House of Representatives

The House was not in session today. Its next meeting will be held on Tuesday, May 14, 2002, at 12:30 p.m.

Senate

MONDAY, MAY 13, 2002

(Thoulegislicst day of Thursday, May 9, 2002)

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE
The Honorable HARRY REID led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:
I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE
The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,

To the Senate:
Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REID thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEAHY). The deputy majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE
Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senate will be in morning business for the next hour. At 4 o'clock, there will be a 2-hour debate on the nomination of Paul Cassell to be United States district judge. That time will be divided between the chairman of the committee, Senator LEAHY, and the ranking member, Senator HATCH, or their designees. The vote on the nomination will occur at approximately 6 o'clock this evening.

Mr. President, following disposition of the nomination, we will resume consideration of the trade bill. We have laid down the amendment on which we worked so hard for more than a day last week. That was laid down on Friday. It is now open for amendment. We hope people will come over and offer amendments. The leader is interested in completing work on this bill, but he wants to make sure everyone has an opportunity to offer amendments. We hope that the amendments will be offered, that we can debate them, and vote on them. The leader would rather not have to file a cloture motion. I hope that is not necessary. And I am sure the majority leader also hopes that is not necessary. We ask Senators to be ready for some long nights this week in hopes of completing this bill in the immediate future.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

● This “bullet” symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 4 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided between the majority leader and the Republican leader or their designees.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for up to 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RETIREMENT SECURITY FOR AMERICANS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I have come to the Chamber today to speak about a subject that is of great importance to the people of my State, and I think people throughout the country, and that is the issue of retirement security.

We give a lot of speeches in the Senate about security: national security, homeland security, a variety of security matters. We are concerned about security. The American people are concerned about security.

But there is one aspect of security that has not gotten a whole lot of attention so far in this Congress, and I am here today to call attention to it. That aspect of security is retirement security.

The collapse of Enron and the resulting collapse of the retirement plans of many Enron workers and plans across the country that held substantial amounts of Enron stock have underscored the need for changes in our pension laws and our retirement plan laws. Frankly, I am disappointed that the House of Representatives, in passing a watered-down version of the administration's modest proposals, has failed to increase retirement safety for those American workers who do have pensions, since that is all on which that bill really focuses.

The one proposal they should have watered down—that was the “conflicted adviser” provision in that bill—was left intact. It has the effect of removing one of the few protections in current law against conflicts of interest by financial service companies.

I am hoping the Senate will follow the lead of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee and also the Finance Committee and their respective chairs and provide a more meaningful piece of legislation drafted to protect the rights of workers instead of exposing them to greater risks. So that is an issue that has been brought to national attention because of the collapse of Enron.

At the same time I refer to that, let me say that an even more troubling trend continues, and that is what from the administration and, really, in either House of Congress about the lack of pension coverage of any kind for large segments of our working population—both the lack of coverage and the substantial reduction in retirement wealth for most of the workers in this country.

Approximately 2 weeks ago, Dr. Edward Wolff of the Economic Policy Institute—he is a professor at New York University—presented his report entitled “Retirement Insecurity: The Income Shortfalls Awaiting the Soon-to-Be-Shorter.” He likewise like to take a few minutes to highlight some of the points that were made in that report. I believe it makes the case, in a very compelling way, of the need for more attention to this issue for everyday workers.

The report and the most recent Department of Labor statistics demonstrate that retirement plan coverage has not increased in the past 30 years despite all of the efforts to expand coverage. So there is one chart I have to make the case.

This shows the retirement plan coverage rates for full-time, private sector workers. You can see this covers the period 1972 to 1999. If you look at all workers, you see the retirement plan coverage rate for all workers in 1972 was 48 percent; in 1999—nearly 30 years later, 27 years later—it was 51 percent. So there has been a very modest increase, but modest indeed.

When you look at the figures for male workers, you see there has been an actual decline in the coverage rates for full-time, private sector male employees during that period, 1972 to 1999. Mr. President, 54 percent of male workers had pensions of some type. When I say “pensions,” I include in that 401(k) plan participation; they had some kind of a plan where they were putting away money for retirement. It was 54 percent in 1972, 25 percent in 1999.

The percentage for women has improved because they were at 38 percent in 1972 and they are now at 49 percent. But it is substantially below where it ought to be.

That means roughly half of America's private sector employees will have to enjoy their retirement on the other two legs of the proverbial three-legged stool. Some who are listening may not be aware of this metaphor, but the three-legged stool is what people who focus on retirement circumstances are always referring to. They say: You have three legs you can depend upon for your retirement income; one is Social Security, the second is your savings, and the third is your pension.

What these statistics show is that one of those so-called legs that a person can depend upon in this so-called three-legged stool, the pension part, is not there for most workers in this country. In truth, my guess is that many private sector workers who do not have a pension or retirement plan probably do not have a second leg on that stool either because they do not have any significant savings. So they are essentially left with Social Security as their only real source of support after their retirement.

For minorities, the prospects are even dimmer. Unfortunately, the coverage for minorities is unacceptably low; it has been for a long time and continues. This chart makes the point for different groups of employees. For all workers in 1999, the percentage of people covered and the percentage covered under their employer’s pension plan was 44 percent. When you go down to Black, non-Hispanic workers, it was 41 percent; Asian and Pacific Islanders, non-Hispanic, 38 percent; others, minorities, non-Hispanic and Hispanic workers, 27 percent. That last figure is important to me because 40 percent of the people in my State are Hispanic. This statistic indicates that only 27 percent of the private sector employees who are Hispanic in this country actually have a pension on which they can rely.

There has been an interesting shift I will point out. This comes out of Dr. Wolff’s report. There has been a shift from defined benefit plans to defined contribution plans. Let me explain what that is. A defined benefit plan essentially guarantees that when the worker retires, they will receive a specific amount, a defined benefit, regardless of what has happened to the economy or to the investment, the retirement funds, or anything else in the interim while they were working.

In 1975, when you looked at all of these various pensions people had in the private sector, 71 percent of them were defined benefit plans and only 29 percent were defined contribution.

Defined contribution, of course, means the risk is much more on the employee. It does not guarantee you any particular payment on a monthly basis or a yearly basis once you retire. It says you put in a specified amount each month while you are working, and then at the end of your work time, we look to see what the investment of those funds has happened to and how much there is for you to actually get in the way of retirement. So there is much less risk on the employer, much more risk on the employee in a defined contribution plan.

The interesting thing about this chart is the defined benefit plans used to represent 71 percent of all pension plans; now they are 35 percent. The defined contribution plans used to represent 29 percent; they are now 65 percent.

So there has been a dramatic shift away from defined benefits to defined contributions.

When this trend started, the case was made by those who advocated it that this was going to allow much greater expansion of pension coverage; we were going to be able to cover a great many more workers if we shifted to a defined contribution plan instead of a defined benefit plan. So we did. We had a dramatic shift from defined benefit plans to defined contribution plans. Unfortunately, what we have not seen is a corresponding increase in the percentage of workers covered, as that earlier chart made the case very clearly.
One of the reasons many of these companies shifted to defined contribution plans is that the employee makes the majority of the contributions to the plan when it is defined contribution—not the employer but the employee. As indicated before, the risk is shifted to the employee. The risk of the funds not being well invested and the investments not turning out well shifts to the employee rather than the employer.

Clearly, half of our private sector employees did not get any benefit out of this bargain because they don’t have a pension of any kind from the start. As I am about to explain, it does not appear that a majority of the covered workers got much out of this either.

Let me put up a few more charts that are interesting. One which is hard to read is a chart that shows, State by State, the pension coverage we have in the private sector around the country. This is a chart that got my attention. You cannot read it from any distance. I am sure, but you can see that in Washington State, 45 percent of private sector workers have pension coverage. It is substantially better in some other States. In Vermont—the Presiding Officer has not read it in Vermont—40 percent of the private sector employees have some kind of a pension. That means either some kind of defined contribution or defined benefit plan. They may have a 401(k). That would be in that 40 percent.

The reason this chart catches my attention is that if you go over this chart and look at all of the percentages, the State with the lowest percent is New Mexico. Twenty-nine percent of the private sector employees in my State actually have some kind of pension. I have a chart I also want to put up for the attention of various Senators. It shows the percentage of private sector workers without pension coverage. It shows top 15 States in New Mexico, 71 percent of the private sector employees, according to these statistics, don’t have any kind of a pension; Louisiana, 69 percent; Nevada, 67 percent; Florida, 66 percent; Mississippi, 66 percent.

People might look at this and say, you are generally talking about southern, southwestern States, close to the border. There are all kinds of problems there with the economy.

Let’s go to some others. I know my colleague from North Dakota is in the Chamber. According to this chart, 61 percent of the private sector employees in North Dakota do not have a pension. This is data from the employee benefits supplement to the Census Bureau statistics in 1993.

The national average, according to that period, in 1993, was 50 percent; South Carolina, 61 percent; in Texas, where our President was Governor, 62 percent did not have a pension.

This chart, of course, this chart is used to make the point that this is a real issue for a great many Americans. I know we have had people come to the floor and say—in fact, I think my colleague from Texas spoke a couple weeks ago and said the biggest economic issue that this Congress has to deal with is to make permanent the repeal of the estate tax. Well, to change the law as it will wind up creating new rates to the estate tax, when I look at these statistics, I don’t think that is the biggest economic issue from the point of view of the people I represent. We have other big economic issues, one of which is pension coverage.

At the same time that coverage rates were made flat and employees shifted towards the defined contribution plans, the retirement income of retirees and those nearing retirement has decreased as well. Only 57 percent of households in the United States have a pension. I have another chart that makes that point. Let me put it up. This is a chart that I think is very interesting because it deals with the issue of the share of our population that is dependent on an expected retirement income that is more than half of their current income. We are not suggesting that people in retirement are likely to have incomes equal to their current income. We are saying that if we were to like them to have incomes that are at least half of their current income.

In 1989, according to this chart, 70 percent of the people who were retiring had incomes that equaled half of their current income. So they had as much as a 50-percent reduction in their income, but it wasn’t worse than that. In 1998, a couple years ago—the most recent year for which we have statistics—that dropped to 57 percent. So only 57 percent of households had an income that was half of their current income by that time.

So who are the winners? Who has benefited from all these changes that have occurred according to Dr. Wolff’s report? The data released in this report demonstrates that only those with retirement incomes of over a million dollars saw their retirement wealth, in 1999, increase as compared to their retirement wealth in 1989. This chart takes each of these different groups—if your wealth is $25,000, or if it is $25,000 to $49,999, $50,000 to $100,000, $100,000 to $250,000. And then the final part of the chart is a million dollars and over.

So you have your million and over in your wealth, you have probably seen that increase during that period from 1983 to 1998. But if you are not in that income category and in that wealth category, then you did not do as well. So the statistics from this report are pretty stark. Coverage rates have been stagnant. The percentage of our private sector workers that have coverage—some kind of pension—has been whittled away.

The Presiding Officer, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico raises a point that a lot of people are not talking about much. They talk about pension reform a lot around here but they fail to mention that a good many Americans have no pension.

The Senator from New Mexico used statistics—for example, 61 percent in my home State, and I think 70-some in New Mexico, have no pension. We should do pension reform, but we also ought to think through how do we encourage additional retirement savings and pensions to be offered to workers.
Farm bill—the current law—and this new farm bill is over $270 million in additional assistance during collapsed prices to family farmers. Now, that help is not just for family farmers; it shows up on many of our main streets and supports our jobs in a rural State such as mine.

I cannot say strongly enough how important this bill is. It took us too long to get done, but it is done. I appreciate the work that all of us did together and the cooperation in the final analysis in the Republican leadership to get it to the President. I am pleased and relieved that this morning, finally, this bill is now signed into law.

SELLING FOOD TO CUBA

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me talk about two other issues briefly. One is a letter I received last Friday from Secretary of State Colin Powell. This predates the State Department to cancel the visas for Cubans coming to our country to buy additional food. Since the hurricane, they have purchased over $70 million in American food. That is available for them to purchase because I and my colleague from Connecticut, Senator Dodd, and others changed the law to allow food sales to Cuba. Strangely enough, they have to pay in cash and do it through a French bank; nonetheless, they can finally buy American food.

We ought never use food as a weapon, and we have done it for 40 years with Cuba. That is over. They are now buying food from this country. We had a group of people representing Allimport, including Pedro Alvarez and others, coming to this country to buy food. They were coming, in fact, to North Dakota and they were going to buy dried beans and wheat. They were granted a visa by the State Department, and then immediately that visa was revoked. I asked Secretary Powell, “By what authority was it revoked and why?”

Let me use a couple of charts to see what happened on this issue. This is a news story about it:

A State Department official confirmed Wednesday that the administration policy is not to encourage sales of food to Cuba.

In the letter from Secretary Powell, he disavows that, but that is what they told me is our policy not to encourage food sales to Cuba. I said it is a brainless policy to decide you do not want to sell food to Cuba; you ought to sell food to Cuba. We sell it to China, a Communist country. We sell it to Vietnam, a Communist country. And we are told we do not want to sell food to Cuba? Does anybody think Fidel Castro has not eaten a meal along the way because we had an obstruction on the sale of food to Cuba? No, it just hurts sick people, poor people, and hungry people. This is what this policy has represented.

At a hearing last week when I raised this question with Secretary Powell, he said: I have never heard of this policy not to encourage food sales to Cuba. In fact, he said additional sales should be encouraged so long as American farmers benefit.

The Farm Bureau said the cancellation of Mr. Alvarez’s visa will affect the sale of corn, rice, wheat, poultry, soybeans, lentils, and eggs, valued at $35 million.

I received a four-page letter from Secretary Powell. Frankly, it does not answer any of the questions. It says the Mr. Alvarez’s visa was revoked because of a 1985 then-President Ronald Reagan directive. He also said: Mr. Alvarez was here once before and he lodged to undermine the U.S. embargo. I guess when he was here before, he said Cuba would like to have a circumstance where they could buy food from American farmers. The State Department considers that undermining America’s interest. Give me a break. Mr. Secretary, that does not undermine anything. The Department and others will pay a little more attention to the issue of terrorists getting bombs, not Cubans buying dried beans and wheat.

The subcommittee which I chair is going to hold a hearing, and I will ask the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Reich, to come to Congress and explain who decided to revoke these visas.

TRADE AUTHORITY

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to speak to the underlying legislation we will be on following the vote on the judgeship this afternoon. That is the trade bill. We are going to be discussing once again so-called fast-track trade authority. I am not going to support the bill, but I do have some amendments.

I think fast track is fundamentally undemocratic. Our trade deficit is bailing out the deficit in merchandise trade deficits. And every time we have had a new agreement, we have been injured further.

I am going to offer several amendments to fast track when it is before the Senate. One deals with wheat from Canada. The unfairly subsidized wheat coming in from Canada has injured our farmers in a dramatic way. The International Trade Commission says this wheat trade is unfair, and the trade action has been in place for 17 years. It is unfair. But there is no specific remedy. It is a five-point remedy in the sweet by-and-by; we will never quite get to it.

My amendment will say we want specific remedies identified and reported to us within 6 months of what the trade ambassador is going to do to take specific action and remedy the unfair wheat trade that exists with Canada and the unfair trade that exists in other markets with respect to Canada.

That amendment is not amendment 11.

No 2, this administration is proposing on June 30 to allow long-haul Mexican trucks into this country. That is in contravention of everything Congress debated just months ago on this issue. I am going to offer an amendment that tries to stop that.

Mr. President, you know and I know everyone in this country knows Mexican truck drivers are not driving with the same safety requirements imposed in Mexico that exist here in this country. They do not have the same safety inspections. They do not have the same requirements with respect to length of service or hours of service or logging books. I ask everyone to read the newspaper accounts of people riding with Mexican long-haul truckers, and you will discover the truckers drove continuously for 24 hours or drove unsafe equipment.

The fact is this administration on June 30 is going to allow those long-haul Mexican trucks to come into this country to do long hauls, and that is wrong, it is unsafe, and it ought not happen.

A State security requirements the Senate would have imposed some months ago when we debated this issue are nowhere near in place. The inspection stations do not exist. The compliance and enforcement requirements in Mexico do not exist. The fact is, we are going to have American families driving up and down American streets and highways with long-haul Mexican trucks and no one is going to know whether that driver has been driving 24 straight hours or driving a rig with faulty brakes because it has not been inspected. I am going to offer an amendment on that issue.

In addition, I am going to offer an amendment dealing with Cuba, and that amendment will impose the same circumstances that were dropped out of the agriculture conference just last week. The amendment is very simple. It says when Cuba buys grain from our country, it ought not have to pay cash through a French bank; it ought to be able to buy grain with commercially accepted credit from our country.

I am going to support the Dayton-Craig amendment which is very important. Our trade negotiators are prepared to negotiate away antidumping authority, the ability on behalf of our producers to remedy trade that is unfair because someone else is dumping into our marketplace. If we eliminate the antidumping remedies, we will put our producers in desperate trouble. That is right on point. I intend to ask to cosponsor that amendment, and I will be very supportive of it.

I also will be supportive of an amendment to be offered by Senator DURBIN and will ask to be a cosponsor of that. That amendment deals with labor and environmental standards with respect to trade. The issue for this country should continue to be this: We want people to access the American marketplace, to give the American consumer the best produce from all around the world, but we want it, when those goods come in as result of trade, to be fair trade.
We do not want goods that come from prison labor in China. We do not want goods to come into our marketplace that are made by 12-year-old kids working 12 hours a day being paid 12 cents an hour. That is not fair trade. It is not what this country ought to support, what we ought to allow into our marketplace.

Conditions of fair trade are very important, and as we discuss trade in this Chamber with the advent of the fast track debate, it is very important for us today to be the American people that there is an admission price to the American economy, and the admission price to other countries is that their markets must be open to us and their markets and laws must represent fair trade with this country. That is not a standard that now exists.

I do not want to put a wall around our country. I believe in expanded trade. I believe in greater trade opportunity. But I believe also this country needs to have the spine and the backbone to stand up for its own economic interest and demand that trade be fair trade.

That will represent the several amendments I will be offering and supporting, the three I mentioned I will be offering soon.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The senior Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from North Dakota for his comments. I particularly commend him for his comments about the issue regarding Cuba and how we might do a better job than we have over the past 40 years of bringing democracy to that country.

After 40 years of failed policies, one might think a new approach would be in order. I take note as well that as we speak about Cuba, that the President of the United States, President Carter, is in Cuba speaking to dissidents and human rights activists, as well as members of the Government of Cuba. That kind of exposure, that kind of engagement is going to do more to bring about the change we want to see in Cuba than the insistence of a failed policy we have followed for the past four decades.

I commend my colleague from North Dakota for his comments.

INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I wish to take a few minutes to express my deep disappointment at the announcement made last week by Under Secretary of State John Bolton with respect to the “unsigned” as they have called it, of the International Criminal Court. This decision, in my view, is irresponsible, it is isolationist, and contrary to our vital national interest.

Many of our allies—in fact, every one of our NATO allies—has put their faith and vision in this new legal instrument, the International Criminal Court. To date, 66 nations have ratified the International Criminal Court and over 130 nations have signed on to this particular effort, including those nations I mentioned—all of our NATO allies—countries such as France, Germany, Belgium, the United Kingdom, and the like. These are governments with deep ties to our Nation. We share a deep sense of common values, a deep sense of democracy, and a deep sense of justice.

It is outrageous that the United States has now put itself in a position of joining only a handful of rogue nations that are frightened to death of the International Criminal Court as we enter the 21st century. We should be joining these countries and supporting them in their commitment to making the Court work and strengthening international respect for the rule of law. That is what we stand for as against human rights would be on trying to export around the world. In addition, we try to export the notion of justice, of fair justice, such as the symbols we see outside this building: a block away: The Supreme Court, Justice blindfolded with the scales equally divided.

That is what we have stood for as a nation for more than two centuries. What a great shame it is that as we enter the 21st century, in an effort to establish an international criminal court of justice, the Bush administration is going to “unsigned” a document, a treaty, that I think would have gone a long way to helping us achieve the very goals incorporated in the Treaty of Rome.

We should have been rejoicing that finally with the entry and divorce of the court, any individual who commits genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity is going to be prosecuted for those offenses. I find it disheartening there is a lack of historical perspective when it comes to this issue. Let’s remember it was the atrocities of World War II that lead to the establishment of the Nuremberg Tribunal to bring those who committed such acts of violence and human rights violations to justice, which highlighted the fact that there was a void in the international legal system. Those who participated in the Nuremberg process came to believe strongly that a permanent international criminal court should be established to try future heinous international criminals.

The hope is that membership of such a court would also serve as a deterrent to those who might consider committing such crimes.

Unfortunately, the proposal floundered during 50 years of superpower rivalry, but the United States kept arguing that we ought to do this, through Republican and Democratic administrations. Conservatives, liberals, moderates, a lot of us argued and proposed that one important thing to do is to reestablish the rule of law.

I am concerned that this administration, in its 50 years of isolationism, has narrowed the American economy, and the admission price to other countries is that their markets must represent fair trade with this country. That is not a standard that now exists.

I do not want to put a wall around our country. I believe in expanded trade. I believe in greater trade opportunity. But I believe also this country needs to have the spine and the backbone to stand up for its own economic interest and demand that trade be fair trade.

Unfortunately, the proposal floundered during 50 years of superpower rivalry, but the United States kept arguing that we ought to do this, through Republican and Democratic administrations. Conservatives, liberals, moderates, all suggested and all argued that such a court could have been stronger and better rules—the court is going into existence as it is presently construed, does have flaws because we disengage from rewriting the court to try to establish better rules—the court is going into existence in a matter of weeks. Whether we signed it or not, it is becoming the international rule of law, and today that court could have been stronger had we decided to remain engaged in helping frame the structure of the institution.

These men and women in uniform may be in some jeopardy, and my hope would be they would not, but had we stayed engaged in this process, we could have eliminated even that slight possibility. Moreover, to the best of my knowledge, where we have done with respect to the ICC, the “unsigned” of a treaty, is without precedent. I am sure there are legal scholars on diplomacy that can correct me if I am wrong, but I cannot find a single example in the more than two centuries of history where an American President has unsigned an agreement.

Think of the precedent-setting nature of that act. Let’s be clear: The U.S. withdrawing its signature, if it can so be done, does not annul the court. In fact, it does not do that at all. But it would encourage other nations to remove their signatures from treaties that are vital to U.S. interests, and they will cite the example of an American President who unilaterally abrogated a treaty for which he did not particularly care.

The fear in Washington is that American soldiers abroad, as I said, would be charged unjustly with war crimes. Such possibility is very remote. The court already contains strong safeguards that ensure it will deal only with the most serious of international crimes and can take a case only if a nation’s own judicial system has declined to carry out a conscientious investigation of the charges.

Does anyone really believe that in this country we would not pursue a person in uniform who had committed heinous crimes to come before a bar of justice?

The Rwandan and former Yugoslavian tribunals, which have rendered fair and reasonable judgments, show that America has little to fear from such a court. The Clinton administration’s negotiators were able to significantly improve the court’s rules. Continued engagement, as I said a moment ago, by the Bush administration could have built upon that record.

One would have thought it was in the interest of the United States not to miss a chance to affect the selection of judges in the definition of new crimes, issues that should matter to us and to our allies. Apparently that is not the case.

A few weeks ago, on April 11, governments gathered in New York to mark what they called the depositing of the 66th instrument of ratification of the Rome statute, meaning that the international criminal court will come into existence next July. In the meantime, there are construction projects not going forward. In another 10 days we will be taking a nudge this forward a bit more and get edging the work of the Senator on this issue.

The Senator from Connecticut has had numerous occasions about the efforts to get a bill passed dealing with terrorism insurance. In his State, and I think particularly Las Vegas, major construction efforts have been slowed down tremendously because of the inability to acquire terrorism insurance. We have been very close since last fall in coming to an agreement to bring up a bill and to allow a series of amendments to be considered, disposed of, and then to move on to reconcile the differences with the House-passed bill so that we might eliminate this roadblock that is causing a slowdown in economic growth in this country.

I hope my colleagues on the other side—I have worked very closely with Senator GRamm of Texas, with the minority leader, the Republican leader, TRENt LOTT, to try to come up with a framework that can work. On this side of the aisle, Senator Daschle, our Democratic caucus, along with Senator SCHUMER and others who have been interested in the subject matter, we have received unanimous consent—my colleague from Nevada can correct me if I am wrong on this side to move forward with a proposal allowing for a series but limited number of amendments, to a defined period of time to be considered and then final passage of a bill. There have been objections filed on the other side so we have not been able to proceed.

