Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3008 and that, as a matter of notice, H.R. 3129 will reappear on the floor under a rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. ISRAEL changed his vote from 'nay' to 'yea.'

Mr. KIRK, Mr. Speaker, on rollcall vote 478, I would have voted 'yea.'
its borders and discourage global interaction. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Never has it been more apparent that we need to enhance and strengthen friendships around the world, and what better way to build coalitions than with free trade.

In the 1960 Democratic platform, President Kennedy put it best in the following message that is relevant both then as it is now. World trade is more than an economic act to world peace. We must therefore resist the temptation to accept remedies that deny American producers and consumers access to world markets and destroy the prosperity of our friends in the non-Communist world.

We can neither deny nor ignore the correlation between peace and free trade.

Not only does the war on terrorism influence the need for free trade, but the anticipated economic opportunities for American workers, farmers and companies will provide a much needed boost to our uncertain economy.

Just look at the facts. One in 10 Americans, nearly 12 million people, work at jobs that depend on exports of goods and services. American farmers and companies will provide a much needed boost to our uncertain economy.

In New York alone, my home State, the number of companies exported increased by more than 500 percent from 1992 to 1996. Currently, the wages of New York workers in jobs supported by exports are 13 to 18 percent higher than the national average. The imports provide workers in jobs supported by exports.

The President has said open trade is not just an economic opportunity, it is a moral imperative. The prosperity and integrity of global democracy is at stake, and it is incumbent upon us to pull into the fast lane in order to reap the benefits of free trade.

What we have today is nothing new. Until its expiration in 1994, every President from Richard Nixon through Bill Clinton has enjoyed the right of Trade Promotion Authority. This President deserves the same right.

I strongly urge my colleagues to do the right thing for America. Support this rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS), my good friend, for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being the House contrarian this morning, I again rise in strong opposition to this unfair rule and equally strong opposition to the unfair bill.

At the outset, let me explain the procedural problems with this rule that was reported late last night. Recently, we have heard so much about the new spirit of bipartisanship that is flowing through this body. Unfortunately, the majority members of the House Committee on Rules must not have gotten this memo.

Mr. Speaker, I remember well the times that Republican after Republican came to this floor to decry so-called unfair, heavy-handed tactics that my party used when we held the majority in this Chamber. At that time, Republicans were outraged and incredulous each time an important bill came to the House floor under a closed rule which prohibited debate.

This is the exact rule that the Republicans would like us to work under today. So I say to my Republican colleagues, where is the outrage? Where is the disdain? My guess is that the disdain is directed at you and ready to go on 4 o'clock planes that they are trying to catch today. What other reason could there be for closing off such important debate?

Let there be no mistake, Mr. Speaker. The bill that we consider today will have profound and long lasting effects on every State in this great country and on citizens throughout the world, and instead of allowing a fair and open debate, the majority is trying to squash the voices that they wish not to hear.

No amendments or substitute are permitted to this bill. The gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), one of the most respected and distinguished Members of this body, a Member who has served nearly 27 years on the House Committee on Ways and Means, who knows as much about trade as anybody on this side of the aisle, where is the outrage? Where is his amendment?

No amendments or substitute are permitted to this bill. The gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), one of the most respected and distinguished Members of this body, a Member who has served nearly 27 years on the House Committee on Ways and Means, who knows as much about trade as anybody in the House of Representatives, will not be permitted to offer an amendment or substitute to this bill. Frankly, this is not simply unfair; it is offensive.

Moreover, there were a number of other Members who came to the Committee on Rules late last night to ask that amendments be permitted to be offered. They were all denied their request.

What are Americans being denied the right to hear about? One example, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU), our thoughtful colleague, would have liked to offer an amendment making human rights considerations a principal objective of our trade compacts. If this rule passes, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU) will not be able to offer his commonsensical amendment.

Another example, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) had sensible amendments related to some of our neediest trading partners in Africa.

Like the Wu and Rangel amendment, the American people will be denied the right to hear the gentlewoman from California's amendment.

How the majority is not embarrassed to bring such a rule to the House floor is simply beyond my comprehension.

Setting aside for a moment the gross problem with this rule, there are significant concerns related to the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the Trade Promotion Authority, formerly Fast Track, legislation completely ignores the legitimate concerns many people have raised about the negative impact of current trade policies on working families, the environment, family farmers, consumers, small- and mid-sized businesses, people of color and women here in the United States and around the world.

At a time when more than 700,000 layoffs have been announced since September 11, more than 2 million Americans have lost their jobs this year; and on the heels of the largest bankruptcy filing in the history of our country, where thousands more will soon receive a pink slip, the other side of the aisle is coming to the floor today to lay the foundation for the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs by more Americans in the immediate future.

To top it off, just a short while ago this body reauthorized funding for trade adjustment assistance in anticipation of imminent job losses from future trade agreements.

Talk about a self-fulfilling prophecy. You see, Mr. Speaker, today we are not voting on one trade agreement versus another. Rather, we are voting on giving the President open-ended authority to go ahead and commit the United States to trade agreements without allowing Congress substantive consultation on the specifics of the agreement. To provide this open-ended authority to the President without requiring that environmental and labor standards be included in any trade agreement is nothing short of hammering another nail in the coffin of hundreds of American industries nationwide.

I support free trade. I was told last night in the Committee on Rules meeting that the manager's amendment will protect agriculture; that it will protect sugar in my State. Well, it did not. I have in the past, and still will, support free trade. However, any free trade agreement must be a fair trade agreement.

It is outrageous to expect the American agricultural industry to compete with South American, Chinese or Asian agricultural industries who are not required to pay their workers a minimum living wage and are not held to the same environmental standards as farmers here in the U.S.

Don't believe me? Look at what NAFTA did to my home state of Florida, specifically the agriculture industry. From citrus to sugar and from rice to tomatoes, Florida's agricultural industry has lost thousands of jobs as a direct result of NAFTA. While Mexican farmers have profited, companies have closed and Florida no longer have jobs.

The President has made it no secret that the first thing he will do with fast track authority is to move forward with the Free Trade Area of the Americas agreement. The FTAA agreement, as currently written, could result in Florida’s citrus and sugar industries, along with fruit and vegetable industries nationwide, ceasing to exist. South American farmers who pay their workers pennies and do nothing to preserve the land they grow or the environment of the agricultural industry before we know what hit us.

As I mentioned at the outset and for the reasons just explained, I oppose adoption of this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the distinguished chairman of the Rules, and an architect of this important legislation.

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule. This is a fair rule. Yes, it is a closed rule, but this rule is about procedure. My colleagues are either for granting the President Trade Promotion Authority or they are against granting the President Trade Promotion Authority. So I do not feel that this argument is about all these other issues.

Yes, we have worked long and hard to fashion a package. The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and a wide range of people on both sides of the aisle have worked on this issue, and now we have come down to the point where Members of Congress will have to make a choice. They will either vote "yes" to give the President authority, or they will vote "no," and that is what this rule provides us with the opportunity to do.

It is very fair, it is very balanced, and it is, quite frankly, the way rules that have addressed trade issues in the past have been addressed. So this is nothing new. When our friends on the other side of the aisle, Mr. Speaker, were in the majority, this is exactly the way they moved the rules dealing with trade issues. And so we have learned, and I do all so well. So we are following your model to a T here, and thank you very much for setting the example for us.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that last week we learned with absolute certainty that our economy is faced with economic recession. It is a great difficult time for many of us. Many of our fellow Americans have been laid off. There is a great deal of suffering taking place. We are all aware of that, and we know it was dramatically exacerbated following September 11. What we are about to do, Mr. Speaker, I believe, may be one of the most important things that can help us turn the corner for those Americans who are suffering today.

What is it that trade agreements mean for America? They will provide and have traditionally provided targeted tax relief to America’s working families and businesses to allow them access to high-quality products at low prices. They create better, higher-paying jobs by prying open new markets for America’s world-class goods and services around the world. And we know that those in the industry involved in this traditionally will earn between 13 and 18 percent higher income levels than those goods that are produced simply for domestic consumption here in the United States. So by prying open new markets, we provide an opportunity for higher wage rates for American workers.

They also provide that very important and powerful link between nations who want to participate peacefully in the world. We know that people who give them access to a long way towards dealing with this issue. The global leadership role that the President has played, especially since September 11, has been heralded by Democrats and Republicans alike. And I believe that this is one of the most important things that is ensuring our western values throughout the world.

We know that as we deal with this challenging war against terrorism, trying to expand economic opportunity so that people who give their lives will be able to go a long way towards effectively dealing with this issue.

This is a positive, very positive rule. It is a good rule. I believe that this is a fair rule. This rule provides us with the opportunity to do.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule. This is a fair rule. Yes, it is a closed rule, but this rule is about procedure. My colleagues are either for granting the President Trade Promotion Authority or they are against granting the President Trade Promotion Authority. So I do not feel that this argument is about all these other issues.

Yes, we have worked long and hard to fashion a package. The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and a wide range of people on both sides of the aisle have worked on this issue, and now we have come down to the point where Members of Congress will have to make a choice. They will either vote "yes" to give the President authority, or they will vote "no," and that is what this rule provides us with the opportunity to do.

It is very fair, it is very balanced, and it is, quite frankly, the way rules that have addressed trade issues in the past have been addressed. So this is nothing new. When our friends on the other side of the aisle, Mr. Speaker, were in the majority, this is exactly the way they moved the rules dealing with trade issues. And so we have learned, and I do all so well. So we are following your model to a T here, and thank you very much for setting the example for us.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that last week we learned with absolute certainty that our economy is faced with economic recession. It is a great difficult time for many of us. Many of our fellow Americans have been laid off. There is a great deal of suffering taking place. We are all aware of that, and we know it was dramatically exacerbated following September 11. What we are about to do, Mr. Speaker, I believe, may be one of the most important things that can help us turn the corner for those Americans who are suffering today.

What is it that trade agreements mean for America? They will provide and have traditionally provided targeted tax relief to America’s working families and businesses to allow them access to high-quality products at low prices. They create better, higher-paying jobs by prying open new markets for America’s world-class goods and services around the world. And we know that those in the industry involved in this traditionally will earn between 13 and 18 percent higher income levels than those goods that are produced simply for domestic consumption here in the United States. So by prying open new markets, we provide an opportunity for higher wage rates for American workers.

They also provide that very important and powerful link between nations who want to participate peacefully in the world. We know that people who give them access to a long way towards dealing with this issue. The global leadership role that the President has played, especially since September 11, has been heralded by Democrats and Republicans alike. And I believe that this is one of the most important things that is ensuring our western values throughout the world.

We know that as we deal with this challenging war against terrorism, trying to expand economic opportunity so that people who give their lives will be able to go a long way towards effectively dealing with this issue.

This is a positive, very positive rule. It is a good rule. I believe that this is a fair rule. This rule provides us with the opportunity to do.
Are you so afraid of another view, are you so frightened that we will be heard and that you would lose some of the votes?

And then this terrorism thing. How dare people say that we are not fighting the terrorism we should do. Fighting the war against terrorism, the President says, requires a bipartisan approach. It means that it is not chairmen who run and rule; it is bipartisan. Republicans and Democrats working together, working their will, and presenting something to us.

But I tell you this: If you really believe that doing the right thing with unemployment compensation and doing the right thing with health, when you have not done the right thing all year, that you are going to pick up some votes in doing it, and for those people who do not like the bill but are concerned about the crises and the hard part, maybe they have lost their jobs, and they are going to take a promise from the majority to trust them, vote for this bill and they will do the right thing for health insurance, if you believe that, I have a great bridge in Brooklyn I would like to discuss with you.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to comment that listening to the comments of the dean of the delegation from New York, and listening to his remarks as the ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, ranking minority member, there are a lot of views to listen. I have this glass of water. Some would say that it is half empty. I prefer to look at it as half full.

I do not know that any of us totally have an exact definition of what bipartisanship is. This is an up-or-down vote. This is not a Republican or a Democrat issue. We are either for free and fair trade or not. Giving the President the authority to enter bilateral agreements or we are not. That is what that rule is about, to bring the bill to the floor and vote it up or down.

I look at it as bipartisanship, the same way I look at this half full glass of water that is on this table. There are six sponsors, three Democrats, three Republicans. About as bipartisan as I have seen anything be around here, with the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE), the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON), and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. PLANTER).

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART), a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from New York for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, this is a crucial moment, a crossroad for democracy in the Western Hemisphere. I recognize that there are legitimate concerns anytime Congress cedes authority granted to it by the Constitution. I, in fact, opposed granting President Clinton this authority. I did not trust him. But I trust President Bush is voting right in putting this bill in the House Committee on Rules to grant the President Trade Promotion Authority, and I will do so today as well on the House floor.

We have a unique opportunity to strengthen democracy in the Western Hemisphere. Nations in this hemisphere are facing numerous challenges that threaten their fledgling democracies, including narcotics-trafficking and terrorism. One of the surest ways to support democracy in the hemisphere is by facilitating the emergence of a common market of the Americas, the free trade area of the Americas, the FTAA. I strongly support free trade among free peoples; free trade among free peoples is good economically and it is ethical.

An FTAA that incorporates a strong, enforceable democracy requirement is the best hope for protecting unstable democracies and for exporting it to where tyranny now reigns.

The European Community, now the European Union, insisted on democracy as a requirement for membership, and that contributed directly and effectively to the democratization of Spain and Portugal after the deaths of dictators Francisco Franco and Antonio de Oliveira Salazar in the decade of the 1970s. The Declaration of Quebec City of April 2001, from the most recent Summit of the Americas, the process, Mr. Speaker, leads the FTAA to make a similar commitment to democracy: The maintenance and strengthening of the rule of law and strict respect for the democratic system are, at the same time, a goal and a shared commitment and are an essential condition of our presence at this and future summits, of all of the democratically elected heads of State in the hemisphere stated in April in Quebec. Consequently, disruption of the democratic order in a state of the hemisphere constitutes an insurmountable obstacle to the participa-

The Summit of the Americas process is clearly headed in the right direction, but strong leadership by the United States is needed to make democracy in the entire hemisphere a permanent reality. Without Trade Promotion Authority trade, the United States will not be able to achieve an FTAA with a strong democracy requirement. Accordingly, it is crucial that we pass Trade Promotion Authority for the President today.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may con-

Mr. Speaker, I remind the gentleman from Florida (Mr. TANNER) that certainly he remembers after NAFTA we lost considerable jobs in the State of Florida; and with the Free Trade Area of the Americas agreement, the likelihood is that can occur again.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

(Mr. LEVIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, the notion that the U.S. has been standing still in trade is nonsense. Africa, CBI, Jordan, China, NTR, Cambodia, in the last few years, indeed, globalization is here to stay. The main issue today is not free trade versus protectionism. That is an old label for a new issue.

This is primarily a debate among supporters of expanding trade, whether to shape trade policy to maximize its benefits and minimize its losses. Supporters of the Thomas bill believe no. Essentially more trade is always better, under the term of trademark, comfortable with providing vague negotiating objectives, running away from issues like labor and the environment and leaving Congress in essentially the role of a consultant.

There is not time for a one-dimensional approach. It is a new world, new nations, expanding issues. For example, on core labor standards, the Rangel approach is clear and effective, a principal negotiating objective, increasingly enforcing ILO core labor standards. Thomas, each nation is essentially left on its own no matter how inadequate its laws. And the manager’s amendment that was suddenly introduced last night only makes it worse, leaving a weak provision essentially powerless in its enforcement.

On investment, the Rangel bill is clear and unambiguous. No greater rights for foreign investors. The Thomas bill dances around this issue.

Then on the role of Congress, those of us who see the need to shape trade want to ensure an active and ongoing role for Congress. This is a necessary corollary of the fact that trade is more important than ever. The Thomas bill undermines the role of Congress as a consultant, tracking the Archer-Crane language of 3 years ago.

The manager’s amendment tried to beef this up by saying any Member can put forth a resolution to withdraw Fast Track; but it only reaches the floor if it goes through the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules.

The Summit of the Americas process is clearly headed in the right direction, but strong leadership by the United States is needed to make democracy in the entire hemisphere a permanent reality. Without Trade Promotion Authority to the HTAA, the United States will not be able to achieve an FTAA with a strong democracy requirement. Accordingly, it is crucial that we pass Trade Promotion Authority for the President today.
so. Rangel does. Vote "yes" on Rangel and vote "no" on Thomas.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KELLER).

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act, and this is why: 95 percent of the world’s population is outside of the United States. It is critical that we give the President the tools he needs to open up new markets all across the world for our goods and services. By increasing America’s export markets, we will increase the number of high-paying high-tech jobs in the United States.

A good example of that is the Recoton Corporation in central Florida, which is the Nation’s largest consumer electronics manufacturer in the area of car stereo speakers. Recoton’s president, Mr. Bob Borchardt, is also the chairman of the Electronics Industry Alliance.

Mr. Borchardt tells me that only 10 percent of his company’s sales are outside of North America, and that passing Trade Promotion Authority will help open up foreign markets and will result in his company creating many new jobs in Florida.

Mr. Speaker, now is not the time to isolate America. Let us pass TPA and give our economy a much-needed boost.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

( Mr. WU asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a former technology and trade attorney. I have negotiated international trade agreements, I am in favor of international trade, and we do need to build a stable consensus in favor of international trade. But from my personal experience, I know that there are winners and there are losers in trade; and while it is hard to ensure, to ensure, that this rising tide of international trade truly lifts all boats instead of leaving some behind. This requires meaningful protection of the environment, of labor rights, and most importantly to me, of human rights. This bill, the Thomas bill, does not do so. I reluctantly oppose the bill.

Mr. Speaker, we proposed amendments to improve this bill last night. They were all rejected by the Committee of Rules. Therefore, I strongly oppose the rule under which this bill is considered.

With respect to the environment, I call Members’ attention to page 18, section 2(b)(1)(B) of this bill. It constitutes a huge loophole. This bill is literally a Trojan horse with respect to the environment. There is no meaningful protection for the environment in this bill. The manager’s amendment exacerbates this problem, and I quote from the manager’s amendments, “No retaliation authorized for nonadherence to labor standards and levels of environmental protection.” I think the language speaks for itself. This bill is a Trojan horse with respect to the environment.

With respect to some other basic rights, such as Americans knowing what they eat, I call Members’ attention to page 14, section 2(b)(10)(viii)(II). This bill tells us what we eat. The amendment that the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. BOXO) passed earlier this year would be eviscerated by this particular proviso. The chairman would undoubtedly say it would be based on good science. I think this would be the kind of science that we get from the cigarette companies who have yet to find a real scientific link between cancer and smoking.

Finally, my core issue of human rights. Who will speak for those who are in jail or who are intimidated into silence if we do not? There are temporary trade advantages in suppressing human rights. Mussolini made the trains run on time, and making the trains run on time temporarily benefits an economy. But in the long term, democracy and human rights are both good for individuals and they are good for business because complex societies, it is like geology when tectonic plates come together, that energy can be released in little earthquakes that are barely felt. We call those elections. Or we can permit those plates to lock up and have cataclysmic earthquakes. We call those revolutions. Revolutions are always bad for business.

Good human rights is good business for the long term, but there are temporary advantages to be had by the suppression of human rights. When we have a bill which promotes trade and protects human rights, I will support that bill. That day is not today.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT), who has worked with me to revise and extend his remarks.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule on H.R. 3005 to grant Trade Promotion Authority. Few are the occasions on which Members of this body have the opportunity to shape the course of our long-term economic future as we have on this TPA vote today.

Without TPA, America will be forced onto the sidelines, watching as other nations form agreements which shut out our products and services out of the most promising new markets. Without TPA, America will see its role as world leader transformed into world follower. Even our most innovative and successful companies will find themselves making a back seat to foreign competitors.

What is at stake here are the lives and livelihoods of current and future generations of American workers. Their productivity and creativity are not bound to none, and yet second to all, this is what we will be if we tie the hands of our President. Let us unite the hands of the President, allowing his negotiators to bring home the best deals for America. I urge Members to support the rule and TPA.

Mr. PASCarella. Mr. Speaker, this is a very critical issue. We are arguing the rule. I want both sides to know these are the rules of the Constitution of the United States. Article 1 section 8 is very clear. In the last 20 years this Congress has given up its powers to the executive branch of government. We have had folks on the other side talk about it. It is very clear what article 1 section 8 says about what our responsibilities are.

In the movie “Thelma and Louise,” Thelma turns to Louise and says, “Don’t settle.” We are settling here. We are settling for an erosion not only of the Constitution of the United States, an erosion of labor rights, an erosion of human rights, an erosion of our trade imbalance which has risen to $435 billion, a $62 billion erosion according to NAFTA itself. We are making a big mistake if we vote “yes.”

There is not a question of trade or not to trade; this is a question of having the right rules at the right time. I ask Members to read article 1 section 8. Did constituents send Members here to give up their responsibility to the President of the United States on trade issues? Then change the Constitution. Change the Constitution is my recommendation if that is what Members wish to do.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in listening to that debate, I would just reflect that there was a time when the Nation could boast that we were the world leader in shaping those rules for international trade and globalization of markets. Sadly, this is no longer the case.

In my opening remarks I also reflected that each President from President Nixon to President Clinton had this authority, and that it was important to look at giving our sitting President the same authority, for the simple fact that while we would give the ability to negotiate, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCarella) would know full well that this Congress, and not the President, would have its authority that would be given to the President, would cast a vote for each and every agreement as our Constitution protects, and any rules that may be there. It is clear that this Congress will ratify almost all of those agreements. The authority would allow the President to enter into those bilateral agreements.

Mr. Speaker, we are behind. There are 130 regional trade agreements in force today with only three in the United States. Mexico has 28. The European Union has 27 with other countries. It is important that we move forward to protect our jobs and grow our jobs and treat the opportunity of the
Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman for his leadership and for yielding me time, and rise in strong support of the rule and of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act today.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the question before this House, and, in many ways, before America today, is who do you trust? Do you trust the shuttered version of America that says that we will lose our own rules and we will keep to ourselves and we will maintain our place in the world, or do you trust the American worker and do you trust the American President at such a time as this?

Well, I stand today to say that I trust the American worker. The great American companies, large and small, when given an opportunity to compete in the world, not only, Mr. Speaker, do we compete, but we win, and we win consistently.

We know in Indiana that trade means jobs. $1.5 billion from this relatively small midwestern State in agricultural goods alone last year, supporting 24,000 jobs on and off the farm. And it is not only good for big business, as some on the other side might say. Ninety percent of exports in this country come from companies with less than 500 employees, and for every $1 billion in increased exports, Mr. Speaker, we create 20,000 new jobs here in America that pay an average of 17 percent more than similar jobs in the domestic economy.

I trust the American worker to compete and to win. But I also rise today to say that I trust the President. Along with more than 80 percent of the American people, I trust President George W. Bush to put America's interests first in the world, to put American jobs, to put America's security, to put American agriculture, manufacturing, steel, all of the rest on the international negotiating table first.

I believe this President, particularly this fall, has earned our trust and earned our respect, and I urge all of my colleagues, trust the American worker, trust the American President; vote yes on the rule and the bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds to remind the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) that American workers cannot buy food with trust and cannot pay mortgages with trust. Certainly none of us distrust the President. I trust the American worker, but the American worker has a problem having jobs under the lack of consultation that we provide here.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished ranking member, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Frost), a person that has done an outstanding job not only on trade, but on the Committee on Rules, in trying to provide fair and open rules for all the Members of this body.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, since September 11, the world has changed. From the President and the Congress to the U.S. military abroad and the American people here at home, pull together to wage war on terrorism.

Unfortunately, America's desperately needed economic recovery has been a different matter. Our economy has been in recession since March, long before September 11, according to the experts. Millions and millions of people are unemployed across the country. In the past few months alone, hundreds of thousands of hard-working Americans have lost their jobs.

Meanwhile, just months after Republicans passed budget-busting trillion dollar tax breaks, the administration is now admitting that the surplus it inherited is gone and America now faces years of growing debt, threatening priorities from Social Security and Medicare to homeland security and affordable health care.

How has Republican leaders responded to this problem? With billions of dollars in tax breaks for big corporations, leaving just crumbs for laid-off workers. And today, Mr. Speaker, Republican leaders are using the House to play politics for the 2002 elections. Instead of helping American workers, Republican leaders are trying to help their own fund-raising.

Do not take my word for it, Mr. Speaker. The Chairman of the Republican Campaign Committee spelled it out in the Washington Post a few days ago. For Republican leaders, he said, this Fast Track bill is about fund-raising. It does not matter, he bragged, whether this bill passes or not. Just as long as they can use it to help the Republican fund-raising, then they will be happy.

So Republican leaders have written a Fast Track bill that shortchanges working Americans from coast to coast. They have written a bill that does not protect the environment, and they have written a bill that represents a dereliction of duty by Congress, an abdication of our responsibility to protect the people we represent on issues from food safety to telecommunications.

Mr. Speaker, Democratic leaders on trade fought valiantly for a bipartisan approach that protects American workers. The gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Trade, tried over and over to work with Republican leaders, but their overtures were rejected because Republican leaders wanted a political issue that they could bill as a bill. And when the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) wrote a Demoterms of trade. One vote, 62 pages, no amendments, 2 hours of debate.
H8978

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

December 6, 2001

Now, if the United States had a successful trade policy giving this President, or any President, a blank check to perpetuate and expand NAFTA into the PTAA, and enhance the power of the WTO, that might make some sense. But the current system is failing miserably. We are not talking about that here on the floor today, are we?

Last year a record $435 billion trade deficit. If current economists say that is unsustainable, 1994 to 2000, accelerated job loss due to trade. The current system discriminates against American labor, reduces living wages, safe working conditions, eviscerates environmental protections and consumer protections. But the gentleman from New York would somehow say it is necessary to compete in the world economy.

President Clinton negotiated 300 separate trade agreements; two under Fast Track Authority, 298 without it. And, unlike my colleague from the other side who preceded me and said he opposed this under the last President but will vote for it now, I am going to vote on policy and principle, not politics and personalities. It was a bad idea for President Clinton; it is a bad idea for George Bush.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the rule and Trade Promotion Authority. I wish that opponents of free trade had as much faith in our workers as our military. As our forces fight and win in Afghanistan, opponents of free trade say Americans cannot win in business. Americans are not losers. We are winners, and we need only a chance to compete in the world economy.

TPA will also lower international import taxes on Americans. As we start holiday shopping, we pay import taxes on backpacks, shoes and other clothes for the kids. TPA lowers these taxes, and, in sum, will put $1,300 in the pockets of American families.

If you like paying import taxes to other countries, vote against free trade. If you think Americans can compete and win, support Trade Promotion Authority for our President.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to my very good friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), the former Secretary of State of the State of Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Florida for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, 2 months ago Republican leadership and the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) promised us if we bailed out the airlines, then they would help unemployed workers. But they never did.

Then Republican leadership and the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) promised us if we passed the stimulus package, the largest in America's history, then they would help unemployed workers. But they never did.

Now the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and Republican leadership are promising us if we vote for Trade Promotion Authority, then they will help unemployed workers.

Mr. Speaker, when will we ever learn?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS).

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule and in support of the underlying bill, but I do so only after a couple of concerns that I have had to trade policy in this country have been addressed. Those two concerns are trade issues dealing with agriculture and trade issues dealing with the textile industry.

American agriculture and the American textile industry have been the whipping boys of previous trade agreements. We have been in difficult times in agriculture all across this country, but I am very satisfied with the language that has been put into this bill respecting agriculture and how our farmers are going to be treated. That language says that the House Committee on Agriculture and the Senate Committee on Agriculture are going to be direct participants in the discussions about issues relating to agriculture with respect to future trade agreements under this Trade Promotion Authority. That is the first step in the right direction that we have seen for American agriculture when it comes to Fast Track authority.

With respect to the textile industry, again, we have seen jobs moved to the south, jobs that cannot be replaced in the American workplace. We have never had the issue of textiles addressed in our trade agreements in a positive manner, but yesterday at a meeting at the White House, the President made a personal commitment that he is going to be sure that the textile industry does get fair treatment in any negotiations on fast track.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN).

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia for his remarks.

With respect to the textile industry, we have seen jobs move south. Jobs that cannot be replaced in the American workplace. We have never had the issue of textiles addressed in our trade agreements. That is all we can ask. If we do not have that, if we do not have that, where is the American textile industry going today? It is going to continue to the south, and we do not need that to happen.

We have had thousands of jobs in my great State lost, particularly in my district, that have been lost over the last 7 to 10 years in the textile industry. We cannot afford any more of that. The way we ensure that does not continue to happen is that we have positive trade agreements and provisions in those trade agreements that are positive with respect to textiles and agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I urge strong support of the rule and I urge support of the underlying bill.

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the rule. Fast Track trade authority affects every single American, and they probably do not even know it. We import millions of tons of food into this country. That is food. In 1999, 8 percent of imported fruits and vegetables were inspected.

Since NAFTA, the number is now .7 percent. That is a 91 percent decrease in the inspections of fruits and vegetables that our children consume every day.

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes it clear that if we pass this Trade Promotion Authority, Congress will not have any say about environmental standards. It gives the President carte blanche to wipe out any environmental standards.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the rule and of this bill.

Just to give my colleagues an idea of how driven and dependent our national economy is on international trade, one need not look any further than my home State of New Jersey. Last year, New Jersey posted the eighth largest export total of any State in the Nation with a total of $22.8 billion being sold in export merchandise. This is up more than 38 percent since 1997. Those exports are shipped globally to 204 countries around the world. Most importantly, out of New Jersey’s 4.1 million workforce, over 600,000 people statewide, from Main Street to Fortune 500 companies, are employed because of exports, imports, and because of foreign direct investment.

Agilent Technologies, a company in my congressional district, recently wrote me in support of Trade Promotion Authority. They said, "Multilateral trade initiatives important to Agilent relating to tariff reductions, e-commerce, biotechnology and international standard-setting are now beginning.’”

Mr. Speaker, we need to participate. We need to support the rule, and we need to support the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise to oppose this rule and to oppose Fast Track. I come from Cleveland, a steel-producing community which is fighting valiantly to save 3,200 steelworkers’ jobs and to protect the benefits of tens of thousands of retirees. But Fast Track is a barrier. Fast Track brought us NAFTA. It prohibits amending trade agreements. We could not amend NAFTA chapter 11, which grants corporate investors in all NAFTA countries the right to challenge any local, State, or Federal regulations which those corporations say hurt their profits; and then they are able to get penalty money from the taxpayers of this country.

The Authority of all governments is at stake. Taxpayer dollars are at stake, even when we stand up for our own rights.

A NAFTA case brought by a foreign-owned fabricated company is trying to overturn “Buy America” laws that require using American steel in highway projects. NAFTA allows foreign-owned companies to challenge our Constitution, our Congress, our right to enact American laws. This would have a catastrophic impact on steel workers, causing loss of U.S. jobs. American taxpayers are financing the fight for democracy all over the world, while our trade laws undermine our democracy here at home.

Vote against this rule and vote against Fast Track. Protect democracy. Protect American jobs.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE).

(Mr. KOLBE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule for Fast Track. The Committee on Ways and Means. That is what the Committee on Rules is all about. They can reject this rule and send us back to the table. They can tell the Committee on Ways and Means to have open negotiations. They can say that the Democratic ideas are just as patriotic, just as sincere, and that we support the war against terrorism the same as Republicans. If they do not do that, if they do not give us an opportunity to be heard. What they are saying is, it is our way or it is the highway.

I do not think it is fair. We have a刺激ulation package that we are working on, and we are trying to give the President what he wants in order to spur the economy. We are not supposed to do it as Republicans and Democrats; we are supposed to come together as a united Congress. They can shatter the wounds of partisanship that have been built up.

Since the attack on the United States, Republicans and Democrats worked together, not as Democrats and Republicans, but as a united Congress. They can reject this rule and take it back to the table. They can reject this rule and send us back to the table. They can reject this rule and send us back to the table. They can tell the Committee on Ways and Means to have open negotiations. They can say that the Democratic ideas are just as patriotic, just as sincere, and that we support the war against terrorism the same as Republicans. If they do not do that, if they do not give us an opportunity to be heard. What they are saying is, it is our way or it is the highway.

I do not think it is fair. We have a stimulation package that we are working on, and we are trying to give the President what he wants in order to spur the economy. We are not supposed to do it as Republicans and Democrats; we are supposed to come together as responsible Members of Congress.

So I ask my colleagues to vote against this rule. It is not well thought out. It should not be just one-sided. Give us an opportunity to work together and to bring a product to our colleagues; and if we cannot do it, then at the very least, let there be an alternative for Members to vote for.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

(Mr. LINDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I have a whole raft of information from my staff talking about the benefits of trade and the economy, on jobs; and I will submit that for the record. But let me just raise a confusing question.

What in the world does this House want to take itself out of the picture?

Absent TPA, we have no voice. The President negotiates with any nation... in the world a trade agreement and brings it to the Senate as a treaty for their approval or disapproval, amendment or no amendment. If it is amended, it goes back to the other nation, and they have to negotiate a second time. Then it comes back to the House and Senate for a up or down vote. If we do not like the agreement, we can vote it down. If we do not like the lack of consultation, defeat it. But at least keep us in the game. Absent TPA, this House is silent. We have no voice.

Under TPA, the President can go to any nation, negotiate any agreement, and bring it back to the House and Senate for an up or down vote. If we do not like the agreement, we can vote it down. If we do not like the lack of consultation, defeat it. But at least keep us in the game. Absent TPA, this House is silent. We have no voice.

Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how we are going to shape any future agreement, have any consultative effect, if the President just chooses to go to treaties and deals with the Senate. We need to be in the global economy, where 95 percent of the citizens of the world live, not here. I cannot understand why some would want to take us out of the picture.

Mr. Speaker, the only voice the House has on any trade agreement is if we pass authority for the President to reach agreements and bring them back to us for up or down votes. I cannot imagine why anyone would oppose this.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

We have not had time to talk about the sovereignty issues, and I hope the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rangel) and his committee can get to that issue because it is critical.

It is clear from this bill, the underlying bill, that foreign investors have an advantage over domestic persons in the United States. And subsidiary consultations are held in secret. As a former judge, I cannot abide that. I must have my colleagues understand that it would be inappropriate to take American property in a secret forum, and that is what this trade bill will do.

In addition, the House of Representatives has a secret record in protecting displaced workers, especially from the textile, agriculture, and auto industries as a result of NAFTA; and that is why I oppose both the rule and the bill.

The House of Representatives has a secret record in protecting displaced workers, especially from the textile, agriculture, and auto industries as a result of NAFTA; and that is why I oppose both the rule and the bill.

What we ask today is nothing new. Bill Clinton in 1994, every President from Richard Nixon through Bill Clinton has enjoyed the right of Trade Promotion Authority. This President deserves that same right.
December 6, 2001

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

I strongly urge my colleagues to do the right thing for America: Support this rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the reso-...
the United States and to enhance the global economy;

(5) to ensure that trade and environmental policies are mutually supportive and to seek to protect and enhance the environment and the international means of doing so, while optimizing the use of the world’s resources; and

(6) to promote respect for worker rights and the rights of children consistent with core labor standards of the International Labor Organization (as defined in section 952(h) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3812(h))) and the elimination of the relationship between trade and worker rights.

(II) ensuring that the provisions of any multilateral or bilateral trade agreement governing intellectual property rights that is entered into by the United States reflect a standard of protection similar to that found in United States law;

(ii) providing strong protection for new and emerging technologies and new methods of transmitting and using products embodying intellectual property;

(iii) preventing or eliminating discrimination with respect to matters affecting the availability of trade-related mechanisms to control the use of their works through the Internet and other global communication media, and to prevent the unauthorized use of their works; and

(iv) providing strong enforcement of intellectual property rights, including through accessible, expeditious, and effective civil, administrative, and criminal enforcement mechanisms;

(B) to secure fair, equitable, and nondiscriminatory market access opportunities for United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection.

(5) TRANSPARENCY.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to transparency is to obtain wider and broader application of the principle of transparency through—

(A) increased and more timely public access to information regarding trade issues and the activities of international trade institutions;

(B) increased openness at the WTO and other international fora by increasing public access to appropriate meetings, proceedings, and submissions, including with regard to dispute settlement and investment;

(C) increased and more timely public access to all notifications and supporting documentation submitted by parties to the WTO;

(D) seeking to improve mechanisms used to resolve disputes; and

(E) seeking to improve mechanisms used to resolve disputes between an investor and a government through—

(i) mechanisms to eliminate frivolous claims;

(ii) procedures to ensure the efficient selection of arbitrators and the expeditious disposition of claims; and

(iii) procedures to increase transparency in investment disputes.

(II) ensuring that any such regulations are the least restrictive on trade that decrease market opportunities for United States exports or unfairly distort United States trade; and

(B) to ensure that—

(i) electronically delivered goods and services receive no less favorable treatment under trade rules and commitments than like products delivered in physical form; and

(ii) the classification of such goods and services ensures the most liberal trade treatment possible;

(C) to ensure that governments refrain from implementing trade-related measures that impede electronic commerce;

(D) where legitimate policy objectives require subject to significantly higher tariffs or subsidy regimes of major producing countries;

(E) extending the moratorium of the World Trade Organization on duties on electronic transmissions.

(9) RECIPROCAL TRADE IN AGRICULTURE.—(A) The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to agriculture is to obtain commitments from other countries regarding the use of government regulation or other practices by foreign governments to provide a competitive advantage to their domestic producers, service providers, or investors and thereby reduce market access for United States goods, services, and investment in the United States.

(B) to ensure that—

(i) unfair or trade-distorting activities of foreign governments directly related to the provisions of any multilateral or bilateral trade agreement governing intellectual property rights that is entered into by the United States reflect a standard of protection similar to that found in United States law;

(ii) providing strong protection for new and emerging technologies and new methods of transmitting and using products embodying intellectual property;

(iii) preventing or eliminating discrimination with respect to matters affecting the availability of trade-related mechanisms to control the use of their works through the Internet and other global communication media, and to prevent the unauthorized use of their works; and

(iv) providing strong enforcement of intellectual property rights, including through accessible, expeditious, and effective civil, administrative, and criminal enforcement mechanisms;

(B) to secure fair, equitable, and nondiscriminatory market access opportunities for United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection.

(5) TRANSPARENCY.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to transparency is to obtain wider and broader application of the principle of transparency through—

(A) increased and more timely public access to information regarding trade issues and the activities of international trade institutions;

(B) increased openness at the WTO and other international fora by increasing public access to appropriate meetings, proceedings, and submissions, including with regard to dispute settlement and investment;

(C) increased and more timely public access to all notifications and supporting documentation submitted by parties to the WTO;

(D) seeking to improve mechanisms used to resolve disputes; and

(E) seeking to improve mechanisms used to resolve disputes between an investor and a government through—

(i) mechanisms to eliminate frivolous claims;

(ii) procedures to ensure the efficient selection of arbitrators and the expeditious disposition of claims; and

(iii) procedures to increase transparency in investment disputes.

(II) ensuring that any such regulations are the least restrictive on trade that decrease market opportunities for United States exports or unfairly distort agricultural markets to the detriment of the United States;

(iv) allowing the preservation of programs that support family farms and rural communities but do not distort trade;

(v) developing disciplines for domestic support programs, so that production that is in excess of domestic food security needs is sold at world prices;

(vi) eliminating Government policies that create price-depressing surpluses;

(vii) eliminating state trading enterprises whenever possible;

(viii) developing, strengthening, and clarifying rules and effective dispute settlement mechanisms to eliminate practices that unfairly decrease United States market access opportunities or distort agricultural markets to the detriment of the United States, particularly with respect to import-sensitive products, including—

(I) unfair or trade-distorting activities of state trading enterprises and other administrative mechanisms to limit market access for United States goods and services;

(II) ensuring that any such regulations are the least restrictive on trade that decrease market opportunities for United States exports or unfairly distort United States trade; and

(C) to ensure that governments refrain from implementing trade-related measures that impede electronic commerce;

(D) where legitimate policy objectives require subject to significantly higher tariffs or subsidy regimes of major producing countries;

(E) extending the moratorium of the World Trade Organization on duties on electronic transmissions.

(9) RECIPROCAL TRADE IN AGRICULTURE.—(A) The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to agriculture is to obtain commitments from other countries regarding the use of government regulation or other practices by foreign governments to provide a competitive advantage to their domestic producers, service providers, or investors and thereby reduce market access for United States goods, services, and investment in the United States.

(B) to ensure that—

(i) unfair or trade-distorting activities of foreign governments directly related to the provisions of any multilateral or bilateral trade agreement governing intellectual property rights that is entered into by the United States reflect a standard of protection similar to that found in United States law;

(ii) providing strong protection for new and emerging technologies and new methods of transmitting and using products embodying intellectual property;

(iii) preventing or eliminating discrimination with respect to matters affecting the availability of trade-related mechanisms to control the use of their works through the Internet and other global communication media, and to prevent the unauthorized use of their works; and

(iv) providing strong enforcement of intellectual property rights, including through accessible, expeditious, and effective civil, administrative, and criminal enforcement mechanisms;

(B) to secure fair, equitable, and nondiscriminatory market access opportunities for United States persons that rely upon intellectual property protection.

(5) TRANSPARENCY.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to transparency is to obtain wider and broader application of the principle of transparency through—

(A) increased and more timely public access to information regarding trade issues and the activities of international trade institutions;

(B) increased openness at the WTO and other international fora by increasing public access to appropriate meetings, proceedings, and submissions, including with regard to dispute settlement and investment;

(C) increased and more timely public access to all notifications and supporting documentation submitted by parties to the WTO;

(D) seeking to improve mechanisms used to resolve disputes; and

(E) seeking to improve mechanisms used to resolve disputes between an investor and a government through—

(i) mechanisms to eliminate frivolous claims;

(ii) procedures to ensure the efficient selection of arbitrators and the expeditious disposition of claims; and

(iii) procedures to increase transparency in investment disputes.
mechanisms in order to end cross subsidization, price discrimination, and price undercutting; (II) unjustified trade restrictions or commercial practices by which the United States is already a party, including those not based on sound scientific principles in contravention of the Uruguay Round Agreements; (III) unjustified sanitary or phytosanitary restrictions, including those not based on sound scientific principles in contravention of the Uruguay Round Agreements; (IV) other unjustified technical barriers to trade; (V) restrictive rules in the administration of tariff rate quotas; (ix) eliminating practices that adversely affect, or are likely to adversely affect, the production of perishable or cyclical products, while improving import relief mechanisms to recognize the unique characteristics of perishable and cyclical agriculture; (x) ensuring that the use of import relief mechanisms for perishable and cyclical agriculture are as accessible and timely to growers in the United States as those mechanisms that are used by other countries; (xi) taking into account whether a party to the negotiations has failed to adhere to the provisions of already existing trade agreements with the United States or has circumvented obligations under those agreements; (xii) taking into account whether a product is imported in sufficient quantities or in a sufficient manner to cause injury or threat of injury to an industry or a significant portion of an industry; (xiii) otherwise ensuring that countries that accede to the World Trade Organization have made meaningful market liberalization commitments and are maintaining such commitments; (xiv) taking into account the impact that agreements covering agriculture to which the United States is a party have in effect on the North American Free Trade Agreement, have on the United States agricultural industry; and (xv) maintaining bona fide food assistance programs and preserving United States market development and export credit programs.

