aquifer Coordination council to facilitate groundwater conservation in the High Plains; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. INHOFE): S. 1558. A bill to further continued economic viability in the communities on the High Plains by promoting sustainable groundwater management of the Ogallala Aquifer, to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce two important pieces of legislation that have great significance for New Mexico, but also are crucial to the entire Great Plains region of our Nation. The bills address the alarming decline in portions of the Ogallala Aquifer, which extends under eight States: Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming, and Dakota. A reliable source of groundwater is essential to the well-being and livelihoods of people in the great Plains region. Local towns and rural areas are dependent on the use of groundwater for drinking water, ranching, farming, and other commercial uses. Yet many areas overlying the Ogallala Aquifer have experienced a dramatic depletion of this groundwater resource. Some areas have seen a decline of over 100 feet in aquifer levels during the last half of the century.

The first bill that I am introducing today, the "High Plains Aquifer Conservation, Monitoring, and Coordination Act," would direct the Secretary of the Interior to develop and carry out a comprehensive hydrogeologic mapping, modeling and monitoring program for the High Plains Aquifer, which is comprised in large part by the Ogallala Aquifer. If we are to preserve the Ogallala Aquifer, we must also examine what happened to it.

The second bill that I am introducing today is the "High Plains Groundwater Resource Conservation Act." This bill would establish a voluntary 10-year groundwater conservation incentives program for the High Plains Aquifer region. Incentive payments would be made for voluntary land management practices, which may include changes from irrigated to dryland agriculture, changes in cropping patterns to utilize water conserving crops, and other conservation measures that result in quantifiable and significant savings in groundwater use. Cost-share payments will be made for structural practices that will conserve groundwater resources of the High Plains Aquifer, which may include improvement of irrigation systems and purchase of new equipment. Priority will be given to areas experiencing significant aquifer level declines. In order to be eligible, producers must be in an area covered by a groundwater conservation plan.

The legislation would also require the Secretary of Agriculture to provide financial and technical assistance on a cost-share basis to States, tribes, counties, conservation districts and other political subdivisions. Upon approval by the Secretary, a State can carry out these activities in lieu of the Secretary. The Secretary is also required to set up a process to certify groundwater conservation plans.

In addition, the bill would enhance eligibility for participation in the Conservation Reserve Program for lands drawing water from the High Plains Aquifer.

These two bills bring focus to an issue that concerns the long-term economic viability of communities in much of America’s heartland. This is farm country, and the cornerstone of its economy is its groundwater supply, the Ogallala Aquifer, which allows for irrigated agriculture. The Department of Agriculture estimates that there are over six million acres of irrigated agriculture overlying just the southern portion of the Ogallala. These farms use between six and nine million acre feet of water per year. The problem we are confronting is that the Ogallala Aquifer is not sustainable, and it is being depleted rapidly. This threatens the way of life of all who live on the High Plains. These bills would take significant steps to address this serious problem. I ask that my colleagues join me in supporting this legislation.

By Mrs. CLINTON (for herself, Mr. DODD, Mrs. MURRAY, Ms. MUKULSKI, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. BINGAMAN, and Mr. CORZINE): S. 1539. A bill to protect children from terrorism; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr.President, on this, the one month anniversary of the horrifying terrorist attacks of September 11, I rise to introduce a bill that I believe will provide protection from future terrorist attacks for the most vulnerable members of our society: children.

In preparing for threats ahead, we must also examine what happened to our children on September 11—we must consider the impact of the attacks on children in New York and Virginia, and all of the affected states and regions, as well as the impact on children throughout the Nation. We must do all we can to support and assist these children in their recovery, as well as protect children in the future who, God forbid, may face similarly horrifying attacks.

People in New York, and around the country, are looking for information and assurance that their children’s needs are being taken into account as we prepare for future terrorist threats. Parents have been coming up to me in New York and asking important questions about how to protect their children in the case of a threat.