Let there be no doubt, there is 100-percent agreement on this side of the aisle to move to the terrorism insurance bill. Every day we wait, a day delay gets laid and the economy suffers. This is a serious issue. We ought to be able to get to a bill, consider amendments, let there be a decision by this body whether to support or reject amendments, get to final passage and try to resolve this issue.

To those who call my office on an hourly basis wondering whether we will get a terrorism insurance bill, let me be as clear as I possibly can: There is absolutely no reason we cannot define amendments, allow for the consideration of this position, and get to the third reading and final passage of a bill. My hope is that will happen this week so we can resolve the differences with the House and send a bill to the President for his signature.

I have cited a number of vital American President who unsigned a bill so that we might eliminate this roadblock. In fact, it does not do that at all. I am deeply disturbed by this action. I think it is a huge mistake. What are the implications of this course the administration is taking?

I am deeply disturbed by this action. Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, he is absolutely right. We have worked hard under the direction and guidance of the Senator from Connecticut and gotten everyone to sign off on a package we can bring to the floor. The other side wanted two amendments and then four amendments; and we have agreed. It seems to me we cannot let the perfect be the enemy of the good. It needs to be done.

I am sure the Senate would agree, if someone has a problem, propose floor amendments, we will debate and vote and move on. This has become serious. The Senator from Connecticut has had developers in his office, the people who lend money and want to lend money, people in the construction business, in addition to the specialized construction business, in addition to development can go through list of others who have been to see us who are extremely concerned about our country, in addition to their businesses.

I have heard on a number of occasions the majority leader acknowledging the work of the Senate, on this issue, and I join with him. We need to nudge this forward a bit more and get this matter resolved. Time is wasting. In another 10 days we will be taking a week break to go home for the Memorial recess and then the Fourth of July. In the meantime, those are construction projects not going forward.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Senator for his comments. He is exactly right.
addition to the organizations he mentioned, this means jobs. Business cannot get lending from the banks because the banks will not lend money without terrorism insurance. There is no proposal that allows us to bridge the gap since September 11.

It is very difficult to get this insurance because it is very difficult to price. Prior to the events of September 11 we had some acts of terrorism, but they were isolated and limited. What happened after September 11 has affected so many aspects of this country, including the question of how to calculate the cost of terrorism insurance. Banks do not want to lend money. This is a practical matter. I wish it were otherwise. They do not want to lend money when the terrorism insurance will not be written, and it will not get written because people do not know how to price or cost it.

The idea is to have some proposal to allow a bridge for a couple of years while the pricing of this product could be calculated, and to get the Federal Government out of it altogether but have us presently involved as a backstop so we can avoid some catastrophic event occur. We would have a backstop so it would not wipe people out.

I am told today that if we have an event such as September 11 again, the insurance that exists today could only deal with about 30 percent of the cost of what happened on that day. Knowing that, we begin to understand why banks are not lending the money: why, then, developers, contractors, and so forth, are not going forward with their projects. They do not want to delay the amendment and vote this up any longer and not object to further investigation or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the period for morning business be extended until 5:30 p.m. today under the same conditions and limitations of the previous order; that at 5:30, the Senate proceed to Executive session as under the previous order, with the time equally divided and controlled; that the remaining provisions of the previous order in Executive session remain in effect, without further inquiry or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have spoken to my friend, the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Thomas. When he completes his statement, we will go into recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

MEDICARE EQUITY FOR VETERANS ACT

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I will discuss a bill we have introduced in the last several weeks that I think is very important. It is called the Medicare Equity for Veterans Act of 2002. It is designed to provide some fairness between Medicare and VA health care. There are a number of Members who have introduced the bill that will require Medicare services to reimburse the VA facilities for services rendered to certain Medicare-eligible veterans. These service men and women have paid into Social Security and Medicare as have the rest of us but are prohibited from using Medicare when they are treated at a VA facility. It is only fair that they be allowed to use their Medicare coverage in the private sector or at a VA facility.

An interesting thing has happened in the numbers with respect to veterans. The number of veterans enrolled in VA health care systems has more than doubled since 1996. Many VA facilities-eligible veterans, called priority 7, or category C veterans, being veterans have served but their disabilities are not related to their military service and are able, financially, to care for themselves. This is where we have seen the greatest increase in the patient load.

At the VA facility in Cheyenne, WY, whom it is not now available.

We have more and more veterans who are in this category 7 who would like very much to use VA facilities to care for their needs. They are eligible for Medicare, and there are a lot of them. We would like to do two things, of course: to be able to finance the VA facilities and at the same time be able to let these eligible veterans use their Medicare services. I hope we can move this bill. I think it will be very good for VA veterans. I think it will also be good for Medicare. It can probably be done more cheaply than the private sector. The combination is a good remedy to some of the problems we have. I yield the floor.

RECESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 4:02 p.m., recessed until 4:33 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. Levin).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

NOMINATION OF PAUL CASSELL

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I will speak in morning business but really on the subject of our 6 o'clock vote, the nomination of Paul Cassell to be judge for the district court serving the State of Utah.

I am not from Utah, obviously. And you might ask, what is an Arizona Senator doing speaking on behalf of a nominee from another state? The answer is that I have been told to know Paul Cassell, and I am a very big fan of Paul Cassell. I think he will do a superb job on the bench. I just want to take a couple minutes of my colleagues' time to explain why.

But the veterans are unable, even though they are eligible, to use their Medicare assistance. With this increase in numbers, unfortunately, the VA health care system has not kept pace in terms of its finances. In my State, Medicare would expand access to VA services in most communities and would provide primary care to those for whom it is not now available.

Specifically, the Medicare Equity for Veterans Act of 2002 describes a 3-year demonstration program at 10 VA sites, 3 of which must be in rural areas. The Secretary of VA and HHS will either choose a Medicare+Choice or preferred provider option model for these sites. The options would give the Secretary some flexibility in that way.

We have more and more veterans who are in this category 7 who would like very much to use VA facilities to care for their needs. They are eligible for Medicare, and there are a lot of them. We would like to do two things, of course: to be able to finance the VA facilities and at the same time be able to let these eligible veterans use their Medicare services. I hope we can move this bill. I think it will be very good for VA veterans. I think it will also be good for Medicare. It can probably be done more cheaply than the private sector. The combination is a good remedy to some of the problems we have.

I yield the floor.
You can have a view either for or against that amendment, but Professor Laurence Tribe from Harvard and Professor Paul Cassell from the University of Utah are the two legal professors, constitutional scholars, who have helped us most. They may represent different political spectrums perhaps, but in terms of their legal scholarship and their ability to work together in helping us to craft this amendment, they have performed a magnificent service.

Again, whatever one thinks of the particular amendment, you cannot deny that these two professors have contributed significantly to the work of the Senate and, therefore, to the American people as a result of their work.

Let me just tell you a little bit about Professor Cassell first and then talk about his work on behalf of victims of crime. As I say, that is one of the primary reasons I am so supportive of him.

As I said, he is a member of the faculty at the University of Utah College of Law where he teaches criminal procedure and evidence and some other courses as well.

He has published over 25 Law Review articles, as well as major op-eds and various periodicals.

Before entering academia, Professor Cassell served as an assistant U.S. attorney in the Eastern District of Virginia and as Associate Deputy Attorney General at our Department of Justice.

He clerked for then-Judge Antonin Scalia in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and then for Chief Justice Warren Burger of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Those of us familiar with these facts know if you are able to clerk for both a member of the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals and then for the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, you are a law student graduate with something on the ball. Certainly, Professor Cassell fits that category.

He received his J.D. in 1984 from Stanford University, where he was Order of the Coif and president of the Stanford Law Review.

So his academic credentials and his postacademic career have been outstanding.

He tried a number of cases when he was assistant U.S. attorney. As a matter of fact, he prosecuted 17 felony jury trials, and some of them were very famous cases. I will let others talk about those cases. But one of the most interesting things to me that Professor Cassell did—purely without pay; as a volunteer—was to represent the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing case.

You may ask, why did the victims in the Oklahoma City bombing case need representation? You can imagine, having 168 victims as there were in that case—people who were either injured in the bombing or the families of people who were killed, all wanting to be involved or participate in some way in that case, including even just the ability to be in the courtroom—it was a major battle.

As a matter of fact, the judge in that case—not once but twice—ruled that the lawyers did not have the right to be in the courtroom during the trial. This was not because there were so many people that they could not all fit into the courtroom, although that was another issue, but the reason the judge said that way was that the defense had argued it would be prejudicial to the defense, to the defendants, if the victims or their families were actually in the courtroom during the trial. Never mind that a judge always has the ability to say: Everybody will be motionless, will show no emotion, will behave themselves; and if they do not, then I will toss them out of the courtroom. That was not good enough in this case.

We in Congress passed a law saying: You have to let the people who were victims of the Oklahoma City bombing case sit in the courtroom. The case went back to the judge, and again the judge said no. One of the reasons he said no had to do with the reason for the constitutional amendment, which I will not go into now, but basically he said the defendants’ rights are in the U.S. Constitution, and the mere statute of Congress cannot override that. So these victims are not going to have special rights. They are going to have to be in the Constitution. That is another argument, as I said.

But Paul Cassell, out of the goodness of his heart, represented all the victims in that case. I think the victims I have talked to would tell you, to a person, they were extraordinarily indebted to Paul Cassell for his service to them in that case.

There is much more I could say about this individual. Paul Cassell is a decent person who believes very strongly in the rights of both defendants and victims in the courtroom. He has served as a prosecutor for the United States of America and therefore, has represented our Government in many cases against some truly bad felons. He has experience on the criminal side and on the civil side and has experience as a law professor, teaching not only constitutional law but evidence. That makes him uniquely qualified to go from where he is now to the bench.

It is not often that we find people who have this wide array of experience willing to serve on the Federal district court. It is much too easy in today’s world for lawyers to make good money in the practice of law. But it is obvious that Paul Cassell has never been interested in just making money. He has wanted to serve, first, the people of the United States of America as an assistant U.S. attorney and then through his professorship to serve victims of crime and others on a purely pro bono basis.

We have a unique person who not only is extraordinarily well qualified from his academic experience and the breadth of his practice experience but who also has demonstrated a desire to serve the people. For a person as young as he is, to have that kind of commitment and to be willing to go on the Federal district court is unique and certainly should cause us to vote for his confirmation.

I know him personally. We couldn’t do better than to confirm Paul Cassell to serve on the Federal district court in the State of Utah. I commend my colleagues to support his confirmation when we vote in a little over an hour.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

FAST TRACK TRADE AUTHORITY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Bush administration continues its push for fast track trade authority under the fictitious term “trade promotion authority.” This is legislation that would enable the President to negotiate trade agreements without full congressional input. With fast track authority, there would be only limited Senate debate. With fast track authority the full Senate will have no opportunity to amend. Most Members of Congress will have no opportunity to protect the interests of the people, the communities, and the industries of their particular States, including ensuring the protection of the standard of living of our workers and their families within those states and communities.

Although the Constitution clearly gives Congress the duty—and the power, it gives Congress the power—‘‘to regulate commerce with foreign nations,’’ with fast track authority the Congress will simply applaud a presidential trade-negotiating effort by approving a trade agreement, or boo the effort by disapproving it. That is pretty unlikely, that it would be disapproved.

Members of Congress should never allow our options to be so restricted. We were sent here to promote and to protect the interests of our States as well as the national good, and those goals are best served by debate and amendment, particularly with regard to trade deals.

The workers of this Nation are losing ground, in large part, due to poor trade agreements. For Congress to abdicate its constitutional authority here is to, in my view, turn its back on millions of American workers—the workers who are the backbone of this Nation, and who deserve more than a cursory, neglectful wink and nod.
Let us focus for a moment on just one sector of our economy, manufacturing. There is no question that manufacturing has continued to grow during the past several decades. For example, real, inflation adjusted, manufacturing sales as a percentage of GDP continue to expand.

And there is no question that certain manufacturing industries such as those involved in high-technology products— for example, electronic equipment, industrial machinery, and chemicals—have prospered.

United States production of electronic equipment rose by nearly 400 percent—to be precise, 393.5 percent—while industrial machinery increased by 155 percent. Even fabricated metal products and motor vehicles have experienced an increase in real output since 1990.

There is also no question that in recent decades a number of our vital industries could be placed on an endangered list. Beginning both in the 1970s and continuing through the 1990s, for too many American industries the story of American manufacturing has been a tragic story of bankruptcies, consolidations, plant closings, plant shutdowns, and movement of operations overseas. These industries missed the economic boom of the 1990s because they have been drowning in a flood of cheap imports.

Since 1997, 33 steel companies have filed for bankruptcy, affecting 73,000 workers.

During the 1990s, 352 paper mills and paper converting plants permanently closed. Last year alone, 36 mills closed, and 15 more are slated for closing this year.

The American textile industry is suffering its worst crisis since the Great Depression of the 1930s. During the past year, more than 10 American textile mills have closed, and industrial giants such as Sontex, Union Carbide, and National Textile Mills have sought bankruptcy protection.

Between 1989 and 2000, the real dollar value of apparel industry output failed by nearly 20 percent—19.6 percent to be exact. There was a 27.9-percent decline in the instruments industry and a 3.7 percent decline in the real output of the paper products industry.

According to the Congressional Research Service, at least 18 American industries have experienced negative or slow output growth between the years 1980 and 2000—so much so that each one could be added to the endangered industries list.

The decline in these industries is reflected to some extent in the decline in employment in the manufacturing industries. In 1970, approximately one-third of the private sector workforce was engaged in manufacturing. By 2000, it had fallen to 17 percent.

So from 1970 to 2000, employment in the manufacturing industries fell from one-third of the private sector workforce to 17 percent—half—from 33 percent to 17 percent. Cut in half. That is like the wisest man of all time threatening to cut the baby in half.

According to the Congressional Research Service, at least 19 industries—nearly all in manufacturing—experienced the loss of one-third or more jobs since the 1970s. The 52 percent decrease in machine tools, a 67-percent decrease in employment in blast furnaces and steel mills, and an 83-percent decrease in employment in nonrubber footwear. Read it and weep.

I realize that a substantial portion of this decline in manufacturing employment is due to increased productivity. Millions of workers are losing their jobs because of technological progress, more efficient management of resources, and because productivity has grown faster than sales. Nevertheless, there is no question that certain sectors of our economy—especially those in the industries I have mentioned—are being clobbered by imports.

Between 1994 and 2000, the U.S. trade deficit increased from $133 billion to $439 billion—inflation adjusted 141.6 percent. This soaring trade deficit has taken an incredible toll on American jobs. Between 1994 and 2000, according to an analysis by the Economic Policy Institute, trade deficits alone have eliminated a net total of 3 million actual and potential jobs from the U.S. economy.

The manufacturing sector has shouldered the burden of this increased deficit, as the manufacturing trade deficit rose by 158.5 percent. Of the 3 million trade-related job losses between 1994 and 2000, 1.9 million were in manufacturing. This means that nearly two of every three lost jobs were in manufacturing. In other words, 1.9 million jobs out of 3 million jobs were in manufacturing. That is, manufacturing constituted 65 percent of all trade-related job losses.

These trade-related job losses happened because increased globalization encouraged American industries to pack up and seek other lands where labor is cheaper and where industries do not have to comply with the environmental and safety standards in the United States. The International Trade Commission has reported that roughly half of the total productive capacity in the apparel industry has shifted from developed countries to less developed countries over the past three decades, where workers earn far less than their American counterparts.

What are we doing? What are we doing in our trade agreements to protect American jobs? The answer has to be: Not enough.

Globalization has also left our industries more vulnerable to the unfair predatory trade practices of foreign countries. Look at the American steel industry, which has been absolutely devastated by the dumping of cheap foreign steel and of government-subsidized steel. Last October, the U.S. International Trade Commission ruled that imports of foreign steel have indeed caused serious injury to American steelmakers. The Commission reported that imported steel has seriously hurt domestic steelmakers in about half of 33 product lines examined, covering about 80 percent of what steel companies produce in America.

I voted against fast-track authority, and which I voted against, was supposed to eliminate most of these causes of the American trade deficit and lessen the foreign assaults upon American industries. Instead, the increased globalization unleashed under NAFTA and the World Trade Organization has exacerbated the problem, not solved it. I have been on the right side in both instances; I have opposed both. Since 1994, when NAFTA created the free trade zone, North Carolina has lost more than 125,500 jobs in the textile and apparel industries, or 47 percent of the workforce.

The Mississippi Business Journal reports that the garment industry in Mississippi has virtually disappeared in the post-NAFTA era. We gave it away.

This decline in American manufacturing has meant a declining standard of living for the millions of workers and their families but for their communities and their States.

Workers have been forced out of higher wage, industrial jobs into low-paying service jobs. In 1980, private-sector service employment constituted 65 percent of the American private sector workforce; by the year 2000, the percentage had soared to 77 percent.

Service jobs are notoriously low-skill, low-paying jobs that offer limited opportunities for advancement because there are relatively few management positions. Look at South Carolina, a State that is near the top of the job creation list in the 1990s but it ranks 35th in average wages—$25,493. A study of a 5-year period, 1992 to 1997, in that State indicated the creation of 94,572 service jobs, a 40.6-percent increase in a sector that pays lower than the statewide average. The higher paying manufacturing sector, the traditional mainstay of South Carolina, lost nearly 1,000 jobs during the 5-year period. In 1997, the State’s service employees earned an average $22,693, compared to the average of $29,820 for employees in the State’s manufacturing jobs. Economists in the State of South Carolina point out the even with the growth in the service industries, South Carolina’s per capita income is among the Nation’s lowest.

Unfortunately, the holders of these service jobs are often thought to be simply looking for a fast paycheck, work, or marginal workers seeking spending money, or people simply in need of a quick stopover job while on their way... to a better paying career. In other words, service jobs are presented as great jobs for people who do not really need them, in many instances. The truth is, people do need these jobs, and many of the holders of these jobs are adults who depend on that paycheck to pay rent. Many are former industrial workers simply trying to exist in the new economy.

Studies of counties in Colorado, Missouri, and Mississippi found a declining standard of living for workers and their communities as they moved from manufacturing jobs to service jobs.

Martha Burt of the Urban Institute found that the growth of homelessness in the United States in the 1980s was not, as commonly supposed, the result of drug addiction, or the deinstitutionalization of the mentally ill, nor the cutbacks in social programs during the Reagan administration, but the shift from an industrial economy to a service economy. With the decline in manufacturing jobs in the 1970s, she explains, huge numbers of former full-time factory workers earning union wages were replaced with part-time workers in retail stores, restaurants, and other service jobs, where wages are too low to enable them to afford the price of housing.

The facts are, as the Stearns Trustee Professor of Political Economy at Northeastern University, Barry Bluestone, emphasizes, even workers who retain manufacturing jobs face a bleak future, a future of a declining standard of living, if we do not revise our trade policies and insist upon effective labor and environmental standards in our trade agreements.

This is because competition from countries which lack, or do not enforce, labor and environmental standards, continues to have a large, negative impact on employment in key sectors of our economy, and on American wages and living standards across the board.

With the rise of international competition and the shift to lower wage service jobs in the United States, real wages have stagnated, making life much more difficult for all American workers. Real average weekly earnings peaked in 1972 at $315.44. Today, even with some recovery in real wages due to the rapid growth in the economy in the 1990s, the average weekly wage is nearly 12 percent less than at its peak.

This wage depression is forcing American workers to work longer hours than ever before in order to maintain their living standards. They are running in place—sweating on a treadmill operated by the hyper zealous of free trade regardless of consequences.

In fact, the United States is the only major developed country that has experienced an increase in the average workweek and the average work year. Since 1982, the average workweek among prime-age workers in the United States has increased from 39.6 hours to 41.3 in 2000.

This means that the average work year has increased from around 1,840 hours to over 2,020. Put simply, stagnating wages are forcing Americans to work longer and longer hours just to maintain their standard of living. They are not getting ahead. They are simply maintaining what they have worked so hard for. If, indeed, they are even maintaining the standard of living they worked to have.

This is why the Congress must protect and exercise its right to amend trade agreements. Why do we give away Congress’ power to amend trade agreements?

We must insist on establishing universal labor and environmental standards. We must insist on protecting American industries from even more devastation by unfair competition from firms operating abroad, exploiting cheap labor pools, and tolerating working conditions which are unacceptably harsh, and environmental standards which are nonexistent.

These essential universal labor and environmental standards can be extracted only through our trade agreements.

In the 1930s, the United States instituted a range of laws and regulations to protect workers and the environment. We did so at the Federal level so that individual States could not take unfair advantage of other States by lowering their minimum wages, permitting child and prison labor, ignoring occupational and safety provisions, eliminating or reducing unemployment benefits, or disregarding environmental standards. We leveled the playing field domestically. No one could manipulate for advantage.

Now we must level the playing field in international competition, where American workers are too often forced to play by the rules in a rigged game.

In our new, globalized economy, we run the risk of undermining our own hard won labor and environmental standards if other countries choose to have none of their own or refuse to enforce reasonable requirements. Congress, which has the constitutional power, and therefore the duty “to regulate commerce with foreign nations,” must have the means to insist on reasonable labor and environmental standards as part of any and all trade agreements.

This is to the benefit not only of American workers, but also of workers, both children and adults, who are laboring under oppressive, unsafe, and unhealthy conditions in other lands.

Over the years, I have seen administrations—Republican and Democratic—repeatedly negotiate trade agreements that reflected priorities other than those of the American people. I say that with a background of 50 years in Congress, the House of Representatives and the Senate, so let me say it again. I have seen administrations—Republican and Democratic—repeatedly negotiate trade agreements that reflected priorities other than those of the American people.

I have been this Nation genuflect at the altar of big business interests. I have witnessed the holy battle cry of “free trade” become a club by which to beat into submission any voice that expressed an argument for balance and fairness. That is understandably the outcome of trade talks that ignore the constitutional role of the Congress in international commerce.

It is not surprising that Republican and Democratic administrations would attempt to enter into trade agreements that reflect their own priorities, it is absolutely distressing—it is extremely puzzling to this Senator that the Members of Congress would willingly give up their right to shape trade agreements that reflect the priorities of the American people, and the best interests of the United States. It just demonstrates how cowed and how intimidating we in public life have become by the absolute terror of bumper sticker politics. Free trade is the battle cry. Don’t complicate it with real world concerns.

As a U.S. Senator from West Virginia, I am always—first, last, and all the time—for the protection of the interests of this country, of this Nation’s workers, and this country’s manufacturing industries and I am going to continue being that way by opposing the granting of blanket fast track authority for this or any other President.

Call it trade promotion authority, if you will—it is still fast track—to give away American interests when it comes to trade.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

Mr. President, the time has run. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to voice my strong support for Professor Paul G. Cassell, who is President Bush's nominee to the District Court for the District of Utah.

This nomination is very important to my home State of Utah. In fact, the chief judge of the Federal District Court in Utah is sitting in the audience. This is so important for them, for every Utahan and to me personally, I would like to take a few minutes to introduce this exemplary lawyer to the Senate, and to explain why Professor Cassell is one of the most qualified people ever nominated to the district court bench.

Listen to the highlights of Professor Cassell’s résumé: He graduated from Stanford Law School, where he was president of the Stanford Law Review and a member of the Order of the Coif—the highest honors you can have in law school. He served as a law clerk to then-Judge Antonin Scalia on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, and to Chief Justice Warren E. Burger of the U.S. Supreme Court. He then went to the Justice Department, where he served as an Associate Deputy Attorney General, handling a variety of complex legal issues—including the efforts to defend the constitutionality of the 1986 Federal Sentencing Guidelines, passed by Congress to regulate unwarranted sentencing disparity. Next, he worked as an assistant U.S. attorney in the Eastern District of Virginia. In that position, Cassell tried more than a dozen jury trials in felony criminal cases, obtaining guilty verdicts in every case that reached the jury.

I would like to highlight a couple of cases he tried there. Cassell successfully prosecuted the CEO of a failed savings and loan for theft of $500,000; two investors and a real estate agent who had defrauded a HUD program; a drug dealer who was smuggling guns and a federally licensed firearms dealer who had aided him in this effort; and the notorious “yellow glove” bank robber, who had perpetrated a string of armed robberies in Virginia and Maryland. He also successfully prosecuted the largest seizure of crack cocaine in the history of National Airport at that time. For cases like these, Cassell was recognized by the Attorney General with a Special Achievement Award.

Professor Cassell’s impressive résumé and his experience in court are no doubt the reason why a substantial majority of the ABA review committee rates Professor Cassell “well qualified” to be a federal judge. It is also the reason why a number of people who know Professor Cassell and his character have written to me in support of his nomination.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a selection of such letters printed in the Record following my remarks.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I apologize for my laryngitis. I have had it for about 2 weeks.