(B)(i) Before commencing negotiations with agricultural matters, the United States Trade Representative, in consultation with the Congress, shall seek to develop a position on the treatment of seasonal and perishable products to be employed in the negotiations in order to develop an international consensus on the treatment of seasonal or perishable agricultural products in investigations relating to dumping and safeguards and in any other relevant area.

(ii) During any negotiations on agricultural matters, the United States Trade Representative shall seek to establish the common base year for calculating the Agreed Measurement of Support (as defined in the Agreement on Agriculture) as the end of each country’s Uruguay Round implementation period, as reported in each country’s Uruguay Round market access schedule.

(iii) The negotiating objective provided in subparagraph (A) applies with respect to agricultural matters to be addressed in any trade agreement entered into under section 3(a) of this Act, that the trade agreement entered into under section 3(a) or (b) that provides for accession to a trade agreement by which the United States is already a party, such as the American Free Trade Agreement and the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

(B) LABOR AND THE ENVIRONMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to labor and the environment are—

(A) to ensure that a party to a trade agreement with the United States does not fail to effectively enforce its labor or environmental laws, through a sustained or recurring course of action or inaction, in a manner affecting trade between the United States and that party after entry into force of a trade agreement between those countries; (B) to require that a trade agreement retain the right to exercise discretion with respect to investigatory, prosecutorial, regulatory, and compliance matters; (C) to ensure that countries do not arbitrarily or unjustifiably discriminate against United States exports or services; (D) to require that a country is effectively enforcing its labor laws if a course of action or inaction reflects a reasonable exercise of due diligence, or results from a bona fide decision regarding the allocation of resources; (E) to strengthen the capacity of United States trading partners to promote respect for core labor standards (as defined in section 92); (D) to strengthen the capacity of United States trading partners to protect the environment and to promote sustainable development; (E) to reduce or eliminate government practices or policies that unduly threaten sustainable development; (F) to seek market access, through the elimination of tariffs and nontariff barriers, for United States environmental technologies, goods, and services; (G) to ensure that labor, environmental, health, or safety policies and practices of the parties to trade agreements with the United States do not arbitrarily or unjustifiably discriminate against United States exports or serve as disguised barriers to trade.

(C) DISPUTE SETTLEMENT AND ENFORCEMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to dispute settlement and enforcement of trade agreements are—

(A) to seek provisions in trade agreements providing for resolution of disputes between governments under those trade agreements in an effective, timely, transparent, equitable, and reasoned manner, requiring determinations based on facts and the principles of the agreements, with the goal of increasing compliance with the agreements; (B) to seek to strengthen the capacity of the Trade Policy Review Mechanism of the World Trade Organization to review compliance with commitments; (C) to seek provisions encouraging the early identification and settlement of disputes through consultation; (D) to seek provisions to encourage the provision of trade-expanding compensation if a party to a dispute under the agreement does not come into compliance with its obligations under the agreement; (E) to seek provisions to impose a penalty upon a party to a dispute under the agreement that does not come into compliance with its obligations under the agreement; (F) to seek provisions that treat United States principal negotiating objectives equally with respect to the enforcement of the enforcement mechanism; and (G) to seek provisions that treat United States principal negotiating objectives equally with respect to enforcement.

(D) WTO EXTENDED NEGOTIATIONS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding trade in civil aircraft are those set forth in section 133(c) of the Uruguay Round Agreement Act (19 U.S.C. 3353(c)) and regarding rules of origin are the conclusion of an agreement described in section 132 of that Act (19 U.S.C. 3352).

(c) PROMOTION OF CERTAIN PRIORITIES.—In order to address and maintain United States competitiveness in the global economy, the President shall—

(1) seek greater cooperation between the WTO and the ILO; (2) seek to establish consultative mechanisms among parties to trade agreements to strengthen the capacity of United States trading partners to promote respect for core labor standards; (3) seek to establish consultative mechanisms among parties to trade agreements to strengthen the capacity of United States trading partners to develop and implement standards for the protection of the environment and human health based on sound science and report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the content and operation of such mechanisms; (4) conduct environmental reviews of future trade and investment agreements, consistent with Executive Order 13141 of November 16, 1999 and its relevant guidelines, and report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on such reviews; (5) review the impact of future trade agreements on United States employment, modeled after Executive Order 13141, and report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on such reviews; (6) take into account other legitimate United States domestic objectives including, but not limited to, the protection of legitimate health or safety, essential security, or environmental interests and the law and regulations related thereto; (7) have the Secretary of Labor consult with any country seeking a trade agreement with the United States about whether that country’s labor laws and provide technical assistance to that country if needed; (8) with respect to any trade agreement with United States under trade agreements, submit to the Congress a report describing the extent to which the country or countries that are parties to the agreement have effect laws governing exploitative child labor; (9) preserve the ability of the United States to enforce rigorously its trade laws, including the antidumping and countervailing duty laws, and avoid agreements which lessen the effectiveness of domestic and international disciplines on unfair trade, especially dumping and subsidies, in order to ensure that United States workers, agricultural producers, and firms can compete fairly on fair terms and enjoy the benefits of reciprocal trade; (10) continue to promote consideration of multilateral environmental agreements and consult with parties to such agreements regarding the consistency of such agreements with the Uruguay Round Agreement Act of 1994 and report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, not later than 12 months after the imposition of a penalty or remedy by the United States permitted by a trade agreement to which this Act applies, on the effectiveness of the penalty or remedy as applied under United States law in enforcing United States rights under the trade agreement.

The report under paragraph (1) shall address whether the penalty or remedy was effective in changing the behavior of the targeted party and whether the penalty or remedy had any adverse impact on parties or interests not intended to be affected.

(4) Consultations.—

(a) With congressional committees.—In the course of negotiations conducted under this Act, the United States Trade Representative shall consult closely and on a timely basis with, and keep fully apprised of the negotiations, the Congressional Oversight Group convened under section 7 and all committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate with jurisdiction over laws that would be affected by a trade agreement resulting from the negotiations.

(b) Before agreement initiated.—In the course of negotiations conducted under this Act, the United States Trade Representative shall—

(i) consult closely and on a timely basis (including immediately before initiating an agreement) with, and keep fully apprised of, the negotiations, the congressional advisors for trade policy and negotiations appointed under section 161 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2121) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and the Congressional Oversight Group convened under section 7; and

(ii) with regard to any negotiations and agreement relating to agricultural trade, also consult on a timely basis (including immediately before initiating an agreement) with, and keep fully apprised of, the negotiations, the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate.

(c) Adherence to obligations under Uruguay Round agreements.—In determining whether to enter into negotiations with a particular country, the President shall take into account the extent to which that country has adhered or failed to adhere to its obligations under the Uruguay Round Agreements.

SEC. 3. TRADE AGREEMENTS AUTHORITY.

(a) Agreements regarding tariff barriers.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Whenever the President determines that one or more existing duties or other import restrictions of any foreign country or the United States are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act will be promoted thereby, the President may enter into a trade agreement described in subparagraph (B) during the period described in subparagraph (A). The President may enter into a trade agreement under this paragraph before—

(i) June 1, 2005; or

(ii) June 1, 2007, if trade authorities procedures are extended under subsection (c).

(b) Conditions.—A trade agreement may be entered into under this subsection only if such agreement makes progress in meeting the applicable objectives described in section 7 and the President satisfies the conditions set forth in section 4.

(c) Bills qualifying for trade authorities procedures.—(A) The provisions of sections—

(i) 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (in this Act referred to as “trade authorities procedures”)— apply to a bill of either House of Congress which contains provisions described in subparagraph (B) of section 7; and

(ii) 151 applies to implementing bills under that section. A bill to which this paragraph applies shall hereafter in this Act be referred to as an “implementing bill”.

(B) The provisions referred to in subparagraph (A) are—

(1) provisions approving a trade agreement entered into under this subsection and approving the statement of administrative action, if any, proposed to implement such trade agreement; and

(2) if changes in existing laws or new statutory authority are required to implement such trade agreement or agreements, provisions, necessary or appropriate to implement such trade agreement or agreements, other repealing or amending existing laws or providing new statutory authority.

(d) Administrative process for congressional trade authorities procedures.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in section 5(b)—

(A) the trade authorities procedures apply to implementing bills submitted with respect to trade agreements entered into under subsection (b) after July 1, 2005; and

(B) the trade authorities procedures shall be extended to implementing bills submitted with respect to trade agreements entered into under subsection (b) after June 30, 2005, and before July 1, 2007, if (and only if)—

(i) the President requests such extension under paragraph (2); and

(ii) neither House of the Congress adopts an extension disapproval resolution under paragraph (5) before June 1, 2005.

(2) REPORT TO CONGRESS BY THE PRESIDENT.—If the President is of the opinion that the trade authorities procedures should be extended to implementing bills described in paragraph (1)(B), the President shall submit a written report that contains a request for extension, submitted to the Congress, not later than March 1, 2005.

(ii) A description of the progress that has been made in negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act, and a statement that such progress justifies the continuation of negotiations; and
(C) the President of the reasons why the extension is needed to complete the negotiations.
(3) Report to Congress by the Advisory Committee—The President shall promptly inform the Advisory Committee for Trade Policy and Negotiations established under section 135 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2155) of any decision to submit a report to the Congress under paragraph (2). The Advisory Committee shall submit to the Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the President, a written report that contains—
(A) its views regarding the progress that has been made in negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act; and
(B) a statement of its views, and the reasons therefor, regarding whether the extension requested under paragraph (2) should be approved or disapproved.
(4) Status of Reports.—The reports submitted to the Congress under paragraphs (2) and (3), or any portion of such reports, may be classified to the extent the President determines appropriate.
(5) Extension Disapproval Resolutions.—(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term “extension disapproval resolution” means a resolution of either House of the Congress, the sole purpose of which is to disapprove an extension of the provisions of section 215(d) of the Trade Act of 1974, of the trade authorities procedures under that Act to any implementing bill submitted with respect to any trade agreement entered into under that Act after June 30, 2005., with the blank space being filled with the name of the resolving House of the Congress.
(B) Extension disapproval resolutions—(i) may be introduced in either House of the Congress by any member of such House; and
(ii) shall be referred, in the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Ways and Means and, in addition, to the Committee on Rules;
(C) the provisions of sections 152(d) and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(d) and (e)) (relating to the floor consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to extension disapproval resolutions.
(D) It is not in order for—
(i) the Senate to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Finance;
(ii) the House of Representatives to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Ways and Means; and, in addition, by the Committee on Rules;
(iii) either House of the Congress to consider an extension disapproval resolution after June 30, 2005.
(E) Commencement of Negotiations.—In order to contribute to the continued economic benefits to the United States, the President shall commence negotiations covering tariff and nontariff barriers affecting any industry, product, or service sector, and expand existing agreements to countries that are not parties to those agreements, in cases where the President determines that such negotiations are feasible and timely and would benefit the United States. Such sectors include agriculture, commercial services, intellectual property rights, government procurement, information technology products, environmental technology and services, medical equipment and services, civil aircraft, and infrastructure products. In so doing, the President shall take into account all of the principal negotiating objectives set forth in section 215(c)(3) of the Trade Act of 1974.
SEC. 4. Consultations and Assessment.
(a) Notice and Consultation Before Negotiation.—The President, with respect to any agreement that is subject to the provisions of section 215(d), shall—
(1) provide, at least 90 calendar days before initiating negotiations, written notice to the Congress of the President’s intention to enter into any such agreement at any time after the date that the President intends to initiate such negotiations, the specific United States objectives for the negotiations, and whether the President seeks an agreement, or changes to an existing agreement; and
(2) before and after submission of the notice, consult regarding the negotiations with the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, such other committees of the House and Senate as the President deems appropriate, and the Congressional Oversight Group convened under section 7.
(b) Negotiations Regarding Agriculture.—Before initiating or continuing negotiations the subject matter of which is directly related to matters under section 2(b)(9)(A)(i) with any country, the President shall—
(A) the nature of the agreement;
(B) how and to what extent the agreement will advance any such disparity with respect to the final legal text of the agreement, to the extent the President determines appropriate, and the Congressional Oversight Group convened under section 7.
(C) the implementation of the agreement under section 7.
(D) Advisory Committee Reports.—The report required under section 135(e)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 to the Congress on the trade agreement entered into under section 3(a) or (b) of this Act shall be provided to the President, the Congress, and the United States Trade Representative not later than 30 days after the date on which the President notifies the Congress under section 3(a)(1) or 3(a)(1)(A) of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement.
(e) ITC Assessment.—(1) In General.—The President, at least 90 calendar days after the day on which the President enters into a trade agreement under section 3(b), shall provide the International Trade Commission (referred to in this subsection as “the Commission”) with a statement that the agreement as it exists at that time and request the Commission to prepare and submit an assessment of the agreement as described in paragraph (2). Between the time the President makes the request under this paragraph and the time the Commission submits the assessment, the President shall keep the Commission current with respect to the details of the agreement.
(2) ITC Assessment.—Not later than 90 calendar days after the President enters into the agreement, the Commission shall submit to the President and the Congress a report assessing the likely impact of the agreement on the United States economy as a whole and any specific industry sectors, including the impact the agreement will have on the gross domestic product, exports and imports, aggregate employment and employment opportunities, the production, employment, and competitive position of industries likely to be significantly affected by the agreement, and the interests of United States consumers.
(3) Review of Empirical Literature.—In preparing the assessment, the Commission shall review available economic assessments regarding the agreement, including literature regarding any substantially equivalent proposed agreement, and shall provide in its assessment a description of the analytical methods and concepts drawn from such literature, and a discussion of areas of consensus and divergence between the various analyses and conclusions, including those of the Commission regarding the agreement.
SEC. 5. Implementation of Trade Agreements.
(a) In General.—
(1) Notification and Submission.—Any agreement entered into under section 3(b) shall enter into force with respect to the United States if (and only if)—
(A) the President submits to the Congress a copy of the final legal text of the agreement, together with—
(i) a draft of an implementing bill describing objectives, purposes, policies, priorities, and strategies used and conclusions drawn in such legislation; and
(ii) a statement of any administrative action proposed to implement the trade agreement; and
(B) the President submits to the Congress a copy of the final legal text of the agreement, together with—
(2) Scope.—The consultation described in paragraph (1) shall include consultation with respect to—
(A) the nature of the agreement;
(B) how and to what extent the agreement will advance any such disparity with respect to the final legal text of the agreement, to the extent the President determines appropriate, and the Congressional Oversight Group convened under section 7.
(C) the implementation of the agreement under section 7.
(D) Advisory Committee Reports.—The report required under section 135(e)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 to the Congress on the trade agreement entered into under section 3(a) or (b) of this Act shall be provided to the President, the Congress, and the United States Trade Representative not later than 30 days after the date on which the President notifies the Congress under section 3(a)(1) or 3(a)(1)(A) of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement.
(e) ITC Assessment.—(1) In General.—The President, at least 90 calendar days after the day on which the President enters into a trade agreement under section 3(b), shall provide the International Trade Commission (referred to in this subsection as “the Commission”) with a statement that the agreement as it exists at that time and request the Commission to prepare and submit an assessment of the agreement as described in paragraph (2). Between the time the President makes the request under this paragraph and the time the Commission submits the assessment, the President shall keep the Commission current with respect to the details of the agreement.
(2) ITC Assessment.—Not later than 90 calendar days after the President enters into the agreement, the Commission shall submit to the President and the Congress a report assessing the likely impact of the agreement on the United States economy as a whole and any specific industry sectors, including the impact the agreement will have on the gross domestic product, exports and imports, aggregate employment and employment opportunities, the production, employment, and competitive position of industries likely to be significantly affected by the agreement, and the interests of United States consumers.
(3) Review of Empirical Literature.—In preparing the assessment, the Commission shall review available economic assessments regarding the agreement, including literature regarding any substantially equivalent proposed agreement, and shall provide in its assessment a description of the analytical methods and concepts drawn from such literature, and a discussion of areas of consensus and divergence between the various analyses and conclusions, including those of the Commission regarding the agreement.
(A) an explanation as to how the implementing bill and proposed administrative action will change or affect existing law; and

(B) a statement—

(1) For what purpose that the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act; and

(II) whether and how the agreement changes provisions of an agreement previously entered into by the United States; and

(III) how the agreement serves the interests of United States commerce;

(IV) how the implementing bill meets the standards set forth in section 3(b)(3); and

(V) how and to what extent the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in section 2(c) regarding the promotion of certain priorities.

(3) RECIPROCAL BENEFITS.—In order to ensure that a foreign country that is not a party to a trade agreement entered into under this Act; and

(1) is entered into under the auspices of the World Trade Organization,

(2) is entered into with Chile,

(3) is entered into with Singapore, or

(4) establishes a Free Trade Area for the Americas, results from negotiations that were commenced before the date of the enactment of this Act, subsection (b) shall apply.

(b) TREATMENT OF AGREEMENTS.—In the case of any agreement to which subsection (a) applies—

(1) the applicability of the trade authorities procedures to implementing bills shall be determined without regard to the requirements of this subsection; and

(2) the President shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this Act—

(a) notify the Congress of the negotiations described in subsection (a), the specific United States objectives in the negotiations, and whether the President is seeking a new agreement or changes to an existing agreement; and

(b) before and after submission of the notice, consult regarding the negotiations with the Committee referred to in section 4(a); and

(3) the Senate shall be original jurisdiction over provisions of law affected by a trade agreement negotiations for which are conducted at any time during that Congress and to which this Act would apply.

(4) ACCREDITATION.—Each member of the Congressional Oversight Group described in paragraph (1) shall be accredited by the United States Trade Representative on behalf of the President as official advisers to the United States delegation in negotiations for any trade agreement to which this Act applies. Each member of the Congressional Oversight Group described in paragraph (2)(B) and (3)(B) shall be accredited by the United States Trade Representative on behalf of the President as official advisers to the United States delegation in the negotiations by reason of which the member is in the Congressional Oversight Group. The Congressional Oversight Group shall consult with and provide advice to the Trade Representative regarding the formulation of specific objectives, negotiating strategies and positions, the development of the applicable trade agreement, and compliance and enforcement of the negotiated commitments under the agreement.

(5) CHAIR.—The Congressional Oversight Group shall be chaired by the Chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

(b) GUIDELINES.—

(1) PURPOSE AND REVISION.—The United States Trade Representative shall be in consultation with the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate—

(A) shall, within 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, develop written guidelines to facilitate the useful and timely exchange of information between the Trade Representative and the Congressional Oversight Group established under this section; and

(B) may make such revisions to the guidelines as may be necessary from time to time.

(2) CONTENT.—The guidelines developed under paragraph (1) shall provide for, among other things—

(A) regular, detailed briefings of the Congressional Oversight Group regarding negotiating objectives, including the promotion of certain priorities referred to in section 2(c), and positions and the status of the applicable negotiations, beginning as soon as practicable after the Congressional Oversight Group was convened, with subsequent briefings as trade negotiations enter the final stage;
SEC. 8. ADDITIONAL IMPLEMENTATION AND ENFORCEMENT REQUIREMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—At the time the President submits to the Congress the final text of an agreement pursuant to section 9(a)(1)(C), the President shall also submit a plan for implementing and enforcing the agreement. The implementation and enforcement plan shall include the following:

(1) BORDER PERSONNEL REQUIREMENTS.—A description of additional personnel required at border entry points, including a list of additional customs and agricultural inspectors.

(2) AGENCY STAFFING REQUIREMENTS.—A description of additional personnel required by Federal agencies responsible for monitoring and implementing the trade agreement, including personnel required by the Office of the United States Trade Representative, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture (including additional personnel required to implement sanitary and phytosanitary measures in order to obtain market access for United States exports), the Department of the Treasury, and such other agencies as may be necessary.

(3) CUSTOMS INFRASTRUCTURE REQUIREMENTS.—An assessment of the additional equipment and facilities needed by the United States Customs Service.

(4) IMPACT ON STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—A description of the impact the trade agreement will have on State and local governments as a result of increases in trade.

(5) COST ANALYSIS.—An analysis of the costs associated with each of the items listed in paragraphs (1) through (4).

(b) BUDGET SUBMISSION.—The President shall request, for the resources necessary to support the plan described in subsection (a) in the first budget that the President submits to the Congress after the submission of the plan.

SEC. 9. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) AGREEMENT ON AGRICULTURE.—The term “Agreement on Agriculture” means the agreement referred to in section 101(d)(2) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3511(d)(2)).

(2) CORE LABOR STANDARDS.—The term “core labor standards” means—

(A) the right to organize and bargain collectively;

(B) a prohibition on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor;

(D) a minimum age for the employment of children; and

(E) acceptable conditions of work with respect to wages, hours of work, and occupational safety and health.

(3) GATT 1994.—The term “GATT 1994” has the meaning given that term in section 2 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3601).

(4) ILO.—The term “ILO” means the International Labor Organization.

(5) INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION.—The term “United States person” means—

(A) a United States citizen;
(ii) ensuring that—
(I) all proceedings, submissions, findings, and decisions are promptly made public;
(II) all hearings are open to the public; and
(III) there is a mechanism for access to testimony of any witnesses with knowledge of any issue on which this panel is to report.

4. INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade-related intellectual property rights are—
(A) to provide for effective protection of intellectual property; and
(B) to extend to the United States the benefits of comprehensive and effective intellectual property rights protection.

5. CHEMICALS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to chemicals are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Chemicals commit to a high level of protection for human health and the environment; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address chemicals is based on science and recognized internationally.

6. FOODS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to foods are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Foods commit to a high level of protection for human health and the environment; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address foods is based on science and recognized internationally.

7. FINANCIAL SERVICES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to financial services are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Financial Services commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address financial services is based on science and recognized internationally.

8. AIRCRAFT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to aircraft are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Aircraft commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address aircraft is based on science and recognized internationally.

9. SERVICES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to services are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Services commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address services is based on science and recognized internationally.

10. Automotive.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to automotive are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Automotive commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address automotive is based on science and recognized internationally.

11. Other.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to other issues are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Other commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address other issues is based on science and recognized internationally.

12. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to textile products are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Textiles commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address textile products is based on science and recognized internationally.

13. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to pharmaceutical products are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Pharmaceutical Products commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address pharmaceutical products is based on science and recognized internationally.

14. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to biotechnology are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Biotechnology commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address biotechnology is based on science and recognized internationally.

15. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to medical equipment are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Medical Equipment commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address medical equipment is based on science and recognized internationally.

16. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to agricultural products are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Agricultural Products commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address agricultural products is based on science and recognized internationally.

17. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to textile raw materials are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Textile Raw Materials commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address textile raw materials is based on science and recognized internationally.

18. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to machinery are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Machinery commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address machinery is based on science and recognized internationally.

19. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to telecommunications are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Telecommunications commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address telecommunications is based on science and recognized internationally.

20. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to tourism are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Tourism commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address tourism is based on science and recognized internationally.

21. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to financial services are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Financial Services commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address financial services is based on science and recognized internationally.

22. The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to telecommunications are—
(A) to ensure that all countries participating in the Uruguay Round Agreement on Telecommunications commit to a high level of protection for consumers; and
(B) to ensure that any international mechanism established to address telecommunications is based on science and recognized internationally.
(iii) The negotiating objective provided in subparagraph (A) applies with respect to agricultural matters, if a trade agreement entered into under section 3(a) or (b), including any trade agreement entered into under that section, is not a bilateral agreement to a trade agreement to which the United States is already a party, such as the North American Free Trade Agreement and the United States-Japan Free Trade Agreement.

(II) LABOR AND THE ENVIRONMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to labor and the environment are (A) to seek to establish consultative mechanisms among parties to trade agreements to strengthen the capacity of United States trading partners to develop and implement standards for the protection of the environment and the health and safety of the United States and the ILO; and (B) to seek to strengthen the capacity of United States trading partners to promote respect for core labor standards (as defined in section 112(2)).

(III) ADHERENCE TO OBLIGATIONS UNDER URUguay ROUND AGREEMENTS.—In determining whether to enter into negotiations with a particular country, the President shall take into account the extent to which the country has, or is expected to have, implemented, or accelerated the implementation of, its obligations under the Uruguay Round Agreements.

SEC. 2. TRADE AGREEMENTS AUTHORITY.

(a) AGREEMENTS REGARDING TARIFF BARRIERS.—(1) IN GENERAL. Whenever the President determines that one or more existing duties or other import restrictions of any foreign country or the United States are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States, the President may enter into a trade agreement with any country with which the purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act will be promoted thereby, the President—

(1) may enter into trade agreements with foreign countries before—

(i) June 1, 2005; or

(ii) June 1, 2007, if trade authorities procedures are extended under subsection (c); and

(b) may, subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), proclaim—
(i) such modification or continuance of any existing duty,
(ii) such continuance of existing duty-free or excise treatment, or
(iii) the additional duties, as the President determines to be required or appropriate to carry out any such trade agreement.

The President shall notify the Congress of the President’s intention to enter into an agreement under this subsection.

This Act—No proclamation may be made under paragraph (1) that—
(A) reduces any rate of duty (other than a rate of duty that does not exceed 5 percent ad valorem) (the enactment that makes this Act) to a rate of duty which is less than 50 percent of the rate of such duty that applies on such date of enactment;
(B) reduces the rate of duty below that applicable under the Uruguay Round Agreements, on any agricultural product which was the subject of tariff reductions by the United States as a result of the Uruguay Round Agreements, for which the rate of duty, pursuant to such Agreements, was reduced on January 1, 1995, to a rate which was not less than the rate of duty that applied to such article on December 31, 1994; or
(C) increases any rate of duty above the rate that applied on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) AGGREGATE REDUCTION; EXEMPTION FROM STAGING.

(A) AGGREGATE REDUCTION.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the aggregate reduction in the rate of duty on any article which is in effect on any day pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under paragraph (1) shall not exceed the aggregate reduction which would have been in effect on such day if—
(i) a provision addressed at a rate or a reduction of one-tenth of the total reduction, whichever is greater, had taken effect on the effective date of the first reduction proclaimed under paragraph (1) to carry out such agreement with respect to such article; and
(ii) a reduction equal to the amount applicable under clause (i) had taken effect at 1-year intervals after the effective date of such first reduction.

(B) EXEMPTION FROM STAGING.—No staging is required under subparagraph (A) with respect to a trade agreement entered into under paragraph (1) for an article of a kind that is not produced in the United States or is not produced in the United States in any quantity sufficient to meet domestic requirements.

(4) Rounding.—If the President determines that such action will simplify the computation of reductions under paragraph (3), the President may round an annual reduction by an amount equal to the lesser of—
(A) the difference between the reduction without regard to this paragraph and the next lower whole number; or
(B) one-half of 1 percent ad valorem.

(5) OTHER TARIFF MODIFICATIONS.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1)(B), (2)(A), (2)(C), and (3) through (5), and subject to the consultation and layover requirements of section 115 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act, the President may proclaim the modification of any duty or staging with respect to the implementation of any duty under Schedule XX, as defined in section 2(5) of that Act, if the United States agrees to such modification or staged rate reduction in a negotiation for the elimination or harmonization of duties under the auspices of the World Trade Organization.

(7) AUTHORITY UNDER URUGUAY ROUND AGREEMENTS ACT NOT AFFECTED.—Nothing in this subsection shall limit the authority provided to the President under section 111(b) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (33 U.S.C. 3321(b)).

(b) AGREEMENTS REGARDING TARIFF AND NON-TARIFF BARRIERS.

(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Whenever the President determines that—
(i) no existing or contemplated such agreements to the Congress for approval;
(B) a description of the progress that has been made in negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act, and a statement that such progress justifies the continuation of negotiations; and
(C) a statement of the reasons why the extension is needed to complete the negotiations.

(3) REPORT TO CONGRESS BY THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The President shall promptly inform the Committee on Ways and Means of the completion of negotiations and establishment of agreements established under this subsection.

(4) STATUS OF REPORTS.—The reports submitted to the Congress under paragraphs (2) and (3), or any portion of such reports, may be classified to the extent the President determines appropriate.

(5) EXTENSION DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTIONS.—(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘‘extension disapproval resolutions’’ means any resolution of either House of Congress disapproving the extension of any trade agreement or agreement, either repealing or modifying provisions, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act;

(b) Extension disapproval resolutions—
(i) may be introduced in either House of Congress by any member of such House; and
(ii) shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and, in addition, to the Committee on Finance;

(c) The provisions of section 152(d) and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(d) and (e)) (relating to the floor consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to extension disapproval resolutions.

(d) It is not in order for—
(i) the Senate to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Finance;
(ii) the House of Representatives to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and, in addition, to the Committee on Rules; or
(iii) either House of Congress to consider an extension disapproval resolution after June 30, 2005.

(6) COMMENCEMENT OF NEGOTIATIONS.—In order to contribute to the continued economic expansion of the United States, the President shall promptly negotiate agreements, either repealing or modifying tariffs and nontariff barriers affecting any industry, product, or service sector, and expand existing sectoral agreements to countries that are not parties to the agreements established under this Act, the President determines that such negotiations are feasible and timely and would benefit the United States. Such sectors include agriculture, commercial services, intellectual property rights, industrial and capital goods, government procurement, information technology products, environmental goods and services, aircraft, space equipment and services, civil aircraft, and infrastructure products. In so doing, the President shall take into account all of the principal negotiating objectives set forth in section 2(b).

SEC. 4. CONSULTATIONS AND ASSESSMENT.

(a) Notice and Consultation Before Negotiation—Before entering into any negotiations, or within 90 calendar days after the President enters into the trade agreement, the President shall consult with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance of the Senate concerning the results of the assessment, whether it is appropriate for the United States to agree to the changes in the trade agreement, and the reasons for seeking such tariff liberalization.

(b) Consultation Before Initiating or Continuing Negotiations—(1) the United States Trade Representative identifies any additional agricultural product subject to tariff reductions which were not the subject of a notification under subparagraph (A)(iv), or an additional agricultural product described in subparagraph (A)(iv) is the subject of a request for tariff reductions by a party to the negotiations, the Trade Representative shall, as soon as practicable, notify the committees referred to in subparagraph (A)(iv) of those products and the reasons for seeking such tariff reductions.

(c) Negotiations Regarding Agriculture.—Before initiating or continuing negotiations, the subject matter of which is directly related to the subject matter under section 2(b)(10)(A)(i) with any country, the President shall assess whether United States tariffs on agricultural products that were bound under the Uruguay Round Agreements are lower than the tariffs bound by that country. In consultation with the Congress, the President shall consider whether the tariff levels bound and applied throughout the world with respect to imports from the United States are higher than United States tariffs and whether the negotiation provides an opportunity to address any such disparity. The President shall consult with the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate concerning the results of the assessment, whether it is appropriate for the United States to agree to further tariff reductions based on the conclusions reached in the assessment, and how all applicable negotiating objectives will be met.

(d) Consultation With Congress Before Agreements Entered Into.—(1) Consultation.—Before entering into any trade agreement under section 3(b), the President shall consult with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and each joint committee of the Congress, which has jurisdiction over legislation in any manner affecting the terms of the agreement.

(2) Scope.—The consultation described in paragraph (1) shall include a statement of any administrative action proposed to implement the trade agreement; and the congressional oversight or any other necessary legislation that the President considers would be required in order to bring the United States into compliance with the agreement.

SEC. 5. IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS.

(a) In General.—(1) Notification and Submission.—Any agreement entered into under section 3(b) shall enter into force with respect to the United States if (and only if) —

(A) the President, at least 90 calendar days before the day on which the President enters into the trade agreement, notifies the House of Representatives and the Senate of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement, and promptly thereafter publishes notice of such intention in the Federal Register;

(B) the President, at least 90 calendar days after the President enters into the agreement, notifies the House of Representatives and the Senate of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement, and promptly thereafter publishes notice of such intention in the Federal Register;

(C) the President, at least 90 calendar days after the President enters into the agreement, submits to the Congress, on a day on which both Houses of Congress are in session, a copy of the final legal text of the agreement, together with —

(i) a draft of an implementing bill described in section 3(b)(3);

(ii) a statement of any administrative action proposed to implement the trade agreement; and

(iii) the supporting information described in paragraph (2); and

(D) the implementing bill is enacted into law.

(ii) the supporting information described in paragraph (2); and

(D) the implementing bill is enacted into law.

(b) Supporting Information.—The supporting information required under paragraph (1)(C)(i) consists of—

(A) an explanation as to how the implementing bill and proposed administrative action will change or affect existing law; and

(B) a statement that—

(i) asserting that the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act; and

(ii) setting forth the reasons of the President regarding—

(1) in General.—The President, at least 90 calendar days before the day on which the President enters into a trade agreement under section 3(b), shall notify the United States Trade Representative (referred to in this subsection as “the Commission”) with the details of the agreement as it exists at that time and request the Commission to submit an assessment of the agreement as described in paragraph (2). Between the time the President makes the request under this paragraph and the time the Commission submits the assessment, the President shall keep the Commission current with respect to the details of the agreement.

(2) ITC Assessment.—(A) within 90 calendar days after the President enters into the agreement, the Commission shall submit to the President and the Congress a report assessing the likely impact of the agreement on the United States economy as a whole and on specific industry sectors, including the impact the agreement will have on the gross domestic product, exports and imports, aggregate employment and employment opportunities, the production, employment, and competitive position of industries likely to be significantly affected by the agreement, and the interests of United States consumers.

(3) Review of Empirical Literature.—In preparing the assessment, the Commission shall consider available economic literature regarding the agreement, including literature regarding any substantially equivalent proposed agreement, and shall provide in its assessment a description of the conclusions drawn in such literature, and a discussion of areas of consensus and divergence between the various analyses and conclusions, including those of the Commission regarding the agreement.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE

December 6, 2001

H8992

(I) how and to what extent the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in clause (i);

(II) whether and how the agreement changes provisions of an agreement previously negotiated;

(III) how the agreement serves the interests of United States commerce;

(IV) how the implementing bill meets the standards set forth in section 3(b)(3); and

(V) how the agreement makes progress in achieving the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in section 3(c) regarding the promotion of certain priorities.

(3) RECIPROCAL BENEFITS.—In order to ensure that a foreign country that is not a party to a trade agreement entered into under section 3(b) does not lose any benefits under the agreement unless the country is also subject to the obligations under the agreement, the implementing bill submitted with respect to the agreement shall provide that the benefits and obligations under the agreement apply only to the parties to the agreement, if such application is consistent with the terms of the agreement. The implementing bill may also provide that the benefits and obligations under the agreement do not apply uniformly to all parties to the agreement, if such application is consistent with the terms of the agreement.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON TRADE AUTHORITY PROCEDURES.

(1) FOR LACK OF NOTICE OR CONSULTATIONS.—(A) IN GENERAL.—The trade authorities procedures shall not apply to any implementing bill submitted with respect to a trade agreement or trade agreements entered into under section 3(b) if, during the 60-day period beginning on the date that one House of Congress agrees to a procedural disapproval resolution for lack of notice or consultations with respect to that trade agreement or agreements, the other House separately agrees to a procedural disapproval resolution with respect to such trade agreement or agreements.

(B) PROCEDURAL DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTION.—(i) For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘‘procedural disapproval resolution’’ means a resolution of either House of Congress, the sole matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: ‘‘That the President has failed or refused to notify or consult in accordance with the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001 on negotiations with respect to, and, therefore, the trade authorities procedures under that Act shall not apply to, any agreement or agreements submitted with respect to that trade agreement or agreements.’’, with the blank space being filled with a description of the trade agreement or agreements with respect to which the President is considered to have failed or refused to notify or consult.

(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the President has ‘‘failed or refused to notify or consult in accordance with the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001 on negotiations with respect to a trade agreement or trade agreements if—

(1) the President has failed or refused to consult (as the case may be) in accordance with section 4 or 5 with respect to the negotiations, agreement, or agreements;

(II) the guidelines described in subsection section 7(b) have not been developed or met with respect to the negotiations, agreement, or agreements;

(III) the President has not notified the Congress, or the bipartisan Congressional Oversight Group pursuant to a request made under section 7(c) with respect to the negotiations, agreement, or agreements; or

(IV) the agreement or agreements fail to make progress in achieving the purposes, policies, priorities, and objectives of this Act.

(2) PROCEDURES FOR CONSIDERING RESOLUTIONS.—

(A) Procedural disapproval resolutions—

(i) in the House of Representatives—

(I) may be introduced by any Member of the House;

(II) shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and, in addition, to the Committee on Rules;

(iii) may not be amended by either Committee; and

(iv) shall be introduced by any Member of the Senate.

(B) The provisions of section 152(d) and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(d) and (e)) (relating to the floor consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to a procedural disapproval resolution introduced with respect to a trade agreement if no other procedural disapproval resolution with respect to that trade agreement has previously been considered under such provisions of section 152 of the Trade Act of 1974 in that House of Congress during that Congress.

(C) It is not in order for the House of Representatives to consider any procedural disapproval resolution reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and, in addition, by the Committee on Rules.

(c) RULES OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND SENATE.—Subsection (b) of this section and section 3(c) of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act, subsection (b) shall apply.

(1) in the House of Representatives as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such are deemed a part of the rules of the House and Senate, respectively, and such procedures supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent with such other rules; and

(2) with the full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules so far as relating to the procedures of that House at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as any other rule of that House.

SEC. 6. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN TRADE AGREEMENTS FOR WHICH NEGOTIATIONS HAVE FAILED OR FALLEN THROUGH.

(a) CERTAIN AGREEMENTS.—Notwithstanding section 3(b)(2), if an agreement to which section 3(b)(2) applies—

(1) is entered into under the auspices of the World Trade Organization, (2) is entered into with Chile, (3) is entered into with Singapore, or (4) establishes a Free Trade Area for the Americas, and results from negotiations that were commenced before the enactment of this Act, subsection (b) shall apply.

(b) TREATMENT OF AGREEMENTS.—In the case of any agreement to which subsection (a) applies—

(1) the applicability of the trade authorities procedures to implementing bills shall be determined without regard to the requirements of section 4(a) (relating to notice prior to initiating negotiations), and any procedural disapproval resolution under section 5(b)(1)(B) shall not be in order on the basis of a failure or refusal to comply with the provisions of section 4(a); and

(2) the President shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this Act—

(A) notify the Congress of the negotiations described in subsection (a), the specific United States objectives in the negotiations, and whether the President is seeking a new agreement or changes to an existing agreement; and

(B) before and after submission of the notice, consult regarding the negotiations with the committees referred to in section 4(a)(2) and the Congressional Oversight Group.

SEC. 7. CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT GROUP.

(a) MEMBERS AND FUNCTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—By not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and not later than 30 days after the convening of each Congress, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Senate shall convene the Congressional Oversight Group.

(b) MEMBERSHIP FROM THE HOUSE.—In each Congress, the Congressional Oversight Group shall be comprised of the following Members of the House of Representatives—

(A) The chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and 3 additional members of such committee (not more than 2 of whom are members of the same political party).

(B) The chairman and ranking member, or their designees, of the committees of the House established under this Act (other than the Rules of the House of Representatives, jurisdiction over provisions of law affected by a trade agreement negotiations for which are conducted during the first Congress and to which this Act would apply).

(c) MEMBERSHIP FROM THE SENATE.—In each Congress, the Congressional Oversight Group shall be comprised of the following members of the Senate—

(A) The chairman and ranking Member of the Committee on Finance and 3 additional members of such committee (not more than 2 of whom are members of the same political party).

(B) The chairman and ranking member, or their designees, of the committees of the Senate which would have, under the Rules of the Senate, jurisdiction over provisions of law affected by a trade agreement negotiations for which are conducted during the first Congress and to which this Act would apply.

(d) ACCREDITATION.—Each member of the Congressional Oversight Group in paragraph (2)(A) and (3)(A) shall be accredited by the United States Trade Representative on behalf of the President as official advisers to the United States delegation in negotiations for any trade agreement to which this Act applies.

(e) CHAIR.—The bipartisan Congressional Oversight Group shall be the bipartisan Congressional Oversight Group shall consult with and provide advice to the Trade Representative regarding the formulation of specific objectives, negotiating strategies and positions, the development of the applicable trade agreement, and compliance and enforcement of the negotiated commitments under the trade agreement.

(f) GUIDELINES.—

(1) PURPOSE AND REVISION.—The United States Trade Representative, in consultation with the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Finance, if the Senate, shall, no later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, develop written guidelines regarding the exchange of information between the Trade Representative and the Congressional Oversight Group established under this section, and may make such revisions to the guidelines as may be necessary from time to time.

(2) CONTENT.—The guidelines developed under paragraph (1) shall provide for, among other things—

(A) regular, detailed briefings of the Congressional Oversight Group regarding negotiating objectives, including the promotion of certain Australian states, and positions and the status of the applicable negotiations, beginning as soon as practicable after the enactment of this Act, and continuing with more frequent briefings as trade negotiations enter the final stage;

(B) access by members of the Congressional Oversight Group, subject to security clearances, to pertinent documents relating to the negotiations, including classified materials;
December 6, 2001

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

H8993

(C) the closest practicable coordination between the Trade Representative and the Congressional Oversight Group at all critical periods during the negotiations, including at negotiation start; and

(D) after the applicable trade agreement is concluded, consultation regarding ongoing compliance and enforcement of negotiated commitments.

Sec. 9. Conforming amendments.