And, students have been writing to me asking to protect them as we move ahead into a more uncertain world. Sheryl De Los Santos, a student at I.S. 383, a middle school in Brooklyn, writes:

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE S10649
During the tragic loss of the Twin Towers my reaction to this loss was why? Why would someone do this to our country? When I saw them come down, I totally lost it. I cried. I cried everywhere when I heard how many people died. I feel angry, hurt, sad, mad, scared and horrified all at the same time. I even feel confused. I feel scared because if anything else happens I could go crazy. I feel angry for what they did because I have never been to the Twin Towers. I feel sad and hurt because of so many lost lives. Though I am not saying it is your fault because it is not. I am saying it is your fault because we must replace fear with facts.

As we consider potential terrorist threats, the threat of bioterrorism has felt all too real particularly as a criminal investigation goes on in Florida on the three individuals who were exposed to anthrax.

My bill, Protecting Children Against Terrorism, would ensure that as we take steps to prepare for the threat of bioterrorism, we take into account children’s health needs.

I am extremely concerned that we are not paying a sufficient amount of attention to the unique needs of children in our efforts to plan and prepare for future attacks.

Children have special needs relating to bioterrorism. First, they are particularly susceptible to biological and chemical attacks. Some dense gas agents, like Sarin, concentrate lower to the ground, near the breathing zone of children. Also, because children have more rapid respiratory rates and larger surface to mass ratios, they anaesthetically are more vulnerable to exposures.

And yet, the tools of our response to bioterrorism are less effective for children’s needs.

My legislation, the Protecting America’s Children Against Terrorism Act, would create a national task force comprised of: children health experts on infectious disease, environmental health and toxicology; members of esteemed organizations like the American Academy of Pediatrics and the National Association of Children’s Hospitals; and representatives of relevant federal agencies.

These national children’s health experts would look at our health system to ensure that as we’re stepping up our response efforts, the medicine and treatments fit the health needs of children.

For instance, as we’re making sure we have antidotes to threatening diseases, we need to ensure that these have been tested not just on adults, but on children too.

As my colleagues, Senators DODD, MURRAY, MIKULSKI, SCHUMER, BINGAMAN, and CORZINE. Today, I ask my colleagues to consider the needs of children and co-sponsor my "Protecting America’s Children Against Terrorism Act.”

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill on “Protecting Children Against Terrorism” be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. FITZGERALD:

S. 1540. A bill to extend and improve the emergency food assistance program; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to help food banks, soup kitchens, and other non-profit organizations that meet the needs of our hungry citizens.

According to the most recent U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates, 10.1 percent of U.S. households, 31 million Americans are considered food insecure. Under current law, the Emergency Food Assistance Program, TEFAP, purchases agricultural commodities for use by food banks and soup kitchens. Needy American citizens who request emergency food assistance are turned away due to a lack of food resources.

The bill I introduce today simply increases funding for TEFAP by $40 million, a 40 percent increase. As well, the bill allows $10 million of this new funding to be used for state and local food processing, distribution, transport, and storage costs. This $10 million enhances the $45 million already appropriated annually for these costs.

Additionally, this bill has secondary benefits for community organizations. As TEFAP provides a boost to the agriculture economy by purchasing surplus commodities from the market.

I commend Congressman GOODLIE of Virginia for championing a similar bill on the House side. I look forward to working closely with my colleagues on the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry to ensure that this legislation is included in the Nutrition Title of the Farm Bill.

The legislation is supported by America’s Second Harvest and food banks and soup kitchens throughout the nation. This bill entitled the “Emergency Food Assistance Program Enhancement Act” should enjoy bipartisan support, and I encourage my colleagues to co-sponsor this piece of legislation.

By Mr. ENZI:

S. 1542. A bill to foster innovation and investment in the development of the Internet and electronic commerce, and to assist the States in simplifying their sales and use taxes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Internet Tax Moratorium and Equity Act. I encourage each of my colleagues to support this bill.

I do, however, have concerns about using the Internet as a sales tax loophole. Sales taxes go directly to State and local governments and I am very leery of any Federal legislation that bypasses their traditional ability to raise revenue to perform needed services such as school funding, road repair, and law enforcement. I will not force States into a huge new exemption.