Professor Cassell’s educational achievements, Department of Justice experience, and successes in trial are just a warm-up, in my opinion, for an even more important chapter of his career. In 1992, Cassell and his wife, Trish, returned to the West after he accepted a teaching position at the University of Utah College of Law. It was there that he unleashed his intellect and tremendous work ethic for the benefit of his students, the citizens of Utah, and the Nation’s victims of crime.

Professor Cassell quickly became one of the students’ favorite teachers. He has always prepared well for his classes, he stresses real-world examples from his career as a prosecutor, and he teaches with an approachable demeanor—and even a sense of humor. These are some of the qualities that led, in 1997, to Professor Cassell’s being one of the youngest law professors ever to receive the Faculty Achievement Award for Teaching Excellence—the “teacher of the year” award. Three years later in 2000, Cassell became one of the youngest chaired faculty members at the University of Utah when he was awarded the James I. Farr Professorship of Law.

As a scholar, Professor Cassell has become a national expert on criminal procedure and evidence. His scholarship includes over 25 law review articles, which have been published in such prestigious journals as the Stanford Law Review, the Michigan Law Review, the UCLA Law Review, the Brigham Young University Law Review, and the Utah Law Review. He has also made presentations at law schools around the country, including Harvard, Stanford, Berkeley, Michigan, Northwestern, and UCLA. He has shared his knowledge and expertise with Congress, testifying numerous times before congressional committees on issues pertaining to criminal justice, including testimony on victims’ rights, capital punishment, Miranda, and criminal cases in the United States Supreme Court.

Unlike many scholars, however, Professor Cassell has also put his intellect to practical use in his community. For example, Professor Cassell has been actively involved in fighting domestic violence and sexual assault in Utah. He has served as the chair of the Legislative Committee of the Utah Council on Victims of Crime as well as a member on the Utah Supreme Court’s Advisory Committee on Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Professor Cassell has donated an extraordinary amount of time advocating on behalf of his fellow Utahns in court. In fact, he has done as much or more as any legal work as anyone I can remember ever appearing before the Judiciary Committee. He has represented dozens and dozens of crime victims, all without charge.

Let me give just one example—a case that came to my attention because of the moving letter I received from the victim’s mother. It is the case called State v. Casey, in which Cassell argued on behalf of a 12-year-old Utah boy who had been victimized by sexual assault. The boy was denied his right to speak in opposition to a plea bargain reducing the charge from a first-degree aggravated felony to a misdemeanor, Cassell had the case certified to the Utah Supreme Court as one involving a question of “exceptional importance” and argued the issue on the boy’s behalf. The boy’s mother wrote me a letter about Cassell’s work in that case, saying that Cassell was the first attorney who listened to us with interest and understanding.

She explained that:

Paul worked long and late hours on our case . . . at no financial gain for himself.

Because of Cassell’s work, she said her family:

. . . can now start to move forward with our lives, putting the tragic past behind us.

It is not only Utahns who can say such things about Paul Cassell, because in addition to his work in our home State, Cassell has worked free of charge on behalf of victims all across the country. For example, in 1996, Cassell undertook to represent 89 victims of the Oklahoma City bombing. They had been ordered not to watch court proceedings in the case if they were going to provide so-called impact testimony at the death-penalty phase of Timothy McVeigh’s trial. This order appeared to contravene the requirements of the victims bill of rights, a Federal statute passed by Congress to guarantee crime victims the right to present their claims to a appellate court. Cassell’s petition for rehearing in the case was supported by 49 Members of Congress—of both political parties—as well as the United States Department of Justice, all six State Attorneys General in the tenth circuit, and some of the leading crime victims’ groups in the country, such as Mothers Against Drunk Driving and the National Crime Victims Constitutional Amendment Network. When the petition for rehearing was denied, Cassell
DEAR SIR: I am writing you today to express my deep support for the nomination of Paul Cassell to a position as a Federal Judge.

I have had the pleasure of working with Mr. Cassell over a long period of time on a matter that was very important to my family and our rights as victims. During that time I had many conversations with Paul and I felt that he came to know me reasonably well as both a person and a case.

As an attorney, Paul’s accomplishments are many, and I am sure that you have already been made aware of the many great experiences and achievements of his distinguished career. I wish to speak more intimately of my personal experience with Mr. Cassell’s handling of our own case.

Our case was probably one of the most difficult and emotionally draining experiences of our lives. My family was forced to deal with a tragedy that we never imagined we would happen to us. We were confronted with many obstacles that we never anticipated and we grew increasingly frustrated with the confusion, and seeming contradictions of the justice system as we were lied to, and misled, by many different people throughout the process, including people that we thought were supposed to be on our side.

During the time of pre-trial preparation with the handling of our case we began to search for someone to provide us with legal help and representation and we were fortunate enough to find Mr. Cassell and I feel it would be very hard pressed to find any better attorney than Mr. Cassell. As a personal and business partner, Paul Cassell has given voice to victims of crime. Professor Cassell is a fervent advocate for victims’ rights.

As a person, Paul is a very honest, fair-minded, and compassionate man. In today’s world it has become increasingly hard to find people whose judgment you can completely trust and rely upon, but Paul Cassell is just such a person. At a time when more and more people are becoming jaded about the law and losing confidence in our Justice System, Paul Cassell is the right type of person to help bring integrity back into the legal profession and restore the faith of the American people in their courts, both victims and defendants.

I hope I never again find myself or my family in the position of having to deal with our legal system in such a personal way. But if I do, I hope that the Judge who hears our case and the attorney’s on both sides of the issue are people like Paul Cassell, because if they are then I know we’ll be in the best possible hands.

I sincerely hope that you will support Paul Cassell’s nomination as a Federal Judge. Please don’t reject him over something so trivial as political party affiliation or ideology. Accept him because he’s a very good person who truly has become interested at heart. Now, more than ever, America desperately needs great leaders, like Paul Cassell, and I know that you will not find a better candidate for the job!!!

Thank you for your careful consideration, have some closure to a very tragic situation. We all feel that due to the work Paul Cassell did for us, at no financial gain for himself, we did everything that could possibly have been done to get the justice we feel we deserve. We can not start to move forward with our lives, putting the tragic past behind us. In particular, my fourteen-year-old son is now starting to make progress and feel good about himself. He knows that he has helped to make the pathway a little easier for other people in the same situation. I feel that Paul has all the qualities a judge for our country should have. He is honest, forthright, concerned about whether or not justice has been served. He spent time with him, had many conversations with him, where we came to a clear understanding of how much he cares for the people of our country. We could see how important the justice system is to him. There are not many attorneys that would take on a case pro bono, where he is going to have to spend many hours of his own personal time, just to help people in need.

I recommend Paul Cassell highly, for a judgeship. If you are interested in what is going on in the lives of the people of our country. I truly feel that you are not going to find any better man for the job.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

CYNTHIA F. CASEY.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY AND SENATOR HATCH:

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF PARENTS OF MURDERED CHILDREN, INC.

Cincinnati, OH, March 18, 2002.

Hon. Orrin Hatch, C/O Abi Drah.

Dear Senator Hatch: On behalf of the National Organization of Parents Of Murdered Children, Inc., and its over 100,000 members, I write to strongly support Paul Cassell’s confirmation for the Federal District Court for the District of Utah. Paul has been a tremendous asset to POMC and its members.

Sincerely,

Nancy Ruhe-Munch.

Executive Director.

Hon. Orrin Hatch, Ranking Member, Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Hatch: I am writing to express my strong support for the confirmation of Prof. Paul Cassell’s nomination to the United States District Court for the District of Utah.

I have known Prof. Cassell through our work together in the cause of establishing and enforcing rights for crime victims. Paul is a person of compassion and fairness. He has deep respect for the rule of law and for the role of the judiciary in preserving and protecting it. He is at all times respectful of others and displays a temperament that will always remain faithful to the obligations of a federal judge. He has a strong work ethic and will clearly be able to meet the rigors of a busy trial court.

Paul is a person of intellectual and moral integrity: he will serve with distinction on the District Court when he is confirmed, giving equal justice to all who appear before him. I urge you and all of your colleagues to confirm the nomination of Prof. Paul Cassell.

Thank you for considering these views.

Sincerely,

Steve Twist, Assistant Corporation Counsel, Viad Corp; Chief Counsel, National Foundation for Constitutional Government, Inc.

RUTGERS UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW,

Hon. Patrick J. Leahy, Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. Orrin Hatch, Ranking Member, Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Senate Office building, Washington, DC.

Dear Senators Staff,

I write to support enthusiastically and without reservation the nomination of Prof. Paul G. Cassell to be a federal district judge. I have known Paul for many years, and believe he will make a highly capable judge. I wrote a letter supporting his tenure at the University of Utah College of Law several years ago, and he has continued to shine as a legal thinker and writer.

Professor Cassell is intelligent, thoughtful, and willing to explore different approaches to problems that arise in the law. He writes extremely well and is top flight in his analysis of cases and doctrines. Indeed, he has on occasion pointed out an analytical flaw in a doctrinal argument I was making, thus allowing me to reshape the argument before publication. Cassell has continued the tradition of Justice John Harlan and Professor Grano by holding the premises of Miranda v. Arizona up to the light and asking why the Constitution should authorize police interrogation such a threat to autonomy and free will.

We have ‘duelled’ in a friendly way in print (Volume 43 of the UCLA Law Review, pages 821-959), before a TV camera (in the PBS Debates-Debates series), before the Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Justice Oversight, and before the Michigan Academic workshop with Paul and to meet his family and children on several occasions, and to listen to them, is a valuable asset to the courts’

Professor Cassell and I disagree on some issues and yet respect each other. This fact alone says volumes, I think, about how effective he will be as a judge in dealing with lawyers and others in his courtroom. I predict that Paul Cassell will research the law energetically, understand it as well as anyone can, and apply it fairly and consistently.

Should you wish further details, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,

George C. Thomas III, Professor of Law, Judge Alexander P. Waugh, Sr., Distinquished Scholar.

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY LAW CENTER,

Senator Phatrick Leahy, Russell Senate Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Senator Orrin Hatch, Hart Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Leahy and Senator Hatch: I understand that my colleague in teaching, Professor Paul Cassell of the University of Utah Law School, has been nominated by President George W. Bush to serve as a United States District Judge for the District of Utah. I know Paul very well, and I recommend him unreservedly. I write in my personal capacity as a professor of civil rights law at Georgetown University Law Center for the past twenty-seven years. I have previously served on the faculty committee to contribute to the work of the Senate Judiciary Committee by consulting with or advising Senators from both parties, including Senator Joseph Biden of Delaware regarding judicial nominations, Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah concerning technical perfection to a civil rights act, and Senator Chuck McC. Mathias of Maryland concerning substantive provisions of several proposed bills expanding civil rights. I write this letter at my own initiative, after seeing it fall by chance last week and learning of his then pending hearing. I am sending a courtesy copy of this letter to my former colleague Viet Dinh, now Assistant Attorney General.

I have known Paul Cassell for over twelve years. I met him after he married one of my former students in 1980. I have attended many hours of his own personal time, just to understand what works best for society and the legal order (such as whether Miranda actually protects society’s victims), in the best tradition of American legal scholarship. It is true that Paul’s work calls for the disestablishment of a court-declared “constitutional right,” but the same was true of attacks on The Dred Scott decision, in which Paul’s constitutional right to hold slaves, and Lochner v. New York, which recognized a right to be free of government regulation of the employment conditions of workers. I disagree with some positions Paul has taken, including his distrust of the Miranda decision itself, but disagree with the courts’ declarations of “rights” is a part of the job of every American law professor, and Paul has handled his part of that discussion with rectitude and complete fidelity to our academic tradition and to the rule of law.

I also respect Paul quite highly because, though he fits within the broad academic mainstream, he has shown independence and has resisted pressure to conform. I concur with Justice Harlan’s view that the Constitution was written as a “living” document to be interpreted in the light of changing circumstances. I have been privileged to attend an academic workshop with Paul and to meet his family and children on several occasions, and to listen to them, is a valuable asset to the courts’ person, completely unpretentious and unaffeared despite his high standing in his com-unity and his nationwide renown in academia. He commands strong respect from his colleagues in the University of Utah and elsewhere. He leads a balanced life that includes much pro bono work for the public interest and other community activities. Far from being an ideologue or a single-issue activist, Paul is a multi-dimensional person with solid American values and an admirable commitment to making life better for all Americans.

Finally, I realize that there has been some criticism of Paul for his critical views on the Miranda rule especially his representation of the Fourth Circuit and Congress in a Supreme Court case challenging the Miranda rule. But Paul’s role in that case showed his usual fidelity to the rule of law, not a challenge to it. In all my years of knowing Paul, I have never seen an indication that he would try to subvert the system to achieve his goals; his work has always been entirely open and direct, using the traditional methods of persuasion and openness that charac-terize both honest professors and honest judges. For potential trial-court judges, I have complete confidence that Paul would never intentionally mis-find facts to protect his rulings from the bench or otherwise manipulate the process to accomplish personal goals. My narrow disagreement with Paul on Miranda does not alter one essential point: if my rights were at stake in any of my many traditional civil-rights clients when I practiced many years ago, I would affirmatively want Paul Cassell to judge the facts and the law of my case. The confirmation and appointment could do nothing but strengthen my trust in the American judiciary.

With much respect and admiration, I re-

Ranking Member, Committee on the Judiciary,

ington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: I write to voice my support for the appointment of Professor Paul Cassell to the Federal District Court of Utah. Professor Cassell and I have worked together on legal matters involving the rights of crime victims, particularly sexual assault and domestic violence victims. He is extraordinarily intelligent and a tireless advocate who through his down-to-earth style can distill complex legal theories into simple and persuasive arguments.

As a Democrat and a feminist, I may not always agree with professor Cassell. However, as an academic activist with a specialty in violence against women issues, I am unrelenting in my belief that where instance where professor Cassell and myself disagreed on the legal issues or strategy involved in our many coldeflections, as the Director of the Crime Victim Appellate Clinic and the founder of its Violence Against Women Project, I have had the privilege to collaborate with Pro-essor Cassell on a variety of violence against women cases. I can say without hesitation that Professor Cassell is one of the preeminent leaders in safeguarding the rights of sexual assault and domestic vioence survivors in the criminal justice sys-

During our two years of working together, Professor Cassell and my organization, the National Coalition of Sexual Assault Centers (NVCLI), have represented many survivors of sexual assault and domestic violence. For example, just last year in Hagen v. Massachusetts, No. SJ-08627 (Mass. 2001), we helped file an amicus brief on behalf of Jane Doe, Inc., Massachusetts Coalition Against Sexual Assault and the National Alliance of Sexual Assault Coalitions, defending a rape victim's right to have the convicted rapist begin serving his sentence thirteen years after the sentence was imposed. The case is currently pending before the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court.

In Croman v. Croman, 774 A.2d 666 (R.I. 2001), representing a battallion against with the support of the Rhode Island Coalition Against Domestic Violence and the National Alliance of Sexual Assault Coalitions, Professor Cassell and I successfully argued that a battered woman had properly initiated criminal charges against her husband.

Just two weeks ago, in State v. Gomez (Utah Supreme Court March 4, 2002), Professor Cassell and the NVCLI filed a brief on behalf of the Rape Recovery Center (the largest rape crisis center in Utah) with the support of the National Alliance to End Sexual Vioence defending the privilege for confidential communications to rape crisis counselors.

Just last week, in State v. Blake (Utah Supreme Court March 14, 2002), Professor Cassell and I worked on the Rape Recovery Center with the support of the National Alliance to End Sexual Violence defending the right of a rape victim to keep confidential communications made to a mental health therapist.

Notwithstanding our areas of disagreement, I believe that Professor Cassell has the temperament and commitment to follow the letter and spirit of established law that will make him an exceptional Federal District Court Judge.

Respectfully,

Clinical Professor of Law, Lewis & Clark Law School, Associate Director, Na-

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: I write to voice my support for the appointment of Professor Paul Cassell to the Federal District Court of Utah. Professor Cassell and I have had occasion to work together on several legal matters involving the rights of crime victims. He is an exceedingly bright and thoughtful ad-

Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS LEAHY AND HATCH: I am writing on behalf of Professor Paul G. Cassell to support his nomination to the United States District Court for the District of Utah. I have known Professor Cassell for more than 17 years, both as a close personal friend and a professional colleague. He is without peer in other category.

I came to know Professor Cassell profes"ional in 1984 when we clerked at the same time for the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. From the beginning, Paul distinguished himself as a brilliant legal scholar, and a decent and honorable person.

Subsequently, I worked with Paul at the United States Attorneys Office for the Eastern District of Virginia. There I had the privilege of trying my first federal criminal jury trial as a federal prosecutor with Paul serving as lead counsel. Later I enjoyed the even greater privilege of serving alongside the best man at Paul's wedding. Although in recent years our families have seen less of each other since his move to Utah, we remain in close contact and my family had the pleasure of hosting Paul, his wife Trish, and their three daughters during his recent trip to Washington for the confirmation hearing.

Based on this lengthy personal and professional relationship, I can say without hesitation or reservation that Paul would be a tremendous asset to the federal bench. Paul would bring to the bench a mature legal mind as well as a fundamental decency and respect for all who appear before him, without regard to their status as plaintiff or de-fc defend or defendant, attorney or party. In my conversations with Paul since his nomination, he has emphasized how proud he is to have been honored by this nomination and how committed he is to serving the people and his allies.

Given that Paul's intellectual prowess is exceeded only perhaps by his humility and decency, I have no doubt that given the opportunity he will so serve.

In observing Paul's confirmation hearing, it was clear that many of the questions focused on his ability and willingness to accept and put aside his legal and political views and to put aside his views as an advocate and follow the laws as a Judge. In that regard, I would make the following observations: I am a long

Dancing for the United States Attorneys Office I have worked as a criminal defense counsel. I regularly appear before district judges throughout the country on behalf of those accused with a wide variety of offenses. Although I routinely find myself in disagreement with Paul on numerous legal issues including the death penalty (which I oppose) and the use of DNA support), have I have no doubt that we in the defense bar and our clients, would receive fair and even-handed treatment in Paul's courtroom.

For much Paul prides himself with the same skepticism as I view his, he is unfailingly receptive to my differing views, courteous in addressing our differences, and respectful of my positions. In deed, he accords respect to everyone that crosses his path, lacks even a touch of arrogance. He is unfailingly polite even in situations where something less might be appropriate. I do not worry that as a judge, Paul might be high-handed, discourteous, or conceited. He fully follows the principles of stare decisis. Given his decency and abiding integrity, I do not think it is in Paul’s nature to act other than honorably and courteously.

I hope that the foregoing is of assistance in your consideration of Professor Cassell’s nomination to the bench. If I can provide further information or answer any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Mark J. Holkerow

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, how much time is available to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Vermont?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has 3 minutes 43 seconds. The Senator from Vermont has 12 minutes 40 seconds.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, with last week’s large number of Federal judges confirmed since the change in Senate majority 10 months ago now totals 56. Under Democratic leadership, the Senate has confirmed more judges in 10 months than were confirmed by the Republican-controlled Senate in the 1980 and 1997 sessions combined.

Today’s vote is on the nomination of Paul Cassell to the United States District Court for the District of Utah. After a great deal of thought, I will not be voting for this nominee today. Although this nomination is supported by my good friend from Utah, Senator Hatch, we disagree on his suitability to serve as a Federal judge. Senator Hatch has been an admirable and stalwart advocate for this nomination, and I certainly mean him no disrespect in voting against Professor Cassell.

The constitutional responsibility to advise and consent to the President’s selection of lifetime tenured judicial nominees should not be devalued to advertise and rubber stamp. When the President sends us a nominee whose qualifications, judgment or background raise concerns or who has a misunderstanding of the appropriate role of a Federal judge, I intend to make my concerns known. This is one of those times.

The nomination of Professor Paul Cassell raises several areas of serious concern to me.

I think it is important to note that we have not engaged in a game of tit for tat for past Republican practices, nor have we delayed proceedings on this nomination, as so many nominations were delayed in past years of Republican control of the Senate. Instead, the Committee has seriously considered the nomination and worked hard to consider the facts and to provide thorough information about this nominee. We have given the nominee an opportunity to be heard, promptly scheduled a Committee vote, and reported this nomination to the floor, although not unanimously. This is far more fairness, courtesy and orderly process than was provided so many nominees during prior years. Professor Cassell, in his nomination hearing, has been given a fair hearing and a fair process before the Committee and the Senate.

I am proud of the work the Judiciary Committee has done since the change in the majority. I am proud of the way we have considered nominees fairly and expeditiously and the way we have been able to report to the Senate so many qualified, nonideological, consensus nominees. We also have held hearings for a number of controversial nominees, such as Professor Cassell. Controversial nominations take more time and effort, but we are making that effort and taking that time to be fair and thorough in our consideration of those nominations, as well. One measure of our fairness is the fact that there are no pending controversial nominations such as this one.

After thoroughly considering the record of this nominee, chosen for lifetime appointment by President Bush, I recall that I cast the general vote in favor of Professor Cassell’s confirmation. I have voted in favor of 56 other Bush judicial nominees, many of whom had been involved in partisan politics or ideological groups. I also voted in favor of the two persons confirmed to the District Court in Utah, Judge Ted Stewart, a controversial nominee, and I did so even in the immediate aftermath of the Republicans’ unprecedented party-line vote against Justice Ronnie White of Missouri, because I made a commitment to Senator Hatch.

At Senator Hatch’s request, the Senate Judiciary Committee gave Professor Cassell a hearing on his nomination in March and the Committee voted on his nomination in the beginning of May. That is fairer treatment than more than 50 of President Clinton’s judicial nominees ever got, those who never got a hearing and never got a vote by the Committee when the Republicans were in charge. Many others waited for months or years for a vote on their nominations. Our Judiciary Committee, however, accorded Professor Cassell a hearing although his nomination is quite controversial and even though he received a partial “not qualified” rating from the ABA.

Professor Cassell is a highly intelligent man, with an admirable passion for teaching and advocacy. But his written work, the record established at our hearing, and the answers he submitted to written questions raise grave doubts about his intellectual forthrightness and his capacity and willingness to put aside the extreme views he has long held. A judge who lacks the open-minded ability to hear both sides on a case and to administer justice impartially. I am concerned that he will be unable to set aside his personal views and that he has, in his work on legal issues, shown a strong tendency already to be motivated by the outcomes he seeks rather than by the facts.

In 1992, Professor Cassell launched what became an 8-year campaign against Miranda v. Arizona, the Supreme Court’s landmark ruling that police must provide certain warnings before questioning a suspect in custody. As part of this campaign, he generated a series of statistical studies to try to show that Miranda harms law enforcement.

At the same time, he filed briefs in Miranda-related cases around the country seeking to convince courts to uphold a 1968 law—18 U.S.C. section 3501—that purported to overrule Miranda and make “voluntariness” the sole test for the admissibility of confessions in Federal criminal cases.

Let me emphasize at the outset that I objective scholar, Professor Cassell for holding opinions with which I may disagree, or for the zealously of his advocacy. While most criminal justice experts made their peace with Miranda decades ago, reasonable minds can certainly differ as to the wisdom and practicality of this venerable precedent. What troubles me about the nominee’s campaign against Miranda is the manner in which he waged it.

In article after article, Professor Cassell overstated the anti-Miranda position, citing his own flawed empirical studies as evidence that Miranda harms law enforcement.

These one-sided attacks on Miranda, do not unusually sound criticism for their failure to meet standard scholarly norms. Academics who reviewed this nominee’s research took him to task for being partisan and ideologically driven while masquerading as an objective scholar. They called his methods unsound, and accused him of manipulating data to reach his preferred result.

Professor Cassell’s work on Miranda was restricted to the narrowly aimed at the world of academia. Based on his arguably flawed statistical studies, he made several empirical claims to the Senate Judiciary Committee and to various Federal courts, including the United States Supreme Court. Clearly, this raises the stakes from simple academic discourse. It is one thing to write something in a law review article—you can write whatever you want in a law review article. But it is another entirely different matter to represent something to a congressional committee or to the Supreme Court. A lawyer should have a great deal of confidence in any information that he presents to one of those bodies. At a minimum, one would hope that the lawyer to present information that he knew was unreliable. Professor Cassell’s use of his own questionable data to try to influence legislators and judges on an issue of profound national importance raises serious questions about his judgment and integrity.