(a) Section 1. (a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2111 et seq.) is amended as follows:

(1) IMPLEMENTING BILL—

(A) Section 151(b)(1) (19 U.S.C. 2191(b)(1)) is amended by striking "section 1103(a)(1) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act of 1988, or section 282 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act of 1988" and inserting "section 282 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act, or section 5(a)(1) of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(B) Section 151(c)(1) (19 U.S.C. 2191(c)(1)) is amended by striking "or section 282 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act, and inserting "section 282 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act, or section 5(a)(1) of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(2) ADVICE FROM INTERNATIONAL TRADE COMMISSION—Section 131 (19 U.S.C. 2151) is amended—

(A) in section (b)(1), by striking "section 123 of this Act or section 1102 (a) or (c) of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988," and inserting "section 123 of this Act or section 1102 (a) or (b) of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001,"; and

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking "section 1102 (b) or (c) of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988," and inserting "section 3(b) of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(C) in subsection (c), by striking "section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988," and inserting "section 3 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(3) HEARINGS AND ADVICE—Sections 132, 133(a), and 134(a) (19 U.S.C. 2152, 2153(a), and 2154(a)) are each amended by striking "section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988," each place it appears and inserting "section 3 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(4) PREREQUISITES FOR OFFERS—Section 134(b) (19 U.S.C. 2154(b)) is amended by striking "section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988" and inserting "section 3 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(5) ADVICE FROM PRIVATE AND PUBLIC SECTORS—Section 135 (19 U.S.C. 2155) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a)(1)(A), by striking "section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988" and inserting "section 3 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(B) in subsection (a)(1)—

(i) by striking "section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988" each place it appears and inserting "section 3 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(ii) by striking "section 1103(a)(1)(A) of such Act of 1988" and inserting "section 3(a)(1)(A) of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(C) in subsection (a)(2), by striking "section 1101 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988" and inserting "section 2 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(6) TRANSMISSION OF AGREEMENTS TO CONGRESS—Section 162(a) (19 U.S.C. 2213(a)) is amended by striking "or under section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitive Act of 1988" and inserting "or under section 3 of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001";

(7) APPLICATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS—For purposes of applying sections 125, 126, and 127 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2135, 2136(a), and 2137)

(1) any trade agreement entered into under section 3 shall be treated as an agreement entered into under section 101, as appropriative, of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2111 or 2121);

(2) any proclamation or Executive order issued pursuant to section 3 shall be treated as a proclamation or Executive order issued pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under section 102 of the Trade Act of 1974.

Sec. 11. Definitions.

In this Act:

(1) AGREEMENT ON AGRICULTURE—The term ‘‘Agreement on Agriculture’’ means the agreement referred to in section 2(a)(2) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3511(a)(2));

(2) CORE LABOR STANDARDS—The term ‘‘core labor standards’’ means—

(A) the right of association; and

(B) the right to organize and bargain collectively.

(C) a prohibition on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor;

(D) a minimum age for the employment of children; and

(E) the observance of acceptable conditions of work with respect to minimum wages, hours of work, and occupational safety and health.

(3) GATT 1994—The term ‘‘GATT 1994’’ has the meaning given that term in section 2 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3501).

(4) ILO—The term ‘‘ILO’’ means the International Labor Organization.

(5) UNITED STATES PERSON—The term ‘‘United States person’’ means—

(A) a United States citizen;

(B) a partnership, corporation, or other legal entity organized under the laws of the United States; and

(C) a partnership, corporation, or other legal entity that is organized under the laws of a foreign country and is controlled by entities described in subparagraph (B) or United States citizens, or both.

(6) URUGUAY ROUND AGREEMENTS—The term ‘‘Uruguay Round Agreements’’ means the term ‘‘Uruguay Round Agreements’’ as defined in section 12 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3501).

(7) WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION; WTO—The term ‘‘World Trade Organization’’ or ‘‘WTO’’ means the organization established pursuant to the WTO Agreement.

(8) WTO AGREEMENT—The term ‘‘WTO Agreement’’ means the Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization entered into on April 15, 1994.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Any bill of this magnitude that comes to the floor will always have a history of, would have, should have; but what is more difficult about this bill than most is that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have been forced to diminish the contribution from my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), the very brave and knowledgeable members of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON).

Both the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER) and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON) are members of the Subcommittee on Trade of the Committee on Ways and Means, that subcommittee that deals on an ongoing, everyday basis with this issue. They are among the most knowledgeable members of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON).
an example of the way we should operate, but when members of the Committee on Ways and Means get together to work on this problem, that is a model to blast, to argue it is not bipartisan, to argue the product is not any good and whether they mean to or not.

I took this time at the beginning, regardless of what the vote is at the end, to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), to thank the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JEFFERSON), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TANNER), and to thank their staffs. For almost 5 months we have worked on what was said to be an impossible project, to resolve the differences that drove us not to provide this power to the President previously. I voted for that. I will vote it for any President, but to trash my colleagues who are powerful enough in terms of their belief that something needed to be done, for my colleagues to carry the day while treating this is unworthy of any Member.

Attacking me, I understand it. I am one of the targets and the symbols; but do not, do not, do not derogate the contribution of those Democrats who were strong enough to believe enough in this to work together in an intellectually honest way, to produce a product that is basically better than any product that has ever been brought to this floor in a number of ways, which we will talk about.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON) to allocate as he sees fit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSU), a senior member, one who has worked so hard on the alternative to the majority bill.

Mr. MATSU. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the ranking Democrat member of the committee, for yielding me the time.

Let me just say this. I am holding in my hands two volumes. These are pieces of legislation that was passed in 1994. We went and talked to additional Members who are able to deal with these issues.

Members asked for special consideration in terms of expanding the number of Members who are able to deal with these issues.

In addition to that, after we took the product, put together by my friends that I had mentioned earlier, we then went and talked to additional Members. Through this process of talking to Members, what do they think of this work product, and from their perspective how can it be improved, they said with TPA we will make a substantial improvement.

The Uruguay Round, which passed 7,000 pages of legislation along with my colleagues the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

I have been a free trader for the last 23 years, since I have been in the United States Congress. I show my colleagues these documents, mainly because we took an up or down vote in 1994, after about 5 hours of debate, and passed this legislation, 5,000 pages.

The Uruguay Round, which passed 7 years ago, was basically about reducing tariffs and eliminating quotas. We had a little about intellectual property, but it was basically about tariffs and quotas.

This next round, the round that we just witnessed in Doha, the beginning of, will be a round in which we not only talk about tariffs and quotas, which will be a part of it, but it will be about antitrust laws. It will be about food safety laws. It will be about changes in hundreds of government regulations in the United States.

The United States Trade Representative will go through the back door, through the World Trade Organization, and make major changes in domestic regulations and domestic laws; and if my colleagues think these volumes are big, wait till we see 4 or 5 years from now when these negotiations are continued. We will see a volume four or five times larger than this, and we will have 4 hours of debate on the floor of the House, and we have to vote yes or no; and I will guarantee my colleagues they will not know for 2 or 3 years what will be in this legislation.

We might find that there will be a situation where basically we will be making major changes in antitrust laws, and we will not even know whether the consumer will be protected. This is why the legislation should go down, and we should review it again.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

What we will hear from the other side in terms of agricultural products should have. Would have, could have, should have; would have, could have, should have; would have, could have, should have; would have, could have, should have.

At some point my colleagues have to decide whether or not the President needs this power. It is going to have to be done in a bipartisan way, and we have a bipartisan product in front of us.

Mr. Speaker, I place in the RECORD the "Statement of Administration Policy." which begins: "The Administration strongly supports H.R. 3005."

WASHINGTON, DC, December 5, 2001.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY
H.R. 3005—BIPARTISAN TRADE PROMOTION AUTHORITY ACT OF 2001

REPS. THOMAS (R) CA AND 3 COSPONSORS

The Administration strongly supports H.R. 3005 and looks forward to working with the Congress to provide the President with the authority and flexibility to secure the greatest possible benefits for America's farmers, workers, producers, and consumers. H.R. 3005 would provide Trade Promotion Authority for the President and would establish special procedures for the consideration of legislation to implement trade agreements.

Trade Promotion Authority (TPA) is about asserting American leadership, strengthening the American economy, and creating American jobs.

A congressional grant of TPA takes on renewed importance with the launch of new global trade negotiations. These negotiations can open markets and provide job creating opportunities for every sector of the American economy. But the President can strike the best deal for American workers and families only with approval of TPA.

Without TPA, the United States will fall behind in shaping the rules of globalization, our new momentum for trade will be undercut and the confidence necessary for economic recovery will be weakened.

Passage of H.R. 3005 will send a strong signal of U.S. leadership in trade liberalization.

What does this package do? Obviously it creates the power to negotiate specific agreements, which will come to us later, without ability to equivo cate or disagree. This legislation is the best in intellectual property. It is the best in the United States is committed to free and open trade.
different locations because clearly they are threatened if they are import sensitive.

Members asked that the administration not reduce textile tariffs when they are negotiating with another country. As the gentleman from California (Mr. MASTERS) held up in terms of the Uruguay Round, where other countries said they would reduce their tariff and they have not. We said they are right. We are going to make sure that our negotiators do not lower our tariffs and they are negotiating with have higher tariffs.

Members asked for an improved consultation and opportunity to actually withdraw trade promotion authority if the administration failed to consult. In a number of ways, we said, they are right; we will enhance it.

Finally, on the oversight, not just the committee's of jurisdiction, but every committee whose jurisdiction would be implicated by the package, the Committee on Rules has put together a bill to which I have added a proviso that controls how much information the administration has to provide.

In every aspect, this is a better negotiating tool than we have ever seen in the past. It is bipartisan. It is something that the President has said he desperately needs for a number of reasons; and there is no solid, substantial reason that this should not pass today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we extend the time for debate for 1 hour in view of the fact that the Committee on Rules did not see fit to give the Democrats a substitute, in view of the fact that the gentleman from California (Mr. TUSCHAS) put this bill together in the middle of the night without a hearing, and we are now finding sometimes for the first time what is in it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do plan to object. I am very proud of the way the Committee on Rules has put together this package, and I do not believe that this has been done in the middle of the night.

I believe, as I said in my statement during the debate on the rule, we are faced with an up or down vote on whether or not we are going to grant the President this very important Trade Promotion Authority, and I happen to believe that we have been talking about this for a long period of time. During debate of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) said let us move ahead and let us vote.

So, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, with deep disappointment, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this legislation.

Ladies and Gentlemen, Trade Promotion Authority is being sold to Americans as a few different things. The Bush Administration has called today's vote an act of patriotism, now more necessary than ever. House Republican leaders, in a suspicious midnight conversion, are now feverishly promising gifts to its critics in return for their support. Well folks, you can wrap this vote up in red, white and blue. You can tie it with a bow and put it under the tree. But either way, this trade bill is neither patriotic nor a gift. It is a dagger into our basic rights and our standard of living.

Americans are asked to make three sacrifices in exchange for President Bush's trade policy. They are being asked to give up their middle-class lifestyle, their environmental concerns, and their public health. For all those Americans who think that sounds like a raw deal—and they are right—I urge my colleagues to be a resounding “no” on this very bad trade deal.

When NAFTA was passed in 1993, its supporters promised nothing but blue skies for hard-working Americans. Using fast-track authority, President Clinton hurried the bill through Congress without a truly meaningful debate in Congress on the effects of such a trade agreement. Millions of Americans have paid a high price for that lack of candor eight years ago. A recent report shows that 3 million new jobs—good jobs, well-paying jobs—crossed the border during the last 8 years. The economic surge and booming stock market of the 1990s masked a narrow-minded, market-driven approach is justifiable in the face of an HIV/AIDS pandemic that has decimated much of Africa.

...Since the horrible events of September 11, public health experts have warned that our country must reduce its vulnerability to potential biological and chemical terrorism. The American Public Health Association:...
Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California (Mr. CRANE), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SAWYER), and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) is far superior, and I hope that that version will pass by the end of the hour we have to debate.

While being more modern perhaps than their previous offerings, the Republican bill still fails to give adequate voice to the new realities of trade negotiations, that decisions made impact our constituents in many more ways than they used to, because the negotiations no longer simply attempt to lower tariffs or to reduce direct restraints on trade.

Hence, the goals the United States should pursue need to be more clearly articulated in any legislation the issues that we do not always see at the surface in Fast Track Authority. The role of Congress needs to be far more extensive in order to bring about a successful conclusion.

These new realities are knitted together in a far more comprehensive manner by the Rangel-Levin version of Fast Track Authority than the Republicans have proposed. We all would be better off in the long run by a decision to negotiate, in a meaningful way, bipartisan legislation rather than forcing this through this afternoon.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in strong support of H.R. 3005.

This bill is about arming the President and his team with the authority to adopt trade agreements written in the best interest of U.S. farmers, companies, and workers. It ensures that the President will negotiate according to clearly defined goals and objectives written by Congress.

Trade is fundamental to our relations with our trading partners. As the President strives to neutralize international threats to our security, TPA is an essential tool for him to have to use in the campaign to build coalitions around the world that work with us to guard freedom.

H.R. 3005 strikes a two-way partnership between the President and Congress on our common objectives for international trade negotiations in which the United States participates. Its passage will ensure that the world knows that Americans speak with one voice on issues vital to our economic security.

My colleagues know I am not one who is enthusiastic about putting labor and environmental matters on the trade agenda, and my original TPA bill, H.R. 2149, which had 100 cosponsors, was completely clean in this respect. But to protect our country's interests internationally, I acknowledged the necessity of forging a meeting of minds on these sensitive issues with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. The final result of difficult compromises over 5 months is the bill before us today.

TPA simply offers the opportunity for us to negotiate from a position of strength, and does not in any way constitute final approval of any trade agreement. Under this bill, Congress and the American people retain full authority to approve or disapprove any trade agreement at the time the President presents it to Congress.

While we have delayed these last 7 years to pass TPA, other countries have already taken aim at new markets. The U.S. is the world's greatest exporter, sending almost $1 trillion worth of goods and services to foreign consumers. Expanding trade remains the linchpin of any successful strategy to increase long-term nonflationary economic growth.

In my home State of Illinois, over 400,000 jobs are tied directly to exports. These jobs are more secure and pay over 15 percent more than nontrade-related jobs. It is the result of the National Association of Manufacturers, companies that manufacture for export are almost 10 percent less likely to go out of business than others. These firms pay better benefits. In Illinois, these good, high paying, trade-related jobs are often in the machinery, agriculture, information technology, and chemical sectors. These are the types of jobs that will not be created if we reject the opportunities of the international marketplace by voting no on H.R. 3005.

In these times of economic dislocation, we cannot afford to deny President Bush a primary tool of economic growth. Americans have never been reluctant to compete head to head with our trading partners. We should not dash the best chance we have of creating a better future of dynamic economic growth and success for our workers, businesses, and farmers in international markets.

I urge a "yes" vote on H.R. 3005.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SAWYER).

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the measure before us, confident that we can do better.

We have supported trade initiatives since I came to Congress. And I continue to believe that Presidential trade negotiating authority is an important tool. But it requires the right kind of authority, suited to our time. And the bill before us does not provide that.

Trade negotiations have moved far beyond the issue of tariffs. These negotiations now affect our nation's tax laws, intellectual property standards, insurance system, and agricultural programs. These are issues that would not have occurred to Congress when we launched GATT after World War II. Our trade laws must change with the times. The volume and content of international trade has expanded enormously past decade. And the scope of trade agreements has expanded well beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means in the last quarter century. Trade affects all of our constituents on a daily basis, and we must strengthen our responsibility to speak for them.

Congress must now expand its capacity to engage negotiators over the often long and complex course of modern trade agreements.

We need an expanded, independently informed, and active set of Congressional advisors. And if the President's negotiators are obviously not fulfilling their stated obligations, Members must have an opportunity to vote on a resolution of disapproval that does not have to be passed first by the Ways and Means Committee. Congress must have a real role, more than just more vague promises from the Administration to consult with us. If the consultations, or rather lack of them, that bring us to this juncture today are an example of what our colleagues have in mind, it is an embarrassment.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, simply not true to say that opponents of the Thomas bill are opponents of free trade. That statement ignores the honest effort led by Mr. Rangel to craft a bill that will accomplish the objective of promoting trade without sacrificing our capacity to continue to work towards basic environmental and labor standards.

A vote against today's bill is not an attempt to hold free trade hostage until the rest of the world matches our labor standards. The Rangel alternative expects nothing of the sort. A vote against the bill is a vote to go back to work on legislation that will engage our partners in a real dialogue. We must ensure, at a minimum, that countries do not weaken their labor and environment laws to attract investment. It is a vote to go back to work on a bill that creates the kind of participatory oversight of the negotiations is the best way to build Congressional support for the agreements that are ultimately reached.

A vote against today's bill is not an attempt to hold free trade hostage until the rest of the world matches our labor standards. The Rangel alternative expects nothing of the sort. A vote against the bill is a vote to go back to work on legislation that will engage our partners in a real dialogue. We must ensure, at a minimum, that countries do not weaken their labor and environment laws to attract investment. It is a vote to go back to work on a bill that creates the kind of participatory oversight of the negotiations is the best way to build Congressional support for the agreements that are ultimately reached.
of more than a narrow, partisan majority in order to command real respect for trade agreements that flow from it. The bill before us today, regrettably, does not do that. We can do better.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARVIN), a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CARVIN. Mr. Speaker, I support granting the President Trade Promotion Authority, but I oppose the bill we are considering today. I have supported fast track authority for GATT, for GATT II, I supported PNTR, but I oppose this bill.

The reason I oppose it is that the landscape for trade legislation has changed, yet our delegation of authority to our President has not. Let me just cite one example.

We talk about putting in our authority that we expect to make progress on labor standards by enforcing one’s own laws, where we have accomplished that for Jordan, the first thing we did was to weaken our ability to enforce those standards.

Let us take a look at antidumping laws. We passed legislation in this body that said we would not accept our antidumping and countervailing duty laws. Yet in Doha we put that on the table for negotiations. So at least we would think that this underlying bill would make a principal objective of trade that we do not weaken our own laws in this regard. But, no, we put it as a third priority. What message is that to our trading partners? We can do better.

Support the motion to recommit with the Rangel bill, then we really will give the right authority to the President. I urge rejecting the underlying bill and supporting the motion to recommit.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, this is without a doubt one of the most important votes any of us will cast this Congress. Today we are deciding whether or not we will give American workers and American companies the support they need to open international markets.

Nowhere is trade more important than on the farm. Last year, more than $140 million worth of dried plums, $600 million worth of almonds, were exported from the State of California, much of it from my northern California district. California exports 80 percent of its cantaloupe and 70 percent of its almonds, and 40 percent of its rice, yet our farmers face an average tariff rate of 62 percent. These barriers will never be eliminated until we give the President Trade Promotion Authority.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support TPA.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield an additional 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Without objection, the gentleman from Louisiana will control 2 additional minutes.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself particularly to the Democratic side of the aisle, not necessarily to all of the Democratic Caucus, because I understand that many of us are in districts that have high concentrations of organized labor, have high concentrations of textiles and other industries that could be adversely affected by trade. But I know that there are at least 60 Members who represent districts that are highly dependent upon trade, that have a long history of fighting economic growth sectors of this economy; technology, telecommunications, professional services products throughout the manufacturing sector benefit from international trade.

All of our constituents benefit by lower prices in products and services as a result of trade. In fact, all of us have constituents whose incomes are 15 percent greater because they are in export-related jobs.

The reason I oppose it is that the bill in fact, is bipartisan, and nobody outside the boundaries of the Beltway cares about personalities or process. They look at policy. From a policy standpoint, we have enforceable standards on labor and the environment. We have the availability of the use of sanctions for all such negotiating objectives. We have transparency in all commercial transactions.

This is the most substantial progress in U.S. trade policy with respect to labor and the environment that we have ever had the opportunity to vote for. This is a good bill. It is one we should all support. I urge its approval.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

Mr. DICKS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001. This is outstanding legislation.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3005 is legislation that will grant to the President Fast Track negotiating authority for certain trade agreements. I am conversely Mr. Speaker, that this authority is necessary to ensure that the United States remains a global leader on free trade, and to enable this President and future Presidents to continue to work to open foreign markets to American products.

Clearly in today’s global economy, our Nation has a major interest in reducing barriers to international trade, with more and more American jobs dependent upon our ability to market our goods and services to overseas customers. And certainly in my State of Washington, which is the most trade-dependent in the Nation, our ability to trade freely with foreign nations sustains an enormous portion of our economy. In Washington, we exported $28 billion worth of goods each year estimated to sustain more than 1 million jobs.

The Puget Sound area of our State was recently described as the most export-dependent U.S. metropolitan area. So this is an issue that relates very much to the creation of new jobs in our region, and certainly it plays a major role in our national economy, helping to improve our balance of trade and provide jobs for American workers in the 21st century.

And these are good jobs. These are not low wage service jobs that have been generated from the growth of international trade in my State. They are family-wage jobs that pay substantially greater than the national average. We are talking about thousands of union machinists making airplanes at the Boeing Company, about software developers at Microsoft, mill workers who fabricate aluminum at Kaiser, or hit the forests at Weyerhauser who produce lumber wood products.

Trade is not just important to large businesses and big corporations. In my state, there are many more small businesses than big ones that owe their income to international trade.

There are many small companies that supply machine and airplane parts that go into the aircraft that we sell overseas, thousands of farmers that grow apples and wheat, and countless small, family-owned mills that process timber and sell the products in Asian and other overseas markets. And there are jobs that are sustained by these exporters: Bankers, teachers, restaurant workers, plumbers, lawyers and countless others.

The economic recession has had a severe impact on the State of Washington. The end of the high technology boom and the effect that the attacks on September 11 have had on the aircraft industry has been devastating. Currently, we are suffering the highest unemployment rate in the Nation at 6.8 percent.

My highest priority as a Member of Congress has always been jobs. Increasing our trade and exports and with other countries means jobs for Americans and jobs for people in Washington State. In my judgment, the fastest way out of this recession is to tear down the barriers other nations have put up against American goods and services, enabling our manufacturers and other businesses to access new markets. I believe in the ability of our workers and businesses to compete against anybody and win.

Some of my colleagues claim that Trade Promotion Authority is not needed; that the President can already conduct trade negotiations without expedited authority granted by Congress. This is true, the President can negotiate an agreement with other nations. However, what we have found since Fast Track authority lapsed in 1994 is that other nations are unwilling to negotiate with us knowing that any agreement reached with the administration would likely be changed by Congress without consultation or consideration of the views of the other party to the agreement. This is why President Clinton strongly urged Congress to extend Fast Track authority several years ago.
We are falling behind. Of the more than 130 free trade agreements in the world today, the United States is a party to only three. The European Union, by contrast, is a party to more than 27. Because they cannot negotiate a fair deal with the United States, other countries are choosing to be more discriminate in the marketplace. I also ask that you think about how important this bill is to enable our economic recovery. For both of these reasons, I encourage my colleagues to join me in support of H.R. 3005.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time. Mr. Speaker, “Made in the USA” is a badge of pride. It is a symbol of quality. It is a symbol of good workmanship. It is not a symbol of protectionism. The greatest, largest economy in the world be afraid of free trade. The most free country, the strongest country in the world, cannot be afraid to give to their President the same authority that every other President and Prime Minister in this world has today.

Let us give this authority to the President. We are not voting on a treaty. We are simply voting on the authority of the President to go forward. The rest of the world is going towards free trade. We are going to lose markets to the countries that have free trade. Let us support this bill. It is very important to give the President this authority.

Mr. BORGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding me this time, and I also reluctantly in opposition to H.R. 3005 today. I say reluctantly, because I believe in trade, the necessity for it to achieve economic growth and expanded opportunities for all of our workers, I believe the President needs this authority, and I have supported all trade agreements in Congress since I have been here; this debate today, however, is not about being for trade or against trade, it is about establishing the rules of trade in the 21st century.

The world is very different than it has been in the past when trade negotiations were, by and large, about reducing trade barriers, quotas, and tariffs. There are many more complex and evolving issues involving trade: labor and environmental standards, anti-trust, health and safety standards, privacy standards. The major issue for trade in the 21st century will be the harmonization of these different standards. Is harmonization upwards or downwards? Do we improve standards around the globe or is it a race to the bottom?

That is why I, along with the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSU), believe there needs to be a greater institutional role for Congress to have consistent with our Article I, section 8 responsibilities in the Constitution. But I respect the fact that many of us have had to come running in the 11th hour to get the majority party and the administration to do right by American workers today with an adequate worker relief package which is the right thing to do anyway. That should not be the case with months ago, but instead it came to this. Trade policy should not be partisan or personality driven. Let’s instead do it right.

So unfortunately I rise in opposition and encourage support for the motion to recommit.

As our Nation leads the world into the 21st century, we should not shy from opportunities to guide and expand global trade. Opening up foreign markets to American goods not only benefits American’s allegiance, it also exposes American ideals to people around the globe. I cannot, however, support the major- ity’s trade authority legislation because it does little service to real problems facing this Na- tion, refuses to guide trade negotiations in a positive way, and unnecessarily maintains a weak constitutional role for Congress in regulat- ing international commerce, which is our ob- ligation under article 1, section 8 of the Con- stitution.

In a world fused by global integration and communication, international trade has be- come a linchpin of not only our national econ- omy, but also the economies of most nations. We must remember that today’s vote, however, is not about promoting or suppressing trade between the United States and other na- tions. This vote is about how our Federal Gov- ernment goes about the process of regulating commerce between nations.

Our Founding Fathers deliberately put Con- gress in control of regulating commerce with foreign nations. With the impact of tariffs and duties disturbing the diverse constituencies, Members have a responsibility to weigh in on the regional impacts of these mechanisms. Today’s trade environment is constantly changing, with nontariff trade issues impacting all aspects of our economy and law. Issues including antitrust law, intellectual prop- erty, and pharmaceutical costs, along with concerns over regulatory harmonization, re- quire intense negotiations at a new level. Nonetheless, the role of Congress should not be ignored as it is in H.R. 3005, but reestab- lishing it by going to the challenge before Congress.

To this end, I encourage my colleagues to consider the establishment of a Congressional Trade Office that could analyze the implications of trade negotiations, and address the concerns of Congress. Such an office would also be able to provide all Members, not just certain committee leaders, with information on the range of issues facing each region in a bipartisan, objective fashion.

In formulating a trade authority bill that will help establish how America engages the rest of the world in the 21st century, I had hoped this opportunity to do to move toward positive, fundamental changes in world trade agreements. Unfortunately, by forcing a partisan trade bill, the House leader- ship dismissed this opportunity, effectively limit- ing our Nation’s ability to advance inter- national labor, health, safety, and environ- mental standards, as well as improve trans- parency in international organizations.

Developing trade relations between the United States and foreign countries must be mutually beneficial on economic, societal, and po- litical fronts. We cannot, however, ignore that with such engagement, competition increases and can result in winners and losers.

In my home town of La Crosse, WI, Isola Laminates Systems recently laid off 190 skilled workers due in part to a worsening economy, but also due to government trade policies relat- ing to textiles. These laid off workers should have every opportunity to receive adequate benefits, including health and training, through Trade Adjustment Assistance. While the ma- jority has thrown a bone to workers in regard to increased TAA assistance, the short- comings of TAA have not been resolved.

Moreover, it is important that any real Trade Adjustment Assistance reform provide benefits to the American’s agricultural products. Amer- ica’s family farmers are impacted by our trade agreements through markets being both gained and lost. Unfortunately, agricultural producers are not currently eligible for trade adjustment assistance even though family farms are going out of business at record lev- els. Providing income assistance and job em- ployment skills should be as important for America’s farmers as it is for our Nation’s indus- trial workers.

As recent reports have indicated, our Na- tion’s agriculture economy has been in recession since March 2001. In combination with immediate and long-term economic losses associated with the terrorist attacks of September 11, the economy’s downturn has resulted in faltered businesses and laid-off workers. In response, Congress has done little to come to the aid of displaced workers throughout the country, de- spite demands by Members and promises from the House leadership. In an effort to push unemployment legislation I, along with some of my colleagues, sent a letter on Octo- ber 24, 2001 to the majority leadership stating our refusal to support Trade Promotion Au- thority unless displaced worker aide is ad- dressed beforehand. The 11th hour promise to recommend action on unemployment benefits for our Nation’s affected workers is not con- crete, not encouraging, and not enough.

As a supporter of increased trade opportu- nity, I consider this vote very important. H.R. 3005 as it currently stands, however, does not provide assurances that the concerns of west- ern Wisconsin residents will be adequately ad- dressed in future trade negotiations. If Con- gress is not going to cede control over the regulation of commerce with foreign na- tions, such a proposal should be based on deliberate policy and not partisan politics. The failure of the House leadership to come to the negotiating table and work in a bipartisan manner on this important issue is shameful. I strongly encourage my colleagues to pass the motion to recommit and include language from the Rangel- Levin-Matsui Comprehensive Trade Negotiating Authority Act, which more accurately addresses the issues of inter- national labor and environmental concerns, and strengthens the critical role Congress should play formulating trade.

Mr. JEFFERSOH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from...
Revitalize our economy, create jobs, pass Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise to support the Rangel-Levin bill and oppose the Thomas bill, which contains provisions favoring the pharmaceutical industry that will make it harder for Americans and our trading partners to get access to affordable medicines.

The Thomas bill will force the Third World’s poorest countries to move more quickly to pay the First World’s high drug prices in order to treat diseases like AIDS. Unlike the Rangel-Levin bill, the Thomas bill completely ignores the health needs of developing countries.

The Thomas bill directs the elimination of government measures, such as price controls and reference pricing, that American companies and their partners have used to keep prescription drugs affordable. This is not a proper trade objective, it is a greed objective for the pharmaceutical industry.

By forcing higher drug prices in Canada, it could deprive many American seniors of an inexpensive source of drugs. In the U.S., it could force repeal of the drug discount programs for veterans and those on Medicaid. In the name of free trade, the Thomas bill protects the monopolies of this country’s most profitable industry, and hurts the world’s poorest disease- ridden countries. Vote down this bill.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. CARSON).

Mr. CARSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. CARSON).

Mr. CARSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as one of the distressingly few Democrats in support of Trade Promotion Authority to President Bush. My support of TPA springs from the recognition that trade is really part of a larger debate on our role in the world today. It is a debate that echoes in the halls of the Pentagon and the National Security Council, as well as those of our trade representatives, and that is waged with arguments in Doha but with arms in the Hindu Kush.

Since Adam Smith first articulated the case for free trade in the 18th century, economists, no matter whether liberal or conservative, have acknowledged with near-unanimity the merits of trade liberalization. Trade increases wealth for participating countries, ensures access to high-quality products, and guarantees the efficient use of resources. As Smith recognized, it pays for a country to specialize in what it does best, even if that country can do everything better than its trading partners. This is the essence of comparative advantage.

Many of my colleagues in the Democratic Party state their belief in free trade, but nonetheless refuse to support TPA unless it includes provisions mandating other nation’s social and labor standards. Alas, this notion, if enacted, would render TPA a nullity—a mere piece of paper that, in the prelude, expresses support for trade but which, in the details, mocks that claim. None of the developing nations with which we aspire to negotiate new trade agreements will accept strict labor and environmental provisions.

And equally as important, the best way to improve labor and environmental standards, given many nations’ social conditions, is to increase the wealth of the developing world, which trade will do, while also increasing our own wealth. It is a no-lose proposition.

To reject TPA is, in the end, to reject trade itself, which is a disaster for the country and the world, and, for my own party, a refusal to live up to its historic obligation to support free trade.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as one of the distressingly few Democrats in support of a grant of Trade Promotion Authority to President Bush. My support of TPA springs from the recognition that trade is really part of a larger debate on our role in the world today. It is a debate that echoes in the halls of the Pentagon and the National Security Council, as well as those of our trade representatives, and that is waged with arguments in Doha but with arms in the Hindu Kush.

Since Adam Smith first articulated the case for free trade in the 18th century, economists, no matter whether liberal or conservative, have acknowledged with near-unanimity the merits of trade liberalization. Trade increases wealth for participating countries, ensures access to high-quality products, and guarantees the efficient use of resources. As Smith recognized, it pays for a country to specialize in what it does best, even if that country can do everything better than its trading partners. This is the essence of comparative advantage.

Many of my colleagues in the Democratic Party state their belief in free trade, but nonetheless refuse to support TPA unless it includes provisions mandating other nation’s social and labor standards. Alas, this notion, if enacted, would render TPA a nullity—a mere piece of paper that, in the prelude, expresses support for trade but which, in the details, mocks that claim. None of the developing nations with which we aspire to negotiate new trade agreements will accept strict labor and environmental provisions.

And equally as important, the best way to improve labor and environmental standards, given many nations’ social conditions, is to increase the wealth of the developing world, which trade will do, while also increasing our own wealth. It is a no-lose proposition.

It is true that, while the nation tremendously benefits from trade, certain sectors of our economy can be hurt. That is why, as Democrats, we must support and expand Trade Adjustment Assistance, the portability of health insurance benefits, more assistance to the International Labor Organization and other non-governmental organizations that do the heavy lifting on labor and environmental issues, and even wage insurance for displaced workers. But at no cost should we scuttle one of the great achievements of the post-war era: the liberalization of trade. To reject TPA is, in the end, to reject trade itself, which is a disaster for the country and the world, and, for my own party, a refusal to live up to our historic obligation to reach out to the world, bringing prosperity to our own workers and those abroad, too.
Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Washington (Ms. DUNN).

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I represented 700,000 in the suburbs of Seattle and Tacoma. One-third of the jobs held by these people are related to international trade. Reducing trade barriers has never been more important in the Puget Sound area. If we do not expand exports and open new markets for Boeing jets and Microsoft software, we lose more jobs in the Northwest. For Boeing workers who means keeping the aircraft industry viable in our community. Over $18 billion worth of aircrafts were exported last year. Traditionally, half of Boeing’s aircraft sales are for overseas customers, a trend that will continue in the future.

For our farmers, TPA means that more people will have access to the finest products in the world; 33 percent of Washington State commodities, valued at $1.8 billion go to the international market. And it means the United States markets for American commodities.

For our high-tech firms, TPA means strengthening intellectual property standards. The software industry loses $12 billion annually due to counterfeiting and piracy. Reducing piracy in China and South Korea would generate $1 billion of revenue for the Northwest.

For women entrepreneurs, women-owned businesses involved in international trade have higher growth rates, develop more innovations, and create more jobs in their communities. Support TPA.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR).

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I urge a “no” vote on the Thomas bill so we can ultimately bring up the Rangel-Levin bill which takes an important step to restore this body’s constitutional mandate in trade making so that trade regimes lift all people. Why pass another potential trade bill in the last round of congressional negotiations if the United States President would fail to participate in a Free Trade Area of the America agreement without the passage of TPA.

Fast Track procedures simply do not work. This Congress has the ability to write trade agreements that leaves no sector behind, recognizes worker rights, and a clean safe environment for each of the world’s citizens. Put a human face on globalization; vote “no” on the Thomas bill and let us meet our constitutional obligations in this Chamber to write trade bills that work for everyone.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), who has been a real leader in forging a bipartisan effort on this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY).

(Mr. DOOLEY of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOOLEY. California. Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure to work with the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON), the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), and many others in drafting what I believe is a significant step forward in developing Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. Speaker, what is important? It is important so the United States can maximize its influence and maximize its leadership internationally. It is important for the United States to continue in the future.

We look at those individuals in the developing world, every dollar in their per capita income that they see improved gives them greater purchasing power; but also demonstrates through this policy of economic engagement, which is embodied in our trade agreements, that we can do more to empower people throughout the world.

When we look at those individuals in the developing world, every dollar in their per capita income that they see improved gives them greater purchasing power; but also demonstrates through this policy of economic engagement, which is embodied in our trade agreements, that we can do more to empower people throughout the world.

When we look at those individuals in the developing world, every dollar in their per capita income that they see improved gives them greater purchasing power; but also demonstrates through this policy of economic engagement, which is embodied in our trade agreements, that we can do more to empower people throughout the world.

When we look at those individuals in the developing world, every dollar in their per capita income that they see improved gives them greater purchasing power; but also demonstrates through this policy of economic engagement, which is embodied in our trade agreements, that we can do more to empower people throughout the world.

What was also important for all of us to realize was that the only way we can again provide that leadership is to ensure that we can get these countries to the negotiating tables. A lot of the alternative proposals that have been offered for Trade Promotion Authority, unfortunately, would result in very few countries being interested to participate in negotiations with the United States.

Failure to pass Trade Promotion Authority will have significant impacts. In the last few weeks we have heard that Brazil and Bolivia would fail to participate in a Free Trade Area to the America agreement without the passage of TPA.

Following the Doha agreement, we have France that made a strong statement that they would not be interested in participating in the next round of negotiations if the United States President did not have TPA. This is important to our economy and workers, and also to the developing world.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, we have the fast’ Fast Track being rammed through Congress, with all amendments and alternatives blocked and 1 hour and 45 minutes to debate this bill. When the House Republican leadership acts in such a high-handed manner before the bill is even passed it can hardly be expected to cooperate and collaborate after Fast-Track authority is granted.

As a strong advocate for more international commerce, I have supported trade agreements with China, the Caribbean Basin, Africa, Jordan and most recently, the Andean region. The real issue today is not whether to expand trade, but how. In the Ways and Means Committee I sought unsuccessfully to obtain one simple guarantee: that for every special privilege extended to China, the United States reserves the right to eviscerate our environmental, health, safety and consumer laws, in secret investor tribunals beyond the view of the press, public, and watchdog groups.

I cannot support unlimited authority to negotiate international agreement impacting the environment for an Administration whose environmental record has ranged from indifference to outright hostility. That is why the Sierra Club, Friends of the Earth, the League of Conservation voters and every major environmental group in this country is opposing this legislation. It relegates Congress to little more than preparingChristmas wish list, hoping that an Executive Santa Claus will deliver. I am not against taking a fast track to more trade; I am against any proposal that does not give the Congress a steering wheel and a brake when the administration takes the wrong track for the environment.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), who has been a real partner in this effort.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my gentlemen for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, this has been an honest, intellectual exercise in a negotiation to try to do something for this country which desperately needs to be done. The irony of part of this argument today is the very means by which we address child labor, labor and environmental standards of all sorts, is through a vehicle just like we have the vote on today. It is the only way Congress can participate in what is being negotiated.

I cannot support unlimited authority to negotiate international agreement impacting the environment for an Administration whose environmental record has ranged from indifference to outright hostility. That is why the Sierra Club, Friends of the Earth, the League of Conservation voters and every major environmental group in this country is opposing this legislation. It relegates Congress to little more than preparingChristmas wish list, hoping that an Executive Santa Claus will deliver. I am not against taking a fast track to more trade; I am against any proposal that does not give the Congress a steering wheel and a brake when the administration takes the wrong track for the environment.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), who has been a real partner in this effort.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my gentlemen for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, this has been an honest, intellectual exercise in a negotiation to try to do something for this country which desperately needs to be done. The irony of part of this argument today is the very means by which we address child labor, labor and environmental standards of all sorts, is through a vehicle just like we have the vote on today. It is the only way Congress can participate in what is being negotiated. The irony is if we turn it down, what have we done? Nothing. Absolutely nothing, and Congress has no voice at all in what goes on around the world in the area of the world marketplace. That is really pathetic.

The other thing I would like to say, if Members believe, as I think everyone has to, that we can grow more food in this country than we can consume, that we can make more products and stuff than we can sell and buy from one another then it is an economic fact of life, not a political argument, that those engaged in surplus production are going to lose their jobs. That is not a political argument; that is an economic fact.

How do we save those jobs, how do we create new jobs, is by exports so that people in this country can work to make, as an earlier speaker said, tractors in Iowa to send to the rest of the world. This is what this is about: jobs in this country.

Mr. Speaker, if we turn this down, we are going to wait awhile, 1, 2, 3 years, I will tell Members what is going to happen. Maybe 4, 5 years from now we are going to wake up and the economic partnership which has been created between the Asians, the South Americans and the European Union, we are going to be wondering what happened to the United States leadership, to the United States jobs and to the United States role as a leader in the world.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I would support Fast Track legislation that meaningfully addresses the areas of labor and the environment, and provides an effective mechanism for congressional participation. This bill does not. I urge my colleagues to vote against H.R. 3005.

Mr. Speaker, article 1 of the Constitution empowers this body, Congress, to regulate commerce with foreign nations. Over the past 250 years of our Nation's existence, for only 20 of those years, from 1974 to 1994, has this body granted the President authority for fast tracking any trade agreement. In those 20 years, five agreements were signed. In contrast, during the 8 years of the Clinton administration, 300 agreements were signed with countries from Belarus to Japan to Uzbekistan.

Can we do this without Fast Track? We should have Fast Track, but it should be a Fast Track that gives us a clear road map of where this authority will take us.

We owe it to the American people not to abandon the American worker or consumer. Until we have Fast Track legislation that guarantees where we will protect our workers and consumers, we should not support Fast Track legislation. Vote "no" on H.R. 3005.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I am someone who has never voted against trade legislation on this floor. But unfortunately, the President and the Republican leadership have missed an opportunity to move beyond the partisan and narrow ideological divide.

The provisions of the bill of the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) which dealt with labor standards, multilateral environmental agreements and trade disputes...
I would like to close with just a letter sent yesterday by the Florida Fruit and Vegetable Association. Unlike some others in this who continue to talk about it being good for agriculture, this is what Florida agriculture and Florida Agriculture provides Florida with a strong economic foundation, which is especially important during this economic uncertainty. That foundation could be seriously jeopardized as a result of trade agreements, most notably the Free Trade Area of the Americas. The loss of the sugar market alone would cost Florida $1 billion dollars every year. The dollar is on the road to crashing sometime in the next decade or so, and this bill makes it all more certain and makes it happen faster.

It provides access to the American markets to those with the very lowest labor standards and the lowest environmental standards. It will pressure us to see our trade deficit even get larger, or to cut our own environmental standards, labor standards and wage rates in order to compete. It deprives us of the opportunity to demand trade bills that are fair and to involve Congress in the negotiation, that would be negotiated under TPA.

Please vote against this bill.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the last decades, we have moved from the largest creditor Nation to the largest debtor Nation in the world. We now run a trade deficit of nearly half a trillion dollars every year.

The dollar is on the road to crashing sometime in the next decade or so, and this bill makes it all more certain and makes it happen faster.

It provides access to the American markets to those with the very lowest labor standards and the lowest environmental standards. It will pressure us to see our trade deficit even get larger, or to cut our own environmental standards, labor standards and wage rates in order to compete. It deprives us of the opportunity to demand trade bills that are fair and to involve Congress in the negotiation, that would be negotiated under TPA.

Please vote against this bill.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the last decades, we have moved from the largest creditor Nation to the largest debtor Nation in the world. We now run a trade deficit of nearly half a trillion dollars every year.

The dollar is on the road to crashing sometime in the next decade or so, and this bill makes it all more certain and makes it happen faster.

It provides access to the American markets to those with the very lowest labor standards and the lowest environmental standards. It will pressure us to see our trade deficit even get larger, or to cut our own environmental standards, labor standards and wage rates in order to compete. It deprives us of the opportunity to demand trade bills that are fair and to involve Congress in the negotiation, that would be negotiated under TPA.

Please vote against this bill.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the last decades, we have moved from the largest creditor Nation to the largest debtor Nation in the world. We now run a trade deficit of nearly half a trillion dollars every year.

The dollar is on the road to crashing sometime in the next decade or so, and this bill makes it all more certain and makes it happen faster.

It provides access to the American markets to those with the very lowest labor standards and the lowest environmental standards. It will pressure us to see our trade deficit even get larger, or to cut our own environmental standards, labor standards and wage rates in order to compete. It deprives us of the opportunity to demand trade bills that are fair and to involve Congress in the negotiation, that would be negotiated under TPA.