While those who advocate a permanent exemption on the collection of a sales tax over the Internet claim to represent the principles of tax reduction, they are actually advocating a tax increase. Simply put, if Congress continues to allow sales over the Internet to go untaxed and electronic commerce continues to grow as predicted, revenues to State and local governments will fall and property taxes will have to be increased to offset lost revenue or States who do not have or believe in State income taxes will be forced to start one.

Furthermore, State and local revenues and budgets are especially critical now as these governments are responding to protect the security of all of our citizens and businesses. Any action to extend the current moratorium without creating a level playing field would perpetuate a fundamental inequity and ignore a growing problem that will gravely affect the readiness of the nation.

After months of hard work, negotiations, and compromise, the Internet Tax Moratorium and Equity Act has been introduced. I would like to commend several of my colleagues for their commitment to finding a solution and working with all parties to find that solution. I know this bill is the solution. The bill makes permanent the existing moratorium on Internet access taxes, but extends the current moratorium on multiple and discriminatory taxes for an additional four years through December 31, 2005.

Throughout the past several years, we have heard that catalog and Internet companies say they are willing to allow and collect sales tax on interstate sales, regardless of traditional or Internet tax entities. States will simplify collections to one rate per State sent to one location in that State. I think that is a reasonable request. I have heard the argument that computers make it possible to handle several thousand lines, but from an auditing standpoint as well as simplicity for small business, I support one rate per State. I think the States should have some responsibility for redistribution not a business forced to do work for which they are not paid. Therefore, the bill would put Congress on record as urging States and localities to develop a streamlined sales and use tax system, which would include a single, blended tax rate with which all remote sellers can comply. You need to be aware that States are prohibited from gaining benefit from the authority extended in the bill to require sellers to collect and remit sales and use taxes on remote sales if the States have not adopted the simplified sales and use tax system.

Further, the bill would authorize States to enter into an Interstate Sales and Use Tax Compact through which members would adopt the streamlined sales and use tax system. Congressional authority and consent to enter into such a compact would expire if it has not occurred by January 1, 2006. The bill also authorizes States to require all other sellers to collect and remit sales and use taxes on remote sales if the States have not adopted the simplified sales and use tax system.

I am very concerned, however, with any piece of legislation that mandates or restricts State and local governments' ability to meet the needs of its citizens. This has the potential to provide electronic loopholes that will take away all of their revenue. The Internet Tax Moratorium and Equity Act would designate a level playing field for all involved—business, government, and the consumer.

The States, and not the Federal Government, should have the right to impose, or not to impose, consumption taxes as they see fit. The reality is that emergency response personnel, law enforcement officials, and other essential personnel are funded largely by States and local governments, especially through sales taxes. Passing an extension of the current moratorium without taking steps toward a comprehensive solution would leave many States and local communities unable to fund their services. I urge my colleagues to support it.

STATMENTS ON SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 171—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE PROVISION OF FUNDING FOR BIO-TERRORISM PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE

Mr. FRIST (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. WARNER, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. BOND, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. BURNS, Mr. REED, Mr. INHOFE, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. ALLARD, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. ENZI, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. CHAFEE, Mrs. CLINTON, and Mr. DOMENICI) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions:

S. Res. 171

Whereas additional steps must be taken to better prepare the United States to respond to potential bioterrorism attacks; Whereas the threat of a bioterrorist attack is still remote, but is increasing for a variety of reasons, including—

(1) public pronouncements by Osama bin Laden that it is his religious duty to acquire weapons of mass destruction, including chemical and biological weapons;

(2) the callous disregard for innocent human life as demonstrated by the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001;

(3) the resources and motivation of known terrorists and their sponsors and supporters to use biological warfare;

(4) recent scientific and technological advances in agent delivery technology such as aerosolization that have made weaponization of certain germs much easier; and

(5) the increasing availability to the technologies and expertise necessary to construct and deploy chemical and biological weapons of mass destruction;