I am also concerned by the partisan spin of Professor Cassell’s campaign against Miranda. In his congressional testimony and writings, Professor Cassell was sharply critical of the Clinton Justice Department for avoiding litigation regarding the constitutionality of 18 U.S.C. section 3501. Among other things, he accused the Department of deliberately and repeatedly misled the courts with respect to Miranda, and that its defense of Miranda was driven by politics and not by legal analysis. In a 1993 article entitled “Another Law Janet Reno Doesn’t Like,” Professor Cassell took specific aim at the former Attorney General, accusing her of “impeding the enforcement” of a statute, and “team[ing] up with defense lawyers to let armed felons and other criminals escape prosecution.”

Yet Professor Cassell himself had acknowledged in a 1995 article that prior Republican Administrations had also failed to defend section 3501. Although Republican Attorneys General like John Ashcroft and Meese were cognizant of 18 U.S.C. section 3501, Professor Cassell wrote, “no serious efforts were undertaken . . . to secure any determination of the constitutionality of the law.” In addition, “[A] recommendation by the Justice Department’s Office of Legal Policy in 1987 that an aggressive effort be made to test the law was never adopted as the result of opposition by other agencies within the Department.”

At the hearing, I asked Professor Cassell to explain his criticism of Attorney General Reno regarding section 3501 in light of his earlier acknowledgment that prior Attorneys General had taken a similar position. At first he distanced himself from his comments regarding Attorneys General Mitchell and Meese by implying that the magazine in which they appeared had somehow misrepresented his words. He then suggested that because the op-ed appeared in a popular publication, the National Journal, it should be given less credence than, say, a law review article.

Recall that I am not referring to a situation in which Professor Cassell was quoted out of context. I am referring to an article that Professor Cassell co-wrote with a colleague. That is why his responses to my oral questions in the hearing seemed so slippery. I gave him another chance to explain his behavior. As is common in a popular journal, the National Journal, it should be given less credence than, say, a law review article.

Another cause to which Professor Cassell has dedicated himself is the defense of the death penalty. Indeed, he has been called “the academic world’s foremost defender of capital punishment.” At the hearing on his nomination, in response to questions from Senator DINN, Professor Cassell asserted, “my experience with the death penalty is rather limited.” This statement confounds reason.

Relishing on the list of publications and presentations that Professor Cassell has submitted to this Committee, I count the following references to capital punishment, dating back to 1987: three substantial articles; four appearances before committees of the U.S. Congress, and one each before the Utah House of Representatives, two popular publications; and three debates. One of those debates took place just 18 months ago: Professor Cassell squared off against Stephen Bright, one of the nation’s preeminent defenders of those accused of capital crimes. These examples do not even include the large number of interviews he has given to the press on the topic. He has written and spoken widely on this fundamental matter, but now terms his experience with it “limited.”

Despite admissions that our death penalty system is riddled with error, Professor Cassell has defended it. Specifically, he repeatedly misrepresented that the Supreme Court’s decision in Hill v. Zant, upholding a Texas statute that prevents justices from considering new evidence of innocence that is uncovered more than 30 days after conviction, was an “urban legend.” He supports this position by asserting that there is no definitive proof that an innocent person has been executed in the past 50 years despite the shameful fact that since 1973, 100 condemned persons have had their convictions vacated by exonerating evidence.

Professor Cassell has been highly critical of studies that show significant rates of error in the imposition of capital punishment.

More than once, he has attacked a study showing errors in capital cases by declaring that the author is an “activist,” thereby attempting to undermine the credibility of the study’s findings. He has also engaged in vitriolic and occasionally personal attacks against those with whom he disagrees on this issue, often skewering details in his own favor and publishing half-truths. His actions on this matter likewise call into question his ability to rule fairly on this most important legal issue.

Professor Cassell’s views on habeas corpus were tested in the past 50 years. In April 1993, Professor Cassell testified before the Judiciary Committee in opposition to a bill that would have allowed death row inmates to raise new claims of actual innocence. The bill was a response to the Supreme Court’s decision in Herrera v. Collins, which upheld a Texas rule barring courts from considering new evidence of innocence that is uncovered more than 30 days after conviction. In his testimony, Professor Cassell argued that an innocent defendant “will be fully aware of the circumstances surrounding his innocence and can present them at trial.” He further asserted that evidence that becomes available after conviction is, “almost invariably unreliable.” It is troubling to imagine a district court judge with such biases, especially given the strong likelihood that he would be called upon to review claims of innocence based on newly discovered evidence.

Professor Cassell has also advocated limiting habeas review of claimed violations of Batson v. Kentucky, which prohibits the exercise of peremptory challenges on the basis of race or gender. In a 1992 law review article, he argued that Batson violations should be treated as harmless error, meaning that a new trial would never be an appropriate remedy for a Batson violation discovered for the first time on appeal. As an alternative remedy, he proposed notifying excluded jurors that had been unfairly excluded from the previous trial and inviting them to join the panel from which jurors are selected in a subsequent case. But such a “remedy” would do little to cure the structural flaw in the defendant’s trial.

Notably, although the Supreme Court has ruled whether Batson violations are subject to harmless error analysis, the consensus among the Courts of Appeals is that they are not. I am aware of Professor Cassell’s work with regard to crime victims’ rights. We still have more work to do to ensure that our criminal justice system is one that respects the rights and dignity of crime victims, rather than one that presents additional hurdles for those already victimized. Professor Cassell helped draft the federal victims’ rights amendment in the mid-1990s. He also worked on, and testified in support of, some of the more than 60 versions of a Federal constitutional amendment that has been proposed, in recent Congresses, by Senators Kyl and Feinstein.

It is no secret that, as a longtime advocate of victims’ rights, I believe it is preferable to broaden these rights by statute rather than by amending the Constitution. I do not, however, fault Professor Cassell, or anyone else, for supporting this approach. The treatment of crime victims certainly is of central importance to a civilized society. The question is not whether we should help victims, but how. I continue to believe that crime victims legislation is the preferable course to amending the Constitution.

As has been said, Professor Cassell’s work on behalf of this cause has occasionally exceeded the bounds of fair advocacy. For example, when testifying before this Committee in support of the proposed constitutional amendment, he repeatedly cited the Victims Rights Clarification Act of 1997—VRCA—as evidence that statutes are not adequate for protecting crime victims, and that nothing but a constitutional amendment will do. While he has the right to favor an amendment to the Constitution, Professor Cassell grossly distorted the impact of the VRCA.

Congress passed the VRCA in response to a pretrial order by the trial
I have no doubts about Professor Cassell's intelligence and his passion and commitment to how he thinks the law should read. I am sure that he is a fine professor of law. I suspect he may be an effective advocate. But when viewed as a whole, his career has been of one who has worked forcefully to push the law to the far right. His one-man war on Miranda, his aggressive defense of our flawed system of capital punishment, and his work on other matters place him outside the mainstream of modern American jurisprudence. Even more troubling is his clear track record of manipulating sources and data to promote his ideological agenda.

I have voted for 56 of the President's judicial nominees so far, and I will surely vote for many, many more, but on the basis of all I have seen in connection with the nomination of Paul Cassell, I cannot and will not vote in favor of this nomination. My judgment is that he is not the kind of fair and impartial judge that is essential to our Federal courts.

Mr. President, how much time remains for the Senator from Vermont? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 6 minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. STEINERN. Mr. President, I thank the ranking member.

Mr. President, I am very proud to rise in support of Professor Paul Cassell who is nominated to be a judge for the district court in Utah.

I think one of the best ways to learn about a person is to work with them on an issue. I have had the pleasure, along with Senator KYL, of working with Paul Cassell on a constitutional amendment to protect victims of violent crime.

In the course of several meetings, I have found Professor Cassell to be bright, sensitive, and evenhanded, with a very deep concern for those victimized by crime.

I am not the only one. I would like to quickly read the opening paragraph from Doug Beloof of Northwestern School of Law at the Lewis & Clark College:

I am an associate professor of law at Lewis & Clark law school in Portland, Oregon. I am a registered Democrat. It has been my pleasure to know Professor Paul Cassell personally and professionally for several years. I am writing to express my support for him. As his resume reflects, he is brilliant. He is one of the quickest conceptual thinkers and writers I have ever met. There is no question that he is well qualified for the district court position.

I find myself strongly in agreement. I have found in my course in public life that very few care really to be identified with victims of crime. In this sense, Paul Cassell is really a jewel. I have seen him come forward time after time on behalf of victims of violent crimes. On a pro bono basis, he represented the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing in their unsuccessful efforts to receive the trial and still testify at the sentencing proceedings.

He has worked on behalf of sexual assault victims. This month he is filing briefs in the Utah Supreme Court on behalf of the Rape Recovery Center to protect the confidentiality of rape crisis victims.

Because of his tireless work on behalf of crime victims, Professor Cassell’s nomination has earned the support of victim’s groups around the country including: the Klaas Kids Foundation; Crime Victims United of California; the National Victims Constitutional; Amendment Network; Memory of Victims Everywhere; National Organization for Victim Assistance; and Justice for Murder Victims.

Let me read just a couple excerpts from his letters of support:

John Stein, Deputy Director of the National Organization for Victim Assistance, describes him as . . . a fair, ethical, and highly competent attorney and colleague. [Professor Cassell] has demonstrated a balanced commitment to the cause of justice for all Americans including crime victims.

Douglas Beloof, a Professor of Law at Lewis and Clark school in Portland, Oregon wrote:

Professor Cassell’s character and temperament . . . are extremely well suited for the District Court position. The citizens of Utah could not find a better legal mind or a more decent human being.

Professor Cassell also comes before the Senate with impressive academic credentials.

Professor Cassell graduated from Stanford University and from Stanford Law School, where he was Order of the Coif and president of the Stanford Law Review.

He clerked for then-Judge Antonin Scalia on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, and subsequently Chief Justice Warren Burger of the U.S. Supreme Court.

After a successful career in the Department of Justice, Mr. Cassell entered academia and became a professor at the University of Utah. His scholarship includes over 25 published law review articles.

In sum, I thank Chairman LEAHY for setting this nomination for a vote, and I urge my colleagues to vote to confirm Professor Cassell to the Utah District Court.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a series of letters from national organizations supporting victims and also supporting Dr. Paul Cassell for appointment to the district court.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:
Thank you very much,

Sincerely,

ROBERT W. LEACH,

President.

KLAA$KIDS FOUNDATION,

Re confirmation of Paul G. Cassell.

Hon. DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: On behalf of the CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT NETWORK, I wish to express our strong support for the confirmation of Paul G. Cassell to the 10th Federal District Court for the District of Utah.

Mr. Cassell has a distinguished record of service in the area of criminal justice reform and the rights of crime victims. He is a man totally dedicated to public safety and victims rights and will be an asset in making the justice system fair and honest for the law-abiding citizens who just happen to become a crime victim.

We thank you for continuing to be a strong crime victims advocate. We appreciate your great effort on behalf of victims of crime.

Please feel free to call us anytime we may be of assistance.

Sincerely,

HARRIET SALARNO,
President/Chairperson.

MEMORY OF VICTIMS EVERYWHERE,
San Juan Capistrano, CA, March 14, 2002.

Re please give strong support to Paul G. Cassell for confirmation to the 10th Federal District Court.

Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: Within the areas of criminal justice reform and the rights of crime victims.

Knowing of Paul Cassell’s wonderful work in the justice area, we would guess that you plan to support him for confirmation to the 10th Federal District Court. We do request your very strong support for him.

If you know of Mr. Cassell, you are aware he is a man totally dedicated to making our justice system fair for the honest, law-abiding citizen, who just happens to become a victim of crime.

Dear Senator Feinstein, on behalf of the National Organization for Victim Assistance, we are writing to express our strong support for the confirmation of Professor Paul Cassell to the Federal District Court for the District of Utah.

We have worked with Professor Cassell for many years, and have come to know him as a fair, ethical, and highly competent attorney and colleague. Paul has demonstrated a balanced commitment to the cause of justice for all Americans, including crime victims.

We are honored by his longstanding association with NOVA. In his work on the Crime Victims’ Rights Amendment he has shown his ability to understand many different points of view, as is evidenced by his collaboration with another NOVA friend, Professor Lawrence Tribe. We strongly believe that Professor Cassell will be a credit to the Federal Judiciary and Lawrence Tribe.

The positions of the organizations we represent have often prioritized the rights of the wrong individual and have been victimized by violent crimes. We strongly believe that Professor Cassell is a man totally dedicated to making our justice system fair for the honest, law-abiding citizen, who just happens to become a crime victim.

We thank you again and again for your great effort on behalf of victims of crime.

My kindest personal regards and with sincerity and appreciation,

COLLINS (THOMPSON) CAMPBELL, Former mayor, San Juan Capistrano.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN, As one of the hardest hit crime victims in the Nation, I extend my appreciation for your great effort on behalf of the victims of violent crime. Thank you for continuing to be a strong crime victims advocate. We appreciate your great effort on behalf of victims of crime.

Please feel free to call us anytime we may be of assistance.

Sincerely,

HARRIET SALARNO,
President/Chairperson.

Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

ROBERT W. LEACH,

President.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — SENATE
May 13, 2002

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: We strongly believe that Professor Cassell is one such person: a leader whom goes to battle for the rights of all honest Americans.

Thank you for your consideration on this matter.

Sincerely,

MARC KLAAS.

CRIME VICTIMS UNITED OF CALIFORNIA,

Re request for your support of Paul G. Cassell for confirmation to the 10th Federal District Court.

Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: In keeping with yours and our tireless push for the “U.S. Constitutional Amendment for the rights of victims,” we ask for your strong support of Paul G. Cassell for confirmation to the 10th Federal District Court for the District of Utah.

Mr. Cassell stands for everything that we are attempting to accomplish. He is a man totally dedicated to public safety and victims rights and will be an asset in making the justice system fair and honest for the law-abiding citizens who just happen to become a crime victim.

We thank you for continuing to be a strong crime victim’s advocate. We appreciate your great effort on behalf of victims of crime.

Please feel free to call on us anytime we may be of assistance.

Sincerely,

HARRIET SALARNO,
President/Chairperson.

JUSTICE FOR MURDER VICTIMS,

HOMICIDE VICTIMS, INC.,

Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN,
Hart Senate Office Bldg.,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: In keeping with your tireless pursuit of justice for crime victims and advocacy for a Victims’ Rights Constitutional Amendment, we urgently request that you support Professor Paul G. Cassell’s confirmation to the 10th Federal District Court. A graduate of Stanford, he was an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia. Professor Cassell writes, lectures, and testifies extensively in the areas of criminal justice reform and the rights of crime victims.

Knowing of Paul Cassell’s wonderful work in the justice area, we would guess that you plan to support him for confirmation to the 10th Federal District Court. We do request your very strong support for him.

If you know of Mr. Cassell, you are aware he is a man totally dedicated to making our justice system fair for the honest, law-abiding citizen, who just happens to become a victim of crime.

In April 1996, I had the privilege of meeting Paul as we both testified before the U.S. Senate Judiciary in support of your U.S. Constitutional Amendment. Paul Cassell is a leader, doing battle for the rights of the honest people (especially crime victims). Paul has long been known for his integrity. In Utah, victims are proud to support him for the Federal District Court of our great Nation.

Thank you again and again for your great effort on behalf of victims of crime.

My kindest personal regards and with sincerity and appreciation,

ROBERT PRESTON,
President.

ROBERTA ROPER,
President/Chairperson.

ROBERT PRESTON,
President.

Hon. DIANNA FEINSTEIN,
Senator for California, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR FEINSTEIN: On behalf of the National Victims’ Constitutional Amendment Network (NVCAN), I wish to express our strong support for the confirmation of Paul G. Cassell, Esquire, who has been nominated to serve as a federal judge. Those of us who have been privileged to know and work with Mr. Cassell have deep respect and admiration for his leadership and service to the criminal justice system and the society it serves.

Paul Cassell has a distinguished record of outstanding service to others. He is currently a Professor of Law at the University of Utah College of Law, where he teaches criminal procedure. He has written and lectured extensively regarding crime victims’ rights, serving on the Utah Council on Victims, where he was instrumental in obtaining the passage of the Utah State Victims’ Rights Amendment. He worked with total commitment and dedication on behalf of 89 victims of the Oklahoma City bombing in their efforts to obtain their lawful rights to watch proceedings in that case.

His career includes a wealth of experiences that reflect his exceptional ability to strive for balance and fairness in the criminal justice system so that they are perceived. Clearly, those qualities have been demonstrated in abundance as NVCAN has worked for the passage of the U.S. Constitutional amendment for crime victims’ rights.

Paul Cassell is a man of honor and integrity who will bring a keen intellect, ethical conduct and distinction to the federal bench. We in NVCAN have worked with him as one of our most active contributors and a passionate advocate for equal justice under the law. We hope you will carefully consider our strong support for his confirmation.

Sincerely,

ROBERTA ROPER,
Robert Preston,
Co-Chairpersons.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

THE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will vote against the nomination of Professor Paul G. Cassell to be a Federal district judge in Utah. Mr. Cassell’s nomination is the first of President

May 13, 2002
Bush’s judicial nominations that I have voted against on the Senate floor. Although Professor Cassell is a highly intelligent and forceful advocate of his views on criminal justice, he clearly lacks the temperament and moderation required for a life-tenured Federal judgeship.

Professor Cassell is perhaps best known for his longstanding criticism of and campaign to overturn the Supreme Court’s decision in Miranda v. Arizona. Miranda held that police must provide certain warnings to suspects held in custody if their statements are to be later admitted into evidence. As the Supreme Court recently observed, Miranda “has become embedded in routine police practice to the point where the warnings have become part of our national culture.” Across the Nation, law enforcement agencies have concluded that Miranda generally does not hinder their ability to investigate and prosecute crime.

Professor Cassell believes otherwise. He has written numerous law review articles arguing that Miranda was “an undeniable tragedy”—“the most damaging blow inflicted on law enforcement in the last half-century.” Cassell’s scholarship, however, has received withering criticism from his colleagues. For example, Professor Stephen Schulhofer has described Cassell’s methodology as “inconsistent and highly partisan,” and “junk science of the worst sort.” Professor Charles Weisselberg stated that his conclusions were based on “foolhardy assumptions” and “flawed methodologies.” Professors Richard Leo and Richard Ofshe criticized Cassell for advancing “logically flawed and empirically erroneous propositions” that “appear to stem from his ideological commitments.”

In addition to publishing law review articles, Professor Cassell filed amicus curiae briefs around the country seeking to invalidate laws that are based on a Supreme Court decision passed in 1968 effectively overruled Miranda and made voluntariness the sole test for the admissibility of confessions. At the time of this statute’s enactment, I stated that it was “so squarely in conflict with the recent decision of the Supreme Court in Miranda that it will almost certainly be declared unconstitutional as soon as it is tested in the courts.”

Prosecutors are aware of this infirmity, the Justice Department, from the Johnson administration onward, Democratic and Republican administrations alike, made no serious effort to test the statute’s constitutionality in court. Nevertheless, in 1990’s, Professor Cassell singled out the Clinton Justice Department for vigorous attack, the same Department that saw the overall crime rate in the United States decline for 8 out of 8 years, and violent crime drop to its lowest point in two decades. Because of the Department’s success, he failed to endorse his flawed scholarship. Cassell accused it of “a clear constitutional abdication.”

That Attorney General Janet Reno had “team[ed] up with defense lawyers to let armed felons and other criminals escape prosecution.” Imagine that, stating that about an Attorney General. At his nomination hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Cassell declined to express any regret for these outrageous and unfounded statements.

In June 2000, in Dickerson v. United States, the Supreme Court vindicated the Justice Department’s longstanding position. In an opinion written by Chief Justice Rehnquist, seven justices of the Supreme Court held that Miranda was a “constitutional rule” that may not be overruled by a statute. Professor Cassell described the Court’s ruling as a “remarkable example of the imperial judiciary.” He proceeded to argue, in both a law review article and a Federalist Society newsletter, that the ruling lacked precedent. He described it as “a silver lining in the “dark cloud of the decision” of the extraordinary panel of Justices Scalia and Justice Thomas, in dissent, that they would continue to apply the unconstitutional statute in all future cases. Cassell wrote, “Perhaps the view of the Dickerson dissenters will become a majority of the Court before the end of this term…’

Thus, in his scholarship and in his public statements on Miranda, Professor Cassell has shown himself to be intemperate and one-sided. He refuses to admit that his opponents might have a case even after their position has been vindicated by seven justices of the Supreme Court. Furthermore, his criticism of the Court calls into question his commitment to the principle of stare decisis and his ability to separate his view of the “truth” from settled law. Is this the kind of person we want to serve as a Federal judge? I am equally troubled by Professor Cassell’s views on the death penalty. Professor Cassell has argued, both in conversation about the death penalty, and we have confirmed and continue to confirm many nominees who believe that capital punishment is an appropriate response to crime. My opposition to Professor Cassell’s nomination is based not on his support for the death penalty, but instead on his refusal to even acknowledge the evidence showing that serious problems exist in its implementation.

Since 1973, 100 people have been released from United States because of innocence. In many cases, fatal mistakes were avoided only because of discoveries made by students or journalists, not the courts. This high number of exoneration has led many observers, both liberal and conservative, to express concern about the fairness of the death penalty’s administration. For example, Justice O’Connor has observed that “if statistics are any indication, the system may well be allowing some innocent persons to be executed.” There are now death penalty moratoriums in two States, Illinois and Maryland, imposed after leaders in each state recognized serious concerns about racial disparities and the possibility that an innocent person might be executed.

Professor Cassell has spent his academic career minimizing and dismissing such concerns. In spite of the broad national consensus that any innocent person has been executed, in a New York Times article, Cassell has argued, “the most important error rate—the rate of mistaken executions—is zero.” Elsewhere, Cassell has trivialized the danger of fatal error in the Government’s administration of the death penalty by comparing it to the risk involved in driving on a highway, stating that even though innocent people might die in traffic accidents, “we all agree that our highways should remain open because of the social benefits they produce.”

In 1993, Professor Cassell testified in opposition to a bill that would allow death-row inmates to raise new claims of actual innocence in habeas corpus proceedings, arguing that “[i]f a defendant is truly innocent, he will be able to demonstrate that to the panel that is surrounding his innocence and can present them at trial.” Evidence discovered after trial, he stated, is “almost invariably unreliable.” As a district judge, Cassell was charged with the duty of reviewing post-trial petitions by State and Federal prisoners, many of which raise claims of innocence. His unorthodox view of the reliability of newly discovered evidence is inconsistent with that fundamental duty.

Regardless of how we feel about the death penalty generally, there is one thing that we can all agree on. People on trial for their lives must have effective assistance of counsel, not lawyers who sleep through the trial. Professor Cassell, however, has expressed a different view. In October 2000, a divided panel of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the death sentence in one such case, in which the defense lawyer had repeatedly slept through the trial for substantial periods of time. Professor Cassell defended this decision in an interview on National Public Radio, emphasizing that there was “no real suggestion” that the defendant was innocent. The en banc Fifth circuit later overturned the panel’s decision and reinstituted the district court’s grant of habeas corpus relief. It held that “when a state court finds on the basis of credible evidence that defense counsel repeatedly slept as evidence was being introduced against a defendant, that defendant has been deprived of a critical stage of his trial.” Cassell’s willingness to affirm a death sentence in a case where the defense lawyer slept through the trial raises fundamental questions about his suitability to serve as a Federal judge.

A number of lawyers from Utah have written letters to the Judiciary Committee regarding Professor Cassell’s nomination. They have expressed concern about his lack of ties to Utah and limited courtroom experience. Ronald J. Yengich wrote that Cassell has not been "intellectually honest in his assessment of the problems of crime in our society and the response that the Courts should take to them," and that he has shown "an unwillingness to view both sides of any legal argument." L. Clark Donaldson wrote that Cassell's legal scholarship has elevated "parisian speculations over careful and deliberate analysis of data." Kristine M. Rogers stated that his comments have led her "to conclude that he views our justice system as a mechanism with which he can manipulate our Government with an agenda for ever increasing governmental power and ever decreasing individual rights." Stephen M. Enderton, a self-described Republican, believes that Cassell "would use his position to push his personal ultra conservative agenda to the detriment of all of those who appear before his court."

I hope that my concerns and the concerns of these Utah lawyers are misplaced, and that as a judge Professor Cassell will be able to set aside ideology and apply the law fairly and impartially. His record, however, indicates otherwise. I therefore oppose this nomination, and I urge my colleagues not to approve it.

Mr. BACH. Mr. President, I want to respond to remarks made by my colleague from Massachusetts about criticism of Professor Cassell's scholarship. Academic debate about such issues as Miranda and the death penalty is robust and uninhibited. It is part of that debate that scholars will criticize the work of other scholars. The validity of that criticism depends, of course, on the merits of the particular claims.