Please vote against this bill.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the last decades, we have moved from the largest creditor Nation to the largest debtor Nation in the world. We now run a trade deficit of nearly half a trillion dollars every year.

The dollar is on the road to crashing sometime in the next decade or so, and this bill makes it all more certain and makes it happen faster.

It provides access to the American markets to those with the very lowest labor standards and the lowest environmental standards. It will pressure us to see our trade deficit even get larger, or to cut our own environmental standards, labor standards and wage rates in order to compete. It deprives us of the opportunity to demand trade bills that are fair and to involve Congress in the negotiation, that would be negotiated under TPA.

Please vote against this bill.
our future trade negotiations on the firmest possible footing.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL).

Mr. ENGEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the bill.

The TPA bill does not require countries to implement any meaningful standards on labor rights. The bill simply requires that a country enforce its existing laws—however weak they may be.

The TPA bill does not contain any meaningful protections for the environment. The bill does nothing to prevent countries from lowering their environmental standards to gain unfair trade advantages.

The TPA bill is gross abdication of Congress’ power. Congress may vote on a disapproval resolution, but only to certify that the Administration has “failed to consult” with Congress. Furthermore, unless current Jack son-Vanik disapproval resolutions on trade, no floor vote is even allowed unless the disapproval resolution is first approved by the Ways and Means and Finance Committees—thereby bottling up the resolution in committee.

The U.S. has now officially entered an economic recession, and millions of workers are suffering. Neither the Administration nor the Republican-controlled House has made any attempt to help unemployed workers find new jobs, get unemployment benefits, or maintain health coverage. Yet, here we stand again on the floor of the House—presented with legislation that helps huge companies at the expense of American workers.

This bill is bad for America. Defeat this bill and let’s get to work on helping American workers and the American economy.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my good friend the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT).

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), first, for always fighting for the working men and women of this great country.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned, like a lot of people, about the lack of opportunity to debate on this important issue, but I stand here in opposition to Fast Track, to H.R. 3005.

After several years of unprecedented growth, technological advancements, medical and scientific innovations, increased globalization, our economy is under siege. We have seen a slowdown. We know about layoffs, we know about bankruptcies, and people are really concerned about their jobs and about their future. And we need to be concerned right now about the future of American workers and protecting our environment. All must be factored into the TPA vote and the long-term equation for the U.S. trade agenda.

I have always supported trade bills, but I cannot support this. We have got this legislation before us now, and I question the constitutional authority involving our environment in trade issues. Vote no.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CAMP asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, Michigan ranks fourth in exports. Our family farmers export 40 percent of what they produce. I will vote yes on TPA, because fair and free trade means a secure economy and better jobs.

It’s official. Our country is in a recession, but Congress is working to help turn our economy around. One way we can do that is to expand our nation’s trading opportunity by giving the president Trade Promotion Authority (TPA). This legislation will provide him the ability to negotiate sound trade agreements that will give our economy the boost it greatly needs.

Today we will vote on this important trade legislation which will open more markets by eliminating and reducing trade barriers, benefiting family farmers, employers small businesses, manufacturers, working men and women, and consumers. A vote today for fair free trade today would be the equivalent of a $1,300 to $2,000 tax cut for the average American family. This is good news for local economies, in my state of Michigan. My state has much to gain from free trade.

We’ve already seen that with the North American Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which helped Michigan exports grow faster than overall U.S. exports. Michigan ranked the fourth highest in the country in percent growth of merchandise totaling $51.6 billion, up more than 24 percent from 1999. We live in an export-dependent state with export sales of $5,193 for every state resident. Opening more markets through free trade will only encourage more economic growth in Michigan through exporting.

Economic growth from free trade also translates into more better, higher-paying jobs. Export-related jobs pay 13 to 18 percent higher than the national average. Additionally, workers in exporting plants have greater job security because they are 9 percent less likely to shut down than those plants that do not export. In Michigan, we have 372,900 jobs directly dependent upon manufactured exports, in addition to the more than 370,000 they support directly and indirectly.

Michigan farmers, who exported an estimated $868 million in agricultural products last year, are also important to the entire state’s economy. Our state exports about 22 percent to 32 percent of what Michigan farmers produce and benefit from the benefits of free trade on our farmers who sell more soybean oil in South Korean now that the country is reducing its tariff by 14.5 percent from 1995 to 2004. In the Philippines, they too are reducing their tariffs on soybean mean from 10 percent to 5 percent.

While we have made progress in bringing down trade barriers, more must be done. Free, fair trade means a secure economy, and more and better jobs for Michigan residents as well as all Americans. This week I will vote to give the president Trade Promotion Authority because we will all win from passing this legislation. This trade bill will provide him with the tools he needs to pull us out of this recession and put our economy back on the right track.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. COLLINS), an extremely valuable member of the committee and one who helped us out in bringing this trade bill to where it is today.

Mr. COLLINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time. Mr. Speaker, as I have traveled throughout the Third District of Georgia, touring textile plants, talking to small business people in towns where textile plants have closed, I have repeatedly heard from those people that they are tired of trade agreements that have exported more jobs in their area than it has exported products. They are tired of agreements that have exported plants, seeing those plants relocated offshore, outside of the United States, all because of weak trade agreements.

In many ways, we have been our own worst enemy when it comes to the textile areas because we have repeatedly said no, no, no. But this time we took a different direction, because I have at this point to commend the gentleman from California (Chairman THOMAS), the President, the USTR Representative and Secretary Don Evans of Commerce, because as we went to them expressed our concerns and our problems, they listened. Not only did they listen, Mr. Speaker, but they reacted to those problems.

Many of the things that you heard the chairman report and talk about earlier are provisions that strengthen this bill, provisions in this bill that will strengthen not only the bill, but strengthen future trade agreements, so that we do promote the exporting of goods.

This President needs the authority to be able to negotiate, to be at the table to sell our products. And that is what it is all about, products that are manufactured and services and services that are rendered by people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues, support the President on this. He has a good track record in the few months that he has been in office. He has already addressed the dumping of steel in this country that hurts steelworkers, the dumping of softwood from Canada that hurt many mill workers across this country. In Doha he resisted the pressure from those who wanted to accelerate the phaseout of quotas and tariffs on textiles. He has a good record. He is our leader. He can be the leader and promoter of goods from this country in the international trade market.

I urge support and passage of this Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Trade Promotion Authority to allow the President to sell American goods and services. That’s right, Mr. Speaker. The President is and should be the number one salesperson for American goods and services. He must be a leader in international trade, promoting America the same way he is leading in the international fight against terrorism. American workers need a salesperson.

Now, I say to you, Mr. Speaker and to the leadership in the Congress, the American worker has grown tired and weary of trade agreements which export American jobs rather than American goods and services. The American worker is tired of deep pocket CEO’s of major corporations sending their Washington lobbyists to urge the passage of trade agreements and then within a short time announcing a move of that enterprise back to Mexico or some other country. The American worker deserves trade agreements which promote the products they produce or services they deliver. To assist and ensure the President promotes the American worker, this bill contains legislative language and report language requiring the President, when negotiating with other nations to do the following:

First, it requires reciprocating trade agreements. In exchange for allowing the selling of international products in our nation, it requires the same consideration for American goods.

Second, it requires the President to negotiate on rules of origin for U.S. content in products to be assembled elsewhere and sold back in the U.S.

Third, it requires the President to discuss and monitor the difference in value of currency in the negotiating country when compared to the strong U.S. Dollar.

Mr. Speaker, parameters, such as these are instructive to the President that American workers want to be engaged in the International marketplace. But such engagement must be fair to all, not free to some at the expense of American jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I have full confidence the President will follow these and other instructions set forth by Congress. He has already shown tremendous support for American jobs by calling the hand of those nations which have dumped steel in the United States at the expense of the steel worker. He has called Canada’s hand for exporting subsidized soft wood lumber to the U.S. by proving they were engaged in dumping excess lumber at the expense of the American worker. He placed a tariff on lumber from Canada rather than negotiating a new agreement at the expense of the American worker.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, American workers standing on the assembly line need to and want to trade in an international market. But they want to be able to sell their products, not just buy from other countries. This bill will give the President the authority to negotiate and provide instructions on how to approach those negotiations.

I urge passage of Trade Promotion Authority so we can assist American workers with their jobs, sell their goods and services, and keep our economy strong.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, consider the tale of two of my constituents. Greg is a computer software genius at Microsoft. His intellectual property is frequently stolen from him overseas, and he could use a President with Trade Promotion Authority to try to prevent that theft.

And now consider my constituent, John, who came up to me in the lobby of a building the other day and said, “I just got laid off from Boeing. I am 56 years old. I am worried. I don’t know what I am going to do, and I need help.”

For the last 2 months, while we have passed bailout after bailout, this Congress has done nothing for the American worker. Nothing. And we have to learn if we are going to advance a trade agenda, we have to make sure we respect both the Gregs and the Johns of the world.

Yes, you can run over the Democrats on the floor of this House, but you cannot run over the legitimate needs of working people and the environment time after time, and then expect us to develop a trade agenda with the support of the American people.

Vote no on this today. Come back, develop a realistic package of worker protection, and we will pass what we need for our international agenda.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure, I yield 1 minute to my colleague and friend from California (Mr. HUNTER) to speak on this issue since some of you have known his history.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, in early September, I was gearing up as usual to oppose this Fast Track. And then our country was attacked, and today as we all know, we have Marine Expeditionary Forces, American carrier battle groups, tactical aircraft, Special Operations forces, in theater, in combat in Afghanistan.

Heading those forces, those American forces, is one man, the American President, and for the next couple of months, in my estimation, more than ever, his successes are going to be our successes, his losses are going to be our losses.

As all my colleagues know, do not like Fast Track, I do not like free trade. But I like less the idea of weakening this President in this time of great national emergency.

For that reason, this time, this time, this once, I am voting yes.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), a distinguished leader of Congress.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, first, I want to adopt the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE): One minute is too short a time to substantially discuss obviously so important an issue. But I want to say that I reject the rationale of the gentleman who called me immediately before me. I do not believe that a vote “no” will weaken the President. What a vote “no” will do is strengthen the process in this House.

The American public elected 435, not 221 or 222, but 435 of us; and they expected us to come together, to work together, to reason together, and to produce a product. I believe that process been followed, this product would be better.

Like the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE) who spoke before me, I have supported Fast Track, PNTR, and NAFTA. Why? Because I believe that trade is an important aspect of the economic well-being of our country and of our workers. But I believe that this process needs to be open; and if so, it will be a better one, reject this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) for the purpose of engaging in a colloquy.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the amendments in section 3 dealing with trade-sensitive commodities would limit the President’s proclamation authority so that tariff reductions could not be implemented without specific congressional approval. It is also my understanding that the bill restricts the ability of the administration to reduce tariffs on sensitive agricultural industries. Finally, the bill requires that import-sensitive agricultural products such as citrus be fully evaluated by the ITC prior to tariff negotiations and that any probable adverse effects be the subject of remedial proposals by the administration. Is that the gentleman’s understanding?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, yes, that is my understanding as well.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

In the first year of the Bush Presidency, we have lost 1 million manufacturing jobs. We are losing recession. The stock market has dropped precipitously. This body has done little for the economy, and this body has done nothing for laid-off workers. They promised us during the airline bailout bill that they would help laid-off workers. They promised us during the stimulus package and the tax cuts for the richest Americans and the largest corporations in this country that they would help laid-off workers. They did not deliver. Now, during Trade Promotion Authority, they are promising again to help laid-off workers.

Mr. Speaker, our history of flawed trade agreements has led to a trade deficit with the rest of the world that has surged to a record $435 billion. The Department of Labor reported that NAFTA alone is responsible, and these are conservative estimates, for the loss of approximately 300,000 U.S. jobs.

Our trade agreements go to great lengths to protect investors. Our trade agreements go to great lengths to protect property rights. These agreements never include enforceable provisions for public health, for the environment, and for laid-off workers.
Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to oppose this legislation. Anyone who does not see the connection between the economy and the environment is on the wrong side of the future. Vote “no” on this trade promotion.

Mr. Speaker, TPA is especially important to our friends in the agriculture community. My home state of Illinois can maximize exports of agricultural products by exporting $2.7 billion in 1999 alone. Income from Illinois exports equates to $110 per acre for corn and soybeans.

Even with its huge output of agricultural products, demand for the top five agricultural products from Illinois is growing. NAFTA and GAAT trade agreements help prove that TPA will increase this demand further.

America’s farmers earn about one-third of their total crop production. Future sales and growth are directly tied to whether the U.S. can negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries. If we don’t supply other countries’ needs, someone else will.

The time is now to give the President TPA, which has lapsed since 1994. TPA is good for small businesses, the high tech sector, agriculture, and for the economy in general.

I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 3005 and give the President the trade negotiating authority that is needed to help jumpstart our economy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Weller), the chairman of the Republican Conference and someone who understands that this bill is about jobs, about helping the unemployed and, for the first time in the history of a trade agreement, includes labor and the environment.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the question before us today is the following: Should we vote to stop small businesses and farmers from exporting more of their goods, or should we vote to grow America’s export market? Should we ignore the new economy, or should we look for new ways to open new markets?

My home state of Oklahoma is the third largest producer of wheat in the country. We export half of our wheat out of the United States. By giving the President Trade Promotion Authority, farmers will have increased opportunities to export their products to new consumers and new markets.

Mr. Speaker, opponents of giving the President Trade Promotion Authority may have had a mainstream argument 50 years ago, but we are in a new century. The arguments being made by foes of expanded trade is rooted in what was, not what is; and it certainly does not think about what can be.

The choice is simple. We can continue business as usual. Our economy is in a recession, corporate profits are down, unemployment is up, and the gross domestic product has dropped at the fastest rate in 10 years. Companies are even skipping their Christmas party this year, trying to save a few bucks.

Or we can look for new ways to give our economy a boost. Allowing the President Trade Promotion Authority and flexibility to negotiate down trade barriers and tariffs is good for the economy, good for jobs, good for farmers... good for small businesses, and good for the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, this is about the old versus the new, yesterday versus to-morrow, walls versus bridges, fear versus competence. It is about Amer-ica, our ingenuity, our employees are the best in the world. We can compete with anybody in the world, but we must give the President the authority and the flexibility to trade or to negotiate these barriers and tariffs down that hurt American prod-ucts.

I ask my colleagues to vote for international trade. Vote “yes.”

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to my dear misguided friend, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON).

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think I thank the gentleman for the extra 30 seconds. I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) for his efforts to reach a bipartisan consensus on this bill and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) for the comity that they have shown us in our efforts, along with the gentleman from Cali-fornia (Mr. DOOLEY) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER) for the unique partnership that we have been able to forge on this bill.

I rise in strong support of the legisla-tion. Why should Democrats support this bill? Because this debate is not one of pleasure. It has meaning-ful and powerful implications for the United States and the world, and we can be sure that the world is watching and waiting for our leadership on this im-portant issue.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michi-gan (Mr. BONIOR), the minority whip.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, what are we doing here today? In the midst of a recession, we are debating a bill that will cost even more American workers their hard-earned paychecks that they pour their hearts and their souls into every single day. We have lost over 150,000 jobs in Michigan, 3 million across the country with these bad trade deals over the last decade.

When a factory closes in Detroit or Saginaw or Flint or Kalamazoo, we not only lose those good-paying jobs, we cripple a whole community. We take away the tax base so there is no money there for fire and police and schools and businesses. No one goes unaffected.

Our trade agreements should pro-mote human rights and democracy, they should improve working condi-tions across the world, and they should protect our environment and the qual-ity of life.

If we give the President Fast Track authority, we will have no opportunity to push for these protections. We will abandon our constitutional responsi-bility. For the American people, Fast Track will be a bullet train to the un-employment line. Vote “no” on the Thomas Fast Track and preserve the voice of the people in our trade decisions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Min-ne-sota (Mr. RAMSTAD), a member of the committee.

(Mr. RAMSTAD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Core Labor standards will now be con-sidered on par with commercial inter-ests in the context of trade agreements and negotiations. For the first time, our proposal provides meaningful ways for the U.S. to assist countries in im-proving their labor standards. Prin-cipal negotiating objectives require the President to assist in building the ca-pacities for countries to respect worker rights, the right of association, the right to bargain collectively, a prohibi-tion on the use of any form of forced or compulsory labor, a minimum age for employment of children, and acceptable worker conditions. The bill also requires countries to enforce the labor and envi-ronmental laws. Our bill in-cludes substantive and enforceable standards on labor and the environ-ment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Lou-isia (Mr. JEFFERSON).

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the time.

Why should Democrats support this bill? Because this debate is not one of pleasure. It has meaning-ful and powerful implications for the United States and the world, and we can be sure that the world is watching and waiting for our leadership on this im-portant issue.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michi-gan (Mr. BONIOR), the minority whip.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, we are doing here today? In the midst of a recession, we are debating a bill that will cost even more American workers their hard-earned paychecks that they pour their hearts and their souls into every single day. We have lost over 150,000 jobs in Michigan, 3 million across the country with these bad trade deals over the last decade.

When a factory closes in Detroit or Saginaw or Flint or Kalamazoo, we not only lose those good-paying jobs, we cripple a whole community. We take away the tax base so there is no money there for fire and police and schools and businesses. No one goes unaffected.

Our trade agreements should pro-mote human rights and democracy, they should improve working condi-tions across the world, and they should protect our environment and the qual-ity of life.

If we give the President Fast Track authority, we will have no opportunity to push for these protections. We will abandon our constitutional responsi-bility. For the American people, Fast Track will be a bullet train to the un-employment line. Vote “no” on the Thomas Fast Track and preserve the voice of the people in our trade decisions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Min-ne-sota (Mr. RAMSTAD), a member of the committee.

(Mr. RAMSTAD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Over 25 percent of the growth in our na-tional economy over the last decade is tied di-rectly to international trade. Last year alone, my home state of Minnesota exported over $17.5 billion in goods and services. This is an increase of over $6 billion in the last decade. Over 270,000 jobs in Minnesota manufacturing exist because of trade, and trade-related jobs pay 18 percent more than other jobs.

The U.S. is rapidly falling behind in our ef-forts to sell our products abroad. We are a party to just 3 of the nearly 130 free trade agreements currently in force around the world. And while Europe, our main competitor, continues to negotiate free trade agreements with the rest of the world, the U.S. remains outside the process. Our interests are being ignored.

Mr. Speaker, TPA will help our President negotiate trade agreements that open up inter-national markets for U.S. goods and services. Let’s give the President the tool he needs to create jobs, help workers and rescue our ail-ing economy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ari-zona (Mr. KOLBE), someone who has been a stalwart on trade.

Mr. KOLBE asked and was given per-mission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. Speaker, much has been made here today about how trade promotion authority can be a real shot in the arm for a struggling econ-omy.

Other members have pointed out how TPA is a critical tax cut for American consumers, workers, and companies. That, too, is true. However, I want to talk about 3 other rea-sons why TPA is so critical for America.

First, TPA strengthens our national security. Capitalism, trade, and the rule of law support freedom. Freedom and stable economies sup-port the growth of democracies. And democ-racies conduct peaceful commerce among themselves. TPA for President Bush is vital to bolster the global trading system. That system is critical to US national security.

Second, TPA is critical if we are going to do more than spout rhetoric about helping the de-veloping world. Each year we pass a foreign operations bill. While countries appreciate it, it is pinnies on the dollar compared to the resources they need and compared to the benefits that might flow from a new round of trade liberalization. Open markets, capitalism, and foreign direct investment are the real tools they need—not foreign aid.

And third, using TPA is critical to US global leadership. We stand at a pivotal moment in world history. Our country fought two world wars, defeated the Soviet Empire in the Cold War, and adopted a foreign policy to spread democratic values, ideas, and beliefs around the globe. We achieved much in the 20th century. We must not put that at risk in the 21st century.

Secretary of State Colin Powell says Trade Promotion Authority (TPA) is "an essential part of our diplomatic tool kit." He urges that we not allow our "broader foreign policy agenda to be hijacked by the terrorists," and points out that "trade helps create a secure international environment within which Americans can prosper."

Trade promotion authority is critical for our national security, foreign policy, and US leadership abroad. Vote "yes" on H.R. 3005.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as she may consume to gentlywoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, our security interests are global. Our economic interests are global.

As we stand here today, since 1990, the European community has negotiated 27 free trade agreements. Do Members understand that every one of those free trade agreements locks in European products, European standards? Their electrical outlets are different from ours. Our farmers have never seen a President more committed to the American farmer

Mr. Speaker, as our security interests are global, so are our economic interests. If we want to create new jobs and protect existing jobs at home, we must open new markets to American goods.

Since traditional trade authority expired in 1994, we have lost customers to other countries because they can now sell their goods without high tariffs simply because they have been at the negotiating table and have made trade agreements that shuts us out.

Of the 310 existing free trade agreements, America is a party to only 2—with Israel and the NAFTA countries. Since 1990, the EU has completed negotiations on 27 free trade agreements and is currently negotiating 15 more.

The United States has missed out on dozens of opportunities to create economic pacts with other nations that want to buy goods made by American workers. We are now not only losing the American consumer, one by one, but losing our position as a leader at the table that shapes the international trading system.

By not being there, we allow Europe to set standards that work against American products, even decades after. According to the USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service, Croatia, a country that aspires to future EU membership, currently plans to go further than the EU on biotech Draica has a draft law in process that would institute an outright ban on any products containing biotech materials. So we simply must have our President at the table to insist on science-based standards to protect and open markets to American products.

TPA is essential for our nation to remain prosperous, and passage will have a great impact on the Connecticut economy. Connecticut's economy is very export-dependent. Last year, Connecticut's export sales of merchandise totaled $13.2 billion, supporting more than 180,000 jobs. Viewed on a per capita basis, Connecticut ranks 6th nationally, with export sales of $38,816 for every state resident. Only 95 percent of our exporters were small and medium-sized businesses.

Export-related jobs tend to be good, high-paying jobs. Wages of workers in jobs supported by exports are 13 to 18 percent higher than the national average. Export-related jobs are also more secure, as exporting plants are 9 percent less likely to shut down than comparable non-exporting plants.

Trade agreements do work: Total exports from Connecticut to NAFTA countries (Mexico and Canada) in 1999 were 44 percent higher than 1993, before NAFTA.

They are also good for consumers and are equivalent to tax cuts, as trade agreements reduce tariffs and provide lower-priced goods. The average American family of four could save an average of $2500 from a global reduction in tariffs and trade barriers—the objective of negotiations.

TPA is good for workers, and good for consumers alike. Furthermore, world trade negotiations are going to proceed. The only issue is will America lead—or follow. At the very moment when we have an opportunity to provide strong and modern leadership, diplomatic skill and sound judgement to unite the world against terrorism and create a more peaceful future, why would we not empower him to provide the same leadership to the economic discussions on which our prosperity and the economic growth of the nation depends?

I urge my colleagues to support passage of this needed legislation.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. ESHOO), a gentleman who has worked hard over the years on trade issues.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I have but a few brief moments to come to the microphone today, not to urge Members one way or the other on the issue that is before us, but to state why, with really a heavy heart, why I am not supporting the first trade issue since I have come to the Congress since 1992.

In my congressional district, which is the home to Silicon Valley, we have scores of unemployed workers. They are part of that two-thirds of the American work force that are not eligible for unemployment benefits because they are contract workers. I know what the new economy produced. I have faith in the industrial leaders in my congressional district and other places. I believe they will help restore the economic well-being of our country.

But we in the Congress have an obligation to stand next to those workers in my district and across the country that are part of the economic collateral of 9-11 and before that. That is why I rise. I asked for a vote on an economic package that would deal with that first, and on the heels of that, support trade assistance.

It is with a pained dealt of regret that I state that I cannot and will not vote for the bill because of it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. COMBEST), the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3005. Trade Promotion Authority is a win for American agriculture. It is a vital tool that the Bush administration must have in order to fight for the American farmers and ranchers in the global marketplace.

In all of my 17 years in Congress, I have never seen a President more committed and focused on American agriculture. President Bush has stated that it is his intention that agriculture remains at the cornerstone of his administration's trade policy, that his commitment to the American farmers and ranchers in all aspects is constant and strong.

The President has firmly stated to my American farmer and rancher will be the beneficiaries of Trade Promotion Authority, and I intend to work with the administration and the US. Department of Agriculture to ensure that the best interests of our farmers and ranchers are kept in the minds of American trade negotiators.

H.R. 3005 clearly provides that the Committee on Agriculture must be involved in all discussions and consultations during negotiations and immediately prior to amendment. As chairman of that committee, I intend to make sure that that happens. I will continue to work with the administration to make sure that American agriculture uses all the tools necessary to compete on the global stage.

I rise today in support of H.R. 3005. Trade Promotion Authority (TPA) is a win for American agriculture and is a vital tool that the Bush administration must have in order to fight for the American farmers and ranchers in the global marketplace. In all of my 17 years of Congress, I have never seen a President more committed to and focused on American agriculture. President Bush has stated that it is his intention that agriculture remains the cornerstone of his administration and that his commitment to American farmers and ranchers in all aspects is strong and constant. Therefore I support granting the President trade negotiating authority and urge my colleagues to do the same.

The President has firmly stated to me that America’s farmers and ranchers will be the beneficiaries of trade promotion authority. I intend to work with the administration and the U.S. Department of Agriculture to ensure that the best interests of our farmers and ranchers are kept in mind as agricultural trade negotiations proceed. Since U.S. farmers and ranchers produce much more than is consumed in the United States, exports are vital to the prosperity and success of U.S. farmers and ranchers. TPA will give the President the flexibility to take advantage of market-opening opportunities, while maintaining the closest possible consultation with Congress. It is important that American farmers and ranchers see agriculture trade and new trade agreements as a positive force. Officials administering trade issues must both understand production agriculture here at home and the fierce competition in worldwide agricultural trade.

H.R. 3005 clearly provides that the Committee on Agriculture must be involved in all discussions and consultations during trade negotiations and immediately prior to signing any trade agreement. The chairman of the committee I intend to make sure that happens. I will continue to work with the administration to make sure that American agriculture uses all the tools necessary to compete on the global stage, while maintaining our international obligations.

As President Bush has said, the success of agriculture contributes to the strength of this Nation. Our President recognizes that the worldwide agricultural market has been rigged against farmers who play fair. Through trade, agricultural prosperity and strength is envisioned in H.R. 3005, Congress gives up: the authority to prevent the administration from providing him with binding trade agreements that can change federal laws to conform to the agreement without any ability to write implementing legislation for trade agreements; the ability to make sure that agreements under consideration do not undermine the standards that the United States and the public and America’s representatives have a greater need to monitor negotiations and have meaningful input into the outcome. That is impossible under the legislation on the floor today.

H.R. 3005 eviscerates Congress’ constitutional role on trade. It includes essentially worthless provisions requiring “consultation” with Congress by the executive branch. This type of requirement has only been used a handful of times in recent trade negotiations, and no doubt will be disregarded under fast-track.

Proponents of fast-track also claim that the President needs this authority to negotiate trade agreements that will be good for the U.S. economy. If that’s what the President was actually going to do, it might make some sense to provide him some leeway. Unfortunately, the record of U.S. trade policy shows otherwise. For example, consider our runaway trade deficit. Last year, the U.S. trade deficit reached a record $435 billion, up from $271 billion in 1999. The trade deficit currently stands at an unprecedented $531 billion percent of GDP, or 4.5 percent of the overall U.S. economy. Including interest payments, our net foreign debt is 22 percent of GDP and is on a trajectory to reach 40 percent of GDP in 5 years. Argentina’s experience should serve as a warning. Argentina’s economy is suffering a total collapse with the government threatening to default on its debt, has a net foreign debt of 50 percent of GDP.

Why does the trade deficit matter? The U.S. trade deficit is financed by borrowing, often from foreign creditors. This is money that future generations of people living in the U.S. will have to pay back to people living elsewhere, with interest. And when foreign creditors begin to call in their loans, it will be the American worker and the American family who pay the price caused by the dollar’s decline.

The Clinton administration alone claimed to have negotiated nearly 300 separate trade agreements. Of these, only the GATT Uruguay Round and NAFTA were done using fast-track. Further, it is not just minor trade agreements that have been negotiated without fast-track. Major agreements such as the Jordan FTA, the Agreement on China’s accession to the WTO, the Information Technology Agreement, the Financial Services Agreement, and the Basic Telecommunications Agreement were all negotiated without fast-track.

Rather than granting the executive branch carte blanche negotiating authority, it seems that Congress would be well-advised to reassert its constitutional prerogatives and rein in the freelance negotiating done by successive administrations without clear authorization from Congress. This is particularly true since trade agreements now deal with far more than just setting tariff and quota levels, which were primarily of interest to industry. Today’s international commercial agreements impact much broader areas of public policy, including the environment, consumer and worker safety, the military, and the array of domestic standards. The public and America’s congressional representatives have a greater need to monitor negotiations and have meaningful input into the outcome. That is impossible under the legislation on the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, it is useful to step back and look at the historical basis for fast-track. Fast-track was a Nixon-era presidential power grab. While proponents say that every president since Gerald Ford has had fast-track negotiating authority, what they don’t say is that it has only been used a handful of times—to negotiate the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) Tokyo Round and Uruguay Round, the U.S.-Israel Free Trade Agreement (FTA), the U.S.-Canada FTA, and the NAFTA.
of the present U.S. financial condition. In a recent consultation with the U.S., the IMF noted, “The sustainability of the large U.S. current account deficit hinges on the ability of the United States to continue to attract sizable capital inflows. Up to now, these inflows in large part have offset the perceived attractiveness of the U.S. investment environment, but such perceptions are subject to continuous reappraisal.” In other words, foreign investors could wake up tomorrow, look at the large U.S. current accounts deficit, question whether we’ll be able to pay our bills, change their minds about the attractiveness of the U.S. investment environment, and plunge the U.S. into a financial and economic crisis.

As an article in the Wall Street Journal on August 14, 2000, pointed out, “Although he’s often credited with omniscience, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan admitted his uncertainty about the trade deficit in testimony before the House of Representatives last month.” Greenspan testified “At some point, something has got to give, and we don’t know what it’s going to be.”

The Chief Economist at Deutsche Bank Research was quoted in the Wall Street Journal saying, “Confidence in the U.S.A. could abrupltly collapse before the rest of the world is firmly back on its feet.” Mr. Walter went on to say, “It is, at any rate, not out of the question that capital flows into the U.S.A. will dry up, and that the dollar will take a rapid dive . . . .”

Paul Krugman, a mainstream, establishment economist wrote in his column in the New York Times on March 26, 2000, that “. . . even the most successful economies must sooner or later export enough to pay for its imports. Our current position, where we pay for many of our imports by attracting inflows of capital—in effect by selling the rest of the world claims on our future exports—cannot go on forever.” Krugman wrote on to write something that could turn out to be prophetic, “The trouble, you see, is that in economics, as in life, what you don’t pay attention to can hurt you.”

It may not be so far in the future that foreign investors lose confidence in the U.S. economy and the dollar and flee to other currencies as in the past few years. Of course, the IMF can come to the rescue, force a structural adjustment program on us, and demand export-led economic growth. Maybe then we can reduce our trade deficit.

Catherine Mann of the Institute for International Economics (IIE) has done research to try to determine at what point deficits become unsustainable. The IIE is a respected, non-partisan organization that generally supports unfettered globalization. Ms. Mann examined Canada, Australia, and Finland and seven other economically advanced nations with big trade deficits during the past 20 years. What she found should be a wake-up call to American policymakers. According to her research, 42.2 percent of GDP is the limit a current accounts deficit can research before the economy begins to implode. The U.S. def-cit has already reached and surpassed this benchmark.

It is also worth providing a bit of historical perspective. In the early 1970s, the deteriorating trade balance was considered so severe that in August 1971, the Nixon administration made the historic decision to abandon the dol-lar’s gold convertibility and allowed it to float to other currencies. What were these shockingly high deficits that led to this decision? A mere 0.1 percent and 0.5 percent of GDP in 1971 and 1972, respectively, minuscule compared to today’s deficits. Even the widely heralded “new economy”, which sacrifices manufacturing and the sales side of the economy, is unlikely to improve the trade deficit. So-called post-industrial businesses earn very little from exports and therefore will contribute little to improving our balance of payments problem. Microsoft’s exports are typically only one-quarter of its total sales revenue.

Merrill Lynch is a classic service business. While the firm generates about one-quarter of its revenue outside the U.S., most of it doesn’t count as U.S. exports since it generally serves foreign customers from offices in the markets concerned. According to an article in the American Prospect on August 14, 2000, “. . . it is apparent, that even in a good year, less than 5 percent of the firm’s revenues contribute to the American balance of payments.”

Ignorant of the same, we continue to pursue the same old failed trade policies is not sound policy, and could lead to an economic catastrophe. For this reason, Congress must maintain its constitutional prerogatives on trade, and oppose fast track. Failed U.S. trade policies and subsequent trade deficits have also cost millions of high-paying jobs across the country. H.R. 3005 will help accelerate this job loss by continuing to force U.S. workers— who are the highest educated, best trained, most productive workers in the world—to compete with workers from fast developing countries who often make only a few dollars a day in dangerous work environments.

Various analysts have identified many negative consequences of massive, persistent trade deficits: a sharp rise in income inequality and stagnation of incomes for average workers; the shifting composition of employment away from high-paying manufacturing jobs with benefits to lower-wage service sector jobs; and decreased research and development spending, which hurts our long-term economic competitiveness. According to the Economic Policy Institute, the U.S. has lost 3 million jobs from 1994–2000 due to the U.S. trade deficit. Job-loss associated with the trade deficit increased six times more rapidly between 1994–2000 than between 1989–1994. Every state and the District of Columbia has suffered significant losses. Ten states, led by California, lost over 100,000 jobs each. My home State of Oregon has lost more than 41,000 jobs.

There are many parts of my district in Southwestern Oregon which have benefited from the so-called economic boom of the 1990’s. So, while proponents of fast track will argue that trade has led to a net increase in jobs that proclamation rings hollow to many communities in Southwest Oregon. We’ve seen our friends and neighbors lose high-paying, family-wage jobs with health care benefits. If they’ve been able to find work at all after being laid-off, it’s for less pay, more hours, and fewer benefits.

In addition to these sometimes abstract, macro-level impacts, U.S. trade policies that sacrifice U.S. jobs and industrial capability have main street impacts. The micro-level impact of factories leaving small, often single company towns is devastating on families and communities. The domino effect of plant closures has been linked to: increased domestic violence and substance abuse, reduced purchasing power for other businesses in the area that used to depend on higher wage factory work-ners as their customer base, a reduced tax base, decreases in local government to provide necessary services, and eventually, population flight that exacer-brates the latter two problems.

Of course, it’s not just workers who have lost Congress has delegated authority to negotiate trade agreements to the executive branch. Farmers and rural communities have been utterly devastated. NAFTA and other trade agreements were held out as a beacon of hope for America’s farmers. New market openings were promised in which farmers could sell their surplus crops. All would become rich. This never happened.

While giant agribusinesses exporters have certainly benefitted, the vast majority of family farmers have struggled against a flood of stereotypic imports. In adin-dition, U.S. farmers have, despite commitments to the contrary, been unable to open new markets for their products as other nations stubbornly maintain both tariff and non-tariff barriers to U.S. agriculture products. In addition, trade rules disallow of-origin labeling, which could allow consumers to pick U.S. grown produce, beef, or other commodities.

The statistics pointing to the failure of U.S.

trade policy for farmers are clear: The U.S. trade deficit increased 57 percent since 1996. Prices for major commodities have fallen nearly 50 percent. 72,000 family farms disappeared in the mid to late 1990s. U.S. farm income is projected to decline nine percent in the next year. Farmers should be very concerned. Predictions that granting fast track will lead to new export markets. We’ve heard this all before, and farmers are falling further and further behind. Various forecasts by government agencies, private researchers, and lobbyists predicted steady growth in exports through the 1990s. These forecasts all proved to be backwards. U.S.

farm exports dropped 22 percent between 1996–2000. At the same time, farm imports rose by nearly 10 percent.

A series of articles in the Oregonian highlighted the plight of farmers in my state. One article detailed the unfair trade practices by Chilean fruit growers that is causing Oregon farmers to go out of business. U.S. imports of Chilean red raspberries more than doubled between 1998 and 2000. That increased Chile’s share of the U.S. market to 36 percent, up from 27 percent in 1998. The U.S. International Trade Commission issued a prelimi-ary ruling in favor of U.S. growers on the al-egation of illegal dumping, but the ruling came too late for many family farmers. On the whole, Chile exports $900 million worth of agriculture products to the U.S. every year, around six times as much as it imports.

The story is the same for many other com-mmodities. In addition to a growing list of other farming partners. Oregon wheat farmers had asked me to support permanent most-favored-nation status for China because of the supposed huge market opportunities. However, China has a massive surplus of wheat and no need to buy U.S. wheat. Shipments by Oregon wheat growers have sat and rotted in Chinese ports.

It is worth quoting Dr. Willard Cochrane, former chief economist at the Department of Agriculture, at length on the folly of U.S. trade policy as it relates to agriculture. He recently wrote:

It does not make sense to pursue a strategy of pushing exports when the global demand is weak. To sell more of our farm commodities, it is necessary to increase the supply.

For the U.S., this is a terrible solution. The world prices for products like soybeans and corn have been declining for years. Even the export market for most U.S. producers. To expand your sales by selling more at still lower prices is no way to get well financially and to stay in business. This practice can only transfer the costs to the U.S. taxpayer, as we are continuously forced to provide emergency payments to farmers because of extremely low prices.

The global demand for American farm products cannot be manipulated at the beck and call of American policy makers. Foreign importers are not going to increase their purchase of American food products because the U.S. policymakers want them to do so. Imports of American farm products will increase if these measures caused governments or producers to take corrective actions. . . . Better enforcement of labor laws would likely promote trade that increases incomes and growth, both in industrialized and developing countries.

-being the case, why do fast-track proponents who oppose guaranteed workers rights favor a lower GDP for developing countries, a distorted labor market, and an inferior allocation of resources, more exports, and higher GDP. In contrast, denying workers the right to bargain collectively perpetuates distortions in the labor market, and results in an inferior allocation of resources.

Finally, as if destroying American jobs, rural communities, and the environment weren't enough, the misguided U.S. trade policies that would be perpetuated by the fast-track bill before us today represent a frontal assault on U.S. sovereignty.

H.R. 3005 proposes to expand NAFTA's notorious chapter 11 provision, for the first time, allows a private company to sue a sovereign foreign government in the event a country takes an action that is “tantamount to expropriation.” Unfortunately, the definition of “tantamount to expropriation” turned out to be extraordinarily broad. Federal, state, or local elected officials take action, such as through passing a law or regulation, that a company believes unfairly limits their ability to make a profit, that company can sue to get the law or regulation overturned or to get monetary compensation for “lost profits” resulting from the action.

We have over seven years of experience with the radical investment deregulation included in chapter 11 of NAFTA. During the NAFTA debate, critics of the treaty, like myself, warned that NAFTA would likely result in overturning of consumer safety, health, or environmental laws or regulations were not founded. Unfortunately, events have proven those fears to have been quite prophetic. A string of chapter 11 cases has forced the reduction of public health and environmental laws in Canada and Mexico, and, to at least two cases have been filed against the United States. There may be more, but because of the secrecy surrounding these proceedings, it is hard to know.

In Methanex v. U.S., a Canadian corporation is suing to overturn a California law enacted to protect its clean water supply, and thus the health of its citizens. In Loewen v. U.S., another Canadian company is essentially arguing that the U.S. treaty system—wherebyjuries are able to send strong messages via large damage awards to businesses who abuse, defraud, or endanger their customers—is illegal. In other cases, Canada has been forced to overturn a ban on a suspected toxic, the “inked Biddeford. Service has sued over “Buy American” laws for highway construction projects in the United States. In other cases, provisions in NAFTA, and those envisioned by H.R. 3005, are much broader than previous investment provisions in international agreements. These investor rights are exercised in secretive tribunals that issue binding decisions without regard to consumer health and safety or the environment.

And, these investor protections are increasingly being used by businesses as a first resort to influence the sovereign lawmaking and regulatory processes of individual countries rather than as a last resort for egregious conduct by governments. The end-result forces taxpayers to fork over their hard-earned dollars to compensate corporations for our sovereign right as citizens to protect our health and safety. I believe that federal, state, and local governments should be able to act protect public interest in our own laws, without being unnecessarily restrained by trade agreements. Unfortunately, H.R. 3005 says otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are far ahead of their elected officials in understanding the need to halt and reverse the race to the bottom in labor, human rights, and environmental standards around the world.

A recent study by the School of Public Affairs at the University of Maryland found 93 percent of Americans agree that "countries that are part of international trade agreements should be required to maintain minimum standards for working conditions." Further, over 80 percent wanted to bar products made by children under the age of 15. Seventy-eight percent said they should consider labor standards and the environment when making decisions on trade. Seventy-four percent said countries should be able to restrict the imports of products if they are produced in a way that damages the environment. Seventy-four percent also said we have a moral obligation to ensure foreign workers do not have to work in harsh or unsafe working conditions. Polls by other independent organizations have drawn similar conclusions.

Our current trade policies allow multinational corporations to receive all the benefits of expanded trade with no corresponding obligations to workers, public health, or the environment. We must reject the claims of proponents of H.R. 3005 that the choice is between unfettered trade and no trade at all. Let's be clear. Fast-track, and the agreement that is negotiated with it, is not about "free" trade. No one will be arguing for the complete removal of tariffs, quotas, or other barriers to trade. No one will be arguing for the unhindered movement of citizens. And, no one will propose doing away with patents, copyrights, or trademarks. The protection of intellectual property, which, while they have an economic rationale, are protectionist and violate the dictates of "free" trade. Rather, the debate today is about who will write the rules for trade and who those rules will benefit. I believe Congress must not abdicate our constitutional duty to write the rules and to do so in a way that benefits average working families, public health and safety, the environment, and the U.S. economy.

I urge my colleagues to oppose H.R. 3005. The last round of negotiations came down to 5,000 pages of trade legislation. We have today out in 1 hour set up the process by which we are going to do this all over again. The majority would have us believe that it is not even worth taking the time to look at any alternative. They say, well, you can have a motion to recommit. We can have 5 minutes to talk about the process by which we arrive at 5,000 pages of trade legislation. If that is fair, if Members think that is what people sent the 435 of us here to do, they ought to vote for this. But if Members think we need a little more time, and we have been here for almost 11 months, and we come down here at the last minute and we have less than an hour for 5,000 pages.