WHEREAS coordinating Federal, State, and local terrorism research, preparedness, and response programs must be improved;
Whereas States, local areas, and public health officials must have enhanced resources and expertise in order to respond to a potential bioterrorist attack;
Whereas national, State, and local communication capacities must be enhanced to combat the spread of chemical and biological illnesses;
Whereas greater resources must be provided to increase the capacity of hospitals and local health care workers to respond to public health threats;
Whereas health care professionals must be better trained to recognize, diagnose, and treat illnesses arising from biochemical attacks;
Whereas additional supplies may be essential to increase the readiness of the United States to respond to a bio-attack;
Whereas improvements must be made in assuring the safety of the food supply;
Whereas new vaccines and treatments are needed to assure that we have an adequate response to a biochemical attack;
Whereas government research, preparedness, and response programs need to utilize private sector expertise and resources; and
Whereas now is the time to strengthen our public health and ensure that the United States is adequately prepared to respond to potential bioterrorist attacks, natural infectious disease outbreaks, and other challenging threats to the public health: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States should make a substantial new investment this year toward the following:

(1) Improving State and local preparedness capabilities by upgrading State and local surveillance and epidemiology, assisting in the development of response plans, assuring adequate staffing and training of health professionals to diagnose and care for victims of bioterrorism, enhancing the electronic communications networks and training personnel, and improving public health laboratories.
(2) Improving hospital response capabilities by assisting hospitals in developing plans for a bioterrorist attack and improving the surge capacity of hospitals.
(3) Improving the bioterrorism capabilities of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention through improving rapid identification and health early warning systems.
(4) Improving other response medical systems, such as the National Disaster Medical System and the Metropolitan Medical Response System and Epidemic Intelligence Service.
(5) Targeting research to assist with the development of appropriate therapeutics and vaccines for likely bioterrorist agents and assisting with expedited drug and device review through the Food and Drug Administration.
(6) Improving the National Pharmaceutical Stockpile program by increasing the amount of necessary therapies (including smallpox vaccines and other post-exposure vaccines) and ensuring the appropriate deployment of stockpiles.
(7) Targeting activities to increase food safety at the Food and Drug Administration.
(8) Increasing international cooperation to secure dangerous biological agents, increase surveillance, and retrain biological warfare specialists.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a resolution on behalf of myself, Senator Kennedy, and 23 of our colleagues that we put this record on strong support of substantial new investment toward strengthening our Nation’s preparedness to respond to any potential bioterrorist threat.

Last year, Congress passed the bipartisan Frist-Kennedy Public Health Threats and Emergencies Act of 2000. That law provides a coherent framework for national preparedness, research, and early warning systems; to assure adequate staffing and training of health professionals to diagnose and care for victims of bioterrorism; to enhance our research and development capabilities; to expand our reserve of vaccines and antibiotics; and to pursue additional measures necessary to prevent, prepare, and respond to the threat of biological or chemical attacks. The framework exists, so now it is time to fund these critical initiatives.

The threat of a bioterrorist attack is remote, so we must not overreact or give into irrational fears. But remote as the threat may be, it is real. For a variety of reasons, the threat is higher today than it was ten years ago, and it is growing. Osama bin Laden has said it is his religious duty to acquire weapons of mass destruction, including chemical and biological weapons. He and his followers have shown an utter disregard for human life. They, and other known terrorists, have the resources and motivation to acquire and use germ warfare. Recent advances in agent delivery technology, such as aerosolization, have made weaponization of germs easier. Finally, with the fall of the Soviet Union, the expertise of thousands of scientists knowledgeable in germ warfare may be available to the highest bidder.

We have made important strides during the past few years in preparing our Nation to meet this threat. There is much to be proud of in our response to the attacks of September 11, as well as the response to the recent anthrax outbreaks in Florida. But additional steps are needed, and they are needed now. To better prepare our Nation, the Administration, local and State officials, public health departments, and our front line medical response teams must have additional resources and support. I believe the best way to accomplish this is to provide additional funds toward the priorities outlined in the Public Health Threats and Emergencies Act and to better arm America to fight against bioterrorism.