Professor Schullhofer and Professor Cassell have engaged in a particularly strong terms. Unlike the other academic exchanges in which Cassell has been involved, this dispute has been litigated in several court cases. Criminal defendants have offered the paid "expert" testimony of Professors Leo and Oshe in support of their defenses. Prosecutors have presented Cassell's writings arguing that Leo and Oshe are not sufficiently reliable to be allowed to testify. Several courts have agreed with my critiques of their work. For example, in one fairly recent case, a Federal district court that proffered testimony on false confessions by Professor Leo would not satisfy the reliability requirements for scientific evidence. The court held: "Therefore the motion to call Dr. Leo will be denied. I find there is inadequate showing that the reasoning or methodology underlying the proffered testimony is reliable nor has it gained acceptance in the relevant scientific community." See United States v. Juan Carlos Higuera-Cruz No. 96CR 145. The court cited Cassell's research as one reason for reaching its conclusion. After reviewing Cassell's article in the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy, the court explained: "Professor Cassell ... concluded that all nine people were in fact, likely guilty. ... That, at the very least, casts doubt on the methodology of [the study that Dr. Leo conducted and whether or not it is substantially or scientifically reliable or valid]."

In a similar ruling handed down recently, a State district court judge in New Mexico also found Professor Leo to be unreliable. Tracking arguments that Cassell made in his article, the court explained: "While the area of expertise of Dr. Leo is an important area of study, nevertheless, as recognized by Dr. Leo, there are considerable limitations which presently exist for the analysis of interrogation techniques and their bearing upon false confessions." State v. Lance Four Star, No. D–0101–CR–2000000276, op. at 1–2 (1st Jud. D.C. of New Mex., Aug. 23, 2001). Moreover, the court explained: "The conclusions of Dr. Leo are arrived at from an analysis of a small number of cases (sixty) which are not randomly selected. ... Even if one were to concede the methodology of determining whether a confession is false to a high probability, the numbers used are extraordinarily small." It is not unusual for other cases to similar effect (both in the United States and Canada) finding either Professor Leo's or Professor Oshe's work to be insufficiently reliable to be admitted in court.

Professor George Thomas and Professor Cassell have been debating the Miranda issue in various fora. Their most extensive debate appeared in the UCLA Law Review. See George C. Thomas III, Is Miranda A Real World Failure? A Plea for More (and Better) Empirical Evidence, 43 UCLA L. Rev. 821 (1996) (calling for empirical research on Miranda); Paul G. Cassell & Brett S. Hayman, Police Interrogation and confession in crime clearance rates after Miranda; Stephen J. Schulhofer, Bashing Miranda's Harmful Effects on Law Enforcement, 50 Stan. L. Rev. 1055 (1998) (multiple regression analysis of crime clearance rates suggesting structural drop in clearance) after Miranda). As explained in greater detail in those articles, Cassell believes that it is important to attempt to calculate the costs of the Miranda decision, even though the data that may be available for such a calculation is limited.

Professors Richard A. Leo and Richard J. Oshe have criticized Cassell's work on false confessions, often in particularly strong terms. Unlike the other academic exchanges in which Cassell has been involved, this dispute has been litigated in several court cases. Criminal defendants have offered the paid "expert" testimony of Professors Leo and Oshe in support of their defenses. Prosecutors have presented Cassell's writings arguing that Leo and Oshe are not sufficiently reliable to be allowed to testify. Several courts have agreed with my critiques of their work. For example, in one fairly recent case, a Federal district court that proffered testimony on false confessions by Professor Leo would not satisfy the reliability requirements for scientific evidence. The court held: "Therefore the motion to call Dr. Leo will be denied. I find there is inadequate showing that the reasoning or methodology underlying the proffered testimony is reliable nor has it gained acceptance in the relevant scientific community." See United States v. Juan Carlos Higuera-Cruz No. 96CR 145. The court cited Cassell's research as one reason for reaching its conclusion. After reviewing Cassell's article in the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy, the court explained: "Professor Cassell ... concluded that all nine people were in fact, likely guilty. ... That, at the very least, casts doubt on the methodology of [the study that Dr. Leo conducted and whether or not it is substantially or scientifically reliable or valid]."

In a similar ruling handed down recently, a State district court judge in New Mexico also found Professor Leo to be unreliable. Tracking arguments that Cassell made in his article, the court explained: "While the area of expertise of Dr. Leo is an important area of study, nevertheless, as recognized by Dr. Leo, there are considerable limitations which presently exist for the analysis of interrogation techniques and their bearing upon false confessions." State v. Lance Four Star, No. D–0101–CR–2000000276, op. at 1–2 (1st Jud. D.C. of New Mex., Aug. 23, 2001). Moreover, the court explained: "The

Finally, in considering criticisms of Cassell's work, it might also be useful to consider praise of his work. Some of the professional accolades received by Cassell's work include: Yale Kamisar, Can (Did) Congress "Override" Miranda, 85 Cornell L. Rev. 883 (2000) (noting the "compelling presence on the scene of Professor Paul Cassell"); Judge Alex Kozinski, The Fourth Annual Fullbright Lecture: The Relationship of Legal Scholarship to the Judiciary and Legal Community: Who Gives a Hott About Legal Scholarship?, 37 Hous. L. Rev. 285 (2000) (reviewing Cassell's academic research on Miranda, which lead to the Dickerson decision; concluding "this strikes me as a monumental academic achievement . . . Cassell, through his academic writings, has given this issue legitimacy, and an argument that a mere five years ago would have been received with a chuckle may now turn out to be the law of the land"); Michael Edmund O'Neill, Undoing Miranda, 2000 BYU L. Rev. 185 (noting doctrinal uncertainties about Miranda and concluding that Cassell has offered perhaps the best answer to this perplexing question").

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I cannot support the confirmation of this nominee for the Federal district court. To cite just one instance of his intemperate remarks, Mr. Cassell wrote in a published article that the U.S. Department of Justice "team(ed) up with armed felons and other criminals escape prosecution." Statements such as this, and there are others, show an absence of the judicial temperament necessary to warrant a lifetime appointment to the Federal bench.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for President Bush's nomination of Paul G. Cassell for the U.S. District Court for the District of Utah. The Judiciary Committee approved Professor Cassell by voice vote on May 2, 2002, and I would urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this nomination.

Paul Cassell has excellent academic credentials. He graduated from Stanford University Law School, where he was president of the Stanford Law Review. Following law school he served two clerkships, one for then-Judge Antonin Scalia on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, and one for Chief Justice Warren Burger of the U.S. Supreme Court. Cassell's professional experience includes service as an Assistant U.S. Attorney and also Associate Deputy Attorney General at the U.S. Department of Justice. As a professor at the University of Utah College of Law, he distinguished himself as a popular and well-respected teacher. His scholarship includes over 25 published law review articles, as well as numerous articles in major newspapers and periodicals.

Professor Cassell has become a national expert on criminal procedure and evidence and one of the Nation's leading experts on victims' rights. He has worked aggressively against crime across the country, always on a pro bono basis. For instance, he represented victims of the Oklahoma City bombing in their efforts to observe the trial and sentencing proceedings. His advocacy is the reason why those families did not have to view in the normal circumstances the McVeigh trial. Recently, his pro bono efforts resulted in a significant victory for victims of crime in the Utah Supreme Court. On March 12, 2002, in State v. Casey, the court agreed with Professor Cassell that crime victims have the right to be heard before any plea bargain is accepted by the court and the right to appeal issues relating to that right. As a result of Cassell's efforts, this opinion recognized that victims should have a voice to play in our criminal justice system and that their rights must be respected by courts and prosecutors.

Professor Cassell has also been actively involved in fighting domestic violence, the McVeigh trial. In April 2002, Professor Cassell filed briefs in the Utah Supreme Court on behalf of the Rape Recovery Center and the National Alliance to End Sexual Violence to protect the confidentiality of rape crisis counseling records. Additionally, Professor Cassell has been an active participant in legal affairs in Utah. For many years, he has served as the chair of the Legislative Committee of the Utah Council on Victims of Crime as well as a member on the Utah Supreme Court's Advisory Committee on Rules of Criminal Procedure.

In previous weeks many of my colleagues have highlighted the need to address the vacancy crisis in the Federal courts. I am concerned that there are some people who are perpetuating this vacancy. The Senate must do its part to act swiftly on the President's nominees. I have voiced concern in the past that certain Senators have made it known that they will require that a nominee be recommended by the American Bar Association. While I believe that this is an unnecessary requirement and an extra-constitutional test, Paul Cassell has, nonetheless, passed this test and a substantial majority of the American Bar Association review committee rates him "well qualified" to be a Federal judge.

Paul Cassell's long list of credentials indicate his preparedness to serve as a Federal judge. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the nomination of Paul G. Cassell for the U.S. District Court for the District of Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LEAHY. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 56 seconds. The Senator from Utah has 1 minute.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have told the Senator from Utah I will let him go last.

I have no doubt about Professor Cassell's intelligence, his passion, and his commitment to how he thinks the law should read and his commitment as a fine professor of law. I suspect he is an effective advocate. But viewed as a whole, his career has been one of a results-orientated advocate where he has worked forcefully to push the law to the far right. His one-man war on Miranda was carried out with the kind of aggressive defense of an flawed system of capital punishment, even though 100 people have been released because of mistakes, and his work on other matters place him outside the mainstream of modern American jurisprudence. Even more troubling is his clear track record of manipulating sources and data to promote his ideological agenda.

I have voted for 56 of the last 57 of the President's judicial nominees so far this year. I will surely vote for many more, but on the basis of all I have seen in connection with the nomination of Paul Cassell, I cannot and will not vote in favor of this nomination. My judgment is that he is not likely to be the kind of fair and impartial judge that is essential to our Federal courts.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it seems ironic that my colleagues are attacking Paul Cassell for having used yeoman efforts to uphold a Federal statute that was passed by the Congress of the United States in 29 U.S.C. 3501 which basically said that voluntary confessions will be admitted into evidence if there is just a technical mistake. I have to say I believe that is ridiculous. I think he had every right to try to uphold that statute. Personally, I think he was right in his arguments, but the Supreme Court found otherwise. He made it very clear that that is the law now and he will abide by it.

I also disagree with my colleagues who characterize him again as manipulating statistics and figures. There are people who disagree with Paul Cassell, as is the case in academia. He disagrees with them. But I happen to know this is one of the most honorable, honest people who lives in our society today. I personally don’t appreciate his being treated this way.

It pains me to hear my colleagues attacking Paul Cassell, one of the most stellar nominees this body has ever had the privilege of considering for confirmation to the district court bench.

I have to say that, even before those disparaging remarks were made, it was already an embarrassment to me that the Judiciary Committee and Senate leadership have taken nearly a year—238 days to be exact—to confirm Professor Cassell's nomination to a floor vote. This is by far the longest time that any district court nominee has had to wait for a vote during this Congress. In fact, this vote has been delayed so long that the Administrative Office of the Courts declared the seat to which Professor Cassell was nominated a judicial emergency several months ago.

But rather than just register my disbelief and disappointment, I would like to address the two issues that the critics and nay-sayers are bringing up: Professor Cassell’s work in the areas of capital punishment and the so-called Miranda warning.

Mr. President, don’t let anyone fool you: The fact is that Cassell’s views on these topics reflect thoughtful, responsible, mainstream legal ideas. And Cassell’s work in these areas has been driven by nothing other that a deeply felt desire to improve the justice system for the benefit of all Americans. So, rather than let my colleagues misstate and mis-characterize those views, I would like to explain what Professor Cassell really thinks on these topics.

First, capital punishment. Professor Cassell, like many scholars, jurists, and a majority of the population of the United States, supports capital punishment in appropriate cases. Cassell has argued that Congress and the States have imposed capital punishment for those who have committed the most serious offenses representing the wanton, willful, and reckless disregard for innocent human life. The fact that he has had the courage to say so in today’s monolithic academic culture should be taken as evidence of his ability to think independently in the face of peer pressure—a quality we want in judges. But that courage has led people who disagree with him to attempt to reduce his views to mere caricatures. His critics are trying to make-believe that he has a callous attitude toward anyone wrongly sentenced to death. But nothing could be further from the truth. Cassell’s support for capital punishment is tempered by his expression of concern that innocent persons are not executed. Professor Cassell has said so in his writings and proven so by his actions. For instance, Professor Cassell has helped his law school, the University of Utah College of Law, raise funds for its recently formed Rocky Mountain Innocence Project, whose goal is to identify defendants who have been wrongfully convicted of capital or other crimes.

Cassell has also offered the Project his support and obtained incriminating statements. It was undisputed that these statements were given voluntarily. However, there was a dispute as to whether the Miranda warnings had been given before or after the questioning. The district court ruled that these voluntary statements could not be used as evidence against the defendants, Cassell briefed and argued the matter in the fourth circuit as an amicus. Cassell’s position was that Congress, in enacting a law known as § 3501, had validly required these voluntary statements to be admitted into evidence, even if there was a technical dispute over the timing of the warnings. The Fourth Circuit agreed with Cassell. The Supreme Court later asked Cassell to argue that position on appeal, which he did. After considering the argument, a majority of the Supreme Court disagreed with Cassell’s position and ruled that Cassell was an amicus and not a party for the issue. The point is, because of his personal involvement in that case, there’s probably no one who understands the settled law on Miranda better than Cassell.

Mr. President, any one who knows anything about law knows that a lawyer’s arguments in court do not always necessarily reflect his or her own personal views on the topic. In fact, it is a very important principle in our legal system that justices of this issue deserve forceful advocates for their position. So it is simply specious for anyone to pretend that every argument in Dickerson reflects Professor Cassell’s personal opinion. In fact, it is worse than specious—it is downright misrepresentation. That’s because Professor Cassell has written law review articles—not for a client, but on his own—in which he argues for a more modest policy change than he advocated in the Dickerson case. In these works, he advocates that police officers should continue to give most of the Miranda warnings, but suggests that some of the warnings should be modified and replaced with the requirement that police officers videotape interrogations as better insurance that constitutional rights are respected. After all, a true record of police interrogations is much better evidence of whether and how police abuse suspects who are wrongfully persuaded to falsely confess. In other words, Mr. President, Professor Cassell’s position on the Miranda warnings could actually offer more, rather than less, protection for Americans against possible abuse by police. So any attempt to pigeon-hole Professor Cassell as not supporting the rights of criminal defendants is a gross caricature of his reasoned and thoughtful perspective on the criminal justice process in order to protect the very rights that some accuse him of disregarding.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues not to be taken in by inaccurate or false representations of Cassell’s record. It is one thing for people to disagree—which I certainly respect. But it is quite another to carelessly or purposely mislead others into misunderstanding the real arguments. In the case of Professor Cassell, his positions on capital punishment and the Miranda warnings are thoughtful and reasonable views, held by many mainstream legal thinkers like himself. And the fact that he disagrees with Mr. President, any one who knows anything about law knows that a lawyer’s arguments. This case is a perfect example that Professor Cassell knows the difference between the roles of the advocate and the judge, and he has committed to follow the law. I again urge my colleagues to vote to confirm Paul Cassell, who, I am convinced, will be a fair-minded judge who applies the law impartially as written and interpreted.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Paul G. Cassell, of Utah, to be U.S. District Judge for the District of Utah? The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll. Mr. REID announced for the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Biden), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HARKIN), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LANDRY), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. LIEBERMAN), the Senator from Maryland (Ms. MUKULSKI), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. MILLER), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. NELSON), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. proposes an amendment numbered 3405 to amendment No. 3401. Mr. BAUCUS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is ordered to be dispensed with.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To clarify the principal negotiating objectives of the United States with respect to foreign investment) On page 229, line 23, strike all through “United States,” on line 25, and insert the following: “foreign investors in the United States are not accorded greater rights than United States investors in the United States.” Mr. BAUCUS. This is an amendment I am offering on behalf of myself, Senator GRASSLEY, and Senator WYDEN. Our amendment concerns an investor-State dispute settlement. That is the “chapter 11 question” as it has come to be called. It is based on the placement of investor-State provisions in NAFTA. This is not bankruptcy chapter 11. It has nothing to do with bankruptcy. When I say “chapter 11” it sometimes causes confusion, but this is chapter 11 in NAFTA.

Our amendment modifies the objective on investment in the trade bill to make clear that foreign investors in the United States should not be accorded a higher level of protection of their rights than U.S. citizens in the United States.

There has been a lot of discussion of NAFTA chapter 11 in recent days. In particular, a number of Senators have expressed legitimate concerns about the impact that chapter 11, and other similar provisions in other agreements, may have on the ability of State and local governments to regulate—that is, to adopt and enforce laws that protect the public health, safety, and welfare.

There is a growing consensus that we need to make sure that new trade and investment agreements don’t give foreign investors in the United States greater rights than we give our own citizens. International agreements must not become a back door for expanded protection of foreign investors at the expense of protection of our environment, health, and safety.

This view has been strongly and consistently expressed by various State and local government organizations, as well as environmental organizations, in recent weeks.

For example, a resolution adopted by the National Association of Attorneys General at their March meeting encourages Congress:

- to ensure that in any new legislation providing for international trade agreements foreign investors shall receive no greater rights than those afforded to our citizens.

A letter last week from a large coalition of environmental groups, including Defenders of Wildlife, Friends of the Earth, the Sierra Club, and the National Wildlife Federation, urged the President to:

- require that trade and investment agreements do not provide foreign corporations with greater rights than U.S. citizens have under the Constitution.

Similarly, a recent letter from the president of the National Wildlife Federation to Ambassador Zoellick states:

An important step to restore consensus would be to make clear that trade legislation and in investment agreements that those bring expropriation challenges under investment rules will not be granted rights greater than those provided under the takings jurisprudence of the U.S. Constitution.

The United States Conference of Mayors has expressed its concern that the bill as now drafted would allow trade officials to include investor protection standards in future trade agreements that go beyond U.S. law and that effectively grant foreign investors greater rights than U.S. citizens enjoy.

In another letter, the National Association of Counties expresses its concern that under the trade bill:

- foreign investors operating in the U.S. would have greater legal rights against our government than our own citizens possess.

Each of these organizations makes an excellent point. We have heard their message, and that is why we have offered the present amendment. We want to make sure that in protecting the rights of U.S. citizens abroad, our negotiators do not inadvertently en-croach on the prerogatives of Government here at home. This amendment seeks to strike the right balance between these different sets of interests.

The bill’s objective on investment opens with a statement recognizing that—on the whole—U.S. law provides a level of protection of investment that is:

- consistent with or greater than the level required by international law.

It goes on to state that our negotiators should ensure that:

United States investors in the United States are not accorded lesser rights than foreign investors in the United States.

Some have read this language to imply that negotiators should work to give foreign investors more rights than U.S. citizens now enjoy, and then seek to amend U.S. law to enhance the rights of U.S. citizens. In other words, they read this language as a mandate to expand individual property rights in the U.S. through the back door of international negotiations.

Let me be very clear in stating that that was not what the language at issue was intended to accomplish. The conference report emphatically emphasizes that obligations the U.S. undertakes in investment agreements:

- should not result in foreign investors being entitled to compensation for government measures where a similarly situated U.S. investor would not be entitled to relief.

In other words, the rights of U.S. investors under U.S. law define the ceiling. Negotiators must not enter into agreements that grant foreign investors rights that breach that ceiling.

The amendment we have laid down is intended to foreclose any doubt on this question. It is our objective to negotiate agreements that protect the rights of U.S. persons abroad. But we are not willing to sacrifice the regulatory functions of our own Government in order to obtain that objective.

As the letters I quoted attest, getting clarity on this point is the number one priority of the organization of the group that I have written about chapter 11. They make a fair point. Given the interests at stake, we must be crystal clear about the ground rules. U.S. negotiators must not conclude agreements that give foreign investors greater rights than our own citizens already enjoy. Our well-developed law should define the ceiling. The amendment that we offer today makes that unmistakable.

The chapter 11 issues are some of the most challenging to confront us in the fast track debate. Important questions about the needs of Government and the rights of individuals are at stake. I believe that the Finance Committee bill strikes the right balance. I believe the Finance Committee also, that the amendment we have laid down makes that balance even better, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Montana for offering this amendment. I think it helps improve what is already an excellent bill.

First, I want to make it clear that the bipartisan trade promotion authority bill currently pending in the Senate goes further than any prior bill to address concerns about potential abuse of the investor-State dispute process. At the same time, the bill recognizes that protecting U.S. investors abroad is also an extremely important objective. In short, the bill is balanced. Some people are attempting to undermine that balance. I think that is a mistake.

Foreign investment is closely interrelated to trade. Companies invest abroad to get closer to markets, acquire new technologies, form strategic alliances, and enhance competitiveness by integrating production and distribution. When they invest abroad, U.S. companies often become consumers of U.S. exports—either from affiliated entities or other U.S. companies.

The importance of international investment to the U.S. economy is large and growing. The United States receives more than 30 percent of worldwide investment. According to the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis, foreign investment in the United States grew sevenfold between 1994 and 2000, reaching almost $217 billion last year. As of 1998, foreign companies had invested over $3.5 trillion in the United States. They employed 5.6 million people and paid average annual salaries of over $46,000, well above the average salary for U.S. workers.

The ability of U.S. companies to invest abroad is also vital to U.S. economic growth and U.S. exports. Between 1994 and 2000, U.S. investment abroad doubled from $73 billion to $148 billion. U.S. investment abroad is critical to support a more dynamic and flexible U.S. economy, greater export flows and higher paying jobs for American workers.

For the last 25 years, each successive administration has recognized that it is critical to negotiate strong, objective and fair investment protections in our international agreements to continue to promote such investment. These traditional investment protections that we have under existing U.S. law and policy and established international law rules of which the U.S. has been the chief architect and advocate.

The Senate Finance Committee gave very careful consideration to investment issues and some concerns expressed about NAFTA chapter 11 when we discussed H.R. 3005, the bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act.

Both Republican and Democratic members of the committee agreed to adopt a strongly negotiating position on investment, which include: providing a mechanism for the early dismissal of frivolous claims, injecting greater transparency into arbitration proceedings, and establishing a review mechanism.

The bill and accompanying report also provide the committee’s views on ensuring that U.S. investors abroad enjoy protections comparable to those available to foreign investors in the United States under existing U.S. law, while at the same time not making our own regulations unduly subject to treaty challenge on grounds that have no foundation in U.S. law and practice.

The degree of support for the final product is demonstrated by a strong bipartisan committee vote of 18 to 7 in favor of the bill.

These provisions represent a very careful balance between the political concerns raised by particular cases that have dogged the NAFTA process and the need to continue to provide U.S. citizens with strong investment protections overseas.

Yet, some Members still have concerns that foreign investors in the United States will receive greater rights under these provisions than U.S. investors in the United States receive. The amendment we are offering today makes it clear that this is not the case.

It is a good improvement to an already excellent bill. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I want to speak just briefly about the chairman’s amendment. I understand what the Senate is trying to do with this amendment, and I appreciate his efforts to seek common ground. He has not had an easy job trying to steer this omnibus trade package through very stormy seas.

I am grateful for the chairman’s willingness to respond to the concerns that I—and others—have raised. However, on the issue of investor-State dispute settlement, I am afraid that substantial disagreement remains. The Baucus-Grassley amendment makes a minor change to the bill. It is certainly better than the current language, but it just does not do a good enough job of protecting the ability of Federal, State and local governments to enact legitimate public health and safety legislation.

As my colleagues know by now, it is clear that NAFTA’s investor-State dispute resolution process popularly known as “Chapter 11”—will be the model upon which future such agreements are predicated. This is a flawed model, not a failed model. I believe that having an investor-State dispute settlement process in a trade agreement is vital to ensuring that U.S. investors are able to invest abroad with confidence—but it needs to be improved.

Regrettably, the Baucus-Grassley amendment does not despite what its proponents claim—effectively address the shortcomings in the chapter 11 model. Adopting the Baucus-Grassley language without other needed changes will still allow future chapter 11-like tribunals to rule against legitimate U.S. public health and safety laws using a standard of expropriation that goes well beyond the clear standard that the Supreme Court has established in all its expropriation cases.

The amendment before us does not give any assurances that the due process clause of the Constitution will be respected, nor does it provide safe harbor for legitimate U.S. public health and safety laws.

Without all of these safeguards, future investor-State dispute settlement bodies can run roughshod over the ability of State and local governments—or even the Federal Government—to make laws to protect the public. I have an amendment that I believe will make those improvements to the underlying bill, and I intend to offer that amendment soon.