It does not work. They are going to have to come back again.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. Dreier), the chairman of the Committee on Rules, which shares jurisdiction over trade packages, including this one.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, on this, the 60th birthday of our friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, it is important to note that we are faced with the single most important vote of the 107th Congress. Why? Because it deals with the two very important issues of our economy and the U.S. role in the world, our leadership role. We have a track record that was launched on the United States first hit the World Trade Center, where people from 80 nations around the world were killed, and it was the worst attack on our civilian population ever. They knew exactly what they were doing. They were trying to undermine the leadership role we are playing.

The fact is, the world is moving dramatically towards free trade. The President of Brazil said in a speech just a couple of weeks ago in Portuguese, "Exportamos o moremos," export or die. He understands that very well.

As a Congress need to give this authority to the President so that he can pry open new markets for U.S. workers, producers, farmers, and businesses.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the worst thing that happens today on the birthday of the gentleman from California (Mr. Thomas) is defeat of this bill and that the rest of the day goes well for him.

But the best thing that could happen for the country is that we defeat the bill and try to do it the right way.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Gephardt), the minority leader.

Mr. GEHPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, first I want to recognize the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rangel), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Bonior), the gentleman from California (Mr. Matsui), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Levin) for a tremendous job in putting together the motion to recommit that I supported. This morning, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Gephardt) asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. GEHPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask Members to vote yes on the motion to recommit; and if it does not prevail, I ask Members to vote no on the underlying bill that has been presented here by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Let me first say that I would have hoped that we could have been on the floor today with worker relief. We are 11-plus weeks since September 11. We have thousands of workers who have lost their jobs.

While we seem to find time for insurance company relief and airline company relief, and now a big trade bill, and lots of appropriation bills, all of which are important and all of which have great support, we cannot seem to find time to take care of the most important thing in front of us. It is because we are not unemployed. If one is unemployed, unemployment is the biggest problem. They cannot get health insurance today. They cannot support their families. I talk to unemployed workers every day. Their problem right now, this week, I would hope that we would get relief for them soon. They need it. We have to do it. They deserve it. Rather than taking up every other manner of bill, I hope we would take that up.

But let me direct my remarks to the bill from the Committee on Ways and Means and why I think it is ill-advised and why the kind of bill that will be presented on the motion to recommit I think is the right way to go.

Let me say that over 20 years now, we have made great progress, in my view, on trade policy in America. Trade policy today is not what it was 20 years ago. There is a good reason. In trade negotiations, 20 years ago the only thing that was ever really considered were tariffs. It was a matter of trying to get down high protective tariffs all over the world so that trade would take place between countries.

Today, we have moved way down the road and the issues are not just tariffs, the issues are really about compatibility: how do we get intellectual property laws in countries to be properly enforced; how do we get capital laws to be enforced.

What we have brought to the table and tried to get on the table is the question of whether or not labor laws, human rights laws, environmental laws, health and safety laws, should be just as much a part of trade negotiations as intellectual property laws and capital laws.

Now, we have made a lot of progress. We had a treaty with Jordan that was recently brought to the Congress that dealt with those matters, to the satisfaction of the Government of Jordan and to the satisfaction of the United States.

We now go to another WTO Round. There are lots of other free trade treaties that we want to negotiate, that we should negotiate; but it is vital and important that the full range of issues that should be in those negotiations are on the table in the core text of the treaties.

I was at Microsoft last week, and one of the executives at Microsoft said to me, our intellectual property is still the trade tariff. It is not being paid for our Windows software in China. They can buy it on the street corner, pirated copies. You need to do more, he said, to enforce the intellectual property agreements that are in the treaties with the WTO and now China.

Labor unions, workers, people concerned about the environment, people... worried about health and safety laws have the same feeling about things they care about. At the end of the day, I think what this comes down to is what one worries about.

What do Members care about? If they care about getting wages up in their countries or about the way they live, then this is a long march to bring about compatibility across the world so that we have real compatibility in countries, if we really worry about having consumption as well as production, if Members believe in price control and putting the strike away, then this is a long march. Because the leader of the new independent union, a woman, went to each house of every worker in that plant and got them to support the strike. And they said to me, when I met with them, they would have had we had a provision in a trade treaty with Mexico that they could have used to try to get labor laws in Mexico to be properly enforced so it would have been easier for them to succeed in what they finally succeeded in. One of the first times that it has happened. I think we need to help people like that in our own self-interest and in the interest of our economy. Trade is a critical issue going forward for this country.

I agree with a lot of the statements that have been made on the other side of the aisle. We are the leader, we are the one that needs to bring trade policies to the world. But in order to do it correctly we have to insist on that, that is what this debate is about. I urge Members to vote yes on the motion to recommit. I urge Members to vote no if that motion to recommit does not succeed. We can come back here, I am confident if we turn down this ill-advised bill, and we can reach a bipartisan consensus on a trade bill that should get 400 votes on the floor of this House of Representatives. Let us do that and do it very soon.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT), the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me time.

Mr. McCurdy, a former member of your House, went to each member of your House or in your state. And before he got them to support the strike, he had to have the same feeling about things he talked about today I do agree with.

We talked about unemployed workers. We have seen 700,000 workers in the unions get laid off since September 11. We need to stimulate our economy. We need to support those things that make this economy work. And one of the ways to do that is to be aggressive, something that we have not been able to do for a number of years; go overseas, make the agreements, make the deals that we have to, sell our products, put our people to work, create jobs in this country, and stimulate and pass legislation that gives the President of the United States the abilities to go out and make those agreements.

We have talked about maybe this bill does not have all of the good things in it maybe other bills did. We have talked about the Jordan trade agreement we just passed a short time ago. But I can tell you, this bill has those agreements in it that were in the Jordan trade agreement. The issues of workers, the issues of environment are put into this agreement, put in this bill.

They talk about being able to negotiate on the international property rights. I understand the problems of trading with China and trading with other places that do not quite have the laws that we have. But unless you have the structure so that our administration and others can go forward and negotiate and lay down the agreements so that we can protect ourselves with international property rights and others, we will not be able to make them because you cannot do it by waving a wand and you cannot do it by coercion. You have to do it by negotiation, and you have to have the ability to do that.

I stood on this floor 5 years ago to give then President Clinton the ability for Fast Track authority. I did that because I thought it was the right thing to do. I did it because I thought the President of the United States, regardless of party, ought to be able to go out to make agreements and negotiations and then bring them to this Congress for us to agree with or to disagree with.

Today I rise in support of this legislation giving a new President Trade Promotion Authority. And I urge all of my colleagues to do it. As I said, this is a defining vote for this Congress. This Congress will either support our President, who is fighting a courageous war on terrorism and redefining American world leadership, or it will undercut the President at the worst possible time.

David McCurdy, a former member of this body, now head of a high-tech trade group, said, this vote is every bit as important as our vote to give the President the authority to fight the war on terrorism; this vote is being watched today closely by our allies and by our adversaries.

Ironically, there is more at stake here if we fail than if we succeed. If this vote prevails, the President has the authority to negotiate other free trade agreements. That is it. The President still has to bring those agreements back to this Congress for approval. If we do not like those deals we can still reject them. But if we vote down this legislation, we send a terrible signal to the rest of the world. We say to the world that the Congress will not give the President the authority to make trade agreements.

Mr. Speaker, it is always an honor to speak before you. I urge Members to vote yes on the bill the Committee on Ways and Means brought forward.

□ 1515

Now, let me end with this. I was in Pueblo, Mexico recently and I met with people in a factory there that went on strike, put together an independent union, something that has not often happened. I told them that if they really wanted to bring trade policy that I think is suggested in the motion to recommit, and not suggested in the bill the Committee on Ways and Means brought forward.
of unemployment insurance legislation for those affected by the recession and the September 11 terrorist attacks. I also wish this legislation had incorporated more meaningful language on reform of the trade adjustment assistance program. Only after intense pressure and the prospect of failure did the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the White House concede that more must be done to meet the needs of American workers suffering from the recession and those who lose their job as a direct result of trade. With my colleague, Anna Eshoo, I have offered legislation that would offer a real reform of the TAA program, and I am hopeful that the Senate companion to this bill—S. 1209—is considered in short order by the full Senate, and serves as the primary vehicle for conference consideration.

Despite these concerns, I believe passage of this legislation is needed to produce strong trade agreements that open and expand markets for U.S. goods and service. To create new opportunities for American workers and their families, Congress must support policies that encourage growth and increased living standards in the U.S. Passage of this legislation will send a strong signal to the rest of the world that the President and Congress are prepared to act. As a result, U.S. leadership on global trade, and provides much needed momentum to advance new and existing trade negotiations around the world.

I do not believe the underlying bill went far enough in creating Congressional consultation with the inclusion of a language creating a Congressional Oversight Group, comprised of members from all relevant committees, who are the briefs regularly, have access to negotiating documents and become accredited members to the U.S. delegation to ongoing trade negotiation. This measure also allows Congress to limit the ability of TPA procedures as a result of an Administration’s failure to consult. And at the end of every negotiation, Congress retains the most important protection against an agreement that is not in our nation’s interest—the right to approve or disapprove the final agreement.

I also believe passage of this legislation is needed to continue to foster economic growth worldwide. Indeed, trade and economic growth provide a mechanism to help developing countries expand their middle class and improve their standard of living. Since the end of World War II, the liberalization of trade has helped to produce a six-fold increase in growth in the world economy and a tripling of per capita income that has enabled hundreds of millions of families escape from poverty and establish a higher standard of living. I believe passage of this bill helps us to continue to advance those goals which support not only our economic growth potential, but also helps preserve our national security.

This bill does provide for issue related to enforcement of labor and environmental laws to be principal objectives in any trade agreement negotiated under TPA and that there can be no backsliding on current law. This is a strong provision compared to earlier versions including the original Crane bill. This measure requires the President to determine a remedy to meet any non-enforcement, and I believe such a provision provides an Administration with the latitude necessary to negotiate reasonable enforcement provision without mandating specific penalties—an action that would keep many of our prospective trading partners away from the negotiating table.

It would be wrong to ignore the public ambivalence regarding globalization, and we must recognize that while trade provides an overall benefit, there are those who lose, and the result can be devastating to working families and entire communities. It is important that as we help our negotiators in this difficult process, that there is clear followthrough on commitments to provide enhanced unemployment assistance and health benefits. Further, I strongly urge that any final package include an enhanced and expanded TAA provision like that provided in H.R. 3359. Lacking that, I, and others, believe, we should find it hard to support a conference report.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, as we debate trade authority, let’s not forget the fastest growing and most exciting segment of American exporters—our small business exporters. Trade Promotion Authority surely will assist our negotiators in lowering barriers for this most promising engine of our exporting industries. Small businesses and family farmers in America will especially benefit from new trade agreements because exporting is the only way they can diversify their exports. With Trade Promotion Authority, the President can more quickly ink foreign trade deals that will give our small businesses new markets to sell their goods and services.

The role of small business in our domestic economy is documented. America’s 25 million-plus small companies are the backbone of our economy. They create three of every four new jobs, produce most innovations, and generate over half of the nation’s private gross domestic product.

The role of small business in international trade is less well known. In fact, small businesses account for nearly 97 percent of the total number of all U.S. exporters. The number of small business exporters has tripled over the past decade or so, increasing to over 224,000 small businesses directly involved in exporting. Small businesses now account for 29 percent of total merchandise export sales spread throughout every industrial classification. What is more surprising is that the fastest growth among small business exporters has been with lower than 20 employees. These very small businesses represented 69 percent of all exporting companies in 1999. Obviously, trade is essential to their future and to all they employ—particularly at a time when our economy is facing difficulties. That’s why groups like the Small Business Exporters Association have strongly endorsed H.R. 3005. Please find enclosed a copy of their letter to me.

Our nation also is poised to expand its exports in services, which is the fastest growing sector of our economy and one in which small and medium-sized firms thrive. In fact, the service sector accounts for 80 percent of U.S. Gross Domestic Product and U.S. employment—83 million jobs. These service jobs are good paying jobs—their average annual income of $32,865 a year slightly exceeds the average annual income of manufacturing jobs. Although we in Congress tend to think of trade primarily in terms of goods, our services trade is where we have our competitive edge. The U.S. is the world’s largest exporter of services—services such as telecommunications and information technology, construction and retrofitting, venture capital, and funds management, energy, legal and educational services, accounting, express delivery, travel and tourism. This sector has created more than 20 million new jobs since 1998, generates a $76.5 billion annual trade surplus, and provides the greatest opportunity to increase American prosperity through international trade. To capitalize on our competitive edge and gain the benefits in economic prosperity and jobs, we need to remove the many kinds of complex barriers that now block our trade.

In my own district in northern Illinois, small manufacturers are learning that if they want to remain in business they must begin tapping markets in Canada, Mexico, and overseas. In 1999, the Rockford metropolitan area exported $857.2 million worth of goods and services, an increase of 64 percent since 1993, to practically every area of the world. As exporting opportunities become known, northern Illinois small and family owned businesses are taking advantage of them. For example, a tool and die business with 40 employees attended a successful trade mission to Mexico with the Administrator of the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Despite these encouraging statistics and trends, there is much more work to do. While small business exporters have more than tripled in number, they still form less than one percent of all small businesses in the United States. Even among these cutting-edge small firms, nearly two-thirds sold to just one foreign country in 1999. In fact, small business exporters sold less than $250,000 worth of goods abroad. In other words, many of these small firms are “casual” exporters.

The key is to encourage more small businesses to enter the trade arena and then provide the “casual” exporters the tools to become more active. If we were able to move in this direction, it could boost our exports by several billion dollars. We need to get these engines of our domestic economic growth fully engaged in the global marketplace. Hopefully, when Trade Promotion Authority is returned from the other chamber, it will contain a provision to create an Assistant United States Trade Representative for Small Business.

Trade barriers are insurmountable for small business exporters. While most large companies can either export or set up a factory overseas, most small business exporters have one choice—that is to export from America. In addition, there are many complicated issues that face small business exporters, such as standardizing foreign customs practices. Trade Promotion Authority will give the President the tools he needs to negotiate away these unfair trade barriers.

Trade Promotion Authority has been granted to the last six American Presidents. It simply gives the President the ability to negotiate trade agreements in a timely fashion. Once a trade deal is inked, the House and Senate have 90 days to approve it on an up or down vote. Under the version considered today, Congress will be more involved than ever in foreign trade deals because the bill creates a Congress with 370 people to oversee these negotiations and consult with the Administration throughout the process.

Currently, more than 134 trade agreements exist in the world and the United States is party to only two of them. Trade Promotion Authority would help the President open new markets to American products, knocking down unfair tariffs and foreign trade practices and preserving and creating more high-paying jobs. in the United States. American jobs that involve exporting pay 13 to 18 percent more than other jobs.

Expanded trade is needed now more than ever. In these tough economic times, American workers need work. This legislation will not only help, but it will give employers new markets to increase their business so they can put unemployed Americans back to work where they belong.

Economic studies show that a new World Trade Organization (WTO) round would produce enormous benefits for the United States. If the round reduced existing tariffs and all service barriers by one-third, it has the potential to add $177 billion to the U.S. economy. Removal of all trade barriers would add $553 billion to the U.S. economy, $450 billion of which would be from services.

Services and agricultural negotiations need to be re-energized by a successful new trade round. Nothing would assist American success in these talks, and continuing bilateral and multilateral negotiations, than the passage of Trade Promotion Authority. Without a new round, these negotiations will run out of steam, and our companies, economy, and job-creation potential will suffer.

Renewing TPA will show our trading partners that we have the political will to start and conclude serious negotiations. I urge my colleagues’ support of H.R. 3005.

DEAR REP. MANZULLO: As the Chairman of the House Small Business Committee, you are one of Congress most committed advocates of small business growth and prosperity. The Small Business Exporters Association urges you to act on that commitment tomorrow — by voting for Trade Promotion Authority for this and future Presidents.

This issue is sometimes seen as a struggle between the priorities of big business and big labor. It is anything but. As the nation’s oldest and largest association dedicated exclusively to the mid-size U.S. companies that are the engine of small business growth and prosperity, SBEA is hearing loud and clear from its members that TPA may well make or break their ability to compete globally.

The vote of small business exporters in the US has tripled, reaching more than 200,000, smaller exporters face huge new challenges, and our progress is at risk. The high cost of the dollar in foreign currencies and the worldwide economic softening have dealt serious blows to our ability to sell abroad.

We’re also losing customers as free trade agreements spread around the world — without the US — and our products grow more expensive as a result.

Big businesses can deal with the high dollar and the free trade agreements by shifting production overseas. Small business can’t. Price us out of the market and we’re out. America loses the sales, jobs and economic growth.

The vote on TPA tomorrow will send a powerful signal — whether Congress intends to strengthen a strategic growth area of the American economy, or accentuate a downward economic spiral.

SBEA understands that compromises will be necessary in the months ahead. There are many interests affected by US trade agreements. These compromises. But a vote against TPA is not a vote for compromise. It is a vote to end the discussion.

We hope that you will stand with small business tomorrow.

Regards,

JAMES MORRISON.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise not in opposition to free trade, or trade promotion authority. I come to the floor today to register my strong support for Chairman THOMAS and the Republican leadership have chosen H.R. 3005. For the “Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001” is nothing but simply, does not fully address the well founded concerns many Americans have about international trade.

Let me begin by stating that I am in favor of sensible, sustainable international trade. The United States is a major part of the global economy, and the health of this nation and its workers depends upon the ability of American producers and service providers to have access to markets to conduct business. It was Democratic President John F. Kennedy who stated, “A rising tide lifts all boats.” I firmly believe that in the case of international trade, this sentiment rings true, and that an economically stable world where everyone can aspire to a standard of living that reflects the elbow grease and ingenuity of its people is within our reach.

Mr. Speaker, I have genuine concerns about the current state of the global economy. Over the last two years, the World Trade Organization has impacted the entire world. The Bush administration has finally acknowledged that not only are we in a recession, but that we have been a recession since March. The recent tragedies associated with September 11 and the U.S. Postal Service have shaken the confidence of this nation’s workforce even more, and despite the thousands of jobs that have been lost, the families who have suffered the most from the sum total of events have been least on the agenda of the Republican Majority in this Congress.

My own district, Texas’ 18th is a glaring example of the competition that exists between ensuring the stability of working families and adapting to the realities of the new global economy. Recently, the economic tide caught us off guard in my region. The recent tragedies associated with September 11 and the U.S. Postal Service have shaken the confidence of this nation’s workforce even more, and despite the thousands of jobs that have been lost, the families who have suffered the most from the sum total of events have been least on the agenda of the Republican Majority in this Congress.

My own district, Texas’ 18th is a glaring example of the competition that exists between ensuring the stability of working families and adapting to the realities of the new global economy. Recently, the economic tide caught us off guard in my region. The recent tragedies associated with September 11 and the U.S. Postal Service have shaken the confidence of this nation’s workforce even more, and despite the thousands of jobs that have been lost, the families who have suffered the most from the sum total of events have been least on the agenda of the Republican Majority in this Congress.

International trade is vital to the health of my district. The Business Roundtable estimates that exports directly support 10,000 jobs in my district. Another 55,000 jobs with wholesalers and service providers either wholly or partially depend upon export sales. By the same token, though NAFTA has lead to a 100 percent increase in Texas exports to Canada and Mexico, this trade agreement has resulted in severe distress to America’s steel industry. It has cost literally thousands of U.S. jobs and forced district manufacturers like Maas Flange to seek and obtain a remedy from the International Trade Commission.

Every Member here today can outline a similar set of tensions when determining the best course of action for their district. In the years since Trade Promotion Authority, or Fast Track, expired in 1994, we have had the opportunity to witness the power of free trade. We have also learned the reality that the trade rules can have a profound impact on labor forces as well as the local and global environment.

As a legislator, I take seriously my constitutional obligations to balance these competing interests. Thus, I believe that any system of trade guidelines dispensed to the President should fully discharge our constitutional obligations and responsibilities to our respective districts.

H.R. 3005—railroaded through committee by Chairman THOMAS—does not strike this balance. At best, the legislation pays lip service to the concerns of the labor and environmental communities, and fails to substantively address the concerns of the American people that our trade policy be constitutionally sound.

To begin, H.R. 3005 does not require countries to implement any of the five core ILO standards; the right of association; the right to collective bargaining; bans on child labor; compulsory labor; or discrimination. H.R. 3005 requires only that a country enforce its existing law—whatever law that happens to be. Through proponents of the legislation claim that H.R. 3005 does require countries to consider labor standards, the bill constructs these core standards as mere “general negotiating objectives.”

Thus, negation on, or implementation of, labor considerations in trade agreements enacted under this formula would not be subject to the economic realities of a global trade regime. Instead, they would be subject to the whims of the negotiators and their political masters. The bill also compels us to continue to enforce whichever labor standards they have, rather than recognizing the ILO conventions. Consequently, rather than ensuring that we foster positive labor standards with our trading partners in order to keep multinationals from exploiting foreign laborers, the bill would unilaterally force the detriment of their domestic workers, this bill would encourage it. No greater incentive to stabilize worker conditions around the world is contained in this bill, than in previous versions of Trade Promotion Authority that were voted down by this Body. Yet this bill is supposed to help create and keep American Jobs.

H.R. 3005 also falls severely short of incorporating the environmental externalities associated with international trade as a component of the trade agenda. This bill considers environmental objectives to be “general negotiating objectives as well.

However, H.R. 3005 does not require any concrete action from U.S. negotiators. The bill requires only that the President “consult” with other countries and “promote consideration” of Multilateral Environmental Agreements. Thus, the bill contains no real assurances that the environment will be respected. H.R. 3005 would also allow greater rights for foreign investors in U.S. than U.S. firms due to its mimicry of NAFTA’s chapter 11 investment expropriation and takings, and it does not address key concerns raised under NAFTA’s investment rules that allow for the challenge of laws which are “tantamount to expropriation.”

Last Minute changes to H.R. 3005 in this area are an indication of the flawed philosophy behind the Thomas legislation. The House leadership has paid too little attention too late in this process to convince this Body that labor and the environment are legislative priorities of U.S. international trade, and they should be.

Finally, this bill does not fully discharge Congress’ constitutional obligations regarding U.S. trade. Simply put, H.R. 3005 includes no effective mechanism for congressional participation in developing international trade. The bill includes only more consultations and a recycled oversight mechanism from the 1988 law that was never used, which requires the Ways and Means and Finance Committees to act as gatekeepers. This function has never previously been utilized effectively, and there is no reason to assume this will change.

The Leadership of this House has made a mistake with this legislation. Recent trade agreements with Jordan and the Andean countries prove that Congressional priorities and international trade can be reconciled. Thus, to send a bill to the floor which does not ensure the recent trends in U.S. Law are respected is an irresponsible way to conduct trade policy. As such, despite my support of free trade, I cannot support the trade regime fostered by this legislation.

Only H.R. 3019 fosters trade in a manner that considers its effects on workforces, the environment, our national sovereignty, and our constitutional obligations as members of Congress. The bill makes international labor standards a specific negotiating objective of the Free Trade Area of the Americas, and it requires the establishment of a Working Group on Trade and Labor within the WTO. H.R. 3019 also provides a real mechanism for members of Congress to play an ongoing role in this increasingly important sector by structuring a review process of ongoing negotiations and increasing congressional oversight of negotiating objectives.

International trade is vital to the people of the 18th district of Texas. So too are their jobs, the environment, and the freedom of our nation. It is our mandate as legislators to balance these interests for the good of our nation. The H.R. 3005 version of trade promotion authority does not do this, and I therefore cannot support it. By putting politics before policy, the Republican leadership has ruined an opportunity to "lift all boats," for only the H.R. 3019 version of Trade Promotion Authority has the opportunity to ride a "rising tide of support to passage."

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3005, the "Fast Track" Trade Promotion Authority bill and in support of the Rangel substitute in the motion to recommit.

As a member of this House and as a member of the California Assembly prior to my election to the House, I have been a long-time supporter of free trade policies. As a Californian, I understand very well the many advantages that come from open markets, the lowering of tariffs, and the elimination of other trade barriers that prevent American products from competing on a level playing field in overseas markets.

American workers are the most productive workers in the world, and consumers around the world desire quality American products. I strongly believe that given a level playing field, American companies will thrive in overseas markets.

I am also well aware of the value of open markets to American consumers. Americans are shrewd consumers. Their open-minded attitude in considering and purchasing quality goods produced in other countries instills competition in both American and foreign companies which, in turn, lowers prices for American families and increases their real income.

Knowing the many benefits of increased trade between the U.S. and other countries, I voted for the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), and for many years, I have supported legislation to increase trade, such as "most favored nation" status for China. I did so because of promises made to address the negative impacts of free trade agreements on U.S. workers and industries. However, once the trade agreement passed through Congress, it was forgotten.

Since the passage of NAFTA, on numerous occasions, I have loudly voiced my concerns to Cabinet officials and trade negotiators about the necessity to live up to the promises to help displaced workers. One such promise was the establishment of the Community Adjustment and Investment Program—CAIP—which was intended to provide financial assistance for American companies located in NAFTA trade-affected areas. In practice however, CAIP did little to help these companies. In fact, CAIP was never of any assistance to the garment industry located in my district, which experienced enormous job losses after the passage of NAFTA. CAIP's overly stringent eligibility requirements completely overlooked textile manufacturing companies that did not meet the job loss threshold requirements. This essentially makes the CAIP program meaningless and ineffective.

Meanwhile, last year the Los Angeles Times reported that employment in the Los Angeles area fell by 100,000 for the first time since NAFTA was enacted in 1994, with nearly 13,000 jobs lost since 1997 alone. The jobs lost have almost exclusively been blue-collar sewing jobs.

Knowing that adequate and appropriate safeguards are not currently in place to help our nation's displaced workers, I cannot support extending Trade Promotion Authority to the President. I also cannot support this bill, because it does not sufficiently address my growing concerns regarding issues of labor standards, environmental protections, and congressional oversight on trade negotiations.

I regret that the Rules Committee has recommended a closed rule on this bill specifically blocking Democrats from offering amendments to address the concerns regarding this bill.

However, while I will oppose the Thomas bill, I will support the Rangel substitute in the motion to recommit. The Rangel bill includes provisions that address many of my concerns about labor rights, environmental protections, and congressional review. First, the Rangel substitute sets out clear negotiating objectives for labor standards. The Rangel substitute for bids slave labor, and outlines strict rules on the use of child labor, and on the freedom of workers to associate and bargain collectively. The Thomas bill, in contrast, has no requirement that a country's laws include any of the five core International Labor Organization standards.

Second, the Rangel substitute sets out clear negotiating objectives for environmental standards. The Rangel substitute requires countries to enforce their own national environmental laws and prevent them from waiving existing standards for the purpose of gaining a competitive advantage. The Thomas bill does little to ensure that environmental rules established by Multilateral Environmental Agreements have the same status to other provisions of trade agreements.

Third, the Rangel bill ensures a continuing and active role for Congress in setting U.S. trade policy. It does this by replacing the ineffective mechanisms included in the 1988 "fast track" law with a procedure for structured biennial review of ongoing trade negotiations subject to fast track. It also gives Congress an opportunity to pass a resolution of disapproval if the U.S. decides to inaugurate a new round of negotiations. The Rangel bill helps to ensure that Congress is an active participant in important negotiations. The Thomas bill's approach is to view Congress as an occasional consultant.

In short, although it is not perfect, I believe the Rangel substitute addresses most of the legitimate concerns that have been raised about the negotiation of free-trade agreements.

Free trade agreements and free trade policies are desirable goals, but we should never forget that they also impact many Americans adversely. By requiring implementation of labor and environmental standards, together with the active involvement of Members of Congress both Republican and Democratic administrations are likely to construct trade policies consistent with our principles as a society.

The Rangel substitute is the best vehicle for achieving this goal. I urge my colleagues to support the motion to recommit and oppose the Thomas bill.

Mr. LIPIŃSKI. Mr. Speaker, trade is clearly an important component of our national economy. Accordingly, I strongly support fair trade laws that ensure a competitive foundation for American exports by promoting American values. Fair trade laws ensure that workers and the environment do not get exploited for short-sighted profits; free and unfettered trade agreements trade away American jobs. The language in H.R. 3005 provides hollow promises to the environment and American workers.

For years, supporters of these agreements have argued that trade is the cure-all for the American economy. To the contrary, the U.S. economy has been struggling for some time now, and we have empty trade agreements to thank for it. We simply cannot have free trade at any cost.

Currently, we are not the time to pass fast-track authority. In the third quarter of this year, economic activity fell 1.1%; there is virtual agreement that the United States economy is in recession. Last year, the U.S. trade deficit reached a record $435 billion. Including interest payments, the United States' net foreign debt is 22% of the gross domestic product.

Not surprisingly, personal bankruptcies hit an all-time high of 1.4 million this year. The unemployment rate has been rising steadily, and the number of laid-off workers receiving unemployment benefits rose to 3.8 million last month, the highest level since I came to Congress. But there's more: Industrial construction is at its lowest level in 7 years. Since last July, 1.5 million U.S. manufacturing jobs have been lost, and 26 steel companies have gone bankrupt.

These conditions hit too close to home for my constituents. In my home state of Illinois, the fourth-largest economy in the union, economic activity has fallen for seven straight months. Output at factories in the Chicago area has contracted for 14 straight months. Last month, a Clorox plant in my district closed and laid off 95 workers. Furthermore, a 3M tape production facility announced it would shutter operations in December.

It is this legislation that a country... working Chicagoans. Both companies cited the global economic downturn as the reason for these closures.

Mr. Speaker, given a fair environment, our workers will out-perform any competitor. But we cannot compete with countries that subjugate their environment and pay their workers $0.90 per day. Now, at the midst of a recession, we are asked to vote to further these problems. I urge a “no” vote on H.R. 3005. Now is definitely not the time for fast track authority.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice strong support for free and fair trade but also my opposition to the Representative THOMAS’s Fast-Track bill. As a cofounder and a current leader of the New Democrats, I am dedicated to finding new and innovative approaches to expanding our trade opportunities. Over the course of my six terms in Congress, I have demonstrated a strong record on free trade by voting for the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act, the Caribbean Basin Initiative (BCI), Permanent Normal Trade Relations (PNTR) and, most recently the Andean Trade Promotion Act.

The global landscape for trade among nations continues to grow in complexity, however, as more nations enter the international market to trade goods and services. Just as we advocate a fiscally responsible government that encourages economic growth, so must we support free and fair trade agreements that recognize the challenges faced by American workers in the age of globalization. The opportunity exists for the United States to act as a world leader by enacting strong trade provisions that protect the American worker and the environment. The Thomas bill missed this opportunity by failing to enact meaningful labor and environmental standards.

If you look at past free trade trade negotiations leading up to the Doha Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization last month, the incremental increase in complexity and detail involved in trade negotiations is striking. In 1979, the Tokyo Round Agreement included only six areas for negotiation. Some of these areas included tariff levels, government procurement, and technical product standards. In 1994, the Uruguay Round negotiations integrated upwards of sixteen areas for trade negotiation including new issues such as intellectual property rights and trade in agriculture. In November 2001, the Doha Ministerial WTO Negotiations included upwards of 26 areas for debate. Among the issues open for negotiation were anti-trust laws, electronic commerce, and product labeling to name a few.

As free trade negotiations between nations involve more issues, there is absolutely no excuse to exclude new compliance standards regarding labor and the environment. This is the time for the United States to take the lead to ensure that American jobs are protected at home and that human rights laws are enforced by our trading partners.

The Thomas bill falls short of a guarantee for strong labor standards. By merely requiring a country to enforce its own existing labor laws, the Thomas bill provides no U.S. incentive for a country to create a more favorable environment for our workers. By merely requiring a country to enforce its own existing labor laws, the Thomas bill provides no U.S. incentive for a country to create a more favorable environment for our workers.

The Thomas bill falls short of any meaningful protections for the environment, as well. Because only voluntary negotiating objectives are in place, trading partners can lower their environmental standards to gain unfair trade advantages. Furthermore, the Thomas bill does not block foreign investors lawsuits from challenging domestic environmental laws.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, during these times of uncertainty brought about by the war on terrorism and an apparent economic slowdown, we must heed the challenge to think anew when it comes to U.S. Trade Policy. We must balance our commitment to trading our goods and services abroad while also ensuring the protection and well-being of our workers. The Thomas bill is unbalanced and would represent a step backwards in our pursuit for free and fair trade.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I commend the diligent efforts of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from California, Mr. THOMAS, my colleague in drafting an amendment, and sponsoring H.R. 3005, the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001.

This measure has been referred to as the most environmentally and labor responsive legislative initiative (i.e. Fast Track) to be sponsored by the Congress. However, I share the concerns raised by my constituents in that H.R. 3005’s labor and environmental standards do not go far enough to ensure a level playing field in trade agreements. H.R. 3005 refers to environmental and labor provisions as negotiating objectives. Nevertheless, our trade history reveals that during the past 25 years including labor rights, and now environmental rights, as “negotiating objectives” do not guarantee that these provisions will actually be included in trade agreements. The trade landscape has changed. Of the 142 members comprising the World Trade Organization (WTO), 100 are classified as developing nations and 30 are referred to as lesser-developed nations. Why is this important? It is important because with China’s accession into the WTO, those 130 nations will then become more forceful in promoting their own trade agendas. What H.R. 3005 does is create an incentive for a nation to create a more favorable trade agreement for itself by lowering its environmental and labor standards. At best, many of these nations’ labor and environmental standards are substandard.

As drafted, the overall negotiating objective of H.R. 3005 is to promote respect for worker rights. My constituents are concerned that the worker negotiation does not guarantee that “core” labor standards are included in the corpus of prospective trade agreements. By core labor standards, I refer to the International Labor Organization’s 1998 Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work: freedom of association, the right to organize and bargain for better terms and conditions of work, the right not to be free from child labor, forced labor and employment discrimination, which many people throughout the world are confronted with.

My constituents are troubled that H.R. 3005 does not require any signatory to an agreement to improve or even to maintain that its domestic laws comply with the standards of the International Labor Organization. Among H.R. 3005’s principal objectives is a provision entitled labor and the environment, which calls for the signatories to trade agreements to enforce their own environment and labor laws. Our nation as a leader in the global trade community must set the example by encouraging our prospective trading partners to raise labor and environmental standards before we enter into any trade agreements with them. In the end, it will be the United States which is called upon to provide the resources to clean up environmental disasters and to bail out collapsed economies that failed as a result of substandard labor conditions.

Through their first-hand accounts, my constituents report that workers in many nations in which we seek to enter into bilateral and multilateral trade agreements are subjected to labor and environmental violations. Why is this important? It is important because with China’s accession into the WTO, these 130 nations will then become more forceful in promoting their own trade agendas. What H.R. 3005 does is create an incentive for a nation to create a more favorable trade agreement for itself by lowering its environmental and labor standards. As drafted, the overall negotiating objective of H.R. 3005 is to promote respect for worker rights. My constituents are concerned that the worker negotiation does not guarantee that “core” labor standards are included in the corpus of prospective trade agreements. By core labor standards, I refer to the International Labor Organization’s 1998 Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work: freedom of association, the right to organize and bargain for better terms and conditions of work, the right not to be free from child labor, forced labor and employment discrimination, which many people throughout the world are confronted with.

NAFTA’s Chapter 11 cases such as Methanex v. United States, allow a foreign investor to sue a signatory government if their company’s assets, including lost profits and other intangibles are damaged by our laws or regulations. The provisions of Chapter 11 call for an arbitration panel, which meets in secret, and its findings are not subject to public disclosure.

NAFTA’s Chapter 11 standard of proof is much lower than what our own courts would require in a commercial case. The standard is lower than the regulation that covered a company’s investments and can be construed as an expropriation, which generally requires a physical taking of property or assets, even though in Chapter 11 cases no assets were physically taken. By virtue of this provision, our laws may be challenged in ways not foreseen by our Congress and in ways that are inconsistent with our own court’s judicial interpretation, which are rendered irrelevant by NAFTA’s Chapter 11 provision. Methanex is seeking $700 million dollars.

Mr. Speaker, we must seek out ways to make trade compatible with conservation of the environment and by adhering to core labor and environmental standards that are both incorporated into the body of a trade agreement and enforceable.

Accordingly, I am not able to support H.R. 3005.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001. This important legislation will allow the United States to negotiate trade agreements in order to increase exports and stimulate our economic recovery here at home. It will also enable the President and Congress to work together to advance our interests around the world by guaranteeing Congress substantial participation in trade negotiations and allowing the President the authority to sign meaningful agreements.

Today’s economy is dependent on global trade. Therefore, American businesses must have access to foreign markets. There must be a level playing field. Farmers throughout my state of Kansas depend on foreign markets to purchase significant portions of their crops and livestock. And in a time where productivity threatens the viability of the domestic market to absorb current production levels, the need to create overseas customers is more important than ever. In fact, Agriculture must export one-third of its production because it is nearly three times more dependent on exports than other sectors.

Mr. Speaker, it’s not just agriculture which benefits from free trade. Boeing, the largest exporter in the United States, sells more than half of its commercial planes to overseas customers. Last year, the company, which employs nearly 200,000 Americans, reported that one-third of its sales were to international customers.

Expanded trade has never been more important. Economists agree that America is in a recession and we must work to get our economy and jobs workingail. This is an opportunity to boost the economy by opening new markets. This bill ultimately saves American consumers money, it increases American exports, it creates American jobs, and it guarantees that the United States will remain the world’s economic leader.

I urge my colleagues to vote “yes” on the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, this has been a long day in a needlessly partisan fight.

I support Trade Promotion Authority and have voted for it in the past. The bill I voted for in 1998 is not as good as the text before us today.

I represent a trade-dependent district, and understand very well why trade helps our economy.

But context matters. Our country was in a serious economic recession before September 11, and now faces enormous hardships just as the holiday season arrives. Forty-one thousand workers lost their jobs in the communities surrounding Los Angeles International Airport. Their airline and airport-affiliated jobs evaporated in the aftermath of 9–11.

Workers first, Mr. Chairman. Those workers and those negatively impacted by September 11 must be helped first before we pass TPA.

I support the package of worker benefits that the House leadership supports: $20 billion for unemployment, health insurance and worker training. The President has told me he supports it too.

My wish was that working together we could vote and pass it first as evidence that we would keep our promises to workers.

Sadly we did not. Sadly I can’t support TPA today until we do.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Trade Promotion Authority. As a lifelong supporter of improved trade opportunities for American producers, my inclination always is to begin with a favorable disposition toward trade bilis which come before Congress. I am convinced that American producers can, and do, win with freer and fairer trade. Certainly, not every conceivable trade bill deserves support, but in general, I am strongly persuaded that increased trade opportunities improve the lives and pocketbooks of American workers. I also believe that enhanced trade is a potent mechanism for America to export our values, practices and democracy along with our products.

Unfortunately, early messages from the current administration forced me to question whether enhanced trade authority would be prudently used if granted this year. In particular, I was sorely disappointed by statements by the current Administration which made me doubt their understanding of both our domestic and our foreign policies and, particularly, the impact of those policies on the producers of our Nation’s food and fiber. I am not going to be party to a unilateral disarray of our farmers and ranchers for someone else’s partisan philosophical reasons.

Furthermore, the early handling of this issue by both the Administration and the House leadership confirmed what has appeared to me throughout the year as legislative arrogance. While it may be numerically possible to pass bills with Republican-only votes, ultimately there is a price to be paid for this sort of short-sighted partisanship by either party. Successful trade legislation always has required bipartisan support; when the well of goodwill has been drained by earlier legislative battles on partisan grounds, issues like trade arrive with inadequate troops supporting the effort.

All of that being said, I am reassured both by several conversations I personally have had and by those which have been reported to me from colleagues who share some of my concerns. As a naturally optimistic person, I am willing to hope that this experience might signal an awakening to political and legislative realities by some important players in both the executive and legislative branches.

With my chairman on the Agriculture Committee, I am supporting the trade promotion authority legislation before us today. I do believe that the enhanced congressional consultation and oversight in the current bill are vital for ensuring that our constituencies’ views and needs are respected by our trade negotiators. I highly commend this and other improvements made by my colleagues JOHN TANNER, BILL JEFFERSON, and CARL DOOLEY.

The truth about trade is that there always are both successes and failures, winners and losers. But for the Nation as a whole, trade is a net positive.

When it comes to agriculture, the successes have outweighed the failures. American farmers and ranchers now make a quarter of their sales to overseas markets; U.S. agriculture consistently enjoys a trade surplus; and next year agricultural exports are expected to reach $54.5 billion, producing a trade surplus of $14.5 billion. But that is just a fraction of what could be possible with freer and fairer markets.

According to the U.S. Trade Representative, NAFTA, and the Uruguay Round have resulted in higher incomes and lower prices for goods, with benefits amounting to $1.3 to $2.000 a year for an average American family of four. NAFTA has also produced a dramatic increase in trade between the United States and Mexico. In 1993, United States-Mexico trade totaled $81 billion. Last year, our trade hit $247 billion—nearly half a million dollars per minute.

U.S. exports to our NAFTA partners increased 104 percent between 1993 and 2000; U.S. trade with the rest of the world grew only half as fast.

Increased trade supports good jobs. In the five years following the implementation of NAFTA, employment grew 22 percent in Mexico, and generated 2.2 million jobs. In Canada, employment grew 10 percent, and generated 1.3 million jobs. And in the United States, employment grew more than 7 percent, and generated about 13 million jobs.

But as I said before, I acknowledge that there are those who do not win in the short run under certain trade situations. For workers who have lost in trade in the past, I also believe that the best—and perhaps only—way to fix what has failed is through new negotiations, which level the playing field. We must speak with a unified voice that is forged through a close partnership between Congress and the executive branches. That is envisioned in the compromise bill.

We in agriculture have only begun to reap the benefits of a half century of trade negotiations under GATT and the WTO, which have reduced the average tariff on industrial goods to about 4 percent. That is a fraction if the 62 percent tariff that is imposed on our exports of agricultural products.

Indeed, reform of agricultural trade policies begun in the Uruguay Round provided not only additional market access for agriculture but, perhaps more importantly, it provided the necessary framework to improve market access in future negotiations.

Now is the time to press forward with additional trade reforms that will improve market access for our agricultural products.

In addition to tariff barriers, U.S. agricultural exports must compete with subsidies from foreign governments. Europe alone spends 75 times more in agricultural export subsidies than does the United States. In fact, Europe spent $91 billion last year to support agriculture, almost twice the $49 billion spent by the United States.

Europe is aggressively pursuing trade agreements with other countries, already securing free-trade or special customs agreements with 27 countries, 20 of which it competence the last 10 years. And the EU is negotiating another 15 accords right now. Last year, the European Union and Mexico—the second-largest market for American exports—entered into a free trade agreement. Japan is negotiating a free-trade agreement with Singapore and is exploring free trade agreements with Mexico, Korea, and Chile.