To prepare the best way to proceed, my colleagues Senator Kennedy and I, and our colleagues, look forward to working with the Administration and those who serve on the Appropriations Committees to provide the funds necessary to fill the gaps in our current biodefense and surveillance systems and to take additional steps to prevent the use of biochemical weapons and fully prepare our communities to respond. So that the Senate is strongly on record in favor of these efforts, I look forward to working with all of my colleagues to have this Sense of the Senate Resolution considered on an appropriate vehicle in the very near future.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I join our distinguished colleague, Senator BILL FRIST, and many other colleagues in the Senate to introduce a resolution stating our strong support for strengthening America’s defenses against bioterrorism.

Dangerous biological agents do not fall into the hands of terrorists. We’ve worked with Russia to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, and we must work together now to prevent the spread of biological weapons. We must also enhance America’s preparedness for a bioterrorist attack. Our citizens need not live their lives in fear of a biological attack, but building strong defenses is the right thing to do.

Unlike the assaults on New York and Washington, a biological attack would not be accompanied by explosions and police sirens. In the days that followed, victims of the attack would visit their family doctor or the local emergency room complaining of fever, aches in the joints or perhaps a sore throat. The actions taken in those first few days will do much to determine how severe the consequences of the attack will be.

The keys to responding effectively to a bioterrorist attack are key concepts: immediate detection, immediate treatment and immediate containment.

To improve detection, we should improve the training of doctors to recognize the symptoms of a bioterrorist attack, so that precious hours will not be lost as doctors try to diagnose their patients. As we’ve seen in recent days, patients with anthrax and other rarely encountered diseases are often initially diagnosed incorrectly. In addition, public health laboratories need the training, the equipment and the personnel to identify biological weapons as quickly as possible.

In Boston, a recently installed electronic communication system will enable physicians to report unusual symptoms rapidly to local health officials, so that an attack could be identified early. And, often, however, the CDC report has stated: “Global travel and commerce can move microbes around the world at jet speed, yet our public health surveillance systems still rely on a ‘Pony Express’ system of paper-based reporting and telephone calls.”

To improve the treatment of victims of a bioterrorist attack, we must strengthen our hospitals and emergency medical plans. Boston, New York and a few other communities have plans to convert National Guard armories and other public buildings into temporary medical facilities, and other communities need to be well prepared too. Even cities with extensive plans need more resources to ensure that those plans will be effective when they are needed.

To improve containment, we must make certain that federal supplies of vaccines and antibiotics are available quickly to assist local public health officials in preventing the disease from spreading.

Developing new medical resources for the future is also essential. Scientists recently reported that they had determined the complete DNA sequence of the microbe that causes plague. This breakthrough may allow new treatments and vaccines to be developed against this ancient disease scourge. We still lack the remarkable skills of our universities and biotechnology companies to give us new and better treatments in the battle against bioterrorism.

September 11 was a turning point in America’s history. Our challenge now is to do everything we can to learn from that tragic day, and prepare effectively for the future.

Gregory Gordon Lockhart, of Ohio, to be United States Attorney for the Southern District of Ohio for the term of four years.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, it is a pleasure for me to take the opportunity today to say a few words about an outstanding young American who the President has nominated and the Senate has confirmed to be the U.S. Attorney for the Western District of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

John Brownlee is exceptionally well-qualified to serve in this position. He is a graduate of Washington and Lee University and the Law School of the College of William and Mary. Following his graduation from law school, John served for two years as a law clerk for the Honorable Sam Wilson, Chief U.S. District Judge for the Western District of Virginia. He served four years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney here in the District of Columbia where he gained extensive experience as a federal prosecutor. John also has experience in the private sector as an associate at the law firm of Woods, Rogers and Hazlegrove in Roanoke, Virginia.

I have known this outstanding young man for almost eighteen years and have followed his career development with great interest. John is very capable, with extraordinary character and high moral standards. A graduate of the ROTC program at Washington & Lee University, where he also lettered in varsity football each year, John entered the U.S. Army upon graduation as an infantry officer. He also volunteered for and graduated from the Army’s Airborne and Ranger training programs.

John’s 25-year military career was primarily as an officer in the Army’s 3rd Infantry, the “Old Guard”, where he served initially as a Rifle Platoon Leader and later commanded the prestigious Army Drill Team. While on duty at Ft. Myer, Virginia, John also served as a military aide to President George H.W. Bush and, through night courses, earned a Masters Degree in Business Administration. John continues to serve his country as a Major in the Army Reserve.