I will not oppose the pending amendment because it does not make the underlying bill any worse. But let us be clear: the chapter 11 model is flawed. Any suggestions that the Baucus-Grassley amendment takes care of these problems are simply incorrect.

So I think we should adopt this amendment by unanimous consent, but I do believe that the Senate should have a thorough debate on this issue.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN MORAN

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I rise today to take a moment to recognize the public service of John A. Moran, who resigned from the Federal Maritime Commission on April 15 to return to private life. While I want to congratulate John on his recent move, I also want to acknowledge and thank him for his service at the FMC.

John was born and raised in a port and shipbuilding community, something I consider a good start for any young man. I live in a port and shipbuilding community, and there is no better way to understand the importance of the maritime industry to the Nation’s economy than to grow up in the presence of the businesses and people that daily bring the goods of our trading partners to our door and carry America’s products to the world. While John was born in Hampton Roads, Virginia, not Mississippi, he is redeemed somewhat in my eyes by the fact that his parents and family are good Mississipians.

John developed an interest in maritime law at Washington and Lee University School of Law in Lexington, Virginia. This interest was encouraged during the year he clerked for the Honorable Richard B. K ellam in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. Judge K ellam shared with John his own love and enthusiasm for Admiralty Law and encouraged John to continue to maritime studies at Tulane University School of Law in New Orleans, Louisiana.

I first met John when he served as Republican Counsel to the Merchant Marine Subcommittee and the National Ocean Policy Study of the Senate’s Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation. He came to this position after serving in the House of Representatives as Republican Counsel to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Counsel and as Legislative Counsel to Virginia’s Senator John Warner. While working for the Commerce Committee, John worked on issues as varied as the Oil Pollution Act of 1990, a review of the Shipping Act of 1914, cargo preference, the Jones Act, vessel safety and Coast Guard programs, the Magnuson Fisheries Conservation and Management Act, seafood safety and inspection, ocean drift net legislation, the Coastal Zone Management Act, and the Marine Mammal Protection Act. John worked with Committee members from states as diverse as Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Alaska, Washington, Oregon, and Virginia. I always was impressed with John’s knowledge and experience, and with his effort to make sure that the concerns of all of the Republican members of the Committee were understood and addressed.

John left the Commerce Committee in 1995, first working for the government and public affairs firm of Alcalde & Fay, and then for the American Waterways Operators, the trade association representing the United States tug, towboat, and barge industry. In 1996, Congress was hearing completion of the Ocean Shipping Reform Act of 1998 (OSRA). As I described it at the time, OSRA truly was a paradigm shift in the conduct of the ocean liner business and its regulations by the Federal Maritime Commission (FMC). Along with other members of the Commerce Committee who worked for over four years on OSRA, I wanted to ensure that there were Commissioners at the FMC who understood that Congress wanted to foster a more competitive and efficient ocean transport system by placing greater reliance on the marketplace. I thought of John and his interest and experience in maritime matters. John’s experience and philosophy made him the right choice to help the FMC implement OSRA.

Confirmed by the Senate in October, 1998, John’s efforts during the past three and a half years, especially his contributions during the FMC’s rule-making, helped establish the foundation making the paradigm shift possible. John worked closely with Chairman Harold Creel and the other commissioners, the staff of the FMC, the carriers, shippers, and transportation intermediaries to implement OSRA as Congress intended. I am pleased to report that, under the Commission’s administration, the reforms are working as Congress hoped. I should be proud of his work and the contribution he made during his tenure as a Commissioner.

I congratulate John for his exemplary career at the FMC and salute his contributions to the maritime industry. He is to be commended for the productive use of his insights and talents and appreciated for his years of public service. As he returns to private life, where he will continue working on the maritime issues he loves, I wish John, his wife Medina, and their two children fair winds and following seas.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following letter be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REQUEST FOR SEQUENTIAL REFERRAL—S. 2506

U.S. Senate
Committee on Armed Services, Washington, DC, May 13, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR DASCHLE: Pursuant to section 3(b) of S. Res. 400 of the 94th Congress, we request that S. 2506, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003, be referred to the Committee on Armed Services for a period not to exceed thirty days.

Best wishes,

Sincerely,

JOHN WARNER, Banking Member.

Chairman.
Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred in June 2000 in Rapid City, SD. Police were “baffled” by the lastest in a series of eight inexplicable drowning deaths among mostly Native Americans along Rapid Creek. Press reports indicate that local Native Americans believe an “Indian-hater” is waiting for the victims to become drunk and then dragging, rolling, or pushing them into the water. Those incidents came on the heels of a March 2000 report from the U.S. Civil Rights Commission showing that racial tensions in the state are high.

I believe that government’s first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancements Act that passed this year does that. It will make it easier to bring to justice those who make hate crimes.

As might be expected of a building of this vintage and in this location it is steeped in history. Among other things, it has been the office for 16 Secretaries of the Navy, 21 Secretaries of State, 25 Secretaries of War, and 72 Secretaries of the Treasury. Seven future presidents had offices in the building before they eventually became occupants of the Oval Office—including, of course, Dwight D. Eisenhower.

This building’s commanding presence in our Nation’s capital serves to remind us of the commanding presence that President Eisenhower always had. He personified honor, dignity and integrity. The many medals that decorated his Army uniform signify that he was a great soldier, a strategy, a builder of alliances and a peace-maker.

As General Eisenhower and as President Eisenhower, he launched his country to freedom—from the vast arena of world war to the classrooms of a local public high school in Little Rock, Arkansas. He was—and is—a genuine American hero and statesman.

Ladies and gentlemen, it is fitting that we dedicate this magnificent building in honor of President Dwight D. Eisenhower. The Eisenhower Executive Office Building stands as a symbol of freedom, one of freedom’s greatest warriors and a great champion of peace.

Today, under the leadership of President George W. Bush, we are embarked on another righteous cause, and we remember the example of Eisenhower. We know, as he often told us, that the great fight for freedom did not end at the beaches named Omaha and Utah. It continues today. It continues within the walls of this building that we dedicated to him.

And for those who labor for freedom, let them find inspiration in this building’s namesake, a man of responsibility and vision, one of freedom’s greatest warriors and a great champion of peace.

That inspiration is the realization that doing great things requires more than detailed plans—though detailed plans there must be—it requires a great cause and great leaders. And that is why it is so important in this world and the next. No one knew that better than Dwight Eisenhower.

There is a story that Eisenhower once went to buy a piece of land in Gettysburg and the local clerk said to him, “Well, President Eisenhower, you’ve done everything, you’ve lived everywhere, why would you want this little piece of land? You could afford anything in the world.”

President Bush said, “I’ve always loved my country. I’ve always loved my grandparents. I’ve always loved my grandchildren. I’ve always loved my country.”

Now it is my privilege to introduce an officer who loves deeply “Greater Generation,” which sacrificed so much to preserve peace and freedom for our generation and generations to come.

I would like to introduce the Acting Secretary of Defense, Paul Wolfowitz. President Bush; Secretary of State Colin Powell; [GSA] Administrator Perry; Susan Eisenhower and members of the Eisenhower family; distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen.

It is an honor to be able to join you today in paying tribute to Dwight David Eisenhower—a man whose courage, dignity and character exemplified the spirit of that great leader known as “Ike” line the walls of this building. today—another soldier, statesman and leader—our Secretary of State, Colin Powell.

REMARKS BY SUSAN EISENHOWER, PRESIDENT, EISENHOWER INSTITUTE

Mr. President and First Lady, Secretary Powell, General Powell and Ms. Wolfowitz. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Secretary, guests—on both sides of the aisle—with whom he worked closely during his presidency. He would acknowledge not only his fellow public servants on both sides of the aisle—but he would also recognize those who served with him in the Nixon administration.

June 25, 1974, Mr. Nixon and I were just leaving Watergate. I was nervous about the weather this morning and when I looked out the window I was reminded of a similar day not long after my great grandfather left the White House. He agreed to speak at Penn State for his kind words.

I also want to welcome General Andrew Goodpaster, Senator Bob Dole, and all the other veterans of World War II. We're pleased to have you here. It's a pleasure to welcome back former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. I want to thank members of the Eisenhower family, and send our good wishes to John Eisenhower, Congressman Amo Houghton, Jerry Moran, Jim Ryun, Congressman Steven Horn.

And I, too, want to say how much we appreciate the work of Senator Jim Inouye, Congressman Democrat Mo Udall, Congressman Joe Baca, who introduced the legislation necessary to rename this bill—this building in honor of Dwight Eisenhower.

And above all, we welcome the Eisenhower family, and send our good wishes to John Eisenhower, who could not be with us today. You know how proud John must feel, knowing that our country's respect for his father has only increased with the years.

The city of Washington is accustomed to change. But this neighborhood looks much as it did in 1929. If you'd walked down Pennsylvania Avenue 73 years ago, you would have seen the Renwick Building on the corner of 17th Street, looking just as it does now. A few doors down were the Blair and Lee Houses, with gas lamps still out front.

June 12, 1945, a little more than one month after the end of the hostilities, Dwight Eisenhower stood on the balcony of London's Guildhall and accepted the freedom of the city and the London Sword. The killing had stopped, but the cost of the conflict had only begun to be measured.

Europe lay in utter ruins. Cities had been crushed, economies had collapsed and the carnage was beyond our comprehension. In the European Theater of Operations, 11 million Allied soldiers were killed in action and more than 7 million Allied civilians perished from starvation, bombing or butchery, and the wounds of those who were victims of the Holocaust.

Eisenhower had led a great military crusade to defeat Nazism and had decisively prevailed. Standing before the teeming London crowd that day Eisenhower began his acceptance speech solemnly, without a written text:

"The high sense of distinction I feel in receiving this great honor from the city of London is inescapably mingled with feelings of profound sadness," he said. "... History must always be the portion of any man who receives acclaim earned in blood of his followers and sacrifices of his friends.

In this I wish I had written him- self and memorized for the occasion—he accepted the tribute, acknowledging that he was but a symbol of great human forces that had "... labored arduously and successfully for a righteous cause."

He continued: "If all Allied men and women that have served with me in this war can only know that it is they whom our courtly body is really honoring today, then indeed I will be content."

In thinking about that occasion, I can imagine how proud John must feel, knowing that our country's respect for his father has only increased with the years. We've solved it once and for all. This building now uses by Vice president Dick Cheney. Two doors down is an office that Theodore Roosevelt would still recognize as his own time as Assistant Secretary of the Navy. So would Franklin Roosevelt, who, a generation later, occupied the same office and walked these very same halls. And in 1961, President John F. Kennedy, President of the United States, George W. Bush.

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, GEORGE W. BUSH

Thank you very much. Please be seated. Well, thank you all very much. And thank you, Susan, for those kind words, and welcome.

On behalf of all Americans, I am proud to dedicate this historic building to the lasting memory of a great man, Dwight David Eisenhower.

I want to thank Secretary Powell and Deputy Secretary Wolfowitz, Administrator Perry, General Hicks, for their kind words. I'm also pleased to have so many special guests who are here. I don't see—I see Senator Stevens. I'm so honored that Senator Stevens, who so many worked in the Eisenhower administration, is here. And I want to welcome all the others who worked in this—in the Eisenhower administration to this dedication ceremony.

I also want to welcome General Andrew Goodpaster, Senator Bob Dole, and all the other veterans of World War II. We're pleased to have you here. It's a pleasure to welcome back former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. I want to thank members of the Eisenhower family, and send our good wishes to John Eisenhower, Congressman Amo Houghton, Jerry Moran, Jim Ryun, Congressman Steven Horn.

Though different in nature from World War II, nonetheless, we recognize the enormity of the task that confronts you in finding a just solution to the complex domestic and international circumstances that have emerged in the aftermath of the terrible events of September 11.

If Dwight Eisenhower were here he would be right about the indispensable role played by the millions who answered their nation's call in war and peace. But Eisenhower is not here today, and so while we acknowledge those who served with him we focus, today, on this modest man and remember him—for his leadership, and for his steady, even, hand.

Though he did not believe in the Great Man theory of history he was a leader of leaders; a common man with an unwavering belief in putting the nation's welfare above partisan politics... in seeking out the obli-gations and responsibilities that go with good government... It is a privilege for me to speak on behalf of the Senate formally in thanking the nation for this honor. We were adjourned to Congress—to the late Senator Chafee and his bipartisan co-sponsors who initiated the legislation to rename the building—to President Clinton for signing it into law, and to President Bush—for this wonderful rededication and for his presence here today.

Mr. President, after all, are facing a difficult moment in American history. Though different in nature from World War II, nonetheless, we recognize the enormity of the task that confronts you in finding a just solution to the complex domestic and international circumstances that have emerged in the aftermath of the terrible events of September 11.

As you face these challenges, it gives me great pleasure to know that you have Dwight Eisenhower right next door. If I hope that this vital nerve center of White House operations will help another generation of public servants re-committed themselves less than sacrifice, devotion to duty and the most profound sense of humility. These are the qualities that are called for in these dangerous and troubling times.

And now, it is my great honor to introduce the President of the United States, George W. Bush.
(Laughter.) His name fits this building because, as a great soldier, a great President, and a good man, Dwight D. Eisenhower served his country with distinction. People who will always associate Dwight Eisenhower with a time of strength and a time of stability in America. We think of the service to America that our present location. Twenty-five Secretaries of State had their offices here. We have a historical difference between Mr. Perry and I as Secretary of State, was the first. Secretary Fish helped create the professional diplomatic corps. And the last Secretary of State was the legendary George Catlett Marshall, for whom the plan for Europe’s recovery is named. Mr. Marshall served in this building as Chief of Staff of the United States Army.

Dwight Eisenhower was so impressed by Eisenhower’s skills as a strategist and statesman that he selflessly agreed with President Roosevelt that Eisenhower should lead the Allied invasion of Europe. Fighting Nazi Germany was only a part of General Eisenhower’s job as Supreme Commander. Eisenhower was a brilliant forger of alliances. He was master at using diplomatic, political and economic tools to win the war, and also to win the peace.

He once wrote to his devoted and loving wife that to really mean that he had to be a bit of a diplomatic, a lawyer, a salesman, a socialite, and incidentally a soldier. His words rang true for me during the Cold War, and they ring true for us who are today involved in sustaining, under President Bush’s leadership, the global coalition against terrorism.

President Eisenhower’s name on this building will inspire all who serve under its massive roof now, and all those who will follow. Despite his well known modesty, I think it was Dwight Eisenhower who said this fine old edifice, which has seen so much history, has been named in his honor.

Dwight Eisenhower is to have a sense of history and a sense of duty to your country and to our world.

It is with great pleasure, then, that I introduce our next guest speaker, a person who was a Supreme Commander, but not just because of who she is as a granddaughter, but also because of what she contributed to our country and the world. Susan Eisenhower not only has her grandfather’s winning smile, but his extraordinary gift of insight, that remarkable ability to see what others do not.

We understand more quickly than most just how much the world changed with the end of the Soviet Union and the emergence of Russia and the other Newly Independent States. With her characteristic energy and drive, she has repeatedly pulled together the best experts from around the globe to open our eyes to what is happening in that vast region, and to think about it in fresh, exciting, new ways.

And Susan has not been content just to describe change. She has, been a force for change. Among her many activities, one that means a great deal to me is to help bring new generations of Russian leaders here on exchange programs to learn from us and we can learn from them.

The understanding and friendships that come out of these exchanges are laying the foundation for a new, more positive, official US-Russian relationship. Susan is helping build a powerful legacy that Dwight...
Eisenhower would recognize, appreciate and welcome. So ladies and gentlemen, it is now my honor and privilege to present to you a friend of a person of enormous gifts and endless dedication, Susan Eisenhower.●

THE HONORABLE ALVIN BROOKS, KANSAS CITY, MO, MAYOR PRO TEM AND CITY COUNCILMAN AT-LARGE, 6TH DISTRICT

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to honor and recognize an outstanding gentleman, Mr. Alvin Brooks, on his 70th birthday. Mr. Brooks, Kansas City, MO, Mayor Pro Tem and 6th District at-large City Councilman, is truly extraordinary. His fifty years of tireless commitment to public service in Kansas City, devotion to community activism, civic participation, and youth advocacy are an inspiration to us all.

Mr. Brooks was elected to serve as the 6th District at-large Councilman in 1999. After his election, Mayor Kay Barnes appointed Brooks as Mayor Pro Tem. In addition to serving as Mayor Pro Tem, he is vice chair of the Legislative Ethics Committee, a member of the Finance and Audit Committee, and chair of the Public Facilities and Safety Committee.

In 1991, Brooks was selected as President of the Ad Hoc Group Against Crime, a grassroots community organization he founded in 1977. Former President George Bush honored Brooks in November 1989 for his work with the Ad Hoc Group Against Crime and named him one of America’s 1,000 Points of Light. President Bush also appointed him to a three-year term on the President’s National Drug Advisory Council. Former Drug Czar William Bennett recognized Brooks as being one of the nation’s “front-line soldiers in our war on drugs.”

Prior to serving as President of the Ad Hoc Group Against Crime, Alvin Brooks already had a distinguished career in public service. He was a Kansas City, MO police officer for 10 years, where he held the rank of detective. During that time, Alvin worked extensively with runaways and gang members, demonstrating his commitment to improving social conditions for young people, especially inner-city youth. He also served as assistant city manager for seven years and was the first African American to serve as a department head for the city of Kansas City, MO.

Though it is possible to list Alvin Brooks’ professional accomplishments, it is impossible to measure the immense impact this man has had, and continues to have, in Kansas City. He has touched and improved the lives of countless Kansas Citians. His voice can still be heard on the radio urging community action, not as Mayor Pro Tem, but as an active community member whose commitment to others is unquestioned. He is truly the voice of moral authority in Kansas City.

I commend Mr. Alvin Brooks for his selfless dedication to the improvement of Kansas City and wish him all the best on his 70th Birthday. Kansas City is certainly fortunate to have such a dedicated public servant. On behalf of all those you have served, Alvin, I thank you.●

COMMEMORATING THE CHERRY BLOSSOM TEN MILE RUN

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the running of the Credit Union Cherry Blossom Ten Mile Run on April 7, 2002. Fifty-eight credit unions, credit union associations, and credit union leagues sponsored this Washington, DC institution, which coincides with the annual spring rites of the tidal basin cherry blossoms. This is the first year that Credit Unions have sponsored the race.

I want to commend the over 7,032 finishers, and especially the over 3,500 registered runners who were member of credit unions. A special congratulations to Public Health Service Federal Credit Union for winning the credit union team competition. Additionally, I am proud of 350 plus credit union employees who ran in the chilly, pre-dawn hours to serve as volunteers helping administer the race. It was also great to see Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson participate.

The Cherry Blossom Run has taken place during the spring blooming of Washington’s historic cherry trees for 30 years. Starting out as a small family event with 141 finishers it is now a world-class event that includes some of the world’s foremost long distance runners. I want to congratulate this year’s winners: Men’s, Rueben Cheruiyot, 47:12; Women’s, Luminita Talpos, 52:50.

This year, in conjunction with the race, credit unions raised over $60,000 for the Children’s Miracle Network and donations are still being collected. This was a great event and credit unions should be proud of the role they played. Washingtonians and runners around the world are looking forward to the 2003 Credit Union Cherry Blossom 10 Mile Run.

DEVELOPING NEW MEDICINES

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to call the attention of my colleagues in the Senate to an article that appeared in the Wall Street Journal on May 2 which provides an important perspective on the challenging and vital process of developing new medicines. It is no coincidence that the article features Pfizer Inc., a world leader in pharmaceuticals and a company that made its home in my home State of Connecticut. Pfizer’s contribution to changing the quality of health care by developing new therapies for conditions such as cancer, arthritis, high blood pressure and more has been invaluable. This sort of innovation has increased the quality of care we deliver as well as changed the nature of it, with new medicines resulting in fewer trips to hospitals, doctor’s offices, and better overall care for so many patients.

The article details the company’s efforts, ultimately unsuccessful, to discover and test a new medicine to strengthen muscles, and thereby helping to prevent injury and possibly osteoporosis in the elderly. In the process, Pfizer committed a team of scientists, $71 million, and 10 years of effort, and this was before the development process even progressed to advanced clinical trials, underscoring the tremendous investment required in developing each new therapy. Despite this infusion of resources and time, the project ultimately failed to produce the desired therapy. But the accounting of this process in an excellent example of the risks, costs and efforts involved in innovation.

We must continue to recognize and support these research and development efforts because we know the value they can provide in this Congress, and we must, to expand coverage and increase access to new medicines, we should strive to craft policy that continues to encourage the development of innovative products that can change and even save lives while helping to ensure that all our citizens benefit from such innovation.

I ask that this article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows.

Drug Prices—Why They Keep Soaring—Bleeding Cash: Pfizer ‘Youth Pill’...

The Wall Street Journal via Dow Jones

About a sixth of Pfizer’s portfolio of drugs in development were approved by Dr. Clark and his colleagues, including the frailty drugs, which got the green light in December 1995. He was confident the frailty compound would succeed, ranking it among the top third of candidates at the time.

But even among the fortunate drugs that pass muster initially with Dr. Clark’s committee, the odds remain stacked against them. Making it to market, Clark’s group also guides the researchers, funds interim studies and establishes milestones for judgment. And at any point Dr. Clark’s committee can kill the very projects it has approved. Last year, the committee terminated research on five of seven promising medicines it had previously “canned.”

The growth-hormone project quickly surprised all the researchers’ expectations. From the time the project was canned, it took only nine months to develop a drug that was safe enough to test in humans—a speed record for the research center in Groton, Conn., across the river from administrative headquarters in New London. The drug “had no bumps or warts,” marveled Gordon Gruszczynski, project manager for the frailty drug.

Though increasingly optimistic, Pfizer scientists and managers were sober about the challenges the potential new medicine faced—especially the elusive nature of the condition it was intended to treat. Frailty, which they came to define as an “age-related decline in physical performance,” wasn’t a recognized disease, like osteoporosis or Alzheimer’s.
A drug to treat the chronic condition, like many the industry is now tackling, would require lengthy and especially expensive clinical studies because its effects might be subtle and not be obvious for years to understand. To make sure that an experimental drug serves such a sizable investment, Pfizer blends marketing with R&D early on. A marketing team with each product line is designed to ascertain commercial merit. In particular, will the drug meet a compelling unmet medical need and will Pfizer be able to differentiate its medicines from those of its competitors?

For the frailty drug, researchers believed they would have to show that it could do more than enhance hormone levels or increase muscle growth. Early talks with the Food and Drug Administration confirmed the higher standard. Insurers, too, would need evidence that the frailty drug would be worth their expense.

To persuade regulators and insurers to embrace the drug, the Pfizer team aimed to prove beyond a doubt that elderly people who took it could walk faster and longer and avoid the kinds of falls that force many of them into nursing homes.

Such a drug also could appeal to a younger, healthier but worried market, people who might use the medicine as a lifestyle enhancer, perhaps as a way to stave off the ravages of old age, unlike an antibiotic taken for a week, could provide a longer-term revenue stream: "People will take it for 20 or 30 years—"it'll be like a vitamin," predicted John LaMattina, a senior research executive, early last year.

In late 1996, the frailty drug hit its first setback when an otherwise healthy man participating in a small safety study in the Netherlands developed a mysterious, mild rash. The trial was halted while the team investigated. The cause was never found, though the leading theory remains that he had a reaction to laundry detergent or hand soap. After a few months, the team concluded that the drug was safe enough to continue.

Pfizer recognized the growth-hormone workers as the best research team of 1996 for their trail-blazing accomplishments. And they continued on the fast track, initiating a six-month trial of the drug to Dr. Clark and her management committee agreed to fund the study in about 350 patients, much larger than usual for such an early stage. To hedge their bets and ensure that the project was on track, the study included interim analyses at six and 12 months.

Last summer, three senior managers connected to the project, including a statistician, were chosen to review the data after six months. As outsiders, they were expected to be unbiased, and they would share their findings with the few senior managers.

In less than a week, they had reached their conclusion and called Dr. Clark. He decided to break the secrecy and inform the research team of the news.

The patients taking the frailty drug had gained some muscle mass—but less than 3% more than the placebo group, which had also experienced muscle increases. There were no safety problems with the drug. But the study was stopped within a month because the drug appeared ineffective.

Nobody is quite sure why. One theory is that the patients selected for the study may have been too healthy, so there was less room for improvement in the treated group. Another theory is that the pituitary gland to release growth hormone in a way that was out of tune with the body's system for using it.

In the end, Dr. Clark's committee "took pity on us," Dr. Landshulz says, and allowed the team one last chance to salvage the medication. They were permitted to collect and analyze data on that group of early patients in the study who had taken the drug for a year—just in case its effectiveness emerged later than six months.