There is a price to pay for our delay in negotiating new trade agreements. For example,
U.S. exports to Chile face an 8-percent tariff, but Canada exports to Chile without the tariff because of the Canada-Chile trade agreement. As a result, United States wheat and potato farmers are now losing market share in Chile to Canadian exports.

Mr. THOMAS. Ranking Member RANGEL and the trade subcommittee of Ranking Member LEVIN would take important steps in the right direction and would provide a better foundation for developing sound legislation.

But the rule under which this bill is being debated does not even provide for consideration of the Rangel-Levin bill as an alternative. Although we have taken some slight improvements to the Thomas bill, the changes are too little and too late.

It is incumbent on us in Congress to continue to work to update our trade policy to take account of this changed landscape. That means we need a trade promotion bill that includes a stronger role for Congress, and stronger environmental and labor provisions. The Thomas bill before us does not measure up, and I cannot support it.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I urge the House of Representatives to reject this “fast-track” trade legislation—this bill will not meet our trade goals, and will hurt rather than help our needed economic recovery.

Many industries, such as the U.S. steel industry, are being hard-hit by subsidized foreign imports, and it does not require U.S. negotiators to seek wide protections such as the United States needs from such dumping by foreign countries in key areas such as steel, lumber, cement, and agriculture products.

Moreover, this bill will not attack the key trade steps we need to take—rather, we need a revised U.S. trade policy that will eliminate the record-level trade deficit, protect U.S. jobs and the U.S. economy, and promote U.S. exports. This bill before the House of Representatives will only mean more U.S. jobs lost to overseas, subsidized manufacturers.

The U.S. can compete with any nation in the world as long as the competition is fair, but this legislation will actually encourage other countries to avoid U.S. anti-dumping laws, and ruin our economy. It also fails to strengthen overseas worker rights and require environmental progress.

Yes, we need a revised U.S. trade policy, but we need one that protects U.S. jobs and stimulates economic growth. This bill does not reach that goal at all, and it should be rejected by the House of Representatives as a statement that we will stand-up for the U.S. economy and protect U.S. jobs rather than sending business and jobs overseas.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to H.R. 3005, a bill to grant the President fast track trade negotiating authority. The bill before us today is weaker on labor and environmental language than the 1988 fast track bill used to negotiate the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). As witnessed by the surge of imports and loss of millions of jobs since NAFTA’s enactment, Congress must hold the President accountable for negotiating trade agreements that are stronger than that of NAFTA—not weaker.

While gross U.S. exports rose 61.9% between 1994 and 2000, presumably as a result of NAFTA, imports rose by 80.5% over the same period resulting in over 3 million trade-related job losses. California led the states in job losses with over 300,000 jobs lost to NAFTA’s explosion in imports. Proponents of the last fast track bill assured us that more jobs would be created than would be lost. Clearly, this is not the case. Now, Mr. THOMAS is asking Congress to support a bill that is designed to send American jobs overseas, and the fast track bill used to negotiate NAFTA. I warn my colleagues not to be fooled into believing that promises made to provide benefits in an economic stimulus package to workers who have recently lost their jobs, will come close to justly compensating the millions of workers who have already lost their high-paying manufacturing jobs. Nor will it suffice in protecting those who have yet to see unemployment from the trade negotiations that have yet to be signed.

I want to make one thing clear: H.R. 3005 does not help U.S. workers. This bill is intended to protect and promote multinational investments. The bill neglects to provide any enforceable requirements that the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) negotiate any of the five core International Labour Organization standards. We need a bill that commits countries to implement and enforce in their domestic laws both the right to associate and bargain collectively, and prohibitions on child labor, compulsory labor and discrimination in hiring. When workers are not given these basic rights, they are exploited. This is what has happened with NAFTA. Workers in the U.S. are given these rights but this is not the case in Mexico. So rather than continue to pay a decent wage to a U.S. union worker, a factory owner can move the business to a country where there are no labor laws and labor costs are lower than in the U.S. Although Mexico has seen a significant increase in manufacturing with NAFTA, Mexican manufacturing workers have seen a 21% decrease in their wages. Mexico’s burgeoning middle class has yet to materialize and the working poor have spiraled deeper into poverty. Clearly, the 1988 fast track negotiating authority hurt U.S. workers as much as it hurt Mexican workers. Congress must insist on stronger trade negotiating objectives to protect U.S. workers as well as the exploited workers around the globe. The Thomas proposal fails to do so.

Under NAFTA’s Chapter 11, corporations have been given unprecedented immunity from domestic statute through global trade agreements. H.R. 3005 embraces NAFTA’s Chapter 11 provisions, which vitiate U.S. statute in deference to foreign corporations. This has the consequences of hurting the environment as well as public safety. Intended as an investor protection measure, Chapter 11 allows foreign-based corporations to seek damages from governments that fail to favor foreign protectorship behavior and interfere with corporations’ abilities to fully realize anticipated profits.

Californians have confronted the lurid protections Chapter 11 provides for investors while consumer safety and the environment are made to suffer. The Canadian-based Methanex Corporation has sued the U.S. under NAFTA’s Chapter 11 provisions, because California’s phase-out of the harmful gasoline additive, MTBE, has hurt the price of Methanex stock. MTBE contaminated Californian’s drinking water due to underground gasoline storage tank leaks. Californian lawmakers have ordered the additive out of their gasoline, even if it means slightly higher gas prices at the pump. However, if the closed-door NAFTA dispute panel decides in favor of Methanex, taxpayers could be slapped with a billion dollar fine. The Thomas proposal before us does nothing to address this egregious flaw in the NAFTA agreement.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, a vote in favor of Trade Promotion Authority today will be a vote in favor of U.S. workers, it will be a vote in favor of increased exports, and it will be a vote in favor of economic growth.

This bill will have a positive effect on all aspects of the U.S. economy, not the least of which will be the services sector.

Last year the U.S. exported $295 billion in services, compared to imports of $215 billion, leading to an $80 billion surplus in services trade.

Between 1989 and 1999, 20.6 million new U.S. jobs were added to the economy in service related industries. These knowledge-based jobs account for 80% of the total private sector employment in the U.S.

Today we have the opportunity to either expand this number by voting in favor of H.R. 3005, or to begin to erode these impressive figures by denying the President the tools he needs to negotiate strong free trade agreements.

As Chairman of the Financial Services Committee I understand how important this bill is to the U.S. Indeed, the Constitution does not permit international trade agreements. Neither Congress nor the President can set trade policies in concert with foreign governments. We can unilaterally influence trade policies by setting trade policies that benefit American workers and businesses. We can negotiate for 2.3 billion people. Many of the best future growth opportunities lie in “non-U.S.” markets.

If U.S. service providers cannot access these markets or operate on a level playing field overseas we will be left behind by foreign financial service providers.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 3005. Our workers need it, our exporters need it and our economy needs it.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, trade promotion authority enhances the United States’ ability to negotiate agreements that help American workers and businesses. Just as we can’t repeal the laws of gravity, we can’t ignore the fact that we live in a world with a global economy.

It is estimated that if global trade barriers were cut just one-third, the world economy would grow more than $600 billion on each year. Talk about economic stimulus—this is it!

Trade promotion authority will open new markets. Without this authority, trading partners will not put forth meaningful offers. Tariffs on American products won’t be reduced, and our economic growth will slow.

Passing this bill signals to the world we are committed to global trade and free markets. It allows the United States to take a leadership role in building international trading systems based on American principles of market-based economics and fair play.

Giving the President the authority to negotiate trade agreements is good for Connecticut, the United States and every country involved.

Exports accounted for almost one quarter of all U.S. economic growth in the last 10 years. Trade promotion authority should pass without delay.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, this debate on “Fast Track” is not about whether or not the U.S. should be participating in the global economy—we all agree on that. This debate is about HOW we are going to participate in that economy.

In this time of economic recession, I feel that we have responsibility to the American worker and the workers around the globe to ensure that American labor standards are enforced globally. It is unacceptable that American jobs are being shipped overseas to countries that refuse to pass or enforce minimal labor protections.

As many of us can remember all too well, Fast Track Trade Authority was last used to pass the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) in 1993. While the Administration claims that NAFTA is a resounding success, I contend that this is far from the truth.

It is estimated that NAFTA has cost nearly 1 million U.S. manufacturing jobs and tens of thousands of family owned farms to go out of business. In my home state of New Jersey, alone, it is estimated by the U.S. Department of Labor that more than 20,000 jobs were directly lost due to NAFTA’s scope.

NAFTA has also been a disaster in the area of environmental protection and public health. Since passage, pollution also in the U.S. Mexico border has created worsening environmental and public health threats in the area. Along the border, the occurrence of some environmental diseases, including hepatitis, is two or three times the national average, due to lack of sewage treatment and safe drinking water.

This is unacceptable. In my mind, no matter what this Administration promises, Fast Track only causes the quality of life in America to be compromised.

My friends—I say, fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me. I urge my colleagues—don’t be fooled again. We have already allowed the word of past Administrations cost thousands of American jobs and further destroy our environment. Let’s not make the same mistake again.

Vote “no” on Fast Track.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3005, the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Act (”TPA”), which will open up new markets for our businesses here in the United States. This bill is about breaking down trade barriers abroad and expanding opportunities for American workers. This legislation recognizes the reality of today’s global economy and equips our country with the tools necessary to maintain America’s leadership throughout the world.

I would be remiss if I did not voice my concern about the timing of today’s debate. At times like this, we must work together. Yet for a number of understandable reasons, this bill is not enjoying bipartisan support. Nevertheless, I do not control the agenda; thus, here we are debating the bill without the fullest support it could enjoy.
The evolving nature of the trade debate is evident. Instead of discussing whether to address labor and environmental issues in the text of TPA and future trade agreements, Congress is discussing how to address these concerns. I believe this bill has taken a giant step forward since the last floor vote in 1998. We no longer discuss the principles behind TPA but labor and environmental standards will receive parity in enforcement alongside subjects covered in trade agreements such as foreign investment and intellectual property. This is in stark contrast to the Archer TPA bill which called on some of the same countries from a labor and environmental standards to attract investment but was silent on enforcement. Clearly, H.R. 3005 moves the trade debate forward.

Mr. Speaker, the simple fact that 96 percent of the world’s consumers live outside of our borders is irrefutable evidence that in order to grow our economy, we must grow our exports. Hence, international trade is critical to our nation’s continued economic expansion.

An estimated 12 million jobs in the United States depend on exports of goods and services. Furthermore, opening markets has created more than 20 million new jobs in the US since 1992. Jobs related to exports generally pay as much as 18 percent more than the national average. Consumers also benefit in the form of affordable prices for many products. In fact, our existing trade agreements provide annual benefits of $1,300 to $2,000 for the average American family of four from the combined effects of lower prices and increased income.

Free trade is not exclusively for the giant conglomerates. Our trade agreements enable small (less than 100 employees) and medium size businesses (less than 500 employees) to compete in international markets. According to the Department of Commerce, in 1998, more than 92 percent of Florida’s 22,295 exporting companies were small and medium sized businesses. In the district I represent, 85 percent of exporters are small businesses that employ fewer than 100 employees.

Mr. Speaker, international markets are vital to my state’s economic well-being. Florida’s economy is export-dependent, with export sales of $1,515.00 for every state resident. Florida merchandise and agricultural exports support an estimated 183,700 jobs, while service industry exports support an estimated 364,000 jobs. Last year, in the Tampa Bay area alone, nearly 500 local companies and independent business people profited from approximately $2.6 billion in exports to international markets.

My colleagues, we need to pass TPA as soon as possible. Unless we pass TPA, our businesses and workers will be forced to sit on the sideline and watch our global competitors take advantage of free trade agreements. One of our main trade competitors, the European Union, has free trade agreements with many countries. One of our main trade competitors, the European Union, has free trade agreements with many countries. Hence, international trade is critical to our nation’s economic well-being. Florida’s steel industry is endangered by both this bill and our flawed trade policy. This year, two steel mills in my district—Florida Steel in River Valley and River Valley Steel—have closed their doors forever. I have witnesses to my district. But their way of life is endangered by both this bill and our flawed trade policy. Of the more than 130 free trade agreements (FTAs) in force worldwide, only 3 include our country. One of our main trade competitors, the European Union, has free trade agreements with 27 countries.

Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) will be virtually impossible to negotiate by 2005 without TPA. The FTAA is setting the stage for significant trade opportunities—particularly, the opportunity to assure that the rules of trade that will be developed are fair and sufficiently advantageous to our country. It is an agreement that will benefit 34 countries, consisting of 800 million people with a combined GDP of $13 trillion. The potential benefits of increased trade with Latin America for our nation and the State of Florida are tremendous. In Florida, Latin America and the Caribbean are our most important markets, accounting for about 80 percent of all exports from the state. Furthermore, over the past three years, eight of the top 10 Florida-origin export destinations were FTAA countries. As for Brazil, one of Florida’s largest export destinations, the average Brazilian tariff on U.S. goods is almost 14 percent, compared with under 3 percent for Brazilian products entering the U.S.

By passing TPA, the Congress is delegating a significant amount of authority to the executive branch. Thus, it is essential that the Congress have the necessary tools to protect their constituents throughout the negotiating process, while recognizing the importance of providing flexibility necessary to the United States Trade Representative (USTR) to negotiate the best deal possible for America. In the future, I expect the executive branch to work closely with the Congress throughout the trade negotiations as required by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, this legislation is critical for the United States. TPA will empower the President to negotiate trade agreements that will open more markets for American goods and services, create jobs, and reduce costs for farmers, workers, consumers, and entrepreneurs. Refusal to pass TPA would put American workers at a disadvantage.

I urge my colleagues to vote “yes” on H.R. 3005.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, my district is composed of hard working Americans who build tractors, refrigerators, and furnaces. Blood, sweat and tears are what brings home the bacon in my district. But their way of life is endangered by both this bill and our flawed trade policy.

This year, two steel mills in my district closed their doors forever. I have witnesses numerous other manufacturing plants close because they are not allowed to compete fairly against foreign imports. Some of these very companies have reopened facilities overseas only to export their products back into the U.S.

In the last few months, I have assisted hundreds of my laid-off constituents in filing for unemployment and TAA benefits. These hard working folks have lost their jobs because we have set course on a flawed trade policy that puts cheap imports ahead of their good paying jobs. Trade Promotion Authority is a dangerous leap of faith for an administration that has pursued an unsound trade policy.

Our flawed trade policy has most recently led to the demise of our nation’s steel industry. The inaction of Congress and the willingness of the President’s chief trade negotiator to eliminate anti-dumping regulations has driven US steel into the ground. And we want to give them even more authority to negotiate trade agreements?

Mr. Speaker, my district is blessed with thousands of acres of the most fertile farmland in the country where John Deere revolutionized agriculture with the invention of the steel plow. The farmers in my district have struggled as corn and soybean prices have dropped in half over the last five years. In these times of rock bottom crop prices, they depend more than ever on farm subsidies. But those who profit are not the farmers. Instead of supporting our farmers, we have offered to eliminate these indespensible price supports. I cannot in good faith support a fast track bill at the same time the administration tries to kill the price supports that my farmers depend on.

I am further ashamed our flawed trade policy does little to further human rights. We blindly turn our heads when countries use children, prisoners, and slave labor to undercut American workers. This does not represent the values of the people I represent, but it represents the trade policy of an administration that now wants even more latitude in trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent a working class district, where folks still make a living by the sweat of their brow. I made a promise to my farmers when I came to Washington, and I have honored that promise.

But the reality is, my farmers have not seen an export subsidy but a program to help finance U.S. agriculture exports at commercial rates. I am concerned that the new round of negotiations, the Doha round, will not substantially improve our administration’s request for fast track authority and urges you to vote against this bill.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3005, a bill to provide the President with the authority to negotiate international agreements and submit them to Congress for an up-or-down vote, without amendment.

Last month, the United States and other members of the World Trade Organizations launched a new round of trade negotiations. These negotiations agreed to a far-reaching agenda, covering topics from e-commerce to manufactured goods to financial services and, most importantly to North Dakota, agriculture. With such an ambitious agenda to tackle, an agreement is not expected for at least four years.

For agriculture, the new agenda gives us cause for both hope and concern. On the positive side, the agenda calls for the eventual elimination of export subsidies, which the Europeans have used to rob market share from U.S. farmers. In addition, the efforts of some countries to reopen negotiations in order to erect scientifically unjustified barriers to U.S. commodities were rejected. The agenda’s commitment to achieve substantial new market opening measures also stands to benefit U.S. farmers, who earn $1 out of very $3 from exports.

On the hand, I am troubled that U.S. trade officials have so freely offered to negotiate our export credit guarantee program, which is not an export subsidy but a program to help finance U.S. agriculture exports at commercial rates. I am concerned that the new round of negotiations could expose our sugar beet industry—worth $1 billion annually to the Red River Valley—to unlimited imports of subsidized product sold dump market prices.
What’s worse, even as our government was putting the export credit and sugar programs squarely on the table, the Europeans were staunchly defending their own subsidies and the Canadian government was declaring the Wheat Board to be off-limits. Although U.S. attempts to “lead by example” in trade negotiations and to offer non-tariff measures of its own, it will not in win trade agreements. We should vigorously defend our programs and yield concessions only when we receive concessions in exchange.

The farm bill debate has also reflected what I believe to be the Administration’s flawed approach to trade policy. Among its reasons for opposing the House farm bill, the Administration said that restoring a price safety net for family farmers would undermine our trade negotiating position. I believe, quite the contrary, that a renewed commitment to our farmers in the form of strong farm bill improves our negotiating position. If the U.S. withdraws support for our farmers unilaterally, what incentive do the Europeans have to negotiate away their tremendous subsidy advantage?

The negotiations launched earlier this month have a long way to go. Only time will tell whether our hopes for American agriculture will be realized or our concerns will prove well-founded. Before these negotiations have even begun, however, Congress is being asked to approve a bill authorizing the President to negotiate trade agreements and submit them to Congress for an up-or-down vote, without amendment.

I believe it would be unwise to approve fast track before we know whether these negotiations are headed in a positive direction for American agriculture. Let’s make sure that the Europeans will not be allowed to maintain their overwhelming subsidy advantage and that the Canadian Wheat Board won’t be able to continue to exploit its monopoly position to the detriment of our farmers. Let’s make sure that our sugar industry won’t be hung out to dry and that the Administration won’t try to undo our domestic farm program in trade negotiations.

Once we have greater confidence that these trade negotiations are serving the interests of our farmers, we can move forward with fast track authority. Until our concerns have been addressed, however, we should not give our trade negotiators the blank-check they are seeking. For now, there are too many open questions for us to give up our right to amend future trade agreements.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, this country is in a new era. We have not faced such times of trepidation since the Cuban Missile Crisis. It is well established that countries who trade, who have a business with one another, are less inclined to fight, and more willing to cooperate among mutual beneficial matters. Ultimately, trade is about freedom and economic prosperity. And in some cases, prosperity has been the case for certain sectors of the American economy.

Unfortunately, such has not been the case in my district in Florida. There are many number of small farmers and businesses who were decimated by NAFTA and imports from Mexico. Promises made by our government were promises un-kept. The specific provisional relief programs to support the tomato growers, for instance, was applied for after implementation of NAFTA, and subsequently these farmers were denied that relief.

Under NAFTA, Florida exports in total agriculture products dropped from $6.1 million to 1.9 million between 1993 and 1996. Only in the year 2000, did exports climb above the 1993 level—but the damage was done.

Earlier today, the House voted to reauthorize the Trade Promotion Authority, a program designed to aid workers and firms who have been affected by the impact of foreign trade. This program alone serves as a reminder that not everyone in our country benefits from free trade. . . including small farmers and businesses in my district.

Now I understand the need to engage in free trade and I support free trade. However, I also support fair trade. Additional provisions have been included in HR 3005 that allows for greater consultation among Congressional committees regarding import sensitive commodities. The language also recognizes the need to treat such products in a different manner during trade negotiations than other products. Though I am grateful for the attempt at addressing these issues, I believe it does not go far enough.

Without adequate protection and enforcement of our trade laws, and the ability to provide sufficient relief for affected markets—such provisions are less than meaningful. I have had the opportunity to speak with the President regarding my concerns and those of the farmers in my district. I believe the need to use Trade Promotion Authority as a tool in the war against terrorism and to address our faltering economy. We are at war. And for that reason these are special circumstances. The President needs to be supported and he can use this agreement to help America in its fight against terrorism. For this reason I am voting for Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act.

The vote on this bill has been a very difficult decision for me. My home county and my hometown have been hit hard in recent months by layoffs and closures of textile manufacturing plants. In many of these towns, several generations of families have worked at these plants. In some of these towns, closed our way of life was shaken and our hometown identities were forever changed.

I hurt for each and every worker who has lost a textile job and for each and every family that faces economic uncertainty as a result of these layoffs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. Without adequate protection and enforcement of our trade laws, and the ability to provide sufficient relief for affected markets—such provisions are less than meaningful.

I have had the opportunity to speak with the President regarding my concerns and those of the farmers in my district. I believe the need to use Trade Promotion Authority as a tool in the war against terrorism and to address our faltering economy. We are at war. And for that reason these are special circumstances. The President needs to be supported and he can use this agreement to help America in its fight against terrorism. For this reason I am voting for Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act.

The vote on this bill has been a very difficult decision for me. My home county and my hometown have been hit hard in recent months by layoffs and closures of textile manufacturing plants. In many of these towns, several generations of families have worked at these plants. In some of these towns, closed our way of life was shaken and our hometown identities were forever changed.

I hurt for each and every worker who has lost a textile job and for each and every family that faces economic uncertainty as a result of these layoffs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. Without adequate protection and enforcement of our trade laws, and the ability to provide sufficient relief for affected markets—such provisions are less than meaningful.

I have had the opportunity to speak with the President regarding my concerns and those of the farmers in my district. I believe the need to use Trade Promotion Authority as a tool in the war against terrorism and to address our faltering economy. We are at war. And for that reason these are special circumstances. The President needs to be supported and he can use this agreement to help America in its fight against terrorism. For this reason I am voting for Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act.

The vote on this bill has been a very difficult decision for me. My home county and my hometown have been hit hard in recent months by layoffs and closures of textile manufacturing plants. In many of these towns, several generations of families have worked at these plants. In some of these towns, closed our way of life was shaken and our hometown identities were forever changed.

I hurt for each and every worker who has lost a textile job and for each and every family that faces economic uncertainty as a result of these layoffs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. Without adequate protection and enforcement of our trade laws, and the ability to provide sufficient relief for affected markets—such provisions are less than meaningful.

I have had the opportunity to speak with the President regarding my concerns and those of the farmers in my district. I believe the need to use Trade Promotion Authority as a tool in the war against terrorism and to address our faltering economy. We are at war. And for that reason these are special circumstances. The President needs to be supported and he can use this agreement to help America in its fight against terrorism. For this reason I am voting for Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act.

The vote on this bill has been a very difficult decision for me. My home county and my hometown have been hit hard in recent months by layoffs and closures of textile manufacturing plants. In many of these towns, several generations of families have worked at these plants. In some of these towns, closed our way of life was shaken and our hometown identities were forever changed.

I hurt for each and every worker who has lost a textile job and for each and every family that faces economic uncertainty as a result of these layoffs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. Without adequate protection and enforcement of our trade laws, and the ability to provide sufficient relief for affected markets—such provisions are less than meaningful.

I have had the opportunity to speak with the President regarding my concerns and those of the farmers in my district. I believe the need to use Trade Promotion Authority as a tool in the war against terrorism and to address our faltering economy. We are at war. And for that reason these are special circumstances. The President needs to be supported and he can use this agreement to help America in its fight against terrorism. For this reason I am voting for Trade Promotion Authority.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act.

The vote on this bill has been a very difficult decision for me. My home county and my hometown have been hit hard in recent months by layoffs and closures of textile manufacturing plants. In many of these towns, several generations of families have worked at these plants. In some of these towns, closed our way of life was shaken and our hometown identities were forever changed.

I hurt for each and every worker who has lost a textile job and for each and every family that faces economic uncertainty as a result of these layoffs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. We must provide them generous assistance to meet their short-term needs. Without adequate protection and enforcement of our trade laws, and the ability to provide sufficient relief for affected markets—such provisions are less than meaningful.

I have had the opportunity to speak with the President regarding my concerns and those of the farmers in my district. I believe the need to use Trade Promotion Authority as a tool in the war against terrorism and to address our faltering economy. We are at war. And for that reason these are special circumstances. The President needs to be supported and he can use this agreement to help America in its fight against terrorism. For this reason I am voting for Trade Promotion Authority.
more than 81 percent of Maryland’s 3,472 companies that export are small- and medium-sized businesses. Trade data also shows that an estimated 58,900 Maryland jobs depend on manufactured exports. One in every seven manufacturing jobs in Maryland—24,700 jobs—is tied to exports. Wages of workers in jobs tied to NAFTA exceed the state average by 13.18 percent higher than the national average. Maryland exported an estimated $200 million in agricultural products in 1999.

Indeed, Maryland has benefited from previous trade agreements. For example, total exports to NAFTA destinations tied to NAFTA in 1999 were 56 percent higher than 1993, before NAFTA.

This negotiating authority expired in 1994, and during that time other countries have been moving forward with trade agreements while the United States has been stalled. There are more than 130 preferential trade and investments agreements in the world today, and the United States is a party to only two.

The European Union has free trade or special customs agreements with 27 countries, 20 of which it completed in the last 10 years. And the EU is negotiating another 15 accords right now. Our inaction hurts American businesses, farmers, ranchers, and workers as they find themselves shut out of the many preferential trade opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in free and fair trade and a strong economy. In times of growth our Nation has been able to move forward on important social issues and make the world a better place for all.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss the trade policy of the United States. We are scheduled to vote in the House of Representatives this week on approving Trade Promotion Authority (TPA), what used to be called the “Fast Track” Authority, I will vote against it, as I did in 1998. I will do so for several reasons, but primarily because the United States has signed few effective trade pacts in recent memory. Since the early 1980s the United States has become the greatest debtor nation in the world, and that trade deficit continues to increase. As a result, the working men and women of this country. While corporate CEOs continue to earn record-breaking salaries, their employees face reduced wages and benefits or worse—they are laid off while their jobs are moved abroad.

We continue to export good, high-paying American manufacturing jobs to places like Mexico and China, where workers are paid little and enjoy few protections from abuse.

I agree that we need to create export markets for our goods, especially our agricultural products. To that end, I have voted to end the trade embargo against Cuba. However, this must be done on terms that are fair to the United States. The list of unfair reciprocal trade agreements we currently have with other countries boggles the mind. Our products are taxed at extremely high rates in those countries, which then export our products into our market virtually tax-free.

The supporters of TPA will tell you that the President needs this authority to negotiate trade pacts, such as the next round of world trade talks, that have been put in motion by the recent ministerial conference in Doha, Qatar. But TPA is not necessary to negotiate trade pacts. In fact, TPA expired in 1994, and we have reached several bad agreements since then, notably terms to allow China to enter the World Trade Organization, a deal I also did not support. The only thing TPA guarantees is that Congress is shut out of the negotiating process, left to ratify whatever agreement the President negotiates. And when the time comes to vote, Congress is told that while this might not be the only one on the table and that we cannot waste the years it took to reach it by it voting down. It is a vicious cycle that imprisons American workers, and I will not vote to revive it.

The North American Free Trade Agreement is a good example of this process. Eight years ago, the passage of NAFTA brought many promises: 200,000 new jobs annually in the United States; higher wages for Mexican workers; an increased trade surplus with Mexico and a cleaner environment and improved health in the border regions. In fact, the opposite has happened—none of these promises have materialized.

Supporters of NAFTA promised great things for America’s trade surplus with Mexico and Canada. These, too, have failed to materialize. Even if American jobs were not relocated to Mexico, the impact on wages has increase dramatically—147 percent to Mexico and 66 percent to Canada—imports from these countries have increased more dramatically. U.S. imports have increased 248 percent from Mexico and 79 percent from Canada.

The trade deficit with Canada was nine billion dollars in 1993; by 2000, it had ballooned to $60 billion. NAFTA was supposed to reduce these numbers. Instead, the trade deficit has increased.

Instead of creating 1.6 million jobs over eight years, NAFTA has eliminated 766,000 jobs. In my home state of Illinois, over 37,000 people have lost their jobs as a result of NAFTA. These were the good paying manufacturing jobs I referenced above. Most of these jobs have been relocated to Mexico, where the labor and environmental standards are lower than in America.

Even if American jobs were not relocated to Mexico and elsewhere, many companies have leveled this threat at their employees. Workers are told if they do not agree to the company’s terms they will lose their job. As a result, workers settle for contracts with lower wages and fewer benefits in collective bargaining. This occurred recently with the Tower Automotive plant in my congressional district. A recent newspaper article described it this way, “Earlier this month, Tower Automotive has said in order to save money, it was subcontracting the Lincoln Aviator program to Metalsa, a company in Monterrey, Mexico.” Fortunately, Tower Automotive decided to stay in the U.S., but the threat to move remains as an option for Tower and other businesses.

Since the enactment of NAFTA, wages for industrial workers in the United States have decreased. These workers comprise 73% of our nation’s industrial workforce and account for most of our middle- and low-wage workers. When manufacturing jobs leave the country, displaced workers who can find work generally receive pay that is 13% less than they received in their previous job. These jobs are primarily in the service industry, where wages pay only 77% of those in the manufacturing sector. The jobs lost as a result of NAFTA are not just丢失 for many individuals who most likely do not have a college education. These workers have a harder time finding re-employment and need these jobs the most.

The trade deficit is not only a problem of the rich getting richer and the poor poorer—it is a national security issue. Our nation is currently at war. In the aftermath of the terrorist attacks of September 11th, the U.S. military is engaged in military actions against the Taliban and Osama Bin Laden. Young Americans are putting their lives on the line to defend the values of this great nation. Does it make sense that while American troops are in harm’s way, the U.S. is rapidly losing its ability to produce steel due to the flood of illegally imported steel? If the current trend continues, we will have a steel crisis in the U.S., leaving our national defense vulnerable.

In September, I testified before the International Trade Commission regarding the Section 201 investigation into U.S. steel imports. I represent the 12th Congressional District of Illinois, which includes Alton, Granite City, and other areas with great steel traditions. Sadly, Alton is no longer a steel town. Laclede Steel announced in July that it will shut its doors permanently, ending an 86-year history in Alton and throwing 550 employees out of work. The impact on Alton has been severe. Of course, Laclede is not alone. Since 1997, 26 domestic mills have filed for bankruptcy. This trend must not be allowed to continue. The hardworking men and women of the United States and their families cannot bear the price of misguided foreign industrial policies any longer.

However, the U.S. representatives at the Doha conference did not see it that way. Even after the House of Representatives passed a resolution requesting that the president preserve the ability of the U.S. to rigorously enforce its trade laws, particularly anti-dumping laws, the American representatives at Doha permitted the anti-dumping regulations to be re-examined. If allowed to happen, this will further damage American steel producers.

So where does U.S. trade policy stand on the week of the vote to grant the president TPA? A record of unfair trade agreements that ignore worker rights and environmental protections, hundreds of thousands of good paying manufacturing jobs continuing to leave America, and vital steel industry infrastructure left close to extinction. Not a pleasant picture.

Mr. Speaker, given this bleak backdrop, I will not vote for TPA. It will minimize the role that Congress plays in trade agreements at a time when congressional oversight is needed most. The Bush administration has demonstrated by its action in Doha that it does not have the best interests of American workers in mind. Congress must work to ensure that more damage is not done. I urge my colleagues to join me in fighting for the American worker by opposing Trade Promotion Authority.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition to H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act.

Words probably cannot fully convey how disappointed I am in being forced to vote “No” on H.R. 3005. Up to now, since coming to Congress in 1993, I have compiled a pro-trade voting record that is second to none. I have supported NAFTA, U.S. entry into the WTO, normalizing trading relations with China and Vietnam, expanding trading relations with the Caribbean, and most recently to establish free trade with Jordan. I strongly believe that, our nation has the most to gain from opening new markets and improving upon a rules-based trading system.

I am also disappointed because I fully appreciate the extraordinary effort put forth by my friends, Mr. JEFFERSON, Mr. TANNER, and Mr. DOOLEY, in helping to craft this bill. Throughout this process, they were willing to listen to concerns that I and other members expressed. They performed admirably in pushing forward Democratic principles in negotiating this bill with the majority. Their steadfastness produced a great deal of progress in addressing concerns on how trade impacts labor and the environment and in addressing the plight of recently displaced workers.

The majority has represented enactment of trade promotion authority as economic stimulus that will help pull the nation out of the current recession. I also recall the Administration representing this bill as something we must pass in the context of our war against terrorism. I don’t doubt that expanding trade is in the national interest, but both of those arguments are exaggerated and misplaced. Trade does create better jobs for American workers that provide added value to the American economy. However, trade’s benefits manifest themselves over the long-term; passing this bill will have very little effect on pulling the economy out of the current recession.

It is in this context of this recession and the September 11 tragedy that I have weighed my vote on trade promotion authority. Passing trade authority may well be in our national interest, but over the short term, it will not do anything except add to the anxiety that workers who have been or are on the verge of being laid off are experiencing. Science dictates that before I support granting trade promotion, I must ensure that their immediate needs and concerns are addressed. I have concluded that Congress and the Administration has fallen short of what we must do in this area, and for this reasons, I must vote against H.R. 3005.

On September 21, we passed a bill to provide immediate financial assistance to the airline industry in the wake of the September 11 tragedy. Some of my colleagues objected on the grounds that we should provide assistance contemporaneously to the workers laid off by the airlines. I supported that bill because I understood that maintaining the viability of the airline industry was necessary to preserve the jobs of those who were not laid off. I was also assuaged by assurances that we would have a bill on the floor the following week to provide assistance to airline workers. That promise was not kept.

September 11 also exacerbated the recession that the country has apparently been experiencing. Following the tragedy, there was bipartisan agreement that Congress should pass an economic stimulus package to speed recovery and to provide broad safety net assistance to workers affected by the recession. Instead, the majority rammed through the House a tax package providing tax breaks on offshore profits, accelerated capital gains, and retroactively repealing a provision in the tax code that ensures that corporations are not able to wholly avoid paying taxes. At the same time, the bill provided a minimal level of unemployment and health care assistance to laid off workers, not bringing the country out of recession, the bill was essentially a slap in the face to working class Americans.

Now, we are on the verge of voting on H.R. 3005. Several weeks ago, I indicated to its principal supporters that in order to attract my support, I would have to witness real progress on helping displaced workers, and not just vague promises and commitments. In response, Chairman THOMAS offered several new items. Promising them is a proviso in the TAA bill to provide $2 billion over 2 years for workers affected by the September 11 attacks. The Chairman also signaled his intention to offer proposals relating to health insurance and extension of unemployment benefits. While this is only a partial list, I appreciate Chairman THOMAS’ good faith efforts, particularly his willingness to include a provision to suspend federal income taxes on unemployment benefits. This is actually a bill that I personally introduced earlier this Congress.

These proposals fall short of what I would like but they do appear to be substantial progress. Unfortunately, since they do come at the last minute, there is a great deal of uncertainty. Furthermore, the bulk of these proposals would need to be included in a final stimulus package, in which negotiations are ongoing over contentious issues. I am basically being asked to trust that these proposals will be improved upon where necessary and enacted into law, in spite of the fact that we have had months to do complete work on these items.

I have concluded that I owe it to working class Americans that I should not simply take a leap of faith. For too long, they have been suffering while Congress has sat on its hands. I do not think it is unreasonable for us to wait on passing TPA legislation until we have passed legislation to help the unemployed.

I am fully willing to revisit this issue if, later in this Congress, we do in fact provide the relief that displaced workers deserve. Today, however, my vote is ‘no.’

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii, Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 3005, the Fast Track Trade Authority bill.

The President has requested Fast Track Trade Authority whereby Congress agrees to consider trade agreements without amendment and with limited debate. The administration says that unless we pass this bill, it will not be able to finalize a new round of worldwide trade talks or complete smaller trade deals.

This is simply not true. Without Fast Track Trade Authority, the Clinton administration negotiated more than 300 trade agreements. President Bush has finalized the Vietnam-U.S. Bilateral Trade Agreement and begun work on the Free Trade Agreement of the Americas. Reviving Fast Track Trade Authority at this time will not hinder the president’s ability to negotiate large multi-national trade agreements. The World Trade Organization will not finalize the next round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) for at least another five years.

Fast Track Authority is actually a tool to aid powerful corporations searching the globe for cheap labor by ignoring basic workers’ rights, environmental safeguards, enforceable sanctions, and Congressional input.

H.R. 3005, the bill before us, enshrines trade objectives promoting worker rights, yet these objectives are hollow. The bill relies on the self-enforcement of a country’s worker rights laws.

This bill does not require trade agreements with clear provisions to protect workers’ rights. It does not require countries to agree to adhere to the International Labor Organization’s core labor standards, including bans on child and slave labor.

The majority needs trade agreements that instantaneously go before a dispute settlement panel if a country violates internationally recognized labor standards, such as the right to collective bargaining. All trade agreements need enforcement provisions which allow for prompt and full compliance with a dispute settlement panel’s decisions.

Proponents of Fast Track Trade Authority believe that the Trade Adjustment Assistance program we reauthorized today will assist individuals who will lose their trade agreements. Workers who lost their jobs to NAFTA will vouch that this program cannot replace their jobs and does not provide the health benefits they desperately need while looking for new jobs. All of us want to help workers and should support this program, but reauthorizing it does not overcome the weaknesses of Fast Track Trade Authority.

H.R. 3005 states that environmental concerns are a negotiating objective of trade agreements, but it only requires consultative mechanisms for strengthening trading partner’s environmental and human health standards.

The Thomas fast-track bill will expand controversial “investor” rules that empower foreign corporations to sue over environmental laws if laws, regulations, or court orders interfere in any way with a company’s ability to do business.

H.R. 3005 requires the president to consult with Congressional committees and prepare reports about child labor and the treatment of enforcing workers rights. These provisions do not give Congress the power to ensure that trade agreements conform to basic international labor provisions and environmental policies.

With the economy in a recession and 7.7 million unemployed Americans looking for work, we cannot expose working families to unfair trade agreements that allow corporations to move into countries with weak labor standards. We cannot expose workers to flawed trade agreements such as NAFTA that cost American workers 766,030 jobs in the steel textile, apparel, manufacturing, and other sectors of our economy.

I urge my colleagues to vote against H.R. 3005 and protect our environment and American workers from unfair trade agreements.

Ms. SOLIS, Mr. Speaker. For my colleagues pondering their vote on Fast Track Trade Negotiating Authority. And for the American public, I ask you to envision this scene. It was August, 1995. In my district—Sonoma County, California.

Not two years after the North American Free Trade Agreement narrowly passed this House.

During a pre-dawn raid, the Immigration and Naturalization Service came to the rescue, literally, of seventy-two Thai immigrants working in a garment factory.

I say “working,” but what I really mean is involuntary servitude. These women, forced into slave labor, worked eighteen hours a day in a seven-unit apartment building that served as a sweatshop. Actually, a prison. Some of the women had not been let out of the filthy factory surrounded by razor wire for seven years.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

December 6, 2001

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, from the debate thus far on Trade Promotion Authority (TPA), it is clear to me that the legislative process works best when Democrats and Republicans move forward together. Unfortunately, the effort to pass TPS this Congress is a poor demonstration of Congress' ability to cooperate and compromise. At this particular moment in American history, I find that troubling.

I would like nothing better than to vote for the passage of TPA. Over the past several years, I have supported almost every free trade measure to come before the House of Representatives because I believe that the health of the American economy is dependent on policies that move us forward in the global economy. I believe that the future wages of the American worker are dependent on our ability to do two things: secure new markets for American goods and services and enhance the education and skills of our current workforce.

But markets do not open overnight. Negotiating new and more open markets is a complicated process made even more complicated by the procedural process in Congress. Without a straight up or down vote on a trade agreement, Congress could be bogged down forever in the give and take of congressional politics. If the congressional amendment process came into play, our President would no longer have the credibility to negotiate agreements. All 435 Members of the House cannot be the American trade negotiators.

I understand why the language in the Thomas bill has left this issue unaddressed. I understand why the President, Democrat or Republican, should have the flexibility that TPA affords to negotiate and pass trade agreements.

But the details of TPA do matter. The USTR has moved from negotiating tariffs to non-tariff barriers to trade. What this means is that instead of just negotiating reductions in tariffs, our trade negotiators will be negotiating substantive changes in American law.

In the next round, the plan is to make changes in antitrust laws. The protections currently provided by the American patent system may also be amended through trade. Copyright protection is up for discussion. These laws, antitrust and intellectual property, are enormously important to the economic viability of the United States. Just as American laws are harmonized in trade negotiations, the role that Congress' Congressional Committees must evolve from procedural consultations to ones that are substantively consultative.

While I have raised this issue again and again over the past several months, the Thomas bill has left this issue unaddressed. Interestingly, a role is provided for review of agricultural policy as well as for financial services. But are potatoes and rice more important than patents and antitrust laws? I think not.

The USTR must submit to the relevant Congress committees for the Judicial Committee, and not just to the Ways and Means Committee, information that informs Members which provisions of existing US law are being changed.

Just a few years ago, I was surprised as a Member of the Judiciary Committee to find that I could not insert a salary floor amendment into a bill pertaining to H-1B non-immigrants because we had made a trade commitment in the General Agreement on Trade in Services not to put in such a condition. An alternative system that was negotiated and agreed to was inserted by GATT. This made it impossible for Members of Congress to make changes to domestic law without violating US trade obligations.

When I asked my colleagues on the Committee if they had heard of such a change in the law, I got a lot of blank looks. They were as surprised as I was.

And I'm not surprised that they didn't know because the implementing legislation of the Uruguay Round Agreements was hundreds of pages long.

Such changes are not limited to immigration law. The same thing could happen in a region like antitrust if an agreement on competition policy is reached. Professor Daniel Tarullo, a law professor at Georgetown University, wrote in a letter to Senator LEAHY that a "competition agreement in the WTO could seriously compromise the integrity of US antitrust policy and for that matter the competition policies of other nations.

We know that antitrust law is explicitly "on the table" for the next round. While I don't disagree that this is an appropriate topic for discussion, I cannot agree that US antitrust laws should be changed without the review and involvement of the Judiciary Committee.

The Judiciary Committee should have the same access to these issues as the Agriculture Committee has relative to agricultural issues in the Thomas bill. While I do not support a unduly burdensome process, I believe there must be a happy medium between the Rangel and Thomas approaches. That is why I believe we should wait.

Again, I would like nothing more than to vote for a Trade Promotion Authority measure that takes into consideration the proper role of Congress and its Committees. I appreciate the ways & Means Committee's work on this bill, but I do not agree.