John and his lovely wife, Lee Ann along with their two year old daughter, Thompson Ann, currently live in Roanoke. Lee Ann is a news anchor for Channel 10 and one of the most popular personalities in southwest Virginia.

John was appointed United States Attorney on August 30, 2001. He is already hard at work as the Chief Law Enforcement Officer in the Western District. John has already tried and won his first case as a United States Attorney.

I am particularly proud of this young man, having watched him develop over many years. As many of my colleagues know, John is the son of Les Brownlee, the Republican Staff Director of the Armed Services Committee, who has worked for me and the Armed Services Committee for almost 18 years. So, it is with a great deal of pride and personal pleasure that I have urged my colleagues to support unanimously the confirmation of John L. Brownlee as the U.S. Attorney for the Western District of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I am pleased that today we have confirmed Greg Lockhart to be U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Ohio. I am in full and strong support of this nomination.

I have known Greg Lockhart for over 25 years. I know from my personal experiences working with Greg that he is an extremely well qualified nominee, who possesses great integrity and personal virtue.

Greg’s experience is extensive. He served in the U.S. Air Force for three years from 1966 to 1969. Including service in Vietnam. Following his military service, he attended Wright State University, where he graduated in 1973. He then earned a law degree from Ohio State University in 1976. He’s been a career prosecutor ever since.

I worked with Greg first in Xenia, when he was the legal advisor to the Xenia and Fairborn police departments and I was serving as Greene County prosecutor. I hired him to be assistant county prosecutor in 1978. He became an assistant U.S. attorney in 1987.

While in this position, Greg served as Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force (OCDETF) prosecutor for two years, with duties including the prosecution of all violations of federal law, such as contract fraud, murder, firearms, drugs, money laundering, and organized crime. Additionally, Greg has handled the civil defense of all manner of lawsuits brought against the United States, including medical and tort claims, discrimination, the training of agents and appellate practice.

There is no doubt in my mind that Greg Lockhart has the qualifications and skills necessary to serve in this position. With 25 years of experience as a prosecutor, Greg will fill this position in a pragmatic, tempered, and thoughtful way. I thank my colleagues for joining me in supporting this nomination.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.J. Res. 68, a 1-week continuing resolution, just received from the House, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be read a third time, printed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 68) was read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL CHARACTER COUNTS WEEK

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of H. Con. Res. 204 and the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H.J. Res. 68) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 2002, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be read a third time, printed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 68) was read the third time and passed.
Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise in support of the resolution introduced by myself and my friend and colleague from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, to establish National Character Counts Week. This resolution has passed during each of the last four Congresses with hardly a dissenting voice. This year, in addition to Senator DOMENICI and myself, the resolution has 45 co-sponsors, divided almost equally between Democrats and Republicans. This resolution passed the House on September 20th, and we hope that it will pass the Senate today by unanimous consent.

Our schools may be built with the bricks of reading and math, and science and history, but bricks need mortar, and character is that mortar in our children’s education. Dr. Martin Luther King exhorted us to judge each other not by the color of our skin, but by the content of our character. We must do all that we can to help families and schools develop the character of which Dr. King spoke is sound.

That is why Senator DOMENICI and I supported grants for character education partnerships in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act in 1994, and again this year. This year we have been so pleased by the President’s support for character education. And, that is why we urge our colleagues in the Senate to support this resolution today.

Character education provides students a context within which to learn. If we view education simply as imparting cold facts to our children, then we will miss a critical opportunity to develop the character of future generations. Character education must be part of a seamless garment of learning.

For example, at Waterford High School, in Connecticut, math students designed an access ramp for children and others who use wheelchairs. The student work about math, but also about caring and inclusion.

At Butler Elementary School, in Groton, CT, principals and teachers developed the Respect Every Day program. The program is not an additional required subject. Rather, it is a part of every subject. And, in Enfield, Connecticut, at Prudence Crandall Elementary School, teachers use the Teaching Children to Get Along program, which teaches students to treat others with courtesy, and to be assertive, but not angry, when dealing with problems such as bullying and teasing.