That was a long shot, everyone agreed, but worth the modest incremental expense. The final analysis was completed this spring, and the results were the same.

Later this month, Dr. Clark's committee will review the file one last time and officially lay to rest the frailty drug, which Pfizer says cost the company $71 million to research and develop.

THE CLOCK IS TICKING

APPROPRIATION FOR THE SONG, “WE UNITE,” BY MS. BECKY COLE

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to share with my colleagues in the Senate and the American people the song, “We Unite,” by Becky Cole. The strength and patriotism of Americans following the September 11 attacks inspired her to write and record this song. It captures our citizens’ love for their country, its ideals, and its liberties. For me, this song is a reminder of those who are working to rebuild the buildings that were destroyed and reverse the economic consequences of that terrible day. It reminds me of the victims and their families’ courage to carry on and live. This song also reminds me of our service men and women around the world who are defending our Nation.

I ask to print in the Record the lyrics to Ms. Cole’s song.

The material follows:

A NATIONAL ANTHEM “WE UNITE” (Words and Music by Becky Cole)

> From the depths of the graves we come now Yielding our lives to an unselfish love.
> To expose that which is evil, to remove that which is dark.
> To lift up our flag as others burn and tear it apart.
> We will fight for justice, We will risk our lives for love, We’ll rebuild America, with hope we’ll stand as one.
> To the mighty God above us, we salute and pray.
> As one nation under God, we unite our lives today.
> Though the winds and the waves have swept across our land, Causing us to question the beliefs on which we stand.
> But now, we’re a new nation, under the red, white and blue.
> A flag that stands for freedom and waves for me and you.

TEACHER MAURICE LARUE RETIRES FROM STURGIS HIGH SCHOOL

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize and honor Maurice (Maury) LaRue on the occasion of his retirement as a teacher in the Meade County School District in South Dakota.

By the end of May, Maury LaRue will have completed 33 years in the teaching profession at Sturgis High School. Upon graduation with a bachelor of science degree in education from the University of North Dakota, LaRue accepted a position as teacher and debate coach at Sturgis in 1969.

His teaching career has ranged from social studies and literature to voca-several years and is retiring as the director of the social studies department at Brown High School in Sturgis. He has served as a city council member for the City of Sturgis and has maintained a strong interest in community affairs and city, county, and state government. He has served on several committees, and is a member of the Fort Meade Museum Board, the Sturgis Area Arts Council and is very active as an elder, choir member and leader with the Presbyterian Church. For the past dozen years, he has also owned and operated a successful photographic studio and gallery in Sturgis and most recently, he has become a volunteer fireman and earned the credentials as an information officer. If there were any time left in the day, he would find time to fill it and provide counsel to his students or provide service to his community.

I have met Maury several times during my visits to Sturgis High School and the community of Sturgis. He definitely a mover and shaker in the community of Sturgis and is very well-respected by both current students and alumni for his skills and abilities as an instructor and for the way he has shaped the lives and futures of those he has tutored over three decades. He is very focused and knowledgeable of local, state and federal politics and issues.

On the occasion of his retirement as a public school educator, I want to congratulate Maurice LaRue for his tireless dedication to his students, his commitment to finding the best in his students and for helping his students to ‘communicate’ with the world. I also want to commend him for his valuable service to his community over the years. Instead of hiding behind a textbook or staying at the chalkboard, Maurice LaRue has provided his many students over the years with his own example of being active in school and community. He has motivated the lives of many students and many of them would point to Maury as playing a pivotal role in their lives. Can there be any better reward for 33 years of dedicated teaching and community service?

I wish Maurice LaRue the best on his retirement.

IN HONOR OF ENTERTAINER AND COMMUNITY LEADER PAT BOONE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, the name Pat Boone rings synonymous with musical success. Pat has registered 60 songs on the musical charts with eighteen reaching the Top Ten and six reaching Number One. His recording career has spanned more than three decades—from the 1950s to the 1990s—and compilation albums are reaching a new generation of fans in the 21st century. Indeed, few entertainers can claim a more sustained career of success than Pat Boone.

Pat’s success has even extended beyond music. He starred in fifteen films for 20th Century Fox. He hosted two weekly television shows—the Pat Boone Chevy Showroom and the Pat Boone Show. He has been a constant presence on radio both as a musician and as a show host. He has also found time to write several books about teenage life and, more recently, religion. He was also named the NCAA’s Man of the Year.

Pat donated all proceeds from his first book—Twixt Twelve and Twenty—to the Northeastern Institute of Christian Education. This was a sign of good things to come. Throughout his career, Pat Boone has generously given his support to countless charitable organizations. Perhaps most notably, he has served as spokesman, national chairman, and host of the Easter Seal Society Telethon for almost two decades.

Though Pat has attained worldwide fame, he has never forgotten his Tennessee roots. This is especially true for his charity work on behalf of Bethel Bible Village. For the last 25 years, Pat has been the celebrity host of the Bethel Bible Village Spectacular Golf Tournament. He has helped raise more than $1.3 billion for Bethel and bring it national recognition as a premier facility for the care of troubled and at-risk children.

Pat Boone is one of the most successful entertainers of our time; he’s also one of the most caring and compassionate community leaders in America today. Pat has always put community first—whether it’s the close-knit community of his family or the broader community of charitable organizations. I offer this statement to Pat Boone in recognition of a career of success and gratitude for a life of giving.

RECOGNIZING ASIAN PACIFIC AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I rise today in honor of Asian Pacific American Heritage Month. In recent years, Americans have experienced an energizing infusion of Asian-based culture, which resonates in diverse folkways, cuisine, art forms, and religious beliefs and practices. In all these areas, I believe Minnesota is especially privileged, thanks to Asian American citizens who present a unique, vigorous dimension, both established and emerging. Therefore, I would like to highlight the ways that Asian Pacific Americans in particular have enriched our state.

We who make Minnesota our home truly comprise an international community. The Asian Pacific American presence in my state dates from the late nineteenth century, when Chinese, Japanese, and Filipino settlers first arrived. Throughout the last century, many more groups, such as the Koreans, Asian Indians, Tibetans, Hmong, Vietnamese, and Cambodians, have augmented Minnesota’s Asian Pacific community. This growth is ongoing, and I am pleased to say that in my state, the Asian Pacific American population increased over 100 percent in the last decade. Furthermore, the City of Saint Paul is distinguished by the largest Hmong population in the nation.

The Asian Pacific population has significantly contributed to the economic, social, and political fabric of Minnesota. In the Twin Cities of Saint Paul and Minneapolis, Asian entrepreneurs have succeeded in re-establishing key business districts in areas once dormant, leading to the revitalization of entire neighborhoods. These Americans have further invested in Minnesota through unprecedented rates of home ownership. In greater Minnesota, Asian Pacific Americans are also being welcomed. For example, Warroad, Minnesota, always a notable breeding ground for great hockey players, is now also home to a small but vital Asian population.

I am very proud to say that Minnesota has elected our nation’s first Hmong legislator, State Senator Mee Moua.

The State Council on Asian-Pacific Minnesotans has chosen five individuals who represent the especially worthy contributions, and I would like to acknowledge these remarkable award winners.

Joseph Hui, who has resided in Minnesota for 30 years, has built a successful business career, but more importantly, he has given back generously through community service and philanthropy. He was one of the founders of the Asian Pacific Endowment for Community Development, a fund directed and operated by Asian Americans. The fund encourages different Asian Pacific communities to work together in providing social, health, educational, economic, and cultural services. Thus far, the fund has given approximately $30,000 in grant money to more than 60 organizations.

Rita Mitra Mustaphi, a renowned choreographer, dancer, and educator, introduced the classical Indian dance form, Kathak, to Minnesota. She uses this 2000-year-old form of storytelling, essentially dance-poems, to explore bold, contemporary themes. She is the founder and Artistic Director of the Kathak Dance Theatre, which is the only professional dance theater of its kind in the Midwest. The theater received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts to create and perform a new dance theatre piece.

Another artistic innovator, Rick Shiomi, is a leading Asian American artist. He is the founder of Mu Daiko, a taiko drumming troop, and the Artistic Director of Theater Mu, a group primarily cultivating new Minnesota playwrights and Asian American actors. Blending ancient artistic forms, traditions, and stories with contemporary themes, Theater Mu dedicated to the ideal of theater as a total sensory experience. Their unique work reaches new audiences through Theater.
Mu's annual festival and outreach performances at schools, corporate sites, and community organizations.

The radio station KFAI, Fresh Air Radio, serving the Twin Cities since 1973, provides training opportunities in broadcasting to those who might lack the resources for formal training. Many of the station's volunteer programmers have recently arrived in the United States and, therefore, have the opportunity to broadcast in their native language to the immigrant listeners not often served by traditional media, KFAI includes in its programming broadcasts which cater to the Indian, Khmer, Hmong, Vietnamese, and Filipino communities.

Finally, I would like to make special mention of a courageous woman, Darina Siv. Until her death in March at the early age of 44, Ms. Siv was dedicated to helping low-income Cambodians, whom she served first as a social worker, then as executive director of the United Cambodian Association of Minnesota. Her book, Never Come Back: A Cambodian Woman's Journey, described her personal hardships after the Khmer Rouge took control in her native Cambodia. In America, she became a tireless advocate and was instrumental in securing state legislation that helps foreign-born social workers overcome license barriers.

During Asian Pacific American month, I am happy to recognize the many ways—exciting, dynamic, complex, and subtle in which Asian Pacific Americans are making Minnesota a better, stronger, and richer place to live and work. It is important today and throughout the year, to celebrate these contributions.

TRIBUTE TO MR. KENNETH OTAGAKI AND HIS FAMILY

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am deeply honored to rise in tribute to Ken Otagaki, who is a very dear friend of mine. He is a patriot in the fullest sense of the word. His life and his service to our Nation and his service to our Nation should make all of us very proud to call him a fellow American. His story should inspire you. I ask to print in the Record an article about him and his family printed in the April 28, 2002, edition of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin in Hawaii.

The article follows.

LOVING PERSISTENCE PAYS OFF FOR OTAGAKI

(BY TREENA SHAPIRO)

Members of the Otagaki family say that their patriarch has never let obstacles defeat him.

And as his children note, Kenneth Otagaki has fought long battles of energy for someone who could have just sat around and said, "I can't do this, I can't do that,"" said his daughter, Joy Miyashiro, 55.

Growing up, the Otagaki children never wanted for anything, but had a lot to live up to.

Ken Otagaki took control of his life at the age of 12, his son Robin Otagaki said. He was the second son of a Big Island field laborer and his picture bride wife. Because Japanese tradition at the time dictated that the first-born son inherit everything, Ken ran away to Honolulu at age 12 and worked as a houseboy, then put himself through college.

At the University of Hawaii in 1936, Ken met Janet, his bride-to-be. He was majoring in agriculture, she was majoring in home economics.

When Ken first asked Janet on a date, she tried to fix him up with a friend instead. "And the next time he asked me, I gave him the brush off because I'm not interested in him since I had a boyfriend," Janet said.

Eventually she consented to a date, "but I wasn't very much interested." But Ken was more fun that her boyfriend, and more persistent, she said. "I tried to brush him off, but he just wouldn't. This is what he said: 'If I see a good one, why should I stop? I'm going to keep chasing you.' " she remembered.

After the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, Ken enlisted and joined the famed 100th Infantry Division. He proposed to Janet before being sent overseas and they decided to wait until he returned to get married.

Ken became a litter bearer, once helping an injured Spotis Matsumaga down from the mountains.

In January 1944, near the hills of Cassino, Italy, Ken and six other litter bearers were called upon to help soldiers in front of them. It was about 10 p.m. and snowing, Ken recalled.

"The Germans saw us coming, I suppose, so they threw a barrage of mortar shells. Unfortunately, one landed about three feet away from where we were, back up against a big rock," he said.

Of the eight American soldiers in the group, one escaped injury. Three were killed and four, including Ken, were wounded seriously.

It was 20 hours before Ken was evacuated. The battle cost him his right leg, two fingers on his right hand and the sight in his right eye.

He wrote to Janet, telling her about his injuries and absolving her of her commitment to marry him. However, "She figured that he wasn't going to sit around and feel sorry for himself," Joy said. They were married later that year.

Robin said Ken's injuries interfered with his plans to become a medical doctor, then he was told he could not practice veterinary medicine, either. He ended up using his G.I. Bill to attend graduate school in Iowa and California, earning a doctorate in animal science.

Joy, who was born in Iowa, said her father's career took the family to Berkely and Davis, Calif., while her mother stayed home and raised five children that all came within one or two years.

When Joy was 8, the family moved back to Hawaii, where her father taught at the University of Hawaii and later led the state Department of Agriculture during the Burns administration.

Joy said her father was always a good example for the family. "Even though he was physically challenged, he taught us how to ride bicycles, he taught us how to swim. If there was ripe mango up on the tree he would go up and get it," she said, adding that he kept his tree-climbing a secret from her mother.

"My mom really never worked, she did some substitute teaching, but she never really had to go out (and work)," Miyashiro said.

"She always had Sunday dinners cooked for us, she sewed, she entertained, she was den mother, brownie leader."

She was also the family peacekeeper, according to Robin.

"My mother always had to be the one who was the mediator. She had to buffer the father from the children and the children from the father," he said.

His father had high expectations of his children, particularly in school, he said.

But Robin, who now teaches secondary science at Punahou, said the children were never academically inclined. In fact, he graduated last in his class from the University Lab School.

He and his late brother were the only Otagaki children who finished college.

These days, however, Robin, 52, and his wife live in the Manoa home he was raised in, while Ken and Janet live in a cottage on the same property and they all get on "tremendously," Robin said, describing how he and his father putter around the garden together.

"Little by little we meet in the middle," he said. "He has seen what I have become, and I realize where he has come from."

"My mother always noted how their father dotes on his eight grandchildren. Ken said the key to raising his family has been respect: "Like any family, all-in-all, it requires a lot of understanding, a lot of give and take."

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. REED, and Mr. BINGAMAN); S. 2508. A bill to preserve the effectiveness of medically important antibiotics by restricting their use as additives to animal feed; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I join my distinguished colleagues, Senator JACK REED and Senator JEFF BINGAMAN, in introducing "The Preservation of Antibiotics for Human Treatment Act of 2002." This important legislation will help safeguard the nation’s security by preserving the effectiveness of antibiotics.

We rely on antibiotics to protect our health from deadly infections and to help safeguard the nation’s security from the threat of bioterrorism. Yet we are squandering the effectiveness of these precious medications by using them indiscriminately as additives to animal feed.

Study after study has shown that the practice of using antibiotics to promote growth and fatten livestock erodes the effectiveness of these important pharmaceuticals. Mounting scientific evidence shows that this non-therapeutic use of antibiotics in agricultural animals can lead to development of antibiotic-resistant bacteria that can be transferred to people, making it harder to treat dangerous infections.

In July 1998, the National Academy of Sciences, in a report prepared at the request of the United States Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration, concluded "there is a link between the use of antibiotics in food animals, the development of bacterial resistance to these drugs, and human disease." In 1997 and again in 2000, the World Health Organization recommended that antibiotics used to treat humans should not also be used to promote animal growth. Nonetheless, the legislation recognizes that there may be economic costs to farmers in making the transition to antibiotics-free farming practices. For this reason, the Act provides for Federal payments to farmers to defray their costs in making the transition to antibiotic-free farming practices. For this reason, the Act provides for Federal payments to farmers to defray their costs in making the transition to antibiotics-free farming practices.

In October 2000, FDA found that one class of antibiotics posed such a grave danger to the public health that they issued an order to withdraw these drugs from the market. Yet, over 18 months later, tons of these drugs are still being used, because their manufacturer has refused to comply with FDA’s order. The Act takes immediate action to implement the decision of FDA to withdraw these drugs from our food supply.

The National Academy of Sciences has found that eliminating the use of antibiotics as feed additives would cost each American consumer not more than $5 to $10 per year. Nonetheless, the legislation recognizes that there may be economic costs to farmers in making the transition to antibiotics-free farming practices. For this reason, the Act provides for Federal payments to farmers to defray their costs in switching to antibiotic-free husbandry practices, with a preference given to family farms.

Antibiotics are one of the crown jewels of modern medicine. If we squander their effectiveness, the health of millions of Americans will be put at risk. The most vulnerable among us, children, the elderly, persons with HIV/AIDS, are particularly endangered by resistant infections. I urge my colleagues to support this needed legislation to protect the health of all Americans and preserve the effectiveness of antibiotics.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support and an analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY, Chairman, Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions, Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

On behalf of the 50,000 members of the American Public Health Association, I am writing to express our strongest support for the Preservation of Antibiotics for Human Treatment Act of 2002. The Act proposes to withdraw certain antibiotics used in healthy food animals to enhance their growth, as well as a class of antibiotics related to the anthrax drug Cipro and used in poultry. These withdrawals will help prevent transmission of antibiotic-resistant bacteria in food.

It is common to add antibiotics to the feed of cattle, pigs, and poultry to speed their growth, but it also results in a development of antibiotic-resistant bacteria on farms, that can then contaminate the meat and cause food-borne illnesses for which treatment options are then limited. The evidence of harm to public health resulting from this practice has only grown. It is time for Congress to make the health of consumers a priority and put an end to this practice.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, there are 1.4 million cases of Salmonella infection in the U.S. each year. Most of these infections are acquired from food, and many of them are resistant to five or more antibiotics. The Salmonella found in commercial meat and poultry products has already become resistant to a number of the most commonly used antibiotics. Your bill would phase out each of these drugs as a feed additive for healthy animals.

The bill also calls for withdrawal of a precious class of antibiotics now used to treat pneumonia in poultry. Since the approval of the fluoroquinolone antibiotics in 1995, Campylobacter, the most common food-borne infection, has developed resistance. FDA has called for the drug’s withdrawal in poultry. APHA has gone on record supporting the FDA’s action.

We are pleased to support this important piece of legislation, and will work with you to see that it is passed. Please contact Natalie Raynor for further information.

Sincerely,

MOHAMMAD N. AKHTER, Executive Director.

THE PRESERVATION OF ANTIBIOTICS FOR HUMAN TREATMENT ACT OF 2002

BACKGROUND

The widespread use of antibiotics beginning in the 1940’s provided, for the first time in history, effective treatments for infectious diseases. These miracle drugs have saved countless lives, but they are losing their effectiveness. Antibiotics that once had the power to cure disease are now often useless, because microbes have become resistant to all but the newest and most expensive drugs, and some "superbugs" are resistant to any known antibiotics. Resistant to antibiotics takes a heavy toll on patients across the Nation.
The World Health Organization estimates that 14,000 Americans die every year from drug-resistant infections. This means that one American dies from a resistant infection every 38 minutes.

It seems scarcely believable that these precious medications could be fed by the ton to chickens and pigs, but that’s exactly what’s happened. Over 200 million pounds of antibiotics are fed to farm animals every year. That’s more than is used in all of medicine. These precious drugs aren’t just used to treat sick animals. They are used to fatten pigs and speed the growth of chickens. The result of this rampant overuse is clear: meat contaminated with drug-resistant organisms is sold on supermarket shelves all over America. Every family is potentially at risk.

Using these precious weapons in the fight against disease by feeding them indiscriminately to livestock is squandering these precious weapons in the fight against disease. Against the threat of bioterrorism, we can no longer squander these precious weapons in the fight against disease. The public health that they issued an order to treat sick animals or to treat pets and other animals not used for food.

In October 2000, FDA found that one class of antibiotics poses a grave danger to public health. The Act requires this same tough standard of new applications for approval of antibiotic animal.

The Act does not restrict use of antibiotics to treat sick animals or to treat pets and other animals not used for food. Some will be concerned that our legislation will be a significant step in helping the legislation will require that the drug’s use be phased out over the next two years.

It should be noted that three large commercial poultry producers have recently voluntarily to significantly reduce or stop the use of antibiotics in their healthy chickens. In addition, the New York Times reported in February that the industry is stopping the use of a particular drug that is related to Cipro, which is used to treat anthrax in humans. The Times reported as well that some corporate consumers including McDonald’s, Wendy’s and Popeye’s are refusing to buy chicken treated with that drug.

Some will be concerned that our legislation may impose a heavy burden on family farmers. As a means to reduce any burden, the legislation will also authorize payment to producers of livestock or poultry that substantially reduce there nontherapeutic use of antimicrobials in animal feed. Family-owned and family-operated farms or ranches will get priority in the awarding of these payments. And while we understand the concerns of those farmers, we anticipate that the legislation will be a significant step in helping the public health system maintain an effective arsenal against serious diseases, including anthrax, sepsis, strep and salmonellosis, many of which result in serious illness or death in both children and adults.

By Mrs. HUTCHISON (for herself, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. LOTT, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. INOUYE, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. CRAIG, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. SHELBY, and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire):

S. 299. A bill to amend the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 to specify additional selection criteria for the 2005 round of defense base closures and realignments, and for other purposes; to the Committee of Armed Services.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleagues, Senator KENNEDY of Massachusetts and Senator BINGAMAN of New Mexico, in introducing this timely and important legislation. The Preservation of Antibiotics for Human Treatment Act of 2002 will address a critical public health concern facing our nation.

People have been mounting scientific evidence that the overuse in animal husbandry of certain antibiotics is increasing resistance to those antibiotics of bacteria that cause human disease. In farming, the drugs are often added to the feed of healthy animals to promote growth and productivity.

In 1999 and again in 2000, the World Health Organization recommended that antibiotics used to treat humans should not be used to promote animal growth, though the drugs could still be used to treat sick animals. Most developed countries, other than the United States and Canada, restrict the use of antimicrobials in growth promotion.

In July 1998, the National Academy of Sciences concluded in a report that there is a link among the use of antibiotics in food animals, the development of bacterial resistance to these drugs and human disease.

Our legislation will require that an animal drug in the fluoroquinolone class, such as ciprofloxacin, and other critical drug, such as penicillin and tetracycline, will be considered unsafe as an additive in animal feed unless the drug’s manufacturer can demonstrate that use in animal feed of the drug does not pose a problem to human health.

In addition, the legislation will require that the Food and Drug Administration refuse to approve a veterinary drug application for any antimicrobial drug critical to human health care. For drugs that are currently added to animal feed, the legislation will require that the drug’s use be phased out over the next two years.

We have endeavored to reduce the excess burden of our armed forces four times in the past 15 years through the appointment of a BRAC commission whose charter was to recommend the elimination or realignment of unneeded bases. Four times these commissions have made recommendations to the President resulting in the closure of 106 major bases. I would like to agree that in each instance, the best decision was made and the military is now better without these facilities; however, this is not the case. Mistakes have been made.

While most of these selections were proper, some have resulted in significant unintended consequences. Staggering costs to clean up the environmental liabilities left behind is one such example. At the former Navy Station Long Beach, CA, post-closure clean up costs have consumed hundreds of millions of dollars more than had been anticipated. The final cost of closing that base remains unknown. How can the savings of closing this base be cited when even seven years later the costs continue to grow?

The lack of facilities now available to properly train our remaining forces is another. When justifying the closure of the Armed Forces in 1995, the commission’s report stated that “the Air Force has a surplus of under-graduate pilot training facilities.” However, just five years later, this service had a shortage of over 1,200 pilots. To make up for that shortfall, the Air Force was compelled to hastily establish another training base, at tremendous cost to the taxpayer.

The severe economic impact that small, rural communities have endured is yet another unintended consequence. The ‘95 commission’s decision to convert Fort Chaffe to the local community was a scandal. How was a small, rural community like Barling, AR, supposed to turn a post like Chaffe, pockmarked with over 700 World War II-era buildings, each contaminated with lead paint and asbestos, into an economic asset to the community? They couldn’t. While the closure of Chaffe may have saved the Pentagon money, it saddled a small town with an expensive, environmentally hazardous burden.

I am convinced the root cause of these regrettable selections was vague and inefficient criteria which the commissions used in their efforts to select bases for closure or realignment. To ensure we do not repeat these mistakes, I have worked closely with a number of my colleagues, particularly Senator BINGAMAN, to develop legislation that would refine the minimum number of base closures and realignments. Among the new criteria are: the impact on homeland security; the effects on co-located Federal agencies; and lessons learned in the previous rounds of closures. This measure also promotes good government by properly weighing of these criteria be published well before a commission recommends any base for closure.
I know the outcome of the 2005 BRAC is of utmost importance to both the military and the communities outside the fence. I urge my colleagues to support this bill to ensure that the proper decisions are made, and that they are made upon the proper reasons.

I ask unanimous consent the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2509

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Transparent and Enhanced Criteria Act of 2002”.