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3005, which is similar to a bill that failed two years ago, that establishes expedited procedures for congressional consideration of trade agreements negotiated by the President. Under H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act (TPA), the Administration would be required to consult with Congress before signing a trade agreement, but once the agreement is formally submitted to Congress, both houses must consider the agreement within 90 days without amending the tentative agreement.

As a New Democrat, I believe in the fundamental concept of free trade. Eliminating unfair foreign trade barriers leads to greater exports by the United States and potential increases in production. It is important that America not be left on the sidelines as trade agreements are negotiated without our participation. However, free trade must occur on an equal playing field.

Unfortunately, this particular H.R. 3005, does not sufficiently address important concerns that were expressed two years ago. For example, this legislation does not require countries to implement any meaningful standards on labor rights. These include the five core International Labor Organization (ILO) standards: the rights of association and collective bargaining, freedom of speech, and civil liberties, women's rights, and the rights of indigenous peoples.

The bill simply details negotiating objectives on labor rights, but does nothing to ensure that any final trade agreement will actually include those provisions. In addition, this legislation simply requires a country to enforce its existing law—however weak that law may be. Furthermore, this bill contains only voluntary negotiating objectives on the environment. It does nothing to prevent countries from lowering their environmental standards to gain unfair trade advantages, and would do nothing to protect multilateral environmental agreements from trade challenges. Moreover, it does nothing to block foreign investor lawsuits from challenging domestic environmental laws. Future trade agreements could include provisions like Chapter 11 of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) which allow foreign investors to undermine U.S. environmental, safety, and health law on the basis of unfair trade.

Lastly, I am concerned over the lack of congressional action prior to the signing of any trade agreement; only consultations. Congress may vote on a disapproval resolution, but only to certify that the Administration has "failed to consult" with Congress. Moreover, under this bill Congress would give up the right to amend trade agreements—even those that are controversial and which dramatically alter domestic law—in exchange for optional negotiating objectives. Any trade agreement should be under the purview of the House of Representatives.

I am disappointed that these issues were not resolved prior to floor consideration. The trade policy of the United States must benefit the entire country, not simply select interest groups. We must strive and enter into trade agreements that are not only free, but fair. Unfortunately, H.R. 3005, like its predecessor, fails to remedy the concerns associated with expedited trade agreements.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this bill. And let me say right up front: I stand here before you today as a free trader.

Those of you who know me know that I believe in the principles of free trade and global commerce. I have fought to open and expand markets for U.S. goods and services time and time again, right here in this chamber.

Those who know me know that I believe that the freedom to trade across borders, if handled responsibly, is a wonderful way to raise living standards, create jobs, and protect the environment around the world—particularly in those developing countries that need help the most.

But this vote is about much more than that. It’s about the fact that the very nature of international trade has changed radically.

Trade is no longer primarily about tariffs and quotas. It’s about changing domestic laws. The constitutional authority to make law is at the heart of our role as a Congress and of our sovereignty as a nation.

When international trade negotiators sit down to hammer out agreements, they are talking about harmonizing ‘non-tariff barriers to trade’ that may include everything from anti-trust laws to food and labor standards.

Now, I believe the President and the USTR should be able to negotiate trade deals as efficiently as possible. There’s no questions about that.

But this does not mean that Congress must concede to the Executive Branch its constitutional authority over foreign commerce and domestic law without adequate assurances that Congress will be an active participant in the process.

Congress should be a partner, not a mere spectator or occasional consultant to the process. The Thomas bill does not ensure that.

Think about what may be bargained away at the negotiating table: our own domestic environmental protections . . . food safety laws . . . competition policies.

That’s the air we breathe, the food our children eat, and the way Americans do business. With all due respect to Robert Zoellick, I want GEORGE MILLER, JOHN CONyers, and JOHN DINGELL on those discussions.

Now, Chairman THOMAS says that he has fixed the problem of Congressional participation by adding a bit of technical language here and there.

Of course, these changes do nothing to affect the labor and environmental provisions in this bill, which we all know are sorely lacking. But let me be clear: these amendments are pure window-dressing.

Beneath the jargon, all he’s done is give himself, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the ability to bottle up any attempt to revoke fast track authority, no matter how far the negotiators have strayed from Congressional trade objectives.

With all due respect to the Chairman, I cannot cede my constitutional responsibility to his stewardship.

Mr. Speaker, the nature of trade has changed, and fast track authority must change with it. I ardently believe in the principles of free trade. But I will not put my constitutional authority over domestic law and my responsibility to my own constituents on a fast track to the executive branch.

I urge my colleagues to vote no on this legislation. Thank you.

Beneath the jargon, all he’s done is give himself, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the ability to bottle up any attempt to revoke fast track authority, no matter how far the negotiators have strayed from Congressional trade objectives.

With all due respect to the Chairman, I cannot cede my constitutional responsibility to his stewardship.

Mr. Speaker, the nature of trade has changed, and fast track authority must change with it. I ardently believe in the principles of free trade. But I will not put my constitutional authority over domestic law and my responsibility to my own constituents on a fast track to the executive branch.

I urge my colleagues to vote no on this legislation.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, as I have conveyed to you, my concern is that as we pursue international trade agreements, we must enter those negotiations recognizing the special needs of our fruit and vegetable sector, and Florida citrus in particular. While many of our commodities enjoy significant federal subsidies, fruit and vegetable producers do not have these same subsidies. Florida’s $9 billion citrus industry potentially faces significant competition from Brazil. Brazil enjoys a cost-of-production far below that of U.S. agricultural producers. Today’s tariffs on Brazilian orange juice account for the wide difference in cost-of-production between the U.S. and Brazil. Also, Brazilian fruit can be treated with pesticides that are banned in the U.S. This raises issues of safety, double standards, and competitive advantages. Any further reduction in the tariff schedule for Brazilian orange juice under FTAA could cause significant harm to Florida’s citrus industry.

Mr. Speaker, we have requested the inclusion of language in the bill specifically excluding export sensitive products such as perishable fruits and vegetables, and related products such as frozen orange juice. That specific language is not in your bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the amendments in section three dealing with trade sensitive commodities, would limit the President’s proclamation authority so that tariff reductions could not be implemented without specific Congressional approval.

It is also my understanding that these special provisions provide a strong indication that these sensitive agriculture industries, such as citrus, should not be the subject of further tariff reductions in negotiations covered under this act.

Finally, it is my understanding that these provisions require that the Administration identify that the import sensitive agriculture products, such as citrus, be fully evaluated by the ITC prior to any tariff negotiations and that any probable adverse effects be the subject of remedial proposals by the Administration.

As this bill moves from the House to the other body and to conference, there will be additional opportunity to address the concerns of this industry. I am pleased that the Chairman has indicated he is willing to work with me and other members of the Florida Congressional delegation to address any additional concerns.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to the Trade Promotion Authority bill offered by Chairman THOMAS.

My problem here is not with the concept of giving the President trade promotion authority, my problem is with passing a TPA bill that fails to address basic labor and congressional oversight requirements.

The labor provisions in this bill are a sham. This legislation calls only for the non-detrimental of a potential trading partner’s labor laws.

Under this bill, Malaysian companies could continue to pay a ten year old child, five cents for a day’s work.

In this example, the Malaysian firm would only be in violation if it paid the same child four cents for a day’s work.

The Thomas labor requirements run counter to common sense. This is not the time to make it a reason that he International Labor Organization established the five core labor standards.

The rights of association and collective bargaining, and bans on child labor, compulsory labor and discrimination are essential components to all trade agreements.

We must insist that our trade partners respect and abide by these standards without exception.

The notion of Congressional oversight has fallen short in this bill, as well. H.R. 3005 provides no effective mechanism for Congressional participation. It only includes an element of the 1988 law that was never implemented.

Congress must have the authority to oversee these agreements on a periodic basis, and have the ability to present resolutions of disapproval should the need arise.

The bottom line is that this bill is totally deficient on many levels.

The Ranking Member, Mr. RANGEL, had a substitute that would have met the requirements necessary to negotiate trade agreements in good faith.

Unfortunately, the Republicans would not allow the Democratic bill to see the light of day.
Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, almost 11 weeks have passed since the Speaker indicated that the House would take up legislation to help those who were unemployed due to the September 11th attacks and the slowing economy. To date we have not completed action on proposals to extend unemployment compensation, to address health insurance for people who lost coverage through their former employer, or to provide health insurance coverage for those who did not have health benefits through their employer.

Today we are asked to consider another bill that would benefit large businesses at the expense of the American worker. The legislation before us would grant the President the ability to negotiate trade agreements with other countries and then send them to the Congress for it's up or down vote.

Congress should be part of careful and deliberate negotiations on all trade agreements. They should not be put on the fast-track. Such a take-it-or-leave-it approach strongly favors any agreement submitted by the Administration, regardless of its flaws or impact on our workers and the environment. A recent trade agreement between the United States and Jordan is an example of fast-track procedures, but was approved by Congress nevertheless. This measure required labor and environmental issues to be part of the core negotiating objectives. If Congress has not been a part of constructing that agreement, those objections would surely have been left out of the accord.

The most appalling aspect of this bill is the fact that it fails to address the continuing problem of varying labor and environmental standards throughout the world. The bill requires only that a country enforce its own laws—however bad they may be in terms of worker rights and working conditions. There is no real requirement that a country's law include any of the five core labor standards—bans on child labor, discrimination, slave labor and the rights to associate and to bargain collectively.

Therefore, this bill would allow countries that do not provide basic protections to children under 14 who work in factories, that allow the use of slave labor, or that deny workers the basic right to associate and bargain collectively, to continue to do so. It is nearly impossible for American companies and their employees to compete against foreign businesses that pay welfare wages.

Nor does the bill direct that concrete steps be taken to integrate existing or future multilateral agreements on labor and environmental standards into our trade agreements. Instead, the bill says we do not care whether your companies pollute the water or poison the air. This bill says we do not care how safe your products are and it also says we do not care whether your companies pollute the air. This bill says we do not care about our environment or our Constitution.

The Constitution specifically grants Congress the power to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations. We should not vote to give that power away.

I urge you to oppose this bill. We don't have to jump on to a fast track that will lead to a train wreck.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today to express his very strong support for H.R. 3005, the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001. This Member would like to thank the distinguished Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee from California (Mr. THOMAS) for both introducing this legislation and for his efforts in moving this legislation forward to today's House Floor debate. Additional appreciation is expressed to the distinguished Chairman of the House Rules Committee from California (Mr. DREIER) for his efforts in expediting the consideration of this legislation.

Under the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001, this Congress would agree to vote "yes" or "no" on any trade agreement in the House. This Authority is needed in order to take up legislation. The President and our talented Trade Representative Robert Zoellick to secure a true bipartisan solution to other trade related issues.

We cannot sacrifice jobs in the pursuit of imaginary profits, especially now with our economy stumbling.

We are losing jobs every day, while our trade deficits get larger and larger. And those deficits have expanded since NAFTA was passed.

The Economic Policy Institute reports that Americans have lost 3 million actual and potential jobs since NAFTA. California alone has suffered over 300,000 jobs in trade-related losses.

We must stem this tide and signing over Congress' trade authority is not the way to do that.

Nor should we sacrifice our environment or the public health.

Under the terms of Chapter 11 of NAFTA, California is currently being sued by a Canadian corporation because our state's efforts to phase out MTBE from our gasoline and eliminate that potential carcinogen from our water supply have cut into their profits.

Fast track would open up our environmental laws to foreign lawsuits.

It would undermine efforts to let consumers know if they are eating genetically modified foods.

It would threaten international environmental protections.

Finally, fast track undercuts the authority of this very Congress to protect our constituents. The Constitution specifically grants Congress "the power to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations."

We should not vote to give that power away.

I urge you to oppose this bill. We don't have to jump on to a fast track that will lead to a train wreck.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today to express his very strong support for H.R. 3005, the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001. This Member would like to thank the distinguished Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee from California (Mr. THOMAS) for both introducing this legislation and for his efforts in moving this legislation forward to today's House Floor debate. Additional appreciation is expressed to the distinguished Chairman of the House Rules Committee from California (Mr. DREIER) for his efforts in expediting the consideration of this legislation.

Under the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001, Congress would agree to vote "yes" or "no" on any trade agreement in the House. This Authority is needed in order to take up legislation. The President and our talented Trade Representative Robert Zoellick to secure a true bipartisan solution to other trade related issues.

We cannot sacrifice jobs in the pursuit of imaginary profits, especially now with our economy stumbling.

We are losing jobs every day, while our trade deficits get larger and larger. And those deficits have expanded since NAFTA was passed.

The Economic Policy Institute reports that Americans have lost 3 million actual and potential jobs since NAFTA. California alone has suffered over 300,000 jobs in trade-related losses.

We must stem this tide and signing over Congress' trade authority is not the way to do that.

Nor should we sacrifice our environment or the public health.

Under the terms of Chapter 11 of NAFTA, California is currently being sued by a Canadian corporation because our state's efforts to phase out MTBE from our gasoline and eliminate that potential carcinogen from our water supply have cut into their profits.

Fast track would open up our environmental laws to foreign lawsuits.

It would undermine efforts to let consumers know if they are eating genetically modified foods.

It would threaten international environmental protections.

Finally, fast track undercuts the authority of this very Congress to protect our constituents. The Constitution specifically grants Congress "the power to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations."

We should not vote to give that power away.

I urge you to oppose this bill. We don't have to jump on to a fast track that will lead to a train wreck.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today to express his very strong support for H.R. 3005, the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001. This Member would like to thank the distinguished Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee from California (Mr. THOMAS) for both introducing this legislation and for his efforts in moving this legislation forward to today's House Floor debate. Additional appreciation is expressed to the distinguished Chairman of the House Rules Committee from California (Mr. DREIER) for his efforts in expediting the consideration of this legislation.

Under the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001, Congress would agree to vote "yes" or "no" on any trade agreement in the House. This Authority is needed in order to take up legislation. The President and our talented Trade Representative Robert Zoellick to secure a true bipartisan solution to other trade related issues.

We cannot sacrifice jobs in the pursuit of imaginary profits, especially now with our economy stumbling.

We are losing jobs every day, while our trade deficits get larger and larger. And those deficits have expanded since NAFTA was passed.

The Economic Policy Institute reports that Americans have lost 3 million actual and potential jobs since NAFTA. California alone has suffered over 300,000 jobs in trade-related losses.

We must stem this tide and signing over Congress' trade authority is not the way to do that.

Nor should we sacrifice our environment or the public health.

Under the terms of Chapter 11 of NAFTA, California is currently being sued by a Canadian corporation because our state's efforts to phase out MTBE from our gasoline and eliminate that potential carcinogen from our water supply have cut into their profits.

Fast track would open up our environmental laws to foreign lawsuits.

It would undermine efforts to let consumers know if they are eating genetically modified foods.

It would threaten international environmental protections.

Finally, fast track undercuts the authority of this very Congress to protect our constituents. The Constitution specifically grants Congress "the power to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations."

We should not vote to give that power away.

I urge you to oppose this bill. We don't have to jump on to a fast track that will lead to a train wreck.
Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001, H.R. 3005, a measure granting Trade Promotion Authority, TPA, to President Bush, an authority which lapsed in 1994. One of the most important votes we will be asked to cast in this Congress, the enactment of this measure is essential to our national interest and our long-term economic growth and prosperity.

Without this authority, U.S. negotiators will continue to find themselves outside looking in on trade competitors concluding one trade agreement after another that protects their interests and ignores ours. There are over 130 such preferential agreements in place today and the U.S. is a party to only three.

Our trade competitors have clearly taken advantage of our inability to negotiate without this authority. Our NAFTA trade partners, Canada and Mexico, have, for example, signed preferential trade agreements with other countries of South and Central America ensuring that our exporters are at a competitive disadvantage.

Our hopes for this hemisphere rest upon the economic advancement of all. And during the past decade there were many positive signs as almost every country in the region embraced the free market and implemented a far-reaching series of economic reforms, thereby laying the foundation for sustained growth. We are only at the beginning of this process, however.

Too many in this rich hemisphere remain poor. Many countries remain underdeveloped; and too many workers are denied access to increased economic opportunities. There are many obstacles that need to be overcome in this effort, but one easy way to expanding economic opportunity for every country in this hemisphere is to remove its outdated and self-limiting barriers to trade. This is what the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) represents: the recognition that protectionism is a dead-end strategy and that the economic interests of each country are best advanced through cooperation and an openness to the world.

President Bush has rightly made the FTAA the centerpiece of U.S. policy towards the hemisphere, but we cannot succeed in this effort without trade promotion authority. We are in the fortunate situation that the greatest advocates of this agreement are the countries of Central and South America which formerly blocked themselves virtually every U.S. proposal for expanded cooperation. Now it is they who are knocking on our door, preaching the benefits of cooperation.

A "no" voted today will only tie the hands of our trade negotiators who are trying to lower tariff and non-tariff barriers, to increase economic opportunity here and abroad, and to jump-start the global economy.

NAFTA and the most recent global trade agreement (the "Uruguay Round") have saved the average American family $1,300 to $2,000 each year from the combined effect of income increases and lower prices for imports. These increases and lower prices for imports have actually increased overall U.S. national income by approximately $50 billion a year.

Many Members, on the Republican as well as Democratic side of the aisle, are concerned, however, that granting the President a "blank check" to negotiate trade agreements could compromise our values and set back efforts to reform the World Trade Organization.

But the text of the proposed trade legislation clearly spells out our commitment to democracy, improved trade and environmental policies, respect for worker rights and the rights of children consistent with the core labor standards of the International Labor Organization. It also includes our commitment to greater openness and transparency inside the global rule-making body, the World Trade Organization and to much greater public access to its dispute settlement proceedings.

For those members who remain unconvinced that the President would put his TPA authority to good use, I emphasize that Congress retains the right to approve or disapprove any trade agreement negotiated under the TPA authority. Any member can vote down any future trade agreement if he or she feels that it doesn't promote our economic security.

Our failure to grant the President this vital tool — TPA authority — will lead to the continuing loss of American influence in global trade debates and a continuation of the global economic recession. The U.S. has long been the engine of the global economy and without this key trade authority we will be hard pressed to lead Europe and Asia back onto the growth path of the 1990s.

At this critical point in our global anti-terrorism battle, it is also essential, in my view, that we enable the President to build stable trade relationships with our key coalition partners.

We can—and should—ensure that the views of our committee are fully taken into account in the drafting of any future trade negotiations, and I will help to ensure that this takes place. Without TPA, we won't have the tools needed to jump-start the global economy to help lift us out of economic recession.

With TPA, they can finish the task of building a Free Trade Area of the Americas and negotiating a new trade round. With TPA, our President can again exercise leadership to foster open markets, democracy and economic development.

Security and trade issues are increasingly linked. Bringing China, and eventually Russia, into the world trading system will help to ensure that the U.S. and other countries will strengthen the rule of law and promote more open economic systems.

NATO's role in the world is only as strong as the economies of its members and without TPA and a new round of trade negotiations the global recession is likely to be much longer and deeper.

Support the President and pass H.R. 3005. Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support H.R. 3005, the Trade Promotion Authority Act of 2001.

I believe particularly important legislation is crucial to America's economic interest, especially in light of the recession. H.R. 3005 is significant because it seeks to renew the President's fast track or trade promotion authority (TPA) to negotiate trade agreements with other nations and would ensure that the United States can effectively negotiate away foreign tariff barriers as well as non-tariff barriers that now exclude U.S. products. It gives the U.S. credibility to negotiate tough trade deals while preserving Congress's right to approve or disapprove them. More importantly, if the U.S. is to be a leading participant in future negotiations on multilateral, bilateral and sectoral agreements, we will see a negative effect on our competitive ability to sell our goods in overseas markets. Our global economy demands that the President have TPA to open up foreign markets to United States products and ensure continued economic prosperity for American consumers and workers. For this reason, I fully support giving the President this important tool that every President, except for President Bill Clinton, has had in his tool kit.

TPA allows the President to enter into trade agreements reducing, eliminating, or otherwise affecting U.S. tariff and non-tariff barriers. It essentially compels the Congress to vote on those agreements (without amendments or re-visions) within a limited period of time. Under H.R. 3005, the President must also consult and coordinate with Congress throughout the negotiating process. In any event, if Congress does not like the end result, members can simply vote against the total package.

Mr. Speaker, 95 percent of the world's consumers live outside of the United States. Let me repeat: 95 percent of the world's consumers live outside the U.S. That means quite simply, that the continued growth of the U.S. economy depends upon our success in eliminating trade barriers around the globe. Since 1993, U.S. exports have increased by nearly one-third of the nation's economic growth and have increased three times faster than overall income. Moreover, between 1986 and 1994, jobs supported by exports rose 63 percent more than four times faster than overall private industry job growth.

Free trade is especially important to the Commonwealth of Virginia. In 1996, Virginia exported goods worth $10.9 billion, 4.8 percent higher than in 1995. As the 16th largest exporter among the 50 states, Virginia industries have benefited tremendously from international trade, particularly in the high-tech, industrial machinery, transportation equipment, and chemical and fabricated metal products exporting sectors.

Technology companies are the single largest merchandise exporters in the United States, accounting for 20 percent of all merchandise exports. Exports from the U.S. have more than doubled during the last decade. In particular, high-tech sectors such as computers and other output, data processing and other information services are booming. While these exports are vital, imports are also important. They help keep inflation in check, give consumers greater choice, create jobs, and allow U.S. companies to use the best technology available so they can increase their productivity and competitiveness.

Since TPA lapsed in 1993, the U.S. has been forced to sit on the sidelines while our foreign competitors aggressively pursued their own economic interests through trade agreements. For example, Mauritius, which now has free trade agreements with Chile; the Latin American Southern Cone Common Market ("Mercosur"), which consists of Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, and Uruguay, has agreements with Chile and Bolivia and is negotiating agreements with countries in Latin America; Japan and the European Union are working toward trade arrangements with countries in Latin America and Asia; and Members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) are implementing a free trade area.

The President must have the authority to begin hammering out fair and balanced trade agreements that will clinch America's leadership role in the world market and improve the standard of living for American families. H.R. 3005 is a reasonable compromise that will enable the United States to stimulate economic growth, exercise leadership, and provide new opportunities for American companies, workers and their families. The U.S. is not keeping pace with our foreign competitors in opening markets. We are part of the more than 130 free trade agreements, and 43 of the 1,800 bilateral investment agreements in force today. The impact of U.S. inaction cannot be overstated: we face discriminatory tariffs; our service sectors are often at a competitive disadvantage against their foreign rivals; our service sectors are often at a competitive disadvantage against their foreign rivals; and foreign companies are often granted more favorable investment terms.

By granting the President this authority we will guarantee that the U.S. remains both a political and economic world leader. Right now, while the U.S. stands on the sidelines, other nations have gotten the jump on negotiating trade agreements that benefit their domestic interests.

U.S. exporters lose out on investment opportunities while the Congress debates whether we as a nation should be engaged in serious world trade. The time for debate is over; the time for action is now.

Without the authority provided by this legislation, U.S. negotiators will not be able to sit across the table from our largest trading partners and reach agreements that lower tariffs, increase transparency and lessen onerous regulations in prospective markets. Instead, it will be our trading partners who negotiate free trade pacts among themselves, excluding U.S. workers and businesses from the benefits of trade pacts among themselves, excluding U.S. workers and businesses, businesses, and create higher-skilled, higher-paying jobs for American workers. The point is clear: increased international trade and investments will create opportunities for American companies and American workers, lifting the world’s standard of living and creating even more demand for American goods and services.

I urge passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 306, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. RANGEL

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANGEL moves to recommit the bill H.R. 3005 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions that the Committee report back to the House forthwith with the following amendments:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE. TITLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the “Comprehensive Trade Negotiating Authority Act of 2001.”

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is the following:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Negotiating objectives.
Sec. 3. Congressional trade advisers.
Sec. 4. Agreement authority.
Sec. 5. Commencement of negotiations.
Sec. 6. Congressional participation during negotiations.
Sec. 7. Implementation of trade agreements.
Sec. 8. Treatment of certain trade agreements.
Sec. 9. Adoption of report and studies.
Sec. 10. Additional implementation and enforcement requirements.
Sec. 11. Technical and conforming amendments.
Sec. 12. Definitions.

SEC. 2. NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.

(a) OVERALL TRADE NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—The overall trade negotiating objectives of the United States for agreements subject to the provisions of section 4 are the following:

(1) To obtain clear and specific commitments from trading partners of the United States to fulfill existing international trade obligations according to existing schedules.
(2) To obtain more open, equitable, and reciprocal market access for United States agricultural products, manufactured and other nonagricultural products, and services.
(3) To obtain the reduction or elimination of barriers to trade, including barriers that result from failure of governments to publish laws, rules, policies, practices, and administrative and judicial decisions.
(4) To ensure effective implementation of trade commitments and obligations by strengthening the effective operation of the rule of law by trading partners of the United States.
(5) To oppose any attempts to weaken in any respect the trade remedy laws of the United States.
(6) To increase public access to international, regional, and bilateral trade organizanizations in which the United States is a member by developing such organizations and their underlying agreements in ways that make the resources of such organization more accessible to, and the decision-making processes more open to participation by, workers, farmers, businesses, and non-governmental organizations.

To ensure that the benefits of trade extend broadly and fully to all segments of society.

To pursue market access initiatives that benefit the world’s least-developed countries.

To promote enforcement of internationally recognized core labor standards by trading partners of the United States.

To promote the ongoing improvement of environmental protections.

To promote the compatibility of trade rules with national environmental, health, and safety standards, and with multilateral environmental agreements.

To identify and pursue those areas of trade liberalization, such as trade in environmental technologies, that also promote the protection of the environment.

To ensure that existing and new rules of the WTO and of regional and bilateral trade agreements support sustainable development, protection of endangered species, and reduction of air and water pollution.

To ensure that existing and new rules of the WTO and of regional and bilateral trade agreements are written, interpreted, and applied in such a way as to facilitate the growth of electronic commerce.

C. PRINCIPAL NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES UNDER THE WTO.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States under the auspices of the WTO are the following:

(1) RECIPROCAL TRADE IN AGRICULTURE.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to agriculture is to obtain competitive opportunities for United States exports of agricultural commodities in foreign markets equal to the competitive opportunities afforded foreign exports in United States markets.

(2) REDUCING OR ELIMINATING, BY A DATE CERTAIN, TARIFFS OR OTHER BARRIERS.—The overall trade negotiating objectives of the United States for agreements subject to the provisions of section 4 are the following:

December 6, 2001

H9029

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE
H9030

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

December 6, 2001

(6) To strengthen rules protecting against conflicts of interest by members of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate expeditious review of requests for nonpublication of parts of such briefs; and

(7) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(8) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(9) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(10) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(11) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(12) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(13) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(14) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(15) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(16) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(17) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(18) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(19) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(20) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(21) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(22) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(23) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(24) To require that transcripts of proceedings of dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(25) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to dispute settlement panels and the Appellate Body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.
established in Article 17.6 of the Anti-dumping Agreement and clarify that this standard of review should apply to cases under the Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures and the Agreement on Safeguards.

(7) SANITARY AND PHYTOSANITARY MEASURES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to sanitary and phytosanitary measures are the following:

(A) To oppose reopening of the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures.

(B) To affirm the compatibility of trade rules and regulations to protect human health, animal health, and the phytosanitary situation of each WTO member by doing the following:

(i) Reaffirming that a decision of a WTO member not to adopt an international standard for the basis of a sanitary or phytosanitary measure does not in itself create a presumption of inconsistency with the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures, and that the initial burden of proof rests with the complaining party in determining that the Appellate Body in EC Measures Concerning Meat and Meat Products (Hormones), AB-1997-4, WT/DS262/R, and Panel Report, January 16, 1998.

(ii) Reaffirming that WTO members may take provisional sanitary or phytosanitary measures where the relevant scientific evidence indicates that such measures are based on available pertinent information, and members taking such provisional measures seek to obtain the additional information necessary to complete a risk assessment within a reasonable period of time. For purposes of this clause, a reasonable period of time includes sufficient time to evaluate the potential for adverse effects on humans or animal health arising from the presence of additives, contaminants, toxins, or disease-causing organisms in food, beverages, or feedstuffs.

(8) TECHNICAL BARRIERS TO TRADE.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to technical barriers to trade are the following:

(A) To oppose reopening of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade.

(B) To reinforce the legitimate role of labeling that provides relevant information to consumers, to ensure that labeling regulations do not have the effect of creating an unnecessary obstacle to trade or are used as a disguised barrier to trade by increasing transparency in the preparation, adoption, and application of labeling regulations and standards.

(9) TRADE-RELATED ASPECTS OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights are the following:

(A) To oppose extension of the date by which WTO members that are developing countries must implement their obligations under the Agreement on Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (in this section also referred to as the “TRIPS Agreement”), pursuant to paragraph 2 of Article 65 of that agreement.

(B) To oppose extension of the moratorium on the application of sanitary marks (h) and (1c) of Article XXIII of the GATT 1994 to the settlement of disputes under the TRIPS Agreement, pursuant to paragraph 2 of Article 64 of that agreement.

(C) To oppose any weakening of existing obligations of WTO members under the TRIPS Agreement.

(D) To impose penalties on standards of protection and enforcement keep pace with technological developments, including ensuring that rightholders have the legal and technological means to control the use of their works through the Internet and other global communication media, and to prevent the unauthorized use of their works.

(E) To prevent misuse of reference pricing classification systems by developed countries as a way to discriminate against innovative and technologically advanced medical devices, without challenging legitimate reference pricing systems not used as a disguised restriction on trade.

(F) To ensure that Article 31 of the TRIPS Agreement WTO members are able to adopt measures necessary to protect the public health and to respond to situations of public health emergency, including by taking actions that have the effect of increasing access to essential medicines and medical technologies.

(G) To prevent the use of sanitary and phytosanitary measures as disguised barriers to trade by inciting a need to address sanitary and phytosanitary measures as obstacles to trade.

(H) To ensure that sanitary and phytosanitary measures are adopted and enforced keep pace with technological developments, including ensuring that rightholders have the legal and technological means to control the use of their works through the Internet and other global communication media, and to prevent the unauthorized use of their works.

(I) To prevent the use of sanitary and phytosanitary measures as disguised barriers to trade by inciting a need to address sanitary and phytosanitary measures as obstacles to trade.

(J) To ensure that sanitary and phytosanitary measures are adopted and enforced keep pace with technological developments, including ensuring that rightholders have the legal and technological means to control the use of their works through the Internet and other global communication media, and to prevent the unauthorized use of their works.

(K) To prevent the use of sanitary and phytosanitary measures as disguised barriers to trade by inciting a need to address sanitary and phytosanitary measures as obstacles to trade.
firms can compete fully on fair terms and enjoy the benefits of reciprocal trade concessions.

(B) To eliminate the underlying causes of unfair competition and import surges, including closed markets, subsidization, government practices promoting, enabling, or tolerating anticompetitive practices, and other government intervention that generates or sustains excess, uneconomic capacity.

(12) TRADE AND LABOR MARKET STANDARDS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade and labor market standards are the following:

(A) To achieve a framework of enforceable multilateral rules as soon as practicable that leads to the adoption and enforcement of core, internationally recognized labor standards, including in the WTO and, as appropriate, other international organizations, including the ILO.

(B) To update Article XX of the GATT 1994, and Article XIV of the GATS in relation to core internationally recognized worker rights, including in regard to actions of WTO members consistent with and in furtherance of recommendations made by the ILO under Article 33 of the Constitution of the ILO.

(C) To establish promptly a working group on trade and labor issues—

(i) to explore the linkage between international trade and investment and international labor rights; and

(ii) to examine the effects on international trade and investment of the systematic denial of those worker rights;

(D) To consider ways to address such effects; and

(iv) to develop methods to coordinate the work program of the working group with the ILO.

(D) To provide for regular review of adherence to core labor standards in the Trade Policy Review Mechanism established in Annex 3 to the WTO Agreement.

(E) To establish a working relationship between the WTO and the ILO—

(i) to identify opportunities in trade-related aspects of the economies of WTO members to improve enforcement of internationally recognized core labor standards;

(ii) to consider ways to address such effects; and

(iii) to coordinate technical assistance to the WTO to assist with the Trade Policy Review Mechanism.

(14) TRADE AND THE ENVIRONMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade and the environment are the following:

(A) To strengthen the role of the Committee on Trade and Environment of the WTO, including providing that the Committee would—

(i) review and comment on negotiations; and

(ii) review potential effects on the environment of WTO Agreements and future agreements of the WTO on liberalizing trade in natural resource products.

(B) To provide for regular review of adherence to environmental standards in the Trade Policy Review Mechanism of the WTO.

(C) To clarify exceptions under Article XX(b) and (g) of the GATT 1994 to ensure effective protection of human, animal, or plant life or health, and conservation of exhaustible natural resources, including closed markets, subsidization, government practices promoting, enabling, or tolerating anticompetitive practices, and other government intervention that generates or sustains excess, uneconomic capacity.

(D) To amend Article XX of the GATT 1994 and Article XIV of the GATS to include an explicit exception for actions taken that are in accordance with those obligations under any multilateral environmental agreement accepted by both parties to a dispute.

(E) To ensure that the provisions of the GATT to include an exception for measures relating to the conservation of exhaustible natural resources if such measures are made effective in compliance with obligations on domestic production or consumption.

(F) To give priority to trade liberalization measures that promote sustainable development, including policies on environmental goods, and obtaining commitments on environmental services.

(G) To reduce distortions in resource sectors (including fisheries and forest products) and export subsidies in agriculture.

(H) To improve coordination between the WTO and WTO members with respect to environmental organizations in the development of multilaterally accepted principles for sustainable development, including sustainable forestry and fishery practices.

(15) INSTITUTION BUILDING.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to institution building are the following:

(A) To strengthen institutional mechanisms within the WTO that facilitate dialogue and coordinate activities between nongovernmental organizations and the WTO.

(B) To seek greater transparency of WTO processes and procedures for all WTO members by—

(i) promoting the improvement of internal communication between the Secretariat and all WTO members; and

(ii) establishing points of contact to facilitate communication between WTO members on any matter covered by the WTO Agreements.

(C) To improve coordination between the WTO and other international organizations such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the ILO, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the United Nations Environment Program to increase the effectiveness of technical assistance programs.

(D) To increase the efforts of the WTO, both on its own and through partnerships with other institutions, to provide technical assistance to developing countries, particularly least developed countries, to ensure that obligations under the WTO Agreement are implemented and to address the full range of challenges arising from implementation of such obligations.

(E) To improve the Trade Policy Review Mechanism to cover a wider array of trade-related issues.

(16) TRADE AND INVESTMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade and investment are the following:

(A) To pursue further reduction of trade-distorting investment measures, including—

(i) global, free transfer of funds related to investments; and

(ii) pursuit of reduction or elimination of the exceptions to the principle of national treatment;

(B) To accelerate tariff reductions that benefit least-developed countries.

(17) ELECTRONIC COMMERCE.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to electronic commerce are the following:

(A) To make permanent and binding the moratorium on customs duties on electronic transmissions declared in the WTO Ministerial Declaration of May 20, 1998.

(B) To ensure that current obligations, rules, disciplines, and commitments under the WTO apply to electronically delivered goods and services.

(C) To ensure that the classification of electronically delivered goods and services ensures the most liberal trade treatment possible.

(D) To ensure that electronically delivered goods and services receive no less favorable treatment under WTO rules and commitments than like products delivered in physical form.

(E) To ensure that governments refrain from implementing trade-related measures that impede electronic commerce.

(F) Where legitimate policy objectives require domestic regulations that affect electronic commerce, to ensure that commitments under any such regulations are nondiscriminatory, transparent, and promote an open market environment.

(G) To pursue a procompetitive regulatory environment for basic and value-added telecommunications services abroad, so as to facilitate the conduct of electronic commerce.

(H) To focus any future WTO work program on electronic commerce on educating WTO members regarding the benefits of electronic commerce and on facilitating the liberalization of trade barriers in areas that directly impede the conduct of electronic commerce.

(18) DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to developing countries are the following:

(A) To enter into trade agreements that promote the economic growth of both developing countries and the United States and the mutual expansion of market opportunities.

(B) To ensure appropriate phase-in periods with respect to the obligations of least-developed countries.

(C) To coordinate with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and other international institutions to provide debt relief and other assistance to promote the rule of law, and sound and sustainable development.

(D) To accelerate tariff reductions that benefit least-developed countries.

(19) CURRENT ACCOUNT SURPLUSES.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to current account surpluses is to develop rules to address large and persistent global current account imbalances of countries, including imbalances that threaten the stability of the international trading system, by imposing greater responsibility on such countries to take policy changes aimed at restoring current account equilibrium, including expedited implementation of trade agreements and measures necessary to improve transparency and other assurances that such countries are addressing the underlying causes of such imbalances.

(20) TRADE AND MONETARY COORDINATION.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to monetary policies is to foster stability in international currency markets and develop mechanisms to assure greater coordination, consistency, and cooperation between international trade and monetary systems and institutions in order to protect against the trade effects of significant and unanticipated currency movements.

(21) ACCESS TO HIGH TECHNOLOGY.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to access to high technology are the following:

(A) To obtain the elimination or reduction of foreign barriers to, and of acts, policies, or practices of governments that limit, equitable access by United States persons to foreign-developed technology.

(B) Strengthening disciplines on all information technology products, infrastructure, equipment, scientific instruments, and medical equipment.

(C) Fostering the reduction of foreign barriers to high technology products of the United States.

(D) To enforce and promote the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade, and ensure that standards, conformity assessments, and technical regulations are not used as obstacles to trade in information technology and communications products.

(E) To require all WTO members to sign the Information Technology Agreement of the WTO, and to expand and update product coverage in that Agreement.

(22) CORRUPTION.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to the use of money or other things of value to influence the actions of governments or officials of foreign governments or to secure any improper advantage in a manner affecting trade are the following:

(A) To obtain standards applicable to persons from all countries participating in the applicable trade agreement that are equivalent to the prohibitions applicable to issuers, domestic concerns, and other persons under section 30A of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 and sections 104 and 104A of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977.

(B) To implement mechanisms to ensure effective enforcement of the standards described in subparagraph (A).

(23) IMPLEMENTATION OF EXISTING COMMITMENTS AND IMPROVEMENT OF THE WTO AND THE WTO AGREEMENTS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to implementation of existing commitments under the WTO are the following:

(A) To require that all WTO members comply fully with existing obligations under the Agreement.

(B) To strengthen the ability of the Trade Policy Review Mechanism within the WTO to review implementation by WTO members of commitments under the WTO.

(C) To undertake diplomatic and, as appropriate, legal efforts to promote compliance with commitments under the WTO.

(D) To extend the coverage of the WTO Agreements to products, sectors, and conditions of trade not adequately covered.

(c) NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES FOR THE FTAA.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States in seeking a trade agreement establishing a Free Trade Area of the Americas are the following:

(1) RECIPROCAL TRADE IN AGRICULTURE.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to agriculture is to obtain competitive opportunities for United States agriculture in countries that have the effect of restricting access of United States exports in United States markets and to achieve lower and more balanced commitments of trade in bulk, specialty crop, and value-added commodities by doing the following:

(A) Reducing or eliminating, by a date certain, tariffs or other charges that decrease market opportunities for United States exports, providing priority to those products that are subject to significantly higher tariffs or subsidy regimes of major producing countries and providing reasonable adjustment periods for import sensitive products of the United States, in close consultation with Congress.

(B) Eliminating disparities between applied and bound tariffs by reducing bound tariffs.

(C) Enhancing the transparency of tariff regimes.

(D) Tightening disciplines governing the administration of tariff rate quotas.

(E) Establishing mechanisms to prevent agricultural products from being exported to FTAA members by countries that are not FTAA members with the aid of export subsidies.

(F) Maintaining bona fide food aid programs.

(G) Allowing the preservation of programs that support family farms and rural communities but do not distort trade.

(H) Eliminating or reducing barriers to or, at a minimum, adopting rigorous disciplines that ensure transparency in the operations of such enterprises, including price transparency in the end of the year disclosure of content, and discriminatory practices, including policies supporting cross-subsidization, price discrimination, and price undercutting in export markets.

(I) Eliminating technology-based discrimination against agricultural commodities, and ensuring that the rules negotiated do not weaken rights and obligations under the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures.

(J) Eliminating provisions that adversely affect trade in perishable seasonal products, while improving import relief mechanisms to recognize the unique characteristics of perishable and seasonal agriculture.

Before proceeding with negotiations with respect to agriculture, the Trade Representative, in consultation with the Congress, shall seek to develop a position on the treatment of perishable and seasonal food products to be employed in the negotiations in order to develop a consensus on the treatment of such products in response to farm sector actions and in any other relevant area.

(K) Taking into account whether a party to the negotiations to adhere to the provisions of already existing trade agreements with the United States or has circumvented obligations under those agreements.

(L) Taking into account whether a product is subject to market distortions by reason of a failure of a major producing country to adhere to the provisions of already existing trade agreements with the United States or by the circumvention by that country of its obligations under those agreements.

(M) Taking into account the impact that agreements covering agriculture to which the United States is a party, including NAFTA, have on the United States agricultural industry.

(2) TRADE IN SERVICES.—The principal negotiating objective of the United States with respect to trade in services is to achieve, to the maximum extent possible, the elimination of barriers to, or other distortions of, trade in services in all modes of supply and across the broadest range of service sectors by doing the following:

(A) Pursuing agreement to treat negotiation of trade in services in a negative list manner whereby commitments will cover all sectors, and unless exceptions are made, all particular services or modes of supply are expressly excluded.

(B) Achieving maximum liberalization of market access in all modes of supply, including by removing restrictions on the legal form of an investment or on the right to own all or a majority share of a service supplier, subject to national security exceptions.

(C) Removing regulatory and other barriers that deny national treatment, or unreasonably restrict the establishment or operation of establishments of service suppliers in foreign markets.

(D) Eliminating additional barriers to trade in services, including restrictions on cross-border services and information flows and information systems, unreasonable or discriminatory licensing requirements, administration of cartels or toleration of anti- competitive activity, delegations of regulatory powers to private entities, and similar government acts, measures, or policies affecting the sale, offering for sale, purchase, distribution, or use of services that have the effect of restricting access of services and service suppliers to a foreign market.

(E) Strengthening existing concessions and liberalization commitments.

(F) Pursuing the strongest possible obligations to ensure that regulations of service suppliers in all countries, including rules, regulations, and standards-setting, and through judicial, administrative, and arbitral proceedings, is conducted in a transparent, reasonable, objective, and non-discriminatory manner and is otherwise consistent with principles of due process.

(G) Strongly opposing cultural exceptions to services obligations, especially relating to audiovisual services and service providers.

(H) Preventing discrimination against a like service when delivered through electronic means.

(I) Pursuing full market access and national treatment commitments for services sectors essential to supporting electronic commerce.