The Connecticut Department of Education, on behalf of many state organizations, has issued a Call to Action letter, outlining a program to improve the school climate in Connecticut schools. And, the Connecticut Education Association has developed its own character education program that teaches kids about not bullying and other behaviors that can disrupt schools and make it difficult for children to learn.

Just last week, there was a wonderful article in the Washington Post, about Mt. Rainier Elementary School, in Maryland, only a few miles from the Capitol. At Mt. Rainier, the theme of peace is woven throughout the curriculum, and is central to the school’s effort to teach children to be responsible for their actions and to respect themselves, fellow students, and adults.

A banner over the school entrance reads “Mt. Rainier: A Peaceful School.” Each week, students learn a different word for peace. Often, that word is the word for peace in a foreign language, teaching students that peace must be universal. And, students are rewarded for good behavior. Last year, the school celebrated 160 consecutive Peace Days.

Mt. Rainier’s message, and the message of character education generally, is more important now, than ever. Mt. Rainier’s principal, Phil Catania, said that he is not sure that whatever is happening on the outside, Mt. Rainier is a place where children can be safe and happy, and learn that anger and violence need not win out in the end.

A month ago, that would have been about the difference between what happens in school and what happens in some of the children’s neighborhoods. Tragically, today, it is also about the terrible events that perhaps none of us will ever forget. We all understand that there are certain people who have the primary responsibility to care for our children like mothers, fathers, siblings, and grandparents. We are not in any way talking about that responsibility of raising a child with good values.

However, we have found the teachers in our schools have been yearning for something they could teach our children that for some reason had been eliminated from both the public and private school agenda curriculum. It is sometimes referred to as character education.

I choose to speak about the “Character Counts” program that is being used in many public schools in our country, and certainly in my State of New Mexico where teachers embrace six pillars of character.

The values comprising the Six Pillars are everyday concepts that Americans across this land wish their children would have and hope America will keep. They are simple: trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring, and citizenship. They transcend political and social barriers and are central to the ideals on which this Nation was built.

As a matter of fact, I think they are central and basic to any nation that survives for any long period of history. As Plato once said:

“A country without character is a country that doomed and the only way a country can have character is if the individual citizens in the country have character.”
I could speak for all of my allotted time on the 200,000 New Mexico schoolchildren in public, private and parochial schools learning about good character. About 90 percent of the grade school children, and a significant portion of the others, are now participating in character education programs that simply and profoundly bring them into contact with each of these Pillars one month at a time.

So if you walk the halls of a grade school in Albuquerque, you might see a sign outside that says, “This is Responsibility Month.” And all the young people will be discussing the concept of responsibility in their classrooms, and they will put up posters saying, “Responsibility Counts.”

At the end of that month they may have an assembly where responsibility will be discussed by all the kids, and awards will be given to those demonstrating the most responsibility. The next month it might be “caring.”

I would submit the concept is working wherever it is being tried. A good example can be seen in the changes that occurred at the Garfield Middle School in Albuquerque. The 570 students at Garfield received their first lessons on the Six Pillars in October of 1994.

During the first 20 days of that school year, there were 91 recorded incidents of physical violence. One year later, during the same period, there were 28 such incidents. I believe this remarkable difference is evidence that students do respond to Character Counts.

In New Mexico, the Character Counts movement has spread from the classroom to the boardroom. Recently, a group of business professionals resolved to explore ways to implement the Six Pillars in all their business relationships in an effort to spread these values throughout the community.

Through their efforts, parents have an opportunity to participate in Character Counts alongside their kids, thereby reinforcing lessons learned in school. Promoting the Six Pillars at work also improves productivity and morale on the job, and it pays incalculable dividends in job and customer satisfaction.

I could go on for quite some time talking about Character Counts in New Mexico. The bottom line is that I believe it is working in New Mexico and other parts of the country.

Consequently, I think we need to salute the efforts already underway and encourage even more character education across our country.

So today, Senator Dodd and I are here to applaud the passage of the resolution and hopefully our renewed effort will bring together even more communities to ensure that character education is a part of every child’s life.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 204) was agreed to.