SEC. 2. ADDITIONAL SELECTION CRITERIA FOR 2005 ROUND OF DEFENSE BASE CLOSURE AND REALIGNMENT.

(1) by redesignating subsections (d), (e), and (f) as subsections (f), (g), and (h), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection (d):

‘‘(d) ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATIONS.—The selection criteria for military installations shall also address the following:

‘‘(1) Force structure and mission requirements through 2020, as specified by the document entitled ‘Joint Vision 2020’ issued by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, including—

‘‘(A) mobilization requirements; and

‘‘(B) requirements for utilization of facilities by the Department of Defense and by other departments and agencies of the United States, including—

‘‘(i) joint use by two or more Armed Forces; and

‘‘(ii) use by one or more reserve components;

‘‘(2) The availability and condition of facilities, land, and associated airspace, including—

‘‘(A) proximity to mobilization points, including access to infrastructure for air or rail transportation and ports; and

‘‘(B) current, planned, and programmed military construction.

‘‘(3) Considerations regarding ranges and airspace, including—

‘‘(A) uniqueness; and

‘‘(B) existing or potential physical, electromagnetic, or other encroachment.

‘‘(4) Force protection.

‘‘(5) Costs and effects of relocating critical infrastructure, including—

‘‘(A) military construction costs at receiving military installations and facilities;

‘‘(B) environmental costs, including costs of compliance with Federal and State environmental laws;

‘‘(C) termination costs and other liabilities associated with existing contracts or agreements involving outsourcing or privatization of services, housing, or facilities used by the Department;

‘‘(D) effects on co-located entities of the Department;

‘‘(E) effects on co-located Federal agencies;

‘‘(F) costs of transfers and relocations of civilian personnel, and other workforce considerations;

‘‘(G) Homeland security requirements.

‘‘(H) State or local support for a continued presence by the Department, including—

‘‘(i) current or potential public or private partnerships in support of Department activities; and

‘‘(ii) the capacity of States and localities to respond positively to economic effects and other effects.

‘‘(6) Applicable lessons from previous rounds of defense base closure and realignment, including disparities between anticipated savings and actual savings.

‘‘(7) Anticipated savings and other benefits, including—

‘‘(A) enhancement of capabilities through improved use of remaining infrastructure; and ‘‘(B) the capacity to relocate units and other assets.

‘‘(8) Any other considerations that the Secretary of Defense considers appropriate.’’.}

(b) WEIGHTING OF CRITERIA FOR TRANSPARENCY PURPOSES.—Subsection (a) of such section 2913 is amended—

(1) by redesigning paragraph (2) as paragraph (3); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph (2):

‘‘(2) WEIGHTING OF CRITERIA.—At the same time the Secretary publishes the proposed criteria under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the formula proposed to be used by the Secretary in assigning numerical weighted criteria in making recommendations for the closure or realignment of military installations inside the United States under this part in 2005.’’.}

SENATE RESOLUTION 266—DESIGNATING OCTOBER 10, 2002, AS ‘‘PUT THE BRAKES ON FATALITIES DAY’’

Mr. ROBERTS (for himself, Mr. BROWNBACK, and Mr. DEWINE) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. Res. 266

Whereas traffic fatalities needlessly claim the lives of more than 40,000 Americans each year;

Whereas traffic crashes are the leading cause of death in the United States for people ages 1 to 55 years;

Whereas 63 percent of those killed in traffic crashes are not wearing safety belts;

Whereas roadside hazards, substandard road conditions, and obsolete roadway designs contribute to more than 15,000 highway deaths annually—nearly ½ of all fatal crashes;

Whereas more than 3,000,000 people are injured in traffic crashes in the United States each year;

Whereas there are more than 6,000,000 nonfatal traffic crashes in the United States each year;

Whereas deaths and injuries on highways in the United States cost society more than $30,000,000,000 annually;

Whereas approximately 4,900 pedestrians and 750 bicyclists are killed annually in traffic-related crashes;

Whereas safe driving behaviors through the use of seat belts, not drinking and driving, and obeying traffic laws need to be encouraged;

Whereas use of simple, cost-effective roadway safety improvements such as all weather signing and marking, traffic signals, skid resistant pavements, and removal of roadside hazards would greatly reduce crashes;

Whereas continued development of ever-safer vehicles, protective equipment, and roadways would reduce traffic-related fatalities and injuries; and

Whereas cooperation between Federal, State, and local governments, private companies, and associations is essential to increasing highway safety: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates October 10, 2002, as ‘‘Put the Brakes on Fatalities Day’’; and

(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation urging the people of the United States and interested groups to encourage safe driving and other roadway use.

SENATE, CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 110—HONORING THE HEROISM AND COURAGE DISPLAYED BY AIRLINE FLIGHT ATTENDANTS ON A DAILY BASIS

Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. DASCHLE, Ms. CANTWELL, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. REID, Mr. WARNER, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BINGMAN, Mr. MUKROWSKI, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. COCHNAN, Mr. ENSIGN, Mr. REED, Mr. SPECTER, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. BOND, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DODD, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. WELLSTONE, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. HATCH, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DEWINE, Mrs. CLINTON, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Mr. SCHUMER, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. BREAUX, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. DOMENICI, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. LIEBERMAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

S. CON. RES. 110

Whereas over 100,000 men and women in the United States serve as flight attendants;

Whereas flight attendants put their lives on the line every day, placing themselves to serving and protecting their passengers;

Whereas flight attendants react to dangerous situations as the first line of defense of airline passengers;

Whereas safety and security are the primary concerns of flight attendants;

Whereas flight attendants evacuate passengers from an airplane in emergency situations;

Whereas flight attendants defend passengers against hijackers, terrorists, and abusive passengers;

Whereas flight attendants perform routine safety and service duties on board the aircraft;

Whereas 25 flight attendants lost their lives aboard 4 hijacked flights on September 11, 2001;

Whereas 5 flight attendants helped to prevent United Flight 93 from reaching its intended target on September 11, 2001;

Whereas flight attendants provided assistance to passengers across the United States who had their flights diverted on September 11, 2001;

Whereas flight attendants on American Airlines Flight 68 helped to subdue Richard Reid on December 22, 2001, thereby preventing him from detonating an explosive device in his shoe intended to bring down the airplane and kill all 185 passengers and 12 crew members on board.

Whereas flight attendants helped to prevent Pablo Moreira, a Uruguayan citizen, from breaking into the cockpit on February 7, 2000, on United Airlines Flight 855 from Miami to Buenos Aires: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress:

(1) expresses its profound gratitude for the faithful service provided by flight attendants to make air travel safe;

(2) honors the courage and dedication of flight attendants;

(3) supports all the flight attendants who continue to display heroism on a daily basis, as they had been doing before, during, and after September 11, 2001; and

(4) shall send a copy of this resolution to a family member of each of the flight attendants killed on September 11, 2001.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a concurrent reso-nution honoring flight attendants for the courage, dedication, and heroism they display on a daily basis as the first line of defense against trouble and terror in our skies.

From the events of September 11, we have all taken great pride in the herioism and courage displayed by rescue workers, firemen, and first responders.
These were the men and women running into the burning and collapsing buildings to help those who were running out get to safety. Who knows what the death toll would have been that dreadful day without the help of these brave heroes.

Since September 11, the United States has rallied behind the courage and dedication of our troops abroad who are rooting out terrorism. American soldiers are protecting the United States from future terrorist attacks and as we all know, lives have been lost.

I cannot say enough about what the policemen, firemen, rescue workers, and the men and women of our armed services have done to protect all of us.
However, one group of American her-ioes that I also want to make sure receive their proper recognition are the approximately 100,000 men and women who serve as flight attendants in the United States today.

Flight attendants dedicate them-seves to serving and protecting their passengers.

Flight attendants react to dangerous situations on airplanes as the first line of defense of airline passengers and the pilots in the cockpit.

Flight attendants evacuate passengers from the airplane in emergency situations.

Flight attendants have defended passengers against hijackers, terrorists, and abusive passengers.

Flight attendants handle in-flight medical emergencies.

And as we all know, many flight attendants lost their lives on September 11
as they fought with terrorists.

Clearly flight attendants do more than serve food and drinks on the plane. They are the police, the fire department, the paramedics, and the bomb squad at 30,000 feet above ground. Just one of these responsibilities would overwhelm most people. Yet, flight attendants manage to balance these roles day in and day out.

Flight attendants have enormous responsibilities and they face tremendous dangers in flight.

To honor the dedication, courage, and commitment flight attendants made everyday, I am offering this reso-nution to praise them for their service to Congress for the faithful service provided by flight attendants to make air cravel safe; 2. Honor the courage and dedication of flight attendants; 3. Support flight attendants as they continue to display heroism on a daily basis; and

4. Send a copy of this resolution to a family member of each of the flight attendants killed on September 11, 2001.

In this resolution, we mention three specific instances where flight attendants have courageously intervened to save the lives of others.

We all know about the heroic passengers and crew of Flight 93 on Sep-ember 11, 2001. The flight from Newark, New Jersey to San Francisco was hijacked the previous morning. Yet the terrorists were prevented from crashing the airplane into its intended target by brave passengers and crew.

Among the crew that sacrificed their lives were five United Airlines flight attendants.

A few months later, terrorist Richard Reid tried to blow up American Airlines Flight 63. He too was stopped with the help of flight attendants as he tried to light explosives in his shoes.

Speaking of the flight attendants aboard flight 93, one passenger said,
"There’s no question that all of us on board owe our lives to them. [Reid] was fighting to the death."

And in February of this year, flight attendants and pilots aboard United Airlines Flight 175 from Logan to Boston had to evacuate a passenger from breaking into the cockpit while the plan was traveling from Miami to Buenos Aires.

There are only a few examples of times when flight attendants have stepped forward to risk their lives to protect others. And unfortunately there will always be a tremendous amount of risk for the men and women who work aboard airplanes every day.

I want to point out that this resolution is the result of a letter by a flight attendant in Sacramento, California who wrote to me. I would like to insert the letter into the RECORD and read some of it aloud.

Heather Lauter-Clay, a United Airlines flight attendant, wrote:

From the deepest part of my heart, I am asking for your support in carrying a resolution to honor Flight Attendants. It would mean so much to Flight Attendants to be given the respect and support that they so deserve.

Heather, I completely agree and I am proud to offer this resolution to honor our flight attendants.

I also want to enter this note into the RECORD. It was given to me by Kristin Spivey, a United flight attendant, on my trip home over the weekend. I was especially touched by Ms.
Spivey’s note, which was written on an airplane cocktail napkin. The note read:

“Senator Feinstein: I am so pleased to have you on our flight today. It has been an honor to serve you—just to meet you.
Thank you for sponsoring the bill to acknowledge flight attendants’ courage on September 11th. It was very difficult to lose so many flying partners to something so senseless.

In the aftermath it was hard to go on, de spite the fact that I love my job and would not give it up, because so few seemed to understand my sense of loss. It is also comforting to believe that all those onboard flight 93 died for a reason—to save many others in Washington.

You do then a great honor in remembering that. I know you can help others understand all this. Thank you for speaking for us.
I know my fallen colleagues would be proud.

Kristin Spivey (D.C. based)

I think this note from Ms. Spivey makes it clear that this resolution is very important and I hope the Congress will pass this legislation soon.

To the flight attendants serving today and every day: Thank You.

I ask unanimous consent that letters of support for this resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR DIANNE FEINSTEIN: I am a United Airlines Flight Attendant. On September 11th, our United Family was forever changed. In the weeks and months following the tragedy, we have been mourning the loss of our colleagues and loss of ourselves. Our world as we knew it has been forever changed.

At that fateful day, the grief was immense for us. We lost 16 or our crew members in one time, on one day. We were stricken with feelings of sadness, fear, confusion and panic.
Many of us were stranded, away from home.
As the unknown lingered, we still held onto the thoughts of what our colleagues faced in their last moments. Meanwhile, knowing that we too would soon be boarding an airplane.

As a flight attendant, we have taken an oath "to provide comfort, care and safety" to our passengers. On September 11th, our flight attendants were doing their job. All of the previous protocols that were in place for hijacking situations failed them. They died protecting their passengers in the best way that they knew how. As we know, in the last moments of flight, they were unselfishly caring for others. Flight Attendants assisted in holding down UAL 60 by helping the fighter to throw on the hijackers and others were on the phones to supervisors detailing what was transpiring on the planes.

As we approach 4 months since Sept. 11th, our flight attendants are still continuing to be faced with sadness, grief, and mourning.
The skies as we now know them, are a host of our colleagues and loss of ourselves. Our world as we knew it has been forever
changed.

As she approaches, our flight attendants have assumed the role of being saviors of many flying partners to something so senseless.

Davis, CA.
I encourage flight attendants to continue to provide America's travelers with the service and security we need to revive our aviation industry. I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in saluting and honoring America's flight attendants and by passing this resolution.

TITLE — BUSINESS INCUBATION

SEC. 01. SHORT TITLE; FINDINGS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This title may be cited as the "Linking Educators and Developing Entrepreneurs for Reaching Success Act of 2002".

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Business incubators housed in academic settings provide unique educational opportunities for students, provide entrepreneurs with enhanced access to a skilled workforce, and bring a wealth of resources to business, academia, and communities.

(2) Academic affiliated incubators bridge the academic and business worlds by bringing together education, economic development, and technology commercialization efforts.

(3) Studies have shown that incubator tenants companies have an average success rate of 87 percent, and 90 percent for technology-based incubator tenant companies. These success rates are dramatically higher than the success rates for companies in the general economy.

(4) Incubator companies are also more likely to remain in the same communities as they grow and to provide high paying jobs and benefits to their employees.

(5) Incubators help academic institutions contribute to local goals of sustaining economic development in their surrounding communities.

(6) Education in entrepreneurship and other business formation skills is essential to business success and sustainable economic development.

(7) Studies have shown that every 50 jobs created by a business in an incubator generate another 25 jobs in that incubator’s community.

(8) Incubators are of particular value in communities that have seen significant job displacement due to overwhelming competition from exports.

SEC. 02. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this title is to encourage entrepreneurship by increasing the role for academia in entrepreneurship by providing space and expertise in an academic setting to houses and support new and emerging small businesses.

SEC. 03. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) DEGREE-GRANTING INSTITUTION.—The term "degree-granting institution" means an institution of higher education, as defined in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001), that awards an associate or baccalaureate degree.

(2) INCUBATOR.—The term "incubator" means an entity affiliated with or housed in a degree-granting institution that provides space and coordinated and specialized services to entrepreneurs which meet selected criteria during the business' startup phase, including providing services such as shared office space and services, access to equipment, access to telecommunication and technology services, flexible leases, specialized management assistance, access to financing, and other coordinated business or technical support services.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

SEC. 04. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to support the establishment and development of incubators.

(b) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—From the amount appropriated under section 109 of the Higher Education Act of 1965, the Secretary shall:

(1) reserve 20 percent of the amount appropriated for the following purposes:

(A) hiring staff to coordinate the activities of incubator businesses (if any);

(B) programming that contributes to a comprehensive set of business assistance tools, including community development;

(C) hiring staff to coordinate the activities described in paragraph (1) or (2) for curricular development.

(b) CONTENTS.—Each application shall contain an assurance that the activities to be assisted—

(1) have the support of the municipality, city, or township in which the incubator is housed or proposed to be housed; and

(2) are consistent with the local economic development or strategic master plan.

(c) PRIORITY.—The Secretary shall give priority to funding applications under this title that provide strong educational opportunities to students in entrepreneurship, and that require significant collaboration between businesses, academia, and local government and economic development leaders.

(d) CONSIDERATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may give consideration to funding applications under this title that support—

(A) the building of new incubators;

(B) incubators located in economically distressed areas;

(C) incubators with successful graduation rates for tenant companies;

(D) incubators that have shown demonstrable economic benefits in their surrounding communities;

(E) incubators that work with faculty entrepreneurs or university-based research;

(F) incubators located in rural areas, inner city areas, Indian reservations or pueblos, where the presence of an incubator may enhance and diversify the area's economy through the expanded technology commercialization.

(2) DEFINITION OF CONSIDERATION.—In this subsection the term "consideration" means thought and does not mean priority.

SEC. 05. MATCHING FUNDS.

Each entity receiving Federal assistance under section 94(b)(1) shall contribute matching funds, in an amount equal to the amount of Federal assistance received under this title, toward the costs of the activities assisted under this title. The non-Federal share required under this section may be provided in the form of in-kind contributions.

SEC. 06. REPORT.

The Secretary, at the end of the third year for which assistance is provided under this title, shall prepare and submit to Congress a report that—

(1) describes the most effective or innovative additions to curricula developed under this title;

(2) contains a comparison of small business survival rates for small businesses that started up in incubators versus small businesses that did not so start;

(3) describes factors leading to the success of incubator businesses (if any);

(4) describes the best role for degree-granting institutions in business incubation; and

(5) contains a comparison of academic-affiliated incubators of specific missions and participation from entrepreneurship experts and local government leaders; posed an amendment to amendment SA 3401 proposed by Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY) to the bill (H.R. 3009) to extend the An-deal Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 229, line 23, strike all through “United States,” on line 25, and insert the following: “foreign investors in the United States are not accorded greater rights than United States investors in the United States.”

SEC. 2. MORTGAGE PAYMENT ASSISTANCE PILOT PROGRAM—

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PILOT PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Labor (referred to in this section as the “Secretary”) shall establish a pilot program under which the Secretary shall award low-interest loans to eligible indi-dividuals to enable such individuals to continue to make mortgage payments with respect to the primary residences of such individuals.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive a loan under the program established under subsection (a), an individual shall—

(1) be an individual who—

(A) is unemployed or has income below the poverty line;

(B) is an adversely affected worker respect to whom a certification of eligibility has been issued by the Secretary of Labor under chapter 2 of title II of such Act (19 U.S.C. 2327).

(C) is receiving assistance under such chapter;

(2) be a borrower under a loan which requires the individual to make monthly mortgage payments with respect to the primary place of residence of the individual; and

(3) be enrolled in a job training or job assistance program.

(c) LOAN REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A loan provided to an eligible individual under this section shall—

(A) be for a period of not to exceed 12 months; and

(B) be for an amount that does not exceed the sum of—

(i) the amount of the monthly mortgage payment owed by the individual; and

(ii) the number of months for which the loan is provided;

(C) have an applicable rate of interest that equals 4 percent;

(D) require repayment as provided for in subsection (d); and

(E) be subject to such other terms and conditions as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(2) ACCOUNT.—A loan awarded to an individual under this section shall be deposited into an account from which a monthly mortgage payment will be made in accordance with the terms and conditions of such loan.

(d) REPAYMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—An individual to which a loan has been awarded under this section shall be required to begin making repayments on the loan on the earlier of—

(A) the date on which the individual has been employed on a full-time basis for 8 consecutive months; or

(B) the date that is 1 year after the date on which the loan has been approved under this section.

(2) REPAYMENT PERIOD AND AMOUNT.—

(A) REPAYMENT PERIOD.—A loan awarded under this section shall be repaid on a monthly basis over the 5-year period beginning on the date determined under paragraph (1).

(B) AMOUNT.—The amount of the monthly payment described in subparagraph (A) shall be determined by dividing the total amount provided under the loan (plus interest) by 60.

(C) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prohibit an individual from—

(1) paying off a loan awarded under this section in less than 5 years; or

(ii) from paying off a loan under such loan in excess of the monthly amount determined under subparagraph (B) with respect to the loan.

(e) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 6 weeks after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations necessary to carry out this section, including regulations that permit an individual to certify that the individual is an eligible individual under subsection (b).

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $10,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

(g) TERMINATION.—The program established under this section shall terminate on the date that is 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. STUDY.—

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a study of the program under this section.

(b) CONTENT.—The study submitted under subsection (a) shall include—

(1) a description of the program and the results of the study; and

(2) any recommendations for the continuance of the program.

(c) SUBMISSION.—The study submitted under subsection (a) shall be transmitted to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Authorizing Committee for such legislation.5

NOTICE—PERSONAL FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

Financial Disclosure required by the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, as amended and Senate Rule 34 must be filed no later than close of business on Wednesday, May 15, 2002. The reports must be filed with the Senate Office of Public Records, 232 Hart Building, Washington, DC, 20510. The Public Records office will be open from 8:00 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. to accept these filings, and will provide written receipts for Senators' reports. Staff members may obtain written receipts upon request. Any written request for an extension should be directed to the Select Committee on Ethics, 220 Hart Building, Washington, DC, 20510.

All Senators' reports will be made available simultaneously on Friday, June 14th. Any questions regarding the availability of reports should be di-

pretation of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 should be directed to the Select Committee on Ethics (224-2981).
pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 276h-276k, as amended, appoints the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Dayton, as a member of the Senate Delegation to the Mexico-U.S. Interparliamentary Group conference during the 107th Congress. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 276d-276k, as amended, appoints the following Senators as members of the Senate Delegation to the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group during the Second Session of the 107th Congress, to be held in Newport, Rhode Island, May 16-20, 2002: The Senator from Hawaii, Mr. Akaka, Chairman; the Senator from Montana, Mr. Burns; and the Senator from Ohio, Mr. DeWine.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, MAY 14, 2002

Mr. Reid. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it recess until 9:30 a.m. Tuesday, May 14, that following the prayer and the pledge, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate begin a period of morning business until 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the time from 9:30 until 10 under the control of the Republican leader or his designee and the time from 10 to 10:30 under the control of the majority leader or his designee; that at 10:30 a.m., the Senate resume consideration of the trade bill with 10 minutes of debate in relation to the pending Baucus-Grassley amendment regarding investors, prior to the vote in relation to the amendment, with no second-degree amendment in order prior to the vote, and that following disposition of that amendment, Senator Dayton be recognized to offer his amendment on his behalf and Senator Craig regarding unfair trade practices; further, the Senate recess from 12:30 until 2:15 p.m. for the weekly party conferences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. Reid. Mr. President, the two managers of the bill are here. This is important legislation. We have worked very hard. Everyone has worked very hard to get to the point we now are. Senate managers would be ready to work into the evenings during this week. The majority leader wants to make progress on this bill. I certainly hope, as does the majority leader, that it will be unnecessary to file a cloture motion on this bill. We should be able to finish it. I hope everyone will offer amendments, have fair debate on it, vote on that, and move on. We have so much to do before the Memorial Day recess, which is a week from Friday.

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. Reid. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in recess under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 7:03 p.m., recessed until Tuesday, May 14, 2002, at 9:30 a.m.

Congressional Record

The public proceedings of each House of Congress, as reported by the Official Reporters thereof, are printed pursuant to directions of the Joint Committee on Printing as authorized by appropriate provisions of Title 44, United States Code, and published for each day that one or both Houses are in session, excepting very infrequent instances when two or more unusually small consecutive issues are printed at one time. Public access to the Congressional Record is available online through GPO Access, a service of the Government Printing Office, free of charge to the user. The online database is updated each day the Congressional Record is published. The database includes both text and graphics from the beginning of the 103d Congress, 2d session (January 1994) forward. It is available through GPO Access at www.gpo.gov/gpoaccess. Customers can also access this information with WAIS client software, via telnet at swais.access.gpo.gov, or dial-in using communications software and a modem at (202) 512-1661. Questions or comments regarding this database or GPO Access can be directed to the GPO Access User Support Team at: E-Mail: gpoaccess@gpo.gov; Phone 1-888-293-6498 (toll-free), 202-512-1530 (D.C. area); Fax: 202-512-1262. The Team’s hours of availability are Monday through Friday, 7:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time, except Federal holidays. The Congressional Record paper and 24x microfiche will be furnished by mail to subscribers, free of postage, at the following prices: paper edition, $211.00 for six months, $422.00 per year, or purchased for $5.00 per issue, payable in advance; microfiche edition, $111.00 per year, or purchased for $1.50 per issue payable in advance. The semimonthly Congressional Record Index may be purchased for the same per issue prices. To place an order for any of these products, visit the U.S. Government Online Bookstore at: bookstore.gpo.gov. Mail orders to: Superintendent of Documents, P.O. Box 371954, Pittsburgh, PA 15250-7954, or phone orders to (866) 512-1800 (toll free), (202) 512-1800 (D.C. Area), or fax to (202) 512-2250. Remit check or money order, made payable to the Superintendent of Documents, or use VISA, MasterCard, Discover, American Express, or GPO Deposit Account. Following each session of Congress, the daily Congressional Record is revised, printed, permanently bound and sold by the Superintendent of Documents in individual parts or by sets. With the exception of copyrighted articles, there are no restrictions on the republication of material from the Congressional Record.