(J) Broadening and deepening existing commitments by other countries relating to basic and value-added telecommunications, including—

(i) strengthening obligations and the implementation of obligations to ensure competitive, non-discriminatory access to public telecommunication networks and services for Internet service providers and other value-added service providers; and

(ii) preventing anticompetitive behavior by major suppliers, including service suppliers that either government controlled or currently or recently government owned or controlled.

(K) Broadening and deepening existing commitments of other countries relating to financial services.

(3) TRADE IN MANUFACTURED AND NON-AGRICULTURAL GOODS.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade in manufactured and non-agricultural goods are the following:

(A) To eliminate disparities between applied and bound tariffs by reducing bound tariff levels.

(B) To negotiate an agreement that includes reciprocal commitments to eliminate duties in sectors in which tariffs are currently approaching zero.

(C) To eliminate tariff and nontariff disparities remaining from previous rounds of multilateral trade negotiations that have put United States exporters at a competitive disadvantage in world markets, especially tariff and nontariff barriers in foreign countries in those sectors where the United States has no significant barriers to imports and where foreign tariff and nontariff barriers are substantial.
(D) To obtain the reduction or elimination of tariffs on value-added products that provide a disproportionate level of protection compared to that provided to raw materials.

(E) To achieve additional nondiscriminatory barriers to trade, including:

(i) anticompetitive restrictions on access to product distribution networks and information preventing effective competition;

(ii) unreasonable or discriminatory inspection processes;

(iii) the administration of cartels, or the promotion, effecting the sale, offering for sale, purchase, transportation, distribution, or use of goods that have the effect of restricting access of goods to a foreign market.

(F) DISPUTE SETTLEMENT.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to dispute settlement are the following:

(A) To provide for a single effective and expeditious dispute settlement mechanism and set of procedures that applies to all FTAA agreements.

(B) To ensure that dispute settlement mechanisms enable effective enforcement of the rights of the United States, including by providing, in all contexts, for the use of all remedies to which adequately contributes equally to promote prompt and full compliance with the decision of a dispute settlement panel.

(C) To provide rules that promote cooperation by the governments of FTAA members in producing evidence in connection with dispute settlement proceedings, including copies of their submissions, and other measures that are of or are directly relevant to the dispute, other than evidence that is classified on the basis of national security, and evidence that is business confidential.

(D) To require that all submissions by governments to FTAA dispute panels and any appellate body be made available to the public upon submission, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in a submission that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(E) To require that meetings of FTAA dispute panels and any appellate body be open to all FTAA members and the public and provide for in camera treatment of only those portions of a proceeding dealing with evidence that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(F) To require that transcripts of proceedings of FTAA dispute panels and any appellate body be made available to the public promptly, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the transcripts that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(G) To establish rules allowing for the submission of amicus curiae briefs to FTAA dispute panels and any appellate body, and to require that such briefs be made available to the public, providing appropriate exceptions for only that information included in the briefs that is classified on the basis of national security or that is business confidential.

(H) To pursue rules protecting against conflicts of interest by members of FTAA dispute panels and any appellate body, and promoting the selection of members for such panels that will enable an adequate time necessary to decide increasingly complex cases.

(I) To pursue the establishment of formal procedures under which the FTAA dispute panels and any appellate body seek advice from other fora of competent jurisdiction, such as the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), the International Trade Organization (GATT), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and relevant specialized agencies of the United Nations.

(II) To establish or maintain judicial, quasi-judicial, or administrative tribunals or procedures for the purpose of the following:

(A) To pursue the negotiation of an agreement—

(i) requiring that government laws, rules, administrative and judicial decisions be published and made available to the public so that governments, businesses and the public have adequate notice of them;

(ii) requiring adequate notice before new rules are promulgated or existing rules amended;

(iii) encouraging governments to open rulemaking to public comment;

(B) To establish or maintain judicial, quasi-judicial, or administrative tribunals or procedures for the purpose of the following:

(i) requiring that FTAA agreements be conducted in a manner that is transparent and consistent with obligations under which the proceeding is initiated, and a general description of any issues in controversy;

(C) To ensure that such tribunals or procedures, parties to the proceeding are afforded a reasonable opportunity to support or defend their respective positions; and

(D) To ensure that such tribunals or procedures issue decisions based on the evidence and submissions of record or, where required by domestic law, the record compiled by the office or authority entrusted with administrative enforcement.

(B) To require the institution of regular review and evaluation of such tribunals or procedures, and to provide for the preparation of a report describing the effectiveness of such tribunals or procedures, and the public interest permit; and

(H) To maintain, expand, and update an official FTAA website in order to disseminate a wide range of information on the FTAA, including the draft texts of the agreements negotiated pursuant to the FTAA, the final text of such agreements, information, regional trade statistics, and links to websites of FTAA member countries that provide further information on government regulations, procedures, and related matters.

(G) To continue to maintain, expand, and update an official FTAA website in order to disseminate a wide range of information on the FTAA, including the draft texts of the agreements negotiated pursuant to the FTAA, the final text of such agreements, information, regional trade statistics, and links to websites of FTAA member countries that provide further information on government regulations, procedures, and related matters.
June 6, 2001
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE
H9035

States with respect to government procurement are the following:
(A) To seek the acceptance by all FTAA memers of the Agreement on Government Procurement.
(B) To seek conclusion of an agreement on transparency in government procurement.
(C) To promote global use of electronic publication of procurement information, including notices of procurement opportunities.
(D) To promote the reform of public procurement laws and regulations, including, in parcular, laws and regulations, for the purpose of strengthening environmental laws and regulations.

Public Procurement.

purchase of environmental goods, and obtaining commitments on environmental services.

The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade and investment are the following:
(A) To improve coordination between the FTAA and other international organizations such as the Organizational of American States, the ILO, the United Nations Environment Program, and the International Development Bank to increase the effectiveness of technical assistance programs.
(B) To ensure that the agreements entered under the FTAA provide for technical assistance to developing and, in particular, least-developed countries, that are members of the FTAA to promote the rule of law, environment, and labor, to compete with the obligations under the FTAA agreements, and minimize disruptions associated with trade liberalization.

Trade and Investment.

The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to trade and investment are the following:
(A) To reduce or eliminate artificial or trade-distorting barriers to foreign investment by United States persons and, recognizing that United States law on the whole provides a high level of protection for investments, consistent with or greater than the level required by international law, to secure for investors the rights that would be available under United States law, but no greater rights, by—
(i) ensuring national and most-favored national treatment for United States investors and investments;
(ii) freeing the transfer of funds relating to investments;
(iii) reducing or eliminating performance requirements, forced technology transfers, and other unreasonable barriers to the establishment of operations and investments;
(iv) establishing standards for expropiation and compensation for expropriation, consistent with United States legal principles and practice, including by clarifying that expropriation does not arise in cases of mere diminution in value;
(v) codifying the clarifications made on July 31, 2001, by the Free Trade Commission established under Article 2001 of the NAFTA with respect to the minimum standard of treatment under Article 1105 of the NAFTA such that—
(I) any provisions included in an investment agreement setting forth a minimum standard of treatment prescribe only that level of treatment required by international law; and
(II) a determination that there has been a breach of another provision of the FTAA, or otherwise gaining a competitive advantage, recognizing that—
(I) FTAA members retain the right to exercise discretion with respect to investigatory, prosecutorial, regulatory, and compliance matters and to make decisions regarding the allocation of resources to enforcement with respect to other labor matters determined to have higher priorities; and
(II) FTAA members retain the right to es-
"
member’s exercise of its police powers under its local, State, and national laws (for example, legitimate health, safety, environmental, consumer, and employment opportunity laws and regulations). By clarifying that the standards in an agreement do not require use of the least trade restrictive regulatory alternative;

(vii) providing meaningful procedures for resolving investment disputes;

(x) providing that—

(I) no claim by an investor directly against a state may be brought unless the investor first submits the claim for approval to the home government of the investor;

(II) such approval is granted for each claim which the investor demonstrates is meritorious;

(III) such approval is considered granted if the investor’s home government has not acted upon the submission within a defined reasonable period of time; and

(IV) such approval establishes or designates an independent decisionmaker to determine whether the standard for approval has been satisfied; and

(x) providing an existing appellate mechanism to correct erroneous interpretations of law.

(B) To ensure the fullest measure of transparency in the dispute settlement mechanism established by—

(i) ensuring that all requests for dispute settlement are promptly made public, to the extent consistent with the need to protect information that is classified or business confidential;

(ii) ensuring that—

(I) all proceedings, submissions, findings, and decisions, are promptly made public; and

(II) all hearings are open to the public, to the extent consistent with need to protect information that is classified or business confidential; and

(iii) establishing a mechanism for acceptance of amicus curiae submissions from businesses, unions, and nongovernmental organizations.

(13) ELECTRONIC COMMERCE.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to electronic commerce are the following:

(A) To make permanent and binding on FTAA members the moratorium on customs duties on electronic transmissions declared under such agreement.

(B) To seek the elimination of tariffs on all information technology products, infrastructure equipment, scientific instruments, and medical equipment.

(C) To pursue the reduction of foreign barriers to high technology products of the United States.

(D) To enforce and promote compliance with technical barriers to trade, and ensure that standards, conformity assessment, and technical regulations are not used as obstacles to trade in information technology and communications products.

(E) To require all parties to sign the Information Technology Agreement of the WTO and to expand and update product coverage under such agreement.

(17) CORRUPTION.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to corruption are the following:

(A) To obtain standards applicable to persons from all FTAA member countries that are equivalent to, or more restrictive than, the prohibitions applicable to issuers, domestic concerns, and other persons under section 10A of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977; and

(B) to implement mechanisms to ensure effective enforcement of the standards described in subparagraph (A).

(d) BILATERAL AGREEMENTS.—

(1) PRINCIPAL NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—

The principal negotiating objectives of the United States in seeking bilateral trade agreements are those objectives set forth in subsection (c), except that in applying such subsection, any references to the FTAA or FTAA member countries shall be deemed to refer to the bilateral agreement, or party to the bilateral agreement, respectively.

(2) ADHERENCE TO OBLIGATIONS UNDER URUGUAY ROUND AGREEMENTS.—In determining whether to enter into negotiations with a particular country, the President shall take into account the extent to which that country benefits, or has benefited, or has accelerated the implementation of, its obligations under the Uruguay Round Agreements.

(e) DOMESTIC OBJECTIVES.—In pursuing the negotiating objectives under subsections (a) through (d), United States negotiators shall take into account legitimate United States domestic (including social and policy) objectives, including, but not limited to, the protection of health and safety, essential security, environmental, consumer, and employment opportunity interests and the laws and regulations related thereto.

SEC. 3. CONGRESSIONAL TRADE ADVISERS.

Section 161(a)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2121(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows—

(1) At the beginning of each regular session of Congress—

(‘‘A’’ the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall—

(i) upon the recommendation of the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, select 5 members (not more than 3 of whom are members of the same political party) of such committee.

(ii) upon the recommendation of the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture, select 2 members (from different political parties) of such committee.

(iii) upon the recommendation of the majority leader and minority leader of the House of Representatives, select 2 members (from different political parties) of such committee.

(‘‘B’’ the President pro tempore of the Senate shall—

(i) upon the recommendation of the chair and ranking member of the Committee on Finance, select 5 members (not more than 3 of whom are members of the same political party) of such committee,

(ii) upon the recommendation of the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, select 2 members (from different political parties) of such committee,

(iii) upon the recommendation of the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate, select 2 members of the Senate (from different political parties), who shall be designated congressional advisers on trade policy and negotiations. They shall provide advice and make recommendations on trade policy and priorities for the implementation thereof. They shall also be accredited by the United States Trade Representative on behalf of the Presidents of the United States to the United States delegations to international conferences, meetings, dispute settlement proceedings, and negotiating sessions related to trade agreements.’’.

SEC. 4. TRADE AGREEMENTS AUTHORITY.

(a) AGREEMENTS REGARDING TARIFF BARRIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Whenever the President determines that one or more existing duties or other import restrictions of any foreign country or the United States are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purposes, policies, and objectives of this Act will be promoted thereby, the President—

(A) may enter into trade agreements with foreign countries before—

(i) the date that is 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, or

(ii) the date that is 7 years after such date of enactment, if fast track procedures are extended under subsection (c), and

(b) subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), proclaim—

(i) such modification or continuity of any existing duty,

(ii) such continuation of existing duty-free or excise treatment, or

(iii) such additional duties, as the President determines to be required or appropriate to carry out any such trade agreement.

The President shall notify the Congress of the President's intention to enter into an agreement entered into under subsection (b) of this section.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—No proclamation may be made under paragraph (1) that—
(A) reduces any rate of duty (other than a rate of duty that does not exceed 5 percent ad valorem on the date of enactment if (and only if) the President determines that any such reduction would be in effect on such date if—
(i) a reduction of 3 percent ad valorem or a reduction of one-tenth of the total reduction, whichever is greater, had taken effect on the effective date of a bill to which this paragraph applies; and
(ii) a reduction equal to the amount applicable under clause (i) had taken effect at 1-year intervals after the effective date of such first reduction;
(B) the fast track procedures shall be extended after such date of enactment, if fast track procedures are extended under subsection (c);
(C) the President may enter into a trade agreement under paragraph (A) with any foreign countries providing for—
(i) the reduction or elimination of a duty, restriction, barrier, or other distortion described in subparagraph (A), or
(ii) the prohibition of, or limitation on the imposition of, such barrier or other distortion;
(D) a rate of duty reduction that is proclaimed by a congressional resolution requested under paragraph (2) should be approved or disapproved.

(3) AGREEMENT ENTERED INTO UNDER SUBSECTION (A)—The President shall submit to the Congress, not later than 2 months before the expiration of the 5-year period specified in paragraph (1)(A), a written report that contains—
(A) its views regarding the progress that has been made in negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives of this Act; and
(B) a statement of its views, and the reasons therefor, regarding whether the extension requested under paragraph (2) should be approved or disapproved.

(4) REPORT TO CONGRESS BY THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The President shall promptly inform the Congressional Trade Advisers of the President's decision to submit a report to the Congress under paragraph (2). The Congressional Trade Advisers shall submit to the Congress as soon as practicable, but not later than 2 months before the expiration of the 5-year period specified in paragraph (1)(A), a written report that contains—
(A) its views regarding the progress that has been made in negotiations to achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives of this Act; and
(B) a statement of its views, and the reasons therefor, regarding whether the extension requested under paragraph (2) should be approved or disapproved.

(5) REPORTS MAY BE CLASSIFIED.—The reports under paragraphs (2) and (3), or any portion of such reports, may be classified to the extent the President determines appropriate, and the report under paragraph (4), or any portion thereof, may be classified.

(6) EXTENSION DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTIONS.—(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "extension disapproval resolution" means a resolution of either House of the Congress, the sole matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: That the extension disapproval resolution under section 4(c)(1)(B)(i) of the Comprehensive Trade Negotiating Authority Act of 2001, of the fast track procedures contained in that Act to any implementing bill submitted with respect to any trade agreement entered into under section 4(b) of that Act after the date that is 5 years after the date of enactment of that Act, with the blank space being filled with the name of the resolving House of the Congress.

(B) Extension disapproval resolutions—(1) by the President of the Congress by any member of such House; and
(ii) shall be referred, in the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Ways and Means and, in addition, to the Committee on Rules;

(C) The provisions of section 152 (d), and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192 (d) and (e) (relating to the floor consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to any disapproval resolution.

(D) It is not in order for—

(i) the Senate to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Finance;

(ii) the House of Representatives to consider any extension disapproval resolution not reported by the Committee on Ways and Means; and, in addition, by the Committee on Rules; or

(iii) either House of the Congress to consider an extension disapproval resolution after the date that is 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. COMMENCEMENT OF NEGOTIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to contribute to the continued economic expansion of the United States and to benefit United States workers, farmers, and businesses, the President shall commence negotiations covering tariff levels bound and applied by the United States to agree to further tariff reductions and other measures to foster economic cooperation and development.

(b) CONSULTATION REGARDING NEGOTIATING OBJECTIVES.—With respect to any negotiations for a trade agreement under section 152, the following shall apply—

(1) the Trade Representative, in developing strategies for pursuing negotiating objectives set forth in section 2 and other relevant negotiating objectives to be pursued in negotiations, including classified materials;

(A) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate;

(B) the congressional trade advisers; and

(C) other appropriate committees of Congress.

(2) The President shall assess whether United States tariffs on agricultural products that were bound under the Uruguay Round Agreements are lower than the tariffs bound by the country or countries with which such negotiations will be commenced. In addition, the President shall consider whether the tariff levels bound and applied throughout the world with respect to imports from the United States are higher than United States tariffs and whether the negotiation provides an opportunity to address any such disparity. The President shall consult with the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate concerning the results of the assessment, whether it is appropriate for the United States to agree to further tariff reductions based on such negotiations reached in the assessment, and how all applicable negotiating objectives will be met.

(c) NOTICE OF INITIATION; DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTIONS.—

(1) NOTICE.—The President shall—

(A) provide, at least 90 calendar days before the commencement of negotiations, written notice to the Congress of the President’s intention to enter into the negotiations and set forth therein the date the President intends to seek an agreement, the specific negotiating objectives to be pursued in the negotiations, and whether the President intends to seek an agreement on an amendment to the Uruguay Round Agreements of which notice is given under section 152(c) (relating to the consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to any disapproval resolution to which paragraph (2) applies. In sections 5(c)(1) if, at any time after the end of the 90-day period referred to in section 5(c)(1), the President determines that such negotiations are feasible and timely and would promote growth and open global markets, and raise standards of living in the United States and other countries and promote sustainable development.

Such sectors include agriculture, commercial services, intellectual property rights, industrial and capital goods, government procurement, information technology products, environmental technology and services, medical equipment and services, civil aircraft, and infrastructure products.

(B) DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term "disapproval resolution" means a resolution of either House of Congress, the sole matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the President has notified the Congress under section 5(c)(1) of the Comprehensive Trade Negotiating Authority Act of 2001 and, therefore, the fast track procedures under that Act shall not apply to any implementing bill submitted with respect to any trade agreement entered into pursuant to those negotiations.", with the blank space being filled with the name of the resolving House of Congress, and the second blank space being filled with the appropriate date.

(2) PROCEDURES FOR CONSIDERING RESOLUTIONS.—(A) Disapproval resolutions to which paragraph (2) applies—

(i) in the House of Representatives—

(I) shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means in addition, to the Committee on Rules; and

(II) may not be amended by either Committee; and

(ii) in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Finance.

(B) The provisions of section 152 (c), (d), and (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192 (c), (d), and (e) (relating to the consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) apply to any disapproval resolution to which paragraph (2) applies. In applying section 5(c)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974, all calendar days shall be counted.

(C) It is not in order for—

(i) the House to consider any joint resolution unless it has been reported by the Committee on Finance or the committee has been discharged pursuant to subparagraph (B); or

(ii) the House of Representatives to consider any joint resolution unless it has been reported by the Committee on Finance or the committee has been discharged pursuant to subparagraph (B).

(D) DISAPPROVAL RESOLUTIONS WITH RESPECT TO ON-GOING NEGOTIATIONS—

(1) NOTIFICATIONS OF WHICH NOTICE GIVEN.—

Fast track procedures shall not apply to any implementing bill submitted with respect to a trade agreement entered into pursuant to subparagraph (B).

(2) PRIOR NEGOTIATIONS.—Fast track procedures shall not apply to any implementing bill submitted with respect to a trade agreement entered into pursuant to subparagraph (B).
two Houses need not be in agreement with respect to disapproving any other negotiations.

(3) Disapproval resolutions.—(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "disapproval resolution" means a resolution of either House of Congress, the sole matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "The Congress—" and the insertion of the name of the resolving House after "The Congress—".(B) For purposes of paragraph (2), the term "disapproval resolution" means a resolution of either House of Congress, the sole matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "The Congress—" and the insertion of the name of the resolving House after "The Congress—".(C) Measures to implement, and alterative approaches to, the proposed trade agreement that would minimize adverse effects and maximize benefits identified under subparagraph (A); and

(ii) the House of Representatives to consider any joint resolution of disapproval submitted pursuant to subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of section 135(c)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 in that House of Congress, and the second blank space being filled with the name of the resolving House of Congress, and the second blank space being filled with a description of the applicable time period.

(4) Procedures for considering resolutions.—(A) Any disapproval resolution to which paragraph (1) or (2) applies—(i) shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and, in addition, to the Committee on Rules; and

(ii) may not be amended by either Committee; and

(id) in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Finance.

(B) The provisions of section 152(c), (d), (e) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2192(c), (d), and (e)) (relating to the consideration of certain resolutions in the House and Senate) do not apply to any disapproval resolution submitted pursuant to this paragraph to which paragraph (1) or (2) applies.

(C) Any disapproval resolution referred to in subparagraph (A) shall be subject to point of order in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively.

(D) The sectors of the United States economy likely to be affected by the agreement.

(5) Consultations with the advisory committee.—(A) In conducting the assessment required under paragraph (1), the Trade Representative and the Chair of the Council on Environmental Quality shall draw upon the knowledge of the departments and agencies with relevant expertise in the subject matter under consideration, including, but not limited to, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Energy, State, the Treasury, and Justice, the Agency for International Development, the Council of Economic Advisors, and the International Trade Commission.

(B) The heads of the departments and agencies with relevant expertise shall provide such resources as are necessary to conduct the assessment required under this subsection.

(6) Consultations with the advisory committee.—(A) Section 135(c)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2155(c)(1)) is amended in the first sentence—

(i) by striking "may establish" and inserting "shall establish"; and

(ii) by inserting "environmental issues," after "defense".

(B) In developing measures and alterative approaches to, the proposed trade agreement that will affect the laws, regulations, policies, and international agreements of the United States, including State and local laws, regulations, policies, and international agreements of the United States, including State and local laws, regulations, policies, and international agreements of the United States, including proposals relating to workers in the United States; and

(C) the sectors of the United States economy likely to be affected by the agreement.

(7) Public participation.—The Trade Representative shall publish the preliminary and final environmental assessments in the Federal Register. The Trade Representative shall take into account comments received from the public pursuant to notices published under this subsection and shall include in the final assessment a discussion of the public comments reflected in the assessment.

(e) Labor review.—

(1) Initiative of review.—Upon the commencement of negotiations for a trade agreement, the Trade Representative, jointly with the Secretary of Labor and the Commissioners of the International Trade Commission, shall consult with the environmental policy advisory committee established pursuant to section 135(c)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2155(c)(1)), as amended by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(2) Content.—The review under paragraph (1) shall include an examination of—

(A) the extent to which the proposed trade agreement may affect job creation, worker displacement, wages, and the standard of living for workers in the United States; and

(B) proposals to mitigate any negative effects of the proposed trade agreement on the United States, including proposals relating to trade adjustment assistance.

(3) Procedures.—The Trade Representative shall commence the review required by paragraph (1) by publishing notice thereof, and a request for comments thereon, in the Federal Register and transmitting notice thereof to the Congress. The notice shall be given not later than 30 calendar days before the applicable negotiations begin. The notice shall contain—

(A) the principal negotiating objectives of the United States to be pursued in the negotiations; and

(B) any Saturday and Sunday, not excluded under subparagraph (A), when either House of Congress is not in session.

(d) Environmental assessment.—(1) Initiative of assessment.—Upon the commencement of negotiations for a trade agreement under section 4(b), the Trade Representative, jointly with the Chair of the Council on Environmental Quality, and in consultation with other appropriate Federal agencies, shall commence an assessment of the effects on the environment of the proposed trade agreement.

(2) Content.—The assessment under paragraph (1) shall include an examination of—

(A) the potential effects of the proposed trade agreement on the environment, natural resources, and public health; and

(B) the extent to which the proposed trade agreement may affect the laws, regulations, policies, and international agreements of the United States, including State and local laws, regulations, policies, and international agreements of the United States, including proposals relating to workers in the United States; and

(C) measures to implement, and alterative approaches to, the proposed trade agreement that would minimize adverse effects and maximize benefits identified under subparagraph (A); and

(D) a detailed summary of the manner in which the results of the assessment were taken into consideration in negotiation of the proposed trade agreement, and in development of alterative approaches to the proposed trade agreement.

(3) Procedures.—The Trade Representative shall commence the assessment under paragraph (1) by publishing notice thereof, and a request for comments thereon, in the Federal Register and transmitting notice thereof to the Congress. The notice shall be given not later than 90 calendar days before the applicable negotiations begin. The notice shall contain—

(A) the principal negotiating objectives of the United States to be pursued in the negotiations; and

(B) the elements and topics expected to be under consideration for coverage by the proposed trade agreement.

(C) the countries expected to participate in the agreement; and

(D) proposals to mitigate any negative effects of the proposed trade agreement on the United States, including proposals relating to trade adjustment assistance.

(4) Consultations with Congress.—The Trade Representative shall submit to the Congress—

(A) within 6 months after the onset of negotiations, a preliminary draft of the environmental assessment conducted under this subsection; and

(B) not later than 30 calendar days before the agreement is signed by the President, the final version of the environmental assessment.

(b) Participation of other federal agencies and departments.—(A) In conducting the assessment required under paragraph (1), the Trade Representative and the Chair of the Council on Environmental Quality shall determine that such an assessment may affect the laws, regulations, policies, and international agreements of the United States relating to labor; and

(B) proposals to mitigate any negative effects of the proposed trade agreement on the United States, including proposals relating to trade adjustment assistance.

(c) Consultations with Congress.—The Trade Representative shall submit to the Congress—

(A) within 6 months after the onset of negotiations, a preliminary draft of the labor review conducted under this subsection; and

(B) not later than 30 calendar days before the agreement is signed by the President, the final version of the labor review.
(A) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committe of Finance of the Senate; (B) the congressional trade advisers; and (C) the Committee on the House and the Senate, and each joint committee of the Congress, which has jurisdiction over legisla tion involving subject matters which would be affected by the agreement.

2. SCOPES.—The consultation described in paragraph (1) shall include consultation with respect to—

(A) the nature of the agreement; (B) how and to what extent the agreement will achieve the applicable purposes, poli cies, and objectives of this Act; and (C) the extent to which the agreement will achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in section 7, including the general effect of the agreement on existing laws.

3. ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORTS.—The report required under section 135(e)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 regarding any trade agreement entered into under section 4(a) or (b) of this Act shall be provided to the President, the Congress, and the Trade Representative not later than 30 calendar days after the date on which the President notifies the Congress under section 7(a)(1)(A) of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement.

4. PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—The Trade Representa tive shall publish the preliminary and final reports required under section 6(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2156(c)(1)), as amended by subsection (d)(6)(A) of this section.

5. IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS.—In any case in which negoti ations being conducted to conclude a trade agreement under section 4(b) could affect the trade remedy laws of the United States or the rights or obligations of the United States under the Antidumping Agreement, the Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures, or the Agreement on Safeguards, except in negotiations directly and exclusively related to perishable and seasonal agricultural products, the Trade Representative shall, at least 90 calendar days before the President signs the agreement, notify the Congress of the specific language that is the subject of the negoti ations and the specific possible impact on existing international economic and trade relations.

6. REPORT ON INVESTMENT DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM.—If any agreement concl uded under section 4(b) with respect to trade and investment includes a dispute settlement mechanism allowing an investor to bring a claim directly against a country, the President shall submit a report to the Con gress, not later than 90 calendar days before the President signs the agreement, explaining in detail the meaning of each standard included in the dispute settlement mechanism, and explaining how the agreement does not interfere with the exercise by a dignitary to the agreement of its police powers under its national (including State and local) laws, including legitimate trade, safety, environmental, consumer, and em ployment opportunity laws and regulations.

7. CONSULTATION WITH CONGRESS BEFORE AGREEMENTS ENTERED INTO.—(1) Before entering into any trade agreement under section 4(b), the President shall consult with—

(A) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee of Finance of the Senate; (B) the congressional trade advisers; and (C) the Committee on the House and the Senate, and each joint committee of the Congress, which has jurisdiction over legislation involving subject matters which would be affected by the agreement.

8. SCOPES.—The consultation described in paragraph (1) shall include consultation with respect to—

(A) the nature of the agreement; (B) how and to what extent the agreement will achieve the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives of this Act; and (C) the extent to which the agreement will achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in section 7, including the general effect of the agreement on existing laws.

9. ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORTS.—The report required under section 135(e)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 regarding any trade agreement entered into under section 4(a) or (b) of this Act shall be provided to the President, the Congress, and the Trade Representative not later than 30 calendar days after the date on which the President notifies the Congress under section 7(a)(1)(A) of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement.

10. PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—The Trade Representa

tive shall publish the preliminary and final reports required under section 6(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2156(c)(1)), as amended by subsection (d)(6)(A) of this section.

11. IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS.—In any case in which negoti ations being conducted to conclude a trade agreement under section 4(b) could affect the trade remedy laws of the United States or the rights or obligations of the United States under the Antidumping Agreement, the Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures, or the Agreement on Safeguards, except in negotiations directly and exclusively related to perishable and seasonal agricultural products, the Trade Representative shall, at least 90 calendar days before the President signs the agreement, notify the Congress of the specific language that is the subject of the negoti ations and the specific possible impact on existing international economic and trade relations.

12. REPORT ON INVESTMENT DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM.—If any agreement concl

uded under section 4(b) with respect to trade and investment includes a dispute settlement mechanism allowing an investor to bring a claim directly against a country, the President shall submit a report to the Con gress, not later than 90 calendar days before the President signs the agreement, explaining in detail the meaning of each standard included in the dispute settlement mechanism, and explaining how the agreement does not interfere with the exercise by a dignitary to the agreement of its police powers under its national (including State and local) laws, including legitimate trade, safety, environmental, consumer, and em ployment opportunity laws and regulations.

13. CONSULTATION WITH CONGRESS BEFORE AGREEMENTS ENTERED INTO.—(1) Before entering into any trade agreement under section 4(b), the President shall consult with—

(A) the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committe

of Finance of the Senate; (B) the congressional trade advisers; and (C) the Committee on the House and the Senate, and each joint committee of the Congress, which has jurisdiction over legisla tion involving subject matters which would be affected by the agreement.

14. SCOPES.—The consultation described in paragraph (1) shall include consultation with respect to—

(A) the nature of the agreement; (B) how and to what extent the agreement will achieve the applicable purposes, policies, and objectives of this Act; and (C) the extent to which the agreement will achieve the purposes, policies, and objectives referred to in section 7, including the general effect of the agreement on existing laws.

15. ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORTS.—The report required under section 135(e)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 regarding any trade agreement entered into under section 4(a) or (b) of this Act shall be provided to the President, the Congress, and the Trade Representative not later than 30 calendar days after the date on which the President notifies the Congress under section 7(a)(1)(A) of the President’s intention to enter into the agreement.

16. PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—The Trade Representa

tive shall publish the preliminary and final reports required under section 6(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2156(c)(1)), as amended by subsection (d)(6)(A) of this section.

17. IMPLEMENTATION OF TRADE AGREEMENTS.—In any case in which negoti ations being conducted to conclude a trade agreement under section 4(b) could affect the trade remedy laws of the United States or the rights or obligations of the United States under the Antidumping Agreement, the Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures, or the Agreement on Safeguards, except in negotiations directly and exclusively related to perishable and seasonal agricultural products, the Trade Representative shall, at least 90 calendar days before the President signs the agreement, notify the Congress of the specific language that is the subject of the negoti ations and the specific possible impact on existing international economic and trade relations.

18. REPORT ON INVESTMENT DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM.—If any agreement concl

uded under section 4(b) with respect to trade and investment includes a dispute settlement mechanism allowing an investor to bring a claim directly against a country, the President shall submit a report to the Con gress, not later than 90 calendar days before the President signs the agreement, explaining in detail the meaning of each standard included in the dispute settlement mechanism, and explaining how the agreement does not interfere with the exercise by a dignitary to the agreement of its police powers under its national (including State and local) laws, including legitimate trade, safety, environmental, consumer, and em ployment opportunity laws and regulations.

that the benefits and obligations under the agreement apply only to the parties to the agreement, if such application is consistent with the terms of the agreement. The implementation of the agreement should provide that the benefits and obligations under the agreement do not apply uniformly to all parties to the agreement, if such application is consistent with the terms of the agreement.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON FAST TRACK PROCEDURES; CONCURRENCE BY CONGRESSIONAL TRADE ADVISERS IN PRESIDENT’S CERTIFICATION.—

(1) CONCURRENCE BY CONGRESSIONAL TRADE ADVISERS.—The fast track procedures shall not apply to any implementing bill submitted to Congress with respect to a trade agreement of which notice was provided under subsection (a)(1)(A) unless a majority of the congressional trade advisers, by a vote held not later than 30 days after the President submits the certification to Congress under subsection (a)(1)(B) with respect to the trade agreement, concur in the President’s certification. The failure of the congressional trade advisers to hold a vote within that 30-day period shall be considered to be concurrence in the President’s certification.

(2) LIMITATION ON TIME PERIOD.—The 30-day period referred to in paragraph (1) shall be computed without regard to—

(A) the days on which either House of Congress is not in session.

(B) the days on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain or an adjournment of the Congress sine die; and

(C) any Saturday and Sunday, and results from negotiations that were commenced before the date of the enactment of this Act, subsection (b) shall apply.

(b) AGREEMENT.—In the case of any agreement to which subsection (a) applies—

(1) the applicability of the fast track procedures implementing such bills shall be determined without regard to the requirements of section 5; and

(2) the President shall consult regarding the negotiations described in subsection (a) with the committees described in section 5(b)(1) and the congressional trade advisers as soon as possible after the enactment of this Act.

(c) APPLICABILITY OF ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT.—

(1) URUGUAY ROUND AGREEMENTS AND FTAA.—With respect to agreements identified in paragraphs (2) and (5) of subsection (a)—

(A) the notice required under section 6(e)(3) shall be given not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(B) the preliminary draft of the environmental assessment required under section 6(d)(4) shall be transmitted to the Congress not later than 18 months after such date of enactment.

(2) CHILE AND SINGAPORE.—With respect to agreements identified in paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (a), the Trade Representative shall consult with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate to determine the appropriate time frame for submission to the Congress of an environmental assessment meeting the requirements of section 6(d)(2).

(3) RULES OF ORIGIN.—The requirements of section 6(d)(1) shall not apply to an agreement identified in subsection (a)(1)(C).

(4) AGENCY STAFFING REQUIREMENTS.—The President shall transmit to the Congress a report on the staffing requirements of the Office of the United States Trade Representative and the agencies necessary to implement and enforce the agreement.

(5) COST ANALYSIS.—An analysis of the costs associated with each of the items listed in paragraphs (1) through (4).
(6) TRANSMISSION OF AGREEMENTS TO CONGRESS.—Section 162(a) (19 U.S.C. 2212(a)) is amended by striking “or under section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1994” and inserting “or under section 4 of the Comprehensive Trade Negotiating Authority Act of 2001”.

(b) APPLICATION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS.—For purposes of applying sections 125, 126, and 127 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2135, 2136(a), and 2137)—

(1) any trade agreement entered into under section 4 shall be treated as an agreement entered into under section 101 or 102, as appropriate, of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2111) on the date of its entry into force.

(2) any proclamation or Executive order issued pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under section 4 shall be treated as a proclamation or Executive order issued pursuant to a trade agreement entered into under section 102 of the Trade Act of 1974.

SEC. 12. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act—

(1) AGREEMENTS.—Any reference to any of the following agreements is a reference to that same agreement referred to in section 101(d) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3511(d)):

(A) The Agreement on Agriculture.

(B) The Agreement on Rules of Origin.

(C) The Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade.

(D) The Agreement on Trade-Related Investment Measures.

(F) The Agreement on Rules of Origin.

(G) The Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures.

(H) The Agreement on Safeguards.

(I) The General Agreement on Trade in Services.

(K) The Agreement on Government Procurement.

(2) ANTIDUMPING AGREEMENT.—The term “Antidumping Agreement” means the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994.

(3) APPELLATE BODY; DISPUTE SETTLEMENT BODY; DISPUTE SETTLEMENT PANEL; DISPUTE SETTLEMENT UNDERSTANDING.—The terms “Appeal Body”, “Dispute Settlement Body”, “dispute settlement panel”, and “Dispute Settlement Understanding” have the meanings given those terms in section 121 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (35 U.S.C. 3531).

(4) BUSINESS CONFIDENTIAL.—Information or evidence is “business confidential” if disclosure of the information or evidence is likely to cause substantial harm to the competitive position of the entity from which the information or evidence would be obtained.

(5) CONGRESSIONAL TRADE ADVISERS.—The term “congressional trade advisers” means the congressional advisers for trade policy and negotiations designated under section 161(a)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2211(a)(1)).

(6) FTA.A.—The term “FTAA” means the Free Trade Area of the Americas or comparable agreement reached between the United States and the countries in the Western Hemisphere.

(7) FTA.A AGREEMENT.—The term “FTAA agreements” means any agreements entered into to establish or carry out the FTAA.

(F) FTAA MEMBER; FTAA MEMBER COUNTRY.—For purposes of this Act, “FTAA member” and “FTAA member country” mean a country that is a member of the FTAA.

(G) GATT 1994.—The term “GATT 1994” has the meaning given that term in section 2 of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3501).

(H) LLO.—The term “LLO” means the International Labor Organization.

(I) IMPLEMENTING BILL.—The term “implementing bill” has the meaning given that term in section 2(a) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2110(b)(1)).

(J) NAFTA.—The term “NAFTA” means the North American Free Trade Agreement.

(K) TRADEREPRESENTATIVE.—The term “Trade Representative” means the United States Trade Representative.

(L) UNITED STATES PERSON.—(A) United States citizen.

(B) a partnership, corporation, or other legal entity organized under the laws of the United States; and

(C) a partnership, corporation, or other legal entity that is organized under the laws of a foreign country and is controlled by entities described in subparagraph (B) or United States citizens, or both.

(M) URUGUAY ROUND AGREEMENTS.—The term “Uruguay Round Agreements” has the meaning given that term in section 2(b) of the Uruguay Round Agreements Act (19 U.S.C. 3501(7)).

(N) WTO.—The term “WTO” means the organization established pursuant to the WTO Agreement.

(O) WTO AGREEMENT.—The term “WTO Agreement” means the Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization entered into on April 15, 1994.

Mr. RANGEL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, this debate is about trade and not about terrorism. It is not about American leadership. America must lead in trade in the right direction. Trade must expand, and it has to be shaped in a way that is what we have been doing these last years. We have voted on these bills. Do not pretend they do not exist. That is what we have been doing these last years. We have voted on these bills. Do not pretend they do not exist. The Thomas bill would turn back the clock in key areas including those relating to labor.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very emotional time for me, because our Speaker said this bill is just as important as fighting the war against terrorism. I think that is a big stretch, to compare the loss of American lives at Ground Zero to the passage of this bill as being on the same level. We cannot bring back those lives at Ground Zero, but we can get another chance to give the President the authority that so many of us believe that he wants and he deserves to carry on against the war against terrorism, and this should be the beginning of our fight against terrorism, and this should be the beginning of our fight against terrorism, and this should be the beginning of our fight against terrorism.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN). (Mr. LEVIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, this debate is about trade and not about terrorism. It is not about American leadership. America must lead in trade in the right direction. Trade must expand, and it has to be shaped in a way that is what we have been doing these last years. We have voted on these bills. Do not pretend they do not exist. The Thomas bill would turn back the clock in key areas including those relating to labor.
Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, as I said previously, I want to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSU) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) for their hard work, and alternately, they have worked endlessly to put together what they believe to be the right trade policy for our country.

I agree with it entirely. I think it is the kind of vision that we need in trade, and I urge Members to seriously consider voting for it.

The only way we will get these changes made in trade policy is if we have the votes to pass this kind of a motion. So I strongly recommend it to Members.

I honor their hard work and scholarship, their seriousness of purpose. It is a remarkable job that they have done, and I urge Members to vote for what I believe to be the right vision on trade for America now and in the future.

Mr. THOMAS, Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit. The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOD). The gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, most others would oppose this if they had told us that was in it during their 5 minutes; but that usually is my job, to tell people what is in the motion to recommit.

First of all, that is the motion to recommit, and I want to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) in which he utilized patriotism by condemning others using patriotism to urge my colleagues to support his motion to recommit. Nicely done.

What the minority leader said was that this position contains all the right issues.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), who is the author of this, says to me that it moves in the right direction; and in fact, the key phrase from the agreement arrangement should work.

I want to compliment the Democrats that voted against Ways and Means. I want to compliment the Democrats who will vote down the motion to recommit, and I want to compliment all of those who will support Trade Promotion Authority for the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit. The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote. A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair announces that this motion to pass the bill by electronic device will be taken on the question of the passage of the bill.
The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 215, nos. 214, not voting 5, as follows:

(Roll No. 481)

AYES—215

Akin Armey Bachus
Baker Balbierger
Barton
Bass Bentzen
Bereuter
Biggert
Bilirakis
Busta
Boehmert
Boehner Bono
Brown (KS)
Burton
Buyer
Calahan
Calvert
Camp
Cannon
Carson (OK)
Castle Chabot
Chambliss Collins Combest
Cooksey
Cox
Cubin
Cunningham
Davis (GA)
Davis (FL)
Davis, Jo Ann
Davis, Tom Deal
DeLauro
Dent
Dicks
Dooley
Doolittle
Dreier
Ehlers
Erlichson
English
Egger
Ferguson
Flake
Fletcher
Forbes
Fossella
Frelinghuysen
Gallegly
Ganske
Gekas
Gibbons
Gilchrist

NOES—214

Abercrombie
Ackerman
Aderholt
Allen
Andrews
Baca
Baird
Baldacci
Baldwin
Barcia
Barrett
Bartlett
Beccerra
Belcher
Berman
Berry
Bishop Blagaievich

Coble
Condit
Conyers
Costello
Coyne
Cramer
Crowley
Cummins
Davis (IL)
DeFazio
DeFazio
DeLauro
DeSoto
Dingell
Doggett
Doyle
Duncan

HOLYDAY, PAGE 25

December 6, 2001

NOT VOTING—5

Hostetler
Meek (FL)

Quinn
Roikema

NOT VOTING—5

Hostettler
Meek (FL)

Quinn
Roikema

Mr. GREENWOOD, Mr. WALSH, Mrs. CUNIB, Messrs. BROWN of South Carolina, COX, STRICKLAND, HERGER, BORSIK, MURTHA, Mrs. VELAZQUEZ, Messrs. DOYLE, MASCARA, BRADY of Pennsylvania, RAHALL, HOLDEN, and KANJORSKI changed their vote from “aye” to “no.”

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2883, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002

Mr. GOSS, Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent on the part of the House to have until midnight, December 6, 2001, to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 2883) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2002 and intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? There was no objection.